New Year's Greeting

The year just closed has been an important and stirring year in the church as well as in the world. When it opened we confronted a situation that was rather distressing in its nature, being a holdover from the General Conference of the preceding year. But the conference of 1920 developed what to many was an unexpected and unsuspected unity of opinion touching vital questions of policy, and upon nearly all live issues before the church. Our differences never had involved fundamentals of religious belief. The conference was very happy, spiritual, and enlightening. The differences between the quorums seemed to be healed, we trust permanently. During the year the quorums have endeavored to work together amicably in harmony with the plans agreed upon. And in this endeavor they have been successful to a gratifying degree. At the conference referred to plans looking toward a forward movement in the consolidation, redemption, and building of Zion were presented, discussed, and adopted by practically unanimous vote.

As a result of one of the recommendations adopted by the conference Independence was later taken over directly under the administration of the Presidency, with Brother R. V. Hopkins installed as local pastor, assistant to the Presidency, and in charge of the details of the work in Independence. And the church is just beginning to learn to speak of Independence as the city of Zion. By no means do we have Zion yet, in her purity, beauty, and strength. But we have potential Zion, just beginning to learn to walk, just beginning to take on her divine growth.

During the year there was staged the most ambitious and important drive for funds ever undertaken by the church. This drive was undertaken in harmony with the order of the General Conference, based on recommendations coming from the Presidency. And as a result probably more than $600,000 was subscribed towards the building of a great auditorium adequate to meet the needs of our General Conference audiences. (The exact amount is not yet known as many reports are not in.) This campaign had an unexpected effect upon the church, seeming in many places to stimulate the people to renewed activity and even to revive their spirituality. It may have decreased tithing in some few places, temporarily, but in some instances that we have heard of people who subscribed to this fund immediately thereafter began paying tithing for the first time in their experience. The work of obtaining suitable grounds of sufficient size, properly located, clearing them of buildings already upon the grounds, securing material, perfecting plans and designs, and the work of actual construction of this building will take a great deal more time than some people imagine who may not have given sufficient study to the details. Therefore it is not too early to caution the people that they must not expect to see the completed building spring out of the ground like a mushroom. And if required to wait longer than we think proper let us remember that it is better to go slow and be satisfied with the results rather than to make haste and have a structure that is not satisfactory, or properly located.

The year has been rather important as touching foreign missionary work. Apostles Rushton and Hanson finished their work in Australia just prior to the closing of the year and returned safely to their homes in America. Their work in Australia, judging by reports, greatly stimulated the Saints and helped them both in missionary and local undertakings. Australia is one of the most promising fields for missionary work facing the church. These men before their departure obtained from the Home and Territories Department of the Australian Government permission for the church to send into Australia six missionaries, three to replace Apostles Hanson, Rushton, and Butterworth (the last named is contemplating removing to America) and three additional men.

During the year Elder Harry Passman was finally able after a persistent, determined, and resourceful effort, to enter Palestine, and immediately upon arrival there began the work of establishing our church interests. He left Elder Jacob Halb to carry on the work in Switzerland, where our footing is yet somewhat insecure, owing to the disinclination of the Swiss Government officials and local police to give our men permission to remain. Ostensibly this disinclination is based on the shortage of houses in Switzerland. Many Swiss families are living in stables and any sort of structure and the police and higher officials are indisposed to permit the renting of houses for church services or for the use of individuals as residences when such individuals are foreigners and do not have business that appeals to the official minds.

Elder Carl Oscar Johnson sailed for Sweden during the year and is undertaking to revive the work in that country. Elder P. T. Anderson went to Denmark and Elder Wilfred Tordoff and wife to the Isle of Pines in the vicinity of Cuba. Elder Gomer Reeves and wife went to Hawaii immediately following the late conference and a party consisting of the following young men and women went to the South Sea Island Mission: Brother and Sister Frank B. Almond, Brother and Sister F. V. Elliott, Brother and Sister H. A. Merchant and Sister Ethel Hanson. These young men and women have already made great progress in learning the native language and are beginning to make their influence felt in missionary work. That mission, too, was greatly helped by the previous arrival of Brother A. V. Karlstrom and wife. He was ordained bishop and sent to that field during the year.

Apostle R. C. Russell assisted by two of the young brethren went to the help of Philemon Pement who for a long time has held forth in Ottawa. These brethren are attempting with some success to open up the work among the French Canadians in Quebec. A beautiful church property has been purchased in Ottawa giving them some facilities for work that have not previously been enjoyed.

During the year President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams embarked on a tour of Great Britain to survey the church situation in that mission and endeavor to formulate plans for the revival of the work in that field which is of such historic interest and in past years was so valuable to the church. They have visited practically all of the branches and districts in England and Wales, besides making a trip into Ireland. Pursuant to their recommendation, property for mission headquarters has been purchased in the city of London. This property (Saint Leonard's) is exceptionally well located and will serve as church headquarters for the mission and a meeting place for the local Saints and will house a school which is to be opened in the interests of the church. It is anticipated that on January 20, Apostle Gillen, Elders Charles Fry, James E. Bishop, and Daniel B. Sorden will sail for England to join forces with Brother T. W. Williams and President Smith. Brother Sorden is expected to undertake the work of opening up classes in the mission headquarters that will be available for the young people of the British Isles Mission, giving them some of the advantages offered to the people in this country by Graceland College; particularly will he endeavor to help those who desire to take studies that will fit them for church services, such work, in a more limited way, as is being undertaken in the class in religious education in Graceland College.

At this writing President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams are in Switzerland. They expect to spend some time there and in Belgium and Holland, and to return to England about the first of February to meet the missionaries from America. Later they will go to Palestine and President Smith expects to return to America some time in April.

The plan to send missionaries to South Africa under the direction of Apostle William Aylor did not materialize, owing to the refusal of the British Foreign Office in Washington to give our men permission to enter South Africa. This failure might be taken by some to indicate that the undertaking was ill-advised. We do not consider that to necessarily follow. We may expect that every obstacle will be thrown in the way of the forward movement of our work and as the hastening time progresses and the end approaches more and more determined efforts will be made to prevent the spread of the gospel. Doors that we desire to enter will be closed against us, and we may knock in vain for some time. It is our business to undertake to carry the gospel wherever it ought to go and if we are rebuffed or prevented for the time being that certainly does not discredit the undertaking. It remains for us then to make further attempts, testing out every avenue that is honorable and legitimate. How true it may be we do not know, but some of our friends in certain foreign fields report that Utah elders enter the mission as tourists, not being permitted to enter in any other way, and when there they undertake to carry on their missionary propaganda. We trust the time will never come when this church will undertake any method of deception of any nature whatever. Let us exhaust every recourse to carry the gospel to the world; but let us do it in an open, honorable manner as becomes those who march under the banner of King Immanuel.

During the year the work in America has gone about as usual. In some places it is forward, in others at a standstill, and in some places it has gone backward because of the selfishness and shortsightedness of contending individuals or factions who through the desire to justify themselves or win a victory over some one else have been willing to jeopardize the local interests of the church institution. But as a whole the reports from missionaries and local men indicate an unusual and very gratifying freedom, liberty, and power in gospel work and in the presentation of our message. And in many places wonderful opportunities are before us far beyond our ability to occupy owing to the lack of men and finances. For the blessings of God during the year all should be profoundly grateful and we give honor and glory to him who has opened up the windows of heaven and poured out his blessings upon his people in harmony with the promises given at the late conference.

During the year property for the publishing interests of the church was purchased in the city of Independence paving the way for a consolidation of our publishing interests in one plant and under one roof. It is expected that the Herald Publishing Plant will move to Independence some time in the coming spring. This move has been questioned by some but it has back of it the sound business principle that it is unwise for the church to maintain two different printing plants to do one job of work. When this move is completed the HERALD will have completed a memorable journey to Zion. Starting in Cincinnati under the editorship of Isaac Sheen, later the HERALD was moved to Plano, still later to Lamoni, which served as a halfway house on the road to Zion, and now to the City of Zion itself. May the work of the HERALD, so wisely carried on for fifty years under the oversight of the late President Joseph Smith, be carried forward to ever higher and better ground. May the HERALD be not only the means of carrying the gospel in a missionary way to many who know it not but also the means of feeding, sustaining, and helping the Saints everywhere. This is the sole ambition of her publishers and her Editors. May the HERALD ever fulfill the divine injunction, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness."

We have reviewed briefly, perhaps in a very inadequate manner, some of the more important things that mark the year just closed as one that will be memorable in the history of the church. A great work now lies before us. It is quite beyond our power unaided to accomplish. Yet we are required to put forth every effort and to use every resource spiritual, mental, physical, and financial in our effort to establish Zion and prepare a people for the coming of our Lord and Master. As a church we must maintain our unity. That is essential to strength and is a prerequisite to recognition by our heavenly Father. As individuals we must maintain our integrity, our loyalty to God, the church, and our fellow men.

The Editors extend to the people of the church a New Year's greeting, and express the wish that the year just opening may be the brightest, the happiest, and the most fruitful in Christian endeavor that has ever been entered upon the calendar of the church.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

During the past week the lessons committee of the General Sunday School Department has held sessions at Lamoni, evaluating aims, surveying in detail the lesson work before the Sunday school, and making definite plans for the perfecting of courses suitable for all ages of Sunday school members.

This committee consists of Christiana Salyards, editor in chief, and four members of a consulting board, as follows: S. A. Burgess, F. M. McDowell, Mrs. W. W. Smith, A. M. Carmichael.

Elder Walter W. Smith, in charge of the library interests of the church, was in Lamoni last week, and began the re-allocation of the books in the various general church libraries in Lamoni, shipping some of the volumes to Independence.

Sunday, January 2, was a busy day in Lamoni's worship calendar. The sacramental service was very good, and in the afternoon the priesthood held a spiritual prayer meeting, with the stake presidency in charge, and about one hundred and fifteen members of the priesthood in attendance. Among these were men from a considerable number of the outlying branches of the stake. The priesthood have done more official work in the stake and branch during the past year than in any year in the past.

The Book of Abraham

Did the church ever accept it as authority?

Shortly after the HERALD for November 17, last, appeared, with a short editorial on "Joseph Smith, jr., as a translator," one of our readers, who is not a member of the church, marked this page and returned it to us with the words added: "You are wrong absolutely." This was placed opposite the sixth paragraph. Also, "Why do you insist on misstating facts? I cannot understand your object in deceiving people." A letter was attached to it, which read: "Is it possible you also have joined the Ananias Club?"

Now we well knew we had no desire whatever to deceive anyone. We desire most earnestly the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. We therefore wrote asking for some evidence of our error, if such existed. If wrong we certainly wished to know it, and promised to make correction. We also asked, what exactly is the objectionable feature, since the sixth paragraph is as follows:

"The church in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr did not accept the Book of Abraham as one of the sacred books, or attempt to place it in the same class with the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Nor has the Reorganized Church at any time so considered it. Our position is quite clearly stated in our Church History, volume 2, page 569. The word church, however, includes the whole church from its first organization in 1830 until the present day. (We note in passing, the fact that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has twice been held before the courts of the land to be the successor of the original church, teaching the same doctrine; namely, in Lake County, Ohio, Court of Common Pleas, and in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri.) The extract from the Church History follows:

"The church has never to our knowledge taken any action on this work, either to indorse or condemn; so it cannot be said to be a church publication; nor can the church be held to answer for the correctness of its teachings. Joseph Smith, as the translator, is committed of course to the correctness of the translation, but not necessarily to the indorsement of its historical or doctrinal contents."

This paragraph includes several distinct statements.

In reply we received a letter, the following portion of which only deals with that question:

"Your article treated on the subject matter pertaining to the Book of Abraham, giving a reason for printing a letter from Mr. Jensen, of the Utah church. The matter that I had in mind was that you claimed that the Reorganized Church never did accept the Book of Abraham, as divine. I have before me volume 1, number 3, LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, dated March, 1860, and refer you to page 63, in which I will quote as follows:

"Now we propose to prove that all the revelations which Joseph gave unto the church, we are bound to "give heed unto." If the first edition of that book is divine, all the subsequent revelations which are contained in the Book of Covenants, in the Book of Abraham, etc., and which he gave unto the church are equally divine."

"The foundation of the Reorganization was based upon accepting all these books as divine."

This extract quoted is from an unsigned article, six pages long, in the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD for March, 1860. This was prior to the association of our late President Joseph Smith with the church. The article is entirely a review of the resolution taken by some former members of the church, approving the first edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but rejecting the second edition. The words unto the church in both instances are printed in italics. There is no further reference any place to the Book of Abraham. After discussing some of the revelations very briefly, as the so-called plural wife revelation, which the writer states was not given to the church by Joseph Smith, the article discusses the revelation where Joseph Smith was to appoint another in his stead. It then continues to take up different revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but is not concerned with the Book of Abraham.

Now as we examine this it may be noted in the first place that it is what is called in law obiter dicta; that is, a remark which is not pertinent to the main argument. For this is an article by the way of argument in an effort to show that the church should accept the second edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and include other revelations received through Joseph Smith the Seer, that is, those revelations received after 1835, which are included in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

In the second place, it is not a statement setting forth the standard books of authority in the Reorganized Church. It omits both the Bible and Book of Mormon, and says nothing about the inspired version of the Holy Scriptures.

In the third place, it is not an action of General Conference. Nor is it even stated that it is historically a belief of the church. It is not even affirmed definitely as a belief of the writer.

We might continue to point out in other respects how far it is from an affirmative statement of truth but that is not necessary. At the most, all that can be claimed is that the writer considers the Book of Abraham as one of the things given to the church by Joseph Smith. But it is not shown that even he places it on the same level with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. And if the writer was Isaac Sheen, as he was the editor at that time, he was not in a position personally to know the position of the church in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr.

There is not a year passes, if there is a week, that someone's article does not appear in the HERALD presenting views with which the editors do not agree, and which they do not believe represent the position of the church. As stated, they are presented by way of argument to bring forth a different point of view as a matter of possible interest to our readers; leaving to the reader to judge that which is presented.

But nothing that is written by any writer in the HERALD becomes binding upon the church in the sense that a General Conference resolution does. Though certainly, if the President of the church makes a declaration on church teaching, of the position taken by the church, such a statement is entitled to much greater weight than an incidental remark made by some person in the course of an argument, oral or written.

Turning to General Conference Resolutions, we discover at the very first meeting, on the very first page, among the resolutions adopted on June 12, 1852, the following:

"No. 6. That the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants."

"No. 8. That this conference believe it the duty of the elders of this church, who have been legally ordained, to cry repentance and remission of sins to this generation through obedience to the gospel, as revealed in the record of the Jews, the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and not to faint in the discharge of duty."

We find such statements repeated time and again. We have not attempted an exhaustive search.

In September, 1878, the following was adopted:

"No. 212. That all baptisms, in order to be legal, must be done by both the administrator and the candidate going down into the water, according to the instructions in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and if there are any now numbered with the church who have received the ordinance with any less than the above requirements, that they are hereby required to receive the administration of the ordinance in the above form."

On September 13, the same year, the following:

"No. 215. That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this Church of Christ."

On September 29, 1879, this was reaffirmed:

"It is our opinion that the free rendering and meaning of the resolution passed at the semiannual session of 1878, and referred to in said resolution from Decatur District, is that:

"Whereas, Certain rumors had obtained currency that the church had not at any time so attested the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the later revelations given to the church, by vote and affirmation, that they should form with the Bible and Book of Mormon, a standard of reference in case of controversy and difference of opinion upon questions of doctrine and practice in the church; therefore to remedy this defect, if it existed, the resolution referred to was introduced and passed."—General Conference Resolution No. 222.

We could multiply these instances, but it should be clear to any reader that the Reorganized Church from the very first accepted three works, and three works only as authority: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The foundation of the Reorganization was not based upon accepting the Book of Abraham as divine. It was based upon accepting the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. This has been reaffirmed time and time again in later years.

We cannot answer for every individual's particular opinion. It may be possible that there have been individuals in the Reorganized Church who have valued and considered the Book of Abraham as a divine communication. We do not know that there are such or have ever been. But such opinions, if any have so held, do not commit the church. The creed of the church is "All Truth." There are men within the church holding many strange positions. The church is not thereto committed. It is a school and part of the development of character. The church does not accept their position, nor do we view such opinion with any great degree of allowance, though we have charity for the men and extend a great deal of allowance to individual peculiarities. We believe as a rule men will the quicker come to the truth if allowed the utmost freedom and independence of thought. At the same time, men should not attempt to speak authoritatively or officially for the church in presenting their own personal peculiarities.

There are also certain mooted questions on which the church has not declared a position by conference action, but there is still a general understanding among the eldership. Again there are questions on which there are individual differences of opinion and there has been no general conference resolution, so that further free discussion has been permitted. But when the church has spoken by clear-cut resolution, the casual expression of some writer does not affect in the slightest degree the position of the church, let alone the basis of her faith.

It should be clear from the above that this is one of the cases in which the church has spoken from the first. The church has accepted the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants from the first as divine. It has never at any time included the Book of Abraham. The statement in the early HERALD does not commit the Reorganization.

It frequently happens that there are incidental statements appearing in an article which do not even represent the position of the author, but are worded in such a way as not to present fairly his views. It is quite possible, that if the question were put to the writer of this article, he would have modified and corrected the phraseology, as the statement is quite incidental. We state this only in fairness to the writer, and not as affecting the church.

But giving to his statement the widest possible adverse credit, at the most it means that the writer above placed the Book of Abraham alongside the later revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. But he makes no argument whatever for the acceptance of that book, as his sole argument is founded on the second edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Nor does it commit the church, even if the church had not already spoken.

But in this instance, the church had spoken repeatedly and definitely.

Subjects Being Discussed

Child Labor Day

Child Labor Day this year will be January 22, 23, and 24, 1921. This is broad enough to include the Jewish Sabbath, as well as the Christian Sabbath, and the Monday for schools and colleges and clubs throughout the country. It places the Child Labor Day at the very close of thrift week, so that an appeal is made for the conservation of American childhood, presenting this very important item of greater national thrift as an economy of human resources. A child that is taken from school at fourteen, will be worth just about half as much at twenty-five, as will the child who has continued in school until the eighteenth year. Yet despite the increase of adult unemployment, more children were taken out of school in 1920 in many industrial centers, than was the case in 1919.

Material for the observance of the day may be secured from the National Child Labor Committee, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York.

Ambitious Institute Program

The Toronto District has arranged for an institute to be held in the church at Hamilton, Ontario, beginning Saturday, January 22, and continuing over Sunday evening, January 30. Arrangements are made for prayer service and two or three lectures each Sunday, while on each week day from 9 a. m. to noon will be devoted to class work, and the afternoons left for recreation, demonstration, story-telling, and such special work as the committee shall determine. Each week day evening will be devoted to a lecture and round table discussion. Arrangements are being made for competent teachers and speakers; also for music and readings to enliven the programs. The Hamilton Saints will provide lodging and breakfasts without charge for visitors. The program includes lectures on the subjects listed below, and should prove profitable to all who attend. The subjects announced are:

"Efficiency," "Sermonizing," "Woman's responsibility in the home," "Finances," "Psychology as applied to teaching," "Subject matter for teaching," "Methods and teaching," "The qualified superintendent," "Administration," "Relationship between pastor and members," "The woman in the church," "Music, its value," "Teaching by illustration," "Music, its cultivation," "Literature," "The woman in the community," "Stewardships."

"Service above self."

"He profits most who serves best."—Mottoes of the Rotary Club.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The American Indian

By Elmer E. Long

Sermon delivered at Saint Louis, Missouri, November 21, 1920. Reported by Beatrice Roberts. The following item is from the Branch Bulletin, of Saint Louis.

The Lamanite Convention

The ninth annual convention of the Society of American Indians was held in this city during the week ending November 20. Many prominent Indians, representing various tribes, were present.

Many questions of importance to Indians were up for consideration, but the one paramount to all others was the abrogation of the Indian Bureau and the granting of full citizenship to the Indians of the United States. Congress was petitioned to take action to this end.

The next annual convention will be held in Saint Louis the latter part of September, 1921.

Thomas L. Sloan, an attorney of Washington, District of Columbia, and president of the society, lectured at the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Grand and Carter Avenues, Sunday evening, November 21, his subject being the "Emancipation of the American Indian." At the close of the lecture the congregation adopted by unanimous vote a resolution asking Congress to grant the Indians full citizenship.

Latter Day Saints are the only religionists that include in their history and traditions this wonderful race. The Book of Mormon is nothing more nor less than a history of God's dealings with the ancestors of the Indians—the people who inhabited North and South America many centuries ago, before they fell into transgression and became a degenerate people. Students of events among us note with pleasure the reclaiming of the Indian from his savage state and see the fulfillment of prophecy wherein it is said that the Lamanites shall become a "fair and delightful people," and they shall "blossom as the rose."

I want to read for a text this morning one quite familiar to all Latter Day Saints, the 29th chapter of Isaiah, 14th verse—the latter part of the verse. "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." That was a prophecy uttered by the silver-tongued prophet, Isaiah, 712 B. C., and as we believe, relates to conditions attending the restoration of God's scattered and covenant people in the latter days. Along with that, I wish to place another one of more modern origin. You will recognize it, too, when I quote it: "Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose."

Now, I am not going to attempt to sermonize this morning. I do not feel that way, but I have had one of the grandest treats of my life right here in Saint Louis during the last week, and I propose this morning to tell you about these things as they are related to prophecies found in the three standard books of the church.

We as a people occupy a peculiar position, unique I might say among all religious bodies, for we have three standard books, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and they all contain prophecies relative to the latter days and what God proposed to do. We are not alone in our understanding of God's promises concerning the house of Israel, but the house of Israel as commonly understood throughout the world applies in particular to the Jews.

Well, the Jews are only a small part of the house of Israel. As a consequence of their transgression, disobedience to the commandments of God, Israel was scattered into all the world and some of those scattered bands or tribes lost their identity. You might ask the most noted Bible student to-day what became of Ephraim, for instance, and you will find that he is unable to tell you. Hosea, the prophet, says that Ephraim would mix himself among the people; that is, he would lose his national identity by intermarriage with other races, and that has been done, while others of the tribes are also unknown to-day.

A Remnant of Israel

The Book of Mormon comes to us purporting to be the record of a small remnant of the house of Israel, a part of the tribe of Joseph through his oldest son, Manasseh. Six hundred years B. C., God led a little colony of people from Jerusalem for a wise purpose and brought them to this land of America which he designated as a land of promise, precious above all lands, and gave it to them for their possession with the sacred promise that so long as they kept his commandments they would enjoy the liberty and freedom here that would be enjoyed by no other people; but like all the other branches and remnants of Israel, in process of time they became very wicked with the result that they lost God's favor and drifted into wickedness and idolatry and gross spiritual darkness.

But while that condition obtains, the promises contained in this remarkable record are that they would not always remain that way. Now here is where the application of our text comes in. "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." Isaiah said that in connection with the marvelous work and a wonder which God said he would do in the latter days, so marvelous and so wonderful in its character that the world at large would not believe it. Yes, and there is another prophecy that I shall quote right here in that connection that corresponds with that one beautifully. It is found in Habakkuk, 1st chapter and 5th verse:

"Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvelously; for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you." If there was ever any work among men to which that prophecy can be applied, it must be this latter-day work as we term it, represented by the Latter Day Saints, for though the message has been told world-wide and though this remarkable book, the Book of Mormon, has gone to nearly all nations—it has encircled the globe and it has met the most unrelenting opposition—I say, though it has gone to all nations with its remarkable story, it has been rejected by the children of men; very few indeed comparatively have accepted it for what it purports to be, and yet it is being vindicated every day of the world.

Men who have lifted their voices in opposition to this wonderful work have gone with the spade and dug into the mounds and into the ruined cities of the south, and everywhere they have turned up the evidence that vindicates this book and sustains it on every point.

"Shall Blossom as the Rose"

Now, with reference to the other text: "Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose." Jacob spoken of here is generic and comprehends the whole house of Israel, while the Lamanites are specific and have reference to one remnant of the house of Israel. The wilderness evidently refers to the condition in which they would be found in the latter days, scattered in all the world—a man without a country.

It was not until 1896 that what may be regarded as the first organized effort to restore Israel to their proper place among men was made, and that was made by the Jewish people themselves when they organized the Zionist movement. They have accomplished wonders in that length of time, and I believe as firmly as I believe that I am talking to you people this morning, that God had something to do with the organization of the Zionist movement. God has been wonderfully blessing the leaders of that movement all along, for it must be said, and it will be said by those who know, that it was largely through the instrumentality and the untiring efforts of the leaders of the Zionist movement that public opinion throughout the world was so crystallized that Great Britain took the steps to make the Holy Land a homeland for the Jews and so declared it, and that this was followed by other nations who agreed with Great Britain, so that the whole world rejoices and lends its moral support.

It was in 1911 at Columbus, Ohio. Now just think a moment. Columbus, Ohio, was so named in honor of the man who we suppose discovered America, and in that city was organized the Society of American Indians.

Well, now, some one says, what has that to do with all of this restoration of Israel? Simply this, according to this Book of Mormon, the American Indians are a remnant of the house of Israel of the tribe of Joseph through Manasseh, and in this Book of Mormon they are called Lamanites. Away back yonder, many centuries ago when they were having many wars and troubles among themselves here on this continent, there were some of the Lamanites who loved peace rather than war and they made a sacred covenant with God that they would not fight any more, and to show their faith by their works, they buried their weapons of war in the ground and refused to dig them up, and when their enemies came upon them many of them suffered death. God recognized that covenant. I may say that is one of the best peace covenants I have ever read anything about, and I may say here this morning, if the nations of the world who are clamoring and talking about a league of nations would follow the example of those Lamanites, it would not be very long until we would have peace, for the first thing they did to demonstrate their sincerity was to disarm.

God's Covenant for Peace

To-day while talking about peace and working ostensibly for a league of peace, the greatest preparations for war ever known are going on right now; bigger guns being made, armies increased; societies of all kinds among men are drilling and equipping and training young men and young women, even the boys and girls, for some purpose.

Our chemists are working overtime day and night inventing the most deadly and poisonous gases and explosives. What for? Why, they are fixing it up now that the soldier can just stick a lot of this deadly stuff in his vest pocket, seemingly harmless, and in a very short time, he can throw it into the camp of the enemy and obliterate a regiment. I say these gigantic preparations are going on while we are talking about peace and organizing a League of Nations, and to me it all looks like a gigantic farce; but those people back yonder when they entered into a league of nations and for peace, I say the first thing that they did was to disarm, and they set us a good example. God recognized that covenant, and because of their sincerity, because they demonstrated it by their action, God made a covenant with them and told them that though they should be persecuted, oppressed, trodden under foot, despoiled, and despised, they would not be destroyed, but that in the latter times God's covenant of peace would be remembered. The gospel would go to them and the prophet declares that their scales of darkness would fall from their eyes and they would become a white and delightful people. Now, while that promise was right in that book published to the world in 1830, traveled around the globe, it was disregarded and disbelieved, and everywhere the sentiments prevailed that the Indian was an untameable savage, could not be amalgamated with the white race, and was destined to follow the buffalo to extinction—and I think it was General Sherman who said: "The only good Indian is a dead one"—and more than one young men went west with no higher ambition than to shoot an Indian.

Well, God has said through his prophet, "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish," and he likewise said: "The Lamanites shall blossom as the rose." You can go out here in your garden now, examine your rose bushes and you will see just a little bit of a tiny bud where the leaves dropped off and it remains that way all through the cold winter months, but about the last of next March when the snows disappear, the frost begins to leave the ground, and the sun gets a little warmer, go out into your garden and take another observation and you will see that little bud has grown considerably; a few days later go out and have another look and you will see that little bud beginning to unfold and the next day or two you can get a glimpse of its interior beauty; by and by, in the nighttime almost, it spreads out a great big red or white rose with its lovely fragrance. What grander object could have been taken to illustrate this great truth of the development and unfoldment of God's people in the latter-day development and progress?

Now, let us see: I said that it was in 1911 that the Society of American Indians was organized at Columbus, Ohio, the first organized effort in behalf of the American Indian to give him his rights as a citizen of this free country. Is it not the strangest thing in the world, is it not a wonderful paradox that we living in this land of the free whose Constitution says all men are free and equal, that for centuries the red man, who is the real owner, and as they boastfully and properly say 100 per cent American, are denied citizenship? Is it not strange? And yet it is so. Well, the object of that organization was to give them their rights, give them citizenship.

Indians Lack Citizenship Privileges

Doctor Montezuma told a little story the other night out here at the Soldan High School—and you people missed a rare treat when you were not there—in his address illustrated in his dramatic and forceful way, he said: "Take the 360,000 Indians of the United States, drive them out to California, put them all in one big ship and kick them clear out of the country, get rid of them, let that ship start south, go around Cape Horn, come back up the Atlantic Ocean, bring those Indians back into the country through Castle Garden," and he says, "within five years, according to the laws of the land, everyone of them can become an American citizen, but he cannot get it while he lives here." Isn't that strange?

I heard a lady here in your city the other day say that up at Des Moines, Iowa, a few weeks ago while she was there attending some big convention engaged in teaching Americanization—we have heard a good deal about that lately—"There was an Indian girl who was to sing on that stage, and this convention, as conventions sometimes do, ran over its time, and this Indian girl singer became impatient, ran on to the platform and told them their time was up and she was going to perform. She shook her fist in their faces and said, "You people are talking about the Americanization of Italians and Poles and so on; what are you going to do for us people who are 100 per cent American, who are loyal to the heart and core?" That lady said it made her think, and well it might.

Well, now, I say you people who failed to attend the sessions of this convention missed something. I wish you could all have been there. You would have seen the unfolding, the development of this tiny rosebud. Had you been at the sessions of that convention, had you attended the entertainment given at the Soldan High School the other evening and the same thing given at the Webster Groves Armory, I believe you would there have had a glimpse into the interior beauty of this little bud.

Influence of Civilization

Doctor Montezuma told us another story. I am going to try to repeat it. Doctor Montezuma is a full-blood Apache Indian, one of the fiercest tribes of North America. He was captured by the Pima Indians when he was four years old and a short time afterwards sold to a white man for $30. The white man took him to Chicago and that has been his home ever since. Well, he said when they brought him into camp he saw another little boy. He never had seen one like him before. That other little boy was a white boy and a red-headed boy, and they called him Mickey. Of course, that means he was Irish. Mickey had been captured by the Indians, too. Doctor Montezuma said: "He looked at me and I looked at him, and we separated. I went to the East and Mickey went to live with the Indians." Thirty years afterwards, Montezuma had grown up with the white people, was educated, and became doctor of medicine, speaking the English language fluently and an able speaker, loving civilization. He went back to visit his people, and he went to where the Indians came to get their rations, their allotment of provisions from the Government. While there he saw a white man, who looked like what might have been a white man, coming up to him along with the rest. He reached out his hand and said, "How-do-you-do?" And he says he received for an answer an Indian grunt, and he was surprised. This man with his hair all down over his eyes and his ears, shaggy, and a scowl on his face, sat down on the ground with the Indians, and Doctor Montezuma had to talk to that white man through an interpreter. The Indian had forgotten his Indian language and the white man had forgotten his English. That was Mickey, and he says that is a striking example of what environment will do.

So the Indians claim, and justly and right, the only way to civilize the Indian is to put him into civilization; and to bring that about, if possible, they organized the Society of American Indians, which has for its object the emancipation of the red man and the complete and utter abolishment of the Indian Bureau at Washington, which they claim is an injustice and a hindrance to the development of the Indian. Now that is one of the reasons why those people met here in your city. Yes, to get their ideas before the people, and as I said awhile ago with reference to the Zionist movement among the Jews, I believe just as firmly that the great God of Israel had something to do with this movement among the Lamanites of latter days and he is directing their course to a large extent, and it is bound to succeed; it cannot be otherwise, for the books, I say the three standard books of the church, inform us that that very condition would obtain.

Value of Book of Mormon

Now, this book, the Book of Mormon, is full of promises to those Lamanite people, that they shall become a delightsome people, and they are going to take their place along with the white man and they are going to wield a wonderful influence in the civilization yet to be, and to you Latter Day Saints in particular, will it surprise you when I tell you that while we as a people have been talking and singing and praying about the redemption of Zion, will it surprise you when I say that this book informs us that those people, the Lamanites, are going to have an important part in that great work? Do you know that?

It was Brother Joseph Luff—I say this now by way of warning—it was Brother Luff when he was still one of the Quorum of Twelve who in 1906 published an epistle to the church based on a vision he had and revelation which God gave him in which he saw many of the Latter Day Saints putting their Book of Mormon, with its wealth of gold and treasure, behind their backs, and I am astonished to-day to find a lot of Saints who have never read the Book of Mormon through and do not know of its wonderful contents.

Let me read you something—this is in the 10th chapter of the book of Third Nephi, page 664. Speaking of the Gentiles now he said:

"If they will repent and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob."

What do you think of that? That is plain, isn't it? "And also, as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem." Now, those Lamanite people are going to play an important part in that work, and the Gentiles, if they are humble and submissive, may assist them. That is what this record says.

Fullness of Times for Gentiles

Now, I say the time is at hand. The fullness of the Gentiles mentioned by the Savior in the 21st chapter of Luke and the Apostle Paul in the 11th chapter of Romans, has just about come in, and the Apostle Paul very specifically in the 11th chapter of Romans; I find there he says with reference to that time, "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer who shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." Turn away ungodliness from Jacob, the whole House of Israel. Do you know that? Do you realize what that means?

We are living in wonderful times, wonderful days. Few people in 1820 realized what was going to come to pass when the little boy told them: "I saw a vision. God appeared to me and told me that the churches were all wrong." But they said he was a crank. A little handful, so to speak, recognized the voice of the Good Shepherd. I want to tell you that it is just as much a fulfillment of prophecy when these poor oppressed and downtrodden people, the Lamanites, come to your great big city and hold a convention and start to do something to make their visit in this city a success. Never have they had such a representation as they have had in this city; never did they get such publicity as they had here in this city and they are going to meet right here again next year. Now, you Latter Day Saints want to keep that in mind. You want to wake up a little bit and when they come here next year, you want to attend that convention. It is not held behind closed doors. They like to have people come there to see what they are doing. You want to avail yourselves of it.

Now, I say that I believe God is in the movement. He is working mightily, the times are getting near when God must cut his work short in righteousness. The Savior himself says these days would be shortened. Why? Because of the terrible wickedness in the land, like unto to-day. Why, I read in the paper this morning that a woman with her five-year-old child went to the butcher shop, possibly to buy her Sunday's roast. She was standing, back to the rear, with a basket on her arm; three bandits came in and ordered hands up, but because she could not understand English well, as she was looking around in bewilderment, one of the bandits shot her down and she died forty-five minutes later. These conditions are going on everywhere; gross wickedness of every kind.

A brother told me last night, coming across the river from the East Side, that he saw a game of craps right on the street car. They had money piled up on the seat, gambling on the street car. Now, it is because of the gross wickedness among the people that the Lord said he would cut his work short in righteousness and he would shorten those days. At that time, mark you, this little bud would unfold and reveal its beauty and ultimately shed its fragrance to the honor and glory of God.

The Unfolding Bud

You people of Saint Louis had an opportunity to witness this unfoldment, for on the stage the other night at Soldan High School was a young lady, an Indian girl who just a few short years ago, two or three years ago, two years I believe she said, with her sister, was walking along the street and she saw a picture of Indians on the billboard, and you know those pictures are not very nice, and it made her feel so bad that she resolved right there that she would do something to remove the odium and elevate her people when those pictures were to be shown on the screen. How could she do it? Well, that picture was showing on the screen. She had no money, no prestige, but she went to thinking and went to work and finally thought of a friend who had a little money. She said: "I want you to loan me $500."

"What are you going to do with $500?"

"I am going to organize a film corporation."

Think of that, an Indian girl going to organize a film organization to compete with the corporations of the world with $500 to start on. She did it and she is one of the great singers of this country; she stands at the head of a big corporation to-day.

On the same stage there stood up a man, an Indian, a tenor, and you never heard any nicer singing than that Indian did. They have the talent.

Last August at Wagner, South Dakota, I attended a Chautauqua where there were four Indians, young people, a young man—"Standing Buffalo," a young chief—and three young ladies. One of the young ladies, who stood at the head of the organization, calls herself Princess Te Ata, and she is a noted singer. I took their pictures and had a nice visit with them. They are a very nice people, bright and intelligent. So in every line of endeavor, I do not care if it is on the stage, in the hospital, in the home, or in the shop, or if it is on the farm, I care not where, the Indian is the peer of the white man in every line of endeavor if he has half a chance. It is being demonstrated over and over again.

So I say the prophecy is having its fulfillment. The little bud is opening up. By and by we are going to see the rose in all of its beauty, and it is going to make some of us think.

A letter came in too late for insertion in this issue, from Elder Daniel Macgregor, telling of the opposition and consequent spectacular performance in connection with his recent activities in Des Moines. It will be published in full next week.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

The Methodist Federation for Social Service issues monthly a four-page paper under the title The Social Service Bulletin. The issue for March, 1920, is taken up entirely with the cooperative movement, which is quoted below in full:

The Cooperative Movement

Devoted to the principle that things should be done and commodities produced for use rather than for exchange.

What Is It?

"An organized, nonpolitical effort of people to control production and distribution of things needed to satisfy their wants; first requirement, loyalty and friendship toward fellow men. Teaches people to do things for themselves, without asking or accepting state aid; to administer affairs of society."—Cooperative League of America.

How It Operates

Fundamental Principles: (1) One vote for each member. (2) Invested capital to receive only interest, never to exceed current market rate. (3) Legal ownership of property acquired to remain vested in society. (4) Shares in society's capital stock nontransferable, except with consent of society. (5) Any official subject to recall by majority vote. (6) Surplus savings if not used for collective purposes, returned to members in proportion to patronage.

A Consumer's Society associates persons who have joined to satisfy their needs, whether for groceries, bread, meat, clothing, or other necessities by establishing their own distributing center and buying at wholesale.

A Producer's Society associates persons who have joined together as workers in a workshop or factory to produce goods to be sold to persons who are not members.

Agricultural Societies: Market fruits and nuts, purchase supplies, organize selling, irrigate land, establish warehouses and elevators for storing farm products, maintain creameries, cheese factories, and producer's exchange.

Capital: Raised by selling shares at $5 or more, withdrawable but rarely transferable. Any person approved by committee may join by payment of small entrance fee and taking one or more shares. Proceeds: Disbursed in form of small interest on shares and dividends returned to purchasers according to amounts purchased; rate of dividend returned to nonmembers half that returned to members. How to Begin: Any group with 20 members and $200 subscribed can making a beginning. With this amount, they buy at wholesale a few most needed commodities, and sell at current prices to members. Amount saved is returned to members in proportion to amount of their purchases. No credit extended. The Next Step: When a number of local societies have been established successfully they unite in the establishment of a wholesale society.

Origin and Growth

In Europe: Began about middle of nineteenth century by weavers in Rochdale, England, selling four commodities and opening store only in evening. Movement spread to all parts of the world, including Orient. Great Britain in 1919 had 1,400 societies with three and a half million members, doing a business in 1918 of $326,000,000. Vary from Leeds Society with nearly 70,000 members and annual trade of over a million and a half pounds with 100 branches, flour mills, bakery, laundry, and boot and brush factory, to any number of small societies owning and conducting small stores in obscure streets. A British Cooperative Women's Guild of 30,000 members an important element. Membership greatly increased during war. In Great Britain, 176,750 new members received during first six months, yearly average for forty years previous having been 70,000. British Movement federated in two immense societies, English Cooperative Wholesale Society and Scottish Cooperative Wholesale Society.

In United States: First society organized about 1844; Civil War shattered early movement. Developed among different groups: factory workers of New England; farmers of Middle West; Scandinavian immigrants of middle Northwest; Jews of New York East Side; miners of Pennsylvania and Illinois; timber workers of Pacific Northwest. Immigrant people have led, especially Finns. Social, educational, and recreational aspects, such as clubhouses, theaters, amusement parks, schools, and publications developed chiefly by foreign people.

Sectional Federation: Pacific Cooperative League in California; Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union organized twenty years ago, now consists of 550 separate societies in Kansas. Owns 330 elevators and 250 stores; has jobbers business of $3,500,000; and Farmers' Live Stock Commission which in first fourteen months handled $6,300,000 of stock; insurance society carries fire and hail insurance with policies in January, 1920, of $9,990,000. Central States Cooperative Wholesale Society, buying federation of societies in Middle West, reported in June, 1919, a business of $55,000. In October, 1919, Nonpartisan League was operating 31 stores in North Dakota. Nebraska Farmers' Union owns stores, creameries, flour mills, grain elevators, a State exchange, three banks, a newspaper, and live stock commission business. In one county 93 farmers put in $100 each for grain elevator; got usual price for grain, paid for elevator, repaired building, put aside sinking fund, paid 7 per cent interest on loans, and at the end of year had $20,000 additional.

Factors Retarding Development

(1) Disaster met by early experiments. (2) Inherent individualism of America, fostered by pioneer conditions. (3) Fairly high standard of living, and until recently lack of economic pressure. (4) Lack of experience in management among early leaders. (5) Educational system which emphasizes competition instead of cooperation. (6) Opposition of capitalistic elements. Instances:

Labor Movement in Seattle bought bakery lunch room and restaurant, with bakery operating in basement. City authorities notified them it was against law to operate a basement bakery, necessitating rebuilding of plant.

American Society of Equity established cooperative insurance in Montana. State insurance and cooperative companies took from old companies between one and two million in premiums between 1917 and 1919. Agents of private companies in every town in Montana charged with sedition and Pro-Germanism everybody favorable to cooperative insurance. In two towns, mobs got together by these agents forcibly took supplies of agents of American Society of Equity, and warned if they continued to represent farmers' cooperative organization they would be harshly dealt with.

Miners of Illinois town attempted to organize cooperative society. Thirteen signed for $2,000 worth of stock and arranged mass meeting, expecting about 1,000 attendance. Board of Trade met and word went forth that any miner who attended meeting or interested himself in cooperative movement would lose his job.

In 1919, twenty-one societies with membership of 1,500 operated in Florida. Local representative of Federal Food Control Board organized retailers to boycott cooperatives; notified wholesalers to cease selling to cooperatives; all but one wholesaler complied. Local cooperatives federated, hired lawyer who advised appeal to public opinion through local Chamber of Commerce. When case came up, president of chamber proved to be wholesaler boycotting cooperatives. No decision made, but sentiment was that cooperatives were being treated unfairly. Wholesalers then took up fight against one wholesaler who had stood by cooperatives, boycotting him, and refusing him goods and credit. Case against Food Controller lost in court. Cooperatives now organizing their own wholesale.

(1) Federal Employees: Conduct stores and a lunch room in Washington. In New York City a Federal Employees Cooperative League with 12,000 members conducts 21 stores in basements of post-office buildings.

Typical Enterprises

(2) Illinois Central Workers: 200 employees; business of $4,000 a month in October, 1919. Each week Tuesday, members make out lists of what they desire; goods delivered by wholesale at common storeroom; each person's package made up and left for him before quitting time. Five members chosen by all, form purchasing committee. Only two receive pay, one who keeps books and one who makes up packages, each receiving $10 a month, work requiring only a short time after working hours. Living expenses cut 20 to 25 per cent.

(3) A Seattle Cooperative Bank: Established 1919; six months later deposits reached total of $223,244.13.

(4) In Pacific Northwest shingle mills established by Methodist minister who found shingle weavers on strike because owner could not pay wages. Men assumed control in hope that they could provide themselves with steady work. Thirty-one such mills now operating.

(5) Farmers' Fire Insurance: About 2,000 companies carry insurance exceeding $5,250,000,000 on property valued at $7,000,000,000, at half the commercial rate.

(6) Labor Unions in Seattle organized society, took over large public market building; $500,000 business in first thirty weeks. Meat business alone in May, 1919, amounted to $70,000. Net profit in first seven months $20,000. Business now owns slaughterhouse, ice and cold storage plants.

(7) Purity Cooperative Bakery, Paterson: Organized by Jewish immigrants, telegraphed Mr. Hoover's office it was against by-laws of society to charge as much for bread as price fixed by Federal Food Control Board. Since Government could make no exception, surplus from fixed prices was returned to members. Membership at once increased until bakery became one of biggest establishments in Paterson.

Recent Developments

In October, 1918, six hundred societies were registered with Cooperative League of America; a year later more than 3,000.

First National Convention: In October, 1918, at Springfield, Illinois, representatives of 348 retail and 5 wholesale societies representing a million members, met to form plan of organization.

National Wholesale Cooperative Association followed, organized June, 1919; headquarters in Chicago. Purpose: to promote cooperation through establishment of retail enterprises, wholesale distribution, factories, banks, and insurance.

Farmer-Labor Cooperative Commission: In February, All-American Cooperative Congress met in Chicago; 200 delegates, representing 2,000,000 active members and about 20,000,000 consumers.

Purpose: To coordinate and encourage cooperative efforts between and among organized producers and consumers, and to unify action in eliminating speculation and profiteering in necessities of life; to develop intelligence, mutual understanding, and good will.

Main Representation: Labor: Railroad workers, aggregating more than 2,000,000 members and capital of $42,000,000. Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Blacksmiths and Helpers. Farmers: National Federation of Gleaners; Nebraska Farmers' Union with 40,000 members and capital of $85,000,000; Farmers' National Council, representing 750,000 members; Grange; American Society of Equity. Cooperatives: Pacific Cooperative League; Western Cooperative Shingle Mills; National Cooperative Association.

Resolutions provide for: (1) Indorsement of central national cooperative educational association independent of commercial enterprises. (2) General education of public. (3) Education of members. (4) Training of technical experts in administration and management.

Action: Approved committee for development of cooperative banks and credit unions, and establishment of cooperatively owned daily papers throughout nation, particularly in industrial centers. Formulated demands on Congress and State legislatures for laws to correct discriminations against cooperative institutions.

Labor Support: Brotherhood of Railway Employees and Railway Shop Laborers manufactures clothing for members; owns four textile mills; products sold direct to 200,000 members on mail order system; United Mine Workers wrote check for $12,500 to Central States Cooperative Wholesale Society of East Saint Louis to put enterprise on solid financial basis. Movement to establish Labor Bank has been started, having behind it Railroad Brotherhoods with over $40,000,000 of capital.

Banking and Credit

Crucial need is establishment of democratic credit and banking system. Some beginnings have been made:

(1) People's Banks (or Credit Unions): A cooperative form of banking, pooling capital of members for mutual benefit. Every borrower and depositor must be shareholder. Each member has but one vote regardless of number of shares owned. Receives deposits, sells shares, and makes loan to members. Number in existence in 1915 all over the world 65,000, with membership of 15,000,000 and annual business of $7,000,000,000. Exist in this country chiefly in Massachusetts and New York. Massachusetts in 1918 had 20,000 shareholders, 59 banks, and assets of nearly $2,000,000. In January 1918 New York had 39 unions with 9,667 shareholders and resources of $465,383.

(2) Credit: Financiers agree that confidence is basis of credit: confidence in personal character; in capacity of society to produce goods. Labor is entitled therefore to control some part of credit system, but at present capital controls practically all. Next step in democratizing economic relations is securing to labor its proper share of control of credit. People's banks form part of the movement. A group in England is attempting to educate labor and the public on this necessary change in financial control.

Potential Power of the Movement

In Switzerland, Bell and Son dominated entire meat supply, dictating prices to private dealers and cooperative. Cooperative Wholesale announced its determination to end subjection of its constituency to this control. Before action began, Bell and Son asked for terms, offering to sell out, which was done.

In 1913 in Dublin, 30,000 unskilled Irish dock workers struck. Struggle long drawn out; need for relief desperate. British Trade Union Congress tried to obtain loan of $25,000 from British bankers to help strikers; banks refused. Then asked British Cooperative Wholesale Society to furnish like amount of food on their note. Cooperative agreed; within 48 hours 60,000 packages of food on board ship ready to start.

Scottish Wholesale Society handled "Sunlight" soap, at retail price fixed by manufacturer. Private traders pointed out that rebates given to users amounted to reduction in price and manufacturers demanded that no rebates be given. Society refused, appealed to all local societies to do same, and procured soap elsewhere. Within a week "Sunlight" manufacturer asked for terms, but it was too late. Steps had been taken to establish cooperative soap works.

Fundamental Significance

(1) Creates new international bond. At last meeting of Triennial Conference of International Cooperative Alliance before war, 15,000,000 members sent delegates from twenty-four countries. In 1915 British section raised funds for relief of helpless Germans and Austrians stranded in England; German Cooperatives looked after English and French in Germany. Monthly Bulletin of Alliance continued publication through war, carrying articles from England, Russia, Germany, Austria, France in same issue; reports of Germany and Austria-Hungary sent through Cooperatives in Holland. No word of abuse passed between sets of leaders in belligerent countries.

Resolution drawn up at Cooperative Council in 1919 requested: continuance and extension of Inter-Allied Supply Commission; Inter-Allied control of transports; fixing of freight rates; insurance of foodstuffs. Recommended: International office of Economic Statistics to study conditions of production and distribution throughout world for guidance of Supply Commission; Commercial treaties putting all nations on equal footing; Tariff for revenue only; Joint standards of coinage, weights and measures, and social laws; Improvement of means of communication.

(2) Substitutes cooperation for competition in economic relations. Democratizes economic life of whole people, and establishes good will as the bond of society, by peaceful, gradual method. "Cooperation allied with the trade union movement is the method by which working class is preparing to abolish wage system. This movement creates organs of social transformation and trains its members in the functions of running and organizing production and distribution for the community.—New Age, London.

The Church

Interchurch World Movement in a conference of Industrial Relations Department, October, 1919, indorsed cooperation.

Questions: How can the local church help? By spreading information? By providing storeroom space for small beginnings among members? By leading in organization of local enterprises?

PASTORAL

Duties of Branch Officers

By Elbert A. Smith

The second of four articles on this important subject, by one of the First Presidency.

II. THE PRIEST

"The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.

Under the law the priest is associated rather closely with the elder; while the deacon is associated more in his line of work with the teacher. The deacon is to assist the teacher; the priest is to assist the elder. The line seems to be drawn rather distinctly at this point between two classes of work; and if, as suggested in a forthcoming article, a teacher or a deacon shall visit in conjunction with a priest, he should do so acting in his own capacity, and not as an assistant to the priest in his work.

Certain lines are laid down over which branch officers may not go; for instance, in the statement that teachers and deacons may not baptize or administer the sacrament; and yet the law allows a good deal of latitude, evidently for the benefit of those branches that are not fully officered or do not have entirely competent men in all offices. And there are such branches. So the Lord has wisely ordained that the deacon may swing into line and help the teacher; the priest may assist the elder; and those of a higher office may step down and officiate in any lesser office. The work must be done, and is not to be hindered by ironclad rules. So branch organization is of necessity somewhat mobile.

The Priest May Preach, Teach, Exhort, Etc.

The priest is to preach, teach, expound, and exhort, according to the law found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

And the Book of Mormon says that the disciples of the church on this continent, when ordaining priests, said: "In the name of Jesus Christ I ordain you a priest . . . to preach repentance and remission of sins through Jesus Christ, by the endurance of faith on his name to the end."—Book of Moroni 3: 2.

Very important instruction as to the character of their preaching is found in the following:

"And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of the church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

With others, the priests share the duty to conserve the gospel of Jesus Christ, teaching those things that are written in the standard books, and resisting any effort to abandon any part of the gospel, or to introduce any foreign elements, contrary to the written word.

May Baptize, Administer Sacrament, and Solemnize Marriages

The priest may baptize (see Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10). He may administer the sacrament, as stated in the same section. Also the Book of Mormon has the following: "The manner of their elders and priests administering the flesh and blood of Christ unto the church . . ."—Book of Moroni 4: 1.

And the church law concerning marriage says that "the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest," etc. (See Doctrine and Covenants 111: 1.)

While teachers and deacons may not lay on hands, the privilege is extended to the priest to the extent of ordaining other priests, teachers, or deacons: "He may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.

A Priest May Preside

A priest may preside over a branch in his own right when so elected by the people. (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2.)

The Priest a Visiting Officer

The priest is to visit the house of each member (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10). He goes not as an inquisitor, but rather "exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties."

This is one of the most important duties falling to the lot of the priest—to move among the members, from house to house, meeting them in the privacy of their home life, strengthening them with wise counsel, exhorting them to attend to all their duties, and in all this representing the interest of the church in their welfare. For the priests go into these homes representing God and the church.

This is their duty, and the members should honor them in it and cooperate with them, not resenting their visits as an intrusion, for they are not an intrusion, but welcoming them as a wise and legitimate part of the gospel economy. God knows the weakness of human nature, and he has so ordered the organization of the church that there are these officers whose duty it is to visit the members, exercising a kindly watchcare, and extending a helping hand.

The priests in these visits should use good judgment and be guided by the Spirit; so there are no rigid rules that can be laid down to govern them. God himself has not attempted to do that. They must be actuated by the spirit of love, and go about their work because they desire to do good. They should avoid that spirit of formality that moves men to do things merely to fulfill the text of the law. They should endeavor to get close to the Saints and in sympathy with them, and in this way they will accomplish great good and obtain a goodly reward for themselves.

It will be observed that while the teacher is to "see that

The Ten Lost Tribes—Where Are They?—Part 3

By S. K. Sorensen

The difference between "the house of Israel" and "the house of Judah" is discussed in this article.

As it was through the restoration of the gospel and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon that the identity of the American Indians was established, supported by archæological evidences as to the similarity of Indians and Hebrew traditions, language, and belief; so also it must of necessity be through the restoration of the gospel that the whereabouts of the lost tribes of Israel must be established.

It must be remembered that at the advent of the Savior into the world, there were only two tribes out of the twelve to whom he ministered before his crucifixion; but as the other ten tribes were also a part of the house of Israel to whom the promise of a Savior had been extended and who had kept the law of Moses as a type of the Messiah who was to come as the great and last sacrifice, hence his ministry must also reach unto them that there may be one fold and one shepherd and that the promises to Israel may be verified.

At this juncture let us examine the testimony of Joseph Smith in reference to certain passages of scripture which he claimed the angel told him were about to be fulfilled, and the very first one is in reference to the restoration of the priesthood by the hand of Elijah the prophet; and further the angel said:

"And he [the Lord] shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall be turned to the fathers; if it were not so the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming."

Joseph Smith was made to understand that this scripture was about to be fulfilled.

The promises referred to here which had been made to the fathers were about to be fulfilled and established in the hearts of the children. Whose children, let me ask? Have these promises been established or planted in the hearts of the children of the Jews? No, verily no! As yet they have not accepted of the gospel promises made to the fathers.

all the members do their duty" (Doctrine and Covenants 17:11), the priest is to exhort them to attend to their duties, especially those duties that are termed family duties. It is the work of the priests to exhort and persuade and advise and admonish; but he may not discipline. The teacher also persuades and exhorts, and failing to secure desired results he may set in motion those processes that will result in the disciplining of those who do not obey the divine law and put away all iniquity, hardness, backbiting, and evil of every nature.

Priests May Travel

The law provides that when practicable and desirable the priest may travel and preach:

"And, behold, the high priests should travel, and also the elders, and also the lesser priests."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:22.

"Therefore, take with you those who are ordained unto the lesser priesthood, and send them before you to make appointments, and to prepare the way, and to fill appointments

The only ones, then, that it could have any reference to are the children scattered abroad "of the house of Israel," the ten tribes.

The promises of the Messiah and the redemption to be brought about by him through the gospel covenant, were given to Israel and not to the Gentiles, although the Gentiles may be partakers thereof; but that part of Israel that we know as Jews have constantly refused to accept of those promises. To whom, then, can we look for the fulfillment of this angelic prediction but to the children of the house of Israel, who would fulfill it upon hearing the gospel message as restored to earth and preached by men ordained under the direction of John the Baptist, in the spirit and power of Elijah? The next scripture quoted by the angel was the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, which he said was about to be fulfilled.

The eleventh and twelfth verses read as follows:

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an Ensign to the nations, and shall assemble the outcast of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

We note in this quotation that there is a distinction made between "the outcast of Israel" and the dispersed of Judah; hence they are not one and the same people; it refers distinctly to the house of Israel, the scattered ten lost tribes—the outcast; and also to the Jews, the dispersed of Judah, at the conquest of Jerusalem A. D. 70.

It will also be noted that the outcast of Israel were to be scattered in every land upon the islands of the sea, and that the object of the Lord in setting up his work the second time was to assemble those who were considered outcasts under the one ensign, the gospel.

The angel said that this was about to be accomplished, but if those who were considered outcasts were hidden away behind the icy barriers at the North Pole, the object for which the gospel was restored has so far failed, and the very purpose to gather in the lost sheep of the house of Israel has been frustrated.

The north and north countries do not refer to the North Pole but refer to the direction northward from whence the prophets were speaking. A little study of our Bibles will easily convince us of that fact. Jeremiah says in chapter 3, verse 18, in speaking of the return of Israel:

"In those day the house of Judah shall walk with the house that you yourselves are not able to fill. Behold, this is the way that mine apostles, in ancient days, built up the church unto me."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:20.

Those who do not travel, but officiate in branches, in their calling as priests, will find a splendid field to occupy in the discharge of duties outlined in the law—especially in their work as visiting officers—they will never travel far enough to find a finer field of work.

Most of the priests are laboring men, and many of them find it difficult to take the time to make visits. But it is said that difficulties are made to overcome. The quarterly report from one branch shows one hundred and sixteen visits for the quarter, made by three priests. These are working men and men of family, and have little or no time for visiting, except evenings and Sunday afternoons. Their record for one quarter shows what may be done.

[Editors' Note: Next week the duties of the teacher will be discussed.]

of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."

"Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land."—Jeremiah 23: 7-8.

In the sixteenth chapter we are told that the Lord is going to send out many fishers and hunters who shall hunt them from every mountain and from every hill and out of the holes of the rocks. This is the mission of the restored gospel and the purpose for which it was established. Judah (the Jews) are not as yet caught by these hunters and fishers, and unless they have found others who belong to the house of Israel their mission has been a failure. But it has not been a failure; the Spirit who directed the setting up of the restored gospel also directed the fishers and hunters; not to the North Pole, but to the north countries, where they found those whom they were sent to gather; and in every mountain and every hill (nations) where they were sent they found those who belong to the house of Israel.

But let us pause and consider the contents of these quotations just referred to and I think we will discover that the house of Israel (the ten tribes) is not at the North Pole, but wherever the house of Judah is, there also will be the house of the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel and they shall come together out of the land of the north."

Where is the house of Judah (the Jews)? I believe statistics show that Russia has the greatest population of Jews of any country in the world. Poland, Austria, Germany, England, France, Scandinavia, the Netherlands, all of these northern European Countries have a great number of Jews, and from thence they emigrated to the American Continent.

There is where we find the Jew, but have never heard it claimed that they (the Jews) were at the North Pole.

Now consider the statement of the prophet: "The house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel." That is to say, wherever the house of Judah is, there also will be the house of Israel, the ten tribes.

What other conclusion can we come to? If language means anything that is just what it means and the only conclusion we can arrive at. But because the house of Israel have not refrained from intermarrying and mixing with the nations where they have been scattered, their identity is lost. Not so with the Jews; they have refrained from intermarrying with Gentile nations and have kept the original Hebrew stock pure, hence their identity is known.

Again the Lord says through Jeremiah:

"And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds. . . . Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel [the ten tribes] out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land."—Jeremiah 23: 3, 7, 8.

Apparently the intent of this language is, that this last event of gathering Israel from all the countries, shall so far overshadow their being gathered out of Egypt, that the former shall appear insignificant compared to the great work of gathering them out of all countries through the instrumentality of many fishers and hunters, who shall search them out in their varied and obscure conditions and abiding places in life, through a greater law (the gospel) than that which was given to Moses who led them out of Egypt in one body, without any hunting and fishing for a scattered Israel.

Zechariah, after speaking of the young man who should declare that Jerusalem shall be restored and shall be inhabited as towns without walls, goes on to say:

"Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of heaven, saith the Lord. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughters of Babylon."—Zechariah 2: 6, 7.

"For, lo, I will command and I will sift the house of Israel [the ten tribes] among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth."—Amos 9: 9.

Language could not indicate a more thorough scattering of the house of Israel than is indicated in the foregoing quotations; hence the wonderful and miraculous manifestations of God's power in gathering them out so that not even the least grain shall be lost. In speaking of Ephraim this same prophet says in chapter 10: 9, "And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries." Ephraim was the chief of the lost ten tribes, and was to be in far countries, where he should remember the Lord, but not one word is said about them or any of the house of Israel being beyond the known geographical boundaries, hidden away behind impenetrable barriers of icy mountains.

Ezekiel is a good witness on this point; he says (37: 19):

"Thus saith the Lord God; behold I will take the stick of Joseph [Book of Mormon], which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows." How did that book get into the hands of Ephraim and his fellow tribes, the ten lost tribes, if they were at the North Pole and still there when the Book of Mormon came forth? As it was through the restoration of the gospel that the American Indian was identified with the tribe of Manasseh, the son of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, so also it was through the restoration of the gospel that Ephraim, the brother of Manasseh and the son of Joseph, and the tribes of Israel his fellows were identified, and the patriarchal order by the spirit of inspiration is the medium through which their identification has been established.

It is a well-known fact among Latter Day Saints that the lineage of those who became identified with the church being indicated through this medium, the various tribes of Israel are represented but the tribe of Ephraim in particular. Speaking in reference to the gathering of the house of Israel and the house of Judah in the latter days the prophet Jeremiah says:

"Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame and the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a very great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping [repentance], and with supplication [prayer] will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters [spiritual refreshments by the guidance of the Holy Spirit] in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble [the gospel way, the straight and narrow way]: For I am a father to Israel and Ephraim is my first-born."

There again it is plainly pointed out how Israel is to be gathered, namely, by the gospel law, the straight and narrow way, by the guiding influence of the Holy Spirit, with the principles of faith and repentance manifested by their coming, and their weeping, and thus are they born into the kingdom of God, "and Ephraim is my first-born."

That is to say, Ephraim will take the lead in accepting the gospel in the restoration, hence the Book of Mormon was placed "in the hand of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows." They were not at the North Pole or anywhere else hidden away from the sound of the gospel, but ready to accept the voice of the good Shepherd when they heard it, and Hosea says: "I have written to him [Ephraim] the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing." Hosea 8: 12.

This agrees exactly with Ezekiel's statement that the stick of Joseph (Book of Mormon) was to be placed in the hands of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows. The Lord knew that the house of Judah (the Jews) would not receive it; but the house of Israel would; hence the statement by Mormon: "And behold they [Book of Mormon scriptures] shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God."—Mormon 2: 41.

The Children's Home

By A. M. Chase

"It seems we could furnish a number of small cottages where these wards could be placed in families of suitable number."

The problem of home making is always one of vital importance and in no department of life more than in the effort properly to care for the homeless children of the church.

That the children of the church are to be numbered at once as among our assets and liabilities is a patent fact to all who have made it a matter of thought. In the homes where they receive proper training and care they are our very best assets, but where they may not receive this care and teaching, then indeed do they become one of our most pressing liabilities.

In the care of our unfortunate children, no institution may ever successfully take the place of a home, and yet, it is often the case that even an institution may be much to be preferred to a home that is only a stopping place for the child; and often it becomes apparent that foster parents may fail of filling their obligations other than so far as providing a place of lodging and food for the child is concerned. And sometimes this is only done that there may be a profitable return from the child in the way of manual labor. In these cases there rarely fails to be disappointment upon both sides, resulting in a loss to all concerned.

In the Doctrine and Covenants it is written:

"All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."

When the Lord indicated that it was time for us to establish a home for the children (see Doctrine and Covenants, 127: 3-4) there were many of us who had only a faint idea of the magnitude of the problem before us. But those who have had this matter in hand will need no reminder of the fact that there is much more involved than the simple matter of providing a place of lodging with board thrown in. It is the matter of making this, or these places homes indeed, that taxes the faculties of those in charge to the utmost, and calls for all the wisdom and consecrated effort of us who are only helpers in this work, that we may give them such facilities wherewith to accomplish this task that our places of refuge may not be institutions, but homes indeed.

In our private homes, the problem of a new member entering is always one to be met with much preparation, but the new member comes at such an age, and so sanctified by our human experiences of anxiety and suffering, that there is no room for other than love and welcome, and a willingness to take the child to our hearts in fullest measure. Though we may not all be wise in our efforts, we make a home for the child that is of vital importance to it in after life. For here the character is molded, either for good or evil. If, for any reason, a child misses this home and home love, there is no institution that may fully make up the loss.

Is the problem very different for the child who is, by reason of circumstances over which he has no control, forced into an association with others of like misfortune? Can anything less than a home meet his need? And how may this be obtained in an institution where there is a placing of these children, without reference to age or other personal attainments or endowments, or where they are placed in intimate contact with a family of twenty, thirty, or forty other children of like circumstances, taken from all ages (and both sexes) up to sixteen? Are there any of our Saints who would want to assume the responsibility of making such a place a home indeed for these children?

We are, even now, where the number indicated above is only a small portion of those who should be provided for in these sanctuaries of safety. We have these children. How will we answer to the Master for the trust? It seems to us that we can do only one thing, and that is to furnish not a large institution, but a series of small cottages where these wards of the body may be placed in families of suitable number (not to exceed twelve or fifteen) and association with those of like ages and attainments, so that those placed over them as father and mother may be able to get and maintain the vital contact necessary between the child and its parents. For we must not overlook the fact that the most vital need of a child is such a relationship in his life.

We are not writing this to find fault with the efforts made, so far, to meet this problem, but rather to suggest that the time is now upon us when we must come to their aid and make it possible more effectively to meet and work out a solution that will prove a real factor in Zion's redemption. We have the building where there may be maintained the central unit for a dining hall and other community activities, also we have ground whereon there may be erected small cottages, where these home units may be established, and thus the demand for real homes be met, under the administration of those who may be fitted to care for these little ones. Surely there are those in the church who may be so placed in charge, and thus assist in the practical solution of this problem. Will we make this possible?

Brother Evan V. Shute, son of Doctor and Sister Shute of Windsor, Ontario, won the one hundred dollar Carter Scholarship for the County of Essex, at the honor matriculation examination held last June. The presentation was made at the annual commencement exercises held at the Collegiate Institute, Windsor, Ontario, Wednesday evening, December 22, 1920. The fact that Brother Shute was only fourteen at the time of the examination goes to show his ability. He is attending the Toronto University at present. When in Windsor was very active in Religio, Sunday school, and in the orchestra.

"Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's home; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black."—Matthew 5: 38.

A master Mason asks the question, Does this refer only to profanity? Once he thought it did.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Open Letter to Local Leaders of Girls

The Women's Department extends to you greetings, and desires to express its confidence in you as a leader of girls. We feel that great consecration, much study, and some sacrifice will be required of you if you would fill this position in an acceptable way. You may be called from your home at times, to chaperon your girls, when you might wish otherwise. You will be needing constantly to search for new ideas, in order to keep their interest. You will need to be upon your knees frequently, pleading at the throne of grace for the wisdom necessary to guide these fresh young souls aright. "Too much trouble?" Ah, no! Can anything be too much trouble when the purity, happiness, usefulness of the girlhood and young womanhood of the church is involved?

As director of their activities, as one to whom they will turn for counsel, as an example of their highest ideal, you will have occasion for many quiet thoughts and decisions in regard to your own conduct and wisdom, for you will be anxious for nothing to come into their lives through you which will discourage or handicap them. In those moments when you may be honored with tender confidences, little heart glimpses, pray God that you may stand in his stead to the young soul and give exactly the counsel and encouragement which is needed at that time.

If you have been honored with a double appointment in regard to the girls of your branch, one from our department, and one from the Religio, you are fortunate in the freedom with which you may move out upon the task of supplying many of the natural desires of the young girls under your charge. You may not only interest them in the Oriole and Temple Builder work, but may join with the other Religio officers in planning for the activities which identify that department.

If, however, you represent only the Young Women's Bureau of the Women's Department, your task will be limited to those activities which come under our supervision as outlined in the manuals put out by that bureau. That field is wide, and is one well worth your very best endeavor. Every girl of Oriole age in your branch should become a member of that organization if possible, and likewise, the Temple Builders should be established among the young women of proper age. There are many things which should be brought to girls in order that their ideals of womanhood should be in harmony with the highest spiritual standards of the church. Girls should be taught proper attitudes of mind towards dress, conduct, morals, men, manners, marriage, maternity. Right principles concerning life should be ingrained into their characters, and the women of the church are directly responsible that these shall be clearly taught. Our girls should be trained in the many little things which make for domestic tranquility, for efficiency in the home, for intelligent contact with the world and its wholesome opportunities. These and other worth-while objectives may be reached through the Oriole and Temple Builder organizations, if the leaders put their whole hearts into the task.

If the Religio has a girl superintendent in your branch, make careful attempt to work in harmony with her. If she will allow you to do so, you may each be of great assistance and inspiration to the other. There is no conflict in your work, for the fields lie apart and are well defined. The Religio cares primarily for the social and recreational needs of the branch, as expressed in gatherings where both sexes meet and mingle. The Oriole and Temple Builder work cares for the very natural desire of the girls for a club life, just as the Boy Scout work meets a similar desire on the part of the boys. That impulse which is known as "gang spirit" is used in these organizations to build up, under competent leaders, bodies of strength, ideals of beauty, and characters of worth among our young people. Great credit and hearty support are due those consecrated leaders throughout the church who are striving to bring about these much-to-be-desired ends.

Oriole Work

Are you looking for something new to suggest to the Oriole girls? Then send five cents to the Playground and Recreation Association of America, 1 Madison Avenue, New York City, for their pamphlet entitled Athletic Badge Test for Girls. Call a meeting of all the circles in your community and present the proposition. The opportunity to gain poise and control over her body and be able to pass the test and wear the badge which girls all over the United States are earning will no doubt appeal to each girl. If there is no local gymnasium, you probably can procure a room that will be suitable for their practice during bad weather. If not, of course this suggestion would have to be used in the spring and summer.

Oriole Supplies

For supplies that cannot be secured locally, order from the Women's Department, Independence, Missouri, Box 255, making your money order payable to Bishop B. R. McGuire, Treasurer Women's Department. Present prices are as follows: Oriole Book, giving full instructions and essentials to every leader,$0.20
Embroidery Floss, black or orange, for emblem, per skein .03
Arm Bands, black or orange, felt, 1 ft. length, each03
Beads, in six colors, small wooden, per hundred90
Oriole Pin, silver back, enamel front, safety clasp, each90
(We will be unable to supply pins until after January 1, 1921.)

Color of Beads

The last edition of the Oriole Book (1919) does not give the color of beads used. They are as follows:

- Orange for Praise.
- Red for Beauty.
- Green for Field and Forest.
- Blue for Loyalty.
- Purple for Home Building.
- Yellow for Industry.

Ordinary khaki for the Oriole uniform can no doubt be procured locally.

Appointment of Monitors

Certificates for monitors will no longer be required, in accordance with a ruling of the executive board. Application, however, should be sent by the girl desired as monitor to her district organizer, or to the general supervisor of the Young Women's Bureau, for permission to hold such office, and this application should be signed by any two of the recognized local authorities of the branch, such as the branch president, leader of local women's department, superintendent of Sunday school, or superintendent of Religio.

Temple Builder Work

About the three significant words, self-discovery, self-development, and service, the Temple Builder work is constructed. Intended to bring to the older girls of our church some of the advantages of culture and improvement which they missed in earlier life, or which they have been compelled to forego because of life's necessity, its foundations are laid in study, in wholesome frolic, and in worthy service to those about them. Little excursions in the fields of literature, drama, hygiene, vocation, economics, and social grace are carefully planned, and woven about with charming and interesting things to do, to make, and to understand.

The Temple Builders Manual outlines several splendid study courses, and is, in itself an artistic little booklet. Its price is fifty cents per copy. Further ideas and suggestions are found monthly in The Parthenon, or are available through the supervisor of the bureau.

Reports From Orioles and Temple Builders

The local girls' leader should report semiannually, January 1 and July 1, to the district organizer, and a copy be sent to the general supervisor of the Young Women's Bureau, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. Report blanks should be furnished by the district organizer. A list of these organizers was published in the HERALD of November 19, 1920.

Special Books for Girls

The Women's Department was requested by General Conference of 1920 to select or prepare some course of study in "Mothercraft" to be used for girls of the church until such time as the public schools shall include the study in their curricula. They have selected the text, The Mothercraft Manual, by Mary L. Read, and strongly urge the monitors and leaders of girls to include the study of this book in their work this winter. The frightful prevalence of divorce, the appalling death rate of infants are two evidences of the lack of preparation for the duties of wifehood and motherhood on the part of the young womanhood of the country. As a people we stand for intelligence, believing that only in its light can true redemption be found, and as the girls of to-day are to be the mothers of to-morrow, they should catch the true and broad vision of their responsibilities to the race.

The department has also selected some pamphlets and books which our girls should read as safeguards against falling into certain errors which affect their purity of life. The attention of the Oriole monitors is called to two which have been selected for the girls from twelve to fourteen years of age. They are: Margaret, the Doctor's Daughter, and For Our Daughters, by Burlureau. For our young women we have selected The Heart of the Rose. It is a sweet story with a strong appeal for purity of thought. Our girls should by all means include the reading of these books in their winter's work. They may be ordered from the Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

The Parthenon

The Parthenon, in Autumn Leaves, is the official column of the Young Women's Bureau. The word means "Meeting place of girls," which expresses exactly what we wish it to be. In this department is carried forward our study plans, little timely articles from time to time serving to keep fresh ideas and fresh stimulation before our girls. No monitor or leader can afford to be without the valuable help given through this channel, and if she is not already a subscriber to Autumn Leaves, the publication for the young of the church, she should mend the situation as soon as possible. The magazine is issued monthly, each number being worth the price of the year's subscription, $1.75. Religio Recreational Suggestions

To those local girl leaders who have been appointed by the Religio, we would suggest that they work closely in harmony with the local leader of girls appointed by the Women's Department, as fine teamwork is possible thereby. In case there is, in your branch, no such leader, we suggest that you apply to your district organizer for an appointment, which she is privileged to make after duly counseling with the local Religio superintendent.

The following suggestions for the Religio can of course be used only by cooperation with the local boy leader as well as the social committee of your local Religio.

If your Religio needs boosting, announce a new member social, several weeks in advance. Divide the members into two teams, Reds and Blues, for instance, and let there be rivalry to see which side can bring the most prospective members to the social. Or to make it more limited, require that credit be given only for those who actually join and attend Religio for three consecutive evenings, and let the losing side furnish the entertainment and treat for the social at the close of the contest.

Before Christmas arrange a "Help Others" social. Let the price of admission be a glass of jelly, a can of fruit, bundle of good but cast-off clothes, to be turned over to the relief committee of the Religio. An interesting social evening should be planned to follow.

Work up some good, simple drama during the winter. Samuel French, 28 West Thirty-eighth Street, New York City, will send you a list of those he can furnish, or Harper Bros., Franklin Square, New York City.

Progressive Schooldays furnishes a strictly fun-making, social evening. The different branches of study (which all turn out to be funny surprises) are offered at separate homes in the community.

Arrange a debate between boys and girls or young men and women for some evening at Religio. The subject, "Resolved that mental recreation is more essential than physical recreation," will bring out many good points.

Have a Hero and Heroine program for Religio. Let three or four girls select different favorite heroines, or well-known women, and in a given time present the reasons why that particular heroine should receive the most votes of the audience, and in opposition the same number of boys handle their favorite heroes in the same manner. Then take a vote of the audience.

Write Mary E. Steele, Independence, Missouri, Box 255, for details on any of the above, or for further suggestions for social evenings.

To and About District Organizers

Putting the last first, we will say about our organizers that we have some additional appointments to report. Some of these sisters are already at work very energetically and have become very enthusiastic about the prospects in their districts. We shall expect splendid results to follow their efforts, and bespeak for them, as indeed for all the splendid women consecrated to service along this line, the hearty and sympathetic support of every church member in their districts.

Canada, Chatham District, Sister Maggie Badder, Box 2, Route 1, Thamesville, Ontario.

Canada, Toronto District, Sister Floralice Miller, 254 Shaw Street, Toronto, Ontario.

Northern Wisconsin District, Sister Mildred Zermal, Appleton, Wisconsin.

Eastern Maine District, Sister E. M. Walker, Jonesport, Maine.

Fremont (Iowa) District, Sister Blanche Barber, Tabor, Iowa.

Unorganized Nebraska Territory, Sister Lillie M. Richards, North Platte, Nebraska.

Seattle and British Columbia District, Sister Jennie Jones, 4816 Spencer Street, Seattle, Washington.

To our organizers we wish to pass along the encouraging word that, as our department becomes gradually better organized, and our office emerges from the stress of early and (of necessity) hurried adjustments, we hope to be able to respond promptly to any and every appeal. We desire to keep in close touch with conditions in all districts, and may we emphasize, very strongly, right here, the necessity for the organizers to be prompt and regular in writing their monthly letters to the general executive? Nothing will do so much towards keeping us informed as to conditions, needs, and opportunities as these regular letters from wide-awake organizers who are alert to environments and who "keep their fingers on the pulse" of their districts.

A few queries have reached our desk, which, although they have received personal reply, may have been in the minds of others as well. Of these we may speak briefly as follows:

1. Where shall local cradle roll workers get money for giving Christmas and birthday cards to their cradle roll babies? We regret to say that our general department treasury does not contain a fund for this purpose. If your local Sunday school (which financed such things in the past because of the connection it kept between it and prospective members) does not see fit to continue the custom, and if you, personally, are unable to pay for cards, we suggest that you make a personal visit instead, or a phone call—in order to assure the mother of your continued interest in her and her little one and wishing them the joys of the season.

2. Where do we get report blanks for local Women's Department leaders, young women leaders, home department and cradle roll superintendents, etc., and what is the price per 100? Report blanks for the district organizer, and the local leaders and superintendents of our various departments, are furnished, free, from our office. It is only necessary for you, as district organizer, to inform the executive of the quantities you will need of each kind. It is suggested that you mail to local workers only the blanks needed for reports almost due, stating definitely at what time you expect them returned. Preceding the time for the next quarterly report, you will mail blanks again. In this way you not only keep in touch with your local leaders, but they will not be misplacing or losing their report blanks.

3. How can an organizer know that the cradle roll work in a local is active since the local cradle roll superintendent does not report to her? By personal correspondence or through the local leaders of Women's Department, who should be concerned to see that the cradle roll work is being prosecuted successfully in their branches. When the birth of a child is recorded by a local cradle roll visitor, and the blanks sent in (in duplicate) to our office, we have the data at first hand. General conditions and activity are the added information we desire, and any alert organizer will know how to obtain this. She should plan to have the cradle roll work explained at large gatherings in her district, and as she visits or corresponds with locals, she can easily determine whether or not it is being intelligently pushed in her district. Read again the explanations of this work which were given in HERALDS of November 10 and December 8.

4. When a home class is organized, do the members become thereby members of the Women's Department and should they pay their annual dues to the same? We should construe such members to be, in fact, members of our department, and as such, they should be glad to affiliate to the extent of the usual per capita tax. Doing this would place them upon our records in such a way as to bring to them the benefits of receiving what suggestions, helps, and material may be sent out from our office. We hope to place before these groups other lines of study which may interest them in addition to their Quarterlies.

5. When we order Quarterlies for newly organized home classes, do we have to pay for them, or are they furnished free as they were when the Sunday school had the home department? If you will refer to HERALD of June 2, page 531, paragraph 7, you will find the answer to this query. It reads (in part): "As in the past, the General Sunday School Department stands ready to furnish Quarterlies for new members or classes free of charge so far as the first supply is concerned. In ordering, therefore, local superintendents should plainly state what number of Quarterlies are desired for new members and for these no money need be included (for the first quarter of their enrollment, only)."

6. Have we any home department "extension superintendents" any more? Not so-called. The responsibility of caring for isolated members who wish to study the Quarterlies or other departmental literature, has been placed upon the district organizer. She can obtain lists of such people from the district presidents, or former Sunday school district workers, and can care for them by correspondence. If there are many such in her district she may appoint an assistant to care for this part of the work.

7. We have a district Women's Department organization. Is this in harmony with the general rules? Some years ago the general organization eliminated all its rules regarding district and local organizations, feeling that the work in the districts would prosper best by being placed under the direct care of a consecrated organizer, and that the locals should have whatever kind of organization is best suited to their needs and tastes. Since we are appointing district organizers throughout the church, and placing in their charge all the interests of our department, there would seem to be little use of a district organization, and great prospect of conflict and misunderstandings. We would suggest that the officers concerned get together in council over the condition, and have the spirit of love and humility follow the dictates of

Lap Two

Apostle Williams reports on results of four months in the British Isles. A reprinted article from January Autumn Leaves accompanies this letter.

President Smith and I spent over four months in the British Isles. We covered all parts of England—south, west, north, east. We were in North and South Wales. We took a run into Scotland. Despite the "civil war" then raging between the "army" of the "Sinn Fein Republic" and the forces of the King of England, known as the "Black and Tan," we crossed the Irish Sea and spent an interesting week in "Auld Ireland."

There was a dominant and common purpose. We wanted to know the social, political, and religious conditions in these countries. We desired to know the people. Our quest? The general trend of things. Our objective? The extension of our missionary work into each one of these lands.

We visited territory where, as yet, our message has not been presented. We planned how best we could open up our work in all such places. We stopped at other points where, at one time, local churches flourished, but where to-day only a few scattered members remain. We sought out the cause and tried to supply a remedy. We were made happy in the knowledge that, in many places, the cause of Christ has been gloriously upheld.

We visited all the household of faith in this land, so far as we were able. The Saints in Britain are like true Saints are everywhere—kind, hospitable, whole-hearted, generous. They evidenced their discipleship by feeding us, sheltering us, and giving us money. It is here, as elsewhere, all are not Saints who are called Saints! More is the pity!

There are no British Saints, as there are no American or Canadian Saints. A Saint is a Saint the world over. The term is international. It does not admit of national modification. In the kingdom of God imaginary boundary lines become impossible. Physical pedigree is not a provision of citizenship. Time and place of birth is no handicap. The Saints harmony and good taste. A motion at district conference to eliminate the district organization of Women's Department and place that work under the care of the appointed organizer would seem to be not only proper procedure, but in harmony with the spirit of progress in the church to-day.

8. Has the Women's Department anything to do with the boy movement of the church? No, except as, being mothers of boys, we are interested in them, and it is our duty personally and individually to lend a movement for their good our support and encouragement so far as we may.

9. Do we have two organizers in a district, one for Women's Department and one for relief and service? No; we have but one organizer in a district. Social service work is local in its nature, and should be prosecuted by local organizations, over which the district organizer has general supervision.

10. Has the Young Women's Bureau of the Women's Department been turned over to the Religio? No; the general superintendent of the Religio Department named the general supervisor of our Young Women's Bureau as general superintendent of the girls of the Religio. Thus she is privileged to function in a dual capacity, enlarging her field of activity, and allowing her, as member of the Religio executive committee, to assist in planning the social and recreational activities of that department.

11. Has a local branch president power to appoint a leader of a local Women's Department? No; the district organizer may nominate after proper consultation with the local branch authorities and the local may ratify her nomination if they approve of her choice. Otherwise they elect to suit themselves.

of all ages and all countries are identical. We are Saints; that, and nothing more.

We visited every organized district and seventeen local churches as follows:

Districts: London, Wales, Birmingham, Manchester, Sheffield.

Saint Leonard's, looking southeast. Residences on right.

Local Churches: Nantyglo, Pontyeates, Exeter, Plymouth, Gloucester, London, Enfield, Priestly Road, Summerfield, Southeast Manchester, North Manchester, Northeast Manchester, Wigan, Warrington, Clay Cross, Sutton-in-Ashfield, and Leeds.

We attended two reunions—the British Isles Mission, and the Sheffield District. We were present at three district conferences—London, Birmingham, and Manchester. Visited Saints in Llanelly, Cardiff, Carphilly, and Glasgow. Let this suffice as to our itinerary. The particulars are immaterial.

Notwithstanding the ravages of war, the fearful depletion of their ranks, the wrecked homes, the crushed and impoverished lives, the maimed and crippled bodies, the Saints in Britain have nobly maintained the honor of the church. They have been true to their trust. They have fought a good fight against tremendous odds.

Great Britain affords one of the most promising fields for our evangel. The mass of British people are in the throes of despair. Conditions to-day are much worse than before the war. Peace seems farther off than ever. The claim that the late great war was fought for democracy is not credited over here.

The Lloyd George Government seems unable to cope with the situation. Discontent is contagious. Sedition is secretly fostered. The threat of revolution is publicly flaunted. Unemployment is an ever-increasing menace. The queues of men in all the working class districts of London where thousands stand in line anxious to do anything to supply even bread for famishing wives and children, remains an unanswered problem. The undeniable fact that tens of thousands of young men who sacrificed everything in order to uphold the honor of their country and yet to-day are denied a common job is a terrible indictment of the sufficiency of the present order.

The great mass of the people are seeking deliverance. The misguided demagogue may foster hate and foment strife all to no good purpose. He will only intensify the difficulty. On the other hand, reaction must and will eventuate and further enslavement. The people must go forward, but how?

A great conclave of bishops representing the Established and Dominant Church of England met recently in solemn conclave, after which they made pronouncement. They unanimously confessed their failure and inability to cope with the situation. The old order doth not suffice. Great Britain needs our message of hope and peace.

With a comprehensive force of missionaries properly distributed throughout the British Isles, viz: England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, and the Isle of Man, the establishment of a mission headquarters in London, the organization of a mission school, a mission paper, coupled with the unqualified and whole-hearted support of the church in America, the church in Britain will, in a few years, become self-sustaining. She will not only be able to supply most of her own home missionaries and pastors, but she will contribute trained workers for missionary and pastoral work on the continents of Europe and Asia.

A half-hearted, desultory campaign will not avail. It must be virile and aggressive. It must be well organized and disciplined. It must be comprehensive and amply supplied with men, with means, and with material. With commensurate funds, an adequate corps of missionaries, both men and women, and ample material, Great Britain will become one of our very best foreign missionary fields.

We have recommended a very definite and comprehensive plan for mission work in the British Isles to the joint council. It is only the beginning of what we have in mind. We await its indorsement and execution. Then we will pass on to larger and more extended work.

Britain is sending her quota to Graceland. Six young men and women sail from Liverpool, England, January 8, on board the White Star Liner Megantic. One of these students, Madge Green, comes from Scotland. Sidney Phillips comes from Wales. Four come from England as follows: Harold Dewsnup, Manchester; Doras Gibbs, Birmingham; Harry and Frank Holmes, Clay Cross. Most, if not all, of these young people desire to take the religious training course, in the hope that some day they may return and take up general church work in the homeland. We hope to send another contingent next year.

President Smith has been given a royal reception in Britain. The Saints have met him with open arms. He has made a good impression. His coming has revived hope. His unfoldment of the Zionite plan has stirred the Saints everywhere. The church in Britain is in line. The work takes on new life.

We are now on our continental tour. We are in Paris, but that is another story.

Greetings and good wishes for the New Year.

LONDON, N. 16, ENGLAND, T. W. WILLIAMS.
Saint Leonard's, 19 Amhurst Park.

Editorial Note

[The following article, by Apostle Williams, concerns the church headquarters in England. The photos from which the cuts were made to illustrate this article were taken by President F. M. Smith.]

Saint Leonard's! A name to conjure with! Register it in your mind. Enshrine it in your heart. Saint Leonard's, the headquarters of the British Isles Mission School! Saint Leonard's the office of the mission paper! Saint Leonard's, the office of the members of the Quorum of Twelve in the British Isles! Saint Leonard's, the headquarters of our mission secretary, mission statistician, bishop, and department officials in the British Isles!

Saint Leonard's is located at 19 Amhurst Park, London, England. It is a large three-story building. There are sixteen rooms. Several of these rooms are sufficiently large for classrooms and lecture halls. The building is easily adapted for school and office purposes. It was formerly used for college purposes. It has been known as Saint Leonard's for years. We will perpetuate the name.

Just as soon as possible we expect to organize a mission school where the boys and girls of Britain may have opportunity to gain the necessary information to equip themselves for real church work, local as well as missionary. We expect to have classes in language, literature, church doctrine, public speaking, nursing.

It is our purpose to make this an adjunct to Graceland with the hope that it can become a feeder for Graceland. We look forward to the day when Saint Leonard's will mean as much to the church in Great Britain as Graceland does to the church in America. We expect to make Saint Leonard's a household word in every Latter Day Saint home in all the world.

The next time you come to London do not fail to visit Saint Leonard's. If you are going to the Continent come see Saint Leonard's first. When you return, call at Saint Leonard's.

When you think of London visualize Saint Leonard's first. Then think of Westminster Abbey, Saint Paul's Cathedral, the Houses of Parliament, London Bridge, the Tower, and the River Thames. Then come back to Saint Leonard's.

FORT COLLINS, COLORADO.

Editors Herald: The work is steadily moving forward with an earnest band of workers in both branch and Sunday school. We are much encouraged over the willing efforts of our young men in the ministry, who are taking hold of the work. Brother Bullard has this fall organized a Sunday school at Greeley, thirty miles southeast of here, and at Longmont, about twenty-five miles south. Our Religio gave a good Thanksgiving program, Puritan costumes being much in evidence. Weather conditions are very unseasonable, dry and high winds.

A Missionary's Message to His Near Relatives

Elder Glaud R. Kuykendall sent copies of the following to his kin as a token of remembrance and a reminder of the holiday season.

I have been reading the last two days in the Latter Day Saint Church History. The experiences the early Saints went through—persecutions and travail—are harrowing, but their fortitude and faithfulness to God and their faith in Christ and the final triumph of this his work, is most inspiring. What a lasting shame, on those who turn traitor! I am glad that I am called upon and honored with the privilege of helping to carry this work to a successful conclusion, hell and the wicked to the contrary notwithstanding. And by God's grace and help, Christ leading, it will soon triumph, even though at times it may seem cast down.

I want my people to be serving Christ and be ready to answer the call when his children are called to Zion, to help in its establishment and enjoy of its bounty and safety when the storms and destruction break upon this world.

My church is my party and politics, and everything I go into the world to get I shall bring back to help in adorning Zion and blessing her happy children. That is my creed. That is where my interest lies, and that is where my heart is. May the Saints, including my own dear people, near me by flesh and blood, appreciate the value and worthiness of this, the Lord's great work, and the great decisive hour that is now approaching if not already here.

I do not know but what an especial call and warning should be sounded to my people, some of them. I wish that I might have had the privilege of visiting them and stirring any that may be asleep, to action, but I trust that the same spirit that moved mightily upon me to place myself at the disposition of the church recently, and just at the time when I am most needed as the circumstances in connection with Detroit prove, which things I was not aware of until I had gone to Independence, Missouri; I say, that that same Spirit that led me to do this when the Lord so needed, I trust will also arouse and lead my people as also all other honest Saints, forward in his great work. Otherwise, the calamities that are coming upon the wicked may fall on these poor sleeping ones too.

I hope that this will not be considered idle speech. God reigns! and his word will be fulfilled. I am glad that you all are much awake to the work and that your interest is in it.

Christmas time is approaching. So far as days are concerned, they are all very much alike to me. However, if you desire, you may consider this a Christmas greeting and a New Year call to service to my people.

Campaign News From Des Moines

The annual home-coming of Des Moines was observed November 14. The prominent speakers of the day, Sister Vida E. Smith and Elder Daniel Macgregor, were sufficient attraction to draw a large representation from over the district to hear them.

Sister Smith lectured on "How to idealize the real." Elder Macgregor gave a very eloquent talk in the morning on "Why I became a Latter Day Saint." His evening discourse was the initial effort of the campaign he has been conducting in the city. A large and an appreciative audience listened to him. His nightly sermons have been a rare treat to the Des Moines people.

However, Satan was soon aware that one of God's representatives was here, for immediately three churches in the immediate neighborhood began revivals. This naturally interfered with some of the crowds we might otherwise have had, but regardless of that the services have been well attended and close attention has been given to the marvelous unfolding of prophecy. So unusual have been his sermons that nonmembers have asked whether or not he was a prophet of God, saying they felt that they were in the presence of a man who had much in kin with the prophets of Bible times.

Extensive advertising has been done by handbills being distributed in the vicinity of the church. They were written in a clear-cut, forceful, characteristic Macgregor style. Street car advertising and posters, ten by twenty-four feet, placed in prominent places in the city have all tended to help some. The posters are very attractive. Written in large letters are these words: "Go to church and hear Macgregor, Canada's great prophetic student, unfold the prophecies."

A decided increase in interest among the members is very much in evidence. We feel that to revive the interest of the Saints is as commendatory as making converts.

One can easily distinguish the difference between the message of one prominent revivalist near us and that of Brother Macgregor. The Reverend Scoville refuses to give a lecture until a certain amount is subscribed each evening. His entire lecture is an ungentlemanly and unchristianlike tirade upon sinners in general, but his worst epithets are hurled at the heads of his members. We are glad that Brother Macgregor retains the Christlike attributes, and appeals to the intelligence rather than to sensationalism.

The services closed this week after a six-weeks' effort. There were perhaps not as many converts made as might have been wished for, but the good that has been done in other ways cannot be overestimated, so we would pronounce it in many ways a successful campaign.

Testimony of Healing

I hope this will find space in your paper and that all who read it will rejoice with me in the blessing I have received.

I have been an invalid for over two years, and the last nine months I could not sit up or hardly hold my head up, but now I am healed. I had a vision November 26, about one o'clock in the night. I had not been asleep, but had been reading the Bible and talking to the Lord before the vision came to me. In the vision, the Savior and Elder Thomas Newton came up to my bed. Brother Newton handed the oil bottle to the Savior, and the Savior administered to me, handed the bottle back to Brother Newton, and the Savior prayed, but I do not remember the prayer. When done, he stepped back, and looked at me, and said, "Arise and walk," and then he said, "Use wisdom." Then they were gone, and I was alone.

I raised up in bed. I could not wait until morning to tell mamma what had happened, I was so overjoyed, so I called her, and when she came in, I was sitting straight up in the bed. I told her the vision, then said, "Oh, mamma, do you believe I can walk?" She did not know what to say for joy. She is not a member of this church. The morning was Thanksgiving. She came in at getting up time, and I asked her again if she believed I could walk. She said, "Oh, Agnes, I am a doubting Thomas." I just got up out of the bed and started to her. I guess that was the most glorious Thanksgiving ever spent in our home. I am still walking and praising God for what he has done for me. Pray for me that I may be useful in building up Zion. My husband and I are both members of the Latter Day Saint Church. Pray for us both that we may still be more faithful.

Yours in the true faith,

MRS. AGNES REXROAD MANAYKA.

Editors Herald: We have been very busy in the Lord's work for the past six months, and this increased effort has resulted in increased spirituality. Brethren Lee Quick and Charles Fry started a missionary effort here the middle of July in the district tent, holding meetings up till the reunion in August. Nine were baptized.

Following the reunion, Brother Will Bath took the tent to Cherokee and held forth three weeks, at which time he was permitted to add twelve more precious souls to our branch as the fruits of his meetings. He then brought the tent back to Pittsburg and held another series of three weeks, at which time seven more were baptized.

Our pastor, A. E. Stoff, held a three-weeks series of meetings in a cottage in the extreme northeast portion of the city in November, and at the close left a regular weekly appointment. He hopes to continue these efforts in other parts of the city.

That the flock might be fed, our pastor started a priests' campaign which is not to cease until every family of Saints in the city has been visited. Already results are being manifested in greater attendance at the regular services, and the campaign has only begun. This means an effort for our priests who are all laborers, but such efforts always bring good results to the visitor and those visited.

Our midweek prayer meetings are spiritual feasts. Our Sunday school and Religio are increasing in interest and attendance, until our hall is becoming almost too small for us. The Sunday school plans a very impressive pantomime on the birth and life of Christ, for Christmas Eve.

The Women's Department is also quite active. A study class has been started, taking up the subject of "Food and body," with Sister S. S. Boone as teacher. A good interest is manifested. Considerable relief and service work has been done and this has not been confined to our own membership. This department put on a program on the 28th, which was quite a success and put our work more clearly before the people.

Appointments are being filled by our priesthood twice a month at Arma, and also at Cherokee. N. M. H.

Editors Herald: Elder D. T. Williams, of Lamoni, spoke here on Thanksgiving Day, at the Christian Union church, they uniting with us in the service.

Brother M. M. Turpen, who has been visiting his son Stephen at Saint Paul, Minnesota, is again in our midst.

At our regular sacrament meeting there was a marked degree of the Spirit present, also at the last three Wednesday evening prayer meetings. Our hearts swell with gratitude to our heavenly Father. A MEMBER.

Editors Herald: We are isolated but enjoy the privileges had by all, to read the church literature. Though wife and I have poor health, we are not idle. We have five children to care for and ask the prayers of the Saints in our behalf.

While soliciting among the people I have many opportunities to say a word for the work we love. At one place there were a number of people and we got to discussing the literature on the table, Bibles and Bible dictionaries. A lady near me began speaking in tongues. When she was through she asked me if I believed in speaking in tongues. I told her I certainly did, but that I also believed in interpretation of tongues. Later she and her husband visited my home and I read some from the Scriptures to them. She admitted she felt that she was deceived. They were both interested but have since become indifferent. I was worried for fear I had said something I should not, when I had a dream in which I was shown my Bible inclosed in a beautiful white wreath of flowers. When the interpretation was given, I was told that white represented the purity of the word of God, and that no matter whether people accepted it or not, it was still pure. These two people are our friends again.

In another family I had left literature and gotten them interested but was later turned away very coldly. Later I met the man of the house down town and he asked me if I knew him. I did. He said he and his wife were both Mormons now. Upon inquiry I found they had joined the Utah church. I invited him to come to our home, and we read the three standard books and prayed together, with the result that he is ready for baptism, wanting to know if I had authority to baptize and confirm. I being only a priest could do only the former. He will become a member as soon as we can get in touch with an elder.

Not being able to buy many tracts, I must depend on other literature. If those who have Autumn Leaves and Ensigns to spare will send them to me, I think I can make good use of them. In so large a place there ought to be found some members of this church. If there are any such, they can find me at 3014 Madera Street, Apartment 24, El Paso, Texas.

Editors Herald: Branch No. 1 is very much alive. We feel that we are accomplishing much and have much more to do. Our leaders are Brother Larkey, in charge of the branch, Joseph Price, superintendent of the Religio, E. C. Barss, superintendent of the Sunday school. They are improving every opportunity to bring the work to a higher standard. Our prayer meetings are very much enjoyed and the Spirit of the Lord is at times with us in great power, manifested in tongues, prophecies, and healings. There is an awakening to the fact that the time is at hand when we must come to the front and make ourselves qualified. We realize that our branch is a school in which we are learning to fit ourselves for the future, and inasmuch as we learn and practice patience, love, and forbearance one with another, in the daily incidents we will be prepared for greater opportunities to come.

Sometimes some of us feel a little discouraged because of temporal demands, but we know that if we continue to study and prepare ourselves the time will come when God, seeing us prepared and faithful, will open the way before us. Our Sunday school gave a program a short time ago, under the direction of Sister Nettie Gault, which was greatly enjoyed. Our orchestra, under the direction of Brother Joseph Williams, is advancing rapidly and expects to give a program in January.

Apostle Gillen was with us recently, advocating the combination of all the five branches of the city into one or two. The idea pleased the Saints.

Brother John R. Grice, our city missionary, was transferred to Toronto and we miss him very much. But we feel that he is qualified for any position and they will profit by our loss.

We are glad to say that the indebtedness of the branch has been reduced to $650, which we expect to finish up soon.

Editors Herald: Our winter conference has come and gone, and will leave a lingering memory in the hearts of all present. In point of numbers and good fellowship it was by far the best held in the district during the winter months.

The little church was taxed to its utmost to accommodate all visitors, and all are looking forward to the summer meeting which will be with the Orpen Branch.

The conference was in charge of our district president, who was ably assisted by Missionary J. J. Cornish, of Saskatchewan, and Missionary J. D. Stead. All present felt in their hearts that it was "indeed good to be there."

It is to be hoped the many blessings afforded us will not be wasted. May we ponder over them and may they instill within us a desire to press onward to do the Lord's will.

NORTHEAST VALLEY, DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND,

The Dunedin Branch is still alive and plodding along in this part of the universe. The long-looked-for visit of Apostles Hanson and Rushton has passed into history, and although it was short, will be remembered by all who heard them speak on Sunday evening. How fortunate you Saints of America are, who can secure the services of such forceful speakers. Why, it is enough to make us amateurs discouraged and never put foot in the pulpit again. But when we realize the importance of the message we possess, and the flock under our care, we remember the words of the Master to feed his sheep, etc., and we will continue to try with God's help to keep this little band of Saints together and by careful study and prayerful meditation strive to fulfill our vocation to which we have been called.

I must say that the weather clerk treated us very shabbily while the apostles were here, especially on the Sunday, for although we are into the summer months, the hills on Sunday morning were covered with snow, and it was indeed a real winter's day. Nevertheless, we all turned out in full force to Sunday school, after which we partook of the sacrament, Brethren Hanson and Rushton officiating, and who also administered to three members, after which they each gave us a short talk, which was much appreciated.

Well, they have come and gone, and may God's blessing be with them and his protection over them while they cross the mighty deep to their destination. We can all truly say they are indeed men of God.

HERALDS are just to hand, and I notice that President Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams are doing good work in Britain, and intend following it up on the Continent and in Palestine. Surely the time is at hand when we should consecrate ourselves to the work of the Master, and help to overthrow the evil power which is so prevalent. Let us be valiant soldiers in this latter-day work, not only spiritually, but financially, so that the desire of our Master may be accomplished in the establishment of Zion. The signs of the times need not be enumerated. "He that hath an eye to see let him see."

We in this part of the vineyard realize the officers in command are moving in the right direction, and with God in the lead, and Christ at the helm, how can they go wrong? We trust that ere long we shall have a missionary stationed here, so that the work in Dunedin will go ahead and that we may learn more regarding the work, for we feel it is the best work on earth, and who can dispute it? Or in the words of Gamaliel, "If God be with us, who can be against us?"

Our Christmas offering will be given at the end of this month, and I feel sure that we will all do our best to help in this noble work. Nothing has been done here about the amount to be collected for the auditorium, but when we know how much is expected of us, we'll be there also.

We are grateful that our three children have obeyed the gospel, and we are doing our best to keep their feet planted in the narrow way. May this be the desire of all who have espoused this angel message, and may our lamps be always trimmed and burning, that we may not be found wanting, is my sincere prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

J. C. BRADLEY.

DENVER, COLORADO, December 27, 1920.

Editors Herald: The weather has been real winter the past week, some snow and quite cold. The Sunday school Christmas entertainment was a complete success. The latest from Brother Sade is that he is in a very critical condition. He seemed so much better after the last operation that we were very hopeful. He was removed from the hospital and seemed to be getting along fine; other complications arose, and he was again taken to the hospital. To-day we learn that erysipelas has developed and the doctor says unless checked in a few hours it will prove fatal. Sister Fishburn, our faithful Sunday school superintendent for so many years, is leaving for California in a few days in search of better health. We wish her Godspeed. Sister Ella Brannan is to succeed her in the Sunday school work. E. F. S.

Leaving London early in December, President F. M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams made a brief survey in France; then after several delays reached Basel, Switzerland, on the 13th. Besides making a survey of the work there and its future possibilities, President Smith intends to make a decided effort to secure permission for our missionaries to locate in Basel.

Funeral services at Liberty Home by Columbus Scott, assisted by A. J. Yarrington. She rests in Rose Hill Cemetery.

SPARLING.—Emma Blakely was born at Leeds, England, May 7, 1848, and removed to America in 1881, the last 38 years of that time being spent in the Dakotas, where she died in Fargo, September 25, after many years of suffering and affliction, which she bore patiently and cheerfully, though the last 24 years her husband was under General Conference appointment, and away from home much of the time, which left her much of the care of the raising of the family, and the care of the home. Married William Sparling in 1877, and to them were born 5 children, 2 boys and 3 girls, one of the latter, Martha, preceding her mother to the Great Beyond. Baptized in 1885 and continued strong in the faith to the last. Funeral services at Saints' Bungalow Church in Fargo, and the remains taken to Sherwood, North Dakota, for burial. Sermon by J. E. Wildermuth, assisted by Charles Nolan.

ROSS.—Evelyn May, infant daughter of Carl and Anna Ross, who live near Logan, North Dakota, was born April 28, 1920, and died November 14 after a severe attack of whooping cough and other complications. She leaves a little twin sister, together with two older sisters. Funeral service in charge of, and the sermon delivered by, J. E. Wildermuth, of Fargo, North Dakota. Interment in Minot Cemetery.

MAHONEY.—Hiram Mahoney was born December 26, 1851, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Joined the church, and went west in an early day. Ordained an elder and made president of the Alva Branch, in Wyoming, 17 years ago, which office he held till his death, which occurred December 14, 1920. Sermon by J. M. Stubbart.

NEWTON.—Mary Ann Newton was born in Beaver Island, Michigan, April 11, 1852. From this place she moved to Wisconsin, and then to Iowa, where she married Stephen M. DeLap. To this union 2 children were born, both of whom were with her at the time of her death, August 29, 1920. First husband dying in 1879, she married Scott Newton, in Page County, Iowa. Converted when a child, and a faithful member of the church at Shenandoah, Iowa. Leaves to mourn, 2 children, one sister, one brother, 2 half-sisters, and seven grandchildren, besides many other relatives and friends. Burial at Shenandoah, Iowa.

Convention Minutes

LONDON, ENGLAND.—August 15 and 16, 1920, 19 Amhurst Park, London, 6.30 p. m., J. A. Judd in chair. President Frederick M. Smith and T. W. Williams, with District President J. A. Judd, chosen to preside. Visiting Saints extended the courtesy of the conference. Reports read from district president, including Enfield Branch, spiritual report of London Branch, by J. W. Worth. Communication from Bishop May read. Elders' reports read from J. A. Judd, J. W. Worth, Dover E. Judd. Chorister Pearl Crick, Recorder D. A. Oakham, Secretary Dover E. Judd, reported. Financial report of district treasurer read, also financial report of Bishop May. Same referred to committee for report. Resolved, that the president of the church be and is hereby requested to nominate our district president in future. Lengthy discussion followed. Resolution carried. President F. M. Smith thanked the district for what he took the resolution to be—a vote of confidence—and stated that the line taken was in full harmony with the Doctrine and Covenants, and he assured them that such confidence would not be abused. Bishop May's letter containing certain suggestions concerning the finances of branches and districts called for. A resolution to discuss same by paragraphs brought out a lengthy discussion both for and against, and a substitute was moved as follows: Resolved, that the district as a district should adopt such part as applies to the district and that we recommend the branches adopt that part of the proposals as applied to them as they think fit. Discussion of the substitute brought out a resolution to refer, which prevailed: That the entire proposition contained in Bishop May's letter be referred to a committee consisting of President F. M. Smith, T. W. Williams, and R. May, said committee to report back to conference as soon as convenient. At subsequent services F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams preached, and at a priesthood meeting T. W. Williams gave a short address following which both he and President Smith answered questions on points submitted. Auditing committee's report received and spread on the minutes. Resolution sustaining general church, district, and local authorities prevailed. Dover Judd, secretary.

To Branch Presidents: To Branch Members:

Has Your Branch a Publicity Program for 1921?

Do you realize that in 1921 the business men of the United States will invest ten hundred million dollars in advertising? Have you stopped to think that the billboards will blazon the advertisements of tobacco and theater and merchandise; that the newspapers will carry five columns of ads to one of news; that magazines will feature thousands of beautiful color-pages devoted to the god of money; that the mails will be freighted down with messages of men busy in the affairs of commerce and trade?

Who will plead the cause of Christ among this welter of conflicting interests, and who will raise a voice in defense of the Master, so that it can be heard above the insistent calls of money seekers?

Have you ever considered advertising in connection with your branch work? Do you trust to chance alone to bring souls to Christ, or do you go out into the highways and byways seeking men for the kingdom of God? Is your light on a hill, or under a bushel?

To be specific: Is there a publicity agent in your branch who is alert to every opportunity to advertise your services and the church?

Have you provided money for carrying on publicity work in your branch?

Do your announcements appear regularly in the local papers?

Do you ever ask people to your church by mailing or giving them printed invitations?

Do you have any tract boxes at work in public buildings?

Do you ever systematically tract all or any portion of your town?

Do you conduct one or more community-wide missionary campaigns a year?

Have you laid plans for advertising the gospel this year of 1921?

Is your plan as big as it deserves to be?

THE RIGHT PROGRAM

Choose a publicity agent.

Provide a publicity budget.

Outline a publicity plan.

Enlist publicity workers.

—Then go to work —and keep working

—throughout 1921.

Let Your Answer Be Yes--and Then Work It!

EDITORIAL

Moving of Publishing House to Independence

We have had a number of inquiries concerning the move, and they ask us what we think of it. The matter can be very quickly summarized as follows:

Why Consolidation?

For some years the church, through the Board of Publication, has been publishing two papers, the HERALD and the Ensign, in competition with each other. It has only been through close editorial scrutiny that excessive duplication has been avoided. There is a need for a unity of general effort, and a board of editors to see all of the needs of the church are amply covered, and undue duplication avoided. There has been a request for a distinctly missionary paper. It is possible that through coordinated amalgamation that this can be had.

Again, the establishment of two publishing houses means that much of the overhead charge of management, press work, etc., must be duplicated. A larger plant can be handled more economically than can the two plants. The Ensign Publishing House has been able to keep going by taking in outside work. The Herald Publishing House cannot with profit handle outside work; being located in a rural community the amount of such work would not justify the resulting taxes.

Whatever may be the case elsewhere, there is no need for two publishing establishments so near to each other as are Lamoni and Independence.

Once it is seen there is an economy of financial administration in handling under one roof, and also that through a consolidation of editorial work we may better provide and see that the necessary demands of the church are covered, then arises the question, Where should this plant be located?

In Favor of Lamoni

In favor of Lamoni is the fact that the church already possesses an ample building, and a plant nearly large enough to handle all of the publication interests of the church. It would take but a small additional expense to put it in shape.

There is also the value of this institution to Lamoni, the town having been built up around the publishing interests in the first place. There are probably more employees who own their homes in Lamoni, and the total cost of living there is probably upon the whole slightly lower.

For Independence

Independence is established as the central place of the church. It has been made by General Conference action now the headquarters of the church. All of the general officers are located there—the First Presidency, the office of the Quorum of Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, the Church Statistician, Church Auditor, Church Architect, General Church Historian, Presiding Patriarch, Church Secretary, Publicity Department, Women's Department, the Religio Department, and it is quite probable that soon the headquarters of the Sunday School Department will also be established there. The Board of Publication has its headquarters there. It is also suggested that if an effort be made to establish the publishing interests in Lamoni, it would mean but another division, another effort to establish a publishing interest in Independence, outside the control of the Board of Publication.

The editorial work is under a serious handicap when separated from headquarters. We continually have queries which can be answered only with difficulty. The departments to which they belong are located at Independence, and by the time an answer has been secured, too long a time has elapsed. It is hoped that with the editorial staff more closely in touch with the general officers, more information can be given of what the church is doing and planning. It is an advantage to both the spiritual and temporal authorities to be more closely connected with the publishing interests.

With announcements to be made, tracts to be printed, editorials to be written, it will be possible for the church officer responsible therefor to examine the galley proofs and keep in close touch with everything that is issued over his name. It is hoped and expected that the move will bring both the editorial staff in closer touch with the church officers, and the church officers in closer touch with the publishing interests. It is certain that the move to Independence will have to be made eventually. It remains therefore only a question of now or later.

It will make possible in the very near future a reorganization of the work, that could hardly be done unless this move is made, and would require the removal of a number of persons to the place of publication. It is confidently hoped and expected that it will mean greater efficiency in this department of work. Those who have been in touch with the publication work the past few years feel keenly the change which has taken place since the general officers are being and have been moved to Independence. The moving of the publishing house is practically the last step and will again bring the general church officers and the publishing interests in close contact.

What of the Present Building?

Last spring a committee was appointed to consider taking over and using the present building established for the Herald Publishing House, and the latest reports have been that the present rooms will be partitioned off, and a boys' dormitory will be established here. It was intended first to establish a boys' dormitory on the third floor of the new building at Graceland, but it has been found too difficult to secure the necessary materials, hence the new building at Graceland is being completed two stories high. It will be possible to house more than one hundred young men in the present Herald Office Building, providing also kitchen and dining room in the basement, and reserving offices for the stake officers. It is planned that the building will be taken over, and so be used by Graceland College in this way the next school year. It is located about a mile from the college building, which should prove only a convenient walk for young men. No doubt provision will be made for them to secure the noon meal in the college dining room. The development of Graceland College has required the taking over of all the dormitories as well as two small additional buildings for the use of young women students at Graceland. This will be a temporary provision for the young men.

While it is considered to be only temporary provision, as the college authorities desire, as soon as building conditions will permit, to establish suitable dormitories for the use of young men on the college campus, at the same time the citizens of Lamoni, and those who have the interest of the church at heart are hoping that an industrial use will be found for the present building. We hope that for the sake of the town and of the church work in Lamoni Stake that this will eventually and in the near future be done.

The date for moving has not been set, though in general it is contemplated to make the definite transfer as soon as it can be arranged. Some remodeling of the Battery in Independence will be necessary, the amount necessary to be determined after a careful survey of the situation, based not only on present needs but on the future as well.

Some changes will be necessary in the providing of electric power for the various machines, and electrical supplies are hard to get promptly. So it may be two months or it may be six months, depending on a number of circumstances.

Heralds for the British Mission

The church historian who has been appointed in charge of the library work, Elder Walter W. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, will take charge of all old HERALDS for use in the British European Mission, or elsewhere. As the work of the church expands there comes more and more need for complete files of the HERALD for various mission libraries. We have had some gratifying responses. Those having old HERALDS which they are willing to give to the general church, communicate with the historian, stating what HERALDS they have to donate. But do not send them until requested. We are referring the entire matter to him.

Blue Pencil Notes

The secret of the success of many of the early elders was that they were on fire with their message. They believed it with all their hearts.

Either there is something to all this talk about the "angel's message" and the "great restoration"—or there is nothing to it. If there is anything to it then it is, as the early elders thought, the most tremendously important thing in modern history.

It is the most important. In religion, there is only one choice: between "reformation" and all it implies, and "restoration" with all that the term means.

Some very few of our more modern men seem to proceed on this theory: "There may be something to this restoration business; and then again there may not be. I am rather inclined to think that there is. At least I will proceed on that assumption. Anyway, I do not know where I could find a better field of service, so I will give the church the benefit of the doubt and take an appointment."

It is impossible to work up enthusiasm on that basis. Conviction must shine through a man's service and words from the inside out—clear from the depths of his heart. Faint heart never won fair lady; and a faint and doubtful heart never served the fair church of Christ very effectually.

The times are destined to call more and more for a clear, convincing proclamation of our faith—a proclamation that in each individual case springs from profound conviction and deep-rooted belief. The very conditions that we will face will demand such conviction if we are to succeed at all.

E. C. Briggs, W. W. Blair, Charles Derry, J. J. Cornish, Joseph Lambert, and many others we might mention, were powerful men in the work of the Reorganization because they were men of great faith. They believed. Men must believe before they will act.

The same observation holds good concerning the men of the early church. And going back to the primitive church, Peter, Paul, John—these men sounded no uncertain message.

Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." He believed it with all his heart. Had he reflected, "Jesus may be the Son of God, and then again he may not be, it is a toss-up; but anyway most of his teachings are moral and ethical, and I will probably do as much good here as I could with the Sadduces," the history of Pentecost would have been different. At least Peter's part on that occasion would have been different.

So it is to-day. The man who is half agnostic concerning this work will not make many converts. The man who is just hanging on by his eyebrows, waiting for the first bad crossing to jar him loose, will never induce many men to climb into the old gospel chariot. It is a case of get in or get out. And the half-hearted minister generally ends by getting out. Let us get in—all the way—body and soul—and preach this restored gospel with power and conviction.

The Deaconate

Some questions raised by an anonymous reader.

What are deacons used for in the church? Are they chosen like fancy dishes—for ornament?

I know what the Doctrine and Covenants says their duties are, but why are they allowed to hamper the progress of the church? Should the vessels used in the sacrament service be left standing dirty and moldy for weeks, yes, until the next sacrament service?

I believe it is time for these men to awaken to service or else surrender their license. This failing is not confined to one branch alone—it is everywhere, and we sit down amid the dirt and disorder and ask God to meet with us. Can Zion be redeemed under these conditions? We are told that "cleanliness is next to godliness." If this be true, then we had better get after this order of men and see that fires are made, buildings cleaned and ventilated, etc., instead of just taking up the collection on Sunday and then going home in peace (?). What is the answer? Be not deceived, God is not mocked. These men who are slothful servants are mocking God. By these slothful habits, they allow God's house to be unclean.

ONE WHO WISHES FOR THE RIGHT WAY.

Very seldom do we pay any attention to an unsigned letter. If a wrong is to be corrected, it should be presented to the proper officers, and those making the complaint should openly appear so that their evidence may be waived. It is not fair to take a shot in the dark, and ask the editors of the HERALD to assume responsibility for that which the writer is so little willing to sponsor that he will not sign his own name.

As might be expected in such a communication, the picture presented is by no means fair nor true. It is not a condition found everywhere, nor even generally. It may be possible that instances of such failure have occurred; in fact, we all know of instances where personal homes become disarranged, and of times when the house of God does not receive the attention that it should.

The questions asked above will most of them answer themselves. The house of God should be kept clean, and especially the dishes of the sacrament should be in an immaculate condition, not only rinsed, but sterilized by washing in hot water. That goes without saying. They who fail in such a duty are indeed grievously at fault.

But at the same time, conditions must be taken into consideration. If a man is hired to do the janitor's work, he may rightfully be expected to attend to that work. But where a man with his own business to attend to has been chosen as deacon of the branch, and is given the key to the house, we cannot necessarily expect that he alone shall give requisite time to maintain it in order. If the branch places sufficient funds in his hands, it is certainly his duty to see that it is kept in order; and it is his duty and that of the other deacons, working together, to see that order is maintained in the house of God, that it is ready, heated, and open, in due time for all church services. It is also the duty of the deacon, to a reasonable extent, to endeavor to maintain the house in cleanliness.

But where the branch contributes neither in labor or money to assist in keeping the building clean, the membership cannot sit back fairly, and place the whole blame on the deacon. If this "one who wants the right way" pays his contribution to see that the church is kept clean, he does right to object. If not, and if there are no church funds available to the deacon, it is the duty of the "one who wants the right way," and of others, to see that physical assistance is rendered, for the necessary washing, sweeping, and dusting.

It is quite clear that the duty belongs primarily to the deacon. It is clear also that much of this work can be handled by the deacon. It is also true that the deacon is not primarily and solely a janitor. The business men of the church who assist in its financial affairs, should be willing to do their share, but others also should be willing to do their proper share to help to keep the place in order.

Temple Builders Manual

The Temple Builders Manual is filled with excellent, practical advice, the benefit of which can be gained only by reading the book itself. Some of the best and most practical articles could not be fairly summarized or printed by extracts. To secure the practical aspects, the manual itself must be consulted. Aside from the many excellent quotations from others writers, the book itself contains much that is quotable. We give below a few extracts:

A Woman's Heart

By Vida Smith

A woman's heart should be deep, so deep,
That its depth no one might guess,
For a shallow-hearted woman, dear,
Is a human wilderness.

A woman's heart should be always warm,
That beautiful thoughts may grow,
For rare indeed are the lovely blooms
That blossom in beds of snow.

A woman's heart should be strong, so strong,
That it may not easy break,

For a weak and fearful heart, my dear,
Could not bear for love's sweet sake.

A woman's heart should be gentle, too,
That she plead for the weak and the old,
And forgive and forgive with chiding soft,
But never with harshness scold.

A woman's heart should beat for the world,
But thrill for only one,
And with hope and faith love silently on,
In shadow or storm or sun.

No girl would think of applying for a position as stenographer or bookkeeper unless she had previously studied and become, to some extent, proficient in the work required. No one would sit down before a large audience and attempt to play the works of the masters of the pianoforte, unless she had studied and practiced with earnestness and diligence. Yet how trivial and inconsequential is the matter of keeping a few books, or toying with the keys of a piano, when compared with the wonderful work of bearing, rearing, and training an imperishable, immortal soul!

Always true womanhood has found its fullest expression in service. To minister to others is peculiarly our life work, in the home and in the world. All that we are, and all that we make of ourselves must point toward this ideal of service. It is not enough to desire to serve, but we must find how, when, and where to serve most efficiently, that we may give our best. This is the highest ideal of our club work.

Home Building

What are you building, girls? A temple with spires pointing heavenward, or a hovel, hugging the ground? Do you sometimes tire of the constant labor and stop to rest, letting your unfinished building disintegrate before your eyes? Is your habitation symmetrical, or is it lopsided and ungainly because you have failed to follow the pattern laid down by the Master Builder?

Every girl hopes and plans some day to be a home maker and a home keeper. This is the biggest profession open to womanhood, and this the business of life for which she should be by nature best fitted. But often this, her greatest work, finds her poorly prepared by study or training when it comes to her door.

Sound Timbers

Realizing that every girl is first of all interested in whatever tends toward making her body well and attractive, we shall lay greatest stress on personal hygiene. Because a healthy body cannot possibly live in an unhygienic environment, we shall want to correlate the study of personal hygiene with that of home hygiene. Then as the work progresses we shall try to make what we know of benefit to the community. There will be little or no theory; we hope there will be much of practical suggestion that the girls can and will put into effect.

Vocation

The day of the "jack of all trades" is passed. The world and the church want trained men and women; and the problem before every young woman to-day is what shall the calling be, and how can she fit herself to meet the big opportunity that is waiting for the woman with the proper training. There is so much to do, so many things that the church needs, so few who are prepared to do the big things of life; and yet there are girls who slip along, indifferent perhaps, but more often waiting for an opportunity to do something big, and yet not knowing how to fit themselves for the places that are so numerous, so crying for the woman who is ready.

What Are You Going to Do?

What are you going to do, girls,
With the years that are hurrying on?
Do you mean to begin life's purpose to win
In the freshness and strength of the dawn?
The builders who build in the morning
At even may joyfully rest,
Their victories won as they watch the glad sun
Sink down in the beautiful west.

What are you going to do, girls,
With time as it ceaselessly flows?
Are you molding a heart that will pleasures impart
As perfume exhales from the rose?
Let all that is purest and grandest
In duty's fair wreath be entwined;
There is no other grace can illumine the face.
Like the grace of a beautiful mind.

Social Graces

We would overcome all self-consciousness by thinking always of others; not only thinking but doing helpful and thoughtful little acts which add to the comfort and pleasure of those about us. Such acts of courtesy need not be conspicuous, for it is only natural that being placed in a world of many people we should consider others.

What a wonderful gift it is to be able to gracefully relieve the embarrassment of some bashful guest. True; it may be a natural gift for some, but it may also be acquired by simply placing yourself in her position and then realizing what you would need to make you feel at ease.

Literature

We have a vision of homes wherein increasing space is given to the best of the world's reading, wherein nothing that is vicious shall find room. To the accomplishment of such an ideal, we must give much thought, much effort, much time. No single endeavor, unless it be the endeavor of good works, is so calculated to help in the building of more stately mansions as the reading of that which is worth while.

The Old and the New

Shall we say, "Ring out the old, ring in the new"? Are none of the old ideals worth keeping, and does the new standard meet our complete approval?

Not unreservedly. There are some ideals of the past we would do well to copy, and there are some dangers in those of the present. There is a careful modesty of apparel and manner and a certain sacredness of soul, like the fragrance of old-fashioned flowers, which we cannot afford to lose.

Girlhood and womanhood have always guarded the sacred flame of moral and spiritual idealism—they must not fail in their trust now.

"Now Is the Accepted Time"

To take account and send in your annual tithing report—
Whether you owe little, much, or no tithing at all,
Whether you have $100 worth of personal effects, $10,000 worth of real estate, or nothing you can call your own,
Whether you are single, married, or a dependent child,
Whether you are deacon, apostle, or hold no priesthood.
Every member should render an account unto God, through the Bishopric, as it is written, "Lay all things before the bishop"—"None are exempt."

Ask your bishop, Bishop's agent, or solicitor, or write us for an Annual Tithing Report blank and reckon your debt to God; then pay it, a little each week if you cannot pay it all at once, even as you would your other debts.

Passing of W. D. C. Pattysen

It may be of interest to the friends and acquaintances of W. D. C. Pattysen to know that he passed away on Saturday afternoon, December 18, while confined in the State Hospital in Saint Joseph, Missouri. Funeral services were held in the First Church of Saint Joseph on Sunday afternoon; sermon by Elder V. M. Goodrich. He appeared to be a kindly old man, and sought in many ways to do good, so that many were in attendance at his funeral, of those to whom he had endeared himself.

Subjects Being Discussed

Stewardship

Another clipping comes to our desk from Mrs. Emma B. Lewis of Denver, Colorado, reporting that the Presbyterians will hold a meeting at Pueblo, to instruct church members in the principles of stewardship. Thus little by little do we find the plan first laid down by revelation being adopted by others. Cooperative societies have become very common, and stewardship is being discussed more and more, though in this instance they have not the full value of the organization, as to them stewardship means solely an arrangement for giving money to the church organization. The complete plan of stewardship develops also the individual and seeks to secure justice between management and the workingman, and the application of wealth in a way to secure the largest possible results with happiness and success.

The Presbyterian Hospital

Steps are being taken to erect a hospital in Denver by the Presbyterians, which will cost five million dollars when completed, and cover six city blocks. It will care for 1,500 patients, each patient having a private room, with complete service equipment, arranged to save the time of the nurses.

It will be arranged so that the nurses will not have to do the menial tasks generally required of them. It is expected that in this way greater comfort and better attention will be secured for the patients, as the nurses will have more time to devote to their care.

Education and Inspiration of the "Spirit in Man"

By A. G. Larkey

Both essential to one who teaches with assurance and who evidences the absolute.

True education is the assurance received, through inspiration, sight, and study of his handiwork, that there is an Almighty God. "And the expanse of the universe is the extent of his power." This is the beginning of faith or evidence of the unseen and eternal as, saith the prophet, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge."

Faith Required to Discern

Faith is an eye with which to discern eternal or spiritual things. To one so equipped the eternal is just as real and material as the seen or temporal. Proof of the eternal is not altogether dependent on analysis or study of the temporal. It is also requisite that we discern the unseen or eternal by the exercise of more than the five senses. By our physical powers we are able, through the inspiration of the Almighty, to realize the things hoped for; but only by building on the foundation of knowledge acquired by the "spirit in man" through analysis of the seen or temporal. Knowledge of true scientific fact leads to faith in God, hence the well informed alone can comprehend God in the best sense.

By what physical means does the inspiration of the Almighty register itself on the spirit which is in man?

"There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."

Did we know we would no longer be finite. Scientific faith, when exercised by those who are working in harmony with immutable laws, leads to knowledge of the absolute; and as a result, in these last days "knowledge covers the earth as the waters cover the great deep." Just as the prophet predicted, we must however differentiate between knowledge of concrete facts and the deceptive assertions of error by educated but uninspired men who, having no faith in the absolute source of true information, build from a faulty premise.

Faith comes by the will of God. It is a gift of God and by it man may know of the eternal. This knowledge is life everlasting. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." It is evidence of the unseen and assurance of the eternal. Man may also know by it that the Father hath drawn him.

"No man can come unto me save the Father draw him."

"No man can say that Jesus is the Christ except by the Holy Ghost."

"Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee but my Father which is in heaven."

Yet there was "a spirit in man," a temporal or partial perception of the infinite, or there could have been no inspiration of the Almighty.

"Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

"The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

Faith is not confined to the speculative; it establishes the absolute. The speculative or theoretical needs to be proven before it can be used as evidence. It therefore does not stand equal to faith. "In the beginning God—" Believe it or reject it. Upon the truth of this statement is predicated our Christian philosophy.

Education or preparation is essential to the teacher, hence the admonition, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Shall the sons of God, the children of the kingdom, know less of that kingdom than the publican and sinner, the infidel who believes that there is no God? Shall the son of the house know less of the Father's house than the stranger?

Education and Inspiration

Faith is a prime requisite in one who would see God or his hand in nature. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." It is not intended to stand alone, however, for we are admonished:

"Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity."

All of which it must surely be confessed constitute education in the best sense.

"For if these be in you, and abound, they make you that ye should neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall. . . . We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts. . . . For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Peter 1: 8-10, 19, 21.

Two subdivisions of the great principle, faith, are here so beautifully analyzed—education and inspiration.

Faith is the all-seeing eye which discloses God in his universe. The Bible does not purport to give an explanation of the methods used in the creation. It does not attempt to qualify its readers to create worlds and people them. It is not a blue print but is a narrative which demonstrates Jehovah's hand in the things which our feeble senses are able to comprehend.

The fact that man has limitations needs no demonstration. It is self-evident and admitted by all. This the Word affirms and recognizes. It is written in plain terms that the finite mind might understand, that "a wayfaring man though he be a fool need not err therein." Not written in terms of absolute knowledge, which would be unintelligible to man, it is however scientific in that it anticipates scientific discovery. It recites facts but, recognizing man's limitations, attempts no explanations which he could not understand.

Profound in its simplicity is the word, "In the beginning God—" Profound also in his simplicity was he who was the "Word made flesh" and who dwelt among men; the Scriptures or Word of God (his promises) personified and realized. It does not begin with the fall and plan of redemption, for great as is that plan, it was not God's design in creating man that he might fall to make possible the atonement. Satan is the author of the fall, which came by sin. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

"In the beginning—" If these words are not true the entire story is false. If there was a beginning and a God who created the things that are as they are; then, by the same Word, we know that there will be a new heaven and a new earth for "heaven and earth shall pass away" and the "whole of creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now."

Science Depends on Faith

Scientific research is dependent on faith. It astonishes us with assertions in theory which sometimes lead to knowledge in the absolute. It always leads to such knowledge when builded on a correct premise. It builds "here a little and there a little, line upon line, precept upon precept." There are sights to which we are blind, sounds to which we are deaf, tastes which we cannot perceive, material and real objects surrounding us which we are not physically or directly conscious of. Only a fraction of a complete spectrum is visible; the ultra-violet rays are invisible, yet they are real; power is invisible; electricity in its latent state is invisible. Electricity! What wonderful possibilities are comprehended in that term! From whence is it called? Friction brings it to hand. Zinc consumed in acid separates it from the elements in the process, but its presence is only detected when agitated.

There is room for much of the practical or understood applications of the laws governing the use of this element which can but give us a better understanding of God and the things which are unseen and yet material.

Through the use of electricity man has discovered and applied in science and for the benefit and use of man, among other things, the X ray as an auxiliary to the sense of sight, supplementing the eye, the organ of sight. By it man is enabled to perceive, transmitted through the same source as ordinary sight impluses are transmitted to the seat of mind in the brain, this superhuman sight, and thereby pierce that which was previously a part of the realm of the unseen. By the same eye, through the same crystalline lens there is reflected on the same retina or deflection of the optic nerve over the interior of the eye, and then by means of that nerve by a method never understood by man to the seat of life or finite intelligence whose location is unknown, sight of objects through other objects long supposed to be impenetrable.

Notwithstanding all this we still see as through a glass darkly and await the dawning of a better day where there shall be more and better light by which we shall see God though the skin worms have destroyed this mortal or temporal estate.

"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."—Matthew 11: 25.

He often chose uneducated men but inspired them with a craving for knowledge. Development always followed the call to service. He also chose for his coworkers, quickened by his Spirit and inspired as exponents of his sacred Word, men who recognized "the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." Who, like Abraham, that great emir from Ur of the Chaldees, who had faith to exile himself and his posterity as sojourners in a strange land, going out not knowing whither he went, content that it was the will of God, became princes of the people and allied with kings; who, like Moses became learned in all the learning of the Egyptians, called "the son of Pharaoh's daughter;" he conquered as commander of Egypt's army all the hosts of the Ethiopians, became an outcast in Midian only to arise superior to all Israel for he was mediator under the law covenant and gave a law which brought them to Christ; like Job, whose writing reflects the basis of true learning, and who when he prepared his seat in the street commanded by his personality the respect of all.

"The young men saw me and hid themselves; and the aged arose and stood up. The princes refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth. The nobles held their peace, and their tongue clave to the roof of their mouth."

Who when brought to the contrast:

"And now they that are younger than I have me in derisation, the fathers of whom I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock" yet maintained their testimony; like David, whose empire encompassed the environs of the goodly land, who charmed with his music and composed hymns that reach the soul of man; like Solomon, to whom

"God gave understanding and wisdom exceeding much and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the seashore. And Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt. For he was wiser than all men, . . . and his fame was in all nations round about. And he spake three thousand proverbs: and his songs were a thousand and five. And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes. And there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from the kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom."—1 Kings 4: 29-34.

He was like Daniel, of whom it is written that he was set above the princes in a land where he was an alien because "an excellent spirit was in him; and the king thought to set him over the whole nation"; to say nothing of those who partake of the attributes of Joseph of Egypt who ruled as second to Pharaoh and who, though "Judah prevailed and of him came the chief ruler" yet are with him Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise for "the birthright was Joseph's." (1 Chronicles 5.)

God truly made himself manifest to the lowly shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem where also he had chosen Israel's earthly ruler generations before in the person of one of their number, "David, the shepherd King"; and to them was the angel message:

"Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

While we contemplate the grace, mercy, and favor of God to these lowly ones let us not pass by the great Magi from the east who read in the start things that brought them to the door of Herod's palace with the inquiry, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" They came to offer gold as to a king, frankincense as to the Lord's anointed, and myrrh as the symbol of the bitter suffering to which they knew he was also heir. Wise men from the east who had not forgotten, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge," and, when they found him not in the palace of the king, did him homage in Bethlehem's manger.

Our list is an inexhaustible one, but let us cite Saul of Tarsus, chosen as the apostle to the Gentiles; a tentmaker yet he sat at the feet of Gamaliel in the school of Heliel in Jerusalem, a Roman citizen and Hebrew of the Hebrews.

The inspiration of the Almighty which reached the spirit within these servants of God enabled them to give expression to true understanding and to demonstrate that they beheld the unseen and eternal. Adam, when offering a burnt offering symbolic of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world who should come and offer himself a living sacrifice, was content when asked by an angel, "Why doest thou this thing?" to reply, "I know not save the Lord commanded me."

Moses, when an old man on the plains of Sinai, was offered anything that he might ask. He might have asked to live forever, to have great dominion or rule over the entire world but with "the understanding of the Almighty" was able to choose the better part and, comprehending the things which are eternal, was able to say, "O God, that I might see thy face." He had faith and realized as did one at a later time: "This is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Peter, who understood that men were and would in the future selfishly twist the word of life to serve private ends, declared with a true concept of God's word:

"We came not with cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty; knowing this first that no prophecy of the scriptures is of any private interpretation."

A Sequence of Material Things

Man who by wisdom cannot find out God has discovered that there was a sequence of material things. He reads this however from the record in the rock more willingly than from the record in the Word. Herb, tree, fish, fowl, reptile, beast, domestic animal, and finally man; than whom it is impossible to visualize a being created generically higher who could be hedged about by the temporal fetters that bind him. When he progresses in visualizing a higher type he must penetrate the unseen or eternal world. Such a type would soon burst the bands of death just as did the Man of Galilee. We also, by faith, are able to penetrate the unseen, acquiring a foretaste of good things to come. The Word offers man this power or victory over death by becoming like God in partaking of his attributes: as such he becomes a coworker with him and joint heir with Jesus Christ.

"To such gave he power to become the sons of God."

"They seek for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God."

Man, by research in the unseen realms, is piecing together a story of creation. Where he has found out truth he has demonstrated the Bible story. The story is already recorded in the Word but "of this he is willingly ignorant."

The Bible tells us that creation of the material was before organization. All was chaos, void, without form. Organization followed. The world was not originally as it was afterward organized. It was formed, stratified, mountained, valleyed, mineralized by the action of some mighty force through ages and eons of time. After ages of research science confirms in detail what God was ever telling men through his word.

The scriptures assert that the things which are seen (God's temporal creation) had a beginning. After ages of wisdom expended in study, after research in physics and findings based on logical application of the accumulated knowledge of ages, man has verified the oldest record, but unwilling to admit faith and belief in God, seeks to present that the way that seemeth good unto man is wiser than God's way and offers as distinguished from the majestic account of God in his universe the much more miraculous story of the primordial cell, which Darwin, when pressed, said that God created and which we are asked to believe had resident within it the power to expand and, like Daniel's little stone which will grow and fill the whole world with the eternal, it fills the world with the things which are seen or temporal. This drop of protoplasm, with perhaps a nucleus and enveloping membrane, which saw not, heard not, smelled not, tasted not, and which possibly had the sense of touch created itself and fills the world.

This theory is more of a miracle than the scriptural account and yet it attempts no explanation of the things which are unseen or eternal. The forces in nature for the mere perception of which we need a multiplicity of senses instead of five, could we obtain them, would render us as Gods, knowing even more than good from evil.

Like Paul at Athens can we not reasonably say: This nature god, this evolution god, this primordial cell god, whom ye ignorantly worship, him declare we unto you. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God it shall endure forever." Also as said they in that place and at that time: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Do we not hear the like laudation: Great is the primordial cell of the theorist! for it created itself and gave birth to all that was, all that is, and all that ever will be.

God alone is equipped with sufficient senses to encompass all the forces that we know are about us. We are but a feeble image of his infinitude. In the Elohim are the senses; we are but a finite likeness having dominion only over the seen or temporal. Hence we are only sufficiently equipped to exercise such dominion.

A very learned writer has based an argument against the scriptural account in the following words:

"The Mosaic expression, 'Let there be light, and there was light,' is physiologically false; light was not until the first needle eye point of an infusoria was pierced by the light of day."

This is scientifically a valid objection for the record says truly that God created light days or cycles of time before he created an organism in which was planted the sense of light. But it takes no account of the fact, just as scriptural, that he who comprehended the eternal saw with eyes which embraced also the things which are seen or temporal.

"And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." Correct so far as quoted, but it goes on to record: "and God saw the light, that it was good." The creator of the organism saw his creation. He saw with an eye which also comprehended the eternal. Truth is eternal, truth in the absolute. Man sees but a part of the eternal universe. Only by the eye of faith is his vision extended, for faith evidences the unseen. He will one day be resurrected into an eternal sphere where he will see as he is seen and know as he is known.

Man already has absolute knowledge of two spheres of existence. One was in darkness, confinement, so feebly conscious that no record is impressed on his memory, dependent in the absolute. Then he enters a wider world, yet one which has undisputed limits and bounds which he fully realizes. Here he has dominion and light and is intensely conscious, yet dependent on God and sensible that he sits in darkness and knows little by his physical powers of perception of things beyond his narrow vision. To him is given by faith to know that he may become a son of God untrammelled by the fetters which bind all the sons of Adam's race. Sitting in darkness he sees a great light. Born again into a still greater consciousness where there will be more light because more senses to perceive light, differently nourished because having a body composed of different or eternal constituents. A glorified body, yet just as material. A condition only comprehensible to the finite mind under the term heaven. Though this is all within his grasp, the kingdom of heaven nigh at hand and its king not far from every one of his kind, man is obsessed by Satanic testimony—negative testimony—"In the day that thou eatest thereof: in that day thou shalt not surely die." He, knowing the truth of the first condemnatory decree, fears death, and unlike any other creature seeks to procrastinate the immutable law which leads to the grave. This because of his negative testimony, planted by the author of lies.

Paul gives in the Hebrew letter a roll call of martyrs and workers of mighty works of faith. They chose death, God rather than Satan, that they might be heirs to a better resurrection. Conquering their carnal natures they exemplified a faith only found (outside of those endowed with the power of God) in the lower forms of life. The caterpillar has faith to build its own sepulcher and imprison itself within walls which it has not the power to rend. Its faith, or God-given instinct, is rewarded, for presently it flies high above where once it groped about unconscious of the wider life, exemplifying in its beauty and freedom a wider and freer life as contrasted with its one-time miserable state. Shall we then have faith in God's promise: "Behold I make all things new"?

"The fulcrum and the power must lie without the load that is to be lifted" is an immutable law of mechanics. It extends on into the eternal or unseen world. "No man can come unto me save the Father draw him." Faith enables us to see and grasp such power. It enables man to live in and to have dominion over God's temporal creation. He unhesitatingly takes his place as the Lord of creation, but also according to just as unalterable a decree he is afraid because he is naked, dependent, and when without hope in the arm of God's mercy he is just as truly without hope in the world. "For if in this life only we have hope in Christ [said Paul] we are of all men most miserable." Can he be given better advice than the scriptural: "Gird on then the whole armor of righteousness"? Then, no longer afraid because clothed with the power of God, the fulcrum securely planted in eternal truth, and exercising his dominion over the earthly workmanship of God's hand, taking up the sword of the spirit, wearing the helmet of salvation, with "feet shod with the preparation of peace," he arises from the bed of doubt where he has been an invalid and stands upon his feet, for he realizes that it is required of him. His testimony becomes affirmative.

"This gospel came not in word only, but in power and in the Holy Ghost and much assurance."

The Arrangement of the Elements

Galileo discovered that the air had weight. Man received the information with amazement. It from remote times had manifested its power but he has just comparatively recently discovered that weight or substance was necessary. From prehistoric times it has stood in the Word: "He maketh the weight for the winds." (Job 28.)

God majestically was ever telling men by inspiration of his spirit: "He hangeth the earth upon nothing." (Job 26.)

Man no longer holds to his old theories. No Atlas upholding the heavens; no "crystal domes with cycles and epicycles scribbled o'er." They were but recently abandoned, however. The greatest of modern scientific developments are found recorded in the Book of books.

"His going forth is from the end of the heavens, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof."

The above has been used to show that God who inspired the word was not aware of his own laws, and that he deceived the inspired writers of the word with the popular notion that the sun, according to appearance, went round the earth. It teaches a higher and modern truth, then unknown, that the sun traverses the entire limit of our constellation and has an orbit which encompasses the entire heavens.

"The earth was without form and darkness covered—" conforms to what man has discovered to be the fact—originally a molten crust and beyond a thick, dark atmosphere which no sun could penetrate. At God's word it became light. "Let there be light: and there was light."

"And God said—" The atmosphere clears—becomes air by chemical separation of the elements—a firmament to divide the waters above from those under the firmament. Otherwise, because of evaporation, we would be constantly enveloped in cloudy darkness. "Covering the great deep." But God divided the waters above from those below. The water is drawn up by the sun which God created and set in the heavens on the fourth day.

"Let the waters under the heavens be gathered together and let the dry land appear." "Let the earth bring forth." And it was so, as the coal deposit, remnants of that age or day, testify. The earth brought forth luxuriantly yet there was not a man to till the soil. Not even an eye to behold. These remnants are universal, even found at the poles. The temperature of the globe was uniform. Heat came from some place other than the sun—obviously. And so the Bible informs us, for the "great light to rule over the day" was not yet set in the heavens. Plants came first. In the lowest depths they are found covered by the erosion of ages.

In the fourth day or epoch of creation the sun is set in the heavens and again the account agrees, for it is admitted that the tiny earth "satellite of an insignificant star" is æons of time older than the sun. The days of creation then were not solar days but periods of time measured before the sun was set in the heavens. However old the eternal rock may be prior to man's appearance at the end of the sixth day, there is nothing known out of harmony with the Word.

It should not be difficult for believers in the Bible to adjust themselves to the idea that a Bible day is an indefinite period of time. A day with God is as a thousand years. Not a thousand years but like a thousand years in that, like a thousand years, a day is a long period of time. "In the day that thou eatest thereof, in that day thou shalt surely die." Adam ate and then lived for 930 years. Quite a long day.

"Let the waters bring forth abundantly, and moving creatures that have life and fowls that fly above the earth."

Some had become extinct before man was set on God's footstool and are known to him only as fossil remains are found in the earth. It is well that this was so for he was not created physically qualified to cope with such gigantic creatures. Here again is evidence that the temperature of the earth was uniform, for in the arctic regions are found perhaps more of such remains than at any other place.

He who has not abandoned evolution should no longer be esteemed a scientist. The well-demonstrated laws of reversion to type and immutability of species also miscegenation, had we the time to analyze them, make the position which Darwin himself never dignified in description as being more than a theory untenable in the light of the sum total of modern knowledge and as always out of harmony with the truth contained in the Word.

Faith is the first principle of the scientific creed. "Great is the primordial cell for it created itself." Hence there is no God. Believe it if you can.

Christian faith is builded from the premise: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." Without such a premise men exercising just as much faith but without inspiration of the Almighty to give understanding have builded but fallen short of acquiring knowledge in the absolute. Their fruitless efforts illustrate that however erudite men may be, they, in attempting to build without God, but illustrate the truth or inspiration in the statement, "The fool sayeth in his heart, There is no God." After ages of research man sums up his wisdom as cited below:

Spiller: "Life in the best sense is motion or change of place."

Haeckel: "Vital force is the causal law or action of the substance of the individual."

Bernard: "The vital principle is that which makes plants grow."

Schopenhauer: "Life is will."

We say to all of these, very good for a finite explanation, but we obtain little assurance or evidence of the unseen by pondering thereon. You are not giving much of a demonstration of the absolute. We still observe as well as read in the Word that "the whole of creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now," and the wonders of creation are quite beyond description in such vague and indefinite terms. We still feel that the best known explanation is summed up in the words, "And God said—," "In the beginning, God—."

"For of this they are willingly ignorant, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed by water, perished."—2 Peter 3: 5, 6.

"Thou coverest the earth with the deep as with a garment. The waters stood above the mountains. At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away."—Psalm 104.

The Word tells a story so like that of the eternal rock that man is being made to confess that the power which inspired the writers of the scriptural account is the same power which created the worlds.

"In the beginning God—" To-day his hand is visible to the eye of faith. The future! He hath ordained for his work and his glory that this mortal might put on immortality. Creator of creation. Yet a new and eternal creation. Who so denies him must close the windows of his soul, for without "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth" the "expanse of the universe is the extent of his power."

In reading over the above I am made to realize that I have used many illustrations found in the writings of my favorite writer whose works on scientific and religious subjects have impressed themselves on my mind in large part almost verbatim and for which some acknowledgment should be made though it would be difficult to isolate them as their selection has been from memory as suggested by the theme of this paper and they are divorced from their settings in a way which would not be approved by their learned author. I refer to F. Bettex, a German, who has helped me in formulating a line of thought which, though there be "nothing new under the sun," may be a new adaptation of the great principle, faith, which is the first of the rudiments from which we may go on, after laying the foundation, to its maturity in works: the normal result of a living faith.

"Therefore let me leave the rudiments of the doctrine of Christ and go on to its maturity."—Hebrews 6: 1 (C. and H. Translation).

We read the works of such men that we might learn and magnify the name of God. Not so much to discover "where shall knowledge be found" as to know "where is the place of understanding."

Just which are his and which I have gleaned from other sources I do not know, but this I know, that his confiding trust in God has had its influence on me though he may differ in the application of this principle, he being committed to the error that faith is the end of the Christian philosophy, whereas we have been made to know that "by grace are ye saved and not by works lest any man should boast," and that because of this no man has wherein to glory, yet if we love him we will "keep his commandments." Not for hope of reward which hope is selfishness not love, but because by such love we will become like him and partake of his attributes; also of his Spirit which will enable us to function as coworkers together with him and as joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

Work here, now, in this time, work in the temporary abode of his saints, work during the millennium, and work after the rest of the dead who "rose not again until the thousand

THE HARVARD GLEE CLUB

The following is an interesting comment from The Outlook on the work of a choral organization. One of the members of this glee club is to be on the faculty of Graceland College next year, in connection with the studio department.

At a time when orchestral concerts in New York have lost vitality and lowered their standards, and when the cause of music has suffered by the discontinuance of the concerts of the Musical Art Society, it is refreshing to have the evidence of at least one great advance in musical taste in this country. For about a year the Harvard Glee Club has been developing into one of the finest choral organizations in America. Its recent concert in New York gives it the right to be judged by the same standards which are applicable to choirs of international reputation.

Like the glee clubs of other colleges in the past, that of Harvard confined itself to the singing of American college songs and simple part songs. Its concerts were social functions rather than musical occasions. When a glee club concert was over, it was certain that "a good time was had by all." The American college glee club, however, has never until now represented in the sphere of music that level of taste which is ordinarily associated, and certainly ought to be associated, with a college or university. Now the Harvard Glee Club is distinctly worthy of the best in American university life.

In its concert in New York its program consisted of ecclesiastical music of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, represented by works of Palestrina, Allegri, Lotti, and Bach; an Irish folk song; an English song by Thomas Morley of the sixteenth century; a group of three choruses by Anton Rubenstein; a dramatic part song by the English negro, Coleridge-Taylor; an impressionistic piece by the French composer, Henri Du Parc; three choral love songs by Brahms, and a Hallelujah Chorus for men's voices by Handel.

Much more important than the tone quality, which was admirable, and the technical ability in attack and in expression, which was very high, was the intelligence and musicianly apprehension of the nature of the music which the chorus displayed. In technical performance the concert would have done honor to a body of professional singers, but in the inner musical quality there was evident the spirit that professionals often miss.

Great credit for the creation of the new Harvard Glee Club is due to Doctor Archibald T. Davison, conductor, but a great share also is due the Harvard undergraduates—not only those who are members, but all those who by their contribution to the public opinion of the undergraduate body, whether years were expired" shall arise and stand before God; when and where it will also be in order to minister "or work as coworkers together with God, for "they shall be heirs to salvation." "This is my work and my glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

To such as he has given power to become the sons of God he has also given to know that "faith without works is dead" and that we can only show our faith by our works: can best demonstrate our faith by work for which is reward in the kingdom of God.

"Work while the day lasts for the night cometh when no man can work."

by joining in the competition for membership or otherwise, have made it possible for the club to attain its present mature musical stature.

PALESTINE'S NATURAL RESOURCES GREAT

"The western slope of Palestine is naturally better than the southern California region in and about Los Angeles," says Harry Thomas Cory.

NEW YORK, December 18.—The natural resources of Palestine are greater than those of southern California and are able to support decently about 4,000,000 people, Harry Thomas Cory, former director general of foreign relief for the American Red Cross, declared in a report to the Zionist Organization of America.

Mr. Cory, a California engineer, went to Palestine recently at the invitation of Justice Brandeis, honorary president of the international and American Zionist organization. He had just investigated the Nile River irrigation projects in Egypt.

Better Than California

Mr. Cory said his findings after a short survey of the Holy Land were in complete accord with those of Sir William Willcox, head of the Nile projects commission of the Egyptian Government, and Professor R. H. Forbes, of the University of Nebraska and an American student of desert irrigation.

"The western slope of Palestine is naturally better than the southern California region in and about Los Angeles, which has made possible that city's enormously rapid development," Mr. Cory said.

"The configuration is strikingly similar, and I was therefore not surprised to learn that it was planned to irrigate 150,000 acres of this coastal land in relatively small units, largely by pumps.

"The soil of western Palestine is better in all essential particulars, more fertile and more favorable for intensive development. In the lower regions there is no danger from frost. Nowhere in southern California is there a frost-proof area.

"The greater quantity and better distribution of the rainfall renders 'dry farming' easier and safer in Palestine regions.

Duties of Branch Officers

By Elbert A. Smith

The third of four articles by one of the First Presidency on this important subject.

III. THE TEACHER

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:11.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Ephesians 4:11, 12.

Peacemakers

The writer lived for a number of years between two neighbors who did not belong to the church. At first the neighbors were very intimate friends; but presently they quarreled over some insignificant matter, and after that they did not speak to each other, though they did not hesitate to speak about each other in very bitter language.

No civil officer took notice of this incident, for organized society has no officer whose duty it is to engage in the ministry of reconciliation. Had they proceeded to blows and created a disturbance of the peace in that way, society would have taken notice and perhaps imposed a fine or a jail sentence to protect other members of society from such disturbance. But as it was, no official notice was taken of the matter by organized society.

Within the church, however, there are officers who must take notice of such incidents when they occur between church members. For hate is a foreign element in the church and must be eliminated. Not so in the world, for the world is as to climatic conditions and many other features. However, Sir William, Professor Forbes, and I are in complete agreement as to the feasibility of irrigating at least 500,000 acres there. Sir William and I are entirely satisfied as to the ability to economically develop 50,000 horsepower in hydro-electric plants.

"The 500,000 acres are much more comparable to the irrigated lands in the Imperial Valley, the southeastern corner of California overlapping into Mexico.

"The future of Palestine is entirely dependent upon the human element. In that regard I was greatly surprised and impressed by the fact that probably the Zionists will be able to secure very quickly ownership of over half the land in that country. Further, the land which can be secured is apparently typical of the region as a whole.

"The one outstanding element in the human phase of the situation is the extraordinary morale which I found among the Zionists of all grades in Palestine. I was impressed with the exuberant spirit of enthusiasm and sacrifice for a cause."—Des Moines Register.

not founded on a basis of love. But the church must eliminate hate or it will die. Jesus says that if we are not one we are not his. Paul charges us to take heed that we do not backbite one another, lest we be devoured of one another.

Within the branches the teachers are the ones specifically designated to act as mediators and peacemakers, by virtue of the charge that they are to see that there is no "hardness with each other," nor "backbiting, nor evil speaking."

Jesus said, "Blessed are the peacemakers," so this is indeed a blessed position to occupy, and calls for consecrated men of a high order of spirituality, and possessed of great tact and good judgment. It is true that all members should be peacemakers, and by calling and disposition conservators of the peace, but when the church as an organized society takes official notice of those quarrels and misunderstandings that sometimes occur between members, the teacher is the one through whom the church acts (when a teacher is available who is not in any way involved or disqualified).

In another sense the teacher is a peacemaker between the church and those members who are in transgression, for in a sense the man who is in transgression of the church law is at war with the church and with God, and in all such cases occurring in the branch there is work for the teacher to do in his official capacity.

As a last resort, he may prefer charges against those who are in transgression, after having performed faithful labor with them in an effort to secure reformation.

In those cases where difficulty occurs between members, the rule adopted by the church is in harmony with Matthew 18, but is more specific, and when practicable involves the presence of the teacher as a mediator and witness. It is provided that the one offended shall first meet the one offending, privately, and seek reconciliation. In the event of a failure to secure reconciliation, at the second attempt "he shall take with him some teacher of the church, or if such teacher be not obtainable, or be an interested party, a deacon if obtainable, otherwise a member, and shall try a second time to secure an adjustment of the difficulty existing, but shall not state the matter of grievance to such officer or member except in the presence of the party offended.

The law says that the teacher's duty is "to watch over the church always" and to "see that there is no iniquity in the church." This accords with the further statement, "The deacons and teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be standing ministers unto the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:22.

The statement that the teacher is to "watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them," indicates that it is the duty of the teacher to be present with the church at all services, whenever it is possible for him to do so, and to scrutinize the congregation and exercise a watchcare over it, noting individuals as well as the general assembly, that he may judge of their spirituality and know when to exercise himself in his calling in specific cases. He should be there, on duty, as an example to others, and ready to help and strengthen in every legitimate way, by precept, by example, by exhortation, by prayer, by word of encouragement and brotherly cheer, by rebuke when necessary.

He cannot know when hardness, evil speaking, backbiting, lying, iniquity, indifference to duty, exist in the church unless he is alert and at his post.

In addition to his watchcare over the morals of the members he is charged to see that they do not neglect to attend services. This he may do by exhortation in public or in private, and by moral suasion, as it goes without saying that force cannot be employed to make people attend church. They must be persuaded, and persuasion does not mean scolding. People must be attracted, or impelled from a sense of duty understood as a result of correct teaching.

A Visiting Officer

While the teacher is not specifically named as a visiting officer, the nature of his duties seems to make him of necessity to an extent a visiting officer. He cannot ascertain the condition of those members who absent themselves from the church, and may need his especial care, unless he visits them. He cannot get a general understanding of the spiritual condition of the people unless he moves among them.

For be it understood that the teacher is not merely an "undertaker" who is to act only when the priests have reported the presence of a spiritual corpse in the branch. Nor is he a meat ax surgeon, whose only work is to cut off and expel. He should be a conservative force in the branch. His first duty is to reconcile; to save. He may be obliged to take the initial steps that will lead up to expulsion, in some cases, but this is done as a last resort, after efforts to save have failed. His labor is performed, not to make a case that will stand in the courts, so that the erring one may be expelled, but with the whole-hearted desire to save the individual. If he fails in this, of course his labor stands as a witness against the offender, when the matter comes to the courts; but that was not the primary purpose of the labor.

No one can be a successful teacher who does not love humanity. This work requires the Spirit of the Master, who came not to destroy men, but to save them.

In this work, as we have said, the teacher will find it necessary to visit the members in their homes. He may visit with the priest under certain circumstances, as when a branch has but one priest and one teacher, and it is unwise for one to visit a family alone, but under such circumstances he goes as a teacher, and acts in his own capacity as a teacher, and not as an assistant to the priest. Or where a deacon is available he may take the deacon with him; as it is said that the deacon may assist the teacher in all of his duties, when necessary.

On this point of visiting we wish to quote a paragraph from an address by Elder Joseph Lambert (delivered in Lamoni, March 22, 1904, and published in the HERALD), as it is to the point:

"I gather that the teacher is a visiting officer from a consideration of the character of his work as a teacher. It seems to me that this work cannot be properly and fully performed without more or less visiting among the members of the branch. And while I do not regard him as a visiting officer in the same sense as I do the priest, yet I think it is impractical for him to accomplish the work that is imposed upon him in the law, without visiting among the members of the church. . . . I remember a little branch to which I belonged when I was a teacher; sometimes I would notice that certain persons failed to partake of the sacrament. And I thought it my duty to find out why they did not partake. I took their names at once, when they did not partake, and on the first good opportunity (I did not wait long either) I approached them and told them in as good a way as I knew how, and as kindly as I could, that I noticed that they did not partake of the sacrament on Sunday; then they would tell me why. . . . So I believe that the teacher should be on the alert; and that he is required to do a great deal of visiting in order to honor the law which defines his duties as an officer in the church."

The Teacher May Preach

The teacher may preach, in a local way, as the following will show:

"Resolved, That in our judgment teachers and deacons are authorized by the law to labor as preachers within the branches to which they belong, when they are presidents thereof, or with the advice and consent of the presiding officer."—General Conference Resolution, number 449.

"After they had prayed unto the Father in the name of Christ, they laid their hands upon them, and said, In the name of Jesus Christ I ordain you to be a priest; (or if he be a teacher;) I ordain you a teacher, to preach repentance and remission of sins through Jesus Christ, by the endurance of faith on his name to the end. Amen."—Book of Moroni 3: 2.

"High priests should travel, and also the elders, and also the lesser priests; but the deacons and teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be standing ministers unto the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 22.

They Are to Warn, Expound, Exhort, and Teach

"Neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.

"The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

This function of exhorting, warning, expounding, and invitation may be exercised either in private or in public, as wisdom, the circumstances, and the ability of the teacher may direct. Our observation has led us to believe that the field of public instruction from the pulpit is pretty well occupied by the general ministry, while the field of private instruction, teaching, heart to heart exhortation, fireside preaching, is not so well occupied.

Not every good public speaker is a good conversationalist. The teacher who is a good conversationalist, spiritually minded, and well posted, will find a broad and fertile field for him to occupy as a teacher of the law in the homes of the people who are under his charge as a branch officer. It is perhaps a fact that the teachers as a class have not yet fully occupied to the extent of their opportunities along this line.

The Teacher May Preside

A teacher may be elected to preside over a branch in which case, of course, he presides in his own right as head of the branch:

"A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2.

A further reading of the paragraph discovers the wisdom of electing high priests or elders where such are available and are considered fully qualified to act, and are so situated that they can act; but that which we have quoted shows that a teacher may under certain conditions be chosen to preside over a branch.

[Editors' Note: Next week the duties of the deacon will be discussed.]

In the Apostolic Review we note a statement to the effect that propositions for debate have been signed for a debate between our church and the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church, to be held at Bellingham, Washington. G. W. Williams is to debate for them, and S. S. Smith is reported to have signed for us but will not do the debating. The date is January 25 and to continue six days.

The Ten Lost Tribes—Where Are They?—Part 4

By S. K. Sorensen

In this article various Book of Mormon passages are quoted and discussed. There are two more installments to follow.

Having examined only very briefly and from the Bible standpoint, the many evidences contained therein relative to the scattering and the whereabouts of the house of Israel, the ten tribes, it becomes our duty to employ two more witnesses: the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, so that in the mouths of two or three witnesses every word of God may be established.

A theory which cannot be substantiated by reliable witnesses whose testimonies are correlative, is absolutely worthless; hence the theory which we are undertaking to establish as a fact, may in its incipency be theory only, but every theory must be proven in order to become established; hence appeal to credible witnesses whose credibility has been established. We will therefore introduce Nephi, the son of Lehi who came out of Jerusalem, as our first witness from the Book of Mormon.

"For it appears that the house of Israel, sooner or later, will be scattered upon all the face of the earth, and also among all nations, and behold there are many who are already lost [the ten tribes] from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem. Yea, the more part [ten] of all the tribes have been led away; and they are scattered to and fro upon the isles of the sea; and whither they are, none of us knoweth, save that we know that they have been led away."—1 Nephi 7: 6-10.

The testimony of Nephi establishes the fact that these scattered tribes are upon the isles of the sea. That does not mean at the North Pole. Further than this he has no knowledge. Jacob's testimony is somewhat more positive. He says:

"Nevertheless, we have been driven out of the land of our inheritance; but we have been led to a better land: for the Lord hath made the sea our path, and we are upon an isle of the sea [the American Continent]. But great are the promises of the Lord unto those who are upon the isles of the sea; wherefore, as it says isles, there must needs be more than this; and they are inhabited also by our brethren. For behold, the Lord has led away from time to time from the house of Israel, according to his will and pleasure."—2 Nephi 7: 34-38.

This was spoken about thirty to forty years after they left Jerusalem and both Jacob and Nephi who were brothers and were sons of Lehi, spoke according to their knowledge or of their knowledge of the history at their disposal, that the tribes of Israel had been led away to the isles of the sea.

"Yea, and surely shall he [the Lord] again bring a remnant of the seed of Joseph to the knowledge of the Lord their God; and as surely as the Lord liveth will he gather in from the four quarters of the earth, all the remnant of the seed of Jacob, [the twelve tribes] who are scattered abroad upon all the face of the earth."—Nephi 2: 106, 107.

We have now introduced three witnesses: Nephi, Jacob, and Mormon, who all testify that the house of Israel was scattered upon all the face of the earth including the isles of the sea, and not one has even given a hint that any were behind the icy barriers at the North Pole.

A multiplicity of evidences would establish no more and only consume space.

Christ in his visitation to the Nephites tells them:

"And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of the land round about, whither I have been to minister. For they of whom I speak are they who have not as yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself to them. But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice, and shall be numbered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to show myself unto them."

To suppose that these other tribes to whom Christ was going to minister were at the North Pole, is stretching the imagination considerably. It has been plainly proven from both Bible and history just where those lost tribes are, but in an unidentified state.

Josephus, who wrote his history over sixty years after Christ, tells us that "the ten tribes are beyond Euphrates till now (A. D. 93), and are an immense multitude and not to be estimated by numbers."—Book 1, ch. 5, par. 2.

Did not Christ know that sixty years before when he told the Nephites about these lost tribes, and what evidence have we that he did not go there, beyond Euphrates to minister to the scattered ones there where they were located in a large body at that time?

Christ says that he was only sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel and they only should hear his voice. If Josephus tells the truth, that such an immense multitude was beyond Euphrates in all that region of country, would it be assuming too much to say that Christ went there also to minister to them who were of the house of Israel before their final scattering into all the world?

But the objector may see we have no evidence of such a visitation. True neither had the world any evidence of the visitation of Christ to the Nephites prior to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

The record which records the visitation of Christ to others of the house of Israel will likely in the Lord's own time be brought forth, for he says by the mouth of the Prophet Nephi:

"For I command all men, both in the east and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them: for out of the books which shall be written, I will judge the world, every man according to their works, according to that which is written. For behold I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it; and I shall speak also unto the Nephites and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth, and they shall write it. And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel: and the lost tribes of Israel shall also have the words of the Nephites and the Jews."—2 Nephi 12: 65-72.

Thus we see foreshadowed the designs and purposes of the Lord to bring about a oneness of all tribes and nations through the corroborative testimony which he has left among all nations concerning his will and the plan of redemption. And when the time shall come for the restoration or restitution of all things which God has spoken by his holy prophets and apostles since the world began to be brought about, then the marvelous work and a wonder shall commence of which has been spoken, not so much in the fact that the gospel has been restored, as though that were such a wonderful event, more so than its restoration in the days of Christ; but in the fact that the eternal purposes of God which he had designed in the beginning will all have their fulfillment in that dispensation, that his word which has been given to different peoples in different lands will all be brought together into one harmonious whole, corroborating the divinity of Christ and the plan of salvation which he brought, manifesting to all nations that there is but one faith, one Lord, and Father of all, governing and controlling all things according to his own good will and pleasure. Not only in this is the marvelous demonstrated; but in the fact that the Lord shall then lead the house of Israel out of obscurity and out of darkness, and cause Israel, the ten tribes, to be a blessing to all nations, tongues, and people, as was promised Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob that their seed should be.

The house of Judah (the Jews) cannot lay claim to this, as they are only merchants and tradesmen of mercenary tendencies, and have accomplished nothing by which they may be a blessing to others; selfishness and greed have been their traits in particular.

Not so with the house of Israel; they are to be a blessing to the nations through the gospel, not only to the Gentile nations, but also to the Jew; first the Gentile, then the Jew. The marvelous work will also consist of gathering the house of Israel out from among the nations where the Lord has sifted them, so that not one grain shall be lost.

Nephi in speaking of the marvelous work that the Lord shall proceed to do, says:

"Wherefore, the Lord will proceed to make bare his arm [fulfill his promises] in the eyes of all the nations, in bringing about his covenants and his gospel, unto those who are of the house of Israel. Wherefore he will bring them again out of captivity, and they shall be gathered together to the lands of their inheritance: and they shall be brought out of obscurity and out of darkness [their identity shall no longer be hid]: and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the mighty one of Israel."—1 Nephi 7: 22-25.

This language cannot apply to the Jew, as they have never been the recipients of the gospel covenants; neither have they acknowledged the Jesus Christ as their Redeemer, and the Mighty One of Israel.

But Nephi refers here to a class belonging to the house of Israel who will do this, when the Lord shall proceed to do his marvelous work in hunting and fishing for the lost sheep of the house of Israel among the nations whither they are scattered. This corresponds with the statement of Christ to the Nephites in speaking of the time of the restoration when the gospel shall again be preached among the remnant of that people.

"Verily, I say unto you, at that day shall the work of the Father commence among all the dispersed of my people; yea even the tribes which have been lost, which the Father had led away out of Jerusalem. Yea, the work shall commence among all the dispersed of my people, with the Father, to prepare the way, whereby they may come unto me, that they may call upon the Father in my name; yea, and then shall the work commence, with the Father, among all nations, in preparing the way whereby his people may be gathered home to the land of their inheritance. And they shall go out from all nations; and they shall not go out in haste, nor by flight; for I will go before them, saith the Father, and I will be their rearward."—Nephi 10: 5-8.

There is a plain declaration that it is among those tribes that were lost that the Father shall commence his work. The Jew will not accept Christ until he comes as indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 45: 9, speaking of the time where

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

"Home Department Workers, 'Ten-shun!'"

We wish to call the attention of all home department workers and all district organizers to the "instructions" published in this column. While in the main they are but a repetition of the instructions which have been sent out from our office to the local workers, there are a few minor changes which have come with our better organization and the gradual assimilation of this work by our department.

Because of the fact that we had, at the time, not completed our appointment of district organizers, our first announcements asked all local superintendents of home class work to report directly to our general office, from whence, also, issued at first the appointments of these local workers. With the better perfecting of our organization, however, it has been made possible to handle the home department work through our district organizers, just as other phases of our work are handled. We have also placed in their hands the responsibility of appointing local workers where there are none, and of filling future vacancies. They shall also receive quarterly reports from the local superintendents, it being a part of their duty to see that the home class work is actively carried on in every part of their individual districts.

The one exception to the rule that all local home department superintendents report to their district organizers is in the matter of sending Christmas offerings. The Presiding Bishopric is this year attempting to tabulate the Christmas offering returns according to a plan of their own, and the Bishop has therefore requested our executive to instruct all local home department superintendents to send what Christmas offering they collect directly to his office, stating from what district it comes. This, also, is the proper procedure for isolated members of the home class, wherever they may be.

We are aware of the fact that the placement of this important work formerly carried by another arm of the church, with our Women's Department, has added to the duties and the responsibilities of our organizers, but we are glad to note the general acceptance of the tasks involved. One organizer recently wrote: "I was really glad when the home department fell to us, as it gave us something to begin to work on in many places. Before, it was all intangible in branches where there are few educated people to lead out. . . . In small branches we cannot start too many classes, for it overworks a few people. It appears to me that the home department and cradle roll are our best opportunity in such cases, and if we work them carefully we will gain our foothold. . . ."

A list of our district organizers was published in the HERALD of November 10. A small additional list appeared recently. We hope in a short time to have an organizer in every district of the church, in order that our work may move the Lord shall return and the Jews shall be gathered.

"And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know [not until then] that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them: These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus who was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King." (See also Zechariah 12: 10 and 13: 6.)

What further evidence do we need that those referred to of the children of Israel who will accept Christ when the Father shall commence his work of restoration in the last days, are not of the Jews, but of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows? The Jews will not believe on him until forward effectively. To those local superintendents of the home class work in those districts where such appointment is not yet made we would say, send your quarterly reports directly to our general office. We will notify you when appointment is made for your district. All organizers should apply to our office for report blanks to be sent to all their local superintendents. These blanks are sent out, without charge, just as soon as we are informed as to the number required by each organizer.

We feel sure that all who work together in harmony for the advancement of that part of the Lord's work which is intrusted to their care, will feel the touch of divine sanction and will be blessed in the work. We are grateful for the encouragement and the inspiration which has come to us from many of these splendid workers who are not laboring for renown, for fame, or glory, but rather for the good they can do, the encouragement they can give to those who need their ministry, and for the advancement of the gospel of light, and intelligence which definitely points the way to many groping in darkness. May God's blessings be with every such laborer in the vineyard.

Instructions to Home Department Workers

The Women's Department of the church is now caring for the work formerly done by the home department of the Sunday school and Religio. It aims to put into the homes a systematic study of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and also any other good books.

In every community there are some who do not have opportunity to attend Sunday school, Religio, women's meetings, or church services. Some are members of the church and some are not; some are prevented from attending because of illness, occupation, distance from church, or other good causes. Whatever may be the cause of absence it is the purpose of the home department to take the work to them and induce them to take up a systematic study for their own advancement.

In many instances branches have been organized from the nucleus started by home department workers. A good live branch will see to it that this missionary arm of the church, the home department, is active in its midst and surrounding territory. Isolated members should be looked after and made to feel that they have an important part to play in the great preparation period. Therefore every effort should be made throughout the church to bring, through study and application, every home up to its highest possible standard.

Duties of District Organizers

The district organizer shall have charge of the home department work in her district. She shall appoint a local home department superintendent in every branch in her district where none now exists, and fill all subsequent vacancies that may occur. Great care should be exercised in these appointments and only capable and consecrated workers should be chosen. If at any time a superintendent becomes inac-they shall see him when he comes in glory. The work of the Father must then of necessity be among those tribes which were lost as Christ said to the Nephites, and as that work has already been commenced and carried on for upward of one hundred years. It is plain, then, that those tribes, though lost, are in places where the gospel could reach them and not beyond the borders of civilization where the ministers of the Lord have never been.

The rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, the Lord says to the church, implying that Ephraim would not be of the rebellious, but would be the recipients of the promises made to the fathers, which shall be planted in the hearts of the children. This to be fulfilled in Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows.

tive, it is the privilege of the district organizer to appoint another in that branch. To keep the home department up to a high standard, every superintendent should be actively pushing the work of this department, and it is the duty of the organizer to see that this is being done.

Duties of Local Home Department Superintendents

The local home department superintendent shall have the general oversight of all the home department activities in her branch. She may appoint as many assistants as may be needed, who shall report their work to her quarterly. A summary of their work, and her own, shall constitute her report to the district organizer. She shall have charge of the distribution of both the Sunday school and Religio Quarterlies, and other literature, such as HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves, leaflet courses, and any other printed information as she may be directed by the organizer of her district.

Reports

Blanks for reports shall be sent out by the district organizer to the local home department superintendents just prior to the close of each quarter. Each local superintendent shall fill out report blank according to work done and forward the same to the district organizer. At the close of each year the district organizer shall make a report of work done in her district from a summary of the various local superintendents' reports and send the same to the general office of the Women's Department at Independence, Missouri, Box 255. This, however, is not the only report that is expected of the district organizer. The district organizer shall through her monthly letters to the general executive keep the latter informed concerning the general condition of the home department work in her district.

Local superintendents send reports to district organizer, quarterly.

District organizers send reports to general office, annually, January 1.

Finances

All Christmas offerings from members on lists of local home department superintendents shall be sent by the local superintendents to Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, Independence, Missouri, stating the name of their district.

All regular collections from home department members, over and above that which is needed for the purchase of supplies necessary for the work in the branch, shall be sent by the local home department superintendent to our general office, making check payable to Benjamin R. McGuire, treasurer Women's Department. Address Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

All isolated members shall send their usual quarterly contributions directly to their district organizer along with their quarterly report. Their Christmas offerings should be sent to Bishop McGuire, as per above paragraph.

How to Get Supplies

All Quarterlies needed by the home department members in the branch shall be ordered by the local home department superintendent direct from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Accompany each order with money for the same. If contributions from members have fallen below the amount needed for supplies, send what you have, stating the facts, and the balance due will be charged to the Women's Department.

Isolated Members

All isolated church members should become members of the home department. They shall come under the direct supervision of the organizer of the district in which they live, who shall see that they are provided with Quarterlies, report envelopes, and such other supplies and literature as are needed for home study. Such members shall report at the close of each quarter directly to their district organizer and inclose their regular offerings. Christmas offerings should be sent to Bishop McGuire. When the district organizer shall deem it necessary, it is her privilege to appoint an assistant to care for the isolated members of her district. When the organizer thinks it wise to do so, she may suggest to isolated members that they subscribe for their own Quarterlies.

The district organizer should make a careful study of this phase of our women's work, and strive diligently to develop it to its highest efficiency in her district.

Woman's New Power

III

"The most distinctive feature of congressional procedure is the use of committees in lawmaking. The committees are the center and life of Congress, doing the larger part of the work of framing important bills—although these are actually introduced by individual members—in investigating subjects before either house, and in concentrating discussion on the most important measures."—Ashley, in The New Civics.

Seniority is the rule in both houses but it is not followed arbitrarily. The seniority system means that the man of the party in power who has been the longest upon the committee will have the chairmanship of that committee. In the minority party, the man who has been longest upon the committee will be the ranking minority member.

These committees are a very important feature in lawmaking. It is their business to get back of all bills which they have under their supervision, recommend them, explain them, keep them from being lost in the skirmish. There are sixty committees in the House, seventy-two in the Senate. During the sixty-fifth Congress there were more than twenty-two thousand bills introduced, only five hundred forty-three of which were enacted into law. The personnel of any committee has a great effect upon its work. If an important bill goes into the hands of a progressively active committee it stands a good chance of being favorably considered. On the other hand if it falls into the hands of careless, reactionary politicians it may be "killed in committee."

Each bill is referred to its appropriate committee as soon as it is introduced. The Smith-Towner Bill is in the hands of the Committee on Education and Labor in both House and Senate. Enforcement legislation of the prohibition amendment is in the hands of the Judiciary Committee. Friends of these bills are anxious that they receive friendly treatment in committee.

The committees usually hold their meetings or hearings in the morning. They hear the reports of experts, business men, and of subcommittees and discuss the question among themselves. Their sessions are supposed to be secret. They are not entirely so although no record of their work is printed. After the examination and discussion of a bill it may be reported favorably or unfavorably according to the judgment of the members of the committee. And in most cases their recommendation is the thing that brings or fails to bring legislation.

If a bill is favorably reported by its committee, is debated and passed by both houses of Congress, it may then become a law by one of three ways prescribed by the Constitution of the United States.

First, the President may sign it. Secondly, if he fails to sign it or to return it to Congress within the ten days allowed by the Constitution, exclusive of holidays and Sundays, it becomes a law without his signature. Thirdly, if he vetoes a bill, and it is passed again by each house with a two-thirds majority it becomes a law over his veto.

The stream of human life that preceded us has left a rich heritage in government. There is a hint of democracy in the government of the children of Israel as they entered the promised land. It was obscured by their theory of theocracy but it gradually evolved until the adoption of the American Constitution gave it prominence. Clearly it is the duty as well as the privilege of each generation to push the ideal of government higher and ever higher. This is not an easy task.

American government, all government, is constantly growing more complex. The problems are getting more difficult and more important. Now that women are constituents rather than mere spectators in the game of lawmaking, it is expected that their efforts in urging child welfare legislation will be treated with less indifference by members of Congress.

Last summer when representative women, under the auspices of the Women's League of National Voters, arranged a hearing on the Curtis-Gard Bill they found an audience of one lonely Senator to whom they delivered their messages. You will remember this bill touches the regulation of child labor in the District of Columbia. These women had sacrificed both time and money to make the journey to the capitol in the interests of this and similar measures. Government by committee did not appeal very strongly to them just then. The Senate Committee on Public Health and Quarantine, who have the Sheppard-Towner Bill in hand, gave them an audience of six, Senator Sheppard, of Texas, and Representative Towner, of Iowa, joint sponsors of the bill, both being present.

Do we get tired hearing of this last-mentioned bill? But Julia Lathrop says we are fourteenth down the list of civilized nations in its high death rate of mothers. We lost seventeen thousand mothers and almost a half million babies last year through lack of care, ignorance, and improper living conditions. The Sheppard-Towner Bill asks for two million dollars for the first year to give needed instruction and medical care to mothers and infants.

Secretary of Agriculture Meredith is asking Congress to appropriate for the Bureau of Animal Industry, five and a quarter million dollars; for the Bureau of Plant Industry, three million dollars; for the Bureau of Markets, two and a fourth million; for Diseases and Inspection of Meats another two and a fourth million. In all he asks for fifty-three million dollars for the agricultural interests of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. The Sheppard-Towner appropriation sinks into insignificance beside these figures. Will you write your Senators and Representatives asking them to support the appropriations for mothers and infants as well as that for calves, pigs, and corn? Concerning this bill Jane Addams of Hull House says:

"I can think of no objection which will be urged except that of cost. But anxious as we are to pay our debts and reduce taxes, I do not believe that the United States Congress will decide we cannot afford to give to the American mothers and children at least as good care as England is now giving to English mothers and children."

Every woman who has a vote has an influence in Congress. Once she realizes her power there and uses it for the betterment of the race then humanitarian legislation will be pushed with greater speed.

The Armies of Peace

After the tea things are put away,
After the paper is read,
After the noise and the cares of day,
And the youngsters are abed;
After the prayers and the good-night kiss,
She by the fire and I,
And the winds may blow, but I'm glad for this,
And the dreams that go smiling by.

After the children's time for play,
After the voices of care
Have echoed in distance and died away
And night with its peace is fair,
After the little stories are told
And the lilt of the lullaby,
The day seems dross by the evening's gold
And the joys that go laughing by.

After the crib and the trundle bed
Are canopied high with dreams;
After the last little curly head
Is shorn of its golden beams
By the snuffing out of the candle's light,
When she by the fire and I,
And I'm glad for the stillness and peace of night
And the hopes that go gleaming by.

After the gnomes and the goblins drift
Out to the sleepy sea;
After the hearth fire muses lift
Songs of the joys to be;
After the workaday world's asleep,
She by the fire and I
In the dream-a-while time, when fairies peep
And gladness goes dancing by.

And this is the strength that the nation boasts,
And this is the nation's pride,
And these are grander than vanquished hosts
And ships on the sea beside:
The lullabies and the hearth fires bright,
And the cribs where the children lie,
And the dreams of love that hallow the night
And the faith that goes smiling by.

Kind Words

Please accept my very heartiest thanks for the copy of the Centennial Yearbook from the Women's Department of the church. This book is certainly a very fine number, both from the standpoint of its composition and editorial work and its mechanical make-up. It will, without question, be a source of very great good to the forward educational movement of the church. Accept my congratulations on this very fine accomplishment.—G. N. B.

Viewing the Devastation of War

Apostle Williams in France gets a close-up view of the desolation brought about by the World War.

Friday, December Twelve!
Nineteen Hundred and Twenty!

This day is registered in memory as with red-hot irons. The sensations and experiences will never be effaced.

The day was cold. The weather was damp and dank. There was no sun. The atmosphere was heavy. The wind was piercing—a typical winter day in northern France.

We left Paris long before daylight. Caught an early train. Passed through Chateau Thierry shortly after daybreak. This is the place where "our boys" commenced their real offensive and won their first and signal victory, thereby preventing the Germans from reaching Paris.

A casual survey of the topography of the country coupled with a knowledge of the actual situation of the contending forces in 1918 impels conviction that the one thing which prevented the Germans from enveloping Paris in that year was the presence of the American army in the southeast sector.

We reached Rheims at 9 a. m. And what a sight! We wandered through the deserted streets. We climbed over and through and under mountains of debris. We groped our way through a wilderness of toppling walls and crumbling ruins. The sufferings of Rheims are classed with those of Ypres and Arras. Former wide streets are to-day mere paths in the ruins in which public buildings, churches, business blocks, dwellings, and sheds are of common value. Rheims to-day is a spectacle weird and ghostly. Scarcely a building of any consequence was left standing. What shot and shell could not destroy the torch has well-nigh effaced. It was sad and pathetic to witness the occasional effort at reconstruction.

The cathedral—a beautiful Gothic building, declared by Charles VIII to be "preeminent among all churches of the kingdom," was the target of German artillery for four long years. On one occasion, in the spring of 1917, for seven consecutive hours at the rate of twelve per hour, the Germans fired twelve-inch, fourteen-inch, and fifteen-inch guns on the building. The ruins bear grim witness to the accurate German aim. That part of the building susceptible to fire was destroyed early in the war. The walls are pierced, many portions marred, and the whole scarred and shattered. It will take years to restore if this is ever possible.

At noon we joined one of the Cook's Tours, entered a charabancs, and motored near fifty miles through the old battle front of the war. Our party comprised the following nationalities—a singular coincidence: Two Americans, one Englishman, one Chinese, two Japanese, two Danish, one Dutch, two French, one Swede.

I said the day was cold. We were in an open car with no robes or covering. The wind seemed to penetrate and freeze one's blood. It made the very marrow of the bones to ache. We suffered intensely. But we did not suffer half enough. We would have sensed the situation more keenly if we could have suffered even in a small way as did "our boys" in this same land in 1918.

As we rode through village after village razed to the ground, devastated country, charred woodland, and ruined orchard, and saw the long and impenetrable stretches of barbarous wire entanglement like some huge spider web to enmesh and pinion human beings—stretches of both German and allies with "no man's land" between, the pock-marked hills where bursting shell and exploding mine had changed the face of the earth from a thing of beauty to utter desolation, I tried to visualize the carnage at its height. Imagination balked. My blood congealed. My soul sickened.

Then I thought of these youths snatched from comfortable homes and loved ones, from school and office, from mill and workshop, from anvil, farm, and mine. Compelled to live in this damp, disagreeable, chilling climate without fire, without sanitation, with insufficient and unwholesome food, existing in unsanitary dugouts and trenches, at times up to their arm-pits in water and wading through sleet and snow. Added to this, I thought of the carnival of hell in shot and shell, the deafening roar of artillery, the maddening infantry charge, the air above and the earth beneath a veritable madhouse, and I tried to sense the mental and spiritual torture which these youths were compelled to endure. I cried out in my perplexity, "O God, could man pass through such an experience and still believe in thee? Could my own son endure this and still retain his spiritual perspective? Could I? I cannot say! I do not know!"

But of this I am assured, that if there be a God, he must look with much allowance on the acts of men thus brutalized and tortured and impelled not by personal desire or purpose, but compelled by the inexorable demand of the State to such a life. I have never been so near to hell before, yet I have not even tasted what these courageous young men endured. How I wish that every man, woman, and child in America could see what I saw that day! How I wish that every human being could sense what I sensed on that trip. It would mean the end of war!

We took the Perie de Mars route for Berry-an-Bac and Hill 108. This hill is situated within a few miles of Rheims. The Germans had taken this hill and stubbornly maintained their position for months. The French determined to recapture it, and concentrated their forces. An advance was ordered. Not a German gun was fired. When the French shock troops had reached the crest of the hill (the Germans retreating) mine after mine was exploded until the hill resembled an extinct volcano with numerous large craters. Fifteen thousand French troops were killed in one day and many thousand wounded.

We then proceeded by the main Laon road, well known as "Route 44," in order to see the Aisne Canal, which was the front line for over four years. The canal has only recently been restored. Water was turned into it the week before our trip.

We visited Fort de Brimont, the Gadat Farm, and the Bridge Head of Sapigneul, which changed hands so frequently and was repeatedly mentioned in the official communiques.

The ground between Berry-an-Bac and Cerbeny which we covered represents the battlefield which was the starting point of the French offensive in 1917 when the French army made an attempt to break the German line, but unfortunately failed. There is nothing but piles of ruins to mark the place where the towns of Craonne and Chemin-des-Dames were located. From the Craonne Plateau it is possible to get an excellent view of the battlefield. The panorama gives one some idea of the energy and bravery displayed by the troops who had to rush these positions. This sector and Verdun were two of the most devastated of the war.

We pass through Craonnelle and Pentavert, also the forest which before the war was picturesque, but is now completely destroyed by machine gun fire clear to the Aisne valley and nothing but charred and withered trees remain.

The Germans had a veritable underground fortress at Chalera Farm. One has no conception of the utter desolation and destruction that a modern battlefield reveals unless it is visited. Our visit was so long after the actual event that we have but a faint idea of what this meant. We had enough for one day—yes, for our entire life.

The glory of war? There is no glory in war. There is no holy war. There is no just war. God hates war. War is a reversal to type. It unleashes the carnal and brutal and suppresses the moral and spiritual. It drives God into eclipse. It matters not how high ideals a nation may have, it suffers from bloody conflict.

It is useless to resurrect the past. The responsibility for the great war must rest with those who precipitated it and perpetuated it. There are sometimes conditions when the individual is absolutely helpless. When a nation takes up arms against another or when one nation engages in a war of defense the citizen has no choice but to stand with his own nation. He is compelled to acquiesce. We are thus betwixt two extremes. As nations are now constituted, to oppose one's own is to support the enemy and this is treason. When war reigns, reason takes flight and passion governs. There are no high ideals, no conscientious scruples in war. The end justifies the means. War is a reflex of the lower purposes of men in times of peace.

I find people over here do not talk of the late war as a war for democracy and human liberty. Europeans did not enter the war with the same high purpose which swayed the mass of our own people at home. It was the slogan, "Democracy" and the "Rights of Small Nations" which caught the heart and stirred the emotions of America. This has little place in Europe to-day.

In 1918 I thought that the world had had enough of war. I hoped that with the overthrow of thrones and the reorganization of nations men would respond to the higher order of things. From present indications the nations are returning to their leeks and onions if they ever left them. Greece, like old Israel, has spoken. She has said, "Give us back our king. We want Tino to rule over us. We would be as are our neighbors." Britain hugs closely to her bosom the old order. "Britain for the Britons," is easily transposed to mean, "The World for Britain." It is clearly evident that those who hold the destiny of Britain in their hands never lose sight of Britain's interest.

The Sermon on the Mount is not the end of dispute at the Court of Saint James. France, though a republic, retains the old national spirit. If I am any judge the hatred against Germany is intensified. The Italians are acting precisely as before the war. There is no change in the national conscience. All are actuated with selfish purpose.

The allied nations are saying to Russia, "Your hands are stained in blood—we cannot admit you to our fellowship." I wonder if Nicholas had continued to rule would they thus have answered to this tyrant of eastern Europe! Nicholas brutalized the peasants and proletariat. Lenine has placed his heavy hand on the bourgeoisie and aristocracy. Is one worse than the other? Are not both born of class hatred and class cruelty?

The peace of nations cannot be realized so long as the nations uphold these institutions and customs and perpetuate the spirit and purpose which have always eventuated in war. The League of Nations! Would to God we could have one—a real League of Nations. President Wilson had a dream. He came to Europe intent on making this dream come true. He had a rude awakening. He rose up against astute statesmen, schooled and trained diplomats—men who supported the old order. He read the handwriting on the wall. He compromised. This marked his downfall. The ideals of democracy have little place in the traffickings of undemocratic states. These things, like oil and water, will not mix. Comity among nations is still Utopia.

There are ominous signs in Europe—signs which do not portend peace. National prejudice and hatred still exist. Europe is in the melting pot. No one can say what a day will bring forth. As we have written hitherto, Great Britain has her hands full at home. France is threatened with bankruptcy. Russia is fast going to pieces, and unless she is helped in some way to sanity and reason she will sink into barbarism. Germany is helpless—flat on her back. Italy has her socialistic trouble. There is Ireland and Egypt and India and Japan still to reckon with.

I am filled with forebodings. Our own country has suffered from too close association with imperialism. Imperialism is fascinating. It is an intoxicant. Yet most of the great world nations of the past have been shattered on this reef. To think of America solely for America is in contravention of all our national and church ideals. It is our privilege and duty to diffuse the spirit of real democracy, to radiate liberty and justice, to proclaim that might is not always right and that in the end right is the greatest might.

The world needs the message of Jesus Christ. It must have this message or perish. And herein am I reminded that the mission of His church is not to foster war but to cry peace; to proclaim peace; to issue "a proclamation of peace." We must not forget that to be children of God we must be "peacemakers."

As the church of the living God, as children of the kingdom, it is ours to hold the thought of peace, to cast out the spirit of selfishness and hate, and to become a beacon light of love and fellowship.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

The Attack on the Church in Des Moines

An account of an unfair tirade upon the church and a personal attack on one of its representatives.

Inquiries are continually coming in about the news-press reports which have gone abroad somewhat extensively throughout Iowa and Nebraska concerning the reported "rough house" proceedings recently enacted at Des Moines, Iowa.

In justice to our cause I feel that some explanation should be given.

Some six weeks ago information was conveyed to me that Reverend O. S. Wiard, who claims 18,000 scalps as a detective of national fame, delivered a lecture near Runnells, Iowa, on the familiar subject of "Mormonism." The lecture was reported as exceedingly abusive.

The local branch president challenged the lecturer to meet one of our men in debate. To this, our brother received a reply accepting the gauge of battle, in a proposition as unkind as it was unfair. It read as follows:

"Was Joseph Smith, jr., 'author and proprietor,' founder of the Mormon Church, a Christian or criminal?"

The matter was then referred to me, when I countered with a reply showing the injustice and unmanliness of such a proposition, but wishing to get the man and nail his misrepresentations, as he had been touring the country with his unspeakable slander, I accepted his proposition with only a slight alteration:

"Was Joseph Smith, the reputed founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as organized at Fayette, New York, 1830, a Christian or a criminal?"

Well, just as I expected he crawled and covered.

A few weeks later, the Y. M. C. A. authorities, with the evident approval if not direction of the Ministerial Alliance of the City of Des Moines, imported the man and his mud to besmear our campaign then running at Des Moines.

In order to prevent the presence of our representatives at his lecture, myself in particular—being busy every night, his lecture was given only a few hours' notice. But it seems on occasions of this kind the Latter Day Saints are all eyes, and it was only a little while until the phone calls started coming in, "Did you see the announcement of the Mormon exposure?"

Our meeting was canceled for the occasion, and everybody wended their way to the Y. M. C. A. auditorium.

It was a packed house, and everyone on the tiptoe of expectancy.

As for the lecture, it was the most abusive of anything I have ever listened to. It was a tirade against Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, and the "seventeen slivers of Mormonism" as he was pleased to term the several factions that originated upon the death of the Martyrs in 1844.

"The Brighamite Mormons and the unregenerated, Reorganized Mormons of Lamoni are the two big liars of Mormonism, and the latter are the most cheerful liars of the two," said the gentleman.

We were accused of being fools and fanatics, renegades, and apostates; that we would "steal milk, sheep, cows, and anything we could get our hands on." To which we felt like instantly retorting, "My God, what hands!"

As for the attack on Smith, it was too bestial for print. But when he came to accusing our "missionaries of going around hunting up wives and daughters for immoral purposes," I instantly arose, politely inviting him to repeat his statement. At this the gentleman became enraged, ordering me to sit down. To which I again challenged him to repeat his statement. At this, the minister of Christ (?) came over to my seat, for I had not moved out of my place, and grabbed me by the throat. Being the president of the International Association of Licensed Detectives, he probably thought he possessed plenary powers to make an arrest, hence may have been trying to provoke some retaliation on my part. But there was none coming. For once in my life my religion and my profession as a representative of the greatest institution on earth was a distinct inconvenience.

Well, I recovered from that malevolent "laying on of hands" sufficiently at least to say something at the close of his remarks. In a short speech of some ten minutes, to which he objected, threatening my arrest, I managed to show up the cowardice of my opponent to the extent at least of eliciting several rounds of stampeding applause, something my antagonist never received in all of his two-hour harangue.

I challenged him no less than three times to take the platform and meet the issue in a public investigation, when I might have opportunity to defend myself and the cause I represented. Indeed I went so far as publicly to offer him forty-five minutes to my thirty, and pay all expenses. But, no, sir, you couldn't drag him out. The only response my short speech elicited was, "Who are you anyway?" to which I replied, "Daniel Macgregor, the man who accepted your recent challenge which you dare not make good."

The next day several of the dailies printed an account of the affair, decidedly in our favor. In addition, the branch authorities published in all four dailies a challenge to the police pastor to meet the issues in public debate. No response from the gentleman has been received to date.

A resolution was then passed unanimously by the Des Moines Branch petitioning the Y. M. C. A. to grant us the use of their auditorium for purposes of reply. But upon presentation of our petition, we were turned down on the grounds that we believed in the gift of prophecy and recognized Joseph Smith as a prophet.

Another meeting was held, and a resolution of protest was passed calling upon the local organization of the Y. M. C. A. to deliver itself from the grasp of bigoted directors more bent upon promoting their own sectarian narrowness than in promoting the good of humanity as a whole.

Following this we succeeded in getting into the press with a final salutation as follows:

Saints Reply to Attack of Wiard—Denounce Y. M. C. A.

Editor Capital: The meetings held in the Latter Day Saint church are still going on, Elder Macgregor officiating as speaker.

Saturday evening an indignation meeting was held, protesting against the unfair attitude of the local Y. M. C. A. officials, who, after importing Reverend Wiard to lecture on Mormonism, delivered himself of a slanderous attack on the faith, practice, and history of the body represented by the local Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A resolution was passed, requesting the Y. M. C. A. to grant the use of their auditorium for another lecture on the same subject, only to be delivered from another viewpoint, that held by the Latter Day Saints.

The resolution was presented in turn to Messrs. Carter, Scott, and Wallace, local officials of the Y. M. C. A., but each in turn passed the buck, as well as personally denying the use of the auditorium for purposes of reply.

Another indignation meeting was held, at which the following resolution was passed:

"Whereas, we, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in public meeting assembled, have asked in all courtesy and in justice to be permitted to use the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A., where a vicious lecture under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. was delivered by a certain imported public speaker by name of Reverend Wiard and, whereas, said lecture did grossly, wantonly, and maliciously misrepresent the history, faith, practice, and teachings of the said Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and its founder, Joseph Smith, and, whereas, we have been denied the use of said auditorium for a lecture in defense of the religious institution we represent because of our belief in the doctrine of prophecy and of prophets in these latter days, and because of the further fact that we regard Joseph Smith as a prophet of God:

"Therefore, be it resolved, that we, a congregation representing some 600 Latter Day Saints in the city of Des Moines, do here and now protest against the religious partisanship of an association pledged to nonsectarian principles, which in their recent unfair and unkind administration, violated the very principles of American democracy, repudiating the God-given right of free speech, lending itself to the unscrupulous attack upon the faith and belief of an innocent and God-fearing people.

"And be it further resolved, that we do here and now call upon the membership of the local body of the Y. M. C. A. to deliver itself from the bigoted administration of its officials, more set upon forcing their personal sectarian narrowness than in maintaining the elevated principles of that world renowned and hitherto honorable institution, the Y. M. C. A."

The Latter Day Saints did not begin this quarrel, but having been attacked, they propose to make every legitimate effort toward an honorable and open defense.

Say He Hurried Away

Nor has the attack been confined to the halls of the Y. M. C. A. The same Reverend Wiard, who, although challenged repeatedly to meet the issue like a man, delivered himself of another vitriolic attack in the United Brethren church Sunday evening, hurried away next morning to escape the uncomfortable comment his cowardly course had created.

The Latter Day Saints do not care how much, or how heavy, the onslaught may be that is directed against them, but they do ask in common justice and human decency that the gentlemen, whether Y. M. C. A. officials, or Reverend Wiard, shall either make good their unmanly and wanton attacks by meeting a representative of the Latter Day Saints in public discussion, or else withdraw, retract, and apologize for their unwholesome and unchristian utterance. Will they do it?

Reverend Wiard says he will return and debate whenever the ministerial alliance bids him come. Yes, once again he feels safe in passing the buck. He knows as well as does everyone else that the ministerial alliance would never consent to one of their kind entering the arena of discussion, fearing that his stock in trade, which consists of vituperation and scandal, would get irreparably muddled up.

Yours for a square deal,

(Signed) DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Missionary Christensen Leaves Islands

[A bouquet in hand is worth several on one's casket. And who is more worthy to enjoy a brotherly tribute of praise than our faithful foreign missionaries? Hence the Presidency is constrained to pass the following on for publication.]

PAPEETE, TAHITI, December 15, 1920.

The First Presidency: As Brother A. H. Christensen and family are returning to the States on this steamer I feel like writing to you a few lines of appreciation for the several years of service they have given this mission.

While I have not yet called at all the islands where they have labored, I have been to a number of them and as the eager inquiries were made concerning Alavina and Ema, as the natives call them, and the kind words were spoken of the good work they had done I rejoiced to see the esteem in which they were held. They refer to Brother Christensen as being a diligent servant of the Lord.

I believe it fair to mention that the success of Brother Christensen has been made possible by the faithful support of his good companion who has unhesitatingly followed him to the various islands subjecting herself and child many times to hardships when at times it was necessary to travel on small boats, but I dare say no one has ever heard a word of complaint uttered by Sister Emma. While in the last year additional cares at home have made it advisable for her to reside in Papeete while her husband was away to the Tuamotus discharging his duties as a seventy her work did not stop, and I well remember one instance out of many similar ones where she sat for five hours interpreting for me as I was unraveling some native difficulties.

When the new missionaries arrived Sister Emma was chosen teacher of the class in Tahitian and nothing speaks better for her work than the way they are taking hold of the language and I have heard them unite in saying, "O Emma! if you could only stay a while longer."

The fruits of earnest labor will remain as landmarks of two who have striven to perform their duties faithfully.

Yours sincerely, ALBERT V. KARLSTROM.

Some Good Publicity in Ohio

The Publicity Department has been using newspaper space liberally in a number of periodicals, to offset the work of the National Reform Association.

Under separate cover we forward a marked copy of the Willoughby Republican, our nearest newsprint, containing a statement published by us to cover a large portion of this district, to offset the propaganda of the National Reform Association (of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania) whose representative, Mrs. Lulu Loveland Sheppard, has been lecturing around this vicinity on the "Mormon menace."

We believe it is worth while "going right in" after they have started an interest and stirred up the people somewhat. Elders A. E. Stone and John Lewis attended the meetings to get a fair statement from the lecturer.

In the past we have taken advantage of their publicity with some success. This effort placed the facts on our side before 24,000 subscribers of the twelve papers, whose headings are inclosed with the original advertisement, which was identical (size and position) in all.

Faithfully, E. A. WEBBE.

KIRTLAND, OHIO.

Editorial Note

We understand that in this effort the general publicity department at Independence cooperated in furnishing the material for the advertisements, etc. This is as it should be. The local people know the local aspects best, and can use to advantage the expert assistance available from our publicity department. This is the sort of cooperation we have long needed. Some little situations require but little attention, but again a movement of national scope might require nation-wide propaganda to counteract it.

The advertisement used in this campaign ran clear across the page, was eight inches deep, and used at the bottom of the inside back page. The main heading was in half-inch type and read: "Anti-Mormon Menaces!!" The subheading read: "Some Facts About the Latter Day Saints Which Anti-Mormon Lecturers Sidestep. WHY?" Then with suitable introduction, responsible authorities are quoted to show the character and reputation of the early church and the Reorganization.

Baptized Six as Result of a Dream

As I wrote you some time ago I held a successful series of meetings at Sandpoint, Idaho, baptizing sixteen. I came home for the holidays a week before Christmas. The day after I arrived home I left as the result of a dream in which I saw several more ready for baptism in Sandpoint.

Upon arrival there I went directly to those who were ready and made arrangements for the service of baptism, which was held at seven o'clock last Wednesday night. Six were baptized.

I came home rejoicing and left the new members rejoicing as well as their new brothers and sisters in the faith. Christmas was brighter for having gone. It is good to serve a God who reveals his mind and will to us; who leads his servants; and who is interested enough to take a definite part in our labors.

The Work in Indiana

Returning to my appointed field of labor after a short visit to my Holden home, I called at Knox, Indiana, where there has been a branch for years presided over by Brother J. B. Prettyman. Now he is aged and becoming more feeble with the passing of the months, so that he cannot be as active as in former years; also, so many of the members have moved away and the few who remain being left without an active leader, there are but very few meetings held, and these usually only when a conference appointee visits them.

The next place visited was the Hibbard Branch. Only a few members remain in close proximity to the meeting place, but the few are holding on and nobly endeavoring to keep the work going. While there I visited Monterey and Ora. We have a very nice brick chapel at the latter place, built by a few of our brethren and friends; here we held a few meetings.

Came to the Clear Lake Branch and vicinity in time to spend the holidays with them. This is one of the old-time branches, and continues to be one among the active branches of the district. Here we have one high priest, two elders, three priests, two teachers, and one deacon, and I believe that taking them as a whole they are about as active a combination of the local priesthood as any we have in the district.

I go to Coldwater for a few days, and then expect to return to Clear Lake to assist them in some matters the latter part of the week. After this we will return to Coldwater for a time, and then proceed to Battle Creek.

We learn that our district secretary, Brother Clark Buckley, has been very sick. At last report he was convalescing. We pray for his complete recovery. At Clear Lake Sister Baker continues but is still very ill and helpless.

The outlook for the work is fairly good. There is a great deal more work in prospect than the one lone missionary remaining and the one local minister can perform. We hope the branch locals will do all in their power to respond to the demands and opportunity for work. In some localities factories have shut down, throwing some of our brethren out of employment; it remains to be seen whether industries will revive with the coming weeks of the year. Let us each do what we can. God requires only our "reasonable service." That means with all our powers and talents.

Yours in gospel work, H. E. MOLER.

Eastern Iowa District Active

I do not ask for space in your valuable paper very often, but I hope I may be indulged with these few words: assuring you that we appreciate the splendid way in which the HERALD comes to us, freighted with so many golden thoughts and cheering news from the various fields of activity.

Eastern Iowa District is active, and I can see a general spiritual uplift among the Saints. I also sense the efforts of the Satanic power to stay this upward trend, and it is requiring our utmost care lest we be not overcome by this seductive influence coming to us from so many and varied sources. And I find that one of Satan's most potent factors in tearing down and destroying the usefulness of the Saints is to sow the seeds of discord and thus destroy confidence and unity among the Saints. May God help us to sense this seductive influence and not allow it to destroy our faith and confidence in our brethren, though their methods of operation may differ from ours. (This does not refer to methods that are out of harmony with law.)

On December 29, the writer was called to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Beals, he united in marriage Sister Cora E. Weir, of Lamoni, Iowa, and George H. Thomas, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Sister Weir will be remembered by many of the Saints of Eastern Iowa

District as one of its faithful workers and also her many friends of Lamoni will be glad to know that the happy couple will make their future home in Lamoni.

We are leaving in the rear another year, with its sorrows, joys, and pleasures, and are still facing the stern realities of life. Many golden lessons have been learned during the past year, and we are or ought to be better prepared for the work that lies before us.

In the history of the past year will be found many experiences in the work with our Lord that will increase our faith in the ultimate triumph of this "marvelous work and a wonder." Yes, it is indeed a marvelous and wonderful work, and not many years hence we will realize this as we do not now, and we will wonder at its stupendous accomplishments. I tremble now as I look at the wonderful advance it is making. And when I stop and ask myself the question, How many are keeping pace with this onward progress? I surely tremble at the work that lies before us.

And I also ask myself the question, Am I doing all in my power to prepare for this upward and onward movement which is so essential to the accomplishments of the kingdom of God, and is so apparent in every department of God's great work?

Yes, I tremble at the rapidity with which we are moving. It is the forced and rapid march that tries the metal of an army, and I am afraid many "stragglers" will be left by the wayside. How well will the "rear guard" be equipped to bring them in?

The "vanguard" is surely setting the pace. Will we follow? Ever hoping to endure, I am yours in gospel bonds,
DAVENPORT, IOWA. AMOS BERVE.

The L. D. S. Sales Association

A Statement

The L. D. S. Sales Association was organized some few years ago during one of the General Conferences by several of the brethren interested in the salesmanship end of business life. During the recent General Conference of 1920, held at Independence, Missouri, a reorganization of the association and its affairs was effected so as to bring the association into position where it might do the work which its sponsors and members felt it imperative to accomplish.

As a result, the work and possibilities of the association were broadened so as to make eligible for membership all members of the church who are engaged in business life. Not only in selling, but in manufacturing lines and professional lines, and outlining a broader and more comprehensive program, which it left for the newly elected officers to plan and provide for. The officers are now able, after considerable planning, to report on the new program for the Sales Association, making this association an effective and live organization devoted primarily to serving the interests of the church by serving the interests of its members.

It is our desire that this program be given the widest publicity and its outline is as follows:

1. The establishment at every branch of the church of a local of the association.
2. Each local to be made up of a chairman, a vice chairman, a secretary, and the eligible membership.
3. The holding of meetings of each local once a month, at which time a definite program is to be rendered. This program to be outlined in the HERALD at least four weeks ahead of time. The program to include matters that are of interest in the business world.
4. The establishment, as soon as feasible, of a monthly paper to be named after the name of the Association, "The LeaDerS."
5. The establishment of an exchange or clearing house to enable the members in the same line of business to get in touch with one another, in order to pass along information of value in these respective lines.

Note: The exchange of employment is at present under the jurisdiction of the Presiding Bishopric and it is thought advisable that it shall so remain for the present.

6. The establishment at Graceland College of scholarships and prizes in the business courses.

7. The convening at the next and succeeding General Conferences of a business congress program which necessarily cannot be worked out until the organization has been perfected.

The most necessary work is to perfect our organization, and circular letters are being mailed to branch presidents containing application blanks for membership, together with other information, but it should be kept in mind that it is not necessary to file an application on these blanks, should you fail to receive one. The application will be accepted, if it contains the name, address, age, business, whether in the priesthood or not, and accompanied by the annual dues of one dollar.

We have taken this opportunity of formally presenting the situation to the membership in this statement. We will be in position to submit further details in subsequent statements just as soon as the organization has been placed in working order, but it is the goal of the officers that it may be possible to start the meetings in February, and if this is to be accomplished it means that the present members of the association must get to work promptly and bring in new members, to enable us to accomplish the object we have in mind.

Our goal for 1921 is two thousand members. How many will you bring in? All applications as well as money orders or checks should be made out to Brother William Murray until further advices. If preferred, they may be sent to the Presiding Bishopric and will be forwarded.

There Must Be Another "D. McGregor"

LOGAN, IOWA, December 26, 1920.

To Whom It May Concern: In answer to the inquiries coming to hand as to my authorship of the "D. McGregor" letter in the publication as edited by Mr. John Zahnd would say that I am in no shape or manner responsible for it. Some other "D. McGregor" than the writer of this communication is the author of it.

Very sincerely,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

The foregoing letter is printed at the request of Elder Daniel Macgregor. It refers to a letter appearing in the National Exchanger for December, 1920, which was very warm in its eulogy of literature distributed by Mr. John Zahnd. Just what may have been the intention of the editor of the National Exchanger, of course, we do not know. But several of the Saints drew the conclusion that the letter was from the pen of Elder Daniel Macgregor as it bore the signature, "D. McGregor." They seem to feel that there is but one D. Macgregor on the map. It is only fair to him that this letter of explanation be published.—EDITORS.

SOUTH OMAHA, NEBRASKA, January 4, 1921.

Editors Herald: We are still on the map, and working hard besides. Our little branch has increased in spirituality as well as numerically. It now numbers over eighty members. Meetings are held in Amberst Hall, on Twenty-fourth and Vinton Streets. We look forward to a new church in the future.

We find it hard at times to meet all of our branch expenses, but the mild weather has helped us considerably, as our coal bill is smaller than it otherwise would be.

The unemployment situation has hit quite a number of our Saints here, but we hope and trust that in the near future everything will turn out for the best. The city found work for about two hundred men, but according to the papers of to-day there are still about ten thousand people out of work. The writer has so far been one of the fortunate ones who have steady work.

Crime is increasing in Omaha by leaps and bounds. In 1919 there were over 500 crimes committed; in 1920 there were over 700 crimes. Part of the increase is due to unemployment, and part is caused by the "movie" theater. Pictures are shown nowadays that suggest robbery and immorality. So bad have things become that it is dangerous to ride on street cars at a very late hour of the day. Street car conductors are allowed to carry revolvers. Thirty-eight were granted permits to-day, at the request of the street car company. Others will be given permits soon.

Your loving brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD DORSETT.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, December 29, 1920.

Editors Herald: Prior to our district conference late in October, Brother G. T. Griffiths of the Twelve spent a day or two here, speaking for us at the church one evening in fatherly council that should promote the spiritual life of the branch.

A good representation from Burlington attended the conference at Nauvoo, which historical event (the first in that place since early days), has been reported from there.

The Women's Department held a bazaar on November 18 to 20, from which they estimate a total of $250 cleared, the amount being for the benefit of the local building fund.

A Thanksgiving prayer and social service was held at the church Thursday morning, the Wednesday evening service having been postponed. A spiritual and enjoyable time is reported.

A tract campaign was conducted for two weeks under the direction of the local publicity agent, Brother J. F. MacIntire, closing with a week's series of meetings beginning November 21, our pastor, Brother D. J. Williams, being the speaker.

The Christmas program was rendered by the Sunday school Sunday evening December 26, doing justice to the committee's work.

The men's organized class has announced a New Year watch party and social for the benefit of a fund recently started for a moving picture machine.

Local elections have resulted in the sustaining of Brother E. R. Williams in charge of the Sunday school, and Brother H. F. Broman superintendent of Religio Department.

CORRESPONDENT.

BLAIRMORE, ALBERTA.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is the only Latter Day Saint visitor that comes to us away out here in Crows Nest Pass in southern Alberta. We came here from Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario, in the Owen Sound District. When our paper comes we turn to the letter department to see if there are any letters from home or from those with whom we are acquainted. We miss the Saints and hope we may at least meet them when we move to Zion some day.

I would like to know if there are any Saints in the Crows Nest Pass town, as I would like to start the gospel ball rolling in this part of the country. I have permission from the district and look forward with pleasure to bringing the sound of the gospel to some honest soul.

The Utah people have a following at Lethbridge, not far from here. I have met some of them at Calgary. I also met our own good people at that place and had the pleasure of hearing Brother Bullard. It was a treat to meet with the Saints and feel the presence of the same Spirit we have enjoyed in the past.

We appreciate hearing from the Saints of our former home and wish them and all the HERALD readers the rich blessings of the gospel. Remember the scattered Saints in your prayers.

MACK BROWN.

The books will be held open until February 28. It will save duplication of handling and facilitate the reporting if the offerings from Sunday schools and individuals are sent direct to the undersigned.

The late General Conference unanimously approved the recommendation that the 1920 Christmas offering be used for the purchase of land. This is a most noteworthy undertaking in connection with the Zion program of the church, and every Sunday school and individual member will find joy and satisfaction in the fact that they have rendered their contributions thereto.

Pastoral Notices

To the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Dear Saints: The old year, with its opportunities, and with record made by us, is past and completed. We now enter upon the new year; its prospects and privileges are before us. Let us, as a district, as branches, and as members strive to make a record for the year that will not shame us. To do this, first of all let us be very humble and prayerful. Let all who hold the priesthood be especially prayerful and meditative. Take a little time each day, aside from our temporal tasks, for reading and consideration of the Word of God.

We would like the priesthood of each branch to make special efforts to exhort and encourage the establishment of the family prayer circle in each home. Let our slogan be, "Every Latter Day Saint home in the district, a house of prayer," and may God grant that it be realized. The work we are engaged in, the conditions we have to encounter, and above all else, our God demands this.

Our General Conference force of appointees are very few indeed, only Brother F. F. Wipper, missionary, and the writer, local. There is more than we can do. If the branch locals will make a special effort to occupy in their callings, it will help the work along. If anyone knows of new openings available, communicate with F. F. Wipper, Box 147, Galien, Michigan. If special efforts are desired in the branches this should be taken up by the presidents of branches, with the undersigned.

In view of the provision made by the Department of Statistics for the transfer of nonresident members of branches to a NR record, we request all members who are too far removed from branches to attend the services, or be visited by officers of the branch, to send in their names and addresses to the district secretary, Clark E. Buckley, 726 West Main Street, Battle Creek, Michigan. These then will be looked after by the officers of the district.

Your servant in the Redeemer's cause,
HIBBARD, INDIANA. H. E. MOLER, District President.

Correspondence Courses

The Extension Department of Graceland is offering four courses which should be of great interest and value to persons desiring to serve more efficiently. They are: psychology, public speaking, English grammar, and religious education.

The latter course will appeal to all who are interested in solving the problems of "how the Book of Mormon may be used more effectively as an instrument for the salvation of the race." It aims to give a comprehensive knowledge of the Book of Mormon from two important standpoints:

- First, Is the Book of Mormon necessary?
- Second, How do I know the Book of Mormon is true?

Now during the winter months is the time for home study. Enrollments are received in these courses at any time. For full information and enrollment blanks, write Correspondence Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

BLAIR.—Sarah E. Lents Blair was born December 14, 1872, Fontanelle, Iowa. Baptized March 14, 1894. Married E. D. Blair, December 22, 1890. To this union were born 6 children, 4 sons and 2 daughters, all of whom remain with the father to mourn. Departed this life December 21, 1920, in Fontanelle, Iowa. Funeral in Congregational church, the Reverend Thomas, the pastor, in charge, sermon by Joshua Carlile.

ROBINSON.—John Robinson, of Greenville, Pennsylvania, died at the home of Brother Matthew Taylor, at Independence, Missouri, December 26, 1920. Was born August 6, 1864, at Staffordshire, England. Came to America when 8 years of age. Married Elizabeth Green, of Lucas, Iowa. Baptized in 1916. Sermon by J. A. Tanner at the Stone Church, Independence. Interment at Mound Grove Cemetery.

DYER.—Ester Dyer was born in Chobin, Kent, England, June 12, 1875. Died December 3, 1920, at Ribstone, Alberta. Baptized June 23, 1912. She loved the gospel and never lost an opportunity for doing good. A noble Saint, a faithful wife, and kind mother. Leaves to mourn, husband, 3 children, and many friends. A large attendance at the funeral. Sermon by J. R. Beckley. Interment in Ribstone Cemetery.

STILLWAGON.—Iantha Brown was born in Amherst, Nova Scotia, April 4, 1840. Married Thomas Stillwagon in 1863. Has lived in New York, California, British Columbia, and Independence, dying at the Holden Home for aged, December 29, 1920. She was greatly interested in the church work and contributed many articles to the church periodicals up till the past few months. Leaves one son, Wesley, and two grandchildren. Funeral service at Holden, sermon by D. J. Krahl, and interment in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, where a brief burial service was held in charge of Joseph Arber.

FARBER.—On January 3, 1921, Florence Ethel Farber, daughter of Brother J. A. Farber and Sister Mary Farber, died at Sedalia, Missouri, of diphtheria. Born January 22, 1904, and baptized May 9, 1920. Will be greatly missed, but she has just gone on before and will be waiting for loved ones to follow later. Funeral service at Independence, Missouri, in charge of C. L. House and Edward Rannie. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SMITH.—Sister Kate E. Smith was born in Boston, Massachusetts, May 20, 1847. In her young womanhood married William Blood, and their home was in Providence, Rhode Island, where they became members of the church May 17, 1874, under the administration of Charles N. Brown. For many years she was a central figure in church work there, and her name became a household word because of her untiring devotion to its interests, especially among the young people in the Sunday school work. Her home was hospitality itself, was always open to the missionaries, and no effort was ever spared in her anxiety to make them feel the welcome her heart extended. After her companion was removed by death, and a few years of widowhood, on January 14, 1900, she became the wife of John Smith, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, with whom she later moved, at the call of the church, to Lamoni, Iowa, where her activities continued. In his duties as business manager of the Herald Office, and later as president of the Lamoni Stake, her husband found in her an unobtrusive, but intelligent and devoted supporter, for which, within her sphere as a wife, she was splendidly competent. In fact, everybody found a friend in "Aunt Kate," as she was familiarly called. Few, if any, will be mourned in their departure more than she within the circle in which she moved. Funeral services, at her request, were held at Lamoni, November 7, with her almost lifelong friend, F. M. Sheehy, as the speaker, after which her remains were taken to Providence, Rhode Island, accompanied by her husband and F. M. Sheehy and Joseph Luff, and on Sunday, November 14, the latter preached there to an audience gathered from many of the surrounding cities to pay tribute to the memory of one who throughout her church life had lived and served in a way that endeared her to all who were blessed with her acquaintance. Like her aged and devoted husband, she lived not only in the church, but for the church, and the love and sympathy of all therein who knew them are his in his bereavement.

Have You Secured Your Copy of the Temple Builders Manual?

The Temple Builders Manual is a most attractive little booklet of 68 pages, packed full of helpful suggestions and plans, and reflecting in every line the spirit of youth and the idealism of our young women. Every young woman and girl of Temple Builder age in the church should have a copy of this manual, in order that she may understand and appreciate the high ideals which have been placed for her through this splendid bureau. If you have not yet gotten a copy, send in at once.

ARE YOU A BUSINESS MAN?

If you are an L. D. S. business man, you should join the

L. D. S. Sales Association

Its program is as follows:

1. The establishment at every branch of the church of a local of the association.
 2. Each local to be made up of a chairman, a vice chairman, a secretary, and the eligible membership.
 3. The holding of meetings of each local once a month, at which time a definite program is to be rendered. This program to be outlined in the Herald at least four weeks ahead of time. The program to include matters that are of interest in the business world.
 4. The establishment, as soon as feasible, of a monthly paper to be named after the name of the association, "The LeaderS."
 5. The establishment of an exchange or clearing house to enable the members in the same line of business to get in touch with one another, in order to pass along information of value in these respective lines.
- Note: The exchange of employment is at present under the jurisdiction of the Presiding Bishopric and it is thought advisable that it shall so remain for the present.
6. The establishment at Graceland College of scholarships and prizes in the business courses.
 7. The convening at the next and succeeding General Conferences of a business congress, program for which cannot necessarily be worked out until the organization has been perfected.

The 1921 goal is two thousand members.

Any church business man eligible.

WE CAN SING

Our Religion Into the Hearts of Men

In the great war our soldiers sang their way to victory quite as much as they fought their way. There is an irresistible power in the human voice when lifted in song.

In the tremendous missionary work lying just ahead of the church, music can play a great part. It can furnish the magic key to unlock stubborn, prejudiced, or indifferent hearts, and it can make the human soul responsive to the Master's call.

But music, like every other gift, must be cultivated if it be truly effective. Our people must become trained, not only as individuals but as groups, as congregations, as districts. The direction of that training falls to the charge of the music department of the church. Already this department has thoroughly organized for the task and is at work.

Be ready to respond to the call of this department. Spare no effort in qualifying for the great work. Whether branch official or only member, whether musician or not, see to it that your people are making preparation for the coming day.

Ambassadors of God

There is probably no other church that has urged as strenuously as we have, and has evaluated so fully the idea that the preacher is the ambassador of God. He is the man appointed by God—not chosen by himself, nor by his brethren. "You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you." "No man taketh this honor on himself, save he who is called of God as was Aaron." Aaron was called through Moses, ordained, and appointed to his important work.

No man has the right, and no collection of men have the right to appoint a man as an ambassador for another people, let alone of the kingdom of heaven. Only he who rules on high can possibly have that authority.

For one to go forth as such an ambassador, he must of necessity not only be appointed by God, but also possess the spirit of revelation. He must be able to speak not as the Scribes and Pharisees, but as one having authority from God. He cannot successfully do this if he must rely upon a commission given him in the beginning, and he has no further direction for the remainder of his life and mission. Most emphatically he cannot do this acceptably if he takes a commission given to others hundreds of years ago, and attempts to act thereunder, however beautifully drawn, and wide as that commission may be. There are some excellent things which appear from time to time in other publications. We extract the following from the Christian Work for December 24, 1920. There are extracts from an article by its editor, Frederick Lynch. We have endeavored to select those parts which are the clearest on the subject of revelation. He is reviewing a book by Doctor S. Parkes Cadman, the title of which is, Ambassadors of God.

"The latest addition to the books on preaching is the lectures given by Doctor S. Parkes Cadman, originally at Bangor Seminary and afterwards at the Hartford and Drew Seminaries. It will rank as one of the most valuable contributions to the literature of preaching, for in its 350 pages it not only dwells with great insight upon all the problems of the preacher, but it brings before the reader the great preachers of every age, analyzing their secret of power with the skill of a trained psychologist. The book is reviewed on another page of the Christian Work, but we wished to say a few words here suggested by the title of the book and the one theme that runs through every lecture, namely, that fundamentally and primarily the preacher is the 'Ambassador of God' and the great preachers have invariably realized this. . . . Doctor Cadman rightly stresses the truth that the great preachers have always been those who sat in God's presence and then went forth to the people prefacing their preaching with a 'thus saith the Lord.'

"Doctor Cadman very rightly lays great stress upon the Bible as the source of the preacher's power. It is the fountain of life and truth because it leads one back to God, who is the source of life and truth. Revelation is a vital communication of something more than fact or hearsay; it is the impartation of God himself to the believer. To say a thing is true just because it is in the Bible is to belittle the great Book. The Bible is true because he who enters its portals always finds

God behind it and because it awakens the eternal in one's own bosom. Consequently the great preachers, as Doctor Cadman truly says, are those who are steeped in the Bible. It is the compendium of eternal things, and the great ones of the earth, even our greatest prophets, our Dantes, Shakespeares, Miltons, and Carlyles, found their inspiration there. . . .

"But revelation is not confined to the Bible. In every age there have been great seers who have talked with God. To be sure, generally they found their way to God through the Bible or the Christ they found there—but they themselves at last stood face to face with him, and the result is the great books of life, power, and the spirit—Dante, Bernard, Augustine, Milton, Browning, Tennyson, and many more. Others had insight into God's eternal purposes in the universe, and thought his thoughts after him—Pascal, Schleiermacher, Fichte, Plato, Kant, Carlyle, Wordsworth, Maurice, Bushnell, and many more. Others were gifted of God with great human sympathies and knew man in his eternal aspect and in all his heights and depths—knowledge almost as essential to the preacher as the knowledge of God—Shakespeare, Montaigne, Hawthorne, George Eliot, Beecher, and many more. Thus the continuous revelation of God goes on through prophet, seer, and poet. The preacher who knows the great books of life and power not only has a testing stone of his own religious experience, but has a vision of God enhanced and vivified by seeing what great things he has accomplished through the ages, what transcendent thoughts he has inspired, what golden mouths he has opened to sing his beauties, what kingly characters he has made.

The book is also reviewed by W. S. Winans, from which we extract the vital paragraphs:

"Doctor Cadman begins where all authority for preaching must begin, with the Word of God as its fountainhead. . . . But unless it is based upon, and derives its dynamic from, the Sacred Oracles, it will be as 'a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice and can play well on an instrument.'

"He justly emphasizes the valuable assets which Biblical scholarship has placed within the reach of the preacher of to-day. He does not trim his sails to the winds of a narrow verbal inspiration; he fills them, rather, with the wider conceptions and conclusions of modern thought, based on discovery and reasoning, which, through the presence of the Paraclete, make the Living God and the Divine Word the fountain of spiritual life and power. To the preacher the Scriptures are a mine of gold. It is his business to delve into them, to extract and refine the gold which in its finished product is to bear, under his hand, the image of the Incarnate Lord.

"Under the caption, 'Prophets and Teachers,' sturdy men of old, succeeded by the holy apostles, march in review. These are followed, in true prophet-apostolic succession, by the mighty preachers of the Christian era who, in successive centuries, stood forth as the leaders and exponents of the moral and spiritual thought of their times. With a just and worthy appreciation the line of descent is continued down to the pulpit leaders of twenty years ago. It is a chapter replete with discriminating estimates of these leaders."

There are some splendid things, both in this editorial and in the book review. There are some splendid things in the quotations given above. But a most careful reading tends to show no clear affirmation and knowledge of such a thing as divine authority for preaching. According to these reviews that authority is only to be gained from the Bible.

We can heartily agree with what is said concerning that wonderful book, concerning the law of God, therein set forth.

But there still remains a necessity for a revelation to the individual, aside from this written record. There must be first the divine call through one having authority. It must be followed by divine communication and personal experience, or one is not an ambassador.

While we are willing to concede a large degree of inspiration to the great poets and other writers referred to, and concede the inspiration received by thinking men, scientists, and investigators in every realm of thought, we are not prepared to concede that they are prophets in the full sense, as was Isaiah, Moses, or John the Baptist. Nor do they possess that sense of divine Sonship and of divine appointment of ambassadors for God.

These men and others have felt a power outside of themselves revealing truth. They have felt the power of inspiration, but they have not felt the divine outpouring of authority, nor that communion with God which fits a man to act as his ambassador.

Why We Do Not Keep the Law of the Church

Under the above heading, there appears a letter to the HERALD in this issue. It presents food for thought. We have known of many instances where people have been baptized into the church and have not heard of such a thing as tithing. We have known a sufficient number to be baptized to form a good sized branch, yet they had not even heard that there was such a thing as a bishop in the church, nor of the Sunday school, Religio, or Woman's Auxiliary. In some ways this would seem a matter for criticism. Yet it may be urged that the work of the seventy is not pastoral. Some men are able to convert and baptize, but are not able to instruct fully in the doctrine of the kingdom.

Frankly this practice would seem to controvert Doctrine and Covenants 17, to see that they are fully instructed, to expound all things concerning the Church of Christ to the understanding previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders, so that all things may be done in order. It would seem that before confirmation at least such instruction should take place. On the other hand, it is hardly possible that one should fully comprehend everything at once, even though it is open to our learning.

We have known of churches where tithing was not preached for many years. We have known of Bishop's agents who have not been known to preach a sermon on tithing in over ten years, even though frequently occupying the sacred desk.

Some think we are giving entirely too much space to the financial law. We have been giving it space out of proportion to other teachings of the gospel. But all of it comes back again to the instruction of the Master to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." This letter from our sister would rather strongly infer that some of our missionaries are not yet converted.

We recognize the need that is being more and more strongly felt for a school of the prophets, in which the ministry are to be instructed. Yet we must expect that with the liberality of the church we will continue to allow to men and women their individual opinions. The policy of the church has never been an ironclad creed to compel every man and woman to understand every passage exactly the same. It is rather a process of development.

Within the church, to assist that development, we have not only the pastor, but also visiting officers, who visit the home of every Saint, and should assist them in receiving instruction, to encourage home studying, the asking of questions, and should personally present what the sister suggests—that willingness to help.

As to the Sunday school, we are not inclined to agree that it should change its whole effort to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as that is not the whole teaching of the church. At present, under the direction of the Sunday school executive council, the editor in chief, and the consulting board, we are considering very seriously how we can improve our course of study, so as to see to it that every essential doctrine of the church is properly taught, and at the age that it should be taught, and with necessary repetition at the different ages.

To do this will require a teaching of the Bible, but it also will include instruction in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the Book of Mormon. This in addition to the adult classes in these subjects.

We have long been of the opinion that there is a need for more and better instruction in the church. Not only should the missionary be prepared to give more instruction concerning the church than some of them do, but the visiting officers should be better prepared, the pastor better prepared, and there should be also by the general officers more instruction given to the church. We cannot hope to suddenly present a program or a plan to the General Conference and have it at once adopted and carried into effect, when the necessary work of instruction has not first been done. It is for that reason that we are planning to print some further articles on the financial law, not that they present viewpoints with which we agree, or even that they present correctly the viewpoint of the church, but because they present so many excellent ideas and a right attitude to the problem, and because in doing so in their very earnestness they will promote thought, and we hope thoughtful consideration as well as discussion of their merits. They will at least keep the church informed that there are such questions before us as consecration, freewill offering, inheritance, stewardship, Zion, and an economic program.

We are not inclined to agree that the paying of tithing alone will put up all of our buildings and buy land. Consecrated spirit, and a full carrying out of the law of God will do so. We hope in the near future years to see our church publications much more earnestly and fully used as a means of instruction of the church by all of our general officers, and that through General Conference work, consultation in various councils, and through the school of the prophets, we will come more nearly to a unity and understanding on the basis of truth, not forcing any, for the church does not compel a man to be baptized; or to pay his tithing; but when he understands the right, he is glad to do that which the commandments of God direct.

An Old Reader of the Herald

The HERALD Editors have recently noted a renewal of subscription from Andrew Johnson of Magnolia, Iowa. Mr. Johnson was born on February 18, 1827, at Christianstadt, Sweden, and is in his ninety-fourth year. He states that he reads the HERALD regularly. How many other readers have we of equally advanced years?

From his autobiography in the Journal of History, volume 5, page 322, we learn that his early schooling was indeed meager, as his parents were poor; they lived in a log cabin of two rooms with sod floor in Sweden. His mother died when he was ten years old, and when he was sixteen he left home and became a blacksmith's apprentice. A few years later, in 1852, he heard the angel's message in Denmark, but was not baptized until 1857, after his return to Sweden.

A month later he was ordained an elder, and then received word through England that everyone was ordered to be rebaptized and acknowledge Brigham Young as a prophet. Going out as a missionary, he received much persecution in his homeland. When they met church members, they urged a rebaptism, which some permitted, others refused.

He continued to labor at his trade as blacksmith and to preach, interesting some of his relatives, for some eleven years. Finally, in June, 1868, he left his wife and four children to go to Utah alone, reaching America August 12. He left New York on the 15th, reached Chicago on the 19th, Council Bluffs on freight cars on the 21st. There he met some of his old friends, Magnus Fyrand, and A. Lundwall, at whose urgent solicitation he stopped off at Omaha, allowing his luggage to go on without him.

He secured work there and had his wife and children come over in the following year. He remained there, considering the various factions until September 17, 1871, when he heard President Joseph Smith preach. As a result he was baptized by John Chrestenson, October 24, and he was ordained an elder in the Reorganization in the spring of 1872. He was then given the voice of prophecy, and was made to rejoice in the work of the Lord. He writes us now that his heart is still rejoicing in the work of God, and the blessings which have followed him since that day when he united with the church of Jesus Christ after having heard our late President Joseph Smith preach. Since 1881 he has resided in Magnolia with his family and has prospered.

What Exercises May Be Held in Our Churches?

A reprint from the Saints' Herald of February 20, 1907.

A matter with which nearly every branch in the church has wrestled in one form or another is, What shall be allowed in the church building in the way of entertainments, etc.? and shall charges be made at the door? shall seats be reserved? and other concomitant questions. These questions arise because the church building, erected by the people for a place of worship and dedicated to the service of God, is believed to have around it an atmosphere of sanctity; and because of a fear, perhaps, that something foreign may be brought into it which may contaminate it, thereby lessening the degree of sanctity and in some way detracting from the worshipful exercises afterwards held in the church, there seems to be more or less natural disinclination upon the part of the devout worshipers to break in upon the routine of purely devotional exercises for which the building was primarily erected. After all, to a large extent the effectiveness of a worshipful service depends upon the condition of those entering into the services; and those who enter the building without due feelings of reverence for God and for the place dedicated to his services perhaps will fail to get the full measure of good in the services.

Be that as it may, the question has been a disturbing one in nearly every branch, and the branches have dealt with it in various ways, so that the rules vary from hard and fast ones to rules which are very lightly if at all prohibitive. In some branches no money is allowed to be charged at the door for any services held within the building; in others, no seats are permitted to be reserved even when entrance charge is made. In other places, no exercises are allowed which are not religious or educational. And to determine what are educational and what are not is where confusion begins.

What shall we do with the church bazaars, socials, lunches, dinners, etc., is a perplexing question, and in some places so far have the prohibitive measures been carried that even the church lawns are forbidden to those who desire to hold them.

The general officers of the church have been addressed many times on this question, in a variety of ways. What shall be permitted and what forbidden in the church buildings which have been dedicated to the service of God? And these officers have been censured by some for having failed to clearly and specifically define what shall be permitted and what shall not.

How far have the general officers of the church the right to say what the various congregations of the church shall and what they shall not allow in the way of exercises in the church buildings? After all, is it not a matter of development, and will not the matter reach different adjustments as the spiritual condition of the branches improves? Doubtless in the past entertainments have been permitted in some of our church buildings which were out of harmony with the services generally supposed to be held in houses or temples dedicated to the service of God. And it may be that in time to come we will say that we are now permitting unseemly things to enter the churches.

As a general rule we think it would be safe to permit only such exercises as in the consensus of opinion are above question. What come under the head of doubtful, hold somewhere else until more suitable buildings under church control are obtained. We might of course say that anything which is not worthy to be held in the house of the Lord is not worthy to be participated in by Saints; but that attitude would be too radical.

It is clear that the Lord wants not a lugubrious but a happy people. On the other hand, he does not want to see his people given to levity. To properly draw the line between happy exuberance and levity becomes one of our spiritual duties, and where we draw it to-day may not be where we will draw it when the added experiences of passing time have enhanced our spiritual development.

Exercises, entertainments, socials, dinners, which promote or where there is allowed to be promoted a spirit of light-mindedness, levity, undue familiarity, looseness of conduct towards one another, a disposition to lower saintly dignity of deportment, certainly should not be permitted within the church walls. In fact they should be discouraged anywhere. The tendency should always be towards dignity, circumspection of conduct towards one another, a careful regard for all proprieties; and exercises which thus tend to elevate are not inappropriate in our churches. It is perhaps a safe rule to permit within the church building only such exercises as are devotional, reverential, dignified, and religiously educational. Those which pander only to social instincts or are purely for the purpose of raising funds, however worthy the object of the fund being raised, with propriety might be excluded from the churches and be held in other buildings where the atmosphere was less inharmonious. Sociables, dinners, bazaars, all have their places, but surely there are places much more appropriate for holding them than the buildings which have been set apart for holy purposes, for worshipful and devotional exercises.

On the other hand it might be asked, What are our church buildings if they are not places where the instincts toward social intercourse shall in a manner be satisfied? What would the devotional exercises at our church buildings be without the association of friends and relatives with us in those exercises?

It is a perplexing question as to where we shall draw the line, for in places where other public buildings necessary for all public occasions are absent or scarce, we are sometimes compelled to use our churches for what we might not otherwise. Local conditions, material and spiritual, to a great extent must always determine, and for the general officers of the church to lay down hard and fast rules would be impracticable, unwise, and useless. It remains for each branch to say where the line shall be drawn, and to renew their efforts towards the solution of the question as often as it comes up, until they have reached a decision which best promotes the interest of the branch and gives the best satisfaction to those comprising the branch membership.

The Use of the Church Building

"Will you please state in the HERALD if in the past, or at the present time, socials, dinners, bazaars, or any such thing for the purpose of making money, have been held in the lower auditorium of the church at Lamoni or Independence, or should they be considered as sacred places, when prayer meeting or Sunday school is held in them as the upper or main part of the church?"

This is a question that is very frequently raised. So far as we have been able to ascertain there have been no gatherings in the lower auditorium of the church at Lamoni where admission was charged in any recent years. We are of the opinion that twenty years ago something of the kind was done. There have been a few social gatherings in the lower auditorium, using that word in the sense of receptions for the college and high school students. It has not been done this year, but has in past years, but there is no money-making connected therewith.

There have been silver offerings taken up in the upper auditorium at intervals. There have been on two or three occasions in the last ten years, collections taken for the Anti-Saloon League; also once a year there is the College Day collection, when subscription blanks are passed and taken up. Recently a silver offering was taken for the destitute children of Europe.

The upper auditorium has also been used the past two or three years for the community lyceum course. To this there has been some objection because admission is only by tickets. This is not an effort to make money, but merely to meet the necessary expenses, but an effort is made to see that it is as nearly as possible a community affair, distributing tickets for the capacity of the building. It happens to be the largest auditorium in town, and hence more people can be reached in that way.

As to Independence, they have had a dining hall erected back of the church, in which sometimes it is true, prayer services are held. We recall once inside of the past ten years their holding a bazaar there. It is used at times for social gatherings, special suppers, not money-making events, but social events, and such events have been limited to invited guests.

Occasionally even in recent years the church has held social gatherings in the lower auditorium—not for money-making, but as a place of assembly, meeting and getting acquainted, then proceeding to the dining hall for refreshments and speeches. It is safe to say that in the past ten and fifteen years, the lower auditorium of the churches at Independence and Lamoni have not been used for bazaars, socials, or dinners, for the purpose of making money.

As to the further question, if the church should ever be so used, we are reprinting in this issue an article by Frederick M. Smith, written several years ago, on the subject. This article has recently been reprinted in One.

There is nothing impossible to him who will try.—Alexander.

Subjects Being Discussed

State Institutions of Learning

The Iowa State Board of Education, in presenting its budget for the coming two years to the Iowa State Legislature, emphasizes the almost universal appeal to-day of the State institutions of higher learning. It states that over 63,000 boys and girls are in high school in Iowa. This means a demand for college facilities beyond the present ability of the State to supply. The increase in enrollment in the three State institutions of higher learning in two years is more than three times the total enrollment thirty years ago, with every prospect of still greater increase in the next two years. At the same time demands were made by farmers and merchants, bankers mechanics, and many others for extension service beyond anything before even dreamed of, while every community is asking for a short course, and also for study center work. These institutions are preparing now not only for the so-called learned professions and teaching, but are preparing young people for the practical affairs of life, prominent among which are agriculture, mechanic arts, homekeeping, nursing, medicine, law, dentistry, and many others. At the same time the public at large are looking more and more to the State institutions of learning for public service throughout the State.

Bishop McGuire Licensed as Lawyer in Missouri

Before he was called to the Bishopric, Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire was a counselor at law in the State of New York. Recently he has been licensed by the Supreme Court of Missouri to practice in that State. He does not expect to be engaged in the active practice of law, but his holding a license to practice in all the courts of the State will be a convenience to him in his work. In application, he was vouched for by several leading lawyers in Independence, not members of the church, including Judge Hall from the Circuit Court.

A Wave of Crime

The Outlook reports that the crime wave in this country continues. A few weeks ago the reports were giving Chicago a bad name, but within recent weeks New York City has suffered seriously because of the large increase in the number of crimes of violence. From the far West come similar reports, and in Santa Rosa, California, a hundred citizens organized under the plan of the vigilantes that lynched three gangsters. A return to this frontier method of keeping order is a confession of defeat for the governmental authorities. A serious proposition is being made in New York that such a committee be organized. This appears to be not so much with the peace as it is from interference of politicians.

The Presbyterian reports in the State of Pennsylvania within two months, that thirty-three buildings including thirteen schoolhouses, and five modern mines, of a value of four million dollars, have been destroyed by fire. It goes on to say that not within a thousand years has there been such a wave of destructiveness as now.

Last week a letter was printed in these columns describing serious conditions in Omaha.

For some years past the situation has been serious, as compared with European countries. There has been a great increase abroad, but there has also been a great increase here, as compared with England. This may well be kept in mind when there is a disposition to criticize conditions in Ireland. Still two or three wrongs do not make one right.

The Second Coming of Christ

By J. A. Bronson

This writer says we must properly evaluate the signs of the coming of Christ into primary and secondary, with the restoration of the gospel as one of the primary indications of the time for the return of the Savior.

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 27.

"And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 3.

"For if ye believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thessalonians 4: 14-18.

The second coming of Christ! I presume the most popular theme in the church-world to-day. And what a wonderful climax it would be to the closing scene of the sixth day of a thousand years each, which days are already upon us! And what a sabbath it would be were the next day of a thousand years, the seventh, to be that of the millennium inaugurated by the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the just, and the changing of those who shall not have passed through the natural death, as yet, to immortality!

It shall be my purpose in this effort to show not only that Christ is really to "appear" again here upon the earth and gather his saints, but also to present reasons for believing that that advent is not far distant.

False Christs to Come

We are led to wonder, so plain are the scriptures speaking relative to the time and manner that Christ shall come, that persons will allow themselves to follow false Christs. But the Lord said it would be so. It is so. "For many shall come in my name saying, I am He." (Luke 21: 8. Revised Version.) Also: "For there shall arise false Christs." (Matthew 24: 24.)

The False Christ of 1874

Among the "many" I shall refer personally to the impostor of 1874 as an example.

There lies before me the second volume of Studies in the Scriptures. It was written by the late Pastor Charles Taze Russell. On page 170 we find the following: "1874 A. D. was the exact date of the beginning of the 'Times of Restitution,' and hence of the Lord's return." On page 188 we find: "We have clear evidence of the fact that our Lord's second advent was due when the 'Times of Restitution' were to begin, viz, in October, A. D. 1874." On page 211: "The day of our Lord's second advent . . . we have already shown to be A. D. 1874." And also on page 234: "The harvest of this age began with the presence of our Lord . . . in 1874."

Yes, some one came to the world in the month of October, 1874, and claimed to be Christ. It was not Jesus Christ. Notice, when Jesus Christ comes, "the dead in Christ shall arise" and "we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them [the dead in Christ who shall be resurrected] to meet the Lord in the air." To my knowledge, that did not happen in October, 1874!

The Real Christ to Appear

The real Christ is to appear and we are to behold him. Not so with the Russellites' Christ. Read with me from the same volume and on page 189: "The fact that his presence is not known and generally recognized by the world, or even among Christians, is no argument against this truth." Page 237: "Our Lord is now present (a spirit being, and hence invisible)." Also page 239: "Our present, spiritual, invisible Lord."

Compare the claims of this false Christ with that which is to happen when Jesus comes.

"The fact that his presence is not known" by the world or among Christians, is no argument that he is not here and that the second advent is not a thing of the past. Well, let us see: "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."—Revelation 1: 7. But this false Christ could not cause "every eye to behold him"; it was a physical impossibility for him. Did you ever stop to think that this is one of the ways by which we may detect the impostor? Who else could so appear that every eye would be able to see? Now, that the false Christ of 1874 could not come so as to be seen by more than a very few, it argues that to more than his followers he will not appear. Yet a startlingly large number believe it.

Says this false Christ: I am now present, but spiritual, so invisible. Of course that is the only way out of it for him. But of the Christ, the true Christ, it is said: "And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time."—Hebrews 9: 28. Yes, "he shall appear." Also it is written: "And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."—Matthew 24: 30.

Now may we call to mind the message of the angels who stood by as the saints were watching the Christ ascend: "And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 10, 11.

"This same Jesus" whom they had watched ascend unto heaven, "shall come in like manner as ye have seen him go." "This same Jesus" shall "descend with a shout" and "every eye shall behold him." But no other could do this; so, another claiming to be Jesus, but who in reality was not this same Jesus, must appear in another manner.

What is true of the false Christ of 1874 should be a lesson to us all. With implicit faith in the Bible teachings rather than faith in "Keys to the Scriptures," "A helping hand," etc., we need not be deceived, but may know that none other than the "same Jesus" is the Christ.

Signs of His Coming

It is a common belief to-day that signs of the times point to the near advent of Christ's coming. Some have been so unwise as to set the date. That only brought to them disappointment and in many cases wrecked their faith. Jesus said: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."—Matthew 24: 36. And in latter-day revelation to us the Lord has said: "But the hour and the day no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven, nor shall they know until he comes."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 2.

As early as in Paul's time there were those who looked for the second advent of Christ. Paul corrected the Thessalonians on such a belief. (2 Thessalonians 2:1-8.) In the second century arose the Montanists who prophesied that the time was at hand. In the tenth century so much was it believed that Christ would then come that "public and private buildings were suffered to decay, and were even pulled down, from an opinion that they were no longer of any use, since the dissolution of all things was at hand." The Fifth Monarchy men of England in the seventeenth century also set the time, as have the Irvingites of England.

Swedenborg, Ann Lee, Joanna Southcott, William Miller, Mrs. White, Pastor Russell, and many others have had firm faith in the second coming of Christ but have overlooked the one great work which is to prepare his way. Of that I shall speak later.

Perhaps there have been none who have made greater mistakes in setting the date for the advent than William Miller and Mrs. White of the Seventh-day Adventists.

Miller set the date for 1843-4 and Mrs. White indorsed the work of Miller on that point as will be seen from Early Writings, page 74: "I have seen that the 1843 chart was directed by the hand of the Lord, and that it should not be altered; that the figures were as He wanted them; that His hand was over and hid a mistake in some of the figures, so that none could see it, until His hand was removed." Think of it. God helped them make a mistake!

Alexander Campbell was under the conviction that Christ would come in the year 1866, as will be seen from Life of Alexander Campbell, by Thomas W. Grafton, page 144: "He did not at any time presume to fix upon any definite date, but as he advanced in years he became possessed of a conviction that the year 1866 would, in some way, usher in that period."

While we do not wish to be understood to fix any date; we do wish to call attention to the work which is now being done, and the signs which tell us that His coming may be much nearer than some have thought.

We are not so much concerned as to just what date He will appear but very deeply concerned relative to our preparation to meet him when he does come.

As a Thief in the Night

We are often asked: Is it not true that the Lord will come as a "thief in the night"? and if so, why preach and declare that we may know near what time he will come and that we will be "waiting and watching"?

Yes, Christ is to come as a thief in the night, but to whom will he so appear? Let us read:

"But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness."—1 Thessalonians 5:1-5.

Knowledge will be had among the children of light of the near advent of their Lord and they will have prepared all things and be in readiness to receive him.

Jesus taught that we should know when the time would be near "even at the doors": "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh; so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors."

"What Shall Be the Sign of Thy Coming?"

Now to the signs. What were they? As was asked by the disciples of old: "Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world?"—Matthew 24:3.

There are both primary and secondary signs which I shall notice. And may it here be stated that the one great reason for persons having been misled in having looked for the Christ before the time of his coming has been that they have overlooked the primary signs and have seen but the secondary ones.

The secondary signs are incidental to the primary, as I shall try to show.

The first and most important of all signs which point to the hour of God's judgment, it seems to me is the reestablishing of the kingdom of God, the restoration of the gospel.

Following the long Dark Ages to which the prophets looked forward and of which we now read and study as a matter of history, the heavens were to open and the earth receive again the blessings from above. The church was to be established and the people prepared as the bride of Christ to receive him when he comes.

This Gospel of the Kingdom

"What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" asked the disciples. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come," answered Jesus.

"This gospel," not "another," said Paul, when he saw that there would be other gospels presented to the people. "There be some who would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:7, 8.

Now that "this gospel" and "not another" is to be preached in "all the world for a witness unto all nations," it would become necessary for a restoration of that gospel because of the false gospels which would cover the world in the stead of the truth, overcoming the church, disorganizing her forces, all of which caused God to withdraw his holy priesthood, or divine authority, from the earth and thereby give to the beast of Revelation 13:1-8 power to rule until such time as the Lord would restore his kingdom with the power of the priesthood from which the gospel must proceed.

In Revelation 12 we find the vision of John in which he saw the church (woman) go into the Dark Ages (wilderness) for a period of time which he called twelve hundred and sixty days. However long that time was to be, the inference is that at the close the woman would be brought out of the wilderness. In fact, we turn over a page of his book and read that the close of the long period of darkness would bring us to the "hour of God's judgment," at which time God would restore that which had been taken away—"the gospel of the kingdom."

Let us read it and remember that which was to happen as one of the primary signs of the "hour of God's judgment." Revelation 14:6, 7:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

Jesus said that one of the signs of the end of the world would be the preaching of "this" gospel to every nation. John saw that following the Dark Ages in the "hour of God's judgment" an angel would fly from heaven to earth with this gospel and that that which he would bring to earth would be the gospel which was to be preached to all the nations of the earth.

So far, then, we have two primary signs: This gospel must be preached to every nation for a witness. And in the hour of God's judgment an angel is to fly to earth with this gospel and restore it to man.

Now for another primary sign, Malachi 4: 5, 6:

"Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of that great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

No uncertain sign, this!

True, impostors have and will come, claiming to be this prophet. But one thing is sure, the true Elijah will come and to him we may look for a sign that "the day of the Lord is at hand."

A little study as to how this Elijah should come and what he would do protects us from the impostors. Who is he? In what manner will he come? What will he do?

The International Teachers' Handy Bible Encyclopedia and Concordance under subject "Elias" reads: "Elias, Greek form of 'Elijah.'"

And in Luke 1: 13-17 we read:

"But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zacharias: for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John. And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."

In the light of that scripture we can safely say that John the Baptist was he of whom it was said, "I will send you Elijah" (Greek of the New Testament, Elias) who should come in "the spirit and power of Elijah" (of the Old Testament) and who should "turn the hearts of the fathers to their children."

So, then, as it was before Christ's first advent so shall it be before his second, for Malachi 4: 5, 6 can be made to refer to no other time but the last advent, "The great and dreadful day of the Lord," in which John would come in the "spirit and power of Elias."

"What!" some one says, "was John the Baptist to come again? and was it he who was to come from heaven to earth to restore the priesthood? Quite unusual!" To be sure, it is quite unusual. It is to be one of the certain signs!

Some time after the death of John the Baptist he appeared with Moses on the mountain where Christ, Peter, James, and John were. When they had come down from the mountain the disciples asked him concerning John: "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" They had just seen him, not as mortal man, but a wholly immortal being. Notice the answer closely: "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall come [future tense] and restore all things." (Matthew 17: 9-11.)

To know that this Elias was John we need but to read Matthew 11: 7-14: "And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitude concerning John . . . this is Elias, which was for to come."

Now to be sure that this Elias should come just prior to the second coming of Christ, let us connect these statements relative to him with Malachi 3: 1-4: "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in: behold he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts."

Who was this messenger? "For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee." (Matthew 11: 10.) So said the Lord speaking of John the Baptist.

Yes, John did come and prepare the way for Christ when he came the first time, but, as the question may be raised, should this same John come to prepare both the ways for his two advents into the world?

Let us read the prophecy given by Zacharias concerning John's work as found in the first chapter of Luke, the seventy-sixth verse: "And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways."

Returning, now, to the third chapter of Malachi, the first four verses, after learning who this "messenger" was who should come before the Lord to prepare the way for his advent, we may be assured that this coming is the last and not the first.

The statements: "He shall suddenly come to his temple," "Who may abide the day of his coming?" "Who shall stand when he appeareth?" "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi," "They shall offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness," "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord," all prove that the coming referred to is his second, for none of these things happened when he came the first time but are all to happen when he comes the second.

When Jesus comes will it not be to gather his jewels? And may we not ask: What is it that makes us jewels in his sight? Paul answers the question we have in mind: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith." (Roman 1: 16, 17.)

In the "hour of his judgment" this gospel "shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come"; and it is to be restored to earth from heaven following the Dark Ages by the hands of an angel. Elijah is to come and prepare his way by turning the hearts of the people to that which will save their souls and make them pure and clean.

What greater signs could we look for than the setting up of God's kingdom in the given manner?

Had those who so earnestly looked for the second coming of Christ long ago looked for the setting up of his kingdom prior to his coming, and that by the direction of the messengers who were to restore it, they would not have been deceived.

There are other signs, primary signs, to which we might well go for evidence that we are living in "this generation," such as the restoration of Israel or the coming forth of Joseph's record. Space forbids, however, so we shall pass them by with the mentioning of them.

Now, as a result of the restoration of the kingdom in the "hour of God's judgment" there must certain things happen. These have been pointed to as signs of the second coming of Christ, while in fact they do not so much prove that as they do that the "light" of the kingdom has been restored. Evidences are strong that the avenues of divine revelation from heaven are opened to earth; the kingdom or government of God is upon earth.

Secondary Signs

Let us note some of these signs. For instance, Daniel 12: 4; "But, thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHAT IS HAPPENING IN RUSSIA?

Russia furnishes an interesting social and religious problem.

We have not made a habit of discussing conditions in the physical realm at any great length. As to the conditions in Russia, there is a great diversity of reports and of opinion. There are some who see nothing but evil in everything that is done. There is doubtless propaganda to bring about this conclusion. There are others who see in Russia the rising sun that will overwhelm the rest of the world. Some of our Socialist friends, though born and raised in America, think Russia the greatest place on earth. There exists on their behalf much propaganda.

Since some brief representation has occurred in our columns referring indirectly to Russia, within the past two or three years, by request we are publishing the following from the Presbyterian Record of June, 1920, copied from the Glad Tidings, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and republishing it as given there. We notice that this includes extracts from the statements of several men who have been in Russia within the past two or three years.

We are informed that these are the reports of impartial observers. Mr. Robins was in Russia as a representative of the Red Cross. Mr. Bullitt went as a special representative of the Peace Commission. We are also informed that these men are not Socialists, or in sympathy with that party. We quote the following entire from Glad Tidings:

Whatever its mistakes or crimes, one who knows anything of the fundamentals of the Russian revolution must recognize it as a desperate revolt against intolerable political and economic conditions, and an effort to establish a fairer balance of human relationships.

Happily, we are able to quote the first-hand observations of a number of men of unimpeachable integrity: Colonel Raymond Robins, head of the American Red Cross Commission in Russia; William C. Bullitt, chief of the Intelligence Bureau of the American Peace Commission, who was sent by book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

Many have written in elaborating upon this statement of Daniel's trying to prove that because of the wonderful inventions, the great schools, the knowledge and wisdom that men are gaining, and the means of transportation by which "many run to and fro" we are living in the time of the end. Now, to me, these things prove that that which claimed to be divine and the restoration of the gospel, might well be true. This wonderful light and knowledge and wisdom is a result of that gospel which is now upon the earth. And Christ will come when "his bride" (the church) "hath made herself ready." What are the signs of the kingdom by way of preparation interests me.

Persons have fully determined that Christ must come at once because there have been "wars and rumors of wars," because nations have fought against nations; because of earthquakes, famines, pestilences, fearful sights, and because unusual signs in the sun and the moon and the stars have been seen, because of the "sea and the waves roaring."

These things shall be in the last days; but since they have been in other days as well, can we know by them alone that the second coming of Christ is at hand?

No, we think not; but they may and do contribute to the the commission, last February, to study conditions in Russia; Captain W. W. Pettit, of the United States Army; Lincoln Steffens, noted magazine writer, who accompanied Mr. Bullitt; and Arthur Ransome, English literary man, author of a dozen books, who visited Russia last spring.

The reports of Bullitt, Pettit, and Steffens were held as confidential until published by the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Following is a brief survey of their observations, most of the quotations cited being from the Senate document mentioned above:

1. What Happened in Russia?

In March, 1917, the czar was overthrown by the moderate Socialists under Kerensky. The following November the extreme Socialists—Maximalists, or Bolsheviki, those who wanted to go the whole way at once—overthrew Kerensky, established the present soviet government, took over the big estates and divided them among the peasants and nationalized industry as far as possible.

Soon, counter-revolution broke out, the classes that had been overthrown naturally seeking to regain their lost power and prestige.

To suppress this counter-revolution martial law was employed, and about 5,000 persons, according to Mr. Bullitt (Captain Pettit says probably 3,200), were summarily executed. This was the so-called "red-terror." Doubtless there was, as alleged, a great deal of violence and disorder involved in these volcanic upheavals.

2. A Temporary Stage

In his report to the Peace Commission in March, 1919, Mr. Bullitt, then just back from Russia, said:

"The destructive phase of the revolution is over and all the energy of the government has been turned to constructive work. Good order has been established. The streets are as safe as those of Paris or New York. The terror has ceased."

Lincoln Steffens, under date of April 2, 1918, says, "Russia has reached a state of equilibrium. Constructive work has begun. We heard of no disorders. All internal opposition has practically ceased. The soviet form of government fits great sign: the setting up of God kingdom upon earth. They shall appear at such times and truly they cry out to us as though the very elements are aware of the fact that the gospel is going forth under the direction of God through his kingdom and that time is short for them.

"His bride hath made herself ready" (Revelation 19:7) is the great work that is to be accomplished before the marriage of the Lamb. What are the signs of its development? They will tell us how near the end is!

The bride is the church or the body and we are "members in particular." Are we anxious for the coming of our Lord? Then what are we doing to help prepare the bride? What am I doing to speed the time when "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" shall have heard "for a witness," for then shall the end come.

The great signs then are the warning of the world and the preparing of those who will be members of the body—the bride.

The Lord will not wait for me alone; there may be a body of saints within the body who will prepare and make the "bride of Christ" before I shall be ready! I have but time enough, be it one year or ten. May I, with you, help to speed the day when the "sign of the Son of Man will be seen in the heavens."

the people; they understand it; they find they can work it and they like it."

Captain Pettit says: "Petrograd is safer than Paris. . . . Most of the stories of atrocities, horrors, immorality, are manufactured in Viborg, Helsingfors, or Stockholm" (all outside of Russia).

Colonel Robins gives the same testimony, saying he felt as safe in the streets of Petrograd and Moscow as in those of New York and Chicago.

The soviet government, for more than two years, has persisted in the face of opposition from within and without. Obviously, no country in a state of anarchy could have survived six months under such conditions.

3. What Is the Soviet?

The local soviets, the units of government, are the groupings of the people by trades and pursuits, instead of by geographical areas, as with us.

Each soviet elects delegates to the next higher soviet, and so on up to the top—the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, the supreme legislative body.

4. What About Womanhood?

Bullitt says: "Family life has been unchanged, the canard in regard to the nationalization of women notwithstanding. . . . This lie is wildly fantastic. Respect for womanhood was never greater in Russia."

Captain Pettit adds: "That anyone could for a moment believe in the nationalization of women seems impossible to anybody in Petrograd."

Now note this: "Prostitutes have disappeared, the economic reasons for their career having ceased," says Bullitt.

Steffens says, "Prostitution has disappeared with its clientele. . . driven out of the 'no-work-no-food' law."

Captain Pettit testifies, "Most wonderful of all, the great crowd of prostitutes has disappeared. Foreigners who have been here for the last three months report the same. The policy of the present government has resulted, I am told, in eliminating this horrible outgrowth of modern civilization."

I was surprised, too, to find from Steffens's report that "Prohibition is universal and absolute, . . . ruthlessly enforced in every part of Russia."

5. As to Education

Bullitt says: "The achievements of the department of education have been very great. Thousands of new schools have been opened."

Ransome reports that there are now sixteen universities, as against six under the old regime, and that the attendance has increased greatly.

All education is free, and special efforts are made to get working men and women to attend.

The number of libraries, he says, has more than doubled. In Moscow, educational institutions, not including schools, have increased from 369 to 1,357.

All note with interest the fact that the poorest people, adults and children, are given access to the art galleries and the opera, are encouraged to attend, and are instructed in the beauties of art and music.

In school every child is given one good meal a day, of the best that is to be had. There is both humor and pathos in what Steffens says of this: "'Even the rich children,' they told us 'have as much as the poor children.'"

Summing up this subject, Mr. Bullitt says that the soviet government "seems to have done more for popular education in a year and a half than czarism did in fifty years."

6. As to Religion

Ransome writes: "Churches and chapels are open, church processions take place as before, and Moscow is still a city of church bells."

He points out that while the new government insists on complete separation of church and state, it particularly sets forth that "care should be taken in no way to hurt the feelings of the religious."

Captain Pettit says the soviet government has announced that it is not "hostile to any religion, but intends to remain neutral."

Bullitt says: "People go to the theater and church and out on the streets as much as in any city of the world."

The constitution decrees the separation of state and church, and accords to each citizen "full religious freedom and the right of religious or antireligious propaganda." It would appear, therefore, that missionaries may enter whenever they choose and carry on their work without molestation.

In the April Missionary Review of the World, there is an article on "Religious conditions in Russia," by Jerome Davis, recently for two and a half years in Y. M. C. A. work in Russia. He says the people "are thronging to religious services," and that "not only the heads of the Russian Church but the common priests everywhere are asking for our help."

"Along with the revolution in government says Mr. Davis, "the church has begun to branch out into different forms of service . . . and progressive priests were anxious to learn everything. In conclusion, he asks: "Do we want to play the part of the Pharisee? . . . Or shall we go into soviet Russia to bind up the wounds, pour on oil, and do what we can to relieve the suffering."

Lincoln Steffens thus condenses into a few sentences the essence of the revolution:

"They pulled down the Czar and his officers; they abolished the courts that had been used to oppress them; they closed shops, stopped business generally, and especially all competitive and speculative business, and they took over all the great industries, concessions, and natural resources.

They hold that it is not some particular evil, but the whole system of running business and railroad, shops, banks, and exchanges for speculation and profit that must be changed.

"This, they teach, is what causes poverty and riches, misery, corruption, vice, and war. The people, the workers, or their state must own and run these things for service. . . . It is this that has startled the world; not the atrocities of the revolution, but the revolution itself."

This is but a glimpse, a line here and there from a story interesting, tragic, dramatic almost beyond compare, involving more than a hundred million people and the most radical social experiment ever tried.

It is in no sense a defense of the revolution, either as to its methods, some of which certainly were indefensible, or as to its political and economic results, which are not yet sufficiently evident. What will be the ultimate outcome, no one can say.

AMERICA'S ATTITUDE

The question whether America is to choose Harding or Cox is far less important to the world than the attitude America is going to take towards world problems. The allies are waiting for her help in reconstruction and the framing of measures to keep the peace in the future. That the nation has been placed in its present position is a misfortune that may become a tragedy of infinite moment. But we believe permanent American isolation to be impossible, for reasons of self-interest as well as idealism. The period of isolation was closed for good and all when America entered the war, and whether it pleases her or not America must continue to interest herself in the affairs of the world she helped to save. The question is whether she will interest herself wisely or unwisely, quickly or slowly, half-heartedly or with energy and enthusiasm.—The Auckland Star (Australia), October 30, 1920.

ANCIENT WALL IN TENNESSEE

Scientists puzzled by hieroglyphics on stone fence being excavated. Have earmarks of Arabic and Hebrew.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9.—The origin of a solid wall 700 feet long and 20 to 30 feet high, the face of which is covered with hieroglyphics thus far new to Uncle Sam's savants, discovered twenty miles from Chattanooga, Tennessee, at the base of the Chilhowee Mountain, is puzzling officials of the Smithsonian Institution.

Frank Giddings, an attorney of Chattanooga, and others who are interested in discovery, have laid the facts before the institution with a request that they offer some explanation as to the origin of the wall. The officials can only say that the records and thousands of musty volumes which repose in the Smithsonian and allied institutions, contain no record that throws any light on the wall.

Many photographs have been submitted, a minute description of the site and the nature of the find have been laid before Doctor George P. Merrell, the geologist, and Doctor Walter Hough, the ethnologist and archæologist of the institute, and they have given them some study.

Wall About Thirty Feet High

The wall is three feet thick and built of three-ply stone. It has been uncovered to a depth of 22 feet and the base of the wall has not yet been reached. Indications are that the base of the wall is yet ten feet deeper. Investigators for educational institutions in the South think that it has been buried 4,000 years and that the inscriptions are of a religious or historical nature, written by the scribes of a race then at war and about to become extinct.

The photographs show that instead of the inscriptions being either perpendicular or parallel with the surface of the earth they are in an oblique line, at an angle of about 45 degrees. This adds to the mystery.

Throughout Tennessee archæologists have from time to time excavated stone images in the shape of human beings, dogs, kangaroos, and other animals, and oftentimes round plates have been found in Indian mounds. These are regarded as distinctly Tennessee products, and many of these have been found near the face of the wall as the excavators have dug down in search of the foundation. Also a large amount of pottery which resembles that manufactured by Cherokee Indians has been found. But nothing has yet been found which bears symbols resembling those on the face of the wall.

Not Cherokee Writing

The hieroglyphics have some semblance of being Arabic. They bear the earmarks of the Hebrew alphabet in some respects, while the letters R, U, X, E, H, K, of the English alphabet, all capitalized, with the figures 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8 abound in the lines of characters revealed.

W. E. Myer, an ethnologist with the Smithsonian Institution, has studied the photographs of the origin and early life of the Cherokee Indian in Tennessee and other Southern States.

He says the characters have no connection with early Indian life of this region, nor do the characters in any sense resemble the characters of the Indian alphabet that was given to the race by Sequoya, the Indian scholar whose statue has recently been placed in the statuary hall in the capitol by the State of Oklahoma.

The Smithsonian Institution is deeply interested in the discovery and in its research work will make an extended study of the wall. It is on the farm of J. L. Hooper twenty miles from Chattanooga and six miles from Cleveland, Tennessee.

EXPLORER DISCOVERS TRIBE WITHOUT LAWS

Indians in South America have ideal communistic system, he says.

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS, December 27.—The highest and most perfect type of the communistic system in the world—where men work in perfect harmony and never touch the property of others, where inhabitants of a whole village live in one large house, each family with its own compartment, where men are muscular and brave, where women are modest, and where the obscene is unknown—was described by Doctor A. Hamilton Rice, athlete, physician, and explorer, in a lecture at the Harvard Medical School. This "successful example of communistic living" was found by Doctor Rice among the Indians who inhabit the region between the Rio Negro and the Andes, in Colombia, South America, on his recent visit to that land.

On working days nobody wears clothes, but Doctor Rice observed extreme modesty wherever he went. In the large communal houses the boys and girls are kept separate, the boys living on one side and the girls on the other.

The men of this queer land live in the open and have nothing to do but to keep their families supplied with food by fishing and hunting. Rarely do they come in contact with white men.

"Not only do these Indians possess a high sense of honor, but they are free from most diseases that menace civilization," said Doctor Rice. "There is no cancer, tuberculosis, or appendicitis there. They are susceptible to eye diseases, however, and influenza takes terrible toll.

"I regard it as the highest and most perfect type of the communistic system. It would not work in a very complicated and highly developed community, but one could not imagine better results," he said.—The Detroit Daily Times, December 27, 1920.

If there is any dominant note in the Hibbert Journal this quarter, it is a persistent plea for more coherent teaching in the Protestant churches. The contrast between Roman Catholic efficiency and Protestant ineptitude reappears on several pages. There are interesting Pilgrim Father articles and a particularly bright essay on "Science and life" by the leading Pragmatist, Doctor Schiller. Those who are interested in Methodist union in England will do well to ponder the somber words of the Reverend A. R. Osborn on the present state of religion in Australia and the projected union of Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists. "The Protestant churches in Australia are slowly disintegrating. . . . Will the union of three lukewarm churches make one vigorous and efficient, united church?" Another subject that receives attention in several places is the idea of progress as criticised of late by Dean Inge and Professor Bury. The editors are to be congratulated on keeping up the high level of suggestiveness which the Hibbert Journal has attained.

PASTORAL

Duties of Branch Officers

By Elbert A. Smith

The concluding article of a series of four by one of the First Presidency.

IV. THE DEACON

From the Bible

In Philippians 1:1 Paul mentions the deacons who were in the church at Philippi. This, with other references, shows that they held an official position in the New Testament church.

In the third chapter of 1 Timothy some of the qualifications of a deacon are stated:

"Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. . . . Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. For they that have used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus."

From this it would appear that while the deacons need not be long-faced, gloomy hypochondriacs, they should be sober-minded and of firmly established character—not giddy, or light-minded, or clownish. They should not be greedy, for they are to carry the bag of the local church, and so should not be beset by greed, which might lead to theft, or by stinginess, which might interfere with a generous distribution of aid to the needy.

They are not to be double-tongued, for the deacon (as a standing officer in the church, exercising a certain watch-care, and keeping order in the congregation, as well as visiting those in need, and assisting the teacher in handling cases of difficulty between members, or between members and the branch) will see things in the course of his ministry that will furnish rare material for gossip. He is to be discreet and keep his mouth closed about such things excepting when the right time comes for him to speak.

Men are to be proved before they are elevated to the office of deacon. But having been found blameless they may occupy therein when called. This is a provision that as a rule holds good regarding other offices as well. The church has a right to scrutinize the records of men to ascertain fitness and worthiness before they are set apart to special offices.

It has been argued by some that single men cannot be deacons, because Paul says: "Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife." But such interpretation is not justified by Paul's language. It is evident that he meant that a deacon should be husband of not more than one wife. The menace of polygamy was recognized even in that day. We are sustained in this thought by the fact that God has frequently called men to be deacons who were not married; and they have approved themselves in the office. Given a little time, most of them can qualify so far as the other specifications are concerned. The Utah believers in polygamy would probably render this text: "A deacon should be the husband of at least one wife—more preferred." But Paul would not trust a polygamist, even in the office of deacon, much less as president of the church.

Those who use the office of deacon well "purchase a good degree and great boldness in the faith." Some have thought of this office slightly. But when we stop to think seriously, it must be evident to us that any office in which men are permitted to help God is a high and honorable calling, and it is a privilege to work therein.

From the Book of Covenants

In the Book of Covenants we are told that deacons are standing ministers: "But the deacons and teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be standing ministers unto the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:22.

Their duties are more specifically stated thus:

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:11.

Assisting the Teacher

From the above reading it is apparent that all of the duties of the teacher may devolve upon the deacon as an assistant, when occasion may require. So that on that contingency it becomes his duty to watch over the church; to be with the church at all times, and strengthen it in all ways within his power.

He is to be no idle spectator. He is to see that there is no iniquity, backbiting, or evil speaking in the church; to see that the people meet together often, and that the members do their duty; and in the absence of other branch officers take the lead of the meetings. Some of these duties, bear in mind, devolve on him only on condition that it is necessary for him to assist the teacher.

Personally, we are inclined to give a liberal interpretation to this term, "assisting the teacher." We are inclined to think that when necessary the teacher may send the deacon to perform labor by himself, or with another deacon, and without the immediate presence of the teacher—that the deacon is not bound to be merely a silent witness accompanying the teacher in the settlement of a case. Conditions might arise owing to which the teacher would be confined to his home, or in some way prevented from attending to necessary labor. But he could send the deacon, if qualified, to attend to the work. That would be assisting the teacher. The deacon becomes the agent in the matter; and that which a man does by a properly appointed agent he does himself, in a legal sense.

In this view we are sustained by a very able address delivered by Elder Joseph Lambert, which was published in the HERALD some years ago. We quote:

"He [the teacher] frequently sends the deacon. I have known of cases where the teacher would say, Now here is a case of this kind (and he describes it). You go there and do what you can. I am busy here in this part. You go and do all you can and report back to me. That deacon is assisting the teacher, though they do not go together."

He May Preside

But the deacon has certain duties of his own, which are performed in his own right, and not as an assistant to the teacher. For instance, under certain conditions he may act as branch president, for it is written: "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch."—Doctrine and Covenants 120:2.

Again, in the absence of other higher officers, he may be called to take the lead of meetings. Under these conditions, and when chosen as president of a quorum of deacons, the deacon becomes a presiding officer in his own right.

He May Preach

The deacon may preach in a local way. The church in General Conference has so decided:

"Resolved, That in our judgment teachers and deacons are authorized by the law to labor as preachers within the branches to which they belong, when they are presidents thereof, or with the advice and consent of the chief presiding officer."—General Conference Resolution number 449, adopted April 9, 1898.

This is in harmony with a further provision of section 17, not previously noted in this article, which says that teachers and deacons are "to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.

President Joseph Smith on the Duties of the Deacon

In addition to the duties outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants the church has specified other duties that are additional or subsidiary to those already named. In 1871 President Joseph Smith, who by virtue of his position had the right to interpret and define such matters, prepared an article on the duties of the deacon. It was published in the SAINTS' HERALD, and in the General Conference of 1900, the church, on the recommendation of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, adopted an abbreviated form of this article setting forth the duties of the deacon in specific terms. So that this interpretation has become law, so far as conference resolution can make law, governing the duties and rights of the deacon:

"We have elsewhere written that every branch must have a place of meeting. This place of meeting, if a public building, hall, meetinghouse, or church, must be in the actual possession of the association of church members worshipping there, at least during its occupancy while worshipping; and if the property is owned by the church, some one must have constructive possession at all times. What particular officer of the church has precedence of right in this constructive possession? The right to carry the keys; open the doors; conduct visitors, either those belonging or not belonging to the church; to see that the floors, doors, windows, pulpit or stand, seats, table or stand, lamps, and other fixtures are clean and in good order; to open the doors at the hour of gathering for preaching, fellowship, prayer, or business meetings; to see that the lamps or candles are trimmed, lighted, and burning, in time for evening meetings; to see that the members coming in find seats; to keep watch over the Saints during meetings, repressing loud talking, whispering, and laughing, reproving the thoughtless, and rebuking the giddy; putting a prompt stop to rude, indecent, and boisterous acts, by which propriety, solemnity, and peace of the meetings may be disturbed; to exercise kind and diligent supervision over the health and comfort of the Saints while in meeting, by securing a proper ventilation of the room; to light and keep burning the fires by which the room is kept warm; to have charge of the treasury; to receive, disburse, and account for the contributions of the Saints, intended for necessary and incidental expenses of the association of members; to keep, preserve from damage, and account for all personal effects of the association; to visit the poor, ascertain their needs and report the same to the church; and in fact, to perform any and all of those necessary duties by which the welfare of the Saints is secured through a careful administration of the outward ordinances, a faithful employment of the talents intrusted to that man. It follows then of a necessity that the right, the duty of the performing these acts—these unwritten but essential things of the law, devolve upon the office of deacon."—General Conference Resolution number 471.

To Carry the Keys and Open the Doors

From this statement of duties and rights we note the following:

First. The deacon has constructive possession of the church building, and it is his "right to carry the keys; open the doors; conduct visitors, either those belonging or not belonging to the church."

This does not mean necessarily that the pastor or other branch officials shall not have a key to the church, as a matter of convenience, so that they may go in for secret prayer or contemplation, or for other purposes.

We have visited branches where, when the hour of service arrived, the congregation was found seated or standing on the sidewalk or lawn, unable to get into the church building. This should never happen. A secular business conducted in such a way would soon go down. Only by a miracle of divine grace could a spiritual concern survive long, using such methods. The doors should be opened in ample time for all church services, including Sunday school and Religious meetings, so that those worthy members who set a good example by coming early may get in. Some responsible person, such as a janitor, may do this, with the permission or by authority of the deacon; but in that event the deacon should see that it is attended to in a prompt and proper manner, for the church by this action has designated him as the custodian of the keys.

To Keep Things Clean and in Order

Second. It is his duty to see that all fixtures about the church building, such as tables, seats, and stand, are clean and in good condition.

The house of the Lord should be clean, as well as the persons of those who assemble there. To observe the Lord's supper and other holy rites and ordinances in a dirty or untidy room, is not in harmony with the divine will. Church buildings should be made clean and attractive, both within and without. The ornamentations and furnishings may be plain and humble, as is consistent with the standing of those who are mostly poor people, but these all should be clean and harmonious. Good taste costs little and pays well.

Yet we must have a care and not arrive at too great a degree of fastidiousness, like those housewives who make everyone miserable lest a stray fly or a speck of dust shall enter the door. Church property is for use—legitimate use and wear and tear of all kinds entailed by service.

Third. The deacon is to see that lamps or candles are trimmed and burning for evening services—or where other more modern methods of lighting are used, to see that everything is in order so that the people may not sit in darkness.

To Oversee Heating and Ventilation—a Point of Friction

Fourth. He is to exercise "kind and diligent supervision over the comfort of the Saints while in meeting," by attending to the ventilation, and to fires during cold weather. Here is a point of friction. It is difficult to please all in the matter of ventilation and heating. One man's fresh air seems to be another man's pneumonia. And the members sometimes offend in this matter by themselves opening and closing windows or stirring the fire or closing the damper while the deacon is present. They even do this at times when services are in progress, thus annoying the speaker; and their bungling and inexperienced efforts make the disturbance twofold. It would be better if such persons would communicate with the deacon in some way, making known their wishes.

Here is room for the exercise of judgment. Deacons may well study methods of ventilation. Some of them seem to think that so long as air is cold it need not be fresh. They reason, Why build a fire and then open the window? Churches are notorious offenders in these matters. The assembly breathes the air over and over again. The meeting closes—the windows also close. The poisoned air is canned up for use at the next service. The preacher must work and sweat to keep people awake when there is not oxygen enough in the room to feed the flame of life and intelligence.

To Act as Treasurer

Fifth. He is to "have charge of the treasury," to receive, disburse, and give account of church funds. This indicates that he should be the treasurer of the branch. In most branches where there are two or more resident deacons, it is probable that one may be selected who is competent to keep the records of such matters and handle them properly, though it is a fact that not every man can keep accounts, and not every man can solicit money successfully. A condition might arise where a deacon would not be competent to perform such work, though competent to attend to other duties, and might prefer that some other person be elected as treasurer, or he be given an assistant who could attend to that part of his work. But by this ruling of the church, the right to care for the branch treasury primarily belongs to the office of deacon, and all other things being equal, he should be thus recognized by the branch. In all probability deacons will become more and more of assistance to the bishops in financial matters.

Sixth. He is to "visit the poor, ascertain their needs, and report the same to the church." The language of this statement suggests the propriety of referring such cases to the church for action, excepting when immediate relief is demanded.

To Keep Order—a Trying Charge

Seventh. He is to "keep watch over the Saints during meeting, repressing loud talking, whispering, and laughing, reproving the thoughtless, and rebuking the giddy; putting a prompt stop to rude, indecent, and boisterous acts, by which the propriety, solemnity, and peace of the meetings may be disturbed."

This may become in some instances a disagreeable duty—but it remains a duty. There is no position in the church that does not carry with it some features that might be termed disagreeable. If one is seeking repose, and wishes to continue irresponsible, he should not enter any grade of the priesthood. Enemies are sometimes made by the deacon while discharging the duty of maintaining order. But he must do this duty, firmly, yet with all the tact and kindness at his command. Most acts of the kind mentioned are thoughtless, and should be dealt with in a kindly way, and when possible, by private admonition.

Where there is evidence of a vicious and willful intention to disturb the meeting by drunken or malicious persons, the deacon may use drastic methods to bring such disturbance "to an immediate stop." If necessary he may summon civil officers and secure an arrest. The law safeguards the right of every religious body to hold its meeting undisturbed by malicious intruders.

Thoughtless persons who have disturbed the meeting should not become offended when the deacon admonishes them to desist. He is but doing his duty as imposed upon him by the church. He is acting within his authority. He cannot consistently do otherwise. Surely no fair-minded Latter Day Saint will hold resentment against him for so doing. It is to his credit rather than otherwise.

We have submitted to two of our brethren who are attorneys at law, the question of the right of a deacon to use force in quelling a disturbance of a religious service, and his right to expel such an offender from the church building. On this point Brother I. A. Smith submits the following opinion:

"A person who disturbs a religious meeting is a trespasser and it is the right and duty of any person present to assist in putting a stop to the disturbance, just as it is the duty of any person who sees another attempting any misdemeanor or felony to prevent such act. Afortiori a deacon or any agent of the body holding the meeting would have the right to quell any riot or disturbance, even to the point of expelling a person from the place of meeting.

"The foregoing is the common law; statutory law does little more than affirm the common law by making such a disturbance of any meeting, religious, political, or otherwise, a misdemeanor and providing a penalty for the same."

On this point S. A. Burgess writes:

"Having charge of the property, he may remove trespassers or any other persons not having a right superior or equal to his. This does not give him the right to shut out members of the congregation. In the case of necessity, we will go further and say that he may call on others in the congregation to assist him in removing an unruly person and if advisable he may arrest and call on others to assist him in arresting for a breach of peace committed in his presence."

"On the other hand, the pastor of the church or the deacon is not excusable himself in disturbing a meeting; which he may be disturbing even though he has it in charge, and you can readily see that wisdom should be used in attempting to remove persons from the building. Some full-blooded, hot-headed, stubborn man in the office might very easily get himself into the wrong end of the case in attempting to exercise his authority with too free a hand; but where need arises he may act without fear."

In all these duties the deacon, as well as all the other officers of the branch, must operate under the direction of the branch president, and in full accord with him. As in the branch, as we have before stated, all lines of activity, and authority, are gathered up and center in the hands of the one who stands at the head of the branch, the regularly elected presiding officer.

(Concluded.)

At the annual branch business meeting in Lamoni, the following names were indorsed for ordination: E. D. White, R. E. Johnson, Harry A. Lorance, to office of priest, Levi Dobson to office of teacher.

According to the report of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, forty out of the forty-eight States of the Union have now adopted some form of mothers' pension. They have recognized the principle that children should not be taken from their mothers because of poverty; but that home life and a mother's care possesses paramount value. Still though the principle is recognized, the amounts are stated to be as yet too low, so that the full purposes of the law, in the face of the present cost of living, have not been attained.

President-elect Harding has declared in favor of a smaller military force. He suggests 175,000 this year, and 150,000 next year.

It is estimated that four million people were paying income tax this year, many of them for the first time. Several hundred thousand ex-service men, railroad employees, and other employees of the Government, whose salary in 1919 was exempt from taxation, must pay this year. Every single person who has an income of $1,000 or more from all sources, must file returns, and every married person whose net income for husband and wife together is more than $2,000.

The Ten Lost Tribes—Where Are They?—Part 5

By S. K. Sorensen

The theory that the English and Scandinavians, being so generally of Ephraim, and accepting the gospel so readily, therefore fulfill many of the prophecies relative to the lost sheep of Israel, is presented here.

The Bible and Book of Mormon plainly indicate the gathering of Israel, both of the house of Judah and the house of Israel. I may say, in a miraculous manner, in a wonderful manner, not at all in the manner by which he led them out of Egypt. But in order for Israel to be a blessing to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, they must be in possession of that which will bring a blessing, which is the gospel; otherwise the promises to Abraham are a failure. The Jews rejected Christ and his mission, and as a result they are wanderers among the nations, hated and despised among men, and we fail to see from any viewpoint wherein they have been or are at the present a blessing to anyone. When the gospel was restored through the Prophet Joseph Smith, the announcement was made that it must go to the Gentiles, then to the Jews. The Jew has not yet accepted it, and yet the gospel was established for the express purpose of gathering Israel, as indicated by various scriptures quoted by the angel to Joseph Smith, who said that they were about to be fulfilled. How do we harmonize these apparent inconsistencies? The Book of Mormon also tells us that the work shall be set up among the Gentiles.

The apparent inconsistencies are perfectly harmonious if we consider them in the light of the position taken in these articles. We are told plainly by the prophets that the house of Israel, the ten tribes, will be among the Gentiles, and mixed with the Gentiles; hence the reason for the church being set up among the Gentiles to gather into its fold those who are of the tribes of Israel, as well as the Gentiles who are mixed with them. They are all dwelling in Babylon and are partakers of the poisonous cup held out by the mother of harlots, hence the command by the Prophet Zechariah to speak to the young man and tell him that Jerusalem should again be inhabited, and then he speaks to Israel and says:

"Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north [not the North Pole, however], saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of heaven, saith the Lord. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon."—Zechariah 2: 6, 7.

This harmonizes with the following from John's revelation (18: 4):

"Come out of her [Babylon], my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

The Lord says to the church in these last days, in the year 1831.

"The time has come when the voice of the Lord is unto you: Go ye out of Babylon; gather ye out from among the nations, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign land; call upon the nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 2, 3.

In harmony with this instruction, two of the elders were sent to England in 1837; later others were sent, and in April, 1840, there was a membership in England of 1,798; in 1841, a membership of 6,490; in 1842, a membership of 7,518.

Such was the marvelous progress of the work in those early days through the ministration of those men whom the Lord had called to this work, and it leads us to wonder who they were and we are told by revelation in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6:

"Therefore, as I said concerning the sons of Moses—for the sons of Moses and also the sons of Aaron shall offer an acceptable offering and sacrifice in the house of the Lord, which house shall be built unto the Lord in this generation upon the consecrated spot, as I have appointed; and the sons of Moses and of Aaron shall be filled with the glory of the Lord upon Mount Zion in the Lord's house, whose sons are ye; and also many whom I have called and sent forth to build up my church, . . . they become the sons of Moses and of Aaron, and the seed of Abraham."

In harmony with this the Lord spoke to the church, Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3:

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood had continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

"Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood, a savor unto my people Israel."

Perhaps by this time it will be clear why these men had such wonderful success in gaining converts to the church. They were of the seed of Abraham, and according to the promise of the Lord to him his seed should be a blessing to all nations. Not only this, but should be the means through this priesthood to gather in the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

The editor of the Millennial Star for May, 1840, says in reference to the progress of the work in England.

"Since the conference, and up to the present time, many are being added by baptism in almost every place where the fullness of the gospel is preached. In Scotland the work of the Lord is going on and souls are coming into the church. In Herefordshire and the adjoining country some forty preachers of other orders have lately submitted to the ordinances, and united themselves to the church of the Latter Day Saints; by this means upward of forty preaching places have been opened for our elders. . . . In short, on all sides we turn our eyes, we behold the field white ready to harvest. Calls for preaching are more than we can fill at present. May the Lord send more laborers into his harvest. There are thousands of people in England, if they once knew our principles would embrace them, and even lay down their lives for them if required."

Such wonderful success cannot be attained without a cooperation on the part of the people. The Lord has spoken through the Psalmist: "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power."

This has certainly been verified in the English Mission, and not in that mission alone, but in other foreign nations, as well as on the continent of America. In Scandinavia the gospel was not introduced until 1850 under Brighamite administration, but while it was preached in its purity it met with great success. According to Andrew Jensen, church historian in Utah, 36,340 were baptized in those countries from 1850-1883. In Denmark 20,302; Sweden 11,764; Norway 4,274. The Reorganization cannot claim any such successes owing to the stain and odium placed upon the fair name of the church by the dominant church of Utah when it appended an appendix to the teaching of the church, known as polygamy, which has acted as a retarder to the progress of the church ever since.

Who are those people who so readily listened to the voice of the Good Shepherd and heeded the call? Christ says: "My sheep hear my voice and I know them, and they follow me."

These, then, surely must have been some of the lost sheep of the house of Israel or they would not have recognized the call.

The Lord in a revelation to James Covill (Doctrine and Covenants 39:3) says:

"Thou shalt preach the fullness of my gospel which I have sent forth in these last days; the covenant which I have sent forth to recover my people, which are of the house of Israel."

And again the Lord speaks to the church as follows:

"Behold, I say unto you, The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage [from European oppression to the land of the free] by power and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at the first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be. Therefore, let not your hearts faint, for I say unto you as I said unto your fathers, Mine angel shall go before you, . . . and also my presence, and in time ye shall possess the goodly land."—Doctrine and Covenants 100:3.

It would seem superfluous, in the face of such plain and straightforward declarations, to offer additional evidences in reference to the existence of the lost tribes of Israel in the British Isles and Scandinavia; but in support of the declaration by the Lord to his servant Joseph Smith, we offer one other additional evidence confirmatory of what has already been declared which is: The pointing out, through the patriarchal order, the lineage of those who receive their blessings. It has been my privilege to read and hear read a number of such blessings, and without exception their lineage is laid to Ephraim or some other of the ten tribes, and I understand that very few are traced to Judah or the Jews; thus, the inspiration which prompted Joseph, the prophet, to reveal the identity of Israel is corroborated by the same Spirit which directs the utterances of the patriarchs.

The Lord has also declared, as already noticed, that the priesthood had come down through the lineage of their fathers, and that they were lawful heirs according to the flesh. This is important testimony as we find that those men upon whom the priesthood was conferred, particularly Joseph Smith's ancestors and the Twelve, were of English descent and some of them were born there. Others later, in the Reorganization, came from the British Isles and Scandinavia and occupied in the various offices in the priesthood from the deacon up to the Twelve and the seventy, and that priesthood has come by lineage because they were lawful heirs according to the flesh; they were of Israel, yet not of the Jews.

There was established in the early organization what was known as the school of the prophets. The implication would be that those who attended this school were prophets or were endowed with the spirit of prophecy by which they were enabled to exercise that gift. We have traced their ancestry to the north countries and their lineage to Israel. What further evidence do we need to establish the identity of the lost tribes in Britain and Scandinavia? While these countries are not the only ones where the house of Israel is scattered, they are perhaps so far the most prominent ones for the reason that they have furnished more converts to the restored gospel than any other country except the United States of America. The cause of this may lie in the fact that greater opportunities have been offered because of religious tolerance and freedom in preaching the gospel; in many other countries it has almost been prohibited. The missionaries sent out by the church have also had great success in Australia. The reason for this may be attributed to the fact that it is a British colony and peopled principally by that same race and nationality, and religious liberty has been granted them.

Thus we see how the Lord had prepared the way for his work, before the dawning of the day that the Sun of righteousness should arise and shine, and had caused lost Israel to blaze the trail by establishing freedom and liberty; first, by leaving their mother countries and setting up independent governments, where the hand of the oppressor could not reach them; second, by following the example at home of those who had thus become independent; third, by removing the hand of oppression of their brethren of the house of Judah (the Jews) and granting them favors and honors in the councils of the nations and colonies under their control and exalting them to prominence and responsibility.

Fourth, by taking the leading part in redeeming the land of their forefathers from under the hand of the oppressor and despoiler, the Turk, to make possible the fulfillment of the prophecies in reference to the gathering of Israel back to their promised land. Thus, like Joseph the father of Ephraim who saved his brethren from starvation and became a blessing to them and the whole land of Egypt, so likewise, his descendents have brought about in a military way the redemption of the promised possession of Israel, the land of Palestine.

They have been the promoters and supporters of civil and religious liberties, they have been the heralds of progress and civilization, they have paved the way and blazed the trail for the expansion and betterment of humanity; they have thrown off the yoke of bondage and oppression, both civil and religious; they were among the first to break the fetters of ecclesiastical rule under popery; they were the first to receive the restored gospel and to enjoy its benefits and blessings; they were the first to obtain the holy priesthood and to officiate in the gospel ordinances in this generation; they were the first in this generation to be sent out into all the world to preach the gospel to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, and to bring in their thousands into the gospel covenant; they were to be the hunters and fishers and gather in from their long dispersion their brethren, the lost sheep of the house of Israel; thus fulfilling in these various capacities the mission unto which they had been called and the promise to Abraham, that in his seed should all the nations and people be blessed.

How wonderful are the ways of the Lord; they are past finding out. Notwithstanding all the incorrigibility of man and desire to walk in his own ways, yet the designs and purposes of God are carried out in his own way and time and cannot be frustrated by the conduct of men. It may have to be done in a roundabout way, if not a direct way, but it will be accomplished just the same.

THE SEMINAR

William James on Religion

The following extract of a letter written by William James in 1901, before the publication of his book, Varieties of Religious Experience, states rather clearly one of the evolutionary views of religion. It will be noted that he rejects some parts set forth by sectarian ministers as representing Christian religion, yet at the same time confirms very strongly the effect of something not ourselves upon our lives, and of the indestructibility of the foundations of religion.

Of course, to us that something is God and these various analyses are only an effort to designate in scientific terms the spirit within man, which is akin to the great Spirit of God.

It is noteworthy that in other books William James speaks distinctly of God and the Creator, showing his convictions after many years of study and research.

"I find my 'matter' taking firmer shape, and it will please you less to hear me say that I believe myself to be (probably) permanently incapable of believing the Christian scheme of vicarious salvation, and wedded to a more continuously evolutionary mode of thought. The reasons you from time to time have given me, never better expressed than in your letter before the last, have somehow failed to convince. In these lectures the ground I am taking is this: The mother-sea and fountain-head of all religions lie in the mystical experiences of the individual, taking the word mystical in a very wide sense. All theologies and all ecclesiasticisms are secondary growths superimposed; and the experiences make such flexible combinations with the intellectual prepossessions of their subjects, that one may almost say that they have no proper intellectual deliverance of their own, but belong to a region deeper, and more vital and practical, than that which the intellect inhabits. For this they are also indestructible by intellectual arguments and criticisms. I attach the mystical or religious consciousness to the possession of an extended subliminal self, with a thin partition through which messages make irruption. We are thus made convincingly aware of the presence of a sphere of life larger and more powerful than our usual consciousness, with which the latter is nevertheless continuous. The impressions and impulses and emotions and excitements which we thence receive help us to live; they found invincible assurance of a world beyond the sense; they melt our hearts and communicate significance and value to everything and make us happy. They do this for the individual who has them, and other individuals follow him. Religion in this way is absolutely indestructible. Philosophy and theology give their conceptual interpretations of this experiential life. The farther margin of the subliminal field being unknown, it can be treated, as by Transcendental idealism, as an Absolute mind with a part of which we coalesce, or by Christian theology, as a distinct deity acting on us. Something not our immediate self does act on our life! So I seem doubtless to my audience to be blowing hot and cold, explaining away Christianity, yet defending the more general basis from which I say it proceeds."

The prohibition law when it became effective January 16, 1920, provided that liquor stocks held by individuals for personal use must be listed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Pursuant to this, the total number of inventories filed is less than 78,000, and represents less than four million gallons of liquor. This is a surprisingly small amount for a population of over 100 million. It would appear to indicate that the vast majority of the people are not firmly attached to liquor.

Stay at Home an Evening

Sister Mary Steele, the new supervisor of our Young Women's Bureau, with characteristic energy and resourcefulness, has struck a slogan for our young people for the new year, which is given expression in the January number of Autumn Leaves, in The Parthenon, the department for girls. It is a "stay-at-home-an-evening-a-week" campaign, and is one which we feel sure every mother will most heartily indorse.

It is to be deplored that the modern tendency is away from the old-fashioned home life, when all the family would be together for a few hours after the stress of the day, and just before the hours for physical rest and recuperation. What we have lost with this tendency to allow something or other to be planned for each evening of the week, something which calls this or that member of the family circle away from the home, can never be rightly estimated, for the loss is not a material one, but is of that higher and finer essence which defies computation. That spiritual stamina which has been the safeguard and the inspiration of many a noble man and woman of the past generation, was never engendered in a succession of evenings at the movie, at the club, at theater, show, party, or dance hall. It had for its background, rather, the memory of those quiet hours at home, spent with those best beloved, where soul communion is possible, where counsel and guidance are never sought in vain, where, with curtains drawn and fires alight, there is a "world of care shut out, and a world of love shut in."

Can we afford to deprive our children of this strength? Can we afford to allow them to come into our homes for the few brief years of their fleeting childhood, and then, upon the threshold of that fuller, larger, maturer life, allow them to drift from its shelter, out into the wide, wide world of temptation, dissipation, and disillusionment? No; let us rather make a strong and united effort to get back to the simpler joys of life. Let us live more closely with our children, share their joys, plan for their happiness and contentment within the circle of our own four walls, bringing into it enough of the good from without to enhance its beauty without dimming its attractiveness and charm.

Let us heartily support Sister Steele in her proposal to the girls, that they may make a whole-hearted success of their effort to establish, throughout the church, at least one wonderful evening a week at home, an evening dedicated, in the name of all that we love best and is most holy, to those who have the first right to our time and our affectionate attention. Let us make this move a "popular" one. Let the mothers counsel together and, as neighbors, or members of a branch, decide upon the evening to be so crowned, and then do nothing or propose nothing which will cause any to depart from the rule so established.

Let us bring back the songs of the home. Let us teach our little ones the hymns of praise, the "songs of the righteous" which are a "prayer unto God." Let us find in wholesome fun and frolic that relaxation from care and stress which will bring back our poise and our trust. Let us encourage our young in giving expression, in the happy circle of those who would cherish, to their own thoughts and impressions of life. Let them dramatize the scenes and incidents which come into their lives. Let them recite, give tableaux, play instruments, or in any other desirable way take part in the activities which shall mark these happy evenings at home. The results will be farther-reaching than we can know. In the constructive program of the church there will be an avenue for the expression of every individual self which has found itself in any particular outward manifestation of value. Let us encourage the habit of self-expression in our children, always remembering to guide it into useful channels, and repressing only that which is pernicious. The home circle is a most excellent place in which this guidance and direction may be given.

So then, here's to the evening at home! May 1921 witness a wonderful transformation in this direction, in those homes where the innovation is needed!

Protecting the Home

A thousand young women at the University of Nebraska, it is said, are studying how to become homemakers. Cooking, baking, dressmaking, millinery, household management, kitchen carpentry, home nursing, and hygiene are reported to share part of the time previously allotted to mathematics, language, and other cultural studies. Who can say that the home instinct is being broken down by modern education or by rarified intellectual theories when such a movement as this exists in our higher institutions?

In truth, this is a departure from the old custom by which young women learned such of the household arts as they desired from their mothers, but it is good in that under the auspices of the university the business of household management cannot be degraded to a round of menial services, and petty, degrading duties. It is time that the position of the housemother be rescued from any imputation of narrowness. To manage the finances of a family, to keep health and interest in life at the maximum, and to rear strong, capable, and cultivated children is no unimportant lot.

Yet it is not merely scientific training that will preserve the dignity of homemaking—it is not altogether what women do, but that they find pleasure in doing it that counts for the most. In competition with the ever-widening field of feminine effort, means must be found to give the housewife an interest in the daily household tasks equaling that found in any office or shop. To be able to cook well is one good quality, but it becomes much more beneficial if women know how to imbue their work with an enthusiasm that it seems almost to have lost. Some promise of this lively interest is to be seen in the voluntary enrollment of so many young women in the household courses of our state university.—Omaha Bee.

The Garden of Thy Heart

Within thy heart a garden men can see
Wherein the flowers of loveliness do grow;
Where happy thoughts do wing them to and fro
And build their nests in many a magic tree.
And there doth pity's fountain hold in fee
Mossed banks of peace where shadows come and go;
And there are quiet paths that few do know,
Yea, only those who love and worship thee,
Or those in whom is perfect friendship born;
For hid within this garden of thy heart
A holy temple stands, wherein at morn
And even, before an altar heaped with myrrh,
A vestal spirit bids a bright flame start
To heaven with prayers already granted her.

Woman's New Power

IV

The peculiar custom of pairing has come into general use in the Congress of the United States. It is not the result of any rule or law but is a mere custom. Two representatives, not necessarily of opposite party belief, but having opposite views upon a certain bill under discussion agree to pair. The vote of one offsets the other. If one member of the pair is absent the other refuses to vote, replying to roll call by saying that he is paired and the clerk will read the names of the pairs after the vote is recorded. Or, it may be that both members of a pair are absent from roll call; they are then reported as a dead pair. By this custom each party loses one vote but the outcome is not affected.

In the Senate they have a system of general pairs between Senators of opposite parties and these cover not merely one question but every question discussed during the entire session.

The custom of pairing is objected to by many critics because it encourages absence of members, and constituents cannot hold their representatives so directly responsible for their vote as when they are present and voting.

There are other objectionable customs at Washington that have become a part of the governmental machinery there that should be remedied or eradicated. This will be done when the voters of all the different communities become interested in the work done by our lawmakers. There is a waste of both time and money involved in many of their customs.

Important legislation is often held up by filibusters which have consumed hours of useless debate or by frequent roll calls in the House which takes up about forty minutes with its 435 members.

Congress is still without a budget system although we have been promised one for this long while. Any private concern which attempts to run without a budget will result in failure. Any organization that handles the billions of this United States is most certainly handicapped by this lack of method.

The franking privilege, which allows a member of Congress to send out literature under his frank instead of under postage, is a badly abused one. Some members use it as an opportunity to further their political interests by sending out large quantities of campaign documents to their constituents. Allowance for printing is limited. There should be a limit to the use of the franking privilege.

Too many committees are organized in both Houses merely to create places for political claimants. Many of these committees are useless; many of them have overlapping duties. It is urged that the seniority system be done away with and each committee allowed to elect its own chairman because of fitness and capacity and not because of an inherited right to the place. Also, that committee be compelled to report out all bills either favorably or adversely. That there should be complete publicity as to the work of each committee because there is where most of our legislation is drawn up. At present the custom is to do much of the work in secret session.

Happily, we are promised reform in what is termed pork barrel legislation. Our Congress should be nationally minded. Pork barrel legislation is local.

Some Representative concludes that if he can get a slice of pork for his immediate locality his constituents will the more readily reelect him. He may secure a Federal building for his district: a post office or a revenue building. It will improve the appearance of the country and give employment. If his home town is on a river or harbor then he will work to secure Federal appropriations to improve the water front in that particular locality, making it very attractive as well as convenient.

It is not right to blame the Representative alone for this condition. The folks back home have given him his cue and he is trying to please them. Let the people of the district understand that each Representative represents the Nation as well as his district and that a real national spirit is necessary in this country. Just so long as the voters are appealed to and pleased by this sort of thing just so long will it continue.

Then we have the custom of distributing garden seeds to the farmers, a custom which costs much money and does practically no good. Again, some member of Congress dies and the Representative from his district collects all the funeral orations pronounced in his memory, orders them printed and bound into a neat little volume, at Government expense, and sends them out, under the franking privilege, as gifts to the voters of his district.

These are some of the criticisms that are brought against the American Congress and they are conditions that can be changed by a little attention on the part of the voters. The lawmakers are at our service if we will only inform them of our desires.

Perhaps it is not very encouraging to the new voter to confront difficulties so early in her political career. But we must know our problems before we can attempt to solve them.

Directing the affairs of a government, rightly consists merely in solving its problems in a way that ever makes for the happiness and welfare of its people. The word government was at one time an odious one. To-day it is the servant of the people. The people create it, own it, and may change it at will. It is an instrument in the hands of the people which they may use in any way they see fit to promote their own welfare. It is a solemn duty handed down to us by our ancestors. When lawmaking is in the hands of the people they are responsible for their own mistakes and can correct them at will.

Somebody says that "a nation lives by its God-given ideals, its morals; all else is incidental, meaning by morals a prevalence of righteousness, a community sentiment making for righteousness."

Righteous citizens may differ in their opinions as to how to attain their ideals but they should each have the same objective in mind. In fact, all the political parties of the United States are prompted by the same spirit. They differ in the manner in which their ideals shall be attained. During the late election all parties earnestly desired world peace. The political issue was, Will world peace be attained through the League of Nations?

At present, all political parties are interested in increasing the price of food to the producer and decreasing the price to the consumer. They are anxious to deal justly with both groups. But again they differ in opinion as to how this condition shall best be brought about. One party favors a protective tariff; another party favors making some financial arrangements with Europe in order to create a foreign demand for our products.

The packers have much to do with fixing the price of food-stuffs, so also do the transportation companies. With reference to these powers we have many important political questions. Among these are: Shall we have government control of the packers or allow them full power in controlling their own business?

Is the Cummins-Esch law class legislation favoring railroad owners? Is the Adamson law class legislation favoring railroad employees? All these are political questions because all America is thinking hard about them. When a question reaches that stage it is said to be in politics and has a much better chance of being settled than if it were lying dormant with no one interested in it.

The beefsteak you had for dinner is affected in price and quality by all these laws previously mentioned because it has been handled by the farmers, the railroads, and the packers before coming into your possession. Surely the housewife who pays for the meat for food should have a vital interest in the political agitation concerning it. Bread, milk, butter, clothing, furniture, and building material are, in the same way, all in politics. Let us lift the word politics out of the mire and use it as a factor in establishing Zion.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT

This is to announce that Sister Rosa Tier, of Independence, Missouri, has been appointed to labor as a field worker in the interests of the Women's Department, expenses to be borne by those districts or branches which make arrangements for her services. District organizers may write to the Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, and secure this representative for their next district conference. She will explain the various phases of the work of this important department of the church, supplementing your own efforts in that direction.

Presidents of those few districts in which there are not, as yet, appointed organizers, will do well to take advantage of this opportunity to present the women's work in their locality.

We commend Sister Tier to the Saints everywhere she may be called to labor, bespeaking for her their kindly care and hearty cooperation.

Why We Do Not Keep the Law of the Church

"If you do not understand the law, I am sorry for you. But why do you not understand the law of your church?"

This question was asked by Brother Ralph W. Farrell in his article, September 15, in SAINTS' HERALD.

I would like to try to answer that question from my viewpoint.

I had been a member of this church nearly a year, when for the first time I either read in our papers or heard a sermon on tithing. I was considerably disturbed by what was said as some points were new to me. But when I asked questions desiring a better understanding of tithing, I seemingly got nowhere. Meeting a traveling missionary about this time, I asked this question: Is it the duty of Saints to pay tithing? "We-ll, you see," he replied, "we teach the law of tithing. Did you not know that before?"

"Certainly I knew the Saints believe in tithing; but have never been told it was an absolute duty. I feel abused."

He then gave a rather lengthy explanation on tithing, and some other things, and closed with this remark: "You see, sister, the church does not compel its members to pay tithing. If they are faithful, they will do so. A man does not like to be told how he should spend his money."

Well! Is it any wonder the church is eighty years behind, as a consecrated servant of God told us a few nights ago here in a sermon? And another brother facetiously asked in a recent article in the HERALD, "Do we want to be the head or the tail?"

Well, we are the tail, all right, brother, and not very healthy either.

How can one be so very faithful if one is not taught a little when first entering the church? When we employ school-teachers we expect them to explain every rudiment or principle or rule underlying the different studies of our children we send to school. What if this teacher leaves these children with their own ideas of understanding and applying of rules and principles without giving them the benefit of her superior experience and knowledge, but says instead, "Children, learn all these books contain, and you will some day be smart men."

Would that be a good teacher? Would that child pass? No, it would not, but if that teacher should say, "I am here to help you. All lessons must be well learned and understood before we pass on to others. I will do my best to help you comprehend all rules, difficulties; that is what I am paid for, and I want to be faithful to my trust," that would be a good teacher, and the children under her tutelage would pass at the end of the term.

Here is a picture that appeals to me. When a little lamb is born into the kingdom of God through the missionary arm of the church and presented to the shepherd of the flock (president of branch), with these instructions, "Nourish it tenderly and well, brother, with the doctrine of the church, that it may be able to stand in its day of trial," then the good shepherd will say, "Dear brother or sister, we rejoice to welcome you, and will give you our faith and prayers. First, I present you with our three books, Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and the Bible. You must read them carefully and study them prayerfully. I will be ready to help you any time you need me. Now you must pray to God continually for light and strength, courage and will power; he will help you also. You must try to overcome all bad habits if you have any. You must attend all church services as often as possible, for there is where you will gain knowledge that will develop your understanding and growth in usefulness to the work."

Now don't you think that little lamb would just feel good all over, and soon grow to a fat sheep, under such love and willingness to help him? I do. And oh, how he would try to make good!

First there should be a shepherd to each flock. The family should be cared for by the church or branch so the shepherd could give his entire time to the spiritual side of the flock. Such being the case do you think it would be necessary for the Bishop to send out such pleading articles every week for the million dollar tithing, if each member had been taught it was his duty to pay tithing from the first? Where the necessity for this drive for conference building fund?

Do you not think the storehouse of the Lord would be full to overflowing and the members busy like bees around honeycomb, each doing his bit with full confidence in the work and one another? Money in plenty for the conference building, for the Sanitarium annex, and for the land buying also? Yes, I will go one step further, and ask, Would they not have been builded? Yea, verily I believe so. Is it any wonder we are eighty years behind?

Now back to the original question, "Why do you not understand the law of the church?" The echo answers why! It is a foregone conclusion that as a whole we do not understand it, and cannot live up to what we do not comprehend—but it is too late now to debate the issue. What we want and need is quick results, and drastic measures. What I would do in this emergency, would be to remove at once every Sunday school Quarterly from all classes, old and young, from every Sunday school in the entire church, and give them instead the Doctrine and Covenants to study, till every child and grown person knew the doctrine of our church. Then I would preach two sermons from Doctrine and Covenants every Sunday, till I went through the book, and if I saw no immediate improvements in my flock, I would start from the first page and go through again, and report till I obtained good results. It would shorten the eighty years somewhat anyway, I think.

Some Saints do not have a Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, nor any church papers. The priesthood do not understand the Doctrine and Covenants alike. Just read the church papers if you doubt it. Why do we not understand the law of our church? Why are we eighty years behind? Why do we not climb higher? The time seems ripe for all of these things.

Think of it, Saints, think of it.

Yours for progress,

TULSA, OKLAHOMA. MRS. HELEN SMITH LOGAN.

Surplus Property

By the Lamoni Stake Bishopric

An explanation to the Saints of Lamoni Stake on determination of surplus. One of a series of letters.

In our last letter we stated what constituted surplus.

That we can have no surplus until we have been "amply supplied" and until we have paid our just debts, including the tithe or the tenth.

The surplus, then, does not include the tenth.

We have no say personally as to how much we shall pay as a tithe. Neither has the Bishop or any other man. That is forever settled by the voice of God to us. It is a tenth of our increase.

We do not give tithe. The tithe is God's. It is not ours to give. We owe God the tithe and we only pay our just debt when we settle with the Bishop for the tithe.

We do have something to say as to how much we shall pay as our surplus. So does the Bishop. Having mutually determined our surplus, we do not give it. We only pay it to God to whom it belongs. After having so paid, we do not have anything to say personally as to how it shall be used. That responsibility belongs to the officers whose duty it is to administer the law of temporalities.

The church has been instructed with reference to surplus property in a letter to Presiding Bishop Partridge written by the First Presidency consisting of Joseph Smith, jr., Sidney Rigdon and F. G. Williams. (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 300.)

"Brother Edward Partridge; Sir: I proceed to answer questions, concerning the consecration of property: First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this: a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this he cannot be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church book: therefore, to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge how much he should receive, and how much he should suffer to remain in the hands of the bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and their families.

"The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties; for, to give the bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be obliged to comply with the bishop's judgment, is giving the bishop more power than a king has; and, upon the other hand, to let every man say how much he needs, and the bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the bishops. The fact is, there must be a balance of equilibrium of power between the bishop and the people; and thus harmony and good will, be preserved among you.

"Therefore, those persons consecrating property to the bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back must show reasonably to the bishop that he wants as much as he claims. But in case the two parties cannot come to a mutual agreement, the bishop is to have nothing to do about receiving their consecrations; and the case must be laid before a council of twelve high priests; the bishop not being one of the council, but he is to lay the case before them."

Note carefully the sentence italicized in the first paragraph above quoted. This very clearly shows that the First Presidency here was instructing the Saints regarding the surplus and not the tenth.

In paragraph two, we also learn about the consecration of our surplus. This cannot refer to the tithe, as that is, as stated above, already clearly defined as a tenth of our increase. Neither the Bishop nor the party paying, can change this law.

Having now, first, paid the tithe (one tenth of the gain) and second, paid the surplus, the individual is now working on the stewardship basis and is a steward for God.

We will consider some of the laws governing the steward and stewardship in the near future.

Results in Utah

During the month of August, in company with Brother M. A. Etzenhouser, we visited some of the isolated Saints of Nevada. We found some excellent people, who although isolated were still very much interested in the church and what it was doing. In Carson City, also Elko, we found some who were very glad to again greet an elder and to know they were remembered by the officials of the church. Our time being limited, we did not get to be with them as much as we would have liked. I am convinced we should have some of the brethren under General Conference appointment devote their entire time in ministering to the Saints in that field.

Our reunion at Boise was not as well attended as we had hoped, but those who did attend were blessed in doing so. We have already started operations for our reunion for next year. We hope to have a joint reunion of the Idaho and Utah Districts, to be held at some point where both districts can attend. While this may be hard to do, yet we will do the best we can in locating the reunion where the greatest number can attend.

In Utah we have succeeded in baptizing the largest number that has come into the church in that field in any year of my labor in that field. Our brethren have done a splendid piece of work and have labored hard in their efforts to reach the people. We have several who have given their names for baptism, besides having baptized more than ninety people since last March. The work in and around Malad, Idaho, has prospered as never before. Fifty-one have been baptized in that locality in the past few months. Brother R. L. Fulk, together with Brethren Roscoe Davey and Francis Holm, have labored in that part of the field for some time. Brother Fulk began the work about a year ago which has resulted in the rich harvest of souls that has taken place in the last few months.

Brother Chauncey Bogue also rendered considerable help in the converting of those who came into the church.

There have been several added to the church in Salt Lake City, also Provo. At the former place Brother Etzenhouser has acted as pastor for more than a year and the branch shows a marked improvement in many respects. Some excellent people have been baptized in the past few months, and several more are awaiting baptism. In Provo, Brother S. S. Holm has ministered to the needs of the Saints' and that branch also shows a permanent gain both in number and spiritual interest. In the recent past a series of meetings was held by the writer and Brother Roscoe Davey and the attendance was very satisfactory. Several of the members of the dominant church attended and showed considerable interest.

In Ogden a campaign was started which we trust will result in the baptism of several. Brother Fulk conducted these meetings and has succeeded in arousing considerable interest. The indications are that more than one hundred will be brought into the church before the first of February, the result of the year's work.

In Idaho we have only had a limited force at work, but they have done well. Brethren W. P. Bootman and L. G. Hoisington have been laboring in the western part of the district and have baptized a goodly number. Several have come into the church in Boise and are rejoicing in the gospel of Christ. These brethren have baptized a number in eastern Oregon, having labored in that section of the country for the past three months.

Brother R. C. Chambers has baptized some excellent people in Blackfoot and other points. We fully expect to see several come into the church in the near future as several are very much interested in our message.

During the auditorium drive we were made to realize the spirit of sacrifice was apparent among the Saints. In each of these districts we were given fifteen hundred dollars as our quota. We were very much surprised to find that in Utah we had raised more than five thousand dollars and in Idaho more than six thousand dollars. Such generosity I never witnessed before among the Saints of these two districts. The wonderful response indicates what the Saints are willing to do in the furtherance of the cause of Zion.

Certainly the redemption of Zion is not far distant. The Saints were not only willing to give, but were anxious to contribute of their means in this great work. I consider this drive a wonderful blessing to the Saints. While the auditorium was badly needed and will be a blessing to the church, yet the greater blessing will result from the desire the Saints manifested in the giving. As never before the faces of the Saints are turned Zionward and it is with longing hearts that many are looking in that direction and wishing for the day to come when they can take up their residence in the favored land. The conditions in the world are so shaping themselves that it becomes more and more apparent that only in Zion will be peace and safety.

In a recent conversation with a minister of one of the popular churches of the day, he stated he was very much impressed with our method of carrying on our work, especially along the Zionistic ideals. The world is looking for something that shows love for humanity and it is for our church to demonstrate the wonderful system that the Lord gave us many years ago.

The members of the Utah church are watching us with considerable interest as to what we are doing in our efforts to redeem Zion. In my opinion this will arouse more interest in that people than any other thing we have yet presented to them. I fully expect to see many of them come into the church as they recognize we are the people who are carrying out the law as given by Joseph Smith in its relationship to the redemption of Zion.

Hopefully we are pressing forward realizing we have many things to overcome, but trusting in divine help to supply every want wherein we are not able to supply.

I am in gospel bonds, L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Northwestern Ohio

At Saint Marys E. L. Ulrich and O. J. Hawn are holding a series of meetings on East Spring Street in a cozy hall. Last Sunday, January 2, eleven precious souls started in life "new creatures in Christ Jesus." The writer insisted that they (Brothers Hawn and Ulrich) write an article to the HERALD in regard to the successful meetings they were having. They replied, "We do not care to blow our own horns." So I told them it had to be blown anyway. This is the place where Elmer Long labored so faithfully and had many interested.

Saint Marys is a beautiful town, located by the largest artificial body of water in the world. About the first of December the two brethren, in company with the writer, drove to Saint Marys, and after much hunting finally located a hall. It had a partition in it which was soon removed as the crowd increased rapidly. The hall was rented of a Mr. Metz, a storekeeper, and by the way a Presbyterian, but he believes the Bible and is a very fine man. New Year's Eve he furnished free lunch for over one hundred who attended a watch meeting at the hall. Paul could preach until midnight but O. J. Hawn is good at 1.30 a. m.

Northwestern Ohio is proud of her two missionaries. Sister Ulrich and Sister Carey and Brother Ulrich are splendid singers and musicians. Many good things are going to happen in Saint Marys. There is one family attending nearly every meeting. Yes, in one family, the only family I ever had the privilege and honor of meeting twelve hale, hearty, intelligent children. They have been reared in a way that insures them a future in this world. They grew up on the farm, the place God told his people to buy away back in the thirties. Every thinking Latter Day Saint ought to see now the Lord knows best. It takes about ten families in the cities to care for twelve children and some of them are adopted and then neglected.

Next Sunday there will be several more baptized. Many held up their hands for baptism Sunday night. Most of the Saints from Uniopolis are attending the meetings, driving twenty miles; some from Lima and Lafayette.

The Sylvania church will be dedicated in the near future. At Bradnor they are planning on building a new church in the spring.

At our district conference, at Toledo, in October, four very able men were ordained elders: Clayton Brough of Oak Harbor, C. E. Armstrong of Toledo, Edward Patten and H. H. Harms of Bradnor. Also Brother Morgan and Brother Dulcy of Toledo were ordained priests. Northwestern Ohio is growing in every respect and is going to continue to grow. There has been a wave of opposition sweeping the district, but so far has done no damage.

Your brother in hope,

JESSE M. HARDEN.

"The Bishop's Business Is on the Increase"

Shall I pay tithing on my corn?

Shall I pay tithing on my new suit?

Shall I pay tithing on my auditorium offering?

Shall I pay tithing on the gasoline I burned in my Ford?

Shall I pay tithing on my home as I pay for it or wait till I am out of debt?

Shall I pay tithing on the money I spend for education?

The answer to these and countless other questions is—pay on the INCREASE.

To find out what your increase is for a given time, get an Annual Tithing Report blank to guide you. All that you have gained whether in cash, material worth, or have invested in the school of experience represents a tithable increase.

If you have problems upon which you need more light to determine your increase write your local bishop or write this office. Our business is on the INCREASE.

Arizona

My appointment reads, Arizona, Bisbee objective, local. Besides presiding over the Bisbee Branch I have been asked to supervise the work at Douglas, and render such assistance in other parts of the State as time might permit. Besides activities at the above-mentioned places, have preached several times at Rucker Canyon, Sulphur Springs Valley, and Phoenix, once at Casa Granda and Sasco, and once at the Bennington Heights Branch at Kansas City. Also paid one visit to the Saints at Tucson, Arizona.

During the month of June I was associated with Brother William Anderson in a special series of meetings at Bisbee, and in October labored with the same brother in a special series of meetings at Douglas. During November paid a long contemplated visit to Phoenix, the capital city of the State, and spent one week with the Phoenix Branch. While there were well cared for at the home of Brother and Sister A. T. Gray, and were kindly received by all the Saints and well supplied with traveling expenses. We enjoyed our stay there very much and would have liked to stay longer.

Our next stop was at Casa Granda where Sisters Bender and Bruebaker had hired a hall and provided three hundred printed handbills, so we distributed the bills with the help of the sisters and preached that night to a small audience. Then proceeded to Sasco and was kindly cared for at the home of Brother and Sister Henry Bender, preaching that night at the ranch home of Brother and Sister Steel, to a congregation of six. We then called on the Saints at Tucson where we were taken into custody by Brother Monroe and wife. Finally reached home on the evening of Thanksgiving Day, feeling thankful that we had the privilege of doing a little in the interest of the Lord's work.

We find the majority of the people of Arizona very hard to interest in the gospel message, most of them being entirely overcome with the spirit of indifference; but now and then we are able to reach an honest one who will listen to the plan of salvation. We have met quite a number in Bisbee who are quite friendly to our work, some of whom we believe will come in in due time. Among those administered to are two nonmembers who both received a blessing; one, a young girl who was supposed to be on her deathbed, was restored to health. Many blessings have also come to the Saints through administration and we feel that we would all receive greater blessings if we were more faithful.

The yearly business meetings and election of officers in all the departments of the Bisbee Branch passed off quite smoothly and with very little opposition. Most of our members are coming forward and offering their best services. Our working team for the year have lined up and are ready for work as follows: E. R. Davis, branch president. For the Sunday school, F. M. Dearborn, superintendent. For the Religio, T. R. Davis, superintendent. For the Women's Department, Mrs. John Dingle, superintendent. We expect soon to have a Boy Scout organization, with a troop committee and scoutmaster. With our strong corps of workers we ought to be able to pull a big gospel load of work through the year.

The three Sunday school classes of 1919 grew into five during 1920, and now at the beginning of 1921 the five have developed into seven.

Ever laboring and praying for the success of the work.
BISBEE, ARIZONA. E. R. DAVIS.

BEAVERTON, MICHIGAN, January 13, 1921.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to note a marked advancement in the spiritual condition of our branch. We are ably presided over by Brother Willis Schrock who with his force of officers is trying to bring us to a higher standard. We feel that their labors have not been in vain.

Amid much sickness and death we feel that God has surely blessed us.

We are sorry we are about to lose Brother and Sister Burt, they being called to another place. But we know that no matter where they go, they will be of much help to others.

Our Sunday school is doing well under the superintendency of Brother Eugene Harder and Brother Willis Schrock (the latter just being released). The interest in the Religio is growing, too.

On Thanksgiving Day sixty-six Saints met at the church for a Thanksgiving dinner, affording us a suggestion of the time when we can all meet to part no more.

Our Christmas entertainment was a success, and now that we have entered upon a new year, we feel a desire burning within us to live nearer to God in the days to come.

The Times Urge the Gathering

In these days of unrest and business depression, we as those that have been called out from among the people to be joint heirs with Jesus Christ, should examine ourselves and see if we are in the faith. (See 2 Corinthians 13: 5.) There is so much in this wicked generation to draw our minds away from the good and pure that unless we are very careful we will find ourselves in that broad way that leads to destruction.

The line between right and wrong is an invisible line, and the alluring things on the wrong side will draw the careless and indifferent over on the side of Satan. Those whom God has set over his church are endeavoring to hasten the gathering of the Saints into those regions that God has designated as the proper place. Let us one and all send up our moneys that we do not really need to run our business or to live on, to Brother McGuire, so that he can secure lands and establish industries that we as a people can be not only self-supporting but that we may have a surplus to use in caring for the sick and needy, and to build up Zion.

Some of you, my brethren, may feel to hesitate about sending your money to our Bishop, but I know Brother McGuire personally, and I have received the witness of the Spirit that he is in the Bishop's office by the will of God. And if we do not one and all turn to with our means and might and help in the establishment of Zion, we shall be the losers. We must come out from the rest of the world, or many of our young will be led astray. Even in our large branches the allurements of the theaters and movies are such as to tempt even those called to be Saints to attend and to get their minds so filled with that which is sensual and worldly as to crowd out that which is spiritual and noble.

The only remedy is for us to gather together in hamlets and communities of our own, where our young people can mingle one with another, and their amusements be arranged by those who have their best interest at heart.

Only think of what we as a people have lost by not heeding the admonition of God through Joseph the Seer, when he commanded the Saints to send up all the money that they could spare and buy all the lands in Caldwell and Jackson and adjoining counties: God said they had moneys enough. But they failed to heed God's word. Now the call comes to us again through God's chosen servants, and shall we fail to heed him who commands his people:

"Verily thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion. . . . Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, it shall not be a land of Zion unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, 2.

The strife between capital and labor has caused a revolution in Russia, and Italy seems on the verge of a revolution. The working class of England and the United States are in a state of unrest, and I believe that the time is not far away when the word of the Lord to us will be fulfilled, that he who will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee to Zion, for in Zion and her stakes will be the only place where people will be at peace one with another.

Surely the hearts of men are failing them for fear. Twenty million in China are on the verge of starvation, besides millions in Austria, Germany, Poland, Armenia; and even right here in our own United States of America, with its bumper crops of wheat, oats, corn, etc., and in big cities the children of those thrown out of work, because of the unsettled conditions, are starving in the midst of plenty.

Let us hasten the gathering by doing our part.

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,

GROTON, CONNECTICUT.

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

Saint Louis Items

Gleaned from the January number of The Branch Bulletin, published at Saint Louis, Missouri.

Elder G. S. Trowbridge preached his farewell sermon on December 26, and a farewell party was given for the family at the church on the 30th. After a program a chest of silver was presented as a token of the love and appreciation of the branch.

Elders E. L. Kelley and Joseph Luff were announced to be in the city on January 16, both to preach, in the morning and evening respectively.

In the election of officers for 1921, Anna De Jong Smith was reelected superintendent. H. T. Burch is in charge of the boys department, and Mathel Bell in charge of the girls.

The Women's Department are devoting the third Thursday of each month to a study of good church books. They are to begin on the 20th to study A Call at Evening, the new book recently put on the market. Others will be studied as this is finished.

Attention is called to a record made by James E. Jacobs, who has not missed attendance at Sunday school in twenty-four years. Along with that record goes what one expects of those who are faithful in such things: he is a regular attendant at other church services and a regular tithe payer.

The pastor, Clyde F. Ellis, spent the Christmas holidays in South Boardman, Michigan, with his parents, an experience he has not had for years. His mother is in poor health.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, January 15, 1921.

Editors Herald: During the past two weeks we have greatly missed the association and services of our city missionary, Elder Fligg, and his appearance among us again is much appreciated.

Through his untiring efforts, together with the priesthood and membership, the work is being placed before the public to the extent that our Sunday night services are largely attended by those not of our faith and the interest is still increasing. We were highly favored with the presence of Apostle U. W. Greene who lectured to us on Sunday and Monday nights, on his trip and experience while in Palestine. He also mentioned the condition of the starving Armenians. At the close of our Monday night service our branch president, Elder Fetting, made a strong appeal for donations for this fund. A collection was taken which amounted to fifty dollars.

Our prayer services are well attended and are very spiritual and uplifting. The Sunday school work is in a very flourishing condition and our only drawback is not having room to take care of our present membership.

Commencing Sunday night, January 16, special meetings will be held in charge of city missionary, William Fligg, and will continue for three or four weeks. Our work is reaching such proportions that it becomes necessary for us to enlarge our present structure or build a new church and plans are now under way to raise funds to this end. We contemplate erecting a building that will accommodate at least 1000 people.

Yours for furtherance of the work,

J. N. MUIR, Branch Correspondent.

PACIFIC GROVE, CALIFORNIA, January 4, 1921.

Editors Herald: Kindly allow me space in your columns to report six months' missionary work, as it is called. It has been a good many years since I reported such work, having been engaged in local work hardly worth reporting.

A little over six months ago we left our home in Monterey, for Windsor, Sonoma County, California, it being thought that the change inland would be beneficial to my health, which was very poor. We went to the home of Brother and Sister Bell, they furnishing us a small but comfortable house in which to live, doing all in their power to make our stay enjoyable. Their kindness will never be forgotten.

I preached for the Saints at Windsor Sunday morning, and at Santa Rosa Sunday evening, Brother Bell taking us and his family in his auto each evening, distance ten miles. I don't know that I am entitled to any reward for preaching there, for I certainly did enjoy it. The music was good, the Saints appreciative, and the Holy Spirit in evidence each night. The attendance increased from first to last. There is a fine band of Saints there. They also remembered our financial needs. My wife worked what she could in canneries and hop fields. I tried several things—got considerable experience, but very little money. We remained there four months, until the gospel tent came, when it was found necessary to give up meetings in the hall in order for the branch to help in the tent work.

We were then taken by Brother Bell in his auto to Irvington, where we had the pleasure of meeting Brother and Sister Davis—live wires, fresh from the hub, Independence.

If they see things in Zion correctly, Zion is surely a goodly place to live, and they ought to, for they have lived there some fifteen years. It certainly does one good to hear them talk of it.

From there Brother Bell took us to Modesto, where we separated, he going home. Here we found some good Saints, among them Brother and Sister Griffin, whom I met in Minnesota some thirty years ago. They are still strong in the faith and looking Zionward, as is also their son, who I think will be heard from some day, as a minister of the Master. The Saints here are working hard, but are handicapped, not having a suitable place in which to hold their meetings. I did what preaching I could for them, and was kindly cared for by several, stopping at the homes of Sister Swall and Brother Vents.

From here we went to Tulare, and were made welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Damron—friends of many years. Brother Damron is a veritable patriot of the branch, the branch being mostly all related to him. He seems to rule wisely and efficiently.

From here we went to Exeter, and were kindly cared for at the home of Brother and Sister Daily, who with their daughter, Lula, are strong in the faith. I did what I could there, after which Brother Daily took us to Dinuba in his auto, where we met a fine band of Saints, presided over by Brother Votaw—all strangers to us except Brother John Wiles, who is a very serviceable man there, and much appreciated by his brethren. It was decided here to hold a course of meetings, eleven in number. They were well attended and I think much enjoyed by all. I know they were by myself. We were made welcome by a number of the Saints here—too numerous to mention. It certainly makes one stronger in the faith to meet such noble-hearted Saints as we do in our travels from place to place.

We next found ourselves at Rocklin, at the home of Brother and Sister Earle, old-time friends of the long ago, still doing what they can for the work they love. We also had the pleasure of meeting here Sister Ada Grant and her mother, still faithful to the cause. Here we held a course of meetings that was much enjoyed by the speaker, and I trust appreciated by those who listened.

We next found ourselves at the very pleasant home of Brother and Sister Chase of San Jose, where we met many old friends and had the pleasure of preaching for them Sunday evening. Then on home to Monterey, stopping to see my brother, Eugene Holt, and Brother Ross at Gilroy. I found myself much improved in health, and many reasons for believing that God had guided and blessed me in my work.

My mission was mostly to the Saints, and my message Zion and the coming of the Lord, which to me are the most important subjects. Since getting home I find I am not nearly so well, and I shall be obliged to leave the coast, as it does not agree with me.

If this should meet the notice of Saints living in New Mexico, I should be pleased to have them write me at the above address.

Hopeful for the well being of Zion, I am
As ever your colaborer, HIRAM L. HOLT.

UNIOPOLIS, OHIO, January 14, 1921.

Editors Herald: The church work is progressing in the little town of Saint Marys, Ohio. Two of our ministry are there, O. J. Hawn and E. L. Ulrich, and about thirty have been baptized at this writing. They rented a hall down there and have had very good attendance—about two hundred every night. There were over a thousand witnessed the baptism recently. ALFRED BARTLEY.

The Religio at Lamoni has recently engaged a series of films of recognized merit for presentation at the chapel of Graceland College once a week, Friday evenings, to be repeated Saturday afternoons. In fact the films shown lately were repeated on Friday evening for the benefit of the many who could not gain admittance to the place otherwise. The whole project is financed by popular subscription and no one is denied admittance, whether he pays or not. In this way the entire course has been guaranteed and it becomes a real community affair. A similar plan is in operation for a lyceum course, and it is planned to put on a Chautauqua here next summer on the same basis.

Notice of Appointment

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder Jesse A. Roberts to the Southern Nebraska District as missionary.
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

January 11, 1921.

The Bishopric

Minnesota District: Brother Lester Whiting, the Bishop's agent for the above district, is for the winter located at 921 West South Avenue, Independence, Missouri, but expects to return to Minnesota as soon as the weather opens up in the spring. Scattered Saints and branch solicitors will, therefore, please forward their tithes and offerings to him at the above address until further notice. Those in the district who have not had an opportunity of subscribing to the General Conference auditorium fund may apply to this office for cards upon which to make their pledges.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Applications for Clergy Certificates

The failure of some of our ministers to comply with published instructions relative to forwarding applications for clergy certificates through the office of the Presidency for indorsement is entailing unnecessary work upon the Clergy Bureau as well as our office.

The printed instructions on the blank should be read carefully and complied with. Please see that money order or draft for one dollar (not cash or personal check) accompanies the application. Do not forward personal checks payable to the Presidency. Also note extra postage required. Write plainly and fill out the blank carefully answering all questions. Leave the space provided for signature of resident clergyman vacant for our indorsement. Be sure that the application bears the indorsement of railroad agent. A little care along these lines will facilitate securing the permit and lessen the labor of all concerned.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Quorum Notices

Elders of Toronto and Owen Sound Districts

On instructions from First Presidency, Elder G. E. Harrington called the elders of the Toronto and Owen Sound Districts to meet at Toronto on December 11, to effect a quorum organization, the name of which is Toronto and Owen Sound Quorum of Elders. We request each elder in these two districts to send his name and address to the undersigned. We want all the brethren to receive help from this organization. Send names and addresses to the secretary. The officers are as follows: M. J. Crowley, 131 Quebec Avenue, Toronto, president; King Cooper, Guelph, Ontario, counselor; Ernest Rowett, Humber Bay, Ontario, secretary-treasurer.

Conference Minutes

MOBILE.—At Escatawpa, Mississippi, October 22, 1920. N. L. Booker and T. J. Booker presiding and district presidency chosen to preside. Evening session in charge of district superintendent of Sunday school, and institute work was the feature. At the following business session district president and counselors reported, also branch presidents and missionaries. Branch reports: Vancleave, 180; Mobile, 118; Bay Minette, 347; Escatawpa, 200; Bishop's agent's report was read and referred to auditing committee, and found correct. District presidency reported condition of the Theodore Branch, and basing action on this report, conference declared the branch disorganized. It recommended the disposal of the church at Theodore, preferably to the Mobile Saints if they desire it. Motion prevailed "that we look with favor on the holding of a reunion in 1921," and N. L. Booker, Alma Booker, and Lester Smith were appointed a committee to investigate and report to next conference. Evening devoted to Women's Department. Preaching by T. C. Kelley and Levi Gamet. Adjourned to meet at Bay Minette, Friday before full moon in March, 1921. Edna Cochran, secretary.

Convention Minutes

Northeastern Illinois.—Sunday school at 4416 Gladys Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, December 3, 1920. Officers elected: J. J. Oliver, superintendent; J. W. Petterson, assistant superintendent; LaJune Howard, secretary-treasurer; Ethel Willamson, normal superintendent; fifty dollars appropriated for officers' yearly expenses. It was provided that an institute be held, arrangements for same to be made by district officers. Also that we lend our support to and indorse the idea of a musical institute. Revision of the standard of excellence by officers was ordered. Adjourned to meet prior to conference with the Mission Branch. LaJune Howard, secretary, 12055 Parnell Avenue, West Pullman, Chicago, Illinois.

Our Departed Ones

MINTUN.—Mary Eliza Mintun, wife of J. F. Mintun, died after many years of illness on December 29, 1920, at her home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, without disturbing anyone, going to sleep and not awaking. Though ill so long, she never, except in a few short instances, requested her husband to cease missionary work on that account. Baptized in July, 1877, and was subject to the sacrifices and privations of a missionary's wife since 1881. Leaves husband and 3 children: Ruth I., Guy F., and Mrs. Alice E. Hussung. Funeral services at the Central Church in Council Bluffs, sermon by O. Salisbury. After the sermon, the family, associated with H. H. Hand, accompanied the body to the Magnolia Cemetery, where the body was laid to rest beside that of her mother and her two children.

HOUTS.—Sarah Ann Houts was born February 3, 1840, in Washington County, Illinois. Married Alma Houts in 1859. Fourteen children were born. Left to mourn, 9 children, 37 grandchildren, and 17 great-grandchildren. Baptized early in life and lived a patient, humble, Christian life. Died January 3, 1921, in Kansas City, at her home at 429 Bellaire Avenue, from where funeral was held, services conducted by J. A. Tanner. Remains taken to Holden, Missouri, where short service was held with D. J. Krahl in charge. Brief remarks by F. P. Scarcliff. Interment in Fairview Cemetery, at Holden, Missouri.

SEELEY.—Emeline Moss was born March 1, 1825, at Flemingsburg, Kentucky. Married Francis A. Seeley, February 26, 1846, 6 boys and 4 girls being born to them. Husband and 4 children have passed to spirit world. Baptized about 50 years ago. Was a great sufferer for years, and for the last eight years was confined to her bed of a broken hip, yet was cheerful and kind. Died January 7, 1921, after being an inmate of the Saints' Home in Lamoni for ten years. Funeral sermon by J. S. Roth, assisted by C. Scott.

ROWLEY.—Samuel, third son of Samuel and Eliza Rowley, was born at Pella, Iowa, May 19, 1868. Married Rebecca Adams in 1890. Four sons and 4 daughters were born, all of whom survive. Baptized October 15, 1893, and was faithful unto death. Died January 5, 1921, at Hiteman, Iowa, from a mine accident. Leaves wife and 8 children, 2 brothers, 4 sisters, 9 grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends. Funeral from Saints' church in Hiteman, sermon by Cyril E. Wight, assisted by Thomas Williams. Interment at Oak View Cemetery, Albia, Iowa.

ANDREWS.—Brother George Thomas Andrews passed peacefully to rest from a severe baptism of suffering at his home in Seattle, Washington, November 20, 1920—his 40th birthday. He received all the care loving hands could bestow, also the administration of the church and the highest medical science. Was son of Erother and Sister F. J. Andrews, in whose home the San Francisco Branch was organized. Sister M. E. Anthony, his mother, still lives in or near San Francisco. Leaves devoted wife, and daughter Lovita, also 2 sisters. Services attended by evidences of deep regard in which he was held, by way of flowers and beautiful appointments. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

STEFFEE.—Sister Rosena Catherine Steffee was born in Wittenburg, Germany, March 25, 1832. Married Frank Steffee in 1867. Baptized April 6, 1875. Located in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1894. Died December 24, 1920. Was blessed with three daughters, one of whom preceded her in death. Mrs. Henry Islieb and Mrs. Thomas McMackin, both of Boston, survive, with one great-grandchild and 3 great-great-grandchildren. Many former missionaries to the Eastern Mission will remember her hospitality. Services in charge of J. D. Lewis, sermon by A. E. Stone. Interment in Temple Cemetery.

BETTS.—Peter M. Betts was born in London, England, in 1829. Married Elizabeth Harrison in Sheffield, England, in 1850. Came to United States in 1864. Was the father of 8 children, 4 of whom survive. Baptized in 1871 at San Francisco, California, and soon after ordained an elder. Was an active and earnest worker. His home was always open to the ministry. Came to Santa Ana in 1879, and has resided in Orange County until two months prior to his death, having lived at Newport Beach nearly twelve years. A devoted and affectionate husband. Died December 23, 1920. His widow, aged 93, survives. Funeral at Santa Ana, December 27. Sermon by F. G. Pitt.

The Herald's Place

We are reprinting herewith an editorial written by President Joseph Smith in 1891, still of live interest to the church. The church is a place to develop our understanding and manhood, and not a place to accept dogma without consideration. This latter has never been the position of the church of God, but rather "Come let us reason together."

At the same time we are reminded that our late President Joseph Smith also had the same difficulties that we have to-day. He was called in question seriously at times for exclusion. Things that have been excluded from the HERALD, so far as we have been able to observe, have been almost without exception on literary merit. One restriction is, our duty to present the work of the church, and not to attempt to right every wrong in the world and fight every battle. To do this would make the HERALD a personal organ for the personal opinions of the editors, rather than the organ of the church.

It takes, it is true, at times, keen discrimination; especially when some of our friends write who delight to call a spade a spade. That is well enough. We want the truth. But it is trying when a man sees a garden spade, and insists on calling it a steam shovel.

The HERALD should be preeminently the medium of information for our readers. It should be the medium used for communications from officers of the church. It should be the medium for the discussion of mooted questions; and it should present the various viewpoints of interest to the church, yet at the same time be preeminently for the work of the church, and not for any other propaganda. The reprint follows:

The Censor of the Church Press—Who Is He?

"In the Homiletic Review for September, Doctor William Hayes Ward, the editor of the Independent, speaks with much dignity and good sense on "The religious paper and the ministry": "The minister has a right, also, to demand of his religious paper, whether denominational or general, that it shall provide him with abundant means to form his own conclusions on all important questions, religious or ecclesiastical, that come before him as a teacher of religion. That means that his paper must, above all things, not exclude discussions on matters discussed in his denomination. The paper is not intended to suppress, but to promote discussion, with the understanding that the truth will gain thereby, and that truth is no Eastern baby that must be bound so tightly that she cannot brush off a fly, but is a sturdy youth whom much exercise and some buffeting will not injure." "

"We are beset on every side."

"There is a strong element in the church who greatly desire a censorship for the church press and its literature.

"The chief argument in favor of such an office, or the work of such an ecclesiastic, is couched in the formula, 'If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for the battle?' It is held that the organ of the church is the trumpet; and that if there be no certainty with respect to what is found in that organ, those engaged in the fight do not know how to prepare themselves for the battle. It is also held by these workers, that the church, or somebody in it, should provide such mental and moral food, in the way of the church organ and the general literature of the church, that the Saints should be fed, their faith strengthened, their minds led into right channels of thought, and they be protected from all that is calculated to injure, hurt, or lead them away from right ways of thought and conduct. There is a good deal of truth in this statement of the case.

"We have from the start taken the ground that from the nature of the work the Saints were called to do, the requirement of the apostle's injunction, 'Prove all things, hold fast that which is good,' made it practically impossible that there should be anywhere dogmatic restriction upon inquiry. Besides this, the elders everywhere teach that men, all men, Saints, sinners, the well-doers and the 'ne'er-do-wells,' the rich and the poor, are all to give an account and answer, each for what he has done in the body, the living spirit being made the responsible keeper of the dying flesh. The fact of there being an accounting and a settlement, or judgment, carries with it the conclusion of responsibility as diversified and universal as the race.

"To us, this idea of responsibility has always been coupled with the liberty of self-determination, the exercise of the will in self-judgment, that is entirely incompatible with the office work of a spiritual censorship. And while we might be quite willing to submit to one if it should be decided best, we cannot fail to ask the mental question, 'If men are to be judged for the use of the faculties they possess, and for what is done individually, rewarded or deprived of reward as merit or demerit shall appear, why ought not all to be allowed to see, read, hear, examine, and consider the same things, and all of them? Why should there be an extreme anxiety on the part of any to keep the things with which they may be familiar, or of which they may have knowledge, or opinion, from the observation of others because they are thought to be hurtful in themselves, or tend to possible injury if misunderstood, or the knowledge thereof misapplied.

"The theory of comprehending from contrasts is clearly taught in the Book of Mormon, and the statement made, that good and evil are set before men according to the design of God that they may choose the good that they may be blessed by it. Nevertheless the evil is set before them and they may make choice of it, if they will. We have improved somewhat upon the idea, it would appear, and now put only the absolute good before the people, keep the evil out of sight; let the people have only what is absolutely true, keep that which is false away from them; they may perchance choose the false, their taste became vitiated, and the true be left by them untailed and unappreciated.

"As a church, it is to our interest to set the pure gospel before the people; and only that which is true; there is error enough in the world without our teaching it, or letting it appear in our periodicals. This is urged in favor of censorship.

"This is true. It is to the interest of all that only the truth shall be taught by the church, and if the truth were always determinable, to the extremest nicety, it would be an excellent thing that the sifted product only should see the light. Who shall be the sifter?

"Not long since we had a letter and an article accompanying it in which article a view, or opinion, in regard to certain Scripture was presented, with the request that if the opinion was not a correct one that some one who could be trusted to present the position of the church upon the subject should do so. We replied, sending a statement made by the former president of the church as to the meaning of the Scripture. This was not satisfactory, for the reason that the brother does not see how he can accept the dogmatic statement of any man, no matter what his position; and unless an opinion given upon it can be substantiated by proofs and arguments in sufficient amount and force to preponderate his, then his view must stand to him as the correct one. Now, who shall speak for the church in this instance?"

"This is only one of the many instances that are constantly occurring, and it will be interesting to learn who may be trusted to state the position of the church in any and all of them.

"The church is now being represented by many in the field of religious controversy. All agree that the days of dogma and creed are passing away. Each one feels that he is duly commissioned to contend against wrong, evil, error, and falsehood. Each feels himself to be a chosen champion of truth. Each has within himself the witness that the gospel is true and Jesus is the Christ. Each knows that his standards of evidence within and without the church, are the Bible, (Old and New Testaments) the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, and the revelations accepted by the church as being from God. Each one feels at liberty to preach the word according to the leading of the Spirit to him. None acknowledges any king, dictator, master, or lawgiver, but Christ. To each the law of God—his word—is supreme. When in his field and in his pulpit each feels that he then and there represents Christ, and the church; just as much so as does any other minister in any other part of the general field; and that he speaks for the church upon all questions vital to the spiritual enlightenment and salvation of those who hear him. He does not admit in either theory or fact that he is watched over, supervised, dictated to, or controlled by any of his fellow ministers, far or near, as to what he shall say or how he shall say it. The opinions of men he regards as human, and granting opportunities to be the same, he sees no reason why his opinion is not entitled to respect and may not be as nearly correct as that of any other; hence he declines to accept the mere utterance of another as conclusive—he must have proof; if not proof, argument, reason. He knows himself to be entitled to the ministration of the Spirit; he feels the necessity for an upright and blameless life in order that he may be assured of the counsel and aid of the Spirit when needed; if he feels sure of himself in these particulars he sees no good reason why he should submit either contemplated sermon, or written screeds to the dictation of another. To such a man his books are his study, his work and his thoughts are his daily companions; his only effect or wish is that the truth may be known and prevail. He has no fear because he knows that truth only will abide; that error must die, whether the error be his, or another's. He has no doubt; or if he has, it is not upon the great vital questions discussed between himself and other believers; and in reference to those arising on minor, or correlative questions, he prays for direction and delves into the mines of truth, the word of God.

"To us the trust in each other as the ministers of the truth that is felt all over the field is not a wonderful thing; except its universality; it is the result of confidence in the truth itself, not in what any one man may hold to be the truth; but that which is held and demonstrated by one by all. Within the domain of this truth is there any need of a censor; out of this realm would there be any utility in a censorship?"—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 38, pp. 789, 790.

Aims of the Sunday School

Important pedagogical propositions involved in the basis proposed for new lessons.

The Consulting Board of the Sunday school has taken up in several meetings during the past year 1920, the work of the Sunday school, and the aims which we should achieve.

There is a general agreement that the whole work must be tested by our final general aims, to develop living Christians, possessing the habits of living Christian life, prepared for citizenship in Zion.

To accomplish this general aim, very briefly stated above, the work for each Quarterly has been examined, and consideration given to the child's attitude, habitual knowledges, and habits and aims represented by each Quarterly. What should the child know at each given period? What habits should be developed? What habits should we strive to have developed? What attitudes should be developed at each period?

In most instances below, the first time that a habit or attitude is mentioned, the term is used in its simplest possible term. Even a young child may learn the habit of prayer, but there should be throughout childhood a growing appreciation of what that habit means. At the earliest age, but little more may be accomplished than habit. But the habit of prayer may be emphasized at a surprisingly early age.

It would be interesting to take up and evaluate each of these aims. But we do not here even state them in the order of weight or importance. Nor do the board attempt here any explanatory terms, but rather state these aims as tersely as possible.

The Consulting Board will be glad to have these aims gone over carefully by our Sunday school officers and teachers and criticisms made. Are some of these aims stated too early? Are others brought in and stated later than they should be? What additional suggestions can be made, or what additional habits, attitudes, and knowledges should be expected?

Both suggestions and criticisms can be sent to this office, addressed to HERALD Editors.

Suggested Aims for Beginners Quarterly Ages 4, 5, and 6

(These aims are substantially the same as those now given in the front of the present Beginners Quarterly.)

I. Habits:

1. Prayer, thanking God for his good gifts.
2. Obedience.
3. Kindness to father and mother, to the family, and to plants and animals.
4. Helpfulness, to mother and smaller members of the family.
5. Giving, to the Sunday school and church.

II. Attitudes:

1. Reverence, to parents and to God.
2. Repentance for wrongdoing.
3. Forgiveness towards others.
4. Thankfulness for God's gifts to us, for the sun, wind, and rain, for plants and animals, for father and mother, and his best Gift.
5. Kindliness toward animal pets.
6. Care for flowers, birds, and animals—God's gifts to us.
7. Thankfulness unto our heavenly Father, and to Jesus for love and care.

III. Knowledges:

1. God in nature.
2. God as the Father of all.
3. His care, protection, and love for all.
4. Jesus, his love for us, his life and home.
5. God's care of life, his care for his children.
6. Jesus as the Helper.
7. Friendly helpers and workers in animal life.
8. The home life of Jesus.
9. Our part in the care of flowers, birds, and animals.

Suggested Aims for Primary Lessons

Ages 7, 8, and 9

I. Habits to Be Formed:

1. Actual habit of praying. The big thing of this period is concrete prayer and its motivation. Stories used should show need for prayer.
2. Habits of truthfulness, kindness, honesty, purity, cleanliness, obedience, orderliness, thanksgiving.
3. Habit of giving, paying of tithing, of giving all above needs and just wants.
4. Habit of visiting sick, calling for administration, etc.
5. Start the habit of Bible reading (select places).

II. Attitudes to Be Acquired:

1. Attitude of faith. This is a predominant point of this period.
2. Respect and reverence for church officers, for priests' visits, for parents and teachers, for missionaries, for playmates. (Should offset tendency to teasing, bullying, etc.)
3. Respect for church ordinances, such as blessing of children, sacrament, baptism, etc. Reverence for Sabbath.
4. The will to be kind, good, right, pure, clean, honest, intelligent. These should offset opposite tendencies. There should be created a disgust for filth uncleanness, lies, profanity, tobacco, ignorance.
5. The attitude of thankfulness and gratitude under all circumstances, especially to God as Creator, protector, and friend.
6. Reverence, respect for Jesus as the Son of God, as a helper and friend of man, as a perfect example.

III. Knowledges to Be Acquired:

1. Knowledge of the first principles of the gospel as essential.
2. Knowledge of the organization of the church, especially the leading officers, the prophet or leader and the apostles.
3. Nature and purpose of tithing.
4. Knowledge of the essential teachings of the church.
5. Knowledge of existence of God's Holy Spirit as the silent teacher, and of the existence of angels to represent God.
6. Geographical knowledge, customs, etc., of Bible lands. Comparisons should be made of child life, marriage customs, and family life, industry, etc., as contrasted with life of our own time.
7. Memory gems of proper kind to bring out aims of primary lessons.

Note.—In our opinion all stories, memory verses, illustrations, lesson materials, etc., should be chosen and used at all times with reference to such aims as have been agreed upon, similar to those mentioned above. Each story or lesson should have some definite, concrete, attainable aims. No story, not even a Bible story, should be told for the mere sake of filling up time, but should have some definite result in some necessary attitude or knowledge on the part of the pupil. Just because some material is good is not sufficient reason for its use. It must be good for something, and that something should fit in with the aims of the lesson and serve to bring about some definite result. We cannot assume that an aim is realized but must insist that it be realized and the best way to secure this is to insist that the teacher be thoroughly conscious of this aim and that it be developed in the minds of the pupil. Every attempt should be made to have the pupils actually form the habits mentioned. The Sunday school should guard carefully as to the attitude it is creating in the minds of the pupils. While certain specific knowl-edges should be acquired it is a mistake to assume that the pupil shall learn long lists of concrete facts to reproduce from rote memory. Chronological order certainly should not be emphasized at this period.

Suggested Aims for Junior Lessons

Ages 10, 11, and 12

I. Habits to Be Formed:

1. Habit of saying prayers and bearing testimony.
2. Habit of truthfulness, kindness, honesty, purity, cleanliness, cooperation, obedience, thrift, orderliness, gratitude, giving, consecration, helpfulness, service to others, doing a good turn daily, industry, courtesy, integrity, dependability, visiting the sick.
3. Skill in the use of the Bible.
4. Calling for administration.
5. Paying tithes, and giving all above needs and just wants.
6. Bible reading.
7. Fair play, cooperation, social, constructive.
8. Health.

II. Attitudes:

1. Will to be kind, good, right, pure, clean, honest, intelligent. There should be created a disgust for filth, uncleanness, lies, profanity, tobacco, liquor, ignorance.
2. Courage, respect for law.
3. Respect and reverence for church ordinances, for God and his Son, Jesus, for parents, teachers, and companions.
4. Reverence for the Sabbath.
5. Desire to be of service, working with God and one another.
6. Appreciation of one's own value as helper and worker.
7. Increase of faith in God and in God's servants.
8. Respect for church officers and proper attitude at the visitation of church officers.
9. God as a worker and overseer and ruler of men's lives.
10. An appreciation of the concept that Jesus died to vindicate the truth of his teachings.
11. Gang instinct. Right social attitude.

III. Knowledges:

1. Books of the Bible which contain material already taught to the pupils, where they are in the Bible, etc.
2. Memory gems which contributed the aims, etc.
3. Biography of Old and New Testament to show God at work in the lives of men, including Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.
4. Stories of past and present missionaries, both in and out of the church.
5. Life and death of Jesus.
6. Geographical knowledges, comparisons of customs, child life, marriage customs, family life, burial customs, transportation, industry in those times.
7. Knowledge of peculiar teachings of our own church, revelation, restoration, (briefly) resurrection, eternal judgment, purpose of Doctrine and Covenants, what the Book of Mormon is.
8. So much of church organization as necessary to show who can function in all work included in these aims, as who can perform marriages, pass sacrament, etc. (Touch lightly on church organization.)
9. Beginning of cooperative principle.
10. Word of Wisdom.

Suggested Aims for Intermediate Lessons

Ages 13, 14, and 15

I. Habits to Be Formed:

1. Continue habit of prayer and testimony.
2. Continue to stress and reinforce all good habits mentioned under Junior Lessons.
3. Encourage the habit of cooperation and teamwork for social service.
4. Encourage the habit of fair play.
5. Living Christian life—a new life.

II. Attitudes to Be Acquired:

1. Honor and fidelity to chum, to friend, and to organization.
2. High regard for one's own church, but tolerance for others.
3. Continue the attitudes mentioned for Juniors and motivate them.
4. Encourage the attitude of chivalry and respect for women.
5. Putting away childish things. (1 Corinthians 13.)
6. Responsibility.

III. Knowledges to Be Acquired:

1. Biography from motive and purpose point of view with development of character as the aim.
2. Life of Jesus as an ideal character.
3. Reasons for habits and attitudes above mentioned; the why of church doctrines, such as faith, repentance, baptisms, Sabbath keeping, resurrection, revelation, etc.
4. Knowledge of the ideal of Zion as a means of helping one another, and as a means of providing a future vocation and an opportunity for social service.
5. The great work of religious leaders of all churches.
6. Interpretation of Biblical literary gems.
7. Reasons for church practices such as the sacrament, priests' visits, close communion, blessing of children, etc.
8. New birth, spiritual life, the work of the Holy Spirit.

Suggested Aims for Senior Lessons

Ages 16, 17, and 18

I. Habits to Be Formed:

1. Attempt to encourage and reinforce habits already formed by furnishing information about the nature of habit and the reason for habit formation.

II. Attitudes:

1. Reestablish faith.
2. Will to cooperate for common ends.
3. Loyalty to leader, fidelity to group and to church.
4. Attitudes mentioned under Junior and Intermediate Lessons should be maintained and strengthened if possible.
5. Leadership and responsibility.

III. Knowledges to Be Acquired:

1. Social ethics, discussion of card playing, dancing, theater going; attitude toward opposite sex; criticism; Sabbath keeping; family relationships.
2. Proofs of God's existence; Christ's existence and mission; reasonableness of religion from standpoint of mental and physical health; from standpoint of life of service; need of church ordinances, such as sacrament, prophecy, tongues, baptism, blessing of children, prayer and testimony, singing.
3. Zion as an opportunity for cooperation and teamwork—leadership and responsibility.
4. Church history as a proof of God's dealing with men and nations; the gathering and Zion movement; growth of the conception of God; the controlling purpose of history.
5. A little study of comparative religion to substantiate faith.
6. Reason for allegiance to our own church.
7. Reason for tolerance to others.
8. Reasons for atonement.
9. Leadership.

Suggested Aims for AdultsI. Habits:

1. Psychological reasons for forming good habits.
2. Social factors that make for good habits.
3. Tithing, consecration, inventory, and budget making.

II. Attitudes:

1. Repeat attitudes for Senior.
2. Duty to church—opportunity to serve.
3. Evaluation of self in light of service to church.
4. Loyalty.

5. Proper attitudes toward recreational opportunities, dancing, cards, theater going, etc., family relationship, opposite sex.

6. Vision of Zion.

7. Proper attitude toward leaders and our relationship to them.

8. Proper attitude toward rights and limitations of free speech.

a. Member.

b. Officer.

III. Knowledges—Realizations:

1. Financial law of Zion, substantive law and law of procedure.
2. Realization of our social relationships in Zion.
3. Relationship of Zion to the world.
4. Church civics—functional and structural.
5. Knowledge of church history and bearing upon church problems.
6. Missionary problems of church.
7. Pastoral.
8. Rules of free speech. Rights—limitations of free speech, press.
9. Revelation—what is it?
10. Place of music in our lives.
11. Scripture support of our church doctrines.

The Death of R. C. Evans

To-day the wires brought us the unexpected news of the death of R. C. Evans. Mr. Evans, we understand, was in Kansas City the week before his death arranging to begin a campaign against the church to be conducted in Kansas City and vicinity. His death occurred at Toronto at four o'clock in the morning of the 18th of January, from pneumonia. His lectures according to rumor were to have begun in Kansas City before long. The church was ready to meet the onslaught and bear with serenity the attack as it has done so many similar attacks in the past. Nevertheless we are content to leave the matter with the great God who does all things well and seems to have decided that this man should go thus far and no farther. Neither friend nor foe may challenge the issue.

We abhor hypocrisy and now that R. C. Evans is dead we would not bring to his tomb any eulogy we would not have given him while he lived. Yet it is true that at such a time the heart goes back beyond the years of estrangement and we think of him during the years when he was a companion in arms, loved by many, and given an implicit trust in the hearts of many that should sober any man and make him careful of his stewardship in that regard.

It seems to us pitiable that a man of such capabilities should end the declining years of life in a desperate and unhappy effort to destroy the work to which he gave forty-two of the best years of his life. But the record is ended and the case has gone to a higher tribunal. We bring neither censure nor praise because neither could affect his standing before God who must ultimately pass upon his work as upon ours.

Yet it is true that reflections may profit all. His friends may take home to their hearts such lesson as there is for them to learn. His opponents, who might feel to judge and condemn him harshly, may well ask themselves the question, "Will I stand fast to the end, or is there danger that I, too, may sometime be found seeking to ruin the work that I am now trying to build up?" Let all fortify themselves against such a contingency by a deep-rooted determination to stand true to the revelations of God and the faith once delivered to the Saints.

The Organization of Agriculture as a Zionie Problem

By C. E. Irwin

The author, as head of the agricultural commission, gives us a basis from which we may proceed in developing the agricultural side of our Zionie plan.

Some one has said that the most practical thing in the world is theory. Theory, however, becomes practical only when it crystallizes into tangible result. When one assumes to be so ambitious as to discuss a problem with such magnitude as this one, at first thought most people are inclined to evaluate such an attempt as the mental adventure of a theorist and consequently to dismiss the matter solely on the ground that a theory is worthless unless it can be put into practice.

Whether or not in the development of the make-up of a Zionie program it shall be possible to organize our agricultural interests we do not know, and while it is not the attempt of this paper to definitely designate the plan of such an organization it ought not to require lengthy argument to sustain the point that everything which is accomplished and which is worth while accomplishing must have been first carefully thought out. Of the various types of associations and organizations formed within the last decade, it is acknowledged by all students of political economy and sociology that the one class most difficult to organize for mutual benefit and protection has been the American farmer. The reason for this situation is quite obvious. Since the break-up of the feudal system in Europe the farmer has been slowly but certainly developing himself into an individualist of the first order. He has assumed that this tendency was necessary even if not entirely defensible. The development of the farmstead, the residence of the entrepreneur, the factory site of the particular industry, have been founded upon the primary principles that the farmer must endure isolation and submit to hardships which come from a forced dissociation from his fellows. It is not our purpose, however, to discuss the issue arising between fundamental theories of communism and the principal contentions of the individualist system, though we do deem it important to raise the question of group interests versus individual interests.

We have not long been converted to the idea that the welfare of the group is of paramount importance in contrast to the importance of the welfare of the individual. In spite of the fact, however, that group interests are regarded as a novelty the world is rapidly becoming converted to the contention that after all the thing which really matters is the welfare of the group.

To return, therefore, to the matter of agricultural organization it would seem in the face of present development to be a sound policy to encourage the development of an agricultural organization sponsored and fostered and supported not by the administrative officers of the church, but by the farmers themselves. If there be such a thing as a temporal salvation, an economic welfare, then the farmer in an organized capacity ought to be better able to determine what factors, if put into operation, will assist him as a farmer to secure the proper agency which is to function for the well-being of the group. Any type of an organization which comes down from the administrative head of the church ready made, which is created as a part of a general paternalistic policy, will inevitably fail. On the other hand, any organization which derives its vitality from the enthusiasm of the group for which it is expected to render service will have at least a fair chance for success. Let it be understood, therefore, that while these following suggestions come from the head of the agricultural commission, who unfortunately is not at present an active farmer, it appears to us to be good logic that the farmers themselves should form their organization and proceed in the Zionie development in accordance with the vision which they have of the importance of the work. The accompanying graph and the suggestions which are herein set forth are in nowise intended to dictate either to the farmer or to the church officials. The problem is rather being attacked purely out of a mutual academic interest in the movement as a social and economic experiment.

The work of the commission as suggested naturally falls into certain divisions, such as the farm crops problem, the soil problem, problem of animal husbandry, and the horticultural problem, farm engineering problem, farm management problem, rural credit problem, agricultural experimentation, agricultural education, and the rural social problem.

If the farmers of this church are really converted to the fundamental logic of latter-day Zionism they must have already recognized the power which may possibly accrue through unity of action dominated and actuated by the spirit of consecration. We have made bold, therefore, to suggest that one of the most feasible plans for the organization of our agriculture, includes the creation of certain major departments or bureaus possibly along the lines which we have just suggested and that the heads of these bureaus or departments, who are the direct representatives of the farming population and chosen by them, shall sit together with the head of the commission and thus create a board of experts in the field of agricultural science and who shall in all things be the servants of the group which they represent. In other words, in the care and maintenance of the soils within the region known as Zion, a soil expert will be secured whose service will be contributed to the group with the direct result that soil vitality be conserved and that its fertility be increased. Or in the case of animal husbandry it would be desirable to place in charge of this work the best animal husbandry specialist that the farmers are able to procure. With him will be associated specialists in the various fields which fall within the limitations of his particular department—as for instance, dairy husbandry, the production of draft and road horses, insuring a plentiful supply of the proper types of meat supply animals, and that these heads of the various departments or bureaus be then associated together as a commission, representative of the farmers as a whole. Let us study the chart.

Bureau of Farm Crops

In the organization of the bureau of farm crops it will be desirable to secure a trained specialist in this field to have charge of this department of the work. It may not necessarily require a high degree of technical knowledge to grow corn in the corn belt States; it does, however, require a high degree of technical knowledge to grow the best possible crop of corn at a minimum cost with the least possible depreciation in the fertility of the soil. This chief of the farm crops' bureau, therefore, acting in the capacity of a servant for the farmers will find it expedient to study the conditions surrounding the planting, cultivation, and harvesting of the various farm crops. It is presumed, however, that he will ally himself closely with the bureau of soils so as to be able to determine what particular sections of the country are best adapted for certain types of cereal crops, fiber crops, vegetable farming, or forage crops. Having learned the soil conditions through cooperation with the soil bureau he will be in a position, first, to proceed upon a systematic labor division and, second, to proceed in the location of the various farmers according to their previous experience and equipment. The matter of plant pathology or disease control will likewise be under his supervision so that when there shall be need for control measures, specialists in plant diseases can be assigned to the different farming communities for the purpose of checking the spread of these wasteful and destructive agents.

Bureau of Soils

So far as the personnel is concerned, these various bureaus will have organizations practically identical. When we think of the problems of the development of Zion we can scarcely avoid considering this one as being very important in its demand for immediate consideration. Our economical problems, like every other problem arising within our social system, are sequential; that is, they are tied together, linked up, so that when we undertake the job of thinking out a definite plan we must expect to be confronted by this chainlike series of problems. If there are problems, however, which are fundamental and which demand attention first, certainly the problem of agriculture demands such consideration because it is basic; and within the field of agriculture, certainly the first problem demanding consideration is the problem of the soil. We need to know what types of soils we have in the territory which we regard as Zion. The work which the Federal Government has done in the making of soil surveys either directly from the Department of Agriculture or through the State agricultural colleges is, of course, valuable to us and affords an excellent basis for our future work along this line.

The principal difficulty lies not in the character of the work already accomplished, but in the fact that an insufficient amount of it has been finished. If the problem of Zion is an immense one and if the industrial development is a matter for our urgent consideration, we can spend our energy in no better way than in the study of our soil conditions in order that agriculture, the basic industry, may be securely established. Once we have determined the various types of soils within a prescribed area we shall be in a position to attempt to do constructive work along the line of increasing and preserving the soil fertility.

Finally, such a soil survey will also indicate where the less desirable land is located and will indicate the possible uses in our system. This involves the study of the uses to which rough and broken country may be put or the probable advisability of developing drainage projects in the reclamation of lowlands. This study of the soils would also be of inestimable value in that it would serve as an index as to the validity of the prevailing market price obtaining for the various types of soils.

Bureau of Animal Husbandry

In this bureau it should be the aim of the animal husbandry specialist to supervise the production of draft animals of the highest types as well as the best types of road animals. This involves extensive experiments in breeding; experiments which should be carried on continuously so that so far as road and draft animals are concerned the highest type of stock shall be available, not only for domestic use within the group, but shall be available in assisting to supply the demand from the outside. What is true of horses and mules is just as true in the production of meat supply animals. Here we have the problem of breeding and experimentation, together with the problem of rationing and feeding of meat animals in preparation for the market. Incidentally, and growing out of the attempt to satisfy the demand for meat supply comes the question of the production of an adequate supply of wool to be used as a basis for textile industries. Likewise, the problem of dairy husbandry is not only a problem of breeding and rationing, but it involves the laying of the foundation for the development of dairy industries and the production of dairy products. The care of poultry and the market of poultry products together with the problem of an adequate supply of furs produced through the medium of the commercial fur farm are also problems demanding the attention of the head of the bureau.

Finally, as in the case of farm crops, we have animal diseases to be reckoned with which involves the creating of a staff of veterinary experts upon whose service the farming population shall come to depend.

Bureau of Horticulture

On the basis of the facts determined through our soil survey we shall be in a position to collect the horticulturists of the church and locate them in the sections best adapted to fruit production. The details of the work in this bureau are not materially different from the work in any of the other bureaus except that the technique of horticulture is applied rather than the technique of animal husbandry or farm crops. It would probably be advisable to unite with the bureau of horticulture those persons primarily interested in bee culture.

Bureau of Farm Engineering

Farm engineering is a comparatively new profession. That it is popular, however, is not to be denied from the fact that almost everyone, if, indeed, not all of the State agricultural colleges, are now offering courses in this field. The reason for the popularity of this type of engineering is due no doubt to the marked increase in the use of power machinery on the farm. The advent of the gasoline motor and the electric dynamo have increased wonderfully the possibilities for the use of power in farming operations. With this demand, of course, has come the disposition on the part of the State agricultural colleges to prepare men for service in this field. The future will probably witness an even more marked increase in the use of power machinery. Just recently we have witnessed a justification for the application of power on the farm, first, because it eliminated a considerable percentage of the man power which would have otherwise been necessary and, second, because it has made the farm more efficient. Besides the demand for mechanical experts in farm operations, structural engineering is also becoming more prominent in the designing and the construction of suitable types of farm buildings. This form of specialized labor will also, no doubt, become more in demand in the near future.

Bureau of Farm Management

The chief of this bureau is one of the most important of all of the officials in the entire agricultural program. He stands in the same relation to the farmer as the general manager of an industrial corporation to the workingmen of the plant, except that in this case he is an agent of the farmer. The functions which he performs are those which are least considered by the average farmer and which are of the greatest importance. There are few farmers to-day who know how to obtain an accurate statement of the condition of their farm plant. Lack of system in keeping records, inability to efficiently apply the labor factor, and the failure to develop proper accounting systems are the weak points in the average farmer to-day regarded as a business manager of the industry over which he has control. It shall be the business, therefore, of the farm management corps of experts not only to design appropriate and valuable record forms, but to assist the farmer in the keeping of these records, and above all in the interpretation of them. In addition to the matter of records, the farm manager deals with and connects up with the general marketing commission, formulated to bridge the gap between the producer and the consumer. In other words, he acts as the agent of the farmer in the marketing of farm products.

Finally, the farm manager assumes the function of an efficiency engineer in directing the planning and layout of the farm plant, the grouping of buildings, the division of the farmstead, and the problem of crop rotation. These are all problems found grouped under this bureau.

Bureau of Agricultural Education and Experimentation

The development of agriculture on the technical side has for half a century been one of the aims of the Department of Agriculture. The conception of the importance of this phase of the work has been responsible in a large way for the magnificent growth of the State agricultural colleges throughout the country. More than any other one institution in this country the State agricultural college has stood with its corps of workers in the immediate position to render service to the farmer. No other organization can compare with it either in the volume of service rendered or in the variety of assistance offered. Operating upon this entirely valid principle, Latter Day Saint farmers ought, in the process of the development of agricultural Zion, to catch a vision of the very great importance of this line of work. There should be a concerted demand on the part of every progressive farmer for the establishment of, such an educational agency, allied preferably with Graceland College, that will meet the needs of this people. Such an overhead organization should be created at once so that through the departmental organization it might proceed to administer and direct as the forward movement of Zion becomes more and more apparent.

Besides regulating that part of the common school curriculum which relates to training in agriculture, a general department should be added to the college offering courses of instruction in the various agricultural fields of study. Already there is a considerable demand for this work arising from the young people who wish to secure that type of training. They must be turned out from Graceland, however, because of lack of equipment which prevents the addition of the desired courses. It is likely, however, that the college authorities will make a beginning in this direction in the very near future so that the young people of the church, especially from the agricultural sections, will do well to investigate the offers which Graceland proposes to afford next year before they determine definitely to take up a course of study in some other institution. Once the department has been established at Graceland its development and extension will be a matter to be determined by the amount of funds available, the popularity of the demand for those courses, and the progressive spirit manifested by Latter Day Saint farmers throughout the church.

When this full and complete development becomes a possibility the experimental work, including field tests and laboratory problems, will be of great value to our farmers. Problems of live stock breeding, feeding experiments, the problem of plant development, horticulture experiments such as budding and grafting, etc., experiments in the treatment of soils and the application of fertilizers, these together with many others will make the department a clearing house for the latest and most up-to-date scientific information that can be had. Through the function of an extension department which may be regarded as a part of the college work, assistance may easily be rendered in the matter of dissemination of information providing helps in the perfecting of local farm organizations.

One further function which this bureau should perform is the maintenance of a meteorological division. The work of this division would be to collect various types of reports and records regarding weather conditions and certain forecasts so that the farmers might have the advantage which would particularly accrue to them during the harvesting season. Our wireless system would serve us admirably in the spread of this sort of information. This plan is now being talked of and being experimented with by the Federal Department of Agriculture and it will probably be but a short time when some wireless reporting will be made. Tests have already been made, I am informed, so that the Federal Government feels justified it is sufficiently practicable to extend the service. Our communication department or commission, in connection both with the meteorological division at Graceland and with the Federal service could perform a most important function which would mean the saving of thousands of dollars during the course of the year.

Bureau of Farm Capital and Credit

The determination of the capital requirements in farming as an industry is by no means an easy task. But this bureau at least should perform its function so far as the determination of the general capital investment as it appears from the farmer's point of view. The bureau, however, should be linked up very closely with the finance commission in the person of the best rural credits expert that it is possible to secure. The head of this bureau should have wide experience as a banker who has dealt extensively in the field of rural credits. In other words, this individual should know the farming industry, but he should know it and see it through the eyes of a banker. Probably no other man in the whole commission has a more important function to perform than the financial administrator in this bureau. He must be a big-calibered man; a man whose judgment is respected and who can be depended upon to see things in their proper perspective.

Rural Social Problem

Individualism is dying. Group consciousness in an economical sense as well as in a social sense—if, indeed, they may be separated—is coming to take the place of individual consciousness. This may not mean the grouping of our agricultural population together upon the commercial basis, though certainly some features of communism are not to be dismissed without proper consideration, nor yet is it feasible to allow prejudice against communism to persist merely because we have been accustomed to think that communism inevitably must fail. Isolation and the lack of sufficient means for communication are responsible primarily for the unfortunate exodus from the farm to the city. Fundamentally, people are social beings, and any system which grows up among our people ought to be considered carefully as to the importance of healthy social intercourse in the stimulation of spiritual and economic morale. Our purpose in this paper is not to propose a definite plan by which these desirable results may be accomplished; it is our purpose rather to enlist the sympathetic consideration of some agencies or individuals who will see the vision of the possibilities of the problem presented.

We have made bold to attack this problem because we are made to feel almost daily the necessity for some definite action being taken in the attempt to work out our temporal salvation, so that the work of Zion shall mean something more to us than an unattainable ideal. The year 1920 brought to our minds the idea that the church is now passing the century mark. We are inclined to cast our eyes back over the period intervening since 1820 in the attempt to visualize the progress which we have made. When we have finished our tour of inspection, we inevitably come back to the point where there mounts up within us a sincere desire that there shall be more rapid strides taken in the next few years than have been taken in the years which have just passed.

If we have been really converted to the restored gospel and have at the same time sensed the importance of the great world events about us, if we have felt the distinct call to come up higher and have found in the world nothing which has the power to cause us to delay this important work, we must of necessity make the conclusion that the time for action is now. To be more specific, if the Latter Day Saint farmers believe in the restored gospel and in the doctrine of the redemption of Zion, they must of necessity long ago have realized that the time for action was near at hand. This is especially true as regards the Latter Day Saint farmer, more true in fact than it is of any other vocation. Agriculture is a basic industry, the foundation of other types of industrial activity. The logical conclusion, therefore, is that the Latter Day Saint farmer must be the first to begin the development of Zion in an industrial way.

We have long been committed to the fundamental proposition that accomplishment usually comes as a result of organization. We have been convinced that the missionary activities of the church were dependent upon those who were actively engaged in the ministry as an organized body. In other words, spiritual development, the soul-saving process, has been the principal task of the ministry. The production of raw materials, the possibility of temporal salvation, therefore, is the chief task of the various vocations in industrial Zion. Moreover, we have deemed it wise that at definite periods General Conferences should be called to regulate the affairs of the kingdom in a spiritual sense.

Because we are discussing corn, cattle, and mules, is it any the less necessary that the producers in Zion should be organized and that the organizations might have conferences at definite intervals to discuss these problems of a temporal nature? To be even more specific, what is to hinder the calling of an agricultural conference to be attended by every Latter Day Saint farmer who can possibly make arrangements to be present? It is high time that we were beginning to learn how to make Zion a reality. We never will know, however, until we make the effort to find out. It is the business of our people to begin to organize, to think these things out for themselves, for after all the people make up the church and the church in its forward-looking program can build upon no other foundation than an intelligent and well-informed body politic. If our farmers want the kind of a salvation that Zion affords, the only possible way they can get it is to organize and work toward that end. Salvation will never come down from the Bishopric or the Presidency, or even the Quorum of Twelve. It will come, if it comes at all, as the result of the expenditure of our own energy. The question we must ask of ourselves pointedly is: Am I willing to cast my lot with the organized group of which I am a member, so that the standards of that group may be raised, which will bring incidentally improvement in my condition along with the improvement in the conditions surrounding my brothers?

Of course, there are many perplexing questions which are demanding our attention and they will probably continue to demand our attention, but what is the distinct virtue of having Farmer A and Farmer B attempt these problems as individuals, rather than having Farmer A and Farmer B attack the same problems as members of the group. SPIRITUAL VIEWS ON HEALING

[The Reverend J. F. Norris, author of the following from the Fort Worth Record, is a prominent Baptist minister at Fort Worth, Texas. The following will prove of interest to our readers, showing the position taken by some sectarian ministers to-day. We may note that he states that three fundamental truths of the New Testament church are not emphasized to-day.—EDITORS.]

At the last session of your body you were kind enough to ask me to present the Scriptural view on healing. Crowded with a thousand duties, as every other city pastor, I haven't had the time for a thorough preparation of this paper which the importance of this subject demands. Without doubt there is large interest on the question of healing. An able medical authority said recently there were not over three million well people out of the 110,000,000 population of America.

The moment we discuss this question all the cranks and fanatics, all the isms and fads rush for the center of the stage with the result that sensible, conservative, and earnest-minded people fail to go into a thorough and honest investigation of what the Scriptures plainly teach and command.

This paper is addressed not to a company of rationalists or higher critics but to those who believe in the whole Bible from Genesis 1:1 to Revelation 22:21, that it does not contain, but is the very Word of God, infallible, unchangeable, and without any admixture of error.

Resume of Scriptures on Healing

1. The earliest promise of healing is Exodus 15:

"And he cried unto the Lord; and the Lord shewed him a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet: there he made for them a statute and an ordinance, and there he proved them.

"And said, if thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the Lord that healeth thee."

Here a statute was given by Jehovah and Jehovah's statutes never change.

The place and time of this promise make it doubly significant. It comes immediately after the passage of the Red Sea, typical of our redemption, and precedes the journey through the wilderness, typical of our pilgrimage.

2. The case of Job.

His sickness came from Satan, was divinely permitted, was cured when he made his full confession to God. Then he cried, "Now mine eye seeth thee, wherefore, I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes."

3. The bitten Israelites. Numbers 21:

Their sickness came from sin. The remedy was in the likeness of the disease and the healing given by faith.

4. David believed in divine healing. He believed the same God who forgives sins heals our bodies. Psalm 103:

"Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases."

As universal and lasting as was the forgiveness of his sin,

American Farm Bureau Federation has pointed the way in many respects regarding details of organization of agricultural workers as have also such organizations as the "Farmers Union" and "The American Society of Equity." Why not have a "Latter Day Saint Farmers Association"?

so complete was the healing of all his diseases. There is here a close connection between sickness and sin, therefore both must be healed together.

5. King Asa.

Asa began his career with implicit trust in God. By the same simple trust he won a most glorious victory over an army of one million Ethiopians in the valley of Zephathah, but success turned his head and in the next great crisis he turned from reliance on the Lord and formed an alliance with the king of Syria. Immediately we read in 2 Chronicles 15:

"And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians.

"And Asa slept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign."

6. Healing was in the atonement. Isaiah 53:

"Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows . . . and with his stripes we are healed."

Consulting the best commentary on the Scriptures, namely the Scriptures themselves, following what I believe is the divine method of interpreting the Scriptures, let us read Matthew 8:

"And when the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils: and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick.

"That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sickness."

Literal Translation

The more literal exact translation would be:

"Surely he hath borne away our sicknesses and carried away our pains."

The Hebrew of the words bear and carry as used in Isaiah 53: 4, 5 do not mean sympathy but actual substitution and the removal utterly of the thing borne. Therefore as he "his own self bears our sins in his own body on the tree" he also would bear our sicknesses. Moreover as it is our privilege to be delivered from the dominion of sin in this life, even so we may be fully delivered in both sickness and pain—all because "we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ by whom we have now received the atonement."

7. Naaman. 2 Kings 5:

This was a typical case of disease. Leprosy was a type of the physical effect of sin. Destroys both soul and body. The proud, rebellious will of Naaman must be broken before his body can be healed. His faith was in the doing exactly and literally what the prophet told him. Nothing added to it and nothing taken from it.

8. King Hezekiah. 2 Kings 20:

The sentence of death was upon him. He was beyond the help of man. He turned to God with a broken heart. He humbled himself. His prayer was definite and specific. He was given fifteen years more of life. He believed the promises and praised God.

9. The nobleman's son. John 4:

There was not even the visible presence of the Lord when the sick child was healed. It was done by the word of his power which is not subject to the ordinary laws of time and space. It was the simple faith of the broken-hearted father who accepted the Word of the Lord unconditionally and unreservedly.

10. The healing of Peter's mother-in-law. Mark 1:

She had a case of ordinary fever. Jesus "rebuked the fever." He took her by the hand, lifted her up, and she arose. It was his Almighty touch plus her obedience. She used her new strength in service.

11. The leper.

The mind of the leper is the mind of the average Christian. He had plenty of confidence in the power of Christ to heal but was doubtful of his willingness. There was no misunderstanding of Christ's reply to his trust: "I will; be thou clean."

12. The paralytic. Mark 2:

In the case of the paralytic there is a connection between sin and sickness. There must be spiritual healing before physical healing. Therefore Jesus says, "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." Let us bear in mind the glorious and solemn reply Jesus gave to his critics that they might "know that the Son of Man has power on earth to forgive sins."

13. The lame man at Bethesda. John 5:

Here was a case of healing which challenged and defied all the ecclesiastical traditions of the rabbis. It was on the Sabbath Day. Christ asked the suffering of his day, "Will thou be made whole?" But we ask, "Is it in keeping with the traditions of our church to heal the suffering?" Another solemn lesson this poor sufferer teaches us, "Sin no more lest a worse thing come to thee."

Not always but many a life to-day is afflicted and impotent because of secret and youthful sin. There must therefore be a distinct recognition and repudiation of all sin. A confession not to man but to God, to our Advocate.

14. The man with the withered hand. Matthew 12:

Case of Healing

Another case of healing on the Sabbath. Another case of a higher esteem for the body than for the ecclesiastical traditions of men. In the command, "Stretch forth thy hand," we learn that in passive waiting there can come no life or power from God. We must put our feet on the soil of Canaan. We must stretch forth the hand and take of the tree of life and eat and live forever. "The spider reaches forth her hands and therefore lives in kings' palaces." Alas, so many believers have no hands, no grip in their fingers, no stamina in their will, no hold in their faith.

15. The woman with the spirit of infirmity. Luke 13:

It was a case of deformity and helpless paralysis. Was of long standing—eighteen years—a difficult and chronic case. Jesus declares that her trouble was not through natural cause but through the agency of an evil spirit. "Satan hath bound her, lo, these eighteen years!" He does not recognize it as a case of providential discipline but the direct hand of the Devil upon her body. "Ought not this woman to be loosed from this bond?" Jesus asked his critics. He is asking the same question of us to-day concerning the suffering. Instead of it being natural for people to be sick and afflicted it is clearly taught in the Word of God that it is unnatural. The natural order of creation is every man and every woman to stand erect with the full and free use of every organ in their body, seeing, hearing, talking, feeling, thinking, choosing, living, and living the abundant life.

16. The centurion's servant. Matthew 8:

Twice in the life of Jesus he expressed surprise. First the lack of faith on the part of the people who had known him and again at the presence of faith on the part of the pagan centurion for his palsied servant. His faith recognized Christ's absolute control over all forces of the universe even as he controlled his marshaled soldiers. He recognized Christ's bare word to command disease was as final as the decree of Cæsar over the Roman empire.

17. The Gadarene demoniac. Mark 5:

A case of insanity. Demoniical possession. Only a casual observation is needed to show that human society at the present day is crowded with similar cases. The mother who kills her five children, the father who murders his family, the mania of modern wives for killing their husbands compel us to believe in the personal possession of human beings by wicked spirits. But we fail to realize the greater power of the Greater Presence of a personal Savior who can heal the body of disease and of evil spirits as well as forgive the soul of its sins.

Touched His Garments

18. The woman who touched his garment. Luke 8:

She was helpless in her disease. All human physicians had failed. Everything that had been done for her only made her condition worse. Luke, a great Christian physician, himself gives a vivid picture of all this. There are five stages in her healing. First, she believed she would be healed. She said, "If I may but touch His garment I shall be whole." Second, she did something. Faith is more than believing. It is coming into living contact with a living Savior. Third, there was a conscious receiving of his life. She felt in her body that she was whole of her plague. Fourth, she confessed Christ's work to the multitude. And fifth, peace, that deep, divine rest that comes with the touch of God, the richest inheritance of faith. "Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole. Go in peace."

19. The two blind men. Matthew 9:

Here is the rule, here is the standard of measure, here is the one and only condition. "According to your faith be it unto you." It is a crime to deny the miraculous in order to prove an alibi for our unbelief. We have gone into the school of rationalism because we have lost faith in the Supernatural Presence.

20. The Syro-Phœnician woman. Matthew 15:

Another example of sublime faith. Little light, no opportunity, no revelation, no Bible, no prophet, no inspired teacher in all her life. She was a member of an alien and accursed race. Everything was against her. Even the preachers were against her. She did not ask the privilege of the children at the Master's table but she plead only for a dog's chance. How wonderful, how glorious that the cry of a poor worthless sinner could be heard, could win, could overcome all difficulties, could even change the mind of Omnipotence!

21. The demoniac child. Matthew 17:

From the glory of the transfiguration Jesus was brought face to face with the power of Satan. The boy was possessed. The tragedy of tragedies is we all admit, that the Devil possesses our boys and girls to-day but we show our unbelief in the only Power that can overcome the power of the Devil by asking, Is the day of miracles past? Did not the work of Christ in healing close with the New Testament?

22. The lame man at the Beautiful Gate. Acts 3:

By the use of "In the name of Jesus Christ" a lame man was healed. Not in the name of a dead saint, not in the name of Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, not by the trick of some faith healer, not by the school of "new thought," not by ancient Grecian stoicism or the science of suggestive therapeutics, but "in the name of Jesus Christ."

23. Æneas at Lydda. Acts 9:

Very similar to the healing of the lame man. Only the power and name of Jesus Christ is recognized. "Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole." The effect, though wonderful, was natural. A great revival of repentance broke out in all the community. "All that dwell in Lydda and Saron saw him and turned to the Lord."

24. The lame man at Lystra. Acts 14:

It was a purely heathen community. Paul had preached to them "the gospel." Most significant is the expression, "And perceiving that he had faith to be healed." There was no halfway job about it. "Stand upright on thy feet." This not on the word of Paul but on his own faith.

25. The healing of Epaphroditus. Philippians 2:

"For he longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick."

"For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him: and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow."

Two facts. First, "He was sick nigh unto death." Second, "But God had mercy on him."

26. The Great Commission. Mark 16:15-18:

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

"And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues.

"They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

What Is Agreed

We all agree on the first part of the Great Commission—namely, "preach the gospel to every creature." We all agree that salvation is conditioned on faith, and by what rule of interpretation do we deny the following verses which say, "And these signs shall follow them that believe. . . . They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." If opposition is raised to this Scripture on the grounds that it says "they shall speak with new tongues," our answer would be, wherever and whenever the necessity has arisen that can also be done. It was necessary at Pentecost. They didn't have time to translate the language of the apostles into one hundred different dialects. It is thoroughly conceivable and altogether possible to be repeated in heathen lands. But admitting all the difficulties in the passage, I repeat that is no reason for us to establish an alibi for our unbelief.

27. Healing a custom of the New Testament church. James 5:

"Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms.

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord.

"And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

"Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

"Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

"And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

"Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Notice the last verse makes soul saving close with healing the body.

Without doubt this passage refers to an established and perpetual usage in the church. The promise in the Great Commission, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover," appears in the Acts of the Apostles in constant exercise and in the apostles is explained, unfolded, and enforced. Study 1 Corinthians 12:

"To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit. . . .

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. . . .

"Have all the gifts of healing?"

In the classic passage of James we have the explicit and unconditional promise, "And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." The words prayer of faith should be strongly emphasized. Prayer without faith and faith without prayer is unthinkable, impossible. It has been well said, "Let them use oil who are able by their prayers to obtain recovery for the sick: let those who cannot do this abstain from the empty sign."

It was true in the Old Testament, as well as in the New: Abraham healing Abimelech and his household by praying to God; Moses crying unto God for Miriam, "Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee," and the Lord answering with the promise that after seven days her leprosy should depart; God's cure of the bitten Israelites in answer to Moses' prayer, and through a look of faith at the brazen serpent; Naaman, the Syrian, recovered of his leprosy by the faith of Elisha; Hezekiah raised up from his deathbed in answer to prayer and his life lengthened out fifteen years, and other instances which we have not time to refer to. Hear Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple: "Whatsoever sore, or whatsoever sickness there be: then what prayer, or what supplication soever shall be made of any man, or of all thy people Israel, then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive."

Spurious and False

What shall we say concerning the spurious and the false?

I do not deny that theosophy has its healing. I do not question that healing has come out of spiritualism nor can I doubt that Christian Science has seen much of physical improvement and health. But I say this, that any system that does not conform its teaching to the truth in God's Word, must explain its healing upon some other ground than that of the intervention of the Divine One. He would not, he could not consent to cooperate with error: and so far as I am concerned, I do not hesitate to say that the author of sickness, even Satan, if he could, by associating healings with heterodoxy, and all error, deceive God's people and lead them into darkness, it would delight his Devilship.

We read in the Word, that "he transformeth himself into an angel of light," and would "deceive even the very elect," and I make this my plea that if we be men of God, our faith ought to be firmly grounded in the Word of God. What it does not teach, we dare not accept; what it plainly teaches, we dare not reject. And, as a Baptist, I do not believe that immersion is any more clearly set forth in sacred writ than this doctrine that God hears prayers for the sick, and of himself raises them up. And more blessed still, he, who heals the sick, forgives sins. "And if he have committed sins, it shall be forgiven him."

Three Neglected Truths

Three great fundamental truths were emphasized in the New Testament church but not emphasized to-day. First, the fullness of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, second, the healing of the body, and third, the imminent return of Christ. Up to the fourth century we find these three doctrines stressed continually. Higher criticism has taken the supernatural out of our faith, and worldliness has taken holiness out of our conduct.

Is the age of miracles past? Not if we believe the Bible. Is Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and forever?

To the criticism that by emphasizing the doctrine of healing we magnify the body above the soul, we answer that the doctrine of Christ's healing power is so closely linked with the ministry of holiness and the deeper doctrines of the spiritual life that the giving of the gospel to both body and soul, tends in a preeminent degree to promote purity and earnestness.

The power which heals the body usually imparts a much richer baptism of the Holy Ghost to the heart, and the retaining of this divine life and health requires such constant fellowship with God, and such consecrated service for the Master, that the spiritual results far outweigh the temporal; and it is one of the most powerful checks and impulses in the lives of those that have truly received it.

The abuses complained of will usually be found connected with false teaching and unscriptural perversions of those things which rash or ambitious persons disseminate for their own ungodly ends.

The true doctrine of healing through the Lord Jesus Christ is most humbling, holy, and practical; it exalts no man, it spares no sin, it offers no promise to the disobedient, it gives no strength for selfish indulgence or worldly ends, but it exalts the name of Jesus, glorifies God, inspires the soul with faith and power, summons to a life of self-denial and holy service, and awakens a slumbering church and an unbelieving world with solemn signals of a living God and a risen Christ.

Extravagances, perversions, and counterfeits we know there are; unauthorized and self-constituted healers, mercenary impostors, who give out that they are "some great one," rash and indiscriminate anointing of persons who only bring discredit on the truth by their ignorance and inconsistency, and wolves in sheep's clothing, who claim the name of Jesus for the passes of clairvoyance, the sorcery of spiritualism, and the performances of animal magnetism. But the truth of God is not chargeable with human error, and the counterfeit is often a startling testimony to the existence of the genuine.

Let the ministers of the Lord Jesus answer and set aside these evils by claiming and exercising, in the power of the Holy Ghost, the gifts and offices once delivered to them, and let the people of God, in these perilous times, "discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

The Believer's Trinity

Prayer, faith, and works constitute the one and indivisible Trinity of the believer. In the farewell message of Jesus in the fourteenth chapter of John you will find the all-inclusive encouragement for prayer, faith, and works. John 14: 11-16:

"Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very work's sake.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.

"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

"If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it.

"If ye love me, keep my commandments.

"And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever."

If the church needed the credential of healed bodies in answer to the "prayer of faith" in the dark days of ancient paganism, how much more in these perilous times of apostasy, of commercialism, of free-lovism, of rationalism, of a pleasure-gone-mad Sabbath desecrating society, and worst of all, of a powerless and worldly Laodicean church do we need the prophetic voice to say, "If my people which are called by my name shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways: then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

The two noblest things are sweetness and light.—Swift.

PASTORAL

WHAT WE BELIEVE

Good Work in Independence

It is one of the great problems of the church to secure proper visiting by the officers appointed to that work. It is not enough that one is baptized. The work of the ministry is the perfecting of the Saints and the edifying of the body of Christ. This by no means is confined to the sacred desk, but includes the splendid opportunities offered those men who are appointed to visit the house of each member. A very strenuous effort has been made the past few years, both at Independence and Lamoni, to secure more efficient service in this work.

In Independence, Lamoni, and possibly some other of the larger branches, the difficulty of handling the whole congregation as a unit has been recognized. As a result, the membership are divided into groups; several groups are combined into a district under a high priest in Independence, and the Wednesday night prayer meeting is held at various homes as cottage prayer meetings. Some of the success of this effort is indicated in the letter which follows from R. V. Hopkins, who is pastor of the Independence church, under the direction of the First Presidency. It is to be commended, for the result indicated, and also for the spirit manifest, both towards those who have worked successfully, and those who have not been as active as they might.

"Dear Brother: I want to express, officially as your pastor, and personally as your friend and brother, my keen appreciation of your service in the work of visiting which you have just accomplished. It has been of inestimable value to the spiritual life of our people. Let the figures speak for themselves; our combined group prayer meetings last Wednesday evening totaled 1,025 souls.

"No officer of this church honored with the holy priesthood needs thanks for doing his duty, and it is not thanks I am giving, but I do wish to express my feeling of gratitude for your loyalty and cooperation. I am proud of our group men. Almost without exception they have responded. President Smith joins me in this hearty expression of appreciation.

"To the few who may not have done their full duty this letter is not a rebuke, but I desire that it may prove to be an inspiration to more diligent service.

"Now, brethren, let us go on, let us proceed to cover our groups easily and systematically, so we will not have to rush at fever heat at the last month. God bless you. Be humble, prayerful, and faithful in your work. God will do the rest.

"Your colaborer in Zion,

"R. V. HOPKINS, Pastor."

We are receiving favorable reports from many quarters of spiritual blessings received. At Elk Mills, Maryland, early in the month, a spiritual communication was received and confirmed by three witnesses.

The Canton (Illinois) Daily Register of January 14, announces the death of Mrs. Elizabeth (Griffiths) Bath, a sister of Gomer T. Griffiths. She was in her 72d year, a member of the church, and according to the Daily Register, a woman held in high regard by all who knew her, during her long residence in the county.

On January 20, pursuant to previous arrangements, Apostle James A. Gillen, Elders Charles Fry, James E. Bishop, and Daniel Sorden sail for England, where they will meet President Smith and Apostle Williams about February 1, to take up energetically the work in Great Britain. Special services were held at Independence the first of the year, at which Apostle Gillen and Elder Fry were blessed for their work.

Laying on of Hands

By Paul M. Hanson

One of the principles of the gospel of Christ plainly explained.

For many years Christianity has been heralded to the world as being of God. We believe this representation of the work of Christ to be altogether correct. Christ is the Savior of the world. Through him there was not reflected one ordinance, one commandment, one promise, that did not have to do with the welfare and salvation of men. Faith in Christ leads to an acceptance of all of those principles which in their entirety constitute Christianity.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Believeth what? Roman Catholicism, Greek Catholicism, all the doctrines of Protestantism, or what? We answer: the teachings of Jesus Christ and his authorized ministry—the gospel as it was taught by them, in its entirety.

The gospel must be given representation before it can be believed; it cannot be believed until it finds expression through the same teachings, ordinances, commandments, and promises given by Christ. A true belief of the gospel can follow only a correct and full representation of the gospel to the mind. Where only a fragmentary part of the work of Christ is represented the belief is not complete in the great work of Christ, our Lord. All of Christianity is essential to salvation—there are no nonessential doctrines or ordinances in the church of Jesus Christ.

A Perpetual Ordinance

James wrote:

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 25.

That which is "perfect" is capable of unfoldment, but not of improvement. The gospel of Christ, which is made up of parts, is termed the "perfect law of liberty." Without the parts there cannot be the whole. To add to or take from what is perfect will render it imperfect. Now the laying on of hands was established as an ordinance of the Lord's appointment; it is a part of his doctrine:

"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

It is here placed in the midst of the cardinal principles of the gospel of Christ: faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment; and is specifically referred to as a "principle" of the "doctrine of Christ."

Christ commanded his apostles:

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28: 18-20.

The church soon after this instruction was given, both taught and practiced, observed, the laying on of hands. During the whole period of such teaching and practice the church was not under the guidance of uninspired men, not in apostasy, but was enjoying the favor of God in marvelous blessings from heaven. It is, therefore, conclusive that such observance was commanded by the Lord. In the midst of such practice by the church the apostle wrote:

"There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—Ephesians 4: 4-6.

Failure in Results

The present age of Christendom in no sense equals in its spiritual results those of the apostolic age. Noticeable among the defects of the present age are uninspired men, lack of unity of religious belief, multitudinous religious organizations, healing by the power of God denied, infants baptized, etc.

Every effect has an adequate cause; may the cause of the present religious unrest and spiritual darkness not be a repudiation of one or more of the forces ordained of God to bring spiritual sunshine into the lives of men? Therein lies the reason.

Scientific Achievements

With wonderment we have looked upon the advancement and achievements of the scientific world—men of science have endeavored to utilize every law which in its operation has been found beneficial to man. They have endeavored not only to maintain and perpetuate the scientific accomplishments of the past, but to make greater use of the forces which in any age were found to add to human welfare. The invisible power of electricity is not only used to-day, but an attempt is made to widen the sphere of its operations; no one would say that the last word has been said concerning the development and use of this wonderful and invisible power.

Scientists do not merely hark back to past days of achievement and live therein, but gather up the forces of the past that have benefited man and use them to-day.

Many religious people are satisfied to think there were divine forces in operation nineteen hundred years ago by which the world was blessed, and which surrounded the church with a halo of glory—but those forces belong to the past! Hearken! Is God a God only of the past? or of the past, present, and future? He has declared he is the great I AM. He said through Malachi: "I change not."

Suppose men of science to-day would simply look to the splendid achievements of the past, and be content with a mere historical recital of scientific advancement, and deny the possibility of a like progress reaching this age.

Do not many religious people rejoice in a mere historical recital of the power of Christ manifested nineteen hundred years ago, and deny an equal manifestation of the power of Christ to-day?

May not the course pursued by scientists in clinging to what has been demonstrated to possess scientific value explain the cause of the decline and lack of spiritual results in Christendom to-day?

Would it be a source to gratification to think of the scientific world to-day not equaling in its result the scientific achievements of the past?

Is it inspiring to think of the religious world to-day not equaling in its blessings and manifestations of power the church of Jesus Christ in the first century?

Persons do not care to attend church where there is not an administration of the means ordained of God to satisfy their spiritual natures—just as persons are restless under a form of government that does not provide a medium for the exercise of their inalienable political rights.

It will be found that the laying on of hands held a high and important position in the divine economy under Christ, under whose rule and the administration of whose ordinances there were wrought the marvelous achievements chronicled in the New Testament. The precious promises of the gospel of Christ can be realized to-day by an observance of the laws and an acceptance of the means ordained of God through Jesus Christ—through which the power of God finds expression.

The laying on of hands was practiced for many purposes:

For Ordination

Very clearly is it outlined in the Scriptures that imposition of hands was practiced in ordaining to the ministry:

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."—Acts 13: 2, 3.

"And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch: whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them."—Acts 6: 5, 6.

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery."—1 Timothy 4: 14.

Through this ordinance authority was conferred to preach and officiate in the ordinances of the Lord's house, after a call from God to the ministry. No one can be a self-constituted ambassador of Christ. Without knowing the divine mind no one can represent God, or send men to represent him. The Lord must call by revelation, and then the person is set apart by the laying on of hands of those in authority. The necessity of ordination as a prerequisite to preaching is found in the words of Christ:

"And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach, and to have power to heal sickness, and to cast out devils."—Mark 3: 14, 15.

For Healing the Sick

Christ provided in his church the power to heal the body as well as to save the soul. He commissioned his apostles:

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Mark 16: 15-18.

It will be noted that these blessings were not limited to the apostles, but were to follow believers of the gospel proclaimed by the apostles. The Lord announces clearly the recovery of the sick through the laying on of hands, as one of the signs following believers of the gospel.

In no sense were fanatical ideas held by the church. Luke is referred to as the "beloved physician" (Colossians 4: 14), which indicates that there was no disparagement of the true physician's skill in alleviating bodily ills. God's law is in its operation remedial, preventive, and miraculous. All have not faith to be healed, as is evidenced from Paul's words to Timothy:

"Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick."—2 Timothy 4: 20.
"Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities."—1 Timothy 5: 23.

It is seen from the foregoing that the power to heal was with God and not with the ministry to heal whomsoever they desired. A physician to the church could be of immense assistance. But it is clear that God provided in his church a power, accessible by faith, that would supplement man's powers when used to the utmost. This healing power of God was not placed in the church to encourage ignorance, or violation of law, spiritual or natural.

No promise is made that the sick should always be healed instantly, but that they should "recover." The testimony of the church to-day is that the promises of God are sure, and that God has not changed.

The following references will suffice to prove the laying on of hands was practiced for the healing of the sick:

"And he [Jesus] could do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them. And he marvelled because of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages, teaching."—Mark 6: 5, 6.

"Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them."—Luke 4: 40.

"And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him."—Acts 28: 8.

"And, behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet, and besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live."—Mark 5: 22, 23.

It will be observed that so well was it known outside of the church that the laying on of hands was practiced for the healing of the sick that Jairus in making his request of Jesus to heal his daughter, said: "Come and lay thy hands on her."

The following reveals clearly the practice of the church:

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James 5: 14, 15.

For the Blessing of Children

Children under the age of accountability were not sprinkled by the church of Jesus Christ, but were blessed through the ordinance of the laying on of hands:

"Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence."—Matthew 19: 13-15.

Not one case of infant baptism is recorded in the Scriptures. The practice of Christ in the blessing of children, given as an example to the church, is the practice of his church to-day. He is "the Apostle and High Priest of our profession." (Hebrews 8: 1.)

Read also Genesis 48: 8-19 (which reveals that through this ordinance patriarchal or spiritual blessings were given.)

For Confirmation and Bestowal of Holy Ghost

Baptized persons were not initiated into the church by giving their "hand to the preacher and their heart to God." They were confirmed members of the church by the laying on of hands, and were entitled as members of the "body of Christ" to the reception of the Holy Ghost. The Lord said:

"If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."—John 14: 15-18.

Of the practice of the church in Samaria we read:

"But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

"And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money."—Acts 8: 12, 14-20.

Paul received the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost:

"And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost."—Acts 9: 17.

Note that Jesus himself sent Ananias to lay his hands on Paul for the conferring of the Holy Ghost and for healing.

In building up the kingdom of God Paul practiced the ordinance:

"Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

"When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."—Acts 19: 4-6.

Paul says he received his gospel "by the revelation of Jesus Christ." (Galatians 1: 12.) Jesus says he did not speak of himself, but as his Father commanded. (John 12: 49.) God and Jesus were back of Paul in this work.

The church did not enter into competition with itself, therefore the practice of the church was in harmony with the foregoing examples.

The following indicates the probability of the apostles receiving the laying on of hands:

"And when he had said this, he breathed [which shows close proximity] on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost."—John 20: 22.

Luke records:

"And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high. And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them."—Luke 24: 49, 50.

Concerning those who united with the church on the day of Pentecost, we read:

"Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."—Acts 2: 41, 42.

The "apostles' doctrine" is found represented in the practice of the church; and in the teaching of Paul to the Hebrews:

"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of

HYMNS AND POEMS

Our Earnest Prayer

By Mrs. W. E. Harder

In earnest prayer before his throne,
We love to talk to God alone;
Yes, he beholds. We know his ear
Is turned to us in earnest prayer.
Our earnest prayer, our prayer of faith,
We know he hears, for so he saith.
Our faith grows strong; the Tempter's snare
We may escape, through earnest prayer.

In earnest prayer we find relief,
Amid afflictions, care, and grief;
He lifts our load, our troubles share,
If we but ask in humble prayer.
Our earnest prayer a soft retreat,
His Spirit guides us, oh, how sweet!
His presence is a heavenly fare
As we draw near in humble prayer.

Our earnest prayer for greater light,
His Spirit brings by day and night
The path of duty making clear;
We love to work with him so near.
Our earnest prayer for erring ones
He'll hear and grant from Spirit's funds.
For none can wake them as their God,
And bring them in the path he trod.

Our earnest prayer for sick and weak,
He'll grant to them the blessings meet;
If faithful 'till the race is run,
We know we'll hear that glad, Well done!
Our earnest prayer for greater light,
His Spirit brings by day and night,
The path of duty making clear;
We love to work with him so near.

resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

Through the ordinance of baptism there comes the "remission of sins" (Acts 2:38); through the ordinance of the laying on of hands the Holy Ghost is given.

Conclusion

God did not, in blessing through the laying on of hands, indorse a meaningless ceremony. His ministry were not practitioners of an empty, hollow form. The laying on of hands was one of the "principles of the doctrine of Christ,"—such was the ordinance that was practiced by Christ, Peter, John, Paul, Ananias, et al; and such was the ordinance after the practice of which followed an authoritative administration of the gospel, the healing of the sick, the blessing of children, patriarchal blessings, and the reception of the Holy Ghost.

God has not changed—the gospel is still the "power of God unto salvation."

To receive the blessings enjoyed and accomplish the works performed in the days of primitive Christianity, the ordinances then employed should now be obeyed. It is not consistent to practice the laying on of hands for one purpose and not for all the purposes for which it was observed by the

By S. K. Sorensen

"The ice shall flow down at their presence," is discussed with other points in this concluding article.

"And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all the countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase. And I will set up shepherds over them . . . and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord."—Jeremiah 23: 3, 4.

"And I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth. . . . They shall come with weeping, and with supplication will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born."—Jeremiah 31: 8, 9.

Bearing in mind what has thus far been presented in the previous articles from the three standard books of the church and history bearing on this subject and their correlation one to the other and the harmony between them, we then pass on to examine section 108, paragraph 6, of Doctrine and Covenants, spoken in 1831.

"And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord." Countries are referred to in the plural, and if located beyond the icebound polar regions, where are they? Mr. Peary and Mr. Cook both claim to have reached the pole. Steffanson and many others whom I do not now recall have spent many years and vast fortunes in exploring the polar regions, and the reports so far given to civilization are that there is one eternal mass of ice, and that many have lost their lives because of lack of food, and have frozen to death. If the pole were surrounded by a number of countries inhabited by human beings, why this

New Testament church. In case of doubt in religious as in all other matters, one should take the safe side.

To overemphasize or complacently ignore this ordinance of the church of God is disastrous to spiritual life.

As the highest developments of science of any age are not discarded, but an attempt is made to perpetuate and maintain them, so this ordinance employed by the church by which great blessings from God were received should not be discarded but should be practiced, perpetuated, and maintained among all believers in Christ. We should have at least a condition equal to the greatest advancement ever reached through the employment of divine forces.

The church is not weakened but strengthened by giving all church ordinances their proper places. The means by which Christ performed his work nineteen hundred years ago have not become obsolete.

God is unchangeable and is no respecter of persons—the work of Christ in its entirety is for men to-day.

In the next of this series the resurrection will be discussed. The above article may be had in tract form from this office, No. T1122.

suffering and loss of life? It has been claimed by some that open water has been found; but water is not land, countries inhabited by a great and mighty people such as the ten tribes of Israel are represented to be. Besides, they could not there possibly perform the work designed of the Lord; hence, I prefer the more consistent and sensible solution as already presented.

"And their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves."

This was literally fulfilled when the gospel was restored; when the Lord spoke from the heavens to his servants, the apostles and prophets whom he had called to gather Israel. At different times and on various occasions did he thus speak to his people. At the time of the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, the Lord appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and the following is the record given of his visitation, April 3, 1836:

"The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened. We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit before us, and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold in color like amber. His eyes were as a flame of fire, the hair of his head was white like the pure snow, his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun, and his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah saying:

"If I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth; I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father. Behold, your sins are forgiven you, you are clean before me, therefore lift up your heads and rejoice, let the hearts of your brethren rejoice, and let the hearts of all my people rejoice, who have, with their might, built this house to my name, for behold, I have accepted this house, and my name shall be here, and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house; yea, I will appear unto my servants, and speak unto them with mine own voice, if my people will keep my commandments, and do not pollute this holy house; yea, the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands shall greatly rejoice in consequence of the blessings which shall be poured out, and the endowment with which my servants have been endowed in this house; and the fame of this house shall spread to foreign lands; and this is the beginning of the blessing which shall be poured out upon the heads of my people. Even so. Amen."

"After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us, and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north."—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 46, 47.

If the ten tribes are at the North Pole, what effort has the church ever made to lead them from there? And yet that was the commission given by Moses to the church according to the above account. It will also be noticed in this wonderful historic account that the Savior spoke to these men and promised that he would continue to speak to his servants with his own voice.

If these people to whom he spoke and promised to continue to speak were not of the house of Israel, then the Lord had changed from what he told the Nephites when he said to them:

"And they understood me not, for they supposed it had been the Gentiles; for they understood not that the Gentiles should be converted through their preaching; and they understood me not that I said they shall hear my voice; and they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice; that I should not manifest myself unto them, save it were by the Holy Ghost. But behold, ye have both heard my voice, and seen me, and ye are my sheep, and ye are numbered among those whom the Father hath given me."—3 Nephi 7: 21-23.

Now, if Christ is the same to-day as he was then, then this rule which he revealed to the Nephites is still in force to-day, and in view of that fact, what other conclusion can we come to than that the ones to whom the Savior manifested himself and spoke on April 3, 1836, were of the house of Israel, if the Gentiles were not to hear his voice at any time and neither manifest himself to them?

On that same day Moses also committed to them the keys of the gathering of Israel; and in harmony with that commission the church the following year sent missionaries to England, from whence they themselves or their ancestors had come; and their prophets who had previously come from that north country no longer stayed themselves, but went forward according to the divine instruction to lead Israel out of the north countries and from all the countries whither they were scattered.

"And they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence."

It has been assumed that in order for the ice to "flow down at their presence" they must necessarily be at the pole. Nothing could be farther from the real fact. All navigators know that huge icebergs are constantly floating down the Atlantic in the presence of those who cross the ocean, and the visible part of them is the smaller. They descend thousands of feet into the water. From an account given in the Des Moines daily News, April 18, 1921, I extract the following:

"When one sees a berg, he is disappointed in the size, but as he gets nearer to the mighty specter of the deep he is astonished. And when he is told that less than a fifth of any is ever above water and that below the surface the berg expands out probably thousands of feet each way, he fully realizes what it means to the ship that runs through a fog into one of them. The bergs range from 50 to 300 feet in height, though there are records of some more than 800 feet high. Some of these sea monsters are several miles in length. The longest ever seen was nine miles long, 1,000 yards wide, and 200 feet high. The bergs from the Antarctic are often larger but the ocean travel there is so small there is not much heard of them."

It was one of those icebergs that the great passenger steamer, Titanic, ran into in 1912, and many others have suffered a similar fate, and it is at the presence of these monsters that the people of the north countries shall come to Zion.

"And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep."

A highway is a public thoroughfare, whether on land or sea. The ocean liners have their routes which they travel and which are the highways of the sea, and in their presence the ice shall flow down and the tribes of Israel from the north shall come to Zion, or the land of Zion, with songs of everlasting joy.

"Their enemies shall become a prey unto them."

If they have been hidden behind the polar mountains of ice, excluded from the rest of the world, without any association except themselves, pray tell me, who could their enemies be? I think this has a wider and broader application than we may at first glance attribute to it.

Who were their enemies when they were first taken captive by the Assyrian king, Shalmaneser? The Assyrians, of course. They were placed in their enemies' land. Now the statement is made, "Their enemies shall be a prey unto them." The Assyrians were certainly their enemies at the time they were taken captive, and in all probability these are the ones referred to as enemies now; but how are they now to become a prey unto their captives? Here again the Lord works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. We have already traced lost Israel to England and other northern European countries.

The last four years have seen a mighty struggle between most of the world powers, divided against each other: Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey against England, France, Italy, Japan, Russia, and the United States.

The Turks, who governed and misruled Assyria, Armenia, Persia, and other Asiatic countries, part of which was under the Assyrians when the ten tribes were taken captive, were now the enemies of England and France and the United States, and these enemies have now become a prey to them (the tribes of Israel), a complete surrender; and the former home of their ancestors, the land of Palestine, they have liberated from the yoke of the Assyrians, and the way is opened up for the return of Israel, with perhaps a protectorate established, by the peace conference, over Palestine, thus fulfilling the words of the Lord by the Prophet Jeremiah:

"And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord."—Jeremiah 23: 4.

"And in the barren deserts shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land." (See also Isaiah 41: 18.)

This is like a descriptive condition of the land of Zion to which those from the north shall come as indicated by the context. It would also imply that by reason of the pools of living water, which may be running water, streams, by which the land shall be watered by irrigation, stored in pools or reservoirs, and the land thus to become exceedingly fruitful; hence shall no longer be a thirsty land.

"And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants."

If those treasures are to come from beyond the icebergs at the pole, I would have serious doubts about their value, coming as they would from an isolated race which has held no commercial relation with anyone. Wealth comes from labor and production; but unless labor can find a market for its production it remains valueless; hence I must seek some other solution for the accumulation of their riches, and also other location by the tribes of the north countries.

Therefore, we are forced to accept the word of the Lord concerning Israel's location, not at the North Pole but in the north countries, from whence they shall come to Zion with all their earthly possessions, and by reason of industry and thrift shall cause the wilderness to blossom as the rose, and by commercial relations with other nations and people shall accumulate wealth in great abundance, which fact has been clearly demonstrated in fulfillment of the revelation referred to, and they have brought of their rich treasures unto the church as they united themselves with it.

"And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence."

In a literal sense, trembling means to shake, quake, or quiver. Whether the boundaries of these hills are to undergo such a shake-up, we have no means of knowing, only in a general way, when the time shall come when the valleys which are evidently the boundaries of the hills shall be exalted and the mountains or hills made low.

It may be a figure of speech, typical of something that is to be accomplished by those people as they arrive here upon the land of Zion. It is very doubtful that their presence merely will produce any trembling, any more than the presence of any other class of people. Even if they came from behind the ice mountains, their physical appearance and presence would not be so much more imposing and terrifying than the appearance of an Englishman, a Swede, or Norwegian, as to make the valleys or the hills quake and tremble. It is evidently intended to convey the thought that the emigrants from the countries of the north shall so revolutionize and bring under subjection the natural resources of the country which hitherto had lain dormant, without utilization and development, which in the very nature of things would cause a shaking up in the industrial world, when the wheels of industry and progress were set in motion to develop the undeveloped resources of mother earth, thus fulfilling the prophecy in Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5:

"But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose. Zion shall flourish upon the hills, and rejoice upon the mountains, and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed.

"And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim, and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy."

In connection with this, we will consider the statement of Isaiah 51: 10, 11:

"Art thou not it which hath dried up the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over? Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away."

"They shall come with weeping and with supplication will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel."—Jeremiah 31: 9.

All of these prophetic statements refer to the return of Israel. One refers to the fact that the Lord had made the sea their path for the ransomed and the redeemed to pass over. That would imply that they had obeyed the gospel; otherwise they would not be ransomed and redeemed. This could not apply to the Jews, who have not as yet returned to Zion as redeemed, singing songs of joy and gladness; hence could only refer to the other tribes of Israel.

Another of these prophecies refers to them coming with weeping and supplication and a straight way for them to walk in wherein they shall not stumble; showing plainly the gospel way in which they were walking and partaking of the fountain of living waters which should lead them to eternal life and which would cause them to come to Zion with songs of joy and gladness, and, as the third prophetic statement says, "be crowned with glory in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord."

This crowning with glory may be also somewhat ambiguous. Some have taken the position that this refers to an ordination. This position without some qualification I could scarcely indorse. We read that the glory of God is intelligence. That being true, the glory of man would also be intelligence; hence that glory with which they would be crowned would necessarily be an intelligent comprehension of God's truth, and an awakening of the mental and spiritual forces by which their minds' eyes are opened to see and understand the things of God, and this to be brought about through the proper instruction by the hands of the servants of the Lord in Zion, under the guidance and the light of the Holy Spirit, which must be the predominating influence through which spiritual intelligence can either be received or imparted.

The Apostle Peter speaking in reference to the elders and shepherds of the flock, says:

"And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—1 Peter 5: 4.

That is evidently the solution to this statement, that "they shall be crowned with glory"; that is, receive from the hand of the chief Shepherd his approval and the seal of his Holy Spirit indelibly impressed in their characters, in their souls, and in their very lives, that cannot fade away; the crowning for faithful performance of duty in this life.

"Behold, this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows [the ten tribes]. And they also of the tribe of Judah [the Jews], after their pain, shall be sanctified in holiness before the Lord to dwell in his presence day and night forever and ever."

The promise is here as elsewhere held out to the Jews, but so far they have seen fit to reject it. Sanctification and holiness can only be attained in obedience to the gospel law and a belief in Christ as the only mediator between God and men to bring about a reconciliation with the Father. This Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his fellows have accepted, while Judah and the tribes of Israel his fellows have rejected it and will likely not accept it until they shall ask, "What are these wounds in thy hands and in thy feet?"

Or when they shall say: "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord"; and the Messiah said they should not see him until then; but this has been the privilege of those who have accepted the gospel and kept his commandments in fulfillment of the promise made by him: "And I will love him and manifest myself to him," implying that the Jews as a people would not accept him or the message he brought until he shall return to earth again, and thus fail to partake of the richer blessings promised to Ephraim until they become sanctified in holiness before the Lord through the gospel message.

While this has been the privilege of Ephraim and his fellows, it has also been their privilege to carry out the God-imposed duty designed for Israel to be a blessing to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people through the principles revealed in the gospel, whether those principles have been carried into effect through religious or civic organization.

The same Spirit which promoted them also disseminated them through the various means ordained of God, that the whole lump may be permeated and leavened. The channel which God had chosen for that purpose was Israel and in particular Ephraim, the head of Israel and his fellows, who are of the ten tribes, whether they have come into the bond of the covenant or working through civic administration for the liberation and freedom of mankind. The purpose of this latter-day work is to gather Israel and set up an ensign to the nations (the Gentiles), and as the two tribes of Israel are not being gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd, its purpose, then, must be accomplished in the other tribes of Israel found in the north countries and elsewhere, but not at the North Pole. Hence the latter-day poet has well said:

"Rejoice, rejoice, O Israel! and let your joys abound;
The voice of God shall reach you wherever you are found,
And call you back from bondage, that you may sing his praise

In Zion and Jerusalem, in these the latter days."

The discovery of a stone "apartment" building 45 stories high and containing 1,000 rooms, believed to have been the home of a new extinct tribe of American Indians, was announced at a meeting of the Archæological Institute of America at Johns Hopkins University.

The apartment was uncovered with a group of towns representing an ancient civilization in the midst of the south-western deserts. It was unearthed by the School of American Research, conducted at Santa Fe, by the institute. It will be described by Edgar L. Hewitt, director of the school, at the meeting of the institute held in conjunction with the American Philological Association and the Maya Society.

Several thousand persons may have lived in the newly discovered building which Mr. Hewitt believes was the center of community life in its district.—Exchange.

The Work and Duties of District Musical Officers Under the Department of Music

The purpose of this bulletin is to acquaint all district musical officers, particularly district choristers, who hold their appointments under the Department of Music, with the character and duties of their work. We have received frequent inquiries from such as to the nature and extent of their work. We have always tried to comply with their requests but obviously could not give the information desired in so extensive a form as may now be presented in this bulletin.

The great purpose of the Department of Music is by this time well known to all the church. But inasmuch as all district musical officers working under appointment from the department are de facto representatives of the department in their respective districts, the information contained in this bulletin may help them to labor more in harmony with the spirit of the department and to more thoroughly accomplish its ideals.

In this connection it may be well to describe the methods by which district musical officers are secured and appointed. Usually, the choice of such officers is left to the district, for the department cannot in every instance know who is the most suitable person to choose. But the department reserves at all times the right to make such selection, reversing the usual process, and it also reserves the unqualified right to reject anyone recommended to it whom it deems unsuitable, or to refuse to continue the appointment of anyone who proves incompetent or neglectful of duty.

As an illustration of the method for securing district choristers, let us suppose the Cannibal Islands District (we use this name for the obvious reason that there is no such district in the church) desires to secure a district chorister and have its musical work affiliated with the larger music work of the church, as represented in the Department of Music. The officials of this district proceed by making a careful search for the most suitable person for their work. Their selection is then presented to the next conference of the district for its action, and if this conference ratifies their choice his name is accordingly recommended to the Department of Music for appointment. This department then conducts its own investigation of the candidate's qualifications and if satisfied as to his fitness for the position makes the appointment, first submitting it to the First Presidency of the church for their approval. In this way the person appointed enters into his duties with the sanction and support of the entire church.

It is possible to reverse the foregoing process for obvious reasons. The authorities of any district needing a chorister and not desiring to wait the action of a distant conference, may recommend for appointment subject to the ratification of the next succeeding conference. Or, as stated, the Department of Music may take the initiative and present its own selection and appointment to the district for its ratification.

Now for a statement of what "affiliation with the Department of Music" really means. It will doubtless be asked, In what way does a district benefit in affiliation over one that is not affiliated?

Affiliation should always spell in its results helpfulness and profit to those associated in such ties. That is exactly what the aim of the department is and what it confidently expects to accomplish in a large measure for those that are the objects of its care. In this, the early period of the department's activity, the service it can render may not be so great as it shall be later, but as its work shall grow the magnitude of the help it will give shall be great indeed. As experience shall teach just what is needed, many things shall be offered and done for the material benefit of the church.

Let it be understood at this point that the Department of Music does not compel any district in the church to enter into this affiliation. But it is believed that every district will realize the value of this association and desire to affiliate.

What are the qualifications for a district musical officer? We think they may be summarized under three heads: 1. Consecration, 2. Managing and directing ability, 3. Musical training and experience. We will attempt to briefly describe them.

The district chorister should be a consecrated individual whose heart is given to the church and its work and who earnestly labors that he may see the church prosper through his efforts. There can be just as sincere consecration in the musical work of the church as in any other avenue of its service. Without the spirit of consecration no servant of the church can render acceptable service to God. As to managing and directing ability, this is a qualification far more important than many suppose. A good district chorister should be a good manager, in a business way as well as socially. He should be orderly, systematic, able to plan wisely, and to carry his plans to successful conclusions. In a social way he should be able to manage people, especially musical people, and by the exercise of firmness, kindness, tact, and skill direct their energies. The ability to understand and handle people is a very important quality. One may be gifted and highly trained musically and yet fail as a chorister; for while he may know and master his music he is not able to understand and direct those under him. As to musical training and experience, it "goes without saying" that a chorister should have at least a reasonable equipment of preparation for his work. He should be fully able to handle the musical requirements of his district and to direct choirs, congregations, and orchestras in an efficient manner.

The duties of the district chorister are numerous and important and cannot all be treated. As an officer of the district and a representative of the department he should endeavor to do the church's work in fact and should "study to show" himself "approved" but we will try to detail these duties.

1. The district chorister is to have initiatory charge of the musical work of the district, pertaining to his office. By this we mean he is not only empowered to conduct the district's choral work in its ordinary routine, but it is his duty to, by the use of his intelligence, plan for the musical development of his district, to initiate new ideas and methods for its greater advancement. To this end he should make himself thoroughly acquainted with the musical situation and needs of every branch in his district, that he may intelligently plan for the work of each and all.

2. He should therefore visit, as far as possible, each branch of the district, carefully studying its needs and its possibilities for development. He should counsel and advise with the musical workers in each branch assisting them in their work as much as possible, to establish it on a progressive basis. He should visit the branches as often as practicable in each year, aiding them and instructing them in their work. Some branches should, obviously, be visited oftener than others but in every branch the chorister should endeavor to cooperate with the local forces.

3. The district chorister should not only render assistance to choirs already organized, but in branches where choirs or orchestras do not exist he should work towards the organization and development of such.

4. The district chorister should especially foster the work of congregational singing in both the several branches and the district conferences and should therefore plan that each branch hold at stated intervals congregational "sings" for the development of this work. At the district conference these "sings" should be had at the principal services.

5. Every district chorister should arrange a well thought out system of progressive development for his district. He should not only study thoroughly the material with whom he has to work but he should arrange and keep a tabulated list of the material in each branch and a record of all work done and progress made. This is important, that he may be able to report intelligently the work of his district or any branch of it, to the Department of Music. These reports shall be had at regular intervals, and special reports, covering special features of work, will be called for from time to time.

6. One of the particular duties of the district chorister is the preparation for musical work at the district conferences. Each of these conferences should be a special musical occasion for the district, in which special musical work shall be done for the advancement of the district. The district chorister should therefore plan that at each district conference there be had such musical features and work that this development shall be had. He should prepare the musical interests of the district so that they may function when assembled at the conferences. He should urge choir members of the several branches to attend that "a conference choir" may be formed ready to render the work that the several branch choirs have been doing. He should solicit the attendance of individuals who can bring special musical offerings and features, for the benefit of the conference. As far as practicable, institute or educational work should be had at each conference, instructing the musical workers in their duties and work.

While this bulletin aims to give a comprehensive description of the work of the district musical officer, it is apparent that everything cannot be said in one article. There are many duties devolving upon the district chorister, and in many ways may he develop the work of his district to the good of God's cause. If he is possessed of incentive, initiative, ingenuity, originality, and push, he will do much good and stand distinguished in the ranks of the workers of the church. This is particularly the kind of musical officers the Department of Music wants. Can you not be one of them?

Respectfully, THE DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC.

Important Conference of the Heads of the Department of Music

At the call of its general director, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, the officers of the Department of Music met in a special conference at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 30, 1920, for the consideration of important plans concerned with the department's future work. The sessions were continued, first in Philadelphia and later in New York City, until January 6, 1921.

Many things, having reference not only to the work of the department but to the future musical development of the church as well, were considered. Those present tried to sense the fact that the department is called upon to aid the church in attaining its greatest ideals; hence they endeavored to think deeply and plan wisely for the tasks ahead.

As to our plans—well, as time shall mature many things, we hope that our purposes shall result in great good to the church because we have planned.

One of the fortunate incidents of this conference was the addition of Sister Wallace N. (Louise) Robinson to the ranks of the official heads of the department, she consenting to become one of the associates of the general director. The official roster of the Department of Music, as it now stands, is: Albert N. Hoxie, general director; Mrs. W. N. Robinson and Paul N. Craig, associate directors; Harold C. Burgess, managing director; Arthur H. Mills, secretary. A. H. M.

Independence Choir Renders "The Messiah"

The "Stone Church Choir" at Independence gave its regular annual Christmas-season rendition of Handel's immortal oratorio, "The Messiah," on Sunday evening, January 2, at the Stone Church, which was filled with interested listeners, as it has always been when this masterpiece has been given.

The writer was not personally present to hear this rendition, but credible witnesses have assured us that the standards erected in the past were on this occasion fully maintained. The big choir, numbering about one hundred and twenty-five, sang the majestic numbers of the oratorio with vigor and comprehension, being conducted by the Stone Church chorister, Sister Cordelia Hulmes. The solo parts were taken by Mrs. Nina Grenawalt Smith, soprano; Mrs. Ella Van Huff, contralto; Mr. Richard C. Smith, tenor; and Mr. David Grosch, basso. The accompanists were Misses

CLOTHING SUITED TO ITS USE

No matter for what purpose a garment may be used, it should always meet the requirements of cleanliness and comfort. After that its beauty of style and coloring should be considered.

While all garments should be comparatively easily cleaned, it follows that we can more wisely afford the time or pay the price for cleaning a garment worn for "best" than we can do so for house dresses, etc. Again clothes that meet hard wear must be of a material to stand the strain. Sheer, dainty, frilly garments have no place in the work-a-day world, whether that be about the house, out in the garden, or down town at some place of business.

You will all agree with me that wash materials must be used about the house. The woman who lives in a city apartment, with every modern convenience at hand, can more appropriately, for both herself and her children, use the light colored clothes that call for white undergarments which require extra work to launder well.

But for most of us who dwell in town and have a few chores, or in the country and must care for the poultry and help with the garden and milk the cows, colored gingham and percales with dark petticoats and black, substantial, neat shoes and hose meet our needs best. The dresses should be well made and may be trimmed to suit our fancy so long as that fancy is temperate in its requirements, for don't you agree with me that we Latter Day Saint women should seek to avoid either extreme of overdress or the ugly garments that show a tendency of the wearer to be indifferent to appearances?

The business woman's and the office girl's clothes must meet the same requirements of cleanliness and comfort as those of the home keeper but of course do not need to be of material to stand the same kind of hard wear so she may choose the finer ginghams, some of the lawns, voiles, etc., for summer and the one-piece woolen dress or the tailored suit or skirt and either a wash cotton or wash silk waist for the winter season.

Not much can be said in favor of the way a large percentage of our business and street clothes are made. Particular reference is made to the very narrow skirts, thin, low-cut waists, and improper underclothes. By underclothes is meant corset covers and petticoats.

All corset covers should fit snugly, but comfortably about

About Bulletins

Elsewhere in this issue of The Staff will be found a copy of "bulletin number two," which is one number of a publication now being issued by the Department of Music. This particular number will later be sent out by mail to district officers throughout the church.

These bulletins are intended to assist the department in the conduct of its work, and will be issued at the rate of one each month. They are intended primarily for district musical officers of the department although occasionally, as in the case of the first issue, number one, they will be sent to other church workers as well. We have chosen to print number two in these columns because the matter contained therein is of such universal interest. Number one was sent out January 1 and is in the hands of those for whom it was intended long before this.

the arm and, if the wearer be dark complexioned, there should be a sleevelet fitted into the corset cover or a shield worn with all thin waists so that the armpit will not be exposed. Again, the neck should not be cut low enough to in any way even suggest the exposure of the breasts. The material should be heavy enough to show no garments beneath.

A petticoat that does not boast of fifty-four inches width will not prove comfortable for a long skirt. It really ought to measure one and three fourths to two and a half yards, according to the size of the woman. Too narrow skirts prevent free and easy walking.

If you have considered the foregoing prudish, you will think the suggestions about waists extremely so, for, to my way of thinking, no waist should be cut low enough to expose the breasts to any person who may be standing behind a person, seated at a desk or table.

Very sheer waists really demand an underwaist instead of the usual corset cover and were worn that way by people of good taste and refinement, when they first came into use. The camisole, modestly made and of a color to match the waist, makes a suitable substitute for the underwaist.

What has been said about the width of the petticoat applies with equal force to the width of the dress skirt. And just now, when the fad is for extremely short skirts, doesn't it bring relief to see a woman who has the good judgment to wear skirts of a length becoming to her figure and age!

Those who have to buy "ready-mades" need sympathy rather than censure, for frequently the prevailing styles are such that it is next to impossible to find suitably made garments.

The fancy colored shoes and hose better be left for special occasions and a sensible black or brown style selected for daily wear, one that is made with a low or medium high heel.

If you were going to put up a foundation pillar for a porch, which would look the better, a 2x4 board set upright, or a substantial pillar of brick or stone? You will choose the latter, I know. Did you ever compare a woman to a porch and the heel of her shoe to the pillar? Next time you meet a woman weighing more than one hundred pounds, and wearing high, French heels, just make the comparison and you will resolve to wear sensible, substantial heels on your shoes thereafter.

From the standpoint of health there is a very serious reason for wearing either low or medium high heels, for the delicate female organs are so placed in the body that the work necessary to keep the body erect when wearing high heels produces a strain upon the muscles and ligaments holding such organs in place and is very liable to produce a weakened condition or a misplacement that brings suffering and sickness.

If the foregoing statements be true—and any physician will agree to them—how much worse is it for us to allow our growing girls to wear such shoes? At their period of development the organs may be made to grow into a permanently wrong position.

The reason colored footwear is not often worn by people of good taste, is that it is conspicuous unless one is dressed in colors and style especially adapted to them. Besides they are too hard to keep clean to be good for general wear.

Only the woman or girl who can wisely afford two hats should purchase a frilly, lacy one, for such creations belong only to social affairs. To-day they have such pretty tailored and semi-tailored hats, it is not hard to select one suited to both business and social needs.

On Fashions

To-day we ran across an article written by that Parisian creator of fashions and designer of gowns, whose products have been the delight of near-, plain-, and multi-millionaires the world over for many years. This article was clipped in 1912, but in many ways seems as applicable now as then.

In contrast, however, we present the views of Mrs. Chase, of New York, editor of the well-known magazine, Vogue. She seems to think women are ready to become sensible in their dress, and will dress with great simplicity and good taste. Let us hope she is correct in her prognostications, as contained in the newspapers of January 14, this year.

In connection with Sister Mader's second article on clothing, which is presented in this issue, these clippings make interesting reading.

A. A.

Lack of Dignity in Clothes

You ask me, "Is dignity in clothes increasing or not increasing?" My opinion, to which I am forced by every tendency I see about me, is emphatically, that dignity in clothes is not increasing.

Where do you see dignified clothes in these days? Look at the procession of women in any fashionable street. Do you see in their clothes grace, simplicity, purity of line? These are the things which mean dignity. I think we will all agree, and certainly I do not find them in the current fashions.

What you see in the dress of the woman of to-day who makes herself a slave to the fashion of the moment, is far removed from the true artist's conception of dignity. To begin with, not half of them can walk, and those whose skirts may, for the moment, permit them to put one foot before the other as heaven intended them to do, do not avail themselves of the privilege for the good reason that they have forgotten how to walk, so long have some of them been prisoners to the absurdly narrow skirt.

Can anyone find dignity in a mincing step? Perhaps in China, but certainly not among a people trained in our traditions, and looking, as after all we do look, on Greece and the Grecian ideal of physical freedom as the fountainhead of all beauty. And even in China, I believe they are tired of the mincing walk—just as we are apparently beginning to admire it.

Again, everything that is freakish must lack dignity. I do not say that a Turkish lady sitting in her luxurious harem may not be beautiful to the eye. I have no doubt that she is an admirable sight, but if you dressed her in half Turkish style and half in Parisian style, she would certainly appear absurd to the ladies who are privileged to see her.

Are our women less absurd when they stick a Turkish headdress on their heads over French gowns and drive around in automobiles? They may sometimes be piquant, if they have pretty faces to carry off the absurdity, but dignified they are not.

As a matter of fact, dignity cannot be preserved if a woman is determined at all costs to be the mirror of fashion. It is not possible for a woman to adapt herself to every changing whim. She cannot make herself all over twice a year for the spring and autumn fashion plates, not even with the good will that so many women bring to the task. There is such a thing as nature in the world as well as fashion and women would do well to remember it more than they do.

What I say to our clients is always, "Do not follow the fashion like a slave." It is what our house has always said. Always we have counseled our clients to find what suits their individuality and to stick to it.

There are "fashionable" gowns in our house, of course. Models one must have and they must be the last cry of the moment. We cannot avoid that, but to our old customers, to the people whom we know and who trust our judgment, our advice is seldom on the side of the ultrafashionable. We seek to develop individuality; we seek to give that dignity which, after all, comes from being your true self and not a silly imitation of something quite different from yourself.

But there is a deep meaning in the lack of dignity in present-day gowns. I cannot believe that fashions are merely passing caprice. On the contrary, I am convinced that there is a profound psychological reason for fashions. They really reflect the spirit of the time.

To my mind it is not by accident that it happens fashions have gone crazy. The times have gone crazy, too. Perforce, clothes reflect the restlessness, the lack of repose which characterizes our day.

We are always running after something new; we never know what it is to keep quiet. Nerves and dignity do not go together. We are not to-day a dignified people; hence our clothes. I might paraphrase the old epigram and say, "Every nation has the clothes it deserves."

It has always been so. Allow me a little historical digression. In the days of Henry III, which were times of deep thought, especially along religious lines, clothes were severe and dignified. There was even a law to this effect, regulating the use of colors and so forth.

With a brief interval, at the time of peace and rejoicing and a consequent outburst of gayety, clothes remained dignified for a long while. Under the most magnificent of French kings, Louis XIV, they still preserved this character. They were rich in the extreme, but with that side of the question we are not concerned.

Looking at clothes only in their relation to the one quality we are discussing we can truthfully say that for a long period they possessed dignity. And we can also say that the times were dignified. There were great thoughts stirring, a great literature forming, great deeds being done.

With Louis XV there came a change. The century went crazy then, and the clothes promptly went crazy, too. Prettiness, charm, there often was, but the dignity of the earlier reigns existed no more in their clothes than in their thoughts.

So it went on for some time. Then there came the greatest of all revolutions. The minds of all became filled with the seriousness of life, and the philosophers were the gods of everybody. At once clothes showed the reaction.

We see, under the empire, clothes notable for their simple and dignified lines. Women dressed with a severity that was actually masculine. Exaggerations and absurdities were forgotten, or if they remained in some rare cases, they were exaggerations on the side of severity.

I will not press history further for illustrations, but I could readily bring any number of proofs of my theory. Clothes undoubtedly reflect the spirit of the time.—Jean Worth.

Household Budget for the New Year

Now is a good time to begin keeping a budget of your personal or household expenses.

More and more the budget idea is becoming popular with persons who practice thrift. They find it stabilizes their habits of life and makes it easier to save systematically.

Anyone desiring a household or personal budget will receive a six months' supply without cost by writing to the American Society for Thrift, 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

The budgets are given away by the society in connection with its educational work. The secretary of the organization reports that American people are rapidly learning the budget habit as indicated by the great increase of budgets issued by the society.—Omaha Bee.

There is a higher law than the Constitution.—William H. Seward.

To Understand Is to Enlist

"I hereby acknowledge receipt of the copy of your Yearbook, and express my pleasure and appreciation of your thoughtfulness.

"I am, and always have been, interested in the good work that the sisters of the church are doing, and in watching the developments in Zion, and I say there are many avenues where good can be accomplished by them.

"I feel that to understand the work of the Women's Department means to enlist the sisters from one end of the world to the other, and that this line of work is much needed everywhere.

"I pray that God may bless your efforts."—

The Bishopric

Agent's Notice

To the Saints of Western Michigan District: I wish to express appreciation for the splendid work you have accomplished the past year, for the efforts you have made to bring all the tithes into the Lord's storehouse. I am sure the Lord will bless you in your efforts. You have responded well to the call for means to build the General Conference auditorium, and while our quota was $3,000, you have pledged $6,000. But now comes the test. The work is to be accomplished. Let us be prompt in meeting the payments. The quicker we do this, the quicker will the building be completed, and in this way we can loosen the hands of the Bishop that he may accomplish the great task we have placed on him.

I trust that in the year before us, we may accomplish still more than we have in the year just past.

I hope every member of the district will file his annual property statement with the Bishop, in response to the request made. Ask your solicitor or myself for the blanks and if you are needing assistance, let us know, and we will be glad to render it.

Your colaborer,

F. W. HASTINGS, Bishop's Agent.

Changes of Appointment

Chatham District Presidency: At the last conference of the Chatham District Elder James Pycock, missionary supervisor, was chosen as president of the district. Consent was obtained from the Quorum of Twelve for his release from the missionary arm in order to meet the emergency existing in the local work. Elder Pycock entered whole-heartedly into the work of the district presidency which he has handled very acceptably. The appointment of Elder A. G. Larkey to the Chatham District now makes it possible to release Elder Pycock from the local charge in order that he may again take up his work as missionary supervisor. The Presidency has therefore accepted the resignation of Brother Pycock as district president, and has appointed Brother Larkey to fill out the unexpired term. By this change Brother Pycock again becomes missionary instead of local. We ask for Brother Larkey the support and cooperation of the Saints of the Chatham District.

"Ensamles to the Flock"

Brother A: "I don't think the church has any right to require me to report my financial affairs. I guess I can pay my tithing if I want to without listing all I possess or have spent."

Brother B: "You believe in tithing then, but you don't want to tell the bishop what you are paying tithing on. Is that your trouble?"

A: "Yes, tithing is a true principle, but I am the only one concerned in my private affairs. If I sin I expect to answer to the church, but why does the bishop want a list of my "jewelry," "live stock," and "all other property"? I alone am responsible in caring for that. It is not his fault if I do not tithe all of it."

B: "Not so fast, brother. God has enjoined upon the bishop the responsibility of teaching the law and collecting and disbursing the tithes and offerings. The report blank is for your convenience. Your willingness to lay all things before the bishop is the measure of your consecration to God as his steward. He has said: "It is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings." Some men might apply the teaching improperly. Unless they render a true account; "faithful in that which is least," it would not be recognizing God as a partner; it would make him your pensioner."

A: "Well, perhaps I was looking at it from a selfish viewpoint. I surely would not want to be out of harmony with the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law. I'll send my Annual Tithing Report in to-morrow. I'll not hold anything back like Ananias did either."

B: "Well, brother, I am certainly glad to hear you say that. I am sure your example will make it easier for others to comply with the law and will beget faith and confidence in those who are watching your actions. God has lately said: "Until such heed is paid . . . the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed." Let us not be stumblingblocks to any but ensamples to the flock."

Many Visit Nauvoo

President E. A. Smith: We have had a good many visitors in 1920 but not so many as in 1919. In 1919 we recorded 1,243 visitors, in 1920 we recorded 1,130. In that time we distributed over sixteen hundred tracts and also spent many pleasant hours telling the gospel story, and the difference between the Reorganized Church and the one in the West, and in defending the character of the founder of the church and we heard very many say that they were glad that they could come here and get the facts.

A Revival in Independence

The young people of the organized classes at Independence, at a prayer meeting on January 2, resolved to hold special services the week January 30 to February 6, having first secured the approval of the First Presidency and Pastor R. V. Hopkins. They provided that the success of these meetings shall be the special theme of the prayer meetings January 16, 23, and 30, also of the Wednesday night prayer meeting on January 26. Each member of these classes is expected to bring at least one person with him or her to the services each night. They are striving to make a consecrated effort for preparation, both by faith and prayer, and also by organized effort, advertising, and financial. Elder D. T. Williams of the Lamoni Stake Presidency has been secured for the speaker of the week, and Elder Harold C. Burgess, general manager of the Music Department, will have charge of the music; John M. Lloyd has charge of finance, and A. E. McKim of advertising.

The songs used will be all from our usual songbooks, the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises. There will be no attempt at anthems or special choir work.

A letter from George H. Wixom informs us that John W. Rushton has been by no means idle since his return. He is announced, in the city paper of Santa Ana, to preach, and was greeted by two audiences on January 2. He also went to Laguna Beach in the auto of Mr. J. F. Rabe, a leading photographer and friend to the church, where a third large audience was met. The following day they proceeded to San Bernardino, where he spoke before the high school and the Rotary Club of that city, these addresses being very much appreciated, and receiving invitations for his return.

On the 9th, he spoke twice at Long Beach to a crowded house, and then proceeded the next day to Santa Ana, and spoke at the Junior College, and to the Rotary Club again, with an earnest invitation for his return.

Elder Wixom writes that he is making arrangements to address the Rotarians at Long Beach, and also to speak before the Southern Branch of the University of California.

The Santa Ana, California, church makes regular use of the daily paper. There are 21 lines in the Daily Register of January 8 which announces two sermons by Elder F. G. Pitt. And a summary of Elder John W. Rushton's address to the Rotarians of Santa Ana appears in the Daily Register of January 11.

Wireless news from the office of the Presidency informs us that Apostle J. A. Gillen has written from Brooklyn, New York, on the 5th, saying the party consisting of himself, Charles Fry, James E. Bishop, and Daniel B. Sorden were to sail the next day. No trouble was had in regard to passports. Their boat was in the harbor, having had a rough trip across. They were to go on board soon.

Latest letter from President F. M. Smith, dated December 27, written at Halle an Saale, Germany, says they were at the home of Brother Alexander Kippe. They were to visit Hanover next, then on to Berlin, to see about church registration in Germany.

With Zahnd Under Two Flags

For some time past John Zahnd has been writing ingratiating letters to the Saints. We have given them little thought, being confident, when we thought about it at all, that in time he would reveal his true colors. This he has done. Note the following circular letter to the clergy of Kansas City:

"KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, Jan. 4, 1921.

"To the Clergy of Greater Kansas City,
"Dear Friends:

"I address this to you as a personal address on a matter which I think is of vital importance and should be considered by all who desire to establish right and justice in the minds of the people.

"This question of Mormonism is the subject I have in mind. You no doubt know that many books have been written against the Utah Mormon Church and many just exposures have been made, but there is an organization known as the Re-Organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in our midst, which I think is the most harmful of the two organizations, as I was connected with this organization for about 15 years, filled various positions in the church as an elder, both here and elsewhere and withdrew from them in September, 1918.

"Do you know that this Re-Organized Church has established the Kansas City, Mo. Stake; Independence, Mo. Stake; Holden, Mo. Stake; St. Joseph, Mo. Stake; Lamoni, Iowa Stake, which have at their head a president and two counselors, a presiding bishop and two counselors with a standing high council of twelve high priests in each stake? They are laying the stakes out into wards, and are covering the ground thoroughly, having in each ward an elder, priest and teacher.

"To carry on this work, they are receiving finances and contributions from all parts of the world, and the time is here when you will find Kansas City so thoroughly organized that the Mormon hold will be hard to be broken. Are you sure that you and your congregation understand the importance of this matter? Are you sure that your people understand and are able to defend against this organization who have the audacity to claim that they are the only true and authoritative church on earth?

"I am prepared to deliver a lecture free of charge to every congregation in greater Kansas City, upon appointment and lay this matter before your people in such a way that they will be better prepared to meet the issue and at the same time doing it with a spirit of love and humility.

"I regret that I was connected with this organization, but have outlived this deception and only hope to be able to help in the defense against this work and to establish a truer and better Christianity among mankind. My residence is
..... I will be glad to hear from you, if I can be of any assistance, or to see you in person.

"Very sincerely,

"JOHN ZAHND."

The foregoing is an interesting letter, but it is not so very long ago that we received one even more interesting, as follows:

"April 3, 1920.

"The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S.

"In Conference Assembly,

"Independence, Missouri.

"Dear Friends:

"As an Elder and Representative of the The Church of Christ, which is a large independent movement having no organization as far as an organized body is concerned (meaning organized as far as the laws of the land), wish to appeal to you as follows:

"First, that a representative be given the opportunity to address your Conference, at some meeting convenient to you during your General Conference assembled, for the purpose of explaining our position and to come to a better understanding as to the possibility of working harmony with all those who are believers in what is commonly explained the reorganized Gospel.

"Second, wish to say that the independent members standing outside of any faction, are numbered by many hundreds and perhaps thousands, which our correspondence and co-operation shows. We believe that the time is coming when there should be a mutual understanding by all members with the possibility of appointing a council from the Utah Church, the Reorganized Church and other factions, also from the Independent Order with the view of trying to come to a common conclusion of working harmony.

"Wish to say if granted the privilege of addressing your Conference that there will be nothing said that would be discourteous or out of harmony with right principles or that would be in any way abusive, believing that constructive work is the only essential way of deriving right principles.

"Yours for the cause of truth,

"JOHN ZAHND."

As late as last October the honey was still dripping, and we received a personal letter from Mr. Zahnd in which he said: "I see no reason why the Church of Christ cannot be on friendly terms with the Reorganization. I am sending you Glad Tidings written by one of our Elders. I trust you will read it carefully. All believers in the Book of Mormon should be united."

Here we have a singular picture puzzle. Assemble the parts:

a In September, 1918, we were a bad people, a menace—he came out from us (being assisted). He was glad to get out, and started a church of his own, on paper.

b April 3, 1920, we were rather a good people, "dear friends" in fact, and he wished to effect an affiliation of his church, the Utah Church, and the Reorganization, all "Mormanism" in fact, on a basis of working harmony. His proposal being "so very sudden" was not accepted.

c In October, 1920, we were still good people, and he saw no reason why we should not work together on "friendly terms" and all be united.

d Three months later, January 4, 1921, he is again suddenly aware that all "Mormanism" is a terrible menace—the Reorganized Church the worst of the lot, also that we have stakes in Kansas City, Independence, Saint Joseph, Holden, and Lamoni, a fact which he no doubt—er—ah—forgot in April and October when he wished so very much to affiliate with us. And now it becomes his painful duty to dash all over Greater Kansas City, weary, footsore, and out of breath, to warn people that the dam is about to break and sweep

Mrs Thos France

Convention Hall into the Blue River. Has no one an ear, or perhaps two ears, for this Paul Revere?

Combining the epistles we have this: "I got out of the Reorganization because it was very bad and a menace to society and now I would like to effect an affiliation of my church and the Utah Church and the Reorganization so as to work together on a friendly basis with mutual understanding because all Mormonism is bad and the Reorganization the worst of the lot, a very bad bunch, I being one of the biggest among them for fifteen years, so attention, ministers of Greater Kansas City, etc."

Marching under two flags worked all right until he was caught using both at about the same time—one for the Saints, the other for the Gentiles.

Reverting to the circular letter, John Zahnd does not say why the Reorganization is the more harmful of the two organizations, but his language conveys the intimation that it is because he was connected with it for fifteen years. He certainly never did us much good, but God forbid that his association with us even for fifteen years should make us more harmful than the Utah Mormon Church; and may we be forgiven as teachers, when we reflect that he was under our tutelage for fifteen years and never so much as learned how to spell the word Mormon. It is possible, however, that he is the man sometimes mentioned by S. A. Burgess who demanded concrete facts, alleging that he had a concrete head. The fact that Zahnd claims that he was an active member of such a terrible church for fifteen years before the true character of the church really dawned upon him and that for two years after leaving it he made love to it at odd times confirms the thought that he is the man. Granting that truth penetrates the cranium at the rate of even one inch a year, what have you? (As a matter of fact he is further from truth to-day than he has been for years.)

The extreme slowness with which the spirit of discernment is supposed to have operated on this man should furnish him food for thought. If it took fifteen years for the spirit of discernment to reach the intelligence of John Zahnd (as we are asked to believe), the moral should be that he ought not to be too sure of his present position and church affiliation. Let John wait fifteen years before becoming too positive. It may be that at the end of that period of probation he will conclude that the fellowship of the National Exchanger is even more harmful than the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It would not surprise us at all if ultimately he should reach such a conclusion. But give him time—there is lots of it.

It would be rude to ask him to keep still while he waits. But think of the fifteen years of wasted oratory of the past. Think of the procession of words and protestations and testimonies and exhortations wasted and worse than wasted. No doubt they will go on, because self-expression like self-determination is very dear and sacred to the heart of man. But the rest of us will put his protestations, exhortations, warnings, denunciations, visions, and testimonies into cold storage, marking them to be taken out in 1936 so that he may have time to find out whether or not he is quite sure of his position—and perhaps after the lapse of those years it will not be necessary to take them out at all.

Of course, this is a free country, and tastes differ as the old incident of the lady and the cow teaches, so no doubt Mr. Zahnd has a right to his choice of churches. But it does occur to us that a man hands himself an odiferous bouquet when he advertises that he prefers the polygamous organization of Utah, fostered by Brigham Young, to the clean-teaching, right-living church known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The condemnation of such men is our flattery.

Mr. Zahnd says he regrets very much that he ever belonged to the church. So do we. It is unanimous. He says he is glad he is out of the church. So are we—if he feels that way about it. There is perfect amity on those points. Now let us forget it. And this all will do very shortly; but in the meantime we insist that Mr. Zahnd must—he really must—get under the one flag or the other. We love a consistent friend, and we respect an honest enemy—but Mr. Zahnd plays both parts badly. The editor of the Exchanger doth exchange too much. To vary the figure again, he must learn that his voice is not adapted to singing duets. He cannot continue to coo for us and roar for the clergy of Greater Kansas City.

Young People's Revival in Independence

The following was received by wireless from Independence: Young people's revival began to-day [January 30]. Six hundred young people at morning prayer meeting at 8 a. m. Elbert A. Smith, R. V. Hopkins, and Walter W. Smith in charge. A pentecostal service. Visions and inspired dreams related, and numerous manifestations of the gift of prophecy. Even very young people spoke in prophecy with great power during the service. President Elbert A. Smith arose and stated that he had been directed by the Spirit to bless the young people. They arose en masse and received the blessing. At evening service every seat taken; 1,500 in upper auditorium. The speaker, D. T. Williams, opened the series with a powerful sermon on the Restoration. Harold Burgess is song leader and a splendid help. Overflow meeting in lower auditorium for older people during the entire series. A. B. Phillips was the speaker.

Not Our Will, But His

Our will becomes one with His, not by loss of identity, because love and knowledge bring us to know His way is best.

The establishment of the different glories would appear to infer individual immortality. The Bible speaks of bodies celestial, bodies terrestrial, and bodies telestial, and adds: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." (1 Corinthians 15: 40-42.)

In John 17: 3 the Master declares, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Both of these passages would appear clearly to indicate the existence of individual intelligence. The prayer of the Master which follows, not only emphasizes the need of unity in the church, but defines the nature of that unity. Again and again is the prayer repeated, that they may be one, "as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17: 21.) "That they may be one, as we are." (Verse 11.) That would indicate a very close association, and agreement of purpose, and would not indicate a fusion or loss of identity.

There have been many theories in the world, according to which man loses entirely his identity in the divine. As we understand the word of God, there is no such provision therein. There is a much higher ideal than mere passivity, as thus set forth. It is very easy simply to surrender our will, and leave another to direct and determine and be responsible. It is a much greater thing that intelligence should be developed to a point where we shall always know that which is good, that which is right, and knowing shall choose the right.

"If ye continue in my word, ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "He who continueth in sin, is the servant of sin."

Knowing then that which is good, and willing and choosing that which is best, our will becomes identical with the divine will, and we can repeat fully that prayer:

"Breathe on me, breath of God,
Fill me with life anew,
That I may love what thou dost love,
And do what thou wouldst have me do."

It is not a complete surrender of all individuality, but rather a conviction of the way of right—Thy way is best.

Even the divine Master in agony prayed, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." And Paul, referring to him, applies the passage, "I come, as it is written in the books of thy law, to do thy will, O God." The unity that exists between the Lord Jesus Christ and his Father is not a fusion of identity, but rather an agreement and a united willing to the same hand. It includes the confidence of a son in his father, but it is an agreement of intelligence, between two distinct entities, or beings. There is no place, so far as we can find in the law of God, where man is called upon to surrender his identity and cease to think. He has his free agency and responsibility for its proper use. Lucifer would have taken a surrender of identity and absolute control of will, and in such a plan claimed to save man. (Genesis 3.) But because of that desire was rejected.

But there is another basis for the surrender of our will to Him, and that is love. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come unto you." "He who hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him." "If a man love me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." (John 14: 15, 18, 21, 23.)

When we love a person, we are glad to do what he wishes. We wish to please, and are careful lest we give offense. It was because of the love existing between Jesus and his Father that he could say with full intent, "Thy will be done."

Perfect faith, perfect love, and a recognition of his Fatherhood and of his supreme wisdom, each and all bring to pass that consecration of effort. We know his way is best, and choose to walk therein here and hereafter. And hence is our will lost in his, a unity of a perfect whole without flaw; many individuals, still of one perfect intent united for that which is best and altogether lovely.

So we see, far above the ideal of the lost spiritual identity, a complete fusion in the divine, this truer ideal of individual spiritual existence of the growth of intelligence, so that because of intelligence, because of love, there is a perfect bond between many units.

As the Father and Son are one, so do we then become one with each other and with them, each one choosing the right, each individual exercising his own judgment and agreeing perfectly with all on the basis of truth and right, and all bound together with that perfect love which is of God.

An honest man is the noblest work of God.—Pope.

October Journal of History

The October, 1920, Journal of History is just before us, and contains some additional data concerning the ancestry of Joseph Smith and Emma Hale. It adds additional proof that Joseph Smith was not descended from a weak ancestry, for the family records reach into the life roots of the American nation.

A short biographical sketch of George M. Hinkle; history of the Cutlerite faction of the Latter Day Saints; five pages of official statements of Joseph Smith, quoting several of his editorials; items of the local history of the Lamoni Stake, the Pottowattamie District, and the Philadelphia Branch, and finally a list of the 45 reunions held in 1920 and a brief sketch of Henry A. Stebbins complete the offering of this number.

The history of the Philadelphia Branch, by Church Historian Walter Wayne Smith, includes reference to the Philadelphia Public Ledger, for July 19, 1844, which contained a lengthy extract under the heading "Nauvoo matters," from the Saint Louis, Missouri, Transcript of July 12, including the following:

"A correspondent of the Republican (Saint Louis, Missouri), writing from Quincy (Illinois) on the 4th inst., says nothing new had transpired touching the Mormon difficulties. . . . Under date of the 6th inst., the same writer says: 'Much speculation is abroad as to who will be the successor of the impostor Joe. It is asserted by those who profess to know, that his oldest son, a youth about twelve years of age, is to be the next ruler, and that a "revelation" to that effect was left behind by the departed Prophet.'

It also continues the statement that Elder Sidney Rigdon, beginning November 7, 1844, delivered a series of lectures in the hall at Seventh and Callowhill Streets in Philadelphia on the order of the priesthood and the doctrine of the church, declaring against certain actions of the Quorum of Twelve, and insisting upon his right to preside as a member of the First Presidency. The church historian continues:

"He said he was the guardian of the church until such time as little Joseph, the son of the Prophet, was old enough to be ordained to the high priesthood and presidency thereof, and assume the responsibility of presiding over the whole church. He said that prior to the death of Joseph Smith, he (Joseph Smith) had consecrated and set apart his son Joseph, by anointing and prayer, to be his successor, and that he (Sidney Rigdon) was present at a public meeting in Nauvoo when he had announced the same to the Saints."

This is some additional evidence that immediately after the death of Joseph Smith they were looking for his son Joseph to come forth as his successor. Joseph Smith, jr., was shot on June 27, yet on July 12 the Saint Louis paper was publishing the statement that his oldest son would be his successor, as a revelation to that effect was left behind.

Stewardship Enrollment

"God is the owner of all;

"Man is a steward, and must account for all that he has;

"God requires acknowledgment of his ownership by the dedication of the first fruits—a definite proportion of all income—for giving to extend the kingdom of heaven on earth.

"What is spent and saved is likewise to be administered as a sacred trust, as is also our power to acquire."

The above is taken from The Presbyterian of January 13, 1921, and is the platform of stewardship principles to be discussed from now until February 20, at which time they will hold a stewardship enrollment day for the Presbyterian Church.

It is stated as part of a business basis that each should give as he has prospered, that even the smaller churches may endeavor to become self-sustaining and encourage the principle of giving.

Part of the plan is keeping an account book so as to determine the net annual income on which to base tithing to assist in the work of the church.

This stewardship plan is excellent so far as it goes, but is limited to helping the church. It does not provide for helping also the individual. It is certainly to be commended, however, in recognition of the business principles that we should endeavor to be self-sustaining, and should endeavor to help in the work of God to the extent of our power.

The Difficulty of Getting Reliable World News

In the discussion of news of the world it is worth while to note that it is indeed very difficult to secure accurate information. Different writers clearly affirm that there is no place to be secured accurate information concerning the Near or Far East—that is, in none of the publications of Western Europe or America. There is less of freedom of presentation in America than there was before the war. The same is true in Great Britain. These two nations are apparently far in advance of the rest of the world in attempting to present the truth.

As to Russia, it seems nearly impossible to receive accurate news. The general press presents deplorable conditions. The socialist press minimizes the shortcomings, and strongly emphasizes what are considered beneficial factors. Yet in both cases there are notable divisions. There are Socialists who score heavily the conditions there, such men as John Spargo, and others of international fame. On the other hand, there are men who have no connection with, and no use for Socialism or communism directly, who have written favorably of conditions in that country.

A great deal of emphasis is placed on the blockade, and the evil it is doing, inferentially, in starving the people. Yet in plain fact, Russia has always exported food, and produces an excess. It may reasonably be questioned if any starvation or shortage of food in the cities of Russia is caused by the blockade, instead of by existing internal conditions. Still it naturally interferes with commerce and interchange of food from Russia for commodities from other countries.

It is well to keep these factors in mind when stories are read, printed doubtless with the utmost good intent, concerning conditions elsewhere. Several have written concerning the nationalization of women in Russia. As near as we can ascertain, nothing of the kind ever occurred, unless it be within a very limited area, and for a very limited time. When reference is made to such stories in our columns, it is not made for the purpose of accepting their validity, but a recognition that the world is in turmoil and disturbed. The printing of such stories is an illustration of existing conditions.

From the best information we can secure, both in America and abroad, there has been a general lessening of moral restraint, and an increasing disregard of law. It is a condition which is deplorable and we sincerely hope will soon pass.

There is no real freedom except in accordance with the principles of truth and of righteousness. A breaking over of restraint brings its own punishment and restriction. The mind of man is only free from inhibition and can only move in the path of peace and of true freedom when it follows the way of right.

Interest in the "honor system" is continuing to grow, and has been adopted by several colleges, including the Colorado Agricultural College, Ohio State University, the Valparaiso University in Indiana, and it is being considered by Coe College, Iowa, the University of Michigan, and Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Subjects Being Discussed

Graceland Man to Survey Culver for Junior College

Arrangements have been completed so that Doctor Floyd M. McDowell is to spend a week or more at the Culver Military School, at Culver, Indiana, to make a survey of the situation and offer recommendations as to the requirements to make it a junior college. He will begin his work February 1.

The choice of Doctor McDowell for this important work came through a recommendation from the United States Bureau of Education, which has made his work on the junior college a part of their standard educational literature.

The Culver school is a large institution, has an excellent faculty, and ample means to carry on its work. The recognition of the ability of Doctor McDowell as a Graceland man to do this important work is indeed an honor and we are confident that they will secure satisfactory results.

An Urgent Need

The drive in an effort to raise 33 million dollars for the children of Europe still continues. Latest advice is to the effect that there has been no padding in the reported amounts to the various States and counties. Therefore every ten dollars that a county is short means practically the loss of one life. Over half of the amount needed has been raised, but the whole amount is needed. Ten million for medical service, and 23 million to feed the three million children of Europe. A one dollar bill provides for one child for a month.

Cost of a Standing Army

One of the factors if a league of nations is not supported must be military preparedness. Recent discussion has been whether the standing army of the United States should be 150,000 or 175,000. At first glance the difference would not appear to be great. Senator Borah is reported to have submitted figures showing that the difference amounts to 35 million dollars a year. The Des Moines Register points out that this is more than the amount of the salaries paid to all professors in the 249 colleges surveyed by the National Bureau of Education. Compared to the total cost of the War Department, it would seem small, but compared to the need of more adequate educational facilities, and better salaries to teachers, and additional buildings to care for the young people desiring to take collegiate work, the amount is decidedly large.

The Lambeth Conference

An item frequently repeated in the religious press of Great Britain is the effect of the Lambeth Conference of the Church of England. The situation is different in England from what it is in the United States of America. There is more discussion there of what should be done towards union. This discussion here seems to be the decline of the inter-church movement, while much of its work will be taken over by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Doctor MacFarland was highly honored at the recent quadrennial meeting at Boston, and it would appear continues in office as the real executor. Doctor North was released and is succeeded by Doctor Robert E. Speer. There is some criticism of the extension of aims by the Federal Council, and the ignoring of the spiritual aspects of the church. At the meeting at Boston, those present evidently approved the work done by the secretary in organizing new commissions.

I Meet an Agnostic

By R. W. Farrell

When Elder Farrell accepted a challenge to debate the existence of a personal God.

Looking back over a missionary experience covering twenty years, I recall many pleasant and many unpleasant happenings; but they were all so much grist that came to the mill of life. While laboring in an eastern city, I dropped into a hall where the speaker regaled himself every Sunday afternoon giving lectures on "rationalism." And be it remembered that rationalism is a word that stands for every phase of infidelic thinking.

I shall never forget the little wizened old man, who spoke with tongue most glib, and challenged successful contradiction to his supposedly profoundly logical attack on God, Bible, and Christianity. Two hundred men and a few women listened and applauded. Every person present had been cast in the intellectual mold, and some were splendid-looking men. My heart was moved like Paul's when he stood on Mars Hill. I learned later that men were present from the South and the West. The big building had been dedicated to Thomas Paine, but not the Paine who in his early days had done so much to encourage the Revolutionary Fathers, rather the changed Paine who tried to destroy the Word of God.

The subject that afternoon was "Lying creeds," and I thought the speaker could have easily proved his case without resorting to slander of religion in general. At the close of the discourse, I spoke five minutes with a result that some one offered me five dollars if I would debate on the subject of the existence of a personal God. Why should I hesitate? I readily agreed, but not for filthy lucre's sake.

On the following Sunday, before an audience of about five hundred, Doctor Bland and I clashed swords. To show that he was a foeman worthy of one's steel, I may say that he was a graduate of Oxford University, England, thirty-three years a Unitarian minister and many years an agnostic. He said that Huxley was his classmate. Some time after our debate he wrote to the Truthseeker, an infidelic paper, that he had met a Mormon minister in debate and had, as usual, whipped him to death. His breezy and wordy account doubtless caused a great deal of merriment in the hearts of the readers of Truthseeker, but I imagine the smiles would have frozen on their lips had I been permitted to publish Doctor Bland's letter to me written just after the debate closed. I copy from the original sheet in my possession, which I recently found among some old books, and which finding inspired this sketch.

"Dear Brother Farrell: Just a word to thank you for the fairness and courtesy with which you bore yourself in our debate; and also to say that you showed more knowledge and real ability in presenting your side than any man I have ever met, and I have met a great many. You made only two bad breaks, one on the God-seeing matter, and the other one on to whom Jesus spoke his Sermon on the Mount.

"With very best wishes, most cordially yours,

"J. B. BLAND."

It is almost needless to state that I wrote to Doctor Bland and showed him that, taking the Bible as the word of evidence, men had seen God and would see God, and that the statement "take no thought for to-morrow" was directed to the disciples who were going forth to preach the gospel. I preserved a few notes which I made at the time of the debate: they may interest those who desire to read this sketch to its end.

Meaning of the Word God

By the word God we mean something more than good. The word includes Supreme Intelligence, Divine Creator, etc. Unwilling as some may be to acknowledge it, there is not a day that passes in which we do not accept as true and believe hundreds of things which we cannot prove, if called upon to do so. In the absolute sense we cannot prove anything. You say that two and two make four; but how do you know? Who told you? It is claimed by one philosopher that in another planet two and two make five. Belief really rests upon evidence absorbed. If that evidence is true, our belief will be correct—and vice versa. It is so easy to cry out: "Prove the existence of a personal God? How do you know that Jesus lived?"

But why demand so much more of the Christian than of the agnostic? The great philosophies really prove very little. Such men as Bergson come along in our day and attempt to show that the materialistic claims are fallacious. And if Bergson is correct, away goes the many laborious deductions of the past five hundred years. Whew!

Let us not forget that after examining all the external evidence this world affords, in proof of God's personal existence, we may possess only a belief based on historical knowledge; and this is comparatively nothing when placed beside the divine knowledge which God has promised to give those who obey him. We can hope to accomplish by this investigation only the stimulation of desire to enter into a fuller search after the "desire of all nations." And if we search consistently we shall find him, for he is not far from any one of us.

We have first, then, the argument from design. Paley was a wise man, and in his work he refers to the watch. Did it make itself? Who designed its wheels, hands, springs, etc.? And for what purpose was it made? The infidel has passed lightly over Paley's argument, but it has never been refuted. Then comes the eye. Who can gaze into and study the human eye and not see intelligence behind its construction? The retina receives pictures; the lenses reflect rays; there is power of adjustment; distances are gauged, degrees of light admitted, and movement possible. But why all this wonderful arrangement? The eye was made to see. There was an intelligent designer, or maker of it. The eye is comparatively perfect in the unborn child—it is then a prospective organ, of no use before birth. We see a plan. To say that the eye is the result of purely organic evolution, is to say that Aristotle evolved from a grain of sand, is to tax credulity to the bursting point.

Doctor Bland admitted that my reference to the vegetable kingdom was an illustration worthy of careful thought. Take the coral island. A coconut tree reaches its roots into the salt water and sucks substance with which to make a nut filled with meat and drink. A man cast upon this island after a tidal wave has poisoned the springs, finds life in the coconut. How do we account for this miracle, as it were? The infidel makes his Chance as big a thinker as the Christian believes his God to be. Thought implies a thinker. The eye would be of no use without light; neither would be the milk and meat of the coconut without man.

The Great First Cause

Any person who is able to design, we call a personal being. The Hebrews called this Designer, Jehovah; we call him God, which is a good and appropriate name. So Thomas Paine wrote (in his Age of Reason):

"The only idea that man can affix to the name of God is that of a first-cause, the cause of all things. And, incomprehensible and difficult as it is for man to conceive what a first cause is, he arrives at the belief of it from the ten-fold greater difficulty of disbelieving it. Everything we behold carries in itself the internal evidence that it did not make itself. The first-cause man calls God."

It must be God or chance, for without a divine mind, a divine Reasoner, everything is because it "just happened so." Professor Jevons (the equal to Sir William Hamilton) believed that "if a phenomenon does exist, it demands some kind of an explanation." The learned Beattie's son, after seeing a garden planted so as to spell words, came to his father for an explanation. Yes, who planted the seeds? Many of us have read the story of Kepler's salad.

David, wrapped in the mystery of those wonderful Judean skies, lifted his eyes to God and cried out: "Behold, the heavens declare the glory of God!" And he did not know of the billions of stars that bespangle the Milky Way, nor could he even imagine the sublimity of that nearest sun which burned in the universe millions and millions of miles away. Think of a universe rushing toward Hercules at the rate of fifteen miles a second! Think! The beauty of a butterfly's wing. The song of the thrush. The music of an awful sunset—the music of sight. Lilies-of-the-valley breathing forth the fragrance of heaven's gardens. And no God! All the result of evolution from star dust? No intelligence? It is no wonder that in certain corners we hear it whispered that Darwin, notwithstanding his deep brain power, was mentally unsound. (See Doctor Dorland's The Age of Mental Virility.) Pedigo is quoted as saying that Herbert Spencer was a victim of a fixed delusion. And why should not this be the case, when men explore the great manifestations of God's power and yet came back empty of knowledge of the existence of a divine intelligence?

No Thought Without a Thinker

There cannot be thought without a thinker. There is thought in the universe. Therefore there is a thinker in the universe. But a thinker is a person. Therefore there is a Personal Thinker in the universe, whose name is God.

So the greatest scientists of this and other ages admit—they are forced to admit—that there is Something in the universe, not ourselves and not pure matter. Lycock, the hardest shelled of all, refers to "unconscious intelligence"; and Professor Bain speaks of the "double-faced somewhat, having a spiritual and a physical side."

The believer in God is miles ahead of the nonbeliever; for while the one has been spending hundreds of years vainly trying to discover the missing link between man and monkey, the other has always believed that the "link" between the human life and matter is God. In the mind of some persons, belief in God Almighty is only superstition, but faith in a scientist's "gas-god" is science!

Max Mueller wrote: "When we ascend to the most distant height of Greek History, the idea of God, as the Supreme Being, stands before us as a simple fact." (Religion of the Ancient World, p. 135.) Donnelly said: "We find the worship of this one God in Peru and early Egypt." (Atlantis, p. 424.) American Encyclopedia, volume 6, page 463: "In the early days the Egyptians worshiped only one God, the maker of all things, without beginning and end." Duke of Argyle: "We have found in the most ancient records of the Aryan language proof that the indications of the religious thought are higher, simpler, and purer as we go back in time . . . till at last we have the Divine Being spoken of . . ." (Atlantis, p. 477.)

Bible Sentiments

Many scholars to-day admit that the Bible is the greatest sample of literature in the world. But after this admission they turn their backs on Moses' account of God, as if it were a parable. The fact is that the many traditions found in profane literature but attest the truthfulness of the account by Moses. The sublime sentiment: "I am God and beside me there is none else," runs, like a golden note, through the traditions of heathens, as a faint echo of Edenic harmony.

If man is a personal being, it would naturally follow that his maker must be. This being true, the statement, "Let us make man in our own image," has some meaning. Christ came to give us a conception of God; hence his reply to Philip: "He that has seen me has seen the Father." Paul testifies that Jesus was in the "express image of God." Moses, who was no mean philosopher and surely as good a witness as Ingersoll or Spinoza, testified that he saw God face to face, and that he was a personal being. Likewise the testimony of other witnesses, not excluding Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon who brought the matter very near home. God is "everywhere" only by his Spirit; as David said: "Whither shall I flee from thy Spirit?" There are three things which make up personality—thought, desire, will.

Intelligence, manifested everywhere, was never created. "The glory of God is intelligence." That something we call law is the operation of the spirit of intelligence which proceeds from the presence of God, and by which everything moves and lives, etc. So John S. Mill felt that "it must be allowed that the adaptations in nature afford a large balance of probability in favor of creation by intelligence." In this sense, then, the words law and evolution are perfectly harmless—they need not throw us off the track. Law is simply the universal method of intelligent mind back of matter (or, if you will, intelligence in matter) working through evolution to bring about the purposes of God. (But, understand, I do not refer to the popular notion of evolution which teaches the descent of man from a little ooze in the bed of the sea.)

Unto every kingdom is given a law; every law has its bounds and limitations. Law is not God.

Cause and Effect

It is a necessary law of our nature to believe that every effect demands an adequate cause. Force, apart from life and intelligence, would act much like an idiot; and matter without intelligence, is nothing but a piece of clay in the hands of a potter.

To sum up, thus far: The universe in its present condition has not always existed; it is therefore an effect, something that has been effected, or brought about somehow, and therefore like every effect it must have had a cause. And then since the effect shows a certain unity throughout, the cause must have been one. Since the effect shows in some parts evidence of having been planned and arranged, the capacity for planning and arranging must have existed in the Cause. In other words, a universe showing marks of design in the effect must have had for its designer or cause a personal being. It is needless to say that this Personal Being we call God.

There is the ever crying out of soul hunger, to be answered. Does a mud-god feed the soul? satisfy the longing after the eternal? hold a star before the dying? Can force without intelligence, matter without life, whisper words of consolation into the ears of the dying?

We reason from analogy. Our highest conception of creation is man. His greatest attribute is love. His intelligence is infinite compared with other animals. Therefore our conception of God must be that he is a personal being, all-love, all-goodness, all-intelligence. It would seem that if we reason at all, such is the kind of God we picture.

The Divine Witness

To the Bible believer there is a world of meaning in the promise of Jesus that whosoever would do the will of God should know of the doctrine of Christ. It is the witness of the Spirit to the spirit. "No man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost." "My Father in heaven hath revealed it unto thee." Doing the will of God is cooperating with the higher power so to bring about development; or, in other words, educating the soul to the state of comprehension of spiritual things. Illustration: It is said that when an object vibrates at the rate of 30 times a second a sound is created, and this sound increases in volume as the vibration increases. At the rate of 40,000 the noise becomes so terrific that the ear cannot register it and there is complete silence, seemingly, yet the sound increases with the vibration. When this vibration has reached the enormous figure of four hundred trillion times a second, a faint glimmer of light appears to increase as the vibration increases. But at eight hundred trillion the eyes can receive no more light and there is, apparently, total darkness. We do not wonder at the statement that no man (in his present condition) has seen God. Moses needed transfiguration before he could enter that august Presence. When the soul of man has been attuned it can comprehend the mighty doings of God. To deny the existence of things we cannot comprehend is worse than folly.

Rebuttal brought out reference to certain scientific works. The Duke of Argyle wrote: "Creation by law, evolution by law, development by law, or, as including all these kindred ideas, the reign of law, is nothing but the reign of creative force directed by creative knowledge, worked under the control of creative power, and in fulfillment of creative purposes." The evolution by natural selection is very far from being established. Darwin gracefully acknowledged that in his Origin of Species, he "attributed too much to the action of natural selection." According to natural selection it should also be noted that species ought to be increasing. This is not the case. We know of no real transmutation of species. The wolf is not a point in contrast, for they are similar in specie to the dog.

Hardwicke's Science Gossip declares that the Darwin theory is a "flagrant contradiction to facts." "There are," writes Hardwicke, "some twenty thousand species of animals, and not one instance is known of different species being crossed without sterility ensuing in the animal thus begot. It seems a law of nature to keep species apart." That remarkable thinker, Agassiz, tells us that the Florida Coral Reef is at least 30,000 years old; but the insect which built it has not altered in the least. Hugh Miller tells us the same about the trees, and Cuvier found that the same animals existed in Egypt thousands of years ago that exist to-day.

It is needless to state that many other points were emphasized. The debate that afternoon closed in a humorous vein. I presume it was somewhat irreverent of me to recite the Apostates' Creed; but the temptation was too great to be resisted.

The Apostate's Creed

"I believe in the Chaotic Nebula, self-existent Evoluter of Heaven and Earth, and in the differentiation of its original homogeneous Mass, its first-begotten Product, which was self-formed into separate worlds, divided into land and water; self-organized into planets; reproduced into like species; further developed into higher orders; and finally refined, rationalized, and perfected into Man. He descended from the Monkey, ascended into the Philosopher, and sitteth down in the rights and customs of Civilization, under the laws of a developed Sociology. From thence he shall come again, by the disintegration of the culminated Heterogeneousness, back

HOW SHALL WE SECURE A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION?

Interesting comments and suggestions in answer to this question by the Reverend Ford C. Ottman, D. D., in The Presbyterian. We quote only the concluding part of his article.

A Christian education in order to be Christian must proceed from instruction in those doctrines of Christianity which by the common consent of all evangelical Christians are held to be essential, fundamental, and unchangeable. This does not mean everything that is written in denominational creeds and confessions, but it does mean the vital truths that are common to them all. Each one of these vital truths, and there are not so many of them, may be clearly and concisely stated. They should be so stated and incorporated in the curriculum of any system of education that claims to be Christian.

But where shall we find such instruction given? Not in the home, except in rare instances. Not in the Sabbath school, again with exceptions, with its large percentage of hopelessly incompetent teachers. Not in the public schools, which will have none of it. Not in the higher institutions of learning, where the optic nerve is atrophied in the attempt to discover and eradicate any seed that may have been sown. Not even in the theological seminary, where, in many cases, the atmosphere is as life-giving as the catacombs of the dead. Doubtless, there are schools, primary, secondary, and of higher grade, where the Bible is taught; but, to be specific, we find it difficult to name one that we can commend without qualification or reservation. Except the church make provision for such instruction there will be little or none of it. The Roman Catholic Church has been clever enough to discern the need and make provision to meet it. The Protestant Church is vociferous in protest and almost barren in accomplishment. The problem of Christian education will remain an unsolved problem until the Christian church makes provision for adequate Christian instruction. Such instruction ought to begin as it did with Timothy, who, from a child, knew the Holy Scriptures, who derived his unfeigned faith from that which dwelt in his grandmother and mother. Christian parents should demand that primary instruction be saturated in Scripture teaching. They should demand that Christian doctrine be taught in the secondary school, where the mind of the pupil is plastic and easily molded into right processes of thinking. Such instruction is imperative if we are to secure a Christian education.

The creation and maintenance of such a school is easily within the range of possibility if the conservative Christians, recognizing the vital necessity would rally to the support of such institutions wherever founded. One discouraging obstacle is the present degradation of institutions founded by Christian benevolence for that very purpose. The violation of sacred trusts bears mournful witness to the far-away drift of modern liberalism. The restoration to the original purpose of fallen institutions may be impossible. It ought to be possible to lay other foundations and so protect them to the original Homogeneousness of Chaos. I believe in the wholly impersonal Absolute, the wholly Un-Catholic church, the Disunion of the Saints, the survival of the Fittest, the Persistence of Force, the dispersion of the Body, and in Death Everlasting!"

THE PHILIPPINES

A recent booklet, issued by the Bureau of Printing, at Manila, states that the Philippines were known to the Chinese since the thirteenth century and were settled by Spain about 1565, after a visit by Magellan in 1521. The Spanish rule was marked by many wars and uprisings. In the nineteenth century the Spanish Cortes was revived and representatives sent from the Philippines, and in 1830 it was thrown open to foreign trade. Many reforms followed but they were too late to prevent the loss of the island. The United States secured control in 1898, and civil government was established in 1901. Since then rapid progress has been made both in economic and home rule.

One of the surprising features is to learn that in 1918, 9,495,272 were classified as Christians and only 855,368 as non-Christians. This latter included all the Moros, Igorotes, and the more backward people. They are all of one family, with the exception of a few scattered Negritos. They are also practically of one language, similar to that in the Hawaiian Islands, Madagascar, and other Pacific Islands.

Concerning education, the oldest university now under the American flag is in Manila, established in 1611. Secondary institutions were established later. Primary instruction was not introduced until 1863. But after the island came under American control, the establishment of schools was most energetically pushed. There are minor carefully organized primary schools, fifty high schools, twenty trade schools, four-teen provincial shops.

President George N. Briggs, now of Graceland College, had much to do with the earlier establishing and organizing of these schools. The result is that now there is a distinctly English-speaking Filipino teaching staff. About seventeen per cent of the time is given to vocational instruction, with year trade school production valued at $100,000, and yearly agricultural production valued at $281,000. Thirteen agricultural schools, 15 farm schools, and 162 settlement farm schools are maintained. Over 700,000 children are enrolled annually in intermediate and secondary schools, of which 600,000 are in the first four grades, 83,000 in the grammar school grades, and about 17,000 in more advanced work. In addition to this there are 300 accredited private schools with an enrollment of over 38,000, and a teaching force of 1,600. Of this number, 18 are colleges. The University of the Philippines has an enrollment of over 3,400.

Agriculture is being greatly increased. Of the forests, 99 per cent belongs to the Government, and covers approximately 40,000 square miles of virgin timber, and about 20,000 square miles of secondary growth. There are over 73 million acres of public land, of which 41 million are considered suitable for agriculture. It may be homesteaded to the extent of 59 acres, or purchased, not to exceed 247 acres.

The commerce of the islands has increased wonderfully in the past twenty years, and now exceeds $231,000,000. There are over 750 miles of railroad, and 86,000 miles of road, of which about 45 per cent is first class, well graded and surfaced. Nearly $1,300,000 worth of gold is mined annually, and about $20,000 of other metal. The nonmetallic minerals amount to two million dollars a year.

We learn with regret of the passing of H. C. Ziegenhorn, Bishop's agent of the Kewanee District, and greatly loved by all the Saints. His demise occurred on the 15th. We do not have further particulars at this time.

Church Advertising

By Mrs. David Morgan

A paper written for special service given over to publicity department at Toledo, Ohio.

Church advertising has such a large field, such vast territory, that I feel I can give it far from justice in trying to write a paper on it. The first stumblingblock we meet along this line, however, is the need of educating God's people to the benefits derived from the same.

This is a strange and new line of work, but I hope it will not remain strange very long. In this branch finances are the greatest problem to be met. I realize that as a people we are a poor and hard-working class, and that every penny counts. But on the other hand God has blessed us with such a wonderful blessing, the gospel, that I feel we would indeed be very ungrateful if we allow money to stand between us and the progress of God's work. Some one was responsible for your hearing this gospel; why not you be responsible for some other person hearing the same?

Did you ever stop to think that it is a very small person who will figure the cost of a man's soul in dollars and cents? If you could save a man from sin and wickedness, would you let a few dollars stop you? Did you ever stop and think what it costs us financially to keep a man or woman in the church after we get them? If you spend money for advertising it may increase your attendance, and by increasing your attendance it will increase your collections. You may say that is a chance; yes, but a very probable chance. In case that it does not bring in literal cash it widens the influence of the church, acquaints the people that there is such a church, and puts hundreds of people thinking and restraining many that would go deeper into sin from doing the same. You never know how much good will come out of a little money spent in advertising.

All who are benefited through this means do not come and tell you but God knows and blesses. I have often thought of a saying by one of our brothers that he never lost a cent by giving to others. Neither will we lose by spending money for advertising.

John the Baptist was the advance agent of Christ's first coming. We should be the advance agent of his second coming. An advance agent is a person who goes in advance or before anything to advertise its coming. Even a circus has an advance agent, and long before the arrival of the circus there are bills all over the billboards advertising the event. The result is a large crowd.

If we as a people would do the same thing along the gospel lines we would be getting more people into the church. God is bound by his word or his promise to bless if we do our part and our part is to act as the advance agent of Christ.

The successful business man of to-day has a lot of different kinds of advertising: the billboard, press, circulars, personal letters, handbills, etc. The object is to attract attention, or keep the minds of the people on their products. Take cigarettes for instance. One cannot get on the street car and go down town without seeing the advertisement of a certain brand either on the car or on the billboards along the way. When a child first starts to read he will notice that brand of cigarette and when he gets a little older he will still be impressed with it because he has seen it advertised all his life and the consequences are that if he ever smokes it will be ten chances to one that he will call for that kind.

The same principle fits the gospel: if we would advertise it and keep it before the public all the time, the result would be the same as with the cigarette. Surely if a poisonous weed such as a cigarette is worth advertising, this gospel, the light of the world, is worth advertising.

On the other side when we advertise we can tell the truth in our advertising and the man who advertises tobacco cannot truthfully advertise it to benefit mankind, while the gospel is the hope of eternal life. If the business man can advertise an article for sale, to advantage, can we not as a people advertise something free to an advantage? You will say that what he advertises is a necessity and ours is not what people must have. It is more essential than anything else in the world and we can prove it to the people if we can get them out to hear us. That is where advertising comes in. If we advertise we can get the people to listen to what we have.

Publicity, simply defined, means the power of an idea multiplied. One of our elders, qualified in his office and calling, endowed with the spirit of God, preaches a wonderful sermon. Perhaps only thirty-five members hear that sermon. Let that same sermon be printed in a thousand copies and then distribute that sermon to your friends and neighbors. That is publicity. Tracting is a wonderful way of letting people know your gospel. We have sermonets printed by inspired men of this church, put out at very little expense. Christ has given a commandment to his church: "Ye shall go forth from house to house teaching the people." Tell me a better way to do this than by handing out tracts from house to house. We cannot expect the ministry to do everything, and show me a man or woman who cannot spare one afternoon or evening a week to go from house to house and distribute tracts and I will show you a Latter Day Saint who is not alive to his or her calling or their duty.

There is a committee now sitting at the church offices, revising a manuscript of a Teachers' Edition of the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures. This committee is composed of Elbert A. Smith, Paul M. Hanson, Arthur B. Phillips, Richard S. Salyards, sr., and John W. Peterson. They were chosen by the Board of Publication, the First Presidency, and other leading quorums to revise the manuscript, which was prepared by Elder Daniel F. Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa. Their sessions are likely to continue for many weeks, and at their close, the manuscript will be ready for the printer. This is one of the necessary works which must be done by the Reorganization. There is a strong demand for a Teachers' Edition of the Inspired Translation, and no more important task now remains undone by the church. It is likely that this work cannot be completed and ready for sale during the present year.—Zion's Ensign, January 27, 1921.

Recent reports are that President-Elect Harding will issue a call for disarmament shortly after his inauguration. Also that he will attempt to secure and strengthen the plan of an international court.

The Pennsylvania Railroad lines are asking their men to lay off one day each week, otherwise a 20 per cent reduction in force, it is claimed, will be necessary.

Reports in the press news state that the Hohenzollerns have been asked to quit Holland because of certain plots with which they are stated to have been connected.

The Omaha Chamber of Commerce has offered financial aid to worthy students of agriculture, and almost immediately 20 made application. Unless such help is rendered many who are hard pressed for money will have to stop at the end of the semester. At the same time the Scottish Rites, who are incorporated, offer help to needy students.

The Conflict of the Ages

By A. M. Chase

The conflict between the power of God and darkness is greater than that of any earthly kingdom.

"And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords."—Revelation 19: 16.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."—Daniel 2: 44.

"Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations."—Psalm 145: 13.

"Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and fear: for our God is a consuming fire."—Hebrews 12: 28, 29.

We have not yet reached the time that the friendship of God ceases to be enmity against the world, for the conflict of the ages has not yet been decided, but it still going on. When Daniel interpreted the king's dream he foretold not only the setting up of the kingdom, but the triumph of Christ through the preaching the gospel in all the world before the end should come. The setting up of that kingdom was to be not according to human wisdom or inventions, but as "a stone cut out of the mountain without hands," and this stone was to grow till it "became a great mountain and filled the whole earth."

That the kingdom of heaven, kingdom of God, church of God, or body of Christ all refer to the same thing—the organized work of the Master in his effort to redeem the world through the preaching of the everlasting gospel, we think needs no argument to establish. And this work has been variously prophesied of by holy men of old, speaking as they have been moved by the Holy Ghost. While Daniel described it as "a kingdom," Isaiah calls it "his work, his strange work," and "his act, his strange act," and warns men not to be mockers, lest their bands be made strong. He also warns us that the plowman does not plow all day, but, when he has prepared the ground, he will cast in the seed in its place. (Isaiah 28: 21-25.) In the next chapter he refers to this work to be done "without hands," as "a marvelous work and a wonder" that was to be done, or commenced—cut out of the mountain without hands—just a little while before, or, as he puts it, "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?" (Isaiah 29: 14-17.)

The Prophets Foresaw This Conflict

Jeremiah also looked forward to this event which was to be preceded (for the nations of Israel) by the care of the Lord manifested in watching over them, "to build, and to plant," and to have its culmination in "a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah"; resulting in the placing of "my law in their inward parts," and in writing "it in their hearts," so that all shall know God, "from the least of them to the greatest of them." (Jeremiah 31: 27-34.)

Ezekiel pledges the word of the Lord, also, that the nations of Israel and Judah should be gathered again under one king and should receive a covenant of peace from the Lord. (Ezekiel 37.)

While Joel precedes the promise of the outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord upon all people by the promise of the restoration of the seasonable rains to their loved land and the "years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer worm, my great army which I sent among you." (Joel 2: 21-32.)

In all of these promises we can see the kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up, never to be destroyed, but which was to break in pieces and consume all the other kingdoms as shown to King Nebuchadnezzar.

We are not going to enter into any extended effort to establish the fact that at the establishment of this kingdom or church, of which we are members, in 1830, the word was sent out that the Lord had again set his hand to recover his people, Israel; nor to do more than call attention to the further fact that at that time the world was very skeptical of the fulfillment of these many promises to Israel, all looking to the regathering of that people back to their covenant land. We have reached the place in the history of the world where they should, whether they do or not, "know that a prophet had been among them"; for Palestine has come back to her former heritage of rain and dews from heaven and again is it being sown "with the seed of man," and, for the first time in history, is Jerusalem "inhabited as towns without walls." (Zechariah 2: 4.)

There is one question, though, which comes in just here: Where are the kingdoms which the "stone cut out of the mountain" is to break in pieces and consume? Are they to be found in the political subdivisions or kingdoms of the world? Let us see:

Kingdom Spells Church

We have found that k-i-n-g-d-o-m, in our parlance, spells church. We think that no one would say that the God of heaven would set up a political kingdom, doing it without hands (human intervention or authority). "It is still as it was in the days of Christ's ministry here upon earth: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." But how may this spiritual kingdom break and consume? In reply we ask, What are the kingdoms described by the prophet? Are they not, also, churches or ecclesiastical kingdoms? If k-i-n-g-d-o-m spells church in the last one of the series seen by King Nebuchadnezzar, must it not also spell church in the other organizations which made up the image? We think so.

Is it not a fact that, commencing with the kingdom of Babylon and coming down to papal Rome, every one of the series combined both church and state? And, taking up the inspired description of these later organizations, does not the prophet give a wonderful description of the churches that came out of the reformation? "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it the strength of iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay, and as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest the iron mixed with clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." (Daniel 2: 41-43.) How true all this is when applied to the churches of the world, even to-day, with their fruitless effort at amalgamation, even in the Interchurch Movement! Truly they do not cleave one to another!

Not Against Flesh and Blood

The eternal conflict that the Master's kingdom has had to wage has never been, nor will it ever be "against flesh and blood, but against . . . the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Christ nor his apostles were put to death for any conflict against the laws of the earthly kingdoms under which they resided, only as those kingdoms combined church and state. That has ever been true of all the martyrs of all ages. Christ's people have ever been a strength to all earthly governments in which they have held citizenship. But there has always been a conflict between truth and error, between the law of God and traditions of man. Nor is it possible to build up a kingdom of truth without overthrowing the kingdoms of error with which contact is had. "Come out of her, O my people," has ever been the call. And this call has been the bane of these kingdoms, for, "If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation," was the cry of the Pharisees in the days of Christ, (John 11: 48) and, "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also," was the cry of those who opposed Paul and Silas when preaching in Thessalonica. (Acts 17: 6.)

There is another point that it would be well to mention just here: While the political kingdoms, so far as political power is concerned, each ceased to exist as they were superseded by the others of the series seen in the vision under consideration, the systems of worship were not destroyed, but were still standing in so far that this kingdom of God was to be compelled to break in pieces and consume them, even till they were—not absorbed, as would have been done were they only to evolve into other political divisions—to become as the "chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them." And not till then could the "stone cut out of the mountain without hands" fill "the whole earth."

Thus was the conflict which was even then going on between truth and error, as represented by the Babylonish worship and that of the Hebrews, outlined by the Lord in this vision, and thus was the promise given of an ultimate setting up of the divine kingdom with final triumph over all error. And from this, it seems to us, we can see the fact that our first triumph must be over the errors of perverted Christianity, before we may hope successfully to cope with and overcome the unbelief of other systems. It is not at all to be wondered at that the so-called heathen nations should require that those who claim to represent Christ should first be reconciled in one body, rather than that they shall be committed to the fight going on because they do not cleave one to the other.

The church that undertakes to claim that they are going to overthrow and destroy all political kingdoms is always a menace to good government as all ecclesiastical and political history will show. Also, by this claim, are they committed to war against the flesh. And out of such claims come the suspicion—if it be not a statement of fact—that some churches are arsenals of carnal weapons. But the conflict against error is one that no representative of Christ may shirk. It is eternal, and out of it shall emerge the kingdom of Christ in its glory, overcoming all error and filling the whole world, until "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." Amen. May the Master hasten the day of his triumphant kingdom!

Mr. James Bryce, formerly ambassador from Great Britain to the United States, who has studied American Government more thoroughly than most Americans, says that the State or local authority registers a man's birth, appoints his guardian, pays for his schooling, gives him a share in the estate of his deceased father, licenses his trade, marries him, divorces him, declares him a bankrupt, hangs him for murder. The police which guard his house, the local boards which look after the poor, control highways, manage schools—all these derive their legal powers from the State alone. Admitting the truth of this statement enables us to see how closely our home life is related to the government of the State. Yet, as a rule, we are more interested in the work of our Federal Congress at Washington than in that of our legislatures at our State capitals.

The State governments are older than the National Government. Back in 1777 when the States first began to think of forming some sort of an association or union of States, people with democratic tastes feared that a strong central government might develop into an autocracy. At that date the States had the sovereign power and they formed the National Union by transferring certain of their own sovereign powers to a central power. In this way the powers of the National Government were acquired. The States gave grudgingly and withheld all they possibly could.

Before the organization of a national government each of the original thirteen States had written constitutions and most of them were framed by conventions made up of representatives chosen by the people. These State constitutions had quite a long process of evolution before they were printed, each one being influenced by the character of the settlers in its immediate territory. The powers of the States are more intimate and more varied than those of the Federal Government. Births and deaths, marriage and divorce, business and education offer an attractive field for legislative service to the new voter. As constituents of the State, members of the controlling organ of government, it is clearly the duty of all women to do their part in aiding the State legislatures properly to function.

The State governments are bicameral in character. That is, they are composed of two departments, a house and senate. The governor and legislature form the lawmaking and executive body for each State. They make the criminal laws, laws relating to ownership and use of property, laws relating to public health and to education. Most of the legislatures have biennial sessions meeting in the odd-numbered years.

Bills become laws in the State legislatures by a process similar to that used in the Federal Congress. Any member may introduce a bill. It is then referred to its appropriate committee. This committee may kill it, report it out, pigeon-hole it, or report it too late for action. The life of a bill depends upon the attitude which its committee holds toward it. After its manipulation by committee if it passes both houses it is then sent to the governor for his ratification or veto. It's a trying process at best. Thousands of bills are introduced at every session. It is only possible for a small percentage of them to become laws. It is essential that a more efficient plan for handling this situation be evolved, but at present useless bills, overlapping bills, and bills that would duplicate present legislation are introduced until the wonder is that we secure any constructive legislation at all. But plans are evolving for a change in this procedure. It is our own fault that the remedy has not been applied previously. Mr. Hugh Fisher, senator-elect from Shawnee County, Kansas, offers one plan that seems workable in form, also democratic in spirit. The plan was adopted by Shawnee County. The assemblymen from this county organized, then invited, through the county press, all those who had bills to introduce to the coming session of the State assembly to send copies of their bills to their secretary. The proposed bills were printed in the local papers, after which this committee of assemblymen held public hearings for their discussion. This gave an opportunity for pointing out the merits or discrepancies of each bill. At the close of the discussion this committee of assemblymen were able to advise as to which measures were calculated to benefit the State and which ones should be discarded. Free and full discussion of proposed legislation in a nonpartisan spirit is the ideal we should strive for.

The League of Women Voters hold to this plan. They prefer to handle all public questions in a nonpartisan manner. By their public discussions and printed propaganda, they strive to get everybody in favor of their bill and by keeping it out of politics push it through the legislature more speedily than by the political-party method.

Referring again to our progressive, neighboring State of Kansas. At their recent election the people of that commonwealth voted an amendment to their constitution giving permission to the State to aid worthy tenant-farmers in the purchase of farm homes.

The State is to purchase the land in large tracts and sell it to these home buyers on easy terms, thus enabling many a worthy farmer to own a home who would not be able to procure one if left to the mercy of loan sharks. California has a similar law which is said to work well.

Kansas also leads in the number of its women legislators, having elected four in the recent election—three of them mothers of families. From press reports concerning them one gathers that they are all women of high ideals who will undoubtedly give an uplift to the lawmaking in the State assembly. While highly interested in laws immediately touching women and children, it is certain that women legislators will understand that laws relating to transportation, tariff, and finance are as clearly child welfare laws as the maternity bill or the Curtis-Gard bill for the regulation of child labor in the District of Columbia.

Every law passed by the State or National legislative body affects the welfare of children. It will be to the advantage of our State governments if women are given places on the various State boards, especially on the State board of charity, prison board, and in the State educational department. One phase of the police board—that which has to do with women and child police welfare—would be improved by the presence of women.

"Peanut politics" should be frowned upon by women but they should insist on a rightful division of this work for the benefit of suffering humanity. In social hygiene legislation the League of Women Voters have a definite program on the abolition of commercialized prostitution, control of venereal diseases and supervision of delinquents, minors, and defectives. Organizations to supervise legislation on these subjects are being developed in each State and all legislators will be urged to give them proper attention.

Some one says, "The great issues of society are always substantially the same—questions of making a living, of privilege and opportunity, questions of finance, of faith, of belief, questions of who shall take part in government, and of how those who hold public office can be held responsible." In the last analysis all these questions are related to child welfare. The mothers of the race have a great incentive for the study of government.

Exercises to Correct Constipation

1. Stand erect, arms at sides, chest thrown out strong, stomach drawn in, chin in slightly, body erect at all times.

2. Now bend forward and touch the tips of the toes (keep the knees stiff), and chest out; repeat 8 to 16 times.

3. This is a continuation of Exercise 2. Combine the movement of Exercise 2 raising the arms over the head and bending back as far as possible, then bring arms forward, bending body till tips of fingers touch the toes.

4. Stand erect, interlock fingers behind the back of the head with elbows extended wide, then bend over sideways from the hips as far as possible; continue bending from side to side 8 to 16 times. This exercise is exceptionally good.

5. Lie on the back with arms extended over the head, with the backs of the hands touching the floor, then raise the legs till perpendicular, then lower to floor and continue 8 to 16 times, keeping the knees stiff.

6. Lie on the back as in Exercise 5, but raise the body till a sitting position is gained, bringing the arms down till straight out in front of the shoulders, then bend forward and touch the toes, then regain position on back and continue 8 to 16 times. If you have hernia (rupture) do not do this exercise.

7. Stand erect, interlock fingers behind the back of the head, keep the elbows extended, and rotate the body from side to side, turning from the waist; keep the hips from turning if possible.

Stand erect. Now lift the right knee and interlock the fingers around it, then pull up the knee as near the chest as possible, then pull up the left in the same manner; alternate.

8. Lie flat on the stomach with arms at sides, then raise the body off the floor from the hips; 8 to 16 times.

9. Stand erect with feet about 30 inches apart, extend arms at right angles to the body, then lean over and touch the floor with the tips of the fingers (you will have to bend the knee to do this), then regain upright position and continue from left to right side alternately; 8 to 16 times.

These exercises, if persisted in, will relieve constipation.

SISTER A. M. CLARKE.

Annual Reports

January 1 was the time for each local leader of Women's Department to send in her annual report to the organizer of her district. We trust all have done so. If you have been remiss, correct your error at once and communicate with your organizer, giving summaries of work done in your branch by the women and girls under your supervision.

On February 1 each district organizer will be making out her annual report to our general executive. We expect these reports to denote a most forward movement all along the line, and that the plans for 1921 shadowed forth in the monthly letters from organizers, will prove this year to be one of the most progressive ones in our history.

Report blanks are mailed from our office to all district organizers who supply them to their local leaders and superintendents of the various departments of our work. If, as is the case in still a few districts in the church, there is no appointed organizer, send your reports of local work directly to our office, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Put a Pin in the Poison Bottle

Mistaking a bottle of poison for one of medicine is a close rival for deadliness of the gun-nobody-knew-was-loaded. The frequency of such fatal errors as that of a pioneer Idaho farmer who recently drank carbolic acid instead of a tonic suggests that proper precautions do not surround the family medicine cabinet.

With so many bottles, some of them similar in shape and size, absent-minded or sleepy-eyed persons are extremely likely to pick up the wrong one. The danger is especially acute in the farm home, where lights are as a usual thing not to be switched on at will, and nighttime emergencies are met in the dark or by the dim rays of a lamp or candle. All labels look alike in the dark, and yet there is one precaution that can be relied upon.

In the Home Economics building at the Nebraska college of agriculture is to be seen a model medicine chest, containing all the drugs considered necessary for domestic use. Through the cork of each bottle of poison is thrust a pin in such a way that no one can open the bottle without feeling the point. One does not need to have the reason for this explained to him—it is a simple, safe means of warning that is capable of saving many lives now lost by failure to eliminate chance and accident.—Omaha Bee.

Era of Simplicity

"Women are facing an era of simplicity," said Mrs. Edna Woolman Chase, of New York, editor of the magazine, Vogue, and who is rated as one of the leading experts of feminine apparel in the fashion world.

"This spring," she continued, "there will be a sparing use of embroidery, a discard of gaudy footwear, and an elimination of that 'over-dressed' look. Everything is to be in exceeding good taste. There will be sashes at the hips, floating panels and platings—but above all, simplicity in cut and line.

"The knee-length frocks are doomed. They became too common, you see. When styles become common, smart women drop them and start new modes. Why, evening gowns are to reach almost to the feet. Street dresses will not exceed 10 inches from the floor.

"Not one woman in 50 in a fashionable American crowd is well coiffeured, and it is not expensive to be well coiffeured. A woman with a long face should never draw her hair up high. It merely accentuates the effect of grotesqueness.

"Women should be as beautiful as possible. It is their duty to the world—and to their husbands. I do not believe in the outrageous fashions adopted by many young American girls to-day. They look common and wayward. Those awful jet earrings and overfeathered hats and lacy gowns. Young girls are copying the models for women of 30—dressing as women of the world."

Old Fashioned Mother!

The reason more bedtime stories are not told to children these days, is that the children come in after mother has gone to bed!—El Paso Herald.

Continued reports from all parts of the country show a decidedly increased enrollment in high schools and colleges. With perhaps a 50 per cent increase in population there has been an increase of enrollment of six and seven fold in the colleges and high schools of the country in the last 30 years. The increase the past 10 years has been decidedly marked, and indicates a shortage of facilities. Yet the tuition paid does not remunerate the faculty, let alone meet all the other necessary charges for the college or school establishment.

An Appreciation

"I want to most sincerely thank you, and through you, 'The Department,' for the kind thoughtfulness which in sending me The Centennial Yearbook has placed me in a position to come in closer contact with your work and realize more fully the wonderful developments of the last few years.

"May you and your fellow laborers have wisdom and strength to continue onward and upward, and by perseverance in well-doing, overcome every obstacle in the way, and attain the most cherished desires of your hearts in righteousness. This is my earnest wish.

"Lovingly yours,

M. WALKER."

LETTERS

Church Officials in Germany

Extract from letter of President Frederick M. Smith, to Elbert A. Smith, dated Halle am Saale, Germany, December 27, 1920.

Brother Williams has written of our work in Basel. . . . We left Basel on the 23d. At the station in Klein Basel, which is only a mile or two from the German border, we ran the usual gantlet of "Zollbeamten," or customs officers, who scrutinized passports, baggage, etc. The last was a German officer, who looked us over and put a rapid-fire list of questions in German, and pointing to our baggage: "Haben Sie Kaffee, Thee, KaKoa, Schnaps, Bier, Wein?" I said, "Nein, Nein, Nein," etc., at each pause. Then he added: "Was haben Sie für Rauchen?" "Nichts," said I, and added: "Wir rauchen nicht." Then he laid his hand on two packages of foodstuffs we were bringing with us, and said: "Was giebt es darin?" I handed him the bill of lading with the remark: "Liebes Gabe für einige hungrige Deutsche Leute." He handed the papers back without opening the packages and said: "Sie sind von Amerika, nicht Wahr?" I replied: "Ja." "Sind Sie Quakers?" "Nein."

("Have you coffee, tea, cocoa, brandy, beer, wine?" I said, "No, no, no," at each pause. "What have you for smoking?" "Nothing, we do not smoke?" "What is there in that?" "Good gifts for some hungry German people." "You are from America. Is it not so?" "Yes." "Are you Quakers?" "No.")

So I handed him my card. He read it, looked up, and gave me a quick military salute. So we passed through the gate to the train. We had gone through the whole role so much more quickly than we had expected, that we found ourselves on the train with an hour to spare.

Very soon after leaving Basel we were on German soil. It was with mixed feelings that we realized it. And what a mixture it was! In England I scarcely felt that I was on foreign soil, for everywhere I heard and could use my native tongue, with some allowance for colloquialisms and dialects. In Paris and France I realized we were foreign, for though usually we found some one who understood English, yet around us there sounded usually a strange tongue. In Switzerland we found a strange mixture of languages. Nearly everyone speaks two or more and the hotel people three or four. We liked the quiet, unobtrusive politeness and attention of the Swiss, and as we passed over into Germany we wondered what awaited us. Then there came crowding into my mind old memories. As a student I had long had an ambition to study at a German university. As a student in college and university I had read many German stories and folklore. Then there were the more recent memories of the great war. Technically we were still at war with Germany. Then there were the church branches so long left alone. How would we find the work?

Well, I shall not bore you with details of our trip. We stayed at Frankfurt the night of the 23d and came on to Halle the 24th. We left Frankfurt at 7.25 and reached here about 4.40 p. m. We found a quiet but hearty welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Alexander Kippe. With them we spent a quiet and peaceful Christmas. Yesterday, Sunday, we went to Bernburg to visit a family who are members of the Utah church but who have become interested in our work. Israel will remember G. F. Schlote. He had secured my London address from Brother Halb, and at Basel I received a letter from him urging me to come to Bernburg. We spent the day there, talking church, war, etc. Mr. Schlote, the elder, has been a sufferer from paralytic stroke. We administered to him and to Sister Schlote. Of this visit I shall talk with you when I can. We returned late last night.

We have already been able to sense to a small degree, perhaps, how terribly the German people have been made to suffer by the great war. Brother and Sister Kippe and family lived all one winter on red cabbage. The Schlote family have not seen fresh cow's milk since 1914, and no canned milk since June. Bread (black), butter, sugar, still rationed. What a condition this country is in! Christmas Day I took a stroll along the Saale River, in the park, and on the opposite side of the river I saw a large statue of Bismarck. And I could not but recall the time when William II dismissed him as secretary of state, an act which Punch cartooned as "Dropping the pilot." Well might the German people wish for as able a statesman as Bismarck to pilot this confused and heavily-smitten nation through its present morass of political, financial, and industrial confusion and on to the firm ground of national solidarity and financial stability. The prospect is far from bright. The nation is crushed beneath a taxation extraordinary, but even that will be increased next month. Laborers, each pay day, are taxed one fourth of their wages. It is little wonder that the Saints here are deeply interested in Zion.

To-morrow we go to Einbeck for a meeting there to-morrow night, then on to Hannover. There we shall be some days, then to Brunswick. We shall return here probably next week, and then probably to Berlin on the question of registration of church.

Missionary Party Depart for England

Elder Gillen writes the First Presidency from Brooklyn as follows, dated January 19.

We are about ready to "get off the earth" as our arrangements for sailing are about complete. We had no difficulty in securing visa from the British consulate. We are anxious to get aboard, having secured a glimpse of the big boat as she came in yesterday. We were told they had a very rough voyage, several times her nose being under water. They were four days late in getting here.

Surprised to learn of the death of R. C. Evans. All I have to say is that his spirit is in the hands of a just God who will judge righteously.

I cannot but feel sad in leaving our native land; nevertheless glad that we are in the business of the Great King who will rule and overrule for the good of all. We therefore go forward rejoicing in the thought that the work is his and under the provision made by our Lord and Master. Will be glad to meet the English Saints, feeling sure that we will find hearts made warm by the touch of the Spirit divine.

With love to all American Saints, we say good-by for a time.

Yours in bonds, JAMES A. GILLEN.

Elder Charles Fry writes on the same date as follows:

Preparation for our entire party of J. A. Gillen, James E. Bishop, Daniel Sorden and wife, and myself, are complete excepting one item to see to in the morning, to leave to-morrow on the Cunard S. S. Imperator, one of the largest ships afloat. Terrible storms opposed her for ten days coming over, making her arrival three or four days late, but we have prospects of better weather going over. We saw her come in yesterday morning and I got what should be a good picture of her entering the Hudson.

We all attended service to-night and Brother Gillen preached. Brother Sorden baptized his young bride and she was confirmed by Brother Gillen. He is beginning his mission work early.

Farewell till we reach the other side. We are blessed with peace and cheerfulness. With best wishes and prayers for home Saints.

CHARLES FRY.

Statistics for 1920 show in Iowa 28,464 marriages, and 4,738 divorces. This is about one divorce for each six marriages. It shows an increase of 1,554 divorces, and an increase of 9,535 marriages. This represents a decided increase in number but a slight decline in percentage of divorces as compared with the marriages.

The Switzerland Mission

By T. W. Williams

A new branch organized in Switzerland.

Switzerland is practically a new mission. In the spring of 1919, Brother Harry Passman was selected for duty overseas. His objective—Palestine.

Brother Passman and wife arrived in Basel, Switzerland, in the early part of September. Passman-like he began doing things. There were some things first to be undone. Some of the things which he had to do was to undo some of the things which never should have been done.

At a post conference session of the joint council, spring of 1919, Brother Jacob Halb and wife were appointed to Switzerland. They reached Basel, October 10, the same year, and cooperated with Brother and Sister Passman until the latter left for Germany and Palestine, June, 1920.

The experience of these two brethren with the police of Switzerland has been interesting. Switzerland has been the Mecca for refugees from the war-tossed border states. I am told that fifteen per cent of the present population of Switzerland is alien born.

In common with all other countries, Switzerland has her housing problems. Strict regulations have been made, governing the entrance of aliens and particularly the establishment of a domicile. The police have been given full power of execution.

The Canton of Basel is limited, covering only the city. Most of the entire area is covered with buildings, allowing for only limited extension. There are not sufficient dwellings for the present residents. Basel is therefore not in a position to admit many outsiders.

This applies not only to foreigners, but to others. A native Swiss cannot move from one canton to another except by the consent of the police. Each canton has complete sovereignty over its citizenry. The authorities are not opposed to immigration. They claim they must first care for their own. We have recently learned that America is taking a similar position.

Coupled with the above was the adverse feeling against our people, caused by the unwise actions of some who resided here for a time. It is another case of the church suffering from the fanaticism and imprudence of its supposed friends.

When Brother and Sister Passman were here they ran up against the police regulations, but the resourcefulness of Brother Passman tided matters over until he left. Brother and Sister Halb have met the situation nobly, and despite all opposition, have remained at their post. There was a time during the year when they were compelled to leave Basel. They went to Zurich and remained there four months. Brother Halb immediately began a systematic distribution of literature, which was unique, and the merits of which are in evidence.

Just prior to our arrival in Basel, on December 12, 1920, Brother and Sister Halb had been compelled by the police to leave the Basel Canton. They succeeded in securing hotel quarters at a short distance from the city and continued to carry on their work.

We at once got busy. We visited Doctor Im Obersteg, a lawyer employed to care for our interests. He assured us that it was not a case of persecution, but a condition which applied to everybody. President Smith took the necessary steps to have the church duly registered in Switzerland, and Brother Halb made a new application for residence, agreeing to live for the time being in a small room adjoining our meeting place, providing the police would grant the privilege to do so.

President Smith and I, in company with Doctor Im Obersteg, called upon the mayor and stated our position as clearly as we were able to do. Our reception was quite cool and official at first, but before we left there was an appreciable change in the atmosphere. We left Basel feeling assured that both applications would be granted in due time.

During the time Brother Halb has been in Switzerland, he has baptized three—one man and two women. The brother had been ordained an elder by Brethren Passman and Halb. We found them meeting in a very neat, nicely furnished, small hall, capable of seating from fifty to seventy-five.

At the first meeting—Wednesday night—the regular prayer and testimony meeting was held. It was my first experience of this kind. We had prayers in German, Basel Deutsch, French, and English, and testimonies in English, German, and Basel Deutsch. Never in my life before have I had any desire for the gift of tongues and interpretation of tongues. In fact, I have not seen either the need or utility of same as manifested among some of our people. But here was an instance where these two gifts would result in the edification and strengthening of the Saints. I really wished that I possessed both these gifts. President Smith and I made short addresses, which were translated by Brother Halb. There were more nonmembers in attendance than members—an encouraging sign.

We were indeed pleased with the work done by Brother and Sister Halb. They have been severely handicapped, but, despite this, they have succeeded in interesting quite a number of very fine people. The Sunday following we met at 10.45 a. m. for preaching. President Smith was the speaker—a fair-sized audience. His sermon was well received. In the evening the room was well filled—the writer being the speaker.

The next Wednesday evening at 6.30, Brother Halb baptized six more, making eleven members in all. At 8 p. m. we assembled for prayer and testimony. The candidates were confirmed, and Brother Emil Hirsbrunner, one of the new members, was ordained a priest. We then proceeded to organize the Basel Branch. President Smith was in charge of the meeting.

Upon our recommendation the Saints unanimously selected Brother Halb as pastor. Sister Maria Klotter was elected secretary. The pastor was empowered to make other necessary appointments, and to direct the labors of his ministerial associates.

The charter members of the Basel Branch are as follows: Jacob G., and Addie C. Halb.

Emil, Heanne, and Angel Hirsbrunner.

Karl F., sr., Annie, Aline, and Karl, jr., Zimmer.

Maria Klotter and Paulina Schneider.

There are quite a number of others who are interested and will, in time, unite with the church. We have made an excellent beginning. There is no reason why our church should not find permanent place in this land, and make many converts. Basel is the strategic center, not only for Germany, France, Spain, and Italy, but for Austria, Russia, and the Balkan States. We should have another missionary and wife in Switzerland.

As I sat in the assembly of these various nationalities, and witnessed their keen interest and desire to know, yet conscious of their extreme difficulties to understand each other, I thought of many of our surfeited, lethargic Saints at home, who mince over real spiritual food, while these people eagerly gather up the crumbs. It sometimes pays to get real hungry. It is at such times that one appreciates the real value and pleasure of food. This is equally applicable in spiritual as well as in temporal matters.

We have spent ten days in Basel. We leave to-morrow, December 23, for Germany. We will go as far as Frankfurt, spend the night there, and then on to Halle am Saale, the next day. And the day after is Christmas. Christmas in Germany!

An amendment to the Constitution of the United States has been introduced before Congress by William H. Hill, member from the 34th District of New York, as follows:

"ARTICLE—

"Section 1. In apportioning representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers, aliens shall not be counted.

"Section 2. The Congress shall have power to define the meaning of the term alien and to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."

Missionary Letter From Washington

When I think how much pleasure I get from reading the HERALD I feel it my duty to contribute occasionally. One letter at least might be considered due from each missionary during the year. That the writer has not so responded, however, I hope will not be taken as evidence of inactivity or lack of interest in the work. Our district president, Brother J. M. Terry, in his monthly letters has tabulated well the incidents of note transpiring in this district, and it would hardly seem necessary to write more to tell the news. However the spirit of the new year is abroad and has affected the writer.

The vision of the Revelator was, "Behold, there is set before you an open door, and no man may close it," and it appears such is appropriate as an incentive to endeavor for the year. Although the pessimist sees but little good, and many of the struggling toilers are unable to penetrate the obscuring shadows, yet with the generality hope as a beacon still shines bright despite their fears and anxieties. It is true not all can stand up under responsibility, and sometimes we evolve into "wishers" rather than "willers."

Our very souls many times cry out and demand a more pronounced expression. The new year resolves, I hope, bestir the reflective mind to be the man he might be, instead of the man he really is. In some manner these optimistic thoughts come home to lodge in our brain like the chickens that come home to roost. Such only is scared away by our lagging doubt, reluctance, and hesitation.

It seems proper then at the entrance of the new year, when the thoughts of men are incited to gratitude and the privileges of opportunity, to direct our minds to a larger self-realization which will empower us to cast off fear. Fear, the lack of confidence, we must realize, is but a mushroom growth of the human intellect, and its psychological status is, it springs from nothing, leads to nothing, and has no rating in the schedule of values. Yet it is a great foe to progress and betterment. It will defeat any enterprise and bring naught but gloom and despondence and frustrate the very prophecy of opportunity's "open door." More robust is the fact that fear when subjected to analysis can be precipitated by clear and forceful thinking. It will prove only a shadow to those who will boldly move forward. Entering the new year with its opportunities, making it a matter of predetermined choice, let us as Saints lay claim to our destined heritage and be unafraid.

A spirit of unrest seems to pervade the industrial centers here as a temporary halt in labor activities has been made.

After a thoughtful consideration of the present status one can but determine something important is pending. So many in the recent days never thought of laying up for the proverbial "rainy day," and now when the times of adjustment have come when legitimate business is struggling to get back on a prewar basis some are actually in need. Catering to the extravagant and superficial ways of life has claimed the surplus, but now in the very threshold of the adjustment period some clamor in want.

However, we should look to the future with confidence. Evidently very soon the wheels of industry will be moving again and all who want work at a reasonable wage will be supplied. It seems poor business to spend our energies to fan the flame of discontent, creating strikes and riot. The high cost of living is already materially reduced. Food, clothing, lumber, and other commodities will be reduced still further as the cost of production is reduced. The wage earner need not be alarmed for the future even though there may be a reduction in the pay envelope, for his hard-earned dollars will purchase the same amount, and possibly more goods than formerly. The most sensible advice, it would seem, would be for all classes to go to work under the proposed readjusted wage scale and have confidence in all who labor to establish business on a sound basis.

It will depend somewhat, however, on how readily labor will respond to this proposition. Everybody knows it is better for all classes, for labor to be perpetually employed at a fair and just wage. People have been educated to want more and more, and to work less. It may be well for them to unlearn some things, and take a few lessons in thrift and saving. We must take more interest in work. Work will prove a blessing and not a curse. I speak of these things frankly for my sympathies are now and I hope ever shall be with those who toil.

Summing up the labor of the year, we know it has been one of activity, yet in real results in accessions to the faith it seems scanty and lean. We are confident, however, of the blessings of an all-wise Father, and most of all for which we are grateful is the knowledge of being in the faith. Reaching the finals of our temporal assets in dollars and cents, and expressing thanks for that alone, is really a mean spirited way of being thankful. Might we say it savors of the fellow who was condemned in the parable for his ill-advised praise for not being as other men are. If our appreciation and rejoicing is prompted by no higher motive than that we are at ease because we are comparatively better off than some one else, it is a poor grade of thankfulness and our self-satisfaction will avail us little in the end. We sometimes thrill with the wonder and vastness of the setting of our very existence. As a minister for Christ I am thankful I can come in touch with the heartbeat of humanity and with them rejoice and hope, and serve them with the benefits of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

At our reunion held at Bellingham last August, the Campbellite Philistines invaded our camp and challenged us for combat. The usual church propositions were submitted, and we supposed, being so eager, a debate would materialize immediately. A four months' delay, however, brought from them rearranged propositions with two more added. These were decidedly unfair, for they committed us to a denial of that which we already believed. We again presented the same church propositions as before, with the other two propositions added and worded in a way we could accept, but these again were rearranged and the other two so worded by their polemic that he must have known would not be acceptable to us.

They have thus dodged the responsibility of debate in a camouflage of words.

The year's work in some ways has proven very pleasant. The spirit of indifference prevails here in the worst form. There is but little real demand for service. I am convinced, however, we have a fine body of Saints, and as a whole as loyal and true as will be found anywhere. At times I have been discouraged because of the lack of response to missionary activities. The fall and winter rain is quite a drawback. One gets tired of living under a cloud. Here in the rainy season one longs for the canopy of ethereal blue. This country is not without its captivating features however. The summers are delightfully cool and pleasant. The flowers are unsurpassed for fragrance and beauty. The rockribs and peaks of the mountains loom high in silent grandeur, with the great horns of Mount Ranier and Mount Baker as the pillars of Hercules in sublimity.

Puget Sound abounds in beautiful islands, palisades, steeps, coves, and inlets, and when the sun is just right a steamboat ride gives occasion to view a picture which to be seen is to appreciate.

One will find as fine native forest here as anywhere, but the great mills gradually eat away, and in some sections the country is denuded. To see the vast waste in some of these forests is appalling. It's a pity the down timber cannot be utilized by those in need. It is a glad surprise to see trees fourteen and sixteen feet through, and to visit some out-of-the-way places and view the native haunts of the primitive wild. In such a place when one climbs to elevated heights and views the scenes below, he is impressed with the mighty handiwork of God.

With good wishes to all my friends and acquaintances and a silent prayer to God for the welfare of his church and people, I am most respectfully your brother,

In gospel fellowship, SAMUEL STEPHEN SMITH.

Far West Stake

Since our last letter in the HERALD we have received several letters from Saints both in Canada and Michigan saying that our message had given them joy and courage. 'Tis our desire to let our light shine, so here we are again.

In the latter part of November, 1919, Sister Weaver and the writer made a trip to Lamoni. Her brother, Roland Kapnick, was attending Graceland, and my missionary pal, Cornelius Clifford, was also there. At the college we found a happy band all trying to make ready for a life of service. As I came away I felt the great loss I had sustained by never having gone there to school. I regret it keenly and would advise all our young people to do their utmost to attend Graceland. Sister Weaver tells me that she spent two of the happiest years of her life there when her name was Lyle Kapnick. She has not forgotten those times or the lessons she learned. May God bless Graceland and those noble men and women who are giving their lives to make it all it should be.

From Lamoni we returned to Cameron and soon afterwards I went to the little town of Trimble where we tried hard to get an interest, but without avail, so we moved to Edgerton Junction and for several weeks held services in our church there. We had splendid crowds and were greatly blessed in telling the gospel story. However, not one obeyed.

The last of January, 1920, found me at Hardin, Missouri, where I stayed for several months. Elder L. F. Ferguson is president of the Alma Branch and surely a good one. In the thirteen years that I have been in the church I have never seen a man who has greater love for the work of God or who has a greater zeal for its interests. No storm is too great, no road too long to stop him from attending to his duty. One night while we were holding services in Henrietta about eight miles from Hardin, it was raining and the roads were something awful. Brother Ferguson said that we would go over on the train that night so we went down town and there learned that the train was over an hour late and that would not get us there in time for the service. Nothing daunted, Brother Ferguson said, "Well, we will go just the same." So he got his big Overland out and we loaded up and started. Let me draw a curtain over the scene! Words fail me! I cannot describe that trip. The mud was fully eight inches deep and the water covered the road in places, but we went just the same. I do not know of another man in the church that would have taken a valuable car out on such a trip. That is only one of many things I have seen L. F. Ferguson do in the interests of the work of the Lord. He is a true Saint, and "sacrifice" is his watchword.

The Alma Branch is somewhat scattered. Services are held at Hardin, Waukenda, Richmond, and at the Central Church near Henrietta. Brother Ferguson and the other local men look after the work in all these places and the Lord is blessing them. He has for his helpers some noble men. I must not take space to write of them all but I must write a word about William G. Hamann who is another of God's noble men. He is a close second to Brother Ferguson, and in fact it is hard to draw a line between them. He is always on the job. His business is sometimes neglected just because he is out doing something for the work of the Lord. These men will wear a crown of glory when the day of accounts has come.

My first series of services in the Alma Branch was held in the town of Hardin. We had good crowds here and several heard the message and were caused to see its beauty. Next we held a series at Henrietta in a church we had rented there. Large crowds came out and many became interested in our message. Elder Charles Smith came while we were there and assisted us greatly with the music. He had charge of the singing and made things hum. Music is a wonderful help and I hope to see the time when the missionaries can have a trained singer with them.

We stayed in the Alma Branch till time to go to the lectures in Independence and when we left there our crowds were still good and the interest was at its height. Sometimes I feel that I did wrong in going away when I did for when I returned there and started in again at Henrietta April 25 our interest was gone and we were never able to get a crowd again. However I wanted to attend the lectures and so left.

The Saints of the Alma Branch raised nearly one hundred dollars and purchased clothing for me. They gave me about seventy dollars in money and in every way treated me with the utmost kindness. May God bless them all.

During the lectures at Independence I was asked by those in charge to go to Holden each night for a week and preach there. We did so and enjoyed it very much. Each evening 5.30 found us at the depot, and at 7.15 we arrived in Holden and went at once to the church and preached. Then home with Brother Persinger and the next morning at 5:17 we were on the train again for Independence. Sunday, March 28, we spent in Holden and preached at 11. I was wonderfully blessed while preaching and the Saints were moved to tears. Brother McWethy told me that he believed I had never preached as good a sermon as that before and that I never would again! To God be the praise and glory. Elder W. A. Smith was associate in this series and I learned to love him much. He preached the first week and I the last. Brother Krahl who is president of the Holden Stake was kindness personified to us and we enjoyed our work there very much.

I was permitted to attend that most wonderful prayer service on the morning of April 4 in the basement of the Stone Church in Independence. It was surely a foretaste of the endowment of power that our Father is willing to give to the church when we are ready to receive it. The Spirit was there in power and made its presence manifest in several gifts of prophecy and one gift of tongues. Light and cheer were imparted and words of encouragement. What a wonderful thing it is to sit in heavenly places and listen to the word of the Lord. May the day soon come when more such blessings will be enjoyed.

In bonds,

RICHARD D. WEAVER.

Omaha, Nebraska

Our branch work is prospering very nicely and we are now better organized than we have been for some time. All our departments are specializing in their particular lines. We are attempting to put the coordinating plan into thorough effect.

Our priesthood is working as a unit. Regular sessions are held every second and fourth Sunday, for study. The attendance and interest are growing. Our pastor, Brother T. J. Elliott, is the teacher.

The increased attendance in our Sunday school has been noticeable. On Sunday, January 9, one hundred and thirty were present. This was the day of installation of officers and promotion. We carried out the plan of grading the entire school, giving diplomas to seventy-five or more pupils. Mrs. J. Leeka and Sister R. W. Scott were in charge of this work. Brother Harry Wrenn was installed as superintendent of the school for the coming year.

Our Religio has taken a new lease on life as evidenced by the increased interest and attendance. Sister W. L. Wallace, reelected superintendent, is "the power behind the throne" in this progressive department. We now meet every Friday evening in our hall, which affords ample and splendid quarters. To carry out the new scope of our Religio prerogatives, we have arranged the following activities: Study classes in desired subjects, Oriole girls' domestic science class, and the Temple Builders in their advanced work. The boy department has the use of the basement where there are shower baths and bowling alleys. With the athletic equipment brought by the Ladasa Athletic Association, it plans a program of interesting work. It has the exclusive right to this meeting place every Friday evening under the supervision of Scoutmaster W. L. Wallace and Mr. R. H. Kirkpatrick.

Our last social function was a party, held New Year's Eve, at the home of Sister C. Smith. This party featured the finale of a Biblical baseball contest between the boys and girls of the Sunday school. The girls, who won, were served by the boys. One number on the program was a quoit ball game. After several contested decisions, the umpire, Brother J. Leeka, was almost mobbed.

We trust that the unifying of our forces and the increased interest in the gospel work will bring us comfort in the greater spiritual blessings. Being thus favored, we look forward to the prospect of building our new church during the coming year:

Branches Amalgamated in Detroit

We are very happy here, though the financial outlook is a little discouraging. Thousands of men are out of work, but we as Saints of God have no fear. We read in Psalm 37: "I have been young and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." So we know all will be well.

Since our consolidation of five branches into one, it brings us nearer together and more of one mind. We feel that under this system much more will be accomplished. We are much pleased with our new pastor, Elder Glaud Kuykendall, and have much confidence in his ability as pastor over the Detroit Branch, which until about three weeks ago was five branches and two missions. He has the hearty support of all and our prayers each day are for him.

When our pastor, Elder Arthur Larkey, and his wife were called to the Chatham District, we were sorry, but we know they have gained much.

J. A. Grant, missionary in Southern Ohio District, has moved his family to Columbus, Ohio.

The orchestra will give a program in the church February 10, 1921. Our Religio spent New Year's Eve in a social way with games and lunch. Also January 6, a Religio social evening was spent in a delightful, entertaining way. The Orioles had the basement trimmed tastefully and prettily. The games, toasts, recitations, etc., were profitable. Lunch was served by the Orioles in costume. BYRDIE MAGARGEE.

Council Bluffs Items

On Tuesday between Christmas and New Year's there was held a holiday entertainment which was enjoyed by all present. Treats were given to the children present.

Several socials have been held since the first of the year, that have been for the purpose of inspiring a greater interest in the mission work. The work at the Belmont and Riverside Mission is progressing in a very satisfactory manner. Increasing numbers are in attendance at all the services. Many of the young Saints are volunteers to do service at these places, and are rendering very satisfactory service, both satisfactory to themselves and to those attending these missions. Brother H. H. Hand is in charge at the Belmont Mission, and Brother G. J. Harding at the Riverside Mission. Last week Brother Clarence Skinner held services at the Orchard Heights Mission and a nice interest was manifested. Brother T. J. Smith reports good interest at the same place at the prayer meetings of which he is in charge.

The sudden departure from this mortal sphere of the wife of Elder J. F. Mintun, saddened many with whom she had for years been associated. Her children were all at the funeral. The body was laid to rest in the Magnolia Cemetery. Ruth Mintun will engage in teaching in the city so as to be at home with her father, the school board electing her for the balance of this school year. She prizes being where she can assist in the services of the church.

The Women's Department is quite active, and many have been relieved of suffering at their hands, and much encouragement given to those who have been depressed in spirit.

Brother Darrel Hall has taken up studies at Ames Agricultural College to better fit him for service in the church and world. His wife will follow him soon, and will seek to engage in something useful to assist the work of God. Saints at Ames and vicinity, take notice.

The reported death of R. C. Evans brought to the hearts sadness. It is remembered how much of service he has done for the church, and then to oppose that which he had for years built up, caused sad thoughts to arise in the hearts of all. God bless and keep his family in right doing.

Sister May Skinner has been absent from her choir duties for about a week, and she is greatly missed. This has been occasioned by sickness, but she is now recovering, as answer to fervent prayers.

Sioux City, Iowa

Another year has passed and we feel that much good history has been made in the Sioux City Branch. This is evident by the numerous advanced methods which have taken place in all the departments and the increased friendliness amongst the membership.

Early in the year Brethren C. Streeter, P. J. Zimmerman, and Elden Edwards were ordained to the priesthood; their efficient help having proved very beneficial.

The annual business meeting was indeed a spiritual one. We unanimously sustained George M. Vandel as branch president. He was granted the privilege of appointing two assistants to act as counselors. His selection was: W. W. Baker and DeLos Lytle. Twenty-five adult members were present at this meeting. Every motion, twenty in number, was affirmed unanimously. Mrs. George M. Vandel was selected as chorister for the musical department of the branch, and later by the Religio and Sunday school. She is already training two choirs.

Our quota in the General Conference auditorium drive was $2,500. We subscribed $3,000, half of which is paid at this writing. A letter from the Bishop's agent of the Little Sioux District states there were more subscribers in this drive from the Sioux City Branch than from any other branch in the district. We feel grateful for this. The same is stated in number of names on the tithing list. The amount paid last year doubled that of the preceding year. The Christmas offering averaged better than three dollars per member of the Sunday school. This department, under the able leadership of Superintendent W. W. Baker, has many new ideas which are bringing it up to a higher plane. The Religio and Women's Department are working hard in their respective fields.

January 14 will long be remembered by the Saints, and many of their friends, as a very eventful date. It was on the evening of this date that the brethren surprised the sisters with a banquet. A three-course luncheon was served in a very tasty fashion, over one hundred participating in the refreshments. Green and white were the colors most in evidence. Music and singing by the youth, and solos by Mr. Garfield Howell, a colored singer of Victor record fame, furnished the evening's entertainment. The ladies were unanimous in assuring the men they were excellent hosts.

CORRESPONDENT.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, January 11, 1921.

Editors Herald: A week ago last Sunday night just as service was about to commence, we were favored with the presence of Elder Lawrence Campbell, who was home for the holidays. Brother Lawrence is attending the class of religious education at Graceland College and his many friends are glad to see him, even if for so short a visit. He talked to the Saints along the lines of his experiences at Graceland, which proved interesting.

Brother A. Larky, of Detroit, past president of the First Detroit Branch, has been appointed by the church to labor in Chatham District and will act as district president, thus relieving Brother James Pycok for missionary work in our district. Brother Larky and his family have taken up their residence in this city, and they will prove a valuable addition to the Chatham Branch. As an executive officer, Brother Larky is well known, and his counsel and advice will be appreciated.

At our recent priesthood meeting the dividing of the city into districts for visiting purposes was discussed and we feel that much good will be accomplished by this move. Some few Saints are rather dilatory in our branch but on the whole things are on the upward move. Brother Lamont, our branch president, is arranging for a mission in the near future and we trust that God will bless us in our efforts.

Wide-awake officers have been installed in both the Sunday school and Religio, and we feel these two departments will play a great part in the holding of the young to our church during the coming year, particularly the Religio.

On Tuesday evening, January 18, 1921, the brethren of the branch are entertaining the sisters to a supper in the basement of the church. The brethren feel that as the sisters have always had to work hard when previous suppers have been put on that it would be a fine thing to return the favor and treat the sisters. All the sisters have been invited as well as the children, and the men are looking after the cooking, the tables, program, etc., and a glorious time is looked forward to.

Ever praying for the success of Zion and its officers,
IVAN N. PRITCHARD, Publicity Agent.

SAGINAW, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: We can daily see the branch improve. In the recent past there have been two ordinations, Brethren Carl Larson and Harry O. Wills, both to the office of priest; and with the new members of the priesthood who have moved to Saginaw, we hope to see great things accomplished in the New Year.

Our Christmas offering superintendent has been busy, and although we have had to spend a considerable amount for fixtures and payments, etc., on the church, we have quite a nice sum raised.

Our Wednesday evening service is increasing in size, and is being enjoyed by a goodly number. It seems that the Spirit of the Lord has been striving harder than ever with mankind to cause them to realize the necessity of assembling oft in the house of the Lord.

Our Sunday school has voted to turn its funds into the common treasury of the branch, and all funds be drawn out by order signed by the Sunday school superintendent and branch president.

We believe that when unity prevails to that extent that all departments will turn their funds into one common fund handled by God's chosen servant, the deacon, that greater strides will be made along the financial line.

Elder Byron Doty has been with us the past few weeks, and although his throat has been bothering him some, he has assisted in preaching, and also in directing the choir.

With our band of young folks, and young officers all feeling that true devotion to God, and true desire of doing God's will, we hope to see greater strides along the gospel line in the future.

CULDESAC, IDAHO, January 3, 1921.

Editors Herald: My love for the work has been intensified, notwithstanding the adverse conditions that have confronted me, at times, within the church and without. The intermingled sunlight has led me on to love's way, the depressing shadows ever giving way to God's transforming grace. For I realize that little by little the gospel has wrought a change in my life, though I still feel like one of God's weakest children. I am indebted to his love and mercy for a happier and better estate.

When once a prodigal son, God, through the church gently led me back to the fold. Before returning from my prodigal ways I dreamed the church in the form of a woman stood before me in the attitude of extending an unobtrusive invitation for me to join her. Several years later this occurred, and I accepted the invitation.

Though practically dead to Christ at the time, her fostering care tenderly brought me back to the new life in my Savior. I have suffered much for her, and why not? She has suffered much for me. At times she has caused me pain, but I have no bitterness. I also have caused her pain and sorrow. While I have meant well in my attitude toward her, and she has meant the same with me, yet weaknesses and misunderstandings have at times been barriers between us.

Last winter, when I was suffering from a nervous breakdown, an evil spirit tempted me to doubt that God loved his people as he once did. I struggled against this dark, embittering, condemning influence, and finally rebuked it in the name of Jesus Christ. A dark cloud lifted from my mind, leaving an irritating influence. This I also rebuked in the same way with the same result. The Holy Spirit then came over me like a soft, soothing mantle, and made me feel within my own bosom our heavenly Father's great love for his church, which passeth understanding, except by those who may be permitted to know by the power of God's Holy Spirit.

The same Spirit then kindled a greater love within me for the church than I had ever had before. These words found in the "Admonition," a song given through Brother Joseph Luff by the Spirit:

"Love ye me and love all people, Love as I have loved you," ran through my mind again and again under the influence of the Spirit that usually accompanies that song. I write this as a testimony to the church.

Slowly it may seem, and in weakness, and with stumbling, yet surely the bride maketh herself ready. Loved and nurtured with care, and guided by divine admonition she will grow into holy womanhood, and stand adorned as a bride for the husband when he comes to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

"Then let us be pure as the lilies,
And joyous and glad as the rose,
So when Jesus selecteth his jewels
In Zion we'll find our repose."

Let us keep our lamps trimmed and burning, and be as a city set on a hill that cannot be hid, a light unto the world that shineth in a dark place.

This world with the fashion thereof passeth away, but the word of God endureth forever. Then let us not seek for the riches, honor, and glory of this world, but lay up treasures in that home above, eternal in the heavens, that fadeth not away, remembering that the life is more than meat and the body than raiment, knowing that seeking self first adds to our poverty, but seeking the welfare of others is like sowing good seed that yields manyfold, realizing that the work of love in helping others carries with it rich rewards, having treasures in its garners that are meted out to us with our kind deeds. None can rob the soul that finds treasures in loving deeds.

No one can stop the fountain of joy of him who rejoices in the welfare of others, because the field of helping is inexhaustible. Every soul that comes into this world affords others an opportunity for helping. And should we save but one soul, or help to save one, how great will be our joy in heaven with that soul.

While it may not be possible for us to labor together without differing occasionally, let us differ without malice or heat, being willing to give one another the same liberties of thought we ask for ourselves, yet being guarded in our public ministrations that we shall not raise contentions, and cause mistrust where confidence should prevail. However, when righteousness is in jeopardy we should fearlessly declare the truth, always desiring to labor in the church and for it, fully appreciating our blessed heritage as children of promise, who have been transplanted from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son.

Let nothing separate us from the work whereunto we are called. God will lead us along; the kingdom is ours, the blessings are ours, and while the world may be in danger, turmoil, and dismay, we can lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh.

Saints, let us not fear these things that are coming on the earth, and not even fear them that are able to kill the body, but only fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell, for if we save our lives we shall lose them, and if we lose our lives for Christ's sake we shall find them. The Lord may not require all of us to surrender our physical lives, but he does require all of us to surrender our souls to him and all our physical activities, that we may present both soul and body a living sacrifice on the altar of service.

In times of trouble let us remember that God can take care of his own, and be willing to submit ourselves to any fate he may see fit to impose upon us, considering that all of our trials are for our perfecting, and that God never causes his children needless tears.

With our difficulty the Lord may open a door of service like he did with Paul, who being bound and sent to Rome carried the gospel to the Gentiles. Joseph who was sold as a captive into Egypt became a great ruler in the nation, the gates of which he threw open to his famine-stricken father, mother, and brethren, providing for them in the present, and giving them an opportunity to provide for themselves in the future. From this came the nation of Israel, a nation whose history has engaged the attention of the entire world, a nation whose descendants will rule the world, from whence is the Christ whose kingdom will break down all other kingdoms, when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of God and his Christ.

In prison the apostles sang praises to God. Stephen's face was lighted with the glory of God while he was being stoned to death. Martyr saints sang hymns of praise on the burning racks. All these are silent witnesses inspiring a living faith.

Let us be true to one another and to the work intrusted to our care, that Zion may arise and shine, putting on her beautiful garments, that the temple may arise in its splendor, an emblem of consecrated service and a shrine of pure worship.

Then shall Zion portray to the world by a pure faith and a living example that it is indeed the kingdom of God and his Christ, and constrain them to say, "Let us go up unto Zion and learn of her laws and her ways."

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, January 17, 1920.

Editors Herald: The various departments of the church here are still moving forward with increased attendance. The Sunday school is advancing under the leadership of Superintendent J. M. McCarter, the attendance last Sunday being eighty-eight. A good class spirit is manifest throughout the school. Our young brother, Ralph Vickery, is becoming proficient as president of the Religio.

Brother Daniel B. Sorden, of Graceland College, (who spent the holidays here with his parents) and Miss Gladys Steele, of Kingfisher, Oklahoma, were united in marriage here last Wednesday evening, and left immediately for Independence, Missouri, to complete their arrangements to sail for London. Elder Sorden is to establish a school for the church at Saint Leonard's in London. He will be assisted in this work by his wife, who is quite proficient in music and foreign languages. The Saints in Oklahoma City wish for them much success in their new undertaking and pray God's blessings upon them.

Elder William Shakespeare stopped off here en route to El Reno, Oklahoma, where he is to hold a series of meetings. Elder J. G. Smith, president of the Central Oklahoma District is with us at present.

Apostle W. M. Aylor is here holding a series of meetings. He preached two powerful sermons last Sunday and our church was filled to its capacity both morning and evening.

If anyone knows of any Saints in our city, who have not yet located our church, please communicate with our pastor, R. E. Miller, 226 West Twelfth Street, and he will be glad to look them up.

The Central Oklahoma district conference will convene here February 12 and 13. Visiting Saints are welcome. Our church is located at Seventh and Lottie. Take fair grounds car, get off at Lottie, and go one block south.

REPORTER.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: Elder R. M. Maloney went to Calumet, January 15, and preached Saturday night and Sunday to interested audiences.

Apostle W. M. Aylor is still here, having continued his services all through last week, bringing the meeting to a close with two fine sermons Sunday, January 23. This has been one of the best meetings ever held in Oklahoma City. The attendance was large, including many nonmembers. Brother Aylor is expecting to leave soon for other points.

The Oriole girls are active under the leadership of their monitor, Sister Ed Dillon. They met at her residence last week.

Word has just been received here that Elder Daniel B. Sorden and wife, together with the rest of the party, sailed from New York, January 20, for London. Just before sailing, Brother Sorden baptized his wife, who has been interested in the restored gospel for some time. She was confirmed by Apostle Gillen and Brother Sorden.

Our Sunday school has set a goal of $500 for the Christmas offering for this year. This is about six or seven dollars per member; however we expect to go beyond the goal, as we raised over $750 Christmas offering last year.

REPORTER.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: The Windsor Branch held their annual branch meeting January 5, and according to the reports the branch is truly going forward, having added 43 members in 1920, making a total membership of 247, with 22 holding the priesthood, four of which are elders.

Elder Leslie Brown, who has been the pastor for six and one half years, is again presiding over the branch, with Elder Minnis Mifflin as counselor. There is a good army of talented young people, such as musicians, soloists, etc. This week the orchestra is putting on a concert.

Elder James Pycoc of Toronto has been secured for a campaign this winter, which began on January 16 in the Empire Theater, the church being too small for the Sunday evening services. On the 16th the crowd was splendid, but last night it was better, there being over six hundred present to hear "The world's greatest event," the second coming of Christ, which was ably presented by Elder Pycoc. One interesting feature is the privilege to ask questions. These are written and put on the collection plate and answered in a pleasing manner by the speaker. We expect to do our share toward the campaign for new members for 1921.

Very sincerely,

ELIZABETH DEPEW.

THUNDER HAWK, SOUTH DAKOTA, January 23, 1921.

Editors Herald: We still enjoy the HERALD's weekly visits and those of the Ensign, as that is all the way we have of keeping in touch with the church and noting its onward progress. It encourages and strengthens us in the faith.

Words do not express the joy and gladness we had last November when Brother J. E. Wildermuth of Fargo, North Dakota, came and preached for us a week, opening up a new field of labor, as the gospel in its fullness had never been preached here. He occupied our schoolhouse and made good use of the blackboard in illustrating his sermons, making them very impressive. We hope much good was accomplished, and look forward to his return next summer, when we hope some will be baptized. He is well qualified to open up the work in new places, and we hope and pray that the honest in heart will see the light of the gospel and obey the truth.

My next anniversary of being buried with Christ in baptism and entering the fold of Christ will be the fiftieth, yet I feel I am only a babe in the gospel. My experiences and blessings have been many. Many of the Saints will remember how eagerly we looked for the Zion's Hope and the stories written by Perla Wilde contained therein years ago. Brother J. E. Wildermuth is her youngest son, and to know him brought fond recollections of her memory.

We have a good union Sunday school with good interest and attendance, but no other religious services, which makes Sunday a long day.

My eyes have been troubling me, and I would like to ask the Saints to pray that the affliction may be removed and my eyes be strengthened. I bathe them in consecrated oil each night, and ask God's blessing upon them. Also remember us that this neighborhood may see the light of the gospel. Some have been reading tracts, and we pray their minds may be enlightened, and their understanding increased, that they may see new light and obey the truth, for I feel there are those here who are honest in heart.

Ever praying for the advancement of the church,
Your sister in gospel bonds,

ELLEN HERR.

MARLIN, TEXAS, January 22, 1921.

Editors Herald: It has been many a day since I knocked at the door of your HERALD columns.

If I mistake not, I subscribed for the HERALD in 1870, when it was a monthly, and only about half its present size, at the cost of three dollars a year. Every copy during that half century up till now, with the exception of the year of 1872, has been a welcome visitor to my home, and read with joy by reason of its valuable contents and spiritual uplift, and I still have them on file, less those of 1872. Can some one supply me with the missing link? I am well acquainted with Mr. Poverty, but I have never been so poor that I could not take the church publications, and they have always been highly honored by me.

I now wish to express my heartfelt thanks to the Saints of the Dallas and Marlin (Texas) Branches for making it possible for me to spend Christmas week in Joplin, Missouri, with wife, children, and grandchildren (twenty-seven all told), only one son and family and a granddaughter and family being absent, and greatly missed. On December 31 I gave home folks the parting hand. Night found me at Shamrock, Oklahoma, at the home of Sister C. L. Hicks, a daughter in the gospel. She and her family made me feel at home, and with joy she related how she had gone to Independence, Missouri, to undergo an operation to remove a cancer, but in place was administered to, under the hands of Elder I. N. White, and instantly healed. Thanks be to God for the restored gospel and the gifts thereof.

On January 6 in the new year, I landed in Dallas, Texas, at the home of Brother and Sister W. P. Creviston (my mission home). They have spared no means or time in making me feel at home. May God bless and reward them for their saintly acts. In fact I have been kindly cared for by all the Saints that I have met with in the Central Texas District. The Saints of the south are a warm-hearted people.

I shall be glad to hear from the scattered, isolated Saints, and any who have relatives in this district whom they would like to have visited. Write me. Either I or Elder F. A. Rowe, my collaborer, will respond to your call as soon as possible, if labor is needed and an opening for preaching can be secured.

Yours in the harness,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

5,000 Miles to Graceland

Misses Madge Green, of Glasgow, Scotland, and Dorris Gibbs, of Birmingham, England, and Messrs. Frank and Harry Holmes, Harold Dewsnup, and Sidney Phillips, also from England, arrived Saturday and Monday to enroll in Graceland. Their journey was somewhat unpleasant, encountering a stormy sea, which caused them to drift eight hundred miles out of their course. In all they were eleven days at sea and seventeen days on the journey, so they were somewhat tired and discouraged when they arrived and appreciated the hearty welcome given them by Graceland students and the people of Lamoni.—The Lamoni Chronicle, January 27, 1921.

BOOK REVIEWS

With the Doughboy in France

By Edward Hungerford. New York, Macmillan Company, 1920. Price $2.

The book is a resume of the work of the Red Cross in France. It does not pretend to be a history, but is simply a series of pictures of America in a big war. It is written from the standpoint of one who was present, both during and after the war. The author gives due credit to many others who supplied him with important pictures, including the Red Cross at the very front, as well as its work as a department store, and hospital work. It gives also many incidents of the war, and work done by the American Division.

The Passing Legions

By George Buchanan Fife. Published by Macmillan Company, New York, 1920. Price $2.

This book is a review of the Red Cross work in England. The exhilaration of service at the front was denied the Red Cross in Great Britain; nevertheless the work never lacked a superb inspiration, nor was it devoid of drama. Its service lay back of the lines, among those on the way up—for over a million American soldiers passed through England, on returning from the front to hospitals. The author attempts to narrate those achievements which distinguished the work in Great Britain, and which are without counterpart in the chronicles of any other Red Cross work in Europe.

Taft Papers on the League of Nations

Speeches and Letters of Ex-President William Howard Taft. Edited by Theodore Marburg and Horace E. Flack. Macmillan Company, New York; 340 pages, price $4.50.

The League of Nations is still the greatest proposition before the world to-day. The main attack has been on the grounds that it interfered with our sovereignty and with the Monroe Doctrine; that it involved an abandonment of our traditional policy against entangling alliances; and that the country lacked power under the Constitution to enter into such an agreement.

These objections are fully met by Mr. Taft. His speeches and correspondence are grouped in order, covering the period from May 12, 1915 to April 28, 1919, and it includes one article on the revised covenant. This book contains a review of the proposal of the league to enforce peace, as adopted in 1915. It also contains the Paris covenant for a League of Nations, and the text of the plan presented on February 14, 1919, and the text of the plan presented on April 28 of the same year, arranged in parallel columns for comparison.

Willard Hield has been ordained to office of elder, and will act as student pastor of the Latter Day Saint student body at the State Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa.

In the high cost of living, says the Omaha Bee, transportation is doubtless one element; when goods are shipped across two or three States to the manufacturers and then returned; when corn is shipped from Maine to Nebraska, and from Nebraska to Maine; when apples are shipped out of Nebraska, and apples from Washington and Oregon shipped in, prices are bound to be higher. In many cases there would be economy in the persistent use of home goods. Of course, in some cases this may be offset by the higher manufacturing cost.

Have You Filed Your Annual Tithing Report?

To assist you in filling out the new Annual Tithing Report, we offer the following example of the use of Computation No. 1. In all cases where no tithing has been paid nor previous report filed, this computation should be followed. Examples of Computations Nos. 2 and 3 will appear in following issues, so that if the one below does not fit your case, perhaps next week's illustration will.

Let us assume that Brother "A" has recently joined the church and wishes to comply fully with the law of tithing. In order to ascertain the amount of tithing due the Lord, he asks for an Annual Tithing Report form, upon which he lists his resources and liabilities in the manner shown below. As no tithing has been paid nor previous Annual Tithing Report filed by him, Computation No. 1 should be followed.

"The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the Bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, . . . the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

Pastoral Notice

To the Saints of the British Isles Mission; Dear Brothers and Sisters: This may be the last opportunity of addressing you as bishop of the British Isles Mission, as it now appears that whatever my future church work may be, it will be in Zion. The time is close at hand when I shall be transferred from this mission and be gathered with my family to where the Saints throughout the world are looking as the goal of their fond expectations. It may be a little surprising to you when I tell you that the time of my appointment in this mission is longer than any ever made by the Reorganized Church, and now it is the consensus of opinion of the general authorities of the church that on account of my age as well as the continuous and arduous work as bishop, I should be permitted to rest from a supercharged condition and return to Independence, my former home, and take part with others, as may be assigned me, in the establishment of Zion.

It may be that I have not pleased everybody. And where is the man or woman that can conscientiously say that he or she is even pleased with self in all things and at all times? The weak spot in any man is shown when he thinks himself the wisest, and now on the verge of my leaving you I am free to say that if there have been individual differences I am willing to give due credit to each and every one that our differences have been honest in the common cause, and if we have made honest mistakes the Lord will overrule our mistakes that they will not injure his work.

The gospel has taught me that in gifts, blessings, and membership in his church, God has set no international lines, and from my experience in this mission I wish to say as a parting word that I have found as good Saints here as in Zion or any other place. The time of my experience in the bishopric in Independence, the center place of Zion, was twice as long as I have served you here. My ledger shows a larger percentage of tithe payers than ever before in my experience. From the statistical records of the branches in this mission I gather the following information: There are 1,375 members recorded, of which only 702 are active. Out of the latter number over 650 are tithe payers. While this is a magnificent showing, the ideal which I had hoped would be reached before I left the mission has not yet been accomplished.

The past year and a half has been the hardest struggle of my life's experience. For this struggle I hope to be rewarded with the knowledge that one of the chief objects I had in mind has been accomplished, bringing its fruits to this mission as well as to the general church, and that it may be as the crowning act of my appointment. It has been one of my ambitions to place the church in a position in this land so that those who would follow me would not have to be ashamed to name the church because of its poverty, as was the condition when I first came to London. We came to this mission in poverty. We go out pleased that God has opened up the way whereby our desires, in a measure, have been accomplished, as we have now established a place in London that will be a convenient and desirable location for the headquarters of the church in this mission; and as publicly stated by the President, the ideas that I had in mind in securing the property will be carried out; that is, it will be not only a headquarters but a place of educating young men and women for church work. I pray that the benefits derived therefrom may, in time, be extended throughout Scotland and Ireland as well as England and Wales. Personally, I do not take to myself the credit for that which God has given me the power to accomplish. To work with God is holy association with him. It makes men partners in the salvation of mankind and brings the greater happiness. A wise man once said, "He who never sacrifices the present for a future good or a personal to a general one can't speak of happiness except as a blind speck of color; and to make a gift that does not cost us a single privation is not a sacrifice."

My counselors, John W. Taylor and William R. Armstrong, both high priests of Manchester, are men of God. They have done all they could, although handicapped in the bishopric work with the business affairs of life. May the Lord's special blessing be upon them and their families, and may the day soon come when we shall be privileged to associate again in the land of Zion.

May the Lord bless him who shall be my successor in office, whomsoever he may be, and may he be able to accomplish more than I. Ungrudgingly I leave to him advantages that have not been my lot to enjoy. May the blessings of the Lord rest richly on all the officials of the districts and branches, present and future, and also on all its membership. If we do not all meet again in this life may we meet again in the Zion of God, in the Zion that God will bring with him when he comes in glory nevermore to be overcome, is the prayer of your brother and servant in the gospel,

RODERICK MAY.

Conference Minutes

NORTH DAKOTA.—Coordinate conference at Fargo, December 5, 1920. District president and Sunday school superintendent, Thomas Leitch, in charge. He made extensive report of work done. Fargo, Minot, Dunn Center, and Dunseith Branches reported, also a large number of the local priesthood. Bishop's agent reported total receipts for all funds, including General Conference auditorium for 5 months, $3,102.62; total subscriptions to auditorium fund, $8,084.75. M. Rasmussen elected assistant superintendent of Sunday School Department. Sister Freeman, superintendent of Women's Department, reported a reading on the purpose of the department, by Sister Dehn. Next conference on Wednesday of reunion week. J. W. Darling, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

BATH.—Sister Elizabeth Griffiths Bath, widow of the late Isaac Bath, was born in Merthyr Tydfil, South Wales, England, May 20, 1849. Married Isaac Bath October 1, 1866, in Canton, Illinois. The following children were born to them: William H., of Boston, Massachusetts; David I., of Peoria, Illinois; Mrs. Charles Luker, and Mrs. William Luker, of Canton, Illinois; Edwin G., of San Francisco, California; Zenos, of Rock Island, Illinois; Mrs. Emma Munro, and Mrs. Mabel Ward. Died January 14, in her home in Canton, Illinois. She leaves to mourn, 4 sons and 4 daughters, 2 brothers, Edwin Griffiths and Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, and 16 grandchildren. Baptized when about 9 years old, and remained a devout Christian to the end.

Was a model mother, honored and respected. Sermon by Amos Berve, of Davenport, Iowa. Interment in Greenwood Cemetery.

FLETCHER.—Sarah Ann Johnson was born in Kentucky on September 29, 1868, and died at the family home at Holden, Missouri, January 16, 1921. Married R. L. Fletcher at Ava, Missouri, May 23, 1890. Six children were born to them: Bessie May Barnes, Merritt, Missouri; George Elmer, Teddie Elza Fletcher, Holden, Missouri; Martha Ellen Evans, Dallas, Texas; Della Jane Kain, Goodhope, Missouri; Zada Ermal Fletcher, Holden. These with the husband and aged father are left to mourn. She joined the church at Rome, Missouri, about eleven years ago at the conclusion of a public discussion in which the church was represented by A. M. Baker, who baptized her. Funeral service in charge of D. J. Krahl; sermon by J. W. Paxton. Burial at Ava, Missouri.

FOREMAN.—John Foreman was born in England, February 10, 1828; died at Lamoni, Iowa, January 12, 1921. Married Lucy Setchell. Came to America in 1853. Seven children were born. Was a member of the church and faithful to the end. Leaves 5 children, 17 grandchildren, and 29 great-grandchildren, and 1 great-great-grandchild, with one sister. Funeral from Saints' church, Lamoni; sermon by D. T. Williams, assisted by C. Scott. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

FISHBURN.—William Henry Fishburn was born at Mount Liberty, Ohio, August 11, 1853. Died in Mercy Hospital, Denver, Colorado, January 9, 1921. In 1881 married Louisa M. A. Brewer. Lived in Denver a number of years as a respected business man and a stalwart member of the church. His moral and financial support of the forward movements of the church were always counted on and received. Was ordinarily a healthy man, but an abscess formed in one of his ears and within some two weeks death followed. Leaves widow, 2 sons, 1 daughter, and many other relatives and friends. Funeral services from Saints' church in Denver, Hale W. Smith preaching the sermon.

COLBERT.—Dorothy Mae, only child by birth of Brother and Sister Leroy Colbert, of Chetek, Wisconsin, was born October 13, 1910. Baptized June 15, 1919. Died January 4, 1921, after an illness of about 7 days from diphtheria. Leaves father, mother, and foster brother, with host of friends and relatives. Will be greatly missed in home and church circles. Interment in Lake View Cemetery. Prayer by A. L. Whiteaker.

BOOMER.—Florence Irene, infant daughter of Elder A. M. Boomer and wife, was born October 12, 1920. Died January 16, 1921, of bronchitis, after an illness of six days. Leaves to mourn, father, mother, 3 brothers, 4 sisters, and many relatives and friends. Elder Burkley arriving too late to officiate, a talk was given by a Methodist minister. Interment in Lake View Cemetery, at Escanaba.

SPALDING.—Helen Beaumont Simpson was born in Prince Edwards Island, March 16, 1848, and departed this life December 20, 1920. Came to Canada with parents. Married Hyrum J. Haskins, who died January 17, 1896, and she married R. M. Pinkerton in 1903. After his death married John Spaulding, who with the 6 children, four from her first marriage, still survive her. Died at her daughter's home in California and remains brought to Lamoni, Iowa, for burial. Funeral sermon by F. A. Smith, assisted by Columbus Scott.

13 days. Private funeral service at the home, by Reverend L. Drunod. Interment in Edmond Cemetery.

SCHROEDER.—James Sylvester Schroeder was born at Pierce, Pierce County, Nebraska, December 12, 1902. Moved to Edgetts, Lake County, Michigan, with his parents in March, 1912. Baptized July 10, 1916, by Archie Whitehead. Seemingly a perfect young man and a promising figure spiritually. Died at Jennings, Michigan, March 10, of influenza and appendicitis. The Lord in all his wisdom knows best, creating us all of one blood, and ruling the bonds of our habitation. Leaves to mourn, parents, 2 brothers, 2 sisters, other relatives, and many friends. Interment in Bristol Cemetery beside a little brother who had preceded him in death. Short talk at the grave by Samuel Long.

COX.—Eliza Caroline Cox, wife of William H. Cox. Brother and Sister Cox united with the church May 24, 1861, at Whitestone, Indiana. He soon entered the ministry and moved to Sandwich where he died some time in the year 1865. Sister Cox remained a widow until her death, supporting herself and family, also the work of the church, through hard labor as a seamstress. She had a number of comforting spiritual manifestations. Died at the home of her daughter, Sister A. J. Maginnis, of Chicago, Wednesday, January 5, 1921. Funeral held from the First Chicago Church. Sermon by Ward L. Christy.

HOOD.—Susan C. Hood was born October 9, 1848, in Carroll County, Missouri. Died January 23, 1921, in Kansas City, Kansas. Married J. B. Childers September 5, 1867. To this union 8 children were born. Left a widow November 17, 1894. In 1907 she was married to the present husband, John Hood. Baptized March 31, 1891, remaining faithful to the end. Leaves to mourn, a husband, 2 sons, 3 sisters, a brother, and other relatives. Services from Armstrong church by J. A. Tanner. Burial in Woodland Cemetery.

M'CLENNAHAN.—Clarisse, daughter of Robert V. and Agnes Dunsdon McClennahan, aged 15 years, 8 months, died at her Colorado home near Venango, Nebraska, January 14, after a two weeks' illness from diphtheria. Owing to the nature of the disease, brief services were held at the home in charge of Ward A. Hougas. Interment near the old home near Henderson, Iowa. Services there in charge of T. A. Hougas, of Des Moines, Iowa. Eight days later, early on the morn of the 22d, Gerald, aged 13 years, 7 months, succumbed to the same disease and passed on to greet his sister in the great beyond. Similar services were held for him, both at the home at Henderson, Iowa. They leave to mourn, father, mother, 2 brothers, one sister, and a host of relatives and friends. They will be greatly missed, not only in the home but in social and church circles as well. Both took an active part in social affairs and were very earnest workers in our little Sunday school and church here, Clarisse having served very faithfully as organist since our organization three years ago.

WRIGHT.—Mary Keeley was born in DeKalb, Indiana, March 24, 1848. Died January 21, 1921, at Lake Worth, Florida. Spent most of her life near Maquoketa, Iowa. Married German Wright August 15, 1865. To this union 10 children were born, 6 children and their father having preceded her in death. Baptized and confirmed by John Heide August 8, 1897. She gave the use of her house for the Saints' services. Was faithful to the end, and rejoiced to go. Was much respected by all. Funeral at Maquoketa, Iowa, January 26. Sermon by John Heide, assisted by J. E. Vanderwood. Interment in Bridgeport Cemetery by the side of her husband and children.

The Man With a Program Wins!

How often it has been demonstrated that the man with a program wins. In committee work the person who has thought the problem through and comes into the session with a solution of the matter almost invariably leads.

The difference between a successful branch and a dead one is the difference between having a program or not. A branch must know what it wants to do if it does anything at all. If the branch program consists of meeting at the church once or twice a week and nothing more, the battle is lost before it is begun.

God has called us to a great work, a definite work. He knows what he wants us to do, but we must complete the program by deciding how we will do it.

The branch should have a publicity program if nothing else. Decide to distribute tracts to a certain number of homes this year, and then do it. Farmers do not sow by chance. They plow their acreage. Can your branch do less?

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN TO YOU?

The Unjust Steward

We should use the best business methods in our business affairs but should not make wealth our chief or first aim in life.

"And he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man who had a steward; and the same was accused unto him, that he had wasted his goods. And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship. I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses. So he called every one of his lord's debtors, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord? And he said, A hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, A hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore. And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely, for the children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends, of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give unto you that which is your own? No servant can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. And the Pharisees also who were covetous, heard all these things; and they derided him. And he said unto them, Ye are they who justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed among men, is an abomination in the sight of God."—Luke 16: 1-15, Inspired Version.

This parable is one not easy to understand, as it comes down to us to-day. We cannot suppose that Jesus approved of the unjust steward robbing his master. But it is possible, as has been pointed out, that the conditions of his stewardship gave him actual possession and the right to do what he did, so that he was acting in accordance with approved standards of the time. Certainly the story does not indicate that he was violating his trust in administering in this way. It was quite common in that age for taxes and other rights to be farmed out.

The very significant statement is made, "For the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." It could not possibly be taken for an approval of such conduct by a steward living in this generation, for that would not be according to the children of this world, in this generation, but would be instead embezzlement, and also such acts attempted by an agent would be at once set aside and so would not avail.

It is evident, therefore, that this so-called steward had legal right to do the thing that he did, and was not violating his trust in so doing. It simply means that the conditions of his holding were different than is ordinarily supposed. It is quite possible by the customs of that age that the administration of the property lay in his hands, and he was responsible only to pay a certain return, and that all above that was his own property. In other words, the administration was farmed out, or sold to the highest bidder. Such an one was then a steward, but only accountable for the agreed rental.

Viewing conditions to-day we have many men who are stewards over their own property. They hold it in trust to God. A man may give away his property. He could send to another and tell him to reduce the amount of his indebtedness. Legally he is free to pursue this method; morally he holds it in trust to God how he shall administer.

In this light, the parable becomes an urging to the children of the kingdom that they shall apply business methods. They should not suppose because they are the children of the kingdom that they are to use some more careless methods. They should use all the common sense, bookkeeping, and methods of credit of the best class of business men to protect their financial transactions.

We realize, it is true, that the children of this world are often wiser in their generation in these matters than the children of light. A grave mistake has been made at times by placing too much reliance on faith and not sufficient upon the intelligence which our Lord has given us.

The parable continues in the 9th verse: "And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends, of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

We are told in 1 Corinthians, 15th chapter, that there is a glory of bodies celestial, bodies terrestrial, and bodies telestial. We are told in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that those of the terrestrial glory are the honorable men of the earth. If a saint of God proceeds with common sense business methods, an honorable man of his word, and comes up to the best ideals of the business world, such an one, if he fails of celestial glory, will be gladly received by other honorable men of the earth in everlasting habitations. But it does not follow that conducting business according to business principles, according to the best principles of honor, that a man is going to fail. Certainly the Master would not have given such advice if that would be the result. His call was always for children of the kingdom. If you fail or when you fail, of the highest of your ideals, yet if you have still in all of your dealings been honorable, you are an honorable man of the earth and they will gladly receive you.

The tenth verse throws additional light. "He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much." This clearly shows that the principle being taught was not dishonor, but the contrary.

"If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?" If a man has not proven himself efficient and honorable in his business dealings, if he does not use the intelligence God has given him to conduct his business in business-like ways, how can he expect that an intelligent God would trust to him the riches of the kingdom? If he is unfaithful in the least, he will also be unfaithful in much. He will make his faith a carry-all and ask the Lord to see that the work is carried on, instead of doing his share and receiving the development, mentally, morally, and spiritually, which comes therefrom.

"And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's who shall give unto you that which is your own?" Ordinarily this would seem really foolish. How can anyone give me that which is my own? How is it his to give?

Under the law of stewardship and inheritance, it becomes plain. Here is directly an argument on the much disputed question whether every poor man shall be given outright a home, or whether he shall be helped by his brethren to secure one at a reasonable price.

To many this means to buy up large tracts of land. Then if sold through a suitable colonization or organization at cost, the poor man gets his land at a minimum price, with low interest rates. By suitable employment, with adequate payment for that employment, he is enabled to secure for himself a home. Others think that every man should be given outright a home, without price, by a fee simple deed.

But if a man cannot be faithful in trust in that which is another's, why should he be given anything to be his by a deed which cannot be broken? As stewards, if we are not faithful in that which is another's, who will give us anything to be our own?

For the group, the order of bishops, or any other organization to hold the title to all of the property, and for the membership to be only legal trustees of their stewardships compelled by law to account, does not mean the same spiritual development that it does for a man to hold his stewardship in his own name, to administer in his own name, and then turn over the surplus and tithing to the common fund for the benefit of all. Much of our work, it is true, must be done by legal trustees. This is the case with Graceland College, with our old folks' and children's homes, with the publishing houses, with the Sanitarium. At the same time it means a greater and higher development for a man to have the property within his own administration, and then in honesty to God and his fellow man to account therefor and turn in his profit.

But one should not expect a poor man, inexperienced, to have a large property turned over to him and placed in his name before he has proven himself. That would not be good business policy. It would not show common sense. It would not show wisdom in the things which are least or the things which are greatest. Unless a man has proven himself, he cannot expect to receive anything for his own. "If ye have not been faithful with that which is another man's, who shall give unto you that which is your own?"

Finally, no servant can serve two masters. He cannot serve God and mammon. The 14th verse shows that it was understood that the Pharisees were covetous. While good common business sense should be used, our first thought should not be, nor our first desire, the making of money. If a man is seeking selfishly his own ends, he cannot be faithful to God and his brethren.

This emphasizes the broad difference between using business methods and common sense as an instrumentality for the carrying on of the work of God, in the work of our stewardship, and the very different principle of making our primary and sole thought the gaining of unrighteous mammon. If our desire is selfish, acquisitive for ourself, the service is to the unrighteous mammon, and we cannot be a true servant of God.

The true servant of God will be honorable, and will use his best intelligence in the handling of the unrighteous mammon, for "he who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much." But he will use it as a servant not as a master. His chief aim will not be money or mammon, but he will be the servant to one only, even God, when at last he becomes a son, adding the love of a son to the service he gives to his Father.

Social Unrest

To anyone who reads the newspapers it is apparent that the public mind is much upset, and that there are many elements of danger in the present situation, even in this country.

Some months ago the question was raised in the American Bar Association in the form of a referendum: "Resolved, that the maintaining of public order in the United States should be secured exclusively by the officers elected for that purpose, in the city, township, State, and Nation, and not by other individuals." The vote in favor was very nearly unanimous.

At various times large corporations have been permitted to swear in deputies to protect their own property. Such a procedure naturally tends towards confusion, and accents rather than relieves the industrial situation. The Government, from the lowest to the highest peace officer, should undertake to protect persons and property regardless of the interests involved. It is quite probable that such extreme measures as have recently been resorted to by way of raids and deportations and the like, tend to accentuate rather than to cure the existing unrest.

It is a time that calls for loyalty to the Government and to the principles on which our Government is founded—loyalty, not in a submissive sense so much as in active support of justice and in upholding the men who have been appointed by us to administer.

For like reasons, in the unrest in the church, which is after all a reflex of the conditions in the world, there is a need of loyalty to the cause of Christ, which includes the loyal support of our brethren who have been chosen and on whom has been laid the responsibility in branch, stake, and general work.

As many in the world in labor unions and in other organizations are either intentionally or unintentionally disloyal, so in the church it is quite probable that many in attacking and attempting to undermine a brother's work, do not realize how far they forget themselves and are attempting to pull down, not only a brother, but the whole church. They apparently care not what injury is incurred if only they can accomplish the ends they have in view.

By loyalty we do not plead for a blind obedience to any man or group of men, but we do plead for the church itself, and for the right and just consideration due its representatives.

At the conference of the Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, February 10-13, H. A. Lorance and E. D. White were ordained priests; Levi Dobson and Christian W. Peterson, teachers; John E. Anderson, J. E. Morey, and E. D. Downey, president and counselors, respectively, of the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Deacons. Ordination of R. E. Johnson to office of priest provided for. The sacrament service was a very spiritual occasion. In the evening, preceding the sermon by C. E. Wight, the class in religious education, at Graceland, gave a concert, twenty-nine participating, led by H. A. Koehler. A resolution favoring a bill providing a State board of censorship of motion pictures was passed and will be sent to the respective legislators representing the territory covered by the Lamoni Stake in Iowa.

Social Work in Iowa

An address given by Professor O. E. Klingaman, director of the Extension Division of the State University of Iowa, in April, 1920, states that in 1913 over a million dollars was spent by the various counties in Iowa for poor relief, but that practically none of this sum was devoted to constructive work, as the actual needs of the poor were not always cared for so thoroughly as this total might suggest. Study has been continued since 1914, and shows a lack of scientific methods in use. Records are poorly kept, nor is there any uniformity or agreement as to how the question of caring for the poor shall be handled.

In some instances, bulk orders for merchandise are given. The supervisor installs a storeroom, and children coming with orders to these storerooms for supplies are thereby pauperized. The pauperization of children is one of the most serious problems in connection with poor relief, especially since in Iowa, as in some other States, children may be sent to the poor farm with the parents.

Another difficulty is the unorganized character of private relief, which expends itself around certain seasons, as Christmas. For example, one family received eighteen baskets of food on Christmas Day, and then were allowed to suffer the rest of the winter. This has a bad effect upon both children and parents, until they come to think that they have the right to be provided for at one season of the year whether it is really needed or not, and even though they are not entitled to any relief.

Under the Iowa plan, the Extension Division makes the survey, and recommends that the board of supervisors unite with the various benevolent agencies in the counties, in the employment of the trained social workers, who shall be overseers of the poor; and that all the work be concentrated under them. Also that the work may be constructive and not pauperizing, and those who have merely fallen below the bread line may be made self-supporting with the right kind of help.

Serious objection is taken to various national organizations which enter the field, without considering that which is being done, or how far their purposes are already carried out by existing agencies. Certain organizations, well known from the public press, have been requested to abandon their relief work because it was entirely too expensive, and the relief as administered was of the wrong type. In some instances national organizations, well known to all readers, have entered the State, he says, apparently with the idea of giving some of their workers a good position, rather than having in view the constructive help of the community.

In the matter of public nurse, national organizations, as the Red Cross, and State organizations, as the Iowa Tubercular Association, sometimes attempt to make such provision, while by law provision is made for community employment of a public health nurse by the board of education or city council, or by the county board of supervisors. This diversity causes confusion, and raises the question of how the matter of public health nurse can best be handled.

Growing Spirit of Unity

At present there is a growing spirit of unity in the world. Common sense would indicate that there should be a closer affiliation of the peoples on the American Continent. If anything, especially should this be true between the United States and Canada. Not high tariff walls, but reciprocity.

It is also apparent there must be another great war, worse even than the last, unless there is disarmament. Disarmament is not possible except by an international agreement in which all join. An international agreement will require internationalization to make it effective. Expediency, as well as Christianity and morality, require a closer affiliation between the nations of the world. When others are in need, the people of America are willing to contribute of their means. We need an organization which will prevent the need; prevent the greatest cause of pestilence and famine—that is, war.

The question is, after all, a simple one, though it has been much misrepresented. Shall we help the world to get on its feet, or shall we have the world coming to America in great numbers, to receive the help we will not give them at home?

Shall we help to secure order and just conditions, or shall we be compelled to go again through all the horrors of war? It would seem that morality, expediency, common sense, and patriotism would all give but the one answer; and that answer is towards a better or more nearly ideal condition, which would be only the greater cause for accepting the right answer.

Subjects Being Discussed

President Soon Sails for Palestine

A brief note from President F. M. Smith, dated January 11, at Berlin, Germany, says he and Brother Williams reached that place on the 11th and intended to be there for three or four days, then go on to Hamburg. From there the itinerary would include Rotterdam, Schiedam, and London, expecting to reach the latter place on the 25th. As soon after February 1 as possible, they expected to leave London for Jerusalem, where their address will be the same as Elder Passman's. On February 10, they plan to sail from Trieste, Italy, on the S. S. Wein, to Alexandria.

G. N. Briggs Meets With College Presidents

Professor George N. Briggs, president of Graceland, was in Des Moines Wednesday and Thursday last week attending a meeting of the college presidents of Iowa. Many subjects of interest and many questions confronting the educational institutions of to-day were discussed and much good received from an exchange of views.—Lamoni Chronicle.

Sunday School Executives Meet

On the 29th and 30th the executive council of the Sunday School Department, composed of G. R. Wells, Max Carmichael, A. W. Smith, E. D. Moore, and M. H. Siegfried, met in Independence to discuss the future policies of the department as to lessons for the coming years.

An ambitious tentative program was outlined by the consulting board previously appointed by the executives and this was adopted unanimously. The plan includes an entire recasting of the Sunday school lesson course on some such basis as that proposed in the HERALD two weeks ago, and in addition, the providing of a number of courses for adults who have finished the regular course.

The consulting board, composed of S. A. Burgess, F. M. McDowell, Max Carmichael, Mrs. R. S. Salyards, and Mrs. W. W. Smith, are given full authority in the matter and assured of the financial backing of the Sunday School Department in the expense of launching the proposition.

Those in touch with the situation and understanding the scope and possibilities before this group of people are enthused with the likelihood of securing some exceptionally good texts for school work. Much good work has been done and will be continued. The consulting board met in a session in Independence on the 31st.

Oklahoma Couple Celebrate Golden Wedding

Elder Peter Adamson and wife, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, recently celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. The Tulsa Daily World, of the 27th and 30th, give considerable space to the event, in the Sunday issue devoting three columns to their pictures fifty years ago and to-day, with headlines reading: "Let mother hold the modern family purse strings, but she should think more of darning dad's socks, is advice of Tulsa wife married for fifty years." The interview gives considerable history and includes the sister's views on carrying the family purse, which she has done all these years, and evidently with success. The golden wedding ceremony was held at the Saints' church in Tulsa. She is sixty-six and he is seventy-two.

A Successful Revival Effort in Zion

The Amalgamated Organized Classes of Independence have surely organized their forces and developed a far-reaching campaign. Their advertising included hundreds of window cards in two colors, placed in windows all over Independence, newspaper advertising, and announcements, and billboard advertising on Lexington Street. Then thousands of folders in color on India paper, with a picture each of the Stone Church where the meetings are being held and of Elder D. T. Williams, the speaker, were given to those in attendance. It contained in addition a brief statement as to the origin of the movement and a program of the meetings.

On separate sheets the words of the song, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," were distributed at the services.

The Independence young people out of town were placed on a mailing list and a daily bulletin sent, with a report on the success of the previous meeting, written in personal letter form and discussing in detail the little features that went to make up the program, altogether carrying over the spirit of the meetings into the lives of those not immediately touched.

Accompanying the letter of each day is an outline of the sermon preached, with the subdivisions of the subject enumerated and scriptural citations given for each, so one can if he wishes devote an hour most profitably to a study of the subject.

Elder H. C. Burgess, of Lamoni, managing director of the Department of Music, is in charge of the song service, a half hour being given each evening to this feature.

Revival Interest Continued to Conclusion

Radio from Independence: The young people's revival continued to gain in interest to the end. All seats in upper auditorium and gallery taken at all services by young people. At the eight o'clock prayer service Sunday morning about one thousand people were present. The series closed in the evening with a splendid sermon. Elder Williams has won every heart, while Harold C. Burgess as song leader endeared himself to all. At the closing service the young people stood en masse and pledged: "As a result of these meetings, I have a deeper love for my Lord and Master. I understand the church and her doctrines better and have more faith in the principles of the gospel. I am glad that I am a Latter Day Saint, and I pledge myself before God to try to live a more Christlike life that I may help to redeem Zion and evangelize the world."

Graceland Notes—From Graceland Record

Bishops Benjamin McGuire and James F. Keir were in Lamoni the latter part of last week in the interests of the Presiding Bishopric. Bishop McGuire delivered three lectures on Zion to the religious education class. He spoke at the Brick Church on Sunday morning, outlining some of the policies of the church and the present strides towards the realization of these aims. He spoke among other things of the place that Lamoni will occupy as the educational center of the church and of the future ahead of Graceland.

One of the events of the year that will mark the standard and reputation of Graceland's faculty will be Professor F. M. McDowell's participation in the organization of a junior college at Culver, Indiana. It was upon this subject that Mr. McDowell wrote his thesis for his doctorate, which thesis has been used by the National Commission of Education. It is a thing of no small note that the dean of Graceland's collegiate department should be asked to assist in this work in a distant State. He will be gone for a week or ten days.

We have this week received into our student body a group of six young people representing England, Scotland, and Wales.

They are here for the purpose of studying religious education in order to be better prepared to carry the gospel message to their home countries.

If we were but actuated by the same zeal and desire, Zion would long since have been redeemed.

We welcome you new students, not only as fellow students in Graceland, but as brothers and sisters in the faith, and are confident you will live up to the trust placed in you.

Walter W. Smith, church historian, who is on the lecture board of Graceland, has accepted honorary membership in the Niketes.

Excellent Method of Keeping Members Informed

The Des Moines District has issued a fourteen-page booklet announcing the program for their conventions and conference at Des Moines, Iowa, February 11-13. They have an ambitious program, including not only a commendable list of subjects handled by local talent, but features by Bishop J. F. Keir and Elders O. Salisbury and E. D. Moore. One of the features is a pageant by Margaret Davis, who has written and managed the production of a number of these features in the past. This one is entitled, "The life of Lincoln." In addition to the program of the conference, there is listed complete ministerial and branch reports and an itemized report of the district bishop for 1920—in fact all the financial reports of the year are given, and thus furnish a very convenient and valuable compilation of information.

Young People Sent Greetings by Cable

On the 2d the organized classes of Independence sent a cablegram to President F. M. Smith, extending greetings from the fourteen hundred young people of Zion to him, the missionary force, and the Saints of the British and other missions to whom he might carry their message of good will. A reply cablegram was received later, expressing appreciation of the message and urging that the good work be pushed most vigorously.

The Atonement Discussed at Graceland

Some most excellent outlines were presented and illuminatingly discussed before the class in religious education at Graceland recently in the lectures on "The atonement" by Elder J. F. Garver. Elder Garver has been making a thorough and extensive study of this subject, and though he does not attempt to speak for the church, he is able to throw considerable light on the history and relative merits of this most vital subject.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants

Transcript of sermon by W. W. Smith, at Independence, Missouri, Sunday, October 31, 1920. Reported by Howard W. Harder.

You may read in the fourth chapter of Matthew and the fourth verse that "men shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." You may also read from the third chapter of the second letter of Paul to Timothy, in the sixteenth verse, "And all scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

These two texts will form a basis for what I have to say this morning, which is based upon the thought that revealed religion must in the very nature of the case be perpetually a revealing process. The injunction of the Almighty is as directly laid upon us to receive the revelations of the age in which we live as to profit by the revelations of former days; otherwise, we would deny the very ideal and meaning of revealed religion.

When Jesus Christ came among men he was accosted by the Jews, who said, "We know Moses and the prophets, but this man we know not." And they refused to accept the testimony which he bore concerning his Father in heaven, and his witness of the truth was rejected by them as a nation and rejected by a great many of them individually; but fortunately, however, it was accepted by enough to build the church of Jesus Christ. Paul writing to Timothy said he had the scriptures which his mother Eunice and grandmother Lois had read to him which undoubtedly could have no reference to the New Testament scriptures, which at that very moment were in the process of making. Yet we are very fond of quoting the New Testament, though in the day and age in which it was written, or being revealed, it was even a question among the disciples as to how far and how much of it ought to be accepted.

In our own age and day the gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored. I believe with all my heart, and so do you, that it is true. It is upon this ground that we base the attitude that that which God speaks nowadays is as worth while as that spoken by the Lord in the former days. We have the same inclination, and I suppose we cannot help it, to pay too little attention to that which God is revealing, even though we pay a great deal of attention to and reverently respect that which he has given.

I want to read to you a portion of the revelation given to the church in these last days, being what is in our present Doctrine and Covenants, section 108:11; given on November 3, 1831, usually called the appendix to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In this section 108 we are given these words:

"And for this cause, that men might be made partakers of the glories which were to be revealed, the Lord sent forth the fullness of his gospel, his everlasting covenant, reasoning in plainness and simplicity, to prepare the weak for those things which are coming on the earth; and for the Lord's errand in the day when the weak should confound the wise, and the little one become a strong nation, and two should put their tens of thousands to flight; and by the weak things on the earth, the Lord should thresh the nations by the power of his Spirit. And for this cause these commandments were given; they were commanded to be kept from the world in the day that they were given, but now are to go forth unto all flesh. And this according to the mind and will of the Lord, who ruleth over all flesh; and unto him that repenteth and sanctifieth himself before the Lord, shall be given eternal life. And upon them that hearken not to the voice of the Lord, shall be fulfilled that which was written by the prophet Moses, that they should be cut off from among the people."

This cutting off has reference to severing from the church.

Referring now to what is ordinarily called the preface, because it was the first revelation published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, in paragraph 2 we read:

"Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth; wherefore fear and tremble."

The revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants are not to be taken lightly. They are really due as reverent a consideration as the Jewish scriptures. A goodly portion of the Jewish scriptures are history, or epistles and letters, or the ideas of men expressed either in preaching or otherwise which have been put into the Scriptures because they carried with them the apparent weight of divine authority. I have no word of criticism for the Jewish scriptures, the Old and New Testaments. I believe them; they are the basis of our faith; they are the things that are appointed unto us for our guidance. These revelations that compose the Book of Doctrine and Covenants are not put in by man. They are the revelations of God given to the prophets of the church at various times, upon various occasions, and on various subjects, and they have been deliberately chosen from the body of revealed thought because of the manner in which they were given, to whom they were given, and the things revealed therein. They have been deliberately compiled and published at the command of the Almighty, and by the common consent of the church of Jesus Christ.

Turning to the fifth paragraph of this same first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, we have the following language:

"Behold, I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding; and inasmuch as they erred it might be made known; and inasmuch as they sought wisdom they might be instructed; and inasmuch as they sinned they might be chastened, that they might repent"; and so at considerable length, continuing until well on toward the close of the section or chapter, including the fifth and sixth paragraphs. And then again this admonition is given in paragraphs 7 and 8 of section 1:

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice, or by the voice of my servants, it is the same; for behold and lo, the Lord is God . . ."

Now note this. I want to call especial attention to the last sentence I am about to read:

"And the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever. Amen."

It is upon these last words that I want to lay special stress this morning, and in doing so I shall pass without very much comment directly to section 108 A, which is the minutes of the general assembly of this church, held in August, 1835, to which the revelations contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants up to that time were submitted.

I believe it would be quite a dangerous thing to do to lay down a precedent that this church was to be guided, governed, or directed by the revelations of any one man or any group of men or any class of men, if they were not safeguarded by the witness and testimony of their fellows and the common consent of the people to whom the revelation is given, whether it be to a branch, a district, a stake, or to the general church. I have been under the direction of the general officers of this church for a good many years and I have always followed this rule. I do not now call to mind a single instance in which anything which involved a governmental policy of the church, like the ordination of a man, the choosing of the location for a church building, the purchase of materials, or otherwise—I say I do not now call to mind any time when any branch or district or stake of the church under my ministry has ever done anything without the common consent of the group. No, not even ordained a deacon, and that sometimes is supposed to be a very minor consideration.

The laws that are to govern this church are to be surrounded by this safeguard. This church is not to be governed by the revelations, prophecies, visions, or dreams of its leaders without first securing the common consent of those governed.

I want to read to you what to me in looking over this matter had more than ordinary meaning, meaning larger than I think it had ever had before. Turning back to section 1, I want to read the concluding paragraph. The Lord said:

“For behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever.”

The revelations in this Book of Doctrine and Covenants are not based upon the ipse dixit of any one man. Whether it is Joseph Smith the Martyr, Joseph Smith his son, or Frederick M. Smith, the revelations are only binding to us in the degree and to the extent that we have the witness of the Spirit touching their truthfulness. Note the manner of the testimony of the first Book of Doctrine and Covenants (paragraph 5, section 108 A):

“President W. W. Phelps then read the written testimony of the twelve, as follows: ‘The testimony of the witnesses to the book of the Lord’s commandments, which he gave to his church through Joseph Smith, jr., who was appointed by the voice of the church for this purpose . . .’”

Now note the witness of the twelve apostles of the church in 1835 to the divine authenticity of the revelations that were then being submitted to the general assembly for their approval to become the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of this church, a part and parcel of the constitutional law governing this body just as much as were the revelations given to Moses on the mount, or to Nephi, Alma, or Mormon.

“We therefore feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind, to every creature upon the face of all the earth, and upon the islands of the sea, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God and are profitable for all men, and are verily true. We give this testimony unto the world, the Lord being our helper: and it is through the grace of God, the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, that we are permitted to have this privilege of bearing this testimony unto the world, in the which we rejoice exceedingly, praying the Lord always that the children of men may be profited thereby.”

There have been some remarks made concerning this testimony that I do not think were altogether justified. A similar testimony was written in 1831, that was intended to be signed by all the elders present at the conference when the revelations that I have already read to you, number one, and the appendix, section 108, were given. When these revelations were presented in 1831 in November and were being prepared to be sent up to Missouri to be published in the Book of Commandments, a similar or perhaps the same testimony was drawn up at that time and it was the purpose to have it signed by all the elders present.

If that should in the slightest degree in your minds mitigate against the validity of the witness of this testimony, I wish to say that the men who at that time signified their willingness to sign such a document testifying to the truth of the revelations were, some of them, the same men who composed the Quorum of Twelve in 1835, and there is no reason in the world why they should have changed their testimony during this time, unless God had revealed to them the fact that that to which they were about to testify was not so. If they were willing to testify to the validity of all of the revelations that had been given from the beginning of the church up to November, 1831, it is no strange thing that that testimony should be rewritten, or reprepared, or signed, or testified to in 1835 covering those revelations which were given to the church during the rest of the year 1831, and on up to August, 1835. There is no good and wholesome reason why the Quorum of Twelve should not be willing to testify that God said to them that the revelations received up to 1835 were verily of him, at least those revelations that were prepared in the manuscript which was being submitted to that conference for their approval, even if the elders were willing to testify to the same or similar thing in 1831. In fact it is exactly what might be expected. If God would testify by his Spirit to the truth in 1831, he would do so in 1835.

The committee who prepared the manuscript which was laid before that conference consisted of the following: Joseph Smith, jr., Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams. These four men were to prepare the revelations, selecting such as they considered by prayer and faith would be useful. These men presented their report, and their report is the Kirtland edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, excepting the general assembly minutes, all that is contained in this Book of Doctrine and Covenants to 1835. Then there is appended to their report the minutes of the meeting that accepted these reports.

The book says they organized the various quorums. Bishop Whitney organized the High Council of the church in Kirtland and acting bishop, John Corrill, organized the High Council of the church in Missouri; and presidents Leonard Rich, Levi W. Hancock, Sylvester Smith, and Lyman Sherman organized the council of the seventy; and also John Gould, acting president of the elders quorum, organized the traveling elders; and also Ira Ames, acting president, organized the priests, and so on down. It says in paragraph 4, which I have read to you, that W. W. Phelps read the testimony of the Quorum of Twelve. The Quorum of Twelve were not present at this conference, being on a mission in the East, as also two members of the First Presidency, Joseph Smith and Frederick G. Williams.

“After a hymn was sung, President Cowdery arose and introduced the ‘Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter Day Saints,’ in behalf of the committee: he was followed by President Rigdon, who explained the manner by which they intended to obtain the voice of the assembly for or against said book.”

W. W. Phelps bore record that the book presented to the assembly was true. It must be taken into consideration, that W. W. Phelps was the man who, in Independence, Missouri, published the Book of Commandments; he was the man who was printer for the Book of Commandments.

Following W. W. Phelps, President John Whitmer also bore testimony that the book was true. He, with Oliver Cowdery, had copied the revelations to be brought up in 1831 to Independence to be published in the Evening and Morning Star, a copy of which I have here on the table from which I may read. John Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery copied the revelations in November, 1831. Eleven pages of that copy have been preserved and we have it here to refer to.

Elder John Smith bore testimony of the truth of the book, whereupon the High Council of Kirtland accepted the revelations and acknowledged them as the doctrine and covenants of their faith, by a unanimous vote. The High Council of Missouri likewise accepted and acknowledged the revelations as doctrine, after testimony had been borne to that effect by Elder Levi Jackman.

President W. W. Phelps then read the written testimony of the Twelve, and Bishop N. K. Whitney bore record of the truth of the book; acting bishop, John Corrill, bore record of the truth of the book; acting president, John Gould, gave his testimony in favor of the book; Ira Ames, acting president of the priests, gave his testimony in favor of the book; Erastus Babbit, acting president of the teachers, gave his testimony in favor of the book; William Burgess, acting president of the deacons, bore record of the truth of the book: each one by a unanimous vote accepting and acknowledging it as the doctrine and covenants of their faith. "The venerable president, Thomas Gates, then bore record of the truth of the book, and with his five silver-headed assistants, and the whole congregation, accepted and acknowledged it as the doctrine and covenants of their faith, by a unanimous vote. The several authorities, and the general assembly, by a unanimous vote, accepted the labors of the committee."

I have been thus long and perhaps tedious in reading to you the witness of these people to show you that the testimony of the Spirit promised by the Lord has abundantly been verified, and not upon a mere statement of belief was the Book of Doctrine and Covenants accepted, but it came into being as the direct revelation of the mind of God, and its manner of acceptance is history.

Referring to John Whitmer's manuscript history of the church, he said that up to the time he was appointed (during 1831), Oliver Cowdery had kept the copies of the revelations given to the church. These copies were kept at Kirtland, and in 1831 when it was proposed to publish these revelations in Missouri, Oliver Cowdery and John Whitmer made copies of these revelations to bring to Missouri for publication.

You will read in volume 5 of the Times and Seasons of the revelations being prepared and reviewed and copied, preparatory to their being taken to Missouri to be published, W. W. Phelps assisted in reviewing. In this same statement these men say it was very, very important that the work should be correct; and you will find on page 512, volume 5, of the Times and Seasons, that this Book of Commandments was "the foundation of the church in these last days and a benefit to the world, and that the church should learn by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Therefore, these men proceeded to make copies of these revelations and they brought them up to Independence, then called Zion, to be published, some of them in The Evening and Morning Star, and some of them subsequently to be published in the Book of Commandments, three thousand copies of which were to be published by W. W. Phelps and Company in Independence, Missouri.

I will read a brief announcement from The Evening and Morning Star. I do this for two reasons: first, it is better to read such an item from original sources, and second, it throws light on the situation involved. Volume 1, number 12, of The Evening and Morning Star is a copy published at Independence, in the month of May, 1833:

"Having given in a previous number, the preface to the Book of Commandments now in press, we give below, the close, or as it has been called, the appendix. It affords us joy to lay before the Saints an article fraught with so much heavenly intelligence; having previously published many from the same book for their instructions."

Passing over the second and third paragraphs, which are not numbered, I come to the last paragraph, which reads:

"The book from which this important revelation is taken will be published in the course of the present year at from 25 to 50 cents a copy. We regret that in consequence of circumstances not within our control this book will not be offered to our brethren as soon as was anticipated. We beg their forbearance and solicit an interest in their prayers, promising to use our exertions with all our means to accomplish the work."

I am thus particular to read more than I would ordinarily do to show you that in 1833 in the month of May the Book of Commandments was in press, that sometime during the year they expected to have it finished. Turning to the history of the church, we are there informed by the testimony of these men that on July 20, 1833—the month of May had elapsed, the month of June had elapsed, and twenty days in July—an infuriated mob wrecked the printing press, printing office, and house of W. W. Phelps and Company, tore down the house, threw the printing press out into the street, and pried the type. At that time a number of sheets, proof sheets, had been struck off of the forms already set up from the Book of Commandments, and these sheets were gathered up and preserved by some of the Saints; and the printing up to July 20, 1833, had reached section 64 of our present Book of Doctrine and Covenants; or in other words had reached the revelation given to the elders of the church at Kirtland, Ohio, September, 1831, and had ended on page 160 in the Book of Commandments, which is as far as any Book of Commandments goes, and it ends in the middle of a sentence after the words, "the blood of Ephraim." Turning to paragraph 7, section 64 in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, you will find the rest of this clause. The little book was being published in what is called 32mo, meaning that each form would be folded 16 times, making 32 pages. Proofs for five of these had been struck off, which made just 160 pages, and there the Book of Commandments ended—five times 32, the number of pages in each one of the folds, made just 160 pages. That is the end of the publication of the Book of Commandments over which there has been so much said, and so poorly said, that there still remains a lot more to be said, which is one reason I am speaking on this subject to-day.

Now, reverting to what I was saying before: section 108, which was to be the appendix, was being set up and gotten into form in which it could be put into this little book, which was to be a little pocket edition. It was the purpose of these men to put it into the book. Some people have insisted that the Book of Commandments was finished and delivered. David Whitmer is one of these. He was mistaken. First of all, he was not there, and secondarily, he did not know as much about it as he thought he did. Certainly he did not say anything about it until long afterwards, but his brother John does tell us what the facts are, and he ought to know as he helped do the work on it.

Perhaps that will relieve the situation. I have told you about the Book of Commandments, how much of it was published, how it happened that some twelve copies have been discovered. We know where eleven of these copies are and it is possible that the church in Utah has one, which would account for all twelve.

I intimated a moment ago that there was so much said and so poorly said about this Book of Commandments that there was still room for more to be said. And I want to say a word concerning the so-called enormous discrepancy between the revelations as published in the Book of Commandments and the revelations as published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

First of all, let me call your attention to the fact that Oliver Cowdery was one of those who assisted in preparing the manuscript, that is to say, he helped his brethren, John Whitmer and W. W. Phelps, to copy and review (proof read, probably) these manuscripts before they were taken up to Zion. He was on the committee that prepared the manuscript for the printer for the Kirtland edition. Be it remembered that W. W. Phelps was the printer and he assisted in publishing the Book of Covenants. Let it further be remembered that John Whitmer was the other member of this committee of three who prepared the manuscript for publication and proof read it when it was published in Missouri and he also bears his testimony.

I have here an edition of The Evening and Morning Star reprinted at Kirtland, beginning, if I am not mistaken, with January, 1834. The imprint on this reprint is Frederick G. Williams and Company. The "company" included W. W. Phelps. On page 16 of this reprinted copy are the following words signed by Oliver Cowdery, set as other quotations were: "On the revelations, we merely say, that we were not a little surprised to find the previous print so different from the original." Remember this was January, 1835, before the Book of Covenants was published.

"We have given them a careful comparison, assisted by individuals whose known integrity and ability is unexcusable. Thus saying, we cast no reflections upon those who were intrusted with the responsibility of publishing them in Missouri, as our own labors were included in that important service to the church, and it was our unceasing endeavor to have them correspond with the copy furnished us. We believe they are now correct. If not in every word, at least in principle. For the special good of the church, we have also added a few items from other revelations."

There is no pretense at all that additions were not made. The revelations are different, and Oliver Cowdery said they had been unceasing in their care to have them correct. He made the first copies and did the best he could. He says he is casting no aspersions or criticisms on those who made the first publication, and be it far from me to do anything of the sort. I quite believe that Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, and W. W. Phelps did the best they could. Printing in those days was a very precarious proposition, and it certainly does not become us to cast aspersions on Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, W. W. Phelps, Joseph Smith, jr., Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams, who printed the revelations, by assuming that they did not do a good job in the publication.

One of the most vital changes made in these revelations is made in section 17. Note that word "changes." I wish I could hand this bound file of the Star around to let you all see it. On page 2 of the reprinted Star, articles and covenants of the church (which in the Kirtland edition was Article 2, and in our Book of Doctrine and Covenants is the famous section 17), you will find this heading: "Articles and covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ, with a few items from other revelations." Why, people have acted as though they thought Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery had changed the whole idea of the church! Take your Doctrine and Covenants and turn to section 17. Paragraphs 16 and 17 of section 17 were not in section 17 as published in The Evening and Morning Star at Independence. Nor was it in the proofs we have of the Book of Commandments that they were printing or setting up, which was pied and destroyed in 1833. Paragraphs 16 and 17 were the items which Oliver Cowdery said had been taken from other revelations and added.

Another place where we have some criticism is section 42, called the Church Articles. If you will turn to your Doctrine and Covenants, the 42d section, you will find the following heading: "Revelation given February, 1831." Now, as a matter of fact, that revelation was given, a portion of it, on February 9, during the sitting of the first General Conference of the church, held at Kirtland, Ohio; and the second half, from paragraph 21 on, was given on the 23d day of February, 1831, some fourteen days after the first part.

The reason for the difficulty is the fragmentary way in which the revelation was first published as well as the errors in transcribing it for publication in Missouri. Section 42 in the Doctrine and Covenants was called the Church Articles and starts out: "Hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together in my name." You will find it in The Evening and Morning Star for July, 1832, page 1. Paragraphs one, two, and three are not printed there. In the Book of Commandments you will find these paragraphs in their place. It is chapter 44 in this book. In The Evening and Morning Star it starts with paragraph four and goes down to paragraph nineteen as paragraphed in the Doctrine and Covenants. From paragraph 20 on, was published in Evening and Morning Star for October, 1832, page 2, and as chapter 47 in the Book of Commandments. The way it was published in the Book of Commandments, paragraph 20 was the closing item. Who made the transposition? I suppose the committee made it. They said in this report they had arranged these items from various revelations.

Let me read you an item of explanation. On page 46 of the reprinted Star of March, 1835, Oliver Cowdery had a few remarks on the revelations as follows: "Those who read this paper will see that it contains items of covenants of deep interest to the church of the Saints, and as they have frequently been ridiculed in consequence of certain items contained in the one setting forth their faith on the subject of bestowing temporal gifts for the benefit of the poor, it is a matter of joy to us to be able to present this document according to the original. We hope the Saints may profit by every word proceeding from the mouth of the Lord." Oliver Cowdery said in March, 1835, that this section 42 had been compared with the original and it is printed here almost verbatim as it is in the Doctrine and Covenants. In John Whitmer's manuscript history of the church, the item shows that, "To-day Brother Joseph received the following revelation": and section 42 appears there with only three minor differences. In only three sentences are there any differences. How they made the mistakes in it when copying it to bring up to Missouri I do not know, but the brethren made their apologies for making the mistakes, and I accept them, also their corrected publication of the revelations.

In The Messenger and Advocate for March, 1836, volume 2, page 287, you will find the valedictory address of John Whitmer, signed by him and appearing in that paper, in which he turns over the work of editing to Oliver Cowdery once more.

"It may not be amiss in this place, to give a statement to the world concerning the work of the Lord, as I have been a member of this church of Latter Day Saints from its beginning; to say that the Book of Mormon is a revelation from God, I have no hesitancy; but with all confidence have signed my name to it as such; and I hope that my patrons will indulge me in speaking freely on this subject as I am about leaving the editorial department—therefore, I desire to testify to all that will come to the knowledge of this address; that I have most assuredly seen the plates from whence the Book of Mormon is translated, and that I have handled these plates, and know of a surety that Joseph Smith, jr., has translated the Book of Mormon by the gift and power of God. . . . I would do injustice to my own feelings, if I did not here notice, still further the work of the Lord in these last days: [Remember this was published in the March number, 1836, while the Book of Covenants was distributed in September, 1835]. The revelations and commandments given to us are in my estimation equally true with the Book of Mormon and equally necessary for salvation. It is necessary to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God: and I know that the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints contain the revealed will of heaven."

Now if after he was expelled from the church and remained separate from the church for many years he became blue and discouraged and sour, and recollected that a terrible mistake was made in publishing them in the Book of Covenants and that the Book of Commandments was correct after all, I really do not think that his testimony at the time when he was alive in the church and the work was fresh in his memory should be discarded for his later statements.

Just a word more: I am going to read you paragraph 8 of section 83, though it may be a little tedious:

"And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay."

This is God's own testimony to the imperishable meaning of the revelation given to this church and testified to by all the men while under the influence of the Spirit of God, that they are the words of God and proceeding from the mouth of God and binding for salvation upon every man. The wonder is some men have as much light as they have. The way they have disregarded the Book of Mormon is nothing short of sacrilege, and the way they are treating the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is not one whit better.

We read in section 126:10 that the Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church is to guide the advice and action of the Bishop, each revelation contained therein having its proper bearing. In section 129:8 we read that the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion shall be redeemed unless we accept the revelations given to the church. We have not received any too much of the blessings of God in this church. We have longed and prayed and labored most ardently to get close to the kingdom of God. Why the Saints haven't gotten any closer is because the fundamental constitution of this church has been too often disregarded. "But," some will say, "I have no confidence in the Book of Covenants, as it has been changed so many times that we do not know when it is going to be changed again." That argument is answered by what I have read here this morning. These men who copied and compiled the revelations made the mistakes and they very manfully acknowledged those mistakes, and corrected the revelations to correspond with the originals, and I believe them and recommend them to your consideration.

"China presents the biggest commercial, social, and economic problem in the world," Doctor E. R. Fulkerson, former American vice consul in Japan, asserts. China has one fourth the population of the earth, yet has become a democracy and turned its back on past religions, and it is ready to be molded. To meet this need, nominal Christianity is not sufficient. The European war was between so-called Christian nations. The result is critical. We must have real Christianity. The situation in America is that church members are forsaking the church for the pleasure of the motor car. Doctor Fulkerson urges there is needed a new evangel, a new declaration of old truths, and that China is a field ready to learn of Jesus and of the path of sacrifice and service.

The Book of Mormon in Our Church Program

By Max Carmichael

The author discusses the prevailing relative uses of the three standard books of the church and the reasons therefor, with the idea of throwing emphasis upon future use of the Book of Mormon.

An analysis of the use of the three standard books of the church in any one pulpit for a year will doubtlessly reveal the fact that the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants are both used far more for purposes of obtaining texts and supporting statements than the Book of Mormon. Our Sunday school administrators and Quarterly editors have seemingly studiously avoided the use of the Book of Mormon in the teaching of our youth. This has not been solely because the Religion has been emphasizing the book. There have been other motives than that. Perhaps the greatest has been the missionary aspect of the new schools.

These two facts bring to the front several interesting questions. Is the Book of Mormon receiving its proper emphasis? Are our local ministers, our Sunday school editors and teachers unaware of its content and of its proper use? Just what is the function of the Book of Mormon in our gospel program? Is its function destined to grow or diminish in importance?

One may readily understand why the local ministers might favor the use of the Doctrine and Covenants in the local pulpit. The Saints having been taught the first principles, must "now go on unto perfection." The Doctrine and Covenants contains instruction especially applicable to our present day and to our present church problems. It fills in where the Bible and the Book of Mormon are brief, and hence is of much service to the converted in bringing about the solution of our internal problems.

Why Not More Book of Mormon in the Pulpit?

But why should the Bible be used more than the Book of Mormon in the local pulpit? The priority of authority which we have assigned the Bible cannot explain it, as the two books in no way disagree. No doubt the Bible is the better literature, both in variety of style and in richness of form. The stories in the Book of Mormon are more chronological in nature, and they lack the unity and the dramatic and human appeal that those of the Bible have. But even this statement is subject to scrutiny. The writer is not sure, having recently looked over the Book of Mormon with this object in mind, but that many stories could be found in that book, which, with a little adaptation as must also be done with the Biblical stories, would make splendid content material for our beginner and primary Quarterlies. What a splendid contribution a book entitled, Book of Mormon Stories for Children, would be to our literature. But to return to its use in the local pulpit, literary values are not necessarily religious values. Variety of style and of form do not necessarily mean richness of religious content. In matters of religious and doctrinal content and in plainness of word the Book of Mormon excels the Bible. For this reason it could well have an equal place with the Bible in the Latter Day Saint pulpit.

Book of Mormon Answers Theological Questions

Laying aside for the purposes of this article the statement of the purposes of the book in its preface, we could conceive that the Book of Mormon was sent to the world for three distinct reasons. The first reason is found in a criticism which may be offered against the book. It may be said that Joseph Smith attempted to answer and solve in the Book of Mormon all the then existing theological differences of opinion. To us this is a distinct reason for its appearance. We believe the Book of Mormon came to make plain those things upon which the Bible is not plain. For instance, the Book of Mormon makes clear any doubt as to the proper view of infant baptism, as to the proper mode of baptism, and clarifies the theory of the atonement.

We have often noticed that the missionaries in the days of Joseph the Martyr seemed to present the Book of Mormon almost as the first feature of our gospel to the outsider in the attempt to convert him; more so than is done to-day by our present missionaries. Most likely this particular feature of the Book of Mormon, namely that it answered so many of the religious questions troubling the people at that time, is one feature that made the Book of Mormon have its appeal, and which made its use such an essential part of the process of proselyting.

Different Problems To-Day

The religious world to-day, however, is not interested in the same religious problems that it was a hundred years ago. Unable to solve these problems, it has begun to say that these questions are not important, and that it makes no difference which way you believe concerning these questions, as we are all seeking the same goal anyway. To the modern religionist thoroughly imbued with this idea, this first feature of the Book of Mormon would not have its appeal. As he is not particularly concerning himself with the question whether infant baptism is the correct idea or not, and as he has relegated this question to the plane of nonessentiality, we cannot so readily induce him to read the book for these purposes.

Before leaving this first purpose for the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, we want to say that we are looking forward to the time when the rest of the book shall come forth as has been promised, for no doubt again it will make plain just at the right time many of the newer questions which will then be perplexing us as a people, and perplexing the world. That it should be this way is no doubt a part of the handiwork of God. It is only after we have striven to solve these problems by our own natural growing thought processes, and being unable to fully solve them we are in a mood and in a position to receive light from God, that God will reveal himself.

We have often wondered why God does not reveal the answer to these problems ahead of time, and save all this seemingly unnecessary worry. But are we sure that our intellects would be attuned to the hearing of his word unless we had for many, many days ahead of time been thinking upon the very problems upon which we want light? No doubt when the day for the coming forth of the remaining portion of the Book of Mormon shall come, we shall find a very distinct purpose for the revelation.

God's Purpose Concerning the Indian

The second purpose for the coming forth of the Book of Mormon under the instrumentality of Joseph Smith was and is to prove that God was concerned with the Indian, and with the Western Hemisphere, and to give us God's dealings with the Indian. This feature of the book makes it a valuable asset in proselyting the Indian. No doubt the book will be the chief instrumentality in converting the Indian. One of the Twelve in one of his letters to the editors of the HERALD spoke of this advantage of the book in converting the Indian and said that the secular world realized the advantage which the book gave. The recognition of this advantage will cause the book to come under considerable fire. Also, the book prophesies that the Indian will have a distinct part in the redemption of Zion. This may not imply any more than the

THE LANDING OF THE SAXONS

[The following article by Luke Pearce appears in The Banner of Israel, for October 13, 1920, which is the official organ of the British Israel World Federation. We have read several articles of late attempting to show that England represents the ten lost tribes. Also that most of the patriarchal blessings appear to lay the lineage of those of English and also Scandinavian descent in Ephraim. This offers also a different attempt to explain the second chapter of Daniel. Without attempting to approve or comment further we reprint for the benefit of our readers.—EDITORS.]

"His providence unfolds the book,
And makes his counsels shine;
Each opening leaf, and every stroke,
Fulfills some deep design."

What an historically interesting county Kent is; how important in its relation to the country; and especially as regards British-Israelism! It was here our ancestors landed in large numbers from time to time.

Anterior to the Christian religion, the inhabitants of Kent were known to have had considerable intercourse with other nations, and Julius Cæsar, who conquered the land and came here B. C. 50, speaks of them as more advanced in agriculture and civilization than in any other part of Britain. But the most important thing that ever happened to the county, or indeed to the country, was the coming of the Saxons, Angles, and Normans, a very brave people, who came by invitations of the Britons to help in the repeated attacks on them by northern tribes.

Who Were the Saxons?

Descendants of the ten tribes who were taken captive to Assyria by Tiglath Pilezer B. C. 739, and afterward by a succeeding king of Assyria, generally supposed to have been Shalmanezzer, but his name is not given in the Biblical record (see Isaiah 20:1).

"In the year that Tartan came into Ashdod (when Sargon the king of Assyria sent him) and fought against Ashdod, and took it." Certain discoveries have revealed the fact that the Bible account is perfectly correct—that it was Sargon who carried away the tribes of Israel left behind by Tiglath conversion of but few of the Indians out of the quarter of a million in the United States, yet the book will have found a wide use in presenting the gospel to the many and the conversion of the few. For this reason the Book of Mormon should have increasing importance attached to it in the training of missionaries.

Proof of Continued Revelation

In fact the Book of Mormon serves more as an instrument of the missionary than of the local pastor. This is emphasized by the third purpose of the book's advent. To every individual the book may serve as a proof of the continued revelation of God's word and will. The testimony of the three witnesses, and of the eight witnesses is not easily reconciled with the alleged erroneousness of the book's claim. That strikes at the vital point in our church creed, the continuance of the revelation of God to man. The book answers this question distinctly in favor of continuance. Granted the Book of Mormon true, the Doctrine and Covenants easily follows. Nor must we forget in this connection the promise which the book itself makes to its inquiring reader.

Pilezer. Inscriptions on his palace walls read: "I besieged, took, and occupied the city of Samaria, and carried away 27,280 persons who dwelt in it." This is conclusive.

Josephus, in the eleventh book of his Jewish History, written about A. D. 93, says: "The entire body of the people of Israel (ten tribes) remained in the country beyond the Euphrates. . . . An immense multitude not to be estimated by numbers." Jerome, in his notes on Hosea, says: "The ten tribes inhabit at this day the cities and mountains of the Medes." They have been traced from place to place round to the Elbe.

How Did They Reach Europe?

Sharon Turner says: "The most probable traditions concur in proving that Europe has been peopled by three streams of population from the East: (1) The Kimmerian or Keltic race; (2) The Scythian, Gothic, and German tribes from whom most of the nations of Continental Europe have descended; (3) The Slavonian and Sarmatian nations who established themselves in Poland, Bohemia, and Russia. Pliny tells us that the Sakai, who settled in Armenia, were named Sacasani, which is simply Sack-Suna, spelled by a person unacquainted with the meaning of the combined words; and the name Sacasena, which they gave to the part of Armenia they occupied, is nearly the same as the word Saxonia. Ptolemy mentions a people sprung from the Sakai by the name of Saxons.

Who Were the Angles?

A branch of the same family. They occupied a country called Anglia, lying between Holstein and Jutland, who took themselves to a seafaring life, and several times struck blows on the Romans, and invaded Britain. When invited by the Britons they took a liking to this country and never returned to their former home. From them we get the name Angle-land or England. These united with the Saxons, thus giving us the name Anglo-Saxons.

The Normans

were another branch of the same family, and became so intermixed with the Saxons as to be undistinguished from them. The battle of Hastings was fought between a pretender and the rightful heir to the English throne, not to win it for Normandy.

The Roman occupation made very little change in the country, in the absence of women; but it was not so with the Anglo-Saxons, as men, women, and children came in thousands at different times. Here follow just a fraction of the numbers who came. With Hengist and Horsa, two of their leaders, came 1,500 men. A general invitation to Saxons followed, and during the year A. D. 450, 5,000 more men came over, exclusive of women and children. In A. D. 452 forty ships brought over another contingent, and so they continued to come.

In 492, Ella, a Saxon general, erected his standard in Sussex and was proclaimed King of Sussex, and also general of the two kingdoms—Sussex and Kent.

It was under Cedric, a great Saxon general, that the Saxons were welded together. To increase their power and influence, 800 vessels brought over another party in 532; and again in 534, 40 more vessels brought another party. This led to Cedric being proclaimed and crowned King of Wessex. He will be remembered as the founder of the Brunswick House, from which Queen Victoria descended, whose influence will long remain on the nation. A larger part of the country was welded together under Egbert, king of the West Saxons, Kent being one of the most important links in the chain. From that time the title King of Kent was dropped, and the government of the county vested in earls and dukes—hence the Duke of Kent, the father of Queen Victoria. The final and complete welding was reserved for King Alfred the Great, the generally acknowledged founder of the English Dynasty, and a truly good man.

Thus, according to Daniel, just when Rome was divided into its ten kingdoms, the iron (Rome) trying to mix with the clay (France), under Charlemagne, we read: "In the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." (Daniel 2: 44.)

The stone cut out without hands (against the entreaty of the Britons) from the mountain (of the Roman Empire) is to fill the whole earth, not necessarily possess the whole world.

It is not a little remarkable that the Israelitish principles of government, manners, and customs bespeak a bond of union and a common origin. Their marriages were very similar; the division of time was the same; the weights and measures were alike; the weeks were of seven days. Easter agrees with the Passover; Whitsuntide with Pentecost; and the Convocation of the Great Witenagemote with the Feast of Tabernacles, etc.

The various prophets predicted many national marks which should distinguish resuscitated Israel in the latter days; and while British history responds to every one of them, no other nation in the world does so or ever did so.

Emerson, describing the "spawning power" of the Anglo-Saxon race occupying the British Islands, says: "It has sufficed to the colonization of great parts of the world; yet it remains to be seen whether they can make good the exodus of millions from Great Britain, amounting in 1852 to more than 1,000 a day." Yes; they have made it good! And it may be said already, that the seed of Jacob possess one half of the earth and rule the world.

THE JEW IN MUSIC

Under the above heading Eugene V. Segal writes in The Jewish World for October 18, published in Great Britain. Richard Wagner is quoted as saying that the Jew is devoid of musical genius and creative imagination. Mr. Segal points out that the Jews of old anticipated contemporary people in their appreciation of music from an emotional and spiritual standpoint. They regarded music as a means of expressing the loftiest elements of the self, by which soul spoke to soul, and man paid tribute to God. In joy, sorrow, praise, and adoration the Jew turned to music. Many of them sang at the escape from Egypt. David soothed the evil spirit of Saul. The Psalms are noteworthy for their lofty themes and poetical qualities, and give indication of an exalted conception of music by the Jews of that time. The Hebrew text of the Psalms is marked with characters to indicate the intonation to be used in the rendering, though these characters unfortunately are not understood to-day.

This passion for melody found vent in the temple, and also in the music of the synagogue.

In modern times the synagogue music has been greatly developed through Leo X through two Jewish musicians at his court in the 16th century. The harpers of Prague, of the same period, were exclusively Jews.

As opposed to Richard Wagner, Sergi Rachmaninoff, the famous pianist, proclaimed the Jews to be the world's finest musicians. He found, as a race, that the Jews in Russia were more musical than any other people. Naphtali Herz Imber, himself an Austrian Jewish poet, also claims the Jews are the best musicians. The reason given is that the Jews have been so widely scattered and have traveled so far:

Among Jewish composers may be noted: Anton Rubinstein, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Offenbach, Rubin Goldmark, Jacques Francois Halevy, Edward Solomon, and Max Bruch.

Among the violinists perhaps the greatest at any time was Leopold Auer, who taught a number of the violinists of to-day—Heifetz, Elman, Powell, Zimbalist, Rosen, Seidel, and others. Of the above all but Powell are also Jews.

Among violinists of the past is Joseph Joachim; also Mitnitsky, Max Bendix, Tosha Seidel, Max Rosen, Soscha Jacobsen, Pilzer, Samuel Gardner, David Hochstein, and Alice Liebmann.

Among the Jewish pianists are to be noted: Leopold Godowsky, Mischa Levitski, Leo Ornstein, Moritz Rosenthal, Fanny Blumfield Ziesler, Mark Hambourg, Emil Sauer, Arthur Rubenstein, Beryl Rubenstein, Lhevinne, Moiseivitch, and others.

Among orchestral leaders is Damrosch, the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He was one time assistant to his father, Leopold Damrosch, as director of the Metropolitan Opera House. He first produced Wagner's "Parsifal" in America, organizing his own opera company. Among other symphony orchestra directors are to be noted Leopold Stokowski, director of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and formerly of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra; Samuel Franko, former conductor of the Metropolitan Orchestra, New York; Alfred Hertz who conducted various orchestras in Germany, the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, and at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Also Nathan Frank and Volpe.

Among musical critics Marc A. Blumberg is one of the foremost. Among vocalists may be noted Alma Glück, Rosa Raisa, Sophia Breslau, Mabel Riegelman, Cantors Sirota, Rosenblatt, Kwartin, Fuchs, etc. In addition Otto Kahn, Adolph Lewisoohn, Oscar Straus, Leo Fall, and Jean Gilbert have been foremost among the patrons of great musicians in this country. There are even a number of Jews who have composed what are sometimes considered American products, namely ragtime music. This would seem to indicate that the Jews have been broadly interested in all departments of music.

THE LOVE THAT IS TO COME

"Whenever wounded have been found they have received all the care that our soldiers have, and our men have carried them on their backs for miles to save the lives of these unfortunates, often risking their own by so doing."—Extract from officer's letter from the Philippines.

When the Colon went down at Santiago a sailor on an American battleship cried out: "Don't cheer, fellows; the poor devils are dying."

Is it not a singular thing that after going to such infinite trouble and expense to kill men we should be at such pains to save their lives as soon as we shall not quite succeed in killing them?

What is the secret of this instinctive prompting which, in the presence of a fallen enemy, mixes a feeling of awe, awe, of pity, with our victorious rejoicings; which makes us somehow humble and ashamed of all that conquering which means another's undoing?

It is that at the center of things, deep down under all our ignorance and vanity and dull, gross selfishness, there dwells a spirit of infinite love, patient, untiring, all-enduring; biding its moment of apparition.

This love is not a philosophical conception of the intellect—child of Platonic dreaming; it is a natural passion. Its quality is singularly that of a love not of individual for individual, nor of individual for community or country, but a love infinitely greater, more profound, than either of these; a love which, finding its full expression, shall one day make the world a beautiful place to live in—a love for humanity as humanity.

There is in us a fellow feeling, a yearning of kindness toward other human beings as human beings, which is not related to the character of those who excite it. It exhibits itself unmistakably in the fireman, with blistered flesh, hair and eyebrows burned to crisp, saving the child from the fire; in the stripling youth leaping into the waves to succor a drowning man, and in the simplest act of courtesy we render to a stranger.

The habitual expression of this love would long since have become universal if all society were not so organized as to extinguish it.

Society as it now exists is unconsciously an organized conspiracy against the sane and logical development of every human soul in it.

It places all the temptations on the side of inhumanity. Society makes it vastly easier to-day to do wrong than to do right.

Most human beings, even soldiers and priests, are doing the best they think they can. And out of the blighting, calculating intellectual darkness in which they serve as consenting instruments of killing or defense of killing, there sometimes shoots a gleam of their higher selves, their broader humanity, the undiscovered, unrecognized thing they are yet to be.

Hence these relentings; this carrying of wounded brown men on backs through impassable morasses; and the hush-word breathed from powder-grimed lips at warship's sinking.

These singular relentings are but glimpses of this indwelling love, yearning to express itself in an exalted human life; they testify to the existence of the higher law ceaselessly at work, slowly, patiently forming from the casual, the habitual; they prove the presence, the involuntary recognition and worship, of the Ideal of Man in each man, the flower of which is Brotherhood.

And some day this love for humanity, this spirit of love in us, will find national expression before the murderous act of war instead of after.

When at last we come to realize that the command, "Thou shalt not kill," means actually that we stop killing, this upspringing godhood in us will impel us to obey it. And in our obeying it a new day will dawn, a glorious day of strifeless progress; and a great all-embracing Peace will breathe upon the world, deep, pure, satisfying to the long-yearning human soul.—Franklin H. Wentworth, in The Appeal to Reason, November 20, 1920.

SIR HERBERT AS ENGINE DRIVER

JERUSALEM, October 5.

Jaffa to-day celebrated the completion of the broad-gauge railway line from Ludd. The high commissioner, dressed in engineer's overalls, drove a train over the track from Ludd to Jaffa. The train halted at the Jewish colony of Tel Aviv, where enthusiastic crowds showered flowers upon the engine. Sir Herbert Samuel was greeted at Jaffa station by General Hoxton, commanding the Fourth Cavalry Division, and by Rear-Admiral West, from H. M. S. Empress of India, which had just arrived at Jaffa. The high commissioner drove the last nail into a rail sleeper, completing the Jaffa-Jerusalem line, the Ludd-Jaffa section of which was torn up by the Turks to make a military road across the desert.

In an address, Sir Herbert said that this was one of the first steps in linking up traffic, and thus facilitating business with Jaffa, which would shortly be one of the largest ports on the Eastern Mediterranean.

Some Requirements for Equality

By Joseph Flory

Some arguments concerning the "something-for-nothing" idea often mentioned in explaining the financial law of the church.

"In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

That God intends that his children shall be equal in the possession and enjoyment of the temporal or material things of earth is most clearly taught in that which he has revealed to the church.

"I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints; that the poor shall be exalted [financially] in that the rich are made low [financially]; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

This clearly outlines what the Lord purposes to do for his Saints—require of the rich to "impart" a share or portion of their wealth to the poor and the needy as required by the law of the gospel.

What or how much does the law of the gospel require of the rich, and what is the process by which it is to be set apart for the poor, and how is it to be administered to them?

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

In Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1 we are taught that the law of tithing requires all of the surplus properties of the Saints to be put into the hands of the Bishop for church purposes (which of course includes the needs of the poor). (Note: We wish to here state that we claim that the terms tithing and consecration are synonymous terms, which we think we have clearly proven in our article in HERALD for April 28, 1920, pages 404, 405.)

From section 42: 8 as above quoted, and section 106 to which we have referred, we learn that we must consecrate and place in the hands of the Bishop that which we have to impart, or all of our surplus properties, as a "beginning of tithing," and "one tenth of our interest or increase annually" which "shall be a standing law forever."

The method of administering to the poor the properties which have been placed in the hands of the Bishop for that purpose as required by the law of consecration or tithing—

call it which you choose—will be by the Bishop given to all the Saints, rich and poor, their inheritances according to section 51: 1, which please read. We here learn that "every man" (whether he had previously been rich or poor) was to receive "equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs"; thus accomplishing just what the Lord said he would do in his own way—according to his law—the law of the celestial kingdom.

One of the reasons why the Lord permitted the Saints to be "cast out of the land of their inheritance," was because there were "lustful and covetous desires among them." Evidently they lusted after and coveted those properties that the law of God required of them for the benefit of the poor. (Section 98: 1-3.)

In 1834 (section 102: 2), the Lord says the reason they were not redeemed even then was because "they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substances as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it needs be, by the things they suffer."

Saints should take warning from the above and see that they teach and practice the principles of the celestial law of the kingdom in perfect harmony with the instructions God has given in reference to that law.

We do not believe that the time has come as yet when that law can be executed and fulfilled. (See section 102: 10.) So far as we have been able to learn from the books, they nowhere teach, either directly or impliedly, that God requires that the poor but faithful and worthy Saints will have to purchase or pay for their inheritances, but that all who have a good standing in the church will be treated alike and be made "equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs." (See section 51: 1.) All are required to comply with the same law, and afterwards receive their inheritances, and no special monetary consideration will be required of those who were poor and who had but little to offer as a consecration according to the law.

While we do not believe that a monetary consideration will be required of the poor in order to entitle them to a right to an inheritance in Zion, we believe that something of much more importance will be required of not only the poor, but of all who come to Zion for an inheritance. They must give satisfactory evidence that they have kept or practiced the principles of the gospel and made themselves worthy of a home and inheritance in Zion. "For this is Zion, the pure in heart." (Section 94: 5.)

We believe the parable of the twelve sons sets the seal to all that we have claimed.

"Therefore, be ye strong henceforth, fear not for the kingdom is yours; and for your salvation I give unto you a commandment, for I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons. . . . And again I say unto you, Let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just, Behold this I have given you as a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4, 5, 6.

Of course judgment and wisdom must be used so that those who are not worthy will not succeed in getting that which they have no right to. In fact, instructions are given in the law in reference to this matter.

"And now, verily I say unto you, That as every elder in this part of the vineyard [Kirtland, Ohio] must give an account of his stewardship unto the bishop in this part of the vineyard, a certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things, for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward and as a faithful laborer; otherwise he shall not be accepted of the bishop in Zion. And now, verily I say unto you, Let every elder who shall give an account unto the bishop of the church, in this part of the vineyard, be recommended by the church, or churches, in which he labors, that he may render himself and his accounts approved in all things." (Section 72: 4.)

This was spoken in reference to the elders, and the next paragraph in the same section gives the same instructions in reference to the members, advising them to take a certificate to the Bishop in Zion.

In Church History, volume 1, pages 305 to 312, we find an epistle entitled, "The elders stationed in Zion to the churches abroad, in love; greeting," in which they comment on the above quotations from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, showing the importance of observing the same, and the disadvantages of not doing so.

By the observance of those instructions there would be little chance for an impostor or unworthy church member to get hold of any church property in the hands of the Bishop of the church.

Please read the whole epistle in Church History above referred to. We will quote several paragraphs of the epistle, in one of which is found the only teachings—that we can call to mind—that even seem to indicate that the poor Saints were expected to purchase or pay for their inheritances:

"One object in writing this epistle is to give some instructions to those who came up to the land of Zion. Through a mistaken idea many of the brethren abroad that had property have given some away, and sacrificed some, they hardly know how. This is not right, nor according to the commandments.

"We would advise in the first place that every disciple, if in his power, pay his just debts, so as to owe no man, and then if he has any property left, let him be careful of it; and he can help the poor by consecrating some for their inheritances; for as yet there has not been enough consecrated to plant the poor in inheritances according to the regulations of the church and the desire of the faithful.

"This might have been done had such as had property been prudent. It seems as though a notion was prevalent in Babylon that the Church of Christ was a common stock concern. This ought not so to be, for it is not the case. When a disciple comes to Zion for an inheritance it is his duty, if he has anything to consecrate to the Lord, for the benefit of the poor and needy, or to purchase lands, to consecrate it according to the law of the Lord, and also according to the law of the land. . . .

"Again, while in the world, it is not the duty of a disciple to exhaust all of his means in bringing the poor to Zion; and this because, if all should do so, there would be nothing to put in the storehouse in Zion, for the purposes which the Lord has commanded.

"Do not think, brethren, by this that we would advise or direct that the poor be neglected in the least; this is not the desire of our hearts; for we are mindful of the word of our Father, which informs us that in his bosom it is decreed that the poor and meek of the earth shall possess it.

"The welfare of the poor has always a place in our hearts; yet we are confident that our experience, even had we nothing else to prompt us to advise on this point, and that wholly for the good of the cause in which we labor, would be sufficient in the minds of our brethren abroad to excuse a plainness on this important part of our subject.

"To see numbers of disciples come to this land destitute of means to procure an inheritance, and much less the necessities of life, awakens a sympathy in our bosoms of no ordinary feeling; and we should do injustice to the Saints were we to remain silent, when, perhaps, a few words by way of advice may be the means of instructing them that hereafter great difficulties may be avoided."

This last paragraph that we have quoted, if taken alone and apart from all else that is written on the subject of getting an inheritance, might be construed to mean that the Saints were expected to purchase their own inheritances if they were able to do so, and at once enter into the possession of their inheritances; while the poor, or those who were not able to thus purchase an inheritance, would have to go without or wait until they could earn the means to pay for their inheritances.

But if we will take notice of what is said in the first three paragraphs we have quoted from the epistle, we will find that there had not enough been consecrated for the poor and needy, so that the church could plant them in their inheritances according to the regulation of the church, and the desire of the faithful. And unquestionably for that reason was the statement made in the last paragraph that we have quoted from the epistle.

The whole tenor or drift of the teachings in Doctrine and Covenants is that the church or the members of the church should contribute moneys for the purpose of purchasing the lands in Zion to be used for inheritances for the Saints, and that when thus purchased and placed at the disposal of the Bishop, he was to divide the heritage of God among his Saints. (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2; 53: 10-12; 57: 1-3; 58: 4; 45: 12.)

The Saints, after the lands had been purchased, were to possess them—hold the title to them—according to the laws of consecration. (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8.) Which law required that these who received an inheritance in Zion should hold the same by deed from the Bishop, the man whom God had appointed for that purpose. (See letter of Joseph Smith to W. W. Phelps, in 1832, as we quoted it in our article in the HERALD for April 28, 1920, pages 404, 405. See also Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.) There is no intimation anywhere that there was any distinction to be made between the rich and the poor who went up to Zion for an inheritance.

It was, however, necessary that all who went up to Zion for an inheritance were to take a certificate of membership and good standing in the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3-5.)

God has pronounced a woe against all, both poor and rich alike, who are not at heart right before him, and willing to comply with the principles of his law.

"Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved! Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold on other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with their own hands!

"But blessed are the poor, who are the pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs; for, behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice; and their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, forever and ever."—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5, 6.

The Mystification of Simplicity

By Wilbur F. Yates

The mysteries of God are easy to understand. It is our human condition alone that makes them mysterious and hard to carry out. The economic plan of the Lord is sure and safe and easy to understand.

Many explanations of simple truths have a tendency to mystify, and the mystery is in our lack of understanding, and not that the simple truth is not understandable. Any gospel truth that dawns upon our minds impresses us with its truth, and then it is plain. Any false thing has so many unexplainable features it never looks so clear.

Human ideas and traditions have taken the place of the most valuable truths down through the years, but at given times the Lord has called reformers to stand out against the same, that his creatures might be blessed with truth. These men are often the scum of the earth in the time they do their work, but monuments and letters of gold mark their memory. Will it be necessary in the future for progression to come to the people of earth in the same way? If so, should we not understand a man's position before we are quick to cast him off? Children oftentimes see deep but simple truths, when older ones do not understand. The reason for this is that seniors yield to temptation; this darkens the mind and thus they develop incorrect ideas of human origin, so that the plain and simple truth is mystified and becomes cloudy.

A story is told of the minister who had attained much of this world's goods by his profession, praying before his little son that the Lord would supply the poor and distressed with food, etc., and when through the little boy reminded him that the abundance of things in the cellar would go a long way to relieve the poor and answer that prayer. This illustrates nicely how plainly the truths of righteousness would dawn upon a mind innocent and clear. We often see such in the minds of children.

The imparting by those who have to those in need is clearly held out in all three of the standard books of the church. Yet there is no truth that seems so hard to explain. The question is: Is it plain or is it complicated? Or do our traditions stand in our way? Customs ages old are hard to get away from, it seems. As we study along the line of thought of the distribution of material things that come to our hands, we come to the statement written in the law, that if we partake of the abundance that the Lord has made and impart not according to the law, we shall with the wicked lift up our eyes in hell. Indeed a serious thought when we are trying to condition ourselves for the celestial glory.

What was the matter with the devoted minister above mentioned, that he felt to ask God to do the thing that God had pleaded for man to do from the beginning? This illustrates the thought of the plainness of truth. The pride of life is the cause of not seeing the truth and will apply to the writer as to all others.

Are we guilty as Saints of building upon the hypothesis that individual life does not consist of the abundance that we possess, the gospel law to the contrary notwithstanding? If so, the time is upon us that we will take our place with the fearful and unbelieving and the Lord may call our servants children to do his work.

Do we feel at times that in some mysterious way the Lord will swoop down and relieve the poor and take them, sins and all, to a place of safety? God's plans are simple, his law of distribution beautiful, but ah! man is yet carnal. It seems to the writer that a large percentage of the books and writings on this vital subject places the realization of these things so far in the misty future that people seem to think that it will take the evolution of years to attain it, notwithstanding we are told that we might have attained our redemption in the thirties if we had put into operation the plan. The poor man who has his eyes upon the property of the well-to-do is just as much in the mud as the well-to-do is in the mire; the mere turning over of property will never put love and charity into the heart of the giver, neither would the insisting on the part of the poor for the rich to give, be a sign that the poor had attained the high standard (that of love).

It is quite clear that love will relieve the whole situation according to the degree we have of it. Surely it is plain that a poor man who had love in his heart would enter into a gospel stewardship cheerfully with the one desire to give his all for the gospel of deliverance, and for his fellows, while he had perhaps worked in an individual way; now in the collective way his efforts are to affect many. His charity will be the dominant force of constant diligence. And the man with means would also enlist his all that his brother too might enjoy. The simple truth is that his love would draw or determine the line of equality; if he loved God he would love man also.

To make these steps by the two classes mentioned, will it require a sacrifice on their part? That depends on how many human traditions are in the road.

If love is there, it will be a happy privilege; if the pride of life is within, it will be, Well—I—I love—the—work—but—but, etc. And if it should be the latter, here is where the big sacrifice will come in, for will they not sacrifice the celestial glory if our books read right? According to the way that the gospel measures right, the sacrifice will be as great for the poor as it is for the rich to carry into effect God's plan.

The Lord's statement to the widow who gave her pittance stands out as a plain but simple measure of justice. I know that the myst idea goes something like this: So and So gave an abundance, therefore they are entitled to a little more abundance; or in other words, a little inequality would be justifiable, or because of their culture they require a better place, etc., and thus has man ever tried to drag in the old mysterious thing they have named "right," until peace has fled and happiness has hid her face. What is to be done? Are the poor dependent upon the rich? or vice versa? Verily, no; those who will love each other of either class will have the advantage of the world. And the things that the human heart has always longed for will be so apparent that the righteous of earth will seek their environment; the operation of love will certainly accomplish the work. How plain and simple are the operations of right.

A father does not reluctantly purchase the little garments that clothe his babies. Why? Because love is there. Then what will this same attribute do when it is dealing with the high orders of the church?

The mysteries of the kingdom have become so, we fear, because man has willed it to be so. The expressing of love will be the key that will unlock the mystery chambers. Then man will learn that the hidden mysteries were lodged just back of that mote in the eye, and perhaps one side of the brain, and I am hoping that the beam in the writer's eye will not be so large that he might not see so clearly, enough help at least to remove from the eye of his brethren the mote. "Thou hypocrite" is the title that is attached to the man who is ready to say what the other fellow is to do, forgetting his own "doing"; but "not only say but do" is the name of the one who ever did or ever will teach to any great extent.

Textiles: How to Know, Buy, and Use Them

CARE AND REPAIR OF CLOTHES

Fortunately for most of us there has come a halt in the whirlwind craze for spending. Most of us are saving for the proverbial "rainy day." And in no part of the plan of economizing can there be found a better place to save than in caring for and repairing our clothes.

Would that all of us could realize the saving in such daily repairing as sewing on buttons, catching up a broken thread, the darning of tiny holes, or the cleaning of freshly soiled spots. The small repair saves more than its proportion of time in later work and at the same time keeps the garment in a much more presentable condition.

There is no excuse for anyone not being able to do the daily repair work before mentioned, but if a woman can add to her accomplishments a skill in pressing her own clothes or those of the household, she will again have an added means of prolonging the life of the garment as well as of increasing her bank account. The complete cleaning and pressing of a large garment better be left to the professional in most cases, but the daily or weekly attention of this sort can just as well be carried on at home.

Before pressing, all soiled spots must be removed. Woolen goods can be cleaned by washing in warm water with soap solution. Soap solution may be made by simmering one cake of soap to two cups of water. Pour the solution into lukewarm water in which the goods is to be washed. Wash and rinse in the same warm temperature to avoid shrinking. When the goods is nearly dry, press on the wrong side or with a damp thin cloth on the right.

Should soap and water not remove stains or should the material be one to which soap and water cannot be applied, then the cause of the stain must be determined and a remedy for that special cause be used.

A few of the most familiar stains may be treated as follows:

Grease spots. Use a solvent for the fat of the grease spot. Gasoline, alcohol, or chloroform are the most common ones. To apply, place a blotting paper under the spot. Apply the solvent to the wrong side of the material, rubbing from the outside toward the center, using a piece of the same or similar material of the same color. Sometimes just a warm iron used on blotting paper over the spot helps by drawing out the grease.

Vaseline. Soak vaseline spots in kerosene before using soap and water or a solvent as for grease spots.

Coffee and tea. Ordinarily tea and coffee stains can be removed by dashing boiling water over them from a height. If the stain be old, a bleaching agent may be needed. Hydrogen peroxide may be rubbed into the spot and followed by ammonia. Follow this by acetic acid and last with water.

Fruit stains. Except peach stains boiling water will usually remove fruit stains. A general rule is to use hot water for colors held in sugary solution and cold water for those of an unknown nature.

Iron rust. Either tomato or lemon juice and salt applied to the spot and the material hung in the sunshine will prove to be the only remedy needed.

Mildews. Strong soap solution and sunlight is usually sufficient for freshly formed mildew spots, but for those of long standing a good bleaching agent is needed. With colored goods the bleaching agent is omitted and ammonia followed by acetic acid may be used or a paste of powdered chalk rubbed into the fabric and exposed to sunlight.

Blood. Use cool water, followed by washing in lukewarm, soapy water or rub starch into the spot which has been moistened with cool water. Brush out the starch when dry and repeat if necessary.

Ink. Because the composition of ink is unknown usually, it is difficult to determine the best treatment for ink stains. Should the following fail, try some of the patent preparations found at the drug stores: Sour milk or several soakings in sweet milk may cause the stain to disappear. Then wash in soapy water to remove the grease. If this treatment fails try lemon juice, cornstarch, and salt. Sometimes Javella water is a very successful material to use. Repeat its use, if necessary, washing and rinsing after each using.

Scorch. Hang the scorched garment in the sunshine with the scorched spot exposed.

Paint. Soak the spot in turpentine. Then wash in soapy water. Repeat if necessary.

Perspiration. There are no very satisfactory cleansing agents for nonwashable materials. A number of deodorizing preparations are on the market, but most of them have bleaching qualities and frequently are not to be used on woolsens because they eat them. Many people apply a perspiration preventive especially to the armpits, but care must be exercised in selecting such preparations for some are said to contain harmful ingredients.

Wash silk stockings frequently to prevent rotting by perspiration. Use a fine soap or soap flakes preparation and lukewarm water.

Georgette materials must be washed very carefully by squeezing rather than rubbing in soapy water; then rinse, and iron before they dry. Dry-clean in gasoline or benzine wherever possible.

All materials calling for soap in cleansing require any good white soap, if of wash material. Otherwise a soap like ivory or lux flakes should be used and directions followed carefully.

Girls' Clothing Conferences

Recent news items this fall and winter have conveyed the information that some of our colleges and universities are attempting to instruct the girls and young women in attendance upon the principles of correct dress. In November a clothing conference was held in Manhattan, Kansas, at the State Agricultural College at which a score or more of lessons along this line were impressed upon the 350 northern Kansas high school girls who attended.

Aggie coeds acted as living models upon whom the lessons of stylish, comfortable, and healthful clothing were demonstrated to the visiting high school girls. Fewer frills and more freedom, and the abandonment of party dresses for classroom wear, were two of the lessons included in the program.

Similar conferences were held in other parts of that State, as well as other ones. Mothers cannot do better than to bring to bear upon the question of their daughters' dress, all the wisdom with which they are naturally endowed, coupled with all the knowledge and good taste to be obtained from a close acquaintance with the principles of health, modesty, and propriety involved.

In the Temple Builders Book and in the programs outlined in the Parthenon for the study and work of young women, the question of good taste in dress has been taken up, with the hope that our Latter Day Saint girls may avoid the extremes to which fashion and an apparent ignorance of correct judgment invite them.

A. A.

William Jennings Bryan is quoted in the Intercollegiate News Service to the effect that the closing of saloons is sending many young people to college. Five years ago less than ten per cent of all the pupils in the common grades entered high school, and not over two per cent went to college. The number now is greatly increasing. A remedy Mr. Bryan suggested is the development of junior colleges, established separately or in connection with existing high schools.

Special Circular to Pupils

[A copy of the following circular was placed one morning upon the desk of each pupil in the high school of one of our large cities. The hints contained are peculiarly in harmony with what is presented this week in Sister Mader's series on textiles.—A. A.]

The committee on clothing conservation has placed a circular on each student's desk this morning. We are asking that you read it with care and resolve to conserve your clothing.

Conservation of clothing means the elimination of waste, the avoidance of all superfluous articles of clothing. It means preserving clothing by proper care to make it more enduring. It means a saving of all fibers for future use.

It is not a spasmodic movement for a time of need only. It does not mean denying oneself of necessary clothing. It means standing for a principle, by means of careful planning and much thrift. Conservation is educating oneself for efficient service. It is standing for correct clothes which will result in gain to society. It demands the education of the young for right standards of living.

A. Hints for Girls: Dyeing, Laundering, Pressing, and Dry-Cleaning

1. Conserve by dyeing materials and remodeling them.
2. Clean and mend your own gloves.
3. Air clothes before putting them away.
4. Launder hose soon after removing them.
5. Wash own ties and jabots.
6. Wear colored middies and save laundry bills.
7. Keep clothes clean and pressed. They will last longer and look nicer.
8. Do up your own georgette crepe waists.
9. Wear fewer white waists to school.
10. Wear plain waists and dresses to school.

Avoid Wearing

1. Big or conspicuous hats.
2. Fussy neckwear.
3. Extreme fashions.
4. Materials that tear easily.
5. Cheap shoes.
6. Flowers.
7. Perfume and powder.
8. Cheap ready-made garments.
9. Low shoes and thin hose in winter.
10. White petticoats with dark dresses.

B. Remodeling and Mending

1. Darn your hose.
2. Mend your clothes as soon as they tear.
3. When dresses are worn, take the best parts of two dresses and make one dress of the two.
4. Petticoats can be made from gingham and silk dresses.
5. Put new lace on old petticoats.
6. Put new flounces on old petticoats.
7. Turn dress skirts to make them wear longer.
8. Make dresses and skirts for children from adult's worn garments.
9. Keep all buttons and hooks and eyes sewed on carefully.
10. Add new cuffs, collars, and yokes to garments.
11. Collar and cuff sets can be made from the best parts of old waists, ribbons, etc.
12. If you have a last year's hat, retrim it and wear it to school. If possible, make and trim your own hats.
13. Waists and work aprons can be made from your father's worn shirts.
14. Wear tailored suits. They are always in style.
15. Wear a barett to school instead of hair ribbons.
16. Buy good materials. The best is cheapest in the end.
17. Have fewer school dresses.
18. Make a party dress last two years.
19. Keep clothes in repair.

20. Do not wear your school dresses mornings and evenings at home. Slip on a house dress or a bungalow apron.
21. Do not buy a new dress just because you are tired of an old one.
22. Buy fewer trimmings.
23. Make camisoles from worn fancy waists.
24. Make part of your own clothes. Homemade garments cost one half as much and wear twice as long as factory-made garments.

Hints for the Boys

1. Do you own shopping.
2. Wear soft wash ties and soft collars to school to save laundry bills.
3. Don't wear silk sox nor carry silk handkerchiefs to school.
4. Be just a little more careful and take just a little better care of all your clothes in general now than you have in the past.
5. Have fewer suits. You will need less if you take care of those you have.
 - a. Press your own pants and neckties.
 - b. Hang your coat on a hanger to keep it from wrinkling.
 - c. Wear your cadet suit on drill days to save your civilian clothes and give mother a chance to mend them.
6. Have your shoes half-soled and wear them longer. Keep them clean and nicely polished. The leather wears better. Use trees to preserve the shape.
7. Keep your hat well brushed. It wears longer.
8. Avoid cheap jewelry.

The editors of Graceland Record are making an extended plea for a gymnasium for Graceland. Since the community does not provide a place adequate for such activities, so necessary to young people, they have a real basis for a movement to this end. What they start out unitedly to get usually becomes a reality in due time.

According to a letter from Samuel M. Long, of Luther, Michigan, the branch at that place is still in a good condition, even though quite a number have moved away during the past and some are not truly alive to their opportunities.

Brother and Sister Abraham Miller, of Port Arthur, Ontario, request prayers for their child Edna, who has been severely burned. There is no elder nearer than four hundred miles.

Subcommissioner R. C. Copeland, of New York, recently issued a warning against smokers, who overindulge in tobacco, who do so at the wrong time and in the wrong places, who indulge in the after-dinner cigar at restaurants in a way unfair to nonsmokers. There are two objections—the injury to health, and the discourtesy to others. Naturally these two objections continued, tend to hasten the day for more severe laws concerning its use and consumption.

God's call to service implies his loving expectation of an enthusiastic response. There are those who believe his word and do his works, but who in the doing never quite allow themselves to be thoroughly stirred to the utmost. When Paul urges Timothy to "stir up the gift of God which is in thee," his rousing call, translated literally from the Greek as given in the margin, is "stir into flame." In the light of this translation, one Christian worker asks: "How many of us remind others of flame in our enthusiasm for Christ? Or are we mostly embers that need fanning, and then only come to a dull glow?" Flaming Christians are greatly needed in the chill and passivity and subdued glow of many a church and Sunday school. And how quickly the church, the Sunday school, and the community are kindled wherever even a single Christian has stirred into flame the gift of God which is in him!—Sunday School Times.

Church Work in Germany

By T. W. Williams

The branches of Germany have been visited and encouraged and in some instances re-organized. The Saints have been faithful in the midst of great adversity.

Latter Day Saints in one country should be interested in the progress of the work in all countries. It may be a little difficult at first but we must come to recognize the church as international.

As we said in reference to England, so we say of Germany. There are no German Saints. We have quite a number of Saints in Germany, however. It is the same with the church. The church of Jesus Christ is not an American church. It is no more American than it is German or French or English.

We have the church in America. We also have the church in Australia. We have the church in Germany. True, the general officers of the church are located in America, but they are just as much related to that part of the church which is in Germany as they are with that part which is in America. Again, let me say the Church of Jesus Christ is international. It is not confined to any people, to any class, or to any age.

We have six local churches in Germany, and one in Poland. Inasmuch as the Saints in Germany have been practically isolated from the Saints in other parts of the world for the last six years, we think it proper to give a brief statement of conditions as we find them now.

The Church at Hannover

This church has the largest membership of any in Germany. The present enrollment is one hundred, comprising two elders, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon.

Throughout the war, and until quite recently, Brother Gustav Huvendic has been the pastor of this church. During the recent visit of President Smith and myself, it was deemed wise to place Brother Carl Green in charge, Brother Huvendic cheerfully concurring. Credit should be given Brother Huvendic for holding the Saints together during the trying times incident to the world war.

There is an excellent body of live, energetic, devoted Saints at this point. We have great hopes of expansion and growth. There were five baptisms while we were there. Others are investigating. The present officers are as follows: Pastor, Carl Green. His associates, Gustav Huvendic, elder; Hans Thiel, priest; Henrich Hundredmark, teacher; Otto Schall, deacon. The order of services is: Sunday school 10.30 a. m.; prayer meeting 4.30 p. m.; preaching 6 p. m.; Bible class Wednesday, 8 p. m.

The meeting place is in a hall on Zimmerstrasse One.

Braunschweig

The church at Braunschweig is second in point of membership. There are fifty-five names on the register. We have here a pastor, priest, three teachers. Brother Gustav Gerwein is the pastor. He seems eminently fitted for the place. The associate officers are Heinrich Acker, priest; Walter Miller, teacher; Ernst Engelka, teacher; Herman Hilderbrandt, teacher. The services are: Sunday school 10 a. m.; preaching 7.30 p. m.; Bible class Wednesday 8 p. m. The meetings are held in a small down-town hall. We trust that more commodious quarters may be secured.

Gross Raeschen

The church at this point has an enrollment of twenty-two. The officers are one elder, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon. The local pastor is Brother Johann Smolny. This brother has been instrumental in bringing most of these members into the church. He is a humble, earnest, God-fearing man. The other officers are: Wilhelm Schoepke, priest; William Kaiser, teacher; Willi Grabse, deacon. At the present time the only meeting place is a small room in a private residence. Brother Smolny has purchased a commodious building and proposes, just as soon as this building is vacated by present tenants, to remodel and provide a suitable meeting place.

Einbeck

Einbeck has a membership of sixteen. Brother Fleike, priest, has been in charge of the work at this point. After visiting among the membership and studying the needs of the work, President Smith recommended that Brother Fleike be ordained to the office of elder. He will continue in charge of the work as local pastor. His associate officers are Arno Grassler, teacher, and Frederick Sleiker, deacon.

Sunday school is held at 10 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. The Bible class convenes on Thursday at 8 p. m. The Saints at this point have the use of the assembly hall at the schoolhouse. It is ample for their present purposes.

Ericka

The enrollment at Ericka is twelve. This church has only recently been organized. The officers are one elder, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon. The pastor is Emil Rodelow, sr. The priest is August Malnch; teacher, Emil Rodelow, jr.; deacon, Wolhelm Mossock.

Hamburg

Brother Alexander Kippe has been doing missionary work at Hamburg, resulting in the baptism of several. This in addition to the members already located here furnishes the nucleus for a church. Some few months ago Brother Kippe organized the church at this point with ten members. There is only one officer at present, Brother Martin, who is in charge of the work.

Mangschutz

The one church in Poland is located at Mangschutz. It has a membership of twenty-five. Brother Robert Smolny, priest, is in charge of the work. He is assisted by Brother Johann Lippa, who is also a priest. This church was formerly located in Germany but when the allies readjusted the boundary of Germany, it was in the territory assigned to Poland.

There are some scattered Saints. It is impossible to determine how many. We know of four, Brother Alexander Kippe, wife, and two daughters, who live at Halle am Saale. The total membership is two hundred and forty-four. There are six elders, seven priests, six teachers, and four deacons.

We have found the Saints in Germany open-hearted, generous, devoted, willing workers. They have been seriously handicapped. For years they were isolated from the general church headquarters. Each local church was compelled to act for itself, and get along as best it could. Credit is due the brethren for the splendid manner in which they have held their flocks intact.

While some light innovations have crept in, in places, these are but incidental, and now that communication has been resumed, there is no reason why the church in Germany should be one whit behind the church in any other part of the world.

In Hannover most of the members have come into the church under Brother Huvendic's pastorate. Brother Smolny at Gross Raeschen has through his tireless efforts increased the membership from three to twenty-two. The work at Ericka is largely the result of the labors of Brethren Smolny and Rodelow.

We need more missionaries in Germany. We need more local workers. We need tracts and books in the German language. We need German songbooks, with music. We need the Doctrine and Covenants in the German language. We need a mission paper. We are not going to be satisfied with less. We believe the church in America will come to the assistance of the church in Germany.

There is a great mission field for the church in this land. The people, many of them, are ready for our message. I am satisfied that where we now have a half dozen local churches we can have one hundred, and where the membership of these churches now range from ten to one hundred, they can and will range from ten to one thousand.

Let the general church assist this mission for a time, supply men, means, and material to get the work thoroughly started. It will not be long before the church in Germany will become not only self-sustaining, but will in turn furnish men, means, and material to extend our work into Russia, Poland, Italy, Greece, and the Balkan States.

True, governments are not as stable as with us, but that need not deter our action. Governments, human governments, come and go, but the kingdom of God goes on forever. Just to the extent that human governments prove inadequate to supply the needs of the people, is there need that we proclaim the sufficiency of the divine plan for social readjustment. While the kingdoms of the world must decrease and disintegrate, the kingdom of God must increase and become imminent.

Lamanites of Florida

Two items sent in by C. W. Lamb, who has a commendable habit of keeping a book of "Notes and extracts" for his own use.

"Indians Who Avoid Civilization to Save Their Souls"

"Probably most people know as little of the Seminole Indians, who live in the Everglade region of Florida, as if the tribe had their home in the most remote and inaccessible spot of Asia or Africa. . . . There are 800 square miles of unexplored country in the Everglades on which no white man has ever set foot. It is largely in the tropical jungles that make up this terra incognita of Uncle Sam's domain that the Seminoles have been keeping themselves, although now they have been gathered together by the State of Florida and placed on a reservation of 100,000 acres allotted to them in one corner of the Everglades. Once in a great while somebody has taken the trouble to make the acquaintance of the Seminoles on their own stamping ground and has learned that of all the representatives of the American aborigines living to-day, these Florida Indians are among the most remarkable. The New York Sun recently published an account of them based on an interview granted a representative of that journal by Mrs. Minnie Moore Wilson of Kissimmee, Florida, who is said to be an authority on this tribe of Indians. Mrs. Wilson was impressed by the Seminoles' sterling character. 'The Seminole brave is the most upright man in the world,' she says. 'He is altogether moral and he never lies, cheats, or steals, nor ever breaks his word, while his wonderful squaw holds a rank in her family and community unrivaled among all the women of earth.' She continues:

"The Seminole language contains no oath, nor any word to express disrespect to the Giver of life, and for this reason a missionary receives respectful attention, for the Seminole reverence does not allow him to laugh at His messenger. The Florida Indian not only believes the Great Spirit, but he believes in God's Son, 'who came to earth and lived with the Indians a long time ago to make them good Indians and to prepare them for the big sleep when E-shock-ee-tom-e-see calls them hence and their spirits journey to the happy hunting grounds of their fathers over the seven-colored rainbow of the heavens—the highway of the Great Spirit.

"Habitually secretive with the white man, whom he has learned to distrust, when kindly sincerity has once won his confidence he becomes as trustful and confiding as a little child, and will sit for hours at a time recounting his national history, myths, and customs, as well as his family and community news.' Among her Seminole friends, Mrs. Wilson speaks of one Billie Bowlegs, who often visits her home. She refers particularly to his innate refinement, courtesy, and gentlemanly bearing, among other things saying: 'We have never detected him watching our movements, at table or anywhere else, yet his manners are faultless. I am shocked at the restaurants of New York by comparison. . . . Knowing that they leave their money, their trinkets, and their garments in the open wigwam, we asked of him, 'Billie, your money, you leave it in wigwam, you go back, money hi-e-pus (all gone).' 'Indian no take 'em—Indian no steal,' he replied. We tried to find out what the punishments would be in case of theft, but he only said again, 'Me don't know. Indian no take 'em—Indian no steal.' The simple form of tribal government, 'not to lie, not to cheat, and not to steal, and to think with God,' is practiced with precision, and their verdict of the pale face is crystallized into one forcible phrase, 'White man no good, lie too much.' The Bible receives this: 'White man got book; him good one day; him steal, cheat next day; book no good. . . .'

"With the most reverent attitude, Billie listens to the returning of thanks at the white man's table. . . . These Seminoles have no desire to become civilized, we are told. One expressed to Mrs. Wilson, 'Me think me get civilized me lie, steal, cheat,' which, in the opinion of the simple red man, would preclude his reaching the happy hunting grounds. 'Me think no white man go to heaven,' he added. Quite naturally, under these circumstances, the Indians look with suspicion on the white man and eschew all his ways. . . . With undercurrents, subterranean lakes, and subterranean outlets, the practical drainage of the Everglades has been the despair of Spanish, French, English, and American engineers. Over 500 years ago it was known to be cut up by large rivers, extensive ponds, lagoons, and lakes, which communicated with each other, the work of the intrepid Indian, who traveled easily through these uncharted waters in his dug-out canoe with no compass but the stars overhead, the whispering winds guiding him with the voice of the Great Spirit. He understands every foot of the interminable swamps; and the fantastic tracery of the secret canals, cut by his ancestors, are his highways."—Literary Digest, October 25, 1919.

"Mr. Simpson has some interesting facts and ideas about the Seminole War. He says it was really an unjustified attack upon the Indians by our Government, instigated by slaveholders, many of whose slaves had run away to the Everglades and fallen into the hands of the Seminoles. Mr. Simpson says that after the Seminole War, when the greater part of the tribe was removed to a reservation (west of the Mississippi River), there were just 296 Indians who escaped to the Everglades and refused to be removed. . . . Mr. Simpson says that the original 296 renegades have now increased to a tribe of 600 individuals. . . . They still regard the white men as murderers and liars, but there is no case on record of a Seminole having injured a white man. But there are several cases of white men having injured Seminoles."—Omaha World Herald, copied largely from Tropical Sun.

Vida E. Smith, dean of women at Patroness Hall, Grace-land College, has recently returned to her work at the college from an extended visit with her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Davis, at Columbus, Ohio.

There are 1,176 higher institutions of learning in the United States, including universities, colleges, professional schools, schools of agriculture, mechanical, technological, and mining science, normal, theological, and junior colleges. The Intercollegiate News Service adds that in 750 colleges, there is a Y. W. C. A. organization, and in 764 there is a Y. M. C. A.

"Too many people view life through the wrong end of the telescope."

Visiting the German Saints

A personal letter by President F. M. Smith to Elbert A. Smith, concerning the church work in Germany. It is written from Halle am Saale, Germany, January 10, 1921.

With England organized for better work, my mind soon turns elsewhere. We have about completed our survey of the work in Germany. We have visited the branches at Einbeck, Hannover, Braunschweig, and at Gross Raeschen. Out meetings there yesterday were attended in mass by the branch at Ericka. In a few days we shall visit the branch at Hamburg. Only one other branch remains unvisited; that is at Mangschutz, now in Poland. Lack of time prevents us going there. To go would require amendment to passports, additional visas, etc., all of which take time.

The work in Germany, considering conditions, has grown wonderfully. I want to write you at considerable length on the prospects of the work here. There is a fine opportunity, and we must have some workers here, and that soon.

At Gross Raeschen is a branch of about twenty-two members, largely the result of the efforts of Brother Johann Smolny, the branch president, who since his return from the front has gathered up the scattered members and established them once more. With him is a faithful teacher. Last evening we ordained the teacher a priest and ordained a teacher and a deacon, giving that branch a full corps of officers. The branch at Ericka was presided over by a priest, Brother Rodelow. We ordained him an elder, and also ordained a teacher and a deacon. As another priest is there, this gives Ericka a full corps of officers. The deacon, you will be interested in knowing, is a native of Russia, and speaks Russian, German, Lithuanian, and one other Balkan language. I hope to make arrangements to get him to Graceland College. Of this more later.

At Hannover we found the branch somewhat divided, but we hope that we have started it towards better things. The branch at Einbeck is presided over by a priest, but we have taken steps to have him ordained an elder. At Braunschweig the corps is not quite full, but working nicely.

I have never seen finer hospitality than has been extended to us by these German Saints. Many have been left in conditions of poverty by the war, and all have experienced the sufferings of starvation, and many faces yet show the marks of the privations through which they have passed; yet their guests are made to feel a welcome. Their hospitality sets out their meager supply without apology, for the best they have is before the guest. And how longingly their eyes are turned towards Zion. And our message brings a happiness to them which is good to behold.

We came to-day from Gross Raeschen and to-morrow go to Berlin. Thence to Hamburg, thence to London, probably via Rotterdam and Schiedam. We expect to be in London about January 20-25. There are more openings than we can possibly fill for a time at least.

I might say I have some more young men and women lined up for Graceland; some we shall have to carry or help them to work their way through. There are about three in Einbeck, one here, two or three in Hannover, three in Braunschweig, and three in Gross Raeschen, with one at Bernburg. The one at Bernburg I shall probably bring with me, taking him to London now and leaving him there till I return from Palestine. On to-morrow, so enough for to-night.

Yours,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Church Literature Should Be in Every Home

True education is the keynote of a recent letter in the HERALD not an education limited to college learning, but that which comes from a study of God's word as contained in the three standard books of the church. The foundation of all true knowledge is contained in God's word, and a great responsibility rests on the priesthood of God in not giving instruction to the newly baptized convert, but not all responsibility ends with their neglect of duty, and that is one reason why we do not understand the laws of our church.

It is our privilege to study. The books are there; the law is in them. God has told us to study; then why should we be ignorant of their contents? If there is a "famine of bread and a thirst for water," whose is the responsibility? Why are not the church papers and church books in every Saint's home? There are homes that are anything but a credit to the church; that have none of the good literature printed by our church, but there is no dearth of Sunday newspapers and novels on their tables. Eighty-eight years ago God gave a command to "seek learning even by study." He does not coerce, but ever pleads, "Come up higher." It is a slow "process of development." We need "quick results," but would we get them from the heroic measures advised?

One would find himself preaching to empty pews if he undertook to use the Doctrine and Covenants on every occasion. After eighty-eight years are we only now waking up to see the need of studying God's law? It may not yet be too late, for God's patience and mercy are limitless and his love also is boundless, and his call is still, "Come up higher."
MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

Have You Filed Your Annual Tithing Report?

It was the seventh dip in Jordan that cleansed. In spite of the sacrifice, disobedience caused the downfall of King Saul and his people. "To obey is better than sacrifice."

The law requires an annual accounting. It is not a question whether your financial condition has changed, but obedience that entitles us to the blessings of earth and heaven.

Even the children should file their annual tithing report.

Last week Brother "A's" problem, as a new church member and tithing payer, was presented. Let us now consider a problem of more frequent occurrence.

Computation No. 2

Brother "B" filed his report last year on the old Property Statement form, which has since been replaced by the new Annual Tithing Report. Last year's Property Statement (a copy of which was retained by Brother "B") shows the following amounts:

(a) Total resources	$4,000.00
(b) Deduct liabilities	1,200.00
(c) Present net worth	2,800.00
(d) Add tithing paid before this date	270.00
(e) Total to be tithed	3,070.00
(f) Tithe one tenth of above amount	307.00
(g) Deduct tithing paid before this date	270.00
(h) Tithing unpaid to date	37.00

This year the amounts of his resources and liabilities are as shown below. Not having paid the $37 tithing due on last year's Property Statement it is therefore included among his present liabilities. To arrive at the "net amount tithed previous report," (item 25 below) deduct item F from item E, as shown above ($3,070 less $307 equals $2,763).

10. Total resources	4,500.00
(To save space the resources are not itemized.)

Liabilities (Debts)

11. Mortgages payable	1,000.00
12. Notes payable	none
13. Accounts or bills payable	63.00
14. Tithing still unpaid on last report	37.00
(From item 22 on last year's work sheet, deduct all tithing paid since.)
15. Total	1,100.00
10. Total resources	4,500.00
15. Less total liabilities	1,100.00
16. Present net worth	3,400.00

Add to item 16

Expenditures Subject to Tithing

17. Pleasure, education, offerings, etc.	200.00
19. Amount subject to tithing	3,600.00

Computation Number 2.

19. Amount subject to tithing	3,600.00
25. Less net amount tithed previous report	2,763.00
26. Increase to be tithed	837.00
20. Tithing due, one tenth of above	83.70
27. Less tithing paid this date	75.00
23. Tithing still unpaid on above	8.70

Tithe Payers' Work Sheet

10. Total Resources	$4,500.00
---------------------------	------------

(To save space we have not itemized the resources here in this illustration.)

Liabilities (Debts)

11. Mortgages payable	1,000.00
12. Notes payable	none
13. Accounts or bills payable	63.00
14. Tithing still unpaid on last report	37.00
15. Total	1,100.00
10. Total resources	4,500.00
15. Less total liabilities	1,100.00
16. Actual net worth	3,400.00
17. Add expenditures subject to tithing	200.00
19. Total amount subject to tithing	3,600.00
25. Less net amount tithed previous report	2,763.00
26. Annual increase to be tithed	837.00
20. Tithing due, one tenth of above	83.70
14. Add tithing still unpaid on last report (from item 22 or last year's work sheet, deduct all tithing paid since)	37.00
21. Total items 20 and 14	120.70
27. Less tithing paid this date	75.00
22. Tithing still unpaid	45.70
16. Actual net worth	3,400.00
24. Less tithing due (item 20)	83.70
25. Net amount tithed	3,316.30

The exceptional cases, not herein covered, have been omitted in the endeavor to make it as simple as possible for the great majority.

Ask your local solicitor, district Bishop's agent, or the undersigned for an Annual Tithing Report blank.

Editors Herald: I have been preaching in a schoolhouse and some are interested. Two young men left here and went to Mountain Home, Idaho. If there are any Saints there, or a branch near there, will some one hunt those two boys up? They are interested in our gospel. Their names are Paul and Richard Mitchel. Address, Mountain Home, Idaho, care of J. C. Hogan. If there is a branch there, and I can get its location, I will write to the boys and tell them where it is.

The only Saints here are our own family. The nearest branch is sixty miles. We have no preaching only as I can make openings in schoolhouses among the hills.

Touring Society Islands as a Nurse

The following is excerpted from personal letters to Laura Mann, director of nursing in the church, by Sister Ethel Hanson, R. N., who is with the missionaries in the Society Islands.

Received your letter on my return from the Tuamotuan Islands. I left here, Tahiti, September 7, with Brother and Sister Karlstrom on a good sailing boat, if the wind is in the right direction. Slept on top of the hatch two or three nights until it began to rain, then went below and slept on a board the rest of the time. We were on the water five days and in a storm part of the time, and we were glad when we sighted Rurutu. We went ashore in a very small boat, and that was my first experience in going over the reefs with the waves breaking sometimes fifteen or twenty feet above our heads; but the natives know just when to row and when not to, in order to pass successfully.

We stayed here only about twenty-four hours as we have no members here.

We found the weather cool enough for a wrap in the evening and walked up the side of the mountain and saw growing vanilla trees, coffee, bananas, coconuts, native fruits, and vegetables.

We were royally received by the natives, fed chicken, and put to sleep in a new, white bed. The old lady native we stayed with made so over us I hardly had time to sleep. I was landsick and had been seasick, so wasn't feeling the best.

It was only ninety miles to the next island, Tubuai, and we should have made the distance in one day, but as I said before, we had a good sailing boat when the wind was right. We were in a storm and spent another five days going ninety miles. I saw a school of sharks. One large fellow ten or fifteen feet long came near enough so that the natives tried to spear him, but Mr. Shark saw to it that they didn't succeed.

We have three branches at this island and were heartily received. Called at all the branches and met the sisters all together one day at the main branch.

It was cool on this island. We rode entirely around the island in a two-wheeled cart. One day we saw a post still remaining of Elder Pratt's house, and the next day took a trip on the other side of the island. Brother Christensen was there six months five years ago. Very few boats call there.

We were on the water another five days going to Raivavai, as we encountered a head-on wind and had to tack all the way. I was on this island two weeks. We had two members there, but we didn't know it until an old man invited us to his house and later told us. We were brought food by the other natives when they all gathered at our house in the evenings, bringing oranges, sweet potatoes, little wild tomatoes, onions, chickens, etc. There was not even a road on this island, and we rode on a horse with no saddle and used a bridle made of rope.

I pleased an old man who had cut his large toe off at the first joint with a falling board. He hadn't been out of bed for a month. The toe was swollen and suppurating. I found a few pieces of loose bone, removed them, and dressed it each morning. In ten days it was well healed; suppuration had ceased, and he walked to the shore to see us off. Told us good-by with big tears in his eyes. Said many times we came at the right time or he would soon have been on the hillside. There are many such cases here.

When we left Raivavai we had enough stock aboard to stock a small farm, for we had given to us along with food, five pigs, two turkeys, six or seven ducks, and two chickens. We were on sea again eight days to Hereheretue, a small island of thirty-five inhabitants, every one a member of our church. We were there only a few hours but had a good time. Was much warmer there and only four or six feet above sea level. People live on coconuts and fish.

Five seems to be my unlucky number, as that was the number of days it took us to get to Hikueru. This was the diving island. The dwellings are built for temporary use for the four months out of each year. The estimated number was between four or five thousand inhabitants this year. We had about four hundred members possibly. We stayed here three weeks and were reminded of reunion grounds all the time.

Anatomy and physiology are not taught in the schools, so I am trying to teach them, that they may better understand the functions of the different organs, and understand how and why they should be cared for. There are lots of bad teeth, and I hope to have at least the younger generation using toothbrushes regularly soon.

I worked day and night through a light epidemic, trying to encourage and secure sanitation, especially among our people, such as burying old cans, fish bones, orange peels, etc., and trying to teach them even though it was necessary to use rain water from a hole to drink, that it should be boiled first. They are very careless sometimes in numerous ways.

Brother Karlstrom is assisting the natives in their financial difficulties, and we feel strongly the jealousies of the Catholics and other churches.

On Armistice Day I sold tags for the governor all day, and he gave us a front seat at the evening entertainment.

I take from one to three shower baths a day, trying to keep cool, and just think it is almost Christmas. We are going to have a program and tree, but no pine tree as we are used to; no nuts and very little candy. I think I shall make part of the candy. The children will enjoy watching me, and that is educational to them.

I am finding plenty to do and am keeping busy. Am feeling fine and never had a better time in my life.

Give my love to all inquiring friends. Tell them I am happy, and I hope I am doing some good. I have to move very cautiously, but the doctors here don't pay much attention to the natives. I do all I can.

Miss Mann, at present I need nothing, and the only suggestion I could make is that all missionaries' wives should have a thorough course in the prevention of disease and the care of the sick. It is very necessary that they receive some such course to protect themselves and help others. They could do a better work in the line of the health department than in any other in this mission.

I hope to find a stack of mail when I return.

Sincerely yours,

ETHEL HANSON.

Indian Feast

On New Year's Day the Pottawatomie Indians held a two-days' dance and feast. It was a celebration for every Indian on the reservation, and many white guests were invited. The reservation is about twenty-five miles from Topeka, and contains eleven square miles of land, on which some 500 Indians reside. The Indians all speak English, and have motor cars. The land around the reservation is built up, and the Indians on the whole are quite civilized.

The article taken from The Daily Mercury (Manhattan, Kansas) of January 18, continues that the Pottawatomies are proud of the fact that Senator Charles Curtis is of Pottawatomie ancestry, and still count him a member of their tribe, even though his time is taken up in the city of Washington.

Mat Septa, a young Pottawatomie, is quoted as saying: "I can remember when the dancers and medicine men used to prophesy at our dances of how the white man would one day ride in carriages without horses, and fly through the air like birds. We used to think that was very wonderful, but we have seen it happen. Our dancers also told of how there would be a great war among the white men, in which they would cross the sea to kill one another. That was the European war. I was in France sixteen months myself with the Eighty-ninth Division. A great experience. You know what I liked about the army, you always had friends and were not lonesome. But I was glad to come home.

"Our people live softer than they used to. When I was a little boy, often they used to take us down to the bank of the creek, winter mornings, and break the ice and make us jump in. That was to make us hard and strong. They don't do that any more with our boys.

"Our prophets tell of another great war that will come among the white men, and after that, they say, there will be no more war. They tell us that the white man's heart will be changed then, and that much of the land that once belonged to the Indian will be given back to him. I do not know. It is not good for my people to have too much money in their pockets, for they spend it swiftly."

Civilization Held as Sadly Lacking

Santa Ana Register (California) reports address by Apostle Rushton in issue of January 31.

"This present civilization has nothing to boast of. Wealth has piled up far beyond that of any other age and poverty has been extended far and wide. Education so far has failed to insure a solution of the great problem before us. In spite of all we have done by way of reform legislation, the rulers and legislators are more interested in the protection of the wealth of those who are fortunate enough to have it, while the problem of assisting the poor and poverty-stricken people to assist themselves is let pass without arresting the attention of those who should be the most concerned."

This quotation is from the address of John Rushton, who last night opened a series of evening lectures at the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, Fifth and Flower Streets. He will speak each evening this week except Saturday night, services beginning at 7:15 with a program of music and also by a lecture, with stereopticon views, presented by Evangelist and Mrs. F. G. Pitt.

Rushton is one of the big men of the church organization. He has spoken a number of times in Santa Ana, and his forceful presentation of subjects discussed has won the admiration of a great many Santa Anans.

"The times in which we are living no doubt express the conditions which were so clearly foretold by the ancient prophets—the conditions of to-day are such as to cause profound thought and anxiety," said the lecturer.

"To-day crime is increasing on every hand, and some are urged to take the law into their own hands and protect themselves. The liquor traffic has left its mark upon our civilization, and men have stooped to that plane of brutality that women are insulted, the rights of the people and the home and children are trampled under foot.

"This country passed a law in favor of prohibition, and at once millions of dollars are spent to dodge this law. This shows to what level this nation has descended. It has become a commonplace fact, that just as soon as we spend $10,000,000 for legislation in the interest of morality, more millions are spent by many of the citizens affected in efforts to have the law amended.

"These are only some of the problems that are before us in this present crisis. We should not be so much concerned about making wealth as we should be about seeing to it that our great wealth is properly distributed. This civilization should see to it that the great debts of the nation's past mistakes are not saddled upon our children yet unborn.

"If our boasted civilization is to meet the demands of this hour in a way that will clear our lives of blame before the great tribunal of justice as a Christian people, we must see to it that everything is done that can possibly be done to make it absolutely impossible for another great war to happen. Book of Mormon Lectures Free

By a bequest of my husband, Henry A. Stebbins, a number of copies of his book, Lectures on the Book of Mormon, are to be given to his brethren of the ministry, either missionaries or local laborers, who may desire them.

The number of these books is necessarily limited, but while they last, they will be sent free, one copy to each one who may apply for it.

Please address your request to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

MRS. H. A. STEBBINS.
LAMONI, IOWA.

Our Departed Ones

FISHER.—Henry H. Fisher was born at Wellsburg, Vermont, September 7, 1841. Baptized by W. P. Robinson, near Necedah, Wisconsin. Died January 21, 1921, at Bradford, Iowa. Obsequies in charge of H. D. Green, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Service in church near Nashua, Iowa.

MORGAN.—Martha, wife of Hyram C. Morgan, died January 29, 1921. Funeral was held from the home at 12030 Normal Boulevard, sermon by Ward L. Christy. Sister Morgan has been a patient sufferer for several years and a faithful Saint since April 5, 1896. She is the mother of 11 children. Her husband and 5 children survive her. A faithful and loved mother, a noble citizen, and a faithful, devoted Saint has gone to a well-earned rest.

SLOCUM.—Infant daughter of Brother and Sister J. E. Slocum, was born June 26, 1920, at Webster City, Iowa. Died January 21, 1921, at the home of her grandparents in Melcher, Iowa, after a period of suffering from the effects of whooping cough and other complications. Services at Melcher, January 23, conducted by F. T. Mussell. Interment at Knoxville, Iowa.

ASHBOUGH.—Julia Frances Ashbough was born June 5, 1854, at Bowling Green, Kentucky. Died January 27, 1921, at Independence, Missouri. Baptized April 13, 1884. Survived by one daughter, Mrs. R. E. Givens of Ranger, Texas, 9 grandchildren, and 7 great-grandchildren. A mother in Israel, indeed, she was loved by all. Funeral service from the home of Brother and Sister A. L. Yingling. Sermon by Joseph Arber; prayer by U. W. Greene. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LAWSON.—Martin Lawson, born in Ephraim, Utah, 53 years ago, died at his residence in Provo, January 23, 1921, and was buried from the Saints' Chapel. Leaves a wife, one sister (Mrs. M. Coleman) here, a brother in Independence, and one in Idaho. He and wife have been members of the church for a long time, and he was a Saint indeed. Attendance at the funeral and floral offerings testified of the esteem in which he was held.

MAMEROW.—Theodore George, eight-year-old son of Brother and Sister Frank J. Mamerow, died January 23, 1921, at Bay City, Michigan. Funeral was held from Saints' church, E. S. White officiating. Leaves to mourn, besides the parents, one brother, John R. Mamerow, of Fort Lyons, Colorado, and a host of friends.

WATTS.—Charles Alfred, son of John W. and Annie R. Watts, was born at Troy, Illinois, October 5, 1906. Died January 15, 1921, at the home of his aunt, Miss Jeanette Jones, Belleville, Illinois. He was ill a long time, yet bore his affliction and suffering patiently and cheerfully until the end. He received all the care that loving hands could bestow. Baptized May 23, 1920, at Belleville, Illinois, by James Wild. Preceded in death by his parents. Survived by 3 brothers, one sister, and many other relatives and friends. Sermon by James Wild.

BOOTH.—Sarah Booth was born at Kersley, Lancashire, England, April 19, 1847. Baptized at Fall River, Massachusetts, August 3, 1884. After an illness of nine months our sister passed away peacefully January 4, 1921. She was faithful to her sacred covenant, was loyal to the church all through her life, and patiently awaited her departure to the paradise of rest. The beautiful floral tributes, and the many Saints, relatives, and friends attending the funeral service held in the church, evidenced the love and respect of those who knew her. Interment at Oak Grove Cemetery January 7, 1921. Sermon by Horatio W. Howlett.

"It is an authenticated fact that this country leads the world in crime and debauchery. Other nations are doing the same thing, but we are outdoing them all. I invite a challenge to this statement.

"There never was a time when so much money was being spent for churches and for good speakers, yet it is everywhere painfully apparent that the great masses everywhere are losing interest in the message of Jesus Christ."

"The permanent elements of religion," will be the subject of Rushton's address to-night. His lecture will begin at eight o'clock.

MAQUOKETA, IOWA, February 2, 1921.

Editors Herald: Already one month of the present year has passed into history, and we are therewith reminded that we have no time to spend in idle reverie. The importance of the present time requires the very best there is in us, but how prone we are to come short of the best. We are too often contented with the commonplace, when we ought to be striving for the extraordinary. We become botches instead of artists in the unfoldment of life.

We have entered well upon the activities of this, the best year of our experiences; what the end may be is to be determined largely by the energy and diligence we put forth in the discharge of our respective duties. If we are to achieve the highest and best, we must be ever ready to grasp every opportunity that presents itself, and as we pursue our course, we should make every legitimate effort to become efficient. We must become artful and skillful in handling that which has been intrusted to us, that we might be able to present as the result of our labor, a life that is beautiful and complete. We should make our effort worth while.

We are trying to enable the membership of our district to realize fully the importance of coordination in our work. If the missionary is to perform effective work, he must be supported by the membership. I mean by this that the lives of the members should be so developed that the Christ shall be reflected therein, and then the missionary may preach with power because back of him there is a strong body of consistent believers. The church needs the moral, intellectual, and financial support of the entire membership if it is to reach the maximum degree in service. May we bend every energy to make the present year the most eventful in the history of the church.

Very truly,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

OKLAHOMA, CITY, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: Brother W. M. Aylor left here the first of the week for Wilburton, Oklahoma.

Brother R. M. Maloney went to El Reno and preached there last Sunday morning and evening, and reported that some are nearly ready for baptism. On last Tuesday he was called to Calumet, Oklahoma, to preach the funeral sermon of our aged sister, Mary Amelia Sanders.

Elders Harvey Syckle and J. G. Smith passed through our city Saturday, en route to Red Rock to visit the Indian branch there.

The Women's Department has taken up the study of church history in connection with their educational work.

We are having the interior of our church building re-decorated and will have it completed in time for the district conference which is to be held here February 12 and 13.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, January 20, 1921.

Editors Herald: On the evening of January 19 the usual social service was dispensed with, and we had what we called a departmental service. Each department in the branch, Sunday school, Religio, Women's, Temple Builders, primary, publicity, church, and orchestra, had a part in the program, which proved to be a novelty and furnished us much pleasure. Each department was represented by an original reading on the subject of the work of that department.

The orchestra, which is only two months old, played two selections, which was a surprise to all, for most of the members knew nothing of music before joining the orchestra. It is a great thing for Stockton, and everyone is interested and new members are wanting to join. It has been named "Zion's Symphony Orchestra."

One of our members, our deacon and branch treasurer, is very sick and has been given up to die by three different physicians, but we all know that if it is God's will he can recover.

We now have three organized classes in Sunday school, and they are proving a good thing.

We feel that Stockton is going ahead and that God is blessing the efforts of our pastor and family, and in fact the whole of Stockton. We hope and pray that other branches are enjoying the blessing of work. CORRESPONDENT.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, February 3, 1921.

Editors Herald: On January 15 Brother Henry C. Ziegenhorn, of Buffalo Prairie, died, and was buried the following Monday at Buffalo Prairie, Elder James Norris preaching the sermon.

Brother Ziegenhorn has been Bishop's agent for the last few years and as such his labors brought him into close relationship with the Saints in the district. He was much loved and respected by them all. Wise and discreet, tender and kind, he went about doing good. Many could speak and tell of help given from his own purse in their time of need and not even the "right hand" permitted to know.

When he was ordained at Peoria a few years ago by Apostle J. F. Curtis, it was spoken by the Spirit that "he should be as a strong tower of defense to his people" and that "he should be a comfort to his people." These things have been literally fulfilled. His faith and his works are surely a source of strength and of comfort to those who have been permitted to be associated with him. Kewanee has lost one of its most faithful workers, and we sorrow for our loss.

And now to-day comes the news that another is gone. Word just received announces the death of Mira Cady Howlett, formerly of Millersburg, Illinois. She passed from earth February 1, 1921, after a brief illness with pneumonia and after giving birth to a baby girl who still lives. She also leaves a little son, her husband, brothers, sister, and many friends aside from the Saints who knew and loved her.

We have known Mira for some fifteen years, and in most of that time found her bearing heavy burdens. Yet with cheerful patience, she lived a godly life in Christ Jesus. I have often heard her speak in prayer meeting and "bear her testimony." But her life spoke far louder and in stronger terms and, to me, she "bore testimony" that there was something real and sustaining in the gospel which she believed.

We cannot understand why those whom we need most should be removed from our midst, but surely the Lord knows why. And believing as we do, and as Mira did, in the unfailing wisdom and love of our heavenly Father, we can only pray that comfort and consolation may be given in full measure to those of her family left behind.

MARY E. GILLIN.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, February 4, 1921.

Editors Herald: We have had some fine meetings of late. There have been five calls to the priesthood, two to office of deacon, one a teacher, one a priest, and one an elder. We desire the prayers of the Saints for success in our work. We want God's servants who are coming to hold a debate to feel that we as a body of people are doing our part. We are glad to have Saints and friends visit us at 1533 Jane Street.

FLOYD G. SMITH.

The Saints of Holden Stake have been sent Bulletin No. 6, by C. J. Hunt, bishop of the stake, with a brief appeal to them, including helpful suggestions as to whom they may pay. For These Two Things I Am Thankful Address by Elbert A. Smith at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, February 6, 1921.

I am here this afternoon to sound a note of optimism. I am not disposed, as yet, to hang my harp upon the weeping willow tree, and I do not find it necessary to do so, because too many have already utilized that tree for that particular purpose. Possibly that is the reason why it weeps.

It may be true as some allege that there are some things being done that ought not to be done. At the same time, there are so many splendid things being done that should be done that I feel like getting in and giving them my moral support. When we go to a football game, of necessity most of us stand on the side lines; but, thank God, in this work it is not necessary for anyone to stand on the side lines unless he wishes to do so. There is something good for everyone to do. If you can do no more than to visit a sick neighbor or help to build up an obscure and struggling group prayer meeting, by all means do those things.

The Importance of Small Things

Let no one, either young or old, think that he is too obscure or unimportant to be of use; and let no one imagine that any task that ought to be done is too small or insignificant to be worthy of his attention.

Yesterday Brother R. V. Hopkins and I spent the afternoon in the woods in search of recreation. When we came to light our camp fire in the evening, do you imagine that we attempted first to kindle an enormous log? No, indeed; we had trouble enough as it was. We took a great many very small twigs with which to start our fire, and with their aid we presently had all the fire we needed. Think of the thousands of little, apparently unimportant, perhaps tedious tasks that have been done by hundreds of hands that made possible the great revival meeting of young people that closes to-day.

This is true in the building of Zion. Zion will not be built by a Hercules piling bowlders to the skies, but by a great many common people doing their day's work every day as God wants it done.

There are two things that encourage me. They may not appear to be correlated, but each has a bearing on the thought I wish to present. One of these is that the church is still the object of attack. In this sheltered place in Independence, the young people may not have been conscious of that fact, but in the out-lying branches from which many of our Saints come, people are keenly aware of the fact that the church is still the object of very bitter attack; and I anticipate that in the future, perhaps not many years hence, men and money will be concentrated in this very locality in organized opposition to our work. We are coming to be recognized as the real exponents of the work begun in 1830.

The Man Who Should Sue Himself for Libel

I believe it to be a fact that many of the forces of so-called Anti-Mormonism are being directed against the Reorganized Church. In fact, several so-called Anti-Mormon lecturers have expressed themselves publicly, either in print or in oral statement, to the effect that they believe that the Reorganized Church is more dangerous and more of a menace than is the Utah church. I do not know what to say of the moral perception of a man who will make such a statement as that; but I know what he ought to do: he ought to sue himself for libel.

It is true that there are arrayed against us a great many honest fanatics. I have nothing to say against them. Their judgment is at fault, but they believe that they are honestly doing God's will when they are opposing his work. But at the same time there are a great many others who may or may not be fanatics, but they certainly are not honest. Many of these men are knowing to certain facts.

I want to make the contrast between these two classes of facts so clear that anyone may draw his own conclusions. These men know certain things. We know they know them, and they know that we know they know them. I want to state definitely some of the things we know they know.

A Comparison of Facts

They know that this people as a rule are law-abiding, moral, and good citizens—at least averaging with the people of other denominations.

They know that we support the Government in time of war, with men and money.

That we teach at all times that "he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

That we teach men and women to be temperate, honest, moral, chaste, and industrious.

That we support the highest ideals of the home and the strictest form of monogamy.

On the other hand if they would go out and lead a crusade for the betterment of the world, they know

That the whiskey evil is still very real in spite of prohibition.

That the drug traffic ruins thousands annually.

That the social evil grows worse constantly.

That an army of criminals waits the gospel of repentance.

That another army of prostitutes awaits reclamation.

When these men turn from those evils to concentrate their force and fury on us they know that they are not serving the nation, or the community, or God. The pretense is too thin. It is too hypocritical to command our respect. These men may be our enemies. Jesus said we were to love our enemies; but, thank God, he never said we should respect them. Love may spring from pity; but pity is no basis for respect—respect has to be earned.

The Church a "Going Concern"

Why does this give me encouragement? Simply because it is one of the things which demonstrates to my mind that the church is a "going concern." If it were dead, men would not pay enough attention to it to furnish a tombstone; but it is alive and they realize its potency just as much as ever in the years gone by. I think perhaps the opposition will become more strenuous instead of less strenuous. I anticipate that when Zion really arises to shine she will attract the attention of the whole world, and that every power which loves iniquity and hates righteousness will be arrayed against her, and that earth and heaven will empty themselves of those who love righteousness and hate iniquity, and they will come and help Jesus Christ in the warfare.

5 Jan 22

The second cause for my feeling of joy and satisfaction is the fact that God also recognizes this church as the true exponent of the work begun in 1830. In our humility, beyond our merits, he has singled us out and blessed us. The spiritual endowments and revivals and benedictions received during the past year indicate to my mind without a shadow of doubt that God is working with this people and recognizes them as the true exponents of the great work of the Restoration begun in 1830. Not the least of these experiences is that which we have felt during the past week of the young people's revival. Certainly I believe it to be true that this church never saw the things we have seen during the past week. Never before did we see fourteen hundred young people from a local congregation assemble night after night to hear the word of God preached.

"Give Us Room That We May Dwell"

Why, the Saints used to sing a song,

"Give us room that we may dwell,
Zion's children cry aloud,"

when their General Conference would have been lost in the dining room back of this church. That shows the faith that they had and the prophetic vision, when they were beginning already to clamor for more room. How their hearts would have rejoiced if they could have seen this day, when the walls of this building are almost burst asunder with the crowds and our young people are making reservations for a week in advance for seats that they may hear the gospel preached! And I do not think that the rejoicing is confined to this audience. I believe that on the other side Joseph and Alexander, E. C. Briggs, Heman Smith, and scores of others are looking back and are rejoicing to see the fulfillment of that which they were asking for in years gone by when they sang,

"Give us room that we may dwell,
Zion's children cry aloud.
See their numbers how they swell!
How they gather like a cloud!"

The Spirit Uses the Organization

It is worth while for us to notice that the success of the meetings which the young people have put on has been to a certain extent the result of organization. They went at it in a very systematic manner. They left nothing to chance. And we must not forget, either, that this is not the work of the moment. Back of it is the work of years. They could not have accomplished it without the work of the organizations of the Sunday school and the Religio that preceded them; neither could they have done it without the organization of the church which is so detailed in this place.

We might have felt a little hesitancy about the change when the branches here were all submerged in a central administration, also when the group system was inaugurated, but just see the blessings that have come to the people. The young people used this group organization in the preliminary campaign, and it has to a large measure been responsible for their success. But the thing, of course, that is of most supreme importance is not the organization, but the constant and spontaneous operation of the Holy Spirit with us as individuals, and with the young people, collectively and individually. This means simply that the Spirit of God is using the organization of God, that the Spirit of God is working through the organization just as he intended that it should. The body of Christ is still vital with the Spirit of Christ.

I am happy to be able to report that in my opinion this revival of young people here in Independence is by no means purely local, but we have seen evidences of it in other places, as a forerunner of that which we might expect.

I remember attending a reunion last summer at Erie Beach, away off there in Canada, as we here are accustomed to term it. The young people went down to the lake shore to pray about eight o'clock one morning and remained there until noon. As I remember, there were 307 testimonies borne by the young people on that occasion.

I remember two sights I witnessed at the Lamoni reunion. One Sunday morning the young people had been in their own tent having their early prayer meeting, and shortly before 9 o'clock they came marching over to the big tent in columns of four, facing the morning sun. They came singing, "God is marshaling his army." A most splendid sight! And that evening just as the sun was going down I saw coming up out of the woods an apparently endless file of Boy Scouts, marching in single file, each one dragging the limb of a tree to furnish the evening camp fire. I wish I had a moving picture of those scenes. I know there are some criticisms of the Boy Scouts, made no doubt in all sincerity, but I can say this, that so far as I observed, those boys at the Lamoni reunion were a part of the camp life. They were orderly and disciplined and helpful, and that was a marked contrast to the unorganized gangs of boys that we sometimes used to have on reunion grounds.

Just yesterday came a letter to the office from the pastor at Des Moines, Elder A. E. Warr, which is perhaps typical of a good many we receive. He writes, "Our young people's prayer meetings are becoming very encouraging and interesting. The young people of this branch are becoming the most potential factor in the branch."

You see, this revival among the young is not purely local or spasmodic or sporadic; but God is indeed marshaling his army, both the aged and the youth.

A Living Institution Holds Its Young

What is there significant about this? Listen! A dying organization cannot hold its young people; they have not time for such an organization. It cannot enlist their services or appeal to their imagination. They will not invest in it. It may hold the older people, who are more or less traditioned, but never the young. Notice also the reverse of that; it is just as important: A living organization holds its young people; if it loses anyone, it loses the older ones; because of the very fact that it is a living and growing and going organization as they get older they may lose the vision, lose the step, lose the Spirit. This is a living organization. It is going to hold its young people. You say in your hearts that the young people stand in slippery paths and do well to look to their salvation; but I say unto you that the older people, too, have their spiritual perils, and they do well that they maintain the fires undimmed in their altars and keep alive the spirit of their youth and their love to the church to which they pledged their troth in years gone by, lest they be found fighting against that which they promised to serve.

Fundamentals

I think it is a time for us to cling to fundamental principles. I may say, by way of testimony, that never before did I have so strong a faith in the fact that Jesus is the Son of God and the Savior of the world. Never before did I have so great faith in the beautiful fundamental principles of the gospel that we have heard preached here this week. I know I have heard people say that the time would come when the principles would not need to be preached; but so long as the world stands in its present form it will need the gospel of repentance. We cannot fit anyone to enter into Zion or even to see Zion until they have yielded obedience to the principles of faith in God and repentance from sin and spiritual regeneration and rebirth. Those things will always be the very heart and core of our missionary program. Never before did I have so great faith in the church and in its all-embracing mission. It, to my mind, is sufficient for the spiritual and moral development of its devotees.

Perhaps I ought not to touch on this now, but some one asked me the other day what the attitude of the Presidency was on the question of secret societies. It seems to me that the best answer we can give is that neither member of the Presidency has ever belonged to any secret order. I think that a mistake the church made in Nauvoo was when many of the leading men of the church rushed into the Masonic order and built a splendid Masonic temple while the temple which God commanded to be built waited and was never completed. I see in the Church of Jesus Christ all we need. I do not, however, launch out in a fanatical attack on other organizations. Let them do their work; let us do ours.

In conclusion, then, I may say that for these two things I am thankful: I am thankful that the church is still alive so that it challenges the attack of the opposition; and I am thankful that it maintains its hold upon the loyalty and enthusiasm, the devotion, the love, and the imagination of its young people.

It is true, perhaps, that I would not dare to say that all is well in Zion. That is not my cry, because we know very well that all is not well; but I do say that I see Zion beginning to stir herself; I see her beginning to flex her muscles; I see her beginning to look up; and through the clouds that have overshadowed her for ninety years, a ray of divine light penetrates, and I hear the Lord say, "Arise, O Zion, and put on thy beautiful garments!"

Revelation in Ethics and Religion

A review of some late literature on the religious outlook in general.

Taking up the Hibbert Journal for January, 1914, we are struck with the number of articles just before the World War concerning the decline of the English and Scottish Church, along with other Protestant churches. There are five articles, about half the contents of the magazine, concerned with this question, including one under the blunt heading, "The failure of the Church of England." In an article concerning "Changing religion," by J. Arthur Hill, emphasis is placed upon social service, and upon the necessity for religion being practical. This is true, but as the author continues:

"The tendency, then, is to elevate morality (including social service) into a religion. This is the right direction, but it overshoots the mark by being too practical. Morality cannot take the place of religion so long as the human constitution remains what it is.

"In the first place, it ignores the speculative, cause-seeking, metaphysical instinct. Probably all men, even in our busy and practical times, are in various hours of stress or exalted perception (some one's death, a 'sunset-touch, a chorus-ending from Euripides') impelled to address to the universe, however inarticulately, a series of questions which morality cannot answer. What am I? And whence? And whither? And what does existence mean? The positivist tells us that we ought not to ask these questions, because there is no answer to them, though how he knows that is not quite clear. If he is relying on his intuitions, he is no more likely to be right than the metaphysician, whose intuitions point the other way. And, anyhow, we cannot get away from the fact that the human mind does ask these questions, and cannot help asking them. And (pace Mr. Frederic Harrison and other exceptions who were to prove the rule) the vehemence of the asking is in direct ratio with the general mental power and spiritual elevation of the asker. The yokel wonders least, and questions least; a Carlyle—yes, even an optimist Browning—wonders and agonizes in strenuous demand. The questioning is there, right or wrong. Religion answers the questions. The ethical society and the positivist do not. Therefore, morality cannot replace religion."

The article continues that the reasons of morality are not sufficiently answered by either the ethical society or positivism. Why should a man do right? Religion answers directly, because there is a God; because there is a life to come, and the life hereafter depends upon the life here.

Nor is the interest in mortality altogether mere selfishness.

"It is often on behalf of others that we most strongly feel that justice is not done here, and that another stage of existence is needed to square things up. Also, we have a kind of instinctive conviction that, quite apart from moral desert and payment, there is a bigger meaning in our existence than this life manifests to us, and greater powers in our own selves than we are at present able to make use of:

"... if the wages of Virtue be dust,
Would she have heart to endure for the life of the worm and the fly?

She desires no isles of the blest, no quiet seats of the just,
To rest in a golden grove, or to bask in a summer sky:
Give her the wages of going on, and not to die." . . .

"The appeal to revelation and metaphysics is now obsolete. The cast must be tried at the bar of science. The science of the nineteenth century disclaimed the power to deal with the question directly, but thought that the notion of survival of death was indirectly rendered absurd by the establishment of regular concomitance between mental and cerebral changes. However, we have now changed all that. We know now that science can deal directly with the problem of death, while, as to psycho-physical parallelism, it is now recognized that this parallelism—even if it were much more complete than is yet proved—is no argument for materialism."

The work being done by the Society for Physical Research makes a strong appeal to this writer, that there is definite evidence of scientific value not entirely limited to this world.

There then succeeds the question, Granted survival, whether there is moral continuity. The only explanation that has been offered, as secured by the Society for Physical Research, at least requires some supernatural explanation with the probability that the explanation will finally involve, if it does not directly affirm, the supposition of man's survival of bodily death.

He concludes that real good, the spiritual elevation of character, is not necessarily identical with intellectual ability or knowledge. The "once born" is inclined to the intellectual, and to consider the mystical emotion morbid and pernicious. But this, of course, he is unable to prove, since he has never had the experience. Each has as much right to his opinion as the other. "I confess with regret that the mystic is much more confident than I am, and therefore happier." This confidence, he insists, is not a proof of his real rightness.

But it seems to us that this confidence is a factor to be considered. The mathematician or scientist who has gone through the experience of learning certain mathematical or scientific principles and applying them has a confidence not possessed by one who knows not, and therefore has not attempted to apply the rule.

As to the future in religion, he suggests at least a hope that the mystic emotion of religion may be in the course of changing its mode, and instead of appearing only as emotion it may appear as intellectual energy. He admits a large hope of his own that this may prove to be the case, and the exercise of intellect and higher duty and cultivation of union with the divine. The savant's sincerity, his unremitting, uncompromising, toilsome search for truth, the enlargement and systematization of the concept of God's universe glorifies him, and is akin to religion.

"There is much of intuition in science itself; discoveries are made by happy flashes of genius. The 'scientific uses of the imagination'—in Tyndall's phrase—are great. But the orientation is different. The savant has more faith than the mystic, more faith in the possibility and power of knowledge. And this is contributing to the linking up of peoples and the beginning of a Brotherhood of Man."

We would differ from the writer strongly in this, that we do not accept his theory, which is the commonly presented one, that religious ecstasy is purely emotional.

The religious experiences of the true prophet are not to be compared with the emotional ecstasies of some religious devotees. Far above such is the ecstasy inferred in the theme, "The glory of God is intelligence." This includes scientific knowledge, but the spiritual revelation is greater than that inspiration claimed or admitted by science. This spiritual revelation involves the fullest power of the intelligence, and brings the realization at once of the brotherhood of man along with the fatherhood of God. It comes with the conviction of a theorem of mathematics. It possesses the power and certainty of light, and is a higher manifestation of the intellectual flame, burning purer and higher. With this intellectual power there comes also love of humanity, of law, and of nature—the love of God.

We would agree with the writer that the highest ecstasy is intellectual, and would claim that ecstasy for religion. The highest intellectual ecstasy is religion; the best and highest, the truest and purest religious ecstasy is intellectual in the sense the glory of God is intelligence, and confirms and increases the natural power of human reason till it becomes clear and certain, and the prophet knows God has spoken.

S. A. BURGESS.

Young People's Services

The arrangements for services in Independence provided for one week of special devotion, January 30 to February 6. One song was printed for use each evening, and an outline of the sermon distributed at the end of the service; also letters were sent out to those unable to be present. One of these letters contained the following account of the last service of the series, Sunday evening, February 6.

"As small tokens of appreciation to those who had helped make these meetings successful, Brother John Gardner, president of the A. O. Y. P. Z., presented a Bible to Brother Williams, a Bible and baton to Brother Burgess, a Bible to Brother Phillips who had been preaching to older people downstairs all week, and Books of Doctrine and Covenants to Sisters Ella Jones and Lois Waits, who have cared for the children in the nursery every evening, that the young parents might be able to attend the services.

"The introductory remarks of the presentation speech gave some interesting notes on our campaign which do not appear elsewhere in our letters:

"The history of this revival would be incomplete if there should not be written into it a thought expressed by Brother Walter Smith in the special prayer of thanksgiving he was asked to make at the morning service. The thought was that we should be thankful for the pioneer efforts of those who have grown old in the faith. It is true that without the pioneer work of the older members of the church it would have been impossible to have assembled fourteen hundred young people in revival service to-night. It is, therefore, appropriate at this time that we should pay a tribute to those who have made this splendid success possible. They have worked and prayed and longed to see this day. And many have passed on without seeing it.

"In every movement of this kind there are three distinct elements which mark its progress: There is the beginning, after which there is a point reached in which it is decided whether there shall be a defeat or a victory; and there is a time at the close when the last word is said and its final accomplishment is history.

"The beginning of this series of Gospel Sermons for Young People was made in the private office of President Elbert A. Smith and Pastor R. V. Hopkins. There were present at this conference seven young people who had asked for the appointment that they might tell the President of the church and the pastor in Zion that they would like to have a week of revival services on the subject of church doctrine. It would have been an inspiration to the fourteen hundred young people who are here to-night could they have heard these young people plead for the opportunity of these meetings. Those present can never forget the scene as those young people sat around the council table and talked heart to heart with their leaders. This beginning resulted in the services which are about to close to which Brother Elbert Smith and Brother Hopkins without reservation pledged their moral support and the resources of their office.

"Then followed three weeks of intense preparation and organized effort. At the hour of 6.30 on Sunday evening, January 30, just one week ago to-night, in the little upper room where we have made our campaign headquarters and which has become sacred by the coming and going of hundreds of young people seeking reservations for the services, or working out the preparatory plan of organization, there were called together five men—R. V. Hopkins, Daniel Williams, Harold Burgess, R. J. Lambert, and your speaker. It was a moment of sober thought, and it was recognized that all that human endeavor could accomplish by publicity and organization had been done. If God was not in this movement it meant failure. A few hundred feet away was the Stone Church, brilliantly lighted, and crowds of young people pouring in at its doors; it seemed that at this particular moment the appropriate thing to do was to pray. These men prayed as perhaps they have never prayed before. To Brother Williams and Brother Burgess, who from now on were to carry the larger part of the burden, there came a peace and confidence of the kind that passeth understanding. This was the crucial experience in the progress of the meetings. To-night we are met to hear the last word as the experiences of the week are written into history."

"Then followed the personal mention of the work done by Brother Williams and Brother Burgess upstairs, and Brother Phillips downstairs; and the presentation of the books with the names in gold on the covers.

"Brother R. V. Hopkins made the presentation of the Doctrine and Covenants to Mrs. Waits and Miss Jones, their names also being printed in gold on the covers of the books."

The Lamoni Young People

The revival on the part of the young people the past few years is marked, specially in young people's services at reunions and at the churches—east and west.

It is not therefore surprising that on Wednesday evening, February 9, the young people of Lamoni, in their prayer meeting, unanimously resolved to undertake a special revival service, and on the same evening a similar resolution was adopted at Graceland College. After the vote was taken, the Stake Presidency was notified, who, considering the request justified, granted it.

The meetings will be for the young people primarily, and will be undertaken by them and carried on under their direction.

The young people in Independence are fully organized, and it was the amalgamated organized classes that took charge

The Jews and Jesus Christ

By Edward Rannie

This missionary proposes the question: "Will the Jews believe on Jesus Christ before he comes?"

Will the Jews believe on Jesus Christ before he comes? is a question often asked, and in the answers some say yes and some say no. The writer will try to tell some things that the three standard books say on the subject. In the sixteenth chapter of Jeremiah, including the tenth to the thirteenth verses, the prophet tells why the Jews would be driven out of their land and go into captivity, and in the fifteenth verse the promise of their gathering and of all Israel is made in the following language:

"But, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."

In Ezekiel 34: 11, 12, 13, the prophet tells about his people being brought back to their own land. That prophecy was given B. C. 587, just at the time when the captivity of the Jews was being completed and they were being taken into Babylon, and in chapter 37, verse 21, the same promise is made. The term Israel sometimes means the ten tribes that were taken into captivity and sometimes it includes the Jews. Paul said all Israel should be saved. (Romans 11: 26.)

In what might be called the preface to the Book of Mormon, one of the purposes of the book is said to be "to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ."

In 2 Nephi 7: 12, Jacob gives us the following concerning the Jews:

"But behold, thus saith the Lord God: When the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance."

In 2 Nephi 12: 85, the following statement is made by the prophet:

"And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land."

In the Book of Mormon, page 699, the Prophet Mormon is speaking prophetically about the preservation of the plates and their coming forth in the due time of the Lord, and verses 41 and 42 are as follows:

"And behold they shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; that the Father may bring about, through his most beloved, his great and eternal purpose, in restoring the Jews, or all the house of Israel, to the land of their inheritance, which the Lord their God hath given them, unto the fulfilling of his covenant."

From the above it is very evident that one of the purposes of the book is to convince the Jews that Jesus, whom their fathers rejected and crucified, was their Savior, the Son of God.

In 3 Nephi 9: 69, 71, Jesus speaks as follows:

"And it shall come to pass that the time cometh, when the fullness of my gospel shall be preached unto them, and they shall believe in me, that I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name. . . . Then will the Father gather them together again, and give unto them Jerusalem for the land of their inheritance."

In Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, the Lord tells how this work is to be done. He tells about the organization of the school of the prophets and the preparation of the ministry for their work, and then this prophetic statement follows:

"The word may go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews; and then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power in convincing the nations, the heathen nations, the house of Joseph, of the gospel of their salvation."

In Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12, we are told what the work of the Twelve is under the direction of the Presidency of the church. To build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews." How can they regulate the Jews unless they belong to the church? God has but one church for Jew and Gentile, and all will be governed by the same kind of officers in the one church.

Whenever God has a work to do he calls men, and by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit qualifies them for their work, and so he called Moses, Lehi, Nephi, and Joseph Smith, and while the work that they accomplished was a great work, the restoration of Israel and the redemption of Zion will be a greater one. Jesus Christ is at the head of this great work. Those who believe in him will have the great responsibility of doing his great work.

Israel was rejected because of unbelief. (Romans 11: 20.) They turned against Christ and cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him." Paul said "blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." (Romans 11: 25.) "And then all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." (Romans 11: 26, I. T.) What will deliver the Jew and all Israel from spiritual darkness? A belief in Jesus Christ is the only means of salvation. God has no other plan, and their deliverer will come out of Zion. Where is Zion? The headquarters of the church is located there, and the First Presidency appoints the Twelve to their work in the different nations, and they appoint seventies and others to go to the nations of the world and in the several nations where the Jew is found, so they will be delivered from spiritual darkness by receiving the gospel preached to them by the missionaries sent forth from Zion.

Another important event in connection with the Jews is when Jesus Christ shall show himself on the Mount of Olives. (Zechariah 14: 4.) When will that be? Let the reader turn to Doctrine and Covenants to get light in addition to what is in the Bible. In section 45, verse 6, we are told about some of the signs of his coming. In verse 7 we are told: "But before the arm of the Lord shall fall, an angel shall sound his trumpet, and the saints that have slept shall come forth to meet me in the cloud." If that is not the first resurrection, pray what is it? "Then shall the arm of the Lord fall upon the nations, and then shall the Lord set his foot upon this mount." (Verse 8.) If that is not after the resurrection, then when is it? What mount does the Lord have reference to? It can be none other than the Mount of Olives, and in verse 9 that follows, it reads thus:

"And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them, These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King."

The Jews that are living when Jesus comes are not the ones that persecuted and crucified him. They have already been dead nearly 2,000 years. If those who were his enemies and put him to death are ever in the presence of Jesus, it will be after they have been resurrected.

Music as a Factor in Church Work

By A. Jensen

"Good music has a purifying effect. It is an art of life and power."

"Praise him with the sound of the trumpet; praise him with the psaltery and harp. . . . Praise him with stringed instruments and organs. . . . Praise ye the Lord."—Psalm 150.

Henry Ward Beecher said, "Music cleanses the understanding, inspires it, and lifts it into a realm which it would not reach if it were left to itself."

Music of the right kind is a great factor in the work of God. It carries with it joy and gladness, and if we would take it into our life as a God-given gift, it would be uplifting and encouraging. Good music has a purifying effect. It is an art of life and power. It should mean to us strength to bear the burdens of life.

To make music a fitting garment to the words of the hymns is both impressive, delightful, and edifying. But that means a talent in that line. Jesus said, "Seek and ye shall find." When God gives a gift to man he intends for them to make the right use of it, cultivate it, and make it bear fruit. But the gifts of God cannot be bought with money. There is no royal road to learning. I know by observation, men whom I associated with in my younger days, who had a desire to learn music, learned what we might call to play, but there was no music to it.

As a people of God, we should look inside of ourselves and discover the natural ability we possess. And if we would seek to know where we can be of most use in the Lord's work, and be willing to work where the Lord can best use us, there would be a power manifested for good.

Music, as well as preaching, will never cleanse, inspire, or lift us up until it reaches the understanding. To sing with the understanding is a part of the divine injunction. This is impossible without some degree of musical education.

There is no easy road to success in any good undertaking. To listen to a choir well-trained is as interesting as good preaching. Almost all occupations are cheered and lightened by music.

One writer has said: "When the gifts of music and of song bring us near the Infinite, when it expresses the things that have no shape in human words, and the soul looks across the cloudy elements into the glories of celestial light, it is then we recognize the value of music and of song in the house of God."

The old Spalding Institute at Nauvoo, Illinois, has been converted by the Government into a Federal Vocational Board School for former service men.

The ministerial association and the funeral directors of Des Moines, Iowa, have agreed not to officiate in Sunday funerals hereafter. They feel that it is an imposition to expect them to do this work on the Sabbath, and the only exception will be in cases of contagious disease where the law compels interment within thirty-six hours. The no-Sunday rule has been in effect in other cities for some time, with a much better observance of the day as a result.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A NEW SORT OF REVIVAL

Saints' meeting to strengthen faith, not for converts. Fourteen hundred young persons met in Independence Stone Church and six hundred of their fathers and mothers came, too.

A song broke in upon the quiet prayer of fourteen hundred young persons in the Latter Day Saint Stone Church at Independence last night. Six hundred older persons, who were holding a service in the basement chapel, had begun a hymn. The gospel services for young people which are being held in the Stone Church every night this week except Saturday are for those between thirteen and thirty years, but the older people come anyway and hold their services in the basement.

Every seat in the auditorium was filled last night when Harold C Burgess, musical director, opened the service with songs in which people in different parts of the house took part by turns. It resembled a revival. But so far as it is a revival it is to awaken a deeper faith on the part of those who belong to the church. There is no attempt to convert others, and there is not room for them in the church.

Elder Daniel T. Williams of Lamoni, Iowa, who conducts the services, uses crisp sentences and striking illustrations from the Bible. He appeals to the reason rather than the emotions, and seems to be speaking to a jury that he would convince rather than to boys and girls whom he would arouse. His sermon was on baptism last night and he went into considerable detail and gave many quotations to show that the Latter Day Saint form of baptism is the true one.

"Be as logical with things of God as you are with things of everyday life," Elder Williams told them. "Do you know how food is turned into muscle? You would not think much of the man who would not eat dinner until he found out that mystery. There are mysteries connected with God's laws, too."—Kansas City Star, February 3, 1921.

LABOR SHARING IN MANAGEMENT

Probably three hundred corporations are now operating on the management-sharing plan, according to the Literary Digest. This is a decided step towards industrial peace. Included in this number, it states, are Bethlehem Steel, Standard Oil, Western Union, Westinghouse, American Cash Register, Colorado Fuel and Iron, General Electric, and half a dozen others equally famous.

The article, which is taken from the New York World, states that it is purely in an experimental stage, the great majority of those trying it establishing their systems within the past three years; it still remains to be tested by hard times. But so far as tried, it has been found to be quite successful, both with the management and with the men, and both are reported as being enthusiastic for it. It is suggested that it is the remedy for strikes. It gives laborers recognition and manhood, in a direct share in the management. It seems quite certain that the best work is done only when the workman feels a personal interest in his work, and feels that he has a share in the company, that it is his company, and that this pride is developed.

This is a factor that we should remember in our attempt toward industrial justice. Unfortunately many men in the church do not yet recognize the value of such loyalty and esprit de corps.

It has an importance in bearing on the subject of steward-ships. Does the stewardship belong to one man, the manager, or are all those who work for the church coworkers, to whose united efforts is due the credit of success?

CHRISTIANITY AND MARRIAGE

By George Shillito, M. A., of Hope Congregational Church, Oldham. An address delivered to the Congregational Union at Southampton, England, September 30.

This is not a subject I should have chosen for myself, but the urgency of the situation with regard to marriage may well demand the earnest thought of this assembly. It may be said that such deliberations have not been pressed upon us by any special experiences within our own churches. A man may spend fifty years in our ministry and never be brought into contact with the dissolution of a home by divorce; and though he may know of unhappy marriages, and even of cases of separation, it has been rare to find such cases embittered by the sin of adultery. We have therefore assumed that these unpleasant matters might be left outside our formal and open conferences. In our decent, cleanly homes how indelicate would be any allusion to the vice-inspired tragedies outside! And most of our churches feel a similar sense of discomfort when their preachers imply that they have any direct or personal interest in such experiences.

I believe that the habit that has kept our pulpits and assemblies aloof from these dire evils is an artificial convention, made possible only by blindness to facts, and that satisfaction with selected virtues which colored the mood of the Pharisee in his contempt for the publican. We have few divorced people amongst us—guilty or innocent—but how many have quietly slipped away from our fellowships before the calamity became manifest? We pride ourselves on the virtue of our young people, but what of thousands who have left our schools? Why did they disappear from our churches without a word of farewell or explanation? When we seek them out, their excuses are plainly unreal—after a while we understand.

It was always a preposterous idea that our churches could be in the world and yet shut out the world. The tides of evil creep through our little palisades. Doctor Dale, who never allowed himself to be the victim of pleasant fancies, said to his people—the decorous, responsible middle classes of Birmingham—as far back as 1870: "Among ourselves, among our people with whom many of you are in constant association, there is an amount of sin not suspected by many, but known to some of us, which fills me with sadness and dismay." Any man in Lancashire with Stanley Houghton's gifts might have written Hindle Wakes out of his experiences of those whose fathers and mothers were once in our churches.

Young People and Marriage

In epochs of revolt it is by no accident that marriage and the church become twin objects of assault. The family and the church stand and fall together, and the influences abroad just now that threaten the disintegration of the family demand the instant and virile antagonism of the church.

Marriage, as a fundamental social institution, has always been challenged by laxity in sexual relationships. When chastity is ignored, marriage is contemned. If, to-day, we ought to avoid panic in our dealing with the condition of things, it is still more urgent that we should not blind ourselves to the grim challenge of a widespread sensualism. It is everywhere. No class, no community, can prove exemption.

As we turn into the reverence and calm of our churches at evening worship, I wonder whether we realize the tumult of passion that surges round our young people in these strange days—yes, and within them also. Life is not an excerpt from a decorous mid-Victorian novel for our young men and women. Our sermons, I fear, often miss the accent of reality because we do not speak with sense of the facts of life. And one sad fact is this; that unchastity has ceased to disturb the conscience of multitudes, who in all other matters of the law are straightforward and honorable. Now to those who yield to this atmosphere, marriage is deprecated, and at the best it is a mere expedient. It may be broken any time, with divorce or without it.

But we have to do with something more than mere indulgence. It is not difficult to discover both in life and literature the doctrine that marriage frustrates the true self-development of the individual; that such relationships are infringements of the personality, which must be free to live its own life to the uttermost. This is not a mere apology for lust. The contention has within it elements of truth, for which the Christian theory and policy of life must find place. As long ago as 1874, Ibsen wrote The Doll's House, and many have slammed the door since then.

Frivolous Degradation of Marriage

It is here that the advocate of divorce appears with the sweet reasonableness of the mediator. The individual, he says, must not be cramped in personal development, but society needs the security that can be assured only by the institution of the family. Children must be borne, nurtured, and educated. He would safeguard all interests by a cheap, easy, and comprehensive system of divorce. Thus chafing personalities shall be liberated, and homes of a sort maintained by a succession of wives and husbands. The goal of this new ideal order and its present limit is one wife, one husband, in three years.

A further trouble arises from that uplifted conception of womanly status which Christianity itself has developed. So long as woman was regarded more or less as a chattel possessed by a family or a husband, and so long as she herself accepted the position, it was possible to have multitudes of homes—and not necessarily unhappy homes—based upon the supposition that it was a sufficient career for the wife to care for the children, minister to her husband, and spend her whole time in housework and its implied duties. There are still women quite content with such an experience, but they are becoming fewer every day.

That ideal of a woman's life is assailed along various lines of criticism. What of the higher calls of life—knowledge, art, music, the interests of public service? Ought marriage to cripple womanhood by frustrating the development of its undoubted capacities? The tide of pleasure is running at its full just now, and questions are being asked on a lower range.

Why should a woman be fastened to a round of drab routine and lose the joy and pleasure of life? From another point of view it is asked, Why should she occupy a status which by the law of the land is still inferior or subordinate to that of the husband? Legally, her children are not her own. And yet again, she resents the position of the unpaid partner in which she so frequently finds herself. The worst danger of all, probably, is the ignorance, levity, and frivolity with which men and women enter the marriage relationship. In thousands of cases there is no deep love, no romance, no sense of spiritual significance, no grasp of moral obligation, and no understanding of reciprocal sacrifice and service. The giggling and cackling of middle-aged fools at wedding feasts is a correct symbol of all that many understand by the sacrament of marriage.

Now, the church cannot remain passive and inert in the midst of an onset that threatens one of its fundamental institutions. When the City Temple issued its attack upon the old order of religious thought a few years ago, every preacher and every teacher sprang to arms to defend the faith which he imagined had been delivered to the saints. Even our primary departments stood fast in that evil day—with diagram and picture drove the terrors of immanence from their doubting infants. This attack upon marriage is a far more dangerous threat to Christianity than any new theology, or even than the old theology. Ought it not to be fought with a worthy passion and determination?

The Christian Ideal of Marriage

No form of society can be indifferent to the marriage ideals of its people. The Christian ideal is indeed the crown of an evolution stretching across the ages; but however crude the first traces of a marriage order, however revolting some of its customs, no form of society has ever been different to that order. No society has tolerated promiscuity as the basis of its continued existence. The sure instinct of communities compels them to guard the family. Still more is the church interested in its purity and preservation. The more precious our faith, the more we shall resist all influences undermining the Christian conception of marriage and the family. The Romanists, at any rate, are loyal to their faith: with a perfect logic, they passionately resent the disintegration of the family. Now, we claim that our Protestant conception of marriage is higher than that of Catholicism. If Catholicism exalts the virginity of monk and nun to the highest moral order of human experience, say what it will, the normal married life of the ordinary man and woman must be something lower in moral value. We repudiate that depreciation of marriage. Then we ought to be more and not less strenuous in our defense of the family.

The Christian conception of marriage, based as it must be upon the teaching of our Lord, and developed by the interpretation of his teaching through the guidance of the Holy Spirit within the church is essentially spiritual and essentially mystical. The New Testament does not disregard the physical relationship involved in marriage. It frankly concedes something in view of the hideous temptations of a heathen world, but it does not teach that marriage is to be a remedy for sin. The New Testament inherits all that was best in the Jewish conception of the family, and is imperative concerning the nurture of children, but it nowhere lays down that the bringing of children into the world is a sufficient reason for the marriage of man and woman. Marriage is neither a physical relationship nor a utilitarian device to preserve the race. Its physical basis is itself a spiritual thing. It is a fellowship within the highest form of human love, that love which can exist only between man and woman. Thus is created a sphere within which character is elicited, disciplined, and developed. The soul of each is strengthened by the love and faith of the other. It is upon such a fellowship that God bestows the blessing of children and the sacred tasks of the family. Only within such a sphere can the race be worthily continued and its progress insured. Marriage, to Christ, is a perfect union of love and affection, an entire community of aims and interests and worldly possessions. Because in the beginning God made man and woman, each for the other, a man at last leaves father and mother and cleaves unto his wife, and the twain become one flesh, so that they are no more twain but one. "What therefore God hath joined together," he says, "let no man put asunder." No exegesis, however skillful, can overthrow the clear record of Saint Mark in the interest of a doubtful phrase in Saint Matthew. If Saint Paul can say, "Husbands, love your wives as Christ also loved the church," he can hardly contemplate a relationship terminable by divorce. Christ does not divorce the church for unfaithfulness. The church of John's vision is often a faithless church, but in the end it is still the bride of the Lamb.

The subordination of one to the other within the marriage bond is a secondary matter. Saint Paul does not achieve the final interpretation of the Christian theory, nor even of his own principles in his practical counsels of wifely obedience, though there is little cause of offense in what he enjoins. If man and wife alike are in the Lord, neither need resent the word of the partner. But the development of the Christian theory of marriage is not conditioned by such temporary injunctions, but by the deeper principles that declare "there is no male nor female . . . but a new creature in Christ Jesus," and by such a word as Saint Peter's "husband and wife . . . joint heirs of salvation." Such words as these are authoritative for our understanding of the marriage order, and if marriage is to be preserved it will be through the right fulfillment of their implications of an equal fellowship.

A Union Spiritual and Physical

We have, then, to teach our young people a high doctrine of marriage; that is a divine, spiritual thing, a mystic union of man and woman, not unlike the mystic union of the soul and Christ. We must put away that unwholesome shame that still seems to regard the sex relationships of marriage as in some way a falling away from high idealism. Let us say frankly that two persons who achieve a healthy, happy fatherhood and motherhood have thereby entered into a fuller realization of their true life in God. Let us teach also that in the sacrifices and considerations and toils thereby involved they are preparing the stable social order of the future, making possible at last the kingdom of God on earth. We ought never to permit any silly jests about marriage in our churches. Let it be idealized there, in thought and word. Two great moments we can teach our children to anticipate, of which wistfully to dream: the moment when the soul knows that it rests forever in the love of God, and the moment when two souls find life in an imperishable love.

Training for Married Life

There are practical defenses by which we must protect the ideal from human weakness and infirmity. Some sensible training both for man and woman should anticipate the possible strains of the new life. There ought to be a more equal division of labor in the home. We ought to strengthen marriage by delivering the wife from the burdensome weariness of dull days and routine tasks. We are in the grip of inherited incumbrances. Our homes are designed to give the maximum of work; our towns are canopied with unnecessary smoke and swept by clouds of dust. We cover our floors with carpets demanding daily sweeping and furniture specially designed to harbor all possible particles of dust. We indulge in needless and over-elaborate meals. We neglect the most obvious labor-saving contrivances. Our love of the open fire means hours extra work per week for our wives. If Christianity preaches romantic idealism in marriage, it preaches also the supremacy of common sense in the home. We insist on our Marthas being cumbered with much serving, whereas but one or few things are really necessary. Our girls, with their broadening and deepening education, will not endure days of futile, wasteful, dreary routine in their homes. They will be better wives, better mothers, and nobler women by being set free from such bonds.

WHAT WE BELIEVE

Immortality and the Resurrection

By Elbert A. Smith

A discussion of one of the most vital of religious issues—one with which every thoughtful person will desire to be conversant.

"Those who hope for no other life are dead even for this."
—Goethe.

"Our Savior Jesus Christ . . . hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."—2 Timothy 1: 10.

"Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. . . . But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept."—1 Corinthians 15: 12-20.

In the death cell where great Socrates waited for his draught of hemlock, they fell to discussing that question of the ages, immortality. Some contended that man is like a harp; his emotions, his thoughts, his deeds merely the music that issues from the harp; that when the harp is destroyed man ceases to be.

Socrates replied that man is neither harp nor harmony; that man is the harper; and even if the harp were broken the musician would still exist.

The Rock That Became a Throne

The belief of Socrates was put to the test when Jesus was laid to rest in the rock-hewn tomb. A great stone was rolled before the door and the august seal of Rome was placed upon the tomb to certify that all was over and done. There reposed the hopes of humanity; and humanity, through its dominant governmental authority, had said that the tomb should forever remain sealed and inviolate.

But this man said, "I lay down my life, that I might take it up again. . . . I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."—John 10: 17, 18.

The great rock that rested on the heart of the world, sealed by imperial Rome, was presently rolled aside by divine power, and became the throne of an angel from heaven, with raiment like snow and countenance like lightning, who announced:

"Ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay."—Matthew 28: 5, 6.

Hear it, ye mothers who weep by night over empty cradles! The angel rolled the rock from off your broken hearts. Hear it, all people!

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15: 20-23.

"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."—Revelation 1: 18.

Even Atheism Discerns a Star of Hope

It is a strange phenomenon of the times that many have lost faith in immortality, whereas formerly it was generally accepted. Some even put on a spirit of bravado, and pretend to treat the subject with indifference. Men shrug their shoulders and dismiss the subject, saying, "One world at a time."

Probably this attitude is assumed by those who, having

To rebuild the houses of the nation under the dictates of a sane judgment would be a profitable investment, for it would minister to the creation of millions of happy homes, in which husbands and wives might find a full development of soul and mind and body.

Some form of sex teaching ought to be given; but who can say how, or when, or what? The love of romance and poetry and good books will probably achieve more. I feel surer of a lad's purity if he has learned to love Rosalind and Portia, Rose Bradwardine and Di Vernon, than if he had been elaborately instructed in the mysteries of sex. If some of us sped through years of stirring passion without shipwreck, it was because we were drawn past the perilous isles by the desire for that shining dream of romance—that star whose track of light on the waves we followed—and saw not the luring dangers within the shadow.

Moral Stability of a Nation

What has Christianity to say or to do about the failures within the marriage state, and the moral failures outside it which have such a strong influence over it, with the crowds waiting in the courts, and separated from one another, and living openly or secretly in sin? Surely, first of all, we have to say that we will not sacrifice the moral welfare of the race—our race—to the minority who have made shipwreck of their earthly destiny. We did not hesitate to bid a million men to die for the political stability of the empire. We plunged a million homes into the shadow of death that England might endure. If the moral stability of the community depends upon the great historic institution of marriage, rooted in the very fabric of human nature, brought to all the fullness of its worth and beauty in its Christian development, then we must have the courage here, too, to say that the moral welfare of the race must be preserved, even though the individual suffers. The way to health is not the performance of millions of skillful operations, but by the wise developments of preventive sanitation and medicine.

Yet that is not the last word—Christian men and women have something better to offer than divorce. It is part of the evangelistic mission of the church to put aside forever the morbid tradition of monkish psychology, that these have sinned an unforgivable and unforgettable sin. There is no hope for us in this age of moral calamity unless our message of hope and mercy is accompanied by the final refusal of Pharisaic exaggeration and of artificial moral valuations. Let us meet the problem of the fallen not with the hideous barbarity that inscribed the scarlet letter on the breast of Hester Prynne, but with the infinite love and pity of Him who, stooping down, wrote some gracious word silently with His finger in the sand and said, "Neither do I condemn . . . sin no more."—The Christian World Pulpit, October 13, 1920.

According to recent analyses made by the Department of Labor, the increased cost of living in New York City, of December 31, 1921, as compared with June 1, 1914, is 101.4 per cent. In other words, the cost of living is slightly more than double. This, however, represents a decline since June, 1920, for the same costs of a family were 119.2 per cent above the cost of June, 1914. Figures are based on an estimate of 42 per cent for food; clothing 16.6 per cent; housing 14.3 per cent; fuel and light 4.3 per cent; furniture and furnishings 3.3 per cent; miscellany, doubtless including savings, vacation, doctor bills, etc., 18.7 per cent.

He that can have patience can have what he will.—Franklin.

lost faith, feel that they may as well put on a bold face to a bad situation that they cannot remedy.

But when men come face to face with the loss of loved ones, when in hours of contemplation their spiritual vision is opened, this attitude of indifference breaks down. Even the agnostic expresses a feeling of great concern. Ingersoll, standing at the side of his brother's grave, declared, "In the hour of death hope sees a shining star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

Materialism Has the Worst Hell of All

Huxley, who was agnostic as touching this question of immortality, wrote:

"It flashes across me at all sorts of times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more of what is going on than I did in 1800. I would sooner be in hell a good deal, at any rate in one of the upper circles where the climate and company are not too trying."

So it has been reserved for the creed of materialism to imagine the worst hell of all. Subscribing to the creed that death ends all, the heaven-aspiring, immortal soul of man is filled with intolerable despair.

Darwin said, "It is an intolerable thought that man and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation, after such long-continued, slow progress."

The "Creeds" of Materialism

If we adopt the thought that death ends all, with correlated ideas, we are in essence adopting a creed. We might just as well face the issue and decide for ourselves the logical conclusions that will follow such a position.

Granting the creed of materialism to be correct, the universe is irrational, and we are the victims of blind forces that are both unreasonable and unjust. Having struggled upward for centuries untold and having finally brought into existence personality, something that can feel, that can aspire, than can sacrifice, and love, struggle, and die for an ideal, then these insensate forces blindly destroy the climax of their production, the most valuable thing in the universe.

We must conclude then that "the great soul of Abraham Lincoln was sacrificed out of deference to the few particles of matter that were deranged by the bullet of the assassin."

The Violin Maker

What would we think of one who should toil for many years to produce a violin, a perfect instrument, and learn to play upon it a divine melody, and then smash it to atoms? We would say that insanity entered in somewhere into that proceeding.

What shall we say of the forces of the universe if for eons they have toiled to produce a human spirit, an intelligent entity, that can think, feel, aspire, love, hate, reason, and then at the hour of death dash it to oblivion, and start the process all over again with some other individual?

"Is God blowing soap bubbles? Did he dip the pipe of his power in the suds of matter and blow the character of Jesus, that it might entertain him with its iridescence, burst to his satisfaction, and be gone?"—Fosdick.

If we take this materialistic view and believe that death ends conscious existence, it all appears as a great, irrational, unjust tragedy—the superlative, universal tragedy.

All Adequate Incentive Gone

This conception blots out from our philosophy faith, hope, and charity. There is no ground left for faith in God; there is no ultimate hope left for either the individual or the race; and there is no adequate incentive for charity.

But the Apostle Paul says, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity." There is the contrast.

This other philosophy takes away all hope of ultimate reward and fear of ultimate punishment. No incentive left there. It takes away that which is vastly higher and nobler than either of these, the impulse and the desire to serve, because it offers no adequate incentive to service, indicating as it does that there can be no ultimate fruitage of our service worthy the sacrifices we are called upon to make.

A Short Look Ahead

Some seek a ray of light in the universal gloom of such a theory by assuming that society will gather up and conserve human gains. The individual will perish but society will go on. They have acquired "social consciousness" and are willing to obliterate self for succeeding generations—as they should be.

It is a noble sentiment, so far as it goes, but the merit of their theology is apparent rather than real. Its plausibility depends on "a short look into the future." If we take a "long look into the future," we discover nothing in it worthy of our consideration.

If we look far enough we discover that if the individual must perish, so sometime, somewhere, the race must perish. The world will have burned out. The race will have expended its initial impulse. And sometime, somewhere, the last living man must go down to his grave in a world of graves.

Where then are the social gains? Where then are those things we have sacrificed for and bequeathed to society? They are eternally lost.

Absorption Into Deity

Another class long for absorption into Deity, or some mysterious reservoir of soul energy, and thus hope to escape the eternal loss incident to the blotting out of personality.

"What does it matter?" they ask, "if individuality perish, so long as all love, justice, morality, and truth that are in the individual flow back into the great source and are preserved?"

But remember, these attributes we do not wish to have blotted out and lost are attributes that can be exercised only between and among individual entities. They cannot be exercised by one individual upon himself alone.

And so when we look far enough into the future and see this old planet nothing but a tomb, all those qualities gone back into God, we have God alone, all love, with nothing but himself to lavish that love upon; all justice, with no one to exercise justice toward but himself.

How much more sublime is the New Testament conception that we are collaborators with God, that we are and always shall be independent, ever-existing, intelligent entities between whom and God there can always exist this continuation of justice and this flow of love.

Better Had We Never Been Born

Neither absorption into Deity nor self-effacement in society offer any permanent hope for humanity. If the creed of materialism be true and death ends all, then, as Paul says, man is of "all creatures most miserable"; by blind, unreasoning forces having been brought up to the heritage of intelligence only that he may contemplate the black abyss at his feet.

Then the language that was used concerning the miserable Judas Iscariot may well be used concerning the entire human race: "Good were it for that man if he had never been born."

Well does Fosdick say:

"Nevertheless, when, believing in annihilation, one takes account of the long travail of the ages, weighs in his imagination all the agony of struggle and misfortune there, and perceives the inevitable end, when, like a burned-out cinder, the earth whirls back to its primeval chaos, he can understand the meaning of the philosopher who wrote: "Considering the immense and protracted sorrows of mankind, it would have been better if the earth had remained like the moon, a mass of slag, idle and without a tenant."—The Assurance of Immortality, p. 24.

A Better Creed

But how much higher and better the thought we have to present. We may say of all worthy men, as was said of one of old:

"We doubt not that for one so true
There must be other, nobler work to do."

Paul takes up the same thought and says that God has not baptized us with the spirit of fear; and he goes on to add:

"But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect."—Hebrews 12: 22, 23.

Belief in Immortality Not Unscientific

Should any man or woman hesitate in making a choice between these two conceptions, between these two creeds?

Ah, but some one says, science has demonstrated that man is wholly mortal, and that death ends all. That is a misconception. Science has never done anything of the kind. A belief in immortality is not inconsistent with scientific research and enlightenment.

Many quotations from eminent authorities might be given to support that statement. We present two or more from two of the greatest of modern scientists: William James, the psychologist; and Sir Oliver Lodge, president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

During comparatively recent years the science of psychology has demonstrated in a remarkable manner the dependence of the mind upon the physical brain. This dependence is so great and so marked that many students have concluded that when the brain ceases to exist the mind ceases to exist.

With the facts of psychology religion has no quarrel. They but sustain the statement made in modern revelation emphasizing the extremely intimate relations of body and spirit: "The spirit and the body is the soul of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

Erroneous conclusions drawn from the facts stated by psychology and kindred sciences have caused this modern loss of faith in immortality.

In an address at Harvard University, Professor William James took pains to correct these false conclusions. He said:

"But such dependence on the brain for this natural life would in nowise make the immortal life impossible—it might be quite compatible with human life behind the veil hereafter."—Human Immortality, p. 18.

"Even though our soul's life (as here below it is revealed to us) may be in literal strictness the function of a brain that perishes, yet it is not at all impossible, but on the contrary quite possible, that the life may still continue when the brain itself is dead. The supposed impossibility of its continuing comes from too superficial a look at the admitted fact of functional dependence."—Human Immortality, p. 12.

In his presidential address before the British Association, 1913, while considering psychical facts brought before the attention of scientists, Sir Oliver Lodge said:

"The facts so examined have convinced me that memory and affection are not limited to that association with matter by which alone they can manifest themselves here and now, and that personality persists beyond bodily death.—Continuity, p. 103.

And he wisely adds,

"Yes, and there is more to say than that. The methods of science are not the only way, though they are our way, of being piloted to truth."—Continuity, p. 104.

Science, it is true, may not have demonstrated that life continues beyond the grave. Demonstration is made by those who pass over the other side, and the moment their demonstration is completed they are removed from the circle of mundane investigators. We can only learn what they have learned as we shall receive revelation from some higher intelligence that knows what is existing on the other side. And we do not need to depend on doubtful manifestations of Spiritualistic mediums. We have a "more sure word of prophecy" whereunto we do well that we give heed.

Religion and Revelation Enter

Here is where true religion enters. Here is where true revelation appears. That is why Paul says that Jesus Christ has "brought immortality to light."

Jesus revealed it, not only by word, but also by his great experience when he came up on the other side of the grave and said that the keys of death and of hell were delivered into his hands.

The Ancient Promises

It is our purpose to call attention to and reiterate the ancient and eternal promises. The hope as well as the morality of the race depends upon a proper understanding of the nature and destiny of man.

Apparently in anguish of spirit, Job cried out: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

That question has ever been in the hearts of men. In every little hamlet some home has darkened windows and crepe upon the door.

Job got the answer to his question. He got it by revelation from that Man who brought immortality to light. The answer is so important that it brings hope to replace despair. It gives a different color to life.

It was so important that Job wished that his words were printed in a book, "graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever."

Listen to the answer to his question:

"For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."—Job 19: 25-27.

The Promises of Jesus

Jesus, who demonstrated the resurrection, and issuing from the tomb in defiance of Cæsar and Death, brought immortality to light, "the first fruits of them that slept," made these promises:

"I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11: 25.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 25-29.

Two Resurrections

Jesus thus clearly announces the resurrection, and that there shall be two resurrections. The resurrection of the just shall occur at his second coming, and they shall reign with him a thousand years. The wicked are not raised up until the thousand years are ended, prior to the great judgment mentioned in the twentieth chapter of Revelation.

"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thessalonians 4: 14-16.

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20: 4-6.

With What Body Shall the Dead Come Forth?

Volumes of profitless speculation might be written on the character of the body that shall come forth. Innumerable questions might be asked that no man could answer with our present knowledge. The facts of the resurrection are no more wonderful or strange than the facts of birth and life that we see every day but do not comprehend.

We are content with this confession:

"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."—Psalm 17: 15.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3: 2.

"For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Romans 6: 5.

"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Philippians 3: 20, 21.

"But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."—1 Corinthians 15: 38.

"It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power."—1 Corinthians 15: 42, 43.

What Manner of Men Ought We to Be?

In closing we wish to present this thought. If we are in fact immortal, we are at the present time in one sense immortal. That is, we have already entered upon an existence that will never have an end.

In view of that fact, what manner of men ought we to be? The things that we do now not only affect us here, and for three score years and ten, or less, but they affect us forever and forever. They will either make or mar for eternity. If men could only sense this, they would not live as they live now.

Jesus Christ came here with that conviction and always retained it. He gave us the supreme example of right living. He demonstrated the manner of life that a man lives who in

HYMNS AND POEMS

A Prayer of Consecration

By J. E. Vanderwood

O thou God, how I adore thee!
 Wilt thou not enrich my life?
 Let me be thy servant fully,
 Overcoming sin and strife.
 Help me, Lord, to know thee better;
 Help me live the life of love;
 Let my spirit be directed
 From they courts of light above.
 There is hope and joy and blessings
 In the gospel of thy Son;
 And I plead for light, O Father;
 Let me see thy Holy One.
 Let me see him yet the clearer,
 Let me know his mighty power,
 Let me hear his voice in counsel
 Every day and every hour.
 Let me, Lord, possess thy wisdom
 In the measure thou dost choose,
 That in all my life and action
 Foolish ways I may refuse.
 Let me live as one that loveth
 All the pure, the true in life—
 Help me, Lord, to teach my brother
 To forsake the fields of strife.
 Let me teach him ways of wisdom—
 Let me see thee as thou art,
 That to him, my erring brother,
 Thine own truth I may impart.
 Lord, I feel my lack without thee,
 Oh, how faint my soul would be
 Were it not for thy good Spirit
 Speaking words of truth to me!
 I would be far more efficient;
 Lord, I crave for light divine;
 Let me see and know thee better—
 May I thus be wholly thine?
 Take me, Lord, my all I give thee—
 Use me as you can and will;
 Let me learn each day my duty—
 All thy purpose to fulfill.

his heart and his soul believes he is an immortal being who will never die.

"Whatever crazy sorrow saith,
 No life that breathes with human breath
 Has ever truly longed for death.
 'Tis life, whereof our nerves are scant,
 Oh, life, not death, for which we pant;
 More life, and fuller, that I want."

—Tennyson.

In reply to that great appeal for fuller life, coming up from the human heart, Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

He shows us how we may be worthy of the greater, fuller, better life, here and hereafter, forever and forever.

I am strong when thou art with me;
 Thou hast been my shield in life,
 Only keep me now, my Father,
 From the foolishness of strife.
 Let me learn to be constructive,
 Let me lead my fellow men,
 Let me speak thy truth in kindness
 With my tongue and with my pen;
 It is thee, O Lord, my Savior,
 That I would reveal to men;
 Help me then to fully know thee,
 And to hear thy voice again.
 When the shadows gather thicker
 And tradition would assail,
 Speak thy Word again, my Father,
 That thy truth may thus prevail.
 Lord, I have no wealth to offer;
 All I am has come from thee;
 Wilt thou use me, thy creation?
 Wilt thou draw me, Lord, to thee?
 Wilt thou give me understanding?
 Wilt thou take me, Lord, to be Thine own servant? Although feeble
 Let me serve my fellow men;
 Let me feel the joy of giving
 For their good, that they again
 May awaken to the privilege
 Thou hast given unto them.
 To the service of my fellows
 Lord, I consecrate my all.
 May I help my needy brother,
 Even though my life is small?
 Wilt thou, then, sustain me, Father?
 Lead me by the hand, I pray;
 Teach me how to serve the needy
 Better, every hour and day.
 Let me feel thy gentle presence,
 Let me see and know thy will,
 Let me know thy truth, my Father,
 And thy purpose I'll fulfill.
 Please accept my consecration;
 It is all I have to give;
 But if thou wilt bless the offering,
 It will triumph, Lord, and live.
 Take it, then; my all I give thee;
 Let me live for thee each day.
 Help me, too, my blessed Master,
 To show erring ones the way.
 I contribute full and freely,
 This my living sacrifice;
 May all others see and follow
 And be numbered with the wise.
 This, O Lord, is my petition;
 Hear it in thy court, I pray—
 Take the sacrifice and use it
 As thou wilt, in thine own way.

New General Cradle Roll Superintendent

We have a very happy announcement to make to our cradle roll workers. It is that Sister Horace B. Roberts, who served the Sunday school so many years in the capacity of general cradle roll superintendent, has consented to take charge of this part of our departmental work. She succeeds Sister Rebecca Mills, who, because of illness of herself and various members of her family throughout the summer, was compelled in October to relinquish the work, sharing with us the regret that circumstances had hindered her from giving the full contribution of service to this welfare work she had desired to give.

Sister Roberts brings to us not only the experience born of her past association with it, but an enlarged vision of its possibilities obtained from her recent studies of child welfare. With her experience and high ideals, too, are coupled a deep devotion to the cause of childhood and an energy and consecration due to her loyalty to the church and its mission. This is a combination which augurs well for the advancement of our cradle roll department and its connection with the great child welfare work needed throughout the church.

Sister Roberts, following the splendid efforts of our birth registrar in that direction, has been able to catch up with much of the correspondence which had accumulated upon the cradle roll desk. She feels, however, that some of it is dated too far back for her replies now to be of much assistance, and she requests all those interested in the cradle roll work, who have written and received no reply, to accept the explanation here offered, and to write again, assuring them that their letters will receive as prompt attention as she can possibly give.

All local cradle roll superintendents—and there should be one in every branch of the church—will do well to write Sister Roberts and receive the inspirational messages she will be wishing to give them. She is planning some very constructive and worth-while welfare work for the children of Independence, the latest being a campaign to teach parents the value of milk in the diet of young children, and an effort to bring all under-nourished children in the Columbian School (which most of our Latter Day Saint children attend) up to average through its more liberal use. Not long ago Sister Roberts prepared a petition to Congress asking for the passage of the Sheppard-Towner bill for the protection of mothers and children, which petition she circulated through Independence, obtaining hundreds of signatures. These activities may well be reproduced in other places, and our cradle roll workers, as they become enthused with the real service they are able to render the church through pushing the welfare

And thus we come together
 Our gratitude to show.

To prove that we are willing
 Again to take the stand,
 For loyalty and service
 In work divinely planned.

For working for the Master,
 Is anything more sweet
 Than acts of loving service
 We bring to Jesus' feet?

Accept our praise, O Savior;
 Help us thy love to see;
 Bestow us with thy favor
 Until eternity.

(physical and mental as well as spiritual) of its children, will be grateful for the suggestions and ideas which may be passed on to them through this department.

Just a Little Heart-to-Heart Talk With Our Cradle Roll Visitors

Sister Laura Mann, R. N., nursing director to the church under appointment from the church physician, and head of the health division of our Women's Department, has sent in a notice to all cradle roll visitors which she desires to have given wide publicity. Sister Mann and her assistants examine very carefully all the records sent in by the cradle roll workers, and she wishes to insist upon greater care and accuracy on the part of those workers in filling out the records.

She says some of the records are not dated, and some fail to put down the date of the visit. Some fail to record that the visit is the "first," the "second," or whichever one it happens to be. Be careful about this, as it helps those examining the records to properly link up the various examinations.

Some leave off the age of the parents. Sometimes it is difficult to get the parents to consent to give their ages. Why some people are reluctant about this is a mystery, and of course we cannot compel anyone to give his age if he prefers not to do so. But if the parents could know that no use is made of this information except through its bearing upon the health and development of their child, they might be helped to overcome their reluctance. Some scientists claim there is a direct relation between the ages of the parents and the physical and mental status of the child. Physicians and nurses are able to diagnose more correctly when possessed of these facts.

Some visitors fail to tell what is the father's occupation, or the mother's, if she is occupied in any professional capacity. And yet it is not difficult to understand, for instance, that a man whose work takes him out-of-doors habitually, such as a teamster or farmer, has a physique more conducive to the transmission of health to his offspring than has one who stoops over a ledger all day, or inhales the vitiating air of some manufacturing concern or chemical laboratory. A mother, too, who "takes in washing" or does heavy manual labor right up to the day of her delivery is apt to find in her child a reflection of the severity of her work and a deprivation of some inheritances to which the child was entitled. Will not the cradle roll visitors consider this fact carefully and try to fill out the record with all the items requested? Sometimes a mere entry, "Housework for family of five," will be sufficient, or "Sewing outside of home," will tell its story to the trained physician or nurse who examines these records.

Sister Mann says also that some workers fail to tell whether the child spends a part of each day out-of-doors, and about how much. The rural child is fortunate in being able to grow up as God intended it to grow—in daily contact with Mother Nature in her most simple forms. The child of the city, no matter whether he is shut in a luxurious apartment which nowadays takes the place, in many cases, of a real "home," or shut in a crowded tenement house, or lives with a mother who does not realize the value of the out-of-doors for her child, is apt to be deprived of the health-giving forces contained in fresh air and sunlight. Try to bring this fact out in your record-taking, and if the mother has been lax in this particular, help her to see her duty and the necessity for arranging that her children shall spend a certain portion of every day in the open air.

Some records fail to have on them the mother's and father's given names; some fail to record the address of same. Some forget to obtain the nature of the child's feedings, or to say who prepares the food. Does it not make a difference, think you, as to whether a devoted and intelligent mother carefully prepares her child's food, balanced according to the values needed for his development and served wholesomely and regularly, or whether it is prepared by a careless nurse, or maid, or even by a mother without knowledge of what is needed? And, in the case of an infant, think you it matters not whether a babe is fed artificially or at Nature's table?

It will help materially in this important part of our child welfare work for you to be careful in all these details—and do not forget to sign your own name as visitor, your address, and the date of your sending the record in to our office.

Notice to Cradle Roll Visitors

In regard to the health records and birth records the cradle roll visitors are asked to fill out, we would like to make the following requests:

1. Fill all blanks out as fully as possible. If the child you are examining is too young for some of the questions to apply to it, simply answer "yes" or "no" as the case may be. If you simply do not know, say that—"Don't know."

2. If the mother cannot give you the State registry number, you write for it (to the County or State Board of Health) and send it to us in a letter following your report. If we don't receive it inside of a reasonable length of time, we shall probably write you for it, but we desire to be spared the necessity of so doing.

3. We are going to ask the visitors to make these health records every six months. We are extremely anxious to have these health examinations made at least that often, as more good will result for the baby's welfare. We ask you to be both prompt and regular in this particular.

4. To measure a small child: Lay a blanket on a table, placing a large book near one edge. From the book lay a tape measure, stretching it out smoothly. Place the baby on the measure with feet flat against the book. See that its body lies straight, full length. Read the number of its length on tape measure at top of head. A book placed just at top of head may be used to mark the place on the tape measure to be read when baby is moved out of the way.

5. To measure the head. Around: Measure as you would for a cap, only be sure to go around the largest part. From forehead to nape of neck: Measure backwards from the top of the baby's forehead to where the hair ceases to grow on back of neck. These measures are not difficult, and there are important medical reasons why we wish them given.

6. Duplicate records. Remember that we wish two copies made of every record you take. If it is your first visit to the baby, please make out two of the birth records, one being an exact copy of the other and on the same kind of blank. If the child is over six months there will be also the health record to be made out with its duplicate copy. That will make four filled-out blanks to be sent in. After that only the health record will be necessary, every six months, always remembering to send two copies to our office each time—one for the cradle roll department and the other for the health department. If there are still any questions in your mind, write Box 255, Women's Department, Independence, Missouri.

LAURA MANN, R. N.

A Cradle Roll Demonstration

In connection with a meeting of the women of the North-eastern Nebraska District, your general superintendent was able, with the assistance of Sister Martha Larson, R. N., cradle roll superintendent for Omaha Branch, to put on a demonstration of a visit of a cradle roll worker to the home of a young mother. The demonstration followed a brief sketch of the nature of the work undertaken by the department along these lines.

A tiny baby was weighed, measured, and its birth record filled out before the interested group of onlookers. An older child was brought up and its health record taken, each item as it was determined being explained and its importance impressed.

Following the demonstration, the cradle roll leaflet from the Women's Department was read to the assembly, and the message from the health department also explained. A number of bulletins and pamphlets from the Government, on "Prenatal care," "Infant care," "Feeding the children," etc., were displayed, and information given concerning their availability.

An explanation of the "Child care" course published by our department was followed quickly by several orders for the same. It was a pleasure on the morning following for the superintendent to send in fifteen orders for this little leaflet course, all of them going to mothers of young children. One registered nurse who examined these lessons says in many respects they are more valuable than some of the material sent out by the Government for the reason that they are simple and easily understood by the average mother. The tables and charts Sister Wight has introduced have also a great value in putting the information before the mother in a most concrete, practical, and "usable" form. We feel every young mother should have this course, which costs but a trifle and is full of information gleaned from the best authorities. Address our office, inclosing twenty-five cents, and the course will be mailed to you as rapidly as the lessons are printed.

Woman's New Power

VI

Mothers have always been our most frequent and our most interested school visitors. Now, thanks to the nineteenth amendment, they will have an opportunity to vote for members of the school board who will choose the teachers for their children. In many cases, we hope, they will become members of the board and aid directly in this choice of teachers for the public schools.

In school legislation for the State women should be watchful as to the membership of the educational committees. These committees have an influence upon educational matters throughout the State and should be composed of men and women who are in sympathy with the progressive ideas of our best educators.

The public schools have done much for America, but we are anxious for them to be put in position to do more for us. Poorly as we have provided for our free public school system, it has demonstrated its value in the democratic and humanitarian ideals of the American citizens of to-day. To assist the schools in their important work will be a pleasant task for the new voter.

We are practically all agreed that the fundamental weakness of our schools to-day is to be found in the immaturity, the brief tenure, the inadequate preparation, and the small salaries of an overwhelming majority of our teachers. They teach for a few years and then are succeeded by another group, equally immature. One fifth of our children are taught by boys and girls under twenty-one years of age—many of them having very little education beyond the eighth grade. Enrollment in our teachers' colleges is only one third or one half that of the years before the war. Our colleges and universities are full to overflowing, but the departments for teacher training are slimly attended. This will make the teachers' graduating classes small for several years.

This situation, if continued, can mean but one thing: a reduction of the standards of certificates until practically anyone who is willing to teach will be given a license—a situation plainly unfair to the next generation. To make this calling more attractive is the gigantic task assigned the present generation. The chances are that as a nation we will be more illiterate twenty years hence than we are to-day unless drastic reforms are called into service at once. Educators agree that our system of education has reached a point where relief must come, or the whole fabric of our school system will totter and fall.

During the war we learned the value of propaganda. During the summer of 1920 the teachers of New Jersey determined to use this method to secure recruits for the cause. Their plan may give us a helpful idea. From the office of Commissioner Calvin N. Kendall the following call was sent to all of the high schools of the State:

"To High School Juniors and Seniors: You are needed! Your country calls you as it called its young men two years ago. To keep democracy safe we must have 'a second line of defense'—not in the trenches but in the schoolhouses. Ignorance may conquer where the enemy failed.

"If you have longed for something big and fine to do, join the most powerful army in the world—the army of those who lead the children of the people. One teacher has a thousand times more power to make her country better than has one voter.

"What will be your rewards?

"1. You will be doing something worth while. You will be as truly an artist as one who paints pictures or writes verse.

"2. John, Tony, Mike, Mary, Fanchette, and Alice will love you, and you will love them. No reward can be greater.

"3. You will be not in a blind alley occupation but in a profession where there is opportunity for growth. There is always room for originality and a chance for advancement in teaching. There is always a better position somewhere ahead and always a reward for ability.

"4. Many teachers marry. That is one reason why so many new ones are needed. When you marry your training as a teacher will help to make you a good wife and mother and neighbor.

"5. The public, which has just begun to discover how valuable teachers are, will pay you a better salary than most business men can afford to pay. Teachers' salaries have risen rapidly and are still rising."

This letter was prepared by a committee of State normal school-teachers in the hope that it would attract attention to the needs of the hour. It is encouraging to note that salaries for teachers are rising. But already they are threatened with reduction as the price of commodities is being brought to a prewar level. We must consider the expense for adequate training of teachers before determining salary schedules. No less than two years beyond the high school and better four or six years should be required for acceptable work. There is but one way to hold enough efficient people in the profession to do the work acceptably and that is by an attractive salary.

The Smith-Towner bill is designed to aid us in this matter of salary. It is asking for a new department in our Cabinet—the department of education—whose secretary would then have the right to ask for Government money to aid our schools. Since the Secretary of Agriculture is asking for 53 millions, the Secretary of the Navy estimates that next year he will need 692 millions, and the Secretary of War estimates his needs for the army to be 814 millions, it ought not to be much trouble for a secretary of education to secure a very handsome appropriation for the schools.

The Smith-Towner bill has been before Congress for a long while, but it is crowded down and out by the politicians. Doctor Bagley tells us that not many months ago a shrewd and influential member of Congress made a significant statement in that body. He was opposed to the Smith-Towner bill, and he said in effect, "If you don't wish to pass increasingly large appropriations for education, kill the Towner bill, for under the budget system, which we hope soon to adopt, the Cabinet will very largely apportion the expenditures. The Secretary of War will tell you what he wants for guns and fortifications, the Secretary of Navy will tell you what he wants for battleships and cruisers, and then the secretary of education will tell you what he wants for the schools and the children. After voting large sums for the army and navy," he added, "you could not have the face to refuse equally large sums for education. So," he concluded, "your best way out of that predicament is not to have a secretary of education." And Doctor Bagley adds, "Let me repeat this advice to you school men and school women of this country: If you do not wish to have large appropriations for the schools and the children, kill the Smith-Towner bill."

There are efforts to make the new cabinet department something else. The doctors are urging it to be a health bureau with a doctor at its head. Women's organizations all

LETTERS

Germany Needs Missionaries

By T. W. Williams

We have had many articles and letters on the war against Germany. This letter shows something of what the war meant to the German people. It is also a strong appeal for needed missionaries for work in Germany, and elsewhere in Europe. Germany needs missionaries who can speak her language. Who will volunteer?

Germany!

A nation crucified by her friends.

A race despoiled and depressed.

A commonwealth smitten by its enemies.

A people misguided in the past and misguided in the present.

A country of bleeding hearts but unconquered will.

Germany. The Ishmael among the nations!

One must visit Germany to understand Germany. One must live a long time in Deutschland to fully sense the underlying national spirit and purpose.

The Germans are different—they are much like other people. The men are stolid, painstaking, methodical, thorough. The women are stoical, patient, tireless, uncomplaining, clean, and frugal. They are real Spartans.

The Germans are like others in developing and encouraging a strong national spirit, in thinking in provincial terms, in being moved by partisan purpose. This is coincident with national isolation. It finds expression wherever nationalism is accentuated. Its manifestation is well-nigh universal.

A nation is an evolution. It is not a creation. Nations are not born in a day—not yet. They are the culmination of struggle and experience. They are the reaction from the operation of internal and external forces. The national life, like tides and currents, has its ebb and flow, its well-defined yet varying course in the political sea.

These are modified by countercurrents, adverse winds, shore lines, territorial limitations, and national rivalries.

A trip through the heart of Germany is, or should be, a specific against retaliative and revengeful hysteria. I am not now placing responsibility for the great war. I do say, and that emphatically, that the man or nation who to-day desires to inflict a hardship on the German people and who would, like the Egyptian victors of other days, compel the vanquished to make bricks without straw, thinking thereby to even up the cruelties and barbarities of the past six years, is both shortsighted and unjust.

German People Not Subject to Ostracism

Whatever may be said of the former government of Germany, or of the purpose of some of her people prior to and even during the war, it is both vicious and unfair to hold the great mass of the people responsible and thereby subject to over the land, however, are working for the Smith-Towner bill, and they are urging every woman voter who believes in it to send the following note to President-Elect Harding:

To Honorable Warren G. Harding, President-Elect, Marion, Ohio.

I beg you to recognize the importance of education in a "government of the people" by naming the new department which you have so wisely proposed to create, The Department of Education and Public Welfare.

(Name)

(Address)

international ostracism. It is both un-Christian and dangerous to crowd the German people to the wall. The allied nations must not demand the last pound of flesh.

The tremendous handicap imposed upon the German people to-day is demoralizing her business and industrial life. If this is pushed too far it will result in complete collapse. Germany's ability to comply with the terms of the Treaty of Versailles hath limit. To go beyond that limit will produce chaos and open wide the gates for another European tragedy.

The long lines of discarded railway engines, the rolling stock and equipments, reveal the government's plight. They are mere junk. It is impossible for the nation under present conditions to secure the necessary material for rehabilitation. The railway coaches now in use are most of them dilapidated and ramshackle. All of them are well-nigh denuded of pre-war furnishings. Coaches on many lines are without heat and unsanitary. The depreciation of currency, the commercial boycott, the embargo on imports and exports, are all significant evidences of Germany's isolation.

One finds touching and pitiful evidences of the ravages of war. It is a great mistake to hold that the German people have not suffered, simply because the activities of war have occurred on foreign soil. These people have suffered untold and indescribable misery and deprivation. They are suffering to-day.

True, there are no ruined cities, no hills and valleys plowed and furrowed by shot and shell. There are no denuded forests and devastated vineyards and orchards. Still, war has left its desolating blight. The hills and valleys are here as of yore. There is grazing abundant for cattle on a thousand hills. The cattle are not here. As a result, Germany to-day lacks milk for her babies, her sick, and infirm. She needs fats and grains and sweets. She needs fuel. She needs credit. She craves and should have international good will.

Certainly France is entitled to reimbursement for loss resultant from the war, but not to the extent of jeopardizing life in Germany. The hatred of the French for the Germans is as intense and fierce as the hatred of the Germans for the French. It is the heritage of centuries. The war did not eradicate it. It intensified it. This presages another war. The extremists of France are both shortsighted and partisan in their demands on Germany. They are unwittingly jeopardizing the future of their own nation.

All War Is Brutal

Some terrible stories were told during the war of German brutalities to women and children. If true, they were revolting and terrible. I have reason to believe that isolated and exceptional instances have been magnified to arouse anti-German action. The exception has been taken as the rule. The atrocities were not all on one side. True, war brutalizes, but it brutalizes all who come in contact with it. Granted the worst, still we cannot even up one wrong by committing another. Are we to avenge the death of women and children during the war by slowly starving women and children in Germany to-day?

Malnutrition and underfeeding have demanded heavy toll in Deutschland. Conditions are improving slowly since the close of the war. It is bad enough even yet. Germany does not need charity. She needs and must have a chance to re-

NOTE: With this number Sister Young desires to "leave the subject with us," although she adds that there are a few more phases of the questions she has discussed which she would like to consider. We know we are but echoing the sentiment of all our readers when we express to Sister Young the very great interest with which we have followed her articles, and our sincere appreciation of them and of her happy way of presenting them. We hope she will, from time to time, continue to contribute to our columns along the lines of those subjects which have received her special consideration and study.

habilitate her industries, to intensively cultivate her fields, to put her people to work producing the necessities of life. She should be encouraged in extending her imports and exports, in taking her place as a commercial nation with all the other nations of the world.

Let the allies exact with rigidity and severity their prescriptions on war equipments and preparation. Let them reduce to a minimum the creation of munitions of war. Let them insist that Germany turn her face from thoughts of war to activities of peace. At the same time let them show good faith by setting the example. Aside from this it is imperative that they lift the commercial and industrial embargo. They must give the German people a chance.

Reparation but Not Robbery

Germany should make reparation to her capacity. To exact more will make the payment of anything impossible. It is parallel with a man having a mortgage on a cow and demanding that the mortgagor give him the food which the cow would eat and furnish the milk as well. Naturally this resulted in the death of the cow. It is so with Germany. She must have a chance to recover. She can never pay her indemnities unless she is permitted to develop the sources from which the funds to pay these indemnities are secured.

Shortsighted statesmen in France seem not satisfied with less than the utter annihilation of the industrial and commercial activities of Germany. This extreme French hatred is without reason or justice. Many of the things charged against the Germany of to-day, such as secret munition factories, are evidently born of fear in France rather than fact in Germany. It is up to the United States and England to do the square thing by Germany. They can and should stabilize her credit, and stimulate her commerce. She will care for the balance. If French extremists continue their present frenzied and unreasonable antagonism, they will fan the flames of hate which will eventuate in another Franco-German war. France may not be the victor next time.

Remarkable Hospitality

We entered Germany from the south. Boarded train at Basel, Switzerland, in the morning, traveling all day through the fertile and beautiful Rhine Valley and reaching Frankfurt in the evening. The next day we ran through several ranges of mountains in a north by east direction, reaching Halle am Saale in the evening. This was Christmas Eve. We spent Christmas and Sunday with Brother Kippe and family. Came on to Einbeck, thence to Hannover, Braunschweig, Reischen, Ericka, and Berlin. We expect to go from Berlin to Hamburg, then on to Holland, as there are demands for baptism.

During our sojourn in this land we have lived with the people. We ate at their tables. We slept in their beds. We have come to know them as they are. It is remarkable, the fortitude under which these people bear without murmur or even comment the severe conditions under which they are forced to live.

Extreme Poverty

I have stopped at homes where there was nothing on the table but potatoes and a little thin gravy made by cutting up a small piece of sausage and boiling in water—no bread—nothing else. I have been with people who have not tasted milk or butter for years, and to whom wheat bread is only a fading memory. Black bread, black coffee, and potatoes is the daily diet of the poor people of Germany. For those who can pay, a very sparse quantity of oleomargarine, or butter, and sugar is rationed.

The food restrictions are still rigid in most parts of the country. A family is allowed about four ounces of butter per person for a period of three weeks. The average American will consume that in one day. Three pounds of black bread must suffice for a week. Sugar can be secured only in very limited quantity. The price of sausage is almost prohibitive to the poor, and meat? it is well-nigh out of the question. Even this menu is considered as a luxury by those who came through the terrible experiences of the year 1917, when bread was made out of sawdust, soap, potato peelings, and refuse.

Contributions of food or money from charitably inclined people in America is only palliative—scarcely that. What the people of Germany want is opportunity for remunerative employment, equal chance with other nations in commercial and industrial activities. A German will take care of himself if given a chance.

Speaking of German hospitality: In all my wide and varied travels I have never seen anything which excelled it. The way in which these people welcome you to their homes and hearts, giving the very best they have, would make a meal of husks a veritable banquet. One could even die from starvation with increasing faith surrounded by such living, Samaritan examples. One cannot live with these people without loving them. Their kindness is proverbial. Their hospitality is spontaneous and without affectation.

Prolific Field for Missionary Work

Germany offers a very prolific field for missionary work and particularly for our kind of missionary work. I know of no more inviting field, and the time is propitious. We need and should have one hundred missionaries in Germany now. We have two! Two missionaries for fifty million people! And we expect to warn the world before Jesus comes!

Oh! If the Saints in America could only develop the real missionary spirit! If we could only awaken within them that latent something in every true man which leads him to lay down his life for his friends! What opportunity there is for expression! Methinks that there must come a shaking among the dry bones if we are ever to accomplish the work that is mapped out for us.

In the early days of the church men worked during the week at manual labor and ministered to the local churches on Sunday. We had but few missionaries supported by the general church. Located and remunerated pastors were practically a thing unknown. Those were the days of power and expansion. Those were the times when we leaned heavily on God. A church without a definite and predominating missionary purpose cannot long survive.

A Definite Suggestion

I have recently thought that if some of our Saints in the large centers who are suffering from spiritual indigestion and have become epicures in religious thesis and who demand the best talent of the church to furnish high-seasoned and delectable spiritual menus would become impressed with the real missionary purpose of the church, they would say:

"We have been selfish and self-centered. We have considered our own comfort and entertainment. We have been served rather than serving. We have had itching ears. We have been sponges. We have been content to receive. We have not given out. Here, take our pastor who is now a general church appointee. We love him, but we can get along without him. We will line up together and carry on the work. We will lovingly support and uphold our local men. Send this our pastor to carry the good news to the nations who are famishing for the word of God."

There are church appointees in America who are eminently fitted for, and can be spared for this work. They could be stationed at strategic points among the nations. God could, and would, raise up friends for them. A great missionary spirit would sweep over the church. It would have its specific action abroad, and its effective reaction at home. The old-time fervor and enthusiasm would be manifest among the people. God haste the day!

God is going to hold to a strict accounting the men to whom he has intrusted the right to represent him. Every man holding priesthood is obligated to give his first and utmost service to his ministry. All else is but incidental. The only excuse is the occasion which demands just so much of his time as may be necessary to supply material necessities for self and dependents.

Great Hunger for Spiritual Food

How I wish every Latter Day Saint could have had a "peep in" our meetings at Gross Raeschen last Sunday! We met in a private house. We packed (that's the word) over fifty men, women, boys, and girls in one room. The first meeting began at nine-thirty and lasted until noon. We assembled again at three in the afternoon and continued until seven in the evening, and even then the people would not leave.

We made a move several times to close the meeting, but the people would have none of it. They had been isolated from the church. Communication with the general church had been cut off for years. Yet despite this, a half dozen members, under the leadership of a God-fearing man, had grown to thirty-four. These people wanted to know all about the church and its progress. They hung on every word spoken. They were not fingering over the food to see whether they wanted it. They ate with relish and asked for more. The glistening eye and the tear-stained cheek spoke volumes to us. Why, it was worth the effort and expense to come all the way to Germany just for that one experience!

And Gross Raeschen is no exception. All over Germany the people are ready for our message. I am convinced that thousands can be added to the church through a well-directed and intelligent missionary effort.

To my brethren of the ministry: Let me urge you to put away from you everything which tends to divorce you from your ministry. Magnify your calling. Trust God. He will not fail you. Be diligent and earnest in your ministry.

To the membership: I plead for more complete consecration. The one great obligation which we cannot shirk is our mission to warn the world. Catch the missionary spirit. Be a missionary—a real missionary for Him!

The doors of Europe are open to us! Germany, Austria, Poland, Russia, the Balkan States—all these give promise of great results. Missionaries must go to these lands and soon. Will the church be able to answer the demand? God is far ahead. He is waiting for us. How long must he wait?

Have You Filed Your Annual Tithing Report?

In the last two issues we have presented the beginning and the successive annual computations of the tithing report.

Mistakes have been made in filling in the blanks in the past, and we expect some will be made hereafter. The tendency to hold off until you can "pay all or none" is a bigger mistake. Pay as you can, regardless of the amount. But the biggest mistake is to fail to report at all. God blesses those who try.

The task to which we are unaccustomed, the deferred task, is "hard." In attempting to apply the tithing law to all the complex phases which arise in life, it cannot be made so simple as to place all points above question. Yet we have tried to make these instructions plain, simple, and comprehensive.

We present below one more case which covers an exceptional condition but may be made necessary where proper records are not available.

Computation No. 3

Brother "C" has paid, during recent years, $100 tithing, but has never filed a Statement with the Bishopric and, hence, has no former figures to which he can refer. He, therefore, lists his present resources and liabilities and follows computation No. 3.

(Computation No. 3 may be used once as a last resort. In following years Computation No. 2 should be used.)

(To save space the resources and liabilities are not itemized.)

10. Total resources	$5,000.00
15. Less total liabilities	1,000.00
16. Present net worth	4,000.00

Add to item 16
Expenditures Subject to Tithing

17. Pleasures, education, offerings, etc.	150.00
--	--------

19. Amount subject to tithing	4,150.00
-------------------------------------	----------

Computation Number 3

No.	Item
19.	Amount subject to tithing	$4,150.00
28.	Less amount of net worth tithed (nine times total tithe paid	900.00

The tithe equals one tenth, therefore the nine tenths (tithed) would be nine times the one tenth.)

29. Amount yet to be tithed.....	3,250.00
20. Tithing due, one tenth of above	325.00
27. Less tithing paid this date	325.00
23. Tithing still unpaid on above	none

Tithe Payer's Work Sheet

(To save space we have not itemized the resources and liabilities.)

10. Total resources	5,000.00
15. Less total liabilities	1,000.00
16. Actual net worth	4,000.00
17. Add expenditures subject to tithing	150.00
19. Total amount subject to tithing	4,150.00
25. Less net amount tithed previous report	900.00
26. Annual increase to be tithed	3,250.00
20. Tithing due, one tenth of above	325.00
14. Add tithing still unpaid on last report. (From item 22 on last year's work sheet, deduct all tithing paid since.)	none
21. Total items 20 and 14	325.00
27. Less tithing paid this date	325.00
22. Tithing still unpaid	none
16. Actual net worth	4,000.00
24. Less tithing due (item 20)	325.00
25. Net amount tithed	3,675.00

Note.—The item numbers always indicate the same item by the same number wherever found.

In making out your report use only one of the three forms of computation. Each has been provided to meet a different condition of affairs. Study carefully the circumstances under which each should be used and follow the one applying to your particular case.

Council Bluffs Items

Since the proverbial ground hog day we have been having some winter, but it has not been cold. Several inches of snow. The storm of Sunday prevented many of the Saints of the district from attending the district conference that was held here on the 4th, 5th, and 6th. While the storm raged without there was a perfect calm within the confines of the conference sessions. The sessions were marked with special peace, so much so that many were heard to remark about it. Elder U. W. Greene was present at part of the sessions, and stirred up the ministry especially to greater activity, and many of the Saints have expressed great benefit accruing from his Sunday evening sermon. A petition coming from the Council Bluffs Branch, in accord with a recommendation from the district president, to increase the seating capacity of the place of worship was very heartily supported, and it was decided that the committee to enter into an examination as to the possibilities of such improvement should be O. Salisbury, T. J. Smith, O. A. Currie, H. M. Kerns, and A. E. Dempsey, they to report their findings to the next conference. It is reported that there were present at the sacrament last Sunday at 11 a. m., over 320. Four were baptized and three ordained, two young men to the office of priest, and a brother of P. T. Anderson, now on a mission to Scandinavia, was ordained to the office of elder. His desire is to join his brother in telling the gospel story to those of his native tongue.

The priesthood of the branch are entering into greater activity, and their work is telling for increased activity on the part of the Saints.

A fathers' and sons' day has been appointed for a week from next Sunday, to be provided for by the Religio.

The officials who were selected for the district were O. Salisbury, president, with Brethren George Beaty and Henry H. Hand as associates. The same persons were sustained as other district officers, and as heads of the departments. This was on the account of the good work done.

An error occurred in the item of Ruth Mintun occupying as teacher in the schools of this city so as to be with her father since the decease of the mother. The board of education here elected her to a position, but the board where she was teaching would not release her, so that the loneliness will be continued by the brother.

Successful Institute Work at Hamilton

Extract from letter to Presidency by G. E. Harrington, Hamilton, Ontario, January 31, 1921.

I have been exceedingly busy preparing and working for and with the institute work planned for the district at Hamilton.

It was concluded last night, leaving with us pleasant memories. Bishop McLean was the last speaker. The speaker was alert and impressive, and the audience quick to express itself when opportunity was given. It was a delightful week to many attending. The satisfaction felt was such as to cause a motion to be passed, going on record, as desiring others to follow.

Lunches were provided by the Women's Department for noon and evening at a reasonable figure. No complaints were heard, but rather expressions of pleasure were heard frequently, more particularly with reference to the work carried on. Our morning sessions were well attended, averaging about eighteen. However, all were not on time, but our sessions were from nine to twelve.

The musical work and instruction was fine. We had talent from Owen Sound District, most noticeable being the singing of the twins, Laura and Amelia Taylor. A quartet of singers went to the city hospital and sang last night by the bedside of Brother Orma Kniffin. The brother has been sorely afflicted but has been improving for the last six weeks. They went also to the home of Brother T. J. Thompson and sang for him. Expressions of pleasure were heard following. Music abounded, and charming selections were given. One lady on invitation (a friend of Sister Smithers, daughter of Brother Hiram Dickout) sang beautifully, had a wonderful voice. All were delighted. Several readings were interspersed throughout the week. Brother Samuel Clark, our enthusiastic North Toronto Branch president, spoke on the value of music eloquently. Brother T. R. Seaton threw his soul into the work. Brother Joseph Yager contributed with his violin. A nice-sized orchestra rendered splendid service in the song services had. The intellectual uplift was considerable, much aided by the contributions of Brother R. J. Farthing, whose knowledge of psychology served to awaken the mental powers to high thinking. Sister Miller's wit added to the pleasure of the gatherings. Brother James Pycoc's apt sayings disturbed slumbering minds and gave cause for thought, as did also the remarks of Brother M. J. Crowley. Sister McPhial stirred up considerable thought and questioning.

Taking the session throughout and comparing it with other experiences and opportunities had of a similar kind I regard myself as having secured more benefit than before.

I look for a better working force as a result of the meetings. The evening sessions were well attended, particularly Sundays. An effort was made by the sisters of the Hamilton Branch to raise a fund for a piano the last day and realized about $100.

I should mention that Brother James Morrison exhibited great ability. He is a fine speaker, very entertaining.

There can be no question as to the institute being a success. A few collections were taken up, which met all expenses leaving a balance for use to carry on other institute work.

Farewell Address to English Students

An address to Brethren Harry and Frank Holmes, previous to their departure for Graceland College.

To Brethren Harry and Frank Holmes, from the members of the Clay Cross Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:

Dear brethren, as you are about to leave us to take up a course of education in Graceland College, that you may be better prepared for service in the interest of the church, and for the salvation of mankind, we your brethren and sisters desire to express to you our appreciation of your volunteering for service in such a noble work, "for it is God's work."

You, having been raised in our midst, we shall certainly miss you in our assemblies; your places will be vacant here, but we have that pleasure, joy, and hope, that our loss will eventually be the greater gain for the whole church.

You have our utmost confidence, and our hopes and desires are that you may become powerful men in the hands of God, to be able to do much good in your time.

We pray for your divine guidance and blessing in all things, for the necessary preservation and protection of your lives; also, that you may be blessed with knowledge and wisdom from above, and that you may ever retain the confidence of the church throughout your lives.

In recognition of your help, whilst with us in the church, we desire you to accept at our hands, this small present of a fountain pen each, which we trust will be a means of ever retaining in your memories your association with us.

On behalf of the brethren and sisters of the Clay Cross Branch.

Yours in gospel bonds,

W. E. TIMMS, Branch Priest.

Missionary Work in Sweden

First Presidency: Our meetings of late have been well attended, and I have had opportunity to tell the gospel story with good liberty.

I appreciate every opportunity that is given, as it has been quite an unrest to me in the past that I have not been able to meet people in the public.

Many come of course out of curiosity, but at the same time it will help to make the work known among the people. In our meeting yesterday we noticed that we had several kinds of religious believers present. I gave out several tracts and one copy of Zion's Ensign. Another thing that has troubled me many times is that it seems so hard to get in touch with my relatives on gospel topics. On my way from meeting last night I called on a family, a cousin of mine, and had the opportunity to give them some of our belief on gospel lines. The conversation lasted several hours, and when we parted they expressed their satisfaction over what they had heard. I assured them that no one could be more satisfied than I was.

They promised to come to our meetings in the future. This country is sharing its part of the troubles and unrest that are in the world to-day. Many thousands are out of work at the present time and there is not much encouragement for the better in the near future.

May the time for Zion's redemption be hastened.

Yours in gospel bonds,

C. OSCAR JOHNSON.

Question: "Can the Christmas offering be used for local branch expenses if a majority of the members of the Sunday school vote in favor of so doing?"

Answer: "All funds contributed for a definite purpose are impressed with a trust, and it is not lawful to divert them or any part of them for other purposes."

"The Christmas offering has been dedicated by action of the Order of Bishops and the General Conference for the purchase of lands in the land of Zion."

Let all who are charged with the care and safety of these offerings guard jealously this sacred trust.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

FULTON, IOWA, January 26, 1921.

Editors Herald: We are still here and working away, sometimes under much difficulty, but we are hopeful for the final outcome.

We had our church painted and shingled this fall at a cost of $300; then our portion of the auditorium fund was placed at $1,400. My! we thought that was beyond our reach, but unitedly we went to work, and had over $1,600 subscribed, then came the Christmas offering. We did not wish to go back on that so we raised about $171, so you see we had our hands full, but everything has gone smoothly so far.

Our numbers are few, and at times we had sickness to hinder, but we desire to do our duty, let come what will. We want to be of those who will receive the plaudit, "Well done."

Brother Vanderwood is holding meetings at Maquoketa, eight miles south of here, and will hold forth here if we can get out at night, as the roads have been very bad for awhile, since there is very little frost in the ground. We have had a soft winter here so far.

Ten have been baptized the past year in this branch, and we hope for better results this year, as we expect to press forward with more zeal and energy.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

WARRINGTON, LANCASHIRE, ENGLAND, January 26, 1921.

Editors Herald: I feel that a line from this part of the vineyard will be of interest to many of the English Saints scattered about the land of Zion. I rejoice to publish good tidings, and make known the fact that a handful of faithful Saints here have purchased their own church building, which contains its own baptismal font. The people who previously occupied this room kept their coal and coke in the symbolic grave of our Lord. Surely this was offering "strange fire."

We soon cleared it out, and the Lord has added to our numbers "such as should be saved." Thank God we have been blessed this year with some good people for us to care for, and we have passed our number of converts towards the church's desire to have 20,000 with their faces towards Zion, and amongst them is a family who many years ago fought against the work being established in this town. This man is Brother Samuel Smythe, who has served the Lord Jesus according to the light he had for thirty years, and has now opened his home for the Saints, and servants of God.

We have a Sunday school under the direction of Priest Andrew Fleming. He may be proud of his school, with his capable officers and teachers. We have a normal training class under the supervision of Brother George Shingler, and there is a nice band of young Saints now whom we are about to organize into a Religio society. We are also organizing a sisters' auxiliary society. The demand has come, so we mean to avail ourselves of the opportunity.

We had a single sermon from Apostle T. W. Williams, and when he realizes the good impression left behind, and opportunity occurs, he will not fail to come along and give us a few more.

Now in conclusion let me pay a public tribute to the Saints under my care. No shepherd could have a finer flock of sheep and lambs. I love them, and they do truly show they love me; and as a body we are very free from the evils of modern society. There is very small need to complain. The picture house, dancing, card playing, etc., are strictly taboo. We have our own remedy. We meet in each other's homes for social intercourse.

In gospel love,

W. H. CHANDLER.

BLAIRMORE, ALBERTA, January 30, 1921.

Editors Herald: We cannot tell you how much we appreciate the HERALD with all the instruction from its many writers. It brings joy as we peruse its pages.

We noticed an article, "Why do we not live the law of the church?" It has given us some food for thought. I must say, I always thought that everyone who obeys the principles of the gospel should go on to perfection. Our first thought should be, What are the laws of God's church? We are now his children. In what way will we deport ourselves? I am persuaded that we should study to make ourselves approved workmen.

I remember well the lessons I received in different ways from the officers, from writers in the HERALD, and direct guidance of the Holy Spirit. But always, in God's way, this is the promise to the faithful to be guided into all truth, and if we neglect so great a salvation, the fault is with us, not the officers. It is an easy thing to criticize those whom God has called, but that kind of criticism does not always come from the right source. John said, Try the spirits; see if they are kind, meek, humble, peaceable, long-suffering. Yes, charity. If this be the spirit that guides you, you will be fruitful in the knowledge of the Lord.

I do not believe that the church officers do conflict in opinion on the law of the church. But we often answer a question before we have made a proper study of it. This is folly. I found the presidents of the different branches always ready to give the Saints all the instruction about Zion and its laws that are taught in the books of the church. Why blame the teachers? We very often find the Saints not willing to listen to the branch officers' teachings of the law of the church. At times your branch officers need encouragement.

Once while the writer was president of a branch, he was often told that it was too bad they did not have some good, smart elder, and that they had some people interested whom they would bring to meeting when the missionary came. And the Saints also found fault with all the officers of the branch, the deacon as well, and would not trust him with money enough to meet the demand, and at the same time wondered why the branch was not prospering.

We must be submissive to those whom God has placed over us, from President F. M. Smith down to the deacon of the branch. Study the books, read the HERALD, and pray for wisdom. We will find we are preparing for Zion, and by doing what we learn, we will be preparing Zion for the Saints and be ready for the word, "Come home to Zion."

Yours for the building up of Zion,

MACK BROWN.

Woeful Lack of Reverence Prevailing

A report on an address by Apostle J. W. Rushton, appearing in the Santa Ana, (California) Daily Register, February 4, 1921.

"The crimes, vices, and sins of the age, whether individual or social, are the result, first of all, of a lack of reverence for the holy thing. It is a significant fact that our young people in America seem to have lost their reverence for everything which should command respect, and we are confronted with a problem in social purity which is appalling in its dimensions and tendency."

This statement, made last night by John W. Rushton, who is delivering a series of evening addresses at the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, was preliminary to a startling assertion as to the number of young men and girls who fall by the wayside each year in the United States.

"Out of 700,000 young men who reach the danger zone of sex each year, we are assured, on good authority, that 450,000 are tainted with disease and, therefore, unfitted to function as parents of the race, and for every fallen girl there are twenty fallen boys," continued the speaker in clinching his point.

Indifference to Laws

"The almost callous indifference to law and order, with the dilatoriness of execution which makes our jurisprudence a scandal, is another fruit of this irreverence so characteristic of the times.

"Our menace in the strained relations between capital and labor grows out of a want of reverence for the spiritual qualities which underlie humanity. We have lost sight of the image of God in man in the passion for gain. The quest for riches blinds us to true spiritual values. We need in our educational processes to revive the old-fashioned idea of reverence which is enshrined in the statement of the Bible: 'The beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Lord.'

"Education is preparation for life and the true test of life is in the amount and quality of service which is rendered to the social weal.

"My message to the people of Santa Ana is one of cooperation in doing good to all and to emphasize the value of the Christian religion and encouraging all to apply it in their everyday life."

Cites Challenge

"Man's attitude toward God," was the subject of the address last night. In quoting Paul's statement in the letter to Galatians, "I do not frustrate the grace of God," Rushton said that this was a challenge to the doctrine of determinism, which was more popular with many people of the age.

"While there may have been economic, social, and hereditary influences which hindered man from being all he ought to be, or desired to be, it is not true that we are the sport or victim of forces which drive us helplessly along," said the speaker. "Man has the power to hinder or assist in the improvement of his own as well as the social conditions."

There will be no services to-morrow evening. The meetings are attracting large crowds, it is said.

(From letter to the Presidency.)

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 7, 1921.

I have been receiving advertising matter sent out by the A. O. Y. P. Z. and have watched their movements with a great deal of interest. There is no doubt the Spirit of God is working mightily with the young people of the church. We can sense it in Des Moines as elsewhere, and it is an inspiration within itself. One of the most pleasant phases of my pastoral work in Des Moines has been my work with the young people, and it is just now beginning to bear fruit. Until I came here I was never able to have the association I desired with the young, my work taking me with the older Saints most of the time, so many times I have felt "hungry" for their association. Naturally my own age makes this feeling, for I am not yet out of my twenties. Daily there is pressed upon us the fact that the statements of the Doctrine and Covenants relative to the "young" and the "middle aged" are absolutely true, and upon their shoulders rests the responsibility of Zion's redemption, for verily they are "the strength of my house." Very sincerely,

A. E. WARR.

WITT, ILLINOIS, February 5, 1921.

Editors Herald: I am sorry to say I am isolated at the present time, and I suppose this is one reason that I am sending for tracts, etc., that I may be able to get others interested in the promises and blessings that are contained in the Bible. I am also trying to form a Bible class of all who are interested, that they may be able to study the word of God in its purity.

I wish to testify that since becoming associated with the church, I have witnessed a great change in myself, both as I see myself and as others see me. I have also been blessed in more ways than one, as those who have been associated with me can bear record.

When I was contemplating becoming a member of the church, there were two things that were a kind of obstruction to me. First, I could not get it out of my mind but what the church was in some way or other connected with the Salt Lake faction, and of course I am no longer worried over that.

Second, what will I have to say to my associates when they ask me what I have joined the church for?

I was not troubled by any such question until I had been in the church eighteen months, in which time I had studied the books of the church. So I was prepared for the question when it came, which it did in the place and manner that might have confused and embarrassed me had not the Lord foreseen the situation and helped me to prepare myself for it. It came about in this way: I was working in the mines, and the distance between my home and work being about seven miles caused me to have to go and return by train. One evening while waiting at the station for the train, an argument was going on, and had been for some time, about scripture. One of them turned to me and said, "You believe in the Book of Mormon, don't you?" The majority of them knew I was a Latter Day Saint. I did not hesitate. I answered him, and asked him a question at the same time thus, "Yes, and why shouldn't I?" I received no reply, so I asked him again, also what he found about the Book of Mormon that would cause me not to believe in it; but still no answer. So then I told him that before he tried to pull anything to pieces in the future, to first learn of what it was composed.

One of the commercial travelers turned to me and said, "Say, I would like to ask you a question. Doesn't your church believe that you are the only church that is right, and all other churches are wrong?"

That was a puzzler, but I knew at once what he had reference to. It was the reply that Joseph Smith received about what church he should join, and the Lord told him none of them. Now to have answered that question in the affirmative would have turned all against me, and to have answered in the negative would have been giving the lie, but the Lord was with me again, and my answer was, "Our church believes that all persons who believe in the teachings and principles as laid down by Jesus Christ, and practice the same, will gain everlasting life." Just then the train came in and put an end to further controversy.

It was through a sermon that Brother A. M. Baker preached that I was persuaded to join the Latter Day Saints. Brother R. L. Fulk baptized us. I feel thankful to both of them for the part they played in convincing me of the truthfulness of the gospel, and may God bless them in their further efforts, that they may be the means of bringing many more into the kingdom of God.

MISCELLANEOUS

The Bishopric

Kewanee, Illinois, District

Owing to the death of Brother H. C. Ziegenhorn, who has served the church faithfully for many years as Bishop's agent of the above district, it becomes necessary for us to appoint his successor, Brother Edward Jones, 926 North Vine Street, Kewanee, Illinois, to whom the solicitors of the various branches and the scattered Saints will kindly forward their tithes and offerings on and after March 1, 1921. Until that time they can be sent to Sister Ziegenhorn.

Brother Jones comes to us well recommended, and we solicit the confidence of the Saints in his behalf.

The existing business conditions should impress upon the minds of the Saints the greater necessity of each one being faithful in supporting the Lord's work financially. While many will find their incomes less under present conditions, the revenues of the church will thereby be affected to some extent, and while many may find themselves in a position where they have no tithing to pay, yet out of the abundance which the Lord has given them in other years they may contribute a free-will offering that the Lord's work may not suffer.

Appreciating the efforts of the Saints of the above district to support the Lord's work, I am,
Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Conference Minutes

SHEFFIELD.—At Clay Cross, Derbyshire, January 8 and 9, 1921. District President C. Cousins in charge. The recommendation from the Presidency of the church and the Quorum of Twelve that the Sheffield District now comprise the whole of Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Lincolnshire, and Lotting Lancashire was approved at this conference. Statistical reports received from Sutton-in-Ashfield, Leeds, and Sheffield branches. The late officers of the district were elected to act pro tem, until a special conference convened, when the President of the church and the representative of the Quorum of Twelve (Apostle T. W. Williams) were expected to be there, these brethren being notified to this effect. The places for the holding of conferences and reunions during the ensuing year left in the hands of the district presidency. John W. Foster, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

BURTON.—Charles N. Burtch was born at North Branch, Lapeer County, Michigan, August 18, 1882, and departed this life January 31, 1921, at Boyne City, where he had resided for several years. Baptized and confirmed by James A. Carpenter when thirteen years old. On October 25 1908, ordained priest, and served in that capacity until October 13, 1912, when ordained elder. Served church several years as an active missionary and brought many souls into the kingdom, for which his reward is sure. Ill health of late had hampered his work in the church, although he was at the time of his death secretary of the Northern Michigan District, which position he had held for fifteen years, district Sunday school superintendent, district Religion field worker, and superintendent of Boyne City Sunday school. Survived by his wife, Bertha; father, mother, brother, and several other relatives. Funeral at Saints' church, Boyne City, February 2, in charge of Arthur E. Starks. Sermon by J. C. Goodman, after which he was laid to rest in beautiful Maple Lawn Cemetery. Beautiful floral offerings and the many friends present gave evidence of the esteem in which he was held.

BOYD.—Jasper Cletus Boyd was born at Sedalia, Kentucky, May 29, 1890. Died in Independence, Missouri, February 4, 1921. Married Miss Earle Mae Cook in 1910. To them one child was born, Charley Vester. Survived by widow, Mrs. Earle Mae Boyd; five-year-old son, Charley Vester; father, Doctor A. M. Boyd, of Independence; and two brothers, Vester and Truman, both of Independence. Baptized by J. A. Dowker, of Farmington, Kentucky. Funeral at Walnut Park church, H. A. Parsons in charge. Sermon by George Jenkins. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

NICHOLS.—Elmira O. Nichols was born December 23, 1837. Died at her home in Brooklyn, New York, January 17, 1921. Married Luther Nichols, and to this union were born 4 girls and 2 boys. Leaves to mourn 5 children, 5 grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Baptized July 15, 1872, and lived a faithful and devoted Saint. Sermon by J. F. Sheehy. Interment in Malone Cemetery by the side of her husband.

DAVIS.—Americas Vilroy Davis died of pneumonia at the home of his son Vere, January 3, 1921, near Eldorado Springs, Missouri, at the age of 71 years. Leaves to mourn, wife, 3 sons, Edwin and L. V., of Belding, Michigan, and Vere, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri; 2 daughters, Vivia Freeman, of Montana, and Lillie Goodworth, of Belding, Michigan; 2 sisters, and other relatives and friends.

CUMMINGS.—George W. Cummings, son of Benjamin and Anna Cummings, was born May 3, 1868, at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. Married Elma Rodgers, of Bonaparte, Iowa, December 25, 1890. To this union 5 children were born, 4 of whom survive, Albert J., of Ottumwa; B. G., of Kellogg, Idaho; Hallie Warner, of Spokane, Washington; and Irene, of Davenport. Baptized January 19, 1907. Married Rebecca Burke in 1914, who survives. Died January 11, 1921, at Ottumwa, Iowa. Sermon by D. T. Williams, sr.

HOWARD.—Marie Howard was born in Brooklyn, March 8, 1874. Died October 29, 1920, at her home in Brooklyn, aged 46 years. Married James Edward Howard October 5, 1904, and to this union 2 boys were born, who, with their father survive and mourn her death. Baptized February 26, 1892, and remained a faithful Saint through life. Funeral in charge of Reverend Buchannan. Sermon by Ephraim Squire.

WHITMAN.—At his home in Seattle, Washington, Elder Gilbert M. L. Whitman died February 2, 1921, at the age of 76 years, 7 months, and 4 days. Born in the State of Maine. Lived a number of years in Omaha, at which time had charge of the Northeastern Nebraska District. A number of years were spent in Canada, the last three in Seattle. He leaves a bereaved wife, 5 sons, and 2 daughters. Funeral on the 6th, from the undertaking parlors. Prayer by F. W. Holman. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

ROBBINS.—Mary Eliza Robbins was born March 7, 1885, at Apple-dore, Ontario. Died at New Westminster, British Columbia, of appendicitis, complications following operation. Married Frederick Lewis Robbins January 23, 1901. Eight children were born to them, 2 sons, and 6 daughters. One daughter died in infancy. Baptized 1904 by J. L. Mortimer at Bon Accord, Alberta. Was a loving mother and Saint. Will be greatly missed in the church as well as in the home. Funeral from Saints' hall, New Westminster, in charge of Samuel Pope. Sermon by S. S. Smith. Interment in Ocean View Cemetery, Van-couver, British Columbia.

STEARNES.—Maud Estella Stearnes was born October 27, 1916, in Kansas City, Kansas. Was severely burned January 20, and died in the Swedish Hospital 3 a. m. January 21. Services from Carson undertaking parlors in charge of J. A. Tanner. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery. A father and mother mourn their loss.

Story-Tellers Entertain Old People

The old people at Liberty Home were very much pleased Sunday afternoon to be entertained by Miss June Whiting, of Graceland, and her story-telling class, who spent the afternoon at the home and told them many interesting stories of Book of Mormon history and other themes. The northwest group has started the evening entertainments once a month at Liberty also, and last week on Thursday several young people went out with Mrs. Roy Derry and entertained them royally.—Lamoni Chronicle.

At the Religio session at Lamoni recently the pastor of the local Methodist Episcopal church attended, in company with the Boy Scouts in his congregation. The following Sunday evening, the Boy Scouts and their teachers in Religio are to attend en masse following the Religio session, a service at the Methodist church, where Pastor Gray will address them.

Let every man be occupied, and occupied in the highest employment of which his nature is capable, and die with the consciousness that he has done his best.—Sydney Smith.

It is an uncontroverted truth that no man ever made an ill figure who understood his own talents, nor a good one who mistook them.—Swift.

Be what nature intended you for, and you will succeed; be anything else, and you will be ten thousand times worse than nothing.—Sydney Smith.

of the work there. The young people of Lamoni are not organized. The request comes from the young people as a whole. The plan, we learn, is to consider first of all how the meetings were conducted and the methods used in Independence, with the intention of using so far as possible in outlining the work in Lamoni.

Later announcements will give dates, speakers, those who have charge of the work, and other arrangements.

Sunday School Aims

A minor error appeared in setting forth the Sunday school aims in a recent HERALD. The board spent some time discussing the proper ages, and finally suggested that the intermediate closed with the 14th year, because it was believed that the break comes more naturally at the end of the 14th rather than the 15th year. This list is only tentative, however, and the board would be very glad indeed to receive criticisms and suggestions.

At a recent meeting held in Independence, some discussion was had as to dividing into four-year periods, or some other plan than the present three-year. Eight years is the earliest age for baptism. Should it not be made significant by being either the last or the first year of a department? At what age is the change most readily made to the senior Quarterly, at the end of the 13th, the 14th, or the 15th year? We will be glad to have the results of the experience of our Sunday-school teachers.

Church Store Establishes Mail Order Department

The Lamoni Storehouse has taken a new step in merchandising by establishing a mail order department. They issue complete price lists every few weeks, keeping up with market changes, and offer to pay freight on orders of $100 or more. They have a representative who has already secured some large group orders from Des Moines, Chariton, and other points. This is one step toward cooperative purchasing by the consumer, and no doubt another natural development will soon be cooperative buying on the part of the various storehouses, to the advantage of the producer and the consumer.

"Some men are thrown in the shade and others stand in their light."

General Conference Auditorium Campaign

To Date

Three Quarters of a Million Have Been Pledged, $800,000, at the Least, Is in Sight, $200,000 in Cash and Bonds Are Paid.

WE REALIZE that the people have been anxiously waiting for a report on the big Auditorium Campaign; and we are certain that they will feel well repaid for their waiting when we report the splendid result of $750,000 pledged and $200,000 now in hand. There are several districts that have not yet sent in complete reports, and from their preliminary statements we know that the total will reach a full $800,000.

Within a week or two we will publish a detailed report of the subscriptions by districts.

The church is to be congratulated, and the districts are to be thanked most sincerely for the splendid result thus far achieved. The committees worked nobly in every branch and district, and the spirit of consecration evidenced by the people is an index of the faith that is in them. Let us go forward, redeem our pledges as soon as we can, and take courage in the progress of God's work.

A Fair Wage

The wages workers may receive depends in the end on production. Our ideal should be maximum results at minimum expense, not minimum results at maximum expense.

Much is said concerning the right of labor to a living wage. Many assume without proof that the laborer produces much more than he receives. That a few men have received and still do receive more than their share, more than the equivalent of their contribution to society and industry, no one, so far as we know, has challenged. If the total income of the country were divided pro rata, it would make considerable difference to a number of people, especially to many in the professional class—preachers and teachers. But it is a query how great would be the difference to the laborer.

Recent estimates show that 88 per cent of the population receive about 65 per cent of the income. There is a discrepancy of 23 per cent, which would represent only a one-third gain. It is probable, however, that 23 per cent of that 88 per cent receive 20 per cent of the gross income. If so, that would mean 65 per cent receive only 45 per cent. A pro rata division would raise their share to 65 per cent or about one half.

We are quite willing to agree that every man should have a fair living and adequate recompense for his labor. The plan of the church for social equality proposes an equitable division between the business manager, society, and the laborer. It also recognizes clearly the importance of able management for the success of any undertaking. It recognizes clearly also the value of silent labor—the use of machinery. Just at present we have the strange spectacle of many men idle who would be very glad to work to produce for themselves if permitted to use the machines. There are many discussing this who are not able to analyze the whole situation thoroughly, nor how much or how little the question of profits may have to do with the question. Any reasonable man would prefer to have his plant running without making profit rather than to have it lying idle, and would prefer to see those working with him employed rather than unemployed, even though in either case there was not any profit received.

But it is doubtless true, as one business man expressed it, that we did not hire you to see that your living expenses are paid, but we hired you because you convinced us you are capable of doing certain work we had to be done. We decided long ago what it was worth to us to have that work done in a certain way by a certain type of man. It is on that basis we pay you. We pay only "for services rendered." We do not undertake to pay for living expenses, paying each man according to the financial scale of his private life.

Now at first glance that seems hard-hearted. But the same speaker continues, as quoted in the American for December: "I want to pay you more money. Just as soon as you earn it I will do it, too. The way you can do that is to do the job you are on better than it has ever been done before, which will make your work earn us more money, from which we will be able to pay you. When you are too good for that job, we will give you a better one, paying more money."

Some may say that that represents the ideal of the world and not of the church. Yet we frankly must recognize that if the church—if any economic institution—is to continue to do business, it must pay on the basis of value received. We do not refer here to the care of the sick, the poor, the widow, and the orphan. We do refer to what is sometimes referred to as the economic and social foundations of Zion. There must be a disposition of how much work can be done at how little expense, rather than the spirit, How much can I get for how little work?

A system of wants and needs unless very wisely administered has evidently the disadvantages of lack of incentive. It also has the disadvantage of personal restriction and great rigidity. Rightly administered, it will prevent poverty, but unless it is very carefully administered it will not prevent pauperization and the result that a man's efficiency is lowered instead of being increased. He is forced upon his heels instead of being on his toes, ready to give the best of which he is capable.

It is vital to the success of the work that every man, every able-bodied man, shall give one hundred cents worth of service for every dollar he receives. But if the widows and orphans and those in need are to receive due care, it becomes necessary that he give more than one hundred cents worth of service for each dollar; otherwise there would be no surplus to care for those who really deserve such help.

We strongly urge greater economic justice and social reform which goes with Zion—that cooperation in service to humanity and to God; but we must also remember there are practical business principles which cannot be ignored, and one is that we cannot continue indefinitely to pay a man more than his service is worth. Of old it was said, "Be ye wise servants, harmless as doves." And again, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

General Interest and the Forum

The following letter was received from one of our missionaries, and we are printing it as several others have raised the same question.

"Editors Herald: I am going to try to make friendly criticism of some things that appeared in the HERALD of late. About two weeks ago a letter from Des Moines telling about wireless telegraphing that was being fostered by the church was as sensational as any yellow journal. Such things are liable to do us great harm. The statement that we had established motor lines to carry produce and that we were taking over industrial institutions is absolutely false. I live here, and if such things were in existence I would know it. The whole article is sensational and misleading and will do us more harm than good.

"Twice during 1920 articles have appeared from writers in which the statement is made that Saints coming to Zion should deed all their property to the Bishop and then get back enough for a stewardship. That kind of teaching is false and misrepresents the Bishop and the church; all that the Bishop asks in an inventory. I am not objecting to writers expressing their views in the HERALD, even though differing with the Bishop or others, but it seems to me that where there is such an important doctrine affecting the financial interests of the church and the gathering, an article so absolutely contrary to the teachings of the church and the Bishop, you should append a note making it clear that the writer was in error and state what the church believes as taught by the Bishop. A very large percentage of our people are the plain and unlearned, and what appears in the HERALD and Ensign they believe as though it was in the Bible, in short it is Bible to them."

The first article was evidently one appearing under the heading, "The church using wireless," which was printed in our department Of General Interest. It is copied from an Iowa newspaper, written in a friendly way by one of the editors of that daily paper. It does not even pretend to be verbally accurate. The reported message is used only by way of illustration. Some gathered the impression therefrom that the church is trying to run a monopoly. Of course they are mistaken. The use of motor trucks, of course, would be a progressive matter, and will no doubt be taken up by many people in the years to come. The article in part presents the ideas of some as though they were facts and to that extent is inaccurate. But there is nothing in the existing facts which need cause the slightest uneasiness.

A company of young men in Independence have organized a radio school. They plan to establish substations at Kansas City, Holden, Saint Joseph, Lamoni, Des Moines, and Omaha. It offers good practice, and has been used at times advantageously by others, and is an advantage in the sending of church communications. But there is nothing disturbing about that. There are many young men scattered all over the country who are doing the very same thing.

Occasionally something appears in the HERALD which we had not expected to be so used. But there is seldom anything which appears in the department Of General Interest which is not a clipping—and nothing that either the editors or the church vouches for in any way, shape, or form.

We have noted in looking over some of the old HERALDS that the editors did not assume personal responsibility for communications in certain departments. Literally that is true of all of the HERALDS. The editors do not undertake to print simply that with which they personally agree, or which they personally think represents the position of the church. On two or three occasions we have attempted what this writer suggests, and have been very severely called down by some of our brethren, with the demand that they have the right to say what they please without comment. We have continual pressure all the time by those wishing articles to appear on certain subjects not germane to our church work, as the Mooney case, Socialism, remedies for certain ills, etc.

The articles to which the brother refers most certainly were printed in the Forum, which is especially a place for exchange of opinions, and in which articles regularly appear which we do not think represent the position of the church. The purpose in using is that they are moot questions, and questions which are being discussed. We believe we cannot progress until these questions are thought about, and faced. We print articles to which we are diametrically opposed at times, because they give a viewpoint which should be of interest to some of our readers as a matter of information.

The HERALD should be a source of information, but there is of course the danger that some accept everything that appears in it as being practically infallible; there is also the danger that some of our enemies, either intentionally or otherwise, will grossly misrepresent our position by taking extracts from such articles. We try to keep these facts in mind, but should we exclude everything with which we do not agree? or, is the HERALD to be rather a source of information, giving us items of news value, discussing various subjects from time to time, so that we may have light thrown on them from a variety of positions?

We do not think there is an article printed in the HERALD which does not represent the writer's views. He is sincere to that extent. The fact that they are not our views does not seem to us sufficient excuse for exclusion. Most emphatically the church is not bound by the variety of opinions of different men. The church is not bound by the opinion of the assistant or associate editor. Our late President, Joseph Smith, emphasized on one occasion that his own opinion as set forth in the HERALD was his opinion, and not intended to commit the church. Still, without doubt, his opinion would carry much greater weight than would that of the assistant or associate editor. The church takes its definite position through General Conference. Its constitutional law is laid down in the three books, and interpreted. It belongs to the Presidency to teach and interpret the law. An action taken by them, and adopted by General Conference, represents the position of the church.

An action by the Presidency or joint council, to a lesser degree, represents the position of the church. The actions of the bishopric, or the Presiding Bishopric, are worthy of considerable weight when they concern the financial law with which they have to deal because they are the officers to consider and interpret the law. Still they have not the same binding force as has an action of General Conference, though their interpretations should be accepted and acceded to, and acted upon, until they are called in question before the proper body and set aside.

Speculation is not profitable. We ought to have real leadership. We do not want simply news in an abstract sense. We want to give as much of the truth as possible in our church publication. Our aim is real information, and to make our church organ a source of instruction and of thought. If errors appear we are always glad to see them corrected. When there are errors of fact, we will see that the correction is made ourselves; but when we consider there are errors of interpretation, the editors often wait to give others an opportunity, since many writers object to our making comment at the time or afterwards.

Elbert A. Smith to Address Lamoni Young People

The Wednesday evening prayer meeting, February 16, in Lamoni, was set aside for prayer for the success of the revival meetings to be held by and on behalf of the young people of that stake. There was the largest attendance we have seen recently at a Wednesday night prayer meeting in Lamoni. It was similar to one held four years ago when the Saints met to pray for President Elbert A. Smith, when he was ill in California. Then there came the assurance of the Spirit that he would be blessed and restored for service in the church. So at this meeting assurance was given that our heavenly Father is with the young people in this movement.

At Independence the work of preparation, as well as the services, was marked by a great degree of the Spirit of God. We do not know that we have ever felt a larger measure of the Spirit at a preaching service than was present there.

The comment is made in the Kansas City Star, as published in the HERALD last week, that Elder Williams spoke more as trying to convince a jury than as appealing to an audience of young people. This is a significant point of our message. A revival is not simply an appeal to the emotions, scientifically worked up, as is the case with a revival in the sectarian churches. But not ignoring the appeal to the hearts of men, it is much more a challenge to their reason and intelligence than is the case with any other church of which we know.

President Elbert A. Smith will be the speaker at these meetings in Lamoni, which will be held March 13-20 inclusive. President Smith was the unanimous choice of all the young people for these services. The music will be in charge of Elder Harold C. Burgess.

The success of these meetings will depend, more than anything else, on unity of effort, prayer, and humility. Organization is necessary, but humble prayer is essential.

It must be remembered that this movement is not at the request of the presiding authorities, but in each case at the request of the young people. Also that it is not merely the holding of one week's meetings, nor is the work over at the close of the week's services. There is the work of spiritual preparation beforehand. But completion of the services is only a preparation for greater devotion to the cause of Christ.

The Successful Auditorium Drive

Our readers are no doubt more than pleased to learn the excellent results of the auditorium drive, with $200,000 actually in hand, and pledges up to $750,000, and probably of $800,000.

Bishop B. R. McGuire informs us that the plan for the campaign was outlined by Bishop J. F. Keir and Arthur E. McKim. The work was actually done by these men and the office force in the Presiding Bishop's office and in the recorder's office. It required aggressive work to prepare the campaign literature and to see that it was sent out properly.

After that, Brother Arthur E. McKim gave diligent application, secured the reports from time to time, and saw that they were compiled and published. It has been a source of regret that complete figures could not be given at an earlier date, but that was because of delayed reports from the various districts. Individuals, branches, and districts wished to do a little more before sending in final reports. It is the present intention, at an early date, to give a list of districts, showing the amount pledged by each district.

It has been a piece of work well done, and we are pleased to see the credit given where it belongs.

Our Reunion Work

Early in the fall of 1920 a letter was forwarded by the Presidency to the HERALD Editors, in which a request was made for some articles or discussions concerning certain phases of reunion work and asking for some four or five manuscripts. After giving the matter consideration, it was agreed that it was too late in the season for anything to be prepared advantageously in connection with the reunion season of 1920. It was therefore postponed to this spring, and the list of articles requested has been very much increased, and requests have been sent practically to all parts of the country, and the work of the reunion covered in most, if not in all of its details.

The aim is to secure first, the best experience of our reunion workers in the various fields. Second, suggestions for improving our reunion work in the future. On most subjects there will be more than one article, in order to give a real symposium or survey of the situation.

It is our intention to begin the publication of this series at an early date in March, continuing it for the succeeding two or three months, as the interest warrants.

From articles already in hand we can promise that the information given is good, not only for reunion work, but the writers have taken a much broader scope and give many valuable suggestions for work in church and home.

A Social Sanitarium

The George republic plan has been extended to adults with good results.

Some twenty-five years ago, Mr. William R. George organized a junior republic for the care of young delinquents. His purpose was to cure rather than to punish, by the placing of proper responsibility.

In a recent article in the Independent, he attacks with fervor the nonsense of calling a boy past eighteen years of age an infant. War will take him and use him on the battle front, and use him as a man, but when he returns after peace is declared, he is considered an infant. Many boys eighteen years of age are fully prepared to assume the responsibility of life. The difficulty is that, ready to assume the responsibility but not being given self-government, he develops a sense of lack of responsibility, so that those who are weak turn easily to that which is evil and utilize their energy in a fight against laws with which they have nothing to do, and with this there is little sympathy, even from the good.

Once these young men, who are to become good citizens, are considered of age and receive manhood's responsibilities, the right to vote, and a share in the state, childish ideas are put away, and the former hero is no longer considered heroic.

At the base of social life, Mr. George places self-government, self-support, recreation, and service as being fully as vital as are the activities of the heart, lungs, stomach, and kidneys in the physical body. The need for recreation and service he thinks is already rather fully recognized, but not the value of self-government and self-support. So in the junior republic boys are given the right of self-government, and in the junior municipality, in which all over eighteen years of age are enrolled, a mayor is elected, and all the other usual city officers, the same as in the vicinity of home, and the mayor appoints the same civic officers as in the neighboring cities.

In the junior republic, boys are elected president and vice president respectively. They have executive officers and legislative and judicial officers. Young boys and girls are both taken and are thus helped to full citizenship—development rather than punishment.

Mr. George many years ago came to the conclusion that there was need for a social sanitarium rather than prison and so-called reformatory. He also doubted if the officially dependent and delinquent is the only member of human kind subject to social irregularity. Twenty years ago he worked out the theory. For the past five years it has received a fair trying out with adults who are delinquents. Mr. George emphasizes the fact that only a small percentage of crime is actually punished, and emphasizes the delinquency of others who keep out of jail. He emphasizes the weakness of the theory of punishment and the gain that is made by developing the sense of responsibility.

He has also organized a social sanitarium to which delinquents are committed. It consists of five successively guarded inclosures; each inclosure comprises several acres of land, and each inclosure constitutes a complete self-governing community. There is nothing in the architecture or style of clothing or the character of the building to differentiate the residents from other residents in any part of the country miles away from the sanitarium. Also there is an attempt within the sanitarium to duplicate as closely as possible conditions in the outer world, so there is no loss of citizenship. The one sent there is still a man; his family may reside with him, if they desire, but they may leave also if they wish, though of course the individual committed to the sanitarium may not until his treatment is completed. The so-called delinquent has full opportunity to exercise a portion of self-government, self-support, recreation, and service.

If the laws are violated in the first inclosure, the courts of that community, conducted by the patients themselves, send the offender to the second inclosure, where he remains until readmitted to the first again by the citizens of the first inclosure. Generally speaking, the conditions of the second and succeeding inclosures are patterned closely after those in the first, and those in the first are patterned after the world at large. The farther removed one is from the first, the farther he is from being released to the common world; while those who enter the fifth inclosure are so hopelessly deficient that there is little hope of any permanent improvement, so these remain under the care of social doctors for the balance of their days, and are made as happy and comfortable as their circumstances and their cases will permit.

Recreation

Recreation in its primary significance means to create again, to renew. In a special sense it is used for diversion, and for play. Is there ever a time of life when recreation is primary? Considering it logically it would hardly seem so, except in case of convalescence. It would seem to be primary to do something. Recreation is then secondary to the work of life, as a general rule.

In the case of serious illness, or of serious injury, of course recreation or upbuilding is primary, though not in the sense of play. In the period of early infancy, upbuilding is primary, so that the young infant should sleep by far the greater part of the time. But that is not recreation, in any sense, because it is first a creation and building up of the physical powers of the child.

If there is a period of life to which play belongs, as a primary consideration, it is to infancy and to childhood. Play is more important than study or school. Yet even then a means will be found for recreation in the sense of diversion, and recreation in the sense of the need of long hours of sleep to build up the waste places of the young body, for it must be remembered that activity is, after all, primary, as it makes possible needed growth and muscle coordination.

There is no period of life that does not really need recreation, and physical activity or play could well be indulged in to advantage by those older in years—the middle aged, if not even those who by their years are considered old. Recreation through sleep is essential; recreation through play possesses greater value than we have been inclined to recognize, as it involves a release of the tenseness of ordinary life—a relaxation which makes for upbuilding.

Recreation in the sense of diversion, or a change of activity, is always valuable.

The young adolescent, being but a short time for childhood, should naturally indulge in play of greater activity and will desire more of it.

Most students agree that the young child is not social. He is individualistic. Strong social instinct develops about the time of early adolescence or just prior thereto—the period when we have so many boy gangs in the city. This desire for social reaches its fullest aspect in later adolescence among the young people and young adults, yet by no means dies out in later life. Certainly there are differences in individuals, but we can hardly state that the social instincts and desires belong to only one period of life; they belong to all, from the later years of childhood on. Though perhaps it is true that social considerations are upon the whole primary in later adolescence, there are individual exceptions.

On the other hand, young youth is serious. It is the period of great dreams and visions. Youth hopes to accomplish wonders; youth is the period of study; youth is the period of storm and stress of religious conversion. At least many place this in the period of adolescence. So large are the interests of youth, and so deep, that it may be seriously questioned if after all, social and recreation is in any sense primary. In childhood the need of study is not felt as keenly as it is later in life. The period of adolescence, the high school and college age, marks a period of greater interest in the work of the school as well as in the work of the church.

It would seem to follow from these considerations that an organization for young people will not be solely recreational and social; but it will by no means neglect these very important factors, and will see that they are amply provided for. On the other hand, in an organization for the young people there may be little room for children or those older in years, as it has its own problems to meet.

Yet there is a very great need by children for play. Play should form the larger part of their life, and that play should have reasonable supervision. Again, not only sociability but recreation and even play is needed by adults, in fact all through life. Better provisions are needed to meet this lack.

Subjects Being Discussed

Laurel Club in Civic Improvement Program

The Laurel Club which since 1906 has been continuously engaged year in and year out in doing various helpful tasks for the church at Independence, has taken up a new line of endeavor this winter, and at the request of the Women's Department has agreed to oversee the work of civic improvement. The forty-five women composing this club have had their preliminary meeting, and have formulated a program of work which meets the approval of the church authorities, and also has the indorsement of the Independence Chamber of Commerce. While this is a church organization, it hopes in its work of civic betterment to obtain the cooperation of all the residents of Independence, and perhaps by these efforts ultimately gain interest to such an extent that there will be a general town clean-up. As far as the church part of this work is concerned, the group officers will be asked to lend a special cooperation to this, to enable a really worth-while crusade to be carried out. Further announcements will be made at an early date regarding this work.

New Church in New Zealand

The following from a letter by H. W. Savage, written from Auckland, New Zealand, is of interest:

"We have witnessed the rise of a new church here of late. It is the 'Independent Presbyterian Church.' It is built on the doctrine of baptism by immersion, founded by the Reverend Mr. Murry and about three hundred of his followers from the old Scotch Presbyterian Church. Mr. Murry was expelled from his parish and his ministerial license suspended by the council of the presbytery of New Zealand because he became convicted of the need for baptism by immersion, and was baptized by a Baptist 'reverend.'"

In anticipation of the coming series of young people's meetings in Lamoni, each teacher in the senior and adult departments of the Lamoni Sunday school will devote the session of February 27 to a lesson on prayer. Definite aims are outlined and outlines furnished for material from a scriptural point of view. One of the underlying motives is the development of the attitude of prayer toward the services to be held March 13-20. Elder H. C. Burgess will address the college students for thirty minutes on February 23 concerning the meetings held at Independence.

Elder J. F. Garver, president of Lamoni Stake, is to be in attendance at the Northeastern Kansas conference, February 24-27, at Topeka.

Joseph Smith the Foe of Polygamy

Sermon by Walter W. Smith, Sunday, November 7, 1920, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri. Reported by Howard W. Harder.

The last two verses of the fifth-ninth chapter of Isaiah:

"And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

Here is a promise that three generations of those into whose mouths the Lord should put his word should be loyal and true to the same.

I also want to read to you from the seventh chapter of Matthew, beginning with the fifteenth verse:

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth forth not good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

I think perhaps I owe you an apology. I feel that to any decent, respectable, and truth-loving congregation of this size is due the apology of any minister who stands forth to speak on a subject so hackneyed and dirty as the one I assay to speak upon this evening. It is not my choice that this subject should be so necessary at any time. As a minister for Christ, I stand in defense of the truth, whatsoever it may be. Never under any circumstances, never under any pretext, never at any time, is it right to defend the truth with an error. And anything that purports to be true but which requires to be defended by a lie, carries with it its refutation, its own negation. Were it not for circumstances over which my friends and I have no control, there would be no occasion for an address such as I am about to make this evening, on the subject, "Joseph Smith the foe of polygamy."

For the comfort, assurance, and guidance of all that may now hear me speak, I want to say to begin with what I believe you ought to know as a sort of guide or gauge of what I am likely to say, that Joseph Smith was not in any way responsible for the introduction, the practice, or the teaching of polygamy.

Now, I expect you will say to me, "You are rather a young man to make such a bold statement." And so I am. My experience with this church goes back only about twenty-six years, so I cannot bear you my personal testimony as to the character and conduct of Joseph Smith as a minister for Christ, who was assassinated on the 27th day of June, 1844, several decades before I was born; but the information concerning his life, the results of his ministry, his own public teachings, the witness of those who knew him best, are all available—they are not lost.

I want to say to you that Joseph Smith's only relation to polygamy was that of a relentless foe who fought it without mercy until he was slain. Now you know my position, and I can prove my assertion.

I am going to divide the evidence on this subject that I have acquired during my short ministry into three classes.

And I want to say in the beginning that, owing to the insidious and untimely remarks of those who seem to be poorly informed, I have made it my business to make a very careful study of that which seems to some people to implicate Joseph Smith in the practice of polygamy. After a careful and prayerful and consistent reading of these documents, I can say to you to-night that his only relation to polygamy was that of an uncompromising enemy.

We ought to divide this evidence into groups so that we can talk about it a little more plainly. I shall try not to read you anything to-night unless it be something that I could not do justice by quoting.

Personal Evidence

Of course, there would be no necessity for any explanation if some one did not accuse Joseph Smith of being responsible for polygamy. Brigham Young presented in August, 1852, a document called by him a revelation. He presented it to the church, or that branch of the church which was then in the Salt Lake neighborhood of Utah. He told the people at the time he presented it that the document had been in his possession for a long time under lock and key, and that nothing leaked out that should not.

Brigham Young is reported by the Deseret News of July 1, 1874, to have said in a sermon delivered June 21, 1874, in the tabernacle at Salt Lake City, speaking of this doctrine of polygamy:

"While we were in England, in 1839 and 1840 I think, the Lord manifested to me by vision and his Spirit things that I did not understand. I never opened my mouth to anyone concerning them until I returned to Nauvoo. Joseph had never mentioned this. There had never been a thought of it in the church that I ever knew anything about, at this time; but I had this to myself, and kept it to myself. . . . And when I returned home and Joseph revealed those things to me, then I understood the reflections of my mind while in England; but this was not until I had told him what I understood. This was in 1841. The revelation was given in 1843, but the doctrine was revealed before this."

Brigham Young says that he had a revelation in his possession which he had kept some seven or eight years and that he was now ready to present this to the church, to the people. This was in August, 1852. Mind you, if you are willing to accept the personal testimony of this man (he is not my witness) you should remember that in the same breath in which he testifies that Joseph Smith had been the author of this revelation he also testifies that he knows by the witness of the Spirit that the principle of polygamy is of God. Beware how you accept such witnesses. You should also remember that it is not the privilege of a man who introduces a witness to take parts of his testimony and deny the rest, for, if he is trustworthy and acceptable in testifying to the thing which you are bringing forth your witness to prove, his word must likewise be accepted by you on other points as well.

Perhaps that will be as much as I need to say concerning this man who is responsible for the introduction of polygamy, whoever may have been the author of the document he presents. However he says that he himself was the first to speak of it.

I want to notice another side of this question, and I may have to read just a little to refresh my mind, because it is so exceedingly delicate that I do not want to risk making it any worse than it is.

The next witness I want to notice is one Zina D. Huntington Jacobs. She is not my witness. She is the witness of those who say Joseph Smith was responsible for this doctrine of polygamy, which I think is untrue. This woman, Zina D. Huntington, testifies that she was married to Joseph Smith in 1841. That is a very direct testimony, isn't it? On page 12 of Representative Women of Deseret, you will find the following:

"Sister Zina was married in Nauvoo, and had two sons, but this was not proving a happy union, she subsequently separated from her husband. Joseph Smith taught her the principle of marriage for eternity, and she accepted it as a divine revelation, and was sealed to the Prophet for time and eternity, after the order of the new and everlasting covenant."

Also in Pictures and Biographies of Brigham Young and His Wives, page 32, you will find:

"Sister Zina was married to Henry Jacobs in Nauvoo, and had two sons, but this not proving a happy union she subsequently separated from her husband. Joseph Smith taught her the principle of marriage for eternity, and she accepted it as a divine revelation, and was sealed to the Prophet Joseph for time and eternity, October 27, 1841, her brother Dimick Huntington officiating."

Mind you, this is the kind of evidence that is adduced by our enemies and those who would try to prove that the doctrine of polygamy originated in the teachings of Joseph Smith. Here is a woman who says that she was married to Joseph Smith. Now, let me give you just a little reference that will help you to appreciate the worth of this woman as a witness. What she was as a woman, I do not know. She may have been a good housekeeper, an altogether satisfactory nurse; but as a witness you can see how far she misses the mark. The records of marriages for Hancock County, Illinois, show that Henry B. Jacobs and Zina D. Huntington were married in Nauvoo on the 7th of March, 1841, John C. Bennett, mayor of Nauvoo, officiating. This woman testifies that she bore two sons, not twins, to Henry Jacobs between March 7 and October 27 that same year, got tired of marriage and was divorced! Shades of witnesses!! Then the story goes on that she married Joseph Smith in October of that year, but unfortunately for the situation so far as the witness is concerned, she is recorded as the mother of a son born at Pisgah, Iowa, in 1846, whom she called Chariton, being the son of Henry Jacobs. She had not quit living with him yet, notwithstanding she testified that she was married to Joseph Smith in October, 1841. You can imagine what a witness like that is worth. I have quoted in every instance from those that are friendly to Zina D. Jacobs. Why, it almost makes me ashamed to think that I have to do this thing to-night. If you all had these witnesses and had this matter before you, certainly you would not need anybody to preach a sermon on the subject.

The next witness I would like to introduce—not my witness, understand, but a witness for those who say that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy—is Eliza Snow, the poetess. She herself says that she married Joseph Smith in March and June, 1842. I do not know why she was married twice, but fortunately for Joseph Smith and the friends of truth, Miss Eliza Roxey Snow is on record bearing date of October 1, 1842. If she was married in June, it is just a short time, and if in March, but a little longer time before she bore testimony with a group of other women that there was no law known in the church relating to marriage except the one published in section 111 in our present Doctrine and Covenants, called the "Article on marriage," as published in all the Books of Doctrine and Covenants between 1835 and 1876, and in all of ours up to the present date.

Now, if this Miss Snow was married to Joseph Smith in March and June, or either one, 1842, she knew in October, 1842, some other rule of marriage than the one established in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as everyone present may well know; for the rule laid down in the Book of Covenants says distinctly, "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." And that was the rule published at the time she made her certificate, October 1, 1842, saying that she knew that was the only rule of marriage in the church. She made this affidavit to prove that the things being said by John C. Bennett were malicious and unfounded lies. If Miss Snow was not dead and was not a woman, I would like to ask her when did she lie. Certainly she perjured herself hopelessly one time or the other, and in either event her testimony is not worth the reading.

I could go on and give you a list of witnesses longer than there is any necessity of doing, and I could point out the very same kind of discrepancies, each and every one of these witnesses having attempted to say that Joseph Smith taught and practice polygamy. A few of them seem to glory in the fact that they had the wonderful and glorious privilege (?) of being a concubine to Joseph Smith. These women could not be wives of his, because the law of the land prohibited a man from having more than one wife, and the law of the church says that a man and wife must keep themselves wholly from all others and for each other, otherwise they are guilty of adultery; and those guilty of adultery shall be cut off unless they repent, which means a turning away from it.

I am sure I do not know why these people tell these stories about themselves. I have wondered about it a good many times. I have always had a great deal of respect for a statement once made by R. C. Evans in reference to these testimonies. He said that those who preferred to take the testimony of this class of people could take it if they wanted to, but he didn't care to associate with such people. Of course, he has since changed his mind, but he is at liberty to do that. Anybody who wants to pick that kind of a crowd to go with and accept that kind of testimony, may do so, and if they can be proud of it, they have a remarkable adjustment.

I want to give you some of the testimony of people on the other side. Emma Hale Smith, the lawful, wedded wife of Joseph Smith, was married to him in 1827 at Bainbridge, New York, lived with him until his death, bore him several sons, and bore his posthumous son, David Smith, five months after he was killed. She was a fine, God-fearing, truthful woman, loyal to the memory of Joseph Smith to her dying day. She said that she was knowing to the situation so well that she could say positively Joseph Smith never had any wife but herself; she even goes further and says "nor did he sustain such relations with any woman or women other than myself." And if anybody on earth would know whether a man was marrying a dozen or half dozen women and teaching other people to do it his wife would surely know it, especially as she lived right in the same community where it is alleged to have been taught, and, according to the testimony of these people, she was present at such marriages and gave her consent thereto. Isn't it remarkable that anybody would testify to that kind of thing when the people who should know, and did know, said such a thing did not happen?

Joseph Smith the Prophet, son of Joseph Smith the Martyr and father of Frederick M., was twelve years old when his father was killed, and he says that his father never practiced polygamy. (Do you think a twelve-year-old boy isn't knowing?) Where there are jarrings and contentions between a father and a mother, do you think a young boy of twelve years of age would not know it? Do you think he could live in a house where his father was keeping a harem and not know it? Yet, he bears an unflinching testimony as to the character of his father.

James Whitehead, private secretary to Joseph Smith, and lifelong friends, during his entire life and to his dying day bore witness that there was no such thing as a revelation on polygamy known at the time of which these people bearing testimony speak, and that if Joseph Smith wrote it or had anything to do with it, it was wholly unknown to him, and he was his private secretary from 1841 to the time of Joseph's death in 1844.

I have heard father Richard Lambert, sr., twice in my life say in unstinted words that he was a member of the Nauvoo Legion and lived at Nauvoo and that there wasn't any doubt in the world but what the criticism of Joseph Smith was a gross misrepresentation and that there was no ground for the saying that Joseph Smith was responsible for polygamy.

I have spoken to a great many people and I have talked with those who were living at Nauvoo, not in great numbers because they were thinning out by the time I came along; but I have talked to quite a considerable number, all of whom testify personally to knowing that Joseph Smith was not responsible for this doctrine.

Think of the ridiculous situation with which we are confronted. We meet people who testify that they were Joseph Smith's wives, but when we inquire deeply into the matter we find that the marriage ceremony takes place in Salt Lake City and that Brigham Young or some other person stood proxy for Joseph Smith. There is no way in the world to save a man's reputation from such calumny. It is really quite ridiculous.

Circumstantial Evidence

The circumstantial evidence in the case is one that is rather difficult to deal with, because every person puts his own interpretation on what he considers a circumstance, and we sometimes hear this kind of a saying, "Well, where there is so much smoke, there must be a little fire"; or, "Where there is so much talk, there must be a little truth." "There must have been something or other to start this talk at Nauvoo, or else there would not have been so much to talk about." There was something. There certainly was something. To attempt to say that there wasn't any talk of polygamy nor any hint of it is only to weaken the cause of truth. There was talk about it. President Brigham Young says he talked about it and he told exactly where he got his cue—by a vision when in England. He said he came home and talked it to Joseph Smith, and if he had the temerity to talk to Joseph Smith about it he would doubtless have the courage to talk to others about the same thing.

Turn to Times and Seasons. There are a half dozen copies in town, and anybody who wants to read it can easily borrow one. If you will turn to the issue of the first of February, 1844, you will find there a statement from Joseph Smith touching the preaching of polygamy. Isn't that strange? And it was just a few months prior to his death. A certain brother up at Lapeer, Michigan, had been teaching polygamy and other false and corrupt doctrines. This notice in the Times and Seasons says plainly that the brother is silenced and has been cut off and is cited to appear at a special conference to answer for his conduct. This notice appears over the signatures of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

A Brother Richard Hewitt in March, 1844, called on Hyrum Smith and asked his views concerning some doctrines which were being taught to the Saints in Hancock County. Under date of March 15, 1844, we find this notice published in the Times and Seasons of same date, signed by Hyrum Smith, the presiding patriarch of the church:

"To the Saints Residing on China Creek: Whereas Brother

Richard Hewitt has called on me to-day, to know my views concerning some doctrines that are preached in your place, and states to me that some of your elders say that a man having a certain priesthood may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here: I say unto you that man teaches false doctrine, for there is no such doctrine taught here; neither is there any such thing practiced here."

I have this to submit, that it is a most unusual thing that we find a situation like this, where a man has spent the last few days of his life in combating in a most vehement manner such a gross evil and then after he is dead have the thing palmed off on him, the very thing that he was fighting.

It reminds me of an argument I once heard in a class in philosophy. It was said that a certain prophet was a prophet because he prophesied. Then when they got through with that end of the argument, some one asked how they knew what he said was a prophecy; the answer was at once given, "Why, because he was a prophet!" On that basis, I can prove that any act was a good act, or was a bad act, just on that kind of evidence. I will say that John Jones is a very good man. How do I know? Because he does such and such good act. How do I know that what he does is good? Why, because John Jones does it! First of all, let some one establish beyond the point of contradiction one single instance where Joseph Smith was in any way associated with polygamy, either in conversation, preaching, teaching, or writing, except as condemning it, then there will be another story to tell.

Now, concerning the circumstantial evidence. What would you think of a man who was the author of a set of rules by which he organized a large and flourishing society, to perpetuate which he lived and gave his efforts, and finally his life—I say, what would you think of a man who would live and labor and work to break down the very thing he was living and working and dying to build up? Do you find that kind of thing? No. Read in the Book of Mormon the most clear-cut and forbidding denunciation of polygamy to be found in the written word, whether in the Bible or the Doctrine and Covenants: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none, saith the Lord."

In section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants, given through Joseph Smith, is the statement that a man shall cleave unto his wife, "and they twain shall be one." He is the acknowledged minister who first in this church used the formula that was written into the article on marriage and became the law and governing rule of this church. It is said that at a marriage feast in Kirtland he asked the contracting parties if they both mutually agreed "to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?" He is the author. Oliver Cowdery may have written the article, but the contract of marriage was not his, so we are told in the History of Joseph Smith; but it was Joseph's own invention. If it was a revelation to him he doesn't say so, but that was the ceremony he used, and when this Doctrine and Covenants was prepared it was written into the book. Can you imagine the author of a document like that subsequently aiding or abetting or consenting to anything so diametrically opposed to a doctrine which says one man shall not have more than one living wife at the same time? Can you think of it? Can you think of a man making the bold attack that he made on John C. Bennett for his adulterous practices if he were conniving in even the most secret manner to do likewise?

One of the documents used most frequently is a letter written by William Marks, bearing no date. We do not know just when he did write it. It is published in a periodical published at Saint Louis, called Zion's Harbinger, and this periodical bears the date of July, 1853. This is a letter that has been very much used and misused, and in the course of this which I shall read to you at considerable length, he said, "Now, Brother Marks, I want you to go into the high council and I will have charges preferred against all who practice this doctrine, and I want you to try them by the law of the church and cut them off if they will not repent and cease from practicing this doctrine, and," said he, "I will go into the stand and preach against it with all my might, and in this way we will rid the church of this damnable heresy."

What do you think of the probable standing of a man who is said by those who testified in favor of Joseph Smith's complicity with polygamy, to have been married to a half dozen women already and to have been the author of a document said to have been a revelation commanding the men to marry more wives than one? What do you think of the probability of a man talking to the president of the stake, the chief pastor in the church, saying to him "I want you to go into the high council and I will have charges preferred against all who practice this doctrine"? What would he look like coming into the stand and declaring openly and fearlessly against the doctrine of a plurality of wives, if he were guilty as charged? Why, that would be the most unheard-of thing you could imagine!

Does anybody have any idea that Joseph Smith was a fool? Why, his worst enemies give him credit for being very cunning and shrewd, and cunningness isn't one of the traits of fools. All those people who seek to fasten upon Joseph Smith the responsibility for the doctrine of polygamy, whether or not they believe in him as a prophet, whether they believe him true or false, all with one accord are willing to admit that knave he may have been, or prophet he may have been, but fool he was not. Can you imagine such an unseemly circumstance as a man who had just submitted himself to being married to a half dozen females getting up in public and preaching against the doctrine of a plurality of wives? It seems to me that circumstantial evidence would fade out very fast indeed and it would be very hard to fasten this doctrine upon him by circumstances if the circumstances that are known were to count; but it is easy, quite easy to raise a hue and cry when there is nobody around who knows anything about it.

Documentary Evidence

I want to present just a few words under this subject. The only fragment of documentary evidence to be had is section 132 in the Utah Book of Doctrine and Covenants, already referred to, which document was presented to the people by Brigham Young at the special conference of the church in August, 1852. Of course, there was a large company of people at that time who were well acquainted with Joseph Smith and knew his handwriting and who knew the handwriting of his clerk, who might easily come forward and say, "Let me see the manuscript." I imagine there were many people there who were still quite in love with Brother Joseph. Note the ingenious attitude of Brigham Young. He said he had this document in his desk for some years under lock and key, but these friends would naturally enough recognize that it was not the handwriting of Joseph Smith nor that of his secretary, so he said that Joseph Smith had William Clayton write the revelation, but why that was done nobody knows. After William Clayton is said to have written this so-called revelation, Bishop Whitney wanted to borrow it, so they say, to get a good look at it. It is very interesting, you know; and so he had a copy made; and then the original copy which Joseph Smith had written, from which William Clayton made a copy, from which Bishop Whitney made his copy, was stolen by Emma Smith and burned. See the circuitous route by which the original copy is loaned and lost.

Now, of course, Sister Emma was still living, so friends went to her and asked her if she ever at any time burned a revelation on polygamy. She says she did not, that she did not have anything to do with such document, that she did not even know there was such a revelation. So that little link between the original, which was burned, and this copy which was afterwards taken over to Bishop Whitney's office and copied again, which went to Utah, is broken.

These men were still living at the time the revelation was given to the church in Utah. A lot of people were anxious to know if this so-called revelation came from Joseph Smith, so they sought to interview them. Kingsbury said that he copied the revelation. What was it about? Well, it was about the eternity of the marriage covenant. Did it have anything to do with polygamy? Well, yes; I think it did—yes, I am sure of it. Was it the revelation published in section 132 of the Book of Covenants? Substantially, yes. Well, how long did it take you to write that revelation, Brother Kingsbury? After thinking it over for a while, he said it took him about an hour, not any longer. Then he was asked, Brother Kingsbury, what did you write it on? Foolscap paper. (Most of you have seen foolscap paper. It is a little longer than the ordinary sheet of paper and is folded in the middle, making four pages in all.) How much paper did it take, Brother Kingsbury? One sheet. How many pages did you write? Well, it covered all of the front page, at least. You are sure of that? Yes. You copied it yourself? Yes. All on one page? Yes. Substantially, such testimony was borne in the Temple Lot Suit by Joseph C. Kingsbury in 1894.

These men went to Utah and subsequently bore testimony before God in the Temple Lot Suit that this was verily true, and their entire testimony is to be found in the records of the courts of Missouri. They testified right out in Salt Lake City while they were living. I will admit it was a long time after they were supposed to have copied the "revelation"—it was about fifty years—but here is the marvelous thing about it, that this thing they have testified they copied in an hour and on one page of foolscap or a little more, is so long they would have had to use a half dozen pages to write it.

I haven't a copy of the Utah Book of Doctrine and Covenants with me, but any of you who happen to have one can immediately turn to section 132, and if there is any man or any woman living who can write a fine enough hand to write that document, section 132, on less than half dozen sheets of foolscap paper they can do better than most copyists can do. There are over eleven pages (sixty-six paragraphs) of the printed book. That is the thing that this man solemnly before God testified he copied on one sheet of foolscap paper in an hour. Why, I doubt if there is a typist here who can copy it on a typewriter in less than one hour; and yet people come to us and tell us in all earnestness of feeling that they are really anxious to break off the shackles from our benighted eyes and show us the error of our ways in believing that Joseph Smith was a good and wholesome man, and then drag that kind of evidence before us to prove that he was a polygamist, or the author of polygamy.

When anybody comes to you and asks you what you think about this question, if you feel as I do you will say you do not believe that Joseph Smith had anything to do with the introduction of the doctrine of polygamy. I believe this because I have read everything I can find on the question. I have read the books published by the Utah church, and I have in my library some fifty odd volumes written against this church which I have been reading systematically. Every time I hear about a new one I waste some perfectly good money to see what this new author has to say. But the farther we get away from this situation, the more ridiculous and altogether unreliable is the testimony borne concerning it. If you read what I have read, if you will read what has been presented and will take the time to go to the bottom of the situation—and there has been so much written about it that it will take you some time—when anybody comes to you and asks you if Joseph Smith was responsible for polygamy, you can say with all good conscience, void of offense toward God or man, “No, he was not responsible for polygamy.”

I do not make any subterfuge about it or beat around the bush. You may say, Well, if he was responsible for polygamy, it doesn't make any difference. But I say he was not. His only connection with polygamy was that of a determined foe. Let me read to you from the same letter I quoted a little while ago. This letter is written by William Marks and published as I told you, in Saint Louis in Zion's Harbinger, July, 1853. He said Joseph Smith came to him early in June and said to him:

“Brother Marks, I have something to communicate to you. We retired to a by-place and sat down together, when he said: We are a ruined people. I asked how so? He said: This doctrine of polygamy, or spiritual wife system, that has been taught and practiced among us, will prove our destruction and overthrow.”

“There,” you say, “certainly he was to blame for it!” But don't run too swiftly. “I have been deceived, said he,” and the friends who want to break the shackles off us put in a period and stop right there. I have had to wrangle over that very point more than once with somebody who insisted that he had read it and that was the way it read. “I have been deceived, said he, in reference to its practice.”

He told the brethren to let this thing alone. He had silenced one man for preaching it, and now he has discovered that in some few places they were still talking about it. But if some one wanted to tell the truth, how easy it would be to tell it, instead of telling something else using only half a sentence.

“I have been deceived, said he, in reference to its practice; it is wrong, it is a curse to mankind, and we shall have to leave the United States unless we can put it down and its practice stopped in the church. Now, said he, you haven't received this doctrine and how glad I am.”

Do you think that if he had been teaching it he would tell another man he was glad he had not accepted it? Really, I do not know where some people's conscience goes to, when they use in this way the plain, printed statement of an honest man. William Marks meant to say that Joseph Smith was always opposed to it. He doesn't say anywhere that he ever had anything to do with it, other than to oppose it.

“Now, said he, you haven't received this doctrine, and how glad I am. I want you to go into the high council and I will have charges preferred against all who practice this doctrine, and I want you to try them by the law of the church and cut them off.”

If he was married to all the people that the critics say he was, where would he have come out? Cut off with the rest of them, of course.

“If they will not repent and cease the practice of this doctrine, they should be cut off. And, said he, I will go into the stand and preach against it with all my might, and in this way we may rid the church of this damnable heresy.”

There is no question about its being taught in Nauvoo by Brigham Young. Why, he tells us exactly how it started! He was the first one to get the tip on the situation, and that was while he was in England. He came home and introduced it to his friends, talked about it earnestly, and went into its practice in a rather clandestine manner.

Now, the situation is just this: If Joseph Smith did practice polygamy, he broke the law of God which God had given him, but the records show that Joseph Smith's attitude toward polygamy was that of an uncompromising foe, and all of the evidence brought to bear against him is just as poor as this I have furnished you; and if a man comes to me and asks me if I think Joseph Smith was responsible for polygamy, I have to say, “No, sir; I do not think he was.”

I have read in the New York library for weeks in years past and gone; but lately when others have raised such a furore I thought that perhaps I had missed something, so this summer I had a chance to visit again the same library and I did so; and when I had read everything others had seen and read on the matter and everything in the vast collection of literature for and against this church, the best and most complete collection in all the world, I came to the conclusion that the evidence is not there.

The revelation on polygamy was not written in the lifetime of Joseph Smith. It was written some place else by somebody else, and the men who say they copied this, that, or the other document at Nauvoo, are mistaken. Whatever they did copy, they did not copy the revelation on polygamy.

Just one more item, and perhaps this last will be a sort of a stumblingstone to some of our kind friends who wish to help us. This matter came up squarely before judicial ears in 1894 when Wilford Woodruff and Eliza Snow and the others were still living. William Clayton, Joseph C. Kingsbury, and all of that crowd were still living, and their evidence was taken at great length. They said all they wanted to say, they were prodded and encouraged and refreshed in memory, and when they finished telling all they knew about it, the evidence was all laid before a fair, square, and impartial good old Presbyterian judge, who carefully and painstakingly went over it, and said that the evidence did not prove that Joseph Smith was guilty of introducing or practicing polygamy. And yet people tell us that they can go into the matter now with all these people dead; and these people say that they find that he was a bad man and was the author of the polygamous revelation. They certainly must have a very high opinion of their own judicial minds. It ought to be refreshing to us when we know that a clear-minded man, after hearing all the evidence that the Utah people could bring in support of their contention, decided it did not prove.

I have come to the same conclusion: that he was a godly, upright, trustworthy man, a man of God, and that his only connection and relation with polygamy was to do all that he could to stamp it out and save the church from ruin, and in his effort to do it he went down to his death, and the church was rejected of God because those left alive did practice it.

Do not be afraid to say to all people that Joseph Smith was not responsible for polygamy, for he was not.

Sad news has been received from Independence, of the passing of Elder C. Oliver Leeka. He had been a member of the Standing High Council of the church, a member of several important General Conference committees, and was one of the first students of Graceland College. He was also city attorney of Independence for several years, and a son-in-law of Francis M. Sheehy.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHAT JUDGE PHILIPS SAID ABOUT POLYGAMY

March 16, 1894, Judge John F. Philips, in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western District of Missouri, Western Division, rendered a decision in the famous Temple Lot Case, from which we quote.

The Book of Mormon itself inveighed against the sin of polygamy. True it is that Brigham Young taught that these denunciations of the book were leveled at the Indians—the Lamanites. But I confess to an utter inability to interpret human language if this be correct. In chapter 1, Book of Jacob, in speaking of the people of Nephi, the favored people, they are arraigned for growing hard of heart and indulging themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiring “many wives and concubines,” and also as did Solomon, David’s son; and in chapter 2, same book, after alluding to the filthiness evidently of the Indian tribes, it says:

“Behold, the Lamanites, your brethren, whom ye hate, because of their filthiness and the cursings which hath come upon their skins, are more righteous than you: for they have not forgotten the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our fathers, that they should have, save it were one wife: and concubines they should have none. . . . And now this commandment they observed to keep; wherefore, because of this observance in keeping this commandment, the Lord God will not destroy them, but will be merciful unto them, and one day they shall become a blessed people.”

How it can be that the Lamanites please God in sticking to one wife and the Nephites displease him by imitating David and Solomon in multiplying wives, and yet polygamy is to be a crown of righteousness in the teachings of the Angel Mormon, challenges my power of comprehension. It requires transfiguration to do so.

Conformably to the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants expressly declared “that we believe that one man should have but one wife, and one woman but one husband.” And this declaration of the church on this subject reappeared in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, editions of 1846 and 1856. Its first appearance as a dogma of the church [the dogma of polygamy] was in the Utah church in 1852.

Claim is made by the Utah church that this doctrine is predicated of a revelation made to Joseph Smith in July, 1843. No such revelation was ever made public during the life of Joseph Smith, and under the law of the church it could not become an article of faith and belief until submitted to and adopted by the church. This was never done.

No more complete and caustic refutation of this claim made by Brigham Young can be found than in exhibit “W” in this case, in a book entitled The Spiritual Wife System Proven False, issued by Granville Hedrick, the head of the respondent church, in 1856. He ridiculed the pretension of Brigham Young that he had this revelation, unproclaimed, locked up in his private chest for nine years. He says:

“Now how strangely inconsistent, that the revelation should be given nine or ten years before its time, and have to lie eight or nine years under his patent lock before it would be time to proclaim it. Here, then, we have a specimen of an abortive revelation, come before its time, and had to be put in the sacred desk, under a patent lock, for eight or nine years, and shown occasionally—just often enough to get the thing used to it, so that when it got old enough it could go abroad. So much for this curious revelation, come in an abortion—got burned up—then locked up—and now has gone forth to damn everybody that don’t believe in it. Why! It is a perfect phoenix.”

When the present president of the Salt Lake church, Wilford Woodruff, was on the witness stand, he testified that on the 15th of November, 1844, there was no marriage ceremony in the church except that published in the [Book of Doctrine and Covenants] edition of 1835. He was then asked why the church, of which he is president, in the publication of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the Salt Lake edition of 1876, eliminated the section on marriage as found in the 1835 edition and in all editions thereof published up to 1876, and inserted in lieu thereof the claimed revelation on polygamy of July, 1843. “Answer. I do not know why it was done. It was done by the authority of whoever presided over the church, I suppose. Brigham Young was the president then.”

It is charged by the respondents, as an echo of the Utah church, that Joseph Smith, “the Martyr,” secretly taught and practiced polygamy; and the Utah contingent furnishes the evidence, and two of the women, to prove this fact. It perhaps would be uncharitable to say of these women that they have borne false testimony as to their connection with Joseph Smith; but, in view of all the evidence and circumstances surrounding the alleged intercourse, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that at most they were but sports in “nest hiding.” In view of the contention of the Salt Lake party, that polygamy obtained at Nauvoo as early as 1841, it must be a little embarrassing to President Woodruff of that organization when he is confronted, as he was in the evidence in this case, with a published card in the church organ at Nauvoo in October, 1843, certifying that he knew of no other rule or system of marriage than the one published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and that the “secret wife system,” charged against the church, was a creature of invention by one Doctor Bennett, and that they knew of no such society. That certificate was signed by the leading members of the church, including John Taylor, the former president of the Utah church. And a similar certificate was published by the ladies’ relief society of the same place, signed by Emma Smith, wife of Joseph Smith, and Phoebe Woodruff, wife of the present President Woodruff. No such marriage ever occurred under the rules of the church, and no offspring came from the imputed illicit intercourse, although Joseph Smith was in the full vigor of young manhood, and his wife, Emma, was giving birth to healthy children in regular order, and was enclente at the time of Joseph’s death.

But if it were conceded that Joseph Smith, and Hyrum, his brother, did secretly practice concubinage, is the church to be charged with those liaisons, and the doctrine of polygamy to be predicated thereon of the church? If so, I suspect the doctrine of polygamy might be imputed to many of the Gentile churches. Certainly it was never promulgated, taught, nor recognized, as a doctrine of the church prior to the assumption of Brigham Young.—Reorganized Church vs Church of Christ, et al, pp. 36-39, 42-44.

The Ten Lost Tribes

By William France

"The ten lost tribes are still where the Lord led them, beyond the icy barriers of the north."

"And whereas thou sawest that he gathered another peaceable multitude unto him: those are the ten tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land in the time of Osea the king, whom Salmanasar, the king of Assyria led away captive, and he carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt, that they might there keep the statutes, which they never kept in their own land. And they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passage of the river. For the Most High then showed signs for them, and held still the flood, till they were passed over. For through that country there was a great way to go, namely, of a year and a half. And the same region is called Araareth. Then dwelt they there until the latter times, and now when they shall begin to come, the Highest shall stay the springs of the streams again, that they may go through; therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace."—2 Esdras 13: 39-50.

We here see that they went one and a half years' journey to a country where never man dwelt, the Lord held still the flood till they were passed over, they were to stay there until the latter time, and then the Lord would again stay the water that they may go through.

"And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 6.

They are a people dwelling apart from the rest of the world. They have prophets, and they hear the voice of the Lord, and in his power they smite the rocks, and because of God's power being with them the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. This could only mean that the earth should be cast up from the bottom of the sea to make a highway. A map or chart describing an imaginary line by which ships should cross the ocean could not possibly fill the bill. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence.

They will come in a body and the power of God will be with them to such a degree that the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. This bringing of the ten tribes from the north will so far overshadow the miraculous way the Lord led the Israelites from Egypt, that they will no more say, "The Lord liveth which brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, but the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country."—Jeremiah 23: 7, 8.

Jesus when on this continent told the Nephites:

"But now I go unto the Father, and also to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them."—Book of Nephi 8: 1.

Jesus says:

"For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it; and I shall speak unto the Nephites, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it."—2 Nephi 12: 8.

When they come from the north country they are to have a book in which they have written what God has spoken to them. Some will say that these people cannot come in a body to this country, as it is already thickly populated by a great nation. Turn to Church History, volume 1, page 261. Joseph Smith says:

"And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, famine, and earthquakes will sweep the wicked of this generation from off the face of the land, to open and prepare the way for the return of the lost tribes of Israel from the north country."

Turn to Book of Mormon, Ether 1: 4:

"And now we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fullness of his wrath shall come upon them. And this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness come, that ye may not bring down the fullness of the wrath of God upon you, as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done."

Also read Nephi 9: 8-12, how the Lord warns the people of this land to-day and what he is going to do with them.

We might quote many more passages, but there is only one conclusion, and that is that the ten lost tribes are still where the Lord led them, beyond the icy barriers of the north, and all the wisdom and power of man cannot find them until the Lord gets ready to bring them back.

Missionaries to South Africa

Wireless informs us that the British Government has given permission to Apostle Aylor and Elders Clifford and Rogers to go to South Africa, where they were appointed last General Conference. As missionaries they are now free to go when they wish to do so, so far as passports are concerned.

Juvenile Courts

The Children's Bureau reports that 175,000 children were brought before the courts of the United States in one year, and of these at least 50,000 came before courts not adapted to handle such cases. Every State except one has laws providing for juvenile probation, but less than half the courts hearing children's cases actually had probation service. The majority of the courts failed to make adequate investigation of the child's home and family conditions, his physical and mental status, as well as personal tendency. This was especially true in small towns and rural districts, where the child is still subjected to unsocial treatment. Still the effect of intelligent methods is coming to be felt more widely, especially with the cooperation between the courts and other social agencies. In some cases the children are tried before the "family," or "domestic relations" court, so that the case is merged with the family, and the child is dealt with as a member of his family. This means progress, and a greater realization of the needs of the child.

THE SEMINAR

The Gathering and Its Relation to Zion

By Max Carmichael

A basis for a series of lessons for adults in Sunday schools. Other subjects will be discussed in succeeding issues.

Seeing the grave need of adult lesson work in Sunday schools for those who have completed the senior grade, A. M. Carmichael, superintendent of the Lamoni Sunday school, has given special attention the past year to this problem. The result is a series of lessons on the gathering and Zion, the first of which we are printing herewith in article form.

In actual class work, almost every sentence is made the subject for discussion, the three books of the church being used for reference, and especially in this article the Doctrine and Covenants.

We are sure these articles will be of great interest to our readers and of distinct value to classes desiring advanced work in Sunday school or Religio. The problems of the church connected with the gathering are very clearly presented and will repay a careful reading and study.—
EDITORS.

The gathering is generally accepted as one of the fundamental doctrines or beliefs of our church. The reasons for such a doctrine are as fundamental as the doctrine itself and are not to be found by superficial thinking only.

First of all we gather together upon this earth in order that every man may answer more readily the problem which every man must solve. This problem is that of making a living, the most fundamental problem of every man. This problem consists in the process of adjusting oneself to the physical world, to our physical environment, and also to society.

Relation of Climate to Density of Population

One adjustment that man must make to physical environment is the adjustment to climate. Taking the course of least resistance, man tends to pick out the climate in which to live that he can easily adjust himself to. This is easily demonstrated by studying the geography of the world. A comparison of a world rainfall map, a map of the world's isotherms, with a chart showing density of population, will reveal the fact that men have gathered most thickly into those regions where the rainfall and the temperature are the best adapted to earning a living easily.

This study will perhaps show that there is not perfect correlation between the best climate and density of population, nor perfect correlation between the best rainfall and density of population. In other words there are other factors which enter in to affect the gathering of mankind into groups. One is the soil and its fertility, another is the existence of minerals of value within the soil, another is the transportation facilities offered by the country, by its topography, such as waterways, valleys, etc. These all enter in to entice man to settle near these valuable assets in making a living.

But beyond the physical environment, man finds himself under the necessity of adjusting himself to his fellow men about him, in order to secure the most pleasant existence. This adjustment of man to man is becoming more and more necessary every day. Stating it in other words man's economic interdependence is steadily growing more complex. As society becomes more and more complicated and the division of labor more minute, specialization of preparation for life's pursuits becomes more necessary. These economic adjustments of man to man were not so necessary in the early days of the world. These economic adjustments becoming more and more necessary every day are facilitated by organization of units of society founded more or less upon geographical considerations of location. Hence they have been a strong motive for a gathering of man into special places.

A central place of gathering once established has a tendency to remain a place of gathering even though its once favorable physical environment is diminishing. For instance, a place once favored by excellent water power tends to remain a thickly-populated place even after the water power has diminished. This is due to the adjustment of man to man that is mentioned above. This adjustment having already been effected and perfected to a degree tends to remain. Thus we have another factor entering in to effect and affect a gathering of mankind into central places.

This economic adjustment of man to man has been in the main an adjustment to conditions of working with men, or under the direction of fellow men, or in directing the activities of other men. To illustrate, a large packing plant is the gathering of men into a single building or set of buildings with the purpose in view of earning their living. Each must adjust himself to the other in the matter of giving or taking directions. Order is necessary. To effect order, organization is necessary. Thus does this economic adjustment branch out into a larger sphere, a moral and social adjustment of larger aspects than that of mere physical existence.

While man may seek to adjust himself to his fellow man for economic reasons, there are yet other reasons of a moral and social nature. Man seeks to be with his fellow man. He finds enjoyment in their presence. This finds an early expression in the child, but is more prominent during the adolescent period.

To effect and perfect this economic, moral, and social adjustment and to effect a machine by which this adjustment can be regulated and controlled, man forms various social units. It is quite natural that the first unit used should have a deeper and a more fundamental reason for its existence.

We speak of the family. This unit has a biological basis. Yet it becomes a social unit, and the fundamental unit for the control of the economic, moral, and social adjustment of the several individuals of that family. But as man's economic and social interdependence extended out beyond the limits of the family, other organic institutions became necessary. Such are schools, political parties, lodges, and the state. All of these institutions involve a locus, or a gathering place. The family must have a palace, the school its building, the lodge its temple, and the state its boundary lines, built according to geographical barriers for protection, and according to ethnological conditions for a more perfect understanding among the various individual units of the state.

Religious Zeal Determines Success of Gathering

This phase of human life, coupled with a recognition of God's existence, necessitates an attempt to adjust oneself to God. In so far as many of the past have thought this adjustment to God to be a personal matter without reference to society, we have had asceticism, or man attempting a soul salvation by getting away from society. But as the brotherhood of man has come to be recognized as inseparably connected up with religion, organizations in accordance with religious compatibility in order to aid in this adjustment, as churches, church colleges, Sunday school, etc., have been resorted to.

These organizations in turn have brought about gatherings into a center place. The intensiveness of the gathering is measured by the religious zeal of the people making up the organization. Witness the stronger sentiment of gathering among Catholics than among evangelic Protestants. The degree of our zeal for gathering measures the degree of our zeal to adjust ourselves to our conception of our religion as embodying necessarily the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

To a degree the Christian world has recognized religion as embodying our social relationships, and to that extent we have carried religion over into our social relationships, as lodges, schools, government, as a guide to our social adjustments.

Economic Relationships Fundamental

To a greater degree than the rest of the Christian world, we Latter Day Saints have recognized God and religion as the governor of our economic relationships, which we have said are a part of our larger social relationships, but perhaps the most fundamental part of those relationships—at least, the most primitive. The evangelical Christian world is more and more recognizing God as the source of our economic relationships. This is evidenced by their recent adoption and advocacy of the doctrine of material stewardships, the doctrine of an economic accountability to God.

This advance recognition upon our part as Latter Day Saints that God seeks to regulate all of our relationships, all as fundamental parts of our religious activity, even those relationships which involve the obtaining of "bread and butter," necessitates all the more our gathering together as individuals of the Latter Day Saint Church in order more easily and adequately to adjust ourselves to the laws of God in temporal things. We cannot earn a living in accordance with the laws of God as well in a scattered condition as in a gathered condition.

Thus do we feel that the gathering movement as expressed in the Latter Day Saint faith is but the culmination of the evolutionary process through which the mind of the race has been traveling toward a complete adjustment of man to man and of man to God.

So far we have been advocating the necessity of the gathering as a means of the adjustment of man to outside conditions, more or less under his control. We now come to the second phase of the need for a gathering.

A gathering of people geographically is needed in order that man, having obtained a more or less perfect adjustment, may find expression for his accumulating powers in accordance with the laws to which he has attempted to adjust himself. As man succeeds in adjusting himself to physical environment, as climate or soil, he becomes possessed with a desire to express himself in effecting a change in climate and soil to suit himself. In other words, not only is there an adaptation to environment, but an adaptation of environment to self. This man has found that he can do better by working with others. To illustrate, man has supplemented deficient rainfall by large irrigation projects, promoted both by private companies, and by states. Man by combined effort is finding expression for his growing power in changing his physical environment.

The Social and Moral Are Strong Influences

Also in his social and moral relationships does man take a keen delight in giving expression to his acquired powers. Witness the interest of people in fostering the ideals of clubs, and lodges, the interest of politicians in government, the wishes of parents to enhance the glory of the family name. These cannot be perfected except in a gathered condition.

A man who has adjusted his personal nature to God through prayer and has succeeded in overcoming many of his personal faults desires to express his growing religious powers in service to God. This service will take direction in accordance with his ideas of what constitutes religion. If his religious ideas are still egocentric, the expression of his religious activities will be egocentric. To the extent that his ideas of religion include the brotherhood of man, to that extent is it necessary to express this service where mankind gathers. That religion that emphasizes the brotherhood of man can find expression only where men are.

As we go further and recognize God as the author and ruler of our economic relationships, as we go further and include with the doctrine of the brotherhood of man our economic relationships, we seek to serve God in these relationships. This is best done by the stewardship plan executed under a common plan. In the evolution of our religious ideas, we find this the last way man seeks fully to serve God. Strange to say, while it has been the most fundamental and the most necessary activity of man, yet it has been the last activity that he has felt a responsibility to God for. We hope Latter Day Saints are ahead in this expression. To serve God through our economic relationships, we must gather.

We have found so far that religious expression is the most impelling motive for a gathering, and that the economic phase of this religious expression is a still greater impelling motive for gathering. Hence do Latter Day Saints emphasize the gathering movement much more than does the rest of the Christian world.

Institutions which man has organized to facilitate his adjustment also find a gathering necessary to give the fullest expression to their proper functions. These institutions cannot help their individual members properly to adjust themselves to their laws nor help them to find proper and efficient expression of their powers through the laws of the institution except the institutions have their members located together in order the better to annihilate time and space. The family needs the home, the lodge the lodge room, the state its geographical boundaries and capital, and the congregation its house of worship.

Church Must Have a Gathered People

Our church in order to make possible the easiest and best adjustment of the individual to physical and social environment in accordance with the law of God, and especially to give opportunity for the exemplification of economic equality, and thus better to serve the world, must have a gathered people. Our belief in the continuation of divine revelation, particularly to us as a church, enhances the need for a gathering. God's special recognition of us necessitates that as individuals and as a church, we make special effort to express the divine intention. The continuation of revelation evidences that God plans to evolve through us at least one expression of his divine plan to the fullest degree upon the world. This expression may be small as compared with the size of the entire world; nevertheless, we hope complete within itself. Hence the need for a place of gathering is seen.

We can see God's hand at every step in forging the factors, as the evolution of the earth, the physical laws by which it is evolving into a better habitation of man, as, for instance, the wearing down of the mountains, as the physical and social obstacles mentioned before, and as the desire of expression of self upon the part of man in changing physical environment and social status, and in serving God, factors which serve to necessitate man living in a gathered state in order that the individual man might in return become a

Study Your Child

It is with pleasure we present this week the first of a series of study questions which has been prepared for our department by Sister Parham, of Independence, Missouri. These have been ready in part for some time and are called "Mothers' and teachers' problems." We have thought it wise to call them "Parents' problems," for it has been impressed upon us of late that the fathers of the church as well as the mothers are eager for these helps and suggestions which are of value to them in the intelligent discharge of their duties as parents. It will be ideal if the fathers and mothers will join in the study of their children, will learn to appreciate the same truths discovered, and to unite in applying principles of correct training. Too often the attitude of one parent attained through thoughtful study of that which has been gleaned by observation of the many and arrived at through the law of averages is not understood by the other parent who has not taken the time or interest to share in the study. This has caused friction in many instances and disaster resulted.

God expects our men to be good parents as well as good preachers, or other successful men. He has reproved men in the past for failures in regard to their family responsibilities. He urges them to teach their children the laws of life, of reverence, of self-control, and the many other virtues and qualities which are essential to a "perfect man in Christ Jesus." That this teaching can be attained without thought and care and study and prayer is unthinkable, and the sooner we all come to see that little in life is quite so important in a spiritual sense as the proper bearing and rearing of a child, the sooner we will find parents everywhere applying themselves to that important task with the solicitude and intelligent application it deserves.

We hope Sister Parham's pertinent questions will quicken our love into productive channels of profitable study, research, and observation.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Introduction

The problems of parents began away back with the first human family. We have records given in latter times which disclose the fact that not all of the sons of Adam and Eve were obedient or followed closely the teaching and training of their parents. Ever since, the hearts of parents have often been made heavy because of the perversity exhibited by some of their children.

How much of the failures on the part of children to obey the counsel and instruction of parents is due to inborn tendencies of the children themselves or how much is due to the ignorance and inefficiency of the parents is a question. It is safe to presume, however, that the more persistently parents study about their children, the more familiar they become with the principles which govern proper training, and the more conscientiously they try to apply those principles to their own problems and conditions, the more successful they will be in the discharge of their duty to their offspring and to society at large, and the less likelihood will there be of absolute failure.

That God saw the tendency of modern times to view lightly these grave duties, may be noted in his oft-repeated injunction to the leaders of the church to "set in order thy house." Carelessness and indifference on the part of parents can perfect being. The evolution seems slow and uncertain, but it is nevertheless true and certain. Shall we help it out to the utmost, or shall we be laggards?

have nothing but disappointment as a consequence. Since we are struggling towards the establishment of Zion homes throughout the church, it behooves none to ignore this command of the Lord's or to refuse to try to overcome lethargy and indifference concerning this most fundamental and important task. "Bring up your children in light and truth," is not so easily done that we can afford to drift along without taking advantage of every opportunity for study and enlightenment ourselves.

The following questions based on the text, Child Study and Child Training, by William B. Forbush, cover in constructive fashion the material presented therein, chapter by chapter. In the hands of the leader or teacher, they will form the basis for most helpful and intelligent discussion of the problems which arise in the experience of every conscientious parent. They have been prepared by Sister Maude Peak Parham, whose vision of a parent's responsibility has been broadened by her experience as an educator as well as by her consistent study of the ideals of our church.

PARENTS' AND TEACHERS' PROBLEMS

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush.

CHAPTER I

The Study of the Child

1. Why is the study of the child important to parents? To teachers?
2. Why is not a child a miniature adult?
3. Why is a child so often misunderstood by its parents and teachers?
4. Why is a parent who "thumps his child into docility" called ignorant?
5. Illustrate why the second definition of a child is wrong.
6. What is meant by "original nature"? And why cannot we understand it?
7. According to Coe, what is "the great illusion of child study"?
8. Of what importance is environment to the child?
9. Then how may child nature be defined?
10. What other study will aid us in the study of the child?
11. What was the aim of early educators?
12. Explain why their "imparting" was not "training" for the child.
13. What are the four methods of child study?
14. What are the advantages of observation of the child in the home?
15. Of what value are records? How should they be kept?
16. What period in the child's life has been studied comparatively little?
17. What do you suggest could be done by us as a church along this line?
18. How does the author suggest working out observations of these ages (8-12) may be done accurately by a class in child study?
19. Of what value has memory of one's childhood in the rearing of one's child?
20. Of what value are diaries, autobiographies, etc.?
21. Name some of the literary interpreters of child life in poetry.
22. Read in class one or more poems listed in this chapter, depicting some trait of childhood.
23. How may we profit by these interpretations? How may they be treacherous?
24. How is "scholarly study" applied to the study of the child, and how may we be benefited?
25. If possible, read one of the references given at close of chapter, and discuss its merits.

Color in Dress

[Our readers will find much that is helpful in the following article, clipped from a daily newspaper. The name of the writer is not known to the editor, who regrets her inability to give proper credit.—EDITOR'S NOTE.]

Life is just one optic adventure after another. Before you were born little touches of color were being woven into the baby clothes. In babyhood your life is a field of color—colored picture books and toys and gayly colored little dresses. After that the choice of color in clothes is an abiding problem. Your eye registers color every hour you are awake.

So, a knowledge of color is a feature of education that should not be neglected. It is curious that a theme that is as basic in life as color should be so neglected as the lack of popular works on the subject show it to be. Youngsters are made to study music, and yet self-expression in color is not thought of as a study that should be urged.

Lack Color Sense

The reason you see so many gowns of doubtful becomingness on women is above everything else due to a lack of color sense. One does not have to be born with an eye for color. It is a study you may become proficient in.

A girl will say, "If I had her money, I could dress beautifully." Without her money and with a well-developed knowledge of color you may dress beautifully. You may have a beautiful home without oriental rugs and Persian pottery if you know how to apply color to its decoration. So you may have a dream of a frock if you know what colors bring out your best points and what complimentary colors add to the color of the frock.

Many a woman with money will see a frock on a model and buy it, to discover on her it makes the eyes dull, the hair faded, the face weak. Such is the influence of color.

Making the color of the dress match the eyes is not a guaranteed formula to achieve dress harmony, although it is a common notion. Take a baby-blue-eyed woman, weighing many pounds, dress her in baby blue, and you have a ridiculous-looking picture. Or a gray-eyed woman following gray; a black-eyed woman wearing black, and so on.

Color Expresses Mood

Color may make the short and stout less stocky; the tall and extremely thin less so; it may set off the face with an added luster to eyes and hair, and it may give the skin a warmer glow. It may express mood. It may impart airiness and youthful freshness on one hand and warmth and good nature on another.

Colors, to be successful, have to be selected more with concern for complexion, features, character of expression, and personality than for the color of the eyes. A blonde in one color may be made a sallow-looking creature, whereas another shade would make her skin pearl tinted.

It is not only knowing the main color of a frock or hat, but knowing what trimming to use. Related colors like yellow or orange, if there is little contrast in value, tend to deaden one another.

Black Shrinks Figure

The youthful brunette of olive type will look matronly in unrelieved dark colors; if slim, her features will be made sharp; if plump, the result is a look of maturity.

A sallow person should avoid blue for it emphasizes the yellow in the face. Black makes a sallow face more yellow. The face of ashen gray, lacking vitality or luster, without being sallow, must avoid pure, warm colors. The intenser the color of the face the more lackluster the face will seem.

Black tends more than any other color to shrink the figure. There have been some good books written on the subject of dress and color, which would be of great aid to woman in her planning of dress and home decoration. And I would advise you to study them carefully and follow their suggestions about looking to nature, to the art gallery, to old tapestries and rugs for help in color contrasts.

A Helpful Table

Although it is hard to characterize definitely types for certain colors because of varying complexions and heights and weights, the following table may be of help if you are still wondering which is the best color for you.

The fair blonde with flaxen or golden hair, with blue, gray, or brown eyes and clear complexion: Black or high luster with touches of bright colors and white; a clear and oyster white; dark brown and bronze brown; peacock, navy, and delft blue; pale and dark green; pearl and dove grays; soft violet and wisteria; no reds; softest yellows and most delicate shades of pink.

The Titian blonde: Black, in velvet, heavy satin, or transparent goods; cream and ivory whites; deep, dark browns; reddish browns and pale tans not so good; midnight and darkest navies; pale greens in evening and summer dress, but dark greens or Irish greens too contrasting; taupe with a pinkish cast; purples too vivid a contrast; no reds, amber tones, and pale yellows; flesh pink or palest blue.

Light chestnut or brown type: Black not especially good; white relieved with some color; golden brown; blue, especially with blue-gray eyes; bright blues to be avoided; blue gray; darkest purple; no red; pale and soft rose; bronze.

Pale brunette with black or dark brown hair: Black with white relief; cream and ivory white; all shades of brown; electric and sapphire blues, if eyes are blue; orchid; burgundy and dark red; amber and canary yellows; all pinks, unless highly colored.

Olive brunette, brown or black eyes and hair: No black; ivory and cream white; mahogany and negro browns; darkest blues; dark green; gray not good; purple not good; dark, warm reds; terra cotta and buff and apricot; pink in warm and pale colors.

Highly colored brunette: Black with color touches; cream and ivory; golden, buff, and nut browns; pale and peacock blues; silver grays; no purple; cardinal and clear red; yellow in every tone; coral, old rose, and flesh pink.

Fair-skinned, mature woman with gray or white hair: Black, relieved by white; white; seal and chestnut browns; dull old blues; pastel tints and midnight blue; soft grays with blue touches; heliotrope; grape, and darkest purple; no reds; buff; palest pink and rose.

Sallow, mature woman with gray or white hair: Black with white or cream or bright color relief; creamy white; no browns; midnight and navy blues; avoid green; warm gray; lilac and dull toned purple; dull burgundy; no yellow.

In choosing colors, a woman's age has to be taken into consideration, of course. Deep pinks are for the youthful, while a woman of sixty may wear white, delicate pink, flesh, mulberry, lavender, and pink violet. White may be worn by a woman of any age, but the pure and blue white must be softened to creamy and pink whites to suit the individual.

SCHOOL CLOTHES

It was Friday, and as Miss Samuels fastened her coat snugly about her throat before going out into the winter storm, she was thinking of how she should present the subject the Parent-Teachers Association had assigned her for the next meeting—the subject of "Right clothes for school children." She thought of her own motley group and, in making her comparisons of the members, began to gather her ideas into concrete form.

There was dainty Marguerite, child of a widowed mother. The little girl had only two gingham dresses she had been wearing alternate weeks all year. Yet she was always clean. Then there was Hazel who always wore such pretty yet plain wash dresses all fall and spring but donned a warm serge for winter days. Her winter dresses, like her summer ones, were spotless and always well pressed. Tommy wore just a blue shirt and overalls, both often much patched but clean.

LETTERS

The European Situation

By T. W. Williams

"Despite the Old World chaos and uncertainty, I am fully convinced that NOW is the time for the church to inaugurate a European program," says Apostle Williams.

Anything is liable to happen in Europe.

Political prophets are discredited. The past seems no criterion. Old landmarks have disappeared. The sky is overcast. There is no "guiding star."

The statecraft of Europe is "at sea" without chart or compass. The pilots have lost their bearing. The ships of state are without definite direction. The sea is turbulent. It is full of floating and hidden mines.

The recent sessions of the league give evidence of this. Every important issue has been deferred or referred. France continues hostile, obdurate, and exacting. Germany has indicated that she desires definite statement as to what is demanded of her. The allies hesitate.

Fact is, Europe is at the breaking point. Affairs will not and cannot continue as they are. Some definite determination of the obligations of Germany must be determined upon before her currency can be stabilized or her credit established at home and abroad. Russia gives concern. If hostilities are resumed in the spring with Russia in the aggressive and Poland on the defensive, the peace of Europe is at once involved.

Should the Russian army overflow Poland and move westward it will find little resistance at the German border. Germany has reached the point where she thinks that present conditions are intolerable, and she will gamble on any change, hoping for improvement. Many Germans, high as well as low, express a willingness even to cooperate with Russia to the complete elimination of France, if occasion presents itself. Germany feels that France, taking advantage of a victory won by her allies, is determined now to exact the uttermost farthing and to wreak her vengeance on Germany. The hatred between these two nations grows more menacing. The feeling in Germany towards the United States and England is quite friendly. In fact, the one hope of Germany to-day is the United States.

Should war be resumed, France will be in a pitiable situation. She is now on the brink of bankruptcy. She is in no

There then was the other type of child—Hattie wearing a poorly-kept, cast-off, once-good dress of many ruffles and much lace; Dick in his serge trousers and coat, neither of which had been guilty of a brushing or cleaning for many months.

One thing was sure; it was necessary to consider two factors in choosing children's clothes—cleanliness and comfort. Whether the garments were to be of woolen or cotton materials mattered but little so that they met these essential requirements.

Wash goods afforded the best kind of material for the majority of the children, because more easily cleaned. So few seemed to understand how to clean and keep woolen materials in good condition. One point especially, in favor of wash materials was the fact that the cleaning by laundering removed all disease germs. Besides, germs do not cling to cottons as they do to woolens.

Only now and then some little girl wore an outgrown or cast-off silk. Usually such garments were made over in some way more suitable for school wear.

To clean easily and quickly, there must be no excessive amount of trimming. The middy suit, the Peter Pan, and the simple styles of gingham shown in our best style books are excellent styles to copy.

By simple garments is meant garments made with very position to renew hostilities. She can expect little support from either England or America. England has her hands full at home. The unemployment problem grows measurably worse. Organized labor is showing its teeth. The march of the unemployed in London on January 23 reveals Britain's problem.

England would be loath even to attempt to recruit another continental army. In doing so she would invite revolution at home. What is true in England is correspondingly true in the United States. The average workman reasons that if fighting abroad means subsequent idleness and suffering at home, the thing to do is to solve our own problems instead of being embroiled with the troubles of others.

The only seeming hope for peace in Europe is the recognition of Germany and Russia in international affairs. Antagonism and ostracism widens the breach. It solves no problem. It provokes others. Unless some means can be found whereby Germany and Russia can be led to cooperate with the other nations in determining policies which affect them, there will be a renewal of hostilities. Germany must be given a chance to recover. The Russian people must be saved from the rule of a fanatical minority. The allied nations have naught to lose in treating with these countries. Isolation makes for solidarity. Concerted attack from without means a united force within.

People in all walks of life predict an early change in the German Government. It seems that a trial of strength between the monarchists and Communists cannot long be delayed. When this comes it will eventuate in the overthrow of the Ebert government, and the reestablishment of the monarchy or the beginning of the Communist reign. If the former wins there will be an attempt to rehabilitate the House of Hohenzollern. If the Communists succeed it means cooperation with Russia and a combined attempt to crush France. It is even hinted that Ludendorf, Hindenburg, and others would welcome the opportunity of cooperation with Russia in teaching France a "much-needed" lesson.

France has suffered and suffered terribly from the war. One has but to visit the battlefields to have unmistakable proof of this. As Americans we must and do sympathize with her. She has not been alone in her suffering. It is to be hoped that she will maintain her record in comprehending the rights of others and rise to the occasion where altruism means so much and not permit provincial purpose to darken international vision.

Despite the Old World chaos and uncertainty, I am fully convinced that now is the time for the church to inaugurate a European missionary program. If the government officials in the various countries come to understand our purpose and little trimming and of a style or pattern that will require only a reasonable amount of time for washing and ironing. They need not be ugly or unbecoming but will rather be the opposite. Remember the child should be the real center of interest. The clothes ought to be so inconspicuous they will scarcely be remembered except for their immaculate condition.

Cottons of course require the weekly washing and ironing, but really the woolens should have a weekly cleaning and pressing, too. Both kinds of material require this much attention besides the sewing on of fasteners and the constant mending and patching called for as garments begin to wear out.

One duty every mother owes her children is to see that they exchange their school clothes for home ones and put away the school clothes where they can be kept fresh, unwrinkled, and clean. A habit so formed in childhood is of untold worth through life, for it instills pride in keeping clothing in a clean and well-kept condition, let alone extending the life of a garment for a longer time than one at first realizes. Besides, clothing so cared for is not so liable to be worn back to school carrying the odors and disease germs of the home.

Just as soon as a child is old enough, he should be taught the simpler processes of cleaning, repairing, and pressing, and be required to keep his own clothes in good repair.

to realize what our religion comprehends, it should guarantee an open sesame into these lands. Ours is a message of hope and peace. Our appeal is not to sedition but to loyalty—loyalty to God—loyalty to man. We teach that all men are brothers and that humanity is one. Our philosophy is a panacea for revolution. It is a specific against anarchy. It clarifies vision, promotes personal discipline, and develops fraternal endeavor.

It were folly to send missionaries to Europe unless they have a clear conception of the social and political conditions obtaining here. It would pay the church to send one or more representatives to each of the various countries to make a comprehensive study of conditions and thereby develop a definite program for the missionary work in each country. We must make adaptation of our work to the conditions obtaining in each country. God is opening the way for our taking the gospel to the nations. We must institute a "follow up" campaign.

We have already an excellent beginning in Germany. Our local churches are thriving. The local ministry is enthusiastic and in earnest. With an augmented missionary force, we may look for a marked and gratifying increase in membership. Germany will give commensurate returns for time and means spent in establishing the church.

There is no legitimate embargo on our work in Switzerland. There is evidence that the Utah church has been using politics to prevent the establishing of our work but, now that we know where the real trouble is, we believe that we will be successful in overcoming past difficulties. The Swiss laws provide for absolute religious freedom. We will insist on our rights. The local church at Basel is flourishing. Our representative has more calls than he can attend to. Other missionaries should be sent to this country. This is a land without a common language. Missionaries should be able to speak German or French. In each canton there is a provincial modification which can easily be mastered if one understands the dominant language.

We have opened the work in Holland. Baptized two the other day, these being the first baptisms in Holland. Here, again, we need young men and women who can master the Dutch language and acquaint themselves with Dutch customs. These people also will be responsive to our message if we can present it to them in a way to connect up with their highest ideals. Our representatives in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden should be increased. With members in England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Switzerland, Germany, Poland, Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, we can rightly claim that the gospel has been opened to all of these nations. The church should be prepared aggressively to prosecute missionary work in each of these countries.

Looking ahead we must commence to make preparation for opening up missions in France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece, the Balkan States, and Russia. In order to do this young men and women must be selected who can learn the language and study the history as well as the political and social life of the countries to which they have been assigned so that when they are sent on missions they can at once commence their work. The next five years should witness the extension of our church work to all parts of Europe.

It would be a significant and legitimate missionary effort to see the majority of the Quorum of Twelve, augmented by one or two Quorums of Seventy, sweeping through Europe—war-ridden Europe—preaching the evangel of peace and good will!

I would enthruse our young people and stimulate a desire to master at least one language with a view to offering their services to the church. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send more sowers and reapers among the nations!

The funeral of Mrs. A. K. Anderson was held at the Saints' church at Lamoni, February 16. Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith preached the funeral sermon, the service being in charge of Elder John F. Garver. It was preceded by a short service at the home. Sister Anderson was over eighty-five years old, and has been a resident of Lamoni for forty-nine years, all of which time she was a faithful member of the church.

Baptisms in Holland

Letter from President F. M. Smith, who writes from Rotterdam, Holland, January 21, 1921.

E. A. S.: We reached Rotterdam from Hamburg yesterday about 1 p. m. After getting settled at the hotel I sent a telegram to Brother Graven at Schiedam, and about six o'clock he came to the hotel, and we visited with him and a friend he brought with him, a member of the Utah church who has become interested in our church. Brother Graven had been in Utah and was converted to our work in Ogden. His young sons, William and Peter, being ready for baptism, we made the necessary arrangements, and to-night, at a bath house in the western part of the city, we attended to the ordinance. Brother T. W. Williams performed the baptisms, and afterwards we came to our rooms at the hotel and confirmed the lads. In the room during the baptism were Brother Graven and his wife, the friend I spoke of above, and his wife, and a woman who seems to be a friend of the family.

All but Brother Graven and the boys are members of the Utah church. So far as I know, the baptisms to-night are the first by our representatives in Holland. But from what we have observed, they are likely to be followed by many others if we follow up the opportunities.

I wrote to Brother P. T. Anderson after I received the letter he wrote about the question of securing police permit to remain in Denmark. I have just received from him a letter from Copenhagen saying he has secured the necessary papers.

We expect to be back in London soon. Hope to see the brethren there shortly after we get there.

Des Moines Conference

Most of the branches in the Des Moines District are within convenient distance of the capital city where the largest branch is located, and appreciating this fact, the Saints attended the district conferences in goodly number.

The recent conference on the 11th, 12th, and 13th of February at Des Moines was really a representative affair. Meals were served in the basement of the church, free to all visiting Saints and at a nominal charge for Des Moines people. On Sunday the committee had located about a hundred visitors, while some were not accounted for, making their own arrangements with relatives.

Coordination prevails in the district in spirit if not altogether by resolution, there being excellent cooperation between the heads of the various departments and nomination of subordinate officers by those chosen to preside.

The district president is Henry Castings, who has as associates C. E. McDonald and Roy Cheville, while the financial affairs are in charge of Bishop E. O. Clark.

No special legislation was effected, except that the conference went on record as favoring a censorship bill in committee at the Iowa legislature. The Sunday school adopted a new standard of excellence, which has some most progressive features.

One interesting development was the arrangement between the Des Moines District department workers and the Lamoni Stake departments (superintendent of the Sunday school, R. J. Wildey, being present for Lamoni Stake) for an inter-district institute, beginning May 4, and to continue four full days. It is planned to hold three big educational programs a day during that time, with the best procurable talent to take the lead. This grew out of the prevalent fact that at the usual conference there is not time enough for the necessary schooling of Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department workers. There is demand for such cooperation in institute work, and we should like to see more efforts of the kind made for the sake of efficiency.

Among the visitors were Bishop J. F. Keir, O. Salisbury, and E. D. Moore, each having special part on the program. An interesting round table discussion was in charge of Bishop Keir, the questions brought up being worth while and the answers satisfactory. He also preached an excellent sermon as well as addressed the priesthood and had a part in the impromptu "get-together" meeting held on Saturday evening.

Elder Salisbury preached a typical illustrated sermon and gave interesting information as to the methods of handling group work in Council Bluffs.

Some of the subjects discussed by Elder Moore were "How to teach the Book of Mormon," "Motivation in teaching," and "Evolution of the Religio." He also preached on Sunday evening.

The Women's Department had one session, and two good papers were read, on "Child welfare," and "Our girls" respectively.

The various reports, financial and ministerial, were presented to the conference in printed form, materially cutting down the time required for consideration and providing a valuable source of information. It made a considerable item of expense, but the conference considered it worth the price.

The prayer meetings at this conference were well attended and generally participated in, with a high spiritual tone, indicating that the Saints are making progress in their struggle for control of the spiritual forces that make for the abundant life.

One of the distinctive features of the conference was the pageant by Margaret Davis, "The life of Lincoln." It was entirely by home talent and was not only well done on the production end, but the whole sentiment pervading was wholesome and inspiring. Several of these pageants have been produced in the district, especially at reunions, and those who see them are impressed with the value of this method of presenting historical truth. The editor of Autumn Leaves has made arrangements to print the one "A hundred years of Latter Day Saintism" in an early number, for those who wish to use it at reunion work the coming season. No doubt other pageants by this author and still others created by our talented church writers in other communities will be made available for general distribution ere long. "The Restoration," the pageant produced at the general Religio Convention in 1920, is being distributed by the Religio Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

The conference closed with an excellent feeling prevailing and a seeming resolution to continue the good work. Announcements for the week at Des Moines indicated much activity of all kinds: Monday evening, athletics for the boys in the basement of the church; Tuesday evening and Thursday evening, classes in radio work, there being a good station in one of the rooms at the church; Wednesday evening, prayer meetings at convenient places in the four groups, three of them in cottages; Thursday, Women's Department meetings in various homes, studying child welfare and social betterment; ladies' aid society, and Dorcas Society, the latter studying the Book of Mormon; preaching Friday evening in group number 1.

During the conference, the reunion committee decided to hold the district reunion at Runnells, August 12 to 21.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

The Spirit of Giving

It hath been said that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and I am satisfied that the reason God loves that kind of an individual is not because he needs our material possessions, but that it spells in no uncertain manner the love which we have for him and for his work.

It is an inspiration to us from day to day to note that those who have been long identified with the work have an increasing desire to do everything within their power to forward the cause of Christ.

We are just in receipt of a letter from our Bishop's agent, Brother Roy F. Hewes, at Ogden, Utah, inclosing a letter from Sister Ellen Carlson in which she had sent him $5 tithing and $25 for the auditorium fund. In this letter he tells us that this good sister, who is seventy-five years old, makes her living weaving rugs. She rarely misses a month in sending tithing. She told him that when she pays tithing she is blessed in her work, and when she forgets her tithing her work falls off.

I trust that from this example of devotion manifested in this splendid type of true Latter Day Saintism, many may catch the spirit of "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," for before us is open the channel through which each one may carry out this command of the Master; that is, by giving cheerfully as the Lord blesses us.

This giving may be done in various ways: First, a tenth of our increase belongs to God, but we are not limited to this means of help alone. Every wage earner should be a contributor to branch expenditures. Every branch should have a fund available so that as the missionaries come laboring among them their traveling and incidental expenses may be cared for from this fund. This, however, does not prevent any from assisting the elder in meeting these expenses as they may feel led; in fact, the Lord has indicated that it is a mark of our discipleship to remember the needs of the ministry. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 16.) "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in nowise lose his reward; and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple; by this you may know my disciples."

Occasionally we find individuals who feel that they should not give in this way, but it is quite apparent that the Lord approved of our direct contributions to the eldership to assist in taking care of their expenses, for he has directed the eldership that should they receive more than is necessary for their expenses it should be forwarded to the Bishop.

Our interest in the work that the ministry is trying to accomplish is intensified when we contribute of our material substance for the accomplishment of that work, so that he receives not only our financial support, but our mental and spiritual support as well. All of these are good reasons why we should assist in meeting these expenses.

I feel that the Saints are to be commended for the noble manner in which they have supported the financial department during the past two years. The existing conditions in the business world will emphasize to each, I am sure, the necessity of giving consideration to the financial needs of the Lord's work in every department.

Christmas Offering Items

The old year, with all its successes and failures, is now behind us, and we have already started upon the new year, 1921. To a very great extent we control our destinies. That which we work for, pray for, seek diligently for, and keep constantly after we will surely succeed in obtaining.

We trust that each school, each individual member, has a nice nest egg (offering) laid away as a start for our 1921 Christmas offering. Shall we not hand in an offering this year equal to $3 per member? Let each one of us become a booster for this cause; let us ask our associate members how they are earning their offerings; tell them how you are earning your offering.

How about your class in the Sunday school? Is each of the members taking an active interest in this good work? If not, can you not influence them to do so? Surely this is a work we can all take pride in. We do take pride in it, and we are going to take greater pride in it and show this by adding constantly, day by day, to our nest egg. A penny a day would make a total of 365 pennies at the close of the year. Shall we not do this?

Let us set our aim for the year, each Sunday school and each individual member; then let us see what one twelfth of this total will be, and at the end of each month let us see to it that we have this twelfth to add to our offering. Let us not fail in a single month to have that month's quota. And in doing this let us remember that it is not a crime to fail, but it is a crime to have a low aim. Let us aim high and shoot straight to the mark. Cut the total aim in twelve parts and hit the twelfth part the last day of each month. "God loveth a cheerful giver."

We will announce our aim a little later on, but let us all work for an average of not less than $3 per member, and if you can double this amount it will be to your credit to do so. We will furnish each school with one large star as soon as they average one fourth of their aim, another star when they have averaged one half their aim, and another star when they have three fourths of their aim, and still another star when they have raised their full aim. There will be a large silver star for each school averaging $5 per member or more and a large gold star for the school having the highest average for the year. Now, we are off. Let us go and go strong.

Remember, all offerings should be sent direct to Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, Independence, Missouri, and this offering should be in his hands not later than February 28. This will be our last appeal to you for the 1920 offering. If you are isolated from the church or if your Sunday school is not sending an offering, send yours direct—be sure to state that it is for Christmas offering. Write your name and address plainly.

Here are some very interesting items regarding the offering work among the schools and individuals. Read every word; it will interest you and we hope enthuse you.

From Brother and Sister William B. and Ruth E. Leland, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, we have the following interesting letter: "We saved our offering by giving the biggest days' laying of our flock of hens. We have about 64 hens. They laid 8,530 eggs, making 710 dozen and 10 eggs. Don't you think the Lord blessed us for giving to the Christmas offering? Part of the year we got as high as $1 a day. Shall we do this in 1921 also?" These good people sent in $21.29. Let us hear from others who have hens. Why not have a hen club for 1921 and see if these hens will not boost our offering many hundreds of dollars during 1921? Are you willing to join with this movement. Let us hear from the hen owners.

From sister Nettie E. Potter, Wellsville, New York, we have the most interesting report following: "I take great pleasure, as superintendent of the Hope of Proctor Sunday School, in reporting our little gift as a Christmas offering, and we trust it will help a little. We have only eight in our school—just our family—but we have tried to do the best we could and look forward to the day when our loving Father will bless us with greater numbers and better conditions to work under?" I wish every member would read this over carefully and note that this school consists of one family and that they gave an average of almost $10 a member. Surely God will bless them and help them to prosper in their work.

And here is another excellent example, one that would surely swell our offering if we could all do as well as Brother Medy Richards of Sheridan, Wyoming. He writes: "I will be sixty years old the eighteenth day of January, and I inclose a draft for $60 to help raise the Christmas offering. If it looks good to you, all right; if not return it." You may be sure that it did look good to us and we surely appreciate Brother Richards's splendid gift to the offering.

Sister Elizabeth Beemer, Sheldon, Illinois, reports: "There is no branch or Sunday school here, but I am doing all I can and love to do it. On 'Dollar Sunday' I sent in $3 and have sent in ten dollars more so you see I am trying to help." We hope some of the other isolated ones will join this sister in this good work.

Brother J. N. Duncan, Nowata, Oklahoma, reports: "Our Christmas offering to date is $90.64 and our aim is $100. One sister gave $25 last Sunday and others are going to hand in their offering next Sunday. On 'Dollar Sunday' we raised $15.55. We have a membership of thirty, and it is very hard for all of them to be present each Sunday."

Brother and Sister C. A. Welch, Kersey, Colorado, write: "You will find inclosed $5 as Christmas offering. We are isolated from all church privileges. We have not been able to locate any Saints here." These good people live about nine miles southeast of Greeley, Colorado. If there are any Saints near we hope they will try to meet Brother and Sister Welch.

Brother Clarence L. Current, McDermont, Ohio: "We have only the home class and meet in a dwelling. We have only a few Saints here, but they are all good members. We received $7.50 on 'Dollar Sunday' and will have a total of about $35 to send in. We hope to do better in the future." Other home classes take notice.

Sister Helen Hawley, Fort Scott, Kansas, reports: "We feel rather proud of what we have accomplished this year financially, but we did not raise the amount we aimed to raise for the offering. We set our aim at $300 and raised only $53.42. We bought a church for $1,500, a piano for $425, besides other little expenses, and we are almost clear of debt now. We have only a little branch in Fort Scott. We shall try to make up this coming year what we were not able to do in 1920. Our enthusiasm is just as great as ever."

Sister W. P. A. Willoughby, of Brumley, Missouri, writes: "Please find inclosed $6 for Christmas offering. We are isolated. I am sending $2 each for my husband, our son, LaVerne, and myself."

From Ivan Tittle, Mount Vernon, Illinois, we have the following: "Find inclosed $15, raised by the Mount Vernon Branch for the Christmas offering. We have a very small branch, but we are pleased to do what we can for the advancement of the work and the redemption of Zion."

Sister Lora Strachan, Youngstown, Ohio, reports: "We have just recently organized our Sunday school in Belmont Extension, and the district superintendent has succeeded in arousing the 'Christmas offering spirit' in our school. Although so recently started we will have something for you." This is surely good news, both regarding the good work of the district superintendent, and the quick work of the new school. We wish them Godspeed in their good work.

Sister Julia A. Thomas, Rockland, Maine, writes: "We have only a small school which was started last summer. We have sent $15 to the Bishop and will start our new offering the first of the year."

Brother D. A. Fuller, Dallas, Texas, sends the following good report: "Wish to let you know that Dallas has done very well in the Christmas offering. With a membership of 50 we have raised $433. We have kept the matter before the school constantly throughout the year and are proud of the success we have made. I also believe you will receive a good report from balance of the district. We aim to start the first of the year and do better in 1921."

From Sister Mary A. King, Brownsville, Oregon, we received the following: "I send my offering and hope it is not too late, for I want to help in the gospel we all love so well."

Sister Earlita Smith Inslee, Yakima, Washington, sent in offering for little Nelda and Ruth Inslee. We were pleased to get this from these dear little girls.

Doris Jennings, Pocatello, Idaho: "I am inclosing draft for our offering (Pocatello Sunday school) which we gladly give toward the support of the good work to be accomplished."

Sister T. O. Strand, Moorhead, Iowa, reports the following good news: "I wish to report that the offering for the Moorhead, Iowa, Sunday school for 1920 is $537.40—an average of $6.55 plus per member. Our enrollment is 82 with an average attendance of 55. We were quarantined all the month of January, 1920, and lost two Sundays during reunion, a total of six weeks during the year. We take it for granted that you are going to try for a large offering in 1921, and we now have $18 on hand, more than a third of the amount we used to send in for a year, and we thought we were doing fine then." We have learned to depend on Moorhead to do their share and have great respect for their splendid work.

Sister Irma Robson, secretary of the New Philadelphia, Ohio, Sunday school, writes: "Owing to the fact that our school pledged $2.50 per member with a total of 115 members and made an average of $3 per member, totaling $426.88, we wish to have our name on the honor roll for 1920." You are surely on this honor roll right now, New Philadelphia, and we are glad to have you there.

From V. D. Ruch, Huntsville, Missouri, we have a splendid report: "Inclosed please find bank draft for $66.69 for offering. We had a membership of six, so this makes an average of $11.11 plus per member." Huntsville, with its little school, has been one of our big boosters, and they have made splendid averages. Fine, Huntsville; keep up the good work.

Our opportunity is now before us. Shall we not take full advantage of this fact and devote ourselves diligently, faithfully, and prayerfully to the task ahead of us?

Thanking all for their splendid support of cooperation, I am,
Sincerely yours, A. W. SMITH.

SPECIAL NOTICE

February 28 is the date which has been agreed upon to close the 1920 Christmas offering books.

Funds received after that date will be included in the 1921 report.

All individuals, classes, schools, or Bishop's agents who have offerings for the year of 1920 should send at once to

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Missionaries Write En Route to England

The safe arrival of the party was reported by cable some time ago. This letter was dated January 28, 1921.

We are eight days out from New York and will reach Cherbourg, France, to-morrow noon or soon after, the several hours there with the five hours to cross the English Channel bringing us to Southampton too late to land. So we will land Sunday morning, January 30, the tenth day from New York, which is an unusually long time for this trip. The Imperator, though the largest ship on the ocean, has proven to be about the slowest on this trip. She is capable of making double the speed, especially with the calm seas we have had all the way. We have had no sickness and have been faithful at the table. The passage across has been enjoyable.

Among the up-to-date things we have on board are elevators, commodious bath and lavatory rooms, large swimming pool, bank, railway ticket office, daily paper (a copy of which I will send you), laundry, and other more general institutions such as store, barber shop, library, orchestra, besides doctor, surgeon, nurses, etc.

Passengers meet as strangers, and the tendency is with many to cast aside restraint and indulge in whatever their whims suggest. Various forms of gambling, drinking, and other more gross evils are manifested. Brethren Gillen, Bishop, and I have a room to ourselves, which we appreciate. We have been blessed with peace and comfort and move forward with a strong hope in the future.

May peace and blessing attend the brethren at home,

Sincerely, CHARLES FRY.

Toronto Prepares for Battle

Two and a half years ago Toronto Branch, weary and heartsick, distressed and despairing, deserted by hundreds of her members and betrayed by men in whom she trusted, was counted out of the battle. Since then she has been gathering up the remnants of her scattered forces, repairing the breaches in her defenses, and marking time as she prepared for a new advance against the powers of sin and error. And now Toronto is again in the battle line with ranks refilled and forces united.

At the beginning of this year the membership was divided into six groups, and elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as available, appointed to labor in these groups. A wonderful spirit of harmony pervaded the Toronto priesthood. However, the need for additional help was apparent. At the suggestion of the branch president the priesthood fasted from Friday evening till after the sacrament service on Sunday, February 6. At this service, through a prophetic message, fifteen were called to the priesthood: one elder, five priests, six teachers, and three deacons. At the prayer service on Wednesday evening following, the branch approved the calls and ten were ordained, five asking further time for consideration and preparation. Those ordained were: Elder, J. Leslie Prentice. Priests, Edward C. Williams, Frank Clifton, Ben Hewitt, Russell Whitehead. Teachers, Thomas McPhee, Lloyd Taylor, James Kirkpatrick. Deacons, Percy Robb, Norval C. Brown.

Curtis-Jones Debate

The debate between Elder J. F. Curtis of our church and Elder A. A. Jones of the Missionary Baptist Church, at Dresden, Tennessee, is now a matter of history. It began on Monday, February 7, and closed on Saturday, the 12th, two sessions of two hours each being held each day at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m.

The discussion was held in the Oak Grove Baptist Church, three miles south of Dresden, which will seat about three hundred. The weather was rainy and cold all week, and the roads were impassable for cars, but the farmers came from miles around with their families in buggies and wagons, bringing their dinner and remaining for the day. The debate had evidently been talked of for weeks, and a little mud and rain could not prevent attendance. The last three days, standing room was at a premium.

During the first three days the proposition discussed was: Resolved that the Missionary Baptist Church is scriptural in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice. On last three days the proposition discussed was: Resolved that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is scriptural in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.

Elder Jones has a very defective voice, which makes him tiresome to listen to. Two days before the debate, Brother Curtis had such a cold that he could not talk, but the Lord came to the rescue and his voice rang clear and strong during the entire discussion.

Jones contended that the church established by Christ had continued down to the present time without interruption and that the Missionary Baptist church was the church, but Brother Curtis showed by Baptist historians that the church was not on earth for more than one thousand years, and that the American Baptists went back only to the days of Roger Williams, 1639 A. D.

Jones held that living prophets and apostles ceased with the New Testament period and in contrast Brother Curtis presented the church as restored to earth by God in these last days, with living apostles and prophets and all the scriptural gifts and blessings of the New Testament church.

The Baptists' favorite doctrine, "Once in grace, always in grace," that if a person is once born of the Spirit it is impossible to fall away, was strongly contended for. And that it might hold good, when Judas's case of transgression was cited, he contended that Judas was a devil when he was ordained. Brother Curtis showed that the Scripture says Judas was a disciple when ordained, and then later he showed how the Spirit of the Devil entered into him.

When the second proposition was up, Jones used Beadle and Neal as his authorities, and dished out their lies in regular doses from the deception of the audience. Brother Curtis showed from Bancroft that Beadle's work was unreliable and showed from the book itself that it contradicted itself.

Jones was not very familiar even with Beadle and Neal and got so badly rattled that he mixed dates and facts:

promiscuously. For instance, he stated that Beadle's work was reliable history, and written to prevent the seating of Reed Smoot in the United States Senate and that it was successful. When Brother Curtis showed that Beadle's book was written in 1870 and that Reed Smoot was elected to the Senate in 1903 and had served there continuously since that time Jones's reputation as reliable authority began to wane.

The climax came when on the last day Jones claimed the Saints were driven out of Missouri on account of the Mountain Meadow Massacre and that they deserved to be punished for such a dastardly deed. When Brother Curtis showed how the Saints were persecuted in Missouri and driven out in 1833 and 1838 and that the Mountain Meadow Massacre happened in Utah in 1857, Jones stock dropped still lower.

Brother Curtis showed from numerous writers on ancient America that there were mighty nations in this land many centuries before Columbus's discovery, and that God was in duty bound to reveal his law unto them, as he had done from time to time on the Eastern Hemisphere, as recorded in the Bible. He showed that the Book of Mormon was a true history of God's dealings with the people in ancient America, being corroborated by archaeological discovery, predicted by Bible prophecy, and testified to by the Holy Ghost, to honest readers.

Jones acknowledged he had not read the Book of Mormon because Oliver Cowdery went back on his testimony and said the book was no good. Jones presented a tract by Neal which he claimed had a sworn statement from Oliver Cowdery in 1885 stating that his previous testimony as one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon was false. Brother Curtis showed that Neal's claim was false, that Cowdery had borne testimony of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon at a conference at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1845 and that on his deathbed he had reaffirmed his previous testimony. And since Cowdery died in 1850, he must have been resurrected to bear testimony in 1885 as claimed by Jones.

Brother Curtis showed how the angel of Revelation 14:6 had come and the gospel had been restored, but Jones claimed that Revelation 14:6 was fulfilled by the appearance of the angels to the shepherds when Christ was born. And this is a fair sample of his interpretation of scripture. But he was in his own church with the "faithful" of his flock for a backing and in addition there were some half dozen Baptist preachers from the Baptist Theological Seminary at Martin, Tennessee.

Jones's chief argument was to get excited, wave his arms and stamp with his feet, pound the desk, and yell at the top of his voice. This invariably brought a volley of "amens" from the fledgling preachers.

He is an expert at misrepresentation and browbeating, and Brother Curtis told him if truth was a mountain and he (Jones) was ten feet from it, he did not believe he could see it. Brother Curtis also told the people that he did not mind meeting argument, but did dislike to meet such profound ignorance.

Jones did not make a point that Brother Curtis did not overturn and every point for our proposition was maintained with ease. Of course the Baptists made a lot of noise at the close and the faithful few tied a blue ribbon on their pastor, but the more intelligent of them openly acknowledged their defeat. Among the Methodists and Christians we found many friends, and expressions as to the favorable outcome of the debate were numerous. Hundreds of tracts were distributed and the work there will be followed up next summer by our missionaries.

A few of the Saints from the Kentucky and Tennessee Districts were in attendance and they went home more firmly grounded than ever in the faith and proud that they were Latter Day Saints. The truth will stand the test of opposition, and when the light is turned on it but shines the brighter.

We trust that all who have been enlightened by its rays may continue faithful to their covenant.

Nauvoo Conference

The Nauvoo district conference was held at Burlington, February 11 to 13, the first session being Friday evening, consisting of educational numbers and special music. Illness interfered with part of the program, but other numbers were supplied, and the interest seemed exceptionally good.

The conference was exceptionally good, and an epoch-marking event in a number of ways. Provision was made for the organizing of a branch at Nauvoo with full quorum of officers. There has been, prior to this conference, a live Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department at that place, and the ordination of Brother Fusselman Sunday to the office of deacon gave them the last officer necessary for branch organization. Brother August Lee, who now resides there, was ordained to the office of priest on Sunday also. A third ordination was that of Brother John McKiernan of Fort Madison to the office of priest.

The budget system was adopted without a dissenting vote, thus providing that our district bishop act also as treasurer of departments.

The report of the priesthood, our district president advised us, was the best during his six years in the district work. The work of the Sunday School Department Saturday afternoon also showed some strides in progress. In addition to the adoption of the budget in concurrence with conference action, a new standard of excellence was adopted which we are assured will prove much more of an incentive to special training of workers and other desirable features; and a new basis determined for awarding the district banner which has proved a decided stimulus to attendance at conference sessions. There is a better showing than ever before in enrollment in normal department, and promise of increase.

We were glad to hear again one of our pioneers in the work, Brother James McKiernan, Saturday evening. His counsel and instruction have brought strength and help to the district membership for many years.

Sunday was a full and wonderful day: Priesthood meeting at 8 a. m. followed by Sunday school at 9.30 and preaching by Bishop George P. Lambert at 10.45. The social and communion service in the afternoon was a feast from the start. Some personal messages were given and a word of counsel and instruction and promise to the membership through our district president. The time was filled and the feeling deep throughout the assembly. There were two baptisms in the afternoon, both candidates being from the Montrose Branch.

Religio at 6.15 was a live session, followed by preaching by Brother J. W. Layton of Nauvoo, the kindly counsel of a "father in Israel."

This was the first conference for some years in which every branch in the district was represented, and our church, which is becoming crowded even for local needs was crowded to almost more than its capacity. The local membership hope to entertain in more commodious quarters when another conference assembles here.

Throughout the entire time, the spirit was one of peace and unity and alertness. We rejoice in the prospect for the future.

In Burlington we are rejoicing in the release of our pastor and wife from quarantine after a quite severe siege of small-pox. We had hoped Sister Williams might escape an attack, after the less severe one that Brother Williams had undergone, but are deeply thankful now that she is regaining strength and may soon be able to resume her place in our midst. They are both much beloved because of their faithful and untiring service, and we are deeply grateful that they have been spared for further association with us. Brother Williams was quarantined on New Year's Day, and he told us last Sunday at the morning service, which was prayer and social service, that it was New Year's Day to him.

The local priesthood were faithful in their efforts to keep the meetings according to regular schedule during the quarantine, and occupied well.

Provision has been made for a normal class in the Sunday school, and one in the Religio, thus providing so far as possible for the needs of workers in both departments. There is an earnestness on the part of those undertaking the work that is most encouraging to those attempting to direct it, and promising of more efficient work to be done.

The Religio featured an impromptu program two weeks ago which proved most amusing and successful. Last week two classes joined in the rendering of a quite unusual program, among the features being a number of charades and a parody on "The little brown church in the dell," their rendition being "The little white church on south hill." This number was repeated for a social given by the "Builders" after the Saturday evening service, where a number of other original and unique numbers were given.

Massachusetts Conference

The Massachusetts conference convened February 5 and 6, with the Saints at Providence, Rhode Island. Ordinarily the church at Providence is one of the finest, if not the best, in our district. It is not above the average in size nor is it of superior material, but the plan of this little church such that it bespeaks dignity, and its cleanliness brings with it a breath of spiritual fragrance which permeates the atmosphere, greeting one as he enters, making him feel he is in a holy place where God meets his children often.

Upon this occasion as we enter, lo and behold! this cozy edifice is prepared as a bride for her husband, for the art of the painter greeted us pleasingly.

We were among the very first, and in a few minutes Saints of the several branches arrived, one after the other, all with that smile and cheery greeting which we all value more as the years go by.

Our district president, C. Edward Miller, believes in punctuality, and at the scheduled time, 3 p. m., we were off.

The opening prayer of earnest faith and humility by one of our noble veterans, Brother John Smith, brought with it added spiritual force, and the still small voice whispered that we were to have a conference long to be remembered.

That prayer by our worthy brother, whose days of front line activity are over, brings to us a train of thought which is unfolded and enlarged as the conference grows; yes, a picture of days past and gone, with the present, the ever-living present, and the comparison fills us with awe as well as solemn responsibility.

The business was marked by the welcome absence of arguments which have featured in other days, and no time was lost in this unnecessary pastime, for surely it seems to have been one of our pastimes when in legislative assembly. Possibly we might present the flowers where to us they appear due.

Our district president is one of the finest men with the gavel we have seen in the church, using rare judgment and wisdom, drawing friction from none, winning the support of all by his right doing. In him we have a leader who does not say, "Go ahead," but, "Come!" He leads all the way.

This leader and workman has material and, Massachusetts, we know more fully than ever before you are equipped in that manner that God is continually selecting special ambassadors from your ranks; yes, you in Massachusetts are speaking in terms of service in a far greater way than it is possible for our pen to carry to HERALD readers.

In the place of those grand veterans, some of whose names are households names in our church, we saw young men in action.

Peter Whalley, of Attleboro, a few months ago came staggering back to us from the war in the Macedonian mountains, a physical wreck with just a breath left, to die in about six months. Elder Peter Whalley stood before our conference physically sound and rugged, a spiritual force, and as president of the Attleboro Branch explained organization to us which is reflected in the condition and service of the little flock over whom he presides. This young man stands as a testimony to us that God is, and miracles of healing are still with his Saints.

Herman Chelline, of Providence, a young man unafraid and willing, is an educational and spiritual asset to us.

E. L. Traver, of Boston, spoke of Brother Richard Baldwin's work there in a very interesting manner, and about the wonderful results obtained.

The social service Sunday morning was one that will linger. To us mortals wonderful healings were related by our new members. This meeting was on a high plane of spiritual power and intelligence.

Every branch president in attendance was at the front, and we can begin to realize what good organization means.

In the afternoon we listened to our "boy missionary," Elder E. J. Gleazer, deliver a sermon on "Equality and stewardships." This was a powerful message, well balanced, welding spiritual blessings and material things together in a convincing manner.

Following this service was a fine ordination service at which were set apart one elder, one priest, and one teacher, with one confirmation.

Proselyting is being carried on more actively than ever before in our history, especially in Boston, Providence, and Brockton.

The closing message was delivered by C. Edward Miller, and we regret we could not stay to hear it. And we must not ask for space for all the grand things of this conference; besides, words do not tell it as it should be told. We do not put in much time these days creating slogans, but if there could be a sentence summing up the attitude of those present, it might be, "Now is the accepted time."

Yours in bonds,

FRANK S. DOBBINS, For Press Committee.

A Former Church Official Comes to Himself

The writer is not a member of any church, nor has he been for over ten years. Your church, however, is no stranger to him. It was, in fact, his home for over fifteen years.

Being a member of it for all those years, and knowing all the particulars of its origin, organization, doctrines, claims, and blessings, my faith in its claims and virtues has never wavered from the first day since I heard and learned of the peculiar plans of God. The fifteen years of church relationship, and ten years of the life of a prodigal has not in the least caused me any doubts as to the prophetic calling of the prophet, Joseph Smith, nor the divinity of the hand of God behind it, strange as it may seem to members of your church, and astonishing to the onlookers to see and hear and know that I should tender my resignation as a member of what I knew to be the work of God, and wander back into an ungodly life. It is a puzzle even to skeptics.

Such has been the fact, nevertheless, in my case, and what I wish to say through your paper is that my reason for asking to be severed from the church was, I saw I was not strong enough to withstand the test of a thorough Christian life, and rather than cause the church any reproach and hurt the work of God, I preferred to resign, out of respect for the church; and from that day, ten years ago, till this, I have never offered a prayer, read any church books, or papers, till this very day, when my wife handed me a SAINTS' HERALD some one had given her, with a letter from Elbert A. Smith about the death of the late R. C. Evans. Strange as it may seem to you readers, no two men were more closely associated in your church than were R. C. Evans and the writer. We were bosom friends for many years, and I would like you to know that the worship of man will lead people away from God, for that was one of the main traps set for my downfall, and when he and I quarreled and separated, he was a very high, popular, and influential church leader.

My faith got so pinned to man that it finally ended in my leaving the "old homestead," and since then I have been living in this far-off country, trying to make friends among the wicked, seeking a home to try to make life happy. And now to learn that since I left the old home, those who worked

SANDERS.—Mary Amelia Powell was born March 4, 1843. Died January 23, 1921. Married John Sanders April 4, 1865. To them were born 8 children, 4 sons and 4 daughters. Two sons, Lewis and Luther, preceded her in death. Baptized in November, 1895, by W. S. Macrae. A patient and gentle Christian woman. Her departure is mourned by husband, children, relatives, and a host of neighbors and friends, who recognize the example and golden legacy left them by the influence of a saintly life. Funeral services in charge of R. M. Maloney.

STAFFORD.—Priscilla Stafford was born at Corinth, Ontario, September 13, 1843. Died February 10, 1921, at Independence, Missouri. Baptized February 20, 1888, by Edward D. Long, at Davidson, Michigan. Married George Stover in 1860. To this union 4 children were born. Survived by a son, L. Stover, and one daughter, Mrs. Carrie Hastings, who were present at the funeral. Her husband passing away, she married Calvin Stafford of Montrose, Michigan, who had a large family. He died in 1908. She remained loyal to these children, until they were married. Was a faithful Saint. Sermon by Joseph Arber. Prayer by C. E. Guinand. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HAWLEY.—Lenora Emeline White, daughter of Valentine and Martha White, was born January 8, 1868, Sandwich, Illinois, died February 1, 1921, Lamoni, Iowa. November 3, 1889, she married Eber P. Hawley, and to this union were born Ruby Lillian Foreman, Lamoni, Iowa, Zadie Estella Nelson, Kingston, John Valentine, Grant City, Missouri. David Eber, Lamoni, all of whom were present at her death and funeral. Buried from Saints' church, Lamoni, J. W. Wight preaching, and C. Scott having charge. She was laid to rest in Rose Hill Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Enger Oiehaven Anderson was born January 17, 1836, at Stavanger, Norway, and died at Lamoni, Iowa, February 14, 1921, aged 85 years and 28 days. She came to America in 1857, and married A. K. Anderson at Mission, La Salle County, Illinois on July 5, 1857. To this union were born 8 children, the first, a son, dying in infancy; the others are all living. Andrew, Anna A., Daniel, Oscar, and Nellie, of Lamoni, Iowa; Benjamin of Omaha, Nebraska, and David, of the State College, Pennsylvania, all present at obsequies. Baptized March 17, 1862. Moved to Decatur County, in the vicinity of Lamoni, in March, 1872, and have made their home near the town and in the town until the time of her death. Her life has been one of exemplary habits, faithful and diligent in her religious associations, a life of service to others. Funeral services in charge of J. F. Garver, the sermon by F. A. Smith.

FINNEY.—Sarah A. Gorden Finney was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, January 10, 1851. Married Lorenzo Finney December 25, 1869. To this union were born 3 children. The eldest died in infancy. One daughter, Mrs. Jessie Sawyer, died in 1907. Nelson Finney, of Dalton, Nebraska, is left with his father to mourn the loss of an affectionate wife and a devoted mother. Baptized about 18 years ago. Died in Winterset, Iowa, February 12, 1921. The funeral was held in the Christian church. Sermon by J. S. Roth, assisted by Reverend Martin, pastor of that church.

McCARRISON.—Donna Elizabeth McCarrison, infant daughter of C. A. and Inez McCarrison, was born December 30, 1920, at Kansas City, Missouri, died February 7, 1921. Funeral service from the home in charge of J. A. Tanner. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery at Independence, Missouri.

Does an Education Pay Financially?

The United States Commissioner of Education Says

There are three factors in the production of material wealth:

1. Natural Resources.
2. Native Ability.
3. Acquired Ability.

The first two factors are fixed:

You cannot change the natural resources of a country much.

Only through the slowly swinging centuries can you alter the native ability of a people.

The third factor—acquired ability—the thing we call education, that comes directly or indirectly through the schools, is the variable factor,

As that varies, so does the product of wealth vary.

Suppose we let 4 represent natural resources and let 6 represent native ability. Then 4 times 6 equals 24.

Let us suppose 1 represents acquired ability, or education of the people. Then our product of wealth is 24.

Double the value of acquired ability and the product is 48; make it 3, the product is 72; make it 10, the product is 240.

But suppose the value of the acquired ability of education to be ZERO, what about the result? Imagine for a moment that all the education of the people should pass away, that we forget our science, our mathematics, our medicine; that we forget how to read and write; that all the education and training of the schools, that differentiate us from the savagery and barbarism of our forefathers, should be swept away. What takes place? Our wealth is gone. NINETY-NINE PER CENT OF THE WEALTH OF THIS COUNTRY IS DUE TO ACQUIRED ABILITY.

It is incumbent upon us as a church to see that our children are given the best education possible for the highest quality and degree of production attainable.

with me on father's farm have, since we left, also gone to a far-off country, only in a different direction—this along with the host of love letters and personal visits with two personages of Catholic religion, has caused me to ponder and look back with a lonesome longing to pack up my "turkey," sell out my little belongings, sacrifice the temptations of this selfish, every-man-for-himself, go-as-you-please country full of trials, dealing with crooks and liars, wandering around with no certain home, and has caused me of late, for the first time in all those years, to try to save up enough money (metaphorically speaking) to secure a ticket for the home train, and that is our intention at present, to make preparations to go back again and work on the "old homestead," and be content to labor at any old job in father's home.

And oh, as I write, for the first time has my heart been touched with the tears of peace. The question is, Can I make it? If I fail you will know I'll have tried, and should I not be able to endure the long journey home, this is my last testimony: That the greatest man of these last few centuries was none other than Joseph Smith the Prophet; for to me he had the hardest task of all the prophets chosen since the days of Adam, and he introduced a work that baffles the wisdom of all the learned men of this age of light and advancement.

Editors Herald: The Little Sioux District met in conference February 12 and 13 at Woodbine, Iowa. The attendance was fair as the bad condition of the roads hindered many from attending. The district seems to be progressing spiritually and temporally and many are looking Zionward. Bishop Carmichael gave some very instructive round table talks, and all enjoyed a very beneficial meeting. Seven were baptized. Five young men were ordained to the priesthood.

Suppose we could reduce all music to intelligible ideas and words, what would become of our greatest compositions? By rationalizing music we should ruin it. It would no longer speak its own language, but one of the petty languages of the earth. It would no longer translate us, it would have to be translated.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

Now we understand what the Psalmist means by ascribing "the strength of the hills" to Jehovah; and a new light comes into the song:

"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem,
So Jehovah is round about his people."

Effect of Prayer

To pray aright means to be ready for the endowment of God's Holy Spirit.

Recently Elder A. M. Carmichael approached us in Sunday school with the sudden request for an example of the effect of prayer in the development of character, taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, or religious history.

At once our mind went forth to the many wonderful prayers set forth in the word of God, for the healing of the sick, for the performing of miracles. But this was not what the question asked; it was the formation of character, conversion, and the preparation for work.

There came to mind the prayer of Adam; the prayer of Enoch as he walked and talked with God; the prayer of David in his youth; of Solomon in his youth; of Solomon at the dedication of the temple; of Joseph in Egypt; of Samuel; of Daniel and the three Hebrew children; of Nephi, and many others; and especially of Paul, who, when he heard the voice, entered into the silence, and then after baptism went down to Arabia for three years to commune with God; of Alma, and of his wonderful conversion; and how much Paul had to do with giving us the epistles of the New Testament; of the conversion of Augustine in later religious history, and of many others.

But we were suddenly struck with the fact that of all who have prayed, of all who have ever walked the earth, Jesus of Nazareth is preeminently the man who prayed. He prayed as never man prayed before or since. His coming to the world was preceded by prayer. When he was baptized, he went aside for forty days to fast and pray. When he called his disciples, named the Twelve, he went aside first and fasted and prayed.

He had gone alone to fast and pray, and knowing his disciples were in danger, he came walking to them on the waves of the Sea of Galilee. Then there was that wonderful prayer for his followers, as is recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, and his prayer in the garden of Gethsemane. There was his wonderful prayer among the Nephites on this continent.

In his ministry in Palestine he went aside frequently and alone to pray. At his transfiguration he took three with him; at Gethsemane he took three with him, but he went aside a little way alone and prayed. He prayed in public, it is true. His wonderful prayer among the Nephites was before all the people. He prayed in small groups, but he also prayed much alone.

We very often think of prayer as a petition to ask for something. Yet he was the very Son of God, and had possessed the majesty and glory of the Father on high, yet at the end he adds only, "Glorify thou me with the glory that I had with thee before the world was."

We think of prayer as connected with conversion. Jesus was already the very Son of God. Yet he then felt the need. We think of it as communion with God, yet he was himself God. If he then, having laid aside his glory, and becoming like man, a little lower than the angels, felt the need of constant communion in humble and devoted prayer, how much greater is our necessity in the work before us.

There have been in the past, great prayers uttered by men of the church. A great work has been done. But for the future we should pray as we never have prayed before. If we so seek the divine Presence, we may rest assured that the church of God will be blessed as it never has been blessed before, and that we will receive a greater measure, even an endowment of his Holy Spirit.

We should pray that we ourselves may become better fitted for the work of God, and that we may come in closer communion with him.

We should pray for the officers on whom rest the burden of the work of God, that they may be held in his omnipotent hand; that they may be blessed and guided not by their own wisdom, but by the wisdom of the Spirit of God.

We should pray that the Spirit that we receive, the blessings that we receive may go forth and be felt by the people of God everywhere, that they may rejoice with us.

We should pray for the missionaries and for the inhabitants of the earth as we have been directed in these latter days:

"Pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, forever and ever. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1.

Then let us pray that the people of God may prepare themselves for his coming, and that he may come quickly, for the blessing and healing of humanity.

Services for Zion Builders

Every indication of success in the young people's meetings in Lamoni. They have adopted a meaningful name.

The young people of Lamoni are doing some humble praying. They are one and all greatly encouraged and rejoicing because Brother Elbert A. Smith will be the speaker. They sense the importance of these services, and are striving to prepare themselves that they may receive the greatest possible benefit.

Wednesday forenoon, the 23d, Elder Harold C. Burgess spoke at the college chapel with considerable spiritual power on the work of the young people in Zion, at the meetings recently held in Independence. He placed his baton and Bible together, and declared that they must go together for the work of the church; the musical department supporting the preaching of the word.

Despite the various ward meetings, which were held as usual throughout Lamoni and vicinity for the older Saints, the young people crowded the lower auditorium for the Wednesday evening meeting, February 23. Four, who had recently been baptized, three of them from the Children's Home, were confirmed. This, with the opening exercises, took the first half hour.

In the succeeding hour more than fifty of the young people spoke, one offered prayer, and three songs were sung. Not a minute was allowed to go to waste. As one was sitting down, another would arise in a different part of the room.

Next Wednesday evening, March 2, the young people will meet in the college chapel. Some will be appointed to visit the neighboring ward meetings and the neighboring branches. Some are appointed to canvass from house to house in town and vicinity to advertise the meetings and invite attendance. They also have charge of the distribution of tickets. Roy Cheville has charge of the announcements at the Wednesday evening ward meetings. Wilbur E. Prall has charge of the canvass of the town. The same committee will distribute a special lesson on prayer for use in all senior and adult classes in the Sunday school next Sunday.

Sunday morning, February 27, D. T. Williams was the speaker at the Brick Church, and Harold C. Burgess in the evening. Both of these sermons were to the young people and for the young people, in preparation of these special services.

A personal letter from one of our missionaries remarks that he is glad to see these meetings arranged for the young people, as he supposed that they are being arranged for the benefit of the young people at the college. This is by no means the case. These services are not arranged by the officers of the church for any young people. They are not a thing prepared and handed down, but are the result of a call from the young people for such services; the meetings are of the young people, by the young people, and for the young people. They are not for the young people of the town, nor for the young people of the college; they are for the young people of the church who at this time reside in Lamoni and its vicinity. This includes not only those in Lamoni, but those residing in the branches around Lamoni—all of those who reside within the Lamoni Stake being not only welcome, but invited by the young people who have this work in charge. The initiative is that of the young people. The burden of the work is upon the young people and by those quite young in years. These are the ones who are making the canvass—not those who are thirty years of age or over. A few over thirty are associated with them, but the real work is being done by those twenty years of age and younger.

We must recognize that if the full benefit of these meetings is to be secured, it must be because the young people both desire and are willing to prepare themselves. It comes from a sincere desire on their part. But this is the case, in fact, with any successful work. The few cannot successfully impose religion on the many. All the leaders can do is to lead and guide. The work, to be successful, must be the work of all, upheld by the prayers of all.

They have named the meetings "Services for Zion Builders," and intend to emphasize the broadest meaning of the term.

We sincerely hope that this movement will not stop with Lamoni, but if it is to go farther, it will depend upon the youth of the church. Adaptations, it is true, must be made to local conditions, but it is a case of "Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." These services can only be successfully secured and carried in response to a sincere, humble desire for better information and better preparation.

In both Independence and Lamoni the warning was given that the result of the meetings meant sacrifice; that it meant trials with which they would be confronted. It would mean suffering, yet the young voices were raised in reply,

"Nearer, my God, to thee; nearer to thee,
E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me."

This is the spirit of consecration and devotion. May this spirit of God go forth throughout the church.

Group Work

Reference to some excellent articles in another department, worthy careful study by all the standing ministry.

Special attention should be given by church officers, and especially those in large cities, to the series of articles in the Pastoral department of this week's HERALD, on group work in the various stakes. Articles have also been requested from some conducting this work where the church has had considerable membership in large cities with possibly one or more branches.

The plan is being urged, that instead of maintaining several branches in a large city, the membership be organized into one branch, as a rule, though the separate meeting places may still be continued, yet the work of the city handled as a whole, and the work organized, so that instead of many branches working in general towards a common end, the whole body moves as one. Detroit recently made such a change.

In Independence there were, under the old plan, six separate branches. There is now one branch or church, but all of the meeting places are still maintained, and in time additional meeting places will undoubtedly be erected. In Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas, there were also several separate branches. There is now but the one, Kansas City Branch, but this does not mean that any of the meeting places have been discarded. It does mean the work better organized, so that the whole body of the priesthood and membership, work together and in harmony.

The same plan has been used in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and can be used to advantage in other large cities.

A rereading of these articles will show that there is not an ironclad plan, but that each local presidency are working out their own problems, adapting the plans to meet their own needs.

Another aspect of the question is, that with the advantage of the gathering, there is the disadvantage of an unwieldy body, too large for one man to give personal attention to the membership. Hence, as pointed out by Elder John F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, a return is made to smaller branch conditions. The larger branch is divided into a number of groups, each group having an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. In some cases a high priest is appointed. This permits of the development of pastoral ability and material, and members of the high priesthood become associate pastors in their particular group.

In Independence, we understand, the many groups of the city are combined into larger divisions, over which a high priest is placed. Some of these divisions focalize around one church edifice. In the case of those usually attending the Stone Church, the numbers are too large to form one division, and hence are subdivided, and the groups attending that place are combined into several divisions, over each of which a high priest presides. Regularly each month these division heads also meet with the pastor of Independence, and with the First Presidency, who of course preside in Zion.

It will be seen that the group plan is first to divide the largest branches in the interest of more effective work. But it also combines the smaller branches, located sufficiently near to work to advantage. In both cases it produces a better organization, with both the advantages of more intensive work in a small branch, and the advantage of working together in larger groups.

S. A. B.

Wholesale House Proposed

A meeting was held in Independence of business men and bishops, on February 19, to discuss the organization of a wholesale house as a stewardship. The plan proposed is that the wholesale house do a strictly cash business; that no business shall be undertaken until sufficient capital is subscribed by individuals. It will then be used for the benefit of the various storehouses of the church, and probably the church institutions, and for the church as a whole as rapidly as possible, conducting a mail order business as well as wholesale.

A committee is appointed to consider location, having regard to freight rates; another to consider organization, which will consider from a legal point of view what form of organization will be best adapted for the purposes in view; a third committee on capitalization, to consider the raising of sufficient capital with which to begin business.

This represents a long forward step, which has been needed for some time. Every effort will be made to insure the most careful business methods.

The Lesson of the War

A community of good will, a united church, and national Christian morality needed.

Frederick Lynch, editor of The Christian Work, states that in the past two years he has spent four months of each year in Europe, in England, France, Switzerland, and Holland. He has spent some time in conference with many eminent men in all parts of Europe and Asia. The Germans were also present at these conferences.

In all of these countries he has asked the question: What are the two or three great lessons Europe has learned from the war? And in almost every case, including the Germans, he has received the same response.

First: There is no hope for the future of Europe and Asia unless the nations can learn to live together in a community of good will. The League of Nations alone will not be sufficient. No mechanical arrangement can be sufficient; as long as selfishness rules the world it will always bring strife whether between individuals or nations. Pursuant to this, German delegates disapproved formally the attack on Belgium.

Second: There has arisen a new yearning for unity among all Christians, and a consciousness that only a united church can prevent such a catastrophe as we have just experienced, and only a united church can build the city of God in the world. We have noted this desire for a united church in Europe ourselves, in several of the publications of various churches, reaching our desk from abroad. We have also noted some of the continental papers. The result has been, as we have previously reported, three world conferences, and in addition thereto, the World Student Congress at Stockholm in July.

A third answer was, "The war has taught us there can be no peace, no permanency of civilization, no Christian world-order until the nations of the world ordered their relationships by those same Christian principles that obtained among Christian gentlemen, were bound by the same code of honor, and the same test of greatness applied to them that is applied to men."

There cannot be two ethical standards—one for individuals, another for nations; one Christian, one pagan. And we may add there cannot be two ethical standards—one for men and one for women. Our ideals must be high for individuals and for nations.

Illiteracy in America

Congressman H. M. Towner in a recent speech declared that America is among the backward nations, because of the large percentage of illiteracy found among the enlisted men in the army. In view of the condition, the Smith-Towner bill is proposed to raise the standard of the more backward States and to bring up the standards of rural schools. Uniform Federal education is impossible in the United States, but this may be either a handicap or an advantage. And the whole system centralized would represent a loss. Standardized education is not desirable in so vast a domain, but we do need national cooperation of individual States.

During the war Herbert Fisher of Great Britain drafted and presented to Parliament one of the most far-reaching educational bills in the history of nations, calling for a greatly increased appropriation of money; the largest ever made by any parliamentary body. This was undertaken during the war.

France also revised her school system during the war, appropriating millions for the task. Apparently there is serious need for revision.

Reports showed that outside the great number of illiterates rejected, about 200,000 were actually accepted and sent overseas, but were unable to do duty because of lack of intellectual development. Mental unfitness led to physical unfitness, so that 700,000 out of 2,400,000 were totally unfit. One out of four of the soldiers could not read a newspaper intelligently, or write a letter home. One out of three examined in the first draft were physically unfit, and 5,000,000 boys and girls have no school advantages, or are taught by untrained teachers.

The Size of One Star

Often indeed are we brought face to face with the relatively small amount that man knows, even in this age of knowledge, and the splendid plan on which the universe is laid out. Recent newspaper items state that Professor Albert Michelson of the University of Chicago, has successfully measured the size of Betelguese, in the constellation of Orion, which is always so beautiful in the evening sky in January.

He states that they are able to show that this star is 27 million times as large as our sun, yet the sun has been shown to be some 880,000 miles across. In round numbers, the diameter of Betelguese has been stated to be 300 million miles. If exactly 300 times the size of our sun it would be 260 million miles. That means that the diameter of the earth's orbit is only about two thirds the diameter of Betelguese.

If the sun were set down at the center of this star, the earth could still move in the same orbit it does now, with regard to the sun, and yet never come within 40 or 50 million miles of its surface.

If correctly estimated, it would mean that if an airplane were to sail around its circumference and as close as possible to its surface, at the rate of 100 miles an hour, it still would take a full one thousand years to complete the circumnavigation.

Our own sun is a million times the size of the earth. If the earth were set down at its center, the moon in its orbit would reach only half way to its circumference.

Such figures show how insignificant is this world compared to the mighty bodies which show in the heavens.

"When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the Son of Man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels and hast crowned him with glory and honor."

That after all is the wonderful fact, that "thou visitest him," and "thou hast made him a little lower than the angels," and it is the pleasure of God to crown him with glory and honor.

It is worth while sometimes for us to realize how insignificant after all is our little span, our feeding and sleeping, our eating and drinking, compared with the tremendous spiritual issue of creation.

Subjects Being Discussed

Germany of To-day

A visitor to Germany writes in the Christian Work that Berlin, once the cleanest capital in Europe, has become dingy and unkempt. As to the blackened snow which formerly would have been quickly carted away, it remains unmoved for days. Real want stalks there—no sugar, no milk, no butter or margarine often, and only a couple of slices of exceedingly bad bread. The invalid's ration of milk, only secured specially, by a woman of sixty, is half a pint twice weekly. A new-laid egg costs four marks. A suit of clothes may cost a thousand or two thousand marks. Many are having their clothes turned three times, or oftener, while in the poorer quarters such a thing as unpatched garments can scarcely be found.

Yet at the same time, there is but little of hate; and kindness is expressed towards the attitude of England. In reply to a query, a business man replied that the net results of the war would simply mean that militarism has transferred its headquarters from Berlin to Paris.

The writer reports of the surprising frequency and unanimity that the admission is heard that Germany deserved to lose the war, "but we did not deserve this terrible peace."

The Quakers have shown so much Christian spirit and have helped so many that a new verb has been formed to allude to Quakers, "Ich werde gequakert."

Coal Profiteering

Senator Kenyon recently stated that an excess profit of three and a half billion was made by the coal owners selling to the War Department in the last months of 1920. Coal which cost $2.82 per ton or less to produce, to which might fairly be added 50 cents as a commission of the purchasing agent, or a total of $3.32, was sold to the Government at $7.34 a ton f. o. b. the mines. At the same time the Navy Department was receiving coal of high grade at $4.50 to $4.75 per ton. The profit is evidently much in excess of 100 per cent. There was no further expense, as the coal was sold at the mine's mouth. One of the senators from West Virginia urged, concerning the coal situation, account should also be taken of other industries, such as the clothing trade and building industry, intimating that like profits would be found there.

Child Labor

The National Child Labor Committee states it is estimated that up to 1916, 75 per cent of our children left school before they were sixteen to enter industry. In New York alone 49,000 work permits were issued in 1919. In New Jersey 19,000. Massachusetts granted some 30,000 permits for children between fourteen and sixteen years. In other States the conditions are worse.

The Federal law only prevents children working in factories, mines, and quarries. Children of five years old and up pick cotton regularly while schools are in session. Five thousand children between six and fifteen years of age were working regularly in Colorado beet fields when that industry was investigated. Even in the city of Washington, children of six years old and up sell papers without permits; while in Mississippi it was found that many children engaged in industry were unable to write their names, and none of them could do so, only very illegibly, and scarcely any showed any attainment beyond the fourth grade.

Medical Skill Versus Faith

The district attorney for Los Angeles, California, has served notice that he will prosecute parents in the case of children dying of contagious and malignant diseases where no physician has been secured to attend. The Christian Science Monitor and others point out quite clearly some of the shortcomings of the medical profession and emphasize the value of mental control. But that is not sufficient to comply with the law of the land in many instances. Faith in God does not prevent a compliance with the law of the land, especially when our children are ill, nor prevent our giving them any help with mild herbs or through the best the medical profession is able to give to secure their recovery. This does not mean that our trust should not still continue in our heavenly Father and the message he has ordained, for there is where our faith belongs. It does mean that we should be awake to our calling and observe the law of the land in all things, and also should do everything that human knowledge can do to assist and protect our children.

Some Real Work in Social and Recreational Subjects

The class in social and recreational work at Graceland College is not content to study theory only, but are determined to qualify with actual experience.

The men of the class, totaling about forty in number, have enrolled as Boy Scouts, and will take the same sort of work as the boys do, forming into patrols, taking the tests, and are determined to become first-class scouts by the end of the school year.

The women, numbering some thirty-two, have taken up Oriole work in the same manner, and observe the rules that will enable them to say they have done all of it themselves therefore know how it is done. When they have qualified on that feature, they hope to enroll in Temple Builder work and do the same sort of thing.

This is a most practical way to demonstrate their interest in the subject, and is bound to result in a much better class of attainment at the end of the school year. It will also inspire confidence in those who come under their care in the future. We are truly glad these young people are in a position which makes it possible for them to do this, and that they are willing to do what they try to get others to do.

In this issue is announced a new manual, a product of this class that should be of great value in Religio work.

Philadelphia is planning a special series of meetings March 13 to March 27. We have no doubt that they will be preeminently for the young people, though they will be for the benefit also of the whole church there. Elder D. T. Williams of Lamoni, has been invited to be the speaker. The music naturally will be in charge of the general director, Albert N. Hoxie.

Foreign Fields

*Talk by Paul M. Hanson at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, February 6, 1921.
Reported by Howard W. Harder.*

"Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matthew 28: 16-20.

In these words is indicated the scope of the mission field of the church. The very commission to take the truth of heaven to the world reveals the Lord did not want his church to pursue a policy of isolating itself from mankind, but of permeating all society with truth. In support of this, hear his words to the church: "Ye are the salt of the earth"; "No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed"; "Ye are the light of the world." It is a good thing, then, for Latter Day Saints everywhere to refuse to conclude that the murmurings of their village or town or State are the murmurings of the world.

It fell to my lot to be rocked in the cradle of the church. In my boyhood days I united with the church, and in early life was called to the ministry of Christ. One great question that came to me in my youth, and I thought it should be decided as soon as possible, and once for all, was, Is there a God? I examined it the best I could and came to the conclusion there is a God. I then felt that life itself should revolve around that great central truth, and further, that if there was a God he was my God all of the time and not simply when, if Providence should permit it, I should grow to be old, and then perhaps find the Almighty. I felt that he was my God though I was young, and would be through coming years, and I have never departed from that thought. To me this is the greatest subject in the world. If a man can really learn about the Lord, who he is, and why he ought to be worshiped, feel his power, behold the majesty of his law, and sense the marvelous promises he has made, one will indeed have learned about the best thing that anyone in human life can learn. And then one should learn who man is, what his limitations are— one will then be able to move forward.

Elder D. E. Tucker and I were invited by the church in the year 1902 to proceed on a mission to New Zealand, that little country lying in the southern seas, famed for its beauty, fertility of soil, and socialistic laws. To me it was an event of magnitude, as I had never been very far from home.

When we reached the land of our appointment, we found ourselves as far on the other side of the equator as we are here this side of the equator; when we arrived in Invercargill we were farther south of the equator than we are here north of the equator. Of course everything seemed strange. That is the experience everyone has who crosses the equator. Then the sun lies to the north, the cold wind comes from the south, and the seasons are just opposite to those of our homeland. In December, January, and February they have their summer. Santa Claus is not seen pictured coming in a sled, as all is green. We were not forgetful that we were foreigners—the one who goes into a foreign country is of course the foreigner.

In the southern part of this English colony we began our work. We did not start with a pipe organ, nor with a large choir, nor with a small one. We did not start with a good many friends rallying around us. We were sometimes in cities without helpers, where we did not know a soul. Under such surroundings we were found lifting up our voices under the banner of Christ; and I suppose no one in the whole world was prouder than I was, for I had the honor to represent Christ and serve his church.

Many difficulties confronted us in this mission, because representatives of the Utah Mormon Church had gone through the whole colony carrying their peculiar doctrines; the people generally were convinced that a Latter Day Saint was a devotee of Brigham Young, one who believed, not only in the open announcement of the unchangeability of God or the first principles of the gospel, but also in the spiritual wife doctrine, in the plurality of gods, that gods could be created of mankind simply by developing themselves along certain lines, and in secret ceremonies in connection with their religion.

All of this we faced, but I was not dismayed. There had come to me experiences in which I sensed divinity in the church, and so I was ready to cast to the winds any doctrine that was not in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ. I had been trained, too, in the church by men like J. R. Lambert, whom I had often heard preach, whom I had heard take part in the larger assemblies of the church, and somehow I got an impression in those days of the church, that it was well to be precise and move along lines that are entirely within the law, and to be careful what you are doing when you get outside of the law.

I had been tutored under men like W. H. Kelley, a man who wanted fair play and no covering up of anything. I was trained under men like Bishop E. L. Kelley, whom I had often seen filled with a spirit of meekness, perhaps when under fire—a prince among men. I had been trained under such men as Heman C. Smith, who was fearless and would take a position he thought to be right no matter what other people thought about it, and hold it. I had been trained under men like our late beloved Joseph. "See to it," came often the lesson to me as I was associated with that man of God, "that you do unto others as you would they should do unto you." And knowing the example of the Master, and having the Spirit of God to assist in that foreign field, I took the ground, of course, that all the doctrines in opposition to the standard books of the church, peddled so industriously by the men from Salt Lake City, were false. I let them know that if a thing was wrong it was wrong, even though they would say that certain persons had been engaged in its practice. I understood that I was not called to deify any man. I was there as a witness for Jesus Christ. It was necessary to clear away the rubbish. I think I was as happy in my work as the one who will some day take part in the finishing of the church structure in that field, though the hardships were many and the sacrifices not a few. I felt it was just as important to take part in the laying of the foundation of the church in New Zealand as finally putting the finishing touch on the dome.

In New Zealand we baptized a young man named Robert Hall. He now presides over the branch that is making encouraging progress in Dunedin. He is a competent young man. Alone he came to the waters of baptism. I remember the occasion well; and as he came walking over the hill and down to the pond near one of the mines to be baptized by one who came from another country, no branch in which he could hold his membership, indorsing what he believed to be right, not moved by what some people would think about it, I said, "There is a man whom God can use in the building up of his church." And through the years until the present he has given active support to the church, and as a result Dunedin, a city of about sixty thousand population, knows of the church, so industriously and faithfully has our brother labored.

In Auckland a very energetic and competent young man from Australia is laboring, Elder A. V. Robinson. He is laboring to establish the church in that important port—and he is succeeding. I have seen him on the street after preaching answering questions fired by atheists, agnostics, and religious bigots, and there he stood unmoved like a rock in the ocean. The church is moving forward there. The numbers are increasing. Elder Savage, who until lately was associated with Elder Robinson in Auckland, and Elder Loving from Australia are now engaged in launching the work of the church among the Maoris, the aborigines of New Zealand. These elders are battlers. I would be happy to see the Maoris, who are said to be equal to the whites intellectually, when given an equal chance, well started in the church work. I am glad to know they are to learn of the church. I should love to see the church advance among them, and also among the Samoans, as well as in the Hawaiian Islands and in the Society Islands, where we already have a large membership of very fine natives.

In Kaitangata, in the South Island, Elder Tucker and I made our home with a family of Saints named Stewart, who had moved from Australia to New Zealand a few years before our arrival in the colony. In this family was a girl about sixteen, named May. She, with others of the family, was baptized in Australia prior to going to New Zealand. When we started our meetings on the streets, they took their places alongside of us and helped us with the singing. Then when we moved to the hall, May took her place at the organ, and taught a Sunday school class. They didn't stop to be swayed by the cost. They had friends who were dear to them, but to them their church came first. When I was about to leave New Zealand for Australia, Sister May asked if Elder Tucker and I would administer to her. I told her we would be glad to do so. After we repaired to the sitting room, she parted her hair and showed two bare spots, one about the size of a half dollar, showing she was attacked by a disease which had worked havoc with a number in the community, taking and leaving all the hair off the heads of those it attacked. I thought, Here is one that looks upon me as a servant of Christ; here is one who rallied to the church under circumstances that were trying. Memory went back to the days on the streets and in the hall. Sometimes it was raining, but that made no difference to her. This young woman was threatened with the loss of the glory of womanhood. We administered to her. I went on to Australia and heard later that she had received a blessing. When wife and I returned from Australia in 1917, we called at Dunedin, where Sister May Bradley lives, and one afternoon at her home she said, "Brother Paul, would you like to see what the Lord did for me when you were in New Zealand before?" I said we would. She took the combs from her hair and let it fall down, parting it where once was the large bald spot. She had a wealth of hair that was marvelous to look upon, reaching down with her arms outspread until it seemed at first it would go to the floor. "That is what the Lord did for me," she said. "I never comb my hair but the thought comes of the goodness of God to me."

This is referred to that you may know that the signs are following the believers as the church moves forward to the nations, as Jesus our Lord said, "Signs shall follow them that believe." Among the signs was this, "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

I am going to read from letters written by Elder Glaud Rodger, one of the pioneer representatives of the church to Australia. In this letter written in Australia, he said, "The mission is hard on account of no places to meet except at high rates. Oh, how different in America! But I must bide my time and make the best of it. If ever an elder was in a tried place, I am at present. An unfriendly world pointing the finger of scorn, looking upon us with contempt and disfavor and as impostors. The cross is hard. May I have your prayers before the throne of grace." I was told by some of the old Saints in the church and by friends not members of the church that Elder Glaud Rodger walked up and down from place to place along the coasts of Australia, often weary and footsore and suffering because of what he was called upon to endure, but always there was a triumphant note, that some day a great work would be done in Australia. This letter was written forty-three years ago.

I wish to read part of another letter. This was written shortly after he arrived in America from his mission over there. "I look back with pleasure on my lonely travels for years in that far-off land, and in my inmost soul often say, May God bless those who blessed me, for I had many friends; yes, my dear brother, friends that will know me and my mission in a future day. Those are not vain words: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'" And again he writes from America: "The seed sown will spring up by and by, and in Australia, though long years may pass, the church will yet bloom and blossom with fruits of praise to God and the Lamb."

In 1903 in the little town of Bulahdelah, New South Wales, when I was baptizing in the Myall River, I noticed there was some merriment on the shore. I thought it was a strange thing, but imagined that perhaps the ordinance appeared strange to them. It was a new thing, possibly. Afterward I learned the cause of the levity. The word was passed among the spectators that everyone baptized by the Latter Day Saints was required to repeat the name of Brigham Young three times while under the water or the baptism was not efficacious!"

Now we have a fine branch in Bulahdelah and a church building of our own. In Johns River when I was there the first time, the church met in a private home; now they have one of the best churches in that part of the country. In Melbourne where we first met in a hall, we now have a commodious church of our own, and the branch is dividing into groups with prospects that branches will be formed in other places. The work is moving on. The church in Australia is "blossoming with fruits of praise to God and the Lamb."

In West Australia in 1906 I held a discussion with a minister of one of the churches in the city of Perth. It was held in the home of one of the members of his church. We discussed the question of priesthood, church organization, and spiritual gifts. This minister treated me very courteously, and I endeavored to excel him in every quality that made its appeal in me. We parted good friends. When I went to Australia ten years later, one of the first things I was told was that the family where that discussion was held had united with the church. And when I went to Kalgoorlie, the famous gold mining city of West Australia, I met a man by the name of Ray Mark, a member of the church. I asked him about the circumstances of his coming into the church. "Well," he said, "you remember the debate held with Evangelist Ewers. I was present, but not there for religion. I was interested in one of the girls of the family, and being there could not help hearing what was said. What I heard never left me, and finally I knocked at the door of the church for admission." To-day he is president of the branch in Perth.

In all the capitals of the states of the commonwealth, excepting Tasmania, branches of the church are established. We have in Australia a publishing house, and a splendid corps of local and general church workers. You discover that the work of the church moves along lines abroad similar to those in our country.

Yes, sacrifices are required; but are not sacrifices being made by those who remain at home? Many are the sacrifices being made. When one can feel that he is doing the thing that God wants him to do, he can go to the uttermost part of the earth and be happy. We are unhappy when we do the things that down deep in our hearts we feel we should not do.

Elder C. Ed. Miller once told a story in which he brought in my name. The incident had passed from memory until some one told me of his speaking about it. We were in the State of Ohio doing some work together. One day as we were walking along the street, Brother Miller said, "Paul, I have only twenty cents. How much have you?" I said, "The Government of the United States is behind my resources." "What is that?" he asked in wonder. "A two-cent postage stamp!"

When we discover God and realize that we are doing what he wants us to do, then is when sacrifices become a pleasure; hardships are not mentioned, and the church becomes all in all.

In Australia we have a field, to my mind one of the best of all the foreign missions of the church, though I believe there are mission fields in Europe and other places that in due time will loom up and be just as important. Do we as a church sense our opportunities? If so, we then can measure our responsibility. Do you remember the Lord said: "Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes"? Some are to lament, if they have not already done so, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved!"

To us has come from Almighty God in these last days his church fresh from the courts of heaven, in all purity, given by the hands of an angel; also to us has come "the sealed book" of the ancient civilizations of America, placed in our hands that we might know the path of holiness, know what it means to draw nigh unto God, and the awful consequences that come from rejecting him.

I am not so much concerned about what the church did in Nauvoo, wherein failures were made—there were a good many mistakes made in what we call the old church—as I am about the great possibilities that rise up before the church now, if we move in an organized way along constructive lines and redeem Zion.

I believe Zion will be redeemed. I believe it will be soon. God's people will be gathered and his power will be over them. Will the Reorganized Church ever be rejected of God? I do not know. I do not believe it will; but this is certain that if the church will stand within the law and hear Christ, it will move along lines where the Lord will not have to take steps to raise up another people through whom his will can be executed. Yes, it is a big thought. The Reorganization—the Reorganized Church—just a handful to begin with through whom the Lord could work. Why? The Lord could not work through the old organization and had to spit it out of his mouth. Do we sense that? The rejection did not come in one night. The church did not go to bed one night favored of God and wake up in the morning a rejected church—the latter-day apostasy came gradually. The foundation was laid for it.

Let us turn to the book of Revelation, where language similar to what was given in latter days to the church may be found. The Lord said to the church in Laodicea, "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." So with the church in latter days that God had to reject about fourteen years from the time it was organized; with those who were true and faithful the Lord would work and make his abode.

The church now numbers about 100,000. What an army, if we would lift up the banner of Christ, and march shoulder to shoulder, God working through the church, permeating it with his Spirit! Think what could be accomplished! It is our calling to move forward and engage in constructive work. Get busy! Let the world see in Zion that which will prove to them that it is the light of the world.

The world needs Christ—the alternative is anarchy. Look to the nations of ancient America and you see Christ or chaos; in the antedeluvian world it was Christ or destruction; the future is to be filled with calamity to the extent Christ is not honored. Christianity is the soundest in philosophy and the safest to practice of all existing religions. All you have to do is to try it. Don't look so much for what you think you might not understand as for the simple fundamental truths of Christianity.

Now, if Christ when a babe was worthy to have the wise men worship him, and lay at his feet gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh, what a privilege we should esteem it to use the best gifts we have in his service, to lift up his banner, not only in our own community, but see that it is carried to the whole world! That is our mission field.

May the church prove faithful to the great commission given by our Lord respecting foreign fields.

The Immigration Problem

The American Federation of Labor states that there are now two million idle workers, or men who are willing to work who are out of work, in America. This is not simply a news item. It arises in large part from the aftermath of the war. There exist bumper crops, yet extremely low prices, and Europe and other parts of the world are suffering from lack of food and clothing. It illustrates emphatically that we cannot live in the world by ourselves alone, but are affected by the conditions abroad, as well as at home. In part, it is also doubtless the result of concentration in a few hands of wealth or production in excess of their possible consumption.

While we are preaching Zion, and considering the gathering as a place of refuge, we are confronted with the fact that many foreign countries are particularly anxious not to lose their citizens, as they need the assistance of the abler men in building up industry disarranged by the war. At the same time, there is a great deal of fear in this country because of the heavy immigration which is in sight. Some have stated that as high as fifteen million are waiting and want to come to America as soon as they can get passports and transportation. Within a very few months the passport regulations, so far as this country is concerned, will be at an end. The steamship companies state that fifteen million are demanding passage, while the United States Commissioner of Immigration in general states there are approximately twenty-five million Europeans who desire to immigrate. Some state that the politicians are willing to see them go because they do not represent the poorer class, and that this immigration will act as a safety valve. A dominant reason is given that they are unable to secure food and clothing, and unable to import it from America, they are coming here in order to get the first essentials of existence. And this, despite the fact that steamer fares have increased from $25 in the past, to the average of $110 now. A man must be fairly well to do, by the European standard, before he is able to immigrate.

PASTORAL

Group Work in Zion

By R. V. Hopkins, Pastor

"The division into groups is a simple, business proposition, as well as a spiritual blessing."

There is no question in my mind but that the division of our stakes into groups was the sensible and logical thing to do. Our membership had reached such proportions that it became impossible for one pastor to supervise it all. The various arms of pastoral work in a large stake make a division of labor imperative, and the general supervisor or pastor becomes really the main factor in keeping all these arms working. The division into groups is a simple, business proposition, as well as a spiritual blessing.

I have had experience in this matter in two stakes, and experience has taught me that the group system has many advantages over the old system. For instance, we have thirty-six groups in Zion, each presided over by an elder, with whom are associated a priest, a teacher, and a deacon, and in several cases, two priests.

This keeps more than one hundred and fifty men at work, and divides the work up among thirty-six pastors, instead of leaving it to one man. It is a well-known fact, too, by the way, that the surest way to keep men in line is to keep them busy.

These groups are divided into nine districts, each consisting of a number of groups presided over by a supervisor, usually a high priest. These supervisors, who include also the pastors of our six churches in Zion, form a council, which meets monthly in the Presidency's office to go over the work of the month and to advise and counsel for the future good of the work.

We have a newly revised card file of all families in Zion in our office, consisting of over 1,300 family cards.

Our group officers call, as church officers, upon these families. They report their visits on report cards, and these visits are recorded on the back of the family card. The family cards are filed alphabetically, and by groups. It is thus easy to see just how a group is being worked, and what families still need visiting.

Since establishing our office we are beginning to get results in this line.

Unless these groups have a strongly centralized head and much personal supervision, they fall apart and die out. In fact an organization on paper is a failure. There is no binding link—nothing central to hold them together. The groups become to the central organization what the colonies were to the central government under the articles of confederation; that is, a band of states, instead of a banded state, or as Benjamin Franklin so aptly expressed, a barrel without hoops.

I am inclosing our system of report cards. They may be of assistance.

Group Work in Lamoni Stake

By J. F. Garver, President

How the work is assigned, planned, done, and some results attained.

The law and usages of the church in the matter of pastoral work on the part of the brethren of the local ministry are well known among the Saints.

It is further known where they serve in this regard effectually the brethren are a very great inspiration to the Saints in their endeavor to arise to the dignity of their calling as the covenant people of God—to the wondrous opportunity that is theirs, extending even to all the world.

The Assignment

The work of the Saints is twofold: So to occupy that through them God may effect:

- 1. The preaching of the gospel in all the world; and
- 2. The redemption of Zion.

This then is the work of the local ministry: To labor under the law to the end that the Saints in their organized and in their gathered conditions may come:

- 1. To vision the magnitude of the task to which under God their hands are set;
- 2. To divest themselves of every hindrance to their occupancy therein;
- 3. To qualify for effectual service unto the performance thereof; and
- 4. With every hindrance and every handicap removed, to labor to maximum capacity for the complete performance of the task as assigned—the carrying of the truth to every people, and the redemption of Zion.

We have said it is the part of the local ministry to inspire the people to this good work.

We say more, for we are, out of our experience and observation in local work, convinced that until the ministry qualify and serve in all things necessary unto the working out of the task or problem assigned—a service on the part of the ministry not only to the cause, but directly and personally to the Saints—until these men of the ministry do first their work in this regard, the people cannot be expected to come forward with their full part.

And we say finally, the local ministry of every order and office must be put to the task.

Given a leadership in whom they may impose confidence, a leadership worthy and capable, the people will perform their part.

Planning the Work

We have indicated that all local men, deacons, teachers, priests, elders, high priests, must have part in this work. With this the Saints and brethren will agree. It only remains then to determine the methods by which they shall work, to lay out plans best calculated to make the work possible.

In small branches, particularly where there be only one of each office, elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, the matter is simple. The problem grows complex only with increasing numbers, especially where there are hundreds of Saints, and scores of ministers, and more and more complex in like ratio as Saints and ministers increase. It may again be made simple, however, if by methods lawful it is again reduced to small branch proportions. And this is just what is being done at our gathering places and in our larger branches.

By the breaking up into groups of the Saints of these larger places, so as to leave in each group only such number of families and members as may be effectually served under such appointment, and by the specific assignment of men to each group, the Saints of which become their especial and only direct charge, is made possible the pastoral service necessary for the development of the people unto the work required.

At Lamoni as elsewhere this method is in vogue. At this place the branch is divided up so that we have fifteen groups, thirteen in the town of Lamoni, averaging about twenty-five families to the group, and two in the country adjacent, where we have members. A high priest, or elder, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon are assigned to each group, and in some instances more than one to a group.

The brethren thus appointed are expected to sustain the same relation in a pastoral way to the Saints of the group to which they are assigned they would sustain were they associated with the same Saints somewhere else in a branch; with the addition of course of the pastoral oversight, direction, and work of the presidency of the branch, which is also the presidency of the stake.

Furthermore, the high priest, or elder, assigned to the group, is here under the same and like injunction invoked by the Apostle Paul (Acts 20:28); he is an "overseer," directing the work of the brethren laboring with him, as wisdom may indicate, or consultation with them, or with the branch presidency, or with both, may determine; he in turn in his work being under the supervision of the branch presidency, as are all the men laboring in the branch.

Working the Plan

It is our ideal that these men, the elder, the priest, the teacher, and the deacon, shall come to perform among the Saints the specific and particular duties and all the duties by law and necessity imposed.

For the present we ask them to go two by two, the teams to be determined by qualifications of the men, condition of the families to be visited, etc., and in such manner to perform the house-to-house visiting by law required, it being our conviction that each officer named may visit the house of each member. During these visits the brethren are to unite in the exhortation, teaching, and encouragement thought to be necessary and prudent. And at the same time, or at other times, as occasion may require, or allow, they are expected to perform each the specific work of his particular appointment.

By this method of work the strong are helping to develop the weak; all the brethren are urged to have part in the work of visitation; the Saints are being accustomed to receive the brethren of every office; and the families are being visited. And by the experiences coming to them the brethren are qualifying for a better work of visiting, and for the other and necessary work of their various appointments.

The branch presidency, as already indicated, exercises an immediate supervision over the entire field, over each high priest or elder, and both an indirect and immediate supervision over each of the remaining men under appointment. Each of the ministry reports to the presidency monthly. Each family and each member thereof is recorded on a card provided for that purpose. Using the report cards of the ministry just referred to as the source of information, each visit and by whom made is recorded on the back of the same family card, also just mentioned. The report cards of the men are filed, so that activity and extent thereof, or the inactivity of anyone or any number of the men may be determined at a glance. In like manner, from the family card is determined the number of times and when each family has been visited. So is information always in hand to serve in the directing of the men, to assure labor among all and in each of the families.

The branch presidency meet often with the men laboring. They encourage them to endeavor by every means to qualify, that they may become efficient; to become worthy; and to be diligent. They gather from the several men ideas and ideals, and put them all at the disposal of each, that each may profit by the wisdom of all. In a word, the effort is to set every man to work in his calling, and to place at his disposal every available means for his development and efficient service.

So do the presidency seek to direct to the end that through the labors of the local forces the greatest good possible may flow to the people: By oversight; by system; by earnest endeavor to inspire every man to his best; by assignments which make possible effectual personal work in each home, and to each individual; by constant labor among the Saints on the part of all these men intrusted with the care of the flock of God, do we hope to come finally to perform so well the task assigned us as shepherds, that the Saints of Lamoni and Lamoni Stake may come to bear their full part, and to bear it cheerfully, in the preaching of the gospel and in the redemption of Zion.

The Results

In the matter of results we have in hand data gratifying indeed. Consulting our Lamoni Branch records, to be exact, we note:

During 1916, when the priests only were assigned to visit, and when they were left to their own initiative, and on their own resources, assisted by 3 elders, 14 priests made 286 visits.

During 1917, when still the priests alone were visiting, again assisted by 3 elders, 24 priests, this year persistently urged by the administrative officers, made 700 visits.

During 1918, under the group method, 9 high priests, 19 elders, 20 priests, 5 teachers, and 3 deacons made 586 visits.

During 1919, 6 high priests, 1 seventy, 13 elders, 22 priests, 6 teachers, and 2 deacons made 774 visits.

During 1920, 6 high priests, 11 elders, 22 priests, 11 teachers, and 7 deacons made 936 visits.

It should be explained that not all these men were under direct appointment. A considerable number, some of whom were so busily engaged in other church work as to make impracticable extensive visiting, responded occasionally to requests to visit, as did some who on account of age and infirmity are not required to visit.

It should also be observed that not all men appointed visited, some being idle for one reason, some for another.

And it should be said with reference to the year 1918, that the epidemic of Spanish influenza cut the men off from work the last three months of the year, months during which the brethren do the greater part of the work of the last half of the year.

These figures, when understood, reveal very much indeed: In 1916, undirected, 14 priests, assisted by 3 elders, made 286 visits.

In 1917, directed, and urged energetically, 24 priests, assisted by 3 elders, made 700 visits.

In 1918, directed, urged, and under the group plan, though handicapped by the epidemic as indicated, 56 men made 586 visits.

In 1919, under like conditions of organization, and under full time, 50 men made 774 visits.

In 1920, under the same circumstances, 57 men made 936 visits.

It might be asked, How is it that, in 1919, for instance, the first year offering a fair test, 50 men under the group plan made only 774 visits, while in 1917, without the group plan, it required only 27 men to make 700 visits?

In this connection it would perhaps suffice to say that for the years 1918 and 1919 the burden of the house-to-house visiting was still imposed on the priest.

We may say further, the deacon and teacher were not required to visit from house to house; they were only asked to visit as opportunity offered and other duties allowed. They were expected to give attention more particularly to other work of their calling, to visit now and then as at liberty.

Nor was the elder or high priest directed to visit the home of each member. He was of course to visit as occasion might require; and was encouraged to visit at other times when practicable. His first attention was to his general pastoral work. As seen from above figures, however, the elders did do some visiting.

Under this arrangement, as already observed, the greater part of the work of visiting during these years was done by the priests. In 1918, 315 of the 586 visits were made by the priests; in 1919, 451 of the 774.

At the beginning of the year 1920 we for the first time urged that all the men, regardless of office, push out in the work of house-to-house visiting, in teams of two, as heretofore recited. That the men other than priests have responded as well, perhaps, as could be expected, in consideration of other work, and being for the first time required to so labor, is evidenced by the fact that during this year 6 high priests made 94 visits, 11 elders 252, 11 teachers 179, 7 deacons 145, a total of 670 visits out of the 936 made, leaving the 22 priests laboring with only 266 visits, the smallest number of visits made by the priests since permanent records have been kept.

This slowing up of the priests may be accounted for from the fact that with high priests and elders in charge, and all men required to visit, the priests no longer felt the same weight of responsibility. These priests, with some weight of reason, awaited the initiation of the elders, some of whom did not initiate.

As has perhaps been observed by the reader, the time since 1917 has been a period of transition, a passing from one method to another, a formative period rather than one of immediate result getting. And we are still in that period, with ideas and ideals for our work and brethren we have not as yet set for. With all these things in mind, we have not rested our cause on the number of visits made, but rather on results deeper, and on developments being made for a future and a greater work.

Speaking of these latter results, we may say, for the first six months of 1921 we have under appointment 70 men. For the more part these men have a mind to work. We have thus out among our people as visiting officers ministers of each order and of every office. The Saints with few exceptions welcome them, of whatever order or office, and desire their ministry in their homes.

If we had in the past three years accomplished no more than this, we would have accomplished much. With this we might well have been content. We have, however, accomplished very much more.

We have seen developing in the minds of our brethren a vision of their possibilities as shepherds of the flock; and more inspiring still a vision of possibilities under their leadership for the people of God.

We have seen them qualifying, and in many instances so rapidly as to appear to be qualifying under miraculous power.

We have seen them doing the work in greater numbers, with a deeper devotion and with a greater efficiency.

Through the eye of faith, we see them in time to come doing not only all the things now engaging them, but many more; in fact, all the things they are called to do.

And, best of all, we have seen the people responding and unfolding under their efforts, in a manner that promises in time a full service, joyfully and enthusiastically given.

The Triumph

So may we come finally to that degree of perfection which shall enable us as the people of God to preach the gospel in all the world—in word, to be sure, but better still, out of lives of virtue, and with power divine, to the conviction of those who hear. And receiving our testimony in regard thereto, these new converts in ever-increasing numbers shall pour into Zion and her places of gathering, to join with us in making and equipping again and again new missionaries, to spread still farther abroad the precious words of salvation, the while we who are gathered and remain, broaden again and again the borders of our Zion, for refuge and for strength, till all have been warned, and Zion finally redeemed.

To this end do we under our group system in Lamoni labor. And surely God who has fired us with zeal for his cause, if we are not already there, will lead us to methods entirely approved of him. And so shall we organize and direct our forces for the fullest service possible.

And with these men of God will the people strike hands in a walk and conversation worthy our vocation, and in an activity in service which will carry the banners of our King Emmanuel to victory and triumph.

Group Work in Kansas City Stake

By J. A. Tanner, President

By the elimination of branches and the appointment of group supervisors, much better work in the way of supervision has been attained.

Group work has largely grown out of stake work. When the Kansas City Stake was organized, and operated under branch rule, I then started to work for a consolidation of branches into one whole organization. The reason for this was because under the branch rule the stake presidency could not get close enough to the people, having no agents or undershepherds through whom to approach them. All presidents being elected in the branches, hence they and the people felt they were practically independent workers. After the change, they were appointed and appointment ratified by the stake conferences. This made the connecting link between the presidency and the people.

To conduct the work and get the best results in development of the people, and also put to work a number of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, who hitherto were doing but little unless elected to some branch office, the group system was employed. We districted the city and placed an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon over each group so long as we had officers to use. Some of these groups have a membership of twenty to thirty, some as high as fifty, and one has a hundred and twenty-five. This group will be divided as soon as we can get officers to make the change. We place the officers according to the demands of the work and try to place efficient men where most needed, and the work is the most difficult to handle.

These groups meet each Wednesday night and sometimes an extra night in the week. As a rule prayer meeting is held, or if the group can get out some nonmembers to the service a preaching service is held, or they may have a problem meeting if the stake presidency or bishopric are present. Some groups have two nights a month for class work and are studying A Marvelous Work and a Wonder by Macgregor; others Book of Mormon normal; others have a lecture once a month on church history. All of this according to the ingenuity, tact, and foresight of the group leader. Some groups have a hard struggle the same as branches have had, because their group leaders are neither efficient nor inclined to make a success of their work.

One splendid feature of group work in a city is in keeping track of the membership. All changes in the group are reported monthly to the stake president. However, some group leaders fall down on this work, being indifferent to the changes made and failing to report such until the whereabouts of the party who moved is unknown.

The group increases the number in attendance at the Wednesday night services.

A comparison: When the services were held on Wednesday night in the church, thirty to forty was a fair attendance in warm or cold weather and but few more in normal weather. Now group one will have from eight to fifteen present. Group two from twelve to thirty; group three from twenty to sixty-five; group four from twelve to twenty; group five from fifteen to twenty-five.

All of these groups are of one church, we having thirty-two groups in the stake. The group meetings go from one place to the other throughout the group, and people who may not attend one night because of inconvenience may attend the next. This way in a month many attend services midweek who would not come near the church.

In all of these groups the bishopric is represented by a deacon, or collector where there is no deacon, and in this way many more people are helping to keep up local expenses.

Tithe payers have increased in numbers, also in quantity of money given, the last year exceeding any previous year in the stake. Much more might be said in favor of the group work, but this will give you an idea of what is being done.

Group Work in Holden Stake

By D. J. Krahl, President

The priesthood who have tried the new plan are unanimous in approving the new method of doing church work.

With reference to group work, we are still having experiences, endeavoring to work out some of the difficulties which we have met.

Throughout the stake we have advocated the dividing of the branches into groups, as the condition of the branch and ministerial working force at our service would justify. In our work along this line in the Holden Branch we have divided the branch into seven groups, four in town and three in the country. These groups are officered by an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, who are supposed to give their attention to the Saints living within the group, according to the calling of each officer. It has been necessary for us at times, on account of the insufficient number of active workers, to place a teacher or deacon with two groups. In each group we have a social worker from the Women's Department and special workers from the Religio and Sunday School Departments.

We have held prayer meetings in the groups with fair success. People have taken part in the group service who have not taken part in the regular prayer meetings at the church. It was thought best by the officers of the groups to dispense for a time with the group prayer meetings, but we expect to commence again.

At a meeting of our priesthood a short time ago, we asked for an expression along the lines of group work, and the priesthood were nearly unanimous in their opinion that it was the best plan for work under which they had ever labored. Those who had been with the branch here for years stated that in two months we have had more visiting done than heretofore in two years. We desire to have the group more perfectly organized, feeling that in this way there will be greater activity among the Saints, and more will receive of the benefits of the church. The branch here, we feel safe in saying, would not return to the old system, yet we have two or three who prefer to move along the old lines but have not been able to give any reason why.

The group plan is maintained at Atherton, and no branch organization was effected there. We have endeavored to divide the branches into groups whenever it was feasible. I am fully convinced that in the stakes we should have groups instead of branches, if we understand "branch" to mean what it has meant in the past history of the Reorganized Church.

I had hoped to be able to give you something which would have been satisfactory to myself along the lines of this work, but there are some matters we are trying out, and I feel that within a year we will know a little more about group work than we do at the present time from real test.

Group Work in Far West Stake

By R. S. Salyards, President

Now confined to Saint Joseph, but later to be extended to the entire stake, this letter explains a detailed system for compilation of valuable information.

1. Division of territory facilitates execution of work; divides responsibility; gives opportunity for development. Members more easily accessible; enables priesthood to get into closer touch, to get better understanding of conditions and personal needs of membership; opportunity to study what may be done to meet general demands and introduce new ideas or methods.

THE SEMINAR

The Present Status of the Gathering

By Max Carmichael

"Before gathering, every person should ask himself whether he be prepared." (This is the second of a series of articles on present-day church problems.)

What is the present status of the gathering movement? This question is of interest to us because its answer will help us solve what we should do about the gathering. We have noticed that the gathering movement is an evolutionary movement, to a certain extent world-wide in its movement, and to an extent very localized in its interest, especially as applied to our church and to the Jews. Just how does this movement stand?

The Gathering Is Now an Individual Affair

The gathering movement is carried on predominantly by individual initiative. Individuals are upon their own decision gathering into the "central place" and the "regions round about."

The decision of some is motivated by the most selfish purposes, at least apparently so, that of bettering their living conditions, the more easily to earn their living. It is impossible to determine what percentage of those gathering are chiefly actuated by this motive, but at least we know there are far too many. Many of these persons come in entirely ignorant of living conditions and the possibilities of earning a living.

Many, however, come in to better their social and religious natures. They feel a sentiment for Zion, feel that they will have more "church privileges," feel that they can live their religion better. This is a commendable motive, but would be better if combined with motives of service. Such people, whose predominant motive is the betterment of their religious natures, are apt to find severe disappointments. Their faith is apt to encounter severe trials, and is apt to be wrecked upon the rocks. Their spiritual condition is indeed poor and very fittingly needs the atmosphere of a religious community.

Many come in with the full purpose of aiding in the Zion project. They realize that the Zion project cannot be put into practice without cooperation of individual effort. They have decided to put their all at the service of the church. They realize that the problem of the church which it is trying to solve by the gathering movement is the attempt to give the church members full opportunity to adjust themselves to the world and its environment economically and religiously. Such people are those whose actions are motivated by the desire to find expression for their powers in helping others to find God. The movement of these people to Zion the church fully welcomes.

The Gathering as an Organized Movement

The gathering as an organized movement has not yet begun, at least to any great extent. By an organized movement it is meant that the church has taken the actual initiative in getting certain individuals or groups of individuals to come to Zion. In other words we have not gone much further in our administration of the gathering movement than to preach its necessity in time, and to contend that it is one of the fundamental doctrines of the church, and then to leave it to individual initiative to carry out this doctrine.

In rare instances the church authorities have taken the initiative in asking certain individuals to come to Zion. Such persons are those whom the church authorities feel will come to Zion for the lofty purpose of service. They are those who can be of material and definite help in church work. These people are those who have adjusted themselves to life, and possess powers to help out in the Zion project in its incipency. They are needed here to help those who are already here, and who are perhaps floundering around for a physical living and a spiritual existence. A special need has been found for the help of these so invited to gather, and their powers are especially adapted to help out in this need.

If a person thinks somewhat of moving to Zion, and asks the advice of the proper authorities, he will get an answer. He may get a variety of answers if he asks several people. For instance, the local missionary may advise one thing, a supervisory missionary may advise another, the Presiding Bishop another, and a stake bishop another. This fact in itself demonstrates that there is no unanimity of opinion, and that the church with unanimity has not a well-defined policy toward the actual gathering in of people at the present time. This fact also demonstrates that there should be well-defined persons who should be expected and empowered to express the policy of the church in each individual case. One should not be asking advice haphazardly.

No attempts to pick whole branches up bodily and transfer them to Zion has been attempted in the Reorganization, as was done to a small extent at least in the early organization of the latter-day dispensation. Such a thing may be somewhat under contemplation for the future, but it would not be until every member of the branch was fully prepared. What people, to be a shepherd over them, to be examples of earnestness and devotion; to look after the backward, poor, and afflicted, children needing oversight, and to note young people who give promise of developing into teachers, singers, etc.; to develop initiative, to be live heads, to be regular in every respect.

5. The deacons are to be assistants to the bishop, to collect funds, to administer as directed; to list up church property, care for it, etc.

6. Members to call upon group heads for administration, advice, etc., as feasible. Members to be visited every quarter—begin with every six months, work up to quarterly visits.

7. Groups permit men to put over things in good form. For instance: On a Sunday or a special meeting all can meet and consent to a given program of visiting, notification, or anything else. Special circulars can be issued—a secretary can be had in every group. Group contests could be arranged. Forms can be used for occasions to get attendance. All group workers to work to build up membership, also to bring in new blood. Members should be led to take up such studies as will qualify them to teach their neighbors intelligently the gospel; a place for the cultural, also; essential things first.

8. The head of the stake or branch to supervise, and to report to quarterly priesthood meetings of all groups just what has been done by men in groups—see blank inclosed.

Group workers may have their own monthly priesthood meetings.

9. In due time all stakes to be divided into groups, each to work on budget system and to raise its own portion of general budget.

All changes in membership to be made through office of president.

EDITORS' NOTE: In order to use in these columns, we reduced the size of the spaces in the cards. The cards themselves are about 4 by 6 inches.

pastor of an outside branch can say that any great part of his flock is ready?

The general policy of the church at the present time may be expressed in the terms that the "hastening time is here," and that now is the time to prepare for the gathering. That means a good deal different than the actual gathering. Before gathering, every person should ask himself whether he be prepared. Some of the late messages of the president of the church will give his idea so far as the immediate present is concerned, especially as to how far he thinks we are actually prepared for the gathering movement. So far the actual administration of the project is characterized more by holding down the actual gathering; especially in large numbers, and especially where the prospective immigrants are unprepared, and by advising against hasty action, than by positive encouragement. This does not mean that some are not encouraged to gather. They are. But many are not encouraged, which really is a sad thing to say. This means, then, that a great part of the people gathering in are not properly prepared, and will form a dangerous and deterring factor in the actual success of the Zion project, at least, in the minds of the administrators.

Reasons for Present Status

One would naturally inquire as to the reasons for the present status of the gathering movement.

The reason why organized branches are not picked up as a whole as yet, is because it is unusually hard to get a whole branch in the right condition. This naturally will be the last method resorted to. It means that the branch must have had unusual group development. It means that that branch must have been led by an unusual pastor for some time. Such a pastor must of necessity be an embryonic Enoch. Such a pastor would have to be fully cognizant of the actual needs of Zion and of the vocational and spiritual needs of both his flock and that of Zion. It means that if such a branch were settled in the same community in Zion, it of itself must have within its membership all the essential elements of spiritual and economic cooperation. Such a method of gathering would take a careful preparation ahead of time by the authorities in Zion for the proper assimilation of the members of that branch so gathered.

The administrative authorities of the church are taking the initiative in asking certain persons to move to Zion in only rare cases as yet, because first, it means quite an assumption of responsibility by these authorities, and second, it is hard to find persons who are suited to the particular needs now existing in the advancement of the Zion project. It is hard to find a person who can be of special benefit to Zion vocationally, and who at the same time is willing to do so. Such people are generally striving too hard to hoard up the things of this world to heed the call of the church to Zion. Yet this method is being gradually extended, and is one of the encouraging signs in the advancement of the gathering movement.

Several reasons may be assigned for the present status of the gathering movement and for the present attitude of the administrators. Too many people are coming in unprepared to take care of themselves economically. They do not become acquainted with the vocational opportunities before they come in. They come in trusting to luck to find a job. They are ignorant of the vocational and spiritual preparation that is necessary. They are unsympathetic with the church authorities in their attempt to advance the cause of Zion, and they are woefully ignorant of the factors necessary to make the Zion project a success.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Organizers

Many reports are coming into our office from our splendid force of district organizers. These indicate, almost universally, an awakening among the sisterhood of the church, and an eager desire to work together for the advancement of the cause of Christ on earth. They indicate, too, the need for local leaders, women who are both gifted by nature and qualified and trained through study for directing others. How it impresses us with the thought that we must all be forward-looking, helping the young people of to-day to plan for definite service later on! Would that we had a body of educated and trained leaders in the various departments and divisions of our work! Instead of making such apparently slow progress, the work of redeeming Zion would go forward by great strides. And it would help most mightily, too, if all those people who are not good leaders, could, as was remarked recently by one of our coworkers, see the value of being good followers. There is food for thought in that sentence, and material for a splendid sermon.

Some of our sisters have found it necessary to resign their positions as district organizers. In such instances this was not caused by any lack of interest in our work, nor because of discouragements encountered. Our organizers seem to rise above any such hindrances. Instead, it has been ill health, removal from district, or over-heavy burdens at home which have necessitated our sisters relinquishing their important labor in our department. In one case two districts were amalgamated. One dear sister in another locality, while keeping closely in touch with our work through study and faithful reading of the church literature, found her advanced years would not permit her to get about the district as she felt was necessary, and resigned in order that she might not stand in the way of some younger woman doing the work which was so sorely needed.

We regret to lose at any time the services of efficient helpers, but in the case of these organizers, we feel that "what has been our loss is another's gain," and their devotion to our cause will find expression in a wider local service, in the giving of which we wish them much joy and great success.

 Mrs. E. M. Walker, Jonesport, Maine.
 Mrs. A. T. Higdon, Durango, Colorado.
 Mrs. George Pringle, Tawas City, Michigan.
 Mrs. Susie Benbow, New Philadelphia, Ohio.
 Mrs. Anna Sanders, Calumet, Oklahoma.
 Mrs. Maude McCracken, Myrtle Point, Oregon.
 Mrs. Lena Shoemaker, Beardstown, Illinois.

Some New Appointments

London District, Canada, Mrs. Margaret Gray, 37 Elysian Street, Saint Thomas, Ontario.

Western Colorado, Mrs. N. E. Slick, Ridgeway, Colorado.
 Northwestern Kansas, Mrs. Lottie Dey, R. F. D., Alton, Kansas.

Central Michigan, Mrs. Mary Harder, Beaverton, Michigan.
 Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, Miss Louise Evans, 55 Barclay Avenue N. E., Grand Rapids, Michigan.
 Northeastern Missouri, Mrs. Roy Compton, Higbee, Missouri.

It is with pleasure we announce these appointments. We have been considerably encouraged by their willing and consecrated acceptance of the duties involved, and believe that it augurs well for the successful prosecution of our work in the districts concerned. Only thirteen districts in the entire church now remain to be supplied with such officers.

We bespeak for all our organizers that hearty support, sympathetic understanding, and willing cooperation without which little progress can be made. This cooperation should come from the brethren as well as the sisterhood of the church; and it is comforting to know that this desired support is coming to our aid, often in quarters, and to an extent, little dreamed of. One perfectly "live" and open-eyed district president wrote to our executive not long since, asking for information about the amount of money deemed necessary to be set aside for the use of an organizer in a district. He informed us that they were anxious to take our department into the budget-making for their district, and wished a little guidance or suggestion.

Numerous letters from various localities show that the spirit of good is working that the way may be opened up for active work by and for the mothers and children. One young branch president orders Yearbook, Oriole, and Temple Builders Manuals saying that he feels it is his duty to be informed about our department work, adding that he would like to have us send him any other literature which would help him to that end.

A very few of our organizers have not yet sent in their annual reports which were due February 1. We trust these may sense the necessity for doing so at an early date. It will save us the trouble of writing for the information desired. Those organizers who because of circumstances have been to a degree inactive should feel free to write of their difficulties, even if they feel they have little of real work to report. We may be able to help you to a solution of some of your problems.

What the "Other Fellows" Are Doing

We wish it were possible for us to pass on to the readers of this column some of the splendid letters we are receiving. They would indeed encourage and stimulate, and confirm in the opinion that there is a great force at work, howbeit quietly, to quicken the Saints of God. The sisters seem so anxious to do their part, to be valiant in service, and loyal and true hearted in their perception of what is required at their hands. It is a good token. It will bear a rich harvest, if those who represent our great women's work in the church will but be prayerful and energetic, studious and tactful, loving and humble.

Sister J. L. Mortimer, organizer for the Owen Sound District, writes of some Canadian activities which speak for themselves:

"The Manitowaning local, though composed of only five members and with an average attendance of from three to four, has achieved great success in a financial way. It was organized April 1, 1920, and since then has held three open nights and made $122.98. We do not do this for branch assistance. We gave $20 for the German relief fund, $55 for the auditorium fund, $10 for Christmas offering, $5 towards helping furnish the Women's Department general office, and several other small donations for missionary work. We had $22 on hand at end of year.

"We feel that we have made a good start for 1921, and believe that our success is due to the good spirit of harmony that prevails in our meetings.

"The Slash local reports a good attendance, and they are arranging for an open night and sale soon. They are studying home nursing. They were organized August 4, 1920.

"Providence Bay was organized November 8, 1920. They have a membership of fourteen, two being nonmembers. They report good attendance and are taking up sewing and aid. I expect to spend a little time there soon and hope to organize classes for study.

"The Owen Sound leader reports good work done and good attendance. Some who had lost interest are now taking up the work again, realizing it is a good thing. There is a great opportunity for work there, as they are located in a city. All the other locals with one exception are rural.

"The outlook for our work is good, but we need the budget system in order to get the work adequately before the people. Our aims are upward, and we trust, though sometimes discouraged, to finally have a fully organized and fully functioning district. Cooperation is needed before we reach the desired plane."

Sister Ida Snow, secretary for the Lincoln, Nebraska, local, writes encouragingly of the development of our work there. Sister Blanche Andrews is the leader, and the group is entering enthusiastically into various studies, as well as carrying on relief work of an approved and progressive nature. She writes of their "lifting some of the burdens from tired and careworn mothers." At the recent district conference a good program was given, consisting of papers, talks, and explanations of our work, Sisters Andrews, McWilliams, Scofield, Hawley, and McCarty taking part, as well as our traveling bishop, Brother Bullard. Sister Hawley's talk in regard to her experiences in connection with the probation work of the juvenile court was most interesting and very highly appreciated, and they hope to have her address them again.

Sister Vida Smith writes of the work she was permitted to do for and with the sisters of Ohio branches on the occasion of her recent visit to her daughter, Sister J. M. Davis. She met with the Columbus and Shawnee sisters, speaks of their devoted leaders, their studies, and their eager desire to get and stay in step with the organized womanhood of the church. Her description of one young sister, a leader of girls, is enthusiastic: "Very wide-awake, zealous, an excellent mixer, genial, tactful, and instant, a quality most commendable but not always linked up with these other desirable traits." Sister Smith sees a great work to be done, women who are eager but need help and direction, and everywhere a yearning desire to rise to higher grounds.

Sister Ruth Hendricks, of Sydney, New South Wales, who is our department representative for the whole mission of Australia, writes a splendid letter concerning conditions there. The women's work is being better understood and more appreciated. At their large conference, which was voted one of the best ever held, the women's meetings were well attended and much enjoyed. She says some excitement was created when their budget was presented and some spirited discussion ensued, but they were granted all they asked, which was an amount liberal enough to cover their anticipated expenditures for the year throughout the whole mission. The mission secretary, Brother Gammidge, and Bishop Lewis both spoke well for the sister's work, and a motion of appreciation and support for the Women's Department and for our representative there was passed. This is very encouraging to Sister Hendricks, and she gladly enters upon the task of improving the opportunities given.

She writes of some splendid material she has gathered as a starting point in the presentation of social purity work. Not all the material mentioned in our Yearbook is available there, but she has kept in touch with what her government offers. She recommends certain booklets very highly, in these words:

"I have some fine little booklets entitled, What Alyce Was Told at Six, What Alyce Learned at Nine, Alyce on the Threshold, and Alyce in the Country of Teens. They were written by a Miss Ina L. Austen. I attended some of her lectures and obtained the books. She is a university graduate from America. Her choice of language was beautiful indeed. We endeavored later to find her for some lectures but learned that she had left the country for New Zealand. These are really the sweetest and most exquisite little books, especially adapted for mothers. Of all the many I have read on this subject, as a mothers' perplexity series, these, written by a lady of exquisite taste and refinement, appeal to me most."

Our organizer in the Far West Stake, Sister Anna Sal-yards, is gradually getting her territory in shape, in spite of her extremely heavy local responsibilities. Much of the studying done by our women in classes in Saint Joseph is carried on under the Sunday school or Religio banners. A good class in civics there is under the instruction of a paid teacher. A class studying "Food and the body" is under the leadership of Sister Koehler, and meets for relief work at other times. Many other educational activities keep the branches on the upward path.

Sister V. B. Etzenhouser, organizer in Honolulu, writes hopefully. She appreciates the help of Sister Reeves, who is able to go with her husband into various places and organize the work. Sister Etzenhouser says: "The Honolulu local of the Women's Department has pledged one hundred dollars towards the conference auditorium. This district went over the top. When we see the enthusiasm manifested by the people here, Zion does not seem so far away. Conditions in the world are coming to such a pass that we must needs soon have a 'place of safety.' One hears the Japanese question discussed here a great deal. We are enjoying our work and are happy in the service."

From another far-away point comes a splendid, constructive letter telling of conditions, plans, and opportunities which are engaging the attention of our organizer in the South Sea Islands, Sister May Needham Elliot. Sister Ethel Hanson, missionary from the health department, and Sister Laura Karlstrom have been touring some of the important islands, and opened up work in places long unvisited. Sister Mary Almond, who has had considerable experience in cooking, is to teach the art in its simple forms to the sisters. She has already made a good start in interesting them in modern forms of good housekeeping. These leaders are hoping to be able some day to have the simple lessons which they must prepare in the native tongue, preserved in bound form for continued or future use. Sister Elliott, having had greater experience in working with the young people, has been doing quite a bit in that direction, teaching wholesome games to both the boys and girls, and guiding their recreation. Sister Hanson aids in this work by giving simple lessons in physiology and personal hygiene, and some calsthenic work, which all seem to enjoy. Sister Karlstrom is looking after the Oriole and Temple Builders propositions, but they find much of the work must be done with the girls all together, since there are few who know their exact ages, and the dividing lines are obscure.

Sister Merchant, or "Sister Fetia" as the native sisters call her, is a great favorite. She gives sewing lessons, instructing in the proper manner of dressing, and many other practical things. Some old superstitions are found to hinder ready acceptance of some of the instruction thought necessary.

Sister Elliott says the natives have no word for "home," and so the missionaries have coined the word homa, and are trying to explain it in such a way as to plant in their hearts some conception of the highest ideals we are taught to connect with the shrine of home. They are hoping some day to see a model home established on every island, furnished simply but with good taste, and one where the value of cleanliness, convenience, and order may be taught objectively. Who can but echo that desire and hope?

Sister Elliott wonders if some of the native sisters would do some of their handwork, embroidery, mats, etc., which work is curious as well as beautiful, and would send it to America to be sold at General Conference time, if we would not in this way help them to obtain the money so much needed in the prosecution of their work. We should like to assure the sisters there that we of America would gladly support any such effort they might make, recognizing as we do their consecration of purpose and (only partially as we can) the extreme handicaps under which they are laboring.

"This letter," Sister Elliott concludes, "would not be complete unless I mentioned the work done here by Sister Emma Christensen who is to leave on the same boat with this letter to America. She will be greatly missed among both natives and missionaries, and she has done a work educationally among the natives which has borne fruit. I, with others, feel that a very dear friend is leaving us as she goes, but we know that she will be useful in God's hands wherever she is, and there are other vineyards besides this."

"A political party is a body of men united for the purpose of promoting by their joint endeavors the national interest upon some particular principle on which they are all agreed"—Edmund Burke.

The framers of our Constitution were not believers in party government. The organization of political parties was voluntary. The fathers of our country gave no recognition to them and had an abhorrence of party divisions. Government by the people in the eighteenth century was an untried experiment. Class rule and special privilege had obtained a strong hold upon the rulers of that day.

In spite of this prejudice, parties developed, and a strong party organization must be maintained if the will of the voters is to be realized.

If one party has a policy that requires both Federal and State legislation, it must gain control in both governments in order to secure the success of its policy.

The executive and legislative divisions of our lawmaking powers must coordinate if there is to be effective legislation. So the party must work to secure control of both of these departments by nominating and electing officials having a fair degree of harmony. The Constitution does not provide for this. It is the party system that makes it necessary.

The American system of electing so many officials requires that the party be held responsible for the candidate it places in office. It is difficult for any individual to become sufficiently well acquainted with all the candidates to be able to judge as to their efficiency. It is the party's business to keep us informed on these lines, as we are compelled to depend more or less upon the judgment of the party for our choice of candidates.

We look to our party organizations to present political issues to the people. These issues are discussed in the newspapers; we are urged to discuss them in our clubs and in

Appreciative Words

"The Yearbook is superb, and our women's chapter here is stirred and inspired by it." F. L. G.

"Please accept my hearty thanks for your kind remembrance in the presentation of the Centennial Yearbook, with the compliments of your department. I have taken time to peruse many of its pages and assure you I believe it is an indication of the greater light that is bursting forth.

"When I see the splendid strides that the different departments are making it causes me to redouble my efforts, that I may do my part with a zeal and willing ability that shall receive the approbation of the Lord and all good people. We must all study to show ourselves approved along not only the line into which we have been particularly called, but all the different lines of church activities and then specialize to the fullest of our ability in the one in which we are supposed to spend the greater part of our time and talents."

our homes. They are enunciated in the party platforms, and later we elect officers to enact them into laws.

Parties are held responsible for the acts of their officials. If their candidates make good, the party gets the credit; if their candidates fail as officials, the party must assume the responsibility.

Despite the opposition of the founders of our Government to the party system, two parties developed even in the Constitutional Convention. One group was in favor of a strong central government and the other group was opposed. After Washington's administration the differences became more pronounced, and two strong parties, the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists, came into being. All through the life of our Nation we have had a supporting group and a non-supporting group; a majority party and a minority party; and it is with this machinery that the new voter must work in her efforts to help control the affairs of state.

Later in the history of our Nation the Anti-Federalists were replaced by the Jeffersonian Republicans, sometimes called Democratic-Republicans.

Then came the period of the Democrats and Whigs. Since the Civil War the two dominating parties have been the Democratic and the Republican.

The rational element, or element of principle, has not always entered into our party considerations. Other features, such as heredity, racial distinctions, geographical conditions, personality, and religion have entered into the fight on our national questions.

In the period from 1880 to 1920 only about one half of the presidential campaigns really expressed a difference in principle. In 1880 there was no clean-cut issue. The tariff was discussed, Hancock lost a number of his party admirers by saying that the tariff was primarily a local issue and could not enter into the national campaign. The tariff question is working to-day, very largely, as a local issue. The South is practically a Democrat stronghold and is supposed to accept tariff for revenue as a party principle. But Alabama is an iron-producing State, and it is to her interest to keep foreign iron out. Her congressmen stand with the northern Republicans for a high tariff on iron. Louisiana, North and South Carolina, and Florida have great lumber interests. Their representatives stand with the representatives from Oregon and Washington, asking for a high tariff on lumber for fear of competition from Canada.

The northern Republicans are not asking for a high tariff on sugar. But the southern Democrats, who produced large quantities of it, are in favor of its being protected by a tariff.

The grain belt farmers, both Democrats and Republicans, are urging Congress to put a tariff on farm products because Canada is shipping in wheat and Argentina is shipping in beef, thus reducing the price on these commodities by competition. But the eastern manufacturing districts, including both parties, are against it. Hence, we see that our fundamental principles, in politics, are very often lost sight of when they interfere with our commercial interests.

Is it not apparent that the tariff question should not be a party question—that it should be put into the hands of a nonpartisan board, thus giving opportunity for the development of a National tariff policy?

In 1884 tariff reform as against high tariff was an issue. The campaigns of 1888 and 1892 followed the same line.

In 1896 we had free silver against the gold standard, a distinct issue.

In 1900 the issue was somewhat mixed. The Democratic Party claimed that imperialism was the paramount question, and the Republican Party claimed it was free silver.

In 1904 Mr. Roosevelt and Judge Parker were the candidates, and they had no issue except the permanent one of the ins against the outs.

In 1908, when Mr. Bryan ran against Mr. Taft, the issue was obscure. Mr. Bryan discussed trust control, but it could not be considered fundamental.

The year 1912 gave us three great parties, but the Progressive Party and the Democratic Party both had progressive candidates, and once again there was no clean-cut difference of principle.

In 1916 the same thing happened. Mexico, the European War, preparedness, were all discussed but in an obscure way. Nobody had a distinct policy on any of these lines. So in these ten campaigns we find four have been fought on a basis of clean-cut difference of principle. The other six have been fought on questions involving hereditary or traditional lines, or on questions of human personality.

Many writers claim that fully 75 per cent of the people inherit both their religion and their politics. In any political campaign we feel positive that 75 per cent will vote the ticket. The battle is for the 25 per cent who are open to conviction.

Personal leadership counts for much. A president or governor must use much of his time in shaping national policies. Roosevelt talked much of "my policies." When Hughes was governor of New York, if the legislature failed to pass his favorite bills, he went out and campaigned among the people. When Wilson was a candidate for governor of New Jersey, he said, "Let there be no misunderstanding of the fact that I intend to be not merely an enforcer of the laws, but to have a share in the formulating of policies." James B. Blaine was a great leader of men. Cleveland had his followers. Thousands of men gave their votes not so much for the Democratic Party as for Bryan; not so much for the Republican or Progressive Party as for Teddy. Yet personality is not the only factor that enters in, for, as a Nation, we are opposed to one man power.

Third parties have played an important part in the history of our Nation by forcing counter-reformations in the dominant parties. In 1896 the Populist Party forced the old parties to discuss the currency question. The Democrats sponsored free silver, and the Republicans declared for the gold standard.

One of the most conspicuous things in the Progressive Party of 1912 was their advocacy of woman suffrage. Neither of the old parties had ever made it an issue.

The Temperance Party worked ceaselessly and for many years before prohibition became an established law.

Ambassador Bryce said that the people of New England would make a success of any kind of a constitution because of their fine standards and high ideals. Many of us have New England blood in our veins. Let us call to life their fine spirit and apply it to present-day legislative affairs. Let us use it freely in this never-ending battle against the spoilsman and the demagogue.

Active participation by all the people all the time is essential to civic righteousness. The cry of to-day is for a more active, more constant citizenry. Abraham Lincoln's idea was that "a man should be proud of the city in which he lives and so live that his city will be proud that he lives in it."

Discouraging times will come to all. At such times it is comforting to review the history of the world and note its development and the persistence of its inspired teachers and leaders. The Prophet Hosea suffered when he saw the corruptness of his national religion and the rottenness of society. He directed his attentions to the morals and the religion of his people. In Hosea 4: 1, 2 he characterizes the people of his time in this manner: "There is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing and committing adultery, they break out, and blood toucheth blood."

Isaiah, looking upon a devastated Israel, summoned them with this courageous call, "Arise, shine, for the light is come, and the glory of Jehovah is risen upon thee."

It is generally conceded that the beginning of the Christian era was the darkest period in human history. Paul was living at this time and battling for the right, telling them he had glad tidings that would save both Jew and Gentile if they would accept. Yet most of them clung to their ignorant homes, superstitious religion, vice, and cruel amusements.

From the time of Martin Luther the number of teachers and reformers materially increased, but there was never a time in the world's history when there were so many men and women working heartily and sincerely to make the world a decent, just, comfortable, and intelligent place to live in as at present.

The democracy of the present has for its background the richest thought of all the great prophets and teachers of the past. That is why it is more than a form of government; it is a spirit of life.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER II

Why Parents and Homes are Needed

I. The Meaning of Infancy

1. Give three ways in which the prolonged period of infancy is important.
2. What is meant by individuality? Do animals have individuality?
3. What gives a child individuality?
4. What is meant by the statement, "Infancy is the school of the soldier"?
5. What is your opinion of the ability of educated animals to reason?
6. State briefly the advantages of a prolonged infancy, to the child.

II. The Need for Parents

7. Contrast the development of a child cared for by its mother in the home with that of one cared for in an orphanage.
8. What else is necessary to adequate development in the child?

III. The Child and the Family

9. What developments in civilization were made in early times as a result of care for the personal comfort of the babe?
10. Explain how the family centers about the child.
11. How were "babies the builders of society"?
12. What had early religion to do with the home?

IV. The Scriptural Family

13. How strongly was the relation of child to parent considered by the Jews?
14. What were the parental duties of the Hebrews?
15. How did Christ emphasize childhood?

Much is being said to-day concerning the recent effort by certain interests on behalf of the so-called open shop. As is clearly pointed out, it is really a closed shop against union labor. The churches in general have taken a decided position. The Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Council and the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches have put out strong protest against what they consider an attempt to put the labor unions out of business.

A recent item states that while about one fourth of humanity are Chinese, to-day only about six men in a hundred, and one woman in a thousand can even read. This gives us reason to pause before we can glorify ourselves over human progress.

Some twenty States are joining in a suit before the Supreme Court of the United States on the question of States' rights concerning railroad rates, and the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate the interstate rates. The constitutionality of the present act of the railroad is also called in question as being "not only economically unsound, but violating of fundamental law."

LETTERS

The A. O. Y. P. Z.

By G. R. Wells

"I appeal to the young people of the adjoining stakes and districts to study the vitality that is in this new movement in Zion and catch the spirit of it."

What these five letters stand for might not ever have been known outside of Independence, Missouri, and many in that city would not have known of these young people's work had not something unusual happened during one week beginning January 30, 1921.

We happened to be at headquarters for a meeting of our Sunday school executive council when one of the best revivals of the church began, a full account of which has appeared in the church papers. After attending two nights I said it was one of the biggest things this church has experienced.

From now on, no one can have any doubt about the spirituality of the young Saints of Zion. It has been thought by some that because of the large city near by, with its allurements of worldly pleasures, the young people of Independence could not be as devoted and spiritual as those with an environment less tempting.

In this connection we are reminded of Paul's statement to the Ephesians, that notwithstanding they had "in time past walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of the flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; but God, . . . even when we were dead in sins hath quickened us together with Christ and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus . . . and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; . . . in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Ephesians 2: 1-22.)

From this it is seen that in the midst of worldly distractions it is possible to make any place heavenly. Heaven is primarily a state or condition of mind, secondarily a place. The Christlike life is not developed by withdrawing oneself from the world into monasteries, but by rising above worldly environment by self-mastery, creating a newer and better environment. Every clean heart and consecrated soul is the beginning of the new heaven upon earth—our Zion.

Going about my daily toil, the initials A. O. Y. P. Z. have played upon my lips over and over, until I know it stands for the "Amalgamated Organizations of Young People of Zion." The basis of that amalgamation was the organized classes of the Sunday school and Religio, thus forming a nucleus of about two hundred, to which have been added other organizations, and those not in organization, up to about one thousand five hundred. A very large majority of these do not seek the popular forms of worldly pleasures.

When I think of the A. O. Y. P. Z. I recall the Lord's word in the Doctrine and Covenants: Organize yourselves. Provide everything needful. This may have been spoken directly to the ministry and adult membership of the church, but it certainly does not imply that young people are denied the benefits and development possible through organization. There can be no doubt about this in the minds of the First Presidency and the pastors in Zion under whose administration this splendid organization of the young people has developed and conducted the most successful revival ever held in Independence.

I repeat: This big event would not have gladdened our hearts at this time had it not been for the potency of organization as first seen in the organized classes mentioned. Organized class work is team work. And that is characteristic of the times, both in and out of the church. Individualism has served its day. The group spirit is working.

The A. O. Y. P. Z. has passed through its early adolescent stage. During this magnificent exhibition of team work, it found itself. Its members now know the power of team work. They have great achievements ahead of them.

For one thing, they can apply the principle mentioned by President Elbert Smith the opening night after that vast audience had taken a pledge, and while they still stood (in token of their acceptance) Brother Smith turned to Elder Williams and said, "We propose to throw around you a ring of prayer so that you cannot fail." (And from all accounts, he did not fail.) The A. O. Y. P. Z. have it in their power to establish a new kind of environment for the young people who gather to Zion—throw around them such a strong circle of social purity, such a strong sentiment of right-doing, and such a strong spirit of service that they cannot fail.

Sometimes young people say they go into worldly pleasures because they have no society worth while in the circle of the church. We would now expect the A. O. Y. P. Z. to create and maintain a society worth while; a body that will exert a magnetic influence upon the minds and hearts of the weak and vacillating, holding them until they, too, become strong and stalwart Zion builders. We want young people to have all the fun and good times that their social natures need, recreation free from commercialism, and purged from sensualism.

And now my thoughts reach out from the center place where this new and better environment exists. I appeal to the young people of the adjoining stakes and districts to study the vitality that is in this new movement in Zion and catch the spirit of it. We want this influence that can triumph over worldly environment to reach out and out until it "leavens the whole lump." We want you, too, to establish a circle within which its workers cannot fail.

Already the spirit of the A. O. Y. P. Z. is radiating to other stakes and districts. Who can estimate the value it will have on the future of the church?

Are not the loyal young people of to-day the Zion builders of to-morrow?
G. R. WELLS.

A Comforting Experience

In these days of unemployment, the problem of providing for the necessities of life is a serious one for those who find their usual employment gone and nothing to take its place.

Naturally, those who are able to do a number of things skillfully and who are forehanded enough to have established a reputation among employers, are less apt to suffer, but even then, when large businesses close down without warning and offer no hope for the future, most anyone is apt to be caught between the upper and nether millstones of need.

The following experience was related by an Independence brother who had been employed in Kansas City in a factory which closed down just prior to Christmas. For days he had walked the streets, searching for employment, and in the meantime doing faithfully the tasks devolving on an elder among the Saints, visiting and cheering others, administering to the sick, etc.

But all the time his situation was becoming more and more precarious. His family must be provided for in some way, and he had been unable to do anything for them. He had done all he could, he was desperate.

Going out into the darkness of the night, he poured out his soul to God in prayer. He had prayed before, but this was the entreaty of one who must be heard. There was not only faith, but force in that supplication. Sometimes it requires a crisis to bring forth our deepest feelings, and this was a crisis. He plead with God to show him what to do and that soon. That night he had a dream, seemingly a spiritual dream, in which he found himself on a certain street in Kansas City. He seemed to be walking along with his dinner pail in his hand, seeking work as he had hitherto done, but with the same feeling of uncertainty. As he came to a certain corner, he did not know which way to go and hesitated. A voice told him to turn to the right and he would find a factory where he would be given work. Obeying, though not even aware there was a factory in that place, he soon found himself a part of a group of perhaps fifty waiting men, in a semicircle outside a factory gate, waiting for a certain door to open. He took his place in the group and waited.

Ere long a man came out on to the steps and looking over the men very carefully pointed to him and said: "Are you looking for work?" The brother answered with alacrity that he was, and was told to come in, and he alone from that whole group was given employment.

The morning following his dream, he told his wife he was going to work, and that she should put up his dinner. She wondered where it would be and how he knew, but he felt a little reticent, and preferred to leave her in doubt for the day.

He went to the city, found the street he had seen in the dream, came to the corner he had puzzled over, turned to the right, and found the group of men at the same factory.

He could hardly see how it were possible for him to have any chance in that kind of a situation, but he waited with the other anxious men till the door opened and the man came out. Exactly as in the dream, the employer looked over the men, singled out the one who had dreamed the dream, called him in, questioned him a moment, and gave him employment, at which he is still engaged.

Thus the Lord continues to manifest himself to those who trust in him.

Trouble Brewing in Palestine

Things are moving along a little better. Attendance at our English school is increasing, and several that attend it are attending some of the Sunday services. I expect F. M. and T. W. Williams about February 18.

The Arabs have delivered an ultimatum to Sir Herbert Samuel, High Commissioner of Palestine, asking that he resign. They announced a parade for this week, intending to carry banners with signs that would advertise their protests against the government. The government posted bills which stated that this parade would not be permitted, so we are expecting trouble daily. Eighteen criminals escaped from the jail this week. Rumor has it that they were assisted by the Arab attendants. This has caused considerable feeling, and will probably result in the dismissal of all Arab attendants. The former rains have passed and the weather is beautiful. The valleys and mountains are now green and will remain so for about another two months.

An Expression of Love to Charles Derry

The following resolution was passed by the conference of the Little Sioux District, at Woodbine, Iowa, February 12, 1921:

"To Our Beloved Patriarch and Brother, Charles Derry: Your communication containing and expressing your noble desires and behests for the welfare of God's children, engaged with you in the Master's cause, was received with appreciative and thankful hearts by all members of the conference assembled; and by unanimous voice of the assembly the same was made a part of the conference records.

"We assure you we cherish in memory your long and faithful service in the Master's cause, your unwavering and devoted love for the children of God, for the uplift and betterment of mankind.

"As a father in Israel, through your ministrations, blessings of a heavenly nature have been bestowed upon many; and it is with gratitude in our hearts we convey to you the love and good will of the Saints assembled. Praying that the God of heaven, who has so tenderly watched over you through all your life long, may continue his grace unto you, and that he may give you strength to continue faithful to the end; and at last he will receive you unto himself in peace, that you may rest from your labors, and meet with those of the faithful who have gone on before; and that God will bless your faithful daughter and give her strength to continue her faithful devotion for you, we present to you these greetings.

"Such true and loving service will indeed merit the blessings and favors of an all wise God. Thus in this feeble acknowledgment we trust there may be conveyed to you the true spirit of brotherly love expressive of God's children for your welfare and the blessings of Almighty God."

Good Report From Toronto

Dear Brother Smith: All our departments, Sunday school, Religio, Women's, music, and publicity, are working on the coordination plan, and all, including branch, have adopted the budget system. The Boy Scouts have developed from six to forty in membership. Temple Builders and Oriole Girls are in evidence. A Latter Day Saint literati has been organized which we expect will be troubling your church publications. This morning we called our stenographers together, and to-night we will organize them so as to have two at every meeting, that is prayer and preaching services. Our group system is working splendidly. Six groups. Group prayer meetings are the order, and we will soon introduce preaching. A splendid record of group activities is being kept.

On the whole I can truthfully say that I have never seen the Toronto Branch in a better condition than it is to-day and still progressing. Our prayer meetings have just doubled in attendance. Sunday school and Religio are forming more classes, and the Women's Department has more than trebled its attendance. We have real live wires at the heads of departments.

Last Sunday morning fifteen were called to the priesthood. Ten accepted and were ordained last Wednesday evening. Five have asked for time. Rather a peculiar incident attended this call. Sister Robert Whitehead was at home suffering from headache. While standing by the stove, her head bent in prayer, a bright light flashed before her vision, and in panoramic view every man that was called (fifteen) passed before her. On the return of her husband and children from the meeting she told them of the call before they had a chance to speak. Russell, her son, was called to the office of priest. We feel to thank God for this addition to our staff. Toronto must add to the missionary arm (a phase of our objective). The call came through Brother J. R. Grice, confirmed by G. E. Harrington and also many personal testimonies from the Saints.

I am glad for the onward progress of the work everywhere. Toronto's face is Zionward. Remember us in your prayers.

Yours for progress,

M. J. CROWLEY.

Help It Grow

Now that your 1920 Christmas offering has been sent in to the Bishop, it is important that the treasurer of each school obtain and place in the Sunday school file the receipt which was sent promptly from this office to the sender of the offering so that this account may be properly audited.

It will be several weeks before the Blue Stepping Stones is published, and it is best to get these money matters all straightened out while it is fresh in memory. All discrepancies should be adjusted now.

We wish to thank each one for their generous response to the call of Nineteen Twenty.

A Busy Year's Work in Australia

The First Presidency: As this is the last month of 1920, I expect it will be well that I give a brief review of my work during the past twelve months.

For the first three months I was president of the Perth Branch, West Australia (by special permission), and at the same time was actively engaged in missionary work. From April to October I was engaged on my missionary labors alone. During this time I was absent from my field three weeks to attend a conference and place before Apostles Rushton and Hanson a number of matters of vital importance to the Perth Branch and also my mission work.

In October I was transferred to this state (Queensland) as group supervisor and arrived here early in November. From August to the end of November I was in a bad condition with my nerves, and although I was ordered four to six weeks' complete rest, I battled on and have pulled through. For a number of reasons I have been unable to attend our mission conference, and as Christmas and New Year is a bad time for missionary work, I am at present spending a fortnight in the country to recuperate and start the year afresh.

During the twelve months I have distributed over 3,000 tracts and church papers; made thousands of house-to-house visits; preached on the streets, in new openings and branches; held four special series of services and lectures on the "Restoration"; written regularly for our mission paper; given lectures to the priesthood of several branches on certain chosen subjects as "Homiletics," "Priesthood," etc.; and labored without friction in cooperation with all branch and district authorities. I have also done much research work upon the history of ancient Israel, early Christianity, and the church in our days; and completed a large work I am forwarding to the HERALD soon, on the "Unity of God."

Prospects for the coming year are good. My companion in the mission field is Elder W. J. Vaughan, and we have already planned extensive and concentrated operations in Queensland, in cooperation with the branch and district authorities.

I can report no baptisms personally during the past twelve months. This matter I feel keenly, and if the church feels that I am unprofitable I am ready to stand down and engage in local work and let another take my place. I have tried to do my best, but ill health and other adverse conditions have hindered.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous new year in the Master's service, and looking forward to the speedy and full redemption of Zion,

Yours in the Master's service,

HERMAN PEISKER.

Debate at Flint, Michigan

Beginning March 7 and continuing for twelve nights, a debate will be held in Flint, Michigan. The Reorganized Church will be represented by Apostle J. F. Curtis, and the Church of Christ (Disciples) by J. W. Chism, of Hillsboro, Texas.

The Harold L. Buck Garage has been rented for the event and it is expected that it will be filled to capacity every night. There are seating accommodations for about one thousand. The debaters will cover the usual church propositions. It is requested that anyone contemplating attending the debate from out of town, make their own arrangements for accommodations as the employment conditions have made it impossible for the people here to care for visitors.

A. H. DuROSE, Correspondent.

Third Flint, Michigan, Branch

"If you are warned, warn your neighbor," seems to be the object of every officer and member of our little branch. They are going out in the highways and byways and bidding them in to the marriage feast. They hold two cottage prayer meetings and two cottage preaching services each week besides the regular services at the church.

Although many have moved away during the slump in work, we still have a full house for our Sunday school hour. We have from seventy to eighty-five each Sunday, and if we had more room we would have a much larger attendance.

I believe our successes are due to the fact that the priesthood work in almost perfect harmony. "If ye are not one, ye are not mine."

Agricultural Items

Compiled by C. E. Irwin, chairman of the agricultural commission.

To Test Cooperative Production

The Montana Wool Growers Association will manufacture one thousand pure wool blankets and market them in the State of Montana as a test of the advisability of having the association embark in the business of manufacturing woolen products.

Cooperative Marketing

The most notable event of interest to farmers throughout the country is the appointment, by President Howard of the American Farm Bureau Federation, of a committee of fifteen to devise a program for the marketing of live stock. The committee of seventeen which was appointed several months ago to draft a grain-marketing program presented its final report on February 14, 1921, at a meeting in Kansas City.

Mutual Insurance

There are almost 2,000 farmers' mutual fire insurance companies in the United States. They carry a total risk of $6,000,000,000 at an average cost of 25 cents per $100 per year. Why not some Latter Day Saint organizations along this line?

Rural Credits

The Farm Mortgage Bankers Association has launched an attack upon the Federal Farm Loan Association and the joint stock land banks. What are the opinions of Latter Day Saint farmers in regard to the functions performed by these agencies? Your reactions ought to be valuable in suggesting certain fundamental features to be incorporated into our church rural credit program.

The Farmer and Politics

Whatever else may be said about farmers' organizations, this much is certainly true, that there is an increasing disposition on the part of legislators to have regard for the rights of the American farmer as he speaks in his organized capacity.

The limits to which he may use that power suggest other food for thought.

Cotton Growers Organize

Cotton growers of the Mississippi delta district have organized and will sell cotton on the plan followed by the California fruit growers.

National Recognition for Graceland

President George N. Briggs attended the annual convention of the American Association of Junior Colleges in Chicago last week and presented the claims of Graceland for national recognition.

It was found that her standards, the education and experience of her faculty, her laboratory and library facilities, her material equipment in the way of buildings, grounds, etc., met all the requirements of the American Association, and as a result Graceland is now fully accredited by that association.

This gives Graceland the very highest recognition possible to attain in this country. She is now fully standardized and officially accredited by the following:

1. The Intercollegiate Standing Committee of Iowa.
2. The North Central Association of Colleges.
3. The American Association of Junior Colleges.

Iowa also recognizes her graduates by granting them a State teacher's certificate if they expect to enter the teaching profession in Iowa or any other State in the Union.

With her new buildings ready for occupancy next year, thus giving her added class rooms and laboratory and library facilities as well as much needed dormitory facilities, Graceland will offer for next year the following courses:

- Liberal Arts.
- Teacher's Course.
- Secretarial Course.
- Public Speaking Course.
- Commerce Course.
- Pre-Medical Course.
- Pre-Engineering Course.
- Pre-Law Course.
- Pre-Dental Course.

These courses will all be fully accredited for advance work along the various lines of study if students contemplate continuing their liberal arts or professional courses.

WEST DULUTH, MINNESOTA, February 7, 1921.

Editors Herald: We had excellent attendance and interest at yesterday's meetings. Brother Kress has maintained a fine interest since my previous visit in nightly services for the past six weeks, and purposes keeping them up in different parts of the city, especially West Duluth, for four weeks more.

I confirmed two fine new members yesterday, and blessed four children. The Spirit was poured out and the Saints rejoiced. Wish I could stay and help out more.

Had four services yesterday, including Sunday school and teachers' meeting. I preach again to-night, and Tuesday. Wednesday I go to Fargo, and Thursday to Minot. It is exhilarating to be fully employed where the people are hungering for the gospel.

Yours in the gospel,

WILLIAM SPARLING.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, February 16, 1921.

Editors Herald: The district conference and Sunday school convention for the Central Oklahoma District convened here last Saturday and Sunday. The attendance at these meetings was good. However the northern part of the district was not very well represented. At the Sunday school convention a standard of excellence in accord with the outline sent out by the general Sunday school officers was adopted. Annual election of officers resulted as follows: R. E. Miller, superintendent; Guy Buell, assistant superintendent; Pearl Hixon,

Reunion Notices

Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 12 to 21.

New York and Philadelphia District: The Saints of this district will rejoice to learn of the anticipated plans for a reunion to be held at Deer Park, New Hope, Pennsylvania, commencing the first week in July. The reunion grounds have been purchased and steps are being taken at once to administer to the comfort of the Saints. Other announcements will follow as plans are perfected. A detailed description of this historical property is in preparation for the columns of the HERALD and it is further proposed to issue a special bulletin to all Saints of this district, which will be mailed shortly. If you have changed your address recently kindly advise your home branch in order that you will not miss this important announcement. Albert N. Desires Addresses of Members in Quebec

Having come to the province of Quebec I am desirous of learning if there are any of our church members within this province who would wish to have an elder visit them that he might, if possible, open up the work in their vicinity.

If there are none who are located within the province but have the addresses of those who you believe would welcome the glad tidings, I will appreciate it very much if you will supply me with the same that I may make an effort to have their wants cared for.

Those wishing to write me will please do so at Quebec City, Quebec Province, Canada, general delivery.

I will appreciate as early a correspondence as possible.

Respectfully your colaborer for Christ.

R. C. RUSSELL.

Convention Minutes

CHATHAM.—Sunday School Department met February 5 to transact business. Reports show 16 schools in district. Motion prevailed to have mass conventions in future. Officers elected: Superintendent, Duncan Clatworthy, of Chatham; first assistant, R. H. Jones, of Chatham; second assistant, W. R. Leverton, of Bothwell; secretary, Lena Tedford, of Blenheim; treasurer, J. V. Dent, of Bothwell. G. O. Coburn, of Blenheim, was sustained as musical director. Adjourned to meet with conference at Chatham in September. Lena Tedford, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

PARKER.—Almanza Lee Parker was born on September 6, 1856, at Cameron, Illinois. Died February 7, 1921. Came to Iowa when 12 years of age, making this his home until his death. Married Minerva Lyon in 1883. Baptized September 19, 1909. A faithful worker and believer.

RAY.—William N. Ray was born in Faversham, England, July 10, 1838. Married Miss Emily Knight, December 15, 1861. They had no children, but raised an adopted daughter, Nellie, who has gone to the paradise of God. Joined the Utah church in England. Emigrated to Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1866. Became disgusted with conditions there, and left there for Iowa. Baptized into the Reorganized Church, and soon after he was ordained an elder. President of the Des Moines Branch for a number of years. Came to Lamoni in 1895. Died February 17, 1921. Leaves widow, one sister, and many friends to mourn. Funeral sermon by J. S. Roth, assisted by Eli Hayer.

HOWLETT.—Elmira Adele Gady Howlett, wife of Frederick Howlett, was born February 3, 1881, near Marston, Rock Island County, Illinois. Here she spent 11 years of her life; moving to Millersburg and losing her mother; she was left with the care of the family at an early age, serving those most dear to her as long as necessity required. United in marriage to Frederick Howlett, on December 24, 1916. To this union 3 children were born: Frederick, age 3 years; Wendall, who died at birth; Edith Esther, age three weeks. Departed this life February 1, 1921, after suffering from pneumonia for nearly three weeks. Baptized June 25, 1898, by J. M. Terry. Leaves to mourn, husband, 2 children, one sister, Mrs. J. L. Scranton; 2 brothers, Harlan R., and John L. Gady. Kept unbroken her covenant with Christ, serving him faithfully and with marked sincerity in words, music, and deeds. Her sympathy and love were with the young in her church work; her efforts were largely with them, striving earnestly by example and precept to teach them the beauty of righteousness and service to others. Mira has gone, but her deeds and words will live in the hearts and minds of all who knew her. Funeral service at Millersburg, February 3; Amos Berve, of Davenport, in charge, assisted by C. E. Holmes, of Buffalo Prairie.

Advertising is issued concerning an "Auditorium Orchestra Benefit Concert," under the auspices of the Independence Chamber of Commerce, at Independence, Missouri. It will be held at the Junior High School Auditorium, on the evening of March 3, under the direction of R. T. Cooper. The orchestra is composed of thirty pieces and is the nucleus of a proposed aggregation of one hundred pieces, to have as its chief field of operations the proposed new auditorium at Independence.

One of the members of the Chelsea group in Kansas City, Kansas, writes that Elder Ammon White recently concluded a series of thirty-six meetings with much resulting uplift.

secretary; Pearl Greenwood, treasurer and superintendent of the normal department.

A Sunday school round table was conducted. The coordination plan was discussed at length.

The district conference met Saturday afternoon. Reports showing a healthy growth in this district were received from both President J. G. Smith and the secretary.

The Women's Department conducted a very interesting meeting. A program was rendered consisting of readings, a solo, a talk on education, a cradle roll lecture, and a duet. Preaching by Brother Fitzwater, Harvey Syckle, and W. E. Shakespeare. The Sunday school exercises were featured by an interesting talk by our Lamanite priest, Brother John Koshiway, of the Red Rock Branch.

BRANCH REPORTER.

DAVILLA, TEXAS, February 16, 1921.

Editors Herald: I have read with interest the progress of the work of God at home and abroad. By reading the SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Stepping Stones, I keep in touch with the Saints, though I am far from them.

I have tried to say a word here and there to others, as I have had opportunity, on the fullness of the gospel, but when one has been taught for a lifetime a certain way, it takes much determination to change one's ideas.

I asked my husband if he would use his influence to get a place for an elder to preach, and he said he was anxious to hear one of our people preach, so if any one could come, he would be glad.

I have four little boys of whom three at least I believe would obey, also my husband, if once convinced we had the gospel.

The Christian folks chose him as an elder, although he never wanted to act in that capacity. He is also superintendent of the Sunday school, and I teach the men and women's Bible class.

We live about fourteen miles from Bartlett, Texas, a railroad town. If anyone can come, he could let us know.

MRS. MIRTIE B. KEITH.

LONDON, ENGLAND, February 18, 1921.

First Presidency: I was the first of our party to behold, from the high decks of the S. S. Imperator, President Frederick M. Smith watching for my eye. He saw me first. It was a joy to behold him. We were carefully escorted to the mission headquarters, where we were treated to turkey dinner and exquisite fellowship.

I have been assigned to the Sheffield District, and after a brief visit with my mother and near relatives in Wales I proceed to my field.

I have received a number of assurances of the divinity of my appointment to this field, and I go forward with more determination than ever to live fully for the work.

My monthly report is inclosed, which is poor because of preparations to make the trip here.

Yours very sincerely, JAMES E. BISHOP.

SAINT LEONARD'S, AMHURST PARK,
LONDON N. 16, ENGLAND.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, February 20, 1921.

Editors Herald: It is quite a while since I wrote a letter to the HERALD, possibly because I gain so much knowledge and strength from those Saints who write oftener. I have often wondered whether all those older in the church realize that it is we younger ones who eventually will have to carry this great gospel on to victory. It seems to me that, were those who are just beginning to see the importance of living up to this gospel, given some office to hold, such as chorister, organist, Sunday-school teacher, etc., they would take more interest in the work, and sense the importance of being there, as you might say, "on the job."

Maybe I am wrong, but to me there are too many people holding more offices than they can really take care of, and there are many waiting and willing to take part of the responsibility, and not given a chance.

We, as Saints of God, must not look for perfection in a brother or sister before we think they are capable of taking an active part in this great work. Did not Christ choose fishermen and humble and ignorant men for his disciples? Let us all strive to share this great work and work shoulder to shoulder, that finally all may feel that they, with God's help, have done their "bit" toward the redemption of Zion.

My prayers are that we may always be found willing and ready to move forward, and not try to discourage the young by finding fault, but rather encourage them that they may be strengthened to do the work that the Master has for them to do.

Some Help on the New Religio Problem

A new manual on Religio activities that will be welcomed by Religio workers everywhere.

In answer to the question so often raised in progressive Religios of to-day, "What can we do at our Religio?" a convenient manual has been provided. It is of convenient size and pleasing appearance, and its contents valuable to all who seek wholesome and worthy methods to provide social and recreational activities for the Saints.

This manual has been provided under the direction of Floyd M. McDowell, superintendent of the boys department of the Religio. He is in charge of a large class in social and recreational leadership at Graceland College.

Certain chapters are written by these students, who are mature men and women known to the church, but who are taking special work to better qualify for service. We note such names as H. A. Koehler, Roy Cheville, J. F. Lentell and wife, Bruce Brown and wife, H. E. Winegar, Elmer Burt, Mary E. Steele, Pearl Dawe, Herbert Voltmann, Eugene Closson, and A. E. Bullard.

There are suggestions for girls and boys, for outdoor and indoor games, for community programs, for study, for library building.

This is evidently a worthy predecessor of a larger and more complete manual which will eventually be necessary. But we cannot wait. We must do something now, and this helps us to decide what it shall be.

Our Constitutional Law

The status of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the First Presidency, etc.

"Resolved, That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this Church of Christ."—General Conference Resolution No. 215.

There is no mention in scripture anywhere concerning any instrument known as the constitution of the church. That is a term borrowed from the customs of men. Most societies and organizations, either political or fraternal, have a constitution. It is assumed then that certain divine laws may by comparison be considered the constitution of the church. And several of our writers have referred to the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as the "constitutional" or "organic" law of the church. We have no objection to the use of the term, provided it is borne in mind that it is not necessarily a scriptural term and is not used to imply some fixed and rigid canon of scriptures to which God can never add by way of revelation. And that is about what is attempted at times.

It is argued for instance by some that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is not a part of the constitutional or organic law of the church. David Whitmer took some such position. It is argued that at the time when the church was organized in 1830 few of the revelations had been given and none of them in print, therefore the Bible and Book of Mormon became the only constitutional law; hence, that the Book of Covenants is no part of it.

Our Constitution Grows by Revelation

How does this argument work out by comparison? Go back to the days of Christ and make a similar argument. If we may say that the church was organized April 6, 1830, when six members came together and two elders were selected, surely we may assume that the church was organized about the year 30 when Christ chose his twelve apostles. The New Testament was then nonexistent, no part of it even written, much less printed, until many years later. The Old Testament Scriptures were all they had, hence shall we say the old Mosaic covenant became the sole constitutional law of the Church of Jesus Christ? The argument is quite as good in one instance as in the other—and good for nothing in both.

As a matter of fact constitutional law is usually a matter of development. Man-made constitutions grow as truth is discovered. The constitution of Great Britain, for instance, has developed during many centuries and is still in process of development. The Constitution of the United States is still in course of modification—a most vital addition having recently been made in the provision for woman suffrage.

If we are to admit the figure of speech denoting constitutional law in the church, there is a somewhat similar development of our constitutional law as truth is revealed. Any other argument vitiates the doctrine of continued revelation, is purely human in conception, and quite in line with the age-long effort of "sectarians" to close the canon of scripture. That conception of continued revelation clears the fog away. The primitive church was not limited to the Mosaic law for her constitution; but God revealed her law to her as the organization developed and as seemed to him good, until apostasy having set in man withdrew from God. Nor was the church limited in 1830; God's revelation continued as the organization went on over a period of years, and still continues.

God's Word Is One Word

Get this thought, the Word of God is just as good and valid in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as it is in the Bible or Book of Mormon. It is just as good given in 1836 or in 1860 or in 1920 as though it was given in 1830 or in the year 30. You cannot vitiate a line of the Lord's revelations by tying your own string around it and marking it unconstitutional.

The Lord's Word is just as constitutional in one book as in another. But if there is any one book in the church that stands for that truly fundamental and exceedingly important Latter Day Saint doctrine, continued revelation, it is the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The other two books are closed; but it stands ready always to admit new revelations as God gives them and the church accepts them, hence no wonder it is the object of attack. Efforts to undermine confidence in continued revelation will not meet the approval of many Latter Day Saints. When they are through with that doctrine they can find as congenial and less taxing membership with the Methodists, Baptists, or Presbyterians.

Revelations received subsequent to 1830 are just as valid, vital, and binding as those received before that date. It may be good Methodist doctrine to attempt to close the canon of scripture at a man-selected date and say that all prior to that date is constitutional, all this side of it more or less negligible; but it is not good Latter Day Saint doctrine.

Who Closes Our Canon of Scripture?

The theological dogma that would close the canon of scripture with the last chapter of Moroni in the Book of Mormon is theologically twin brother to the dogma that would close it with the last chapter of Revelation—only it is born out of due season and into the wrong cradle. The Jew, who would close revelation with the last chapter of Malachi, or some other of the ancient prophets, has as good logic. Nor will it do to concede continued revelation but rob it of dignity, power, and validity equal to that of ancient revelation. God has not grown senile; nor is his bounty exhausted.

It is true that it is said that the "fullness of the gospel" is found in the Book of Mormon. We are not talking now about the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, all of which are found in the Bible and Book of Mormon. They will never be added to, as they are fundamental and complete. But there is very much of instruction in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, for instance, concerning rights and duties of church officers, from the deacon to the president, that is very much needed, and will not be by the church relegated to the scrap heap.

Why Such Haste to Bury the Book of Covenants?

In most instances, as with David Whitmer, and some later writers, the effort to sweep away the Book of Covenants with a gesture is but preliminary. With the latter-day revelations discredited or pushed out of the way it is easier to argue against the gathering, to contend that there is no provision for high priests or for a First Presidency, and so on and on back to the falling off place, where Whitmer, Gurley, Bays, Evans, et al fell off.

Of course a man may possibly make a case when he is allowed to select his own standards of evidence. But when the argument is among church members the standards of evidence have been specified by the church. They are the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. And worlds without end, when the three are heard these men have no case—hence the desire to eliminate one or more of the books. Whitmer eliminated one—or tried to. Evans and Bays tried to eliminate two of the standards—and they had as much right and logic as Whitmer and his successors have but no more.

It is argued, for instance, that in the Bible and Book of Mormon, provision is not clearly made for a First Presidency, and if the Book of Covenants be not considered constitutional, how easy the way seems. To facilitate the argument it is attempted further to discredit the Book of Covenants by trying to point out a conflict between its provisions for the prophet, seer, and revelator of the church to occupy with his counselors as the first presidency and Paul's statement in the Bible, "God has set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers." (1 Corinthians 12: 28.) Those so arguing go on to contend that apostles were to be first in both missionary and local work; and that the First Presidency is a human makeshift contrary to the constitutional law, and a dangerous departure from the faith.

This whole argument rests upon an extreme interpretation of one or two texts; but is considered sufficient to justify the repudiation of a great mass of revelation received by the church, just as "sectarians" out of deference to an extreme interpretation of one or two texts found in the closing verses of the book of Revelation reject all the counsel of God since the days of John.

How About "Apostles First"?

Certain questions immediately arise. First, was Paul professing to give an exact statement of the relative positions in authority of the offices mentioned, "First apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers." Did he mean, for instance, that teachers are third in authority in the church? Apostles, prophets, teachers? If so he is out of harmony with the Book of Mormon, which clearly names priests as superior to teachers. Moreover he is out of harmony with himself. Read his list as given in Ephesians 4: 11. In Corinthians he has teachers third; in Ephesians he has evangelists third. In Corinthians he has teachers third; in Ephesians he has them fifth.

We can only conclude that Paul did not attempt to give a rigid list of officers in the exact order of authority—at least he did not do so. And the Book of Covenants is not necessarily out of harmony with Paul when it names one of the prophets, the prophet, seer, and revelator of the church, as the First President, with his counselors constituting a First Presidency, while the Twelve constitute a second presidency. There is no disagreement, so far as we know, between the Presidency and Twelve at this time on that question.

The Presidency Apostles

But a further and more important question arises. Even if we were to concede that Paul gave an exact list, in order of precedence in authority, are all apostles included in the Quorum of Twelve? Evidently not. We believe that the president of the church is an apostle.

It is not necessary for a member of the Presidency to dwell long upon the argument that the president of the church is an apostle. The apostles themselves relieve us of the task. On that particular point the late William H. Kelley, for many years president of the Twelve, affirms positively that the president of the church is "the chief apostle and high priest." (See Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 52-55.)

While Gomer T. Griffiths, who succeeded William H. Kelley as president of the Quorum of Twelve, in a personal letter to the writer, says: "I have always taught that there were two quorums of apostles at the head of the church, namely, three and twelve, and these two quorums were the standing and traveling presidency of the church."

The late Heman C. Smith, for many years a very prominent member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, says:

"We have discussed this question regarding the apostle with only incidental reference to the prophet, because the prophet does not seem to be a specific office, but a man holding any other office may possess prophetic gifts. The First Presidency according to recent revelations are apostles. They are the chief or presiding apostles."—The Truth Defended, p. 73.

We rather like the title of Heman's book. We are prepared to say that J. W. Wight and Joseph R. Lambert, for many years members of the Twelve, and Gomer T. Griffiths, U. W. Greene, J. F. Curtis, M. A. McConley, J. A. Gillen, Paul M. Hanson, John W. Rushton, William Aylor, and R. C. Russell of the Quorum of Twelve as at present constituted have indorsed the position taken by Heman C. Smith in the foregoing quotation. Other members of the quorum have not yet been heard from, but we have no reason to believe they will differ from their brethren in this.

Joseph R. Lambert, for whose learning, judgment, logic, and probity the whole church has reverence, writes:

"I fully agree with the position you set forth by quotation from The Truth Defended. Brother Heman and I talked this matter over a good many years ago, and while we did not go quite so far as this quotation from his book does, yet we fully agreed upon the matter, and our views, expressed at that time, are now found to be in complete harmony with what our lamented brother has so briefly and clearly expressed. It is only necessary for me to say, that in my opinion, this is the only position that will stand the test when tried by what is written in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants."

John W. Rushton, secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, writes:

"I have said that the Presidency and the Twelve held inherently, by virtue of their call and ordination, the same 'priestly authority' which is essentially apostolic. And, that this apostolic authority was the highest authority known to the church of Christ. The seventies could be delegated to represent the apostolic quorum in emergency, and then they would exercise 'apostolic authority.' But in this case such authority was 'contingent' and not inherent. . . .

"I therefore am in spiritual agreement with the late Heman C. Smith for whose powers of analysis and exegesis I have always had the profoundest esteem; and at this time desire officially to express my obligations to him and his influence as a worthy minister of the church."

All should give a proper heed to the teachings of the apostles; and we imagine it to be especially incumbent upon those to do so who hold that the twelve apostles are the supreme spiritual authority in the church. They should not hang up hard and dry on a statement from the pen of the Apostle Paul and quite ignore or brand as "deceptive" statements on the same subject from the pens of Apostle Kelley, Apostle Griffiths, Apostle Rushton, and many others who apparently set forth a very commonly accepted idea.

Furthermore, you will note that the late Heman C. Smith says in this same connection: "If the church is to be according to the pattern of heavenly things there must be the quorum of three holding the chief authority on earth." (The Truth Defended, pp. 74, 75.)

Some who would do away with the Presidency have introduced Heman C. Smith as a witness. They cannot therefore gracefully reject his testimony when it is brought out as he intended it to be. They have introduced his book as evidence with the statement that, being published and sold by the church, it must represent the church. (But, strangely enough, they failed to quote his words.) Very well; then let these statements stand as representing the church. His emphatic statements that the members of the Presidency are apostles, the chief or presiding apostles, and that if the church is to be in harmony with the heavenly pattern there must be the quorum of three holding the chief authority on earth, ought to be good doctrine to those who introduced him as a star witness. Why should they wish the church to get out of harmony with the heavenly pattern? I marvel that they are so soon removed to another pattern!

Jesus as head of the church was an apostle (Hebrews 3:1). Yet he called twelve others, whom "also" he named apostles, "also" or in addition to himself. (Luke 6:13.)

In like manner, in the Restoration, Joseph Smith as the "first" elder was an "apostle" from the beginning of the organization. (Doctrine and Covenants 17:4; 19:1.) Oliver Cowdery as "second elder" was an "apostle" (Doctrine and Covenants 17:1; 19:3) yet these were not among the Twelve selected later.

That members of the Presidency are apostles is very clearly indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 122:14, as follows:

"For the same reasons in me that it is not expedient [at that time] to fill the quorums of the First Presidency and the Twelve, who are apostles and high priests. . . ."

Seventies, also, under certain specific conditions are, as stated by the Lord, "in the power of their ministration apostles." (Doctrine and Covenants 120:3.)

The "First" Quorums Apostolic in Spirit and Calling

The leading quorums are in the very spirit of their office and calling apostolic. The first and second presidency (the Presidency and Quorum of Twelve) are apostles inherently, and the seventies also may hold delegated apostolic authority on specified conditions. So it is not too much to say that in the church God has set "first apostles," and there is no real conflict in the books on that point.

Many other specious arguments are brought against the Presidency, of which the following is a fair sample: It is argued that John on Patmos saw a woman supposed to represent the church, having on her head a crown of twelve stars, supposed to represent the twelve apostles, and that if there were to be a presidency of three there should have been three particularly brilliant stars. As a matter of fact the First Presidency represents the head of the church on earth and is surrounded by the twelve apostles as counselors and associates. It may be alleged that Christ is the head of the church (as he is in the supreme sense); but not in the pictured analogy seen by John. The woman is the bride, the Lamb's wife. Jesus appears in the analogy, not as her head but as her husband, the bridegroom. The husband is the head of the wife in a legal sense—but she has a head of her own as well, and of necessity appeared so in the vision, rather than as a headless woman wearing a crown of twelve stars on her neck and waiting to meet Christ, her bridegroom.

The status of the Presidency is mentioned incidentally. Others are more or less similarly situated. The argument that would remove the Presidency and high priests, eventually would eliminate the seventy. There is not much in the Bible or Book of Mormon to show conclusively that they constitute a quorum or quorums. The argument may be and is made, that they were but a group of men sent by the Master on a mission, and happening to be seventy in number.

The duties, rights, and authority of seventies, evangelists, bishops, and high priests are not set forth very explicitly in the Bible and Book of Mormon. Indeed even concerning the twelve apostles the text is singularly meager. The language of Jesus to the twelve on the American Continent may not be in point, for it is by no means certain that their status was the same as that of the twelve apostles. We would not expect to find two fully organized churches on earth at once—else the beautiful symbol of the body of Christ would be destroyed. If the three to whom Jesus gave a special consideration in Jerusalem were a first presidency, as has been argued in the church from time immemorial, we would not expect to find another first presidency on the American Continent at that time nor would we expect to find another quorum of twelve apostles. It may or may not be significant that Jesus distinguished, and spoke always of the twelve selected in the Book of Mormon Church as his "disciples," while in the same connection he spoke of the "twelve apostles" in Jerusalem.

For some reason God did not choose to incorporate specific laws governing the rights, duties, and authority of the leading officers and quorums in the historic books and the gospels; but chose to set them forth in detail in revelations as they were needed by the church. Who shall deny his right, or depreciate the validity of his revelations when given?

No Real Conflict Among the Books

There is no real conflict between the revelations in the Book of Covenants and the other two books of the church. They can be harmonized unless one has a theory to protect which demands that one or the other be discarded. The idea of the First Presidency, high priests, the gathering, etc., runs through the revelations given through three successive prophets up to the present time. To repudiate those ideas requires the scrapping of all the revelations back to 1830, for bitter water and sweet water do not issue constantly from the same fountain. If the late President Joseph Smith, and Joseph the Martyr, and Frederick M. Smith are all found frequently giving false and unconstitutional revelations on these matters their work falls and we have had but false or fallen prophets, and can truly fellowship the world for that is what the world has told us for lo these many years.

The Three Measures of Meal

Joseph the Martyr adds his testimony, and compares the three books to three measures of meal in which is hidden the leaven of life. He wrote as follows:

"And another parable spake he unto them: The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened. It may be understood that the church of the Latter Day Saints has taken its rise from a little leaven that was put into three witnesses. Behold, how much this is like the parable: it is fast leavening the lump, and will soon leaven the whole.

"Then said he unto them, therefore every scribe which is instructed into the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is an householder; which bringeth forth out of his treasure things that are new and old.

"For the work of this example, see the Book of Mormon, coming forth out of the treasure of the heart; also the covenants given to the Latter Day Saints; also the translation of the Bible: thus bringing forth out of the heart, things new and old: thus answering to three measures of meal, undergoing the purifying touch by a revelation of Jesus Christ, and the ministering of angels, who have already commenced this work in the last days, which will answer to the leaven which leavened the whole lump. Amen.—Messenger and Advocate, December, 1835.

The Church Speaks on This Subject

We conclude that if we are to use the term constitutional law of the church at all, we shall use it as including the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In this we have the church back of us if there is any virtue at all in "common consent" and conference enactment. General Conference Resolution No. 215 says:

"Resolved: That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this Church of Christ."

Also note the following from General Conference Resolution No. 222:

"It is clear to us that it is destructive to the faith of the church, and inconsistent with the calling and dignity of the ministry, to decry, disclaim, preach or teach contrary to the revelations in said Book of Covenants, or to arraign them in such a way that the faith of the people of the church is weakened and they thereby distressed."

It is significant that General Conference Resolution No. 6, adopted as early as 1852, and appearing on the first page of book of Conference Resolutions contains the following very plain and emphatic statement: "That the whole law of the church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants."

It is evident that from 1852 until now the Reorganized Church has regarded the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as one of the three standard books containing the constitutional law of the church.

The three books contain the work of God. The church has indorsed all of them as standard books containing the law to govern the church, and specifically advised against insidious attack on the Doctrine and Covenants while the Lord says: "The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel: and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit."

If any man has a set of theories requiring the repudiation of the revelations, so much the worse for his theories. The word of God given to and adopted by the church is constitutional and is neither more nor less sacred because given prior to 1830 or to Nephite or Jew; but certain minds find it easier to receive ancient revelation, and if they can push inspiration back to a certain date accept it more readily.

In the light of the two great tests the Book of Covenants is equally binding on the church with the Book of Mormon and the Bible. First, the Lord gave the revelations in it; second, the church accepted and indorsed those revelations.

The Lord Speaks

In the closing part of section one, known as the preface, the Lord says:

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same; for behold, and lo, the Lord is God. and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7, 8.

The foregoing of course applied specifically to the revelations given up to that date; but it also very happily describes all of the revelations that the Lord has given from the very beginning of this work.

Testimony of the Twelve and Others

It is true that the Book of Mormon was attested by an angel, and by the Lord himself; but the book of Doctrine and Covenants is also attested by the Lord. The Book of Mormon was attested by eleven witnesses. Scores of witnesses testify to the divinity of the revelations contained in the Book of Covenants. See section 108 A, which is the record of the General Assembly, August 17, 1835, at which time the book was indorsed by the church. Particularly note the testimony borne by the Quorum of Twelve at that time:

"President W. W. Phelps then read the written testimony of the Twelve, as follows: 'The testimony of the witnesses to the book of the Lord's commandments, which he gave to his church through Joseph Smith, jr., who was appointed by the voice of the church for this purpose: We therefore feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind, to every creature upon the face of all the earth, and upon the islands of the sea, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for all men and are verily true. We give this testimony unto the world, the Lord being our helper; and it is through the grace of God, the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, that we are permitted to have this privilege of bearing this testimony unto the world, in the which we rejoice exceedingly, praying the Lord always that the children of men may be profited thereby.' Elder Leonard Rich bore record of the truth of the book and the council of the seventy accepted and acknowledged it as the doctrine and covenants of their faith, by a unanimous vote."

Those who argue that the Twelve are indeed the highest and final spiritual authority on earth should hear and heed the Twelve in this splendid pronouncement on the status of the Book of Covenants, and if the above powerful and noble tribute is heeded, perhaps the Presidency will not need to go into the discard; for the book thus indorsed says:

"The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed."—Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6.

"Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

"And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church."—

—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

Other sections say:

"For unto you (the Twelve), and those (the First Presidency), who are appointed with you, to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given, for the last days and for the last time, in the which is the dispensation of the fullness of times, which power you hold in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of the creation; for verily I say unto you, The keys of the dispensation which ye have received, have come down from the fathers; and last of all, being sent down from heaven unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 12.

"I give unto my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and prophet. I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and First Presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 39.

"The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time. It is the duty of the twelve to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof, as is directed in the scriptures which ye have received. They are called and set apart to this duty; and are to travel and preach, under the direction and counsel of the presidency."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2, 3.

Did the Lord speak in these revelations or did he not? The church has answered that question in the prescribed way. Who still has confidence in common consent? Let him heed.

Destructive Criticism One in Spirit Always

Destructive criticism of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants follows the exact lines of similar criticism leveled against the Bible and the Book of Mormon and is in spirit atheistic. Probably there are few, if any, objections urged against the Book of Covenants that are not similarly urged against the Bible or Book of Mormon, or both.

Are there passages in the Book of Covenants said to conflict with the Bible? The same charge is made against the Book of Mormon. Are there obscure passages in the Book of Covenants hard to explain? The same is true of the Bible or the Book of Mormon. Is it alleged that the human element enters into the revelations given to Joseph Smith, his son, Joseph Smith, and his grandson, Frederick M. Smith? Is that not equally true of revelations given through Alma, Nephi, Paul, John, and others whose writings are found in the Bible and Book of Mormon?

In fact aside from the small body of texts in the three books purporting to give the exact words of Jesus Christ, all revelations in all the books are versions that men give of their perception of God's will as revealed to them. If humanity may enter into one of these revelations, then into all. In fact one writer in the Book of Mormon explains that the imperfections in that book are due to human errors. Why, then, select the Book of Covenants alone for that criticism?

Is it alleged that changes have been made in the Book of Covenants? A similar charge is made against the Book of Mormon—one writer alleging that one thousand changes have been made, neglecting to state that the changes were corrections of errors and the effort always to get back nearer to originals. Is it alleged that not all the revelations given to Joseph Smith are in the Book of Covenants? What bearing has that on those that are included and indorsed? Have we all the Nephite records in the Book of Mormon? Are all the words of Jesus in the New Testament? Is it claimed that some very few of the sections in the Book of Covenants are not revelations? How about some of the sayings of Paul and certain of the chapters in Job, that are cheerfully given place in our "constitutional law"?

The same effort that some expend to discover conflict among the books would if more wisely directed discover underlying harmony. Truth is one. Revelation is continuous. The books stand or fall by the same test.

Who Paves the Way for Apostasy—and How?

Finally, brethren, heed this warning: the way for apostasy in latter days was first paved by the famous Brighamite dictum, "The books are not worth the ashes of a rye straw." Any theory that to-day requires the removal or discrediting of even one of the three standard books of the church is dangerous and is justly an object of suspicion. You know not what it may lead to.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants would have saved the church from apostasy and incredible folly, from shame, dishonor, and from years of agony had its teaching been heeded. But it was thrust aside. Shall we even lend the comfort of a pleasant countenance to similar attempts to-day? There can be no halfway stand here for Latter Day Saints. No man can be for Christ who is against his revelations.

Let no man who rejects the later revelations obscure that fact to your vision by fervid eulogy of the Book of Mormon—the rejection of one of the books leads logically, ultimately, to the rejection of another, and finally all. The church walked that path once. Wise men do not fall twice into the same snare.

Zion Builders

The young people of Lamoni have adopted for their services the name, "Services for Zion Builders," and will have a special one week's services, March 13 to 20. They hope to make the meetings thereafter mean much in their lives. The ages of those granted first admission is eleven to thirty-eight, inclusive. Invitations have been sent to all the neighboring branches. At the prayer service last Wednesday night, an invitation was extended to the young people of Independence.

The enthusiasm of the movement is indicated by a message from the young people of Independence, that they would meet Sacrament Sunday morning, at 8 a. m. and make the special topic of prayer the success of these meetings in Lamoni. They feel as we feel, and quite rightly, that all are interested in the success of this movement, wherever held, and hope that it goes abroad throughout the church.

Later messages inform us that special services will be held in Saint Louis, March 6 to 20 inclusive, with Elder Elmer E. Long as speaker; and doubtless E. C. Bell, for more than twenty years musical director in Saint Louis, and at one time general musical director for the church, in charge of the music.

The Philadelphia series will also begin on March 13, and continue over the 27th, with Elder Daniel T. Williams, of the Lamoni stake presidency as speaker, with no doubt Albert N. Hoxie, general director of music, in charge of that department.

But in both Independence and Lamoni, these services have differed from those previously held, in being first for the benefit of the young people of the church; second, being thoroughly organized, and preceded by a period of prayer for divine guidance; third, by a personal solicitation at every Latter Day Saint home within the city where there are young people; fourth, an extension of the invitation to the young people of the neighboring branches, not only by letter, but also by personal visit. The young people go in couples to other

Intelligent Work

By A. H. Christensen

"Absolute success is possible for every man, and none can thwart him, but it is duty well done—work—that brings it."

"Two men I honor, and no third. First, the toilworn Craftsman, that with earth-made implement laboriously conquers the Earth, and makes her Man's. A second man I honor, and still more highly; him who is seen toiling for the spirituality indispensable; not daily bread, but the bread of Life."—Thomas Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus."

Man should not think of work as a curse placed upon him because of the sin of one or two persons; but should think of it as one of the forces of nature which must be present to sustain life or to induce any new thing or condition.

Everything works, or at least there is some unseen thing called power which works in some way, more or less, through everything. Some have sought to define and locate this thing, power, in one place or another, or in a number of places; but too many have been content to leave the question just as they were about to discover its trail on to a common source.

Some argue that things fall toward the earth because the earth draws them, and that in the center of the earth is the center of gravity, thinking that there is found the lodestone to which all things within the radius of its power tend. Others say that not the center in particular, but the entire mass of the earth generates a drawing force in ratio to its mass.

This seems strange to one not taught in science, especially should he have before him a negative substance and observe it repel certain objects. I blow upon my soup (impolitely) to make it cool; the gentle zephyr cools the brow of the harvester that he may continue his work.

To discover the fact of the source of power in the one case and that a mind directs that power in the first case is a simple matter; and to say that the other is a spontaneous, undirected cause unassociated with mind is folly. I hold that all action is effect, and effect cannot exist without mind, be it far or near removed.

Furthermore, work must in every case have mind for its starting point. But work should in every case be right work; and no one has a right to do work which is not right.

What Is Necessary Work?

When God decreed that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his face (work), he intended that all should do their share of the necessary right work essential to insure the living of all men.

We must not form too narrow an idea of what is necessary work. It is necessary work to grow food, build houses, manufacture life's necessities, as well as to distribute them; but since we do not live by bread alone, it is necessary that some one should work in those other lines which do not touch the bread question at all. Public servants, from the policeman to the statesman, as well as the poet and painter, are necessary, workers.

But it does not follow that every worker has a right to work as his conscience may suggest, for some farmer might please to raise Johnson grass which is prohibited by law in some places; another might please to build a frame house within the fire limits of some city which might also be prohibited by law; another might please to manufacture rum in a country which has had its eyes opened and has made prohibitory laws.

Nor have writers a right to work night and day, should they please, in writing seditious and libelous articles for publication; or lawyers to spend their lives in creating strife rather than in settling it; or commercial men have the right to institute some commission business or any other business enterprise with a sole view to self-aggrandizement, unless that work is a necessary work for sustaining life or making it better.

On the other hand no mortal has the right to cease work, let his fortune be as great as it may. Inability is the only exception to this rule.

No amount of bargaining and shrewd trading can justify any man in shirking his part of the world's work. Too many business men and men desiring to attempt business, have the word success, as reflected by the balance sheet exclusively, too indelibly impressed on their minds. They imagine they have a right to form almost any business rules they choose in order to make the yearly statement encouraging.

A glance at the market quotations of some of the dailies will reveal a long list of suggestions to this class of workers (?), whereby they may by a wise investment and later sale increase their capital to that extent that they will be able to avoid work for, perhaps, the remainder of their lives. Investment in interest-bearing Government bonds seems little less than getting one's name on the list to whom the tax-paying public must pay taxes.

What Is Capital?

A young man may inherit a considerable sum of money. This he may invest in railroad stocks. Then he may be able to retire and live without work, at some seaside home. This we call capital. There is nothing wrong in this save that he is out of work; but should he continue in diligent right work, using his capital for the good of humanity, not for making their conditions more intolerable, I can see no great objection to his owning that capital. And if he should take me from the bench, for which I was not well fitted, and establish me, by the right use of that capital, in a work for which I was fitted, I should not care much whether he that had done so for me was an American, an Englishman, a company of men, or the church. I hold that the question of who owns the capital is irrelevant to the question of its proper use. One hundred million persons, each owning capital and using it properly, will function as well as a nation of one hundred million persons whose capital is owned collectively, and who use it properly.

Every man's stewardship is his work with respect to how he, by his energy, causes it to function rightly as a part of the world's work, and that independently of his relation to the balance sheet.

Do Your Work Well

Every man should do his work well! This should be the only rule of work. To adulterate foods, to lay a drain tile poorly, or to administer the office of governor poorly, are alike mischievous and reveal a mind behind the deed which is not right. We are not helping humanity forward when we do bad work. Every man is bound to learn to do his work well, be it ever so humble.

Some have esteemed machinery as a curse; but I believe that few men have done a better work than the inventor who has made it possible for man to perform the world's work which must be done to-day, that he may have more time tomorrow for the vast fields yet untouched.

Let us take the word ought, and make it the foundation stone of all our work, whether it be the business or the labor effort. Ought comes from owe. The thing I owe to God or society. This brings in the original question of right. One cannot owe himself anything. It must come from without. All you have is with you and is yours; so how could you owe yourself anything? Could a business owe itself? If so, what kind of an entry would the bookkeeper make of the fact?

Consider a case or two: I agree with my neighbor to do a certain piece of work or to return an implement upon a certain day; but before that day policy suggests that I either postpone the matter or fail entirely to keep the contract. This is not right. Nevertheless this is what is being done by small dealers throughout the United States because policy suggests that to cancel orders placed a few months ago at high prices and order again now at the cut prices will amount to a saving or profit. Astonishing shrewdness indeed; but not right.

Or, my neighbor agrees to pay me a certain sum on a certain date. When that date arrives he faithfully approaches me with the money, but I know that great suffering will be entailed on his family. Be the demand ever so legal from one viewpoint it would yet be not right. I should modify my demands, and never use the subterfuge, "It's only business."

Almost all men desire to have a successful life, but think it a game of chance in which luck plays a prominent part. This is untrue. Absolute success is possible for every man, and none can thwart him. It is to exert all one's power throughout one's life, doing well one's duty. It is work; right work.

Then when one shall come down to his last hour he will understand the words of the Master when he said: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." Having done so throughout life, one will eat and drink the bread and water of life forever, which is largely the memory of his good works. Faith without work is a dead issue.

Education

By A. H. Parsons

Observations by a brother who urges the younger generation to "Go and prepare for efficient service."

After so much has been written and said about education I thought perhaps it would be permissible for one of sixty-odd years of experience to say a few things relative to this (in his mind, at least) all important subject. As a rule he that is forced to work and dig hard for the little he gets generally knows how to use it.

The question might be properly asked: What is education? Webster says: "Instruction; formation of manners. Education comprehends all that series of instruction and discipline which is intended to enlighten the understanding, correct the temper, and form the manners and habits of youth, and to fit them for usefulness in their future stations."

This being true, the question can be safely answered in these words: Education is knowing what to do and how to do it.

Who could raise objection to this qualification? Some people seemingly are afraid of an education for fear it might make them foolish. Education does not make people foolish, neither will it prevent people from being foolish if their bumps are so developed. An educated fool is more conspicuous as a rule than an uneducated one, the bump of government being undeveloped. And as a general rule those who are considered foolish because of their education are not considered so because they have too much—but because they failed to get what they possess properly mixed.

Many have only a smattering and conclude they have it all. They are not aware of the fact that they had only the skimmed milk and that so thin they were stunted in their educational growth. They think themselves men and women when they are about the age of a ten- or twelve-year-old child, hence appear more foolish because of stature. Shall we close our eyes and stop our ears so that we cannot develop mentally, because of some unfortunate person or persons whose mind failed to leave the cells of childhood, yet obtained an education to some degree?

What we may know is usable, propely speaking, only when we know how to use it. It takes the little babe some time to learn to say that wonderful word, papa, and mother is wonderfully pleased when she can help the little one to say it and also to know papa from other men. By degrees this little one develops, and what a world he has entered! He never reaches the end of discoveries and development till he stands before the Perfect One.

Big Letters

I have heard people find fault with education because some who have had that privilege love to flourish their big letters. Well, some people know that if they do not blow their horn it won't be blown. Why not let them? Men and women, in my observation, who really have an education say little and think less of the big letters they have earned by hard work than many uneducated people would want to concede.

Big letters attached to the name mean but little unless we are capable of imparting in a teachable manner that for which they stand. I may wear a button or some insignia that represents my social or religious standing in society. What good will it accomplish if I fail to express the Christ?

Knowing what to do and how to do it is the only panacea for the present defects and spiritual ills of the human family.

Until our education reaches that standard of efficiency, there is little hope of converting the world or attracting their attention to any great degree. Is it worth our while to seek for efficiency? In fact, can we exercise an intelligent hope of interesting others, who are or are not religiously inclined, if we are lacking in efficiency in acting out our part in the great program of saving souls?

Then why not qualify for better service and give God the glory possible for human intellect to accomplish under his divine guidance?

"My people are destroyed," not for knowing too much, but for "the lack of knowledge." Moses found some people in his day who found fault with some of the brethren who they thought did not have the right to know and to exercise their faculties in honoring Jehovah, and he rebuked them and said, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets," efficient for better service. Shall we curb the desire to know? Personally I wish that every Latter Day Saint had rightfully, by honest work, all the big letters possible to be obtained, and would consecrate what they had to the betterment of fallen humanity and to the glory of God.

Education is not so bad as some people have thought. Because some foolish people get a smattering of education and try to let people know they have it means but little. We might not have known it if they had not tooted their own horns. Just thank them for it, and let it pass by as a happening in life's pathway. Do not charge it up against the better class or the grown-up people—in mind as well as in stature.

Remember that knowledge is the knowing what to do and how to do it. There are many ways a person may obtain an education besides through book learning. Observation is to a person of an observing disposition an avenue from which he or she gathers by the eye and also the ear many profitable lessons. Association is another avenue which helps to develop our faculties in words, use of them, and manners. Travel is a most wonderful school for filling the mind with thought and impressing our faculties with knowledge of towns, cities,

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE CARPENTER AND COLLEGE GRADUATE

An after-dinner speech at a London banquet, by a man who had never before made a speech, and printed in The Citizen, of Ottawa, Ontario, January 9, 1921.

The following article was also printed in the Teachers' World and Public Opinion. Education is evidently preparation for service in life. A blacksmith needs an education, and a carpenter, just as much as the school-teacher. Much food for thought follows:

"About one hundred and fifty students who had just received their degrees met for a final dinner, before they separated to go into various parts of the world, probably never to meet again. They had been so surfeited with dignified drivel during the four years at college that they decided to omit the address at the final function.

"Of two hundred professors there was one man whose criticism of college addresses was well known. He had never made an address in his life, and it was suggested, more as a joke than with any serious intent, to invite him to deliver the address. If they had imagined for a moment that he would accept the invitation he never would have been asked. He accepted, however, and the committee decided to let the class grin and bear it."

A Luxurious Setting

"The dinner took place in one of the world's greatest hotels. The banqueting hall was known far and wide for its artistic arrangements and luxurious furniture. The young men were dressed in conventional full evening dress. Most of them were future captains of industry. During the course of the dinner there was a good deal of joking and some speculation about the professor's address. When the dinner was over the chairman rapped for order and introduced the speaker.

"Gentlemen," he began, "I never made a speech in my life, and I don't intend to begin now. I have something to say, however, and in saying it I will follow Luther's threefold rule: "Stand up straightly, speak out boldly, and sit down quickly."

"We are in one of the famous banqueting halls of the world. Belshazzar's hall compared to this was a lodging on the third floor back. No such art existed in those days as we see around this room. No such viands graced his board. What there was there was elegant for that day, but we live in another age, an age of art, artcraftsmanship, and luxury. From the four corners of the earth came the things on this table. From the lowest forms of day labor to the highest forms of art we have around us samples of at least a hundred forms of human work.

"Take this tablecloth, to begin with. It is of most exquisite workmanship. It involves weaving—to go no farther back—bleaching, smoothing, designing. It is a damask linen, beautiful and most pleasing to the eye. I want to ask you a question: Is there anyone here who knows from personal experience anything about the labor involved? Have any of you ever contributed any labor to the manufacturing of table linen? I am serious, gentlemen. If any of you have, I would like him to say so." There was absolute silence. "I understand, then," he continued, "that the making of such a thing is beyond your ken."

Aliens to Pottery

"Let me draw your attention to the samples of pottery here. Surely the men and women who produce such beautiful things are artists. What a joy it must be for a man to hold such a thing in his hand—complete—and say, "I made it!" Many forms of labor are involved here, also—the digging of clay, the carting, fashioning, painting, burning, baking, and finishing. If there is a man here who has ever touched this form of labor, let him answer. No one!

"There are samples of the most exquisite, and, I know, costly, cut glass. That also involves much labor and great art. It is a unique industry in itself. I will not detail the process; we see the result, but the various forms of labor involved are practically unknown to us. I would be rather surprised to find a man among you who had ever touched this industry at any angle."

"In this way he went over the silver, and dwelt rather lengthily on the subject of mining and the life of a miner. Nothing escaped his notice. He drew attention to the carpet and rugs on the floor, to the curtains and drapery of the windows, to the mural decorations, executed by the greatest living mural painter. There was a rich fresco around the room. He called attention to it. When he had gone over most of the things in the room he turned again to the table.

"There are cut flowers here," he said. "Most of you spent some years in the study of botany, but I don't think any of you would undertake to give us a complete classification of what we see and enjoy on the table." There was a disposition to laugh, but he wiped the smile from every face around the table by quietly saying, "Perhaps you are to be congratulated that you are at an age when a sense of humor covers countries, and peoples, their habits, language, and method of applying it. Knowledge of words and their relation to one another and how to hitch them up together so as to say the thing we want said and not what we desire not to say, is education, pure and simple.

Do You Want It?

I only wish I were younger than I am so as to enjoy the opportunity our young folks have now to qualify for better service. I feel the need of it more and more as I grow older, and yet I have been a student all my life, and the more I learn the more I see to learn and the more I feel the lack of being developed before starting or at least having a start toward efficiency. You may be satisfied with what you have, but I am not and hunger for more. Am I in a state of apostasy? I would offer my service and start in anew, if the authorities had not placed a ban on the age. So I with others will have to plod on and get it by hard knocks. I know what I am talking about. I have spent a few years in the front ranks as a missionary and believe that our young people should be encouraged to move forward and occupy for efficiency.

I do not desire to play the dog-in-the-manger. Because I cannot eat the straw I should not prevent the ox from eating. No, I say to the young people, Go and prepare for efficient service. I have done the best I could in my day. Your duty is to do better, by reason of opportunity and the call for better work. Do not fail, for if you do you will regret it as long as you live and will feel the loss on the other side.

Moses, after becoming "skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," enjoyed much of the inspiration of God and he came to an experience in which he confessed that up to that time he had not known "that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed." If man can always keep in mind while he is developing his faculties this one thought, "No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love," it will help him to occupy where he belongs and will make him useful in the hands of God and the church in saving souls.

a multitude of sins, but personally I cannot enjoy that which gives me pain.”

The Motive of Education

“I am a representative university man, seriously asking myself and you whether the system we call education educates.’ The silence became oppressive. The men were thinking.

“Perhaps,’ he continued, ‘I should have put you more at ease by telling you at the beginning that I have never experienced the joy of fashioning articles with my own hands—nor anything useful for that matter. Here we are, then, a group of men on whom a university has set its stamp. We produce nothing we eat, we could not even lend a hand in the making of anything we see around us, and truth compels me to venture the suggestion that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the chief motive of a college education is to escape actual participation in just such work as gives or ought to give joy to the worker.

“A timekeeper performs a useful function, so does a cash register, but the function of education is not to turn out timekeepers or cash registers. It has been truly said that if ten bachelors of art were wrecked in midocean they could not build a pontoon to save their lives! They would be equally helpless in any critical emergency where practical knowledge of the ordinary things around us was imperatively necessary. A statement of the problem is not a solution, and we do not gain much by stating that the system is to blame and we are not.

“You certainly are not to blame. You are the victims of whatever system we have. I cannot say that I am blameless. I do not believe that a smattering of languages, of mathematics, and history is education. I believe the system of cramming these things to pass an examination is pernicious. So having been asked for the first time in my life to make an address, I made it an opportunity to enter my protest.”

The Purpose of Education

“Education is to prepare and equip for the duties and responsibilities of life—not to turn out industrial and commercial bosses, gaffers, timekeepers, and cash registers. I would hardly be justified in taking up your time with these observations alone. So, in addition, I want to say this: Most of you are destined to be masters of men. You will organize and mobilize their labor; you will oversee it.

“When you see men around you actually creating beautiful things with their hands, I would like you to remember that it was my opinion that actual labor in the arts and crafts and industries is an infinitely nobler contribution to the happiness of mankind than clipping coupons and living on the sweat of other men’s brows.

“It will not come in our day, but the world will ultimately come to understand that the training of the mind is as necessary as the training of the body. Why should it be considered an unthinkable thing that a blacksmith or a carpenter should need an education? Why should college men consider it degrading to handle tools and make useful and beautiful things?

“Why should a university perpetuate such a revolt against nature in which the man who does no useful work at all is considered a gentleman, and the creator of wealth and beautiful things should be considered low caste, in Anglo-Saxon civilization.

“I want to point out to you that the highest form of culture and refinement known to mankind was intimately associated with tools and labor. In order to do that I must present to you a picture, imaginative, but in accord with the facts of history and experience.”

A Dramatic Conclusion

“He pushed his chair back, and stood a few feet from the table. His face betrayed deep emotion. His voice became wonderfully soft and irresistibly appealing. The college men had been interested; they were now spellbound. He raised his hand, and went through the motions of drawing aside a curtain.

“Gentlemen,’ he said, ‘may I introduce to you a young Galilean who is a master builder—Jesus of Nazareth!’

“It was a weird act. The silence became oppressive. As if addressing an actual person of flesh and blood he continued:

“Master, may I ask you, as I asked these young men, whether there is anything in this room that you could make with your hands as other men make them?”

“There was a pause, a brief moment or two, then with the measured stride of an Oriental he went to the end of the table, and took the tablecloth in his hand, and made bare the corner and carved oak leg of the great table. In that position he looked into the faces of the men and said: ‘The Master says, “Yes, I could make the table—I am a carpenter!”’”

MAYAN RUINS DISCOVERED IN GUATEMALA

Ruins have been uncovered in Guatemala, recently, some fifty-seven miles inland on the Atlantic coast, revealing a number of strange monuments, which seem to date about 520 A. D. The carvings are deep and the work excellently done, attaining a perfection not to be exceeded to-day.

In the Christian Herald, Ruth Laughlin Barker, in an article on “America’s mystery monuments,” discusses the finds at length, and mentions a queen, who seemed to be a favorite with the sculptors. From all appearances, she was a ruling monarch at one period, and her face and figure are preserved in sandstone.

The Mayans who chiseled these remains seem to have worshiped animals, the sun, moon, and stars, as well as the forces of nature.

Students of the Book of Mormon will associate the date suggested with the chaotic period following the disintegration of civilization among the inhabitants of this land, the last known date of their history being 422 A. D. when a great battle of extermination left the dark-skinned tribes the victors, the remaining whites being the dissenting Nephites who renounced all allegiance to God. But since civilization does not ascend to great heights in a day, neither does it become extinct in a century, consequently the perverted forms of religion were manifested in the ruins of the cities inhabited by the ancestors of the Aztecs and the Incas, while the scattered remnants, having even less of the permanency of those in the former centers of population, would easily become the Indians as discovered by Columbus and the Spanish hordes.

As this writer says, the key to the many hieroglyphics found on these and other monuments, may some day be discovered, and the history more clearly revealed from an archaeological standpoint.

There is no expedient to which a man will not resort to avoid the real labor of thinking.—Joshua Reynolds.

Edison says that the principal reason so many men do not amount to anything is because they do not think, but instead follow an ordinary routine. Hence the question is raised, Do you sleep eight hours a day, or twenty-four? When you get up, is your mind active, or does it go on sleeping while your body moves around? This is of vital importance, not only for business success, but also for spiritual success, and the work of the church. The glory of God is intelligence; the more we become like him, the more we will use that intelligence in our service for him and humanity.

PASTORAL

The Value of the Social Survey

An address made before the Women's Department, in April, 1920, by Hale W. Smith.

I have been wondering how many physicians, when they go into a sick room, bow in the presence of their patient and say to the Lord, aloud: "Now I do not know anything at all about this case, Lord. I have asked no questions. I have not made a study of the symptoms. I cannot determine the nature of the affliction, but oh, I know that you can, Lord, and I want you to tell me this morning just what is the matter, and what I should do for this sufferer," and, in a moment or two, expect the reply to come: "This patient has a fever. Give aconite, or belladonna, or nux vomica, and, perhaps, a little milk toast."

What kind of a practitioner would this be? It would certainly seem a novelty for the Lord to have to suggest to a physician what to do under normal or certain conditions well known to the medical fraternity, would it not?

Would it not seem rather a peculiar situation also for a minister to go into a pastorate to take up his assigned work there, and have to say: "Now, Lord, you know I don't know anything about this people. I have not studied about them. You know it all. You tell me what to do for them," and expect the Lord to say, "There are certain people here who have spiritual weaknesses; some here have spiritual fevers. Give them a good dose of real faith and repentance."

Would it not be better for the pastor to be able to say to the Lord: "I have studied human nature. I believe I understand certain things. I note certain manifestations upon the faces of the people in this congregation which I interpret as discontent, mistrust, malice, envy, and the like. I need you to supplement my weakness, increase my strength and my wisdom, that I may truly minister helpfully to this people."

If for no other reason than to learn to read human nature, to classify it, and to apply known principles, a man in charge of a group of people should study his society and make a survey of its conditions.

Society

What is a society? I do not know that we all agree with the definitions given by men who study the subject thoughtfully, but most of them say, in substance, that a society is two or more persons banded together, having a definite, common purpose or goal, and working toward that objective.

If this definition will hold, I think we will be safe in saying that any of our branch groups is a society, since its members have definite, common purposes, and they are, presumably, working towards a common objective. While these purposes may be termed "religious," that should not be limited to a simple preaching of the written "word," nor verbal explanation of its message.

Survey

And what is a survey? A social survey is nothing more nor less than making an inventory showing the resources and liabilities of the particular society under observation. This includes an observation of all the units of the society as well as its environments and the influences which bear upon it.

A Biblical Survey

For scriptural basis for surveys it will be interesting to read Numbers 13: 17-33, in which you will find very excellent ideas along this line:

"And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way southward, and go up into the mountain; and see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many; and what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strongholds; and what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein, or not; and be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. Now the time was the time of the first ripe grapes. So they went up, and searched the land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath. And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron; where Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmi, the children of Anak, were. (Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.) And they came unto the brook of Eshcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs. The place was called the brook Eshcol, because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down from thence. And they returned from searching of the land after forty days. And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Paran, to Kadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and showed them the fruit of the land. And they told him, and said, We came unto the land whither thou sentest us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it. Nevertheless the people be strong that dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and moreover we saw the children of Anak there. The Amalekites dwell in the land of the south; and the Hittites, and the Jebusites, and the Amorites dwell in the mountains; and the Canaanites dwell by the sea, and by the coast of Jordan. And Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it. But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we. And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched unto the children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature. And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight."

What was this but an illuminating survey, one that disclosed temporary quarters, such as the tents, permanent strongholds or dwellings, and productive and unproductive places? It even indicated the season of the year in which the spies entered the land, calling it the "time of the first ripe grapes." They established the truth of their report by bringing back as evidence, fruit of various kinds, including a bunch of grapes so heavy it required two men to carry it. Notice, also, that there came back as well a false report from those men who did not have the courage, evidently, to enter far into the land, declaring it was full of giants who could not possibly be conquered.

In the New Testament, too, we find that the Master speaks of sending men into the vineyard. In Doctrine and Covenants, fifty-eighth section, we read of a commandment given unto Sidney Rigdon to go into the land of Missouri and to see the land, and then write a description of what he saw, even the "land of Zion."

Kinds of Surveys

There are two classes of surveys: general and specific. A general survey of the church would be for the purpose of gaining a more complete knowledge of the needs and activities of the church members as a whole. Its value would be to assist the executives of the church in outlining general policies to be inaugurated and carried into effect. Specific surveys are those which are limited in their nature, such as a survey to ascertain housing, sanitation, educational and industrial conditions, and the like.

Our Rural Problems

Would it surprise you to be informed this morning that more than 65 per cent, yes, nearly 70 per cent of the people of our church live in rural districts or in small towns strictly rural? We have districts in which there is not a single urban church. These facts impress upon us the necessity of giving careful consideration to the questions of rural economics and the rural church, which have been almost altogether neglected in the past. It is only within a very few years that conference appointments have been given to men instructed to use rural churches as centers around which to build up their congregations. The majority of appointments have been made to meet the needs of the cities.

It may surprise some to know that surveys show that the people of rural districts own or control twice as much property as people living in cities. Yet, we find that twice as much tithing is paid into the treasury of the church by people living in cities as is paid by those in the rural communities. Why is this? A farmer will say, "We have no ready money." Because he speaks the truth, should there not be established in the rural districts storehouses where the people may bring in their produce, grain, and live stock and deposit them as tithing, since our law provides that tithing need not always be currency? Looking toward this event, might not a specific survey of the church be made, by which conditions and facilities among our rural membership may be improved? A specific survey for the purpose of determining the industrial relationships of the members of the church in rural districts is certainly in order soon.

I was pleased when President Smith made the statement to us in his address that he expected to form an industrial council, a business council, composed of the best business men we have in the church, for the purpose of studying industrial conditions throughout our organization. To me this move will simply precede the putting into execution of some form of survey through which all liabilities and resources of our membership may be determined, spiritual as well as material.

This rural problem has interested me for a number of years. Some time ago I wrote not a few letters to some of the representative men of the church in an effort to gather some information concerning this question. I sent out 115 letters, to pastors, district presidents, and others. Only a few of these replied, and but one or two in a way that showed that the subject had received their thoughtful consideration. Two men said frankly that they knew nothing at all about the problem. One replied that he could not see how it would benefit him if he did know. I thanked these brethren for giving me valuable information, which was contained in the fact that they did not know.

Perhaps this may do as far as outlining to you what consideration has been given the subject of surveys, general as well as those having some definite purpose in view.

Do We Need a Church Survey?

What tests may be made to show we need surveys for intelligent church work? With your permission I will read from a book, written by Charles E. Carroll, called The Community Survey in Relation to Church Efficiency. I am really sorry that I cannot say that this book was written by a Latter Day Saint. I wish it were. Are we always to be about fifteen or twenty years behind in fostering advanced movements? And after other people have begun progressive movements, when we try to wake up to the situation and attempt to do something, are we always to hear the cry, "Oh, that is copying after sectarianism"?

I read: "1. What definite and specific things can be pointed to that this church is accomplishing in the neighborhood?"

"2. To what extent has this church cooperated with other social agencies working in the city or neighborhood?"

"3. Into how many homes, rich and poor, is a train of Christian influences being directed through the work of this church?"

"4. How many persons in the neighborhood are being definitely and regularly influenced for Christ?"

"5. What share does this church take in the promotion of the wider interests of the kingdom, outside the neighborhood?"

I stepped into the position of pastor of a certain church absolutely at sea about the work there, with the exception of the information passed on to me that there were fifty-two members in the branch, eleven of whom were widows. Not even a list of the names was provided. I was ignorant of the social relationships of the people; knew nothing about their everyday problems. To have entered into constructive and efficient work there, I should have had the names and addresses of the members, a brief history of their families, something of their health and economic conditions. I could have gone to work with a light heart had I been provided with this foundational knowledge. If I could have even had, upon a sheet of paper, a summary of the activities of the members as a whole for the past two or three years it would have been of great assistance to me. But I did not have this help. I had to go at it blindly, and to such extent, hesitatingly. This is not as it should be.

Signs of Advance

I am glad to see the policy being introduced into our church program by which changes that are contemplated shall take place more gradually. When a pastor is sent out to succeed another he will have the benefit for perhaps two, three, or four months of being in close touch with the one who went before him. Thus he may be put in touch with conditions. Instead of an outgoing pastor saying, "Oh, well, you can find these things out for yourself, as I had to do," we will hear them saying, "You will find such and such conditions here."

For these reasons we feel there is absolute need for a pastor to make careful survey of the membership of the church over which he ministers, not only for the prosecution of his own work in a more efficient manner, but that he may have something definite to pass on to his successor, a bird's-eye view, as it were, of the situation into which that successor finds himself through the appointing powers of the church.

I recall to mind that once, when I accepted a pastorate, I was cautioned by one of the officers over me not to introduce any new legislation into the branch until I had been there at least one year, "because," he said, "it will take you that long to find yourself." Should this be true? Need it be true, if we pastors take the time and trouble to study the social conditions we find, and record them carefully? Even the little survey suggested by Mr. Carroll in the book from which I have read would help a new pastor wonderfully, and it need not take a year, nor even six months, to discover important features of the local situation.

The rural pastor finds that he is expected to visit with the membership of the church. Usually the men are not at home, but he is expected to give a great deal of attention to the women and children, spending a social time with them. After visiting all the members in this way, what time does he have for study or the constructive plans needed to develop his pastorate? One of the things I refused to do upon going into a branch where this extensive visiting was expected of me, was to do the work which should plainly devolve upon the local officers. I told them if the local brethren could not do their duty as visiting officers, they need not expect me to do it in connection with a pastor's duty, already full man-size. While I was criticized by some for the stand I took, the local priesthood had a lesson let us hope they did not soon forget.

Visiting the sick and the nonmembers, which work is also very necessary in rural communities, will usually occupy any spare moments which may be left from the usual demands of the membership, and no pastor should be expected to do so much of it that he has not time to study the social conditions, not only among his own members but in the neighborhood. It is poor policy for a man to view things from one standpoint only. He should study them from several angles. One of the lessons I was taught by my father, especially illustrated in the game of chess, was to look at my vantage ground from the other fellow's position, and study the game from the opposite side of the board. Following this cue, a pastor who makes a survey of the conditions outside as well as from the inside of his own membership is better prepared for intelligent service.

The Local Survey

How may the pastor ascertain the social condition of the people of his branch? Two methods occur to mind: One by personal contact with the individual members, with the liability that he may forget facts so obtained; and the other, by a social survey, conducted more or less expertly. A third might be, by inspirational information received from God, a process more or less contingent upon the high spiritual attainments of the one in charge.

Not all of us as pastors have had the privilege of seeing the branch over which we labor unfolded to our view by the Lord. I heard the late president of the church, Joseph Smith, say that on one occasion he asked the Lord to show him the entire membership of the church, and his request was granted. He saw where they were and what they were doing, and because so much of it was of a nature to cause him sorrow and regret, he asked that it might be taken from him. Our present leader told us a few days ago that he was permitted to see the condition of the church outlined before him. He could see certain men in certain offices, and in due time these men would be with us and doing their specific work in the church. In substance, this is about what he expressed. Not all of us, however, are permitted to see these conditions in vision, hence we must use our mental faculties in some other way and not depend upon these rare instances of inspiration or revelation. We must "study them out in our own minds," and then the Lord may "cause the burning in our hearts" which will show his approval. Thus, the value of the social survey.

Necessity for Surveys

We find, in the cross purposes and misapplied activity usual in the ordinary branch, a reason for comprehensive surveys. There should be a dovetailing of these various activities, if not a paralleling. They should not cross each other. The only way in which we can find out accurately concerning branch activities is to make some kind of a social survey, some classification of efforts, some determination of purposes and objectives. There should be cooperation, not cross-firing. There should be clear goals, and organized movement in their direction.

As far as possible a pastor should seek to use the existing organization in a branch until he determines positively that it will not function. Then his attempts at reorganization or reconstruction are in order. All will concede that it would be easier to set up a new organization entirely than to inject vitality and efficiency in one almost defunct. Our great desire should be not so much to evangelize the community as to get every person in the church and community to functioning along progressive lines. A social survey is of inestimable value in attaining this result, since its summaries and averages will show tastes, temperaments, and values which must needs enter into the proposition before success will follow. It is also a lens through which conditions which should not exist may be examined and steps towards elimination may follow.

Cooperative Production

One of the peculiar problems before this church is that of cooperative production. Volumes have been written upon the subject of cooperation in buying and in selling, but very little has been written upon that of production cooperatively. Since Zion, the city, will have to depend for its sustenance upon the outlying rural districts which produce, pastors and district presidents in charge in these places should study closely the subject of cooperation in this matter. Our people everywhere should begin to study social conditions and relations in industry, with a view to applying the principles of cooperation to their own labor. When Zion is fully established, when manufacturing plants will be in operation where the necessities of life are made by the combined labor of trained workers, out in the rural districts we will find our farmers and producers also combined, not for selfish or ulterior purposes, but to the end that each may do his part towards this latter-day redemption. Only through proper and comprehensive surveys, intelligently conducted, can this be accomplished, and all who are praying for Zion should gladly unite and respond when these are inaugurated.

Books on Survey Work

Some preliminary study of psychology and sociology seems advisable to anyone wishing to prepare for efficient work in survey. Betts's The Mind and Its Education, Titchener's "Primer of Psychology, Bogardus's Introduction to Sociology, Blackmar and Gillen's Outline of Sociology, some good text in philanthropy, or E. T. Vine's work—these would form a good foundation for the study of the survey.

I have before me some good books and material that I have gathered—the very best I have seen—and I have tried to keep in touch with available material. The Community Survey, by Charles E. Carroll, which I mentioned a while ago, is published by the Abingdon Press, Methodist Church. This is a survey made in the city of Denver, so you people living out there may go and get the report of the survey if you wish to make one of your own church. You will find your own church mentioned in this survey made there by that community church.

Here is A Social Program for the Parish, by the Joint Commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Another one is The Technique of Social Service, by Manual C. Elmer, of the University of Kansas. A Collection of Social Survey Material, by Florence Rising Curtis, and The Church, a Community Force, by Worth M. Tippy are both helpful. A little pamphlet put out by the Department of Service and Exhibits of the Russell Sage Foundation, of New York City, the Presbyterian Church Community Action Through Service, by Sheldon M. Harrison, Social Survey, from The Russell Sage Foundation Library, and Lippincott's Home Manual are all illuminating.

Would it surprise some of you to know that the Presbyterians and Methodists, and, in fact, the evangelical churches of the United States have spent upwards of $3,000,000 in the last eight years in survey work alone? They have come to the conclusion that there must be some change in their methods of applying the information obtained if they are to "get anywhere." It is an open secret that the Methodist Church itself has not gained in membership in the last year, but on the contrary has suffered a marked decrease. This is true of many of the churches. They do not know where they are.

I wonder if we know. Let us be ready to put into operation some comprehensive surveys, by which we may find out. Will it not be worth while to members, pastors, and church officials, for us to have a complete general survey throughout the entire church of our district and branch organizations?

The Calling and Duties of Elders

By E. S. White

Elder White is president of the Northern Michigan Quorum of Elders and sent this letter to his members.

Every elder is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him; and to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost in the one ordaining him. (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12.)

No person can be ordained to any office in this church, in an organized branch, without a vote of that branch. (17: 16.)

No one to be ordained to the office of elder without the voice of the district conference or the sanction of the missionary in charge. (General Conference Resolution No. 312, April 13, 1886.)

The office of an elder is an appendage to the high priesthood. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 5.)

The elders are to administer in the spiritual things of the church. (104: 7.)

The elder is to preach, baptize, lay on hands for confirmation, blessing of children, healing of the sick, and for ordinations. (17: 8.)

The elders are to preach the gospel by the gift of the Spirit. (50: 4.)

They are to conduct all meetings as they are led by the Spirit, according to the revelations of God. (17: 9.)

They have a right to administer the spiritual things of the church when there is no higher authority present. (104: 7.)

An elder should, when present, administer the sacrament, bread and wine, emblems of the flesh and blood of Christ. (17: 8, 22.)

May preside: A branch may be presided over by a high priest, elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by a vote of the branch. Districts may be presided over by high priests or elders when sustained by vote of the districts. (120: 2.)

An elder may preside over a quorum of 96 elders and sit in council with them, and teach them according to the covenants. This presidency is a distinct one from that of the seventy, and is designed for those who do not travel in all the world. (104: 41.) Should have two counselors. (107: 43.) This quorum is instituted for standing ministers, nevertheless they may travel. (107: 43.)

Two or more elders may sit on a court to inquire into any case that may be brought before them, to examine witnesses of the church. (42: 22.)

May act as counselor to the bishop in doing business of the church, to sit in judgment upon transgressors, upon testimony, as it shall be laid before them, according to the laws. (104: 32.)

We would also admonish the elders of the church to be of a cheerful heart and countenance, among themselves and men of the world; must be without blame, in word and deed; must not indulge in loud or boisterous speech, nor in relating vulgar stories; must be clean in body and in clothing; avoid the use of tobacco and do not use strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example. (119: 3.)

We would further say: God has called you to an important office—to be messengers to the nations of the earth; and upon your faithfulness hangs the destiny of the human family—while you hold the priesthood. God has committed the care of souls to your charge and when you received the priesthood, you became the legate of heaven, and God will demand it of you. Preach nothing but what you can prove from the scriptures, for one scriptural proof is worth ten thousand opinions. Do not intrude upon another's territory. Better wait for an invitation, always remembering your mission is to the world and not to the churches. Do not assume authority over any branch unless you are first solicited and chosen by the branch to preside, and if you will do these things for the glory of God and the salvation of men, the powers of the priesthood will rest upon you and you will become mighty in testimony.

We wish, further, to draw the attention of the elders to an article written by President E. A. Smith, found in the One for November, 1920, recommending that elders addicted to the use of tobacco be labored with, and be notified that their licenses will be required of them if they fail to overcome the habit within ninety days. Second, that elders that are able to, and do not work, and will not work, be asked to tender their licenses. Third, that an honorary list be established for retired members who are not able to work, either because of sickness or old age.

These three recommendations we would like to act upon at our next quorum meeting to be held at Bay City.

"Beat My Sheep"

A selection from a former number of Autumn Leaves that every member of the ministry may well think about.

A writer in the Religious Telescope tells a story of a minister, who, after scourging his congregation at a fearful rate, on going out of the house, was accosted by an old man who asked him if he would not preach from the text:

"Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, 'Beat my sheep.'"

"No, no," said the minister, "you are mistaken, my brother. He said, 'Feed my sheep.'"

"Ah! did he?" said the old man, with a deep, searching look into the pastor's face, "I thought mebbe you read it, 'Beat my sheep.'"

The pastor at once saw the point, and threw away his cudgel; and, like a wise man, filled up his crip, that he might thereafter have something wherewith to feed his flock.

Sheep are, no doubt, foolish creatures, but beating them does not seem to cure them of their folly; and our Savior has given no commission to anyone to beat his sheep. They may go astray and turn every one to his own way, but the shepherd's business is to seek them in their wanderings, and kindly bring them home. This was the work of the Good Shepherd, who laid down his life for his sheep; and this is the appropriate business of those whom the Holy Ghost hath made overseers, to feed the flock which he hath purchased with his own blood. Happy are they who know the will of God and do it.

Stewardships

By H. W. Savage

This writer holds that a man should own his stewardship in fee simple, and therefore presents a different view from some recent writers.

I should like to have space in the HERALD to present a few thoughts on stewardships. A recently proposed theory is: When a man makes his consecration he turns everything over to the church, or some one who holds property for the church, with a deed. After the bishop has received these testimonies (covenants and deeds), every man is made a steward over property that was his own before he made his consecration. This calls for a total surrender of title to all property to the church or its agent.

Now with all kindness, I believe the above is an error. In the first place we quote:

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed, which cannot be broken." (Italics mine—H. W. S.)

If the Lord has intended that a man must turn over everything to the bishop he could have said so instead of saying what he did. Give a deed of what you give to the bishop for the poor so that if you should become a hypocrite later on you cannot rob the poor of what was given them. This agrees with the following:

"And if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.

The part he holds in his own name is not his own any more than any stewardship he may hold in trust for the church so far as God is concerned, and the spirit of Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10: "Behold all these properties are mine." To make the matter clearer, let us read from Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2:

"All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritance."

The above provision shows that it is expected that some parents will have wherewith to give their children inheritance. But if the inheritance is never to include anything to make a living out of, nothing but a house and lot, a home only, how can any parent provide inheritance for his children? This could only be done in case of a couple who have but one son, to whom they deed over the home, and the son brings his bride home to live with his parents. And if per adventure they prove more prolific than the parents the old people would have to go to the old people's home to make room for their grandchildren.

Now the logical conclusion of this matter is found in the provision for the organization of the order of Enoch, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 101: 81, also 128. Section 101: 9 provides for the organization of the united order of Zion, and also the united order of the stakes of Zion.

"And they shall be organized in their own names, and in their own name; and they shall do business in their own name, and in their own names; and you shall do business in your own name, and in your own names."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 9.

The provision for doing business in their own names as individuals in the several branches of the order gives us light on the subject under discussion. If these men did not hold their several stewardships in their own names how could they do business in their own names? If a man has no property in his own name he cannot do much business in his own name, for he cannot give security for anything seeing that he has nothing to give. He would be doing business in the name of the order if he gave security in the name of the order.

The circumstances of the saints in the days of Enoch were not unlike those of the Saints of the latter days. For comparison read Doctrine and Covenants 101: 9 and 102: 1. Here we find that in both cases they had been driven out of their rightful homes because of transgression and were seeking to redeem Zion. And it was to those people whom the Lord had commanded to organize themselves, and consecrate their properties, borrow money on those properties, pledging themselves collectively or individually as they saw fit to do, to deliver themselves from bondage, to them the Lord said—

"All these things are mine, and ye are my stewards."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 13.

"Behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken; and if the properties are mine then are ye stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards."

The last part of the above shows that there was a question as to whether they would recognize the Lord as the owner of the property. If they did recognize his Lordship over it all, then he promised in the last sentence of that revelation, "The Master will not suffer his house to be broken up." This was conditional only, on their faithfulness. If they played the hypocrite and broke their covenant, then the Lord would not recognize them as stewards. If all the property was held by the order then it would be impossible for any person to break his covenant, and there would be no question at all about who owned the property. If we are to dogmatize on the above quotations we might well say, If I hold a deed to property I am a steward till I prove a faithless hypocrite; but after that I am no more a steward unto the Lord, nor is the order of Enoch in duty bound to recognize me any more as a fellow worker and I must be cast out, unless I repent, and then I cannot take with me anything I have given to the poor, for that is secured unto the church by a deed that cannot be broken; and the hypocrite may not rob the poor of what has been deeded unto them, though he may rob God. The bishop in turn gives to a needy one what he needs and secures it unto him by a deed that cannot be broken. The bishop cannot take it back, even if the brother thus benefited leaves the church.

It appears to me that most all of the inheritances and stewardships in the rural districts will be held in the names of the persons who operate them as also any other small business that can be operated by one man or one family. Those stewardships which cannot be conveniently operated by one man or family will be held in the name of one of the several branch organizations of the Order of Enoch provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 101, also 128, which are not only pastoral but industrial as well, depending on the peculiar qualifications of the members of those branch orders and the nature of the business or stewardship to be handled. These orders will act jointly, or jointly and severally, as they deem it best to do in their several stewardships or in joint stewardships. These several cooperative societies of the Saints will thus be able to present a formidable front to the business world and at the same time show the world how to live for the benefit of the children of God who are all men, but especially the household of faith.

Now may I refer again to Doctrine and Covenants 102: 10: "Let these commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption. Then some remark that "if Zion has been redeemed, it may be time to execute and fulfill these commandments; if Zion has not yet been redeemed, may it not be too soon to attempt fully to put into practice the law of consecration?"

No, it is not too soon to put the law of consecration into practice. The above quotation does not tend to retard this work but rather to encourage it. The Saints were scattered and driven out of their homes and the enemy was in possession of the land which the Saints had bought and paid for. They were in danger of their lives. Their efforts had failed partly on account of false brethren who had failed to consecrate of their properties, and some of them said: "Where is their God? Behold he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1, 2.

Then the Lord gave them some instructions which they were not to reveal to the general public till it was wisdom for it to be done, telling them to:

"Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people . . . until my servant . . . whom I have appointed, shall have time to gather up the strength of my house, and to have sent wise men, to fulfill that which I have commanded concerning the purchasing of all the lands in Jackson County, that can be purchased."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 7-8.

Here was a call for consecration of all properties that could be pledged by the Saints far and near for the purchasing of land to redeem Zion. Just as it was in the days of Enoch; (Doctrine and Covenants 101) and this was the very means given the Saints of that day to redeem Zion. The very fact that the saints of old as well as the Latter Day Saints failed to consecrate their properties to the Lord was the cause of their being driven out. The only means of redeeming Zion is full consecration of our properties and our very lives to the Lord in one tremendous effort to redeem and establish Zion. Let us do it now, while the nations of the world are preparing for the "next war." Let the Saints far and near organize themselves, consecrate themselves and all they have to the cause of Zion, pledge their properties, appoint their councils to meet with the bishops of the church and negotiate for the purchase of land in the land of Zion that a place of safety may be established agreeable with the Lord's word to us, ready against the day when "he that will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee to Zion for safety."

We are living in perilous times, when thrones and governments fall in one night, and terror and bloodshed reign supreme in place of kings and governments. May God help us to heed the warning and escape the doom of destruction!

Thinking is the talking of the soul with itself.—Plato.

The Manchester Cooperative Society issues a periodical taken up exclusively with cooperation and the work and announcements of the society in that district. The Manchester Cooperative Movement has been in force ever since 1859, and they are proposing to enter into alliance with the labor party. The matter is now up for decision.

THE SEMINAR

Dangers of the Gathering

By Max Carmichael

Not only are the dangers suggested, but the necessary preparational steps to be considered in such a step. This is the third of the series on Zionic problems and the next will appear in an early number.

What are the dangers apt to be encountered in the present status of the gathering movement and in the future administration of the movement? Everyone desiring to see a successful accomplishment of this Zion project must look ahead to see what the possible dangers are in order to make provision to avoid them.

So many are coming in unprepared and unadvised. They are sacrificing too much in a financial way in their coming. In their eagerness to get to Zion, they sell out at home too cheaply. They thereby lessen their financial assets. This gives the world the financial advantage of the movement. To sell out below a fair market price in order to get to Zion should not be done except upon the express advice of the presiding administrators of the Zion movement, when they are fully cognizant of the circumstances surrounding the proposed sale and movement.

Many are coming in ignorant of the financial conditions in Zion. They are making poor investments. They lose what they do have, and are fleeced out of their earthly possessions by church members who do not fully sympathize with the Zion project and are only using their status as members of the church, as a coat with which to deceive and fleece the innocent newcomer. Perhaps the ones coming in may be sold land that is being held only for speculative purposes. Newcomers have the feeling that surely all Saints in Zion can be trusted. They become disappointed. Not only may they be fleeced by church members, or would-be Saints, but by outsiders who are acquainted with the possible sentiment, which may be connected up with the newcomer's movement to Zion, and so take advantage of the newcomer in the business transaction.

Leaving the Zion movement to individual initiative is apt to result in a lot of poor coming in unable to support themselves. Many of these poor are actuated both from selfish points of view as to a living, and for purely religious purposes; but the religious purposes are apt to be selfish ones. They naturally become a heavy burden upon the resources of the church, which resources could well be used in other channels. To relieve this situation which is growing by leaps and bounds takes a considerable part of the time of our leaders, who might otherwise spend this valuable time in other channels. The bishops in the various stakes could tell us what the situation is in this regard very easily, perhaps merely by observation, unaided by any actual count of the influx. Also a lot of people become poor after they arrive here because they do not find suitable employment according to their training and previous experience. They come in entirely ignorant of the vocational opportunities of the communities into which they come. They simply trust to luck in finding a job.

As a natural consequence, shiftlessness becomes an altogether too common characteristic of the people of Zion and her stakes. This condition is very apt to increase unless the way can be better prepared for a good many of our people before they "gather." We are too apt to have idlers attempting to live at the expense of the church. A family cannot long take help without getting into the spirit of thinking that this financial help from the bishop is its due. Rigorous measures will have to be taken to avert this condition.

This shiftlessness cannot help but result in our being disliked by the outside world.

Gathering before everything is prepared before us makes it hard for our missionary work. Our missionaries depend upon the scattered Saints to help them find openings. They depend upon the scattered Saints to furnish them the nuclei from which to work. The scattered member in his desire to get where church privileges are plentiful is apt to forget in his zeal the good he can do for the missionary. This constant emigration to Zion without the previous acquiescence of the proper authorities is apt to leave the mission field too poor in numbers.

Unacquainted with the exact spiritual condition in Zion, these newcomers spoken of above place their hopes and expectations too high. They find conditions spiritually not as they expected. They find many people not loyal to the church. They find the children of some of the leading men living lives of sin. Perhaps too they are blind to true spirituality, and cannot see the true brightness of the true Saints. Their eyes become fixed only upon the worldliness of their surroundings. These are the people who have come because of the halo around the term Zion, and are those who have come to get something out of the Zion condition religiously, if not economically, and have not come to give or serve. They fail to help in the building up of Zion, and become a drag upon it. Having misunderstood the financial and spiritual law of Zion, they are unprepared to live under it. They have thought that the law of stewardships could not be observed out in the world, and have refused to do so. They are, therefore, no better prepared to live under the law of stewardships in Zion. They have come entirely unprepared.

What Is Proper Preparation for Zion?

These possible dangers in the gathering movement, all of which seem to be due to proper preparation for the gathering, raise the question as to what is proper preparation for the gathering. What preparation should an individual make before he gathers to Zion or the regions round about?

There is one preparation, personal in its nature, which everyone must make before he can expect to make a success in his gathering to Zion, and before he can expect to be of service and help in Zion. That preparation is a religious one. One must have an abiding faith in this gospel. His faith should be one that has been severely tried, or else one that can successfully stand the many trials which are apt to make one doubt. His faith must be in this work, not in its leaders, present or past, exclusively. The work as represented by this church must be God's work to him. He must be able to stand by it no matter what leader falls, no matter what other people do.

He must expect to find many things going on in Zion that perhaps he did not think existed there. He will find his brethren in name not as righteous as he thought they were or should be. He is apt to find children of leading men leading corrupt lives. He is apt to find some very open corruption, especially if he starts to look for it. He is apt to find considerably more backbiting than he expected. More gossiping among the members, too. He is apt to be disappointed in his business relationships. There is a possibility that he may be cheated out of his possessions by dishonest Latter Day Saints, or, if not dishonest in the strict sense of that term, at least willing to take advantage of a newcomer. The newcomer must have a faith that will live through all these possible trials. He cannot pin his faith upon some man or his children and expect to stand the test.

Such a faith comes by prayer and fasting only. A man who is not a praying man need not expect to be successful in Zion. Oh, it is quite possible that he may make an economic success, but not a success from the standpoint of the uplift of Zion. If a man comes in merely to better himself religiously and has not himself withstood some severe trials, or is not able so to withstand, he will fall by the way, and perhaps wish that he had never come.

Further, he must be willing to do what is right, no matter what disappointments he may meet. He must be willing to say that no matter what others may do, he and his family will serve the Lord. He must be willing to boost the church, and remain loyal to the church, even though others may not seem to do and be so.

To be prepared properly, religiously, the newcomer should have learned prior to his coming the limitations to the rights of free speech and criticism. He should have reached the point that he can control his tongue and his acts to that extent that his words and acts shall be a help to the Zion project and not a detriment. He should have learned that should he have any word of correction or criticism against a brother, he should first take that word to the brother in question, and then, if further work is necessary, to the proper authorities and to them only.

This religious condition is an absolutely necessary prerequisite to a successful religious life within Zion. Unless one has this religious preparation he is very apt to be a hindrance and not a help to the redemption of Zion.

Besides a religious preparation a prospective immigrant to Zion should have made some economic preparation. He should at least be able to make a living for himself and his family. This is one of the fundamental duties of every man.

If a young man, and his life's work has not been decided upon, at least economic independence ought to be in sight.

We do not wish to be understood that the poor are not wanted in Zion. The ability to provide for oneself and family is not an absolute prerequisite to one's desirability in Zion, but at least no one should be satisfied with himself unless he has this condition fulfilled. The poor, who come with the purpose of receiving help, with no desire to increase their own powers to help themselves are, however, undesirable, and will be a menace to Zion's uplift.

Again, prepare a place for yourself in Zion before you come in. A place to come to should be looked up before making the final move. Don't expect to come in and find a place to go to immediately. You will lose by it financially, and hence the Lord's work will suffer. Prepare the way before coming. A personal visit to Zion and its borders is a splendid idea if it can be done before moving. Look around. Either have your place picked out before you come, or else plan to look around considerably after you come before making your final settlement. In the latter case be sure your finances are in such a shape that you can take the time and means to look around. Don't rely upon the bishop to make your decision for you, as to what business to take up or where to take it up. Be able to make your own decision, predicated upon the bishop's advice, and then rely upon your own decision. Before coming, become acquainted with all the economic opportunities of the land of Zion and her borders. Find out where your trade or business will best fit in, and where you can most easily move to with the least disturbance to your financial prosperity.

By all means consult with the bishopric concerning your prospective move to Zion. This should be considered an absolute prerequisite to the move. If you don't consult with the bishopric, you have taken your first step in the wrong way. You have shown either your ignorance of the law, or else have shown that you are unwilling to work together in the building up of Zion. Consult with the Presiding Bishop, but also consult with the various stake bishops.

Don't expect the Presiding Bishop to give full personal attention to you. He has many helpers on the job for that very purpose. To a large extent each bishop is acquainted with his own territory better than anyone else. He can better tell you whether your economic condition will fit into his community, and if so, in what part of his territory you will best fit in. Consult with the bishopric under every circumstance. Unless you are willing to do this and really do it, you are doing that which is harmful to Zion. Consult with the Presiding Bishop that he may have opportunity to consider your prospective move in the light of the entire church's best good. You may be able to fit in in several places, your spiritual services may be of benefit any place, and there is a possibility that considering the needs of the church as a whole, the Presiding Bishop may have some special advice for you. He may not. However, you have done your duty.

Think a long time before you act contrary to the general trend of their advice. If you have differences of opinion, apprise the bishopric of these. It may materially alter his advice; he will get your point of view. But remember the bishopric are making their decisions in the light of the general good of the Zion project. Too, there is a possibility that the bishopric may be mistaken, but rare. To avoid errors, be sure to apprise them of every condition, even, as we said above, your objections to their advice. If you take the advice of several of the bishopric separately, and then draw your conclusions from them all, and act in general harmony, you will rarely be in the wrong from the viewpoint of Zion's uplift.

Of course many times people may come to Zion against the advice of the bishopric and yet make money hand over hand, yet most likely they will do it in a way that will not help out in the Zion project. There are possibilities that the bishopric may advise you contrary to what you think will be for your best economic good. They may do this knowingly. They may do this ignorantly. Be honest and frank with them. If they do it knowingly, they may be taking into consideration factors in the Zion project other than your mere economic success. The spiritual interests of the territory into which they advise your moving may be uppermost in their minds. If they make their advice ignorant of some of the conditions which you have held back, you have been a serious menace to the church.

The thought of your being advised to move into certain territory because of spiritual considerations brings us to another preparation which should be made prior to your incoming. Consider carefully what good you may do spiritually in the various communities into which you move. Don't move always with your own good in mind. Spiritual laborers are really few in Zion. Too many move into the central places and then die spiritually of inactivity. They should have moved out into some small branch in the regions round about, and there exercised themselves spiritually and helped out in the church work in some active way. Don't consider your economic welfare only in your moving. Not only consult with the bishop, but also consult with the spiritual authorities of the various stakes. Let them find out about you.

Before moving, be sure to consider the needs of the work where you are. Does the branch where you now live need you? Do the missionaries in your territory need your presence? Can you yet be an active factor in bringing souls into this gospel plan? Have you warned your neighbors? A man who comes to Zion "for safety," who has not warned his neighbors, has already shirked his duty, and most likely will be a detriment in Zion. He needs yet conversion to his duty. You have no right to move to Zion with your gospel light and leave your neighbors in spiritual darkness without some effort having been previously made to lessen that darkness. Talk to your local elders and missionaries about your proposed move to Zion.

Last, but not least by any means, have you lived the full

The Musical Institute of the Tri-Cities Districts

In harmony with the plans of the Department of Music to hold, during the winter and spring months of 1921, musical festivals and institutes in a number of districts of the church, there was successfully conducted at Davenport, Iowa, on the 12th and 13th of February, a very interesting and enthusiastic institute. This event, held for and participated in by the musical forces of the Eastern Iowa and the Kewanee, Illinois, Districts, popularly known as the "tri-cities section," was highly successful and profitable. The work done and the enthusiasm gendered will prove a true incentive to further musical advancement we feel sure; and the occasion will eventually prove an epochal one in the musical history of these important districts.

The sessions were mostly institutional in their character, although interspersed with musical numbers; and only in the last session of Sunday evening was the program entirely of an entertaining character. The various sessions as to character were about as follows: Saturday afternoon (February 12), 2.30, institute work; address, paper, and a "round table." Saturday evening, 7.30, address by the writer as the personal representative of the Department of Music, and a general choir demonstration and practice by the combined choirs of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Illinois. Sunday morning, 11.00, special sermon on the place of music in the church, by Elder Amos Berve, president of the Eastern Iowa District. Sunday afternoon, 2.30, further institutional work with a continuance of the "round table" of the preceding day. (This round table proved one of the most enjoyable features of the institute.) Sunday evening at 7.30 a general program of the best in music for the enjoyment and edification of those present, with an anthem by the combined choir.

One of the most gratifying things connected with this event was the lively, hearty interest manifested. Even the services that were expected to be slimly attended were most agreeably disappointing in that regard and good audiences for most of the services and a crowded house for one service amply repaid all for the labor involved. The people were genuinely and deeply concerned; their desire to learn more about their musical work was real; their enthusiasm was permanent. Consequently the work done and the ideas advanced will be retained with them and made the basis of their future musical growth. And we are satisfied that they will develop themselves as they go along, and we look for some good things musically from them in time.

We met many, very many talented people of these important districts at this institute and are further mindful of the fact that God has richly blessed many of his Saints with "the gifts of music and of song." And we only pray that they will seek to cultivate these gifts, thereby preparing themselves for greater service. In not only this but in all other respects our experience with the Saints of these prominent districts was most gratifying and we parted from them with feelings of both regard and regret.

Several very pleasing experiences were had while with these Saints. One was our work with the combined choir, which financial law of the church before coming to Zion? In other words, do you now live under the stewardship plan? If not, don't move to Zion unless you are willing to do so. The best way to know whether you are willing to do so is to live under this plan before you come. If you don't know what the stewardship plan is, be sure you find out before you come. Unless you are willing to abide the temporal law before you come, you will be a detriment rather than a help in the Zion project, and you will wish you had not come. You may be a success financially, but you will not be a success religiously and spiritually.

we were privileged to lead in the choir demonstration and practice on the Saturday night session. This body of singers, although not accustomed to singing together, was one of the most alert and responsive groups we ever handled. They quickly grasped the instruction presented and did the things we directed them to do. Consequently the anthem chosen was rendered on Sunday night with both expression and finish. To Sister Cora Hart, chorister of the Eastern Iowa District, is due the credit of preparing them well for this final effort.

The other pleasing incident was our meeting with the orchestral forces of the Rock Island Branch on the following Monday night. This interesting group of young Saints (yes, "Doc" Asay is still young) are talented and eager to learn. They listened eagerly to plans and instruction we presented for their future work, and we confidently look for good things from these intelligent Saints in the future.

The following two excellent papers were among those read at this institute, and we secured them for this issue.

The Spiritual Value of Song

God has said, "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me." He has also commanded us to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song." And again Paul has enjoined us to "sing with the Spirit" and "with the understanding." Surely there is much in these three statements, and if we could only grasp more fully the significance of the Father's counsel, heeding the admonitions given, greater would be our development in musical art.

That we might comprehend more fully what God meant by "the song of the righteous," let us divert for a moment to learn who the righteous are. Paul says the righteous are the redeemed of God, those who keep his commandments. With this we can understand more clearly how that, after complying with the law, continually keeping his commandments, our songs may ascend to him as prayers. The great God in his infinite love and mercy for mankind, seeing man's many weaknesses has provided this means whereby those who are not able to voice the desires of their hearts in verbal prayer may offer it to him in song; for many a song voices more clearly the hopes and desires of our hearts than we ourselves could express. Knowing this the Father is willing to accept our songs as prayers, when offered to him in the spirit of prayer.

Yet, he has commanded us to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song." Oh, that our young people would heed this admonition given, and strive to cultivate more fully this wonderful gift. Surely there are many, who if they but knew the musical talents God has given them, would spare neither time nor money in developing them, that they might be used to greater advantage in his service. "But," says one, "I can't sing"; yet we hear him going about his daily work humming some sweet melodious tune in a voice which, if properly cultivated, would have the power to sway an entire audience. To cultivate your voice does not necessarily mean that you must spend a lot of money taking instructions from some prima donna, or going abroad to study under some musical master. No, that is not necessary; yet we may receive wonderful instruction from some good musical director, who perhaps has received his or her training under the tutelage of some great vocalist. We cannot know the talents that lie within until we have tried to cultivate, toward which natural instinct seems to point.

Then, having cultivated the gift of song, that we might give to God the best we have, we still have the gentle command to sing with the Spirit and understanding. Dear Saints, herein lies the keynote to all real music: To sing with the Spirit that we might fill the souls of those who hear, and to understand that we might carry to their listening ears the message that God has given us. Too often we sing with only the lips, while our hearts and minds are pondering upon other thoughts that carry us away from the real spirit of song. Songs sung in this manner are not acceptable to God and cannot be accepted as prayers to him; yet on the other hand, if as we sing we comprehend the meaning of the words accompanying the music, and sing them with the spirit of understanding, surely they will find their way into the hearts of those who know not God and be instrumental in leading them, through the gift of song, to the fountain of everlasting life.

Praying in Song

Turn the pages of your hymnal and note the songs that are actually prayers. Just to illustrate what we mean we will quote briefly from some of our best known hymns:

"O God! give strength to all thy saints,
And courage give them, too."

Has not your sad, discouraged heart been lifted from the depths by the earnest prayer and thought expressed in those words? God's ever listening ear is ready to catch each and every petition from us, his children, whether those words be spoken, sung, or only expressed in the strivings of our inward spirits.

If you feel you lack faith, pray in song these meaningful words:

"Lord, give us such a faith as this,
And then, whate'er may come,
We'll taste e'en here the hallowed bliss
Of an eternal home."

When we feel the cords of sin and worldliness beginning to tighten around us how our hearts and voices cry out to God in

"Nearer, my God, to thee."

The blessings of God, how manifold they are and how we love to express our thankfulness to him and our voices joyously take up the strain—

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Every word you sing is fraught with your gratitude, and I am sure our heavenly Father rejoices in this praise we tender him.

Prayer, being communion with God, surely the sweetest emotions of our souls are carried to him on the wings of these and scores of other songs. The Spirit has often descended upon waiting congregations as they cried to God in their opening songs. Many times in our homes we have lifted up our voices, and the spirit of peace and comfort has come to us when it seemed that all around was dark.

We may sing, employing every law of the art of music—time, expression, pronunciation, and all the essentials that go to make harmony may be perfect—but if our spirits and thoughts are not feeling and thinking the sentiment of what we are singing how useless are our efforts. Shall we harshly call it "lip service"?

Oftentimes our own stumbling tongues can find no words to express the deepest emotions of our souls. Then how glorious and soul satisfying we find a song that conveys all we wish to express in simple, beautiful words!

Can a congregation or a choir pray in song if there is discord between different members of either body, or between officers, or officers and members?

We are admonished to be as one body, and when our songs ascend to God they should go as one mighty voice. Music is harmony, and in the greatest and fullest expression of this beautiful art there must be harmony and spirituality in our lives if the song indeed becomes a prayer that will reach the throne of God.

The Nevada, Missouri, Conference

Upon invitation of Brother Edward Rannie, district president, and Sister Oscar Masterson, district chorister, we attended the general and auxiliary sessions of the Clinton, Missouri, District, February 18, 19, and 20, held at Nevada, Missouri.

As this occasion was preeminently a district conference, the musical work attempted was not nearly so extensive or elaborate as at the institute at Davenport, Iowa, but some good work was had, and some institutional features of a real educational character were introduced.

Much that was said concerning the institute at Davenport could also be said about this less extensive effort. As at Davenport, the Saints here were eager to learn about their work in music. The proportion of talented ones was just as great as at other places, and we pray that those so endowed may be led to cultivate these precious gifts. We are confident that in time there will be some worth-while development among these Saints.

One particular thing that gave us great pleasure was the reception by the young people of ourselves and our work. These earnest young Saints impressed us deeply with their sincerity and devotion to the church and its work, and we believe they will in time develop into valuable timber in the church. God has abundantly blessed them with rare gifts which we pray they may cultivate and thus qualify for better service in his kingdom.

Cultivating Appreciation for Better Music

Recently the writer was asked to play the piano for a very informal group gathered in a public place and desirous of being entertained. In compliance with the request he played some numbers not at all difficult, that had in them real beauty and musical worth. It did not take long to discover that his offerings were not successful. A glance about at the supposed "listeners" was all that was needed to show that he was not reaching them and never would unless he found something that went into their senses farther than the music he was using.

My inspection of this group was rudely interrupted by a sensible-appearing young lady who had appointed herself the official interpreter of the assembly and informed me in a hopeful tone that "what they wanted to hear was something with a little 'zip' to it and not that slow 'high-brow stuff.'" So, that was it; I was not playing what they wanted; my music did not find the responsive chord in them and it would not do. So, realizing that my reputation as a pianist must suffer a severe shock unless this ultimatum was obeyed, and feeling that I was but another of the many who cater to the popular taste and who find refuge in the thought that it is better to obey than to sacrifice—I played some "zip" music. Some of the group attempted to sing the words that were written under this jumble of notes, and the grand and inspiring (?) result was one so familiar that it needs no comment. If my humble opinion may be written here, it is that this "late music" will always be late if it has to catch up with the style and value of the numbers that I so innocently allowed to be trampled under the feet of those who demanded a song for their taste, and whose desire to turn and rend me was appeased by throwing them a palatable bone.

This little incident is mentioned merely as a starting point for my argument against this "zip" kind of music. I am not one of those long-haired ones with a "temperament," but I am a defendant of the good music that is constantly being shoved under this ever-growing pile of junk that is really worthless when it is examined under the light of good music. Although young in years I am aware that the youth of the church are being led away from the beautiful in the realm of music by this sort of so-called "late music."

The youth of the church have it within their power to bring the music of the church to a position of service and honor. They are also in a position to detract vitally from the power of the conquest for truth by putting their time and talent into the study of ragtime and jazz music that is found in such abundance everywhere.

It has been my privilege to hear about all the tunes that are popular with the public to-day. I have tried to catch their appeal by singing them over and playing them, but it won't come to me. They are not able to satisfy the wholesome demand for real melody and harmony that arises in the being of anyone truly musical. They will, it is true, entertain many for a time, but that entertainment finds its most fitting expression in some beautiful theater watching the attractive entertainers as they dance and cavort in the glittering atmosphere of cheap and sinful pleasure.

Yes, I have been in such places several times, and have read many columns written by the critics of the larger papers, and it is evident from their criticisms that we all see and hear about the same things.

Never have I seen a blind person at a musical comedy or a vaudeville performance, but they are seen at the concerts of those artists who have won fame by virtue of their real worth as evidenced by their performances. The next time you are at one of these musical comedies, or a patron at the offerings of the Keith Circuit artists, just close your eyes upon the beauty of the settings and the attractiveness of the players and hear the show without seeing it. You will soon discover why you are there. It is to see what you can see. It is why the orchestra chairs are the big sellers. You are paying to watch the show as it passes in beauty and glittering splendor before your eyes. That is a good reason why you should stay at home and study the works of the masters of music, who have left us their heritage of beautiful and inspiring works.

It is my hope that the young of the church will take their music work more seriously and bend their efforts toward bringing to the services of the church some real music. It is your privilege to educate along these lines the people who attend your services. It is your duty to make your services attractive by using the power of good music. To be sure it requires effort and study, but who has ever achieved anything without labor, that has been worth mentioning.

You attend the General Conferences and hear that great choir render the inspiring works of masters; and who would not thrill at these renditions? Have you realized the effort and untiring devoting to this line of work that is required to produce such noble and technically correct results? Have you ever thrilled at the achievement of a task that has demanded your best thought and powers? This is the kind of effort that will be necessary to bring your department of music up to the desired standard. The results will testify of your labor, and no labor is too great to achieve such possible results.

It is necessary that your music be in charge of some one who has caught the vision of the possibilities in your branch. No branch is too small to have a group who will strive to put the power of music into their religious services. Good music is the only kind to use.

You will not need any knowledge of the "Broadway hits" to assist in the church, but if you are going to do effective work in the department of music you will have to have a working knowledge of the better divisions and classes of music and be awake as to how to use them in attracting your fellow men to your church.

Young of the church, bend to the task; study the classics, acquaint yourselves with the lives of the masters, and from this time on dedicate your time and talents to the furtherance of real music.

What of the Old-Time Chaperon?

Two clippings are on my desk. One was sent by a thoughtful sister in the West some time ago, and the other I have just clipped from the current daily. Between the two extremes of the puritanical lawmaking of the past, and the laxity of control over to-day's young people, parents must choose a safe and sensible path. Dangers lie all about, and headed in a wrong direction either way one is sure to find the precipice. Unreasonable restriction and an unsympathetic attitude towards the developing adult lead to rebellion and the "devil-may-care" spirit of the over-curbed, while blind indulgence and a smug leaving of offspring to just "tumble up" in any old way is just another sure road to disaster.

Latter Day Saints must admit that the forces of evil are not stayed at the present time. If we can believe the prophecies we can but feel sure that their influences were never so strong nor their agencies so diverse. We cannot combat them by closing our eyes to their existence. We must see, must know, and then must act according to the light that is within us. "Bring up your children in light and truth." This is their only safeguard in the "perilous times" which are ahead. Along with this—our sacred duty and divine commission—shall we not use the power of prevention, of warning, and of watchcare?

Does "watchcare" mean that we are just to teach our children a few things, and then deliberately throw them into the caldron and expect them to climb out unhurt? Is it enough to say, "There are whirlpools and treacherous shoals," and then allow them to wander with careless, laughing eyes into the polluted stream? Or, is it a part of our duty to remove temptations far from these precious souls as long as we may, until such time as their positive natures shall have been guided and molded and trained into characters too strong to be torn to pieces in the conflicts that shall come?

School life is not the life to-day that it was thirty, twenty, or even ten years ago. Many modern habits have combined to loosen spiritual anchorages, and to develop a superemotional life that is most dangerous to purity of thought and deed. All about are evidences of irreverence, sacrilege, contempt for sacred things and ceremonies. Marriage is made a mockery, divorce a frolic. "The eternal triangle" seems to be the basis of every popular picture, play, or book. Young people seem to have lost the art of entertaining themselves, or to find in the old-time joys anything more than boredom.

Is this a condition to be lightly considered? Must we not realize that to meet the new and deplorable environment, much greater diligence on our part is needed? Shall we not bend our energies to the problem of protection for our young people, careful guidance, intelligent training, an implanting of love for God and for the things of eternal worth, which will enable them to stand against the things which are coming on the earth?

There are those who laugh at the old-time idea of chaperon. They point to France, and the loose morals which all their system of rigid chaperonage was powerless to prevent. But shall we attribute their faults to this one custom? Do not the reasons for departure from paths of virtue lie deeper? Could we fear chaperonage for our young people when they are carefully taught to esteem truth, purity, and godliness above every thing else? And why not throw this protection about them—not because we feel they wish to do wrong, but because it is not safe nor fair to them to expose them to the tempests before the timbers of their souls are strong enough to resist the blasts and the storms that may sweep over them!

We would like to have parents who have had experience with young people give their views upon this subject. In a multiplicity of counsel there is wisdom, and truly we desire the best for our loved ones!

A. A.

To Go, or Not to Go—That Is the Question!

Question. My problems are a boy and girl, 13 and 15. In common with other young people, they like to go out with members of the opposite sex—which is natural enough—but "because nobody does it" they object to chaperons.

Both of the children are in high school. My son goes out with other boys and girls in a high power machine and gets home at 10.30 and 11 o'clock. My daughter never goes out alone with boys, nor does she go out after dark except with her brother or some grown person.

My boy is not bad, just normal. He is athletic, the captain of his school team, and the girls are only too anxious to please him. And, Mrs. Lindsey, boys and girls of that age seem to be absolutely without common sense.

I am afraid I will defeat my own purpose if I forbid him to go out. All the boys would call him "sissy," and you know what that means to a boy of that age. I do not understand why the girls' mothers allow them to go out unchaperoned, but what can I do?

The children's friends are always welcome in our home; but now they consider it "sissy" to have just a good time at home with music and games.

Of course my daughter feels terribly abused that she cannot go out as freely as the other girls. I am sorry to make her unhappy, but I know that some day she will thank me.

Would you advise me to absolutely forbid my son to go out with these other boys and girls unchaperoned?

I enjoy your "Log" very much and enjoy your opinions even when I disagree with you because they make me think.

PERPLEXED.

Answer. Thank you. The ambition of my life is to make more and more people think. If they will only do that they may disagree with me until the crack of doom.

I would not advise you to positively forbid your boy to go out unchaperoned. He might defy you and you would then have a serious situation. You must secure his cooperation and that takes patience. Of course it is the freedom of his companions that makes your problem complicated; it seems almost impossible to keep young people from doing as their companions do.

What you need to do is to make your boy understand that the situation involves possibilities of trouble for him. It may take a jolt to drive that fact home to his brain cells; if so, you will have to be patient and await the jolt.

One of my closest friends has been facing just your problem, but she waited patiently and the jolt came. The boy went out one night with a "cheap little girl" because he thought it was smart. They were out too late one night and the "cheap" little girl's mother insisted on a wedding. It will take too long to tell you how the tragedy was averted; but the boy was cured and his wise mother, after helping him out, came to me explaining.

"He would not believe me," she said, "and now he knows I was right."

It is needless to say that his mother has taken on added value in his eyes.

If you want to read the thing that will help you most in your problems, I advise you to get Jane Addams's wonderful study of youth, The Spirit of Youth in the City Street.

War and Automobiles Responsible for Immorality

ATLANTIC CITY, NEW JERSEY, February 26.—The war and automobiles are responsible for the "appalling immorality" among high school students, Miss Lillian E. Dimmitt, dean of women at Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa, declared yesterday in an address before the National Council of Deans of Women. As a corrective she suggested that women's colleges adhere closely to the old standard of chaperonage for students.

"The war has played havoc with our ethical standards," said Miss Dimmitt, "and after four years of killing, it is only natural. It is responsible for a part of the riotous license found among students in the junior high schools. The number of cases of immorality is appalling.

"Extreme social life has found its way into the schools and colleges. High school girls are the social butterflies and get their ideals from the sensational movies.

"While a careful system of chaperonage would not guarantee right living or pure morals, it would be protective and react on the students and help save the home from the bitter criticism of to-day."

Miss Alice Robertson, member of Congress from Oklahoma, in an address before the National Council of State Superintendents, made a plea for the "old home ideals" for women.—Omaha Bee.

Results of Idleness

Idleness is the mother of vice.

A boy or girl who is allowed to grow up doing nothing is quite certain to form bad habits. The parents of such have an alarming responsibility. If they let their children run about late hours of the night instead of trying to interest them at home with instructive, interesting amusement and reading and instilling into them moral habits so they will grow into trustworthy citizens instead of chronic loafers, drunkards, and gamblers, their responsibility will be increased. Give them plenty to do; you will then preserve their morals and they will honor and make happy your old age. Better a tired body than a vicious mind, for our prisons then will have been built for naught. REGINA ROHRER MORTON.

LETTERS

Getting Into the Work in England

A letter from Charles Fry to President E. A. Smith, February 8. Brother Fry has been appointed to succeed Bishop May in charge of finances in the British Mission.

The ten days passed since we arrived here have been filled with a variety of important and somewhat trying activities. President F. M. Smith met us at Southampton, where we landed about 9.30 Sunday morning, January 30, after waiting outside the harbor most of the night for the tide to come in. To meet a friend at such a time is an unusual delight, so our discovery of his presence on the dock was certainly a delightful one. We arrived at Saint Leonard's about 2 or 2.30 p. m., and the same evening Brother Gillen and I were politely introduced to the difficult problems before us, upon which we have been working ever since.

We are hastening the transfers of the several titles in Saint Leonard's and a solicitor is now looking after the matter. To-day I gave check for $42, ten per cent of the freehold price, which legalizes the contract for the purchase, final payment to be made by May 9. But the solicitor thinks he can get the papers through in two weeks by which time we shall likely be in a position to make final payment. Under the direction of the brethren I assumed general charge of the premises February 1, and this morning (8th) Brother and Sister Sorden took immediate charge of the house, with kitchen, dining room, etc. They both give evidence of excellent capability. Probably within about three weeks our business affairs will be so arranged that Brother May with his family will be at liberty to return to America.

President F. M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams left early this morning for Palestine. They go via Paris, expecting to sail from Trieste. If their work there is as arduous as their work has been here, their visit will by no means be a pleasure trip. President Smith is one who has the knack of finding plenty of substantial work wherever he is.

Late last Saturday I slipped away to Wiltshire to visit my people there. But joy and sorrow were strangely mixed. I found my mother at the age of eighty in better health than five years ago, and though totally blind is highly cheerful and hopeful. But my youngest sister whom I left in the bloom of young womanhood lies more helpless than a newborn babe, having suffered more than can be described during three and a half years since her second child was born under the severe conditions incident to the war: her husband in France, two households to look after with other cares, and the shortage of food, all of which broke her health; and then to develop cancer, followed by maiming operation and continued deforming of her body until she bears but slight resemblance to her former self. The only words I received from her were what I read in her pleading eyes. My sorrow is greater than I have ever before known, as she was most lovable from her infancy.

As to our mission, I think Brother Gillen is one with me having faith in the future of the work here. We feel that the English Saints will readily respond to the gospel call, and with an efficient organization the opportunities will be open for an ingathering.

With regards to all inquiring friends,

Sincerely,

CHARLES FRY.

Holden Stake Conference

Some important resolutions passed and interesting developments noted.

The conference held at Holden, February 25, 26, and 27, was the best ever held in the stake, both from the standpoint of attendance and constructive work. The spirit of activity consecration, and cooperation was in evidence from the first meeting. The first session opened Friday, 10 a. m., with devotional services in charge of W. S. Macrae and G. W. Hancock. A good degree of the Spirit being present seeming to give assurance that our conference would be a profitable one.

Business session at eleven o'clock, the superintendents of the various departments reporting. C. F. Scarcliff was elected stake Sunday school superintendent, successor to F. A. Cool, whose many duties made it impossible for him to give the proper attention to this department. Brother Scarcliff's many years of experience in Sunday school work have qualified him for this position, and now that his business pursuits will permit him to move out in this direction, we are looking forward to great activity in Sunday school work.

Friday evening was Religio night. The visiting Saints were entertained by a program at the Holden Home auditorium, after which a reception was given for the young people and Religio workers. Refreshments were served to about 150.

The presidency, high council, and bishopric were sustained, also secretary, recorder, and stake chorister.

Arrangements of the joint reunion committee were approved. The Saints were saddened to hear of the death of Mr. C. A. Baker, one of the owners of the grounds of Pertle Springs, who had shown so many courtesies to us during our reunion. The presidency was authorized to send a message of condolence to Mrs. Baker.

The stake president and bishop were empowered to represent the stake on the reunion committee.

Inasmuch as working under the group plan in the various branches had to do with finances, a recommendation was adopted associating the bishopric with the presidency in perfecting group organization.

The matter of publicity at the State fair was left with stake presidency with power to act.

On Saturday a special meeting was called to discuss steps that might be taken toward organizing an educational association for the purpose of advancing general education. Brother Walter W. Smith was present and gave a timely talk on this subject.

Inasmuch as the church is encouraging the development of the wireless telegraph, and the Holden Stake has one station equipped, a resolution was passed authorizing the presidency to appoint a committee of three to cooperate with the general church authorities in promoting and developing radio communication in the stake.

A resolution was passed that hereafter the business of all church departments be transacted in joint conference assembly, the details of procedure to be worked out by the presidency and department heads.

The following resolution was adopted relative to the educational work: Resolved that we approve the organization of an educational association of the Holden Stake for the purpose of advancing general education.

The following budgets were approved, being submitted by Bishop Hunt: Sunday school, $75; Women's Department, $60; musical department, $60.

All women met in the primary room under the direction of the Women's Department, and a priesthood meeting was held in the main auditorium.

At a business session a short talk was given by the stake recorder relative to the methods of procedure in reporting and keeping the record.

The conference was fortunate in having present Saturday afternoon Bishop B. R. McGuire and J. A. Becker. Bishop McGuire was invited to talk on a program for building chapels in the stake. Among other things he suggested that this conference take some action working to this end. The following resolution was passed: Resolved, that it is the sense of this conference that in the matter of building churches throughout the stake, that a church building fund should be created to which every member in the stake should be requested to subscribe, such to be loaned to branches desiring such loan, and that the building of churches be a stake proposition.

The bishopric was authorized to work out the details relative to the church building program.

Sister Laura E. Mann gave a very interesting address on the purpose of the Health Department.

Sister Lola A. Johnson, stake chorister, gave a very instructive talk on the musical department, outlining the work. A short musical program was rendered, the orchestra and Knobnoster choir ably assisting. Sister Johnson is to be commended for the enthusiasm she inspired in the song services throughout the conference.

Sunday services were largely attended, beginning 8.30 in the morning with young people's prayer meeting, a fine spirit prevailing. Sunday school at 9.30. At 10.15 address by J. A. Gardner on organized class work. Sermon at eleven o'clock by President Elbert A. Smith. Bishop B. R. McGuire gave a sermon which was well received in the afternoon.

At 4.30 the young people of the stake met, and great enthusiasm was manifest in organized class work, etc. We only say, "Listen," for you are going to hear from the young people. They are awake with the spirit of this latter-day work.

Sunday evening Brother Walter Smith preached a very fine sermon to an attentive audience, and conference adjourned to meet at Lexington, Missouri; time to be determined by presidency.

Northeastern Kansas Conference

The district conference that convened at Topeka, February 25, 26, 27, was a great success from every angle. The attendance was more than we have had in recent times and the good thing about it was that the ones who came seemed to be in a proper condition to receive a blessing, and every meeting was a benefit to those attending.

The visiting members of the priesthood were Bishop Short, John F. Garver, J. W. A. Bailey, and Lyman W. Fike. There was a good representation from the district also.

The Bishop's agent reported very encouraging conditions. There has been an increase of 175 per cent in names upon his books.

Very encouraging instruction came to us through the spirit of prophecy. To some there was offered a broader future of consecrated service in the interests of the kingdom of God. Certain ones were admonished to reestablish the altar of prayer in their homes. Others were admonished to make their homes consecrated to God, for in the past they had neglected to do so, which thing was not pleasing to God. Also an admonition to the heads of families that the fathers should lead the way for their children and set a proper example before them. Not to say go, but come. And upon all, there was imposed the greater responsibility of a life more consecrated to the cause of Christ.

Our district president, James A. Thomas, was absent. Sickness at home was the reason. But he was not forgotten. We trust that his sick ones recover rapidly.

Semifinal Report

The last issue in March will contain the Grand Total.

It will take a few days to get reports from our agents for the offerings received before February 28. We expect to have all these tabulated about March 15 so as to give the final figures by the end of March.

Should the total fall $20,000 to $25,000 below the 1919 offering, we still have made a very commendable showing, considering the auditorium drive and falling markets.

We trust that your efforts may continue with unabated zeal for a 1921 goal worthy of the greatness of the rapidly expanding Sunday school organization.

Central Michigan Tent Fund

Saints of the Central Michigan District should note that we want to purchase the district tent not later than April 1 and will do so if there is enough money raised at that time. Some of the branches have done excellently and we want to hear from the others. We are ready to purchase as soon as we can be sure of the money. Send it to me at Bentley and I will mail a receipt. weekly prayer meetings, especially the ward prayer meetings, to extend an invitation. The work is followed up, to those who cannot attend, by a short letter giving daily accounts. They want all who can to attend. They want the influence of the services to be felt as widely as is possible.

All of the young people are taking part, and one of the stake presidency remarked that their greatest difficulty is to find work for each one to do, as so many are anxious to do something.

It is essential that the services be for the young people, that special arrangement be made for seating them, that the movement come from the young people, and the work be theirs of visiting and encouraging as many as possible to attend.

Candidate for Indian Commissioner

Thomas L. Sloan spoke recently at Independence, Lamoni, and Saint Louis before our people. He is a candidate for Commissioner of the Indian Bureau on behalf of the Society of American Indians. Referring to his candidacy, he wrote Mr. R. V. Hopkins, of Independence, as follows:

"I feel that my cause is in hands of divine providence, that I am an instrument in his divine plan for the welfare of the Indians. I only hope that if I am called I may have the strength to do my duty, and to do it I shall need the prayers and well wishes of all friends of myself and the Indians. So do not wish upon me the position alone, but with it the strength, faith, wisdom, and blessing from above, to do my full duty. Then I know the Indians will receive some relief and become a power among the people of the land."

Ordination Affecting British Mission

The General High Council of the church met March 3 and ordered the ordination of Charles Fry to the office of bishop. His ordination was first approved by the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, as Bishop of the European Mission, and he has already taken charge of the financial affairs at Saint Leonard's.

At the same time the high council ordered the ordination of Joseph Dewsnup, and Alfred Thomas Trapp to the office of high priest. These men are Englishmen and have long been engaged in the work of the church in that country. We rejoice to see them assuming this greater responsibility.

At the same meeting of the high council J. Arthur Davis was ordered ordained to the office of high priest. Brother Davis has long been engaged as a missionary in the work in this country, as a member of the seventy, and as one of the seven presidents of seventy.

ATTENTION, BOYS!

ATTENTION, BOYS!

WANTED

Five hundred registered Boy Scouts under the church control by June 1, 1921. To insure this, arrangements have been made for the following contests:

1. To each new troop of scouts which is organized under church control and is officially registered between March 1 and May 15, there will be given a loose-leaf troop record book with a durable khaki cover. This book is so arranged that a complete record of each scout in the troop can be easily referred to. It is worth $1.50.
2. Each troop of scouts under church control is requested to send to the undersigned on or before May 15, 1921, a set of six pictures illustrating the activities of their troop. The troop sending the best set will be given as a prize its choice of one of the following:
 - a. An American flag (parade size) 4 1-3 by 5 1-2 feet. Valued at $5.75.
 - b. A bugle—key of G with tuning slide to F. Valued at $5.
 The troop sending the second best set will be given a choice of one of the following:
 - a. An American flag 3 by 5 feet. Valued at $3.50.
 - b. Official troop flag with number and name of troop. Valued at $3.
3. There will be two contests open only to first- and second-class scouts between the ages of twelve and eighteen.
 - a. For the three best articles on the subject, "Why am I a scout?" prizes will be awarded as follows: First prize, Waterproof camp blanket; Second prize, Mess kit or scout ax; Third prize, Scout knife.
 - b. For the three best original stories dealing with scout life, prizes same as those under "a."
4. To the three scouts reporting officially the largest number of merit badges by May 15, there will be awarded the same three prizes mentioned above. Each scout entering this contest must furnish a picture of himself in full uniform.

REMEMBER

Remember this contest ends May 15, 1921. No articles or reports will be accepted for this contest after that time. All material furnished must be "official." This means that it must have the approval of the scoutmaster or some other scout official. We reserve the right to reconsider any of the above awards if a sufficient number of individuals or troops do not enter each contest. Decisions will be rendered by impartial judges.

WE MUST HAVE A COMPLETE REPORT OF EACH LATTER DAY SAINT TROOP OF BOY SCOUTS BY MAY 15. THIS REPORT WILL BE EXPECTED WHETHER THE TROOP ENTERS THE CONTEST OR NOT.

Our Reunions

The genesis of this special reunion number of the HERALD and those which will follow, was a letter last fall from Elder A. E. Stoft to the First Presidency, asking for a few articles on reunion work. As the result of a brief discussion, it was decided that it would be better to postpone the discussion until this spring, and to extend it to all departments of reunion work. This number is one result of that suggestion.

It has been our endeavor to request articles as widely as possible, but we are sure that our limited experience prevented our requesting articles from some of those having excellent experience in more remote reunions. We shall be glad to receive a short statement of successful work; not a press notice advertising your reunion, but an article setting forth plans which are readily adaptable for use elsewhere, and suggestions which are good to be used by other reunion committees.

As to the writers in this number, most of them are already well known to the church. This is true of course of members of the Quorum of Twelve, Gomer T. Griffiths, M. A. McConley, J. F. Curtis, and John W. Rushton, whose experience has been varied in many fields. It is also true of such general missionaries as Elder E. E. Long. Brother Long had charge of the work in Nebraska last year, but this year is devoting his time to the American Indians.

A Carmichael is the bishop of the Lamoni Stake, and previously spent many years in work throughout California. D. T. Williams has been engaged in missionary work in Iowa for several years, and is now a member of the Lamoni Stake presidency, as is also C. E. Wight. Both of the latter have been engaged at the Lamoni Stake reunion the past two years, and both of them have had experience with other reunions.

D. J. Krahl is president of the Holden Stake, and is naturally interested in the Pertle Springs reunion. R. V. Hopkins, as pastor in Zion, and formerly a professor at Graceland College, has been interested especially in the Pertle Springs and the Lamoni Stake reunions. R. T. Cooper has gained his experience in Southern California, though he has been the past two years in the office of Bishop B. R. McGuire.

A. E. Warr came from Georgia and has been in charge of the work in Des Moines the past two or three years. He is especially interested in educational work for our young, and is setting an example by acquiring all that he can himself.

Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser is known to all of our young people as the past general secretary of Zion's Religio-Literary Society. She has been engaged in pastoral work with her husband the past few years, and is at present in Salt Lake City, where they are taking advantage of their educational opportunities.

C. Edward Miller has labored both east and west in the United States, as well as in the Central States. He has labored in Australia and the islands of the sea, but is now located in the Massachusetts District at Providence.

Doctor W. A. Sinclair is a product of Massachusetts, and has resided for many years in the vicinity of Boston. He is well known to our readers from his various articles to the HERALD. He has had charge of the sanitation work at the reunions of the Massachusetts District for several years, and is especially interested in that subject.

Doctor L. G. Harrington, as church physician, and head of the church health department, and head of the Independence Sanitarium, is interested in the healing of the sick, but is more interested in the prevention of sickness and the development of a healthy race of people. He has become a leader in his special line of work.

Alice M. Smith, daughter of President Frederick M. Smith, is particularly interested in the work of journalism, and has had charge of the paper at the Pertle Springs reunion. Miss Ethel Lacey lives at Burlington, and hence speaks for the Nauvoo reunion. This is one of our best established reunions, and always draws a large number from outside of that district. E. D. Moore has made a hobby of journalism, and of all details of the printing business. His daily work is assistant editor and managing editor for the SAINTS' HERALD, and editor of Autumn Leaves, as well as local correspondent for some of the metropolitan papers. For recreation he goes to the Lamoni Stake reunion once a year, and edits The Camp Cricket, doing the work of typing, as well as most of the gathering of news himself.

The above list of contributors presents quite a wide scope of ability and experience. If there should appear some repetition, it must be remembered that the articles have been written quite independently and at our request. We hope to continue to make these special numbers as beneficial as possible to our readers, and to reunion workers in particular.

We are making it a special subject in a few numbers, rather than spreading through the spring, because of the possible convenience in having the subject matter all together in a few issues. If the effort results in better reunions, better organized, with better health, greater spirituality, and greater interest, and better results in class work, we shall be more than repaid for the effort, as will also our contributors.

The Next Reunion Number

We expect to run at least one more number with special articles on reunion work. We already have in hand an article by John W. Rushton on a system of cooperation for district reunions, and one by Arthur H. Mills, secretary of the Department of Music, on reunion music; and we have articles promised from Harold C. Burgess, general manager of the music department, and from John F. Martin, who has done good work in the reunion in Ohio, in connection with the musical work.

L. G. Holloway has written on the place of the reunion in the work of the church.

Sister Laura E. Mann, R. N., has written concerning the health of the camp, in which she discusses sanitation, drainage, and also diet.

We have an article from Elder Amos Berve, who had charge of the commissary at Graceland College for several years, also at several reunions and general conferences, and has since presided over the Little Sioux District, and is now president of the Eastern Iowa District; and another from E. A. Kaler, a professional cook of many years' experience, giving practical suggestions for reunion committees, and discussing how the problem should be handled.

Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, who organized the Temple Builders, and who was the first head of the young women's department, has written on "Our girls at reunion," as has also Miss Mary E. Steele, the present head of the young women's department and of the girls department of the Religio.

F. M. McDowell, the head of the boy movement, and Eugene Closson, one of our best scoutmasters, have jointly written an article on "Our boys at reunions."

Mrs. Audentia Anderson and Mrs. William Madison, superintendent and assistant superintendent of the Women's Department, have written on their department work at reunions. We expect to secure another manuscript from Sister Pearl Gardner, who has had many years' experience as general executive of the Women's Department, and many years' experience in reunion work.

We also expect articles from T. W. Williams on behalf of the Religio Department, and from Gomer R. Wells on behalf of the Sunday school work.

John F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, has promised an article on the organization of the reunion. The Lamoni Stake reunion is certainly a model in that respect, because the work is all planned and arranged for beforehand.

We expect to have articles from C. I. Carpenter, president of the Kewanee District, and Leroy Colbert, of Northern Wisconsin; from U. W. Greene, A. M. Carmichael, Lucie H. Sears, and perhaps others.

The field is by no means covered. We are open to contributions from others who have had experience in reunion work, and administered so successfully in other districts throughout the world. We are presenting more than a proportionate number from those residing in the vicinity of Zion, because in the various stakes we have a larger number of our people gathered in one place to counsel in experience and work, and because we believe the outlying districts would like to know how the work is conducted in the stake reunions. We are also presenting the experience of many reunions throughout the country, with the hope that in this diversity will be found a solution for every problem which may arise.

We will be glad to hear from others with the plans they have tried which have proven successful. In the absence of the possibility of all of us getting together at one place, we can, at least, through the columns of our church paper offer a free interchange of opinions and experience.

S. A. BURGESS.

Reunion Sanitation

In a personal letter we learn that in a certain reunion, and not a small one, there was a great deal of sickness developed. Finally a trained nurse was secured who inspected the grounds and found a great deal that was very objectionable. In fact, so much that she said she would not like to answer for the consequences if the health officers of the city should learn of conditions.

As a people we believe in health and cleanliness. It is inexcusable for us to get together, even temporarily, in so primitive a fashion that disease and contagion appear.

In another reunion no provision was made for toilet accommodations, and still less for proper disposal of garbage. In many cases there is a lack of ordinary forethought to prepare in advance against flies and other carriers of disease.

As one writer intimates, if this is not done our own health department should come down like a sledge hammer on our reunion committees.

Again, whether camping for a single meal or for a week, great pains should be taken to leave our camping site as clean as we find it.

This is a matter, not only of sanitation, but also of sightliness, which in the end means sanitation. Beautiful lakes are spoiled by the excess dumping of tin cans. Scenery is despoiled in like manner with waste paper and tin cans which are left lying around. For sanitary reasons all garbage should be promptly taken care of. For aesthetic as well as sanitary reasons, strict cleanliness should be maintained.

We would especially call attention to the articles on sanitation in this HERALD, and the proposal of the health department of the church. Every reunion which can possibly do so ought to have two days of health work this year. It may not be necessary to devote so much time to it in the future; probably not. But it is a department of work that needs a strong presentation at this time, not only for the healing of disease, and the ordinary prevention of disease through sanitation, but for the development of higher physical powers and better general health on which to build our intellectual and spiritual superstructure.

Zion Builders in Action

Despite the rainy, cloudy morning, the lower auditorium of the church at Lamoni, Iowa, was filled by 8 a. m., Sunday morning (13th) with young people. The service was presided over by Elbert A. Smith, John F. Garver, C. E. Wight, and R. V. Hopkins, and was one of the most remarkable ever held in Lamoni. It was marked by some truly wonderful prayers by some of the young men, by Elder John F. Garver, and by the blessing of the young people for these services by John F. Garver by the direction of President Elbert A. Smith.

A tongue and its interpretation was also presented, and two admonitions by the voice of prophecy.

Elder C. E. Wight stated that prayers were being offered not only here, but by the young people in many places; that Brother Hopkins had informed him that the Independence young people had devoted their Wednesday evening prayer meeting to these services, and would remember them each evening. Word was received from the young people in other places. Elder Wight declared that there was no longer Lamoni, Des Moines, Saint Louis, and Independence, but we are all one as young people of the church.

The service was not marked by many testimonies, many having been given in each of the four preceding prayer services, having thirty to sixty testimonies in each. However, no time went to waste. At the close a pledge was made that each evening, wherever we are, we will pause and offer up a prayer for the success of these services.

The spirit of the occasion was consecration and rededication. The same spirit pervaded the "junior" prayer meeting at eleven o'clock, where in a meeting made up of over one hundred children from fourteen years down there were eleven prayers and twenty-four testimonies and a marvelous spirit of devotion manifested by the children, many too young to be admitted to the services during the week. Their special theme was the good of the "Zion Builder" services.

At the eleven o'clock hour in the upper auditorium the time was shared by R. V. Hopkins and Roy Cheville, on the pastoral and missionary aspects of the work, respectively, they developing their subjects most excellently.

The day furnished typical "General Conference" weather. That is, it not only rained, but it drew a blanket of fog over the scene and volleyed with thunder and spring showers, but the only appreciable effect was to cut down the attendance from the country. At the evening service there was a large audience of young people with an overflow meeting in the basement, where J. W. Wight preached on faith and will continue on the "first principle" themes to be used by Elbert A. Smith for the young people.

The song service at the main meeting was in charge of H. C. Burgess, who has one hundred and fifty young people pledged to be present and seated on the rostrum by 7.15.

Song leaflets are printed and generally distributed, containing some songs not in the church books, including two on "Zion Builders," written for the occasion by Vida E. Smith and Elbert A. Smith. The response was good.

At the opening of the service, in charge of J. F. Garver, a letter was read from A. W. Smith to the young people, among other things urging that a wall of enthusiasm be erected about the speaker. The suggestion was accepted and the audience arose to pledge not only a continuance of their wall of enthusiasm already erected, but in addition a circle of prayer.

The sermon by "Brother Elbert" was on faith, and was typical of him but different from the average sermon on the subject. Instead of demonstrating at tiresome length that the scriptures teach faith he based his remarks firmly on that fact and proceeded to apply the subject to matters of human interest so that every thinking person could see that faith was really an essential element in his life. The sermons are being reported and will be published in the HERALD.

The opening of the series was indeed auspicious, and we have no doubt they will continue to a most gratifying triumph.

Statement From Mrs. R. C. Evans

In the HERALD for January 26 we noted the death of R. C. Evans and stated that we had been informed that he had been in Kansas City shortly before his death arranging to lecture against the church.

We are informed now that his wife, Mrs. R. C. Evans, has made denial, though we have no direct communication from her; but in a letter to Mrs. Riggs of Kansas City she is reported to have said: "No, R. C. was not out of Toronto. Never over your way since he went to the last conference prior to our leaving the church."

This statement of course does not deny the report that he was preparing to deliver the lectures mentioned; whether it was meant to convey such denial, we cannot say; but it does specifically deny that he was in Kansas City or Independence since the conference prior to his separation from the church.

The editors had no first-hand knowledge of Mr. Evans's movements, nor did they profess to convey first-hand information. Our informant was a gentleman who is not a member of the church and who at times has traveled and lectured on "Mormonism." This gentleman, whose integrity we had no reason to doubt, stated positively to Bishop I. A. Smith and Walter W. Smith, church historian, that during the present winter R. C. Evans had been at his home in Independence endeavoring to induce him to take the lecture platform. He also stated that R. C. Evans was in Kansas City arranging for lectures.

If we are able to trace this matter out and report further we shall do so. In the meantime, it is proper to give Mrs. Evans's denial as wide publicity as was given to the report. We have no desire to convey misinformation; indeed, our desire is to avoid anything of that kind.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

To Observe April 6

No General Conference meets this year, and it has been felt that April 6, the anniversary of the organization of the church, should be observed in some appropriate manner.

A program has been arranged for Independence, and at the request of the Presidency a committee has outlined a tentative suggestive program for our various churches in all parts of the world, as follows:

Hymn.

Prayer.

Anthem, or hymn.

Address: Development of internal organization of the church. By district or branch president, or one to be selected.

Music.

Address: Missionary activity of the church. By a missionary.

Music.

Address: Financial progress of the church. Preferably by a bishop or agent.

Testimony of Old Folk: Local branch or district historian in charge.

Seats reserved for the old people of the local congregation who have been pioneers in the work.

Upon this outline each local congregation should be able to build an interesting and profitable program.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Status of the High Council

Some inquiry has come to us as to the present status of the Standing High Council of the church. It will be remembered that at the late General Conference the recommendation of the Presidency providing for the transformation of the Stake of Independence into Zion and the passage of the administration directly into the hands of the First Presidency was adopted. This included reorganization of the Standing High Council of the church so that it would become the Standing High Council in Zion and be composed of men in or near Independence. Following this action and subsequent to the conference, the High Council members tendered their resignations. However, these resignations have not yet been accepted, as President Smith departed on his European Mission before having time to effect the reorganization. Naturally the old members hold over until their resignations are accepted and the new members selected. So, from time to time a majority of the members of the council living in and nearest to Independence have been called together, the council temporarily filled, and such business transacted as of necessity required immediate attention.

Lamoni Stake Number Soon

We now have in hand practically all the material and photos for cuts for the Lamoni Stake Number, and intend to publish the same in our issue of April 6. This will probably be a special magazine number of the HERALD, and of great interest to all those who have lived in, worked in, or visited the Lamoni Stake.

Special issues of each of the other stakes may be issued as soon as the material is in hand.

The Lamoni Choir commenced special practices immediately after Christmas on the "Seven last words of Christ." They plan to present this oratorio the latter part of March.

Reunions: Their Objects and Methods

By John W. Rushton

A typical Latter Day Saint reunion should be a demonstration of the best principles and methods of our religious system.

As reunions are part of the church work as a whole, we must decide what the objective of the church is in order that we may be able properly to appraise this particular feature of our institutionalism.

The church is an organization of those persons who profess religion, especially of the Christian school, and is the agency through which the power, methods, and ideals of that religion shall be socialized.

By "religion" for the purposes of this article we mean that experience in which the individual is in communion with whatever is recognized as the Supreme Intelligence of the universe. Religion finds its highest expression in human life when the individual making the voluntary sacrifice of "self" involving affections, judgments, and will to that Being or Power, cultivates a love for what he loves, a hatred for what he hates, accepts the processes of reasoning which lead to an intelligent acceptance of his conclusions, and disciplines the will until he can say, "My will is lost in thine." Briefly, religion means the losing of the individual identity to find it in God, for "religion is the life of God in the soul of man." Then is realized the exquisite joy of Paul's phrase, "I live, yet not I, but Christ who liveth in me."

We say the church is the association of individuals characterized by this experience, who in organized capacity seek to carry into the life of the community, the spirit, methods, and ideals of that which is the root and center of their own being, and thus convert into an available asset their own life power by processes of socialization—a union of consecrated laborers rather than an insurance society for the saving of the soul.

We Specialize on Practical Sociology

Perhaps more so than any other church we have specialized on what might be termed a sociological interpretation of Christianity. Our main book of polity, the Doctrine and Covenants, offers a definite program for the applying of the Christian principles to the societal structure domestically, economically, industrially, politically, and socially. The realization of this ambitious end is our justification, and until we have done this we are in debt to the conscience and reason of the world.

A reunion, therefore, must be evaluated in the light of this twofold aspect. It must provide opportunities and curricula in and through which the life of the individual may be more fully enriched by the power and grace of our religion and develop the realization of the social value by applying its principles to the life of the community. A reunion therefore is not for mutual self-admiration, nor for isolation purposes ecclesiastically or religiously, but is for experimentation in applied Christianity—a laboratory not a retreat. The end in view of a church reunion therefore must be practicing the art of living together as a society according to the ethic and spirit, rules and methods included in the interpretation of Christianity as we believe it, and so move forward a step further in the effort to reach the sociological ideal by practicing in a, comparatively speaking, small group of families.

Improvement in "Body, Mind, and Spirit"

Evidently, the program of a reunion should include improvement personally and socially in "body, mind, and spirit" as making up the "whole" which Paul insists must be presented to God without defect or blemish.

In arranging for reunions, it would seem that it is important at least that there should be provided opportunities for spiritual culture, through devotional exercises and the preaching of the "Word," for the development of the mind in the securing of an intellectual foundation to our faith, remembering that our creed as advertised is "All Truth." That truth whether discovered in the varying experiences of our race as revealed in history, or by philosophy in the processes of mental analysis or adventurous speculation, or by the laborious and tedious methods of science is equally authoritative with that truth which has been conveyed through the religious processes of prophecy or religious ecstasy. Truth of any kind can become the personal possession of those who shall make it theirs only by experience, whether found in a test tube, balance, or retort, through researches of philosopher or poet or historian, or in the incandescent word of the prophet. This truth is always the elementary and vitalic principle of authority. Hence, in our reunions the search for truth must be the dominating influence, and every department of knowledge to which we have access should be systematically searched. Therefore we might adopt the Chautauqua program to the extent that we shall have as many of those men and women within or without the church, as are available, who have a message, to speak the word that is in them.

Reunion as a Habit-Forming Experience

We should seek to make the reunion a habit-forming experience and try to cultivate the ability to think and speak and act in terms of our religious hopes and ideals, so that when those who have attended the reunion return home they will carry a much better understanding of their privileges as Christian people and a much more artistic way of expressing that understanding in terms of everyday life than they did before.

The reunion should combine spiritual culture for our own members and also proselytizing. But the proselytizing should be through what we might term "demonstration" rather than by mere "theorizing." In these gatherings let the strangers within our gates have a chance to observe the effect of the Christian ethic on our lives and show that if this is the result of our control over that which is little we are justified in asking for control over that which is much, for in this as in all else it is true, "What we are conditions what we get."

Location Important

The location and the kind of grounds for reunions is an important matter. Perhaps some healthy suburb of a large city with enough privacy to insure comfort to the campers without interfering with the privileges of the inhabitants would be a good place, for then people who work in the city could spend their nights out at the camp, visitors could attend without much inconvenience, and there would be publicity to the cause which would prove a very valuable feature. There may be some advantages to a reunion held in the seclusion of the country far away from towns and disturbing matters which might be regarded as objectionable. Personally I like the cities and I enjoy people, and seeing that a reunion implies people and sociability, the more people the better.

The grounds should be selected with a view to health, comfort, and sanitation—the slope of a hill or the summit of some elevated neighborhood, but never the low-lying places where dampness or miasma may gather. It is well that it be not too hilly or rough lest aged people tire themselves, and if possible it should be adjacent to water for bathing and swimming. There should also be in mind the necessary grounds for sports and games for the young folks. If possible have plenty of shade and grass.

It would be well to provide a large space or tent for social purposes, and have it furnished with cots, rockers, and couches for the use of the aged and infirm and those who cannot enter into the sports and pleasures of youthful ones. There should be a few tables with newspapers, magazines, and church publications, also facilities for writing. This should be placed where it will not be in the way of others, and where all may have the peace and quiet which at so many of our reunions seems impossible.

There should also be another large space or tent provided to be used as a nursery, with all possible equipment for the care of babies and small children; and the young women under the supervision of either the Temple Builders or the Orioles could take turns in assisting to care for the little ones under the direction of a nurse or some practical, motherly woman. At all reunions there should be a doctor and a nurse for practical purposes as well as academic and cultural.

Carefully Study Recreational Needs

By all means there should be a careful study given to the recreational needs and all of the resources available and suitable for such occasions provided. There should be a careful selection of those well qualified to take charge of this department, being sure to get a person young in disposition at least, if not in years, and possessing that power of leadership which will win the necessary obedience to established rules.

The musical and dramatic features of the reunion are very important in the enjoyment of the program and there ought to be careful cooperation among the various officers and leaders as well as the choirs. Programs ought to be arranged beforehand and plenty of numbers held in reserve so that all services shall be brightened and enriched by the best music we can supply.

A Place of Demonstration

There is no better opportunity and place for experimenting in church problems in cooperation, economics, and industrial schemes in order to be prepared to meet the problems which exist in the big world outside, and which we are dedicated to solve. Why not the Bishopric test out some of the principles of cooperation in running the commissary, supplying the tents, cots, and equipment, as well as food, etc.? The principles are very simple and could be easily adapted to the reunion's needs in the way our universities or many of them are doing. The payment of ten per cent on the gross profits would be no small item from all of the reunions, which might be devoted for some special purpose, educational, the Sanitarium, or foreign missions, and thus communicate some of the real concrete benefit of the reunions to the church at large.

In this connection also, all families could be taught the method of budgeting in a scientific manner, and through the cooperative method of supply have a practical demonstration of the benefits of running household expenses with understanding, without waste, and without debt. Tithing and other church dues could be discussed in a practical way and this method or something similar used as a means of illustration. All of these matters are of the utmost importance and must be considered by all in the attempt to realize the church's ideal of Zion. Each reunion should be a miniature Zion, a working model of the kingdom of God.

It should be the aim to create in the reunion, for the time being at least, such an environment in which all shall find correspondence and be able to give the highest expression of their religious life.

Without attempting to be too dogmatic or technical we submit the following as a tentative program which suggests how the time may be apportioned and spent:

Suggestive Program for Reunion

6.30 A. M. Reveille.

7.00 A. M. Camp prayer service.

All join in singing the Doxology. The one in charge read some appropriate scripture, then lead in prayer.

7.30 A. M. Young people's drill, calisthenic exercise, bathing, etc.

8.00 A. M. Breakfast.

8.45 A. M. Prayer service.

10.00 A. M. Classes, lectures, children's services, etc.

(Morning is always best for study work in a reunion.)

12.00 Noon Dinner

2.30 P. M. Rest, social visiting, etc., for those who did not care to attend—

Class work, lectures, departmental activities, etc.

Recreational Program

6.00 P. M. Supper.

7.30 P. M. Preaching service.

Sunday Program

6.30 A. M. Reveille.

7.00 A. M. Camp prayer.

7.30 A. M. Breakfast.

8.30 A. M. Prayer service.

9.45 A. M. Sunday school.

11.00 A. M. Preaching.

12.00 Noon Dinner

2.30 P. M. Symposium. Theme: "The kingdom of God."

Representatives of each church department to give an address or essay, interspersed with music.

5.30 P. M. Supper.

6.30 P. M. Religio.

7.45 P. M. Preaching.

Reunions as Revivals for Saints

By J. F. Curtis

A revival for the Saints. An opportunity for the nonmembers.

In many parts of the country our reunions are looked forward to with fond anticipation. Preparation is made for weeks and months ahead. There are some things about the reunions we wish to mention.

First, the greeting of Saints and friends that we have not seen for months and possibly years; Saints who are interested in each other and fired with gospel zeal, strong in the faith, and anxious to see others become interested in the work of the Master. What greater love can a man have than the love that reaches out to his fellow man who is in need of gospel light?

A Benefit to Indifferent Members

Our people have learned and are learning that in order to help others to become interested, they too must be fully interested in the work of the church. I remember the first reunion I attended when I was a boy of seventeen at Clinton, Missouri, in the year 1892. I was then, and had been, a member of the church since I was eight years old. I was interested in the church, but was not working at it as I should. But when I attended the services, and especially the prayer meetings, I was filled with a desire to live the gospel and resolved to make a change for the better, which I did. What was true in my case I have also witnessed in many others. Many, many times have I heard the testimonies of both old and young at reunions declare their determination to take more interest in the church work. Reunions are frequently attended by many who have been isolated from church privileges as well as those who live in branches. Both classes are wonderfully helped in these services.

The preaching of the gospel by one helped and blessed by the Holy Spirit frequently acts like a mirror into which we look and see ourselves as we are. Our shortcomings are both seen and felt. Hard indeed must be the heart that is not touched and softened under gospel fire and power. Faith cometh by hearing the gospel, and frequently when it has been preached have we discerned the faith begotten in the hearers of the word.

A crowd draws a crowd. Reunions generally draw large numbers of nonmembers, and it is a splendid time and place to invite your neighbors and friends to hear the gospel explained. The music and singing are generally of a high order, and a large crowd of interested listeners generally help to enthuse the speaker.

May Reach Nonmembers

Reunions should be held with a twofold purpose in view. First, to better the spiritual condition of the membership; and second, to help those not of our faith to become interested in it. Generally at reunions we have a fine crowd of young people with splendid voices for singing, and often a splendid orchestra can be organized for service. With music and singing combined, here is a fine chance to get our work before others.

Frequently at reunions we have gotten together a crowd of musicians, singers, and preachers, and have held street services before the evening preaching service. Generally we have fine crowds on the street. Following the singing we have a minister speak to the crowd from an automobile for from three quarters of an hour to an hour, with the result that a fine interest is aroused; then a special invitation is extended to the crowd to go with us to the reunion grounds for the evening and other services. By these efforts we have drawn large numbers of visitors to our reunion services.

A good live prayer meeting in the forenoon should be held each day, and sometimes in addition to this a young people's prayer meeting proves a success.

Do not hold too many services a day at reunions, but give time for the young people to have some recreation. The social side of our work should not be forgotten, but nothing should be permitted to lower our standing as children of God. The program will and should vary according to circumstances. The program committee should be alive to the interest of the church work, and valuable time should not be wasted.

Reunions should be located where the grounds are of easy access to the people. A good location means much to the success of a reunion. Generally two preaching services a day can be held if the grounds are close in and of easy access to the people, the morning service generally for the Saints, while the evening service should be devoted to the preaching of the gospel to nonmembers.

The Purpose of the Reunion

By R. T. Cooper

Is it for the spiritual revival of our own membership, or is it for missionary purposes, or both, and to what extent? Is it for spiritual revival or for sociability, devotion, or recreation; for study or amusement?

My answer will be based on a retrospection, and in memory I see a large number of tents, automobiles, the reunion ground, the cafeteria, and other buildings for the comfort of the people at Hermosa Beach, California, and Huntington Beach, where some reunions were held. It was at Huntington Beach where President Frederick M. Smith had his introduction to surf bathing in the Pacific Ocean. The breakers were rolling rather high, the tide about half out, and with a few other swimmers Brother Fred walked down the sand with majestic mien and, as the men remarked, looked as though he would pick up one wave in each hand, but not being used to bucking the surf, was caught in the embrace of a huge comber and unceremoniously "rolled." When he emerged his forehead bore marks of contact with the ocean bed which were not eradicated until some days after reunion was over. But he was game and soon the foremost in getting beyond the line of breakers where he could float, "rocked in the cradle of the deep," with the best of them. In this connection I might say that among the happiest recollections of nearly nineteen years in California are those times with Brethren F. M. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, Fred A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, and various others who lent dignity to the enjoyment of the local brethren on the beach during reunion times. But back to the question; I presume the Southern California reunion was typical of such gatherings throughout the church (excepting the beach).

Among the things found essential and to be provided for were: (a) the renewal of friendships, personal and spiritual; (b) the spiritual services in preaching and prayer meetings for our own members, visiting friends, and others; (c) physical comfort of the people. In this connection I must say that I am a firm believer in the old saying that people who are well fed are contented, good natured, and willing to pay for what they get. By this I do not mean sumptuously fed, but fed on good, wholesome food, well cooked, satisfactorily served, and at reasonable prices. For this purpose the Southern California District built and equipped its own cafeteria, and the service was on the cafeteria style. One of the features especially sought for was that the wives and mothers coming to reunion should not be "stewing" over boiling pots and frying pans and trays, or washing dishes, but that they should have the benefits and privileges of the reunion the same as the fathers and children. In order to accomplish this end, professional cooks were hired to do the cooking, and the result was all that could be desired. It is true this district in the last few years has changed temporarily this order and in the interest of economy has permitted the old order again. This perhaps was all right during the war, but I sincerely hope it will be discarded along with other war measures. Personally, I do not think the men of our congregations would be willing to allow this drudgery of service to fall upon their wives and deny them the privileges of attending the services and preclude them from the social pleasures and recreational benefits which the men enjoy, and to which the wives are entitled as one of their inalienable rights once their attention is called to it. If this paper can succeed in arousing the husbands' and fathers' consideration of that one question sufficiently to accomplish the result, I shall be happy, and I am sure that if the wives and mothers can have this privilege of living like other people at reunion and for the nonce enjoying themselves, they will all return home feeling better and happier.

(b) Recreation. When the great Creator implanted in the hearts of the youth a desire for healthy recreation, I believe he did it just as purposely as he placed in the hearts of people an inclination which in some cases develops so that in later years the idea of a good time is to get up in the morning and "fast" for breakfast, be at prayer meeting by eight o'clock, followed by a series of interlocking services which may be dismissed in time to retire at night in order to allow a sufficient number of hours to rest up for the next day.

Begin With Prayer Service

A well-rounded-out reunion planned on modern lines will encompass something like the following, each of which is equally important in its sphere, and the duty of the reunion committee is to so adjust the exercises that each can be taken care of at its proper time without prejudice to the others, viz:

It seems fitting that each day should be commenced with a short prayer service, and all who can should try to be present, as a preparation for the day.

The morning furnishes good time for active mental application to class study. Brother John W. Rushton used to conduct an excellent class in various live issues with splendid interest and good response, for about an hour. This class can be followed by lectures on questions of special import, or preaching services or conference session, conventions of the Religio, Sunday school, Women's Department, Boy Scouts, or any other meritorious question while the people are fresh and their minds vigorous.

After lunch it seems to be not only fair but conducive to the best results that the major portion of the afternoon be left without any fixed program and devoted to social enjoyment, recreation, especially for the younger people, and for those who have reached a quieter period of life, an afternoon meeting which develops a character all its own for the mutual interchanging of views, retrospection, and friendly discussions of doctrinal points. This meeting is frequently found extremely interesting and affords opportunity for heart-to-heart talks between the patriarch and other men and women whose years have blessed them with a wide experience and a splendid deep love for the gospel and for other people. In these meetings inquiring friends frequently find answers to their queries and the friendly and spiritual encouragement that helps them to make a final decision. Afternoon is also a good time for baptisms, but they should be performed before the surf bathing begins so as to be reverential.

By the time evening has arrived the young people should have returned from their exercises, and the whole gathering is prepared to enjoy a vigorous gospel discourse.

Location Important

The doctrine of prohibition is not a doctrine of development, and the policy holding that reunion should be held so far away from other activities and social pleasures that the people will attend services because there is nothing else to do, is not in keeping with the creative power that combined spiritual, mental, social, business, and physical active potentialities to greater or less degrees in the make-up of every human being; and reunions, which will so manage themselves as to supply, so far as may be, development along all these lines will come the nearest in their efforts to help develop well-balanced members, and the reunion will become more and more a mecca for the annual pilgrimage of old and young alike towards the "measure of the fullness of the stature" of the divine pattern.

One thing, however, should not be lost sight of: "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy" has never been erased from the standard books of the church, and if our young people are allowed reasonable diversion through the week the requirements to refrain therefrom on Sunday can be much more consistently urged upon them on Sunday. Sunday should be kept entirely free from recreation, and while there are a few people who feel it a religious duty to take their daily ablution, and not being able to repair to the bathroom in their residence on Sunday morning during reunion, feel that they must patronize the surf, it should be performed so quietly and restricted to its ostensible purpose that others will not think they are "going in the surf." Sunday is the one day which may be devoted to suitable service, morning, afternoon, and evening, but here again it should be recognized that all of the services are for some of the people and some of the services for all the people, but that not all the services are for all the people all the time.

The Finances of the Reunion

By Bishop A. Carmichael

How to organize the finances so as to secure the best results. Bishop Carmichael says he has always done it as suggested here—and successfully.

The writer of this very brief article has had varied experiences in financing reunions and has never found it difficult so to do. It is simply a matter of business and should be done in a businesslike way.

First. Determine as near as possible how much you will need. Do this by making a budget.

Second. Carefully outline your method of procedure as to how you will raise the needed amount.

Third. Then go after it.

These steps are essential. One of the surest ways of enlisting the sympathy and aid of anyone engaged in money matters is to have a definite, concrete program to offer. The average man wishes to know how his money is to be expended. He wishes to "see" the thing to its end. Armed with such a definite program, the solicitor approaches the one solicited with confidence. Like begets like. This confidence breeds assurance and faith in the one solicited. He feels that he is a part of the business activities. The very fact that you have taken the trouble to acquaint him with the details as outlined in your budget favorably impresses him with the movement.

Back of all this stands as paramount in importance the real need of the person being in sympathy with the ideal for which the reunion stands. This ideal is the building of character, and to make the reunion a complete success the members of the same should be thoroughly converted—spiritually alive.

It is an easy matter to get the necessary financial help from the members who are in touch with the spiritual part of the work. For this reason the writer suggests that the gathering of funds be left toward the last end of the reunion. The members have been receiving the unction of the Holy Spirit and are in a splendid mood to respond. The heart must be touched, and nothing is quite as good to do this as the Spirit of God.

Permanent reunion grounds are an incentive to the Saint who has a business head. He feels that the investment is not entirely wasted. With the thought of permanency is allied the thought of a regular subscription for the continued improvement of the grounds. When the Saints have fully determined to settle down at a certain place and outline a permanent plan for improvements, we have never failed to see it a success.

The Prayer Meeting a Key to Successful Reunions

By Gomer T. Griffiths

Apostle Griffiths argues for intelligent interest in and consideration for the prayer meeting, but in addition to this, a better participation in all the services of the camp.

After many years of attendance at reunions and presiding with others over the same, I can truthfully say that there is a place for the prayer meeting in the reunion, if those who attend go there with a keen desire to increase their spirituality. Every reunion should be prefaced by a good prayer meeting, and as a matter of course it would be pleasing to our heavenly Father if the Saints would come together fasting on such occasions.

When a Prayer Saved a Reunion

My experience is that a good, spiritual prayer meeting in the beginning is the key to the success and life of the reunion. I could relate many incidents in support of this conclusion, but I will call attention to only one. Last August a large number of white people and Indians met at Red Rock, Oklahoma, for a reunion. To our disappointment and consternation a great storm came up the night previous to our opening, and our grounds being situated on a small island were flooded with the exception of a small space in the center which was slightly elevated. As a result the people became discouraged and several of them were on the verge of leaving for home, as the clouds were still black and threatening above us and the rain still falling with no evidence of abatement very soon. Brother Hubert Case and I called the people together for prayer. I felt led to call on Brother Simmons to lead, and as we were standing out in the rain he offered such a prayer as has seldom been heard. While he was praying the clouds began to disperse and the rain stopped. Then we retired to the Indian council house where we had one of the most glorious prayer meetings I have attended in many years. The same power that attended the prayer on the outside continued with us on the inside. Brother R. V. Hopkins of Independence who was present was led to pray, and at the conclusion of his prayer he spoke in the gift of prophecy, directing us to remain on the grounds and hold our reunion, promising that God's holy power would be with us to the end thereof and that great good would be accomplished. It was most remarkable that notwithstanding it was storming all around us we were protected from the severe storms and hard rains until the reunion closed. This reunion was most successful, about thirty being baptized, and had it not been for the first prayer meeting most of the people would have gone home.

Why Not Be Interested in Everything?

There are a variety of elements that enter into a reunion, and great patience must be exercised on the part of those who have charge. For instance, very many of our people seem to be under the impression that the prayer meeting is the only meeting from which they can derive any benefit, and are not in the least concerned in the other services. I have heard them express themselves as follows: "The only meetings I enjoy are the prayer or social meetings. They are my meat and drink." They fail to see that they can get any good out of the preaching services or institute work. As soon as the service is closed in which they are interested, they are absent for the rest of the day. Another class are interested only in the pleasurable features of the reunion, and the "eats" and refreshments. It is also regrettable that some of our people who are earnest, active workers in the institute and auxiliary departments take no interest in any of the other services. It is unfortunate that all who attend the reunions do not cooperate in everything that is carried on with a view to making them a grand success.

Reunions are for the purpose of educating our people in all the various departments of the church, therefore we should be equally concerned in all the activities that will qualify us for service in God's cause. I notice that those who depend solely upon the prayer meetings are often unable to give a proper reason for being members of the church, and those who are interested only in what is sometimes denominated "the intellectual work of the reunions" are lacking in the spiritual features of the work, hence it can be readily seen how easy it is to become unequally balanced in these things.

Back to the beginning: the prayer meetings are absolutely necessary, for they are the medium through which we get our spiritual power, divine wisdom, and heavenly "intelligence," all of which are essential to the growth and development of the Lord's body (his holy church).

As to what time should be given to the prayer meeting, my answer is it should be the first meeting of the day, as a good beginning generally brings about a good ending, or "a perfect day." As to the length of time to be occupied in the prayer meetings, this should be left to those who have the supervision of the reunions whom the Lord says shall be guided by his Spirit in directing the same.

We should not wait until we get to the reunion to do our praying for its success, but we should pray at home in our closets that we might be in a proper condition to carry out our part in making the reunions what God would have them be.

The Prayer Meeting in the Reunion

By M. A. McConley

A necessary and important factor in the development of spiritual conditions at a gathering of Saints.

In order to determine the place of the prayer meeting in the reunion, it is necessary to understand the purpose and nature of the reunion itself. The place of the prayer meeting then becomes self-evident.

The reunion seems to have grown into a generally recognized factor for good in the church to-day. It usually consists of an annual camp meeting of the Saints of a given territory, lasting about ten days. This affords opportunity for a renewal of acquaintance from year to year whereby the tie of brotherhood is strengthened. Many of the isolated Saints have no other opportunity to associate with those of like faith and often are unable to attend any other meetings during the year. They travel long distances at considerable expense to be present at this gathering which to them is an annual spiritual feast. Many of the city people take their vacation by attending reunion, thus making it serve the double purpose of physical recuperation and spiritual uplift.

It is therefore a very important undertaking involving both time and money, and anything which will improve it from time to time is certainly worth while.

Primarily for the Saints

All things considered, it appears to the writer that the reunion is primarily for the Saints, and that programs should be arranged with their special needs for development in view. Probably no reunion committee has reached the ideal in their programs, but the popularity of the reunion among both young and old indicates that a considerable degree of success has attended past efforts.

Without proper spiritual tone, a reunion is a failure, it matters not how beautiful for situation, how delightful the weather, how large the attendance, or how perfect the plans for recreation. But with the proper spiritual forces developed, it may be quite successful, even amidst unfavorable climatic conditions, with but small attendance, and with but limited means for recreation.

It is said that prayer is the key that unlocks heaven. However that may be, experience has demonstrated that there is no other service which will do more to arouse the conscience to a sense of individual responsibility than will the prayer meeting.

At the beginning of the reunion, there often appears a tendency upon the part of the Saints to neglect the splendid spiritual opportunities in the enjoyment of the physical rest and social features which the occasion affords. And this is especially true of those who come from a large city where they have been "cooped up" and "baked" all summer long.

Begin With Fasting and Prayer

I therefore think it wise to commence a reunion with a period of fasting and prayer, which should hasten the necessary adjustment and spiritual awakening. This should be followed by daily prayer meetings. And as experience has proven that in a general prayer service the young people have neither the courage nor the opportunity to take part, separate services should be arranged for them.

During the prayer meeting hour, all amusements or recreational features should be prohibited and everyone made to feel morally bound to attend the prayer service. But if they are to accomplish the maximum good, they must be sufficiently attractive to enlist not only voluntary attendance but participation as well.

Care should therefore be used in the selection of those to preside, as the success of the meeting depends largely on leadership, and especially is this true of the young people's meeting. Service should start on time and close on time and be conducted with snap and vigor if interest is to be aroused and maintained. Prayers and testimonies should be brief, and long prayers and testimonies should be considered an imposition and be avoided.

Special features, such as early morning hikes to the woods or to some place of natural beauty, will contribute to interest, especially among the young people. At a certain reunion last fall, the women went for a walk at 6 a. m. daily, and after a series of calisthenics in the woods, they held a short prayer service. This was conducted under the auspices of the Women's Department and was quite popular. Such special features as the reunion location affords should be undertaken when the weather permits.

I believe if the prayer meeting is intelligently handled, that its popularity among those in attendance will increase daily as the Saints partake more and more of the spirit of the occasion, and that it will prove a very necessary and important factor in the development of that spiritual condition necessary to make the reunion a success.

When I feel like finding fault I always begin with myself and then I never get any further.—David Grayson.

Reunion Prayer Meetings

By D. J. Krahl

All development should center in the spiritual. Prayer meetings are the common table for dispensing spiritual food.

In planning for a reunion, those who have that responsibility should view the entire field of work to be accomplished, bearing in mind that a reunion is for the betterment of all. Each of the requirements of man should have consideration to the extent of its importance in his development. Of Jesus Christ it is written, "And Jesus increased in wisdom [mentally] and stature [physically], and in favor with God [spiritually] and man [socially]."

Every person must travel the same path to reach the "stature" of Jesus Christ. Each of these needs in man's development must be arranged for if the reunion fully contributes to the needs of its attendants. The effort should be to provide for the mental through the educational classes, etc., for the physical in the recreational activities, for the social with social gatherings, and for the spiritual through the devotional services. These lines of development are not independent, but should work in unison for the betterment of the individual.

However, the one of greatest importance, the spiritual, should be stressed. This our Savior did when he said to Martha, But one thing is needful; and Mary has chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her. (Luke 10: 43.) That "which shall not be taken away" is the one "needful" thing, for it endures. In the prayer meetings we get in touch with the divine. We as Mary "sit at Jesus' feet" and receive the direct counsel of the Holy Spirit.

While the development along these four lines is necessary, all should center in the spiritual. The development of man must be spiritual if he reaches the objective. The prayer meetings should be the common table where all meet for that divine food necessary to spiritual life.

The temporal life passes away; the spiritual endures: "All my laws are spiritual." "To be spiritually minded is life and peace"; "it is raised a spiritual body." All our attainments should lead to spirituality. An attainment is fruitless in the ultimate if it is not lasting. The temporal is for a time; the word itself so indicates. Spiritual is for eternity—our efforts should be to build for eternity. In all phases of development there should be the aim to keep in touch with the spiritual.

In the reunion work the prayer service should occupy the center of the field, and all other activities should converge to it.

Time and Place

The early part of each day has been proven a good time for the prayer service: when the intellect is clear and free from the cares which crowd in on the mind at the close of the day—a time when through prayer the program for the day may be dedicated to God; when the individual may consecrate himself for his part in the activities. Truly an appropriate time is the morning hour for devotion.

A tabernacle of sufficient capacity to accommodate the entire family should be provided, so arranged that unnecessary disturbance may be avoided and quietude prevail.

A place in the tabernacle for those having children should be provided, so mothers may attend and receive of the benefits of the meeting. It should be close to an exit where she may quietly withdraw without disturbing others. At some reunions a nursery is provided where the baby may be cared for while the mother attends the service, she taking her turn in caring for the children, thus permitting other mothers to attend.

The Interest

The Lord has counseled his people to be very humble and prayerful. Our success in the work of the redemption is dependent on that. It is, therefore, preeminently important to us.

The interest in the prayer service, as we have observed, has been quite general. Although there are those having their attention engaged in the educational, cultural, and other activities, they are usually found in the prayer service, realizing that their work must have the touch of the Spirit to bring success. It has proven wise to appoint some one to have the general oversight of the prayer services, who generally presides, and calls to his assistance those whom he may desire. There are those who are especially gifted for this work, and they should have the privilege of supervision and direction of this important service.

"Hike" prayer meetings have proven of much benefit, for in the open there is freedom and the removal of restraint which invite to action. Special devotional services for our young people have proven a very interesting feature of the reunion work. The church to be alive must give attention to its young people. When we fail in this we are on the road to dissolution and decay. A reunion committee would be very neglectful which would not make provision for a devotional service for the young. Our young are the church of to-morrow. We of to-day should endeavor to so prepare the men and women of the church-to-be that it will be more glorious and more efficient than the one of to-day. Young people are always interested in meetings "where there is something doing." This will apply to the devotional services as well as other gatherings. Active prayer meetings are interesting meetings, and people are interested in interesting meetings.

There is a cause why everything is as it is. This is true of a prayer meeting, as well as other things. A good spiritual meeting does not "just happen." There are antecedents to it. The law of cause and effect govern and should be studiously observed. That which is necessary to make for a good meeting must be given attention. The proper preparation of the ministers and members, is a very important contributing cause. Each has a responsibility. The result must follow. We need not be overanxious relative to that. Furnish the cause and the realization will bring satisfaction.

A successful reunion is one which leaves the participants on a higher spiritual plane than it found them. The degree of success may be measured by the spiritual uplift realized.

Young People's Prayer Services at Reunions

By R. V. Hopkins

Under proper leadership there are wonderful opportunities in a young people's meeting.

Nearly fifteen years' active experience in directing young people's prayer services in our largest stakes, at Graceland College, and at different reunions has brought the writer to some definite conclusions.

The first question to be decided is: Should the young people be allowed to hold a prayer service by themselves? Under ordinary circumstances, decidedly yes, with proper leadership and at the proper time. Young people begin to develop best as a group in their own meetings rather than when scattered among older people in a general service.

They are timid before older people and as a rule hold their religious feelings in the background, therefore they can best be developed as a group when with others of their own age.

The proper leader, however, by personal work can encourage them, individually, and by proper and tactful public suggestion to the group, to take their part in the general prayer services.

Exclusive Service Develops Initiative

The object of the exclusive young people's service is to develop initiative, to instill courage, and gradually prepare the young to take their part among older people, and in the ultimate this becomes rather an individual follow-up matter for the leader.

Hundreds of young people receive the first impulse to service in the young people's meetings, whose impulses would remain dormant for years without this advantage. They are young, tender, shy, reserved. They have not yet reached a point of common interest with those of older years. The lapse of years is between. The manner of testimony of some old people is as a rule uninteresting to the young. The stereotyped repetition indulged in so frequently by some older people does not appeal to them. The testimony of the young is born of a heart full of fear and desire. It wells up like a spring within and, overflowing its banks, gushes forth. The first impulse of the heart speaks. It is like the perfume of a pure flower.

In concluding this feature of the discussion, we should say that there are some circumstances which are not ordinary, and though the rule should favor a separate meeting, there are occasions when it is not wise to do so. I remember, for instance, while at the Red Rock Indian reunion last summer, a young people's separate meeting had been announced, but the Spirit witnessed to the writer that at this reunion the meetings should be general so as to give all the advantage of the sight and testimony of the Indians in a general meeting. The results proved this to have been a wise provision.

Early Meetings Best

As to the time of such meetings, we believe that it should be quite early in the morning and at a time so as not to conflict with other services. At the Lamoni reunion, which has reached a remarkable development along many lines, the young people meet early before the general prayer service, which immediately follows, and go in a body to the general meeting and take their part. Under proper leadership the meeting will not be a distraction from, but a help toward, the other service.

It is well two or three times during the reunion to arrange "hike" prayer services. The young people respond well to this. They like to do the thing out of the ordinary rather than to follow a beaten groove, and will make any sacrifice to make it a success. If the leader properly organizes and rallies around him the substantial leaders among the young people, this feature is always a decided success. Often, by an early start, breakfast can be cooked in the woods after the meeting, the young people having been previously asked to fast.

The question of leadership is perhaps the most important. If the proper man is not secured, the effort will fail. He should be a strongly magnetic young man of distinct personality. He should be humble and be able to inspire humility in the hearts of the young, and constantly keep before them the spiritual life, without openly preaching. He should have the faculty of getting close to the young people and gaining their confidence. A man of such a nature should be secured, and he should consecrate his whole time during the reunion to this one end, and follow up the services by personal interviews as he may be sought by the young.

It is best to secure a man, if possible, who cannot only direct the spiritual activities but who can also be a leader in recreation, take part in their games, etc. There is no better way to serve young people than to mingle with them in such innocent pastimes, thus getting acquainted and making it a means to a spiritual end. This should be the real purpose of recreation at our reunions as well as a rest to the mind.

If such a course is earnestly and carefully pursued, and such a leader is secured to thus blend the spiritual and recreational in the life of the young, the problem of discipline at our reunions is largely solved. The young people will follow such a leader to the ends of the earth. They will not have to be driven. They can be led. They will follow almost any reasonable suggestion. They are greatly misjudged by those who do not understand the psychology of youth. As a class they are not stubborn or unreasonable, but very pliable and anxious at heart to do right. God bless them, in the sweetness and buoyancy of youth. It needs only to be guided in the proper channels, under the proper leadership, to become a powerful dynamo in the development of Christian character.

I trust that these few suggestions may be of benefit to some in their work at reunions among the young.

The Health Department at Reunions

By G. Leonard Harrington, M. D.

The program work should be arranged so that the health lectures are all given on two succeeding days. Details are given on program arrangement.

The ideal of the health department of the church is to have people live happy, useful lives, by keeping at a maximum their physical and mental qualities.

The medical profession formerly thought it had done its full duty when it administered to suffering humanity. This, certainly, was a negative attitude although, of course, it was altogether humanitarian. Medical men then thought their work should have to do with preventing, as well as curing, disease. This is a negative attitude but, at the same time, it has positive aspects. Finally, at the present time, the social consciousness of the medical profession is that expressed in the ideal of our health department, stated above.

It is interesting to note what great strides have been made in regard to health in camp life since the Spanish-American War. Everyone, no doubt, is aware of the fact that the United States army lost thousands and thousands of men from typhoid fever in the camps during the Spanish-American War. The medical staff of the army did not appreciate what an important part flies played in carrying disease, what contaminated food meant, and what dirty fingers could do. During the last war typhoid fever was unknown, practically, in the United States army, because of the precautions taken in regard to food, fingers, and flies. The authorities were careful of the food and water supply, and the men were kept in good physical condition through proper exercise, etc. All the men in the United States army were vaccinated against typhoid fever, an excellent procedure, but, in addition to this, the Government insisted that all other sanitary measures having to do with the prevention of typhoid fever should be carried out.

I have had come to my attention one case of typhoid fever from one of the reunions held last summer and, in connection with this case, I was told of a number of people who went home sick with symptoms which strongly suggested typhoid fever. I was told that at this particular reunion flies were common visitors.

In establishing a reunion, it is important that a place with proper drainage be had, that the water supply be reliable. This can be found out by sending a sample to the State laboratories. It is also important that the milk supply be studied, that the excreta be properly disposed of, that the people at the reunion air their tents daily, and that they air their bed clothing in the sun at least once a week.

It is the intention of the health department, if satisfactory arrangements can be made, to send a doctor and a nurse to a good many of the reunions. Lectures are expected to be given on medical, as well as general health subjects, such as, "Baby and child welfare," "Social hygiene," etc. These lectures are to be illustrated with slides. It is intended that clinics be held for examining children, weighing and measuring them, etc., also clinics for adults for the purpose of learning whether the people are as well as they appear.

There are three types of people who come to such a clinic. The first is the person who thinks he is very sick, and proves not to be; the second is one who feels that he is well, but wants to be sure that he is; and the third is the person who thinks that he is well, but who has some serious trouble which is brought out by the examination.

The above outline will give great opportunity for questions on health subjects.

I think it would further the interests of all concerned for the health department to be allowed two succeeding days at each reunion. This would permit the health department representatives to concentrate their efforts, and thus permit their attending a greater number of reunions.

The following letter is being sent to district presidents:

Dear Brother: We understand that you are president of the district, and we wish to make the following offer to you and to the members of the reunion committee. We shall appreciate hearing from you soon, in order that we may know whether or not you have decided to accept our proposition. If we do not receive a reply before April 1, we shall consider that you disapprove of the plan.

Our offer is: To send a doctor and trained nurse to your reunion, with the following outlined plan for service:

1. Lectures:
 - a. By the doctor, to be delivered especially to the members of the priesthood, to the men, Boy Scouts, and boys.

By the nurse, to be delivered to the women, Temple Builders, Orioles, girls, and children.

- b. Stereopticon lectures, to be given at least one night during the reunion (preferably two nights if it can be so arranged).

2. Clinics:

It is planned that clinics be held in charge of the doctor and nurse, at appointed hours, for the purpose of examining children, weighing, measuring them, etc., also clinics for adults, for the purpose of examining the eyes, ears, nose, and throat, and of making a general physical examination.

Advice will be given concerning each case.

3. Exhibits:

A display of educational health posters, etc.
4. Grounds:

It is also planned that the doctor and nurse, together with the members of the reunion committee, inspect the grounds from a sanitary standpoint in order that the mistakes and unsanitary conditions discovered might be avoided next year.

The expense to you in accepting our offer will be for the following-named items:

1. Living and car fare for the doctor and nurse.

2. Advertising and announcements.
3. A large-sized tent.
4. A good scale. (This may be borrowed.)
5. Living quarters for doctor and nurse while on the grounds.
6. A small amount of lumber for the purpose of arranging the exhibits.

We think a stop of less than two days hardly advisable. We should like this time designated as health department days, and would expect the cooperation of all, that the most possible good might result.

If you accept this offer, a definite program which we would like to have carried out will be submitted to you later in order that it may be advertised and proper arrangements made.

If you have a capable, wide-awake physician in your district, it is possible that we may be able to affiliate with him or her, thus saving car fare. If you think it advisable for such arrangements to be made, kindly send us the name and address of the doctor whom you would recommend.

If you feel that you could not spare two days from the program, and that you would have time for only one or two lectures, it is quite probable that we could send you a nurse to be present during the entire reunion to help meet emergencies, give individual advice, etc. But we know that you would not receive the same amount of good from the money so invested as you would from accepting the first plan which we offer, because we feel that without a tent for demonstrations and exhibits, she could not be of as great value to you.

It may be that you are not in financial circumstances to permit of your accepting either plan presented, but we hope that you will not lose sight of the fact that some good might result from using the material which you may have in your district (a doctor or a nurse).

Whichever plan you may decide upon, we want you to know that we are interested at all times, both in your reunion work and in the welfare of the Saints.

We hope that this vital subject of "Health" may be presented at your reunion, and that you will refer your local and district physicians or nurses to the directors of our department in Zion, upon whom rests the responsibility of giving proper information along these lines. Many people are now confused about health matters. This is because they have not had opportunity to learn the laws of health as God means us to understand and live them.

The goal of the health department is to have our people live happy, useful lives, as the result of having kept their physical and mental capacities at a high level of expression.

G. LEONARD HARRINGTON, M. D.,

Church Physician.

Address all communications to the Latter Day Saint Church Health Department, Independence, Missouri.

Twenty thousand children lose their lives every year through accident. Between five and nine years of age accident causes one sixth of the deaths; ten to fourteen, 177 in a thousand. In fact, in 1917 deaths from accidents exceeded between the ages of ten and fourteen, the deaths from all epidemic diseases, including measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough, diphtheria, etc. The number of deaths between five and nine from accident is nearly double the deaths from tuberculosis at that age. Forty-five hundred children under fifteen were killed by automobiles.

This statement from the Red Cross Bulletin shows the importance and the need for first aid instruction, also for greater care for safety. With children under five years of age, burns are the most frequent accidents causing death, and represent more than forty per cent.

Sanitation in Relation to Reunion Grounds

By W. A. Sinclair, M. D.

Special attention should be given to the mechanical features of a camp so the spiritual may be of the highest order.

Sanitation is one of the most important subjects that can engage our attention when we are considering the health and comfort of our people at the annual camping or reunion grounds. Too often our vision becomes distorted by a word misplaced in regard to location and advantages. No grounds however beautiful would be an advantage if the environment were detrimental to one's well-being, and in these days of advanced sanitary instruction it is next to disastrous to select camping grounds with a committee ignorant of these fundamental laws of health.

It is impossible to give an exhaustive treatise of this subject in the short space allotted to me, so we will give only a few suggestions on the more important phases of the problem and leave it to others to enlarge upon later.

Location of the Camp

The camp should be situated on elevated ground where good drainage would be obtained during storms. This would allow drying in the quickest possible time and avoid mud puddles and stagnation. Stagnant water very quickly becomes infected with bacteria, the proportionate suspension being about 2,700,000,000 living microorganisms to the drop of water.

This elevation is also desirable from the point of ventilation, as the purer air floats in the higher strata while the lower air is laden with bacteria, both saprophytic and pathogenic. Some people say it doesn't matter regarding the air, that it is all pure in the open and away from the city streets; but that is not so. Gases are continually arising from decaying vegetation and animal corruption. These are concentrated low down, while they are quite diffuse the higher we get from the low ground.

Have you ever considered the enormous amount of air necessary for one adult during a day of twenty-four hours?

The lungs contain about one gallon of air at their usual degree of inflation (that is, every time we inhale our breath). We breathe, on an average, 1,200 breaths per hour; that would be equal to over 1,000 gallons of air hourly, or 24,000 gallons daily. Low air holds in suspension from 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 microorganisms to the square inch. How many antagonistic imps, think you, would you inhale in twenty-four hours in impure air?

Air is life. All other materials are simply adjuncts. It is the air that keeps the machinery in motion, and in conjunction with the blood contributes to our being. The blood is simply the medium by which it is distributed to all the conglomerated mass of unicellular particles which make up the body as a whole.

Water Supply

Where convenient the water system of the city or town should be employed where good filtration has been provided. In camps where this is impractical, wells should be dug or driven, and if any question should arise as to the quality of the water, a thorough test should be made and results noted. Wells should be on higher ground than outhouses (where sewage is not installed) and far enough removed from them as to be absolutely safe from poisonous filtration. Garbage should likewise be kept at a distance, in closed containers, and destroyed by fire or removed far distant from the camp and buried.

Toilets

This is most important and the biggest problem seemingly to most of our camping grounds, and yet it is not such an alarming problem if we give it the proper consideration. Proper toilet arrangements can be provided with very little or no danger of contaminating the water supply if an effort is made to raise a little money for this phase of camp life. (And it is imperative.)

Two chief means are suggested that might solve the problem. First, and perhaps the most costly, the cement vault container. This consists of a cement vault constructed in the earth immediately beneath the closet, the size optional with the builders or the requirements, the top being on a level or a few inches above the ground with a trap opening for periodical emptying.

Second, and best from a sanitary point of view, the chemical closet, which can be installed at a very moderate price, either under individual cottage ownership, or in multiples in suitable buildings for community usage.

This is more sanitary than any other form of closet in use.

The chemical kills all odors and is made of such materials as will quickly but surely reach and destroy every germ to be found in the container, but at the same time it is harmless to the most delicate skin. The container is not infested with flies, thus preventing their disease-spreading powers, and can be emptied into a hole dug for the purpose without fear of contamination.

Garbage

Under this term we will include waste paper, tin cans, etc. Tin cans are especially convenient breeding places for mosquitoes and flies, and a rich source of ptomaine which may reach the human system in one way or another. All tin cans should be subjected to fire the same as waste paper and garbage or table waste. This would help to prevent pest multiplication as well as do away with the usual odoriferous, unsightly mass of putrefaction. The cleaner the grounds the less liability for disease, the more inviting for the strangers, and the more pleasing to God.

Tents

These should be placed on high ground, strung tight, and where possible floored. If not floored, a strip of carpet or a few boards through the center will greatly improve healthy occupancy. The ends of the tents should be properly screened to prevent the entrance of flies and mosquitoes. This is especially required where children are inmates. The flies may infect with almost any kind of disease, while the mosquito, aside from its annoyance, may be any of the disease carrying genus and cause untold misery to the innocent little bodies in which they deposit their virus.

Sanitary conditions mean more to these little bodies than to an adult. They need air, light, cleanliness, and freedom from noxious and contaminating particles which are quickly absorbed by their active, growing tissues.

Houses

The same rule applies to houses. Proper screening and proper ventilation are required, not only by the children but by the adults likewise. These bodies of ours are important. Did you ever stop to consider the human body and the wonderful amount of work that is required of it? Let us do so before closing this article, and remember that outdoor life, sunshine, proper food, clothing, clean bodies, and good exercise, this last for both mind and body, contribute to the support of all.

We are told that the human body is fearfully and wonderfully made, and we second the motion, after contemplation of its many divisions, some of which we pen here.

"At maturity, the human skeleton contains about one hundred and sixty-five bones, so delicately and perfectly adjusted that science has despaired of ever imitating it." The muscles (those tissues we seek to develop by exercise and work) are about 500 in number; length of the alimentary canal, 32 feet; amount of blood in the average adult, 30 pounds, or one fifth the weight of the body. The heart. How many of us can appreciate this wonderful organ? It is the most faithful, the least pitied, and the hardest-working organ in the human body. It is about six inches in length and four inches in diameter, and beats seventy times per minute, 4,200 times per hour, 100,800 per day, 36,792,000 per year. At each beat, two and one half ounces of blood are thrown out of it, 175 ounces per minute, 656 pounds per hour, or about eight tons per day.

All the blood in the body passes through the heart every three minutes, and during three score and ten years (70 years) it lifts 200,000 tons of blood.

Why should we bathe often and clean our skin thoroughly? The skin is composed of three layers, and varies from one eighth to one quarter of an inch in thickness. The average area of skin is estimated to be about 2,000 square inches. The atmospheric pressure being fourteen pounds to the square inch, a person of medium size is subjected to a pressure of 28,000 pounds. Each square inch of skin contains 3,500 sweat tubes, which empty on the surface of the skin (each of these little tubes may be likened to a little drain tile, one fourth of an inch in length), making an aggregate length of the entire surface of the body 201,166 feet, or a tube for draining the body nearly forty miles in length.

It needs frequent washings to keep these little drains clear and in proper working order. Anything that will clog these up or work harm to any part of the body shortens our life. Sanitary conditions not only lengthen our life, but help us to enjoy the functions designed by the all-wise Creator for the pleasure and service of his creatures.

Order at the Reunion

By Elmer E. Long

"Nothing should be allowed to disturb the sanctity of the hallowed atmosphere of a reunion of the Saints."

Some one has said that order is the first law of heaven. The church is supposed to be the highest representative of heavenly conditions on earth, and to the church it has been said: "Let all things be done decently and in order." The plain inference is that some things may be done indecently and out of order, or the admonition would be superfluous.

And whether, in the sacred inclosure of a church edifice, dedicated to God, in a hall or schoolhouse used for worship, under a tent at reunion, or in the open air, it is all the same. The place, whatever it may be, where heavenly grace is asked to be present should be regarded as a sacred place, and order, decorum, discipline should be the voluntary attitude of all who assemble. Nor should the sacred atmosphere be limited to the narrow confines of four walls. The place should be considered.

This is especially true with reference to our reunions. The big tent where devotional services are held is merely the "center place." The whole camp should be a sacred place during the ten days' occupancy, and nothing should be permitted to disturb the sanctity of the hallowed atmosphere which the Saints should be allowed to breathe freely if they would have their spiritual strength renewed.

Proper Restraint Necessary

Too many have come to regard the reunion as a place of recreation, an outing where they may freely give vent to their pent-up hilarity. To this end we see them pack their trunks and suit cases with swimming suits, baseball suits, and other "suits" and paraphernalia from the "gym"—harmless enough in the proper place and under proper restraints; but which may be a mighty millstone around the neck of a reunion assemblage if they are allowed to run riot as is sometimes the case.

The primary object of reunions should be spiritual uplift, and everything conducive to that end should be encouraged and enforced. Nor would we deprive the young people of the privilege of expressing the gladness of youth. But such matters should be under strict control of older heads who will see to it that proper discipline is enforced. It is useless to talk about eliminating the policeman. Aside from the prowlers who may be attracted toward the camp in quest of spoils, there will be the refractory individual in the camp who has a selfish contempt for the rights of others. Only a policeman whose authority is recognized can handle him, and he is bound to be at the reunion.

Definite Activity With No Time Wasted

First of all, the program should be arranged so as to provide for some definite activity with no time wasted, and then the committee should see to it that the program is carried out according to schedule and thus keep everybody busy all the time. Let certain definite hours be set apart for recreation with the understanding that they, too, must begin and close on schedule time so as not to interfere with other services by coming in late, panting and mopping perspiration. Bring the games to a close in ample time for everyone to become settled before entering the other services. Furthermore, the recreational grounds should be apart from the camp, for older ones who may not be interested in sports and who may wish to sleep and rest at that hour should not be disturbed. The program should provide work and worship for everyone, the hours set apart for recreational exercises to be spent at the will of the people, innocent games for the younger ones and visiting or rest for the older ones. Loud and boisterous yelling and laughter should not be indulged in, for the Lord says this is sin.

Order in the Assembly

The preaching and devotional services should be regularly attended by all, old and young, for there is where the spiritual food is distributed so necessary to our spiritual development. A preliminary song service should be arranged for every service, and during this song service everyone should be seated in the assembly so that when the speaker begins his discourse he will not be embarrassed by persons coming in late. The ushers should seat the audience beginning at the front, and belated stragglers should be seated in the rear. When the speaker begins his discourse he should have the undivided attention of the audience; this for the benefit of the speaker as well as the hearer. A blind man accustomed to public speaking can tell instantly if something attracts the attention of the audience. His liberty will be broken. To illustrate: Recently while I was preaching to an attentive audience a little girl who was sitting up front arose and went back in the audience and stood by her mother, whispering to her. Instantly all eyes were upon that little girl, and I had to quit and wait until the girl sat down and the people quit gazing at her. And then it took me some little time to "pick up" and go ahead. The same thing will happen when some one comes in late and stalks clear up front in search of a good seat. The belated ones should be seated in the rear whether they like it or not until they learn to be on time. Such disturbances short circuit the flow of thought between speaker and hearer, and although he may keep on "talking" he is simply wasting his energy until the "transmission" is restored.

There should be regular hours for retiring at night, after which all should be perfectly quiet. Curfew should ring at a stated time; and within a reasonable time, say one hour, all lights should be out.

Let the rules to govern the camp be published with the program, and let the committee in charge make it plain to the understanding of all that the rules must be observed.

The Chautauqua Feature in Reunions

By Cyril E. Wight

This writer believes both the study and lecture feature of Chautauqua circuits are adaptable with good effect to our work.

Great emphasis has been laid of late months upon the fact that in character building our growth should not be one sided, that we should develop equally the spiritual, mental, and physical elements of our beings. This idea is recognized by our people. It is not necessary that it be argued. It is reemphasized in order to make clear the ideas presented below.

While accepting fully the above thought, it must be held clearly in mind that our goal is a spiritual one. Therefore, nothing should be undertaken that will have a tendency to minimize the importance of this element. Just because the spiritual element has at times been unduly emphasized to the exclusion of the others, we are not justified in going to the opposite extreme in our emphasis upon either the mental or physical element.

There comes now the question: To what extent shall the Chautauqua features be introduced into our reunion? I say features, since there are two phases to the Chautauqua idea. Originally, it was merely a study center where those unable to obtain regular courses in college or university might receive mental development through class work and lectures. The class work was first offered during a few weeks of the summer months. The demand has since made necessary the offering of correspondence courses which are at the present time being made available to thousands. In addition to the development of class work, the lecture feature has been made available over the entire country by the instituting of the Chautauqua circuit system.

Right at the outset, I submit as my personal opinion that both of these Chautauqua features, in modified form, may be introduced in our reunions. I say in modified form because of the emphasis laid above upon the necessity for making the spiritual element of our work paramount. Also, because conditions do not justify so complete a use of the system in vogue in the regular circuits.

Let us first consider the matter of study classes. Many reunions bring together from outlying parts of the district scattered members who meet only during this time. A splendid opportunity is presented for a more thorough study of the various features of our work. In fact, this study and preparation are prerequisites to the redemption of Zion. To just what extent this class work should be carried and what should be the nature of the study, are details that could only be determined by the needs, standards, and qualifications of those interested. Milk must be fed before meat, and this parallel holds good in both mental and spiritual matters.

Consider for a moment the second feature of the Chautauqua. There are various specialists in the church whose demonstrations or lectures would be invaluable if presented to every member of the church. This, of course, is impracticable. However, the reunion does afford an opportunity to carry to large groups of our people a message vital to the interest of the work. For instance, suppose that in Saint Louis we have a specialist in some particular line; in Independence one in some other line; in Saint Joseph another. By the formation of a very small circuit, the benefit of all of these lectures could be extended very greatly.

The question of expense would naturally arise. If long circuits were established this would become a burden. Wisdom would be required. The details would have to be worked out through a central bureau or committee.

This naturally brings us to the point that only through coordination of effort in our reunion work, as well as in other fields, can we hope to accomplish our Zionie ideals. The adopting of a more uniform policy in the conducting of our reunions would, it appears to the writer, be of great worth to our people. This could be accomplished in the following way:

Let all reunion leaders, in so far as practicable, be brought together at some central point for an intensive study of the problems incident to reunion work. Each man could give the others the benefit of his experience, and if some person excelled along a particular line, all would have the benefit of his instruction.

We suggest above the feasibility of having a central committee for the purpose of organizing and "harnessing" the energies of the church for reunion work. This committee could meet with the reunion leaders, and programs could be arranged consistent with the needs and pocketbooks of the various reunions. The nature and extent of programs should, of course, be determined with the constant thought in mind of carrying forward the spiritual interests of the people of God.

The above ideas are merely suggestive. Other and better plans might be devised for the development of the Chautauqua idea in our reunions. The fact itself, however, is what I am interested in.

In conclusion: As one interested in the right kind of education, I rest the matter by reference to the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 6:21: "To be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God."

The Daily Paper at Reunions

By Alice Myrmida Smith

Experiences with the Pertle Springs camp paper, issued daily and sold at a cent a copy.

The Camp Log, official daily newspaper of the Pertle Springs reunion of summer before last, was something of a venture; but if the camp generally enjoyed the publication as much as its staff, the experiment was a success.

The paper consisted of two or three typewritten sheets, reproduced on the Neostyle. The news was printed in two columns, the first page being devoted to announcements of services, and reports of summer school sessions, enlivened by unusual camp happenings, some of them quite exciting and some of them quite humorous. The second page was editorial, and the third devoted to the athletic and recreational activities.

The organization of the staff was quite simple. The editor got the news and wrote the copy, editorials, athletics, and comedy, as well as announcements and sermon reports. An assistant made the stencils, and another ran the "printing press," with the assistance of several of the younger boys and girls. The children are reliable and conscientious help. One little fellow got up an hour earlier all during the reunion to put the papers in the hands of the campers as they came to breakfast.

There were eight numbers in all, one for every day starting and ending with Sunday. The task of having the morning paper out before breakfast entailed more work than would be supposed. Frequently the first page was held up for the announcements from the night service, and the printing often lasted until two in the morning.

Instead of setting a definite price, the boys who sold the papers were instructed to ask "whatever you want to pay." On Sunday several copies brought a quarter, and the prize went to the man who paid fifty cents. Those who wished received their papers for one cent. The proceeds from the sales paid most of the expenses for the publication.

The Reunion Newspaper Worth While

By Ethel A. Lacey

"We believe it has come to stay, and that any reunion will find the feature much enhancing the interest of every service and reunion activity."

Two years ago, or thereabout, we were fortunate in securing Brother and Sister Arthur W. Smith as field workers for our reunion, and in preliminary correspondence arranging the program, Brother Smith wrote something like this: "I presume you have a camp paper. This can and should be a live feature, arousing and holding interest in our sessions. Let us make it spicy."

His suggestion resulted in the advent on the scene of the Camp Gleaner, under the editorship of Brother James MacIntire, to whom the writer appealed because of his previous experience with the local Religio paper. He did so well that the honors fell to him again, and he has cooperated in this effort to point out the desirable features of the paper and why it proved so well worth while.

Brother MacIntire marshaled his forces early, selecting department editors who kept an eye on every phase of the reunion, from the best cooks to the most tuneful sleepers, from the best speakers to the best sprinters.

There was always a pointed and helpful editorial, its theme in harmony with the progress of the reunion, and itself giving food for thought.

A Summary Department reviewed briefly the sessions of the day preceding, giving tersely the leading points from sermons, auxiliary sessions, and theme of social service, with mention of communications, reporting these in some instances, thus proving of historical value.

Late comers especially appreciated this feature, as it helped them pick up threads they had missed.

The Camp News page kept us in touch with the movements of those going and coming, and happenings on the camp grounds.

For the last few years, afternoons have been given over to recreation and athletic features. These activities were given a department, and were never wanting for "honorable mention."

A column of "Brain Intensifiers" by John was devoted to short, pointed sayings, selected and original, both wise and witty, provoking of laughter and enjoyment.

Few there were who escaped the "Yf and Why" column—jokes gathered from no one knew where on any camper who might prove a likely victim.

We know of other camp papers handled quite differently and proving quite successful, but for a number of reasons our editor's plan appealed as desirable. It called into activity a number of the young people and kept them on the alert, and led them to mingle more freely with all the campers. There may be a number of variations to the plan, as in the editorial department, where variety or additions may be made by contributions from the campers.

The daily reading seemed desirable for a number of reasons. It held interest unbroken from number to number, and brought some to the sessions who possibly might not have attended otherwise. We believe, too, that it served better as a matter of record thus.

The auxiliary session seems the logical time to introduce the reading of the paper, inasmuch as it is conducted by and deals largely with the interests of the young people; and further, it served as an impetus for the day, coming as it did at the close of the second session in the morning, at which time Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department were respectively represented. Appetites were whetted, minds fresh, and anticipation high, and after the educational features the paper came as a welcome variety.

Conducted as the Gleaner was, it proved a sufficiently important feature of the reunion so that the men's organized class of Burlington ran off copies on their press for local files in the various branches of the district. We believe it has come to stay, and that any reunion will find the feature much enhancing the interest of every service and reunion activity.

The Reunion Newspaper

By Edward D. Moore

Most any reunion will support a well-edited camp paper and find it an inspiration.

After editing The Camp Cricket, the reunion newspaper of the Lamoni Stake reunion, for several years, I feel that it is easier to write such a periodical than to tell how best to do it.

Our newspaper has been a modest affair, one copy only being made of each issue, and an issue read at each of three or four sessions, in the afternoons, and occupying some fifteen to twenty minutes of the time.

Each issue usually contains a serious editorial, some facts about the camp intended to be interesting, a few general announcements, interspersed with jokes and light comment.

There is so much that is serious at a good reunion that it seems to us there is a place for a few minutes of mental relaxation over harmless jokes on the great and near-great, the setting of which is appreciated by all who visit the grounds. In fact the interest taken in the reading of the paper seems to bear one out in that conclusion.

The first number is always the hardest to produce, since there is usually less to report at that time. But as a rule there has so much happened before the close that there is not room for all of it.

We think it a good rule for a newspaper of this kind to avoid indulgence in mere generalities. There are millions of good things that might be said, but there is great reason for always bearing in mind the fact that the reunion is the big thing to discuss. We have heard of reunions being terribly bored with interminable discussions of all manner of subjects foreign to the immediate thing at hand.

A good staff of reporters is a great aid to an editor, but he must expect always to do what they fail to do. One not accustomed to reporting is apt to become so interested in the proceedings that he forgets all about putting anything down for others.

Then one must be more or less hard-hearted so he can reject some contributions that sound good to the writer but might not do to use. On the other hand, one should be able to inspire some very good contributions, especially poetry, which we have always with us.

The time allotted to the reading of a paper, the occasions on which it is to be read, the general atmosphere of the camp, and the ideals of those responsible for the production of such an affair, must all be considered in the editing of a camp newspaper.

Of course one is expected to use a little imagination, and so long as his jokes do not contain malice or unkind allusions, most anyone will cheerfully become a victim for the sake of producing merriment for others. Yet the border line between jokes that help and those that hinder is often very indistinct. When in doubt, don't, is the safest rule, though we admit there is an element of interest in taking a chance.

Where facilities allow and the expense seems justified, it would be worth while to put out copies of a paper for each member or at least each family on the grounds. This can be done quite easily with some of the modern duplicating machines, and when this is done, makes possible the reporting of announcements in detail, which is a valuable feature.

Almost any camp of Saints would provide good material for a venture of this kind, if properly done and there is time to spare for its reading, but those in charge must realize that it is a serious responsibility, and live with their task day and night. Good editions are not dashed off; they must be created by hard and persistent work, but the results that may be attained when this is done are eminently worth while.

Social Aspects of the Reunion

By C. Edward Miller

Brother Miller believes in giving special attention to the social needs of a reunion, especially to the young people.

Branches have a tendency to develop a local spirit. They become individualized to a large extent. To illustrate: There are some congregations who will permit socials, bazaars, plays, etc., to be given in the church, and admission charged. Another branch, composed of Saints of about the same mental and spiritual caliber, think it is a sacrilege to use the church for such purposes. Even districts have their individuality. In the Massachusetts District all the branches have adopted the custom of remaining seated when prayer is offered at the prayer services and generally when the opening prayer is made at the preaching service. I know of another district where kneeling is the order.

A reunion is a kind of melting pot, breaking up the integral parts and fusing them into a splendid large unit—if the social feature is properly provided for.

After being actively connected with reunions for a number of years, I am of the opinion no reunion is a decided success unless the social activities have been looked after and enter largely into the daily life of the people. Some of the suggestions made below are original, but the majority have been tried out and found to work successfully.

How One Reunion Came to Itself

When the Kirtland, Ohio reunion was started there was no definite social program to follow. The idea prevailed that it was to be, I understand, a religious gathering. I was connected with that reunion after it had been in existence for two years. We made the mistake of having too many religious meetings. Eventually an agreement was made with the young people about like this: "You young people attend our morning and evening services, and we will devote the afternoons to sports and other amusements and social activities, and we will help you." The young people agreed, and from that time on the reunions were a success and have developed into the magnificent gatherings now held in the Kirtland Temple and on the temple grounds, taxing the capacity of the building and the surrounding grounds and town.

The idea of a reunion is to get the Saints together for religious and social purposes. There should be times when all the people are gathered in one meeting. Then there should be numerous smaller gatherings, and finally there may be times when "two is company and three is a crowd."

Make Sociability Natural and Easy

There should be plenty of seats scattered around the grounds. I consider this a very important item to develop sociability. A seat invites two or three to occupy it, and that means sociability.

A tennis court, ball grounds, and space for playing croquet are great assets, and are almost a necessity for a successful gathering where there may be many young people. Where there can be boating and bathing, you will have good times. Seek for a correct balance of religious, educational, and social activities.

Where you have the right kind of a crowd you are going to have sociability, and where there is sociability you will have a successful gathering; therefore, try to get the crowd. Fine times can be had after the evening preaching service. There should be a place set apart for this purpose. It should be well lighted and seats arranged to form a hollow square. This place becomes the social center all right. You can't afford to do without it. Here is the place for games, etc. Playets, tableaux, marching pieces, calisthenics, etc., should be on the program.

Use the Stereopticon

A stereopticon is a splendid instrument to get the crowd. There is an ink specially made for use on glass. All colors are obtainable. Get the "camp artist" to draw cartoons on blank slides. Throw them on the screen and watch the fun. Of course these pictures should be free from any sting whatever. Have a camp paper, and throw it on the screen. It is just as easy to write on the glass as on paper. Finally, wind up the evening's program with a good sing of the old-fashioned songs thrown on the screen. The New York Slides Corporation get out a blank slide made of celluloid, with a piece of carbon paper on each side. This can be inserted in the typewriter and in a very little while slides can be made of songs and hymns, and what a fine effect the songs have on the crowd. Brother Hoxie helped win the war with his baton! And, by the way, from the way he is planning out things, he is going to help win the war for Christ by music.

Every reunion should have a stereopticon, but if it can't be had get an eight-dollar "reflectoroscope." This is the way we are going to try to work it at our Onset reunion this year. We propose to have some one in each branch gather up old-fashioned pictures, tintypes snapshots, anything and everything of members of the branch. Mount them, when possible, on post-card size cardboard. Have them at the reunion, and use them in the "reflectoroscope" for little social gatherings. There is plenty of fun in this. You can also use this little instrument for projecting colored post cards.

Last year Onset and Kirtland had "Trips around the world."

There are always some who are reserved and backward. These should be given quiet attention. They should be invited to the private little parties where a few congenial spirits gather for a good social time. Such an invitation would be doing real social missionary work and would help make the gathering a blessing to the invited guest.

Let Young People Become Acquainted

There really ought to be a good live committee appointed who would make it their business to see that everyone has a good social time and is properly looked after.

There is one phase of the social aspect of the annual gatherings which should be given considerable attention by parents and those in charge of branches. Generally it is treated in a more or less jocular manner.

A number of years ago I was in one of our country branches in the Middle West. One of the brethren took me aside and said he wanted to have a talk with me about his daughter and to ask my advice. He said the girl was going with a young man who was decidedly her inferior, but as there were very few young men in the neighborhood she had very little choice of boy companions. The father wanted to know how his daughter could become acquainted with some of the church boys. How could he manage it? I replied: "You send your girl to the next—reunion, and there she will have an opportunity to meet as fine young men as there are in the land, and she will meet boys from every branch in several districts."

Here is a splendid place for our young people to get acquainted. If we want our young people to marry in the church, encourage them to attend the reunions. Too often if a young man does not find the type of girl he fancies in the branch, he goes outside for her. The young women are often compelled to follow the same course. Sometimes they draw first prizes outside, but sometimes they don't!

"Neglect not the assembling of yourselves together." Make the reunions such a grand success that you can't keep the people away.

Young People in Camp

By Daniel T. Williams

"Wholesome recreation interests boys and girls in their higher welfare."

Zion is not a daydream or a phantom of the night, but a principle which sometime should become very real and very actual in the lives of the children of God. The Lord of life has designed that his people shall live more fully in accordance with the laws of life than they have hitherto. As our opportunities grow greater, the scope of our responsibilities broadens. To accomplish the purposes in prospect, God will undoubtedly expect us to use every legitimate means in an effort to reach the divine objective.

In every business there are certain assets. These must be accepted at their true value or a loss of power will accrue. So it is in the concerns of the Master. Redeeming Zion is a business of infinite importance, not only to the church, but also to the world. We cannot afford to neglect our latent energies.

Tied up in the lives of our young people is a potential energy which must be actualized if ever we hope to reach the goal of our proposed attainments.

Recognizing as we do that the accomplishments of the future to a great degree rest with those who are now young in years, it would seem that there is a necessity of our giving special care to their development. We should seek in every way to protect them from the blighting influences of the world and the snares of the Devil. The reunion may be made a very potent factor to this end.

Emphasize Wholesome Recreation

The point of contact between the young people and the spiritual aspect of the reunion is wholesome recreation properly developed. If recreation is to prove an asset in our spiritual work, we shall find the necessity of emphasizing that it be wholesome.

The value of recreation is apparent in various ways. It creates sociability among old and young, and sociability is conducive to greater spirituality.

We are interdependent in a spiritual as well as in a physical sense. Therefore as kindred spirits we have need of the benefits that can come in a social way.

We need physical exercise in our reunions, for most of us who attend are hard-working people who at home eat heartily. When we come to the camp we leave far behind the daily tasks, but usually bring our appetites unimpaired. Eating heavy meals and doing nothing but sit in church all day is injurious to our bodies and not conducive to spiritual power in the prayer meetings.

Wholesome recreation has proven an effectual way of interesting our boys and girls in their higher welfare. I have seen young people not members of the church come to our reunions because games were to be a feature, become interested in their spiritual need, enter into the church, and go home thanking the authorities that there had been a point of contact between themselves and the reunion. It helps also in a pastoral way. Our children are more easily interested in the spiritual processes when they feel that their parents and pastors are not too selfish to try to see things from their viewpoint.

The desire for amusements is found in every normal boy and girl. It cannot be altogether bad or the Creator would never have inflicted it upon us. The trouble with us is that we have been abusing the instinct instead of using it for the enlightenment of the mind and the uplift of the soul. We have had only the one end in view—the passing pleasantly of the present moments. There is no reason why a faculty so abused cannot now be turned into the channels of character building and made a powerful factor for the good of our young. If, however, it is to be a force in the spiritual welfare of our young people, we must be very diligent to avoid extremes. Extremes are dangerous even in good things.

Establish Kingdom of God

Everything we do in life should be done with the one thought in mind, and the one goal in view—the establishment of the kingdom of God. If we "seek first," that is, place foremost, "the kingdom of God" in our recreations, as well as in every other endeavor, we shall not fail to please our Father. Speaking of the holy Jerusalem when the time of its future glory has come, the Lord says, "the streets shall be full of boys and girls playing." Yes, the benediction of God will rest just as generously upon our play as upon our more serious activities if we enter into it with a spirit of righteousness for the accomplishment of good.

The time best fitted for play in the midst of the reunion activities is the afternoon. Sometime after the noon meal is the most logical season for physical exercise. It will be an aid to the digestion. In the morning we are fresh for our spiritual activities and should throw ourselves into the service with all the vigor that comes with a night's rest. And then the morning meal is usually light, making exercise as an aid to digestion almost unnecessary.

The large auditorium tent is as a rule too warm to be occupied with comfort during the heat of the day. Upon the other hand the morning and evening hours are pleasant and profitable for services.

I am not suggesting that every afternoon be used for recreation. This is an angle of the problem which will of necessity have to be settled in harmony with local conditions. Whatever hours may be set aside for this purpose, this one thing should be kept in mind: All recreation should cease in sufficient time to allow those engaged to make needful preparation for the further spiritual exercises of the day.

Recreation Not an End

Let us not get the idea that the reunion is a place to go to have a good time recreationally. Do not emphasize recreation as an end in itself. These exercises are to the reunion what harrowing is to the harvest. The harvest is the end; the harrowing is only a means to the end. We can have a harvest without a full preparation of the soil, but the harvest will be much more satisfactory if the harrowing has been attended to. In our reunions the spiritual profit is the end in view. Recreation is only a means to the end. Let us, therefore, keep constantly before us our perspective, and not run off in some by-path after a fading phantom.

Social Aspect of the Reunion

By Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser

Select location with care; choose the best time of the year; recognize social needs as well as spiritual.

The reunion has a great social value as well as a spiritual value. The coming together of scattered Saints who have been denied church association as well as the membership of outlying branches for ten days of intimate association with and administration from church officials who are in close touch with the ideals and forward vision of the general church movement, has a social value which should not be overlooked when measuring the good to be derived from reunions.

From the earliest times this coming together of the people once a year has been recognized as having significance as a socializing agency, contributing to the homogeneity of the tribe or nation and strengthening the tie that binds, whether it be the tie of blood or religion. The old saying, "In union there is strength," is as true now as when it was first uttered; but there can be no unity, whether in church or state, where separate units go their individualistic ways. Solidification comes only when interdependence is recognized, when the scope of our vision has been broadened by personal contact with our fellows from other parts of the world, and an exchange of thoughts and ideals have taken place.

The reunions give us a splendid opportunity for just such an awakening. We are aroused to think of ourselves as members of the church, with a desire to make a personal contribution for the good of the whole, instead of as a member of a branch with its restricted limitations.

Recreation Socializes Us

Another socializing factor of the reunion is the recreational features. "Man is born with a set of dispositions related to tropical or subtropical woods and caves." He is born with instinctive tendencies toward a life in the open which all through his life are clamoring for a legitimate expression.

The story of civilization is one of acquiring new habits, modifying and to some extent inhibiting instinctive acts. The complexities of modern life have balked our natural dispositions and produced a nervous strain that to say the least is having a harmful effect upon the human race. We see the results of this strain in psychopathic cases, nervous breakdowns, and diseases of middle life. Again and again we have been advised to "go back to the farm," or "get back to nature." But the struggle to make a living prohibits this, and we are caught in the maelstrom of the social struggle in large manufacturing centers, shut away from heaven's own blue by factory walls and belching smoke. Our tired feet tread the hot, blistering pavement of city streets instead of the soft, velvety sward of nature's spreading.

We cannot go back to the simple life; there is no turning backward. Life is too complex in its mazes for that, but we may find a means of relaxation in our reunions. Reunions should be made to minister to the needs of our membership spiritually, mentally, physically, and socially. (The first three aspects I will leave to others as I have been asked to write on the social features only.) We have made a great stride forward when we apportion each day, giving time for social activities of a recreational nature thereby providing an outlet for our pent-up feelings, that is as valuable to the human machine as is the safety valve to the engine under full steam.

Keep in Mind Instinctive Needs

In providing for the social activities of the reunion, we should have in mind the instinctive needs of man, and wherein such needs are not harmful to his highest development they should have expression. Hunting, fishing, climbing, running, swimming, games of contest, group activities, exploration parties, hikes, story-telling around the camp fire at evening, early morning prayer meetings under the blue vaults of heaven in God's first temple—all these have a high social value. Life in the open in a city of tents with congenial people; evening spent around a huge camp fire, the air pungent with the smoke from pine knots; hoary-headed veterans in gospel warfare looking backward through years rich in experiences, reliving them again as they tell the story to youths and maidens, matured and aged listening with quickened pulse to every word that he utters; fathers and mothers watching the faces of their children in the reflected light and silently praying that they may live to see them take their place in the war for social betterment. Then the story is ended, an evening hymn is sung, the curfew is tolled, and each wends his way to his tent and peaceful slumber. All of this is God's own medicine for shattered nerves and tired bodies.

Why Young People Marry Out of the Church

Another factor in the social significance of reunions should not be overlooked. In the Doctrine and Covenants we read that those who marry outside of the church are considered weak in the faith. Yet we all know that the small branches give little opportunity for extended acquaintance with young people belonging to the church. Our boys and girls are forced to seek companionship outside the church; marriage with nonmembers follows which often results in unhappiness; children are reared who are lost to the church. Reunions can make a rich contribution to the church by stopping this leak, by bringing together the young people of the district under favorable conditions and under proper chaperonage, where friendships may be formed upon a firmer foundation of like ideals and interests, which may ripen into marriage where the hearthstone will be planted the deeper because of mutual interest in the things that have higher social and spiritual values.

That reunions may have a social value they should be made a desirable place to spend a vacation, considering wisely the time of year to hold it, choosing a location away from the artificiality of the city, as near nature as possible, preferably beside lake or stream. A definite program must be prepared, qualified persons in charge of the various functions, especially the social features, and its program must be such as to attract people from all over the district, ministering to the needs of all.

We should remember that these gatherings are reunions, the again coming together of those of like interests and precious faith for mutual benefits and their success is not to be measured by the proselyting done or the number of baptisms, these being but secondary features. The success of the reunion should be measured by the spiritual and social uplift given the members of the church and the strengthening of that "tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

Fellowship as the Objective of Reunions

By A. E. Warr

In the reunion we have a cross section of the strata of society.

Upon the hypothesis that all our religious endeavor has for its objective the development of character which approximates the perfect, it logically follows that every institution within the church will contribute to this common objective proportionally as it discovers and follows the lines of its endeavor. An analysis of the many factors which make up our reunions reveals the fact that its work falls primarily within the pastoral line. In this we do not overlook the important fact that it is oftentimes used, and wisely too, as a pivot for missionary work.

Falling, as it does, within the pastoral line, we readily discover it to be one of the "helps" placed in the church to assist in the "perfecting of the saints," "the edifying of the body of Christ." Striking at once a responsive chord, it has become a popular institution and has established itself with more or less permanency. Our effort should be to study its factors and functions to the end that we may scientifically utilize it as an important factor in Zion's redemption.

The church has been defined as "an organization permitting the highest degree of personal salvation and being an essential instrument in bringing about the basic harmonious adjustment contemplated in collective salvation." This perfection, or "harmonious adjustment," means a symmetrical, well-balanced character, a character which by association, by experience, by reciprocal interplay, has learned the secret of living together with its fellows; the means by which this education and discipline is attained in the various institutions or groups within the church and fostered by it. Thus we have a splendid presentation of group activity and relationship—the vital process which offers the solution to the problem confronting the church.

Doctor Richard Cabot, in his book, What Men Live By, says that the fundamentals are Work, Play, Love, and Worship. No better opportunity is afforded to test the truthfulness of this position than that offered by the reunions, for a reunion is a splendid example of a community group and the community group process is destined to be the solution of our complex social problem, approach it from whatever angle you may, whether political, economic, or religious. It is only in group relationship that popular responsibility is felt and proper individual initiative developed. Our modern problem is not how much the church can do for the individual, but how the ever-increasing activity of each individual can be made church activity, regulated and stimulated by group consciousness.

One of the articles in the Orchestral Number of Autumn Leaves (April) not only makes easy one of the commonest tasks of amateur players, transposition, but discusses the relative values of the various instruments in orchestral work: the string, wood wind, and brass sections, and instruments of percussion.

This article alone, by Joseph H. Anthony, will be worth more to musicians than the price of an entire year's subscription, but in addition there are other valuable articles, stories, and features to make Autumn Leaves more and more appreciated by those who feel the upward urge of aspiration.

In a reunion, or community group, we see a cross section of the strata of society with its diversified interests and needs, its multiple forms and variety of reactions. Such an organization furnishes an opportunity for the development of those traits and characteristics which are fundamental in our individual and collective effort—the ability to live and work together. This is fellowship.

A contemporary writer says, "We talk of fellowship; we puny separatists bristling with a thousand unharmonized traits, with our assertive particularist consciousness, think that all we have to do is to decide on fellowship as a delightful idea. But fellowship will be the slowest thing in the world to create. An eager longing for it may help, but it can come into being as a genuine part of our life only through a deep understanding of what it really means." What does it mean? Webster says it is to be "united in doctrine and discipline." Perhaps we have approximated the first, but in how many instances have we observed how woefully lacking we are in the latter, which is the "regulation of conduct." How often are our laudable undertakings made ineffective because we have not learned the art of fellowship, we have not discovered the basis of democracy, we have not developed the ability to live and work together.

A reunion, properly organized, should afford opportunity for worship, love, work, and play, each in its turn. We are beginning to appreciate the value of a well-balanced program and provide for it. The evolution of the reunion from the time when the daily routine consisted of prayer meeting and preaching to the time when half of each day is devoted to recreation is gratifying. In the various activities now afforded, not only do we recognize the various individual needs, but the collective as well as the distributive aspects of the group are properly evaluated. This makes for group consciousness. Simultaneously each individual is given opportunity to develop his capacity for union, and this constitutes his individuality and worth to the group. In this dynamic relationship every man finds his place in the group. His relation is not that of an atom, as a brick in a wall, but he stands actively identified with the whole. Thus the "whole is incarnate in every part," and as "we walk in the light as He is in the light we have fellowship one with another."

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

From the Watchtower

It is ever interesting to be in a point of vantage from which can be viewed expanses ordinarily without the range of vision. It is interesting to be a general officer in this Women's Department, since it brings us in touch with far-away places and people, and we are permitted to watch the progress and development of our sisters in many localities.

The letters which come to our desk are, for the most part, of an encouraging nature. The spirit which is universal is the one of willingness to do, and humility which says, "I feel unqualified, but am studying faithfully to overcome my handicaps."

We note with pleasure one communication, which comes to us from a western city. We are going to share it with our readers, who will feel with us that the sister who framed the document is most "forward-looking," and thoroughly imbued with that spirit which not only "leadeth to do good," but which leadeth her to do it in an intelligent and up-to-date manner. We refer to the "recommendations" drawn up for adoption by a local group of women, which will be found under the caption, "A brief survey of possible social service in our branch."

Before remedial measures can be applied in any direction, an examination of conditions is necessary. Before a group of men or women can set about doing good of a constructive and permanent nature, a careful survey of the field to be covered should be made, from the results of which work may be mapped out and plans outlined preliminary to the actual performance.

Surveys sometimes frighten people. The "spirit of democracy" so loudly acclaimed in our country has caused some of us to "lean over the other way" and insist that we can "do as we please," and that what we are and what we do and what we expect to become is nobody's business but our own. Feeling this way we resent questions pertaining to what we deem our private affairs.

But this feeling is all wrong—based on a wrong premise. What we are and what we do is everybody's business. Because it is impossible for anyone to live in this world alone and "fill the measure of creation," and because all the universe is changed in aspect and utility by every act and deed of every being therein, it becomes the business of us all to see that every unit is doing his full duty, living up to his highest potentialities. It very much concerns society when a unit is sick, discouraged, incompetent, or vicious. The mass suffers—that mass which has a right to expect a full measure from each of us. Thus there is no such thing as "personal liberty" when construed to mean that any has a right to act independently of, or indifferently to, the effects of his action upon those about him.

In this way it becomes the business of the church as a whole, and of a branch in particular, to see that its every member is functioning to his fullest possibilities, in order that the "whole body" may be "full of light." A survey is simply a diagnosis. If no abnormalities are found, nothing of a remedial nature is needed—simply the usual wholesome food of the gospel. But if sickness of body, mind, or spirit is disclosed, there is shown a need for the healing touch of the "Great Physician," through his servants on earth, who in love and humility are trying to follow in his footsteps. He came not to the well, who need not a physician, but to minister to those who were sick in spirit.

We feel that a general branch survey is a very progressive thing. The facts obtained are not intended so much for specific individual attention, but are used en masse, as indicating the general condition, thus disclosing the general need. The law of averages is based upon such statistical facts. This determines rates of insurances, ratios of life and death, of birth and mortality, and in countless ways governs many of the decrees under which we live to-day. Applied to church work, it enables the leaders upon the watchtower to protect the interests of the members, to minister unto them intelligently, and to plan constructively for their advancement.

We admire the spirit of this western local, and that of the sisters who drew up the recommendations, whose names are withheld for obvious psychological reasons affecting the success of the survey contemplated.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

A BRIEF SURVEY OF POSSIBLE SOCIAL SERVICE IN OUR BRANCH

To the president of the Women's Department of the—Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Dear Sister: In accordance with your request for a general survey of opportunities and possibilities for social service in our branch, the following suggestions are offered in terms of recommendations:

1. That we support to the utmost and with confidence, the unselfish, scientific, and far-visioned efforts of the central committees of the Women's Department, and take advantage of every vestige of their cooperation, endeavoring to establish a closer personal contact with them to the end that they may be upheld, encouraged, and appreciated, and that we, on the outskirts of Zion, may fully comprehend our significance as part of the purpose and solidarity of the gospel plan.

2. That our president head a committee (to be appointed by her) for active human service, the object being to investigate, through the spirit of compassion, true consideration, and progress, all the social needs of the persons comprising our group, to the end that wherever there is a need of practical assistance, it may be given, and wherever there is one overburdened, mentally or physically, plans may be worked out for relief, through constructive advice and actual cooperation.

3. That an effort be made to encourage all managers of homes in the study and application of the principles introduced in the course, "Food and the body."

4. That a survey be made of health conditions among our people, to determine measures involving the upbuilding of the delicate and frail among the young or old, due to improper care, improper feeding, overwork, or lack of necessary rest and recreation.

5. That an effort be made to determine the status of our children in school work, so that in below-normal cases we may find out the reasons and remedy the causes.

6. That a more united, more serious, consecrated effort be advanced for organized praying to supplicate the "holy and creative Light" on behalf of our sick and afflicted, for inspiration and guidance in all personal and general affairs, great and small, and for a daily prayerful support of our leaders and laborers in the field.

7. Finally, that we appreciate the value in the development of the Zion program of our patient, unswerving loyalty to the Prophet and leader God has placed in his church upon earth, to the end that our constructive attitude toward his general policies may uphold his hands, thereby testifying of our faith in his integrity and calling, onward and upward, with the inevitable momentum of the church of Christ upon the earth.

These recommendations are offered in the belief that by united, humane, and unselfish efforts the physical, mental, and spiritual level of our group may be rapidly raised and all energies for righteous endeavor and happiness may be released, strengthened, intensified, and developed. This outline is offered for your consideration, in humility, love for my fellow workers, and complete confidence in their ability to accomplish whatever works may benefit those who have a right to our devoted services and to enhance our value and significance as servants of God before the world.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER IV

The Main Periods of Childhood

I. What are the three main periods of childhood?

1. Infancy and Childhood

1. What are some of the instincts that manifest themselves early in a child?
2. Illustrate how each of the following instincts aids the child in his development: (a) curiosity, (b) imitation, (c) play.
3. What characteristics are common in the 1st, 2d, and 3d years? From 4 to 6? From 6 to 8?

2. Boyhood and Girlhood

1. What changes mark the transition from childhood to this stage? (a) physically, (b) mentally, (c) religiously?
2. What do you know of what a child can actually accomplish in this period?

3. Adolescence

1. What are the physical signs of approaching adolescence?
2. What changes take place in the child's attitude towards himself?
3. How does the adolescent regard social life?
4. What evils result from improper understanding of the adolescent?
5. What is true of the religious feeling at this period? Of crime?
6. What are the characteristics of the reconstructive period?
7. What variations may occur in regard to development in different children?

Glimpses of Local Life

Fargo, North Dakota: Sister Cora A. Delm, secretary-treasurer of the Fargo, North Dakota, local, writes happily of their participation in a two-day meeting there. Besides the election of officers, a program was given in which the Oriole girls took part in song and music. A paper, "Building my temple for God," by Sister J. E. Wildermuth, and another, "Am I my brother's keeper?" by Sister Clara Addicott, were very highly appreciated. The local is planning to devote the time entirely to study this year, not neglecting opportunities to help each other as they occur. They feel that while not a large circle, their strength will lie in their unity and earnestness of effort.

Manteno, Illinois: Being anxious to learn how the different branches are getting along with the excellent courses of study put out by our Women's Department, I will tell what we are doing in hopes others will do the same.

Our sisters of the Deselm Branch, who are situated so they can, are meeting every Wednesday afternoon to study "Food and the body" and "Child training." We are learning many helpful things, and our desire for more knowledge is awakened.

I was privileged recently to attend the Kankakee County Home Bureau Short Course and hear an address on "Relation of food to health," by Miss Kathryn Van Aken, food specialist, extension department of the University of Illinois, and an address on "Uncle Sam's children," by Miss Estelle Hunter, from the Children's Bureau at Washington, District of Columbia. I am so proud of the Women's Department of our church, for the work presented through their courses of study brings out the very things these State and National workers present.

It is not only the duty but the privilege of the sisters in every branch to take up this work and strive to bring it to every wife and mother in the local.

We must learn to take care of our bodies (1 Corinthians 6: 19) and give them the proper food, and must start teaching our children from infancy if we are to glorify God in our bodies (1 Corinthians 6: 20).

Here is a little verse to teach the children, to help them understand what holy temples their bodies are:

"My body is a temple,
To God it does belong,
He bids me keep it for his use,
He wants it pure and strong.
The things that harm the body
I must not use at all.
Tobacco is one hurtful thing,
Another—alcohol.
And drinks like tea and coffee
Make strong hearts weak and sick,
Turn steady nerves to trembling,
Make tempers sharp and quick,

Into my mouth they shall not go,
When tempted, I will answer, "No,"
And every day I'll watch and pray,
'Lord, keep me pure and strong away.'"

Let us step out, dear sisters, in the strength of our God and his Christ, and prepare ourselves to glorify him by our lives.
BEATRICE ROGERS.

The Body and Its Food

(The following little article was written by Sister Frederick Harpin, of Buffalo, New York, Branch, for a women's meeting in charge of the district organizer, Sister Mary Mesle.)

How many of us can, for the next few minutes, liken the body to an engine? The body needs fuel just as an engine does. An engine must have the right kind of fuel or it cannot work well. So must the body.

The human body is doing some work all the time, even in sleep, in sickness, and when resting.

An engine has to be built, repaired, and stoked. It is the same with the human body.

There are three kinds of food that are absolutely necessary to the body. They are classed as follows: 1st, fuel food; 2d, building or repair food; 3d, regulating food.

A man who does no laborious work needs only half the fuel food that is necessary for a man who works, say, on the farm, at the mill, or at the anvil.

People vary in their fuel needs. Children need a lot of fuel food, for they assimilate or burn it quickly. A girl of fourteen to seventeen years of age will need much more fuel food than a full-grown woman.

In order to build and keep up the repairs of our bodies, we need two kinds of food which we class as follows: the protein and mineral salts.

The proteins are abundant in the diet of lean meats, fish, fowl, cheese, eggs, beans, etc. Cereals and bread would come under this heading. Most foods contain some protein, but those mentioned are richest in that value.

A diet which contains no vegetables or fruits would be an inadequate one inasmuch as it would rob the body of some of the most needed salts.

We should be careful to "taste" our foods thoroughly. A person who bolts his food and does not thoroughly chew it is robbing himself of the good he should receive from it. Since eating keeps us alive, it is worth doing well.

Be cheerful when eating. Eat regularly. A little rest before and after meals is good. Above all do not forget to give thanks for the food that is yours to enjoy.

Let us turn our minds here to our Doctrine and Covenants, where, in section 86, second paragraph, we find that the Lord commands us to use the foods that he gives us in their season, with prudence and thanksgiving. To be truly thankful is a great factor in building up the human body. We all know to sit down to a meal, however simple it may be, with a thankful heart and gratitude for the same, is to put ourselves in a way to receive the most benefit. It will build up the body better than the richest repast partaken of in bitterness or lack of appreciative thanks.

From these thoughts let us gather those which will help us to help others. Those of us who have children should not leave their diet to a game of chance, but see that they are properly fed. We must study, in this line as in others, to "show ourselves approved."

Watch the children. A clear eye, a strong, elastic step, and, above all, a bright, wholesome mind, will be our reward, indicating that our work and our study have not been in vain.

In conclusion, let us never forget to render humble thanks to our Maker for the gift of our bodies, for the foods which nourish them, and for the intelligence which will turn all things to his glory.

New York Bill Would Make "Going Home to Mother" Criminal Act

Virtually every State in the union has made it a law that a man must support his wife. New York State, however, is the first to attempt legislation that will require a woman to support her husband.

In a bill introduced in the legislature by Assemblyman Edward Everett of Saint Lawrence, this provision is made.

Mr. Everett would make it a felony for any wife to abandon her husband or even to threaten to "go home to mother."

The bill, an amendment to the criminal code and domestic relations law, provides that a wife who has once assumed the obligation of supporting her husband shall retain that duty until "death do them part." If she has sufficient of worldly goods the burden of support is to fall on her in any event under the terms of the bill.—Omaha Bee.

Pigs and Children

A little pig is pink and white, and cunning when it's small,
But all too soon becomes a hog with rind and fat and gall.
And tricks that in a babe seem smart, let uncorrected go,
Bring sorrow to the parent heart and to the neighbors woe.
Of course our children are all right, for we could have no others;

But Johnnie Jones and Winnie Wright—we pity their poor mothers.

So pigs and children each are best when corralled close at home

And not allowed the neighborhood with license free to roam.
—Ash.

APPRECIATION

"It is with pleasure that I acknowledge receipt of the Centennial Yearbook, published by the Women's Department. I feel that this will be of great benefit to me in my work. I assure you that I am very hopeful of the work of the women in bringing about the redemption and establishment of Zion. You may count on me to cooperate to the best of my ability."
"D. J. K."

Our secretary writes of the rapidity with which our Yearbooks are being sold. Every sister in the church should have one in order to understand the work of the department, its ideals and objectives. Do not delay ordering. Price but sixty cents, Box 255, Women's Department, Independence, Missouri.

Prices of Quarterlies Advanced

At a meeting of the Sunday school executive council held at Independence, Missouri, January 29, the cost of printing and mailing Sunday school Quarterlies at present prices was reviewed. Within the last year the cost has advanced over fifty per cent. On account of this and the fact that heavy expenses are immediately ahead to pay for the revision of the new revised set of lessons with costly pictures, and other teachers' materials, it was found necessary to advance the prices one cent on each Quarterly. Until further notice the price, postpaid, will be as follows, beginning with the issue of July, 1921:

Senior Quarterly , 11 cents a quarter, per year	$0.35
Intermediate Quarterly , 8 cents a quarter, per year25
Junior Quarterly , 8 cents a quarter, per year25
Primary Quarterly , 8 cents a quarter, per year25
Beginner Quarterly , 9 cents a quarter, per year30

A much larger number of schools are now ordering by the year. This saves, on average, twenty per cent. If you haven't the money in hand, some friend of the school will advance it, so you can take advantage of this. With a regular weekly offering, it is sure to be paid back in a short time.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT,

New Edition of A Marvelous Work and a Wonder

The supply of A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by Daniel Macgregor, has become exhausted, and the author desires to revise the subject matter before the book is reprinted. It will, therefore, probably be several months before any orders can be filled for this book.

We have reports from Saint Louis that the interest in the special meetings there, by Elder E. E. Long, is very good. There is some despondency because their pastor, Elder Clyde F. Ellis, had to undergo a major operation, but at last report he was doing exceedingly well, and will soon be able to be out. Brother Ellis has been laboring for several years past in the South Sea Islands, and is thoroughly in touch with the work there.

ZION NEEDS MEN AND WOMEN OF ALL PROFESSIONS

Are You Preparing?

The young folks all over the church are awakening to the needs of the church, both spiritually and temporally.

The church needs you. The church needs your spiritual efforts. The church needs your temporal efforts. You can be of greater assistance to the church when you have solved successfully the problem of providing for your own temporal wants, and are earning a surplus above your needs and wants.

To make Zion complete, the church needs all kinds of vocations practiced within its borders. It needs doctors, preachers, dentists, lawyers, veterinary surgeons, nurses; teachers of all kinds, as superintendents, supervisors, college teachers, teachers of domestic science, of agriculture, and all grades of high school work and grade work; it needs dietitians, scientific and applied workers of domestic science, engineers of all kinds, mechanical, electrical, civil, sanitary, chemical; it needs architects, landscape gardeners, chemists, scientific farmers of all kinds, specialized in dairying, beef raising, forestry, and gardening; it needs pharmacists, teachers of music, art; it needs writers of stories, and good librarians. But none of these can you be successfully unless you have a high school education, or its equivalent, and for all of these a college education is highly important.

Young man and young woman interested in the welfare of Zion, can you afford not to be the best in whatever line of work you are going to take up? Can you afford not to have a college education as preparation for your life's work?

Perhaps, young man and young woman, you have decided to help out in the redemption of Zion and in the spreading of the gospel to the entire world by pursuing some other vocation than have been mentioned. Perhaps you have thought to occupy as a clerk in a store, or as owner of a store, or as a traveling salesman, stenographer, bookkeeper, bank clerk, certified public accountant, banker. Perhaps you have insurance in your mind. Yet if you want to be at the top in these professions and do the most good for the church, and give the greatest amount of service to the world, you will need a college education.

Every young man who enters the banking business should have a full four-year college course. You may have to begin with a lower salary to get your first-hand experience, but your advance to a larger position and to a place where your service will mean more to the church, will be much quicker than that of the young man who starts out in a bank without this education. We used to have good stenographers who had only an eighth-grade education, but never any more. If you expect to rise to a position of greater service than that of stenographer in which you start, you will need the education that a college can afford you. A stenographer who is content to take down just what is given him, and does not care to learn about the many ramifications of business, will not be of as much service to the church as if he had ambitions to learn his business thoroughly. To do this, intense preparation is necessary, and the best place to get that preparation for the start is in COLLEGE.

Zion Builder Services a Success

Universal gratification over the week's series of young people's meetings just concluded at Lamoni.

After a favorable start on Sunday, though Monday proved a cloudy day the church auditorium was filled for the second service of the series. Long before the doors were opened a long line was waiting, and as they waited they sang "The old, old path." No one who watches the eager young faces can doubt that they are ready for instruction, and that doctrinal sermons are in order.

Tuesday evening, Boy Scout night, found the upper auditorium filled to the doors. The Boy Scouts attended in a body in uniform. Seats were reserved for them near the front of the room. Harold C. Burgess, sensing the opportunity for diversion, asked the scouts if they would sing. They replied, "We will, if you will select a song we like." So they themselves chose, "If Jesus goes with, I'll go anywhere."

We do not think we have ever heard President Elbert A. Smith speak with greater power than he is doing in these services. It is indeed clear that the Lord has restored him to the church in greater power than he has ever enjoyed before. The presence of the Spirit, which was so well evident in the opening prayer meeting Sunday morning, the 13th, has evidently continued throughout, and its supporting effect is felt in each service.

Brother Elbert is preaching a present-day gospel. He preaches not that Jesus has lived, alone, but that he is living to-day; not simply that the sick have been healed, but are being healed, and will be healed to-day.

With a clear statement of divine command for each gospel ordinance, he joins also practical reason, so that it appeals to the best of our intelligence, and is founded on our knowledge of humanity and of truth. But he places his principal emphasis on the divine command.

The writer was not able to attend all of the services in the upper auditorium, as we felt our place was at least part of the time in the overflow meeting for the older Zion Builders. It was refreshing and pleasing to see the way the older members gathered to hear Elder J. W. Wight, who used the same subjects as were on the program above. Each night a few were able to secure seats in the upper auditorium after 7.40, but many made no such attempt, but came night after night to sustain their own special service in the lower auditorium. The enthusiasm in these services for the older Zion Builders was excellent.

The interest remained constant through the week. Despite other attractions there was no falling off towards the week end, while the speaker, instead of growing fatigued, spoke with increasing power. Friday night he made a complete change of theme, speaking of the great Restoration with unusual liberty, and again to a full attendance. In fact this was the case every night.

The subject matter of the discourses for the week was the first principles of the gospel: faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, the resurrection and eternal judgment, for the five nights preceding Friday.

The attendance during the week varied very little. Night after night the same young people were to be seen in attendance, their interest unabated. The spiritual power was clearly felt in every service, during the song service, and in special degree during the delivery and receiving of the message of the hour. It is not a movement for a day, but preparation for better service, which is much needed if the work of the church is to move on as it should, with a people prepared to care for the new converts.

The purpose of these meetings was not proselyting, though we have heard of several baptisms, resulting more or less directly from this movement. Two baptisms preceded the opening on March 13, as the conclusion of several weeks of preparation. Another baptism followed on Saturday, the 19th.

We are not publishing outlines of these excellent sermons because we expect to publish the sermons in full beginning at an early date. The special songs will probably all be published in the Autumn Leaves in a special article in the May number.

Sunday, the last day of a week all too short, found the upper auditorium filled at 8 a. m. for the special prayer service. Every seat was taken on the main floor, and nearly all of the seats on the stand and choir loft were filled with members of the priesthood. The service was a very active one, about seventy taking part, and a wonderful spirit was manifested in all of the testimonies. The voice of the Spirit was given in an unknown tongue through J. W. Wight; and President Elbert A. Smith, for the benediction, blessed the young people. The Sunday school attendance was 760 with $15.41 offerings. No sessions of Religio were held either Sunday because of overlapping of time.

At 11 a. m. the church was well filled to listen to Elder John F. Garver, whose subject and application fitted nicely into the series, his text being, "Thy will be done." At 7 p. m. the doors were opened for the final service of the series. By 7.30 the auditorium, including the gallery, was well filled, when the special song service started. All of the favorite songs were sung with much spiritual power. By 8 o'clock a few more had crowded in. The sermon on "Our spiritual inheritance" was a fitting close and summation of the work of the week.

George Anway then sang, as a solo, to the tune of "Aloha Oe," a song composed by Albert McCullough, who because of lameness was unable to attend, but who received the spirit of the services through the reports of others. Immediately after, Elder Lawrence Campbell, of Ontario, ascended the stand and well expressed the sentiment of all in a short address:

"Brother Smith, we as Zion Builders appreciate more than words can express the good you have done for us. The present may not depict this, but the future will reveal it to you. We can present to you no visible token that would be a measure of our gratitude, but we desire to express in some degree our love and appreciation for you and the work you have done. If you could have seen how eagerly both old and young have insisted on taking part in this show of appreciation; if you could have seen the little hands extended with their pennies and their nickels, your heart would have been touched. Therefore, we, as Zion Builders, present to you this slight token of appreciation and pray that God's blessing may continue with you."

He then presented him with a substantial check, leaving President Smith free to secure a special souvenir or not as he preferred. After a brief acknowledgment by President Smith, Elder John F. Garver read some further messages such as had been received each evening through the week. The one from Independence invited a cooperative effort:

"Will you join with us this year in an effort to spread the inspiration of these meetings to all the world, under a definite program?"

By unanimous rising vote the young people of Lamoni signified their approval.

After the closing exercises the congregation remained to sing several favorite hymns. As soon as they were dismissed, to the surprise of many, the young people crowded forward by the hundreds to shake hands with Brother Elbert. In fact they were quite loath to leave, and did not do so until near 10 p. m. Those who had had their children cared for by Sister J. E. Kelley during the services, repaired to a lower room and presented her with a beautiful mantel clock. She and her helpers did a noble work, caring for about thirty babies and small children nightly.

So one of the greatest meetings ever held in Lamoni passes into history, and yet it is only a beginning. As Brother Elbert said Sunday night, "I no longer look upon you as an army of young people, but rather as a corps of recruiting officers." So, he continued, we should continue our work of preparation, for the Lord will know where to find us when he wants us. The most important thing now for the young people to do is to get ready. As the old student society in Lamoni said through its motto, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and the Lord will send thee flax."

Organization for Young People's Meetings

Only by prayerful organized effort can the highest results be attained in these special meetings.

In a recent letter from one of our missionaries, we noted the statement that he thought of going or sending a week beforehand to the place where he was to hold the services, so as to organize on the plan used by the young people of Zion and Lamoni. But that could hardly be done within a week's time.

In Independence the work was thoroughly organized by the association of organized classes already having their own officers. In Lamoni the young people were unorganized, strictly speaking, but very soon a committee of young people was chosen to have the work in charge.

The technical part of the work includes advertising, which work was delegated to a subcommittee on publicity. Another committee arranged to have young people visit the neighborhood ward meetings, and go out to the country, and extend personal invitations to each branch. The same committee arranged to write letters to branches not so easily reached, extending an urgent invitation. A third committee arranged to see that each person within the prescribed age was visited, and given certain literature, and received a ticket, providing he or she would first promise to attend not less than six out of the seven services. This request was individual, and was accompanied by the individual distribution of tickets. Arrangements were then made that those holding tickets would be admitted up to 7.40; after that there were no reservations. Song service began at about 7.40 p. m., and the sermon at about 8.15 p. m.

For the babies or very young children, provision was made for a nursery for their care during the services. Competent women were placed in charge, so that the parents would feel entirely free to attend the services.

Provision was also made for overflow meetings, especially for those older in years or outside the prescribed ages.

Letters were sent out before the services, and daily letters mailed during the services, directed to those who could not attend, and outlines of the sermons were distributed either at its close or to each home the next day.

Naturally, provision was made for those who would have charge of the services, and especially for the speaker, and for some one to be in charge of the music.

But the most important factor was the prayer services. At the monthly union prayer meeting, at the sacrament service, at the weekly prayer meetings, both of the young people and of those older in years, the success of the services was made a special matter of prayer for at least a month in advance. A special lesson on prayer was discussed in intermediate, senior, and adult departments of the Sunday school, and the young people were urged, and promised to remember the services in their secret closets, and during the week to pray for the success of the services every evening at the same hour. Wherever that hour found us, a pledge was made that we would pause for a moment at least and pray for the success of these services, and for those having them in charge.

Surely the people who believe in present-day revelation, and in a living God, as ready to-day to speak with his people as with his people in ages past, should be preeminently a people of prayer. What is the use of sending a thousand miles, five hundred miles, or even one hundred miles, for a good speaker if we make no spiritual preparation beforehand?

Is our faith in the man, or is it in God? If it is in God, what efforts are we making to secure his cooperation? Do we think we have to do nothing; just wait until the last minute, then ask in an opening prayer his blessing? Or should we study it out in our minds beforehand, striving most earnestly for divine direction in preparation, as well as divine blessing in the hour of service?

Much of this preparation of course can be made in a week; the advertising can be done, and committees appointed. But to insure the greatest success, there should be an ample period of preparation, so each one can arrange his business affairs in a way to be able to support the services to his best ability. Too short notice will make it impossible for all to attend who would wish to do so, and would also make attendance more difficult for others. But especially is due notice needed in order that we may have time to make our spiritual preparation, a season of prayer in which to set our spiritual house individually in better order.

Now it is quite readily recognized that but few branches will be able to fill the church edifice with young people between the ages of fifteen and thirty; or even between the ages of eleven and thirty-five. But it is quite readily possible to have at least some special prayer meetings for the young people. It is also possible to reserve a section of the church for the young people. It is even possible to arrange for tickets so admission up to a certain hour will only be by tickets; after that hour the church is thrown open for all who may come, to the limit of its capacity.

With a little tact this can be done, not only without giving any offense, but in a way to make attendance felt to be a privilege, which indeed it is. Those older in years, possessed of the Spirit of the Master, will only too gladly give the preference to the young for the little season, and also will rejoice to see a revival of interest among those younger in years.

Let attendance be as a privilege, and not as a tiresome duty externally demanded. There would appear but little reason why, with a proper effort and proper spirit, the church edifice could not thus be filled. Come, let us go to the house of the Lord, and if we go with a proper preparation and devotion, we will there meet the Spirit of God, and feel indeed to say, "It is good to be here." S. A. BURGESS.

Missionary Services

One should have an ideal in missionary work, based on all existing facts. Good results are not attained by accident, but by humble, prayerful, persistent, effort.

The question has arisen, How far can this plan be applied to missionary services? The underlying principles would not be at all different; still adjustment would be necessary to meet the varying conditions.

In the missionary department of work there are two very clearly defined classes of work. There is the missionary effort of opening new fields, fields in which we will find either no friends, or very few, to start with, though it may be, as frequently happens, there will be one family of good church members, far from any branch. Such a case represents a very great part of missionary work. We would expect as a rule two missionaries to go there and work together. How long their stay should be in any such field will depend upon local conditions, their welcome, and the direction of the Spirit. Many times it happens, although one's reception is unsatisfactory, that the direction of the Spirit is either to return or remain, and later the way is opened up.

In such services we may rest assured that the missionary is engaging in very earnest and sincere prayer for divine guidance, and where the way seems difficult, he is ably seconded by those with whom he abides.

The musical problem may be one to be met by himself or associate for each service. There will be as much advertising as conditions will permit through the press, the daily distribution of tracts or leaflets in house-to-house visits, and where possible the use of placards.

Such organization as has been formed in these young people's services of course is not available under such circumstances. The workers are very few, and at times none outside of the missionary and his associate. But the principle of devotion, of praying for divine guidance, still remains. We sincerely hope the time is near at hand that a man being called for such work will go with the endowment of the Spirit of God and with the faith and prayers of the brethren and sisters at home, so that he will feel both the close presence of his heavenly Father and the support and direction of his Spirit, and also the material and moral support, so far as is possible, of the church through the tithes and offerings and through the prayers of the faithful Saints.

There is need for missionary service abroad, but there is also grave need for missionary service in the central places. Many communities even in the stakes have not as yet been properly canvassed.

This being the case, there is a second class of missionary effort—that which uses the organized branch as a nucleus, uses the branch establishment, the church building and facilities as a meeting place and basis for work. Many times have special services been arranged for a week or two at some of our church edifices. But when such services are arranged, why should we attempt to send abroad to secure a special speaker, if we are not prepared to spend several weeks in an effort of spiritual preparation, as well as thoroughly organizing the work beforehand in order to secure the best possible results. It is true that very many times such services are announced when very little or no preparation is made beforehand. A very short announcement is printed in the newspapers and the local officers think their duty has been performed.

Needful as is proper advertising and proper organization, the most important factor, which most frequently is neglected, is the spirit of prayer beforehand and prayer during the services.

In some cases a short meeting is held each day prior to the service by a few who can get together, seeking the blessing of the Lord upon the effort being made. So far as we are informed, this has proven so far the exception rather than the rule. But why should it be so? The minister we may rest assured spends many hours in secret prayer that his part may be well done. But he cannot do it all, nor is the work his alone. It is the work of God, and we should be his co-laborers.

Furthermore, what we will get out of any special service, whether it be for the young people, a revival for the branch as a whole, or whether it be a missionary effort will depend upon what we bring to the service. If we come cold-hearted and indifferent we need not be surprised if but little is received by us. If we come in a spirit of prayer, desiring to know the truth, desiring to learn the will of God, and to do it, we need not be surprised if we get more out of the service than does some indifferent brother or sister.

Again, a revival service may justifiably be short; a service which is for the sole benefit of the church membership. But when the purpose is a missionary effort, how long or short should it be?

The answer will naturally depend upon circumstances, the condition of the missionary, the attitude of the branch officials, the diligence and attitude of the branch membership who rejoice in the privilege offered them, as well as conditions in general. It is true that by a short service much good seed may be sown, some of which may wither away, some of which many years later may come to flower. But it is equally certain that now is the accepted time, and a persistent effort made now will secure immediate results.

Our appeal is not the emotional one. The emotions can be moved in a single night. It is to the intelligence primarily. Being such it takes time for conviction. The fact that no converts have been announced for one or two weeks is no reason for even considering discontinuing the services. It will take both judgment and inspiration to answer the question rightly. But the presumption would seem to be in favor of not stopping as soon we have begun.

Here in Iowa Elder Daniel Macgregor has, the past conference year, been holding a number of special services which have been continued from four to nine or ten weeks, as the interest appeared to warrant. Every night the church at Missouri Valley, Iowa, where he is speaking has been crowded to the door, and people are being turned away. Seventy-one have been baptized so far, and more are on the way. Some one asked Brother Macgregor how long he would remain in that place. His reply was characteristic: "I may have to stay three years." Paul remained several years at Ephesus.

A missionary is expected to devote his efforts night after night, month after month, somewhere. Cannot we support the effort with all of our ability and strength, even though it should last two or three months?

The results are not those of one man, but are secured through the persistent results of many, and through the blessing of the Spirit of God, even though one may be rightly chosen to assume the chief responsibility for a season.

We could extend the list and mention others, but it is certain that a humble preparation through prayer and attention to all things needful beforehand and the continued effort supported by the faith and prayers and attendance of the Saints, will mean the saving of many honest in heart for the work of the kingdom of God.

Nor because of the seemingly spectacular success of the special missionary effort should we ignore the daily necessity of developing pastors for these thus inducted into the kingdom of God, so that those who are newly baptized may themselves become available material for work in the household of God. It is necessary that our educational work in the Sunday school, in the Religio, in the Women's Department, and in our study classes be not neglected. It is necessary that under the direction of the pastor suitable instruction be given from time to time. But over all, there is the need for devoted, consecrated prayer.

When the opportunity for special missionary work is before us, let us not faint in well doing, nor be slack in any service assigned.

Music for Revival Services

Preference is given to congregational singing well planned and carefully directed.

When the preliminary plans were being made for services in Independence, President Elbert A. Smith and others there expressed a decided preference for congregational singing, and Brother Harold C. Burgess, who was placed in charge of the music there, most heartily agreed. They appreciated the value of special orchestra numbers and special choir work as well as solos, but fully agreed that for such services as these we want the songs that everyone can sing. Nor does that mean songs that are so familiar that it requires no thought to sing them.

In practice there were one or two solos in the preliminary song service; that is, some one would sing perhaps a verse, and all would join in the chorus. There was a limited use also of quartets, but invariably it was merely a variation of the congregational singing. On one occasion a quartet was placed in the rear of the gallery, producing some remarkable results. There was multiple variety of presentation, but always it was to sing songs in which the whole body could join, and in which they were not only invited but urged to take part. It was preeminently community or congregational singing, and showed real leadership in getting everyone to sing, or at least to make an effort to do so, and each one became a part of the service to the best of his ability.

An orchestra was used, but the piano, organ, and orchestra as a whole were only for purpose of accompaniment of the congregational singing.

The same method that was used at Independence was also used at Lamoni. The young people were gathered beforehand and practiced on some of the songs to be used, those with which they might not be so familiar. The choir seats were not filled with the choir, but different young people assembled there each evening, and every night every seat was filled. These impromptu choirs were called on to carry the singing part of the time; the same request was made from different parts of the audience; also on special nights, as when the Boy Scouts attended in a body, in uniform, they, too, were requested to select a song, and called upon as a body to sing.

This insistence upon congregational singing was not based on any unwillingness to recognize the value of a trained choir. In fact, in Lamoni while this congregational singing was being prepared, and even during the services, the regular choir met for practices on an oratorio to be rendered the week after the close of the services. Orchestra music has its place; choir work has its place; but for thoroughgoing revival work we want community singing.

It was suggested at Independence that a fifteen-minute song service be held at the close, but this was dropped, and we think rightfully so. It has its place at the mourner's bench, when we want to ask people to come forward, but that is not the nature of our services. Our appeal is to the intellect rather than to the emotions. So at the conclusion of the sermons the services were quickly closed.

We have already referred to the special services being held in Saint Louis, March 6 to 20, and in Philadelphia, March 13 to 27. The music in the latter place is in charge of Albert N. Hoxie, general director. At the former place the music is in charge of E. C. Bell, who was formerly assistant general director. Both of these men are competent leaders in community singing, if they are not among the very best in this country.

One outgrowth of these services has been the development of new songs to old tunes. Thus, at Independence they sang one by Brother R. J. Lambert, to the tune of "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning." A series of songs were also printed for distribution in Lamoni, and President Elbert A. Smith and Sister Vida E. Smith each had prepared a new song for the occasion. But in addition a song written by President Smith twenty years ago was also featured. And we note in the local branch paper from Saint Louis a song by Elder R. Archibald, given through the Spirit several years ago.

Music is an essential part of all of our church services. Its importance justifies careful consideration and preparation beforehand, to see that this part of the work of our special services is made to contribute in the highest degree to the success of the services as a whole.

Other Good Reunion Articles

In addition to those articles listed last week for the next reunion, the following articles are already set but were crowded out last week:

Three articles on the little ones at reunions, by Mrs. M. D. Graham, of Burlington, North Dakota, Maude C. Halley, of Independence, Missouri, and Miss Marcella Schenck, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa.

Subjects Being Discussed

Unity of the Whole Church

One great result of these meetings of the young people at Independence and Lamoni is to emphasize the unity of the whole church. The young people everywhere are praying for the success of these meetings. Every evening communications are read from far and near, and letters of greeting are sent out reporting the success of the services. It broadens the view of the local man, and makes him feel one with those who are on the Atlantic seaboard, and with those who are on the Pacific slope, as well as those who live in between or who are sojourning among the nations abroad.

Missionary Work Should Help Pastor

The pastor necessarily feels keenly the necessity of the work of edifying the body of Christ, and the perfecting of the Saints. Occasionally a pastor feels that a protracted missionary effort is interfering with his pastoral work, and may feel even a little of jealousy if he feels for a time to take a back seat. But we think this is rarely the case. A missionary effort should strengthen the foundation of the Saints, and prepare them to return to their normal church work stronger than before. Of course it is true that the regular work is disorganized for a time, not only during the services, but

Being Broad-minded Saints

By Ruby R. Speer

Are we of the inclusive or exclusive type of mind?

Some wise person once made the remark: "The difference between a broad, happy life and one which is narrow and meager, may be summed up in these two words, inclusive and exclusive." We have often read in early church history of those zealous men who, in their mistaken love and zeal for their religion, retired to lonely mountain homes. Here they led hermit lives, seeing no one, helping no one, never coming in contact with the world and with sin. We read of these ascetics with perhaps admiration for their zeal, admiration for their strength of mind that they could suffer hardships and even death for what they believed to be the truth. And yet, when all is considered, what did they do to help their fellow men? What did they do to promote the kingdom of God, except perhaps to save their own souls? Instead of overcoming the sins of the world and making themselves masters of the sins and passions within them, they fled from them. Instead of being inclusive in their lives, they were exclusive in the extreme.

In the Mosaic law we find ten commandments. Thou shalt not, and thou shalt. The shalt nots are personal, exclusive, wholly selfish: Thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not bear false witness, and so on. These were good and were needed then as now. But the whole essence of religion is summed up in the commandment, Thou shalt.

God said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In this commandment lies the golden key of religion. How wonderful life would be, how broad each person would be, how much larger even would his church be, if every person could absorb that commandment and apply it every moment.

Religion as Broad as the Infinite

I once heard a man make this statement. He was a college professor and one whose opinions carried weight with a good many people. He said in substance, "Religion is not narrow. Religion is as broad as the Infinite, because it is the Infinite. Religion is the groping of the human soul after its Creator. But deliver me from religion in the modern sense, religion as it is confined within the walls of some present-day church. It is woefully narrow; nothing for the social, all for the individual. Will I be saved? What shall I do to be saved?" He said, to prove his point, "Glance through any hymn book and read the titles, and I'll dare you to show me even a third which are not for personal salvation: 'Will there be any stars in my crown?' 'Wash me whiter than snow,' and so on."

When we apply the searchlight of desire for truth to our own souls, are we spotless? Are we working to give our lives, through the association with the rest of society, for their enlightenment and their salvation? Or are we working for our own salvation and so busy seeing the mote in our brother's eye that we have no time to be aware of the beam in our own? Are we, as a church, inclusive, or are we exclusive? Can the church be any stronger than its members? If we as individual members are narrow and exclusive, can the church be broad and inclusive?

How Shall We Attain Broadmindedness?

Can we (and here I honestly ask for information, because I confess I do not know) be broad and inclusive, can we uplift and bring our fellow associates up higher and toward the truth if we, like the ascetics of old, flee from temptation, spurn companionship of those outside the church, and shun all worldly pleasures? If there is good in all things, and there must be, for God made them, can we not make ourselves stronger by association with the world and worldly things? By meeting sins and passions and overcoming them, each one is made stronger. Strength is generated at each obstacle overcome. Do you not think there is more rejoicing in heaven when one sinner becomes master of himself and overcomes evil than when one ascetic flees from life and its temptations?

Let us each one in the church work to make the church broader and bigger. Let us work with an eye to the service of society, and as a result we ourselves will grow. Let each one strengthen himself, in order that the social whole will be better. Let us educate ourselves by books, by study, by travel, by our daily work, and by our contact with each other. Let us work for our children, keep them physically, mentally, and spiritually healthy, alert and strong. Can we not, a body of so many thousand people, by being just the best we individually can be, be the leaven which will permeate and lighten the whole mass of society?

Let us remember that only a few can do the big things, the things which stand out to public notice. But no chain is stronger than its weakest link, and we can be the little integral parts without which the whole could not move. By our daily lives and by our work we can do the things for which God placed us here, that our lives and work may carry on his great plan.

Let us study to show ourselves approved, workmen who need not be ashamed.

Taking the Outsider to Church

By Mrs. Winnifred Hulbert

Let us take him whenever we can, for God can use a local, humble minister as well as the special preacher of some important place.

Undoubtedly there is a diversity of opinions as to the proper place and time to interest the outsider in the gospel. I feel especially moved upon to relate some of my own personal experience along this line; not as one wishing to set up a standard for others to go by, but just to show the depth of human weakness, and how narrow it is possible for us to become.

I reluctantly confess that I had the same ideas along this line as many others with whom I have come in contact during my experience in this church. Coming into the church young, and the major part of my family not being of like faith, I was thrown more or less into the society of outsiders; and while I never felt inclined to withhold my identity with the church of Jesus Christ, I sometimes felt just a little timid about taking some of my friends to church; partly, perhaps, because of our unpopularity as a people, and also because of existing conditions in the branch. I remember distinctly my philosophy in reasoning the matter out. While I went to church faithfully and persistently week after week and month after month, when it was announced that "Elder So-and-So" from Lamoni, or Independence, or Chicago, or some other place, would speak the following Sunday, I felt this was my opportunity to take my unbelieving friend to church. I do not doubt but that many of us would even have suffixed a "D. D." or "LL.D." to the name to make it appear a little more elaborate. How ridiculous! I am exceedingly grateful that I have changed.

What Does a Calling Imply?

Do we not believe that God calls all of his servants to preach? Can a man officiate in the various offices of this church, receive his ministerial license authorizing him to perform such duties, without being called of God? And is not his calling approved by the higher authorities in the church? Very well, we all believe that. Then that same God who clothes him with authority to preach will also give him a message. To whom is he to deliver this message? Let Christ answer: "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." Yet we hesitate to take some one to church with us for fear "it will not be a very good sermon." Which would best solve the problem—"O ye of little faith," or "ye of little intelligence?"

Some of our members, I am sorry to say, reason the matter out thus: "These friends of mine are very intelligent people, and I prefer taking them to church when one of our best speakers is going to preach." I regret very much that this is positively the case with a great many of our members, particularly in small branches, where through lack of means and other elements needed, they are unable to bring the work up to the proper standard of efficiency.

The presiding officer, undoubtedly, is doing the best he can, according to the time he has to devote to the work, but do the members realize that, and are they doing their part to assist him? They surely are not if they stay at home and keep their friends from hearing the gospel. Row after row of empty seats create a far worse impression on the outsider than almost anything else. It is a very wrong idea to think our friends "too intelligent" to hear the gospel, merely because the manner of presentation is not quite so elaborate as we think it ought to be. The Doctrine and Covenants tells us that the glory of God is intelligence, and while we believe that God not only desires but requires that we grow and develop and expand mentally as well as spiritually, there is a certain simplicity which has always characterized God's message to the human race in all ages and dispensations of time.

We are therefore able to understand by studying God's sacred word that the message, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," did not originate in a theological seminary, neither have the theologians or scientists been able to add anything to that wonderful message to give it greater weight or influence. God evidently saw where he could take the "foolish to confound the wise," knowing the exact nature of every individual, hence, we must not "behold the man," but "behold the message he brings."

Did you ever stop to think of the simplicity in which the gospel was first made manifest? Have we a book on our shelves to-day containing a story so beautiful as the story of the Christ? And did you ever wonder why God did not choose an "LL. D.," "D. D.," or "M. A.," a professor of a great theological seminary, a teacher at Harvard, or some one of equal standing, as an instrument in his hands to restore the gospel to us in these last days? Can you contemplate God choosing a poor, unlearned youth, not even having attained the age of manhood, and intrusting him with so great a work? This was God's way. None doubt but that he could have arranged the gospel on a more elaborate scale had he chosen to do so; none doubt but that God could have prevented so humble a birth for his Only Begotten Son, had it been consistent with his all-wise purpose. But this was God's way.

Thus, when we assume the "impression" the gospel message is going to make on our friends, we are assuming God's responsibility and not our own; for man is the instrument, and God is the force. The servant sows the seed; God gives the increase.

Personal Experiences

Getting back to our own personal experiences again: I have invariably observed that assuming that responsibility myself as to when and where to take the outsider to hear the gospel meets with failure, as many times I have invited some one to go, thinking that some certain speaker would make a better impression than some other, and was sorely disappointed. On the other hand, I have taken outsiders to church at times when the sermon did not particularly impress me, yet my friends thought it excellent. Thus how little we know what is required to meet the other person's needs, and whom God will choose to impart the needed knowledge.

We should, therefore, keep one thought constantly before us; that is, that God is always able to meet the demands and equal to any emergency, and if we will only place ourselves in condition where he can use us, according to his will and purpose, eliminating selfish motives, good is bound to come from our efforts, and God's name be glorified. When we assume that our friends are too intelligent to go to our humble little church and hear our pastor, whose education, perhaps, is somewhat limited, we are placing them above our Savior; for who of us would refuse to ask our Savior to go to church with us, should he pay us an unexpected visit?

"Well," says one, "don't you think a preacher should have a great deal of personal magnetism and charm if he expects to win souls to Christ?"

Oh, yes, we admire that, of course but God doesn't always select that kind to represent him. Well, then, we must delight in those whom God has seen fit to choose, for where the Spirit of God is, earthly grandeur and magnificence sink into oblivion; there is a heavenly atmosphere there, a sacredness not found elsewhere, in harmony with what the Master has said: "My kingdom is not of this world."

Let us, therefore, not be "ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation," and let us not lose sight of the fact that God will bless the little humble gathering just as richly as the larger and more elaborate one, if his will is carried out according to his holy purpose; likewise his uneducated servants, if they are humble and full of love. We can never build up God's house by tearing down some of his plans and substituting those bearing our own trade-mark. We must keep very close to the Master in all things if our works would prove a success, whether in taking outsiders to church or performing other tasks. I believe everyone having a desire to press forward and develop in this great school of enlightenment admires education along all lines that would tend to develop the intellect and better qualify us for service to God and our fellow men, and should strive to bring up the standard of their achievements to the highest plane, but let us always be subject to God's will—that whatever strides we may make to succeed, we will give God the glory; otherwise our footing is not sure.

Let us do our duty in meekness and humility, being faithful and persevering, and leave the results with God.

Perry Branch Celebrates Eighth Anniversary

The Saints at Perry, Iowa, recently had an anniversary celebration commemorating eight years of its history. Credit was given to Sisters Nellie Martin and Lucy Doss for the development of the situation which resulted in the organization. Elder Even Miller, of Independence, is now branch president; Elder Ernest Partridge, recently ordained an elder, is acting as priest; and E. C. Kibby as deacon.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES

Straining at gnats of theology and swallowing camels of ritualism.

The unrest arising from the war is shown on one hand by the continued effort towards union, and on the other hand by the recognition that the Protestant church is not as effective as it once was. The Reverend C. E. Macartney, writing in the Christian Work, states that one third of the Presbyterian churches in the United States finished the year without adding a single person to the roll of their communicants. In thought, in forms of worship, in social and political outlook, the Protestant church shows even more markedly the signs of transition. In the sixteenth century the keynote of salvation was justification by faith. The work of the Protestant churches appears to have resulted in rationalism, which has become unbelief. As usual a reference is then made to the German universities, and the American universities are also called to account, as is the church with which they are related.

Protestantism has had much to do with developing civilization of the past two or three centuries. Many of the leading universities are founded by the Protestant churches.

"Yale Divinity School, an old and honorable school of the prophets, and traditionally associated with the Congregational Church, has ceased to be a seminary of Christian instruction, if we may believe its own declaration, and announces itself as a 'School of Religions.' The Congregational Church drifts steadily towards Unitarianism, of which it is still fair to say in the words of Coleridge, 'Unitarianism is not Christianity, but there are Unitarians who are Christians.' In New York the Unitarian Church of the Messiah has changed its name and broken its connection with the Unitarian body, even that pale cast of theology being too strong for its minister and people. It now calls itself a Hall of Worship, or some such name, where a sun worshiper, Jew, Mohammedan, and Christian would find nothing to 'hurt his feelings.'

"The Baptist Church, always independent in its organization, cannot be classified theologically. The former minister of the Baptist Church who is my nearest neighbor was sad and depressed when Christmas and Easter came round, because he felt that he had nothing to say about the incarnation and the resurrection, as the church received these doctrines. But this man's successor started his work in this same church by calling for, and receiving, Christian decision at the close of an evening hour of worship. Confronted everywhere in the Baptist Church by facts like this, how could I, or anyone else, be expected to tell what the Baptist Church teaches or believes?

"In the Methodist Church we have the worst state of all. Fervor of great convictions brought the Methodist Church into being. Now the fire has died down; cold are the ashes on the hearth of former cheer and inspiration. Even the Presbytery of Denver, at a recent session, thought it incumbent upon them to warn students for the Presbyterian ministry away from Denver University with its Methodist School of Theology. Some time ago, when attending the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Saint Louis, I was asked to preach in the pulpit of one of the Methodist churches of the city. Where were the pious ejaculations, the fervent amens, the hearty singing? All were vanished, leaving not an echo behind them. The minister told of the Centenary Movement in the Methodist Church, an effort to celebrate the centenary of Methodist missions by raising a huge sum of money. The whole campaign, with minute men, and what not, culminated in a blaze of pageant glory at Columbus in 1919, with vast spectacles, tableaux, etc., to the accompaniment of moving pictures. And this from the church of the Wesleys!

"In the Episcopal Church we have the strangest hodge-podge that church history has yet afforded. Under the same skin you will find an out-and-out rationalist and an ultra-ritualist and churchman. I have just been reading a sermon on immortality by an Episcopal clergyman, and not only is there no Christianity in it, but the preacher goes out of the way to deny what Christianity, from the days of Saint Paul down, has always taught as to sin, death, and the life to come. Yet this same preacher has much to say about altars, sacraments, and so on. The more they strain at what few gnats of theology are left in Protestantism the more these Episcopal rectors swallow the camel of ritualism, incense, rubrics, apostolic ordination, and what not. The chief stock in trade of the Episcopal Church just now is to talk about church unity, well knowing they themselves, so far as the branches of Protestantism are concerned, are the chief stumblingblock in the way of unity by reason of the fable of apostolic succession. In contrast with all this it is refreshing to come upon Episcopal ministers who are more interested in the application of pure Christianity to the people committed to their charge than they are to changing the name of their denomination to the American Catholic Church.

"And what now of that great church which all Protestant bodies have looked upon as the defender of the faith and which, because of its stand for the great fundamentals of Christianity, has, more than any other branch of the Protestant church, held the secret admiration of Rome. What of the Presbyterian Church? What is left of Protestantism is undoubtedly to be found in the Presbyterian Church. But, alas! it is precious little that is to be discovered.

"One of her seminaries, Union, of New York, is no longer either in spirit or in letter connected with the Presbyterian Church. That institution has advanced from one post of radicalism to another, till if you were to take a graduate of this seminary in the nineties and put him alongside of a graduate of the last five years, and then have them give expression to their conceptions of what the Christian religion is, some visitant listener from Mars would conclude that they were talking about different religions."

This is the expression of one writer and thinker of the day. The Christian Work intimates that others have reached a different conclusion. Doctor Macartney places the difficulty with the departure from fundamental principles; that Protestant ministers as a class have ceased to preach a definite Christian mission. Patriotism, literature, power of "vision" (that terrible and pulpit-mauled word), memorial orations for various orders, special days, great people of secular history, industrial unrest, and woman suffrage is the feeding ground of the modern Protestant. But all the drives and movements and new eras are not a good substitute for the driving force of faith that is absent.

Doctor Macartney continues that the Protestant church ministry has laid itself open to misrepresentation because it has in many sections abandoned the declaration of definite Christian truth, having nothing to teach, has resorted to entertainment and sensation. The calamity is the neglect of the mighty facts of Christianity, turning from the roots of religion to the writing of pleasing essays.

Whatever may be our conclusion on this article, it is certain that therein will always lie a weakness if anything else is substituted for the truth which is in Christ Jesus; if any attempt is made to use any "ology" for true Christianity. We realize the value of organization, and we do not discredit the use of all practical helps of modern methods, but we must still insist that it is only the gospel of Jesus Christ which is the power of God unto salvation.

What a man doesn't understand he opposes.

COMMON CONSENT

Sidney Smith, in trying to pacify a disturbed acquaintance who stated that a mutual friend had been guilty of profanity, informed his acquaintances that he had once heard the accused party speak disrespectfully of the equator. The Melbourne (Australia) Age adds: "In this modern world of ours, dominated by the instinct of popular rule, it has become fashionable for old fogeyism itself to think and speak as respectfully of democracy as of the equator." Yet it may well be doubted whether half of these professed democrats believe in their own politics. Direct actionists hesitate to speak disrespectfully of the equality of the franchise, though in action are quite ready to substitute minority for majority rule. It leads to the old aristocracy where people enjoyed the rule of the few over the many.

It is stated that in Russia one hundred and eight million people have no right of self-government. One hundred thousand Bolsheviks form the aristocracy and rule. Opinions differ as to whether they rule well or not, but as the Age points out, we find there are not very different conditions in other places.

The foreign policy of Great Britain is handled by the foreign office, at times almost independent of the people. In Australia the democratic principle is stifled by the ministerial control of each parliament. The rulers do the thinking. While the people claim to delight in self-government, they hardly more than half exercise the franchise. The same thing is to be noted both in America and Great Britain, that when the people vote, there is not a free choice:

"Toorak recently gave us an admirable illustration of this. Toorak is a state constituency, where what is called the nationalist vote is decisive. Labor has not as much as a look-in in Toorak. Through the retirement of Mr. Bayles a new member has to be elected. There are probably a dozen eligible citizens, all of whom would most thoroughly answer the aspirations of the Toorak electors. It is one of the primary rights of those electors to have as wide a choice as possible. And what has happened? A dozen gentlemen—the local executive of the nationalist council—step in and forbid it. They claim the right to say who shall and who shall not receive the nationalist vote. They label the man of their choice, and say to the tens of thousands of constituents—'Take him! That is your man. We decide for you whom you shall take.' This nullification of self-government is not peculiar to Toorak. Cross to Collingwood, it is precisely the same. The electors under democracy have a right to choose between a dozen aspirants to the seat. But a small electoral council says otherwise. They say that every one of those round dozen of candidates ambitious of parliamentary distinction must sink his legal rights at their bidding, so that they, and not the 30,000 or 40,000 people, choose the member for Collingwood.

It may therefore be gravely doubted whether the great bulk of the people living under what is called self-government are sincerely attached to a real form of government of the people, by the people, for the people. All parties alike, nationalist, country party, and labor, deliberately adopt plans which vest the power of the many in the few. And the many bow down submissively under this usurpation of the few—just as the 180,000,000 of Russia are supine under the oligarchical government of Lenin and Trotsky."

Unfortunately we find a similar disposition in other departments. We can see it in the repeated emphasis on Zion, on consecration, on stewardship, until these words have become almost empty sounds. We are willing to utter the words, but not to have the reality—or are we? It is quite certain that a mere repetition of the sound is not going to bring about the redemption of Zion, or anything else. It is quite certain

Vocational and Industrial Zion

By Max Carmichael

The fourth of a series of articles that discuss intimate internal aspects of Zionian problems.

What are the vocational and industrial opportunities of Zion?

What geographical territory does the land of Zion and the regions around about comprise?

According to the Doctrine and Covenants, Independence is to be the center place, and Zion was not to be moved out of her borders. (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1; 98: 3; 127: 7, and section 128.) According to section 57: 1, the State of Missouri was consecrated for the gathering.

The chief industry of this region is stock raising, the raising of cattle, hogs, and sheep for food purposes. Missouri stands sixth or seventh in number of beef cattle raised of all the States. In 1912 she raised from 30 to 40 cattle per square mile. Kansas ranked fourth or fifth, with Iowa second. In the raising of hogs, Missouri stands third, Iowa first, and Kansas fifth or seventh. While Missouri and surrounding territory do not rank high in sheep raising, nevertheless there are quite a number of sheep raised. You will notice from the maps showing distribution of stock raising, that the northwestern part of Missouri raised more than the central and southeastern, the eastern part of Kansas more than the western, thus centering around Independence. Notice, however, that Independence is only on the edge of the district in the United States which has the greatest concentration of the stock-raising industry.

Kansas City Large Packing Center

You will notice that the area of greatest concentration of the cattle industry is to the north and west of Independence. Likewise the swine industry. Kansas City is consequently one of the seven large meat-packing centers of the Mississippi Valley. The stock to the north of Kansas City goes to Saint Joseph, and further north still goes to Chicago. Kansas City's main field for raw meat is eastern Kansas. However, Kansas City is in direct line for the reception of cattle from Texas which stands first in the cattle- or beef-raising industry. Thus Zion and her borders contain two meat-packing centers, Kansas City and Saint Joseph. While Missouri is not a topnotcher in raising cattle and swine, yet transportation facilities are such that stock raising and meat packing are her chief occupation and industry.

Crops Necessary for Stock Raising

In order that a country may successfully raise stock for the market, it must of necessity have certain crops. One of these is corn, probably the most essential for swine raising and one of the most essential for cattle raising. In 1910 Missouri stood third among the States in corn raising, Iowa stood second, and Kansas sixth. Iowa and Illinois compete for first place every year. Again we find the northern and western part of Missouri raising more corn per acre than the remaining portion. Again we find Independence along the southeastern border of the intensive corn-growing that if we are going to progress, it must be because we are willing to raise our intellectual and spiritual aims—not be content merely to repeat forms, but actually to think about that which confronts us.

section of the United States, this intensive section containing eastern Kansas, eastern Nebraska, Iowa, Northern Missouri, Illinois, and Indiana, and western Ohio.

Another important crop of Missouri is wheat. Missouri does not stand among the foremost States, yet wheat is widely grown there. Kansas stood second in 1910. Central Kansas grows wheat intensively. For this reason Kansas City is one of the ten big milling centers in the Mississippi Valley. In oats Missouri stands high, although not among the highest in rank. Iowa stood first in oat raising in 1910. Likewise to support the stock-raising industry is the grass and hay produced in the States.

Missouri is quite capable of sustaining a large amount of dairying. Likewise southern Iowa and eastern Kansas. It is thought by some that the northern and western Missouri farmer will go more and more to dairying. His high-priced rolling land will find its best profit in dairying, especially as the market in the cities of Kansas City and Saint Louis are growing larger every day.

The grasses and hay crops are timothy, clover, some alfalfa, and wild grasses. Other crops are rye, kaffir corn, barley, spelt, some potatoes, sweet potatoes, broom corn, a variety of vegetables, and flaxseed.

In horse and mule raising Missouri stands around the top in rank among the States, standing third in 1910.

In fruit raising, especially apples, Missouri stands high. Apples are grown in the northern and western parts, but the southeastern part of the State is found to be the best adapted to fruit raising. You will notice that the apple is probably the most staple of all fruits.

Rainfall Good

Certain physiographic conditions must combine to make Zion and her borders such a wonderful crop-growing country. First there is the rainfall. The annual mean rainfall for the whole territory from southern Missouri to central Iowa and to central Kansas averages from 30 to 45 inches annually. Missouri itself averages 39. The northwestern part has less than the southeastern. The rainfall is distributed throughout the year so that a crop is almost always insured.

Next is the length of the crop-growing season. This runs from 190 days in southern Missouri to 155 in central Iowa, a medium of the temperate Zone. The land could not be in better situation so far as this climatic condition is concerned.

Next is the temperature. The mean temperature in January in Independence is about 25 degrees and in July about 78 degrees. This is a most satisfactory average.

In Richest Soil Section

Last of the physiographic conditions but not least is the soil and topography of the region. The richest soil of the United States extends in a strip from Wisconsin down through Iowa, and through northwestern Missouri, in the very heart of which is Jackson County, down through eastern Kansas and into Oklahoma. The soil is deep, much of it underlaid by limestone. That part of the State north of the Missouri River, and the western part of the State is a plain of slightly rolling hills, the greater part of which is arable. The eastern part of Kansas and Iowa is of the same nature. Zion and her borders happen to be particularly in that territory affected by the ice sheets of the glacial period. A glance at a glacial map will give the southern point of that larger glacial slide which extended down into what is now the State of Missouri. These sheets of ice covered the surface to a great depth with debris and silt, gravel, and even bowlders. Extending slightly north of east through the southern part of the State are the Ozark Mountains, most of which is not arable except near the streams. The southern slope of these mountains is somewhat sandy and hence suitable for certain crops.

As a result of these agricultural industries, what manufacturing industries can be had in this territory? We have already spoken of the meat-packing industry, and the milling industry, as a natural outgrowth of the stock-raising and wheat-growing industries. Along with the meat-packing industry comes the industry of making boots and shoes. The killing of the stock will provide the raw material, the hides, for these purposes. Then can come all the accompanying industries along with the meat-packing industry, the making of buttons, combs, and such articles, also the manufacture of glue.

Abundance of Coal

About one third of the State is underlaid with coal, the great part of which is northwest of an irregular line drawn from Clark County to Jasper County. Not all of this coal can be mined with profit. The largest shipping mines are in Bates, Lafayette, and Macon Counties. You will notice that Lafayette County is just a few miles east of Independence. As these coal beds slope downward to the west, the farther west one goes, the deeper is the coal, hence the more difficult to mine coal in Jackson County. Bates and Vernon Counties, also the better coal beds, are south of Jackson County from fifty to seventy-five miles.

Zinc and lead are mined in southwestern Missouri about one hundred and fifty miles from Independence. Joplin is the zinc-mining center. Missouri ranks first among the States in the production of zinc. The Ozark plateau has some iron ore. The Iron Mountain field in the southeastern part of Missouri has produced millions of tons. In comparison with other iron fields in the United States, however, this field does not stand high in production. Yet this indispensable metal is within a few hundred miles of Independence. The iron of Michigan is probably as accessible to Kansas City as is this iron on account of better transportation facilities between Chicago and Kansas City than between southeastern Missouri and Kansas City. You will notice this when we take up the transportation facilities of this territory.

Canned groceries may well become a very important industry in Zion and the surrounding territory. Kansas City may well be a large oil-refining city. Because of the availability of wool, it can manufacture woolen goods. While cotton is not grown in the vicinity of Jackson County, nor perhaps within the confines of the "territory around about," yet it is grown with sufficient proximity to make the raw material accessible if other factors are good for manufacturing plants. Some flax is grown for seed in Missouri, so that oils from this may be gathered. Not much linen manufacturing is being done; however there may be opportunities for development along this line.

Great Railroad Center

A look at the railroad map of the United States will reveal that Kansas City is one of three great railroad centers out of Chicago to the west, the other two being Omaha and Saint Louis. Kansas City is in the line of transportation from Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, New Mexico, and Arizona. It has easy and rapid connection with the great metropolis of the Middle West, Chicago. Branch railroads come into Kansas City from all directions. The transportation facilities surrounding Jackson County add to its industrial opportunities, and to its vocational opportunities. The people of Zion have a great opportunity to make money.

Again, Kansas City is on the Missouri River, which gives transportation routes to Saint Louis and to New Orleans.

Bulky stuff, as hay and grain, can readily be transported on this river.

The easy transportation facilities with Oklahoma and Texas make convenient the access of Texan cattle into Kansas City and the cotton of Oklahoma and Texas.

Power and Iron

To be a great manufacturing city, Kansas City needs power. We have already mentioned the accessibility of coal and oil. But as the coal beds of the United States are getting more and more expensive in mining, and more scarce, other means of power are being looked to. The chief of these is water power. Jackson County is favored in this regard, having the Missouri River bounding it on the north. There is excellent opportunity for the development of water power in the future.

The one other necessary factor to make a large manufacturing city is iron. As we have shown, Zion does not even lack this element, although it is scarcer than it ought to be to give the best chance for development of manufacture.

In conclusion, we notice that the most fundamental wants of man are provided in the territory of Zion. Shelter both from lumber and bricks is available. We have the great yellow pine forests south of Kansas City. The most elementary foods are available to a marked degree, meat, flour, cereals, milk, potatoes, and other vegetables. While clothing wants are not supplied to the same degree, they, too, are quite accessible.

How great are the vocational and industrial opportunities of Zion! The region round about offers a very full complete cycle of economic relationships from the producer to the consumer, especially in the necessities of life. Repeating, we have the agriculture of stock raising, cereals, vegetables, and fibers. We have a well-worked-out transportation system, and possibilities in the steam and gas motor on the State hard-surfaced roads. We of course can work out our banking system. We have good opportunity for the obtaining of power to run manufacturing plants, and the raw material accessible to run the most elementary manufacturing plants, as clothes, shoes, meat packing, flour, etc. The retail stores follow as a matter of course.

Students at Ames Busy

From a personal letter by Elder W. W. Hield, in charge of the student group made up of Saints in attendance at the Iowa State College, at Ames, we excerpt this: "The activity and interest in our little group is remarkable. They truly are imbued with the spirit of the work. To-night for the first time the agricultural students met in round table to discuss problems of importance to the church and to us in the agricultural field. We regularly have a discussion group at 7.30 Sunday evening, in which we take up such work as that outlined by Max Carmichael in the recent HERALDS."

One Miracle

The Toronto Globe publishes the following story: "A man living in a Lancashire town, a big drunkard and gambler, got converted. His workmates soon discovered what had happened and chaffed him mercilessly, doing their best to shake his faith. One said: 'Do you really believe in everything there is in the Bible?' 'Well,' said the new convert, 'I have not read it all through yet, but I suppose I do.' 'Do you believe in those tales about the miracles that Christ did?' 'I suppose I do.' 'Why, there's one that says he turned water into wine; do you believe that?' 'Well, I hadn't heard about that, but I know he's been to our house and turned beer into beef!'"

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

"When One Member Suffers—"

In our social contacts we daily find the truth expressed in the statements of Christ wherein he asserted that when one member suffers, the whole body is afflicted. In the environment of to-day, every existent home is affected by the presence of evil and darkness in the world. It is the plain duty of humanity to bring its every unit up to its highest possibilities to maintain its averages of life, and to combat all destructive forces that threaten any of the members of its society.

Sister Laura Mann, appointed nursing director to the church, and also head of the health division of our Women's Department, sends us a message which she wishes to be carried to every home, and lodge in the heart of every woman therein. The age-old burden laid upon the human race for the strong to carry the weak, the one who has been warned to warn his neighbor, is still upon our shoulders. We must not turn deaf ears to this plea, but rather each one should determine not only to inform herself as to the conditions existent, the causes and remedies, but should do her utmost to carry the light of her knowledge to the women about her who need the message. These young wives and ignorant mothers, who have made no intelligent preparation for the experiences which come to them, must become our charges, to the extent that we shall study with them and not fail in counsel needed.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

A Health Message to Every Woman

One of the saddest mistakes which has been made by American women has been the inclination to look upon married life as a state wherein they can do as they please. "When I am married and have a home of my own," says the thoughtless woman, "I'll rest, or read, or entertain, or do fancy work just as much as I want to and no more. What a relief it will be!"

And, as a result, the woman who feels this way proceeds to live accordingly. True she does feel that she cannot neglect her husband, and will cook his meals and mend his clothes, but beyond what she feels is absolutely necessary in this direction she is not concerned, and busies herself for the most part in deciding the kind of furniture she wishes, the polish on it, the design to be embroidered on the dresser scarf or table linen, who is to do the washing, and so on. At least, from the ignorance found with mothers and home-keepers, we are justified in surmising that this is about the extent of their mental labors.

Shame! for shame! we cry. But why, for shame? Because, in many ways those things are the most insignificant ones to consider, and so long as American women persist in that shallow sort of preparation for and attitude towards marriage, the Nation will be paying the price, as in the past years—the result of the lack of intelligence on the more vital subjects, the lack of preparation for motherhood and housekeeping efficiency, and because women have said, "I do as, and what, I please and no more. It is my house and business, and others can have the same privilege!"

And thus, we American women, the majority of us, sit by idling or entertaining, visiting or doing fancy work, eternally cleaning where it is already clean, or not cleaning but spending our time on novels or gossiping! Yes, gossiping—about why "John Jones won't do for Nellie Gray's husband because their hair is the same color and their dispositions are similar," etc., etc.! And all the while here, there, and over yonder, one by one, hundreds and then thousands of mothers are dying, giving their lives—for what? We must answer, "Only to pay the price of ignorance," for we cannot truthfully answer "to repeople the earth." Their dying does not help to repeople the earth, for they give their own lives and too often the lives of their babies as well. Should not these facts make us feel that it is very unwise for us to have the attitude before mentioned, "It is my business—no one else need mind what happens at our house!"

Now I will tell you just what I mean. In the United States, in the year 1918, 23,000 mothers died giving—life, shall I say? No. Many times there was no life to give, for the baby was dead, but the mother died in her mission of trying to give it birth. Two hundred and fifty thousand is the number of babies that died in the United States in 1918. Added together, the sum is 273,000 lives given to pay the price of our ignorance! You may say, "Why blame it on our ignorance? Aren't doctors and nurses to blame?"

Let us see. Where women are confined in hospitals and the care that doctors and nurses prefer to give is given, we find the death rate among mothers is but a small fraction of one per cent due to infection. On the other hand, in the rural countries and small towns, we find there has been no decrease of maternal mortality (or of mothers dying while giving birth to children) in the last 20 years.

Mothers and sisters, how long will we let it continue? When will we arouse ourselves to the possibility of correcting this condition in our land of America? How long will our uneasy and guiding consciences allow us to keep our place of ease and composure in our homes and our smug attitude of, "I'm married now. I do as I please in my home. Let others do as they please. It is no business of mine!"

How long can we who are women and supposed to be merciful, kind, gentle, and thoughtful, be unmindful of each other? Will not the Lord ask of us as he did of Cain, "Where is thy brother?" and of us "Where is thy sister?" What are we going to say? Will we say "Lord, I read in health books, a doctor told me some things, and a nurse happened along and I asked her the questions I needed answered. My neighbor could have done the same if she had wanted to. I did not hinder her. It was her business if she didn't want to know. I wasn't going to coax her!" Might the Lord not query, "Would you not coax her in order to save her life and the life of her baby?"

How would our assertions look in that light? Would we reply, "Well, married women are supposed to do as they please, aren't they?" As we question our souls we ask, "Have I the right to please only myself, and not be concerned about my sister's good? Have I not some influence over her by which I may induce her to study, to show her the dangers of her lack of knowledge? Would she not be apt to study, if I, her sister, in a kind and loving way, try to point out to her the reason for her doing so?"

Man was created that he might have joy. Will joy be possible with so much unnecessary sacrifice of life? So long as you have knowledge or encouragement to give, freely give, for "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Some day a record may be opened that will show the opportunities which have come to us, times when we might have given light to our sister. Will it read, "Such and such a date, opportunity passed by, until, on such and such a date, mother died, baby died!" For as the pages are turned, remember for 1918 we read of "273,000 babies and mothers paying the price of ignorance, indifference, and selfishness of their sister citizens of the United States!" The "land of the free and the home of the brave," where Zion is being builded!

This brings the picture of actual happenings before our eyes in rather an unpleasant way, I know. You are probably thinking or saying, "Miss Mann, we did not know! We had no idea it was so bad as that! Don't blame us!" No, perhaps you didn't know, the majority of you. That is just why I am coming to you, the sisters of our church, at this time, in order that when the question is asked of me, "Where is thy sister? What did you do to make the world better?" I will be able to say, "Lord, I am sorry for any opportunities of helping or giving which I may have missed, but I have truly tried, in my humble way, to give out what information I have had to my sisters, and hope that I have succeeded in saving some lives."

I feel that my sisters would prefer, too, to be able to answer the soul-searching questions in some such way. That is why I am coming to you, through this little article, sending my message to as many as I can reach in this way. Listen to it! There are thousands of mothers dying, and we can prevent it! Go tell this to your neighbors! If they ask, "How can we prevent it?" tell them it is by giving—giving of the information we possess, giving of our help and sympathy, giving "until it hurts," to use the war-time expression. We did it then, in response to the great need. Can we not do it now for our sisters and our babies? The army of these whose lives go out yearly is twice as large as the army of our soldiers at one time. Are they worth saving? Do we care? Do we care as much as the people of other countries? Listen to this, and share our shame! Fourteen other countries provide better for their mothers than do we of the United States, and only two provide worse! Fifteenth from the top of the list of the nations who protect, shield, and care for their mothers, and give their babies a fighting chance to live! Surely a country of our advancement and wealth and enlightenment needs to hide its head in shame at such a record!

Our church people are not indifferent, I know, and as a proof to God that his confidence is not misplaced, surely our women will give "freely." I have sincere confidence in our women, and I am sure that God has even more, for he knows their hearts as I cannot. The giving will come. Are you asking what it is that we can give freely? Here is the answer: Your lives—not in death, but in daily life; giving your best, your all, the expression of your very souls in love, for the hope and safety of your sisters' lives! In other and more practical words, "Service!" Service to God and humanity! Nothing less will establish the proof of our devotion, that proof that God is expecting at our hands.

Sisters, listen! There is a terrible fight to be made! There is danger very real and grave enough to enlist all our services to successfully meet and overcome. Besides ignorance there are monster diseases to be banished. Our records show that deaths from contagious diseases, such as diphtheria, measles, whooping cough, etc., have been lessened one hundred per cent in the last twenty years, and yet syphilis claims its annual toll of 32,000 children under one year of age! Is this not appalling? And besides these, there are 41,000 little ones who are not permitted to even breathe the breath of life because of this dread disease, making a total of 73,000 each year!

Again you say you "didn't know." Again I am telling you. If you doubt, write the Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia, and ask Doctor Mendenhall for the figures. I have quoted those she gave in a lecture in Chicago in the summer of 1920. They point only to deaths by syphilis, but there are many living who suffer from this disease. They also can be helped, and we can save lives by helping them to receive the treatment needed, as well as to prevent the spread of the dread contagion. Do you ask how this may be done? In this way: While doctors and nurses are ready to help, it will take the cooperation of all, in order that the proper instruction, clinics, and treatment-centers may be provided. These problems are so huge and world-wide, that every one must help, just as we did in the war. In your civic affairs, see that you enact the proper laws, and then put the proper people in office who will see that these laws are enforced. Always remember that the greatest amount of good to be done is in the line of prevention. That is why it is your duty to have good laws on sanitation, such as those which pertain to milk, water, food, sewage, garbage, insects, swamps, weeds, and the like.

Again let us speak of the Sheppard-Towner bill for the protection of maternity and child life, which provides as follows:

1. Nursing service, particularly in rural districts.
2. Medical and hospital care for those women who need it at time of delivery.
3. Instruction in parental care.
4. Establishment of health centers, etc.

Now these mean as follows: No. 1, that county, township, or community nurses will be available to care for women in delivery. No. 2, more hospitals and facilities to give proper care to the thousands who now receive none. No. 3, nursing classes, home visiting, and instruction by nurses in the home to those unable to travel out. No. 4, clinics, such as dental, prenatal, baby welfare, venereal disease, tuberculosis, eye, ear, nose, and throat, nutritional, child welfare, school nurses, school doctors, etc.

To the extent that these things are provided by you, in your home towns, the efforts you put forth, the willingness you feel to do your share in being your "sister's keeper," will beneficial results accrue. That you may intelligently do this, you will each need to study, for you must each learn your individual duty and adjust yourself to its faithful discharge. To the extent that you succeed, you will prove to God that you "care," that you are not indifferent to the welfare of your fellow women, but are anxious to "freely give that man might have joy," that mothers and little babes will not be laid away, useless sacrifices upon the altars of our ignorance or indifference, but shall live, shall join with us in our social activities, in the music, the pleasure, the happiness of service! We shall find recompense in the play and laughter of children, full of the joy of health and vigorous life. We will be satisfied that God's way is best, and that his love surrounds us because of our cheerful "giving."

Any questions that come to your minds, or if I can be of assistance to you in securing proper studies, please feel free to write me for I am at your service.

I am sincerely your colaborer,
 LAURA E. MANN, R. N.,
 Church Nursing Director.

What's the Matter?

A good many doctors of philosophy and of theology, as well as labor men and employers have given an answer to the question, "What is the matter with America these days?" The prize answer has come from a financial journal. The Illinois Bankers' Association Bulletin puts its summary into the following terse epigrams:

- Too many diamonds, not enough alarm clocks.
- Too many silk shirts, not enough of blue flannel.
- Too many pointed-toed shoes, and not enough squared-toed.
- Too many serge suits, and not enough overalls.
- Too much décollete, and not enough aprons.
- Too many satin-upholstered limousines, and not enough cows.
- Too many consumers, and not enough producers.
- Too much oil stock, and not enough savings accounts.
- Too much envy of the results of hard work, and too little desire to emulate it.
- Too many desiring short cuts to wealth, and too few willing to pay the price.
- Too much of the spirit of "get while the getting is good," and not enough of old-fashioned Christianity.

Judge Fleming of the Kansas City court prescribed a practical remedy for Young America when afflicted with the above-mentioned trouble. According to Copper's Weekly, a nineteen-year-old boy, spoiled by indulgent parents, was given the alternative of going to jail and working out a two-hundred-dollar fine, or abiding by these rules laid down by the judge:

- Must give up driving his father's car.
- Must not visit his girl later than nine-thirty o'clock at night.
- Must be in bed every night at ten o'clock.
- Must go to work.

When the judge asked the boy for his side of the story, he said, "I have been spoiled and pampered by my father, and now he's having me sent to jail."

A parole was arranged. The boy agreed to abide by the rules, and the father agreed to enforce them.

It is all one story. America needs to get back to the simple life. Extravagance, luxury, too much money, too much leisure are working havoc, not only with morals and religion, but with production as well—The Classmate.

Twenty-One Nurses Make 40,000 Calls on 5,000 Patients

The Omaha Visiting Nurse Association, according to its annual report just issued, employed 21 nurses, who made 40,222 calls on 5,369 patients during 1920. The association spent $35,304 in its work, of which five sixths went directly for employment of nurses, the remaining one sixth being used for transportation of nurses and office expense.

Weekly clinics and conferences were held during the year at four baby stations. Beginning this week, two of these stations are to be open two days each week instead of one.—Omaha Bee.

Special Classes for Married Girls Urged

CHICAGO, November 12.—"There should be special classes in the schools for married girls to fit them for their new duties they have assumed," said Arthur F. Lederle, superintendent of schools in Detroit, in addressing the National Compulsory School Education Association.

Lederle argued that girls of compulsory attendance age should be compelled to attend schools, even though married, instead of being able to shake off the duties of the school-room by marching up to the altar.

Mr. Lederle continued:

"If it is necessary for a boy who has entered any trade as an apprentice to continue his school work to supplement the practical training that he is getting in the shop, it is just as necessary that the girl who has entered upon the duty of housework and rearing a family should be permitted the opportunity of making a special study of her vocation."—Exchange.

A Few Views on Parents' Duties

To start at the beginning of this great subject, which covers such a wide scope, would take too much time at this meeting. I felt glad in my heart, when this subject was given to me, that it read "parents," instead of just duties of mothers. Why shouldn't parenthood be equalized? The manly tradition which renounces all domestic chores as things unmanly, weakening, and "sissified," has no place in this century. Men and women are invading each other's fields to such an extent that there are no longer any reserved seats.

We as parents first owe our children the right to be well born. Precedent to the possible training of children should come the training of parents, which, it may be said in passing, may be attained chiefly through self-discipline.

The sacred duty of parents is to provide a home for their children. The home is not an impersonal, lifeless, external thing made of wood and stone, but a personal, living inward creation brought about by parents and child. Fathers and mothers should realize that they, at their best, can be makers of a home, planned by intelligence, and fashioned after God's great plan. Parents are not only the givers of life, but must help their children to the rebirth into the life of the Spirit, which alone is life. The school may serve as auxiliary to the home in helping the child to such renewal of life, but the home must be the place of such transfiguration. May we not assume that it was a condition of this kind that existed in the home of Abraham Lincoln, who gained such great intelligence and yet never enjoyed more than a year's schooling? We do not forget he was mothered by his own mother, and not by a governess or tutor.

It is true such valuation of a mother presupposes a mother worth while. How poor are the children of parents whose wealth entitles them to surrender them to governess or tutor! The only right which these children are denied is the primitive and very essential right to be mothered.

A home is built not by what parents have, but what they are. Having often undoes and destroys homes. Being builds homes.

We can never hope that houses can be converted into homes until parents are really mindful of the truth that children are more than bodies, more than stomach and appetites (although we might be justified in such belief when they come in from school or play and almost "eat us out of house and home").

Children have moral, mental, and spiritual needs, and these must be met. Christianity has taught us as parents that our children are gifts from God—pledges intrusted to us for which we are responsible to him.

So let us teach our children reverence, courage, truth, self-control, and self-reliance. Let our purpose be to fit them for universal citizenship. The home is the training school of the nation. The moral basis of a nation is family affection and integrity, and closely allied with the family welfare is the matter of public purity.

G. Stanley Hall has said that those mothers who couldn't tell their children things they should know because the children are "so innocent" are living in a fool's paradise. Let us not have this said truthfully of us.

"Keep the heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." This law is still in force, so let us not fail to link the life of our children to the life of Christ and to the entire creation of God.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER V

The Principle Types of Children

1. Children of Strong Will

1. This type is divided into what two classes?
2. What characterizes each class? Illustrate.
3. How is a child in either class best controlled?
4. With proper training, what may be expected of strong-willed children?

2. Children of Strong Emotion

1. What two classes are found in this type?
2. How may the sulky type be developed?
3. Suggest methods of dealing with the sulky child from your own observation and experience.

3. Children of Keen Reasoning Faculties

1. What are the characteristics of this class?
2. How may they be prevented from developing the mental side of their natures alone?

4. Children of Exceptional Responsiveness

1. Why are such children easy to train?
2. Why cannot their future be predicted?
3. What must always be the goal in training this type?

5. Average Children

1. How would you describe this type?
2. What are the advantages of this type?

6. Children Weak in Some Directions

1. What children are included in this type?
2. What are the physical symptoms of the nervous child?
3. What are emotional and volitional symptoms of the nervous child?
4. How is the morality of a nervous child the outgrowth of his feelings?
5. How may they be successfully dealt with?
6. How may you detect weak self-control in a child?
7. Suggest methods by which he may be taught self-control.
8. Can this be done by exemplifying self-control in ourselves?

9. Illustrate the importance and value of self-control and its relation to purity of life.

Notes About Women

A Chicago woman of wealth has imported fifty-two Belgian servant girls.

The women pearl fishers of Japan commence their work at the age of fourteen.

At the age of twenty-one years, Miss Norma Brown is chaplain of the Illinois Senate.

Argentine women are actively campaigning for the right of municipal suffrage.

In England "Miss" was formerly applied only to females under ten years of age.

Bulgaria has passed a law by which labor is obligatory for women as well as men.

Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, at the age of forty-four, is still considered young.

—Des Moines Register.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION DEPENDS ON YOU!

Are You Making the Preparation?

In the days of old the eager alchemist sought all in vain to convert the baser metals into gold. The scholar of to-day can do more. He has learned how to turn gold into character, and his "philosopher's stone" is education. In this magical education lives the world's hope. As one great philosopher and statesman has put it, "Human history becomes more and more a race between education and catastrophe."

We have preached education as the safeguard of our democracy and have cited Mexican and Russian and our own illiteracy as a menace to the peace of the world. Are we wrong? Or, even if we are right, is the burden heavier than we as individuals and as a church can bear?

Is the situation so bad? Can we afford the cost of carrying out the family and the church educational program? The reply lies in the fact that we have merely come to the place where we must begin to revise our standards. Everyone knows that with all our educational fervor we are still spending less for our schools, colleges, and universities than we are for automobiles, candy, and useless luxuries, all to our great loss.

We would really seem to be just beginning to get a response to our efforts. We have been urging our boys and girls to get an education. Throughout the country, to the gratification of all, they are taking us at our word. They are flocking to school and to college in unprecedented numbers. The colleges and universities of the country are full to overflowing. Some institutions of higher learning have even had to limit their registration—they are beginning to turn students away.

An educated and God-loving America is safe. The cost? It is as nothing. Look at poor ignorant Russia and Mexico, and thank God that we have a national sentiment prevailing that will allow us to build Zion.

Are all Latter Day Saint families making the fullest provision possible for the education of their children? Are all the young men and women of the church taking full advantage of their opportunities?

The success of your part of the redemption of Zion depends on your preparation.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

LETTERS

Edited by G. Leonard Harrington, M. D., Church Physician

Hot Drinks

The attention of the Health Department has been called to the subject of "hot drinks" mentioned in the Word of Wisdom, some stating that the church physician holds that "hot drinks" means hot drinks, and does not apply to tea and coffee.

It is the opinion of the church physician that the Word of Wisdom means what it says in regard to "hot drinks"; that is, it refers to all hot fluids. One notable medical authority tells us that hot drinks lead in some cases to ulcers of the stomach, and that a certain number of ulcers of the stomach finally become cancerous. While the church physician believes this is sufficient evidence to make us respect the statement found in the Word of Wisdom, he also holds that the use of tea and coffee is not good, for they are stimulants which are not needed except in emergencies.

When and How to Tell the Story of Life

A twentieth-century mother's little boy had been brought to her bedside and introduced to his two-day-old baby sister. In answer to the child's question as to where the baby came from, she said, "Baby sister came out of mamma's body; she was made out of mamma's blood. That is the reason why mamma's hands are so thin and white and mamma's cheeks so pale."

"Mamma, was I made inside your body and out of your blood?" the boy asked in wonder.

"Yes, son, you were. And that is why mamma loves her little boy so, because she gave her own life's blood to make his body."

The little boy's eyes took on a far-away look as he tried to grasp the idea. Presently the child mind got a concept of the mother sacrifice. With eyes filled with tears, he turned to his mother and throwing his arms around her neck cried, "Oh, mother, you don't know how much I love you."

In telling the truth in this matchlessly simple and beautiful way, that mother made a new bond between her own and her boy's heart which will hold them together in harmony and love throughout life. By thus filling her child's mind with the thought of sacredness of motherhood, that mother gave no place for noisome weeds of vulgarity and obscenity to germinate and to grow. To that boy parenthood always will be a sacred relation. A child thus rightly started in his knowledge of motherhood and sex is saved from all that is vulgar, for he acknowledges only that which is pure and wholesome.—Kansas State Board of Health Bulletin.

The 1921 Acacia

Each year the students of Graceland College seem to excel the production of the previous year in their college annual. So their advertising manager can proudly say, "Our Acacia is bigger and better than ever." So their annual, in process of printing, has 160 pages (148 last year), more pictures than ever, more student activities than ever, and more students' pictures. They are selling copies now, to be delivered about April 1, at $1.25 each.

More Musical Activity

Arrangements have been completed whereby about April 1, Elder Harold C. Burgess will be able to devote most of his time to his special work of general manager of the Department of Music of the church. Gradually but persistently this work will be widened in scope till the musical forces of the church will be thoroughly organized and coordinated.

Advertising in North Dakota

A consistent plan of advertising meetings at slight cost.

We want to tell you about the missionary effort we have been making here at Dunn Center, North Dakota, hoping it may be of benefit to some other places where they have found it hard to get the people to listen to the "angel message."

In the first place we waited until the members of the branch were united in the desire to work together in this special effort, and then we placed ourselves at the direction of the supervisor of the missionary department for this part of the country, and commenced by putting an article in the local newspaper about two weeks ahead concerning the church, and the difference between us and the Utah Mormons, and the different Smiths, and with it a picture of President F. M. Smith. Then the next week we had another article in the local paper, this time telling of the meetings and giving a list of some of the subjects to be presented, together with a picture of Elder J. E. Wildermuth, who did the preaching during this series of meetings.

We also put neat posters in all public places, with a cut of the preacher and several of the subjects to be discussed.

And a few days before the meetings were to commence we sent out an invitation letter to every person in the little town, as well as every farmer within several miles. This letter offered some pointed facts concerning the things to be presented and the importance of attending the meetings.

We kept this mailing list and each day the sermon of the night before was summarized and a copy mailed, so that those who did not come were given right in their homes some of the main points presented.

This also kept the meetings advertised and helped to bring out a good attendance to the meetings. So we feel we have made an effort that has reached many more people than usual, and what the result will be is left them to decide.

The summaries were printed on a stencil copying machine, so were not expensive to make, and could be mailed for one cent each.

We believe the Saints have been encouraged by this effort and many of our neighbors have been warned.

Your brother,

F. E. HAMMEL.

Pastoral Work Still Needed

[We are sure that Brother Williams appreciates the necessity of pastoral work and the great value of the institutional work of the church, so would not disagree with the following letter. It is doubtless true that our local ministry could do more, and the time has come for sacrifice on the part of our young men and women to carry the gospel abroad in greater measure than heretofore, and for the more earnest upholding of the hands of our local ministers in their pastoral work. Brother Williams sounds the clarion call to greater service, which we do not want to ignore.—EDITORS.]

I read a most interesting letter in this week's HERALD by Brother T. W. Williams in which appears the following:

"I have recently thought that if some of our Saints in the large centers who are suffering from spiritual indigestion and have become epicures in religious thesis and who demand the best talent of the church to furnish high-seasoned and delectable spiritual menus would become impressed with the real missionary purpose of the church, they would say: 'We have become selfish and self-centered. We have considered our own comfort and entertainment. We have been served rather than serving. We have had itching ears. We have been sponges. We have been content to receive. We have not given out. Here, take our pastor who is now a general church appointee. We love him but we can get along without him. Send this our pastor to carry the good news to the nations who are famishing for the word of God."

I cannot help taking issue with the author of this statement, coming as it does from one of the highest officials of the church, from whom above all others we would expect charity and "righteous judgment."

This is not an apology nor an explanation but rather a defense of those in the "large centers" whose motives I believe have been misjudged and misrepresented in this letter.

Would we be Latter Day Saints if we had been satisfied with less than the best there is in religion? Is there any worldly gain to be had by joining the Latter Day Saint Church?

Emerson says we measure everyone by our own yardstick. Perhaps that is what I am doing, but I feel sure from what I know of Latter Day Saints that those in the "large centers" who have been guilty of asking for "the best talent of the church" have done so from purely unselfish motives. Quite a number of us in Saint Louis were asking, yea, begging, for some of this talent to take charge of our branch. We expressed ourselves so to Brother Williams while he was here, just after we moved into the new church. Now I am sure the underlying motive was not a selfish one on the part of those who made the request. It was not because we wanted "highly-seasoned and delectable spiritual menus" for ourselves (not that we do not enjoy and appreciate them), but because we had a vision of the work which could be accomplished in our beautiful church in the new locality, if we had a forceful, consecrated speaker to present the truths of the gospel of Christ to the large congregations who were at that time attending the services.

Brother Williams presented some of the truths of the gospel in a way that I had never before understood in the latter-day work. I had read and heard these truths presented in this understandable way before coming into the church, and I had benefited in so many ways by applying them in my daily life, that I longed with the deepest longing of my soul to have them given in this comprehensive way to others who seemed unable to make the right application of them to their daily needs.

Others, whose unselfish purpose, honesty, and sincerity, cannot be questioned, were desirous of the same; though perhaps from a different viewpoint of the truths of the gospel.

Some people lay particular stress on the doctrinal truths of the Bible, while others think the purely spiritual teachings of the gospel of more importance. However this may be, Paul makes it quite clear in the sixth chapter of Hebrews where he says: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." Of course Paul does not mean that we are to forsake the fundamentals of the gospel, but, as he plainly states, leave them to "go on," just as a child leaves its primer to "go on" to the first reader, then to the second, and so on until its education is complete.

Brother Williams's sermons were the "go-on-to-perfection" kind, nicely balanced with doctrinal truths, which probably accounts for our desire to have him stay and preach to the people.

No doubt the work in foreign lands is more interesting at this particular time than the everyday humdrum sameness of the work in the "large centers," and there is no doubt of the needs of the people in these devastated countries. We would not want to take from them—God forbid—but surely the spiritual and temporal needs of thousands in our own cities are just as urgent.

Physical suffering is not always a calamity; sometimes it is the only means of bringing us to a realization of our dependence upon God. If we are able to make the right application we will find it of inestimable value in drawing us closer to him. I do not wish to imply that God is the author of our suffering, but that we by disobedience to his laws bring it upon ourselves. We will find peace and happiness only as we understand, and learn to live in harmony with, his divine commands. Had it not been for the misery and heartache endured by the prodigal son, he would probably never have decided to arise and go to his father.

Possibly the physical sufferings which these people in the Old World have had to endure will bring them to the realization that "love is the fulfilling of the law" and he who administers that law is "Our Father which art in heaven."

We wish Brother Williams Godspeed in his efforts to help and to uplift humanity in foreign lands. In the meantime, we ask him to be more charitable to those of us in the "large centers" who want, and are only satisfied with, the best that religion has to offer.

MAY C. LOEY.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

An Investigator Convinced

[The following is from a personal letter received by the editors. The body of the letter was written early in the New Year, but for some reason was not then mailed. When it was mailed, investigation had brought final conviction and baptism.—EDITORS.]

Editors Herald: It is now some time since I took the liberty one day to write you a letter, commending you on the liberal tone of the HERALD. I have since that time read a number of issues of the HERALD, and must say that it is indeed a fine paper, and this is not saying near enough. Every Monday morning I find it in the mail, and I always open forthwith.

I don't know whether I told you at the time that I am a former member of the Utah church, having accepted of the angel message in Germany in 1902. Well, such is the case, and I have not a bit of regret or apology to offer. Stranger things than that have transpired in this little old world of ours. I learned a number of good lessons in the church, and they were worth all that I paid for them.

Naturally, when one sees the failings of man and realizes how unscrupulous beings play with the most holy emotions of the people, and when one has to break the ecclesiastical chains to express himself naturally, one feels that to unite with any other church is quite a serious thing, and he most naturally is on his guard lest he should repeat the performance.

You have perhaps done more, or at least as much as anyone, to give me an impression of the true feeling of the Reorganized Church. Here I find myself talking church and reading church papers, a thing that I promised myself should never happen again. But such is the case, and I am frank to acknowledge it. I am also indebted to such men as George Wixom, D. Amos Yates, T. W. Williams, and last, but not least, John W. Rushton. These men have been of great help to me, and have shown in more than one way that in order to be a lover of the angel message, one does not necessarily have to be a Utahite.

So my stock in churches has gone up considerably, if you will pardon the expression, especially when there is a church that has for its motto "All Truth," and is willing to have the light of fair investigation turned on it.

Let men who were once members but are now opposing take a fair and impartial view, if such thing is possible with them; but let them remember that by the fruit a tree is judged. As for myself, I am old enough and also amply able to give the Josephites the once over, solely without their help and tears.

Why does a foreigner love America? Its very name spells to him F-A-I-R P-L-A-Y. If I don't like a church I can get out of it, but am I the mouthpiece for others? To me it is quite enough to know that the Reorganized Church is for all truth.

One of the most beautiful expressions of Paul is as follows: Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God, in Jesus Christ.

Am I called to find fault with the district school simply because I have outgrown it? Far from it; there are others that perhaps have to tread the same way in order to learn.

May 1921 bring many good and instructive articles in the HERALD, and may it be the means of helping others as it has helped me.

Very truly,

JOHN F. RABE.

This letter was not mailed to you, as it should have been. I have since become a member of the church, but I feel impressed to send you this letter anyway.

Southern California Conference

"The scepter is visibly passing to the young in this district."

What was said by many to have been the best district conference held in the Southern District of California, convened March 4, and lasted over Sunday the 6th.

Institute and department work was the order of the first days of the meeting. The evenings were devoted to literary and musical programs in which artists pleased the audiences immensely.

The Sunday morning prayer meeting for the young people was well attended and a good meeting was had. The morning sermon was by Elder Nephi T. Chapman, who presented the old theme of "love" in a very forceful way, declaring that peace is primarily the outgrowth of love, and cannot long exist unless founded there. He gave janglers a severe arraignment. He said that the greater endowment of the Spirit would come when all should learn to love and support one another regardless of folly and error which each might have. The membership of the church were advised to give a sharp rebuke to anyone who should begin to make incriminations against a fellow member.

The afternoon prayer meeting opened by a testimony from Sister Emma Burton, in which she related a vision in which she saw how the angels were working with their might on the earth, by exerting their influence, or the Spirit's influence which they carry, upon the hearts of men towards the preparing the way for the servants of God who are endeavoring to establish his work.

A couple of testimonies intervened, and then the gift of tongues was exercised by one of the elders. A short time afterwards a young man who was recently baptized at a meeting held by Apostle Rushton and Evangelist Pitt, arose with the expression, "Since the giving of the tongue I have been impressed by the Spirit to give the interpretation, until I can no longer endure it." He thereupon powerfully gave the interpretation which seemed to be much longer than the tongue. This may have been noted by many others than myself. As soon as he had concluded, those in charge of the meeting stated that his was the authentic interpretation, and called attention to the fact that about the middle of the interpretation he had said: "The Spirit saith further," which, they said, marked the end of the interpretation and the beginning of a new voice of inspiration. This relieved the minds of all who might have been in doubt.

I have studied, more or less, five languages; viz: English, Danish, Spanish, French, and Polynesian; and there are certain sound rules peculiar to each which promote euphony, which make the language "flow" or make it "musical." For instance, in Tahitian no two consonants may come together but must be separated by vowels; as in my name for instance which is Alvin, which in Tahitian is Alavina. Here you will see the consonants l and v are separated by the vowel sound, a, and a final vowel sound a relieves the tongue of the difficult consonant sound n at the close of the word. Also note the following rule from the French Grammar:

Liaison: Final consonants are usually silent, but in oral speech, within a group of words closely connected logically, a final consonant is regularly sounded, and forms a syllable with the initial vowel sound of the next word. This is called in French, liaison, that is linking, joining. Here is another:

Elision: The letters a, e, i, are entirely silent in certain cases. The a and e are silent and replaced in le, la, je, me, etc, before initial vowels or h mute. Example; L'arbe, (learbe), j'ai (je ai).

The presence of similar rules to these in a tongue will reveal themselves, as they did to me in the tongue referred to above, as distinctly as the pulsations of a syncopation in a musical arrangement is detected by the musician; and these are not present in deceptions. Thus my testimony, though a little different from that of any other, is that a real language had been spoken in the tongue referred to, and I knew this before the interpretation had been given.

Shortly following this another powerful prophecy was given relating to local conditions and individuals. The tongue message was to the priesthood to the effect that it is according to the nature of things that the Spirit can only be given in ratio to the unity and love that prevails among men.

Sunday evening the members of the Los Angeles Branch gave an entertainment consisting of songs, lectures, and tableaux, which depicted the rise of the church in these last days.

This was followed by a lecture, "The children of an Egyptian mother," by A. H. Christensen, illustrated with views from the valley of the Nile, Jerusalem, ruins of ancient America, modern Cumorah, the Book of Mormon manuscript, Joseph the Seer, etc.

A peculiar feature of this conference was that the power of the young people was the greater, and the moving power of the conference. The older people were there, to be sure, in all their glory of faith and gifts; but to take it as a whole, it was a young people's conference. The scepter was visibly passing to the hands of the young people, so far as this district is concerned.

Arise, my sons,
Go forth to battle, who are strong;
Intrepid vigor soon shall show
What his brave sons can do, and oh!
The angel of the Mons shall come,
And thousands upon thousands more,
Of horsemen, chariots, and fire,
A mountain full, like days of yore,
And make the world for Christ to be,
Blest dwelling place with you and me.

A. H. CHRISTENSEN,
Press Committee.

Southern Wisconsin

This has been the mildest winter that this section of country has ever known. The oldest settlers say they never saw its equal. But while this has been true, there has been much sickness and suffering. It has been hard at times for the missionary force to keep moving, as they too have had a share in the colds that have hindered so many, and at times have had to stop and take care of themselves, not being able to speak, so far as preaching goes. But now that the robins and bluebirds begin to sing we are hopeful there will come a change.

Viewing the district as a whole, the Saints have been putting forth a noble effort to keep the work moving, both as to the district and the general church. Everyone is pleased with the results of the amount of money thus far promised on the auditorium; and I wish to say to the Saints of this district that everyone should, with faith in God, be looking forward to the payment of the sum, you each, or as families, have subscribed, that the bishopric be not hindered by delay in payment of the moneys subscribed. Considering the conditions of the whole country, as a result of the great World War, it will call for the exercise of a deep spirit of sacrifice, and in some cases those blessed with this world's goods may need to assist the less fortunate in the payment of the sums that they have subscribed, thus truly becoming colaborers together with God in the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. In fact, the general demands of the church will be such that every Saint should do his best, in these trying times, and depression of money matters, that the work may move forward as never before since the restoration of the gospel. But it will mean economy and sacrifice on the part of all. But when we stop to consider what a glorious cause we are enlisted in, it ought to be a pleasure to each of us to do our best, our very best! When I compare our doctrine with that which others are believing and preaching, words fail me to express my thanks to God for the restored gospel; and I long more and more to tell the beauties of our message to others, that they too may rejoice in the fullness of God's saving message to man.

At this writing I am with the Soldiers Grove Branch, where the Saints are trying to finish their new church, under some difficulties, but they are surmounting them, one by one, and all of the district who are able to meet in the district conference in June will be pleased to see the church and rejoice with the branch in its success.

Brother A. L. Whiteaker of Chetek, Wisconsin, has been assisting me in the series of meetings we are holding in the old church, which is not large enough to seat the audiences, so all will be glad when the new church is done.

Next week we expect to begin a series at Readstown, where the little branch has just finished paying for their church. I hope that every branch in the district will do its best, and try to extend its influence for good wherever it can reach out, and tell the gospel to those round about. Let us not forget to pray for our Nation, and that those who are now placed in authority in our Government may be blessed with wisdom, that the objects and designs of God in this Nation may be carried out as we as a people have long believed. Remembering our family altars each day, that the blessing of God may ever attend our efforts, and there remembering the Presidency and leading quorums of the church, that God's choicest blessings may attend them, let us go on.

Your servant in Christ,

JASPER O. DUTTON,

SOLDIERS GROVE, WISCONSIN.

Pontiac Flourishing

We have a message from a progressive people who are rejoicing in the gospel which should be of use in stimulating others to action.

Every department of the church is represented in this the Pontiac, Michigan, Branch by an organization with an active, progressive Saint at the head. As a result every one has plenty to do. A campaign was instituted last autumn for the distributing of tracts and church papers, and our Sunday school has been particularly active in this movement. Hundreds of tracts have been bought and given out, and as a result many are beginning to find their way into the aisles of the church. Every scholar is entitled to credit, from the youngest to the oldest. About one hundred dollars has been spent for supplies since the movement began and which is to remain. Every pastor in the city has been visited and made acquainted with the gospel message. Sometimes we are not well received at first visit, but a second is had and usually results in a more friendly attitude.

The Women's Department is also very active, much more so than the average. They are taking up courses of study that will qualify them in almost any call made upon them. They are to be commended. When it is necessary to raise money for the building of a church or furnishing of the same, you will all be able to take a lesson. Considerably more than one hundred dollars per member per year has been raised by the ladies to assist with the branch work here.

The ladies are also active in assisting in the tracting of the city. The greatest difficulty we have is getting supplies fast enough. I have been in branches where a dozen tracts would be enough to last an average branch a year or more. That would be about enough to last Pontiac a few hours. Why the difference when not necessary? Let us all be more alert to the opportunities afforded and we will be surprised at the result. Our branch is also known throughout the entire community for spirituality. They are all a peace-loving people and unity prevails. We are always at the front when it comes to the rendering of assistance in church affairs. We were well over the top in the auditorium drive, even though we had just been to the expense of building the best church edifice in the district. We are not boasting of what has been done but tell you these things to show what can be done by a few when their hearts are right. As a result, all are rejoicing.

Debate at Flint, Michigan

The debate scheduled for March 7 between Apostle J. F. Curtis and the Reverend J. E. Arceneaux of the Church of Christ (Disciples) has now been in progress four nights. For some unexplained reason the man who was announced as the opponent of Elder Curtis, Mr. J. W. Chism, did not appear, and Mr. Arceneaux was substituted. Considering that he is arrayed against the truth, he makes a fairly good showing. The attendance has been exceptional, and the good order left nothing to be desired. There have been between 700 and 900 present each evening. This week Elder Curtis affirms that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is identical or in harmony with the New Testament church in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice. Mr. Arceneaux denies. Next week Mr. Arceneaux affirms the same regarding his church and Elder Curtis denies.

The speakers soon locked horns on the accuracy of the King James translation of the Bible. Arceneaux said he believed every word of it, upon which he was cited to the well-known case of the man being two years older than his father, also the statement that Christ ceased from sin. Mr. Arceneaux contended that a man must be an eyewitness to the resurrection to qualify as an apostle, which every Latter Day Saint knows is a pleasure for Brother Curtis to handle. Arceneaux tries to put the same construction on Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:39, as do the Utah people in order to uphold polygamy and make it appear that Joseph Smith left a loophole to get out of the one-wife system. He says Brigham Young was not responsible for polygamy.

Arceneaux says there was no church until Pentecost, upon which he was asked to show what organization it was that Judas held the office of bishop in. A good deal of amusement was caused when Brother Curtis quoted the King James mistranslation, "Thou shalt not eat of anything that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people—" He said he felt sure that his opponent would not give or sell a chicken that had died of the cholera to anyone, although he professed to believe "every word of it." Arceneaux says, "The idea of the Lord telling Joseph Smith not to join any of the churches because they were all wrong and that he should go out and start a church of his own," and then asks, "Why were they not good enough for little fifteen-year-old Joseph?" which elicited the reply that the same thing was the matter with them as caused Alexander Campbell to start a new church and not join with any of the ones in existence, and also that if these other churches were so good that Mr. Arceneaux ought to be representing one of them instead of preaching Campbellism. Mr. Arceneaux quoted extensively from Orson Pratt's book and also from the book put out under David Whitmer's name, trying to give the impression that they were reliable authority on the Reorganization.

Brother Curtis took advantage of every opportunity to get our teachings before the people, and it is expected that much good will result from this discussion. At the close of the debate I will send a further account of what transpires:

Ever praying for the triumph of truth,

ARTHUR T. DUROSE,
Branch Correspondent.

The Presiding Bishopric are offering assistance to all branch presidents in the matter of furnishing information and blanks for tithing reports. It is an important matter, and it demands cooperation—the only way we can hope to succeed.

Council Bluffs Items

Several nonmembers associated with us in the service of last Sunday night to hear a very plain sermon on marriage and divorce. At this service the orchestra and choir joined in rendering the special music for the occasion, which was by many much appreciated.

Three more were added to the Lord by baptism last Sunday.

Under the supervision of Clarence Skinner, recreational activities are assuming some proportions in association with the Religio Department.

Brother L. E. Hills, of Independence, gave a special lecture on his views of Book of Mormon geography last Sunday afternoon, which was enjoyed by several.

A new opening for preaching has been made on the south side of the city.

But little sickness among the Saints.

Enlist in the German Mission Cause!

An appeal by a brother who knows personally the needs of the German Saints.

After reading T. W. Williams's letters on Germany and the German mission, I would like to make an appeal to all the members of this church, as a native German, as one that but a short ten years ago proclaimed the angel message in Germany, Switzerland, and Holland.

My coreligionists: You who are snugly situated in this land of the free, America, you who have read the various articles from the pen of T. W. Williams, can you longer endure these appeals without action of some sort?

My dear friends, I speak to you as one who should at least know in a degree the character and aspirations and needs of the German people. My people are like any other race, they have their good qualities, and also their vices; but let me tell you, Germany is the land of the Reformation, and where do you find greater idealists? What does Germany need, what does the world need, other than the gospel of Jesus Christ? It is the panacea of all the ages, and we as a church claim to have the only workable plan, revealed to the Prophet of the nineteenth century. All the more reason why we should do something to answer Brother Williams's appeal in concrete form.

I would suggest that classes be started among the young people where they may learn the German language. If you cannot procure a teacher who is a church member, get some one else, but learn the language by all means.

I would suggest to the church authorities to send out missionaries among the German population of Utah, as there has been, and is now, a great apostasy among the Mormon people of German extraction. The reason for this I will explain in just a few words, which again stamps our Germans as people with ideals and spiritual insight. They have simply gotten to the end of their search for truth, and inasmuch as they cannot get any more there, they are turning into all kinds of byways. I think I know, for I trod the same road. They do not know that they had the straight way to all truth when they accepted of the angel message in the land of their birth. It takes brave people to go in opposition to the dominant church, for it means the severance of association and of family ties, and in many instances the loss of business. Once these people know that there is a people that tries to live according to the restored gospel, they will fall in line, and they in turn will be the real missionaries for Germany, for they have the best kind of family connection there.

I would suggest to my coreligionists in the Reorganized Church who are of German extraction: Follow along the lines of Red Fox, and other Lamanite leaders; make the German Mission your uppermost duty, translate tracts, and prepare yourselves in other ways for duty. The gospel needs you, but you need the gospel a thousand times more, so be willing to share it with your unfortunate kindred. Do like Vanderbilt said years ago: How can the people know that I have a good thing unless I am willing to share it with them?

And remember; you can only grow to the extent that you help others.

Peculiar Problems in Isle of Pines

Our missionary wants charts and name and address of a school-teacher.

This mission consists of perplexing problems. So few English-speaking people are here to stay. There are some grove contractors and a few farmers who no doubt will be here for some little time, but apart from these the people are coming in and going away all the time. This makes gospel work intensely difficult, for no sooner do we get a few interested than the call from other climes becomes of greater importance than gospel work.

Sunday here as in Cuba is the chief day of pleasure, in fact the only day on the "island of pines" when the movies are in operation. Sunday evening dances are quite common. Cock fighting, of which I shall write more fully in Autumn Leaves in the near future, is perhaps the greatest Sunday amusement. And so the day of rest and worship is changed to worship of other gods. But we hope soon to have a Spanish-speaking elder here who can visit the Cuban people and explain among others the necessity of Sunday observance. Until such time there will be little gospel work done among them.

Mission work among English-speaking peoples at the very best will require long years of hard work with perhaps small returns. With Episcopalian, Union, Adventist, Catholic, and Lutheran Churches here, all with very small congregations, drawing from a few hundred people, it will readily be seen that our work will be among the Spanish-speaking people.

I had two objects in view in writing this letter. First: If any of our missionaries have charts which they are not using, especially illustrated ones, I would be glad to hear from them. If I could get a stereopticon lantern for a few lectures, it would help out considerably. Let me know what you have at an early date.

Second: We need a good Latter Day Saint school-teacher here as soon as possible. There are four or five Cuban schools in this town, but not one American. I have about thirty children already who have given in their names. In English perhaps none of these children are higher than the fourth reader. I will send full particulars upon inquiry. This is a beautiful climate, and would be a change for such a person and also an opportunity to be of service to God. Send your inquiries to the address below.

Will Swanson, Saskatoon, and Viceroy Saints please note my change of address.

Agricultural News Items

Compiled by C. E. Irwin

The persistent publicity regarding the work of the American Farm Bureau Federation forces our attention upon the magnitude of movements which have so lately been set in operation. Whatever else may be said regarding the work of this federation we have to consider that it possesses a distinct advantage of being an organization of farmers.

The time has passed when we may be able to refuse to permit farmers to interest themselves in questions of public policy. It is agreed that agriculture deserves to be studied from all angles and by all related interests so that comprehensive plans shall be developed whereby agriculture may become an accredited American industry.

In a recent issue of the Missouri Ruralist there appears an item illustrative of the reward that comes to those who use headwork in the business of agriculture. At a recent poultry show in Saint Louis it is reported that a Scotland County, Missouri, breeder received a thousand dollars for a single big bronze tom turkey. Here was a case of a man who was willing to use the necessary patience in developing a breed of turkeys of a superior type. Even in the absence of the experience of this sort we are inclined to believe that he was amply repaid for time and energy expended.

A great deal has been said nowadays about rural credits. Indeed it appears that we are justified in discussing at length the rural credit machinery of the United States. It is said that one day recently $55,000,000 worth of Standard Oil bonds were oversubscribed within a very few minutes after the books were opened. It appears that our industrial giants are able to secure the necessary credit at any time upon liberal conditions, but in the farm industry—the biggest industry in the United States—we have the most inadequate rural credit machinery. Our students of the rural credit situation who are members of the church might with profit turn their attention toward the problem which will sooner or later confront the church.

An old question of intensive versus extensive agriculture may be raised by referring to an incident involving the production of corn in Indiana. In a recent report of a contest among farmers of the State of Indiana it is reported that four hundred and seventy agriculturists took part in the contest. When the final reports were filed it was discovered that William H. Baker of Green County won the contest for 1920 by growing 128.8 bushels of corn per acre.

The cooperative movement in agriculture has had many costly experiences. Failure has been a common occurrence. Does that mean that cooperation is essentially wrong? Not at all. It does mean that the management of cooperative enterprises must not be intrusted to amateurs. The English cooperators found that in order to procure the high type of managerial ability needed they had to train them. This has also been the experience of the California cooperative organizations.

Why not a course in Graceland dealing with the elementary principles of cooperation?

The University of Missouri is trying another experiment. Correspondence courses in agriculture are being offered to the farmers. These courses include general farm management, farm accounts, farm gardening, bee keeping, soil fertility, forage crops, feeds and feeding, breeds of live stock and others.

How many Latter Day Saint boys and girls are there who desire to study agriculture who would come to Graceland if such a course were offered?

We are continually commenting upon the fact that the salvation of the church, the Nation, and the world depends upon the training of our boys and girls. Agricultural development is no exception to this rule. Why not see to it therefore that our rural schools are ruralized? Why attempt to keep boys and girls on the farm by teaching them the principles of urban life? Is it any wonder that we have an exodus from the farm?

PORTLAND OREGON, February 19, 1921.

Editors Herald: Portland is still on the map and the Saints here are still alive.

These first few weeks of the new year have been filled with activity in all the departments of the church.

Our Sunday school is growing in attendance and interest and also in enrollment. A new teacher training class is being enrolled and to-morrow they will hold their first session. Sister Ida E. Jones is the superintendent, and we feel that under her leadership the school will advance.

The Religio, superintended by Brother Clark Livingston, is providing very nicely for the social side of our church work. Several excellent programs have been given recently, each of the four classes taking their turn in furnishing an evening's entertainment. The local church orchestra also gave us a very beautiful concert early in the winter. The most elaborate program yet rendered was a two hour play—"The fruit of his folly," which was enjoyed by old and young, and which opened our district conference Friday, February 4.

The Women's Department has taken up a regular course of study which is making for better and happier homes.

Some of the work done at our district conference is as follows:

A new standard of excellence for Sunday schools was adopted and provision made for supplying typewritten copies to local schools.

A reunion to be held sometime during the coming summer and a committee appointed to make all necessary arrangements. Also over one hundred sixty dollars subscribed for reunion fund.

One young man was ordained to office of deacon, one to office of teacher, and one to office of priest.

Three precious souls were baptized.

Peace and good will were everywhere apparent. It was truly a good conference, and although we would have liked to see more Saints from other branches we were glad that the attendance was as good as it was.

We believe that all present returned to their homes with greater hopes, greater zeal, and a firmer determination to press onward and upward toward our ultimate goal—perfection.

Ever your brother in Christ,
VINCENT R. SHULTZ, Correspondent.

NEVADA, MISSOURI, February 21, 1921.

The conference of the Clinton, Missouri, District was held in this city on the 18th, 19th, and 20th of this month. The attendance was good. The good Spirit was present with us, and a profitable and enjoyable time was had. The number of young people present was more than usual, and their presence and interest taken appreciated by all. Brethren Myron A. McConley, Arthur H. Mills, and Charles Blair were present representing the departments to which they belong, namely missionary, musical, and publishing.

The next conference will be held at Fort Scott, Kansas, the time to be set by the district officers, at which time we will dedicate our new $560 tent. Our reunion will be held at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 12 to 21. EDWARD RANNIE.

TOLEDO, OHIO, February 8, 1921.

Editors Herald: Just a line from the Northwestern Ohio District. We are proud to live in this part of God's vineyard. We are also proud of our missionaries and the good work they are doing. Last report was that about twenty-five new members have united with us at Saint Marys, Ohio. The district president left here this morning to go there and help out. Brother C. E. Armstrong and Jesse Harden have been holding a few meetings at the Eagleville school at Delaware, and we hope some good will come out of their effort at that place. They returned to Toledo two weeks ago but did not rest. They began holding meetings at Sylvania and have been there nearly every night preaching and trying to settle a little difficulty at that place. Glad to be able to say that last Sunday everything was running smoothly and the Saints are all the better spiritually for their effort. We as a branch have been benefited by the presence of Brother Harden and his wise and good counsel.

We are having extra large crowds and are glad that so many are interested in this work. The last two Sunday nights the building was full.

The Sunday school is at its best, also the Religio is doing well. On Monday, the last day of January, the Temple Builders were organized with sixteen charter members by Sister

Jacobs, with the writer chosen leader. We are going to try to do some good here through this chapter.

Last night a party of about forty of the Saints and friends met at the writer's home for a farewell party to the district president. He was presented with a sum of money for a fountain pen. We wish him Godspeed in his effort in the gospel work.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, March 12, 1921.

Editors Herald: We deeply appreciate the letters written us from strangers, as well as acquaintances in the church, expressing a welcome to come back to the "old homestead," and wish to reply in this general way to thank you, one and all. Our efforts are still in the direction of trying to make good the race, training for the event, and using whatever influence we have left to induce both fallen Saints and strangers to join us in the undertaking. For I would rather die outside of the kingdom of God and eke out a miserable existence with prisoners in the lowest pit until the utmost farthing is paid than ask or expect God to pardon sins whereby we have caused others to fall except we can work to regain and lead others to the passport into the kingdom. Hence we will hesitate until we do all in our power to help others before we reunite with the church. Training for the race on our part, together with assistance to others, may take some time, and when the time comes to enter again as a contestant to follow "the Carpenter of Nazareth," we want to be in shape to run the race to the end, and build a house on a rock this time that will stand the storms and floods.

GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, March 10, 1921.

Editors Herald: Have just returned from a two weeks' visit in "Sunny Kansas," where two of my brothers, Walter and Levi Clark, and their families reside on farms near Humboldt.

While there we located and secured the names and addresses of twenty Saints, all good people and hungry for a visit by an elder or missionary, or better yet, the moving in and locating of an elder to hold meetings and minister the word to themselves and others.

A branch organization could be maintained there, the Saints who are there now built up and strengthened, and a number gathered in with but a minimum of effort, I confidently believe, if they had a good resident elder. However, this prospect has been duly reported to the proper authority, who, no doubt, will give it deserved attention.

There seems to be plenty of work there, as they have a large cement plant, oil pumping station, oil refinery, brick and tile plant, and other smaller industries all employing men and some of them employing hundreds.

We held meetings every evening during my visit, excepting two, and preached twice on Sunday in the local schoolhouse, where we also organized a Sunday school, for which supplies were immediately ordered.

Before leaving, I had the pleasure of baptizing my youngest brother, the last member of our family to come into the church. So now we are a family unit in more ways than one.

Besides the evening meetings, we had many pleasant fireside talks which were mutually beneficial, and at least three or four have been brought to a decision to enter the church at the first opportunity.

Through the kindness of a Mr. and Mrs. Endicott, who are not members of the church, we took supper with them and held one service in their home and had a pleasant and interesting meeting.

It is hard to refrain from mentioning the names of Saints with whom we visited, of whose hospitality we partook, and whose loyalty and fidelity to the cause cannot be questioned, but time and space forbid.

Our two weeks' activities, however, might be summed up as follows: Held 13 meetings, solemnized one marriage, baptized and confirmed one, organized a Sunday school, administered to sick once, a number of fireside talks, distributed 40 pieces of literature, took two subscriptions for HERALD, two for Ensign, and one for Autumn Leaves.

May the desires and prayers of these faithful Saints for a shepherd soon be realized.

Fraternally, E. O. CLARK.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, March 9, 1921.

Editors Herald: I have not been silent for these many months because I have less faith in the gospel as restored in these latter days, but the shock that came with my superannuation, the great anxiety to locate where the family would feel at home and could render the best service to humanity and the church, followed by the burden of moving, and the severe illness of my beloved companion which continued with greater or less severity from July 20 to the time of her death, December 29, has so shocked me that I am but recovering. I know that I should have acknowledged the many comforting letters received ere this. We oftentimes sing, "What a friend we have in Jesus," but I can as freely sing, "What friends we have in the Saints of the Lord. Pen cannot formulate sentences to picture, nor language cannot express the great good my dear friends and their words of cheer have been to me and the children of my dear, self-sacrificing, modest, unassuming wife.

I could not understand the reasons of my superannuation until the thought came, This is that you may care for your companion in sacrifice for the work's sake, and give her a few years of family association. While it seemed necessary that I spend my whole time in caring for her to make her last few days more endurable, yet the thought of enjoying home life with her companionship has not been realized. And while I rejoice to think of her being at rest, yet I had so fixed my mind and heart upon a time of companionship and home association, that it seems that there is such a longing for this that I can hardly endure my own existence without it. I thought I was prepared for her departure after seeing her suffer and sacrifice so much, yet the shock coming to me has been severe and continuous; but for my children's sake I try to be cheerful.

I have tried to be active in church work, after looking after the household cares, coming from caring for little Paul Hardy, whom we are trying to give a home, an education, and a fatherly influence. I am living to keep up the home for this little boy, and those of the family who need a home, and for the good I can do to hasten the redemption of Zion and the preparation of the Saints for it.

The work in Council Bluffs is growing under the presidency of Elders O. Salisbury, George Beaty, and H. H. Hand, with the assistance of such noble Saints as O. A. Currie over the Sunday School Department, Clarence Skinner over the Religion Department, Sister John Salisbury over the Women's Department, Sister Clarence Skinner in charge of choir work, Brother John Salisbury in charge of orchestra work, and J. R. Epperson in charge of all the Sunday school work in the city and district. The church building is filled to its utmost capacity, and baptisms are occurring nearly every Sunday. Last Sunday occurred the baptism of Brother Numa McDowell's wife and two others.

There is now in process of organization a junior orchestra, and for some time there has been a junior choir, and they are making very noticeable advancement.

While all this is noticed here, we are made aware that there is too much formalism and human nature demonstrated in the carrying out of methods, and not enough dependence placed in the Spirit's guidance in the church.

Since those that are led by the Spirit of God are the sons of God, unless we acknowledge that Catholicism and Protestantism with their educational institutions are so led we should beware where we are being led, lest we follow men, when they do not follow Christ. I pray continuously for my brethren who have responsibilities of a divine character, that they may not take up with erroneous methods and conclude that outside appearance is evidence of the spiritual growth.

Sectarianism, because of the results of raising large sums of money, and gathering into their membership large crowds at revival meetings, and sending to foreign lands many young men and women for missionary and educational work, has concluded that this testified to the work of the Spirit of God. The business methods employed by them have brought these results, but we claim more than they, and yet in some things we are following their ways instead of leading them into methods and ways that are much superior because dictated by the intelligence that comes through the abidance of the gift of the Spirit. May we as a people be leaders, not only in morality and spiritual doctrines and ordinances, but also in methods, so that we can acknowledge God's hand in all things, and not have to acknowledge the leadership of institutions not the direct product of the Spirit's work.

Whatever mistakes my brethren or I make do not vitiate the fact that God has begun his work, and will in his time raise up a people who will do the work necessary to prepare for the coming of Jesus Christ, if we will not permit him to use us for that wonderful and to me fascinating work.

I can assure all that I never associated with Saints who have shown more of the true love of neighbor than in the Council Bluffs Branch, and I rejoice that I can join with them in their good work.

My hope grows brighter, and in that hope, I am,
Your brother, J. F. MINTUN.

Eastern Colorado Conference

Denver needs more room and a reunion tabernacle.

Another conference of the Eastern Colorado District has passed into the beyond, and its sessions have marked progress in this part of the Lord's vineyard. As the church at Independence is in need of an auditorium to accommodate the increasing congregations, so Denver will soon have to enlarge her quarters to accommodate the local congregation, to say nothing of district conferences. At the Sunday sessions, both morning and afternoon, chairs had to be placed in the aisles to accommodate the people.

The delegate system was dispensed with and mass sessions were the order; it was also voted to give notice of repeal of the delegate system in this district. Most of the branches of the district were represented.

Steps were taken to procure permanent reunion grounds, and the majority favored Colorado Springs, and it was suggested instead of buying a tent which will last at the best not more than two seasons, that a permanent tabernacle be erected, that can be used in early spring and late fall.

Another step forward (and one with which the writer has long been in sympathy) was to notify the Presidency that this district is ready and anxious that they appoint and place in charge our district president. Why not? The present district president is Bishop's agent and president of a large branch, and surely has all he can attend to without being burdened with other duties.

The work in Denver is onward and upward. The sermons of Brother Hale W. Smith are very interesting, and will bear fruit without doubt.

We all rejoiced Sunday morning, the 6th inst., to meet our worthy pastor who has been under quarantine for the last six weeks with scarlet fever in the family. E. F. S.

McGREGOR, MICHIGAN, March 6, 1921.

Editors Herald: On February 20 Reverend Frank Cookson (one of the Methodist Episcopal persuasion stationed at Bad Axe, Michigan) took it upon himself to deliver an unwarranted and uncalled-for attack upon Joseph Smith's life and character.

Elder F. S. Brackenbury and myself were present and took notes. We were not allowed to ask any questions or make any announcements. I asked Brother Brackenbury to prepare to reply, so with the aid of Brother Jack Thompson the courthouse was secured, and on February 28 to March 1 Brother Brackenbury presented our side of the matter in no uncertain way to a packed house each evening. There seemed to be a good feeling present the second evening. We believe good was done. The name of Joseph Smith was cleared in the minds of the honest investigator. As I stood in that hall where justice was meted out, I could not help feeling how significant of the cause we represent that each and every man and woman shall be justly dealt with; and as the words of God's servant rang out free and clear, I felt surely God will see that the honest in heart come to a knowledge of the truth. We hope to be able to follow up in due time if a place can be secured.

afterwards when a short reaction sets in. But this should prove only temporary.

A missionary with the right spirit will uphold the hands of the local officer, and strengthen him for his work before the people.

"Cut-Over" Missionary Fields

One of our missionaries referred to Iowa as "cut-over land," and said it is hopeless for missionary effort. The figure of speech is incorrect, as it is not a case of timber, but of grain waiting only to be cut. It would be more accurate to say that it is a field which has been sown in many spots, part of which has been gathered, but much yet remains. This is proving to be the case, because an intense and continued effort in places where the church has long had branches has resulted in bringing in new members by the score. A brief missionary effort really constitutes only that—the sowing of a little seed, and then leaving it. Some may be choked out, but the field is not therefore hopeless. Some has been for this long time past ready to be gathered in.

Good reports are had from Topeka, Kansas, where a number of new members have located lately. The work is in charge of A. P. Crooker for the branch, Gerrit Juergens for the Sunday school, and C. J. Wolfe for the Religio. Temple Builder work is progressing, also the Oriole work, and the choir comes in for honorable mention. On the third Sunday of the month the branch goes to the tuberculosis sanitarium and holds services. The inmates are always glad to have them come.

A brief note from Elder J. C. Page, of Glasgow, Montana, says that the work there is moving along very well, each month showing a little increase over the previous one in attendance. He says: "The prayer meetings are getting so large we are very much crowded in our home. The moral and spiritual tone is much better, but there is still room for improvement. We are confirmed in the work by the sound logic and argument made by the writers in our church papers."

Sister Olive McLean writes to the Ensign from Missouri Valley that at that place Elder Daniel Macgregor has been holding meetings since January 30 and to date had baptized seventy persons. Considerable opposition has been aroused, but the Saints rejoice in the great uplift they have received as well as the addition of so many noble workers.

Statistics obtained at the State University of Iowa show for the regular term enrollment 4,440 students. Concerning these no statistics are available for 353. Of the remaining 4,087, at least 3,094 are members of different Christian churches, and 844 express a church preference. That means 96.4 per cent are either definitely members of some certain congregation or have at least a church preference, and more than three fourths are church members. We note among the latter are included twelve Latter Day Saints.

L. D. S. Study Classes at Ames

Anyone having friends at Iowa State College at Ames, Iowa, who think that they are not taking advantage of the Latter Day Saint classes that are held every Sunday at 9.30 in the morning, and at 7.30 in the evening in Alumni Hall on the campus, please encourage them to attend. And, too, please notify Elder Willard Hield, Station A, Ames, Iowa, and he will be glad to visit them.

The Bishopric

British Isles Mission: We recently published a notice of the temporary appointment of F. H. Edwards, as Bishop's agent. At that time we did not know just how soon Brother Charles Fry would be able to reach England. It was our intention that upon his arrival he should take charge of the financial work of this mission.

We hereby appoint Brother Fry in charge of this work. Brother Fry is a man of great integrity and lofty ideals, and we feel that the Saints of this mission are exceptionally fortunate in having a man of his type to work with them in an effort to build up the kingdom of God. We heartily commend him to the Saints as worthy of their utmost confidence and esteem.

We desire to express our appreciation of the work done by Brother May. It is not an easy thing to labor in distant fields where our work is not as well established as in other places. There are many difficult and trying situations to meet. Brother May has faced these conditions courageously and labored patiently, for which we know he shall in no way lose his reward.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.
