vast numbers who assembled at the many sessions. Reports from the various officials. Short speeches upon subjects towards the development of saintly characteristics, by Elder Crowley, of Toronto, Elder Yager, E. Clark, G. Furness, and R. Farthing. The evening program consisted of songs and readings. Saturday evening the Women's Department had charge, Sister Maggie Macgregor giving a talk on the practical side of Christian activity. Officers elected: President, D. B. Perkins, Wiarton; first assistant, King Cooper, Guelph; second assistant, J. L. Mortimer, Owen Sound; secretary, J. H. Leeder, North Bruce; treasurer and Bishop's agent, F. B. Stade, Harriston; librarian, Laura E. Taylor, Grand Valley; chorister, George Furness, Owen Sound; superintendent, Sunday School Department, R. J. Wilcox, Owen Sound; secretary of Sunday School Department, Laura E. Taylor, Grand Valley. Conference of 1922 will meet in Owen Sound on the first Friday, Saturday, and Sunday of July. District adopted budget system and a budget committee appointed composed of R. J. Wilcox, B. Belrose, N. E. Leeder, M. Russell, and F. B. Stade. Delegates to General Conference: W. A. Smith, G. C. Tomlinson, J. H. Yager, B. Belrose, Ernest Aelick, D. B. Perkins, Frank Gordon, J. Shields, J. L. Mortimer, L. Gregory, George Furness, R. C. Russell, J. T. Thompson, Laura Taylor, S. G. St. John, and the alternates are Sister Mortimer, F. B. Stade, S. W. Tomlinson, James Dobson, James Smyth, and Sister James Smyth. Clavering Branch disorganized and Cedar Valley Branch reinstated as a branch. A court appointed by the conference tried a case from Port Arthur, the findings of the court being sustained by the conference. A committee consisting of those in charge of the various departments was to consider the advisability of holding a winter institute session and empowered to act. Sermons by Elder Yager, A. McLean, of Toronto, R. C. Russell, and W. A. Smith. Many Saints of the Toronto District were present, pleasantly renewing former associations. Our gathering was one of profit, the speakers endeavoring to produce thought as well as present matter of thought in a new garb. Nature and man working together under the great Director afforded the district renewed ardor and strength. One baptism and 2 ordinations took place during the conference. J. H. Leeder, secretary, Port Elgin.

ALBERTA.—At Oyen, July 15 to 17. District president, Fred Gregory, in charge, assisted by William H. Roy. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Fred Gregory; first vice president, William H. Roy; second vice president, Melvin Hauna; secretary, William H. Chandler; treasurer, William H. Roy; bishop's agent, William H. Roy; chorister, Frank Jackson; librarian, J. R. Prussia; auditor, W. A. Cooper. A small but very spiritual conference was enjoyed by all who attended, the Sunday morning prayer service being especially blessed. J. J. Cornish was present and spoke with great power on three occasions during the conference. It was decided by vote that we meet again with the Calgary Branch early in December. W. H. Chandler, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

HASS.—Grace Bernice, daughter of John G. and Anna G. Hass, was born near Lake Park, Minnesota, August 29, 1911. Two years later she moved with her parents to Montana. In 1917, they moved to the State of Missouri. On June 19 she took the scarlet fever and on June 28 passed beyond to the paradise of God. She was baptized October 10, 1920, by Ras Lorenson. She leaves to mourn, father, mother, 2 brothers, Richard and Victor, 3 sisters, Louise, Ella, and Ruth, grandparents, other relatives, and many friends. She had a sweet disposition and was loved and admired by all who knew her. She was quietly laid to rest in the Lees Summit cemetery. Prayer and sermon August 14, by Elder Depew.

SMITH.—John Smith died at Carson City, Nevada, August 18. A native of England, came to America in 1871 and to Nevada in 1873. No relatives in this country, but many friends. Baptized many years ago. Lived a consistent life and died strong in the faith, leaving a substantial remembrance to the church in his will. Funeral at Carson City by W. A. Brooner.

STEVENS.—Nora, wife of Jesse Stevens, died at her home in Scranton, Pennsylvania, August 24. Born in Newton Township, Lackawanna

The Herald Publishing House

Solicits Your Patronage

We carry a full line of Stationery and School Supplies, excepting textbooks, and, in addition, we'll be glad to furnish you Schaeffer Fountain Pens, pencils, fine stationery, and all kinds of printed matter. Give us a trial. Our prices are right and our service is good.

County, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1891. Baptized at age of eight. Leaves a husband, 5 small children, mother, 2 brothers, and 1 sister. Funeral from Saints' church, in charge of Richard Hawkins and Earl V. Wagner; sermon by E. R. Hull. Interment in Dunmore cemetery.

HOLFORD.—Kathlyn Ferne, daughter of Brother Arthur Holford and wife, near Cameron, Illinois, was born August 12, 1917. Died August 26, 1921. Besides her parents she leaves to mourn 1 brother, 1 sister, and a host of friends who will miss her smiles and loving ways. Funeral from Christian church in Cameron, Illinois; sermon by O. W. Okerlund.

LEWIS.—David, known as Dewi Chwefoor, was born at Llanethly, Carmarthen, February 1, 1848. Died at Llansamlet Glamorgan, Wales, June 8. He leaves 3 sons. He was one of the oldest elders in the British Isles. Composed some of the hymns in Welsh Hymnal. Buried at Methodist Chapel Graveyard, Llansamlet. Sermon by Reverend T. C. Lewis; assisted by Reverend J. H. Parry, Independent Minister.

STEER.—Grace Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Thomas and Nellie Steer, was born February 28, 1917, and passed away August 26, 1921. Leaves to mourn, parents, sister Estella, and a host of relatives and friends. Funeral sermon by Daniel MacGregor, in Missouri Valley.

POWELL.—Florence Powell was born April 10, 1855. Baptized September 22, 1901. Died in Des Moines, Iowa, August 25. Funeral at Lilly Undertaking Parlors. Sermon by A. E. Warr; assisted by F. T. Mussell.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The Problem of Evil	841
The Blessing of Children	842
Going to School	843
A British Comment on American Labor	844
Subjects Being Discussed	844
Poetic Justice to the Red Man	862

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

The Responsibility of the Adult to the Adolescent, by Floyd M. McDowell	845
The Jews in Palestine	848
The Death of the Righteous, by Hale W. Smith	849

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

The Value of Pipe Organs	851
--------------------------	-----

Industrial Program of Young Women's Christian Association	852
---	-----

THE FORUM:

The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 2, by T. W. Williams	853
Divine Healing, by J. W. Quinley	855

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Pearl Gardner—Clara E. Addicott—Maude Peak Parham.	855
--	-----

LETTERS

A. N. Robinson—J. E. Dawson—A. E. Warr—George W. Stover—Joseph A. Northup—Mrs. L. M. Donaldson.	859
---	-----

MISCELLANEOUS	862
---------------	-----

== SUCCESS ==

It has been said that only one out of seven people has the energy and initiative essential to success. The ratio seems to prevail everywhere. The burden of accomplishment rests upon the minority.

WILL YOU SUCCEED?

It is certain that if you never start you'll never finish. It is only those who have the courage to try who ever succeed. Real success is never accidental. When you believe you can, you will. Resolution is omnipotent.

ARE YOU PREPARING?

An education is essential for the highest degree of success. Now is the time to decide if you will attend College. Next year may be TOO LATE.

Act now. Don't delay. Success is assured to those who act.

Attend your own College.

For catalogue write

THE PRESIDENT
GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, IOWA

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then a principles indeed; and ye shall know if the truth shall make you free."—Jo

VOLUME 68

Entered as second-class weekly at Independence, Mo., August 1, 1879.

5 Jan 22
Mrs Th. a France
116 W 8th St
Lan. ni
I. wa.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION ORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, SEPTEMBER 13, 1921

NUMBER 37

Post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued for $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

EDITO

True Religion Appeals to Reason

The emotional has its place in all our life, including our religious life. But the glory of God is intelligence, and to reason is made the first effort.

Occasionally we hear an objection made that religion is emotional, while five days in the week we are taught according to an intellectual criticism. We have to think at school, then on Sunday only to feel, so it is alleged. But careful consideration causes us to question this assumption. The greater part of our school work is not thinking, but rather is the exercising of credulity, even if that credulity be on behalf of materialism. Teacher or books make certain assertions which we must learn.

On the other hand, while religion does appeal to the emotions to a greater or less extent, while it is true that feeling does affect our reaction in our religious experience, it is also true that feeling and prejudice affect our school reactions and affect our life as a whole.

True religion appeals to the very best of man's intellectual powers. The plan of God is, "Come, let us reason together." (Isaiah 1: 18.) "The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth." (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.) God intended that we should study and learn and use our intelligence throughout life. (2 Timothy 2: 15; Doctrine and Covenants 85: 35.)

It is true that some services are predominately emotional. It may be true that many churches are predominately emotional, in their church attitude. That is their misfortune and a misfortune to the church. Occasionally some one urges intellectual honesty and wants us to admit that this one or that one is wrong. It is true we should hold for high spiritual ideals, but man being as he is, our heavenly Father saw fit to send his Son, and there does not appear to be the least historical evidence to substantiate the position of those who question or deny his historicity or life on earth as a fact. That is the primary reason for not admitting this denial. It is not true.

Further than that, the Bible distinctly says, "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God." (1 John 4: 3.) "No man can say that Jesus is the Christ save by the Holy Ghost, and no man speaking by the Spirit of God can call Jesus accursed." (1 Corinthians 12: 3.) Also in the seventeenth chapter of Matthew when Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," the Savior informed his disciples that upon that rock he would build his church.

Spiritual and intellectual ideals should be maintained, but God recognizing our human need did send his Son, who by the power of his love, seeks to save. If Jesus is not the Christ, if any of the vile stories told against him were true, then would our faith be in vain, but so far as any other man is concerned, it would make us feel sad to know that any brother or sister had done wrong, but our faith could not be destroyed by the act of any man or his failure to follow in the footsteps of the Master, however great the trial might be and would be, and however sad it might make us. Yet there is no reason for admitting that any of our brethren have done wrong, unless the evidence is brought forth to substantiate that claim.

We should prove all things, holding fast to that which is true. As we have pointed out before, there are elements of truth in evolution, even though we do not accept positivism as a full spiritual explanation.

The higher criticism asserts exactly that which we have claimed, that holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Spirit of God, the mind of the man or prophet as well as the inspired truth can be received in every prophecy or revelation from God. We find much in a careful consideration of the higher criticism of the Bible to sustain our position.

This new theory of relativity requires an extensive knowledge of mathematics to understand fully, but part of it can be stated in simple terms. Time and space are relative to humanity. No two men see things just alike. If there were an observer, external to our world, he would see time, space, and movement differently from what we do. That is merely a different way of saying that the supreme being, God, would not measure things in the same terms that we do of time, space, and movement, and that our observations are affected by our humanity.

In philosophy, it has long been recognized that all of our observations have been relative. This is recognized in religion. Some scientists, however, have attempted to draw a distinction between philosophy and religion and the physical sciences of chemistry and physics on the other hand. They have attempted to claim that these are objective sciences ruled by eternal physical laws. The theory of relativity shows that this is not the case, but that our knowledge of mathematics, physics, and other sciences is affected by subjectivism. It is the resistance of some students of physical science that has caused all of the turmoil.

It is true that almost any scientific theory may be interpreted in a manner antagonistic to some religious concept, but a deeper knowledge of science will send us again to our knees in worship. Each and all of these various theories rightly understood bring a new testimony of the truth; or, truth will always be self-sustaining and consistent.

There is not need, therefore, on behalf of religion to limit our intellectual activity or hinder our intelligence. The deeper and stronger our religion becomes, the more it stands the intellectual tests for truth.

S. A. B.

John F. Garver and wife came to Independence on the 27th to bring their daughter, Lois, for operation. At last report she was doing well and will be able to return home soon. Elder Garver returned home about the 7th on account of his official duties.

Healers of the Sick

There are many methods of healing and many varieties of faith healers, but the method God directed is best.

Certain letters we have received lately raise at once the question by what power are these so-called divine healings effected. We must remember in the first place that men have power in and of themselves. But as we have previously suggested, if a man places his own spirit upon another one, though it may bring a physical healing, it will bring also the spirit of the man with its evil. This is not the case with the Spirit of God. For the Spirit leaves its own influence rather than the influence of man.

There are many cases in which healing is secured through autosuggestion. Like the story already reported in our columns of the man who was going to take treatments in absentia and was doing so with marked improvement for three weeks. At the end of the time he received his first communication from the practitioner, that she had just returned from a month's absence, had found all of his letters awaiting her, and would begin treatments the following day.

In a good sense it is possible for us to exercise faith for ourselves and pray for ourselves. It is possible, also, to receive benefit through suggestion from the healer, the physician, or others, or from autosuggestion.

We are so wonderfully made that the power of faith is a tremendous factor in healing, no matter how or by whom it is done, or through what instrumentality.

The declaration in James 5:15 is not only a wonderful promise, but also a declaration of law governing human intelligence. We have two significant statements of the Master. Once they found certain ones casting out devils in his name and forbade them for they followed not us. The answer of Jesus was straightforward, "Forbid not any; for he who is not against us is for us." (Luke 9: 50, Inspired Version.)

On the other hand, according to Luke 11: 23, he stated that every kingdom divided against itself should fall and "he that is not with me is against me." This is repeated in Matthew 12:30. This latter statement was evidently in connection with the accusation that he cast out devils by the power of Beelzebub, and this he denied.

Again he said in the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew 7: 30-33:

"Verily I say unto you, it is not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. For the day soon cometh, that men shall come before me to judgment, to be judged according to their works. And many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name; and in thy name cast out devils: and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I say, Ye never knew me; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

These later quotations leave the possibility that the powers of darkness may be utilized for the healing of the sick in order to secure spiritual destruction. While from the first statement it would appear possible that others than the disciples, others than those who were following Jesus, possessed power from God. It is certain, in any event, that the receptive capacity is part of man's nature.

We have emphasized again and again the very great value of healing in the God-ordained way, since in that way there are not poisons of man, there is no use of the knife, there is no placing of the spirit of a man upon us, but there is instead a cleansing and purifying, as well as a healing power of the Spirit of God. Hence it is said, "and if he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." (James 5: 15.)

This last is added to, "the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up." Unfortunately, too many of our people do not consider this with sufficient seriousness. They send for the elders for every minor affliction. They have him again and again as a formality, a ritual to be gone through with, while it is clearly stated it is the prayer of faith shall save the sick. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12 says that this is faith on the part of the individual, for those who have not faith to be healed shall be nourished with herbs and mild food.

The mere form repeated is not enough. We have known of one sister who was repeatedly helped and even healed by the power of the Spirit, yet suffered a relapse again and again. Upon inquiry we found that she was taking medicine from an allopath, a homeopath, and treatment and tonic from an osteopath, and in addition thereto a pain killer when she felt a pain, and a cathartic every day, yet not one of the doctors knew she was taking anything except his medicine. It would indeed be a miracle, and more than a miracle, if such a person was healed and kept well. It was a miracle for such a one to be healed even temporarily, when one adds the fact that she said she had no faith, but merely sent for the elders because she thought it was the thing to do. How could one expect to keep well under such conditions!

We have observed more than one such case. Common sense should be exercised, but in addition thereto faith, if the benefit of administration is to be received.

But we have noted that some at least of those who are healing the sick have made most profound efforts through prayer and careful living to put themselves in condition, having sought such a power to exercise it. They have studied the Bible, have lived a clean life, have tried to put from them all that would deter. Some have striven, if reports are true, to live as nearly as they understand to the teachings of the Master. They have thought they had nothing to do save to ask at the moment of time. (Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3.) But they have studied it out and have prayed and have tried to live in the hopes of being able to do good in this way.

The prayer of faith shall heal the sick. The responsibility undoubtedly is placed upon the one praying. It is better, it is true, that there be two or more and that their prayers be united. Are we exercising sufficient effort of clean living in thought and deed? Are we seeking openly through faith for the power of the highest through the manner our heavenly Father has blessed many times? Are we striving to prepare ourselves with sufficient earnestness in faith and prayer to be ministers in his hands, to the healing of others?

We have known elders after administering to sit down and laugh and talk and tell funny stories which might be quite proper at another time, but which are quite destructive in a spiritual sense in the sick room. This is quite different from being cheerful in our warfare, or carrying a cheerful spirit into the sick room.

We have known on the other hand an elder after administration to sit down and tell of all the people he knew who had been sick the same way, and every story ended with, he died or went crazy, or something equally happy and encouraging.

The administration to the sick is a sacred responsibility. A test is placed directly before the church in this matter. The blind can receive their sight, the deaf hear, the lame walk, if we have faith to heal the sick. If not, why talk of faith for the redemption of Zion? Why not first most earnestly seek to place ourselves in accord with the divine mind by the manner of our life, our thoughts, our faith, and our study, seeking to learn the will of God and to do it? (Matthew 11: 51; Luke 7: 22; Isaiah 29: 18; Doctrine and Covenants 34: 3.)

We may rest assured there is no other plan which is an adequate substitute for the method God has ordained through the laying on of hands by the elders and the prayer of faith for the healing of the sick.

S. A. BURGESS.

More Believers in Healing of Sick

We have received a number of clippings concerning meetings held by Mrs. Aimee S. McPherson, at various points in the West. She has preached apparently some very stirring sermons in simple terms, conducted on similar lines to other revivals, in strong terms, yet not perhaps with some of the profanity at times used by other "evangelists."

The fact that is emphasized about her services is her preaching of the healing of the soul from sin and also the healing of the body from sickness. She has regular meetings at which she anoints the sick with oil and prays over them. Some remarkable results are reported; some do not receive the benefit, and that is explained by lack of faith and devotion. Some have relapsed, which is explained on the same ground. Some have evidently continued with the benefit received for at least some weeks afterwards.

Certainly one result of her effort is, that many thousands of people who never before believed in administration for the healing of the sick now are ready to accept it as part of the gospel plan. This is a significant development of these latter days. When Joseph Smith proclaimed the restoration of the gospel and gave as one factor the healing of the sick, such an idea was not generally accepted. A few such cases had been claimed during the Middle Ages, but upon the whole the idea was doubtless unpopular.

In very recent years several books have been written on spiritual healing. The Episcopal Church has taken up the Immanuel Movement. Other single churches here and there are also giving the subject consideration, including a late item stating that the Jews are practicing spiritual healing.

There have been a number of so-called divine healers during the past few decades. There has also been a development of a movement basing its full claim on healing. These reports from Denver and elsewhere show that the idea is gaining ground, that the healing of the sick is part of the plan of Jesus for the salvation of humanity.

In a statement by Dean A. C. Peck, of the People's Tabernacle of Denver, we note that the attendance at the meetings there grew so large that it was necessary to leave the tabernacle for the city auditorium with a seating capacity of 12,000. The principal doctrines presented by Mrs. McPherson were:

1. The deity of Jesus Christ.
2. The blood of atonement.
3. The new birth.
4. Baptism of the Holy Ghost.
5. The right of the present-day church to all the gifts and privileges of the church when first organized.
6. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.
7. The imminent return of Christ for his church and to rule the world.

Mrs. McPherson insists that the healing is not performed by herself but that she is only an instrument. Flashlight photographs were taken of her in the act of healing. A series of pictures was taken in several cases. When success was achieved the audience many times broke out in great cheers. It was then she insisted that the credit must be given to God.

Again, the Southern Association of Evangelists met recently at Hot Springs, Arkansas, according to the Auburn Park Weekly of August 9, and sent out a letter to twenty-five professors, preachers, and evangelists, in which the following four questions were asked:

1. Is God able to heal?
2. Does God ever heal?

3. Does God always heal?

4. Does God use means in healing?

This paper proceeds to list a number of cases of healing by way of reply. They refer especially to the healing of the sick in the church in the first four centuries. They also refer to a few isolated cases in the Middle Ages, as recorded by Luther, John Knox, Calvin, Zwingli, and others, but emphasize the results of the past few years especially.

They state that five years ago healing rooms were established in Spokane, where they minister to about two hundred persons each day, eighty per cent of whom are not church members. Of this they claim a large part are benefited, and relate some really remarkable cases of structural healing.

One of the most remarkable was one where a baby was born with a closed head, hence was paralyzed and dumb, and the head took a fantastic form, like the roof of a house. Surgeons could do nothing, but advised operation at ten years of age, the results of which would probably be death, yet through administration the shape of the head was altered, becoming normal. The paralysis disappeared and the child could speak the same as any other six-year-old child. We have not had opportunity to verify this statement, though the name and street address are given. But it is significant in showing the attitude to-day on the part of sectarian churches.

Think Well of Others

There are some people who are very good in making excuses for their own shortcomings and failures. They always have a good excuse ready, but how about making excuses for our friends?

We recently read a short story where, through a misunderstanding, serious inconvenience might have occurred to a third party. As soon as the error was discovered, steps were taken for its correction. Then arose the question, What would happen in the interval, and what would the third party think of them? The anxiety was brought to an end by the statement of one, "She will not worry. She is not that kind; and, as for us, she will think of the kindest explanation possible and give us the benefit of it. She always does that with everyone. She will make some excuse for us, even before she hears any explanation."

Making excuses for others is by no means in the same class as trying to make excuses for ourselves. Yet we have known friends to be called in question for this very attribute of making excuses for others, the attribute of always thinking the best possible of others, of putting forward the best construction that circumstances permit. It is an excellent attribute. "Charity thinketh not evil." Or, in other words, those who possess the true love of God will think no evil.

The law of the land presumes one to be innocent until proven guilty, but how often do we find the process reversed and one presumed to be guilty until proven innocent. Altogether too many have that very attitude even towards those whom they esteem as friends. Yet the true friend should not only be ready to think well, to make excuses, but should have such added knowledge of his friend's character as to know that an alleged act is entirely inconsistent with his character.

Should not that be the attitude of brethren of Christ, first a confidence in one another, founded upon knowledge; then a will to put the best reasonable construction upon any sequence of circumstances, certainly until the contrary is known? Many times are the hearts of the children of God made heavy in seeing the manifestation of the opposite condition, the putting of the worst possible construction on words and acts of their brethren.

Charity suffereth long and is kind. The true love of God thinketh no evil.

S. A. B.

President Smith Returns to Independence

Having spent a busy month in the West, the President returns to his desk.

President Frederick M. Smith returned Friday morning last from California, where he had been for a month or so visiting his family, from whom he had been away for more than a year while he was abroad. He is once more at his desk, pressure of work there necessitating a shortening of the visit with his family.

He arrived in California in time to attend part of the Southern California reunion, where he spoke several times on topics closely related to the immediate future work of the church, his talks indicating that his experiences abroad had developed an increased ardor in the subject of stewardships and the building up of Zion. His earnestness as well as the incidents of travel which he incidentally related seemed to be of great interest to his hearers.

On Women's Day at the Southern California reunion it was arranged that Sister Smith share the morning hour with President Elbert A. Smith. She presented one of the psychological stories from the O'Brien collection of contemporary fiction. Sister Smith's interpretation of certain passages of the story was accepted with enthusiasm by larger audiences than had previously been in attendance at the morning meetings. Sister Smith also, as Director General of the Women's Department, assisted in the afternoon round table and presided over the evening program.

The two daughters of Brother and Sister Smith were also in attendance at the reunion, Miss Alice taking the part of "The Church" in the pageant, "One hundred years of Latter Day Saintism," rendered on the last Friday evening of the reunion and which was well received. Miss Lois, happy to have the family together, enjoyed the opportunities for recreating at Hermosa Beach.

After the close of the Southern California reunion, President Smith spent a few days in Los Angeles and vicinity, before going north to the reunion of the Northern California District at Irvington. On this trip he was accompanied by Sister Smith and his secretary, O. W. Newton, who had gone west with him.

An expression of the pleasure of the Northern California Saints, many of whom are lifetime friends of Brother and Sister Smith, at having the President and his wife with them at this reunion, was a formal reception, which was as pleasurable to Brother and Sister Smith, to whom it was a complete surprise, as to those who had arranged and anticipated the affair.

The district president with an appropriate welcome decorated Brother Smith with two beautiful banners, the gold and black of Missouri and the crimson and gold of California. Sister Smith was also welcomed and was presented with an exquisite floral tribute and a large piece of beautiful hand-work from the women as an expression of their admiration, after which President Smith in a few words expressed his appreciation of the cordial welcome and Sister Smith also responded in her characteristically bright manner.

Again on Women's Day, Sister Smith, as Director General of the Women's Department, was present to discuss with the women some of their present and future problems and the word from the Bishop urging the budget system, and was surprised and pleased to find that several of the Northern California branches are already established on the budget basis. In presiding over the program, introducing speakers, calling for reports, etc., Sister Smith brought about several laughs by having to inquire about the relationships of families with whom she had been acquainted many years ago, but in whom time had made certain essential changes, as well as by establishing a sort of rivalry between Brother Smith and Brother F. G. Pitt, the two men speakers, as to who would make the better talk.

From the Northern California reunion President and Sister Smith returned to Los Angeles, Brother Newton following a few days later. On September 1 President Smith bade a reluctant good-by to his family again and went to San Francisco where he spent Sunday with the Saints of the Bay Cities. On Sunday night the Oakland Branch met with the San Francisco Saints, and President Smith spoke to them again on the problems of Zion and found his audience responsive, as all of the Northern California Saints seem to be, to the importance and immanence of the doctrine of stewardship.

After several months of almost constant traveling, President Smith is once more at his desk handling the numerous problems and tasks coming to the executive of a vigorous and growing organization.

Some New Arrangements in Indian Work

Assignment of missionaries with families to local points so they can provide their own transportation and accommodations should be productive of good results.

Some time ago the responsibility of the missionary work among the American Indians was placed on Apostle U. W. Greene, and he was able to spend a short time in Oklahoma during the reunion season, to further acquaint himself with local conditions. He had on other occasions visited them and labored among them.

The Indians are a responsive people and welcome the sound of the gospel of their fathers, if our people will but go among them and proclaim it consistently and consecutively. The present policy is to have our missionaries very generally move right into the territory where our Lamanite brethren live, and from central points cover certain territories carefully and personally. Occasional exceptional members are being baptized from among these people, and constantly good, loyal people are coming in. Two bright young natives are preaching constantly among the Otoes, and but recently one of them, Jack Koshiway, reported having baptized about a dozen Indians.

Some changes have recently been made and arranged for, some of which are chronicled here. In our last week's issue was an excellent letter from Joseph Northrup, chief of the Chippewas in Minnesota, who has been laboring much in the material interests of his people and who will now have a new message for their souls.

Elder Hubert Case continues as supervisor of the Indian work in the State of Oklahoma, his family residing in Independence.

Elder E. E. Long will locate his family in Nebraska, and labor among the Omahas especially, in northeastern Nebraska and southern South Dakota.

Elder W. E. Shakespeare has moved his family from Independence to Stillwater, Oklahoma, from which point he will use an auto and cover the surrounding territory. He will have a tent and equipment.

Elder A. H. Christensen is building a house car for missionary work, and will operate from Redrock, where his family will reside.

Elder Harvey Syckle will return from Michigan, where he has been doing some work among his people, and will operate principally from Ripley, where his family will be located.

(Continued on page 885.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Middle of the Road

By A. H. Christensen

The law has little to say about ownership, but is chiefly concerned about the operation of wealth.

The world to-day is groaning under a terrible load of injustice and inequality, and all eyes are turned with utmost concentration upon the question of system; confidently expecting that by the inauguration of an ideal system, conditions will improve.

Thousands of attempts have been made to conduct social affairs via devious ways, such as business enterprises, village, town, city, county, state, and national governments; wherein ideal systems were employed. And the leaders were surprised and chagrined that what looked so perfect on paper or in theory would operate only with the most modified success, or failed entirely. And upon its failure the original opponents of the plan were on hand to exultantly exclaim, "I told you so; the system won't work." Then the persevering movers of the plan would begin to alter and make supposed improvements in the plan, only to meet like failure in each succeeding attempt. Our eternally alternating governing political parties are good illustrations. They are always putting in new "planks." They do not discern the cause of the failure.

Jesus alone was able to discern from whence the trouble arose. And he at once laid the ax at the root of the tree by appealing to the heart. In any movement to promote tranquillity, provide happiness, and insure equality, you will find that the operation will consist of about 99 per cent heart and 1 per cent system.

Basic Reasons for Failure

I have no criticism to make of coal barons making 2,000 per cent on the investment of their company, or of other supercorporations, if they produce necessities of life, provided, however, they do neither of two things, viz, first, That they neither become principals nor contributors to cutting the standard of living of a single person below what it ought to be. Second, That they do not fail to use all of that gain which is over the requirement of keeping their own standard of living up to that which is just, plus the requirement of the stewardship or business, for the purpose of raising the standard of living of those who are under, up to what it ought to be.

But the present ruling class fails on both ends of the proposition. They do, as shown by the high percentage of gain just cited (which are quoted from actual conditions), contribute to cutting down the standard of living of another; and having obtained this profit, fail to use it for the purposes named. And this is what is at the root of the present economic unrest; nothing more.

The Author Has Seen New Light

There was a time when I did not see this phase. I then thought it a matter of system only. That was the time when I held a red membership card in the Socialist Party. It was a time that I did not understand the spiritual discrepancy of the masses of humanity as well as I do now.

I think Lenine has learned by this time the same lesson, i. e., that it takes more than an ideal system to equalize men. It takes pure hearts as well. It is the requirement of first importance. Perhaps he has realized this and that is why he had abandoned one of Socialism's most orthodox measures, viz, the nationalization of the land. The daily press printed an associated press report the other day which stated that he had advertised that the citizenry of Russia should now come and purchase land from the government. They shall yet realize that the voluntary exercise of the free agency of the individual is a fundamental law which must saturate any plan to establish justice and equality.

This being the case, it can matter little whether the communistic plan or the private ownership plan shall prevail; or whether the profit system or some other check system shall be the rule. Personally, I favor letting it stand just as it is at present; viz, that those who have property and operate it according to the plan mentioned above (which is described in italics), may continue to do so; and those who choose to form cooperative societies, as they may do in the Order of Enoch, etc., but having the same objective and finally arrive at the same result, be also permitted to do so. There is no law that I know against this. This will make the church establishable under any form of government. To plan otherwise will be to make the church intolerable to one half of the world or the other; to one nation or the other; or to America, shall it adopt Socialism or some other form of government.

The Middle of the Road

The casual reader may say here that I have "straddled the fence." No, it is not so; but I am in the place indicated by the title of this article. And I am comforted with the thought that the law of tithing and consecration and stewardships has little to say about ownership, but is chiefly, if not wholly, concerned about the operation of wealth.

Sometimes we hear the quotation, "The land shall not be sold forever; for the land is mine"; . . . (Leviticus 25:23) in support of an idea that men should not own land, but that it should be owned by the church or left vacant as God's domain. To leave the land vacant under present conditions would not do, for then some one would exercise the "squatter's right," and we would soon be left with nothing. The command of God that the land should not be sold forever was not a general command relating to all the land of the earth, but was in reference to the land of Palestine, as a preceding paragraph will show:

"Speak to the children of Israel, and say unto them, when ye come unto the land which I give you,"—etc. (Verse 2.) It was to be a gathering place for them; therefore it was unwise to sell out again.

The general thought that it is displeasing to God that any of the land of the earth should be sold, loses its force in the light of the following quotations, for we cannot think that God requires that even an unbeliever should break his commandment in order that we may obtain an inheritance.

"Jesus said unto him, 'If thou wilt be perfect, go, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor,' etc. (Matthew 19:22.)

"And it is my will that he [Zombre] should sell the lots that are laid off for the building up of the city of my saints, inasmuch as it shall be made known to him by the voice of the Spirit," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 101:6.)

". . . Wherefore the land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 63:8.)

How Much Land for a Stewardship?

But how much land may one man obtain and conduct as a true steward? I think, just so much as he is able to properly oversee in person. Any agricultural college graduate can point out a sufficient number of tried rules of crop rotation, fertilization, pure grain evolution, bugology, and stock raising, that should a farm steward see that all these sciences be executed on an eighty or a hundred acre farm, he would about keep busy.

A story is told of a certain Missouri farmer whose farm is so extensive that he buys his harness by the carload. One day he met one of his hired hands on the road who was driving a fine span of mules. The farmer who owned the mules inquired of the hired hand if he wished to sell them; upon being informed that he did, the bargain was made and the hand went on to town and disappeared from the community on the first train. This farmer, so-called, was doing his farming from the city office and was no farm steward at all, but hired them by the score.

That some one is cutting the living of others below the standard is manifest by a doctor's report to the Government at Washington in which it is stated that there are more than one hundred thousand cases of pellagra in the South. It also states that the cause is an insufficient variety of food. It refers to the condition as a "famine," using the term in its scientific meaning, which is that they are not necessarily hungry, but are unable to get a sufficient variety of food to supply all the elements required by the body. No one but a bigot or one who has never been in Dixie would dare say that this want is traceable to the peculiar effect of the hot sun on the ambition of men. It is because men who think they are stewards over commerce and markets are unjust stewards; nothing else.

Inheritances

The gospel law provides for inheritances, i. e., homes. This is right. They are to be owned by the individual. Why does one desire to own his home? So he can without contradiction or supervision, arrange, remodel, or decorate it to suit the taste of himself and family. Ownership conveys this right. Every house is expected to be home for some one. Why should one man tinker with another's home? A landlord does this when he plans the building or chooses the decorations for the "tenant." Never mind, for when all have their inheritances there will not be any tenants. This will mark the passing of the landlord, so far as the Saints are concerned. What a clever way the Lord has of putting the landlords out of commission.

In railroad and banking and commercial circles one often hears the stock phrase, "The earning power of money." Had they said, "The earning ability of money, I should have contradicted; for it absolutely will not work. It cannot. Hitch a ton of gold to a plow and set it in a field and it will never turn a furrow; tie a bar of it to a crank handle in a factory and it will never make a single revolution. A common mule or a can of "gas" has earning ability, but money, never. So we may as well drop the idea that money is a producer, for it is the mind behind it that does the work. And with that idea vanishes also the idea of usury; but not yet, for we are still in the world, and must do business in harmony with civil law, the same as some one must own the land, for the recorder's office calls for that.

Relation of Steward to Society

But men must learn the relation of a steward to wealth and to society, and in the church he must learn it quickly; for the time has come that the members of the church are asked to use their agency and exercise volition in conducting their stewardships justly, and giving the surplus of its production to those whose living is not up to the standard; and the time is near at hand when they will not be counted in good standing if they shall not do so, as the following will show.

"Verily I say unto you, it shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you."—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 2.

There are some lines of work over which one can function as a steward over larger quantities, measured in dollars, than in the instance of farming cited above. For instance, one such as the Ford plant; or a great packing house, for the activities of these may come more closely under the personal observation of the steward than the other.

If, for illustration, we take two packing houses of like capacity, the one being owned privately and justly operated, and all surplus profits over the owner's just living expenses and proper expenses of running the plant, be turned over for the purposes already discussed; and the other publicly owned and operated by a manager or steward who owns none of it, and who turns over all surplus profits which are above a sufficient amount to provide him a just living and keep up the necessary expenses of the plant, for purposes already discussed; do not the privately owned stewardship and the publicly owned stewardship function exactly alike? If so, where is the condemnation? It is not on either of them, but is upon him who foolishly fails to operate his stewardship and impart his portion as the gospel requires.

Willing Obedience the Keynote

Such reasoning as this has brought me to the conclusion that it is not so much a matter of hard and fast rules of system as it is of inducing men to voluntarily do what they ought to do. Reward is also based upon voluntary virtue, not upon obedience induced by a system that compels. The principle of willing obedience is reflected in the following:

"Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind."—1 Peter 5: 2.

When the church shall live by this voluntary rule of righteousness, then I think the historian may record for us,

"And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods and parted them unto all men, as every man had need."—Acts 2: 44, 45.

Or, if he chooses, he may record it thus:

". . . and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift. . . . And there were great and marvelous works wrought among the disciples of Jesus, insomuch that they did heal the sick, and raise the dead, and cause the lame to walk, and the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear."—4 Nephi 1: 3-6.

The Red Cross reports an expenditure of around ten million dollars a year in service to the disabled veterans of the World War. While this work is continued, there is need for funds for disaster relief so that prompt help may be rendered, public health nursing, instruction in first aid and life saving, home hygiene, care of the sick, and in food selection. They therefore, feel that there is need for a continued large membership.

D. T. Williams was in Independence for a week following the Pertle Springs reunion. He was busy outlining and writing the early chapters of a serial for the Stepping Stones. The story will deal with life in Peru in the time of the Incas.

Brother William J. Murray, of Yucaipa, California, would like to hear from any Saints living in the Yucaipa Valley.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE EMPLOYERS AND THE Y. W. C. A.

Some of the facts concerning the attitude of the Y. W. C. A. on the labor question.

The clash between the Y. W. C. A. and the Pittsburgh Employers' Association has caused much altercation between those who regard the church's injection of its principles into industrial matters as "applied Christianity" and those who feel that the church has no right to interfere. The altercation so far has cost the Y. W. C. A. a pretty penny, according to The World To-morrow, which records the following:

It appears that there are Americans in the National Civic Federation, employers' associations, and elsewhere who are so keenly sensitive to color that they can find a tinge of red in churches and other allied institutions. An attack by the employers' association of Pittsburgh on the Y. W. C. A. of that city cost the latter exactly $110,000. In other words, the association raised only $90,000 of the $200,000 which it sought. Not content with this local success, the Pittsburgh Employers' Association desires to do similar work among the employing class in general. It has therefore sent out the following letter, which we quote from the Federated Press:

"On January 12, 1921, we issued a bulletin to our members drawing their attention to the industrial program which had been adopted by the Y. W. C. A., a copy of which bulletin was sent to you at the time.

"The local Y. W. C. A. had just begun a campaign for $200,000 when our bulletin was issued. As a result of the information given to our members, the Y. W. C. A. raised only $90,000 of its $200,000.

"The ladies of the Y. W. C. A. were very wrothy over our action, but we told them that we could do nothing unless they would repudiate the action of their national body and promise not to send any of the sums they were raising to the national headquarters, where it would, of course, be used in support of the industrial program which had been adopted and which we believed to be detrimental to our American institutions.

"The dangerous attitude of our religious and quasi-religious institutions is one of the most serious things we have to face at the present. Unless those of our members who are connected with the various churches of the country protest in vigorous fashion against the radicalism which is creeping into our church bodies, the result will be extremely grave. Religious bodies can hardly expect us to give them money for the purpose of manufacturing weapons with which to destroy industry.

"We presume you have seen a copy of the February 1 issue of Industry, which outlines the radical nature of the literature with which the young minds of the members of the Y. W. C. A. are being brought into contact through the industrial department of that institution.

"The radical and Bolshevik elements in the churches seem to be cooperating through the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and many of our members are expressing themselves as determined to discontinue financial support of their respective churches unless they withdraw all moral and financial support from the Federal Council.

"'Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty,' industrial as well as any other kind."

What the employers' association regards as Bolshevism seems to some folks like an humble attempt at applied Christianity.

Social Welfare, organ of the Social Service Council of Canada, an organization which includes the leading church bodies as well as several important secular organizations in the Dominion, makes the following comment on the letter sent out by the Pittsburgh Employers' Association:

We are thankful to say that nothing of this kind has occurred in Canada. We hope, and we believe, that the prevailing spirit of tolerance and fair-mindedness among our industrial leaders would make such an attempt to crush or cripple a noble organization like the Y. W. C. A., or any other organization endeavoring to make its contribution to the solution of the problems of industrial unrest impossible and unthinkable.

The Churchman in its issue of April 2 says editorially, concerning the letter of the Pittsburgh Employers' Association threatening the churches with the withdrawal of funds on account of their interference in industrial relations:

Mr. Long threatens to withdraw support from the churches. Suppose the churches should "right about" and ex-communicate Mr. Long and the Pittsburgh employers, refuse to marry them, bury them, or baptize them? That would be about as sensible a thing to do as Mr. Long proposes. . . . From Lambeth through a score of great church organizations the interpreters of the Christian religion have indorsed a social creed. That social creed infringes upon the Pittsburgh "zone of agreement" at certain points. The Church will not permit the Pittsburgh employers, or any other employers, to define the province of Christianity in industry.—The Religious Digest, April, 1921.

THE JEWS TAKE UP HEALING

The Episcopal Church some time ago took up in a systematized way the Immanuel Movement of healing by faith. It appears from a clipping sent us by Bishop Ingham, taken from the San Francisco Examiner, that the Jews are now also taking up this movement—a restoration of the ancient healing in Israel. The clipping follows:

"Spiritual healing introduced into the Ohabai Shaome congregation in the Bush Street temple two weeks ago is bringing such gratifying results, according to Rabbi H. Rosenwasser, that a school for training those who wish to make healing a life work will probably be established at the temple.

"The movement, which is a revival of the ancient healing in Israel, was announced less than a month ago, and Rabbi William Rice came from the East to take charge of the work. He was greeted with capacity audiences and the Friday night meetings which had formerly been devoted to religious rites were changed into healing services, which resulted in both rabbis being flooded with testimonials of those who had received results.

"Spiritual healing is presented from the viewpoint of the Hebrew Bible," says Rabbi Rice, "and other Jewish traditions." Rabbi Rice was a student of the rabbinical school at Budapest and was graduated from the Hebrew Union College at Cincinnati.

"Healing is to be an important phase of the ministry in the future at the Ohabai Shaome congregation, according to Rabbi Rosenwasser. 'The demand for the work has become so great,' he stated yesterday afternoon, 'that we will probably have a department devoted to healing and instruction just as quickly as arrangements are completed.'

"The third lecture on 'Healing through the power of love' will be given Friday evening at eight o'clock at the temple."

Elder A. M. Chase and wife have been engaged in Deer Park, Pennsylvania, and its vicinity ever since the close of the New York district reunion the middle of July. They have held services in the grand stand in the park in Lambertsville, New Jersey; they have held cottage meetings; and are now holding street meetings with continued good interest. Every Sunday afternoon they hold services in the auditorium on the reunion grounds. They report a good interest in that vicinity.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 3

By T. W. Williams

"No reason to suppose that climate and productiveness differ much now from earliest days," quotes the author, and discusses the water supply of Palestine.

Statement of American Consul

Our American consul in Egypt during 1837 wrote a volume entitled Incidents of Travel in Egypt, Arabia, Petraea, and the Holy Land. Speaking of a rainstorm which occurred on his trip from Petraea to Idumea during this year he said:

"There was no earth to drink the falling rain, and, pouring down the hard and naked mountain sides, it formed a torrent in the pass, which hurried and dashed along, gathering force at every moment and carrying with it bodies of sand and stones that would have crushed to atoms any obstruction they might meet in their resistless progress. . . . The rain was falling in torrents, the rocks and stones were washing under our feet, and we heard the loud roar of thunder and saw the forked lightning play among the mountain tops."—Page 11.

A few days later as they approached Akaba he continued:

"Soon we were in the midst of a perfect hurricane. Several times during the day I had wished to float upon the bosom of the tranquil sea and had looked in vain for some boat or fisherman's skiff to carry me up the gulf, but now I shrank from the angry face of the deep, and under the shelter of an impending rock listened to the fierce whistling of the wind and the crashing of the thunder among the mountains."—Page 30.

As they journeyed farther they came to the road from Hebron to Bethlehem.

"We had already, on this our first journey in the Holy Land, found that the character given of it in the Bible is true at this day; and that the Land of Promise is not, like the land of Egypt, watered by the dews of heaven, but by copious and abundant rains. Indeed, the rain was falling in torrents; our clothes were already dripping wet, but we did not mind it."—Ibid., p. 175.

A few days later, on their journey from Bethlehem to Jerusalem, they still encountered rain.

"The heavy fall of rain made the tract slippery and precarious, and it was four hours before we reached the celebrated reservoirs known to modern travelers under the name of the Pools of Solomon. . . . I had intended going on to Jerusalem that afternoon; but the rain had retarded me so much that as soon as I saw the interior of a convent I determined to remain all night."—Ibid., p. 180.

Again:

"On the morning of the 21st I set out for Jaffa, the ancient Joppa. It was a bright and beautiful morning when I left the Bethlehem Gate; but, before I had been an hour on my way, it began to rain and continued nearly the whole day."—Ibid., p. 244.

"Riding three hours longer, stopping from time to time under a rock or tree, I was ascending the east range of mountains; before me were the fertile plains of Sharon; and across the plain, still at a great distance was Ramla, the ancient Arimathea, the city of Joseph, the counselor, the good man, and just. To the right, bordering the sea, was the range of Mount Carmel; but the rain was pelting in my face so that I could see nothing of it."—Ibid., p. 245.

"A strong wind was driving the rain directly in my face and my mule stopped moving when I stopped beating; and, in the very hardest of the storm, when I would have rushed like a bird on the wing, turned off from the path and fell quietly to browsing on the grass."—Ibid., p. 246.

Table of Rainfall

Mr. James Hastings, M. A., D. D., gives a Table of Rainfall from 1861 to 1880, showing that during this period the rainfall per annum varies as much as eighteen inches. The lowest recorded rainfall was in 1876-77, when 13.39 inches fell. The highest was in 1877-78, when 42.21 inches fell. Commenting on this he continues:

"The above observations taken by Chaplin show how extensive and variable is the rainfall in this part of Palestine, the amount varying between 13.39 inches in 1870 and 42.21 inches in 1878. The average for these twenty years is about twenty inches. The number of days on which rain fell varied from 36 in 1864 to 68 in 1868."—Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 3, p. 644.

Doctor Hastings confirms the statements of other writers as to the unchanging climate.

"There is no reason to suppose that the climate and the productiveness of the country now differ much from that of the earliest days. Forests have, no doubt, been destroyed in Sharon and in the Hebron mountains, but, on the other hand, copses now cover the sites of former vineyards, marked by towers, terraces, rock-cut winepresses on Carmel and elsewhere. With decrease in population the great tanks and cisterns have fallen into ruins with the aqueducts and rock-cut canals of Roman times. . . . The regions now desert or waterless are the same as described in the Old Testament. The plains are as thickly covered with grass and flowers in spring as they ever were, and woods and pasture by the waters still exist."—Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 3, p. 644.

"The former rains fall at the time of the autumn equinoxial gales and the latter rains about the spring equinox. . . . In March the spring equinox begins. April is the month of grass and flowers. In May the east wind prevails and dries up the herbage, but in June and July the west wind rises about 10 a. m. daily."—Ibid., p. 644.

Fear of Drought

As far back as we have any record we read of periodical droughts and lack of rain. In the Mishna specific directions are given concerning prayers for rain. Supplications for rain commenced early in October. These continued until after the Passover. Three days were set apart for prayers for rain during the last week in October, should no rain have fallen prior thereto, and three more about the middle of November.

"But if these days of fasting be not heard, then shall they leave off selling and buying, the building of houses and the planting of trees, marrying and giving in marriage, and they shall leave off greeting one another . . . until the end of the month Nizan [the middle of April]. For if no rain be given until then, it is a manifest sign of the curse, since it is said, 'Is it not wheat harvest to-day?'"—Mishna Taanith 1.

We have but to refer to Scripture to establish this. In Genesis 47:13 we read of the seven years' famine. Again in 1 Kings 17:1-7 Elijah prophesies, "There shall not be dew nor rain these years but according to my word." We also learn that "there was a famine in the days of David three years" (2 Samuel 21:1). Israel was not always sure of a harvest and it was the dominant concern of the people that God would give them abundant rain.

Another Witness

Mr. J. Gadsby made a trip through the Near East during the years 1847-53. He speaks of the abundance of water during that time. He refers to a "lovely stream which was gently rolling from a powerful spring before us," (near Jericho) and continues:

"I came to the spring head—a fountain of what the Easterners call living water. I have seen many springs in the valleys of Scotland and Wales, but have no recollection of ever seeing one so powerful as this. The waters were gushing forth, not in mere bubbings, but as though they were in earnest. The fountain was overhung with wild figs and other trees—one tree was literally black with fruit."—Travels in the East, vol. 1, p. 497.

"We had soon to turn out of our way as we suddenly found ourselves in a marsh, our mules' feet sinking in the swamp. This was caused by the overflowing of the stream, or rather because there was no human hand to bank up the waters, and rightly direct their course."—Ibid., p. 498.

He comments on the use of the cupolas on the houses during rain:

"Probably they are meant to break the force of the heavy rains during the rainy season, as the roofs, which are flat, are not very strong, owing to the scarcity of timber. All the rain water is preserved in deep tanks, cut out of the rocks, as at Malta, the people principally depending upon it for supply. The former rains spoken of in Jeremiah 5: 24 and elsewhere refer to the commencement of the rainy season, when the husbandman sows his seed; and the latter rains to its termination; after which, a warm and almost unclouded sun soon ripens the crops. During the summer there is no rain at all in the Holy Land and hence sometimes arises the drought of which we read in Jeremiah 17: 18, but there is generally more or less rain throughout the winter—that is from October to April."—Ibid., p. 471.

Here again is another writer who was in Palestine during the years when it is claimed this return of the rains took place. He not only does not mention the matter, but gives evidence that rain fell during his entire sojourn from 1847 to 1853.

Causes Which Affect Water Supply

George Adam Smith has written a very illuminating volume on this important subject, entitled Jerusalem From Earliest Times to A. D. 70. He says concerning the rainfall of the past century:

"One calculation [Glaiser] of thirty-two years observation at a station within the walls [of Jerusalem] gives 25.23 inches. Another one [Doctor Chaplin] of thirty-nine years gives 26.05. Did the rainfall in ancient times differ from this? The Old Testament data are, of course, not specific, but at least sufficient to justify a negative answer."

"Some authorities on the climate and fertility of Palestine have, indeed, argued that, as in the Mediterranean basin as a whole, so throughout Palestine in particular, the climate has suffered a change for the worse through the diminution of the rainfall. (See Hull, Memoranda on Physical Geology and Geography of Arabia.) One of the reasons given for this conclusion is the alleged decrease of the woodland of the country. I have elsewhere shown that in all probability these were never much greater in Western Palestine than they are to-day."—Jerusalem From Earliest Times, p. 78.

He speaks of the water supply of Jerusalem:

"The natural causes which affect the water supply of Jerusalem are four; three of which may be regarded as practically constant—the rainfall, the height and shape of the basin in which the city stands; its geological formation; and one which, as we have seen, introduces some uncertainty into the subject, the earthquakes that have periodically rocked the foundation of the city."—Ibid., p. 77.

"The other natural features by which the rainfall is influenced—the position of the city relatively to the sea and the prevalent winds—have remained the same; while the reference to climate and weather in the Bible and the Mishna are fully consistent with the present conditions. We may conclude, therefore, that the rainfall upon Jerusalem in ancient times must have been nearly the same as it has been observed during the last forty-six years.

"The rainfall of about twenty-five inches annually happens upon a large basin, from brink to brink some two and one half to one and one half miles which lies on the summit of a mountain range. The highest levels of the basin are from 2,600 to 2,700 feet, the lowest under 2,000 feet above the sea."—Ibid., p. 79.

There is a book entitled Three Weeks in Palestine, and printed in 1833 under the direction of the Committee of General Literature and Education, appointed by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge (London). From this we quote:

"The rain descended in torrents to-day, [day before Easter, 1833] at which the people really rejoiced as they were fearful of drought, the cisterns being nearly empty. Though some of the houses are furnished with springs yet, for the most part, the supply of water is derived from the clouds."—Three Weeks in Palestine, p. 34.

"An excursion to Bethlehem was settled for the ensuing day; heavy rain prevented our starting before the afternoon."—Ibid., p. 48.

Rains Destroy Terraces

Arthur Fenrhyn Stanley, A. M. (Dean Stanley), in his work, Sinai and Palestine, published in 1856 (London), offers the following:

"The entire destruction of woods, which once covered the mountains, and the utter neglect of the terraces which supported the soil on deep declivities, have given full scope to the rains, which have left many tracts of bare rock where formerly were vineyards and cornfields."—Sinai and Palestine, p. 21. (See also Doctor Alin's Travels in the East, vol. 2, p. 428.)

"It is probable, too, that as in Europe generally, since the disappearance of the German forests and in Greece, since the fall of the plane trees which once shaded the bare landscape of Attica, the gradual cessation of rain produced by the loss of vegetation has exposed the country in a greater degree than in early times to the evils of drought. This, at least, is the effect of the testimony of residents at Jerusalem, within whose experience the Kedron has recently for the first time flowed with copious torrents, evidently in consequence of the numerous inclosures of mulberry and olive groves made within the last few years by the Greek convent and in themselves a sample of the different aspect which such cultivation more widely extended would give to the whole country."—Ibid., p. 123.

Scientific men differ as to the effect a denuding of land has on rainfall. If it could be shown that the rainfall of Palestine had been materially reduced as a result of the cutting down of forests (which we seriously question), it would in no sense affect the argument put forth by Mr. Van Buren.

Doctor Stanley theorizes on the "gradual cessation of rain." This is not borne out by observations or statistics.

Forests Destroyed in Bible Times

During the intensive agricultural life of the Israelites the forests were cut down to a very large extent (see Joshua 17: 14-18). There is no evidence that the denuding of the land during the occupancy of the Israelites diminished the rainfall.

Doctor Stanley continues:

"But Palestine is well distinguished not merely as a 'land of wheat and barley and vines and fig trees and pomegranates, of oil—olive, and honey, but emphatically as a 'good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of plains and mountain,' not as the land of Egypt, where thou sowest thy seed and waterest it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs; but as a land of 'mountains' and 'plain' which drinketh water of the rain of heaven."—Deuteronomy 8: 17, 18; 11: 10, 11.—Ibid., p. 123.

"The wells of Palestine serve as the links by which each successive age is bound to the other, in a manner which at first sight would be thought almost incredible. The name by which they are called of itself indicates their permanent character."—Ibid., p. 145.

"What they were ages ago—they are still. The shepherds may still be seen leading their flocks of sheep and goats to their margin, the women still come with their pitchers and talk to those 'who sit by the well.'"—Ibid., p. 146.

(To be continued.)

The Saints Shall Be Changed

By D. B. Perkins

During the millennium, those who have kept the faith will be changed individually as they reach the appointed age, and those who remain at the end of the world will be caught up to meet Christ when he comes in the third watch.

Concerning the Saints who are alive at the second coming of Christ, it is stated that, "It is appointed unto man once to die, but after this, the judgment." (Hebrews 9: 27.) "As in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order." Again, Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5: "In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious." Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13: "And he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye." By these quotations, it is plainly stated that men must die, even if they be changed in the twinkling of an eye.

I do not believe that the Saints are going to be changed collectively, or as a whole, or as a body of believers; at the resurrection of the dead in Christ, I believe the Saints that are purified, those who are counted the wise virgins, shall abide the day of his second coming, dying or being changed individually at a hundred years old beginning with the millennium to the end of the earth when those living at that time (the end of the earth) shall be changed collectively and caught up to meet the Lord in the air, when he comes in the third watch.

For proof that he is coming the third time, or at the end of the earth, we read in Luke 12: 41, 42, I. T.: "For, behold, he cometh in the first watch of the night, and he shall also come in the second watch and again he shall come in the third watch, and verily I say unto you, He hath already come as it is written of him; and again when he shall come in the second watch or come in the third watch. . . . Blessed are those servants when he cometh, that he shall find so doing." Luke 17: 22, I. T.: "And he said unto his disciples, the day will come when they will desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man and they shall not see it." 2 Peter 3: 10: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall shake, and the earth also shall tremble, and the mountains shall melt, and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat; . . . and the corruptible works which are therein shall be burned up." Revelation 22: 12: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Book of Mormon, page 676, 18-21; also 679, 49-53. This reference is made concerning the three disciples that had a change wrought upon their bodies and were to continue until Jesus was to come in his glory; and in this state, they were to remain and see all the works of the Father. Mormon inquired of the Lord diligently and was told they would remain until the judgment day of Christ, or his third appearing; and at that day they were to receive a greater change and to be received into the kingdom of the Father, to go no more out, but to dwell with God eternally in the heavens.

Now, as we have clearly established that Jesus is coming the third time, and that it is at the end of the earth when he comes sitting upon the throne of his glory and before him shall be gathered all nations (Matthew 10: 28; 25: 32-34); "And he will reward every man according as his works shall be," so beautifully described in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27-33; let us return to the second coming and ask ourselves the question, "Who shall abide the day of his coming?" Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5: "For they will hear my voice, and shall see me, and shall not be asleep, and shall abide the day of my coming, for they shall be purified even as I am pure." Doctrine and Covenants 61: 6: "Pray always that you enter not into temptation, that you may abide the day of his coming, whether in life or in death. Even so. Amen." 1 Thessalonians 5: 9, 10: "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with Him." Jesus said in answer to this question: "But as it was in the days of Noah, so it shall be also at the coming of the Son of Man."—Matthew 24: 44.

1. Noah was a prophet called of God.
2. He was commissioned to preach the gospel.
3. Commanded to build a place of safety (the ark): when the gospel was sufficiently preached and the place of safety prepared.
4. The wicked were destroyed.
5. The righteous were saved from temporal death.
6. Given the earth for an inheritance and commanded to multiply and replenish the earth.

You see they were to remain in mortality, and so it will be again at the second coming of Christ. The Saints shall abide and replenish the earth through the thousand years, each dying at the age of man or the age of a tree, or as Isaiah says, 65: 20, I. T.: "In those days, there shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall not die, but shall live to be a hundred years old; but the sinner, living to be a hundred years old shall be accursed." Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10 confirms this thought beyond any doubt: "And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver." Doctrine and Covenants as quoted in the beginning of this letter shows plainly that Saints are to abide and live a hundred years in mortality, and the rest of the time to the end of the earth in the immortal state, and by the time the thousand years are ended and the little space, there will be millions again living in mortality upon the earth as well as the immortal. Both will be on the earth when Jesus comes the third time, and it is then that the mortals will all be changed and the rest of the dead shall come forth, as Paul states in 1 Corinthians 15: 51-55: "Behold, I show unto you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of the last trump; for the trump shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

That is what Paul meant in Thessalonians 4: 17. Then, (after the thousand years and the little space) they who are alive (those who are alive from the dead, immortals) shall be caught up (at the end of the earth or third coming) into the clouds with them who remain (mortals at the end of the earth), to meet the Lord in the air. So shall they ever be with the Lord. Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7 agrees on this point: "Behold, verily I say unto you, that these are the words of the Lord your God; wherefore, labor ye, labor ye in my vineyard for the last time; for the last time call upon the inhabitants of the earth, for in my own due time, will I come upon the earth in judgment; and my people shall be redeemed and shall reign with me on earth; for the great millennial, which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come; for Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire; and their end no man knoweth, on earth, nor ever shall know, until they come before me in judgment."

Why Condemn the Saxophone?

By John A. Robinson

It is not an easy instrument to play. As well played it is neither reedy nor somber, says this writer.

Permit the writer a few words in defense of the saxophone. I have read Brother Arthur Mills's article in August 9 HERALD on the saxophone and I will say that while his information seems to be limited regarding its place and use, he is so nearly right in some of his contentions that he makes a creditable argument.

It's true that "Everybody's doing it," and therefore to musicians of the old school it's a bitter dose. Too much of anything, even chocolate cake, has its ill effects.

As to the jazz part—jazz is a very recent craze, and yet while Brother Arthur was still a boy, Lefebvre, the noted saxophonist, was playing solos with Liberati and his band at Washington Park, Kansas City, now Mount Washington Cemetery.

The fallacy seized on by the "ad" writers of the musical instrument factories foisted on the unsuspecting buyer that it is an easy instrument to learn is where a big warning should be. Nothing is farther from the facts. On the contrary, it requires untiring effort to learn to play properly. Comparatively few master it.

But to condemn an instrument as the illegitimate offspring of something or other, we are going a bit too far in our personal prejudices. We would have to apply that to all band instruments, as a gradual development has been going on since the days of Tubal Cain.

Let us be fair and cite some historical data. Because of the peculiar manipulations of the fingering of the clarinet, in 1840 Adolph Saxe, in trying to produce a clarinet that would overblow an octave, like the flute or oboe, invented the saxophone, which at once leapt into popularity in France and Belgium where the alto, tenor, and barytone have almost superseded the bassoon in almost all the military bands.

In 1840, mind you. Jazz became popular in 1917-18. Brother Arthur is quoted in a contemporary article as saying that there are no parts written for the saxophone. Listen to this:

Encyclopedia Britannica says, "Many modern French composers, Mayerbeer, Massenet, Ambroise Thomas, and others have scored it for their operas. Kastner introduced it into the orchestra in Paris in 1844 in Le Dernier Roi De Juda."

Why not condemn the slide trombone (which is acknowledged by all great band and orchestra masters as essential) as the illegitimate offspring of something or other? It's a very modern instrument, strictly American.

When Sorrentino came from Italy with his conservatory concert band in 1899-1900, he would not use the slide trombone, but used the antiquated valve, but he had Corti, a world famous saxophonist.

Sousa introduced the slide trombone into Europe, and, by the way, made them like it. The tendency to use the awful smear or glissando was condemned by old school musicians, and therefore the slide was termed impractical.

But has not time proved to the contrary? Does one have to smear properly to play the trombone? No! Neither does one have to jazz to play saxophone.

The violin has more capacity for manipulation as a jazz instrument than the saxophone, and is being used as such in all professional jazz orchestras.

I've heard the squeaking, and squawking of the fiddles of the "hill billies," and had I never heard a creditable performer I would have had the same opinion of that wonderful instrument as Brother Mills has of the saxophone.

Let us listen to artists like Lefebvre, Corti, Wiedoft, and many others and judge whether its tonal qualities are always reedy or somber.

The saxophone has been adopted in England at the Royal military school of music at Kneller Hall. Modern bandmasters say it has a distinct place in the band, filling the break of tonal color between the wood winds and the brass.

But let those who have the idea that it's not a regular instrument because the old German masters didn't write parts for it, take warning. It has come to stay, and while we deplore the jazz craze (which will wear away only to be followed by something as bad or worse, just as the jazz has followed the mandolin clubs) the more that creditable artists are developed, the more we will see its usefulness. But to repeat, "Let us be temperate in all things," even to the saxophone.

The sacrament service Sunday morning at the Stone Church in Independence was in charge of President Elbert A. Smith assisted by John W. Rushton, James F. Keir and John F. Garver. After the sacrament John F. Garver and D. J. Krahl, presidents of two of the neighboring stakes, were called on for brief remarks; then Brethren Blackmore and Patterson from Australia, John W. Rushton, and Gomer R. Wells spoke of conditions in Australia.

The A. O. Y. P. Z. expect to hold a meeting Tuesday evening, the 6th, at the Stone Church, to raise $400 to be used in sending some one to attend the Religious Education class at Graceland College. When the money is raised, they will ask the First Presidency to make the selection.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

And How Was the Reunion?

We are scanning eagerly the reports coming to our desk of the activities of the various reunions. Naturally, we are especially interested in the work of our department, and it is with a sense of gratitude to our splendid women everywhere that we read of the many successes scored by them.

With no fund from which to finance our field workers, and dependent entirely upon invitations from reunion committees or district presidents, we have felt it an encouraging sign of awakening interest in our departmental work, that arrangements were made in so many instances for us to have one of our representatives "on the grounds."

It is to be expected that some disappointments and some failures to grasp opportunities occurred; but we have been impressed by the fairly universal appreciation of the work done by our sisters which has found its way to us. Some of the brethren having direction of, and responsibility for, reunions, have taken the pains not only to thank our workers most heartily for their contributions to the general success, but have also written our general officers kind words of appreciation.

Now, it will be for our workers and organizers themselves to "gather up the fragments" of their various experiences, and present a generous "basketful" to those who must, perforce of official responsibility, be eager for their helpful comments. It is our desire to improve in every possible way upon the work of the season just past, and an intelligent survey and review of that work, noting both successes and failures, triumphs and disappointments, will form a splendid basis upon which to plan and build for the future.

Therefore we earnestly beseech every sister who reads these lines and who has in her thought any criticism, favorable or otherwise, upon the work she has experienced or observed at any reunion this season, to write us frankly her opinions and convictions regarding it—where it was weak, where helpful, what was encouraging and valuable, and what inefficient and useless.

It has been said a true friend is one who is able to kindly tell of faults, as well as quick to commend. Sometimes a leader stumbles along in a wrong direction, spending a deal of energy and thought which might more profitably have been turned into other channels, had he been given the benefit of the "other fellows'" viewpoints. One of our reunion writers emphasized the thought that one's education and the scope of his preparedness for life depend largely upon the number and variety of his viewpoints. We are sincere in wishing to have our reunion work of 1921 thoughtfully scanned, and to have the resultant opinions and deductions sent to our office, that in the approaching councils of our executive, intelligent plans may be laid for another season. This request is directed with especial emphasis to all Women's Department workers, district officers, and reunion committees.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

The Marys and Marthas

We are pleased to present our readers with Bishop McGuire's statement in regard to money raising, upon which general premises he based his lecture before our recent institute. We hope to have the lecture appear in its entirety in these columns at an early date, and know our sisters will be glad to receive the message it contains.

New problems and new days must find us prepared with new methods. We are outgrowing our "swaddling clothes," and finding much more to do in the wide world about us than did our foremothers, whose social service was expressed in the more restricted sphere of the sewing society.

Not that we do not need the adept needlewomen to be found in every branch! Indeed we feel that we need them more than ever, as their willing fingers find a wider service than of yore—a service which links them with the lowly Savior as he "went about doing good." It is more a sublimation of the old-fashioned aid society we are after—a transforming of its energy into ways more closely identified with real women's heart-work than merely toiling to carpet the church, or buy new songbooks!

It is the old, old conflict between the Mary and the Martha! Women are not afraid to work, but that work often becomes toil and drudgery just because of their willingness to do it. Branches will progress farther and quicker when they learn to carry their own financial load in a direct and manly way, and free the hands of their splendid women for study and enlightenment concerning the special work committed to them—the purifying of the home environments, the training and development of the children therein, and the individual advancements, intellectually and spiritually, which must be made before the Christ can come to his bride! Not idly did He so gently reprove the Martha of old and commend the gentle Mary, whose vision was fixed on things above and beyond, and who was concerned with the fundamental and not the superficial things of the present! A. A.

Statement of Bishop McGuire on Local Money Raising

(Submitted for the Women's Department Institute.)

In reference to question of holding entertainments, etc., to raise funds for the church, upon which you request my views, I consider that as a church our business is not commercial.

While religious worship is the primary object for which our church buildings are erected, entertainments, suppers, musical and educational programs, etc., arranged by the church or auxiliaries for the purpose of giving opportunity for spiritual development (and what tends to physical, mental, and moral and social improvement is incidental and necessary to this object) should be encouraged and may at the proper time and under proper censorship and supervision be held in the church buildings.

Entertainments, suppers, fairs, bazaars, excursions, etc., carried on by individuals, branches, or the auxiliaries, where an admittance fee is charged and where the inducing cause to attend or support is held out to be the need of the church, discredits the cause, discounts the labor of the ministry, offsets and counteracts much good that may have previously been accomplished, and clouds and obscures the Lord's way.

The only method I find that God has approved is the law of tithes and offerings, including special consecrations and surplus properties.

"The tithe is the Lord's."

The offering to secure the blessing of God and build up the individual in Christ should be given with a free heart, willingly; and methods employed by the church intended to exact money from the individual by barter or chance develop the desire to get and consequently to that extent overcome the impulse to cheerfully give.

Pecuniary return should not enter into our thought or feeling when contributing to the support of the Lord's work.

Besides, I question if such enterprises are the financial success claimed for them, when we take into account the time, energy, money, and other donations invested in such undertakings and diverted from the proper channels of church revenue.

My experience has taught me the law of God is the only safe way, and a strict observance cannot fail to bring not only a greater material but also an abundant spiritual increase. This is not strange, since God foreknew all our needs and made ample provision in advance.

Moses obtained the water, but he was denied the Promised Land. (Numbers 20: 11.)

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—1 Samuel 15: 22.

I think I have said sufficient to indicate the principle which should govern in the matter of gathering the contributions for the support of the Lord's work.

"Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

The Ladies' Aid

We've put a fine addition to the old church at home;
It's just the latest kilter, with a gallery and dome!
It seats a thousand people—the finest church in town,
And when it's dedicated we'll plank ten thousand down!
(That is, we paid five thousand! The deacons did their best,
But the Ladies' Aid Society—it promised all the rest!)

We've got an organ in the church, the finest in the land;
It's got a thousand pipes or more, its melody is grand!
And when we sit on cushioned pews and hear the master play,
It carries us to realms of bliss, unnumbered miles away.
(It cost a cool three thousand and it stood the hardest test—
We'll pay a thousand on it—and the Ladies' Aid the rest!)

They'll give a thousand sociables, cantatas, too, and teas;
Make a thousand angel cakes and a ton of cream they'll freeze!
They'll beg and scrape and toil and work, for seven years or more,
And then they'll start to buy the carpet for the floor.
(Oh, it isn't just like digging out the money from your vest
When the Ladies' Aid gets busy, and agrees to pay the rest!)

Of course we're proud of our new church, from pulpit to the spire;
It's the darling of our eyes, the crown of our desire!
—But, when I see the sisters work to raise the cash that lacks,
I sort o' feel that church is built on tired women's backs!
And sometimes I can't help thinking, when we reach the regions blest,
That the men will get the labor, and the Ladies' Aid, the rest! —Selected.

Women's Department Activities, Deer Park Reunion, July 2-18, 1921

July 5. Inspirational address on "Woman in the church," by President F. M. Smith.

July 6. "Our organization: its officers and their responsibilities," by district organizer, Barbara Milligan, followed by round table discussion.

July 7. "Citizenship," by Patriarch Baldwin.

July 8. "Health," by Gertrude Copeland, R. N.

July 8. (Afternoon.) Weighing and measuring of all children under two. In charge of Gertrude Copeland.

July 8. (Evening.) "Child welfare" slides, Gertrude Copeland lecturing.

July 9. District business meeting of the Women's Department.

July 9. (Afternoon.) Baby parade, 33 entries.

July 11. "Raising finances," by Bishop B. R. McGuire.

July 12. "Child welfare," by Sister A. M. Chase.

July 13. "Moral education," by Barbara Milligan.

July 13. (Evening.) "Child welfare" slides, Gertrude Copeland.

July 14. "Child welfare," by Barbara Milligan.

July 14. (Evening.) "Feeding the family" (with charts), by Chef Elmer A. Kaler.

July 15. "More education," by Historian W. W. Smith.

July 15. "The work of the Women's Department," by Sister A. M. Chase.

July 16. "Venereal diseases," by Gertrude Copeland.

A number of Food and Child Welfare charts and posters were obtained from the Government, and hung on the walls of the large auditorium, and one end of the book and tract counter was filled with child welfare literature and dodgers, supplied by the Children's Bureau, at Washington.

Missionaries and pastors were urged to study the activities of the Women's Department, and obtain a thorough understanding of it, so they can counsel with and instruct women leaders in their localities. Many supplied themselves with literature and yearbooks for this purpose.

I believe we were able to give a much clearer idea of our department than some of the brethren had received before. Missionaries and pastors should understand what we are trying to do, if they expect to function as properly and intelligently as their positions demand. The majority of congregations are women, who can profit by wise counsel from the ministry.

Here is a short account of our baby parade, which was quite a success.

BARBARA W. MILLIGAN,

District Organizer.

Baby Parade at Deer Park Reunion

There were thirty-three entries in our first baby parade, besides a number of children not costumed. All children under twelve years were eligible.

After the parade, which formed at one end of the camp and marched to the other, the costumed children and vehicles were placed on the platform in the large auditorium and prizes awarded as follows:

Fattest baby: Baby Kane, Camden, New Jersey; prize, a roly dolly. Best decorated vehicle: Dorothy and Larry Jones, Washington, District of Columbia; prize, aluminum plate, cup, knife, and fork. Prettiest costume on child between two and five years: Boy, Arthur Beckman, Philadelphia, sail boat; girl, Louise Hobby, Brooklyn, sand-set. Prettiest costume on child between five and twelve years: boy, Paul Santmyer, Philadelphia, large picnic ball; girl, Mabel Guild, Trenton, New Jersey, embroidery set.

Every child costumed received a rubber ball and all were very happy. There were so many beautiful costumes and decorations that the judges and audience found it very difficult to make a decision, but it seems all are entirely satisfied and many already are planning for a Jumbo parade next summer.

Dress

2. Fads and Fashions

Judging from history both in word and in picture, woman has always been given to beautifying herself. Most of us can collect a group of ancestral photos and daguerreotypes exhibiting milady's small waist, ham-sized and shaped sleeves, bustles, hoops, pantallettes, etc., and from a recent article Professor H. H. Straus, head of the department of ancient languages, Fayetteville, Arkansas, says, "The women of Rome made even freer use of cosmetics than does the woman of today. She had her rouge, which she used abundantly, her lip sticks, her powders, her cream for wrinkles, and her perfume." Men have not been exempt from a liking of fashions. Recall your picture of Washington and Jefferson with their powdered wigs, beruffled shirts, embroidered waistcoats, knee breeches with their silver buckles, the long silken hose and low cut shoes.

Every period which we have recorded by famous artists shows examples of those able to adapt the prevailing modes so as to retain all that was beautiful in them and at the same time suit them to the individuality and needs of the wearer. This happy faculty was not true of the majority nor is it today. Most people, if they admire a particular style or costume on another, copy it for themselves without regard for the needs of adapting it to fit themselves. They know nothing of the fundamentals of right dressing either from observation or training.

The idea in adaptation is to utilize and emphasize one's own best points and reduce the worst ones. Take the matter of powder and rouge. Most people would be far better looking to wear none, for they only make themselves ridiculous instead of giving the softness to the skin that is not in the least artificial appearing. Refined people of good taste either use no powder and rouge or so reduce it and apply it that it serves its original purpose and can scarcely be detected by anyone.

The last few years there has been an endeavor on the part of manufacturers to produce tinted powders suited to various types of complexion. They have succeeded fairly well but it yet remains for each woman to apply the cosmetic and there is where women make themselves ludicrous. It takes first the right idea of the results desired and then eyes that really see when the result is accomplished.

Just Sunday I saw a woman of about forty with beautiful dark brown eyes; her features were regular; her black hair, slightly gray; her clothing, suitable and very neat. She was unusually attractive but for one thing. Her cheeks and nose were piled high with powder and rouge. That one defect in her toilet was noticeable above every other thing. Her complexion was of the yellow tints characteristic of most brunettes (you could tell it about the ears and neck, where there was practically no powder), while the cosmetic she had used in such profusion produced the dead white set off by the pinkest of rouged cheeks.

This example will explain what I mean when I say that with few exceptions women forget to "look below the chin" when they powder. They seem to forget that if a softness of the cheek is desirable it should be extended to take in all other features and not leave a wrinkled, uncovered spot. If the use of powder were reduced as before mentioned and used for the purpose indicated there would not greet us the funny combination of a young girl's complexion on the cheeks and the coloring and wrinkles of a woman past maturity on the same person.

Perhaps you think a word should be said about the harm of cosmetics. There isn't much need for it. Everyone of ordinary intelligence knows that even powder stops the pores of the skin unless the greatest care is exercised to prevent it. Rouge is generally known to frequently contain chemicals harmful to the skin.

You ask what you can do to get rid of some of your complexion defects? First, and foremost: Clear away any physical condition of the body that is hindering perfect health. Second: Keep the pores of the skin open. Use a flesh brush if necessary. Third: Study the colors of materials and their adaptation to various complexions. The color of the hair and eyes and the size of the woman have to be considered, too. If you have never noticed the harmonies and contrasts of color with relation to the coloring of people, you will be surprised to find how interesting it is and to discover the wide range of combinations possible for every type of complexion—combinations that will bring out the best points in the individual's color, giving as clear and pretty a complexion as anyone needs. A person of the brunette colorings cannot develop the complexion of a blonde, but let us be content to use the favorable charms nature has bestowed.

While every woman has the right to powder and paint as much as she likes, yet she should remember that to be extreme in its use lays her liable to being classed with disreputable women. Moreover girls and women in business waste an untold number of hours of their employer's time, stopping to dab on a little powder or to rub the "shine" off the nose with a dirty chamois. It is an invariable surprise to find that even the most immaculate women frequently use a dirty chamois.

As Latter Day Saint women with the ideals of service before us that we have, it appeals to your writer that we cannot afford to waste time trying to produce an artificial beauty when nature has blessed all of us with a reasonable amount of our own, if we will but use and conserve it.

There is a little verse the last line of which is like this,

"I'd rather be my honest self,
Than any made up daisy."

Let us be our honest selves. The intelligence, womanliness, and desire to be of real worth in our small spheres produces an attractiveness far beyond that which is applied to the outside.

BERTHA L. MADER.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXVIII

Companionship

1. Name the periods of childhood.
2. What are the characteristics of the pre-social stage?
3. What takes place during the imitating and socializing stage?
4. What problems may arise during the individualizing stage?
5. How does the competitive socializing show itself?
6. What is true of the transitional stage?
7. What percentage of boys join a "gang"?
8. What is the main object of a gang?
9. At what time of the year do they organize chiefly?
10. For what purposes do girls organize?
11. Contrast the girls' "sets" with the "gangs" of the boys; (1) leaders, (2) organization.
12. What changes occur in impulse as maturity is reached?
13. Is it true that a boy from a poor home is more likely to belong to a "gang"? Why?
14. What is the responsibility of the "gang" leader?
15. Name some of the dangers of the "gang."
16. How is the "gang" leader independent of the "gang" influence?
17. Explain fully how the home can satisfy the social instinct of the child.
18. Why does not the school satisfy the social instinct of the child?
19. Is it possible for the church to aid in this matter?
20. How may adults aid in influencing these groups of young people?
21. Suggest the benefits of the Boy Scouts, Oriole Girls, Temple Builders, organized Sunday school classes, etc., in controlling the gang instinct.

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Let Me Be Remembered

Let me be remembered, as a child's unfettered laughter,
Heard beside a cottage when the robin woos its nest;
Or as words of lovers, on a night in summer,
When the scarlet moon goes to rest.

Let me be remembered, as an apple blossom blowing, Brimmed with earth's wild fragrance for a dreamer's thirsty brain
Or as strong-thewed oaks that toss their towering arms at sunset,
While a thrush spills music with a rainbow after rain.

As a soft word spoken, let me be remembered!
On a blue-roofed morning when the hills are girt with gold;
As a mother's kisses, when her loyal arms grow weaker.
Let me be remembered as her babes that have grown old.

As a bell at twilight, tolling in a valley,
Listened to by old men there with bated breath;
Let me be remembered as a lad that oft made merry—
Nothing else shall matter after death.

—J. Corson Miller in Contemporary Verse.

Women outnumber the men as shareholders in the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Boston now has a woman constable.

LETTERS

The True Successor to Joseph Smith, Jr.

A detailed discussion of this important subject.

Written in reply to a letter addressed by Elder J. K. Edmunds, of the Utah Church, Hartford, Connecticut, to his cousin, Mr. T. J. Edmunds, who has recently been baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

MR. T. J. EDMUNDS,

Dear Sir: In the communication from your cousin, he states that in Doctrine and Covenants 27:2; 34:4; 43:1, 2, that these quotations were used to prove that no one should or would be appointed to take the prophet's place except Joseph Smith, jr. should prove unworthy, but he proved worthy and later the priesthood was established and twelve apostles were chosen whose authority was equal to the first presidency and Joseph Smith, jr., bestowed the priesthood upon the twelve apostles, the second quorum of the church. And in August and October, 1844, they were recognized and sustained as the presidency of the church and their duty as God said was to set in order all other officers of the church, which they did under the direction of the Lord.

Now in reply to the above we will begin at Doctrine and Covenants 27:2, where it says: "But behold verily, verily I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in the church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receives them even as Moses. . . . and thou shalt not command him who is at thy head and at the head of the church, for I have given him the keys to the mysteries and revelations which are sealed until I shall appoint another in his stead."

It is seen here that God sometime in the future would appoint some one unto them (meaning the church) in his stead. In section 34:4 where it reads, "And I have given him the keys of the mysteries of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming if he abide in me, if not, another will I appoint in his stead."

Now Joseph Smith, jr., was faithful and through him those things were made known until the coming of Christ. This being true, it does not prove that God would change his mind concerning section 27:2 (I shall appoint another in his stead). God being unchangeable gave these three revelations at different times for a wise purpose. And in section 43:1, 2, we find these words, "But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead. And this shall be a law unto you that ye receive not the testimony of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me."

We find in verses 1 and 2 God has made it plain that the commandments were a law unto the church "that you may not be deceived," and that Joseph Smith, jr., would be the one to appoint his successor; even if he proved unfaithful he would still have that right, as it states if he proved unworthy he would not have power to receive revelation and commandments, and the only power under this condition was to appoint another in his stead. Now suppose Joseph Smith, jr., proved unworthy and did appoint another in his stead, and continued to live until the one he appointed had taken the prophet's place, your cousin would say amen to that, but on the other hand if he, Joseph Smith, proved worthy, he would not have the right to appoint another in his stead.

Therefore he condemns the prophecy in section 27:2, where God says until I shall appoint another in his stead. In section 43:2 it is quite clear that God gave the prophet the right to appoint another in his stead, whether faithful or not.

Now he calls your attention to section 104:11 and says Joseph proved worthy and later through him the order of the priesthood was established. Twelve apostles were chosen who formed a quorum equal to the first presidency. These twelve were authorized to ordain and set in order all the other officers in the church, which necessarily includes the first presidency. These are some of the reasons why the church unitedly looked to the apostles as the head of the church when the prophet died. We read in section 104:4 as follows: "Of necessity there are presidents or presiding officers, growing out of, or appointed of, or from those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood three presiding high priests chosen by the body. Appointed and ordained to that office and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayers of the church. Now does that sound like the twelve apostles were to be the head of the church for which your cousin contends? The above is in harmony with Joseph Smith, jr., as section 27:2 states as at the head of the church and he had his counselors which constituted the first presidency of the church.

We read section 104:11: "The twelve traveling counselors are called to be apostles or special witnesses of the name of Christ in all the world. Thus differing from other officers in the church in their duties of their calling, and they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned." This statement does not prove that the twelve should be the head or first presidency. It states further that the seventy are equal to the twelve in authority. That does not signify that they could be the first presidency or ever take the place of the twelve, as their work and callings differ from those of the twelve, just the same as the twelve differs from that of the first presidency. And verse 12 states plainly that the twelve are under the direction of the first presidency. As we read, the twelve is a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord under the direction of the first presidency of the church. And verse 30: "It is the duty of the twelve also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church, agreeably to the revelations which say." Then mentions seventies, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, bishops, and under the direction of the first presidency. The twelve cannot work in harmony with the revelations given to the church and at the same time be the head of the church on earth. Verse 44 reads as follows: "Wherefore now let every man learn his duty, and act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be accounted worthy to stand. Even so, amen." The above does not need any comment, as the revelation in this section points the right way to proceed, hence your cousin's claims fall flat.

Now in his letter he states, those that ordained young Joseph Smith did not have any authority whatever, and refers to Gurley, Blair, Marks, and Powers, and says that Blair and Powers never did belong to the church. What about Gurley and Marks? They belonged to the church before it was scattered, and had authority; that is, they held the Melchisedec priesthood. They never followed Brigham Young; that is one point in favor of the Reorganized Church, and the courts of our land upheld the Reorganized Church as the true successor of the church organized by Joseph Smith, jr.

So I am glad, too, because they are founded upon the rock of revelation as Christ told Peter, flesh and blood did not reveal this to him, "but my Father, which is in heaven."

It will not take much argument to prove that Brigham Young and the heads of the Utah Church broke their covenant with God when they left Nauvoo and were baptized and confirmed again, that it was the first step of apostasy, according to Paul's version in Hebrews sixth chapter, where it reads, "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith towards God; of the doctrine of baptisms and the laying on of hands," etc. They did the very thing that Paul taught they should not do. Don't you think the chances are that they lost the priesthood as soon as they committed that act, for Paul says that such crucify Christ afresh and put him to an open shame. They did not stop there, but continued to put him to an open shame, introducing polygamy, Adam-God, blood atonement, and other things contrary to the teachings of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

Your cousin thinks because there was a lapse of sixteen years from the death of the Prophet till the Reorganized Church was established would prove Daniel's prophecy false, because Daniel said the kingdom would never be destroyed. The church was not destroyed. It existed in a scattered condition, and when the time came for the appointed one to take his father's place fulfills the statement made by Daniel, "It should not be given to another people," and is in harmony with section 27, that God would plant another in his stead, also the other two sections referred to. Your cousin states that two committees have been sent by the Reorganized Church to Salt Lake City to ask permission to join with them, the Utah Church, in building the temple in Jackson County, Missouri. Then says, Why should they worry? The above statement is misleading and without foundation, and only proves what Jeremiah says they cannot see when good cometh. (Jeremiah 17:5.) "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land not inhabited." Now the followers of Brigham Young and others literally fulfilled the above prophecy.

Now verses 7 and 8 say, "Blessed is the man whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and spreadeth out his roots by the river; and her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit." Now both churches claim that Joseph Smith, jr., was the instrument in the hand of the Lord in building his church and kingdom here on earth. As a whole the Saints' hearts were with the Lord. There never could have been a better time in the history of the world than in the last dispensation, when Joseph and Hyrum were slain, that some of their leaders' hearts would depart from the Lord and fulfill the above prophecy. And those whose hearts did not depart from the Lord continued to yield fruit, and thus we see the Reorganized Church is in harmony with the teaching of the three books. And when the time comes for the temple to be built, God will speak to the church through the man he would raise up like unto Moses to lead his people. Section 100:3: "But verily I say unto you, I have decreed that your brethren which have been scattered shall return to the land of their inheritances and build up the waste places of Zion; for after much tribulation, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, cometh the blessing. Behold this is the blessing which I promised after your tribulations of your brethren; even their restoration to the land of Zion, to be established no more to be thrown down; nevertheless if they pollute their inheritances they shall be thrown down; for I will not spare them if they pollute their inheritances. Behold I say unto you, The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up a man who shall lead them like as Moses did the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be. Therefore let not your hearts faint; for I say not unto you as I did unto your fathers, Mine angels shall go up before you, but not my presence; but I say unto you, Mine angels shall go before you and also my presence, and in time ye shall possess the goodly land."

And this is in harmony with a statement made by the prophet in section 107:18 where it says, "for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing also shall be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto Joseph. In thee and in thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed."

Now Brother Tom, can you see any reason why anyone should not join the Reorganized Church? as all the statements made herein as quoted from the Scriptures and Doctrine and Covenants are in direct harmony with God and the church. In pointing out the Zion movement in Jackson County, Missouri, by the finger of the Lord, see Doctrine and Covenants 57:1 where it reads, "Independence is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward on a lot which is not far from the courthouse." Section 83:1, where it reads, "and for the gathering of the Saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be built, beginning at the temple lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri." Rather strange for your cousin to plead so earnestly for the loved ones to come back in the fold and the house of God which is established in the tops of the mountains and gathering the honest from among the nations of the earth, when the last two quotations in section 57 and 83 are positive that Independence is the only place that is to be the city New Jerusalem called Mount Zion and is dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, jr., and others with whom the Lord was well pleased. (Section 83.)

Now there are many other scriptures that could be used, but space will not permit. Suffice it to say, in conclusion, that the anointing was put upon the head of Joseph Smith, jr., and the blessing put upon the head of his posterity after him, that is, the late Joseph, and later F. M. Smith, and is in harmony with the promises of God to the church. And none of his posterity are in the Utah Church. The lineal priesthood spoken of by your cousin has reference to the lesser priesthood which is handed down from father to the elder son, as Aaron and his sons received it. (See Doctrine and Covenants 68:2.)

Hoping the truth will abound and the Zion movement will cause people to search the Scriptures more earnestly than ever before, are my best wishes.

ELDER W. H. WALLING.

God Helps Those Who Help Themselves

In the work of God, if we do our duty, he will open the way, but will not compel us to occupy.

It is a long time since I have written a letter to the letter department. I love to read letters in the HERALD from my dear brothers and sisters of different parts of the world. To me the letter department is the best of all and I often wonder of late why there are not more letters in it.

I want to bear a little testimony for the benefit of my dear brethren and sisters in Christ. I feel there are some terrible times just ahead of latter-day Israel. I travel here and there among the Saints of God, and as I do I see, oh, so much need of humility and true Christ love. "Why, what other love is there in the church?" some may say. Well, there is a selfish love—love of aspiration, love of pride, love of little things that make a breach between the true love of Jesus and ourselves.

Again, I find many of our brethren holding the priesthood and not doing a thing only when begged or asked to do it. Oh, my brethren, how can you reasonably excuse yourselves? You accepted your call and ordination. Are you going to sit idly by and not magnify that calling? I know of some men who have been called to the office of priest, and then to elder, and have never preached a sermon. Did not Jesus say, "Go ye into all the world and preach"? I do not question God nor his unlimited power to call men, but I do believe if the call is from God he will qualify the person if he is willing to do his part. If not, he should never accept.

I read in Doctrine and Covenants 17:10, the elder's and priest's duty is to preach. Now the thought to me is this, Woe unto me if I do not preach the gospel of Christ; and again, ye men of God, who hold this authority, do you not want to do your duty? God said it is our duty to preach, and of course the church would get after us if we preached anything else but the gospel. Everything good is in the gospel, so there is a woe and a condemnation at our door if we do not do our duty.

I know God has called me. I know something about the blessed, hallowed influence of his Holy Spirit resting upon me in presenting the sweet gospel story. I have not been long in the ministry. I know a lot about the great power of God, but what I do not know would perhaps make a library. Let me relate a little experience; not that I may boast, God forbid, but that it might spur some one else to activity. I moved to Port Huron shortly after I was ordained; conditions for my future were not very bright, but I felt to discharge my duty. There were some thirteen elders, nine or ten priests, five teachers, and about four deacons in the branch, so I concluded my opportunity was slim, so far doing my duty at the branch pulpit. So, by permission from the president, I started cottage preaching services at different places in the city where the Saints would open their houses for such and invite their neighbors. I will admit perhaps to the older ministry my talk would appear a little awkward, but we had some good meetings. Usually at the close of the talk we would have a little testimony meeting, Saints and outsiders taking part. I know of several good results direct from this and indirectly some were baptized from this. That is one way that every young priest or any minister can qualify if he wants to do his duty. Now if all the ministry would do that, see what influence for good it would be.

Some time later the president of the branch sent word for me to go and preach a funeral sermon of an outsider. Duty said to go. It was one of my first funeral sermons, and for a dear old mother who was not a member, but her request had been for a Latter Day Saint minister. It was in her own home, and the house was packed. I read my lesson text to all the outsiders and strangers, and a feeling of timidity came over me. I prayed, "God, I am your servant. I am here alone. I ask thee in the name of thy son Jesus Christ to take full charge of this service." I seemingly was overshadowed. For an hour I was hardly conscious of what I said, but sufficiently to notice several in the room bathed in tears. We followed to the grave and the same influence came over me as I prayed. That was in February. Along in June I was on my way in my auto to a certain city to work, and passing a little village, the Spirit said, "A good place to preach the gospel."

I stopped to inquire around. It was quite difficult to get a place to preach, but finally a lady who was building a house, which was finished on the outside but not on the inside, rented it to us. Her mother, some eighty years old, had had a stroke of paralysis, and it hindered her from finishing the house. We rented it for ten dollars a month, fixed it up, and had a fine little mission. Fourteen were baptized, including some of those who were at the funeral, and also the lady of whom we rented the house, and her mother who had had the stroke, and the father who fought in the Civil War. There are others to follow. We have a fine little mission there now and have some very spiritual feasts.

I came here to Mount Clemens, a fine summer resort where people gather from all over the world. The Spirit said, "Preach on the street." We got consent of the man in charge here and saw the mayor and chief of police, and they heartily consented to let us use the Liberty Park, opposite post office, right in the center of town, nicely seated all through. We got announcements into daily paper, with a nice write-up under the subject, "What will be the sign of the second coming of Christ, and the end of the world?"

There is no branch here, but a few scattered Saints, some very inactive. A sister of childhood days lived isolated here for years. Last year a few were baptized. We drove our car up by the park, did what singing we could, and began with a fine crowd. Crowds kept getting bigger, and with better interest. We encountered a little trouble one night when a fellow came right up in front of us and said, "Say, mister, where did you get your education to preach? Better quit till I tell you something." I said, "You better go right over there and sit down and keep quiet until I get through, then you can talk. If you do not, I will have you taken care of." He kept quiet, and at the close of the services I said that I had some tracts that they were welcome to. He, after hesitating, came up too and asked to be forgiven and took some of the tracts. We continued all the next week. I have written this to show if we try to do our duty, as outlined in Doctrine and Covenants, how God will open the way; but he is not going to come down or send an angel to put a rope around our necks and lead us to duty.

The solemn experiences of the past should have taught us many truths about duty. We ought to burn into our memory as with a branding iron, that every duty we omit obscures some truth we should have known. To run out of the path of duty is to run into the way of danger, as the slightest deviation from a known duty will sometimes lead us to the abyss. He or she who is false to a known duty breaks the thread in the loom of life and will some day find the flaw in the pattern when perhaps it will be too late to repair it. Duty frowns upon you when you flee from her, but when we follow her she smiles. I am convinced that as the birds of the air were made to fly, and rivers run, so the soul of man was made to follow duty. Let us do our duty. I have lost many a dollar by trying to be true to God and do my duty. May God help us all to awake from slumber and put on the whole armor of God and join with the "Onward, Christian soldiers, marching as to war,

With the cross of Jesus, going on before."

Yours for Christ and his church,

FRED W. CADOW.

Debate at Leeds, England

Elder Thomas Taylor debates with a Communist in the Town Hall Square on the economic solution of our problem.

On the evening of August 18 Brother Taylor held a discussion with a Mr. Davis, who represented the Communist Party, before an assembly of about five hundred people. The order was excellent, excepting for the last fifteen minutes, when Elder Taylor drove home many excellent points at which some of the Communists expressed much dissatisfaction and manifested that they did not have as much of the community spirit as their name implies.

The propositions were as follows: (1) Resolved, that the system, or constructive policy, advocated by the Communist Party is the best for humanity. Mr. Davis affirmed and Elder Thomas Taylor denied; and (2) Resolved, that the system, or constructive policy advocated by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the best for humanity. Elder Taylor affirmed and Mr. Davis denied.

The debate was the outcome of our preaching on the town hall square where we were challenged to meet a Communist in discussion. Brother Taylor has always been ready to defend the gospel before any and all comers. All he wants is half time and fair play.

A new departure in a debate of this kind is that the standard books cannot be used as evidence, for the Communist has no respect for the Bible or anything else that claims to be scripture.

Mr. Davis led out with the affirmative by urging that any structure, social or otherwise, that was not built on fundamentals, was doomed to destruction. He then pointed out that the only fundamental thing in nature and history was a constant flux, or development, or evolution. The direction of this evolution is unknown and it is unethical, simply a blind force finding expression in all forms of life and having no definite goal, although the past seemed to point in the direction of the philosophy of the community (Communists). Morals are the result of the economic status of society and therefore are an entirely secondary affair, and the morals of primitive men were never wrong; they are simply an outgrowth of the conditions that men live under, and their morals could not be any different than the conditions were.

Society was now divided into owners and the owned. The owners were such because they had appropriated things and property which gave them the power. The thing for men to do was to steal off the capitalist what the capitalist had stolen from the working classes. He used lots of time bearing on the materialistic interpretation of history; the constructive policy took little time to tell. It was simply summed up in one word, robbery by plunder.

In reply, Brother Taylor said that he agreed with his opponent that there was something radically wrong with society, and that there was a need of readjustment, but that he was in fundamental disagreement with the program of the Communistic Party. He called attention to the paucity of its constructive policy, of which his opponent had said little or nothing, and pointed out that the coercion they proposed to use would cause bloodshed, and that the movement would end in disaster. Brother Taylor illustrated with power the great ethic of Christ, "Whatsoever ye would have men do unto you, do ye even so to them." He showed that because men had moved in the opposite direction, the creation of many means of control had developed and caused heavy taxation, and that consequently the Bible stated the truth when it said, "the way of the transgressor is hard."

In his review of Elder Taylor's negative speech Mr. Davis tried to ridicule the religious aspects set forth and tried to weaken the great ethic of Jesus. In this he failed, as they have done so many times before, for that statement, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them," is a rock ethic and cannot be ground to powder by sarcasm or ridicule.

Elder Taylor was in a happy mood in setting forth the constructive program of our church. He called attention to what had been done in an attempt to make operative the method of stewardships. And told the people that we had a college where the poor and rich had an equal opportunity to receive an education, and also called attention to the Sanitarium, and the Old Folks' Home in Holden, Missouri. The letter sent out by the Bishop to the Sunday school workers, telling of the purchase of land and the operation of it on stewardship basis, was fresh in the mind of Elder Taylor, and he used it with telling effect.

He then stressed the principle of repentance as being essential to membership in such a community and church to as clear and telling degree as I have ever heard done, and finished his speech by a recapitulation of what the church had done and was doing to bring about equality of opportunity, and concluded with the suggestion that it would be infinitely better for the Communistic Party to go and do likewise, instead of trying to place their hands on the government and on the property and the liberty of all God-fearing and law-abiding, and order-loving subjects.

In his rebuttal, Mr. Davis, who is a Jew, tried ridicule against the religious elements and implications of Brother Taylor's speech. But it didn't work. He showed great bitterness in his attack on the capitalist class, and played on the feelings of the meeting by reference to the sufferings of humanity, past and present, as a result of capitalism. This was well received and applauded by the crowd. He utterly failed to show that the program of the church as set forth by Elder Taylor was in any point weak.

Elder Taylor, in his review of the negative speech of his opponent, began to get in some telling points and the Communists could not stand it. Their idol was being shattered by the cogent logic of a keen debater. They interjected and protested, and the crowd as well as the chairman appealed for order. When order was restored Elder Taylor called attention to the fact that the man who had done most of the interrupting was chairman of a communistic meeting a few days before, and that he had listened patiently for two hours and never interrupted once, and he said to him, "Sir, as one who occupies as a chairman, now and then, you should set an example to the rest of us." Needless to say he had nothing to say during the rest of the time. Brother Taylor concluded his speech by showing the fundamental weakness of the movement, much to the chagrin of the advocates of that movement.

We believe much good was done. The psychic conditions present at the time gave a sort of receptive condition of mind to those who were out for fair play, which is a British characteristic. Several approached Brother Taylor and congratulated him and told him that Mr. Davis did not have a leg to stand on. Whatever will be the result, we have made many friends, and even those who do their very best (or worst) admire the deportment of Brother Taylor during the trying and soul-searching period of question time.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

The Work in Quebec

The prayers of the church asked for the work in Quebec. From a letter to the First Presidency.

Being fully aware of the intents and purposes of the church in carrying the gospel message to the people of the Province of Quebec, and as a branch existing, as it were, in their midst, we are naturally interested in this phase of our program, hence, after much deliberation and prayer, we have considered that perhaps it might not be out of order to send a request, through you, to the church as a whole, asking for the prayers of the Saints, that He who is both willing and able to give more than we can ask or expect, will be pleased to open up ways and afford us means whereby these precious souls may be the more readily approached with this latter-day message.

We have found that the chief difficulty lies in the fact that there is not at the present time a French translation of the Inspired Version of the Bible, their present translation very often contradicting the King James Translation. This, coupled with the fact that we are unable to present to them either the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants in their own language (the only one they understand), renders it doubly difficult and almost impossible, as some of the missionaries can testify, to make any headway in the work to which they have been assigned.

May the Saints who read this hear in it the pleading voice of a little band of workers, who are earnestly seeking God's help, in their fervent desire to see this grand and glorious work proceed, and its power and influence felt in every part of his vineyard.

Will you join with us in prayer, remembering our needs, before his throne, while we rest assured of success?

Yours in the spread of the gospel,

O. L. WEAVER.

Pertle Springs Reunion

The most spiritual ever held in that place.

The joint reunion of Independence, Kansas City, and Holden Stakes at Pertle Springs closed Sunday evening, August 28. It is generally conceded to have been the most spiritual reunion of these held in the past four years.

The daily program was as follows: Young people's prayer service, 6.45; general prayer service, 8.30; school, class period beginning at 10 a. m. The following subjects were presented: church doctrine, church history, women's work, temple builders, vacation school, and kindergarten. Lecture at 11 o'clock. The afternoons, excepting Sundays, were given to recreation. Special music and song service at 7.30, followed by sermon at 8 p. m.

Thursday, August 25, was known as Farmers' Day. The Johnson County Farm Agent and a member of the Agricultural Extension Department of the State University occupied the eleven o'clock lecture hour and the evening hour. A motor tour of the surrounding country was made by a number of reunionists in the afternoon. This included a truck load of happy young and near-young people.

The preaching was by the following ministry: D. J. Krahl, R. V. Hopkins, D. T. Williams, John W. Rushton, M. A. McConley, F. A. Smith, J. A. Tanner, and W. S. Macrae.

As a result of a special effort on the part of those in charge and a good response on the part of the people, the prayer services developed a high spiritual standard. We consider that the special feature of the reunion. The unusual power displayed in the preaching of the word was quite in harmony with the tone of the prayer services.

Meals were served cafeteria style in the Pertle Springs Hotel dining room.

At a business session held near the close of the reunion it was voted to refer the matter pertaining to future reunions to the conferences of the respective stakes.

FRED A. COOL, for Press Committee.

Northern California Reunion

One of the most spiritual and best attended reunions ever held in that district.

The above reunion, which as usual was held at Irvington, began Thursday, August 11, and closed Sunday, August 21; hence it has now passed into history, and with the reputation of having been the best in every way that was ever held in the district. From this the reader will see that the motto of the district is, "Stamp improvement on the wings of time."

An annual reunion has been held for some time and Irvington has been the place for the last fifteen years. It has become a question of "Give us room that we may dwell"; hence there is talk of getting another place, since we have outgrown the capacity of the town. It is no longer able to provide accommodation for the numbers who come. We must seek some other location, a place which can provide room for our growing size and strength.

The writer arrived on the grounds early on the first morning of the gathering. Already there were quite a number in camp, although no service was held until night. I had the opportunity of preaching, but having traveled all the previous night en route from Fresno, I suggested a prayer meeting. Having come so early, I had preached three sermons before any other minister came. Evangelist F. G. Pitt was the next preacher, later W. A. Brooner arrived, and on Monday President Smith made his advent. Elder C. W. Hawkins, the district president, was already on the grounds when I put in my appearance. Those already mentioned were the only General Conference appointees in attendance. Indeed, we may say there was a dearth of ministers. I preached more than at any previous gathering of the kind, altogether seven sermons; while Brother Pitt preached rather more than I did.

One thing regretted by all was the absence of Elder H. J. Davison, the first vice president of the district. He was absent because of an attack of rheumatism which detained him at his home in Stockton.

Those who were in attendance did yeoman service. President Smith spoke four times; three times on the subject of stewardships, and once on his travels in Asia and Europe. Besides these larger efforts he made a most excellent talk to the principal meeting of the Women's Department, as did also Brother Pitt. Over this meeting, Sister Smith, who attended her husband, presided with ability, dignity, and grace. Elder Brooner spoke twice and Bishop Ingham and Elder J. D. White once each. On the whole the preaching was of a high order, as were also the prayer meetings.

While I would not wish to say the young people had less recreational pleasure, for I am sure they had not, yet I am certain they were more spiritual. Their prayer meetings reached a much higher point than ever before, both in fervor and faithfulness. Much latitude was allowed regarding the age of those who attended and participated, with evident advantage to the meetings, and that, too, without infringement on the rights of the young people. It was very noticeable that the spirit of the young people's prayer meeting, which was the first meeting of the day, was transferred to the larger meeting of the adults. Indeed, the latter seemed to take up the worship of God where it was left by the young folk.

In addition to the above the social feeling generally was very fine. One of the young sisters said to the writer, "I have got acquainted with more young people than ever before." One of our leading church officials said to me once, "I have attended reunions in California, more or less, for many years, and I have noticed that sociability grows less every year." How far this is really true I am unable to say. Of one thing I am certain, the social spirit was better this year than hitherto. Just here I am led to question, Are we feeling the effects of the last General Conference? Are we profiting by the special services held for the young people in Zion? Evidently we are.

Last year Brother J. T. Smith, jr., took the place of Sister M. A. Saxe as superintendent of the district Sunday school, while Brother Cowden was elected to fill the office of district secretary, formerly occupied by Brother John Lawn.

This year a still greater change was made in favor of the young. Elder J. D. White was elected to fill the office of district president, in which Elder C. W. Hawkins, the retiring official, has acted long and faithfully; while Elders W. H. Dawson and J. T. Smith, jr., were chosen to fill the places of H. J. Davison and A. J. Damron, the retiring vice presidents. Brother Dawson is already a field worker of the Religio Department, hence nearly all the official personnel of the district are young. The only ones of the old regime still in office are Sister Simpson, the president of the Women's Department, and Sister Lizzie Day, the secretary of the Sunday school. Those released were relieved because of age and consequent infirmities, while those last mentioned are still in good health.

Sister Christiana Waller was absent in the Hawaiian Islands. She is an accomplished musician and we wondered what effect her absence would make, since as district chorister she has had general charge of the musical activities of the district. She appointed Sister Birdie Clark to act in her place, and when she was absent, Sister Hazel Blohm filled the position. What shall I say of the reunion music? Splendid! No other word expresses it. The ladies named did excellent service.

Nine were baptized, five by Brother Pitt, three by Elder John F. Wiles, and one by the writer. These made a total of twenty-three that I know of being baptized in the district in the month of August.

Usually there have been three on the press committee, and as a rule Brother Davison and I have done most of the work. This time James Lawn, W. H. Dawson, E. E. Hartough, and L. E. Harris assisted me. We reported the reunion to twenty-one daily papers. Another phase of the press committee work is to keep count of the attendance. The figures show ninety-three tents, including four service tents, and thirty rooms. The tents contained two hundred and ninety-two lodgers, the rooms one hundred, while thirty-three camped in autos—a total of four hundred and twenty-five. Besides these, there were others who came and went continually. The largest attendance was at the Friday night concert, August 19, when five hundred and fifty people were present.

ALMA C. BARMORE, for Press Committee.

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA.

Norfolk, Nebraska, Wants Visitors

There is a small band of Saints here and we especially request that missionaries, elders, and scattered Saints who are likely to be passing through will kindly note the following names and get in touch with any or all of us: H. Carmody, Louise Van Alstin. The local telephone directory will give the street addresses of both, as well as the writer.

Our place of meeting is at Brother H. Carmody's, 204 North Cottonwood Street. We have Sunday school at 9.45 a. m., preaching at 11 a. m., sacrament service the first Sunday of each month at 11 a. m.

Brethren W. M. Self, F. S. Gatenby, Patriarch Carlile, E. E. Long, C. D. Smith, Carl Self, C. M. Sodersten, and others have given us timely aid and encouragement the past year. Our numbers are increasing by baptism and members moving in and we trust to have a branch organization at no distant time.

We will welcome to the best of our ability all visiting elders and Saints.

Sincerely, yours in bonds,

F. E. COCHRAN.

Utah-Idaho Reunion Well Attended

Estimated that ninety-five per cent were present at every session.

The joint reunion of the Utah and Idaho Districts adjourned their ten days of sessions on Sunday night, August 28. This was the first attempt of these districts to hold a joint reunion, and if dependence is to be placed upon the statements made by those who were in attendance, it was a success. With but one or two exceptions, everyone felt well repaid for his expense and effort.

At the business meeting of the reunion, those present voted about four to one to meet next year in joint reunion at the same place, Lava Hot Springs, Idaho; however, this matter was referred to the conferences of both districts for final action.

The meetings were all well attended and it was estimated that ninety-five per cent of those on the grounds were present at every session. The finest meeting each morning was a prayer meeting, most of which were very excellent, followed by two class periods of forty-five minutes each, at which heredity and eugenics, Seven Laws of Teaching, Hygiene and Sanitation, and story-telling were taught; after this a lecture or sermon was usually delivered, or round table discussion had. Each alternate afternoon was given over to recreation and departmental work. Volley ball, indoor baseball, and swimming were the chief recreational activities. The latter was especially favored by both young and old.

Of the ministry there were present L. G. Holloway, R. L. Fulk, R. E. Davey, S. S. Holm, M. A. Etzenhouser, together with local men from the various branches from both districts.

The people of Lava Hot Springs and the State Park were very generous in their treatment of the visitors, and gave a very pressing invitation for us to hold our reunion there next year.

M. A. ETZENHOUSER, President Utah District.

The Independence Picnic

Monday, September 5, Labor Day, will be long remembered by the Saints of Independence, two thousand of whom on that day participated in the largest picnic and field day ever held in the city.

The Religio Department in Zion, under the active direction of Field Worker John A. Gardner, is responsible for the initiation of this effort. The superintendents of each of the six Religio locals in the city were appointed a committee to work out the details, and it is to their industry and cooperation the success of the undertaking in large measure must be credited. Brother Henry Stahl, the genial though somewhat staid superintendent of the Stone Church Religio, was master of ceremonies. Dressed in sport clothes and armed with a big megaphone, he was the central figure around which all the exercises revolved. And he did his part well.

First of all, the grounds selected for the picnic were ideal. They were on the 70-acre tract of land, recently purchased by the Order of Enoch, which lies just south and west of and adjoining the fair grounds. Part of this tract is covered with virgin timber, and these large trees made plenty of shade to accommodate all the picnickers, though there were enough open spaces to permit a ball game and other forms of recreation. The grounds are supplied with water from the city mains, and are within easy walking distance of the street car.

The committee had a tent in the grove, from which were dispensed refreshments, "eats and drinks," and from the eagerness with which the picnickers stood, sometimes three deep, waiting to be served, one could not help being impressed with the thought that it was a popular place. The profits from the stand all went to the Religio. There was also a popcorn stand, which did a rushing business under one of the big trees. A percentage of the gross receipts of this concession was turned over to the Religio. The money thus collected was used in defraying the expenses incurred, for lumber, for rope for the five big swings, for the prizes awarded, etc.

The thing which made the picnic such an unqualified success undoubtedly was the fact that there were so many who showed their interest by their presence, and by the large number who took part in all the games, races, and contests. The spirit of sportsmanship must be cultivated among our people. It is the mission of the Religio to offer opportunities for such development. The Religio in Zion has accepted the responsibility and the response to its first effort in this direction is indeed gratifying and encouraging.

The contests and field exercises were all marked by the absence of any hard feelings whatever, which is perhaps more remarkable when it is taken into consideration that this is the first time our people from the different branches here ever got together in a field day of this kind. All decisions were taken as a matter of course, though from the expressions observed on the faces of some defeated contestants we feel to predict a greater effort to win next time.

One of the best exhibitions of friendly feeling was observed during and immediately following the baseball game. The visiting team, from Holden Stake, was well organized, and the members worked together like parts of a well-oiled machine. The members of the Independence team had never all played together. Hence, the Holden boys won the game with a score of nine to nothing. Yet, in the face of adversity, which included several obviously "rotten" decisions by the umpire, the Independence players kept up their spirits and smiled to the last. We learn, however, that Manager E. J. Smith has secured a return engagement with the Holden team and that he is quite optimistic as to the result of the second game. Experience, they say, is the best teacher. This game taught the Independence boys the value of organization. The Holden team worked with and efficiently supported its battery—pitcher and catcher, brothers—which was responsible for the shut-out. And the spirit shown by them and their stake president, Elder D. J. Krahl, was commendable.

Small boys are said to always have the "right of way" at every picnic, but at this one fully as many young men took part in and enjoyed the contests and sports as did their smaller brothers and sons. And the best of it was that the little folks seemed to thoroughly appreciate the efforts put forth by their seniors. The same, of course, should be said of the girls and young ladies, who entered whole-heartedly into the fun.

But the young weren't out there alone. Many grandparents were in attendance, and none of them appeared to be lonesome or ill at ease. Conspicuous among the older men of the church, and just as enthusiastic as any of their younger brethren, were noticed Elder Joseph Luff and Bishop E. L. Kelley; while President Elbert A. Smith, Apostles J. W. Rushton and Paul M. Hanson, Bishop James F. Keir, and others of the general ministry were present.

Towards the latter part of the afternoon a halt was called in the contests while Elder John W. Rushton spoke for ten minutes to a very interested audience. We have not space to print his entire talk, but a summary of what he said follows:

"The obtaining of victory in the various contests is incidental. The chief thing is the cultivation of comradeship, which through the instrumentality of sport and mutual pleasure can be secured better than through any other means. Especially is this demonstrated in the history of the Anglo-Saxon people. In the reading of the newspapers and magazines one cannot help but feel that the widening of the realm of sport to include other nations, such as France, India, Japan, as well as the various dominions of the British Empire, with Great Britain and the United States augurs better days, making for mutual understanding, peace, and prosperity.

"It has been noted that one of the great misfortunes in the life of the German people was an absence of the home spirit as the Anglo-Saxon people understand the term, and humor and sport; and if sportsmanship had been cultivated in the German peoples so that they would have developed teams which could engage in contests with other nations, in all probability the tragedy of the war beginning in 1914 and closing so disastrously for them on November 11, 1918, never would have occurred. It has been remarked by some one that if people can play together, they can the better work together. We, therefore, hope that the authorities of the various departments of the church, particularly of the Religio Department, in this and other places, will give earnest consideration to this aspect of our communal life and cultivate a spirit of sportsmanship, so that in our religion we may even play as well as work to the glory of God and the good of our fellows."

This picnic was not exclusively a Religio picnic. It was under the direction of the combined Religio locals of Independence, but the Sunday schools and branches all joined with the Religio to make it a success. Religio recreational functions should not be exclusive. They should be inclusive. They should be for all, not for a few. We believe the most important thing the Religio can do at present is to prepare its officers and members to take care of the social and recreational needs of the branch. Obviously this phase of our work has been neglected. We need leaders, young men and young women consecrated to the task of directing the recreational activities of our boys and girls. Their demand for recreation will be supplied by some organization; why not by the Religio? And the Religio is the only medium in our organization by which these leaders can be developed.

We give this particular and extended account of the first Religio picnic held in Independence, as it marks the beginning of real constructive work on the part of the Religio locals in Zion. We feel sure Religions throughout the country will be interested in learning what is being done in Independence.

For the benefit of those who may not have seen a previous announcement regarding the publishing of our new Rules for the Operation of the Religio Department, we will say that they are now on sale by this office. They will be sent post-paid to anyone upon receipt of request. The price is five cents each, or fifty cents by the dozen. Stamps in small denominations will be accepted. Every Religio worker should have one of these. Address The Religio Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

HOWARD W. HARDER, General Secretary.

BRANT, MICHIGAN, August 30, 1921.

Editors Herald: On Saturday and Sunday, August 20 and 21, there was a two-day meeting held at South Brant, Michigan. Friday evening, Brother Umphrey preached. Saturday morning we organized with the district presidency and Brother Ellis in charge. Sister Azel Seymore was chosen organist; Sister Floy Cheney, chorister; and Brother Umphrey, press committee.

Prayer meeting at 7.30 was in charge of Brother Bailey, and he preached at 10.30. Dinner was served at 12. Two o'clock preaching was by Brother Umphrey, and at 3.30 by Brother Falconer. We had a round table talk at 5 o'clock, in charge of Brother Matthew Umphrey. Supper was served at 6 o'clock and after that we had preaching by Brother Ellis at 8 o'clock.

On Sunday morning, there was a priesthood meeting at 7.30 in charge of Brother Ellis, and at 9 o'clock the prayer meeting was in charge of Brother Bailey. The Women's Department occupied from 10.30 until the noon hour. After dinner John Wade gave a talk on the Religio and Sunday school work. Brother Syckles preached at 2 o'clock and Brother Umphrey at 3.30. Supper was served at 5.30 and evening preaching was by Brother Ellis.

The speakers all did well, and an enjoyable time was had by all. We feel the Lord blessed us in our efforts.

FLOY B. CHENEY.

BELL RAPIDS, ONTARIO, September 2, 1921.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I last wrote, but I still enjoy the HERALD. It seems as though it grows better and contains so many articles of great interest. Being isolated from church privileges, my husband and I read the HERALD and study our Sunday school lesson together on Sunday, which strengthens us in the gospel we both so dearly love.

It is encouraging to read of the way the Lord's work is advancing and the blessing he bestows upon his people.

I would like to ask the Saints to pray for me that I may become strong and well, as I have been suffering from anemia for the past ten months. I know God can restore me to health again, for he has blessed me with health before.

My earnest prayer is for the advancement of his beautiful gospel of salvation and his people, and that we all may prove faithful to the end.

Sincerely in gospel bonds,
MOUNT CLEMENS, MICHIGAN.

MOLLY ROHLIG.

A Request for Prayers

Will you kindly request the Prayer Union and the Saints generally, through the SAINTS' HERALD, to pray to our heavenly Father that our daughter, Doris Derby, may be healed of what all the physicians who have examined her pronounce an incurable malady? She has received help from the administration of the elders whenever they have been called upon, but she is still in a very dangerous condition. She has musical talents above the ordinary, and has promised to consecrate them to the church and is very desirous of being restored to health and strength, so that she may devote her services to the music department of the church.

In gospel bonds, your brother and sister,
SELKIRK, ONTARIO.

M. F. DERBY.

SOME NEW ARRANGEMENTS IN INDIAN WORK

(Continued from page 868.)

Elder P. R. Burton, recently of Nauvoo, will work out from Walthill, Nebraska, among the Omahas and adjoining tribes of Indians.

Similar word comes from Elder R. W. Davis, who has been laboring in the Soo country of northern Michigan.

Altogether, the line-up for work among our Lamanite friends looks propitious and encouraging. We shall watch developments with interest.

E. D. M.

Church News

The military funeral of Sergeant H. E. Gold, who was killed in action in France in the World War, was held from the Stone Church at Independence at 3 p. m. on Sunday, the 11th. Elder Walter W. Smith was the speaker. The local ex-service men attended in uniform, as well as the Boy Scouts. There was a very large attendance at the church and a procession to the cemetery extending many blocks. Brother Gold was beloved by all. During the time when our men were sent to the Mexican border and a branch organized among the church lads there, Elder Gold was one of the leaders.

Bishops B. R. McGuire and J. F. Keir left Independence for Lamoni on the morning of the 12th, on church business.

President F. M. Smith returned from his trip to the West on the 9th, and after spending a few days here will proceed to Lamoni to deliver the address at the opening of Graceland College on the 16th.

The organized classes of young people in Zion are seeking to raise a fund of about $400 to pay the expenses of some one to the class in religious education at Graceland College. About half the solicitors have reported and prospects for success are favorable.

A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the General Sunday School Department, was in Independence on the 10th in connection with the work of his office. A meeting was held with E. D. Moore and M. H. Siegfried, members of the general executive council of the Sunday school. Elder Carmichael plans to care for this work for the time being by giving his evening hours to it, with the assistance of good stenographic help. He will in no way neglect his responsibility of superintendent of schools in Lamoni.

Bishop I. A. Smith returned from Deselm, Illinois, where he had been investigating the damage done to the local church building at that place. Some unknown miscreants had taken a panel out of the door and entering the place had smeared the walls, carpets, and organ with what appeared to be transmission grease. The Saints of the community are excellent people, and the community is made up of a good type. Apparently the opposition is confined to a few of the more irresponsible among the young people. Counsel has been secured, and a reward has been offered by the State for the apprehension of the miscreants.

A. E. McKim, publicity manager, has returned from his trip in the West and is caring for the work of his office.

Former Assistant Historian Goes to Colorado

After a year at the University of Wisconsin as an instructor in the department of economics and taking work leading to the degree of doctor of philosophy, Heman Hale Smith, former assistant church historian, will spend the coming year with the Colorado State University at Boulder. He is to take over the classes of the head of the department of economics and sociology, who is to have a year's leave of absence.

In addition to this he will continue his research work for the University of Wisconsin, which he has pursued during the past summer in connection with his work in the Middle West as special agent for the United States Employment Service.

After his year with the Colorado University he will return to Wisconsin to complete his work there, requiring one more year.

He has just completed manuscript for a fifth volume of church history, covering the period 1891-1914, including biographies of about twenty-two men called to the leading quorums during that period.

Ministerial Registration in Canada

The First Presidency are writing to the various branch presidents in Ontario, directing them to send to Bishop McLean the list of their local men, so that they can keep them registered. This applies to all men who, by virtue of their office and calling, have the right to perform marriages. All local men who, by virtue of their office, should have this right, should report to their local branch president and he will take care of the registration in the prescribed way.

Elder E. D. Moore has continued to suffer from the aftermath of his accident. The accident itself did not prove very serious, but a week after the accident his heart was seriously affected and he has suffered for over a week with trouble in the sciatic nerves. It has caused him a great deal of pain every night for more than a week, beginning the night of August 31. However, he has been at his desk since September 7, preparing copy for Autumn Leaves and HERALD.

There have been ten baptisms at Niagara Falls, New York, since the June conference. Elder George W. Robley also reports fine services and good interest.

The issues of the One, the priesthood paper, were mailed on the 10th, for the months of May, June, July, and August.

MISCELLANEOUS

Consecrated Help Wanted

A number of architectural designers and draftsmen will be required to complete the working drawings for the auditorium, and it is hoped that the necessary help will be found among the membership. If interested, correspond with the church architect, Henry C. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Choirs of Chatham District

Bring your Winnowed Anthems, Numbers 5 and 6, also Hymnals and Praises, to the conference September 23, 24, and 25. G. Orlow Coburn, music director.

Music Institute

There will be a musical institute held at Glover, Michigan, Saturday and Sunday, September 24 and 25. This is the first of its kind to be held in the district and we hope to have all the music lovers present. Perhaps we will not be able to make this meeting what we would like to, but we hope to create within the bosom of every young person a greater desire to cultivate this wonderful gift. Come prepared to assist in every way you can and have your minds in a receptive condition that you may take away many good things that others bring.

Yours for a singing district,
B. H. DOTY,
Chorister, Central Michigan District.

Conference Notices

Toronto, at Toronto, Ontario, Soho Street church, October 7, 8, and 9, 1921. At 10 a. m. Friday, organization, followed by prayer service; 2 p. m., Sunday school convention; 7.30 p. m., program: ten-minute addresses by heads of departments, music, and readings. Saturday, 10 a. m. and 2 p. m., business sessions of conference. Sunday, prayer service at 9, preaching at 11.15, 3, and 7. Sunday school at 10.30 a. m. Toronto District elders will meet in quorum at 1 p. m. Priesthood meetings at 4.15; Women's Department at same hour. Election of officers and selection of delegates to General Conference. Please send delegate credentials and branch reports to secretary before September 30. Address 341 Shaw Street, Toronto, Ontario. G. E. Harrington, president; Floralice Miller, secretary.

Central Michigan, at Beaverton, September 29 to October 2. September 29 will be occupied by the young people. September 30, business sessions of the different departments. At 10 a. m., October 1, will be the regular business session. Secretaries of branches and Sunday schools, please see that your reports are sent in time. According to previous resolutions that the branches sustain the conference, send provisions and money to Brother Herman Cullet, Beaverton, Michigan. No charges for meals. A big crowd is expected. Matthew Umphrey, president, Bentley, Michigan.

New York, at Buffalo, October 1 and 2. This is an educational conference. Saturday, beginning at 9 a. m., will be devoted to the priesthood, with the exception of the evening which will be given over to an entertainment under the direction of the Sunday school and Religio. Anna M. Lloyd, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo. George W. Robley, president.

Holden Stake, including departments, at Grandview, Missouri, October 14, 15, and 16, convening 2 p. m. on the 14th. Holden Stake Presidency.

Northwestern Ohio, at Bradner, October 8 and 9. All desiring to come, go either to Toledo or Fostoria; take Hocking Valley Railroad, or the Toledo, Fortena, and Findley Electric to Bradshaw. All are welcome. Come. Three blocks from station. William Kimball, secretary.

Coordinate conference of Clinton, Missouri, District, Mapleton, Kansas, on October 14, 15, and 16. Edward Rannie, president.

Spring River, at Nowata, Oklahoma, October 8 and 9. John C. Virgin, secretary, 114 South Roane Street, Webb City, Missouri.

Far West, with Guilford Branch, Guilford, Missouri, October 8 and 9, first meeting 9 a. m. on the 9th. R. S. Sal-yards, president, 517 North Twenty-second Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Convention Notices

Chatham Sunday school will hold convention some time during the conference September 23, 24, and 25. Be on hand for the opening session at 10 a. m. on the 23d. Lena Ted-ford, secretary.

Conference Minutes

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—August 9, on reunion grounds at Bellingham, Washington, district officers presiding. Reports from all district officers. Treasurer's report showed balance of $13.86. Bishop's agent reported total receipts of $4,588.26, including tithes, offerings, consecrations, and funds for auditorium. Balance on hand $19.48. Branch statistical reports showed for Seattle 357, gain 1; Centralia 197, gain 4; Bellingham 71, gain 4; Roslyn 37; New Westminster 98; Chilliwack 47, loss 5; nonresident 24, gain 17; disorganized branches 47, total of 878 for district, with net gain of 21. Five elders reported. A report of the tent fund showed an accumulation of $202.02. John Hartnell appointed as a committee to procure designs and prices of an auditorium tent. Request from Centralia Branch that church authorities be petitioned to locate a missionary in the south end of the district was adopted. Also that George H. Davis be ordained a priest, which was approved, and the brother at once ordained. Orville L. Oppelt, of the same branch, was recommended by the presidency to be ordained to office of elder, and same granted, subject to ratification of said branch. Wilford W. Powers was recommended to be ordained a teacher, by the Seattle Branch, which was granted. Elders J. M. Terry and S. S. Smith were elected president and vice president respectively. F. W. Holman, secretary. Hugh A. Sprague elected for appointment by the bishopric as agent, John Hartnell resigning. Harold Premo elected member library board. Melva Ward elected chorister. Irene Emslie elected member auditing board for three-year term. Centralia designated as the place for holding the February conference, date left to discretion of district officers. F. W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—Met at Fanshawe, Oklahoma, August 5, 6, and 7, with District President J. Arthur Davis in charge. Friday was given over to the Sunday school. Conference business session 10 a. m. Friday. It voted to raise funds to buy a tent to be used by the missionaries of the district the coming year. Following names recom-mended for ordination and approved by the conference: D. C. Clevenger, elder; O. Norick, priest; B. F. Brown, elder. The conference was well attended and the good spirit was enjoyed by all present. Next confer-ence to be at Henryetta, Oklahoma. Time left to president and secre-tary. C. G. Smallwood, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

FERGUSON.—Verna May, eldest child and only daughter of Brother and Sister M. A. Ferguson, died at Holden, Missouri, August 22, 1921, aged 15 years, 3 months, and 25 days. She was a girl of high attain-ments, and an active worker in the church; was a member of the senior class in high school, and loved by all who knew her. Funeral service was held from the church. Leaves father, mother, and 4 brothers of the immediate family, besides many relatives and friends to mourn her early departure. Sermon by D. J. Krahl. Remains were laid to rest in the Saints' Cemetery at Holden.

BETZ.—Catherine Betz was born April 3, 1846, at Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania. She was the daughter of George and Elizabeth Reed Betz. In 1890 she was baptized, L. R. Devore performing the rite. Sister Betz was a resident at the Kirtland Home and removed to the Holden Home for the Aged, April 2, 1918, where she died August 23, 1921. Her early life was spent at Canton, Ohio, where she was highly respected. She leaves a brother, Otis Betz, of Cleveland, Ohio; a sister, Mrs. Myrtle Young, of Canton, Ohio, and a nephew, Arthur Benton Betz, of Cleveland, Ohio. Funeral service was held in the chapel of the Home at Holden, Missouri, August 24. Sermon by F. A. McWethy. Burial in the Saints' Cemetery, Holden, Missouri.

CARPENTER.—Mary, was born in Belmont County, Ohio, January 23, 1838, the daughter of Robert Edwards and Mary Wortman Edwards; married to John Carpenter, who preceded her in death ten years ago. One son was born to this union, Robert Carpenter. In the year 1900 was baptized by Elder Shinn at Goose Creek, West Virginia. Lived at Kirtland, Ohio, previous to her coming to Holden, being one of the occu-pants of the home there, coming to the Holden Home April 2, 1918. July 19, 1921, she was sent to the State Hospital at Nevada, Missouri, for special treatment. Her death occurred at that place Monday, August 22, 1921, aged 83 years, 6 months, and 29 days. Funeral service in chapel of Holden Home, August 24, 1921. Sermon by F. A. McWethy. Burial in Saints' Cemetery.

THOMAS.—Delbert Francis, son of Brother and Sister Walter Thomas, was born July 27, 1911, at Farwell, Michigan. Baptized April 24, 1921. Met death from drowning in Saint Clair River, September 3, while fish-ing with his father. Leaves father, mother, one sister, 3 brothers, 6 uncles, 6 aunts, grandfather and grandmother, with many other rela-tives and playmates. Funeral from Saints' church, Port Huron, Michi-gan; sermon by Fred W. Cadow.

ROBINSON.—Sister Jane Ann Robinson was born June 15, 1845, at Montreal, Canada. Married John A. Robinson, October 20, 1863, at Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada. Moved later to Peoria, Illinois, and in 1887 to Independence. Her husband died April 12, 1902, and on Sep-tember 8, 1921, she passed on to join him. Two daughters, Sisters Jen-nie Yingling and Belle James, and two sons, Brethren Wallace N. and John A. Robinson, survive. Baptized at Montrose, Iowa, May 24, 1870. Funeral at the home in Independence. Sermon by Joseph Luff, W. W. Smith being in charge. The family, the church, and the neighborhood mourn. Every sphere in which she moved is blessed with the halo and fragrance of her godly life and saintly deportment. Death, as she felt its approach, filled her with holy rapture and joyous anticipation, and she peacefully fell into its embrace.

WHITE.—Private Meredith White was born December 25, 1901, Kan-sas City, Missouri. Baptized September 3, 1910. At the time of the declaration of war he became a member of home guards and later en-listed for overseas service with the Third Regiment, Company C, 140th Infantry. Meredith served as a runner and was trained in signaling. On the fatal morning of September 26, 1918, he was one of a company of two hundred and fifty who made the supreme sacrifice, fighting for seven days, and only eighteen of the company survived. His body was shipped to Kansas City and services were held in Central Church, con-ducted by J. A. Tanner, August 21, before a large concourse of friends. Surviving him are father, mother, 2 brothers, and 2 sisters. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

LEAT.—William James Leat was born March 18, 1884, in Exeter, England. Died September 6, 1921, at the home of his mother, Mrs. J. W. George, 512 North Thirteenth Street, Kansas City, Kansas. Bap-tized May 4, 1893, by William Newton. Survived by mother, 2 brothers, and 3 sisters. Funeral services conducted from Armstrong church by J. A. Tanner. Burial in Woodlawn Cemetery, Kansas City, Kansas.

STEVENS.—Nora Stevens, wife of Jesse Stevens, died at her home in Scranton, Pennsylvania, August 24, 1921. She was born in the township of Newtown, Lackawanna County, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1891. She was baptized when she was eight years of age. She leaves a husband and five small children, a mother, two brothers, and one sister. Fu-neral held in the Scranton, Pennsylvania, church, Elder E. B. Hull the speaker, assisted by Elders Richard Hawkins and Earl V. Wagner; in-terment in the Dunmore, Pennsylvania, cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Mon-day morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

True Religion Appeals to Reason	865
Healers of the Sick	866
More Believers in Healing of Sick	867
Think Well of Others	867
Some New Arrangements in Indian Work	868
President Smith Returns to Independence	868
Former Assistant Historian Goes to Colorado	886
Ministerial Registration in Canada	886

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

The Middle of the Road, by A. H. Christensen	869
--	-----

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

The Employers and the Y. W. C. A.	871
The Jews Take Up Healing	871

THE FORUM:

The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 3, by T. W. Williams	872
The Saints Shall Be Changed, by D. B. Perkins	874
Why Condemn the Saxophone? by John A. Robin-son	875

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Benjamin R. McGuire—Barbara W. Milligan—Bertha L. Mader—Maude Peak Parham.	876
--	-----

LETTERS

W. H. Walling—Fred W. Cadow—James E. Bishop—O. L. Weaver—Fred A. Cool—Alma C. Barmore—F. E. Cochran—M. A. Etzen-houser—Howard W. Harder—Floy B. Cheney—Molly Rohlig—M. F. Derby	879
---	-----

MISCELLANEOUS

886

YOUR BIG OPPORTUNITY

Last Call

You know, of course, that you are not likely to start to school when you are old—at least few people do.

And you know that every time you defer beginning your course you add to the improbability of your EVER starting to college.

So when we talk about your "Big Opportunity" and call your attention to the dates on which you may make your upward start towards success, higher service, and greater efficiency, we are SAYING something that deserves your most earnest attention.

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday
September 15, 16, and 17

On these dates your "Big Opportunity" will look you squarely in the face. Will you grasp it? Will you have the vision to picture yourself a dozen years in the future? Will you be able to realize that if you are educated your chance to get on in the world and to be of the greatest service will be a thousand times better than it will be if you miss the opportunity for an education.

Of course you will: But—and here's the test—will you have the good JUDGMENT to do NOW the thing you ought to do, or will you wait and wait while your neighbor boy and girl make the temporary sacrifice and attend college, making the preparation essential for the work to be done.

WHAT DO YOU SAY?

DON'T LET NEGLECT FOOL YOU INTO FAILURE

THIS IS THE LAST CALL FOR THIS COLLEGE YEAR

Graceland College

Opens September 15

Lamoni, Iowa

THE SAINTS' RALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, SEPTEMBER 20, 1921

NUMBER 38

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

EDITORIAL

Some Intellectual Consideration of Immortality

There are many comforting conclusions to be reached from a mere intellectual viewpoint.

The three great themes of religion are: the existence of God; man's relation to his fellow man here on earth; and the hope of a life to come beyond the grave. The first two are naturally related. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"—John 4: 20.

The first two and the third are also interrelated, as belonging to things which are unseen, and because a desirable continued existence presupposes the existence of a Supreme Being, who administers justly to his children.

Practically every religion in the world has taught this continuance of existence. The most primitive form is ancestor worship and ghost worship. The more in harmony the teaching of the religion with the divine plan as laid down in the gospel, the more beautiful is the picture drawn as an ideal of the life to come.

The Egyptians emphasized so strongly the continued existence of the soul that they laid rather more emphasis upon death and the funeral than they did upon life. They taught the resurrection, as is clearly set forth in the book of the dead. The same is practically true of every people.

Plato brought forth some strong reasons for a belief that the soul is more durable than the body, and will continue to exist. Hence he argues the immortality of the soul, as set forth in the Apology and in Phaedo, and in other of his dialogues.

Now it is at once evident that the immortality of the soul cannot be proven, as can a problem in mathematics, for the simple reason that to establish it beyond a possibility of denial or question would require eternity. A similar problem exists with regard to evolution. According to the general theory it represents tremendous spaces of time, so that one writer declares there has been such a small change in man in over 500,000 years, we would have to go back more than a million years to find any prehuman type. (Elliott.) There is certain data upon which conclusions are based, but it is not proven beyond possibility of question.

There can be, and are, arguments brought forth as presented by Plato, which convinced fully many men of his time, and has convinced many men since then, that the soul is immortal. But it is significant to consider this universality of belief for the reason that it represents an inherent quality of humanity. It therefore presents tremendous interest for psychology.

Continuation of Divine Intelligence

Some have suggested that practically every other wish, except that of continuity of life, is supplied here. If there is a divine intelligence in the universe, why is it desired, if there is to be no means of ever fulfilling it?

Again, we note that the mind of man planned for the doing of things not to be done in old age or to-morrow alone, but far beyond the possibility of any ordinary life, or even an extraordinary life, such as is ascribed to Methuselah. As is quoted in Cato's Soliloquy, "It must be so, else whence this secret hope, this fond desire, this longing after immortality?"

Part of the argument may be based, either consciously or unconsciously, on a further statement ascribed to Cato in this poem: "If there is a God above us, and that there is all nature cries aloud through all her works, He must delight in virtue. And what he delights in must be happy. But when or where? This world belongs to Cæsar."

Another aspect of humanity is the intense longing for our loved ones who have passed away. To offer to such a bereaved one the most ideal heaven of which the mind can conceive, and yet never to see or know the loved one again; or offer, on the other hand, almost any condition in which their association or companionship would be continued, there would in most cases be but little hesitancy in the choice.

Part of the hope of immortality may be based upon selfish interests. But love is an element of the human heart which far transcends our worldly existence. Even those who have mocked in the presence of the death of a loved one will seek consolation from the Eternal One. Those who have denied may still doubt, but there is a hunger during the rest of life. That sorrow and the deep desire and longing after immortality may not reach its formulation until the death of a father, a mother, a companion, or child. But it is so general an experience that it cannot be denied.

Is It Selfish to Believe in Immortality?

Some question this belief in personal immortality, by declaring it to be selfish. It may be true that there is, with some, the desire simply to live. It may be and is true that in great sickness, or extreme old age, some are willing simply to seek rest. But this latter fact does not outweigh the keen desire to continue to live. It may in many instances be selfish, but this desire itself, this longing after immortality, as already pointed out, has evidential force.

But it is not necessarily selfish, for it may be, and often is, based on a desire for greater or further service.

No Mad Rush to Eternity

Sometimes the plea is made that Christians do not believe in a future life that is better than this one, for if they did they would at once commit suicide. But that by no means follows. We have been much surprised occasionally by hearing men much above the ordinary ability making that plea. A soldier does not desert his post and go home because it is unpleasant. He has a duty to perform, and until his captain releases him, and until he is ordered to come home, he will remain firm through storm and trials. If pure of heart, he will prefer some remote battlement with the deep knowledge that he is doing that which is right and pleasing to his heavenly Father, to the greatest joy of surroundings of which his mind can conceive, yet knowing that he has failed in his duty.

Further than that, the life to come is not necessarily better, and certainly better, as an idle condition. If fully convinced that a certain university is the best in the world, one will not send his infant son to that school, for he realizes that the child has yet many experiences through which to go in preparatory work before he is ready to enter. So it is true, both for this life, and the life to come. We have preparatory work to do, a condition to fit us for the glory of God. The wish alone certainly will not. Nor will death alone promote and prepare us. We must progress. We are placed here as a time of probation and preparation. How we use our time will necessarily affect our condition hereafter.

Numerous descriptions have been given from time to time of the conditions of the future existence, but while they are meager, and while some possess elements of superficial contradiction, there is still a fundamental unity. There is unity in the case of all those who say, "It has been given me to see, to know, concerning the life to come." All those who come with the force of a new revelation tell the same story. Life hereafter is not a tremendous change, but it is akin at first to our life here, and then a process of growth to better conditions.

Some would urge as a condition that we have not individual immortality, but that energy and matter is eternal and continues, and even urge that thought will continue, but not personality; that thoughts go on to affect others, as a vital force which has been thrown forth; but individuality is lost.

But we may note in passing that the Buddhists sought a Nirvana which was supposed at first to mean annihilation, but was not so in fact, because a closer study shows a paranirvana, and still beyond that amaha-para-nirvana, while there can be no existence beyond annihilation. We find, therefore, that Nirvana rather represents a merging of personal will with the divine than it does a loss of individuality. There is a great difference between the destruction of all personality, the merging of the spirit matter back into a general mass of spirit matter, or electrons, or atoms, and that unity for which Jesus prayed in the seventeenth chapter of John, "that they may be one, as we are one." One in purpose, one in desire for that which is good, one in suppressing selfish desire, one in seeking another's good, one in placing first the group or society, instead of first a selfish personal interest.

It is quite true that cooperation as individuals, as men and women, as human beings, or as spirits, represents great progress over the idea of another individuality, which would make the personal wish the supreme Alpha and Omega. Perhaps the song, and "our will be merged in thine," may to some indicate too much. There is a great difference between the loss of personality and knowing that which is good, between loss of identity and intelligent choice of the best.

There is a unity of truth, giving the fullest scope to the intelligence of which one is capable, so that given the same facts of evidence, they come to the same conclusion; and hence are united in purpose by voluntary choice; each one seeking the good of all and all seeking the good of each one.

Intelligence Has Elements of Immortality

Some modern scientists accept the theory of the conservation of matter and of energy and then deny immortality and continuity to that highest form of matter and energy, the human soul. Doctrine and Covenants 90 especially declares intelligence was not created or made, neither indeed can be. It is also true that intelligence is not destroyed, for it possesses the elements of immortality. Personality and individuality which reaches its highest inspiration in "That will be glory for me," and seeking only self-interest, is indeed a poor thing to be preserved. But a personality and individuality seeking the great common good, and service to all, is the finest flower of life of which we know and in itself presents a reason for the continuity of the human soul, in that it fulfills a higher function.

Continuity of any other thing, of particles of matter, and of spirit in the mass without identity, presents but a poor picture, compared to the beauty of the continuity of individual souls, one in purpose and spirit.

"One as We Are One"

Therein lies a difference between immortal life and eternal life. Immortal life is simply a life not mortal—a continued life. Eternal life is immortal life plus a continuous association with the Eternal One. It means more than simply to live. It means a life glorified by the presence of God. Intelligence developed to comprehend the things of God and his divine purposes.

A Summary

We shall refrain from discussing at length various reported communications with the dead. Some of them undoubtedly possess validity. That so many in different ages of the world, and under different circumstances, so report, is worthy of consideration, and would tend to argue at least something for continuity. This was ably presented by Sir Oliver Lodge several years ago, in his address under that heading, to the British Association for the Advancement of Science. But the reason for a belief in continued soul existence is based on further grounds than that alone.

First: There may be some arguments based on the reports of modern records of communication from the dead. But this alone is not fully conclusive.

Second: That which has been given to many men under wide variety of circumstance of time and place under careful test of inspiration, much of which is set forth in the Bible.

Third: The conviction of careful students of science as to the immortality of the soul. Men who are accustomed to weigh evidence, men who are cautious in their statements, still hold for immortality.

Fourth: The universal belief in the immortality of the soul among people everywhere.

Fifth: The hunger of the soul for life, and for a continued life.

Sixth: The human affection and love which far transcends this life would indicate an emotional continuity beyond human experience.

Seventh: Intellectual planning; a reaching for life, in which to do things far beyond the scope of any three score years and ten, or of any possible sojourn of mortality. The intellectual reaching out far beyond mortal scope.

Eighth: An intelligence in humanity clearly reaching beyond what can be derived in any material way, bearing testimony to "there is a spirit in man": an ability to see beyond the power of the eye and to hear beyond the power of the ear, as witness the telescope, microscope, telephone, wireless telegraphy, etc.

Ninth: The fact of inspiration in the discovery of great scientific laws as well as in the receiving of spiritual truths: Many scientists declare that the solution of their problem came from a power outside of self and as an inspiration. The fact that humanity is capable of perceiving this something outside of self argues for more than mortality in the life of man and presupposes the divinity in man.

Tenth: The concept of God. Man is really more akin to God who gives than to the beasts that take, as is pointed out by Robert Browning. On what premises could such a life as that of Jesus have been created out of man's experience? The idea of the Son of God, the perfect man; the life of Jesus, which after all transcends any other life of which we have any knowledge in history or tradition, the concept of God and of the life to come that the mind of man can grasp at all such thoughts, and the fact of their existence argues the kinship with the infinite.

Eleventh: Despite the tremendous amount of fraud of so-called seances, ancient and modern; despite the advantage which has been taken in the name of religion in ancient and modern times of the belief of trusting people; despite the doubts which arise in the minds of some because of a purely mechanistic system of measurement, because of a blindness in part, because of an assumed superiority in part; despite the hungry hearts of those who would believe, but because of long ridicule are unable to do so; despite everything that can be said, in the soul of man is planted deep the evidence of his kinship with the divine, and a longing for immortality. And a careful and critical examination of all the evidence in the case, laying aside all emotion, laying aside this inherent craving, laying aside the testimony of internal facts, and considering only the external, still brings the intellectual assurance of the truth of the answer to the theme, "If a man die, shall he live again?" The death of the body is not an end of life, but merely the open door to a wider existence. "If a man die, he shall live again."

To this true religion adds, not only shall he live again, but he may, if he will, live completely, in the presence of the divine, responding fully to every aspect of environment that is involved therein, of intelligence and of love.

S. A. BURGESS.

A New Epoch for Graceland

The dedication of the new building means the beginning of a new epoch in the career of our church college.

(Editorial Correspondence from Lamoni)

This is a time to pause and take account of ourselves. This new building being dedicated to-morrow represents a new epoch. Graceland has outgrown her old clothes, and the increase of college students, the increase in the lines of her service, more different kinds of training being undertaken means of necessity an increased faculty and increased facilities and equipment for work.

Two young men have come from Australia, one from Palestine, with several from Europe, that is, England and Germany. But these are especially for the classes in religious education. It will not be possible for another week to give an idea of the actual attendance in accurate figures. But the spirit of the hour is optimistic for the best year Graceland has ever had.

In the meantime, as one of the donors of Graceland expressed it, Graceland was established in a spirit of full consecration and has been continued in that spirit. And she is probably the only college started and continued so fully in that spirit.

Some in the past have been confused because Lamoni was at that time, when Graceland was started, the headquarters of the church, and a certain real estate man attempted therefore a boom, and tried hard to get the college in a certain section of Lamoni where he held land. Quite an effort was made to have the church, through its officers or the conference, accept that site. Some things were done in that effort to which some objected. But in fact the church officers went as far away from the proposed plat as they could and still remain in Lamoni.

There they found two widows owning land. These widows were neither of them out for the money, for they freely gave what they had; one, Sister M. Walker twenty acres, the other Sister M. A. Wickes six and two-thirds acres. Next to this land was forty acres owned by William A. Hopkins, president of the State Savings Bank; he gave one third and sold the remaining two thirds at a fair market value, and thus the land for the original plat was secured.

So far as we know, no one attempted to make money or a boom out of the land in that vicinity. The church attempted to sell lots to raise the money to help erect the college. Certainly these who gave the land did not do it for profit.

One of these, Sister M. Walker, told us recently that she had made up her mind that the land should be consecrated, and that if the church did not accept it for a college (she has always been greatly interested in the young people and their good) she would divide it into small parcels and give it to poor missionaries for homes. But she believed then, and still does, that its use as for a college meant a greater consecration and for the larger good of the church.

Sister Minnie A. Wickes is not represented, but while she lived she tried to help those in need.

The dedication exercises were successfully held on the evening of the 16th on the campus, the crowd attending exceeding any that ever attended a college function in Lamoni. The evening was clear and bright, but the wind blew, to the annoyance of speakers and hearers. Yet the occasion was auspicious and the program carried out as announced. We shall give details in this or the next number of the HERALD.

S. A. BURGESS.

Sunday School Teaching

Trained teachers who are also inspired are needed.

It is but rarely indeed that we appreciate the work done week after week by our Sunday-school teachers. What is taught in the Sunday school to-day is going to be the opinion held by the church a few years hence. The Sunday school is handling the work of religious education, and has a tremendous responsibility. Nor is this responsibility lessened by the fact that the Sunday school period is relatively short.

To meet the problem we must have teachers who are able to utilize to the fullest the short time at their disposal. Also we must have lessons properly prepared. The Sunday school has recognized that fact, and has appointed a board which is giving the matter very thorough consideration. As great care should be taken to have our Sunday school work adequately prepared as is the case with the lesson texts for the day schools. Eventually they should be bound and illustrated in a way that will compare favorably with other textbooks.

This means naturally that the lesson must be adapted to the age for which it is written. We now know definitely that the child is not simply a little man; there is need for us to adapt our work to his capacity and ability. There is need that the Sunday school lessons shall present properly the teachings of the church, for the lessons of to-day will be the ideas held by the church in the years soon to come. There should therefore be more adequate supervision by the church, and the lessons the best adapted for our needs, secured.

But having the lessons, the work of the Sunday school presents a wonderful possibility. A missionary goes out and speaks to a few hundred at a time. The Quarterlies prepared will reach from 45,000 to 60,000, and in a few years, with proper development, they will reach 100,000. If these texts are once properly prepared, it will be an easy matter to see that translations are made, and this will also be a help to our missionary work in foreign lands.

Such a set of lessons will begin with the youngest Sunday school child, leading through the beginner, primary, junior, intermediate, and senior grades, and then on into young people's classes and adult classes, so that the Sunday school becomes truly what it should be—a department of religious education for both young and old, and offers an opportunity for development almost without a parallel.

With this work properly organized, even though it represents but one hour a week, that one hour represents a total of 47,000 hours, which is the equivalent to over 3,000 people taking a full high school or college course in religious education, with class periods of fifteen hours a week.

But the work should not be confined to the single hour. The Religio study classes, the Women's Department, and other meetings for study should be taken into consideration, and especially should preparation be made outside of the Sunday school hour of the lesson, if the best results are to be achieved. If the church supervises the courses for young people and for adults there should also be courses available for the priesthood meetings and for the religious education class of Graceland College.

But if this is to be handled properly, the great question coming up again and again is, If proper lessons are prepared, who will teach them? How many trained teachers have we in the church? How many Sunday school teachers who feel that each Sunday is a new opportunity, even though the same theme be taught again and again, in the cycle of years, that each time it is a new problem and a new class. In teaching we are not teaching primarily any text, but primarily we are teaching children and grown people, striving to prepare them for better citizenship in the kingdom of God. This work cannot be done without inspiration, nor can it be done adequately without preparation.

The Sunday school and Religio have for many years maintained a normal department. It is now being administered at Graceland College, and offers a splendid opportunity. But the Religio has taken a step further, and in the senior Quarterly for the second quarter, this year submitted a series of lessons on Gregory's Seven Laws of Teaching. If you have not taken it up, this present Quarterly is a splendid opportunity for Sunday school teachers. This is a good beginning, and the work done in this course will be credited by the normal department, and will count as part of the work towards that diploma.

Still a diploma is only incidental. It may represent much or little. Our essential need is trained teachers, who will make the most of every minute before the class.

If the church can set as an ideal for the missionary arm, 20,000 converts before next General Conference, with the face of each turned Zionward, should not the Sunday school set for its ideal, 6,000 trained teachers before next General Convention, with the heart of each one filled with a desire to render a consecrated service?

Can we afford to have anything else but trained teachers for our work, who feel a sufficient interest to study the subject matter, and study their class, and seek both the knowledge of silver, and the wisdom of gold, to lay at the feet of the Master, for better service in his kingdom in this work of religious education?

S. A. B.

Bishop B. R. McGuire preached at the Stone Church in Independence on Sunday the 18th, and J. W. Rushton in the evening. At the afternoon prayer service a comforting manifestation of the Spirit was given Brother and Sister M. A. McConley, through Patriarch Ammon White. He spoke prophetically of their trip to Australia and assured them of God's care and protection, with blessings of health and strength. This, with a similar manifestation to Sister McConley at Kirtland, affords much joy over the goodness of God.

Off for Australia

As we write this, on the 19th, Apostle Myron A. McConley and wife and child are arranging to leave to-day for Denver, en route to their new appointment, Australia. The present itinerary is to stop briefly at the Hawaiian Islands, but not to include the Tahitian Islands. However, they will touch at Auckland, New Zealand.

Elder McConley and wife have had considerable foreign mission work already. From 1910 to 1914 they were in Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands; 1915-16, California; then in Hawaiian Islands till 1920, when they returned to the General Conference and he was ordained an apostle. Since then he has traveled extensively in the United States in pursuance of his work in the apostolic quorum, while his wife has resided in Independence. At Denver they will visit about a week with Sister McConley's parents.

In the appointments announced in this issue, J. W. Davis and wife are also to go to Australia, but we have learned no details of their plans for departure, except that efforts are being made to arrange for them to accompany Brother and Sister McConley.

Church News

President F. M. Smith was in attendance at the dedication of the new building at Graceland College on the 16th, delivering the address. He returned to Independence on the 17th.

Elder G. T. Griffiths arrived in Independence during the week-end, to be in attendance at the sessions of the joint council to be held this week.

Elder Richard J. Lambert, editor of the Ensign, was in Lamoni during the dedication of the new building and the opening exercises, also to attend the wedding of his niece, Christabelle Reese, of Chicago, who married Edwin S. Simmons, also of Chicago.

There appears a very fair statement with regard to our church in the Edmonton Bulletin of August 27 in a column article in a department edited by Miss M. H. Bryden. This column is the report of an address delivered by Mrs. M. Williams, who was born and raised as a Mormon in Utah and who has passed through the sorrows and hardships incident thereto. In her address she disclosed some of the secrets, she said, of the Mormon Temple. She ascribes the introduction of polygamy directly to Brigham Young. She states clearly the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the original church and as such has nothing to do with plural marriage. Brigham Young, she stated frankly, is an apostate of the church founded by Joseph Smith.

If some of our branches which do their own printing would like to secure a good cut for a front page of a small announcement sheet, they should write to C. W. Clark, 115 East Maynard Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, for a sample proof. It is mortised for insertion of the name of the church and other information desired.

Tawas City reports a splendid one-day meeting on September 11, with preaching by W. D. Ellis, B. H. Doty, M. Umphrey, and G. W. Burt. There was also a priesthood meeting where thirteen of the priesthood discussed topics of interest. Attendance at the afternoon preaching service reached 126.

The goddesses of finance and fame are strong attractions to young people and there are many worshipers among them who might otherwise be serving Christ.—J. C. Blaney.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

What Is the World Coming To?

By James E. Bishop

A survey of the question from the British Isles Mission.

In my younger days that question used to be raised in domestic circles upon the slightest provocation. But that question is now on the trembling lips of thinking men the world over, and an attempt to answer brings forth expressions of fear and great alarm.

Many years ago this church was warned that the enemy was combining, and evidences are found everywhere that the forces of darkness are utilizing the principles of solidarity and organization to bring about their evil and disastrous ends. It appears to me that the question of loyalty is no longer fundamental, for we have seen people remain true to their idols, even after they have been shattered before their very eyes. What we want is a clear analysis of human nature, thereby discovering the fundamental needs; and a philosophy of life built up on that analysis, and that given an actual demonstration by some group or groups. This is provided for in the gospel of Christ. No man knew men better than Christ. No program equals Christ's as a philosophy of life; and it remains for his people to give a demonstration of that philosophy.

To me it was very significant that the president of our church should, after his return from this country, select as a text, as a basis for a sermon to the most important congregation of Saints in the world, that prophetic statement uttered by his grandfather, that he who would not take up his sword to fight against his neighbor must needs flee to Zion for safety.

"Merrie England" No Longer

The time is upon us when there will be no safety outside of Zion. This is no longer "Merrie England." It is true that there are multitudes ordering their lives by the Epicurean philosophy, but perhaps at a decided lower level than Epicurus taught it, but their unholy joy will be short lived. The agents of the powers of darkness are stalking abroad and making disciples that are two-fold more the children of hell than before, and the churches are standing by discussing dry-as-dust details of metaphysics while the world about them is going to hell, pell-mell.

For the first time in my life I heard a Communist lecture on the town hall square in the city of Leeds, on August 12, 1921. He was an Englishman, by the name of Shaw, and of some educational standing. His usage of English was good. He was not inflammatory. He tried to reason his position out in the terms of cold logic, and I am persuaded that the majority were deceived. But it was easy to see that the basis and genius of their philosophy was red-hot coercion.

In the Yorkshire Post for August 13, we read that the Communist speakers in Sheffield harangued the crowd of listeners into a mob and seven hundred people made a rush on the town hall. They had a banner with the inscription, "Death is better than starvation." The revolution is not coming; it is here, gaining momentum each day. In the same paper we read that the great shipbuilding firms on the Clyde have decided to close down their works, because the operating expense will not permit them to compete with foreign firms. This will make more disciples for the Communist Party. We thought that the coal dispute was set-led and that there would be such a demand for coal that there would be steady employment for a long period of time; but in the great coal fields of Notts men are only working three and four days a week, and there are over a hundred mines that have not been opened since the strike ceased.

Anti-Christian Spirit Spreading

Dean Inge, in an article appearing in the Evening Standard for August 12, says the following:

"Of course there is no reason why a Christian should not belong to any decent party; in the last century some of the chief radicals were earnest Christians. But it is certain that revolutionaries have been increasingly hostile to religion. The Communists of 1871 were more anti-Christian than the leaders of the French revolution, and the followers of Marx have declared war against every kind of organized religion. Experience has proved that to attack private property without also destroying the family is to invite defeat, and it is impossible to destroy the family without destroying Christianity. The communists are, therefore, right in regarding religion as their chief enemy. This, however, does not prove that no kind of socialism is compatible with Christianity; there are many socialists who must be credited with honest religious convictions."

Communists Ready to Rule

The communist speaker told us that they were organized in proper shape to take over the government as soon as there was a sufficient breakdown in the present government to give them the advantage to step in. If this means anything it means this, that in "Merrie England" there is a secret political organization, composed of half-educated, deluded, smoke-and-beer-fogged-brained upstarts, with some of them having the scars of hell on their souls, ready to go to any extreme, only waiting for the psychological moment to use their coercive methods to seize the state and steal and loot all that they can find. One may object and say there are honest men among them. I say, no; their philosophy is dishonest and will not stand the slightest amount of criticism. It is psychologically impossible for an honest man to advocate and treasure a dishonest philosophy.

Problem of the Church

What is our problem as a church in relation to the above? We have to preach (declare under the Spirit of God his holy and righteous will to this generation) the gospel of Christ to all the world. If advertising will not bring the world to us, we must go to them, and Jesus said go. Jesus in his methods talked in the synagogue until he was thrown out. He talked to men on the wayside as they walked up and down the country. He talked in the market place. Wherever there was a human soul Jesus could also go and talk his message. He told his disciples to go into the highways and byways and preach the gospel.

What shall we preach? "Say nothing but repentance." But what does that involve? It means that the burden of our message shall be to call upon the world to repent. But how is that done? Surely not by a continuous repetition of the term. The term repentance involves, why? "For the kingdom of God is at hand." How? By confession, restitution and further application of other principles of the gospel of Christ. Every philosophy involves (skepticism excepted, perhaps) three things. 1. That something is wrong with present traditions and customs. 2. Man has it in him to achieve an utopia or promised land, or a better state and condition of life. 3. The setting forth of the method that is to be employed to realize that better condition. Socialists, communists, and educators of every type (nearly) tell us that there is something radically wrong with society, and we say that is so, and we also agree with them that there are ideals that can and should be attained. Saints! our ideal is the mightiest of the mighty; our ideal comprehends the most wonderful series of ideals that ever entered the mind of man, so please wake up and realize them and become the greatest power for good the world has ever seen. Seeing, therefore, that we are in agreement with various diagnoses made of humanity and are in entire (almost) disagreement (especially when we do our full duty and emphasize faith and repentance) on the point of the method of realization, I say that it is utterly impossible for any man to preach this gospel as a warning or as a witness, unless he has the ability to enter the ramification of the thinking of the atheist, infidel, agnostic, communist, religionist, or socialist or what not, and show beyond the shadow of the slightest doubt that the gospel of Jesus Christ comprehends all truth and is the remedy, without competitor, for all individual and social ills. When we as a ministry will be able to do that under the power of the Holy Spirit, that will be the endowment. I have thought the manifestation of miracles would get and secure attention if done in public. But the Devil will do all those things and deceive many. But one thing he will not do and cannot do and that is preach the full truth. And it is in the preaching and the living of the full truth that we as a church shall become the light of the world.

We Have Good Sermon Material

In comparing our method of realization with other methods we commence with the individual and show the need, the vital need of repentance, and we proceed to talk about tithing and consecration and stewardship, the pooling of moneys and the purchase of land and the development of arts and science for the good of all, yes, we tell them about the "commonwealth of Israel" and it opens their eyes as nothing else could.

The brief notes we read of President Smith's speech to Independence Saints are a clarion call to the whole church. We on the front line in the thickest of the fight depend on the Zionist condition. There is a great work to be done in Zion. We need the "apostles of the new order" (see Joe Pine). And the degree of the endowment that we want so much in our preaching will be determined by the degree of rightdoing that is found in Zion and her stakes; for God will not bear witness by the power of his Holy Spirit to that which is not true. Let Zion arise and put on her beautiful garments and in the strength of God make those holy places holy indeed.

Missionaries Needed in Great Numbers

The opportunity for missionary work in this country is almost immeasurable. There should be two men in every important town. The seaside towns offer a great opportunity which we should seize.

The men to do this work will have to be strong men, and the most of them will have to be seasoned warriors. There are crowds waiting to be talked to, but they will not listen to anything namby-pamby. It must have the force of logic, it must have fire and more fire and zeal, and above all things it must be the living truth vitalized by the power of the Holy Spirit. Men will be wanted that are willing to sacrifice their all, without the slightest reservation. The land of Wales is calling for men who can stir their emotions into a love of the truth, and while the work is as low as it can be there, I am sure that men of the right ability, who can endure hardship like good soldiers, could win many of that nation to the truth. What Captain Dan Jones did among that people years ago, can be done again with the same power. Where are the Welshmen in the church who cannot be aroused to the need of the land of their fathers! If they cannot go as missionaries they can at least rededicate their energies to God and help in many ways to get the work going in Wales. But this applies to all places that are opening before the church.

Wanted—One Saint

By Elmer K. Patterson

One Saint who will volunteer his or her talents for service to Zion's great cause.

There are many unsloughful "one-talent" Saints throughout the entire kingdom of God; and "five-talent" Saints, too. We need them, every one. Oh, dear Father, grant them a blessing, for Zion could not be redeemed without them.

But this is a challenge to the Saints who possess "ten talents" but have never found it out, and have never learned what they are.

The world, now strangely plastic, is facing a crisis, which in more ways than one is the greatest in all history; greatest because the stakes are bigger than ever before. The times of the end are upon us, though the world perceives it not; yet we as Latter Day Saints do, or should, for our church will be greatly involved in the final outcome, because from this time forth she will play a most important part in the great world drama.

Right now, she is preparing her saintly forces for the coming conflict between right and wrong, between truth and error, and martialled under the leadership of an unerring Master, they will go up to battle, and the forces of truth and right shall conquer.

But to win the great prize it will mean a struggle, a struggle of no mean proportion. Therefore, the Great Master shall need a volunteer army of live Saints—real fighters. He will need them as much as we need food and raiment. He will need them in every branch of service, for every kind of a job. But most of all he will need "ten-talent" Saints to aid those with "five talents," and those with "one talent," that all may be trained for service in their proper place in the army of the Lord.

For "ten-talent" Saints are those who see and feel things needed, and have the faculty of knowing how to supply those needs, or else can talk them out and explain them in such a manner as to make others see and feel them that they who are capable may fill them.

"Ten-talent" Saints are those that possess the power to stir others, who in turn will say: "Come on, Saints, let's do it"; but who will do it themselves whether anybody comes or not. They are the kind of Saints who do things after everyone else has said: "Impossible; it can't be done." They are the leaders of Saints the Great Master will need in growing numbers, and he needs a multitude of them to-day—right now.

He needs them throughout the kingdom, in every nook and corner of the earth, to fight in the bloodless battles to be waged against a common foe—the enemy of truth and righteousness. He needs them to interpret to their neighbors and instruct them in the big things of right—and the little things, too—the real things to fight for. He needs them to map out plans and put them into tangible realities so that all God's people, both spiritually and temporally, will be properly provided with the things necessary to their development and welfare.

He needs them right now to consecrate of their substance, their properties, and their surpluses, that proper provisions

OF GENERAL INTEREST

GOD'S HAND IN THE HISTORY OF NATIONS

The success of nations has often hung upon a slender thread.

A very interesting pamphlet is that of the published address of Doctor Elmer Ellsworth Helms of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, California, on "The evidence of God in the world as seen by what God did in the war."

He refers to the setting loose of the first gas attack on April 22, 1915. This was destructive to the allied armies, but quite unexpectedly the wind shifted and whirled back on the German forces. Doctor Schmaus, it is stated, said in his official report, "In forty years of meteorological records of the German Government the wind never acted so peculiarly before." The wind had appeared to be settled for at least thirty-six hours.

Then reference is made to the battle of Gettysburg when Ewell did not hear Longstreet's bombardment, so that instead of attacking together, Longstreet was turned back before Ewell began.

Also the wind turned Columbus southward and left the northland for the later settlement of the Puritans.

Again when the central powers gave their thrust in June, 1918, against Italy, apparently Venice would fall and the power of Italy be broken. The Italian soldiers had been deceived by pleas of brotherhood. All that remained between the two armies was the Piave River, which is usually a slow, sluggish stream with flat banks, easily crossed. Tens of thousands had crossed, carrying no food, for Italy was just ahead, but carrying instead empty bags and empty chests in which to bring back the loot. They were within six and one half miles of Venice, when suddenly out of a dead dry sky in an hour there burst a great torrent of water and the river became a raging sea, sweeping all before it. Those who had crossed were cut off without sup-may be made for the wives and mothers and children, and the dependent old folks, and the orphans, and the missionaries, and all of the institutions for good in the kingdom, and for themselves, too, with the necessary needs and just wants of a civilized people, that the Lord's storehouse be filled and there be no poor among us.

He needs them to encourage every sort of sanctioned enterprise which, when put into operation, will give encouragement and force to the great cause in which we are enlisted, and are fighting for, and shall continue to fight for till the Son of Man come.

He needs them to give backbone to those who are responsible for maintaining the moral, gospel, and ecclesiastical standards of the kingdom in every community of Saints, especially from this time forth, through all of this earth's turmoils, affecting us, when the temptation to let go will be tremendously strong.

Such Saints must be fired with the zeal of Zion's patriotism, which makes martyrs and heroes—but they must never enter the conflict thinking of themselves as heroes and still less as martyrs.

One such Saint in the kingdom of God (no matter where that one may be), who will volunteer his or her talents for service to Zion's great cause, enlisting in the army of the Lord to fight a righteous battle, can work wonders.

One such Saint—just one.

How about you? Are you that one?

plies and were captured or killed. General Foch said General Dias did his best, but General Dias said, "Deus facti" (God did it.)

Likewise Napoleon was unable to attack at 6 a. m. as he intended on account of heavy rains making the roads soft, and Napoleon was again defeated in Russia by a heavy blizzard that fell.

Doctor Helms notes that on November 17, 1917, the German submarine warfare was at its height. They believed they had sufficient to sweep from the sea the American ships and soldiers, but in the midst of their gloating the sea behaved as never before in their memory and raged to such an extent that the submarines were unable to return to their bases and were forced to come to the surface, where one hundred and ninety-nine were captured or sunk.

Likewise the Spanish Armada, thought to be invincible, was defeated by the seas in 1588.

Within one month after the opening of the war the Germans were in sight of Paris. The Kaiser from his hill could plainly see Eiffel Tower. The French had but eight hours' ammunition. The orders had already been given that when the last round was fired, every man was to take to his heels. The archives had been moved from Paris, the women and children taken away by the thousands. Eight hours and the war was to be over, when suddenly the Germans stopped firing and did not begin again for forty-seven hours. The French general commandeered every vehicle in Paris and rushed men and ammunition to the front. At the end of forty-seven hours the Germans began firing again but were pushed back and never again came so near that city. The three German generals in their report said they did not know why they ceased firing but Doctor Helms points out the word of God says: "So far shalt thou come and no farther."

In like manner Lee at Gettysburg waited till 3 p. m. on the third day to stage his attack but said later if he had attacked in the early morning he would easily have won the day. Giving the Union forces time to reform, the result was defeat for the Confederacy in that battle and the beginning of the end. Lee in his report says, "I do not know why I waited till three in the afternoon."

So likewise though Grouche heard the men firing he did not come to the relief of Napoleon. His general urged him to go but he moved not. He said afterwards he could not account for his failure to move but insisted on his intense loyalty, so Doctor Helms quotes again: "Thus saith the Lord concerning this wicked king. He shall not come into this city. By the way he came he shall return the same way, he shall not come into this city, saith the Lord, for I will defend this city to save it."

In the spring of 1917 German scientists declared they had learned the secret of every enemy of the potato. A great crop was planted, in each hole was placed that which would kill every enemy of the potato in the ground and above the ground. The potatoes thrived with uncounted miles of blossom. Then suddenly there came a blight heretofore unknown and in a day they were scorched, scarred, and shriveled as though by fire, and hungry Germany plead for peace. Ludendorff, in his history says it was the failure of the potato crop in 1917 that lost Germany the war.

On the other hand, despite the cold, wet spring, in America was raised a bumper crop of potatoes, wheat, and almost every other product sufficient to feed not only America but the allies as a whole.

Doctor Helms says the world recognized Germany's supremacy in the air, yet Germany was worsted in the air in the last few months. The head of the aerial department of the German army says:

"The allies did not have superior air ships nor air fighters, but it was the accursed clouds that defeated us. Nearly every time when we had a bevy of the enemy's ships in a pocket ready to take them, one of those accursed clouds would be hanging handy by and would envelop them as thick as a blanket, and the Devil himself couldn't fight them, and they would escape at their leisure. It was the accursed clouds that did it." Doctor Helms refers to "My cloud shall curse them in that day saith the Lord." Our own boys in the air service report the same thing, that when in a tight corner a cloud coming from no one knew where covered them so they have escaped. The same thing occurred when Pharoah pursued the Israelites.

Doctor Helms refers to the attack on Paris. While victory in the World War depended on reaching the channel ports he says, they could have reached the ports easily if they had made that the first objective. As it was they did not reach Paris nor did they reach the channel ports, though more than a million men were paid in an effort to do so. The only possible explanation is, he says, that Germany was mad with the desire for the glory of eating Christmas dinner in Paris.

With reference to the battle of Marathon, 490, which preserved Grecian civilization, the battle of Troy, 752, which made Europe Christian, the battle of Waterloo that preserved Europe from military despotism; the battle of Gettysburg which made the United States all free. This leads up to Germany's doom when she turned from the Cross of Calvary to the cross of iron.

It is now Christ or chaos for the world. It is not true that the voice of the people is always the voice of God. But the voice of God must be, in the end, the voice of the people.

We are now in an age of democracy but the only hopes for the success is a recognition of the everlasting power of God for upon his shoulders must the government be placed.

Truly the only hope of success in government, the only real hope of peace must be through the way laid down by the Master of life, Jesus the Christ; and salvation, not only in a religious sense but also in a political sense and also a socialistic sense, depends upon conversion.

"Strong with the strength of earth beneath their tread,
Slow as the marching stars they gaze upon,
Squadrons of living men and living dead,
The legions of democracy press on;
As one they come; and who in yonder van,
Illumines all the path that man may see?
I think it is a fellow working man—
A carpenter, they say, from Galilee."

The first branch at Columbus, Ohio, have issued printed programs from their own press announcing a series of sermons during October by local men. Each Sunday except the first, when a sacrament service is held, there are two sermons, with special songs and responsive reading. The subjects are: "What became of the church Jesus set up?" "The strength of Zion," "Truth about the Dark Ages," "Preparing for Zion," "The reformed gospel and the reformers," "A refuge in Zion," "The restored gospel as prophesied by Jesus and the apostles," "The need of a Zion," "The truth about Mormonism." The speakers are Elders A. E. Anderson and J. E. Matthews, alternately.

S. A. Burgess, associate editor, is away from the office for about ten days on a trip to Lamoni and Saint Louis, accompanied by his family.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. August Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

OUTLINE OF SUBJECTS

Part One. The Christian Religion.

- A question for deliberation.
- The basis. The scope. Temporal wants and spiritual freedom.
- Conduct is a whole. The nature and importance of doctrine. Fulfilling the law.
- The means adapted to the end.
- The latter-day work: (Revelation and human needs. The man or the prophet.)

Part Two. Christian Manhood.

- The true example. Character and environment.
- Motives of activity. The deceitfulness of riches.
- The root of all evil. The outcome of profit seeking.
- The price of life. The law of service: social progress. Labor and happiness.

Part Three. Cooperation and Common Consent.

- Society a cooperative effort.
- Christianity a life of mutual aid.
- Personal factors. Administrative factors.
- Economic benefits. Spiritual consequences.
- Unity and Christian discipleship.
- Implications of the brotherhood of man.
- Conditions of continued successful cooperation.
- Common consent. Except ye are one.

Part Four. Stewardships and Inheritances.

- Definition. The purpose. Classes of stewardships.
- Capitalizations.
- Organization and administration.
- Distributions. Social control.

Part Five. Poverty and the Labor Problem.

- Causes. Contrast. Labor's problem. Automatic cure.

Part Six. Temporal Equality and All Things Common.

- Definition. Injustice of inequality. Social effects of inequality.
- Economic benefits of temporal equality. Spiritual consequences.
- All things common. A Christian doctrine.

Part Seven. Zion, The Order of Enoch, and The Gathering.

- The desire of all ages. The perfection of beauty.
- The bond of Zion. The kingdom of God.
- Early attempts of the church.
- The Order of Enoch. The idler. Usury. All for each and each for all.
- The gathering.

Part Eight. Ethical Evolution.

- Stages and culmination.
- Tribulation in relation to progress.
- Ideals in evolution.
- The judgments of God vindicated.

PART 1.—THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION

A Question of Deliberation

Certainly no apology ought to be expected from anyone for attempting to formulate a judgment on a question of such universal interest as the social and economic aspects of the Christian religion. No question is more vital to human interests; and yet there are few questions affecting man's everyday life and his happiness upon which such widely divergent opinions are held.

In view of these facts, any discussion that may help to clear the understanding ought to be encouraged, and the arguments put forward should be considered thoughtfully and in the spirit of disinterestedness. This of course will be impossible with those whose private interests, feelings, and preperceptions or prejudices lead them to pass upon the most important matters without proper investigation. But there are many in whom reason is usually in control; the habits of these are to take important matters into deliberation; and our hope of at least an approximation to the truth lies in this fact of a comparison and modification of judgments formed in rational minds.

The ministry to which we belong understand very well that controversies over interpretations of doctrines may be settled, tentatively at least, by quorum action, but final decision rests with the General Conference of the church. The reason for this is to be found in the limits of human understanding and the facts of ethical evolution. But the very fact that such questions may be settled at all by human judgment makes the judgments of individual men matters not to be ignored but to be reckoned with.

The aim of this treatise is to help to bring about a common judgment of what is required of men under the divine law. We believe our interpretations are the implications of the written word, and that they express the judgments of reason on these questions, and that these judgments are confirmed by the facts of human experience.

God speaks or inspires utterance; usually we do not get the full force of nor comprehend his instruction immediately, but the events of passing years serve, as they ought, to give a clearer comprehension of the meaning of the doctrine to which we may have formally subscribed. Then as the light of truth dawns upon us, we are enabled to reconstruct our modes of activity and in this way secure to ourselves the benefits of right living, the satisfactions, the happiness that arises from or is coincident with the consciousness of having determined ourselves to the employment of our powers of body and mind and of all that has come under our control to useful and righteous ends, and in this way to have fulfilled the requirements of our nature and being. It is the mission of the church to enable us to achieve this purpose.

The Basis

"If there is any other commandment it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

It is evident from these two statements that "love" is the most fundamental of Christian doctrines. Since all other commandments hang upon the principle of love of God and love of man, it follows that a definition and comprehension of "love" will serve as a basis for judging interpretations of Christian doctrine.

While it is difficult to analyze the emotions, still there is surely some fairly well defined notion in the mind corresponding to the word sign "love." In speaking of "charity" (1 Corinthians 13), which is commonly understood to mean "Christian good will," instead of defining it, Paul describes its manifestations. This description is in agreement with the definition of "love" given in the Standard Dictionary which is: "A strong complex emotion or feeling inspired by something as a person or a quality, causing one to appreciate, delight in, and crave the presence or possession of the object and to please or promote the welfare of that object; the yearning or the outgoing of the soul toward what is apprehended and regarded as good or excellent from any point of view or in any relation. Devoted affection for or attachment to" (some person or persons).

Love may be directed toward self, toward neighbor, toward truth, or any one of an indefinite number of objects and relations. It is according to nature for man to desire and seek his own welfare and happiness. But Christian doctrine enjoins the duty of disciplining self until the same kind of regard one has for his own personal welfare shall be had for his neighbor as well. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Love of self is a native quality, and this fact provides man with an apperceptive basis, with power to assimilate the God-idea of love of neighbor and love of God. Man, therefore, needs only to contemplate his own natural attitude toward himself in order to judge what feelings he must have and what efforts he must put forth as touching the welfare of other men in order to establish a Christian discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

Now in contemplating self we find that man strives in all things to promote his own well-being, comfort, and happiness. Christian charity is the striving in like manner to secure the well-being, comfort, and happiness of neighbor; and our attitude toward those we know we love bears out the definition of love we have quoted. We always delight in the presence of those we love; we always seek to do them good; we are always willing to make personal sacrifices in order that the comfort of those we really love may be promoted.

"As feeling or emotion, love has two roots. A mental sympathy, based on kindred tastes and interests, is sometimes present at the outset; but in any case it is likely to develop under the favoring conditions of a common life, particularly if there are either children or a common work." It is not difficult for those who are given to reflection to arrive at the judgment that the acts of men should be adjusted with consideration to each other's rights. Each normal man is by nature the same as every other normal man. Each has a native power of discrimination which enables him to classify acts as "good" or "bad," and to perceive that good acts ought to be performed and that bad acts ought not to be performed. Good acts, of course, are those which promote well-being, which secure human interests. And in view of the principle that the good should be promoted, and that all men come under the universal rule, it follows that each and every man should act with consideration for all other men. All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

"Love or affection, in the only sense in which it makes a moral basis of the family, is not the 'affection' of psychological language—the pleasant or the unpleasant tone of consciousness; it is the resolute purpose in each to seek the other's good, or rather to seek a common good which can be attained only through a common life involving sacrifice."

The necessary social relations which human nature presupposes make it imperative for each to seek the other's good if the good of mankind in general and of each person in particular is to be secured. It is not to be wondered at that God, who desires the good of all his children, should so arrange the things that bear upon human life as to make it necessary for each to seek the other's good in order that he may find his own good. "I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life that both thou and thy seed may live."

Love manifests itself on different planes. Love of self alone is more common than love of neighbor; but love is fundamentally the same thing whether directed toward self only or toward neighbor as well. But the different planes on which love manifests itself give entirely different values to men as moral beings. One secures to him the blessings of divine favor and companionship and another carries him down into hell.

Self-interest is primarily the dynamic of adjustment; and the fact that personal satisfactions can arise only from doing good is everywhere given us as a reason why one should do good. But it must not be supposed that self-interest always remains as a conscious motive. In the course of ethical evolution, one-time conscious motives sink into subconsciousness, notwithstanding nature impels man to act out of consideration for the good of each and every man individually. Certain habits, notwithstanding they may have been acquired under the pressure of some necessity, come to yield pleasure, and they are thereafter consciously continued in out of regard for others' needs and because they afford satisfaction; but on the subconscious side they are continued in primarily because self-interest is conditioned in such adjustments. Friendships are often consciously promoted through sacrifices because men feel that it pays to have friends. But friendships once established come to yield pleasure in sacrifices for friends, and personal interests are thereafter sacrificed to others' good with no deliberate purpose to secure personal gain. However, such sacrifices alone yield the happiness for which the soul instinctively seeks; and even though self-satisfaction ceases to appear on the conscious side as a motive, it is nevertheless present in subconsciousness. Nature always has some reason for doing one thing rather than another, notwithstanding charity "seeketh not her own." The "self" motive comes to be on the subconscious rather than the conscious side.

Self-interests are not to be sacrificed in one case any more than in all other cases. But self-seeking alone is a source of conflict and ill will and defeats the purpose of creation. Under Christian doctrine one must love neighbor as well as self and in the same manner and to the same degree. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This commandment might be paraphrased to read: "Thou shalt have a strong affection for thy neighbor who is like thee, who has the same needs as thee, and who is entitled to the same consideration as thou art, remembering that thine own welfare depends upon receiving like consideration from him. And this feeling shall draw thee toward thy neighbor in such a way as that thou shalt have pleasure and delight in striving in all things to act in such ways as will promote his welfare and comfort as thou dost strive to promote thine own. If thou doest this, thou shalt be my disciple and shalt find the happiness for which thy soul is athirst."

We repeat that love, the pleasurable seeking of others' comfort and good, is fundamental and therefore must be kept in mind in order properly to judge the propositions set forth in any treatise on the social and economic aspects of the Christian religion. A definition and expansion of the principle of love affords a sure guide by which to test every statement or interpretation of Christian doctrine. Every rule of Christian conduct is derived from this principle. Moreover, it will be seen that the scope of Christian religion is determined by its own basic principle.

The Scope

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the [vices of the] world."
—James 1: 27.

The world is not far removed from the idea of religion that had an expression in the monasteries of medieval times. To keep himself unspotted from the vices of the world is interpreted to mean that politics, economics, civics, culture, and what not, are foreign to the life of the truly religious man. This is giving really too much credit to the class of people we have in mind, for the process known as logical interpretation is a stranger to them; their lives are dominated by emotion and not by reason. But their general attitude towards life, difficult of explanation or definition as it is, implies logically the proposition that to them religion consists only in sacraments, ceremonies, prayers, and the like. But we shall see that this attitude is incompatible with the meaning of "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Laying aside all reasoning on natural grounds for the time being, let us resort to a few Biblical statements that give some idea of the scope of religion.

"Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood. Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow."—Isaiah 1: 10-17.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."—Matthew 7: 21-23.

"Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. . . . Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Matthew 23: 14, 23.

"Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward."—Isaiah 58: 5-8.

"Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."—Matthew 5: 23, 24.

This scripture taken dogmatically affords ample testimony against the belief that pure religion is limited to the functions of the sanctuary; and, at the same time, it testifies to the truthfulness of the proposition that "pure religion" is of this nature: The having of such a regard for the rights and interests of our fellow men that we strive in the determination of all the affairs of society to secure their comfort and well-being.

Now what are the activities or processes by which well-being is promoted? Can we think of human welfare aside from economic activity, from sanitation, from schooling and the like? And is it not true that in each and all of these fields of activity certain ways of acting are good and some are bad? And does not this mean that "Thou shalt love thy neighbor" places upon each and every man the responsibility of duty of acting in all these fields or in all circumstances in the good way, according to the law of God, or as judgment shall direct as being conducive to the pleasure and welfare of his fellow man? Then what is the field of pure religion?

Pure religion is "the life of God in the soul of man."

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?"—Matthew 5: 44-46.

Children of God, then, are those who act in all the walks of life as God would if he were in our place. It is specifically with regard to our common wants as they are sought to be supplied by the common activities of life that love is called upon and finds its opportunity or occasion to express itself. Obviously, this makes human society in all of its ramifications, and not particularly and exclusively devotional functions, the great field of religious conduct.

In placing emphasis upon this aspect of religion, we do not discredit or minimize the importance of the functions of prayer or any of the ordinances or sacraments with which religion has to do; we simply bring to the front for the time being and for present purposes matters with which some seem to have no acquaintance.

Pure religion has to do with conduct in all the walks of life. It follows, therefore, that the doctrines of pure religion, either specifically and definitely or by implication, must cover the whole field of human activity. This they do. And now we proceed to set forth with greater specification the grounds for this all-comprehensiveness of Christian doctrine.

Temporal Wants and Spiritual Freedom

The facts of human experience are decidedly more to be relied upon than speculative theories about the relative values of mind and matter. The facts of experience show that there is a relation between bodily states and intelligence, between intellect and morality, and between morality and the possession of the Comforter, the Holy Spirit of promise. A knowledge of such facts has value because it may be employed to good uses.

Doubtless the Creator had a purpose in causing this relation or connection to exist. Whether or not he could have accomplished his purpose in another way, we do not know. And we cannot deal with the unknown or nonexistent. We may, however, take man as he is and deal with him as we know him. And it is sufficient for us to know what adjustments on man's part must be made in order to bring him into fellowship with the Spirit of God. By knowledge we mean not a mere acquiescence in a statement of doctrine or belief but we mean a comprehension of relations as well as of parts. We maintain that spiritual freedom is conditioned in right social and economic relations as much as in sacraments and ordinances. This does not detract from the importance or the beauty of any spiritual activity whatever. We do not lessen the value of an ear of corn when we affirm that its existence depends upon the vegetation of the plant, for the existence of the plant upon which the ear grows is itself dependent upon the germination and growth of a kernel taken from an ear. That there is an interdependence is beyond all question. We do not care to speculate on which came first, the hen or the egg; that is a matter of no importance to us. What is important is that having hens and eggs we may understand their present relations to one another and to ourselves, and thus be enabled to put them to good use.

There is no beginning or end to a circle; you may begin at any point to describe it, but having described it, each and every point is both the beginning and the end, and yet there is no beginning or end to the circle. Just so, it matters not whether we begin with physiological function or with devotions, or whether we work in one direction or the other, we find that each function is a means as well as an end.

The grain cannot come to maturity without the plant, and yet it may continue to exist and to functionate after the plant has returned to the earth from which it came. The spirit does not have its value without the body in which it has experience, and yet it may continue to exist and to functionate after the body has passed away; and neither can the body have life without the spirit.

The scriptures teach that there is some such interdependence between the several aspects of human life. If "bring no more oblation" (Isaiah 1: 13) has any meaning it is that the success, the worth, the beauty of sacraments is conditioned in right social relations; so also does "leave thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother."—Matthew 5: 23, 24. And again: "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord."—Proverbs 15: 8. Some moral acts must be performed before certain acts of devotion can be properly done, notwithstanding the stimulus for the moral act may itself be the outgrowth of devotional experience.

Again: "This kind goeth not out but by fasting and prayer."—Matthew 7: 21. This asserts that man's power to perform certain ministerial functions depends upon first having made some mental preparation, and yet the motive for making this preparation may be found in the very fact of the possession of right and power to perform ministerial acts.

Again: "Take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding of the body and the mind."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9. And "all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings . . . shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge."—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 3. The implication here is that as a general rule we may expect certain mental illuminations to follow upon attendance to certain physiological functions. A strong mind is conditioned as much in physical acts as in the stimulation and exercise or discipline of the intellect.

Man is more easily impressed by bodily needs than by any other because upon the supply of bodily needs the whole of human experience depends. No newborn babe could long survive without adequate bodily care. And the passing years do not lessen the pressure of these needs. The necessity for this necessity of attending to bodily needs is left for later discussion. With few exceptions all other activities are postponed to acts designed to supply immediate bodily needs.

There can be no culture until civilization affords leisure or luxury. The goods of life must be produced and made available in quantities in excess of immediate needs, otherwise cultural activities will be postponed. In other words, spiritual freedom depends in part upon having temporal needs supplied.

In discussing the priority of functions in point of time, the question of relative values is not considered. Where there is such an interdependence, it is of comparatively little consequence which proves to have the greater value, so long as each function is put forth in its proper time and place and amount, and this we may be able to do without knowing relative values.

Besides the pressure of present needs, we have also the pressure of future needs to reckon with. Leaving out of consideration the reckless, shiftless, ambitionless type of man (so-called) who concerns himself little or none about anything of any importance, there are few men in whom the prospect of future want does not give rise to apprehensions. This gives rise to concentration upon the problem of escaping future want, and this means the diverting of the attention from matters that do not press so heavily. Under this economic pressure, the rule is to postpone devotional functions or to subordinate them to productive activity; unless, indeed, the opportunity for providing bodily wants appears to be cut off, or unless it is believed that devotions are as likely or more so to secure bodily interests as are other forms of activity. "Which of you shall have an ox or an ass fallen into the pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the Sabbath day?" Thus we see the tendency to subordinate secondary activities to primary.

But it must not be supposed that temporal prosperity issues in spiritual freedom. Rich nations, like rich individuals, have not infrequently been very immoral. There is some fact co-existent with the pressure of primary needs that bears upon spiritual freedom, and to which we have already referred. That fact is the incompatibility of the mode of activity by which commodities are secured on the one hand and the mode of activity that belongs to the sanctuary on the other hand. It is not to be supposed that the all-seeing and just God can look with favor upon the mode of life of the exploiter because he brings a tithe of his wrongly gotten gain and places it with prayer upon the altar. If man were hydra headed, and if there was no way of one mind bringing the acts of the other into comparison with its own, and if each mind had to do with one aspect only of man's life, the incompatibility of the mode of business life with the professions of love for God and man might not disturb his mental or spiritual equilibrium. But it is not so. One ego or spirit experiences all the thoughts and feelings coincident and co-existent with all the acts of the one being. And any failure to coordinate the acts of business life (acts, in the moral sense) with the acts at the communion table interferes with the success of life's activity as a whole and with peace of mind. It is as if respiration in the body did not keep pace with the action of the heart; or as if circulation did not adjust itself to the varying activity of the mind and body; the whole organism would be thrown into a state of confusion, the degree of which would correspond to the degree of the "incompatibility of one set of acts with other sets of acts."

In other words, the professions of love for God in the pew must be verified and vitalized by the mode of conduct of daily life, and the mode of daily life must be inspired by religious motives, for if the one is inconsistent with the other, the soul cannot be at peace with itself and therefore certainly not at peace with God. Action in one part is ineffectual because action in another part has not kept pace or harmonized with it. This is the principle comprehended in the statement that "on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

John the beloved also testified to this truth when he asks: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" The ability or capacity to love is developed by the exercise of love; therefore how can a man love whom he has not seen when he has not developed the ability to love whom he has seen? Love of God implicates and necessitates love for man; these are interdependent acts; the one cannot take place without the other. God is good. Good acts are those which give rise to human welfare; and he who has not learned to appreciate his brother and to act in ways conducive to his comfort hath not seen God, and he will not see God until he apprehends the modes of conduct of which God approves.

Temporal wants are related to spiritual freedom because the acts to which we are under the necessity of determining ourselves in order to secure the goods of life bear directly upon the union of the soul with God.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" implicates a unity or equality of temporal interests. Any method of getting a living that deprives others of getting a living as easily and as well negates the very principle of liberty and love and destroys the basis of equality. The foundation of Christianity is love; and love issues in equality; and in these facts we have the grounds for the decree that "in your temporal things ye shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, [for love does not begrudge its gifts] otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

And again: "If ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

In establishing the relation of temporal things to spiritual freedom, we have already established the fact that conduct is a whole. But to this latter question we give further consideration.

Conduct Is a Whole

"For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James 2: 10. The law to which this refers is evidently the law of human conduct. By "conduct" we mean not mere motion or movement such as is made by babes or those who are incapable of discrimination, but we mean action in the moral sense, self-determined acts, acts of the mind's own free choice and volition. The normal man has the power within himself to find out what he "ought" to do and what he "ought not" to do; in other words, to comprehend "duty." He is therefore a moral agent and responsible for his "acts." He has within himself the inherent power to receive, retain, and reproduce impressions of facts, i. e., of objects and relations, and to come to know that it is the one spirit or mind that is being acted upon and is reacting against a varied environment. All the awareness that is in the one being. Every demand that is made is made upon the one conscious entity. And no odds in what direction duty may have been neglected, the individual feels that the law of his being has been transgressed. Conduct is not divisible into separate and unrelated parts, but conduct (as well as the law of conduct) is a unity.

Man is by nature (1) animal, (2) intellectual, (3) religious. His being therefore makes a variety of demands. It demands (1) food and protection, exercise and repose; (2) problems to be solved, or difficulties to be overcome, and adjustments to be effected; (3) stimuli that give rise to pleasurable and painful sensations, and relations that give to a sense of duty and responsibility; and (4) some object of admiration, respect, and honor.

With regard to all these matters there are good ways and there are bad ways of acting. From good acts, either immediately or remotely, satisfactions arise; but from bad acts, at some time, in some way, and to some extent, dissatisfactions follow.

The fact of special interest just now is that all the rules governing conduct in respect to all these matters are the provisions of the one and selfsame law. This is proved by the fact, e. g., that loss of sleep and other interferences with physiological function immediately affect the condition of the intellect. In this way experience argues that all the functions of life are designed to be fulfilled in each and every individual being. No life can be complete, otherwise. But the Christian religion aims at a complete life, and its doctrines are adjusted to this purpose.

Special attention needs to be directed to the fact that men cannot act in the moral sense with regard to any one of the several demands made upon him without in some way affecting his power to act in the moral sense with regard to all other demands.

As an example of this, take the proposition that "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, . . . and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."—1 John 2:11. Or they "became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened."—Romans 1:21. This is no bit of fiction, but is descriptive of the tragic ending of once spiritual lives. Hate, which is the antithesis of love, no odds by what it is provoked, and the fixing of the affections upon improper ways of acting, bear directly upon the power of the mind to receive and retain impressions of duty. Thus sin in any form carries with it its own penalties.

The overstimulation of the digestive system bears directly upon the power of the system to functionate. Overeating induces indigestion. This is the principle involved in "the care of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful." (Matthew 13:22.) Our feelings and choices, what we determine ourselves to do with regard to money and property and the like, bear directly upon our power to understand and to act in righteous ways concerning these and other matters.

"If a man offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Intemperance, or the use of intoxicating liquors, is not a crime of the magnitude of adultery or murder; but it often gives rise to far-reaching complications, and may be the remote cause of a life of theft, adultery, or murder. He that said, Do not kill, also said, Do not use intoxicants. All of the commandments of God taken together as a whole constitute the law of life. Conduct is a whole.

This may seem a rather simple matter to which to give such extended consideration; but our action is justified and called for by the indifference of even those who assert their loyalty to Christ to the law of God on relations in economic life. This is a far-reaching matter; it is of great importance; it is the tremendous fact that gives rise to the general and specific doctrine of the latter-day work concerning duty with regard to money and property which is discussed later on.

The Nature and Importance of Doctrine

Leaving out of consideration the concrete facts, the mere events of passing days and years that are recorded in the scriptures, and also such special commands as "go dip seven times in Jordan," the meaning of which may be hidden, and taking into account only the principles involved in the doctrine, or what is taught as affecting man's welfare, the Bible contains the word of God; and Jesus said: "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Now truth, as used here, is a special kind of "fact," is something that may be thought into relation to existence in general; that is, it may be known. "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth."—John 8:31. To "continue in" means to persevere in or to persist in action; to "continue in my word" therefore is obviously a matter of conscious effort, and is in that sense an activity of the knowing or cognitive faculties. One must "know" something of the mode of life concerning which he has a definite purpose. But this act of self-determination is here made the antecedent of knowing the truth, and "know the truth" is therefore by implication said to be a special degree or kind of knowledge.

It must be clear to those of understanding that two entirely different demands are made upon the intellect, (1) in the apprehension of what is revealed in the statement, "they laid him in Joseph's tomb," and (2) in the comprehension of the meaning of "repent ye . . . that your sins may be blotted out." The latter requires the thinking of repentance into its relation to the forgiveness of sins.

Now there is a reason why we may "know the truth," and that is because "truth" as used in John 8:31 has this specific signification: "that which accords with the requirements of man's nature and being." In other words, truth, in this signification, is the sum total of all the things that may be known that bear upon man's nature or being. "Thou shalt not lie"; "thou shalt not steal"; "remember the Sabbath day." These are of the nature of truth. We may see with the mind's eye the manner in which these rules bear upon our natures. We may "know" the truth, and truth, taken in this signification, is synonymous with "the word of God" and "the principles of the doctrine of Christ." (Hebrews 6:1.)

Mention has already been made of "the all comprehensiveness of Christian doctrine," of the fact that "conduct is a whole," and of "the relation of temporal wants to spiritual freedom," or the "interdependence of functions." We now observe that the judgments formed on these questions coincide with the definition of "doctrine," as used in Hebrews 6:1, which is: "a scientific system of principles involved in a particular subject."

"System" means an orderly combination or arrangement of parts or elements into a whole according to some rational principle giving unity or completeness. This comprehends two ideas: First, that of "parts," and second, that of "relations." In other words, it is not only true that the doctrine of Christ comprehends the principles of (1) repentance, (2), faith, (3) baptisms, (4) laying on of hands, (5) the resurrection, and (6) eternal judgment (Hebrews 6:1, 2), but it is also true that Christian doctrine makes application of these principles as to order, time, extent, and place, in exact accordance with the requirements of man's nature and being. Christianity does not bake the loaf before leavening the lump; nor does it mix the dough after placing it in the oven; but its processes and methods are determined by and exactly accord with the nature of the material with which it deals, i. e., the human race. It would be manifestly foolish to baptize a person who did not believe or had not repented, or to confirm a man who had not been baptized.

"A Scientific System of Principles"

The above heading signifies the nature of Christian doctrine. Its superlative authority arises from or consists in its adaptability to the end it is destined to serve, namely, the redemption of the human family. And to do this, it could not have left out of its calculations any act to which man might determine himself and which obviously bears upon his character; but it has decreed that all obligations shall be met in the order in which they affect manhood. "First be reconciled to thy brother" is a necessary condition imposed necessarily because of the end that Christian doctrine has in view. No man may be a Christian who does not endeavor first to meet the common obligations that arise from man's primary needs. Christian doctrine is therefore coextensive with the scope of the Christian religion; it bears upon and sets forth rules governing conduct with respect to each and every aspect of the life of man taken as a whole.

The importance of Christian doctrine arises from its nature. Since it sets forth the natural rules according to which human redemption must be brought about, its importance consists in the fact that its provisions cannot be disregarded without loss or obeyed without gain. As it embodies natural laws, so it produces its results or confers its benefits or imposes its penalties automatically and with absolute certainty.

There is nothing arbitrary then in the announcement: "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." (Matthew 15:19.) Nor in the injunction to "take heed unto . . . the doctrine; continue in them; for in so doing thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." (1 Timothy 4:16.) Nor yet in the decree that "whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." (2 John 9.) The means is adapted to the end: All achievement is conditioned in fulfilling the law; all development comes by exercise in the field in which development is sought.

The particular doctrines of repentance, faith, and baptisms have a special signification in Christian experience. Their relation to the social and economic aspects of the latter-day work will be seen as we proceed with our discussion.

Fulfilling the Law

"That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law . . . cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment." "Unto every kingdom is given a law."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8, 9.

All achievement is conditioned in obeying law. Perfection is conditional in fulfilling the law. The mineral kingdom, the vegetable, and the animal—all are governed by laws corresponding to the peculiarity of the phenomena in each. In the one are laws governing chemical combinations, the application of energy, the refraction of light rays, the transmission of sounds, and the like. In the other are laws governing the vegetation and propagation of the plant. And in the other are laws governing organic functions. The measure of the success of any undertaking of any and every sort in each and every kingdom is the measure in which the law governing has been fulfilled.

By careless methods a farmer may secure a portion of a crop; by slight attendance upon bodily needs a man may maintain a physical existence; but even though every rule of electrical illumination save one may have been observed, there can be no light until the button is pushed or the bulb made secure in the socket. Innumerable failures arise from a failure to fulfill all the conditions governing.

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." There are few who do not believe or know that man as a moral and devotional being is subject to law. Not only are individual achievements governed by law, but social achievement as well. Of special interest just now is the fact that the goal of Christian effort may be arrived at only by fulfilling the law, both on the part of the individual and on the part of the group. Not only must the individual fulfill his obligation to other individual beings, but men collectively (the group) must fulfill their obligations to God and to men individually. In its purely sociological aspects, this is discussed under the head of social progress.

Judgment tells us and the scriptures teach that the church is a social organism. (See 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 2:19-22; 4:11-16.) It is "built together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Just as every animal organism is characterized by certain vital functions in its parts and as a whole, so the church is characterized by general and specific manifestations of spiritual life due immediately to the presence of the Spirit of God. (1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4:16, et al.) And just as neglect of certain duties lowers the vitality of the body or gives rise to disease or temporary or permanent inanimation, so the failure of the church, the Saints collectively, to act in divinely appointed ways, directly affects its vitality. This is the force of the decree that "in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the spirit shall be withheld." (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.) And again: "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:1.

It will be observed that the obstacles to divine favor and communion to which our attention is here directed, are of the nature of economic or business habits or customs. This should serve to keep before the mind the fact of the interdependence of economic and devotional functions and to help us to sense the importance of the social and economic obligations imposed by Christian doctrine which will be set forth in a later chapter.

If there is one fact more than another that the religious world in general and the church in particular needs to be made deeply conscious of, it is that its standing with God depends as much upon fulfilling the law relating to business conduct as upon the harmony of its rites or usages or beliefs and the written word. Perfection of Christian manhood is achieved not by a mere formal acquiescence in the proposals of Christian doctrine, nor in merely laying the foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith toward God, but in going on in the course prescribed, i. e., in fulfilling the law governing.

Means Adjusted to Ends

"If ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded and required of you."—Doctrine and Covenants 77:1.

Means must be adjusted to ends. All development comes by exercise in the field in which development is sought. Christianity aims to prepare man for the association of the heavenly hosts; "a place in the celestial world" is the goal of Christian effort; and the means is exercise in the field in which development is sought. What is sought to be achieved gives definite form to or shapes the course of action to be pursued or determines the doctrines to be continued in order to effect the purpose.

Physical culture cannot be brought about by the study of books alone; mental culture cannot be acquired by the discipline of the gymnasium alone; nor moral excellence by either of these alone. Physical development implicates and necessitates one form of discipline, and culture quite another, and moral qualities quite another. No one ever became a scholar by the use of the trapeze and the punching bag; this form of activity is not adapted to that end. No one ever achieved anything without resorting to some suitable means. Whatever the achievement, it necessitates definite or specific processes.

There are different social callings for which one may qualify. There is the field of sports, the circle of music, the profession of law or medicine, or what not. There is just one way to qualify for any such station and that is (1) by learning what is required in the realm in which one wishes to occupy, and (2) by practicing those things until one is able to perform them acceptably; in other words, by exercise in the field in which development is sought.

If one will not do this he cannot qualify, and he who would gain "a place in the celestial world" must qualify "by doing" the kind of thing that is done there. No one may sit at "the marriage supper" who does not wear "the wedding garment."

The exercise called for by the standards and customs of the world do not issue in Christian manhood. Society, in the main, is an arena in which men are trained to win at the game of getting from others the things they want for themselves. And these are the moral consequences: (1) National suspicions, diplomatic intrigue, and racial animosities; (2) class divisions and feelings arising from stakes won and lost at the game; pride, discrimination, and oppression; and (3) a lack of fellow feeling among workmen; struggle for position or personal advantage; and a general habit of misrepresentation or dishonesty.

Society is well off when the presence of a bad person or an evil practice is an item of news and an occasion for general talk; but it is in a bad way when the presence of a good man is a matter of general interest and when evils are merely matters for regulation.

Just what world activities are preparing men for, each may guess. Certain it is that "a place in the celestial world" cannot be the fruit of such doing.

But above the din of worldly conflict we hear the voice of Him who seeks others' interests saying: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that you receive not of her plagues." And "the time has come . . . it must needs be that there be an organization of my people . . . to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man." And again, "I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon."

Some there are whose hearts are fired with a brotherly solicitude, in whom there is a high sense of moral responsibility, and whose purpose to answer the call of Christ is evidenced by a life of service. These abstain, as far as possible, from participation in the evils which society has dignified or which have become venerable with age. These are trying to cultivate a taste for the forms of association existing in the celestial world, and also to influence others to unite their efforts to actualizing the Christian ideal. These will rejoice in the fruit of their doing. But what of the other class? This is the cause for our concern.

And moreover it is not merely abstinence from evildoing that our natures require, but it is also active participation in rightdoing. To "abstain" may be a means of escaping the damnation of hell, but to "participate" is the only way of securing the commendation: "Well done; enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Christian manhood; a fitness to dwell with the Son of God; that is the aim. The social and economic aspects of the latter-day work bear a direct relation to the development of these qualities. This does not mean that the man who aspires to moral excellence is not concerned about physical and mental training; but rather that physical and mental acts are made stepping-stones to moral heights; they are not indulged in for their sakes, but because they are factors in moral development. This necessitates discrimination between physical acts which make for moral ends and those which do not; it necessitates the selection of one and the rejection of the other.

This is an extremely vital point and needs to be emphasized, for it is imagined by many that the forms of association for business purposes and the manner of holding properties and distributing the benefits of economic activity that are prescribed in the gospel law have for their chief or sole end industrial prosperity or independence. And with this blinded vision members of the church plunge from one undertaking into another to find in the end that they are as far (or farther) from their goal as they were when they began.

The kind of food taken into the stomach must correspond with the purpose of the vital processes at their remotest ends, otherwise it is destructive to human interests rather than helpful. The forms of our economic activity, of our business associations, the methods of administering properties, of finance, and all such things must correspond with the purpose of Christian experience, otherwise they will serve to defeat the very purposes of Christian effort. "It must needs be done in mine own way." "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1.

As winter approaches, the necessity for bodily protection presses more and more heavily upon us. As population increases, as the forms of association become more complex, and as the interests of each become more and more involved in the activities of others, the necessity of establishing right relations between men and between men and properties in order to escape moral or even economic disaster becomes increasingly great. "The time has come." The necessity exists. "Come out of Babylon, O ye, my people."

It is true that in contemplating the latter-day work we may find some things which, so far as the records show, may not have been required of some peoples in some ages. But the record may be incomplete as to details. There is no limit to the variety of circumstances under which "love" may be called upon to express itself. It is certain that what is necessary to fulfill the law of love is determined by the varying conditions in which we find man. Health calls for one form of ministrations; illness for quite another; but both require that man shall love.

We do not set the newborn babe to the task of plowing the ground, nor teach it the rules of civil government. Notwithstanding it is demanded of each and every man that he shall labor and adjust his actions to the requirements of social life, notwithstanding these are universal requirements, they do not apply to the newborn man for the circumstances of his existence do not call for them. We do not afford the same protection to the body nor eat the same foods in summer as in winter, and yet to provide food and protection is a requirement of our being as fixed and as eternal as the heavens, and as applicable in summer as in winter.

In the early days of the human race there may have been no demand for rules regulating the manner of possessing the land. Land was as free as the air and as impossible of monopolization. The pressure of wants may not have given rise to abuses of land privileges. But with the increase of population and the division of labor, the time came when a declaration of the principles of righteousness with regard to land and labor and distribution became necessary. In some of its aspects the modern statement of Christian doctrine is simply the application of eternal principles of right to present-day conditions.

We interpret language and events in the light of our own experience. This gives rise to another consideration besides the one just discussed, viz: man's readiness to comprehend what God would say. "I have many things to say unto you, but you cannot bear them now." (John 16:12.) And "Unto what shall I liken these things that ye may understand?" And again: "Ye cannot behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the design of your God concerning those things which shall come hereafter"; but as we pass through the pains of the new birth (the Christian baptism) we are enabled to assimilate the ideas expressed in the language of God.

God's ideas are not in process of evolution; he sees the end from the beginning; but beyond all controversy, this cannot be said of man.

All forms of life are endowed by nature, or nature's God, with power to select and assimilate what is essential to their existences. The mind of man is eternally in quest of the truth because he is "sanctified" by the truth. Truth is a matter of comprehension. And accordingly man is endowed naturally with the faculty of judgment which gives him power, when the necessary data is clearly before his mind, to judge the claim that any doctrine has upon him.

The divinity (or Godlikeness) of any doctrine may be judged by the principle of "love" which lies at the base of human welfare. If a doctrine stands this test, there is no immediate danger of being led into the fires of hell by its adoption.

The doctrines of the latter-day work are but expansions of the principle of love in its application to present-day conditions. They express the judgments of reason; they are confirmed by human experience; and they agree with what has been written in the past. Their superlative authority consists in their adaptability to the purpose of preparing man for a place in the celestial world.

The Latter-Day Work. Revelation in Relation to Human Needs

"Behold, I will send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me."—Malachi 3:1. The experiences of the race emphasize the limitations of human understanding. Men and nations have shifted from one theory or practice to another in multitudinous vain attempts to solve the problem of human need. The divergent and contradictory opinions which have thrived side by side, or contemporaneously, and the persistence of this confusion, all serve to argue the need of a Father's advice.

It is inconceivable that a God of love, all wise and omnipotent, could exist who would view the struggles and sufferings of humanity without affording such advice from time to time as the circumstances of human experience give room for.

It is not enough that God has spoken in ages past, for much of what was said has either been lost in transition or so colored by the opinions of translators, the traditions of ages, or private interests, that it no longer expresses the divine mind on the matters in question. The persistence, side by side, of universally popular and yet contradictory creeds and opposing religious bodies led by the most astute minds and consecrated talent the world knows, affords ample proof of the truth of what we have just said. The situation is very well described by Willard L. Sperry in the Atlantic Monthly. The average man takes an interest in denominational and social causes. "But their name is legion, and any selection of them for the purposes of public worship was [is] arbitrary. He feels as if the parts were getting in the way of the whole. The trouble with his moral and spiritual life was just that he could not see the wood for the trees. And the church, so far from giving him a total perspective and helping him unify his life, was merely adding to his confusion and distraction." (The latter-day work is unique in that it regards life as a unity—conduct as a whole.)

This is the state of affairs that the Master of men said

would exist when he answered the question: "Tell us . . . what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" And he answered: "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name [i. e., by the authority of Christ, supposedly] saying that I am Christ, and shall deceive many."—Matthew 24:3-8. To deceive: To lead into error; this, we prefer to believe, is what the Master meant. "If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch." That Jesus is Christ, many religious leaders, whose interpretations of Christianity are contradictory, have and do maintain. The fervor and the devotion of these opposing leaders impress mankind with their sincerity. And multitudes whose minds are not trained to suppress emotion or to ignore popular sentiment while reason inquires into truth are deceived into the belief that these self-appointed champions of the cause of Christ, as they interpret it, are the exponents of the way of life. But, as everyone ought to know, this contradictory leadership has served to increase the already existing confusion, and not to set the feet either of men or nations in the way of life.

In view of such conditions, it had already been determined that "I [God] will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." A divine message—a means adapted to the end; a doctrine calling for discipline in the field in which development is sought. The context fixes the time of this revelation as just before the day "that shall burn as an oven," the second coming of Christ. And the developments in the religious world for some centuries have served to pave the way for this restatement of Christian doctrine, and especially its application to modern conditions. And Latter Day Saints submit their claim that God has sent his messenger; and this modern revelation or restoration of the Christian church and the errand upon which it has been sent is to us the latter-day work.

Personal prejudices arising from misinformation or lack of data give rise to intense feelings of contempt—sometimes hatred by Christians, so called—for leaders and their converts, and render it impossible to form a rational judgment on the work that is done. The message, not the man; that is the matter of importance. The work, the doctrine definitely expressed, and announced or outlined with formal exactness; this interpretation of the meaning of experience—this is what we call the latter-day work.

The Man or the Prophet

A human instrumentality, but a divine message. Sentiment, tradition, and habits of thought have much to do with the judgments that are formed on this question. All we can say is that "if I [we] do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works." The work of the man as a prophet is the thing we have in contemplation.

Of course such a work demands a human instrumentality; but once the instrument has functionated, has delivered its message, the message becomes the matter to be taken into deliberation with a view to determining its value by its inherent qualities. This is the task we have set before ourselves in this treatise.

In judging the latter-day work, or in judging the relative values of the pronouncements of any man, we should distinguish between Paul saying, "Repent ye," and Paul instructing to "let your women keep silence in the churches"; between Peter of Pentecost and Peter following "afar off." The formal official and approved communications of a prophet to a church are one thing, and the acts of that same man in private matters which might be influenced by feelings of personal interests or ambitions may be quite different things. The written constitution of the church and its logical implications may be quite at variance with the acts of men who attempt to actualize the ideal in human experience. The latter-day work is to be tested, not by the administrative precedents of the past, but by the harmony of its doctrines with our judgments of the specific provisions and the implications of the written word; or else by its harmony with the judgments of reason. Either method will serve to vindicate it.

(To be continued.)

The Former and Latter Rains—Part 4

By T. W. Williams

Variety of Climate

The following is taken from Smith's Bible Dictionary published in 1869:

"In a country composing as many varieties of elevation as Palestine there must of necessity occur corresponding varieties of climate. An account that might correctly describe the peculiarities of the district of Lebanon would be in many respects inaccurate when applied to the deep depressions and almost tropical climate of Jericho. In any general statement, therefore, allowance must be made for not inconsiderable local variations. Compared with England, Palestine would be a country in which rain would be much less frequent than with ourselves. Contrasted with the districts most familiar to the Children of Israel before their settlement in the land of promise, Egypt and the desert, rain might be spoken of as one of its distinguishing characteristics.

"For six months in the year no rain falls and the harvests are gathered in without any of the anxiety with which we are so familiar lest the work be interrupted by unseasonable storms. In this respect at least the climate has remained unchanged since the time when Boaz slept by her heap of corn; and the sending thunder and rain in wheat harvest was a miracle which filled the people with fear and wonder. . . .

"It is urged that the very expression 'flowing with milk and honey' implies abundant rains to keep alive the grass for the pastures of the numerous herds supplying milk and to nourish the flowers clothing the now bare hillsides, from whence the bees might gather their stores of honey. It is urged that the supply of rain in its due season seems to be promised as contingent upon the fidelity of the people (Deuteronomy 11: 13-15; Leviticus 26: 3-5); and that as from time to time, to punish the people for their transgression, the showers have been withholden and there hath been no latter rain (Jeremiah 3: 3; 1 Kings 17: 18;) so now, in the great and long continued apostasy of the Children of Israel, there has come upon even the land of their forfeited inheritance a like long-continued withdrawal of the favor of God, who claims the sending of rain as one of his special prerogatives. (Jeremiah 14: 22.)

"The early rains, it is urged, are by comparison scanty and interrupted, the latter rains have altogether ceased, and hence, it is maintained, the curse has been fulfilled. Without entering here into the consideration of the justness of the interpretation which would assume these predictions of the withholding of rain to be altogether different in the manner of their infliction from the other calamities denounced in these chapters of threatening, it would appear that, as far as the question of fact is concerned, there is scarcely sufficient reason to imagine that any great and marked changes with respect to the rains have taken place in Palestine. In early days, as now, rain was unknown for half the year and, if we may judge from the allusions in Proverbs 16: 15, Job 29: 23, the latter rain was even then, while greatly desired and longed for, that which was somewhat precarious by no means to be absolutely counted on as a matter of course."

Comments on Joel 2: 23

"If we are to take as correct our translation of Joel 2: 23 the latter rain in the first (month) i. e., Nisan or Abib, answering to the latter part of March and early part of April, the times of the latter rains in the days of the prophets would coincide with those in which it falls now. The same conclusion would be arrived at from Amos 4: 7: 'I have withholden the rain from you when there were yet three months to the harvest.' The rain here spoken of is the latter rain, and an interval of three months between the ending of the rain and the beginning of the harvest would seem to be in an average year as exceptional now as it was when Amos noted it as a judgment of God.

"We may infer also from the Songs of Solomon 2: 11-13 where is given a poetical description of the bursting forth of vegetation in the spring that when the winter was past, the rain also was over and gone. We can hardly, by any extension of the term winter, bring it down to a later period than that during which the rain still falls."—Dictionary of Bible, Article Palestine, p. 2318, Edition of 1869.

This prophecy of Joel has been used to support the argument that God did curse the land with the consequent cessation of rain and the desolate condition of the land. It has been urged that the land to-day has been blessed, and the promise made in verses 23 to 27 has been fulfilled. This is scarcely possible. This promise was contingent on the full repentance of Israel; it was to follow a siege wherein some "northern army" would be worsted and the Israelites would be triumphant. After full contrition on the part of the people and their return to the laws of the Lord then would he bless them. It will be noted that this prophecy was given 800 years before Christ. Verses 28 to 32 have not been fulfilled in their entirety even now. In no sense can this chapter be used to confirm the contention that the rains ceased some eighteen hundred years ago and were restored.

"It may be added that travelers have, perhaps unconsciously, exaggerated the barrenness of the land from confining themselves too closely to the southern portion of Palestine. The northern portion of Galilee, of such peculiar interest to the readers of the Gospels, is fertile and beautiful. (See Stanley's Sinai and Palestine, Chapter X, and Van de Velde there quoted, and, in his description of the Valley of Nablus, the ancient Sechem.)—Ibid., p. 2666.

Robinson becomes almost enthusiastic in describing this Valley:

"Here a scene of luxuriant and almost unparalleled verdure burst upon our scene. The whole valley was filled with gardens of vegetables and orchards of all kinds of fruits, watered by several fountains, which burst forth in several parts and flow westward in refreshing streams. It came upon us suddenly, like a scene of fairy enchantment. We saw nothing like it in all Palestine."—Biblical Research, vol. 1, p. 275.

Pools of Solomon

Doctor Smith gives a very glowing description of the condition of the Pools of Solomon. He evidently knew nothing of a miraculous return of the rains, neither did Doctor Robinson, nor yet any of the men who were on the ground. A singular occurrence like this would not have been overlooked by all of them.

"The valley of Urtas, south of Bethlehem, contains springs which in abundance and excellence rival even those of Nablus. The huge Pools of Solomon are enough to supply a district for many miles round them and the cultivation going on in the neighborhood shows what might be done with a soil which requires only irrigation and a modern amount of labor to evoke a boundless produce."—Ibid., vol. 3, p. 2292.

It is undisputed that the lack of cultivation, the breaking down of the terraces, the abandonment of the irrigation systems, together with the denuding of the land, has had a very bad effect as to water storage in the soil as well as for irrigation and domestic purposes.

Doctor Smith continues:

"It is obvious that in the ancient days of the nation, when Judah and Benjamin possessed the teeming population indicated in the Bible, the condition and aspect of the country must have been very different. . . . That the numerous population knew how most effectually to cultivate this rock territory is shown by the remains of their ancient terraces which constantly meet the eye, the only mode of husbanding so scarcely a coating of soil and preventing it being washed by the torrents into the valleys. . . . But besides this forests seem to have stood in many parts of Judah until the repeated invasions and sieges caused their fall and the wretched government of the Turks prevented their reinstatement and all this vegetation must have reacted on the moisture of the climate and by preserving the water in many a ravine and natural reservoir where now it is rapidly dried by the fierce sun of the early summer, must have influenced materially the look and resources of the country."—Vol. 3, p. 2294.

Cause of Barrenness

"The causes of the present barrenness of the country are two which indeed can hardly be separated. The first is the destruction of the timber in that long series of sieges and invasions which began with the invasion of Shishak and has not yet (1869) come to an end. This, by depriving the soil and the streams of shelter from the burning sun, at once made, as it invariably does, the climate more arid than before and doubtless diminished the rainfall.

"The second is the decay of the terraces necessary to retain the soil on the steep slopes and the roundhills. This decay is owing to the general unsettlement and insecurity which have been the lot of the poor little country almost ever since the Babylonish contest. The terraces once gone there was nothing to prevent the soil which they supported being washed away by the heavy rains of winter, and it is hopeless to look for a renewal of the wood or for any real improvement in the general face of the country until they have been first reestablished. This cannot happen, to any extent, until a just and firm government shall give confidence to the inhabitants."—Ibid., vol. 3, p. 2317.

The water supply of Palestine is abundant. . . . The rainfall of Palestine is between twenty and thirty inches annually, and the rainy season is the same as in other Mediterranean countries. In most years the supply is quite sufficient for purposes of cultivation."—International Standard Bible Dictionary, p. 2209.

"There appears to be no reason to suppose that climate or rainfall have undergone any change since the time of the Bible; and a consideration of Bible allusions confirms this view. Thus, the occurrence of drought, and of consequent famine, is mentioned in the Old Testament as occasional in all times. (See Genesis 12: 10; 26: 2; 41: 50; Leviticus 26: 20; 25: 1; 1 Kings 8: 35; Isaiah 5: 6; Jeremiah 14: 1; Joel 1: 10-12; Haggai 1: 11; Zechariah 4: 17.)—International Standard Bible Dictionary, p. 2209.

Diary for 1817

The following is copied from Letters From Palestine, being a "Description of a tour through Galilee and Judah during 1817." The book was published in 1819. Speaking of the River Adonis near Tripoli the writer remarks:

"At certain seasons, the waters are tinged with a vermilion hue, arising from a stratum of red earth particles of which are periodically washed by the violence of the rains into the current."—Letters From Palestine, p. 2.

Writing from Nazareth on August 10, 1817, the author, speaking of the River Kishon, said:

"At this season of the year, the stream is very inconsiderable; but in the rainy months the greater part of the waters which are collected on Mount Carmel are discharged in a variety of small torrents into the channel, which being insufficient for such augmentation, the current overflows its bounds, and carries away everything within its reach."—Ibid., p. 25.

Notes From a Diary of 1821

We submit several excerpts from the Diary of a Tour Through Southern India, Egypt and Palestine, during the years 1821-2. Under date of March 1, 1822, the author remarks:

"The celebrated and often described cisterns of Solomon, are reservoirs of water, three in number lying up the valley one beyond another, and each of them is said to have sufficient depth to float a first-rate ship of the line. When we saw them they were all full, which is an unusual circumstance, and proceeds from the heavy rains which have fallen this year (1822)."—Page 312.

"In the very dry season, the only water with which Jerusalem is supplied, excepting what is procured from its reservoirs for rain, comes from these cisterns, and is conducted there by an aqueduct also attributed to Solomon."—Ibid., p. 312.

John Murray of London in 1858 published a Handbook for Travelers in Syria and Palestine. It contains the following:

"In Palestine the autumnal rains commence about the latter end of October or the beginning of November; in Labanon they are a month earlier; they are usually accompanied with thunder and lightning, they continue for two or three days, not constantly, but falling chiefly during the night; for the two succeeding months they fall heavily at intervals. . . . While I pen these lines in the old city of Damascus the snow is eight inches deep in the terrace of my library."

Jerusalem Always Supplied

"Jerusalem lies in a rocky, limestone region, throughout which fountains and wells are comparatively rare. In the city itself little of any living water is known, and in its immediate vicinity are only the three small fountains in the lower part of the Valley of Jehoshaphat. Yet with all this disadvantage of position the Holy City would appear always to have had a full supply of water for its inhabitants. In the numerous sieges to which it has been exposed from the earliest ages to the present there is nowhere read of any want of water within the city.

"It will thus be a matter of some little interest to every visitor to the Holy City to examine the remains of ancient cisterns and aqueducts, and to see with his own eyes how a city so densely populated, so much frequented, so singularly situated was abundantly supplied with water. . . . Jerusalem is at present supplied with water from its cisterns."—Ibid., p. 135.

Does the following suggest a dearth of rain?

"The rains descend in the spring and autumn. The early rains begin to fall about the middle of November. They generally set in with strong winds from the west which continue to blow at intervals till the end of February. They sometimes rise nearly to the violence of an Indian monsoon—the rain pouring down in torrents for three or four successive days and nights, sweeping away the produce of the fields and the soil on which it grew—the flocks and herds, and human dwellings, with the hapless inmates, in one promiscuous ruin. Such a ruin David appears to contemplate in Psalms 42: 6."—Ibid., p. 110, 111.

(To be continued.)

Elders Lee Quick and Edward Rannie are holding tent meetings in Butler, Missouri, in a good location in that town.

Happiness cannot come from without. It must come from within. It is not that which we see or touch or feel, or that which others do for us that makes us happy—it is that which we think and feel and do first "for the other fellow," and then for ourselves.—Helen Keller.

When the fight begins within himself,
A man's worth something.

—Browning.

Knowledge and timber shouldn't be much used till they are seasoned.—Holmes.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

What About Our Girls?

Very much is being said and written about the girls of to-day. Papers and magazines teem with articles for and against their ways, their words, their dress and ideals. Some think they are headed straight for destruction, while others, probing beneath externals, find their hearts are sweet, pure, and wholesome.

Not condoning what is intrinsically wrong in its nature, we feel to express a confidence in the daughters of to-day, and a belief that in spite of seeming frivolity they are being molded into intelligent, efficient women of sterling worth and value. If they are not, the shame is upon us, and the girls themselves are least of all to blame. Something is lacking in their training, in the example being set by their elders, or something pernicious in the modern trend of the whole Nation.

This latter we are indeed loath to concede. We believe in the upward trend of humanity, and the all-pervading and all-conquering nature of the mission and spirit of Christ, which cannot have been reigning in the world for these two thousand years fruitlessly. True, the world is to become "ripe in iniquity," but can we not feel that this applies more accurately to adult wrongdoing than to youthful thoughtlessness?

We are encouraged to read occasionally a word written in defense of the spirit of the young, and to note their cause ably championed. Faith works many miracles; who shall deny the power for good exerted by a single thought of confidence, of love, and trust, and assurance? Young people do try to live up to the good opinions of those about them. Decry them, discredit their motives, arraign their purity and desires, and you weaken their powers of resistance to evil. They are likely to develop a "might-as-well-have-the-game-as-the-name" spirit, and come to believe that there is no use in anyone struggling against demoralization in this day and age of the world!

When will we, as a people, learn to go deeper than the outside and the apparent, as we study our young people? When will we come to see clearly that back of the shams and the wrong dressing, back of the slang and the dance, lie principles of conduct and ideals which have been established by parents and teachers, by associates and communities, by generations and nationalities, all of which will dominate in spite of these externals? In other words, when a young person goes wrong, why blame the immediate cause of the downfall, instead of the underlying causes, which are the lack of training, paucity of noble ideals, and absence of religious motives and spiritual urgings which should have been, from infancy (and indeed from generations) instilled into his character and life habits?

We would not shut unbelieving and unwilling eyes, nor lull ourselves into any sense of false security. Our duty is too plain before us, as parents. But let us rather pin our faith upon the all-accomplishing power of good and love, of the upward influence of correct example, and the regenerating force of Christian principles, and then see to it, that our young people shall have every benefit which can accrue to them from a liberal use of these things! We will have about all we can do to set the proper example in morality and spirituality, and to express unwaveringly a firm reliance upon heavenly power, for that will mean that we must look the situation squarely in the face, study it from every possible angle, and learn to apply to its problems every scientific and religious principle found to be true. Child training in all its ramifications should be the one great study before parents, in order that righteousness (rightdoing) may prevail, and evil be crowded out by good!

Let us believe in our girls, deal gently with their passing vanities, and in wisdom point out to them, with love and confidence expressed, the better paths. Never, never let them hear from our lips anything that will discourage, or cause them to believe there is no use in their trying to reach our ideals for them!

A. A.

The Modern Girl

The modern girl and her mode of personal adornment have stood a lot of knocking from those who sigh for the "good old days," but now the "m. g." has found a staunch defender. Mary Ross Potter, dean of women at Northwestern University, answers the oft-uttered question: "What's the matter with the girl of to-day?" by declaring: "Not a thing."

"There is nothing wrong with the girl of to-day because she uses a lip stick and a little rouge and a dab of powder," Dean Potter said.

"Of course, the dress of the girl of to-day—skirt to knees almost, flimsy stockings, flimsy everything—is not the dress of mother's generation. Nevertheless, she is sweet and good and kind at heart.

"She has independence—a bit of frivolousness—that did not belong to her mother's day. She doesn't like to be ordered about. She wants to hold up her head and go her way as she sees that way.

"But such a spirit is the spirit of the times. It is the result of the war. Our soldiers felt that when they came home after serving their country no one had a right to order them around—regulate their every move. And I believe they were right, too.

"The girl of to-day has that spirit. There is the frequent criticism that our present-day girls prefer business careers to marriage. Yet they are most affectionate and exceedingly emotional, too emotional, I think.

"It is true we have more delinquents than formerly. That, too, is a sign of the times, and a very great problem. I hope we will face it bravely and solve it."—Exchange.

Flapper Queen

What little game is this you play,
Dusting your nose with powdered chalk,
Lining your lips with a color as gay
As the bubbling argot you talk?

Strutting along like a mannequin queen,
Smirking in mirrors, treading on air,
What are the fancies that flit through your brain?
What's on your mind besides curly brown hair?

We who are older and more worldly wise
Smile at your make-up and say you're a scream;
Yet we'd trade what we know for the light in your eyes,
And swap all our gold for your dream.
—Emmet Crozier.

Youth

Do ye know, ye graybeards all,
The world is made for youth?
Ye scheme and sigh and wag your heads,
The world is made for youth.

War-torn and sad, and frenzied grown,
The world is saved by youth,
With courage high and vision clear,
The world is saved by youth.

Forbear to stifle brilliant dreams,
Let us be fair to youth.
Give them their joy of fleeting days,
Let us be fair to youth.

The Atlas load of our mistakes
Will wear away their youth.
We must give love and meed of praise,
The world is made for youth.

—C. M.

"Short-Haired Women"

Driven back to the last trench, man is now trying to dictate the proper length of women's hair. In issuing an order against bobbed heads the president of a great insurance company may be attempting more than he can accomplish. Men used to wear their hair long, and at another period they wore wigs; no doubt in those days there was strong feeling on the part of dignified and conventional persons against all tendency to a change of custom. There is quite a flutter now over the flurry of bobbed heads among girls, and what started as a passing fad may yet be boomed into a complete revolution by the advertisement given it by the opposition of men.

There was a time when women wore rings through their noses, and no doubt the first daughters of the primitive who decided to leave them off were treated to ostracism or something stronger. Turkish women who uncover their faces are a source of astonishment to the elders, and Chinese girls who have unbound their feet have also violated ancient convention.

Among the whirling wheels of the factories women operators have found short hair gives greater safety. There are others who plead that it is cooler and more comfortable and healthful. "Long-haired men and short-haired women" has long been a phrase of contempt for Bohemians and eccentrics, and this connection may have something to do with the opposition of this Eastern employer, although he will possibly find that it is not he, but the women themselves, who will decide.—Exchange.

Dress

III. HAIR DRESSING

A woman's hair has been called her crown of glory. Brother Paul Hanson, in an afternoon talk at the Stone Church in Independence, related a miracle of healing God performed for a young sister afflicted with a disease that would cause her head to become entirely bald. In the performing of that healing God surely answered any criticism that might be made upon a woman's right to use her "crown" to the best advantage to really enhance her beauty.

So much criticism is current just now about the way women and girls dress their hair. Part of it is surely justified. Some is not. To dress hair to advantage one must adopt a mode suited to her own figure, shape of head and face. Because Mary Jane can wear the present "cootie garage" style is no indication that Alice Marie can do so.

Women who are really careful always to dress their hair becomingly adopt one or two coiffures suited to themselves and refrain from making radical departure from the accepted style. It is said Queen Mary of England in her early womanhood called in a famous artist hair dresser to help her determine the style of coiffure best suited to herself and has never departed from the general mode decided upon at that time. Her daughter, Princess Mary, who is said to resemble her mother strongly, has adopted much the same manner of hair dressing her mother has always used.

It would be well for each of us to follow Queen Mary's example and remember in making the decision to look at ourselves from all angles; not front view alone, but side and back as well. There should be no sharp angles, lines, or pronounced knobs, etc.

Some helpful suggestions appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal not long since. They read as follows: "Begin by studying your profile. If you have a pug nose, do not put your hair on top your head; if you have a round, fat face, do not fluff your hair out too much at the sides; if your face is very thin and long, then you should fluff your hair out at the sides. The woman with the full face and double chin should wear her hair high. All these and other individual features must be taken into consideration in selecting the proper hairdress. Above all, simplicity should prevail. You are always most attractive when your hair looks most natural—when it looks most like you."

Fluffy hair and curls lend themselves most readily to varying ways of "doing up," but straight locks in healthy condition, well cared for, can be arranged in becoming styles also. Just at present the ridiculous and often disgusting extreme of ear puffs is having its day. Ear puffs done up as they should be wouldn't be so bad, but when they develop into a couple of door knobs with a third at the nape of the neck there is simply no beauty in them and they detract from the girl's really good points.

You may remember a few years ago the upturned bowl—rats they were called—adorned the back of the head of most of our high school girls. There was one thin-faced little girl, I recall. She possessed an average amount of "good looks" and an abundance of beautiful brown hair. She wore a "rat" larger than her face and by the time she disposed of her own hair over the rat, she presented a laughable picture. She could have been very attractive, and is to-day a charming young matron without her rat and no ear puffs, either. She has learned to do her hair so that it "looks like her."

BERTHA L. MADER.

The Women's Department in Denver, and the Work in General

It is fourteen years since we came to Denver to live, and Sister Schmuz was then in charge of the Daughters of Zion, also the Aid Society. She solicited my help immediately, and I was glad to assist her in a work I considered so important.

There was no branch in my home town, but I was getting some education in women's work in the home and child department of the women's club, and with the state board of the Mother's Congress. I was happy to be working, now, with the women of the church.

Sister Schmuz was a pioneer in the educational work of the women of the Denver Branch, and was an efficient and interested worker. Sister Mae Everett succeeded her as chairman of the aid society and I as chairman of the Daughters of Zion. We decided to have a joint meeting, using the printed leaflets and having a study hour, then a program, with music and refreshments and a silver collection. Through all the changes of name we have adhered to the same general plan.

During this time the church was built and the women assisted in raising the money. Sister Everett moved away, after a long term of splendid work, and that left things in my hands.

I liked the name, Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service, and, when advised so to do, we organized according to the plan outlined by the general society, in departments, and here used the suggestions given in the programs for our work. We have had a great deal of child study, and many subjects which came under the educational or miscellaneous departments. We studied foods one whole year (only a beginning), and considered much that the health department is now advocating as an important part of church work.

The relief and service department was very thoroughly organized under Sister Alice Cowan. A large number of members was selected, people living in different parts of the city, and work in the different neighborhoods was reported at the monthly meetings, and plans made and carried out. Bible readings and discussion, short papers and readings, beautiful poems, etc., has been the order of exercises, with prayers for the sick, the afflicted, the mentally burdened, or spiritually distressed. We met sometimes with those who were shut in or with those who were not in the habit of attending the regular meeting of the main body, at the church.

"Showers" for expectant mothers have been held; and food and clothing collected, especially at Thanksgiving and Christmas time; and distributed to those who were in need of help. Sister Ella Brannan, who has been chairman of this department, is to be succeeded by Sister Fenn.

We may all take this as an incentive in this work of service: "Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort whereunto we ourselves are comforted of God."

We have used the home and child welfare leaflets for study; just now we have the lessons put together with fasteners, a dozen sets, to loan to mothers or expectant mothers. Sister Nellie Williams is chairman of the department.

We have used some of the food and the body leaflets, and will study more of them later. We aim to keep in touch and in line with the general Women's Department.

We are a department of the church as the Sunday school and Religio are departments. We must consider ourselves an important part of the church work, cooperating with the church officials and aiding in any way possible.

Under Sister Nellie Sampson we made a good beginning in the public speaking lessons. We hope to continue that study some time, as also that of sociology. We are now having a class in English literature, taught by Brother Hale W. Smith.

The younger women are qualifying so there is no question but that the work will be continued after some of us retire and give them a chance. Sister Ethel Fishburn is our vice president; Sister Lillie Beardsmore, secretary; Sister Sophie Bruno, treasurer; Sister Bertha Black, chairman of the miscellaneous department; Sister Laura Gilbert, director of the young women's department; Sister Ethel Williams, monitor of the circle of older girls; Sister Katharine Keck of the younger girls.

The work was organized and had a good start under Sister Blanche Sampson and it is our wish that it be carried forward and not be allowed to lag.

The home department gives all an opportunity to do some studying, if they cannot attend the regular sessions. The cradle roll gathers in the little folks when they are too young to go to Sunday school.

Do you see any excuse for the little girls, the big girls, the young women, the older women, the mothers, not working somewhere? We may reach out and pick up, not only crumbs, but whole loaves to satisfy the inner craving, and which will give strength, not only for words, but deeds.

"Work," says Henry Ford, "is the secret of keeping young; work, and duty, and faith. Faith in yourself and other men"—or other women. Faith in the children, in what they may become. What they will become is better, for a positive faith is what we need.

Work for the children, for the youth of the church, when the mind is plastic, the heart fresh and sweet and unhurt by the world, is the most important thing on earth.

The "eternal quest for perfection" should make us active in assisting in a great work. And I do not know of an organization of women which so splendidly gives an opportunity for an all-around education. What we need is the will, not only to make a start, but to continue.

No one is going to do this work for us. It depends upon ourselves individually—what are we going to do for ourselves that we may become more efficient, that we may become intelligent workers?

Some have objected to child study, when there were a number who had no children. Child study is so important that it does not hurt anyone to take it up. There are some boys in our teacher training class, studying From One to Twenty-one and A Study of Child Nature.

Many a woman who has no children of her own is a Sunday school teacher, and she will be greatly aided in that teaching if she has a knowledge of many things pertaining to child nature. And she will be a better neighbor to the children next door if she knows more about the whole race of them.

Education, refinement, culture, should be our aim. If religion is not refining it is not good, wholesome religion. Rough and boisterous natures are often tamed down, quieted, made gentle and sweet, by education and religion.

We might term the whole system of the Women's Department a school of religious education, for there is nothing laid down on the program which is not good and wholesome and educational and refining; and we have been admonished to study, to gain a knowledge of countries and places and many things. We have ample offers of assistance in improving ourselves, and above all to assist in educating the children.

"There are some things in the great wisdom of the Almighty that he has left us to do for ourselves."

HORTENSE SELLON CRAMER.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXIX

Amusements and Social Life

1. In summing up some of the conclusions reached in the foregoing chapters what does the author say of the play of children up to school age?

2. In the next stages how do children play?

3. What is true in the gang period?

4. How do the girls differ from the boys at this age?

5. Of what do their amusements consist when they are older?

6. Why is the amusement question an important problem?

7. What is the importance of the play instinct?

8. How may parents encourage and guide the play instinct?

9. Why do parents often fail to appreciate the desire for excitement and good times of their young people?

10. Why do young people like pleasures which merely pass the time?

11. What would you suggest as a means of providing for the dramatic instinct?

12. What may be done to supervise and guide the sex attraction?

13. What may be said against public amusements?

14. What position has the church taken in regard to amusements for the young?

15. If certain amusements have been condemned, what constructive measures have been taken to solve the recreational problems of the young?

16. Have these things proven a success?

17. What is the place of the home in supplying this need?

18. How may the dramatic instinct be satisfied in the home or church?

19. What is the field of the church in solving the amusement problems of its young people?

20. Suggest means by which it may be done.

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Ban Against Powder Big Hit With Mothers

AUSTIN, TEXAS, February 17.—An order issued here yesterday by Doctor M. M. Carrick, state health officer, prohibiting the use of rouge and face powder by young women employed in his department, evidently met with the approval of mothers, according to the doctor. He said he had received many telegrams and letters approving his action.

For Cleaning Stains

Many fabrics when wet with a cleanser show only the outline of the stain. To obviate the difficulty, blotting paper should be placed under the stain to be cleaned and a circle of French chalk or fuller's earth spread around it. This will define the outer edge of the stain and will absorb the cleanser when it spreads, thus preventing the unsightly ring which is often left. When sponging a stain commence at the outside and work toward the center. Spreading of the grease is thus avoided.

It is always safer to test the cleanser on a scrap of the material to see that the color is not affected. Chloroform and ether are valuable grease solvents for delicate fabrics.

LETTERS

Graceland College

(Special Correspondence)

Dedication of the New Building

The new building at Graceland College, for which the ground was broken in December, 1919, and which was ready for occupation in April, 1921, was formally dedicated Friday, September 16, with President Frederick M. Smith as the principal speaker of the occasion.

The program was unique, in that it had members representing the first board of trustees, the first student body, the first faculty, and the donors of the site of the college.

Opening.

Invocation.

"Going back to the beginnings."

Presiding Daniel Anderson, Member of the first board of trustees and continuously thereafter for nineteen years.

Music.

Turning over the building by the Bishopric.

I. A. Smith of the Presiding Bishopric. A member of the first student body.

Receiving the building by the present board of trustees.

A. Carmichael, chairman of the board.

Dedicatory prayer.

J. A. Gunsolley, of the first faculty.

Vocal Solo.

Addresses.

Mrs. M. Walker, one of the donors of the site and among the first with a vision of College Hill.

W. A. Hopkins, one of the donors of the site.

Lena Lambert Graham, of the first student body.

"Graceland's first quarter of a century."

Leonard Lea, of the present student body.

"Graceland's next quarter of a century."

Music.

Dedicatory Address.

President Frederick M. Smith, of the first graduating class.

"Graceland's place in the program of the church."

Music.

Benediction.

The New Dormitory Arrangement

About forty college boys will make their home in the old Herald Publishing House building. This will not interfere with the stake bishopric and presidency in keeping their headquarters in the same building. The boys will occupy some of the larger rooms as sleeping rooms, for which new beds, bedding, and furniture have been purchased. There will be a study hall on first floor, a clubroom and a gymnasium in the basement for those who want recreation, and kitchen and dining rooms where the meals will be prepared and served. Everything is being done to make a comfortable home for the boys.

Part of the girls in attendance will occupy the third floor of the new building. The large classrooms of that floor have been divided up into cozy smaller rooms, in each of which two or three girls will be quite comfortable. One classroom is fitted as a general reception room where the girls may meet.

There will be between fifty and sixty girls in the new building.

Sister Vida Smith will this year continue her position as dean of women, and mother to both girls and boys, for which all of them are grateful. She has endeared herself to a great many students, and they regard her as their staunchest friend.

The Faculty

The Graceland faculty, for which the board of trustees has spared no pains in securing the best trained and most efficient members obtainable, will this year be larger than ever before, will enable the college to maintain the high standard of instruction that has been characteristic of the past few years, and will be a large factor in sustaining the high regard and good will with which an increasing number of other institutions are coming to regard her. The faculty has increased from the number of ten a few years ago to twenty-five at the present time, and includes the heads of departments who will be able to specialize in building up the particular part of the work. Its members represent a large number of the finest universities in the country. Some of them are: University of Iowa, Iowa State College, Iowa State Teachers College, Chicago, Northwestern, Kansas, Clark, Temple, Nebraska, Minnesota, Montana, Columbia College of Expression, State College of Kansas, State Normal School of Kansas, New England Conservatory of Music, and Des Moines University.

The faculty of the present year follows:

George N. Briggs, President.

J. A. Gunsolley, Principal of Commercial School.

Floyd M. McDowell, Psychology and Education.

Charles E. Irwin, Social Science.

Gustav A. Platz, Science.

R. H. Mortimore, Mathematics.

June Whiting, English and Public Speaking.

Lonzo Jones, Religious Education.

Hazel Putman, History.

Hugo H. Gold, Director of Teacher Training.

Elizabeth Trachsel, English.

Johannes C. Bergman, Romance Languages.

Alva R. Gilbert, Shorthand and Typewriting.

Belle H. Royce, English.

Vivian McElroy, Foreign Languages.

Vergie McCray, Home Economics.

Peter Muceus, Norse.

J. H. Anthony, Band and Orchestra Instruments and Directing.

Belle Patterson, Piano and Harmony.

Mabel Carlile, Voice—Public School Music.

J. H. Johnson, Physical Education for Men.

Mrs. J. H. Johnson, Physical Education for Women.

Myrtle A. Radmall, Health.

Mabel M. States, Health.

Lonzo Jones, Dean of Men.

Vida E. Smith, Dean of Women.

Lyda Elefson, Librarian and Curator.

Appreciated Gifts

Bishop John Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, has done a very generous thing for the college. Having visited here last summer, he felt that he would like to do something for the college. He is sending a large rug for the reception room in the new building, smaller rugs for each of the girls' rooms, curtains and draperies. Selections were made by Vida E. Smith while in the East. The college authorities and students are very grateful for the kind gifts.

Arrived Safely at Isle of Pines

Finds conditions favorable and situation pleasing.

I arrived this morning in the Isle of Pines all O. K. Brother Tordoff met me in Havana yesterday, or rather I met him, at the depot, for I got in from Key West before his train arrived from the Isle. He did not get your letter stating that I would be there on Friday until about ten minutes before the boat left for Havana, so he could not get there in time to meet the boat I was on, but I got along nicely. After I got my trunk inspected, accompanied by the Presbyterian teacher of whom I wrote in the first letter, I went to the depot to meet the train that Brother Tordoff came in on. We recognized each other at once.

Both nights on the water were delightful, especially last night. It was as smooth as glass. They were the best part of my trip. I did not get a bit sick on the boat, but can't say so much for the train, for after the first night I was sick one night and day. The boat from Batabano to the Isle could not be better, and in the morning about an hour before landing, it is just great. We came right up between the mountains, with the breeze so fresh and water so beautiful, I did not feel like I wanted to leave the boat, for the town is not as attractive. Still, it is pretty; the mountains all around us, but no street cars or telephones. Yet we do have autos, so it is not so bad as it might be. But one must get busy and be in love with his work, then it won't be so bad.

Brother Tordoff certainly is a very consecrated, energetic man for a place like this. Has made a great many friends. His wife is much better; in fact, you would not think by looking at her she was sick at all.

I did not finish this letter Saturday as I started, for they came to take me out riding, so I will tell you about our services yesterday. We had a fine Sunday school in the morning. At 3 p. m. had sacrament and testimony meeting. There were ten of us members, and I never attended a better meeting than we had, for the Lord was with us all through the meeting. One brother was called to the office of teacher and another to the office of deacon. Then Brother Tordoff spoke in prophecy to me, very encouragingly indeed, some the same as had been spoken to me three times there in Independence before I left. The Evil One is surely going to try me, so he said, but I should come out victorious. I surely feel I need your prayers. Brother Tordoff seems very spiritual.

We expect to start our school one week from to-day, but have the children come Wednesday to register and get a little acquainted. I have met many of them already. One of the barbers came to me this morning and wanted me to take two of his boys. He does not like the Cuban school. They were bright-looking little fellows.

Thank Brethren Harder and Fairbanks for so nobly arranging everything so nicely. They did not stop until they got me on the train, so they did their part.

I did not have to use passport, but Brother Tordoff thinks I had better keep it. They say I will have to have one when I return. The Isle belongs to Cuba, not Spain.

I must not send this letter out without telling you of the lawn party we had last night. I believe all had as good a time as if we had been in the States; children and all together. Served three kinds of sandwiches, lemonade, cake, and ice cream, and candy at the last, so you see you don't have all the good things in Zion. We have some things here we would be glad to share with you and possibly you would enjoy a few with us, that is the mosquitoes and a little black fly that has no mercy on anyone; especially when you are a foreigner they feel very free to test you and see what you are made of—see if you enjoy their music and embraces, which they so liberally bestow upon one. It seems they never tire of entertaining one just coming upon the Island, night or day. They tell me I will enjoy it after a while, but can't see it now. The druggist fixed me up something to keep them away, but must use it all the time and then it does not keep all of them away, but helps.

Sincerely,
NUEVA, GERONA, ISLE OF PINES, CUBA. F. B. PENDER.

Southwestern Kansas Reunion

Met in reunion at Wichita, Kansas, August 26, 1921, and reunion was a success.

We had with us Apostles J. F. Curtis, J. W. Curtis, and E. A. Curtis, also Patriarch Ammon White and all our local brethren, and the many grand sermons and much timely counsel that was given was joyfully accepted.

The women's work was discussed and many round table talks had upon different topics. Mrs. Alma O'Keefe, of the Red Cross of Wichita, gave us two very interesting lectures.

Brethren James Barmore and Alma Cramer, both of Hugoton, Kansas, were called and ordained to office of elder, and priest, respectively. Brother George Vickery was also recommended to be ordained to office of elder.

Many of the isolated Saints were present and the good spirit was felt through all services, especially so in the prayer meetings. At the Sunday morning prayer and sacrament meeting there were seven prayers and fifty-four testimonies, and many stood as a testimony to their Savior who were unable to say anything; then the Lord spoke to us in prophecy through his worthy servant Patriarch Ammon White, and the Holy Spirit fell on us with power, bringing joy, peace, and comfort to all present. Truly it is good to serve the Lord in the latter days.

The reunion committee was sustained; J. W. Wooten, chairman; J. F. Wilson and George Vickery.

A collection was taken Sunday evening of $83. We all feel that much good was done and much prejudice was broken down, and all the Saints go their different ways homeward rejoicing again; we feel that the reunion was a decided success.

MRS. J. N. MADDEN, Reunion Secretary.

Arkansas District Reunion

The district closed its second reunion at Bald Knob, August 28. Though it was not as well attended by the Saints of the district as had been expected, large numbers of the people of the town and neighboring community attended the meetings. At the evening services the big tent was filled to its capacity, and many were outside, seated in cars.

Many acts of courtesy were shown by those not of the

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Eurgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Some Intellectual Consideration of Immortality	889
A New Epoch for Graceland	891
Sunday School Teaching	891
Off for Australia	892
Church News	892

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

What Is the World Coming To? by James E. Bishop	893
Wanted—One Saint, by Elmer K. Patterson	894

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

God's Hand in the History of Nations	895
--------------------------------------	-----

THE FORUM:

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work, by J. August Koehler	896
The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 4, by T. W. Williams	905

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Bertha L. Mader—Hortense Sellon Cramer—Maude Peak Parham.	907
---	-----

LETTERS

F. B. Pender—Mrs. J. N. Madden—Ida Emde.	910
--	-----

MISCELLANEOUS

	912
--	-----

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Appointments

Elder M. A. McConley, of the Quorum of Twelve, has been appointed to Australia to take charge of that mission.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 15, 1921.

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of the following:
Elder J. W. Davis, Australia, missionary.

Mrs. J. W. Davis, Australia, unordained missionary.

Mrs. M. A. McConley, Australia, unordained missionary.

Elder V. B. Etzenhouser, Utah District, Salt Lake City, objective, local.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 15, 1921.

Conference Notices

Gallands Grove, at Deloit, Iowa, October 8 and 9. Branch clerks send reports to district secretary. J. B. Barrett, president; Lena M. Talcott, secretary, Arion, Iowa.

Fremont, at Shenandoah, Iowa, October 7, 8, and 9. Friday evening, music in charge of district chorister, and lecture by H. H. Hand, Religio field worker. Children under 14 will meet under direction of district Sunday school superintendent at home of Sister Stark. Saturday, 10 a. m., prayer meeting; 11 a. m., priesthood meeting; 2.30 p. m., business meeting; 8 p. m., preaching. Sunday announcements will be made Saturday evening. C. W. Forney, secretary.

Eastern Maine, at Jonesport, October 8 and 9. A profitable season is anticipated. Send all reports to Merton L. Crowley, secretary, West Jonesport, Maine. W. E. Rogers, president.

The brethren of the Northwestern Ohio District say we misread some of their recent notice. We read Fortena when it should have been Fostoria, and Bradshaw when it should have been Bradner. See HERALD No. 37, page 886.

Eastern Michigan, at Marlette, October 15 and 16. William Sheffer, president.

Northeastern Nebraska, conference and conventions at Walthill, October 1 and 2. Jay Leeka, secretary.

Information Wanted

Wanted, the names and addresses of isolated Saints and nonmembers who may be interested in the gospel, living faith. That which the Saints appreciated most was the word of the Lord which was spoken directly to them through one of his chosen servants, encouraging them to continue their efforts to build up his kingdom in this place.

Brother Amos T. Higdon, principal speaker during the reunion, brought much joy to the Saints by his wise counsel and well-delivered sermons. His earnestness in the gospel characterized all his work, and truly the Lord does bless him with his Holy Spirit.

Brother E. A. Erwin, who never grows weary of telling the gospel story, was one of the speakers. A. E. Ziegenhorn, district president, preached several well-received sermons, as did also Brother F. O. White, president of the Bald Knob Branch. By his just dealings with the people as judge of his county, Brother White has won the faith and confidence of all who know him, and many were eager to hear him present the gospel message.

Brother J. T. Riley, our missionary in charge, lent much to the success of the reunion by his untiring efforts. He had the privilege of baptizing three precious souls at the close of the meeting.

On account of sickness, Sister Gordon, organizer of the Women's Department for the district, was not privileged to take up her work until the latter part of the reunion.

Conference of the district and Sunday school business meetings were taken up the last Friday and Saturday of the reunion.

IDA EMDE.

within a radius of twenty miles of Boston. Any information that will assist me in building up the kingdom of God in this field will be appreciated.

EDMUND J. GLEAZER, Missionary.

WEST SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, 287 Powder House Boulevard.

Book Wanted

Ingram J. McVay, 847 Virginia Avenue, Follansbee, West Virginia, would like to buy a copy of Presidency and Priesthood. The book is out of print and no longer on sale at the publishing house.

Married

ROTH-BARROWS.—On September 8, 1921, at the residence of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister W. C. Roth, Lamoni, Sister Ethel C. Roth, granddaughter of J. S. Roth, and Brother Sidney Barrows, both of Lamoni, were escorted by Sister Etha Roth, twin sister of the bride, and Brother Malcom Barrows, brother of the groom. J. S. Roth pronounced the solemn words which made the happy young couple one as husband and wife, for life.

Sister Barrows is a graduate of Lamoni high school. Brother Barrows is a graduate of Lamoni high school, also of Graceland College; and now is a student at the University at Iowa City. This young couple have bright prospects before them in starting out on the matrimonial voyage of life.

Our Departed Ones

PIERCE.—Clara Corbin was born in Nevada, Iowa, in 1887, where she grew to womanhood. Married to Gilbert Pierce, June 2, 1909. Six children were born to this union and are now bereft of a mother's care. Sister Pierce had been a sufferer for a number of years but bore it with patience and Christian fortitude. Died at Iowa City, where she had been taken to undergo an operation, August 8, 1921. Funeral service held at the Saints' church, Nevada, Iowa. Sermon by F. T. Mussell. Besides the immediate family there are left her mother, 9 sisters, and 6 brothers.

HARVEY.—Annie Harvey was born in London, England, July 14, 1849. Died September 1, 1921, at Warrensburg, Missouri. Baptized by William Newton in London, Ontario, in 1876. Married J. J. Harvey, June 22, 1876. Leaves 5 children; her husband preceded her about two years ago. In 1880 she moved to Kansas City and became one of the charter members of the Armstrong Branch. Her life of righteousness, her devotion to her family, and her faithfulness in every sphere in which she moved will keep her alive forever in loving remembrance with all who knew her. Funeral sermon by Joseph Luff, assisted by Roderick May. Services in Chelsea Park chapel.

KELLEY.—Margaret McDonald was born at Hardwood Hill, Pictou County, Nova Scotia, June 16, 1826, and was 95 years, 2 months, and 7 days of age at time of death. Married Alfred Kelley June 16, 1845, at Goderich, Ontario. To them were born 13 children, 5 of whom survive: Judith Hall, of Cedar Falls, Iowa; Hugh A., Joseph, and George David, of Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, Canada; and Emma Melvin, of Monitar, Alberta, Canada. There also survive to mourn her 32 grandchildren, 40 great-grandchildren, and 9 great-great-grandchildren. Baptized August 15, 1880, at Cuba, Kansas, by J. D. Bennett, and confirmed by J. D. Bennett and G. W. Beebe. She was a consistent and faithful Christian woman. Her genial and social disposition, her wise counsel, and lovely every-day life, won her a host of friends and endeared her to all who knew her. Died at Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, Canada, August 23, at the home of her son Hugh. Laid to rest beside her husband at Cuba, Kansas. Funeral sermon by A. P. Crooker, of Topeka, Kansas, in the Methodist church at Wayne, Kansas. Reverend E. D. Harris, pastor of the Church of the Nazarene assisted.

MOORE.—James S. Moore died at his home near Dierks, Arkansas, August 24, aged 70 years, 6 months. Born and raised in Faulkner County, Arkansas. Baptized in 1894; ordained to the office of elder shortly afterwards. Moved to Howard County in 1900, presided over the Jacksonville Branch for years, preaching as a local elder in many places in Arkansas. Was highly respected by all who knew him. Leaves a wife, 4 sons and 4 daughters. Funeral sermon at his home by J. W. Erwin.

monial voyage of life.

HENDRICKSON.—William Hendrickson was born October 13, 1862, at Little Sioux, Iowa. Married Isabel Furniss, February 8, 1897. To them were born 6 children, who with his wife, 1 sister, and 4 brothers survive him. Baptized November 17, 1901; lived a faithful member. Ordained to the office of deacon, April 6, 1902. Died at his home, September 11. Funeral from Saints' church, sermon by William Glauner. Interment in Hagerman Cemetery.

DERBY.—Doris Louise, daughter of Millard F. and Isabel Derby, died September 6. Born June 17, 1900, at Selkirk, Ontario. Leaves 3 sisters, 2 brothers, father, and mother to mourn. She suffered much, yet was blessed through administration. She was gifted musically and contributed pleasure and benefit to her friends and church associates by its expression. Funeral from her home, G. E. Harrington officiating, assisted by two of the resident clergymen.

BAILEY.—John, of Manchester, England, was born in April, 1873. Baptized August 19, 1887. Ordained to office of deacon, then priest, then elder, occupying the latter office since April, 1899. Killed in motorcycle accident, August 7, 1921. At the time of his death he held the office of counselor to the president of elders' quorum in British Isles, also vice president of Manchester District. Leaves to mourn: his wife, 2 daughters, and 4 sons. Sidney, the youngest, lies in a hospital with a broken leg from the same accident. Buried at Southern by Albert Hall. Memorial sermon by W. H. Greenwood.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

shall not any man among you have one wife; and concubines he shall not have."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, S

1921

NUMBER 39

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

EDITORIAL

"The Law of the Lord Is Perfect"

All of the commandments of God are founded on man's nature and needs.

"Th law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."—Psalms 19: 7.

"Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob."—Isaiah 41: 21.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments: his praise endureth for ever."—Psalms 111: 1, 10.

We also read in the Doctrine and Covenants that the glory of God is intelligence; in other words, light and truth. This answers once for all this question for the church.

In the various passages quoted above and in other passages in the word of God, we find emphasized again and again that the plan of God is one of intelligence. It is not only one of promise and declaration of commandments, but it is also a statement of that which is best for man. Man being constituted as he is, the law of the Lord is perfectly adapted for his good.

It is true that we do not always realize this fact clearly. We ask many times why, and wonder why an answer is not given. The reason is, doubtless, because we have not developed sufficiently to understand and receive an answer if given.

Our experience in the church of God convinces us that as rapidly as we are able to understand, his Spirit will cause us to know, will guide us into all truth, and that as we grow in understanding of the truth, more and more of these moot questions will appear plain.

Faith

"But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6.

To accomplish anything, faith is necessary, the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Even the animal creation shows a measure of faith in the making of the home, hole, or nest, although possibly most of that which they do may be explained as instinct. Man is distinctive, however, as the only animal which plans and builds, manufactures, and seeks to extend his power of seeing and hearing. Man is not content to follow his narrow pathway or instinct, but with the microscope and the telescope brings the invisible before his physical eye and, with the telephone, brings the inaudible before his ears. He is able to communicate through mighty distances and so extend his power of seeing, hearing, and feeling.

Faith is the assurance of things hoped for. No building would ever be erected were there not first in the mind at least a mental picture of the completed structure; or, if one were not sure he could complete it. No journey or other effort would be undertaken without a measure of faith.

As in the material world faith is needed before works follow, so in the spiritual realm. In the very nature of man, he must first of all have faith in God and, doing so, must believe that he is. The command to have faith is, therefore, founded in the deepest needs of man's nature, or, as Alma says, if he cannot have full faith, he can at least desire to believe to the end that he may believe, and believing, may come to know. If man has not faith in God and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him, that he who seeks will find, he will not seek and will not find.

Repentance

The need of repentance, or turning from old sins; is clear. Conversion signifies the same things, the turning to that which is right. The necessity of turning from wrong to right, if freedom is to exist in the soul, has already been set forth in this editorial.

We thus see how reasonable is this ordinance. We should strive to follow in the footsteps of the Master and live without sin in our secret thoughts as well as in our acts. By having consideration for our humanity and weakness, he has given us this opportunity to signify our repentance and our continuous desire to do right, and in doing so to renew our covenants. This ordinance is wonderfully designed to keep in memory the sacrifice made by our Elder Brother and the significance of his service for humanity. It is also especially designed for our particular blessing in the renewal of our covenant.

Baptism

Immersion in water is not necessary for the sake of God so much as it is needed by man. The immersion in water signifies subconsciously a cleansing, and, hence, as a ceremony signifies subconsciously a cleansing from sin.

It certainly is right that there should be some overt act, something on the part of man to show his willingness to take upon him the name of Jesus, and his desire to keep his commandments so that he may have his Spirit to be with him. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to find a simple act so excellently devised as is immersion in water to signify, symbolically and subconsciously as well as consciously to man, this putting off of the old and birth of the new, this cleansing or remission of sins. The act is not a difficult one. It is a simple one and particularly adapted for man's needs.

Having signified by this open act his desire and willingness, there then follows the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and then the child of God has the consistent opportunity for the renewal of his covenant in the Lord's supper. The partaking of the sacrament does not signify that we agree to everything that our brethren may suggest. It should not be partaken of, however, if we have offense against a brother or he against us, without first making an effort towards reconciliation. The renewal of this covenant in the sacrament, as stated in the prayer, is to signify our willingness to take upon us the name of Jesus and to keep his commandments, that we may have his Spirit to be with us. There is an opportunity here for confession to the church, if it is a public offense; to individuals, if it is a personal offense; or to God in secret prayer, if it is a private offense, so that we may thus renew our covenant with him.

There appears to be little reason for partaking of the sacrament before baptism, for the sacrament is not only in commemoration of the blood of Jesus and his body which were given for us, but it is also a renewal of our covenant; and the first overt act to be taken before the world is that of baptism. It is also in the nature of a love feast between the children of God and a renewal of their brotherhood.

Baptism, therefore, is not only set forth in the law of God, but is also upheld by reason as best for man.

Freedom and Truth

We acquire real freedom from doing right.

The Master makes a statement of tremendous importance in the eighth chapter of the gospel according to Saint John, where he states, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. He who continues in sin is the servant of sin."

This is true in a quite logical way. We have noted many times the evil habits formed by wrongdoing, either in the way of drugs or merely in the development of wrong habits. But this is true of all sin. One may only say he is free when he does the right; he can only feel free when he knows what is right; in other words, knows the truth and does it. A boy or man who realizes the influence of the use of any narcotics, really knows and understands its effects, will not suffer from a desire to indulge, for he will know the consequences and hence is able to make his choice not to do that which will injure himself, so he suffers no inhibition thereby.

Like the incident already referred to, of the man who goes out to pick mushrooms, of which he is very fond, but he does not know the difference between mushrooms and toadstools. If he picks and tries to eat, he is fearful of the effect and experiences no satisfaction. If he does not eat, he is dissatisfied because he does not know whether it is good or not. But when he knows the difference between mushrooms and toadstools he leaves the toadstool without regret; he takes the mushroom without fear. Because he knows the truth, there is no inhibition.

The same is true in a moral way. When one really knows that which is good and does it, there is complete satisfaction, but when one does not know, he is dissatisfied. There exists an inhibition.

For example, a young person well brought up who comes to the city is tempted to go aside after worldly pleasures. If he does go, there is the existing inhibition, because of an innate sense of right, because of previous teaching. At times he may smother this feeling, but it returns. On the other hand, if he denies himself, he is still dissatisfied because of his desire for sociability, to see and to know. But when he knows the value of right happiness and of right pleasure, when he has the right criterion, then he is able to choose those pleasures which benefit, and leave untouched those which will injure.

Knowledge of truth is essential. Knowing the truth and acting in accordance therewith, we shall be free mentally and spiritually, and there then exists no inhibition. It is only those who know that which is true, and knowing, choose the right, who are free.

There lies in this a great intellectual reason for repentance.

Repentance means a turning away, changing from that which is wrong to that which is good, and it only comes with faith or with a conviction of that which is true. The demand, therefore, for repentance is founded in the deepest nature of man, for it is only as we come to know that which is good, choose the good and turn from that which is evil, that we are free from sin, from death, and from the inhibition which mars our joy in life.

S. A. B.

Newspaper Ethics—A Code

Declaration of principles and code of practice adopted by the Missouri Press Association at Columbia, Missouri, Journalism Week, May 27, 1921.

"Preamble

"In America, where the stability of the government rests upon the approval of the people, it is essential that newspapers, the medium through which the people draw their information, be developed to a high point of efficiency, stability, impartiality, and integrity. The future of the Republic depends on the maintenance of a high standard among journalists. Such a standard cannot be maintained unless the motives and conduct of the members of our profession are such as merit approval and confidence.

"The profession of journalism is entitled to stand side by side with the other learned professions and is, far more than any other, interwoven with the lines of public service. The journalist cannot consider his profession rightly unless he recognizes his obligation to the public. A newspaper does not belong solely to its owner and is not fulfilling its highest functions if devoted selfishly. Therefore the Missouri Press Association presents the following principles as a general guide, not as a set form of rules, for the practice of journalism.

"Editorial

"We declare as a fundamental principle that truth is the basis of all correct journalism. To go beyond the truth, either in headline or text, is subversive of good journalism. To suppress the truth, when it properly belongs to the public, is a betrayal of public faith.

"Editorial comment should always be fair and just and not controlled by the business or political expediency. Nothing should be printed editorially which the writer will not readily acknowledge as his own in public.

"Control of news or comment for business consideration is not worthy of a newspaper. The news should be covered, written, and interpreted wholly and at all times in the interest of the public. Advertisers have no claim on newspaper favor except in their capacity as readers and as members of the community.

"No person who controls the policy of a newspaper should at the same time hold office or have affiliations, the duties of which conflict with the public service that his newspaper should render.

"Advertising

"It is not good ethics nor good business to accept advertisements that are dishonest, deceptive, or misleading. Concerns or individuals who want to use your columns to sell questionable stocks or anything else which promises great returns for small investment should always be investigated. Our readers should be protected from advertising sharks. Rates should be fixed at a figure which will yield a profit and never cut. The reader deserves a square deal and the advertiser the same kind of treatment.

"Advertising disguised as news or editorial should not be accepted. Political advertising especially should show at a glance that it is advertising. It is just as bad to be bribed by the promise of political patronage as to be bribed by political cash.

"To tear down a competitor in order to build up one's self is not good business, nor is it ethical. Newspaper controversies should never enter newspaper columns. Good business demands the same treatment to a competitor that one would like for a competitor to give to one's self. Create new business rather than try to take away that of another.

"Advertising should never be demanded from a customer simply because he has given it to another paper. Merit, product, and service should be the standard.

"Subscription

"The claiming of more subscribers than are actually on the paid list in order to secure larger advertising prices is obtaining money under false pretenses. The advertiser is entitled to know just what he is getting for his money, just what the newspaper is selling to him. Subscription lists made up at nominal prices or secured by means of premiums or contests are to be strictly avoided.

"Our Code

"In every line of journalistic endeavor we recognize and proclaim our obligation to the public, our duty to regard always the truth, to deal justly and walk humbly before the gospel of unselfish service."

The above declaration of principles and code of practice is of particular interest at this time. As an aftermath of the World War and from other causes, the essentials of religion appear to be greatly weakened among people in general. With the overthrowing of old rulers there has occurred a moral revolt, in part, against all authority. This has been marked by lawlessness in various parts of the world and by an apparent increase in crimes of violence.

The pulpit has apparently been afraid at times to take a decisive position. The economic interests have attempted and are attempting to dominate the pulpit as they have already, unfortunately in many instances, secured control of the press. But as is pointed out in Hibbert's Journal for July, 1921, while morality is necessary for a solution of our economic difficulties, no satisfactory solution can ever be secured so long as the managers of industry attempt to be, and are able, in part, to be the judges of right and wrong. To the solution of economic difficulties an external sanction of right and wrong is first needed. By external we mean not within the control of those who control the industrial life of the race.

In the case of the Pittsburgh Y. W. C. A., the effort of the leaders of industry to control what is said in the name of religion is plainly manifest. This effort to control the pulpit is again shown in the history of the Interchurch World Movement and in the restrictions that are being attempted against the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Men of means are demanding a right to censor what is said by those to whom they contribute. This has been the case, sub rosa, in the pulpits of many of the prominent churches for many years past, those churches which men and women of wealth patronize. Occasionally there is found a man with sufficient courage to break the shackles, but he must be of extraordinary ability, if his resignation is not shortly forced.

But this attempt on the part of industry to control the moral sanction of the church was never more open, not to say flagrant, than it is to-day.

This effort to control pulpit ethics has long been in force in the case of the daily press, as well as with the various weeklies, monthlies, and quarterlies. There are some independents, it is true, but they themselves have made plain this disposition towards coercion. This pressure is especially brought to bear through the advertising columns and hence through the business manager. Very few are able to afford the luxury of a publication which does not pay its way, and to pay its way, advertisements are very nearly essential, unless the size of the publication be in some way reduced. This control through the owner and through the advertiser to the business office, is constantly making itself felt. In view of that fact, such resolutions as the above are of tremendous import.

Another restriction, at least on the daily press, is that they are dependent for much of their news, especially outside of local news, on large corporations which gather and distribute as news that which they consider proper. The editor is thus robbed, in part, of the right to judge all news for himself and place it impartially.

With a secular publication a strong editorial policy is an advantage. The people are entitled to a fair, frank statement of the news. They are not entitled, nor will a reputable paper print every rumor, nor even every fact, but only the news that is fit to print. There must in every case be some editorial supervision to keep out that which can be of no benefit to the reader and which will work a lasting injury, perhaps, to innocent persons. There must be a high moral standard as to the news that is printed. But in addition to this attempt to place fairly the facts, a mere chronicle is not sufficient; there should be some explanation and especially in the editorial columns. In this particular there seems to be at present a lack of strong editors as leaders to place the facts, nationally and locally, before their readers, and present with them a strong ethical analysis, helping to guide the people in their problems of government, industry, and living.

There should be no control of any paper regardless of its character, regardless of how often printed, in the interests of one or more individuals. The news should be fairly given. The paper, under able leadership, should present an open forum for the discussion of the problems before the people.

This is the policy that has been adopted on behalf of our church publications, with an open forum for the frank discussion of problems of general interest.

Some may be doubtful as to how far the above declaration of principles will be carried into practice. We prefer to hope that a substantial effort will be made. Something is gained by such a declaration of principle by bringing an ideal plainly before the editors of Missouri and the public. Much more is gained when these principles are carried fully into practice. A heavy responsibility is laid upon every editorial staff, as judgment and wisdom must, of necessity, be exercised.

S. A. B.

Joint Council Sessions

The joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric has been in session several days the past week, engaged principally with routine matters. The latter part of the week President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire were on a trip into Kansas concerning church business and the sessions were adjourned till their return, and were resumed on the 26th.

Those attending of the Quorum of Twelve, in addition to members of the other two quorums are, G. T. Griffiths, J. W. Rushton, U. W. Greene, Paul M. Hanson, J. F. Curtis, R. C. Russell, and M. A. McConley. Brother McConley will leave for the West on the 27th to join his wife, who has gone as far as Denver. They plan to sail for Australia on October 8.

College Day---October 16

Intelligent application of inspirational influences is a basic motive actuating Graceland's preceptors, whose ideals are unique in educational circles.

Graceland Dedication

(Editorial Correspondence.)

In order to accommodate what was perhaps the largest crowd in attendance at a Lamoni college function, the dedication service of the 16th was held on the campus east of the new building. The night was clear and bright, but at times the wind blew so much it made speaking and hearing most difficult. But the spirit of devotion and enthusiasm triumphed over all minor hindrances. For half an hour before the formal exercises the orchestra played as the crowd assembled. Probably not over half of those in attendance were seated. As a finale, the orchestra played "Greater Graceland," written especially for the occasion by Joseph Anthony.

The theme of the program was "Going back to beginnings." Every speaker was reminiscent and related the trials, hindrances, humor, and lessons of the past. Many incidents of student life were recalled. And there was general rejoicing over the present status of Graceland, with great expectations for the future.

Daniel Anderson, member of the first board of trustees, and continuing for nineteen years thereafter, presented and briefly introduced each speaker with special reference to early years of Graceland.

Bishop I. A. Smith gave a brief sketch of ancient schools and pointed out the relation between religion and education, Office and church headquarters, the early ideals of the church, the resolution of the General Conference of 1869, reaching its fulfillment in Graceland.

Mrs. Lena Lambert Graham, a member of the first class, spoke very wittily of the past quarter century of Graceland's history. Sister Graham is a daughter of D. F. Lambert, who was secretary of a college meeting in 1894. She was for several years on the faculty of Graceland, as well as having been an early student.

Leonard Lea, of the present student body, had the more difficult task of prophecy for the next quarter century, and forecasted some of our hopes of what those coming years will mean.

President F. M. Smith, as the final speaker, delivered the dedicatory address on Graceland's place in the program of the church. President Smith was the first graduate of Graceland, a member of the faculty, a member and chairman of the board of trustees. His address was forceful, and presented clearly his high ideals for Graceland as the place of stewardship in our economy.

There was an excellent spirit manifested throughout the day. The keynote was consecrated service for the work of God and preparation for that service.

The building is two stories and basement, and of fireproof construction, even the floors and window frames being fireproof. The upper floor is temporarily divided for dormitory which has always been close. He referred to the legal manner in which title is held for Graceland and formally turned over on behalf of the church the building to the trustees of Graceland College.

THE NEW COLLEGE BUILDING

This fine new fireproof building greatly adds to the equipment and efficiency of Graceland College. This is a view from the east, with Patroness Hall partially showing in the background. A view from the south is one that gives what some consider a more representative view of the building.

—From "Graceland Record."

Bishop A. Carmichael briefly accepted the building with deep appreciation of the responsibility. Heretofore the lack of facilities and room has been a ready excuse. That excuse is no longer possible, as this building has no equal.

The dedicatory prayer was by J. A. Gunsolley, who was on the first faculty and is still with Graceland. It was a very earnest, fervent petition of dedication of not only the new building, but also of the trustees, faculty, and young people.

After the singing of the "Rosary" with unusual expression by a quartet, Mrs. Vida E. Smith read a paper prepared by Sister Marietta Walker, one of the donors of the land for Graceland College. Sister Walker spoke of her own early efforts to secure an education, as well as the early struggles of Graceland, and her ideals of consecration.

W. A. Hopkins, another donor of real estate to the college plat and the one who deeded the land on which this new building now stands, told of his coming to the locality in 1872. It was simply a cattle range and an open field for prairie chickens. The nearest railroad was at Osceola. He spoke of the growth of the town, the coming of the Herald use, affording some twenty sleeping rooms, a dean's room, and a reception room.

The first floor is divided into six large classrooms, splendidly appointed.

At 10.30 a. m. on Friday, the regular opening chapel exercises were held, except that there were not the usual thirty to forty-minute addresses, because of the dedication of the new building to occur that evening.

This morning service was therefore only for students, with a few visitors. The exercises of welcome were in charge of Bishop A. Carmichael, chairman of the board of trustees, who after brief remarks of welcome, was followed by Oscar Anderson, as mayor of Lamoni; F. M. McDowell, as superintendent of the local Religio; A. M. Carmichael, as superintendent of the local Sunday school; H. H. Lynn, in behalf of the Methodist Church; and John F. Garver, as president of the Lamoni Branch.

President F. M. Smith then delivered a brief address on the international influence of Graceland College. This year there is a Chinese, an Arab, an Austrian Jew from Palestine, two young men from Australia, as well as young people from England and Germany.

After announcements by President G. N. Briggs, the exer-

(Continued on page 935.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Relation Between Civics and the Home

By A. Max Carmichael

*Address delivered at the Women's Institute, Independence, Missouri, May 17, 1921.
Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.*

I assure you I feel at home, and I am also of the impression that I am more at home than the sprinkling of men I see among you. Of the twenty people who work with me in the public schools of Lamoni, eighteen are women. The three others are—women. I wish to introduce no spirit of levity by that remark, nor to occasion any. I would I might be possessed of the power to give the message to-night I would like to give, especially in view of the fact that the Women's Department probably is in its formative period, so far as its policies are concerned. I may not be able to. If I am not, it is because of the pressure of work.

I esteem it an honor to have been called to talk to you upon the relationship of the home and civics. We always like to think of things in terms of certain great problems that we have to do with to-day, and of course my talk will concern itself with those problems. I am not here to entertain you. I am here to talk business, and to say it fast.

The home is made up of individuals. I am going to term these individuals, father, mother, and the children. I term them father, mother, and the children in preference to husband and wife, because in the former term we have the home functioning, while in the latter term we have a non-functioning home.

Relationship of Mother to Civic Life

This is the Women's Department to whom we are talking. We are naturally concerning ourselves with the mother. Let us restate our problem, then. What is the relationship of the mother to civic life around her? God once desired to give the sweetest thing he could to earth; so he gave to earth a mother. We will have to ask, then, What are some of the functions of motherhood that are of vital importance to us just now, in connection with this matter?

One of these problems is that of bearing children. No doubt if every woman should consider the responsibility of this function alone she would hesitate to accept it. It is quite a responsibility to bring into this world a being, who must accept the limitations of life whether or not, and must undergo the privations of life whether or no; but when the woman stops to contemplate that she is given the greatest power of God himself, to create—when she realizes that, intrusted into her hands God has given his own power—the power that he only once manifested, perhaps, in the creation of Adam, and since then it has been in the hands of our womanhood—when one stops to remember that God has handed over his greatest power, so far as we are concerned, we should hesitate to fear to take on the responsibility. We should prefer then, I think, to lead the life of faith and hope that motherhood brings, and be encouraged to carry out this greatest of functions.

Of course, along with the function of childbearing, comes that of child rearing. I remember one time attending the last obsequies of a woman who could boast of the honor of having five beautiful sons. Every one of these sons was a powerful influence in the community in which he lived. I had known this woman but a few years, and in my acquaintanceship with her found that she held herself practically to the home. She was not a woman of club renown, nor a woman of civic interests. Her aims seemed to be centered within the four walls of the home, and yet, in the babyhood of the five sons who each, in his turn, pillowed his head upon her lovely breast, she probably from time to time had sown the seed which had made of them five beautiful sons, and in turn, the greatest expression that this woman could find.

Should we hesitate to accept, then, the responsibility and in turn the joy that comes from that of child training? We men take upon ourselves the honor of the Melchisedec priesthood, and we place around that priesthood a wonderful hallowed influence and sanctity.

I have thought to place before the audience some of the scenes that have come to my attention in the Sunday school. As I pass into the beginner department I see a woman sitting, and around her are seven or eight little tots who are listening breathlessly to that story, beginning, "Once upon a time," and I want to ask you if she is not a high priest in her place, and what pastor dare try to take her place? Can you name an office more important now commissioned in the church, and can you name an office that has greater responsibilities, and yet greater opportunities than does that? I cannot, and if you can I would like to have you tell me it afterwards. I don't believe you can do it.

Woman has always had to do something towards earning a living. That is apart from our discussion to-night. But it is a part of her functions.

So far we have said nothing about one function of woman, that of being just a mere independent member of society. That has been denied her in the past, but yet we find that it is a part of her functions and we would not leave it out.

Meaning of "The State"

Now, the other half of our question is the state, and I think in the beginning of this question we need to have an appreciation of the meaning of the state, because the state expresses the extent of our social relationships. The expression of a state is found in our Federal Government, in our state, city, school districts, and townships, and it is the relationship of the mother to these departments that I am here to consider.

The function of the state in its various expressions has been to control and regulate the individual relationships in every field, and we have had an added concept of governmental functions in the last twenty-five years, the paternalistic concept, or attitude. We are glad to feel that the action or function of government is growing, and involving a larger plan and more intricate relationships. It is extending. The state is dabbling more and more into the functions of motherhood. A hundred and fifty years ago a mother had the exclusive job of raising her child, from the time he was born until he was twenty-one, but now we have the state stepping in from all sides and dabbling with her functions, in school, health, recreation, and the education of her child.

We have the state stepping in to regulate the number of hours a woman can work. Eight per day, perhaps, or so many hours per week. Some have said women should be considered merely the wards of the state, and hence should not be allowed to enter the political world. On the other hand, some have given this as the very reason why women should be allowed to enter into politics. But I think the reason why women should be allowed to enter politics should be placed upon a higher plane than this. Not that she is merely a ward of the state, not that the state has found it necessary in order to secure self-preservation to interfere with her functions, but because woman, in order adequately to perform her function, must enter into political activity. There's no way out of it, and it is upon this basis that we would like to establish our whole argument of the evening.

The necessity for woman entering the political arena has been increasing. Her functions have an enlarged social aspect to-day that they did not have thirty-five years ago. Even the function of childbearing, as seemingly biologically monopolistic as that is, as you cannot take it away from her, and as the state cannot perform this function; yet, even so monopolistic a function as that is, is increasing in social aspect to such an extent that woman successfully to carry on this function must, herself, enter into political activity.

The sentiment that has been against woman's entrance into political activity has been traditional in its nature, based upon prejudice, based upon the fact that in past history woman has not been emancipated, economically, socially, or politically, but the sentiment against woman's entrance into politics is not based upon the growing social and psychological aspect of her functions. Woman's excuse for entering into politics does not, then, need be because the state has found it necessary to interfere with her functions, but because she finds it necessary in order completely to fulfill her functions, to enter into political activity.

Woman's Work

The job of the woman, then, is one of a constructive nature. I would like to take up these functions just a little bit more carefully. Child rearing is becoming a highly specialized art and science, and we repeat again a thought which has been very much in our mind recently, and that is this, that the science of motherhood is but a few days old, is very young, and there is much to be discovered in this science as yet. We have been having mothers for six thousand years or more, but the science of motherhood is but a few hours old.

But in giving expression to the newness of the science of motherhood, we would not have you forget the art of motherhood. We would not have you forget the joy that comes from the tenderness which you bestow upon the child, but we would have you think, for a moment, that in the evolution of medicine, psychology, and sociology, motherhood has become a science, and the most specialized science. We talk about specialized lawyers, specializing, for instance, on corporation law, or about doctors specializing on the nervous system. Motherhood is the most specialized science of which I can conceive, but we come very far from having the specialists, and whose is the loss? The child's. Are we saying that he is still going to lose? That's up to you.

Child rearing is the most specialized science we have. There's no mother in this room who is sufficiently wise to teach her growing daughter how to become the best mother. She hasn't the knowledge, nor the power to teach her child, her growing daughter, how to become the best mother. To do this the mother needs to cooperate with somebody else. There is a need, then, that she enter into cooperation, community activity, politics, civics, whatever you want to call it, in order to inculcate in the mind of the growing daughter the science as well as the art of motherhood. I have no fear that the daughter will ever forget the art of motherhood. No fear at all.

A state's interference to train mothers is necessary. There is an old gentleman whom I know, who says that domestic science and home nursing have no place in our public schools. He is a man about seventy-five years of age. He loves to tell of the time when the teacher worked for twenty-five dollars a month, and built her own fires, and all the cooking that was taught was taught over the mother's famous stove. Of course, we need not fear this class of thinkers. Their day is passing. The thing we do have to fear is the fact that the world cannot seemingly emancipate the present mother from the past. She too many times seems unable to see the task ahead of her.

I said childbearing is one function of woman which you cannot take away from her. You can take her children away from her and train them; give them their vocational training, and other necessary training for life, without the mother. But the task of bringing children into the world is hers, and hers only. But even here it is necessary for her to enter into political activity in order to see that this function is safeguarded. Getting down to brass tacks, it is for the women-folk to take the lead in seeing to it that their growing daughters may not be infected by marrying the socially diseased young men. Can the mothers afford to permit this too often enacted tragedy to continue and increase? The state cannot, and yet the state does still tolerate it. The question is, When are we going to have the nerve and the courage to follow out that which is now our conviction, that that thing shall be stamped out, and that no young man and no young woman should be privileged to enter into marriage until they have been found to be clean from social disease?

Some one says that such a law as that will foster illegitimacy. Let it do it. But I don't believe that it will. I have no fear of that at all. Let's have the courage and the nerve to do it: You can only do it through state activity. There is no other way. Mere preaching will never do it. You can preach until you are old and gray.

The Child's Education

Now, I am coming to another part of this problem of child rearing; perhaps one with which I am most closely connected; and that is, the child's education. I am proud to see that America has progressed to the point of advancement in its schools that it has. There isn't a country in the world that has such excellent opportunities for a free high school education as the United States, yet so great a man as Doctor Judd, head of the educational department of the University of Chicago, a leading educator in the United States, has recently wondered whether we can afford a free four-year high school.

Some of the members of the legislature of the State of Iowa were reputed to say last winter that they were wondering whether it ought to be the province of the state to appropriate increased thousands for the three state institutions, because they were wondering whether it paid to educate every boy or girl who wanted to go to college. Now, that's a startling statement, because every mother and indeed every good citizen wants all of our children educated just as far as possible.

For the last thirty years we have not had to fight the idea of universal education proposed by Thomas Jefferson and Horace Mann. It has been taken as an axiomatic fact that every child is entitled to education at public expense, but I think educators have a fight on their hands in the next ten years to keep alive that sentiment. I know that the teachers cannot keep alive this sentiment, unless the motherhood of this country is aroused to the necessity of so doing.

There is one thing ahead of the educational world that you mothers must watch. It is the cry of the man who does not want to put up the money. He will grab at every possible straw which he might use in persuading the public not to put more money into increased facilities for our schools. Do not let him mislead you or your neighbors. Do not let his cry, which indeed has too much foundation, I must admit, that the schools are wasting money, permit you to lose sight of the necessity of public education. The remedy is not in less education and hence less waste; but in more education and at the same time greater efficiency among school-teachers and administrators, and hence less waste. This was Doctor Judd's real contention, that much of the work we now take twelve years to accomplish could easily be accomplished in ten, if the motherhood and the public of America will allow it to be done.

I am glad that the call has come to the teacher, due to the rising cost of teachers, to justify his price. Our farmers have been in the habit of sending their children to the twenty-five-dollar-a-month teacher, and saying, "Go to it, my girl, we will just excuse you so you can have all the fun with these children you want; we don't care how much you teach them, just so our pocketbooks are not touched very much." But since they have been paying one hundred dollars a month, they have begun to say, "I wonder what she does with all her time." The problem is hers to organize her time so that her results will be accomplished with efficiency and economy. It is up to the mothers to see that she does, and by so doing, advance the cause of universal education.

It is up to the motherhood of the world to insist that our educational curricula be such as economically to educate all children. There is no woman in this house, or in this country, who can sufficiently study psychology and the principles of education to be able fully to educate her own child.

There is another phase of child training which you cannot do alone, and yet too many of you will not cooperate. That phase is maintaining the health of your children. Too many of you are heard to say when cooperation is suggested along this line, "I am running my own family." There is no mother in this house who can become so specialized on the question of health that she can attempt to take her family unto herself and see to it that the children have good health. It might be true fifty years ago that a mother did have her family as a kingdom unto herself, but she hasn't it so to-day. Not but what she should have been the sole governor of her children fifty years ago, but the development of science and social life has made it so that now she cannot raise her children by herself. The matter of supervising and perfecting the health of your children by cooperating with each other is a new field, I admit, for the state to function in, and it is only in progressive communities that the state has been able to function to advantage in this regard.

In other communities you cannot get the state to take hold of this matter, so you have to have private cooperative agencies take the initiative. In some communities, however, people are afraid of any cooperative agency which seeks to develop the health of their children. They seem to think that if their children get along without disease they are lucky; and if they don't, let them go, God will take care of them. I am a firm believer in getting back to the state as the best agent to carry on any function cooperatively. A church may function for the time being, but when you get the matter done right you must get the state behind it. I am convinced that this is true in the matter of health supervision.

Health of the Children

In your communities, who attends to the health of your children? Do the mothers acting apart with individual effort succeed? Some of our health men would not think so. Does the school board? The board may provide a place for football. It may say that that is done for the health of the boys, but does football promote health? Do the country or town magistrates provide any agency to look after the health of your children? It is a field for state activity to be largely developed as yet. Yet our communities are badly in need of better health supervision.

For instance in one community, a farmer's son, who had been attending an agricultural college, said to his father one day on the farm, "That cow is tubercular." His father laughed at the idea; it was all foolishness. The son insisted that she was. The farmer had been in the habit of mixing the milk of that cow with the milk of others to sell in the market. Finally, after several months, the farmer had the cow tested and found that the son was right. The man was so surprised and moved upon that he proposed to two other farmers of the same community that they have a man come from the state college to test the cows of all of them. They refused. They said, "We are getting but twelve cents a quart now for our milk; we cannot afford it." But from the standpoint of the community's health, can the mothers of that community where that milk is sold afford not to have those farmers forced to test their cows? The state authorities of that community have done nothing about it yet. The women-folk of that community have a lot of courage, but they have not done anything about it yet. But they should and will some day.

In a town where I taught for several years three members of one family died as a result of taking milk from a tubercular cow. Would it not have been better to have examined every cow in the community, even though not another cow should have proved tubercular, in preference to letting three people go? The shame of it, too, was two of these were the children in the family, and the other was the father. The whole family became infected before they knew what was wrong.

Home Nursing

What woman knows enough to teach her child home nursing? Too few will admit it. Too few women want a nurse to enter their homes to tell them what is wrong with their nursing methods. I suggested to my wife not to enter the women's organization until she was willing to say, "Nurse, come in and criticize my home, my methods of caring for the health of my child." How many women would be willing to sign the following statement, "I hereby express my willingness to have the church nurse enter into my home to instruct me in the proper methods of supervising the health of my home"? I hope a large number.

I think the women of the church are out of place in trying to effect a women's organization until they are willing first to see to it that their homes are as good as they can make them. I am not saying that our women have unhealthy homes intentionally, or that all women have unduly unhealthy homes. Women have not known the things necessary to run a perfect home. Modern science has brought to light many things which our women should know, but do not know. Why should anyone be afraid to get out of ignorance into the light of day? Why? Suppose a school-teacher refuses to change his methods; how long will he stay on his job? Only as long as the school board is blind; that's all. But woman has a monopoly on her task. So we can never expect to have a good state or church until the women-folk are emancipated from any state of ignorance in which they may be.

Our next topic is that of amusements. How successfully can a mother tell her child to go to bed at nine o'clock, if ten mothers around her say that their children can stay up until ten? You know that she cannot do it very successfully. So again when it comes to the question of amusements, you must unite. Preferably I think this common control should go back to the state, but if the state won't do it, let's take volunteer agencies.

As our church develops, I believe that our presiding councils will have a great deal to say along with some women-folk as to the common moral code of our people in greater detail. I am not averse to having women chosen to deliberate upon and declare the common moral code by which to rear our children. We cannot get very far if every woman wants to determine for herself what amusements her child may have, irrespective of the effect that this determination may have upon her neighbor's desires. We must combine.

You know that the modern child of twelve, thirteen, and fourteen, is beginning to reach outside of the home for his amusements, and you know that if influences outside of the home indorse certain things, you have a stone wall to butt your head against if you try to keep your child from doing that which other members of the community indorse. The best of fathers and mothers cannot keep their children from partaking of amusements of which their neighbors partake. Mothers, how do you expect in Independence, or Lamoni, or Saint Joseph, or Chicago, or anywhere, to ever get anywhere with this problem until you are willing to enter into common council and follow a leader? You must democratically and deliberately choose a leader in this matter and follow her. Until you have decided upon some forms of amusements to the partaking of which all mothers shall be willing to restrict their children, we shall have our children going astray. The question of amusements must be solved collectively. There is no way out of it. I have said that I would give a considerable amount of money if some one would start up a process of getting Lamoni into the situation where the mothers in that town would work together on the amusements of pocket for the adolescent which I expect to have some years from now, but the question is still open, Will they do it?

Now, how can we do that, mothers? Notice I put that in the editorial "we." In the first place, we must secure a working knowledge of these problems, and that's what you are here for now. You must study the social aspect because when you went to school you did not study that phase. You should get together to study, and that certainly is one of the functions of the Women's Department. I know that some women-folk say that they do not have time to study, but they do have time to do other things. I question if they sense the relative value of the things they do. They wash, cook, visit among their social class, but they do not read any. I would encourage you to study the subject of home nursing, and the social and moral aspect of amusement.

I think it is a very fitting and proper thing that you study. Arrange your program for the day so you will have a part of your time to study. If you don't keep abreast of the times, your child is going to get ahead of you, and that's when you begin to lose the respect of your child. It is too often the truth that the child of sixteen does know more than her mother. You tell the girl that she thinks she knows more, with the mental reservation that of course she does not, but the honest fact is, she does know more. The reason is that fathers and mothers have quit growing, refuse to study, do not keep abreast of the times, and the adolescent child, in his desire to move on, leaves them far behind. You cannot propagate your desires and opinions unless you organize. Oh, each individual could talk, but you can propagate your desires and opinions and have more effect on the town council, if you will organize. That's one of the chief reasons for organization. It is to propagate your desires.

Some Dangers Before the Women

I am going to outline some of the dangers which are apt to occur in this Women's Department in its relationships with the state and other community agencies in your desire to function well. I think one of the first dangers is represented in the cry, "Fifty-fifty." I was at a political county convention a year ago last July. We had to elect ten delegates for the state convention, but we sent ten men and ten women. Each one of them had an equal vote. It is only natural for women to desire this form of recognition. Consciousness of sex is looming large in her mental attitude, which results in a demand for fifty-fifty. This is shown in the desire of the women of this convention to have ten men and ten women, instead of picking out the best ten, whether all men or all women, or a part of each. I think that this matter will be adjusted in time. I have no fear of this demand for fifty-fifty being continued. It has its appearance ever and anon on the horizon, however.

But there are some other dangers. What is the first one? I am wondering whether women will absolutely measure up to these new demands. Do you know, I think that political rights were extended to you before some were really prepared for them. To repeat my thought, I am afraid woman has her political liberty before she is emancipated for it. How many of you are going to form your opinions individually of your husband?

Another danger is that women will not work together. School boards cannot hire women superintendents, because the rest of the women teachers will not work for them without serious friction. Some superintendents say that they will not have a woman principal for high schools because the rest of the women teachers will not work with her. This is the truth too many times. It is so much of a fact that it enters into the process of hiring women teachers anyway. Whether it is a biological inheritance on your part, or merely a social inheritance, which can the more easily be eradicated, I do not know. This is one of your future problems, we feel.

Another danger to be avoided, and that is one which has been placed high in the attitude of the opposers of women's rights, is the question, Will women keep clearly in mind their place and function? If there has been any attempt to belittle the work of the Women's Department, it has been, or will be that women do not keep clearly in mind the aim of the women's organization, and attempt to get outside of it. Be sure you get in mind the absolute function of a women's organization and keep right at that.

Some one wants to ask whether I advise women to go into the political arena. I say, yes. Right into the ward committees? Yes. I am not asking the mother of five little tots at home to do that, but there is in your community some member, a mature woman, whose children have been reared and passed out from the mother's needs, who still has the spirit of motherhood in her heart, perhaps by virtue of grandchildren, and who can well be your representative. As my parting thought to-night, I say that I do favor women in the ward committee. Of course the men in these committees will smile for a while at your noviceship, and they will smile as they work the ticket irrespective of you.

At a convention held at Leon, the county seat of my county, the men had selected a certain man to be our congressional representative at the convention at Chicago, and some woman in the bunch was throwing a terrible rock into the men's machinery by trying to be elected herself. The men were certainly chasing around to see how they would get around her bold and open tactics, and some parliamentary tactics, and "railroading" were necessary to do it. This kind of thing will probably occur for a while, and you will probably feel foolish for a while, but keep up your courage. There is something else in this world to think about than men's derisive smiles, than spending ninety-three cents out of every dollar of our federal taxes for war. That is what we are doing now. Has woman's vote helped to do that?

There is something else besides that. There's our death rate to lower; children to educate. If we would spend as much for knowledge as for one battleship, I believe we would have twice as many educational institutions in this country as we now have, and yet we are spending money for two battleships and other war apparatus each year. But who is

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 2.—CHRISTIAN MANHOOD

The True Example

"A perfect man, . . . the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ."—Ephesians 4:13. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 2:5. A high ideal; an awful distance to travel; and yet the task that is set before all who will attain a place in the celestial world.

Let this "mind" be in you. Mind is that which manifests itself in feeling, knowing, and willing. Christianity seeks to influence the lives of men so that they shall come to feel and know and will as Jesus did about the concerns of life. Man's nature, his environment, and his reactions all unite to make possible Christian manhood. To be the most successful business man, the most skillful workman, the most accomplished musician, the greatest preacher, or what not, is not the ideal. Such successes (measured not by the standards of society, but by the standard of a highly developed moral sense) may be achieved in the course of the development of Christian manhood; but they are not the goal of Christian effort, they are not the ideal; and whoever has such specific attainments in view as ends to be realized will miss his calling in Christ Jesus.

The life work of Jesus is epitomized in the statement, "He went about doing good." This "doing good,"—this self-determined practical mode of life which is inseparably connected with the idea of love—this was his purpose, and it was going to turn the tide of our thought from war to education? Who is going to do it? I do believe that in a woman's soul is a finer outlook upon life than we men have, and the country does need the saving grace of that different attitude that the women have.

As I said, I do not favor a woman of five children running out, taking too much of an active part in the ward machine, but there are women who can do this. I honor the mother who had the five boys that I spoke of in the first part of my talk, but I do place with her such women as Jane Addams, and Mrs. Shaw. These eminent women have their places in public life alongside of our more humble mothers, and we must work with them. There is no woman who expresses motherhood any more than did Jane Addams, a woman denied the blessings of children that she could call her own, upon which she could bestow her love; but instead of bestowing blessings on the few children of her own which she might have had, she bestowed hundredfold to the many children of other folks.

We should have women like her, and we have women like her to-day. We have women in Lamoni like her, and I could pick you out folks in this audience who I know are like her. In the science of child rearing, get together, that the women of the Jane Addams type and the actual mothers of children may express together their motherhood, resulting in added blessings for mankind.

consciously and vigorously pursued. A man may be so busy achieving that the purpose to do good will be lost sight of. Ambition may blind the mind to the Christian viewpoint. Interest may center in talent developed or in other successes (so called) to the exclusion or the extinction of the Spirit which giveth life. "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor and have not charity (the pure love of the good; the Christian good-will) it profiteth me nothing."

"Thou shalt love" is a summing up of the laws of pure religion; and love delights in and craves to please and promote the well-being of the object towards which it is drawn out. The life of Jesus was the actualization of this ideal. All of the activities of his life were subordinated or regulated to fit in with this one purpose—to allow freedom and fullness of expression of love for mankind. To multiply loaves and fishes was not the purpose; but to do good. Loaves and fishes were multiplied and distributed because this act coincided with doing good.

To follow this example, then, is to subordinate all the purposes of life to this one central purpose of doing good and to plan and regulate both individual and collective activities in the home, in the factory, and in the pew upon and by this principle; in other words, to determine ourselves in all the concerns of life to modes of activity that coincide with the idea of Christian good will.

Character and Environment

Environment furnishes the stimuli for action, i. e., volition plus intention—action in the moral sense; and character is the product of man's reaction, or the way he acts back, to his environment. Of course there are other ways of defining character, such as "a morally disciplined will," or "character is motive," and so on. We do not attempt to satisfy every taste; we select with regard to our purposes from the great fund of facts established by experience or reason and given currency in conversation and literature.

It must be clear that if there is to be action (action in the moral sense) there must be something which gives rise to action, or towards which action is directed, or in view of which action takes place. That something is (1) the properties of matter and the characteristics of things, and (2) the facts of adjustments and the meaning of relations. Objects have dimensions, form, color, weight, etc. Apples, e. g., have also flavor and hunger-satisfying properties. Such objects are part of our environment and give rise to action on our part. We cannot live even a moral life and be insensible to environment, but we must make some choice with regard to the varying demands that environment makes upon us. And the way we act under the pressure of all the things that give rise to feelings or influence the will determines our character. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." This leaves out of its reckoning all factors over which man has no control.

In man's attempts to supply his primary wants, he finds himself in the presence of his own kind—beings of precisely the same nature, having the same wants, and desiring to act in the very way, at the same time, and in the place that he wishes to act. This gives rise to the necessity for "adjustments" (a fact with which we must deal; a part of our environment). But two men cannot eat the same apple or stand on the same spot or pass through the same space at the same time, and some choice must be made and some action must take place in view of this state of affairs. These things may give rise to ill or to good will; they may provoke self-regarding purposes or they may stimulate other-regarding acts. Whatever the character of the feelings that such necessities give rise to, and whatever one may choose to do under the circumstance—these determine his character.

Adjustments give rise to relations; they issue in relations of neighbor, husband, buyer, seller, steward, and so on ad infinitum. And all these relations have meaning. They mean (1) that there is a self which has needs of which it is conscious; (2) that this self perceives that these needs are supplied through certain adjustments; and (3) that one has within himself power to choose what course of action he will pursue under the pressure of his wants.

One may supply his table by frequent visits to his neighbor's larder. He may choose to corner the market, or what not, as an easy means of getting more of what he wants. He may choose to occupy much or all of the best land available and claim it as his own, thus limiting his neighbor's opportunities; or he may always hold himself in readiness to share with others as the circumstances of association may suggest as being most considerate or productive of the greatest good to all concerned. The accidents of exchange may have favored one with an excess of goods and reduced others to corresponding shortages; and the one may choose to use his opportunity or advantage as a means of acquiring the goods of life by exacting from the needy a portion of their earnings for the use of moneys or commodities needed for the time being, instead of by productive effort; or he may give evidence of Christian love by ministering to others without extortion, i. e., without subjecting them to some necessity. One may give little to society and take much; or he may share alike with his fellow man the costs and benefits of social activities. Whatever he feels like doing and chooses to do determines his standing as a man in the sight of Him who always seeks to do good.

And so one may go on indefinitely to describe man's environment, the things that bear upon his character, the opportunities which must be used either to his own happiness or to his damnation. Whatever this self-conscious being chooses to do either "makes or breaks" him.

It is necessary that man should be subjected to such necessities, otherwise there could be no agency and no happiness arising from the consciousness of having disciplined himself in accordance with the principle of "Thou shalt love thy neighbor." We cannot think of character without environment. The only possible conditions for the development of the moral qualities of the Christ-man (the Christian) are found in the relations man is required by the law of God to sustain to other men and to properties under the pressure of his wants. The very fact that the conditions under which men associate afford opportunity to conduct their affairs, either with or without regard to personal or social obligations, is the occasion as well as the opportunity for moral discipline.

Motives of Activity

Such is the environment against which man must react. But it should not be supposed that some of the things that try men and tempt them exist because man could not develop without them; they are here, and for that reason man must reckon with them. But the force of wind and wave, of heat and cold, of light and darkness, of rain and of sunshine, the normal demands made by the body as well as the demands made by the presence and needs of associates present all the obstacles and problems and afford all the occasion and opportunity for the training of the intellect, the cultivation of the appetites, and the discipline of the will that are essential to the development of Christian manhood.

Before the days of specialization in industry, men generally were acquainted with the whole process of economic life. From beginning to end, from the clearing of the soil to the cooking of the meal, the meaning of economic activity, i. e., its relation to the satisfaction of primary wants, was exposed to view. Man was easily impressed with the bearing that his labor had upon the satisfaction of his wants. And therefore the outstanding and ever conscious motive of industrial activity was the creation of utilities. The common interests of all as consumers of goods was evident, and men were active for the sake of the goods their activities produced.

But specialization in industry has caused the meaning of industry to be obscured to view. At the present day productive processes are specialized into parts, and each part is in a way an industry in itself; and men are so far removed from either the beginning or the end that the meaning of the process as a whole is lost sight of. Under these conditions consumers' interests give way to producers' interests; i. e., business is pursued not for what will come out of it in the end to the consumer, but for what can be got out of it in the beginning by the producer. Consumers' interests are lost sight of.

An immediate consequence of this evolution is that industrial activity has taken on the form of a contest between the producer and the consumer, whose interests are regarded as being opposed each to the other. Men feel that they are not making goods for themselves (which emphasizes the consumer's interests), but they feel that they are making goods for others (which emphasizes the producer's interests); and industry has come to be regarded as a means of acquiring a control over goods for personal ends, and that by any economic device that public sentiment will tolerate. Business is conducted for profit. This is generally admitted by writers of textbooks on economics, and everyone knows it is true. Production is promoted only so far and only because it is a means of private accumulation. The doors of factories are opened and closed by the rule of private profit. Men are hired only because this will yield the employer a profit or save him some loss.

It is unquestionable that selfish motives underlie our economic life generally. It is not surprising that men feel under the necessity of "playing the game" in order to secure their interests. Everyone seeks by some means to get what he can from others as a guarantee against poverty, and so industry is in effect a game in which men are trained to get from others the things they want for themselves. Altruistic sentiments, the Christian good-will, has little or no place in the great field for practical religious activity; but instead men are unfitted by their modes of activity for communion with the Spirit of God. The Spirit of God dwelleth not in unclean temples.

The great purpose of the world is to get goods, and instinctively or intuitively a means is sought adapted to the end—all the activities and interests of life are subordinated to this central purpose; they are modified to fit in with this aim. What a shame, that even the attributes and qualities that belong naturally to men are sacrificed on the altar of greed—character is modified to fit in with the purpose of acquiring goods. Manhood is subordinated to dollars.

This is a reversal of nature. The Sabbath was made for man; man was not made for the Sabbath. Economic goods and the processes by which they may be produced as well as the appetite that stimulates productive activity were all ordained for man, and they should be indulged on a plane that ministers effectively to human needs. Instead of sacrificing manhood by modifying it to fit in with economic aims and processes, for God's sake let the manhood of Christ be the central purpose in life and let economic life be established in principles that fit in with this noble purpose.

Two irreconcilable motives present themselves for consideration: First, a motive to get; and second, a motive to give. In the heat of passion of conflict man does not see that activities which aim to get defeat the very purpose of human effort; nor does he see that what the soul longs for may be acquired only by the application of the principle of giving. Mercy "blesseth him that giveth and him that receiveth." Giving, righteous giving, reacts to the welfare of the giver. The latter-day work points the way out of the difficulty; its laws of association for any and all purposes are grounded in the principle of love; the modes of activity it prescribes coincide with the spirit of Christian good will; the rules of conduct it postulates do not tend to repress humanitarian instincts or proclivities, but they are designed by nature to call out all that is good in man, to repress evil, and to bring about "peace on earth and good will toward men."

The Deceitfulness of Riches

"They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."—1 Timothy 6:9.

Man is capable of an infinite variety of feelings, appetites, and desires. In respect to these matters he is free to act for himself. But this very freedom, this moral freedom, makes it possible for man to fix his heart upon either the good or the bad. But he may not set his heart upon riches, which the Scriptures declare to be a bad act, without at once interfering with his power of spiritual vision or understanding; for, as may be clearly seen, conduct as a whole, and a desire for a private fortune is incompatible with other desires that commend men to God, and bring them into fellowship with his Spirit.

"The deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and men become unfruitful." The desire for riches is not a holy desire, for it has a deceptive influence; it blinds the conscience of man to moral possibilities. Even "a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the judgment of the righteous." And hence we are warned to "take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," i. e., that he holds as his own in individual right. But his conduct is the measure of his life. To skimp and to hoard gives birth to a miser; to gather and to lend for use by extortion, i. e., by subjecting another to some necessity to pay something for the use of, issues in a usurer; but the employment of resources to the promotion of benevolent projects issues in a philanthropist. The modes of activity that arise from man's desires are all important.

In the struggle to secure the means to live, people often miss the joy of living. Wealth is a means, not an end; and the pursuit of it for private gain blinds the consciousness to the spiritual problems involved in its creation and distribution.

There is no conflict between this proposition and the belief that God ordained that men should have an "abundance" of good things. But the satisfaction of man's wants does not depend upon the acquisition of private possessions in surplus goods; but the development of the qualities of Christian manhood does depend upon the cultivation of tastes that are satisfied by the establishment and maintenance of relations under which every man feels that his interests are identified with the welfare of the group. And, as we shall see, Christian doctrine specifies accordingly.

The Root of All Evil

"The love of money is the root of all evil."—1 Timothy 6:10. The object of Christian love is not money, but man and God. We use the term "God" for the present especially in its connotation rather than in its denotation; though of course the attributes and characteristics of God that make him the object of man's worship are not to be separated from the being in whom they inhere. What we wish just now to do is to fix thought upon that which is regarded as good or excellent from any point of view or in any relation. To apprehend this is to apprehend God. Love is the yearning or outgoing of the soul towards what it apprehends to be such.

The value of economic goods, i. e., of commodities and services, is measured in terms of money because money is the universal medium of exchange and the measure of values in trade. Money has as little value in itself as almost any economic good; but it is sought after because it is a general order on the whole industrial system. It is the products of industry that are desired or loved and sought after; but because money gives power to command goods, it has always been sought after as a thing highly to be desired.

If we will stop in the whirl of life long enough to contemplate industrial society as at present constituted, we may get some idea of the extent to which the love of money has fastened itself upon the human heart. Civilization is top heavy with secondary activities, with businesses (so called) that have little or no value aside from being a means of money getting or the accumulation of private possessions.

True it is that activities which give rise to time and place utilities are necessary, as well as those that give rise to form utilities; but functions in society as well as in man should be put forth in nearly normal ratios; otherwise the social organism is encumbered by excesses in some parts and shortages in others, and evil effects arise therefrom. Merchandising, banking, brokerage, real estate, insurance, theaters, and what not, as at present constituted and conducted, are out of all proportion to social needs, even allowing that the general plan upon which society is constructed is a rational one.

Of course it is argued that the aforementioned concerns fit in with the specific purpose of economic life, which is to get from others the things we need for ourselves; but this is so evident that it argues itself. But if the purpose of such institutions were to meet a public need by completing the industrial organism and by making possible more efficient production and a more general and equitable distribution of commodities or services, certainly they would neither be conducted on the plane nor in the manner in which they are at present conducted.

The soundness, the rationality of our economic system may be judged by the continual necessity that exists for readjustments. We shift from one makeshift to another in an endeavor to escape the consequences of a mode of life dominated by the love of money. Is it any wonder that the greatest of all human interpreters of Christian life should declare that "the love of money is the root of all evil"?

The "love of money" is the "root" of the plant that yields "evil" as a natural fruitage. And it is bitter fruit. It yields ill health, illiteracy, dishonesty, property hogging, disregard of others' rights and needs, loss of opportunity, oppression, poverty, neglect of moral and spiritual duties, and an industrial order that is of the nature of a conflict as between man and man and which makes self-security conditioned in beating others at the game.

As long as this "root" is preserved in its vigor, as long as an atmosphere is maintained favorable to its growth, that long will it bear fruit in spite of our perennial "pruning." The "love of money" is the "root" of a plant that, once grown, is capable of rebuilding its root system, even though one set of roots be destroyed. This root with its attendant stems and leaves is a social plant; and we will find that it is just as necessary to destroy the "plant" as a means of getting rid of the "root" as it is to destroy the root in order to get rid of the plant. It is just as necessary to abolish plural marriage in order to get rid of the spirit of adultery as it is to quench the spirit of adultery in order to forestall the growth of such institutions or relations as plural marriage.

The implication is clear. The present order of industrial society is just as responsible for the love of money as the love of money is for our present economic order. To get rid of this root and its coexistent evils is a task for Christianity alone. The gospel remedy is natural, rational, and alone adapted to the purpose. It proposes to abolish existing relations which owe their forms to "the root of all evil," and to establish entirely new and different relations based upon the object of human experience and which coincide with the principle of love for God and love for man.

The Outcome of Profit Seeking

"Babylon" is the path that leads to private profits; but it is at the same time the road that leads to hell. Nothing tends to materialize and to brutalize more than the blind struggle for material things because of their relation to mere existence. The chief justification of the factory system is its efficiency as a means of producing goods. But factories are operated not with this end in view primarily, but to get power to command a larger share of the total products of industry; and the methods of factory operation at present followed have been selected because they fit in with this purpose. Human values are too often destroyed by the factory system. In general, the physical, the intellectual, and the moral effects are degrading. But so long as profits can be made on certain forms of manufacture, men feel that "it does not pay" to give way to the development of the handicrafts. How much higher type of manhood would we have if, added to Christian motive, men were trained to perform all the operations, understand all the relations, and to make all the adjustments required to produce a good wagon, e. g., than we get by reducing industry to a monotonous grind, a continuous repetition of merely mechanical movements? The lives of men are ruined by profit seeking.

But that is not the end. God hath decreed (Jeremiah 5: 25-29) that he will be avenged of the profiteer; he will be "a swift witness against . . . those who oppress the hireling in his wages." (Malachi 3:5.) "Woe unto you that are rich! for you have received your consolation."—Luke 6: 24. And again, "If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, . . . he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

God has designed that his people shall be a rich people, not that there shall be accumulations of private fortunes. The manner of life that private fortunes implicate is one thing, and the manner of life that social prosperity implicates is quite another. One issues in a self-centered, avaricious type; the other issues in an altruistic, consecrated type. One leads to hell, the other leads to the presence of Christ and angels. We have our choice. The necessity for making a decision is squarely before us.

The Price of Life

"I am come that they might have life."—John 10: 10.

"Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."—Matthew 16: 25.

There is no difference in the meaning of (1) "I am come that they might have life," (2) "For this cause was I born into the world, that I might bear witness to the truth," and (3) other statements setting forth the mission of Christ in the world. "Truth" is that which accords with the requirements of nature or being; and obviously there can be life only as far as there is conformity to the truth. To give life and to bear witness to the truth express one purpose, though by different combinations of words. One cannot give life without resort to the truth. To give man the correct viewpoint, to enable him to understand how to act for his own good, or how to make adjustment to environment, to reveal God, to point out "the good," was the mission of Christ among men.

From beginning to end, the Son of God was on an errand requiring the sacrifice of personal comforts for the good of others. He gave that man might live. And in that giving is revealed the price of life. Whoever would live must give.

It is well known that, aside from certain fungi and bacteria, plants cannot vegetate without simultaneously releasing gases or storing up substances that are essential to animal life. Here, living means giving; and plants may not live unless they give.

On the other hand, animal organisms, in order to live, must expend their substances, must use their energies in giving off gases that are beneficial to plant life. That this is nature's way of conserving energy does not alter the fact that vital action cannot take place without rendering some service to existences in general. This law pervades the realm of moral and spiritual life. Morals are questions of good and bad, of right and wrong, of ought and ought not with regard to conduct. In every moral act questions of human welfare and duty are involved. Now it should be clear that one cannot moralize his life without at once affecting adjustments upon which the welfare and comfort of others depend; without conferring some benefit upon others. That is to say, that if a man would live a moral life he must give; he must "lose" his life, in other words, in order to "save" it. Giving is the price of moral life.

A spiritual life is a life of purity, a holy life, a not-carnal life, a life free from worldliness, a life of rightdoing arising from a feeling of reverence for the divine. Now such a life presupposes the overcoming of habits and of ambitions that are purely self-regarding, and a nurturing of the spirit of brotherly solicitude or concern and a disposition to service. "He that will be greatest among you shall be the servant of all." Life on this plane is regulated with regard to others' comforts as well as our own happiness; and it is therefore obviously conditioned in giving; in doing or acting for others.

Now, it is inconceivable that a church could be adapted to the purpose of imparting spiritual life unless its doctrines and ministrations lead directly to the sacrifice of personal aims and ambitions for the sake of the good that such surrenders confer upon mankind generally. Certainly, if the church aims to impart life more abundantly, it will, with positive authority, teach men to avoid the forms of association that give rise to or foster selfishness; and it will as positively and clearly teach the righteousness of and encourage only those modes of activity in which men imbibe more richly the spirit of promoting the common good. "Whoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it." Charity, the pure love of good, "seeketh not her own." (1 Corinthians 13: 5.)

All that spiritual life implies is comprehended in the principle of love of God and love of man. Love delights in and craves to please or promote the welfare of the object of its affection.

This truth may be expressed in different forms; but forms do not change meanings. On the principle that conduct is a whole, it must be true that the spirit of giving bears directly upon the whole of man's life.

First of all, the spirit of giving bears upon honesty. The antithesis, the spirit of "getting," begets trickery, misrepresentation, and deception. Anyone may verify this by observation. Individualism is a game of getting, and it bears an abundant crop of dishonesty. Multitudinous are the artifices that the desire for personal gain employs to give wrong impressions, to cover up facts. The desire for gain makes liars of men; and no liar has eternal life abiding in him. To fulfill the law of consecration is to pass from death into life.

Second, the spirit of giving, the other-regarding feeling, has a bearing upon the belief of the truth. "They believed not the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they might believe a lie."—2 Thessalonians 2:11. "The cares of this life, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word." One of the classic writers declares that whatsoever a man loves chiefly, above other things, that he persuades himself is best for him. It is natural for man to seek justification for what he wishes to do, because he intuitively senses the truth that he can secure his eternal interests only by conduct that is just and right. Just as men come to have ill will towards those they wrong, which is a penalty nature imposes, so the man who has unholy or unrighteous desires of which he will not repent will be overtaken by a "strong delusion" that leads to the belief of a lie and a disbelief of the truth. It is difficult generally to get men to subscribe to the stewardship regime, to see its beauty and relation to their welfare, because of deep-seated tastes that have been acquired for customary standards of morality. The spirit of sacrifice according to divine laws, a feeling of pleasure in group successes and group prosperity has a bearing upon the belief of doctrines regulating business conduct.

And, third, there is still another consequence to be noted. It relates to the "unfeigned love of the brethren." (1 Peter 1:22.) The nearest approach to godly affection is the love of a devoted mother for her child. And why? The child has cost her something. Her life is wrapped up in the life of her child; its interests are her interests; its illness her suffering. There are no limits to the sacrifices that the devoted mother will make for her child. She loves it with all her heart, with all her mind, and with all her strength, because she gives all she has that it may live. There is infinitely more joy in the consciousness of having given than in the consciousness of having saved for one's self while others had need. The flock to which a pastor has given most is the flock he loves dearest. The teacher who has sacrificed and labored that her class may know God has joys of which the perfunctory laborer has no knowledge. The men of business and of work who consecrate their resources and their abilities with a free heart, "not grudgingly," to the establishment of the divine industrial order will realize satisfactions that the unwilling and the disobedient can never taste. Such do not need to "feign" love for the brethren, but "unfeigned love" abounds in their hearts because they give all they have and are, or ever can hope to be, in order to please and promote the welfare of those they have learned to love. Conduct is a whole. If a man would live he must give. Giving is the price of life.

The Law of Service

Social progress is the passing on by one generation to the next of more than it received from the past, while at the same time it retains more for itself. If there is to be culture, civilization must afford leisure or luxury.

Two sets of services are involved in social progress. First, the individual must make some contribution to the sum total of social wealth and the sum of helpful relations; and second, the group must make some contribution to the individual in the way of an increased opportunity to convert his skill into service. That is to say, that each must render some service to the other. The more closely the interests of the life of each are wrapped up in the interests of the other, the stronger will be the purpose to render this service.

The total productive effort is the sum of individual contributions. The effectiveness of individual effort depends (1) upon the skill of the individual workman, and (2) upon the efficiency with which his skill is managed; this latter involving the general character of the productive processes. Skill and management and universal participation in production are prime factors in social progress. This gives rise to goods in quantities in excess of immediate needs and thus affords opportunity for culture.

But these factors by themselves are not enough. Labor may be skillful, and management capable, and men generally may serve in some useful field; but the goods of life may not be distributed in accordance with social needs; they may be misappropriated by individual design, e. g., as by export without making available for general use an equal quantity of other goods got in exchange; or by other artifices; or opportunity for social progress may pass by unused through the lack of vision or social control and consequent governmental inaction.

Social control makes available certain services that are invaluable to social progress. For example, order is maintained; a definition and regulation of individual rights is arrived at; the accumulated knowledge of the ages is preserved and generally diffused through the medium of universal public instruction.

But all of this has meaning, and brings to light a principle of right which is comprehended in gospel doctrine and applied to Christian procedure. It means that to enjoy the benefits made possible through association, each individual must relinquish rights which belong to him in isolation, in order that there may be secured to him the rights that belong to men in association. Only when there are such surrenders on the part of the individual may ideal social conditions prevail. The ideal society is one in which all the processes and activities are coordinated so that each activity is the complement of all others, and in which increased production with a view to a more generous and general distribution is the conscious motive. Certainly love can aspire to nothing less than this.

But, first, men are not willing to yield the private advantages and privileges originating in the triumph of might, the survival of the "fittest" (so called), and perpetuated under the same influence; second, there is a widespread feeling of distrust among men; and third, human ingenuity has not been able to devise any plan that may be applied to society at large and under which effective coordination and equitable distribution can be even remotely hoped for.

These conditions afford the church its one splendid opportunity to render a service (1) to itself, and (2) to the world. That service consists first in making an application of the principle of right to the social activities of its own membership as a whole; and second, by this demonstration to the world of the practicability of its own doctrines, the pre-eminent superiority of its institutions and powers as the one means of converting and redeeming the human race.

Social progress within the church itself depends upon rendering this service—the service unto which it has been appointed. "Ye are the salt of the earth."

Labor and Happiness

Labor is physical or mental effort directed to some useful or desirable end. Happiness is the feeling that accompanies the consciousness of having employed one's powers of body or mind or resources to some good purpose. Labor is love's means of expression.

Manual labor is man's earliest and most effective approach to the gates of knowledge. The race has learned much by doing. Labor is the only known means of supplying human want. Health and strength come from labor. Labor promotes well-being. The command to love has for its corollary the law of labor. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return to the ground" is an obligation from which no man may be exempted; it is a requirement of his nature and being.

The path of labor is not a smooth one; but this serves to enhance the zest of life; it is a necessity necessitated by man's intellectual nature. Man cannot be truly happy without labor. Labor is the application of effort to useful ends; and this is a condition for happiness. The more effective the labor, the greater the exertion; and the wider the range of consequent benefits purposely aimed at, the greater the happiness of life.

Labor encounters difficulties; but difficulties are necessary to an appreciation of difficulties removed, of pleasant conditions. It is to be hoped that labor will always have difficulties to overcome or problems to solve. Man cannot love nor be lovable without consecrating of his labor to the advancement of some worthy cause. Personal happiness coincides with securing the welfare of others; and this can be done only by labor.

It is not necessary, neither is it in accordance with human interests that men should sustain relations in labor that give rise to unfriendly feelings. The persistence of social difficulties in the course of labor is presumptive proof that the relations under which men labor are not right. It is the duty of Saints under the law of God to reconstruct their economic relations on divine principles of right. This done, they may go forward to labor to produce the goods of life under conditions that will maintain a comradeship between producers. Then each and every man will feel that he and all others are primarily givers and not takers. Labor is the path to Christian manhood, the gateway to happiness; it is a fundamental principle of Christian doctrine.

(To be continued.)

"Free the Indians and serve America" is the title of a remarkably forceful speech delivered in the House of Representatives on August 4, 1921, by Honorable M. Clyde Kelley, of Pennsylvania. He urges most convincingly the emancipation of the American Indian from the slavery imposed upon him by a "money-wasting bureau." "Take the crushing burdens of bureaucracy off his back and he will walk erect like an American" dramatically demands the speaker. The address is to be had in pamphlet form by those who would have an excellent summary of the sad condition under which the Indian is existing to-day. A request to the man named, at Washington, District of Columbia, will bring a copy.

COLLEGE DAY

October 16

A large book could be written, containing only personal testimonies by those who have been influenced to nobler lives by Graceland College.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Color and Other Principles as Applied to Dress

[An exchange recently carried the following account of a lecture by Miss Evelyn Hansen, of the Art Institute of Chicago. Miss Hansen is the very clever lecturer who fascinated a very large audience one evening at our Women's Department Institute in Independence last spring. We are glad of this opportunity to pass on to our readers some of the lady's observations in regard to color as applied to dress.]

Applying the principles of line, color, and form, that are taught the art student is advocated for the woman who wants to look well dressed.

From the Art Institute in Chicago, missionaries are being sent out under the direction of Ross Crane to present these principles in lectures to the home dressmaker and the professional.

Miss Evelyn Hansen, one of these art dress missionaries, says:

"Every woman strives unconsciously or consciously to be well dressed, but it is a great pity that the average American woman believes that attracting attention is a test of a well dressed woman. This, more than anything else, accounts for the awful creations that frequent the streets of our villages and cities.

Study Your Type

"To be well dressed does not necessarily mean the expenditure of a great deal of money, for all expensive materials are not beautiful in color or design. It is interesting to note the advanced price of any material in vogue at a certain season. To be tastefully and smartly gowned requires that each woman make a study of her particular self.

"No two women are alike, and still if you go into the average restaurant or cafe and see scores of women with the same hairdress, the same hat, the same string of pearls to denote her wealth, the same gown, it is difficult indeed to distinguish one woman from another.

"This idea of all women being dressed in one style is enough to make a person tire of a garment in one season. Designers and manufacturers realize this, and as long as women are content to dress alike, whether they are stout or slender, manufacturers will be content to manufacture one style for each season.

How to Know Your Type

"How can you recognize your type? How can you create a type for yourself? This depends upon several things, whether you are stout or slender, color of your eyes, color of your hair, and one fact very few women realize—the color of your skin.

"Very few women will admit that they are stout if they, in any possible way, can convince themselves that they are slender, and vice versa. Very few women are perfect 36's, but it is something worth noticing to find that the person with a waistline that can be measured by the yard in place of by the inch usually is blessed with a head of lovely hair and with skin of faultless perfection, while the person who is a perfect happy medium may have feet or ankles of such caliber that they would do well to detract rather than attract attention to same.

Color and Color Schemes

"What does one mean by color of skin? There are people with skin resembling the Indian ruddiness, with an undercurrent of scarlet red forging now and then to the surface. These people need the sympathy of the rest of the fairer sex. Then we have those who throughout the whole year carry a coat of tan, and there are a few more fortunate sisters who have a skin of lily white with just enough color in their cheeks. Each of these three groups requires a certain color scheme of dress.

"The first, warmer colors—the tans, the browns, rich yet grayed, with now and then brilliant touches of color of Bulgarian hues. Let them avoid the purple and red, violets, pinks, and tones of blue.

"Now we have the second class, who think that by wearing a collar or a gown of pure white, their skins will lose some of the tan, when in reality all that is gained is a more marked contrast. As far as the use of brilliant colors in small areas is concerned, these people have a larger range of choice than the first group. They may care to bring out the color of the eye, color of the hair, or a note of black as an accidental.

"The third class has no difficulty as far as color is concerned, but the value of the material in the garment of their choice depends upon whether they are slender or stout.

"Mr. Worth, the founder of the house of Worth in Paris, gives the following illustration of the above statement:

"To put the matter in different words, the beautiful girl whose hair is the color of ripe corn and whose complexion rivals the lily and the rose, may have a waist circumference that is altogether clumsy and gauche. Now, is such a one to choose colors that will throw up the honeyed radiance of her hair and establish the already evident excellence of her fair skin?

"By no means. She must be governed in her choice of materials, dyes, patterns, trimmings, and even the design in which her frock is to be fashioned, entirely by that thick waist of hers.

"First of all, however, her money must be cheerfully expended upon good corsets; and she must use her best and most persistent endeavors to induce all the symmetry of figure she can achieve by the use of fencing foils (a splendid aid to elegance, suppleness, and firmness of the figure, especially in middle life), and by other means of acquiring grace open to her in the gymnasium, and, if possible, on horseback.

"Moreover, she must wear black in preference to color, and have her waist belts carefully modeled with a point back and front to give her figure length."

Study Good Paintings

"If women would make a study of paintings and gain color schemes for their garments from these, they would soon learn the meaning of unity in color and composition. The 'Home of the heron,' by George Innes, is a wonderful illustration of composition in warm color, while 'The lake,' by Corot, is equally fine as an illustration of cool coloring.

"Very few styles are suitable for people of all types; what you can wear as far as lines are concerned is governed entirely by the width of your shoulders, the shape of your face, the thickness of your waist; not by the fact that Mrs. Brown or Mrs. Smith or Mrs. Jones can successfully wear a certain gown.

"V-necks, narrow belts (never at the waistline), absence of tucks and ruffles and long lines must be the slogan of every plump woman, while her slender sister may wear round and square necks, ruffles of various widths, tucks, and wide, soft girdles to conceal her slenderness. Of course, there may be some women who would rather accentuate their stoutness or their slenderness; at least it would seem so by the gowns which some select for themselves.

Stout Women Avoid Figured Material

"A woman may wear a dress of correct color for her type and it may have lines to conceal her defects, but it may be of a material that counteracts all good points. May it be suggested that stout women avoid figured materials, such as the voiles and foulards filling our stores at the present season, materials of heavy nap, such as velours and fur, materials with a sheen, such as satins and pan velvets; thin materials, except for gowns strictly for use in the home; and materials of light value, such as pale pinks, delicate blues, light grays, and white.

"All of the above materials may be used to good advantage by the slender woman who wishes to increase rather than diminish her size. Did you ever see a 175-pound woman dressed in a gown of baby pink, or a slender sylph of a woman dressed in a closely fitting black gown?

Dare to Be Different

"Study your type. Are you thick or are you thin? Is your skin sallow, ruddy, or clear?

"Dare to be different, and in so doing create your own type. Each woman correctly gowned is a beautiful picture. Wear rich grayed colors; avoid large areas of brilliant color; study nature, and you will soon see that large spaces are dull colors and small spaces are bright colors; a mass of grayed green for the grass, with here and there brilliant color, a sand beach with here and there a stone of brilliant hue; the dark violet blue of the evening sky with here and there a star of crystal-like brilliance."

Dress

4. The Dresses

It goes without contradiction that many young women and older ones follow the extreme fashions with no intention of being immodest, but the adoption and continual wearing of some of the questionable fashions without doubt promotes a boldness and an indifference to the vulgar stares and questionable remarks on the streets.

Only recently on the streets of Kansas City I saw two young women with chests bare so low that nearly one half the breast was exposed. Their faces wore a hard expression. They didn't look like essentially bad women, but any woman is on the border line when she becomes indifferent to what people may say as they question her virtue. And the public does question a woman's virtue when she dresses immodestly. Besides affecting the finer sensitiveness and refinement of the wearer of such styles, there is always the effect upon the observer to be reckoned. Who can estimate the number tempted to a lessened respect for women, besides the number that actually give way to immorality?

A note clipped from a western paper calls attention to the report from Paris that "the backless bodice is not worn by smart women." It certainly never has been and never will be worn by the thoughtful, far-visioned woman of good taste anywhere.

It is reported by a Chicago modiste that knee-length—and shorter—skirts are doomed. Why do so many object to short skirts? It is apparent that the knee-length—or shorter—skirt is too liable to be suggestive, but personally I cannot see where the little-longer-than-knee-length skirt is really objectionable, provided stockings of sufficient thickness are worn to really cover the limbs. What I do see is that the short skirt—more than two or three inches above the shoe tops—is, with few exceptions, an out-of-proportion length. It isn't good looking. Take a careful glance at the next wearer of short skirts you meet. Contrast the length from shoulder to the waist or bottom of the jacket with the skirt length, and those two in turn with the length from the bottom of the skirt to the floor. If you are not familiar with pleasing length proportions, just observe for yourself. It will not take long to learn to estimate relative lengths at a glance.

A clipping on my desk gives a foreign estimate of American women. Consider it for yourself: "American women could sway the civilized world to-day with their brains, their culture, and the wealth that is behind them; and they seem perfectly content to give the most extravagant and luxurious dinner parties that are being given in the world, and, more of them, to wear the most beautiful and costly clothes that are in the world, to play bridge and live in houses which surpass anything that has ever existed in comfort and luxury."

Is the woman depicted our ideal? No, no, surely not! Let us set ourselves a better pace. We must make a better record, remembering that "to whom much is given, from him much is required." If the gospel plan is what we claim for it, ramifying every nook and corner of life, then we should be examples of the most intelligent, sympathetic women, devoted to helpful service anywhere and everywhere—not the social parasites content with trying to outdo some one else.

BERTHA L. MADER.

A Child-saving Experiment

Is anything better possible? This question, applied to all human affairs, is the spur to progress. What can a typical American community do to increase the health and strength of the next generation, is the question that is now asked by the National Child Health Council. The answer is to be sought in Richland County, Ohio, and its town of Mansfield. The demonstration will last five years and will deal with children of all ages.

The Medical Record announces that Doctor Walter H. Brown, former health officer of Bridgeport, Connecticut, now engaged with the commission for the prevention of tuberculosis in France, will take charge of the work in this representative Ohio community. County and state officers, business men, physicians, and parents have pledged their cooperation, and it is hoped to develop a program for protecting the health of children that will be of use to communities throughout the Nation. This undertaking is no small one, nor are its results likely to be of any other than the utmost importance. The Red Cross and many other relief organizations are entering into the effort.

From the time of birth, children are hedged about with perils. In the Ohio city of Akron, 85 out of every 1,000 children born, die during their first year, and in Manchester, New Hampshire, the ratio is 165. Mothers will have to be instructed in the proper care of their babies, visiting nurses employed, pure milk assured, and proper food secured for all growing children. Questions of child labor, of housing, sanitation, garbage disposal, street cleaning, recreation, and of dental and medical attention will have to be met.

Confidence in science is high enough that few will doubt the beneficial results of this experiment. The people of Mansfield are indeed fortunate to have had their community chosen as the center for this child health experiment.—Editorial in Omaha Bee.

Girls Plan Dress Reform

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON.—With the extreme penalty suspension from school, girls of the Walla Walla high school planned to put into effect dress reform rules to-day. The girls by a vote of 344 to 77, adopted resolutions forbidding the following:

- Silk, velvet, and georgette crepe, except simple silk waists or blouses and velvet jackets.
- Thin materials with too scant camisoles or underwaists.
- French-heeled shoes.
- Silk hose, rolled-down stockings, and fancy garters.
- Extremely short or extremely tight skirts.
- Extreme styles of hairdress.
- Excessive use of cosmetics.

A Five-year Experiment

WASHINGTON.—Selection of the town of Mansfield and the County of Richland, Ohio, as the location of its five-year experiment in the development of children was announced to-day by the national child health council. The Ohio communities were picked from eighty, which sought the distinction, as most nearly complying with the qualifications of a typical American community.

The demonstration will be conducted, the council announced to-day, to show what can be done through concerted action to increase the health and strength of the rising generation.

To Fill Cracks in Plaster

Use vinegar instead of water to mix your plaster of Paris. The resultant mass will be like putty and will not set for twenty or thirty minutes; whereas if you use water, the plaster will become hard almost immediately, before you have time to use it. Push it into the cracks and smooth it off nicely with a table knife.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXX

Money

1. Trace the development of the property sense of the child.
2. What is usually the child's first experience with money?
3. Mention some educational uses that money may have.
4. What is the value of the weekly allowance?
5. How may valuable lessons be taught in regard to future mortgaging?
6. Should the child's allowance be used as a means of punishment? Why?
7. How can a child be taught to understand the money value of labor?
8. What are the advantages of paying children for work?
9. Give arguments against it.
10. What system of money handling in the home is unwise, in so far as it reacts upon the child?
11. Explain why the allowance should be elastic.
12. Why is the child entitled to an allowance?
13. How may the child increase his allowance?
14. What are the educative results of a properly adjusted allowance?
15. What is the parents' responsibility in overseeing the child's expenditures?
16. What is the value of a periodical account of expenditures?
17. Should children be allowed to make purchases for the home?
18. What other "business" of the home may gradually be intrusted to the child?
19. What are the elements in benevolence that a child should grasp?
20. At what age and how may a child be taught the principles of tithes and offerings?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Starting to School

The four little dogs in the baby's bowl
Are waiting for her to come,
With round little eyes so full of soul,
And their tongues forever dumb.

The Jack-in-the-box in the nursery
Holds his fuzzy head awry,
His strong wire spring and squeaking voice,
Waiting to jump out and cry.

The talking doll in her high chair waits,
No longer she talks by rule,
Poor shut-eye doll, she calls in vain,
For our baby has gone to school.

Her little world of make-believe
Is nearly over and done,
I wonder what the world can give
That will ever be such fun?

—C. M.

Removing Soot

If soot or other fine dirt is spilled upon a carpeted floor, it is very apt to be made worse in removing. It will smudge into the fabric. To prevent this cover the spot with coarse salt. This will allow the pulverized dirt to be removed without leaving its mark.

Well, if you insist on discussing it—how high do you think a girl's skirts should be?
Oh, just a little above two feet.—Exchange.

LETTERS

Fifty Years in the Church

This veteran has no regrets, but rejoices constantly over the goodness of God.—Reprinted from September Autumn Leaves.

Fifty years ago this month [June] I entered through the door into the kingdom of God by being baptized into Jesus Christ by his servant Joseph Smith in a little stream near the town of Plano, Illinois.

How well I remember that event, which has had such a controlling influence over my entire life and which proved to be in compliance with a covenant I had made with the Lord some seven years previous.

As a soldier in the Civil War on the occasion referred to, I was on the picket line between the two armies during an artillery engagement. As I stood on my lonely post between the two fires, with shells bursting over my head, it seemed to me that the end of my life was at hand. I then and there knelt down and told the Lord that I was not yet prepared for death, and that if he would spare my life I would consecrate it to him.

Being a boy of only fifteen, I failed to understand the full meaning of my covenant, but the Lord understood and evidently accepted it, as I passed through many battles after that, and though hit several times, was never wounded, and came home from the war in better physical condition than when I entered.

Keeping His Promise

Keeping in mind my promise, I sought a church, and united with the First Baptist Church, of Brooklyn, New York. At my baptism I was disappointed, however, as I failed to receive any evidence of divine approval, as I had expected. That evening in prayer I told the Lord of my disappointment, and upon retiring to rest, a sweet peace filled my soul, and though I heard no audible voice, something seemed to say to me, "You have done the best you knew; be content; all will be well." I tried to be satisfied, and at times would experience the sweet influence of the Good Spirit filling my soul with peace and joy, but this would only be occasionally, followed by long periods deprived of this holy influence. In the meantime I chose a wife, we started west to make our home, and arrived at Plano to visit my sister, Sister W. H. Curwen. Here I came in contact with the Latter Day Saints, the very last people in the world where I expected to find truth, for I had heard only evil concerning them, and for a long time I refused even to hear them.

At last, however, I attended a few meetings, and what I heard certainly impressed me, against my will. We soon continued our journey westward, and settled in the town of Marion, Iowa, where there were no Saints. Then I attended the Methodist and also the Christian Church, but however much I fought against it, the influence of that which I had received in Plano never left me. I read the Bible and prayed the Lord for direction, and the more I prayed and the more I read the Bible, the more convinced I became that the Latter Day Saints had the truth.

Decides on Baptism

This thought constantly burdened my mind. It was the first thing I thought of in the morning and the last thing at night. It seemed, too, that if I did not get relief in some way I would lose my mind. At last I said to my wife, "I can stand this no longer. The first chance I have to join the Latter Day Saints I am going to unite with them," whereupon wife replied, "Well, if you join, I am going with you."

Only a day or two later, quite unexpectedly, I was given the opportunity of going to Chicago, free of expense. We went by way of Plano, stopping off to be baptized, but the great stumblingblock was Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. The doctrine was true, but I had heard so much said against Joseph Smith that I felt I could not accept him as a prophet of God. The Bible, I said, was sufficient for me, therefore had no use for the Book of Mormon. I asked Brother H. A. Stebbins, whom I chanced to meet, if I would have to believe in Joseph Smith and Book of Mormon, in order to unite with the church, and to my surprise and delight he answered:

"No, Mr. Pitt, your salvation does not depend upon your belief in either Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon, but in your belief in Jesus Christ and your obedience to his gospel. Do this, and you will be given the Holy Spirit, which will make known to you all that is necessary, and then you will understand many things which seem strange to you now."

I replied, "I am willing to accept Christ and his gospel," so gave my name for baptism.

PATRIARCH FREDERICK G. PITT

Elder Pitt has served as local pastor in Plano and Sandwich, Illinois, and Independence, Missouri. Entered the missionary field in 1892, serving the church in many parts of the United States, in England, Wales, Scotland, Egypt, Palestine, Australia, New Zealand, and the Society Islands. He was ordained a patriarch in 1910. The accompanying article was written in California.

Awful Forebodings Over Being a "Mormon"

One other thing distressed me greatly: that was the name "Mormon." I had always despised the name, and now I was about to unite with a people who were wrongfully called by that name, being convinced that they had nothing whatever to do with the Utah people. Yet, there was the name, and I shall never forget what horrible forebodings filled my mind that beautiful Sunday morning as I walked down to the little creek to enter the waters of baptism. Something kept whispering to me, "You are going to take upon you a name that your people will be ashamed of, as well as yourself. You are about to bring disgrace upon your people and all your friends, and they will disown you."

As these thoughts crowded my mind, I could not have felt worse, it seemed to me, were I going to my grave. At last I said to myself, "I don't care; I am going to join this people, if it costs me my life, for I feel it is my duty." With these feelings, I entered the water and was baptized, and oh! how different were my feelings when I came up out of the water.

Rejoicing Ensues

My soul was thrilled with the Holy Spirit, and the spirit of rejoicing took the place of fear and shame, and as I saw my companion go down into the water and the man of God raise his hand toward heaven and say, "Sister, having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," the Spirit bore witness that this man had been authorized of God to perform this rite, and that the effect was the same as though Christ himself had done the baptizing. My whole being was filled with the spirit of rejoicing. I could scarcely keep from shouting. Had I been brought up a Methodist I presume I would have shouted, but having been a Baptist, I controlled my feelings.

There was nothing now of which to be ashamed, for I felt assured it was the truth, and some day all would have to acknowledge it. I felt to thank the Lord that I had been given the privilege of entering the fold while it was evilly spoken of, that I might bear a little of what the Master had to suffer while he was upon the earth. I need hardly say I have never been ashamed of the cause since. I may have been ashamed of the actions of men, but never ashamed of Christ or his cause.

Disappointed Again

Having received such a wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit at my baptism, I expected a like blessing when hands would be laid upon me in confirmation. In this I was disappointed, but was promised that this would be given when I least expected it, which promise was fulfilled to the very letter.

A few weeks later while sitting quietly in prayer meeting, with no outward act to cause it, excepting that the meeting was very quiet and peaceful, I felt a delightful, holy influence rest upon me, thrilling my entire being from head to foot, and filling my soul with peace and joy far beyond my power of expression, and witnessing to me the truth of God's work restored to earth in these, the latter days. This I recognized as the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Have I not a right, then, to claim citizenship in the kingdom of God?

After this experience, I was glad, indeed, that I had not received this manifestation of the Spirit at my confirmation, for I had read in books written against the church that the elders, by mesmeric power in their hands, were able to deceive the people. No such explanation would apply in my case, nor did this holy influence leave me at the close of the prayer service, but continued with me for weeks and months, making me happy beyond expression. And yet I was not satisfied. I wanted more. I had heard many of the Saints say in testimony that they knew the work to be of God, and I supposed in order to obtain this knowledge some remarkable manifestation, such as an angel's visit, or some remarkable vision, was necessary, so I would avail myself of every opportunity when alone to seek for this knowledge by prayer and earnest supplication to God, expecting that he would give me a spiritual vision, or perhaps send an angel to give to me the knowledge I sought.

I continued this effort for weeks, but received nothing in reply, and finally lost the spirit which had given me so much peace and happiness, and then I became miserable indeed, more miserable, it seemed to me, than ever before. This, if I remember correctly, continued for some weeks. I could not think of any wrong I had done to cause it, nor could I explain my condition, even to myself, except that I was denied, for some reason, the presence of God's Spirit.

A Test of Character

At last relief came to me, and with it this information, that I had passed through a fiery trial, and that this trial was a sort of testing process to see how much I could endure, and that my future work would be measured proportionately. Had I been able to endure more, my work in the church would have been greater: if less, then my work would have been less important.

I was also informed (though I heard no audible voice) that I had been seeking knowledge in the wrong way, that it was not my privilege to be visited at that time by a heavenly messenger, but that my knowledge of the work would require an effort upon my part, aided by the Holy Spirit. If I desired to know the truth of the Holy Scriptures, I must study them, and as I would study, the Holy Spirit would enable me to understand them and by understanding them I would be able to comprehend and know, and the same with regard to the Book of Mormon, and other matters. This information has been of great value to me, and proves that God's way is best, for, had I based my knowledge on the testimony of an angel, later on I might have been in darkness, and an angel of darkness transformed nigh into an angel of light would testify altogether different; then my former knowledge might fail me. Many have been deceived in this way; but when our minds are enlightened by the Spirit so we can understand, then, so long as we retain our understanding, we retain our knowledge. I have a hope, therefore, that the knowledge which I have received will stay by me and enable me at least to obtain the crown of life.

Two Sustaining Promises

I realize that this is a big thing to look forward to, in view of the many obstacles and snares of the enemy which beset our pathway. At times I have questioned my strength to endure, when I have seen so many strong men fall in the battle, (but I have received two promises which give me hope, one at my confirmation and one in my patriarchal blessing.

I have forgotten much that was said in my confirmation, but one statement I remember quite distinctly was this: "Though thou shalt live to see many fall on thy right hand and on thy left, yet thou shalt have power to endure to the end." This gives me hope that I may be able to exercise this power in overcoming my faults, and one day stand in the presence of my Maker, clean and pure, and be permitted to dwell with the pure and the good.

In my patriarchal blessing is this promise: "Thy voice shall be heard and shall mingle with the songs of those who shall attend His coming. Thy voice shall be raised, and thou shalt sing the songs of the Lamb, and stand with the redeemed." I am aware that these promises are based upon conditions, but they help to strengthen one's hope.

Joyous Hope for the Future

I have been made extremely happy, joining with the Saints in singing the songs of the Lamb, but oh! what joy it will be for those who join in song with those who attend his coming. Nearly all the men who were active in the church when I entered are now on the other side. I recognize that in the natural course of human events I must soon follow, and I often think what a joy it will be when I am called hence, if I shall be found worthy of the abundant entrance referred to by the Apostle Peter, and have the gates thrown wide open and be welcomed by those good and noble ones with whom I have associated here below, hearing their salutation, "Come in, Brother Pitt, we are waiting for you. Your warfare is over. Come in with us and share the joys of eternity"; and then, if I could but meet the loving smile of our blessed Lord and Savior, as I did once in a dream, my joys would be complete. May this be the happy lot of all who love the Lord, is my prayer.

FREDERICK G. PITT.

President F. M. Smith recently received from a brother in California a box of choice fresh figs.

AT THE LONDON, ENGLAND, MISSION CONFERENCE

From the recently issued High Priests' Annual we reprint the above cut, showing a group of those holding the Melchisedec priesthood at a mission conference in London, England, August 5, 1920. From the reader's left, standing: Elder R. T. Goulee, S. Holmes, E. Maloney, James Schofield; High Priest G. W. Leggott; Mission Secretary F. Henry Edwards; Elders J. T. Norton, H. Harper, and Joseph Ecclestone. Seated: High Priests William Ecclestone, J. N. Taylor, W. R. Armstrong, and Joseph Dewsnup; Apostle T. W. Williams, President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop Roderick May, Elder J. N. Judd, High Priest Thomas Jones; Elders S. F. Mather and J. W. Worth.

Far West Stake

Stewartsville reunion reported better than ever and conditions encouraging.

We join with others reporting reunions in stating that the reunion of 1921, of this stake, was in advance of any preceding one at which we have been present.

The leading item to be reported is this: From the beginning to the end there was a deep and increasing measure of spiritual power manifested in the assemblies. From the first prayer meeting until the last one there was visible, in the spirit and conduct of the Saints, a deeply underlying spirit of consecration. It was manifest in the demeanor, in the generally worshipful attitude of the people, and in their prayers and testimonies. The Saints were brought into nearer and more sacred communion with the spiritual realities of the work. The Lord moved them and blessed them greatly, and they reached out unto him in the true spirit of children conscious of a living relationship to the Father. It was not necessary to urge upon the congregation that concentration of attention upon the spirit of the occasion be had; it was in evidence from beginning to end. There was prophecy in the last Sunday morning prayer meeting and the message was comforting, instructive, and admonitional; but the spirit of revelation was abundant in the spirit of true worship and in the enlightened conceptions voiced in the expressions of those who spoke from full hearts and clear, disciplined minds. When all are "taught of God" in the power to feel deeply, to see clearly, and to act in harmony with the light of truth, we have the strongest, the most enduring, the most exalted manifestation of "the spirit of revelation," the "spirit of truth." It is then that we feel and know; it is then that we have spiritual power to see and to do.

The prophetic utterances were to the effect that what had heretofore been declared was now solemnly emphasized, viz, "This is the hastening time!" That some had failed to heed, consequently had not made the preparation required; that while time was short and valuable, the divine mercy still permitted opportunity to all so to do; that the land and all its privileges in this stake of Zion should be held as a sacred thing having been set apart by the Lord and consecrated also by the blood of Saints, as the location of the Zion of God. Unity, peace, cooperative effort, and sustaining of the authorities appointed of the Lord, were also counseled, with the promise of abundant blessings in assisting in the cause.

The preaching was good; the opinion that the brethren exceeded their past efforts was generally voiced. The writer can say this, as he did not take part in this duty. He was not needed, as plenty of good men were present to preach the word.

Besides the force appointed to the stake and some from other points, Brother M. A. McConley, of the Twelve, was sent in by the Presidency. His work was good, strong, and practical, and all were pleased with his efforts. This brother was called to the office of elder, and shortly afterwards sent to the Hawaiian Territory, where he and Sister McConley, absent from home and friends, labored mostly among the dark-skinned races. It is noteworthy that they did their work cheerfully, energetically, faithfully, hence, as a result, have been called to greater responsibility, under which they again sail for foreign work—to Australia. It is because these young people worked willingly that they have been honored to work further and in a broader field. We take the liberty to refer to them thus in order "to point a moral and adorn a tale"—that all who will may work, each in his sphere.

Nor do we need to go to foreign lands to enter the service; there is much to do at home.

Three service tents were provided—the main tent, the young people's tent, and the children's tent. The main tabernacle was entirely too small. We must have a larger canopy and more seating arrangements if we are to seat all the people who come. The attendance was larger than usual; more campers were on hand; and it is a pleasure to say that, almost without exception, tents were up and ready for the opening session. Of course, there are always a few who "never think" to order ahead, hence trespass upon the good temper of the tent committee to provide for them at the eleventh hour! But, we are working out, eliminating, and making positively unpopular such surviving evidences of neglect of promptness, and system, and believe that, in due time, we shall have all our people alert, awake, prepared, and always ready to participate in the forward-march program of efficient preparedness for every good word and work. "Old things are passing away," and all things are becoming "new" in so far as is necessary to the advancement of a people with the vital program now evolving in the church in general.

The study program was better, more attention being devoted to it. It is becoming universally recognized that if we are to meet the great demands pressing upon the church, increasing with extension of our work, our people, young and older, are to be intelligently, specifically trained for definite service; that the unfoldment of the heart nature must be balanced by intellectual training, that balance of the heart nature and the mind be maintained. We do not undertake public school, mechanical, or other essential lines of general service without preparation. We must do likewise with the church problem of service. This policy has now become the settled policy of the church, and the Far West Stake will take its place in attaining and maintaining a "progressive supremacy" in its field of labor in common with other units of the body. "Knowledge is power" and "God helps those who help themselves."

The Women's Department made advancement, the sisters responding with clearly manifest interest in their program. We were gratified by this encouraging feature; it was clear to the writer that the women, with their fineness of perception, their powerful influence and refined delicacy of ministrations, are to stand equal with the masculine sex in maintaining the interests of the branches and other features of work "in all the world." We thanked God sincerely as we were able to perceive, to foresee the great value of the work of the women as it shall be developed and become an increasing factor in our general movements. The mothers and daughters should and will share in responsibility, in their sphere as do the men, in the burden of care incident to our great program. Every branch president and every other officer will welcome this, as each shall find his task more ready of accomplishment by the assistance of the women in their appointed spheres of labor.

Doctor Harrington, church physician, and Sister Laura Mann, head of the department of nursing, presented an excellent program representing the Health Department. Brother Harrington has grown in his work. He is well qualified and will continue to qualify for the position of church physician, and is filling it completely. Sister Mann did well. She is honest, straightforward, sincere, and her talks, straight from the heart and brain, are effectual and carry conviction. We liked these people; they worked very hard and gave free service in clinics and other lines for the public good. We hope the time is near when we shall not hear such terms as "trust in the arm of flesh" simply because the Health Department is functioning in its God-designed work of teaching sanitation and other general laws of health and seeking to relieve the afflicted. "The gospel of good health," based on the Word of Wisdom, is a necessary part of the "fullness of the everlasting gospel."

The Sunday school, musical, recreational, and general features of this reunion were all duly represented and enjoyed. Everybody returned home feeling fine and in better form for duty and everything else. We have splendid, nice people, up here in Far West, Mr. Editor, and "all whom it may concern." If you don't believe it, come and see them and they will do you good. There is plenty of fine land and good branches, and room for Saints who would gather unto Zion. Some are coming and more are needed. You can be well located, suited, pleased, profited, benefited, and more, if you want to come and if you come right. So, come on! Why wait?

It was the privilege of the writer, through the kindness of some railroad friends, to attend, for a very short time, reunions in Southern California and Colorado Springs. In those places, the same increase of spiritual power was apparent. We met lots of excellent people. This indicates the divine care and overruling direction of the Lord.

Occasionally, we hear a note of discouragement or read circularized fault-finding criticism, but, as for us, we find no occasion for anything of like import. To us God was never nearer and more clearly discernible in supervising and blessing the church than now. We believe it to be the duty of every man to encourage and hearten the people and to bid Israel go forward. Obstacles will be encountered as heretofore, but we shall surmount them and be victorious. "Saints should be cheerful in their warfare, that they may be joyous in their triumph." Let us not forget what the Lord said to the church in 1909: "The Lord is well pleased with the advancement which has been made in approaching unity during the conference year; and though there may have been differences of opinion, these differences have been held in unity of purpose and desire for the good of my people, and will result in helping to bring to pass a unity of understanding. So be ye encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 129:9.

The Lord has had occasion to rebuke his people, and very sternly, in the past. We are yet far from perfect; but, thank God, he was pleased and able to commend the church in this instance. Let us be neither blind to faults nor guilty of discouraging, disheartening, distracting pessimism! God rules, and he means to rule, and he will rule for right.

Our personal experience is that he is kind and good and true and ever gracious to those who love and serve him. It is out of a living, conscious, ever-ahiding faith in him that his church, individually and collectively, shall triumph. Everyone in it and all who comprise the church must continue in our set purpose to go forward and assist in establishing Zion. We must succeed; we will succeed, if we are just and true to God and to his cause. Let us not fear. "Fear hath torment," "there is no fear in love." There is no reason why anyone should fear the outcome in anything, if God be with him. And God will be with us, if we be with him.

I cannot refrain, Mr. Editor, from offering this hastily penned word of encouragement. I see no great lions in the way. However, if they do appear, let no one fear or magnify them. The work is the Lord's and he has and will have many faithful people through whom he will work out the problems before us, unto ultimate victory. Largeness of view and a cheerful state of mind will help us greatly in our tasks.

The Reorganization will not fail; it was begun under marked divine direction and has been supervised and developed by the same great power that inaugurated it. Early inspiration declared its success in the gathering of the pure in heart and the redemption of Zion. The Lord burned this knowledge into the consciousness of the undersigned while yet a boy verging upon manhood. He has known this and known it vividly during a life of service in which he, with others, has passed with the church through some of its greatest times of trial and testing.

The body of the Reorganized Church contains many of the tried and faithful and true Israel of God. We shall continue to meet difficulties; and we remember the admonition that "the Saints shall hardly escape;" but the church will grow and live and increase unto the end.

The time is near when we shall have a fuller and better equipped local and general ministry, also a more fully developed membership; and the ministry, in due time, shall see "eye to eye." Let us work with this ideal in mind; for we shall not be disappointed if we do. But I must stop.

Saints in the stake are urged to remember the fall conference to be held at Guilford, Missouri, October 8 and 9. Your prayers are requested, as formerly, that the Lord may rule in the assemblies.

We regret to state that Sister Lewis, widow of Patriarch William Lewis, is very ill and suffering severely at the home of her son-in-law, Brother D. C. Kinnaman, of Saint Joseph.

Sincerely and hopefully,
R. S. SALYARDS.

Opening of Graceland

(Special Correspondence)

With a larger student body, a larger faculty, a wider range of modern courses, and the added facilities afforded by the new building, there is a strong spirit of optimism and enthusiasm at Graceland.

The dedication program, attended by what was estimated to be a crowd of over 1,200 students, parents, and friends from the surrounding country, was held in the open Friday evening, September 16. President Frederick M. Smith's address, which followed a number of short inspirational talks from men and women who have long been supporters of the college, held the attention of the crowd from start to finish, and held out for Graceland, as he said, "a program more ambitious than any held before any other institution in the country." Indeed his words were significant of a new sphere, or rather of a larger sphere of action for the college, and expressed the hope that the people of the church would soon be squarely and solidly behind the educational movement. He pointed out the fact that the college will soon be able to render a service to the church such as no other organization can.

Last year Graceland had the largest enrollment in her history, but, contrary to expectations, up to the present time the enrollment this year has exceeded it. About twenty students from foreign countries are here, representing England, Scotland, Wales, Canada, Australia, Palestine, and Austria. More States in our own country than ever before are also represented.

The older courses in liberal arts and teacher training still attract the majority of the students, but the new courses in engineering, secretarial work, pre-law, pre-medicine, and other courses offered are popular, and the number of students that are taking work under them show that Graceland is justified in meeting these needs for the students. There is an increasing interest among the students in studies which lead more immediately into fields of practical activity.

The college authorities, and many of the older students, feel that if economic conditions were better, even the new facilities would scarcely provide enough room for the number of young people of the church that would be here. It is certain that a great many more of them should be interested in the work and ideals that the college is holding forth, and they should be here in preparation for the work before us.

Anticipating New Religio Quarterlies

Realizing that many classes were late in getting their Religio Quarterlies last quarter, and that a further delay was necessary while textbooks were being secured, we are herewith giving notice of the subjects treated by the senior Quarterlies for the quarter beginning October 1.

One set of lessons, as before, is based on the Young People's Church History. The optional course is based on the booklet, From One to Twenty-one. Both of these publications are for sale by the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, the price of volume 1 of the history being $1.55, in cloth binding, and that of From One to Twenty-one, twenty-five cents each, postpaid.

We trust that each local will be able to anticipate its needs and order in ample time, so that none of these interesting lessons will be missed.

HOWARD W. HARDER, General Secretary.

Lamoni Stake Activities

A season of intensive study begins in Lamoni with the beginning of the school year.

The officers and members of the Lamoni Stake have long felt the burden of the responsibility which, since the people of the church are looking here and to the other stakes for leadership in the forward movement of Zion, they feel is theirs. Gradually the people have become inclined to throw their energies into definite lines of activity, for the attainment of a few definite ideals which must be established in the preliminary organization of Zion.

Briefly, it is felt that the progress "unto perfection," letting go of none of the principles upon which our hope in the gospel is founded, must include the following active ideals: personal purity, both for individuals and as the basis of a happy and Christian home life; intelligence, to be attained by a broader knowledge of the gospel plan through the study of the church books, and the elevation of the educational standards so that our people may through study begin to see the basis of a solution of church problems; consecration, that devotion to the good of humanity without which all efforts to accomplish anything are rendered impotent and void. The officers have constantly held these ideals before the people as the equipment which we must have in order even to start.

For the older people, the preaching service has been the instrument of this movement. For the younger people, the Sunday school and Religio are the active agents.

As definite things with which we may now work, classes in these two auxiliary departments have been organized with the purpose in mind of giving courses that will stimulate thought on the solution of the advance problems of Zion, and which if possible will point towards the factors, materials, and organization that will aid in the solution of those problems. The following announcement from the Lamoni Chronicle indicates the scope of the courses:

The following courses will be given for young people in the Sunday school and Religio at the Brick Church. Unless otherwise stipulated, all classes will be open to both men and women.

1. "Christianizing the life of the community—a study of the ideals of Christianity and their application to community and social problems of the day—this course will point to a socialized religion. F. M. McDowell and probably another will teach this course in Sunday school. It will be repeated at Religio by Leonard Lea.

2. "Religious economics"—an application of our church ideas to the economic and industrial problems of the day; how to bring about economic equality; what is economic equality? Will be given in both Sunday school and Religio by Professor C. E. Irwin.

3. Necessary equipment of the individual in the new social order—Christ's solution of individual life problems—faith, doctrine, and social ethics. Professor Gustave Platz and Rupert Wight will give this work in the Sunday school, and perhaps a third class will be given. Professor Platz will repeat the course in Religio. Another class in this course will be organized in Religio if desired.

4. "The history of the Latter Day Saint Church"—the story of its origin, rise, persecutions, and problems, from 1823 to present time. Vida Smith will conduct this course for young women in the Sunday school. If desired this course will be repeated in Religio.

5. "Book of Mormon, its origin, teachings, and authenticity." Flora L. Scott will give this work for young women in Sunday school.

6. "A study of our social problems as outlined in the Religio Quarterly"—based upon Ellwood's Social Problems, will be given in Religio by Professor H. H. Gold.

7. "Mothercraft"—A study of the problems of raising children, their physical, mental, moral and spiritual natures, a course well suited for mothers and social workers. This course is given in Sunday school by Mrs. Lydia Wight.

8. "The teaching of religion." The growth of religion in the mind of the child. A course for teachers of religion, leaders in children's activities, instructional and recreational, and parents. A. M. Carmichael will give this course in Religio.

9. The Sunday school senior Quarterly will be given in the Sunday school for young women by Professors J. A. Gun-solley and Gustave Platz.

10. "Administrative problems of the Latter Day Saint Church." Pastoral problems, relationship of quorums, for the members of the priesthood, will be given in Sunday school by C. E. Wight, assisted by Leonard Hoisington.

Sunday school starts at 9.30 Sunday morning, and Religio 6.30 Sunday evening. Sessions commence promptly. Everybody is welcome. Let the attendant at the door know what course you desire.

There is a great interest manifested in these subjects, large numbers of people flocking to the classes, with a good response from the work. A. M. Carmichael presides over the Sunday school and F. M. McDowell over the Religio. In the effort to accomplish all this, there is the finest type of cooperation between the stake officers, the priesthood in attendance at the college, and the college authorities. Many of the instructors and students at the college are actively engaged in it, making for harmony and enthusiasm in the work.

The officers here, being persuaded that the "hastening time" is truly upon us, are doing everything to advance the work as rapidly as possible. It is proposed more than ever before to use the resident and visiting priesthood for the carrying of the gospel work into surrounding territory that has not been reached yet, and to keep steady appointments at all branches.

L. J. LEA, Correspondent.

Council Bluffs and Vicinity

The reunion of the Pottawattamie, Fremont, Southern and Northeastern Nebraska Districts is had in remembrance as one of the pleasant experiences of many, and is noted as an excellent gathering of God's people, to worship the God of Israel. The health of the camp was most excellent, although there was located near one hundred tents in a very congested manner, and they were well occupied. Of the general missionary force, there were Apostles Myron A. Mc-Conley and J. F. Curtis, and Seventies E. E. Long, J. L. Parker, H. N. Price, and Daniel Macgregor. Patriarch C. E. Butterworth rendered acceptable service, many blessings being given to the comfort of the Saints. The preaching was of an elevating order, and the prayer and experience meetings were enjoyed by many. The departments were well represented, the presidency of the reunion looking after the interests of each in a very commendable way. The local missionaries and representatives rendered efficient service, so that it can be said that a profitable reunion was enjoyed. Some improvements are being considered for the reunion of 1922, which it was considered wise to hold.

Following the reunion a week of special cottage meetings have been held, and it is planned to hold several days more of the same class of services. Several expressed themselves as much benefited by the services. The services were arranged to be supervised by one of the priesthood, and several singers were appointed to accompany each speaker. Desire is to occupy in each home of the Saints ere concluding the effort. This is a good opportunity to invite the neighbors in to hear what the belief of the Saints is.

Brethren G. J. Harding and O. A. Currie have been appointed by the presidency of the branch as missionaries in the city of Council Bluffs. Growing out of these special services above mentioned several invitations for meetings in their homes have come to the presidency.

The choir have held a picnic as a result of competition in securing members for the choir, the losing party providing the entertainment for the party that won.

Women's Department was called to meet at the church in the afternoon of the 4th and given a new start. The Temple Builders were organized last Tuesday night, as I understand, and they concluded to take up the study of the Mothercraft Manual.

Apostle P. M. Hanson preached at Central Church last Sunday, the 11th, and the effort was highly spoken of.

Brethren Daniel Macgregor and Barraclough worshiped with us of late, and renewed acquaintances of the past, rendering such help as requested in the services.

The branch president is recovering from an operation on his nose with which he has been suffering for near fifteen years.

Walter Robert, a son of Brother John Currie, about seventeen years of age, was stricken with meningitis on Saturday, a week ago, and on the Wednesday following died at the hospital. The family are still in quarantine, but there are no indications that the disease had affected any others. Funeral sermon was preached at the cemetery at Crescent last Friday.

The body of a son of Sister Mary Ford, who died in action in 1918 in France, was returned to his home on Saturday last, and on Sunday there was conducted his funeral as a joint funeral service with another boy of Council Bluffs returned at the same time, at the Armory Building, the sermon being delivered by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by the Reverend Perkins of the First Congregationalist Church of the city, and Colonel Matt Tinley. More than a thousand people attended, and a very impressive scene was witnessed, the procession being led by the Legion, followed by the two hearses side by side, each followed by a score or more of automobiles filled with sympathizing friends. Will these scenes have a mitigating effect upon the spirit of war? I fear that the lesson to be learned is neglected. Men go on with the same selfish ideals that lead to conflict.

Conditions in a civic way are growing materially worse as the cold weather approaches and the time is lengthened when a man cannot secure honest employment. The Christ said, "Iniquity shall abound, and the love of many shall wax cold." Even some of those who are called Saints are expressing themselves in bitterness against a class to which they ascribe all the trouble existing. Such ones should turn the searchlight upon themselves and ask, Is the class to which we belong doing all to bring about the practical application of the Golden Rule, or are such ones encouraging conflict, and the spirit of resisting, and stirring up strife?

Details Concerning Church Damage at Manteno

Regarding the recent disturbance of the church property of Deselm Branch, near Manteno, Illinois, Kankakee County, I might relate that on September 6, 1920, we broke ground for a new church building, twenty-four feet by fifty feet, basement under all. On October 20, when the building was nearly ready for plastering, it was burned to the ground by incendiary fire. Following the investigation made by the State fire marshal, our people were boycotted socially and in their business (farming) relations with the rest of the community. We are truly in the world, but not of it. "Come out of the world, oh, ye, my people" surely applies to us, for our only neighbors are our own people.

Our fire loss was fully covered by insurance and this spring we duplicated the old building by a new one, which is still standing.

After a faithful summer's work the building was completed, furnace installed, fifty camp chairs put in, and also an organ, ready for the opening service September 5. On Saturday night preceding the opening the beautiful little stucco church was entered by a mob breaking into a basement window, coming up stairs into the main auditorium, which had beautiful hand decorating, where they began by smashing about forty camp chairs with a piece of gas pipe, poured tar or grease all over the organ, threw glass quart jars against the ceiling, scattering oil over all, poured it on our nice floor, not yet varnished, until it stood in puddles, and tore the two front doors off. These were laid outside on the steps.

We figure at least $500 damage, and our floor will never be nice again, and all hand decorating will have to be covered with paint.

They came in several autos and struck terror into the hearts of the neighbors, who were aroused and lighted lamps, by shooting with shotguns; and they made their escape by auto.

The Saints seem to have stood the shock well. We are down, but not defeated, and feel perfectly confident of a full and complete victory in the end.

We ever pray for the redemption of Zion and labor for the establishment of his kingdom upon earth.

EARL D. ROGERS, Branch President.

Haverhill, Massachusetts, September 13, 1921.

Editors Herald: A few lines from Haverhill. We are still in the Master's service.

Held a baptismal service Sunday, September 11, at which time four precious souls were inducted into the kingdom.

We have a fully organized and active priesthood, with each one working for the advancement of the "Master's kingdom" upon earth. Our numbers are small, but we have some good material growing up in the young folks of our Sunday school.

We have regular services each week, also Religio services each Sunday night.

Brother C. Edward Miller was with us last Sunday. We are always glad to see him, as he always leaves us some new thought.

All are rejoicing in this latter-day work and praying for the redemption of Zion.

Your coworker,
FRANK E. HATCH, Publicity Agent.

We were pained to learn that Mr. Joseph D. Johnson, athletic director of Graceland College, passed away on the evening of the 20th, from a brief illness of quinsy. He and wife and two children had gone to Lamoni the previous week, he to look after the athletics of the men and Mrs. Johnson those of the women of the college. He was subject to the disease and was able to be around on the day of his demise. He was out in a rain, which seemed to hasten the end.

The Carthage Republican reports that about two hundred relatives and friends recently assembled at the home of S. J. Salisbury, of Burnside, Illinois, to celebrate his eighty-sixth birthday. A sumptuous basket dinner was served and a good program rendered. He is the oldest living relative of Joseph the Martyr, the son of Catharine Salisbury, sister of the Martyr.

Elder R. C. Chambers has recently baptized three fine people (adults) at Bellevue, Idaho, and the wife of Brother Hunt at Rupert.

GRACELAND DEDICATION

(Continued from page 916.)

cises were brought to an early close at 11.50 a. m. Though the exercises were not announced for the public, there were a few visitors from town and there were a few visitors from out of town in addition to President E. M. Smith, Bishop I. A. Smith, R. J. Lambert, Henry C. Smith, and S. A. Burgess.

The collegiate enrollment for Thursday, the first day, showed about forty sophomores and as many freshmen.

The old college building was dedicated and first used in January, 1897, nearly twenty-five years ago.

S. A. BURGESS.

College Day October 16

The Presiding Bishopric have decided on October 16 as College Day, and upon that day all the branches are expected to receive a free-will offering from the Saints for the support and maintenance of Graceland College.

They are sending out a letter to branch presidents announcing this fact and urging that sufficient announcement of the date be given. A goal is suggested of 25 per cent of the Christmas offering given by the branch and Sunday school the past year.

The funds are to be sent to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

When President Frederick M. Smith returned from England he brought with him a number of very fine fountain pens, which he presented to the various members of his staff, and the departmental heads. These pens were manufactured by Brother Frank Swan, Birmingham, England, who is engaged in the fountain pen business and who has a very fine reputation for his product. The recipients of these pens were delighted, not alone with the pens themselves, but with the association that attaches to the gift.

The Sunday school and Religio classes of Mrs. E. S. McNichols in Independence, about one hundred and twenty-five in number, recently enjoyed a typical young folks' "hike" by walking to the home of O. C. White for a watermelon party. The young people of Zion have an asset in their large number, and they make the most of it.

Sister A. V. Archer, who is isolated and hungry for the gospel, writes from Pond Creek, Oklahoma, and tells the pleasure the church papers bring to her. She has had but two chances in the last fourteen years to hear a sermon, and has not had an opportunity to partake of the sacrament for twenty-seven years.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

"The Law of the Lord Is Perfect" - - -	913
Freedom and Truth - - -	914
Newspaper Ethics—A Code - - -	914
Joint Council Sessions - - -	915
Graceland Dedication - - -	916
College Day, October 16 - - -	935

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

The Relation Between Civics and the Home, by A. Max Carmichael - - -	917
--	-----

THE FORUM:

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work, by J. A. Koehler - - -	921
--	-----

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT - - -	926
Bertha L. Mader—Maude Peak Parham.

LETTERS - - -	929
---------------	-----

Frederick G. Pitt—R. S. Salyards—Howard W. Harder—L. J. Lea—Earl D. Rogers—Frank E. Hatch.
--	--

MISCELLANEOUS - - -	936
---------------------	-----

MISCELLANEOUS

Quorum Notices

Elders of Northern Michigan will meet at Bay City, October 8 and 9. There will be a supper served in the church basement for the elders, Friday evening. We would like to have as many present as possible on Friday evening, October 7. E. S. White, president, 208 North Dean Street, Bay City, Michigan.

Conference Notices

Detroit, at Flint, Michigan, October 8 and 9. Business session will convene on Saturday at 10 a. m. All of the officers and branch clerks please report at least a week before the conference. Reports of the branches should cover the period from January 1 to September 30. We trust that all who can will be in attendance, as good speakers will be provided. The church at Flint is on Newall Street, opposite the Dort School. Stanley Parrish, secretary, 1614 Lycaste Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

Nauvoo, at Montrose, Iowa, October 16 and 17. W. H. Gunn, 3014 Seneca Street, Fort Madison, Iowa.

Mobile, at Mobile, Alabama, November 5

Alabama, at Lone Star, November 12.

Toronto, at Toronto, Ontario, Soho Street church, October 7 to 9. The following changes have been made on the program. At the Friday morning session, there will be Religio institute instead of prayer service; motion pictures from the Provincial Health Department will also be included in the Friday evening session.

Eastern Iowa, at Davenport, October 14 to 16. First session will be at 2 p. m. Friday. Priesthood of the district and adjoining districts are especially urged to be present at this conference. There will be three lectures to the priesthood by S. A. Burgess, of Independence, Missouri; one on Saturday at 2.30 and one Sunday morning at 10.45, which will be open to all who wish to attend. The third will be to the priesthood, Sunday afternoon at 3.30. These will be of special value to all, and especially the priesthood. You should be present. Amos Berve, president.

Lantern Slides for Church and Religio Use

The Graphic Arts Bureau has undertaken to collect lantern slides and arrange them in lectures for use in the church work—missionary and local. The response to date has been very encouraging and we have with some financial assistance been able to complete nine sets with approximately thirty others under preparation. We expect to continue this work and want to give all interested an opportunity to help. The demand for the few sets we have has been greater than we could care for, so there need be no fear that it is of little importance.

The majority of the slides and negatives for slide making for these lectures have been loaned or given to the bureau and are carefully filed and cared for at the church offices in Independence, Missouri.

The givers have thus made them available for church use where needed. Some have placed entire lectures at our disposal, and others have given us their entire files of negatives. All are useful, and we want to ask any who have slides, or negatives, that are not in use or can well be spared to place them at our disposal for use in the church work. In order that you may have an idea of the work on this line we list the sets that have been completed and some of those in preparation:

- Set number 1. The Story of the Book of Mormon. Completed.
2. Conservation of the Vision. Health series. Completed.
3. Health and Milk. Health series. Completed.
4. The House Fly. Health series. Completed.
5. Jerusalem. Educational. Completed.
17. The Holy Land. Educational. Completed.
37. The Life of Christ. Historical. Completed.
39. Hints on Health. Health series. Completed.
40. Mesa Verde National Park. Educational (Archæological). Completed.

13. Beauties and Wonders of Nature. Educational. In preparation.

23. Incidents in the Rise of the Latter-day Work. In preparation.

24. Ancient America. In preparation.

35. Colorado. In preparation.

36. Graceland College. In preparation.

41. Tahiti. In preparation.

And approximately twenty-five others on various educational and church work subjects. Can you and will you help? If so, please write.

THE GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 255.

Sanitarium Needs

Anyone who can supply items in the following list will be doing an appreciated service to the Sanitarium inmates and officials:

Four dozen medium-weight blankets for the nurses' home.

Thirty good, part wool blankets, for hospital.

Four dozen bedspreads.

Two bolts heavy outing.

Two bolts material for white curtains for nurses' home.

One bolt of eight-quarters bleached sheeting.

One dozen double-breasted baby shirts, with only a small amount of wool in them.

Laboratory Technician Wanted

The Independence Sanitarium wants to secure the services of a young woman to learn medical laboratory work for the medical offices at the Sanitarium. A person of some experience is preferred. Write or call on the superintendent of the Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

Girls' Number of Autumn Leaves

Special arrangement has been made whereby extra copies of the November Girls' Number of the Autumn Leaves may be supplied through the Young Women's Bureau for five cents a copy. However, it is necessary that the publishers know by October 1 how many extras will be desired. Every girl should have one of these November Leaves. Will each monitor and leader please get in touch with her girls at once, and report to the Young Women's Bureau the number of copies desired. Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Our Departed Ones

HARRIS.—Otto Peter, son of Charles and Susan Harris, born near Andover, Missouri, September 2, 1895; died September 29, 1918. Otto enlisted with Company G, 139th Infantry, at Bethany, Missouri, May 5, 1917; went into training at Camp Doniphan, Fort Sill, Oklahoma; was sent overseas in April, 1918. He entered the Argonne Drive on September 26, and was killed in action September 29, 1918, near Exermont, France. Survived by a sister, Edith, of Independence, Missouri, other relatives, many friends. Baptized at the age of 8, he lived and died in the faith. His reward is sure. The body having been returned, services were at Lamoni church, September 18; sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HOPKINS.—John Franklin Hopkins was born January 1, 1855, in Alameda County, California. Died September 17, 1921, at Lamoni, Iowa. Moved with parents to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1872, and has been a resident there since. Married Ada Hudson, January 1, 1878. There were born to this union four children, three of whom have preceded him to the other shore. Leaves to mourn, wife, son Floyd, aged mother, and one brother, besides other relatives. All who knew him will mourn a friend. Was assessor of Lamoni for over twenty years and so successfully and satisfactorily performed the duties of this office that it was a rare thing for anyone to run against him at the election. Baptized in his early years and has been a consistent, faithful member unto death. Service in charge of John Garver, sermon by Frederick A. Smith.

MOORE.—Mary S. Benham died at her home in Portland, Oregon, July 6. Born near Pollock, Missouri, November 7, 1860. Baptized by Elder Clapp. Leaves to mourn; husband, 5 sons, 5 daughters, 1 sister, and 1 brother. Funeral from Saints' church at Portland; sermon by C. E. Jones. Interment at Albany, Oregon.

YOUNG.—Gracie Ann Young was born in Pontatoc County, Mississippi, August 10 1847. Baptized August 6, 1871. Died July 12, 1921, at her home in Lamoni, Iowa, following an illness of about a year. Sister Young was one of the early residents of Lamoni and was loved by all who knew her. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni. Service in charge of Columbus Scott. Sermon by C. E. Wight.

ANDERSON.—Arthur Lloyd, son of Brother and Sister Glen Anderson, was born May 19, 1920, and died August 18. Funeral service was held in their home, sermon by George W. Day. Interment in Northern Greenwood cemetery, at Bemidji, Minnesota.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There
save it be have none."

Jan 22 France
Mrs. Thos. Stew
110 N. 9th St.
Larchmont
Man among you have concubines he shall hon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, OCTOBER 4, 1921

NUMBER 40

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879, authorized for mailing at the rate of $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1919.

EDITORIAL

Graceland's Place in the Program of the Church

Address by President F. M. Smith at dedication of new college building, September 16, 1921. Reported by R. A. Wight.

It is with considerable pleasure that I help you to-night to dedicate this building; for I cannot but believe that in erecting this unit of the greater college building plan, we have at last struck the pace that I have long wished to see Graceland enter upon, a pace which, in my opinion, will eventually place Graceland College in the very forefront of the educational institutions of the world, for I believe that there is within the student body of the church of which I am a representative, that which will carry them to the forefront and from which we will eventually be enabled to draft the members of the faculty which will make this institution second to none other on the earth.

To-night I am asked to talk to you something upon the relationship of the work of the college to the program of the church. What is the work of the church? Without doubt one of the primary functions of any church which is a progressive one is to be engaged in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the nations of the earth. And there never was a time in the history of the world when that occupation for a church was so essential and so important as to-day, for surely in the light of the recent world carnage we cannot claim that the gospel of Jesus Christ is fully appreciated by humanity. There is need for the vitalizing and soul-saving message of Jesus the Christ to be carried to the nations of the earth. Whether we shall say that this is the primary work of the church, or whether we shall say that it is but incidental, it still remains true that the church which is alive and progressive must be engaged in interpreting the gospel of Jesus Christ anew to the world to-day which is starving for the message of the Christ.

Socials Ills Need Correction

At the same time we know that it is the work of the church to look after those who have already become members, by erecting and maintaining a high standard of morals. Is such work needed to-day? Those of you who are students of society—those of you who realize that there must be some bond that ties every group together, cannot fail to be disturbed by the social disintegration to-day because of the breaking down of our morals—not our morale, but our morals. I do not need to take the time to-night to demonstrate to you, nor even call to your attention the many signs there are of the breaking or lowering of the morals of the world, but I may place my finger upon that which every student of sociology knows to be fundamental and that is that in America to-day, to say nothing about the rest of the world, in America to-day, which is supposed to be the leading nation in civilization, the fundamental unit of society is disintegrating to such an extent that the ideal home is becoming far too rare.

It perhaps may be overdrawing to say what to say it thus strongly, but what else can be said in Kansas City alone, racially a typical American city, the ratio of divorces to marriages is one to four. Germany has recently become alarmed over the fact that her ratio of divorces to marriages has become one to eight, and is already passing laws to stop it. It is not merely the question of the existence of divorces that is disturbing us to-night, but because we recognize that divorce is but the outcrop of that which is lying deeper, and that is the breaking morals of the American people. And when I say American people, I could just as well include the peoples of the earth.

Writers, not only sociological, but business and scientific men of to-day, are calling the attention of the people to the facts I have just been trying to present to you. Just recently I was reading a book by one of the leading psychologists in which he quotes another writer to the effect that jazz music is but an outcrop of a reversion to more primitive conditions and indicates a temporary break in civilization; and he characterizes jazz music as being barbarous in a literal sense, that we have reverted to a barbaric state, for syncopated music is characteristic of primitive peoples.

And so there devolves upon us as the work of the church to-day the tremendous task of standing in the forefront against the invading forces that are undermining the greatest institution of our social life, the home. And this church, if it stands for anything, must stand first, last, and all the time for a home built upon an impregnable rock in which high morals shall be inculcated and taught to the rising generations that must succeed us in taking up the responsibilities of civilization.

Stewardships the Keystone of the Arch

But beside this, beside both the missionary and what we might call the local work of the church, we stand to-day at the gate which will lead us eventually into a field which has so far been unoccupied by the church. I refer to the fact that I have so repeatedly been calling the attention of the people to, that before this church, within the next few years, stands the tremendous task of demonstrating to the world that we have the greatest, broadest, and most brilliant plan of social economy that is in the world to-day, and demonstrating to the world that our social philosophy is not merely a pretty fancy, but a practical, working thing. Are we going to do it?

The very keystone of the arch in this social system, which we must put into effect, is the doctrine of stewardships. And what is that? It is that organization of social life that will permit every man to function to the maximum of his possibility in that by which he will best serve the group, and be quite content to submerge his own interests in the interests of the group. And that means a complete reversal of the social dynamic of to-day; for go to any branch of business to-day that you please, or go to any other school, with the possible exception of Graceland College, and you will find that the goad, the whip, or dynamic that is applied to every student, urging him to make a success, is that he can build up his own interests. He is urged to take up this profession because he can make the most money. He is sometimes encouraged to drop certain things because in that calling there is not the chance for the making of money. In other words, selfishness is the present dynamic, and that is the thing that this church must stand squarely against, for the doctrine of stewardship approaches the whole matter from the opposite side and tries to get every man to work for the good he can do to other men and forget his own interest in becoming absorbed in the interests of those with whom he is surrounded in the group.

Create a New Social Viewpoint

Hence, you can see that one of the first great tasks that confronts the church is to reverse the method of things and create the ability on the part of the masses of the people to see and speak and act in terms of altruism rather than selfishness. In other words, we must create a new social viewpoint; a very difficult, if not almost impossible thing to do. People think they have this view; but let them attempt to explain it, and they do so in terms of selfishness. For us as a people properly to appreciate our own doctrine, we must create a new form of thinking. That is the problem immediately before the church to-day; and here comes in the work of Graceland, for if Graceland is to function as an auxiliary of the church and an institution which is building up the interests of the church, there must first be inculcated among the student body here the desire, ambition, and habit of looking at the interests of the other man rather than the interests of self. In other words, realizing that the religion being taught by this church is a social affair and that our attitude to God is determined by our attitude towards our fellow man, we must realize that we cannot serve God unless we are able to interpret our activities in terms of the other fellow's interest. Not only must the student body be impregnated by this ideal, but here must be developed the leaders, the teachers, and the preachers of the church who will carry that same message to the church outside and to those of the world who are listening for it.

A concomitant of the doctrine of stewardship is similar to that old saying among good housekeepers, "Everything in its place and a place for everything." The doctrine of stewardship implies that there is a place for every man and every man must be in his place, not the place which has been pointed out by selfishness, but the place indicated by your God-given talents, the place where you can serve society the best and do the other fellow the most good. And that carries with it another concomitant—education. In other words, there is, in my opinion, given to every man and to every woman by the Almighty himself some one talent in which he will excel, and for the exercise of which God will hold him individually responsible. That talent must be discovered, and when it has been discovered then it must be developed, and that is the very sum and substance of education. To uncover the talent, and once having found it, develop it to the greatest possible development is the task, is the goal. And that will mean, and not until then, that every man is working for the very best of the community and is giving to the community the maximum of service, and work will be eliminated by becoming a pleasure.

The Work of Graceland College

And there comes in the work of Graceland College. I do not suppose that it is possible for the time to come when every child, every young man, and every young woman in the church shall pass through the portals of Graceland College and to receive therefrom a diploma for excellence in work accomplished, but somewhere in the educational institutions of the church we must make it possible that every child shall have the opportunity for the fullest education, when not only every child, but every adult, every man and woman who is willing or desires to take, and is capable of taking an education, there will be given to him the opportunity therefor.

Now, in using the word education, please do not confuse it with schooling, for a man may be schooled and still be uneducated. Education is that development that enables an individual to make the very highest response to the stimuli that comes to him in following his vocation or his God-given duties. And hence there must be supplied somewhere in the educational machinery of the church this opportunity for everyone to receive this education, and it is going to devolve upon Graceland College to produce the machinery which will make it possible. We are proud of Graceland College as a junior college, but I cannot look down the vista of the future and see Graceland remaining a junior college. I cannot even look down and be satisfied with seeing her remain a standard college; but I have always looked forward to the time when we could say, "Graceland University."

It seems to me there ought to be an awakening in the church to-day. The time is here when we must develop a man until he is expert in some line, for there is such a demand to-day in the church for workers as never existed in the past. If you could go with me to my office and sit there through even one day of the experiences that are there encountered you would very quickly be made aware of the fact, and a painful fact it is to us, that for every man who is capable of doing the work that is needed to do, we have anywhere from three to three dozen jobs for him. There is a paucity of workers. And it is going to be up to the college, as I understand it, to furnish more and more the workers that we are demanding in the work of the church.

I would like to say, perhaps in a slightly different way, exactly what I have been saying. That somewhere we must be able to put into operation, or somehow, the machinery in the church (and to a certain extent we have to borrow that machinery by sending our students to other colleges) and put into effect those processes that will finally develop in every individual in the church an intelligent ignorance, that we might fully know our limitations, for it is just as foolish for an individual to undertake that which he is not qualified to accomplish as it is for a man with big capacity to be contentedly engaged in doing little things. In other words, I look for the time to come soon, if it is not already here, when many of the leaders, and teachers, and preachers, of the church will come from the ranks of the student body of Graceland, and I presume and hope that the time will soon come when from the graduate student body of Graceland there will be drafted men and women who will constitute the faculties of the other colleges that we must establish.

Educational Influence Spreading

We heard about the history of the development of Graceland College. We heard how people got up and talked in the conferences and who were not discouraged by being sat upon. And in 1894 a conference authorized the establishment of Graceland College. But did you know that we have the nucleus of a college started in Independence? Some do not know it. We did not go to the conference and ask them for a college, but there were one or two men willing to sacrifice for the church, and they brought together a small group of students and began to teach them, and do you know that while Graceland was yesterday enrolling nearly two hundred, the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences enrolled about one hundred students? I will venture the prediction that before very many years have passed, you will find a college in Independence under the auspices of this church, supplementing the work of this college, and it is going to make Graceland hustle to set the pace. I do not expect to see the time Graceland will not be the head of the educational work. This will mean more than a junior college; but then we hope to have not one but several institutions which will take her place as junior colleges throughout the church. It must come.

The influence of the leader of this church, as your servant, will ever be exerted towards creating an ever-increasing and deepening demand for the widest possible education of its members. I look over the past record of fifteen years of work, yes, nearly twenty years of work, as an officer with some degree of satisfaction when I compare the attitude of the church to-day on education with what it was twenty years ago; and it gives me encouragement to hope that some of the things we now are working for will eventually be realized; and I hope to see it recognized sometime the world over that as a church the membership is better educated than any other church in the world. Will I live to see that day? I hope so.

Let me put it this way. Why am I so earnest in the question of education? Shall every member of the church be educated? Coming back to that one great theme that it seems is so important, if the doctrine of stewardship is ever put into effect, it absolutely demands that through education there shall be uncovered in every individual in the church that thing for which he is best qualified, and it can be discovered only through the processes of education, and that is why I so earnestly urge upon the young to educate. When they come to me asking what to do I have urged them to generalize, generalize, generalize, until sometime they shall come in contact with that which will stir them so deeply as forever to settle the question of what to do and on what line to qualify for greater activity.

The Appeal of the Stewardship Idea

Not very long ago I had occasion to go to South Jersey, and while there visited a family not members of the church. Of course, among other things we talked of stewardships. They were people whose chief concern had been to get dollars, or wealth, to enjoy the power that money brings. And do you know, as I talked the doctrine of stewardship I was pleased to see the interest manifest until finally the mother of the family said, "Oh, how I wish that my boys could hear this doctrine of stewardships as you have been talking it; for oh, I get so tired of hearing nothing but dollars! dollars! dollars! till I can see the dollar mark on everything." So she said to me, "Would you mind talking to Ben?" I told her I would be delighted to talk to Ben, and Ben is this kind of a lad: He is a boy who has had plenty of money to go to school on. He drifted through high school because the rest did. His college was picked out by his parents. He told me that he didn't care to become a banker, but he drifted along through college till he took up the study of physics, when he found a great and deep interest, and because he was deeply interested in physics he took up the study of mathematics and he found another inviting field. He found that he could go to the laboratory and start some work at sundown and the morning sun would find him still at work at his desk. He lost all sense of time.

And then he became imbued with the idea of telling the other boys what he had learned; and that lad told me that his ambition was to teach, and he didn't care a continental about the question of salary. Then I told him about Graceland College and I told him about the men that were working here and the spirit in which they are working, that there was none here but who could draw larger salary at other institutions. And I said to him, "How would you like to go out to an institution of that kind, and build up the department of physics?" And he said, "If I were not already engaged as a professor of physics, I would like to go this fall."

He had become a convert to the doctrine of stewardship, and yet in the church there are still those who are not willing to give practical adherence to that doctrine. They are clinging to their pocketbooks for fear the church will get their money. It is clear that the church has failed to arouse them to their own interests by pointing out to them the fact that their interests are inseparably wrapped up with the interests of their brothers.

A Special Charge to Graceland Students

And so it is going to devolve upon the students in Graceland College to engender, to foster, and to spread, the law of consecration and devotion to religion in the highest sense of the word, and stir the church membership until they are ready en masse to put into effect their own doctrines of social economy, that they can announce to the world that they have the biggest thing going to-day. I used to say that thing with some reservation. I used to feel that perhaps it is not so important as I thought, but I have been permitted to visit a few of the countries of the world, and I have been permitted to see the conditions that exist therein, learn of their longings, learn of their sense of unfitness of things, and I have returned to our own shores, and to my own work in the church with greater satisfaction and a firmer and deeper conviction that what we have in the way of a social philosophy is what the world needs to-day. Hence the concern that I have so long felt that the church might be tardy in demonstrating to the world our social philosophy. And I have come before this body, as I have come before other audiences, urging them that they will drive themselves to the maximum of their energy in preparing for the day which is surely soon here, if it is not already here, when every member of the church will have to answer the question: Are you prepared to enter into a stewardship for the church?

Can you fail to see the connection between the work of Graceland and work of the church? You students in Graceland College, I wonder if you feel the stirrings that cannot but awaken within you a consciousness that upon us devolves a duty that no other student body in this country has and that you are here with a definite purpose, that you are here to prepare for the greater usefulness for the church you love and to which you belong. That love can be demonstrated only by a fealty and devotion in a religious way to the interest of your brother.

May God hasten the time when that consciousness will be universal throughout the student body of the entire church, and spread with the utmost rapidity until every soul is set on fire by the great desire to show to the world they can carry on all activities with all the excellence that is maintained by the men of the world, with the dynamic of selfishness displaced by the dynamic of altruism.

Patriarch Ammon White is the speaker at a series of sermons which began at Des Moines, Iowa, on the 1st and are to continue a week, extending into the annual home-coming day on the 9th. This event is held a month earlier than usual this year.

College Day---October 16

One liberal offering to Graceland from each of us annually would pay all her expenses, with a surplus to spare.

College Day

October 16 has been declared by the Bishop to be College Day this year. The work that Graceland is doing is greater than ever before. She has more collegiate students as well as a larger general enrollment. No school is self-supporting or is supported entirely by tuition, but Graceland tuition and charges do cover a large part of the expenses. We should also remember that the money so contributed to the church for Graceland College has been made, by General Conference, a fund to help young people secure an education. This is by a plan of loan to be repaid afterwards to help other students.

The church needs our trained young people in every department of her service. Those who go there, as a rule, come out imbued with the spirit of consecration on which Graceland is founded.

A letter to all branch presidents from the Presiding Bishop emphasizes this present need and calls upon the church, upon each branch, for a donation of one fourth of the Christmas offering of last year. Surely we can do one fourth as well as the Sunday school children.

Remember October 16, College Day.

Political Ideals

Party allegiance does not mean suppression of conscience, nor voting for unworthy men and measures.

Francis Lynde Stetson, a leading lawyer of New York and of America has recently passed away. This is an occasion for repeating a statement he made to the United States Senate in 1911, as follows:

"Though I may be one of those Democrats who have . . . occasionally voted the Republican ticket, I am also one of those who have voted the Democratic ticket whenever permitted and allowed by the organization to do so with self-respect. . . I repudiate absolutely the suggestion that a Democrat, convinced that his party or his country will be injured by the adoption of a certain course, is in honor bound to vote for the adoption of that course because of caucus and convention control. The strength and hope of the party is in the adoption of principles and candidates who will represent and command the willing spirit of the entire party and not in the coerced statement of any of its members."

Therein lies a vital political principle, of which it is well we should remind ourselves, at a time when we are not torn up by preelection campaigns. Those who can be counted on always to vote straight can exercise but little influence for reform. We hope the time will never come when the vote of the church will be cast simply for one party or the other, or that the vote of the church will be cast as a solid block. We do hope for the time to come when the vote of the church will be recognized distinctly as a factor for righteousness, and the day when all parties will know, in proposing candidates, that their capabilities will be carefully scrutinized by individuals, and that a calm, independent judgment will be made and a vote cast for the most fit man, and the most fit laws so far as our intelligence and information permit us to judge. If we should be individually associated with the two or three leading parties, or with other parties as judgment may determine, is by no means objectionable. But it should also be known that our voting for any candidates or any candidate on said tickets will be determined by his fitness for the office for which he holds. Loyalty to a party or a cause cannot require moral turpitude or suppression of conscience.

Church News

President F. M. Smith was in Lamoni over Sunday the 2d and spoke to the Saints at the morning service and addressed the priesthood in the afternoon.

The sessions of the Joint Council held during the week were adjourned on Thursday evening indefinitely, to meet again at the call of the Presidency. One of their actions was to appoint a committee in general charge of the young people's meetings over the church, consisting of Paul M. Hanson, Frederick A. Smith, James F. Keir, Arthur E. McKim, and John A. Gardner.

The quarterly conference of the Saints in Zion was held on Sunday and Monday, October 2 and 3. The sacrament service was largely attended. At this time Vernon A. Reese was ordained president of the Second Quorum of Teachers, with Howard W. Harder and Frank Hershey as counselors. E. D. Moore was set apart as counselor of A. K. Dillee, president of the quorum of elders. In the afternoon was held the military funeral of Roscoe Haldeman, who died in military service in China. It was a largely attended funeral and the sermon was by Walter W. Smith. In the evening the sermon was by Elbert A. Smith, on "The inside of the cup," it being reported for publication later. The Monday evening service is announced as a business session.

The Saints at the North Liberty Church in Independence are planning a series of young people's services to begin at an early date.

Church Schools

In his address at the Graceland College dedication, published in this issue, President F. M. Smith makes an allusion to the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences which might be misunderstood. A few details may make the matter clearer.

This school, organized five years ago at the instigation of Walter W. Smith and wife, who had conducted similar classes in Philadelphia, with the help of other students, has not been placed as a burden upon the church nor made a matter of church expense.

It has been from the beginning a purely voluntary matter, the result of donated services of a consecrated band who are willing to give instruction to others in the interests of the church. The assistance and support of college people in Independence has been easily obtained, they offering their services without charge for from one to six evenings a week, thus affording opportunity to those unable to attend a regular college. Many of the instructors are engaged in other work for the church, and some have ability superior to instructors in other schools. High school and business students, kindergarten training, and other subjects are offered as rapidly as conditions warrant.

Extension work is being carried on in other places, and will, no doubt, increase in time the effort being made to extend the advantages of training as widely as opportunity permits. This extension work, in fact all educational work, is under the general supervision of Graceland College.

Reports from Scranton, Pennsylvania, mention six baptisms recently by E. B. Hull and two during the year by Richard Hawkins.

The Sanitarium reports that four new nurses have entered the training school for nurses for the coming year: Grace Boone, Pittsburg, Kansas; Lillian Renier, Independence, Missouri; Viola Mae Cameron, Fergus, Ontario, Canada; Sarah Diefendorf, Wray, Colorado.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

What of To-day?

By Ralph W. Farrell

The decline of religious interest may react in our favor, offering as we do a program appealing to the honest in heart.

Many are asking the question. Many are attempting to answer it. Certainly foundationless opinion is not the safe criterion. We must look a matter in the face, gaze at it with clear-eyed patience, and examine it in the light of facts. We are told some startling things in a volume, just published, by Charles Otis Gill and Gifford Pinchot. (Six Thousand Churches, Macmillan Company.)

These men do not indulge in the pastime of surmising, of computation from second-hand statistics; they give the results of a careful investigation of conditions in the rural districts of the State of Ohio. It is to be borne in mind that this State was not selected because conditions in it are exceptionally bad. On the contrary, the selection was made because of its centrality, the area containing great numbers of churches, the average being one church for every two hundred persons, the stronger denominations being represented there for the past century. This report reveals a decline, both morally and religiously. And the situation is worse in that portion of the State where the American stock predominate and foreign born population is small. Let us quote a paragraph:

Lowering of Moral Conditions

"In this area, after more than a hundred years of work of churches, the religious, social, and economic welfare of the people is going down. Although the churches have been here for more than a century, no normal type of organized religion is really flourishing, while the only kind which, during the past fifteen years, has been gaining ground—the cult of the Holy Rollers—is scarcely better than that of a dervish. The churches have failed, and are failing, to dispel ignorance and superstition, to prevent the increase of vice, the spread of disease, and the general moral and spiritual decadence of the people. Imbeciles, feeble-minded, and delinquents are numerous, politics is corrupt, the selling of votes is common, petty crimes abound, the schools have been badly managed and poorly attended. Cases of rape, assault, and robbery are almost weekly occurrences within five minutes' walk of one of the county seats, while in another county political control is held by a self-confessed criminal."

Half the Population in Darkness

Now let us look at a statement from the United States Census of 1916. It shows two hundred and two different religious denominations in this fair country of ours. But in our population of more than one hundred million people, less than forty-two million acknowledge connection with any kind of religion. Trustworthy statistics show that an actually incredible number of the young people of our land are growing up without definite religious teaching of any sort. When we make due allowance for the fact that many church members ought to be out and many nonchurch members ought to be in the confines of the body of Christ, we are still confronted with the awful reality that fully one half of our population is in darkness and presumably indifferent as to whether it ever finds the light. Fifty million people is a large number!

What are we going to do about it?

On May 24 and 25 of last year, Kenyon College listened to two mighty startling lectures delivered by William T. Manning, S. T. D., D. C. L., Rector of Trinity Church, New York.

In his book, Call to Unity, he challenges the sects. Had a Latter Day Saint elder used such language, in tract or sermon, ten years ago, he would have been looked on as a fanatic. Yet his statements would have been none the less true. We quote:

"A disunited church cannot call forth the faith of men, nor give the message of Christ to the world. Its own inconsistency, and self-contradiction are too evident. . . . A divided church is giving us a nonbelieving world. . . . Education alone does not give moral principle. A trained intellect has no necessary connection with right conduct. There is no other basis for moral conduct except religion. . . . A member of the Board of Education of the city of New York was reported recently as saying: 'We fully understand that a system of education from which God and religion are excluded provides only a civilization which must crumble to pieces.' We must win back all of us the vision of the church of Christ as Saint Paul sees it and shows it to us, the church divinely founded to be the pillar and ground of the truth, the dispenser of heavenly grace, the Body and the Bride of Christ. It is this New Testament, divinely given ideal of the church, which is needed to draw us all together, and fill us with longing for the full realization, and manifestation, of our fellowship in the one Lord. . . . The church, Saint Paul tells us, is the body of the living Christ. Christ and his church are not two, they are one. The church can only be one, because it is the body of Christ. There can no more be two churches than there can be two Christs. . . . No one has ever urged the call to unity and its claim upon all Christians with such power, and passion, as Saint Paul does. If the great apostle were now here with us in the flesh there is no question as to what his counsel would be to us." (From pages 2-21.)

It seems to me that between the lines of Mr. Manning's address, we can read the doom of sectarianism. There is no hope for celestial glory outside of the body of Christ; and that body is one. It cannot be divided and live. Men who think clearly recognize this fact to-day—and they tremble for the consequences. Naturally the Catholic thinks it will end in his favor; that all churches will eventually be absorbed by the Roman Catholic Church. Some members of the Episcopalian priesthood think that there is a fighting chance of their winning the coveted prize, and there is foundation for this thought, or hope, for ministers in the later organizations, such as the Baptists, Methodists, etc., are going to the Church of England in far larger numbers than are coming from that faith to them.

Unity Will Come, But Not Unity in Righteousness

There are men who will play on a fiddle while a city burns; others who will cry peace when there is no peace; and still others who will deceive themselves with the whistle of so-called optimism; but there are other men, who, like true prophets, will pray in their hearts while they pump with their hands to save the sinking ship. While the roar of the Niagara comes nearer and nearer, such men as Manning will lift up a voice of warning—but it is too late. No student of the Book of Mormon and the Bible can believe that a uniting of the churches pleasing to God can ever take place. To be sure there will be a uniting, but it will be with the church of the Devil or with the church of the Lamb of God. Nephi saw that day. Listen to him:

"But behold, I prophesy unto you concerning the last days; concerning the days when the Lord God shall bring these things forth unto the children of men. . . . And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumblingblock, that they have built up many churches; nevertheless they put down the power and the miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves, their own wisdom and their own learning; that they may get gain, and grind upon the face of the poor; and there are many churches built up which cause envyings, and strifes, and malice."—2 Nephi 11: 80, 90-93.

A Day of Many Churches

The disunity of the churches and the evil results following, as voiced by Mr. Manning, give evidence in support of Nephi's statement, and the fact shakes us into a realization that in this day is the word of the Lord fulfilled in our sight: it is the day of many churches, built up to get gain and grind upon the face of the poor, causing strifes, envyings, and malice. But Nephi saw another day, yet future from this time; it was the day of only two churches, now many. Let him speak:

"And he [the angel] said unto me, Behold, there are save two churches only; the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the Devil; Wherefore, whose belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth. And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the whore of all the earth, and she sat upon many waters; and she had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues and people."—1 Nephi 3: 220-225.

It is perhaps better to avoid error by placing a broad interpretation on prophecy, whenever possible. The picture before us reveals a great anti-Christ combination, with the Devil as its founder. Satan will work on the hearts of the children of men till he shall succeed in combining them into a great church which shall be known as his—the church of the Devil, in opposition to the church of the Lamb of God. This power is to have dominion over all nations—to be exact: "She had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues and people." Her power is earth-wide; she will control politics, merchants, schools—everything earthly. And notice what she will do when her power has become great:

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the great mother of abominations did gather together in multitudes upon the face of all the earth, among all nations of the Gentiles, to fight the Lamb of God."—1 Nephi 3: 229.

Of this church of Christ, which is mentioned as the second and only other church, Nephi writes:

"And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few, because of the wickedness and abominations of the whore who sat upon many waters; nevertheless, I beheld that the church of the Lamb, who were the saints of God, were also upon all the face of the earth; and their dominions upon the face of the earth were small, because of the wickedness of the great whore whom I saw."—1 Nephi 3: 226-228.

But though this body of people was small in number, they possessed what was denied the other organization: the power of God, which descended upon the saints of the church of the Lamb, and they were armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory.

As the Savior said, it is the days of Noah repeating themselves. The city of Enoch is again to be established. The world is rushing towards that day. The wicked will destroy the wicked. At the present moment we see the forces of evil curbed somewhat, the reaping angels restrained, God waiting while his servants call on the nations to repent. Righteousness is the arms of the saints; he that taketh the carnal sword shall perish with the sword.

Doctor Manning calls for a unity of the churches, but does he not know that the only uniting which God will accept is on the basis of the primitive, unchangeable gospel? The prophetic call ever has been, "Back to Christ." Not, "Forward to the teachings of man." What is the price these uniting churches must pay? If rationalism prevail, belief in a divine Christ must be abandoned. If the doctrine of sprinkling prevail, the Baptist, Adventist, and other immersionists must go back on a principle they have fought for since their origin as churches. The Episcopalian insists that confirmation be adopted; and the Catholic will not listen to anything that minimizes the authority of the pope.

No Unity Outside Old Paths

The call to unity is sense, but the manner in which this unity is to be brought about, as outlined by sectarianism, is nonsense. No unity pleasing to God can be effected outside of the old paths. He said to the apostatizing church at Ephesus, "Repent, and do the first works lest I come suddenly and remove thy candlestick." His call is the same in all ages.

And the Lord, "knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake to him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow men, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers." (Revelation given through Joseph Smith, in Ohio, November 1, 1831, Doctrine and Covenants, section 1.)

From Millions We Shall Gather Thousands

So this revelation, given in the State of Ohio nearly one hundred years ago, swings us back to the quotation given at the outset of this argument. "In this area (Ohio), after more than a hundred years of churches, the religious, social, and economic welfare of the people is going down." The statement appalls us; it makes the heart sick; but it is true. Woe unto the inhabitants of the earth, for they are ripening in iniquity, having rejected the offered mercy of God. As a church we must go on, for here and there is an honest soul waiting for the waters of life. One by one we shall gather them into the fold of Christ. Sectarianism has failed. Our social, economic, and religious program will gather around its standard those honest people who desire to come out of Babylon. Out of the millions we can gather thousands. And the thought that we have the remedy for the world's sorrow and perplexity, should inspire us with the zeal that burned in the heart of the disciples of the first century and of the disciples of the nineteenth century. For Jehovah has promised us great things. His word will not fail.

Educational Dreams Realized

An address written for the dedicatory exercises at Graceland College by Marietta Walker and read by Vida E. Smith.

To-night I am finding myself brought face to face with the truth of an assertion once made by Henry Ward Beecher. "You think," said Mr. Beecher, "that one hour buries another; but it is not so. You think you have parted forever from the things which have passed by you. No, you have not. There is much of your life that you think has gone that you shall never part from. It has stepped behind you and there it waits. That which you have done is with you to-day; and that which you are doing will be with you to-morrow. When the mason carries up the wall, the course of the brick which he laid yesterday is the foundation on which he is laying another course to-day; and all that you do to-day on the structure that you are building, will remain as a basis for that which you do to-morrow."

Much of the writer's life has stepped behind her, and now, while it remains "waiting," comes the call from our highly esteemed president of Graceland College, G. N. Briggs, that I "go back to the beginnings."

This, in my opinion, is not among the things possible to be done by mortals. Nearly two centuries before the birth of Cyrus, king of Persia, the Lord through his prophet said of him, "He is my shepherd and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundations shall be laid."

From this we learn that the beginning of many things reach far back into the dim past, and could we have thrown upon the screen to-night the many events in the lives of those who have been permitted to take part in the bringing into existence of this institution of learning, what a wonderful panorama we might have before us. But turning from the impossible, let us glance hastily at that which in a measure, at least, we may grasp.

It has pleased President Briggs in his program to mention my name as "among the first with a vision of the College Hill," and for this reason, and in order to go back as far as is humanly possible to find the cause or causes leading up to this vision, you will need to pardon me for referring to a few incidents in my life which I feel stand connected with it.

It had been my lot when but five years of age to be carried with my family, fleeing from mob violence in the State of Missouri. They left home, lands, and everything in the shape of worldly goods behind them and sought safety in the State of Illinois. This made no lasting impression upon the mind of a child so young, but a few years later, when poverty and distance from the country school kept us many days from attending, then indeed the bitter tears fell, and it required the strong hand of parental authority to prevent the risking of life in the frequent storms sweeping over the bleak prairies of Illinois.

The years passed on and brought with them many changes and some most wonderful opportunities, but as these are now recalled they all seem to be more or less of an educational character, and finally, came opportunity of entering a college at Oxford, Ohio. Here the four years' course of studies was taken and completed in three, and life then seemed very earnest and the future very bright. At that time the many opportunities of obtaining an education which our young people have to-day did not exist. The public school system was then in its infancy, and comparatively few, except those of ample means, enjoyed the privilege of higher education, and the college at Oxford was among the first to offer the same curriculum to girls that other schools were extending only to boys.

The breaking out of our Civil War found me in San Antonio, Texas, and when the entire faculty of the Methodist college of that city hastened to enlist for the war, the president of the board of trustees appealed to me to take charge of the school. This I did most reluctantly, feeling that I was not equal to the task. This was a new experience, but I held on, doing my very best for three years, when longings for kindred and my northern home caused me to give this work into other hands and, just before the closing of the war, I returned to Illinois, going by the way of Mexico, Cuba, and New York. At the end of this journey the great event of my life met me. I heard anew the restored gospel and embraced it; embraced it not as I had done in childhood, but after having searched for and discovered the sure foundation which Christ had laid. With this knowledge came the earnest desire to labor—labor no longer for self, but for others. And the whole experience of life thus far seemed to point to education, and this naturally suggested connection with the labor for the young.

When soon after this I came to Iowa, like Martha of old, I was burdened with many cares; but heavy as they were, they were not heavy enough to crush from my mind and heart the hope of being useful in my day and generation, and while "the vision tarried," we dreamed of it, wrote of it, and even selected the spot where the first building of Graceland was afterwards erected. We have quite recently been reminded with what surprise and utter incredulity as to ever being realized these dreams of a possible future were met by one to whom I then confided them; but to-night they are no longer visions or dreams.

This much I have written in response to President Briggs's invitation, but now let me say for myself that all this amounts to so little in comparison with what he himself and many other faithful ones have done for Graceland, that it really is not worth mentioning.

Especially is this true in regard to the land given. That was in obedience to my firm belief in the law of consecration, for when I offered it to the church for the purpose of erecting thereon a college building, my mind was fully made up that if not accepted by the church for that purpose, that I would divide it in small lots and give to such of the ministry as might wish to build homes thereon. But to-night my soul goes out in thankfulness to my heavenly Father that this was not necessary, for through the acceptance of this small gift by the church and the consecrated labors of her sons and daughters already given and those yet to be given to her, Graceland is to arise and shine—to become a beacon light in the world of education. "Though the vision tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

The Way to Freedom

By J. E. Vanderwood

Freedom is only possible through a knowledge of the Truth: Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come.

During the earthly ministry of Jesus he sought to impress mankind with the most essential features of life. He labored diligently to guide their feet in the way of peace. In fact, he gave his all in order to bring about the means of our salvation. But how fully we mortals have understood his message, his example, his sacrifice, remains yet to be seen. However, I trust we are more nearly getting to the basis of it than heretofore man has done.

Jesus stated very clearly and definitely his ideals and purposes, but man has been rather dull of hearing and slow of perception and we have therefore failed to see the largeness and excellence of his life's work. We ought to give more careful attention to his example and precept than we generally do. I am therefore going to attempt an examination of just one phase of his instruction, to discover if possible how far we have understood the message of that divine man. It is quite evident we have failed to see the excellence of his philosophy, but we ought to be striving daily to reach the celestial goal.

While Jesus was busily engaged in his ministry he encountered two elements in the world—good and evil, or in other words, truth and error. The people among whom he labored were affected by these elements. Some people absolutely refused to hear him and they proudly turned away from his entreaties while others when they saw the fruits of his labor believed on him. Now I wish you to observe carefully that certain ones believed on him when they saw the fruits of his labors, but many of them even failed to see clearly what was involved in the work he was performing among men. I am dwelling on this point that I might be able to cause the reader to get a deeper insight into the real issue as it is evolved. Observe, it was to those who already believed in him that he particularly addressed himself. We read: "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If you continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32. Freedom, then, or lack of it, consisted in knowing or not knowing the truth. Had you ever considered it in just that light? If not, gather yourself together and consider it with me here and now. It is worthy your careful thought.

Observe, please, that those Jews believed on him, but they were not yet made free. In other words they had not reached the state of complete salvation. They had failed to get the necessary understanding of the message of the Master Teacher. I trust now that you will carefully weigh my words, because I know how easy it is for man to get a wrong idea and misunderstand the utterances of others. But these Jews who already believed were addressed by Jesus, and he tells them that if they continue in his word they shall know the truth and the truth shall make them free. If those Jews believed strongly enough they would continue to consider and abide in the word of Jesus and thus by continued obedience to his word their belief would gradually pass over into knowledge and hence insure for them freedom. It is knowing the truth, and then doing what is known to be true that ultimately saves mankind. Schooling alone is not sufficient; one must know the truth for he will never enjoy freedom until he knows and experiences the truth. The truth only can make us free.

But we are here confronted with the great question of Pilate, "What is truth?" We often permit our bark to drift into a dangerous school because we are unable to determine what is truth. If we gave more earnest heed to the word of the Master we would be more nearly in possession of truth. But if we can now discover what is comprehended in the term truth we may be able to more clearly understand the problem before us. What is truth? If we will consult the revelation of God to the church in these last days, we will find a definition of truth; it reads: "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come."—Doctrine and Covenants 90:4. When we have knowledge of things as they are and as they were and as they will be, we will be able to enjoy freedom in the full sense of the term.

Now, let us associate this definition of truth with the previous scripture we have considered and we will have established the following: Jesus was telling those Jews who already believed on him, that if they continued in his word they would have knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they will be. It is therefore of vital importance to us to make ourselves acquainted with the real spirit of the Master's message.

We are inclined, it seems, to pass lightly over that which is of greatest importance. We give but little time to the real problems of life. During the time of his ministry Jesus said: "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Along with this Saint Paul said: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—2 Timothy 2:15. In order to rightly divide the word of truth we must understand the truth, i. e., we must have knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they will be. This is evidently what Christ sought to enjoin upon us when he bade us seek, knock, and ask. For if we continue in the word of the Master we will not only ask, seek, and knock, but we will study to show ourselves approved unto God. It is therefore evident that we must apply ourselves and improve our talents if we will be made free. There is no other process open to us; we must make effort if we would achieve the highest and best.

One who really has knowledge is able to speak with authority, while one who merely believes is in doubt. Jesus spake with authority because he had knowledge, he had experienced the real thing. We can only speak with authority when we know, and to know we must experience. We may gain experience as a result of preparation and study. Listen once more to the voice of inspiration to the church; it says:

"I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the laws of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:21.

This gives us an idea of what is required of us if we continue in the word of the Master and acquire knowledge of things as they are, were, and will be. He who reaches this blissful and enlightened condition will be able to comprehend even God; and it is evident that such a one is free indeed. But he who has no knowledge of things past, present, and future is circumscribed with fetters, he is bound as was Lazarus, hand and foot with graveclothes. When he speaks it is in uncertain tones, for he does not have knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they will be. Ignorance is the fetter that binds the soul of man; while true knowledge is the power that severs that band. In order to become godlike we must gain knowledge.

No wonder the old Hebrew prophet said:

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of the God, I will also forget thy children."—Hosea 4:6.

This was rather a scathing rebuke to old Israel, but it is only emphasizing the central thought of our present theme. If they had acquired knowledge they would have found freedom in Christ, but having rejected knowledge they were in turn rejected of God. Now what does this spell for you and me? Simply this: If I fail to utilize the means within my reach whereby I may acquire knowledge of things past, present, and future, I, too, must be rejected of God and become the slave of error. But if I gain that knowledge I will be able to more nearly approximate the life and character of the Son of God. For only as we approximate the divine knowledge can we enjoy the divine life. God is knowledge personified, and to the degree that I partake of true knowledge to that degree do I partake of the nature and power of God.

When I have come to understand all that is understood by others, yes, and more than they understand, when I have knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they will be, then and not until then can I have confidence, can I have boldness, can I have freedom. I may acquire all that is needful for man if I will continue in the word of Christ, for in order to continue in his word I must grow in wisdom and in love. By continuing in his word I will attain unto freedom, because freedom comes as a result of knowledge acquired and not by some vicarious process. It was said of Jesus that he had no need that man should teach him for he knew all things. He had knowledge of things past, present, and future. He is the Master Teacher and we should be learning of him. He will make us free if we continue in his word, if we will apply ourselves to study and learn until we have grown into his likeness.

It is evident then that the people of God should be the best educated people upon the face of the earth; they should excel in knowledge. The reason for this is obvious, for there is no school on earth that includes in its curriculum what is included in the program of the church as it is outlined by the chief executive. But permit me to say that our study would be incomplete if it were divorced from the spirit of the living God. We should, therefore, heed the further injunction to "seek learning by studying and also by faith."
—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

No one is truly educated who lacks a proper balance of life. If his character is not properly poised he is lacking the essential thing, he has need to continue in the word of the Master until he has gained the knowledge that will set him free. Jesus is the true type and he who most nearly approximates that type is the truly educated man. He it is that will be the benefactor of the race. He will be able to understand the needs of others because he has knowledge of things as they are. The truth will have made him free.

Christ was in perfect tune with the laws of the universe and hence he was always in perfect accord with God. When we get in tune with the Infinite we will be free indeed. And we may be able to get in tune with God only as we abide in his word and thereby acquire knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they will be. When that time is reached we will see as we are seen and know as we are known. But when, oh, when, shall we reach the goal if we do not begin? and having begun let us work earnestly and persistently for the accomplishment of the task. We must continue on in obedience to the Master's word until we have gained the victory and have attained unto freedom.

It is evident, then, that the way to freedom is by the road of knowledge. Or we might properly say by the way of truth; since truth is knowledge of things past, present, and future. This alone can make us free. If we would have life we must know truth. The real query then is, What are we doing to acquire it? I most certainly am not entitled to that for which I have not worked and I can only fully appreciate that for which I have struggled and agonized. I can gain nothing from the most perfect curriculum if I fail to work its problems and to apply its rules. Christ has given us a recipe for freedom and it is up to us to apply it. If it is properly applied we will witness satisfactory results; but if we refuse to apply it, like Israel of old we will be destroyed for lack of knowledge.

The way is before us and we have the right to choose for ourselves. If we will to do so we may triumph, but if we neglect our golden opportunity we will surely have to suffer the consequences. Our limitations are set only by ourselves, and our success must likewise be determined. A poet has expressed it thus:

"There is no noble height thou canst not climb;
All triumph may be thine in Time's futurity,
If, whatsoe'er thy fault, thou dost not faint or halt,
But lean upon the staff of God's security."

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 3—COOPERATION AND COMMON CONSENT

Society a Cooperative Effort

The peculiar characteristic of civilized beings is the capacity for cooperation, i. e., to operate together or jointly for a common object. This capacity increases or improves continually by practice. Through cooperation human needs are supplied and social progress is effected.

In the attempt to satisfy a common hunger, and other needs, too, men are drawn together by a common sympathy and a common cooperation. Economic pressure causes people to organize for mutual protection and welfare. But the history of cooperation is well known. What we are interested in now is the fact that the human race, everywhere and in all ages, in its resort to cooperation, has admitted, tacitly at least, the relation of cooperation to human welfare. It is impossible to conceive of wants being supplied in any other manner. And this is true with regard to all sides of human nature.

Little reflection is required to show that human society is essentially a cooperative effort. This cooperation is effected through a division of labor. To-day one set of laborers takes ore from the mines; one set shapes ore into tools, machines, implements, etc.; another raises grain and live stock; another manufactures clothing; and others build houses, and so on. Each of these groups of workers relieves other groups from the necessity of laboring to produce what it produces. Farmers supply other groups with foodstuffs, while others in turn supply farmers with clothing, implements, etc. Thus men are grouped according to occupations, all groups operating together for mutual benefit. Cooperation has for its object more efficient labor, a lessening of the costs of production, and an increased consumption of a wider variety of goods.

Economic pressure holds men together in the general cooperative effort, in spite of the fact that business has come to be a conflict between producer and consumer. There is no alternative; cooperation is the way of life. Not even the presence of ever-increasing classes whose activities are mainly or purely selfish, and who serve little or no purpose except to exploit and to defeat the purposes of cooperation—not even the presence of these is enough to give rise to even a suggestion to abandon the general cooperative effort. Perfected mutual aid is the ideal, and all peoples more or less blindly struggle towards it. Christian doctrine alone, which treats conduct as a whole, points the way to the realization of this ideal.

Christianity a Life of Mutual Aid

Christianity is a life of perfected mutual aid. Mutual aid is a division of responsibility on terms that relieve each set of workers of the responsibility others assume and agree to carry, and under which terms all the parties to the cooperative efforts are assured participation in the benefits arising from the unified activity on a basis of equality.

The best example of mutual aid is found in the best regulated families. Here, under a division of labor (1) between husband and wife and (2) between parents and children, all the energies of all the members of the group are enlisted in a common cause. Each member performs his specific task, and each thereby relieves the others of these responsibilities. Each produces according to his ability and receives according to his needs and just wants. The character of the specific task performed has nothing to do with the ratio in which distribution is made. The father does not claim a private right of property in a larger share because he is the head of the family, the manager of its affairs. In fact, the net profits are not divided at all, but they are a residue in which all the family have a common interest; it is available for use in promoting the general interests of the whole family, and of each of the members in particular, as circumstances may require. The babe or the ill or injured son or daughter receives no less consideration than those who are in the full manhood of their productive powers. This is Christian good will; and such relations are the necessary outcome of brotherly love. Love craves and seeks the welfare and comfort of the objects of its affection. It is no mere accident that the Christian church is referred to as the "household" of God, the "family" of Christ upon earth.

Of great importance, and bearing directly upon the solidarity of the group, is the fact that the "industrial order" of the family, the relations which bind the members together into a whole, both arise from and issue in a sympathetic like-mindedness. Each member knows something of the manner in which the interests of each and all are promoted by the activities of the others; and this common welfare is the conscious motive of activity; and the working scheme of the family as a whole and of each member in particular is adjusted to this purpose. Such is the Christian brotherhood. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let (1) him that laboreth in the ministry and (2) him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and (3) of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8. "Every man seeking the interests of his neighbor."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4. And "in your temporal affairs ye shall be equal" (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3); i. e., every man shall receive "according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just" (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4), even as of yore when "distribution was made unto every man according to his needs." (Acts 4: 35.)

As an outgrowth of the mutually helpful relations which characterize the Christian brotherhood, there exists what is known as "an organic sympathy," i. e., a general feeling of pain or pleasure when any part of the body is affected either for evil or for good. "And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." (1 Corinthians 12: 25.) Thus Christian love combines or unites the interests and activities of all Christian disciples in a common undertaking, and thereby makes each person's acts a source of benefit or helpfulness to others, and every other person's acts a source of benefit in return; and mutual aid, which is a product of love, itself issues in a still greater brother affection. Such alternate relations of cause and effect are traceable throughout the whole of the general evolutionary processes.

All the needs of all the members of such a group find their supply in the character and diversity of activities by which the group is characterized. Association on such terms is necessary to meet the requirements of man's nature and being. It is the business of Christianity to supply these needs, and its doctrines therefore demand the application of the principle of mutual aid to every phase of social activity as the price of Christian discipleship.

Personal Factors

We have already shown that Christianity of necessity sets forth the rules which should govern men in their associations. Now men are not machines or mere animals to be operated or regulated wholly by some external power; but men are self-acting beings; and the accuracy and effectiveness with which the parts of a social organism work together are determined by the personal qualities and the conscious efforts of each individual man. The fitness of any man to take a part in social life arises from his own personal efforts and discipline. We can't trim a man to a given size and shape, thereby fitting him for a place in social life, as we prepare a stone for a place in a wall; he must get himself into condition by personal discipline and development. Cooperation therefore involves the consideration of the personal qualities essential to continued success.

We have seen that Christian doctrines are rational and therefore orderly. Christianity does not bake the dough before leavening the lump. The statement of principles in Hebrews 6: 1, 2 is not an accident; the arrangement is determined by the nature of the beings with which Christian doctrine deals.

Christianity is fundamentally a question of morals. And the first question of prime importance in fixing the personnel of Christian society is the general moral tendency of the individual. A hunger and thirst for righteousness; a desire for the truth; honesty; trustworthiness; a disposition to serve; the spark of Christian love—that is a matter of prime importance. No amount of understanding or ability has worth from the Christian standpoint unless back of it there lies the motive of a clean heart. But if the motive is pure, understanding and ability may be acquired to good purpose. Notwithstanding any other qualities whatsoever, a person is unfit for Christian fellowship who does not possess this prime requisite: Integrity of heart, Christian repentance.

This means that Christian cooperation demands a high moral tone. And this is more than a mere absence of positive evil intent; it is a fine sense of moral obligation, a power of discrimination that enables and causes one to judge himself in the varying circumstances of human activity plus a fixed conscious purpose to act in right ways.

This quality is infinitely more to be desired than a knowledge of languages, or even a highly developed technique as a surgeon, musician, architect, teacher, or what not. It is this high moral sense that makes one ill at ease while others are burdened; that restrains one from choosing easy tasks and shifting heavy ones to other shoulders; that arouses action to lift the unfortunate or the oppressed to higher planes of living. This is the first essential personal factor in Christian cooperation. This is that of which the world is sorely in need. "Say nothing but repentance to this generation."

The second principle in Christian doctrine is "faith." It corresponds to the second requirement on the part of the individual. In order for cooperation to succeed there must be a common objective; people must see alike. "How can two walk together except they be agreed?" Those who cannot think alike cannot cooperate successfully. Cooperators may differ on minor questions, but on fundamentals they must agree. Men may cooperate in a way from necessity for a time, but if they are not like-minded they will either withdraw when they have opportunity, or they will become more or less inert or retractive, to be carried along by the momentum of social life. In either case, their attitude obstructs the progress or defeats the purpose of cooperative effort.

It follows, then, that if a man disbelieves the Christian idea of life, he is disqualified for Christian fellowship, however sincere he may be. "The elders are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the church of Christ to their understanding [the understanding of the newly baptized] previous to their partaking of the sacrament and being confirmed by the laying on of hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:18. An unassimilated constituency interferes with and may make impossible the realization of an ideal. "Faith," a common objective; like-mindedness: That is the second personal factor in successful cooperation.

The third personal factor is a special aptitude for some particular kind of work. Besides planning work, we must work the plan, and this requires a measure of talent in the individual. There must be men who are qualified for both the general and the specific tasks involved in cooperation. We are taught this lesson by the experiences of everyday life. "It is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:3.

Having a truth-desiring, a truth-apprehending, and a truth-applying constituency, successful cooperation is assured; without this, success is impossible.

Administrative Factors

Society is a more or less automatic machine; nevertheless a directive agency, which is the most prominent of social functions, is necessary to keep society in order. This is as true of the church as of society in general. Individuals control themselves somewhat, but not entirely. The greater the scope of the undertaking and the more complex the social constitution the less capable of self-control is the individual, and the more necessary becomes a directive agency. Even if every man loves his neighbor, still there is a necessity for a central force of control to keep men in order; otherwise when man moves in different directions to satisfy his wants he is constantly coming in conflict with the plans of other men who are likewise engaged. When two men equally intending to do right desire to occupy the same piece of land, e. g., at the same time, there arises a necessity for some authority to decide what would be right in the matter; and in order to preserve peace and promote the efficiency of the unified social effort, that authority must have power to enforce regulations and to overcome conflict.

Common interests imply common rights, not only with respect to opportunities but also with respect to properties; and not only these, but also with respect to rewards, or participation in benefit. It must be obvious that such rights cannot be secured to all equally unless there is some regulating authority having power to regulate the use and distribution of social resources.

Increase of population, immigration, and industrial evolution have given rise to sectional and class interests. One locality is devoted chiefly to mining, another to agriculture, and others to other specific enterprises. While regulation within any given locality or occupation may be effected by agreements between the members in the several localities or trades, there still remains the task of coordinating (of bringing into harmonious and reciprocal relations) the activities in each section or occupation with the activities in all the others. So that some central administrative power becomes necessary to the harmony, peace, and success of social life as a whole.

For those who wish to promote the Christian life, these administrative powers are vested in men who hold office by the voice of the people, who have no immediate or personal business connections or interests, whose decisions are reviewable by courts of the aggrieved's compeers, and who are subject to removal by the action of other superior officers who stand as the representatives of the membership at large in the general administration of its affairs.

"The temporalities of the church were [are] to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head."—Doctrine and Covenants 129:8. "The high council was appointed by revelation for the purpose of settling important difficulties which might arise in the church, which could not be settled by the church, or the bishop's council, to the satisfaction of the parties."—Doctrine and Covenants 99:1. Within the several territorial subdivisions or stakes are high councils having local jurisdiction, and here an aggrieved party may be heard and judged by his compeers, men having like interests, and whose precedents bear directly upon their own interests.

It is the business of the whole body of bishops to effect such administration of the concerns which the people intrust to their care as will accomplish the purposes of Christian cooperation. And, as already indicated, the primary purpose is to make Christian men, not dollars; but wealth-producing activities are adjusted by the bishopric and the members to the central purpose of effecting the highest manhood.

Obviously Christian efforts should be (must be) directed and judged by Christian men; men who are converts to the Christian ideal. The necessity for making the bishops as a body responsible for both local and general administration arises from the fact that cooperation on the part of the whole body of Christian men necessitates a coordination of sectional activities and a unifying of sectional interests. And this must be done by men of integrity and ability.

Economic Benefits

The facts of industrial cooperation and of the benefits accruing immediately to the cooperators are generally known. There are some economic benefits, however, that arise only from Christian cooperation. Such association opens to every man the greatest possible opportunity for the development of his manhood and maintains an environment favorable to this purpose. "That every man may improve upon his talent," to the end that he may be able to render the greater service to the group is peculiarly a Christian motive of cooperation. This doing reacts to the doer's welfare and promotes his happiness. Automatically it solves the problem of unemployment. It promotes a maximum production; it does not limit it by the rule of private profit; but it makes distribution keep pace with production. Instead of closed shops or limited production it keeps the doors of opportunity open as a means of raising the standard of living of all, of promoting enterprises that promote the welfare of the whole. "Inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion, and unto their generations, inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom." "This is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:2, 3. This is the Christian rule. It aims to make men, not dollars. It maintains relations which promote peace, economic peace, and good will, economic good will, among men.

Spiritual Consequences

The procedure we have partly described develops both the technique and the spirit of mutual aid. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Love seeks always to serve. Mutual aid is both grounded in love and issues in love. This principle was brought out in the discussion of the interdependence of functions. Mutual aid makes use of the higher abilities of the working class which at the present time are largely wasted; it uses the head as well as the hand; above all, it enlists the heart. Sympathetic relations between all the different classes of laborers are maintained through mutual aid. This includes the men of business, of work, and of the ministry. Both the employer (or, preferably, the manager) and the workmen identify their interests in the activities of the other; and at the same time the motive of each is to make more effective the labor of the other and to improve their conditions. Naturally they come to love one another with a deeper affection. And inasmuch as each additional enterprise is an increased guarantee of individual as well as of social prosperity, the worker gains self-reliance and a self-respect that is not commonly known. The fear of poverty is dispelled, and minds are freed from the pollution of greed for gain and other unholy feelings arising from economic strife; and the soul is made free for communion with the Spirit of God. These truths are brought out by the negative propositions: "In your temporal things ye shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:3; and "If ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things."—Doctrine and Covenants 77:1. The equivalent affirmative proposition is that a fitness and the privilege to commune with the Spirit of God is conditioned in fulfilling the law that issues in temporal equality.

Unity and Christian Discipleship

"I pray that they may be one, as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee."—John 17:21. "That the members [of the Christian brotherhood] should have the same care one for another."—1 Corinthians 12:25. The unity postulated here comprehends not only quantitative relations, but qualitative relations, too. There is not only "one body," but there is also only "one faith." Variety does not preclude unity, nor unity variety. All the works of nature tell of variety in unity, or, what is the same thing, unity in variety.

A man may be Hamitic or Semitic or what not; but he is fundamentally a man. A given act of service may be rendered by either physical or mental effort, but fundamentally each is like the other. The principles of justice and mercy, notwithstanding their differences, are both held together in one law by certain fundamental agreements. "There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God that worketh all in all." "There are differences of administrations, but the same Lord." (1 Corinthians 12:5.)

Diversity of operations or processes or kinds of labor there will be in Christian cooperation, but—but!! fundamentally every act of Christian service is a factor in the solidification of the group through the consolidation of the activities and interests of all the individual laborers. "Bind yourselves by this covenant." "Ye are to have equal claims upon the properties." "That every man may gain other talents . . . to be cast into the Lord's storehouse to become the common property of the whole church. Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4. So intimate are the relations of Christian cooperation that if

"one member suffer, all the members suffer with it."—1 Corinthians 12:26.

The outstanding characteristic of Christian idealism is expressed in the announcement that "God so loved the world." And while it may take a long time to bring about an economic order in society that has in view the immediate interests of all who devote their energies to the common good, yet the program of the church must lead in the direction of this ideal. Self-interests must be subordinated to and secured by the development of the interests of all; a unity of interests in things affecting the welfare of all in common is a concomitance if not a condition of Christian discipleship so far as the church as a body is concerned. As we have already shown, its life, as a body, depends upon the establishment and maintenance of such relations.

The metal in the crucible is not a machine, it is merely "tending" in that direction; it may not be called a machine until it is differentiated into parts and combined into a whole. We cannot overestimate the importance of the direction in which an individual or a body of men is moving, neither the speed with which progress is being made; but only "he that endureth to the end shall be saved." Interest on the part of God in a man or a body of men is no index to discipleship, it is merely a sign of God's love for his creatures; it is a sign of his desire to "mold" them into parts and to combine them into a whole. The church, i. e., the men who have joined efforts for Christian purposes, as well as the individual, must "make good" with a practical concrete expression of the love which unifies in order to establish its discipleship or standing with God. "Otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

Implications of the Brotherhood of Man

The "fatherhood of God" and the "brotherhood of man" are correlatives—they mutually imply and involve one another. We cannot think of a common fatherhood without thinking of a common brotherhood. But while the term "brotherhood" denotes a common ancestral origin, it also connotes ideas of friendly and mutually helpful relations, fraternal bonds, spiritual or social fellowship or solidarity, and the like.

No fact is more patent than that such a brotherhood does not exist among men generally; taking the race as a whole, and using the term in its connotation, there is no such thing as a brotherhood of man. But there is a brotherhood which embraces all who "have received the spirit of adoption" into the family of Christ (Romans 8:6) and who therefore cry "Abba, Father," i. e., they give their expressions of filial love. These are "led by the Spirit of God" and for this reason "they are the sons of God." (Romans 8:14.) These are all sons of one father, not by the ordinary processes by which physical types are reproduced, but because they have all been begotten "with the word of truth" (James 1:18), they have experienced the Christian baptism, the new birth. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits to his creatures." It is to the implications of "brotherhood" used in this signification that we wish to direct attention.

Now the offspring of any type always inherits the distinctive marks of that type. We have then but to learn the distinctive marks of the spiritual type, God the Father, the original and common source of ideas or examples of life, Jesus who manifested God in the flesh, in order to judge what are the distinctive marks of those who have "received the spirit of adoption." Brotherhood implies these qualities. "My sheep hear my voice and they follow me"; children of God act as he acts to whose ways they have been converted.

We have shown that to live is to give. "God gave." First, having in view the comfort and welfare of his children, he created the earth and all things belonging thereto; then he took the whole product of his creative effort, that which was peculiarly his, and consecrated it without reservation to the good of mankind. And now he turns to his children by adoption and informs them that "If thou lovest me . . . thou wilt . . . consecrate of thy properties" (Doctrine and Covenants 42:8-10) under precisely the same sort of impulse and for similar purposes.

Such is the outstanding characteristic of this spiritual type; and such is the disposition of those who are assimilated to this type.

"That which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man"; man, not some men individually and in disproportionate amounts, but to the brotherhood as a common heritage, "that he might have in abundance." But!! (and here is an unquestionable implication of the "brotherhood" of man), "but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3. (And here let it be remembered that names do not impart qualities.)

Possess: "To have the ownership with the [sole individual] control and enjoyment; to make one's self the owner or master of." Brotherhood, then, implies a unity of interests; the unity of interests that arises from or accompanies a fellow feeling. Not a division of interests, giving rise to claims of prior rights and what not, and issuing in private advantages which in turn issue in selfishness, loss of opportunity, and oppression. For "unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion." (Doctrine and Covenants 59:5.) Extortion: "The subjecting of one to some necessity by another," as the payment of a rent or interest. There are social obligations that attach to the rights of association, which are entirely different matters from private incomes derived from rentals and the like, and which affect the character for good instead of for evil.

Brotherhood, then, implies "unity": Unity of purpose, unity of feeling, and unity of interests. It is brotherhood relations that give rise to the organic sympathy that cause all to suffer when "one member suffers."

It is to be hoped that no one will suppose that common interests in capital goods (not consumption goods) implies the absence of individual rights and liberties, or of governmental regulation securing such rights during the person's lifetime. But this question is left for discussion under the head of "All things common." While the brotherhood of man has other implications, this is enough for our present purpose.

Conditions of Continued Successful Cooperation

A few principles underlie the whole of any science; and in setting forth the facts these come to the front for elucidation or elaboration. So it is in the case of the Christian religion. "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." "If there is any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying." The conditions of successful cooperation are found in the disposition and acts of men who fulfill the law of love. Summed up, they are as follows:

(1) Consciousness of kind. (2) Sympathetic like-mindedness. (3) Personal ability. (4) Natural division of labor. (5) Efficient coordination. (6) Equitable distribution. (7) Adequate guarantees.

Some of these we have already discussed. A few more observations are now in order. Cooperation cannot succeed continuously without social integration; and we cannot have complete integration except where people are sufficiently alike to cause them to imitate one another—first unconsciously, afterward consciously. There must be mutual attraction, not merely mutual toleration. And mutual attraction implies like tastes as well as like needs and purposes. Tastes that are exclusive must give way to tastes that may be common, otherwise a consciousness of unlike-mindedness will arise to disturb the social equilibrium.

The division of labor must be natural. That is, no activities or functions are to be promoted for the mere sake of giving jobs; but each activity must be promoted because of its relationship to the welfare of the whole. There must be no sinecures. Idling is disheartening to those who seek to do good.

Moreover, functions must be promoted in the order demanded by social needs. A farmer makes such improvements as accommodate his stock before he buys touring cars. The clearing and the cultivation of the soil takes precedence over beautifying the lawn. And, further still, the ratio in which labor is distributed must correspond somewhat to the demands in one field as compared to all others. Even in the church, cooperation would fail if the size of the sustaining group did not keep pace with the cultural organs, e. g., there must be a somewhat equitable distribution of the costs of production.

As for distribution, the failure to make it equitable is the immediate cause of nearly all economic strife; and strife does not coincide with cooperation. Contentment, proficiency, and good will are conditioned in part in an equitable distribution; and these are all essential to continued successful cooperation.

Protection against the collapse of the cooperative organization is necessary in order that the growth of an incentive for private gain or advantage may be forestalled. This protection is effected through the terms under which all concerns in which all men have a common interest are intrusted to individual men for management. This will be discussed under "stewardships."

Christianity, which is a life of mutual aid, fixes conditions which insure the presence of all those factors in their proper time and place and amounts.

Common Consent

"And all things shall be done by common consent in the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 25:1. One of the principles of government recognized in modern times is that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. This principle is laid down in the law as a basis for action in all the affairs of church government. The officials^s of the church, from the first to the last, derive office by the voice and vote of the people. And while the membership may not initiate legislation giving rise to constitutional law, which we believe is given by revelation through the head of the church, yet no rule of action may be written into the constitution of the church without the common consent of the members in conference assembled.

All action affecting the rights and interests of the members of the church individually or collectively is based upon common consent, upon the expressed approval of the membership of the church. This is true specifically in matters touching economic concerns and interest. Looking at the question of common consent from another angle, it is not difficult to see why it is a principle of action in the church. Social progress depends upon public opinion. This does not mean that it does not depend upon other things, too. Public opinion is the judgment of a self-conscious community on subjects of common interest. It is conditioned in (1) a comparison of experiences, (2) an understanding of what others think, and (3) in a general criticism of the matters that engage public attention. Out of these grow the public judgment on matters of public concern. Common consent, while it is expressed by a formal vote, is in the last analysis a widespread personal conviction that the things the group undertakes to do are right.

The church as such does not attempt to exercise any control whatsoever over industrial concerns. It merely sets before men ideals which, assimilated, cause them to form voluntary associations for the purpose of fulfilling the law of life, and aids them to realize this purpose. It specifies what is right, and it seeks to influence men to regulate their conduct accordingly. Of course, men bind themselves by their agreements; but the agreements by which Christian cooperation is effected are purely voluntary.

The existence of the church is conditioned in common consent. Men accept the teachings of Christ and covenant to regulate their lives in accordance with his wishes, and the church springs into existence. Just so, the associations for economic purposes arise from such free contracts between men. Thus all things are done by common consent in the church.

"We are workers together with God." This presupposes that we feel and think about things in the same way. And the more deeply conscious men are that others feel and think as they do, the more effectively will they work together.

Economic undertakings enlist the feelings and thought and energies of the whole body of people in everyday affairs. In these affairs we are brought into very close personal relationships, and wants that press heavily are involved; it is therefore increasingly important that economic policies should have the approval of the membership at large. And it is the business of the ministry to keep alive the mental agitation that will secure this consent.

Common consent prevents the rise of aristocracies which dictate policies or control resources. But the enforcement of policies is sometimes foolishly regarded as of greater importance than the conversion of men. When well meaning men are converted to policies, their support is assured; but if they are not converted, a breakdown in social institutions may occur at any time. The moral development of the individual is always sought in all economic developments effected under gospel influences; and morals necessarily involve feeling, thought, and will; and general economic attempts should not precede common consent. This is the law of the church, and to it every man from a sense of self-respect and self-interest subscribes.

Except Ye Are One

Nature is a unity. All forms of matter and of life and all natural changes in these have a necessary place in the great scheme of the universe. He that hath seen these things hath seen God moving in his majesty and power and to the accomplishment of his purposes. All that we know of God tells of oneness. It is no surprise, it is but natural that God should decree that "Except ye are one ye are none of mine."

God is jealous of the unity of those who are called to represent him, because the interests of his children and the reputation of his work are at stake. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Not if you are unable to prove that you have a creed and a morphology the theory of which can be maintained by "it is written," but if your life is the crystallization of the ideal expressed in the words, Love one another.

Love is the test of doctrine. Love seeks others' good. Love brings lives into a working harmony and unifies interests. The value of Christian good will as exemplified in the unity of the Christian brotherhood as a means of redeeming mankind cannot be overestimated. Every soul at bottom seeks to realize a harmony with the universe, to be at peace with God. And "except ye are one" ye cannot stand as the reflection of the divine mind; to be the light of salvation ye must be "one."

The Former and Latter Rains—Part 5

By T. W. Williams

Four hypotheses concerning the climate of Palestine.

Reference has already been made to the argument relative to deforestation and its effect upon rainfall. On this subject I have found no more comprehensive writers than Mr. Andrew J. Herbertson, Ph. D., F. R. S. E., and Mr. Ellwood Huntington. The former approaches the question from a somewhat different angle than the other authors we have quoted. While he does not attempt to prove that the precipitation now is materially less in the rainfall area of Palestine than it was in the time of Jesus, yet he holds to the theory that there have been periods when the rainfall has fluctuated, and also that, in some instances, the desert has encroached, to an extent, on the rain areas. Mr. Huntington covers the question of deforestation and progressive dessication thoroughly. He supplies data and what seems to be irrefutable arguments on this point.

In the discussion of the climate of ancient Palestine, Mr. Herbertson suggests four hypotheses:

- (a) Hypothesis of Uniformity
- (b) Hypothesis of Deforestation
- (c) Hypothesis of Progressive Change
- (d) Hypothesis of Pulsatory Change.

These may be illustrated as follows:

Those who hold to the hypothesis of uniformity insist that there has been practically no change in the climate of Palestine.

The advocates of the second hypothesis maintain that there has been some modification in the climate and rainfall due to deforestation.

The third group affirm a gradual change; that during the last few thousand years the rainfall has slightly diminished and the rain area is somewhat less than formerly. Mr. Herbertson seems to stand alone in his contention for the hypothesis of pulsatory change.

Commenting on the first of the foregoing hypotheses he says:

"The uniformitarian hypothesis is largely held by meteorologists. They know that the current idea that the climate of America or Europe has changed appreciably during the last few score years is without foundation. They see that the meteorological records of the past century presents only the faintest indications of permanent changes in temperature, rainfall, and barometric pressure. Knowing how easy it is to make mistakes in the exposure and reading of instruments, they believe that the few indications of change which appear from the compilation of records are the result of error, as many of them undoubtedly are."—Distribution of Rainfall, p. 254.

Deforestation and Rainfall

Mr. Ellwood Huntington, speaking of the barren condition of Palestine, says:

"This has given rise to two hypotheses, which are now almost abandoned, those of deforestation and of progressive dessication. According to supporters of the first hypothesis, the reckless cutting of forests has not only allowed the rains to denude the mountain sides of soil, but has caused an actual diminution in rainfall. These views once had a popular vogue, but for various reasons, it has now practically ceased to be considered among scientists.

"In the first place, modern measurements of rainfall, before and after the deforestation of large tracts, are contradictory. At best they show only slight differences, too small to have any appreciable effect, and in practically every case so doubtful that they may be all due merely to the accident of an especially dry or rainy period of a few years coming not long before or after the forest was cut; moreover, many of the strongest evidences of dessication are found in places such as southeastern Syria, where there is no reason to think that the country has ever been forested since it was first occupied by civilized man."—Civilization and Climate, p. 226.

Mr. Huntington admits the possibility that Palestine may be one degree warmer now than in Christ's time, and also that it is possible that three or four thousand years ago the rain zone may have extended farther south than at present. Rectus, Kropatkin, and others think that it is probable that three or four thousand years ago the climate of Central Asia was moister than it is to-day, but the evidence of this is so slight that it is little more than conjecture.

Herbertson comments:

"In the days of its greatness Palestine was not a wooded country. Hilderschied and Ankel point out that if the population of the Holy Land was formerly much denser than now, it stands to reason that the opportunity for forests was slight, especially as practically all the people practiced agriculture."—Distribution of Rainfall, p. 267.

Ankel says:

"For the nearly four thousand years of the historic past a diminution in the forests west of Jordan is not proved. On the contrary, one can scarcely climb a mountain peak on which, among the wild bushes, one cannot find traces of old terraces for the location of vineyards and fig gardens or of grain fields; or where there are natural wine presses hewn out of the solid rock, banks of stones built up for threshing floors, primitive cisterns, etc., witnesses of the industry of the former race, which knew how to make even the barren ground fruitful. When these works were carried out it is hard to say, but at all events, it was a time when what one in Syria calls 'forests' were restricted to narrower limits than now."—Ibid., p. 268.

Progressive Change

There is practically no data to corroborate this theory. Palestine is no exception to the general rule. If we go far enough back we will find that in Palestine, as in all parts of the world, there have been modifications of moisture and climate, but in this instance we will have to go farther back than the period covered in the residence of Israel in the promised land.

Doctor Herbertson offers the following on this point:

"Geologists find unquestionable evidence that during the glacial period Palestine enjoyed a climate very different from that of to-day. The geologists are apt to assume that the change from the climatic conditions of the glacial period to those of to-day, has been gradual and that it has lasted well down into historic times."—Ibid., p. 255.

The exact date of this glacial period is not known. It is also called the Pleistocene period. The theory is that, at some time, the climate of middle and northern latitudes was frigid, and ice covered large portions of the earth's surface. No explanation is given as to this unusual cold, but changes in the constitution of the atmosphere seem the most probable.

Among those who believe that there has been more or less modification in the climate of Palestine during the last three or four thousand years are Livingstone, Reclus, Fraas, Hull, Fischer, and others. On the opposite side may be ranged the names of Ankel, Conder, Hilderschied, and Wilson, all of them masters in their line.

In dealing with the sayings of Bible writers who have extolled the climate of Palestine and its wondrous beauty and bounty, it has been affirmed that—

(a) The Bible authors indulged at times in undue hyperbole.

(b) That in ancient days God interrupted the course of nature in favor of his chosen people.

There is a modicum of truth in both positions. One can well understand how a people, who had wandered in the desert for forty years, would grow eloquent when confronted with a country where everything was conducive to agricultural pursuits. The writers of the Bible were not untrue to their Oriental origin. One must travel among these people to sense the racial tendency to elevate things of ordinary occurrence to the superlative degree. These people were idealists. They were imaginative. They were prejudiced in favor of glorious metaphors and pleasing similes, of terrible anathma and unprecedented execrations.

If we accept the Bible evidence we must accord to the idea that God did interpose his power, even with the elements of nature, on behalf of the people when they were faithful. He likewise withheld blessings "of the heavens above and of the earth beneath" when they were rebellious and disobedient. Israel forfeited God's special blessings relating to seedtime and harvest. It does not follow that God so interfered with the processes of nature as to affect the climate of a continent for eighteen hundred years.

Scientific Cause of Rain

In his analysis of the contributing causes for the rainfall in Palestine, Doctor Herbertson has this to say:

"The Mediterranean at this season [January] is within the cyclonic storm region of the Northern Hemisphere, and much of the rain that falls comes with the depressions that pass across. These storms reach the extreme east of the sea. In January there is relatively low pressure over the sea itself compared to that over the south of Europe, where high pressure conditions prevail, especially over the three southern hemispheres. There are great differences of rainfall to be found here. In the east and center of Spain less than 25 mm. (1 inch) fall, whereas the Algerian coasts receive more than 200 mm. (7.8 inches) in January.

"The western coasts here also receive more than the east coasts. The contrast is well seen when we compare these dry regions of eastern Spain with the west of Syria, when 188 mm. (7 inches) are precipitated at Beirut and as many as 160 mm. (6.3 inches) at Jerusalem (during January), the maximum precipitation for these places."—Distribution of Rainfall, p. 249.

Why Rain Falls in Winter

Doctor Herbertson continues:

"The great extent of the land mass of Asia and the high degree to which it becomes heated under the rays of the summer sun cause all the climatic zones to be strongly deflected northward. Palestine lies normally at the southern edge of the zone of prevailing westerly winds, where rain is supplied more or less abundantly by cyclonic storms of large dimensions moving for thousands of miles from west to east.

"During the summer the zone is deflected so far to the north, that its place is taken by the rainless subtropical zone of dry descending air, or by a modified form of tradewind belt, where the winds blow prevailingly from a northeasterly direction. In the case of the zone of descending air there is no rainfall because, as the air comes down, it becomes warmer, and hence relatively drier, so that it absorbs moisture, instead of giving it up.

"In the case of the modified trade winds, air from the east has blown over the dry interior of Asia, and has had no opportunity to collect moisture. That from the north has had scarcely better opportunity than that from the east. And as it is also moving into warmer regions, where its capacity for holding moisture increases, it, of course, gives up no rain. "Thus Palestine has a long dry season from April to October and a rainy season during the other half of the year. Under the influence of the prevailing westerly winds of the winter a large portion of Palestine has quite as much precipitation as most parts of England or of the eastern United States. Unfortunately, most of it comes in the form of rain, and hence runs off faster than if it were snow.

"The long dry season renders irrigation advisable in many places. On the plateau the porous nature of the limestone and the small amount of level land prevent irrigation. Hence, the inhabitants depend now, as always, upon the 'rain from heaven.' The people store it up in cisterns for the use of themselves and their cattle during the long dry summer, and trust the efficacy of prayers to supply a due amount for the crops in the late fall and early spring."—Ibid., p. 258.

Doctor Herbertson, while affirming the hypothesis of pulsatory change, concedes that there has been only slight change during historic times. As to the length of the rainy season, it could not have been much longer during Israelitish occupancy than at present, if we are governed by the statements of Scripture.

"During historic times there has doubtless always been a wet, rainy season in winter, and a long dry season in summer. The most that is assumed is that the rainy season may have been somewhat longer than at present, with a greater number of days upon which snow or rain fell."—Ibid., p. 258.

Deterioration Due to Turkish Rule

Doctor Herbertson attributes the present condition of Palestine to Turkish misgovernment.

"Within historic times the geological structure and topographical form of Palestine cannot have changed appreciably. . . . Some writers hold that two or three thousand years ago the climate of Palestine differed from that of to-day. To this change, primarily, they ascribe the present poverty-stricken condition of the country. Others, with equal positiveness, declare that this is impossible. Nothing, they say, demands such an hypothesis; the decay of Palestine and of the neighboring countries is clearly due to human greed, misgovernment and folly."—Distribution of Rainfall, p. 249.

Hilderschied says:

"We come to the conclusion that the present poor economic condition and sparse population [of Palestine] are not due to an actual change in natural conditions, but that the sad state in which the land is found at present has been brought about chiefly as the result of historic development. Certainly the hope may be cherished that by a fundamental change in the condition occasioned by Turkish barbarism, the present barren and unproductive land may again, in course of time, be brought to a state of culture and prosperity."—Ibid., p. 264.

Table of Rainfall

We append herewith a table of rainfall for each year between 1846 and 1908. It speaks for itself:

Years	Mm.	Inches	Years	Mm.	Inches
1846-7	586	23	1859-60	662	26.
1847-8	506	19.8	1860-1	550	21.5
1848-9	601	23.6	1861-2	616	24.1
1849-50	662	26.	1862-3	581	22.8
1850-1	844	33.	1863-4	517	20.2
1851-2	645	25.3	1864-5	395	15.4
1852-3	437	17.1	1865-6	482	18.9
1853-4	859	33.6	1866-7	679	26.6
1854-5	665	26.	1867-8	738	28.9
1855-6	786	30.8	1868-9	633	24.8
1856-7	975	38.2	1869-70	318	12.4
1857-8	780	30.5	1870-1	487	19.
1858-9	641	25.1	1871-2	469	18.3

Years	Mm.	Inches	Years	Mm.	Inches
1872-3	481	18.8	1891-2	765	30.
1873-4	1003	39.3	1892-3	977	38.2
1874-5	676	26.4	1893-4	745	29.2
1875-6	419	16.4	1894-5	646	25.3
1876-7	348	13.6	1895-6	958	37.5
1877-8	1091	42.8	1896-7	931	36.4
1878-9	409	16.	1897-8	755	29.6
1879-80	599	23.5	1898-9	626	24.5
1880-1	675	26.4	1899-1900	596	23.3
1881-2	635	24.9	1900-1	405	16.
1882-3	678	26.4	1901-2	562	22.
1883-4	812	31.8	1902-3	782	30.6
1884-5	665	26.	1903-4	480	18.8
1885-6	746	29.2	1904-5	801	31.
1886-7	795	31.1	1905-6	1064	41.3
1887-8	519	20.	1906-7	564	22.1
1888-9	905	35.4	1907-8	632	24.7
1889-90	626	24.6	1908-9	611	23.9
1890-1	861	33.3

According to this table the average rainfall for the sixty-two years is 663 mm., or 26 inches. The year 1869-70 registered the lowest rainfall, it being 318 mm., or 12.4 inches. The highest precipitation was in 1877-8, when 1091 mm., or 42.8 inches fell. From this table one can readily see there was no unusual precipitation in 1853.

In the five years between 1846 and 1850 the average annual rainfall was 25 inches. During the five years between 1851 and 1856 the average was 26.5, just one inch and a half over the preceding period. Dividing the sixty-two years into six periods, the period of lowest precipitation was that between 1860 and 1870. The average rainfall in this period was 21.5 inches. The period having the highest average was that between 1890 and 1900, when 30.7 inches fell.

(To be continued.)

Helping Widows

It is necessary that widows be very careful in their investments.

One of the most distressing experiences in life is to be left a widow with a small family of dependent children. When the wage earner is removed the income is usually either greatly reduced or entirely wiped out. When a widow is left without any means of support, ways and means should be devised whereby she can become self-supporting. This makes her feel more independent and reliant. Her children grow up to admire and respect mother for the heroic effort which she has made to support them, and as they grow older they have a desire to lighten her burden, and thus industry, frugality, and thoughtfulness are developed.

The question often arises as to where the responsibility first rests of assisting the widow. This is answered very clearly by Paul in his letter to Timothy (5: 16): "If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed." This seems to be wise and consistent advice. No father or mother, or other near relative, should ask the church to do for one of theirs that which they are themselves able to do.

Many States have provided widows' pensions, which help is available to those who can satisfy the civil authorities that they are entitled to these funds. Some of the Saints seem to feel that it is a disgrace for the church to permit its members to receive help from either the State or county, but it must be remembered that under present conditions the church is limited in its ability to help the needy, just the same as the individuals are. While we desire to do all that we possibly can, yet if we cannot do all that should be done it would be foolish indeed not to accept help from a fund outside of the church to which the church members have contributed for that very purpose. Our members are paying taxes, a portion of which is set aside to aid those in need of aid.

The manner in which we dispense our charities is important. The reaction that takes place in the life of the donee must be considered.

It is the poorest kind of charity to dole out our contributions in weekly or monthly payments. Among social workers it is commonly recognized that the better way is to "help people to help themselves." This makes men and women—the other way often simply supplies a crutch upon which they can lean. Of course, there are times when the crutch is needed, but as soon as possible, in the words of the Master, we should say, Cast away thy crutch, "arise and walk."

We now come to another class of widows who have either been left with an estate or life insurance. Usually they have had so little experience in business that in their anxiety to invest their funds so as to secure big returns, they become the easy victims of promoters and stock jobbers and "sure shot" schemes. Statistics show that seventy-five per cent of the funds paid to widows by insurance companies is dissipated within five years. This is no argument against life insurance, but should be a solemn warning to widows in making investments.

Just this morning a sister came into my office and in talking over her affairs I found that she had invested twelve hundred dollars in the "Punk Oil Company." To-day the market value of that stock is between five and six hundred dollars, and I doubt if she could find a market for it if she desired to do so. This loss might have been avoided if she had advised with us before making this investment.

It is our desire to be helpful to the widows, as well as others in the church, in making wise and prudent investments. Those of limited means should not be attracted by untried or undeveloped companies with hopes of big returns, but be satisfied with a reasonable return on their investment and invest only on high grade securities.

Faternally yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Brethren W. L. Vail and E. A. Kaler have opened an inn at 1038 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri, and will serve meals and furnish lodgings, offering special weekly rates for board and rooms. They will also serve banquets, special dinner parties, wedding suppers, and reservations. Brother Kaler especially is quite well known to the Saints, having served a number of reunions the past season as chef, as chef for the dining hall at the 1920 General Conference, and having written several articles for publication concerning his favorite theme. Independence needs such service and the brethren deserve success.

COLLEGE DAY

October 16

There is an indefinable SOMETHING acquired by many who attend Graceland which enhances all their good qualities and crowds out the undesirable.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Helps for the Student

In the June number of the Woman's Home Companion the "Good Citizenship" Bureau, conducted by Anna Steese Richardson, advertises the following study helps available through that bureau:

1. "Good citizenship made easy." A booklet of practical suggestions. Price ten cents.
2. Good citizenship leaflets, as follows: (a) "How to register," (b) "Primaries and why they are important to you," (c) "How the President is elected," (d) "Nominations," (e) "Lawmaking," (f) "Taxes and where they go." Price four cents each.
3. "American life and politics in fiction." A list of 58 worth-while novels covering various phases and periods.
4. "This government of mine." A list of the 47 best and most entertainingly written books on American history, biography, travel, etc.
5. "Put a two-cent stamp to work." A list of institutions in different States which supply help to all interested in civic betterment.
6. "The Good Citizenship Bureau: What it has done and what it can do for you."
7. "Your community and its government."
8. "Simple facts about local politics."

This textbook on how cities, towns, and counties are governed also contains club programs. Price ten cents. Numbers 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 will be sent on receipt of postage (2 cents for each leaflet).

Address Good Citizenship Bureau, Woman's Home Companion, New York City.

Dress

5. Men Are Responsible

A couple of young men were recently commenting upon the increasing independence of women and the inequality of rights they enjoyed in this country. One remarked that women seemed to think it all right for them to smoke if men did; that women had a right to gamble if men did, etc. And the young men concluded that the women were putting it "up to them" to be leaders, examples, if you like. Why not?

For generations men have said to women, Such and such things are right for us but not for you. To-day women are saying, We can do so and so if you do. If you don't like the way we dress and do, why do you choose our company? Why not go with the girls who dress the way you say we ought?

Are the girls inconsistent? Not one bit, to my notion. As far back as history goes, men have posed as critics of women's clothes and their ways of doing and yet often selected for their company the very ones whom they criticised.

I'll venture the guess that some of my brethren, especially fathers, have applauded most commendably as they read some of the criticisms on dress that have appeared in the department columns of the HERALD. Let me ask you, Did you keep company with conservatively dressed girls when you were young, and have you taught your son so that he is following your admonition? If so, thank you for your approval; if not, I suggest that you commence to work on son's ideas.

There is not the least doubt among observers that a goodly number of girls follow extreme styles because they see that that type of girl is the one whom the boys seek for company. It is only natural that the girls should like to have boys among their friends and chums and for their company.

You may think that boys do not seek the "faddy" girls or notice them much. But go to young people's parties. Who are the wall flowers? Your plain girl. To whom do a good many men give their seat on a street car? The stylishly dressed woman. Whom do many business men choose for stenographers? Dressy girls. Yet the chances are these same men criticize the extreme costumes and styles and object to their own women-folks wearing them. Just be consistent, please.

A group of eastern college students recently decided to boycott girls following the extreme fashions. Why wouldn't it be well for our boys and men to voice their views on absurd and sometimes pernicious fashions and prove their sincerity by "seeing the quiet, plain girl home"? Will you try it?

BERTHA L. MADER.

Entire Physique Suffers From High Heels

People in general have realized that the high heel and the pointed toe of our present day shoe have been the principal causative factors of many painful foot conditions, but they have failed to realize, until recently, that many diseased conditions in other parts of the body are traceable also to this type of shoe.

We are coming more and more to appreciate correct body posture.

There is no one part of our modern scheme of dress that so deranges correct posture as the high heel. Common sense tells us that a normal position cannot be maintained with high heels and that the body immediately falls forward. To overcome this tendency to fall, our body instinctively, without our realizing it, finds it necessary to so align itself that it can keep upright.

In order to recover balance, the curvature of the lower region of the backbone is unduly increased, and the abdomen is thrown forward because of this abnormal curvature; the knees are bent to compensate for the changed relationship of the lower leg bones to those of the foot at the ankle joint.

This newly acquired posture naturally disturbs the normal alignment of many of the infernal organs of the body.

The stomach, liver, kidneys, and intestines, in particular, must now perform their duties while in an unnatural position and relationship to one another.

The corset is laced more tightly to hide or overcome the increased protrusion of the abdomen and also to compensate the ever-increasing weakness in the muscles of the back, whose normal tension and strength have also been disturbed, and this tighter lacing serves further to weaken the muscles of the back by accustoming them to artificial support and keeping them immobilized.

It is pleasing to note that with the advent of the so-called "sports" shoe there is a marked tendency on the part of our women to return to a lower heel, but it must not be forgotten that where there has been a permanent shortening of the heel cord it is almost impossible to wear a lower heel with comfort.

We hear many women say they cannot wear a low-heeled shoe, and the reason is easily found in their years of slavery to the high heel.—New York Mail.

Consolation for the Cookless

Our kitchen is very pleasant. It looks west and north, into an apple orchard and a flower garden. It is far too big for modern ideas of convenience, but just for that reason it is restful. Wide, comforting floor spaces intervene between the various stove-and-sink-and-table centers of activity. They lend a certain element of rhythm and detachment to the preparation of our simple meals. I have always liked the room—everybody likes kitchens—but only since our last Bridget's final departure have I come to realize the fineness of its spiritual atmosphere. Essential domain of vital forces, handmaiden to the great act of creation itself, minister to life and immortality, when looked at aright, a kitchen is seen to be more august than homely, and its serviceable fire becomes an altar flame. I take shame and sorrow to myself for all the long years during which I have handed over to a

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Edited by G. Leonard Harrington, M. D., Church Physician.

Important Meetings

The American Child Hygiene Association will hold its twelfth annual meeting at New Haven, Connecticut, November 2-5, 1921.

Write to 1211 Cathedral Street, Baltimore, Maryland, for a program.

The Health Department has just received a letter from the Bureau of the Public Health Service at Washington, District of Columbia, announcing a series of twenty-four institutes to be held at various population centers throughout the country.

This series of institutes has been planned to take the place of the Public Health Institute which was to have been held in Washington, District of Columbia, next fall, but which has been postponed indefinitely. It is expected that most of the well-known specialists announced for the two weeks' institute in Washington will be on the faculties of two or more of the various local institutes.

Following is a schedule of courses which probably will be adopted, with various alterations, by most of the institutes. No tuition will be charged.

Hot Springs, October.

Jacksonville, November or December.

New Orleans, January 9-14.

Columbia, January 9-14.

Dallas, January 16-21.

Birmingham, January 16-21.

Memphis, January 23-28.

Louisville, January 30-February 4.

Indianapolis, February 13-18.

Pittsburgh, February 20-25.

Lansing, March 6-11.

Chicago, March 13-18.

Minneapolis, March 20-25.

Los Angeles, ?

San Francisco, ?

Portland, Oregon, April 10-15.

Kansas City, Kansas, April 10-15.

Spokane, April 17-22.

Newark, April 17-22.

paid alien the absorbingly interesting mysteries of what seems to me now sometimes almost a religious cult. Bread, the staff of life? Yes, but also the substance of our dreams, the foundation on which we build our philosophies, the means by which we keep ourselves aware of everything that matters. Its preparation is a sacred business.—Atlantic Monthly.

To Clean Gold and Silver Lace

Instead of discarding your gold and silver lace when it becomes tarnished, clean it in this way and it will look like new again. Place the lace on a piece of woolen cloth, free it of all dust with a brush, and then apply some alum which has been burnt, powdered, and sifted through a fine sieve, with a soft brush. This process will remove the tarnish and restore it to its former brightness with very little trouble and expense compared to the price of new lace.

Parents' Problems

How can a busy wife and mother find time to read?

This is indeed a problem! Usually there is a little quiet time in the evening after the children are in bed. If the husband and father enjoys reading, there might be a half hour or an hour of out-loud reading then. Sometimes an hour can be secured in the afternoon—in the hammock or on the couch—with a book. There is only one general rule: Use the minutes, if you cannot find the hours! A poem can be read in ten minutes.

Helena, April 24-29.

Albany, April 24-29.

Denver, May 1-6.

A New England City, May 1-6.

Washington, Late in May.

(The Hot Springs, Arkansas, and Chicago institutes will deal only with problems of venereal disease control.)

Schedule of Courses

Monday

9.00 A. M. Venereal disease.

10.00 A. M., Tuberculosis.

The delinquent.

11.00 A. M., Nutrition in health and disease.

1.30 P. M., Venereal disease.

The general communicable diseases.

2.30 P. M., Industrial hygiene.

Protective social work.

3.30 P. M., Child hygiene.

Sanitary engineering.

Tuesday

9.00 A. M., Venereal disease.

10.00 A. M., Tuberculosis.

The delinquent.

11.00 A. M., Nutrition in health and disease.

1.30 P. M., Venereal disease.

The general communicable diseases.

2.30 P. M., Industrial hygiene.

Protective social work.

3.30 P. M., Child hygiene.

Sanitary engineering.

Wednesday

9.00 A. M., Venereal disease.

10.00 A. M., Tuberculosis.

The delinquent.

11.00 A. M., Nutrition in health and disease.

1.30 P. M., Venereal disease.

The general communicable diseases.

2.30 P. M., Industrial hygiene.

Protective social work.

3.30 P. M., Child hygiene.

Sanitary engineering.

Thursday

9.00 A. M., Venereal disease.

10.00 A. M., The noncommunicable diseases.

Medical social work.

11.00 A. M., Mental hygiene.

1.30 P. M., Venereal disease.

The general communicable diseases.

2.30 P. M., The management of clinics and health centers.

3.30 P. M., Administrative problems.

Child hygiene.

Friday

9.00 A. M., Venereal disease.

10.00 A. M., The noncommunicable diseases.

Medical social work.

11.00 A. M., Mental hygiene.

1.30 P. M., Venereal disease.

The general communicable diseases.

2.30 P. M., The management of clinics and health centers.

3.30 P. M., Administrative problems.

Child hygiene.

Saturday

9.00 A. M., Venereal disease.

10.00 A. M., The noncommunicable diseases.

Medical social work.

11.00 A. M., Mental hygiene.

1.30 P. M., Venereal disease.

The general communicable diseases.

2.30 P. M., The management of clinics and health centers.

3.30 P. M., Administrative problems.

Child hygiene.

The church Health Department recommends that any of our church members who are in the vicinity of these insti-

LETTERS

Lamoni Stake News

Coordination effected still further in local work with excellent outlook.

The officers of the Lamoni Stake have arranged for a special series of meetings at each of the following places in the near future: Davis City, Bloomington, Lone Rock, Lucas, and Pleasanton. Meetings at other places are planned for later dates. This is the beginning of a campaign to build up the work in the territory surrounding the central parts of the stake.

A movement for the coordination of the Sunday school, Religion, and prayer meetings has long been making itself felt in Lamoni. The sentiment of the people is strongly behind the movement. The aim has been to eliminate useless duplication of effort, to concentrate the energies of the officers upon common and vital problems, and to give a new impetus to the church work as a whole. So far, the results from the operation of this movement have been very satisfactory, and promise in the future to yield untold benefit.

Last Sunday (September 25) a meeting of all those concerned in the work with the young people was held, at which several short addresses were delivered by representatives of the various phases of the work. It is being given enthusiastic encouragement at the present time.

Under the new program, A. Max Carmichael has special charge of the educational courses, F. M. McDowell of the recreational activities, and Lonzo Jones and C. E. Wight of the prayer meetings. The spirit and themes of the prayer meetings will be taken over as much as possible into the class work.

The officers feel that the possibilities of this coordination, with the expert direction that it gives, have just been touched. It is providing channels of service into which young workers can pour their energies; it is relieving the leaders of some of the enormous amount of detail work that had been keeping them out of the larger fields of work.

LEONARD J. LEA.

Graceland College Notes

(Special Correspondence)

The remains of Brother Joseph D. Johnson, who died of an acute case of quinsy on Tuesday, September 20, were given burial the Sunday following. He had been in good health until a few days before his death. He had come to Graceland as director of physical training. Surviving him is his wife, who had come to assist him in his work, and two little children. The faculty and students appreciate the keen pain that his loss must mean to these to whom his presence meant so much, and while they feel that neither words nor deeds can alleviate the soreness of the affliction, they extend what comfort they can to Sister Johnson.

The epidemic that recently threatened to interfere with the school work is now held in check and not at all dangerous, according to the doctors and nurses. Those who are still in quarantine are not seriously ill, with the larger part of them, to all external appearances, well.

The total enrollment of the college at the present time is something over 225. The work is proceeding very satisfacstutes attend these meetings. They are for physicians, nurses, social workers of any kind; in fact, anyone interested in social work is very cordially invited to attend. Our Health Department is very anxious that our people take advantage of these meetings. We shall be very glad to have you send us your opinion of the work given, also to have you mention any helps which you received.

torily, and although it is regretted that the recent hard times have kept a number of students away who would otherwise be back, it is felt that the usual Graceland standards of scholarship will be maintained.

Letters From the Society Islands

Three letters from missionaries at work in the south seas, reporting to the appointing quorums their experiences in traveling among the lower islands.

We left Tahiti on June 7 on board the French schooner Pro Patria and reached Kaukura on the morning of the 9th. Brother Merchant and I stopped off there while my wife and Sister Hanson continued their voyage and finally reached the island of Hao after a tiresome voyage of twenty-eight days.

At Kaukura I did various things; I collected considerable tithing, raised sixty tons of copra to make the initial payment on their boat, bought another house on the children's home site, did some work on titles, worked on some long-standing difficulties, held one priesthood meeting and one meeting for the children, preached five sermons and interpreted some for Brother Merchant, fixed a few sewing machines and two Seth Thomas clocks, and had one day out of the two weeks to spear fish, which are so plentiful there.

Then we moved on to Apataki where we have considerable building material collected which I intend to move to Heberona. Finding these things in good condition and the Saints gone to the other end of the island we only stopped over night, leaving the next day for Niau. It took us all day and night to get to Niau. The islands are close, but the sea was very rough for our little boat. We were both very sick and lay on deck without any bed, with the sea splashing over us at regular intervals all night long. On account of the high wind we were obliged to land on the opposite side of the island from the city, and no one knowing we were near we had a pleasant walk around the lagoon of six or eight miles before breakfast, and as we approached the little city the yell went up, "Aue Arabera Ma," and then our troubles were soon forgotten. May the Lord reward them for their many acts of kindness.

Seeing the work there would require considerable time to accomplish, I decided to leave it temporarily and take care of it on our return trip. As the sails and rigging were old and the hull leaking some on the little boat they had prepared for me, I decided it would be wise to return it to Kaukura and seek some other way to get on to the far east. As all the ships that called there were bound for Papeete I decided to take advantage of a free pass back there. I arrived early Sunday morning, July 3, and left early Tuesday morning the 5th, on board Tereora with a promise of reaching Hao in ten days or two weeks. I missed the mail boat there by just one day, it being due the next day after I left, and we met her on the first night out.

Instead of being ten days I was twenty-two days getting through to Hao, having spent one week in a storm, a quite severe southeast gale, but no damage done. Arriving at Hao we found it impossible to get in through the pass on account of the high seas, so after waiting twenty-four hours outside I had them put me ashore over the reef and I walked around the lagoon to the city a distance of about ten miles, wading occasionally in the sea up to my armpits.

I found my wife and Sister Hanson at "beans," so of course they were in good health and the beans made quite a rattling in the vacancy caused by my morning exercise. They were engaged in a good work, my wife teaching them sewing, cooking, and other things, while Sister Hanson was doing a good work in the department of health. She gave some splendid instruction as to the care of the body, and of the children, and health and sanitation, which was kindly received by the natives with the promise that they would try to do all the things they had been taught.

I baptized five at this place (Hao), three boys and two women. One woman was a Catholic. Babylon is falling. I also ordained a deacon and put him to work as my solicitor. The one who had formerly acted in this capacity having been ordained an elder is doing a good work as president of the branch. He is also governor of the island. There not being any school here, we got the governor started to teaching the children at night without any pay. He gathers as many as religious prejudice will permit three nights out of the week to our church, and when we left he was getting along nicely teaching them how to read and write as well as count and figure. The island is stricken with a parasite germ or insect which is destroying the coconut trees and has already diminished greatly the yield of copra which is their only means of livelihood. They have no means of combating it, and it is to be hoped that it will not spread to the other islands.

We could return now to the other islands as Pro Patria is here on her way back to Papeete, but our work is not yet finished here and it may be a long time before we can call here again, so we desire to leave nothing unfinished that is possible for us to do. Church funds are quite promising at this place.

As we have had no mail for nearly three months we know nothing of what is going on in the outside world, so all we can write about is what is going on upon this little chain of coral strand, but I presume that is what you desire to know about. We expect the ship of the American Oil Company about the middle of September. If we return on her we will have no fare to pay, as they have volunteered to carry us free of charge.

With kind regards to the Saints in Zion and all the world,

Yours sincerely,

ALBERT V. KARLSTROM.

ISLE OF AMANU, TUAMOTUAN ARCHIPELAGO, August 13.

I had already written a letter to you in May, while I was in Amanu, but there was no opportunity to send it until I arrived home, and so I trust you will pardon this somewhat belated report. The last letter to you was written from Manihi, February 1, and posted from Tahiti about April 6.

On April 21 I left for the upper islands, making a trip of twenty-eight days, taking in seventeen islands, finally reaching Amanu, the farthest point from Tahiti where we have any Saints. I preached wherever possible, and baptized five people on the trip to Amanu, and one while I was there. My native helper baptized five.

After an eventful and, I believe, profitable trip, I returned home August 28, and was gratified to find that all was well. I can assure you, brethren, that this last piece of missionary work has been replete with evidences of the Lord's watch-care.

While in Amanu I took the opportunity to visit the grave of Elder Charles Lake, which lies about twenty miles from the city. It lies underneath the swaying coconut trees, far removed from "the madding crowd," a silent monument to a life of devoted service. I thought of the words: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

On my return trip to Tahiti, I called at Niau where Brother Merchant was doing a splendid work. For three or four weeks we worked together, specializing on services for the young people, similar to those held in America. I will try to write up the series for the Autumn Leaves.

I am glad I have had this year of opportunity to do good among these natives of the south seas. It has been a year of experience which must have had a great molding influence upon my life. Mistakes have been made, hasty judgments have been formed, but the encouragements have well balanced the pessimistic experiences.

I expect to be in Papeete for some time, and will try to keep up with my correspondence.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANK B. ALMOND.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, Box 35.

My wife and I have just returned yesterday from a missionary trip of five months, less about six days. I am dizzy yet from the ocean trip, so please excuse me if some of the sentences are turned about.

I had the privilege of baptizing sixteen persons, five of whom are really the converts of Elder Paia. He and others insisted on my doing the baptizing. I cannot speak too highly of the missionary work of Brother Paia. The attention given him in America is being amply repaid here in results. His wife, too, is an asset of no small importance to the work.

I have been putting considerable time on the Religio work. We introduced the social and recreational side and believe with good results.

In Rairoa we found the saints very discouraged. We taught them the notes and the theory of the organ. They have part of the funds collected for an organ. They also decided to buy a football. None were baptized there, but I believe that the work was opened up so that they will respond well when visited again. We left a school running there.

In Tikehau, where we labored about three months, I baptized ten, while four others were also baptized recently. I was informed yesterday that seven couples have taken steps to complete their marriages, and that means fourteen more baptisms. They have requested me to return and baptize them, although I suggested to them that the local priesthood do that as soon as the marriages were finished. We had two booming services going at the same time in Tikehau, one in the church for the members, and one in the "Fare haa putuputuraa" (assembly hall) beside the church. The outsiders had a fine prayer meeting the last Sunday we were there. They sang, prayed, and spoke of their desire to enter the church, etc. As to a school, Tikehau went one better than Rairoa. Brother Arai, an ex-school-teacher, is teaching the children in the church three days a week, all the regular academic subjects of the public school. He teaches half time in Tahitian and half time in French. Elder Hiti in Tikehau is teaching four days a week with a review Thursday evening, before the parents, at the beginning of the Religio session. He teaches practically altogether in French, and it is remarkable how fast the children learn. In some of the "pupus" the desire for learning is so great that they even put on the Greek alphabet and explained the Bible terms referring to the first and last letters. We found a big French dictionary which proved to be a regular gold mine of information for them. These people are hungering for knowledge and instruction. They learn as quickly as any other race.

Brother Paia, has been working in Maketea. When he came there a few weeks ago there were no meetings in the church at all. To the first service four came out, later five. When we arrived about thirty were attending his services and he was preparing some for baptism. I felt guilty baptizing the ones he had worked with there. Brother Paia is certainly a hustler. The people in Rairoa desire him to come there to help settle some land and other troubles that no foreign missionary can do as well.

Brother Merchant came to Maketea and he consented to organize and put on a special drive for Sunday. This was a grand success. The church was filled to capacity all day. Brother Paia preached a sermon in the morning on the principles of the gospel, and it reached the hearts of the people. Brother Merchant furnished the appeal at ten o'clock. Then I was asked to baptize six in all, men and boys. In the afternoon, at the beginning of the Lord's supper, there were the confirmations, and an ordination to the office of priest. This ordination had been ordered some time before. At night the Religio. A dear old couple came with us from Tikehau to help us in Maketea. They were specialists in dealing with the nonmembers. Brother Teopa has a class of men who are not members; Vahine, his wife, has the class of women who are not members. There were about seventeen in these two classes the first session of our newly organized Religio. I really believe that we have the pick of the islands as officers and teachers for the Religio, and if it does not thrive there seems to be no hope for a Religio here. The young man who was ordained is also teaching the children music and academic subjects. His wife is teaching the women the theory of the organ. They have started a fund for an organ.

God has been with us and protected us. We have even come in rather close contact with leprosy. God has blessed some of our administrations with almost instant relief.

We expect to be in Papeete long enough to prepare food to take with us as relishes on our next trip. We also wish to write the Religio Quarterly and strengthen our bodies.

Sincerely yours,
PAPEETE, TAHITI, Box 80. F. V. ELLIOTT.

The Situation in Utah

Thirty-three baptized in Ogden. New note in sermons of Utah leaders.

In looking back over a period of a few months we can see advancement has been made in this field. During the past year there has been a goodly number baptized, several of whom were members of the Utah church. Our reports show more than one hundred have come into the church during a period of a little more than one year. In the face of stubborn resistance we are gradually getting our work before the people. This mission is not without its discouraging features, but the brethren who are laboring in this field have made a splendid effort to advance the cause, and we feel they are entitled to commendation for the earnest efforts they have put forth in the promulgation of the gospel.

At the present time our force is small for the reason some have been transferred to other fields, some entered other occupations, while others are still busy in the Master's cause. In Ogden Brother Fulk has succeeded in arousing an interest which resulted in thirty-three being baptized, and several others are very much interested. Others of the brethren also assisted. Among those who were able to render assistance were Brethren Davey and Davis. We expect to see many more gathered into the church in this place.

At Daniels, Idaho, we have also baptized a number. Several of the brethren have also labored at this point and the outlook is splendid. Brother Fulk began his work there more than a year ago and at different times has troubled the water. Several will come into the church in the near future. At the present writing Brethren Fulk and Davey are looking after the interests of the work in that locality.

In Idaho Brethren Bootman and Chambers have labored to keep the camp fires blazing, and as a result of their efforts several have united with the church. At the present time Brother Chambers has been released from missionary to local so that he could act in the position of district president. The removal of Doctor Joseph Benson from the district made the change necessary.

We have several members of the church scattered over the Eastern part of Oregon. Brother Bootman has labored extensively among them and several have united with the church in that part of the field. We are greatly in need of additional help by the appointment of more missionaries, but we are trying to do the best we can with the few we have.

Recently there has come to our attention some sermons that have been preached by leading men of the Utah church, which modifies to a very large extent some of the positions taken many years ago by Brigham Young and others of his associates. Brigham H. Roberts in a sermon delivered in reply to a statement sent out by some of the churches here in this city as to why they could not associate themselves with the dominant church, stated that the church was not responsible for the utterances of Brigham Young and was responsible only for the doctrine of the church as taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price. In doing this he repudiated the doctrine of Adam being our god and claimed the church could not be held responsible for the individual teaching of any person which did not have the indorsement of the church in General Conference capacity. His sermon in many respects was a repudiation of many of the erroneous doctrines as taught by the church here in Utah. Whether or not the church will be ready to stand by what Mr. Roberts says in regard to the above remains to be seen, but we truly hope that he is representing the majority of the membership of that organization.

The Reorganized Church has for many years contended that the Utah church has departed so far from the paths of virtue that they were not worthy to occupy in the land of Zion, and because of their polluting the land appointed of God for the gathering of his Saints, were driven out and would not be permitted to return until they had repented of their evils. In the very recent past Apostle Joseph F. Smith, in a sermon preached in Ogden, admitted they had need to repent before they were in condition to reside in Zion, and warned his people to put from them many of the things they were doing. The Utah church has lost its ideals concerning Zion and its establishment, but we hope the day is not far distant when many will awaken and prepare themselves for occupancy in Zion as the prophecies indicate.

In Salt Lake City the work has been moving along very nicely under the direction of Brother M. A. Etzenhouser. During the two years he has been pastor of that branch he has endeared himself to the membership over which he presided. In this work he has been ably assisted by his companion, Sister Etzenhouser, who is loved by all in the branch. Brother Etzenhouser has been transferred to other fields, and in his stead the joint council has sent us Brother Virgil Etzenhouser and wife who we feel sure will take up the work where the former occupants laid it down and carry it on in a successful manner.

In Provo Elder S. S. Holm has labored faithfully to care for those under his charge. During the summer he has labored under some impediments, but his kindly way has made him many friends to the cause, and we expect to see the work succeed under his leadership.

In Idaho we have some very promising material in the priesthood of the district who are carrying on their work in a manner that means success. The calls for preaching come from many parts of the district, and the honest in heart are being gathered out. It would be impossible to mention all those who are deserving of commendation in that district, so we shall not attempt to do so. Suffice to say the work is not suffering under the care given it by nearly all those who are identified with the church.

Praying for the onward spread of the gospel,
I am, sincerely in bonds,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Eastern and Central Oklahoma Reunion

In which the Indians took an interested part.

Being fortunate in having the opportunity of attending the joint reunion of Eastern and Central Oklahoma held at Ripley, I will give you an account of the same.

We were camped on the high north bank of the Cimarron, and what a beautiful view of the river and surrounding country, with the little village of Ripley nestling in the foreground! The fine shade trees added to our comfort, while the great number of cedars made our abode a place of beauty. We were also blessed with fine weather during our ten days' stay.

Our camping ground was on the land owned by Brother T. N. Berry, and to him we give much credit for our conveniences. Our dining hall was overseen by Brother R. E. Miller, of Oklahoma City; and Sister Dean, also of Oklahoma City, had charge of the cooking, which was excellent.

We were called together at 6.45 for morning prayer, and at 8 o'clock Brother Case took the boys and girls for a ramble in the woods and for young people's prayer meeting under God's great canopy, at which place the Spirit was manifested many times.

At nine o'clock the adults were called together under the big brush arbor for prayer meetings, which were of a highly spiritual order. Then came a good sermon at eleven o'clock by some one of our brethren, such as Hubert Case, Earl D. Bailey, R. E. Miller, Joseph G. Smith, W. E. Shakespeare,

S. W. Simmons, J. Arthur Davis, and others. We had preaching also at 3 p. m. and at night.

We had the pleasure of having with us Patriarch F. A. Smith, by whom a number of blessings were given. He also delivered to us some fine sermons.

Thursday was "Indian Day," and the morning prayer service was in charge of Brother Reuben Taylor (a Cheyenne), assisted by Brethren Jack Koshiway and Charlie Moore (Otoes). I do not believe there was ever a more humble, spiritual prayer offered than was uttered by Brother Koshiway, and everyone present felt the presence of the Holy Spirit. Jack and Charlie preached in the afternoon to a good congregation. There were several families of Indians camped on the ground, including Brother and Sister Jeans.

Sister Ed Dillon, district organizer for the Women's Department of Central Oklahoma District, had charge of the women's meetings. She also had her Oriole Girls there from Oklahoma City.

During the reunion there were eleven led into the waters of baptism (one being an Indian), six children blessed, and one brother (W. A. Slover) ordained an elder.

The last Sunday was sacrament day and was marked by a large crowd all day, there being a number of nonmembers present from different places. After the meetings we departed for our homes, feeling greatly blessed and built up spiritually as well as physically after enjoying the pleasant weather and outdoor life.

Your sister in Christ,
YALE, OKLAHOMA. ELIZABETH SLOVER.

At Work in Pennsylvania

We have a another new opening at Doylestown, county seat of Bucks County. Our location here is fine, being in front of a large hotel. The proprietor gave us the use of his long summer porch, so some of our hearers who wished could sit down. Sometimes as we drove up we would see his car being removed at once to give us the best location for our meeting. Our singing and speaking is of course mostly from our car.

We have held about a week's meetings here with very good attendance and interest. This is about eight miles from Deer Park, where we still make our headquarters. Some nights we have two or three talks or sermons with singing between times, questions answered, tracts given to those who ask for them, benediction given, and still some seem loath to leave.

Saturday, Bishop Zimmermann drove down to the park to see us, and a part of his message was, "We have no preacher at Philadelphia for to-morrow. Can't you folk come up for the day?" Brother Chase spoke for us. Of course we all accepted. So few coming on the grounds here this late in the season, we have closed our Sunday services at the Auditorium for the summer.

Sunday morning found us, A. M., our three young men helpers (Hartley, Cummings, and Campbell), and myself, speeding our way for Philadelphia. We soon covered the distance of thirty-six miles, good roads, and arrived in good time for 9.30 Sunday school. Such a nice lot of young people! We cannot express all that day meant to us, the association of so many Saints after our many weeks' experience among people of the world. To look into the smiling faces and feel the hearty handclasp was surely an inspiration for the days to come. Those who know our bishop can imagine how royally he entertained us at his beautiful home.

Philadelphia has one of the best and largest parks in the world; contains thirty-four hundred acres. The drive he gave us through part of this made us realize what a great benefit all this is to the people of a large city.

Of the four young men who have been of great help in our work this summer, one, Brother Tom Carr, has gone to Graceland and will be numbered with the religious education class. One remained in the city, having again been called to his position in the steel works there. We still have Brother Bob Campbell, one of our good singers, and Brother Will Hartley, who is doing excellent work in the street preaching as well as singing.

We will probably close our efforts in the street here after another week, as it is getting quite cool. We go from here to Pocomoke City, Maryland, where we hope to have quite a number of weeks' tent meetings, as the climate is much warmer there and they have been counting on these meetings for some time past. The urgent call for more missionaries is realized in this district as in all others. So many men could be used to continue the work in all these places, but we hope now that we have people interested there may be a chance to do further work through the winter months in halls, schoolhouses, or homes. Yours in the faith,

 NEW HOPE, PENNSYLVANIA. MRS. A. M. CHASE.

A Good Resolution

The financial depression is having a very marked effect upon the receipts of tithes and offerings. It is my goal that the district show no decrease in receipts for the year, but it is going to take strenuous work to attain it. Inventories filed one year ago as compared with those filed by same persons now show as high as forty per cent decrease in net worth this year.
 FRANK G. HEDRICK.
 ATCHISON, KANSAS.

Appreciates His Training

Young missionary believes he should now utilize his experience without reservation.

It has been some time since I have written to you individually, but I feel that I am now in a position where I most need your advice and help. Perhaps you may have wondered why I never write, but I wish to assure you that it is not because of any ill feeling on my part at all. It has been mainly because I have not been intimately associated directly with you.

I wish to express briefly my appreciation of what the church has done for me. I was permitted to attend Graceland for two years, which privilege I esteem as one of the most valuable in my life. First I went as a member of the religious education class, and after that, as a college student. I hold that the good I received while there is far beyond my power to repay. The reason I write now is that I wish to explain the course I decided to take last spring.

If I understand correctly I had the chance to attend college again this fall. This I refused to do, not that I do not love Graceland and her work, but because I felt that it was time for me to get into the harness and to develop along missionary experience lines along with the others.

My experience at Graceland caused me to love the church and its work more than I could have otherwise. I gained a newer, a broader, and a grander outlook on the work of Zion. My ideas of consecration and devotion to the teachings of the church were made deeper and more lasting. For this reason I have determined to labor in the missionary work without reservation. I have enjoyed the work this summer and I hope to continue faithful to my duty until I am done.

Ever praying for the onward progress of the work, I am
 Your brother in Christ, E. YEWELL HUNKER.

SHILLINGTON, ONTARIO, September 12, 1921.

Editors Herald: I desire to write to your pages by way of testimony, and to say that from August 19 to September 2 we enjoyed the presence of our missionary, A. C. Martin, who has been laboring around New Liskeard, Ontario.

Meetings were held by Elder Martin in the schoolhouse, one half mile from Shillington, Ontario. Elder Martin presented the gospel in an intelligent, fearless manner, the Spirit being present. As this was a new opening, the gospel not being presented here before, no members were added, but the seed has been sown.

The evening before leaving we had prayer meeting at our home here, just ourselves with my father and Elder Martin. He administered the sacrament to us. God blessed us with his Holy Spirit. Just before the close of the meeting I was administered to by Elder Martin for my lungs that I might be healed, having been troubled with them from young womanhood. I wish to say that I have received a blessing from God through administration. I feel stronger in every way and am doing my work with ease.

Words of comfort were spoken to me in this administration, telling me I had wished for administration before and God had sent his angels to my aid. This was promised me in my patriarchal blessing, and though I often feel his angels are near us when we know it not, yet I do know that twice since obeying the gospel, God's angels have come to me. Once they administered to me in a dream and another time spoke comforting words; also his Spirit has been mine to enjoy from time to time.

I have felt to write this by way of testimony as in prayer meeting. I cannot seem to tell as I would like of God's goodness to me. I hope God's choicest blessing will rest upon those of the priesthood, that he has called with his holy calling to preach the restored gospel in these latter days.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
 MRS. CLAYTON RUMBLE.

COLLEGE DAY

October 16

It is not required that one be educated to be religiously inclined, but those who are both educated and converted have the greatest ability for service to others.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:		The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 5, by T. W. Williams - - - - -	950
Graceland's Place in the Program of the Church -	937	Helping Widows, by Benjamin R. McGuire - - - - -	952
College Day - - - - -	940	WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT - - - - -
Political Ideals - - - - -	940	Bertha L. Mader.	953
Church News - - - - -	940	HEALTH DEPARTMENT - - - - -
Church Schools - - - - -	940	LETTERS - - - - -
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:		Leonard J. Lea—Albert V. Karlstrom—Frank B. Almond—F. V. Elliott—L. G. Holloway—Elizabeth Slover—Mrs. A. M. Chase—Frank G. Hedrick—E. Yewell Hunker—Mrs. Clayton Rumble.	954
What of To-day? by Ralph W. Farrell - - - - -	941	MISCELLANEOUS - - - - -
Educational Dreams Realized, by Marietta Walker - - - - -	942	960
The Way to Freedom, by J. E. Vanderwood - - - - -	943
THE FORUM:
Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work.—Part 3, by J. A. Koehler - - - - -	945

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Utah, at Salt Lake City, Utah, October 22, 23. Notice was given at the last conference of several proposed amendments to the district by-laws, so we urge all who possibly can do so to be present. M. A. Etzenhouser, president.

Northern Wisconsin, at Chetek, October 21 to 23. E. J. Lenox, president, Black River Falls, Wisconsin.

Convention Notices

Gallands Grove, at Deloit, commencing Thursday evening, October 6, and continuing through Friday, October 7. A very instructive program has been prepared. Alta Mae Schafer, secretary, Denison, Iowa.

Minnesota Saints

Anyone residing in the Minnesota District, but holding membership elsewhere, is requested to send name and address to E. H. Bennett, district secretary, 409 Logan Avenue North, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Secretary Wanted

A person with some experience and initiative is wanted to take full charge of the office work of the general superintendent of the Sunday school department, located at Lamoni, Iowa. Full time is required and satisfactory salary, hours, and working conditions offered, with work that is educational in its nature. Make application to A. Max Carmichael, superintendent, Lamoni, Iowa, giving personal data, experience, its length and nature, and references to people who would know of your work.

To Graphic Arts Bureau Members and Those Interested in Amateur Photography

The annual print competition of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain (of which the Graphic Arts Bureau is a member) takes place on March 1, 1922, being held in London, England. The exhibition will continue for one month, during which time prints entered in competition by the various society members will be shown to the public and the judges chosen to make a decision as to the best submissions.

The Graphic Arts Bureau desires to enter the competition with the limit of prints allowed us and to get an early start in order to have the prints there in time for the opening of the exhibition. Undoubtedly all of the members and others interested in amateur photography have during the last season made negatives from which clear-cut prints on appropriate subjects may be selected and entered in this exhibition. We think, therefore, that our work should be presented where opportunity offers, hoping the results will prove an encouragement to those of the church and its friends interested in this science.

We are assured of entering the competition, for we already have some entrants, but we want all who may wish to do so to have the opportunity.

Write the Graphic Arts Bureau, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, for any information desired.

Sanitarium Needs

Two kitchen refrigerators (top openings preferred).
Two dozen rocking chairs.
Two dozen straight chairs.
Two large 12 by 13 hall rugs.
Two davenports for halls.
White paint and enamel.
Varnish.
Sugar dishes.
Drinking glasses.
Saucers.
Salt and pepper shakers.
Small cream pitchers.
Soup bowls 3 inches deep, 4 inches in diameter.
Square trays 15 by 19.
Oval trays.
Salad dishes 4½ by 5.

Seven inch dining plates.
Six inch dining plates.
Knives and forks (prefer silver).
Teaspoons and tablespoons (prefer silver).
Sauce dishes.
Oval dishes 7½ inches long for soup.
Tea cups

In our nursery we need baby gowns of outing flannel, bands, squares, and old cloths to be used for rags.

In bedding we need: Pillow slips, size 20 by 32 inches finished; and bedspreads. We also need dresser scarfs, size 18 by 40 inches; tray cloths 11 by 14 inches; stand covers 24 by 24 inches; prefer these articles made of Indian Head muslin.

Blankets: Four dozen medium weight, for Nurses' Home. 30 good, part-wool blankets.

Bedspreads: 4 dozen.

Two bolts heavy outing.

Two bolts material for white curtains (Nurses' Home).
One bolt of 8-4 bleached sheeting.

One dozen double-breasted baby shirts with only a small amount of wool in them.

Two-Day Meetings

Northern Michigan, at Onaway, October 15 and 16. Visiting Saints bring baskets of good things to eat as there will be no charge for meals. We expect several of our musicians to be at this meeting with their musical instruments and we will take steps towards the organization of a district orchestra. Let all come who can. Arthur E. Starks, president, Boyne City, Michigan.

Church Dedication

Michigan Saints are invited to attend the dedication of the Loomis church, October 16. Mathew Umphrey, president.

Conference Minutes

WEST VIRGINIA.—At Parkersburg, September 9, in charge of G. T. Griffiths; in connection with the presidency. On the afternoon of the 9th Sunday school convention held, with Assistant Superintendent Thomas Newton in charge. At this session some very important business was transacted, the result being a bright look ahead for the future of the Sunday school in West Virginia. The following new district officers were elected: Superintendent Harry B. Smith, 1421 Twenty-second Street, Parkersburg; assistant superintendent, Ottis O. Forester, 414 South Chestnut Street, Clarksburg; secretary-treasurer, Mabelle Smith, 1421 Twenty-second Street, Parkersburg. After the business session was held, the rest of the afternoon was taken in round table and institute work. In the evening a program comprised of recitations, dialogues, and singing was rendered by the young people of the several Sunday schools represented. Conference business session, Saturday morning and afternoon. The same presidency reelected, district secretary-treasurer retained. Jesse Shinn, of Clarksburg, was recommended as chorister of the district. Sunday morning was occupied with priesthood meeting at 8; Sunday school at 10; and preaching by John Martin, of Kirtland, Ohio, at 11. At 2.30 social-sacramental services were held. Field workers present were Apostle Griffiths, Missionary John Martin, Seventy, James McConaughy, and Elder Thomas Newton. Adjourned to meet with Harrisville Branch the last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday in August, 1922. Ottis O. Forester, Clerk.

NORTH DAKOTA.—At Denbigh July 9 1921. M. A. McConley and Thomas Leitch chosen to preside. Nearly all holding the priesthood reported. Statistical reports from Minot, Dunn Center, and Milroy. Thomas Leitch chosen president for ensuing year; Warren McElwain and Michael Rasmussen consensors; J. W. Darling, secretary-treasurer Bertha Graham, member library Board; Warren McElwain, choirleader. It was decided to hold a reunion at Fargo, June 23 to July 2, 1922, the Fargo branch president, district president, and district supervisor to constitute the reunion committee. The winter conference to be with Minot Branch, December 31, 1921, and January 1, 1922. J. W. Darling, secretary, Thorne, North Dakota.

Our Departed Ones

COY.—Robert Coy was born January 6, 1834, in England. Died in Plain City, Utah, September 24. Came to this country in 1870 and united with the church in 1878. Ordained teacher in 1882 and ever lived a faithful Saint. Leaves his wife and seven children; two children have preceded him in death. Funeral in the meeting house of the Utah church in Plain City, in charge of A. W. Bogue; speakers were L. G. Holloway and Bishop May, the latter being a cousin of the deceased. Burial in city cemetery.

GREGORY.—James W. Gregory was born at Martinsburg, West Virginia, April 22, 1850. Died August 30, at Miles City, Montana. Baptized August 6, 1905. His aged wife, Mary, is left to mourn. He was strong in the faith of the restored gospel and received of the promise to the faithful that they shall not taste of the pangs of death, being taken while at his evening meal.

WRIGHT.—Anna E. Wright was born November 4, 1844, and died September 27, at Nevada, Missouri. She was a member of the Christian Church, but had a very kindly feeling for the Saints and made them and the ministry welcome at her home. She was administered to the day before she died. She leaves six children, several of whom are members of the church. Services at her home by Edward Rannie.

THE INTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, the ciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth shall make you free."

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
ORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

Entered as second-class weekly at Independence age 1

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, OCTOBER 11, 1921

NUMBER 41

Post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of poston 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

EDITO

The Wisdom of the Ages

As the wisdom of a majority of a group is more likely to be right than that of an individual, so the wisdom of the best minds of all ages is greater than that of a present majority.

In a recent book, A Man for the Ages, by Irving Bacheller, a new review is given of the life of Abraham Lincoln, which is based upon notes written about that time and other historical sources to which Mr. Bacheller had access.

He ascribes to Abraham Lincoln the following statements as advice to a young man about to study the law:

"I've got a good first lesson for you. I found a letter which Rufus Choate had written to Judge Davis. In it he says that we rightly have great respect for the decisions of the majority, but that the law is something vastly greater and more sacred than the verdict of any majority. 'It is a thing,' he says, 'which has stood the test of long experience—a body of digested rules and processes bequeathed to us by all ages of the past. The inspired wisdom of the primeval East, the robust genius of Athens and Rome, the keener modern sense of righteousness are in it. Its law comes down to us one mighty and continuous stream of wisdom and experience, accumulated, ancestral, widening and deepening and washing itself clearer as it runs on, the agent of civilization, the builder of a thousand cities. To have lived through ages of unceasing trial with the passions, interests, and affairs of men; to have lived through the drums and trappings of conquest, through revolution and reform and all the changing cycles of opinion; to have attended the progress of the race and gathered unto itself the approbation of civilized humanity is to have proved that it carries in it some spark of immortal life.' . . . It suggests to me that the voice of the people in any one generation may or may not be inspired, but that the voice of the best men of all ages, expressing their sense of justice and of right in the law, is and must be the voice of God. The spirit and body of its decrees are as indestructible as the throne of Heaven. You can overthrow them, but until their power is reestablished, as surely it will be, you will live in savagery."

"You do not deny the right of revolution?"

"No, but I can see no excuse for it in America. It has remained for us to add to the body of the law the idea that men are created free and equal. The lack of that saving principle in the codes of the world has been the great cause of injustice and oppression. The voice of revolution here would be like that of Iago in the play and worse. It would be like the unscrupulous lawyer, anxious for a fee, who says to a client, living happily with his wife: 'I know she is handsome and virtuous and intelligent and loving, but she has her faults. There are lovelier women. I could easily get a divorce for you.' We would quickly throw such a man out of the door. A man's country is like his wife. If she is virtuous and well-disposed, he should permit no meddling, odious persons to come between them. Least of all should he look for perfection in her, knowing that it is not to be found in this world of ours."

We are told in the Book of Mormon that it is not common for the the majority of the people to desire that which is wrong. And it is frequently repeated that the voice of the people is the voice of God. There are some who would do away with all restriction, so that instantly any wish expressed by a majority at any moment, though it were a mob, would immediately be given effect. We must remember that the ages of the past have their lessons to teach us if we are willing to hear them. The experiences of the past are worthy of consideration. The wisdom of the past in dealing with human affairs we cannot safely disregard to-day.

There are people we know who think that the solution of our difficulties is in an overturn of government and society. They have no regard, as they have no or little knowledge of what the law of the land is, and none of the reasons for the underlying principles of the law.

We are frank to urge that changes are needed, that modification and adaptations are needed in our present age. We are frank to urge that the working men should receive more consideration in industry than has been the case in the past. But we cannot fail to note the rapid progress which has been made during the past few decades and the present strong tendencies towards justice. We would strongly urge that such changes be made as will secure greater justice for humanity and for each man, woman, and child, but at the same time we cannot view without alarm the desire to set aside all precedents of wisdom of the past that has been so hardly learned, whether in State or church.

We have noted young men of apparent sound judgment who are willing to set aside both law and religion without regard to the example and conclusion of their ancestors. They are impatient of those seeming restrictions which at times, it is true, have caused a beneficial work to be delayed; which have at times, it is true, prevented for a short time the carrying into effect of a good purpose, but they fail to see that there is a reason for these restrictions in order to protect the liberty of the people. The law and its precedents must be more or less determined in order that humanity may follow a safe course.

We are living in an age of tremendous advancement in knowledge, but all, however, are based on a knowledge of human nature and the experience of the ages past. To this should be added the experience of the present age, but not in the spirit of simply rejecting all that has been gained.

If we are to build surely and truly, it will be because we possess a knowledge of the experience of the ages and are imbued with the same spirit of wisdom. Mistrust and error are in the lowest state of learning.

COLLEGE DAY

October 16

Graceland's educational value affects every member of the church, indirectly if not directly. Her graduates everywhere are spreading the inspiration to higher attainment and greater service that they developed under her influence.

A Year of Centennials

This is a year of centennials and it reemphasizes how important was that period one hundred years ago, 1820 and 1821. At Plymouth, Massachusetts, the tercentenary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers was celebrated in an elaborate pageant, which proved very inspirational to those permitted to attend.

In Missouri the one hundredth anniversary of the State was celebrated at the state fair at Sedalia; at Saint Louis the same event was commemorated the first week in October and quite a collection of historical documents and relics were presented to the public library in that city. The event was also celebrated by a pageant, by orations, and in other ways throughout the week.

In 1821 the first settlement was made in Kansas City, and this anniversary of the city was celebrated on October 3 by a great parade of several thousand and a great mass meeting in Penn Valley Park.

On the 7th Independence put on a big parade with many historical floats and on two evenings put on an historical pageant that revived the century of progress just past.

This use of a pageant is being generally adopted for historical purposes, as it presents more vividly some of the scenes and circumstances of the past to which we have referred several times in the past year and a half.

Since 1820 was the year of the first vision of Joseph Smith, these are significant years in the history of the church, as well as in the history of Missouri and the United States.

"College Day"

October 16 has been designated as College Day, at which time every branch in the church will arrange to take up a freewill offering for the benefit of Graceland.

This is your opportunity to cooperate with others in the doing of something worth while. Working alone, a person of ordinary financial means could do practically nothing in educating the youth of the church, but by casting our mites into a common cause we are able to turn out a young army of men and women equipped for life's struggle.

Graceland is a college with splendid ideals:

First. Education for service and not for wealth is her aim.

Second. Education should embrace both mental and spiritual development.

Third. Religion is one of the chief stones in the foundation of success.

Fourth. He serves God well who serves the best interests of his fellow men.

These ideals can but appeal to every Saint who appreciates the spirit and genius of the latter-day work.

Do not depend upon your neighbor to do your part. Go to the church October 16 prepared to contribute an amount equal to 25 per cent of the amount you gave last year to the Christmas offering. This will give you a gauge by which to measure your giving. If you are isolated or do not happen to be at services October 16 you can send your offering direct to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Branch presidents will kindly announce this offering in sufficient time so that the Saints may make their plans and come prepared to give to our worthy institution.

Yours for Graceland,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Sister Audentia Anderson passed through a successful operation at the Sanitarium on the 10th and as we write was recovering from the anaesthetic very nicely.

College Day, October 16

Why Graceland College Needs Our Support.

Annually, if not oftener, the question arises in some quarter as to why we have a college of our own, in view of the excellent colleges that exist in the world and in view of the fact that we support state universities through our taxes.

There are two good reasons. The colleges of the country are crowded. Furthermore even when not crowded, they receive so many students that personal attention is not possible.

Another, and decisive reason, is that set forth as early as 1869 in General Conference resolution:

"Etiquette is not taught in camp, nor the art of war in the nursery, neither are priests educated at Oxford, nor rabbis with the Jesuits; nor can we reasonably expect a plentiful supply of genuine Latter Day Saint elders to be furnished by schools of the Gentiles; as well might we look for the sturdy oak in the hothouse, or the orange in Lapland, as for thorough, devout, self-abnegating elders from the popular schools of fiction and fashion; 'tis contrary to the common course of nature—the child clings to the breast from whence it derives its nourishment, and the faith of the pupil is tinctured with the mind of his professors."—Church History, vol. 2, p. 520.

We present an open mind and encourage our young people to continue their work, since Graceland College is a junior college, in these other institutions because we want the truth. Did we not find, not once, but time and again, that the manner in which facts are presented tends to draw the minds of our young people away from the church and from religion? Their principal difficulty is that in their college courses in the great universities, the idea of evolution of thought, mind, body, religion, as well as of animate nature is quite taken for granted and no arguments are started from the assumption that such is the history of the race. We are quite open to consider all of the light and truth that any man can bring, but in these early college years it is distinctly an advantage to have our young people under our own supervision. We cannot think for them, nor would we do so if we could. The policy of the church is an open one, encouraging independence of opinion, but in this necessary preparation for the work of society and the church it is decidedly advisable that our young people be under our own supervision, for a time, at least.

The necessity of education for our work has been emphasized time and again. The necessity of our own institution has always been emphasized and clearly set forth.

But no institution of college rank is self-supporting. With many of them the tuition does not pay more than one quarter, and with some it is a great deal less, of the expenses of the institution as a whole. With Graceland College, the amount contributed by the students has always been a much larger percentage. It is so to-day, but since the work they take is not for their own benefit alone, but in order that they may be better workmen for the church, whether they enter the ranks of the missionaries, whether they enter the local work, whether they become engaged in some department of church work, whether they engage in business or industry of some form, the special training enables them to do their work more efficiently. The special training makes them more able for the work of Zion when appointed to that service. The benefit that they receive is not to themselves, alone, but is extended to those with whom they may come in contact and is resultant in better priesthood meetings as well as better Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department courses. Since the work that they are doing is in good part for the benefit of the church as a whole, and since the church does not remunerate with regard to the expenses of this preparation, it is right that the church should support this course of preparation for the sake of what it means to the work as a whole.

Graceland College offers an opportunity for special training for our young people. Such training does not mean, certainly, that those who receive it will be sent out as representatives of the church in the mission field or appointed in charge of the local church work, but it is especially valuable for those who will go out into church work, whether in America or abroad. It offers a splendid opportunity for our young people in other lands to come to America and while receiving instruction, become better acquainted with our church ideals and the men on whom rests the burden of the work. This year there are two from Jerusalem, one from Germany, and several from Great Britain. Another year there will, doubtless, be more.

In this work of preparation, the Bishop has granted family allowance, or has continued the missionary family allowance to those who have been in the missionary field but who have entered Graceland College, with the hope that through study they may be better prepared for further service. This support is given to those who have previously married. Training is given, not only to the young men, but also to the young women, as the task is a joint one, especially abroad.

It should be unnecessary to add that this preparation is by no means a certificate of appointment. Such preparation can never take place of the divine call. Nor can such instruction take the place of the careful, prayerful, personal study of the word of God, and certainly no school work, even in our own college, can take the place of the work of the Holy Spirit. But to those who are seeking to walk in the way of righteousness, to those who possess the Spirit of God as a teacher, to those who have taken to heart Paul's statement to Timothy, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," to those who have and do study the word of God for themselves, to such, a splendid opportunity is offered for better preparation, and this for the work of the church at a minimum remuneration.

This work of preparation has thrown an extra burden on the church. The construction of the new building made necessary by the expansion of the collegiate work and by the continued depreciation of the old college building, has necessitated the use of further funds. The Bishop, therefore, rightly calls upon the church, asking for our liberal support that the tithes and offerings may be freed from this special burden because of the generous contribution made by the Saints of God for this special work. It is for that reason that he asks for a contribution of one quarter of the last Christmas offering, that thereby the tithes and offerings may be entirely freed from this burden and some of the extra expenses of the college be made.

The budget for 1920-21 indicated that church support would be required to the extent of nearly $10,000. The amount will probably be somewhat larger this year on account of provision for help, the new building, and added facilities, though much of this latter increase will probably be met by the student body. We may rest assured that the money will be applied so as to relieve the other finances of the church, and in a conservative manner providing for the regular budget, and also for at least some students in the religious education class who have come from the missionary field.

Furthermore, many young men and young women come from poor families, the families of missionaries and others, and so are unable to pay their way through. For this reason, the Sunday school and Religio established a small loan fund to be loaned to the college students and repaid after leaving college. This plan proved successful, so the General Conference of 1917 adopted the following resolution:

"To the General Conference: Your committee consisting of the Presidency, Twelve, Order of Bishops, and the president of Graceland College, to whom was referred resolution recommending the use of College Day collections as a scholarship fund, beg leave to report that this matter has received consideration, and the following resolution was adopted by the committee:

"Resolved, That we look with favor upon the adoption of a scholarship plan for Graceland College; and recommend that such portion of the College Day collection as may be necessary to provide such scholarship be set aside to assist worthy young men and women desiring the advantages which Graceland offers; and that the placing of these scholarships be left in the hands of the Presiding Bishopric and the president of the college.

"Respectfully submitted,
"FREDERICK M. SMITH, for the Council."

This means that the College Day collections constitute a scholarship fund. It means that our donations in this way provide a fund for our young men and women to go to Graceland College and thereby receive a benefit for themselves and for the church. Especial efforts have been made at other times to provide a scholarship by different branches or departments of the church work in different branches, but this method provides a continual fund convenient and easily handled as a whole.

Our College Day collections will relieve the tithes and offerings and the Presiding Bishop from the burden of that much of the expense of Graceland College. If our collections and donations are sufficiently large the general church fund will not be called upon to supply the Graceland College budget since that will have been done directly by the church.

The fund, if sufficiently generous, will also relieve the Bishop from some past obligations on behalf of the college.

The donations not only insure the continuation of Graceland College, the meeting of the deficit in an honorable way as we should, but they also provide a scholarship fund for our own young men and women where, by a united effort, we help our own young people that they, in turn, may render their own service in due time and assist as they should with a spirit of consecration in the work of the church.

As President Smith pointed out in his address at the dedication of the new building and the opening of Graceland College, if Zion is to be redeemed, it must be because we will have enough young people trained, willing, and ready to do the necessary work.

Remember October 16, Graceland College Day.

Church Property Not Injured in San Antonio

In a letter from Elder Alma Rannie to the First Presidency, we have the following:

"The flood here did not damage any property of the church people, so far as I know. The water reached within about two blocks of our house, but we slept through it all. We didn't know a thing about it until the next morning. The cause seems to have been a cloudburst in the valley up above the town. The San Antonio River winds through the town from one end to the other. It goes right through the business district. It is only about the size of the Blue there near Sheffield, but it can get on a rampage."

The Lamoni people in Independence plan to hold a picnic in Gates Park, in the outskirts of south Independence, on the afternoon of Saturday, October 15. A brief program is arranged and a good time expected.

A Modern Mars Hill

Many excellent places in England for open-air preaching.

Elder James E. Bishop refers to a large square in front of the city hall at Leeds, England, as "A modern Mars Hill," a cut of which appears in this issue. Elder Bishop writes that the audience sits on the steps or stands around the speaker in the square; that the speaker, as a rule, stands on the pedestal in front of the statue in the right foreground. Leeds is known as the "Hub of North England." This "Modern Mars Hill" presents a splendid opportunity to meet the people who are often slow in entering a church edifice but who are quite ready to listen to such a street discussion. Elder T. Taylor has spoken here several times and it was here that his debate, which was reported for the HERALD of September 13, was held.

Elder Bishop writes in a personal letter that there is a great demand in England for our economic program and that there is but little opportunity for work except on the basis of discussing economics. He emphasizes the necessity for careful study of the plan of God as laid down in his revelations to the church and at the same time a close study of sociology and economics, together with the present social movements, in order that we may rightly evaluate the teachings of the church. The presentation of our economic program is an essential prerequisite.

He also states that the people need the gospel, that there are many splendid openings for those who are able to conduct street services. Two hundred workers could be used in England alone in this work, but it will take those who are capable of meeting the exigencies of street speaking.

While the square in front of the city hall at Leeds offers an unusually good forum, there are many other good places throughout England. Hyde Park has become noteworthy for the large number of open-air meetings held there. The British people favor fair play and are much more ready than are others to permit one to have his say and also to listen to what he has to say. Of course, there are exceptions, and disturbances arise at times.

The field is before us. There are many opportunities everywhere for those who are able and willing to work and carry this gospel of the kingdom abroad through all the world. There are openings for those who are willing to be all right things to all people for the hope of saving some to Christ.

Church Membership

In a letter from the Department of Statistics to the First Presidency, the church membership is set forth for the last twenty-five years. These figures correspond to those published in the HERALD for June 21, 1921, page 589, with the following exceptions:

The church membership December 31, 1894, was reported to the conference of 1895 and is, therefore, listed by the church statistician as the membership of 1895. In the list above referred to published by the Presiding Bishop in the HERALD, these figures are ascribed to 1894.

It is well that our readers should remember that the figures published on page 589 of this volume of the HERALD give the membership December 31 of the year noted.

In addition to the figures previously published, the Department of Statistics advises that the membership December 31, 1920, is 96,198, showing a gain for the year 1920 of 3,452.

The office of the church architect, Henry C. Smith, is now located in some of the upper office rooms of the Battery Block, giving him more comfortable quarters for his increasing work.

Subjects Being Discussed

Discussion Over Debate in California

Brother D. Amos Yates writes concerning a debate which was to have been held between himself and E. W. Shepard, in California, sometime between August 15 and September 30. The beginning of the affair was through a letter sent to Brother Yates by Mr. F. L. Richardson, pastor of the Colton Advent Christian church, in which was submitted the following propositions for debate:

"1. Resolved that Joseph Smith was not a prophet of God.

"2. Resolved that the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price are in contradiction to the Bible and each other, which proves that they are not inspired."

Brother Yates informed him that we did not debate except in self-defense, as we did not desire to attack others, but to present the gospel in an affirmative way. Mr. Richardson, however, went ahead and secured the services of E. W. Shepard, of Portland, Oregon, to come into Colton and make two lectures against our church. Brother Yates attended the lectures and because of the many false statements made, accepted the challenge.

Committees from both sides met and agreed upon the propositions, provided the Pearl of Great Price was left out. On August 22, Mr. Richardson wrote again saying that they would insert the Pearl of Great Price into the resolutions as well as other things which had not been agreed upon. Brother Yates would not promise to defend a book which the church is not connected with, was not part of our tenets, and was not printed by us, nor would he debate except as agreed.

On September 22, Mr. Richardson published in the Colton Courier his version of why the debate was not held, to which article Brother Yates replied at length, submitting his article to the Colton Courier and San Bernardino Telegram. The Telegram published it in full, September 24.

Brother Yates expects to hold a series of lectures in Colton during October and reply to the lectures of Mr. Shepard. He hopes to get something better before the people.

Decline in Theological Schools

The Christian Herald reports that the number of students in the theological schools of four great denominations, show a decrease of more than one third from 1916 to 1920. The Episcopalians show a decrease from 463 to 193; the Presbyterians from 1,188 to 695; the Congregationalists from 499 to 255. These three show close to a fifty per cent loss. The fourth, the Methodist Church, shows a twenty per cent loss, from 1,226 to 976.

The United States Bureau of Education reports that the attendance of theological students, including Roman Catholics, Protestant and Jewish, in toto—increased gradually from 3,354 in 1870 to 10,558 in 1905. Just before the World War a decided acceleration was shown of over 12,000 in 1916, but in 1917 this fell to 9,354, and later returns show that the Protestant churches have failed to recover their prewar status and the result for 1921, though not complete, indicates a decrease over last year.

The number of applicants is also greatly decreasing. The number of young people expressing a desire has shown a decided falling off, despite the increase in population. Those affected the most are the Episcopalians, the Congregationalists, and the Presbyterians. The Christian Herald suggests the reason is that they appeal to a thoughtful constituency, but the fact remains and is quite general the report there is scarcely 5,500 students in all of the Protestant seminaries while there should be four times this number if the supply is equal the demand of 5,000 new ministers each year.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A Comparison of the Talmud and the Bible

By Harry Passman

A sermon preached at Jerusalem in English and German, September 4, 1921. The various books quoted from belong to the Talmud, the catechism of the Jewish faith.

I have been preaching to you for over a year, and from time to time I have made statements based upon the Talmud. You have exhibited surprise when I would quote these statements, and the expression on your faces indicated to me that you thought these statements were not well founded. Some of you have asked me to preach a sermon in which I would compare certain teachings of the Talmud with the Scriptures. This I have consented to do, and to-night we will place side by side the teaching of the Talmud and the teaching of the Bible and then you can judge for yourselves whether these two books were written by inspiration given by the same God.

Idols Determined by Size

I call your attention to the book called Shabbath, page 83 B: "There is no defilement in an idol smaller than the berry of an olive." I am somewhat surprised to read a statement of this kind in the Talmud, because the history of the children of Israel reveals that they were surrounded with idolatrous peoples and their leaders were worried for fear that they fall into this sinful practice and thus lose their standing with God. When Moses returned from Mount Sinai where he had received the two tables of the testimony, he saw the children of Israel worshipping a golden calf. His anger was kindled and he threw the two tables of stone upon the ground and broke them. I should think the rabbis who wrote the Talmud would not write a statement like the above, for fear that some of the children of Israel might make a small idol and worship it, and I am quite sure that if most of the Israelites who live in Palestine attempted to make an idol of gold, it would be smaller than the berry of an olive, because of the limited means they possess. However, if they did they could place the responsibility on the writers of the Talmud. God's teaching, found in Exodus 20:3, has a distinctly different tone: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth." I cannot interpret this scripture to mean that small images are allowable. The language is very specific: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." The Talmud and the Bible are not in perfect harmony on this point. I have been recommending to you to accept the teaching of the Bible in preference to the Talmud. I believe you will see yourselves that the teaching of the Bible is safer, wiser, and in harmony with reason.

People of Foreign Lands Are as Idolaters

We will now read from Kethuboth, page 110 B: "Whosoever dwells in foreign parts (outside of Palestine) is as if he were an idolater." You teach that an idolater shall be sent to gehenna (hell). I am thinking that if that be true there will not be many Israelites in heaven, because there are about 16,000,000 in the entire world, 63,000 of these located in Palestine. This argues that 15,937,000 of the Israelites will be confined to gehenna. Of course some of this number will migrate to Palestine before they die and this will lessen the number, but when we take into consideration the new immigration laws for Palestine, it means that only those that have considerable money, or those that have a dependable position can enter. Judging from the number that are without work at present, it seems to me that only the wealthy will be permitted to enter for some time to come. This will exclude the poor from entering the heavenly portals and give access only to the rich that are inclined to migrate to this part of the Near East.

Has it ever occurred to you that if all the Israelites of the entire world desired to live in Palestine, they could not, because of lack of accommodations? The land is not large enough to provide for all, so some of them would be compelled, by reason of circumstances over which they have no control, to go to gehenna. The Psalmist David states, under inspiration (Psalms 115:16): "The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Isaiah 45:22 states: "Look unto me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth; for I am God," etc. The opportunity for salvation is extended to all the ends of the earth and is not limited to Palestine only, and the people that obey God's law regardless of which part of the earth they may dwell upon, can secure salvation, can work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that fears God, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable with him.

Cannot Transact Business With Idolaters

In Avodah Zara, page 2 A, I read: "Three days before the festivals of idolaters it is unlawful to transact business with them, or to lend them money, or to borrow anything of them." If you take into consideration the teaching of the Talmud miscellany, page 39, note, you will notice that Christians are included in the category of idolaters. In fact, this term is applied to all people outside of Israel, and it even includes all Israelites that do not dwell in Palestine. Israel would be compelled to stop all business transactions upon all the Jewish holidays which are very numerous, and in addition to this, three days before every festival of all other denominations you would have to inquire of all people that enter your business establishment, if they are not of Israel, and if not you would not be allowed to sell to them. I notice, however, that this part of the Talmud is ignored by Israel, who in their eagerness to take in the piasters never stop to ask who the purchaser is, but rather inquire, Has he got the money? A strict observance of this law would draw sharp lines of hatred between Israel and his neighbor, and in fact, this hatred is in existence now, in Palestine. This is contrary to God's commands as given through Moses (Leviticus 19:18): "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Deuteronomy 10:19: "Love ye therefore the stranger: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt."

Bowing to Idols

Avodah Zara, page 12 A: "If a person gets a thorn in the foot while he is in front of an idol he must not extract it, for fear that some onlooker will be impressed that he is bowing to an idol." I sometimes wonder if the rabbi that wrote this ever walked around the thorny fields of Palestine. Palestine certainly has a reputation for growing the finest crop of thorns that I ever saw, and felt, in all my life, and I pity the man who runs one of these Jerusalem thorns into his foot, on Jericho Road where the image of the Virgin Mary occupies. If he wanted to get a safe distance from this image he would have to walk to the post office, a good distance on a steep hill, and this thorn would be burying itself deeper and deeper with every step. Do you think you would observe this law if this kind of an accident happened to you? You may answer the question to yourselves.

The same writer also states, "If you drop your pocketbook before an idol you are not allowed to stoop over and pick it up."

I would like to test some of the rabbis in Jerusalem. I am inclined to think that no one else would have an opportunity to get that money, because the rabbi would get it first, idol or no idol. However, this exception is made, if no one is looking you are allowed to bow down.

On the same page we are informed that no one shall put his mouth to the spout of a figured conduit, for it might look as if he were kissing the images. I thought I would give you this one along with the others, so if you are ever good and thirsty and you come in contact with one of these spouts you will have a good chance to do penance. Rabbi Ismael shows considerable leniency when writing upon this important subject and does not take so radical a view. He states: "If a man say to a Jew, Worship an idol or I will slay thee, he may commit idolatry to save his life." (Avodah Zara, p. 40 B.)

When you consider the history of the early Christians and the persecutions they suffered, and the number that met their death because they would not deny their God, you must admit that they made a better record than the one shown above. It looks very much like a man-made law, entirely void of the inspiration of God. Nowhere in the Bible do I find God commanding his disciples to observe certain laws and then making the provision that if some one attempts to take your life, you are permitted to do the very opposite of it. The Bible teaches that you should not bow down to any graven image, neither worship it, and I cannot find another place in the entire book that modifies that commandment, by stating we may do it under certain conditions.

Idolatry Defined

Shabbath, page 105 B: "Whosoever rends his garments, breaks his utensils, or scatters his money in anger, let him be looked upon as an idolator."

Sanhedrin, page 92 A: "Whosoever prevaricates, or alters his speech, is as if he worshiped idols."

When we add to this list all Christians, all Jews outside of Palestine, I am afraid that heaven will be a very lonesome place. I quoted the above statement to one of your leading business men in Jerusalem, and he answered that nearly all the Jews in Palestine prevaricated occasionally. If his judgment in the matter is correct, and if the Talmud is true, it is possible that there will be no one in attendance in heaven.

The Bible tells us an entirely different story with reference to salvation and the various glories that mankind shall inherit and sometime we shall spend an entire evening upon this subject, and I am sure you will see a more logical, more beautiful, and more reasonable doctrine than that which we have examined this evening, a doctrine that has a place for all people, and represents God as the creator of the whole human family, and not only of a selected few who have had their ears tickled with egotistic doctrine and their reason lulled to sleep with falsehoods that have originated in the minds of the rabbis, who have sought a people to pay homage, and bow the knee in humble reverence, as if the very Creator stood before you. This rabbinical influence is on the wane, and if the day ever comes when they lose it entirely, Jerusalem will be a fit place to live in. Now you cannot say your soul is your own, you must fear when you enter this house, you cannot expand your intelligence, for fear it will lead you away from the teaching of the Talmud.

Transgressing the Law

Rabbi Yochanan says, "In all things if a prophet tell thee to transgress the words of the law, obey him, except in idolatry." (Sanhedrin, p. 90 A.) Jesus-Christ accused the ancient Israelites of making the law of God of none effect by their tradition, and if you will take an unprejudiced view of the above command you will notice that the prophet is considered greater than the law of God. "If the prophet tells you to transgress the law of God, do it." Who is greater, God that gave the law, or a prophet sent by God? If we have a correct understanding of God's law, we will honor the prophet as long as he honors God's law and teaches God's word; but as soon as he departs from God's law, we depart from him. To the law and to the testimony: if he speak not according to this, there is no light in him. Judgment will be based upon God's law, written in the books. A prophet may be a true prophet to-day, and to-morrow he may depart from God entirely, and if you follow the instruction of the Talmud in this affair, you will be led away from God. I want to emphasize the need of discernment. Study your Bible, become acquainted with it, and when you read anything in the Talmud that conflicts with its teaching, put it down in your notebook that it is not written by inspiration from God. If there are good things in the Talmud that harmonize with God's word, receive them, but be sure to separate the gold from the dross. Your eternal salvation depends entirely upon obeying God's law, as found in the Bible. Deuteronomy 27: 26: "Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them. And all the people shall say Amen."

The Messiah Has Come

In Eirubin, page 43 B: "It was promised to Israel that Elijah should not make his appearance (before the advent of the Messiah) on the eve of a Sabbath, nor on the eve of a festival, to save folk the trouble of going to greet him on a day of preparation for the ensuing festival."

Israel was surely highly favored to receive a visit from some divine messenger and receive the promise mentioned above, and I should think that all Israel would be deeply interested in this promise, and if Elijah had already made his advent, it would be a sign that the Messiah had already come. It seems to me according to the book of Bava Metzia, page 85 B, that Elijah had already come, and if so, Messiah must have come before him and you have failed to recognize him. Elijah frequently attended the rabbi's seat of learning, and once upon the first day of the month, he came in later than usual. Rabbi asked what made him so late. Elijah answered, I have to wake up Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, one after the other, and wash the hands of each, and wait until each has said his prayers, and is retired to rest again. But why don't they all get up at the same time? The reply was, "Because if they all prayed at once, their united prayers would hurry on the coming of the Messiah before the appointed time."

This makes it quite plain that Elijah has already come, and as you have been promised by a heavenly messenger that Messiah will come before him, so it stands to reason that Messiah has already come. I believe he has, because Isaiah has made it quite plain in the fifty-third chapter. He took the sins of the human family upon him, and he was led as a lamb to the slaughter and as a sheep dumb before his shearer, so openeth he not his mouth. This prophecy was fulfilled by Jesus of Nazareth. He was the promised Messiah. We can be healed and saved by believing and obeying him. What will you do with Jesus that is called Christ? My prayer is that God will open your spiritual eyes, so you will be able to understand God's word.

COLLEGE DAY—OCTOBER 16

"It is only the ignorant who despise education."
—Publius Syrus.

Two Kinds of Tithing

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

Interpretation of section 106 should be in connection with other sections.

Section 106 has been interpreted by some to mean that "We have no tithing to pay until we have a surplus." This is not a correct rendition.

The Bible teaches that the tenth is the Lord's. (The tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. Leviticus 27:32.) The Book of Mormon reiterates the law of the tenth. (Alma 10:8.) Years before this section 106 was given, (July, 1838,) the Lord had commanded latter-day Israel to observe the law of tithing. (See section 64:5 of 1831; and section 94:3 of 1833.)

Not only was the law of tithing (which was always the tenth, for it is "holy unto the Lord") taught prior to the giving of section 106, but it was practiced by Abraham (Hebrews 7:2) and recommended by Christ himself. (Matthew 23:23.)

Four years before the date of this revelation Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery covenanted to pay their tithing and pledged their children and their children's children after them. (Church History, volume 1, page 529.) There is nothing in the language of these texts to indicate that this tithing was to be withheld until a surplus had been accumulated; but rather, when the necessities of life were provided, "after that, of all that he shall give us we will give a tenth," says Joseph Smith, which is very similar to the pledge made by Jacob many centuries ago. (Genesis 28:22.)

God's law does not change, neither is it at variance with itself, hence any interpretation of section 106 which does not harmonize with what he has already spoken is not correct. "It should be taken as a whole," we are told; each revelation "having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others. (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.)

Jesus taught the principle of consecrating the surplus, to the young man who had kept the law from his youth, and came to the Master with the question, "What lack I yet?" "If thou wilt be perfect," was the answer, "go sell that thou hast and give to the poor." The church had also been taught, in section 42, the principle of consecrating their surplus, but had been slow to heed, and elsewhere were rebuked in the following language: "Behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the thing which I require at their hands . . . and do not impart of their substance as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted. . . ." This rebuke came in June, 1834, following their expulsion from Jackson County in November, 1833.

While trying to establish themselves at Far West in 1838, and remembering that the distress that they had suffered was due, in part, to a failure to impart of their substance, they ask the Lord what he requires of them for a tithing. Note the language, "a tithing," not tithing, and then the Lord proceeds to give an enlarged definition for tithing. "Behold, I require all their surplus property. . . ."

A financial crisis then confronted the church. The Saints had been driven from their homes, their crops destroyed, their stock driven off by mobs, who threatened their very lives—they had no increase, but they wanted to help the work of God.

There are two kinds of tithing:

First: The tithing of the interest (increase), which is always one tenth.

Second. The tithing of the surplus, which may be any amount.

The tenth is the Lord's, and is required by his law, whether

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A WORLD REVOLT AGAINST TRADITION

Solicitor General Beck says we are dancing on the verge of a social abyss, and even the dancing is uncivilized.

Revolt against tradition and authority has sprung up not only against the political state, but in music, art, poetry, and commerce, until the age has become "preeminently one of sham and counterfeit," James M. Beck, solicitor general of the United States, declared before the American Bar Association at Cincinnati to-day. He spoke on "The spirit of lawlessness."

"The statistics of our criminal courts in recent years show an unprecedented growth in crime," Mr. Beck said. "But this revolt against authority is not confined to the political state. In music its fundamental canons have been thrown aside and discord has replaced harmony. Its culmination—jazz—is a musical crime.

"In the plastic arts, the criteria of beauty have been swept aside by the futurists, cubists, vorticists, and other æsthetic bolsheviks. In poetry, beauty of rhythm and nobility of thought have been replaced by exaltation of the grotesque and brutal.

"In commerce, the revolt is one against purity of standards and the integrity of business morals. Who can question that this is preeminently the age of sham and counterfeit?"

"Two of the oldest empires in the world—China and Russia—are in a welter of anarchy," the solicitor general said, "and in even the most stable governments, the underground rumblings of revolution may be heard. But of still greater significance to the welfare of civilization is the complete subversion during the World War of nearly all the international laws which have been built up. This fierce war of extermination has put us back—temporarily let us hope—a thousand years.

"The morale of our industrial civilization has been shattered. Work for work's sake, as the most glorious privilege of human faculties, has gone. The aversion to work is the great evil of the world to-day. The whole history of the mechanical era is a persistent struggle for more pay and shorter hours and to-day it has culminated in world-wide ruin. In my judgment, the economic catastrophe of 1921 is far greater than the politico-military catastrophe of 1914.

"Accompanying the indisposition to work," the solicitor we have accumulated a surplus or not. To those who have no surplus, the paying of one tenth of their interest (increase) represents the beginning of tithing.

Even though one pays all his surplus he in nowise impairs his ability to pay his debts to God or man, neither his ability to operate his stewardship so as to gain "other talents" or make his annual interest or increase. If it is otherwise he has paid no more than his surplus. The word surplus means that part of a man's possessions, whether of money or properties, of which he has not present or immediate need, the word need being determined by the man's position, sphere of action, his business, and his dependencies.

After having been tithed of our surplus property, we continue to set apart one tenth of our increase to care for the poor and carry on the gospel work, and as we accumulate additional surplus it also is to be consecrated or turned into the Lord's storehouse.

From this law we are told none are exempt that belong to the church of the living God.

general continued, "has been a mad desire for pleasure such as has not been seen within the memory of living man.

"Man has danced upon the verge of a social abyss, and even the dancing has reverted to the primitive forms of uncivilized conditions," Mr. Beck declared.

Speaking of newspapers, he deplored the increase "in the ephemeral and trivial," saying that pages were devoted to sport, "while literary, art, and musical reviews and scientific discussions are omitted or given little space."

"Undoubtedly there are many contributing causes to this world-wide revolution against authority," Mr. Beck continued. "Thus, the multiplicity of laws does not tend to develop a law-abiding spirit. A race of individuals obey reluctantly, when they obey at all, any laws they regard as unreasonable or vexatious. Nearly all women, for instance, are involuntary smugglers. They deny the authority of the state to impose a tax on a Paquin gown. The law's delay and laxity in administration breed a spirit of contempt and too often invite men to take the law into their own hands.

"I may seem unduly pessimistic," Mr. Beck said in conclusion, "and I can suggest no remedy, but there are many palliatives for the evils I have discussed. To rekindle in men the love of work for work's sake and the spirit of discipline would do much to solve the problem. The law and our profession can defend the spirit of individualism. The tendency of group morality is one that the law should combat. Of this spirit of individualism, the noblest expression is the Constitution of the United States. About the individual, the Constitution draws the solemn circle of its protection. It defends the integrity of the human soul.

"The Constitution was our fathers' 'vision.' That vision still remains with the American people and they have not yet lost faith in it. Let us, as interpreters and guardians, do all that in us lies, to preserve this inspired vision of the fathers."

We note from handbills coming into the office that Elder John A. Dowker is holding tent services in Des Moines, with an advertised list of subjects and an accompanying slip containing comment on the excellent attendance at the services. We suggest that it would be an advantage to have the name of the church, dates, and specific location of the place of services appear on all such advertising, for otherwise they lose much of their value in many instances. These can be placed to advantage and not detract from the display features of the advertising.

Graceland Record begins its second year as the official organ of the student body of Graceland College with a dedication number devoted to the opening exercises held at the beginning of the school year. The editor is Leonard J. Lea, and the business manager Roland C. Travis. The paper is issued every other week from Lamoni, Iowa, and the subscription price is $1.50 a year. It is devoted principally to a record of the happenings among the students.

At the session on the evening of October 3, the quarterly conference of the center place of Zion indorsed recommendations for ordination of Wayne Smith, priest; Walter Curtis, teacher; Evan A. Fry, deacon. A resolution also prevailed to indorse and support efforts by local school authorities to suppress the smoking of cigarets among school attendants.

COLLEGE DAY

October 16

'Tis education forms the common mind:
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.

—Pope.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 4.—STEWARDSHIPS AND INHERITANCES

Definition

A steward: "A person intrusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own; hence, one who manages or disburses for another or for others." Stewardship: "The office or duties of a steward; the duty of dispensing as an accountable person."—Standard Dictionary.

A little reflection will show that the elements of a stewardship are (1) trust, (2) management, (3) responsibility, and (4) accountability.

The term estate means at bottom property of some kind. Affairs are things to be done; business (i. e., a pursuit or occupation that employs or requires energy) of some kind.

A stewardship is the state of being a steward and connotes the functions, the duties, the office work of a steward. A steward is one who is intrusted with properties or office for the purpose of enabling him to perform some function or duty or office work under terms which make him responsible and hold him accountable for the proper performance of that work, which is specifically to "manage" some estate or affair which is not his own.

In the sense that all things belong to God and that man must account to God for the use he makes of God's properties through the employment of his own native powers of body and mind, all men always have been and always will be stewards to God. No formal or informal act or announcement on the part of any man or the church can in any way affect this relationship; this stewardship exists without and in spite of anything that any man or his fellow men in any capacity may or may not think or say or do in the matter. It is a fixed principle in the economy of God. This much religionists in general are coming to teach.

But the uses to which God has decreed that man shall put his resources will make men individually stewards before man collectively. This is the force of the announcement to "organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.) In the face of such an announcement, it is not to be presumed that the general relationship which all men sustain to God by birth is the stewardship under consideration and in contemplation; but it is rather a stewardship that makes a man accountable to his fellow men in "time" as well as to God in "eternity." To appoint stewardships presupposes that they did not previously exist; and since they did not exist, it implies a change in relations both to men and to properties; relations not before sustained.

Now a love for God involves a disposition of properties and talents in ways that are pleasing to God; and a love for man means that one is willing to dispose these things in ways that promote the welfare of mankind. Naturally enough, God had directed men individually to contract stewardship relations to men collectively. In other words, in addition to the stewardship relation that each man sustains to God by the fact of his existence, those who desire to establish their citizenship in the kingdom of heaven are placed under the additional necessity of coming under stewardship relations to their brethren with whose interests they wish to become identified. "It is required of the Lord at the hand of every steward to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:1. And for such reasons the church was repeatedly instructed to "organize." Nothing short of stewardships can give rise to the unity of interests that is demanded by the Father as the price of Christian discipleship.

This explanation is called for both for the sake of some who wish to form a judgment on this question, and because some doubts exist in the minds of some on this particular point. But all doubt is removed by the very explicit requirement to "bind yourselves together" "by a bond and covenant that cannot be broken by transgression" "in your several stewardships."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4. And again: "Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

A "bond" is "something that binds or holds two (or more) objects (or parties) together." That something is the "covenant"; i. e., "an agreement entered into by two or more persons or parties; a compact." What that covenant is designed immediately to effect may be judged from the statement: "organize" yourselves and appoint every man his "stewardship." Organize: "To bring into systematic connection and cooperation as parts of a whole." And this is done through a bond and covenant.

Trust

It is to be hoped that the implications of the brotherhood of man will not be overlooked in contemplating the question of stewardships. Christian brotherhood unquestionably implicates a unity of interests; and a unity of interests presupposes that the affairs of those involved are brought into systematic connection and cooperation as parts of a whole. This means that specific interests, or properties, or concerns, while managed by stewards individually, are at the same time the property of the group that intrusts them to individual stewards for management. "Trust" implies the absence of property rights in the individual managing. "You are to have equal claims on the properties."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4. This implies group ownership but individual trusteeship.

God himself positively declared that stewardship relations are essentially relations of "trust," i. e., they preclude individual ownership. "If the properties are mine, then ye are stewards; otherwise ye are not stewards."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:10. And it should be observed that God made this declaration of the principle of "trust" in connection with commandments which imply the specific methods by which this relationship of "trusteeship" is to be brought about: "Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship." This again is reinforced by the statements: "The properties which belong to the order," and "concerning the properties of the order."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:1, 2, 3.

In order, then, that men who desire to establish a Christian discipleship may have opportunity and may be placed in conditions favorable to this purpose, Christian doctrine provides that the properties or offices intrusted to stewards shall belong to the group or order or association formed for that purpose. The bishopric, that is, the body of men set apart in the church to promote business relations on the stewardship plan, are "authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization," so that those desiring to fulfill the stewardship law "may lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when [it is] organized."—Doctrine and Covenants 128:1.

No organization is necessary to enable men to secure and hold property lawfully in their individual rights as citizens for ordinary business purposes. But if men individually or jointly hold their properties in the ordinary or customary relations, they are owners, not trustees, and they cannot be stewards in the eyes of their fellow men who are united for gospel purposes. They cannot both hold it in individual right and at the same time hold it in trust. Neither may the church as such "lawfully" enter the field of ordinary business venture or enterprise in ways that are desirable and necessary to promote the economic interests of its members. The alternate, therefore, is for the custodians of the collective interests of the Christian brotherhood to "bring to pass the organization" of those who, as Christian men, "are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association" giving rise to this relationship of "trust," and finally to make them parts of one organization securing the interests of "the whole body of the church when organized."—Doctrine and Covenants 128:1. Collectively, as citizens, they may unite their interests and hold property lawfully for stewardship purposes. Thus the first essential condition of a stewardship, that of "trust," is made possible of fulfillment through bringing into existence the organization designed for that purpose.

Management is the second element in stewardship. Properties are intrusted for some purpose; on the economic side, the purpose is that they may be used for productive purposes. Cooperation is made effective on the one hand through a natural division of labor; and the assigning of specific duties of management is such a division. Private properties are concerns of self-interest; stewardship properties are concerns of other's interests. These produce two entirely different effects upon personal attitudes. And since stewardship properties must belong to another party, the following rule naturally arises to govern stewardship activities. "You are to have equal claim upon the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4. Besides bringing to the front the element of "management," this proposition implies all that was said on the question of "trust."

All enterprises involve either or both the employment and direction of labor, the governing of the processes of production and the disposition of the product, and the attendance upon all such duties attaching to individual ownership as the upkeep of the property, the making of improvements, the payment of taxes, etc. All of these are problems for management; they afford ample opportunity for the expression of individuality or genius; they afford all the latitude consistent with Christian purposes; and the responsibility for the performance of them is definitely fixed upon the individual steward.

Responsibility

All the foregoing involves the element of responsibility. Among the several factors that give the stewardship plan preeminence over communistic or socialistic and other cooperative schemes, is the fixing of individual responsibility. A specific task is assigned or selected, and the individual is held to the necessity of promoting its success as a productive enterprise as the price of the liberties and rights and guarantees this form of association is designed to secure. There can be no question of what is expected or required; there can be no shifting of responsibility for failure; there is no giving of false credits; the returns from each individual's activity is the test of his efficiency as a manager or a producer.

This procedure serves to protect those who enter into this compact from imposition or folly, while each devotes himself to the performance of his particular duty or function.

Accountability

This, then, in turn, involves the question of "accountability." The necessity for giving accounts serves to promote a sense of moral responsibility on the one hand, and gives information concerning the status of both individual and group concerns on the other. And this enables the group to plan new relations and extensions looking to the further promotion of group interests in general, or of correcting local conditions in particular. The value of accounts is known universally in the business world and requires no special treatment to emphasize its importance from a purely business standpoint. "It is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship both in time and in eternity."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

Thus we have the elements of stewardships. Its meaning is not ambiguous, but clear and distinct; and anyone may judge of what is required of him under the stewardship regime.

The Purpose

Certainly it is not to be supposed that God could not provide man with food and raiment, if he would, without subjecting him to the necessity of promoting economic relations for that purpose. All who credit the stories of his dealings with men in ages long since past must believe that he means other than man's cultivation of the soil at his command for furnishing food to the race.

But man has need for other things than bread; he needs physical exercise, and mental and moral discipline; and the conditions for these are to be found in relations that men are obliged to sustain to each other and to things under the pressure of their economic wants. An envisagement of human life will show that the stewardship regime is designed in its nature to supply these very needs.

Stewardship necessities reveal to men something of the true character of their feelings; each may judge by his reactions to its proposals whether he has been born into an atmosphere of love of the brethren, or whether what was supposed to be love is merely a spirit of toleration.

Stewardships afford the best opportunities for the love of neighbor to work its purposes. If one really craves to please and promote the welfare of the brethren, and to secure his own interests and happiness, here is the supreme opportunity to do it. When two or more men moved by impulses of love, work together, dividing costs and sharing the benefits of production, they develop a spirit of mutual aid, an increased sympathy, and an "unfeigned love of the brethren." Friendships require sacrifices. Personal aims must be sacrificed to others' pleasures and others' good. Thus friendships arise. We cannot have friendships with each person going his own way. We must be reconciled to walk together. Stewardships promote friendships.

It would be very disastrous if, under the influence of the spirit of modern commercialism, those desiring to establish the kingdom of God should attempt to apply modern business practices to that end, rather than to apply the principles of the righteousness of the kingdom to modern business life. "I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon." Babylon, the great spirit of commercialism (see Revelation 18) that aims only to enrich private coffers. The purpose of stewardship discipline is not to get dollars, but to enrich the lives of men. This is done by molding the activities of life to accord with this purpose. We need only to attend to cultivation of the plant; the fruit may then be gathered without extortion. Riches there must be in Zion; but riches is not the purpose of Zion activity, and its processes are not determined by such considerations, notwithstanding riches are sure to arise from rightdoing. "If ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9. "But the desire for private riches damns the soul."—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.

If the purposes of life's experiences can be kept clearly in consciousness when judging the question of stewardships, and if judgment takes place on this basis, little difficulty should be encountered in arriving at a comprehension of stewardship relations.

Classes of Stewardships

There are two classes of stewardships in the Christian brotherhood: (1) The men of the ministry; (2) the men of business and of work. These two classes of laborers perform all the different kinds of functions or duties essential to the establishment of the kingdom of God. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let (1) him that laboreth in the ministry, and (2) him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

The class of temporal stewards is divided into (1) men of business and (2) men of work.

These activities provide (1) bodily exercise, (2) mental training, (3) moral discipline, and (4) devotional expression.

The bishops and the elders (using the latter term in its widest meaning) have their stewardships the same as all others. (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3; 72: 41.) The development of the concerns of Zion is intrusted to and depends upon the unified action of both classes of stewards. While properties for business purposes are held by the several organizations effected for this purpose (see Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1; 101: 1, 3, 12), the "offices" of the priesthood are held by the ministry; each has a trust corresponding to the character of labor he is to perform; and each is answerable to the group for the proper conduct of his stewardship. In duly appointed ways and upon certain conditions, the membership by its action intrusts offices in the priesthood to men who by their ordination become spiritual stewards, just as by admittance into an "order" or "organization" others become entrepreneur or business stewards. The ministry by the terms of its covenant in ordination become subject to and are required to fulfill all the conditions of any other steward; that is why they are stewards. All the elements of stewardships enter into the relationship of the minister to the group; these elements are (1) trust, (2) management, (3) responsibility, and (4) accountability. In some cases men may occupy in a twofold stewardship capacity.

Organization and Administration

Organization is a systematic connection of mutually dependent parts or functions working together as a whole for a common purpose. Social organizations, such as we have under consideration, are effected through agreements or contracts or covenants between any number of parties. These agreements specify the conditions of membership, the rights and obligations of both the individual to the body and of the body to the individual. The powers and limitations of representatives or official organs as well as the rights and obligations of the members are specified in the terms of association either explicitly or by implication. Without such understandings and powers to administer authoritatively, there can be no social organization in the sense in which the word is used in church law.

The representative and administrative powers which men jointly delegate fill the same need in cooperative enterprises that management does in any particular business venture. They bind together the different elements in the cooperative effort and give it unity of structure and function. In organization the resources, the brains, and the labors of many men are merged for one purpose in a business unit, and efficiency is thereby promoted. Organization aims to abolish antagonism and to make all feel that they have a common interest in the success of the undertaking; it also aims to establish a systematic connection between the constituent parts which are thereby made to work towards the interests of the whole.

It is not difficult to see that Christian idealism naturally seeks to express itself through social organization. As in the progress of industry, so in the development of the Christian brotherhood, there will be the formation of an ever-expanding and increasingly complex organization. Only in Christian effort there must be a more complete integration; the unifying process must extend and intensify in proportion to the development of the Christian brotherhood.

As early as 1831, the church (by which we mean the disciples collectively) was directed to make preparation for the formation of an organization with the promise that "ye shall receive power to organize yourselves . . . that ye may be enabled to keep my laws." (Doctrine and Covenants 44: 2.) And in view of the very definite purpose of Christian effort, which is to attain unto the manhood of Christ through keeping "my laws," and the general lack of a comprehension of such matters, the church was subsequently told that "it must needs be that he [the bishop] receive directions how to organize this people, for [or by reason of, or on account of the fact that] it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws, if otherwise they shall be cut off."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1. The means must be adapted to the end, otherwise the effort will fail of its purpose.

As was said before, Christian men cannot apply some of the principles of modern business life to their purposes; but they can and may apply the principles of Christian doctrine to modern business. This requires emphasis, because it is a principle that is likely to be overlooked on account of being born into an economic atmosphere the principles of which come to appear to be the perfectly natural rules to apply to even Christian undertakings. But God has said this is impossible. Hence the Christian business organization, when established, will stand out conspicuously because of its unique character. But a unique organization is necessary in order "that ye may be enabled to keep my laws," for, as already observed, stewardships imply entirely different property relations from those existing ordinarily; stewardship properties are held in trust. "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9. This decrees a change of relations to properties by which men are to become (i. e., "be made") stewards under the law of consecration over what is now regarded as private property, over "his own property." This is a purpose of the organization: "to hold property" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1) and to "appoint every man his stewardship." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.)

Again in 1832 the church was directed that "the time has come, and is now at hand . . . it must needs be that there be an organization of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.) And again "a commandment I give unto you that ye shall organize yourselves." (Doctrine and Covenants 191: 2.)

Thus Christianity is rational: Having a definite task, it adapts its means to it; it provides for the forms of associa- tion that are essential to the accomplishment of its purposes.

The purpose of the organization may be summed up as follows:

First: "For the salvation of man until I come." (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1; 101: 1.) This is all comprehensive; it includes by implication all other purposes. Second: "To manage the affairs of . . . the bishopric." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.) The functionaries are the servants of the body, not its bosses. Third: to "appoint every man his stewardship." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2 and 81: 4.) To establish relationships of trust, management, responsibility, and accountability. This implies another purpose which is—Fourth: To "hold property." (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1; 101: 1, 3.) The following command comprehends both the third and fourth purposes: "You are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4. At the same time it directs attention to the next purpose which is—Fifth: To secure equal opportunity to all to employ their powers of body and mind in creative activity, which necessitates the securing of equal opportunity to the use of natural creations and surplus goods.

The treasury of the organization is called the "storehouse." This requires to be managed. But inasmuch as it is the repository of funds that are common property, the organization has still another purpose—Sixth: To regulate and establish the affairs of the storehouse. (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.)

These purposes are either coordinate, sequent, or involuntary.

From Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1-3; 101: 2; 81: 4, 42: 8-11, and 51: 1-4 the genesis of the organization may be fairly judged. When a sufficient number of brethren in any given locality find that their circumstances warrant their organization for the purposes specified, they make their wishes known to the bishop. The methods of applying the principles of the stewardship law to their affairs are devised by the bishopric. Upon acceptance of these proposals by those desiring to organize, agreements are entered into between the brethren under which the local bishopric immediately and the Presiding Bishopric mediately become administrators, and such disposition of properties is made as is necessitated by the principle of stewardships; whereupon the organization springs into existence.

It may or may not be that precisely the same methods of applying the principles will prove to be suited to all organizations in all places. The principles stand fixed; but modification of methods may be necessitated by local conditions. The all-important thing is here emphasized: It shall be done according to "the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom," and not according to the principles of modern business.

It may be safely inferred from Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1 and 101: 9 that similar nuclei will be formed in different localities which will either by gradual or immediate processes of integration become consolidated into "the United Order." The limitations of human experience and comprehension of divine ideas may necessitate some intermediate steps before the ideal is finally reached. Evolution seems to be the order of development in religious concerns in the life of man as well as in other things. But movement, progress in the direction of Christian idealism, is demanded. The rate or speed with which progress is made is important, but it is secondary to the direction in which movement is made.

"A Bond and Covenant"

The nature of the "bond and covenant" is a matter of vital importance in this connection. "Bind yourselves together by this covenant; and it shall be done according to the laws of the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4. "Organize yourselves by a bond and everlasting covenant that cannot be broken."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 2. "That the church (that is the united brotherhood) may stand independent above all creatures beneath the celestial world, that ye may come up unto the crown prepared for you."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3. "He shall not have power to bring evil upon you."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

These scriptures all treat the one question of the covenant to be made in forming the organization. We have abstracted these portions in order that we may view certain facts in their nakedness and thus perceive their true form or character. First, we observe the central purpose, the general purpose, which is "that ye may come unto the crown prepared for you." This is the purpose of the gospel, to fit men for the association of angels, to develop in them "the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ," and it is also the purpose of the "covenant" the gospel requires its adherents to enter into in their business relations. Covenants under the gospel law have the same purpose as the gospel itself. The covenant then is adjusted to the end of developing Christian character; this is the price of "the crown prepared for you."

Second, we observe the character of this covenant which makes it adapted to this purpose. It is revealed by implication in the statement: "He shall not have power to bring evil upon you." This means that the parties to this covenant bind themselves to do each other "good," "every man seeking the interest of his neighbor." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.) This is reinforced by the decree: "It shall be done according to the laws of the Lord." Now we revert. We have already shown under the head of "The scope" of the Christian religion that the law of the Lord demands that those who would worship at his shrine must deal their bread to the hungry; must take the poor that are cast out into their own houses; must clothe the naked; must "relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow"; and any covenant affecting the concerns of everyday life that coincides with this law, that measures up to this rule of action, must embody stipulations corresponding to these requirements. Any covenant binding men to such conditions, when fulfilled, must bring the maker of the covenant "unto the crown," for for such only hath God prepared the crown.

Third, we observe that the covenant is "everlasting" and "cannot be broken" without immediate penalties attaching. It holds the individual to his responsibility to the group, and the group to its obligations to the individual. Each party binds itself to act in all matters comprehended in the covenant in ways that serve only to promote the welfare of the other. The "organization," which is the unified life of its constituents, is as much an instrument for doing good and is as much under this obligation as are its constituent parts; an aggressive program of doing good is demanded of the organization.

With these facts in mind, let us revert to "the definition of stewardships." It comprehends (1) trust, (2) management, (3) responsibility, and (4) accountability. Even without taking into consideration the question of "distribution," which is discussed later and must be considered in this connection, when we contemplate the covenant that issues immediately in stewardships, we see that it embodies the sentiments of men actuated by Christian motives. Is it possible that a man who pretends to be saturated with the spirit of true worship of God—can he be satisfied with anything less than such complete surrender of personal aims to the good of those he loves? Can he? And if he could, would anything short of such surrender effect an approach to the Christ type? We have but to contemplate the life of Jesus to find the answer.

Here is an environment. We sustain relations to others that call for adjustments. What must the answer be? To live is to give. To be happy is to labor for others. To be friends is to make sacrifices. What we choose to do under the pressure of this environment is the measure of our manhood in Christ Jesus.

Expulsion of Unworthy Members

No group can maintain a solidarity that carries within itself the seeds of its own disintegration. Society at large is involved in difficulties and burdened by ever-increasing classes of undesirable members; undesirable from the ethical standpoint and from the economic, too. This is the chief cause of the failure of universal cooperation. Too much latitude is allowed for individual tastes. Neither economic nor moral requirements are exacting enough. This is due in the main to the absence of a common religious sentiment of the pure type. Even officials who are selected and paid to protect and promote the welfare of society become parties to vile schemes for the exploitation of public revenue. The best talent available is employed to defeat the ends of justice. The lines of individual responsibility in some of its aspects are so indefinite, and the means for correcting evils so inadequate, that society seems unable to eliminate these disturbing elements.

A fatal weakness in the stewardship regime would exist if it were subject to such handicaps. But it is not. Such evils are either forestalled or immediately eradicated in the following manner:

First, by the saturation of the group with the Christian ideal. This develops a high sense of moral responsibility and gives rise to a common objective. Evidences of repentance and belief are demanded as conditions for admittance into fellowship. This was discussed under the "Personal factors" in successful cooperation.

Second, the size of each local organization is limited to a practical working size. While there exists of necessity a "united order," yet the terms of the compact preserve the identity of the several organizations within the united order; and the division of administrative powers secures immediate oversight of each individual member and each separate enterprise.

Organizations are formed in the several localities where members desire to unite for stewardship purposes (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1). Each organization is presided over by bishops assigned to the work of local administration. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3, 4; and 101: 9.) When the organizations under the jurisdiction of one bishop become too numerous, the territory is subdivided and other bishops are selected to serve.

But while general officers are chosen to administer locally, the control of local affairs and properties does not pass out of the hands of the membership of the local organizations. It is just as essential to success for the several groups of such an extensive cooperative effort as the gospel contemplates to divide or share between themselves responsibilities or powers for controlling and administering properties as it is to divide between individuals the responsibilities for the performance of specific functions. Moneys are "taken out of the treasury only by the voice and common consent of the order." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.) Loans to neighbor organizations are made by voice of the order. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 9. The general officers who administer locally are limited in their powers to such acts as tend only to serve the interests of the body. "The treasurer shall be subject to the voice and council of the order," (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12) and the order may remove him out of his place. "And even the bishop, who is a judge, and his counselors, if they are not faithful in their stewardships, shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 8; 77: 3; 81: 5; 101: 2, 12.

Thus arbitrary rule is made impossible, and the organization in all of its parts has the power to free itself at once of any demoralizing influences.

A central control for the purpose of administering properties, not needed for local enterprise but available for general use, as well as for the purpose of effecting a coordination between the several organizations, is effected through the joint action of all the bishops. "The temporalities of the church were [are] to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8. "The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops, and such other officers as the bishop may call together, with whom he may counsel, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure."—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 3. Through this action methods which bring all organizations into relation to one central body are devised, a unified policy is effected, and each bishop is thereby enabled to advise and administer locally in ways that unify and establish the interests of the whole, while at the same time the procedure preserves and promotes the personal dignity of the membership in each locality.

Should any bishop in his ministrations refuse or neglect to coordinate his acts with the general plan devised by the whole bishopric, he is subject to removal by the chief executive officers of the church.

In these provisions there are adequate means of ridding the body either locally or generally from any disintegrating influences.

(To be continued.)

The Former and Latter Rains—Part 6

By T. W. Williams

No need for God to violate his own order to bring punishment to the Jews.

Did God Curse the Land?

Did God curse the land of Palestine because of Israel's transgressions? Did the land lose its fertility? Did God reverse nature's laws, in order to show his displeasure?

The claim has been made that, as a result of the transgression of the people, a blight was brought upon the land. There was no rain. There was no vitality left in the soil. Things would not grow. What was once a cultivated garden now became sand dunes and desert.

Desolation did come upon the land as well as the people. This was inevitable. The seeds of dissolution had been sown for centuries. The law of cause and effect applied. There was no call for God violating his own order. Cosmos was at work.

The Jews lost the land of promise through transgression. The principles of economic justice enunciated through Moses were violated. Disintegration followed. The nation was fast going to pieces before the advent of Jesus. Nero and his son Titus completed the work. A million Jews were slain. Jerusalem was captured. The Jews were dispersed.

Following this the land was not intensively cultivated as before. The terraces in the hill country were neglected. The winter rains soon destroyed them. The great aqueduct and irrigation systems were abandoned. The country, to a large extent, reverted to its natural state.

Terms of Occupancy

We find a very clear portrayal of the terms under which God permitted Israel to occupy the land.

Ye shall make you no idols nor graven image.

Neither rear you up a standing image.

Neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land To bow down unto it.

Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary.

Walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them. (Leviticus 26: 1-3.)

Contingent upon their compliance with these terms, God promised:

I will give you rain in due season.

The land shall yield her increase.

The trees of the field shall yield their fruit.

Your threshing shall reach unto the vintage.

The vintage shall reach unto the sowing time.

Ye shall eat your bread to the full,

And dwell in your land safely.

I will give peace in the land.

Ye shall lie down and none shall make you afraid.

I will rid evil beasts out of the land.

Neither shall the sword go through your land.

Ye shall chase your enemies.

They shall fall before you by the sword. (Leviticus 26: 4-8.)

A long category of woes is indicated should they fail to keep the commands of heaven. Among these we find the following:

I will make your cities waste,

And bring your sanctuaries unto desolation.

I will bring the land into desolation.

I will scatter you among the heathen.

Then shall the land rest and enjoy her Sabbaths. (Leviticus 26: 31-34.)

This last statement precludes a special curse upon the land. The use of the word desolation does not contemplate any unnatural or irregular dispensation of Providence. It suggests the absence of occupancy and cultivation. It indicates a reverting to natural conditions.

There is no question but the country did become desolate. The rape of the land by the invading Romans, the utter overthrow of the agricultural and industrial activities of an entire nation, with no reconstructive policy on the part of the conquerors, made any other condition impossible.

The Blessing Withheld

It is in keeping with the character and purpose of God for us to say that when Israel did right God blessed the land for their sakes; when they did wrong he withheld the blessing. There is a difference between withholding a blessing and pronouncing a curse. No one will affirm that, prior to the occupancy of the Promised Land by the Jews, and when the Canaanites and Hivites possessed the land, no rain fell and the land was sterile. The report of the spies precludes this.

Prior to Israel's occupancy rain fell during the winter months. The land yielded its crops in season. The spies, as evidence, "cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two on a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates and the figs." (Numbers 13: 23.) This is, and always has been, the case during historic times. In saying this we do no violence to the thought that God amplified nature on Israel's behalf.

Sandys, in his Relation of a Journey to the Holy Land, written in 1621, speaks of it as—"A land that flowed with milke and hony; in the midst, as it were, of the habitable world, and under a temperate clime; adorned with beautiful mountains and luxurious vallies; the rockes producing excellent waters; and no part of it empty of delight or profit."—Book 3, p. 141.

Again:

"We past this day thorow the most pleasant and pregnant valley that ever eye beheld . . . beset with variety of fruits . . . with groves of olives and other fruits . . . descending through different vallies, having divers orchards and deep pastures."—Ibid., p. 141.

Possibilities a Hundred Years Ago

Doctor Clarke publishes his Travels in the Holy Land, in 1810.

In describing his journey from the north towards Jerusalem he speaks enthusiastically of "the beauty and fertility of the mountainous country." He states that the cultivation was marvelous, and affords one of the most striking examples of human industry that can be anywhere seen. He continues:

"The limestone rocks and stony valleys of Judea, were entirely covered with plantations of figs, vines and olive trees; not a single spot was neglected. The hills, from their bases to their utmost summits, were covered with gardens; all of these were entirely free from weeds, and in the highest state of agricultural perfection. Even the sides of the most barren mountains had been rendered fertile by being divided into terraces, like steps rising one above another, whereon soil had been accumulated with astonishing labor. Among the standing crops we noticed millet, cotton, linseed, and tobacco and occasionally small fields of barley. In places where the ground is subject to irrigation, two crops are produced, one of wheat in May, and another of pulse in autumn."—Travels in Holy Land, vol. 11, p. 520.

Doctor Clarke describes the Zabulon plain in the district of Galilee as "being everywhere covered with spontaneous vegetation, flourishing in the wildest exuberance." He states that the soil was "exceedingly rich" and well adapted for "wheat, olive, the vine and other delicious fruits." Maundrel on page 52 of his work described these plains as being "eminently fertile, well watered, and containing everything else that would render it pleasant and fertile." Doctor Clarke also speaks of Lebanon as "still covered with tall cedars" and the ground "enriched with thousands of rare plants and beautiful and fragrant flowers; the primrose of Libanus, the mountain amaryllis "mingling their brilliant hues with the verdure of the birch-leaved cherry." He noted "well planted vineyards, which produce the finest wines; fields of wheat; plantations of cotton, of olives, of mulberries."

Similar conditions obtained in 1833. We quote from Three Weeks in Palestine. The author refers to—

"Gardens hedged around with the ficus indicus, or prickly pear, and filled with vines, oranges, almond, and other fruit trees, which showed by the luxuriance of their growth how amply the land would repay the care of cultivation."—Page 10.

"After emerging from these gardens we entered upon an unclosed and gently undulating country stretching eastward to the mountains which 'stand around about Jerusalem,' northward to Carmel and southward to the Desert Plains of Sharon. They are partially cultivated, the soil apparently light and good; indeed, the gardens of Jaffa afforded sufficient evidence of its capability—where the land was not under crops it was covered with lilies and the plant, commonly known among us, by the name of the Great Star of Bethlehem in profusion."—Ibid., p. 10.

"On our road (to Beirut) we passed several long strings of camels laden with merchandise. We reached our destination about five o'clock in the afternoon highly delighted with our excursion. Parts of the mountains are very fertile, grain, mulberries for silkworms and vineyards form the chief cultivation. They produce excellent and very full-bodied wines. We tasted six or seven different kinds at the consul's table, both white and red and all good."—Ibid., p. 135.

"What a fine country would it be under any but the Ottoman yoke which is a heavy yoke indeed."—Ibid., p. 137.

Conditions in 1846

Gadsby, in his Travels in the East, (1846-53) furnishes ample proof of the fertility of Palestine in his time.

"The valleys bear plentiful crops of tobacco, wheat, barley and millet. If the vegetation now seems in some places to languish, or even during the extreme heats, to become extinct, such exceptions to the prevailing luxuriance must not be ascribed solely to the general character of all hot climates, nor to the barrenness of the soil, but more to the state of barbarism into which all Turkish provinces have sunk. The loneliness and barrenness are now in many places beheld where fruitfulness and prosperity once abounded, the face of the country remains the same, the rocks, the mountains, and valleys being unchanged. Many ruins are to be found of walls which the ancient cultivators built to support the soil, in terraces, or the declivities of the mountains; of the tanks in which they collected the rain water; and of the little canals by which this water was distributed over the fields; all of which have now fallen into disuse."—Page 469.

"The hills near Bethlehem are covered with gardens and the prospects from the town are delightful. Fruits and provisions of every kind appear to abound."—Ibid., p. 463.

Speaking of a trip from Beersheba to Jerusalem he remarks:

"So plentiful were the crops everywhere except where the locust had been, that I think the time must have been when the ground groaned to be relieved of its produce. There were hundreds of camels, horses, donkeys, cattle, sheep and goats, grazing all around."—Ibid., p. 449.

Commenting on the indolence of the Arabs, Gadsby continues:

"They never have to work for their living, or at any rate only in a small degree, but live upon the spontaneous productions of the earth. They still drive their flocks from well to well, from pasture to pasture, as Joseph's brethren removed with their herds from Hebron to Shechem and from Shechem to Dathan."—Ibid., p. 449.

"Our way lay over rough hills, the hills of Judah, and through divided fields of corn—wild roses and other flowers were growing in abundance, and wells of good water were also plentiful. . . . Olive groves, vineyards, fig plantations, pomegranate trees and general fruitfulness lay on every hand."—Ibid., p. 453.

Grapes of Hebron (1846)

"The grapes of Hebron are still considered the finest in all the Holy Land. The abundance of grapes which fell to Judah's lot no man can doubt who sees the country even in its present deplorable neglected state—pomegranates, citrons, oranges, apricots, etc., grow to perfection. Bunches of grapes weighing from six to seven pounds are said to be by no means uncommon; and Sir Moses Montefiore said he saw one bunch in Hebron a yard long. . . . Doctor Kitto says the Duke of Portland produced a bunch of grapes at Welbeck that weighed nineteen pounds, which he sent as a present to the Marquis of Rockingham, nineteen miles distance, borne by men on a staff. Even travelers from Italy where the finest grapes in Europe are grown, have expressed their astonishment at the size of the grapes and clusters in Palestine."—Ibid., p. 458.

"We also passed a large number of ruined walls and some ancient wells; and a stream of water, from a living well, ran along the valley for some distance. . . . some of the streams flowing fresh and cold from the mountains. The vineyards do not now extend for more than three miles (outside Hebron) but the prospects, for about twelve or fifteen miles is truly beautiful, rivaled only in Greece, a succession of hills and dales, craggy rocks and sheltered nooks, rugged glens and peaceful plains. No sooner did we leave one luxuriant vale than another opened before us, seemingly still more beauti-

OUR PUBLICATIONS

THE JOURNAL OF HISTORY

The April number of the Journal of History is now in the mail and shows abundant reason why all who can should subscribe to it, for this is the means by which historic documents are preserved for the church.

This present number contains a long article on the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the various editions which have been printed, and with what additions and modifications of the title pages. The revelations were first written in a manuscript book called the "Book of Commandments," or the "Book of the Law of the Lord." They were then first published in the Evening and Morning Star and were being prepared in book form, when the press was destroyed, type pied, and the printed copies scattered. It appears that the book was not complete or bound at that time. This article includes an index to the revelations, as printed in the various editions of the Doctrine and Covenants and in other publications.

The biography of James W. Gillen by H. O. Smith is continued from the January number, and is followed by the minutes of the conferences of the church from 1852 to 1859. The minutes of the conferences of 1860 and since have been published in the SAINTS' HERALD, but so far as known the minutes of these earlier conferences have never been published heretofore, but are now published in full from a copy made by Isaac Sheen when recorder. The local history of the Lamoni Stake and the Pottawattamie District are both continued, and finally, a new department is opened of Notes and Queries, answering a few questions on church history.

The July number is to appear soon and will contain a survey of the periodical literature of the church. It will be illustrated by cuts of all first numbers of the church periodicals and be exceptionally interesting. In this same number will begin an article on the history and minutes of the high councils of the church.

The price of the Journal is $1.50 a year.

ZION'S ENSIGN

This missionary newspaper of the church maintains its place in the hearts of the Saints, having a special appeal to isolated Saints, new members and nonmembers, but in addition is read generally by the Saints all over the church.

A sermon a week is the ideal of the editor and attained either with a sermon or its equivalent. The editorials are brief and to the point, touching on problems and issues before the church to-day.

Perhaps the pages first read each week are the Independence and central stakes news items, a perusal of which keeps one informed on church and personal developments in Zion and the regions round about.

Then there are letters from the Saints all over the church, official announcements, and miscellaneous items that go to make up a popular church periodical at a low price—only $1.50 a year.

A valuable new series of articles by Isaac M. Smith on the subject of Obedience was opened by the number of September 24. Each number of the series is complete in itself, and the whole ten numbers demonstrate the application of a trained mind to an important gospel subject, and form a goodly part of the monument this minister is erecting for himself in such an unostentatious manner—that of a safe interpreter of scriptural doctrines.

The policy of the Ensign under its present editor is to present the plain and simple doctrines of the church from the pens of safe ministers and members. The distinctive doctrines of the church are given their proper proportion of attention.

AUTUMN LEAVES

Current numbers of Autumn Leaves teem with productions from the best writing talent in the church. The September and October numbers contain articles, stories, and verse from the following: Frederick M. Smith, T. W. Williams, F. G. Pitt, Marcella Schenck, Harry Passman, Ralph W. Farrell, J. E. Bishop, Ellis Short, A. W. Smith, J. E. Wildermuth, Grace Baughman Keairnes, R. J. Lambert, Elmer K. Patterson, Warren L. Van Dine, Kate Goodwin, I. P. MacDonald, J. E. Vanderwood, Benjamin Bean, Ermina Perkins Kearney, Alice M. Peters, Vida E. Smith, J. A. Tanner, besides a strong representation in the departments edited by Mary E. Steele, Vida E. Smith, and G. R. Wells.

And the editor's manuscript drawer runneth over with an imposing collection awaiting the time of its appearance. From writers and preachers and thinkers in general, at home and in distant fields, come contributions lovingly dedicated to the uplift of the church through its magazine for young people.

From the Philippines, from Palestine, western Europe, Isle of Pines, Hawaii, and the south seas they are coming each month, giving not only word pictures but illuminating photographs that inspire us with the great brotherhood of man and fatherhood of God.

A new feature begun lately is a short sermon each month, which can be read in ten minutes and remembered a lifetime.

Frederick M. Smith and T. W. Williams will continue their travel articles for months to come, to the delight of the young people of the church who in lieu of personal experiences would see the world through the eyes of others.

The November number is to be devoted to the girls. They promise much and are in a fair way of fulfilling it. They will have pictures which alone are worth the cost of a year's subscription. How many in the church, young and old alike, have not wanted to see a likeness of the leaders of the women and girls? In this number will appear pictures of Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, Audentia Anderson, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, Della Braidwood Haberlein, Mary Steele, Alice M. Burgess, with many groups of girls from Hawaii to Michigan.

STEPPING STONES

This Sunday school paper continues to increase in popularity and has an excellent outlook for the future. The "Matty" stories by J. H. Anthony appear at intervals, two having appeared under titles of "Too small for the team," and "For the honor of Lincoln." The next one will be "The survival of the fittest."

The editor is now working on a new serial to begin by the first of the new year, entitled "Greenbrier's lost treasure box."

Elder D. T. Williams will appear in a new role the coming season as author of an interesting South American serial, based on the time of the Incas and the invading Spaniards, entitled, "A child of the sun." Many of the young people of the church have met him in his Zion Builder services and will follow with interest his story.

A new feature will begin soon, a column to appear about once a month with sayings and doings at the Children's Home.

ful, and as we crossed this hill or traversed that valley I was constantly reminded of the divine assurance to the Israelites that it was 'a land of hills and valleys, clothed with woods; a good land'; 'a land in which bread should be eaten without scarceness.'—Ibid., p. 459.

"The slopes of the ridge are, in many parts, covered by terraced gardens, shaded by rows of olives, mingled with figs and vines."—Scenes in Holy Land, p. 6. (1837.)

The reader will please not overlook the fact that all the foregoing quotations are taken from works published prior to the date when it has been claimed that Palestine regained its fertility. (To be continued.)

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Rural Sisters

We who live in the larger branches, and can meet and mingle often with our sisters to discuss the problems which come to us as women, can hardly catch the viewpoint from which our rural sister must look out upon life. Isolated, to a large extent, so far as frequent group activity is concerned, and usually burdened with a full quota of physical care and responsibility, often she is too tired to take advantage of even the opportunities which do come her way to visit and study with her fellow sisters.

We have wondered how the Women's Department may bring to these sisters some satisfying portion of the opportunities for development to be found in the larger communal activities of the city or large branch. Several suggestions have been made, more or less practical, and we have decided to ask the sisters themselves what they would like to have, or, in other words, what they deem the Women's Department can do for them.

We will be glad to receive any number of short contributions from our rural sisters, discussing with us freely the conditions and environment under which their lives are spent and suggesting ways and means, hopes and desires, through which we might go more closely "hand in hand." The commission to the church is as binding upon one group of us as upon another. The setting up and successful conduct of Zion is dear to the hearts of all, whether in town or country. A closer walk, one with another, can only result in a more perfect understanding, a wider sympathy, and more mutual benefit.

Now, don't let this little appeal pass unnoted. As you read, something has suggested itself to your mind, some little need, some plan, some handicap or advantage, as you contemplate the problem presented. Do you think a special department for the discussion of rural conditions would be a help? Do you think special bulletins, or reading courses would be practicable? Do you think a club, of, for, and by, farm women would help to broaden and encourage? Have you thought of ways in which our present program has failed to be of benefit? Have you crystallized your opinions upon the matter, and mentally mapped out one more to your liking? Have you definitely linked the woman on the farm with the redemption of Zion? Do you feel that rural children have better or poorer opportunities than those in the cities, and why? What is most needed in the rural women's present environment? In what ways has she an advantage over her city sisters? In what ways can she live nearer God and closer to her ideals? Has she reason to be discouraged? If so, why, and how may she be assisted to overcome obstacles to her development? If she has no reason to be discouraged, how may she best impart to others of her fullness of life?

Let us have answers to these and other questions which have been asked, and see if, in the "multitude of counsel," we might not find some new avenue of service, one to another.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Some Old Fetters Disappearing

Not long ago we were pleased to notice a "story" in a Sunday paper of one of our large cities, which dealt quite forcibly with some of the old-time problems of rural women, and issued forth some new notes of challenge and emancipation.

"For every tractor, a power washing machine! For every binder, a bathtub! For every riding plow, running water in the kitchen!" Such was the slogan as trumpeted forth by the mass of farm women, in their "declaration of independence," which reached its climax in the assertion, "We are entitled to our share of the farm income."

Some consider this to indicate the last breaking of fetters in "The woman movement." It is true that our farm women have been among the very last to resist the burdens laid upon them by tradition and hard necessity. Men on the farm earlier saw the need for help from invention and genius. Their problems were attacked many years ago, and have never ceased to receive a large degree of attention at the hands of economists, but relief has been slower in coming to their partners in the struggle, the wives.

"That the women's demands are modest," the writer explains, "is proved by an examination of the cost of the articles they demand of their husbands. In each case, the outlay required is far less than the corresponding farm implement."

The record of the past is not altogether a happy one so far as the women in farm homes are concerned. Suicides and insane asylums are not unknown entries there. Discouragement and despondency are but forerunners of worse misfortune, and one marvels that the husbands have been so slow to probe the underlying reasons therefor. One lecturer, championing the cause of the rural women, relates the following story:

"A farm woman was ailing. She didn't take to her bed, but her work fell off; farm hands complained of the meals; she no longer accomplished her tasks; she was dispirited, and things generally went wrong.

"Finally her husband called a physician.

"Your wife has melancholia," he announced to the husband at the end of his examination.

"She has!" exclaimed the farmer in amazement. "I don't see how she could have caught anything! Why, she hasn't been off this place for twenty years!"

"That's just the trouble," Miss Mather asserts in her article. "Too many women suffer from the deadly monotony of their surroundings, lack of intercourse with their neighbors, or contact with the outside world. Men go down to the village store or postoffice, meet with other farmers to chat or pass the time of day, but women are so tied down with their 'light' farm duties that they have no such relaxation.

"The only rest some of these women ever get is in their graves. Fitting inscriptions for their tombstones would be 'Too tired to twang her harp!' and 'Swept herself into eternity!'"

Miss Mather goes farther by suggesting that "Let mother get acquainted with a rocking chair" would be a splendid motto for each farm family to adopt.

"Labor saving devices, such as running water, bread mixers, fireless cookers, high stools in the kitchen, dish drainers, elevated kitchen tables and ironing boards, washing machines, a wood box on legs, a scrubbing chariot on castors for mops and pails, will all help," she recommends.

A recent Government survey of 360 farm homes in one of our States revealed the following facts in regard to some of the labor saving devices:

Thirty per cent have water in kitchens.

Seventy-nine per cent have kitchen cabinets.

Seventy-three per cent have kerosene stoves.

Thirteen per cent have fireless cookers.

Forty-nine per cent have linoleum on kitchen floors.

Twelve per cent have bread mixers.

Two per cent have wheel trays.

Three per cent have dumb waiters.

Fifty-one per cent have screen porches.

Miss Mather, home demonstration agent director for Nebraska State University Extension Bureau, warns, "Don't wait until you can build a new house to have all these improvements. Oftentimes the new house doesn't come until after 'mother' is gone!"

Some other rather startling figures were revealed by the same survey, such as these: Only 17 per cent of the homes were lighted by gas or electricity, leaving 83 per cent to use lamps, 15 per cent had bath tubs, and 94 per cent had outdoor toilets only. Only 10 per cent of farm women have regular hired women help; a farm woman's working day in the summer proved to be 13 hours and 5 minutes long, while she rested 1 hour and 34 minutes only, as compared to 10 hours, 32 minutes work in the winter, with 2 hours and 25 minutes of rest. Only 10 per cent of the women under the survey take any days of vacation each year, and this average was found to be 14 days.

The splendid work being done by the Extension Bureau of the University of Nebraska is finding results in even its remote rural districts. Regular programs are worked out and sent to each organized community club, with accompanying papers, helps, and materials placed within reach, and frequent stimulation by "demonstration weeks" conducted by agents sent out for the purpose. No doubt the work done in this State is but typical of that done in others, and it only remains for all rural women to reach out and take advantage of the many splendid advantages being offered to them to-day through such agencies.

We will be pleased to get in touch with rural community organizations among women, and, if possible, assist them in planning their work. Our department desires to be of service to all our women, and will appreciate opportunities to do so.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Wash Day and Poetry

Did you ever think of the poetic side of wash day?
Didn't know there was one?

Well, there is, and attention is called to it in a letter to the farm women of one of our progressive States.

Any kind of work may become a drudgery or a pleasure, depending upon the attitude of the worker towards it. Pretty white clothes, soft water, a good suds, and a power washer should make washday a day of pleasure and information.

What seems to be "blue Monday" in many homes is a day to be desired in others. The only pathetic thing is to see a woman bending over a low tub, laboriously rubbing on an old-fashioned washboard.

And there is, too, the heart-hungry yearning of the woman bereft, as voiced in the following.

"Oh, don't you love a windy line,
With small, gay clothes to make it fine!
The one next door is such a joy—
They have a little girl and boy!
I sit and sit to watch their frocks
That blow and blow like hollyhocks.
Look! Peter's rompers, pink and blue,
That always seem to beckon you!

"And Joan's little underthings—
They tremble—don't they—like white wings!
There! See his tiny waving sock?
And Joan's darling jonquil smock?
(Always the swaying, dancing dears
Blur out through swift and foolish tears!)
Oh, I wish I had a windy line,
With small, gay clothes to make it fine!"

—Selected.

One of Our "100 Per Cent" Babies

A sweet "near perfect" baby
Came down to earth to see
If there were other babies
As wonderful as he.

With wise, bright eyes that sparkle
He's peering all around.
Oh, where is there another
Such baby to be found?

The cradle roll in Zion has one "perfect" baby enrolled on its records. It was the only 100 per cent baby found among the many examined at the recent Jackson County Fair, so we feel very proud of the honor.

Eight babies received prizes at this fair, two of whom were members of our cradle roll, Ruth Loretta Harder, daughter of Brother and Sister Howard Harder, receiving second prize.

William Henry May, jr., son of Brother and Sister William May, grandson of Bishop and Sister Roderick May, is our first prize, 100 per cent baby. He is thirty-two months old, and says he is lonesome! He wants us to help him find the other babies which are in his class!

There must be some somewhere! If you don't want Independence to take unto itself all the honors in this line, please write us and tell us about other babies who have carried off prizes for 100 per cent perfect bodies. Cradle roll superintendents, and parents, let us hear from you soon.

ANNE FRIEND ROBERTS.

General Cradle Roll Superintendent.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXXI

When the Children Become Young People

1. What change should take place in our attitude towards children when they become "young people"?
2. What are some of the characteristic traits of youth?
3. What are some of the things that characterize the attitude of the parents?
4. Enumerate some of the problems that parents and children should solve together.
5. Explain what change in the management of the child takes place at this stage.
6. What are some of the encouraging features of the youthful situation?
7. What place may the companionship of the parents have in the solution of the problem?
8. How can the home help to conserve the youth's physical strength?
9. How may young folks be protected from the social demands of the average community?
10. Can you suggest a way in which these social demands may be lessened?
11. What is your opinion of the social life of the high school?
12. Is it wise to keep young folks from all social affairs?
13. What are the opportunities of the home for the young people during this period?
14. Why is it hard for parents to realize that the child has grown up and must be treated as an individual?
15. How may pride be made a motive power of youth?
16. What is the importance of hero worship in youth?
17. Of what importance is responsibility?
18. How can it be developed?
19. What will a life purpose do for the youth?
20. How can these motives be strengthened and developed?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

[The HERALD editors regret to note the omission of this lesson from last week's issue, due to miscalculation on their part, but feel sure that those following the series of lessons will be so interested in them that they will be little concerned over missing a number.]

Hands

Tempest without: within the mellow glow
Of mingling lamp and firelight over all—
Etchings and water colors on the wall,
Cushions and curtains of clear indigo.
Rugs, damask-red and blue as Tyrian seas,
Deep chairs, black oaken settles, hammered brass,
Translucent porcelain and sea-green glass,
Color and warmth and light and dreamy ease.
And I sit wondering where are now the hands
That wrought at anvil, easel, wheel, and loom—
Hands, slender, swart, red, gnarled—in foreign lands
Or English shops to furnish this seemly room:
And all the while, without, the windy rain
Drums like dead fingers tapping at the pane.

—Wilfrid Wilson Gibson.

LETTERS

The Public Forum in England

A demand for men of God to reach the masses with the gospel.

Only about once have I sought space in your letter department. But I desire to express my appreciation to the some twenty-five Saints that met in DuBois-Punxatawney "get-together" and under the guidance of Sister Ruth Shank wrote their good wishes and told me that they missed me. I am sure that I missed the Kirtland reunion, for I have been connected with it since 1913 and have had many "dynamic" experiences there. But it is good to feel that one is appreciated and my thoughts are best expressed in a few lines of the hymn that the Saints sing frequently,

"But the friends that most cheer me on life's rugged road
Are the friends of my Master, the children of God."

Brother Thomas Taylor and I have been putting forth a consistent campaign in the town hall square in Leeds. We have addressed crowds varying in size from fifty to five hundred. We meet all kinds of men and there is no better schooling than this in order to learn what the masses are thinking about.

TOWN HALL: LEEDS, ENGLAND

The base of the pedestal in the right foreground forms an ideal speaker's stand, and the area between it and the building, including the steps, makes an ideal place for the many who gather around to hear. The place is used for this purpose a great deal, day and night, and is but typical of many similar arenas all over the United Kingdom. Our preachers may find a modern Mars Hill in almost every community, as suggested in the accompanying letter and an editorial comment in this issue.

For the last few weeks the local Secular Society have had Mr. Whitehead, of London, lecturing here. We asked a few questions and tried to take issue with him, but we soon found that while he was waving the flag of fair play and even generosity, that he was hypocritical, and that fair play was the last thing he wanted to extend to any opponent that had any degree of shrewdness. He was speaking in the name of science, but it was science falsely so called. It was about twenty years old. His Bible was Haeckel's Riddle of the Universe, and every intelligent person knows that Haeckel is the laughing stock of present-day thinkers. Or perhaps it would be better to say as Doctor Scott said of Darwin, that the present-day science knows not Darwin.

Brother Taylor attempted a reply, but he only proceeded a few minutes ere Mr. Whitehead manifested his displeasure and hindered and finally stopped him, notwithstanding he had said that our "Brother Tom" could talk for ten hours if he wanted to. We waited until Mr. Whitehead gave up the stone, because we saw he would not give us fair play otherwise, and with the tract, Faith in God, Is It Scientific? Is It Biblical? in our hand we mounted the platform and began one of the most powerful speeches that I have ever had the privilege to make. I denounced the matter that Mr. Whitehead had set forth as science as being old, and that Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndale did not epitomize present or even science a few decades old. And I read those statements contained in the tracts which are expressions of leading scientists in regard to their belief on the bearing of science on faith. At the close we sold more tracts than we ever did before. I think that that tract is for its size one of the great productions in the church's field of literature. And while Elbert A. Smith is not on the firing line, his ammunition is here doing good work against the stronghold of infidelity, skepticism, and agnosticism.

We have made many friends in our work here and have been approached several times with expressions of good will. We have been invited to speak to the Secular Society. We were also approached with a view of having a formal discussion with Mr. Whitehead. We offered the following propositions:

"Resolved, that the philosophy, or constructive policy, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the best for humanity."

I would affirm and Mr. Whitehead deny. And as a counter proposition:

"Resolved, that the philosophy, or constructive policy, of the Secular Society is the best for humanity."

Mr. Whitehead to affirm and I would deny.

He refused the debate under the plea that he knew nothing about Latter Day Saints and that the Secularist had no constructive policy. He wanted to debate the term Christianity. And if he would he would have built men of straw out of all the conflicting creeds that come under that term and then destroyed them, and lead people to think he had the best of the debate. But we, as a church, are not apologists for the hundreds of years of religious history where God and Christ have been strangers and where the blind have led the blind. We have a specialized belief and we are representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and it is that thought that we want embodied in propositions for debate between those that do not accept the Bible and those that do.

This country is doomed. It is the land of my birth and youthful experiences, and it is a beautiful country and efficient in many particulars, but that will not withstand the doom that is coming slowly but surely, like creeping paralysis. Revolution is flaunted from platform and press. This would not be allowed in the United States. But perhaps John Bull believes in letting all radicals have free play, believing in the trite saying, "Give the Devil enough rope and he will hang himself." But that which is plainly on the surface is the undercurrent of other nations and will ultimately break out in the destruction of all nations, according to the prophecies.

Our work along the lines of converting many people will not prosper in this country until there is a change in the general administration of church work. It is true that where we have a good standing in the few communities there will be baptism of children and friends. But that is not the missionary work that Paul wanted to do. For him that was rather weak and childlike, notwithstanding its importance. He was looking for new worlds to conquer and delighted in not building on other men's foundations.

This is the kind of work that is a standing challenge to this church, and we will not do that work until there is more of the divine power and less of man's power. Intellectual ability is good, but England has intellectuals by the score; in fact, she could spare the United States some. They have been appreciated and will be because of the thoroughness of their educative processes. I repeat, What we need in missionary work is the great and Almighty power of God that has caused the wicked to tremble and the righteous to acknowledge him and confess that they have "found the glorious gospel," and until then our share of the ten thousand is past finding out; that is, referring to those who come in through pure missionary effort conducted in new openings.

Brother Fry has been in Leeds for a few days. He won the hearts of the Saints and I have no hesitation to say that his selection was a wise choice and will win the confidence of the English Saints to his department of the church work.

Yours very sincerely,

LEEDS, ENGLAND.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

Australian Missionary Methods

Letter of Elder Walter J. Haworth to the First Presidency indicates possibilities of persistent tracting and great need of additional workers to fill the many openings for speaking.

I have just returned from the State of Queensland and may have some matters to write about which will be of interest to you.

Owing to the scarcity of laborers in the different districts, I have been helping, by request, in two of the other districts. My visit to Queensland was with the object of assisting Brother Peisker with a publicity campaign. A five-week series of meetings was held, in which the preaching indoors fell to my lot. We had some fine audiences, but, unfortunately for us, ten days of cold westerly winds intervened at the point where the interest was becoming worth while. An influenza epidemic was the result. Half the Saints got it, and it looks as though about the same percentage of the nonmembers who had been attending were also attacked. The effort closed with a diminished attendance so far as nonmembers were concerned. Still, it is hoped that Brother Peisker will get in touch with interested ones who attended the first three weeks. He will be continuing the tracting efforts.

In this field our work must necessarily be slow and the people will have to be interested in their own homes by taking the gospel to them by means of literature, Bible readings, etc. During the effort put forth, Brother Peisker and I distributed some nine thousand tracts. It is hard, but interesting work. A man over forty-five finds it rather strenuous in Queensland, because most of the houses are built on high stumps and to get to the front door one sometimes has to climb fifteen steps. Still, I enjoyed the contact with the people.

Brother Peisker is a fine worker. He spares no effort in his endeavors to get the gospel before the people, and is an enthusiastic tracter and street preacher. He has developed into a splendid talker and I was much interested in the sermons I heard him preach. It is good to see our young men making such progress.

The Saints of South Brisbane Branch suspended Sunday night meetings in their church and met with us in the hall selected for the effort. Their presence and help was much appreciated. Brother Nixon, the president of the branch, who is also the district president, also rendered valuable assistance. He is a fine man and a wise leader of our people in that center.

The district conference met at South Brisbane just before our effort closed. Through suffering from a severe cold which later developed into influenza, I was in attendance at most of the meetings, which were thoroughly enjoyed. The business was transacted in the Spirit of the Master, and the tone of the spiritual meetings was high. The Women's Department had charge of the Saturday evening session and proved that they have made good headway with such work since I last visited this state. The preaching was done by Bishop Lewis and myself.

I found the Brisbane Branch in a much improved condition spiritually. Old troubles seem to be forgotten and the Saints are, under the wise leadership of Brother Nixon, endeavoring to measure up to the standard of sainthood.

We are still having rather wintry weather in southern New South Wales, making street work almost impossible. We hope to take it on later. A recent consecration week for missionary effort in new places seems to have been sufficiently successful to assure some intensive missionary effort in this district soon. I purpose making a two-month effort beginning November 1, in one of the Sydney suburbs not hitherto attacked. As most of the missionaries will be coming to mission conference, I am asking some of them to come early and assist with the proposed effort. More of that later.

Expect to do some preaching in Western New South Wales, possibly next month. There are some baptisms there and the weather is considered rather cold as yet. Will go as soon as the folks are ready and will make an effort to reach others while there. May take Brother Vaughan along with me.

Am finding plenty of opportunities of reaching people with the gospel. I write to a number of different points—some as far away as New Zealand, and have a number of prospects of this kind. Then when in Sydney, I maintain a number of openings for fireside preaching which may later develop into opportunities for more extensive work.

Am feeling well and happy in the work. It makes a salesman happy when he has something good to sell—how then, should a servant of Christ feel when he has the best thing on earth to give away?

A Visit to Havana

Missionary to Isle of Pines has a thirty-six hour vacation and sees things in the Cuban capital.

After laboring sixteen months on the Isle of Pines, at the request of the Presidency, I went to Havana to meet Sister Pender, of Independence, who is now in charge of our school here.

This is the first vacation I have had since being here, not missing one Sunday's preaching services.

It was short but very sweet. I boarded the steamer Christobel Colon, at Nueva Gerona at 4 p. m., reaching Batabano, Cuba, next day at 6 p. m.

A two-hour ride on a train, that cared nothing for those unfortunate enough to have to ride on it, rocked and wobbled its way, until we reached the outskirts of that great city, Havana.

We were just twenty minutes from the time we reached the outskirts of the city, until we pulled into the central station. I was supposed to meet Sister Pender, but she was waiting to greet me, as her boat was in before my train arrived.

After introducing ourselves, I phoned a friend who works at the Western Union Telegraph Company, a fine young fellow. It was about 9 a. m.; we had only about nine hours in Havana, and he certainly spared no efforts to give us a pleasant day. We crowded into that nine hours just about one week's pleasure.

To one who has not been in Havana, everything is very strange. The stores have open fronts, largely; there is no prohibition in Cuba, but strange to say, one scarcely ever sees a drunken man, at least among the Cubans.

Mr. Garner, our friend, hired a car (only $8 an hour), and we started on our two and a half hours of ride. Have you ever been on the "Malecon"? It is a long drive. I care not where one goes for length, beauty, etc., it simply has no equal. This of course includes the "Prado," thirteen miles of sea front and beautiful boulevards. The shrubbery down the center of the drive is cut as symmetrically as if a square had been used.

All colors and shades of roses, and trees, such as can be seen only in tropical countries. And this is not only for a few months; this drive is just the same all the year round. The "Glorietta," where thousands listen to the best bands each evening, right on the sea front, and opposite the world-famed "Morro Castle," is a spectacle, for magnitude and beauty, which one must see to understand.

The city is very old, and sidewalks in the very center of the business section are only about two feet wide. One eventually gets the "Cuban hop," by continuous use of the same, for usually one foot is on the sidewalk and the other on the street.

After passing about three miles of never-to-be-forgotten scenery, we pass the "Casino," where men are made or broken in a few hours' time—usually broken.

The drive is right on the sea front, and we are now approaching the beach. This is a pleasure resort, where thousands spend Sunday, and is thirteen miles from the city. In fact, the pleasure day is Sunday. Standing on the very edge of the sea is a club house, membership fee five hundred dollars. I did not see any Latter Day Saint ministers' names on the entrance book. I am told that this is only the initial fee. What will the other fees be?

Away to the right are the golf grounds, a beautiful valley. It is absolutely useless for one of my ability to try to dwell upon the beauties of it, but as far as the eye can see the turf looks perfect.

I saw three very stately statues, which are worth more than passing notice.

Our guide is now showing us where even the dead cannot rest unless they pay their rent, the cemetery. Many of the people in the northern cities are ejected for nonpayment of rent, but here in Cuba, if at a stated time the grave rent is not paid, the bones are taken up and put on a huge pile—a gruesome sight.

Out of seventy-eight thousand school children in Havana, at least twenty-six thousand are deprived of an education, a city in themselves. Other churches are alive to this fact, and even go so far as to guarantee their teachers' salaries when they send them to Cuba.

If our people could see the conditions I have seen here, the tithing law which is equally important to observe as the "principles" we so often speak and preach about, I am confident that this part of the law would not be forgotten. But we are back in the city and the train leaves at 6.10. A wobbly train ride, a beautiful night's sea trip, and we are back again to the Isle of Pines.

We should have missionaries in Havana, Spanish speaking, at once. Six would not be too many for Cuba and surrounding islands, and young men are now diligently preparing themselves, studying Spanish and other languages, in Independence and Lamoni, willing to give their lives in service on foreign shores.

They do not have to do this; they are willing to do it for the Master's sake. Neither do we have to comply with the financial law, but surely we will be willing. There are thousands of people in Cuba who have never heard the name of Jesus unless it be in profanity, hence the necessity for missionaries. May God help us to sense our responsibility before him.

WILFRED TORDOFF.

NUEVA GERONA, ISLE OF PINES.

Faith Healer in San Jose

Elder C. J. Hawkins writes of attending services of Mrs. McPherson, the faith healer.

Mrs. Amie Semple McPherson held forth here in our town, and stirred up quite an excitement. She was here several weeks and thousands attended her meetings, many claiming to be miraculously healed, and others going away disappointed and disgusted.

I only attended one of her tent meetings. I could not see where I could take part in the confusion that reigned there. Some would get up in the excitement and testify that they were healed, and the next day would find out that they were not.

We saw four ministers of different denominations get up and testify that they had never been thoroughly converted before, and had been preaching a wrong doctrine; and they were all vehement in advocating the very doctrine for which Joseph Smith was murdered in 1844, some of them going so far as to prophesy of the near approach of the second coming of Christ. Surely, the gift of "discernment" is a "jewel" in these days.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

"Then Am I Bound"

"I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

Every decision that you make is either right or wrong.

One may bring you gain.

The other may result in loss.

One may increase your joy.

The other may bring sorrow.

Decisions should always be based upon our best judgment, after taking into consideration all of the factors that bear upon the question. We should not be swayed by emotion, the undue influence of others, by selfishness or greed or any sordid ambition.

The question that should concern us most is, "What is right?" Having decided that, it should then be easy for us to do that thing. God's ways are always right. If we can ascertain what he wants done, and then do it, then the caption of this article becomes full of meaning.

"Verily it is a day of sacrifice and of the tithing of my people."

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

A Booth at the Montana State Fair

Extracts from a letter to the First Presidency from Elder Eli Bronson.

Brother Thorburn and I spent a very interesting week at the Montana State Fair last week with our religious propaganda booth. It is hard to estimate whether a great deal of good was done or not. We sold only a very few books, but we handed out many tracts to our many interested visitors, and told the story of the church history from 1830 to 1860—over and over again, emphasizing the fact that we were not representing the dominant church in Utah.

We had some attractive placards, such as "Gospel tracts free. Ask for one"; "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good"; "Bible questions answered here," etc. We had many questions to answer, some doctrinal, some about war, some about Cain's wife, and, in fact, about almost everything in the catalogue of religion.

The effort at least gave our work considerable publicity, and we trust that some good has been done. Our experience has taught us several things which will be very valuable to us in making another effort of that kind.

Tax Protest in Tahiti

Big public demonstration over proposed increase in levies on imports.

We have been having some little trouble here in Papeete, Tahiti, of late. The government is in need of money, and in order to meet the demands the duty was raised. The rate of exchange used to be 5.20 francs to the dollar and the duty on imports was based on that figure, but now they charge on the current rate of exchange at time of entry, so you will see that it makes a considerable change, as the exchange to-day is 13.40 to the dollar. The imports have fallen from eight hundred tons per month to about or less than two hundred from America, and New Zealand and Australia in proportion.

Well, last week the governor levied a tax of 3.30 francs on the hundred for all sales made since January 1 last. It met with a storm of protest. Several meetings were called and a committee was selected to wait on the governor and present the people's demands.

The people volunteered to subscribe a lone of one million francs, so the governor reconsidered his decision relative to the tax.

The demands are as follows:

1. Reduction of employees of the secretary general's staff, and to commence with the metropolitan, nine-hour day instead of six as at present.
2. Abolish metropolitan chief of customs and his two metropolitan assistants.
3. One chief of public works department instead of three as at present, and the work to be given to local enterprises.
4. Complete suppression of the government appointed city engineering service, also extra budget credits for same.
5. Abolish extra family allowance to metropolitan officials, as colonial officials are not allowed.
6. Suppression of extra pay which officials get for government services rendered outside their regular billets.
7. Application of the law on excessive profits.

I have learned that the governor has met the committee as far as it was possible and promised to do all in his power with the home government.

The civilians all met at the city hall and followed the committee to the governor's. He had soldiers placed on all three streets leading to his palace, and refused to allow the people to go to his gate, but agreed to receive the committee. However, the committee were firm, and as a result the governor finally allowed the people to go to his gate as desired. The crowd was well-behaved and reflected credit on the committee.

The demonstration is significant because it is the first of anything of the kind since the islands have been taken over by the French.

ROBERT T. BROWN.

The Northeastern Nebraska Conference

Last Saturday and Sunday, October 1 and 2, are days that will be long remembered by the Saints who gathered to attend the conference at Walthill, Nebraska. Brother T. J. Elliott, district president, called the conference to order Saturday morning and the first meeting was a good spiritual prayer service in charge of Brethren Long and Carter. At 2.30 p. m. conference met in business session with Brother Elliott in the chair. The conference voted a five-hundred-dollar budget to be raised by the district to defray the expenses for the coming year; also to hold only two conferences a year, one in the spring and one in the fall; also to have two-day meetings in each of the branches during the coming year.

Saturday evening preaching was by Brother Burton, our new missionary to the Indians. He used his two-gate chart and made the sermon very plain. We are very glad to welcome Brother and Sister Burton to our district.

At 8.30 a. m. Sunday the men gathered at the church for a men's meeting. Brother Burton lectured this class and a good meeting was reported. The morning Sunday school session was well attended and was in charge of Brother Clark of Winnebago. At the morning preaching service the conference was given a real treat in the form of a splendid sermon by Brother E. E. Long. Several of our Lamanite brothers and sisters attended this service and they always pay the very best attention. Dinner was served at the church, and what a feast of good things was there to eat! Each family brought well-filled baskets, and everyone had plenty and to spare. It was good to see the red man and the white man eating together as one unbroken family.

At 2.30 was held the sacrament meeting, followed by a prayer and testimony service. What a spiritual feast and how the Saints did enjoy the same. Words of comfort were given by the Spirit to the Saints, and they were encouraged to press on and remain faithful to the trust placed in their keeping. At 4.30 p. m. Brother Burton was again the speaker and the Saints paid good attention while he described the gospel gate. Many of our Lamanite brothers and sisters, as well as those not members, attended all services and expressed themselves as well pleased with their reception and also with what they heard.

We are very thankful that we have such a splendid district president, and feel that the Lord is blessing us in many ways. We are also glad to see the gospel coming to the Lamanites and feel that better days are in store for our district. Our spring conference will be held at Omaha with the Omaha Branch. Apostle Greene was expected, but at the last moment a wire was received stating that important business held him at Independence. We were sorry, for his words of comfort and good advice would have only added more good to one of the best conferences of the North-eastern Nebraska District.

CORRESPONDENT.

Young People's Outing, Mobile District

The reunion committee of the Mobile District, thinking it not advisable to hold a reunion this year, suggested that a "Young People's Outing" be held instead. The plan was adopted and the time and place chosen was July 13 to 18 at San Souci ("without care") Beach, Alabama.

San Souci was at one time a popular summer resort, but the beach being low the storms which swept the coast a few years ago washed away all the buildings. The only remains now are a few brick pillars and an artesian well with a wonderful flow of cool water. The attendance, while not large, was perhaps greater than the committee had anticipated.

About forty people stayed on the grounds, and there were quite a number of "comers and goers." As this was our initial effort in a "camp meeting," not much of a serious nature was undertaken. The district conference was held on Saturday and Sunday. There was a little too much rain to suit the occasion, the sun shone too hot some of the time, the mosquitoes were quite bad two evenings, there were not enough tents, and there were entirely too many shells on the beach where bathers had to walk, and even the water was not deep enough for deep diving, but the committee willingly took all the blame for nature's doings, and so about everybody, especially the young, enjoyed it all and went away planning to go again next year. We hope then to have a sure-enough reunion.

EDNA COCHRAN, Secretary.

Visiting the Scattered Members on Foot

Extracts from a letter to the First Presidency.

I wanted to report more fully concerning my trip afoot out into Western Colorado. I saved about twenty dollars stage fare by starting afoot and had to walk only about forty miles out of one hundred and fifty miles. I reached very few outsiders and only ten of our own people. Our people needed the visiting badly. They were very poorly instructed in the doctrine of the church and were rather carried away by other doctrines which they had heard. I'm sure I strengthened them considerably.

It may possibly be a good idea to take that trip once a year to keep in touch with them. Of course I made a few friends among the outsiders this trip. I may make more next time. Also I got acquainted with our people and have got them interested in some of our books and will keep them supplied from our district library.

I'm on my way up into the country off the railroad again but only about thirty miles this time. One brother and family lived in there about five years ago and then another brother and family moved in and took their place and they have interested some of their neighbors in the gospel.

CHESTER YOUNG.

COLLEGE DAY

October 16

It was in making education not only common to all, but in some sense compulsory to all, that the destiny of the free republics of America was settled.—Lowell.

WILLIFORD, ARKANSAS, September 13, 1921.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I visited your columns. I have been greatly blessed this year in the gospel work. It is nothing uncommon to have a crowd of three or four hundred people out to meetings. I had a wonderful experience in the State of Louisiana this summer. There is a branch at Eros of about one hundred noble Saints. Ten hold the priesthood in the branch. In some way the evil power got into the branch and threatened the destruction of the good Saints. After fasting and praying about twenty-four hours to know if I could in any way be an instrument in the Lord's hands to help them out of their sad condition, I was impressed to make a trip to that country, and before I reached there, the president of the branch, Broher J. A. Phillips, who is a good man, enjoyed a vision. The Spirit spoke to him and told him how I would conduct matters after I arrived.

We began meetings and, indeed, we had a good meeting, and after continuing the meetings a week I went to the president of the branch and told him to call a priesthood meeting on Sunday evening. He did so and on Saturday evening the Spirit instructed him to write what should be done in the priesthood meeting.

All holding the priesthood in the branch were present. The president asked me to take charge of the meeting, so we requested all of the brethren to bow and stay on their knees until all offered prayer, and as we got up from our knees we had an outpouring of the Lord's Spirit and, indeed, we had a joyful time. All that were in trouble confessed their faults and agreed to bury their present troubles and do all they could to build up the gospel work in that country. After the meeting was all over, Brother J. A. Phillips then read what the Spirit directed him to write, and everything that was done was in accord with what the Spirit had directed. Well did Solomon say, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Proverbs 29:18.)

The branch is now in peace and happiness. To the Lord be all the praise. I am leaving the State of Louisiana to attend the reunion at Bald Knob. I stopped off at Dalby Springs in northeast Texas in a country where I opened up the work twenty-five years ago and sowed the gospel seed in the hearts of hundreds of good, honest men and women. They came from far and near to meet with us in a meeting that was being conducted by Brother T. B. Sharp and Brother J. W. Jackson. Many of them said they often thought of what I predicted to them that was coming on the earth in the near future. Years ago I preached five sermons for them, and the last evening I preached there were about four hundred people on the ground. Twenty-three were baptized and many others brought near the kingdom. Brethren Sharp and Jackson did a good work.

We began our reunion at Bald Knob on August 19. Brother A. T. Higdon, of Independence, Missouri, was with us. He is a fine preacher and a noble worker. He and the writer did the preaching in the evening, and Brethren J. T. Riley, Al Ziegenhorn, and Brother White, who is county judge of White County, did the preaching in the daytime. The Saints of the Bald Knob Branch did all they could to make the reunion a success, sparing neither money nor time. We had a fine reunion.

I am here at Williford, Arkansas, in the midst of a fine meeting. About two hundred are in attendance. Four have been baptized and several others are near the kingdom. I would like to rest a few days but no place to stop. We have to work on.
Your brother,
E. A. ERWIN.

Cyril E. Wight of the Lamoni Stake Presidency was conducting gospel services for the young people at Hiteman the past week, October 2 to 9 inclusive. Elder Wight conducted a similar series of services in the early part of the year and they were so well received that they urged him to return this fall.

In the measure in which love increases in any social organism, it will hold together without coercion.—Rauschenbusch.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, September 22, 1921.

Editors Herald: The Saints of Grand Rapids are trying to put it on the map, that is, as a center of church activities for the district.

For some time, we have been dissatisfied with our present plan of renting a hall for our services, and so have recently purchased two beautiful lots in the southeastern part of our city, and as soon as we have the consent of the bishopric we will erect a church suitable for the needs of a growing branch.

Besides having this "vision," we also have an aim—that aim—the warning of the people of Grand Rapids that we have the restored gospel, and also of the building up of Zion in the latter days; and with this aim in view, we have pitched a large tent, which is owned by the district, on the two lots recently purchased, and have opened up a campaign, in charge of Elder F. F. Wipper, district missionary in charge, and Elder E. K. Evans of our city.

Our first meeting, Sunday the 18th, was a great success, over four hundred people attending, and a great many were turned away through lack of seating capacity. Thus far throughout the week there has been a very good attendance in spite of the rainy weather, and we are hoping that the weather will remain open for a good many weeks yet, and that the interest will continue.

Our Religio Department is now back to almost normal attendance again, after the vacation period, and we have one class which is very largely attended, namely the church history class, with Sister Louise Evans, teacher. We feel very fortunate, indeed, in having Sister Evans as teacher, as she has had the work in Graceland and is able to help us with her outlines and college training.

PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT.

MOUNDSVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, September 2, 1921.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that I read the HERALD and Ensign. There are many good things contained in them, and how glad I would be if I could retain them in my mind. The articles of J. E. Vanderwood are worthy to be printed in book form; the depth of his articles are wonderful.

We had our Sunday school teachers' and officers' meeting on Tuesday evening, August 30, at which Sister Schaanun read a letter from the SAINTS' HERALD, "Woman's field of opportunity for service," by Grace B. Keairnes, which was most earnestly enjoyed.

"Zion, the city of refuge," by D. R. Baldwin, is a wonderful article and worthy of our study. I read an article some time ago written by Brother R. W. Farrell, and after reading it I felt like saying, "Write again, Brother Farrell." I also read with interest the sermon of Brother Hammond, one of our future coming men.

We have a little branch here in Moundsville, organized by Brother G. T. Griffiths about two years ago. We have added to our number quite a few by baptism and removal letters from other branches. We have our little difficulties which I believe are for our growth and development. We also have a little band of workers in the children. They are called Zion Builders. Every Sunday evening at 6.30 they have a prayer and testimony meeting, and they are generally the first on the floor in the branch prayer meeting, so that they are an example to the older ones. Brother Schaanun, the president of the branch, is in charge of these little ones, and they are making fine progress.

I am glad to learn of the good and spiritual time they had at the Kirtland reunion. Many will wonder why I was not there, but having been out of work for eighteen weeks I could not go. We sometimes have to be governed by circumstances.

As a branch we are trying to come up higher, but we feel our progress is very slow compared with what we would like to see it. But inasmuch as we do our part faithfully and leave the result with God, we know that all things will work out for our good. One of the main things is unity among the priesthood, and if you have a lively priesthood then you will have a lively branch.

We have Brother Crow, who has recently been ordained a teacher, and he is on the job bringing the Saints together and teaching them their duty, and for this reason he is loved and respected by all—something like a Brother Ramsey in England, at a little town called Farnworth. He became the president of the branch, and, being earnest and zealous in the work, if there were any missing from the service when the meeting was over he would go to their homes to learn the reason, and if when visiting the Saints they would complain about their shoes or their clothes being shabby and not fit to come to church, he has been known, time and again, to take off his shoes and coat and say, "Here, brother, give me your old ones. I will leave you without excuse."

This is the spirit that should prompt us as ministers of the gospel of Christ. Is there anything in this life that we should love more than the gospel and the souls of men? Let us all answer, "No."

We are expecting that in the near future the sisters of our branch will organize and become a power for good. I am glad to see the church is making rapid strides along certain lines. So let us be busy and about our Master's work, the harvest is great and the laborers are few. The field is white, all ready to harvest, and he that is willing let him thrust in his sickle and reap, and pray that the Lord of the harvest may send laborers into the field.

Our Wheeling district conference will be on the third and fourth of this month. We are trusting, working, and praying that we may have a good, spiritual time. Then comes the Clarksburg conference, the following week. Let us pray for them, also that we may be enriched with the blessings of heaven.

Now if Brother Hammond or any of the Saints here or in England should see my address and feel like writing, a word from them will be always welcome. Ever praying for those of the faith,
Your brother in gospel bonds,

THOMAS MILLS.

VALENTINE, NEBRASKA, September 16, 1921.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading in the HERALD that God helps them that help themselves, and thought what a good place Valentine would be for an elder or priest to locate, and how we would appreciate one, as we have no meetings only when one drops in on us, although I think we have been highly blessed this last year. We have had Brother W. M. Self, Brother Joshua Carlile, and Brother E. E. Long. I see Brother Long is going to locate in Nebraska, and how I wish he would locate here. I think he could do much good.

We have organized a Sunday school since Brother Carlile was here and have quite a few outsiders attending. We had twenty-two last Sunday. We hold it in a private house.

Ever praying for the work to be opened up here and for the upward move everywhere,
In bonds,

JULIA C. SHEPARD.

GREENFIELD, MICHIGAN, September 25, 1921.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written to the HERALD, but I am as interested in the gospel as ever. It appeals to my reason. The plan that God has given if we but obey would be heaven on earth, peace and good will among men, for it answers all the needs of human wants if we are true followers of Christ, following the plan of salvation, both spiritual and temporal.

I believe we could well follow the advice in Doctrine and Covenants 128:6 of organizing pastoral, agricultural, industrial professions, etc. But I believe we might think of the admonition given by the Lord that the children of the world are wiser than the children of light.

The leaders no doubt are doing all they can to build Zion, but what are we doing? What if industrial conditions get no better? Are we able to cope with the situation? Yet we have been forewarned of perilous times coming, with famine and pestilence, and these are only the beginning of trouble. Must we learn this lesson by bitter experience or by intelligent preparation? Our only hope lies in Zion's redemption if we are to escape these bitter experiences.

I would like to be in closer contact with the Saints and assist in its economic program. I am a mechanic, electrical wireman journeyman with city of Detroit license, with five years in the construction and five years maintenance. I also spent three years on farms. I can do farm work and took a full course in agriculture from the International Correspondence School. If there is any Latter Day Saint farmer or electrical contractor who wants a man, twenty-eight years old, to put his whole being into their work and the welfare of Zion, drop me a line. Yours for advancement of Zion,
B. L. MAYNARD.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, September 28, 1921.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to inform you the Moorhead, Iowa, Branch is still among the progressive ones.

During the month of July there were sixteen baptisms. Some of these had been investigating the work for some time and were thoroughly convinced that the angel's message was true and are now rejoicing with us.

During the spring and summer we were favored with very interesting sermons by Brethren D. S. Baughman and J. C. Crabb. Brother Baughman spent about three weeks in our midst. We were pleased to make his acquaintance as he was a new man to this branch and we hope that he may meet with us again in the near future.

We were certainly pleased to have Brother Crabb meet with us again. When we come to consider the many years of service that he has rendered the Little Sioux District, the Moorhead Branch receiving its share of his services, and now at such an advanced age still declaring the angel's message, as firm as ever, it makes us feel that he will continue faithful

(Concluded on next page.)

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The Wisdom of the Ages	- - - - -	961
A Year of Centennials	- - - - -	962
"College Day"	- - - - -	962
College Day, October 16	- - - - -	962
Church Property Not Injured in San Antonio	- - - - -	963
A Modern Mars Hill	- - - - -	964
Church Membership	- - - - -	964
Subjects Being Discussed	- - - - -	964
Decline in Theological Schools	- - - - -	964

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

A Comparison of the Talmud and the Bible, by Harry Passman	- - - - -	965
Two Kinds of Tithing, by Benjamin R. McGuire	- - - - -	967

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

A World Revolt Against Tradition	- - - - -	967
----------------------------------	-----------	-----

THE FORUM:

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work.—Part 4, by J. A. Koehler	- - - - -	968
The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 6, by T. W. Williams	- - - - -	973

OUR PUBLICATIONS

- - - - -	- - - - -	975
-----------	-----------	-----

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Anne Friend Roberts—Maude Peak Parham.	- - - - -	976
--	-----------	-----

LETTERS

- - - - -	- - - - -	978
-----------	-----------	-----

James E. Bishop—Walter J. Haworth—Wilfred Tordoff—C. J. Hawkins—Eli Bronson—Robert T. Brown—Edna Cochran—Chester Young—E. A. Erwin—Thomas Mills—Julia C. Shepard—B. L. Maynard—Mark Jensen.	- - - - -
---	-----------	--

MISCELLANEOUS

- - - - -	- - - - -	984
-----------	-----------	-----

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Coldwater, Michigan, October 14 to 16. H. E. Moler, president.

Western Montana, at Bozeman, November 5 and 6. Send all reports to district secretary, J. P. Wyckoff, Deer Lodge, Montana.

Kewanee, at Rock Island, Illinois, October 15, 9 a. m. Meetings at church on the corner of Eighteenth Avenue and Tenth Street. M. E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Convention Notices

Women's Department of the Eastern Michigan District will hold a convention October 15, at Marlette, Michigan. Mrs. O. Engel, organizer.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Sister Eva Prettyman, of Knox, Indiana, who is suffering from tuberculosis.

Quorum Notices

First Quorum of Priests, Detroit District, will meet at Central Church, Detroit, Michigan, October 16, at 2.30 p. m. All priests in district urged to attend. John Hall, secretary, Detroit, Michigan.

Teachers of Detroit District will meet at Otter Lake, Michigan, Sunday, October 30. Autos will take those who come to Flint, leaving early in the morning. L. E. Dollinger, secretary.

Young People's Gospel Campaign Services

A committee composed of Brethren Paul M. Hanson, F. A. Smith, James F. Keir, J. A. Gardner, and Arthur E. McKim has been appointed by the Joint Council to care for the interests of the young people's gospel services this fall and winter. This committee is working out a definite program, into the end like Brethren Charles Derry, George Montague, and others who have labored so faithfully for this branch. It is a pleasure to think of them and it does inspire us with a determination to fight manfully onward to the end.

Brother L. E. Hills, of Independence, Missouri, favored us with some splendid lectures on the Book of Mormon and of the great archaeological discoveries, which were well received by both members and nonmembers and many have expressed their hope that he would come this way again.

At present we are nearing the end of the third week of a series of meetings conducted by Brother Daniel Macgregor. A large congregation has greeted him every night and much interest is being manifested and we wait for the results to follow. The question box usually keeps the brother busy fifteen or twenty minutes after his sermon.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's work, MARK JENSEN, Branch President.

The dissolving of doubts is attained, not so much through clearer thinking as through deeper living. The way of the Scriptures, the way of light, is not the road of abstract reasoning, but the road of the cross.—Nash.

COLLEGE DAY—OCTOBER 16

"Education . . . an ornament in prosperity and a refuge in adversity."

cluding the laying out of circuits, and will welcome correspondence from any branches contemplating young people's meetings this season. Address all communications to Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

ARTHUR E. MCKIM, Secretary of Committee.

Conference Minutes

LONDON.—At London, Ontario, September 30 and October 1 and 2. Opened Friday evening with musical entertainment under direction of D. A. Withrow, district chorister. Prayer service Saturday morning. District President John Shields, J. L. Burger, and James Pycoc presided over the conference, and after the usual business time was given over to Sunday school. At 2 p. m. session business was resumed and bishop's report read, showing $13,000 received in tithes and offerings the past year. There are 911 members in the 11 branches; 45 baptisms are reported. One of the largest branches had not reported its baptisms, which would undoubtedly have increased this number. The following officers were elected for ensuing year: President, William Osler; vice presidents, Frank Gray and Clarence Weeks; secretary, Lucy Yerks; treasurer and bishop, J. L. Burger; chorister, D. A. Withrow; organist, Caro Withrow; auditors, L. O. Pearson and James Reilly. Departmental program at 7.30 p. m. Prayer and sacramental service Sunday morning. At 11, 2.30, and 7, preaching. District chorister and organist, ably assisted by musicians from other districts, and Mr. Mabee, of London. London Saints have placed in their church building a new pipe organ, the use of which added great pleasure to the services of the conference. Visiting Saints were unanimous in their vote of thanks to London Saints for their hospitality. Adjourned to meet at call of district presidency. Lucy Yerks, secretary.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—At Tigris, with the Beaver Branch, during the reunion. District President A. V. Closson and Lee Quick, missionary, were in charge. Four branches reported a total of 506 members. Three branches made no report. Ministry present included 7 of the Melchisedec priesthood and four of the Aaronic. Most of the preaching was by Lee Quick. Four were baptized, all heads of families. C. H. Norman was ordained elder. Next conference at Thayer, some time in February. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

MOBILE.—At San-Souci Beach, Alabama, July 16. Business opened at 10 with the district president in the chair. District president, T. J. Booker, chosen to preside and chose Brother Gamet to assist. Officers reported. Reports of branch president were read. Missionaries reported. Branch reports, Escatawpa, 200; Vancleave, 184; Mobile, 129; Bay Minette, 137. Motion carried that we pay for the district record recently sent out by the Department of Statistics. On recommendation of Escatawpa Branch, D. W. Sherman was ordained to the office of elder. District superintendent of Sunday schools reported. The reunion committee reported and was continued. Officers elected: President, Levi Gamet, who chose as associates, Jason Booker and J. W. Hancock. Secretary-treasurer, Edna Cochran. Bishop's agent's report was read and referred to auditing committee. Preaching Saturday night by Alma Booker. Sunday school and prayer meeting Sunday morning, round table discussion in the afternoon. Preaching at night by A. G. Miller. Adjourned to meet at Mobile at the call of district president. Edna Cochran, secretary, Route A, Box 39, Ocean Springs, Mississippi.

WESTERN MAINE.—At Vinal Haven, August 20 and 21. Brother A. E. Phillips, associated with the district presidency, was in charge. Ministerial reports were read. It was moved and carried that the conference proceed to organize the district Sunday school department. Officers chosen were: N. M. Wilson, superintendent; Henry Eaton, assistant superintendent; George Wilson, secretary; Gertrude Eaton, treasurer; Lura Black, member library board. Next conference at Little Deer Isle in November. L. J. Eaton, clerk.

Our Departed Ones

PARKER.—Reuben William and Ruby Elizabeth, twin children of Walter S. and Ella Parker, were born at Lamoni, Iowa, Ruby, December 16, 1920, Reuben, December 17, 1920; passed from this life, Reuben, September 27, 1921, aged 9 months, 10 days, Ruby, September 29, 1921, aged 9 months, 13 days. These children were ill some days. All efforts to call them back to health being of no avail, they passed to the brighter shores of the world beyond. Services were from the Saints' church, Saturday afternoon, at 2.30, in charge of Peter Muceus, sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

MIFFLIN.—Annie Elizabeth Miffin was born December 23, 1871, at Dawn Mills, Ontario. Died September 27, at Windsor, Ontario. Baptized June 12, 1894; married Minnis Miffin March 4, 1890. Leaves husband, three sons, two daughters, five grandchildren, and a host of relatives and friends. She was a faithful Saint, a devoted mother, kind and helpful to everyone. Funeral services at Saints' church, in charge of Leslie Brown; sermon by John Shields; interment in Windsor Grove Cemetery.

STOVER.—Leonard Stover was born June 10, 1865, at Dorchester, Elgin County, Ontario. Married Carrie Henderson, July 4, 1885, at Flint, Michigan. Baptized February 20, 1888. Held successively offices of priest, elder, high priest, and acted as member of Independence Stake High Council. Survived by wife, two sons, a daughter, a sister, a half-sister, and three grandchildren. Died at Independence Sanitarium October 6, 1921. Funeral from Stone Church; sermon by James F. Keir, assisted by Arthur H. Mills. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HUTCHINGS.—Winnie Frances Cowhick was born in Page County, Iowa, April 23, 1861. Married Doris A. Hutchings, February 22, 1884. Baptized in September, 1891, and lived a consistent Christian life. Was much given to hospitality. Leaves besides husband, two brothers, a goodly number of relatives, and a host of friends. Her husband is an invalid, for a time was in the missionary field and for a number of years has been president of the Little Sioux, Iowa, Branch. Before her death, after a week of severe illness, they both made a complete consecration of their property to the church. Funeral service at Little Sioux; sermon by Sidney Pitt, sr.; Joseph Lane in charge.

badly, if he could walk at all, that he was not here to fill his appointment. And when the dread scourge of influenza passed through here and every house was a pest house, he gave no thought to himself, but whenever anyone needed help he was ready to respond. With that sort of coinage he bought the friendship of the Saints in Lamoni.

I am glad to say we came to understand each other. I pre-friend. I am glad he lived long enough and I lived long enough to become friends. There was a time when we did not understand each other. I came here to take charge of the SAINTS' HERALD as editor, and those were tense times in the church; we did not see some things alike, at least we thought we didn't, and we looked at each other with critical eyes. I did not understand him and he did not understand me, but I am glad to say we came to understand each other. I presume our differences were more in differences of understanding than on any fundamental principle. I believe that is the cause of the differences between brethren nine times out of ten; I mean brethren, honest brethren. They differ because they do not understand where the other man stands, but I am glad to say there came a time when we understood each other pretty well, and I came to count him as one of my warmest friends, and could depend on his support and he on mine.

I gave him not only my respect, but my love. There is a difference, you know. Some people we love when we can no longer respect them, and some people we respect and honor when we cannot love them; they are too distant and formal and cold. But I gave to this man both respect and love, and I am glad to have had his friendship and the tokens of his esteem on various occasions. And one thing I am grateful for this afternoon (you will pardon the personal mention); sometimes we are inclined to reserve our flowers until we come to lay them on the casket, and I am glad that I did not leave until too late any statement of appreciation of this man's worth, but twice during recent months I wrote him and attempted to give him an expression of my feelings.

Willing to Serve Anywhere

The first time was when during the past winter in his weekly letter to the Presidency he had lamented the fact that he could not travel and preach so continuously as he used to do, but he went on to tell how he was conducting a Sunday school class, the themes, and his outline, and the work he was trying to do in Lamoni in various ways. I wrote to him and told him that I was glad to see him feeling as he did. You know some men when they begin to grow old and break in health and cannot occupy as broad a field as they used to occupy, become discouraged and bitter, and I told him how gratified I was that when the time came when he could not go so far as he used to, he looked around and right at his door found work to do, and did it, and was happy in it, and made others happy. The second time was shortly after the revival services that were held here. I was preaching in this room to the young people, and the room was packed every evening—this of course was considered the big event. Some one was needed to go downstairs in the basement and preach to the overflow service, and Brother Wight was asked to do it. Some men would have considered themselves insulted and would not have gone. A year ago during General Conference I asked one of the elders to preach in one of the smaller branches in Independence and he said, "No; if I preach at all I want to preach to an audience that is worth my time." But when they wanted Brother Wight to preach in the overflow services down stairs he went down humbly and cheerfully and happily. The last time I saw him, the last Sunday night of the meetings, he stood here by the platform after the close of the meeting, and commented on the fact that the janitor who went from one meeting to the other reported that we were at one moment in both rooms presenting identical arguments. So after I had gone back to Independence I wrote to Brother Wight and told him how much I appreciated the example he had set, and hoped when the time came I would be able to respond with equal grace, because I did appreciate the example of humility and cheerfulness he had set.

Now let us analyze the text for a moment. The first verse you might almost consider was in the nature of an admonition to our departed brother, "Endure affliction." Well, he had afflictions to bear; the death of his wife was a sad affliction; his physical infirmity was another. "Do the work of an evangelist." That was his work. "Make full proof of thy ministry." Up to the very day when he was stricken down he was engaged in the Master's service, rendering to the last moment proof of his ministry, and full proof.

Then Paul goes on to say in language we might attribute to our brother, "I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight." That is a figure of speech, of course; we talk about the Christian warfare, but it is a very significant figure; it is a fight and a man who lives as long as our brother lived passes through at least three phases of that conflict. He had his early youth and manhood, when he was a young man, full-blooded and passionate, and all the allurements of the world, of the flesh, and the Devil appealed to him. These sons of his are young; they may think, "Once father was as I am; every temptation that comes to me, came to him; but he kept himself clean and straight and honorable." Then there came the period of full manhood, which brings with it its struggles and responsibilities and duties, and its burdens as a citizen of the state and the community.

We have already commented on the work he did in the church, and as a citizen of the family he discharged his duty. At a time in the history of the world when the old marriage ideal was losing its hold on humanity, when the home was disintegrating and loose morals were coming in, and the old strict ideas of marriage were giving way, this man held to the highest ideals of morality in family life. He made his covenant with his wife and he kept it. It never could be said of him that he dealt treacherously with the wife of his youth. Some one may say, as they sometimes do, that was "natural for him." If a man does right, people are ready to say it was easy for him to do it. I tell you all men are made after very much the same pattern, and every man is able to conform to the requirements of Jesus Christ if he will. On the other hand every man has his temptations. You may not know about them; he doesn't tell about them. This brother does not tell us. The temptations that came to him are locked in his silent breast; but every missionary who has traveled very extensively, especially if he was at all attractive, or an eloquent preacher, has had his opportunities and temptations, and he can tell of the homes that he might have defamed if he would, but would not. It never was necessary for anyone to follow the trail of John W. Wight and settle difficulties. No reports came in that he had violated the trust of any man who had taken him into his home. He kept the estate of manhood and was true to the covenant he had made as a husband.

A Rich Legacy Left

He was true also as a father. These young men may well ponder on the spiritual inheritance that comes to them from their father. He did not leave very much in the way of property, I am told; I am quite sure he did not, but he left them something else that is worth more than anything he could have conveyed to them by deed or by will, and that is his spiritual inheritance that comes to them under the name of Wight. I remember how, when I was a boy coming into the later years of my boyhood life and into touch with the church, there was one thing that impressed me. When I went into a community of Saints and mentioned that I was a son of David H. Smith, immediately I had friends. My father did not leave me anything except that; and I do appreciate the value of a good name and good friends. These young men for many years to come, no matter where they go in the world where there is a little branch of Saints and the people learn they are sons of John W. Wight, will have friends. He left them friends. He left them a good name. He left them a trust to keep, and I do not need to plead with them this afternoon to keep that trust. There is one here who pleads with them. Brother Wight never preached a more powerful sermon than he preaches to his sons to-day. A good father leaves the best argument to the last; he never utters it, but the silent lips plead, and from his whole life there goes out an appeal more powerful than he ever voiced, to his sons, to live in harmony with the inheritance he left for them.

"I have kept the faith." There is no question that this brother kept the faith. But there are two ways in which we may use that figure of speech. We may use it simply as applying to being sound in doctrine. He was one of the best preachers of the fundamental principles we have ever had. He loved to preach them, and made them plain. He was sound in his doctrinal utterances. He did not deal very much in the line of speculation. He may have had some hobbies to ride—most of us have—but he did not allow them to interfere with his ministry to any extent, but preached the gospel of Jesus Christ, so that so far as his preaching is concerned it might not be too much to use concerning him the statement found in the gospel according to Saint John, "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe." (John 1: 6, 7.)

But there is an infinitely greater way in which we may keep the faith, the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ are simply a means to an end, and that is the development of the Christian character, as the statement is made in the Ephesian letter, a statement of the objective of this gospel teaching, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." (Ephesians 4: 13-15.)

A Good Example to the End

There is one way to keep the faith, and that is in precept—teaching. There is another way in which to keep the faith, and that is in practice—to live it. John said of Jesus Christ, "The word becomes flesh and dwelt among men, full of grace and truth." The word is the gospel, the flesh was Jesus Christ in person. Everything he taught he lived in his life, and so we may say that this brother in that sense kept the faith. He not only taught people, but he endeavored to live his life in harmony with the things he taught.

"I have finished my course, the time of my departure is at hand, I am about to be offered up." His sons assure me that Brother Wight had reached a time when he was willing to go. He thought his work was done. The things he wanted to accomplish he had accomplished. Matters he wished to straighten up he had straightened up, and the time had come when he was ready to go. His course was finished. There is one thing we may congratulate ourselves on concerning him, and that is, whatever trials he endured, there was one trial he missed, that was the trial of enforced idleness. He was blessed with the privilege of continuing work up until almost the very last day. I think that was a great blessing. It is an awful thing to have been active and then reach a stage where we can no longer engage in the work of God; it is an awful thing unless God gives grace to bear it. The most unhappy year I ever spent was the year I could not work. Brother Wight was blessed with the ability, with sufficient strength, at least by exercising a determined spirit, to keep himself busy and therefore happy until the last moment. And there was one thing concerning his later years that was very pleasing. With advancing years and declining health he had to give over many of his activities. He was released from the Quorum of Twelve, and many of the things which he used to do he could no longer do, yet he avoided becoming embittered or pessimistic or disappointed. He did not strike on that rock. In fact, I have heard a number of people comment on the fact that his last years were his very best and most full of spiritual power and constructiveness and real progressive forward looking. In that I think he set all of us a very good example.

Then the text closes with the statement that "henceforth there is reserved for me a crown of righteousness," and it occurs to me right here that the significance of the crown of righteousness is that it can be placed only on the head of a righteous man. The virtue is not on the crown; the significance is not in the crown; the significance is that it is placed on the head of a righteous man. No process of ceremonial cleansing alone can ever fit an individual to wear that crown; but only by a consistent living in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ can it be obtained.

And then the text goes on to say, "But not for me alone, but for all they that love his appearing." Brother Wight was a social man. It would not give him any degree of comfort to think that he by superior attainment had won a great and glorious crown of righteousness that others could not enjoy. He loved his fellow men, and the thing that pleased Paul would please him. Paul said, "This crown is not for me alone; but for all those who love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Let us take home the lesson to our hearts from this occasion. We honor ourselves when we honor an honorable man, and this afternoon we are certainly pleased that in spite of the sting of parting in the hearts of these people, we can say what we have said about this departed brother. I have come in this door to attend numerous funerals. I have come here to speak when every fiber of my being rebelled against that which had taken some one from our midst, as when some young mother had been taken and had left her motherless child and I could see no reason or explanation. I could only say, "It seems to me unwise and unjust, but I must trust God who is always wise and always just." But to-day we come here following one who lived a long and useful and honorable life, and has given the community stalwart sons to bear his name and carry on his work.

His work is finished, we do not need to weep for him; but we say Godspeed to his spirit, and we commend it to the great, just, and loving God who received it into the paradise of the just.

Correction

In the issue of October 11, in the article on "Two kinds of tithing," by Bishop B. R. McGuire, page 967, near the bottom of the second column a statement is made: "If it is otherwise he has paid no more than his surplus." The word "no" was inserted through a typographical error.

Stewardship would make for creative energy, because it would take men out of positions of mere machines and make of them directors of industry, managers, and owners.—C. A. Smurthwaite.

The Law of the Lord Is Perfect

Laying on of Hands

The reason for the laying on of hands is clearly indicated in the very nature of man. It signifies a blessing, and hence is appropriate for the blessing of children. If we utter the words, "Bless you, my child," there is felt a tendency at once to extend both hands with the palms downward.

The hand is the symbol of power and authority to all important documents—"In witness whereof we set our hand as well as to fix our seal." In Habakkuk 3: 3, 4 we read, "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from Mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power." The marginal reading gives it "bright beams out of his side," but horns are also a symbol of power. It is so, not only in a biblical sense, but in a human sense as well. Hence there is the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick, for the blessing of children, for confirmation, and for ordination. Ordination is a delegation of power and authority. Confirmation is a form of blessing given by one having authority from God.

The particular reference to the healing of the sick has been discussed at greater length in the HERALD for September 13.

The reasons are written deep in the nature of man that faith makes for healing. We recall one of our ministers once saying that no man knew how the sick were healed or knew anything about it; and he was glad that they did not, as otherwise men would take and use it for the sake of money. But, alas, the principle in man that makes for healing is understood by men and has been and is being used for money. Yet, as we have previously stated, of all methods of healing, that by the Spirit of God is best by far, because with the healing there comes the cleansing power of the Spirit of God. "If he have committed any sins they shall have been forgiven him." The power of faith and the necessity in man for faith, if he is to be healed, can readily be recognized.

Thus we see their high manifestation. In other words, this declaration is not simply a command and promise, but is also a declaration of the law governing the nature of man.

In another editorial soon to be published we will discuss some of the reasons why we are required to forgive one another; that the reason is not alone for the sake of others, but for our own good as well.

All of these various principles of the gospel are thus laid deep in the nature of man. All that our heavenly Father asks of us, as rapidly as we can understand we find is founded upon reason. They are not arbitrary commands but are intelligent direction for our right living in order that we may live in the fullest sense of the term and receive the greatest joy. They are, indeed, the pointing out of the best methods, for the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul.

And we find, as we take up these principles one by one, that, as we grow and are able to understand here a little and there a little, that the goodness and wisdom of God are manifested in every principle and ordinance of the gospel, and we are given courage to believe that that which is yet dark, that which we cannot understand, will yet be made plain, and that it will be so as soon as we are capable of appreciating and understanding the great principles underlying.

Then we come to the conviction of the Apostle Paul that our heavenly Father does not either cause or permit needless suffering, but that he makes our very pain to praise him; that there is a purpose back of it all, and "that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

S. A. BURGESS.

Subjects Being Discussed

Employee Representation

Employee representation is declared to be a great success in an article in The Outlook for August 31. Wherever fully and confidently tried, it has proved a success, according to the write-up.

There are many different forms of shop representation, according to the nature of the industry. As a result of a survey, it is found that seventy per cent of all disputes brought to the conference table were settled wholly as requested by the workmen, twenty-eight per cent by satisfactory compromise, and only two per cent of the cases where the workmen's contention was rejected, and in those cases they were satisfied with the findings. Of course, it must be remembered that most of these cases have arisen from complaint of conditions by the working men.

Employee representation means that they have full right of control, not simply an opportunity for suggestion. The workmen are frankly advised as to profit and loss. They are allowed access to the books with any necessary explanation. The workmen thus know that they receive, without striking, all that they are justly entitled to, and the management secures something heretofore greatly needed, that is, whole-hearted cooperation. As a result, they have found that practically all men are both honest and reasonable and ready to try to meet on a fair basis. Over six hundred different concerns are now employing this method satisfactorily.

One of the latest to adopt this plan is the Pennsylvania Railroad, which is, in fact, the first railroad to attempt it; but they also pronounce it a marked success and as the "most four square, democratic institution in American industry."

Good Response to Sanitarium Call

The management of the Independence Sanitarium report a gratifying response to their request for donations to the institution. Almost every day something comes in to supply the needs of the linen department, for which those in charge are duly grateful.

Worthy of Praise

We are pleased to publish in this issue the sermon by Brother Elbert A. Smith at the funeral of Elder John W. Wight. We requested this sermon for publication in our columns at the time, but through a misunderstanding it has just come to our hands. In reading this sermon for our columns we were struck again and again with the fact that what might seem to be praise was so fully deserved by Brother Wight. His willingness to serve wherever he could was noteworthy to the very end of his life, and he made many new friends in the past few years to add to the many that he had made in his missionary work in the years now long past.

Church News

College Day in Zion was a beautiful October day, and in each church there were appropriate exercises and collections taken. The speaker at the Stone Church was Frederick M. Smith. In the evening at the same place the speaker was Walter W. Smith, on "The meaning of revelation."

Lamoni had a college program for the entire day, the morning service having as a principal feature an address on "The value of education and its relation to the Christian College," by J. Vincent Gray, the local minister for the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the evening there was a cosmopolitan program, including numbers by our Australian brethren, and English sextet, Hawaiian music by a Chinese, and an address

(Continued on page 1006.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Signs of the Times

By R. W. Farrell

Decadent nations and peoples are found to worship man and man-made creeds. "Fear God and give glory to him."

"A boy of twelve with a face of sixty was carrying a six-month-old infant, who was wrapped in a filthy bundle of furs. He deposited the baby under a freight car, crawled after him and drew from his pocket five fish heads, which he chewed ravenously and then, bringing the baby's lips to his, transferred the sticky white paste of half-masticated fish scales and dry bones to the infant's mouth, the same as a mother bird feeds her young."—Newspaper clipping on Russia's present famine.

The horror of it! But why should we not gaze on the picture and get its lesson; for certainly the awful happenings of the times have some teaching for us. History is like a human being. It speaks to us. No one can read Henry Buckle's History of Civilization in England without feeling that there is a fascinating mystery which surrounds the relation of causes and effects. Russia is starving to-day because some terrible thing has happened in the past. It is more than the change in season, for crops did not fail throughout Europe, and I venture to say that there is enough foodstuff scattered over that country to feed all its inhabitants, if it were properly distributed. It always has been so, at least in modern times, that supplies were sufficient to save had the world had Josephs enough to invite the hungry, or to send life to them.

Years ago, when there were "only three grains of corn" in the hands of starving Ireland, England had plenty and to spare. The pages of history are bursting with accounts of this kind. And America can hardly do other than place its hand on its mouth and cry "unclean"; for are not thousands to-day dying in the south because of insufficient food? Children there are existing on "pork fat, corn bread and molasses," branded with pellagra death mark, while over all this fair land millions are reveling in luxuries. Something is wrong somewhere. So back of Russia's starving is something wrong. She is no exception; every nation is waiting its fate: "the wages of sin is death." As to the explanation of the innocent suffering with the guilty, we must figure it out for ourselves; the writer is satisfied with the solution given to him years ago when he frequently met the query, "How can there be a just God when children are allowed to suffer?"

In the light of recent history, the following statement of fact will interest. In the New York public library is an original copy of The Russian Catechism With Explanatory Notes by Authority. It is printed in English by command of the Czar of Russia. On its first page we read the following notice:

"The present catechism is the production of several eminent Russian theologians, acting under the Emperor's direction. . . . This new Imperial Catechism is intended expressly, though not exclusively, for the use of the schools and churches in those provinces once denominated Poland, in order that sound and efficient principles of loyalty and religion may be deeply instilled into the mind of the subject, from his earliest period of childhood."

"Question III.—What duties doth religion teach us, the humble subjects of his majesty, the Emperor of Russia, to practice toward him?"

"Answer.—Worship, obedience, fidelity, the payment of taxes, service, love, and prayer.

"Question V.—What kind of obedience do we owe him?"

"Answer.—An entire, passive, and unbounded obedience, in every point of view.

"Question XVII.—What are the supernatural revealed motives for this worship?"

"Answer.—The supernatural revealed motives are, that the Emperor is the Vicegerent and Minister of God, to execute the divine commands, and consequently, disobedience to the Emperor is identified with disobedience to God himself. That God will reward us, in the world to come, for the worship and obedience we render the Emperor; and punish us severely to all eternity, should we disobey and neglect to worship him. . . . Such is the doctrine of the church, confirmed by practice, as to the worship and fidelity due to the Omnipotent Emperor of Russia, the Minister and Vicegerent of God.

"It only remains for us to add a Form of Prayer, which is just about to be circulated through all that part of His Imperial Majesty's dominions, which was once denominated 'Poland' and to be adopted in all the churches.

General Supplication

"Oh God, the Emperor of Russia; have mercy upon us miserable sinners!

"Oh God, the Imperial unintelligibly-coequal Partner (of the Other One) have mercy upon us miserable sinners. . . . Spare us, dread King. . . . We sinners do beseech thee, to hear us, O Emperor, and that it may please thee to rule and govern thy Church Universal in the right way.

"Oh God, merciful Emperor, that despiseth not altogether the sighs and groans of a contrite heart—even a subject . . . assist our prayers that we make before thee . . . that we, thy vassals, being at length thoroughly prostrated in understanding and crushed in hope, may evermore give thanks unto thee in thy holy church, through the salutary fear of massacre, and of the mines of Siberia.

"Glory be to the Emperor, and to the God, and to the Autocrate. . . . The Grace of our Lord, the Emperor, and the love of the Autocrate, and the fellowship of pure subserviency be with us all, evermore. Amen!"

Is it possible! The catechism reads like the recorded ravings of a maniac. And was not the Czar of Russia power-mad? Rome, in her "palmy days, ere the mightiest Julius fell," never blasphemed God more. And the fate of the blasphemer, who can read the account of the death of the Czar of Russia and his family and not think of the vassals who, cowed by the sword, called him God?

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment has come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water."—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Our Ideal

Our ideal is the mutual growth of the individuals of society to the maximum in ideals, motives, purposes, and conduct towards a full fellowship of mankind, in which the results of each may be mutually shared by all in determining the direction of future growth towards an ever fuller fellowship, the bounds of which are not open to our vision, and towards which we cannot with promise and faith work, except through a common consciousness of the fatherhood and fellowship of God, an expression of whom in the least terms may be given as the purpose, supplying our machinery and dynamics towards this unseen end.—A. M. Carmichael, General Sunday School Superintendent, in thesis at Columbia University, 1921.

The Virtue of the Gospel

Excerpt from a sermon preached at Fulton, Iowa, by Elder Clarence Heide.

Scriptural reading, Alma 16: 82 and Luke 6: 19.

"As the preaching of the word had had a greater tendency to lead the people to do that which was just—"

Why does it? Because it brings to our mind the things of God—his goodness, his mercy, all his loving attributes. It tells of the condition under which men lived and labored centuries ago, the ideal conditions they attained, their rise and fall during the different dispensations. It tells of their suffering during the persecutions, it tells of the apostasy and the coming forth of the gospel in the last days; it tells of the coming of Christ to a people prepared for him, of the judgment and the new and eternal home to be enjoyed by the just. Why wouldn't it have a tendency to lead people to do that which is just?

"More powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword or anything else, which had happened unto them." What is the effect of the sword, or in other words, war? Does it have a tendency to lead one to do that which is just, or is it the reverse? Did the World War have a tendency in that direction? If so, why are all the foreign nations, as well as our own, preparing for greater strife, greater power? Or is it just for protection? Why aren't the ideals for which we fought being carried out? Does a war, its preparation and the carrying out of that preparation have that "powerful effect" upon the minds of men, or will it take something greater—a better program—to have the desired effect? After war, pestilence, famine, etc., it still remains for the word of God to fill the ache in the heart and mind.

"Therefore Alma thought it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the word of God." Virtue is efficacy and power, or in other words, Alma thought it best to preach the word to them (the Zoramites), have them accept it, let the virtue of that gospel have its perfect work, allow that virtue to be a living reality in their lives. Alma and those who went with him on that mission had first put the gospel to an acid test, knowing from experience that there was something in it that would have a powerful effect on human beings once it was allowed to fill its mission. So they went down to the Zoramites in the power of Nephi's God, for the express purpose to be of service to humanity.

"And the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and he healed them all."—Luke 6: 19. Again we see demonstrated that virtue is power. The multitudes went out to him with their sick and afflicted and deformities. Why? Because of that great virtue which they knew was resident within him, it being a part of that great mission he came to fulfill. To certain of his disciples he gave like power and authority, that they too might help suffering humanity, that they too might try the "virtue of the word of God" upon the people.

Shall we try the virtue of the gospel in our lives? If we do, will our neighbors see any change in us? Will we ourselves see any difference in ourselves? What will it do for us? "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation," or in other words, the power of God's gospel, given to man, is the life or virtue that will help us, if we will it so, to build our spiritual structures on the foundation laid by Christ. If we do this we will be the means of assisting God as were Alma and his brethren. So let us put it to an actual test and thereby prove to the world again that the preaching of the word has a more powerful effect on the minds of men than the sword or anything else.

Our Mission in Life

By B. J. Stevenson

"There is nothing we can give that is more acceptable than our reasonable service."

A lawyer asked Jesus which was the greatest commandment in the law. "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We have all given some thought as to our life in the future, all desiring to meet our Savior when we have finished this stage of action. We all recognize the fact that we will have to love God, keep his commandments, live honest and pure lives, if we become joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

It is not hard for us to believe that the Bible is true, but it is hard for us to keep its teachings. We have the promise that if we will seek our heavenly Father in prayer, nothing wavering, he will reward us openly. Now to my mind, he does not mean just those who have entered the waters of baptism, but to all those who diligently seek him. How many of us before we go to spend an hour in the study of the Lord's ways, ask in prayer, no matter what position we are in, that we might more fully understand the ways of Almighty God and feel willing to say, "Thy will be done and not mine." Ah, he who knows the power of prayer, often wishes to be there.

The good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep. Jesus has given his life and gone to the right hand of God. He has sent as our guide, the Holy Spirit, which will guide us into all truth if we will let it guide us.

We must beware lest we be led astray, as the Devil is very cunning. He has the power to appear as an angel of light. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." These are Christ's words, the words of one who actually put into practice what he taught.

We may not like the way our fellow men treat us, but we must not mistreat them. Every man was once a child, a babe if you please, pure in the sight of God. His evil ways are what we must discourage. Help him to overcome that he might be a joint heir.

Christ said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." He also said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, you cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." Who of us have noticed two babies play together? They will have their little difficulties, but as soon as the tears are dried away they are ready to start anew. We who have fully developed brains ought never to come to blows. How grand it will be when we can all be willing to do unto others as we would have others do unto us. In all of Christ's life, in all his trials and persecutions he never struck back with a resentful word or with physical strength. We may not strike back with words or with physical strength, but our actions may be our weapons.

We should begin in our own lives, casting the mote out of our own eye first. Every branch in me that bears not fruit, he takes away, and every branch that bears fruit he purges it that it may bring forth more fruit. We will take a tree for instance: it has a number of branches, some of which will bear no fruit. We trim them off and spend our time taking care of the branches that bring forth fruit. So it is with our heavenly Father; he works with those who will work with him. Now there are different ways that we can work for him. We should first enter the waters of baptism if we expect

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A TITHING STORY

A story based on the tithing system of the Methodist Church.

[The Christian world to-day is talking about stewardships and tithes. This is true of sectarian churches as well as of our own, even though we may claim the honor of being the first so to discuss it.

The Methodist Church is making a special effort to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the Methodist Missions. It is a call, not only to the repentant, but also is for a million tithers in Methodism.

Pursuant to this slogan, they have printed several short pamphlets, one of which follows. It presents a quite logical argument in favor of a definite budget and definite planning for everyone who professes to be a follower of the lowly Nazarene to pay an adequate amount to the support of his work.—EDITORS.]

"Thanksgiving Ann," by Kate W. Hamilton

"'Thanksgivin' an'," sang the old woman as she sat in the doorway fanning her face with her colored apron. It was a dark face surmounted by a turban, and wearing just now, a look of troubled thoughtfulness not quite in accordance with her name—a name oddly acquired from the old church anthem that she habitually sang somewhat on this wise—

"'Thanksgivin' an'—"

Johnny, don't play dar in de water, chile!

'Thanksgivin' an'—"

Run away now, Susie, dearie!

'Thanksgivin' an'—"

Here's some gingerbread for him!

'Thanksgivin' an' de voice of melody.'"

You laugh! But looking after all these little things was to work to the full capacity of ourselves for our God, but it is possible for one to do more who has not entered the waters of baptism than one who has and does not fulfill his calling. The question should be, What is my mission in life?

In Christ's Sermon on the Mount, he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." We should try to establish God's kingdom in our own souls first, but when we have the opportunity to do so we should not be afraid to impart to others. When we study our Sunday school lesson we are establishing that much of God's law in our souls, no matter if it is a beginner's lesson. Some of us might have a desire to be a Sunday school superintendent, and because we could not be we would not accept some lower office. Suppose we should all have that desire, could we have a Sunday school? One office is just as important as another and we should help each other in them.

You do not know the anxious moments your superintendent has spent for the Sunday school and the load he has had to carry, but I question if you have all extended a helping hand at all times. One may say, "When I have become good enough, I will lend a hand." You can't give our Lord money, a meal of victuals, a car ride, a watermelon, a gold ring, a piano, an automobile, or an airship. No, he has all that is necessary for his comfort. There is nothing we can give that is more acceptable than our reasonable service. How grand it will be when we all are willing to say, "What can I do to help establish righteousness and work to that end?"

My prayer is that we may all be found with a sharpened sickle as the grain ripens that we might be ready to reap.

her work, her duty; and she spent the intervals in singing praise.

How many of us make better use of our spare moments?

So the children called her Thanksgiving Ann; her other name was forgotten, and Thanksgiving Ann she would be now to the end of her days. How many these days had already been, no one knew. She had lived with Mr. and Mrs. Allyn for years, whether as mistress or servant of the establishment was hardly evident; they only knew her services were invaluable. She had taken a grandmotherly guardianship of all the children, and had a voice in most matters that concerned the father and mother, while in the culinary department she reigned supreme.

The early breakfast was over. She had bestowed unusual care upon it, because an agent of the Bible Society, visiting some of the country places for contributions, was to partake of it with them. But while she was busy with a fine batch of delicate waffles, the gentleman had pleaded an appointment, and taking hasty leave of his host and hostess, had departed unobserved from the kitchen window; and Thanksgiving Ann's "Bible money" was still in her pocket.

"Didn't ask me, nor give me no chance. Just 's if, 'cause a pusson's old an' colored, dey didn't owe de Lord nuffin; an' wouldn't pay if dey did," she murmured, when the state of the case became known.

However, Silas, long-limbed, untiring, and shrewd, who regarded the old woman with a curious mixture of patronage and veneration, had volunteered to run after the vanished guest, and "catch him if he was anything this side of Chainy." And even while Thanksgiving sat in the doorway, the messenger returned, apparently unwearied in his chase.

"Wa-ll, I came up with him—told ye I would give him the three dollars. He seemed kind o' flustered to have missed such a nugget; and he said 'twas a ginerous jonation, equal to your master's, which proves," said Silas, shutting one eye, and appearing to survey the subject meditatively with the other, "that some folks can do as much good just offhand as some other folks can with no end of pinchin' an' screwin' beforehand."

"Think it proves dat folks dat don't have no great 'mount can do as much in a good cause by thinkin' 'bout it a little aforehand, as other folks will dat has more, and puts der hands in der pockets when de time comes. I believe in systematics 'bout such things, I does," and with an energetic bob of her head, by way of emphasizing her words, old Thanksgiving walked into the house.

"'Thanksgivin' an' de voice of melody,'"

she began in her high, weird voice; but the words died on her lips—her heart was too burdened to sing.

"Only three dollars ou'n all her 'bundance!" she murmured to herself. "Well, mebbly I oughtn't to judge; but then I don't judge, I knows. Course I knows when I'se here all de time, and sees de good clo'es an' de carr'age, an' de music, an' de fine times—folks, an' hosses, an' tables all provided for, an' de Lord of Glory lef' to take what happen when de time comes, an' no prep'ration at all! Sure 'nough, he sen' Bibles to his heathen if dey don't give a cent, but den dey're pinchin' an' starvin' der own dear souls. Well—'taint my soul! but I loves 'em, an' dey're missin' a great blessin'."

Those friends, so beloved, paid little attention to the old woman's opinion upon what she called "systematics in givin'."

"The idea of counting up one's income, and setting aside a fixed portion of it for charity, and then calling only what remained one's own, makes our religion seem arbitrary and exacting; it is like a tax," said Mrs. Allyn, one day; "and I think such a view of it ought by all means to be avoided. I like to give freely and gladly of what I have when the time comes."

"If ye ain't give so freely an' gladly for Miss Susie's new necklaces an' yer own new dresses dat ye don't have much when de time comes," interposed Thanksgiving Ann.

"I think one gives with a more free and generous feeling in that way," pursued the lady, without seeming to heed the interruption. "Money laid aside beforehand has only a sense of duty and not much feeling about it; besides, what difference can it make so long as one does give what they can when there is a call?"

"I wouldn't like to be provided for dat way," declared Thanksgiving. "Was once, when I was a slave, 'fore I was de Lord's free woman. Ye see, I was a young no-'count gal, not worf thinkin' much 'bout; so my ole massa he lef' me to take what happened when de time come. An' sometimes I happened to get a dress, an' sometimes a pair of ole shoes! an' sometimes I didn't happen to get nuffin', and den I went barefoot; and dat's jist the way—"

"Why, Thanksgiving, that's not reverent!" exclaimed Mrs. Allyn, shocked at the comparison.

"Jist what I thought, didn't treat me with no kind of reverence," answered Thanksgiving.

"Well, to go back to the original subject, all these things are mere matters of opinion. One person likes one way best; and another person another," said the lady smilingly, as she walked from the room.

"Pears to me it's a matter of which way de Massa likes best," observed the old woman settling her turban. But there was no one to hear her comment, and affairs followed their accustomed routine. Meanwhile, out of her own little store, she carefully laid away one eighth. "Cause if dem old Israefites was to' to give one tenth, I'd like to frow in a little more, for good measure. Talk 'bout its bein' like a tax to put some away for such things. 'Clare! I get studyin' what each dollar mus' do, till I get em' so loadened up wid prayin's an' thinkin's dat I mos' believe dey weigh double when dey does go.

"Good Lamb! de lovin' Lamb!
De Lamb of Calvary!
De Lamb dat was slain, an' lives again,
An' intercedes for me."

And now another call had come.

"Came unfortunately at a time when we were rather short," Mrs. Allyn said, regretfully. "However, we gave all we could," she added. "I hope it will do good, and I wish it were five times as much."

Old Thanksgiving shook her head over that cheerful dismissal of the subject. She shook it many times that morning, and seemed intensely thoughtful, as she moved slowly about her work.

"S'pose I needn't fret 'bout other folks' duty—dat ain't none o' my business; yas 'tis, too, 'cause dey's good to me, an' I loves 'em. 'Tain't like as if dey didn't call darselves His, neither."

Mr. Allyn brought in a basketful of beautiful peaches, the first of the season, and placed them on the table by her side.

"Aren't those fine, Thanksgiving? Let the children have a few, if you think best; but give them to us for dinner."

"Sartin, I'll give you all dar is," she responded, surveying the fruit.

Presently came the pattering of several pairs of small feet; bright eyes espied the basket, and immediately arose the cry:

"Oh, how nice! Thanksgiving Ann, may I have one?"

"And me?"

"And me too?"

"Help yourselves, dearies," answered the old woman, composedly, never turning to see how often, or to what extent her injunction was obeyed, busily sewing on a calico apron. She still sat there, when, near the dinner hour, Mrs. Allyn passed through the kitchen, and, a little surprised at its coolness and quietness at that hour, asked wonderingly:

"What has happened, Thanksgiving? Haven't decided upon a fast, have you?"

"No, honey, thought I'd give you what I happened to have when de time come," said Thanksgiving Ann, coolly, holding up her apron to measure its length.

It seemed a little odd, Mrs. Allyn thought. But then old Thanksgiving needed no oversight; she liked her little surprises now and then, too; and doubtless she had something all planned and in course of preparation; so the lady went her way, more than half expecting an especially tempting board because of her cook's apparent carelessness that day. But when the dinner hour arrived, both master and mistress scanned the table with wide-open eyes of astonishment, so plain and meager were its contents, so unlike any dinner that had ever been served in that house.

"What has happened, my dear?" asked the gentleman, turning to his wife.

"Dat's all de col' meat dar was—sorry I didn't have no more," Thanksgiving said, half apologetically.

"But I sent home a choice roast this morning," began Mr. Allyn, wonderingly; "and you have no potatoes, either—nor vegetables of any kind!"

"Laws, yes! But den a body has to think about it a good while aforehand to get a roast cooked, an' jist the same with taters; an' I thought I'd give what I happened to have when de time come, and I didn't happen to have much of nuffin. 'Clare! I forgot de bread," and trotting away, she returned with a plate of cold corn cake.

"No bread!" murmured Mrs. Allyn.

"No, honey; used it all up for toast dis mornin'. Might have made biscuit or muffins, if I had planned for 'em long enough, but dat kind o' makes a body feel's if dey had to do it, an' I wanted to get dinner for yer all o' my warm feelin's, when de time come."

"When a man has provided bountifully for his household, it seems as if he might expect to enjoy a small share of it himself, even if the preparation does require a little trouble," remarked Mr. Allyn, impatiently; but still too bewildered at such an unprecedented state of affairs to be thoroughly indignant.

"Cur'us how things make a body think o' Bible verses," said Thanksgiving, musingly. "Dar's dat one 'bout 'who giveth us all things richly to enjoy'; an' 'What shall I render to de Lord for all his benefits to'ard me?' Dar! I didn't put on dem peaches."

"Has Thanksgiving suddenly lost her senses?" questioned the gentleman, as the door closed after her.

"I suspect there is a 'method in her madness,'" replied his wife, a faint smile crossing her lips.

The old woman returned with the basket, sadly despoiled of its morning contents; but she composedly bestowed the remainder in a fruit dish.

"Dat's all! De children eat a good many, an' dey was used up one way an' 'nother. I'se sorry dar ain't no more; but I hope y'll 'joy what dar is, an' I wishes 'twas five times as much."

A look of sudden intelligence flashed into Mr. Allyn's eyes; he bit his lip for a moment, and then asked quietly:

"Couldn't you have laid aside some for us, Thanksgiving!"

"Wall, dar now! s'pose I could," said the old servant, relenting at the tone; "b'lieve I will next time. Allers kind o' thought de folks things belonged to had de best right to 'em; but I'd heard givin' whatever happened to be on hand was so much freer an' lovin'er a way o' servin' dem ye love best, dat I thought I'd try it. But it does 'pear's if they fared slim, an' I spects I'll go back to de old plan o' systematics."

"Do you see, George?" questioned his wife, when they were again alone.

"Yes, I see. An object lesson with a vengeance!"

"And if she should be right, and our careless living seem anything like this?" pursued Mrs. Allyn, with a troubled face.

"She is right, Fanny; it doesn't take much argument to show that. We call Christ our King and Master; believe that every blessing we have in this world is his direct gift; and all our hopes for the world to come are in Him. We profess to be not our own, but his; to be journeying towards his royal city; and that his service is our chief business here; and yet, strangely enough, we provide lavishly for our own appareling, entertainment and ease, and apportion nothing for the interests of his kingdom, or the forwarding of his work; but leave that to any chance pence that may happen to be left after all our wants and fancies are gratified. It doesn't seem like faithful or loving service," Mr. Allyn answered, gravely. "I have been thinking in that direction occasionally, lately, but have been too indolent, careless, or selfish to come to a decision and make any change."

There was a long talk over that dinner table—indeed, it did not furnish opportunity for much other employment; and that afternoon the husband and wife together examined into their expenses and income, and set apart a certain portion as sacred unto their Lord—doing it somewhat after Thanksgiving's plan of "good measure." To do this, they found, required the giving up of some needless indulgences—a few accustomed luxuries. But a cause never grows less dear on account of the sacrifice we make for it, and as these two scanned the various fields of labor, in deciding what to bestow here and what there, they awoke to a new appreciation of the magnitude and glory of the work, and a new interest in its success—the beginning of that blessing pronounced upon those who "sow beside all waters."

Mrs. Allyn told Thanksgiving of their new arrangement, and concluded, laughingly, though the tears stood in her eyes:

"Ann, now I suppose you are satisfied?"

"It's 'mazing glad," said Thanksgiving, looking up brightly, "but satisfied—dat's a long, deep word; an' de Bible says it will be when we 'awake in His likeness."

EMPLOYER AND WORKMAN

A real problem concerning employment of members of the church.

The industrial committee were discussing the problem of employment for our out-of-workers.

What seems a simple proposition is really a complicated one.

How are we going to know the need of our employing members and the qualification of our working members to fill the duties required?

Imagine the astonishment of this writer when he heard it stated that our Latter Day Saint employers don't want to employ Latter Day Saint workmen because they don't get satisfaction out of their own people.

If our people will not give satisfactory service to their own, who can hope to get satisfactory service from them?

Perhaps there are faults on both sides. Perhaps the employers expect more from a Latter Day Saint than from others. Come, employers, tell us. This committee wants to know.

Or is it that our people, out of the feeling of fraternal intimacy, take advantage of Latter Day Saint employers as one of the family-like?

This writer has observed that the most successful business ventures of a private nature have been those where father and sons have worked together, and after the father has "gone the way of all flesh," the sons have maintained the solidarity. But if father and sons cannot work together well, it is better for them to separate. A like principle ought to operate in the family of the church; that is to say, it would be better if we could all work together in unity. In fact, that is what is required in the law of the Lord. If we love one another, the only real test of discipleship in Christ, we all would work together in unity. That is the test which the Master himself left with us before his departure for the higher sphere. That is the only way people may know that we are his disciples. If Latter Day Saints have not yet reached that status it is lamentable; and we involuntarily sigh, "How long, O Lord!"

Our people who occupy in the status of employees must learn the principle that it is faithfulness in little things that brings rulership over bigger things. And that it is the intention of our Lord that his people should become rulers, not mere employees.

We say, be faithful to the fullest extent to the duty with which you are intrusted as workmen; but determine that you will employ yourself as quickly as you may, after you have worked up your efficiency in your present relationship to its highest point.—C. A. Smurthwaite, in Kansas City Stake Men's Club Bulletin.

WORLD IN GRIP OF MIGHTY STORM

From a sermon by Doctor John Inzer, of the First Baptist Church, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

The world, the whole world, America and all, is now in the grip of a mighty and relentless storm. It is all brought about because of ungodliness, sin, ignorance, willful lust and love of gain and greedy individuals and nations. We have had race and national jealousy and false pride till jealousy and hate and ignorance have sown to the wind suspicion, doubts, mistrust, misunderstandings, and the whirlwind is turning into a furious storm.

Here and there a few sober up and cast out anchors. But will the anchors hold? Not any of them are important enough to mention when it comes to the seriousness of the present situation. They begin with world values, time terms, and material worths, and try to work up. You must begin with God and eternal soul values, and work down to conditions. Then you can lift up to God men and conditions. So what this whole world needs to-day is a world-wide revival of genuine religion based on pure Christianity.

Superintendent A. Max Carmichael, of the General Sunday School Department, and Floyd M. McDowell, of the General Religio Department and in charge of the Boy Scouts, were in Independence over Sunday the 9th, having had sessions with the leaders of the Women's Department, Temple Builders, and Orioles, the First Presidency, and Presiding Bishop, concerning the coordination of their mutual problems. There is considerable overlapping of the work of these departments and such conferences are necessary to their well-being.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 4—STEWARDSHIPS AND INHERITANCES (CONCLUDED)

Composition of the Order

It is implied in what has already been set forth that the several local organizations are composed (1) of the stewards engaged in managing such productive enterprises as mining, agriculture, manufacture, mercantile, and kindred activities; and (2) of the bishops whose business it is to discharge the executive and judicial functions of the orders. "Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship" means that the organizations are composed of stewards on the one hand. The recognition of the bishopric as the divinely appointed agency to organize and administer the temporal concerns of the brotherhood makes the bishops members of the orders on the other hand. (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1-8; 51: 1-4; 72: 1-4.)

The ministry and the workmen are represented in the affairs of the order and have their interests secured (1) by the terms of the compact and the rights of the bishop to administer, and (2) by the watchcare that is exercised over the concerns of the church and the executive supervision exercised over the bishopric by the general executives of the whole church, all of whom hold office and derive their administrative powers by the voice of the membership at large. So that the whole Christian brotherhood is represented in all the affairs of the church. The social effects of this relationship will be discussed under "The bond of Zion."

The bishopric perform a dual function; they are both administrators and judges. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1-4; 64: 8; 104: 33.) These are at once functions of the "council" of the order (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12); and from this we infer that bishops are intended to compose the councils of the orders.

There are "treasurers" who are adjuncts to the council, and upon whom rests the work of certain detailed administration. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.)

Within a stake or given territory in which a bishopric administers there may be a number of organizations the activities of which are coordinated through the advice and counsel of the bishopric and the action of the members. Bishops administering locally, and who therefore know local conditions and have a personal touch and acquaintance with the individual stewards, are authorized by the article of association to judge immediately the conduct of the individual steward in his relation to the order.

In each stake there is a high council which judges controversies between the bishopric and any steward upon appeal. (Doctrine and Covenants 121: 10; 99: 1.)

The constitution of stakes, though not identical with the constitution of the church in the sense that it embraces all the offices and functions of the general church, provides nevertheless for certain quorums which are identical in structure and function with quorums devoted exclusively to the general work of the church. So that there exists the high council referred to, which is an office for the order though not in the order. It is composed of twelve high priests selected from the membership of the stake because of their integrity and judgment; and it is here that each man has a right to be heard and judged by his compeers.

This council is presided over by the presidency of the stake, composed of three men, who stand as immediate representatives of general church interests in its spiritual aspects within the stake.

Thus there is a natural and effective division of labor or function in the group. Men of business are charged individually with the sole responsibility for the success of any single business unit as a productive enterprise. Men of the ministry are charged (1) with the responsibility for the success of (a) the selection of competent men for the several tasks of management, (b) for the coordination of the general business activities, and (c) for the conservation of resources and their application to successful business undertakings; and (2) for the securing of justice to all. And men of work are charged with the responsibility of qualifying for and of fulfilling some useful position as workmen under the management of the men of business.

This organization is simple in structure; its functions are easily and clearly differentiated; its obligations and powers and rights are clearly defined; its overhead is not burdensome; it is equipped with every office and function essential to its success; it guarantees the interests of each and of all.

Distribution in economics means the division of the total product of business activity between the several factors as rewards for the part they have taken in industry; but in gospel parlance it means the devotion of the net product of business activity to the conservation and promotion of all the concerns of the group considered both in its parts and as a whole.

We have shown that wants must be considered with regard to the order in which they arise, as well as with regard to their relative importance. We have also seen that certain functions cannot take place effectively without certain other functions being discharged at one and the same time. Moreover, it is apparent that the importance of things, measured by gospel standards, is not determined by the amount of money income they promise to yield. The deriving of a money income and the creation of social wealth are two entirely different things; the former may or may not coincide with doing good; the latter is fundamentally an expression of good will. And therefore the effects of these two modes of activity upon the purpose and final outcome of human activity may be entirely different. The building of the auditorium, for which a half million is being raised, instead of yielding a money income, will demand even larger savings in some things in order that it may be maintained. Measured from the standpoint of money income, the auditorium will increase our liabilities and lessen the value of our activities; but measured from the standpoint of the immediate and remote spiritual satisfactions that will come to those who sacrifice for the purpose, as well as the widespread cultural benefits that will grow out of its use, it surely promises to become a very highly prized asset.

Some needs actually take precedence over others in point of time, and some only appear to do so; it depends sometimes upon the viewpoint one takes of life. It might appear that the establishment of economic concerns, which in turn would yield a revenue from which an auditorium may be built, should take precedence over the building of the auditorium. But if we apply the gospel standard, this opinion may be reversed. We must take into account not only our liquid assets, but the general characteristics of our social life as well. It would be quite difficult to find either social or spiritual grounds for maintaining some of our existing institutions and of indulging some of our present habits or customs. We may be forced to the conclusion that it is better from both a physical, a moral, and a spiritual standpoint, to lower the cost of living and to change the standard by the modification of some habits that draw heavily upon resources, in order that an enterprise that unites sympathies and lays the foundation for more effectual effort in all legitimate activities may be promoted.

Certain it is that we cannot both eat our grain and plant it too. We cannot build up common concerns for the common good and at the same time use up the resources needed for this purpose in satisfying some personal and present appetite. No social or unified activity could ever be promoted if each one persisted in going his own private way. And herein lies the wisdom of making distribution an administrative function instead of leaving it to work itself out through the accidents of exchange and the ingenuity or tastes or judgments of each individual person. Brotherhood implies a coming together, a yielding of personal aims to common aims; and it is this principle that underlies the rules of distribution among Christian men.

All agree that all have a common need for food, clothing, and the like. All recognize the importance of a supply of such things as conditions for bodily health and the bearing this supply has upon one's ability to engage in any activity whatsoever. And from such universal sentiments and considerations there arises this rule: "If thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it into my storehouse."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:14. And again: "Inasmuch as they received more than is needful for their necessities and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:2. This rule coincides both with bodily needs and with the law of love. Every man who loves his neighbor will insist that from the products of his labor he shall retain as belonging peculiarly to himself, individually, enough to supply his fundamental needs and wants. The vital processes are of prime importance, and must be so reckoned in distribution. Ordinarily nothing takes precedence over these.

The second activity of importance from the gospel standpoint is the extension of the borders of the church and the building up of those who come into the fold. These are matters in which every Christian disciple has a personal interest. Upon this activity two things depend: First, the administration of the ordinances of the gospel and the establishment of the membership in the faith; and second, the free and effective expression of the "missionary" spirit, the desire that each Christian has to lead others to see the light. And out of such considerations arises the rule of "tithing," the payment of a tenth of the net annual income as a certain fund to insure the prosecution of the work of the ministry. (See Doctrine and Covenants 106:1; 64:5.) This rule serves also to connect up ordinary commodity producing activities with the functions of the sanctuary; business is related to devotions.

Immediate personal wants on both the temporal and the spiritual side having been supplied, we have now the net social income to deal with. This residue is the product of the labors of many men joined together. Man acting independently cannot more than supply his bare necessities. To have a supply of goods more than bare necessities requires that men shall join their labors together in a common effort. It is through this adjustment that capital arises. A knowledge of the facts of cooperation will establish this truth. Industry is not an individual affair, but a social affair; and the net product is a social product.

By a stretch of the imagination stimulated by selfish motives and an intuition to seek justification, one may lead himself to imagine that he is all-sufficient in himself; but his would be a pitiable sufficiency. But if it were not so, and if it were possible (which it is not) to compute the ratio in which each person contributed to the total output with a view to distributing the total product on that basis, it would still be undesirable to do so, both from purely sociological and economic considerations, and from gospel considerations as well. No ethical distribution can be made on this plan, for there is no means of computing such ratios. All attempts at rewarding the several factors of industry each by itself and independently must be inequitable, as well as sociologically foolhardy. It is like spilling the beans upon the ground in order that we may waste our time and effort to gather them together again. And gather them we must if social progress is to be made.

Inasmuch, then, as all who fulfill the commandment, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat," have an interest in the net product of economic activity, which cannot be separated from the like interests of other men, it follows that in justice the net product should be administered for the common good. And from such considerations arises the rule: "All moneys that you receive in your stewardships by improving upon the properties . . . shall be cast into the treasury . . . and let not any man say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12. And then follows the rule of the order providing for the administration of this net product for the promotion of social concerns—concerns in which the labors of many are wrapped up, and in which all have a common interest.

In the same way that individual labors are interwoven, so the labors of each locality are interwoven with the labors of other localities, and a net product arises from this joint activity which in turn should be considered the property of the neighboring organizations, jointly. And it should be administered, as already indicated, by the joint representatives of all the organizations, taken as a whole.

This net product of joint sectional activity should not be confused with what to each local group is "consumption" goods. Individual consumption goods and group consumption goods are two entirely different things, just as individual wealth and social wealth are frequently entirely different. A factor in its relation to the individual is capital goods; but in its relation to the group it is consumption goods. This is just as true as it is that the home in which a family lives, the furniture it uses, and the supplies it consumes are to the family of the nature of consumption goods.

All men together join in consuming what the individual sets aside as capital. It is used up to maintain social life; and it is, from the standpoint of the group, consumption goods. Such goods should, therefore, be held by each separate group individually, just as each individual person is made the individual possessor of the goods that administer immediately to his wants.

Just as each individual, after supplying his personal needs and wants, places the residue in the common treasury of the local membership or organization to become the common property of the group, so each local organization, after its needs and wants are supplied, places in the treasury of the "United Order" the residue which thereby becomes the common property of the whole church. This, in like manner, is to be administered by the representatives of the whole church for the good of the membership taken in its entirety and as a whole.

Through this disposition of wealth, social progress is effected and the rights of all men to an opportunity to labor is secured. In this way the group fulfills one of its chief obligations to the individual, and the obligation to labor which both nature and social necessity imposes upon each individual is made possible of fulfillment. Rights corresponding to obligations are secured to both the individual and the group.

Love can demand nothing less than this: To secure well-being by establishing relations which give rise to well-being. No man should make pretensions to Christian love who does not devote himself actively to the task of securing conditions under which such rights will be made secure.

Business functions are but one of three sets of functions essential to the establishment of the concerns of the kingdom of God. Two other sets are joined with these to make up the whole. One has no immediate or direct bearing upon the production of commodities whatever; nevertheless each and all are as much concerned in one as in the other. Although the duty of managing temporal concerns rests upon one group of men, the duty of managing the affairs of the ministry upon another group, and of labor upon still another, all are workers together with God "for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

In view of these facts there is at least a moral obligation attaching to the temporal stewards of the several organizations, to hold these properties not for their own personal benefit alone, but "for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized." (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1.) And such "benefits" imply, as we have shown, the appropriation of the residual product of joint group activities to the promotion of the general interests of church work. And the "bond and covenant" entered into in the associations of temporal stewards should acknowledge and provide for the fulfillment of this obligation. In effecting these organizations this no doubt will be done.

No doubt the advice and counsel of the general authorities of the whole brotherhood will receive proper consideration by those without whose consent no moneys may be taken from the treasuries of their associations. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.)

All appropriations or offerings for general church work are placed in the general church treasury, and these funds are administered at the direction of the general church authorities. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.) Thus distribution is made to accord with the requirements of the Christian brotherhood, both in its parts and as a whole.

Capitalization

Economic goods are conveniently classified as (1) capital goods and (2) consumption goods. Each in turn have their specie. Capital is the product of past labor set aside and employed to further production. Viewed in any aspect, stewardships are distinctly productive processes, and the form and amount of capital goods needed by any steward are determined by the character and magnitude of his stewardship. A farmer has need of farm land, buildings, equipment, and stock. Under the factory system, the workman has need of a position as workman. This position secures to him the use of capital goods which, under the division of labor, cannot be divided up among men individually; but they are held together and managed under terms and with a view to maintaining conditions under which the individual workman shall have opportunity and be able to engage in production under conditions most favorable to the purposes of cooperative effort.

Ordinarily capital is procured for investment through the medium of contract or of exchange. But if it is got by contract, it is used by extortion; and if it is got by exchange, the holdings of others are diminished; and moreover a social heritage passes into private possession. But both contract and exchange have been operating throughout the years to alienate some men in particular and society in general from a natural and common heritage; so that to-day some men who have produced nothing possess in private right more than is possessed by thousands of toiling fellow beings. But whether more or less, the products of the labors of many men joined together have, through social custom, passed into private possession of men separately and individually. The gospel aims to correct both the custom and the conditions arising therefrom, and accordingly it specifies that each man shall place at the disposal of his fellowmen under specified terms of association such portions of their possessions as men in brotherhood relations would not claim or desire to retain as their own in private right. And as we have already seen, to do this is to draw the line between consumption goods and capital goods; to retain the one in personal right, and to hold the other in stewardship right.

There are several phases to the capitalization of stewardships. First: Surplus private capital is set aside for this purpose. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.) Second: Residual private capital is later consecrated to this same purpose (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9, 19) so that a man comes to be a "steward" over what is now "his own property," but which he comes to hold "by consecration" or under stewardship administration. And third: The rules of right economic relations that should have prevailed among men from the beginning are thereafter observed. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 14; 70: 2; 101: 12.) When the third phase is reached, each steward places all that he acquires that is "more than is needful for his necessities and his wants" into the storehouse, thereby consecrating it to the good of Zion. Thus all men are promoted to a plane of equality—all but individual consumption goods are always the property of the brotherhood and are devoted to promoting its interests, instead of increasing the power of some men to command the products of the labors of others for their own private ends.

In accordance with the principle that the affairs of each group requires to be financed or "capitalized," organizations in the several localities are formed for the purpose of holding properties to meet this need. (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1; 101: 1, 3, 12.) In this way the products of the labors of many, which at the present time are held by other men in private right, comes to be the capital of the whole body of workers whose labors had been joined together in order that a surplus called "capital" might arise and be devoted to further production for the good of all. Through organization these accretions are made available to men individually for productive purposes which aim to create still greater surpluses for mutual benefit. Thus, under the stewardship plan, both the individual and the group come to their common and natural heritage; the products of the past labors of many men become the capital with which their interests are promoted.

Social Control

Social progress is conditioned in social control. And the brotherhood of man implies it. All individual rights and liberties are conditioned in social control. All matters involving the interests of all men in common, but not each man by himself, are matters for social control. Even attendance at school is regulated by social control, and because the mentality of each man is a matter of concern to his fellow men. The same is true of marriage relations, and what not.

But social control does not imply governmental management of railroads or factories or farms or any other separate economic or business enterprise. In fact, social control in its relation to stewardships implies just the opposite; it requires individual management of socially controlled properties.

Under social control men collectively may direct the course of men individually in so far as their activities affect the welfare of the group. And men individually by joint action, but not each by himself, may direct the course of the group to insure the welfare of each individual person. Under the stewardship plan of social control the things which concern men individually and separately are held as private property, and the things which concern the group are held as social possessions. It also fixes the course and controls the movement of things that affect social welfare. It is under the divine plan of social control; that all who aspire to the manhood of Christ find opportunity for the realization of their ideal.

Articles of Agreement

In the opinion of the author, the articles of association for stewardship purpose cover the following items:

First. The Purpose: To acquire, hold, and let properties for management to men individually as stewards, in order to promote the welfare of the members of the associations, their fellow church members, and the whole body of the church when organized.

Second. Only converts to the Christian ideal as set forth by the church and who receive stewardships as specified are to be eligible to membership.

Third. The affairs of the organization to be administered by the officers provided for in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. (To be specified.)

Fourth. All nominations for stewardships to be made by the council of the order and approved by the membership. Appointment to stewardship to give rights of membership automatically.

Fifth. All appeals from decisions of the council of the order to be adjudicated by the courts of the church constituted for that purpose.

Sixth. Obligations of members.

a. To manage successfully the properties intrusted to their care.

b. To render accounts as required by the council.

2. To dispose of earnings in accordance with rules hereafter specified.

d. To cooperate with the officers and with fellow stewards in promoting pleasant and profitable business relations.

e. To forfeit all rights and interests in the order if for any reason membership in the order is terminated.

Seventh. Obligations of the Order.

a. To minister to the needs of the steward in his stewardship in accordance with the rules governing. (To be specified.)

b. To provide the steward with an inheritance as shall be agreed.

c. To observe the following rule governing succession in stewardships:

In case of the death or removal of any steward, or in case of his inability on account of sickness or old age (or the like) to continue the conduct of his stewardship, if there be a remaining member of the family who is eligible to membership and capable of succeeding to the management of the stewardship, he shall have the privilege of succeeding the aforesaid steward in his stewardship on the same terms and by the same processes by which all stewardships are appointed or established.

In case of the death or incapacitation of any steward and the consequent inability of his dependents to properly provide their needs and just wants, the association agrees to minister to their wants to the extent and in the manner provided for in the rules governing as set forth in the book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Eight. Disposition of earnings of stewardships to be made as follows:

a. To supply the just wants and needs of the steward and his dependents.

b. One tenth of the remaining portion to be paid into the general treasury of the church.

c. The balance to be placed in the treasury of the order as agreed upon to become the common property of the order.

Ninth. Benefits to fellow church members. The members of each order to obligate themselves individually and collectively to loan or consecrate from time to time for the benefit of their less fortunate church members, or any like association, or the whole body of the church, such funds or properties held by the association as may be available for such purposes, as implied in article number one. Such properties to be placed at the disposal of the presiding bishopric of the church to be administered in accordance with the laws governing.

Tenth. Some provision for disposition of properties in case of dissolution should be agreed upon.

Such articles of association are required by the law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" and "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so unto them." Such association will issue in increased sympathy because of the identity of interests established; and the service that will be rendered under these rules will issue in increased love of the brethren and the organic sympathy that is characteristic of the Christian brotherhood. This regime will provide conditions favorable to physical, mental, moral, and devotional exercise and development; it will afford opportunity for active participation in rightdoing; it will destroy the "root of all evil," "the plant," and the conditions in which both the root and the plant thrive. Under it each will live because each will give.

Inheritances

To inherit: "To come into [property] by succession through the operation of law." "To receive or enjoy as a divine patrimony." Inheritance: "That which is inherited." "An estate that descends to the heir of the last holder, and falls to him by operation of law."—Standard Dictionary.

"Inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:2.

The term inheritance is used in civil law in several meanings; but the fundamental idea of inheritances is something that one comes to "through the operation of law." But whatever uses others may make, under the gospel men "become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom."

Some confusion arises from the fact that both stewardships and inheritances are sometimes used with wide signification. Each at times is used to comprehend the other. Where meanings are ambiguous or obscure, we are obliged to interpret in accordance with the statement of the law taken as a whole. No interpretation in any case can be allowed which conflicts with the general scheme of the law in its entirety. The law must agree with itself. In Doctrine and Covenants 93:1, in referring to certain lands, it is provided that the land should be "divided into lots, according to wisdom, for the benefit of those who seek inheritances." Here inheritance means a place of residence. But in other cases, as in Doctrine and Covenants 52:9, e. g., it has a very wide signification.

However, all men are entitled by the fact of their existence to a place of residence. It would seem that a place to live is the divine patrimony of each and every man. Surely God would not have placed man here if he had not intended that here he should have a place to live or reside. It is true that men have lost their birthrights, their inheritances, through the substitution of political for gospel law; they have sold their birthright for a mess of pottage; and no doubt some price will have to be paid to redeem it. Obedience to the gospel is the price fixed. It is the business of those who wish to establish a Christian discipleship to put this law into operation in order that others who will may become "heirs according to the law of the kingdom."

We have already classified goods as (1) consumption goods and (2) production goods. Consumption goods are those which men should hold in their individual right because each has immediate use for such goods in supplying his wants and needs, and because such possession does not deprive any other person of full and free opportunity to express his powers of being and to promote his welfare. In this class of goods is included a home, a place of residence. Such a possession is needed by each person, and neither does it deprive any other person of any right that one can claim.

A private right in a home is desirable from economic, moral, and social considerations. The uncertainty of a place of residence is accompanied with numerous evils. We cannot admit that one man has a right to say to another, "Move on, brother, move on," for if one may say that to another, then a third may say it to a second, and so on indefinitely. And if some men say "Move on," to others, then other men may do likewise and there could be no civilization; society would be in a state of chaos. By such reasoning we may establish the right of fixed residence.

As a church we are committed to the principle that "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another." (Doctrine and Covenants 49:3.) Now it is certain that in highly specialized industry and under a complex division of labor and factory production, production properties cannot be "possessed" (i. e., held in individual right) by men equally, except as they are held in common. To apply the rule, "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another" to productive concerns with a view to making a distribution among men individually on that basis, is to divide among men individually properties that have their value only when held together under single management. This is too absurd even to contemplate.

But we may and should make it possible for all men to have homes upon equal terms. In this relation, in relation to consumption goods only, is the rule to be applied that all men should have possessions corresponding to their individual needs. This would make men equal. As for capital goods, we have already shown that they are a social product and belong to the group.

But it cannot be allowed that men may reap where they have not sown. The frugal and the industrious are not to be exploited by the prodigal and the indolent. These inheritances are redeemable by obedience to "the law of the kingdom." These laws, as we have shown, demand diligence in service, a seeking of the interest of one another, as the price of the benefit of Christian association. Doing good does not consist in taking the garments of the laborer and placing them upon the person of the idler. The right of inheritance in the church belongs to those who are willing to redeem it in the spirit of Christian good will.

(To be continued.)

Who's Who in America for the last five or six years has given a compilation showing percentages of the names of people in the world who have secured various degrees in education. For the past four years, 72 per cent have attended college; 59 per cent have graduated.

The Former and Latter Rains—Part 7

By T. W. Williams

Conditions prior to 1830 are said to have been about the same as since then.

Robinson, in his Biblical Researches (1838), speaks of Sychar:

"A valley green with grass, gray with olives, gardens sloping down on each side, fresh springs running down in all directions at the end of a white town."—Scenes in the Holy Land, p. 8.

"In the valleys the grass, high and green and luxuriant, is spangled with countless bowers—red anemones, the scarlet poppy called in Arabic Abou Naum, 'the father of sleep,' mallows and delicate, sweet-scented convolvuli, with many others."—Pictorial Journeys Through Holy Land, p. 23.

"The valleys through which the traveler now passes are mostly cultivated with corn in the untidy way which is universal among the agricultural Arabs."—Ibid., p. 23.

The following excerpts are from Incidents of Travel in Egypt, Arabia, Petraea and the Holy Land, by Our American Consul (1837). He thus describes the Valley of Elah, battle ground of David and Goliath:

"It is one of the prettiest and best cultivated spots in the Holy Land; and sitting in the door of the grotto, with an Armenian pilgrim by my side and looking out upon the valley and the mountains all around, terraced and cultivated to the very summits, all still and beautiful, I thought I had never seen a place better qualified to inspire a pious philosophic and happy frame of mind."—Pages 256, 257.

The Hebron Valley:

"In this little valley everything looked thrifty; and round about were large flocks of sheep and goats, all in good condition."—Five Years in Damascus, p. 314.

"We followed the valley for more than an hour, finding the land good and well cultivated, with an abundance of grapes, vines, and olives as in the day when the spies sent by Moses entered it."—Biblical Researches, p. 148.

Smith, in his Bible Dictionary (1869), article "Palestine," speaks of the fertility of the Holy Land:

"Perhaps no country equally cultivated is more monotonous, bare, or uninviting in its aspect than a great part of the highlands of Judah and Benjamin during the largest portion of the year."—Page 2291.

"The spring covers even those bald gray rocks with verdure and color and fills the ravines with torrents of rushing water, but in summer and autumn the look of the country from Hebron up to Bethel is very dreary and desolate. The flowers which for a few weeks give so brilliant and varied a hue to whole districts, wither and vanish before the first fierce rays of the sun of summer; they are to-day in the field, to-morrow cast into the oven."—Page 2291.

"On some of the hills, the terraces have been repaired, or reconstructed, and these contain plantations of olives and figs, sometimes with, sometimes without, vineyards, surrounded by rough stone walls familiar to us from the parables of the Old and New Testaments."—Page 2291.

"When the district of Jebel Nablus is reached—the ancient Mount Ephraim—the traveler encounters an atmosphere and an amount of vegetation and water which, if not so transcendently lovely as the representations of enthusiastic travelers would make it, it is yet greatly superior to anything which he has met with in Judea, and even sufficient to recall much of the scenery of the west."—Page 2294.

Dean Stanley wrote (1856):

"Palestine, therefore, not merely by its situation, but by its comparative fertility, might well be considered the prize of the Eastern World—the possession of which was the mark of God's peculiar favor, the spot for which the nations would contend."—Sinai and Palestine, p. 124.

"In the spring, the hills and valleys are covered with thin grass and the aromatic shrubs which clothe more or less almost the whole of Syria and Arabia. But they also glow with what is peculiar to Palestine, a profusion of wild flowers, daisies, the white flower called the Star of Bethlehem, but especially with a blaze of scarlet flowers of all kinds, chiefly anemones, wild tulips, and poppies."—Ibid., p. 137.

Excellent Grazing

Reverend J. L. Porter A. M., F. R. S. L., in his Five Years in Damascus, printed in 1855, describes a trip made in 1851 from Damascus to Palmyra. He speaks of the wonderful fertility of the land and the immense fruit vineyards.

"On each side extend broad meadows whose verdure the thick groves of plum, apricot, and apple do not injure."—Page 153.

"Long lines of sheep and camels streaked the plain and mountain slopes, converging to the encampment."—Ibid., p. 169.

"The whole encampment, extending far away on every side, was one vast forest of camels, with a dense underwood of sheep."—Ibid., p. 173.

It may not be amiss to remark that camels and sheep presupposes sufficient food for maintenance.

"These vineyards are very fine, and produce the largest and best grapes in all the country. This valley is generally assumed to be Eshcol of the Old Testament, whence the spies brought back the cluster of grapes to Kadesh; and apparently not without reason. The character of the fruit still corresponds to its ancient celebrity; and pomegranates and figs, as well as apricots, quinces, and the like, still grow there in abundance."—Ibid., p. 316.

Conditions Prior to 1830

We now present some striking evidences of fertility as taken from Views of Interesting Places in the Holy Land, and published by the American Sunday School Union in 1830.

Mount Tabor:

"The mountain, soft and graceful in its appearance, and covered to its very top with thick forests of oak and other trees, rises majestically above the busy plain."—Page 21.

"During the summer the summit of Tabor is shrouded in thick vapors, which break away at noon, and at night the dew upon it is remarkably copious."—Page 23.

Nazareth:

"In favorable seasons it appears like a very pleasant field in the midst of barren mountains, which seem to rise and encompass it on every side. Fig trees and hedges of the prickly pear abound, and the thick rich grass affords abundant pasture."—Ibid., p. 23.

"At other times and when the season is unfavorable, it appears to be a most barren and uninviting spot, bidding defiance to agricultural improvements. It was visited ten years since (1820) by Mr. Fisk, an American missionary, who speaks of it as a charming spot."—Ibid., p. 24.

"The general appearance of the city is inviting. The mountains which skirt it on the north; the verdant plain which the city itself occupies and which is studded with trees and gardens, dwelling houses and their enclosures; the monuments of superstition scattered here and there, and the valley which stretches along the whole distance of the town, make the whole scene quite picturesque and imposing."—Ibid., p. 26.

In Letters From Palestine (1819) we glean the following:

"Lamb and kid are almost the only flesh known here; veal being seldom dressed, and beef and pork alike disused; fowls are in great plenty, but those are the only poultry . . . all the fruits here are excellent in their kind; there is not, indeed, any great variety, but such as there are surpass in richness any that I have elsewhere met with. The grapes are superiorly excellent; the figs also are larger and less insipid than those in Europe, and in addition to these the olive, pomegranate, and watermelon may be mentioned as unusually fine."—Page 173.

Here is a description of a trip from Jerusalem to Jaffa (1819):

"The ravine terminates in an extensive plain, apparently very fertile and of easy tillage. Indian corn, sesame, wheat, cotton, and barley were scattered over different parts of the surface in the highest state of luxuriant vegetation."—Ibid., p. 187.

"The road between Rama and Jaffa appears to be a considerable thoroughfare and is throughout in very excellent condition. The land on each side seems to have been industriously cultivated and the surface is enriched with a luxuriant vegetation seldom observed in more inland districts."—Ibid., pp. 190, 191.

Still Earlier Testimony

We will now go farther back. I quote from Views in Egypt and Palestine by Luigi Mayer, published in 1804.

Speaking of Bethlehem, Mr. Mayer says:

"The sides and summit of the hills are interspersed with fine vineyards, banked with stones, and the grapes they produce are remarkably large and finely flavored. Figs, pomegranates, and an abundance of olives likewise grow there, on which the people in great measure subsist."—Views in Egypt and Palestine, p. 42.

James Nesbit wrote in entering Syria from Egypt:

"We feel the climate already so different from that of Egypt and the desert; the air soft, moist and balmy, laden with the perfume of wild flowers, broom, etc."—Two Months in Palestine, p. 50.

"The ground was covered with wild flowers; the pink bindweed, dark blue shepherds, weatherglass, purple iris, and anemones of divers shades of scarlet."—Ibid., p. 50.

Mr. Nesbit described Samson's Hill:

"A beautiful cultivated plain and the gentle blue outline of the mountains of Hebron on the one side, and on the other the modern town of Gaza with its minarets, domes, seraglio, surrounded by olive groves, and gardens of orange and pomegranate trees."—Ibid., p. 52.

"The fields of wheat were really magnificent to-day. Near Ashdod we saw a breadth of corn which was estimated could not be less than ten square miles. The earth freshly turned up by the plow looked quite moist from the former rain; and camels, oxen, and asses were all busily engaged in preparing the land for millet."—Ibid., p. 53.

"Our approach to Ramlah was truly striking. The richness of the verdure, the variety of the gardens, together with the picturesque appearance of the town, surpassed anything we had yet seen."—Ibid., p. 54.

Our next authority will be Notes From a Private Journal of a Visit to Egypt and Palestine, Joseph Rickerby, 1844:

"We then passed a cross roads of which the right leads to Acre, the left to Damascus; and soon after several villages with luxuriant corn interspersed with fig, olive, mulberry, and pomegranate trees, covered with bright blossoms, delighted the sight."—Page 246.

"Happily for the unfortunate people (their homes had only recently been destroyed by an earthquake) the country is rich and fertile. Among the most striking of its wild and picturesque productions rises the prickly pear, gaining gigantic growth."—Ibid., p. 251.

"We had early in the morning passed beneath the highest point of Mount Tabor covered with forests, that breathed the air and wore the aspect of remote antiquity. To this majestic spot succeeded sweet pastoral scenes, where the flocks and herds seemed to be fed on the very hand of nature, and the Almighty appeared to be pouring forth the plenty of the harvest to reward the slightest efforts of human industry."—Ibid., p. 263.

He speaks of Hebron:

"The country here is extremely rich in vineyards, and the hills are clothed with olive trees, pomegranates, figs, tamarinds, and apricots. How greatly should I enjoy having a house in this extensive plain where our tents are now pitched."—Ibid., p. 299.

"By six o'clock June 23d, we reached a wide and fertile plain at the extremity of which appeared the mountains of Carmel, the intervening lands, with the village of Enk-holet, its flocks, its herds, and wells of sweet water, offering to our sight, as the moon rose and shed its soft luster around us, as lovely a pastoral scene as poet or painter could well imagine."—Ibid., p. 316.

Montefiori Survey

Sir Moses Montefiori, F. R. S., received, in 1844, an exhaustive report from the various provinces of Palestine, setting forth the agricultural conditions; Signor Funzi reports:

"Safed rice, grain, sumson, and every kind of herb desirable for use because the ground is well watered."—Ibid., p. 377.

Menscia, near Acre:

"The soil produces in the winter, wheat, barley, beans, lentils, and peas; and in the summer cotton, sodi, sumson, white dura, or grain cucumbers, poppy."—Ibid., p. 378.

"I am informed by some of the inhabitants, that anciently there were vineyards here, equal in their produce to those in Jerusalem, but that the lax administration of the laws by the government had permitted robbers to interrupt the labors of the husbandman so grievously as at length to cause the land to be left almost desolate."—Ibid., pp. 386, 387.

"The wells so fertilize the ground for gardens that vegetables sufficient for the consumption of all our congregation could easily be raised, both in summer and in winter."—Ibid., p. 398.

"In the vicinity of Ramlah is a beautiful plain, celebrated for its pastures and sheep. It also produces cotton and poppy, but it has little timber."—Ibid., p. 403.

Rabbi Aryeh reports for Joppa:

"There are near Joppa pleasant gardens and plantations, and there are wine presses, by which much wine may be obtained. The villages there are in good condition and those who live there, not Israelites, are healthy and athletic, having a nourishing sustenance derived from their engagement with the peasantry in agricultural pursuits."—Ibid., p. 405.

Statements of Heathen Authors

The following is significant. It is taken from The Geography of the Holy Land, published by Roake and Varty, London, 1832:

"It appears, by heathen authors, that from the time of the Roman Emperor Adrian, for a space of four hundred years, the country was famous in the world for the excellence of the climate, the fertility of the soil, and the richness of its productions. It is indeed probable that it never regained its former state after the Babylonish captivity; but still this account of heathen authors, and the acknowledged indolence of the present inhabitants, show what it may have formerly been.

"In the next place, whatever labor is seen to be bestowed upon it at present, an abundant return is immediately obtained. The produce of the country, both in corn and fruits is, in many respects, considered superior to that of Egypt at this day [1832]. Wine and oil are furnished by certain districts, of the most excellent kind. When convents are settled and care bestowed on the soil it appears fertile in an unusual degree; and the only fair reason to be assigned even with the indolence of the present people, why larger quantities of produce do not appear, is the dread of wandering troops of Arabs, who infest the country and are ever ready to seize upon the superior crops as supplies necessary for their own idle mode of life.

"Whatever difference it may have pleased God should take place in the actual nature of the soil, this, at last, is to be remembered, that the nature of the soil is not more deteriorated than the character and spirit of the people by whom it is possessed. Its inhabitants are to this day among the most lazy people in the world, whereas Israel, in the period of its virtue and prosperity, was remarkable above all nations for a love of active, laborious, agricultural pursuits."—Geography of Holy Land, p. 153. (1832.)

Land and Climate Unchanged

Here is one extract from An Historical Geography of the Holy Land, compiled in 1830 from Research Made by Modern Travelers for the Society for Promoting United Scriptural Education. Printed Dublin, 1830:

"The soil of Syria and Palestine is not less propitious than its climate to the production of everything necessary to the support and comfort of life . . . while the rich mold of some parts yields the finest corn in great profusion, the vine, the olive, and the fig flourish in the vicinity of Jerusalem and in various districts of Judea and Galilee, as well as on the side of Lebanon. Cotton of the best quality is grown in the plains of Zebulon, Ramla, and Esdraelon; vast quantities of honey are made in the mountainous districts where thyme, rosemary, sage, and other aromatic plants abound; and the grazing and feeding of cattle is not only practiced in Judea and along the banks of the Jordan, but many of the higher grounds of Mount Lebanon are appropriated to this purpose while the plains and valleys are reserved for tillage."—Pages 115, 116.

"In the beginning of March, the plains of Judea, between Joppa and Ramla, were universally planted with tulips of innumerable hues and a profusion of other rare and beautiful flowers, while the hills and mountains were covered with every variety of aromatic herbs."—Ibid., p. 116.

"Notwithstanding the amazing revolutions it has undergone since the reign of Solomon, it is still, as Moses declared it to be, a good land; a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley and vines, of fig trees and pomegranates; a land of olive oil, milk, and honey."—Page 116.

A. R. Bonor in 1844 published The Holy Land, it being a Guide Book Compiled from Best Authentic Sources.

Speaking of Jerusalem:

"Before him fertile gardens descending in deep declivities. Lower down that valley opens and extends itself; fig trees, pomegranates, and olives, overshadowing it."—Page 170.

"For eighteen hundred seasons the earth has renewed her carpet of verdure, and seen it again decay, yet the skies and the fields, the rocks, and the hills, and the valleys around remain unchanged."—Ibid., p. 201.

Henry H. Jessup, speaking of conditions in Beirut in 1825:

"The houses had flat roofs and cement which cracked every summer, and the walls of porous sandstone, absorbed the winter rains which covered the inside with fungus mold."—Page 45.

"The agriculture of Palestine has not advanced or changed in any important particular since Old Testament times."—Ibid., p. 49. (To be continued.)

The South Side Booster is an ambitious monthly, the official publication of the South Side Booster Association in Independence, and having as editors Arthur Allen and Fred W. Smith. They carry a great deal of local display advertising, are running a serial story by Fred W. Smith, list church group officers, group boundaries and places and dates of group prayer meetings for the month in the October number. Information about groups from number 14 to 33 is listed, the others being considered out of the territory within convenient distance of the south side. Some of the numbers discuss civic problems and propose measures to secure definite advantages, while a general tone of civic betterment is maintained.

The October number is the sixth of the first volume and has twelve pages about 8½ by 11 inches and in ten point type.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson; 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Supervision of the Health of Preschool Children

It is the desire of the Women's Department to bring to children every possible advantage for their welfare. One of the first divisions of our organized efforts was created for this purpose. Our forerunning society, the Daughters of Zion, stressed the necessity for child welfare, and it has occupied the center of our stage ever since.

Because of this there was introduced into the Cradle Roll Department, as it came under our supervision, several measures hitherto new to that work, but which bear directly upon the welfare of our children. And for the same reason, we expect to introduce other measures, intending to benefit in the same direction.

We have printed in a former issue of this magazine, the address of a child welfare worker from one of our large cities. The lady tried to impress the grave necessity for early and constant supervision of the health of children. Most defects of body are easily corrected in the beginning months of physical life, while, if let go unnoted and unregulated until the child is of school age or older, become in many cases, fixed for life.

That this is a serious matter and one most worthy the attention of devoted parents who have the spiritual and moral good of their children at heart, is attested by the statement that ninety per cent of criminals in our prisons have some physical defect, seventy-five per cent of which could have been corrected or removed in their preschool years.

We are trying to convey to parents an appreciation of the necessity for, and great value of early and frequent examination of their children. We realize that some parents, especially in the rural districts, have not had easy access to clinics where such examinations could be had, but it is encouraging to note the rapidly-enlarging areas where such centers are being established through the Red Cross and other philanthropic agencies. Our plea is for all parents to reach out and do their part to take advantage of the opportunities already offered, or initiate some movement by which similar opportunities may be brought into their communities.

We present in this issue the annual report of the Children's Bureau of Kansas City, which is filled with significant suggestions which might guide in such movements. Many public organizations are willing to get behind a proposition which so nearly concerns every home, and it only remains for some one to initiate, explain, and organize the measures necessary to procure the advantages.

We expect to have a message soon from our own Health Department upon this subject, which will be helpful in suggestion or direction to our people. Meanwhile take your child to your family physician if no clinic or health center is within your reach.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Report of Children's Bureau of Kansas City

July 1, 1919—June 30, 1920.

Purpose

This organization, heretofore listed as the Child Welfare Department of the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense, has on the advice of the Social Service League, been made an independent body under the title of Children's Bureau. Its purpose is to keep preschool children well and bring them to school age with as few physical defects as possible.

Method

1. Taking a periodic census of preschool children by school districts.
2. Making a complete physical examination of them once a year.

3. Following up each case found to need attention to learn if this has been given, and, where necessary, assisting the parents to get the children to physician, clinic, or hospital.

4. Recording in a permanent file the facts in regard to each child and results of treatment.

5. Promoting the formation of classes in home hygiene, cooking, and making over clothing; in the nutrition of infants; and in home nursing.

Financing

Our work is entirely financed by the Chest Committee of the Chamber of Commerce.

Cost

We have expended on furnishings, equipment, salaries, rent, and running expenses as per detailed account inclosed, $7,849.53.

Paid Service

In doing these things we have employed one executive secretary, one trained assistant, about forty physicians who work by the hour as needed, and four nurses for well children's stations. We have had the free service of ten child welfare specialists at various times. The physicians give no prescriptions and no treatment, and we recommend no physicians.

Volunteer Service

Our volunteer auto service has amounted to $327.50, calculated on the basis of taxi charges.

Our other free service amounts to $6,486, calculated on the basis of $3 a day for 6 hours' work.

We keep a record of all service of this kind. Very little of it is intermittent. Volunteers have regular hours and days of the week. One volunteer gave five months' regular daily six-hour service of the best kind. In districts where there are parent-teacher associations, we have used their members in census taking, in assisting in examination centers, in follow-up work, and in the office. We find that they have given the equivalent of over two years of valuable daily service, or 816 days.

In districts where there are no associations, the members of the Collegiate Alumnae, the Panhellenic, the Junior College classes in sociology, and many lay women have done the work. In the parochial schools, the Amberg Girls, the Catholic Women's Club, and lay women have covered the ground. These organizations have also furnished 72 experts for the examination centers and have done much of the record work in the office. What they have done is equivalent to almost four years of service, 1,346 full six-hour days. Allowing the very modest daily wage of $3, the service listed above would amount to $6,486. Evidently a work so appealing as ours is its own great reward. It is so valuable a social service that it cannot be estimated in dollars and cents.

From all these groups of volunteers, knowledge of our work and interest in it spreads to their entire organizations, so that, in every part of the city, centers of health propaganda for keeping children well are being created. People who never before had thought of periodic examinations of their children, are beginning to look for opportunities for them. They are also asking for more definite information on prenatal and child care, which we are planning to supply the coming year.

Accomplishments

This year's census of preschool children, taken very completely and by school districts, shows 15,941. The number examined to date is 8,193. Of this number, 5,613 were found to need some sort of attention; 1,709 cases have been cared for. Of these 1,258 were cared for by private physicians or in clinics or hospitals. The other 451 minor cases were attended to without the aid of physicians. The follow-up work, which is necessarily slow, has not been completed in all districts, but reports are rapidly coming in. Experience shows that at least 10 per cent of cases that our physicians have said needed attention have gone to a physician without the follow-up visit. In two of the largest districts, every preschool child has not only been examined but every case needing attention has had it.

The work here covered has been done at an average expense per child of 66 cents, even in the year when all office supplies, furniture, and expense on the previous year's work must be included in cost. The actual examination cost per child was 23.7 cents.

Our Employees

This work has been much more systematic and effective this year than ever before. It is 70 per cent greater than the previous year. This is partly because we have learned how to do it, but largely because we have continuously employed an executive secretary of exceptional adaptation to the work and an unusual ability to interest people in it and keep them at it; and have secured an assistant who was trained for social service in one of the most famous settlements in this country. Her remuneration has been chiefly her joy in the service.

Contagions

Although we have brought over 15,000 children to the examination centers, our precautions are such that, so far as we know, not a single contagion has been contracted there. One case from the southwest was reported to us, but upon investigation, it was found that the child had not been brought to our centers, and the mother was not certain as to where the whooping cough had been contracted.

Classes

The examination centers offer a good field for the formation of classes in home hygiene, cooking, prenatal care, nutrition of infants, home nursing, and making over clothing. While the carrying on of such classes does not fall within our purpose, we have been able to enlist the departments of home economics, child hygiene, thrift, and mutual help in the Parent-Teacher Council; and the local department of the State University's cooperative extension work in home economics (now called Home Economics Bureau) in inducing mothers to join such classes as the physician's examination of their children and the follow-up work show that they need.

The director of vocational instruction in the public schools has undertaken to furnish teachers for such classes at least once a week in each school, and will carry on, at the Jane^oGates Industrial School, a class for more advanced students, who might make good class teachers. Further information as to these classes may be obtained by telephoning to our office.

The local Home Economics Department of the State University is also undertaking some teaching in these classes.

The Red Cross will give courses in home nursing especially adapted to mothers of young children. Already we have organized a group of 26 colored women who are taking this course, and a larger class is promised for fall.

With the utilization by these organizations of the opportunity we offer for the formation of these classes among the mothers who most need them and at the time when they have just learned from the physicians that they do need them, another step will be taken towards bringing children into school in the best possible condition for school work.

Making Maternity Cheaper

City hospitals are to be open, by order of Public Welfare Commissioner Coler, for maternity cases at $2.50 a day. This will be available for families with an income of under $5,000 a year.

A most admirable order by the commissioner. There is no doubt that the increase of fees of physicians in child birth cases, and the great cost of private hospital service, has had a real effect upon the birth rate in families well qualified for bringing up children, who are terrified by the initial financial outlay.

It is getting so that only the rich and the very poor can afford to have a baby.

But nobody believes that the rich and the very poor are necessarily the best parents. Those who cannot afford reasonable expenses include some of the best.

In Baltimore a great hospital has limited the amount of surgeon's fees. Of course any reform like this is derided and denounced by the persons who are making money out of present conditions. But still, reforms do come. And this is one of them that may well be hastened. Sickness will always be a misfortune, but it ought not necessarily be a calamity; while the birth of children ought never to be anything but a piece of good fortune.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXXII

Vocational Opportunities

1. Explain Charles Eliot's statement, "The career motive has the greatest spiritual content of all motives."
2. How are many young persons finding their careers?
3. To what is this due?
4. What change in the industries has been made by machinery?
5. What are trade unions doing for the preparation of young people for the industries?
6. What are the effects vocationally of the constant movement of population to the cities?
7. Explain how seasonal and local industries effect vocational possibilities.
8. Has immigration aided in solving the vocational problem?
9. What have been the effects of the entrance of women into the industries?
10. Explain why the professions have been overcrowded.
11. What, in the future, will tend to keep them from being overcrowded?
12. Why do so many children drop out of school so early?
13. Can you suggest a remedy?
14. Discuss Marigold's statement in regard to those who leave school too early?
15. Should the vocation of the future be sacrificed for the higher wage of to-day?
16. What change is suggested for the school?
17. How may the child be placed in the right occupation?
18. What can you say of employment agencies and their mistakes?
19. Give reasons why the apprenticeship system should be revived?
20. What will vocational training of young people do for unemployment?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Two New Field Workers for Foreign Missions

It is a pleasure to tell the readers of our column of the recent appointments of Sister M. A. McConley and Sister J. W. Davis to labor as field workers for our department in the Australian Mission.

The sisters will accompany their husbands to these far-away lands, Apostle and Sister McConley already having started on their long journey, with Seventy and Sister Davis to follow shortly.

Our Australian Mission is well established under the capable supervision of our Mission Organizer Sister William Hendricks. The latter is looking forward with delight to the coming of these field workers, that the fires of enthusiasm and devotion to our department ideals may be more widely kindled.

We are planning to present to our readers, the work of our Australian sisters at some future date. This will be both interesting and encouraging, for it will impress us anew with the beauty of unity as we sense the fact that the women on the other side of the globe are sharing so intimately and identically in our hopes and plans for Zion.

LETTERS

Tribute to Elder John Bailey

A brother beloved by Saints and friends in England.

Sunday, August 7, 1921, is a day that the writer is not likely to forget for many years, if at all. I had just arrived in the meeting room of the North Manchester Branch of the Manchester, England, District, took off my top coat and hat, hung them on a rack, turned around to greet another arrival, when I felt a strong grip on my arm. Turning about I was confronted by the president of the branch. I immediately noticed the strained expression on his countenance, and at once I felt that something was amiss.

"Have you heard the sad news?" said the brother.

"What news?" I queried.

"Brother Bailey has been killed," he replied. Then followed the sad account of the tragic death of our "Brother John," as he was familiarly termed among us.

It was at a sacramental meeting, where we had assembled as usual on the first Sunday in the month to renew our covenant, that the above incident occurred. As the president, later, from the stand, made the announcement public, the feeling of depression that took possession of us was intense. I felt as one paralyzed; speech had entirely left me. Was it a fact that John had gone? Was it true that no more we should hear his voice in our midst? Alas! It was only too true.

The circumstances of his death were as follows: That morning while proceeding by motorcycle towards Bury, with his son Sidney, aged fourteen, seated on the back, the tire of the front wheel burst, and it must have become entangled with the spokes, causing the machine to swerve. The brother was thrown with great violence into an electric standard, on the footpath, and the son was also hurled with considerable force into a hedge.

The last thought of the father was about the son. Standing erect, he turned to the lad, inquired if he was injured, then immediately fell over into unconsciousness. He was taken to the Bury Infirmary; his wife, our Sister Martha, was sent for, and she arrived just in time to see him before he passed away.

What a man! Would that my pen were capable of inditing the meed of praise due him. Truly it can without doubt be said of him, in Shakespeare's words, "He was a man."

John's greatest thought was the depreciation of his own worth. His record is one that is not easily surpassed. He was baptized on August 19, 1887, and was soon ordained to the office of a deacon, followed by ordination to priest, then elder, occupying the latter office since April, 1899.

He acted as a local appointed missionary, self-supporting for about two years, was for ten consecutive years the superintendent of the North Manchester Sunday School, held the presidency of the North Manchester Branch for many years, also was vice president of the Manchester District under redemption. Distance lends no barrier to identity of purposes when the same divine Spirit is working with Saints of God, and in that unity is to be found our strength.

The sisters throughout all America will be wishing our missionaries Godspeed, and breathing earnest prayers for the successful prosecution of their work, attended by divine comfort and guidance.

A. A.

The Kindergarten of God

The Reverend Andreas Bard, pastor of a Kansas City church, recently said:

"Life is too sad to be laughed away, and too glad to be wept away. It is neither a hospital nor a pleasure park. It is the kindergarten of God, where we develop the resources of the soul. To use each experience as a stepping-stone to nobler viewpoints is the sanest philosophy."

three different presidents, and this year, at the recommendation of President F. M. Smith, was chosen counselor to the president of the elders' quorum of the British Isles.

He was for many years my teacher in the Bible class. Of late years, I have heard many men state that they were the ones responsible for my schooling in my early years, but here is the truth of the matter: "John" was the one responsible for making the writer have a desire to defend this work and propagate its doctrines.

I well remember as a lad at the age of fifteen when Brother Bailey was first appointed president of the North Manchester Branch. I had just been ordained deacon. He called upon me one morning to occupy as speaker.

When I stood up to speak, my knees seemed to come in violent contact with each other, the perspiration oozed out of my pores, I prayed for the ground to open and swallow me up. I gave way to abject fear and after three minutes retired, utterly confused. I determined never to attempt again, but it was our brother's words that later set my soul on fire with the desire to try again.

Never once have I known him to lose an opportunity of doing a kindness. There are many local Saints who will feel the loss of our brother by reason of his generosity, done quietly, yet in a manner acceptably. No one could be angry with him long. He wouldn't let you.

In the Hairdressers' Weekly Journal of August 13, appears a full long column of tribute to him. Let me quote one passage:

"In well-nigh countless instances he acted as peacemaker in settling disputes which arose from time to time in the societies to which he belonged, and his genial and kindly disposition endeared him to everyone."

Such a tribute from trade! Yes, that was John. He was connected with the Hairdresser Association for nearly twenty-five years. He was for several years its president, afterwards the secretary of the North Manchester Society.

He had also acted as vice chairman of the Northern Counties Federation and at the time of his death was the president of the Manchester and Salford Amalgamated Hairdressers' Society.

For many years past he has been assiduous in his efforts to have our work placed before the different denominations, locally, and through his untiring and fearless labors, many of our one-time opponents are our dearest friends. Through him, the writer and several other brethren have been able to present our faith in the following churches and chapels: Harpurkey Wesleyans, Collyhurst Wesleyans, Queen's Park Congregationalists, and Saint Stephen's Church of England.

At the house, on the day of the interment, floral tributes were sent by members of the above mentioned denominations, by several branches of the Hairdressers' Association, by doctors, counselors, etc. Truly a glowing testimony of the esteem in which our brother was held, both by the world and the church. So passes a good man.

ABEL HALL.

Lamoni Stake News and College Notes

A variety of interests claim the time and attention of Lamoni Stake members.

The Saints in attendance at the Brick Church were privileged to have President Frederick M. Smith meet with them in the Sunday morning sacramental service on the 1st and to hear him preach in the evening. The purpose of his visit was to bring to Graceland a new student for the religious educational division, who has recently arrived from Germany.

At the sacramental service, Brother John F. Garver voiced the gratitude of the Lamoni people for the safe return of President Smith, for the broadened vision and increased zeal that he has in the church work, and for the possibilities which he has seen in foreign fields. Brother Smith responded with a short message that was an indication of the great depth with which his heart is in the work, and which increased the confidence of those who are truly convinced that he is a man called of and designated by God to lead this people. He plead for an increased faith in the divine mission of the church and for increased confidence and support of the program which the leaders are trying to carry out for the establishment of Zion and for the evangelization of the world.

In his sermon in the evening, Brother Smith took for his subject, "Stewardships," treating of their divine and unique character and the absolute necessity for the establishment of this institution, rather than undertaking to outline the specific characteristics of the working basis of the stewardship itself. His preliminary message was to the effect that there are now, and throughout all history have been, two things standing in the way of human peace and happiness and social harmony: false ambition, and private property misused for power. At the bottom of these are ignorance and selfishness. The true solution to our problems is to be found in the regeneration of the human heart towards altruism, and in the education of the people to a higher and better plane of living. In the institution of stewardships, said his message, is to be found the right way which God had designed for men to live together so that all may be benefited.

Brother Smith spent part of several days in formal conference and informal conversation with the stake and college authorities.

The character of these discussions is not generally known, but it is supposed that the President was reestablishing, after his absence, the close touch that he usually has on the affairs of the church.

The branch business meeting was held Tuesday with a remarkably large volume of business (!) entered on the minutes: one motion was made and passed without opposition, and that one a motion to adjourn. The branch authorities say that one of two things must inevitably be true: either they are handling the church business with such efficiency that no one has any criticism; or else the critics have become weak-hearted in the faith and stayed away from meeting. At any rate, everyone seemed to be satisfied.

The student whom President Smith brought from Germany, Eric Schlote, is adapting himself well to the college work, is making himself at home at one of the dormitories, and is well liked by the students. Having previously studied English in his own country, the language is presenting only temporary difficulties for him. He speaks also some French, and plays the piano quite well.

The reason for bringing students from other countries to our own is not that the educational advantages are inferior to our own, but it is that they may here come in closer contact with those who have the ideals of the church at heart, and have inculcated into them something of the spirit of what our institutions should mean to us.

In this regard the religious experience that is to be had at the college is especially significant. In the last few years the attendance at the college prayer meetings has grown larger, until at the present time there is practically a full attendance of the student body. Besides this, very many of the Lamoni young people are attracted to the meetings. In former years it required some weeks for the prayer meetings to get into full swing; while at the present time, with the enthusiasm of older students, and with the anticipation that the newer ones have conceived in hearing of them previously to their coming, the meetings start off in full swing. In a way, to the older members of the faculty and most of the student body, the prayer meetings possess a significance of the spiritual power of the year, and hence an importance that is not exceeded even by the formal opening. And at the year's end, the final prayer meeting is the really big event which all attend expectantly.

From the high regard in which these religious activities are held at the college, from the evaluation which is placed by the student body on the social atmosphere and associations here to be had, and from the thousand things that are constantly being mentioned on the campus, the following conclusion can be definitely drawn: The big thing for which students wish to come to Graceland and associate with the Lamoni Saints, the thing that actuates parents to go to greater expense in sending their sons and daughters long distances to attend, is the spiritual atmosphere, the hope that they will receive bigger vision of the church, its institutions, and its ideals, and a greater devotion to them. For this end, if for no others, we feel that the continuance of the college is justified and necessary.

It is felt that it is the church people, and their sons and daughters who are building the college, and that the Saints generally should be more intimately acquainted with these characteristics of college life, together with what the people of the church are either consciously or unconsciously doing for their advancement.

The motto, "Advancement for service," though old and long familiar to church people, should lose none of its vitality because of its age. It should, by its very age, become more precious to us. This is the ideal of the stake and college officers.

The young people of Hiteman are having their second annual series of Zion Builders services. The series started Sunday, October 2, with Elder Cyril E. Wight in charge.

There is to be a series of two weeks' duration started at Davis City with D. T. Williams opening and C. E. Wight continuing the work after his return from Hiteman. Brother Wilbur E. Prall, of Lamoni, has for a long time been devoting his time to the building up of the work there. The present good state of the branch is largely due to his efforts. The new series will be largely doctrinal.

D. T. Williams was prosecuting a good work at Buxton, when sickness in his family called him home. He will return to take up the work there after making the initial effort at Davis City.

John F. Garver opened a series at Lone Rock, October 6th, with H. C. Burgess in charge of music, where there has been some opposition that must be taken care of before the work can go on.

LEONARD J. LEA, Correspondent.

The Nauvoo Reunion

The 1921 reunion of the Nauvoo District is now history, and history that we can well afford to be proud of. The place "Nauvoo," and its history, are known all over the world. Hundreds of travelers from all parts come every year to visit it and to listen to its history.

Our camp was pitched on the "Old Homestead" ground, and such a beautiful place! looking out across the Mississippi River which at this place is like a great lake, as there is no current on account of the big dam below. Then turning we look across the "Flat," and on top of the hill to the city proper with its vine-clad gardens and sedate homes.

The reunion, with its different departments of work, was presided over by the district president, David J. Williams, assisted by U. W. Greene of the Quorum of Twelve, and the heads of departments. Brother J. A. Gunsolley represented the Religio Department and gave many encouraging and edifying lectures. The Sunday School Department was looked after by Sister Ethel Lacey, the district superintendent. Sister J. A. Gunsolley came to represent the Women's Department, but was called home on account of the sickness of her daughter. Mrs. D. J. Williams of Burlington, Iowa, was then placed in this position, which she very ably filled. All services were well attended and all stated that they were enjoying the work.

Besides U. W. Greene, of the general church officers, the district missionaries, and local men, we had the pleasure of having with us W. A. McDowell, of the Order of Evangelists, and Brother Joseph Luff, who came in unexpectedly but welcomed, and who gave us some of the old-time sermons. He seems to have plenty of "pep" and fire yet.

Brother Greene lectured to the priesthood each morning on subjects vital to the upbuilding of the church.

The early morning prayer meetings held for the young people at "David's Lookout" or the "Trysting Place" were well attended, and all expressed their thanks to the heavenly Father for the privilege.

The dining room, under the supervision of Sister P. R. Burton, conducted on the cafeteria plan, was in the Nauvoo House and commanded commendation. In this work she was assisted by Sister Bessie Smith, of Fort Madison, Iowa, and their untiring effort to procure and prepare suitable as well as plenty of wholesome food was paramount.

On Thursday, before the close of the reunion, several cars loaded with the visitors motored to Carthage, Illinois, where the old "jail" is located in which Joseph and Hyrum were killed. Their trip proved a very pleasant one, considering the amount of dust they were compelled to eat.

Brother J. W. Layton, who is in charge of the church property, was kept busy during the reunion, escorting visitors around to the different places of interest, and explaining the same to them.

The property and buildings are in a good state of repair and preservation, and make a very interesting place to visit. Many of the old landmarks still stand, bearing mute testimony of the labors of the Saints eighty years ago.

A reunion will be held at the same place next year with greater and brighter prospects, to which all are invited to come.

CHARLES J. SMITH, for Press Committee.

Des Moines Branch

Poor transportation facilities militate against the success of our services in more ways than one. We have been without street cars for more than two months now, except a few days during the State Fair. The bus system (?) is a joke, a nuisance, or a menace, depending upon the point of view. We have taken varied views as we have trudged the many streets of the city in our humble capacity of calling upon the Saints; moreover we have realized as never before why the Master on one occasion rested at Jacob's well.

Our annual home-coming was observed October 9. It was a busy day of eight services. Four children were baptized and confirmed, Bishop E. O. Clark officiating, and three babies were blessed. At the eleven o'clock hour Brother Ammon White preached a beautiful and highly spiritual sermon on the home-coming of the Saints, and again spoke convincingly at eight o'clock on the Book of Mormon. He has ministered to us one week, and his visit has been very profitable to us. He will spend some time in the Des Moines District.

This week we again resume group activities. Our plan calls for a season of prayer and testimony, followed by a sermonet by one of the priesthood. Wednesday night, October 12, the deacons of the various groups will speak on the observance of the financial law. Five groups will be thus engaged.

The Women's Department have also begun their group activities. There are six of these groups, including the Oriole Girls. This department holds out promise of concerted and effective work in the future.

A. E. WARR, Pastor.

Detroit Conference

Conference a success. Growth and advancement shown.

Last night (8th) marked the closing of one of the most successful and fruitful conferences ever held by the Detroit District, at the First Flint Church on Newall Street.

The conference opened Saturday morning in charge of the district presidency, Elder K. H. Green, district president, presiding. After the business sessions Saturday morning and afternoon, the Women's Department occupied some time, which was very instructive and interesting. On Saturday night a musicale was enjoyed, both local Detroit and Pontiac talent taking part.

On Sunday the services were very well attended, it being impossible for all to get into the building. Among the speakers were Elder Clyde F. Ellis, of South Boardman, Michigan, who has spent five of the last seven years in the South Sea Islands, as a missionary. In the evening Elder Ellis gave an illustrated lecture, describing the islands and the natives and telling of the work of the missionaries there.

A very good feature of the conference was the splendid work of the combined orchestras of the district under the leadership of Mr. B. Williams, of Detroit. Also the combined choirs under the direction of the district chorister, Miss Henriette Davis, also of Detroit. This was made possible by the close cooperation of the district chorister and orchestra leader with Mr. Eugene Everhart, the leader of the choir and orchestra at First Flint Church.

During the conference, Jesse D. Shelley, of Detroit, was ordained an elder; several were baptized and confirmed. The social services were of a very high order, and the preaching of the word highly beneficial and spiritual.

All felt greatly encouraged and strengthened and look for the next six months to show still greater success and advancement.

The conference showed a spirit of unity good to see, and much important business was transacted. This being the fall conference, there are no changes in district officers to announce.

MEMBER OF PRESS COMMITTEE.

Patriarch Baldwin Arrives in England

The latest appointee to England writes the Presidency from London and we excerpt.

We started from America on September 13, on the Steamship Aquitania, and experienced no difficulty whatever in New York in the details connected with passport, baggage, etc. The voyage was a most pleasant one, and we were not sick at all on the way over. The boat made a record trip, and we landed in Southampton on Monday night, but they would not allow us to go ashore until Tuesday morning.

Surely God's hand seemed to be guiding and caring for us all the way over, as we had many evidences of it. We found in every little detail that the way seemed smoothed before us.

We arrived at Saint Leonard's in the afternoon, and Brother T. W. Williams and Brother and Sister Sorden welcomed us warmly. It was indeed nice to have such a beautiful home to come to, and we felt very proud to have such headquarters to come to. Brother Williams seemed depressed because of the inability to start the school which had been planned, but he is very hopeful that a great work can be done in this country if the church in America supports it financially for a time.

We had a talk with Brother Williams this morning as to our labors here, and he suggested that we go to the Manchester conference, which convenes October 1 and 2, and there we would meet with Brother Gillen, and the three of us could have a conference as to the best place to start our labors. This will also afford us an excellent opportunity to get acquainted with the Saints.

In the meantime we are going to visit about London a bit, and get acquainted with the Saints here. I am also advertised to preach next Sunday in London.

We are determined to labor untiringly for the work here, and shall try not to let any discouragement stand in our way, so that when our mission is ended in this land, we may feel that the church is justified in the confidence they have shown in sending us here.

RICHARD BALDWIN.

COVINA, CALIFORNIA, October 1, 1921.

Editors Herald: I thought I would send this request through your paper, as it would bring me in touch with those of our faith.

I am needing help in my home. I am an invalid and have been bedfast for years. My husband passed away three years ago. My children are married and have homes of their own. I am alone and would like some one who would take care of my home and me; some one I could feel at home with, and of our faith. I am twenty-five miles from Los Angeles. There are no Saints near me that I know of except one young lady. If there is anyone who wants a home and a place like this, write me. You can also write to Brother David Dowker, 2911 South Western Avenue, Los Angeles, California.

Yours in the faith,

161 West Center Street.

MRS. MINTA JOHNSON.

CHURCH NEWS

(Continued from page 988.)

each in his own tongue by, Prescott Foo, Hawaiian; Sidney Phillips, Welsh; Alex. Klein, Austrian; Job Negeim, Arabian; John Blackmore, Australian; Harold Dewsnup, English.

With the removal of the office of the pastor in Zion, R. V. Hopkins, from the general office building near the church to the Battery Block up town, and of the church architect from the small building on the church lawn to the Battery Block, better quarters are provided and more room made at the general office building for the First Presidency, Publicity Department, and the Department of Statistics.

Bishop J. F. Keir was at Mapleton, Kansas, over Saturday and Sunday, attending the district conference.

There will be a series of sermons especially for young people at the Stone Church in Independence, on Sunday evenings, beginning October 30 and continuing till December 18. The ushering and other features will be in charge of the young people, and the speakers will be Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, Walter W. Smith, John F. Garver, F. M. McDowell, and R. V. Hopkins.

A Lamoni picnic was held in south Independence on the 15th, participated in by about one hundred and fifty people. An enjoyable time was had and a short program rendered, followed by a basket dinner. F. A. Smith and R. J. Lambert were principal speakers; songs by Lamoni people were sung by Lamoni quartet and the assembly. It was decided to make this an annual affair and to this end F. A. Smith was made chairman of a committee and empowered to choose two others.

Editor S. A. Burgess attended the Eastern Iowa and Kewanee district conference over the 15th and 16th and addressed the priesthood and members at both places several times on topics of special interest to the priesthood. He returned to Independence on the 17th.

Good Supplemental Help for the Missionary

Zion's Ensign for October 13 reviews some of the good accruing from the offers of Brother E. Stafford, of Independence in sending the Ensign free for three months to any interested persons who are recommended by a missionary of the church. This is the only restriction, and made simply so he may be relieved of worry about the worthiness of those receiving the papers.

He reports to the Ensign that he has sent out about five hundred three-month subscriptions since his announcement in 1920 and as a result of this and his follow-up system of sending a letter and tract (and a second letter and tract to those who do not reply) to those receiving the papers, about fifty have been baptized, or one fourth of the number on his list who have been interested enough to reply by letter.

Naturally he does not attribute all these conversions to his work alone, but he and anyone else is justified in believing that very many of those baptized, as well as a large number who have been affected for good and may later become affiliated with us, would not have taken the step had he not pushed his campaign.

It is an excellent demonstration of what may be done by an intelligent and generous development of the Zion spirit. What he has done in a general way may be duplicated in branches and districts upon the recommendation of local workers until we shall have established as a regular feature of our work that follow-up attention that we too often lack under our present methods. May Brother Stafford's offer, still open, be still further accepted and the idea spread. It is an excellent supplement to our usual missionary work.

A Good Rule for Writers

The Deskbook of the School of Journalism, issued by the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri, contains much valuable information for those who would become proficient in the profession. Rule 22, concerning the use of figures, is one worthy of passing on to our readers, being one that causes us considerable worry constantly and we are sure that some of the things that have passed us have occasioned mental distress.

"Be certain your arithmetic is correct. If your story [or article] includes a column of figures and the total, make sure that the figures given actually make that total. If you say that 40 per cent of a sum has been raised, prove to yourself that the actual figures, when you give them, are really 40 per cent of the total. If you say that six directors were elected, count the names to make sure there are not five or seven. In few cases is it easier for the reader to detect errors than in figures, and few kinds of errors are more likely to bring sarcastic letters to the editor. A copy reader editing a story containing figures should never pass over them without proving their accuracy, if they are of such a nature as to make this possible."

History Not a Record of Wars

True history is not primarily a record of wars.

It is curious to note how differently some aspects of the late war are discussed in different countries. It is unfortunate that in history as a rule we only study the one that is produced at home.

The Franco-Prussian War is treated so differently in French and German history that one might think they were writing about an entirely different event. But this is also true of events in our own history. No matter where the physical victory may rest, the moral victory rests with the soldiers of the country where the school is located according to the local history.

It is, in fact, impossible to gain a true knowledge of history without reading more than one text, representing both sides, and then reading an impartial history.

But doing this will not change the fact that altogether too much of our histories is taken with the wars. In the one hundred and thirty-two years since the United States became a separate government, there have been the War of 1812, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the World War, a matter of about ten years of wars. Yet over half of many of our school histories is covered with a record of these relatively few battles, and one would read them in vain to learn how many friends of American independence were to be found in Great Britain.

Many of our histories of the past have been too largely a record of kings and of wars. To-day there is beginning to be a change and recognition of the importance of the history of the people, of the evolution of government, and all the social problems involved. That is as it should be; the problems of peace and the history of peace should be of many times greater importance to the children of every country, and every age than matters of war. History can only be rightly understood in the light of the philosophy of the age. What the people are thinking about, what are their ideals, determine the facts which constitute their history.

The problems of peace are of greater importance for all people, whatever their age. The history of a race is of more importance than the biography of successive rulers, though biographies of the real leaders should always bear a promiment place in our historical knowledge, because of the impress left on national social life.

For these reasons we note a question being discussed occasionally, including a recent short article of Mary Gray addressed to mothers and published in the Nonpartisan Leader for May 31. This extract follows:

"Last issue we discussed the menace and cost of militarism. What are we, as women, going to do about it? It is every woman's duty, just as it is every man's, to help by voting only for office seekers who are pledged to end war.

"But women have a duty above that of a man, in training the minds of the next generation so that there will be no wars. Did you ever read the history of the United States that is taught your children at school and notice that three fourths of the book is a story of battles and wars, in which the United States is pictured as always right and always victorious? Did you ever stop to think that the children of every other nation are also studying histories, principally about wars, and that these histories represent their countries as always right and always victorious? And that because so much space is given to wars and battles every child is led to believe that they are the most important things in the world?

"When your child gets on to high school and starts to study Latin he is given Caesar's story of the Gaelic wars to translate instead of the work of some Roman philosopher or student. Every effort of education to-day seems to be planned for the benefit of the munition makers.

"Why shouldn't we, as women, have something to say about what our children are taught in the schools, and see that their training is meant to fit them for a world at peace, rather than for a world at war?"

Tobacco Smoke a Nuisance to Many

We have many times been amused as well as a little disgusted at the attitude taken by many smokers. The Law Library Association of Saint Louis, Missouri, set aside a smoking room and prohibited smoking in the other rooms. Certain other journals ridiculed this rule. The facts were that a complete set of reports and thousands of law books were placed in the smoking room. In fact, men, nonsmokers, had to enter the room to consult some reports and digests. It was not a restriction of the personal liberty of the smokers, for they were left free to smoke and use the library. The real question involved was simply, Should those who do not smoke and do not enjoy the smell of tobacco have the liberty of consulting volumes in the law library free in fact from tobacco smoke? Should there be any room into which they could go and be free from having the air of the room polluted with the heavy smoke?

On the street cars, some smokers have considered their liberties curtailed when not permitted to smoke in every part of the car. The question is not one of their liberty alone, for most of our cities do not run special cars for women, and many a woman has been made sick by the odor of a vile pipe. Should women be permitted to ride on the street cars in the public highway without being compelled to inhale that which is nauseous to them. As a rule smokers are permitted in the back seats of the car when the windows are open, and on the back of the car at all times. Smokers have their own places to which they can retire, and should not think they have the personal liberty to become a public nuisance.

The same thing is true on the railroad train. Practically every train has a smoking car. Every chair car and every Pullman sleeper has a smoking room, yet the observation car is also many times transferred into a smoking room, thus excluding others.

The question is, Should certain rooms or cars be kept free for all people, or should they be kept for a limited few who enjoy the smell of tobacco?

The contribution of rugs and tapestries for the third floor of the new college building at Lamoni, donated by Bishop John Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, have been received. They consist of four 9 by 12 Wilton rugs for the reception hall, one large rug and one bedroom rug for the dean's apartments, and forty small ones to be placed by the individual beds. These are all of taupe color. There are white lace curtains for all the windows and plush hangings in taupe for the reception hall and dean's rooms. The quality is of the best and the design highly pleasing.

A personal letter from Apostle T. W. Williams informs us that the recent conference in the Wales District was the best he has attended in the British Isles. The work in Wales looks favorable. They will soon be able to get possession of a church building but fear that they have need for meeting places for five more churches.

Sister Rose Francis, of Kapowsin, Washington, secured a supply of Bibles and Testaments and has been holding a Bible class in her community, and has about thirty people interested, all nonmembers. There is much prejudice, but she believes it is based on a misunderstanding of our position and is trying to develop a situation so our elders can come in and preach.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

He Kept the Faith	985
The Law of the Lord Is Perfect	988
Subjects Being Discussed	988
Church News	988
Good Supplemental Help for the Missionary	1006
A Good Rule for Writers	1006
History Not a Record of Wars	1006
Tobacco Smoke a Nuisance to Many	1007
Doing Their Part	1008
Indians Will Hold Annual Convention	1008

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Signs of the Times, by R. W. Farrell	989
The Virtue of the Gospel, by Clarence Heide	990
Our Mission in Life, by B. J. Stevenson	990

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

A Tithing Story	991
-----------------	-----

Employer and Workman	993
World in Grip of Mighty Storm	993

THE FORUM:

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work.—Part 4, by J. A. Koehler	994
The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 7, by T. W. Williams	998

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Maude Peak Parham.	1001
--------------------	------

LETTERS

Abel Hall—Leonard J. Lea—Charles J. Smith—A. E. Warr—Richard Baldwin—Mrs. Minta Johnson.	1003
--	------

MISCELLANEOUS	1008
---------------	------

Doing Their Part

A brother in the field under appointment in a recent report to the Presidency writes as follows:

"The stringency of the times is felt throughout this district, and of course hinders the financial department to some extent. Yet I think our people are doing well. I just finished assisting to audit the Bishop's agent's books and report, and was surprised that they have done as well as they have, and even as they are still doing. I think they are willing to do their part. They are all people of moderate means, there being no wealthy among them."

Of course they are willing to do their part. Not only are the Saints of that district willing to do their part, but the Saints in the other districts as well. Doing their part is doing their duty, and supporting the work of the church by paying tithes and offerings, even if it is necessary to make sacrifice to do so, is to all good members of the church a duty to be cheerfully discharged.

Indians Will Hold Annual Convention

The National Society of American Indians are announcing their tenth annual convention to be held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, at Detroit, Michigan, October 26 to November 2. Arrangements have been made for some of their leading men to occupy in the churches of the city during the week, and friends of the Indians are invited to attend the sessions.

There has been considerable comment concerning the summer courses offered at Williams College, Williamston, Illinois. The course which has attracted the greatest attention is the Institute of Politics. Such men as Lord Bryce, M. Tittoni, President of the Italian Senate, Count Teleky of Hungary, and Baron Sergius J. Korff of Russia were present and delivered lectures on international politics. President Lowell, of Harvard, and Chief Justice Taft also addressed the institute.

Friday evening the O. S. F. Class of the Religio at the Stone Church, Independence, honored the prominent church workers in a program entirely devoted to the exposition of the historical events and a few humorous incidents in their lives.

These noble men and women, our leaders and friends, have consecrated their time to the advancement of the church, but with all the work which these people have accomplished, do the members of their congregations know them any better as real human beings, as themselves? Or do they know them as highly efficient machines which are building up the church of Christ and preaching Zion.

In comparing the lives of our leaders with the leaders of the church of the New Testament, we find the same incidents occurring in each. So this program was arranged to bring the members of the congregation into closer and more personal contact of friendship with the people upon whom falls the active direction of the church.

These people have not only contributed their time, but by the power of inspiration have given us songs and poems. No words can better express the cause for the wonderful lives of these men and women who are every day vindicating the principles and ideals of this church, than those of President Frederick M. Smith: "So we still stand for one of the fundamental ideals of the church, and that is not only belief in God, but a sure and secure belief that God will reveal his will to us, and speak to us in our own language and in his own way."

Hymns "Admonition"; "The old, old path"; were sung by the congregation, led by Brother F. A. Russell. A quartet of girls sang "Consecration." A violin solo, "The old, old path," was rendered, and short sketches were given of the follow-

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Resignation From the Quorum Twelve

This is to notify the church at large that William M. Aylor has filed with the Presidency his resignation as an apostle and member of the Quorum of Twelve. After due consultation with members of the Quorum of Twelve, the resignation has been accepted.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 11, 1921.

Appointments

Elder Joseph Luff has been appointed by the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, to labor as a general missionary subject to the direction of the Presidency and Twelve.

Elder Hyrum O. Smith has been appointed to fill a vacancy on the Revising Committee, Inspired Version, Teachers' Edition, caused by the withdrawal of Elder Paul M. Hanson, who is to have charge of the office work of the Quorum of Twelve.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.
October 6, 1921. THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

Conference Notices

Western Maine, conference and convention at Little Deer Isle, November 12 and 13. Business session, Saturday, 10.30; priesthood meeting, 2.30; preaching at 7. Sunday services: prayer and sacramental service, 9 a. m.; preaching, 11; institute work in charge of N. M. Wilson, district superintendent, 2.30; preaching at 7. A. Begg, president, Vinalhaven, Maine; Louise Eaton, secretary, Mountainville, Maine.

Convention Notices

Western Montana, at Bozeman, November 4. Prayer meeting at 10 a. m.; business session at 11.15; institute work, 2 p. m.; program in the evening. Mrs. George Thorburn, superintendent, Race Track, Montana.

ing people: Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, Daniel T. Williams, R. V. Hopkins, Harold C. Burgess, Walter W. Smith, Vida E. Smith, and Audentia Anderson.

The program was well received and the O. S. F. Class, composed of boys and girls aged from seventeen to twenty-one years, acquitted themselves creditably.—Zion's Ensign, October 6, 1921.

The men of the Kansas City Stake have an organization they call the Men's Progressive Club, which seems to function in various ways as the name might indicate. In addition to the usual officers and committees they issue a monthly bulletin of four pages 8½ by 11 inches, 3 columns of 8 point type to a page. It is called Men's Club Bulletin. James H. McVay and C. A. Smurthwaite are editors, the October number having been produced by the last-named. The number is largely devoted to the discussion of social and economic problems as related to our program, with a modicum of local announcements and no personal items. Several of the articles will be reproduced in our columns.

The October number is number 9, of volume 1, and altogether presents an interesting development in a local periodical. Evidently the advertising pays the expenses of the paper.

The following extract from report to the Presidency by a district president is in tone quite in consonance with reports from other districts:

"The work in the district is gaining ground. I have not the exact figures at hand, but there have been upwards of two hundred and fifty baptisms in this district so far this year, and a splendid interest, generally speaking, through the district."

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

5 Jan 22 France
Mrs Th-s France
116 W 8th St
Lambert, Iowa

any man among you have
and concubines he shall
Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, OCTOBER 21

NUMBER 43

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized J

Issued
of post-

EDITORIAL

The Bargain Counter of Life

An address by Elbert A. Smith to the young people at the Stone Church at Independence, Tuesday evening, August 6, 1921.

You young people stand at the bargain counter of life. Who are you going to do business with? What will you get in exchange for that which you have to offer? Do you hold yourselves high as men and women should, or are you prepared to barter yourselves for a mess of pottage and very bitter pottage, too, as some are doing to-day? There is a poem which says:

"I bargained with life for a penny,
And life would pay no more,
However I begged at evening
When I counted my scanty store.

"For Life is just an employer.
He gives you what you ask.
But once you have set the wages,
Why, you must bear the task.

"I worked for a menial hire,
Only to learn, dismayed,
That any wage I had asked of Life,
Life would have paid."

It seems to me that many people are holding themselves too cheaply. They remind me of the story you may have heard about the woman who awoke in the night, weeping bitterly. Her husband inquired why she was weeping and she replied, "I dreamed that I was in a market where husbands were for sale. There were some very fine ones for $5,000 each, and some very good looking ones as low as $500 each." The husband then said, "I don't see anything in that to weep about. Did you see any there who looked like me?" The woman then began again to weep bitterly and replied, "There is just the trouble. There were hundreds and hundreds of them just like you. They were done up in bunches like asparagus and sold for fifteen cents a dozen." I think some woman must have made that dream up to make us men feel cheap. Yet it is a fact that some men are going for about that price, and if that is all they ask for themselves, perhaps that is all they are worth.

You have a splendid inheritance. It is beyond value. No monetary valuation could be placed upon it. You have the inheritance of youth. You do not perhaps realize now all its value. I recall a certain cartoon. The first picture represented a youth sitting with his chin in his hand looking into the future. He said, "I will be happy then." The second represented an old man with his chin upon his staff looking into the past, saying, "I was happy then." With your youth you have the natural accompaniment of energy, ambition, and enthusiasm.

Many solicitors stand at the bargain counter of life, eager to do business with you and take from you that which you have to offer. There are, for instance, many secret orders and societies; there also is the dance hall, the card table, and low dives and high dives of all kinds. Every kind of entertainment and dissipation, from the highest to the very lowest and most debased that debauched human minds can conceive of, is eager and anxious to take all of your surplus time and all of your surplus energy, all of the splendid abilities of your youth, and in the end give you nothing in exchange but vain regret. What sort of a bargain do you propose to drive at the bargain counter of life? Time will take away these things that you have, of such inestimable worth. You cannot eat your cake and keep it. You may as well make your bargain now, while you may. If you do not get out of these things what they are worth, eventually time will take them away from you as the one talent was taken away from the man who hid it in a napkin and refused to put it to service.

Among other institutions, the church comes to the bargain counter of life desirous to do business with you. What has the church for you? What have you for the church? First of all the church has salvation for you through the atonement of Christ and the plan of life and salvation laid down by him. I do not refer alone to some theoretical salvation from a theological hell of fire and brimstone and in a theological heaven where we will forever play upon harps. I pity the neighbors when I begin to play upon my harp. I refer also to salvation here and now. If you do not know what that means, look around you and see the wreck and ruin that men and women and boys and girls are making of their lives. Men do not need to die to go to hell. There are many living men to-day who carry their hell around with them. They have an individual hell. The church by its ideals, philosophy of life, and spiritual influence will save you from these things, and save you to all that is good and noble.

In the second place, the church has communion to offer you, that communion and fellowship that we enjoyed Sunday morning at the sacramental service—that fellowship with God on the one hand and man on the other so beautifully set forth in the hymn that we sing, "Blest be the tie that binds." You will appreciate this fellowship more and more as time goes by. That is the beauty of the things that the church has to offer you; time does not mar or diminish, but rather makes them better.

The church has also to offer you service. First its interpretation of service and ideal of service which cannot be found elsewhere; and then the many fields of service increasing in number that are opening up before you. These may include some very, very important missions or some apparently unimportant tasks in obscure branches or Sunday school or Religio meetings. A man need not necessarily be proud of the elevation of the office that he occupies. He should be proud of the way in which he is doing his work, whether it be great or small.

I am reminded of another Ford story, new to me, but perhaps old to you. A young man drafted in the late war was asked his profession. He replied, "I am a mechanic." When asked where he worked, he said in the Ford factory. "What is your work?" "I tighten up burr number 17." He did his work well; he tightened up burr number 17 on each car. He was a mechanic. Possibly some human life might depend on the way in which he tightened up burr number 17. It may for a time be your business in some obscure place in the church to tighten up burr number 17. The way in which we do that work may be vital to the smooth running of the machine. In the end, of course, your abilities, your devotion, and your preparation will determine the importance and extent of the field that you will occupy.

What have you to give the church? You have yourselves, and the church asks nothing less. We are commanded to love God with all our heart, mind, strength, and soul. The heart is the seat of the emotions, supposedly; the mind is the seat of intelligence; the soul is the whole man. So all that you have to offer of service of body or mind or heart should be at the disposal of God in the interests of his church. And you need not fear that you will not find work to do if you make yourself ready in this spirit. I was a member of the old Students' Society in Lamoni which was the pioneer of all young people's organizations in this church. Out of it grew Zion's Religio-Literary Society. The motto of that society was, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready and God will send thee flax." I can testify that every member of that society who got his distaff and his spindle ready found all the flax coming to his hand that he was able to spin. I am glad to note the way in which the young people are coming forward all over the church to line themselves up with the church and take their place and do their part. This has been particularly noticeable at the various reunions that I have attended of late years, also in the revival services of the young people during the past winter.

I wish to read a part of a letter that came to the desk of the Presidency this very day, as it is typical of the spirit that is moving upon our young people. This letter is from a young man who has spent two years in Graceland College, one of them in the class of religious education. He is a young man, probably more than six feet tall, and big and strong in proportion. He was a star football player and the best baseball pitcher in college athletics. He is a man all over and his reaction to this question of what the church has to give him and that which he has to give to the church at the bargain counter of life is typical of the best young manhood of the church. He is now in the mission field and writes as follows:

"I wish briefly to express my appreciation of what the church has done for me. I was permitted to attend Graceland for two years, which privilege I esteem as one of the most valuable in my life. First, I went as a member of the religious education class and after that as a college student. I hold that the good I received while there is far beyond my power to repay. The reason I write now is that I wish to explain the course I decided to take last spring. If I understand correctly I had the chance to attend college again this fall. This I refused to do, not that I do not love Graceland and her work, but because I felt that it was time for me to get into the harness and to develop along missionary experience lines along with the others.

"My experiences at Graceland cause me to love the church and its work more than I could have otherwise. I gained a newer, a broader, and a grander outlook on the work of Zion. My ideas of consecration and devotion to the teachings of the church were made deeper and more lasting. For this reason I have determined to labor in the missionary work without reservation. I have enjoyed the work this summer and I hope to continue faithful to my duty until I am done."

My sympathy is with you young people in all of your legitimate activities, even in your recreation and play. By learning to play together now you will learn to work together, and the experiences of fellowship therein will be very valuable to you. But I must again impress upon your minds that you have come to a critical time in life and you have reached that period at a critical time in the world's history. Never before were there so many mean and vicious forces to appeal to you at the bargain counter of life for your patronage; but it is equally true that never before was God's appeal stronger, clearer, or more powerful. I hope that divine wisdom will aid you to make a good and wise and profitable bargain at the bargain counter of life.

Quorum of Twelve Drafts a Missionary Policy

The recent sessions of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in joint council held in Independence, Missouri, were very pleasant, amicable, and profitable. The general list of conference appointees was not gone over, though some changes were made in appointment where it seemed imperative. At a future meeting of the council prior to the next General Conference the entire missionary list will be scrutinized and rearranged where necessary.

At the recent meeting lack of finances prohibited new appointments, and methods were discussed looking towards curtailment of general expenses to meet the present situation. It is ardently to be hoped, however, that the present financial depression will soon pass, that the church may not be hampered in her policy of expansion in foreign mission fields. There is the greatest need that we should enlarge the scope of our work in the British Mission, in Palestine, and Europe, in fact in all the foreign fields where we are established, and that other missions should be opened. All should pray that our work along that line may not long be delayed by lack of means.

Following the sitting of the joint council members of the Quorum of Twelve held several sessions at which they discussed and formulated a policy for the direction of missionaries under their jurisdiction. Copies of this document, we understand, were to be sent to all members of the traveling missionary force. An effort was made to define the relations of the missionary and the missionary supervisor, also to direct missionaries so that they may labor in cooperation with local men where necessary without misunderstanding and ensuing conflict. The document formulated by members of the Quorum of Twelve reads as follows:

"Draft of Missionary Policy"

"1. All missionary work at home and abroad is under the direction of the Quorum of Twelve. Abroad, the missionary work may be under the immediate supervision of one or more members of the quorum, but the general policy is uniform, though of sufficient elasticity to be adapted to local conditions.

"2. Missionaries in each district or section of the mission field will be under the direction of some minister selected by the Quorum of Twelve, designated 'Missionary Supervisor.'

"3. All missionary efforts, whether by the general missionary corps or the local men, shall be under the direction of the supervisor, and be made according to the general rules herein set forth.

"4. All missionaries will be responsible directly to the supervisor, who will receive his instructions directly from the Quorum of Twelve, to which office he, in turn, will be directly responsible.

"5. The supervisor and the district president will work cooperatively with intimate understanding of each other's purposes and methods, thereby avoiding friction. The idea of separateness must not be fostered, but as partners in a common business all should coordinate their efforts to bring success to the cause as a whole.

"6. Consultation should be had between the missionary supervisor and the district president to arrange for annual missionary services in the branches; a program should be prepared as to times, places, and speakers. When completed a copy of this program should be sent to the office of the Quorum of Twelve."

"7. The development of new openings by missionaries should not be sporadic. After consultation with the missionary supervisor the work should be systematized to save time, effort, and money. The results of these efforts should be reported in detail to the missionary supervisor who, in association with the district president, will provide for 'follow-up' activities.

"8. Missionaries must not be transferred, nor should they travel from district to district nor attend reunions outside of their appointed fields without the knowledge and consent of the office of the Quorum of Twelve. Such instruction to be issued through the missionary supervisor.

"9. Missionaries leaving their fields of labor, except in case of emergency, will use the cards provided by the office of the Quorum of Twelve. The notice of leaving should be sent ten days before leaving the field, and that of return to the field when on the grounds. This in order that proper record may be made and the supervisor's plans not disarranged.

"10. Missionaries are directed to arrange their work so that there shall be systematic tracting and house to house visiting, and a record of such work both as to number of tracts distributed and hours spent in this work shall be reported. The object of the tracting to be personal acquaintance and conversation.

"11. It is also required that whenever the weather and circumstances permit, open air meetings shall be held and records made of such meetings for report. Tracts and literature for missionary purposes will be supplied through the Bureau of Publicity on application.

"12. Reporting. All missionaries and supervisors will report directly to the office of the Quorum of Twelve as follows:

"(a) The weekly letter should contain a resume of the work done and the results accruing therefrom with any suggestions or other matter of official interest. When a member of the Quorum of Twelve is in charge of a field a copy of the weekly letter shall be furnished to him also.

"(b) Monthly statistical reports. Besides the statistics, the column marked 'Remarks' should be filled in carefully with a summary of the month's activities for information and use by the office of the Quorum of Twelve. A copy shall be forwarded to the missionary supervisor.

"(c) Missionaries should send a complimentary report to the district conference in their fields of labor for the information and encouragement of local congregations.

"13. When in branches and districts all missionaries should consider the local authorities and seek to labor harmoniously with them; and all baptisms and ordinations in branches should be performed with the knowledge and consent of such local officers. In case of difficulty arising between the local officers and the missionaries, let the missionaries refer the matter to the missionary supervisor, and in case of persistency of the trouble, to the office of the Quorum of Twelve.

"14. Missionaries should not permit themselves to be elected to branch or district office without the consent of the Quorum of Twelve.

"15. Advertising is a valuable instrument in our work and we advise all to get in touch with the Bureau of Publicity for the needed instruction and counsel in this line. All stationery for official purposes will be supplied from the office of the Quorum of Twelve upon application.

"16. Let all exercise the utmost economy in traveling and by concentration of effort and forethought increase our efficiency and reduce our expenditures.

"17. Under the policy of coordination all departments of the church work are recognized as being of equal value and should have the respect and consideration of all church ministers. Let us, therefore, build up the several departments, Sunday school, Religio, Women's Department, and also use our utmost influence to encourage the development of our finances for prosecution of our work in the building up of the kingdom of God."

President Smith in Utah in Summer of 1920

In the HERALD for August 30 there appears a reference to a statement published in the Rockland Courier Gazette of July 20 which inferred a close relation between this church and that of Utah. The statement concluded: "Last summer Frederick Smith visited the president of the Utah division and was the guest of the Mormons at a number of functions given in his honor." The context immediately preceding identified Frederick Smith as the President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and, while it stated that the churches were distinct, it still inferred a close relation and implied it in the above sentence.

President Smith went to Europe in the month of July, 1920, and did not, at the moment, recall that he had been in Utah. Shortly after this item was printed in the HERALD, Elder M. A. Etzenhouser wrote us as follows from Salt Lake City, but the letter was misplaced during our absence and has just come to our attention. His letter follows:

"Editors Herald: I note in the HERALD for August 30, page 619, an article headed 'President Smith was not in Utah last summer.' To my mind, the article is rather misleading, as it seems to contain some truth and some error, with the error predominating.

"President Smith arrived in Salt Lake City Saturday, June 5, 1920, and remained in the city until Wednesday or Thursday of the next week. While he was in the city, or immediately following his departure, it was reported in the Deseret News that he had called on the First Presidency of the Mormon Church and met President Lund and Penrose, and that they had taken him for an automobile drive over the city. Whether the report is true or not about the drive I am not sure, but I think it is true that President Smith called upon them.

"Of course the basis of the statement of Mrs. Shepard was the Deseret News account, which I am informed was copied rather widely. She could only be blamed for accepting a newspaper report without verifying it.

"I call your attention to this for the reason that if any one were inclined to investigate the matter they would find that there was some error and it would cast a reflection upon the HERALD as to its veracity.

"Very sincerely,

"M. A. ETZENHOUSER."

We referred this at once to President F. M. Smith and received promptly the following reply:

"Editors Herald: Your letter of October 13 is at hand, accompanied by letter from M. A. Etzenhouser, and in reply will state that Brother Etzenhouser is right, that I was in Salt Lake in June, the fore part of it, in 1920, on my way back from California before I left Independence for the East. I had occasion to stop in Salt Lake City and stayed at the Hotel Utah. In company with some others, and I am not sure but what M. A. Etzenhouser was one, I visited the office building of the Utah Mormon Church in order to see the building, and while passing through I stepped into the office of Mr. Lund and also that of Mr. Penrose and shook hands with them and passed on. It was an informal and even an incidental call, and was not in any way official, for I had no intention of calling on any of the officials when I went into the building. I wanted simply to see their building, and I was escorted through as most tourists are. As I stated before, I have not met President Grant at any time.

"At the time I wrote you before I did not even recall the incident mentioned as being at all likely to be the foundation for the story you had referred to, but if it is based on that then they can make the most of it.

"Very sincerely yours,

"FREDERICK M. SMITH."

It will be seen from the above that President F. M. Smith stopped in Salt Lake City on account of our own church interests there, as the Reorganization has maintained churches in Utah many years and, in fact, was the very first church organization to send missionaries to Utah to preach against polygamy and the other evils which had arisen there. More than fifty years ago, the first missionary from the Reorganized Church went to Salt Lake City, and the effort has been continuous ever since and has resulted in the establishment of branches in various parts of Utah.

Being there on church business, he went, as might any other tourist, to see the buildings, just incidentally, in passing through, shaking hands with Mr. Lund and Mr. Penrose.

We regret that this error should have occurred in our columns, but we take pleasure in immediately correcting it. It will be noted that President Smith repeats his statement that he is not acquainted with Mr. Grant, of the Utah church.

But the most essential aspect is that with which all our readers are familiar, that there is absolutely no connection between the two organizations, and that this church has been one of the most continual opponents, not only of polygamy, but also of the other erroneous doctrines introduced in the Utah church.

Church News

President Frederick M. Smith left Independence on the evening of the 24th for a trip of some four weeks in the East. He goes to Detroit via Chicago and will address the national convention of the Society of American Indians on "Citizenship and religion." He will be the principal speaker at dedications of church edifices at London, Ontario, and Buffalo, New York. Ere he returns he will visit Washington, District of Columbia, in the interests of the church.

The Board of Publication will meet in Independence on the 27th. They held a short session on the 14th.

Arrangements have been made whereby the Herald Publishing House will secure two new three-magazine Intertype machines for the composing department, trading in two of the typesetting machines now in use. This will increase the productive capacity of the plant as well as be more convenient for the workmen.

Audentia Anderson is still at the Sanitarium, following her operation from which she is recovering very well. She has had several attacks of gallstones the past week, causing considerable distress.

Miss Mary Steele, in charge of the work of the girls for the Women's Department and the Religio Department, has gone from Independence to Lamoni to attend Graceland College. She will continue her work for the girls and take such special work there as will better qualify her to serve the church in this capacity.

At the evening service at the Stone Church in Independence a class of seven sisters graduated from the teacher training work, the occasion being given over to a program on this subject, with Walter W. Smith as speaker. W. A. McDowell was the speaker in the morning.

Rainfall in Palestine

The table of rainfall in Palestine which appears in the article by T. W. Williams now running in the HERALD was taken from Palestine and Its Transformation, by Ellsworth Huntington. This appeared in the issue of October 4.

The table of rainfall should prove of value to our readers. In taking the actual rainfall for more than sixty years by ten-year periods, we note that 1846 to 1856 the average was 25.82; from 1856 to 1866, 24.27; 1866 to 1876, 23.9; 1876 to 1886, 26.6; 1886 to 1896, 31.51; 1896 to 1906, 29.35.

We have also before us a statement ascribed to Mr. Glaisher consummated in ten-year periods. It will be noted that the table used by Elder Williams is not identical with these figures of Mr. Glaisher, since the rainfall is now given through the winter rainy season rather than by the calendar year. The statement published here does not state what time of the year is taken as the initial month. Still the average 1860 to 1870, according to the table furnished by Brother Williams, gives us 21.50; 1870 to 1880, 23.41; 1880 to 1890, 27.58; 1890 to 1900, 30.43. But 1901 is low, which will make an average for the last eleven years of 29.12. In fact, the nine years, 1900 to 1909, gives an average of only 25.6.

As Elder Williams points out, the idea of fertility depending upon rainfall is not based entirely on the biblical record. As to Palestine being reinhabited, we note that in 1840 there were only 8,000 Jews in Palestine. By 1890 there were 75,000, and this figure is doubtless now increased; and the Jews are doing more for the fertility of the land than have any other people who have been there since the fall of Jerusalem.

In connection with the rainfall and the idea that Palestine suffered from lack of rain, conditions existing in Texas and even in California would fully explain to most travelers how such an idea could become prevalent.

We note that Elder Williams states that conditions are similar to those in Southern California. Those who have visited California for the first time are much struck with the general parched appearance of the land. It is not the result of lack of rainfall or lack of water, but it is the character of the soil. With water, tremendous crops can be grown. Where the land is not cultivated and the soil is neglected, it looks like a desert. It is a matter of catching the water in basins, then utilizing it through irrigation, or the sinking of wells to draw good drinking water from underlying lakes. We are informed that such lakes exist also in Palestine.

If Palestine is at all like Southern California, once it was deserted by its people, once agriculture was allowed to lapse, the appearance to the traveler would be one of astonishing dryness, of a parched land and a desert, and this would be true even though the rains were received in usual measures. The fact that its climate and fertility were praised in early times, can be easily understood by those who have listened to a Californian.

Brother Edward Rannie reports that the Clinton conference, held at Mapleton, Kansas, was unusually well attended. The roads were good and there were visiting Saints from as far as Nowata, Oklahoma, one hundred and forty miles away. A good spirit prevailed and all seemed to enjoy themselves. Bishop James F. Keir was prevailed upon by the conference presidency to preach all four sermons.

We note in a current issue of the Elida Enterprise, (New Mexico) that Elders J. E. Vanderwood and J. B. Wildermuth are holding services in the First State Bank Building there. These follow two weeks of services at Kentucky Valley.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Sociology of the Bible, of "Christianity," and "the Restoration"

By C. A. Smurthwaite

Justice the key to divine sociology, the common utilization of land the basic principle.

(Sermon delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday morning, August 14, 1921.)

After inviting the sympathy and prayers of his hearers in the elucidation of the subject to be discussed, the speaker said his thesis was divisible into seven parts, each part worthy of an hour's discourse, so that to compress the subject into the forty-five minutes at his disposal he would have to be brief and rapid in his treatment of the subject, which he regarded as one of supreme value and importance.

The Thesis

That "mishpat," or justice, was the principle of Old Testament or Israelitish sociology, basic in the utilization of the land of Canaan in common by all Israel.

That the Jewish church rejected the principle of "mishpat"—of justice—and adopted the pagan or Amoritish sociology of the private ownership of land, laying the foundation for the permanent poverty of the many and permanent wealth for the few.

That the church of Jesus Christ was intended by him to be the continuity of the religion of the prophets, as contradistinguished from the religion of the Jewish church.

That the Roman Catholic Church rejected the sociology of the Bible and adopted that of paganism.

That the Protestant protest was based upon the economics of the possessing classes; and that the Reformation churches were founded and operated for the benefit of the land-owning class, rather than for the masses.

Scriptural Basis

Your earnest attention is invited to the following scriptural quotations (Inspired Version):

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the salt of the earth; but if the salt shall lose its savor wherewith shall the earth be salted? The salt shall henceforth be good for nothing, but to be cast down and be trodden under foot by men. Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house. Therefore, let your light so shine before this world that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven. . . . For I say unto you, Except your righteousness shall exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 15-22.

"What man is there among you, who, if his son ask bread, will give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? . . . Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7: 18-21.

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth."—Matthew 5: 7.

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added."—Matthew 6: 33.

Rescue of Industrial Slaves

When the children of Israel were rescued by the bold and daring Moses, they were taken out of bondage, as you all know. They had been the industrial slaves of the Egyptians, and had shown greater intelligence than the Egyptian workers themselves, doubtless because of their traditional worship of Jehovah. It is palpably evident that Israel could not be formed into a nation while in a condition of industrial slavery, and thus their rescue from Egypt was a part of the plan of Jehovah to carry out his promise to Abraham by the realization of which all the nations of the earth were to be blessed. It was essential that God should make of Israel a nation.

The sixteenth chapter of Exodus tells us the thrilling and inspiring story of the feeding of the children of Israel in the wilderness. Doubtless we are all familiar with this wonderful story. If we are not, let us read it thoroughly and study it. The wonderful part of this story is not the manna which fell from heaven, miraculous as that may appear to us to be, at this distance of time. That was a mere incident and in itself would not be of great value to the human race. The wonderful part of that story, and which will remain permanent as the key to the final equality of the race, the fundamental of divine sociology, is that dealing with the manner in which the manna should be gathered, and the limitations placed upon its gathering, resulting in this: that, although some of the stronger gathered more than they needed and some of the weaker gathered less than they needed, when it was all divided up everybody had all that they needed and there was nothing over, none lacked and none had more than supplied their needs; and that the land of the wilderness was the common possession of the people and utilized by them all for the common good. It was by reason of this common utilization of the land that the manna belonged to all in common.

Had the wilderness been divided up, and private ownership established, one man, say, having 160 acres, another 320, and others 1,000, and still others 10,000 and 100,000, and the big majority having no land at all which they could set their foot upon and say was theirs, how would the people have been fed? and what sort of a social foundation would there have been laid? Notwithstanding that God had sent enough manna for all, it would have been the property of the land-owners, who would doubtless have been so kind as to employ their more humble brethren—the dispossessed—to gather the manna in heaps and sell it, being paid for their labor just what is necessary to keep body and soul together. These humble brethren would thus have become the slaves of the landowners, and their rescue from Egypt would have been a mere exchange of masters. And the fundamental principle of social justice would have been lost for ever.

God led the children of Israel to Canaan and gave them the land—all the land—for an inheritance, as we are told in Joshua 11: 23.

But when they got there they discovered a people already in possession, the Amorites, who had no national government and no national religion, and who were divided into independent city-states, each worshipping its own god, or baal. These baals were men, who were the masters, the owners of the people. That was the type of all the ancient civilizations most of the inhabitants of the earth being in the same kind of slavery, the minority, or upper class, owning the land, and using all the machinery of government and religion for their own benefit.

Conflict With Amorite Scheme

In contrast the Israelitish economic and social standpoint, thanks to their experience in the wilderness, was "mishpat," meaning justice, and "enmishpat," meaning fountain or well of justice; and it came into direct conflict with that of the Amorites. The Israelites contending for the common utilization of the land, as the key to social equality, and the Amorites for the private ownership of the land, and the consequent disregard of the common people.

The "mishpat" struggle assumed a distinctly religious form when one of the kings who had imported the Baal-worship of the wealthy Phoenicians, took away the land of a humble peasant by force. The Prophet Elijah now comes forth, demanding the worship of Jehovah alone, as the one true God, for the Hebrew nation itself had become tinctured with baalism: "How long go ye limping between the two sides?" asks Elijah. (1 Kings 18: 21.) On the very piece of ground which the king had seized, the prophet appeared to declare upon him the doom of a shameful death, he having killed the man Naboth, whose land he had taken. The king had offered to buy the land from Naboth with money, but Naboth refused on the ground that the Lord forbade that he should give up the inheritance of his fathers, doubtless remembering the basic law of Israelitish land-tenure recorded in Leviticus 25: 23: "And the Lord spake unto Moses in Mount Sinai, saying, The land shall not be sold for ever for the land is mine," an injunction confirmed in Deuteronomy 12: 1: "These are the statutes and judgments, which ye shall observe to do in the land, which the Lord God of thy fathers giveth thee to possess it all the days that ye live upon the earth." The struggle thus formed continued, the moral and economic struggle of the favored few against the dispossessed many, and the classes prevailed, because all wealth, and consequently power, comes from the land.

When the sons of Samuel who were governing Israel turned aside from "mishpat," justice, the people demanded a king like unto the nations by which they were surrounded. The prophet warned them, true to the divine afflatus, that a king would take away the best of their fields, their vineyards, their olive yards, and give their lands to the nobles that always surround the throne, and in consequence the people would become the king's men servants and maid servants, slaves again. (1 Samuel 8: 14.) Thus the prophet foretold the concentration of landed property, of the soil, coming into the possession of a special class, the nobility, involving the depression of an ever-increasing number of the people into the lower social classes.

The Jewish church failed to hearken unto the words of the prophets, rejected the social solution, introduced ritualism and forms and ceremonies, displacing justice and righteousness. The upper classes came to regard themselves as the proprietors of the church, the wealthy and priestly classes became merged into a single body opposed to the interests of the common man, holding the lower orders in slavery, monopolized the soil, and controlled the operation of commerce and manufacture.

Degeneracy of Jewish Plan

The book of the Wisdom of Sirach, written a century before Christ, and rejected from the Hebrew canon of scripture, discloses to what extent the oppression of the people had descended.

"How shall he become wise that holdeth the plow, that glories in the shaft of the good, that driveth oxen, and is occupied in their labors, and whose discourse is of the stock of the bulls? He will set his heart upon turning his furrows, and his wakefulness is to give his heifers their fodder. So is every artificer and workman that passeth his time by night as by day. . . . So is the smith sitting by the anvil . . . the vapor of fire will waste his flesh . . . the noise of the hammer will ever be in his ear. So is the potter sitting at his work. . . . He will fashion the clay with his arm . . . he will be wakeful to make clean the furnace . . . they shall not be sought for in the council of the people; and in the assembly they shall not mount on high."

Of course not. Is it not the same to-day, my friends, that those who are compelled to work long hours, in unhealthy places, in an environment of constant labor, are dull and unintelligent? They are not sought for counsel, nor could they give forth any wisdom if they were. Even our own young people, who work in city employment, are so worn out with their daily toil that it is an added burden for them to attend the various functions of the church and to receive the education and spiritual and intellectual development they stand so much in need of, and must receive, if our fond hope of Zion's redemption is to be realized.

The voices of all the prophets—Isaiah, who spoke of "them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no more room"; Amos, who denounced those whose "treading is upon the poor, and . . . take from him burdens of wheat," making themselves "at ease in Zion," have ever been raised in behalf of the restoration of the ancient "mishpat"—justice of Israel. And in similar vein Jesus denounced those who devour widows' houses and made long prayers, and who had left undone the weightier matters of the law, especially justice, while strictly observing the trivialities. And it was these who had thus unconsciously witnessed that they were the "sons" of them that slew the prophets.

These oppressions caused the people to look for a Messiah, who would bring about a social revolution; they wanted to be free from the rule of the upper Jewish classes, for, in the words of Job, "Is not thy wickedness great and thine iniquities infinite? for thou hast taken pledges of thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their clothing. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withheld bread from the hungry. But as for the mighty man, he had the earth, and the honorable man dwelt in it. Thou hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken." (Job 22: 5-9.)

The faith of the common people who heard Jesus gladly was founded on the following passages from Isaiah 11: 1-4; 42: 1-4:

"And there shall come forth a shoot out of the stock of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots shall bear fruit. . . . And he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither decide after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and decide with equity for the meek of the land. . . . He shall bring forth mishpat [justice] to the nations. . . . He shall bring forth mishpat [justice] in truth. . . . He shall not fail or be discouraged till he shall have set mishpat [justice] in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law."

The Sociology Jesus Proclaimed

Jesus came to further develop the religion of Jehovah among his people, the Jews. To claim anything else would be an abandonment of his own people. The Christ left to his immediate apostles the task of taking his gospel to the Gentile. Christianity was to be a continuity of the religion of Israel, Judaism and Christianity alike worshipping the redeeming God, Christ being the embodiment of the God of the Bible, being, as Paul says, in Hebrews 1: 3, "The forth-shining of his glory and the expression of his being." And when Mary, the mother of Jesus, became conscious of her coming motherhood, she broke forth into inspired song:

"My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit rejoiceth in God my Savior . . . for he who is mighty hath done to me great things . . . for his mercy is on those who fear him from generation to generation. He hath showed strength with his arm. He hath put down the mighty from their high seats; and exalted them of low degree. . . . He hath filled the hungry with good things; but the rich he hath sent empty away." (Luke 2: 45-52.)

And so we find Jesus setting forth the simplest and yet the profoundest fundamental sociology ever expressed: He condemned the rich man because he kept piling up his wealth and did not use it for the common good (Luke 12:16-21); he condemned those who would not renounce all they have in behalf of all as not being his disciple (Luke 14:33); in the parable of the talents and the pounds he demands the use of the Lord's property for his purposes, and consigns to hades those who do not yield it, (Matthew 25: 14-30; Luke 19: 13-27); he demanded that stones be not substituted for bread, nor serpents for fish (Matthew 7: 9-12); that every good tree must bring forth good fruit or be burnt (Matthew 7: 17-20); that a man is better than property (Matthew 12: 12); that the rich must dispose of their possessions and give to the poor in order to follow Christ (Luke 18: 22), and when they do they are to receive a hundredfold in this life of houses and lands; that the meek are the rightful inheritors of the earth (Matthew 5: 7).

This descriptive sociology, and the study of the basic principle of land-tenure as required in the law of Moses, reacted upon the early church and gave it a distinctly social complexion. A few quotations from the writings of the post-apostolic fathers will disclose the social spirit of early Christianity.

Postapostolic Teachings

Said Clement of Alexandria, in the second century, "I know that God has given us the use of goods, but only as far as is necessary; and he has determined that the use shall be common. It is absurd and disgraceful for one to live magnificently and luxuriously when many are hungry."

Tertullian, in the second century:

"All is common with us except women. Jesus was our man, God and brother. He restored unto all men what cruel murderers took from them by the sword. Christians have no master, and no Christian shall be bound for bread and raiment. The land is no man's inheritance; none shall possess it as property."

Cyprian, in the third century:

"No man shall be received into our commune who sayeth that the land may be sold. God's footstool is not property."

Ambrose, in the fourth century:

"How far, O rich, do you extend your senseless avarice? Do you intend to be the sole inhabitants of the earth? Why do you drive out the fellow sharers of nature, and claim it all for yourselves? The earth was made for all, rich and poor, in common. Why do you rich claim it as your exclusive right? . . . Nature gave all things in common for the use of all: usurpation created private rights. Property hath no rights. The earth is the Lord's, and we are his offspring. The pagans hold earth as property. They do blaspheme God."

John Chrysostom, in the third century:

"Tell me whence you are rich? From whom have you received? From your grandfather, you say, from your father, are you able to show . . . that that possession is just? . . . Its beginning and root grew necessarily out of injustice. Why? Because God did not make this man rich and that man poor in the beginning. Now, when he created the earth, did he allot much treasure to one man, and forbid another to seek any. He gave the same earth to be cultivated by all. Since therefore his bounty is common, how comes it that you have so many fields, and your neighbor not even a clod of earth? . . . The idea we should have of the rich and the covetous—they are truly as robbers who standing in the highway de-spoil the passers-by."

Augustine, fourth century:

"The superfluities of the rich are the necessities of the poor. They who possess superfluities, possess the goods of others."

Gregory, sixth century:

"They must be admonished who do not seek another's good, yet do not give their own, that they know that the earth from which they have received is common to all men, and therefore its products are given in common to all. They therefore wrongly think they are innocent who claim for themselves the common gift of God. When they do not give what they have received, they assist in the death of neighbors, because daily almost as many of the poor perish as have been deprived of means which the rich have kept to themselves. When we give necessities to the needy, we do not bestow upon them our own goods; we return to them their own; we pay a debt of justice that fulfills a work of mercy."

That was the sort of social gospel these early fathers preached to their pagan neighbors and their Christian brethren, breathing two principles set forth in the restoration, what we call the laws of consecration and stewardship.

Teachings of Christ Rejected

But the church was destined to experience a mighty change. Originally deriving its membership from the obscure lower classes, it became transformed into a powerful social and civil machine, the Catholic Church, the state church of the Roman Empire. It now attracted to itself the wealthy and so-called noble, and the church became rich. It also dragged into it a large membership among the lower classes. These new members were not drawn by an acceptance of Christian principles. They came because Constantine, called the Great, the Roman emperor, required them. It was the thing to do. The upper classes became the clergy and the lower the laity. Its higher officers held great landed estates and movable property. The Christian church responded to the same forces and influences that shaped the Jewish church by adopting the pagan notion of the private ownership of land and the rights of property; and thus rejected the social teachings of Jesus Christ, offending the least of whose children subjected them to outer darkness, and whom it were better had they never been born.

The church again substituted for the simple rites of Christ increasing elaborate rites and ceremonies, and a ritualism approximating to that of the pagans, bringing feelings of awe for the priests, and in their train superstitions which are still existent in the present day. Easygoing converts, ignorant of scripture, swelled the church, unchallenged if, having once been baptized, perhaps in infancy, they maintained a negative goodness, gave attention to ordinances, and paid money into the coffers of the church.

The Roman Catholic Church adopted the sociology of the old Amoritism, became the church of the aristocracy, the superior class basing itself upon property in land and property in human flesh. Having no program for the adjustment of these relationships, it had no alternative than to accommodate itself to the pagan civilization, or close its doors. It preferred to accept pagan civilization, and during all the long centuries since has been faithful to that ideal.

Thus Catholicism, like Judaism, unconsciously rejected the social problem. We say unconsciously because priests and laity alike rested on a foundation of ignorance with reference to the real redemption of the redeeming God. The same principle applies in both cases, and the like condemnation of Jesus applies as he applied to the Pharisees, that they placed heavy burdens on the poor too grievous to be borne and refused to lift even so much as a finger to remove them.

Reformation Based on Economics

The protest of the Reformation was inspired by economic motives. It was in reality a revolt. The absorption of the land by the church, and used by its chief men for selfish aggrandizement, had gone on for a thousand years, and had assumed stupendous proportions. The economic aspect of the Reformation was first and foremost in the preaching of John Wycliffe in England. He demanded the distribution of its vast landed estates to the poor of the land. His influence spread to Europe, and his "heresy" was propagated by John Huss and others, who were burned at the stake. The church being an institution of the state, instigated the adoption of laws which severely punished any preacher who preached the freeing of the land. "In economic terms," says Louis Wallis, in his Sociology of the Bible, page 265, "the Reformation was a protest against expensive religion. It opposed the doctrine of 'justification by works,' which cost money and labor, and it stood for the doctrine of 'justification by faith,' which cost nothing."

The head and center of the Reformation was in the merchant and manufacturing classes, then beginning to rise in Europe, who were aided by the agricultural peasantry on the one side, and on the other by the kings and nobles who stood to profit by the dispossession of the church from its vast landed estates.

Motley, in his Rise of the Dutch Republic, says:

"The religious Reformation in every land of Europe derived a portion of its strength from the opportunity it afforded to potentates and great nobles for helping themselves to church property."

In England the pressure on the Catholic Church for economic change became too great to be longer resisted, and the vast property of the church was transferred by act of Parliament into the hands of the king, who turned most of it over to the nobility, in whose behalf really the agitation had been conducted. Protestant countries everywhere followed this example, by dispossessing the church of its land and turning it over to the aristocracy. The "mishpat"—justice—of the Bible and its basic principle were overlooked, and so the Protestant church failed to make the land the common heritage of the people at large.

The poor people themselves could not be expected to act in their own behalf, for they were densely ignorant, and the church which should have been their Voice and Champion was on the side of privilege then as now. Martin Luther describes the poor people of Saxony in the following language:

"The common people know nothing at all of Christian doctrine, especially in the villages, and unfortunately many pastors are well-nigh unskilled and incapable of teaching; and although all are called Christians, and partake of the Holy Sacrament, they know neither the Lord's prayer, nor the creed, nor the Ten Commandments, but live like poor cattle and senseless swine, though, now that the gospel has come, they have learnt well enough how to abuse their liberty," doubtless by having an idea that they and not the landlords were entitled to the fruits of the land they tilled.

The Protestant church held then and still holds the same position in the social body as Catholicism, Judaism, Paganism. Their sociology is identical. Their theologians substituted for the justice of God in human relations, which was the main theme of the prophets of the Old Testament and of Christ in the New Testament, a system of theology utterly at variance with the teachings of Jesus and Paul, which it became essential that all mankind should believe in order to escape hell fire. Salvation became purely an individual matter to escape hell and get to heaven, in which society as a whole had no concern. The rewards, if any, had to be in heaven. It may be accepted as a truism that a religion which looks for Christ's kingdom only in heaven will not look and work for its establishment on earth.

It is not to be wondered at that the rejection of this solution of the social problem should be so palpable to the poorer classes, even though it is not apparent to the possessing classes. The Protestant churches are filled, when filled at all, with the rich, the merchants and professional classes, the well-to-do middle classes, but the industrial classes and the poor are conspicuous by their absence, the surest sign of the rejection of the church by Christ, whom the common people followed gladly. The poor, by incisive and unmistakable revelatory intuition, know that the church is not the friend of the poor, exactly as by the same intuition they knew the Jewish church was not and that Christ was. The inevitable logic of the past and present conditions is inescapable.

Restoration to Restore God's Fundamentals

"The Restoration" is a challenge to the Christian world on the social side of the work of the church. The Restoration is intended to bring back God's fundamental principle of social equality in all human relations. The Restoration therefore means the redemption of "mishpat," of Justice, and of "enmishpat," of the Well or Fountain of Justice, the Justice of the God of Israel, from which all redemption, individual and social, is to follow.

Our time this morning will permit of but a brief glance at these challenging fundamentals. The prophet Mosiah, (2:37), tells us that we shall be condemned for withholding our substance, "which doth not belong to you but to God." And in his eleventh chapter, verse 53, he advises us that "there should be an equality among all men." Ether (1:29) states that those who possess the land of America, which the Lord has preserved for a righteous people, "shall be free from bondage." The Doctrine and Covenants (42:10) sets forth that land must be purchased for the public benefit of the church "for the salvation of the people." Doctrine and Covenants 48:2 enjoins the purchase of lands for their inheritance, that the families of the Saints may be gathered. Doctrine and Covenants 57:2, 3 appoints a man (Sidney Gilbert) to collect money in order that he may buy land for the good of the Saints. Doctrine and Covenants 61:3 tells us that the Lord has blest the land for the use of the Saints "that they may partake of the fatness thereof." In Doctrine and Covenants 102:8 we are told it is his will that the lands of Jackson County and the regions round about should be purchased for the possession of the Saints according to the law of consecration, which means for the common good. Doctrine and Covenants 101:2 lays down the law that the Lord requires every man to be appointed to a stewardship over earthly blessings which he has made and provided for his creatures, it being his purpose to provide for his Saints . . . that the "poor may be exalted and the rich made low"; and threatens to consign to hell any man who shall take of the abundance which God has made and impart not unto the poor and the needy.

So evidently it is the spirit of the Restoration that the people of Christ shall form one family, to build the city of God, an ensample which shall serve to transmute his design for humanity into fact.

The Restoration is to be the "Coming power

Used for the common weal,
Where all alike in God's Eternal Plan,
Sharing the burdens and the profits,
Feel the spirit of the brotherhood of man."

The Restoration, if it is to realize itself, will also realize the promise of God through Micah his prophet that "they should sit, every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the Lord of Hosts hath spoken it." (Micah 4:3, 4.)

"The religious development of the Hebrews issued in what is called a 'cross fertilization of culture,' which avoided the vices of the pagan civilization and nomadism, and combined their virtues."

And so we of the Restoration must issue a "cross fertilization," which shall avoid the vices and evils, individual and social, of the civilization of the present age, but combining its virtues with the spirit of Jesus Christ, make a partnership with God in the redemption of the world.

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

"The Babylonians had an idol called Bel, and there were spent upon him every day twelve great measures of fine flour, and forty sheep, and six vessels of wine. And the king worshiped it, and went daily to adore it; but Daniel worshiped his own God. And the king said unto him, Why dost thou not worship Bel? Who answered and said, Because I may not worship idols made with hands, but the living God, who hath created the heaven and the earth, and hath sovereignty over all flesh.

"Then said the king unto him, Thinketh thou not that Bel is a living god, seest thou not how much he eateth and drinketh every day? Then Daniel smiled, and said, O king, be not deceived; for this is but clay within, and brass without, and did never eat nor drink anything. So the king was wroth, and called for his priests, and said unto them, If ye tell me not who this is that devoureth these expenses, ye shall die. But if you can certify me that Bel devoureth them, then Daniel shall die: for he hath spoken blasphemy against Bel. And Daniel said unto the king, Let it be according to thy word.

"(Now the priests of Bel were three score and ten, besides their wives and children) and the king went with Daniel unto the temple of Bel. So Bel's priests said, Lo, we go out: but thou, O king, set on the meat, and make ready the wine, and shut the door fast, and seal it with thine own signet. And to-morrow when thou comest in, if thou findest not that Bel hath eaten up all, we will suffer death: or else Daniel that speaketh falsely against us. And they little regarded it: for under the table they had made a privy entrance, where-by they entered in continually, and consumed those things. So when they were gone forth, the king set meats before Bel. Now Daniel had commanded his servants to bring ashes, and those they strewed throughout all the temple, in the presence of the king alone: then went they out and shut the door, and sealed it with the king's signet, and so departed.

"Now in the night came the priests with their wives and children (as they were wont to do) and did eat and drink up all. In the morning betime the king arose, and Daniel with him. And the king said, Daniel, are the seals whole? And he said, Yea, O king, they be whole. And as soon as he had opened the door, the king looked upon the table, and cried with a loud voice, Great art thou, O Bel, and with thee is no deceit at all.

"Then laughed Daniel, and held the king that he should not go in, and said, Behold now the pavement, and mark well whose footsteps are these. And the king said, I see the footsteps of men, women, and children: and then the king was angry. And took the priests, with their wives and children, who showed him the privy doors where they came in, and consumed such things as were upon the table. Therefore the king slew them, and delivered Bel into Daniel's power, who destroyed him and his temple."

The above account is not taken from the canonical books of the Bible, but from "The history of the destruction of Bel," found among the apochryphal books of the Old Testament. The apochrypha has not been wholly accepted by the church, as the Lord has told us in latter-day revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 88, that it is mostly translated correctly, but there are things therein that are not true. The quotation is not used for its historical authenticity, but for the moral it teaches in giving us a vivid illustration of the deceitfulness and final destruction of false altars.

Ancient Altars

These were tables or elevated places on which sacrifices or gifts were offered to the Deity. The Scriptures are replete with references to them. Noah built one after leaving the ark. Jacob set up an altar at Bethel by using the stone which had served him as a pillow. Others were made of earth, wood, or rough stone. The one which Solomon built in the temple at Jerusalem was made of brass. According to the law of Moses, sacrifices could be offered by no one but the priest, and only on the altar of the tabernacle or the temple.

The nations of old who knew not the only true and living God, erected many altars to their imaginary gods. On some of these human sacrifices were offered and many obscene ceremonies were practiced, which corrupted the minds of the people and led them further and further from the true worship.

Modern Altars

The offering of which the sacrificial ceremonies of old were typical has come to pass in Christ, and so the gospel dispensation does not provide for material altars. The offering which God is pleased to accept upon the gospel altar of love is the voluntary gift of service to him and mankind. Blessings and happiness are poured out upon those who worship at this altar.

Satan is a master counterfeiter. He does not work to-day through material altars because there is no genuine one in existence. Altars of worldly pleasures, founded upon selfishness, are now ministering to those who have an abnormal hunger for pleasure, greed for gain, and desire for worldly position and power. Like the heathen altars of old, the lives of many victims are being sacrificed thereon in the loss of health, strength, and time. The work of Christ is to destroy these false altars by causing their devotees to discern the emptiness of such services.

Gifts for God's Altar

Sin is a manifestation of selfishness. In the degree that we serve God and mankind do we forget ourselves and our selfish desires and thus the temptation for sin is removed and the gospel becomes "the power of God unto salvation."

Godly service, then, is the gift which, if we lay upon the gospel altar, will, on the great day of accounting, entitle us to that welcome greeting, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. . . . Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; . . . but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."—Joshua 24: 15.

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

"Verily, it is a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

"WILL A MAN ROB GOD?"

A tithing story that presents some quickening thoughts.

[The question of tithing is approached from a different aspect in the following article put out by the Methodist Church, which makes a logical argument which has already been presented by some of our bishops; that tithes are a species of rent. We print this, as well as previous items, to show what is being done by others. We pride ourselves that, as a church, we have led, both in the teaching and practice of tithing.

But may it not be well to reexamine ourselves and consider how far we are still leading?—EDITORS.]

The Jarring of Jacob Shapleigh, By Harvey Reeves Calkins. Jacob Shapleigh was angry. There was not the least doubt about it. When Mary Christopher greeted him at the post office, and wished him a pleasant "good morning" he impatiently thrust a letter back into its envelope, and brushed past her without a word. Mrs. Christopher was an observant woman, and when she saw Jacob Shapleigh's lips were pressed tight together, and that a spot of ominous red was in the hollow of each cheek, she wisely looked in another direction and let him pass.

Now if Cyril McDermott had not been walking on clouds, he would have observed these danger signals also. But Cyril and his bride were starting for Bombay the very next Wednesday; the cards were already out, and Elsie Christopher's girl friends were talking of the big Trinity wedding to which "everybody" was invited. So, when Jacob Shapleigh walked straight from the post office and pushed open the door of Harrison Crossley's law office, Cyril stood up and beamed upon him with the utmost benevolence. The young man still occupied a desk in his uncle's office, although, for the past month, he had been wholly occupied in preparations for his new work as an Indian missionary.

The danger signals were flying but Cyril was far away in the clouds that morning and did not observe them. "You are just the man I want to see, Mr. Shapleigh," he began. "I want one more patron for village schools in India, at fifty dollars a year each. I have nine already promised and must have one more. Will you be the tenth?"

The tenth! It was an exceedingly awkward beginning, for everybody in the church knew of Jacob Shapleigh's prejudice against that particular ordinal. But the unfortunate word was out, and Cyril tried to recover himself with a merry laugh, "You might do this, you know, as a wedding present to Elsie and me."

The thin lips snapped open. "You tithers make me tired!" Jacob Shapleigh's words rasped like a rusty file on a frosty morning. "That girl has no business to waste her talent out in India; she could earn three thousand a year singing in concert; and, as for you, you are a plain fool to give up your prospects here in your uncle's office." The file rasped louder, as Harrison Crossley opened the door of his private room. "No, I haven't fifty dollars to give to Hottentots and Hindus! I've lost three times that much this very morning, trying to deal honestly with heathens here in America!" The last sentence was for the benefit of the gray-haired lawyer who smiled grimly and asked his irate client to enter the inner office.

Jacob Shapleigh was angry. There was not the least doubt about it. When the office boy grinned, and said, "I guess the old man is pretty mad!" Cyril was still feeling his discomfiture, and forgot to rebuke him.

"No, I won't give him another week." The file was still rasping, and it had the cut of steel in it now.

"But he says here that his wife is still sick, and everybody knows what Dakota drouth has been for the past two years." Harrison Crossley was a keen lawyer, but he had an instinctive love for justice. He laid an open letter on the table, and looked into his visitor's eyes.

"Stuff and nonsense! I've been a farmer all my life, and I know that any honest farmer can raise money whenever he pleases. Don't talk to me of poor crops; I want my rent!"

It was the lawyer's turn to use steel, but Harrison Crossley wielded a sword and not a file. He turned on his client sharply. "Do you mean that you would compel him to sell his work horses?"

"I don't care what he sells; I want my rent!"

"Very well, Jacob Shapleigh, then go to Dakota and collect your rent! Attach Hill's horses, and sell his machinery; do anything you please, but don't expect honorable lawyers to undertake your business!" It was a swift stroke and Jacob Shapleigh winced.

"You know me, Crossley, and you know I'm not a hard man. But I think I understand my obligations. I ask you straight, as a plain matter of law, don't you think I ought to have my rent?" The rasp was very weak indeed, and the lawyer put away his sword at once.

"What is troubling you, Jacob? I know your affairs pretty well, and I fail to understand why Hill's back rent should worry you. Hill is honest enough and he is sure to pay in time. Meanwhile, your two farms in Cherry Valley, your bank stock here in the City National, and your regular dividends from the Interurban Traction ought to provide you a second egg for breakfast! Your Dakota investment is new land, and the rent is only three hundred. I don't see anything in Hill's letter to set you on edge. What is troubling you?" The lawyer peered quizzically at Jacob Shapleigh.

"Why, Crossley, you know I'm not caring particularly for the rent; my income is fairly decent. But the Upper Missouri is already a great wheat country, and my quarter section will be mighty valuable some day. I don't want to risk losing it, and I'm lawyer enough to know that rent is the acknowledgment of title."

The lawyer opened his lips to speak, but Jacob Shapleigh moved right on: "That is the main reason; in fact, it is the only reason why I can't let Hill's rent go any longer. Don't you remember that case in the Des Moines river bottoms? The Old Cedar Rapids and Missouri Valley Railway tried for thirty years to get back its land, and then failed. Blair told me himself that the 'squatters' had never paid a penny of rent, and, therefore, that the railway could not establish title. I'm willing to donate the money back again if Hill is hard up, but he has not paid anything for three years, and it can't go on any longer. I've got to safeguard my title." The rasp was gone completely now; the shrewd eyes were clear and even kind.

"I didn't know you were so well versed in the old common law," said Crossley, much pleased. "But you need not worry, the Dakota statutes will protect you; indeed, statute laws in all the States now protect property owners."

"I don't care for our new statutes," returned Shapleigh, briskly: "Dakota is a long way from here. These State legislatures can frame new statutes over night. Old Blackstone and the common law are good enough for me. I'm a plain man, but I try to be an honest one. I don't know about your statute law, either in Dakota or anywhere else.

Common sense is the basis of common law, and common sense tells me that ownership must be acknowledged."

Harrison Crossley regarded his client silently for a moment. "James Hill offers to send you thirty dollars," he said, picking up the letter. "Why not take the money and let it go at that?"

But Jacob Shapleigh smiled knowingly. "You mean, let Hill pay me what he pleases? There is no acknowledgment in that, and you know it. The owner fixes the rates, not the tenant."

"Well, if you won't trust the Dakota statutes, but insist on the old common law of property, here is only one thing for you to do." A smile was lurking in the lawyer's eyes. "You must instruct me to draw a new lease at a lower rate. Suppose you make it for five years, at thirty dollars a year. That will give Hill a chance to get on his feet, and, as you say, his regular payment of the rate which you fix is a perfect acknowledgment of your ownership. You certainly understand the old common law which is, I suppose, as old as the world; certainly it goes back to the earliest property records of the race. Shall I draw a new lease? The smile broke out of the lawyer's eyes, and covered his face.

"Thirty dollars a year for that quarter section? Why, Crossley, it's sheer robbery! I would be a fool to offer such a lease, and Hill would show himself a rascal if he offered to accept it!"

The file was beginning to rasp again, but Harrison Crossley did not hear it. He was gazing at a bust of Blackstone just above the door, and seemed to be addressing that sage old jurist. "Will a man do it?" he muttered.

"Hey?" rasped the file.

But the lawyer was still gazing at the dusty bronze. "Will a man really do it?" he asked aloud.

"Do what?" asked Shapleigh, greatly confused.

"Oh! Excuse me, Jacob, I was thinking of something else. Do you remember that sermon of Mr. Randolph's?"

"What sermon?"

"I reckon none of us will ever forget it!" said Crossley. "I mean that sermon two years ago that started the new financial program at Trinity Church."

"Well, what of it?" with a vicious rasp. "Young McDermott poked it at me when I came into your office, and now you thrust it down my throat. Can't you people get through an hour of ordinary business without lugging in your tithe?"

"No!" and the lawyer's right hand struck the table. "No, I say; not when a man like you comes into a lawyer's office and preaches the very foundation of it all! Jacob Shapleigh, will a man rob God?"

Jacob Shapleigh was jarred. When John Randolph, his pastor, had preached that well-remembered sermon, he had resented it; for no preacher had the right to tell a layman what his financial obligations ought to be. But Harrison Crossley was his lawyer, who managed his investments for him, and knew every turn of his business. The sudden flush of anger faded from his cheeks and he sat pale and silent, jarred literally speechless. When the lawyer spoke again it was with the gentleness of a woman.

"Jacob," he said, "I have waited for this opportunity for many months. You are a shrewd man; I have always known that. And you are an honest man; if I doubted it I would not handle your business. I was chagrined when you refused to join us in the Tithe Covenant at Trinity Church, but I believed then, and believe now, that you wholly misunderstood the basis of it. Somehow you got on a wrong tack; you seemed to think we were forcing on the church one of the old Jewish statutes, and you opposed the whole plan. People say you are stingy, but they do not know you as I do. Of course, you dislike extravagance; everyone knows that; in fact, Sprague says you are 'strenuously economical.'"

A gleam of humor appeared behind Jacob Shapleigh's spectacles, but the thin lips were pressed tight together. The lawyer continued: "I have no right to speak to you of 'giving'; every man must be allowed to think for himself when it comes to that. But the support of the church is not 'giving.' It violates the business judgment of any practical man to say that churches and missions and Christian schools shall depend for their regular income upon the benevolent impulses of the people.

"My father was a minister, and it was his ambition that I also should become a minister; but, as a boy, the feeling that our family was in some sense dependent upon the 'gifts' of the people was to me such a humiliation that I deliberately refused to follow the calling of a minister. I confess my own sin, but I solemnly declare that the laymen who brought shame and humiliation to my boyish heart are guilty of the greater sin! And yet, why should I say the 'laymen'? I am now a layman myself, and I have done my own share of this so-called 'giving.' We have all been in the wrong together. We have been following the teaching—or, rather, the lack of teaching—which has made of the church a mendicant, and has compelled her ministers and her institutions to take the place of dependents. That is why my whole soul responded to the brave words of our pastor, two years ago, when he demanded financial independence for the church of God. I saw the tithe that day as our open way of escape from an intolerable situation, and your own words have brought it home to me this morning with even greater force than Mr. Randolph's sermon, for no man ever knew you to repudiate an obligation."

Jacob Shapleigh's eyes opened in wide astonishment, but the lawyer's words crowded swift to the end.

"To-day you have stated the case for the tithe with greater clearness than I have ever heard it stated before; you will be indebted to James Hill for the rest of your life. You are absolutely right; ownership must be acknowledged, for acknowledgment is not a technical and legal adjustment, it rests on fundamental ethics. Of course the owner always fixes the rate of acknowledgment. But who is the owner? You and I, Jacob, are Christian men. We know that God is the giver and is the absolute owner of all that we possess, 'for it is he that giveth us power to get wealth.' The old common law of property is right, but the pity of it is that men who recognize the justice of it among themselves fail wholly to recognize the ownership of God. They think of the church, and say, 'I will give so much.' They think they are giving, and, therefore, they can 'give' what they please! But they are not giving at all, they are acknowledging God's ownership. Not they, but God, the owner, shall say how much.

"Now, Jacob, just one question; and, remember, we are not considering what we, as Christian men, ought to give. We have both been prospered, and one tenth can hardly be the measure of our stewardship. But that is another matter, and we will not talk about it now. We have been speaking of just one thing, ownership and acknowledgment, and you have been reminding me of the old common law of property. You demand of Hill that he shall acknowledge your ownership, which, at best, is only a derived title, and not absolute ownership at all; you demand acknowledgment of that title and insist that you, and not Hill, shall fix the rate; and you rightly base your demand on the old common law, the law that came from God in the beginning. Jacob Shapleigh, you are an honest man; answer me: Will a man rob God?"

Cyril McDermott was putting on his overcoat a half hour
(Concluded on next page.)

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 5.—POVERTY AND THE LABOR PROBLEM

In the discussion of "The nature and importance of doctrine" it was shown that the gospel law, which is the law of human "conduct," is a scientific system of principles, and that it therefore meets all the requirements of man's moral nature and being. Principles are sources or causes from which things proceed, and principles alone govern every possible adjustment that can be made in the field in which they govern. All possible adjustments in the field of mathematics, e. g., are governed by the principles in which the science is grounded; and this is true of any field of activity whatsoever.

Granting the truth of the proposition that the gospel is the only possible means of human redemption, i. e., that it is the law of human conduct, it follows that its principles bear directly upon all the problems of human experience, and that all possible adjustments must be conditioned in applying later, when a hand touched him on the shoulder. "I guess I would like to take that tenth school, Cyril. Fifty? All right; and I wish you would tell Ferguson that I've got another fifty for our city mission on Fourth Street. I'm rather glad you waited to give me that—that 'tenth,' Cyril, I—I've been making a mistake." When the young man looked up in amazement there was a blur on Jacob Shapleigh's glasses.

THE MEANING OF COMMUNITY SERVICE

The following on "Unrest," by Joseph Lee, is a most expressive summary of facts.

The causes of unrest are not economic, but spiritual; not physical, but moral. What we are witnessing is the revolt of men who see life passing away without their ever having lived, who face the prospect of carrying their ideals and their aspirations unfulfilled and unspoken to the grave.

Man under our industrial system—an artist given no opportunity for expression, an inventor employed as an automaton, a thinker tied to a fool-proof machine—is the victim of disappointed instinct, subject, accordingly, to all kinds of nervous and emotional disturbance. It is not personal indulgence, but spiritual ideals he is called upon to sacrifice; not his physical comfort, but his life.

The radical remedy for this condition, if it is ever found, will be in making industry once more expressive of man's constituting instincts, of the lines of life to which he is by nature irretrievably committed. Blessed be those prophets of the future who shall some day awaken us to the truth that it is chiefly in our work that we must live and shall arouse us to acting upon that truth.

Meantime the great majority must live upon the margin left outside their work or die. All must so live to some extent because no work can quite convey the spiritual current of a man. It is to the cultivation of life upon this margin that Community Service is addressed.

these principles to human relations. This both experience and reason will prove to be true.

Now poverty and labor problems are at once problems that arise from human conduct. Moreover, it can be shown that they are both at bottom social problems. It follows, therefore, that the solution of these problems consists in making adjustments in accordance with the principles of the gospel law.

Poverty is a scarcity in varying degrees of things that bear upon well-being. Poverty is either absolute or relative. Absolute poverty is a lack of things actually needed to promote health and comfort, or to enable one to fulfill the functions of life. Relative poverty, however, may be purely a mental state, a matter of comparison. What in years past was considered a competency, to-day is not considered sufficient for one's needs and comfort. It is obvious that silks and satins have no bearing upon absolute poverty.

Causes of Poverty

In individual cases poverty often arises from poor management. But poor management in turn often arises from lack of mental training. And this lack often arises either from some pressure that draws men away from secondary activities and towards primary, or else from a lack of social control and inadequate provision for training men for places in society. But poverty in general cannot be attributed to individual shortcomings alone. The persistence of widespread poverty in the face of industry and thrift and of unprecedented productivity is a sign of obstructed social function: it indicates wrong relations between men in society.

In discussing the economic factors in poverty, we do not take into account the circumstances of sickness, accidents, old age, and other things which in the main we cannot hope to overcome. It is a common duty that each man owes his fellow men to minister to their wants in time of such necessities. But it is also a Christian duty to change the conditions that cause poverty to persist in spite of nature's lavishness, labor's industry, and society's ability to secure to all abundantly the means of life. For such conditions there can be no excuse.

But whatever the cause, it can be shown that the principles of the gospel alone are adapted to the cure of poverty.

The Cure

Poverty cannot be cured by doling out charity; nor by manipulating prices of commodities and services; nor by handing out sops to exploited labor. It must be known that poverty is a symptom, not a disease. An emaciated body is not a disease; it is the product, the symptom of disease; one must go back to contributing causes to find the disease. And just as we cannot cure a fever by covering the flush with powder, nor by changing the figures on the thermometer, nor by applying cold packs, so we cannot cure poverty by the Christmas-dinner-basket route. To cure poverty is to abolish wrong relations and to establish right relations—relations that issue in and guarantee a continuous adequate supply of the things upon which well-being and comfort depend. "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and to establish its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." These relations will be set forth in the following discussion of the labor problem.

The Labor Problem

All social problems imply a failure to make or maintain social adjustments. Labor's real problem is to effect right relations between men in industry. And when we say this, we say at once that labor's problem is to establish industry in gospel principles, in the "right-ousness" of the kingdom.

As commonly stated, labor's problem is to secure and maintain desirable working conditions, a higher standard of living, and adequate guarantees or protection against want.

These are perfectly normal aims, and towards these conditions the masses throughout the ages have been struggling. The goal has not been reached because industry is grounded in customs that set the interests of the several factors against one another. So that in spite of the tremendous progress in civilization, relatively the laborer is as far from his goal as he was in the beginning of the organized efforts of the laboring classes. The specific handicaps of to-day may differ from the handicaps of yesterday, but they are as numerous and as difficult to overcome. There are two things, then, that indicate that the means employed by labor are not fundamental to its problems: First, the appearance of new obstacles from time to time; and second, the persistence of the labor problem as a whole.

That the interpretation we have made of the stewardship regime is true, is proved by the fact that the principles employed in formulating the statement are each and all the very principles that must be employed in effecting any and all permanent general adjustments in human society. And in contemplating the question of poverty or of labor or any other social and moral issue, it will be observed that the remedy and every case is grounded in identical principles, the principles of the stewardship law.

Higher Wages

In its struggles to achieve its purposes, labor has been insisting everlastingly on an increased pay check. In doing this, labor has overlooked the fact that in pulling a short cover over the head it is necessarily drawn away from the feet. The principles in which business life is grounded make a short cover, they predetermine that either immediately or remotely the deriving of a surplus in one part will give rise to shortages in other parts; increased rewards in one part give rise to increased costs in other parts. An increased pay check is not fundamental to labor's problem. Some other principle must be fixed upon to effect a solution.

Shorter Hours of Labor

Again labor has been demanding shorter hours as a means of self-protection and as a natural right arising from its increased productivity; it has slowed up production; it has decreased the per hour production as a means of securing continuous employment. Since capital employs labor only because employed labor yields a profit, labor feels under the necessity of resorting to some device to offset the natural advantages to capital. But the problem still remains, which again is proof that labor's methods are not fundamental to its problem.

Industrial Democracy

Failing to achieve its ends by revisions of wage scales and changing hours of work and by curtailing production, labor now insists upon participation in shop management—"Industrial democracy," so called. But we shall see as we proceed with our investigation that this make-believe democracy is not fundamental either; it is not democracy at all; it only has certain resemblances to democracy in some of its parts. Democracy implies direct control by the people collectively. Industrial democracy is an invitation by one interest to an opposing and aggrieved party to come in and "talk it over" so that the aggrieved party may be led to believe that the first party has surrendered certain fundamental powers which, nevertheless, it may exercise at any time to exclude the invited party from the conference. Whenever the management, which is only one factor in industry, decides to terminate the working basis, it may do so; and labor has no alternative but to retire from the position it held temporarily by invitation, but not because of any right secured to it by relations sustained between the several factors of industry. Management still owns the job, and it may close the door of opportunity whenever it chooses. This is not democracy; it does not solve labor's problem in any given part or locality, much less as a whole.

In the present social conflict there is a continual shifting of positions, there is always some new point of attack necessitating a change of tactics. A number of things occur from time to time to upset labor's calculations; but the most persistent, disconcerting, and uncontrollable factor is fluctuation in prices of commodities and services. No sooner is an advantage gained by one device, than it is offset by some counter device on the part of other interests.

To say that the acts of labor cannot be justified in the face of the fact that it wears better clothes, eats better food, lives in better homes, and enjoys better cultural advantages than were enjoyed by the "elite" of the past is only to seek to escape the issue. A man is a man; and he has a native sense of justice which insists that there shall be a somewhat equitable distribution of the increased goods made available to society as a whole by its tremendous advances in civilization. Poverty is a matter of contrast. The solution to the problem must be grounded in rules which accord with the requirements of man's nature and being. And this involves his moral nature, his sense of justice, as well as his animal nature.

The Solution

The juggling of wage scales, the fixing of prices, the shortening of hours of work, and all such devices do not constitute a cure for labor's disease. Changing the figures on the thermometer does not cure the fever. A cure can be effected only by removing the cause of the trouble. This will take us back to first principles. Fundamental social relations must be established and maintained which will issue naturally in the conditions desired. The solution to labor's problem is found in:

1. A society with a purposive constitution.
2. A society which reserves to itself all proprietary rights in the natural creations and in the surplus products of social activity.
3. A society which fixes upon capable men individually the sole right and responsibility for the management of its concerns, with limitations fixed only by the general scheme of society.
4. A society which furnishes not only incentive, but also equal opportunity for enterprise or labor.
5. A society which holds each member to the obligation to be employed continuously at some useful activity.
6. A society which controls and regulates distribution in accordance with both individual and collective needs and just wants.

A little reflection will show that the principles of stewardships as a system are involved and relied upon as being peculiarly adapted to the solution of labor's problems. These principles are (1) trust, (2) management, (3) responsibility, (4) accountability. It will be seen that adjustment can be made only by bringing the concerns which bear upon the common welfare of all men into stewardship relations to society, to the group, to men collectively or taken as a whole.

A Purposive Constitution

"Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

All students of social and economic problems are aware of the tremendous burden imposed upon society (the mass of people in association) by the needless and senseless duplication and wastes of resources arising from unregulated private enterprise. As an example, take one of the outstanding characteristics of modern industrial society, viz, its superabundance of mercantile concerns. No one can contemplate this phase of industrial life without wonderment at the prodigal waste of man power and physical resources it entails.

Such miscarriages of social design bear directly upon the costs of production, the securing and maintenance of desirable working conditions, and a higher standard of living. If the number, kind, and location of certain concerns were regulated to meet the needs of society in some such way as are public schools, two immediate and highly beneficial results would inevitably follow. First, there would be an enormous saving (1) in materials that enter into the construction, equipment, and maintenance of buildings not needed for such purposes; (2) in the fuel and office supplies consumed; and (3) land and capital now held from use would be released for economic enterprise; second, a vast army of workmen would be released from useless toil and made available to necessary and profitable enterprise—profitable, of course, from the group standpoint.

The relation of such social control and regulation to labor's problem is apparent. It would lessen the cost of production by distributing the effort to a greater number of workmen, or the increased number of workmen engaged in the creation of farm utilities would greatly increase the sum total of goods available for distribution as wages or rewards to labor. This would make possible a higher standard of living—using the term in its loose economic sense.

But of what use is it to fence three sides of a stalk field and leave the fourth side open? Or, of what use is it to pen up your own stock if your neighbor's is allowed free range? No single adjustment is adequate. To attempt to solve labor's problem by making only partial adjustment is to attempt to protect the whole body with a short cover by pulling it from the feet and over the head. Even industrial enterprise or life is a whole. A system of principles is the groundwork of success. And permanent adjustment in social relations demands application of all the principles involved in social welfare in the order, time, and place that they apply.

This presupposes a purposive social constitution; it implies social control. As long as there is unregulated private enterprise, that long will there be conflict between the parties to industrial effort; and conflict defeats the purpose of co-operation.

Now with a heterogeneous mass of unregenerated beings distributed over a wide area, dominated by selfish ambitions, some having entrenched interests, any attempt at social control or any other plan, for that matter, of social adjustment will prove abortive. First of all, we must invoke the first principle of Christian doctrine, that of repentance. But the unwillingness or unfitness of men to conform to principles has nothing to do with their bearings; nor does it make possible an adjustment upon any other basis. But granting the readiness of men to be delivered from their social bondages, the first principle that must be employed to effect social adjustment is social control—social control determining the social constitution. "Organize and appoint": These lie at the bottom of permanent social adjustment. It is through such action alone that we can hope to bring the several factors in industry into harmonious and reciprocal relations.

Such coordination or adjustment implies what we have already referred to as "a natural division of labor." Society cannot grow up as did "Topsy" (?) into a symmetrical whole. It never has done so, and there are no grounds whatever for believing that it will ever do so. Some sort of social control must be exercised; and the more complex the constitution, the more interdependent the parts, the more absolute must be this authority.

We find then that the first principle involved in stewardships is at once the principle which underlies all permanent social adjustment.

That social control does not coincide with personal "liberty" or "freedom," is frequently asserted. It takes away the liberty to do what some men want to do. But does it deprive men of freedom to do what they "ought" to do? That is the question for Christian men to answer. Christian men want to do only "good"—good in relation to neighbor as well as to self. Instead of destroying freedom to do good, social control opens up personal opportunity and secures individual interests while one devotes himself to activities prompted by the spirit of service.

Social control promotes industry to a Christian plan. Christianity is the only life of perfected mutual aid. The tendency towards mutual aid is the primary cause of social industry. Social industry, therefore, should be established in the Christian doctrine of social control. Mutual aid, "family" relations, organic sympathies (see 1 Corinthians 12:26) presuppose social control. Social control and a purposive constitution are fundamental to labor's problem.

Property Rights in Natural Creations and Capital Goods

A purposive constitution and social control have for their corollary the ownership by the group of properties devoted to further production. This does not imply or necessitate that political device to further the exploitation of social resources, namely: governmental management of industrial enterprises.

Group ownership bears directly upon the problem of unemployment, upon the maintenance of desirable working conditions; it destroys the incentive to manipulate properties for private ends and sets up the motive to promote group interests. Under private ownership business is conducted for private profit; but under group ownership business is conducted for service. Group ownership insures an open shop; the doors are not closed or opened by the rule of private gain. The aim is social betterment, and social betterment demands that the members of society shall be lifted up. Production is promoted with this end in view, and working conditions also are governed by this motive.

Under group ownership industry is regulated by men chosen by the body to administer its affairs. In this way harmonious relations are established, industrial processes are integrated, and social solidarity is promoted. The conflict that persists between capital and labor and between capital and capital under unregulated private enterprise is eradicated. This is labor's problem, harmonize the factors in industry.

The untrained mind will likely evaluate group ownership as a factor in the solution of labor's problem in the light of the outcome of the political efforts of the past; it will be assimilated to present political ideas, and thought of out of its relation to the system of principles of which it is but a part. This, of course, will blind the understanding to its real value as a factor to be employed in conjunction with other factors.

Political activities in society as at present constituted are but one of several activities promoted by individuals for the purpose of getting from others the things they want for themselves, and they bear no resemblance either in their methods or in their results to the group ownership and control of the "stewardship" regime which we have discussed. Group ownership plus the other principles of the doctrine of Christian association destroy incentive for exploitation and promote good will between workmen and managers. Thus the solution of labor's problem is conditioned in the application of the principles of the gospel to social relations.

Individual Management and Responsibility

It is doubtful if "industrial democracy," which is a scheme to wean the individual laborer away from his stronghold, the Labor Union, would ever have been championed by labor in any of its parts if its true purpose, the breaking up of labor unions, had been perceived, except for the fact that labor, like capital, is selfish, and is ready to sacrifice the interests of others in order that self-interests may be promoted.

Experience teaches that individual management in business is one of the conditions of success. General policies may be determined by directors, but the working of the plan is effected by individual management. In all factories there are many functions to be coordinated. The ability to coordinate is conditioned in part in the envisagement of the processes as a whole. And this requires a close study of the processes individually and collectively. But factory production requires specialization in operations, and this limits (with few exceptions) the workman's knowledge of factory requirements as a whole and leaves him unfit for the task of judging them. Moreover, it leaves no one in particular responsible for conditions, and makes difficult, if not impossible, the correcting of the undesirable conditions which arise.

Again, let it be supposed that "industrial democracy" would effect in a given enterprise the adjustment that labor seeks; it would still leave untouched the general problem of labor; agricultural interests would still be in conflict with manufacturing and mercantile interests. Not only must harmonious relations between one set of workers in a given industry and the management be established, but the relations between the several kinds of industries in the several localities must be made harmonious, too. And labor's problem will not be solved until such adjustments are effected.

Such an adjustment leads directly to the principles of stewardships. "Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship." And if a steward proves unfaithful or incapable of managing a concern intrusted to his care, he must be removed and another appointed in his stead.

It is not difficult to see that stewardship principles must be relied upon to solve labor's problem. It has for its very definite purpose the welfare and comfort of others; love is made the underlying principle of the whole life; self-interest in the conduct of the business is subordinated to others' interests. Even if in the beginning the steward has in mind his own standing as a manager and applies himself only for the purpose of making his position secure, the very fact that he is working for others, which must ever stand as a conscious end, will give rise to an ever-increasing regard for others' welfare and to a love of the brethren, even though it did not exist in large measure in the beginning.

Individual management and responsibility under social control not only breaks down enmities between man and man, but it also promotes good will and peace between industry in its several parts and as a whole. Under it the conflict between the factors of industry is brought to an end. It is fundamental to labor's problem.

Opportunity

To-day (January, 1921) as we write, millions of laborers in the United States alone are idle for the want of employment, for the want of an opportunity to engage in productive activity. On the right hand and on the left are thousands of acres of farm land, which are put to little or no use, which hungry thousands would gladly till if they only had opportunity. In this place and in that are machines upon machines which idle hands would gladly operate to produce the goods of life, but they are denied the opportunity. So productive is modern industry that men who would labor are turned away pending the time when consumption again will warrant production. We are so rich in resources that millions must deny themselves the things needed for comfort awaiting the time when we shall be poor enough again to warrant setting the tools of production in operation. So great is our power that opportunity is shut off.

But under the terms of modern industry, whose business is it to look after others? No one's. Each man is for himself and decides for himself what he shall do, even as effecting the opportunities of other men. Individualism! What a terrible heritage. What a price for society to pay for the privilege of private enterprise for private profit. And yet there are those who love it. Yes, there are those to whom dollars are of vastly more importance than manhood and mercy and justice. Here is a problem for labor. What is the remedy? Is permanent and universal relief to be found outside of a purposive constitution, group ownership, and the fixing of individual responsibility? Is there anything in the history of the race to justify the hope that without these, equal opportunity to all men will be secured?

Of course, we know that land that is set apart for streets or buildings or parks is thereby rendered unavailable for agricultural purposes. We know that he who devotes himself efficiently to the fine arts must quit the field of manual labor. We know that he who would do good must not be an idler. But these only serve to bring to light the principle that "no man [or society] can serve two masters." "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." If we are going to love, we cannot hate. If society in general and each person in particular is to seek to promote the well-being and comfort of others, the institutions and customs that are peculiarly adapted to inequality and oppression must be abandoned.

The solution to labor's problem is found in the principles of stewardships. "You are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships . . . that every man may improve upon his talent."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4. Equal opportunity is conditioned in group ownership of capital goods. Finally we must come to this. We may have to pass through greater trials; it may be necessary for the pains of the "new birth" to increase their severity before we will be ready to be delivered of the "new man," the Christian idea of good will towards all men; but the new birth must come. "My people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the things they suffer."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

Does anyone suppose that the terms of Christian association could do less than to establish relations between man and man and between man and properties that will secure equal opportunity to all men to seek not only the good of others but their own happiness as well? Can love do less than this? And if the affairs of industry were administered by God-fearing men for the purpose of securing to each and all full opportunity for a normal expression of their native powers, would the doors of factories be closed because consumption did not keep pace with production? The answer is patent. The message of the latter-day prophet is vindicated. Repentance, the love of the good, is the most primitive of all present needs. But love is as much dependent upon doing good as doing good is conditioned in love. There is an interdependence. To "turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers," demands relations which give rise to love one to another. Interests must be unified. Personal sacrifices must be made in order that friendships may exist. Labor must learn, if needs be by the things it suffers, that to live is to give. The gospel of the Son of God will be vindicated. There is no escape. We cannot reap where we have not sown. "The righteousness of the kingdom" is the solution to labor's problem.

The Obligation to Labor

The word labor means to be engaged in useful, effective effort. The right to labor has for its corresponding obligation, the duty to labor; and the obligation has its corresponding right. We have already discussed the question of a natural division of labor in its relation to successful cooperation. Many there are who take from social wealth without returning an equivalent in either commodities or services. These are the pillar and ground of Babylon, that invisible city whose foundations are greed for gain. These are entrenched interests against which it is sometimes dangerous to speak. But we have no compromise to make with Babylon. The issue is fairly drawn, and we propose to fight it out on gospel grounds. But we know that progress will be difficult and slow. It is still true concerning the masses, whose circumstances keep them in ignorance concerning the meaning of their own tribulations, that "the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors." (Luke 22:25.) The greatest in the eyes of the ignorant are still the ones who take the most, not those who give; and to the judgments of these, men defer; and the poor are made poorer (comparatively) and the rich richer and more numerous; and there are few to declare to these "benefactors," so called, that God and nature have imposed upon them the obligation to labor. The presence of these idlers in society and the relationships they sustain to the group and its concerns are also at the bottom of labor's problem. To cure the difficulty is to effect adjustments in accordance with first principles. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

Equitable Distribution

The attitude of men towards the gospel would lead one to believe that they would rather take chances in a losing fight than to eat their bread in peace. The invitation to "come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden" is still unheeded. The promise that "all these things shall be added unto you" is not a sufficient inducement to those who struggle for the means of life to apply themselves to gospel principles.

The distribution of the products of industry as at present constituted is governed largely by one or more of the following factors: (1) The accidents of exchange; (2) monopoly; (3) advantages of situation; (4) surplus or shortage of labor or goods.

Certain it is that on the whole those who carry the heavier burdens receive the lighter pay. How much more wholesome and equitable is the regime which conditions distribution in needs and just wants.

The doctrine of stewardships, the system of principles governing economic affairs among Christian men, alone may be relied upon to secure to labor relief. Under it the sole requirement for a continuous adequate supply of goods is faithfulness to the cause of the brotherhood. Under this plan one needs only to fill his place of usefulness to be insured against want.

Labor can never hope to compete successfully with a capitalist class. The odds are all against them. Under stewardships there is capital, but no capitalist class; all are laborers together with God; and all are rewarded on a basis of equality in the measure of the ability of a life of mutual aid to confer benefits. Is not this the solution to labor's problem?

The Solution

Stewardships are labor's one hope. The gospel law, which embraces stewardships, is the one means of human redemption. It regards conduct as it is, i. e., as a whole, and it specifies accordingly. It relieves the pressure of primary wants and consequently obviates the necessity of postponing devotional functions to economic activity. Its activities are compatible with the mode of activity of the sanctuary; it verifies the professions of love of God made before the altar, and vitalizes devotional function. It prepares men for a place in the celestial world by affording exercise in the field in which development is sought. It fulfills the conditions of continued successful cooperation. It is regulated by common consent. It corresponds to the purpose of Christian effort—it makes men of the Christ type. It has for its motive "doing good." It affords the protection to morals necessitated by increased population and the complex division of labor. It secures happiness, which is conditioned in giving. If there is any other good thing to which man can aspire in society, it is to be had only by making the adjustments required by the gospel law. Before the altar of its Maker ultimately "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" the wisdom, the greatness, the goodness, and the majesty of its author.

(To be continued.)

The Former and Latter Rains—Part 8

By T. W. Williams

The prophecies stand, yet may be fulfilled in a way we have not considered.

Are there any passages in either the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants which suggest a prolonged cessation of the rains in Palestine? Is there scriptural justification for the belief that God placed a curse on the land?

The Lord gave promise to the people that if they would "keep all the commandments which I command you this day" "and shall hearken diligently unto my commandments" "that I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine and thine oil; and I will send grass in thy fields, for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full." (Deuteronomy 11: 8, 13, 14, 15.)

The general terms of this statement are universally true. The blessings of God depend on man's faithfulness. The same principle holds good in Zion as well as Jerusalem. It will apply to all nations in all time.

The Israelites were also warned to:

"Take heed to yourselves, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them: and then the Lord's wrath be kindled against you, and he shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit; and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land which the Lord giveth you."—Deuteronomy 11: 16, 17.

This relates to the tenure of the Israelites' prosperity contingent on faithfulness—failure and suffering to follow disobedience. This again is a general principle. We are not justified from these two passages in concluding that because Israel transgressed and was scattered no rain would fall upon the land. The special blessings promised the Israelites have never been realized by subsequent occupants of the land, yet there has been rain and the land has been productive.

Isaiah gives expression to the following:

"And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water."—Isaiah 35: 7.

According to the Inspired Translation this refers to the "flourishing of Christ's kingdom." The verses which follow center fulfillment in the ushering in of the kingdom of glory.

The Lord enumerates through Amos a great number of pestilences and hardships which he had already permitted to fall upon Israel in order to stir them to repentance. One of these was—

"I have withholden the rain from you when there were yet three months to the harvest."—Amos 4: 7.

Jeremiah makes a similar statement:

"And thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms and wickedness; therefore thy showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain."—Jeremiah 3: 2, 3.

The foregoing passages are in the past tense and relate to what God had already done. It is true that it suggests a base for future action; that, and nothing more.

Isaiah represents God saying:

"And I will lay it waste; it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briars and thorns; I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it."—Isaiah 5: 6.

The Inspired Translation gives this as a parable of a vineyard and this "vineyard of the Lord is the house of Israel." It must be so applied. A strained application even cannot apply it to the land.

Solomon, when dedicating the temple, prayed that—

"When the heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; yet, if they pray towards this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sins when thou dost afflict them then hear thou from heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants and of thy people Israel . . . and send rain upon thy land, which thou hast given unto thy people for an inheritance."—2 Chronicles 6: 26, 27.

The Lord appeared to Solomon by night and said:

"If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locust to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among the people; if my people which are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."—2 Chronicles 7: 13, 14.

The Israelites, from the beginning of their history, acted upon the hypothesis that blessing and cursing, prosperity and adversity, were the result of the immediate interference of God. We have no desire to attack this position. We are justified in believing that the Almighty used natural means more frequently than the constant working of miracles. We must not forget that God is not a tribal God. He acts towards all nations alike. There are no favorites. He is God of sunshine and rain. Special blessing as to rain or favorable crops were the result of faithfulness. This did not necessitate an entire reversal of the laws of winds and moisture.

Joel predicts the rehabilitation of Israel. His prophecy extends far in advance of our day. Peter applies part of it to his time. It starts out with a statement of a coming "day of darkness and of gloominess." It speaks of a "northern army" which the Lord will drive "into a land barren and desolate" after which it is stated God "hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.

"And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the vats shall overflow with wine and oil. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker worm, and the caterpillar and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you.

"And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God that hath dealt wondrously with you; and my people shall never be ashamed."—Joel 2: 23, 25, 26.

This is in keeping with the dealing of God throughout Israelitish history. Let us not violate it to serve private interpretation. It does not suggest the withholding of the rain for eighteen hundred years. It does not intimate a miraculous restoration of fertility.

The eighty-fifth psalm has often been quoted. Whether this relates to the return from the Babylonish captivity or a subsequent one is an open question. We will permit it even to include both. The Psalmist suggests the coming together of mercy and truth, of righteousness and peace. He shows that truth shall spring out of the earth and righteousness look down from heaven. After which he says, "and our land shall yield her increase." The return of Israel from her captivities has always meant increased production. The next return will not be different in this respect.

Isaiah predicts the coming forth of a book. We have interpreted this to refer to the Book of Mormon. After very carefully enumerating the various incidents connected with this event he represents God as saying:

"Behold, saith the Lord of hosts, I will show unto the children of men that it is not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest."—Isaiah 29: 29.

All that would be necessary for this to receive a striking fulfillment would be for the Jews to return to their native land; rehabilitate the waste places; renew the terraces on the hills of Judah; plant vineyards and trees; intensively cultivate the soil; keep the commandments of God, and thereby receive his blessing.

This has not yet been fulfilled. It is even now in process of fulfillment. It may be argued that some time has passed since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Measured in the life of an individual man, yes; compared with the long dispersion of Israel, no. A century is but a trifle as compared with the long occupancy of the land by Israel, also when compared with the centuries of exile. There is no difficulty here.

Terms of Gathering

Inasmuch as the future prosperity of the land is contingent on the gathering of the Israelites to their own land let us canvass the terms of this gathering. The Jews may gather or attempt to return without complying with the terms of God. This will spell failure.

Nephi reviews the vision of his father:

"At that day shall the remnant of our seed know that they are of the house of Israel, and that they are the covenant people of the Lord; and then shall they know and come to the knowledge of their forefathers, and also to the knowledge of the gospel of their Redeemer. . . . Wherefore, our father hath not spoken of our seed alone, but also of all the house of Israel, pointing to the covenant which should be fulfilled in the latter days."—1 Nephi 4: 17, 18, 28.

"And after they have been scattered, and the Lord God hath scourged them by other nations, for the space of many generations . . . until they shall be persuaded to believe in Christ, the Son of God, and the atonement . . . and when that day shall come, that they shall believe in Christ, and worship the Father in his name . . . the Lord will set his hand again the second time to restore his people."—2 Nephi 11: 26-28.

"And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ; and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land."—2 Nephi 12: 85.

"And behold they [Moroni's abridgment] shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; that the Father may bring about, through his most beloved, his great and eternal purposes, in restoring the Jews, or all the house of Israel, to the land of their inheritance."—Mormon 2: 41, 42.

From these and other passages we must conclude that a mighty gospel work must take place among the Jews. The preaching of the gospel to the Jews belongs to the church. Are we equal to the task? To prepare our people for the work in hand has been the purpose of the preceding articles.

Summary

We have shown:

(a) That there has been no material change in the climate of Palestine.

(b) That the former and latter rains have not ceased for any extended period.

(c) That the rainfall of the past century has been quite similar to that which fell during Israel's occupancy.

(d) That deforestation has made little change in rainfall.

(e) That God did not curse the land.

(f) That the desolation of Palestine has been due to:

1. The overflow of the Jewish commonwealth.
2. Abandonment of the extensive land cultivation and water conservation of the Jews.

3. Ruthless vandalism, rapacious greed, and maladministration of the governing nations.

4. Abandonment of the divine plan which produced Israel's greatness.

5. Forfeiture of God's blessings upon land and people.

God is preparing the way for the "marvelous work and a wonder" to be consummated. May we be ready when the opportunity comes.

(Concluded.)

ECONOMICS IN THE CHURCH

An editorial from the "Men's Club Bulletin," Kansas City Stake.

The time has come for every man in the church, and especially our business men, to do some serious thinking along financial and economic lines.

The past has been characterized by too much politics and too little economics in matters of government. That has got to be changed. Our economic welfare is basic.

It is quite apparent by this time that the prosperity of the church is bound up in the prosperity of its individual units, and these units are dependent upon the general prosperity of the country for their prosperity. How, then, can we adjust the financial prosperity of the church unless we have our own individual affairs adjusted to a permanently prosperous basis? That is the problem of the individuals and the collective church alike.

The study of economics in general ought to have a recognized place in our church education, because for most of our members it is impossible for them to acquire economic understanding otherwise; they have not had the opportunity elsewhere.

The church is in rather a tight place financially, consequent, as the immediate cause, on the commercial depression of the country by reason of the deflation from war-time valuations. Our work is suffering accordingly. Some immediate alleviative measures are imperative.

The solution of our financial difficulties is supposed to be the special work of the bishops. But it seems to this writer utter absurdity to leave it wholly to them. The situation requires and will always require, in our judgment, the best financial brains the church has. As a primary need the bishops should be students of economics, specialists whose understanding is fundamental. And all the men of the church should be educated along these lines.

The soundest fundamental investment for the church, it would appear, is land. All the wealth there is comes from

THE STAFF

Edited by Arthur H. Mills, 1514 West Short St., Independence, Mo.

Congregational Singing

The part of the mere member in the services of the church.

Quite a lot has been said on this subject. The writer himself has said much; has written on it frequently, and in general has been quite insistent in his emphasis of its importance. Yet we do not for one moment believe that the subject has been exhausted, for there still remains much to be said on it. Also, it should be said often enough to keep the subject constantly fresh in the minds of the people.

A New Phase of the Subject

We are not going to write lengthily upon this subject just now. Rather will we confine ourselves to considering one phase of it; that phase that applies particularly to that class in the church known as "the laity," those who are "just members only"; a very important class, too, when you stop to think about it. This new phase was brought to our attention not very long ago and its importance impressed very vividly on our mind.

The "Coöperative Spirit" in Our Services

In every service of our church there must exist unity and cooperation, if the service is to be truly spiritual. In every part of the service and on the part of everyone must this be had, if a success is to be had that is preeminent. It will not do for active cooperation to be had in one part of the service and inactivity to be found in another. Nor will it do for certain individuals or individual groups to function in the services and the remainder simply continue in indifference. "All are called" to participate in the conduct of God's work, and the more perfectly this condition is realized the greater is the spiritual attainment.

What Composes Our Services? Who May Function in Them?

What are the component parts of our church services and who may properly function in them?

The various parts of our services are never complex; we do not have a complicated ritual and they are usually striking examples of a beautiful and chaste simplicity. Hence no one need fear to participate in them, dreading the embarrassment that comes from lack of familiarity with a complicated mechanical process. The writer believes that our church is the freest from hampering ritualism of any in existence.

These various parts or "steps" in our services may be easily classed. In the preaching services there are the opening, central, and closing hymns; the opening (invocation) and closing (benediction) prayers; special music (the anthem by the choir and solos by individuals); the sermon; and sometimes (not had in every branch) the "collection." In the prayer services these are varied by omitting the special music and the sermon and employing the prayers and testimonies of the congregation. We may easily enumerate those who do (or should) function in these services, such as presiding officers, the land. The control of the land means the control of natural resources, and that means the control of basic industry. Such investment, permanently maintained, and perpetually increasing, would provide the needed surplus from which in times of financial stress the work of the church would be continued without interruption. The utilization of the land is a matter of economic practice, and the study of economics brings us to the factors of safe conclusions, which lead on continually to a limitless progress, and involve the adaptation of our principle of stewardship to the practical operation of industry and commerce.

preachers, choir members, and (last but not least) the congregation.

That we may understand and visualize how this should be, let us describe one of our usual church services.

Visualizing an Ideal Church Service

The hour for the service has arrived and all who have specific parts in the service are promptly in their places. (Remember, we are visualizing the "ideal" service now; therefore we said "promptly.") The presiding officer rises and announces the opening hymn; the organist plays the prelude, and choir and congregation rise for its singing. Then follows the opening prayer by whomsoever has been chosen to assist in this particular part of the service. After this prayer there is had the central (or second) hymn, or the anthem (where the choir has developed their ability to render anthems), and then follows the principal element of the service, the sermon. The closing hymn and the benediction in their order constitute the concluding elements of the service, and everybody leaves for home.

The Part and Opportunity of the Congregation

Now it can readily be seen from a casual study of the above description that there is one place in our services, and only one, where the congregation may have an actual part in the services, except in those services devoted to prayer and testimonies, wherein there is greater freedom. This one and only opportunity for the congregation is in the element of congregational singing; and if the congregation does not function in this place, it simply does not function at all.

Why So Many Services Lack Spiritual Fire

This is the reason why so many of our services are lacking in spiritual fire and zeal; the most necessary, as well as numerous, group of worshippers simply remain inactive when their times comes to function. And, remaining passive at a time when they should be active, their interest is not really awakened, and the service suffers. It is a true axiom that we only become really interested in that in which we actively engage. Consequently, with the most important group of worshippers not entering into real participation, the spiritual awakening of the service is too often not realized.

Our Church Must Be a Singing Church

This is the reason why we are so urgent regarding the work of congregational singing and so insistent that those who have our music work in charge shall see to it that our congregations do sing. All the leading men of the church, from the First Presidency to the laity, realize the tremendous importance of this element of our worship and are demanding that we qualify ourselves that such part of our service may be well rendered. Let everyone: district presidents, district choristers; branch presidents, branch choristers; even "mere members," see to it that our people function in this wonderful thing.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

The Winter's Program

What have you planned for this season of work and progress?

In the last issue of The Staff we urged that choir and orchestra workers should look ahead upon the coming winter season and plan a program of constructive work that would result in progress and growth.

We think this advice so important as to warrant a reiteration in this issue, and we again urge that these workers everywhere should plan for a season of real work and progress.

For the outdoor life, summer is the month of sowing and of reaping; of planting and of harvest. Then everybody instinctively turns from the pursuits that have kept them indoors and betake themselves to the open air and its enjoyment. But when the cooler air of autumn comes they just as instinctively return to their usual pursuits of work and study. The eight or nine months that intervene between the close of one summer and the approach of another are by common consent allotted to such avocations. Schools open, lecture courses are again had, reading circles and cultural societies resume work, and on every hand people again begin those things that pertain to the development of mind and spirit.

Our choirs and orchestras should be no exceptions to this universal, wise custom. Their workers too should plan seasons of cultural effort, which result in progress and growth. They should plan a season's campaign of work in such a way that when it is over there will have been realized an actual harvest of progress.

What is being done by YOU in this line? Get busy on something. This coming season is your day. "Work while it is day; for the night cometh when no man can work."

A. H. M.

Musical Activities in Southeastern Illinois District

Some important progress in a district that hitherto has had but little development.

Sister Ruth Lewis Holman, of Xenia, Illinois, chorister of the Southeastern Illinois District, has some very worthy aspirations for her district and has been doing some real constructive work since her appointment.

Sister Holman early appreciated the greatest need of her district and set about developing the spirit of congregational singing in the various branches. The result was that a very marked improvement in this direction was manifested at the recent reunion of her district.

At this reunion Sister Holman took advantage of the opportunity of the gathering of Saints from many sections, and with the cooperation of the reunion authorities held an institutional session devoted entirely to musical problems of an instructive character. In the program she sends us we note some very fine things, among which were five addresses on musical topics; a twenty-minute practical demonstration of the work of congregational singing; an historical account of the founding (in 1912), growth, and development of the Department of Music, its aims and its service; all of which were properly interspersed with enjoyable musical numbers.

Two thirds of the membership of this district are in rural branches and Sister Holman has conducted her campaign of visiting the branches during the summer and autumn months, while the roads still permit of travel over them. These visits are proving of great help to the various branches and especial progress is being noted in the choir development of some of these branches.

These things are but the natural results of intelligent enterprise and energy. Like results may be had in any district almost, if like efforts are had. That they are not had in many districts is simply because such efforts are not made.

The Southeastern Illinois District enjoys no peculiar or particular advantages over other districts that enable it to progress. In fact, it has some disadvantages, such as rural isolation and a lack of previous development. Yet its progress serves to show what any district may accomplish if the proper efforts are put forth.

A. H. M.

Declares That Jazz Will Not Survive

Ignore jazz and it will die a natural death. This is the opinion of the Music Teachers' National Association as expressed at a recent conclave in Chicago.

"Jazz is the musical joke of America," said C. H. Miller, director of music in public schools of Rochester, New York. "It is only a question of a few years until it will be a curiosity. It can't last—it lacks the germ of life. Dancing masters at New York decided jazz must go. Now it is not even being used in the public dance halls of Rochester. I have forbidden it in Rochester schools."

Ernest R. Kroeger, of Saint Louis, who spoke on "The passing of the virtuoso," has much the same opinion on jazz.

"Jazz can't be called music," he said. "It has rhythm, but no melody."

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Pictures of Women's Department Leaders

As editors of the HERALD we are taking the privilege of appearing in this column this week to announce something which the editor of the department might modestly forego mentioning.

In the November Autumn Leaves, now on the press, a special Girls' Number, sixteen pages larger than usual, appear some pictures of special interest to all the women of the church. We do not recall that likenesses of the leaders of the Women's Department have been published at all, and we know they have not for a long time at least.

But in this number are excellent cuts from late photographs of Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, director general of the department, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, superintendent and editor of this column; Mary E. Steele, in charge of the Young Women's Bureau, supervisor of girls for the Religio, editor of The Parthenon Department in Autumn Leaves; Mrs. J. A. Gardner, Mrs. Della Braidwood Haberlein, Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess, all well known for their leadership in Temple Builder and Oriole work.

The reading matter of the issue is important and interesting and there are a number of other pictures of groups of girls from all over the church, but be sure to become better acquainted with your leaders by observing their likenesses.

EDITORS HERALD.

Narcotics

Some mothers have asked for literature that they might put in the hands of their young sons to help them see the evils of the tobacco habit. It occurs to us that other parents would use the information given in response to that query.

Brother J. W. Gunsolley, of Kansas City, a "veteran" in the fight against this and kindred evils, has placed in our office copies of several carefully selected books and pamphlets on this subject. They are listed with the Herald Publishing House as follows:

The Brown God and His White Imps, 35 cents.

Tobacco, by Bruce Fink, 40 cents.

Smoke Inhalation, by Doctor D. H. Kress, 15 cents.

Modern Use of Narcotics, 5 cents.

The last-named is a collection of opinions from various authorities upon the subject, compiled and commented upon by Brother Gunsolley.

It contains an appeal made by the late President Joseph Smith, to his young sons and grandson during his last illness, showing clearly his stand upon the question of the use of tobacco and intoxicants.

A. A.

Just to Help Us Think

Here are some epigrams from the keynote speech of Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, at the recent council meeting in Salt Lake City:

"Good government is based on human kindness and decency."

"The politician interprets government in terms of his own party or business interests. The citizen knows you cannot have the welfare of one without the welfare of all."

"Get the interests of government out of the hands of machine politicians. Get away from partisan politics."

"Life is a joint job for men and women."

"The fight for woman suffrage was not a fight of women against men, but of forward looking men and women against men and women looking backward."

"We destroy the sense of law by creating too many laws. We must create law-abiding sentiment."

"Know the laws you have, and see that they are enforced."

"The great menace of America is silence and sluggishness and laziness."

DORA YOUNG.

Free Booklets to Homemakers

Housewives: Have you written the Division of Publications, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, District of Columbia, for the many bulletins which are published free of charge as a service to you? Listed below are some of the department's bulletins, almost any of which every housekeeper should find profitable to own:

Canning and Drying:

- 839. Home Canning by the One-period Cold-pack Method.
- 881. Salting, Fermentation, and Pickling of Vegetables.
- 900. Homemade Fruit Butters.
- 984. Farm and Home Drying of Fruits and Vegetables.
- 1075. Unfermented Grape-juice—How to Make It.

Domestic Economy:

- 607. The Farm Kitchen as a Workshop.
- 927. Farm Home Conveniences.
- 861. Removal of Stains from Clothing and Other Textiles.
- 1089. Selection and Care of Clothing.

Flood and Cooking:

- 142. Principles of Nutrition and Nutritive Value of Food.
- 256. Preparation of Vegetables for the Table.
- 375. Care of Food in the Home.
- 391. Economical Use of Meat in the Home.
- 487. Cheese: Economical Use in the Diet.
- 535. Sugar and Its Value as Food.
- 553. Pop Corn in the Home.
- 565. Corn Meal as a Food: Ways of Using It.
- 653. Honey and Its Use in the Home.
- 712. School Lunches.
- 717. Food for Young Children.
- 771. Homemade Fireless Cookers and Their Use.
- 808. How to Select Foods: I. What the Body Needs.
- 817. How to Select Foods: II. Cereal Foods.
- 824. How to Select Foods: III. Foods Rich in Protein.
- 850. How to Make Cottage Cheese on the Farm.
- 871. Fresh Fruits and Vegetables as Conservers of Other Foods.
- 955. Use of Wheat Flour Substitutes in Baking.

Household Insects:

- 627. House Centipede.
- 658. Cockroaches.
- 699. Hydrocyanic Acid Gas Against Household Insects.
- 734. Fly Traps and Their Operation.
- 740. House Ants: Kinds and Methods of Control.
- 754. The Bedbug.
- 851. The House Fly.
- 902. The Silverfish or Slicker: An Injurious Household Insect.
- 1104. Book Lice or Psocids.

Warns of American Morals

"Rome perished through her own degeneracy. Is America headed for the same fate?" inquires the Reverend Arthur Braden, of Kansas City.

"It was the gradual decay of Rome's industrial system," he said. "The importation of captive slaves to replace men who had earned their bread by production. The exploitation of the classes. You never can make a nation out of a mongrel crowd."

"The degeneration of athletic sports. The turning to butchery through its gladiators. The teaching of its womanhood to delve in the lust for human blood."

"The heart of a race is the heart of its women. When the heart goes and womanhood goes, God help the nation."

The world is too small for a man who is not a producer.

"The decay of the home life is becoming more and more apparent in America. There were five times more divorces granted in Chicago in the last two years than were granted in the last twenty-five years to a proportionate population throughout the United States."

This eventually means the rearing of a generation that lack the essentials of a home life.

"The degeneracy of the theater is not helping America. It is virtually impossible now to produce a worth while drama. And if a sensible play leaves New York for a tour it is doomed to bankruptcy.

"But the girly-girly shows, oh, boy! and the lurid, sensual picture shows, are coining more money to-day than ever before in the history of the world.

"We have one thing in America to-day that Rome didn't have—an organized church. The only solution of our problems is the administering of an antitoxin for degeneration—the gospel of Jesus Christ. The recognition of a common brotherhood as advocated by Christ. If we are the children of God we ought to live as God intended us to live."

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXXIII

Vocational Education

1. Why does the author object to the term industrial education?
2. What must be true of all vocational education?
3. What are the arguments against separate boards and supervisors for vocational education?
4. State the arguments in favor.
5. Distinguish between cooperation with, and control of, the schools and the shops.
6. Of what importance is vocational education to girls?
7. Why is vocational education for girls difficult?
8. What other training should each child have besides vocational training?
9. What is culture?
10. What is prevocational education, and when should it begin? Why?
11. Why is it difficult to establish prevocational education in our schools?
(Equipment and teachers.)
12. How should proper vocational training keep young people in school?
13. How is vocational training emphasized in the grades to-day?
14. What is the "six and six" plan?
15. What is the "intermediate school"?
16. What is the place of the "part time school"? Is it practicable?
17. What will vocational education do for all classes of our population?
18. Why have we not had real popular education?
19. In what way can Germany teach us a lesson?
20. Why are vocational teachers hard to get?
21. What things will make apprenticeship hard to establish?
22. Are the benefits of vocational education worth the expense that is required?
23. What has already been done towards higher education in the vocations?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Extravagance in High Schools

The school board has issued a statement discouraging students from riding to school in expensive cars. It is also considering the adoption of a uniform style of dress by high school pupils.

Both of these recommendations are offered as a relief for a deplorable condition that has arisen in the high school. During the last year or so extravagant display has reached a point inimical to the purposes for which the school was founded. Pupils seem to try to see how much money they can spend. Many children do not attend high school on account of the incidental expenses involved. Honest rivalries in mental achievement or physical endurance are eclipsed in the minds of many pupils by competition in the gratification of pride and vanity. Who can wear clothes that conform most closely to fashion's latest edict? Who can come daily to school in the most expensive limousine or racing car? The Apostle McConley writes en route for Hawaii, and mailed this letter on arrival.

LETTERS

Arrived at Honolulu

Pursuant to the call of duty, I have again left the friendly shores of "Joseph's Land" and now [October 9] for the past five days have been riding the mighty deep. Accompanied by wife and baby daughter, we left San Francisco on the S. S. Sonoma, October 4. To-morrow we are due in Honolulu where we disembark, remaining for one month and continuing our journey to Australia on the S. S. Ventura.

With the exception of two days of rough weather, we have had a pleasant voyage. This boat has an ugly way of rolling in such a manner as to upset the internal equilibrium, and land will be very welcome again for a few days, and at the same time we will have the privilege of renewing acquaintance with the Saints of the Hawaiian Mission, among whom I did my first work as a missionary.

This morning at eleven we held service aboard ship. The weather was good, and attendance included the majority of the passengers in all three classes. They gave excellent attention and we trust good was accomplished. We have made the acquaintance of a large number and have distributed quite a number of tracts. We find that most of these people never heard of our church before. Surely there is plenty of room for us to work.

During the past year and a half, while acting as a general officer of the church, I have had many pleasant experiences, and my heart goes out in love towards the Saints in some fifteen different States, among whom it has been my privilege to associate. And as I sense this "tie that binds," my heart is filled with gratitude to our heavenly Father for the privilege of being permitted to assist in this great latter-day work.

On the completion of my mission abroad, I trust I may be situation has reached a point that calls for revolutionary measures by those in authority.

Many pupils will deny these accusations and they will be among those most guilty. They take it as a matter of course that they should display at school indications of position and worldly wealth possessed by their parents. It is said that on each school day cars to the value of $125,000 are parked around Central High School. The prevalent spirit of frivolity is in miniature a reflection of world conditions, but a reflection especially harmful to school life.

The cooperation of parents is needed in the new program. The proposed recommendations involve a certain amount of sacrifice on the part of well-to-do pupils, but offer corresponding relief to others trying to "keep up with Lizzie." They offer a chance of democratic equality to those who fear to attend school on account of unfavorable comparison with their classmates and instead go to work to earn clothes "like those the other girls wear."

The board's suggestions deserve praise as an earnest endeavor to make the path of the poor pupil easier and a sincere attempt to make studies more prominent than clothes.—Saint Joseph News Press.

Reserve

How can girls of high school age best be taught the importance of reserve in their relationship with their boy schoolmates?

The mothers of girls of high school age are the best teachers of this important lesson. They should explain to their daughters carefully and clearly not only the importance of reserve in their relationships with their boy schoolmates, but the reason for such reserve. It is the lack of such home teaching that is responsible for the lack of modesty sometimes seen in high-school girls—the girls do not know better.—Exchange.

permitted to return to the homeland and renew acquaintance with those who have "fought the fight and kept the faith." And I trust I may find that the church has grown both in numbers and spirituality.

With others of God's children abroad in different parts of the earth, we solicit your faith and prayers.

We are confident in the ultimate triumph of the cause.
MYRON A. MCCONLEY.

Graceland College Notes

*Unique College Day program at Lamoni.
Uniform dress at Graceland. President's cup sought by students.*

The Graceland Day Program at the Brick Church

According to the decision of the branch officers, both Sunday preaching services on October 16 were turned over to the college for special exercises. Lamoni people and others from adjacent territory displayed an unusual interest in the program. Never has the college been given a better reception than it had there.

"Help Graceland Redeem Zion"

Above a beautiful array of flowers and standing out in bold relief in the front of the church and against a background of decorations which were arranged in the colors of the college, navy blue and old gold, was the bold challenge: "Help Graceland Redeem Zion." It was a significant bit of egotism, perhaps, but not put in a bad spirit.

With such a background the pastor of the Lamoni Methodist Church gave a powerful address on the subject: "The place of the church college in community life." A collection was taken in which over $250 in cash was given, and which together with pledges for future contributions made a total of about $500. This money will be loaned to worthy students in the form of scholarships to aid them through school.

Evening Program by Class in Religious Education

Every available seat was taken at the evening program. All of those who are here from foreign lands to take special work in preparation for service to the church were seated on the platform. The program was as follows:

College Program, Sunday Evening, October 16, 1921

Opening song	- - - - -	Chorus
Opening prayer	- - - - -	John Blackmore
Selection	- - - - -	British Sextette
Address	- - - - -	F. H. Edwards
"Eyes toward Graceland"
Hawaiian music	- - - - -	Prescott Foo
Each in his own tongue (Dialogue and chorus)	} John Blackmore Prescott Foo Erich Schlote Job Negeim Sidney Philips Alex Klein Frank Holmes Harold Dewsnup	Australian Chinese
		German
		Arabic
		Welsh
		Hebrew
		English
		In charge
Vocal Solo	- - - - -	William Patterson
Poems	- - - - -	Alex Klein
Chalk Talk and Oriental Music	- - - - -	Job Negeim
Imitation of Birds of Australia	- - - - -	William Patterson
Congregational Song	- - - - -
Benediction.	- - - - -

In the dialogue, the one in charge asked the members of the group just what their ideals of Zion were, to which each responded in his own tongue with a eulogy of the best in traditions, customs, and benefits of his own land. But each answer was incomplete; and the group was told that they must yet learn of the ideals of the Church of Christ. After the dialogue, a song composed by some of the group was sung. All through the program some remarkable talents were displayed by those taking part. Brother Edward's address was a powerful review of the ideal of Zion, as a place, and as a "mecca" toward which the eyes of all Saints are turning.

College Lyceum Course

For the past few years it has been the custom of the college in connection with the community to support a lyceum course in order to bring a higher order of entertainment to the community than would otherwise be available. After several experiments, it was decided that the best type, of course, would be the one in the which the best of outside and home talent could be used throughout the winter.

Each succeeding year has seen an improvement in the quality of these lyceum numbers; likewise each succeeding year has seen a larger number of people supporting the course, and a larger number of the citizens getting the advantages of the course who could not otherwise afford such entertainment. The college and Lamoni people have found great satisfaction in participating in the support of the lyceum course.

Uniform Dress Movement at Graceland

At the end of the school year 1920-21, the girls of the college adopted a new ruling which would affect the privileges of the girls during the next year as to dress. The aim was to institute a program of dress economy for college girls, as well as to curtail the wearing of gaudy and expensive dress materials. To a large degree the ends have been effected, and while there is some difference of opinion as to its merits, there is no doubt but that the movement is doing some good.

Attitude of the Girls

The majority of the girls have always desired some regulation of the dress at the college, for economy, and to prevent the embarrassment to some who are in moderate circumstances by those who would flaunt gaudy and expensive clothes. Indeed, they justly felt that there had been too much display of silks in the classrooms.

To most of the girls the regulation comes as a relief from a situation that was not altogether desirable. They still feel that it is all right, and are likely to support it in case of another vote on the question.

There is a minority, however, who feel that the uniformity of dress has curtailed the expression of individuality, has put upon all of the girls the stamp of sameness. They are demanding the right, at least, of wearing other clothes outside of class.

Attitude of the Boys

Generally, the boys think that it is all right for the girls to have the uniform dress regulation. They feel that if a girl can only express her individuality through dress, she had better learn another way to express it.

They did not experience the expected shock when they returned to school, for the regulation allows sufficient variation of materials and color so that there is not too strict a uniformity. Altogether, the boys feel about it as the girls who have always dressed sensibly do—that school is not for the purpose of a dress display.

Regulations of Dress

The materials may be either of cotton or wool, and may be of solid colors: white, navy blue, red, or black. The style may be on either of two general orders of construction: jack tar, or middy blouse and separate skirt. The length of skirt has not yet been standardized, so that there is some difference of opinion in that respect. Some are inclined to censure others for too great economy in saving cloth by abbreviating the skirt. It is felt that this matter will also soon be settled.

Advantages Claimed for Uniforms

Besides the economy which is a very evident advantage of the regulation, it is claimed that additional neatness of dress and a more harmonious spirit among the girls have been obtained. The advent of the uniform has almost totally eliminated the borrowing of clothes, a condition which prevailed under the old order. It has reduced the "snobbery of fine dress," which before was the cause of some heart-aches among the girls who could not "keep up." It has taken the girls' minds from too much attention to dress and transferred the energy expended therein to studies and other useful and beneficial activities. It has "tabooed" the georgette waist as a substitute for an overcoat, and reduced the possibilities of sickness from exposure in cold weather.

A New President's Cup for Athletics

At chapel Friday, October 14, Professor Gilbert, in charge of the athletic program, announced in behalf of and as a gift from President G. N. Briggs, a cup to be put up for the college literary societies to seek in athletic competition.

It will be remembered that a little more than a year ago President Briggs offered a cup to be the object of competition in the various forensic contests that are an interesting feature of the college life every year. He said that he never made a more profitable investment in his life. The race for the cup has brought approximately ten times as many people into participation in the forensic contests as were ever engaged before. Consequently, it is felt that the cup has already paid for itself in the increased development which it has brought to almost all members of the student body. President Briggs said that, with the happy realization of good results from this cup in mind, he "saved his pennies throughout last year," so as to be able this year to make another "good investment" which would yield a bountiful harvest of health and physical development this year.

Points will be allowed toward the possession of the cup for securing first, second, and third places in the athletic events of contest for this cup. The present schedule, which may later be subject to enlargement, includes: boys' and girls' tennis, men's volley ball, boys' and girls' basket ball, track, and armory ball (for girls).

It is quite certain that with the president's cup as a stimulus to effort, the literary societies will by social pressure force a maximum number of the student body into participation.

The giving of this cup is only one of the many manifestations from President Briggs of his intense loyalty to the interests of the school and the student body welfare. Certainly, the students do and should appreciate the value and spirit of these contributions.

LEONARD J. LEA, Correspondent.

The Yorkshire Post, in pointing out the serious unemployment in England, says there is a great deal of real suffering, but those who hope to benefit thereby do not care how much others suffer so long as they can make their point and bring a new attack upon the existing order. It is possible that we are confronted in the world at present with this feature, but it does not change the fact that there is much suffering from unemployment.

Northern Michigan Reunion

We were camped on the banks of Pine Lake on nine acres owned by the district. The fine shade trees of pine and birch added to our comfort and the name chosen was "Park of the Pines."

The district president, A. E. Starks, and wife had charge of the dining hall. We were called together at seven o'clock for morning prayer. At nine we assembled at the gospel tent for prayer meeting.

We had preaching by Ernest Burt, E. S. White, Byron Doty, Waldo Kapnick, George Lalone, A. Schreur, L. Dudley, James Blackmore, and A. E. Starks. We had the pleasure of having Brother A. H. Mills, from Independence, Missouri, in charge of the music, and one day for musical instruction. Patriarch George Burt gave several blessings and some fine sermons.

Brethren Doty and Kapnick had charge of the young people and met four times on the shores of the lake for prayer meeting. Three were spoken to by the Spirit and encouraged to press on.

Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department held sessions. An entertainment, "Ruth, the gleaner," was given.

The conference of the district was also held on the last two days. After the meeting we departed for our homes feeling that ten days had been well spent and we had been greatly blessed spiritually as well as physically.

MRS. WESLEY ALDREAD.

Health Meetings

The American Public Health Association will hold its Fiftieth Annual Meeting in New York City, November 14 to 18, 1921. Most, if not all, of the sessions will be held in the halls of the Hotel Astor, making them particularly convenient for the attending delegates.

One of the most important phases of the Semicentennial period will be the Health Institute, to be held on four days of the week preceding the annual meeting, viz: Wednesday to Saturday, November 9 to 12, inclusive. The institute will consist of a group of practical demonstrations of health activities, both official and voluntary, in actual operation. It will afford an unequalled opportunity for visiting health workers to familiarize themselves with the great variety of administrative methods and technical procedures found in New York and vicinity, which may be adapted to use in their own communities.

The Health Department of the church advises that those interested in meetings of this character attend if possible.

A circular has been sent to all names on the mailing lists of the publishing house, announcing Autumn Leaves plans for the coming year and offering substantial premiums for new subscriptions.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:	THE FORUM:
The Bargain Counter of Life - - - - - 1009	Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day
Quorum of Twelve Drafts a Missionary Policy - - - - - 1010	Work.—Part 5, by J. A. Koehler - - - - - 1020
President Smith in Utah in Summer of 1920 - - - - - 1011	The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 8, by T. W.
Church News - - - - - 1012	Williams - - - - - 1024
Rainfall in Palestine - - - - - 1012	THE STAFF - - - - - 1026
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:	WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT - - - - - 1028
The Sociology of the Bible, of Christianity, and	HERALD Editors—Dora Young—Maude Peak
the Restoration, by C. A. Smurthwaite - - - - - 1013	Parham.
Altar of Worldly Pleasures, by Benjamin R. Mc-	LETTERS - - - - - 1029
Guire - - - - - 1017	Myron A. McConley—Leonard J. Lea—Mrs. Wes-
OF GENERAL INTEREST:	ley Aldread.
Will a Man Rob God - - - - - 1018	MISCELLANEOUS - - - - - 1032
The Meaning of Community Service - - - - - 1020
Economics in the Church - - - - - 1026

SCCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Eastern Montana, at Glasgow, Montana, November 11, 12, and 13. M. E. Wilcox, secretary, Glasgow, Montana.

Two-Day Meetings

At Disley Branch, Bethune, Saskatchewan, November 5 and 6. J. J. Cornish is expected to be present. O. L. D'arcy, president, Weyburn, Saskatchewan.

One-Day Meetings

At Sandusky, Michigan, November 6. Church dedication and everybody welcome. Please bring baskets. Walter Cooke, Sandusky, Michigan.

Central Michigan

Sunday school and Religio workers of Central Michigan District are asked to note my change of address, which is now 920 North Granger Street, Saginaw, Michigan. I would like to hear from all who are interested in Sunday school and Religio work, with a special view to organization of Religios in every community and visiting and encouraging all the schools. We would like to have a Religio local in practically every branch before next conference. Let us help you. John D. Wade, superintendent of Sunday schools and Religio field worker.

Missionary Supervisors

The following appointments have been made by the Quorum of Twelve:

- Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida. T. C. Kelley, 316 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.
- Alberta District. Fred Gregory, Ribstone, Alberta (L).
- Arizona. J. M. Simmons, 1225 East Portland Street, Phoenix, Arizona.
- Arkansas and Louisiana. J. T. Riley, 109 West Adams Street, Pittsburg, Kansas.
- Australia (Queensland). Herman Peisker, 27 Catherine Street, Subiaco, West Australia.
- Australia (New South Wales). W. J. Haworth, 33 Hebert Street, Leichhardt, New South Wales.
- Australia (South Australia). E. H. Davies, 40 Porter Street, Parkside, South Australia.
- Australia (Victoria). Harold I. Velt, 65 Nelson, Rozelle, New South Wales.
- California (Northern). A. C. Barmore, 903 Morgan Street, Santa Rosa, California.
- California (Southern).
Chatham and London. James Pycoc, Box 30, Humber Bay, Ontario.
- Colorado (Eastern and Western). J. D. Curtis, 1026 East Platte Avenue, Colorado Springs, Colorado.
- North Dakota and Minnesota. J. E. Wildermuth, 101 Fourteenth Street South, Fargo, North Dakota.
- Hawaii. Gomer J. Reeves, Hilo, Hawaii, Box 922.
- Idaho, Utah and Eastern Oregon.
- Illinois (Central).
Illinois (Northeastern). Ward L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.
- Illinois (Kewanee). Oscar Okerlind, 1216 West Maple Street, Independence, Missouri.
- Illinois (Nauvoo District). Charles J. Smith, 322 Center Street, Sioux City, Iowa.
- Illinois (Southern). L. O. Wildermuth, Plano, Illinois, Box 217.
- Indiana (Southern). J. W. Metcalf, 215 East Jacob Street, Louisville, Kentucky.
- Iowa, Saskatchewan, Manitoba. Daniel Macgregor, 1121 Fourteenth Street East, Des Moines, Iowa.
- Kansas. T. W. Curtis, 308 South Grand Street, Independence, Missouri.
- Michigan (Central). B. H. Doty, South Boardman, Michigan.
- Michigan (Eastern and Detroit). Matthew W. Liston, 306 East Eighth Avenue, Flint, Michigan.

Michigan (Northern). E. N. Burt, Onaway, Michigan.

Michigan (Southern), Indiana (Northern). F. F. Wipper, Galien, Michigan, Box 147.

Michigan (Western). W. D. Ellis, South Boardman, Michigan.

Missouri (Southern Spring River, Clinton). Lee Quick, Mapleton, Kansas.

Montana (Eastern and Western). George W. Thorburn, Race Track, Montana.

Nebraska (except unorganized territory). E. E. Long, Lamoni, Iowa.

New York. George Robley, Thornton, Rhode Island.

New York and Philadelphia District, New England and Maritime Provinces. A. B. Phillips, 70 Albion Street, Somerville, Massachusetts.

New Zealand. H. W. Savage, 31 Eden Terrace, Auckland, New Zealand.

Ohio, Youngstown and Sharon District in Pennsylvania. L. G. Holloway, Lamoni, Iowa.

Oklahoma. Hubert Case, 801 West Maple Street, Independence, Missouri.

Oregon. A. C. Martin, 1212 Elm Street West, Independence, Missouri.

Owen Sound. W. A. Smith, Hornings Mills, Ontario, R. F. D. 1.

Pennsylvania (Pittsburgh and Wheeling). Leon Burdick, Willoughby, Ohio.

South Sea Islands. Clyde F. Ellis.

Texas. D. S. Palmer, Tuff, Texas.

Toronto. J. H. Yager, Coleman, Michigan.

Virginias (except Wheeling District). Thomas Newton, 404 Stealey Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Washington (Seattle and British Columbia). S. S. Smith, 1714 F Street, Bellingham, Washington.

Washington (Spokane District). J. A. Bronson, Gibbs, Idaho.

Wisconsin (Northern). Leonard Houghton, Chetek, Wisconsin, Box 66.

Wisconsin (Southern). B. C. Flint, 401 South Second Street, Evansville, Wisconsin.

Forming Good Reading Habits

If parents wish their children to form good reading habits they must first form such habits themselves. And there is no better way to do this than to bring into the household a periodical that will be of interest to every member of it; that will supply the best reading for old and young. Among the periodicals of this description The Youth's Companion is unique. Not only does it aim to entertain and inform boys and girls in their teens, as its name suggests, but there is not a page in it that parents can pass over with indifference.

The 52 issues of 1922 will be crowded with serial stories, short stories, editorials, poetry, facts, and fun. Subscribe now and receive:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues in 1922.
2. All the remaining issues of 1921.
3. The Companion Home Calendar for 1922. All for $2.50.
4. Or include McCall's Magazine, the monthly authority on fashions. Both publications, only $3.00.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION,

Commonwealth Avenue and Saint Paul Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

New Subscriptions Received at this Office.

Conference Minutes

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Deloit, Iowa, October 8 and 9. District presidency presided. Eight branches out of nine reported. Winter conference to be held at Denison, Iowa, time to be left to district president and president of Denison Branch. Preaching during conference by C. E. Butterworth and A. H. Parsons, of Missouri Valley, Iowa. Saints were made sad by the news received of the illness of Brother C. E. Anderson's children, one having been through a siege of infantile paralysis and two more threatened with the disease. Brother Anderson and companion have the sympathy and prayers of their brothers and sisters in the faith in their time of trial. Lena M. Talcott, secretary, Arion, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

SANDAGE.—Lizzie Boch was born February 12, 1868. Baptized in 1890. Died September 15, 1921. Leaves a husband, Joshua Sandage; one son, Charles E. Irwin; a mother; and two brothers. Services at Taberville, Missouri; sermon by Lee Quick. Died triumphant in the faith and will be greatly missed in the branch where she labored.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall save it be one have none."—Ezekiel 37: 26.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 1, 1921

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879, weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

5 Jan 22 1922
Mrs M B 116
116
MBER 44

EDITORIAL

A Call to Prayer

Many of the churches are setting aside November 11 as a day of prayer in the interests of the Disarmament Conference. In the light of the prophecies with which our people are familiar, we may not anticipate great and lasting results from this conference and may not feel that the day of universal peace is at hand or to be greatly hastened by human conferences or programs; nevertheless, we as a people are commanded to seek peace, raise a standard of peace, pray for peace, and to be peacemakers.

We certainly are in accord with the desires of people who wish to lead humanity away from the horrors of war and the unnecessary burden of armament. If any nation is prepared or desirous to lay down some of the instruments of slaughter and give its attention more fully to the constructive works of peace, certainly we can pray for them and say to them, "God-speed." For these reasons our people generally can with a clear conscience and a devout purpose unite with all other people in prayer on November 11, that God may bless the Disarmament Conference and the efforts of all good men who are seeking to lead the nations of the earth in the ways of peace. And the First Presidency hereby set aside that day as a day of prayer that all Saints everywhere, in all nations, who desire to do so, may join their prayers in unison on that occasion.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Present-Tense Religion

"Why all this talk about what used to be?
Is God dead? No!"

Joseph Smith restored the present tense to religious terminology. He announced, "God speaks!" He was met with emphatic denial. All Christendom preferred the old form: "God spoke." Nearly a hundred years have passed away and some unexpected voices have been lifted in support of the logic involved in Joseph's declaration.

Principal Fairbaine, of Oxford, is at pains to say to the religious world, most bluntly: "Agnosticism assumes a double incompetency—the incompetence not only of man to know God, but of God to make himself known. But the denial of competence is the negation of Deity. For the God who could not speak would not be rational, and the God who would not speak would not be moral." (Quoted from The Bible and Modern Criticism, by Sir Robert Anderson.)

Sir Oliver Lodge, in the name of science, has an equally pointed message:

"This is the lesson science has to teach theology—to look for the action of the deity, if at all, then always: not in the past alone, nor only in the future, but equally in the present; if its action is not visible now, it never will be and never has been visible."—Science and Immortality.

Lyman Abbott has a message, also:

"The prophets, we are told, spoke as they were moved, inspired, or guided by the Spirit of God. There is no reason to suppose that God has ceased to move upon the spirits of men and to inspire and guide them. Certainly there is nothing in the New Testament to warrant any such opinion."—The Outlook, September 8, 1915.

Walter Rauschenbusch is clear-cut in his description of the ancient prophets: "They went to school with a living God that was then at work in his world, and not with a God who had acted long ago and put it down in a book."—Christianity and the Social Crisis.

Well, why not now go to school with a living God at work in the world, and not to one who acted long ago and wrote it all down in a book and retired far away behind the clouds? Why not with Lodge look for the revelations of God, if at all, then always, and not in the past alone or only in the future? Why not conclude with Fairbaine that the God who cannot speak is not rational, and the God who will not speak is not moral!

Some time ago we were talking with a certain minister. He questioned us about our belief in the Bible. We answered: "Yes, we believe the Bible. Possibly we believe some parts of it that you do not believe."

He did not think that possible, so we referred him to the closing verses of the sixteenth chapter of Mark, where certain signs are enumerated, and it is said that they shall follow the believer. We asked him if he believed that.

"Yes," he answered, "I believe that they did follow."

"That," we replied, "is one difference between you and us. You say they did follow. We say they do follow. One is religion in the past tense; the other is religion in the present tense."

That line was drawn many years ago. Joseph Smith says that shortly after he had received his first vision, he innocently told a Methodist minister about it, and to his surprise it was treated with contempt, the minister "saying it was all of the Devil; that there was no such thing as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there never would be any more of them."

So we see that in the very beginning of his ministry, when he came to the world with the message, "God is at work in the world," he was met by the clergy of the day with the reply, "God used to be at work in the world."

His was a religion of the present tense; theirs a religion in the past tense.

People of every age recount the wonderful things that God did in a preceding age; they are very angry when a prophet comes telling them that God is doing something now.

Jeremiah told the children of Israel:

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth that brought the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all lands whither he hath driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."—Jeremiah 16: 14, 15.

The Jews lived in the past; they still live in the past; but the Lord says that the time will come when they will no longer talk about the wonderful things that God did when he led them out of Egypt, but will begin to perceive the wonderful things of their own time.

When Jesus came he found the Jews living in the past.

They were always talking about the time when God led them out of Egypt; but they were blind to the things that he was doing for them then. Paul truly said: "Blindness hath happened in part unto Israel." They could see the things that God had done ages before; but they were blind to the things that he was doing in their midst at that time.

They held their Passover feast regularly and religiously to commemorate the time God caused the angel of death to pass them by and helped them to escape from Egypt; but when the Son of God came to observe the Passover with them they were unable to perceive that fact. The most wonderful event of all history occurred in their midst unnoticed. Having ears they heard not, having eyes they saw not.

Their religion was distinctly of the past. When Stephen preached his great sermon (Acts 7) he diplomatically began with the past. As long as he confined himself to the things that God had done in the days of Abraham, Moses, and Solomon, they listened patiently; but as soon as he began to tell them what God was doing then, and what they were doing, they "gnashed on him with their teeth," and "cast him out of the city and stoned him."

Opposed to this past-tense religion is the very name of Jesus, "Behold a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Immanuel, which being interpreted, is, God with us."—Matthew 1: 23.

That is the idea, "God with us"—not the God who used to be with some one else long ages ago, but "God with us."

The name of God, as given to Moses, as rendered in the English Version, conveys a similar idea: "Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." (Exodus 3: 14.)

Scholars are divided as to the origin and original meaning of the word from which this is derived. The Jews regarded it with awe, and in reading the Old Testament never pronounced that word. Josephus said that it was not lawful for him to write it, so it does not appear in his work. It was the "Ineffable Name." But as it stands in our modern rendition, it conveys a vital thought—not the God who lived in the days of Abraham, alone; not the God of Solomon; not the God who was; but the great "I AM."

Paul's religion was eminently present-tense religion. He wrote: "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man." The Jews, like our good ministerial friend, rendered it, "The manifestations of the Spirit were given."

But while the Jews affirmed that these things used to be, Paul declared, "They are."

History repeats itself. Where Paul stood in 59 A. D., Joseph Smith stood in 1830 A. D.

Why all this talk about what used to be? Is God dead? No; for he is "from everlasting to everlasting." Has God changed? No; for he says, "I am God; I change not." That is a fundamental principle of his Godhood. Our hope rests on that thought. If he changes from day to day, we know not where nor how to find him, and our case is hopeless. But he is God, and he changes not.

Have the people changed? John Wesley said that the reason the gifts had ceased, was not, as some supposed, because they were no longer needed, but because the Christians had "turned heathen." As to the truth of his statement the reader may judge. It is quite evident, however, that man, not God, has changed. Christians of this age, like the Jews in the days of Jesus, are looking at the past. Blindness "in part" has happened unto them. They can see the wonderful things that the apostles did, but they cannot perceive the wonderful things that God is doing now.

We can see how necessary it was for prophets to come to this age with the message that Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon bore: "And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Why Graceland Is Not Self-Supporting

"There are no colleges or schools in the country of academic rank which are self-supporting."

The following letter, received by Presiding Bishop B. R. McGuire, has been referred to us for answer through the HERALD, as it is doubtless of interest to many of our readers. We have attempted to discuss this matter from time to time but, evidently, some have not noted the statement of the reasons. The letter follows:

"I was just reading the Ensign on the front page, in regard to the College Day donation. Isn't it a paying proposition with about two hundred and fifty pupils registered? My boy is there and he had to pay $205 before entering—$90 tuition. He never had a chance, as his father died and I had to have his help. He has earned this money and is schooling himself, for what? To be a helper in the Lord's work when the time comes to be called. So I just naturally wonder what the matter is when it will cost him over $500 a year, and each one the same. Is it out of order for me to ask? If not, please answer, if you can spare the time. I cannot help but wonder, for most of the pupils pay $100 tuition besides all the other little incidentals. There are such a few of us here, it is hard to keep the branch expenses going. Now I hope there is no offense taken, for I really want to know, and I think we should, or have the right to be interested enough to give these things a thought. Hoping I may hear as soon as is convenient or through the columns of the Ensign, so others that are wondering the same may know."

There are no colleges or schools in the country of academic rank which are self-supporting. Of all the various kinds of schools, only a very limited number are self-sustaining. Music colleges charge a relatively high fee for tuition for the amount of time given to each student, some as high as twenty-five dollars an hour. The amount of tuition is sufficiently large to make them self-sustaining. The musical department of Graceland has, in the past, been practically self-sustaining and has shown a profit even though the amount of tuition asked is very much lower as compared to other schools of music of similar rank.

Another kind of school that is self-sustaining is the business college, and for the same reason. As a rule, large classes are handled. Only a limited number of studies are offered. The work is of such a character that most of it, if not all, is completed during school hours, so far as the faculty is concerned. The tuition is placed at a figure that makes them self-sustaining.

But when we come to the great universities and the great and small colleges of the land, the situation is changed. Ten years ago, when the cost of living was much lower than it is to-day, it was currently reported that it cost from four hundred dollars to five hundred dollars a year for each student at the leading colleges and universities. The tuition of $150 at that time paid about one third of the actual cost.

Despite the increase in the cost of living, the cost of education at Graceland is still considerably less than that. The cost of living has increased the expense for all schools and colleges, as well as for other activities of life. One reason why the cost is somewhat high is that the work in the classroom represents only a relatively small part of the work of each member of the faculty. Outside study is necessary on the part of the faculty, and outside work, if the courses are to be handled as they should be. In fact, when properly done, the time outside of the class is more than that spent in the classroom, and sometimes double the amount.

Even though it does cost this young man $500, it should be remembered that the greater part of the cost represents his living, food and clothing. While Graceland College boards many of its young people, if not all, in dormitories, no attempt is made to make a profit therefrom, and when we were at the college, we know that the margin was a very close one. The college does not receive a benefit from the board and lodging. The same is true of all of the other fees charged. They go to meet a definite service and do not contribute to the expense of running the college. The only part that is available for the payment of salaries, for the heating of the college buildings, for the care of the college buildings, and for other necessary expenses, including insurance, light, repairs, etc., is this amount paid as tuition, $90 a year.

It is quite true that the tuition at Graceland College has been greatly increased from $25 and $30 a year to $50, until now it is increased to $90 and $100 in the college and the academy. But this amount is not sufficient to meet the administration expenses of the college, nor has it been deemed advisable to charge students a tuition of $200 a year, which would, probably, be sufficient to meet the necessary expenses at present.

Furthermore, so well is it recognized that all of the expenses cannot be paid from tuition, and that a college is not a commercial affair but is a social affair for the benefit of the individual and society as a whole, that proper credit to a college requires that it shall have, in some form, an endowment and shall receive a certain percentage entirely outside of the tuition fee. Some large universities meet this by a big endowment fund. The church, instead of establishing such a fund, pays to the college through the College Day collection or through the Bishop in tithes and offerings, a certain percentage of the income. This is essential if the college is to be accredited as a social institution.

This may be met in part by the College Day collection, or it may be met by the budget amount being paid from the general church funds by the Presiding Bishop. The latter method is a direct advance from the funds of the church. The former method, however, presents another aspect.

By General Conference Resolution, as was pointed out in the editorial columns in the HERALD for October 11, this money raised on College Day was made a special fund not for the benefit of the college operating expenses, but (see conference resolution) a fund for the sending of young men and young women to Graceland College. In other words, it is to be a scholarship fund, from which such young men and young women as the one referred to in the letter above may borrow to assist them in meeting their expenses. Of course, when the fund is so used, it is not available for operating expenses for the college. It constitutes a scholarship fund to help young men and young women to secure an education at Graceland College, according to the resolution of the General Conference of 1917. (See the HERALD for October 11, 1921.) As such, it is primarily for the benefit of our young people, and not for the benefit of Graceland College. It helps worthy young people to secure an education and helps them to meet their immediate expenses.

Whatever part of the fund is not used for the benefit of the students is available for the use of the college, and not only helps the college, but relieves the general church fund in the hands of the Presiding Bishop.

This help from the Bishop is necessary because the tuition, which is the only sum available for the general operating expenses of the college, is not sufficient to meet such expenses, and because also a college is not a commercial institution for the purpose of making money, but is a social association for the benefit of society as a whole and the individual members thereof who come under its immediate influence. For this reason, recognition as a college requires that a certain percentage shall be paid from an endowment fund or from some general fund like state taxes or a general church fund entirely outside of the sums received for tuition.

Support of the Missionary by the Church

Those among whom he labors should see to it that the needs of the missionary are supplied.

In a letter to the Quorum of Twelve from one of our traveling ministry, the following statement appears:

"The last place that I held meetings, I was wonderfully blessed in preaching, but I was led most of the time to talk to the Saints about their manner of living; what kind of people we must be in order to redeem Zion, etc. Well, when the time came to say good-by, the Saints crowded around me and gave me a very pressing invitation to return as soon as possible, and then they gave me a good hearty handshake, and that is about all they did give me!

"The president of the branch said that he would see to it that the deacon paid my expenses, so ere I left I called upon the deacon and he gave me a few pleasant words and a handshake and that was all!"

"Of course I said nothing, but I thought a lot!

"However, I walked out and paid my own way to the next town.

"I wonder how the people think that the missionary is to get his clothes and other things that he needs. When I came into this district two years ago, I brought two suits of clothes with me, but now they are badly worn.

"Oh, yes, I know that one can go to the Bishop, but I hate to do that. I have an independent nature and it hurts my pride to have to go and ask for every cent I need. I think that something should be done to teach our people to take care of the needs of the missionary. Should I say anything to them, I would soon be called a 'money grabber.' What is to be done?"

This is one of the pathetic aspects of our work. A man who is doing good work, well received, yet in two years' time has received so little that he is unable to secure a suit of clothes and is left to pay his expenses from meeting place to meeting place! It is true that the Presiding Bishop reports that $50,000 has been paid out for elders' expenses for the last year. Those who persistently ask, receive; but those who are more modest, some of our best men who put their whole energy in doing good work and feel backward about asking help, receive an inadequate amount.

In a letter from the Bishop, he suggests that such expenses should properly be met by the branch and by the Saints by individual donation, supplying at least enough to pay the necessary expenses of the man who serves them. Surely the laborer is worthy of his hire! He should be made to feel welcome in his work, and such appreciation as the payment of his immediate expenses certainly makes him feel that his effort has not been in vain. But we should remember that in addition to being fed and housed while conducting the services, he has railroad fare and clothing and other incidental expenses to meet.

The elder's family is provided for by the general church, but the plan does not allow even for his meals when he is at home. The church still expects those among whom he labors to give him support, even though the church as a whole, through the Presiding Bishop, stands back of him when the people among whom he labors fail to give that adequate support.

This failure has resulted in some men spending too much of their time begging and being therefore criticized. It is unfortunate that the time that should be given to special work should be spent in making an appeal, which may seem to be plainly selfish. It has resulted also in some of the ablest men who are diffident about asking, receiving very inadequate support, not only from those among whom they labor, but from the church as well.

Local branch expenses are not paid from the funds paid to the Presiding Bishopric, nor from the tithes and offerings.

When special services are conducted, the added expense is part of the local branch expenses. When a missionary is appointed to labor in a branch his expenses and living are part of the local branch expenses. When a man is appointed to labor and make one branch his headquarters, it would appear to be more fair, if his family were also provided for by that branch, but certainly the expenses of the missionary should be adequately provided for.

It is worth thinking about, and that by way of forethought and not hindthought. It is humiliating for a man to give his best and then fail to receive support. It makes him wonder if he has indeed succeeded in presenting the message as he should, when it is so illy appreciated.

"What is to be done?" This is one thing to be done by making an appeal to the whole church through our columns without regard to personality. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and he who labors well is entitled to our support and help. Nor should he be made or considered in any sense a beggar.

Church News

Bishop James F. Keir has been quite ill since Saturday. It has not been determined just what is the cause of the trouble, nor the extent of his affliction.

Bishop I. A. Smith left Independence Saturday evening for a trip in the West, to be gone about two weeks on church business.

A special priesthood prayer service was held at the Stone Church in Independence on the afternoon of the 30th, at which a good spirit prevailed. The aim of the meeting was to develop more spiritual efficiency and solidarity among the priesthood, to the end that they might contribute their maximum in church service.

At this time Elder E. B. Hull and wife were set apart by the laying on of hands, for their work in the Hawaiian Islands, to which mission they will proceed at once.

The first meeting of the series to be held Sunday evenings at the Stone Church in the interests of the young people was very satisfactory in every respect. The song service was inspiring, under the leadership of F. A. Russell, being strongly supported by the organized classes of young people. The sermon by Elbert A. Smith was on the two philosophies of life, the true and the false, dealing with the special problems of young people. The attendance was good, practically every seat being filled. The ushering was by Legionnaires in uniform, many of the brethren coming in from distant points to be in attendance at the national convention of the American Legion in Kansas City this week.

President Frederick M. Smith returned to Independence on the 31st after visiting the Saints in Detroit and Chicago. He will continue his eastern itinerary later.

We are informed that the following former Graceland students expect to receive their Bachelor of Arts degree at the State University of Iowa next June: Forest Roberts, Lee E. Travis, Fernel Briggs, Sidney Barrows, Blair Jensen, James Houghton, Christine Roberts. Also Mrs. Lee Travis is studying for the degree of Bachelor of Music. Arthur Benc expects to receive his degree of Doctor of Medicine and Charles Benc is working for a Bachelor of Arts and then for his medical degree.

Subjects Being Discussed

Sunday Lectures by D. Amos Yates

Following the newspaper controversy that ensued at Colton, California, when F. L. Richardson, Adventist minister, failed to live up to the terms of his debate propositions, Elder D. Amos Yates is lecturing each Sunday at Masonic Hall in Colton on various subjects, such as, "What is man?" "Where are the dead?" "Will millions now living never die?" "What is hell and who goes there?" "Does the Bible teach everlasting punishment?" "Was Joseph Smith a true prophet?" "What is Mormonism?" Questions are to be answered, and Mr. Richardson especially invited to attend and ask questions.

Prayer Urged in Des Moines

A series of group meetings are being planned by the branch presidency in Des Moines, Iowa, to be held at the homes of various Saints, at which one holding the office of priest will be asked to address the Saints. A letter from the branch presidency to the priests announcing this includes these statements: "Perhaps there is no need so outstanding just at this time as that of persistent, fervent, and effectual prayer. The Saints need to cultivate this sacred art of divine intercession."

A New Teaching Plan for Sunday School

In his department in the November Autumn Leaves, Superintendent A. Max Carmichael of the Sunday School Department gives special and extensive attention to the problems of teachers in the beginner department of the Sunday school. The lessons for November are on the theme, "Thankfulness for protection and care." He urges that the teachers do not teach the lessons in a perfunctory manner, but rather seek to make the theme live in the minds of the children. He would not only have the child learn the theory of gratitude, but express in vocal prayer to God his thankfulness for the watchcare and blessings received. A letter is suggested from teacher to parents, and a sample form offered, to enlist the special cooperation of the mothers of the little ones.

Brother Carmichael's first interests are with the young children of the Sunday school, he evidently believing that they are the hub around which the entire machinery of the Sunday school should revolve, yet not to the neglect of the other phases which go to make up the complete wheel.

An Important Omission

In sending us his thesis upon which was based his recently published article in these columns on "The sociology of the Bible, of 'Christianity,' and 'The Restoration,'" C. A. Smurthwaite says two important parts were omitted by accident. Interested readers should include the following as points 6 and 7:

"That 'The Restoration' was intended to bring back Bible sociology, the fundamentals of equality being basic in the utilization of the land for the benefit of the people.

"That the Protestant church rejects Bible sociology; and perpetuates pagan sociology."

The summary of a sermon by C. A. Smurthwaite in the HERALD of last week brings out an interesting point. The Catholic Church held so much property that the revolt of the Reformation was brought about. This shows that in the Christian church, the ideal was changed to a common ownership under the control of the bishop, and that it proved a complete failure and resulted in the greater suppression of the people.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Last Will and Testament of Jesus Christ

By Frank Lofty

Elder Lofty was a judge for several years in the district in which he has made his home, Moberly, Missouri. He has, therefore, always been interested in the law. At recent meetings in Moberly, the following summary of one of his sermons was printed in the local paper.

The civil law makes provision for man to dispose of his property by will, if he so desires. The civil law prescribes rules and attesting, also proof must be furnished to the court that it is the last will and testament of decedent. A failure of proof would make the will void, and deprive the legatees from receiving the legacies named in said will.

The last will and testament of men if not skillfully drawn or written may be so ambiguous as to need the will construed by the circuit court of our State. If the will is skillfully written and certain conditions imposed by the testator or the legatees which they do not comply with, the court would refuse to make an order authorizing the executor, or administrator, as the case might be, to pay over the legacies to those named in the will. You may wonder how that is, that our legislature would make such a law to deprive any person from the gift of the testator. Now the reason is, that the gift is not to be given unless the condition is complied with, for that is the will of the testator.

Jesus came into this world with the promise of his Father that he would bestow upon him all power in heaven and on earth, and there is no question but the Father did do that. Then according to the promises and provisions made in the last will and testament of our Lord and Savior, or in other words the gospel, many bequests are given to us on the condition that we render obedience and adopt certain rules he prescribes in his will.

If we fail to comply with these conditions, the bequest is not valid and will not come into our possession; nor will we enjoy it, or them. Just as it would be under our civil law, in regard to the last will and testament of any deceased father or mother or relative, or other person bestowing gifts through his last will and testament, these gifts being based on conditions prescribed by the testator.

Our fathers have construed the last will and testament of the Lord in many different ways and to many different purposes, and have taught their construction to their children just as their fathers have done to them, and now it is going on just as it has been going on for centuries, each one putting on his own construction. The truth of the matter is, it will only bear one construction within the boundaries of truth.

There are those who have construed this last will and testament correctly and have enjoyed these very valuable gifts, promised in the testament, and have become witnesses to its true intent and meaning. When a man, or person, has received the Holy Spirit, which is the witness from God to abide with him, it converts a person into a witness who can bear witness that the terms and bequest contained in the will is indeed true. You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free. Obedience to the gospel as a whole will bring to us, and we shall enjoy a fulfillment of the promises in his will, or gospel. Why, then, not construe his will, or gospel, as the Lord and his apostles have taught it? If we do so, it will bring the rewards, and there's no gift so valuable as the gift of eternal life. This is a legacy in his will. The daily fellowship of God's Spirit has no value that can be measured.

Truth

By Elmer K. Patterson

To appreciate truth we must demonstrate it by concrete example.

A question was once asked by a studious young man, "What is man's most momentous problem?" The equally studious professor thought for a moment, contracted his brow, parted his lips, and then declared unreservedly that "truth is man's greatest problem."

The writer quite agrees with the professor, for history made and in the making reveals that man has wrestled with truth ever since reason dawned.

Pontius Pilate, the coward supreme, once heard some one mention truth in his presence, and impatiently he cried out, "Truth, what is truth?"

Adam and Eve in the garden no doubt asked the same question when tempted to partake of the forbidden fruit. One influence said to our first parents, "If thou eat of a certain tree thou shalt surely die," and another influence said, "Thou shalt not surely die." At this point in the life of Adam and Eve it was quite possible that the question arose, "Truth, what is truth?"

Countless definitions have been given, accepted, and denied. It is quite possible that there never will be found (in this world) a definition of abstract truth satisfactory to all, as long as that more subtle influence is at large upon the face of the earth tempting man and perverting his mind.

In studying the epitome of human endeavor we learn that from the Adamic beginning down to this very hour, there has been a continual division in the minds of men, collectively as well as individually. The people of one geographical division of the earth will continue to propound and even reverence as truth, what the people of other divisions will denounce as error. This generation will accept and cherish as truth what the next will reject and perhaps even despise.

The foregoing condition is not, however, applicable only to those just mentioned, for how well do we find this condition among our neighbors, yea, even among ourselves. And this condition is not confined to the acceptance or rejection of what we, our neighbors, or any body of people would conclude as a definition of truth; it applies to truth itself. And further, to theory appertaining to things material or immaterial, natural or supernatural, religious or secular.

But, in the language of Solomon, "Here is wisdom." If we cannot all agree upon a definition of truth in the abstract, we can at least, and should, each and every one of the human family, recognize and profit from those truths of our division that affect ourselves.

How well did the Savior of men know this when he delivered his famous Sermon on the Mount! How well in that wonderful address did he set forth many concrete truths that would remain standard, passing down through the centuries unto us to-day! How fitting do those truths uttered upon that great occasion apply to the present-day standards of morality, wisdom, and responsibilities upheld by our division!

Now, if we are to recognize and profit by these standards built upon the foundation of concrete truths handed down to us by the great "I AM," affecting ourselves, we can all be moral according to the best morality of our day and age. We can all be useful according to the standard by which the wisdom of our time measures usefulness. We can all equip ourselves to meet the responsibilities imposed upon us by that society by which we are surrounded and of which we are a part.

When Jesus gave unto man those concrete truths upon
(Concluded on next page.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

AGRICULTURE IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

From The New Zealand Farmer for September 1, 1921. A report of an interview with Gilbert J. Waller, who was also a director of the Hawaiian Meat Company and for many years the head of that company.

Progressive agriculturists are deeply interested in the agriculture of other lands, howsoever dissimilar the climatic and other conditions may be when compared with those of their own country. A visit to new territory or conversation with men who have obtained valuable experience in other parts has the effect of awakening a deeper interest in local agriculture, and with increased knowledge there should follow an improvement in farm methods.

The conditions obtaining in the Hawaiian Islands are widely different from those in the Dominion. A representative of the New Zealand Farmer recently had the pleasure of conversing with a visitor from these islands, and as the information gleaned will interest many readers of this journal, it is proposed to make reference to the topics touched upon.

The visitor referred to was Mr. Gilbert J. Waller, manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, Ltd., Honolulu. When asked for information about Hawaii that would interest New Zealand farmers, he immediately responded, and very courteously gave the representative the following interesting narrative:

The Hawaiian Islands, in the mid-Pacific Ocean, comprise a group with a total area of 6,449 square miles. The largest island is Hawaii, which has an area of over 4,000 square miles. The remaining seven include Maui, Kauai, Molokai, Lanai, Niihau, Kahoolawe, and Oahu. On the last named is situated Honolulu, the capital city, one of the commercial centers of the Pacific, and often spoken of as the crossroads of that ocean. This is an up-to-date city, after the American style, in an oriental setting, and has a population of about 83,000 people.

The inhabitants of the several islands total 255,000, including 110,000 of Japanese nationality, 25,000 Chinese, a similar number of Portuguese, 40,000 of the native race, including those of intermixed blood; Filipinos 15,000; white people, Americans, etc., 20,000; also military and naval units 20,000. The climate, the writer was assured, is not oppressively hot; the rainfall is not excessive.

Sugar cane growing is the chief branch of agriculture, and most of the raw sugar is sent to California for refining. The work in the plantations is carried on by the Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos, and Portuguese. The cultivation and the canning of the pineapple are important local industries. The banana thrives on the island, and large quantities of this popular fruit are annually exported. Many of the grasses that comprise the pastures have been imported from different parts of the world, including South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. The stock are on the pastures the whole year through, and do not receive supplementary foods. Maize has been grown and fed to cattle occasionally, but this practice no longer obtains. The ranches have special fattening paddocks which have been sown down with selected grasses. The writer queried the visitor as to whether the cattle tick pest was pres-which civilization has erected its standards, he well knew that such truths would become the highest and best thoughts of the honest in heart, translated into the process of living. Therefore, truth is a guiding principle best exemplified by the man who knows and does his duty.

ent in the islands. He was quite prepared for an answer in the affirmative; it therefore was a surprise to learn that the pest had not established itself there. The cattle are remarkably free from disease, as one would expect when they spend the whole of their time in the open. Cases of tuberculosis, however, Mr. Waller stated, are not entirely unknown. The raising of cattle is the principal branch of the stock industry.

The breed that finds most favor with the rancher is the Hereford. Animals of this breed are considered most adapted to the local conditions, as they are excellent foragers and possess robust constitutions. Breeds of cattle in the minority are the Black Polled Aberdeen-Angus, the Shorthorn, and the Red Devon. When one takes into consideration the total area of territory comprising the islands, many would regard the size of the ranches as large; these carry from 1,000 to 20,000 head of cattle. Mr. Waller knows of one only where the last named number can be counted. The average rancher is able to muster from 2,000 to 5,000. The sheep industry is not yet of great dimensions. Those raised are mainly Merino cross-breeds. One sheep station has a flock of 25,000 head, and another about half that number. The best stock ranches are on the island of Hawaii. On this island are two mountains, Mauna Kea, 13,009 feet high, and Mauna Loa, 12,000 feet. On the latter is a large volcano, active occasionally. At a lower altitude is the famous crater, Kilauea, which has been in a state of activity for years. It is called by the native Hawaiians, Hale-Mau-Mau, the House of Everlasting Burning. The grazing lands, it should be mentioned, extend from high altitudes on the slopes of these right down to the sea coast. The large ranch referred to has among its 20,000 head of cattle some very fine stock, in fact equal to the best to be found in other important cattle raising countries. On the same ranch are bred some very fine horses. This establishment supplies the United States Army stationed in Hawaii with remounts.

The mule is the most favored animal, both in the plantations and for general draught work. Some of these animals, which are more suitable for labor under tropical conditions than the horse, are imported from the American mainland. During recent years, however, the caterpillar tractor has been used for plantation work, with the result that there has been a corresponding decrease in the number of these animals. Dairying is not carried on to any appreciable extent. The most prominent breed of cattle maintained for that purpose is the Friesian. The visitor added that a number of the famous black and white breed were recently imported by the largest ranch holder on the islands, from Massachusetts.

The Hawaii Meat Company, of which, as already stated, Mr. Waller is director, is purely a grazers' institution, and its business is conducted on cooperative principles. The stock in the company is held by ranchers, who receive for money invested some seven per cent interest on their invested capital. The balance of the profits are distributed pro rata to the number of pounds of beef or mutton supplied by any rancher, whether he be a shareholder or not. The company has worked very successfully, owing to the ranchers working together. The system adopted has enabled them to keep out the great meat combines, who do not operate in Hawaii except in smoked meats and provisions. Mr. Waller very strongly recommends the cooperative plan to New Zealand farmers, who, he said, seemed at present to fear the entrance of American packers. He considered that success would assuredly follow if Dominion farmers were united. All the meat treated by the company referred to at its Honolulu abattoir is used for local consumption. Besides cattle and sheep, calves and pigs are also slaughtered. The consumption of mutton is much smaller than of beef. The hides and skins are all shipped to San Francisco, where the company has an office. The company owns a freight steamer which is utilized for the transport of live stock from the different islands to Honolulu. It also owns an exceptionally fine retail market in that city, which is the admiration of all visitors. The floor of this modern establishment is tiled throughout, while all the counters are of polished marble. Country produce of all sorts is handled here, including butter, fruit, and eggs. There is sufficient beef on the islands to supply civilian requirements, but not enough to satisfy the additional requirements of the army and navy. For some years past the company has imported beef from Australia in order to supply its army contract. Purchases were made in that country because the price was lower there than in New Zealand. The Commonwealth meat is transported from Sydney to Honolulu by steamers of the Ocean Line running to San Francisco. In connection with transportation matters, Mr. Waller stated that during the period referred to there was not one occasion when a monthly shipment was not made. The strikes, he said, did not interfere with the running of the boats. At the present time beef is cheaper in New Zealand than in Australia, and for that reason a quantity of meat has been purchased here, and transported by the steamers of the Union Steamship Company running to Vancouver, and calling at Honolulu en route. New Zealand lamb finds favor with the Hawaiian population, but Australian mutton is preferred owing to the carcasses being lighter in weight than those of our own sheep. New Zealand veal is also occasionally imported to Honolulu. At the present time there is a surplus of beef in Hawaii; in consequence it is expected during the next two or three months at least that importations will not be required. The Chinese, as the chief consumers of pork, practically control that business on the islands. Before the war a quantity of butter was imported from this country, and this was in general favor. When hostilities commenced in Europe a stoppage of importations followed, and business connections were consequently broken. With the advent of altered conditions, however, Mr. Waller hopes to make arrangements for a renewal of importations. New Zealand butter, he informed the writer, was sold under a special brand.

Concluding, Mr. Waller considers that New Zealand is a land with wonderful agricultural possibilities. He expressed surprise at the high prices of land, and said he did not think they were justified when they were compared with the values in older countries, though, he added, the returns from land will always influence their values. He thought New Zealand was not advertised sufficiently as a desirable country to be visited by tourists. Many travelers would be interested to see the places of beauty in the land and its wonders, and he added that if the country is advertised, an improvement in the train service is necessary. If we attract American visitors they will require hotel accommodations similar to that which they are accustomed to in their own country.

CHRIST AND IMMORTALITY

"Christ's message of life and immortality brought to man the dawn of a new day in social and moral reform."

It is hard to say what would happen if the belief in a future life were removed from the Christian religion. There is no doubt that one outcome would be the driving of humanity back into the dark days of paganism, with its irremediable superstitions and inconsolable sorrows. We only have to refer to history to know the conditions of civilization during the time when the immortal hope burned low on the altar of the human heart. Death was full of terrors, and from the tomb there came no ray of light. Homer has Achilles remark that he "had rather be the meanest slave on earth than king among the dead." This somber aspect stole into all the literature of ancient days. Death was a black cloud almost devoid of any bright fringe of hope.

The little light that did exist was far from satisfying. Socrates caught some glimpse of immortality which made him fearless in death. Cicero prepared his own arguments for immortal life. Pantheistic writers spoke of a time when individualities would merge into the main stream of life. People later came to feel there must be some future life in order that the inequalities of this life might be redressed. Some thought that the world would be quite irrational were humanity to be confined to the narrow limits of this life.

All nature's proofs and nature's foretokens were cold and inadequate. It remained for Christ to bring to the world the fullest and noblest conception of immortality and every Easter season impresses the fact upon our hearts. What a perfected statue is to the crude block of marble, the resurrection of Christ is to the doctrine of immortality. "He brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." He by his resurrection, life, and power, brought special meaning and possibilities to the fact of immortality. Macaulay, speaking of how Christianity had changed the face of Europe, also remarked that: "It's crowning glory is that it has wiped from eyes which had failed with wakefulness and sorrow, lent celestial visions to those dwelling under thatched roofs, and shed victorious tranquillity upon those who have seen the shades of death closing around them." The light of resurrection glory broke through the clouds, bringing a new hope and a new heart to those who had so long sat in darkness and death.

Christ's resurrection and his teachings of immortality brought to the world a new value of human worth. Prior to Christ man had not his proper place in the scale of nature. Men were little other than slaves or chattels. Human life was held inconceivably cheap and worthless. Lives were crushed out in the ancient Coliseum constantly for the sport of the ruling classes. Human lives were looked upon as poor creatures, children of a day, thrown without purpose into the arena of life. Christ and his teachings of human worth greatly enhanced the value of the individual life, and made sacred all that tends to develop the life of the soul. It created new ambitions and aspirations for the soul. It increased the value of every worthy desire, and so enlarged man's horizon that he could in Christ look forward "to an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away."

Christ so brought life and immortality to light that his followers began to make an assault upon the corruptions and vices of the day. With no hope of a future life people lived like beasts, unrestrained and vile. Believing death ended all, people went rioting through life, tramping down all the sweetness and moral strength of life, until some of the cities far outclassed Sodom and Gomorrah in iniquity. Christ's teachings and conceptions of immortality brought a new sense of the vileness of sin and a new power whereby people might be delivered from it. People began to feel that life was vastly more than meat and drink and dissipation.

The immortal hope that came with Christ also inspired men to help right the wrongs that were being perpetrated in human society. Before Christ came the fashion in which human life and labor were exploited was most appalling. Poverty was not only prevalent but terrible. Wars were constant; epidemics ran on unchecked. The people lived in deepest misery. Christ's message of life and immortality brought to man the dawn of a new day in social and moral

(Concluded on next page.)

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 6.—TEMPORAL EQUALITY AND ALL THINGS COMMON

Definition

The term "temporal equality" to us does not mean that each man has an equal opportunity with all other men in the field of industry to compete for the goods of life. Nor yet does it mean that each person is the possessor of property in equal amounts with all others. But it means the equal right of all men to share in the benefits of economic activity according to their needs and just wants, upon condition of their faithfulness to the cause of the Christian brotherhood.

Under existing economic customs there can be no such thing as an equal opportunity to compete for the goods of life. Some men are born with the goods of a lifetime secured to them without any act on their part whatsoever. Others are so circumscribed by poverty and hereditary deficiencies that it is impossible for them to compete successfully with others. As for the possession of property in equal amounts, if it were possible it would be inequitable and undesirable.

In the first place, Christian association is not founded in such customs as competition to secure the goods of life. It does, however, secure to all a full and free opportunity to promote the welfare of each and all through the employment of whatever talent one may possess. With regard to property possessions, the stewardship plan of conducting business enterprise and of distribution secures individual interest in a much more effective manner. These matters have already been treated under the question of "stewardships and the labor problem."

That our definition of temporal equality is correct is evident from the following: "Inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion and unto their generations, inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom. Behold this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship," and "none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 2, 3. "Every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4. These laws are explicit; they state the principle of temporal equality fully and clearly; and they serve to supply whatever may not be explicitly stated elsewhere; they amplify all other statements on the question, the implications of which may not be clear to some, such as: "Let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and reform. Wrongs began to be righted; social ills were being cured; the sick were receiving attention, and though we have not reached the zenith of social and moral reform we are truly living in a new earth and have a vision of a new heaven compared with the people of the first century.—London Free Press, April 2, 1921.

receive alike, that ye may be one...."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2.

There are many who may have difficulty in comprehending the justice and equity of this doctrine. This is not to be wondered at, for all the circumstances of customary business and social, as well as of the religious life, tend to ground men in doctrines that are diametrically opposed to this concept. World conditions make it certain that "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3: 3), which is "righteousness, and peace and joy with the Holy Ghost." (Romans 14: 17.)

But laying aside all ethical considerations, if it is possible to do so, there are still social and economic grounds for this doctrine. "Let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith to the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5. Our definition of temporal equality exactly coincides with this parable.

Injustice of Inequality

A man is called to the ministry of this church. He responds. He gives up all opportunity to secure the temporal or financial interests of his family that a life of commercial activity affords. Sons and daughters are born into his family. The educational and business opportunities of these are limited by the circumstances of their birth. They enter the field of industry and by close application and hard labor they derive a fair living.

Another member of the church remains in business. He manages his skill for the benefit of himself and family. He pays a tithe for the support of the ministry. Sons and daughters are born into his family. They have the best educational advantages. They are not under the necessity of hard labor to secure a competency, for they inherit from their parents a business already yielding an income beyond their needs. Sons and daughters of such as the minister we have referred to, furnish the labor which joined with the managerial ability yields the income to the sons of the man of business.

One sacrifices all to promote the concerns of the kingdom; the other gives such as he feels that he can without interference with his economic purposes. One by hard labor derives a living, the other with no effort inherits a fortune. Now, frankly, where is the justice or the equality of such a social order?

We have shown that society is a cooperative effort; its purpose is mutual aid. In society the poor are the fellow citizens of the rich; they put all they have into the cooperative effort; they receive the lesser pay; they buy and sell under the greater handicaps; the circumstances of exchange are against them; the whole trend of economic life tends to divert rewards from them and into the hands of the few (comparatively) who dominate the affairs of industry. In consideration of such conditions as these, is there any way of justifying idling and lavish expenditures by a few while the mass of laborers who carry the burden of the monotonous grind of industry must be content with the very ordinary things of life?

Industry is a joint affair. One class of labor is just as honorable as another class and just as necessary; to dig the foundations for the wall is just as necessary and important and honorable as to manage the purchase and sale of commodities and services; and it is just as worthy of an adequate reward. And Christian idealism cannot fail to provoke expressions of condemnation of a custom which says to one who has served faithfully, "Sit thou there and be thou clothed in rags," while it says to another, "Sit thou here and be thou clothed in robes." "That which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man, for food and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance; but it is not given that one should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin. . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

Let us give an example of the injustice of rewards based on current wage scales. Brown is a miner. He has a family of six. He risks his life and goes down into the bowels of the earth to dig coal that the wheels of industry may turn and that homes may be made comfortable in unfavorable weather. He receives thirty dollars a week for five and one half days of continuous hard work. His family must be content with a poor home and without many of the comforts of life, notwithstanding he labors continuously at a very essential task and confers wide benefits upon his fellow men. Jones is a real estate trader; a speculator. He has a family of three. He risks neither life nor limb; though he may speculate with wealth which exists because others have joined efforts in productive activity to produce the wealth which through some device has fallen into Jones's hands. His barter yields him an average income of fifty dollars a week as a reward for sitting around an office in a cushioned chair, waiting to profit by some man's necessity, or for riding around in an auto trying to stir up some trade so that part of the wealth which is in others' hands may pass into his own. His family has a very nice home and enjoys the comforts of life, notwithstanding he has exerted himself in no productive effort of any kind, but has only drawn upon the resources of others for his own sake.

Is this equity? Is this Christian good will? Can it find any justification? Is it any wonder that God hath opened the fountains of inspiration to reveal to man the way of life? In the face of such universal selfish schemes, is it to be wondered that God should say to his people: "The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain, is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided"? This is a very mild statement of principle; it came through a man of God renowned for his charity; it bears the impress of a wonderful kind-heartedness; but it serves to direct our attention to more severe arraignments of the speculator. "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a swift witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were [by] fire. . . .Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter.—James 5: 1-11. Neither inequality nor the process by which inequality arises can escape the damnation of Him who delights in the welfare and comfort of all his children.

Social Effects of Inequality

Temporal inequality divides society into classes according to the amount of private possessions. One class comes to have a feeling of superiority and a desire and purpose to dominate the affairs of society. But when a class has a feeling of superiority it at once seeks to impress others with their inferiority; and class hatreds arise; one class has a feeling of independence and the other a sense of injustice. Moreover, temporal inequality actually gives rise to a very large dependent class, a subnormal class. Social affairs take on forms that impose handicaps which in turn cause many to become inefficient; and this gives rise to social welfare problems.

Where inequalities thrive, sympathies die out, and antipathies and antagonisms arise. Those who are under social handicaps struggle for freedom, and a state of conflict comes to exist: and this is followed by a general indisposition to cooperate because even cooperative efforts are controlled by the independent class for their own good; and industry takes on the form of a conflict; the whole trend of economic development is influenced by the spirit of conquest. These forces have been at work so long that industry to-day is a conflict between opposing interests.

Indirectly inequality affects political government. The class that dominates industry is at once in a position to influence political conventions, party policies, and government legislation and administration. Policies are often promoted favoring those who possess wealth. Even though it may appear to the uninitiated that laws are being enacted favorable to the oppressed, the outcome of governmental administration almost always leaves entrenched interests in a position equally as strong as the one it held before legislation affecting its affairs was enacted. Politics and governments are corrupted because men are economically unequal. Social conflicts persist and social solidarity becomes impossible of regulation.

All of these conditions are in striking contrast to Christian association which is characterized by peace and good will.

Economic Benefits of Temporal Equality

The unequal distribution of the benefits of economic activity is the immediate cause of strikes in particular and of economic conflict in general. Economic activity would yield much more general satisfaction if economic goods were distributed somewhat equitably. Temporal equality would wipe out about all the grievances that labor holds against capital; workmen would become contented, sympathetic feelings would arise, and the employee would become disposed to cooperate with the employer in an effort to make business enterprise successful. If distribution were equitably made, the prospect of increased rewards would furnish incentive for the acquisition of greater skill on the part of the workman, there would be increased proficiency and a greater output, making it possible for men generally to enjoy the comforts of life. Strikes would cease, and a tremendous saving of wastes arising therefrom effected. In general, industry would take on something of the aspect of what is intended by nature to be, namely, a life of mutual aid. Fellow feelings would arise and friendships, and satisfactions which only other-regarding acts can yield.

Spiritual Consequence

Under "The scope" of the Christian religion we have shown that divine favor is conditioned in altruistic adjustments. The relief of the oppressed and the fatherless and the widow; to undo the heavy burdens; to let the oppressed go free; to break every yoke; all of these adjustments must precede the offering at the altar. They are the pollen which, falling upon the stigma, fructifies the gift laid upon the altar and causes it to yield the fruit of divine communion. "In your temporal affairs ye shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. Love seeks equality. "If a man love me . . . we will come and make our abode with him."—John 12: 23.

Thus temporal equality, or equality in "earthly things," is a means of "obtaining heavenly things."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

But this divine favor, which brings God down to man, is itself a sign that other spiritual consequences attend temporal equality, namely: That the adjustments which men make which issue in temporal equality are at once the disciplinary processes that bring man up to God; they are the surrenders that issue in the Christ type of manhood; and these are the spiritual consequences of temporal equality that give standing in the doctrine of Christ.

All Things Common

This is a very ambiguous term because such a variety of meanings have been attached to it. Many ideas foreign to its meaning in Christian doctrine are revived in different minds by its use. It is therefore very difficult to set forth this doctrine. No odds how clearly one may express its true gospel signification, traditional ideas press themselves upon consciousness, and these ideas are projected into the language giving its true signification in a way which makes that language seem to express only what the auditor had in mind before.

In Christian doctrine, "all things common" does not mean that there is no private property; it does not mean that homes are not held in fee simple or in individual right. It does mean that capital goods, properties, upon the use of which for industrial purposes the welfare of many men depends, shall belong to the group and not to the individual. The reasons for this have been set forth already in the discussion of stewardships.

A Christian Doctrine

In Acts 2: 44 it is said that "all that believed were together, and had all things common." Again in Acts 4: 32-37 this same doctrine is set forth. But the details explaining the application of this doctrine are not given in the New Testament. Bancroft says (History of the World, vol. 4, p. 1467): "The fathers of the Christian church all considered communism the most perfect and most Christian form of social organization. Like Christ, they regarded usury, taking money as interest, as a capital crime. Their doctrines were uniform on the nature of property. They considered it the fruit of usurpation." He quotes Saint Augustine as follows: "Private property originated in usurpation. . . . Property is not a natural right, but a positive right founded simply on civil authority." Saint Ambrose: "The soil was given to the rich and poor in common." "Nature gave all things in common for the use of all." "Usurpation created private right." Saint Clement: "The common use of everything in this world should be free to all men. But through iniquity the one claimed this belonged to him and the other that, and thus came division among men." "Private property is the fruit of iniquity."

It is not impossible that the distance from which the activities of the early Christian church in this relation are viewed may give some wrong impressions concerning its economic doctrines. We do know that Christendom presents widely divergent viewpoints on other Christian doctrines that are more explicitly set forth than is the doctrine of all things common. Among the controversial doctrines of Christendom are those of authority, baptism, and church organization. Unquestionably some of the contradictory interpretations placed upon these doctrines are not true. And if mistakes are made here, then it at least leaves room to question interpretations that are placed upon the doctrine of all things common.

While the Book of Mormon speaks of this doctrine, what is said does not imply what Bancroft has inferred from the writings of the early church fathers. It says: "They had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift." (Page 682, Authorized Edition.) Again: "And from that time forth they did have their goods and their substance no more common among them, and they began to be divided into classes, and they began to build up churches unto themselves, to get gain, and began to deny the true church of Christ."—Ibid., p. 684.

Just what goods are meant here is not stated. Some may infer from the phrase "to get gain" that it has reference to what is known to us as capital goods—goods devoted to further production.

It is impossible to interpret the history of this doctrine so as to say with certainty what application of the principle was made. All we can say from what is written is that it was a principle in the economic doctrines of the early Christian church.

But the Christian church of to-day is not left to guess what application of the principle must be made to present-day conditions, because the channels of revelation are still open, and explicit commandments concerning this doctrine are part of our heritage. This application of the principle of common ownership, or all things common, we have set forth in elucidating the doctrine of stewardships.

(To be continued.)

The Aims of Socialism

By Isaac L. Jones

A plea for fairer treatment and clearer thinking concerning all cults, creeds, and organizations.

I will be glad if you will kindly allow me a little of your space to discuss Socialism. I wish to do so in no spirit of antagonism but purely because I like to see all subjects treated as fairly and dispassionately as possible, especially in church publications.

As a member of the church I naturally hold no brief for the political party, but I contend that we who have been so unfairly attacked in the past as a church, should be the last to adopt similar tactics when describing other outside organizations.

I would first of all like to give a very brief account of the causes of the present state of affairs in the British Isles. History repeats itself and the aftermath of the war took no one by surprise. Yet notwithstanding we are passing, like other nations, through the times unparalleled in history. We have millions of unemployed, thousands on the verge of starvation, and thousands starving.

The righteousness of the Great War is a controversial topic of course, but the majority in this country now believe it to have been merely a commercial enterprise, the workers, as always, being the actual fighters, and the capitalists, the sole beneficiaries. Instead of the "promised land," fit for heroes, the soldiers returned to a land unfit for the lowest form of life to live in. One can therefore, to a small extent, appreciate some of the causes of unrest and also the significance of the inscription on the Communist's banner, "Death is better than starvation."

It has been the unhappy experience of the British worker to find that so-called "constitutional methods" have failed to alleviate even the pangs of hunger. They therefore consider themselves justified in now adopting unconstitutional methods to attain that liberty which is the inherent right of civilized man. It does not follow that these unconstitutional methods are vicious or immoral, because the lawmakers of England have in their wisdom labeled as constitutional all means that perpetuate class preference and unconstitutional any and every way which seeks to benefit the majority.

Industries here are not closed down, because operating expenses will not permit them to compete with other foreign firms, but because the articles of the celebrated peace treaty have destroyed our opportunities of even entering the foreign markets. We did not think for one moment the long coal strike being ended would insure a demand for coal and steady employment. We all knew that the terms of the German Reparation Bill took away from us the coal markets we previously supplied, and now Germany is filling these and working four days a week and ten hours per day to do so.

All this at the special request of the capitalists' influence. This explains briefly the spirit of revolt which is now so prevalent.

Dean Inge on Socialism

To support the attack on Socialism, the most reactionary and conservative dean in England condemns the movement as anti-religious and immoral. This is exactly what those who know Dean Inge expect from him. Let us analyze his statements.

1. "The followers of Marx have declared war against every kind of organized religion." This is false. "Marx was personally an atheist, but he took the position which is to-day the recognized position of all parties, that religious belief or nonbelief is a private matter with which they were not concerned."—Spargo's Life of Marx.

The ultimate end of religion and socialism is to bring into existence a state of society in which the good in man predominates. The difference between the two sections is the manner by which they seek to achieve their identical aims.

2. "To attack private property without also destroying the family... and Christianity, is impossible." This is easily answered. The family life of the majority who hold private property on a large scale i. e., the "landed class," is already destroyed. The lives of most of the wealthy are rotten to the very core. The present system perpetuates this base life and destroys by separation the intimate relationship there should be in every worker's home by forcing the sons and daughters of the average home to seek a living by breaking up the family circle. The charge of common marriage is base and undeserved.

Wrong to Judge by Isolated Examples

Some say that the Communists or Socialists do not possess one honest man and that they are composed of "half-educated, deluded, smoke- and beer-fogged brained upstarts, some having the scars of hell on their souls." This is unworthy of any critic and is either rhetorical nonsense or deliberate misinterpretation. You cannot indict a society by an experience limited to one communist's lecture nor by a few individuals. In our own church we have intellectual men but we also have the half-educated and deluded upstart. Yet what would be more unfair than for a critic to judge us by the latter? To say that there are no honest men in an organization simply because we do not happen to agree with the views of this particular organization is exceedingly elementary reasoning and also implies an intimate knowledge of the private life of every member! There is a vast difference between saying a philosophy is dishonest and proving it to be so!

I quite agree that the temporal program of the church is a fine one, but to preach repentance and the gathering to a starving people is not very palatable. Especially when we face the fact that there will not be anything to gather to for some considerable time. Improvements come gradually, and until we have a Zion in full working order, on a business footing, and fulfilling the Communistic ideas we are teaching, then until such a time arrives we should assist the efforts of reform outside and not unfairly and harshly condemn them.

The world is leaving the emotional age behind and we will have to concentrate more on the material side of religion and less on the intellectual or entirely spiritual.

It is man's destiny to traverse the earth, to come into contact with every form of reality, to wrestle with evil and to be purified by suffering. Without this his soul would only sleep as the plants sleep.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Changes in General Officers

A few changes have recently been made in the personnel of our general officers. Sister Rogene B. Smith, having removed to the West to be with her husband, resigned as our assistant secretary. Her successor in office is Sister Grace K. Morrison, who was some time ago introduced to you as an assistant to Sister Steele, our young women's supervisor.

Sister Morrison is a woman of considerable office and stenographic experience, a mother, and a happy home maker. She has poise of mind and judgment which will make her a valuable addition to our executive force.

Sister Rogene also (and with reluctance because she had so enjoyed the work) resigned her position as birth registrar. Sister Stella Chapman was chosen to succeed her. Sister Chapman has been, since early in the year, assistant to our general cradle roll superintendent, Sister Anne Roberts. Thus we feel that a most happy adjustment has been made since Sister Chapman and Sister Roberts are not only close friends and near neighbors, but both are absorbed in the ever broadening and ever attractive child welfare work of our department.

Another appointment has been made which also strengthens the cradle roll department. It is that of Sister Sarah Rodgers Chapman as assistant to Sister Laura Mann, head of our Health Department. The first of July, Sister Mann was transferred to the Sanitarium to have supervision of its nursing and training school. She has had hands and heart full every moment since and the health records for the cradle roll department have piled up unanswered, since Sister Roberts could not assume the responsibility of replying for the Health Department.

Now with the new assistant on the job, it will be only a short time until the records will again be brought up to date. Sister Chapman is becoming intensely interested in the phase of health work carried through the cradle roll and since she is a graduate nurse and has had many additional advantages of study and experience, mothers throughout the church may repose great confidence in her advice about their children.

We are happy to announce these new appointments, and we feel the sisters everywhere are interested therein. It is our desire to keep our organization fully officered and functioned.

A. A.

Lonely in the Midst of Many

We have of late been brought to consider how desperately lonely some may be even while surrounded by many. Especially is this experience one which comes to young people who leave home to pursue their education or training along particular lines.

The Women's Department in Lamoni has recognized, in part, its responsibility for and relation to the numbers of young men and young women who come yearly to Graceland's halls. There has been some effort made, more or less effective and systematic, to make these strangers feel at home, to assure them of the real interest in their welfare which the hospitable citizens of Lamoni take, and to create and strengthen bonds of friendliness and mutual good fellowship between the Graceland students and the town people.

This is right. Parents might well hesitate to send a sheltered daughter or impressionable young son into a community oblivious to their good and interests among a citizenry whose social consciousness is only developed to the point of considering one's own immediate family and its concerns.

The sooner the Saints can sense the fact that the child of another is equally precious to the Father and that he will hold all accountable whose lives could have touched in helpfulness and encouragement any of those who need, the sooner will we begin to understand the saving grace of love. And "need" is not always along the lines of material aid. Especially in youth the soul is hungry for simple companionship, for association, and innocent good times where the exuberance of life and vitality may be given wholesome expression and outlet.

"Help me withhold no good that I may do," is a prayer we may all ponder daily, for with many of us our sins of omission are greater than those of commission.

Read the following little letter and see if it does not touch a chord in your heart! Poor lonely girlie, hungry not for charity, not for eats or benefits handed out on a long-distance server, but just hungry for the good "homey" times when she could meet and mingle with folks she knew and who counted her in!

A. A.

A Little Letter

Dearest Mother: Well, almost three months have passed since I left you all to come to this training school. It seems a long time in one way.

When I think of my work I feel quite satisfied, oh, glad that I came, but when I think of how lonely I am and how hungry I am for good times and how there seems to be no place for me in this big branch, no chance at all to ever get acquainted or to have any kind of a good social time, I feel just like giving up and going back home again where folks will at least speak to you!

I went to Religio Friday night. It was the third time I had gone, but I wasn't introduced to anyone. A girl sitting next to me shared her book and asked me if I was a newcomer. I told her I was, that I was taking the training course. After the lesson the teacher told all about a big party they were going to have Halloween, but made it very plain and straight that it was to be only for members of the class, and you know our hours of duty are such that we can never be regular attendants at any Sunday school or Religio class. I came home feeling almost angry. I told my roommate I didn't believe I'd ever go near the church again. It is just the way at Sunday school; crowds and crowds of people, but some way you just can't find where you fit in.

Why, one nurse here told me she had been here almost three years and had never eaten a meal away from the hospital and had never met any of the young people of this town, socially, except on a few rare and wonderful occasions when Doctor and Mrs. Blank or some other thoughtful person entertained for the nurses.

I'm not complaining—but, mother, I'll have to tell it all I guess. S— and I went to a movie the other day, and just as we went around the corner down town, the wind lifted my hat from my head and it went sailing into the street. Well, mother, the nicest looking young fellow ran after it and brought it back to me with such a happy smiling face, I just had to smile back as I thanked him. It would have been dreadful for me not to have been a little nice to him, wouldn't it?

Well, he asked about us, where we stayed and so on, and asked if he couldn't call, but of course I just felt that wouldn't be at all right, for you had always told me never to pick up any acquaintance on the street or in any such irregular or improper way; but oh, mother dear, you do know, don't you, how I just wished he could have come? I just longed for some real jolly good times like we girls and boys always had back home. And here, what have we? Oh, well, I am going to try to stick it out; but let me tell you, I think there is something wrong somewhere, when perfectly good and proper girls like this bunch at the training school are not counted in on any of the merrymakings in this big branch! It must be they just have never thought about how it feels to be away from home among strangers.

Now that I've gotten it all "out of my system," as brother Will would say, let's forget it. I'm going to try to do my part right always although I do love good times so much that I don't see how I'm ever going to let just plain hard work, day after day and week after week, take the place of everything else and be happy over it!

Your lonely

E—

Child Welfare

Webster says that welfare is "the state or condition of faring well; exemption from pain or discomfort; prosperity; conditions as regards well-being." And well-being is defined thus: "the state of being well, or in proper condition, morally and physically; a state of well-grounded happiness or prosperity, as peace is requisite to well-being; spiritual well-being."

Then we want to see to it that the child is well, bodily, physically; that he has no bodily pain or discomfort; that he is happy; that he has peaceful, quiet surroundings; and that, finally, his moral and spiritual welfare is looked after.

A child who is well, well-fed, clean, and comfortable, will be happy, and more tractable, more teachable.

If the parents of yesterday made mistakes, then the parents of to-day and to-morrow should profit by avoiding the mistakes of yesterday. Looking back, in this instance, may help us, but only to renew the determination to look forward to better things by changing present conditions.

How can we better the condition of our children, our neighbor's children, the children of the church?

By studying the best methods, learning what clothing is comfortable, what care is needed for the little bodies, what food is best.

Knowledge of conditions before and after birth would have saved the lives of many babies. They are gone. Our care now is to save the babies who are with us; to reduce infant mortality, that they may not die before the completion of the first year but "live and declare the works of the Lord."

We are to study, then, for many wise people have learned things about children which we may not have had an opportunity to learn, and are passing on to us things which are most important for us to know.

Anyone ought to be glad to know what to do to make a child comfortable and happy.

Some of us have no children, but we often come in contact with them; and to be able to advise a young mother correctly, with authority, would be a happy thing for us to do.

The Government has at last recognized the importance of the care of the child by establishing a children's bureau at Washington, District of Columbia. We may get information from that source. There are child welfare bureaus in many cities and towns. In rural districts there are district or county nurses to whom one may go for advice and help.

Have your child examined, measured, weighed, and use corrective measures for the health and happiness of the little one, and your own peace of mind and comfort, also.

Study our own child welfare course; study Food and the Body. There are Farmers' Bulletins on "How to select foods," (Numbers 808 and 817,) and "Food for young children," (Number 917,) etc., which can be had for the asking, from the Agricultural Department.

Study the Word of Wisdom; and absorb the practical, reasonable things from articles on health, food, and the care of children.

A recent article by Doctor Woods Hutchinson gives some very good counsel on the care of babies. He says:

"This age-long Slaughter of the Innocents has been almost abolished simply by keeping the baby and his food and drink and nurses and attendants and all his callers and visitors clean, CLEAN."

Fresh air, emphasized over and over, outdoor, pure air, a draft to carry away close, heavy air, so baby may have the purest and best. Clean skin, clean clothing, napkins plunged in a germicide solution, dipped out with sticks, thoroughly washed and boiled, never just rinsed out; especially where there is bowel trouble. Keep flies away from baby, for we know that this is one sure way of carrying impurities, disease, and sometimes death.

He further says that baby "has all he can do to attend to his own business, which is doubling his weight every six months, without being pestered by relatives and friends"—handed around, jounced about, and made uncomfortable and unhappy by rough handling. And by all means, let everybody, men, women, and children keep their dirty, possibly germ-laden fingers out of baby's mouth.

Fleas, flies, and mosquitoes may be carriers of disease, and "germs are worse than hot weather" for babies. But do not wean him in hot weather if it can be avoided; and use the best foods and have regular feeding times for him. —(In August Ladies' Home Journal.)

If we are particular and careful with baby he will learn to be so for himself. Sister Anderson told us of a little fellow who asked, "Is it good for babies?" when some one offered him a sweet with which he was not familiar. And then he said, "My mother would rather I had this with my lunch."

My daughter knows the four parents of two babies near the same age, a boy and a girl. The boy was handicapped at the beginning, went from nine to four and a half pounds, and his life was despaired of. An operation on the stomach was deemed necessary. With extreme care and good nursing he pulled through, and now, a year old, he is hale and hearty and happy. The girl is fretful, peevish, and unhappy. Her fever often runs up suddenly to one hundred and three. They say "It's her teeth." She is fed all sorts of things which her parents eat. She is handed great pieces of candy to keep her quiet.

The father of the boy said, "Do you give your baby so much candy? Our baby has had very little of anything of that kind."

"Oh," answered the careless mother, "I was brought up on candy and it didn't hurt me any." But her ignorance of the care of babies is hurting her child.

We must learn about children, beginning with the care of the prospective mother. Our girls may be learning, with profit, some of the things they will need to know later.

An interesting book on child training is Your Child Today and To-morrow, by Sidonie Matzner Gruenberg.

Have you read Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush? How many are studying A Study of Child Nature, by Elizabeth Harrison?

I cannot give any detailed information in so short a paper, I can only point the way.

If you were hungry, and I should meet you and say, "Down the road a piece they have all kinds of good things to eat. They are giving them away," I think you would hurry along and appease your hunger.

There is much "food for thought" in the leaflets, the bulletins, the books which we may study, "that we may profit withal."

Do you read the Women's Department in the HERALD? Keep in touch with what the women of the church are doing.

We ought to help each other and advance along the road to Zion.

HORTENSE SELTON CRAMER.

(Read by Sister Alice White, in the absence of Sister Cramer, at the Eastern Colorado Reunion.)

When to Get There

One should never arrive for luncheon or dinner more than five minutes in advance of the time stated. In giving luncheon or dinner invitations, the hostess should always specify definitely the time she wishes her guests to come. Among close friends it is sometimes customary to ask luncheon or dinner guests to come well in advance of the meal hour, but when that is expected the hostess should specially ask her guests to do so. A dinner is usually regarded as an entire evening's entertainment, and one does not hurry away from dinner, but lingers in the drawing room or living room for possibly an hour. However, among women who entertain extensively, a luncheon invitation is not regarded as an invitation for the entire afternoon, and unless some entertainment, such as cards or music, is provided for the afternoon, guests leave shortly after they have adjourned from the luncheon table. However, this is a matter of local custom. In small town society, to hurry away ten minutes after a luncheon is over would be regarded as discourteous.

A Renewed Offer

A few months ago we offered through these columns to send a collection of our pamphlets, instructions to workers, etc., to any missionary, pastor, or other church official who cared to acquaint himself with the work of our department and who cared enough to send his name and address with request to our office.

Yesterday we asked our secretary how many had responded to that invitation and she replied, "Well, guess how many."

Just guess how many of the priesthood of this "live wire" church were alert to that opportunity and availed themselves of the chance to be informed quite thoroughly upon the objective mechanism and ideals of one of the main departments of the church?

About fifteen! And we are wondering, not about the fifteen (for God is ever ready to bless in many ways those who are humbly trying to broaden their outlook and understanding), but about the other thousand or so who did not write, who did not care! We wonder just what is the attitude of mind evidenced. Is it indifference? Is it narrowness? Is it "one-track-mindedness"? Is it lack of perception? Lack of vision? Is it contempt for women's work? Is it a feeling that the latter can in no way touch or link up with the real work of the church?

We wonder away, but are absolutely good natured about it all, and are quite ready to renew our offer to send explanatory literature for our department to any one of the priesthood who will work for it. Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXXIV

Vocational Guidance

1. Give the most conspicuous reason why a child is incompetent to plan his own future?
2. What kinds of work appeal to young people? Why?
3. In what ways may work become a curse?
4. What is society's interest in vocational guidance?
5. What are the four aims of vocational guidance?
6. How can a careful and accurate study of the child be made?
7. Why is preparation an important element in vocational guidance?
8. For what reasons should a thorough study of the industrial opportunities be made?
9. What great responsibility has the vocational counsel?
10. Why should vocational guidance remain a part of the school system?
11. What place has the church in this field?
12. What is the responsibility of the home in this matter?
13. Suggest how the home may aid the youth in choosing his life's work.
14. What ideals should be held up for the youth in making his choice?
15. Is life a career or a mission?

To Clean Feathers

To clean feathers, dip them in a jar of gasoline and leave them there for a few minutes, then remove and rub them with a cloth. This will usually make the feathers come out beautifully white.

Another way to treat feathers is to rub them thoroughly with magnesia or French chalk, wrap in tissue paper, and lay aside for several days, rubbing gently with the magnesia each day. At the end of four or five days' time they should be quite clean.

Two hundred British girls are now on their way to New Zealand, where they expect to secure husbands.

American women accorded the privilege of appearing before the king and queen of England must wear long skirts.

LETTERS

Impressions of the Work in England

Sister Baldwin gives an intimate view of some phases of the work in England.

Many of our friends in America have asked us to write to them, but we find that we cannot do this on account of lack of time, and the postage required. So we are writing to them through the HERALD.

We sailed on the Aquitania on September 13, and had a most enjoyable trip across. We had some rough weather, but neither of us was sick for one minute, and we found lots of time to rest after our strenuous work at three reunions, and elsewhere this summer, during which time Brother Baldwin gave one hundred and fifty-eight patriarchal blessings.

The boat made a record trip, and we landed in Southampton in six days from the time of start.

Upon arrival at Saint Leonard's we found Brother T. W. Williams, just in from Wales, and Brother and Sister Sorden. Also the rest of the household belonging to Saint Leonard's. We stayed in London for nearly two weeks, and visited many places of interest, such as Westminster Abbey, Buckingham Palace, British Museum, and Saint Paul's Cathedral. We found the price of clothing here less than in the States, but food commodities and necessary household utensils are much higher than at home.

We surely enjoyed our stay at beautiful Saint Leonard's, and we could see so many uses for a building such as they have there. But we were sorry to hear that the school which they had planned and had worked so hard to organize, could not be realized this year, on account of lack of funds. If the Saints in America could only realize the crying need for such a school here in this mission, we are sure they would sacrifice more, in order that a great work could be accomplished. We could not help thinking how wonderful it would be if we had such a building in Boston, for the use of the army of young people who belong to that branch. What social gatherings and real good times could be indulged in! The rooms are so large and airy, that in our mind's eye we could see wonderful possibilities for advancing the work among the young people.

We met with the London Saints on Sunday, and Brother Baldwin preached to them. We were surprised to find that the branch was so small, but we surely hope that those who have been faithful for so many years may soon be rewarded by seeing others brought into the work.

On Saturday, October 1, in company with Brother T. W. Williams, we started for the Manchester district conference. We enjoyed this conference and were pleased to find so many Saints engaged in the work, and especially the enthusiasm manifested among the large group of young people in the district.

One report, that of the Warrington Branch, was especially pleasing, for they reported having a live Religio Department, a Sunday School Department, a Women's Department, etc., and altogether it was a report which their branch president must have been glad to send in. In fact, the reports from the eight branches in this district were most gratifying to hear.

It was decided, after conference with Brother T. W. Williams and Brother J. A. Gillen, that we start our labors in the Manchester District. We immediately got in touch with the district president, Brother Joseph Dewsnup, and a plan of campaign was mapped out, which will take three months at least to complete.

We were surprised and pleased to find such a hearty welcome and invitation to hold services from the Manchester District branch presidents. Brother Baldwin preached to the conference on Sunday morning, and there was an excellent spirit present, and the Saints all seemed pleased with the effort.

No one who has not been here can realize how bad conditions are in Great Britain, and we had been told that we would have to pay our board wherever we would labor, as the Saints were willing enough, but could not possibly afford to keep anyone besides their own families. Therefore, we were prepared to do this.

But to our surprise, when the announcement was made that we were to labor in the Manchester District, we received many invitations to partake of the hospitality of the Saints.

One instance, which we must acknowledge here, is the wonderful welcome that we received in the home of Brother and Sister William Armstrong, and their sister, Sister Baty, the wife of our deceased patriarch. They told us we might make our home with them while we were here, and they gave us the best of everything they had, and never, in any of our experience, have we found people who would do more for you than these kind people, and you can tell how much this means to us who have left home and come among strangers. You have all read Brother Armstrong's articles in the HERALD and Autumn Leaves, but we wish that all might have the personal contact with him that we are being privileged to enjoy. He is a man of God, kind, lovable, and always looking for chances to do some one a good turn. Surely his reward will be great, for the gospel is the sole theme in his life, and his companion is his helpmate, in the fullest sense of the word.

In fact, we find all the Saints here most generous, willing to do anything they possibly can do to help along the work, and they are very anxious to have us visit them so they may talk with Brother Baldwin, and a great many have asked for their patriarchal blessings.

We started our work in the Southeast Manchester Branch on Sunday, October 9. We went to their Sunday school and found there more than fifty children, gathered in from the neighborhood who were being taught the gospel by Sister Armstrong and Sister Bessie Baty.

We were pleased when the superintendent of the school made the announcement that Brother Baldwin would talk to the senior classes, and that Sister Baldwin would adjourn with the primary department and talk to them in their separate room. We do not know what Brother Baldwin talked about, but we were most pleased with our visit with the children. We insisted that Sister Bessie Baty have her regular lesson first, and we found her to be a wonderful story-teller. She is a teacher in the schools also. We then taught the children a rest exercise and told them a story. Sister Baty is very much alive and wishes to take advantage of every advance step that she can learn. In fact, she said to us, "Oh, if I could just go to the States and see how they run their primary departments there, and then come back and labor among our own children in this country, how much good I could do!" And that is the spirit we find here. The young people are anxious to advance, and we believe that the old people are willing to help them all they can. We are to visit Sister Baty, and give her several of the exercises we used in our primary departments while working in the Massachusetts District, and we are going to do all we can, in the limited time at our disposal, to tell her all about handwork and its benefits, and we also hope to derive benefit from our association with her, for she knows the child of Great Britain, and should be able to give us some excellent advice.

Brother Baldwin has preached Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week, and the little hall has been filled with people, and we are only sorry that the meetings cannot extend longer than one week, for we feel that a great deal of good can be done among people who are so willing to listen and benefit by the effort we make. We were very gratified last evening when a young man, of fine intellect, who will be a pillar of strength to the work, asked Brother Baldwin to baptize him.

We find that all the brethren from America, as well as the missionaries appointed from this country, are doing a noble work, for it is surely pleasant to hear that their labor is appreciated by a great many of the Saints here. Brother Williams and Brother Gillen are working most earnestly for the cause, and though the progress is very slow, still it is surely there. One good brother, in writing to Brother Armstrong this morning concerning how he was enjoying the preaching by Brother Baldwin, said, "Surely these American brethren are sacrificing a great deal to leave home and loved ones to preach the gospel of our blessed Lord and Master. May God bless them in their efforts to do good."

And we hear a great many words of praise for the work of the men who are here, and for those who have labored in former years.

We are looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to our work among these people, for if they are all like the Manchester Saints, it is going to be no hardship to work in this country, the birthplace of our fathers and mothers.

Brother Baldwin joins me in sending love to all our friends, and we would be pleased to receive letters from them. Our home address, for the present, will be Saint Leonard's, 19 Amburst Park, Stamford Hill, London N. 16, England.

Yours very sincerely, ALICE H. BALDWIN.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

[In a letter from Elder Baldwin to the First Presidency, we learn that the work in Wales is postponed for the present, as the little chapel at Llanelly is not yet available. Later Apostle Williams will go with them to open the work in Wales. Also Elder Bishop comments on the goodly number of young people and that he was impressed that a special effort should be made on their behalf. Sister Baldwin will have charge of the work with the young women and has also been asked to act in the interest of the Religion as a whole.—EDITORS.]

Sheffield Reunion

Indicating that the term "reunion" has a varied meaning, according to locality.

On Saturday, October 8, 1921, the reunion of the Sheffield, England, District, began at 7.30 p. m., with Apostle T. W. Williams associated with the district president, James E. Bishop. After a few short opening remarks disclosing the purpose of the gathering, Brother Thomas Taylor gave a thirty-minute address on the subject, "The missionary spirit." He illustrated the need of everybody, not only the missionary, being ardently engaged in missionary work. It was a very encouraging address and was well received.

Sister Blanche Edwards, superintendent of the British Isles Sunday School Department, gave a forty-minute address on the subject, "Interpreting God to the soul of a little child." This address proved to be most interesting, and was certainly an inspiration to all interested in Sunday school work. She gave us to understand how vitally important it was for the Sunday-school teacher to study the age of the child, and not give them lessons above their understanding, and the importance of story-telling lessons. Sister Edwards was assisted by her sister, Sister G. Edwards, in her illustrations of her ideal Sunday school and the materials to use in it. This address was very well accepted. It left a very deep impression with those interested in Sunday school work, and also many who previously had taken no active part in the Sunday school. Sister Blanche Edwards after her address allowed a period of fifteen minutes for questions and the time was fully occupied, thereby showing the enthusiasm of those interested in wanting to get the correct vision of our sister's beautiful and encouraging address.

Sunday Services, October 9

At 9.30 a. m. Elder Joseph Dewsnup spoke to an open priesthood meeting, taking for his subject, "The shepherd and the sheep."

At 10.30 a. m. a sermon was delivered by Elder G. W. Leggott, who took for his text, "Learn of me."

At 1.15 p. m. Sunday school work in charge of Sister Blanche Edwards. Our sister took for her subject, "My ideal Sunday school." She was assisted by her sister, Sister G. Edwards, and they again gave another fine address on this important department. Our sisters' ideal Sunday school would be planned as follows: A large central room, with classrooms all around, with kindergarten classroom a little distance away from the remainder of the classrooms so that the games and music necessary would not interfere with the other classes. However, the kindergarten should not be too far away so as to avoid the idea of it not being a part of the or the organization. The school would have the maximum amount of windows, and these so that they could be opened on hinges, thus assuring a sufficient supply of sunshine and air. Hung on the walls would be paintings of the great masters and these paintings would be hung in the classrooms where they would be appropriate to the age of the pupils. Plants, bulbs, and twigs would be everywhere, and were it possible to have animals, these also would be in the classroom. Our sisters' reason for this being that every possible object should be on hand to prove the glory of God to the learner. Sister G. Edwards gave some fine illustrations of handwork to be used in the up-to-date tuition of children.

At 2.45 p. m., fellowship service. Apostle T. W. Williams and District President James E. Bishop presided. This meeting was visited by the Spirit of God from the commencement and tears of joy flowed freely. It was inspirational to hear the brethren and sisters bearing testimony of God's goodness to them.

At 6 p. m., sermon by Apostle T. W. Williams, assisted by Elder Nephi Dewsnup. Our brother took for his text, "The unknown God." He delivered a very fine sermon indeed, commencing by describing what other denominations believed God to be, and finishing with what Latter Day Saints believed God to be and their duty towards him.

At the close of the reunion a vote of thanks was passed to the Leeds Wortly Branch for the able way in which they had dealt with the catering and other things that arise at these gatherings. It was pleasing to note that the Spirit of God was present throughout the reunion, thus creating good fellowship and love for one another, and all left for home feeling the blessing of its influence.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN TAYLOR.

Council Bluffs Home-Coming

Probably the largest branch officered by local men.

It was my good fortune to attend the Home-Coming of the Council Bluffs Saints, Sunday, October 23. Council Bluffs is one of the older branches of the church. A great deal of credit belongs to the faithful men and women who in years gone by have kept the camp fire burning at that place and maintained one of the outposts of the army of Zion. They are to be congratulated that now they may see the fruits of their long labor in the permanent establishment of the work at that place and have lived to see a small army of young people coming forward to carry on the work so well begun.

Council Bluffs Saints have passed beyond the stage where their trouble is to get a congregation. Their difficulty now is to house the people who come out to hear the word. This is a pleasing difficulty and one that can be overcome and must be overcome by the provision of larger quarters. The upper auditorium was crowded at both morning and evening services and a large overflow meeting was held in the lower auditorium.

We felicitated the Saints, however, in the thought that it is much more pleasing to preach to a congregation in a comparatively small church crowded to the point of discomfort, than to speak in a big building where there are forty or fifty people at one side, half of them asleep. And we admonished them to revive the old hymn our fathers used to sing, "Give us room that we may dwell, Zion's children cry aloud. See their numbers how they swell, how they gather like a cloud." If our fathers, when their numbers were so few, had the vision and faith to sing a hymn like that, what may we not accomplish now that their vision is coming true?

Council Bluffs is one of the larger branches, possibly the largest branch, officered and cared for by local men. A good deal of credit belongs to Elder O. Salisbury. Besides managing a very large and complicated commercial enterprise, he presides over the district and over the branch, and labors unceasingly Sundays and nights in his office and calling, preaching, organizing, and administering. Without question by so doing he releases one man, a General Conference appointee, who may be free to push out in a new field and labor as a missionary. Of course, his faithful assistants in the various grades of the priesthood must not be forgotten. By their support they make this good work possible.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A New Impetus to the Work in Quebec

Elder Pement writes the Presidency concerning some most encouraging experiences, following his depressing blues over lack of results.

It is now a long time since I have written you, and I thought that a few words from this corner of the field might be welcome. I wrote your office a very discouraging letter on August 3 from Valleyfield, on United States Railroad Administration paper, in which I said that from my viewpoint my effort in this field was both a waste of time and money.

I guess I must have looked blue, for I can assure you that I felt blue, bluer, bluest, when I wrote that letter. However, I am thankful that a more hopeful outlook lies before me, and I am pleased to report that some very substantial progress has been made since writing that letter.

I had been in the country for a day or two, and the stubborn resistance encountered "got my goat," so to speak (if you will pardon this classic expression), and I was returning to Cornwall determined to go home. I met a young man whom I had become acquainted with a day or so before, and I asked him if he knew anybody interested in the Bible whom I could go and see and talk to.

He answered, "Why don't you go and see Mr. Belle-Isle? He studies the Bible all the time."

I asked, "Who is Belle-Isle?"

"Why, he is a colporteur for the Bible Society."

That was enough for me. I concluded there and then that it was no use tackling a person who was engaged in the work of the sectarian churches. But I had one hour and forty minutes before train time, and I could spend about seventy-five minutes with that man; and duty required that I make proper use of my time. I tried to keep a smile on my face while my heart was shedding tears within. I said to myself, "For God's and Christ's sakes, I'll go and see that man." I went to his home, and I can tell you my ideas changed about the work in Quebec after I had conversed with that man less than an hour. Here was a man who was not only waiting, but hungering and thirsting, for the very message I was sent to carry into that field. Instead of taking the train at 4.20 p. m., I was talking gospel to that man late into the night. This man had sickened with the lifelessness of so-called evangelical Christianity, and he was looking for the gospel of Christ in its fullness, yet knew not where to go to find it.

I placed the gospel before him in all the plainness of which I was capable. I felt the presence of the Spirit in my effort, and the following day at about 3 p. m., he was buried with his Lord in the beautiful, clear waters of Bellerive Bay, in the majestic Saint Lawrence.

While explaining that most wonderful subject in the gospel, the priesthood, he remarked, "Oh! I wish I was called in that way." I had already received the evidence that he would and should be ordained as soon as he had been properly inducted into the church to the office of elder. I kept silence on the point, however.

He had studied three years to be a Capuchin father in the Catholic Church. He told me he had studied Latin and Greek, and that at one time he could read these languages like the French, but that now he was considerably rusty, as it were, not having used them for years. But he is a fine French scholar, and can speak the English fairly well, but not to preach fluently in that tongue.

In order to be on the safe side of the question of his call to the office of elder, when Elder George E. Harrington came to visit the Cornwall Branch, I insisted that he accompany me to see our new brother, look him over carefully, and see if his conclusions would not agree with mine. Before we left Cornwall I told the district president what he would say after his investigation, and he concurred with me in every respect that he should be ordained. While this was very satisfactory to me, I would not stop there. I had placed the matter before the missionary in charge and was awaiting his action. To my great pleasure and satisfaction the Lord revealed to Brother R. C. Russell, while in Kirtland, in a prayer meeting in the temple, that Brother Belle-Isle should be ordained to the office of elder.

But at the time that I received the evidence that he should be ordained to the eldership I was also convinced that he should be put into the field. Apostle Russell had given me his consent to ordain Brother Belle-Isle to the office of elder. Accordingly I wrote him about the matter, after having had all the assurance spoken of above, asking him if he would accept the ordination; that if he did he should come to Cornwall, September 11, and his ordination would be attended to. He came. Brother Russell was also present, and we had a splendid meeting and our new brother was ordained under the hands of Apostle Russell, myself, and O. L. Weaver, Cornwall branch president. The next day Brother Belle-Isle was sent to work with me in this field by Apostle Russell.

Brother Belle-Isle had had seven years experience in carrying Bibles among the French Catholics of the eastern townships, i. e., the counties south of the Saint Lawrence. He knew the field very well, and had met quite a number of persons who were interested. So both Brother Russell and myself thought it well for us to go into those places where he had been kindly received while doing his former work.

We arrived at the home of one such person, and we were kindly received, but owing to the fact that the man was engaged with a threshing outfit he could not do us the justice he should be ordained. While this was very satisfactory to opportunity later when he is not so busy.

While at Mr. Allen's place (for there was where we had gone), I inquired about some place to preach, and was directed to Herdman's Corners. Just a little trading point at the intersection of two roads, but where the town hall is situated. I asked for privilege from the mayor of the township, and on September 20 began a series of meetings with Brother Belle-Isle as assistant. I have been preaching ever since, every night, and on the 2d instant I gave my reasons for leaving the Catholic Church and the hall was packed, and I have been told that twelve auto loads turned back because they could not get in. People sought for ladders to come up to the windows to hear. (We were occupying on the second floor.) A Presbyterian minister was in the audience, and at the close of my two-hour sermon (and I can assure you there was not one sleepy soul in that audience, for every eye glistened with expectancy, and every ear was alert to hear every word) came to me and said, "I can indorse every word you said to-night." And I can tell you that I rapped hard on man-called, man-chosen, man-educated, and man-sent priests and preachers.

The question arose as to what we were: Some said we were Adventists, others did not know; but on the night mentioned above I declared myself to belong to the Reorganization, and our headquarters at Independence. Well, sir, the idea soon spread that I was a Mormon, and the telephones were being used to spread the report. A lady came to me and said what the rumors were, and that I should nip that in the bud. I thanked her and made three large signs with this inscription:

MORMONISM SKINNED ALIVE

A great lecture, and a big time promised. Come and invite everybody. Phone your friends. Ministers especially invited. Freely ask questions. Herdman Hall, October 7. All welcome.

Well, sir, it rained very nearly all day, and it was raining at meeting time. Nevertheless, the hall was almost full, and if you think I did not take Mormonism up by the roots you are mistaken. For about twenty minutes I dwelt on apostasy in all the dispensations, from Adam to the book of Revelation. Then I took up the apostasy in the Church of Christ, showing where it culminated. I briefly touched the Reformation, explaining it as an attempt to get back to original Christianity, pointing out its weaknesses. Then I moved on to the Restoration, the rapid growth of the church; after which I pointed out the prophecies concerning the apostasy to arise in the restored church, and then I skinned the abominations of Utahism, winding up with the Reorganization and our efforts to maintain the integrity of the restored gospel and the successor church, and if you think I did not make an argument that swung us clear of the stigma of Mormonism, you are again mistaken. I know I was backed up by the Spirit, and I was not the only one that felt it, either.

On Saturday night there occurred a peculiar incident. We took up a collection and one man put in a Canadian one-dollar bill. It was folded, but on opening it up I discovered an American five-dollar bill inside of it. I said to Brother Belle-Isle, "Here is a mistake. The person who put in that dollar did not know that the other bill was in it, and to-morrow night I am going to tell the people about it, and if the person did not know it, I will give him his money back, and if he did mean it, I will know it."

At the close of the meeting a man came to me and told me he had an American five-dollar bill in a Canadian one dollar, and while he had not missed it as yet, that if that was what I found it was his. I told him that I was glad to return him his money. You do not know how that incident took with the people. Last night a lady approached me as she was going out, and put a letter in my hand. She said, "Read this." It was as follows:

"Dear Brother: We are going to give you a little money to help pay for that car, or whatever way you wish to use, to proclaim the gospel. I am more than pleased to hear your doctrines and teachings of the Bible. It just suits me. I never heard it explained so clearly before. May the Lord bless you and help you to carry on the good works you are engaged in.

(Signed) "MR. AND MRS. ROBERT WILSON."

The letter contained a brand new five-dollar bill to assist on the payments of my "Ebenezer" gospel car.

Pies, chicken, cookies, bread, butter, preserves, and apples are among the things brought to us to supply our needs while living in the hall.

I am inclosing you what I consider a very important document I heard read in the Presbyterian Church at Athelstan on October 2, and I was so impressed with its contents which reveal the exact status of the spiritual void existing in that church, that I asked to be permitted to copy it. But the minister thought I did not have time to do so, but he gave me the address where I could ask for a copy and probably might get one. I wrote and got six, and I wrote again and will get fifty copies. Then I wrote to the moderator himself, asking for one hundred, and I believe I will get that number. Now I do not know of a better weapon to put into the hands of our missionaries to show up the spiritual death existing among Protestants. This document can be made a weapon to kill in the hands of an inexperienced soldier; but it should not be used in that way, but only to show that after three hundred and eighty-one years of existence the Presbyterian Church is still without the Holy Spirit, for they are asked to wait, wait, wait for it on and after the 2d day of October, 1921. This document is authentic, as it bears the Moderator's signature. . . .

I am convinced that the work is about to, and ought to, open in Quebec in a way never heard of before.

Trusting in the Lord to assist us here, and that many, yea many, will come into the fold, and asking you to write me when you have no more important things on hand, I am

Yours very sincerely, PHILEMON PEMENT.

Address: Athelstan, Huntingdon County, Care of A. Travisee, Route 1, Quebec, Canada.

On the way to the mountains for a much-needed rest, Sister Audentia Anderson gave up some of her precious time to the women of Denver. She talked more especially to the women, one Sunday afternoon in July, and in the evening to a large congregation of interested listeners. We were greatly pleased and thankful for her visit and her splendid help.

HORTENSE SELTON CRAMER.

Lamoni Stake

A new phase of the Zion Builder movement.

A few weeks ago we mentioned the attempt on the part of the local church officers in Lamoni to coordinate the various activities of the young people. A more complete analysis of this endeavor will be of interest to those desiring to follow the working out of this program.

The origin of this movement to work out a harmonious program of activities lies in the recognition of the necessity of socializing the viewpoint of our people if the Zionie problems before us are to be solved. The inculcating of a social viewpoint can only be accomplished through a well-organized campaign, carried on through the coordinated machinery of the preaching service, the social service, the Sunday school, and the Religio.

This coordinated effort naturally centers in the office of the branch presidency. Certain helpers heretofore mentioned, have direct charge of the educational, recreational, social, and spiritual phases of activity. All who have assignments among the young, including Oriole and Scout leaders, Sunday school and Religio teachers, etc., are acting as a group of helpers to assist in the carrying out of the program.

The program is carried out as follows: The entire group having to do with the arrangement meets on the third Sunday afternoon of each month. At this meeting definite plans are made and details are discussed. A program of subjects for the social services is submitted, this program to cover the meetings of the following month. The subjects are of a character designed to stimulate development along both individual and social lines, and with this end in view two general groupings of subjects have been made. These are: "Characteristics of Zion Builders" and "Foundations of Zion." These themes are alternated. For instance on one Wednesday evening will be discussed a subject falling under the designation of "Characteristics of Zion Builders." This subject would naturally deal with the individual development of the membership. On the following week, a subject of a social nature is presented, falling under the general designation of "Foundations of Zion."

Already the themes have been adopted by the leaders of part of the ward meetings and they will undoubtedly be in general use before long. The designation of these themes serves a double purpose: It gives the individual something to talk about in the bearing of his testimony, and at the same time carries him forward along definite lines in the building of a character which will stand the Zionie test.

On the Sunday following the discussion of a certain theme in the social service, this theme is made the aim of the Sunday school and Religio lessons. This discussion helps to fix the lesson of the theme in the mind of the student.

The Sunday school and Religio teachers are being asked to furnish reports on the attitudes, motives, and reactions of the students. This information will be of invaluable assistance in the future working out of Sunday school and Religio lessons, in addition to furnishing data for pastoral work among the young people.

The meetings held by the group of leaders have already proved very beneficial. As a result of group discussion, individual problems are made easier of solution. Furthermore, such problems as that of taking the young people from their homes in the evening can be in part eliminated through this discussion and coordination of activity.

It may take a number of years to attain the results desired, but we may hope for many immediate and gratifying developments. We will report from time to time the ideas developed in discussing these subjects in the social services. Some of them follow:

"Personal Purity" Theme at Union Prayer Meeting

The theme adopted at the last union prayer meeting, "Personal purity," gave direction and strength to a meeting that otherwise might not have been an active one. Almost every testimony brought a message of value on the subject, a complete thought that could be expressed in a single sentence, and yet which was replete with meaning.

"If we think pure things we are apt to be builders; if we think impure things we are apt to be destroyers," said one of the officers in the opening remarks. Purity is a healing balm; impurity a cutting acid. Purity is constructive, and its concomitant forces are optimism, friendliness, brotherly love, charity, and a life which is likely to contribute things which are beneficial to the community, church, and state to which it belongs. Impurity is destructive, and its concomitant forces are pessimism, hate, bitterness and strife, maliciousness, and a life which has no tendency but to poison the social group upon which it is a parasite.

"Are we pure because we fear to do wrong?" asked another, "or are we striving towards purity because of our devotion to a God of purity and to his plan which is designed to lift man out of the mire?" Are we above the savage that lives on a fear basis, or have we lifted ourselves to the plane of altruism where we are pure for purity's sake as an end in itself? Purity offers sufficient reward in itself to merit our striving after it.

"The lily," said one, "is planted with its feet in the mud, yet by a process of selection takes from its environment those things only that contribute to the purity of its whiteness." We are even as the lily, in a world of impurity; it is up to us to take from that world what shall enter into the composition of our lives.

"Beware of what influence you wield," warned another; "you are part of the environment of you know not how many people." Upon us there may be fixed part of the responsibility for the downfall of the human soul, or to us there may be credited a part of the reward for saving one.

"The personal purity of individual members is the biggest advertisement for the church work." Upon some examples in a branch of purity or filthiness may depend the rise or fall of the work in that place.

"What is the means of attaining to this personal purity? We cannot jump the river from where we are to the opposite bank." God is the embodiment of purity; closeness to him will fill us with that purity; let us pray in order that we may keep close to him.

"A pure heart is a condition of life." It is a constant state of feeling, thinking, willing, and resultant doing. It is a continual moral tone, and expression of character. It is our access to that fountain of purity that gives us the strength to continue in that way.

"All that we see, hear, and feel help control our thoughts, which in turn have ultimate control of our actions in spite of ourselves." Where will we be found gathering experiences which shall determine our purity or impurity? Shall the next prayer meeting, and the next, find us in our places at church, or shall it find us slothfully at home or on the street corner? We are at this moment gathering the material out of which our future lives shall be made. We can never take a vacation, and say that this thing or that thing does not count. What we put into our lives is there to stay, ineffaceable forever.

"Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." Can anything that savors of the least degree of impurity be found there? Let us ponder over the matter and decide how we shall be.

LEONARD LEA, Correspondent.

A Young People's Reunion

Young people of Central Michigan plan reunion for 1922.

The young people of Central Michigan are taking hold of the work in a manner that makes the district feel proud of her young people.

They have decided to have a young people's reunion in 1922, and the special feature of it is that they are going to sustain it so that it will be free to all except for the tents and sleeping quarters, for which a small charge will be made to cover the expense.

This movement is very popular among the young folks and they are taking hold of it in a fine way. God has recognized their efforts already. When they gathered together in the upper auditorium of the Beaverton church during conference for the young people's prayer meeting it was a wonderful time. The Spirit of the Master was there in power, and young men and women arose and bore testimonies for the first time in their lives. God surely blessed them, for he manifested his love to them in a gift of prophecy in which he told them that he was pleased with them and would continue to bless them.

This Spirit has gone home with them and we have already received a letter from the Bay City young folks that they were going to be the first to raise one hundred dollars for sustaining the reunion.

The committee will meet at Coleman, October 30, to make more plans, and we hope that we will receive more letters like the one from Bay City, and that every one in Central Michigan District will give us your hearty support.

WILLIAM S. METHNER, Secretary of Committee.

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN.

Bootman-Lemmons Debate

Early in the winter of 1921 Elder S. M. Andes, of Andes, Montana, started holding services in the Mona Hall near Mona, Montana. A very good interest was manifest, and later in the year, about July 1, Elders George W. Thorburn, of Deer Lodge, Montana, and Eli Bronson, of Glasgow, Montana, held a series of meetings at that place, continuing about two weeks.

There are in that vicinity several families of the so-called Church of Christ, presided over by their pastor, the Reverend J. O. Golphnee, who took exceptions to many of our teachings, and challenged us to meet them in debate. After considerable correspondence the debate started at Mona Hall, October 12, Elder W. P. Bootman opening up the affirmative in defense of our church, and the Reverend W. F. Lemmons, Beaumont, Texas, in the negative, representing the so-called Church of Christ. The debate continued for twelve consecutive sessions.

In his opening speech Elder Bootman laid a good foundation for his future work by showing from the Scriptures the organization, doctrine, and practice of the church established by Christ two thousand years ago, also showing that that church went into apostasy, making the restoration necessary. By using the twentieth chapter of Matthew and other scripture Elder Bootman emphasized the fact that the gospel had been preached in every dispensation since the days of Adam, and in each dispensation had been restored at the hand of an angel; thus God in this last dispensation had demonstrated the fact that he is unchangeable and no respecter of persons by again restoring the everlasting gospel by the hand of an angel.

In answering Bootman's argument, Lemmons said in part: No one will believe that there were any Christians in Abraham's time, stating that the gospel prior to Pentecost was only preached in prophecy and not in fact.

Elder Bootman in offsetting those statements used Matthew 4: 17, 23, arguing from those scriptures that Jesus either preached the gospel in fact or stated a falsehood. He also used Matthew 11: 12; 12: 26-28; 18: 15-17.

We consider W. F. Lemmons unfair all through the debate, from the fact that he took all of his argument and references from books published by Campbellites and other enemies of the church, also using statements and testimonies from the Utah church; never once using our own books; while Elder Bootman in exposing their church used only their own publications.

Lemmons admitted early in the discussion that there was a great apostasy. Later he claimed that the church he represents came directly from Pentecost, but failed completely to bridge the great gap caused by the apostasy between Pentecost and the present time, in spite of the fact that Elder Bootman demanded of him over and over again to make that point clear. His only attempt to answer the demand was that the word was preserved, which was the seed of the kingdom, and in that seed was life; basing his argument on John 6: 63, "The words that I speak unto you they are Spirit, and they are life."

In reply Brother Bootman used 1 Thessalonians 1: 5: "Our gospel came not unto us in word only, but also in power [or authority], and in the Holy Ghost, and much assurance," emphasizing the fact that authority to represent God could not come from the word only, but must come by direct call from God. (Hebrews 5:4; John 15:16; 17:18.)

Mr. Lemmons denied present-day revelation and the direct operation of the Holy Spirit. Elder Bootman demanded that he tell the congregation where he got his authority to preach. In reply Mr. Lemmons quoted 2 Timothy 2:2, "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." Bootman showed that Mr. Lemmons never received his commission from Timothy unless it was from his dead bones, for Timothy never had the privilege of speaking to the Reverend Mr. Lemmons.

Mr. Lemmons resorted to the usual amount of mud slinging and slander, claiming that we affirm that Joseph Smith is greater than Jesus Christ, etc. Even many of his own members were disgusted at his tactics, and the people could all plainly see that he was only trying to divert their minds from the truth.

We are glad to report that this is one more clean victory for the cause of Christ.

G. W. THORBURN.

Business by the Golden Rule

An example of what may be done with true cooperation.

In The American Magazine for October is an article by Arthur Nash, president of the A. Nash Company, Incorporated, Cincinnati, telling of the progress and increase of his business under the rule left by the Master, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

One of the first things which was done under the new rule was to increase the weekly wage of "a nice dignified old lady" and "a bright little hunch-back girl" from four dollars to twelve dollars.

He explained to the workers what his plan was to be, and increased wages as he thought fair. All were so interested that in spite of the added expense business increased at a surprising rate.

In moving to larger quarters sixty thousand dollars were borrowed and at the end of the year (1919) a net profit of $42,000 had been made.

Wages were increased and the profit-sharing plan started. No help had been advertised for, but the workers brought their friends there and trained them. It is the policy of the older workers to remind those who do not come in on time that they surely do not want to "force Mr. Nash to use a time clock."

As an indication that the leaven has done its work through the whole institution, the following request was presented to Mr. Nash in regard to the profit-sharing:

"Realizing that the A. Nash Company is using every effort to be truly just and democratic, and realizing that in making the final adjustment of wages on the profit-sharing basis, a very large share of this final payment, as at present intended, would go to those making big wages . . . we, the undersigned, all of whom are drawing a weekly wage of over sixty dollars ($60), do hereby petition the management to distribute the workers' share of profits on the basis of time worked instead of on the basis of wages drawn.

"This will give those making the smaller wages an equal dividend with those making the larger one, and we believe it is not only needed by them, but is just and in keeping with the policy of our company. We are sure this will be appreciated by all the help."

And the following resolutions were sent in to the office from the workers when "six hundred thousand needle workers in this country were walking the streets without work."

"Feeling that it is in a large measure possible for us to prevent suffering among the clothing workers of Cincinnati . . . we offer the following resolutions:

"Resolved: That the A. Nash Company shall make a special effort to procure business enough to employ all clothing workers in Cincinnati who are in danger of suffering . . . regardless of their creed, nationality, union or nonunion affiliation.

"If in carrying out this resolution it is found necessary to reduce the price of garments so much that wages must be reduced, we recommend that the first reduction affect only those making over five dollars a day.

"It is further—

"Resolved and Recommended: That if the company finds it impossible to secure sufficient volume of business to furnish employment as per previous resolution, and if suffering becomes acute, that the employees of the A. Nash Company voluntarily take a vacation of four weeks during the months of January and February, as the best judgment of the management may dictate, and that the needy clothing workers out of employment be employed here for these four weeks in their place."

I was deeply moved when I read the article. Oh, that every business man had as large a vision and could work it out as successfully as Mr. Nash has done; that we might have contented workers, which we might have if they were all, everywhere, paid a "living wage," and working under sanitary and right conditions, under the Golden Rule.

God will help and prosper men who seek to work out the teachings of the Master of Men.

Oh, that Zion were more fully established!

HORTENSE SELLON CRAMER.

Nauvoo District Conference

The conference for the Nauvoo District convened at Montrose, October 14, 15, and 16.

The opening service was a sermon by Elder L. D. Campbell, of Windsor, Ontario. The business sessions of the conference were conducted Saturday, with Elder D. J. Williams, of Burlington, Iowa, in charge. Saturday evening was given to a literary and educational program, with Miss Ethel Lacy, district Sunday school superintendent, in charge.

Sabbath school Sunday morning. At eleven o'clock we were treated to a good sermon on tithing by Bishop G. P. Lambert. The afternoon was occupied by social service. The eight o'clock sermon was delivered by Elder L. D. Campbell to a well filled house, and was enjoyed by all.

Delegates and visitors were from Burlington, Fort Madison, Keokuk, Ferris, Adrian, and other places. The conference was considered by those in attendance to be a very beneficial one, both from a standpoint of business and spirituality.

The conference will be followed by a four or six weeks' series of meetings conducted by Elder Charles J. Smith, of Sioux City, Iowa.

Baker-Black Debate

"One of the best debates I ever attended," says the reporter.

Here is a short sketch of one of the best debates I ever attended, and I am thirty years old in the mission field. The debate was held in a large hall in Henryetta, Oklahoma, between Benum Black, of the Church of Christ, and A. M. Baker, of our church.

There were twelve sessions on the usual familiar propositions; two sessions were held each day. The evening sessions were well attended. Those during the day were small. A goodly number of preachers were in attendance. Brother Barraclough, of Saint Louis, served as moderator, did well, and was well liked by all the preachers, and the people especially.

Brother A. M. Baker, who conducted this debate, is a man of God and a Christian gentleman. Not one man or woman on either side was heard wrangling. All seemed to enjoy the fine, clear, clean-cut issue discussed. Not one time did Brother Baker lose his head or seem the least disturbed. He was blessed of our heavenly Father in a splendid way.

Mr. Black behaved himself fine. Not one time did he accuse Joseph Smith and the church of teaching or practicing polygamy. His main effort was to show no spirit of malice and depend on the Bible and reason. But all his efforts on "Word" minus the Holy Ghost were seen in the rebuttal by Brother Baker, as he made his clinching arguments by the power of the Spirit.

I heard many, many compliments, such as, "That little man is too much for Black," and "Baker is a Holy Ghost preacher and speaks by that Spirit."

Many here are anxiously waiting for him to return from Broken Bow, Oklahoma, where he went at the close of the debate to begin another, a twelve-session debate with Mr. Black in the Christian Church at that place. The Broken Bow debate closed the 18th. You will hear from that soon. Brother J. W. Jackson of Dierks is moderating for Brother Baker at Broken Bow. I am to assist Brother Baker in meetings here when he returns.

S. W. SIMMONS.

Another Debate Pending

My debate with the Reverend Mister W. F. Lemmons, Campbellite, of Beaumont, Texas, is now a thing of the past, and we had a very pleasant time of it. Mr. Lemmons arrived on the battle ground about ten days ahead of us, and he delivered several lectures against our church, so we were informed, and he branded us as cowards, and said that we were afraid to meet them in debate.

But we finally arrived there, and after getting all things ready we started out in the affirmative. My opponent traveled about the same trail that most of our opponents do, from the cesspools of Utah, to the Christian, or Standard Publishing Houses, Shock, Bays, Traum, and Braden. But we happened to have all of those books, and many others too, and my opponent had his in manuscript, and sometimes he would run clear out of material, and then he would sing Old Joe Smith, but the good people soon got tired of his mud, and did not care to listen to him.

The Good Master remembered us and blessed us very much, and we are happy in the work yet. As Brothers Thorburn and Bronson said that they were going to write you in regard to the debate I will leave it for them to tell you, as they kept notes on both of us, and they will deal fairly with my opponent, as well as with me. Brother Thorburn was my moderator, and he rendered me valuable assistance, and he and Brother Bronson had been there some time before and held some meetings, and had won the hearts of some of the best people in that community, and Mr. Lemmons could not destroy their good work.

I leave for Weiser, Idaho, to-morrow, and I am expecting to enter into another debate with one of the same faith as Mr. Lemmons, if they will meet the church propositions, for that is all that I will meet. I have arrived at the conclusion that the two church propositions are fair, and that is all that we want.

Hopefully,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

RACE TRACK, MONTANA.

News Letter From England

The quarterly conference for the Manchester District was held at Manchester on Saturday and Sunday, October 1 and 2. The attendance was a record breaker, and the Sunday services exceptionally good. Brother Richard Baldwin was the morning speaker and he succeeded in rousing the emotions of the people to a high degree. T. W. Williams addressed the priesthood at 1 p. m. In the evening James E. Bishop gave a masterly address which was appreciated by all.

The Sheffield district reunion convened at Leeds on Saturday and Sunday, October 8 and 9. The entire absence of all business was appreciated by all and tended to general good will. This was the greatest meeting ever held in Leeds, and marks a red-letter day for the work in the Sheffield District. Much credit is due to the systematic and well-directed work of James E. Bishop for the success of the reunion.

Brother Charles Fry has been doing very acceptable work throughout the Sheffield District and has visited points in the Birmingham District. He has now left London for Leicester and is anticipating making an extensive trip in the Wales District, visiting all the branches in that country. It is possible he will stop en route and work in Gloucester. It is his intention to cover the entire mission as speedily as possible, giving particular attention to his work in the financial line.

Brother J. A. Gillen has just come from visiting Warrington and Wigan where he has been holding meetings. The Saints are very enthusiastic here and in their commendation of the sermons of Brother Gillen. He expects to remain for a few days at Saint Leonard's. He feels that he has done some good work at these places. As a result of his efforts a number of people are expected to identify themselves with the church.

After returning from a visit in Wales, Brother Williams came to Saint Leonard's for the purpose of meeting Brother and Sister Baldwin on their arrival from America. He then made arrangements to attend the Manchester and Sheffield district conferences. He is now making a tour of the Sheffield District, after which he will go to Birmingham for an indefinite period.

Brother and Sister Baldwin were also visitors at the Manchester conference. They intend to labor in this district, making their temporary headquarters at Manchester, and expect to remain in the district for the remainder of this year.

There have been during the last quarter twelve persons baptized, and as stated above, more are expected.

Sincerely yours,

J. H. FOSTER, Mission Secretary.

A Veteran Who Believes in Prayer

There is nothing in the life of a Saint that is so beneficial and of so much help as secret prayer. There you can pour out your heart to God and ask him for what you need to carry you along through this uneven journey of life. After I joined the church I always made it a practice to go to some secret place where no eye could see nor ear hear but God's. There I would talk with God. I would tell him what trials, tribulations, and hardships I was passing through. I had a large family to support and I was crippled, so I was not fit to do hard work on the land. I had to be on the ocean in a small boat fishing for a living and I wanted his protecting care over me while on the ocean.

My boat was less than fifteen feet long, and I used to go out on the fishing grounds, six or eight miles from land; and I would go when no other boats would dare to try it, even larger boats than mine. They would say, "If you go out today you will never get back." But when I got all ready to start I would get down on my knees and ask God to protect me that I might return to my family. Then I would hoist my little sail with a fair wind with a strong breeze and run off and anchor my boat and go fishing. When it was time to leave for home I would have a nice lot of fish and the wind would change and give me a fair wind home.

I might tell you why I had so much faith in my heavenly Father, but it would take too much space; but I will say it was because I knew the doctrine was true and God is willing to help his children in every time of need. When we go to God in secret prayer he knows we are honest and we are not there to be heard of men.

A. W. KELLEY.

INDIAN RIVER, MAINE.

CANTON, OHIO, October 17, 1921.

Editors Herald: Sunday, October 16, on Graceland Day, I had an opportunity of speaking to the Saints at Alliance, Ohio, on Graceland and the work she is doing. While attending Graceland for one and a half years, I was very much impressed with the spirit of service and consecration that permeates the faculty and fills the classrooms. I feel my life will be less selfish and will be of service to others for having attended Graceland. I firmly believe that Graceland is a valuable asset to the church and that every youth is benefited after receiving part of his education within her sacred walls.

Yours sincerely,

DAVID T. LEWIS.

The Bible Now Plain and Simple

Newly-converted Indian chief has gratifying experiences in seeking more light.

Bishop C. J. Hunt: I have been among my people in the woods for nearly a month and did not get your encouraging letter until yesterday and it gave me strength to withstand the sore trials I am now undergoing.

But from those trials I feel that the Lord has something in store for me, therefore I have left off lecturing to the public upon the rights of my people, the Lamanites, because I am now busy with study. One after another of my old habits are being taken from me; also when I read the Bible and the Book of Morimon, the truths in them become plain. In all my school work and study before my conversion to the One True Church, everything I read in the Bible seemed obscure, and did not seem to have any meaning; now it is all plain and simple.

Dear brother, the Lord answers prayers. He has answered mine, I am certain. Surely the Lord is good, to tell me and my people where we are from. They are manifesting a keen interest in our ancient history. I ask you as a brother to pray the Lord to hasten the day when I shall go before my people with the Great Truth which shall set them free.

I ask an interest in your private prayers.

Your brother in the gospel,

SAWYER, MINNESOTA.

JOSEPH A. NORTHRUP.

Good Results From a Home Mission

The West Side Mission Sunday school in Omaha, held its rally day exercises in their new location last Sunday morning. The weather was ideal and the attendance fifty-seven. A very interesting program was rendered after which all were invited to remain for the noon repast. Over seventy per cent of the school are nonmembers.

The success attained by the little mission is a sort of gratification to me. A year ago last spring at a cottage prayer service held at the home of Brother and Sister Bryant, I was deeply impressed that there were souls in this vicinity that were hungering for spiritual food. The following day, I related my impressions to Brother C. T. Self, who was district president. We decided to hold a series of preaching services which resulted in five baptisms.

After the close of the fall reunion Brother and Sister Bryant kindly consented to open their home for Sunday school. We started with fifteen present and in a couple of months reached the twenty-five mark. The school has now an enrollment of forty-five. I have been privileged to lead six more souls into the waters of baptism.

The Omaha Branch has been favored recently with the presence of Apostle P. M. Hanson, who in his usual manner delivered a very forcible sermon. Two weeks ago, Elder P. R. Burton and wife spent Sunday in Omaha, en route to their newly appointed field of labor among the Indians. Elder Burton addressed the priesthood in the afternoon and preached in the evening.

We have had five ordinations to the priesthood in our branch. Quite a number of the older members of the priesthood are sleeping on their rights. Let us hope that these new men may be able to cause an inspiration in the lives of those that lie dormant.

DAVID LEWIS.

E. J. Rhodes writes from Toledo, Ohio, where he was placed in charge in July. They have a nice lot of young people. One young man, Asa Willmarth, was recently called to the office of priest. In fact, the priesthood is composed mostly of young men who work together in a united way. Sunday school, Religio, and choir are progressing. They have an average of fifty out to preaching services, and sometimes as high as sixty-five. Three children have recently been baptized. They expect to hold a series of meetings in the near future.

BEVIER, MISSOURI, October 24, 1921.

Editors Herald: Elder Charles Edmunds and family left here the past week for Independence to make their future home in Zion. Brother Edmunds was our branch president for the past five years, and himself and family consisting of his wife, two sons, and two daughters have always been numbered among the "faithful few" who attended every service and were active in branch, Sunday school, and Religio. They will be greatly missed.

Elder Ben S. Tanner has been elected as our branch president to succeed Brother Edmunds. He is well posted in the work, though only recently called to the eldership.

The young people of Bevier Branch having read in the church papers of the success of these meetings in other places petitioned the branch to let them do likewise.

Arrangements have been made to commence a series of meetings beginning on our home-coming day, November 6, and continuing until the 13th, inclusive.

Elder C. E. Wight and Sister Wight, of Lamoni, will conduct the services, Sister Wight to have charge of the singing. They will also be assisted by our young missionary, V. D. Ruch, a recent graduate of Graceland. The young people seem to be very earnest in their desires to make these meetings a success, and they have the prayers and best wishes of the older members.

J. L. WILLIAMS, Branch Clerk.

JOPPA, ILLINOIS, October 17, 1921.

Editors Herald: This letter leaves me in the town of Joppa in the Southeastern Illinois District, a pretty town located on the banks of the beautiful Ohio River.

I have been preaching here for two weeks, and yesterday, Sunday, I had the pleasure of leading four precious souls into the quiet waters of the Ohio River and baptizing them into the fold and kingdom of God. It was indeed a happiness to me.

At noon the Saints had a basket dinner of plentiful good things, but best of all, the Holy Spirit was present all day to grace our efforts and association together. We surely passed a day that will long be remembered by all present.

This has been a repetition of such meetings as I have been engaged in all summer. At Burklow settlement, where we held an arbor meeting at two different times with wonderful interest all through, one splendid man was baptized by myself at the last meeting there.

I spent two weeks in a meeting at Messler, Stoddard County, Missouri, in the district that Elder A. V. Closson presides over. It was "without his consent," too, but we heartily wish he or some one laboring in that district would visit that place and do some more preaching there.

Messler is on the Cotton Belt Railroad about thirty miles east of Dexter, Missouri. Brother and Sister Charley Choates and Brother and Sister Ernest Hawkins who live there will be glad to entertain any elders coming that way. The new Methodist church is open for our people to preach in. What better could a missionary want? Some there are very much interested.

In gospel bonds,

F. L. SAWLEY.

GULLIVER, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting held at White Dale, Michigan, by the Gulliver Branch, October 1 and 2, was in charge of A. E. Starks, of Boyne City, district president, and Matthew Brearley, president of Gulliver Branch.

Other visiting elders were Ernest N. Burt of Onaway; R. D. Davis and Harvey Van Dusen, of the Soo; M. Boomer, of Wells; and Charles Howe, of Munsing.

The meetings were greatly enjoyed by all present. This is our first attempt at a two-day meeting in the upper peninsula of Michigan. We all sincerely hope for more of them. The Saints all left very much encouraged and with a greater desire to work and live for the Master. This is just a beginning. May we all strive harder to spread the gospel in this broad vineyard.

SUSIE A. CAFFEY.

DURHAM, OKLAHOMA, October 29, 1921.

Editors Herald: The day before yesterday I reached the town of Durham. I have known of the place for some time, but it is the first time in the seven years that I have labored in western Oklahoma that I have been permitted to visit the place. Heretofore, there have been causes arising that prevented me from carrying out my plans for coming here. What the result of my visit here may be is not at present to be determined. Time only will reveal that.

There is one thing, however, that I am able already to determine, and that is, that a part at least of the inhabitants of this place believe in profiteering. To begin with, the mail carrier charged the preacher three dollars for a thirty-mile ride in order to get here and the janitor of the school asks only one dollar a night for lighting the building. It is true that the preacher could do the work himself much cheaper than that, but the school board have made a ruling in favor of the janitor. We of course abide by the ruling. We will evidently meet the expenses by means of a collection at the proper time.

It is a regrettable fact that we are short of men and means with which to prosecute our work in this part of the country. The Southwest offers us a fertile field for missionary work if we were only able to get to it, but one man for so large a field as is allotted to me is unable to care for the work here. We have opportunities for work on every hand but are unable to get to them.

Sometimes I wonder if we fully appreciate the magnitude of the work that has been intrusted to our care. It seems to me that we might do better than we are doing if we could fully understand the needs of the work. The admonition, "Let him that is warned, warn his neighbor," is as good and timely now as it was when it was given to the church. This applies to all of us, either directly or indirectly. If we utilize our privileges and study to show ourselves approved unto God, we will both increase our mental and spiritual efficiency and impart of our material substance as the law of God directs.

The great demand that is made upon us for the work of the ministry and the redeeming of Zion challenges the very best there is in us. We ought to learn to give the best there is in us for the forwarding of the work that shall enable and uplift the race and thus make this world a fitter place in which to live. We should learn that the final triumph of our work must rest largely upon our individual conduct and attainments.

May our efforts be such that they will merit the divine approval. Respectfully, J. E. VANDERWOOD.

The Rockefeller Foundation reports for 1920 considerable success in the eradication of yellow fever. There is a rapid decrease from December, 1918, when control measures were begun at Guayaquil to May, 1919. Since May, 1919, no cases have been reported. Similar success is shown in the control of malaria. Five cities in the South are taken as a test, and show great decrease in the number of cases between 1918 and 1920. The cases in 1920 were only about one fourth those of 1919. Similar success is reported in connection with hookworm.

Elder Clyde F. Ellis, who has been appointed as mission president for the South Sea Islands, expects to leave America on November 25 for his island mission. He has been detained by personal business matters which it seemed better to have settled before leaving America. At the same time, he has kept busy with missionary work at Boyne City, Gaylord, Flint, and Detroit, Michigan. He is expected in Independence this week.

We spoil the story by reading the last chapter first. It was an all-wise Providence that prevented us from reading the last chapter of our own life story.—Anon.

A modest sense of one's own defects disarms oppositions and makes possible a service to others that would be denied to self-conceit.—Henry Churchill King.

MISCELLANEOUS

Missionary Appointments by Joint Council

The following appointments have been made by the Joint Council:

William Grice; transferred from London District to Eastern Michigan District; local.

G. E. Harrington; transferred from Toronto District to Spring River District; local.

A. C. Silvers; transferred from Spring River District to Clinton District; missionary.

William Osler; transferred from New York and Philadelphia District to London District; local.

C. Ed. Miller; transferred from Massachusetts District to Saint Louis District; local.

John R. Lentell; transferred from missionary to local, Eastern Iowa District.

William B. Hartley; New York and Philadelphia District; missionary.

Levi Gamet; transferred from Alabama and Mobile Districts to Western Nebraska District; missionary.

Cornelius M. Clifford; Ontario; missionary.

Carl Crum; Spokane District; missionary.

J. H. N. Jones; transferred from Australia to New Zealand; local, Auckland objective.

E. E. Fender; Holden Stake; missionary.

E. B. Hull; transferred from New York and Philadelphia District to Hawaii; local.

Mrs. E. B. Hull; Hawaii; unordained missionary.

A. C. Martin; transferred from Ontario to Portland District; missionary.

E. Y. Hunker; transferred from Little Sioux District to Pottawattamie District; missionary.

C. E. Harpe; transferred from Central Illinois District to Southwestern Kansas, unorganized territory; missionary.

F. A. Rowe; transferred from Central Texas to Toronto District, Ottawa objective; missionary.

L. G. Holloway; transferred from Utah to Ohio; missionary.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 19, 1921.

Pastoral Notices

To the Saints of Arizona: Having recently been transferred by the Twelve to Arizona to act as missionary and missionary supervisor, I would like to get in touch with all of the scattered Saints and to get acquainted with your needs and wishes as to opportunity of getting our work before the people of this field. Let us hear from you. Address S. M. Simmons, 1201 East Portland Street, Phoenix, Arizona.

Conference Notices

Northeastern Missouri, at Higbee, Missouri, November 19 and 20. Send reports to William C. Chapman, secretary, Higbee, Missouri.

Kansas City, at Central Church, Ninth and Lydia, November 20. Preaching 11 a. m.; social and prayer service, 2.30; women's department and priesthood meetings, 4.15; song service, 7.15; preaching, 7.45. Luncheon will be served at noon and evening on Sunday at a reasonable price for those who wish to attend all services. Monday evening at 7.45, business session. J. A. Tanner, president.

Southern Wisconsin, at Madison, Wisconsin, December 3 and 4. Branch officers have statistical reports on hand for conference. Ministry report your labors from June 1 to December 1. Address all reports to Jasper O. Dutton, president, 239 Lincoln Street, Evansville, Wisconsin. Audrey B. Dutton, secretary.

Lamoni Fiftieth Anniversary Service

Lamoni Branch will celebrate, on November 6, the fiftieth anniversary of its organization, with special service both morning and evening. The branch was organized on November 12, 1871. It is hoped that President Elbert A. Smith will be able to be present and give an address for the occasion. At this point the Lamoni people feel that without pausing in their labors they can afford to look back over the pages of history and take stock of what has been done in order to get ready for the greater work that will need to be done in the immediate future.

Buffalo Dedication

The Buffalo, New York, Branch announces the dedication of their chapel, located at Midway and Hutchinson Avenue, Kensington, on November 27. An invitation is extended to all who are interested and wish to attend; especially any of the missionaries who formerly labored in Buffalo and the New York District would be gladly welcomed, or a letter from them would be appreciated just at this time.

The Buffalo Branch was organized October 3, 1907, by Elder U. W. Greene, with Elder F. G. Pitt as the first president. For ten years the branch met in halls and finally entered their own home in April, 1917.

It is expected that President F. M. Smith will be with us.

ANNA B. LLOYD.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK, 36 Tremont Avenue.

Requests for Prayers

Little Evelyn Trosper, of the San Bernardino, California, Branch, recently baptized, writes that she is afflicted in mind and body and retarded in development. She will be administered to, with her crippled cousin five years of age, on November 6, and desires the prayers of the Saints in their behalf. She has much faith in the ordinance and prays for others who are afflicted.

Sister Myrtle Powell Lasater, of Seattle, Washington, requests prayers that she may be relieved of an affliction whereby she lost her voice about a year ago. She is able only to speak in a whisper. She has had to give up her cherished work in the Sunday school, much to her regret.

Home-Coming and Young People's Meetings

Sunday, November 6, will be observed as home-coming day at Bevier, Missouri. Arrangements are being made to look after the physical needs of all visitors. Commencing on the 6th and continuing till the 13th, a series of young people's meetings will be held, conducted by Elder C. E. Wight, of Lamoni, Iowa. Sister Wight will have charge of the singing. Elder V. D. Ruch, late graduate of Graceland, will also assist in the services.
J. L. WILLIAMS, Branch Clerk.

English and Public Speaking by Mail

Is your speech effective

Do you sometimes write important letters?

Do you ever write articles for publication?

If so, do you know how to make your language forceful?

Are you skillful in the choice of words? Do you have a "mob" of words, or do you have an army of words at your command, each word trained to do the most effective service at just the right time?

Are you keenly aware of the fact that the language you use, your form of expression, your skill in the selection of words, and their arrangement in sentences, greatly influence the attitude that others take towards you?

There is no study so commonly required in high schools, colleges, and universities of America, as English. This speaks volumes for its tremendous value—socially, intellectually, commercially.

Never before did public speaking have a greater value than at the present time. Vocal expression is instinctive, but speech is an art which requires cultivation.

Language is the godmother of knowledge and lies at the root of all mental cultivation. The force of character, the thought, the will, the feeling, the power of an individual is measured and judged by the language which he uses.

Is your language colloquial and meager? Is your power of expression feeble and inefficient?

Why not improve the long winter evenings studying English and public speaking by correspondence?

Graceland College has some good courses expressly for you. But none more valuable than English and public speaking. Write for full information to

THE EXTENSION DEPARTMENT.
Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

London Dedication

London, Ontario, Branch, will hold church dedicatory services November 20 and 21. All Saints are invited to attend, especially those in London, Chatham, Toronto, and Owen Sound Districts. President Frederick M. Smith will officiate. A big banquet will be held on Monday evening.

Addresses

Elder William Osler, 728 King Street, London, Ontario, Canada.

Field address of W. P. Bootman for the rest of the year will be Weiser, Idaho.

Conference Minutes

KEWANEE.—At Rock Island, Illinois, October 15 and 16. This was the 189th session of conference. J. F. Curtis, and district presidency, George Sackfield and Charles L. Holmes, in charge. All other district officers were present and performed their respective duties. All officers, heads of Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department reported. Reports showed obstacles were being encountered, some progress being made. Workers in every case desire to continue or felt that ultimate triumph was certain. All were sobered and grave over the situation in the world and felt that it was a time to put forth renewed diligence, but as we caught the spirit of the conference it was of a character to inspire one with courage. Statistical report showed still ten branches, with a mission at Galesburg where Sunday school is held and preaching by the missionary occasionally. Total number in the district, including the 20 isolated members, 774; total baptisms for last five months, 19; total deaths, 3. Treasurer's report showed receipts: $161.10; paid out, $56.36; balance, $104.74. Bishop's agent's receipts: Tithes, $622.81; oblation, $74.72; auditorium, $279.50; miscellaneous, $67.76; total, $1,044.79. Paid out in district, $90. District president and treasurer were appointed to purchase a typewriter for use of district president and pay for same out of district funds. Treasurer instructed to purchase stationery from Herald Office for use of district officers. Mimeograph was placed in charge of district president. By vote decided that hereafter the branch entertaining the conference shall make a charge for the meals sufficient to cover the cost. The following delegates and alternates were chosen to attend the General Conference of 1922, if one is held: O. W. Okerlind, George Sackfield, Ralph Maynard, J. G. Cole, Leah Denton, Elizabeth Cole, J. E. Asay; alternates, Kitty Pine, Della Sackfield, Leonard Stiegel, Robert Gunlock, Edward Jones, Clifford Huntley, C. I. Carpenter. Matter of holding a joint reunion with Eastern Iowa was referred to the district presidency to confer with the various branches and to decide later. Next conference will be held at Joy if they can have it. Seven of the ten branch presidents were in attendance, also J. F. Curtis, S. A. Burgess, C. E. Willey, C. I. Carpenter, O. W. Okerlind, and many of the local priesthood of the district, as well as members. Prayer meetings were very spiritual, preaching most excellent, instruction if heeded will help us attain perfection. Convention of Eastern Iowa at Davenport enabled us to exchange speakers and to hold a joint priesthood meeting there with both ministry addressed by Elders Burgess and Curtis. Everyone

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

A Call to Prayer - - - - -	1033
Present-Tense Religion - - - - -	1033
Why Graceland Is Not Self-Supporting - - - - -	1034
Support of the Missionary by the Church - - - - -	1035
Church News - - - - -	1036
Subjects Being Discussed - - - - -	1036
A New Teaching Plan for Sunday School - - - - -	1036

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Last Will and Testament of Jesus Christ, by Frank Lofty - - - - -	1037
Truth, by Elmer K. Patterson - - - - -	1037

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Agriculture in the Hawaiian Islands - - - - -	1038
Christ and Immortality - - - - -	1039

THE FORUM:

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work.—Part 6, by J. A. Koehler - - - - -	1040
The Aims of Socialism, by Isaac L. Jones - - - - -	1042

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

- - - - -	1043
-----------	------

LETTERS

Alice H. Baldwin—John Taylor—Elbert A. Smith—Philemon Pement—Leonard Lea—William S. Methner—G. W. Thorburn—Hortense Sellon—Cramer—S. W. Simmons—W. P. Bootman—J. H. Foster—A. W. Kelley—David T. Lewis—Joseph A. Northrup—David Lewis—J. L. Williams—F. L. Sawley—Susie A. Caffey—J. E. Vanderwood.	1046
---	------

MISCELLANEOUS - - - - -	1054
-------------------------	------

seemed to feel that it was a good conference. Adjourned to meet the second Sunday in June, 1922. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

WALES.—At Nantyglo, Monmouth, September 17 and 18. J. A. Gillen and T. W. Williams, associated with T. Jones, presided. Brethren Williams and Gillen gave short introductory addresses. Reports from district president, secretary, and treasurer. Gilfach-Goch, Abercumbol, Pontyveates, Neath, Nantyglo, and three elders reported. Treasurer's account audited and reported. Ordination of William Crouch agreed to: brethren of the Twelve and district officers to make provision with the Neath Branch for the same. Discussion was had upon accommodation for worship in Wales. Brethren from several points were of the opinion that this lack retarded the growth of the work. The following resolution was obtained: "That the district officers and branch presidents be formed into a committee to ascertain what land was available and possibilities for houses of worship to be erected; and to inaugurate a building fund, reporting their findings to the members of the Twelve now present and to forward to the Bishopric." Officers elected: Thomas Jones, president; T. G. Jenkins, vice president; John Phillips, secretary; Lewis Phillips, treasurer; Morris Williams, district chorister. Unanimous confidence expressed in the district president augurs well for the future good of the Wales District. Sunday morning speaker was Brother Gillen, who gave an edifying, comforting, and encouraging sermon. Afternoon fellowship was in charge of the district president, who gave a short exhortation, which was followed by testimonies of a spiritual nature in Welsh and English. The Spirit said that it had been and was still striving with those present of the church and with others who ought to become identified with the faith. Evening was occupied by Elder Williams upon the theme of social, spiritual, and temporal emancipation, claiming that every such means was provided for within the church's teachings. We can say that the conference was peaceful, educational, and encouraging. An environment exists in which and with which a work can be built. John Phillips, secretary; Thomas Jones, president.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—At Marlette, October 15 and 16. After a prayer meeting at 9 a. m. Saturday, business session convened with Paul M. Hanson in charge, W. H. Sheffler, district president, associating. Interesting reports were read, showing that good work is being done. Election of officers resulted in: William H. Grice, district president; W. H. Sheffler and H. E. C. Muir, counselors, who were ordained accordingly; Otto Fetting, bishop's agent; Herbert Swoffer, secretary; Sister C. C. Whitford, chorister. Reunion committee of three elected to confer with the Detroit District committee to look for site of permanent reunion grounds. An interesting letter from president of Women's Department, Sister Engel, was read. Quorum of elders was organized; H. E. C. Muir, president; W. H. Sheffler and L. E. Grice, counselors; H. L. MacPherson, secretary and treasurer. First Quorum of Priests held a business session. Officers elected; F. W. Cadow, president, and Joseph O'Brien, counselor, who were ordained accordingly; Walter Curtis, secretary-treasurer. Preaching by John R. Grice, W. M. Grice, Paul M. Hanson, and M. W. Liston. This conference was a success, all business being done in perfect harmony. Attendance about 700. Very elaborate meals were served in church basement by the ladies of Marlette Branch, with reasonable rates and prompt service. William McAuley, Herbert Swoffer, press committee.

IDAHO.—At Hagerman, October 1 and 2, district president R. C. Chambers and counselors, together with L. G. Holloway, missionary in charge, chosen to preside. Business session Saturday morning and afternoon, followed by Sunday school business session. Officers elected: President, R. C. Chambers, Rupert, Idaho; vice president, Earl F. Hoisington, 1302 North Sixteenth Street, Boise, Idaho; secretary, Doris Jennings, 428 North Main Street, Pocatello; treasurer, Ed. L. Haas, Rupert. The Utah District was invited to unite with the Idaho District in a joint reunion at Rupert in 1922. The Presiding Bishop's appointment of Ed. L. Haas as Bishop's agent for the district was sustained, also recommendation of Brother Haas to office of elder was approved and ordination provided for. Rena Haas was recommended as district chorister and Izetta Condit as district field worker for Religion. Officers elected by Sunday school: Superintendent, Earl F. Hoisington, Boise; assistant superintendent, Charlotte Condit, Caldwell; secretary-treasurer, Jennie Condit, Hagerman; member library board, Bertha Meinicke, Rupert. Preaching by M. A. Etzenhouser, Earl F. Hoisington, and L. G. Holloway. Adjourned subject to call of the district president. R. C. Chambers, president.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—At Inman, September 2, 3, and 4, with F. S. Gatenby in charge. Sunday school, Religion, and Women's Department meetings were held Friday. Prayer meeting, Saturday morning at 9 a. m. Business meeting at 10 a. m. F. E. Cochran was chosen as counselor to the president, M. A. Peters as the other counselor. The next conference meets at Norfolk, Nebraska, at the call of the president. Round table Saturday afternoon. Sunday morning at 6.30, the first young people's prayer meeting was held. Sunday school and sacrament services held. Preaching by Joshua Carlile and E. E. Long. Zaida Derry, secretary, Elgin, Nebraska.

CLINTON.—At Mapleton, Kansas, October 14 to 16. Edward Rannie, district president, presided, with J. F. Keir and Lee Quick assistants. Friday was devoted to departmental work and program in the evening. Saturday was devoted to work of conference, and a round table was conducted by Bishop Keir in the afternoon. Preaching Saturday evening, Sunday morning and evening, by Bishop Keir. Prayer service in the afternoon. Weather was ideal, attendance was good, and a fine spirit prevailed throughout. Next conference at Nevada, Missouri, February 17 to 19. Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary.

Convention Minutes

CHATHAM.—Sunday school, at Chatham, Ontario, September 24. Officers' reports show that the district is progressing slowly. There are 16 schools in working order, with a membership of 711, a gain of 65 over last year. Officers elected: Superintendent, Duncan Clatworthy, Chatham; assistant superintendent, William R. Leverton, Bothwell; secretary, Lena Tedford, Blenheim; treasurer, John C. Dent, Bothwell; librarian, Richard Rae, Windsor. Next convention to be held at Bothwell at same time as the conference. Lena Tedford, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

WILLIAMS.—Henry A. Williams was born at Darien, Genesee County, New York, June 14, 1840. Six years later he came with his parents to Walworth County, Wisconsin, and settled in Geneva Township. He spent the greater part of his life in this immediate vicinity, but lived thirteen years in Jackson County, Minnesota. At the age of twenty-four he married Agnes Lytle. To them were born five boys and five girls, nine of whom survive. His wife preceded him less than three years ago. Baptized June 18, 1919. Deceased was a man of strong character, intellectual and keen minded. Once the light of the gospel penetrated his heart and brain, his conversion was real and complete. With the vision of God imprinted upon his soul, it seemed fitting for him to pass out from earth life and join the faithful Saints on the other and better side of life. Died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Banker, Lyons, Wisconsin. Funeral from the home; sermon by F. M. Cooper.

WESTWOOD.—Margaret Westwood was born June 5, 1827, in Clark County, Indiana. Married Eli Curtis, February 27, 1845. To this union were born twelve children, seven girls and five boys, four of whom died in infancy, also a son and daughter after they reached maturity. Baptized July 5, 1874. Her first husband died in 1879 and later she married Joseph Westwood, who preceded her in death. Died at Independence, Missouri, October 5. Leaves six children, eighteen grandchildren, sixty-nine great-grandchildren, eighteen great-great-grandchildren, also three stepchildren. Her son Emsley was a minister in this church, also five of her grandsons are ministers in this church. Funeral from South Side Church in charge of Arthur Allen; sermon by Frederick A. Smith.

SANNEMAN.—Mary, daughter of Henry J. Sanneman, was born in Goshen Township, Clay County, Kansas, March 4, 1881. At the age of twelve her mother died, leaving seven children younger than Mary, who became a mother to them, and her six brothers and four sisters rise up to praise her for the matchless service she rendered them. After various members of the household married, the family scattered, and in 1906 she went to Stewartville, Missouri, to live with her grandfather, who was a Latter Day Saint. In 1912, she went to Kansas City to work. She returned in 1918 to be the homemaker for some of her brothers. Baptized August 26, 1893. Died September 7, 1921, after a serious operation. Funeral services at the Methodist church, sermon by Reverend George Mead Hughes. Interment in Greenwood cemetery.

ELLIS.—Elizabeth A. Cox was born in Pennsylvania, July 11, 1844. Married William R. Ellis in 1859, who died August 27, 1912. Thirteen children were born to them, one of whom is Sister August Gratz, of Independence, Missouri. Sister Ellis was baptized May 12, 1907, and lived a faithful, consistent life to the end. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Hunt, in Livingston, Wisconsin, September 29, 1921. Funeral from the home there and at the Saints' church at Buckwheat Ridge, with interment in the cemetery there beside her husband. Both services by B. C. Flint.

LANDERS.—Imogene Landers at the age of seventeen, a member of the graduating class of Blue Rapids, Kansas, died October 13. The whole community, especially her schoolmates, with her mother and grandmother, mourn her sudden death. Funeral was necessarily from the Presbyterian church, near her home, though her family for generations back were Latter Day Saints.

WELLS.—Harry Ober Wells was born June 7, 1855, at Fremont, Michigan. Married Mattie Peer, May 6, 1911. To this union one son was born. Baptized April 27, 1919. Ordained a priest, December 1, 1920, in which office he served faithfully. He was a leader among the choir workers and his presence will be missed very much. Leaves a wife, one son, mother, and two brothers. Died of typhoid fever in the Saginaw General Hospital.

PETERS.—Mary Wells was born at Stewartville, Missouri, August 28, 1892. Baptized at ten years of age. Married Benjamin J. Peters, June 10, 1917, and to this union were born two sons. Died October 9 after a short illness. Husband, children, father, mother, five brothers, a sister, other relatives, and a host of friends mourn. Funeral services from Maple Grove Church, Stewartville, in charge of Z. J. Lewis; sermon by B. J. Scott. Interment in Maple Grove Cemetery.

ANWAY.—Geraldine Viola, daughter of Brother Charles H. and Sister Catherine A. Anway, was born at Lamoni, Iowa, April 19, 1914; passed from this life at Lamoni, Iowa, October 10, 1921. Geraldine had scarlet fever August last. She was left with a weak heart, not growing strong again. Her departure was on her part a release from sickness, a passing to the bright shores of eternity where illness and pain are no more. Services at Saints' church, Lamoni, before a large concourse of schoolmates and friends, in charge of H. C. Burgess; sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment at Lamoni.

MARTIN.—James Clarence Martin, born near Eagleville, Missouri, May 11, 1884, departed this life October 11, 1921. Married January 1, 1905, to Etta L. Keown. To them were born three children, Bertha L., Frances L., and Harold M., who with mother and companion are left. Besides wife and children, he is survived by an aged mother, two brothers, three sisters. Deceased was baptized in 1913. He lived and died in the hope of the first resurrection. Services were from the Saints' church, Lamoni, in charge of L. G. Holloway; sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

GOOLD.—Fred Raymond Goold was born at Beaconsfield, Iowa, January 29, 1899. Baptized at eight years and was strong in the faith. Married Bertha Zeearftra, August 24, 1919, and to this union was born one daughter, Francis Ethel. Died October 10. Wife, father, mother, seven brothers, a sister, other relatives, and many friends mourn. Funeral from Second Independence Church, William H. Kelley in charge; sermon by B. J. Scott. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PENROD.—William Allen Penrod, aged seventy-one years, died at his residence, 1129 West Fourth Street, Santa Ana, California, September 6. Leaves to mourn, his wife, Rebecca A., and two brothers. Funeral sermon by F. G. Pitt.

THE SAINTS' AID

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

by man among you have
and concubines he shall
Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 8

NUMBER 45

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing age provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized Ju

Issued
post-

EDITORIAL

The New Testament Law of Divorce

Adultery dissolves the essential marriage relation, unless reparation be followed by forgiveness. When an unbeliever deserts, the believer is free. Are all who desert believers?

A recent book by Doctor R. H. Charles, on the teachings of the New Testament on divorce, contains information which may prove of general interest to our readers, especially in connection with General Conference Resolution Number 412. Doctor Charles takes up very carefully the various accounts in Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and points out that Luke gives only one verse and Mark evidently has modified the order. A great discussion arose in that day between the Shammaites and the Hillelites over the meaning of Deuteronomy 24: 1, 2: "When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it came to pass that she find no favor in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife."

There was no discussion over Deuteronomy 22: 22 which provided the death penalty for adultery. The followers of Hillel maintained that the later passage involved any cause, Hillel going so far as to say that a man could divorce his wife for burning his food. Another maintained that he might divorce his wife if he met another woman who pleased him better. Hence the direct question, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife "for every cause"? Shammaites, on the other hand, held that no cause justified divorce except actual unchastity.

But Jesus did not base his reply on the interpretations of either to this ambiguous passage, but replied, "Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." (Matthew 19: 4, 5.) They then said to him, "Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?" and Christ answered, according to Matthew, "Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so." Then followed the direct declaration of Matthew 19: 9, "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery."

Doctor Charles urges that the word here translated "fornication" would be more accurately translated "unchastity." So far as adultery was concerned, it was already punishable by the Jewish law with the death penalty. Not until 30 A. D. was this law changed, but divorce was still compulsory. The husband was compelled to divorce his adulterous wife. Nor could he remarry her. Moreover, in no case could the paramour marry her. This right of divorce under the Jewish law rested only with the wife until a thousand years after. as not extended to

A further comment is made that Christianity, no less than Judaism, recognized that the sin of adultery of itself dissolved the essential relationship in marriage, as that essential relationship consists of the faithful troth of man and maid. The official relationship established by church or state can only be dissolved by proceedings for divorce, but the essential relationship is violated itself by unfaithfulness. It is only through repentance on the part of the offending party, and forgiveness by the faithful one, that the continuance of the true relationship is possible. Without repentance, the one who is faithful cannot condone it, as a spiritual reconciliation is impossible. Of course the faithful husband or wife who is unacquainted with the secret sin of the spouse is not guilty.

Doctor Charles insists that the following verses, found in Matthew 19: 10-12, are not concerned with this question of divorce, but belong to some other passage concerning sacrifice, as they are without the right meaning in this connection: "His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it." Taken in connection with a direction to renounce the marriage relationship as Paul later urged in the Corinthian letter, these words would then logically follow, "If the case is so with his wife, it is not good to marry."

Romans 8: 1-3 is concerned, not with the question of divorce, but with the question of the binding force of the Jewish law, and is based wholly on the Mosaic law of marriage, and hence has no bearing whatever on the doctrine of Christian marriage and divorce.

Discussion at some length is had on 1 Corinthians 7: 10-15, with the added suggestion that the first part of the eleventh verse is an addition: "But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband." The vital statement is that the wife depart not from her husband and the husband put not away his wife. This is the law to the Christian church on marriage. And then owing to a discussion in that day concerning those who were married to unbelievers, as the Jews forbade such marriages as defiling and illegitimate, Paul answers that the believing husband shall not leave the unbelieving wife, nor shall the believing wife leave the unbelieving husband, for the unbeliever is sanctified in the one who believes. But if the unbeliever depart, let him depart.

In summing up, unchastity at once dissolves the marriage bond. The erring spouse may, upon repentance, be forgiven and the marriage relationship be restored in the Christian church. Without repentance, the true relationship cannot be restored.

In the case of those who believe, the marriage relationship should be continued except in case of unchastity. But where one spouse is an unbeliever and leaves, the one who believes is not bound in such a case, and the believer is free to marry again.

Doctor Charles makes the following comment: "We have seen that Saint Paul legislates especially for such cases where the one who deserts is an unbeliever. Can we call all who desert to-day believers?" "There are many husbands and wives who are separated, not by any decree of the state, but by grave offenses such as desertion, or by irremediable evils, such as habitual intoxication or hopeless insanity. In the case of deliberate desertion extending into many years, it seems not unreasonable that the church should legislate specially for such cases, as did Saint Paul, and release the believer from the yoke of bondage. Adequate grounds could be adduced for like action on the part of the state."

He, therefore, concludes that:

"Remarriage after divorce on the ground of unfaithfulness is not forbidden anywhere in the New Testament save in an interpolation, i. e., 1 Corinthians 7: 11.

"The state can only divorce those who through unfaithfulness have already divorced themselves.

"First Corinthians 6: 15-18 clearly teaches that unchastity dissolves essentially the bond of marriage, though officially it may still be recognized by the church and state. The true renewal of the essential bonds lies in the hands of the pair directly concerned.

"First Corinthians 7: 15 allows that desertion in certain cases is equivalent to divorce. Whether in such cases remarriage was allowed on the part of the believing partner, who has been deserted, is not clear."

The position taken by Doctor Charles with regard to the Mosaic law and its interpretation is confirmed in a recent issue of the Journal issued by the American Bar Association, from which we take the following extract. After pointing out that much of the Mosaic law was not a command or charge to do certain things, as is often erroneously supposed to-day, but is instead a rather strict limitation of evils then existing, the writer continues:

"Divorce presents a more interesting phenomenon in Biblical law. In the ordinary translations of the Bible, the impression is given either that the lawgiver ordained divorce or that he ordained the writing of a formal bill of divorcement when a man exercised the power, and it seems to have been an exclusively male prerogative, of sending away his wife. But this is not the meaning of the passage in the twenty-fourth chapter of Deuteronomy. The first four verses properly constitute but a single sentence, the point of which is that if a man has divorced his wife, and she has married another, who either divorces her or dies, the first husband may not remarry her. The feeling behind this limitation of the divorce evil is expressed by one of the prophets as a matter taken for granted in one of his illustrations: 'If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, may he return unto her again? Will not that land be greatly polluted?' (Jeremiah 3: 1.) Two other checks on the evils of free divorce are imposed by the lawgiver in special cases (Deuteronomy 22: 19, 29). At first glance, this interpretation may seem at variance with certain passages in Matthew which attribute to the Pharisee hecklers this question: 'Why did Moses, then, command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?' The answer presents a more accurate interpretation: 'He saith unto them, Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives.' (Matthew 5: 31; 19: 3-8; Mark 10: 2-6.)"

S. A. B.

Through later advice we learn that Arthur E. Benc, a former Graceland student, received his M. D. degree at the State University of Iowa last June and is now an interne in the State University of Iowa Children's Hospital in the orthopedic surgery department. Also that Charles A. Benc received his B. A. degree in June and is now studying dentistry.

Unemployment

Nothing in the way of theorizing means as much to a man out of a job, and needy, as something to do to earn his daily bread. We admit this to begin with, for it is a basic fact. The long lines of men who stand outside a mill entrance of a morning, each one desperately hoping that by some means he may be given a place inside and have his name on the payroll, are tragic sights. One who would step up to them and say, "Look cheerful, men; it's not as bad as you imagine," would likely be invited to vanish, assisted with the toes of numerous brogans.

Ordinarily our personal impressions regarding unemployment are largely determined and colored by our own situations. If we are satisfactorily at work and have good prospects, the problem is given little attention. If we are out of work and face hunger and eviction from our homes for selves and dear ones, it becomes a problem of much magnitude.

We say ordinarily this is the tendency, though a real Latter Day Saint who not only reads the Golden Rule but thoroughly believes in its efficacy as a rule of action, is able to think in terms of others' needs without being forced into the same condition himself.

All over the United States and in distant lands, economic conditions are afflicted with something. It may be lack of faith which is akin to fear. It may be that capital is being centered in tax-exempt bonds to the exclusion of business maintenance and extension. In fact, student-writers are arguing with much fervor that such is the case. School bonds, municipal bonds—securities of all kinds with tax-exemption privileges are sought after now, while a few years ago they went almost begging. Liberty Bonds are at par as we write. We read that millions of dollars have been invested in speculative propositions, such as the gamble on whether or not the German mark would return to prewar value, but gilt-edge propositions to help finance established business, offering as much as eight per cent, are passed by. Why? We are assured that it is largely because of high taxes on such investments.

But we are not attempting here to ascertain causes so much as to discuss one serious effect: unemployment.

Bishop J. A. Becker, acting for the Presiding Bishopric as bishop of Zion, is attempting to help those who need work in Independence to find employment, but he needs more who will report places open or tasks to be performed. It is a matter for cooperation all around.

In Kansas City the Men's Club is keeping a careful list of all who are out of work and doing all it can to find them places. Naturally, the first problem of these men is to attend to local needs. Men with families who reside in that locality should be assisted in this regard before some one who without consultation picks up and moves into the place and then tries to find something to do.

In the Men's Club Bulletin they say very pertinently: "Efficiency and faithfulness are coordinate terms. No one is efficient, no matter what his abilities are, if he is not faithful, which means doing his work the very best he can, and generally looking after his employer's interests. In doing that we are guarding our own welfare. Increasing one's aptitude for the work he is doing, and 'keeping on the job,' is efficiency. . . . We don't want to get positions for men who won't give the best there is in them. We are after a reputation for the people we send to fill positions."

Roger Babson, the famous statistician, often receives letters asking help to find work. He gives some examples of his replies in his excellent little book on Religion and Business. He tells one man—if we may dare paraphrase so excellent a sentiment—that he should pray earnestly to God for help to find work, but furthermore should ask for sense enough to put the best he has into every task. Ask for ability to rise above his fellows from sheer application and concentrated attention. In the meantime, lest depression enter and discouragement follow, get out and do something. Work free if necessary, but work. There are always things that need doing if some one will attend to them. Scour the community for helpful things that you can do and do well, from trimming your neighbor's trees that hang too low over the walk to sawing up the widow's woodpile down the alley. One's very activity will recommend him.

It might be possible for every community of Saints throughout the church to cooperate in helping each other in this regard. Every person who is working knows the situation about him and can make quiet investigation as to what may likely be open for those who seek employment. But the big question always arises: Will he do his best to "make good"? If one has ability, skill, adaptability, congeniality, faithfulness—any one or all of these—he is worthy the recommendation of his friends and will sooner or later find those who seek his services. If he lacks these, then what?

This is a day of specializing. Many people work for years at a task which requires a high degree of efficiency in one or two tasks, and are not required to do anything else. If content to do that without learning the rest of the business, either theoretically or practically, as conditions allow, that particular article may be cut off the list and the employee be thrown out of a job. No one knows whether he is able to do anything else or not. He does not know, for he has never tried. It often brings about a sad plight.

On the other hand, there are those who do everything, yet are not able to do anything outstandingly well, and must also stand aside while better equipped men get the places. That indeterminate area between "common labor" and the skilled trades is always overfull. And the professions demand much these days if one would progress. Yet as a rule the best in all these fields of labor are kept on the pay roll when the others must be let out.

We say "as a rule," for in these days of uncertainty, conditions are forcing some of the best workers out; and rather than lose seniority rights, for which they have patiently worked for years, they wait, eagerly hoping that the times will be better and they be able to return. They have a horror of becoming floaters, transients. They have time, but not the funds to take a correspondence course in some other line, and even if they did that, must begin at the bottom—and the bottom of the ladder is the part that's so crowded. It is a personal problem, mostly.

It is easy to imagine an elaborate system worked out by the church officials to prevent unemployment. And they have thought of it, made a systematic survey to get material for a start, but it requires a large expenditure to maintain anything approaching completeness among so many members. It will come, though, in time, but in the meanwhile we must do our best, personally and cooperatively, to prevent and alleviate suffering the coming winter. E. D. M.

Church News

President F. M. Smith left Independence on the evening of the 2d for New York and points east.

President Elbert A. Smith was in Lamoni over Sunday, the 6th, to deliver an address at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Lamoni Branch.

Bishop J. F. Keir is improving from his illness, is able to be around home a little, and the prospects are that he will soon be able to resume some of his duties, with due care to avoid relapse.

More Foolish Misrepresentation

Sectarian press being supplied with propaganda that represents views of author only.

"The Advocate is in receipt of a batch of Mormon literature sent out, we suppose to all "the papers of this country. If anyone thinks the Mormons have changed their doctrine concerning plural wives, he should read this propaganda written by our Carl G. Lewis, Lamoni, Iowa. The example of the ancient worthies of the Bible are held 'as proof that plural marriage is righteous on the condition that it is practiced in response to a command from God and according to his restrictions.' This same Mormon also teaches that the Mormon church has a right to organize an army and Fred M. Smith, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter Day Saints has a right, when God speaks to him, to declare war. Simple-minded people may accept such nonsense; but men and women of intelligence are not to be led away by such folly. And yet it will be remembered that the Mormon population in the United States is numbered by many hundreds of thousands and it may after all become a serious matter that this teacher of theirs is claiming the right for them to equip an army and to declare war."

The above clipping from The Christian Advocate, of Birmingham, Alabama, has been sent in by some of our readers. It may be that this sending out of literature has been quite general throughout the country. If it has, a similar comment may appear in other States.

We will, therefore, state positively that Carl G. Lewis is not and never has been a teacher or leader or priest in any sense of the Reorganized Church. He was, at one time, a member, but because of the issuance and circulation of these tracts he was duly tried before a bishop's court and before a stake high council and expelled from the church. The case was discussed by Elder John F. Garver, President of the Lamoni Stake, in the SAINTS' HERALD for August 20, 1919.

This church makes no attempt to dictate to or control its members. The United States mail is free to all. But, of course, we cannot fellowship one who thus positively misrepresents the position and teachings of the church.

There is one sentence in the above comment which receives our hearty approval: "Simple-minded people may accept such nonsense; but men and women of intelligence are not to be led away by such folly."

The Reorganized Church has never, at any time or place, directly or indirectly, taught or sanctioned or excused the teaching of polygamy or plural wifery in any form. Nor is there any substantiation in the other accusation brought forth, that President F. M. Smith reserves the right, or claims the right, or that the church teaches that he has the right to declare war, though Mr. Lewis may so have claimed. But that does not hurt the church any more than the false accusations of other opponents.

The chief damage of the distribution of such literature is this very serious misrepresentation. Mr. Lewis has never heard any such teachings in the church, either publicly or privately, and well knows that such are not the teachings of the church. Unfortunately, some who do not care for the truth, but only for an excuse, may take advantage of his propaganda to attack the church.

But, as the editor of the Christian Advocate says, and we like to reaffirm, "While simple-minded people may accept such nonsense; men and women of intelligence are not to be led away by such folly." S. A. B.

Charles Wicks, Cheyenne Indian, was visiting Independence and the church institutions recently in company with Elder Hubert Case. He is much interested in the work and contemplated baptism at that time.

The American Indian

A Pennsylvania Congressman urges that they be given universal citizenship.

Honorable M. Clyde Kelley, Congressman from Pennsylvania, delivered a strong speech in the United States House of Representatives on August 4, concerning the American Indian. Mr. Kelley was a member of the congressional committee to investigate work among the Indians the past two years, and makes a strong attack upon the present situation of the American Indian.

He says the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs was created in 1832, and the reservation system adopted, during which time the Indians were removed from the Eastern States to the western territory and segregated. It was expected to continue possibly twenty-five years. In 1869, President Grant appointed a board of Indian commissioners, and in 1885 they made a most earnest plea that all Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States be declared citizens. In 1887, Congress definitely decided to end the system and break up tribal government and passed the Dawes Act as a general allotment law. Its purpose was to allot land to each Indian and declare him upon allotment fully entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of a citizen of the United States.

But in the thirty-four years, the number of Indians under the control of the Indian Bureau has been increasing rather than the reverse. This system of wardship has prevented the American Indian learning self-reliance. They have been forced to live under conditions which have prevented productive work. Where they have farmed land, cultivated and cared for it, they have found in some instances at least, those lands leased out at a very nominal sum and fences torn down and crops destroyed by grazing cattle. The expense of the Indian Bureau is now $15,000,000 a year, as compared to $5,000,000 in 1887.

Mr. Kelley brings a number of very serious charges of maladministration, but his basic plea is for independence and full citizenship to the American Indian, with the right to hold and own his own property without bureaucratic supervision.

Music Makes Farm Life More Attractive

The fact that so many young men and women are leaving the country for the city is causing much anxiety. The remedy is said to be, "Make country life more attractive." Through music, as through no other medium, is it possible to bring contentment and happiness. It should be made possible for the children in rural schools (and, perhaps, for adults in rural communities also) to receive class instruction on orchestral and band instruments.

"I have in mind a rural school in Pennsylvania where this plan is being followed," said the State Superintendent of Music for Pennsylvania. "A competent man is employed to teach instrumental music. He gives both class and individual instruction. The school has three orchestras, of which the first and most proficient is the smallest. It comprises eight members. The second consists of fourteen players. On special occasions these pupils are coached to unite with the first orchestra. The third is the beginner's orchestra. It is elementary in character. It numbers from six to twelve players.

"The school also has a mandolin club of nine members.

"There is a capable teacher of piano. The piano is placed in a small room adjacent to the main schoolroom. Through an admirable arrangement, pupils leave the schoolroom at any time for a piano lesson. The schedule is working smoothly. Students in the main room hear the tones of the piano all day. They are no more distracted by it than are their city cousins by the jangling gongs of passing trolley cars."

Subjects Being Discussed

Off for Australia November 8

Elder J. W. Davis and wife plan to sail for Australia on November 8, where they expect to spend five years in missionary work in that far-off land. Sister Davis will have charge of the Sunday school work and the Women's Department. Elder M. A. McConley and wife are at Honolulu and will join the party there and proceed to Australia. Elder Davis and wife have been in Lamoni recently, visiting Sister Davis's mother, Vida E. Smith. On their return they plan to visit Palestine and European countries.

Better English

The National Council of Teachers of English and the General Federation of Women's Clubs, with others, are striving to secure better English, and so have announced for the week beginning November 6 a better speech week for the week beginning November 6 a better speech week for the public schools. The following pledge has been proposed:

"I love the United States of America, I love my country's flag, I love my country's language. I promise:

"1. That I will not dishonor my country's speech by leaving off the last syllables of words;

"2. That I will say a good American 'yes' and 'no' instead of an Indian grunt 'umhum' and 'nup um' or a foreign 'ya' or 'yeh' and 'nope';

"3. That I will improve the American speech by enunciating distinctly and by speaking pleasantly and sincerely;

"4. That I will try to make my country's language beautiful for the many boys and girls of foreign nations who come here to live;

"5. That I will learn to articulate correctly one word a day for one year."

The Literary Digest makes comment to the effect that for this movement to be really successful, it will have to insure all-year care in the matter of good English. It will require more discriminating use of words and thinking instead of the easy way of slang.

Dressing Children

Comfort, utility, healthfulness, are required for healthy children.

Much is said of mother love, and rightly so. Yet at times we have felt almost inclined to doubt it. Probably the circumstances on what so harsh a judgment is based in the one respect would be found to be the outgrowth of ignorance rather than intention.

Many mothers will dress up a young child, and then insist that the child keep clean for several hours. Looks is the thing that appeals. Yet it is a trial to the child, and a trial to whoever tries to take care of him during that period of enforced cleanliness.

Modern observers agree that it is better that a child should be dressed in such a manner that he can play freely, dig down in the sand or the grass without great injury, or so he can pursue his very important duty of studying this little world in which he has been placed.

Perhaps even more grave is the question of health. We have seen children shivering with bare knees, and otherwise insufficiently clothed in weather near the freezing point. The little socks look cute, but after all, is it of the most importance that the child should look superficially pretty, or should he be clothed comfortably according to the nature of the weather?

(Continued on page 1078.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A Grave Indictment

By John W. Rushton

The immoral conditions of society at present demand a socialized ministry, a consecrated home, and the Bible and morals taught in the schoolroom.

The accompanying editorial from one of the leading western newspapers [see article on "What of the children?" in the department Of General Interest, in this issue] is a grim reminder of the guilt of neglect some of the churches are under regarding some duties owed to society, as the agency through which should be generated social, moral, and spiritual power. It also constitutes a challenge to the ministry as well as the church, which cannot be ignored if we are to be taken seriously in our work. Not only so, but home and parenthood, schools and pedagogues, as well as the whole of our vaunted civilization with its vast resources are included in the wide sweep of this condemnation.

While there seems to be everything by way of external and mechanical means to enrich life in every noble way, and each succeeding generation inherits an increasing supply to meet the heavier responsibilities which life imposes, yet everywhere we are confronted with signs of breakdown and moral bankruptcy. Even in our newspapers and magazines, which are so widely read and have access into every home, being privileged to go and be received on terms of intimacy enjoyed by no other agency for public enlightenment, it is disgusting and appalling to note the revelry with which we are plunged into all sorts of putrescence; and the vulgar details of orgiastic doings which engage the attention of men and women writers whose genius and talent are given up to feeding and probably creating an appetite for salacious and ghoulish affairs, in a manner which leaves nothing to the imagination to supply.

It is also to be noted in passing that some of these literary traffickers in shameful degeneracy are made the special guests at society functions and even invited to give addresses to young men and women who are preparing for service in our universities and colleges.

While we appreciate the courage and earnest desire for uplift which characterize the editorial upon which we comment, we would like to see some of our leading newspaper men and women initiate a crusade aiming at the purification of the streams of public information.

The High Calling of Journalism

There is every reason that our newspapers and various editors and their vast army of associates should regard their high calling equally as sacred as that of prophecy and the ministry. Indeed, the times seem to indicate that the voices of the church and ministry are not as welcome as those to which we refer, and for that very reason there should be consecration to high and worthy ideals, and the desecration of privilege and power by such disgraceful pruriency should be stopped.

The excuses which are put forth do not seem to be worthy of dignified consideration, all being variants of the general idea that newspapers must supply that which the readers demand. If it is true that the public is demanding that sort of matter, then all the more urgent the need for such soul-destroying foulness to be denied. We have no more justification for allowing the public to poison the mind by such indulgences than we have for permitting the sale of drugs and alcoholic drinks. A person and a people are valuable only for what they can dream and vision, therefore anything which can interfere with high thinking and high willing should be prohibited.

Another question which this editorial raises is: What connection may there be between this tidal wave of crime and delinquency and the fact that in our schools we have shut out the Bible and religion as integral parts of the various curriculums, because of sectarianism?

Criminality Increasing Alarmingly

We are sure that this editorial is not dealing with a sporadic outburst of Tartuffery; nor is the terrible arraignment of the social conditions of the world at large and particularly our own country, to be neutralized by superciliously referring to the matter as Pecksniffianism. The fact is that for years, and all over, from many public men and women, representing almost all grades of society and culture, similar warnings have been raised and evidences marshaled with overwhelming conviction, to show that in spite of lavish expenditures of money, time, and energy, the growth of the criminal class is three times greater than the growth of the population. No nation spends more, if as much, as the American Nation for educational, and philanthropic, and religious enterprises of all kinds, still no other nation has a record quite so bad as ours with reference to the increase of crime. The Eleventh United States Census shows that criminals have increased from 1 in 3,500 in the year 1850, to about 1 in 786 in 1890, an increase of 345 per cent, while in the same period the population increased but 170 per cent.

In 1893 Henry Boies, in discussing this matter, catalogued the chief causes of this increasing criminality; and besides intemperance, which he said was responsible for about seventy-five per cent, "the lack of family discipline" and the "frightfully increasing desecration of the Sabbath day" were emphasized.

It cannot be denied that "what we wish to see in the national life of to-morrow we must put into the schools of to-day." The trouble is not with the schools altogether, but with the home, for we insist on the wholeness of life and urge that home, school, church, and business are equally important as factors in the development of character.

Deterioration of Home a Menace

The deterioration of the home is a serious menace to our national vitality, for it is recognized in the science of sociology that the home is the biologic unit of the societal structure, and the nation cannot be stronger nor better than the homes of which it is composed. In too many instances home is but a convenience, supplying a place to eat and a means of shelter during the intruding darkness of night, which forces a reluctant cessation from amusement and pleasure. This aspect of the question must include the want of proper discipline of children by parents. The disposition to impose too much upon teachers, and to take advantage of these social aids in the training of children, not only is harmful to the direct victims of such selfishness, but communicates its results to society as well as to the generations still to come. Our want of reverence for that which is holy, chaste, and good is the raw material from out of which a very large percentage of the vice and crime we are dealing with develops. Children should be taught this reverence for life and its mysteries; and that character is the result of disciplined will. Altogether there must be closer association between home, schools, and churches, and there is laid a foundation in prophylaxis, which would bring returns in the course of a generation making for vast improvement.

Those who are interested in public welfare and charity work, as well as jurists, teachers, and ministers, are too well aware of the awful truth there is in the reference to the growing delinquency of young girls, as well as the boys and young men. Vice commissions have affirmed that for each "fallen girl" there are twenty "fallen boys." There is much to be said against the economic pressure which may drive a large number to vice as a means of supplementing an inadequate wage, and with such a condition the Government should be urged by public agitation to see that proper investigation is made to find out in what way our economic and industrial matters may be readjusted to make this condition impossible. It cannot be tolerated that a Christian nation shall be allowed by its rulers to go to the Devil because "in gaining the world it is losing soul." Business is not primarily for the profiting of any individuals who exploit public necessity to their own advantage, but is a means of social function through which the public needs are supplied to the satisfaction and benefit of all concerned. But there is no doubt much of the vice with which we are confronted is the result of ignorance and a want of discipline which can only be blamed upon the parents. In this we shall be supported by physicians, ministers, teachers, as well as jurists.

Even within the fold of the church and under the very shadow of ecclesiastical ramifications sexual irregularity spreads its baleful influences; and many scandals have been uncovered in high schools of all cities which fill with alarm parents and teachers alike, leading to the inevitable conviction that the public is only acquainted with the periphery of the actual province of this evil.

Should Recognize the Crisis Age of Youth

We suggest again that there may be some connection between the social iniquities and the divorcement of our youth from the idealistic influences of religion in our schools, and that during the very years which have been proved by scientific methods to be the most fruitful of returns in spiritual experiences. It has been demonstrated by close analysis that the adolescent period, which includes the ante-puberty, and the post-puberty, as well as the puberty period itself, is the period in which there is awakened the sense of personal relationship to God, the sense of the burden of sin, or what Professor William James calls the "sense of wrongness as we are," and the anguish of the soul in its longing to be "right with God." It is a matter to be regretted that in our own church we have nothing which is being used as a means to impress the mind of the adolescent religiously at this very important stage of development. The Roman Catholic and the Angelican churches have their training and preparation of the youths and maidens for confirmation and to take part in the Holy Eucharist; even the Mormon Church has something approaching a ritual by which is marked this entrance into a new life, at least so far as the boys are concerned, in that most, if not all, of the boys about fourteen years of age are ordained to the office of deacon and placed into ecclesiastical harness.

Preferable Age for Baptism

The blessing of babies is a very beautiful and significant ordinance and carries with it a weight of spiritual meaning and even psychological power perhaps as much to the parents as the child. But the rather strict and possibly mechanical insistence upon the baptism of children by the time they are eight years of age, does not seem to be associated with any natural crisis of body or mind, and it does seem that the ceremony including baptism in water and the laying on of hands should be postponed until there could be a synchroniz-ing of the awakening of the soul in the way which herein is suggested, and the church ritual be made to signify the "new birth" in something like a real and literal sense. So many times in the course of official experience has the excuse been made by church delinquents that they were baptized into the church when they did not understand the matter, and it had no significance. Of course I know that the textual thunder of the standards and names of the church can be wielded, and the inevitable challenge to human wisdom in comparison with what is called inspiration, will arise. But it is hard to maintain any sort of theory when the "facts" of experience are against it. Perhaps we could arrange our code so as to withhold full privileges of membership to children until this stage in their development had been reached, by making the partaking of sacrament and the enjoyment of franchise in business meetings a matter of preparation and education, and then have some special service in which the novitiates could be solemnly inducted into church life, thus objectivizing the subjective experience.

Seeing that the American children do not usually leave school until well into the adolescent stage of life, and many of them pass through high school before taking upon them the responsibilities of service, is it not a matter of importance that in the schools there shall be sympathetic consideration of the idealistic and spiritual needs of the pupils by the inclusion of the Bible as a textbook, and dealing with the religious experiences of the race? For in other studies, particularly in that of sociology, it is taught emphatically that religion has always been one of the chief factors in the development of society and the varying civilizations. The study of psychology also introduces the pupil to the realm of the mysterious and the idealistic which belong directly to religious experiences. Indeed, there is no study which does not touch religion in some way and at some point. It is not unlikely that if this study of religion and the using of the Bible as a textbook were included in the ordinary curriculum, many of the evils to which reference has been made might be eliminated, because the minds of the young people were being engaged in legitimate studies adapted to the new hunger associated with the period of adolescence as shown in the researches of science. The objections raised against this cannot be founded upon anything but sectarian bias and denominational jealousy, and is it reasonable to starve the rising generation to death in this way to gratify the animosities of sectaries who seem willing to demoralize the whole to gain an ephemeral sectarian triumph?

We Have a French Tendency

Very largely, in our sentiments, American people like to follow the lead of the French; though in nearly all practical things we are essentially Anglo-Saxon, yet France, who probably went further to abolish religion from the national consciousness than any other nation, finally realized the mistake she was making as is seen in Victor Hugo's most eloquent appeal made before the senate for religious instruction in the schools, though he was opposed to the union of church and state. He said:

"So far from wishing to proscribe religious instruction, I maintain that it is more essential at this day than ever. The more a man grows the more he ought to believe. As he draws nearer to God, the better ought he to recognize God's existence. It is the wretched tendency of our times to base all calculations, all efforts on this life only—to crowd everything into this narrow span. In limiting man's end and aim to this terrestrial and material existence, we aggravate all his miseries by the terrible negation at its close. We add to the burdens of the unfortunate the insupportable weight of a hopeless hereafter. God's law of suffering we convert, by our unbelief, into Hell's law of despair. Hence these deplorable social convulsions."

He concludes:

"I desire, therefore, most sincerely, strenuously, and fervently that there should be religious instruction; but let it be the instruction of the gospel, and not of a party; let it be sincere, not hypocritical; let it have heaven, not earth for its end."

Surely the author of the greatest classic in the literature of fiction, Les Miserables, as well as the Toilers of the Sea, will not be treated with disrespect when at the close of his long and useful life he so earnestly and eloquently implores France to teach everywhere that there is no dignity in life, that labor is lightened and toil sanctified, and that man is made brave, wise, good, patient, benevolent, just, and humble only because he always has before him the vision of the better world. Especially is his message apposite when we remember how truculently our own country is moving in the ways of a crass materialism, and the only pleasures which seem to be popular are those which are animalistic and brutalizing in their tendency; for the social diathesis of moral degeneracy is deep-seated and possibly more active than many of us realize.

The Problem Before Our Church

What can we do as a church to counteract these evils which threaten the foundation of our civilization? Many of the churches are wrestling very bravely with these problems and seeking to salvage the waste from these sordid strata; and, while there may be serious differences regarding matters of theology and organization, yet this work is indeed the work which all Christian people must appreciate and should cooperate in without reference to names, constitutions, and differences in doctrines and ceremonies. To cleanse the sanctuary, to cast out the evil, to bind up the broken-hearted, and bring liberty to the captives is the necessary preparation for the coming glory of Zion. The church ought to take the lead in securing a better working understanding with the educationalists, medical men, jurists, and ministers, so that all activities may be coordinated to meet this tidal wave of iniquity threatening to engulf us.

One of the most important steps taken by churches has been the organization of what is known as the institutional church or the institute which operates in the down-town section of the towns and cities dealing directly with the conditions which prevail in the slums and purlieus. But after all, dealing with salvage is not very satisfactory, and we should aim at prophylaxis. To this end, we can only look with sincere favor upon the move approved in recent joint council sessions to develop an institutional church in Independence under the care of those who by special training have qualified themselves for this sort of service. To use the agencies which we have in the church to practical purpose and take advantage of the resources we have within our reach, and to make a sincere effort to unite our powers with those of every other organization striving to cleanse our neighborhoods by every intelligent process, should be attractive to every man and woman with a vision of the Christly end and purpose.

The Women's Department has a big province for cultivation in this matter, and while there may be many who have not been able to appreciate the larger vision which has been introduced to the women of the church, than merely working to create finances for special emergencies, yet there is an awakening sense of appreciation of the place and work which intelligent and consecrated womanhood is invited to occupy and perform. The various studies offered to all can only result in the rendering of more helpful service which, in association with the ministers who are ordained for special functioning, will prepare the way for the expression of our religious ideals in community life.

Our church is peculiarly blessed in having one section of ministers set apart especially for the purpose of inculcating religion in the home and of laying a foundation of piety in domestic life, which should go far to cleanse the stream of life at its source. But this work needs patient and careful study, as well as consecration.

Perhaps something may be done still further along the lines of coordinating Sunday school studies with the week-day school curriculum, which has been attempted so excellently in the Religio Quarterlies by Professor McDowell. The endeavor to make our ministry more efficient in their work by encouraging the young men, especially those who intend to make the ministry their life's profession, to take the course in religious training, as well as the institute work under the guidance of W. W. Smith and others in Independence, all will make for better service in this matter. Above all things it will enable us to see that we cannot work by ourselves and to ourselves, and teach us to socialize our own powers and resources in common with others, to the obtaining of a common objective. It must be that in this direction of common interest in some outstanding ideal which can grip the racial consciousness, and in a common devotion to the realization of that ideal that the true basis of union shall be found. Never can we hope for union so long as we are more interested in means than in ends, or machineries rather than power, for it is very true that "scrupulosity over trifles disturbs the moral balance."

"A Woeful Lack of Wide Vision"

In our own church activities there is a woeful lack of wide vision and far too much of official provincialism. The great problem we have as an organization is to cultivate teamwork and that sense of perspective as well as the ability sincerely to appreciate relativity of each to others and of all to the whole. We must think less of personal pronouns and learn to think in terms of pluralism.

Finally, let this editorial be carefully considered by the church ministry, for it is a challenge to the ministerial efficiency, and seems to indicate that as a means of neutralizing the power of evil the church as an expression of organized religion is not making for righteousness as successfully as it should do. Religion must be expressed in terms of conduct and of social justice. Every sinner therefore constitutes a challenge to the saving power, which is supposed to be the specialty of the Christian church. And nothing is so humiliating to the conscientious minister as the fact that ecclesiastical procedure is employed so many times in expelling members from the body as being either incapable of absorption into the body spiritual, or that the true spiritual habitat of the soul is not to be found with us. Instead of the somewhat ruthless, and at times nonchalant, and even hilarious indifference with which these amputations take place, it does seem that each of these cases should be regarded as of clinical worth; and besides an investigation of the failure of the victim, some attempt to explore the matter with a view to determining causes should be made. It may not be unlikely that there is something wrong with the organization, and perhaps instead of getting rid of the microscopic causes of ecclesiastical irritation, we might find some neuroticism or disease in the body which needs attention.

We are grateful to the writer of this editorial, if for no other purpose than that it has given occasion to express some ideas which have long been in mind.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHAT OF THE CHILDREN?

It is proposed to turn army cantonments into reformatories for neglected children. We approach the condition: "A country without a home."

Juvenile courts in all great cities are crowded with offenders. To deal with child delinquency heavy dockets are calling every day for additional judges. Reformatories, detention homes, and houses of refuge are filled to the limit. The number of young girls picked up on the streets at night is a harrowing tragedy.

So serious are these conditions that the attorney general has recommended the converting of army cantonments into reformatory training camps for boy lawbreakers. This increase in crime committed by children is not only sweeping the United States, but every country in Europe.

When the department of labor reports so dreadful a state of affairs one cannot help but be filled with doubt and apprehension for the future of the Republic.

While the present generation was still in the making there was no such prevalence of youthful depravity as exists to-day in every civilized community. Yet we are suffering now from an unusual wave of adult crime. This is bad enough. But that through neglect of child morals we are preparing for the next decade a still more devastating flood is infinitely worse. For the criminal record of the waning generation is a menace to public health and safety of small account compared to the criminal record of the waxing generation. Not against the storm in the offing, but against the tempest gathering over the open sea, the wise mariner trims his sails.

What are we going to do about it—you and I and everyone who loves the home life and the children through which and by which and for which this country lives and prospers?

Federal and State and county and city authorities, roused to the problem of child delinquency, are preparing various more or less (but generally less) effective ways for remedying the results of these abnormal conditions. They are working along the lines adopted by the Prohibition Party for combating the drink evil—by wiping out the effect instead of tackling the cause of it. Not by such tactics comes salvation. You do not cure blood diseases by pricking pimples—you cannot ward off the ravages of age with paint and face powder.

Of course, it is absolutely essential to provide proper facilities for handling the children who have been permitted to fall from their divine birthright. No doubt we must have shelters and refuges and reformatories to help close the stable door before all the horses have got loose. But it is shocking, it is horrible, it is heart-breaking that such an obligation should rest to-day upon the most enlightened nation in the world's most progressive era.

After the floods had wrecked Pueblo and drowned out San Antonio the work of rescue and restoration was immediate and imperative. Not to have attended to it would have proved our people decadent and demoralized. But how much better by wise engineering to have forestalled the possibilities of such a flood. Check dams are better than salvage, and far less expensive.

Our child problem is one that should deal chiefly with causes, so that there would be less demand for fighting with effects. Prevention is better than cure. And the causes can only be remedied by the people as responsible individuals, accepting their responsibilities at face value and not attempting to shuffle them off on Federal or State or city or school officials. Care of children is a home problem—and as the beauty of home life dies out in a mad scramble for money and amusement the child changes slowly but surely from the pride and glory of the race to its menace and danger. Parents, this problem is yours—not one for the attorney general nor the Department of Labor to solve. They can merely deal with the results of your neglect.

In the decadence—or, at any rate, the diminution—of real home life in America we can find the chief cause for the report on child delinquency just issued by the Department of Labor. Whatever the difficulties, whatever the temptations, whatever the distractions imposed on parents by the speed and struggle of modern life, the maintenance of the home must be safeguarded and the morals of the children be preserved.

Rents may be high and building material scarce and landlords extortionate, but the automobile industry, the moving picture magnate, the ice cream parlor, the chewing-gum baron, the tobacco king, the caterer to luxury and amusement are to-day absorbing the greatest bulk of the Nation's wealth.

Parents can, if they make the effort, spend less on show and outside pleasure and more on the home itself. They can, if they wake up to the seriousness of the problem, trust more to their own guidance and example for shaping the lives of their little ones and less to the school-teacher, the minister, and the policeman.

They have got to do this before the Department of Labor or the attorney general can make any headway against the wave of child delinquency which is the most ominous sign among the multitude of troubles and dangers besetting our modern civilization. No amendment to the Constitution will cure any disease of the community that springs from the acts of the individual. The individual himself must be amended. The Constitution is all right—but that will avail us little if the private citizen is all wrong.

While we have to multiply the reformatories and juvenile courts to deal with the effects of personal laxity in the care of children, it wouldn't be a bad idea to establish a few compulsory night schools for the correction of delinquent parents. Our hopes for the future start from the family circle.

We are a nation of magnificent hotels, of sumptuous restaurants, of glittering pleasure resorts, of travel de luxe, of comforts and luxuries beyond the reach of any other people in any other age. We are also about to convert army cantonments into reformatory camps for neglected children.

God help this dear land of ours if in the years to come it is written as "A country without a home!"—Los Angeles Daily Times.

THE AIM OF EDUCATION

What Is the Aim of Education?

The Student says Books.
 The Scholar says Knowledge.
 The Preacher says Character.
 The Minister says Service.
 The Philosopher says Truth.
 The Artist says Beauty.
 The Epicurean says Happiness.
 The Stoic says Self-control.
 The Christian says Self-denial.
 The Democrat says Self-government.
 The Statesman says Cooperation.
 The Ruler says Loyalty.
 The Patriot says Patriotism.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Weak Spots in Our Reunions

By Edward Rannie

The writer protests the mixing of recreation with spiritual activities and the extravagance of some who attend reunions. He also questions whether reunions reach a sufficient number of church members.

The writer of this article has no desire to minimize the good or rob any person of the blessings and happiness that can be had at a reunion. For he would indeed be both blind and dumb if he could not see and understand that where so many good men and women are consecrated to the service of God and their fellow men, and making such determined effort, a very great measure of good must be accomplished and many hearts made glad and encouraged to press on and become new creatures in Christ Jesus and continue to be followers of the lowly Nazarene. It is for the thousands who are deserving and craving the good things that a loving Father has to bestow with a lavish hand upon his children, many of whom cannot get even the crumbs that fall from the table of those that have so much of good they cannot appreciate what they get, for whom I wish to speak.

A Small Percentage Attends

It has been my good pleasure to attend quite a number of reunions in the past twenty-five years, and I have been observant of the number attending. Learning the membership of the district, I am well satisfied that the attendance will seldom exceed ten per cent of the membership. If the number in the branch where it is held should be excluded from the count, the attendance will sometimes not reach five per cent. A system of meetings that can reach such a small number of people, the absent ones being as deserving as those present, is not born of the wisdom of God. For a loving Father cannot a stewardship plan all might be stewards whom we now call the capitalist and the laborer.

A well-defined plan of operation is what we need of the stewardship principle. This is not a proper subject for revelation, for the execution of the principle would necessarily vary with varying conditions of business. But its application cannot be successful until and unless the individuals themselves are consecrated, and if they are there will be no trouble, because unity of spirit always brings unity of action; and without unity of spirit no unified action is possible.

So, after all, like all other human problems, the matter is spiritual. This writer believes that "stewardship" is highly spiritual, the highest in fact of all the spiritual principles, because it is the noblest characterization of "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

No so-called material problem can be permanently cured unless the solution is the work of creative evolution on the side of spiritual forces, which alone cannot be deceived by transitory materialism.—C. A. Smurthwaite, in the Kansas City Stake Men's Club Bulletin.

The Judge says Justice.
The Aged Man says Wisdom.
The Youth says Achievement.
The Soldier says Courage.
The Editor says Success.
The Manufacturer says Efficiency.
The Banker says Wealth.
The Dreamer says Vision.
The Child says Play.
The Maiden says Love.
The Man says Work.
The Friend says Friendship.
The Pedagogue says Personality.
The Physician says Health.
The Biologist says Growth.
The Psychologist says Unfoldment.
The Sociologist says Adjustment.

But the true educator says all of these, and more, must be the aim of education. To realize many of these ideals in education, the true educator feels that the school needs greater cooperation, greater support, greater democracy, and greater efficiency. Our schools are doing a wonderful work, but not half as wonderful as they should do.

The aim of education is broader than mere scholarship. The schools, endeavoring to promote scholarship, are doing good, but scholarship alone is only a part of the great work of education. Education is broader even than the schools.—Extract from address of Doctor M. M. Parks, President Georgia Normal and Industrial College, Milledgeville, Georgia.

STEWARDSHIP IN THE METHODIST CHURCH

We glean the following short paragraphs from some of the literature of the Methodist Centenary Movement.

"I may say frankly, that I regard this movement in the Central New York Conference as the most encouraging evidence of progress I have witnessed in all my forty years of experience. If it succeeds, and I have not a particle of doubt on that point, it will mark an era in the Methodist Church, and in time in all other evangelical denominations. That your example will be followed by other conferences, I have no question."—The Layman, Chicago.

"One more revival, only one more is needed, the revival of Christian stewardship, the consecration of the money power to God. When that revival comes the kingdom of God will come in a day."—Horace Bushnell.

"We welcome as fundamental to this imperial world program the proposal of the Centenary Commission—that it shall provide for a revival of study of the scriptural teaching of Christian stewardship and the payment of the tithe as a material acknowledgment."—Centenary Commission Resolutions.

"Every man who has passed through the experience can testify that the acceptance of a principle like this (the tithe) marks a distinct era of spiritual enlargement in his life."—Robert E. Speer.

CAPITAL AND LABOR

Enmity between capital and labor must be brought to an end in this and all other countries if social progress is to get a new beginning.

An entirely new relation must be brought into existence, identifying the prosperity of labor with capital; which, in substance, is the principle of what we call "stewardship." Under be the author of a plan that feeds ten per cent and starves ninety per cent.

Two Classes Attend

The attendance is largely made up of two classes who can attend the reunions; those who have summer vacations with their wages continued, and those who are the leisure class and have sufficient wealth that they can afford to be present and not deprive themselves of the common comforts of life. The great majority who must toil on the farms and in the shops, stores, and mills cannot go to the reunions because they must toil on continually to provide for the necessities of home and help provide the money that is needful to carry on the work of the church. It is from this latter class that most of the tithes and offerings come, and these are the members who are continually making sacrifices for the Lord's work, yet they are the class of Saints who seldom get to go to a reunion. If they stopped working and paying, the whole church would soon be on the financial rocks and the gospel work would cease.

First Reunions Religious

The first reunions were purely religious; the present ones are a mixture of religious services, athletics, and various other amusements. The writer believes in good, wholesome play, and I tried to get my share of it when I was a boy and encouraged my own boys in it and gave them enough to make it a good balance with work, and I believe every other boy and girl should have the same chance. The spirit of worship, as we learn it from the scriptures, and the place of worship is a sacred and hallowed place, and the ministry especially know that when we meet in the place of prayer to plead with God for help in our work and for him to speak to his church, that all manner of worldly things are excluded from our minds and we do not even whisper about such things, because we believe it excludes the Spirit of God. There is not enough reverence now in our assemblies in the regular places of worship, and to introduce amusements as a part of the daily program will not improve it and in time it will likely receive its greater numbers from the pleasure seekers, instead of from those who would come for a spiritual feast.

There are some things the writer will believe on the testimony of others, but in this matter nothing but the fruit of righteousness and a more consecrated life will satisfy, or convert him to the mixing of worship and amusement. If it is possible to discover that the mixture makes the young better than those who remain absent, and they are found helping in all the departments of church work and are tithe payers instead of spending their money in an extravagant way for fine clothes and the wanton, wasteful pleasure of the world, it will be evidence of the good of the combination. The writer has great confidence in the integrity and good motives of the good brethren and sisters engaged in the work among our young people, and by no act or word would he hinder them in their work, but for the present he will be an observer and patiently wait for conversion, if it ever comes; for it is very pleasant for most of us to be found on the side of the majority.

Consolidation

At present some of our reunions are so small it makes them very expensive and inconvenient to get to. If the reunions are to be a permanent fixture in the church, the church should appoint a commission to make the geographical lines, and in doing so disregard district lines and arrange them in such a manner that the reunions would be made up of branches and nonresident members, so that it would be convenient for travel by railroad and by the public highway to get to them, and also make them permanent in some places. This cannot be done in all cases. It may be possible that the reunions are a temporary concern and with the development of the city of Zion and the stakes they will become obsolete, and the work of regeneration and spiritual development be accomplished in the branches where the law of God places that kind of work, to be done by the branch officers and the patriarchs.

Equalize the Burdens

At the present there are many of our most deserving and faithful members who cannot attend because they cannot meet the expense. A system should be developed that would equalize the burdens and so make it possible for a greater number to attend, and make a practical demonstration of the law of equality, as found in the books.

I am an optimist and believe that the good and what is for the best will finally prevail, and in the end our reunions will either be abolished entirely or they will be so improved and better managed that a greater number can attend and at less expense than at present.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 8.—ZION. THE ORDER OF ENOCH. THE GATHERING

The word Zion is used in several significations. First, it is referred to as a city or a land (Doctrine and Covenants 45:13; 100:5); second, as a people (Doctrine and Covenants 36:2; 99:11); and third, as a mode of life (Doctrine and Covenants 36:2; 102:2; Psalms 15). The inhabitants of Zion are said to be "pure in heart" (Doctrine and Covenants 94:5). It is in this connotation that we use the term Zion—the mode of life, the ideal society.

The Desire of All Ages

The desire of all ages is the "good."

All peoples in all ages have desired to secure their own welfare and happiness. This is either a native instinct, an intuition, or a conscious purpose. Either consciously or unconsciously all peoples have struggled towards "The desire of all nations."

The Psalmist David described Zion as an ideal society: "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord; sweareth not falsely to hurt any man, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved." The latter-day prophet refers to Zion in this same sense: "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." This was the city of Enoch, "that was called the city of holiness, even Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 36:2, 3), a city complete in its moral and spiritual purity, perfection, and integrity; a city whose concerns were established in what men ought to do; a city whose inhabitants had a taste for ideal forms, of association and who chose to do the good.

It is such a life, a life established in moral principles, in "the righteousness" of the kingdom of God, that constitutes a place or a people "Zion." And hence it is declared that "if my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon . . . it shall not be a land of Zion unto you." (Doctrine and Covenants 106:2.)

This emphasis is called for from the fact that attention is commonly fixed upon names and dates and places or mere objects and diverted from the idea of relations. Not the name, not the land, not the people are prime matters for contemplation, but the relationships, the mode of life, the system of administration of affairs—this is the all-important fact of Zion. True it is that if there is to be an ideal life, there must be people who live that life; and that a people must have a place to live; but vain hopes have been built upon ideas of names and peoples and places because the thing that alone gives a people or a place its value has not been comprehended. The early saints fell into this very error. To contemplate their experience may serve to deliver others from falling into like errors as well as to bring to light the idea of Zion as a principle. "Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the law of the celestial kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

In contemplating the lives of nations we learn that certain moral delinquencies attach to, or arise from, or are coincident with certain forms of association. The principle of economic determinism is here involved. Industry that is grounded in the principles of competitive bargaining and other kindred customs gives rise to self-centeredness and conflict; still at the same time these forms of association also arise from self-considerations. That men should be "full of all manner of evil," and that they should "not impart of their substance" as becometh saints, is not to be wondered at when a people is "not united according to the laws of the celestial kingdom."

This question should be considered in the light of the proposition previously discussed, namely: That only certain forms of association are adapted to the purpose of redeeming the human family. Thus we see that names and peoples and places do not constitute Zion, but only a life established in the principles of the law of God. And for this reason it is declared "that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ." (Doctrine and Covenants 102:9.) God and Christ—the original source of ideas of the good, of the thing that all men in all ages have desired, though they may not have recognized it when it was made available to them.

The Perfection of Beauty

Back of every design is the designer. Before there can be a watch there must be a watchmaker with a comprehension of the device both in its parts and in their relations. But the making of a watch has back of it the purpose to produce certain effects, and the parts and combinations fixed upon are determined by the effects designed to be produced. Precisely this is true of Zion.

Zion is the sum of the formal relations in which certain associating individuals are bound together: "united according to the laws of the celestial kingdom." God is the designer. "Zion is in very deed the kingdom of God." It is the embodiment of the God idea of right relations in human society. It has for its purpose "a perfect man" in the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ. This is the effect designed to be produced, and the parts and their relations in Zion are predetermined by this purpose.

The most essential characteristic of beauty seems to be a certain perfection of form resulting from the harmonious combination of diverse elements in unity. (Standard Dictionary.) The perfection of beauty implies (1) a certain number and kinds of parts, (2) a given arrangement of parts, i. e., certain relations, and (3) form and symmetry.

Objective Zion is a group of people, a society, that may be located in any given place that is suited to its purposes. Subjective Zion is an ideal, a conception of life which appears in consciousness as worthy of contemplation and aspiration, a form of society considered subjectively.

The perfection of beauty in relation to human society implies a purposive society, a society characterized by certain activities and enterprises only in certain relations which give it its form and symmetry.

It is obvious that in such a society there must be a very definite plan and working agreement—"a bond and a covenant which cannot be broken." All the parts and all the processes must sustain harmonious and reciprocal relations, they must form a unity; there must be a mutual fitness and adaptation. The arrangement of parts must be grounded in natural relations; there must be a natural division of labor. It is obvious that "the idler shall not [cannot] have place" in Zion. Zion is peculiarly a saving or redeeming process, and any attempt to incorporate or combine money getting devices or motives with the institutions of Zion is to throw the whole plan out of adjustment by obstructing the functions of its parts. "The laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—2 Nephi 11:109. And "woe be unto him that is at ease in Zion." Zion and Babylon cannot mix. Zion is one mode of life peculiarly adapted to the perfection of manhood; it leads to God; Babylon is quite another mode of life and leads in the opposite direction.

Zion is the kingdom of God. God is its lawgiver. Its people are devoted to right doing, to doing good. Its parts, its relations, its form and its symmetry make it the object of universal desire and admiration; they are the embodiment of the God idea; they express his thought. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

The Bond of Zion

"Let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 51:2. "Except ye are one, ye are none of mine." "Let every man esteem his brother as himself." "For we are laborers together with God."

The saying that "birds of a feather flock together" is a concrete way of expressing the abstract idea of mutual attraction. All men in common feel that they have need of food, shelter, protection, recreation, and culture, which includes devotional desire. The instinct to reproduce is also universal. From the beginning of experience man is taught that he is so constituted that the supply of his needs depends upon human association. And all men are attracted towards one another primarily from the same cause, namely, the prospect of having their needs supplied through association.

Mutual attraction is one of the most primitive as well as the ever present factor in determining social groupings. Men are grouped according to their tastes, their desires, their motives, beliefs, and purposes. "Birds of a feather flock together." Men are attracted and held together by "the consciousness of kind." "To know that people feel as we feel and think as we think is the foundation of pure civilization."—Blackmar.

A group becomes solidified as the bonds of common interest increase, or as association tends to supply a wide range of needs. The family is the most stable of all social groupings because it supplies with the greatest assurance and most continuously the widest range of needs—needs ranging from the most primitive to the most recent. The solidity of any given family depends upon the number of bonds of common interest.

Each person's standard of living, his conception of life which regulates his desires and controls his conduct, obviously determines the combination of bonds that directs his social choices. The instinct to reproduction may or may not be a prime factor in determining groupings. It depends upon the place this want has in the scale of personal evaluations. Devotional needs may determine the breaking up of family connections. The constitution of any grouping is the index to its standard of living; what men want they strive to get.

Moreover, when men feel that their interests are no longer identified with the activities of the group, they resist its tendencies, and conflict arises and disintegration begins. The history of our Nation, as well as that of others, furnishes abundant examples of this. It is therefore important to any given group to make sure that its constituency has assimilated the common ideal. Initiatory rites in lodges are promoted on this principle. It is the same principle that places repentance and faith and baptisms first and in this order in the system of principles known as the doctrine of Christ. The principal obstacle to the success of the latter-day work is an unassimilated constituency. The immediate cause of the apostasy and the dissolution of the primitive Christian church was the presence of "ungodly men" (Jude 4), of "grievous wolves" (Acts 19: 29), of members (so called) who were not converted to Christian ideals. Their interests, the things their standard of living led them to seek after, were not to be found in the activities of the church as constituted by Christ, and they resisted its tendencies, therefore, and sought to reconstruct the church in accordance with their own carnal desires. This is somewhat of a diversion; but still it may be worth while.

The fact that groupings are determined by needs as men evaluate them, plus the fact that there is a certain combination of needs which every normal man feels and seeks to supply, is the fact that determines the combination of functions that characterizes Christian society.

This treatise deals primarily with economic and social questions in their relation to religion. We have already shown the relation of temporal wants to spiritual freedom; we have shown the bearing that economic concerns have upon devotional function. We have not mentioned specifically or specially educational functions, or recreation, or rules of dress, or prophylactics and the like; nevertheless these tastes and desires are taken into account in the terms of Christian association. And with these facts in mind the structure and function of Christian society is designed and promoted in such a way as that all converts to Christian ideals find the full supply of their needs in its doctrines and institutions. Tastes that may become common are cultivated; the common obligation to faithful service is uniformly imposed; and distribution is managed on a basis of equality, so that, viewed from a purely sociological standpoint, the people are alike; and, viewed from an economic standpoint, they receive alike; and thus a unity is effected.

Oneness; oneness of desire and purpose and action, and common rights and guarantees of continuous participation in the benefits of Christian association is the bond of Zion. All of these things taken together constitute "the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love"; it finds expression in "the fellowship of kindred minds" which is like unto "that above"; and being like unto "that above," it prepares its citizenry for "a place in the celestial world."

The Order of Enoch

This term has come into use among Latter Day Saints because of the reputed identity of the system of administration of affairs set forth in modern revelation with the order of society that prevailed in the days of Enoch. The term order is used synonymously with organization; and several organizations, differing in structure and function, at different times, have been given the name, "The Order of Enoch." Its scriptural meaning is in substance: A society of mutually helpful relations promoted for the purpose of fulfilling the law of God in relation to economic concerns. This is inferred from the explanations given in connection with sections 77 and 81, Doctrine and Covenants, to-wit: "The order given of the Lord to Enoch," and "showing the order given to Enoch and the church in his day."

What has been said of "Stewardships" and "Zion" is at once applicable to "The Order of Enoch." No special explanation therefore is required.

The Idler

Idler: "One who idles." Idle: "Idle in all uses rests upon its root meaning, as derived from the Anglo-Saxon idel, which signified vain, empty, useless. Idle thus denotes not primarily the absence of action, but vain action—the absence of useful, effective action: the idle schoolboy may be very actively whittling his desk or tormenting his neighbors. Doing nothing whatever is the secondary meaning of idle."—Standard Dictionary.

Any society can have all the idlers it cares to support. But to maintain idlers is to violate the law of God. "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12. And moreover, "The idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways."—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 5. And again: "The laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—2 Nephi 11: 109.

There is no provision for a common table in Zion at which any and every person may feast, regardless of the character of his activity. The price of the benefits of Christian association is loyalty to the group. It is manifestly absurd for one to ask the privilege of reaping where he has not sown. The frugal and the industrious are not to be burdened with the care of the indolent.

The idler and the laborer: these are words having opposite meanings. The product of the laborer's activities are such as "bread" and "garments"; that is to say, something that contributes to the welfare and comfort of mankind. Labor may be manual or it may be mental. The minister, the business man, and the worker are "laborers together with God." All are to be usefully employed. The school-teacher is as much a laborer, if he is diligent in service, as is the man who tills the soil. But this cannot be said of anyone who idles away his time in speculation or in any form of business activity (so called) whatever that is not a factor in promoting the good of society. "If they labor for money, they shall perish." There are many schemes called "labor" in society and dignified by long usage that must be abandoned by those who wish to establish a Christian discipleship. Just which activities fall into the class of idling may be judged by the relationship they bear to social welfare. Doing good and commanding the labors of others are quite two different kinds of activities, and they produce two opposite effects both upon the character of the individual and upon the outcome of social activity as a whole.

If one has that highly developed sense of moral responsibility referred to under the personal factors in cooperation he will find his way out of the class of "idlers" and into the class of "laborers" as soon as the circumstances of industry will permit. It is the business of the group to afford men an opportunity to engage in honorable pursuits—honorable from the Christian viewpoint.

Usury

In its scriptural signification usury is the practice of taking a payment in any amount in consideration of some loan. (See Nehemiah 5: 7-11.) Whole volumes have been written on this question. Usury presents one of the most difficult of social problems. It is not necessary for us to argue against its practice; it coincides with the general scheme of modern industrial life, and it is doubtful if its elimination would better conditions generally so long as "the other three sides of the fence" are left down.

Usury is not a problem in Zion. The terms of Christian association automatically solve what to society at large is a difficult problem. One needs only to comprehend the law of stewardships to see that, as in the case of every other economic problem, its principles constitute an automatic and effective cure.

The Gathering

It should not seem odd that any people having a purpose to promote its common interests should believe in what is known to us as the gathering. Cooperation demands personal relations; and personal relations require personal contact. No argument is needed to show that cooperation between Missourians and Kansans can be made much more highly profitable and successful from every standpoint than can cooperation between Americans and Australians, residing in their respective homelands. Great distances involve problems of transportation, and delays and other problems, and greatly lessen the value of economic effort.

Nor yet is it singular that a land rich in resources should be selected for a gathering place, because the highest civilization is possible only where resources are abundant. In fact, a fatal weakness would exist in the doctrine of the church if it did not provide for a gathering corresponding to its purposes.

Socialization can take place in a great degree only where people are in close relationships. All such factors in socialization as communication, assimilation, imitation, and consciousness of kind depend upon close personal relationships for their effectiveness. Association makes possible the observation of others' habits of life, and therefore is a strong factor in advancing moral standards.

Moreover, the working of spiritual powers is conditional in part in association. Congregational singing and public prayers and other social-religious functions, such as preaching, all are conditioned in association. "How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation."—1 Corinthians 14: 26. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven," etc. (Acts 2: 1, 2.) Association is favorable to the operation of spiritual forces.

Besides all this, and many other things as well, we have to take into account the fact that Christian men struggle against great odds; the whole world is against them. The presence of a large number of companions always lends courage, and men are strengthened to meet conditions that might otherwise divert them from Christian purposes.

And so each may go on to find in the facts of human experience the ground work for the doctrine of the gathering.

(To be continued.)

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Our Cradle Roll and the Sunday School

One of the developments of the recent conference between the heads of the Sunday School and Women's Departments, touches upon the work of the cradle roll. The superintendent of the Sunday School Department is desirous of bringing the child in the home, from the very moment of its birth, under the influence of the "department of religious education." He has some definite ideas in regard to his responsibilities in the matter, and as women and mothers, interested immeasurably in the all-round welfare of the children, the Women's Department are but eager to cooperate in all movements for good.

In order to "do our bit" along this particular line, we are asking our cradle roll superintendents to report the names and addresses of new babies to the local Sunday school. This will give the latter an opportunity to put over its plans in regard to these tiny, prospective Sunday school pupils.

We have said repeatedly that our interpretation of our responsibility to the child will not end with any one phase of its welfare. We have stated that we are as interested in its spiritual development, its religious instruction, its moral culture, as any others can possibly be. Thus we deem it a privilege to be the agency through which special good shall be brought to the child and its parents.

We have assured the Sunday school superintendent of our hearty cooperation in his program, and feel that our workers will gladly take to the homes of the little ones, any messages intended for the advancement of those whose welfare is dear to us.

Thus it will appear, in the new instructions soon to be sent out to our local workers, that we are asking this additional reporting, viz: that of the newly-born to the local Sunday school. By those who have the enlarged vision of service rendered to the church through the avenue of child welfare, this request will glad be granted, we feel sure. A. A.

A Message From the Church Health Department

The church Health Department takes this opportunity of expressing its opinion in regard to the two additional measures now being introduced into the child welfare work of the Women's Department.

Milk in the Diet of the Growing Child

Milk is an essential food and should be used by all children. It contains food substances which are essential to life. These substances are found in some other foods, but it is much easier to get them in milk.

Some authorities hold that a child should take a pint of milk daily and others claim that a quart of milk a day should be used by each child. The Health Department thinks that it is advisable for each child to take one quart of milk every twenty-four hours.

Milk, of course, cannot replace other foods; for example, it does not contain iron.

Clinics for Preschool Age Children

The Health Department realizes the serious question of the proper care of the preschool age child. A child on entering school ought to be in excellent condition. This cannot be the case unless health authorities and parents recognize the necessity of closely watching the diet and the physical condition of preschool age children.

It is an old idea that children ought to have the childhood diseases while they are children. This is not accepted at all by the scientific world of to-day, for the reason that certain of the childhood diseases definitely predispose to certain serious maladies of adult life. It is essential, then, that parents watch that their children of the preschool age do not develop these diseases.

It is highly important that children be given examinations to learn whether or not they are developing any abnormalities. In recent times this idea of the great need of the preschool child being in excellent condition before entering school has been recognized because the child in its first year of school, in its new environment and trying circumstances, often is definitely interfered with in a physical way. If, however, the child is in a good condition when it starts in school, it will have a less serious reaction to the new environment upon entering school.

The Health Department strongly advises that parents get in touch with any organization that tends to take care of preschool age children, and that they have their children watched by these organizations, and if there be no organizations of that sort in the community, it advises that the parents try to have such organization formed. Let us remember how important it is that the little bodies of the preschool age children should be in excellent condition.

Very sincerely, HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

By G. Leonard Harrington, M. D., Church Physician.

Rural Club Women Set Example

"As every great achievement has its beginning in the heart of some man or woman, so the true accomplishment of the club is not in the deeds of the large organization, but in the unpretentious acts of the many little groups of women that are scattered all over this broad land of ours," said Mrs. John Slaker, of Hastings, president of the Nebraska Federation of Women's Clubs in her address at the council meeting of the general federation which was in session at Salt Lake City.

"About twenty years ago," Mrs. Slaker continued, "out in the sand hills of Nebraska, where the sky line stretches for miles and miles and miles, where earth and sky appear to be so closely mated that one seems to be the breath of the other; while yet the sod house was the rule rather than the exception, a group of women, who craved something more than their daily bread for themselves and their children, met and organized a women's club.

"They lived so far apart that frequently they had to ride 17 and 18 miles, over the open prairie, to the meetings, and some had to ford the Platte River, because it was before the days of bridges in that part of the country. It was from such a place as this that the story came of women being taken to asylums because of the endless monotony of glaring sunshine and level plain, with never a book to read.

"From the first this club did good work, taking up regular and serious study of good books and their authors, and of questions of public interest. Of course the social phase was very important, for to these isolated women, the club supplied their chief social stimulant.

Equip Library

"Soon the need of a circulating library was felt and this heroic group of women, before ever there was a railroad or a town had been laid out, built and equipped a library. It is a well proportioned, airy and well lighted building, 18 by 22, and it started out with some 800 volumes. These were secured in various ways; some were gifts, some were bought with money earned in all conceivable ways. The service was voluntary. I have visited this library within the past few weeks, have spoken to the women of this club in this building and have been entertained at supper within its hospitable walls, for this library serves also as a community hall.

"The railroad has now passed through the place and a thriving little town of about 150 surrounds the library. It has been enlarged to double its original size and the book shelves now contain 1,600 well chosen books. I was pleased to find among them one by our General Federation president. This building would serve as a community house for a town many times the size of this one, and when I hear the club women of towns of 2,000 or 3,000 people, bewailing that they must keep their club limited because they cannot find any place to meet, my thought goes swiftly to Keystone.

Build Church

"But, notable as it is, this library is not this club's greatest achievement. As soon as the library was completed the need was manifest for a place of worship and the club decided to build a church. This church enjoys the distinction of being the only one of its kind in the United States, and, with one exception, the only one of its kind in the world. It is both Catholic and Protestant; there is an altar at one end and a pulpit in the other, and the seats are reversible. It was necessary to secure a special dispensation in order that the church might be dedicated. The door is at the side and just opposite is a small alcove containing a stove.

"For years this quaint little edifice has been used for the purpose for which it was intended. At the time that I visited it services were being held by Presbyterians and Lutherans on alternate Sundays, while Saturday morning, once a month, a priest from Ogallala says mass for his Catholic flock.

"This club is still doing excellent work and is taking up the study of citizenship with enthusiasm. About half a dozen of the charter members are still active and several of the new members are daughters of the original 30. The membership is unlimited.

"The accomplishments of this town are typical. I am sure that each of our States has its Keystone."

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXXV

The Church and Her Children

1. The author divides the church into what three classes?
2. What attitude should the church take towards the children?
3. What should the service include to interest the children?
4. Why does the author think that "junior services" are not satisfactory?
5. What type of sermon appeals to the child?
6. How may worship be expressed in song by children?
7. What is the possibility of the children's choir?
8. Why does the author favor "The church school" and disfavor "the Bible school?"
9. How has the Sunday school become a real school? (1) as to its aims for the children (2) as to its aims for the teachers.
10. In any school of what importance is the teacher?
11. What is the coming attitude of the church towards its teachers?
12. Explain how the social nature of children should be used in religious training.
13. What is the proper method of conducting organizations, such as Boy Scouts, etc.?
14. Why do we expect the child to come naturally into a place in the church?
15. Of what value is a friend to our boys and girls?
16. What type of "friend" should the church school supply for its boys and girls?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Reflection of Waimea

Oh! What a delight it is to be in the country where we can enjoy that simplicity of life which brings joy to our highest aspirations. What beautiful lessons Mother Nature can teach us, of life and all its beauty! With her there is ever peace and harmony; no useless tasks undertaken. Each move is for a purpose, and how patiently and slowly she works to produce her triumphs. Everything is done step by step, until we have unfolded before our eyes a perfect piece of work from her busy hands.

In just watching a hibiscus hedge which was obstructed in its growth because of weeds which were choking it, we found that just as soon as the weeds were removed, the leaves began to spring forth, the buds to blossom, and now we have the perfect red hibiscus flowers! So we, too, can learn in our daily lives to weed out the useless thoughts and deeds, and conserve our energy for the accomplishing of greater and more beautiful tasks.

We find in the simple lives of the natives of these tropical isles many beautiful traits of character exemplified. They are characterized by love and humility. Their faces express real joy, and they are happy, contented, and free from care and worry. A little wooden home surrounded by flowers of various hues, a little fish and poi for their meal, seem to suffice for their needs. Could we but be able to so simplify our lives, we too might keep our bodies strong and our love of life joyous and serene.

There seems to be no striving in their lives; they are content to live each day counting their blessings. While here in these lovely islands, it has been our good fortune to learn to know and love these people, and to appreciate their philosophy of life, which is ever a joyous one. If we become weary of the routine of life we but need a complete change of environment to quicken eye and interest, to fill again the world with color! Everything then appears to us in its true light, a real place of glory, and we find Nature dyed and steeped in colorful hues, each little bush and flower delighting us anew, and fresh interests creeping into our consciousness.

So must we try to live in our daily life that we can fill each moment with joy and happiness that will bless others with whom we come in contact, as lives of radiancy, sincerity, and beauty must ever do.

CHRISTIANA WALLER.

WAIIMEA, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Friendly Months

The maiden April, wistful-eyed and fair,
Has faintly tinted cheeks and sunny hair,
And smiling whispers, "Ever, where I go
The shy buds stir and open, row on row."

The queenly August beckons—"Come, my friend,
Along my path a thousand blossoms blend,
While every meadow royal gifts must bring,
And every bird my gladsome praises sing."

But gay November, scarlet-cheeked and slim,
Has saucy breezes pipe a song for him—
"The white road stretches far, a joyous way, Oh, follow, follow on a bright blue day!"

—Alix Thorn.

Eat Apples

Cooked apples are a very wholesome and satisfying dessert and are especially good in families where there are young children. If one has never tried it, it is hard to realize how much the apples are improved by cooking in an enameled ware baking pan. In this pan they can be cooked slowly without being darkened in color or acquiring a metallic taste.

A variety may be introduced by stuffing the hole in the apple from which the core has been taken with stoned dates or prunes. Sliced figs are also good, but these should be soaked before being baked in the apple. If a few drops of honey are poured over the apples a few moments before they are taken from the oven, much will be added in richness and flavor.

Women workers in a new silk mill to be erected at Hope-well, Virginia, will be taught to do their work efficiently by twenty-four girls who have just returned from Belgium, where they made a careful study of science of artificial silk making.

Mrs. Bertha F. Drabelle has been appointed building inspector in Saint Louis, with special supervision over department stores and other establishments where many women are employed.

At the age of seventy-six years, Sarah Bernhardt, the famous French actress, manages her own theater and directs the painting of all the scenery.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Edited by G. Leonard Harrington, M. D., Church Physician

Scarlet Fever

Scarlet fever is one of the very contagious diseases. It is easy to catch, but not easy to cure. Don't make the mistake of allowing all your children to get it, when one has it, on the theory that it is better to have it all over with at one time. Children are not the only ones attacked, as persons of all ages may contract it. In most cases, but not all, a person who has once had it does not get it again.

How to Recognize Scarlet Fever

The child may have scarlet fever if it shows these symptoms: If it is tired, restless, and out of sorts. Usually there is either a chill, vomiting, or convulsions. Any or all of these symptoms may be present. The child develops a high fever, with the skin dry and very hot. The tongue is furred, and under this white covering is red and swollen. Frequently the child complains of sore throat. In ordinary cases these early signs are followed by rash and fever.

Care of the Patient

The patient must receive medical treatment and careful nursing during the entire illness. Without these, grave chances are being taken with the sick person's life and future health, as disorders of the heart, kidneys, and ears may set in. Careful nursing is particularly necessary after the skin has peeled and the patient begins to recover. The doctor's instructions as to diet, clothing, and other precautions must be followed to the letter.

How to Prevent Its Spread

Whenever the first symptoms are noticed the child should at once be kept away from other people, and the doctor should be called at once. Place the child in a room by itself if at all possible. The person who takes care of the patient must change her outer clothes when entering and leaving the sick room. This can easily be done by using a separate loose gown or kimono for this purpose. The hands and face must be washed with antiseptic soap and water when leaving the sick room.

All the saliva and discharges from the patient's nose, mouth, and throat are infectious, and should be received into pieces of cotton gauze or old linen and carefully burned. The person ill must have his own eating utensils. These dishes and all clothing worn by the patient must be disinfected and must not be washed with dishes and clothing worn by the other members of the family.

Children that have scarlet fever must not return to school before a period of six weeks has passed. In no case should children who have had scarlet fever and whose skin is peeling be permitted to enter the schoolroom or mingle with other children. Great spread of the disease and many deaths are the result of lax observance of this rule. To keep your own children well you must help keep others' well.—Article printed by the Red Cross Society.

Whooping Cough

In the beginning the child shows signs of an ordinary cold, with running of the nose, slight fever, and a dry cough. The eyes become somewhat bloodshot. In a week the cough becomes worse and coughing fits begin, ending in the unmistakable "whoop." Sometimes the whoop is not present, but even in these cases great care must be taken. In mild cases the child will have four or five coughing fits a day. In severe cases, many more.

Whooping cough is very catching. Mothers should be careful to keep their children away from others who have the disease. And mothers with children who are ill with whooping cough should be equally careful not to allow their children to play with well children, even until some time after the whoop has disappeared, as the disease can still be transmitted.

All matter that comes from the mouth and nose should be received in old linen or rags and burned. Separate cups, glasses, and eating utensils should be kept for use of the sick child.

The child vomits frequently during the disease. As a result many children lose weight and become very weak, a condition receptive for contracting tuberculosis, pneumonia, and other serious ailments. Give the child no heavy food, milk and eggs being especially good. An egg well beaten in milk should be given it each time the child loses its meal. See that it gets plenty of fresh air. As it is difficult to do this inside the house, it should be taken out into the back yard, or into a near-by park. Keep the room well aired, night and day.

As soon as your child shows the first signs of this disease, go to your doctor for advice.—Article printed by the Red Cross Society.

Smallpox

A community or a family that has a smallpox epidemic these days has only itself to blame. In fact, since the discovery of the preventive powers of vaccination, more than one hundred years ago, smallpox has become one of the few diseases which it is absolutely possible to control.

A smallpox epidemic may well be regarded as a preventable disgrace to a community.

Smallpox is essentially a cold weather disease. A mild epidemic was predicted for this winter, due to the increasing number of cases in Canada the past two years. The mildness of the present winter, however, did much to check its progress.

In discussing smallpox there is but one thing to say, "Vaccination." In communities where vaccination is compulsory and the law is enforced it is practically nonexistent. Vaccination should be done about the fourth to sixth month of the baby's life. In 90 per cent of the cases the first vaccination "takes." In most cases the first vaccination protects a person throughout life, but in some people the immunity dies out in a few years; but the size of the scar is not a true indication of the need for additional vaccination. The safest rule to follow is that of vaccination in babyhood, in adolescence, and again in middle age. If smallpox breaks out in a community, however, you should be vaccinated again at once, regardless of the number of previous times. If it "takes," it shows you were susceptible to infection and would likely have contracted smallpox without the vaccination.

So what's the use of taking a chance on the pest house and a pitted face the rest of your life?—Article printed by the Red Cross Society.

The Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention will be held in Kansas City, Missouri, June 21 to 27, 1922. This will be a joint meeting with the World Sunday School Association. The basis of representation is one for every four thousand enrollment, but eight thousand are expected to attend. Canada reports over 10,000 Sunday schools with 94,204 teachers, 904,513 pupils. The United States reports 145,957 Sunday schools, with 1,583,491 officers and teachers and 16,131,733 pupils.

There will be a great exhibit of Sunday school supplies and working tools and there will also be a historical display of the development of Sunday school helps beginning with the uniform lesson of a hundred years ago.

The Hilo Daily Tribune of Wednesday, October 12, was made a special number to welcome the World's Press delegates. Among the churches of Hilo, we note our church with Gomer J. Reeves presiding elder. It is a very pretty edifice and appears to be the only church in Hilo without a steeple or bell. The members are prompt in attending on time and do not depend on the bell. They have painted it and preserved it in good order. Among the county officials we note A. A. Hapai as county clerk. Brother Hapai is a priest in the Hilo Branch. He visited Independence very briefly in August, 1920, but left early to catch his train.

LETTERS

"Shall We Have Battleships or Friendships?"

Profitable disarmament conference held in Des Moines.

This was the slogan for a very remarkable conference held in Des Moines, Iowa, October 28, in protest against the present wasteful expenditure of Federal funds and against the continuation of the preparation for war.

Thousands of people were in attendance, from every corner of the State. One felt very much the atmosphere that must have prevailed in Colonial times when protests were sent to King George against excessive taxation. Almost every speaker made remarks that would have been considered treason in times of war.

Speakers from various departments of our national life appeared on the program; President of the American Farm Federation, State Labor Commissioner, Commander of the American Legion, President of National Federation of Women's Clubs, the Reverend C. S. Medbury, and Governor Kendall of Iowa. Like a clarion call one note ran through the speech of each and every speaker, that a halt must be called on the unwise administration of our national funds, and this unprecedented program of preparation for future wars must be stopped.

Appalling statistics were given, which show that America, like other nations, has gone war mad. Out of every one hundred dollars that are paid into our National treasury, ninety-two and six tenths dollars are paid for past wars and the preparation for future ones, while only one and three tenths dollars are spent for education and research work. What a mortgage upon mankind!

In 1913 America's national indebtedness was one billion dollars; at the close of the war it was twenty-five billion. England was bonded in 1913 for three billion, but at the signing of the Armistice it had grown to thirty-nine billion; while France for the same period had increased from thirteen to forty-six billion, which is half of the wealth of France. This is but one of the aftermaths of war.

It was estimated that one superdreadnaught costs our Government more than the combined overhead expense of all the colleges and universities of our country. But the most startling fact revealed was that in 1919, at the very close of the World War and while we were anticipating an era of universal peace, the United States spent nineteen million more for increased armament than England and Japan combined. This is the result of competitive armament. Most speakers plead for complete disarmament, but the Commander of the American Legion urged that we disarm man for man, gun for gun, and ship for ship.

Perhaps the most stirring address was made by the Reverend Medbury, who for his Christian character has made his influence felt beyond the boundaries of his State. We love the man regardless of his creed. He said that ninety per cent of war was psychology, and as quickly as we can convert the thoughts of war into terms of peace, can universal peace be ushered in. He asked his audience to cease to think in national terms, but to think in terms of world humanity; to think of countries, not by various tongues or territorial boundary lines, but as our neighbors, our brothers. He said the most obnoxious words used in our country today were alien and foreigner, for if we could go back a few generations we would find that we, too, were aliens. We proudly boast of the glory and independence of America, but he asked us to pause a moment and think how dependent we were on other nations; the war proved this. He painted a very beautiful picture, showing how meager indeed would be our lives if we could take from them the influence that had been brought into them by alien nations. What would it mean to us if we could take out of our experience the influence of England's great contribution, Tennyson, Shakespeare, Newton, Watts, Victoria, Kipling? We can only feel how much we are indebted to France when we recall such names as Lafayette, Joan of Arc, Hugo, and Bernhard.

Likewise we owe a debt of gratitude to Italy for her Dante, Michaelangelo, Marconi, and the immortal Caruso. When we are listening to the beautiful tones of Paderewski let us not forget crushed and starving Poland. Nor when we read the products of the pen of Tolstoi should we forget that bleeding, struggling Russia gave birth to him.

So he urged his audience in the name of true Americanism and out of respect for the contribution of other countries never again to let pass their lips such names as "Wop" and "Dago."

As a result of the conference, resolutions of protest were sent to our representatives and senators against this awful waste of money, and asking them to use their influence against it.

Other resolutions were sent to President Harding, congratulating him for taking the initiative in inviting the representatives of all nations to convene at Washington Armistice Day to discuss limitation of armament, and to assure him that Iowa stood solidly behind him in all such measures. If this Washington conference is successful a burden will be lifted from the backs of mankind, and a star of hope will shine into the darkened lives across the waters.

From our country went forth the greatest declaration of human rights to the world; so how fitting it would be if from here could be sent forth a greater declaration against this wanton waste of war.

Napoleon, it was, who at the close of his restless career said, "Peace founded upon brute force cannot last." History has repeatedly proved the truthfulness of this.

The time has come for concerted action by the leading nations of the world in limiting armament and relieving the people from staggering military burdens. The era of universal peace may not yet be here, but it augurs well for the coming of that day when public sentiment is once aroused against the folly and absurdity of war.

In the heat of debate Lincoln once said, "Without public opinion nothing can succeed; with it nothing can fail."

MARGARET DAVIS.

From Onset Reunion to Maine Woods

An interesting account of experiences in the East.

In this eastern country the schools generally start right after Labor Day; consequently that is the end of the vacation period. Labor Day was a busy time at our reunion grounds at Onset. Many of the Saints were down for the last time this year, so Tuesday the place was practically deserted.

Our reunion this year was larger than ever. There are now sixty cottages on the grounds, owned by members only. These buildings cost from four hundred dollars to three thousand dollars. Several of the Saints make the reunion grounds their permanent dwelling place.

Quite a number arrive at the grounds right after school classes and remain until Labor Day. It has been suggested, by Bishop Fisher that we have a teacher for the children during this period, and a competent instructor for the sisters along the lines advocated by the Women's Department.

During the reunion there were 357 adults and 97 children in the cottages, besides 252 visitors. There were 34 tents, containing 128 adults and 55 children; 47 visitors. Thirty-three persons roomed off the grounds, making a total of 670 in attendance, which at times was increased to a thousand.

The new 50 by 75 foot tabernacle, just completed before the reunion commenced, was a great blessing. It is perfectly adapted for the purpose. The acoustic properties are splendid. It can be thrown open all around, making it cool and comfortable. It is mosquito proof; has a sloping cement floor and a large platform running the entire width of the building. A dozen more cottages have been ordered for next year, so we evidently shall have quite a summer colony at Onset, Massachusetts, every year.

I have never attended a reunion where the willingness to help was so much in evidence. That spirit affected even the children. Isn't it a fine thing when everybody is filled with enthusiasm to be useful and serviceable?

As the meals are served to individuals as they pass the serving counter, there is a constant stream passing through the commissary. This method made it impossible to ask a blessing upon the meals. Doctor Sinclair, who is something of a poet as well as a physician, was appealed to. He gave us the choice of half a dozen verses, and we chose the following:

"Oh God who giveth all things good,
Unto thy needy children here,
We ask thy blessing on this food,
As well as on thy children dear."

Brother Herbert Johnson led the singing of this to the tune of the doxology, as the line was formed before entering the commissary. (The line never failed to form promptly!)

The smaller branches contributed splendidly in talent and service to the success of the reunion. Lucie Sears, in charge of the Women's Department, and Sister Ross, a kindergarten teacher, in charge of the children, came from the little New Bedford Branch. So did Brother and Sister Cross, who did such effectual work in caring for the tabernacle. Doris Giovanetti, the district nurse at Plymouth, and Edna Nickerson, very creditably represented one phase of the women's work in the well-carried-out dialogue, which dealt with the care of the baby. They are from one of the smallest branches in the district. Fall River was represented musically. Sister Randall contributed talent from Haverhill. Attleboro is a hive of talent and displayed some of it at the reunion. The larger branches furnished stenographers, business men, and medical skill. Every branch in the district did its part.

Among the ministry present were Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Bishop B. R. McGuire, A. B. Phillips, Richard Baldwin, E. J. Gleazer, John Sheehy, Arthur Koehler, O. L. Thompson, Newman Wilson, W. Hartnell, George Robley. We were pleased to have John Smith, late of Lamoni, with us. Joseph Luff, wife, daughter, and two nieces were a welcome party of "Westerners." Brother Luff was in unusually good form when he occupied at the sacred desk. Walter Smith and wife, and Brother A. Max Carmichael made us a flying visit. Bishop Zimmermann and son Will, Brother and Sister Albert Hoxie, and Brother and Sister Paul Craig were some of the visitors.

While the reunion was on, Plymouth, thirty miles from Onset, was having its tercentenary celebration of the landing of the Pilgrims. There was a great parade and then the spectacular pageant given at night in which 1,400 persons participated. To light up the immense stage, one hundred powerful searchlights were required. The field stage was four hundred feet wide and four hundred and fifty feet deep. It had to be illuminated from a distance of one hundred and fifty feet, requiring 300 kilowatts, enough to operate 13,000 ordinary house lights. It required fifteen miles of rubber covered wire. These figures give some conception of the magnitude of the electrical plant.

The pageant sought to illustrate by the spoken word, pantomime, processions, etc., the Pilgrim spirit, and the cause of leaving the Old World. The pageant master was wondrously successful in dramatically depicting the "Spirit of the Pilgrims."

A reproduction of the Mayflower lay at anchor out in the harbor and was part of the "property." One is filled with wonder at the bravery of the one hundred Pilgrims who crossed the deep in such a small vessel.

Norsemen were introduced in the first scene. I understand there were some objections to this. I suppose there would also have been objections to introducing the Jaredites and Nephites!

There were twenty-four scenes and the grand finale with fifteen scenes. So, these sturdy pioneers, eventually reduced by privation and disease to fifty souls, after three hundred years have passed away since they landed on Plymouth Rock, have furnished inspiration for possibly the most elaborate and remarkable pageant ever staged on American soil. Among the notables attending the two and a half hour picturings were President Harding and some of his cabinet.

Plymouth Rock was removed years ago to a spot near the center of the town; later I believe to the museum grounds, then back to its original setting on the beach, except it was elevated eight or ten feet above its original spot, as a pier had been run out into the harbor, and the beach filled in, making the rock high and dry. Now the Government has dug out the pier, torn down the shacks around the harbor, lowered the rock to where it was thought to have been originally, and the sea again has been permitted to ebb and flow as in the Pilgrim days.

The quotation from John Robinson's address as he bade the Pilgrims farewell before they sailed for the New World, is printed on the official program, thus: "I am very confident the Lord has more truth and light yet to break forth out of his holy word. It is not possible that full perfection of knowledge should break forth at once." More truth and knowledge did break forth, and in the land the Pilgrims helped to establish. There may not be elaborate pageants staged to commemorate the sacrificings and the giving of their lives of the noble men and women whom the Lord used to bring more "light and truth from his holy word," but they will be among those of whom it will be asked: "Who are those arrayed in white?" The answer will be: "These are they who came up through great trial and tribulation."

The Macedonian cry came from Maine, "Come over and help us." The Presidency and Twelve heard and the writer had the privilege of visiting three branches in the Eastern Maine District. Sixteen of us from the Massachusetts District motored to Jonesport to attend their district conference. The journey through the gorgeous autumn Maine woods was an experience never to be forgotten. For several miles the trees met overhead, the ground was covered with autumn leaves, the sides of the trees were a riot of color, the arch over us was a rainbow of leaves, and it seemed we were riding in a glorious sunlit tunnel of color.

There was a great valley at the end of the "tunnel," which made us think of the Grand Canyon of Colorado. The color was not from rocks, but from the trees—spruce, fir, hemlock, and maple. The beautiful, pointed firs were ever a subject for admiration, and looked like majestic cathedral spires. The trees and woods were "God's first temples."

We received a real Maine welcome. The business meeting passed off pleasantly. Saturday evening a full house greeted Doctor Sinclair, who expounded the Scriptures to an attentive audience, winding up with some charts illustrating cell life and its wonderful development. On Sunday, Bishop M. C. Fisher spoke entertainingly on the aims of the church, the instability of man and his institutions, and the "foundation of God standeth sure." The prayer meeting before the sermon was characterized by a very fine spirit throughout. In the afternoon, Elder O. L. Thompson, one of our very promising young missionaries, held the large audience's attention while he eloquently and convincingly showed the love of God in his dealings with the souls of men. In the evening every available place in the church was used, and some had to be turned away. The writer related some experiences he has had as one of the laborers in the vineyard. It was estimated there were nearly five hundred persons in the audience. The meetings continued during the week, with good interest, the young people being in evidence in large numbers. What impressed the writer time after time was the good deportment of the audience. There is considerable talent along musical lines in the branch, and they are fortunate in having a good leader.

I had the privilege of visiting and preaching to the Beal Island Saints on Sunday following the conference. They are a devoted little band there and have a nice church, which is a model of neatness.

On Monday Brother Thompson and the writer went to Kennebec. They have a good, substantial church there, presided over by Elder Manchester, at whose home we were made welcome and taken care of by Sister Manchester. We had good audiences there and occupied for three evenings, then moved over to the Addison Branch, that old standby, Brother David Joy, taking us off the hands of our young Brother Davis at Jonesboro. Sister Joy made good her reputation as a "mother to the missionaries." The weather ordered us not to preach that night, and the "vacation" was rather acceptable. Brother and Sister Gay, of Jonesboro, made it possible for us to take a seventy-five mile ride through some wild woods over good roads. We saw that which "delighted the eye and enlivened the soul."

Services in the schoolhouse at Addison to a fair audience. The Lord has a faithful little band of Saints there.

The body of one of our fallen soldier boys having arrived from France on Saturday evening, it was necessary to arrange for the Sunday services elsewhere in Jonesport than in the church, as the body was placed there until the funeral services, which will be held on Tuesday afternoon. The owners of the opera house kindly permitted us to use it and a splendid audience greeted the writer as he tried to hold out a glorious hope here and in the resurrection by obedience to the gospel. This closed the two weeks' special services. It was a great privilege to meet the many fine Maine Saints at these meetings, and to partake of their hospitality. I had the opportunity of enjoying what so many of the ministry have enjoyed, sitting on the old woodbox in the cozy corner of the Rogers social center kitchen.

My appointment has been changed to the Saint Louis District, so I am getting ready to leave for my new field. The church has no finer or more loyal Saints than are to be found in this eastern country. I shall leave them with regret, but hope I have been of some benefit to them in my ministry.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

Visiting the Indians in Camp

The Lamanites in social gathering remind the writer of Israelites in camp.

We left Independence two weeks ago, with some reluctance on my part, yet we did not look back as Lot's wife.

We had a lovely trip, good roads, fair weather, and very little trouble with the car. When the fan belt broke we simply took a nail for a needle and violin string for a thread and sewed it up. We always found a way out of our difficulties.

As we rode along seeing Nature in her autumn costume, some fields brown, some green, and foliage of so many bright hues of red, yellow, brown, and even blue, we were almost able to put self in the background and forget our fears and worries.

We have been fortunate in a number of ways. When we arrived we inquired about a house for rent. People said there were none in the town. But we heard the druggist had sold his business and was moving away. We went to his house and they said they had decided to rent it to no one, but would lock it up. The contract is signed, however, giving us the house for six months at reasonable rent.

Next we looked for our brethren and found them out east of town in camp. The Otoes were entertaining the Arapahoes and Pawnees. When we rode into camp we thought, "How like the Israelite camp of old." The tents formed a large circle. On one side were the tents of the Arapahoes. The Pawnees occupied a third of the circle, and the Otoes another. There were about one hundred and fifty tents in all. Here and there one could see an old warrior's tent or a tepee of some honored man. The front pieces of some were beaded from the ground to the very top, beaded circles or stars on the sides, and decorations even in the rear. In the center of the grounds was a large meeting tent.

All necessary work was done in the forenoons, and such sports as, tug of war, shinny, horse-racing, and lassoing goats were the afternoon programs. Some of the boys were experts at lassoing, and many of the goats were experts on jumping through the lasso. They were to chase the goat on horseback, lasso him, dismount, and bind his legs together in twenty seconds. Everyone was present to see the goat roping. The ponies were the dearest things! It took some effort to hold them till the signal was given.

An Indian dance was held each night in the big tent, and between dances the Otoes gave gifts to the visiting tribes.

Sometimes women dance, too, but often it is men only who dance. Their costumes were beautiful; made of satin, beads, and feathers, with sleigh bells around the ankles. The only musical instrument used in the dances was the drum. Eight drummers seated themselves around the drum, each with his drumstick, and they all beat it at once. At intervals the drummers would sing, too. It was all very fascinating and I saw nothing offensive about it.

A man of the Otoe tribe died of pneumonia during the meeting, and the relatives gave all of his possessions away to visiting friends the day of the funeral. Five horses, a wagon load of furniture, blankets, trunks, and dishes were brought to the door of the meeting tent and were given away just before going to the cemetery.

We have often heard that an Indian never cries. It may be true that they are not over-emotional, but they do cry, and I saw a full-blood Indian woman faint.

The last day of the meeting was the "big give-away." The Arapahoes and Pawnees were squatted on the ground in a big semicircle. Each came to the center as his or her name was called. Some of the women came singing, to receive her pony or blanket or whatever it happened to be. All were carefree and happy, not worrying about strikes or anything else.

I will close this letter before it gets too lengthy or you may say it is "pi skunia." MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN.
REDROCK, OKLAHOMA.

The Reward of Persistent Labor

The following is an extract from a letter to the Presidency, written by Brother C. E. Wight, one of the Lamoni stake presidency. We see no reason why it should not be given publicity and public credit be given to Brother Wilbur E. Prall and his excellent wife who are mentioned in connection with the work that has been done at Davis City, Iowa. The work in Davis City for a number of years was in a deplorable condition; the church all but abandoned; the proposition seemed hopeless. This brother and his wife, by humble, persistent, continuous, and devout labor over a long period of time, have brought the work to the point indicated in the extract. Brother Wight writes as follows:

"Last Sunday evening I concluded a two-week series of services at Davis City. Knowing this place as you do, you will be glad to know that on the first Sunday night there was an attendance of 150. During the week, exclusive of Sunday evenings, the attendance averaged slightly better than fifty. The second Sunday night there were 175. The week-day average for that week was around seventy. On the last Sunday evening we had 200. I believe that as never before prejudice has been broken down in this place. I attribute the steady development in this town to the constant and untiring efforts of Brother Wilbur E. Prall and his wife. In the year and a half that they have been in charge of the work there, they have never missed an appointment. If weather conditions made driving a car impossible, they have walked to Togo, taken the seven o'clock train to Davis City, stayed there all night, and come home the following morning."

Baker-Black Debate

The Baker-Black debate at Broken Bow, Oklahoma, closed October 18. Church propositions and the usual line of argument were followed. Elder Black did not sling mud as some do. He tried to meet the argument in a way that appears to be fair. At the same time one must keep close tab all the way through. At first he denied A. Campbell, or rather his writings, and said he had none of Campbell's books in his library. I noticed, however, that he was very familiar with the different items of history that Brother Baker used from their books. Near the close of the debate, he acknowledged the work of Campbell.

Brother Baker proved himself a Christian gentleman and a true defender of the faith. He was able to meet all argument in a fair manner, pleasing to the Saints and to all lovers of right. We had in our favor all who believe in "Holy Ghost" religion.

The Church of Christ people seemed to me very selfish in taking up a collection for Elder Black and his moderator, calling on that vast audience and making quite a show, but few outside of their own membership contributed.

After the debate was over, we received contributions from those not of the Saints. The people were very friendly and of kind disposition towards us at the close of the debate. One was baptized by us during the debate.

The debate was a success. One of our old-time members who had attended several of them said it was the most successful in argument he had ever attended.

Brother Baker went from Broken Bow to Henryetta, Oklahoma, where he had just closed a debate with Elder Black before he came to Broken Bow. He went to hold services for them at their request. Eastern Oklahoma has taken on new life; quite a number of baptisms this summer.

Money is scarce. Cotton, which is the money crop, was very light on account of the boll weevil, about one bale to each ten acres.

Elders Davis, Simmons, and Sharp were in attendance at the debate part of the time. They are live wires.

DIERKS, ARKANSAS.

J. W. JACKSON.

Blessings Received Through Prayer

At the present time there is a lady evangelist in our city practicing divine healing with some remarkable results. While I firmly believe our creed is all truth, and embraces the good that is found in all doctrines, a great many times we fail to live up to our opportunities, "for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." While attending one of the above evangelistic services, I was much impressed with the zeal and faith of the people.

Having suffered several years with a pain above my eye, I recently had my case diagnosed by several physicians. They advised the wearing of glasses as a remedy. Previous treatments and advice, along with the glasses, gave temporary relief. After several months the pain returned.

While listening several times to the testimonies and faith expressed by those not of our faith, I felt my unworthiness as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ. I thought that I should have much more faith than other people, after being reared in the church since early childhood. I decided to approach the throne of God, acknowledge my weakness, and offer my life to the service of others.

As I wished to be alone, I went to the schoolhouse where I am teaching and spent several hours in prayer. Before leaving home, I put my glasses away, knowing that God would bless me according to my faith. The pain has not returned, and I know that God will help me inasmuch as I conform my life to his will.

We often find God directing us in his own kind way without any outburst or visible manifestation, but through the still, quiet voice of the Holy Spirit. We know that good is being accomplished by the sectarian world, but it makes us realize our responsibility, for the greater the responsibility, the more is expected from us.

My earnest prayer is for the youth of the church, as I sincerely believe that young men and women are being converted to God, and are consecrating their lives for service; eager to assist and have part in the redemption of Zion.

DAVID T. LEWIS.

FULTON, IOWA, October 31, 1921.

Editors Herald: We are still at work in the Master's cause. We keep on with our Sunday school work and church work also, and try at least to hold our own. We are trying to let our light shine.

The reunion was an uplift to the work of our branch and district as well. There were eight precious souls brought into the church here of late which we hope will be useful and be a help to others outside of the branch. Two of these were married ladies, the rest were all young women, two of whom were school-teachers. There are others very friendly to the work.

On September 9 my son Clarence, his wife and daughter, my wife, and I started in my son's car for Lamoni and Independence. We got to my son's at noon, Saturday, near Lamoni. We barely got there when the president of the Andover Branch, Brother Stoll, phoned for me to speak next morning and my son at the evening hour, which we gladly did. But what changes since we were there before! Some have gone over to the other side who were useful, and others have moved away, either to Lamoni or Independence.

We started on Tuesday for Independence, arriving the next day, as the roads were very muddy on account of the rains. We passed through Cameron, by way of Liberty to Kansas City. Surely the Lord made no mistake when he designated Missouri and Independence as the center place for the Saints to gather. What lovely land for miles!

We were at Independence about six days and attended Group 10 prayer meeting. Attended church on Enoch Hill, and by the courtesy of Bishop Becker were permitted to see the land that the bishop had bought with the Christmas offering. The land looked good to us and it should make beautiful homes for the worthy Saints. It did us much good to know that the Christmas money was wisely spent.

We attended prayer meeting on Sunday at the Stone Church, then Sunday school where we were shown through the school. Sister W. W. Smith, in charge of the smaller children, was surely an inspiration to us. There were one hundred and twenty classes, twelve hundred and ninety-six in attendance; the collection was above twenty-nine dollars. What a lovely orchestra, and how orderly the Sunday school left the room by the music, and again the regathering for preaching!

Then Sunday afternoon we attended a military funeral of a young man that was brought back from France. He had given his life for freedom.

Sunday night we attended at the South Side Church and will say that all these services were well attended; good interest was manifested everywhere. Independence is surely a good place to take the young people, as there is work for them to do, and service is what we render.

Some who have moved down there from our district are well pleased; would not want to live back here again in their scattered condition. But we have a work to do here yet, so will try to do our duty and be more energetic and try harder to bring the gospel before the people.

One thing we noticed, that the bishops have their hands full at present. They need our aid in different ways. Let us help. This trip surely did us much good. JOHN HEIDE.

Lebanon as a Fruitful Field

What good government did for a region north of Palestine.

The twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah has always been of interest to the Saints, and anything that will assist in the understanding of the chapter may prove of value. In my research last summer I came across the following quotation which may assist in the understanding of the seventeenth verse of the chapter:

"Syria, the region extending from the Taurus Mountains to Egypt and from the desert to 'the Great Sea,' needs no identification. It is the land of the patriarchs and prophets and apostles—the Holy Land.' Its population numbers about three and a half millions, of Semitic origin, speaking the Arabic language, and yet with so many races intermingled through the centuries of the various conquests and occupations that the people cannot claim any one race as their own. Greek, Roman, and European Crusaders have all blended with the ancient Semitic stock to produce the Syrians of to-day, whom Lord Cromer, in his Memoirs, termed 'the cream of the East.'

"In Syria was the one green spot of Turkey—the Lebanon Mountains. In 1860, because of massacres, the European Powers insisted that these mountains be made autonomous, and since that date this little district has been a living demonstration of what good government will produce and of what the people of the land are capable of becoming.

"The steep mountain sides have been terraced to a height of 4,000 feet and planted to olives, figs, and vines. Taxes have been low, safety to person and property secured, good roads built and kept in repair. The people have constructed more comfortable homes and have sent their sons to schools and colleges.

"The story of the achievement of Lebanon and its sons during these sixty years of autonomy would be a thrilling narrative in itself. Now that autonomy has been taken away, the Lebanon is prostrate in famine."—"Under the Heel of the Turk," by William H. Hall, in The National Geographic Magazine, July, 1918, vol. 34, pp. 60, 61.

Yours truly,

ROY L. ROBERTS.

Presentation in Northern California

Elder C. W. Hawkins receives gifts from the branches of the district.

In response to one of those appealing, silver-lined, gilt-edge invitations understood by members of the missionary force, from Elder E. S. Chase, pastor of and acting in behalf of San Jose Branch of California, the writer on Saturday, October 22, boarded one of those modern chariots of which Nahum probably never dreamed—being so different in so many respects from the war chariots in use in the siege and subjugation of Nineveh of which he prophesied—and carried to the above-named city, objectively to be in attendance at an important function upon the morrow.

After a very enjoyable evening and night's sleep at the beautiful home and with the family of said brother, we repaired to the church on the corner of Spencer Avenue and Grant Street in time for the Sunday school under the superintendency of Brother Gilbert.

After this Brother Chase took the chair and conducted a service quite unique in some respects, with a program especially impromptu, but with keen, entertaining interest. There were congregational singing, anthem, solo, addresses by Brethren Harris and Gilbert, interspersed with explanations from Brother Chase, which did not explain concerning the mysterious conspiracy involving all the branches of Northern California District.

The climax was reached when the victims were located and the whole plot laid bare by Brother Chase as he presented to Brother Hawkins, late district president, and his faithful wife, a substantial tribute of affection, appreciation, and good will contributed by all the branches of the district. The address of presentation was a happy combination of the humorous and serious, keeping the audience in doubt as to whether they should laugh or cry. The response of Brother Hawkins was in hastily but well chosen terms and was well received, the whole service being of the kind which makes one realize how good it is to be bound together by ties superior to church regulations only. Fraternally,

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.

H. J. DAVISON.

Central Michigan Conference

Gone into history is our Central Michigan district conference which convened at Beaverton, September 29, 30, and October 1, 2. A spiritual time was enjoyed by the four hundred who were in attendance.

The Religio and Sunday school conventions were held Friday, their respective district officers in charge. An interesting and instructive period ensued, with the spirit of unity prevailing.

Brother Matthew Umphrey, district president, called conference to order Saturday morning, and the first meeting was a prayer service which indeed repaid the Saints for their efforts.

The business sessions went off uncommonly well, while the conference work was done for another year. We are thankful that we have such a splendid district president, and feel that the Lord is blessing us in many ways as a district.

Two brethren were recommended for ordination and approved by conference.

Among the speakers were Elders W. D. Ellis, G. W. Burt, J. J. Bailey, E. S. White, and James Davis. Many new thoughts were gleaned from the inspirational sermons given by the speakers.

The Methodists very kindly loaned the use of their church to the Women's Department. During these meetings we heard some splendid talks from the sisters chosen for the program. The district leader, Sister Mary Harder, gave a stirring introductory speech.

The expenses were met by collections and many brought well-filled baskets.

Truly the convention is an event to look back to with fond recollections.

An humble spirit and a desire to contribute to the general success predominated through all the meetings.

The conference adjourned to meet with the Whittemore Branch next year at the call of the presidency.

The impression of the convention on the community will not be forgotten soon.

MRS. CLARA E. NICHOLS,

Local Publicity Agent.

Possible Change of Government in Tahiti

The following is from the New York Herald of a recent date, and was sent to us by Brother Mataitaria Richmond, a half-caste native of the South Sea Islands, who is working on Atlantic vessels and living in New York City.

"New York Herald Bureau, Paris, Oct. 29. 'The Intransigent to-day suggests that the French delegation to the Washington conference for the limitation of armament should offer to sell Tahiti and the Marquesas Islands to the United States as coaling stations, contending that they have little except sentimental value for France, but would be of tremendous strategic importance to America.

"'France never has developed these islands extensively for commercial purposes and they are so far from the beaten track that it took three months for the faithful natives to receive the news of the signing of the Armistice.'"

Can it be possible that this will really be done? Is it really true that there is a sentiment in France in favor of this change? If it is as true as it appeared to be, we can only pray that God will, through the influences at his disposal, direct the minds of those representing governments at the disarmament conference that it may be accomplished. Our success as a church in the islands in the Zionian plan is contingent upon some change of this kind.

For years our missionaries, both men and women, have labored in those islands, endured hardships, and sacrificed greatly with very little moral assistance from the French Government; but now if this transfer of the colonies is made, it means that our hands will be set free, and the support of the government will also be ours. The antagonistic spirit of Catholicism has stood stanchly against us in many ways, from the governor's office to the Tuamotuan chief. All this, because our missionaries have not been Frenchmen, has greatly handicapped us, and made it impossible for us to do what we otherwise could have done. Many times when our hands have been tied in this respect, we have gone to the Lord with our burdens and prayed for his intervention. Is it possible that this is an answer to the prayers of the missionaries which have unceasingly ascended to him since 1844? Such a change as this is going to mean a great deal to us in more ways than one. It is naturally going to place upon us responsibilities, and if we fail in meeting them our place among that people will be forfeited.

We have long since been cognizant of the fact, that to accomplish the most good among and for that people, we must have more privileges than we have been having under the French Government. The government itself is doing very little for the natives in an educational and protective way, for out on the low coral islands of the Tuamotuan Archipelago there are no schools to speak of, and no medical protection. Generations have come and gone with only that education and help that they themselves can give one another. And still the government will not give us the privilege of do-

HYMNS AND POEMS

When the Heart Starves

By Charlotte Dryden

When the heart starves, and in the throngs about,
We see no faces, which turn toward our own,
With that response that speaks from soul to soul
In kindling eyes, or sympathizing tone,
Ah then, though myriads press on every side,
When the heart starves—we feel we are alone.

We question why our bleeding feet must climb
The dizzy heights, o'er sorrow's ragged peak;
Why we have missed the touch of little hands,
And the caress of lips and eyes that speak;
For though we know our Savior walks beside,
Yet, when the heart starves, man oftentimes is weak.

When, blinded by the pain, with tear-dimmed eyes,
We lift our faces to God's shining blue,
And struggle on—a prayer upon our lips
That he will give us strength to bear us through,
Then—ah, yes, then—he touches our bowed souls
And bids them rise—and thrills our hearts anew.

And when we see within each throbbing breast,
The ghostly shadows in our brother's heart,
We love him more; and reach a soothing touch;
Forget our pain, and "choose the better part."
Thus from the store God grants to each of us
The crumbs we share, allay heart-hunger's smart.

The Power of Prayer

By Hattie Hughes

Prayer is the door to all success
Which leads to realms of happiness,
The means whereby we can attain
To heavenly heights from earthly plane.

Prayer's a balm for every wound,
When hearts are sore and spirits bruised,
No other way can we find peace
Than through this door to Jesus' feet.

(Concluded on next page.)

ing much for them. Very little success can attend our labors until we are enabled to establish, with the help of an interested government, a threefold environment. The first Protestant missionaries to reach the islands were sent out from London by the London Missionary Society in 1796, and reached Tahiti on March 7, 1797. These missionaries, as well as their successors, were quick to understand the wants of the natives and their needs, who, at that time, were engulfed with gross superstition which carried with it idolatry, savagery, cannibalism, infanticide, and immorality. They not only taught them to forsake their idols, but with the building of churches, they built schoolhouses, blacksmith shops, etc. They taught them agriculture, they themselves having brought various kinds of seeds from England.

We venture to say that more real concrete missionary work, bringing a real permanent fruitage, was performed during those first years of Protestant missionary work there, than has been done through all the years which have followed. Although, since the gospel has entered into the lives of a few of them, a wonderful change has been witnessed. But can the extent of the potency of our work there be realized or discerned now by us if we are given the opportunity of establishing this threefold environment under, or within, the freedom of the United States of America? God grant this change, and may the day be hastened!

Yours for the Islands Mission,

INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM.

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

When life seems dark, no signs of life,
 'Tis only prayer can lead us right;
 This means of grace shall ever be,
 To keep our spirits pure and free.

Prayer is an antedote for sin,
 From foes without and fears within,
 And while we have a heart to pray,
 We'll never yield to Satan's way.

So may our prayers each morn ascend
 In grateful praise to God, our friend,
 For loving care all through the night,
 That we again behold the light.

And at the noonday, bright and clear,
 We'll seek again our Father's care,
 That he will our protector be
 And keep us from iniquity.

And then at evening, all things done,
 Once more we'll bow before his throne,
 Thanking him for mercies given,
 Trusting for a home in heaven.

Safety First

By C. J. Spurlock

"Safety first," important words
 Oft in railroad circles heard,
 If applied in other fields
 Great the harvest that it yields.

Safety's found in Christ the Lord;
 This according to his word;
 Safe indeed is every man
 Who accepts the gospel plan.

Safe in Christ, oh, blessed thought,
 With blessed consequences fraught!
 For he's the life, the light, the way.
 Yea, he's the path to endless day.

Out of Christ it is not safe,
 Neither lasting pleasure hath.
 Then seek the Lord while grace abounds
 That all may say, "We've safety found."

Then seek the kingdom, seek it first,
 As for righteousness you thirst;
 First the kingdom seek, all ye;
 See Matthew six and thirty-three.

Exhortation

By W. P. Ellis

Oh, let our hearts and voices
 Declare in joyful praise
 Our faith and hope in Jesus
 In these the latter days.

Let us think of Jesus hourly,
 Let us praise his blessed name,
 And ask the Lord to help us,
 To guide us home again.

We've wandered in the darkness,
 Strayed far away from home,
 But Jesus in his mercy
 Will not forsake his own.

May we with rejoicing
 Our glorious Savior praise,
 May we ever look to Zion,
 In these the latter days.

DRESSING CHILDREN

(Continued from page 1060.)

For our own part we would prefer to see a child with dirty stockings and rompers, used to playing out of doors, happy and healthy, than to see the so-called "good" child, dressed up, sitting just where he is told to sit, and keeping still. In fact, the first picture is more beautiful than is the latter.

Yet mothers will boast themselves of keeping their children in white. While if the child is to follow a healthy life, it will mean five or six complete clean outfits during the day, and that is rather a trial to a healthy child.

Children's clothing should first of all be comfortable; that means clothes sufficiently large, and sufficiently warm for the weather.

Second, clothes should be adapted for childish uses—overalls or rompers for most of the time, something in which neither the child nor the parent is afraid to let him get down and play on the floor; or, better still, in the yard, in the grass or sand pile.

These two requirements, comfort and utility, practically mean the third important requirement of healthfulness.

Last of all, would come beauty, though we respectfully submit that the healthy child, suitably clothed is more beautiful than any childish picture of fancy dress we can conceive of.

S. A. B.

Moving to Zion

*The movement has been slow but steady.
 There is a reason for care and preparation beforehand.*

We have received a number of protests against the repeated admonition concerning moving to Zion. One writer emphasizes that in the past twelve years the total number moving to Independence hardly exceeded, he says, two thousand in all, or one hundred and fifty a year.

On the other hand, he urges quite truly that the people of the church are anxious to do the right thing, and are only waiting to be told; that many who have desired to move have been advised not to do so, and have acted on that advice. Men who desired to move in youth are now grandfathers and gray haired and are still warned to go slow.

It is quite true that there has not been an undue, general rushing in, but there has been and still exists a fear on the part of some general officers that there may be. Hence the continued warning.

It is quite true that some have moved inadvisedly; have sacrificed homes and business, without making due preparation beforehand, and have suffered the consequences. The story of these few has been repeatedly told. It is also true that mistakes have been made through the general officers, where rightly the people of the church are not to blame.

On the other hand, the missionary officers of the church are not at all in favor of an attempt to gather to one place, but prefer to maintain nuclei, so that they may work among those scattered abroad and have a base for operations in warning the world. This has been a considerable factor in the past, and has helped greatly with the missionary work of the church. There are Saints scattered abroad throughout the country, and from whose homes an effort may be made, and a great work done converting the honest in heart to the truth of the gospel.

Certainly the time must come when there is a gathering. Certainly the eyes of the people are turned Zionward, and they ask when will be the real time of hastening. In the meantime we have the consolation of knowing we are helping greatly with the work of the church, and upholding its standards wherever we live, even though it be at times under difficulty.

Radioharmony Concerts

Three nights a week, wireless telephone concerts are being sent out from the Independence church station. These "Radioharmony concerts," as they are called, are heard by hundreds of people, not only operators but nonradio parties who have purchased receiving sets just for the purpose of receiving the radio telephone broadcasts, now being sent by quite a number of stations, Government and private.

One of the concerts was recently heard by a number of people at the Lamoni Electric Company office. It is planned to arrange soon for the broadcasting of sermons, special notices, etc.

Phonograph Used in Funeral Service

(The following clipping may offer a possible suggestion to some of our rural Saints, who find it difficult if not impossible to secure suitable music for funeral services. It is true that heretofore the phonograph has not been considered in connection with sacred services; but a well rendered phonograph selection, such as is described in this clipping, would certainly be preferable to poorly rendered music or no music at all.—A. H. Mills.)

Long employed in churches, schools, and clubs, the phonograph now has taken its place in the funeral service.

J. P. Satler, an undertaker of Plattsmouth, Nebraska, who often experienced great difficulty in securing choirs and soloists, substituted the phonograph with satisfactory results.

Mr. Satler declares that if the funeral director selects records along the lines suggested by the family of the deceased, such as "Nearer, my God, to thee," "Lead kindly light," "In the sweet bye and bye," "Shall we gather at the river," "I am praying for you," or other tender hymns, it is almost certain that they will be appreciated.

Elder C. E. Wight, assisted by D. T. Williams and W. E. Prall, recently held a series of services at Davis City, Iowa, near Lamoni, with good attendance. Song service in charge of Mrs. W. E. Prall and H. C. Burgess. Lamoni orchestra and choir and "Carol singers" of Davis City lent assistance.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Appointment

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Millard A. Pace to the Little Sioux and Pottawattamie Districts as missionary, until April, 1922.
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.
THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

Appointment of District Chorister

This is official notification of the appointment, with the approval of the First Presidency, of Sister Letha M. Tilton, of 215 East Oak Street, Fort Collins, Colorado, as chorister of the Eastern Colorado District. For this sister we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of this district. Albert N. Hoxie, General Director; Arthur H. Mills, Secretary.

To All Interested in Missionary Work

As the time is approaching when some of the Saints living in the North will be moving southward for a winter sojourn, I am saying to all who may take up their abode for the winter months in Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida, that I shall be glad to learn of any opportunity to prosecute missionary work in their respective localities.

I shall also be glad to hear from any isolated Saints or friends, as to opportunities to preach at the places where they reside.

T. C. KELLEY, Missionary Supervisor.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI,
316 South River Boulevard.

More Lantern Slides Needed

The response to our previous notices have been generous indeed, but not all that we might expect. Some have misunderstood the purpose of the Graphic Arts Bureau in regard to the slides. Briefly, what we want to do is to persuade all members of the church to pool the slides on hand and make good lectures and good slides available for all.

We are having numerous calls for lecture sets and are sending out as many as four and five sets a week. The following have assisted us with slides or negatives or films:

President F. M. Smith, Apostles U. W. Greene and M. A. McConley, C. Edward Miller, F. F. Whipper, A. H. Parsons, O. Salisbury, J. V. Page, Hubert Case, Clyde F. Ellis, Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, Herald Publishing House.

Some branches are using slides at the Sunday night services twice a month and need more subjects and slides to work

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The New Testament Law of Divorce - - -	1057
Unemployment - - - - -	1058
Church News - - - - -	1059
More Foolish Misrepresentation - - -	1059
The American Indian - - - - -	1060
Music Makes Farm Life More Attractive - - -	1060
Subjects Being Discussed - - - - -	1060
Dressing Children - - - - -	1060
Moving to Zion - - - - -	1078
Radioharmony Concert - - - - -	1079

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

A Grave Indictment, by John W. Rushton - - -	1061
--	------

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

What of the Children - - - - -	1064
The Aim of Education - - - - -	1064
Stewardship in the Methodist Church - - -	1065
Capital and Labor - - - - -	1065

THE FORUM:

Weak Spots in Our Reunions, by Edward Rannie	1065
Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work.—Part 8, by J. A. Koehler - - -	1066

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Health Department—Maude Peak Parham—Christiana Waller.	1069
--	------

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

	1071
--	------

LETTERS

Margaret Davis—C. Edward Miller—Mrs. A. H. Christensen—J. W. Jackson—David T. Lewis—John Heide—Roy L. Roberts—H. J. Davison—Mrs. Clara E. Nichols—Clyde F. Ellis.	1072
---	------

HYMNS AND POEMS

Charlotte Dryden—Hattie Hughes—C. J. Spurlock—W. P. Ellis.	1077
--	------

MISCELLANEOUS

	1079
--	------

with. A number of Religios are using them. Our missionaries are also using them.

Let us make this an "all-together" game. If you have slides and don't use them every week, send them to the bureau. Let us assist you and others, too. We do this with no profit to the church and ask for expenses only.

GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU,
A. H. Knowlton, Secretary.

"Language is the Measure of the Man"

What of your expression?

Do you have to depend largely upon facial gyrations, looks, signs, gestures, pictures, symbols? These are all right, but are more effective when used to emphasize an easy flow of masterly language.

Thought and language are practically inseparable. Your thoughts are meager in proportion as your language is weak.

Intelligence is the master of speech, but the servant is indispensable to the master.

"The corruption of man is followed by the corruption of language," says Emerson, "and picturesque language is at once a commanding certificate that he who employs it is a man in alliance with truth and God."

Language reflects one's whole mental life. Language is the measure of the man. The greatest mental inheritance to which we are born is our native tongue, the vernacular, rich in the ideas and thoughts, the knowledge and wisdom, the wit and fancy, the sentiments and feelings of ages past and ages present.

Improve your language by studying English by correspondence.

There is nothing more eloquent than discretion of speech.

"Boys flying kites haul in their white winged birds;

You can't do that way when you're flying words.

'Careful of fire,' is good advice we know,

'Careful with words,' is ten times doubly so.

Thoughts unexpressed may sometimes fall back dead;

But God himself can't kill them when they're said."

Enroll to-day for a course in public speaking, or English, or both, with

THE EXTENSION DEPARTMENT,
Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

HEAD.—Alfred Walter Head was born in Bedford, Lawrence County, Indiana, February 2, 1835. At the age of twelve he moved with his parents to Nauvoo, Illinois, where he grew to manhood. At the age of twenty-one he married Miss Helen Pitt. To them were born nine children, four of whom still live: John T. Head, of Hunnewell, Kansas; Emma C. Christy, of Stewartville, Missouri; Alfred M. Head, of Braman, Oklahoma; and Mattie A. Rollett, of Stewartville, Missouri. After the death of his first wife, he married Margaret Lambert Stegried, in January, 1877. To them were born five children, four of whom survive him: Walter W. Head, of Omaha, Nebraska; Richard D. Head, of DeKalb, Missouri; Madge E. Head, of Stewartville, Missouri, and Sarah J. Bowen, of Easton, Missouri. He is also survived by twenty-four grandchildren, thirty-four great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. Sister Head preceded him by more than eighteen months. At the age of twenty-nine years he entered the Union Army and served his country until the end of the war, at which time he was honorably discharged. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Custer Post, Saint Joseph, Missouri. In October, 1870, he was baptized at Nauvoo, Illinois, by J. R. Lambert. In October, 1872, called and ordained to the office of priest. Labored in this office faithfully until 1892, when he was called and ordained to the office of elder. He occupied this latter office until the Lord called him home. Brother Head was always ready and willing to go and labor where duty called. The weather was not too hot or too cold, or the night too dark or too dreary for him to go and pray with the sick and afflicted. He was always ready to give words of encouragement. A short time before his death he made complete arrangements for his funeral; selected the minister to preach the sermon, the passage of Scripture to be read, and the elder who was to have charge. He also selected the songs to be sung and who should serve as pallbearers. He had lived in this community (Stewartville, Missouri,) for about forty years. During this period he became a familiar character and was beloved by all who knew him. He had the ability of making warm, personal friendships, and his friends were legion. One of his last wishes was that the choir having charge of the music at his funeral should be composed of singers from all the churches in Stewartville. For more than twenty years he taught a Sunday school class, during which period he took a great interest in the work. Not only was he a Christian gentleman, but he practiced his teachings in the community as he believed them. He was always willing to share what he had with his fellow men. While his friends and relatives mourn, yet in their sorrow they can rejoice in the feeling that while he has gone, his life was not in vain, and that now he sleeps with his blessed Redeemer at the feet of a just and merciful God. The funeral service at the Saints' chapel in Stewartville was in charge of Z. H. Lewis. Sermon by T. T. Hinderks.

SLOCUM.—Cecil, daughter of Brother and Sister Ed Rowley, was born January 6, 1896, at Pekay, Iowa. Married J. E. Slocum, December 5, 1917. She has suffered for nearly two years, but has borne it with patience and fortitude. Died October 23, 1921. Leaves husband, parents, and one sister. Funeral services at Knoxville from Methodist church, sermon by F. T. Mussell. Interment in Knoxville Cemetery. Died strong in the hope of meeting her infant who preceded her a few months before.

TILLMAN.—Dallas Carl Tillman was born May 30, 1884, near Saint Elmo, Alabama. Died, October 15, at Providence Infirmary, Mobile, Alabama. Funeral from Baptist church, sermon by T. C. Kelley. Interment in cemetery near Theodore, Alabama.

MOORE.—James S. Moore was born in Choctaw County, Mississippi, February 14, 1857. Baptized October 23, 1892. Ordained to the office of elder. Died August 24, 1921, near Dierks, Arkansas. Leaves to mourn: wife, five girls, five boys, thirty-four grandchildren, and many friends. Two girls have preceded him. He will be greatly missed as he has been the leader for some time. Short funeral service at the home by J. D. Erwin.

PHILLIPS.—George Carlton Phillips, son of G. D. and Kate Phillips, died September 24, 1921, at Dierks, Arkansas. Born August 13, 1890. Baptized August 16, 1902. Leaves to mourn: his wife, four small children, father, mother, five brothers, two sisters, and many friends. Short services at the grave by J. W. Jackson.

STRUTHERS.—Mary Struthers was born October 2, 1847, in North Carolina. Married Beverly Struthers who preceded her in 1910. Both were baptized in 1909. Died September 27, 1921, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wells, Windsor, Ontario. Leaves two sons, three daughters, eleven grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. Funeral from Puce church in charge of Leslie Brown and F. A. Smith; sermon by Wesland Gragg. Interment in Puce Cemetery.

WESTLAKE.—Ann Westlake was born August 31, 1846, at Plymouth, Devonshire, England. Baptized November 1, 1909. Died at the home of her son, William, after an illness of thirteen weeks. Leaves five daughters, four sons, thirty-five grandchildren, and eighteen great-grandchildren. Her husband, Thomas Westlake, preceded her. Funeral from the Saints' church, Windsor, Ontario, in charge of Minnis Miffin. Sermon by Leslie Brown. Interment in Puce Cemetery.

Zion Builders' Sermons

Last spring President Elbert A. Smith preached a wonderful series of sermons to the young people at Lamoni and which are peculiarly adapted to the needs of young people. These sermons are being published in booklet form. You could distribute no literature that would do more to interest people in our faith.

Subjects

- Faith
- Repentance
- Baptism
- Laying on of Hands
- Resurrection and Eternal Judgment
- The Restoration
- Our Spiritual Inheritance
- Fundamentals
- Price, 10 for $1.75 100 for $15.00

Order from the
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

THE SAINTS' H. ALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"The save it have no

1 among you have incubines he shall
n, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 15, 1921

NUMBER 46

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of M weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at th age provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21.

5 Jan 22 France
Mrs Thos St
116 W 8th St
Lamont

EDITORIAL

The Doctrine of Stewardship

Address by President Frederick M. Smith before the Holden stake conference at Grandview, Missouri, Sunday afternoon,
October 16, 1921.

I do not know how much I might be justified in expecting from the Holden Stake in the way of an example to the rest of the church in the forward movement; but knowing the temperament of the people of the Holden Stake, such as I have personally come in contact with, I see no reason why it should not set a good example. I hope that the Holden Stake will in the next few months (I say months, and I say it advisedly) demonstrate to the rest of the church that there is a workable percentage of the people of the church who are ready for the advance movement that we must put into operation. I mean to say by that, that there will be a goodly percentage of the members of the Holden Stake that will indicate a willingness—not only a willingness, but a determination—to go on the stewardship basis for the handling of their business. That is to say, that they will consecrate their business as well as themselves to the service of the church. If, this afternoon, I can stimulate you just a little bit towards the accomplishment of that purpose, then I will think that that ride Brother Harder and I took in that "wild broncho" machine of ours was not in vain.

I spoke at the Stone Church in Independence this morning, and at the close of my effort, I shook hands with a number of people. Outside of the church I shook hands with a man whom I knew to be well educated for his job. He said to me, "I have gone carefully over my work, and I think I have conservatively estimated that my employers are making a profit of not less than seventy-five dollars a day out of my labor." I presume that if we were to say this brother got five or six dollars a day, it would be quite conservative. While the brother did not exactly express it, I knew from the way he said it that he was dissatisfied with the system. I meant to follow up a thought I had expressed in the morning sermon, that people who are working for the good of the whole, work because it is a pleasure, so I asked him, "How would you feel if seventy-five dollars that you make each day in the way of profit for your employer were going eventually to the group?" He replied, "It would not bother me a bit. I would not feel half as bad as I do now."

He would work with pleasure if he felt that that money was bound to flow back into the treasury of the community and therefore he would be building up the interests of the whole rather than of one. That is the keynote on this theme of stewardship, and I wish that every one of you could appreciate just what that means.

I presume I am addressing those who are largely interested in the question of agriculture. That being true, perhaps the most of you are not working for wages. Most of you perhaps are engaged in some business enterprise of your own. You may not be engaged in agriculture alone, but you may be engaged either in the assembling or distribution of those things produced by or used in agriculture, so perhaps we are discussing it from a different basis than we would if we were addressing a congregation of wage earners simply. So when I said that I wished that the Holden Stake would take the leading part, so far as the church was concerned, in establishing stewardships, I had of course in mind, the agricultural part. I should like to see within the Holden Stake within the next ninety days, say one hundred farmers willing to put themselves on the stewardship basis. I wonder if there are that many.

A Five Per Cent Response Good

Recently I received a letter from one of our workers in the West, and this writer had had the opportunity of presenting to a university man some of the social philosophy that we stand for, and instead of presenting it as the philosophy of the church, the man spoke of it as the ideals that the leader of the church had. This man who was engaged in teaching in the university some of the social sciences, exclaimed, "If your leader can get five per cent of the people of his church interested in carrying out his purposes, as you have outlined them to me, he will have accomplished something wonderful for the welfare of this community." Since I have read that, I wonder if it is possible, if it is true, that there are only five per cent of the members of this church willing to go on the stewardship basis. Do you know, I cannot believe but what there will be more than five out of every hundred individuals willing to go on the stewardship basis.

One reason I think so is that we have had for years past a demonstration of the fact that we have such a group, because they have done it. I refer to the men of the ministry. I have often wondered what peculiar twist of the mind people could have that there shall be a group of people working among them on the stewardship basis, and yet they would not feel obligated to work on the same basis. I never could see why people were willing to ask more from the ministry than they had asked for themselves. It is perfectly right that the ministry shall be cleaner in thought and deed and action, and of a higher type of men morally and spiritually, but why ask them to act on a different basis so far as business is concerned? And that they do think so is evident by the fact that a great many of you will say, "I do not see why that man in the ministry is spending so much money." If the money that goes into the pockets of the ministry belongs to the church, then does not the money that goes into the pockets of the members also belong to the church? Are you any less responsible to God for your affairs than the ministry of the church?

Meaning of Stewardships

What is the doctrine of stewardships? I will venture to guess if I would ask that question of forty different people in this audience, I would get forty different answers. As I see it, a stewardship is that state of society in which a member shall be activated by the interests of the group, and is receiving for his services, which he is to render at the maximum of his efficiency, only that which he needs, and anything more and above his needs, governed by his circumstances and just wants, shall be determined by the increase of wealth or prosperity of the group.

Let us say there are ten men who are farming. Let us say they have organized themselves into stewardships. It might be there are ten stewardships, or it could readily be that there are ten men or families who have organized a group stewardship. Then, if they are on a strictly stewardship basis, every time they turn a furrow, every time they bind a sheaf, or every time they breathe the dust of a thresher, they will know they are doing it, not alone for themselves, but in the interests of the church, and therefore, by serving humanity, they will be doing it for the interests of God. Even after they have put the maximum of effort into the growing of their crops, they will feel that they are only entitled to take from the products of their farm or their stewardship, that which is necessary to keep themselves and their families in an adequate state of ability to carry on their work, and over and above their necessities shall flow into the common treasury to assist the group as a whole and take care of those who might not be so fortunate, perfectly content that any advancement of interest shall be found in the advancement of the group. In other words, we have got to develop a social consciousness that will teach people to think in the terms of the other fellow's weal rather than his own.

Nine out of ten of you will think about the strike that is threatening, and say, "Well, that cannot affect me," and yet every mother's son of you knows that the strike cannot continue twenty-four hours without bringing suffering on humanity. Do you know that a railroad strike such as has been ordered by the union could not be possible in a community organized on the stewardship basis? I hope I won't "get in bad" here. I do not know how many union men there are in this audience. Unfortunately the unions of America are not wholly controlled by Americans, but in far too many cases the heads of the unions are dominated or governed by foreign influences and by foreign elements. Why could not strikes be possible under the doctrine of stewardships? Simply because a man, when he has learned to think in terms of the other, will know that he cannot do that without working injury to the other fellow. According to our own social dynamic to-day, our work is actuated, not by what it will do for somebody else, but, How much will it do for me? How many extra head of cattle will my frugality produce on my farm?

I know there are a large number of very interesting subjects that grow out of this question of the doctrine of stewardships, and probably some of the arguments would be closely allied to the doctrine of socialism, and that, of course, interesting as it might be, perhaps, would not be wise for us to take up here.

Earnings Revert to Group

I do not know whether I have made clear to you my idea of the doctrine of stewardship as put into the form of a definition. Let us try it in another direction. Suppose a group of our men or women had made up their minds that there was a bank needed to carry on the activities of business in relation to the activities of the church and the industries of the church people. Let us say, for instance, that they determined to organize a bank of $100,000 capital, and enough of them subscribed that capital so that they have the capital in hand, and the bank is organized. Suppose every man and woman who held stock in that bank would say, "We are organizing this bank to help upbuild the cause of Zion; therefore, this bank is a stewardship." That would mean that every dollar they got as a return on that stock they would look upon as God holding them responsible for the administration of it, and if there came to them one dollar more than they needed to take care of themselves and their families, they should then turn that dollar either back into an increase of the stewardship so that the stewardship could become of larger earning capacity, or else that dollar would be consecrated to the coffers of the church.

Perhaps I am telling you no state secrets when I say that at least one bank is organized practically that way. I do not know how many of you have money in the bank. I haven't, I assure you. I have some paper in the bank, but I am paying interest on it rather than it paying me interest. I hope you have all got money in the bank. Is it in the First National Bank of Kansas City, or the First National Bank at Holden, or somewhere else? And if it is, whom is it serving? Is it serving this church, or somebody else? Let us suppose that a bank is organized under the plan suggested, and could you not feel to put your money into a bank of that kind? Would you be afraid of the State Savings Bank at Lamoni, or the Jackson County Bank at Independence, if it were organized along that line? Let us figure a little. Suppose all the money that is in the banks around over this country and owned by Latter Day Saints were in a bank that had the interests of this church at heart. Do you not imagine it would be a mighty easy thing for this church to tide itself over the present depression? In all probability we have got to pay interest somewhere to somebody, in order for this church to do that, but if we were organized as we should be, we would tide ourselves over this and pay any amount of interest that might be necessary, and yet feel that this benefit was being kept within our own circle.

Who Gets the Benefit of Bank Deposits?

I talked in Northern California, not long ago, to an interested audience, and at the close of my talk, a person came to me and said, "Does the church need money?" I said, "Yes, it certainly does." He said, "Well, we have ten thousand dollars up here in a bank in Oregon drawing a certain percentage of interest, but we would rather forego that interest if you feel that the church could use it." I answered without hesitation, "The church can use it," and thus, as the result of those few minutes' conversation, I think the entire amount was sent down to the bishop to use. Why not? There is no reason why it should not be.

When it comes to organizing the question of agricultural stewardships, there are some other things that carry along with it concomitant responsibilities. It would be unfair for the people of this church to lay their business affairs before the treasury of the church or the community, unless there was a certain amount of obligation resting on the other side. It carries with it the responsibility of the church standing by the steward in times of depression or in times of want; and furthermore, it carries with it the idea of the responsibility of the community being vitally and eternally interested in the welfare of the group. It seems to me I can see agricultural stewardships organized in this way; in other words, the production of things necessary to sustain life carries with it the idea of these stewardships being given in such a way that the hardships and trials, if you please, of agriculture, as carried along on the old line, shall be eliminated.

The agricultural group shall be organized in such a way they will have the highest form of social life, and those activities in which the heart of man shall delight. They shall have their own agricultural group so compactly organized living in houses that are designed up to the last day, and be so grouped that the individual members of this agricultural group, all working in this stewardship, shall have the educational advantages and spiritual activities because of having a highly developed form of church activities. That is feasible, yet it presents to us a tremendous problem. It may be of interest to you to know that we have a group of men in schools now, who are studying these problems. It will be necessary for us to continue to tackle these problems until we have made a satisfactory solution.

Back to the Farm

It seems to me it is high time to develop something that will tend to bring people back to the farm. We do know that industrial commissions say that there is a lessening amount of land being tilled by agriculturists, and replies to a questionnaire sent out by the agricultural department some time ago indicated that there is likely to be less and less land under cultivation in the future. I would not be at all surprised to see the time come when we will have to develop some form of agricultural society in which practically every man tilling the soil is a land owner and that is exactly the ideal, so far as I see it, of the stewardship, for every person who feels the instinct of tilling the soil and desires to till it for the benefit of humanity and who feels there is rising up within him that desire, can be permitted and helped to secure a plot of ground; and if they have not the money to pay for it, we should be organized in such a way that every man should be helped to pay for his own ground. Just as soon as we can get that kind of an organization, I want to tell you, our agricultural problem will be done away with, and men will be farming because they love it.

I attended the stock show and demonstration last week at the Sni-a-bar farm, and I heard the governor of Nebraska say that it takes more brains to run a farm than almost anything else in the world. In fact, he said it took more brains to run a farm than it did to run a railroad, for the interstate commerce commission fixes the rates, and the unions fix the wages, so all the railroad president has to do is to sit down and watch the road run itself. But when it comes to making money out of a farm, it takes brains. I guess that is true. There is an old expression like this, "If a man is going to make a success of farming, he has got to mix brains with his soil." I hope to see the time, so far as this church is concerned, when every man will be engaged in the thing that he wants to do.

How Many Ready for Stewardships

I am going to ask you folks a question, and I am going to bring it right home. How many of you folks in Holden Stake are willing to farm on that kind of a basis? How many of you are willing to join me in a stewardship? I have been twenty years in the service of the church, practically all of that time in the Presidency, but some of you might think I spend too much money. I cannot help it if it takes more clothes to cover my frame than some of you folks need, can I? Here is the main thing; it is not a question of how much a man spends in his stewardship, but how much it is necessary for that man to spend in his stewardship. Do you know, I hope the time will come when we will have stewardships in this church that will be costing millions of dollars a year to run, and we will not find jealousy in our hearts, because those stewardships will be bringing us in other millions in revenue.

I expressed the thought this morning that I hoped to see the time in this church when work will be a pleasure. Work is an overcoming of resistance that is disagreeable, but when the time comes when a man is engaged in an activity because he loves to do it, you will see we will then have eliminated work, because work will have become a pleasure. When that time comes, that every man is engaged in that activity that is satisfying his soul, there will be no work.

Let me tell you, this doctrine of stewardships, as I understand it, is the biggest thing before the world to-day. I have traveled a little; not very much, it is true, but I have seen the countries of Europe torn by social unrest. This threatened strike, for instance, is because our people are socially discontented. They are restless, they are striking, and if this strike, voted by the railroad unions, ever comes to an issue, I look for some serious consequences. It is a sort of last fight. They will fight for their very existence, and the railroad men themselves are in the last ditch, because they have yielded to demand after demand from the union. With the number of men out of employment that can be secured by the railroad men to take the places of the strikers, you will find that the strikers, out of resentment, are likely to resort to violence. I hope to see the time soon appear when, so far as this church is concerned, we can be organized so that strikes are practically a thing of the past. It can come only when we are organized on this basis of the stewardship.

A Simplicitarian?

I know of course that in some quarters I might be accused of being something of a simplicitarian. You know a simplicitarian is one who has one remedy for all the ills of mankind. There are men who think that the single tax will do it. There are men who think that the doctrine of socialism will do it, etc. And so it would seem to some that I should be put in the class of simplicitarian because I advocate the doctrine of stewardships. I do it because I have tried to analyze the doctrine of stewardships in comparison with these other social reforms. I know that it carries with it all the concomitants, the deep spirituality that must be at the basis of every social reform. You cannot reform society and leave God out of it. The doctrine of stewardships presumes that we are serving God, and demonstrating our love to God by service to our fellow man, which gets right back to the old commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

I am not going to talk to you longer. I was in Lamoni not long ago, and spoke to the Lamoni Stake while there. I said the eyes of the world were upon the Lamoni Stake. I said I hoped the Lamoni Stake would set a pace to the rest of the church, so far as the doctrine of stewardships was concerned. The eyes of the world are not upon the Holden Stake in quite the same way that they are upon the Lamoni Stake, because of their past history, but I would like to see the Holden Stake beat the Lamoni Stake to it, by making your plows and your corn shellers and your threshers serve God and man. Wouldn't it be a happy thing if you could feel that almost directly your farm was being made to support some missionary going abroad? Wouldn't it be a happy thing if you could feel that your farm, in addition to supplying yourself, was putting some young man or young woman through Graceland College, studying and developing in certain lines? I would like to see your farms organized on that basis.

Mounds Near Saint Louis

Excavations, we are informed, are being conducted in the mounds near East Saint Louis, Illinois. One of the largest mounds in the world is to be found there, exceeding in size the Great Pyramid of Egypt. These earth mounds have been declared by students continually to be of artificial construction. Relics have been found from time to time as they have come to the surface, but the land has been owned by private persons who heretofore have prohibited all investigation and have refused to permit any excavating. There existed, in times past, some wonderful mounds in Saint Louis which caused it to be called the "Mound City," but most of these on the west side of the river have been destroyed, but those near Cahokia, in the vicinity of East Saint Louis, have been preserved till now.

The International Zionist Congress met in the early part of September at Carlsbad for the first time since 1913. Palestine and the Balfour Declaration were the prominent factors under consideration. We have as yet heard but little as to the outcome.

School of the Prophets

Inquiry has been received concerning the solemn assemblies as referred to in the Doctrine and Covenants, and the direct question is asked, "Is it necessary for the church to obey said command at the present time?"

The passages referred to appear to be Doctrine and Covenants 85:19; 85:36; 92:1; 108:2. All of the above were given in the years 1831, 1832, and 1833. The last one was, in fact, written first, as it is the appendix to the Doctrine and Covenants.

In the early church, the Kirtland Temple was built and a school of the elders was held. This is also referred to as a "school of the prophets" in Doctrine and Covenants 92:2. The plain facts are that many solemn assemblies have been called in very recent years with the excess of our laughter far from us. The command is certainly still to the church to meet in solemn assembly, to put away excessive laughter, to consider the teachings of the church and the word of God.

From what we can learn of the history of the early school of the prophets, certainly a very close approach has been made to that which they had at that time when they met for the purpose of study and lectures were delivered.

There is naturally anxiety in the church for the full establishment of the school of the prophets as provided for in the latter part of Doctrine and Covenants 85, verses 37 to 46. Many see clearly that we should prepare for such an assembly. When we are ready, we have no doubt that the command will come from the Lord to organize, and all needed light on the subject will be given. We are preparing ourselves and approaching the time when we believe that it will be possible in a fuller sense than it is to-day because of our preparation. Hence we are looking most earnestly for its establishment.

The command is binding upon us to-day. The church, as we see it, is preparing herself for that work. Let him who is faithful stand fast in his place and make his own personal preparation by faith, by study, and by prayer.

Certificate of Ordination

To the Ministry: There seems to be considerable misunderstanding on the matter of ministerial certificates of ordination, especially as to the limitation of authorization to act under the certificate. This move was decided upon to meet several conditions which cannot be ignored, and it is sincerely hoped by the Presidency and the Department of Statistics that we shall have the hearty cooperation of all, so that the results desired may be reached. In the hopes of clearing up the misunderstanding and thus encourage fuller cooperation among those concerned, we briefly set out the situation.

Authority to act in any office for which ordination is necessary is conferred by the ceremony of ordination, and the right to act therein with due authority continues until the proper ecclesiastical procedure has imposed silence, and a certificate of ordination adds nothing to his authority. Among those to whom an ordained man is known a certificate is even unnecessary, but there are many occasions where it is necessary to have certificate of ordination, such as in applying for concessions in reduced rates on transportation lines, etc., and in establishing rights where unknown or partially known.

Formerly the custom was to issue certificate of ordination of unlimited duration, and erroneously it was called a license. We do not have licensed ministers in the usually accepted understanding of what that means.

Other denominations have two classes of ministers. They have first an ordained ministry who preach and administer in ordinances by virtue and by authority of their ordinations. They have second a class of ministers who are not ordained, but who may preach and perform certain work by virtue of a license. We have not had these two classes, but early came under the error of giving what are known as licenses to ordained men. Hence it frequently happens that our elders in filing their answers to questions in application blanks for clergy credentials, where the question is asked, "Are you licensed or ordained?" answer, "Both," and the railroad officials are probably thereby puzzled at finding a new class of ministers.

The purpose of limiting the duration of the certificate is twofold: first, to expedite more accurate recording of members of the priesthood by establishing the yearly contact necessary for renewal; and, second, to protect the church against imposition by the presentation of certificate which has been nullified by ecclesiastical procedure of the proper sort. It is not a reflection upon the ordained men to require annual renewal of certificate, but a protection of their own interests as well as those of the church. Some apostate elders who have turned against the church and even gone upon the lecture platform against us have refused to surrender their certificates which they have retained as perpetual and never-expiring certificates of good standing in the ministry of the church. A time limit would have prevented them perpetrating such an imposture. Expiration of the time limit without renewal does not terminate the official authority to act, but simply leaves the holder without proper certification or identification where such is necessary.

We bespeak the hearty cooperation of all concerned that we might thus protect the best interests of the ministers of the church.

For the work's sake,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 7, 1921.

Healing the Sick

All religions have some truth else they would not endure.

The latter part of September the following letter was received referring, however, to an article written by J. W. Quinley, which appeared in the HERALD of September 6. We are printing the letter and attempting a brief reply:

"Under the heading of divine healing, you say you can name two prominent societies that claim to heal through prayer, while they both teach many grand truths but flatly deny the scriptural doctrine on this. Yet you admit their honesty and sincerity of purpose. Now this proves to my mind that they would do the right thing if they only knew how. Why doesn't God show them how? Do you mean to tell me that God is deliberately deceiving these good people through the Devil? Come, brother, let us reason together and find out the truth of these things if we can."

It is quite possible that we concede in a Christian spirit sincerity when after all those who do not accept the truth have simply closed their eyes and refused to see. It is quite certain that our heavenly Father does not compel people to be saved; nor does he hold them responsible when they live according to the best light that they have. (Acts 17:30.) The plan of our heavenly Father is a greater one than to compel men to be saved. He wants us to learn the difference between truth and falsehood.

We do not know any people or religion that has not some truth. If they did not have some, they could not endure. Yet the Master plainly says of some that, while they perform many mighty works in his name, they never knew him. (Matthew 7:30-35.)

For our own part, we are quite convinced that God does not hold anyone responsible, if he is living according to the best light he has. We are quite convinced that if he honestly desires the truth that God will give him an opportunity to

(Continued on page 1101.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Christ's Story of the Age End

By Isaac True

Scriptural passages that foretell conditions at the time of the end of the world.

God had been laying bare the future to Daniel. As page after page of startling events unrolled, Daniel's heart was sobered and solemnized and he cried out to God, "O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" (Daniel 12: 8.)

How fitting is this question for ourselves to-day. The pages of the world's history are swiftly unrolling. They are red with blood. Kingdoms are rising and falling in a night. Thrones are tottering. Armies are battling in earth, sea, and land. The sons of men are being slaughtered by millions. Civilization is shot through with the barbarism and savagery of bygone ages. The foundations of human government and society are reeling under earthquake blows. Men's hearts are failing them for fear of the things that are coming upon the earth, and with Daniel, they are crying out, "What shall be the end of these things?" There is only one answer, there is only one man who knows what the end will be, and that is the God-man. Jesus Christ alone knows the future. We must come to him if we would know. So, like them of old, let us sit at his feet and listen to Christ's story of the age-end.

You remember the story. His disciples had been showing him the great temple. They had pointed out to him its lofty pinnacles, its adornments, its massive stones, and then the Lord turns to them and quietly says, "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." Doubtless they were amazed and perplexed and they said unto him, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" Note they asked him a multiple question.

They wanted to know when those things would be and of his coming. He has given statements in different passages of the Scriptures. "There shall be wars and rumors of wars." In Daniel 12: 9 he said, "Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end."

"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."—Daniel 12: 1.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24: 14.

"For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."—Matthew 24: 24.

"And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed."—Revelation 13: 13, 14, 15.

In 2 Thessalonians 2: 3 we read: "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition," for nation shall rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famine and pestilences and earthquakes in diverse places. All these are the beginning of sorrows: wars and rumors of wars, nation rising against nation, kingdom against kingdom, earthquakes, famines, pestilences, and afflictions. What a marvelous picture is this of the age which has passed since Jesus Christ sat upon the mount and told this wondrous story. It has shown forth marks of the age since he first came, for it is the general characteristics of the whole age from his first coming to his coming again. He is setting forth the time of his second coming. Pestilence and famines are approaching from time to time. Men cry out the end of the world is at hand, yet of these things Jesus says distinctly they shall come. The end is not yet. They are not the distinguishing marks of the end of time. They are rather the coming marks "when ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation," spoken of by Daniel, the prophet. Jesus Christ begins to deal with a personality of momentous and tragic importance as the supreme sign of the end of time, and he opens this last act in the great drama of the age-end by citing this strange and mysterious figure out of the prophecies of God over which centuries of time had already rolled.

"And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thessalonians 1: 7-9.

"Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."—2 Thessalonians 2: 3, 4.

He is the anti-Christ. For then shall be great tribulations such as was not since the beginning of the world.

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood."—Revelation 6: 12.

"And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard a number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed a hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel."—Revelation 7: 2-4.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24: 14.

Now we go back to Jeremiah 32: 37-41:

"Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul."

Another sign to be in the latter days:

"Woe unto him that spurneth at the doings of the Lord, yea, woe unto him that shall deny the Christ and his work. Yea, woe unto him that shall deny the revelations of the Lord and that shall say, The Lord no longer worketh by revelation or by prophecy, or by gifts or by tongues or by healings or by the power of the Holy Ghost. Yea, woe unto him that shall say at that day that there can be no miracle wrought by Jesus Christ to get gain: for he that doeth this shall become like the son of perdition, for whom there is no mercy according to the word of Christ."

Another sign in Matthew 24: 10-12:

"And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. . . . For then shall be great tribulations, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. . . . For whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—Matthew 24: 10-12, 21, 28-35.

"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."—Revelation 20: 4, 5.

Then the end age of all the wicked has expired. The Saints of the most high God are the only ones that are left.

The "Kingdoms" in Daniel 2

By J. C. Crabb

The writer believes the church is "the kingdom" and the United States Government "a kingdom," as referred to in the prophecy.

Is "a kingdom" the same as "the stone kingdom" in Daniel 2: 34, 35, 44, and 45?

The writer says, "No." If they had been so considered by the God of heaven as spoken of in the chapter, there would have been no distinction made. But there is a decided distinction made, as the writer will at least aim to show.

After speaking of "a kingdom" in verse 44, then in verse 45 it is said, "Thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountains without hands," showing emphatically that there was a space between the setting up of "a kingdom" before the stone was cut out of the mountain.

The stone kingdom, I presume, is admitted by all to be the church of Christ; at least so the writer considers it. But what is this "a kingdom"?

I presume all will agree that the first, Babylonian, was an earthly kingdom; likewise the second, Medo-Persian; likewise the third, Grecian; likewise the fourth, Roman-pagan Rome.

And also the ten kingdoms, "And in the days of these kings [the ten] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," which the writer regards as the United States of America.

It would be too much of a jump, even for God to make, to go directly from an earthly to a heavenly kingdom without any previous preparation.

Therefore, he first proceeds by degrees. Some say by the Reformation in the time of Luther and others, which may to some extent be true, but the writer gives more credit to such men as Voltaire, Thomas Paine, and Robert Ingersoll. For the latter have always and without exception advocated that every man has a right to think for himself. For when the question arose as to the right of the colonies rebelling against the unjust demands of England, Thomas Paine said they had the right and thus a move was made in the right direction.

The Puritan colony which had fled from England because of religious persecution, a religious sect, succeeded for a while in the establishment of church and state; burned a few witches, hanged some others, banished Roger Williams, but when a sufficient number of other religious bodies arrived and the set time to favor Zion had come and a concrete government was needed (the word forever meaning until the coming of Christ, the King of kings) and the need for a good beginning had arrived, there appeared on the stage of action one Thomas Jefferson (a man, I believe, according to history, bound to no particular creed, but a man evidently inspired of God) who stood ready to write the Declaration of Independence. Later other men were inspired of God and the Constitution of the United States became an established fact, and thus the principle upon which this Government was established became a fixture, that all men are born free and equal and are entitled to certain inalienable rights, in which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

So the United States exists and will exist until the coming of Christ and will never be given to another people other than the English-speaking people.

But how about the stone kingdom? The stone kingdom was to be cut out of the mountain without hands. Mountain, in symbol, in the book of Daniel, Isaiah, and possibly in other places in the Bible means organized governments; either political or religious, or both combined.

And thus Isaiah says, "The mountain of the Lord's house, shall be established in the top of the mountains." (Isaiah 2: 2.) It shall be in the last days.

The mountain of the Lord's house in this text is the stone kingdom, the church. The topmost mountain, or "top of the mountains," is the United States Government, which is being admitted by many if not most of the governments to stand at the top. Even China, the oldest government now standing has appealed to this Government to protect her interests from the encroachments of Japan.

And the great government, England, through her leading representative, Lloyd George, who is coming and for what help will no doubt be revealed later. When the mother comes to the daughter for advice, it shows great humility on the part of the mother, yet it is not an extravagant fact when we come to consider the fact that the God of heaven set up the kingdom, the United States. In fact, it shows great wisdom on the part of England.

The stone kingdom was to be established in the United States, and so it has been; and when we properly consider the fact and properly understand the history of the organization of churches and know therefrom that the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the only church or-

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHAT THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS HAS DONE

A summary of what it has accomplished in one year.

Doctor Charles H. Levermore has written a book, What the League of Nations Has Accomplished in One Year, reviewing the first year of its activities. This does not include developments of the past several months. From this book, the Christian Work has printed the following summary:

It has set up a World Court Commission. This commission has had several sessions and has drafted plans for a great world court, to which the nations can take disputes.

On the next page is the heading, "International Health Conference." The league has already taken steps to set up an International Health Bureau, in which all nations shall cooperate in ridding the world of contagious diseases and securing a really healthy world.

It has set up a Saar Basin Government Commission, also a High Commissioner of Danzig. The city of Danzig is at present under the protection of the League of Nations.

Go on a little further and we see that it has undertaken to guarantee the protection of Polish Minorities, and at the same time it has undertaken to rid Poland of typhus.

The fourth session of the council of the league took up the question of the protection of Armenia, and through a series of almost impossible situations, the Bolsheviks on the north and all sorts of intrigue in the Near East, and hampered by the refusal of the United States to take any part in helping solve the problem, it has done much to save Armenia from absolute destruction.

It has held a great second International Health Confer-ganized in this United States which did not come from some old country, either directly or indirectly, we have one of the strongest evidences of the truth of this latter-day work.

That Congress shall pass no law touching religious worship is the keynote in this country and is fast becoming the same in all countries. It has even reached to the land of Palestine in the rebuilding and reestablishment of the Jews on their land of promise.

So, when we properly apply prophecy and history, if we put each in its proper place we have the fact fully established as to what people are building up the kingdom of God. As Jesus says, "Seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness," for the only way that ever has been, now is, or ever will be given. To establish God's righteousness is to build up the kingdom of God.

As to the breaking in pieces all other kingdoms, that will eventually be done at or after the coming of Christ by the King of kings.

Yet this Government has had and will still have something to do on that line. Did not this Government have something to do in staying the hand of him who still insisted and held to the old slogan, "Might makes right"? And has not Germany ceased to be the Germany she once was? And in its reorganization, has it not come our way? And has not Russia trembled, at one time the most despotic power on earth? And will not she, too, if ever reorganized, fall in line with our system of government? So, by force, if need be, and more especially by example, this Government is showing itself to be "a kingdom" as well as the church showing itself to be "the kingdom," both of which will stand forever, I think.

ence in which such problems as the white slave traffic, typhus, and international activities of the Red Cross, etc., were considered.

Then we come to what has been one of the greatest achievements of the league, the setting up of the Permanent Armaments Commission. This commission has held several sessions and has done much not only to interest the nations of Europe in the question of disarmament, but has prepared the way for the conference President Harding is calling or any other conference that might be held. The fact will appear when the conference is held in Washington in November. The conference will have to base its proceedings largely upon what the league has already accomplished.

It has held a great international labor conference at Genoa, and has set up a permanent commission for the standardizing of labor throughout the world. It has brought together a group of the most eminent jurists of the world at The Hague to prepare plans for the Permanent Court of International Justice which had previously been organized. It settled the question of the Aaland Islands, and in the judgment of many decided all disputes which would have helped to reopen the war.

It has undertaken the settlement of the Polish-Lithuanian controversy.

It has transferred the sovereignty of Eupen and Malmedy to Belgium.

It has been consulted right along by the supreme war council on the question of mandates.

It has set up a permanent mandatory commission.

It has outlined an international chamber of commerce.

It has set up a commission on opium traffic and is working vigorously upon this problem. And so the book goes on.

It is well that we in the United States should know these things and also that we should realize that Europe not only takes the league seriously, but has accepted it as its permanent form of international organization.

We have recently spent six weeks in England and the league was as much accepted on the whole as the British Government itself. It is not questioned any longer. This is becoming more and more true all over Europe. The reference of the question of Upper Silesia to it will strengthen and settle this impression. There is a general feeling in every country except America that the league is the hope of the world. It stands for four great things as will be seen by reading Doctor Levermore's book:

First. The great fundamental principle that nations must order their relationships on the same ethical basis as that which prevails among Christian gentlemen everywhere.

Second. The world has become a family, a community, and the welfare of one nation cannot be secured at the disadvantage of another. All rise or fall together, and all local problems are world problems in which every nation has become interested.

Third. Setting up a permanent court of international justice where all disputes of the nations may be settled by judicial methods rather than by resorting to force.

Fourth. The protection of the weak by the strong and the granting of equal rights to the strong and weak alike.

Brother W. H. Sheffer and family, of McGregor, Michigan, write to express gratitude over the remarkable escape from death of their daughter, age eleven, who was in an auto accident and was thrown under the moving locomotive, and upon the stopping of the train was able to crawl out with only comparatively minor wounds and bruises, considering the extremely dangerous situation. About a third of her left foot was removed by operation. She gets around on crutches now and is doing nicely.

FURTHER STEPS IN COOPERATION

"The furniture workers of Great Britain, in an epoch-making declaration that 'it is possible to work industry on a no-profit basis; that labor must be the first charge on industry; and that cooperative production is as practical and scientific as the present system is sordid,' have followed the British building trades in the formation of a national cooperative guild to produce furniture at cost for workers' homes. Cooperative furniture making has already been demonstrated a practical success by the large factory of the English Cooperative Wholesale Society at Pelaw, which is producing some of the best furniture in the United Kingdom.

"The furniture workers now intend to take over the furniture-making industry of the entire country, beginning on a moderate scale and expanding until every factory is included. This will be achieved not so much by the refusal of the well organized workers to make furniture for profit-seeking concerns as by the fact that they can produce more and better and cheaper furniture than can these competitors. The necessary capital for the nation-wide promotion of this important cooperative enterprise is being raised among the workers themselves and from the Cooperative Wholesale Society Cooperative Bank.

"British workers may now have their houses built by the cooperative building guild, furnished by the furniture workers' cooperative guild, equipped to the last detail by the various factories of the Cooperative Wholesale Society, and insured by the Cooperative Assurance Society, all on a non-profit basis.

"Cooperative building guilds similar to that in the United Kingdom have already been organized in Switzerland, Denmark, and Queensland, Australia; while building trades workers in the United States have formed cooperative building societies in four cities."—Bulletin, All-American Cooperative Commission.

COMMUNITY WELFARE

Clipping from The Christian for October 8, 1921:

In Middletown, Ohio, five hundred Negroes and their families receive care "from the cradle to the grave" at the hands of the American Rolling Mill Company which employs them.

It has built attractive houses at a cost of from $1,500 to $2,500. Any employee can buy them by making a cash payment of $100, with monthly installments of $25 thereafter. The men are buying ninety per cent of them.

At the barracks for unmarried men a clubhouse is provided, with pool and reading rooms, and with a colored worker in charge. The company built and gave the city a $75,000 building for a colored school. It contains an auditorium in which the company gives entertainments twice a week. The company employs a colored kindergartner who looks after the children below school age, advises with their mothers about home affairs, and has charge of the company playground.

Sister Mary J. Floyd writes from Jerusalem that she is able to note wonderful changes in the old road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, over which she traveled much many years ago when it was practically impassable. Now it is well-kept by the British, and automobiles pass and re-pass at high speed. The mountains are being terraced for agriculture and the general appearance is much improved.

"The winds of God are always blowing, but if you wish to go forward, you must keep your sails unfurled."

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

The Land Question

By Edward Rannie

"Land" is the hub around which revolves the whole economic problem.

Our heavenly Father on several occasions has advised our people to buy land in Zion and the regions round about. "Wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile." (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.) One month later the Lord spoke again and said, "The Lord willeth that the disciples, and children of men, should open their hearts even to purchase this whole region of country, as soon as time will permit." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 11.) It is many years since the Lord gave those commands and time has not made any change. It is still a wise thing to do and we cannot redeem Zion until we become obedient children.

There are several causes why many abandon the farms and move to the town or city, but in this article it is only needful to refer to one, and that is the high price of land. Many thousands of people are living in the city to-day, not from choice, but from necessity.

It is from a knowledge of conditions that I write, because my early manhood was spent on a farm in Nebraska and for nineteen years I have spent a portion of each year in the country as a missionary. My travels have taken me as far north as North Dakota and as far south as Florida. My father bought a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Nebraska in 1872 for seven dollars an acre and had ten years' time in which to pay for it. The average price at that time for a bushel of wheat was seventy cents, so at that price it would take ten bushels of wheat to pay for one acre. To purchase that same farm to-day the price would be about two hundred and fifty dollars an acre, and with wheat at one dollar a bushel it would take two hundred and fifty bushels to pay for one acre. A fair price at that time for corn was about twenty cents a bushel, and at that price it would take thirty-five bushels to pay for an acre. With the present price of about fifty cents per bushel it would take five hundred bushels to pay for the same land. Allowing for the very best of a crop or about fifty bushels an acre, it would take ten years to pay for the same acre of land, if there were no expense for farming, but all clear profit. The annual payment on the above named farm was $120 and interest, and under the usual rules of sale at the present time of one third down it would take $13,333.33 and the first year's interest on the deferred payments would be $1,600, which is more than the original cost of the farm. Such prices make it well-nigh impossible for a young man on the farm or the average mechanic in the city to get enough money ahead to make the first payment on even a very small tract of land, and to pay rent costs more than it did fifty years ago to buy the land, and no one knows better than the renter the difficulties and hardships he must endure.

Lending a Helping Hand

The student of social conditions in the United States, commencing in colonial days and continuing all the way down to the present time, will learn that the greatest advancement has been made in education, farming, manufacturing, and railroad building when a helping hand has been offered by the national or state governments or some private agency. Before the present free school system was adopted two classes of boys and girls could go to school: those who had wealthy parents, and those who would confess that they were paupers; and as there were but few of the former, and not many would confess to being paupers, the number that secured a common school education was very small. By taxing all the property of the state the burden was made light for all, and the whole state was benefited by having a better class of citizens. Many of our most useful men and women in the Nation and church owe their success to the fact that in time of need some one extended the "helping hand."

The first attempt to help men to get farms in colonial days and in the early days of our present Government was for the Government to sell, or give, large tracts of land to some influential person, or some land company, and they would rent or sell it to those who wished to farm, the sale price was usually about two dollars an acre. There was a feeling in that early day among the ruling class that there must be a gulf between them and the common people. As the intelligence of the people increased and the spirit of democracy spread among them they wanted to deal direct with the Government and so laws were passed by Congress to sell the land direct to the people at two dollars an acre. The next step was the preemption law by which a person obtained one hundred and sixty acres for one dollar and a quarter an acre after six months' residence, and certain improvements required by the Government.

After a number of years' trial of the preemption law it worked so well that it was improved on by Congress passing the homestead law, which required five years' residence and certain stipulated improvements. The cost of filing the papers and obtaining the deed was fourteen dollars. The first homestead filing was made in Nebraska on January 1, 1863. The law for timber claims was passed by Congress in the early eighties by which a person could obtain one hundred and sixty acres by planting forty acres or more with trees. In the irrigated districts the cost of the dam and other improvements is assessed against the land of the district, and on that basis the price is fixed, with ten years in which to make the payments.

The latest law of special importance to the farmer in helping him to purchase a farm is the land bank law, by which the Government gives assistance through the bank, the loan running from five to thirty-five years, the farm being security for deferred payments. In all the above plans to help the farmer obtain a home, the "helping hand" is offered him, and many of our well-to-do farmers living to-day owe their success to the "helping hand" in good faith offered to them.

In manufacturing, the "helping hand" has come by tariff laws to keep out foreign competition, which makes it possible to obtain a higher price for the articles and exclusive control of the market. Patents are given by the Federal Government which give to the patentee the exclusive right for seventeen years to manufacture the article. Sometimes a bonus is given on manufactured articles, and exemption from taxation for a number of years for a factory is sometimes given as an inducement to build and operate one.

The "helping hand" has been extended to railroad companies to build roads, the Union Pacific Railroad received twelve million acres of land from the Federal Government and $60,000,000 in money to help build the road a distance of 1,046 miles, and several other companies received large tracts for similar purposes.

Help in Time of Need

The giving of help in time of need is a gospel principle, and the nearer individuals, families, nations, and churches conform to that principle the greater is their measure of success. Our heavenly Father, in giving us instructions about stewardships and equality about temporal things, concludes with the following language, "Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.)

To help our people purchase land so that they can have homes and be able to produce their own living and have a surplus to sell to others is one of the problems to solve in our day, and our heavenly Father in latter-day revelation has given us instructions how we may accomplish what he has designed for the benefit of his people:

"The conditions surrounding the work, the increase of the membership of the church, the increasing desire for gathering together, and the necessity existing for the obtaining places for settlement in the regions round about, under the existing laws of the United States, and especially the State of Missouri, require that the bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities where settlements may be made and may lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized." —Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1.

Organization

In paragraph three of the same section the Lord gives further instruction about organization:

"The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church, and such other officers as the bishop may call together, with whom he may confer in council, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure; and they will be guided by the Spirit of wisdom and revelation to do the work intrusted to their care."

I have italicized the last phrase because that is the most important part of that paragraph; the promise of the Lord is that they who do the work will be guided by the Spirit of wisdom and revelation. In obedience to that command, Bishop E. L. Kelley called together the men designated and organized the United Order of Enoch and the order was granted a charter by the State of Missouri. The following is the introductory clause of the Articles of Association:

"The United Order of Enoch is a helping and benevolent association, organized for the benefit of the poor and needy, dispensing its charities by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright, and industrious in a financial, educational, and social way, with those who are more fortunate, and the supplying of stewardships and homes or inheritances to the worthy who may lack."

The above paragraph is full of the spirit of the gospel. It breathes forth the Christ idea. The order has done a great many good and helpful things in a quiet way, but the largest effort to help the Saints was the purchase of about eighty acres, twelve blocks south of the courthouse in Independence, and laid out as Summit Addition. Some of it was platted in acre tracts, but most of it in regular city lot sizes, and some reserved for special purposes. Altogether there is room for more than two hundred families, and at present there is a sufficient number of homes so that there is a good branch, also Sunday school and Religio. The prices for lots are reasonable, the payments are easy, and there is no fear of foreclosure by a real estate shark, if the purchaser becomes financially unfortunate, and it makes it a solid Latter Day Saint community.

During the past summer the order purchased seventy-three acres that joins to the southeast part of the city, and no doubt the Bishop, who is the head of the order, has some good purpose in view for the benefit of the Saints.

An Order of Enoch was organized at Lamoni, and although the writer is not familiar with its history, there is no doubt but what it has been rendering a helpful and useful service in that stake. As the righteousness of the Saints increases and we eliminate selfishness and become more generous with our material wealth to help these orders, a greater work will be accomplished and many assisted to secure homes and relieved from the fear of poverty.

Small Tracts of Land

Near cities farm land is always high because of the better markets for what is produced, and that is just as true in Jackson County as in other parts of the country and it will be necessary to change from general farming by most who may locate in the county, especially near the cities of Kansas City and Independence, to specialties, such as poultry raising, bee culture, fruit growing, and truck gardening.

As a result of my own personal experience and what I have learned among farmers by observation, I can speak with greater certainty about poultry raising. Common, ordinary hens, with reasonable care, will produce in eggs about ten dozen per year, and with the number of chickens raised, it is a safe estimate to say that the value of a hen in money each year is about two dollars and fifty cents. I know one sister who in several successive years sold about nine hundred dollars' worth of eggs and chickens from four hundred hens. This was done in addition to her household duties, which is more than some farmers make from eighty acres of land. When she paid her husband a reasonable price for the feed used, it left her an income of about fifty dollars per month, a nice little sum for pin money; and in addition to this work she is one of the most active church and Sunday school workers in the State, and she does not neglect her home, as every missionary knows who has visited it. If a woman can make such good success with a good husband to help her, what ought a man do with a good wife, and he devote all his time to it; and if he raised his own feed his profits would be that much larger. Poultry raising, to be successful, is a proposition of how many a family can properly care for. Five hundred will bring in a gross income of more than one thousand dollars, and in addition the family has its own milk and butter and fruit and vegetables, which is more than the average mechanic working for a daily wage can earn in a year, and he is removed from the fear of strikes and lockouts and of being discharged when old age comes on. The man who understands bee culture, fruit growing, and truck farming can make it a success, if he is industrious and attends to it in a businesslike way, but he will fail if he loafs on the job.

Who Shall Be Helped?

The unfortunate victim of his own folly of bad habits, or of the wickedness of others, cannot be turned away when he asks for food. Mosiah informs us that God will not accept that as an excuse for withholding food from the hungry (Mosiah 2: 29-32), but it is altogether another proposition when it is a business matter of putting valuable property worth several thousand dollars into the possession of inexperienced and perhaps sometimes men of indolent habits. Before men should be put in possession of valuable land they should have well developed certain good habits and qualifications. They should be honest, industrious, and economical; lacking those habits it is a sure guaranty that they will fail. Efficiency is an absolute qualification for success, and that condition is attained by learning to do by practical work the thing to be engaged in. Mechanics will spend four years or more to learn their trades; school-teachers, doctors, lawyers, and other professional men will spend several years in preparing to follow their professions, and it is only fair and good business that before men are put in possession of valuable land by the Bishop or the Order of Enoch, that they should have had experience, or be willing to get the experience by working with others who can be their teachers—and that they have habits that make for success. Without such precaution our efforts to help our people to get homes on the land would be a failure. It is not our province to write of rules and regulations concerning the land that belongs to the bishopric, and we have no desire to invade their domain. They are competent for that work.

Our conclusion is, as we began this article, that the spirit of the gospel is one of helpfulness to the group through the spirit of cooperation, seeking the good of all, and we must make ourselves worthy members of the group by living the simple, honest, industrious life that Jesus would have us live; and if we do not, we are sure to fail.

Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work

By J. A. Koehler

A series of articles on some of the most momentous of present-day problems.

PART 8.—ETHICAL EVOLUTION

The Factors in Agency

Agency is the power of choice, or of self-determination; the power to act freely in a moral sense. In moral action there are two factors: volition and intention. Intention is the settled direction of the mind towards an accomplishment. Volition is the active exercise of will; it is the will terminating deliberation by a choice or decision. If there is to be action, there must be something which gives rise to action, or towards which action is directed, or in view of which action takes place. Considered from this angle, the factors in agency are (1) the mind or ego, and (2) the things concerning which the mind has desires and forms intentions. These were discussed sufficiently for our purpose under "character and environment." A few additional observations should be made.

Mind is that which manifests itself in knowing, feeling, and willing. These in turn are factors in agency. Feelings are agitations, or impulses of the mind. They are either pleasurable or painful. Under normal conditions pleasurable feelings are the incentives to life-supporting acts, and painful feelings are the deterrents from life-destroying acts. Both painful and pleasurable feelings are the mind relating the body to things without. Feeling and intellect, then, are related to each other. To come to be able to interpret the meaning of pleasurable and painful feelings is to come to have intelligence. The power of the mind to perceive what adjustments should be made under the pressure of pleasurable or painful feelings is the groundwork of self-determining acts: i. e., of agency.

There is a difference between (1) organic feelings or sensations designed to stimulate adjustments affecting the life of the body, and (2) feelings which arise from cultivated social tastes, or acquired habits. Gastronomical satisfactions and moral satisfactions are quite two different things. Moral satisfactions often demand the sacrificing of both gastronomical and social pleasures. There is a vast difference between the pain arising from eating green apples and the pain arising from an outraged conscience. The former will arise whether we perceive the relations or not, but the latter can arise only from a perception or a comprehension of duty, i. e., from moral evaluations.

Social tastes and other acquired habits and tastes bear immediately upon agency. It is true here also that consciousness attends to the pleasurable and away from the painful; and it is therefore true that here also we incline to do the pleasurable and not to do the painful.

A young man who is betrothed to a young woman may have also a conviction that he should unite with the church. But this act would alienate him from his fiancée. Here are pleasurable feelings, to promote one of which means the sacrificing of other satisfactions. Just how the action of will will terminate depends (1) upon the power of the mind to perceive what adjustment should be made in such a circumstance, and (2) upon the moral tendency of the individual. The power of the mind to judge depends upon the scope and the depths of the comprehension of relations as well as the data at hand, or the content of consciousness. Moral tendencies depend not only upon intellectual achievement, but also upon the power of will (the manner in which it has been trained) and upon hereditary and social influences or acquired tastes. All of these combine to determine the estimate that will be placed upon the immediate and remote satisfactions that two courses of action promise to yield.

Intellectual achievement presents difficulties, but moral tendencies often present temptations. Difficulties may give rise to temptations which bear upon the training of the will, but they are not the fruit of natural conditions. It is a mistake to suppose that moral development demands temptation. There is nothing in nature to justify this inference. A perfect plant is best developed under perfect conditions. A perfect article is made with perfect tools. A perfect loaf of bread can be produced only under ideal influences. To say that moral perfection cannot arise without temptation is to say that man cannot walk in a straightforward course without being subject to influences calculated or designed to draw him away from a straightforward course. "A man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." God, that which is good, tempteth no man. God is not tempted. (James 1: 13, 14.)

Temptations arise from a miscarriage of nature's plans. If this were not true, an ideal society would be less adapted to man's salvation than is a perverted society. The Christian doctrine of "the gathering" and of "stewardships," or ideal economic relations, is grounded in the principle that nature can best work out her purposes under natural conditions. All the specifications of the gospel law of stewardships are designed to restore society to natural conditions. Natural conditions are pleasurable conditions. As Zion conditions are approached, requirements which now seem painful to some, will present pleasurable aspects, and men will become more and more disposed or inclined to fulfill them as the ideal is approached. In other words, Zion and stewardships present conditions favorable to the highest morality.

This brings us directly to the consideration of knowledge in relation to morals. Knowledge is the sum total of the cognitive powers and processes. To have a high sense of moral responsibility is to be capable of fine discriminations; and this is conditioned in knowing. It is patent that one cannot determine himself to the doing of a thing of which he has no knowledge or is unaware. Therefore where the conditions of knowledge do not exist, there can be no agency. "As many as have sinned without the law shall also perish without the law." (Romans 2: 12.) The acquisition of knowledge and the deepening of the powers of comprehension are essential to a high moral development.

"The measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ" connotes the highest possible moral condition. This being true, Christian duty involves the training of the intellect, the acquisition of knowledge relating to all questions bearing upon human development. And if Christian doctrine is adapted to the purpose of effecting the Christ-manhood, it must take into account the need of mental training and specific adjustments or discipline which issue in this product. That it does this is the burden of Paul's admonition in Hebrews 5: 11-14.

The function of preaching or of teaching is peculiarly adapted to the purpose of imparting knowledge. The specific duty of the ministry is to preach and to teach. (Mark 16: 15; Matthew 28: 19, 20.) But the ministry cannot teach what it does not know. To teach, it must first become informed. Hence the instruction: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Timothy 2: 15, et al.) And again: "I give unto you a commandment that you teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and perplexities of nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I called you, and the mission with which I commissioned you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21. See also paragraphs 36 and 39. These requirements are emphasized and reinforced in different ways and places and at different times.

The different feelings men have concerning stewardships, for example, are due to their varied training and experience. If the training has given rise to tastes for other forms of economic activity, stewardship proposals will give rise to unpleasant feelings and will likely be discredited. And if in addition to this the knowledge of the principles of social life in general and economics in particular is very limited, and if the bearing that different modes of activity have upon the outcome of human experience is not clearly comprehended, stewardship proposals are doubly sure to be misinterpreted and assimilated to prior conceptions of life. To the average person any statement of principle means to them something approximating if not identical with what they had in mind before. The ministry in particular and the membership of the church in general are no exception to the rule; and hence arose the necessity for this instruction to the church: "In consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly concerning their duty and the things which I require at their hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3. They were not "united according to the law of the celestial kingdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2), but according to what their inadequate knowledge caused them to read into the law. With the passing years and the accumulated experience and knowledge of social principles, a more widespread and adequate knowledge of stewardships is coming to be had. And it is certainly to be hoped that the near future will give to the world a concrete expression of the righteousness of the kingdom in relation to economic life. A high moral economic life is conditioned in part in knowing.

A high morality is conditioned in self-consciousness. Self-consciousness means that the individual is aware of the fact that he has within himself the power to find out what is, to feel, and to act. "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves how that Jesus Christ is in you . . . ?"—2 Corinthians 13: 5.

It is easy to become aware of objects without, for they present themselves to consciousness through the senses, whether we will or not. But to find out by introspection that "I" am and how I am, that is, to measure my own worth in the light of my own basis of judgment, requires the closest kind of looking inward to see what is going on there: to make self an object of thought.

But then the power to introspect is itself conditioned in the content of consciousness. If there is nothing in consciousness, we may not become self-conscious. The degree or extent to which one may become self-conscious is the measure of his intellectuality.

When one sees within himself a conscious entity acting upon and being acted upon by an external environment, and when he judges the manner in which the indwelling self acts under the influence of its environment, he is a highly self-conscious person.

There could be no moral element in man if he were not constructed with a mind that could contemplate itself. This is what God made when he made man: A self-conscious power within itself to be aware, to feel, and to will. And the measure of one's Christian manhood is the measure in which this power is exercised for the purpose of self-discipline.

The Elements of a Moral Situation

The elements of a moral act are (1) knowledge, and (2) choice. Choice presupposes freedom to act. Sometimes a third factor must be taken into account in judging morality.

The agent must know what he is about; he must have some idea of what he is doing. It follows, therefore, that he must not be an infant, or insane, or so immature in judgment as to have no idea of what he is about. We do not exact judgment of those whose condition makes judgment impossible. But the greater the possibility of knowing, the more is exacted. Obviously, the higher the intellectual development, the greater the moral possibilities.

A religious people who are guided by tradition, who judge actions by the mere rule, "It is written," cannot be a highly moral people.

In the second place some choice, or wish, or preference must be made. Two courses of action must be presented to consciousness and the person must be free to choose between them. There is always an alternative; it may be merely to do or not to do, but it is an alternative; a choice may be made.

Man's nature—his sensibilities and his intellect—places him under the necessity of constantly choosing; he must make choices of ends to be attained, of things to be sought after. What is chosen as an end, what is preferred, will be determined by the comparative amount of pleasure or pain a given thing promises to yield. A man may not be able to do what he chooses to do; physical limitations or other obstacles may prevent the will from executing the purpose; but the choice is made, and that choice measures a man's moral standing. Every man is free to choose what he wishes to do, and in that sense every man has the power of self-determination and is a moral being.

A third element must be taken into account in judging moral action; that is, the external influences which restrain or inhibit the action of the will, the freedom to set one's self to the doing of the thing chosen. "He that looketh upon a woman to lust after her" is guilty of adultery, even though certain considerations enter in to inhibit or restrain the action of the will.

Again, there are in the church men who would fulfill the stewardship law, but are prevented by conditions over which they have no control. They have made a choice, and their moral standing is to be judged in part by what it is their purpose to do. The opportunity to contract stewardship relations bears upon the individual's morality.

There is quite a difference between (1) comparing present satisfactions with future pains and restraining the will because one act may prove too costly and (2) in evaluating ways of acting with a view to choosing the one that proves to have a prior claim. One aims to regulate acts merely to avoid pains, and the other aims to control the mind in order to give "self" standing. Ultimately satisfactions or pains will depend upon self's estimate of self. He who wills to do what conscience approves regardless of immediate consequences and in view of the larger remote satisfactions is a highly moral man. The Latter Day Saint who computes his annual tithes from the hope of escaping the "burning" is not a highly moral man. He who feeds the poor and clothes the naked because conscience approves such conduct, and even though he may have no thought of a personal God who will say, "Enter into the joy of thy Lord," is a more highly moral man. Morality consists not in ideas of persons and names and places, but in comprehensions of and faithfulness to duty. We do not mean that men should act without regard to their own interests; we do mean that man must come to love the cause of humanity, and they must find the satisfaction for which the soul longs in the consciousness of having had a high regard for others' interests, and of having exerted themselves in this regard from a conviction of right or of duty as well as from a feeling of love of man.

Three Levels of Conduct

The First Level: Conduct first arises from instincts and fundamental needs. The primary needs of man are food, shelter, defense, companionship. If the individual and the race is to survive, these needs must be supplied; reproduction must take place. The purpose of the instincts is to stimulate those acts that are essential (1) to self-preservation and (2) to race preservation.

But the necessities under which men are placed give rise to evaluations of acts as means to ends. In conquest and in defense, men perceive that "in union there is strength"; each can accomplish his purpose better by working with others who have like needs than he can by his individual or unaided efforts. Thus cooperative effort comes to have a higher valuation than individual effort. Instinct leads to cooperation because cooperation serves universal self-interests.

On this level, acts are not moral in purpose, they are self-conscious or instinctual adjustments, nevertheless their effects are valuable to morality. They make for a more rational life—a social life. The forces of instinct lead to activities which elevate men and knit them together in sympathies. Courtship implies adaptation: adaptation that comes to be highly purposive. It implies discrimination; it is an effort to please, and is therefore a strong socializing factor. Motherhood issues in purposive adaptations, in an adjustment of self acts to others' good. It is therefore important to socialization and morality.

Even on the level of instinct, conduct becomes more or less rational and also social. In conduct on this level the elements of character are formed which are necessary to the highest morality. First, men come to discriminate between good and bad acts; and second, to control their individual conduct—to adjust individual acts to social needs. The kind of adjustments to which instinct leads are indices to the relations that will be sustained when the last stages of ethical evolution are reached.

On the second level conduct is regulated by the standards of society. Here men seek some good which is social. Men seek the welfare of the group because they conceive their own good to be dependent upon the observance of custom. The individual acts for the group because he is of the group, and group security is his security. This is the customary level.

In all groups there are certain ways of acting which are common to all: e. g., all are expected to pass to the right on highways. These are the approved ways of acting, and are handed down from one generation to another. They imply the judgment of the group that they are to be followed, and men observe them because they are group standards. The welfare of the group is regarded as in some way wrapped up in them, though the exact bearing may not be made a matter of consideration by the individual. It is the custom of the group, and that is enough.

The members of a group embody in custom what they think to be important. In so far as the individual acts in accordance with these customs, he is a moral man. Customs may not be rational; indeed they may be hurtful; but they are customs, and both the group and the individual judge individual conduct by these customs. This level is a step in advance of the level of instinct, but it is not a high level.

Moral acts are acts of the mind's own free choice and volition. Not until men reach the level of conscience can they be said to be highly moral. On the level of conscience, conduct is reflective morality; it is both rational and social; nevertheless instinct and custom have something to do with conduct on this level too.

On the third level, conduct is necessarily critical; men are given to self-examination; men act in given ways because certain ways are more highly to be admired than others. Here the individual recognizes the right and chooses it freely, devotes himself to it heartily, and seeks a progressive social development in which every member of society shall share. Self-regarding feelings give way to others' regarding feelings.

Society is the sum of the formal relations in which associating individuals are bound together. When we say that the individual seeks "a social development," we do not mean that he loses sight of his own interests and welfare and therefore fails to seek them, but rather that in self-contemplation he finds that his own welfare is connected up with the lives of others and that he cannot be a really good man by himself, but that the goodness of which his own conscience approves consists in seeking the good of others.

In this relation we quote from Ethics by Dewey and Tufts, page 148, whose plan of argument we have followed in this chapter. "The morality of to-day does not ignore spiritual values; it aims rather to use them to give fuller meaning to all experience. It does not abandon law in seeking freedom, or ignore duty because it is discovered by reason. Above all, it is seeking to bring about in a more intimate fashion that supremacy of the moral order in all human relations for which the church theoretically is contending. And in recent times we are appreciating more thoroughly that the individual cannot attain a full moral life by himself. Only as he is a member of a moral society can he find scope and support for full development of will. In concrete phrase, it is just as necessary to improve the general social environment in which men, women, and children are to live, in order to make better individuals, as it is to improve the individual order to get a better society." Mr. Dewey and Mr. Tufts are respectively professors of philosophy in Columbia University and the University of Chicago.

We have the judgment of the highest authorities on moral conduct in support of the propositions of Christianity which are: (1) That the man who loves God will consecrate himself and his resources to the purpose of developing a highly moral social order, and (2) that this high moral social order, the essence of which is "stewardships," is essential "to the salvation of men until I come." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:1.)

But we do not expect stewardships to arise except where the morality of people reaches the level of conscience. It is not uncommon to hear church men express the wish that some means could be devised for purchasing commodities at a lower price. And when we consider the further fact that the idea of "the Lord's storehouse" is assimilated to their idea of a "feed bin" containing a never-ending and sure supply of breadstuffs at a reduced price—a mere grocery store of some kind—it is not to be wondered that progress towards Zionic ideals is so very slow.

Factors in the Third Level

The factors at work on the third level are (1) self-consciousness and (2) criticism. There is an awareness of a personal indwelling self that is seeking to realize a union or harmony with the universe. Self-consciousness implies self-contemplation. But in contemplating self and its needs, one cannot escape judgment upon the relationship that each man sustains to others. He comes to recognize the claim that "right" and "good" have upon all men in common. He knows that he is free and responsible too. And "as he identifies himself heartily with it (the good) he becomes sincerely and genuinely moral." "Reverence, duty, and love for what is good, become quickening emotions."

A high morality demands a general criticism of the social order in order to discover its virtues and defects with a view or purpose of promoting one and overcoming the other. This sort of individualism is both desirable and necessary. Each individual in his own initiative and responsibility, should seek to find and establish the "good"; he must not be a mere customary moralist. Nevertheless, it is essential that the individual be socialized—that his sympathies shall go out for others and his activities be made to fit in with the activities of other men for the common good.

If there is a widespread tendency to self-examination and to a criticism of the social order, and a consequent widespread conception of the "good" and "right," there will be a cumulative effort to effect a progressive social development.

The Culmination

All of this implies movement in the direction of a common brotherhood. The facts of ethical evolution may not enable men to anticipate the divine law of stewardships, but certainly they should enable them to recognize its divinity when it is revealed. Moral development is development towards a society in which each seeks to realize a fullness of life by acting in ways that make it possible for the lives of all to be made complete.

The adjustments required by the gospel law, the celestial law, must be related by the individual to himself. And he must come to have a desire for these relations—such a desire as will cause him to will in accordance with them. In this way alone can Zion come into being. It cannot have an existence independent of the mind. But the mind cannot grasp what is beyond its power, therefore the training of the intellect is essential to high morals and that high moral order we call "Zion." But equally important is the matter of cultivating a taste, an appetite, a desire, a preference for the things which make for universal justice, for equity, for opportunity to all, for the welfare and comfort of all mankind.

THE STAFF

Edited by Arthur H. Mills, 1514 West Short St., Independence, Mo.

Again, Why the Saxophone?

We almost feel like asking our readers' pardon for again writing on this subject. We know that many of them will feel that its weight and rank do not warrant a protracted consideration of it. But we deeply regret the necessity that impels us again to discuss it. Were it not that our former article was misunderstood and misconstrued, and thereby its intent and purpose thwarted in a measure, we should be content to rest upon what we formerly wrote. Therefore we have deemed it necessary and wise to again write and reiterate our former statements, doing so with the sole object of reestablishing them. Our further examination of the ground formerly taken has more than convinced us in the correctness of our positions, and therefore we unhesitatingly reaffirm all that we previously stated.

To begin with, what was our motive in writing this former article? It certainly was not to condemn the saxophone in any way. In fact, there is no musical instrument in existence, from the humble Jews'-harp up, that we desire to condemn in the slightest degree. Each has been devised by man as a medium upon which he might musically express himself, and therefore, as such, it is entitled to respect as a factor in his evolution. Far from condemning the saxophone, we have frequently aided and encouraged not a few amateur saxophonists throughout the church in their efforts upon this instrument, because we appreciated the fact that it was their instrument, upon which they were doing their best to give expression to their musical impulses.

What we wrote was in no sense against the saxophone as an instrument, but it was against the present abnormal craze existing in regard to it, the undue estimation being placed upon it, and the many mistakes being made regarding its place and rank.

Our motive in writing was wholly an unselfish one. We felt the Saints should be instructed and cautioned regarding this abnormal craze, that they might not be unduly influenced by it. We desired that they should know concerning the instrument, its character and limitations. We felt that if proper knowledge were had concerning it that many mistakes might be avoided and disappointment averted.

We have never maintained that the saxophone was an instrument without quality. Skillfully played and employed in its proper place it has its individual characteristics and qualities, which give it its proper value in the ranks of musical instruments. What this place is in these ranks we shall consider later on in this article. Meanwhile, let us confidently affirm that having heard the instrument played by several of the recognized "artists," and having carefully investigated its status, we really feel qualified to write about it broadly as well as impartially.

We believe it may be timely at this point to define just what a musical "craze" really is, and we will do so by describing those that came under our observation in the last score of years, reference to which we also made in our former article. First, there was the craze for the mandolin, and we well remember when literally hundreds of people were buying these instruments and trying with varying success to master them. Mandolin music was then heard in every conceivable style and degree of perfection, or imperfection. Almost everything in the entire literature of music, from the simplest waltz to the most complex fantasy or rhapsody was essayed upon it. At the height of its craze it enjoyed a most extravagant degree of popularity.

But this craze had scarcely subsided before society turned to the Hawaiian musical novelties, which included the diminutive ukulele, and for a few years this strummy little guitar was heard in all possible quarters: at picnics, parties, boat rides, hay rides, moonlight drives, outings, it was heard ad infinitum. So absurd did this craze become that humorists, cartoonists, and jokesmiths everywhere made the instrument the butt of their wit and ridicule.

But this mania, too, faded away into obscurity, and there is with us now the saxophone craze which, in spite of the financial cost involved, has reached quite remarkable proportions. One could buy a mandolin or a ukulele for a few dollars, but the purchase of a saxophone involves a very respectable outlay of money, in view of which the craze for it is all the more surprising.

Contemporary with these crazes there has always existed the various and successive crazes for certain popular songs that have been taken up by the public. Song after song has been brought out and people would forget their infatuation for one song to madly take up with and rave over another. Very few of these songs had any saving merit to entitle them to the adoration of the people, or to the life it more or less briefly enjoyed.

What has been the culmination of all these successive crazes? How many mandolins are still being played to testify to the one-time popularity of the instrument? Who is it to-day that cares to bring his ukulele out of the garret into serious public service? How many of the songs that were sung ad nauseum have endured as worthy of life and a place in the musical annals of society? And we confidently predict that the present saxophone craze will follow the route of its predecessors, and the public, having been satiated to the point of repletion, will experience the customary revulsion. Then, no doubt, the instrument will unjustly (for a time at least) suffer from the disfavor of the public's overly sated taste. But do our musical workers, who above all other people should have serious aims in music, want to be mere flotsam and jetsam on the wave of this or any other craze? We most certainly think not. The claim has been made that "the saxophone has come to stay." Let time, the universal arbiter of the destinies of all things, determine this. We believe that, so far as its proper place is concerned, it will and should stay; but so far as its unnatural and improper use are concerned, we just as confidently predict that it will go to stay.

We have therefore felt impelled to warn the Saints against being unduly influenced by this abnormal craze. Already some have been injudiciously affected by it. From many quarters of the church we learn of our musical workers taking up this instrument. Their intentions are unquestionably of the best; they desire to cultivate their musical gifts and master a musical instrument. But we cannot help but fear that some of them will fail to find that which they seek and have a right to expect.

Now, what is the proper place for the saxophone? It is wholly a band instrument, and as such it forms an excellent addition to the instrumentation of the military band. It adds tone color and timbre, and forms an excellent link between the reed, and the brass sections of the band. It may enter into combinations with other band instruments very effectually, or a number of saxophones may be grouped together with good results. As a solo instrument, if employed judiciously and moderately, it is agreeable and enjoyable; but if heard to excess it is tiresome. Its peculiar quality and color, like those of the oboe, English horn, and bassoon, tend to cloy if heard too much. We heartily commend it in its proper place and those of our musical workers who desire to learn and use it in band work will doubtless realize their anticipations regarding it.

As an orchestral instrument the saxophone has never been and probably never will be accepted and universally recognized except for occasional special effects. This is due to its distinctive individuality of tone coloring, which has not proved fortunate in the orchestral scheme. Let it be understood at this juncture that there are also other band instruments that are not found acceptable in the orchestra. Some of the modern composers have provided place for it in some of their operatic scores. But this is not true in an unrestricted sense. These composers have employed it incidentally and have resorted to it for definite, special, peculiar effects in certain parts of their operas. Usually, the instrument was used only at those certain places, remaining quiet during the remainder of the operas. This is also true of several other instruments that have been likewise employed for special effects. But in spite of the fact that some of these composers have occasionally scored for it in their compositions, the incontrovertible fact remains: these incidental innovations have not resulted in winning a place in the orchestra for the saxophone. None of the modern orchestras of standing recognize it or employ it; the foremost publishers of orchestral scores do not list it in the instrumentation they score for. It has remained for the "novelty" orchestra and the jazz orchestra to bring it into the prominence it now occupies.

Now, wherein lies the necessity for the word of caution and instruction regarding this instrument? We certainly would not be so insistent were there no need for it. But the very seriousness of our musical problem as a church makes us feel the urge to properly advise our people, even in a seemingly unimportant matter as this. Our position makes us know that all over the church our young people are eager to "cultivate the gifts of music." They almost universally have a twofold object in doing so. One is that they desire to develop their God-given talents. The other object is still more laudable: they desire to use these talents in the services of God's church. We know that this lofty motive animates a great many of our young people and we feel to aid and advise them that they may do this most wisely. We know that the saxophone does not offer to such the advantages that some other instruments present. As a solo instrument in the home its possibilities are much less than many other instruments. Not being in the regular orchestral scheme, orchestral arrangements do not include parts for it, and if it plays in our orchestras it must play parts assigned to other instruments. It will not do to have more than a very few in any orchestra, lest they impart an unfortunate tone color and quality to the orchestral balance as a whole. Some of our church orchestras are already overburdened with them. Therefore our young musical workers who aspire to places in our church orchestras should be cautious in their choice of this instrument, lest they may find disappointment awaiting them.

We trust that we shall be understood as writing in the spirit of helpfulness and counsel, and not in the spirit of criticism. Our desire is to see the musical work of the church properly develop along right lines, and we have no greater wish than this.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Our Own Musicians and What They Are Doing

We know the musical forces of the church everywhere will be keenly interested in knowing what their fellow musical workers and musicians are doing; and so from time to time we shall include in this department such interesting items concerning them as we are able to obtain. It is often hard to get these items: the musicians and workers themselves often feel a little bit modest about telling of themselves, but we hope they will "get over this" and let us know anyway. But we urge upon everyone in the church to send us interesting items concerning the musical activities of our church people. Remember, this call is to everybody (to everybody—do you hear me?), and choristers, orchestra leaders, choir members, branch officials, missionaries, and everybody else is wanted to become "reporters" in this respect and send us in items of this kind. Don't stop because you feel you may not be able to get the account in "just so" order; send us the items anyway and we will write them up; and if you haven't a postage stamp on hand, send them on a postal card. We want to know, and the whole church wants to know, what our musical workers are doing.

A. H. M.

James R. Houghton, who was quite prominent in student activities in Graceland College for the past two years, is now attending the State University of Iowa, where he is "majoring" in music. He is acting as director for two choirs in Iowa City and has been asked to sing the bass solo parts in "The Messiah" when it is rendered there during the Christmas season. He recently went to Davenport, Iowa, to attend the conference of the Eastern Iowa District there, and also to attend a performance of the Scotti Opera Company, which gave a "one night stand" there at that time. He took advantage of the occasion to secure an interview with Mr. Scotti, the famous basso and principal of the company, who asked him to sing, and who gave him great encouragement, assuring him that he possessed a voice of rare quality. Madam Louisa Tetrizzini, the great dramatic soprano, was also present at this time and commended Brother Houghton equally highly, and then sang for him a brief number, which, of course, was most highly appreciated, not only for the exquisite way in which it was sung, but for the kindly and interested condescension of this great singer for Brother Houghton. But the best thing we have to say about Brother Houghton is that he expects to devote his developed talents and powers to the service of the church.

Henrietta Davis (Mrs.) is a mighty busy woman these days. About six months ago she accepted appointment as chorister of the Detroit District, which is quite an important one in the musical possibilities of the church. At the time of her appointment she had just honorably completed the post graduate course in voice at the Detroit Conservatory of Music (she had graduated from this institution the year before), taking also special work in the course of musical supervision in public schools. She writes that she is again going on with her work this year at the conservatory, looking towards her musical degree. The spirit of cultivating gifts and powers until one stands preeminently equipped, as evidenced by Sister Davis, is a most admirable one. Sister Davis has a big work before her in her district. Detroit itself, although now under the amalgamation plan, was composed of several separate branches. Sister Davis is in charge of the music work of all the church congregations in Detroit. She has some extensive plans for the musical development of the church interests in Detroit, which if supported and carried out, will result in very material advancement in the musical interests there.

Paul N. Craig. Who does not know who he is? Brother Craig, who has served as instructor in voice at Graceland for several years, obtained leave of absence from the school a little over a year ago, that he might further pursue his studies under competent masters in the East. All of last year he studied advanced voice work under Percy Hemus, of New York, and piano and theory under Ernest Hartmann, of Philadelphia. We learn that he is to continue his studies another year, and understand that he is to undertake organ and theory under Mr. Hartmann in Philadelphia, and voice in New York. He and Sister Craig (we must not forget Jeanette in this account) live in Philadelphia, and he makes regular trips to the metropolis each week for his voice work. Sister Craig (whom many will remember as the daughter of Bishop E. L. Kelley) has also pursued her studies in piano and theory under Mr. Hartmann.

Louise Evans is the chorister of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, and is a progressive, energetic worker in the musical affairs of her district; we know, because we have seen her in her work. She, too, has constructive plans for the musical work of her district. One particularly commendable effort she succeeded in was the production and rendition of the cantata, "Daniel," at the last reunion of the district in August last, which was given by the voices from the choirs of the district. It was a most creditable production. Sister Evans plans to visit all the branches of her district in her scheme of developing each choir and orchestra individually, so that each may not only serve its local branch more efficiently, but that there may be had combined work at the general gatherings of the district. She is just now concocting plans for the development of a district orchestra, and she further hopes that the rendition of a cantata will be the regular feature of each district reunion.

Ollie Derry has for some years held the post of chorister of the Little Sioux District, doing what work she could, even though she had to make her own way and earn her own livelihood. Sister Derry's district is largely a rural one, some of the branches being "in the country" and none of them in large communities. She can sympathize with some of our other district choristers who labor in districts of this

(Concluded on next page.)

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Just Letters

To a Local Leader

We have your name as superintendent of our department in your branch. We are made happy to know so many good women, all over the church, are lining up with us, for we believe that God has a good work for us to perform which cannot be accomplished by the priesthood alone. Men can do much. The pure life of any man is an asset to the world. But how much greater is that man's influence and contribution to the world when he is backed up by an equally intelligent and equally consecrated woman in his home! His work takes on new life and spirit, and nothing seems impossible of accomplishment! On the other hand, how discouraging it is to even the most enthusiastic worker in the Lord's vineyard (and who is not a worker there?) when the woman of his household is incompetent, vain, careless, or shiftless?

When women can be brought to see that every effort they make to bring up the standards of their homes, make them more efficient, more peaceful, more Christlike, is a distinct and definite factor towards higher standards for the church, a progressive step in response to God's oft-repeated invitation: "Come up higher, oh, my people!" then may we look for the real redemption of Zion—and hardly before!

We feel that all our church women should feel it a personal duty to become cultured, refined, educated, qualified to take their stand in any society and with any student body, able to "give a reason for the hope that is within them," and, as well, show by their daily lives, and the quiet efficiency of their homes that they are intelligently striving to put the most into life, that they may get the most out of it—that is, the most that is of a permanent nature. Many women in the world seem to think life is only a struggle to outdo one's neighbors, to shine in a false social glamor. They do not see that there is no permanency in such a life. It fades away at a breath, while steady mental and spiritual advancement character. Yet Sister Derry's efforts have brought some appreciable results, as all in the district will testify. In her home branch last spring she had the "Glee Club" (composed of the musical forces of the Logan, Iowa, Branch) render the cantata, "The Beatitudes," which brought credit upon the church forces there. Sister Derry and the forces there have also been frequently called upon to aid in the musical activities of the town in many ways. However, the friends of Sister Derry will be pained to learn that she is at present in poor health. Her church labors, in conjunction with her daily vocation, were so exacting that she suffered a breakdown last summer. She forced herself to return to work only again to suffer collapse. We earnestly pray that she may be soon restored to health, for her desires are to continue her labors in the church, and we know that our wishes for her will find response in the hearts of many others.

Pauline Becker and Marcine Smith. Two of our Independence young girls have honored the Saints of Zion, as well as of the entire church, in graduating from the Kansas City Conservatory of Music last June. Sister Becker is the daughter of Bishop J. A. Becker, and she graduated with honors in piano at that time. Sister Smith is the daughter of Brother Ralph G. Smith, for nineteen years organist of the Stone Church, and she received her graduation in voice at the same time as Sister Becker. Both of these enterprising girls are desirous of further developing their gifts. Sister Becker is continuing her work in theory at the conservatory, looking towards her degree in music, while Sister Smith is furthering her study in piano under Mrs. Carl Busch, and in voice under Mrs. Jennie Schultz, both of Kansas City. Incidentally, we have some other young people in Independence, whose musical development we shall chronicle at some future time.

is sure and stable, is eternal in its nature, and thus far more worthy concentrated attention and effort.

We hope the women under your care are awake to this vision of advancement and the value of united study and united action. They are doubtless busy preparing themselves against the time of need. Summer is a good time in which to gather up cast-off clothing, mend, and make over into useful garments. The cold winter is ahead, and if all signs come true, it is liable to be one of extreme want and suffering in some quarters. Saints should heed all warning signs and be prepared against distress and disaster.

Evil is staring our children in the face. The perverted ideas of the present day in regard to morals, the lightness with which virtue, purity, and honesty are treated; the organized forces that destroy both soul and body after overwhelming with tides of temptations—all these warn us parents that we should be studying earnestly, trying to fit ourselves to combat the enemy of our souls by arming ourselves with saving knowledge and true vision, which are the only safe weapons against the unwholesome influences of the hour. Are your women awake to this need?

Before our national and state legislatures are pending measures that will greatly increase the safety and happiness of our homes, and the welfare of those who dwell therein. The vote is before women as an actuality, and which of us can say we are ready to wield that great power with intelligence and wisdom, and with a clear vision of what can be done with it? Shall we not begin at once to study these matters, and prepare ourselves to take our part in making the world better, our homes safer, and our children better protected, physically as well as morally? Groups of our women are studying civic problems, studying the vote and its use, and the governmental and legislative machinery of their towns, States, and Nation, in order that they may know what to do whenever the opportunity comes. (A letter addressed to the Children's Bureau, or the Women's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia asking information in regard to laws and bills, pending and in force, which affect the welfare of women and children, will receive prompt attention, and will bring to you some valuable helps in interesting and instructing your classes.)

Our department is offering three splendid courses for the use of groups of women who desire to study together, or individually. They are simple and yet authoritative and can be relied upon with safety. "Child care" deals with just the simple essentials of the comfort and care of children from year to year as they develop, and gives the mother many other references which will help her to qualify for real motherhood. "Food and the body" is intended to give, in concise and convenient form, the information we all need in regard to eating, the preparation, use, and care of the various elements of nutrition. Much of the ill health of people is caused by ignorance of these matters. "Training in relief and service" is designed for the instruction of those who feel the urge to do somewhat to help their fellow creatures. So far as our church is concerned, our slogan should be to know each other in friendliness before want or trouble shall overtake any of us. Then, in loving sympathy, adjustments may be made which will not hurt feelings, but will only bless both helpers and helped.

Another question outline for study in child training has been running in the HERALD for some time, and may be obtained soon in pamphlet form from headquarters. I refer to "Parents' and Teachers' Problems," based on William Forbush's splendid book, Child Study and Child Training. Trusting that your local is alive to its opportunities, and has lined up for study this season along some of the lines fundamental to our women's work in the church, and that you will be blessed in your efforts as you "go about doing good,"

A. A.

In recognition of her thorough knowledge of practical banking, Miss Margaret Kelley has been elected cashier of the national bank at Dennison, Texas.

To Our Rural Sisters

We are happy to note the ready response which some of our rural sisters are making to our recent invitation to discuss with us their problems—two of which responses we present this issue.

We have never been able to determine exactly in our own minds which sister has the greater advantage in living the life of a Saint—the one who lives close to nature or the one who can mingle most frequently with those of her own faith. Christ represented the church as a vine and branches, through which runs the spirit of life and unity. This spiritual life is possible when the individuals put themselves in touch with the body, and become partakers of the divine feast through voluntary contact. It would seem a distinct deprivation for Saints to live so far from their church centers that they must, of necessity, partake only very infrequently, or not at all, of this "communion with Saints."

On the other hand, those privileged to live in the country have a contact with nature which enlarges the soul and lifts the ideals of the human heart straight to the throne of God, the Creator of the universe and Giver of all its bounties and beauties. With thoughts dwelling upon him, with eyes feasting upon his goodness, with communion untrammelled by false standards of greed and strife, our rural sisters may attain heights of true vision and serenity not easily accessible to those in the midst of crowded cities filled with struggling humanity, eager for material advancement and gain.

These columns may become a meeting place for sisters of both environments, and in mutual love and sympathy may we exchange thoughts that will be of benefit to all. Let us hug no good or blessing selfishly to ourselves, but let us share that which has so generously been given to us. Let us meet here with hands filled with the riches of God, eternal and unlimited in their nature because they are of the realm of spirit and thought; riches which need not be laid down at the call to "Come home!"

A. A.

From the Heart of a Plain Country Woman

Sister of mine out on the farm, may I slip in by your side as you sew, or walk with you along the garden way, and chat about those things that lie closest to our hearts—things that too often we keep in a "holy of holies" while the world goes by and does not know

"What silences we keep, year after year,
With those who are most near to us and dear!"

See, the door to my heart is flung open wide, and if from it shall come to you a helpful message, know full well that it is not from me, but from those friends whose blessing of thought or word or deed I have kept enshrined within my treasure chest; or from that Friend of friends who, day by day, has walked along the way with me.

Oh, sister-heart of mine, what wonderful things lie within our treasure chest of the years! Why do we keep their beauties so closely hidden, even from those "most near to us and dear"?

May we not make this month of Thanksgiving truly such by speaking or writing the gratitude that lies deep within the soul of each of us? Perhaps our friend needs us, the one who once planted a lovely thought within our minds, or the one who cheered us when life was overshadowed, or guided us safely when we would have stumbled. Ah, little can we know what sadness or pain may lie hidden in the heart of our friend, which a word from us may help to demove! Let us write to-day!

For—

"It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you've left undone
That gives you the bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun!"

FLO STERRETT WHITTEMORE.

DRUMMOND, IDAHO, BLACKTAIL RANCH.

What the Mothers Do

Collier's asks what "the ordinary American woman" contributes to her family's and Nation's wealth, although "she never earned any money"; and then goes on to say that the cash value of her service during thirty years averages $115,485. That sum includes the present purchase and preparation of the meals she has served, the garments she has made, the bread, cakes, and pies she has baked, the butter she has churned, the scrubbing, washing, canning, preserving, sweeping, patching, and other household work she had done. It takes no account of the value of her influence in the family or the economies she has effected to save her husband's resources. Only the actual work of her hands is counted. And with that only in mind she has earned $3,649 a year at present prices. The cost of her keep has hardly averaged $1,250 a year—it has been nearer half that. But at that figure her actual net earnings have been $2,400 a year—$72,000 for her lifetime.

Who has that money? Her husband. He has pocketed it year after year as his own, as his personal property. The home may be in her name, but as Collier's says, she has no bank account, no savings, no property investments. What money she gets comes with no excessive willingness from the man who grabs the proceeds of her labor and economies as his own. Can a more selfish seizure of the profits of the matrimonial contract be imagined? Will women ever get their share?—Chicago Journal of Commerce.

A Woman's Influence

No one should ever be able to say of any woman, "She made it easy for a man to do wrong." God never made a woman thus, to pull men down, but to be companion, wife, mother, friend, and inspiration.

I suppose you would call Herodias and her daughter, Salome, "vamps," to-day.

She danced Herod into the pit of perdition, and danced the head of John the Baptist off. Her whole life was given over to evil, self-indulgence, and voluptuous pleasure. It ended in the ruin of the king and the disgrace of his court, the degradation of her own child, and a place in the Bible history as the cruel murderess of the forerunner and cousin of Christ.

Another example of a vampire woman is Drusilla, the mate of Felix, who left her first husband to live with the governor. When the Apostle Paul stood before the pair, he spoke pointedly of morality and future punishment. The governor trembled, but Drusilla was unabashed.

Just as it is possible for women to soar to heights unreached by men, so is it possible for women to fall farther than any man, once they do start downward.

It is within the power of women to make the world anew. They can inspire the noblest instincts of men, and ought to do nothing through their general deportment and manner of dress that would lower the respect in which they are held.

The erring woman of the Bible who is best known is Mary Magdalene. She saw the folly and error of her ways and in penitence of tears sought the feet of Jesus. Looking into her heart, and knowing she was penitent, Jesus said: "Thy sins are forgiven."

Oh, the love which forgets the sin and remembers the sinner, in mercy and compassion. That is the Christianity I am preaching to-day.—Gypsy Smith, in Omaha Bee.

Des Moines Scores a Point

Some weeks ago, there came to our desk a copy of the yearbook which the sisters of the Des Moines Branch have issued. We feel that this scores one for the progressiveness of our Des Moines sisters, and it must surely be an inspiration to others.

The book is neat and artistic in appearance, of sixteen pages, and contains lists of officers, general and local, personnel of various boards and committees, schedule of meetings, constitution and by-laws, and all the usual material which goes to make up an interesting and helpful yearbook.

Their calendar of lectures contains subjects of peculiar interest to women and to Latter Day Saints. Among them are listed the following to be given by prominent workers of the city: "Christian chivalry," "Psychology of child training," "Work of the health center," "The child and its relation to the community," "Philanthropy," "Social settlement work," and "Prevention of incorrigibility in adolescence." Among the lectures to be given by our women are: "Joseph Smith versus the reformers," "Influence of our friends upon our lives," "Parliamentary usages," "Comparative religions," "Home discipline as taught by the Bible," "Modern book review," and "The philosophy of Christ as compared with that of Socrates, Aristotle, and Plato."

Surely all will agree that these subjects are timely and carefully chosen, to not only interest and entertain, but definitely instruct and educate. We wish to congratulate not only the sisters who have so intelligently planned their year's work, but the entire membership of the Des Moines Branch, in that they have such a progressive course of lectures prepared for them by the Women's Department.

The yearbook committee consists of Sister C. T. Kirkwood, Sister T. A. Hougas, and Sister George Davis.

A. A.

A Corner for Rural Women's Problems

In reply to your request for contributions from the rural sisters giving their suggestions as to how the Women's Department may best help the isolated country sisters who are deprived of the opportunities to be found in the larger branches, I would suggest we be given an opportunity to discuss our problems in the Women's Department of the HERALD, where could appear short articles on those subjects that are of special interest to us.

Inquiries or questions might also be sent in to these columns by rural sisters, to which answers by others of the rural districts might also be published.

MINNIE HARDING.

CENTERVILLE, MISSOURI, Rural Route.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush
CHAPTER XXXVI

The Goal, Service for the Kingdom

1. What is it to be a true Christian?
2. What are the two laws of the kingdom?
3. What is love to God?
4. What is love to man?
5. What two qualities are predominant in youth?
6. How may the church cherish the youth's "self-respect"?
7. What other trait is also found in youth?
8. How may this trait be made a means of training for service?
9. Suggest some of the points in training a child to serve.
10. What should be our attitude towards money?
11. How can the youth be led to understand and appreciate real giving?
12. What is the responsibility of the parents in the final steps of consecration?

Under the provisions of a bill passed by the Montana Legislature all bachelors in that State will be compelled to pay a tax of $3 per year, the proceeds of which will be paid into the widows' pension fund.

During the period of the World War, France employed nearly a million women, the majority of whom were employed in munition factories.

LETTERS

An Indian on the Book of Mormon

Brother Northrup makes some interesting comparisons between the traditions of his forefathers and the record set forth in the Book of Mormon.

I realize that I have quite a problem, but there is no reward without labor. But to get down to the work, I have been comparing the Book of Mormon with our legends and traditions, and find as far as I've gone that of a truth the Book of Mormon is a record of God's dealings with our ancestors, for it tells us that Christ appeared to the people of this continent and taught the same grand truths here as he did to the people of the Old World, and ascended into heaven.

The so-called pagan Chippewa Indians have a religion which they claim was given them by Ge-ache Mani-do, or the Great Spirit, the Chippewa name for God. They believe in a hereafter, when the Indian would be rewarded according to the life he lived here on earth. Truly it is wonderful. Here we have a people who are the descendants of a highly enlightened race who were favored of God, and had revelations from him, so that they attained a high form of civilization, (evidences of which modern science is now unearthing) but on account of transgression, God punished them and put a curse upon them, but with the promise that He would not forsake them altogether; that in the last days, when they forsook their evil ways, God would bless them again as his people. Wonderful! When we have been taught that this people, this race, was steeped in utter ignorance and are sunworshippers, when, in reality, their legends and traditions contain parts of the everlasting truth!

For we have legends which tell us that when Christ, or God, appeared to our ancestors he chose twelve disciples and told the people that there was but one God who created all things, and that the end of the world would come, and after teaching the people, he ascended into heaven, but would come again in the clouds, those truths have been zealously guarded from the whites, but allowing for digressions which would naturally creep in, when we consider that for nearly two thousand years those teachings have been handed down from generation to generation by word of mouth, this people have retained their knowledge of God in a wonderful manner!

I was talking to an old Indian who is one of those who are called pagan Indians. I told him of the Book of Mormon, of God's dealings with our people, and he said it was true, because the medicine men said so! I also saw another old fellow who is a Roman Catholic, and he also said that it was true, for he said God did tell the Indian that he would never destroy him with fire, and no Indian ever lost his life in a forest fire!

Surely the Lord has not forsaken this people; they are now turning toward him.

Yes, at last the truth is beginning to search out the hearts of my poor people; but oh, the problem is great; the trials also are numerous. It seems so in my case, at least, but I have one refuge: it is in prayer, in the woods away from all noise of the world, in the solitude of God's great cathedral. There is peace and strength.

SAWYER, MINNESOTA.

JOSEPH A. NORTHRUP.

An Appeal by and for the Indian

To the Members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: As one of you I feel rather at home in presenting my feelings and those of my race in the matter of our Indian problems. Because I have been made to believe that this is one organization that is interested religiously and otherwise in our Indian race.

We Indians have not all the rights and privileges that you who are not native Americans enjoy in these United States. We need not only religion, but we ask for the same

SAINTS' CHURCH AT MANTENO, ILLINOIS

(Shown above)

A new structure replacing one destroyed by an incendiary fire last October. This one was ready for opening and the date set for September 5, but during the night of the 4th the building was entered by unknown persons and the interior badly desecrated, as shown in the above picture.

THE WORK OF DESTRUCTION

(At right)

Interior of the Deselm Church, (near Manteno, Illinois,) after the mob had done its work. It is estimated that at least five hundred dollars will be required to cover the damage, but the floors are forever spoiled and the hand decorations on the walls must be painted over.

The Mob Spirit at Manteno

Some weeks ago we printed in these columns reports of the damage done to the church edifice of the Saints at Manteno, Illinois. We are showing herewith pictures of the building, the interior after the mob had wrecked the furniture and daubed the walls and floor.

Elder Ward L. Christy, missionary supervisor of the Northeastern Illinois District, is now conducting a campaign in the community in an endeavor to acquaint the citizens with the true character of our people and the religion they espouse. He writes that the county officers and the better element among the citizens are opposed to mob methods.

Since ignorance is usually an underlying cause of such attacks, there is every likelihood of the campaign being productive of results, since he is having tracts distributed from house to house and sending a circular letter to the people.

rights and privileges that the adopted Americans enjoy. In fact, it is hard for us to think on religious lines, when we are so curtailed and restricted in our daily life and needs. Realizing that in union is strength, for a number of years now the Indians have banded themselves together in organized bodies in order that they might present their problems before the people, that they might send out lecturers, that they might publish papers, that in every way they might arouse the people of this country to action in their behalf.

You have read pleas in the church papers and have listened sympathetically to some of our leading men in many of the churches, but what have you done? An oppressed people appreciate sympathy, but as faith without works is dead, so is sympathy in this case. I repeat, What have you done?

I know of no organization, religious or otherwise, that has heeded the cry of our oppressed Americans. I know of no people whose sympathy has led them to investigate our condition to the point of action in our behalf. But instead, religionists persist in teaching doctrines and insist on the Indian assuming religious obligations which to him are merely an outside garment to be changed or cast aside at will. How can you expect a doctrine to affect the heart of an Indian, the principles of which the teacher fails to put into practice in his behalf?

We are not begging; we do not ask alms; but we do want your support for our publications. We want your political support for our social, financial, political, and religious freedom.

A wonderfully clear plea for justice to the Indians was made in the House of Representatives by the Honorable M. Clyde Kelley, Congressman from Pennsylvania. If he is addressed at Washington, District of Columbia, care of the House of Representatives, he will send a free copy of this address, which I am sure you will agree is a valuable document because of its informational aspects.

If I can offer any help personally, I shall be glad to have anyone write me at 408 South Grand Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Sincerely yours,
WILLIAM MADISON.

Lamoni Branch News

Sunday, November 6, Lamoni Branch celebrated its fiftieth birthday, its golden anniversary. It was a typical "old-timers" jubilee. The day was filled with the recalling of memorable facts of history, old-time friendships, and old-time aspirations. Altogether it was a season of rejoicing of the older ones at the progress they have seen, and an assurance to the impatient and fretful younger blood that chafes because it can see no great advancement in its own brief day.

The Sacrament Service

The spirit of the day was not allowed to interfere with the service of the Lord's supper, which was conducted with its usual solemnity. However, the inclination was to allow the older people to indulge in reminiscences of past days of trial and privation, of toil and struggle, of the blessing and direction received at the hands of God.

Brother Elbert Smith, so long of Lamoni and beloved of its people, opened the testimony service with a short talk that led from some of the fulfilled hopes of the past to some of the unaccomplished and yet-to-be fulfilled hopes of the present. Some of the others that have grown along with the branch, Sister Stebbins, Brethren Turpen, Church, Blair, Hopkins, and many others, gave voice to the strength of their hopes throughout all the passing years.

Special Afternoon Program

This service opened with the "Old-Timers" in full control. They filled the choir loft and made half of the audience, while one of their number, Brother J. A. Gunsolley, choir leader of a long time ago, led in the singing of "Redeemer of Israel," number 377, and others of the still popular early-day songs.

Those who occupied the platform as speakers were: Brethren John Smith, A. C. Jones, and M. M. Turpen, Mr. J. R. Smith, an esteemed fellow townsman, and Sisters Sarah Bailey and Vida E. Smith.

Brother Jones was the only one in the building who had been present at the meeting where the Lamoni Branch was organized. According to the account, his father, Brother Charlie Jones, had been "president and straw boss" of the Order of Enoch; Brother Elijah Banta had preached at the meeting preceding the organization; and Zenos H. Gurley was clerk for the meeting. Elder A. W. Moffett, whose grandson is with us to-day, had been in charge of that meeting.

Sister Vida E. Smith went into the pages of history, telling of the nineteen charter members who increased their number to thirty-three from November to June. She spoke of the building of the "Sheep Shed," of the Little River Branch which was mother to the Lamoni Branch, of Brother John H. Lake who preached the first sermon in Lamoni, and of the coming of E. C. Briggs and the well beloved W. W. Blair to build the Reorganization. She told of the appointment of a committee to consider the building of the present Brick Church in 1882, of the finishing of its basement in 1885, and of the selling of the "Sheep Shed" later to help pay for the finishing of the upstairs of the new building.

Brother M. M. Turpen, supposed to have been the first man ordained in Lamoni Branch, spoke briefly of some of his missionary experiences. Though retired because of age now, Brother Turpen has spent a life filled with usefulness and service to the church. Sister S. V. Bailey, who came here in 1875, four years after the organization of the branch, gave a beautiful little talk on her experiences.

Brother John Smith, loved by the Saints and all who knew him, for fifteen years in charge of Lamoni Stake, was on the platform to receive through Brother John Garver the greetings of the people, but was, through the infirmities which age has recently brought to him, unable to speak. In very recent years he has been heard to speak under the influence of the Spirit in admonition and encouragement to the Saints. It is hard to realize that the weakness of age can so soon snatch a man from the work to which the strength of his heart has held him all his life.

The Evening Service

The evening service was opened with the chorus, "I waited for the Lord," after which there was some beautiful work done by the large orchestra, a duet, a clarinet solo, and an anthem, "Remember now thy Creator." The thirty-minute concert created a splendid atmosphere for Brother Elbert A. Smith's sermon which followed.

The sermon was in part an exposition of the work of Lamoni Branch, and in part a panegyric for deeds done. From Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4, he read: "Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion," and the reassuring words which follow. He said, "Humanity is constantly reaching and trying to look around the corner into the future, at the same time trying to hold on to and delving among the ashes of the past," and then he showed the development of ceremonials, monuments, and anniversaries.

"This anniversary," he said, in effect, "is an effort to preserve the idea of the thing for which we stand." Lamoni has been the half-way house on the road to Zion, the place for pause and recuperation while our people have gained in strength, wealth, and favor with the people of the world. Lamoni has been the training camp for the army of the Lord; her objective (although some one was blind enough to assert that she had none) has been the making of men and the training and equipping of them for service, which objective is also that of the gospel. Lamoni can boast having been the scene of the early activities of, or of having had a hand in the development of, many people for the church, among whom the following are a few: President Frederick M. Smith, John F. Garver, Apostle McConley, Inez Smith Davis, Apostle Gilen, Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, R. S. Salyards, F. B. Blair, and Brethren Almond, Elliott, Krahl, Wight, McDowell, Carmichael, Daniel T. Williams, and H. C. Burgess, as well as a host of others. These now are the servants and leaders in the strong places of the church. In a roll call of past heroes Lamoni can present an honorable array, and there is a work for her to do in the future in the training at Graceland of that host of young men and women for whom we must look to evangelize the world.

Lamoni Branch feels that on her fiftieth birthday she can be tolerated in a little exultation, while she gets a new breath for the strenuous work that is ahead.

LEONARD J. LEA.

Northern Wisconsin Conference

We are pleased to report that the conference of Northern Wisconsin District held at Chetek, Wisconsin, and which closed after a three-day session on Sunday evening, October 23, was a successful one. The attendance was large and the weather ideal.

The conference opened Friday morning in charge of the district presidency; Elder E. J. Lenox, district president, presiding. After a short business session the Sunday school occupied the time until 3 p. m., when the Women's Department held a session which was instructive and interesting.

On Saturday the time was spent in social and business sessions. All of the district officers were unanimously sustained. In the evening a picture and musical program was enjoyed, both local and visiting talent taking part.

On Sunday the services were very well attended. The speakers were L. Houghton, A. L. Whiteaker, and E. J. Lenox.

The prayer and testimony meetings which were held every morning were indeed services long to be remembered because of the spiritual blessings that were enjoyed. The gifts of the Spirit were manifested in tongues, interpretation of tongues, and visions, to the edification and comfort of his Saints.

All the Saints are encouraged and look for still greater success in service for the year to come.

MARY MAIR, Secretary.

Utah Conference

The following extracts are from a letter from Elder M. A. Etzenhouser to the First Presidency:

"Saturday and Sunday the conference of the Utah District met with the Salt Lake City Branch. It was the best conference that has been held in the district since we have been here. There was much advanced legislation passed. There was an excellent spirit present at all of the meetings and the attendance was large. The main auditorium was not sufficient to care for the crowd. I believe a better day has dawned for our work in Utah. Four from here were baptized, including Brother Cummins. There are a number of others who will be baptized before long.

"Brother Rushton and I have been to Provo, Malad, and Ogden, where he has been preaching to good crowds and looking over conditions. Monday we are going down to Nevada to see some of the Saints there and ordain Brother R. Trimmer to the office of elder. There are over twenty members in the vicinity of Carson City and no one to care for them. Brother Holloway was impressed that this brother should be ordained.

"Ida [Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser] is still working with the Charity Organization Society and evidently is getting along pretty well as they wanted to employ her regularly on a salary. Miss Pullian, who is in charge of the work here, is very anxious for her to go to Saint Louis for a month's training under her former superintendent. While we are here she hopes to get about a month's training at the county hospital and hospital-social work under Doctor Callister, who was formerly with the Massachusetts General Hospital and is a live wire.

Dedication of Church at Oakland, California

October 30 will be a day long remembered in the hearts and minds of the Saints of Oakland. A dedication of a remodeled church building was made possible by the earnest efforts of the members of this branch. More than one thousand dollars were raised in a recent drive by the young people, made up of two divisions. Home talents were exercised and real plays were produced. The young ladies were busy with sewing circles and a bazaar was given by both sides.

This, together with individual subscriptions toward the building fund, caused our old church to take on a new appearance both inside and out.

The greatest asset to our new building is a baptismal font. Brother J. D. White baptized five on this occasion.

Word was sent to Brother J. W. Rushton of this event, but unfortunately he could not be with us.

Regular services were held and a splendid luncheon was served to all in our new dining room. At 3 p. m., Brother J. D. White, our branch president, also district president, addressed the congregation which numbered about three hundred, with a call for greater service by the auxiliaries and praising God for his divine direction.

Bishop E. Ingram was then presented with the key, which was acknowledged by him. A musical program was rendered, consisting of instrumental, vocal, and special numbers by the choir. Missionary Robert T. Brown, who just returned from Papeete, Tahiti, was our speaker for the evening. Brother Brown's remarks were based upon love and assured us of the faith and integrity of our brethren of the islands.

Neighboring branches were represented and heartiest congratulations were extended us. An enjoyable time was had by everyone, and we feel that the Lord has greatly blessed us in our efforts.

HAROLD D. MOTTER.

The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music states that more money is spent on musical education in America than on all other higher education, including public high school, private high school, colleges, universities, normal schools, and other public or private schools of similar standing. This is rather a surprising announcement and probably is caused by the very high fee which is sometimes charged for musical education.

JOPLIN, MISSOURI, October 29, 1921.

Editors Herald: As we turn back the pages of memory we will always be reminded that under the direction of our young people, Brother R. D. Weaver has conducted one of the most successful meetings, beginning September 18, ever held in the history of the Joplin Branch.

He came among us practically a stranger, but with his pleasing personality and spirit of sociability, he soon won the admiration, not only of the Saints, but many not of our faith, and for five weeks he unfolded each evening to us, in beauty and simplicity and power, the story of the angel message.

His large audience sat spellbound as he explained the apostasy, how for 1,260 years the world was in spiritual darkness and the need of the restoration. Such remarks as "That is more scripture than I ever heard before" and "These people preach more Bible than all other denominations combined" make us rejoice that "We have found the glorious gospel,

That was taught in former years,
With its gifts and blessings,
All so full and free!"

We are sure much prejudice has been removed and some seed has fallen on good ground and in the Lord's own due time it will bring forth sheaves for the harvest.

Each Sunday the eleven o'clock discourse was to the Saints, showing them the need of a more consecrated service and the results of a higher and better life.

His sermons were all clean, spiritual, and uplifting, and the Saints, young and old, are strengthened and encouraged in the great latter-day work.

He gave two lectures to the mothers and one to the young girls (by request) on social purity, which were very much appreciated.

As he goes from us, back to his appointed field of work, he takes with him our best wishes and prayers for his success in his labor of love in helping build up God's kingdom and prepare a people for the coming of the Messiah.

May we ever keep before us the high ideal he presented and be able to qualify ourselves for a part in Zion.

Sincerely,
MRS. J. A. GRAVES,

DULUTH, MINNESOTA.

Editors Herald: Elder C. A. Kress and wife, of Duluth, just returned home after spending a week in Pine River and vicinity.

Although we Saints are few in number, yet we know the Lord is with us, and we surely enjoy having a brother with us to give us more of God's word. We have no elder with us at present. Brother Freeman expects to come next week. We expect great results and to have more Saints added to our small number of nineteen.

Brother Kress and Sister Case had birthdays together while in Pine River. We entertained them by giving a double birthday party at the home of Brother and Sister Case.

Don't forget to pray for our branch.

A NEW MEMBER.

HEALING THE SICK

(Continued from page 1084.)

hear it. What takes place in his soul, we cannot always answer. Therefore, we forgive all men (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2) and, therefore, we speak well of all, giving them the benefit of the doubt, but our heavenly Father knows whether their integrity and sincerity is real or a pretense.

In any event, most emphatically, God is not deliberately deceiving any good people through the Devil. If they are deceived, they are deceived through their own lusts. (James 1: 13, 14.)

On the other hand, as God gave to the children of Israel the Mosaic law as a schoolmaster, he may also give to other people a schoolmaster to bring them to the truth, and he will show them how as soon as they are ready and willing to accept. The Bible plainly states that in the time of ignorance,

God winks at certain acts, evidently upon the assumption that our intention is good. (Acts 17:30.) Why has he not given them more? Because their intellectual and spiritual development does not make possible a fuller knowledge. He is, however, the Father of all, "the light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world."

But this does not mean that there is no difference and no way that is basically right, for there is such a way. The plan that our heavenly Father has laid down is easy to be read. Those who can read know that James 5:14 says plainly, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church." No person can read that and then send for anyone else without knowing that he is not keeping the commandments of God, whether he calls a so-called "divine healer," a practitioner, or another.

God deceives no man. He does give a schoolmaster where needed. He gives us truth as we are able to receive. Those who sincerely want the truth will find it; but he will not force anyone. We should be slow to condemn others. Yet we know the plan is plainly laid down, so if one is really sincere he will not err therein.

S. A. B.

Local Announcements

The HERALD does not, as a rule, publish local announcements, as there is almost always a better method of communicating with the members of the branch through the visiting officers and through announcements in the church services.

Recently a request was sent in for an announcement of local meetings in a branch and as a matter of curiosity we looked the matter up to see how many subscribers there were to the HERALD and Ensign in that branch, since the request was that it be published in both of these papers. We were rather surprised to find that there was only one subscriber to each and that was the man who sent in the announcement. If we had published, no one would have been informed except himself.

Evidently he should get busy and see that additional subscriptions are sent in from this branch.

The editors of our church periodicals are very anxious to make them as effective as possible to the whole membership and, therefore, must invariably ask, Is this of general interest?

Now much of local news is of general interest, as others are interested in knowing how the work is progressing in your vicinity, how you conduct your special services, and when you were visited by some of the leading officials of the church. There are many other matters that may arise of much more than local interest; matters that are of interest to the whole church. These we want.

We are also anxious to know what the general officers of the church, the First Presidency, Twelve, Seventy, and the Presiding Bishopric are doing, including all others who are out under general conference appointment.

Announcements for a district conference would seem to have a limited appeal, yet they almost always reach a number who are interested, do not take up much space, and have been well established by precedent.

The editors are always anxious to hear what is being done in the branches and are anxious to pass on the news to our readers, but it should be that which has more than limited local appeal.

The International Purity Conference is to be held in Chicago, December 27, 28, and 29. It will discuss problems dealing with moral and social purity.

"A fretful Christian injures his own spiritual life, and may injure that of others."

Subjects Being Discussed

Armament Conference

Great interest is centering in the Armament Conference to be held which began November 12. We are sorry to note a considerable discussion to the effect that it is impossible to do away with armaments, that they can only be reduced. A reduction would be some gain, but practically all armament is sheer waste, since each government arms against the others, as no one can be permitted to dominate. The result is such as to be an evidence of the lack of thought on the part of humanity as a whole.

Disarmament of individuals has been effective. It is true that there are still individual criminals. But there are peace officers to combat and control the turbulent. With a properly organized world conference, there doubtless would be a need for an international police force to protect commerce on the high seas and to maintain world order, but such would be very small and inexpensive compared to the heavy expenditure now being made in every one of our civilized countries, because of wars past, present, and future.

How Ford Does It

There has been a great deal of comment in the papers over the railroad purchased by Henry Ford. He has not only accepted any reduction made by any other railroads in rates, but has offered two further reductions amounting to a large percentage of present railroad rates. Then on the day that general railroad wages were cut 12 per cent, he put into effect a 40 per cent increase on his line and at the same time is making money. How does he do it?

The Wall Street Journal gives the answer, which is summarized in The Literary Digest. His workmen are not curtailed by union rules. The watchman acts also as a crossing carpenter, a track inspector, and part time clerk. As a rule, a watchman will not do any other work except as a watchman, and a carpenter must be secured to repair the crossings and the signal man for the gate.

Again, his passenger engineers do not stop at seventy-five or a hundred miles, but work about eight hours a day. In this way they earn a much larger income. The hours for the month may be divided as they choose, with Sunday off. The same is true of freight engineers, of firemen, and other workmen. In this way the men are not overworked but receive a much larger income yet at a less labor cost to the railroad.

Some Real Facts About Prohibition

Frequent comment is made concerning the amount of bootlegging and the assumption of abundance of illicit liquor, but when we come to consider actual statistics, we learn with certainty that conditions are improving. This we are also able to observe as a rule in our ordinary experience and observations on the streets of our cities, as there appear fewer drunkards. The report of a prison commissioner in New York State shows that the commitments to the penal institutions in that city were less than one half as many in 1920 as in 1917, the last year when the saloons were in full force. In round figures, 129,000 were committed in 1917, 59,000 in 1920.

The prison population does not show a corresponding decrease, for the reason that there were many men in prison for long terms. Still, there is a large falling off, in round numbers, from 15,000 to 9,000.

The English papers have been poking a great deal of fun at the failure of prohibition in America, yet the figures show that drunkenness is increasing in Great Britain as restrictions are taken off. For example, according to The Christian Work, the convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales were 29,000 in 1918, the year of greatest restriction, increasing to 57,000 in 1919, and 95,000 in 1920, while fragmentary reports indicate even more startling figures.

Church News

Bishop J. F. Keir is improved sufficiently so that he and wife left Independence on the evening of the 13th for a trip to Florida on church business, and while in the South it is likely he will visit a number of the branches and several districts in the interests of the church. Bishop I. A. Smith is still in the West, in Colorado at this writing, but is expected to return this week.

Several of our missionaries have had occasion to be cared for at the Sanitarium lately.

Elder F. S. Brackenbury, of Michigan, who has been afflicted with nervous breakdown nearly all summer, is there with pernicious anemia.

Elder Clyde F. Ellis, who had engaged passage on the boat leaving San Francisco November 25, had to cancel his engagement on account of an injury to his knee. Dislocation, not promptly cared for, threatened him with permanent injury, and he is having treatments at the Sanitarium and expects to be out in time to leave for the Society Islands on the December 30 boat.

Elder J. W. Peterson had a large tumor removed from his back recently, which has been annoying him for a number of years. He is now able to leave for his home.

Elder William I. Fligg was injured in an auto accident some three weeks ago near Marlette, Michigan, cutting his left shin quite severely. Infection developed and he was forced to come home on the 11th. Doctors required that he enter the Sanitarium for treatment and constant attention.

The wife of Elder W. A. McDowell has been confined to her bed at the institution for several weeks with typhoid fever.

Elder O. E. Sade has been transferred to a private sanitarium at Kansas City, where his mental affliction may be given special care.

The series of Sunday evening services for young people, at the Stone Church in Independence, were continued on the evening of the 13th, with Floyd M. McDowell as speaker. The speaker the previous Sunday evening was R. V. Hopkins, pastor. Brother McDowell spoke at the South Side in the morning. The attendance at these evening services is excellent and the song service effectively rendered, congregational singing, led by F. A. Russell, being given a half hour each evening.

Elder Walter W. Smith concluded a successful week's series of meetings at Liberty Street Church in Independence on Sunday evening, and arrangements have been made to have them continued another week with Paul M. Hanson as speaker and old and young invited. Elder Smith could not continue as speaker, having lecture engagements in Lamoni.

There Should Be a Herald in Every Home

Our attention is called from time to time to the price of other religious papers, several of which come to us on exchange. For one thing, we notice that the quality of paper used with most of them is decidedly inferior to that used for THE SAINTS' HERALD. In the second place, many, if not most of them, are higher priced, despite poor make-up and quantity of material furnished. Some, it is true, are put out in an attractive form, but, taking into consideration the quantity of material, character of work, and quality of paper, THE SAINTS' HERALD is low compared with other religious publications, yet we find some of them appealing for donations to keep them going at all.

There are a multitude of reasons why our church members should endeavor to see that there is a SAINTS' HERALD in every home. It is the official organ of the church, the means of direct communication with the officers of the church. It is also much lower in price than other religious papers of the same size.

The HERALD from one to three times a year has published a magazine number. We have several now in view and material for a British Mission number is now fully in hand. This British number will be published in the near future and concerns itself more with the conditions in the mission to-day and conditions leading up to it than it does with direct historical reviews. It will give our readers a bird's-eye view of the work in Great Britain to-day, and its needs, and with it is furnished a number of photographs of the workers of to-day in that mission, including President F. M. Smith, who has recently returned from England, and an article from his pen. T. W. Williams, John Rushton, and many others well known to the church also contribute.

What we have said above with regard to the economy of the publishing of the HERALD applies also to the Ensign, which will doubtless soon be made more and more the missionary weekly of the church.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The Doctrine of Stewardship	- - - -	1081
Mounds Near Saint Louis	- - - -	1083
School of the Prophets	- - - -	1084
Certificate of Ordination	- - - -	1084
Healing the Sick	- - - -	1084
Local Announcements	- - - -	1102
Subjects Being Discussed	- - - -	1102
Church News	- - - -	1103
There Should Be a HERALD in Every Home	- - - -	1103

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Christ's Story of the Age End, by Isaac True	- - - -	1085
The "Kingdoms" in Daniel 2, by J. C. Crabb	- - - -	1086

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

What the League of Nations Has Done	- - - -	1087
-------------------------------------	---------	------

Further Steps in Cooperation	- - - -	1088
Community Welfare	- - - -	1088
THE FORUM:
The Land Question, by Edward Rannie	- - - -	1088
Social and Economic Aspects of the Latter-day Work.—Part 8, by J. A. Koehler	- - - -	1090
THE STAFF	- - - -	1094
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT	- - - -	1096
Flo Sterrett Whittemore—Minnie Harding—Maude Peak Parham.
LETTERS	- - - -	1098
Joseph A. Northrup—William Madison—Leonard J. Lea—Mary Mair—Harold D. Motter—Mrs. J. A. Graves.
MISCELLANEOUS	- - - -	1104

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Spokane, at Sagle, Idaho, December 10, at 10 a. m., and Sunday school convention on the day previous. Oscar Case, president.

Alberta, at Calgary, December 2 to 4. Trust all branches and isolated members will endeavor to be present so we can have a good time together. W. H. Chandler, secretary.

Convention Notices

Southern Wisconsin, at Madison, December 3, convening in connection with the district conference. Charles C. Hoague, secretary, Evansville, Wisconsin.

Players Wanted for Auditorium Orchestra

The executive committee of the Auditorium Orchestra, of Independence, suggest that players residing at a distance who would like to become acquainted with the music used by the orchestra can do so by correspondence with R. T. Cooper, conductor, Box 256, Independence, Missouri. In this way visitors to the city could participate in the renditions at any time. Rehearsals are held each Monday evening. More players are needed, as follows: Four first violin players, six second violin, three clarinet, two flute, one string bass, two cello, two viola, one oboe.

The Power of Speech

"Men are proved by their speeches, whether they be wise or foolish."—Demosthenes.

"The flowering moments of the mind Drop half their petals in our speech."

—Holmes.

You may never become a Demosthenes, nor attain to the splendid diction and charm of expression of an Oliver Wendell Holmes. But you have certain God-given talents. Will you improve them?

Your own church college is ready to help you.

Will you let her do it?

Bring the services of Graceland College to your own fireside.

Enroll for a course in public speaking and English by correspondence.

If you would impart to others the good things which you possess and make your personality felt, you must have an adequate means of expression.

Your social standard, your patriotism, your domestic and religious ideals, can only be conveyed to others in the degree that you have a command of language.

Are you striving to acquire an effective use of English?

Is your speech laden with meaning?

Do you understand the fundamental principles of public speaking: mental imagery, attention, emotional control, the power of suggestion, articulation, emphasis, expression, gesture, etc.?

Acquire additional power by improving your speech.

For full information concerning correspondence courses write to the Extension Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Sanitarium Needs

The Independence Sanitarium linen department needs still 48 dimity bedspreads, 60 by 90 inches in size.

Central Michigan Drive

To the Young People of Central Michigan: Perhaps you have been very anxious to know the proceedings of the committee that met at Coleman, October 30, and no doubt you have been watching the columns of the HERALD closely. We are progressing nicely and have decided to start to raise the money as soon as possible. We have set the date, from November 20 to December 4, to have a drive similar to the Auditorium drive last year. The district is divided between the five members of the committee who are to make a thorough canvass of it during these two weeks. We hope that every one will be ready for this, and as requested before will give us your hearty support. William S. Methner, secretary.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN MAINE.—At Jonesport, October 8 and 9, with W. E. Rogers, district president, in charge. C. Ed. Miller was chosen to preside, assisted by the president. Merton Crowley acted as secretary. Visiting Saints were invited to participate in the business. Harmony and good will prevailed. Through the untiring labor of our missionary, O. L. Thompson, the branches of the district were largely represented and reported in good running order. It was decided to raise funds to purchase an automobile for the use of the missionaries of the district. Arthur Rogers, James Clark, David Joy, and George Manchester were appointed a committee to solicit said funds. Among the visiting Saints from Massachusetts were, W. A. Sinclair, M. C. Fisher, C. Ed. Miller, E. L. Traver, and Frank Dobbins. The three former named, and O. L. Thompson, were the speakers, whose sermons were edifying and instructive. Social meeting, Sunday morning, was very spiritual and uplifting. Sunday night's attendance of five hundred was the climax. Our large church was packed, including the hall, and some had to go away. Two baptisms at the seashore. Conference music in charge of Herbert Rogers. Orchestra did a good work. C. Ed. Miller followed the conference with a series of meetings for the young people, with good attendance. Afterwards he visited through the district in interest of the young with good results. Jonesport Branch is thriving and growing spiritually under the leadership and wise counsel of W. E. Rogers, who has been president for some years.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Missouri Valley, Iowa, October 8 and 9, with J. W. Lane, district president, in charge. The choice of Charles E. Woodstock for counselor to the president was ratified, he having been chosen to succeed J. C. Ballantyne, now of Lamoni. Verbal reports of the priesthood indicated spiritual progress in most of the branches. Total membership of district at present about 2,125, one branch not reporting to the conference, 90 having been gained by baptism since last report. Bishop's agent's report showed a sum of $3,080.69 received during the quarter, from tithes and offerings. M. W. Cress, of Magnolia, was ordained to the office of elder; Joshua Carlile, of Logan, was ordained a priest; C. W. Kearnes, of Logan, a teacher; and George Mann, also of Logan, received ordination to office of deacon. Daniel Macgregor, J. F. Mintun, Charles F. Putnam, and C. W. Morgan were the speakers during the conference. The Logan Branch will entertain the February conference. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

JORDISON.—Agnes Teasdale was born July 1, 1875, in Braidwood, Illinois. Came with her parents to Coalsville, Iowa, in 1877, and has been a resident there since. Married Richard Jordison, March 6, 1893. To this union six children were born, all of whom survive. They are Clarence, Fred, Mrs. E. Reed, Viola, Pearl, and Mabel. Four grandchildren also survive. Baptized July 20, 1886, at Coalville, by E. C. Brand. She was a consistent and faithful Christian woman. Her genial disposition and lovely everyday life won her a host of friends and endeared her to all who knew her. Although she had been sick a year, she bore it with patience until the end. Died October 24, at her home. Funeral from Saints' church; sermon by Samuel Jordison. Interment in Otho Cemetery.

CHRISTOFFERSON.—Anders Christofferson was born in Denmark, October 1, 1841, migrated with his parents to this country in 1857, locating at Burlington, Iowa. Moved to Salt Lake City, two years later. Married Katie Hansen in 1863. Baptized in 1870. Lived in Holt County, Missouri, for one year, then returned to Idaho and from there to Montana, settling in Deer Lodge Valley, where he lived about fifty years. Died October 20. Funeral from Saints' church at Deer Lodge, in charge of D. L. Allen; sermon by H. O. Smith. He has been the main stay in the work in Deer Lodge Valley. Many of the pioneer elders of that region, such as R. J. Anthony, Joseph Clapp, James W. Gillen, and many others found shelter under his hospitable roof.

BADDER.—Margaret A. Henderson, daughter of James and Margaret Henderson, was born August 2, 1859, at Perth, Lanark County, Ontario. Baptized September 29, 1885, at Vassar, Michigan, by E. Delong. Married August 2, 1886, to H. J. Badder, at Oil City, Ontario. Came to Independence with her husband in December, 1906, where she made her home until her departure. She was for many years a great sufferer. Died October 1, 1921. Funeral at the Stone Church. Sermon by Walter W. Smith, interment at Mound Grove Cemetery. She is mourned by her husband and many friends.

HECKLER.—Mary Snow Heckler was born February 11, 1851. Married Jacob Heckler, April 7, 1870. To this union were born eleven children, four of whom survive. Baptized in 1883 and has remained faithful. Died at Alba, Missouri, October 4. Her husband, four children, and seven grandchildren are left to mourn. Funeral from Saints' church at Purcell, Missouri. Sermon by A. J. Jones.

BRANNON.—John P. Brannon was born June 18, 1844, in Conway County, Arkansas. Married Amelia Skinner who had a son that was raised by this stepfather. Four step-grandchildren later became orphans and were raised in this home. With these grandchildren Mr. and Mrs. Skinner made their home several years prior to his death, at Hartshorne, Oklahoma, October 5. Baptized November 14, 1878. Ordained priest, March 15, 1879, a few years later an elder. Funeral served by E. A. Erwin.

COOK.—Alicinda F., wife of Marcus H. Cook, was born July 15, 1852; baptized March 19, 1892; died September 9, at Saint Joseph Hospital, Vancouver, Washington. Leaves husband, sister, two daughters, one son, several grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. She was willing to sacrifice in order that her husband might carry the gospel to those who grope in darkness. Funeral at Saints' church; sermon by G. M. Shippy. Interment in Park Hill Cemetery.

SEYMOUR.—Earl Edwin, son of Albert H. and Mary A. Seymour, was born September 14, 1915, in Tobacco Township, Gladwin County, Michigan. Died at Saginaw, of diphtheria, October 11. He was sick about ten days.

BOOKER.—Elizabeth, wife of P. W. Booker, died suddenly while waiting upon a sick neighbor, July 30. Baptized about thirty-six years ago. Her husband and six children are left to mourn. Funeral at the Baptist church, sermon by the Methodist minister.

THE SAINTS' HALL

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"The save it have no

man among you have d concubines he shall rmon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 22,

NUMBER 47

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of 1879, weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1920.

5 Jan 22 France
Mrs Th's St
116 W 8th St
Lamoni, Ia
Post-

EDITORIAL

Thanksgiving Day 1621-1921

As has been pointed out many times in our columns, harvest homes have been celebrated in some form among many, if not all, nations of the earth. The ancient Hebrews celebrated the incoming of the harvest; the American Indians also celebrated the harvest. In fact, it was a general celebration among the various people of antiquity, in some form or other, to celebrate the incoming grain.

But we are not now immediately concerned with these ancient celebrations. The Pilgrim Fathers, who landed on the bleak New England coast in 1620 were a devoted people whose faith was in God. After the first year's harvest, they went out and added what they could of wild turkey and pumpkin, and probably of the cranberries which they found growing wild. They made it a time of festival as it had been from antiquity. They made it also a time to go to their churches and offer up thanksgiving to God.

At first, as a holiday (holy day), it was confined rather closely to New England, but gradually spread over the country until it is well established as a national holiday, since President Lincoln so proclaimed it in 1864. At times those early pilgrims seemed to have very little for which to be thankful. They faced starvation, apparently, and especially when new immigrants came from England in the fall of the year. But they placed their trust in God and made it a time of thanksgiving to him.

This is the significant factor. There have been other harvest homes in various forms and with more or less of religious significance, but this day is primarily one of thanksgiving. The harvest home idea scarcely enters in here. In fact, other harvest homes are held at times in different places of the country. It is a time of festival with us, or of feasting, as it was when first established; but, basically, it is a day to go to the churches and render our heartfelt thanks unto our heavenly Father for his goodness.

Three hundred years have passed. We celebrate the third centenary this day. To some of us it may seem that there is but little cause for thanksgiving after a year of restricted credit, with low prices, with many out of work who face the winter with apparently gloomy hopes; but, after all, we are not confronted as a people with as serious a situation as that which confronted the Pilgrims three hundred years ago when they, in faith, met and feasted and returned thanks to God and placed their lives in his hands for the coming winter.

It is well that each of us should count carefully our blessings over, the blessing of health and of strength, for all our faculties so far as they are vouchsafed; the blessings of our families, those who have been preserved to us, the blessings of friends and especially of the Saints of God; with a realization on the part of those who are better to do, of their privilege in helping their brethren and sisters through the coming winter.

Those who have means should, indeed, be thankful that God has so blessed them; those with abundant crops should likewise return their thanks, facing that which is good, counting the good things over rather than giving our first regard to that which is not so pleasing. And we should remember also the tithe that is the Lord's and support the work of the church. Above all, as individuals, we owe our thanks for the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, for his coming to the world, and what it means to us in the association of his church and the privileges offered through such association for the establishment of better conditions on earth, when we are ready to move forward fully as the law of God directs.

As a church, we are affected greatly by the conditions of the world. As a church, many great problems confront us that are also great opportunities for service. We may thank our heavenly Father that he has given us an understanding heart and strength to move forward and, especially, that when the task proves too hard, he has not left us alone, but has promised us the blessings and direction of his Holy Spirit. We should, indeed, rejoice that to us is intrusted this work of meeting these problems of the kingdom of God on earth to-day, that we may thereby be prepared to meet whatever conditions may confront us in the hereafter.

We should also be thankful for the establishment of this Government and feel to give special recognition to the fact that to-day we celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the establishment of this day of worship in which the foundation was laid for the establishment of this Government more than one hundred and fifty years after. Truly we should give thanks to the Lord with all our house. S. A. B.

A Halfway House on the Road to Zion

Synopsis of a sermon by Elbert A. Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday, November 6, on the occasion of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Lamoni Branch.

Humanity is always trying to look into the future and always clinging to the past. During their conscious hours all men are thinking all the time. It is true that some of them may not look like they are thinking, but presumably they are. It would be interesting to know just what percentage of this mental activity is devoted to the present moment. Certainly a great deal of our time is spent in looking around the corner into the future, watching for the procession of events to go by. And a good deal of our time is spent groping among the ashes of the past, or wandering among traditions and monuments.

Literally, of course, we cannot return into the past or restore any past event. The door is closed and the sign put up, "Keep out." However, man is endowed with memory and with imagination. To that extent at least he is Godlike. Periods of time do not mean to God the same that they do to us. The past and the future equally with the present are always within the range of his consciousness, so that it may be said of him that a thousand years are as a day in his sight. Truth is defined in the Book of Covenants as a knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they are to be. God, knowing all past events and foreknowing all future events, has always the absolute truth in his possession.

Some psychologists claim that man never forgets any event; it is recorded somewhere in his nervous system and retained in his unconscious mind. I do not know that I could convince my wife of that theory. She has a theory of her own to the effect that men forget a great many things. As a matter of fact the record of many events sinks below the threshold of our consciousness and is never revived in this life, though perhaps it might be if the proper suggestion were given. With many other events the details become very dim; however, memory retains the skeleton, and the reconstructive imagination is able to clothe these dry bones with flesh and blood, so that to all intents and purposes the past is made to live again in our consciousness.

Lest We Forget

To aid this reconstructive process man has provided many crutches to his memory. We have for instance the memento. The mother cherishes the little red shoes that were worn by her first baby. We gather all manner of souvenirs from mountain and seashore to help us remember scenes that we have visited, until they become so numerous that we forget the particular thing each was intended to call to mind, like the man who writes down a list of groceries and forgets where he has put the slip of paper.

We erect monuments. Perhaps in their first form these were but cairns of convenient rocks thrown together upon a hilltop to commemorate some event. The apostles proposed to build three altars upon the Mount of Transfiguration, reminding us that these cairns at times took on a religious significance. We erect memorials and in time poetry and art were invoked to adorn these monuments with inscriptions and symbols so that they might be more significant.

Last Tuesday it was my privilege to attend the dedication of the memorial site in Kansas City, where the monument is to be erected in memory of our dead soldiers. This affair was considered of sufficient importance that it was attended by the greatest soldier representatives of the greatest nations. Marshal Foch, of France, who commanded armies so vast that they made the armies of Napoleon seem like a brigade, was present. General Diaz, of Italy, who threw back the Austrians from Venice, was there. General Jacques, the little Belgian who stood up at Liege and held back the Niagara of German armies until France could mobilize, was there. Admiral Beatty, of Britain, who commanded the fleet at Jutland was there. General Pershing, who hastened to France and paused at the tomb of Lafayette to report, "Lafayette, we are here," and then passed on to place his command at the disposal of Foch, was there. If anyone thinks that the God of war is dead he should have been in Kansas City Tuesday. No group of statesmen, of scientists, or men of any other profession or vocation could possibly have called forth the outpouring of homage that was given to these men. The soldier hero in the trappings of war is still the big figure in human consciousness. That monument, when it is erected, will hold aloft a torch from which will always ascend by day a cloud of smoke and by night a pillar of fire to revive in the memory of the nation the sacrifice of the men who died.

We have memorial ceremonies. The Jews celebrated the Passover, every detail of which reminded them of the time when God led a mob of slaves out of Egypt to become a great nation and the astonishment of the world. Jesus instituted the Lord's supper, every detail of which reminds us of his sacrifice.

Finally we have anniversaries, birthdays. Those of us who did not succeed in being born on the 29th of February have an annual birthday, which reminds us sometimes pleasantly, and sometimes painfully, of the flight of time. To-day we are met to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Lamoni Branch. The day is significant in that it reminds us of the ideals that brought Lamoni into existence. It recalls, furthermore, the work that Lamoni has done and is doing.

A Halfway House

Let us consider now what work Lamoni has done for the church. In the first place I may say that she has been a halfway house on the road to Zion. The church has a dual work to perform. First, to preach the principles of the gospel and to convert people to a sound form of doctrine. With that work we were quite too well satisfied for a time. We were limited to the old idea of salvation; that is, the saving of a man from hell. Preaching of the principles is essential, but it is not enough that a man should be saved from damnation. If he is actually to become a fit citizen of the kingdom of heaven there must be a wonderful process of development.

It is obvious that if this development is to go on properly and if we are to aid the man in that development we must be able to control, to a large degree, environment. There are two forces which to a certain extent determine human conduct, heredity and environment. Biological heredity we cannot control very greatly to our own personal benefit. We must take what the fathers have handed out to us. We cannot change our stature, or many other physical and some mental characteristics that are inherited. Our social inheritance we can change and our environment is subject to regulation. The doctrine of gathering and Zion follows logically upon these considerations.

Zion may be presumed to include a consecrated place and a consecrated people. Whatever we may have had in the way of people in 1860, certainly we did not have the place. The promise had been definitely made in December of 1833, "Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritance; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:4.

The people at that time had been entirely expelled from Independence and Jackson County. The promise made was significant. Zion should not be moved out of her place. Neither Nauvoo nor Salt Lake City were to become Zion. The people of God were to return. But the statement, "they that remain," indicated that a long period of time would pass away and that many would not remain. The statement "they that remain and are pure in heart" indicated that there would come a falling away and there would be many who would not remain pure in heart; but those who did remain and were faithful should return, they and their children, with joy and with song.

Gaining Favor

In 1860, when President Joseph Smith took his place at the head of the church, he, as president of the church, was living in Nauvoo. THE SAINTS' HERALD, the official organ of the church, was published in Cincinnati, Ohio. Missouri was utterly closed to the Saints, but presently, in due course of time, the return predicted in section 98 began. Lamoni was established. The general offices and the publishing house were moved to this place and Lamoni became a halfway house in the return to Zion, a strategic point where the church might pause to gain strength and numbers and financial resources, and to win the favor of the people.

It was promised us that if we would be circumspect and righteous that God would give us grace and favor in the eyes of the people. That promise has been fulfilled to as great a degree as we could consistently expect. It is true that the religious world takes neither us nor our theology to her bosom, but they are coming to have much more respect for us as a people. All those who are not partisan in religion are much more liberal. Perhaps the greatest change has come in the attitude of the press. To-day in most places the press is disposed to treat us courteously. When we have matters to present for publication, about the only question asked is, "Does your article have live news interest?" It is true that there are still two classes who maintain a consistent campaign of lying against us. The first class consists of those who are bigoted religious zealots and who to the natural pleasure that they derive from malicious lying add the pleasure of getting paid for it. So we have a certain class of lecturers, some of whom might be named, who appear in different localities periodically as lecturers or seeking debate on condition that there is an adequate financial return. The other class consists of men who have been put out of the church for one kind of iniquity or another and have a personal revenge to gratify and, like their brethren before mentioned, are quite willing to be paid for their efforts. There is a certain satisfaction in having the enmity of such men. Inasmuch as they can honor anyone, they honor us by their enmity. A slap in the face from such people is much more creditable than a slap on the back.

The promise, however, that we should gain favor has been fulfilled to the extent that we are now privileged to return to Zion and have in Independence six congregations of people. The general offices have been moved to Independence, also the publishing house, so that phase of the work in Lamoni is closed. How proud Lamoni should be that she assisted in this work and served as a halfway house where the church might rest, gain strength, and win the favor of the people and of God until the work of the return should be more fully accomplished.

A Training Camp

We will consider the second phase of Lamoni's work. At the Lamoni picnic in Independence some weeks ago one of the speakers stated that Lamoni had served as a training camp in the army of the Lord. Brother Garver states that Lamoni's objective is the making of men. This we understand to be the true objective of all gospel ordinances and teachings, to develop man as stated in the fourth chapter of Ephesians "to the full measure of the stature of a man in Christ Jesus."

We do not agree with the Utah doctrine of eternal progression. While they sing about going on to eternal progression, we sing about going on to eternal perfection. When the individual man has developed all the potentialities of his nature resident in him from the dawn of creation to their fullest capacity, and has reached the full measure of the stature of a man in Christ Jesus, he has reached perfection for him and progression stops; so perfection may mean one thing for one man and another for another in one sense, while to all it means the same thing, complete development. Nor do we believe in a progressive God. Brigham Young inflated his chest and in words something like this said, "As I am, God once was." If that be true, we must certainly admit that the Lord has done well considering that he had that kind of a start. Then he went on something like this, "As God is, I will be." Such boast would certainly make the Kaiser seem as though he were tongued-tied with modesty.

We cannot believe in a progressive God, because if progressive he has not yet reached perfection, and if always progressive he can never reach perfection, and may at any time make a disastrous mistake that will ruin the universe. Indeed, he may have already made that mistake. We believe in a God who is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; unchangeable; in whom there is resident all wisdom and all power; and we believe in the development, not so much of the God in man, but rather of the manhood that is in man until he reaches the "full stature" of manhood in Christ Jesus.

So it becomes obvious that following baptism we must, as is stated, "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." All will admit the necessity of growing in grace, in spirituality, in favor with God; but to grow in the "knowledge of the truth" indicates an intellectual growth and perception of truth which means a great deal when we consider the broad scope covered by the term "truth." We are glad that this church is disposed to say to her young men, "You may pursue any line of study that you choose to follow, any line of research, providing you take your religion with you and bring back all that is good and true that you find, to use in the service of God and in the upbuilding of the church."

These Are My Profits in Men

Doctor James R. Angell, president of Yale University, is quoted in the November number of the American Magazine as follows: "The teacher's reward is in being able to look across the continent to this statesman who once was his student, or to that great surgeon who once sat in his classroom, or to this other business leader who once came to his home in the evening and discussed the choice of his career. And an executive, similarly, whether he employs ten thousand men or only a handful, ought to share the teacher's reward as he goes on in life. He ought to be able to say, 'There is Jones, whom I helped to find himself,' and 'Smith, whom I encouraged to go into business on his own account,' and 'Brown, who was an awkward, timid youngster when he came into my office and is now one of the most successful merchants in town.' . . . 'The bank balance shows what the profit of my life has been in money, but these are my profits in men.'"

It has been the work of Lamoni to help in the development of men, and, as suggested by Professor Angell, we might imagine that if Lamoni were personified to-day she could look around her and name men that she has helped. She might say, "There is Frederick M. Smith, now President of the church; John F. Garver, president of the stake; Apostle Myron A. McConley, in charge of the Australian Mission, and assisted by Sister McConley; Inez Smith Davis, appointed as field worker to Australia; Apostle Gillen, laboring in the British Mission; Frederick A. Smith as patriarch; Frank Almond and wife and F. V. Elliott and wife in the Society Islands; F. B. Blair, bishop of the Kansas City Stake; R. S. Salyards, president of the Far West Stake; D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake; Cyril E. Wight, who was placed in charge of the first class in religious education; F. M. McDowell, to whom was given the work of organizing the boys, A. Max Carmichael, called to take charge of the Sunday school work; Daniel T. Williams, called to help the young people in their revival services; Harold C. Burgess, called to help in the singing, and hundreds of others, who at some time in their life I have helped."

And these are men and women of the present generation. In years gone by there was another generation, including President Joseph Smith, and Alexander Smith, Sister M. Walker, Elijah Banta, David Dancer, Henry Stebbins, Heman C. Smith, J. W. Wight, Joseph R. Lambert, Joseph Roberts, William Anderson, Asa S. Cochran and many others, both men and women, who were helped in their processes of Christian development.

Transfer the Account

If I were to call the roll to-night of those who had been helped by Lamoni and they were able to answer, their responses would come literally from the ends of the earth and from the islands of the sea, and many, many of them would come from behind the veil. If I were then to say to these people, Your account is "in the red"; you are indebted to Lamoni, I can imagine that the spirit of Lamoni would reply, "No; not to me. Transfer the account. Make it payable to God and humanity."

Sanitarium Day

A copy of a letter sent to all branch presidents in the United States and Canada.

Among additional workers which the Presidency hopes eventually to see become a part of each group or corps of officers is that of nurse or representative of the Health Department. In all probability in most instances this person will be a woman. In order for equipment of this kind eventually to be in operation it will be necessary for the number of nurses to be greatly augmented. At present there is not at the Sanitarium a sufficient number of nurses in training to care for the work, and the superintendent of the Health Department, Doctor Harrington, is anxious that the branch presidents throughout the United States and Canada shall at their convenience have what might be termed a Sanitarium Day, in which the work of the institution will be properly presented to the branch and an appeal made for those who tend in this direction to offer their services for training as nurses.

There is a very large and very important field for the Health Department to occupy in an effort to preserve the health of the people of the church, and it is the desire of the Presidency that the Health Department at the earliest moment practicable shall enter fully upon its work of preventing disease rather than wait for disease to be cured. This can come only by general dissemination of the rules of health among the people of the church that they will not be found violating them. This, too, is in full harmony with the Word of Wisdom and the laws which have been laid down in this wonderful section. The Health Department, perhaps more than any other corps of workers in the church, appreciates the value of the Word of Wisdom, and it is the desire of the Health Department to so promote knowledge of the laws of health among the people of the church that our people may eventually be characterized as far above the average in health.

The Presidency therefore trusts that you will cooperate with the Health Department to the fullest extent possible in presenting the work of the Sanitarium and the Health Department to the members of your branch.

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By Frederick M. Smith.

I know of nothing more wonderful in this world than the passion, the exaltation, the self-revelation to a thousand hearts locked up in a single score of Wagner or Beethoven. Sometimes a single theme can express that which generations of people have felt and suffered and striven for.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

"Adversity should strengthen, not weaken, faith in God."

Our Church Sanitarium

The Health Department earnestly desires that the Sanitarium become but the central institution in widespread social betterment operations.

The Lord indicated to the church in 1906 (Doctrine and Covenants 127:1-4) that it was his will that a sanitarium be established in Independence, where the Saints might go and "be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick."

The suggestion was general in many ways. Quite in accord with the methods God employs in revealing his will, many of the details were left to the wisdom of those charged with the responsibility of providing for and the maintenance of the institution.

There have been various ideals developed during the history of the institution, all successful in their time, and after their manner they gave place to new ones. The history of the institution is a gratifying record. Its sponsors have had their difficulties, such as every human problem provides. Criticisms have been offered; some few persons may have been disappointed; but the list of happy recipients of its physical and spiritual blessings is a long one, and frequently the pages of our church periodicals have borne to the world fervently grateful testimonies concerning special benefits received.

The scope and influence of the Sanitarium have gradually widened. As the days have gone by the skill of the physicians available has increased and those who require the aid of specialists in various lines may expect much and get it.

The nursing service is well organized and efficiently managed, the students being required to observe certain standards in the outward attainments of the profession, and constantly are impressed with the value of the higher spiritual qualities.

The demand for expansion of the institution has been insistent for a long time. There are no proper facilities for caring for tubercular cases nor advanced mental cases, much to the sorrow of many who greatly need such care. As has been urged also, there is great need for medical care of delinquent children, yet there are no facilities for it.

The General Conference of 1920 indorsed a proposition of building an annex, but the present financial depression has forbidden any such work. So with natural regret but willingness to observe the requirements, those engaged in this work continue to hold their ideals and to work for their attainment.

Further, the very commendable idea of the Health Department, of which the Sanitarium is but the central institution, of sending trained and consecrated nurses into the various communities of Saints to give lectures and demonstrations had to be suspended for lack of funds. Work along this line was begun in Lamoni last year and was so well liked that the community is continuing it this year, deeming it of great importance and value.

But in spite of difficulties, the ideals of our church physician, Elder G. Leonard Harrington, and his coworkers, survive. He persists that the Sanitarium is more than a surgical hospital. The real meaning of the word sanitarium must be exemplified in the work of the institution: "Health station or retreat." All the good there is in dieting, massage electrotherapy, and various prophylactic practices should be available, so that one who is not functioning normally and who has not the faith to be relieved by prayer nor healed by ad-

(Continued on page 1126.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Thanksgiving and Service

By William Osler

Synopsis of sermon on Canadian Thanksgiving Day, November 6.

Scriptural Reading, Psalms 103. Sermon Texts: 1 Samuel 15:22: "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat rams." Isaiah 61:8: "For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering."

The eternal Father must have had in mind the view of the fully completed and celestialized earth, even before its creation. (Job 38; Isaiah 40:12-31; 46:10; Revelation 4:11; 21:1-3.) Looking at the book of nature and scanning the page of geology we can note, as evidenced and written on hill and dale, and on rock or shale, the imperishable testimony that things do not just happen with nature, and that God has planned well. It took long ages of the prehistoric past, with the steamy jungle of huge and rank vegetation, to prepare the earth for man's habitation and to be the producer of his sustenance.

God stored the coal in the earth to be discovered and used when man really needed it; and likewise the petroleum and other earth products on a same basis. The animal life by a divine plan became fitted to correspond with man when the earth home was completed; then man was born of God and stood as a king with dominion of love over all earth life. True was the statement: "everything . . . was very good." (Genesis 1:3.)

God was the true king over all, however, and Father of all whilst all belonging to him for the common good of all. The gratification of selfish desire, sin, transgression of law, brought disaster, enmity, and death, and the earth became polluted by the exaltation of the law of evolution or selfishism. This law has a place in the laws of God, but is sublimated by the law of love or altruism. God blessed men after the fall, and his church was found amongst them. Besides spiritually blessing them, God desired men to know that the earth and its products belonged to him for the common good of all men, and were not to be esteemed as the property of any individual. So then, as now, if a person really loves God this love will be shown in terms of service to God and man.

As the people turned away from the true worship of God and justice, so they began to love self and injustice. It is true that they professed to worship God and offer sacrifices to him, but such was but mockery and so God esteemed it. Selecting the descendants of Abraham (Israelites) God gave them the opportunity to prove the divinity of his rule and the living truth of a democracy who were stewards of their lives and goods to God and all partakers of the common benefit. The wilderness manna was sent of God and shared by all on the basis of equality, and it was useless to seek to hoard it for profit. In their new land God gave them laws which constantly reminded them of the above duty and how they should live in equality.

Instead they followed the ways of class rule and paganism, and eventually the Lord scattered them by the power of their enemies. True to prophetic promise, through Christ and his apostles the church was established and the gospel was preached and the poor heard it gladly. The church demonstrated practical Christianity and had all things common, thus loving God and man. Later, however, the church erred and sinfully departed from the Lord and was no longer found as the true church of Christ. A mixture of paganism and Christianity ruled the people, and injustice was upheld. The reformation being more civil and political than religious, made little change in the true order of things in recognizing the law of love of justice and equality in temporal and spiritual blessings.

In these last days the gospel is again restored to men and the gospel gifts are being enjoyed. Its followers seek to overcome self and come to equality of temporal and spiritual things. The world needs this kind of a saving message. The bearers of this message must be in harmony with it or else they will be rejected of God. (Isaiah 1:11-18.) The intent, therefore, of our Thanksgiving service is not just that of the passing moment of fleeting joy, but rather the added testimony of humble obedience to the laws of God. Forms of godliness denying the power of God (2 Timothy 3:5) are hated by him (Matthew 7:20-23). Let the church lend every true aid for the salvation of men and the desire for disarmament and peace. (1 Timothy 2:1-2; 1 Peter 2:13-18.)

Thanksgiving to God is far more than lip service. All the material offerings placed by us on the altar will never save unless we put ourselves there also (Romans 12:1). Be concerned over your present spiritual standing (Jeremiah 8:20). Are you fulfilling the laws of God? (Matthew 22:37-40.) Less than this will not please our heavenly Father. May we through faithfulness to God and man be numbered amongst the redeemed throng who will surround the throne of grace and chant the glory of God in Thanksgiving praise. (Revelation 7:9-12.)

The Legion Visits Kansas City

By Ralph W. Farrell

"It is hoped to refresh some minds with certain points of the great problem of amusement."

The American Legion has come and gone. It was a wonderful day. Persons who saw the parade of thousands of soldiers will not soon forget the sight. Men with the Cross of War were in that parade; men who had suffered and bled in France, who had come back from the pit of hell, back from conquering the German menace to conquer the real foe of mankind—self. A few had learned the lesson, perhaps; but of this we need not speak now.

I was in New York when the soldiers (we did not call them "buddies" then) returned from the Spanish-American War. The parade was wonderful, too, but it seemed to mean little to the Nation that witnessed it, compared to the parade of yesterday. In that parade of over twenty years ago, the people shouted, women waved their handkerchiefs, boys whistled, and the air grew strangely electrical.

There were two classes of men in the parade that day—one had seen the horrors of war, the other had never left the coasts of America; and when those sunburned faces, haggard and set from the strain of struggle, and those bodies with shoulders somewhat bent, passed in review, the crowd went wild. They were the "men behind the guns"; they were not chocolate soldiers; they had felt the death-damp. And yet of the men who remained at home, though willing to go, it may be said that thousands of them were as true soldiers as died in Cuba or later in France. And true, there were many Pershings and Foches who fell in No-Man's-Land. And I will try to think that the patriotic hysteria prostrated before the French and American generals, not forgetting Italy and Belgium, was really for the deeds rather than the men. But we think and think and think.

But we are day-dreaming. Let us get back. Old Kansas City (which is really a young city) outdid herself. The doors were unlocked and the keys flung away. Even the policemen (some of them) could not deny the buddies anything. I actually saw one patting on the back a soldier who was coming from a drug store with a half-pint bottle of whisky in his pocket. His friends were so thirsty that they turned the street corner into a barroom, and before smiling hundreds of spectators, drank and were merry. I heard one say, "We must remember this place; I could stay here all day. Who was the doctor that gave you that perscription? We must not forget his address."

What of Prohibition?

And what of prohibition? The heart bleeds to think of it. Prohibition! About the only prohibition we have in some States, or cities, is the prohibition of selling liquor over the bar. Doubtless unscrupulous physicians will reap a fortune writing prescriptions for wine, beer, and whisky. But there is a worm of death more subtle and disastrous than is found in whisky—even the bootleg mixture. It is the worm that gnaws at the law. This country cannot play battledore and shuttlecock with the Constitution of the United States and expect to escape the dire consequence which must follow on the heels of flagrant disregard. When the Government itself becomes an outlaw, can it expect the anarchist to put aside his torch and bomb? I believe in prohibiting the sale of liquor just as sincerely as I believe in prohibiting the indulgence of the young and the old in pastimes of which the immorality is beyond question. Nine of the ten commandments were reiterated by the Christian Church as prohibitory measures, and the Sabbath was made glorious by the Lord's Day.

The police of Kansas City rounded up the known crooks and fast women and put them in jail to remain until after the convention. Detectives were here from other States to watch the influx of pickpockets, and protect as far as possible the honest visitors who had come to the great event. This is a phase of prohibition. It would seem that the world would soon go to pieces were the strong arm of prohibition paralyzed. No; I was not turned from my belief in prohibition by the story of an ex-bar tender, who is now a porter in the public library. He told me the story of the increase of insanity among colored people from drinking bootleg whisky. But he did not tell me of the blessing that ought to come to the next generation born in the saloonless period. To be sure there are two sides—but both cannot be right.

Later in the day I met, in front of a hotel, those six boys who had drunk the prescription whisky. (Have I coined a new and "immortal" phrase?) They were shouting the virtues of their State; and why not, for doubtless the drink was made from corn which grew in that State. Between the spells of eulogizing the place of his birth, one of these unfortunate yet silly fellows was helping a girl sell paper poppies for a hospital fund. He would buttonhole the men who passed and insist on each taking a flower. I saw only one person refuse to purchase, though nearly every one had previously passed the girl.

Tendencies of the Age

It was a gala day. People had given themselves over to the spirit of the occasion. I heard the laddies say, "The day is ours; let us have a good time." What did they mean by "good time"? Did it mean a reversal to a primitive type? Did it mean a surrendering of all that civilization had accomplished? Ah! And may we right in this connection withdraw for a moment from the madding crowd and consider a church-old problem? And some one says, "The relief will be much appreciated." So we retire to discuss, briefly, the subject of dancing, theater-going, and the tendency of the age in general.

I suppose that every member of the church has been to some sort of a "show," if it were nothing more than the old-fashioned panorama. Or it might have been the county fair, though I have talked with people who never went to a circus, strange as the thing may sound. I can only say that there are unfortunate people in the world. The matter of opinion, however, is to be considered later.

It would seem that the question of moral conduct could be answered by an appeal to the Word of God, for surely the greater includes the lesser—spiritual growth must be based on moral conduct. But there is another factor in the problem, which is conscience. Conscience is a word much conjured with by educators, and they have left the rank and file about as far adrift from a common and correct knowledge of the subject as they were when the process of enlightenment began. Can this controversy over dancing, theater-going, and other so-called evils, be settled by an appeal to anything? At times one is inclined to say, No. And many a person (the pastor may we say?) has given over the matter, despairing of ever correcting the terrible tangle of affairs into which society has drifted. And one reason for its difficulty is because there are two sides to the question, just as there are to prohibition. But only a coward or an indolent man or one entirely indifferent to the fate of the world, will abandon his fight for right as he sees the right.

Dancing

As for dancing, it seems to me (and I must speak for myself) that we have a clear case against it. It is true that it has many defenders, most of whom are the immature, mentally and spiritually, and the men who make money out of the game—for it is a game, and one that gambles with virtue. I may say, for what it is worth (very little no doubt to some) that false interpretation of psychology has lent its dire influence to hinder in the solution of this serious problem. Imperfect reasoners have branded strong arguments, either verbal or written, against dancing, as an "attack on the young." It is whispered, in the dark corners—as a rule never spoken in the open—that any attack on the evil of dancing will result in the driving of the dancer away from the church. I never could appreciate the supposed logic of this argument. The fact is that a sinner is not driven from the church by an attack on the sin that is destroying him; he is drawn away if he leaves, by the sin that he will not give up. Many a person has "turned away sorrowing" because he will not tear down the barrier which keeps him from the Tree of Life. No, if a thing is wrong it should be proclaimed against. It is only when a preacher is in doubt about the wrongness of a thing that he should refrain from attack. The evil fruit of dancing is so conspicuous, it's being scattered all about us, that time and space need not be taken here to examine the subject further. But how about the theater?

The Theater

The theater really has a wonderful mission, and if it were free from the contaminating influence of greed, could be made to minister to our culture and real pleasure. What of the "show" of to-day? I believe I can speak as a witness, for I have visited the playhouse; I have seen the great Shakespearian plays by the great living actors; I have listened to grand opera (it is true, however, that I never attended but one performance), and I have seen a sample of other plays. I have attended these entertainments for two reasons, one to investigate and the other to enjoy their influence. I did not sneak in or sneak out, although I do not believe that there is a real Latter Day Saint who feels perfectly free in conscience when attending these places of amusement.

And especially is this true to-day, for there is not one play in a hundred that does not offer vulgarity that runs into obscenity. And it is not a question of the evil mind seeing the bad, for the bad is made prominent in order to attract men and women who would by no means come were they not fed the food of vultures. The modern stage is dance-mad. (And the things which I say are not vagaries: they are proclaimed by careful observers everywhere.) Nearly every song, outside of a few classics, contain some slur on some race or some covert allusion to sex perversion. The jokes about marriage and mothers-in-law became so nauseating to the decent minded that one theater in an eastern city forbade those jokes on its program. As for indecent exposure of the human person, scarcely any play is complete, in the mind of the sensuality-soaked mob, that does not have one Salome dance, or its equivalent. Time was, and that not over ten years ago, when the police of an eastern city prohibited girls from dancing in Scotch uniform without tights. What a change has a decade brought! Women even walk the streets to-day attired in ways that would cause a Hottentot to blush.

Draw the Line Between Decency and Indecency

I trust that I am not speaking the language of prudery, although the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal upholds the sentiment of prudes in the following striking sentence: "The prudes and Puritans of America have done infinitely more for our material good than the 'let-things-be' drones and parasites." It is not prudery to state that girls who walk about the streets thinking they can win a good husband by attracting him with naked breasts, are making a big mistake. The sex instinct in every male beholder will doubtless be appealed to (yet not necessarily in the sense that lust will be aroused), but the higher and nobler qualities, such as loyalty, sobriety, fidelity, etc., without which no man would make a good husband, are not drawn towards shameless women.

I have nothing to say against the beauty of the human form. The Divine Architect is responsible for the beautiful lines and curves which please the eye of man, not only in animate but in inanimate nature; but God, who made Eve and gave her to Adam to be his wife, in later days, when sin had entered the world, forbade the exposure of the body, even cursing the son of Ham who did not cover his father's nakedness.

The bounden duty devolves upon Latter Day Saints, unto whom it is given to be the light of the world, to "draw the line" which marks off decency from indecency; not only in dress reform, but in every other reform. And the man who has in his heart, not only courage enough but sense enough to cry out against these menaces not only to church existence but also civilization existence, should be welcomed as a deliverer, not frowned on as a disturber of the peace of the righteous. God, give us Jeremiahs and Malachis who will not cease to cry out against the sins of the world until He has set righteousness in the earth.

Think you, had the ministry of the church taken firm and continuous stand against every phase of ungodliness, that to-day in some Sunday schools would be teachers arguing in favor of the modern dance, and branches holding minstrel shows in their church buildings?

What of the Movies

And what of the movies? Serious thinking writers refer to this new form of amusement as "The Movie Dope," "The Menace of the Motion Picture," and like terms. The cry of alarm is being raised, but few hear it. Unless a favorable reaction soon comes, this world will never know another Dickens, or Thackeray, or Scott, or Tennyson, or Browning, or Hugo. Who will write books if they are not read? Who will read a book that can be seen pictured. Few of our boys and girls will ever read David Copperfield (the wonderful story found with Scott near the South Pole), Les Miserables, The Tale of Two Cities, and countless other pieces of precious literature, for they can see them caricatured on the screen. So we are facing a readingless age, a thinkingless age, an age that shouts under the light of false fires. And all because the moving picture man has gone money mad and seeks to feed the morbid and lazy taste of a degenerating public. Of course there are several hundred men and women among this motley mob who have not bowed the knee to the cinema Baal; but the writer does not class himself among the elect, for he has seen moving pictures, and it is because of the terrific wrestle he has had to overcome the moving picture drug that he feels competent to speak for he masses on this subject. But the real philosophy of the subject is not touched on here. Neither am I saying that we should or should not attend the picture shows.

I think that too much talk—impractical talk—has been made against motion pictures. I am not guilty of this censure, for never have I written on the subject, and my references to either the theater, or the movies, or the dance, in my sermons, have been limited to less than a half dozen times. A disease is cured by removing its cause. Likewise must this be true of the habit disease. To be sure, the victim of an evil habit is not cured by scolding him, but no one will argue that he shall not be told of the dire fate which will overtake him if he does not overcome his temptation. There is a vast difference between loving the sinner and hating his sin. The watchman on the tower is there in order that he may see danger and warn of its approach.

The arguments for the moving picture are many. Some arguments have merit in them, too. No one longer denies the value of the machine with its possibilities. Every parent wishes that some way might be devised for using the instrument for the uplift of the race. It is possible that concerns will continue to produce wholesome stories that will serve as a harmless recreation. But we may rest assured that such pictures will not be shown in the ordinary playhouse unless they are mixed with deleterious matter that damns. The so-called censorship of pictures does not furnish protection, because playhouses are fast putting on obscene vaudeville as an accessory to the picture show.

Is There a Happy Mean?

Many a time the student of this problem has asked himself if there be no happy mean, no middle ground, no moderate course, to this question; and we might almost answer that there is, were it not for the fact that human nature has in it the element of deterioration. It is no idle statement that tells us about going back if we do not move forward—that there is no standing still point in life's probation. History furnishes us many startling illustrations of this fact. The Nephite race immediately began to fall back to the indulgence of unbridled instincts when they left Christ.

A savage is (evolution to the contrary notwithstanding) a fallen Christian. There is no doubt in many minds—and evidence to the contrary is challenged—that the Australian bushman, as well as every other savage race, descended from Adam, a civilized being. A wicked man is a fallen man.

It is because we do not sense as we should this tendency to degenerate, when we forsake the path of rectitude and trifle with questionable pastimes, that the very "appearance of evil" is a dangerous fire to take into our bosoms. Men who have "learned" to drink strong drink, to gamble, to smoke, to indulge in other vicious vices, well know that they went from bad to worse. And there are few but have cursed the day in which the first downward step was taken. This is the tragedy in the path which few see.

If there be a reason for moderate indulgence in picture and theater going, I am glad. But if there be "death in the pot," I want to know it. I want to warn others of it. So far as I know, the question has not been settled. Yet I would not leave it altogether an open one.

The Example We Set

There is the phase of example. It might be possible for me to attend these places of amusement and to come away not especially injured; others, however, weaker, possibly, might, by following my example, imbibe of this cup of pleasure and fall by the wayside. This is the argument used against the man who boasts of being able to drink strong liquor or leave it alone. We say to him that many fellow mortals are not able to indulge in a moderate manner; they become drunkards; and for the sake of the weaker brother, the stronger brother must "eat no meat." I think that Paul was right in his position, and the question of example is one of serious import, and it may safely be said that if certain pleasures are not above question, as to propriety, they should be avoided. I am not forgetting that it is not easy to settle the question of propriety for every mind. For this reason God has entered into the problem. He has given us plain commandments, which, if we keep, will enable us to receive and retain the Comforter, a power that will guide into all truth. With this monitor operating in our lives, it will not be so difficult to decide what is right and what is wrong.

It is not necessary often, if ever, to argue with a Saint who has become a pleasure fiend, over the merits or demerits of theater-going. It might be simpler and more to the point to ask him if he longer enjoyed the spirit of his prayer meeting or other church service; if he had drifted away from the plain teachings of his church? It seems to me that God will not leave us without witness. And when a man feels that the fire of the Holy Ghost is growing cold in his life, he needs no human voice to remind him that something is wrong in his program; that he is really degenerating, reverting to primitive type. Here is the danger signal, if he will see it. But what if he does not see it? If there is yet hope, the minister has a duty to perform in his attempt to assist in the reclamation of the fallen. To that branch of soldiers in the parade, who blasphemed God in song as they marched, a sermon on the love of God might not be so effective as one on the fires of hell. A sermon on the latter subject might have some appeal to those hardened men if it compared hell to the doings in No-Man's Land. Jesus did not fail to remind his hearers of that fire in which the worm did not die. True, the subjects of retribution and justice may be overused, but it is also true that so much false light may be reflected on God's attributes of love and mercy that the world and even members of his church will forget entirely that Jehovah is also a God of justice.

General Pershing and Marshal Foch were with us. They were seen by about two hundred of the Independence people who were at the station as the special train passed through to Kansas City. It is needless to describe them, for the papers have been filled with praises and pictures of these great warriors. And there were Diaz and Jacques: doubtless all good men from a moral standpoint. It is said that General Diaz attended mass. The Italians, with the fervency of the Latin races, showed their love for their hero and tokened it with a jeweled gold sword, which they presented to him. It was a wonderful day. The night was filled with the pleasant meetings of old friends and with the orgies of drunken soldiers and civilians. It was not mere rumor that told of the disgusting scenes in restaurants, where frenzied men and women would do cabaret stunts on the tables.

Forgetting God

"But," it is urged, "why mention these things? Are they not common in every large gathering?" Oh, yes, my friend, but you should see that I am bringing out a contrast.

Kansas Citians were drunken with the success of the convention. From a spectacular standpoint they were justified. Nevertheless, one thing was lacking—remembrance of God. Had he or had he not been the Great Deliverer? What was Pershing compared to him? We would not take one dint of praise from our general; let the rabble cry loud and wild, "Long live Cæsar!" But—"Lord, God of Hosts, be with us yet; lest we forget—lest we forget!"

Materialism. Everywhere gross materialism. In the midst of that din, that abandon, that thoughtless shouting, on that Tuesday afternoon, few had ears to hear the heart-breaking cry of a forgotten prophet who used these words, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?" Not the sword, but the cross. Jesus! The Prince of Peace. The lowly Savior. In words I may be dangerously near the Unitarian creed, but in meaning I am far, far from it, when I say that it is only by holding Jesus in the heart as an ideal that one is enabled to rise higher than the moral plane. When we lose sight of the Great Example, we begin to wander backward; to fall through space. Our Holiness brethren sing a great deal the hymn, "There's power in the blood." I have asked them, often, if they really sensed the meaning of those words, and they have silenced me with the remark, "Great is the mystery of godliness." There is power in Christ. He is the hope of the world. No one was ever so compassionate, loving, charitable. I have heard many sermons and testimonies given on "love" and "charity"; but I have yet to hear such talks close without the speakers impugning the motives of others, or in some other way revealing the mote in their own eye. "Alas, for the rarity of Christian charity!"

Relaxation a Correct Principle

At this juncture I should like to give a few lines which I take from my report to the Providence Branch, reviewing my work there for the year 1918. (A copy of this report was turned over to the clerk of that branch.)

"You may think me mistaken when I say that I am not half so anxious about the condition of the young as I am about the condition of many of the old; by this statement I express no prejudice against age—I am not very young myself, surely not rated among the young. I reverence gray hairs when they rest on the head of the faithful; but gray hairs on the head of age which has not profited and improved by the passing years, calls not for my respect, but my pity. I make no 'knock' when I urge that we not only pray for our young, but also love them and encourage them by the revelation of what great things the gospel has done for us. It is not so much what we say as what we do that influences the life of the youth. It is hard for old age to sympathize with new age, and often because old people take no pleasure in certain things, is no proof that those things of themselves are wrong. Relaxation is essential to normal living, and there is more than one harmless way to relax from the cares of life. I have no right to pick out for another the things that interest me, and insist that he must indulge in nothing else. The old do not care for boating, canoeing, socials, and other such harmless recreations; the old prefer to meet and talk of the past (which, of course, the young seldom do, for they have no past); the old love to talk of life as it has been lived, the young love to talk of life as it will be in the future. Let both young and old enjoy the beauties of life as it is revealed to them, avoiding the bad and cleaving to the good, remembering that the 'wages of sin is death.'"

What is the application, the moral, of this many-worded article? It is not meant for a sermon. Possibly, however, several applications and morals have been made, as we passed along. It is hoped only to refresh some minds with certain points of the great problem of amusement. I presume that Darrow, who lectured before an educational society last week, thought he was revealing the cause of our disease when he said that our race was over civilized. Mr. Darrow is famed for his loose thinking along some lines, but in his reference to "over civilization" he is in accord, somewhat, with certain minds who talk much about unwise curbing of instincts; "suppression" I believe is the word used. Jesus taught denial, the suppression of excess, the sin of concupiscence. Jesus said, "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out." He taught readjustment of the soul; the new birth; that the wages of sin is death. In the mad endeavor to get away from rigid Puritanism, the world has swung to the other extreme and is on the "primrose path to the everlasting bonfire." The for half of the way; but at this point they diverge. The rule above continues to lead us on in the order indicated by the word of God. The lower rule leads along the broad way—the way which has been perverted by selfishness. Some rules are made to conform to our standards of living. One whose conscience has abandoned him to a course which is measured by this perverted rule, is no longer bothered with scruples about spending "untithed money" for speculation, gifts to friends, or in personal luxuries.

Are We Expected to Live Beneath the Standard?

What standard? "Well, a respectable standard as seen by our neighbors and friends." Paul speaks (2 Corinthians 10: 12, 13) of those who were "measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise. But we will not boast of things without our measure, teachings of the three books on the question of conduct yet contain many precious commandments which it would stand us well to keep in mind.

As for moving pictures, dances, theaters, we cannot if we would prevent by legislation our people from attending them. We can and should teach them to "grow in grace," to "avoid the very appearance of evil," to "let their moderation be known unto all men," to overcome evil habits, to be a good example to the ungodly, to beware of the sinister teaching and influence of the god of pleasure, for the world is pleasure mad, and to "forsake that which is evil and cleave to that which is good." If we really mean business and are really desirous of "coming up higher"—as we are exhorted so frequently to do—and will allow the Holy Spirit to be our monitor, we may in time be able to take another step towards the goal of Christian perfection.

Such have always been my views as an officer in the church.

The Two Rules

Lincoln said, "I do the best I know how—the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything; if the end bring me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference."

There are good rules and bad rules, but only one right rule when measured by divine standards. We have a right to differ with each other, but no one has a right to differ with God.

Self-Interest Versus Selfishness

The law of self-preservation is instinctive in human nature. When controlled and sublimated, this instinct promotes physical well-being, mental development, and manhood. This fact will be indicated by bodily care and the provisions made to supply the needs of one's dependents. Either of the accompanying rules leads along the same course of self-interest but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even to you." God's way is the right way. Every knee shall bow to his rule some day. If we now conform to the world's standards, we will have to change some day, for ten angels swearing we were right would not make it so. Therefore, let us adopt as our rule of life, God's standards; then we will never need to change. The friendship of the world is enmity with God. It has robbed us of peace and power. Shall we commit the folly of running to the thief for protection?

God wants no second place in our affections. "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments," he has declared. The law puts necessary living expenses first, but after that, tithing. The Saint who pays tithing after he is "better fixed," or when his stock investments make him "a lot of money," or by other rules than the order prescribed by God, is not the one who has materially assisted in carrying forward the gospel work. The man who puts off tithing and justifies his course in the hope that the church will share bountifully, when he bequeaths the wealth which he cannot use in the next world, is not the man who makes it possible to keep a missionary in the field to-day. However, he rests under a more serious indictment, in the fact that in his failure to keep the law, he has dishonored the Lawgiver.

"There is a way that seemeth right, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Which will be your rule? By choosing the right rule you help others to choose the right, "and as many as work according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy." BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

It is encouraging to note the continued building operations in Independence and the territory extending to the west toward Kansas City. Local carpenters and others engaged in the building trades seem to find almost continual employment. While the operations are not of the boom type, but mostly confined to residences, they suggest that it is but a matter of a short time till the entire territory between Kansas City and Independence will be built up. A few business houses are included.

The Sabbath of To-day

By A. M. Chase

"Is it not time for us to enter a self-examination to see where we stand?"

"The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Wherefore the Sabbath was given unto man for a day of rest; and also that man should glorify God, and not that man should not eat; for the Son of Man made the Sabbath Day, therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath."—Mark 2: 25. (All quotations from the Inspired Translation of the Bible.)

"Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."—1 Corinthians 6: 20.

"The Saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. . . . Be not hypocrites nor of those that make a man an offender for a word."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

"Remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect, or in other words, that thy joy may be full."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, 3.

Much has been written on the subject of the Sabbath day, and Sabbath observance, but mainly from the viewpoint of a polemic, disputing with those who hold for the observance of the Jewish Sabbath, or rest day. I do not desire so to approach this subject, but, rather from the position of one who has been commanded to "teach the principles of my gospel," and "to observe the covenants and church articles to do them." In other words, as one upon whom the obligation has been placed to "see that my law is kept." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5; 41: 2.)

When the Master declared that upon the two "great commandments" hang all the law and the prophets, he pointed out the fundamental principles which had been transgressed; and because of this transgression was the law added: This law which was made for the lawbreaker and disobedient, even the "law of sin and death," "written and engraven in stones." (Romans 8: 2; 2 Corinthians 3: 7.)

When we ask how the command to keep the Sabbath can rest on these two fundamental commandments, the question may be answered by reading and considering the fourth command, as occurring in the certified copy of the decalog, found only in the fifth chapter of Deuteronomy. It reads as follows:

"Keep the Sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates; that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." (Italics mine.)

Evidently it is true that Moses, when he gave these commandments to the children of Israel, delivering them through the oral word, added his interpretation of the reason for this commandment, for, before receiving the written table of this law, he says, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it." But when he had written the copy of this "Covenant . . . even ten commandments," in Deuteronomy, he gave this certificate of genuineness:

"These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the midst of fire . . . with a great voice; and he added no more. And he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me."—Verse 22.

With the foregoing reason and assurance of divine authority therefor, surely one need not miss the reason for the giving the Sabbath, or sabbatical statute in the "law of sin and death," "written and engraven in stones." It was practically saying to Israel, "You are going into the promised land, where you will hold men in bondage, not obeying the command, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, but forgetting your own experience under your taskmasters of Egypt. That your manservant and maidservant may be protected in this, and that you may remember that there was a time when you were servants, and only by my power were you delivered therefrom, I have given you this command. He that breaketh this command shall die."

Under the administration of the "law of sin and death," we fail to get the full signification of this day of rest which "the Lord hath made." We only see the stern edict with the penalty attached for him who fails to heed the injunction to do in six days, whatever business or pleasuring he may have on hand, thus making it impossible for others, as well as himself to take their needed rest: "That thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou," missing the full value of this command, as Israel seemed to do always, not being able to sense the spiritual side of the law, the doctors of the law surrounded this command with such interdictions and finespun differentiations that one could not keep it and "live therein." As Peter declared at the council at Jerusalem, (Acts 15: 10) it was a "yoke which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear," and made so because they failed to know "What this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice." (Matthew 12: 7.)

Under the administration of the "better hope, by which we draw nigh unto God," "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," we are not left to grope in darkness, but are given a clear view of, not only our duty to our neighbor in a negative sense, but our privileges as children of the "new covenant."

It is a wonderful privilege to be taken into the confidence of God, to be the "friends" of Christ, so that he vouchsafes unto us the revelations of his will; but it brings with it a weight of responsibility that may not be avoided. "Where much is given, much is required," and that "man shall . . . live by every word of God," is our persistent testimony to the world at large. As Paul asks the Roman Saints, "Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonorest thou God?"

I know of no force that makes for the breaking down of the spiritual morale of the churches at large, and especially of this church, which boasts of being the repository of the revelations of God's will in these latter days, more than the failure to "keep the Sabbath day," not in any Judaizing sense, but in the better mode as revealed in our "covenants and commandments." And certainly there is no other one commandment that comes with more vital promise. Let us "hear the law":

"Blessed are they whose feet stand upon the land of Zion, who have obeyed my gospel, for they shall receive for their reward the good things of the earth; and it shall bring forth in its strength; and they shall also be crowned with blessings from above; yea, and with commandments not a few, and with revelations in their time; they that are faithful and diligent before me. Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it. Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things. Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or in other words, rejoicing and prayer. And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours. . . . yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul. . . . Behold, this is according to the law and the prophets: wherefore trouble me no more concerning this matter, but learn that he who doeth the works of righteousness, shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come. I, the Lord, have spoken it and the Spirit beareth record. Amen." —Doctrine and Covenants 59: 1-5.

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," and we rejoice in the "glorious liberty of the children of God" that bids us, "Be not harsh in judgment, but merciful in this"; we are also admonished to, "Be not hypocrites." If we outwardly rejoice in the declared fact that we are the recipients of the revelations of God, "but in works deny him, being abominable, and disobedient," as Paul wrote of the Creteans, (Titus 1:16) then are we hypocrites indeed, turning our liberty into license.

When we realize that in some of our branches we have to put our Sabbath, or rest day services aside, finding it almost impossible to hold an afternoon service before half past seven or eight o'clock, because of the desire for pleasuring of various sorts, we wonder whether the Saints have escaped the spirit of the world that is so responsible for our "perilous times." Is it true of this church that they "have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof"? Are we to the point where we are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God"?

If judgment shall begin at the house of the Lord, is it not time for us to enter into a self-examination to see where we stand? We would not be harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things," yet there is a danger facing us as a people that we may not close our eyes unto, and that danger is voiced in this: "He that . . . receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned." For, "I the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6 and 81: 3.)

May the Master help us to appreciate the fact that even in this command with which we have been crowned, it is the

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

"Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth"

By W. H. Deam

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The Bible as a Fiddle

We have heard it said that the Bible is like an old fiddle, in that any tune may be played on it. It is a fact that attempts are made to play a variety of tunes on the Bible by supplying that which is not in harmony with the teachings of the book, nor in accord with the divine symphony which is characteristic of the Bible.

I read of a minister who, because some of his flock had been hearing some elders preach the Bible according to the way it reads, told these people that anything could be proved from the Bible, that he could prove from the Bible that Christ hung himself, and that it could not be proved (contradicting himself) that Christ was ever baptized by immersion; that the only baptism Christ ever received was when he was sprinkled in the temple when he was a child.

That is a sample of some of the tunes which do not harmonize at all with the words of truth found in the Bible, they simply being jargons and misrepresentations. That minister was not trying to follow the instructions of the apostle to Timothy. Either he had not "studied" and was ignorant, or he was dishonest. Let us see what the "word of truth" says about the baptism of Jesus.

The Baptism of Jesus

"And it came to pass in those days that Jesus came from Nazareth into Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan, and straightway coming up out of the water he saw the heavens open and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him: and there came a voice from heaven saying, Thou art my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."—Mark 1: 9-11.

The "word of truth" says that Jesus was "baptized of John in Jordan," so he was not in the temple when he was baptized. Being "in Jordan" and not in the temple he "straightway cometh up out of the water." If he was love of God that leads us to repentance. May we not despise this, one of his gifts to man, and not only sing, but fully realize the fact:

"This is the day the Lord hath made,
A day most holy to his name,—
Wherein our vows should all be paid,
And not a thought our hearts invade
That could create one blush of shame.

"A day when we should strive to meet,
In meekness and humility,
Our Father at his mercy seat,
Confess our sins, and him entreat
To pardon our iniquities.

"A day when all his children dear
In love should meet around his throne,
A gracious Father's voice to hear,
Each heart o'erflowed with filial fear,
Making his august will our own."

sprinkled while in the river, where the "word of truth" says he was when he was baptized, his lower limbs at least must have received a thorough wetting. Substantially the same account of Jesus' baptism is given in the third chapter of Matthew. After being baptized in Jordan he "went up straightway out of the water," Matthew says, and not down from the temple, and he was not a mere child, but a matured man of about thirty years of age.

"Only Believe"

There is a tune called "Only believe," which some, not observing Paul's advice to Timothy, try to play on the Bible. A text used in support of this tune is Acts 16:31, as follows: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." This language was addressed to the jailer by Paul and Silas, but the context shows that there was something that immediately followed these words addressed to the jailer. They preached the words of the Lord unto the jailer and his house, and Paul and Silas no doubt did as Paul instructed Timothy to do. As a result of their preaching the whole household, including the jailer, were baptized. Belief must be followed by acts of obedience, so it was something more than "only believe." If we stop with the 31st verse it would not be necessary for the rest of the house to even believe, for the language would lead one to infer that the "house" would be saved on the belief of the jailer. The jailer asked Paul and Silas what he should do to be saved, and they said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

Saved by Grace

Another text used in support of the "only believe" tune is found in the second chapter of Ephesians, the eighth and ninth verses, as follows: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works lest any man should boast."

To understand this text according to the "only believe" theory would make Paul contradict himself. "Not of works, lest any man should boast," in the ninth verse is followed in the tenth verse by this language: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath ordained that we should walk in them."

How About Works?

"Not of works, lest any man should boast" does not mean that there were no works required of the Ephesians in order that they might be saved. That we may properly understand Paul, let us first know to whom he addressed this language; or rather, what class of people the Ephesians were. When we remember that they were Gentiles, and do not forget the relationship that existed between Jew and Gentile, we will have a cue to the situation. Paul was a strong advocate of works and did not exempt the Gentiles. In the twentieth verse of the twenty-sixth chapter of the Acts he tells them that "they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance," which is in harmony with what John the Baptist told the Pharisees and Sadducees, to "bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance."

Returning to the Ephesian text: "For by grace are ye saved through faith." Faith implies works, for the Apostle James says that "faith without works is dead." "Not of works lest any man should boast" does mean or refer to the works of the gospel, or good works. The works mentioned in the ninth verse are entirely different from those mentioned in the tenth verse. The ninth verse refers to the works of the law, which the apostle mentions in many places, particularly in the sixteenth verse of the second chapter of Galatians, as follows:

"Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified."

Works of the Law a Curse

Paul was very much opposed to the law of carnal commandments. In the third chapter of Galatians he says they are a curse—"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." In the second verse he asks: "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" In the tenth verse he says: "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse."

Let us now examine what follows, in the eleventh and twelfth verses of the second chapter of Ephesians:

"Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that ye at that time were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world."

Ah! if we will let Paul explain himself he will make all perfectly plain and clear to our comprehension. In the two verses just quoted, immediately following the text, he reminds the Ephesians of their condition before the redeeming grace of Christ came to them. Don't forget what he said to the Galatian Gentiles that Christ had redeemed them from the curse of the law. (Galatians 3:13.)

The Partition Wall

Paul likens the conditions separating Jew and Gentile to a partition wall. In the 13th verse he says that they who hitherto had been afar off are brought nigh by the blood of Christ, and in the 14th verse he says Christ had made them one by breaking down the partition wall between them. Now what was that wall? It was the law of carnal commandments, specifically circumcision, which the Jews insisted on observance of by the Gentiles before they were fit to associate with. This he speaks of in the thirteenth verse of the sixth chapter of Galatians, as follows:

"For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh."

"That they may glory in your flesh," Paul says. This shows what he meant when he said, "not of works lest any man should boast," or "glory." Boast and glory in this connection means the same thing. The dictionary says that "to glory is to feel exultant, take pride, exult."

Some of the Jewish saints insisted that the Gentiles must be circumcised, stating that they should not be saved if they were not. See Acts 15:1, as follows:

"And certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren and said, Except you be circumcised after the manner of Moses ye cannot be saved."

The next verse says that Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, after which it was decided that Paul and Barnabas and others should go to Jerusalem and lay the matter before the apostles and elders. The decision of the conference was that it was not required of the Gentiles.

Peter Had to Be Converted

The Apostle Peter for a time did not understand the redeeming merits of Christ's blood in making all nations one. When at Antioch, perhaps, because of necessity, he went in and ate with the Gentiles, but when some of the brethren came down from Jerusalem he withdrew, not wishing to be seen with the Gentiles. Of this incident Paul says: "I stood him to the face because he was to be blamed." Afterwards when at Jerusalem the Jews twitted Peter of it by saying: "Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and did eat with them." This, however, was after Peter had learned through a vision at Joppa that God is no respecter of persons and that he hath "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." After the vision that Peter beheld he went to see Cornelius. Cornelius knew that Peter, being a Jew, had no right to associate with him, a Gentile; but Peter told him that God had shown him that he "should not call any man common or unclean."

After the Joppa vision Peter ardently contended that the Gentiles be in full fellowship without requiring that they be circumcised. In the conference at Jerusalem he said that the Gentiles had become purified by faith, and in his speech in behalf of them he said: "Now therefore why tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear."

Yes, "by grace" were the Ephesian Gentiles "saved through faith" from ostracism and banishment, and not of themselves; it was "the gift of God" in his Son Jesus Christ who hath "broken down the middle wall of partition" between them by abolishing "in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances."

The Calling of Apostles

To "rightly divide the word of truth" one cannot always depend on a single sentence or verse, but often must take into consideration other passages bearing on the question in order to get the true meaning. For instance, if subsequent facts did not disprove such an idea one might think by the 22d verse of the first chapter of Acts that the successorship in the apostleship could only be by one who had continued from John's baptism and had been a witness to the resurrection of Jesus. To fill the place vacated by the transgression and death of Judas two such men were selected. It was Peter's idea that one to fill such vacancy in the quorum of twelve should be one who had been with the church from the beginning and a witness of the resurrection of Jesus. Of the two selected the choice fell on Matthias.

Peter made that statement not by inspiration, but through his narrow conception of what was necessary in the case, something like he was concerning the Gentiles before he had the vision at Joppa, which subsequent facts go to prove. He was not inspired when he made that statement, because when the Holy Ghost made choice such an idea was not considered, for it said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." (Acts 13:2.) By that call Barnabas and Saul were ordained apostles.

Barnabas was an early disciple of Christ, but I cannot find that he was a disciple during the ministrations of John and Christ, but Saul had been a persecutor of the church instead of being a witness for it. Saul's conversion took place in the year 37 and I believe he was ordained an apostle about eight years later, or in the year 45.

It is a serious matter to subvert the word of truth by suggestion, innuendo, or failure to make known all bearing on a matter under consideration. All should "study to divide" or explain the word of truth just as it is given, and not with a view to make it fit or harmonize with certain creeds or beliefs.

We have often heard it said that one could make the Bible read that it is right to steal by simply leaving out two words. Ephesians 4:28: "Let him that stole steal no more." To leave out the last two words, no more, would not be dividing the truth rightly. And it is doing violence to Paul's language just as much to say that in addressing the Ephesians "by grace are ye saved," he meant no acts of obedience were required of them or us, except to simply believe.

No doubt the "only believe" idea was instituted to make it easier to become Christians, but I believe it has had the opposite effect, because people as a rule do not want a milk-and-water religion. They naturally feel that if there is nothing required of them they are as well off outside the pale of the church. There is no doubt in my mind but that the lodges get more members because there is something required of the candidate in the way of initiation. Let us be honest and true with all scripture and not put a wrong construction on it.

Are Latter Day Saints Guilty?

Latter Day Saints are careful to 'rightly divide the word of truth' as regards the fundamental principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and there is almost universal harmony among the eldership in relation thereto, but there is not such a unanimity of thought as regards all the revelations given to the church in these latter times.

Take section 86, Doctrine and Covenants. It is in plain language, so that there is no need to say it means this, that, or the other. It means just what it says. "Hot drinks are not for the body or the belly." It is not necessary for some one to explain that hot drinks there means cocoa, tea, postum. If I drink a cup of hot water it is a hot drink. We are told that Hyrum Smith said hot drinks referred to tea and coffee. Yes, and Peter thought no one should be ordained an apostle except he had continued with the church from John and had witnessed the resurrection of Jesus, but the Holy Ghost called them, contrary to that idea.

Hot tea and hot coffee must be included in "hot drinks," but my judgment is that if the language particularized on any one thing it was hot toddy, which was quite commonly used at the time when Doctrine and Covenants 86 was given. In fact, I can remember when a great many people, church members as well as those making no profession of religion, thought it quite necessary to have a bottle of whisky or brandy in the house to make hot toddy for colds and various ailments. Was the Lord not explicit enough and some man had to furnish an explanation?

As regards the use of meat, the revelation says: "Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or cold, or famine; and in the closing of the paragraph he said in regard to the use of animal food: "And these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine or excessive hunger"; in other words, in case of emergency to save life. The language is plain as regards how and when meats may be used: first, they should be used sparingly; and secondly, they should be eaten only in winter, or cold, or famine. That cuts out the use of meats in the summer or warm weather altogether, does it not? How many observe that in the sale and use of meats? Some do, but there are more who do not observe it. Some cut out tea and coffee because they think the Word of Wisdom is specific against, and eat abundance of meat the year around. Consistent? No.

The latter-day revelations are as plain and explicit as are the scriptures found in the Bible—in fact, a great deal plainer than some things in the Bible. Why should we try to explain them contrary to the way they read? Let us study them prayerfully, so that we might "rightly divide the word of truth."

Hot Drinks and Cancer

By J. R. Lambert

"I believe that all liquids when taken into the stomach too hot, are injurious and should be avoided."

[The writer points out that hot drinks were clearly understood at the time the Word of Wisdom was given to mean tea and coffee. The other hot drinks of to-day, including hot water, were not then in general use. The taking of anything hot, either solid food or liquid, is probably injurious. The same is true of anything extremely cold. Tea and coffee are injurious in themselves and, taken very hot or very cold, there is the possibility of additional injury from temperature. —EDITORS.]

Under the caption we use appeared a very readable article, expressing the views of its author on a topic of more or less importance. It may be found in the SAINTS' HERALD for November 10, 1915. I read this article with intense interest, and, I trust, profit.

Our brother and "M. D.," together with others who have expressed themselves in harmony with this article, seem to be firm believers in the Word of Wisdom (Doctrine and Covenants 86), for which I am glad. But while I am pleased with the manifestation of faith and confidence in the revelation, I may be excused for saying that I think the discussion should stand upon its own merits, without either side accusing the other side of being "so shortsighted and self-willed that they are not willing to give God credit for knowing what he was talking about, but seek to modify and curtail the wisdom exhibited in the word by saying it means only tea and coffee."

"Hot Drinks," What Are They?

So far as I am concerned, it does not matter so much whether the above phrase, "hot drinks," applies to hot water, as well as tea and coffee, for I believe that all liquids, taken into the stomach when too hot, are injurious and should be avoided; but before condemning too positively and fully, there are several things which should be considered.

First: Tea and coffee were about the only hot drinks known to the masses (with possibly a few substitutes), and they knew little or nothing about the use of hot water as a beverage, when this revelation was received.

Second: At the time the Word of Wisdom was given to the church, it seems to have been generally understood that the phrase applied only to tea and coffee. At that time, and afterwards, Joseph Smith, jr., and his brother, Hyrum, both testified that "hot drinks" meant tea and coffee. While this reason is not sufficient, or conclusive, by itself, it, nevertheless, has a strong and important bearing on the case.

Third: Where shall we locate the danger? Is it in the heat, or is it because the water has been boiled? Perhaps we will agree, doctors included, that if there is any danger, it lies in the heat. Surely the doctors will not claim that the danger is in the water or liquid because it has been boiled! If they will not, then why do not all who make their attacks on hot water, make a clear distinction between boiled water, taken into the stomach at a harmless temperature, and tea and coffee, etc., in which we find more or less danger, hot or cold?

Fourth: My position is that tea and coffee were the "hot drinks" referred to in the revelation known as the "Word of Wisdom," with all liquids, used as beverages, containing the same, or other chemical elements of danger, and which may be adulterated by wicked and conspiring men. In this connection I quote the introductory statements of the revelation:

"Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you. In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in these last days, I have warned you and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom," etc.

The phrase, hot drinks, was probably used to designate and distinguish between strong and hot drinks, without any reference to heat, just as the warning against "strong drink" had no reference to its strength (in all probability), but to inherent elements of danger and adulteration.

That we are right in taking this position, is further evident from the fact that the highest medical authority, cited by another doctor, virtually concedes that the danger is in the practice of swallowing the liquid when it is entirely too hot. Also, that swallowing it when it is extremely cold may have the same effect. Here it is in his own words: "Food is cooled during mastication, but liquids are often swallowed hotter than can be borne comfortably in the mouth. One cannot help thinking that hot drinks may be one of the most important causes of chronic ulcer and precancerous lesions. Extreme cold may have the same effects."

These are the words of William J. Mayo, M. D., Rochester, Minnesota; but the italics are mine. If food, cooled by mastication, can be swallowed without danger, is there any danger in swallowing the liquid if it is not too hot? I say no, but I believe, nevertheless, that any liquid or food should not be taken into the stomach when too hot or too cold. This, of course, includes tea, coffee, and all the substitutes therefor, including hot water, also ice water, ice tea, with all ice drinks, also ice cream, etc.

I may be told that the doctor does not say, positively, that "extreme cold" will "have the same effect," but that it "may have the same effect." Yes, that is true, but, notice, he puts his statements with reference to the bad effects of hot drinks in the same guarded manner. Here are the statements: "One cannot help thinking that hot drinks may be one of the most important causes of chronic and precancerous lesions."

From these statements it surely can be seen by the average reader that if the doctor were uncertain about the effects of the cold, he was equally uncertain about the effects of the heat. If anyone can get any positive proof from these statements, I think he will be as smart as a gentleman residing in the city of Saint Louis seemed to think some of their preachers were: In answer to a question sent to him by his brother, he said: "Yes, we have some very smart preachers in the city. They can get more out of a text than God Almighty ever put into it!"

It is quite evident, too, that our good brother-doctor agrees perfectly with Doctor Mayo; but we will allow him to speak for himself: "Tea and coffee are injurious and should not be taken, but their injurious effects, if not taken too hot, are of a different character, and of a less malignant type than that which Doctor Mayo states is probably the result of 'hot drinks.'"

If tea and coffee, when "not taken too hot," possess no injurious elements derived from heat, then when hot water is taken at a proper temperature, it is harmless, as it does not possess the other causes of danger found in tea and coffee; and it is just as easy to drink hot water at the proper temperature as it is to drink coffee and tea. Several years ago, I read an article from some noted doctor, in which he raised a note of warning against the danger of taking hot drinks into the stomach; but before closing his article he said, in substance, that if the liquid was not taken into the stomach too hot, the danger was removed; but that, if too hot for the comfort of the mouth, it is too hot for the stomach. "This," said he, "is the real test." (The italics are all mine.)

Now, as it is conceded that "extreme cold may have the same effect" as extreme heat (which position I believe to be true), why do we not oppose cold with equal vigor, and as much, as we now oppose heat?

Doctors are fallible; so are preachers and lawyers. As to hot drinks producing cancerous conditions in the stomach, I cannot say, but this much we do know, that doctors have been making strenuous efforts for years to discover what the true causes of cancer are. I remember when I was a boy, some sixteen or seventeen years old, there was published in the papers the conclusions of some eminent physician, in which he stated that the practice of eating tomatoes was the probable cause of cancer. It produced some excitement and anxiety in our neighborhood, in western Illinois, but it seemed soon to pass away, and the people ate tomatoes more than ever. These efforts have been and are commendable, but they should not expect us to place too much confidence in their conclusions, for as in the case under consideration, they are often nothing more than theories with opinions based thereon.

Question: If cold drinks are as dangerous as hot drinks, and the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 86 means the heat that is in hot water, why is it that the Lord did not warn us against cold drinks at the same time?

The Word of Wisdom

By George B. Anderson

"In the season thereof" seems perfectly plain to this writer.

I wonder why it is that advocates of a literal interpretation of the Word of Wisdom seem to shy at the phrase, "every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof." Is it the "man-fearing spirit" that hesitates to fly in the face of popular opinion? If so, let us recall that God said as early as 1828 that we should not fear man more than God, and those who will remember this shall be supported against all the fiery darts of the Adversary (Doctrine and Covenants 2:3) and that no weapon formed against the word of God can stand.

To me it is a pitiful sight to see Latter Day Saints, and especially those holding the priesthood, twist and garble the word of God, resorting to ridicule in a vain effort to excuse the lust of their appetites. And how we do condemn such methods in members of other churches!

Of all people in the world, Latter Day Saints should be the last to accept popular opinion in or out of the church as proof of things of God. Popular opinion crucified Christ and put Joseph Smith to death. It is one of the Devil's best weapons. But we thank God there are some brave spirits in the church who are not afraid of the opinions of men, when these opinions conflict with the word of God.

Let us see what Webster says about "season."

"1. A fit or suitable time, the convenient time, the usual or appointed time as, this fruit is out of season. 2. Any time as distinguished from others. 3. A time of some continuance but not long. 4. One of the four periods into which the year is naturally divided as marked by its characteristics of temperature, moisture, conditions of nature and the like. In the temperate regions of our globe there are four well defined divisions or seasons—spring, summer, autumn, winter."

Of course we would not insult the intelligence of the average reader by supposing that there is one among them who would not accept Webster as a standard authority on the meaning of a word, yet we have heard it said, and by one holding the priesthood, that "Webster must not be allowed to interpret the Scriptures." If there are others who hold this view, a better way is to let the Scriptures interpret themselves, and we believe the Bible will prove beyond a doubt that Webster is in harmony with the divine mind when he defines the word season.

"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven. A time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant and a time to pluck up that which is planted."—Ecclesiastes 3:1, 2, Inspired Translation.

The word season to indicate a certain time was used as far back as the days of Moses. "And they continued a season in ward."—Genesis 40:4.

The children of Israel "dwelt in the wilderness a long season."—Joshua 24:7. "The Devil departed from Christ for a season."—Luke 4:12. John shows the word to mean a certain time; John 5:4; "For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool." The Devil is to be released "for a little season."—Revelation 20:3.

The rain has its season, "the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season."—Deuteronomy 28:12. "And I will cause the showers to come down in his season."—Ezekiel 34:24. "The former and the latter rain in his season."—Jeremiah 5:24.

Night and day has a season. "Thus saith the Lord; if ye can break my covenant of the day and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season."—Jeremiah 33:20. Not night all the time, nor day all the time, but night in its season, which at the present time is about eight hours. Day in its season, at this "season of the year," in this zone is about sixteen hours. (From sun to sun.)

Fruit, also, had its season in Bible times, "And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard."—Mark 12:1-3. "Fruit in his season."—Psalms 1:3. "Shock of corn in its season."—Job 5:26.

Here is a quotation that should settle the question for all honest minds looking for the light: "And at the season of the harvest he sent his servant to the husbandmen that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard."—Luke 20:10, Inspired Translation. Let me ask the farmers when they understand the season of the harvest to be—in the summer or at Christmas time? Alfalfa is harvested in this climate and zone from June to September. Grain, in August. In Australia and the southern part of South America the "season of the harvest" is in January. When we are having our season of harvest, these countries are having their season of winter. Oranges and grapefruit in Florida ripen months ahead of our earliest fruit.

It will not do to say that fruit should be harvested and kept like the grain. If this were true, no certain time or season would be specified. None were given for the grains. Instead it is very plain that the directions have to do with the use of the fruit and not of the time of harvest, "and use of man, every herb in the season thereof."

If a thing is specified as being in "season" there is a time when it is out of season." Webster says, "To be in season: to be in good or proper time. To be out of season: to be too late, beyond the proper time, or beyond the usual or appointed time." (Just here let me say in looking up these definitions, let us not in our anxiety to twist things to suit our own opinions and bolster up a weak argument, use the definition for "season": "seasoned" as some have been guilty of doing.) If God had meant the taste he would have so expressed himself by saying "seasoned" instead of season.

Latter Day Saints seem to be the only people who cannot, or do not understand when a fruit or vegetable is in season. We notice that all dietarians outside of the church, designate fruit in season at its ripening period. C. Houston Goudeux, in an article on vegetables in the May Home Journal, says, "To-day the growing of tomatoes and their marketing while fresh and canning for out of season use has become one of the great field and factory phases of national industry."

When our groceryman tells us that raspberries are "out of season now" we do not understand him to mean that he has no canned raspberries on his shelves.

In fact, we understand perfectly what he means, except just when we are trying to argue ourselves out of accepting a literal interpretation of the Word of Wisdom.

On page 113, volume 2, Church History, we find this recorded: "About May 28, 1837, at a general meeting of the church the following was passed, 'Resolved unanimously, that we will not fellowship any ordained member who will not or does not observe the Word of Wisdom according to its literal reading.'"

Of course there was no "canned" fruit at that time, but surely God foresaw this, as he foresaw other conditions, and gave this revelation to meet these conditions "in the last days"; and if it should have a literal interpretation then, certainly it should be just as literal now.

Science is giving us many reasons at the present time why such a warning was necessary, and in the light of these investigations we are made to stand in awe at the wonderful foresight and wisdom of this revelation, and how much farther we would have advanced, both physically and spiritually, as individuals and as a body, had the Reorganization taken the same stand regarding this word as did Joseph the Martyr and the early church.

But after all, what man says should have but little weight with Latter Day Saints, and science should be invoked only to convince the unbeliever. With us it should be a question of "What does God say?" It was putting faith in the words of man, instead of the written word of God that took so many good Saints to Utah in that dark day of apostasy. I quote from a letter written by the late Joseph Smith in 1910, which I have before me. In answer to the question, "Is it true that your father said 'hot drinks' spoken of in the Word of Wisdom mean tea and coffee?" The reply was, "I have understood that the Prophet Joseph Smith should have said that the 'hot drinks' referred to meant tea and coffee, but of this I do not say, for the Word of Wisdom itself is to be construed as it reads without any reference to what anybody has said in regard to it."

That is splendid advice for all of us.

The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants 101:2, "The earth is full, and there is enough and to spare"; and all these good things it pleases God to give to man "to be used with judgment and not to excess."—Doctrine and Covenants 59:4. By using fruit "to excess," by selfishly hoarding more than we have need of, such a demand is created for canned goods "to be eaten out of season" that prices are prohibitive in the cities, and poor people cannot afford fruit to eat even in its season. No wonder moths and worms get into our dried fruits, as they did the manna when the selfish Israelites hoarded it contrary to the instructions given through Moses (Exodus 16: 19, 21), so that commercial driers are forced to use poisonous sterilizing agents to kill these germs, and hundreds of people are killed every year by ptomain and botulini in canned goods, or that the elements even show their wrath at the selfish disregard of man for the "will of God."

Every year the country suffers greater loss from late frosts and "cold snaps," and despite all efforts to combat the "devourer" his ravages grow worse and worse; nor is it any wonder that epidemics and plagues (such as influenza for instance) make no distinction between the homes of Latter Day Saints and those of the people of the world. There has never been a time in the history of the church when there has been so much sickness and physical distress as at the present time. And yet God said, "All saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments [none barred except the disobedient] shall receive health in their navel . . . and I the Lord give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them as the children of Israel and not slay them."

If this promise is not fulfilled in my case or that of my family, then it is plain that I am among the disobedient, those who do not remember to keep and do these sayings, and if I think I am keeping the Word, and still this promise is not fulfilled, is it not clear that there is something wrong with my interpretation? "I the Lord am bound when you do what I say, but when you do not what I say, you have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:13.

"Well," says one, "I had the influenza but I was not slain." How did the destroying angel pass by the children of Israel? Were some of them stricken with the plague but not slain? We think not. The destroyer was not allowed to go into their houses to smite them. Read it for yourself; Exodus 12:23. And the promise is to "pass by them as the children of Israel," "But," says another, "if that was true we would live forever." Do you suppose those Israelites lived forever? or is it not probable that the most of them lived to a ripe old age, and died "full of years" as did Abraham and David?

"Well, but we will all be subject to disease one time or another as long as we live," says some one. Let me ask you, When did you ever see a healthy sick person? or a well person that even running would not "weary"? The promise is "health" and when disease makes its appearance, health is gone. "Let God be true, though every man a liar."

The agitation about the Word of Wisdom, the opinions pro and con, recall that regarding tithing a few years ago. Out of that discussion came "unity of understanding"—Doctrine and Covenants 129:9, and if so be that the differences respecting the Word of Wisdom be held in "unity of purpose" it will result in "unity of understanding," and to this end let us all pray.

The expressive power of the human eye is so great that it determines, in a manner, the expression of the whole countenance. It is almost impossible to disguise it. It is said that gamblers rely more upon the study of the eye, to discover the state of their opponents' game, than upon any other means. Even animals are susceptible of its power. The dog watches the eyes of his master, and discovers from them, before a word is spoken, whether he is to expect a caress, or apprehend chastisement. It is said that the lion cannot attack a man so long as the man looks steadily in the eyes. . . . All the passions and emotions of the human heart, in all their degrees and interworkings with each other, express themselves, with the utmost fullness and power, in the eyes.—Cicero.

At the top of the universe is undeniably some supreme reality, some infinite entity. Mr. Arnold, describing it by one of its manifestations, calls it "An eternal Power (not ourselves) which makes for righteousness." Herbert Spencer calls it "The eternal and infinite Energy from which all things proceed." They both say "which," not "who" nor "whom." But John Tyndall said, "Standing before this power, this energy, which from the universe forces itself upon me, I dare not do other than speak of a He, a Spirit, a Cause."—William V. Kelley, in A Pilgrim of the Infinite.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A New Course of Study

With the HERALD of last issue closes the question outline which Sister Maude Parham has so successfully made upon Professor Forbush's book on Child Study and Training. We feel sure that this course has been followed by many groups of mothers earnestly desiring better to understand their children in order more profitably to guide and train them for the kingdom of God. Is it necessary to stress again the vital importance of correct teaching and guidance in early years? Our people have been warned time and time again of their duties in this regard. Some even high in authority were, in days not so very far in the past, reproved for not attending more carefully to their duties at home, and God warned them to "set in order their own houses."

The Women's Department executive desires to be of the greatest service to the sisters in helping them to enter more fully upon the sacred commission given to them. All over the church they are awakening to the need for preparational parenthood, for intelligent training that they may meet their obligations as mothers. The alarming conditions among the young people to-day might well cause us all to "stop, look, and listen." In other words, to pause, consider, and give heed to the voices which call us to our posts of duty. Read again the two articles in the HERALD of November 8, the one clipped from the Los Angeles Times, "What of the children?" and the one by Brother Rushton headed, "A grave indictment." Notice what the latter thoughtful student of the times has to say concerning the task that is before the Women's Department, and then let us, one and all, determine "as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

We are glad to announce that we are beginning in this issue a new question outline course which we feel is right in line for parents to study. It is on the text, The Mind and Its Education, by Professor George Herbert Betts, and has been prepared by Sister Dora Glines, second assistant general superintendent of our department, and already well known to the sisters of the church. Sister Glines is presenting her helps in the form of "instruction sheets," which will be found very valuable both to the teacher of a class and to the students themselves, inasmuch as they will serve to bring out and emphasize the essential points in each chapter.

We expect to have these instruction sheets, as well as the question outlines by Sister Parham (just completed) printed in pamphlet form and made available at an early date, so you need not wait to begin your study.

We expect to have these instruction sheets, as well as the new channel, for we feel safe in assuring them that they will be richly rewarded for effort put forth. Order your book at once and let us all strive to gain a most ample mental background for the portentous work upon which the church is entering, and to accomplish which is the sincere desire of the heart of each true Saint. The study of the mind, its functions, and how lessons and truths of whatever nature may be impressed thereon, is a field which should appeal not only to parents, but to ministers. After all, what is their task but to impress their message of light and truth upon humanity? And what other channel is open to them than that of the human mind?

Would it not be a splendid idea for parents of both sexes and the men of the priesthood, too, to join in taking up this little book and making a thorough study of it along the path of this outline of Sister Glines? It could be done in the Sunday school, or Religio, we fancy, providing proper arrangements were made, and would reflect creditably upon the progressiveness of the branches which carried such a class forward. This is offered merely as suggestion.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Another View of the Rural Situation

In reading my October 11 HERALD, I saw your request for the rural sisters' opinion about their situation. I am glad to give mine, for I have been isolated for eight years and the loneliness at times is almost more than one can stand.

I have in mind an idea that an "information department" with an active sister in charge in each branch, with an unlimited supply of postal cards would help solve some of our problems. On these cards all branch announcements aside from the regular services, could be noted, and they could be mailed to the isolated Saints. I am sure it would increase the branch attendance, and would make the rural members feel that they really belonged to the branch, even though forty miles away.

I have four small children, and there are a good many times when I could not attend church, for we are between thirty-five and fifty miles from the branch and have only a third interest in a Ford. Then, too, there are conditions of roads and weather to be considered. My husband is not a member of our church, but is always willing to take me when there is an opportunity. I have missed many good things, however, because I did not know about them. If we only knew in time about some of the branch activities, we might plan to go oftener than we do. It is a little disheartening to read of the fine sermons they have been having when church officials or elderly brothers of the ministry have stopped over for the week-ends, which we might have enjoyed also had we known of it in time.

It may be there are others in this same position. I hope you get my viewpoint. The rural Saints here are too far apart to make any club work possible—or so it seems to me.

SALEM, IOWA, R. F. D. 3.

GRACE SAMPSON.

Just Letters

To an Organizer.—It is a great satisfaction to note the intelligent and adequate preparation you are making for your reunion programs. I like the way you are planning to enlist the women's interest in study, by really giving them a series of lessons, getting them into the habit at the reunion meetings. With most of the women it is simply a bugaboo, this dislike for study, and one which can, happily, be removed when once they catch a glimpse of the delights to be revealed, and sense the fact that study and the expansion of their mental faculties are not impossible to them at any age.

I was delighted at our recent institute, to note the unwavering interest and attendance of dear old Sister H—, who in early years formed the habit of study and has never departed from it. Now, in her eighty-sixth year, she has just successfully passed a very creditable examination in three studies which she carried all through the winter season in the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences. These studies were biology, history of education, and social psychology. "Can you beat it?"

One of our organizers, too, on a recent trip into one of our progressive districts, told the women that scientific research is revealing the fact that women's brains work best after forty years of age! Perhaps she said "human brains," but anyway, women are human, aren't they? She was using the statement in an effort to encourage the women to study, and in her own district has built up a wonderfully fine corps of students among the women.

I am glad you are to have one of our apostles at your reunion, and one who has such a sympathetic attitude towards our department. He attended some of the meetings of our recent institute, and expressed much gratification at the nature of those meetings. Many others of our missionary force are beginning to see how closely the work we are trying to do is linked up with the successful prosecution of missionary and pastoral work. Our objectives are better homes, better parents, better children, and better Saints! What more should our priesthood desire?

Zion must be established in every heart and every home that bears the name of Latter Day Saint. No one is exempt. Love and service must mark not only general church work, but local church work, home, family, and community relations. And always, in and through it all, there runs our individual responsibility for personal enlightenment, personal advancement. To respond to our own need and yearning to become more intelligent, more Godlike in every way. God himself cannot put a quart of water into a pint pitcher, to use an old illustration. There are limits, and he will not perform miracles to do for us what he plainly expects us to do for ourselves. If we have the chance and turn our backs upon it, we will surely come under condemnation—the condemnation at least of lost opportunity.

Success to you, and never for one moment admit discouragement.
A. A.

A Gentle Hint

In a letter I note a suggestion which may prove of help to some of our readers. It was from one of our missionaries who had attended a day given over to our Women's Department, and he added:

"But why will they not learn their lesson so they can present it and tell it, instead of having to read all the time? If only the sisters would learn methods of delivery and memorize what they had to say, they surely could present it much more effectively than in the uncertain tones they now use."

You have probably noted this yourself in very many instances; and in other instances, those who possess the ability to think on their feet have sometimes been delegated to the background. However, even though we say less, even though we forget part, it is more effective if it can be spoken face to face than if we have to follow closely a written page.

I only stress this because I think a great many do not appreciate how much the effectiveness of a message is thereby marred, when a little real effort could correct this difficulty, so that they could speak with conviction concerning that which they have to present, and hence could convince others.
ONE INTERESTED.

Public Speaking for Women

The above letter reminds us that a few years ago there was built up through the Women's Department, a public speaking extension course, which became quite popular, and was reaching a large number of our people, both men and women. By advice from the coordinating committee of the church, this course was transferred to Graceland College, which is prepared to give adequate help along this line to all who wish it.

One of our prominent Canadian brethren last spring touched upon this point made against our women, viz, that they do not stand up and give their messages directly "from mind to mind," but too often use the medium of the written word. He spoke of some very splendid workers who were strong in all other points, but weak in this, which was in reality a hindrance to their work.

We might well take these kindly suggestions, sisters, and profit by them, hard as it is for us to overcome our diffidence in coming before the public as speakers. If, as one has said, we do not deliver our message in quite such elegant phrases, could we but speak it straight from the heart it will carry over to our audiences, and something will have been gained of much value.

One of the speakers at our Institute in May specialized upon this subject. She gave many splendid ideas, stressing the old injunction to "Stand up; speak up; and shut up!" Make an effort to lift the voice so as to be heard. Enhance the effect of your message by the posture of your body, holding it erect, with head up, and looking your hearers squarely in the eyes. And so far as the latter part of the injunction is concerned, women usually "shut up" when they have reached the end of their public address quite as promptly as some of the preachers of the "everlasting" gospel: the funny papers and popular opinions to the contrary notwithstanding!

Seriously, though, we would suggest to our organizers and local leaders, or any of our women whose position brings them before the public in explaining the work and ideals of our department, that they get in touch with Graceland College, and take up with all earnestness, the study of public speaking. They will find a joy and delight not only in the effort to acquire the art, but in their increased ability to deliver their vital messages to our people. Much educational work is to be done throughout the church, in every department of it, and it will be a decided asset when everyone to whom is intrusted specific commissions of any sort, is able to "speak with power and assurance."

Write President G. N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa, this very day.
A. A.

Psychology

Text, The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts. For sale by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, Price, $2.00.

Instruction Sheet Number 1

CHAPTER I.

The Mind, or Consciousness

1. Even though we may never completely know the mind of another, how may we learn of the processes by which consciousness works?
2. In the light of the author's statement that all must live their own lives, think their own thoughts, and arrive at their own destiny, what is the responsibility of parents?
3. Discuss the three methods by which the mind may be studied.
4. Consciousness resembles a stream in two different particulars. What are they?
5. Explain the wave in the stream of consciousness.
6. In the illustration used by the author in which he likens consciousness to a field, what is the "piling up" of consciousness called?
7. Explain why animals, including man, have minds.
8. What are the three sets of processes which best serve to adjust us to our world of opportunity and responsibility?
9. Why did the ancients, at one time, locate the soul in different parts of the body?
10. What conclusion has later science reached in regard to the location of consciousness?
11. Perform and discuss in class the "Problems in observation and introspection" at the end of Chapter I.

DORA GLINES.

November Skies

Than these November skies
Is no sky lovelier. The clouds are deep;
Into their gray the subtle spies
Of color creep,
Changing that high austerity to delight,
Till ev'n the leaden interfolds are bright . . .

And when of colors none,
Nor rose, nor amber, nor the scarce late green,
Is truly seen—
In all the myriad gray.
In silver height and dusky deep, remain
The loveliest,
Faint purple flushes of the unvanquished sun.

—John Freeman.

Miss Melissa Smith, recently appointed assistant secretary of the Commercial Trust Company of Philadelphia, is the first woman bank officer in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Hugh Wallace, wife of the American ambassador to France, has just taken under her protection a poor French girl who was arrested for stealing a valuable scarf from her.

LETTERS

Impressions of President Frederick M. Smith

"In 1890 I was made to realize that Frederick M. Smith would be the next president of the church."

Since President F. M. Smith came to England I have been asked what were my ideas and impressions of him. So I have decided to submit them as follows:

It was my privilege to go to America in April, 1889. In the latter end of the month I reached Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and found the Saints, who helped and well cared for me. While there I made the acquaintance of Apostle G. T. Griffiths, Brethren F. M. Sheehy, M. H. Bond, and W. H. Garrett; also the local Saints and others. I witnessed the famous little fellow by the name of C. Ed. Miller baptized in the River Allegheny by Elder Ephraim Thomas.

I worked in Pittsburgh (with the exception of two weeks at Johnstown getting out the dead and clearing up the debris after the great flood which occurred there late in May) until the month of July, when late in the month I moved to Richmond, Ray County, Missouri. While there I made the acquaintance of Brother John A. Robinson, of Independence, Missouri, during a meeting held at the Kings Schoolhouse. I think Brother Wier was there also. The following September I moved to Seymour, Wayne County, Iowa.

In the spring of 1890 I received a letter from Brother Ralph G. Smith, telling me he was going to be at the General Conference in Lamoni in April and urging me to be present. As I was only about fifty miles away, I sent him word that I would go. I had also another reason why I decided to go to General Conference, of which I will not speak now, but perhaps in the future.

Accordingly I arrived in Lamoni on April 5, and after being located at Brother Yarrington's, near the depot, I took a walk to see the church building. While standing in front of the building, close to the road at the left-hand corner, I saw coming down the road a company of men, and as they neared me I recognized Brother G. T. Griffiths in front walking with a man that had a long, gray beard. Brother Griffiths espied me and called out, "Hello, Brother Cousins," shook my hand, and introduced me to the man with the long gray beard, whom I learned was President Joseph Smith. As I turned away the age of Brother Joseph Smith struck me very forcibly, for to me he appeared an old man.

The conference opened next day and the sessions right through were good, and made a lasting impression on my mind; especially the afternoon when the revelation was presented for adoption, after which Brother John A. Robinson moved that hymn 70 be sung. All except Brother Joseph Smith stood and sang. Tears streamed down Brother Joseph's face as he sat on the platform. This was a red-letter day for me. Yet I could not push from my mind that Brother Joseph appeared to me an old man.

Near the close of the conference a young man of the Herald Office staff, whose name I have forgotten, came visiting among the guests at Brother Yarrington's. We engaged in conversation and he asked me if I would like to go through the Herald Office. We arranged to go next morning.

As we went we were soon in conversation about church work. I then ventured to ask him what had troubled my mind from the time I had been introduced to President Joseph Smith, i. e., "As Brother Joseph is an old man, and should he die, who would succeed him?" So I said to the good brother, "Is there any knowledge if Brother Joseph Smith died who would become the president of the church?"

He replied, "No; no one knows definitely, but some of the older brethren think that his son Fred will be the next president."

"Oh," said I, "has he a son Fred?" (For I did not know at this time that Brother Joseph had any children.)

"Yes," he said, "there are more sons than Fred," and he mentioned their names, but he said that the idea of the older brethren is that Fred will be his father's successor.

At this juncture the brother turned his head and said, "Here is Brother Joseph's son Fred."

I looked and saw a strongly-built young man outside the blacksmith shop, picking up some rods of iron. The brother took me up to him and introduced me to him. We shook hands and the look he gave me with the handshake will never be erased from my mind. He said, "I am pleased to meet you, Brother Cousins." And right away the quandary that was in my mind concerning the successor of Joseph Smith entirely left me. And I was made to realize that I had shaken hands with the next president of the church. Now this was very singular to me, for Brother F. M. Smith then would be but sixteen years of age and I but twenty-one.

The next day, I believe, I went back to Seymour. And though I was distressed in mind in relation to myself, yet I had been well repaid for being at the conference of 1890.

In September I sailed home for England, because of ill health, which unfortunately has continued to this day.

The revelation which I had received outside the blacksmith shop in Lamoni continually loomed up in my mind and caused me to keep a sharp lookout of Brother Fred's movements.

The first thing I noted was a phrenological review of him which was published in the HERALD. At this time he could not have been active in church work. For the account said, according to my memory, that if he did turn his attention to the church, he would first get a thorough knowledge of his work and then he would be ready. And that he would be a stronger man than his father. Other things were also said of him which I certainly found to be true, which I noticed while he was in Clay Cross last October (1920).

Another thing I noted was that he was the first to graduate from Graceland College. When I saw the account of his graduation my heart was filled with delight, and the thought that came into my mind was, "This is preparation."

I was interested when Brother R. M. Elvin recommended him in Lamoni at the Decatur District conference to be ordained to the office of elder. And I noted in particular the spirit of opposition that was present, as reported in the minutes. Yet despite the opposition he was ordained.

I also noted his appointment to be librarian of the church, and afterwards to be assistant historian to Brother Heman C. Smith.

The next thing of great importance was the revelation given to the church on April 18, 1902, appointing him to be a counselor to his father in the presidency of the church. In the sixth paragraph of this revelation it is plainly stated that the reason for choosing him was that he might be prepared before his father's death, for it reads, "I then asked what was meant by the choosing of members for the Presidency so young in years. I was informed that it was for the purpose that before the Presidency should be invaded by death these younger men should be prepared by association to be of assistance to whomsoever should be chosen as president upon the emergency which should occur."—Doctrine and Covenants, 126: 6.

These things firmly convinced me of the impression I had when he graduated from Graceland College, i. e., "that he was being prepared" to fill his father's place.

The next thing which I observed was the revelation of 1906. Doctrine and Covenants 127: 8 says: "Inasmuch as misunderstanding has occurred in regard to the meaning of a revelation hitherto given through my servant Joseph Smith in regard to who should be called to preside in case my servant should be taken away or fall by transgression, it is now declared that in case of the removal of my servant now presiding over the church by death or by transgression, my servant Frederick M. Smith, if he remain faithful and steadfast, should be chosen, in accordance with the revelations which have been hitherto given to the church concerning the priesthood. Should my servant Frederick M. Smith prove unstable and unfaithful, another may be chosen, according to the law already given."

This was a ratification to me of the knowledge I received in relation to him when I shook his hand outside the blacksmith shop, that he should be his father's successor.

This certainly reveals the fact that though he was a young man of sixteen years and I twenty-one, the knowledge which I had given to me in relation to him in 1890 was of God.

Another thing I noted was that he went out into the State of Utah. And I was of the opinion that he would gather some valuable information there in relation to the church, which would be useful to him in his future work in the church. I also noted an article or letter which he wrote while there which showed quite plainly that he had learned and noted a great deal in relation to the Brighamite Church.

I was very interested when I learned that he had arranged to go to Clark University to take some studies so that he would be better prepared for the work which lay before him. And I was glad when I read it, for it appealed to me as being the final effort of his preparation.

While at the university he received the news that his father was seriously ill. This was in November, 1914. He reached his father's home on November 29. His father made the following statement to him as is found in the HERALD for February 10, 1915:

"God bless you, my boy, I am so glad you reached me before I pass over. Oh, may the Lord strengthen you for the duties, the arduous labor, and make it light for your shoulders, as it has been for mine. I am not loath to go. I am not afraid. I have shown no fear. I have asked them not to hold on to me. I have lived in distress long enough, I think, to be left free. Oh, dear, may you never have to bear what I have done in the way of sickness and human frailty. I cannot breathe fully and freely. What a strong and able hand you have. You are the man for the occasion. The Lord has ordained it so. Oh, some one to take hold whose hands will not slip on the reign! nor tremble in the emergency!"

"F. M. Smith: 'My strength wouldn't amount to much, father, if I did not realize there were many, many good men along with me.'

"Joseph Smith: 'I know. That's our strength, with the Spirit of God. I never forget we are workmen together. . . . Fred, a great opportunity lies before you. Better in some respects than lay before me, for, as I look back over the history and the revelations that have been given to the church, and are on record since I have been presiding, they show me very clearly that a great many things which have been left open to misunderstanding have been cleared up in the revelations and in the letter of instructions. I regard that letter as one of the most important documents that has ever been presented to the church. I have scanned the revelations and have treated of them to some extent in a chapter by themselves. Israel understands them, and to me it is wondrous the work that has been done, literally wondrous, and you will come into the church if they choose to trust you, with a more complete understanding. I had it all to learn. Fortunately, I was in favor of the Divine One and received instructions. And you will be, my boy, you will be. That small Spirit that filleth the breast and giveth warmth and color and brightness and intelligence will open before you subjects that are necessary for you to decide upon, and leave no dubiety nor things open to controversy. Be steadfast and if people are heady, the eldership are heady and take the reins in their hands, as they have done a little, especially on the rules and regulations, rules of representation, don't worry, let it pass, let the church take the consequences and they will after a while grow out of it. You understand me?'"

"F. M. Smith: 'Yes.'

"Joseph Smith: 'It's better that way than to undertake to force them and coerce. That would bring bad trouble.'"

The above statement confirms the impression I had of Frederick M. Smith. For in it President Joseph Smith says to Frederick M. Smith: "You are the man for the occasion. The Lord has ordained it so." Nothing could be clearer than that.

As soon as President Joseph Smith died, Brother R. G. Smith dispatched a letter to me telling me of his death. And as soon as I read the letter it came to me that the knowledge I had received of our brother that he would succeed his father in the presidency of the church would certainly come to pass.

The next thing I observed which would certainly test that which I had received was the resolution moved by Apostle F. M. Sheehy, seconded by High Priest J. A. Tanner, that Frederick M. Smith be elected president of the church. This motion was supported by many of the brethren, and was passed unanimously.

How my heart leaped for joy when I read this in the pages of the HERALD. And how I would have delighted to have been there and told what I had received in relation to him. I must confess that I fail to express myself entirely as I would like to in language in relation to our brother.

When I read in the HERALD that on the evening of Wednesday, May 5, 1915, Brother F. M. Smith was ordained president of the high priesthood of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I could not help but raise my heart to Almighty God and thank him for the light which he had given me twenty-five years previously, that "Fred Smith," as he was introduced to me by the good brother outside the blacksmith shop in Lamoni, would be the successor of his father in the presidency of the church.

I will note here that the statement of President Frederick M. Smith after his ordination, made on the same evening, clearly reveals the fact that he knew God was directing him for his future work. I will just quote some of it: "I really was surprised to-night when the brother said I had been thirteen years in the Presidency. Those have been thirteen very busy years for me, for I have not only attempted to discharge the responsibility of the church work that was upon me, but I have felt that there was still a greater burden of preparation. I have gone about that as my judgment and what I believed to have been God's direction have indicated. And if I have not tried to cast myself in the mold that you would have formed for me, let us both grant that God can use any man who has made or attempted to make a proper preparation and sacrifice.

"You will remember that last fall I left home to carry on some of this work of preparation. And I felt as I did so that it was perhaps my last year of work of preparation along this line; and in the discharge of that work, I took upon myself an obligation which has not been discharged, and which I have attempted to discharge in staying in Worcester.

"Many a time last fall as I, with my books before me, was attempting to master some of the subject to which I had applied my mind, both in the daytime and in the hours of night when I was at work, the book would gradually disappear from before me as I became lost in thought on church work, and my mind opened out in enlarged vision of the work of the church, such as I never had experienced before, I wondered what it portended. I feared, and that fear was realized when I was called to the bedside of my dying father."

These things all clearly show to me that God has raised our brother up to be a leader. Of this I am fully convinced.

Since writing the above I have come across dates when the instances I have referred to took place, with the exception of his ordination to the office of elder. I think he was twenty-two years of age at that time.

At sixteen years of age he was at the blacksmith trade.

At twenty-two (approximately, I think,) ordained an elder.

At twenty-three appointed librarian and assistant historian.

At twenty-eight ordained counselor of the President of the church.

At thirty-two he was pointed out to succeed his father. And he was forty-one years of age when he was ordained president of the high priesthood and President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which office carries with it the blessings and gifts of prophet, seer, and revelator to the church.

Then my idea is that as the Lord directed and sustained his work through these younger men (as in the case of his father and grandfather) then he can certainly direct and sustain his work through our brother who has had thirteen years of association in the Presidency and was thirteen years older than his father and grandfather when he was ordained to the office of president of the church. This at least would better fit and qualify him for the work. I am satisfied that his father and grandfather both filled their missions well and in honor before God. Yet the time is now when a stronger man and a much more prepared man is needed to hold the reins of the church and to lead us on to success. Hence I believe he has been raised up for this very purpose.

My idea is that he was pointed out years ago to fill this important office. And to place my position before you in this matter, I ask all just to keep in mind the saying of Amos the prophet when he said, 'Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets.' And we must also keep in mind that now we have our brother, President Frederick M. Smith, the prophet, seer, and revelator to the church, if there are any secret things to be made known by God, they certainly will come through our brother to the church.

CHARLES COUSINS.

Forty-Two Baptisms at Moorhead

Elder Macgregor tells briefly of his campaign in a little country town in western Iowa.

Some twenty years ago one by the name of Clark Braden was imported by the Christian Church people of Moorhead, Iowa, to unveil the mysteries of Mormonism. The unveiling proved to be a vicious onslaught upon our cause, charging the sisterhood of our church in general with indecency and immorality. One gentleman, a nonmember, present upon that occasion, started for the platform at the close of the tirade to clean up on the speaker, only to be prevented by a Christian bodyguard, fearing for the personal safety of their champion.

Braden went unanswered, but the world do move.

After long years of silent suffering our hour has struck. This time the conditions are different. Braden is dead and in his grave, while the Christian congregation, forever warring among themselves and deserted by their hirelings, are struggling to keep body and soul together through the efforts of a Sunday school, etc.

About one year ago the sisters of Moorhead Branch commenced clamoring for missionary meetings. They kept it up and never ceased until the late Woodbine reunion, when, surrounded and besieged unto capitulation, I promised to respond to their wishes for a campaign.

The first gun was fired in early September and the response in attendance was splendid from the very beginning. The country folk were busy with autumnal harvests, yet they gave the hearing of the word its proportional attention.

Our efforts here as elsewhere were concentrated on arousing faith in the prophecies. Accomplishing this it was an easy matter to make out a case for the Apostasy and Restoration.

Apparently our efforts were successful, judging by the effect it took on one of the small boys. The question was asked by the teacher at the day school, "In what year was it that Columbus discovered America?" "Eighteen-thirty," came the reply.

The help extended me by choir, pastor, and congregation was of the spontaneous and generous type. Sister Gladys Silsby, our musical director, possesses rare ability, and never failed to control the house with the magic of her wand. This sister is destined to be heard from in the congregations of the mighty. To her we are indebted for much of the interest maintained in our meetings from start to finish.

Brother Strand, the local pastor, is one of those genial fellows, always willing to do anything to help things along. Under his liberal rule the speaker was allowed unrestrained liberty to develop the campaign according to the needs of the hour. Indeed, I can say that I have never labored in a branch where there was more unison and forbearance in evidence.

The generous hospitality of Brother "Bill" Townley and "Aunt" Hattie shall never be forgotten. Brother "Bill" met with an accident some six years ago, losing both his limbs, but still he finds something to do, and his reward as well as that of his devoted wife for the ministration of innumerable cups of barley coffee, is sure. May God bless them both.

Oh, yes, I almost forgot to say that the man who tried to get at Mr. Braden was baptized. Henceforth, Perry Mann is one of ours.

Well, those were happy times as day after day we trailed to the water with our toll of "humble souls that seek salvation." Somehow there seems to be an irresistible fascination about the baptismal service. One lady, a bitter opponent of our work, who had occasioned the removal of two of our brethren from holding meetings in a district school, was moved to tears as she sensed the spirit attending the ordinance of the new birth.

A number of those baptized were of Norwegian and Danish descent and will make the very finest of church people, they are so sincere and steady. Indeed I feel proud of the little brood and hope to be permitted to return and mother them for years to come.

There were forty-two baptized, while one of their number was called to the office of priest. Several others are slated for the ministry. Brother J. C. Crabb will be glad to learn that his grandson, Brother Clark, and his noble companion, have entered the church—splendid posterity to so worthy a grandsire.

Sunday, November 12, was my last day with Moorhead. We had splendid meetings. The morning prayer service was one of the best I have ever attended—such diversity of testimony and yet such a unity of spirit.

As I leave this happy and devoted band they are busy enlarging their church to make room for the needs of the hour. I go now to Mondamin for a few evenings.

Happy and hopeful,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Zion Builder Services at Bevier

Home-coming, and Young People's meetings at Bevier, Missouri, a success in spite of much competition.

Home-coming day was duly observed Sunday, November 6. While the crowd was not as large as expected, our scattered members were well represented, Saints being present from Macon, Callao, Huntsville, Novinger, Knox City, and Brookfield.

The spiritual feast began at the young people's prayer meeting at 8 a. m. Just before the afternoon prayer and sacrament meeting Mrs. Esther Gullick, mother of Sisters Alice Stanford, and Eliza Lord, of Brookfield, was inducted into the kingdom, by Elder V. D. Ruch. Some interesting testimonies were related, and a good feeling prevailed throughout the meeting.

The Temple Builders looked after the physical needs of all present. A bountiful dinner and supper were served in the basement, which was decorated in blue and white.

At 10.45 Elder Cyril E. Wight, of Lamoni, began his series of ten sermons for the "Zion Builders" services which continued all through the week, the subjects relating to the first principles of the gospel.

Brother Wight is a pleasing and fluent speaker. He was blessed with good liberty and held the close attention and interest of all throughout the series, and while he had strenuous competition all week, in free show exhibitions on the streets, and a rival revival started by the Christian people, and special "doings" by the Baptists, our meetings were the best attended in recent years, the church being comfortably filled every night, and several nights it was necessary to provide extra seats, a goodly number of outsiders coming each evening.

Brother Wight backed up his scriptural evidence with scientific, physical, and business evidences, most of his subjects being handled from angles different from which we have been accustomed to hear them discussed.

The song services were in charge of Brother Harold C. Burgess, also of Lamoni, and they were an inspiration to all of us. Brother Harold has a very droll way of conducting the song service, keeping the singers smiling and enthused. He was not satisfied with merely singing the tune and repeating the words, but insisted that they should enter into the spirit and sympathy of the words written. We all have a better understanding and meaning of the songs we sing following his efforts. In addition to the Hymnal and Praises, special song pamphlets consisting of new words to old familiar tunes were used.

Some of the favorites were "The old, old path, "Church in the wildwood," "In the garden," "If Jesus goes with me," "Zion Builders," "Our youth are marching on," "Consecration," "Preparation," "Inspiration," etc.

The Bevier Male Glee Club, composed of singers from all the churches, were present one night, and sang several anthems. One night song service was devoted to home composers and writers of the past and present. The past were hymns from the Hymnal and Praises by the late Elder J. T. Williams, and J. L. Morgan. Your humble scribe represented those of the present.

The arrangements for the meetings were in charge of our worthy young missionary V. D. Ruch, assisted by Fred L. McKane and Carl Weeks. A house-to-house canvass was made by the young ladies of the Temple Builders, and tracts and advertising matter distributed. The meetings were advertised and given favorable mention in local papers.

The young people put forth every effort to make the meetings a success, and were backed by the older ones. We believe much good was accomplished, and that the seed sown will bring forth good fruit in the future. Brother F. T. Mussell was with us during the meetings, aiding with his matured counsel.

On Sunday afternoon Brethren Wight and Burgess were taken to Macon and an afternoon meeting held in the Saints' church there, a number of Bevier Saints going along. Some of the Macon Saints attended most of the Bevier services.

Brethren Wight and Burgess greatly endeared themselves to both old and young here, and the only regrets we have heard were that the meetings did not continue longer. We are living in hopes that they will make us a return visit in the near future.

Inspiration Chorus

(Tune: "Keep the home fires burning.")

Chorus:

Keep God's Spirit burning
In your heart a yearning;
Let your light shine bright and clear
From day to day.
Though the world may hate you
God will not forsake you;
If you put your trust in Him,
And pray, pray, pray.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

PRINCETON, MINNESOTA, November 7, 1921.

Editors Herald: I am going to tell you what we have been doing in the little village of Milaca, Minnesota. Brother C. A. Kress, of Duluth, Minnesota, and Brother Sloan, of Two Harbors, Minnesota, came here about the last week in August and held cottage meetings at Sister Young's place for a few nights. Then they returned home and a week afterwards Brother Kress came back and held meetings in the district tent for one week. We had fair crowds.

We feel that much good has been done, as there were three baptisms and one ordination. Brother Kress did the baptizing. Those baptized were Brother and Sister John Olson and Sister Leaverson, of Milaca. My husband, P. C. Van Someren, was ordained to the office of priest.

Brother Kress is surely doing a good work. He is a very good speaker and a good man. We feel thankful for the good that has been done. We have organized a Sunday school with an attendance of seventeen. We have prayer meeting every two weeks and preaching service every Sunday evening.

My husband and I were baptized about nine years ago by Brother B. S. Lambkin, and about a year afterward he also baptized my father, John Holtman, who stays with us. We were isolated for quite a while, when we heard of Sister Russell at Bock, Minnesota. Afterwards we heard of Sister Young, at Milaca, so we felt quite at home when we found out there were more Saints living near us.

If Brother B. S. Lambkin and Brother William Shakespeare see this letter, I wish they would please write to us.

We ask the Saints who read this to pray for us that we may strive to do our best and live faithful to the end.

Sincerely,

MRS. P. C. VAN SOMEREN.

OUR CHURCH SANITARIUM

(Continued from page 1108.)

ministration, may have opportunity to return to normal without a serious operation.

Some steps have been taken in this direction, and others will be, as fast as conditions warrant. A foundation is being laid, upon which it is hoped to build a department of great value to the Saints throughout the church.

Though Doctor Harrington is convinced that he cannot practice his profession by mail with satisfaction to himself or those requiring help, he is glad to offer such advice as he can in each case presented. Being actively engaged in the profession and knowing many of the members of the medical profession personally, as well as through reputation, he is often able to make suggestions of much value to the Saints.

But his daily problem is to make the entire Health Department mean more to the church, not only to cure disease, but to keep people well.

A manifestation of this desire was the recent opening of a clinic in Independence as the beginning of a campaign to afford free examination and advice to all children under six years of age. At this time the children in groups 1 and 9, through the cooperation of the local Women's Department, were brought in and given the expert attention of various specialists and nurses. This will be continued at intervals till all the groups are included.

Only lack of funds—which of course means lack of help and facilities—prevents this work from being extended throughout the church, and in fact greatly widened and intensified in scope, till every member of the church has opportunity to keep well and to know how to use his vigor to the best advantage.

We are glad to help further this extension idea, believing it to be a fundamental one. In other words, it is an important thing to care for the wounded and dying in war, but how much more effective might be the measures to prevent the war that caused the disaster!

As Doctor Harrington points out, we have only begun on what might be done. The usual clinics are a wholesome manifestation of the desire to do good in this way, but they are more or less limited. As a matter of fact, every person in the church should have conveniently available the very best advice and assistance the profession provides, and whether rich or poor, prominent or unknown, the matter of remuneration should be decided by those in a position best to determine the matter—those not involved in the rendering of the service. It partakes of the stewardship ideal and may be but a dream, but it pays to dream.

When the branches observe Sanitarium Day, as suggested in the communication in these columns over the signature of President Smith, we hope it will be to the interesting of more and more Saints in this line of work as an excellent demonstration of applied Christianity.

E. D. M.

The Two Rules

In this issue of the HERALD there appears an article from the department of the Presiding Bishopric under the heading "The two rules." The factor to be especially emphasized is the indebtedness we owe to our heavenly Father which is indicated by tithing and to keep this fact plainly before us.

Food, clothing, shelter, fuel (no doubt including heat and light and cooking power), health, and taxes are expenses that must be met, but they must be met on the conservative basis of necessity with regard to these items. Direct taxes are, of course, a fixed quantity; health expenditures are not easily reducible, but the first four items must be conservatively constructed if we are to follow the right rule. There are some who can and do spend extravagantly for food, more than enough to cover all of the items on the rule; there are others who spend excessive amounts on clothing; others who burden themselves with many things in providing a shelter, forgetting that the fullness of a man's life consisteth not in the number of things he possesseth. Only necessary expenditure under these items should be considered before we come to the payment of tithing. Opinions may here differ regarding the position of "general development." That, of course, includes education. We are frank to confess that we would place education next to tithing instead of at the end of the rule. Then would come close together freewill offerings and investments. Under stewardship "general development" and "investments" become, in a way, identified, and our freewill offerings are the payment and consecration of surplus.

The term "gift" may cover quite a different field with different families. Certainly we are safe in saying that with those who are following the rule, gifts do not represent a waste, or at least, a very small amount of luxury. They rather become an exchange of that for which each one is best fitted to prepare. They represent a spirit of cooperation, which is the true charity of brotherly love. Only to a limited extent, if at all, are they taken up with useless decorations though, after all, that which rightly appeals to the aesthetic tends to the fulfillment of right living. Where gifts should be placed in the scale will depend largely upon the character of the gifts and for what purpose they are used.

Finally, we have amusements, which is probably better defined as recreation, as the right rule does not include wasteful or extravagant efforts towards mere amusement, but does provide for rightful recreation. But true recreation is properly classified under health.

But, however we may differ as to the exact place of the last four or five items on the rule, we certainly must all agree that after the most necessary living expenses of food, clothing, shelter, fuel, health, and taxes, the payment of our tithing should have the next claim upon our resources, and that soon thereafter we should consider what else we are able to consecrate by way of freewill offerings or surplus. We will also remember that the items spent for general development on education, for recreation, and for personal gifts, as well as investments, will not include wasteful expenditure for useless articles, but all constitute an investment for more effective service.

The wrong rule lies not only in the wrongful arrangement of the terms, placing tithing last of all, but also in the wrongful interpretation of the various terms of expenditure. Obligation to the church and to our heavenly Father, as represented by tithing, is not secondary, and in order that we may do justice therein, the spirit of consecration must be manifested through all of our living. S. A. BURGESS.

The Women's Work in Australia

In a recent news item in these columns mention was made of the proposed trip to Australia of Brother and Sister J. W. Davis, with the statement that Sister Davis was to have charge of the Women's Department work in that land. We find that our source of information was not entirely correct, for Sister Davis is to act as field worker for the department and Sister Ruth Hendricks will continue her excellent work as missionary superintendent. We have no doubt there is abundant opportunity for skilled and consecrated efforts on the part of local and imported talent in all departments there, just as in this land the call for leaders is never fully answered.

Good reports have come to us in the past concerning the Women's Department in far-off Australia and we are sure they are doing their part and will continue to develop those qualities and situations that make Zion a reality.

Once upon a time, not very long ago, we used to hear so much about the "evils of the automobile." Preachers preached about it, writers wrote about it, Sunday school teachers talked about it, and old folks shook their heads because of it. To-day we do not hear so much comment on the subject, but it is just as wrong to-day to forsake the worship of God to go riding as it ever was. And God will not listen to our excuses about "the duty of our going to see our friends" any more than our own consciences will.—F. C. Blore.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Thanksgiving Day 1621-1921	- - -	1105
A Halfway House on the Road to Zion	- - -	1105
Sanitarium Day	- - -	1108
Our Church Sanitarium	- - -	1108
The Two Rules	- - -	1127
The Women's Work in Australia	- - -	1127

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Thanksgiving and Service, by William Osler	-	1109
The Legion Visits Kansas City, by Ralph W. Farrell	-	1109
The Two Rules, by Benjamin R. McGuire	-	1113
The Sabbath of To-day, by A. M. Chase	-	1114

THE FORUM:

"Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth," by W. H. Deam.	- - -	1118
Hot Drinks and Cancer, by J. R. Lambert	- - -	1119
The Word of Wisdom, by George B. Anderson	- - -	1121

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Grace Sampson—Dora Glines.	- - -	1123
----------------------------	-------	------

LETTERS

Charles Cousins—Daniel Macgregor—J. L. Williams—Mrs. P. C. Van Someren.	- - -	1128
---	-------	------

MISCELLANEOUS

- - - - -	- - -	1128
-----------	-------	------

MISCELLANEOUS

Department of Music

This is official notification of the appointment, with the approval of the First Presidency, of Brother D. E. Sellers, McKenzie, Alabama, as chorister of the Alabama District. For him we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of this district. Albert N. Hoxie, general director. Arthur H. Mills, secretary.

Two Valuable Courses

The Senior Religio Quarterly for January, February, and March, 1922.

The Senior Religio Quarterly for January, February, and March, 1922, will include outlines for two courses:

Course 1, entitled, "How to teach religion," will be based upon a text by that name written by G. H. Betts and published by The Abingdon Press, New York City. This course will extend through the following Quarterly also, and thus will constitute twenty-six lessons in all. It is a recognized fact that in addition to a general knowledge of methods of teaching, each teacher must have special training in the teaching of each subject that she expects to teach. This is just as true of religion as all other subjects. One of the great problems before our Sunday School Association to-day is that of securing capable teachers in the teaching of religion. We hope that a number of teachers and prospective teachers will avail themselves of this opportunity. Those taking this course will be expected to buy a copy of this text, or at least have a copy available for study. We cannot believe that this is an unreasonable request.

Course 2 is entitled, "Problems for Zion builders." No book will be required for this course, other than the standard books of the church, especially the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants. This is somewhat of a new feature for Religio study, but we sincerely hope that it will meet with the approval of real students throughout the church. These lessons have to deal with the present social situation and the essentials of our Zion plan, together with the personal characteristics of Zion builders. The editors are sincere in their belief that our Saints should study such problems and we hope that this series of lessons will be entered upon with interest and enthusiasm.

It is not intended that the student shall find an exact answer to every question in the Quarterly in the textbooks. On the contrary, many of the questions are offered for the purpose of stimulating thought and discussion. We sincerely believe that our people must get away from slavery to the routine of the Quarterly. We must become acquainted with other good books, we must learn to study them wisely and critically, we must learn to think and reason. No mere reading over of the predigested material of the Quarterly, and the memorization of parts of it will suffice the real student all day. The editors will appreciate any constructive criticism, however.

It is possible that Course 2 on the problems of Zion builders mentioned above will be followed by a course in the individual preparation for Zion. Thus for the first six months of 1922 our students will feel that our plan is clear. Twenty-six lessons on "How to teach religion" and twenty-six lessons more or less closely related to the building of Zion. The first will require the textbook mentioned above; the latter will require only church books.

F. M. McDOWELL,
Senior Religio Quarterly Editor.

Two-Day Meetings

At Glenwood, Iowa, December 27 and 28. Tuesday: 9 a. m., prayer meeting; 10.30, sermon; 2.30, music; 3, address by Cyril E. Wight, of Lamoni; 6, banquet for the young people by Glenwood Temple Builders; 7.30, music; 8, address by Cyril E. Wight. Wednesday: 9, prayer meeting; 10.30, address by Cyril E. Wight; 2.30, Women's Department, address by Miss Sodersten, teacher at the State Institution of Glenwood, a play, music, and a good laugh or two; 7.30, music; 8, sermon. B. S. Lambkin, president.

A Fremont District Call

Iowa Saints of Mills, Montgomery, Adams, Taylor, Page, and Fremont Counties who are not attending a Latter Day

Saint Sunday school are asked to write to Mrs. Jessie Vance, 104 West Reed Street, Red Oak, Iowa, district Sunday school superintendent.

Requests for Prayers

Elder Bishop, of Youngstown, Ohio, desires an interest in the prayers of the Saints that he may be healed. He is suffering from an ulcerated stomach.

Sister Will Meyers of Beardstown, Illinois, requests the prayers of the Saints. She has had a nervous breakdown.

Brother George Elson, of Norfolk, Nebraska, again asks the prayers of the Saints that his mental affliction may be removed.

Sister Anna Davies, of Rock Island, Illinois, requests the prayers of the Saints that God may restore her eyesight.

Sanitarium Needs

Sheets, size 64 by 108, 3 inch hem at top and 1 inch hem at bottom.

Pillow slips, 18 by 32; however, all sizes can be used.

Spreads 76 by 90, dimity only.

Blankets, width 2 yards, light color, single or double, woolen or cotton.

Quilts, 60 by 90, light in color preferred.

Hand towels, in any size, roller towels 2½ yards long; operating room towels 18 by 34 and 18 by 12, prefer white buck.

Wash cloths, size 12 by 12, stout knit underwear, hemmed, serves very nicely.

Dresser scarfs, 18 by 48; other lengths can be used.

Commode covers, 18 by 36 and for 4 tables 24 inches square.

Tray cloths, 20 by 16 or 14 by 11; may be of sheeting or table linen, hemmed one inch around.

Napkins, size 20 or 22 inch; we can use them larger.

Rags, blue and white washed rags; other colors accepted.

Stand covers, 27 by 27, 22 by 36; plain or fancy scarfs.

Nursery: Baby clothes, any and all sizes, new or old, bird's-eye preferred. Nursery towels, size 18 by 12, very soft.

Nursery blankets, any material, cotton or woolen, old or new.

Nursery quilts, 36 by 36.

Fruits, canned, of all kinds.

Good wall pictures for Nurses' Home.

Records for Victrola.

Fowls or live stock of any kind accepted, especially some good milk cows.

Respectfully yours,

J. W. CHAPMAN,
Superintendent of Sanitarium.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN IOWA.—At Davenport, October 13 to 15. Opened at 2 p. m. with district president, Amos Berve, in charge. Sunday school institute work occupied the afternoon with a joint program of the Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department, ably assisted by the young people of the Rock Island Branch. Special talks by Elder Berve on Sunday school and Women's Department work, and by Elder Lentell on the Religio. Saturday service opened with prayer meeting where a good spirit prevailed after which Sister Bell, of the Women's Department, occupied an hour in institute work. The usual business transacted, among which was the purchase of a Victor stereopticon machine for use among the branches. Present membership, 634. Lecture at 2 p. m. by Brother S. A. Burgess; subject, "Scientific ideals of evolution and the gospel of Christ." Afternoon closed with a round table discussion on "Recreation," in charge of Brother Berve. At Sunday morning prayer service a good spirit again prevailed and attendance was good. Two lectures were had from S. A. Burgess: first, "Our job, or what is the priesthood"; second was to the priesthood only. Sermons were had from Brethren Lentell, Curtis, and Berve. Meals were served in the basement of the church, cafeteria plan followed, aiming to serve at cost. A few dollars were left as a balance. J. E. Benson, secretary.

SOUTHERN OHIO.—At Vales Mill, September 24 and 25. Prayer services at 8 a. m. Business session at 2 p. m., Brethren Bullard, J. W. Davis, and A. E. Anderton presiding. Sarah E. Batchelder chosen as secretary. District president's report approved. Report of J. W. Davis on tent fund accepted and committee released; A. E. Anderton, J. D. Shower, and Brother Finken appointed on new committee. Report of Inez Davis as district superintendent approved and resignation accepted, since she is leaving with her husband for Australia. Appointment of new district superintendent left to president of the district; A. E. Anderton appointed. Reports were had from First Columbus, The Plains, Wellston, Jobs, Shawnee, Limerick, Highland, Middleton, Second Columbus, Creola, Nelsonville, and Vales Mill. Services all day Sunday. Many Saints from different branches throughout the district were present. A very pleasant and enjoyable conference. Such gatherings are only a foretaste of that joy we will experience in that great gathering when we will all be of one heart and mind as Enoch's city of old. Sarah E. Batchelder, secretary, The Plains, Ohio.

THE SAINTS' HALLOW

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There
save it be have none."

among you have nubines he shall
Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 29, 1921

NUMBER 48

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879, authorized July 21, 1921, and accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

EDITORIAL

Citizenship

Special educational courses are needed to make us better producers.

A leaflet on "Education for citizenship," prepared by Professors Hamilton and Knight, of the University of North Carolina, and issued by the War Department, is rather a strong indictment of our present education, and contains also some valuable suggestions. A resume of extracts from this leaflet follows:

Among American citizens there is a too common ignorance of fundamental facts. A second difficulty is indifference and indolence in civic matters. Third, a lack of critical capacity, based on incomplete information. Finally, a lack of social or civic consciousness. In the face of a crisis, the social consciousness is aroused, but soon a return is made to seeking for individual benefits.

As a cure, training for citizenship should be regularly given, which should aim to make independent, creative, interested, informed, and responsible citizens, who have developed the disposition to act justly, and the ability to see clearly and think straight. It is not so much a problem of discovering how to do a certain set of things, as it is one of finding out how to infuse the way of doing all things with a certain ideal. To-day, training for citizenship really means training for the human relationship of life, of which the polling booth is only one. A free government lives with the daily life of its people. There is a citizenship of the home, the school, of business, and of the community, as well as of the franchise. Hence the old type of civic instruction will not meet our necessities.

The solution of the problem will require an analysis and definition of productive capacity; the knowledges and attitudes essential for citizenship; then the development of a technique of teaching in order to secure these necessary knowledges and foster the desired attitudes.

In practical experience we note the superiority of quickening games over setting-up exercises. Setting-up exercises can be done in a mechanical manner, and may develop muscle, but not intelligent coordination of effort. For this reason, the time given to setting-up exercises was greatly decreased in the Army, and the time given to quickening games increased, as the games not only develop physical strength, but also attention, reason, coordination, and quickness, as well as many other valuable attitudes and abilities.

The same principle applies to technical training, and was also applied in the Army. The mechanic arts have been analyzed in the past into types of skill, like chipping, filing, drilling, and each student was put through a series of exercises to develop these generalized skills one by one. They have that result, but do not develop coordinating ability. The training therefore in the Army consisted of giving to a soldier a series of real jobs, each of which involved several fundamental operations of the trade which are required to analyze the job, make bill for material needed, and plan how he would proceed to complete it. Manipulative processes are taught. The progress is individual, in that each advances as rapidly as he demonstrates proficiency by doing his job well and by answering necessary questions of methods and means.

Thus the work of the camp was done, but the men also trained for future technical positions. The essential occupations were combined with some jobs which are educational, though they may accomplish incidentally the necessary product for the camp.

In the Army these methods were and are applied not only to vocational training, but also to general education. The course consists of a series of discussion of vital problems, which are selected to appeal to one or more of the soldier's fundamental instincts, and each one calls for definite action directed towards improvement. The discussion consists of an analysis of the situation, both from the point of view of the facts and experiences involved, and also from the point of view of moral import. Additional information is supplied through reading matter and references for study. The discussion is guided by the teacher, so that the class is eventually led to a conclusion which is agreed to be the best from the viewpoint of a square deal and of more liberal opportunities for growth in social, economic, and industrial life.

All work is therefore organized about real jobs or real situations, rather than according to the customary departments of school instruction. A job in plumbing may involve physics, chemistry, and mathematics, in which case needed instruction in these subjects is given as part of the study of the job. Likewise, a problem in general education may involve history, economics, geography, science, literature, and art. If so, the required elements are included when and where needed. Review periods are used to classify the ideas gained in logical form when such classification is needed.

All the above is interesting from the viewpoint of the cooperative effort and the social needs of the time. Much of it is applicable to our educational problems as a whole, whether in our work in society, or in the church.

Leaving out the military factors, it may be summed up that good citizenship requires ability to contribute productively to the life of the times.

Second, it requires intelligence, that a man may be reasonably informed concerning the fundamental processes of economic life, such as production, distribution, consumption, transportation, communication, taxation, money, credit, capital, labor, corporations, charities, and corrections, and the functions of the law. In social environment it requires knowledge about health, education, religion, the family, the community, immigration, the control of living conditions, the development of liberty, and the changing status of women.

It also requires a knowledge of the workings and functions of the various departments of government, and one's obligations thereto. A good citizen should also be interested in

5 Jan 22 France
116 W 8th St
New York

good literature, philosophy, and the historical background of present events.

A good citizen should be prepared to deal loyally, honestly, justly, tolerantly, and with kindness, and in a spirit of co-operation. He should be disturbed in conscience if he is not producing creatively, industrially, and thriftily. He should spontaneously protect the weak, right wrong, liberate creative energy, so as to secure the maximum opportunities for growth.

Such a method of treatment should be beneficial to the general educational work of the country, and would mean in the end not less, but more work; work better done because it naturally stimulates every faculty. Instead of a tiresome problem there is introduced an interesting event, making therefore its natural appeal. One does not seek the abstract, such as reverence, honesty, and health, but should seek to live more reverently, more honorably, and healthfully every day. We do not want to achieve these things with an abstract end, but through right living, to color and direct all of our person and activities in a well-proportioned life.

Meaning of "Evil" in the Bible

From Cruden's analysis we get some interesting points on this word that help to clear up other passages.

"In your editorial of the SAINTS' HERALD, September 16, 1921, I notice you say that if God created evil it would be contrary to other passages of Holy Scripture. Of course it would, but my dear brother, don't you think you are interpreting the word evil wrong. I have noticed a good many have only one interpretation of the word evil, as they find it in the Bible, and that is sin. Permit me to offer that which I think is a right understanding of the word. The word evil as mentioned in Isaiah 45:1-6, means judgments, which judgments may mean the sword or any other destruction that might come on people, and surely you will not deny that God is the judge of the earth. The word evil in Hebrew has a double meaning, as Cruden's Concordance explains. Evil is taken for sin and wickedness, as in 1 Kings 16:25-30, and in Ecclesiastes 9:3. This is criminal or moral evil; it is also taken for affliction or punishment which God brings on people because of disobedience. See Job 2:10: 'Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?' According to the prophecy of Isaiah 45, Cyrus was chosen of God to execute his judgments, so you see how nicely the verse 'I create evil,' corresponds with the theme of the chapter. It means, I create trouble or bring judgment on people. There are many other words in the Scripture which, if interpreted rightly, would make the Scripture plainer."

As the above letter indicates, we find that Cruden's Concordance gives the following:

"Evil is taken for sin and wickedness: thus it is said of the wicked kings of Israel, that 'they did evil in the sight of the Lord, they transgressed his law.' (1 Kings 16:25, 30.) And in Ecclesiastes 9:3: 'The heart of the sons of men is full of evil.' This is criminal or moral evil. It is likewise taken for afflictions or punishments which God inflicts upon a person or people. Job 2:10: 'Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?' Isaiah 45:7: 'I make peace and create evil.' Amos 3:6: 'Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?' This is the evil of punishment, or penal evil. It is also taken for injuries or wrongs done by one man to another. Proverbs 17:13: 'Whoso rewardeth evil for good, evil shall not depart from his house.' Matthew 5:39: 'But I say unto you that ye resist not evil.' It is put for dangers or calamities. Proverbs 22:3: 'A prudent man forsooth the evil, and hideth himself.' He sees public calamities approaching, and uses all lawful means to secure himself. It is taken both for corporal and spiritual evil, of sin and suffering. Matthew 6:13: 'Deliver us from evil.'"

In writing our editorial we used Young's Concordance which does not present this analysis, but simply refers to ra as evil, bad.

Strong's Concordance also does not attempt an analysis. We are pleased, however, to present the above from Cruden's Concordance as presenting a viewpoint worthy of our consideration.

At the same time none of these directly contradict the statement in our previous editorial. The Lord permits evil or punishment to come upon us.

We are glad to have all the light upon the subject that we can, but it is a fact that the ancient world would present the idea of a being of evil equal in power with God, and this passage should be, and is, directly contradictory. There is but one supreme God. He permits evil as well as he causes the good.

There are, of course, other passages showing punishment as following sin, and how certain it is that he permits affliction to come upon us in consequence of our wrongful acts.

We very much appreciate this communication from one of our brethren and are glad to submit it for the consideration of our readers.

S. A. B.

A Neighborhood Christmas

For many years, in some of the smaller western towns, a community Christmas tree has been held each year. We recall one town which, at the time, had but two churches, and the Christmas services and tree were held alternately in one or the other. To this Christmas tree everyone who had a gift for anyone else in town brought the gift. Care was taken to see that every person received some gift, and especially that each child was so provided for. This gave the Christmas tree and the entertainment so dear to the heart of every child.

But when we were in the East, some six or seven years ago, we were much interested to note that in Somerville, a part of greater Boston, a community Christmas tree was erected on a high hill. This is a city of close to 100,000 inhabitants, and is so close to Boston as to form a physical part thereof. We do not recall how far the giving of Christmas presents was attempted, but there was a gathering of carol singers who then went out into the different neighborhoods and sang the Christmas carols. If memory serves us rightly, such a Christmas tree has been erected on Boston Common, and we are certain that a giant Christmas tree has been erected in Twelfth Street, south of Washington Avenue in Saint Louis. At the same time provision was made for distribution of Christmas baskets to the poor, which was done quietly from house to house. There was a gathering of toys and gifts for the children at the Christmas tree. It was a part of the city convenient to the poor children, more convenient, probably, than any other location could have been, yet it was made a community or city affair, so that great crowds gathered for the singing, for the exercises, and for the distribution of gifts to the children.

This shows what can be done in large cities and also in villages where the Christmas spirit holds forth in sufficient strength.

We know that in Saint Louis for many years a great Christmas dinner has been provided for the children year after year and Christmas baskets distributed to worthy poor families. The largest hall in the city was secured for this purpose of giving gifts and Christmas dinner to the children. The municipal Christmas tree was an outgrowth, in part, of this earlier Christmas dinner.

In the church, provision should be made to see that no family suffers the coming Christmas, and for every child suitable Christmas gifts are provided. The sacred service at the church will be a most important part of our celebration. Christmas Day comes on the Lord's Day this year, so that we celebrate, in a way, His resurrection and birth at the same time. It is well that the solemnity of the day should be preserved, that its deeper significance should be set forth in the Sunday school, in the children's meetings, as well as in the general services of the church.

We are in receipt of a letter from the Community Service, One Madison Avenue, New York, which offers a list of suggestions for the use of music in a community, for celebration. In the East, the singing of carols is much better established than is the case in the West. But this singing of songs, of Christmas carols, outside the home, is another way of adding the deeper joy that should properly belong to the celebration of this day.

The day of His birth is the greatest anniversary in the world. It is a day that we may well celebrate in our solemn assemblies and also commemorate in carrying the joy of the Christmas carol to many homes. It is a day for equality, for the giving of gifts, and especially for bringing joy to the hearts of children and, as His birthday, it is a fit time for the giving of gifts to him.

All too often what should be a time of joy is made rather one of trial in the purchase of useless gifts and in excessive feasting, even to a surfeit, but there is and should be temperance in all things, that the day may be celebrated in every way and be a day of peace, so that in our hearts there shall ring again that refrain, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men, for to-day there is born unto you, in the city of David, a King." S. A. B.

Religious Normal Work

Many persons in the past have sought to prepare, but to-day the training of teachers is provided for and demanded as never before.

On October 23, seven young women graduated from the teachers training course in Independence, completing in one year a course which, if taken once a week during the Sunday school hour, would have required four years. This brought into view the history of the Sunday School-Religio Normal Department. This department was first organized by the joint executives of the Sunday school and Religio in 1907, with Walter W. Smith as first superintendent. His wife completed the course then offered in the Bible and Book of Mormon and was the first graduate.

Since then the work has been extended and added to until practically three times as much ground is covered. It now includes child psychology; then the theory of education, which course is built upon a knowledge of the reaction of children. The third and fourth sections are concerned with the Bible and Book of Mormon, including Book of Mormon archæology, and finally, the fifth section is concerned with Sunday school organization and the principles of the graded Sunday school. The course is, therefore, several times as extensive as was that of fourteen years ago. Yet it is by no means exhaustive.

The importance of a right knowledge of what we shall teach can hardly be overemphasized. This must include a knowledge of those who are to be taught. Children are not simply little men and women. Their mental processes are different; their mental attitude is different; their knowledge is limited. A merely correct telling is not enough. Teaching is causing to know, and it is only that which the child preserves and rightly preserves that is really remembered.

We are confronted with a great and immediate need of Sunday school lessons better adapted to the needs of our children, but with such lessons, it is essential that we have trained teachers, teachers who know what they are about to do.

We do not minimize at all the importance of inspiration and direction of God, but the plan of our heavenly Father means effort upon our part. He has never laid down the plan that we should simply open our eyes and mouth and act as an automaton. After all the preparation we can make, we will still have great need of divine guidance.

But one needs only to walk into most of our Sunday schools to note immediately the effect of untrained and unqualified teachers. We do not mean that only those teachers are qualified who complete this particular set course. That is by no means the case. We have teachers in the Sunday school who have had many years of practical experience behind them, together with a love of God and their fellow men, which has caused them to study the word of God with such carefulness that they are well qualified to teach. We have teachers who have not taken this particular course, whose reading is many times as extensive as that course requires, who know principles with regard to child life, the principles and history of education, and the Bible itself. Before the normal department was organized, we had such teachers.

Reference has been made many times to the Students' Society at Lamoni, Iowa, which took for its motto, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready and God will send thee flax." Practically every one of that society has found a place of importance in the church for service.

Different organizations of like importance were forerunners of the Religio. Back as far as 1867 there was organized in Saint Louis a philosophic and theological institute. It continued its activity for only a short time, but some members from that beginning continued their studies for years.

We mention this to show that there has been such a spirit in the church from its very beginning. We find such efforts in the old church back in the thirties and forties.

But it is now being made a matter of organized effort to secure for teachers a minimum of preparation, and this effort is now more widespread than ever before in our history. It is reaching out to affect more of our Sunday schools. But it should extend until its influence is felt by all.

Yet we must repeat that this preparation is only a beginning. There must be wisdom along with knowledge, and there must be charity and the pure love of God. There must be the direction of his Holy Spirit to do his work acceptably. But to do that work acceptably means also that there must be a spirit of service, which will cause us to make every possible effort to secure the needed preparation, so as to do our work in the field of the Sunday school as well as possible.

S. A. B.

The speaker at the Stone Church in Independence on the evening of Sunday, the 27th, was Elder J. F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake. His subject was a continuation of the sentiment expressed by the others who have had a part in the series of sermons for young people, the need of high personal and moral ideals. Elder Walter W. Smith spoke the previous Sunday evening on "Youth," and both services have maintained the usual record of good attendance and excellent interest.

Analysis of Wealth in the United States

Within the past ten or fifteen years there have been various attempts at analysis of the wealth of the United States. We have made the comment heretofore that the figures published are only very rough approximation. To determine the actual wealth is a tremendous task. The basis for assessment of taxation is not the same in all States nor in all counties of the same State. The actual market value is not easily determined.

Even in the matter of income, the figures are only approximate, as it has been found nearly impossible to secure accurate figures for the lower range of income below $2,000 a year.

The estimate of the wealth of the country has varied from two hundred fifty billion dollars to three hundred fifty billion dollars. The income has varied in recent years and for the same years from thirty billions to fifty billions.

During the past two or three years, a commission has been engaged in considering critically this problem of the division of national income, and their report is just now published by the Government. It reported a wide variety of opinion, both political, social, and economic. This is probably by far the most careful analysis that has been attempted. They do not discuss the question of wealth, though the assertion is sometimes made that two per cent of the people own one half of the wealth of the country, more or less. But after spending two years investigating the problem, their report states that 12 per cent of those receiving income, receive 40 per cent of the annual gross income. The remaining 88 per cent receive 60 per cent of the gross income. The first class includes all who receive $2,000 and over. The second class includes all those receiving less than $2,000 and includes a great many boys and girls as well as other unmarried persons.

A Demonstration of Value of Organization

The Nonpareil Class in Sunday school and Religion in Independence, at the Stone Church, with Mrs. E. S. McNichols as teacher and Scott Cochran as president, gave an excellent demonstration at Thanksgiving time of what an organization that really functions can do.

They had asked the bishop in Zion for the number of families who for various reasons needed or would appreciate a basket of foodstuffs on that day. After careful investigation he reported that there were fifty such families among our members and he furnished the number in each, but no names.

By the volunteer method these were all taken over by members of the class, in some cases several girls clubbing together on one of the larger assignments. There was an agreed menu which included vegetables, sugar, meat, fruit, etc., the combinations allowing for the personal ideas of the donors, yet each providing a full meal for the number indicated. Each basket was contributed anonymously. The fifty baskets assembled for delivery on Thanksgiving Eve made truly an imposing array for one class, and must have gladdened the hearts of as many families.

We realize that to thus give of our substance to each other is not a new thing. In fact, it is as old as the day itself, but all too many times the best results are not attained, the number given is all too limited, and unnecessary duplications occur because of lack of organization and thoughtful planning in the details. The value of this feature we commend to all our readers.

Subjects Being Discussed

United States to Protect Jewish Interests in Palestine

According to recent press dispatches, American officials have assured Zionist leaders that commercial and other interests of American Jews in Palestine will receive recognition by the United States, and be assured of an insistence on an open door for trade in both the Near East and the Far East. The United States not being a member of the League of Nations, the existing Mandate in Palestine, whereby Great Britain is managing civic affairs, there will be no interference in this regard. The operation of the present immigration laws shuts out many European Jews from this land, but when they can be assured in this manner of the protection of America, thousands will emigrate to that land and with the aid of American capital put into operation many of their cherished plans for the rehabilitation of the land and its many resources.

Presbyterians Vote to Ordain Women

After having the question up for debate at several national conferences, the Presbyterians have finally accorded to the women among their membership the rights of the ministry. The subject has brought out many an argument, but it appears that the cause of the women has gradually won supporters until finally it triumphed. This action on the part of one of the most staid of modern churches is perhaps indicative of the tendency of the times to go all the way in the recognition of the equality of the sexes.

Churches Leave the Poor

The Saint Louis Church Federation, with the aid of the national committee of Social and Religious Survey, have completed a preliminary survey covering about one fourth of the city population and about forty per cent of those over thirteen years of age. Particular comment is made upon the fact, well known to citizens of Saint Louis, that the down-town district has long been deserted by the English speaking churches, which moved out between 1870 and 1890. The churches conducting the service in German followed about ten years later, with the result that forty-two churches, only one of them Roman Catholic, however, have deserted the down-town area. Practically all of these churches have moved west and north toward the high-class residential section near Forest Park. This, of course, is a serious mistake, which has long been noted by those familiar with the situation in Saint Louis. The poor are practically deserted by the sectarian churches as a whole and these churches are grouped together in a relatively small district, instead of being scattered over the city.

Child Labor in Beet Fields

The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor reports in the Colorado beet fields, including parts of two counties, more than one thousand children under sixteen years of age employed. Four fifths of these were under fourteen; one fourth under ten, and a considerable number were less than eight years of age. Seven tenths of these children were children of contract laborers, not members of families of beet growers, and they did the great bulk of the work in the field. The continual stooping in the thinning process and in the harvesting results in deformity and malposition. Seventy per cent of the children were found to be so affected. The long hours, nine hours to eleven hours a day, were also found to be injurious. In addition the children are from one to seven years behind in their grade.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The General Conference Auditorium

By the Presiding Bishop

Perhaps no movement in recent years affecting the general welfare of the church has been more generously and wholeheartedly participated in than the raising of funds to build an auditorium in which to hold our General Conferences and other large gatherings.

The General Conference of 1920 enthusiastically indorsed the recommendation of the Presidency looking to the erection of such a building. By vote of the conference, Independence has been selected as the place for future General Conferences. Of late years the Stone Church has been too small to accommodate the people seeking entrance to the conference sessions, so that large numbers have been denied the privilege of attendance, many being turned back at the church doors.

The first step would be the gathering of the funds for the big undertaking. About $67,000 in cash and pledges was the spontaneous response from those in attendance at the conference. The proposition must next be submitted to the entire church membership. This the Bishopric did through a special campaign of two weeks in October, 1920, in which the whole machinery of the church was called into operation. A half million dollars was the amount asked for. The proposed amount and more was subscribed in pledges payable in cash and its equivalent. The grand total was $846,000. It was an inspiring experience. The church did nobly, and no department appreciated it more than the Bishopric.

There soon arose an element of uncertainty. Prices of building material, then at the peak, began to descend, and there were prospects of further reductions. The value of agricultural products declined more and more, and unemployment began to stalk abroad in industrial centers. We seemed to be in the painful process of getting back to some prewar price levels. Financial leaders in the business world began to prophesy, and the most pessimistic felt that by this time we would have passed the crisis and be again in the enjoyment of "good times" so often spoken of. Others believed that by the spring of this year, 1921, we could count on prosperity, but like the will-o'-the-wisp, it is still ahead of us.

The unfavorable economic conditions seriously affected the temporal interests of the church work, and a call was issued for the Order of Bishops to meet in Independence in May of this year to consider the situations affecting the financial end of our church program. They were in session for eighteen days, and during that time the twenty-four members of the order, bishops and counselors from all parts of the country, carefully and prayerfully considered these problems in their relation to each other. The entire budget of church expenditures was carefully scrutinized and tentative revisions made to bring the cost of operation of the church as nearly as possible within the anticipated income from tithes and offerings.

Among other conclusions reached, it was the consensus of opinion that it was not wise to hurry the building of the Auditorium. It was realized that this would cause keen disappointment to some, yet we were confident that those who would consider the matter from all angles would agree with this view.

It was not at that time possible to secure joint consideration of this and other matters by the quorums who usually pass upon such questions, so no official announcement was made, but the resolutions adopted were filed with the proper officers.

The total cash collected for the building at this date is $341,000. The payments on the pledges are falling due. Saints here and there have written us that on account of unemployment, falling prices of farm products, inability to secure money, they are temporarily embarrassed so that they cannot meet these payments. Others do not write, but cease paying, yet we know many of them have good reasons for so doing. However, we have faith in the Saints and believe that the pledges will be paid when possible, but, under the existing conditions, and for lack of sufficient funds to meet the ordinary expenses of the general church, we are not inclined to urge unduly nor to demand sacrifice unto hardship in this special undertaking.

There are some building sites available for the erection of such a building, but even the selection of the best location is no small matter and should receive the most careful consideration. We must build with the needs and development of the future well in mind. Especially must this building fit in with the building program of the church in Zion. When a site is purchased, it often happens that it requires considerable time to have it vacated.

Then there are the problems of the architect. He must have something definite upon which to work ere he can complete his preliminaries, to say nothing of the finished plans.

Last, but not least: beginning with October, 1920, there has been a continued decline in tithes and offerings, resulting in an operating deficit (or excess of expenses for missionary and general church work over income from tithes and offerings) of approximately $175,000 at this date. The situation is not improving and we will tell you more about it in an early issue. Everything possible must be done to keep the operating expenses of the church at the lowest amount consistent with the welfare of the work as a whole. Recognizing this situation it is quite apparent that the care and upkeep of the proposed building would only increase the operating expense of the general church, to say nothing of the additional burden of debt and interest that would be placed upon our shoulders if the building were to be begun before all pledges are fully paid.

It has been called to our attention that we have said little about this matter for publication. We admit the possibility that in our attention to the current problems arising in our daily work we have been remiss. Our desire is that the membership may be familiar with the problems before the church, hence for those who have not had the opportunity to know these simple facts we have taken time to write this explanation, desiring only to advance the interests of the Lord's work through a common understanding and unity of purpose in the tasks that lie before us.

Your colaborer,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

The Presbyterian Church in the United States has been stirred up on the subject of giving by the achievements of the United Presbyterians. The latter denomination gives nearly three times as much for benevolence per capita as the Presbyterians. The stewardship idea has been emphasized by them for years, and this is believed to be the secret of their success. The Presbyterian Church will emulate this success, and Doctor A. F. McGarrah, church efficiency expert, is trying to induce Bible classes to study stewardship. In the Chicago Presbytery 1,115 men were in classes studying stewardship on October 16. The number grows continually.—The Christian Century.

Two Beautiful Organs We Have Recently Acquired

By A. H. Mills

It affords us genuine pleasure to present to the readers of this issue of the HERALD pictures and descriptions of two very fine pipe organs recently acquired by two of our prominent branches.

The acquisition of a pipe organ by any branch of the church is distinctly an event of unusual interest. Pipe organs are not common things with us. As a church we have had to come up from very humble environments. We have had to rise out of obscurity, fight our way through obloquy and opposition, and climb by hard-won steps to the modest station we now occupy. We have always had to think first of the essentials: those things that would establish our place as a church. Not many of our branches have been able to go very far beyond the prime necessities and attain to those things of convenience and culture which, as important as they really are, are so nearly related to luxuries as to be too often unattainable. Consequently, the acquisition of a pipe organ by one of our branches is an event of real moment to us. It really marks a definite step in the progress of that branch, especially in its musical development. Such an acquisition places before that branch possibilities of great worth not enjoyed before. Therefore, we know the hearts of all in the church will gladden in the perusal of this account of the fine organs acquired by these branches.

The editors are agreeable to a plan to have other articles—even unto a special number—in future numbers, telling of not only other pipe organs, but specially interesting situations from the viewpoint of our Department of Music.

The Organ at London, Ontario

The acquisition of this truly excellent instrument should mark a distinct epoch in the musical affairs of the London

THE LONDON, ONTARIO, PIPE ORGAN

"A most fitting embellishment to the magnificent church edifice owned and occupied by the London Saints."

THE SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, PIPE ORGAN

Saint Louis Branch is abundantly supplied with musical instruments, but this is the king of them all.

Branch. With so valuable an asset, affording so much real aid to advancement and so many possibilities for enriching and beautifying their musical services, they should now be engaged in a program of real musical development that will mean much for the future.

We enjoyed the privilege of personally inspecting and playing upon this fine instrument while we were with the London Saints on the Sunday of July 10 last. It more than met all our anticipations and hopes for it. Its tone qualities were found unusually beautiful; its registration scheme (arrangement and character of stops) was admirably well balanced; and although a comparatively small instrument, it has abundant resources in tonal qualities, variety, and volume. Its cases is constructed of heavy, quartered oak, highly finished in dark English oak color. Its front pipes are richly decorated in gold. It has two manuals (keyboards) and pedals. The wind supply is furnished by a very efficient electric blower situated in the basement.

The London Saints are to be congratulated on possessing so fine an organ; and, as will be seen from the picture, it forms a most fitting embellishment to the magnificent church edifice owned and occupied by them and dedicated to the worship and glory of God.

The following is the scheme or specifications, of the instrument, as furnished to us by the pastor, Brother William M. Grice, who is as proud of it as anybody in London.

Specifications of Organ at London, Ontario

(Two Manuals and Pedals. Built by the Karn-Warren Pipe Organ Company, Woodstock, Ontario. Compass of Manuals, CC to a, 58 notes. Compass of Pedals, CCC to D, 27 notes.)

Great Organ

(Name of Stop)	(Material)	(Pitch)	(No. of Pipes)
Open Diapason,	metal	8 ft.	58
Dulciana,	metal	8 ft.	46
Melodia, treble	wood	8 ft.	46
Stopped Diapason, bass	wood	8 ft.	12
Principal	metal	4 ft.	58

Swell Organ

Aeoline	metal	8 ft.	46
Stopped Diapason, treble	wood	8 ft.	46
Stopped Diapason, bass	wood	8 ft.	12
Harmonic Flute	metal	4 ft.	58
Oboe Gamba	metal	8 ft.	46

Pedal Organ

Bourdon	wood	16 ft.	27
---------	------	--------	----

Couplers and Mechanical Accessories

Swell to Great	Swell Pedal
Swell to Great, super octave	Swell Tremolo
Swell to Pedal	Bellows Signal
Great to Pedal

The Organ at Saint Louis, Missouri

(From description furnished by Brother Edward C. Bell, Director of Music, and one of the organists.)

The branch at Saint Louis has always been one of the important musical centers of the church, as regards musical activity and progress. Within its ranks there are a number of enthusiastic musical workers who have been steadily forging ahead in their development, working consistently and patiently; and now the beautiful organ pictured in this issue is a fitting reward to their labors.

We do not know all that the Saint Louis Saints have done musically, but we know some things. Years ago they began to develop their choir work and have made some creditable records in that line. Some of their musical workers have cultivated their individual talents to a high degree, giving, in the true spirit of consecration, their services to the church. They have especially wanted to advance in regard to the organ. We well remember when we visited the branch, about a dozen years ago, at their former church on Glasgow Avenue. Then their song service was accompanied on a large reed organ, built somewhat after the scheme of a pipe organ, with manuals and pedals. Of course it did not begin to equal in power and resources the instrument it imitated, but it went quite a ways in helping them build in their scheme of progress. Brother Edward C. Bell, one of the organists of the new instrument, had some visions about that time (oh, that more of our young people would have visions!) and he began studying actual pipe organ playing, even though he had to earn his "daily bread" in a railroad office. The fruits of his foresight are now being enjoyed on the new instrument

We have not personally inspected this organ, although we are "just crazy" to do so. But those who are competent to judge tell us that the instrument has a beautiful tonal quality, and its registration scheme (which follows later) makes us know that it is an exceedingly well balanced organ, so far as arrangement and character of stops are concerned. In actual size (number of speaking stops, not outward appearance) it is slightly smaller than the organ in the Stone Church at Independence and it will therefore rank as second in size among the organs of our church. Its case is of rich quartered oak, beautifully finished in light golden color. The front pipes are handsomely decorated in gold leaf and colors that harmonize with the interior of the church. The instrument sits in an alcove behind the pulpit and there is ample room between it and the pulpit platform for a large chorus choir of thirty voices. The wind supply is furnished by an efficient electrically operated "Orgoblo" blower, situated in the basement, although in case of a stoppage of the electric current the instrument may be blown by hand.

The possession of this beautiful organ brings to the Saint Louis Saints many added possibilities for their musical development. We earnestly hope that their consequent progress will be as gratifying and as real as we know their enjoyment of the organ will be.

The scheme of this organ is as follows:

Specifications of Organ at Saint Louis, Missouri

(Two Manuals and Pedals. Built by the Hinners Organ Company, Pekin, Illinois. Compass of Manuals, CC to c, 61 notes. Compass of Pedals, CCC to F, 30 notes.)

GREAT ORGAN

(Name of Stop)	(Material)	(Pitch)	(No. of Pipes)
Open Diapason	metal	8 ft.	61
Dulciana	metal	8 ft.	61
Melodia	wood	8 ft.	61
Viol d' Gamba	metal	8 ft.	61
Flute d'Amour	wood	4 ft.	61
Principal	metal	4 ft.	61

Swell Organ

Violin Diapason	metal	8 ft.	61
Lieblich Gedacht	wood	8 ft.	61
Aeoline	metal	8 ft.	61
Salicional	metal	8 ft.	61
Oboe and Bassoon	metal	8 ft.	61
Flute Harmonique	metal	4 ft.	61
Piccato	metal	2 ft.	61

Pedal Organ

Sub Bass	wood	16 ft.	30
Bourdon	wood	16 ft.	30

Couplers and Mechanical Accessories

Great to Pedal	Great Organ Piano
Swell to Pedal	Balanced Swell Pedal
Swell to Great	Tremulant
Swell to Great, super octave	Bellows Signal
Great Organ Forte

Lynching will have a definite check in the only country that indulges in such practices, the United States, if the bill sponsored by Representative Dyer, of Missouri, becomes a national law. It provides for heavy fines and imprisonment up to five years for municipal and state officers who fail to do their duty in protecting a prisoner from the hands of the mob. Furthermore, the county in which the lynching takes place is subject to a fine of ten thousand dollars, to be paid into the Federal Treasury.

Jerusalem and the Coming of Christ

By A. M. Chase

Prophetic history concerning the city and the event. All quotations from the Inspired Translation of the Bible.

"Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober."—1 Thessalonians 5: 4-6.

"And again shall the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, be fulfilled."—Matthew 24: 33.

One of the signs of the times of which we as a people are very familiar, both by reason of the prophetic word and because of our attention being so often called to it in the preaching of the word, is the regathering of the Jews and the rebuilding of Jerusalem. I am not attempting to stress this fact in my article, other than to call attention that, in the ultimate accomplishment of this event, Judah shall not be dependent upon the Gentiles, for, declares Jeremiah 30: 18-22:

"Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap. . . . And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them. . . . And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God."

Zechariah also declares (12: 5, 6):

"And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the Lord of hosts their God. In that day will I make the governors of Judah like a hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all like the people round about, on the right hand and on the left; and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem."

From the foregoing, and much more that may be read from Zechariah, especially in chapters 12, 13, and 14, as well as the last chapter of Zephaniah, it must appear that this restoration will be accompanied by war and bloodshed, in which Judah will be pitted against other nations. As the first-named prophet declares:

"I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all people round about, when they shall be in siege both against Judah and Jerusalem. . . . All that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it."

I wonder, sometimes, if we as a people are not inclined to lose sight of the tribulation yet waiting this people (Israel after the flesh) in the final purifying of the city until, "Thy people shall be all righteous." (Isaiah 60: 21.) When Isaiah declares (4: 2), "They that are left in Zion, and they that remain in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem," it is to have been accomplished by the purging of the "blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning," in which her "men shall fall by the sword, and thy mighty in war," and when such a lamentable condition of morals has obtained among them that "seven women shall take hold of one man," that they may have his name and so be rid of their reproach. (See Isaiah 4.) Then after that Jerusalem is cleansed.

When the Master was approached by his disciples with the request that he tell them of the signs of his coming, he not only told them of the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus, and the subsequent falling away from the gospel, or apostasy; but, according to the Inspired Translation, includes a second fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy of the desolation of abomination. Whatever this abomination of desolation may be, Luke declares, "When ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." (21: 19.) And he further declares (verse 32), after having told us that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," that, "The generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, shall not pass away till all be fulfilled."

In the light of these things, the Master's declaration as given by Matthew, "And again shall the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet be fulfilled," comes with peculiar force. And as Amos declares, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, until he revealeth his secret unto his servant the prophets," we turn with interest to read what he has revealed concerning this destruction still to come upon Jerusalem. As I have referred you to Zechariah, chapters 12 to 14, we will read from the last chapter referred to:

"Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee." Did you notice that Isaiah makes a similar declaration, only he declares that

"The day of the Lord of hosts soon cometh upon all nations; yea, upon every one; yea, upon the proud and lofty, and upon every one who is lifted up, and he shall be brought low. . . . And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low; and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." (Isaiah 2: 12-17.)

Zechariah tells us that when that day comes the Lord will "gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle," and that this is not the final gathering of the nations to fight against the holy city and the camp of the Saints as told in Revelation 20 is evidenced by the following:

"And the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city."

Just here, let us hear from Zephaniah 3: 11-15:

"In that day shalt thou not be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me; for then I will take away out of the midst of thee them that rejoice in thy pride, and thou shalt no more be haughty because of my holy mountain. I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth; for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid. Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all thy heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy; the king of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee; thou shalt not see evil any more."

Surely this prediction with its paen of triumph is for the same event that Zechariah is describing when it culminates thus:

"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. . . . And the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee. . . . And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one."

I do not wish to weary my readers with a long article, nor do I desire to preach to the elders of this church; but, in the language of Paul, "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, [need not be] that that day should overtake you as a thief. Therefore let us not sleep, but let us watch and be sober."

We are not through with world wars, nor is the "warfare of Jerusalem" yet accomplished. Still we can welcome every effort to mitigate these horrors. But, as Isaiah declares, so long as the nations ignore the means that God has ordained for the solving of the social and economic ills, the everlasting gospel; and so long as they think to solve their difficulties, ignoring the voice of his servants with the message of reconciliation; the edict of the Lord is (Isaiah 50:8), "Behold all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourself about with sparks; walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks which ye have kindled; this shall ye have of mine hand, ye shall lie down in sorrow."

May the Master give us strength of purpose and courage to endure these trying times, while we faithfully bear our witness, both by word and deed, that we may be among the triumphant ones who shall have so wrought that the nations will come to Zion and Jerusalem, to learn of his ways and walk therein. For only then will their weapons of war be turned into instruments of peace: instruments of destruction turned into machines of blessing and production for all mankind.

The Life Beautiful

By J. E. Vanderwood

Nature through evolution gives the life beautiful, of which Christ is the highest type.

There will come a time in our experience, and it may not be far distant, when we shall all be made to realize the virtue, and need, of the life beautiful. They are fools only who scoff. Men of wisdom and understanding are ready always to give, or to hear, a reason. However, we are aware of the general tendencies of the human race to err, and of the apparent inability of the human mind to comprehend the great things of life. Ever since the primeval fall, it seems that man prefers to choose that which is most injurious to him. This is evidently due to the fact that he permits darkness to blind his eyes, and the cunning voice of the Adversary of his soul to enamour him, until he has become ensnared in the web of his baser imagination.

Life; what is it? Have you considered it at all seriously? Poor Richard said, "If you love life, do not squander time, because that is the stuff life is made of." But, really, my dear reader, what is life? I am real serious in this matter. If you will consult your dictionary, you will discover that life has a wide and varied meaning. It therefore becomes necessary for us to consider it in a relative sense before we can comprehend it in the superlative degree. You will observe that in the caption the noun life is modified by the adjective beautiful. On its very face it suggests to us a restricting of the term, and yet when it is properly grasped and fully understood, it bespeaks an enlargement, an evolution, rather than a restriction of life. In the proper sense of the term, it restricts it to the highest, the superlative, rather than the relative phases of life.

God the Source of All Life

It may be well for me here to draw your attention to this one all-important and fundamental truth, that God is the source of all life; that without him there is, and could be, no life. The lowest type of life is that which partakes least of the nature of God, while the highest type of life is that which partakes most fully of the nature of God. Right here I am confronted with the problem that Emerson was confronted with when he said: "Our rhetoric is so faulty that we can't strongly affirm one matter without apparently denying the other." The thing I really wish to say is this: There seems to be a tendency on the part of man to think of nature's laws as being in conflict with God's laws. They seem to think of God's laws as acting in contravention to the laws of nature. This is a grievous error, and has undoubtedly grown out of such statements as this: "The natural man knoweth not the things of God." To convey the original idea, which is the correct one, this text should read, "the carnal man," etc., instead of "the natural man," etc. That only is natural which is working in perfect harmony with the highest laws of its being. I trust I may be fully understood in this matter, for I wish to state that nature's laws are God's laws, and that that which is functioning according to, or in keeping with, the highest laws of its being, is honoring fully the law of God, and it is revealing the life beautiful.

Cultivation Determines Value

It is only that which is failing to act in keeping with the highest laws of its being that is dishonoring God's law. We may be able to best illustrate our thought by going first to the vegetable kingdom for an illustration. There we will discover life represented in the relative as well as in the superlative sense. We will take the apple family for example; it ranges all the way, in variety, from the wild crab to the luscious Arkansas Black. Did it never occur to you what caused the difference between these two varieties I have named? It may all be expressed in one word, cultivation! The wild crab may, by proper cultivation and grafting, be made to do better, yes, it may be evolved into the luscious Arkansas Black; but on the other hand, if the Arkansas Black be permitted to run wild sufficiently long, where it has no care or cultivation, it will deteriorate and finally degenerate into the likeness of the wild crab. The Arkansas Black is filling the measure of its creation while it is functioning in keeping with the highest laws of its being. Its efficiency consists in its ability to produce the highest and best of its kind; it is thus revealing to us the life beautiful, while the wild crab is not filling the measure of its creation because it can, with a little cultivation and grafting, be made to do better. God never created it to be a wild crab. It was intended for something better. The one is living the law of nature in the fullest sense, because it has reached the highest possible state of efficiency, while the other is living the law of nature in a very limited sense, for it is possible for it to do much better. Do you not see the difference between these varieties?

The Earth Honors the Law of God

In section 85 of Doctrine and Covenants we are told that "the earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law." In other words, the earth abides by, and honors, the law of God, for it honors the law of nature, and hence the law of God, by filling the measure of its creation. There is no condemnation that can follow that which fills the measure of its creation. That which brings condemnation to you and me is, that we do not fill the measure of our creation; we can do better than we are doing; we are wild crab apples that have deteriorated and degenerated far beneath the highest law of our being. We are what we are because we choose to be just that and nothing else, for when we choose to be something else we will be found making an effort to that end. I wish to have you observe that the earth itself honors the law God has given it, but that which has come of the earth has failed to keep its first estate. This is evidently due to the failure and transgression of man.

The Earth Honors the Law of God

We have already used one family from the vegetable kingdom as an illustration, but now I wish to go to the animal kingdom for an example. We will use the case of the razor-backed hog of the timbered country of Arkansas in contradistinction to the corn-fed hog of Iowa. The first is a deterioration and degenerated type of his species, while the other is approximately the measure of its creation. In that sense the latter is revealing the life beautiful. Now don't be horror-stricken because I have said a hog, when approximating the measure of his creation, is revealing the life beautiful, because whatever it may be that fills the measure of its creation, and reaches the highest possible state of efficiency, is in that sense of the term revealing the life beautiful. That which has reached the highest and best in its sphere, or has become the best of its kind is beautiful.

There are two laws that are operative in this big world of ours; the one is the law of evolution, the other is the law of deterioration. The latter is evidently the law Saint Paul referred to as warring against his members. The law of deterioration is the law that was applied by Cain; it is destructive. It is that which is connected with the kingdom of Lucifer, who was once a son of the morning. This law, if it be permitted to enter into your life, or mine, will bring us to a place and condition of sorrow and anguish. The law of evolution is the law of God, for it is constructive; it is the law of enlargement and growth. It is the law by which the son of the carpenter became the Holy Son of God. The law of evolution is always constructive, while the law of deterioration is always destructive. Have you discovered the difference?

I trust I shall not be misunderstood in this matter, for I am not speaking of the Darwinian theory of evolution. I am speaking of that law that will evolve each species into the highest possible state of efficiency, so as to enable it to fill the full measure of its creation. I wish here to have you observe that that which is destructive is never beautiful, while that which tends to evolve into a better state is always becoming and beautiful.

Man Crowning Work of Creation

We now come to man, the crowning work of God's creation. "Man is that he might have joy," we are told; but, oh, the anguish and sorrow he precipitates upon himself because he is willing to live beneath his privileges. Jesus said to the people of his day, "If I had not done among you the works that no other man hath done, ye should not have had sin, but now ye have no cloak for your sin." That is simply saying, "If you didn't know any better, there would be some excuse for you; but since the light has dawned upon you, and I have shown you the better way, there is no excuse for your baseness of life, and your littleness of soul." And it may be well right here for me to say that if man does the best he knows, that is all he can do, for the angels of heaven can do no more. Our grief consists in the fact that we generally know better than we do, we understand better than we perform. There is no reality or beauty in such a life. Beauty consists in doing beautifully.

Now, my friends, I want to lay before you the workings of the two laws, that you might get clearly the idea I wish to convey to your understanding. The law of deterioration is fully revealed in Lucifer. Think of it! He was once a son of the morning, but he failed to keep his first estate; he was not obedient to the law under which he had been placed, and hence the process of deterioration began to set in. This was followed by rebellion, and then expulsion. Think of it, a son of the morning deteriorating and degenerating into a demon of darkness! It almost makes one cringe as he thinks of it, and yet the law of heaven says that that which I refuse to utilize or to abide by, I must be deprived of. "To him that continueth to receive shall more be given, and he shall have abundantly; but he that continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." So we see that Lucifer deteriorated and lost his estate because he would not obey the law of heaven. Thus it must be with you and me when we refuse to hear and to obey the law of heaven. The law must and will take its course.

A Bright Picture

This, indeed, is a pathetic picture, but the other one is brighter; it presents to us the life beautiful; it is predicated on the law of evolution. We see a humble carpenter and his espoused wife, unto whom the Angel Gabriel appeared and announced unto them the birth of a son who should be called Immanuel, which, being understood, means God with us. This child was born in a manger, because there was no place in the inn for him. He came into the world under adverse surroundings. He was circumscribed with all the handicaps the human race is heir to. From the general appearance of things, he was doomed to a life of poverty, of slavery, and of inferiority, for he was among the poorest of the poor, and the humblest of the humble. But on that night when the manger was graced with the son of the carpenter, a new star appeared in the east and wise men came to Jerusalem in quest of the newborn king of the Jews; while the angel hosts appeared to the Judean shepherds and said: "Fear not, for behold, we bring unto you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people, for unto us is born this day in the city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord." And then the angel chorus chanted that sweet refrain of "Peace on earth and good will unto men."

This Babe of Bethlehem obeyed fully the law of his creation; he lived to the highest that was in him, and thus evolved from a humble babe into a great teacher, a mighty philosopher, a friend of the friendless; yes, more, the Son of God. We are told in the sacred volume that "he grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." This is evolution in its truest and noblest sense.

As he emerges from his infancy, we see him first humbly entering upon his duties of life as a carpenter. He didn't complain that he had been born a king and that, therefore, the work of a carpenter was too base for him. No, indeed; to the contrary, he did the carpenter's work faithfully and well, and he graduated from it into a nobler work. He did always that which his hand found to do, and he did it cheerfully, he did it meekly, and he did it well. He took God into partnership with him in all his work, believing fully that there is nothing required of us in the way of work that we cannot invite God to assist us with. Thus he evolved from the manger cradle into the carpenter of Galilee. He evolved into the High Priest of the Almighty God, because he always lived in keeping with the highest and best within him. He was thirty years preparing to render three and a half years of service; so he believed in preparation and efficiency. He was constantly becoming the personification of the highest law, and hence he attained fully unto the life beautiful.

He came into the world not to receive that upon which he had bestowed no labor. To the contrary, he gave his all, that others might be made rich as a result of his poverty. He was not seeking bribes, nor yet asking for donations, but he went into the world where poverty and suffering were everywhere in evidence, and he graciously ministered to the needs of man. He said, "My father worketh hitherto, and I work."

His love challenges the admiration of all mankind; his pa-
(Concluded on next page.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE COMMON LAW OF THE BIBLE

Professor Nathan Isaac, of the University of Pittsburgh Law School, contributes an article to the Journal of the American Bar Association for March, 1921, in which he points out that the past century and over has contributed practically nothing to the study of Biblical law as law. J. B. Michaelis wrote his commentary on the laws of Moses in 1770 to 1775, but linguistic research and compilation of material should give to the present generations a new set of commentaries of interest both to the exegete and jurist.

This article is of particular interest in calling our attention to the fact that much of the law of Moses was not a providing for the forms they used, but rather a restriction of previous laws and customs. The Mosaic law was not an entirely new thing, but was founded on customs then existing among the Israelites and their neighbors, though it naturally marked a considerably great advance over those customs. The article is of sufficient importance to justify a rather full quotation which follows.—EDITORS.

To pass gently over the controversies of to-day, a few years ago Biblical scholars were clashing over the supposed dates of particular passages. A generation or more ago the tience is a beacon light unto us impetuous mortals. The meekness of his Spirit enables us to understand that only in meekness is there found real strength. The mildness and serenity of his voice could still the mighty tempest, and calm the turbulent water. His clarion call could bring the dead man from his grave when all hope of life had been surrendered. The palsied hand was made steady by his touch, and the mute tongue spoke fluently at his command. We see God in all his splendor and majesty revealed in the perfected life of this unlettered carpenter. The law of evolution has here revealed its perfect type of manhood. In him we find the fountain of perpetual life, the source of eternal truth, the embodiment of all wisdom, the tenderness of matchless love, and the fullness of Divine Justice. In him is revealed "the fullness of the Godhead bodily"; yes, in truth, we find in him, in its fullest degree, a revelation of the life beautiful.

Let Man Learn Obedience

Let man learn the meaning of one word, and then let him apply it to his life and he too will learn to triumph; that word is obedience. Let man learn to obey the law of God and live in keeping with the highest law of his being and he will be made a partaker of the most excellent. He shall become a possessor of the divine attributes; he shall unfold and evolve into the superlative type; he shall bud and bloom into the life beautiful. Let man learn to obey the higher law and he shall be made a partaker of the higher life. But he must learn to evolve, not deteriorate; for that which I utilize in the highest and truest sense shall be increased and enlarged for me, so that I may have abundantly; but that which I fail or refuse to utilize must be taken from me.

He who fills the measure of his creation and functions as he should, shall become one with God here and now, and by continuing to keep in tune with the Infinite, he shall remain as one with God throughout all eternity, because he who has obeyed, and is continuing to obey, the higher law, has gained the victory, and has in reality become a possessor of the life beautiful, and he will be able to retain his station only so long as he continues to obey the highest and best within him.

battle raged over the question of the composite nature of the early books of the Bible. Before that time science and faith were at issue over the literalness of Biblical cosmology and history. It would be too much to say that time has really solved these bitterly contested problems; but time does take away the sharpness of the apparent issues—and a knowledge of the manner in which unwritten law develops may do the same.

The jurist knows, for example, that no matter when a code is written it must necessarily be made up of elements from very much earlier periods unconsciously presupposed—rather than consciously drawn upon. Thus, when a modern constitution speaks of a "jury," it necessarily perpetuates a tremendous amount of law that had grown up and become a part of the life of the people in the course of five or six hundred years. In fact, in early codes of law it is just as important to read between the lines for the purpose of ascertaining what is taken for granted as it is to read all those rather exceptional details that the lawmaker seeks to emphasize or to change. And so it is with the Biblical codes. Thus, to mention only a few of the more obvious examples, they speak of the "avenger of the blood," "the rights of the first born," "the duties of a brother-in-law," "divorce," and "causing children to inherit," as if all of these institutions were well known. In fact, some of them seem to be too well known, for the purpose of the passages dealing with them is quite obviously to mitigate evils connected with them rather than to establish them as the reader untrained in law might suppose.

Let us examine these institutions, in the order mentioned, both as they appear in the codes and as they appear in the life of the people, especially in periods antedating the codes, not only according to the chronology of the higher critics, but even according to the chronology of the oldest tradition.

The "avenger of blood," of course, presupposes the institution of family feuds, an institution almost universal in primitive society. Perhaps it is referred to in that earliest of codes which constitutes the rule of life for the family that has escaped from the deluge. "At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of a man. Whoso sheddeth a man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." (Genesis 9: 5, 6.) The Mosaic legislation, while recognizing the right, or perhaps the duty of the "avenger of blood," nowhere tells us just what kinsmen are to be deemed avengers, nor are we informed in so many words that the so-called avenger is acting within the law. All that we have is the establishment of a counter-institution to mitigate the harshness of this primitive law, namely, the cities of refuge, "that the manslayer that killeth any person through error may flee thither. And these cities shall be unto you for a refuge from the avenger, that the manslayer die not until he stand before the congregation for judgment." (Numbers 35: 9-28; cf. Deuteronomy 19: 1-10.)

The right of the first born to inherit a double portion is another institute of law which the Hebrews possessed in common with a great many of their neighbors and other peoples in certain stages of civilization. But the only reference to it that we find in the purely legal portions of the Bible strangely enough—or shall we say naturally enough?—comes in a passage in which the institute is taken for granted. In speaking of an instance that may have been common under polygamy, an attempted preference in favor of the children of a favorite wife, the lawgiver says: "Then it shall be in the day that he causeth his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved the first born before the son of the hated who is the first born; but he shall acknowledge the first born, the son of the hated, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath." (Deuteronomy 21: 16, 17.)

The duties of a brother-in-law or other kinsman to set up the household of a relative who died without offspring, in the manner familiar to Bible readers from the story of Ruth, is by no means limited to Hebrew law. But in the Bible more attention is paid to the process by which the necessity of a marriage between the surviving brother and the widow of a deceased brother can be done away with where, for any reason, such a union would be distasteful to the parties. An elaborate ceremony, full of symbolism that is now quite hard to understand, is provided, the essence of which seems to be some formal act of repudiation or public insult calculated to make marriage impossible between the parties. (Deuteronomy 25: 7-10.)

Divorce presents a more interesting phenomenon in Biblical law. In the ordinary translations of the Bible, the impression is given either that the lawgiver ordained divorce or that he ordained the writing of a formal bill of divorcement when a man exercised the power, and it seems to have been an exclusively male prerogative, of sending away his wife. But this is not the meaning of the passage in the twenty-fourth chapter of Deuteronomy. The first four verses properly constitute but a single sentence, the point of which is that if a man has divorced his wife, and she has married another, who either divorces her or dies, the first husband may not remarry her. The feeling behind this limitation of the divorce evil is expressed by one of the prophets as a matter taken for granted in one of his illustrations: "If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, may he return unto her again? Will not that land be greatly polluted?" (Jeremiah 3: 1.) Two other checks on the evils of free divorce are imposed by the lawgiver in special cases. (Deuteronomy 22: 19, 29.) At first glance, this interpretation may seem at variance with certain passages in Matthew which attribute to the Pharisee hecklers this question: "Why did Moses, then, command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?" The answer, as well as the question in the parallel passage in Mark, presents a more accurate interpretation: "He saith unto them, 'Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives.'" (Matthew 5: 31; 19: 3-8; Mark 10: 2-6.)

Finally, the expression already quoted in connection with primogeniture, "In the day that he causeth his sons to inherit that which he hath," suggests the existence of a custom of doing something very similar to the making of a will. True, there are limitations upon the power, such as that set out in the passage already quoted. Again, there is no suggestion of any power to make others than sons to inherit. Yet a degree of post-mortem control over one's property is clearly suggested, though nowhere defined.

Now if we look back into the lives of the patriarchs we will find all of these customs fully illustrated. In other words, the common law that precedes or is presupposed in the statutory enactments is illustrated in the bits of history that have come down to us from prestatutory times. The blood feud, for example, is illustrated not only in the attitude but in the acts of the sons of Jacob in their vengeful dealings with the kinsmen of Shechem. (Genesis 34.) In the case of Jacob's family, we have several illustrations both of primogeniture and of the transference of the rights of the first born. Perhaps because Jacob himself had wrested such rights from his brother Esau he felt freer than his father would have felt about transferring the birthright of his own eldest son to his favorite, Joseph, and he even interfered in the affairs of that son's family to the extent of transferring the birthright to the younger of his two sons. (1 Chronicles 5: 1; Genesis 48: 17-20.)

The levirate, or the institution with respect to the setting up of the household of a deceased kinsman by marrying the widow and naming the first born after the deceased is illustrated in the story of Tamar (Genesis 38: 6-30). As to divorce the same word is used to describe the sending away of Hagar as is used in the legal passages already alluded to, "sendeth her out of his house." (Genesis 31: 14; Deuteronomy 24: 1.) Testamentary powers, both in patriarchal and later times, were so thoroughly taken for granted—contrary to the general impression to which Eduard Gans gave currency, that there was no Hebrew testamentary law until the Hebrews came into contact with Rome—that a more extended reference to this custom among the Hebrews may not be out of place.

Just as in the Middle Ages the practice of making a testament was inextricably connected with the religious rite of last confession, so in patriarchal days there seems to have been a close connection between the causing of sons to inherit and the religious rite of bestowing upon them the last parental blessing. This is clearly illustrated in the story of Jacob and Esau. In fact, it explains what is otherwise inexplicable, that after the formal blessing intended for Esau is bestowed upon Jacob, there is no means of making Esau equally happy with a similar blessing. It is illustrated further in the case where Jacob, though a grandfather, bestows a blessing on Manasseh and Ephraim, deliberately placing Ephraim ahead of Manasseh. Naturally, in connection with this final blessing on the day when a man causes his sons to inherit, there is the further element of imposing commands upon one's children. At first glance, this may seem to be the very opposite of the making of a will. Thus Joseph exacts a promise from his brethren (Genesis 50: 25); at a later period David tells his son to punish those who had been his enemies (1 Kings 2: 1 ff.); the father of the Rechabites commands his family to abstain from wine, and to assume certain other obligations (Jeremiah 33: 6); the great leaders, Moses and Joshua, express a sort of last will to the people at large. (Deuteronomy 31: 22 ff.; Joshua 24: 1 ff.) In connection with these commands, if we remember that in ancient times, even in Rome, there was such a thing as damnosa hereditas, the inheritance of obligations without the means whereby to satisfy them, the similarity between commands imposed as charges upon property and those imposed without property may become more apparent. At any rate, in one of these cases, that of the Rechabites, an interesting expression is used, which was in all probability the technical expression in ancient Israel, for the making of a will. It is ciwwah'al, which means literally to impose a command on. It is the very expression used in several passages of the Bible which the English versions render somewhat obscurely "to set one's house in order." Thus Ahithophel, before he committed suicide, set his house in order (2 Samuel 18: 23); King Hezekiah was warned by the prophet that he was about to die and told to set his house in order. (2 Kings 20: 1; Isaiah 38: 1.) (In much later times Hebrew law used two terms for the making of a will. One was merely a literal translation of the Greek diatheke, the other was a derivative of the expression cited above, ciwwah'al.)

What has been said of these legal provisions, chosen almost at random, applies with equal force to the common law of property and conveyancing, of family relationships and of slavery, of loans and pledges, of reparation for damage inflicted and, in general, to the whole of the law of human relations.

It thus appears that the Biblical codes, like all other codes,
(Concluded on next page.)

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Israel, the Outcast

By H. J. Davison

An argument that the lost tribes are in the north country and will return to Jerusalem.

Inspiration speaks of Israel (the ten lost tribes) as "outcast" in the same passage in which Judah is referred to as "dispersed." Dictionaries tell us an outcast is one in exile. Exile suggests a given locality. Dispersed means "scattered in different directions." Quite a difference. Was this accidental? Read Isaiah 11:12: "And shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah."

When Israel was taken from the land of his inheritance to which he will eventually return, he was exiled in practically one country. "So Israel was carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day."—2 Kings 17:23.

Migration Northward

Esdras, in the Apocrypha, writes of a vision, the interpretation of which teaches that the ten tribes were to migrate from the Assyrian country to an unknown land by way of the source of the Euphrates River (which is northward from Palestine). They were to travel a year and a half through that country, but it does not say when they should reach their destination: and were to return in the latter times. The Most High was going to assist them in both passages. (2 Esdras 13:39-48.)

This is offered for what it is worth.

Josephus writes thus:

"And when these Jews understood what piety the king had toward God and what kindness he had for Esdras, they were all greatly pleased, nay, many of them took their effects with them and came to Babylon as very desirous of going down to Jerusalem, but then the entire body of the people of Israel remained in that country, wherefore there are two tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans. While the ten tribes are beyond the Euphrates until now [say A. D. 93.—Author] and are an immense multitude and not to be estimated by numbers."—Antiquities of the Jews, book 2, chapter 5, paragraph 2.

While this provides for scattering remnants, it also supports strongly the evidence that will be produced that the ten must be interpreted in the light of the common law that precedes and surrounds and forms part of every statute. This is no more invented by a lawgiver than are the very words in which he pronounces his decrees. In fact, it inheres in these words. Nor does it cease to live when a code comes into existence. Dates may be ascertainable, and their ascertainment may be of great importance in writing the history of a code, but the common law is of slow growth. It proceeds from a time whence the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. In fact, as the jurist can readily comprehend, the later doctors of the Talmud were understanding rather than overstating the antiquity of the unwritten law when they declared of many of its practices that they were traditions dating from Moses at Sinai. So far as the civil law is concerned, the great mystery of "revelation" must be approached as an incident in the life of the law—an incident involving selection, rejection, purification, but not creation.

tribes remained practically intact at least until after Christ's day, and it may not conflict in the least with Esdras, as we find no date set for that migration in the vision referred to.

Josephus touches a point of interest when he says many took their effects and came to Babylon. It is quite true that there were many families of the northern kingdom people who were scattered in different directions. At the time of the revolt there were many who did not follow Jeroboam, besides the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. (1 Kings 12:23 and 2 Chronicles 11:13.)

Other Tribes Led Away

About 600 B. C. we read of Lehi and family and his relative, Laban, of the tribe of Manasseh, who did not remain with them, or rather their progenitors did not.

Upon this point let me refer the reader to Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 12:65-69. After speaking of the people of the east, west, north, and south, and the islands of the sea, also the Jews and the Nephites and the nations of the earth concerning writing, it says, "And I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel which I have led away, [not scattered] and they shall write it." Query: Why should these people be referred to distinctly and separately from all other people and be called the "other tribes" if their identity had been or was to be completely obliterated and they as individuals were to become parts of all these other nations? It may be well to remember that this was a statement made by the Lord God himself.

Again, about seven hundred and fifty years after the ten tribes were led out of Palestine, our Savior refers to them as a distinct people in an indicated locality. He tells the Nephites that he has "other sheep," even the "other tribes of the house of Israel whom the Father hath led away out of the land." Also tells them that he must go and visit them, that they might hear his voice. (3 Nephi 7:19-26.) And in the eighth chapter, fourth verse, he says: "But now I go unto the Father, and also to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them."

Jesus does not say where these people are, but it is interesting to notice that he plainly states where they are not—not in America, not in Palestine, and not in any part of the lands around about Palestine. (3 Nephi 7:24.)

Ten Tribes Not Scattered

According to the record, it could have been but a very short time before Jesus was back again with the Nephites. Therefore the visiting of the ten tribes in a scattered condition among the nations is simply unthinkable.

Thus we have it established beyond question that up to A. D. 33 the ten tribes were not as a scattered people, nor was their identity lost, nor indeed are there any indications that it ever would be.

We do not know of a surety how much later the above conditions are established by the foregoing, because we do not know how long this people were to continue to write. Bear in mind, however, that they did keep a record. Also bear in mind that a record of a scattered people with a lost identity is out of the question. That a record was kept will be shown farther in this article.

Israel to Gather to Palestine

Concerning the gathering of the house of Israel to the land of Palestine (and the writer has never seen anything in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants to indicate that they would be gathered to any other land), Jeremiah by inspiration has this to say: "Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord."—Jeremiah 3:12.

"In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel and they [Israel] shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers [which was Palestine.]"—Jeremiah 3:18.

"Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth."—Ibid., 31:8.

In chapter 23:7, 8, the prophet is very specific and clear:

"Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, but, the Lord liveth which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I have driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land."

This ought to satisfy any contention for a broad scattering of remnants of Israel, that anyone might have for the purpose of blessing the world or otherwise, and still be quite conclusive as to there being a definite locality for Israel as a body in a north country.

The Book of Mormon agrees with Jeremiah. See Ether 6:12: "And they are they who were scattered and gathered in from the four quarters of the earth." Is that all? No! "And from the north countries." True, the writer uses the plural form here, but that does not destroy the proposition of a definite place other than the four quarters of the earth: for in ancient times small divisions were spoken of as different countries; such as Galilee, Samaria, and Judea. Yet all these were practically one country.

Scattering of the Remnants

We have no contention against the idea of remnants being scattered such as we find in 3 Nephi 2:106, 107 and elsewhere. On the contrary, we contend for it because the remnants fulfill the prophecies in that regard. It is the main body of the ten tribes that are involved in this issue. Where are they? not where are the remnants?

In 1 Nephi 7:6-10 the writer has something to say concerning these tribes which, upon a cursory glance, might seem to conflict with the definite locality thought. We will quote as it is, all italics mine:

"For it appears that the house of Israel, sooner or later, will be scattered upon all the face of the earth, and also among all nations, and behold there are many who are already lost from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem. Yea, the more part of all the tribes have been led away; and they are scattered to and fro upon the isles of the sea, and whither they are, none of us knoweth, save that we know that they have been led away."

Upon examination, what have we learned from this quotation? All the information we really get is that those people knew that some of the tribes have been led away; and no more.

The term, "for it appears," does not carry the same weight as "thus saith the Lord" of Jeremiah 3:12, upon the same subject.

Nephi makes a hazard and says they are scattered upon the isles of the sea, but straightway modifies it by saying, Whither they are none of us knoweth, and then gives us to understand that all any of them knew about the matter really was that they had been led away.

Without doubt Nephi was speaking largely from conjecture, as he says himself, "for it appears," a term that is frequently used when speaking in a conjectural way.

When the Lord said that he would speak unto the other tribes and they should write it, that should be sufficient evidence that they would write. But he further says that the Jews shall have access to those writings, and that those lost tribes should have access to the writings of the Nephites and also of the Jews. (2 Nephi 12:71, 72.)

It does not appear that those different peoples should have access to each others' writings right along as they may be written, but rather at a specified time—even the gathering time.

Following Ephraim's Line

For a corroborative line of thought let us follow briefly the fortunes of Ephraim as a man and then as a tribe.

We are instructed by the blessing of his grandfather, Jacob (Genesis 48) that superiority was pronounced upon Ephraim—even the birthright of his older brother, "And he set Ephraim before Manasseh." One of the rights of the first born was leadership. The Lord said by the mouth of Jeremiah, "Ephraim is my first born." (Jeremiah 31:9.)

We gather that whatever the custom was or would be, or whatever Joseph might say as to who was the first born, God said Ephraim is my first born, even though Manasseh was actually born first. That is to say, the rights and privileges of the first born should go to Ephraim, and thus they understood the terms in Bible times. Again in Psalms 108:8, "Ephraim is the strength of mine head." Now this is all significant—leadership found in Ephraim.

After the revolt of the ten tribes under Jeroboam, Ephraim became more prominent and at one time all Israel bore the name of Ephraim, as is often designated in the writings of the prophets, especially Hosea. When the ten tribes went into Assyrian captivity, Ephraim went with them. Both Jewish and Gentile writers agree upon that. Thus we find this prominent tribe went into captivity with all the tribes of Israel his companions.

The "Two Sticks"

Now let the reader remember that the Lord said that he would speak to the tribes that he had led away and they should write it. Joseph was there represented by two tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh, for Manasseh went with that captivity.

Turning to Ezekiel 37, in the latter part of the chapter the prophet speaks of the two nations coming together—Judah and Israel—and are to become one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, not America. But just prior to that event he mentions two "sticks," books or records, which will come together also, evidently the records of these two peoples, for one he calls the stick of Judah and the children of Israel his companions. In verse 19 he says, "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I take the stick [record] of Joseph, which is [present time] in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will [future] put them with him even with the stick of Judah and make them one stick [record] and they shall be one in mine hand."

Summary of Facts Deduced

Here we have a prophetic statement which involves these facts, namely:

That the ten tribes of Israel are to be associated, with Ephraim apparently the more prominent;

That they are to have a record or writing called "stick";

That this record will be called the stick of Ephraim;

That it is also called the stick or record of Joseph in the hand of Ephraim, which does no violence to the former statement from the fact that Ephraim represents Joseph in that captivity;

That the record is in the hands of Ephraim prior to its being joined to the record of Judah.

That these two records shall be joined and become one (it would seem) not long before the joining of the two kingdoms into one.

If the foregoing is not enough to establish the writer's contention beyond question, then turn to the latter part of the book of Ezekiel—say from chapter 47 to the finish.

Ezekiel's vision may be like John's on the Isle of Patmos: not to be taken literally as to minute detail, yet there are a few salient points to which we will do well to consider.

First we discover that the prophet saw the land of Palestine divided and allotted to the twelve tribes. (47: 21.) Joseph shall have two portions. (47: 13.) Ephraim and Manasseh as tribes—not remnants—shall inherit. (48: 5, 6.)

When the tribes return they will worship first as Israelites, and not as Hindus, Japs, Russians, or Christians. (48: 8-22.)

Unity of Israel as a People

The great work of Christianizing Israel will be after the amalgamation and not before. It is only the beginning of that work that is spoken of in 3 Nephi 10: 1-7, and that, too, after the church is established in this land with the remnants of the house of Israel.

In the above, Ezekiel teaches us most emphatically that Ephraim and all the tribes of Israel, his fellows, will not only be preserved as Israel, but they shall be preserved in their tribal relationship as well, before they will have right to the office work of the patriarchs of the church to designate them individually.

The record of Ephraim and all the tribes of Israel, his companions or fellows, has not yet come forth, that we know of. Neither do we know of any book making any such claim. But that is not against the proposition, since the house of Israel and the house of Judah have not yet come together: neither have they ever walked with each other since the revolt under Jeroboam. Yes, the two nations are going to walk together, but when and where? Let the prophet answer, "In those days [when Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord] the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel." (Jeremiah 3: 18.) Where? Most assuredly in Palestine.

We understand the term "walk together" has altogether a greater significance than simply existing contemporaneously in a given place, unidentified as to relationship. It means being united with mutual interests—in this case, under one form of government. As Ezekiel puts it, "And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."—Ezekiel 37: 22.

"The Everlasting Hills"

This seems to be conclusive from a Bible standpoint. Nevertheless, some have thought that it is weakened in part by Doctrine and Covenants 108, by the use of the terms, "everlasting hills," "Mount Zion," and "Ephraim," as having reference to America, and consequently would teach that the lost tribes would come direct to this country.

The writer thinks the very opposite. First, "everlasting hills": Genesis 49: 26: "The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors, unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." My dictionary says utmost means "most distant, furthest, extreme, the extreme limit or extent."

Thus the modern phraseology of that term would be something like this, "The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors even to a country at the farthest point from the everlasting hills."

Now, if we say that country is America, then logically we should look for the "everlasting hills" on the Eastern Hemisphere. And why not Palestine, since the hills of Palestine and adjacent regions were the great and lasting hills in the mind of the Hebrew at that time, as well as in subsequent days. (Deuteronomy 11: 11; Psalms 2: 6, 43: 3; 121: 1; and many other places.)

"Mount Zion"

As to the term "Mount Zion," it is true that term is applied to a region in this country several times in modern revelation.

It is also true that it has been applied to Jerusalem many times by Bible writers ages before the Doctrine and Covenants was ever thought of by man. (Psalms 48: 11; 74: 2; Isaiah 4: 3-5; 27: 13; 31: 4 and elsewhere.) In fact Jew and Christian knew no other Mount Zion except in a figurative sense until a new Zion was arranged and provided for the remnants of Joseph and others in America, but that in no way supersedes the Mount Zion of the Bible as the throne of the Lord and the home of the house of Jacob. (Luke 1: 3-33.)

The "hundred and forty-four thousand" referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5 are doubtless the 144,000 of Revelation 14: 1, and they are to be gathered from the several tribes of Israel (Revelation 7: 5-8) and are to stand on Mount Zion with the Lamb, if the language is to be taken literally.

Now since "Mount Zion" is applied so many times in the Bible to Jerusalem, I would ask why we should be compelled to substitute another Mount Zion in this particular instance.

It might be argued that between the two books one may make choice of the place; but really, is one at liberty to do that? The Doctrine and Covenants is not insistent that it should be in America, since in the same connection and with the same breath, the prophet speaks of Mount Olivet. The preponderance of evidence seems to be strongly in favor of Jerusalem.

The matter of the children of Ephraim being in evidence at that time does not commit one to the American theory, because when the ten tribes return, Ephraim will be there in abundance and evidently with leadership, to say nothing about the Ephraim of this country being there as representatives of the gospel and church.

Hence we find nothing in section 108 that conflicts with the Bible as to where the ten tribes will return, but we find that it is quite clear as to the direction from which they will come. And it is really positive as to where the "mountain of the Lord's house" is, which is also referred to in Isaiah 2: 2 and Micah 4: 1, for it says, "And let them who be of Judah flee unto Jerusalem unto the mountains of the Lord's house." (Paragraph 4.)

And why flee to Jerusalem? The answer is obvious. How could Judah walk with Israel unless Judah did go to the Jerusalem country?

Joseph Smith on Return of Lost Tribes

The latter-day prophet is on record touching the return of the lost tribes. Church History, volume 1, page 261.

And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, famine, and earthquakes will sweep the wicked of this generation from off the face of the land, to open and prepare the way for the return of the lost tribes of Israel from the north country."

You notice that he does not say to this land. Whatever the inference might be in the minds of some, I should be

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Neb.

The Parents' Opportunity

We are pleased to pass on to the readers of this column a message from the general superintendent of the Sunday School Department. It should be read with interest by all parents and their interest should not cease with the reading. Too long have we rested under the grave indictment of turning our children over to other agencies for educational work which more properly should be done at home and by the parents.

We fancy that when we stand before the bar of God, answering questions that will determine our eternal weal or woe, and it is asked of us, "Did you promptly and completely turn the religious training of your child over to the Sunday school, and from that moment keep your hands off that phase of its education, "too many of us, seeing more clearly than we do now our duty in the matter, must of necessity and with bowed heads answer "Yes" to the incriminating query!

"Bring up your children in light and truth." "Set in order your house and family." How far are we straying from the principles involved in those counsels? Let us stop a moment to think. Are we taking time to talk frequently with our children on subjects connected with their spiritual development? Are we teaching them the value of prayer, of meditation, of expressing their soul's desires and yearnings towards the Great Eternal Being? Are we reading with them, talking to them of the goodness of God, of his purposes as shown in Nature, of his plans for his children in these latter days, and gently but persistently trying to impress them with the necessity of pure thinking, unselfish desires, and a life which will square up with Christian standards?

Brother Carmichael's plans have for their primary purpose and beneficence not the interests of the Sunday school, but the interests of the individuals who go to make up the Sunday school. He is considering methods by which my child and your child shall receive a fuller endowment through the more active functioning of the several agencies with which they come in contact. Who will deny that one of the greatest of these is that found in the home? And who will claim that there is excuse for us, as parents, to shift the responsibilities which rest with us upon an agency or organization which has access to our children only one hour out of one hundred and sixty-eight?

No; we must not do that! Rather, let us look the matter squarely in the face, analyze the situation, and determine that we will enter fully and whole-heartedly into the proposition made by Brother Carmichael to supplement, to the best of our abilities, during the week which follows, the efforts made by the Sunday-school teacher on the Sabbath. We all recognize how necessary it is for a thing to be repeated and stressed, over and over again, before a child will make it a part of its life. Witness the hundreds of times a mother says, "Hang up your cap"; or asks, "Have you brushed your teeth?" It were folly to expect great, fundamental, and vital truths to be impressed upon a child with one presentation—or two, or three!

So we perceive the help we may find in these suggestions in the little Quarterly, as to ways in which we can assist to build correctly the spiritual temples of character, and we should be grateful for the opportunity to do so. Let us not put off ordering our beginner Quarterly, welcome heartily this chance to share and to perform more acceptably our part, in the religious education of our children.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

To Mothers of Sunday School Beginners

The Sunday School Department has a word which it would like to get before the mothers who have children in the beginner department of the Sunday school.

Commencing with the beginner Quarterly for January, February, and March, the editor is suggesting, at the end of each lesson, matter which may be impressed upon the child at home by the mother to supplement the work of the teacher. As all are perhaps aware, the teacher of the beginner children usually tells a story each Sunday, which story is told for a purpose, as for instance, to encourage a spirit of thankfulness on the part of the child. Thus, the matter suggested for the parent is designed as follow-up work, to be told or done during the week after, emphasizing and reinforcing the lesson the teacher sought to establish.

The parent can do more than the teacher. The parent has the child all the time (unless it goes to day school), while the Sunday-school teacher has it but a paltry hour once a week. If the parents will cooperate with the teachers, much more effective work can be done with the children than is being done now.

These suggestions for the parents are in the Quarterly. In order for the parents to know what the suggestions are, it will be necessary for the parents to have the Quarterlies. the beginner Quarterly for January, February, and March is ready for mailing by December 1. Either order now, or see that your Sunday school orders it for you early. Do not permit delay! Know the very first Sunday of the new year, and each following Sunday, just what the Sunday-school teacher expects you to do for your child during the week which follows!

A. MAX CARMICHAEL,

General Superintendent Sunday School Department.

"Kiss Me, Mamma, I Can't Go to Sleep"

This heartbreaking tale should touch more than the mothers among us.

The child was so sensitive, so like that little shrinking plant that curls at a breath and shuts heart from the light.

The only beauties she possessed were an exceedingly transparent skin, and the most mournful, large blue eyes.

I had been trained by a very stern, strict, conscientious mother, but I was a hardy plant, rebounding after every shock; misfortune could not daunt, though discipline tamed me. I fancied, alas! that I must go through the same routine with this delicate creature; so one day when she had displeased me exceedingly by repeating an offense, I was determined to punish her severely. I was very serious all day, and, upon sending her to her little couch, I said: "Now, my daughter, to punish you, and to show you how very naughty you have been, I shall not kiss you to-night."

She stood looking at me, astonishment personified, with her great mournful eyes wide open—I suppose she had forgotten her misconduct then, and I left her with big tears loath to put a construction upon an indefinite statement that would place the prophet in conflict with Book of Mormon, and a "thus saith the Lord God" of the Bible (Jeremiah 3: 18, as well as 16: 15; 30: 2, 3, and Ezekiel 37: 21, and his own accepted revelation in Doctrine and Covenants, 108—at least by inference).

It will be noticed that no mention has been made of the North Pole or any other definite locality in this article. Whatever conviction the author may have upon that matter would not change or strengthen the statements of inspiration. The object has been to show that the ten lost tribes of Israel who have been led away have remained comparatively intact and will eventually return to the land of their former nativity from a north country as the ten lost tribes or the "outcast Israel." How well the author has succeeded will be a matter of opinion with my brethren who, of course, have the right to judge.

dripping down her cheeks, and her little red lips quivering.

Presently I was sent for, "Oh, mamma, you will kiss me; I can't go to sleep if you don't," she sobbed, every tone of her voice trembling; and she held out her little hands.

Now came the struggle between love and what I falsely termed duty. My heart said, Give her the kiss of peace; my stern nature urged me to persist in my correction, that I might impress the fault on her mind. That was the way I had been trained, till I was a most submissive child; and I remembered how often I had thanked mother since for her straightforward course.

I knelt by the bedside. "Mother can't kiss you, Ellen," I whispered, though every word choked me. Her hand touched mine; it was very hot, but I attributed it to her excitement. She turned her little grieving face to the wall; I blamed myself as the fragile form shook with half-suppressed sobs, and saying: "Mother hopes little Ellen will learn to mind her after this," left the room for the night. Alas! in my desire to be severe I forgot to be forgiving.

It must have been twelve o'clock when I was awakened by my nurse. Apprehensive, I ran eagerly to the child's chamber. I had had a fearful dream.

Ellen did not know me. She was sitting up, crimsoned from the forehead to the throat; her eyes so bright that I almost drew back aghast at their glances.

From that night a raging fever drank up her life; and what think you was the incessant plaint poured into my anguished heart? "Oh, kiss me, mamma, do kiss me; I can't go to sleep! I won't be naughty if you'll only kiss me! Oh, kiss me, dear mamma, I can't go to sleep."

Holy little angel! She did go to sleep one gray morning, and she never woke again—never. Her hand was locked in mine, and all my veins grew icy with its gradual chill. Faintly the light faded out of the beautiful eyes; whiter and whiter grew the tremulous lips. She never knew me; but with her last breath she whispered: "I will be good, mamma, if only you'll kiss me."

Kiss her! God knows how passionate, but unavailing, were my kisses on her cheek and lips after that fatal night. God knows how wild were my prayers that she might know, if but only once, that I kissed her. God knows how I would have yielded up my very life, could I have asked forgiveness of that sweet child.

Well, grief is all unavailing now! She lies in her little tomb; there is a marble urn at her head, and a rosebush at her feet; there grow sweet summer flowers; there waves the gentle grass; there birds sing their matins and vespers; there the blue sky smiles down to-day; and there lies buried the freshness of my heart.

Parents, you should have heard the pathos in the voice of that stricken mother as she said: "There are plants that spring into greater vigor if the pressure of a footstep crush them; but, oh! there are others that even the pearls of the light dew bend to the earth."—Autumn Leaves, vol. 1.

Books for Children

This is Children's Book Week, a time for taking stock of the volumes on the shelves of the young folks, for finding out if any of the favorites which meant so much to us when we were children are missing, and if anything is there which would be better gone. In observance of this occasion Penelope M. Smith, a teacher in the Omaha schools, has written this pleasing reverie:

It is November. The street is black with rain and sleet. We shiver in the cold wind as we step out of our warm homes into the storm. The flowers that grow near the house seem to call us as we pass.

"Help us. Save us from the bitter cold; gather us in."

We stop. We pluck quickly a few blossoms and hurry on. We must not be late. Perhaps we shall come back in time to save them all. We shall put them in a green bowl near the window and delight a little longer in their beauty.

Suddenly we remember the poet who is to lecture to-day. That will keep us late, too late, perhaps. Shall we leave our flowers to perish while we listen to the poet talk about their beauty? No, we shall come home and gather our yellow blossoms before it is too late. And because it is November and the evenings are long we shall make a fire on the hearth and sit with the children in its warmth. We shall tell them fairy stories from old Ireland. Robin Hood and Friar Tuck shall spring to meet them from the glowing flames. We shall sing "The Piper o' Dundee" and have such glorious times that when the children are old and gray-headed their hearts will still be warm with the remembrance of it all.

Then, because it is November, and all the winter evenings are yet to come, when the good nights are said and the children are asleep, we shall come downstairs again, and, in the light of our glowing fire, we shall sit down before the children's book shelf. We shall see if Alice in Wonderland is there, Robinson Crusoe, David Balfour, Grimm Brothers' Folk Tales, The Arabian Nights, and lots of other good book friends. We shall not forget Cinderella and the Mother Goose rhymes. "The three bears" must surely be there, for we remember a little girl who once climbed unto a chair to open this wonderful book under the light of a lamp and was taken right into the land of make-believe, where she has spent so many happy hours that she wishes all boys and girls could find the way there. And "Jack and the bean stalk" must not be left out, for the mystery and daring, the hair-breadth escapes, the awful giant, who roared, "I'll have your bones for stepping stones," has left us quite indifferent to anything that the modern movie can show.

Because we know how much the children love the stories of Ruth and Joseph, of David and Abraham, and Isaac, we shall see that a Bible with large print and many pictures is on our shelf, and that the Psalms that the children have a right to know and love are learned while we sit about the fire. We know that November days will come and that our children will need every help in time of trouble. We would give them books to "broaden their knowledge, to quicken the imagination, to furnish recreation, to teach principles of right living, to inspire love for country," to teach them spiritual things. Our yellow flowers saved from the storm were radiant in the firelight as we turned from our book shelf to dream a little while in the shadows.

Psychology

Text: The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts

CHAPTER II

Attention

1. Give in your own words the author's definition of attention.
2. In what way does attention measure mental efficiency?
3. What is it, in large measure, that "makes one man a master in thought and achievement, and another his humble follower"?
4. It is important that parents understand that "voluntary attention to any one object can be sustained for but a brief time." What bearing should this have in the training of their young children?
5. There are two chief types of inattention. What are they?
6. Give examples other than those given by the author, of the three types of attention.
7. In involuntary attention the environment largely determines to what we shall attend. Is it not well then for parents to see to it that the child's environment is conducive to the best and purest thoughts? Why?
8. "The things which present themselves to the mind are the things which occupy it; the character of thought is determined by the character of our interests." In what should we seek to interest ourselves and our children?
9. What should take the place of theorizing and resolving? Why?

10. Why should we train the growing child to be systematically heroic in the little points of everyday life and experience? Should we permit the child or ourselves to shrink from unpleasant or difficult tasks? Why?

11. Are we justified in having quietude for study, or should we train ourselves to study in the midst of distractions, such as conversations?

12. Discuss the advantages and disadvantages in permitting children to specialize in subjects in which they seem to have great natural capacity and interest.

13. What is the effect on a child of having him in a grade that is too difficult for him?

14. In what sense is attention dependent upon bodily nourishment?

15. Perform and answer "Problems in observation and introspection" at end of chapter.

DORA GLINES.

A Snappy "Come-Back!"

[It pleased us mightily to receive the following letter from one of our wide-awake brethren! In fact, we hoped to receive some such a response when we penned the little paragraph referred to. We just felt that many of our progressive men would like to express their long-established interest in the work of our department, and would feel a word from them was not untimely after the implied invitation. We thank Brother Berve for his deep-seated interest in our work and the splendid cooperation he has given our workers. Sister Beil, our organizer, is to be congratulated upon the opportunity given through this cooperation to prosecute our work in her district.

We had thought to pass it by, but since the paragraph above mentioned has come up for reference, we think we will just make a little explanation about one of the words contained in its last line! We were quite amazed to have it read: ". . . and are quite ready to renew our offer to send explanatory literature from our department to any one of the priesthood who will work for it." We had used the word "write"—"any . . . who will write for it," and had appended our office address! But we are not inclined to blame anyone this time, for the paragraph was written from a hospital bed, under strict orders to neither raise head from pillow nor body to elbow-support, and no wonder our chirography suffered somewhat from the restrictions, and that a wavy line beginning with w looked like work to the typist who so kindly fixed it up.

Ho-Hum! By just such trifles is an editor's task enlivened!

A. A.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT;

Dear Sisters: In the HERALD of November 1, I note a paragraph under the caption, "A renewed offer." I also noted the numerous questions prefaced by "We wonder just what is the attitude of mind evidenced?"

Now, if it is considered that those who did not send in for "a collection of pamphlets, instructions to workers, etc.," did evidence to the Women's Department any of the questions you "wonder" about, I wish to assure the splendid workers of that department who may still "wonder away" that for one, I do not consider myself within the category of "wonder."

That you may not be left to "wonder away" at that statement, permit me to say that when your first offer was made I had on hand a full supply of your pamphlets of instructions and many others of your books and leaflets. Your Centennial Yearbook, by the way, is a very comprehensive issue and up-to-date in every particular.

For years I have studied the needs of the home, and have availed myself of the opportunities of hearing lectures on home economics, and read a number of books on child training. I followed by making an effort to acquaint myself with the modern methods of dealing with the adolescent as well as the adult, and I did this that I might become more proficient as a pastor.

When I was assigned to this district, nearly three years ago, not much was being done for the Women's Department. About that time you appointed Sister C. A. Beil, of Clinton, Iowa, as your district organizer, and I am sure that no mistake was made in that appointment. She is surely doing her part, and we have tried to cooperate with her. At our late reunion we gave special privileges to the Women's Department, Sister J. A. Gunsolley specially representing your work. Doctor Harrington and Sister Mann, from the Health Department, were also with us. At each district conference your department is given place on the program, Sister Beil being a member of the district executive committee. She has a voice in making all programs for our conferences, as well as considering plans for presenting, at other times, various phases of your work.

I assure you I have watched the splendid growth of this very essential department of the church with much satisfaction. Are you wondering how many of the pastors and missionaries are doing likewise? I hope there are many who do not wait for a free offer, although we are always glad of such an one. We, too, are "absolutely good-natured about it all" and hail with much joy the excellent help of the Women's Department. The utmost cooperation should prevail in such laudable work.

And now that I have given away all my former supply, will you please make your list "sixteen," and send me the pamphlets you offer? I delight in the fact that I may participate in the advance of the work of the church, which includes all the departments of the same, the least of which is not the Women's Department!

May God speed your noble work, is the sincere prayer of a true friend.

AMOS BERVE.

November

Low-hung suns

That paint the afternoons a matchless gold
And make the sky a fleece-specked opal;
Seared leaves that dance their last on gnarled limbs,
Then break the loving handclasp of the parent tree,
To frolic off through fields
With their new lover, the Autumn Wind,
Who tires soon of play and lets them sink
Into oblivion in some kind nook or crevice,
While he seeks new playthings!

Air that invigorates the jaded

And brings new life; cries of the gray goose
On his way south to join his fellows.
Frost that paints fantastic shapes and pictures;
Perfumes of new-turned earth and harvest fields!

Then comes gray days,

When the smiles of Heaven are turned to tears
And the face of Earth is sunk and sodden
As though in sorrow for the death of things.
Against the dead-gray skies that weep and weep,
The trees stand like black skeletons
Holding out their scrawny, crooked arms for mercy!

The spring morning and the summer noon are gone,
The late afternoon of Indian summer is a memory
And now has come the twilight of the year
That heralds the coming night of winter.
As one who draws the curtains at twilight
To keep the dreariness outside from coming in,
I pull the curtains on the year
And turn to the wood-fire on the hearth
To dream through the night—
Of Spring!

—Jack Lee.

LETTERS

Mission Organized at Iowa City

University students organized by Elder Amos Berve to promote their social and religious welfare.

We are very pleased to inform you that Elder Amos Berve, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has organized Iowa City members into a mission. We met for organization on the evening of November 11. Lee Travis was chosen as president of the mission. James Houghton was chosen as vice president. After organization we discussed the various purposes for which the present mission has been organized, also the purposes and ways and means by which further organization should be attempted.

We, as members of the Iowa City Mission, feel that the University of Iowa will from year to year draw increasing numbers of our college graduates. Thus we have organized to promote our own social and religious welfare as well as to serve the district and general church officials in methods which they may deem advisable to employ to handle the situation at any appropriate time.

Elder Berve remained with us until the following Monday. Sunday, following the organization, the mission met at the home of the officiating president. We enjoyed an excellent sermon from Brother Berve on "the children of the house of Israel," their dispersion and the promises of their restoration, pointing to some of the most conspicuous recent fulfillments of prophecy regarding their restoration.

We plan to hold regular meetings and wish to invite any church official or member when in Iowa City to meet with us. Any member of the mission may be located by calling either Red 2095 or 2354.

Very sincerely,
CHARLES A. BENGE, Secretary and Treasurer.

What Isolation Often Means

This brother says it was as though he were dead and buried to the church.

We intended leaving Blairmore about December 1, to live at Little Current, Ontario. The reason for making the change is, to be with the Saints. It is not to get gain in worldly goods, but we are hungry for the fellowship of the Lord's children.

This place may sometime be a field for gospel labor, but I cannot see any hope now. It is one of Satan's strongholds. Besides, the Utah people are quite numerous. They have just closed a conference of the Alberta Stake at Carston, where they have built a large temple. Some fifteen hundred attended the conference from the different parts of Southern Alberta. They have also organized another stake at Lethbridge, being organized by Apostle Lawson.

The Mormons of Southern Alberta are well respected by their neighbors. We often hear the remark that they are fine people, only they mistrust them when it comes to the marriage question. Of course the other churches are glad to blacken everyone that bears the name of Latter Day Saint. However, I have changed my mind since coming to Blairmore, and I do not believe the Mormons are as bad as I have been told they were. I think they rank equal with most of the sectarian churches. I have been in close touch with the English church minister since coming here. I live next door and I find it a common thing for him to have much wine and beer. I have been told by the leading members of the union church that it is full of professors but very few honest living people, the minister included.

I thought we had some poor Saints in the Reorganization, but I must confess they are angels compared with the members of other churches that I have been privileged to meet.

I hope we will be more patient with our brothers and sisters. When we have a good look at Babylon all around us, we see that the time has come that Babylon must fall. My prayer is that the Saints may be ready to come out from among them.

Do you think it would be better for the isolated Saints to try to settle in places where there are other Saints, that they might have fellowship? This could be done by the Saints advertising in the HERALD. They could be brought together in groups of two or more families. They could then have Sunday school.

As for myself I will never again go where there are no Saints. It has been a good lesson to me. It has been learned long and well. I will never be isolated again. It has been a year and eight months since I left the branch to which I belonged, to seek for wealth, but it is not to be compared to the fellowship of Saints. If the Lord will permit, it shall never happen again. I have just lost one year and eight months of my life. I have been dead and buried for that time from what I love most—the church. We will be glad to be at home with the Saints again.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
MACK BROWN.

A New Note in the Indian Plea

"Now that the white man has spoken, it may be that the white men will take a little more notice."

In the past the Indian Bureau has tried to close the lips of the Indians who were pleading before the public against the system used by the bureau in handling its Indian wards. Several of our men have been imprisoned because they persisted in appearing before the people pleading for redress. Now, Congressman Kelley has made a very effective speech in the House of Representatives (August 4) which touches a great many points against the system of the Indian Bureau, the wrongs which the Indian has endured by this system since the establishment of this department (July 9, 1832).

The only difference in Honorable Kelley's information and that of the Indian is that Honorable Kelley has made a two-year intensive study of the manner in which the Indian is handled by the Indian Bureau, while the Indian, with rebellion in his heart, has endured it for eighty-nine years. But now that the white man has spoken, it may be that white men will take a little more notice.

It is true that the Indian does not use the English language in a strong way. The white man has become so accustomed to the exaggerated form of speech that he cannot value a simple, truthful statement by the Indian. The Indian cannot see how a simple statement of fact can be more effective by multiplying words—white man's exaggerated speech to him smacks of insincerity and deception. Because of this, it is hard for frank understanding to obtain between the Indian and the church people, for instance. When the Indian says a thing is nice, the fact is so tamely spoken that the white man is rather disappointed at his seeming indifference, while when the white man says, it is wonderfully clever, excellent, he means the same thing as the Indian in his simple statement, but instantly in the heart of the Indian suspicion of insincerity is aroused because of the excessive language used. And since Congressman Kelley has told our story in the forceful white man's way it may be that the white man will not listen more closely to our pleas. I will quote statements by him, which are effective, clear-cut, and true. On page 5 of his speech before Congress he says regarding the Indian Bureau system that we are struggling so hard to get from under:

"The Indian Bureau has multiplied its activities, its employees, and its expenditures manyfold in thirty years and has actually prevented a solution of the problem. It has held to all the Indians under its care and has reached out for others who had been self-supporting and living free from its restrictions. Once corralled by the bureau, it has been an almost impossible task for an Indian to break loose from a system which, by its very nature, degenerated, degraded, and destroyed. The Indians have been kept prisoners on reservations, under arbitrary control and without personal and property rights. They have been segregated in a way to encourage and perpetuate savagery.

"The bureau has sought to make such use of the Indians' funds as would unfit them for the management of their own affairs and their own property. The money appropriated for the service of the Indians has not been directed to strengthen their manhood and fit them for intelligent citizenship and a place as self-supporting members of America. Instead it has been largely spent in building up a great organization, with a thousand ramifications, each adding new restrictions upon these wards of the Government and making it still more difficult for them to escape the toils and traps laid about them. The whole purpose has been to make the Indian an Indian instead of an American."

Every honorable person whether he be Christian or not should make it his duty to serve America by studying, and investigating our Indian problem, for it is a problem that pertains to and reflects upon the American civilization, freedom, and justice. Get in touch with your Congressman and Senator on this problem. Urge your representative to work for the abolishment of the Indian Bureau. Free the Native American (the Indian) so he also may enjoy and appreciate the principles of Americanism in the land of his birth.

Yours for justice,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

WILLIAM MADISON.

Thanksgiving at the Sanitarium

An enjoyable time had by those who care for the sick and ailing.

Thanksgiving in the Sanitarium! Yes, it occurs every year, though perhaps you never stopped to think that some one must plan to make the day pass as pleasantly as possible for the sick ones and for the nurses away from home, many of them for the first time in their lives separated from loved ones on this holiday occasion. Something has to be done to lessen the homesickness that will come to the girls on these special days, and it is done gladly.

The trays that went into the sick rooms were tastily decorated with Thanksgiving napkins and with foods that bespoke the season, in so far as this was possible. An extra tray and a well filled one found its way into the sick room of Sister W. A. McDowell, that her husband might partake with her. Two of the inmates who were able to be about, Elders Clyde F. Ellis and F. S. Brackenbury, were taken in an auto to the home of Brother B. C. Harder to spend the day.

Up in the dining room on the third floor, everything possible had been done to brighten the day for the nurses. One long festal board stretched the length of the dining room, prettily decorated and sumptuously spread. A limited number of guests had been invited by the staff. Doctor Harrington and wife, with young G. L. and the little Miss who patted cakes for her share of the feast, headed the line of guests down one side of the table, and Sister Laura Mann led the nurses, in order of their rank and in uniform, down the other side. This line of nurses made an interesting and pleasing picture. All stood behind their chairs while the thanksgiving of each heart was verbally expressed by Doctor Harrington. Then when all were seated, Sister O. E. Green, Sister Etta Oldfather, and Sister J. F. Hopkins proceeded to make everyone feel at home, and with their splendid manner of serving were responsible for the grace and ease with which everything progressed.

Sister Mann acted as hostess. Seven nurses were absent. Some of those had gone elsewhere to celebrate the day with friends; others sacrificed the merriment to remain in call of such patients as might need them. The nurses upon night duty arose from their slumbers to enjoy the feast, and as soon as it was over went back to finish their rest, that the sick might have care through the coming night.

Mr. Murphy, one of the guests, entertained (between bites) by relating his "dreams and visions" which everyone suspected were much doctored up to suit the occasion. However, they added the necessary laughter as an aid in digestion of much abundance.

At the close of the good time, the guests turned to express their appreciation to the hostess. She was not to be found. The serious illness of a child had called her away, and for two hours or more she was forced to forget the guests she had left so unceremoniously. The guests found others to whom they could say their farewells, and left, glad in their hearts there were those who had remembered not only the sick, but the lonely as well. ONE WHO WAS THERE.

How One Missionary Feels About Education

[The following is a copy of a letter written by a missionary in a foreign field. It shows how ardently a man, placed at a disadvantage because of lack of preparation in such a field, may feel the need of the help that the church has to offer the class in religious education at Graceland College.—EDITORS.]

Under the present conditions in the church financially, I have kept putting off writing this letter.

But I am not asking for financial help, so I suppose I can go ahead and write just what is on my mind. My reason for writing is not that I have just recently been aroused from sleep, regarding education, as I can assure you that it has been my ambition ever since I was fifteen years of age, to get more education, but when I was thirteen I had to get out and help support our family.

In those days there was no such thing as getting high school, or working one's way through college; rather, I had to work sixteen hours a day until I left England in 1912.

The HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign came to-day, and you know what that means to a foreign missionary. I read a letter in the HERALD by E. Yewell Hunker. Perhaps it was his letter, with your address at Lamoni, that stirred me to action. I thought if only I had the education first, then the mission field second, how much better it would have been for me.

I can assure you that I envy these young men at Graceland who are receiving instruction in the different classes there that build a man up for the mission field. How much better to be built up first, then to action. Of course it is needless for me to say that I have tried to prepare myself for the ministry, and in a humble and uncouth manner have had at least a degree of success, but I look for something better.

I have not even had the pleasure of attending a large branch where intensive study has been the order; rather had to dig, but for the men at Graceland to have the privilege to hear our leading men on "Zion" and other subjects, such as must come before our people very soon, "Stewardships," etc., I can assure you that you cannot understand just how I feel.

So I am applying now, so that sometime in the future, it may be years, if it is possible for me to work my way through for one term (I have been in the grocery business for years), I would do simply anything to have that term: sweep floors, clerk, anything. I am confident that under the inspiration of Graceland, I should be better able to represent my heavenly Father.

I was put in bad shape, owing to losses on the farm, and my wife's sickness, doctor bills and trained nurses costing me eight hundred dollar. So my savings went, and had to make debts. I am making this application only on one condition, that is, that I may work my way through. There is a lot said about educating our ministry. There would be less said if those who criticize could be sent on a mission of this kind, with a public school education only. In so far as the all-important subject of education is concerned, it is very necessary, indeed, in a new mission.

Lamoni Stake News

Two weeks ago John F. Garver and Cyril E. Wight returned from Creston, Iowa, where the branch in that place celebrated its first anniversary. The Saints do not as yet have a building of their own, but are meeting in rented quarters. Although they are not large in numbers they feel much encouraged, and ready to go on and grow.

The Quarterly Conference at Lucas, Iowa

As the larger part and most of the important business of the stake is left until the February conference, this one at Lucas was chiefly of an educational character. The first service was an illustrated lecture on the Hawaiian Islands, by Prescott A. Foo of Honolulu, now a student in the department of religious education at Graceland.

Institute work and business occupied the days, while the evenings were turned over to preaching services. Hugh H. Gold, now of the Graceland faculty, was appointed to succeed R. J. Willey as superintendent of the Stake Sunday School Department. There were three ordinations taken care of at the conference: James A. Lane, of Chariton, to the office of deacon; Griffiths Thomas, of Chariton, to the office of priest; and Charles Ballantyne, of Bloomington, to the office of priest.

The conference was enjoyed by the Saints and is said to have been very profitable. C. E. Wight started a series of services at that place immediately after the close of the conference, and will continue for some time.

Thanksgiving Day was observed in Lamoni Branch by a morning service. The Reverend J. Vincent Gray occupied at the Brick Church as speaker.

Graceland won her Thanksgiving Day football game against the Simpson Freshman team by a score of 31-0. The game was a fast one in which plunges and passes were prominent; also a few punts and end runs.

LEONARD LEA, Correspondent.

Good Work in Germany

There are times when the work of some of our missionaries deserve special mention. Here is an instance: Brother Carl F. Greene has been laboring under very trying circumstances in Germany. Despite his fearful handicaps and discouragements he has kept steadily active. Herewith is a copy of his report for the month of October:

Places visited: Hannover, October 1 to 4; Braunschweig, 5 to 7; Hirunhof, 8 to 11; Einbeck, 12 to 14; Hannover, 15 to 21; Einbeck, 22 and 23; Hannover, 24 and 25; Berlin, 25 to 28; Gross Raschen, 29 to 31.

Sermons preached 28, baptized 10, confirmed 6, ordained 1, administered to 6 sick persons, made 128 pastoral visits.

What Brother Greene is doing others can do. The Saints in Germany are earnestly praying that the church will send more missionaries in their midst.

Very sincerely yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

HARDIN, MONTANA, November 13, 1921.

Editors Herald: Though I have been isolated from the privileges of the church for fifteen years, yet you have been my welcome weekly visitor, full of cheer and glad tidings and instructions from all parts of the world. Perhaps you would kindly hear a little message from this part.

About fourteen years ago a few of us came here to this Big Horn Valley to divert it from sagebrush into wheat and alfalfa fields. We said we must have a new town and a new county, so we cleared the sagebrush and began to build a town. Then we wanted oil to feed the thousands of automobiles, motor trucks, and tractors. Now we have wheat fields, the alfalfa and beet fields, a new county, a town of fifteen hundred population with paved streets and electric lights, water and sewer systems and four oil gushers. Now we want a new railroad for the beet and oil fields. The work is to begin on the same in a few days.

Now we want a Latter Day Saint church. So I began to prepare the material by ordering two hundred seventy-five tracts, the Angel Message series, and I had some others. I have distributed three hundred tracts and thirty-three HERALDS. I need three hundred more Angel Message tracts but have not the money to buy them. If they can be donated by some of the Saints I will donate my time to keep them in use. The way I do it is to go to every residence and present Chapter 1 and ask if they care to read it. If so I would be glad to leave it for a week. Then I call for it and leave Chapter 2 for a week, and so on. When the wives of professional and business men refuse to take my literature, I take the name and call at their office or place of business. Many such men read the literature and are interested and often by calling the second time at their residence and introducing myself to the lady of the house, telling her of my acquaintance with her husband, saying that he is reading it, she will often accept and read the literature.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOHN H. WINCHESTER, SR.

THUNDER HAWK, SOUTH DAKOTA, November 10, 1921.

Editors Herald: We are glad to have the privilege of receiving the visits of HERALD and Ensign each week. They are food for the soul spiritually, comforting and strengthening. Many times while reading their pages the Holy Spirit has been with me to gladden my heart.

We had the pleasure of a ten-day visit from Brother M. Rasmussen, of Sykeston, North Dakota, who preached for us twice on both Sundays and each evening at our schoolhouse. The attendance was fairly good. Some are interested.

We were made to rejoice to see our granddaughters, Gertrude and Bertha, obey the gospel. For this cause we left our church privileges at our old home that we might be instrumental in bringing the tidings of salvation to those of our loved ones and friends. We hope much more good may be accomplished here.

While we live on the Milwaukee Railroad and the Yellowstone Trail it seems this place is hard to reach by railroad, especially by the North Dakota Saints. If there are any Saints passing through near us we should be very glad to have them stop and visit us. There are six members here now.

The last evening Brother Rasmussen was with us we had prayer and testimony meeting and he administered the sacrament to us which we had not had for so long, also to the new members. We felt grateful for the privilege.

We are always interested to know of the advancement of the cause of Christ and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. ELLEN HERR.

Church at Siloam Burned

Receiving word that a lecture would be given Tuesday night, the 22d, at Siloam, Missouri, by J. D. McClure, a Christian minister from Albany, Elder John F. Garver and Bishop A. Carmichael attended and took notes. At the close of the lecture, which was an attack upon our church, Elder Garver asked for the privilege of making reply. This was denied both by the Reverend McClure and also the Woodmen in whose hall the meeting had been held.

Thereupon, an invitation was extended to those present to adjourn to the small Latter Day Saint church building in that place where Elder Garver spoke for one hour. The next morning reports were received that the church building was burned. An examination showed that the fire had been set from the outside. Elder Haden, who was sleeping in the building, was awakened barely in time to escape with a few of his effects. Fortunately the building was insured and so can be replaced. Elder Garver, in a letter to the First Presidency, expresses the opinion that this is in fulfillment of threats made many times to burn the building. Four baptisms on the 22d and the lecture by Reverend McClure are probably contributing factors.

Holden Home Dedicated

The large building in Holden, Missouri, which was purchased by the church in 1917 as a home for the aged of the church was dedicated on November 20, with a special program.

The original purchase price was $8,000, but the place has been improved in various ways till it is worth much more than that amount to-day.

The dedicatory sermon was by President Elbert A. Smith and the prayer by Bishop B. R. McGuire. An interesting feature of the program was a historical poem by Frances Keeler, who has been a blind inmate of the home since 1917.

Mrs. Edith Carr is matron and there are thirty-four inmates.

A convention of the Palestine Foundation Fund for the rehabilitation of the Holy Land by the Jews is announced in Saint Louis for December 4. We are not certain how wide a territory this convention represents, but it is expected to include a reception to the Sakalov Delegation of Hebrew leaders from Europe. M. J. Slonim, the chairman of the local committee, states that Palestine offers the only relief for the seven million persecuted Jewish people in Europe and that the fund will be used for the organization of immigration colonies, to help the sick and needy, to finance industry and commercial undertakings in Palestine.

The friends of Elder Joseph G. Smith, of Independence, will regret to learn that he has been confined to the Sanitarium recently, having had his tonsils removed. He is getting along quite well, but will require further treatment for other troubles.

Professor Pickering, of Harvard University, has reached the conclusion that the moon is inhabited, according to an item in the Baptist Times and Freeman. He states that two crops of vegetation grow and die every day. Their day, however, is 336 of our hours long.

HYMNS AND POEMS

A Tribute to Kirtland

By Charlotte Pearson

Oh, Kirtland dear, and beautiful,
Once more we say good-by,
There's not a spot more dearly loved,
Beneath the arching sky,
And as each added year goes by,
To thee we gladly come,
Like tired children seeking rest,
And find a welcome home.

We find there bread and wine and oil.
The Spirit's treasures given,
It comes to us in bounteous power,
To fit our souls for heaven.
Thy God hath not forgotten thee.
His promise stands secure,
And all that seeks to mar thy peace
Shall perish, not endure.

Thou gateway to the promised land,
Thou queen among the hills,
Thy temple is thy beauteous crown,
Thy destiny God wills
Shall be as he has promised thee,
A stake of Zion's land.
No enemy can take that crown;
'Twas placed there by God's hand.

And stands there grand, majestic still,
And as a magnet, draws
The strangers from all lands and climes,
To listen to God's laws.
And as we turn with longing hearts,
To gaze with tear-filled eye,
We promise thee we'll come again,
Good-by, Kirtland, good-by

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Citizenship - - - - -	1129
Meaning of "Evil" in the Bible - - - - -	1130
A Neighborhood Christmas - - - - -	1130
Religious Normal Work - - - - -	1131
Analysis of Wealth in the United States - - - - -	1132
A Demonstration of Value of Organization - - - - -	1132
Subjects Being Discussed - - - - -	1132

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

The General Conference Auditorium, by Benjamin R. McGuire - - - - -	1133
Two Beautiful Organs We Have Recently Acquired, by A. H. Mills - - - - -	1134
Jerusalem and the Coming of Christ, by A. M. Chase - - - - -	1137

The Life Beautiful, by J. E. Vanderwood - - - - -	1138
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
The Common Law of the Bible - - - - -	1140
THE FORUM:
Israel, the Outcast, by H. J. Davison - - - - -	1142
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT - - - - -	1145
A. Max Carmichael—Dora Glines—Amos Berve.
LETTERS - - - - -	1148
Charles A. Bene—Mack Brown—William Madison—Leonard Lea—T. W. Williams—John N. Winchester, sr.—Mrs. Ellen Horr.
MISCELLANEOUS - - - - -	1152

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Appointment

Elder C. Ed. Miller, having been transferred to the Saint Louis District, has placed with the Presidency his resignation as president of the Massachusetts District. The Presidency hereby appoints Elder Daniel F. Joy as president of the Massachusetts District until the convening of the next district conference. THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Department of Music

This is official notification of the appointments, with the approval of the First Presidency, of the following as choristers of the respective districts noted: Manly R. Shedd, R. F. D. 1, Pepin, Wisconsin, for the Northern Wisconsin District. Mrs. Rena Haas, Rupert, Idaho, for the Idaho District. For these we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of these districts. Albert N. Hoxie, general director; Arthur H. Mills, secretary.

Conference Notices

Northeastern Illinois, at Plano, Illinois, December 10 and 11. A program of entertainment has been arranged by the local Religio for Friday evening, the 9th. All members of the priesthood and branch clerks please make a full report to December 1 and mail promptly to O. A. McDowell, secretary, 404 North Fourth Street, DeKalb, Illinois.

Western Colorado, at Delta, January 14 and 15. All branches please send in reports before that date. We want a good conference, therefore we trust that all who can will be present. Jewell Harshman, secretary.

Northeastern Kansas, at Troy, December 2 to 4. James A. Thomas, president. R. L. Tilden, secretary.

Convention Notices

Northeastern Illinois, at Plano, December 9, at 2.30 p. m. Entertainment at 8 p. m. Annual election. Good representation from all locals desired. LaJune Howard, secretary, 12055 Parnell Avenue, West Pullman, Chicago, Illinois.

Pittsburgh Ministerial Conference

At Fayette City, Pennsylvania, December 10 and 11. First meeting Saturday evening at 7.30. We extend an invitation to every young man of the district to attend these meetings. The Women's Department will also hold special meetings during this conference, with the district leader in charge. Interesting topics and music on Sunday. J. A. Jaques, president, 1424 Alton Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Quorum Notices

Toronto and Owen Sound quorum of elders at Guelph, Ontario, December 3 and 4. Saturday evening a debate will be held between two members of the quorum from each district. Saints and friends invited to attend Sunday, 2 p. m. Live topics will be discussed. Come and make it worth while. Meet at the home of King Cooper, 11 Home Street. M. J. Crawley, president. Ernest Rowett, secretary.

Religio Quarterlies Wanted

We will pay half price for copies of the senior Religio Quarterly for the second quarter of 1921, if in good condition. Send them to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, with name and address plainly written on the package.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. Minnie Johnson, of Dunlap, Iowa, requests prayers for her son, twenty-one years old, who is very ill. She desires an elder from Dow City, Ute, or Dunlap, to come and administer to him. Write her at Dunlap or call telephone II-405.

Our Departed Ones

WELDON.—Samuel Weldon was born in Erie, Pennsylvania, May 14, 1837. Baptized forty-seven years ago. He became an elder in the church and has lived a faithful, upright, Christian life. Died at Lafayette, California, October 26. Three sons, three daughters, and a number of grandchildren are left to mourn; his faithful wife having preceded him some five years ago. C. W. Hawkins officiated at the funeral.

LAMB.—Charles W. Lamb was born in Oakland County, Michigan, March 14, 1839. Baptized December 21, 1875. His father and mother resided in 1820 in the neighborhood where Joseph Smith became interested in religion and received his first vision. They became members of the church either in the latter part of 1830 or beginning of 1831, and remained faithful. Charles Lamb was a man of little schooling, yet educated because of his library and the use he made of it. He had talent as a writer, and his poems and articles have appeared in the church publications. Died November 5, at the home of John Swalley, where the funeral services were held. Sermon by his nephew, J. F. Mintun.

WAINWRIGHT.—William A. Wainwright was born October 26, 1854, at Leeds, Yorkshire, England, died October 30, 1921. Funeral from Central Church, Chicago, Illinois. Sermon by Ward L. Christy. Brother Wainwright was for years one of the stays of the Central Church. Chicago has lost one of its most faithful Saints and ardent supporters of the latter-day work. His wife and eight children survive him.

PETERSON.—Stella Frances Peterson was born December 21, 1899, at Chicago, Illinois, died November 5, 1921. A father and two sisters are left. Funeral services from Long's undertaking parlors, Kansas City, by J. A. Tanner. Interment in Mount Hope Cemetery.

The Ridgetown, Ontario, Saints are preparing to build a new church. For this purpose, the Women's Department gave a chicken supper, which, attended by the spirit of generosity and kindness, both in members and nonmembers, was a success. A member of Parliament for Kent, A. B. McCoig, partook of the supper. The Saints of Ridgetown hope to so live that nonmembers of that place can never say that they hindered them from obeying the gospel.

The Busy Man's Tracts

President Elbert A. Smith writes this series of compelling little tracts and we have printed them most attractively on high grade India tint enameled paper. You may be proud to hand these to your friends.

Epitome of Faith	60 cents a hundred
Faith	85 cents a hundred
Repentance	85 cents a hundred
Baptism	85 cents a hundred
Laying on of Hands	85 cents a hundred
Resurrection and Eternal Judgment	85 cents a hundred
Restoration	$1.00 a hundred
10 complete sets	75c
Per hundred	$5.50

Order a supply to-day from

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

any man among you have
and concubines he shall
Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, DECEMBER 6,

NUMBER 49

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized Ju

Issued
if post-

EDITORIAL

Education—"With the Goal of the Church Always in View"

Summary of College Day address by President Frederick M. Smith, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, October 16, 1921.

I cannot refrain from expressing my appreciation for the hours of patient practice that have made it possible for our musicians to render so ably the anthem we have just heard, and I might say that the spirit of the choir as thus represented this morning typifies to me the spirit of devotion and sacrifice for the interest of others that must characterize this people through all their work.

I hold that the work of the church is primarily educational. I might even go further and say that I hold that the entire work of the church is educational, for certainly no one will deny that the efforts we make in sending out the missionaries from one part of the country to another are to educate the people to a better conception of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Certainly the work of the local men is educational in taking care of those converted, giving them to understand and appreciate through the processes of education, the grander and more significant portions of the gospel. So, if I need any excuse for talking on education, it is that you cannot talk on any aspect of the church work without talking on education. If I need a specific excuse for talking on education this morning, it is because of the fact that to-day is the day set apart as College Day.

The goal of all educational processes should be such triune development of man, spiritual, physical, and mental, as will result in the fullest expression of life, and that of course reminds us of the passage of scripture, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." To accomplish this demands not alone the command of all factors in the educational processes, but the control of the environmental factors during the unfolding of the individual. This that the acme of the intellectual, spiritual, and physical development might be reached.

Now, in these words, I have given you the thesis of my theme this morning, and I challenge anyone to say that in the last analysis it is not a thesis which shall cover the scope of the entire work of the church. If we think of this in a general way, so far as the educational processes of life at large are concerned, and admit its bearing, as I think we must, then if we attempt to make an application of this thesis to our own work as a church we have to consider primarily, perhaps, what is the goal of the church.

In order to succeed as a church—and I make this expression after due consideration and hope you will give it some thought—in order for this church to succeed—and we have been some ninety years in making the attempt—our children must have the fullest education that is possible for us to give them or urge them to act always in view. That has result is that some of our young people who should have their attentions centering in the church are not with us. They are giving their services to people from the standpoint of the activities of the world, viz, selfishness. The goal of the church summed up in a few words is that, socially, everyone shall have full opportunity to function as a social unit in the way God has intended that he should, and that must take into consideration the personal equipment of the individual or individuals.

Let me put it another way. The goal of this church is the elimination socially of the selfish standard and the putting in its place the rule, Let us work for one another. To accomplish this result is quite impossible unless we shall have the young people of the church develop educationally in the environment that will keep selfishness in the background and altruism to the fore.

Our whole life is made up of habits. Your daily existence is made up of a succession of habits, and hence you are the victim of your habits. If a child is educated in an atmosphere of selfishness he will not be able to function freely in an atmosphere of altruism, but will have to remake himself in other words.

A child that goes to the average school to-day, either in the public school where our teachers are teaching for the salary that comes to them, or goes to the college or university, will find that the dynamic used by the instructor is based on some kind of a selfish ground. They make the plea to the child to be a success because it will mean his own aggrandizement. And few indeed are the instructors, and I might say, none of the institutions, with one or two exceptions, that will attempt to educate the children always with the idea in mind, "It is not yourself you are working for, but that you might make it a little better world for the other fellow to live in."

I would like to ask you people who have been in contact with the educational institutions of the world, Is there any institution in which you have had experience where that ideal is held up, other than in Graceland College? Of course, I know you will find sporadic efforts on the part of men in different institutions acting as instructors individually who have large vision and who are doing all they can to get this idea before the students; but so far as the average is concerned there is always the appeal made to selfishness. And why not? It is the atmosphere of the world to-day. Men are doing it every day. Of course, there are justifications for men and women who are trying to lay up a little money against a rainy day, but nine out of ten of the men who are in business are engaged in business because of the wealth that comes to them, or the power that it brings to them and the advancement to them as individuals because of that power.

Now, if it be granted, as I said a little bit ago, that each individual is endowed or equipped with some special talent God has given to him and for which he will be held accountable at the bar of justice in eternity, then our task as a church is to loose those forces and put in operation those forces that will discover the talent of every individual in the church, for which God will hold him responsible. And then, having found those talents, put that individual into such an environment that those talents will be developed to the maximum of possibility. Then the individual should be given an opportunity to function as a unit of society for the betterment of the other units.

Furthermore, it not only means the discovering by some sort of process of the talents of each individual, but looking at it in a broader way and from the standpoint of the student of society, we must uncover in every group what are the outstanding talents, so that when we shall do teamwork (because teamwork is the fundamental characteristic of the operation of the society of the future, not individual effort) we can be certain that each group is functioning to the best of its possibilities and that each group has its fullest opportunities.

In other words, if in the process of our educational activities it develops in the case of a certain individual that his talents are preeminently those of tilling the soil or that of an agriculturist, if you like the term better, then it stands to reason that that individual will be associated with other individuals to form some one or more groups of agriculturists, working in the interests of the church. And just, so sure as that individual unit is combined with other agriculturists, you must consider the activities of the group to discover whether or not they are directed along the line of the combined talents of the group. In other words, when you add to individual effort other individual efforts you get quite a different proposition from that of each individual for himself.

As we organize under the stewardship plan our group of agriculturists, we must be able to analyze what is the effect of the aggregate; and the activities of the group must be so controlled and the group must be so educated that the maximum resultant of the effort of the group is found so that we may have in the group as in the individual the fullest expression of life. Now, I have expressed to you in these words one of the biggest problems of Zion, for agriculture must become the basic activity for the support of the community at large.

When I have read some of the discussions of men whose tendencies are to criticize some of the efforts toward social reform and note how they point out that in socialism and some of the other reforms, initiative will be destroyed and the instinct of curiosity will be hampered, and how this and the other instincts will not be accounted for, I cannot help but wonder if these individuals who are making the criticisms have ever experienced the joy that comes from a full knowledge that your efforts are tending towards the aggrandizement of some one else's interest.

There stand before this church to-day some momentous problems that must be solved, and those problems will require the faculties of our young men and women who fit themselves for service, that they can bring the results of their research back to this people as a contribution to their social welfare, with the idea of self-aggrandizement absolutely eliminated. Let me give you a few of the problems before you.

I take it for granted that you understand the doctrine of stewardships. I take it that you all do. Of course, everybody thinks that his doctrine of stewardships can be put into effect at once, but unfortunately the Lord seems to have placed one individual upon whom he has placed more responsibility than the others in this direction, and I assure you that he feels his responsibility in that particular. If the doctrine of stewardships is to be of any effect, then it follows that every individual must be functioning in the way, as I said a while ago, that God has intended that he should function. In other words, according to the talents that he has. And in all processes of education, we must have that peculiar sifting process that will uncover for us where those talents lie.

I touched a little bit ago upon the question of rural sociology. That, let me repeat, is one of the great problems before the church to-day, for we have seen the country go through the process of a deterioration so far as agriculture is concerned, simply because there has been greater attraction to the agriculturist in other lines; and the laboring man on the farm has gone into more arduous tasks, though less pleasant ones, because he could get shorter hours and bigger pay. We have found people flocking to the cities for that simple reason; yet how simple will be the solving of that great problem when we can put into operation the doctrine of stewardships. Why? Because every man working on the soil will find a keen pleasure in it. Grouped into their community they will have all the pleasures of community life, their churches, their social functions, etc., and there will not be the isolation that is everywhere apparent to-day. One of our problems in the church is to have men studying these problems, so that when we do put into effect the doctrine of stewardships we will have groups that will approximate the highest possible achievement; because it is a group of people working for the interest of the church and for God as well as for humanity.

Then there must be the application of the brains of this church to the study of the problems of social economics on the stewardship basis. The great field of stewardships is so unexplored that our men stand dumfounded, because they do not know how to enter the field. And, not having faith in the very institution they are serving, they hesitate to enter even at the suggestion of those perhaps whose right it might be to suggest, simply because they are entering an unexplored field. Hence perhaps to solve this problem there ought to be a corps of men, and women as well, who are studying these problems, economically and industriously so far as the aspect of stewardships is concerned, with the goal of the church constantly in view.

What shall I say about medicine? I think perhaps no one of you believes more than I do in divine healing, but I do say that some of us have become fanatical along that line and have not used good sense. God has clearly told us there is a field of medicine yet unexplored; and . . . that our people may be nourished by mild herbs, we should explore this field. Medicine is entering a field perhaps unexplored before, in which there is a reversion away from surgery. I am looking forward to the time when there shall be time given to research so that we can carefully analyze and observe the effects of this, that, and the other herb on the human system, so that there shall be a worthy accession to the pharmacopeia of medicine to-day. This, then, ought to challenge the devotion of everyone who has a scientific turn with a desire to benefit mankind. This will not be allied with that form of medicine that will take a man after he is sick and attempt to get him well, but will cast away that theory that perhaps sickness is nature's way of getting rid of the undesirable. We will get rid of giving medicine to those yet unborn by controlling the conditions under which they come into the world. In other words, let us have the medicine of prevention and keep the wolf out of the fold, rather than chase it out after it is in. That is the growing field of medicine. That means a deeper study of botany than we have ever had before.

These are only a few. I must hasten. All these problems, and they are pressing upon us for solution, demand that we shall have an educational system under the control of this church that will guarantee to us the unfoldment of the talents of our people until this church will have in its membership experts in every line of research known to the nations of the world. It means the establishment of college and university.

It means that Graceland, having been placed upon the foundation of a college, and then because of lack of support having been compelled to go back to the position of a junior college, shall eventually, because of the splendid foundation now being laid by those in charge of the school, expand her borders until she shall be known throughout the world because of the splendid spirit of consecration and devotion exhibited by its teachers and instructors. I challenge you to go to any institution in the world and find a finer spirit of consecration and devotion to the service of God than is found in that little institution to-day.

We must have other schools, and perhaps some of you are waking up to the fact that we have here in Independence one of these schools. I refer to the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, founded originally by a small group of individuals who saw the opportunity for them to be of service. A school in which the faculty is without pay and where the tuition is given without a charge, and yet I am told that there are some two hundred and sixty-five students enrolled in that institution to-day. Are you enrolled? I do not care how old you are, are you enrolled? I would advise you to enroll for this reason. Every man and woman of the church ought to be engaged in studying something. A man cannot develop his brain without applying himself to brain exercise. Athletes are made only by rigid application to practice. You ought to be enrolled in that institute; and if you have teaching qualities and you feel that there is something you can give, are you enrolled as one of the faculty? If you have not enrolled and have the ability, you had better enroll. Let me say that I hope that some time the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, as it is now existing, will expand and enlarge until it becomes a college, standard in every way. And that, too, without infringing upon Graceland College, but rather a supplement to and augmentor of the activities of our greater institution.

I hope to see eventually a school of medicine, a school of engineering, a school of art, a school of sculpture, and various things of that kind. Is that dream a foolish one? Perhaps it is. But I shall continue to expect it.

I wish I had time to talk a little about the Religious Education Course at Graceland College. I do know, and Brother Gunsolley and Brother Hopkins will bear testimony, that there is a devoted group of young men and young women who are striving with the utmost of earnestness and zeal to fortify against the coming of the time when they will be asked to go out and teach and preach this gospel.

[The talk closed by an earnest appeal for liberality in donating to the collection for the college, and a generous response was had.]

President Smith Returns from East

President F. M. Smith returned from the East to Independence, on Saturday, December 3. He has been in conference with Bishop McGuire on the problems before the church and will be busy for some time catching up with the accumulated work on his desk.

A Time for Sanity

We must be composed and energetic, with no hysteria or distraction.

We appreciate the very frankly written article in this issue by Bishop B. R. McGuire concerning the state of church finances. It is a most illuminating contribution and could be no clearer in its conclusions. It is timely and forceful.

It looks as though there is no longer any excuse for anyone saying that "Something's wrong, but we don't know just what it is." All that is wrong is that we are running behind in spite of rigid economy in our operations as a church.

All these anxious months these leading men have carried this burden in their hearts, hoping that something might happen to prevent the necessity of making this announcement. The drive in June, with the statements published, indicated the trend. But the conditions have not improved and the people deserved the information. With some misgivings this article has been sent in for publication, for there are always those who become fearful on occasions like this, and becoming panic-stricken, stampede many others. Fear is destructive and we must avoid it. There is no occasion for it in this situation, though we should be concerned and prayerful and energetic.

There is everything in this article to prevent fear and inspire confidence. The personal attitude of the Bishop is that of faith, yet lest the faith of some others might be weakened, he has hesitated.

But when one of our family is ill in a distant place, is it not a duty, even though an unpleasant one, to inform those who love him? To know is not necessarily to worry, but to inspire the question, What shall I do?

No doubt there will be all kinds of reactions. Any of us may be assailed with a conflict of emotions over this situation. We are apt to question. We have a right—yes, a duty—to question, to analyze, to investigate—but there are right ways and wrong ways to proceed. Let us proceed aright. It is important that we do.

It is a time for sanity—a time for composure. A hysterical person can break up a service and become a public nuisance. A zealous but unwise member in a community, whose imagination is the basis for wild guesses and foolish charges, may demoralize the branch.

If further information is desired, we are assured it will be gladly furnished. The books and accounts of the church were perhaps never in more accessible shape and better form. If some would like to study figures and analyze their meanings and require the items that go to make up certain totals, they can be had. It might be well, though, to get the information through the local bishop or agent, if one is available, so he too will have the advantage of the knowledge.

If further discussion is desired on other subjects relating to the situation, send in a letter to that effect, direct to the Presiding Bishopric. What you want may be what many others want, and a frank exchange of opinion on these matters will be helpful to all.

A detailed report of the various items usually published in the HERALD by the bishopric is in the hands of the printers and will be published as soon as possible. It covers the period from July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1921. The names of those contributing, with amounts given, the names of those receiving money, and for what purposes, are included in this report.

It is a natural inclination for us to surmise that if certain things had been done and others left undone, this or that might not have happened. It requires no brain power to make wild statements based on a superficial knowledge or outward appearances. Yet it should not be necessary to waste our time and space answering rumors.

If we allow ourselves to do it, we can begin anywhere and go over the whole field, finding trouble everywhere. This institution is not run right; that person is too extravagant. This action was unwise and that one uncalled for on the part of church officials, and so on.

If we know the facts and are convinced that a mistake has been made or is being made, a frank letter to that effect will be appreciated by any person worthy of responsibility. It may prevent a recurrence of the error or bring out an explanation that will clear the situation. If a better plan or policy is possible, present it, and only appreciation will be expressed.

So we argue that if we happen to be tempted to indulge in vain mental gyrations it would be far better for us to devote the same energy to making ourselves more efficient and faithful in our every duty. It is a time for sane, constructive cooperation.

The Bishop suggests that it may be possible that God is using this as one means to test our qualifications for the Zionite state. If, indeed, he is presenting this Gideon-test so we may demonstrate our right to a place in the triumphant band, let us be worthy.

E. D. M.

Another Attempt to Destroy Manteno Church

Elder Ward L. Christy has been busy in the vicinity of the Deselm Branch, near Manteno, Illinois, where damage was done to the church edifice some weeks ago. He has circulated literature concerning our church and its teachings and announcements for opening of the new church on December 4. He had secured the use of a theater building at Manteno and planned to give lectures on the church.

A few outlaws went to the manager and threatened trouble if he allowed the use of the building to our people, and being intimidated, though previously neutral, he begged to be excused from the contract, and finally refused the use of the place.

On the night of November 29, at about 2 a. m., some person or persons managed to get to the back of the church and set fire to the building, but one of the watchmen on duty (there had been two till about that time) discovered the fire and it was put out with little damage.

In a letter to the First Presidency, Apostle J. F. Curtis reports for November that he has preached twenty-seven times, baptized twenty-one, and confirmed seven. He is holding meetings at Council Bluffs and states that, as a result of two and a half weeks services, twenty-two have been baptized. All except four are adults, and most of them are heads of families. Though there are three revivals going on at the same time, the church is well filled every night. Elder Curtis will continue there for at least a week longer.

The new church was dedicated at Wilburton, Oklahoma, on November 20, with dedicatory sermon by Frederick A. Smith and prayer by J. Arthur Davis. Elder Davis was ordained a high priest by Elder Smith. The new church takes the place of one burned about a year ago. The letter reporting the dedication, which will be published next week, says that of the $1,200 spent on the new building, $365 was donated by nonmembers. The labor was donated by Saints and friends.

Our Christmas Gifts

Let us be liberal with our gifts to God.

The day is near approaching when we celebrate the greatest gift that was ever given in the world, when our heavenly Father "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him need not perish but might have life everlasting." (John 3: 52.)

That gift was also one made by Jesus in voluntarily laying aside the glory once had with the Father to come to earth and live and die for man, that, thereby, man might be brought back again and reconciled to God. He becomes thus in a sense our spiritual father in bringing into life our spiritual possibilities.

If there is one thing above all else for which we should be thankful, it is for the gospel of Jesus Christ, and for this great gift of his life and love.

We are constrained to celebrate birthdays by the giving of gifts. Our children in the Sunday school have come to recognize that this is a day when we should make our gifts unto him so that the Christmas offering has become an established part of the work of the church under the immediate supervision of the Presiding Bishopric. These moneys from the children are to be spent for securing of inheritances for those whose service to the church shows them to be most worthy. It is a big theme and should not be neglected.

But the church is confronted with a great need at present for means to meet the operating expenses. Already, there has been serious curtailment, serious in that it reduces the work of the church and tends to lessen the efficiency of the work that may be done. Further reductions are contemplated and will be made as circumstances demand, even though it means loss to the work of the church which it may take years to recover.

Right now, there is a demand for more missionaries than ever before in our history; right now, there are greater opportunities, yet the financial statement in this issue of the HERALD shows that nothing has been spent for foreign missions since July 1. It is a time when we who are older in years should stop and consider. While we are buying our Christmas gifts, are we considering the tithing that is not a gift, but is due to his work? If all members of the church paid tithing on the amount spent for our personal celebration of Christmas, for our buying of gifts, it would make a considerable sum and would go far towards meeting the present deficit in the receipts of the church.

Is that not worth thinking of? For every dollar spent for others, one dollar should be given to Him. In fact, properly to pay our tithing, only money that is tithed should be spent for gifts, or that which is a luxury, whether food or clothing, or equipment, hence there should be paid one dollar to His church for every nine dollars spent for others.

Many of us will soon be taking our inventory for the year and are determining what tithing we shall pay for the year that is past, but this is a special matter, that tithing should be paid on that which we use to celebrate his natal day.

And why should we necessarily stop with that? In the giving of gifts, why should not his name also be upon our list? A tithe on luxury is only that which is due. A free-will offering is our sign of affection to him in commemoration of this day.

Bishop J. A. Becker, of Zion, reported at the problems meeting at the Stone Church, December 4, that the state of the local finances in the central place was better now than it has been for some years.

What Shall We Buy?

Many of us complain of lack of time, yet each one has all the time there is. In fact, we have eternity before us, even though we are confined within this present life in which we actually live only one day at a time. But each one possesses twenty-four hours to each day, sixty minutes to each hour, sixty seconds to each minute. We spend time, but what are we buying with it?

William James once suggested that he would be all things if he could, a Saint and a high liver, an African explorer and a Greek scholar, an Egyptologist and a great mathematician, a philosopher and a man of the world, a great engineer, an astronomer, but he recognized, in the first place, that some of them are naturally contradictory. A high liver and a Saint cannot find space in the same tabernacle of clay. One cannot be a lover of pleasure in the worldly sense and at the same time a true lover of God. In the second place, we cannot be all things at one time. In eternity, we may achieve our dreams of a lifetime, but now we must choose that which is most worth while.

On the bargain counter of life, there are scattered many baubles and many articles of value. The price is the same. Our life is asked in exchange.

Jesus, the Christ, referred to the kingdom of heaven as a great treasure hid in a field which, when one had found, he would go and sell all that he had and buy that field. He also compared the kingdom of heaven to a goodly pearl, and a merchant who knows good pearls, finding, would sell all that he had, all of his lesser pearls, and all of his goods in order that he might possess that one pearl. On the bargain counter of life that pearl of great price is to be found. Beside it is the glittering glass of worldly pleasures. The price on each is the same, our time, a life of devotion. Which shall we buy?

More Riots in Jerusalem

A recent letter from Elder Harry Passman, at Jerusalem, indicates that the smoldering hatred in the breasts of the Arabs towards the Jews breaks out periodically and with distressing results.

Following the riots in Jaffa last May, when immigration was stopped and afterwards limited to certain classes, there had been a partial resumption of confidence. Some property was changing hands, a few buildings were being erected, and conditions were generally favorable. Peace and safety seemed assured.

But about October 22 the news began to spread that plans were being made by the Arabs for a demonstration in commemoration of the Balfour Declaration. The idea was to proclaim to the government that it was an occasion for mourning by the Arab population because of the contents of the Balfour Declaration. It was to be nation-wide.

It seems that the district governors sought to anticipate such an event in various ways, but in spite of this there was a mild outbreak that intensified in proportion until as a result shops were broken into and rifled and among the Jews there were six killed and twenty-six wounded, six of these mortally wounded.

To quote from Brother Passman's letter:

"The brutalities of the ancient savages were equaled and even surpassed on this occasion. One living here can sense the meaning of the prophecy made by the angel: 'Ishmael's hand shall be against every man, and every man's hand against him.' These are the children of Ishmael, and the prophecy is surely having its fulfillment in them."

Martial law was declared and no one allowed on the streets of the old city after five p. m. or outside of this area after six p. m. There was considerable military activity, and some desultory firing was heard. There is considerable demand for the removal of the local governor, Mr. Storrs.

Later the restrictions were modified and an eight o'clock curfew arranged, but some of the Arabs who had lost friends in the shooting have made considerable disturbance and the Jews live in constant fear of another outbreak. Brother Passman says living there just now is much like living in the front line trenches during the war, and that some of our poor members are destitute, since business is practically paralyzed.

New Indian Organization

At the Central Church in Kansas City, Missouri, on November 27, an organization was effected, made up of Indians and those of Indian blood. William Madison, of Independence, was chosen president; Curtis Pequano, vice president; Mrs. H. G. Hart, secretary-treasurer. A membership committee of five has been appointed, with William Madison chairman and a social committee of four, with Mrs. W. E. Haden chairman.

Meetings will be held frequently for the time being.

Their objects as adopted are as follows:

"To promote and cooperate with all efforts looking to the advancement of the Indians (especially in Greater Kansas City), social, intellectual, commercial, political.

"To promote citizenship and to obtain the rights thereof.

"To exercise the right to oppose any movement that may be detrimental to the race.

"To permit free discussion on all subjects bearing on the welfare of the race.

"To direct its energies exclusively to general principles and universal interests, and not allow itself to be used for any personal or private interests."

In a letter received, we have a comment from a pastor as follows: "I received a splendid token of respect and appreciation from the A— Saints for my week's work there, in the form of a nice useful present. Why is it, the less a fellow does, the more he is appreciated? In all my hard and difficult labors, I have done in and around B—, there has never been contributed as much as one spoonful of gas or oil to my expenses, and I am sure I never worked harder in my life anywhere than there. Now, while I was at C— only three weeks, they paid my fare both ways (over $20), and made me a present of a suit of clothes and shoes. If "By this ye may know my disciples" is a true test, B— hasn't many "disciples."

A branch has been organized at Hutchinson, Kansas. R. J. Wildey was ordained an elder. They have a favorable outlook for good work in that community.

Many of the Saints will be interested in learning that Mark Gibbs was baptized at Priestly Road Branch, Birmingham, England, on August 27. He was born at Eatington, Warwickshire, England, October 29, 1837.

Congress adjourned before Thanksgiving. One of the bills that may prove of particular interest to us was that signed by President Harding before adjournment, the Sheppard-Towner Maternity Bill.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Financial Situation in the Church

By the Presiding Bishop

A statement of facts and figures as they affect church progress.

As the weeks have passed since we issued detailed statements and figures from this office regarding the state of

In view of the downward trend of church finances during the past months, some have suggested that we are too optimistic, too serene and hopeful; but if to have faith in the triumph of God's work on earth, faith in the devotion of his people and their willingness to go to the limit in every good work, is a fault, we confess our guilt. From our experience with the Saints of the church we are confident that if they but understand the situation fully and know the methods employed to meet it, and have an out-

BALANCE SHEET, NOVEMBER 1, 1921

ASSETS

CURRENT:

Cash on hand and in banks—General Fund.....	$ 9,884.50
Certificates of Deposit	13,510.96
Cash retained by bishops and agents	34,255.68
Liberty Bonds and W. S. Stamps.....	125,034.38
Notes receivable	96,654.03
Contracts receivable, real estate	62,410.46
Accounts receivable	56,582.64
Real estate subject to sale.....	108,484.75

Total current assets $ 506,817.40

INVESTMENTS

General Fund

$ 63,406.38

Special funds

Cash in banks	$ 32,063.93
Liberty bonds	6,975.82
Investments	17,625.00
Cash retained—bishops and agents	7,362.29

Total special fund assets $ 64,027.04

PERMANENT

Land and buildings	$2,128,131.54
Machinery and equipment	15,637.35
Furniture and fixtures	25,227.10
Libraries	8,737.18

Total permanent assets $2,177,733.17

Total assets $2,811,983.99

LIABILITIES AND NET WORTH

CURRENT

Notes payable	$ 185,304.65
Accounts payable	31,147.74
Special fund loans to general fund	312,643.27

Total current liabilities $ 529,095.66

NET WORTH

Special fund reserve	$ 64,027.04
Surplus	2,218,861.29

Total net worth *$2,282,888.33

Total liabilities and net worth $2,811,983.99

*This figure does not include the net worth of the Herald Publishing House, Graceland College, and Independence Sanitarium.

the church finances (see Bishop's Number, SAINTS' HERALD, June 21, 1921), and the situation has not improved, we feel that it is due the Saints that we repeat some of the things said at that time, with the addition of the further items which will bring them to date.

line of our most essential and imminent needs, they will respond nobly and fully.

Some features of the program already decided upon by the church in conference capacity will have to wait for a season. There will be unavoidable curtailment in our church plans, but we must go on. We cannot stop. The glory of this "marvelous work and a wonder" which has at the hands of an angel of God been set up in these last days must not wane. A work of eternal importance, fraught with tremendous possibilities, has been begun for deal so much with the material aspects of our work it may sometimes be obscured): The true basis of all success in this church is not essentially the number of dollars we turn into its coffers, but it is the degree of spirituality and intelligent consecration that we attain. In other words, we

STATEMENT OF INCOME AND EXPENDITURES

July 1, 1921, to November 1, 1921.

INCOME

CHURCH FUNDS

Tithing	$ 57,834.11
Offerings	10,083.17
Consecrations	1,117.85
Miscellaneous income—bishops and agents	584.68
Foreign missions	173.52
Interest earned	2,424.35
Dividends earned	35.00
Commissions earned	15.00

$ 72,267.68

LESS: EXPENDITURES

Family allowances	$ 83,928.82
Elders' expense	18,715.65
Aid extended	4,538.24
Miscellaneous expense—bishops and agents	585.02
Admin. expense—church offices	17,049.01
Admin. expense—stakes and bishops and agents.....	2,264.33
General expense—church offices	1,123.03
General church expense	5,133.50
Foreign mission expense	None
Interest paid—consecration contracts	1,523.50

$ 134,861.10

Excess of expenditures over income

$62,593.42

REAL ESTATE

Income from sales	$ 6,640.61
Interest earned—real estate contracts	553.11
Rents earned	6,541.48
Miscellaneous income	270.00

$ 14,005.20

LESS EXPENDITURES

Farm lands	$ 261.76
Houses and lots	7,144.41
Reserved property	980.92
Church edifices	42.99

$ 8,430.08

Excess of income over expenditures.

$5,575.12

CHURCH INSTITUTIONS

Contributions for	$ 620.08
Less expenditures	14,192.99

Excess of expenditure over income

$13,572.91

Net operating deficit (for 4 mos.)

$70,591.21

humanity, and it must not be retarded. Yet to go forward means that we shall in unity see the way and walk therein with confidence towards victory.

At the outset, let us reemphasize a sentiment which has always been fundamental with us (though from having to are convinced that upon true conversion and personal consecration to our highest ideals must be reared the spiritual structure that God can eventually utilize in the building of the New Jerusalem. However, we are further of the opinion that such spirituality, such consecration, will manifest itself in a most tangible way in contributions to the cause that the divinely designed machinery of the church may operate efficiently.

Into the hands of this church has been placed the responsibility of carrying the blessings of the everlasting gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. Much is expected of us, because from him to whom much is given, is much required.

The demands and opportunities were never greater for the preaching of the gospel. The testimony of the missionaries of the church to-day is almost universally to the effect that never in all their experiences has there been such an interest in the gospel as restored in these latter days. Every missionary knows how utterly inadequate is our force of men in the field as compared to the calls for the preaching of the gospel. One or two men in a very large territory where a hundred or more could with advantage operate, is all too often our predicament to-day. Our foreign fields are as yet practically untouched.

The church has plenty of willing workers to send out into the field, but its hands are tied for want of finances with which to support their families. Never before, it seems, have we had so many men and women who are willing and anxious to consecrate their talents, their very lives, in service to the cause we love.

In addition to the missionary force of the church there are the administrative officers and helps. The church has been growing and branching out into new fields of activity and usefulness. The time of preparation for the gathering is upon us, and the work that is being done, and which will yet have to be done, to attain our Zionite ideals is great, and some of it urgent. The institutions of the church are growing as a result of the increased demands made upon them. All this has necessitated from time to time an increase in the number of general officers of the church, in the number of assistants, and in equipment with which to do their office work.

With the enthusiasm and fervor typical of our people, who have all faith in the ultimate triumph of the work, we have as a church attempted not only to perform the duties devolving upon us in the immediate demands of our church program, but we have tried to build for the future, extend our borders, and strengthen the cords of Zion.

The dollars and cents side of our church work has frequently been discussed. In the special number of the HERALD of June 21 we showed by a number of tables, graphs, and articles, the details of our finances. Perhaps it will not be necessary to repeat them here, though they should be considered by those who have not already studied them carefully.

From the financial statements appearing with this article it will be seen that the present net worth of the church is $2,282,888.33.

Also that the cost of operation during July, August, September, and October, 1921, exceeded the operating income during that period by $70,591.21. This amount, with the operating deficit for the year ended June 30, 1921, of approximately $100,000, makes a total operating loss during the past sixteen months of approximately $170,000.

In order to secure the necessary cash to meet this operating shortage, instead of disposing of our Liberty Bonds and other quickly convertible interest-bearing assets, we have borrowed from time to time the necessary cash from the Auditorium and other special funds by setting apart sufficient of such interest-bearing assets as will repay the loans, so that when it is decided to proceed with the construction of the Auditorium the money will be available for that purpose.

However, there is a limit beyond which we should not go in drawing upon current assets, and it appears to us we have reached that limit. Unless our future revenue equals our expense we shall be forced to the alternative of correspondingly reducing our expenses or disposing of or mortgaging some of our reserve real estate holdings.

We should consider in connection with the figures shown herewith the personal assets in the hands of consecrated Saints. Many of these have professed a willingness to devote their entire resources, if need be, that the work might not suffer.

Then there is the intangible, though very real, asset of devotion in the hearts of the Saints at large which will not lend itself to tabulation, yet it is a mine of potentiality.

So, though the figures indicate a serious situation which demands prompt and united action, the possibility of these assets should not be overlooked.

The present situation is as though one of us should be thrown out of employment and for a time had to live on his savings. We might have to use up our savings; we would cut expenses to the minimum; we might even have to mortgage our home; but we would still cling to the fundamental demands of family life. It would mean inconvenience and discomfort. It would mean a problem to solve—many of them—but is it not in the solution of problems that we acquire strength and test our mental and spiritual qualities?

Is it not possible that according to the attitude and ability we manifest in solving this present problem we shall personally demonstrate our fitness for dwelling in a perfected Zionite state? Which is not to say there shall not be the usual quota of other trials nor that we shall escape the judgments coming on the earth, but we only suggest that this may be one of the features of the sifting process.

Perhaps we would all agree that—

We must not disrupt our missionary force.

We must not exact real hardship of their families.

We must heed the cries of the poor and needy.

We must maintain our church institutions, such as the homes for the children and the aged, the Sanitarium, and Graceland College.

We must make strenuous efforts to maintain our program.

As individuals and families we should at least—

1. Reduce our expenditures by frugality and economy in every way.

2. Increase our income inasmuch as righteous and efficient endeavor will do so.

3. Render unto the Lord his portion (the tithe) and sacrifice that we may bring liberal offerings to the support of the work.

From our department you may expect a vigorous and constant elimination of all unnecessary expenses, and a consistent effort to keep the Saints informed.

In various ways it is necessary to retrench—to cut expenses. We are required to forego for a time some of our most cherished plans, but we believe there are certain points beyond which you would not have us go. There are various assets had by the church upon which you would not have us draw.

So let us reiterate that there is every reason for faith and confidence, but an imperative need for sacrifice by all. Yet it must be done willingly. We depend on those who are convinced of the necessity for sacrifice; on those actuated by the true and living ideals of the gospel.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Armageddon

By John H. Betz

Interesting though speculative views on the subject by an interested nonmember.

Although the battle of Armageddon is referred to several places in the Scriptures, it is mentioned by name in only one of these, namely in Revelation 16:16. Here it is mentioned in connection with the sixth plague, which is described in verses 12-16, and in order to understand the battle of Armageddon, it is necessary to understand the sixth plague as well. In fact, the battle of Armageddon is identical with the sixth plague.

True, a battle has been fought on the site of Armageddon, but the battle already fought there no more fills the requirements of prophetic scripture than did the sixteen false saviors fulfill the scriptural prophecies regarding the true Messiah.

The explanation of the subject, therefore, resolves itself into four questions; namely:

1. Where is Armageddon?
2. Who are the conflicting parties—the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet?
3. How are they gathered; or what is meant by the spirits of devils working miracles?
4. Why are they gathered; or what is meant by the drying up of the River Euphrates to prepare the way of the kings of the East?

Location of the Place

First: Where is Armageddon? The place is included in the meaning of the name itself. Armageddon comes from two Greek words—asa, a mount, and meyyidor—Megiddo—Mount Megiddo. Mount Megiddo is fifty miles north of Jerusalem and at its foot the battle of Armageddon will be fought. This fact is carried out by other texts, one of which reads: "Let the heathen be wakened and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat," etc. (Joel 3:12.)

The valley of Jehoshaphat, or plain of Esdraelon, lies at the foot of Mount Megiddo. The word Megiddo means "place of crowds." The prophet says, "Multitudes, multitudes, in the valley of decision," etc. (Joel 3:14.) The "valley of Jehoshaphat" means the "valley of the judgment of Jehovah." The prophet says: "for there will I [God] sit to judge the heathen [Revised Version, nations] round about . . . the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." (Joel 3:12, 14.)

Who Are Conflicting Participants?

These texts also show that the battle of Armageddon takes place at the second coming of Christ. As the place of Armageddon is quite generally understood, we will now pass on to the next question.

Second: Who are the conflicting parties—the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet?

(a) Who is the dragon?

In Revelation 12:9 Satan is called the dragon. In the first part of Revelation 12, the dragon represents pagan (civil) Rome, which destroys the man child (Christ) which the woman (the church) brings forth. In Revelation 13 the dragon again represents pagan (civil) Rome, as distinguished from the beast (papal Rome). As paganism is Satan's most visible manifestation on earth, the dragon could therefore be taken to represent paganism in general. In the text (Revelation 16:12-16) the dragon therefore would represent the kings of the East—Japan, China, India, etc., of the heathen.

Who Is the Beast?

(b) Who is the beast?

The beast referred to in the text is the principal and practically the only beast mentioned in Revelation. It is described in Revelation 13:1-10. This beast is identical with the fourth beast of Daniel 7, when controlled by the little horn described in Daniel 7:25. Both are described alike.

Commentators are agreed that in Daniel 7 the lion represents Babylon; the bear, Medo-Persia; the leopard, Greece; the fourth beast, Rome (civil); and the ten horns the nations of Europe after the fall of civil Rome. The little horn would represent the next great power that arose among those divisions; namely, the papacy.

Since the description of the beast in Revelation 13:1-10 is identical with that of the little horn in Daniel 7:25, we conclude, therefore, that the beast of Revelation 13:1-10 and hence the beast mentioned in our text (Revelation 16:13) is the papacy, especially during the time it held its power over the nations of Europe.

At the time of Armageddon, the papacy will again hold its power over Europe, for we read: "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind and shall give their power and strength unto the beast." (Revelation 17:12, 13.)

Who Is the False Prophet?

(c) Who is the false prophet?

In Revelation 19:20 we read that the false prophet wrought miracles before the beast with which he deceived them that received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image. In Revelation 13:11-18 this power is called "another beast." It is not the first beast nor any of its divisions—the nations of Europe—but another beast. It did not arise out of the sea of peoples (Revelation 17:15), but out of the earth, the uninhabited land.

The only nation to which the description can apply is America. The American nation did not arise out of the ruins of other nations, but grew up where none had been. It is the false prophet because it worked miracles to deceive. (Revelation 13:14.) It is the false prophet because as Protestant it claims to be a reformation from the first beast (Romanism), but is really going back to do the work of the first beast. (Verse 12.)

While we have not space to identify the false prophet more fully, it might be well to state that the miracles to deceive have been and will be fulfilled by spiritualism in its various forms. Spiritualism in modern times began with the Fox sisters, in the home of John D. Fox, Hydesville, New York, in 1848, and has spread with wonderful rapidity throughout the earth, now numbering its devotees by millions. It is further described as a latter-day power in 2 Thessalonians 2:7-12.

Hence in summing up, we see that the opposing parties at Armageddon are: (a) The dragon, or the kings of the East—Japan, China, India, etc.; (b) the beast, or the papacy controlling the nations of Europe; (c) the false prophet, or America.

How Gathered?

Third: How are they gathered; or what is meant by the spirits of devils working miracles going forth to the kings of the earth and gathering them together to battle?

Here again spiritualism does its deceptive work. In fact, as to its part in producing the past war, and its continuance, we have indisputable evidence that the Kaiser held continued seances with the famous German medium, Augusta Schoen, and other powerful mediums. On one occasion the spirit of his grandfather, who established the German Empire, was called up. Many of these seances were held at a time when Hindenburg and Von Falkenhayn were present. Also at the time the Czar was deposed it was discovered that he was holding seances with the famous spiritualist medium, Rasputin. Rasputin was at once put to death and the Czar deposed.

There we have two opposing parties, both urged on with the hope of success by "the spirits of devils." Having through these views chloroformed reason, aroused selfish ambition, and filled over fifty million homes with sorrow, spiritualism now comes sweetly forth offering consolation for the bereaved.

Again, spiritualism will help to unite the kings of the earth in battle at Armageddon.

Fourth: Why are they gathered; or what is meant by the River Euphrates being dried up to prepare the way of the kings of the East?

Since we have seen that the kings of the East are Japan, China, India, etc., we can proceed with the discussion of the other phrases.

Drying Up of the Euphrates

(a) What is meant by the drying up of the Euphrates?

In the first place, there is nothing about the River Euphrates which would prevent the armies from the East from crossing it. It has been crossed and recrossed many times before. In Isaiah 8, the waters of the river were used to illustrate the armies of the king of Assyria, who occupied the territory along the river at that time.

In the text before us, the river is used to represent the Turkish power which has occupied that territory in modern times. Also in Revelation 9:12-21 the Turkish power is symbolized as the sixth trumpet, or second woe. In verse 14 of this chapter, this woe is represented as being let loose from the River Euphrates. From this place the Turkish power, after the fall of the Saracan power on July 27, 1449, spread into Europe like a flood and held independent sway, afflicting the Catholic nations of Europe for nearly four hundred years.

At last on August 11, 1840, the Turkish power was subdued and lost its independence. The only reason why his government was not wholly abolished at that time was because the nations of Europe could not agree as to who was to have the territory. But since that time his empire has been dwindling away or drying up. One petty kingdom and then another has been broken off and built in between the rival nations and the coveted prize. The past war has further greatly decreased his territory.

But the Turk, whether assisted or unassisted, will yet make a mighty effort to preserve his empire, especially in Asia.

In Daniel 11, the Turk is symbolized as the king of the north, being the northern division of the empire of Alexander the Great, the first king of Greece. (Daniel 11:4, 40.) In verses 44 and 45 we read concerning the same power: "But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace [temporary government] between the seas [the Dead Sea, the Sea of Galilee, and the Mediterranean] in the glorious holy mountain [at Jerusalem]; yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." In this text we see that the king of the north (the Turk) will have "come to his end." Then the river Euphrates will have been "dried up." This is said to prepare the way of the kings of the East.

Rising of the Asiatics

(b) What is meant by preparing the way of the kings of the east? or how does the wiping out of the Turkish Government prepare the way for Japan, China, India, etc., to come up to the battle of Armageddon?

In America we have the Monroe Doctrine for the Americans. In Europe the same sentiment is cherished in regard to the Turk. The Turk does not belong in Europe, but in the Euphrates valley in Asia. So, when the Turks' empire is taken away, not only in Europe but also in Asia, could we not expect Asiatics to carry out the desire of having Asia for the Asiatics, and come up to Armageddon to defend their rights in Asia?

In the same connection the prophet says: "Let the heathen be wakened." (Joel 3:12.) If anyone has any doubt as to the heathen being wakened at this time, let him consider a few remarks of Professor P. C. Chang, China's representative at the World's Christian Citizenship Conference, held at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, November 9 to 16, 1919.

In the report of Professor Chang we have a most startling presentation of the threatening danger in the Far East. Until the decision of the peace conference at Paris, regarding Shantung, the Chinese had thought the principles of right would prevail, but they are now convinced, according to Professor Chang, that they must put themselves in a position to depend not upon others, but upon themselves for the obtaining of their rights.

For this reason fifty thousand students of China organized and opposed Japan's position regarding Shantung, both by lectures and by publications. Professor Chang also stated that the thousand students in the school of which he is principal were receiving military training, and that he had urged upon the thousand that they each lead out as he had done in the training of one thousand more apiece, who in turn would reach four hundred more, and thus would be reached the four hundred million of China's population.

He warned his hearers that with one fourth of the world Chinese, the only hope for peace was a peaceful and contented China.

Nations Preparing for Armageddon

So we see by all these things that the nations are fast preparing for Armageddon. Truly "the day of the Lord is near." (Joel 3:14.) Soon the king of the north (the Turk) will leave Europe and make his final stand at Jerusalem. When he comes to his end, "the time of trouble" will begin. (Daniel 12:1.) Then Armageddon will soon follow. But before that time, at the beginning of the plagues, Michael (Christ) will stand up (Daniel 12:1), and probation will have ceased, for we read concerning the seven last plagues that they are "the wine of the wrath of

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE FAMINE IN RUSSIA

The suffering in Russia from famine must be indeed intense. Regardless of political views, those who are able should feel ready to give every possible support to the effort being made to feed the children in that great famine area, as well as those who are older, if possible. We have seen much discussion of the causes of this shortage, but the one which appeals to us as the most accurate, appears in the Manchester Guardian Weekly of September 23. It is there pointed out that the Russian peasant does not go very far in the case of famine. If he moves fifty miles, it is a considerable journey. Only a few would be able to get five hundred miles away to Moscow and still fewer could possibly get outside of Russia. Most of the evacuation trains have been taking the refugees eastward to Siberia, but it is unlikely that more than one half million can be moved within the year, out of a population of from twenty to thirty millions.

The causes are quite clearly set forth in the following extract:

"The main causes of the famine are the excessive heat and drought of the summer months. The following figures relating to the Government of Samara are supplied by the president of the Samara Soviet, and are probably accurate. They show how much more unfavorable the weather has been this year, as compared with other years:

Average Temperature of the Air (Centigrade)

	April	May	June
"Average for the last 17 years....	6.4	16.2	23.7
"This year	12.4	24.7	31.1

Rainfall (in Millimeters)

"Average for last 17 years.....	27	38.8	46.9
"This year	1.7	0.3	5.1

"But other causes have intensified the disaster—the Great War, the Revolution, and, most of all, the interventionist policy of England, France, America, and the Russian monarchists that postponed Russia's recovery from war and revolution, devastated some of her richest provinces, cut her off from foreign supplies, kept great numbers of her workmen in unproductive employment, and absorbed what little transport the Great War had left her. The famine would have been terrible enough by reason of the drought alone, but because of these things many thousands of Russians who would otherwise have survived are doomed to a death of starvation.

"Koltchak and Denikin requisitioned thoroughly, and the Red Army requisitioned equally thoroughly. Neither Koltchak nor Denikin ever reached Samara, but the Red Army

God . . . without mixture"; that is, without mercy or probation. (Revelation 14:10.) Already at the beginning of the plagues the divine fiat will have gone forth: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And behold, I come quickly [or soon, but not at once]. (Revelation 22:11, 12.)

This divine fiat goes forth at the beginning of the seven last plagues which occupy a year. (Compare Revelation 18:8 with Numbers 14:34, and Ezekiel 4:6.)

So, knowing that the time is short and uncertain, let us, dear reader, "prepare to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord." (Ezekiel 13:5.)

did, and that is one reason why the famine began before the drought. The Red Army took nearly all the grain that had been laid aside for days of shortage, and when the peasants of Samara province rose against the requisitionings the insurrection was suppressed with much bloodshed."

HENRY MORGENTHAU AND ZIONISM

The following discussion taken from The Chosen People, explains the different classes of Jews that are to be found among us to-day, having radically different ideas. These are only the three main classes, because The Chosen People is printed by Jews who have been converted to Christianity.

In the light of these different classes, Mr. Morgenthau's objections to Zionism are more easily understood, as well as the attitude of other Jews who favor or disfavor that project, and why:

A great deal of attention has been paid to the Jew recently by the general press of America. Daily papers, weeklies, and monthlies have had something to say about the Jew. Books have appeared, some praising the Jew and some denouncing him, as suited best the whims and fancies of the writers. But as the Jew does not understand the Christian, so these writers do not understand the Jew. The central figure of the last publications about the Jew is Mr. Henry Morgenthau.

A few months ago an article by Mr. Morgenthau appeared in The World's Work. In it he wrote that Zionism is a fallacy and impossible of realization. These two points, fallacy and impossibility, are the substance of his long article. Mr. Morgenthau's achievements in the world of statesmanship, education, and benevolence, have given him a position and influence both among Jews and Gentiles, so that whatever he says is made prominent and is considered by many people as highly authoritative. Mr. Morgenthau had the distinction of being the American Ambassador to Turkey at the time the war broke out, and acquitted himself with credit and honor during those difficult days in Constantinople. He was also honored by President Wilson when he was sent to investigate the massacres in Poland; he is connected with many Jewish benevolent societies and educational movements.

But it will throw much light, and it will be a great help to our readers to remember that Mr. Morgenthau does not represent the Jews or Jewish thought in any capacity whatever, nor can any individual Jew, from the very nature of the conditions now existing among the Jews, speak authoritatively for the nation. There are among the Jews three main classes or sects, the Orthodox Jews, the Reformed Jews, and the Chasidim. The first class is strictly religious, professing belief in the entire Old Testament, observing the Jewish religion as far as is possible for them to carry it into practice, and believing in the restoration of the Jews to their own country according to God's promise and according to the prayers which they repeat daily from their Prayer Books. But at the same time a good many of them believe that something ought to be done to bring about the fulfillment of God's promise; hence, their interest in Zionism. The Reformed Jews are of a directly opposite class; they have no mention of the Messiah or the restoration in their Prayer Book, they do not accept the Scriptures as the Word of God, they have a form of religion but without life in it; they have adopted the higher critic's attitude toward the Bible. The Chasidim are really the cream of Judaism. They are more than the name Orthodox would imply. They believe and pray fervently for the coming of the Messiah and the restoration of Israel to Palestine; but they are not interested in Zionism for two reasons: One is that the leaders of Zionism are not religious; the other is that it is a man-made movement, and they believe that the Messiah must come first and through him God himself will bring about the return of the Jews to their Promised Land. Therefore, they are waiting for God's working power without man's institution.

Reformed Jews Reject Zionism

Mr. Morgenthau belongs to the second sect, the Reformed Jews, who, with rare exceptions, have been scorning, denouncing, and condemning Zionism. The Reformed Jew, therefore, does not represent the average Jew. It is no new idea that Mr. Morgenthau presents in his article. Ever since Zionism began it has been looked down upon by the Reformed Jews. The reason for this is very simple; only the Bible and the Jewish Prayer Book contain the teachings and predictions concerning the restoration of the Jews to Palestine; therefore, the Orthodox Jew and the sect known as the Chasidim both have an interest in Palestine, because both of these classes have at least a traditional belief in their Bible and in their Prayer Book. But the Reformed Jew believes neither the Bible nor the Prayer Book, and, therefore, would naturally ridicule any thought of a Palestine restoration or indeed of any supernatural intervention of God in the redeeming of his oath-bound covenants. He is neither Christian, nor Jew; he is a plain worldly man imitating other civilized peoples among whom he sojourns. He goes to synagogue because it is fashionable among society people. He may be active in some benevolent enterprises because it is an honor to do so; he seeks the plaudits of the world, and not of God. Now is there any wonder that Mr. Morgenthau or any Reformed Jew would write such an article?

No Common Ground

In discussing Mr. Morgenthau's position, we may be wasting time, because as a matter of fact we do not start out on any common ground. Mr. Morgenthau apparently denies the supernatural element in Israel's history, in God's dealing with the Jewish nation, and indeed with the entire human race. To Mr. Morgenthau the divinely inspired predictions of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and all the other prophets whom God sent with his solemn message, are but the "lofty aspirations" of well-intentioned men. With a man who makes such a statement concerning the Word of God, we have no discussion, for he is trying to argue that black is white, and tries to deny the extremely evident fact of the miraculous existence of his own nation. He fails apparently to realize that every step of the road, as we follow Jewish history, is marked with miracles, miracles, miracles.

The whole question simmers down to the all-important one, "Shall we believe God or shall we believe human reason?" We admit freely that to the human mind it is impossible to imagine the Jews as a nation once more established in Palestine and ruling under the Messiah a righteous rule over all the earth. To the carnal mind this is impossible; but we are dealing now with an all-powerful and a supernatural God, the God who created the heavens and the earth, the sun, the moon, and the stars, and the God who said, "If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord." (Jeremiah 31: 37.) In other words, the restoration of the Jews to their own land is linked with the eternal destinies of heaven itself, and with the unimpeachable verities of God's promises. If every nation of the world were opposed to the Jews' return to Palestine, if the land of Palestine were to turn suddenly into nothing but rocks, it would still be true just the same, but some day God will bring the Jews back to their land and make that land fruitful and the beauty spot of the world, simply because God has so promised. This requires the eye of faith to see and to believe.

Miracles of Recent War

Another thought here is worth considering, which Mr. Morgenthau seems to have overlooked, and that is the truly miraculous events that already have occurred since 1914, to bring about the possibility of Jewish restoration. It must be remembered that not a single nation that went to war in 1914 ever dreamed of a liberated Palestine as one of the objectives of the war; in all of the state papers that have been issued by each of the nations at war, not a single document exists which has in it a reference to Palestine as being one of the objectives of the war; and yet out of this war, the most terrific in history, there has resulted only one constructive measure—the securing of Palestine to the Jews. The war was fought in order to conquer Germany, and, in the words of our former President, "to make the world safe for democracy." To-day, the whole world stands disillusioned, and realizes that Germany has not been conquered and the world has not been made safe for democracy; only a few days ago, James M. Beck, one of the most prominent international lawyers of America, in a speech before the American Bar Association, sounded a warning to the world and told how demoralized the whole world had become, that we had been set back at least one thousand years, and that vice, greed, anarchy were rampant on every side. What a collapse to our bubble dreams of only a few years ago!

Shall Massacres Continue?

There is also one more thing to be said, and this has to do with Mr. Morgenthau's indifference to the pathetic plight of the eight million Jews now in European countries; most of them are in Russia and Poland, and are undergoing the butcheries and terrors of a hell indescribable; they cannot come to America for relief, because America has now restricted immigration; they cannot go to England, because England does not want them; where shall they go? According to Mr. Morgenthau's idea they should remain where they are until they are entirely killed out. Cannot Mr. Morgenthau realize that to such poor haunted and hunted Jews a restored Palestine under a British Mandate offers the best solution at the present time?

But to go back to our Scripture foundation. The present Zionist movement, although founded without faith in the Bible and without faith in God, must, nevertheless, continue until the Jews as a nation shall be again established in Jerusalem, for the simple reason that the Scriptures must be fulfilled. The Jews as a nation crucified the Lord Jesus Christ in Jerusalem, and therefore the Jews must again become a nation in order to crown the Lord Jesus Christ as their king when he comes to save them from the great trouble that is awaiting them in Jerusalem. They crucified him as a nation and they must crown him as a nation. They crucified him in Jerusalem and they must crown him in Jerusalem. The children of God who study the Scriptures and have already observed the wonderful movement through this latest war towards the carrying on of God's plan, look upon these days as the beginning of the end and lift up their heads with joy in their souls, for though they realize that there is much of sorrow and tribulation in them for Israel, yet they bring the beginning of that time which will give peace and rest to the world, and above all they are reminded that the coming of our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, is near at hand.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Try the Spirits

By Ralph W. Farrell

Elder Farrell pays his compliments to some of the popular cults and schools of thought, convinced that many of them are vastly deceptive in influence.

The worst kind of deception is self-deception. No man is so wise that he is above making mistakes, but when others suffer because of his mistakes it is time to raise the flag of caution and call a halt. The more I study the theories of men, expressed often from the pulpit as well as in books, the more I appreciate the fact that the writers of the New Testament were endowed with a great degree of inspiration, and furnish valuable instruction.

Popularity of Healing Cults

On Sunday last I visited our Central Church in Kansas City, and had the pleasure of listening to an address given by Brother Smurthwaite, which was one of the best I had ever listened to. At the close of the service, while walking to the public library, I passed the Unity School of Healing. On its record I noticed the names of Saints who had through curiosity or interest paused to lightly or deeply investigate its claim of mental healing. Passing on I came to the Christian Scientist church, in front of which, and extending many blocks in different directions, were numerous automobiles, the property of worshipers in the building dedicated to healing from the delusion of mortal error. Here was food for thought, and as I walked I cogitated as follows: These people are sincere? Yes. Will they always be satisfied with a belief that is based on a mixture of scriptural teachings radically interpreted by the words of Mrs. Eddy, and the mystical doctrines of the Orient? What will be the end of it? The answer came: The time will come when of the thousands who to-day or to-morrow worship in the midst of glitter, diamonds, and luxurious dresses, expensive automobiles, and the obsession that such paraphernalia constitute a necessary part of their religion, hundreds will some day take a more careful survey of what the soul really desires, and tiring of tinsel and glitter, pomp and pride, will seek for a people who live together in simplicity and whose creed is the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. And if we as a church measure up to this demand, these seekers will come to us.

Sincerity Alone May Only Blind

Then came another thought—though we grant that these people are sincere in their belief, yet we know that sincerity of itself is not sufficient to form a foundation on which to build; for a man can be sincere in believing a falsehood to be true. Certainly the Indian mother who kisses her child and throws it to the crocodile as a sacrifice, is sincere, but her belief is not founded on truth; it can hardly be in harmony with the will of God. Sincerity is a beautiful trait of character, and will be rewarded; but there is a deathless law of "cause and effect," referred to in the Doctrine and Covenants in these words, "Except ye be sanctified by the law of Christ ye must inherit another kingdom." So these sincere heathens cannot inherit the kingdom of Christ until they have been sanctified by the law of Christ.

This is true of people who do not call themselves heathens; it is true of me as an individual. If I am not sanctified by the law of Christ I must inherit another kingdom. Why attempt to deceive myself by entertaining the thought that I can be an exception to the divine rule? God is God. His law cannot be changed or broken. Some men who feel confident that they will pass into that heavenly place will find at last a flaming sword dropping between them and the tree of life. It is dangerous to take too much for granted.

I am happy in the thought, however, that God has provided a way whereby the "heathen" in the life to come shall be taught those things which are essential to his advancement towards the goal of eternal happiness.

But what of the living? If we assume that the perfect plan originated (if it originated at all) through or in harmony with the mind of God, then other plans of salvation, of necessity differing, are imperfect in effect. The Lord, who is the author of our salvation, certainly provided means by which men could be brought in contact with this plan and made conscious of the great discovery.

Deception Rife in All Ages

To-day, as in the past, even in John the apostle's day, the world is filled with gross delusion, spirit deceptions, cunning so-called philosophies, which seek to blind the pilgrim of truth. No age has been exempted from the works of diabolism. Satan found in Cain a willing servant, and made him master of the great secret of abomination. The thing had gained much ground by the time of the flood. Isaiah was confronted with spirit deception and warned the people to guard carefully the word of truth, the "law and the testimony," and abide by the teachings therein. Satan, who never slumbers, was busy in the days of John, who writes to the saints to "try the spirits."

But there are other delusions, other frauds and deceptions besides "religious shams," which are damning the world. Men are being defrauded every day by wild-cat schemes and watered stocks. Well I remember of a minister (who happened to belong to a popular denomination) selling worthless stock to poor people in Maine. He had discovered, he claimed, a way to extract millions of dollars worth of gold from salt water. That scheme would not appeal to western people as bait so readily as oil wells. Every week patent medicine, worthless and dangerous, is condemned by the Journal of Medicine.

Best Professionals Liberal-Minded

Nothing perhaps has passed through such a vast experience of confessions and concessions as schools of medicine, the last word on this subject being given by Doctor Mayo of world fame in his recent speech, wherein he claims that homeopathy is not to be cried down, inasmuch as the nasty remedies of allopathy are bringing the former into prominence and favor. Osteopathy he feels does much of its cure on the basis of suggestion, and the much despised chiropractic treatment stands out as being consistent in many ways. Among other men who dare speak because they do not fear the loss of followers or dollars, and who value honesty as the thing most priceless, is Doctor Cabot, of Boston. He tells us that 47 per cent of his diagnoses are wrong. If this be the case of the great, what of the obscure?

Freudianism as a Delusion

However, of this subject I do not care to speak further at present. It is regarding a certain science, which has received much attention during the past five years, and especially since the close of the war, that the remaining space should be devoted to. We might call it the dream cult, as certain reports do, or we might use the higher-sounding term of Freudianism. It is not against what truths there may be in this pseudo-science, that I write; it is not to attack it, but to present facts for the consideration of those who value truth above theories and vain imaginations; it is with a desire to bless rather than to curse mankind that I introduce briefly the "other side" of this subject which Professor Woodworth, of Columbia University, states in the following words:

"There is scarcely a page in the writing of the school that does not contain assertions that arouse the suspicion of the psychologist. The ground of his suspicion is usually about the same; the exceptional is assumed by the psychoanalyst to be the regular thing, and the fascinating is preferred to the more sober view, so that in the end a highly distorted picture of mental processes and dynamics results."

It may be unnecessary to state that Doctor Woodworth is one of the most authoritative of American psychologists. And in view of this fact, his opinion is worthy of careful consideration.

For me to pose as an authority on this subject, would subject me to the ridicule of persons who think they have good reason for attacking the man who dares to attack the delusions of Freud; therefore I have secured myself behind some very substantial evidence which the reader can ponder and accept or reject as he sees fit.

Dream Cult Fashionable in England

Let me quote, first, from the Kansas City Star of March 20, 1921:

"New dream cult fashionable in England. Psychoanalysis is enthroned and Freud is akin to Mahomet, or pretty nearly. Everybody is ill or suffering from some inhibition, repression, or buried complex. But what is really happening in England, among the stolid people who really must have a little excitement from time to time, and excitement that is costly and fascinating, is that after a long period of war excitement there was a sudden slump into merely domestic troubles. Meanwhile the academic discussion has been going merrily along in the United States and books began to pour into the English market. The wise and the prudent readers read early, and become authorities on the subject. Propaganda and highly paid articles, pro and con psychoanalysis, became general in the press during a newsless period—the silly season—and the public was intrigued.

"Now psychoanalysis is a luxury for those who have much money, much time and little to do. To be analyzed is as popular as appendicitis was fashionable in the reign of King Edward VII, and the drawing room conversation of society is no longer quite the three D's—Dress, Disease, and Domesticities. It is mostly Dance and Dreams. England is a country where the aged and middle-aged try to probe into their consciousness (sub- or un-) to find out the cause of their many diseases and their possible failures. The great and healthy attribute their success to no accident or phobia."

This writer goes on with his analysis of this new disease and tries to say as many good things about the subject as he can conscientiously, and adds this significant statement:

"But the more serious protest against the practice is the development of a certain morbidity and introspection among the devotees (that and the everlasting boredom of their complaints) and the exaggeration of the cult into a fanatic religion. At the moment most of the society that is psychoanalytically inclined is reading a new book on dreams by Mrs. H. O. Arnold-Foster, which Doctor Morton Prince, the famous American psychologist, found to be in contravention of the Freudian theory of symbolic dreams. So there is likely to be something of a schism in the cult, so that the parlor game of interpretation is likely to be interrupted by the doubter."

A brief comment on this clipping is sufficient. Defenders of the Freudian cult will answer that the Star story is written in a very disrespectful manner of a "science" which has benefited thousands of unfortunate persons. We ask, What of the thousands it has injured by fixing in their mind suggestions of morbidity which warp and control adversely? What of the real and unreal cures of other cults. What true Saint would feel inspired to go to Christian Science for cure? He would take a most dangerous chance, and if cured of a functional tumor, to say nothing of the less serious mental disorders, his praises of Christian Science would be boundless and his pitying sympathy for the poor Latter Day Saint elder who "lacked the power," would also be boundless. This is the age of "signs" and "wonders" and psychic deceptions, but the deception now is as nothing compared to what will be offered in the near future, if my reading of the prophets be in harmony with facts.

Function of the Priesthood

As for this speculative handling by Freudians, of the souls of men, including their sins of omission and commission, we cannot condemn it too soundly. But we do say, let the spiritual lives of men and women be placed in the care of Jesus Christ and such servants as he calls to be overseers of the flock, or church, which he purchased with his blood. To say that there is no difference between the official and nonofficial member of the church is to take a position as extreme as the one held by a cult which allows any of its members to administer the Lord's supper. There may be danger in the exaltation of the priesthood (as it is said by some the Utah people do), but there is no less danger in so belittling the priesthood that it is looked upon as a mere term that God for some reason employed when he referred to that power by which men would be enabled to cast mountains into the sea, heal the sick, raise the dead, and guide the spiritual destiny of the church on earth; for without the priesthood no properly functioning church can exist. To be sure, this work demands an intelligent ministry; a ministry that will not be ignorant of soul needs; that will not think itself superior in virtue, or goodness, to the humblest Saint; but a ministry that will be as it has been, in truth, a healing ministry, such as exists in every gospel dispensation; a ministry that does not ask nor desire to be relieved of any responsibility that inheres to it.

The gospel of Christ is a mine of untold wealth; it yet contains gems that have never been discovered; and because some of its powers have not been used is not sufficient reason for introducing substitutes unless such introduction be temporary in nature. It seems to me that there is an eternity of meaning in the statements: "The priest shall visit the home of every member and exhort them to attend to all family duties." "The teacher shall see that there is no hardness of heart," etc. "Mine elders shall see that the law is kept." "He that believeth the gospel shall be saved."

To pass these plain teachings by with a contemptuous shrug, or to try to answer their challenge with a sneer of egotism, or to say that priests and teachers and elders are not competent to discharge the obligation resting on them, therefore the teachings of scripture must be taken in a limited sense or spiritually interpreted, is but to beg the question, and welcome disaster; for there is no soul-satisfying, life-producing substitute for God's plan. Instead of lamenting over our inefficiency, or attempting to evade responsibility, or introducing substitutes, let us go to work and become educated in the lines of our duties and responsibilities. The Lord has said it—"Let every man learn his duty."

I am sure the readers will pardon me for extending this discussion over a field of observation which introduces many viewpoints. The subject before us is serious, and that its proper solution will hasten the Lord's work, I am confidently assured in my mind. So we read, "The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 17.)

Christ's Principles Are Basic

If this work were done wisely and to the fullest extent of possibility, with results following, such as the removing of hardness of heart, the suppressing of lying and backbiting and evil speaking, and the assembling of Saints together often, each doing his duty, think ye not that about all of these "buried complexes," would soon be dug up into the open air to be cleansed by God's spiritual sunshine? And would not those "hallucinations," "obsessions," "illusions," caused by the hugging of old sins to the bosom or by the infection of old deeds not properly repented of, "fold their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away"? When we compare Freudianism to the light of Christianity based on the words of Jesus, "Come unto me and I will give you rest," we catch a glimpse of that light that never shone on land or sea. The old world needs a baptism of the Holy Ghost. The woman who has willfully committed abortion will never get relief from a gnawing conscience till she has found it at the foot of the cross of Christ. She may get imagined- or suggested-relief by confessing her sins to a psychoanalyst; and she may not; but if she desires that water which will quench the thirst of her soul which burns with remorse, she must go to Christ, for he alone has it to give.

That man who looks with eyes of adultery on his neighbor's wife doubtless is on the road not so much to an "obsession" as to possession by an evil spirit, and his deliverance comes from the same source, the cross of Christ.

Persons who lie and backbite are sowing seed which, if not destroyed, will produce a harvest in the life of the sower, and it will be a mental reaction harvest. Its cure is in the hands of the church; obedience to the law of God is the remedy.

The gospel needs no reinterpretation, but it may need a fuller application. If persons who are victims of disappointed love, greed-obsession, hate-thoughts, temper-outbursts, etc., would take Jesus Christ for their guide, studying his word carefully and obeying it faithfully, they would not go far afield from recovery to normal living, either physical or mental.

Freudianism as a Pseudo-Science

It is almost needless to say that the opinions expressed in this forum article are those of the writer. Other persons have the legal right to hold contrary views and, of course, take the consequences, good or bad. It is needless to exhaust this subject here, even if the writer had the material and the ability to do so. The careful editors of the Weekly Review, July 16, 1921, have presented very cleverly one phase of this question. We might read it with profit. The quotation follows:

"The Freudian talk with which so much of the journalistic and other writing of our day is infested, is not the unscientific degeneration of a scientific doctrine; it derives its origin not from science, but from pseudo-science. The repressiveness of Freudianism suffices to cause its instinctive rejection by most persons of wholesome mind; but, while rejecting it, they often have an uneasy sense that they are flying in the face of the authority of science. Yet the fact is that Freudianism is fully as deficient in its intellectual basis as it is repulsive in its moral aspect. This is true quite irrespective of any question as to the curative value of Freudian methods in certain psychopathic cases; just as one may recognize the absurdity of Christian Science doctrine without denying the beneficial results which some individuals derive from submitting themselves to its influence. . . . Freud and the Freudians look for cases in which it is possible, by hook or crook, to assert that their theory applies; and they ask neither of the two questions which it is the first duty of science to ask—first, whether the explanation is necessary, whether the phenomenon cannot be accounted for without it; and secondly, whether the instances favoring the theory are not overmatched by those which point in the opposite direction."

Danger in Fanatical Use

I dislike to interrupt this quotation by inserting a comment, but the points given may escape some reader. The danger lies not so much in the path of whether Freudianism is a true or a pseudo-science, as it lies in its fanatical use. Illustration may explain better than deductive reasoning. If a man preaches against hypocrisy, in the eye of the Freudian the chances are that the man is using "defense mechanisms"; he (the suspect) is either a hypocrite or would like to be one, so he berates hypocrites either to cover up his own wickedness or to save himself from becoming wicked along the line of hypocrisy. This "Freudism" rests upon a safe principle, provided other things are taken into consideration. As the Review editor states, "Freudians look for cases in which it is possible, by hook or crook, to assert that their theory applies; and they ask neither of the two questions," etc. The wild ending of this process of reasoning would condemn Jesus as a hypocrite because, forsooth, he branded the Pharisees as hypocrites; and accuse Paul of using "defense mechanisms" because he denounced the sins of the Corinthians; and brand Jude a sex-pervert for writing about the immorality of his and other times; and see Jacob putting up a wall to keep himself out of polygamy when he thundered against it.

Wrong Judgments Arrived At

The extremely cruel part of this thing is, the innocent is condemned with the guilty. And Jesus stamped his disapproval on Freudianism when he said, "Judge not according to appearances." And his statement that false prophets are known by their fruits, in no wise contradicts his specific command against judging the souls of men. The reason for this restriction is emphasized by the rise and fall of so-called wonderful discoveries by which our fellow men can be judged, their soul value weighed, and their real Christian values made a matter of record for the eye of God to behold (!) May I quote from another authority, as a sort of parenthetical statement to the article from the Review? In Scribner's magazine for July, 1921, is an article entitled "Psychology goldbricks." It is written by the able pen of Henry Foster Adams, associate professor of psychology at the University of Michigan. In speaking of phrenology he remarks:

"With the abandonment of the structural theory, the main claim of the phrenologist to credence was removed. More ludicrous even is their later assumption, that bumps on the skull are indices of a certain well-developed trait. . . . For many years an Italian criminologist, Lombroso, made a study of criminal structural peculiarities and their relationship to crime. He found well-marked tendencies for criminals to possess certain stigmata or signs, but unfortunately the signs of the criminal were found to be widely prevalent among those whose names had never been upon police blotters. It was his pet scheme to have all individuals who were marked by a peculiar sign watched by his detectives. . . . It was entirely impracticable, for the characteristic sign of a murderer was found in altogether too many tender-hearted individuals to make the scheme at all feasible."

We Have a Few of All Traits

Had the world become Lombroso-mad, as it has in some circles become Freudian-mad, it would have been unsafe for a man who had been so unfortunate as to inherit some peculiar construction of the skull, to go out on the street, notwithstanding his heart might have been changed by the power of the gospel of Christ. All traits of character exist in contrary pairs, as for example, tenderness-cruelty, promptness-tardiness, etc. No one is absolutely honest, or sympathetic, or free from egotism, or prompt, or "wise," so there is always in him some of the opposite traits. Therefore, you can say anything about a person and it will be, to some extent, true. It follows that if you are looking for a trait in a person you can always find it to some degree. If the attention of a person is called to some of these so-called "monstrosities of mental taint," he will be watching for it, and be prompt to note its every manifestation. This is due to the fact that his attention has been directed to focus on it. Therefore not only does the psychoanalyst become a victim of his studies, in that his mania causes him to see what he is looking for, but also his victim develops a certain morbidity and fixed introspection and becomes a slave to, rather than free from, his "inhibitions." It may have been this very danger that Paul had in mind when he warned in the following words: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." (Philippians 4: 8.)

Now let us go back to that interrupted quotation which we were reading from the Weekly Review:

"To the facile applications of this cheap and handy instrument of so-called science, there is, of course, no assignable limit. One lies before us at this moment in an interpretation of the life and character of Lincoln, by Harvey O'Higgins and Edward H. Reedy, M. D. . . . 'It was Lincoln's unconscious defense of his own oppressed self that was projected into a defense of racial liberation' . . . in a word, that the key to Lincoln's exertions against slavery was to be found, to use the Freudian lingo, in an 'inferiority complex.' But there is not the slightest endeavor to prove anything of the kind. Everybody has always known that Lincoln was ambitious, and his early poverty naturally inclined him to sympathize with all who were unfortunate or oppressed. But there is no reason to believe that anything more than this is true, nor is any attempt made to give such a reason. The 'inferiority complex' is obviously neither sufficient nor necessary to account for the fact. . . . If Lincoln had been an extreme abolitionist, that fact would doubtless have been pointed to as proof of the tremendous urge of his subconscious sense of inferiority; but as he was marvelously careful, and restrained, and calculating, in the pursuit of the gradual extinction of slavery, this circumstance apparently serves quite as well, though in a wholly unexplained way, to confirm the judgment of the psychoanalytic augurs. Thus the Freudian 'catches them a comin' and a gwine'; there is no getting away from his net.

"That comparatively few protests are made against the Freudian obsession is largely due to the ordinary writer's fear of being classed as unscientific. But these timid souls might well take courage from the story of other pseudo-scientific theories [for example, bumpology] which have strutted their hour on the stage and now are heard no more. . . . Nor can these pseudo-scientific theories be defended on the ground that there is 'some truth' in them. There is 'some truth' in almost anything; the whole point is that the generalization is false, and it is the generalization that constitutes the theory and that does the mischief."

No Substitute for the Gospel

Thus, is it not wise that we, who are children of the light,

HYMNS AND POEMS

Rejection

By Cora M. Reynolds

Conscience said to me one day,
"It is time to cease your play,
And read the Word divine."
But I hurriedly replied
To that prompter by my side,
"Right now, I haven't time."

"Love your neighbors, make them know
That the gospel here below
Will prove a light divine
If they heed its beck'ning rays,
Heed its teachings all their days.
Be sure to take the time."

Heedlessly, I closed my eyes,
Slept through conscience's counsel wise—
That precious guide divine.
Household duties, social cares,
Firmly claimed, all unawares,
Each minute of my time.

Restless dreaming came one night,
Just to show me my sad plight—
Bereft of light divine.
Dying young, my soul had flown
To its God on holy throne.
"How did you use your time?"

Answered I, in anguish great,
"Surely, Lord, I'm not too late!
My future shall be thine."
"God's own truths you turned away;
Welcomed worldly cares each day.
No more shall you have time."

Little Things

By Hattie Hughes

Some little kindness shown each day
Will help to pass the hours away;
May bring some gladness to the heart,
Not long since pierced with Sorrow's dart.

Some little song that we might sing,
When days are dark and everything ponder carefully and dispose of wisely anything that in any way offers itself as a substitute for the teachings of the gospel of Christ? Instead of minimizing the duties and prerogatives of the officers in Christ's church, should we not encourage those officers to study to become approved workmen, discharging every obligation resting upon them? Should we not hold the gospel as superior to any scheme devised by man? Should we not "try the spirits"? Many have gone out into the world, and that one which exalts man as judge of the soul of his fellow man, unless his decision be based on spiritual discernment which is a gift; that spirit which judges "according to appearances"; that spirit which seeks to overthrow the teachings of Christ Jesus, is not of God.

(Concluded on next page.)

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Just Letters

To a Local Cradle Roll Superintendent

Undoubtedly you have by this time received the HERALD for this week, in which appears another discussion of the cradle roll work. Other articles have appeared from time to time, a perusal of which should give you a fairly adequate idea of the work so far set forth. The letter of instruction we mail to superintendents will also help you.

It may not be amiss for me to go somewhat farther into the plans and hopes we have for this department. Basing our plans on the remark made by the President of the church when the transfer of the cradle roll work to our department was under discussion, we are attempting to be the channel through which the womanhood of the church shall assist in bringing to the childhood of the church every possible opportunity for its best and highest development. Active child welfare work of the most comprehensive and spiritual type is our objective, which we hope gradually to attain without neglecting any of the present or past important features. If we are able to do this and at the same time do what the cradle roll did under the Sunday school: lining up the children for Sunday school attendance at the proper age, and interesting the parents in the Sunday school through the children, which we feel is important and a part of our present duty and program, surely we will have lost little by the transfer and have gained much.

The cradle roll workers in some of our branches have been doing real constructive work. Some have put over a "milk campaign," during which talks were made at school, at mothers' clubs and church, on the value of milk in the diet of the child; films and slides on the subject were shown, playlets given, and in many clever ways the public generally and parents in particular were instructed in this phase of child welfare. Children were weighed and measured, and those who were undernourished received milk at school, with very gratifying results.

In one branch that reported, the cradle roll worker took about a petition and got hundreds of signers, which she sent to her Congressmen, asking them to support the Sheppard-Towner Bill, which means so much to the women and children of the country. This work has been duplicated in regard to other state and national bills under consideration. Those which affect children should be carefully studied by

Looks just as dull as it can be;
This is the time for melody.

Some little word we'll try to say
To cheer our neighbor 'cross the way,
Who does not seem to feel the breeze
Or see the sun shine through the trees.

Some little act of mercy shown,
Might help to throw a barrier down
Where once in unbelief they trod,
May help to bring them back to God.

Somebody's burden we might share,
Or smooth the brow, so dull of care,
Just simple things—but oh, the bliss
Of doing little things like this!

Then on that bright eternal day,
Oh, may we hear the Master say,
"A mansion is prepared for you
For little things that thou didst do."

the cradle roll workers, as well as the organized women everywhere. Since the vote is ours, we should make it mean something to the welfare of our homes and families.

I do not know just the conditions in your branch, but it may be there are several measures which might well be undertaken. If there is prejudice to break down, you and your workers may have to make special visits of a purely friendly sort in which this cradle roll work can be brought gradually to the attention of the mother. You could explain about the Health Department of the church, and how its ideal is to prevent disease among our people, and how it is using the cradle roll as an agency through which it can keep somewhat in touch with the children. It surely would interest mothers to be told that out of the first two hundred health records examined by Sister Laura Mann, nursing director to the church, as well as head of our own health division, ninety indicated conditions of abnormality serious enough to justify her in getting in touch with the parents, which she does by personal letter of advice, inclosing instructive information as needed in the case.

As you get the mothers to understand what is intended by these health charts, and enlist their full and hearty support, you can get a more accurate record each time, and a fuller service can be rendered. It is desired to have these health records made each six months, at least, in order that the health of the growing child may be under constant supervision in this way. It is also desired that when the cradle roll workers and the parents get more enthused in this work and see it in its true light as a service of great value to the church, we shall have more frequent records taken. Healthy bodies are better temples for healthy spirits than are diseased ones, and no soul can function perfectly through an imperfect habitation. We only design to do good; and to impress this upon the mother is a part of your task.

The welfare of children demands that parents shall discharge their duties and responsibilities as fully and intelligently as possible. To insure proper development and unfolding of the powers of body and mind, parents should understand not only the physical nature of children, but their mental and spiritual as well. They should know how and what a child should be fed, how it should be dressed, what rest and play it should have, what training and instruction. They should realize that they, themselves, should be what they wish their children to become. This means self-control, inhibition, and humble seeking for guidance. It means study and preparation, with a vision of the sacredness of their privileges in training immortal souls for eternity.

In our Yearbook are recommended many splendid books for the use of those who wish to equip themselves for intelligent parenthood. They have been written by those who have arrived at rules and principles by observance of the averages obtained through the experiences of many instead of, as must be the case with a single family, the few. Therefore they may well serve as a general guide to a mother in the management of her children.

Too many mothers are frightened at the word study. They faint when you propose psychology, and yet all their lives they have used such principles of psychology as their experiences have taught them. They learn when is the opportune time to reprove, to instruct, or to question. However, they have not considered the why. You can always interest an audience of parents in a discussion of various problems of child training. Even the most reticent mothers will have convictions and opinions upon these things. Unconsciously most of us have been following some principles of psychology, whether intelligently and to gratifying worthy purpose, or blindly and with sorrowful results. Let us arouse to constructive thinking about these things. If we would only think, many of our problems would be more easily and profitably solved.

It was encouraging, at a recent conference, to note how eagerly the young mothers crowded around to ask questions, at the close of the little talks given. I was happy to tell them about our little leaflet study course, prepared by Sister Wight, herself a young, observant, and thoughtful mother.

I was glad, too, to call their attention to Sister Parham's constructive questions covering the chapters of Professor Forbush's splendid text on child training, which questions have been running in the HERALD. These are helps, and can but arouse our women to a deeper study of their duty to their children, and they constitute a part of our child welfare program.

You understand, do you not, that the leaflet courses we offer are not intended for the women who have already made an extensive study of the subjects? Such women will know where to obtain any information they need, and they already have the vision that emphasizes their needs. But we must try to reach those women who have lost the habit of studying, who have allowed their many duties as home makers and mothers—and God knows how demanding and numberless they are!—to absorb all their time and attention. Many are concerned in caring for just the physical needs of the family, and in doing that in the quickest possible manner in order that they might have more time for outside and social life. Some spend hours upon embroidery and fancywork, or idly gossiping with their neighbors, and then declare they have no time to read or study. Will such mothers, think you, ever advance to the point where they will "understand even God himself," or to where they will be "joint-heirs" with Christ in a kingdom, whose "glory" is "intelligence"? Do they fancy that death is some magician whose touch will supply to them all the knowledge of which their indolence of mind deprived them during life? Can they hope to reply, with clear consciences, to the questions which must be asked them at the judgment bar, concerning their methods of teaching and training their children? Or do they not, one and all, come under the condemnation to be found in the Doctrine and Covenants: "You have not taught your children light and truth, according to the commandments"?

Much depends upon the superintendent of this department in a local organization. She must not only be intensely interested herself in the subjects, but must be constantly on the alert for things with which to kindle and add to the fires of enthusiasm among her helpers. She must be forward-looking, and have her "something next" ready when needed. She must be alive to current events, be able to call attention to measures of uplift and welfare that are before the public, and enlist the support of her women in their behalf. She will study her associates and help each one to find the task for which she is best fitted, and encourage her to work happily therein. She will bring to her workers outside helps and instruction: a talk from a dentist on the care of children's teeth; from a nurse on adenoids or diseased tonsils and the damage they can do to a child's development; from a welfare worker on how to deal with wayward children; or from a physician on the care and training of the subnormal! A world of possibilities is before the alert superintendent who desires to increase the knowledge of her workers concerning these and kindred subjects vital to child welfare.

Am I mapping out a lot of work? I am only trying to put before you a few objectives to help you to see that this child welfare work of the church is not only a wonderfully interesting study, but one well worth concentrated attention. Why not get in touch with the welfare board of your city and find out what they are trying to do? A visit to the various institutions for the friendless or orphaned of the city would be instructive for your workers. Knowledge of what remedial measures are under consideration by the various charitable organizations, civic improvement clubs, or women's societies, would give you ideas for your own work. Too, it would be well to know what various city boards could be utilized, what are the city ordinances concerning milk, its price and inspection, pure food, recreation, public nurseries, free clinics, censored movies, or any other reform you might see is needed to improve conditions for the children under your supervision, their morals or spiritual progress. We are all dominated more or less by our environment, and Saints living in a large city are subject to the conditions prevailing there. So our city women must concern themselves with civic affairs, if at heart they really desire the welfare of the children in their midst.

Zion must be redeemed. That is the commission to this church. If we fail in this, it will be to our everlasting regret. Redemption must be demonstrated in every home in the church. Lifted from the sordid and the selfish, ruled by love and wisdom, inhabited by healthy bodies fully and joyously functioning in obedience to intelligent spirits held firmly and completely to ideals given by the Savior. This is what our homes must become if we each do our part in this redemption. Can we reach this condition? By the grace of God and by diligence, yes!

A. A.

Parents as Teachers

(Sister Glines has written the following thoughtful paragraphs as an introduction to her psychology course.—A. A.)

Every parent is a teacher, trained or untrained, whether he or she has ever consciously accepted that dignified and responsible position or not. They are teachers of their children during that plastic period of child life when character is being molded, when first impressions are being made, when first reactions to suggestions and stimuli are being indelibly stamped upon the mind.

The individual is not born with the instinct to make definite specific reactions to definite specific stimuli, but may react in a large number of ways. How important it is, then, that the teacher (parent) be able properly to direct the responses in the right way and not allow them to shoot off in ways which may prevent the child's development, and which may result in ruin. The most important thing that can happen to a child is that he shall have the wisest possible guidance during those early years, when he is making his first reactions to this great world of stimuli—physical, personal, social, and religious—and is forming his life habits.

The text, The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts, is recommended to parents and teachers because the fundamental truths of psychology have been put simply and concretely, so that those who have not had training along these lines, as well as the students of psychology, may read and intelligently understand.

Psychology tells us about the mind, its elements, and the laws of their combination and organization. It tells us about the development of individual minds. It gives us the scientific analysis of the commonplace, everyday problems. It helps us to understand why the individual acts in certain ways at certain times in the lifetime.

The parent or teacher who would understand the nature of children must know something of instincts, of habits, of perception, memory, imagination, feeling, association, and attention. We do not wish to narrow the value of accurate knowledge of these subjects to parents and teachers, but recommend its helpfulness in business, and in the professions as well as in the personal life of the individual.

In fact, the study of psychology is the foundation upon which we must build if we would understand each other more perfectly, and be able to live and work together most effectively for the common good.

DORA GLINES.

A Son's Letter to His Dead Father

(One of the finest things which any magazine has printed for a long time is the letter from a grown-up son to his dead father, appearing in Commerce and Finance.)

Dear Dad: I am writing this to you, though you have been dead thirty years. I feel I must say some things to you, things I didn't know when I was a boy in your house, and things I was too stupid to say. It is only now, after passing through the long, hard school of years, only now, when my own hair is gray, that I understand how you felt. I must have been a bitter trial to you. I believed my own petty wisdom, and I know now how ridiculous it was, compared to that calm, ripe, wholesome wisdom of yours.

Most of all, I want to confess my worst sin against you. It was the feeling I had that you "did not understand." When I look back over it now, I know that you did understand. You understood me better than I did myself. Your wisdom flowed around mine like the ocean around an island. And how patient you were with me! How full of long-suffering, and kindness! And how pathetic, it now comes home to me, were your efforts to get close to me, to win my confidence, to be my pal. I wouldn't let you; I couldn't. What was it that held me aloof? I didn't know. But it is tragic—that wall that rises between a boy and his father, and their frantic attempts to see through it and climb over it.

I wish you were here now, across the table from me, just for an hour, so that I could tell you how there's no wall any more; I understand you now, Dad; and God! how I love you, and wish I could go back and be your boy again. I know now how I could make you happy every day. I know how you felt. It took a good many years for this prodigal son—and all sons are in a measure prodigal—to come to himself. I've come; I see it all now. I know what a rich and priceless thing, and one least understood, is that mighty love and tenderness and craving to help which a father feels towards his boy. For I have a boy of my own. And it is he that makes me want to go back to you, get down on my knees to you, and ask you to hear me, Dad, and believe me.

Questions

You ask me what the stars are for, a-twinkle in the sky;
You ask me what the moon's about a-sailing up so high;
You want to know what makes the wind, and where it goes,
and why;
You seem to think I know so much, so poor a thing as I.

Suppose I said the stars were lamps to light the milky way
Of Lady Moon, where she must sail until the break o' day;
That winds were there to sing her song, to carol soft and gay?

Suppose I told you all these things when you come in from play?

You wouldn't know much more of life, so when you turn to me

And ask me many puzzling things about the mystery
Of why we are, and how we are, I wish that I were free
To go and question some one else who wiser far would be.
—Henry C. Pringle.

The Parent's Prayer

I have a boy to bring up.

Help me to perform my task with wisdom and kindness and good cheer. Help me always to see him clearly, as he is. Let not my pride in him hide his faults. Let not my fear for him magnify my doubts and fears, until I make him doubting and fearful in his turn.

Quicken my judgment so that I shall know to train him to think as a child, to be in all things pure and simple as a child.

I have a boy to bring up.

Give me great patience and a long memory. Let me remember the hard places in my own youth, so that I may help when I see him struggling as I struggled then.

Let me remember the things that made me glad, lest I, sweating in the toil and strain of life, forget that a little child's laughter is the light of life.

I have a boy to bring up.

Teach me that love that understandeth all things; the love that knows no weakness, tolerates no selfishness. Keep me from weakening my son through granting him pleasures that end in pain, ease of body that must bring sickness of soul; a vision of life that must end in death. Grant that I love my son wisely and myself not at all.

I have a son to bring up.

Give him the values and beauty and just rewards of industry. Give him an understanding brain and hands that are cunning, to work out his happiness.

I have a boy to bring up.

Help me to send him into the world with a mission of service. Strengthen my mind and heart that I may teach him that he is his brother's keeper. Grant that he may serve those who know not the need of service, and not knowing, need it the most.

I have a boy to bring up.

So, guide and direct me that I may do this service to the glory of God, the service of my country, and to my son's happiness. AMEN.—The Delineator.

Psychology

Text: The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts.
Sold by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, at $2.10 postpaid.

CHAPTER III

The Brain and Nervous System

1. Distinguish between the brain and the mind.
2. What is the relation of the brain to the mind?
3. What is the result of a poorly developed and insufficiently nourished brain and nervous system?
4. Make a drawing, naming all the parts of a neurone.
What is the structure and the function of a neurone, and how does it act?
5. What is neuroglia?
6. Name and define the different divisions of the nervous system.
7. What is the meaning and application of the term "division of labor," as used with reference to the nervous system?
8. Define stimuli and give examples.
9. What are sensory and motor nerves? Illustrate.
10. Upon what is the mind dependent?
11. What important bearing on education has the fact that the development of the body is absolutely essential to the development of the mind?
12. Professor Swift tells us in Mind in the Making that many great men in this country and England were slow in their development, got little benefit from their attendance at school, and were considered weak-minded by their teachers.
What explanation can you give?
13. What is meant by "hygiene of the mind"? Is there any hygiene of the mind apart from the hygiene of the body?
14. Doctor G. Stanley Hall says that school hygiene is the most important part of pedagogy. In what sense is this true?
15. If possible, have a lecture given by a doctor, on the "nervous system."
16. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

DORA GLINES.

Opportunity

Master of human destinies am I!
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate
Deserts and seas remote, and passing by
Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late,
I knock unbidden once at every gate.
If sleeping, awake! If feasting, rise before
I turn away! It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach the state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore.
I answer not and I return no more.

—John J. Ingalls.

LETTERS

1921 Christmas Offering

To Our Christmas Offering Friends: We have a thermometer in this office, which is a "Register of Devotion" for the whole church. On last Sunday, November 27, the temperature had risen to (expressed in terms of money) $7,954.24.

Perhaps the Sunday schools are now working hard to increase their funds; and many of the schools are trying to do as well as, or better than, last year. A few are sending in a portion of their offering, and week by week this thermometer will rise to indicate the degree of the devotion behind the efforts put forth by all the schools combined.

We tried to get one of these thermometer faces into the hands of every Sunday school superintendent, so that each one could keep track of his individual efforts. Additional supplies of them may be had for the asking.

Let us remember that "in all human affairs there are efforts and there are results, and the strength of the effort is the measure of the result."

If you are organized and will work together like boys in a good football team, or girls that play good basket ball, for a rousing strong effort, the result will be a worthy inheritance fund—one that will be a true measure of your love and loyalty.

Yours very sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256. Presiding Bishop.

Light on the Stewardship Plan

"I had never understood the stewardship plan . . . but finally the spirit of the Lord rested on me . . . it seemed I began to see the beauty and grandeur of the plan."

I wish to relate an experience which I have just passed through in my home and which I was very deeply impressed to write about to the HERALD.

I came home from my work feeling quite sick with a cold, and I sat down in a chair by the fire and was intending to have my wife treat me for the cold.

She came in from the kitchen and picked up a magazine. I said to her: "Get the HERALD and read it to me." She got the paper and commenced to read Brother F. M. Smith's address to the Holden Saints on stewardship. At first it did not appeal to me, as I had never understood the stewardship plan, but I was interested and listened closely, and as she read I became more interested, and finally the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me and the tears of joy began to course down my cheeks. It seemed that I began to see the beauty and grandeur of the stewardship plan, and I commenced to pray and thank God for this great plan, and the great men he has called to carry on this work; I seemed to sense the greatness of this undertaking and the great problem it presented to the leading men of the church, and the responsibility of these men seemed to weigh down upon me. I poured out my soul to God in prayer for them, that they might have light and wisdom in the accomplishment of this work.

And as I prayed, the Spirit still resting upon me, I sat leaning back in my chair with my face toward the ceiling, and my eyes were closed. There seemed to appear above me a blue canopy about as blue as the sky, and through it were streaks of light like tongues of fire, except that the light was white; and as I looked it appeared as a beautiful drapery, and at times beautiful faces looked through and seemed to gaze down upon the earth.

As I looked upon this striking scene in admiration and wonder, my attention was attracted to the east or northeast, and I looked and beheld a large field of much deeper blue than the one I had seen before. It seemed to be just the right color to make it look very rich and beautiful, and as I looked I beheld that the field was thickly set with beautiful gems which flashed and sparkled with great brilliance. It seemed that the light of each would reflect upon the others and cause them to sparkle more. My soul seemed to be full of light and joy as I looked upon this beautiful picture.

After I had looked for a time at this field my attention was again attracted, this time to the northwest, and I saw another large canopy, shaped like a Japanese umbrella, the center of which rested upon the top of an exceedingly high mountain, which mountain rose far above all the surrounding country and tapered gracefully to a perfect peak. The canopy seemed to be turning toward the west quite rapidly, and was composed of many beautiful colors which ran in waves and streaks around the canopy, somewhat resembling the woodlands in autumn.

Under this canopy on the earth, and climbing on the sides of the mountain, I saw many people who seemed to be from every nation in the world. They all appeared to be happy and very busy at what they were engaged in.

What does it mean? I shall not attempt an interpretation, but I will say that I was made conscious of the fact that the gems I saw were saints in the church who were not afraid to trust God and who will lead the way in a practical demonstration of the stewardship plan, and that the light and blessings poured out upon them would reflect upon others, who would also fall in line.

I wish to say, also, that I am thoroughly converted to the stewardship plan by this experience.

Yours in the gospel,

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

G. J. HARDING.

Holden Home for the Aged Dedicated

Appropriate exercises were held and a good program rendered.

On Sunday, November 20, 1921, the dedicatory services of the Holden Home for the aged were held at two p. m. These exercises were on the fourth anniversary of the opening of this institution. The auditorium was beautifully decorated in purple and white, the colors which the occupants had adopted as the home colors, symbolic of youth and old age. A large American flag was draped over the pulpit, and flowers and ferns were among the decorations, the chrysanthemum predominating, as the flower adopted by the Home Family. Programs were printed in purple ink on white paper, making a very attractive folder. An entire list of the seventy-three who had been occupants of the home was included in the leaflet, of whom thirty-four are present members of the home, thirty-nine having been removed by death, release, or transfer.

The names of those who had served as matron were also given. Sister R. C. Self was the first matron in charge. She resigned and was succeeded by Sister Almira Rhonemus. Upon her resignation August 15, 1919, Sister I. M. Ross was requested by the Presiding Bishopric to occupy until a matron could be secured to take charge. This she did to assist the Home for the time. On September 16, 1919, Sister Edith Carr, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, took charge, and is the matron at the present time.

The program was as follows:

Piano duet—Miss May Moler and Mrs. Alma Moler.

Song 158, Saints' Hymnal, congregation.

Historical account of purchase, repair, and preparation of the building by Bishop C. J. Hunt.

Prayer by Elder I. M. Ross.

Song by Junior Choir.

Dedicatory sermon by President Elbert A. Smith.

Dedicatory prayer by Presiding Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire.

Anthem by Holden Choir.

A short chronicle of the Holden Home by Frances L. Keeler.

Song by Junior Choir.

Benediction by Elder J. W. A. Bailev.

The services were in charge of D. J. Krahl.

A message from the Quorum of the Twelve was received.

but too late to be included in the services. It read as follows: "Accept congratulations from the Quorum of Twelve upon the dedication of the beautiful home for the aged. Our heartfelt thanks are extended to all who have made possible the accomplishment of this work. We trust that the Spirit of the Master will ever characterize the efforts of all who may be called upon to minister to the aged Saints brought under the care of the home. May the peace of God attend you all."

At the time of the organization of the Holden Stake, July 16, 1916, President F. M. Smith, who had immediate charge of the organization, made this remark in passing the building, which was unoccupied and had been for years, "We should have that building." This had been the feeling of the stake bishopric and stake presidency and they made a private investigation of the building and interviewed the owner, Mr. J. F. Ritner, to ascertain if it could be purchased and at what price. The negotiations lasted a few weeks, in which time the stake officers were in communication with the joint council, who appointed a special committee representing the general church to look over the premises. They returned and reported favorably and the Presiding Bishopric requested the stake officers to move forward and do the best they could in securing it. They did so, and the original deed was made out to Charles J. Hunt, D. J. Krahl, Fred A. McWethy, bishop and presidency of the Holden Stake. They were assisted in making the purchase through the kindness of Brother M. L. Haney, who had recently moved there from West Virginia, and had some means available. The general church was not called on for any funds at this time. The title was held by these brethren for a year or more, until the funds of the church would justify the transfer of the property to the general church.

The main building was erected in 1884 by a Professor Smith, who opened the Holden College. The whole structure was burned in the early eighties and then rebuilt and sold to the Cumberland Presbyterians, who opened a school in charge of Dixon Williams. In the later eighties it was purchased by the Catholic Sisters, who conducted a seminary known as the Saint Cecilia Seminary. What is known as the north addition was added to the building in 1901. The school was operated as a profitable institution, with many students. In September 1908, those operating not being able to find teachers belonging to their church, closed the school. It remained unoccupied until November 20, 1917, when it was opened for a home for the aged, after extensive repairs and remodeling had been made.

The process of repairs and cleaning was quite a task. The Holden Saints responded to a call to assist and for many days they worked to hasten the time when the building might again be made of use. Some of the important changes which have been made in the building is in the excavation of the basement under the main building, and installing of a dummy and passenger elevator. The effort of the Presiding Bishopric, who had the general charge of the work of preparation, was to make it a modern, up-to-date building, with a corresponding equipment—and this they have done. Each floor is equipped with fire extinguishers and electric fire signals. Fire drills are given, so that in case of fire, everyone will know what to do.

There was transferred to the church five acres of ground surrounding the home. The park on the south occupied about a block and is nicely shaded with maples and evergreens. On this ground, each year the Holden Chautauqua is held. The ground is given without any charge and the Chautauqua people are very considerate of the old folks and permit them to come to any of their meetings without payment of admission fee. To the west, across the street from the home property, there is one acre used as a garden, and it has produced bountifully. The Presiding Bishopric purchased about five acres which corners on the home property on the southwest, to be used in connection with the home for a pasture. The barn is located on this part.

The Holden Stake office is on the first floor of the north addition to the building. The church has a wireless station here, which puts the home in touch with the rest of the world. While the original cost paid to Mr. Ritner was only $8,250, the expense of repair and improvements has been considerable. Its present appraised value is several times its total cost.

At the time of purchase and repair of building, the citizens of Holden very freely made offerings to assist in the work, showing their appreciation of the effort of the Saints in fitting this for a home.

The church can well feel proud of the institution as one which is accomplishing a splendid work and a building which ranks as one of the best owned by the church.

TICY MOLER.

[EDITORS' NOTE: We printed a picture of the Holden Home in our issue of June 21, 1921.]

Building a Character

Read at Farnworth Branch before the Manchester District Priesthood Association.

In order to get a good understanding of the subject we are dealing with I will give you Chambers's definition of the word character:

"The aggregate of peculiar qualities which constitute personal or national individuality. Moral qualities, especially the reputation of possessing such. A formal statement of the qualities of a person who has been in one's service or employment."

We are all well aware as to what the word building means. When we hear of anyone building a house or a mill or any such building we know that they will have to use certain materials in order to complete the structure, and by studying the plans which are set before them are able to put the right material in the right place and finally when it is finished present to the public a structure which is the best that man's intelligence can give, and oftentimes we are made to exclaim, "Oh, I would much like to live there, because everything is so beautiful!"

We can build two kinds of character, a good one and also a bad one. But we are considering building a good one this evening, since any society which has for its ideals the raising of people in general, has no use for bad characters. Why, even the industrial world (let alone the church), which does not profess to raise the morals of the people, demands people with good characters.

How many situations do we see advertised, where, in order to stand a chance of success, we are compelled to produce a good character? Why should this be so? Because I am satisfied that an individual with a good character is an asset to any industry. Do we not feel content when we can say, "Oh, I can trust So-and-So. I can rely on him"?

I have known of money being left lying about the room in order to test the honesty of the individual who was to come and clean up. It has been said that we came into the world with nothing and we cannot take anything out. I disagree with that statement, because I believe we are building, day by day, something that not only will be with us while we are in this life, but will go with us when we leave this life, and I am content to believe that that which I take out with me will be the means of framing my destiny.

I maintain that the building of character has a great responsibility upon the heads of parents. It has been said that if you train a child up in the way he should go, he will never roam. Of course I believe there are exceptions to the rule.

How often it has been said of some person, when he has gone wrong, "Oh, you cannot blame him, because he never saw anything different." If I want my child to present a good character to the world, I must first present a good example of character to him. If I want my child to be honest, I must be honest. If I want my child to be truthful, I must be truthful. If temperate, I must be temperate. Are we not told of the responsibility that is placed on the shoulders of the Saints, and how we are held responsible for the building of their characters while we have them in our charge?

I submit to you that many of our young people have been lost to the church because their parents never interested themselves in setting them an example as to what was necessary to build up a good character. How many of us make it our business to see that our children go to the institution where they are taught the rudiments which go to make up a good character? How many of us so interest ourselves in the younger generation that we are bold enough to go to the child's teacher and inquire as to how the child is progressing and as to how it is behaving itself?

I believe we form habits when we are young that take quite a long time to shake off, if we ever do get rid of them. So I think it behooves us to see that the right kind of seed is sown in the child while he is young; not only taught it, but backed up by a good example so it will have a good tendency in building up the character of our children. I think we cannot emphasize this point too much. Are not mothers and fathers proud when they see that their children are leading a straight life; when they are facing the world boldly; when they are not ashamed to hold up their heads and look people in the face?

How many mothers have gone down to their graves broken-hearted because of the bad conduct of their children? I think no one feels it more than a mother when she sees that her children are taking the wrong course in life. I believe it was Abraham Lincoln who was not ashamed to give credit to his mother for the sacrifice she made for him when he was young in taking the trouble to set the seed of truth and rightdoing into his heart. It is even said that she took him on her knee and taught him the simple truth of Jesus. And don't you think that woman was proud of her son in later life? It is even said that he never told an untruth.

I commend your attention and imitation to a young man in Bible history, namely, Joseph, the son of Jacob. I am sure we are all very familiar with his early life and the peculiar way he was led into a foreign land and the measure of success he attained. Yet in all his prosperity he did not forget that he had a parent. When he was making himself known to his brethren, did he not say, "I am Joseph. Doth my father yet live?"

Here is an example of a son. How beautiful the exhortation! "Ye shall tell my father all my glory." "Haste ye and go up to my father and say unto him, Thus saith thy son Joseph, God has made me lord of all Egypt; come down unto me, tarry not; and thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen, and thou shall be near unto me and all that thou hast . . . and there I will nourish thee." "Ye shall haste, and bring down my father thither."

When the old man came down to his son, let us behold the scene—Joseph, as the prime minister of Egypt, next to the king himself, was not ashamed to own his father, the old shepherd of Canaan, and with the old man leaning on his arm, led him into the palace, and before the whole circle of courtiers introduced him to the monarch, proudly exclaiming, "My father."

What a wonderful example for us to copy! Love for an aged parent—humility, one of the greatest seeds for us to cultivate to build up a true character.

We mentioned at the outset of this paper that the builder put into the structure the best material that he had at his disposal to present a decent building to the public. If I am to present a good character to the world, I shall have to seek out the best material that is available. I shall have to find out the society that has for its teachings the uplifting of humanity.

Now, before that society can save people from a fallen state, each member of that society will have to present a character that will stand the test of investigation. I believe that society to be the church of Jesus Christ.

Some of the material we have at our command to build a good character.

First: We shall have to cultivate the seed of humility.

Instead of thinking we are some great and mighty person, we should be meek and humble, ever ready to condescend to people of lower estate, ever ready to serve, and hold out the hand of fellowship, a desire to see anyone get on whether it be financially or spiritually. For humility, take Jesus as an example.

Second: To keep my tongue under control. I should never be guilty of using bad language, neither should I be guilty of undermining my brother or my sister. We want to get a very firm hold on our tongue, because it is a very dangerous member.

Third: To cultivate the seed of honesty. To owe no man anything. To see to it that I settle off all debts as soon as I get the opportunity. A good name will carry you a long way. An honest person stands a much better chance of getting on than a dishonest one.

Fourth: To be unselfish. To be satisfied with that which you have got honestly. To be no gambler. To take that which you have earned home and see to it that your wife and children are not neglected in the things which are necessary. Or, if you be single, see to it that your parents get that to which they are rightly entitled.

Fifth: To keep our hands to ourselves, and not steal anything from anyone.

Sixth: To have nothing to do with intoxicating drink. It is needless for me to point out the evils of it. In order to get a true character, I would advise you not to have even one glass, for this reason, that one glass generally gets to two glasses, and maybe to more, and finally, you may become a drunkard.

I think I have dealt with most of the seed that goes to make up a good character. There is no doubt more, but as this paper seems to be getting long I must bring it to a close. I trust that we shall strive to present to the world the best that is in us in the form of a true character, and then we need not be ashamed of facing the world.

JAMES SPARGO.

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: Thanksgiving truly was a day of rejoicing at this place. Three precious souls were inducted into the kingdom.

The Saints met for the day at the home of Brother and Sister Whitehead with well-filled baskets.

After the confirmations the morning was occupied by prayer and testimony, the Spirit being present in much power. We were recognized as God's children by the gift of tongues, giving encouragement with bright hopes for the future.

The beautiful ordinance of blessing little children was officiated in, the four children of Brother and Sister Curtis being blessed.

The dinner was enjoyed by everyone and the afternoon was spent in an enjoyable social way.

Being as one large united family throughout the day, it was with reluctance that we departed to our own homes.

The work here is growing, many honest-hearted souls coming into the fold, six being baptized in the last five weeks.

Elder George Talone has made a new opening in the Heights, preaching every Sunday evening at the Woodman's Hall. The results are three baptisms, three more being detained from that privilege by death in the family. Others are interested.

MRS. U. B. WEAVER.

There is a very mischievous little beast called the praying mantis. He looks very devout, a very paragon of insects for piety. His arms are ever folded, and his head bowed as if in prayer; but let another insect trust these appearances to approach him, and he becomes a specter to affright, and his revenge is like the tiger's spring. There are many praying mantises in the world. Some assume that posture to leap upon their prey. Others are so sunk in their reverie that they perceive not when men are perishing.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA.

MISCELLANEOUS

Editors Herald: The Alabama District is still among the living. The conference at Lone Star, November 12, was worthy of note. Business passed off nicely. There were two recommended for ordination: L. G. Sellers from deacon to priest, and M. M. Salter to deacon. Brother Salter was ordained. T. C. Kelley was the speaker throughout the conference.

The district is moving along, but not as we desire, yet we feel glad of some features of the work here and hope to see the day come when the Saints can realize the need of being actively engaged in the work and lay aside all of their work to attend the conferences and other services. I believe the sifting time is here.

J. R. Harper and W. J. Williamson were chosen to preside over the district until next conference.

The Sunday school at Lone Star is still holding on, but there is room for improvement. We see the need of leadership everywhere we go. We have a live school at Flat Rock now, with J. T. Colman and Bert Barlow at the helm. Pleasant Hill is still holding fast and looking forward to December 17 when the supervisor of this mission will commence a week's meeting.

Yours in bond,
W. H. DRAKE.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA, November 29, 1921.

Editors Herald: Our district president was with us Sunday and gave us a rousing sermon. One thing he said was that he did not believe there were as many "live dead" ones here as in some other branches that he knew of (some encouragement).

Apostle J. W. Rushton came on Thanksgiving Eve and preached five sermons in his forceful way, and to say we enjoyed them is putting it gently.

So the Saints are strengthened and encouraged. We have a good Sunday school with Elder J. S. Hommes as superintendent, and a live Religio with Brother Devere Detrick as superintendent. We have an enrollment on the church record here of something like one hundred and twenty Saints, with a good clean church to worship in. Why should we not be a live band of Saints?

If there are any isolated Saints who wish to change locations I will tell them more about our church and town if they will write to me.

1115 Locust Street. J. L. DETRICK.

Have You Forgotten?

Will all those upon whom we depend for data to be entered in the General Church Records please think carefully and see to it that delayed reports for baptisms, marriages, ordinations, deaths, expulsions, and blessings during 1921 are forwarded at once, in order that our report for the year may be complete?

Please bear in mind that the officiating minister must report baptisms, marriages, ordinations, and blessings, as also deaths when he officiates at the funeral service. Expulsions, also marriages and deaths wherein our ministers are not concerned, must be reported by the clerk in charge of the record where such persons are enrolled. In preparing your reports, please print the names and be extremely careful. Our present system finally catches your mistakes, but misspelled names and incorrect dates are expensive. Assist us in reducing expenses by using care.

The splendid cooperation upon the part of the ministry and all concerned with the work in this department is thoroughly appreciated; but there is yet a great amount of work to be done ere our records are in the condition desired.

Our books for December business will remain open until January 8, 1922, in order to include last-minute reports.

"Everybody on the job all the while" is our slogan for 1922.

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 255.
December 1, 1921.

Pastoral Notice

A Call to Oregon Saints

To all Saints of Oregon who are isolated, or may not be, I make this call to you that we may cooperate together in carrying the gospel of Christ to all. All are called to assist in the work of Christ and if you are willing to warn your neighbor and present to him the beauties of the gospel, I shall be at your service to prosecute the work in your town or country.

I would appreciate it very much if the isolated Saints would write to me so we can keep in touch with you and your needs along the line of missionary activities. The hastening time is here when all should contribute their mites towards the advancement of the work. Please do not delay in making your call for service. Let all feel free to call upon me for service, and in return let all be willing to make the sacrifice that others might enjoy the blessings of heaven with us. Remember that God gives unto all blessing according to their willingness to do and their activity in seeking to establish his work.

All who are interested and wish work to be done may cor-

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Education—"With the Goal of the Church Always in View" - - - - -	1153
President Smith Returns From East - - - - -	1155
A Time for Sanity - - - - -	1155
Another Attempt to Destroy Manteno Church - - - - -	1156
Our Christmas Gifts - - - - -	1156
What Shall We Buy - - - - -	1157
More Riots in Jerusalem - - - - -	1157
New Indian Organization - - - - -	1157

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

The Financial Situation in the Church, by Benjamin R. McGuire - - - - -	1158
Armageddon, by John H. Betz - - - - -	1161

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

The Famine in Russia - - - - -	1163
Henry Morgenthau and Zionism - - - - -	1163

THE FORUM:

Try the Spirits, by Ralph W. Farrell - - - - -	1165
--	------

HYMNS AND POEMS

Cora M. Reynolds—Hattie Hughes. - - - - -	1168
---	------

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Dora Glines. - - - - -	1169
------------------------	------

LETTERS

Benjamin R. McGuire—G. J. Harding—James Spargo—Mrs. U. B. Weaver—W. H. Drake—J. L. Detrick. - - - - -	1172
---	------

Miscellaneous - - - - -	1175
-------------------------	------

respond with me at 275 East Seventy-fifth Street North, Portland, Oregon.

A. C. MARTIN, Missionary Supervisor.

Department of Music

This is official notification of the appointment, with the approval of the First Presidency, of Sister Mabel Hall, 902 Broadway, Waterloo, Iowa, as chorister of the Eastern Iowa District. For Sister Hall we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of this district. Albert N. Hoxie, general director; Arthur H. Mills, secretary.

Cook Wanted

The Independence Sanitarium wants a good cook or dietitian who will be interested in building up the department and work for the interests of the Sanitarium. For particulars write to J. W. Chapman, superintendent of Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

Needs of the Children's Home

The Children's Home, at Lamoni, Iowa, is in need of clothing for boys from eight to twelve years of age: Suits, shoes, stockings, caps, and neckties. If any of the Saints find in going through their wardrobe that they have any of the above to spare, we would appreciate it greatly. Zilpha Monroe, superintendent.

Requests for Prayers

W. P. Bootman, who has just been undergoing a very severe attack of pneumonia, requests the prayers of the Saints that he may be restored to perfect health. One of his lungs has been left badly affected. He has faith in the prayers of the Saints.

Sister S. A. Bankester, of Bay Minette, Alabama, requests the prayers of the Saints. She is afflicted with eczema.

Births

Born to Levi and Mina Martin Burrows, November 9, 1921, a son, Harold Rudell Burrows, at Enoch Hill, Independence, Missouri.

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MAINE.—At Little Deer Isle, November 12 and 13. A. Beggs, district president was in the chair. H. A. Koehler chosen to preside, assisted by the district president. Ministerial and statistical reports were read. Bishop's agent's receipts were $981.84; expenditures, $1,250.05; balance due agent, $278.21. The following names were recommended for ordination and approved by the conference: Arthur Robbins, elder; William T. Eaton, deacon; and Eugene Black, deacon. Sunday afternoon was given over to the Sunday School Department. Time and place of next conference left with district officers. L. J. Eaton, clerk.

Our Departed Ones

MATHEWS.—Squire Nelson Mathews was born in Manla, Iowa, March 17, 1857. Married Effie Elmer Davenport, October 11, 1908. Baptized July 19, 1868. Leaves wife and one sister, Vie Blake of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Funeral in charge of B. J. Scott at his home in Independence, Missouri. Sermon by George Jenkins. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ANWAY.—James Franklin Anway was born December 25, 1871, at Ames, Iowa. Died at his home in Rhodes, Iowa, November 12. Baptized in his boyhood. Leaves wife and seven children, Ruby Sanders of Harcourt, Iowa; Fern Veach, Gladbrook, Iowa; Pearl Naylor, Scotch, Iowa; and Dale, Doris, Avis, and Nolen still at home. Funeral services from Saints' church. Sermon by J. A. Dowker. Interment in Eden Cemetery.

PORTER.—Nancy E., wife of C. H. Porter, was born in Jackson county, Missouri, October 27, 1847. Died in Wilber, Nebraska, October 1, 1921, after an illness of one year. Baptized about forty years ago. Her life has been one of true devotion and full of good works. Her husband being a missionary for twenty-four years she made the necessary sacrifices. Funeral in Saints' church; sermon by Samuel Brolliar.

GARD.—Evellyn I., daughter of Almon and Ina Gard of Independence, Missouri, was born November 18, 1921. Father, mother, and a host of relatives are left to mourn. Funeral services by J. C. Foss and C. D. Carson. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LARSON.—Flora, wife of Lewis Larson, was born August 21, 1862, at Nebraska City, Nebraska. Baptized in January, 1875. Died at Englewood, Missouri, November 16. A husband, three sons, and one daughter are left to mourn. Funeral services from the residence. Sermon by J. C. Foss, assisted by William Clow. Interment in Woodlawn Cemetery.

FRASER.—Mary J. Fraser was born July 28, 1861, at Saint Darling-ton Green, South Staffordshire, England. Baptized at Fall River, Massachusetts, June 7, 1896. Died at her home in Fall River, November 7. Funeral service conducted by Horatio W. Howlett. Interment in Oak Grove Cemetery.

DAVIES.—Eleanor Davies was born August 8, 1826, at Panteg, Llan-defelllog, Kidwelly, Carmarthen, Wales. Died October 6, at Llanelly, Carmarthenshire. Remains were brought to Llangendeirne. Funeral at the Church of England.

VANCE.—Allen Vance was born January 24, 1879, at Molesworth, Ontario. Moved to Spy Hill, Saskatchewan, in April, 1900. Married Emily Priscilla Turner in February, 1907. Baptized July 9, 1896. Brother Vance was killed, November 16, by his threshing outfit being thrown over from some unknown cause, and he was caught under the engine, causing instant death. His mother, wife, and six children are left to mourn. Funeral from Methodist church, sermon by W. B. Richards.

MILLER.—Susan Casselman Miller was born in Aurora, Illinois, February 15, 1845. Married Amos Miller July 4, 1865. Of their eight children, four are living: Harry D., James H., and Everett A., of Paris, Missouri, and Archie E., of Denver, Colorado. Baptized at the age of seventeen and has been a faithful and devoted Christian. Died at the home of her son Everett, November 22. Funeral sermon by C. H. Burr. Interment at Dwight.

BELT.—Martha Adeline Belt was born October 12, 1890, at Coalton, Ohio. Baptized at the age of fifteen and was a true and faithful worker. Married Earle L. Belt, of Springfield, Ohio, December 24, 1911. Died at the hospital April 13. Leaves husband, two daughters, Betty Jane, aged two, and Mary Magdalene, nine days; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Booth; one brother, and three sisters. Sermon by A. E. Anderton. Interment in Ferncliff Cemetery.

LEDSWORTH.—Mabel Irma Ledsworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Ledsworth, was born August 29, 1908, at Port Hope, Michigan. Died November 10, 1921, at the home of her parents, after an illness of ten days. Mother, father, and two sisters are left to mourn. Funeral services at the home. Sermon by Willard Parks, assisted by Thomas Rawson. Interment in Port Hope Cemetery.

Have You Subscribed for Autumn Leaves?

A few weeks ago we sent you a circular describing the many interesting features of Autumn Leaves for the coming year. Hundreds have responded and have ordered the Church Magazine for 1922. Have you?

Now is the time to send your subscription. What would be finer for a Christmas gift to yourself or your friends? Young people will be delighted and helped as well—by having this magazine throughout the year. Subscribe to-day—$1.75 for the year.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not save it be one wife have none."—Book of you have he shall

2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, DECEMBER 13, 1921

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879, weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

DEC 22 1921
WELLINGTON
CARL W. STONE
LITTLETON
NOV 50

EDITORIAL

Our Christmas Gifts

In view of the present financial stringency in the world which affects also the church, the Lamoni Stake Bishopric sent out a letter shortly after Thanksgiving making an appeal to the Saints of that stake for an extra effort, in order that the missionary forces as well as other necessary active officers, may be kept in the field. To do this, they urge compliance with the financial law; first, to pay tithing, a tithe of our increase; second, after the tithe, or one tenth has been paid, to pay our surplus, that which is not immediately needed; and third, if we have neither tithing nor surplus, we can at least aid with an offering.

This letter was followed under date of December 6, with the following:

"The holidays are at hand and no doubt you are debating in your mind what you are going to give your relatives and friends as a Christmas gift.

"May we kindly make the suggestion that you prayerfully consider the necessities of the financial department of our church when considering in your mind as to your gift?

"The church needs aid and must have it if we continue to send out our missionaries, take care of our poor, and continue the necessary activities.

"Why not make your Christmas gift to go towards sustaining the missionaries and the poor this year?

"Nothing you could do would please our heavenly Father more. In no way could you bring yourself so much true pleasure. It has been said that 'Zion shall be redeemed by sacrifice.' Let us do our part, so that when the Master comes we shall indeed be entitled to his commendation."

In this connection we may note the letter from Elder F. G. Pitt, making a like appeal on behalf of certain church institutions. And also we may again call attention to our editorial of last week. It is a time for a Christmas offering, not through the Sunday school alone, for that is to a special fund for a special purpose, but for a freewill offering as well as the paying of our tithing and surplus under the law, to the bishop, for the immediate work of the church and, especially, for the maintenance of the missionary force and care of the poor.

A simple card, in many cases, will assure our friends of our good will; and if our intentions are declared in time, they, also, will be encouraged to emulate our example and for one Christmas at least, to make their gifts to him and to his work on earth and, in this way, fulfill the angels' cry, "Peace on earth, good will to men," as well as "Glory to God in the highest." For we not only pray that his kingdom may come forth on earth to meet his kingdom when it shall come down from above; we not only pray that his Spirit may come forth and move upon the inhabitants of the earth, but we do what lies in our power to assist his messengers, the men whom he has appointed, to go out carrying the glad tidings of peace.

S. A. B.

Two Philosophies of Life

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday evening, October 30, 1921. Reported by Howard W. Harder.

My theme to-night is "Two philosophies of life in contrast." The worldly philosophy is stated in Luke 12: 19: "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." The philosophy of Christ is stated in the combination of two texts, "Quit yourselves like men, be strong"; and, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness." These texts are found in 1 Corinthians 16: 13, and in Matthew 6: 33.

These statements are in striking contrast, even before they are analyzed; and you will notice that they are philosophies in essence, either of them powerful enough to transform the lives of individuals, of nations, or of the entire race.

I need but to mention the very familiar illustration of the fall of Rome. There was a time when Rome ruled the world. Roman citizens were great soldiers, great senators, and great lawyers. Our modern law is inherited from Rome, and most of their principles were very well thought out. But there came a day when Roman men and women began to say to themselves, "What is the use of this unending toil, this stern self-denial and discipline? Come, let us take our ease, eat, drink, and be merry." And no one dare deny that they "worked at their philosophy." The decline and fall of Rome was so swift and terrible that it is yet a marvel of history.

The Trend of the Race?

That which happened to a nation may happen to an individual. It may even happen to the race as a whole. I have been reading a book called The Trend of the Race, by Doctor Samuel J. Holmes, of Berkeley. He is a believer in evolution, and while he believes that man has worked his way up through very long periods of hard toil, he says that men may degenerate and go down in a very short time; and he raises the question, Has that decline already begun? He suggests that in the past when one civilization fell because of its inherent vices, there was always a great reserve of unspoiled barbarians from which to build up another civilization. But now civilization has spread practically over the entire world, all nations being bound together in one common destiny, so if this civilization fails and goes down it will be, not a national, but a racial, calamity. If so it will be because men accept the philosophy of self-indulgence rather than the philosophy of self-development.

The Worldly Philosophy

Let us consider first of all this worldly philosophy. The modern rendition is something like this, "Come on, you only live once and you will be dead a long time; you may as well have a good time while you are at it"—which philosophy has more apostles than Christ ever ordained and sent out to preach his gospel.

We might inquire to-night, What institutions are the chief proponents of this worldly philosophy? Undoubtedly you will admit that one of them is the saloon, notorious for its appeal to gluttoning and drunkenness. The saloon temporarily has been driven under cover, but it is trying very hard to come back; and the liberty that is now granted in prescribing beer and wine in case of sickness without doubt will cause a great epidemic in this country.

With the saloon is associated its sister evils: the social evil, or commercialized immorality, and the very ancient institution of gambling, in all its forms.

The Dance Hall

I come next to institutions concerning which there may be some argument and some room for differences of opinion honestly held—the dance hall and the theater. I believe that the modern dance, particularly the public dance, is thoroughly imbued with this spirit of worldly philosophy. In speaking along this line I do not believe that we should upbraid or that we should denounce, or that we should be too rigorous in our attitude towards the young people; but I must say to-night the things that seem to me to be true, and you are here to weigh them and think them over, and if they appear to your intelligence as true, to accept them; but if they do not appeal to your intelligence as being logical, you are perfectly free to reject them. Every man is master of his own destiny.

I know that some people will argue that the dance may be taken into a proper environment and under supervision, and it will be all right. The trouble with that argument is that the modern dance is inherently wrong, and so cannot be made right by a change of environment or supervision. It is wrong first and last because of its deadly waste of time and energy and health, which are so valuable to you young people in your years of preparation; but more seriously, it is fundamentally wrong because it brings men and women together in spiritual and physical contacts which are wrong and cannot be anything but harmful.

Now, it is conceivable that you might go into the forest around Independence and catch the escaped black leopard which has terrorized the country for some weeks past. You might take it into your home, put a pink ribbon around its neck and call it a pussy cat, and you might "get by with it," but I do not think you would, because there is something fundamentally wrong. The temper and temperament of the leopard would not fit into your home. And it does not seem to me that the modern dance can be taken into the Latter Day Saint home without being considered as a doubtful experiment, to say the least.

I know that ministers are considered to be prejudiced along this line, and perhaps conscience-bound if not hide-bound, so I will read from the pen of a physician, Doctor James Foster Scott, graduate of Oxford and Edinburgh, and one time vice president of the Medical Association of the District of Columbia, whose book I have in my library. He says:

"There is a habit of laughing at ministers of the gospel who thunder out denunciations against dancing, but from a purely medical standpoint the customs of the ballroom are perfectly indefensible. . . . In opposing such a popular institution we tread on delicate ground indeed, so that we may anticipate the strongest disapproval from many quarters unless the subject is attentively analyzed. But from the well-informed physician, the humanitarian, the student of the times, and from the experienced men of the world, we confidently expect a unanimous verdict of approval. . . . This is no mere matter of opinion, but an incontrovertible fact, and those are blind indeed who cannot see that the modern ball, with every feature in its sensuous and seductive, is what we call a secondary sexual love feast, and that its present tendency is not in the direction of purity or a high civilization."—The Sexual Instinct, pp. 148, 156.

It is possible that the church was not so far wrong when it adopted General Conference Resolution No. 377, "Resolved, That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints."

The Question of the Theater

When we come to the question of the theater, we approach a subject where it seems to me the argument is a little different. The drama is not inherently bad, neither the motion picture show. They are neither moral nor immoral; they are unmoral. Their effect upon the community depends upon the message which they are made to carry. Appealing as the drama does to profound emotions through tragedy, romance, and comedy, it is quite capable of carrying a great message. But producers to-day as a rule are not at all interested in the message conveyed. They are solely concerned with the financial returns. The stage and the motion picture have been commercialized, and in order to get the most money from the exhibition they appeal to baser passions that will bring men and women to them as patrons. A clean show in a proper place may be all right, but the fact remains that possibly ninety per cent of the exhibitions are an entire and perhaps a dreary waste of the time, money, and energy of their patrons. Possibly seventy-five per cent of them are bad in that somewhere they appeal to that which is bad in human nature. I noticed an Associated Press dispatch which said that in the Parisian theaters actresses are now leaving off their already too filmy draperies and appearing clothed only in their personalities. The stage all the time crowds the limits of decency so far as public opinion will permit it to do so. I might again quote Doctor James Foster Scott on this subject:

"The modern stage is an important factor in debasing public opinion and sexually overstimulating the passions of a large number of individuals. . . . But we cannot fail to notice that a large majority of the modern plays and operas have as essential elements of the plot, or of the costuming, something which is unmistakably immoral, salacious, and erotic. In fact, there is a glorification of vice, and modesty and morality are put to shame. Lasciviousness and the waving of enchanting petticoats have largely replaced oratory and fine acting. . . . The modern stage is known to be the hotbed of impurity and divorce, and the actress of note who is not a divorcee or who has a clean reputation is the exception."—Ibid., pp. 156, 157, 160.

I think that the very most conservative statement we can make on this ground is that we ought to be careful, and that indiscriminating theater going, to "any old show," and excessive theater going, night after night, is bad. If you are to attend a show, by all means select a clean play in a respectable place.

Christ's Philosophy of Life

The worldly philosophy is the lazy man's philosophy, "Come, let us take our ease." It is the glutton's philosophy, "Let us eat." It is the inebriate's philosophy, "Let us drink." It is the fool's philosophy, "Let us be merry, for to-morrow we die."

In contrast to that philosophy comes the philosophy of Jesus Christ which is a philosophy of manhood, "Quit yourselves like men, be strong." If the Star-spangled Banner when it passes by commands every American citizen to stand up and uncover his head, the flag of Jesus Christ when it goes by says to all people, "Stand up and be men."

A Man in the House

I once heard a story of a boy who had reached his twenty-first birthday, and at midnight he aroused the people of the house by shouting, "There's a man in the house! There's a man in the house." When father and mother, brothers and sisters appeared with pistols and pokers they discovered that he was announcing his own manhood. My young brother, can you stand up and say to the world, "There's a man in this house"? Not merely a male creature twenty-one years old, but a real man, ready for a man's work in the world. Sister, can you say to all the world, "There's a woman in this house"? Not a fashion plate with the franchise, but a real woman, ready and willing to do a woman's work in the world.

What Is a Man's Work?

What is a man's work and what is a woman's work? I think some of the fundamental duties of a man are these: to prepare himself for a useful place in life; to build, maintain, and protect a home; to win the love of some good woman to whom he will be as true as the needle to the pole; and under normal conditions, with God's blessings, to rear children to succeed him; to be an honorable, industrious, and intelligent citizen of the church and state. And woman's duty in all things parallels man's. Each complements the other. If he is to provide the home, she is to keep the home. If he is to be the bread earner, she is to be the bread maker. These duties are not something that theologians have thought out and propounded. They are biological, and in the very nature of men and women have been placed on them.

Home Builders

You young people are the future home builders. There is no question that the world faces a crisis. There has been a breaking down of religion and morals. Statesmen as well as religious people, scientists and educators recognize that some sort of a crisis confronts them so stupendous and confusing that it cannot yet be analyzed. But it is here. You are to be the future home builders. The home safeguards civilization. You are to lay the hearthstones and rear the rooftrees of the future. You cannot build a home, you cannot build a family, you cannot build a life on the worldly philosophy of ease, self-indulgence, and seeking the easiest and pleasantest way. There is only one way in which it can be done and that is under the philosophy of Jesus Christ. Quit yourselves like men and women. Be strong.

A Philosophy of Work

If this is the philosophy of manhood and womanhood, it is also the philosophy of construction. "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness." There are many destructive elements in the world to-day, but the philosophy of Jesus Christ is constructive, "Seek ye first to build up and to establish."

It is the philosophy of work. Is work a curse? There has been a mistaken idea in the world that work is a curse that God pronounced on man in the garden of Eden. Work wasn't the curse; excessive toil was the curse. It was intended from the very beginning that man should work. We are told in the opening chapters of Genesis that God set man in the garden to dress it and tend it. It seems to be the will of God that man in cooperation with him should develop all of the fruits of the earth as well as the treasures of the earth. Go into the forest and pick a little, hard, bitter, wild crab apple and compare it with a beautiful Jonathan apple from Oregon and you will see what man has accomplished working with God. Burbank took a little wild daisy and with God as a partner he worked for twenty-five years to produce the beautiful Shasta daisy. God put the potentialities into the flower, but left man the task of developing them.

Gathering a Pound of Honey

Practically all living creatures work, with the exception of one class that I will mention later. Even the beasts of prey work. If you were compelled to run with the wolves from five to fifty miles at top speed to capture your supper you would think you had worked for it. Even the insects are workers. The ants are mining engineers and were before Solomon, who took them for a text: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard." Hornets and wasps are masons and paper makers. The honey bees have a monopoly on a very great industry. There are no union hours in a beehive. Bees never ponder Hamlet's famous question, "To be, or not to be?" They bee all the time. In making a single pound of honey the bees in a given hive are said to visit sixty thousand flowers. This is not improbable, as a minute quantity of very thin nectar comes from each flower. They gather the honey and freight it by airplane, traveling a total distance of five million miles. Sister, the next time you feel weary and discouraged with your housework and see a honey bee "idling in the clover," greet her as a member of the guild of women workers. All honey bees are women workers—the men bees do no work, so when winter comes they don't eat, which is Zionitic: "The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer." The bees worked out some of the principles of Zion long before Enoch built his city.

A Bluebird's Work

Sometimes we hear people say, "How free the birds are!" But the birds work. Ornithologists tell us that in the single State of Massachusetts, which is not a very large State, every day in the summer twenty-one thousand bushels of noxious bugs and worms are gathered and destroyed by song birds. If you think that is not work, go out some day and pick a pint of bugs.

I am told that bluebirds rear three families each summer, which means that they build three homes. Again, ornithologists say that not unusually a pair of song birds will make two hundred trips a day gathering food for their fledglings. If you were to go to the uptown market two hundred times daily for provisions you would think you were working. So the next time you see a bluebird flitting among the trees like a bit of blue sky fallen from heaven, greet him as "camerad." He has his blue overalls on and is doing a bluebird's work.

Ignoble Parasites

Practically all living creatures work, with the exception of one class—parasites. The man who is able to work and will not work puts himself in the ignoble fraternity of tapeworms, cooties, and other such creatures. No matter how much money a man has in Zion, if he is physically and mentally able to work and won't work he has no right to eat in Zion.

Some one might ask, "Is it to be all work and no play, or is it to be all work and no recreation?" I think that of late years the church has made herself clear along that line. We are in favor of legitimate recreation. At our reunions we have had various kinds of recreation: baseball, basket ball, volley ball, quoits, tennis, swimming, etc. All wholesome recreations are good, but you must bear in mind the place recreation has in life. It is a diversion from the strain of a man's legitimate work. His work is the big thing in life. When man makes pleasure and recreation the objective in life it does not recreate; it becomes not constructive, but rather destructive.

The philosophy of Jesus Christ is the philosophy of righteousness, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness." You may wonder how you can build up the kingdom of God. Jesus said, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." When you in your own person reach a point where you are willing to do the will of God on earth as it is done in heaven, you have added one person to the kingdom of God on earth. A man who does that is pretty sure to have an interest and an influence that will enable him to help others, and in that way also he will build up the kingdom of God.

Your Choice

I have briefly presented in contrast these two philosophies—philosophies in essence, as I have said, and capable of expansion. It remains for you to make your choice, and particularly the young people who may be standing to-day in the "valley of decision." And in making your choice I want to admonish you to make it not only wisely but to make it permanently. This church has had altogether too many quitters. When you make your choice, do so with the idea that so long as life lasts you will abide by your decision.

I beg of you young people to look around you and see the folly and the fears and misery of those who "ran well for a season" and then fell away, and make up your mind like adamant to serve God all the days of your life and not let some temptation, idle rumor, or disaffection turn you aside from the work you began so hopefully.

It seems to me that the contrast of these two philosophies does not leave much doubt in your minds concerning what the choice ought to be. If the worldly philosophy is that of the lazy man, the glutton, the inebriate, and the fool, the philosophy that has always been the philosophy of wasters and spenders and spoilers, in contrast the philosophy of Jesus Christ is the philosophy of manhood and womanhood and Godliness.

As I have presented the matter, there may appear to be no question, and it might seem a reflection upon your intelligence to ask you to choose. But I have not presented the philosophy of the world in an attractive light, but rather in its true light. You will meet many persons who will present it in an attractive light—sophists who can make black appear white, vice seem virtue, dishonor seem honorable, and shame a thing to boast about. Some men are proud of the things they should be ashamed of. When you hear such pleadings you will need intelligence and backbone to make a wise decision and stand by it.

Be True to Your Own Soul

I make this plea to you to-night—I do not ask you to be true to the church. I do not ask you to be true to your father or mother, your brother or sister, your wife or sweetheart, or even God. I just ask you to be true to yourself, because this philosophy appeals to all that is good and wholesome and admirable and enduring and noble in your own souls and you know it. There is a good deal of truth in a statement that you will find in Hamlet, the advice of old Polonius to his son, "To thine own self be true; and it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man." If you will be true to all that is good in you, I am sure that you will be true to the church, true to your father and mother, true to sister and brother, and wife and sweetheart, and true to God.

Elder D. J. Krahl, president of Holden Stake, who was stricken with paralysis at his home in Holden, Missouri, is doing very well under treatment had by local physicians. He was visited by Doctor G. L. Harrington, who considered that under the circumstances it would not be necessary to have him removed to the Sanitarium at Independence.

Patriarch Ammon White recently closed a series of meetings at Springfield, Missouri, lasting three weeks, with excellent interest and eight baptisms. Others are expecting to be baptized, and the revival of interest among the Saints is especially noteworthy.

Who Should Pay Tithing

The law of tithing applies to all.

It would seem that with the numerous articles which have appeared in the HERALD the past few years that this question should have been fully answered and clearly understood. So long as it is a payment from increase, it is evident that it is from those who have increase who should pay. The position taken by the Bishopric is that all we have is from the Lord and that we should, therefore, pay tithing on all we possess. There are some who take opposition to this and think that only the rich should pay tithing, but the difficulty with that interpretation is to determine who is rich. We know that all we receive belongs to the Lord, whether it comes to us by purchase from our earnings, by inheritance, or by gifts, and a tenth is the Lord's.

When we come to consider those who are well-to-do, we have known some to save more on $50 a month than others have on $500. We have known of a man and wife to be always short, no matter what salary he was drawing. We have known men worth $50,000, to $100,000 who have been "too poor" to pay car fare. If it were a matter of beneficial exercise, of course, this conclusion would be drawn. The above, therefore, is a safe rule: One tenth of our possessions is the Lord's, and one tenth of our increase annually.

But when we come to consider our increase we must take into consideration expenditures also. Evidently only expenditures for necessities on a minimum basis, should be deducted from our income before we figure our tithing. There are some who can spend $1,000 a month and are doing so, though we do not call to mind anyone in the church who comes within that class; but there are some who spend large amounts for food and clothing and shelter.

Evidently, if justice is to be done, it is a minimum expenditure that should be first deducted before tithing is paid.

And who is exempt? The law of stewardship applies to the officers of the church; it applies to the Bishop and his agents. The law of tithing also applies to all. Every man, whether he is working for the church, for himself, or for another, should carefully consider his income, expenditure, and increase for the year, and should bear his share of the burden of the tithe payer.

We have known some of the ministry who have felt that because they are giving their time to the ministry they are exempt from paying tithing. If the income is barely large enough for the necessities of life, this is true; but if the income from other sources is in excess of real necessities, food, clothing, shelter, fuel, taxes, and health, then a tithe is due to the Lord and his church. A bookkeeper who is working for the church, but at a salary comparative to what he would receive elsewhere, owes tithing as much or a little more than does a bookkeeper in a like situation in the world. It is a time when we should examine ourselves, examine our expenditures, and consider how the Lord has blessed us, that we may justly deserve his continued blessings because, as wise stewards, we render our accounting and pay that which is due as rent for the use of the things with which he has endowed or which he has placed in our hands.

The New Catalogue

A new illustrated price list of publications is being mailed from the Herald Publishing House this week and we are glad to note that it is the most comprehensive production of its kind that has gone out from the institution.

In style and size of page it is the same as the issues that

(Continued on page 1198.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Sword or Cross

By C. A. Smurthwaite

Sermon delivered Sunday, November 27, 1921, at the Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri.

The scripture lesson consisted of the following synthetic readings from the Bible:

"Prepare war; wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plow shares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong."—Joel 3: 9.

"The word of the Lord came to me, saying, Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build a house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight."—1 Chronicles 22: 8.

"My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace. I am for peace: but when I speak they are for war."—Psalms 120: 6.

"He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire. . . . All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. . . . All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name. . . ."—Psalms 46: 9; 22: 27; 86: 9.

"In the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come and say, Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his path. . . . And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it."—Micah 4: 1-4.

"This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zechariah 4: 6.

"And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest, and smote off his ear. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into its place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."—Matthew 26: 51.

"He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity, he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."—Revelation 13: 10.

Limitation of Armaments

The great men of the nations from afar, which God hath judged and rebuked, are assembled in the capital of the freest and most favored among nations, even at Washington, in our own United States, to mobilize not men, nor arms, but the statesmen of the nations of the earth for ultimate peace, believing that this can be achieved by the limitation of armaments, the implements of war.

The nations some years ago prepared for war, they woke up their mighty men, they demanded that all men should be men of war, that even the weak should say, "I am strong," and that the nations should one and all "beat their plowshares into swords and their pruning hooks into spears," in fulfillment of Joel's prophecy; and now the nations are starving; babies and women and men by the millions are dying for want of food; and other men and women and children are without the necessities of life, the bare necessities, bread and roofs over their heads, because of this wanton destruction that went on for years. Men are out of work and women are in tears. Civilization is in the balance and threatens collapse. All the arts of peace were sacrificed for the universal destruction of war. The world is reaping the natural harvest. And now the statesmen of the earth, seeing final destruction appearing like a huge cyclone on the prairie, think they can curtail the size and horrors of war by limiting the amount of the terrible weapons which the Devil has inspired men to invent.

God Desires Man to Have Opportunity

"Gospel" means good tidings of deliverance from every form of evil. The design of the Creator for man is that he shall have a chance to live usefully and happily. That he shall not be cut short by sickness or premature death. That he shall not be deprived of the fruition of his labor by causes beyond his control. That he shall not be made afraid, but he shall live unafraid, fulfilling his mighty destiny, "made but little lower than the angels, to have dominion over the works of God's hands . . . over the precious things of the earth."

War has the opposite effect. It brings every form of evil that afflicts mankind and prevents the realization of his hopes and God's design for man. It brings sickness and premature death; it robs man of the chance to live usefully and happily. It deprives him of the fruition of his labor; it makes him afraid; terror lives in his heart; his means of livelihood and his home are taken away; his loved ones are reduced to penury; degradation, and vice, and misery are its harvest. It is the vilest monster of all which God and all good men seek to put under foot once and for all.

We who live in America, our America, far removed from Europe, can have practically no idea of the disturbance which resulted in the normal life of the nations by reason of the late war. Figures give us a faint idea, and we propose this morning to cite some statistics to that end.

Europe was a country of manless homes during the war. We are not going to deal with Britain, but with continental Europe. When we say "Europe" we mean continental Europe, not Britain. Well, then, here are some astonishing figures.

Mobilization Totals

France, with a population one third that of the United States, mobilized between six and seven millions of soldiers. Contrast that with the United States. We mobilized only four millions. Our proportion to population would have been twenty millions. We all know how our normal life was disturbed by our mobilization. Just try to think of the disturbance and demoralization which must have come to France. Juvenile courts will tell you what it means to have the men away from home. It means delinquency. The father is the steadying factor of the family life; his place is supreme; nothing can take his place. Just imagine, if you can, but I doubt that you can, what must have been the result in France to be deprived of its fathers for four and a half years. Vice, crime; men's minds unsettled. The years when character is formed, for weal or woe, good or evil, from eight to sixteen years of age, the father absent from home, and bloodshed and destruction, and deprivation of all sorts, the subject matter of conversation. Such conditions must have disastrous results in the molding of the character of the young. What is true of France, is true also of the rest of Europe. The number of men lost in Europe is put in excess of ten millions. Just think of the widowhood and orphanhood. One writer says that probably not for a century will there be a man in Europe but who can look back and say, "How different life might have been for me if I had not lost my father in the great war!" In every street of every city in Europe you see the widow's veil and some of the more than a million of cripples. Think of the demoralization coming into the minds, into the thinking and lives of the millions of refugees who were deprived of their homes and their all. France had two millions. Belgium about a million. Italy half a million. Greece several hundred thousand. It is impossible to compute the millions of refugees of Serbia, Rumania, Russia, Austria, and the small nations associated with these. Nobody knows how many millions.

It is estimated a total of twelve millions of people were driven from their homes, and were cast upon the communities to which they walked, carrying their wearying bundles, all they had left in the world. All their standards of thought knocked to pieces; all the ways of living that they had learned through the centuries, of decency, of cleanliness, of education to their children, all their standards, knocked into smithereens; and they were living in any way they could to get along for four years and a half. One can hardly form any idea what all that means. But that is not all. After the war they went back to their native places, to find devastated areas, their homes destroyed, perhaps only the cellar left, dark, cold, gloomy, damp, their underground home the blasted heritage of war. And just think of the condition of the millions of those who were left behind in the territories occupied by the enemy armies. Think of the oppressions, their food and clothing confiscated, their fuel and supplies and everything taken from them; their mode of living reduced to the lowest possible minimum. The German armies occupied territories containing six millions in Belgium, three millions in France, four and one half millions in Serbia, one million in Italy, five and three quarter millions in Rumania, and twenty-two millions in Russia. A total of forty-two millions of people living under the military occupation of the enemy. Think, if you can, of what all that means. It is estimated that in Italy thirty-three millions of people actually suffered for lack of food, and in Greece, Serbia, and Rumania practically the whole of the population. We suffered somewhat for lack of food ourselves. We all remember it. It was nothing comparatively, but it was very annoying and inconvenient.

Losses by Disease and Low Birth Rate

And now we have to deal a few moments with the disease entailed, and the loss of births. Tuberculosis increased twenty-five per cent in two years. Malaria, typhoid fever, typhus became epidemic in many places. Typhus alone in Serbia cost 150,000 lives. And the influenza! That was a direct result of the war. We know something of its ravages in our country. It fell to my lot to officiate at several funerals, standing in the snow over the shoe tops, to say a few words of comfort to the bereaved, and utter a few feeble prayers. It broke out in eastern Europe and spread through the world. Italy lost three times as many people from the influenza as we did. Serbia lost a fifth of her population. Our proportion would have meant twenty-two millions. But we were far away from the actual scene and escaped, bad as it was with us, virtually we escaped. The birth rate fell off in Europe fifty per cent. The actual shortage of births is placed at ten millions. And it will go on for many more years, because birth shortage is caused by lower standards of living, shortage of income, bad housing, and the like. The fact is, this stupendous war brought the world more problems than any other factor in the world's history. We had better mobilize our wise men, our statesmen, our experts! And we had better not leave God out of the calculation, either. He is in his world, and he will help if we will let him. He hates war; he is for peace, but when he speaks we are for war. Let us set our faces against war and for peace. Let us speak with unmistakable voice. Let us remember the rebuke of the Lord to many nations in this war.

How can war be abolished? By the reduction of armaments? No! Reduction of armaments never will abolish war. It will merely save money. That is surely important enough, and it is a step in the right direction that may ultimately lead to the abolition of armaments altogether. May God hasten the day! But if I have two guns for "defense," and throw one away, that doesn't guarantee that I would not kill a man when the emergency might arise. The mere retention of the one gun proves that I propose to kill if necessary for my "defense." I've forgotten that he who would "save his life shall lose it." "Put up thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." "He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword." The indefeasible words of Jesus Christ.

There is but one sure way to abolish war, and that is to convert men to Christ. When we realize that God made all nations of one blood (Acts 17:21); that we are all of one body; that we are every one of us members one of another; that when one suffers, individual or nation, we all suffer; then, and not until, will we refuse to kill one another individually or nationally.

What Paul gave us two thousand years ago as a spiritual concept, the great Russian biologist, Janiski, probably the greatest biological authority alive, shows is true, i. e., that we are literally of one blood; and a deduction made from his discovery shows that "each one within him has a small portion of the living substances belonging to every one of the human beings living five hundred years ago."

To realize this unity with the Creator, and with his Son, Jesus Christ, spiritually, war must be abolished. Why? Because war destroys the spirituality of the world, it destroys the brotherhood, it retards the progress of civilization, it takes God out of human calculations, it inspires hatreds, and divides nations and races. When we begin to think the millennium is in sight the Devil plays his last card and brings on war, and visions of the coming new day, the day of brotherhood, vanish like snow before a July sun.

We have given some figures relating to the human costs of the last war. We now propose to quote some official figures showing the monetary cost of war. I shall quote from the Literary Digest for November 12, 1921, and if you have not gotten that magazine already, go and buy that number: it is filled with statistics, authoritative and exceedingly valuable and illuminating. It shows that in the year 1913 a young man with a wife and three small children paid to the national government in taxes the average sum of $33, while in 1921 his taxes would amount to $214. Don't you think that itself retards the progress of civilization? It is the difference between war and peace.

This exhibit of the financial cost of war shows that in the year 1920 the United States, our own country, the most peaceful country in the world, a pacific country, spent an amount of money which equals the total revenue of the Reorganized Church for 5,780 years for past wars, and a sum which equals the revenue of our church for a period of 2,698 years, for preparations for future wars, a total expenditure in one year for war purposes which equals the grand total revenue of the Reorganized Church, computed at $500,000 a year, for a period of 8,478 years, a date long antedating the birth of Adam in the garden of Eden, according to Bible chronology. It also shows that for every one hundred cents which you and I paid to the national revenues the Government spent but fractionally over one cent for educational purposes, and about six cents for all other administrative purposes, including the alleged graft. Just think of it, my friends, 93 cents for war purposes, one cent for education, and six cents for all other purposes! It's a disgrace to the people of the United States.

Just imagine, if you can, what might be accomplished in the arts of peace and for the advancement of civilization were the expenditures for war done away with and the money used for humanitarian purposes.

We Must Oppose War

Latter Day Saints must be opposed to war, for they are the only people who cannot escape responsibility towards God when they engage in it, for they believe they have a direct revelation from God commanding them not to go into battle unless he commands. Listen! Here are the words found in Doctrine and Covenants 95:6: "This is the law I gave unto mine ancients, that they should not go into battle against any nation, tongue, or people, save I, the Lord, commanded them . . . this is an ensample unto all people, the Lord your God, for justification before me."

Where war exists the few are lifted upon the backs of the many into a high plane of existence, while the many live in poverty and misery, or at best suffer great inconveniences for the actual necessities of life, not to speak of the cultural needs. The design of the gospel on the contrary is that every man should live on a high plane without constraint or oppression, the master of himself.

Our America is the "mountain of the Lord," it is exalted above the "hills"—all other nationalities. It is the Zion of the world, in which all nations should flow for wisdom, and for the word of the Lord, and our greatest opportunity to realize this mighty position is to abolish all preparations for war. Show the nations that there is nothing to be afraid of; that at least we are not afraid. There is nothing to be afraid of, I repeat, except this constant preparation for war on the part of ourselves and the other nations of the earth.

Listen! If the preparations for war continue to go on it will mean that our enemies could kill all the inhabitants of New York and the cities of the Atlantic coast before we would be aware of it. And we likewise might go forth before our enemies were aware of what we were doing and kill all the inhabitants of London or Paris or Berlin. It would be done by the invisible gases that have been invented as a result of the past war—they were all ready to be put into operation before the armistice—exploded from manless aeroplanes guided from the enemies' shore. It would be possible to kill by the wholesale, not soldiers but innocent noncombatants, men, women, and children, innocently asleep in their beds, without the enemy losing a single man. Literally true would be the word of the Lord: "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," meaning all the implements of war, for, my friends, it is we, you and I, the citizenship, which take the sword when we mobilize our armies against our enemies: the soldiers are merely our agents in the matter. I repeat, it is we who take the sword, and it is we to whom Christ spoke in those memorable words which I have just quoted. "Put up the sword" is the command of Christ—it isn't counsel—it's a command to us and all mankind, to all nations; and the present international assembly of nations should be urged to abolish war preparations and armaments altogether. They should be urged to adopt the method of the Cross.

Christ was rejected because he refused to fight Cæsar, to exterminate the Roman power. He knew that ultimate freedom does not come by way of war. He was familiar with the scripture: "Not by [human] might, nor by [human] power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." He knew that real freedom comes only from change in the hearts of men; that real freedom is personal. That after all it is not a racial problem, this problem of freedom; it is not national or international, but personal in the last analysis. Herein is the responsibility; herein is the faith of the Saints. Cæsar, free, exercising dominion over the earth's millions, was still shackled by his many passions. Paul, loaded with chains on his way to Rome, knew no master save One. Pilate, with his diadem of gold, the apotheosis of human power, was a slave: he could not release Jesus though he found no fault in him. While Jesus, crowned only with thorns, was free. "If the Son shall make you free, you shall be free indeed!"

Fought for Freedom and Secured Tyranny

The nations fought for freedom. But did they get it? No; but a tyranny far stronger than might have been the cruelties and the oppressions of the enemy. The newspapers every day bear witness to this fact. Autocracy is not the only enemy of mankind. Mobocracy is worse than autocracy. Sin and vice and crime are the worst enemies of all. Nor can the nations find freedom until they achieve it in following the principles of Christ to their ultimate. Return good for evil; mercy for cruelty; kindness for atrocity; love for hatred. That is the way of the cross. "Take up thy cross and follow me" is still the supreme word of Christ to men and nations. It will not do to go a little way with Jesus. We must go all the way or we are condemned. It will not do to limit armaments; they must be abolished.

Christianity to-day is confronted with the challenge of war or peace; of Devil or Christ; of sword or cross. That is the challenge confronting the statesmanship of the world as it is assembled in our capital city of Washington. They must make the choice: it is Devil or Christ. Never has an assembly of statesmen been confronted with so momentous an issue. Will they decide for Christ? They will probably reduce armaments some. But they will not abolish them—yet. They will delude themselves into thinking they can have little wars, when they want them, to exploit "weaker," "backward" peoples. The statesmen are still thinking of war while God is talking peace. And they will continue to think of war until the mothers of the world tell these statesmen that they will teach their children from birth to hate war in all its horrible aspects, and to hate the men who fail to bring peace. The war thoughts of the world must be changed, converted into thoughts of peace, that peace which Christ came to bring.

The psychologists will tell you it is a matter of psychology. It is. Change the thoughts of the people from war to peace and war would end. And how can that be accomplished? It seems like the responsibility is with the mothers of the world. After people are grown into men and women with thoughts of war as the only method in international disputes, and essential to the development and progress of the race, their psychology cannot be changed, as it would appear. If I thought my prayer could be answered, in this thing, I would pray that I might die to-night, and be incarnated to-morrow a woman, who would bear sons, and I would teach them as I nursed them at the breast, and would continue to teach them, to hate, to abhor war, and to suffer all things rather than engage in it. I would teach them that we are all of one blood, all the nations of the earth, that all men are their brothers, and to kill a man of foreign birth even in war is as killing one's own brother. I would teach my sons that we are all one in Christ, and that unless we are all one we are not his. I would teach them that the promise of Almighty God, through his prophet Micah, that "they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid" cannot be realized until "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

At the present time men and nations are all afraid. They are in terror; statesmen and peasants alike. And well they may be. And yet they have the solution in their own keeping.

Our mission is to stir men's souls to the horrors and the wrongs and the crime of war, in the sight of Almighty God; to teach men the arts of peace; to bring to men righteousness and truth. To make real and vital and literal the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

The issue is: Sword or Cross.

Frugality and Thrift

By A. Carmichael

We must lay a firm foundation that will stand whether assailed by prosperity or poverty.

In certain periods of the history of the world, particular virtues must be emphasized. Not that these virtues are not always required of us, but in our mad race for the material things of the world we wittingly or unwittingly ruthlessly push these virtues to one side, forgetting that we shall have strictly to account sometime and somewhere for our delinquency in this regard.

The Curbing of Our Wants

One of the essential things to be observed by the Saints is carefully to watch their expenditures.

On every hand we see people who are spending their means faster than they can accumulate, living beyond their income until the inevitable crash comes. The payment of their debts is of little concern to them. They "let the other fellow worry over the debts." Thrift is tabooed as being out of date. Frugality is sneered at. They think only of having their "ding." It takes no prophet to foretell the end. Well have we been warned to "be not conformed . . . to the world."

The redemption of Zion perforce must have men of character: men who have learned to control their passions, to curb their unnecessary wants—no matter how successful they are financially.

Zion cannot be redeemed unless it is through the celestial law, one of which is that a man should have his "needs and just wants" supplied—anything more than this cometh of evil.

It is a fallacy to suppose that our increased earning powers always allow us to increase our "needs and just wants." This may or may not be so. It is so much easier for us to think it is so and spend unworthily. Let every Saint who really expects to abide the presence of the Master, right here put a strict guard on his actions.

A Saint cannot afford either knowingly or unknowingly to fail at this critical juncture. Everlasting vigilance will be needed on his part to keep all unnecessary wants curbed. All around him the example of the spendthrift is being flaunted. Only a stern determination on his part will bring him through unscathed. It can be done. It has been done.

Thrift and Frugality Demonstrated

The late World War demanded of each one of us a strict surveillance over our expenditures.

The great majority of us readily, yes, gladly, responded to this call. Our love for our country was the only incentive we needed. The few who did not respond patriotically did so because of public opinion. They felt the sting of shame too keenly to be called "slackers."

In every possible way we saved. How easy it was for us to do so! The fate of Democracy hung in the balance. No task was too arduous, no sacrifice too great. If we had it to do again we would do so unhesitatingly. The end was well worth the means.

A Spiritual Warfare

Every Latter Day Saint should remember that this work is a "warfare." Our fight is the "fight of faith." (1 Timothy 6: 12.) "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." (Ephesians 6: 12.)

We willingly saved and sacrificed for our country. How much more willingly should we do so for our Father.

Zion must be redeemed. Only her friends may be expected to do this work. The world is not her friend, and from the world we may not expect any succor.

As the "friends" of Zion, let us rally to her support. Let it not again be said, "I was wounded in the house of my friends."

Just as we cut down all unnecessary expenditures to save democracy for the world, let us do so again to save Zion for the world.

This very grave responsibility rests upon us, her friends. Well has it been said that those gathering shall be the ones who have made a covenant by sacrifice. When prosperity smiles upon us, let us not forget our God, but still closely watch our every act so that we shall be in his favor.

How to Start to Save

Go over your expense account and honestly cut out everything that you can do without. Determine in your mind to put yourself on a budget basis just as soon as you can. The missionary force of our church is now and has been for a good many years working on the budget plan. They do it because it is the best way to live frugally and thus live in harmony with the celestial law. Surely it is not asking too much of the members to do the same thing.

The ministry is not saying, "Go and do this," but "Come, follow us! let us all be coworkers in the redemption of Zion."

Making a budget will no doubt be a task for a while. Don't try the first thing to determine exactly how much you are to spend for groceries, clothing, etc., for the coming month or year. After keeping, in a simple way, an itemized record of the amount you have spent and for what, you will be able in a year or so to make a fairly good budget. Get in touch with the bishop of your stake and district, who, no doubt, will gladly aid you.

To the end that we shall always be able to contribute liberally to the progress of the work, there should be a definite and determined policy on the part of each of us to give consistently to the Lord. If we are prospered, let us give a larger percentage to the work of the church rather than gratify personal desires. The principles of stewardship which we hope to demonstrate require that we consider our methods of living and the standards by which we judge our requirements as of importance not only to ourselves but to all our fellow members.

Furthermore, the demands of the hour are urgent, and we must sacrifice even more than we have. Let it be done on the basis of frugality and thrift.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

MATERNITY BILL INDORSED

Provisions of Maternity Bill, now a law, accepted in advance by six States.

On the day before Thanksgiving, President Harding signed the "Maternity Bill," providing for Federal cooperation with the States in promoting the welfare of maternity and infancy. After more than three years of struggle, the bill was passed by both houses of Congress by overwhelming votes. The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor is given the administration of the act, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau is made the executive officer. A board of Maternity and Infant Hygiene, consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon-General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education, is given certain powers of review and approval. A total appropriation of $1,480,000 is authorized for the current fiscal year, and an appropriation of $1,240,000 for each of five years thereafter. Except for a very small percentage to be used for administrative purposes, the money is to be divided among the States accepting the provisions of the act, to be used, together with State funds, for promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

So eagerly was the passage of the bill awaited, that at least six States in the 1921 sessions of their legislatures passed laws accepting the Act, if it should become a law, and authorizing a State board or division to cooperate with the Federal Government. These States include Delaware, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, and South Dakota. The rest of the States will not have to wait until the next regular session of their legislatures, for the law provides that if the legislature has not acted, the Governor may, in so far as the laws of his State permit, accept the provisions of the Act and authorize a State agency to cooperate with the Children's Bureau until the legislature has had opportunity to act. More than thirty States have child welfare or child hygiene divisions in their State Boards of Health, and in these States the law provides that its administration shall be in the hands of these divisions. Any State desiring to benefit from the Act must submit to the Children's Bureau detailed plans for its administration, and these plans are subject to approval of the Federal Board of Maternity and Infant Hygiene.

How much money will a State accepting the act receive from the Federal Government to be used in making maternity and infancy more safe? In the first place, $10,000 the first year, and $5,000 a year thereafter will be paid each State indicating its desire to cooperate. An additional $5,000 will be paid providing the State appropriates $5,000 of its own for the same purpose. That makes a total of $15,000 the first year and $10,000 a year for each year thereafter available from Federal funds to each State regardless of its size. In addition $710,000 a year is provided to be distributed among the States on the basis of population, providing the amounts thus apportioned are matched by State appropriations.

The act contains specific clauses protecting parents in their right to liberty of action, and providing that the States shall take the initiative in preparing and carrying out plans.

Israel in the North

By John Smith

Quotations and references for those who wish to make a study of the subject.

"Go and proclaim these words toward the north and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine angels to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever. . . . In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."—Jeremiah 3: 12, 18.

"Therefore behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. But, the Lord liveth, that brought the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them; and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."—Ibid., 16: 14, 15.

"Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them, and they shall dwell in their own land."—Ibid., 23: 7, 8.

"For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations; publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together; a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them; I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born."—Ibid., 31: 7, 8, 9.

"And whereas thou sawest that he gathered another multitude unto him, These are the ten tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land in the time of Hosea King whom Salmansar the King of Assyria led away captives and he carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country where never mankind dwelt, That they might there keep their statutes which they never kept in their own land, and they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river, For the most high shewed signs for them and held still the flood till they were passed over. For through that country there was a great way to go, namely a year and a half; and the same region is called Aisareth. Then dwelt they there until the latter time; and now when they shall begin to come, The highest shall stay the springs of the stream again, that they may go through therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace."—Esdras 13: 39, 47.

The following quotations are from the Authorized Edition of the Book of Mormon of 1911, published by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:

The words of Jesus:

"And not at any time hath the Father given me commandment, that I should tell it unto your brethren at Jerusalem; neither at any time hath the Father given me commandment, that I should tell unto them concerning the other tribes of the house of Israel, whom the Father hath led away out of the land."

"This much did the Father command me, that I should tell unto them, that other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. And now because of stiff-neckedness and unbelief, they understood not my word; therefore I was commanded to say no more of the Father concerning this thing unto them. But verily, I say unto you, that the Father hath commanded me, and I tell it unto you, that ye were separated from among them because of their iniquity; therefore it is because of their iniquity that they know not of you. And verily, I say unto you again, that the other tribes hath the Father separated from them; and it is because of their iniquity, they know not of them. And verily, I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."—3 Nephi 7: 15-20.

"But behold, ye have both heard my voice, and seen me, and ye are my sheep, and ye are numbered among those whom the father hath given me. And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister. For they of whom I speak, are they who have not as yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself to them. But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice, and shall be numbered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to shew myself unto them. And I command you that ye shall write these sayings, after I am gone, that if it so be that my people at Jerusalem, they who have seen me and been with me in my ministry, do not ask the Father in my name, that they may receive a knowledge of you by the Holy Ghost, and also of the other tribes whom they know not of. That these sayings which ye shall write; shall be kept, and shall be manifested unto the Gentiles, that through the fullness of the Gentiles, the remnant of their seed who shall be scattered forth upon the face of the earth, because of their unbelief, may be brought in, or may be brought to a knowledge of me their Redeemer. And then will I gather them in from the four quarters of the earth; and then will I fulfill the covenant which the Father hath made unto all the people of the house of Israel."—3 Nephi 7: 23-29.

"But now I go unto the Father, and also to shew myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them."—3 Nephi 8: 4.

"And they are they who were scattered and gathered in from the four quarters of the earth, and from the north countries, and are partakers of the fulfilling of the covenant which God made with their father, Abraham."—Ether 6: 12.

"Have ye obtained a Bible, save it were by the Jews? Know ye not that there are more nations than one? Know ye not that I, the Lord your God, have created all men, and that I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea; and that I rule in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and I bring forth my word unto the children of men, yea even upon all the nations of the earth? Wherefore murmur ye, because that ye shall receive more of my word? Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another, and when the two nations shall run together, the testimony of the two nations shall run together also. And I do this that I may prove unto many, that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and that I speak forth my words according to mine own pleasure. And because that I have spoken one word, ye need not suppose that I cannot speak another: for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be, until the end of man; neither from that time henceforth and forever. Wherefore, because that ye have a Bible, ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written; for I command all men, both in the east, and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them. For out of the books which shall be written, I will judge the world, every man according to their works, for behold, I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth and they shall write it, and it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews: and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel, and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews. And it shall come to pass that my people which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will shew to them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham, that I would remember his seed for ever."—2 Nephi 12: 54-74.

"Prepare ye for the coming of the bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him, for, behold, he shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, and upon the mighty ocean even the great deep, and upon the islands of the sea, and upon the land of Zion; and he shall utter his voice out of Zion, and he shall speak from Jerusalem, and his voice shall be heard among all people, and it shall be a voice as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder, which shall break down the mountains, and the valleys shall not be found; he shall command the great deep and it shall be driven back into the north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided. And the Lord even the Savior shall stand in the midst of his people, and shall reign over all flesh. And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence, and an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. . . . And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5, 6.

"For, behold, and lo, [speaking of the mission of Jesus] he shall come, as it is written in the book of the prophets to take away the sins of the world, and to bring salvation unto the heathen nations, to gather together those who are lost, who are of the sheepfold of Israel; yea, even the dispersed and afflicted; and also to prepare the way, and make possible the preaching of the gospel unto the Gentiles."—Luke 3: 5, 6.

Isaiah 11: 11, 12, 15, 16: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria. . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. . . . And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian Sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make man go over dry shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt."

"Another parable spake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened."—Matthew 15: 32.

This will have its fulfillment when the lost tribes come, and in their record it will be the same gospel that Jesus preached to them. The passages from the Bible are from the Inspired Translation.

More on Former and Latter Rains

By C. W. Prettyman

A review of the basis for the general ideas on the restoration of Palestine.

In my early acquaintance with the faith and doctrine of the church, it seemed to be the belief of the Saints that the land of Israel and Judah had been cursed because of the wickedness of the people, and the rain had been withheld from the land of their inheritance and the people smitten and scattered among all the nations of the earth. The Jews themselves and other prominent thinkers and writers have shared in the belief that misfortune and disaster of various kinds had overtaken them and their land because of wickedness.

The Reverend R. H. Hershall, by birth a Jew, visiting his people in Europe and Asia, heard them confessing their sins in their synagogues and crying to the Lord. This seems to be evidence that the Jews generally understood that they and their land were cursed because they had grievously sinned. But they were impressed that the time of their deliverance was near. Hence the "mighty change in their minds and feelings in regard to the nearness of the time of their deliverance." (See Parson's Textbook, page 201.)

In the Hand of God in History, the Reverend Hollis Read, A. M., says, "There is much at present in their civil condition that indicates the returning favor of heaven."—Page 348, published in 1870. (Page 201.)

The Jewish Chronicle of 1854, says:

"The Israelites were often threatened by Moses and the prophets, that in case of disobedience, the rain should be withheld. . . . Now the rains that fell in the latter part of the rainy season . . . were called the 'latter rains.' These occasional showers, if continued through the time of ripening fruit and grain, would add greatly to their abundance and perfection. . . . These latter rains have been withheld century after century, till the land has been brought to the state we now [1854] find it, and there can be but little doubt that the return of these rains will be the means that God will employ to restore the land to its ancient fruitfulness." (Textbook pp. 202, 203.) [The same author says], "Since the efforts that are now making for the improvement and settlement of the Jews in Palestine commenced, the rains have fallen more than they have for many an age before." (Page 203.)

"I know not whether you are aware of the fact, but it is one that is fully authenticated, that the 'latter rains' returned last year to Mount Zion—a rain that had been withheld, so far as our information goes, ever since the dispersion of the people; and he who has brought back the 'latter rain' in its season, will also give the 'former rain' in its season; and these returning showers of earthly blessings are the harbinger of returning showers of spiritual benedictions from on high."—The Reverend Hugh Stowell, in Scottish Presbyterian Magazine, 1853.

"I have seen much good country in Europe and America, but none to compare with Palestine; . . . even in winter. I did not see the least sort of frost, and vegetables of every sort were growing to perfection in gardens. It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored; recently [in 1853], the former and latter rains were restored; to the astonishment of the natives."—Louis Van Buren, sr., November 14, A. D. 1867. [The above quotations were all taken from Parson's Textbook, pp. 201-206.]

I believe this book (Parson's Textbook) is known to HERALD readers, and is considered good authority. If there is any good reason why the authors quoted should not be believed I am not aware of it. From all these authors say, they must have been thoroughly convinced that Israel and Judah had sinned, and that they and their land had been cursed as a consequence.

The experiences and observations of these authorities certainly qualify them as witnesses in this case. And their testimony is quite in harmony with what Moses and the prophets have had to say. The Lord said by Moses: "If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments, and do them, then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit."—Leviticus 26: 3, 4.

In the succeeding verses he tells them: "I will punish you seven times more for your sins. And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heavens iron and your earth as brass."—Verses 18, 19. And again he tells them: "And it shall come to pass if you shall hearken diligently unto my commandments, . . . That I give the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that ye may gather in thy corn and thy wine and thine oil."—Deuteronomy 11: 13, 14.

Then he warns them to "take heed to yourselves that your hearts be not deceived, and ye turn aside and serve other gods and worship them; and then the Lord's wrath be kindled against you, and he shut up the heavens, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land the Lord giveth you."—Verses 16, 17.

That they did sin and bring those calamities upon them referred to here, seems to be a well attested fact, from the dreadful sufferings and indignities to which they have been subjected, ever since about A. D. 70, that being the time the curse of their disobedience fell upon them, from which they are just being recovered.

The land was to be cursed for their disobedience, and the rain was to be withheld because of their sins. If we can tell how long the curse was to remain on Israel, we may know about how long the rain will be withheld from their land. The Lord says:

"And thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed. The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth."—Deuteronomy 28: 23-25.

The historian says, "These latter rains have been withholden century after century." This is in harmony with what Isaiah has recorded as the decree of Israel's God for her sins, "And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briars and thorns. I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant."—Isaiah 5: 6, 7.

He further says, "But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone. Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in his season."—Jeremiah 5: 23, 24.

When Jesus came to his own and was rejected by them, thus bringing the terrible calamities upon them referred to above, he mentions some of the troubles that their "revolting and rebellious hearts" had brought upon them.

He says, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24.

And in Romans 11:25, 26, we read that "blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved as it is written of him." It appears that after Israel had been trodden down of the Gentiles long enough to atone for her sins, the Lord was to remember her, and gather her out from among the nations whither they have been scattered, and bring them into their own land and make them one nation upon the mountains of Israel. (See Ezekiel 37, and Isaiah 49.)

Great blessings and miracles are to be manifested in this wonderful gathering. (See Jeremiah 16:13-16; Ezekiel 20:33-38; Doctrine and Covenants 108:6.)

Their land was also to be blessed, Ezekiel 36:34, 35, says, "And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden." The Prophet Amos says, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowmen shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine and all the hills shall melt. And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them." (Amos 9:13, 14.) In the day that the Lord thus remembers his people and their land to bless and restore them, he gives them this great assurance:

"Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice; for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil."—Joel 2:21-24.

They have passed the time when the Lord was to "command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it." And their rain was "powder and dust." But the time for the land to be blessed has come.

"Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase."—Psalms 85:12.

Ezekiel 34:26, says, "And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing."

"The product of the soil ranges from peas, beans, wheat, and barley, to grapes, figs, olives, and apricots. Lemons, oranges, dates and melons are abundant. Average annual rainfall at Jerusalem is sixty inches."—Herzog's Encyclopedia, article "Palestine."

May God bless his people and their land.

A Remnant of Israel Led North

By J. W. A. Bailey

A remnant of the ten tribes of Israel was led north beyond the region of rocks and ice.

There are those who have represented the Latter Day Saints as saying "that all of the ten tribes of Israel were carried north beyond the icy mountains, and are there hidden away until the Lord shall bring them to Zion." I have been a member of the church for over thirty years, and I have yet my first time to hear a representative man of the church take that position. But I have always understood that about 721 B. C. Shalmaneser, King of Assyria, came up against Israel and carried away the "ten tribes" with the half tribe of Manasseh; and from that time on, they were scattered, and finally lost to the world. Thus they are called the "ten lost tribes."

Josephus tells us that the ten tribes, in his day, were still beyond the Euphrates. That was about 93-94 A. D., Antiquities of the Jews, book II, chapter V. After that, we know nothing more of them as Israel; but it is generally believed that they went on north and passed through the Caucasus Pass, between the Black and Caspian Seas, and then overspread all of Europe, especially Scandinavia; that great little country called Denmark or Dan's Mark, named after the tribe of Dan, which tribe was the maritime tribe of Israel.

If our records be true, and we believe they are, then we must believe that some time after their being led away by Shalmaneser, that God led a colony (like the colony of Lehi or Mulek) on to the north, so far that they are entirely separated from the rest of the world.

Jeremiah's Prophecy

Jeremiah tells us that in the days when Jerusalem shall be called "the throne of the Lord and all nations shall be gathered unto it, . . . in those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north."—Jeremiah 3:17, 18. Jeremiah says that it shall be such a wonderful event that it shall eclipse the time when God led Israel out of Egypt. "Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, the Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed [remnant] of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them."—Jeremiah 23:7, 8.

Notice that in the gathering of that portion of Israel, that comes from the north country, it will be even a greater miracle than it was when Israel crossed the Red Sea. If this gathering is to be done as some would have us believe, by the preaching of the gospel, gathering them one of a town and two of a city, then it would not be a miracle as Jeremiah speaks of.

From a latter-day revelation, found in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 108, paragraph 6, we see that this people are coming in a body. It says:

"And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep [Arctic Ocean]. Their enemies shall become a prey unto them, and in the barren deserts there shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 108:6.

These people are to have their prophets with them, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down before them. This goes to show that before their coming they are hidden away behind great barriers of rocks and ice. This cannot be the people of northern Europe, for they could come any time without God performing a special miracle by removing the rocks and ice, and casting up a highway in the great deep. Their coming to Zion, and being crowned or blessed by the hands of the servants of Ephraim, shows that Ephraim is already here, and again they must be in some way especially related to Ephraim, as they are coming to Joseph's land; therefore, they are probably of the other half tribe of Manasseh which was carried away with the ten tribes of Israel.

Sea to Be Driven Back

Again, the gathering of these people from the north shall be at a time when the Lord shall command the great deep and it shall be driven back into north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like it was in the days before it was divided, and the Lord even the Savior shall stand in the midst of his people, and shall reign over all flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5.

When Jesus visited the people upon this continent, he explained unto them the statement made in John 10: 16, where it says, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring [gather], and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

"And now because of the stiff-neckedness and unbelief, they understood not my word; therefore I was commanded to say no more of the Father concerning this thing unto them. But, verily, I say unto you, that the Father hath commanded me, and I tell it unto you, that ye were separated from among them because of their iniquity; therefore it is because of their iniquity, that they know not of you. And verily, I say unto you again, that the other tribes hath the Father separated from them; and it is because of their iniquity, that they know not of them. And verily, I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, Other sheep I have which are not of this fold. . . . And they understood me not, for they supposed it had been the Gentiles; for they understood not that the Gentiles should be converted through their preaching; and they understood me not that I said they shall hear my voice; and they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice. That I should not manifest myself unto them, save it were by the Holy Ghost. . . . And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep which are not of this land, neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither any parts of the land round about, whither I have been to minister. . . . But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and they shall hear my voice, and shall be numbered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to show myself unto them."—3 Nephi 7: 17-26.

We have no record that Jesus ever appeared unto any of the people of Europe after his resurrection. If he had, we would certainly have heard of it; for they are to have a book, the same kind of a book as the Jews and Nephites have.

"For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it, and I shall also speak unto the Nephites, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth, (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1-3,) and they shall write it. And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews."—2 Nephi 12: 67; 68-72.

Three Measures of Meal

The above plainly shows that there are to be three books, written by three different divisions of the house of Israel. This is in accord with what Jesus said in Matthew 13: 33; that a woman took leaven and hid it in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened. This represents the church recording the gospel in three great national records—

THE STAFF

Edited by Arthur H. Mills, 1514 West Short St., Independence, Mo.

The Importance of Music and Music Study

By Inez Schrunk

[NOTE: Owing to lack of space, this paper, read before the Women's Department at Denver, Colorado, has been abridged somewhat. Nothing essential has been omitted, and we have used the original text almost entirely in the portion before you.—EDITOR.]

Music is a part of man; it not only leads him to appreciate the beautiful, but helps him to enjoy the fullness of life. Think what a dreary world this would be without music. The many songs of nature are wonderful, if we but learn to listen to them. Comparatively few of us know or hear these songs. Music teaches children to perceive and hear nature's songs, and every boy and girl should have an understanding of music.

Too many mothers will encourage only their daughters to study music, under the plea that boys "don't care for it." We should try to have them care. I believe our Nation would show a greater improvement if every man had been taught as a boy to love music. Music gives a refinement and culture that men most need.

We often hear a mother say, "Well, I want to start my girl in music if I can find a cheap teacher, just anyone to teach her the notes." What a mistake for a mother to make! Every beginner should have the best teacher that can be obtained. We have learned that the first habits formed are hard to break, if not corrected very early, and the plastic age is the time to train these habits in the right direction.

The average music teachers in the rural district have very thus forming a complete chain of divine evidence. The first measure of meal is the Bible, the record of the Jews; the second measure of meal is the Book of Mormon, the record of the Nephites; and the third measure of meal is the "Book" that they shall bring with them from the "north country." Notice that the Jews, the Nephites, and the people of the north country are to have the same words, or in other words, they are to have the same gospel. (2 Nephi 12: 60, 71, 72.)

The Doctrine and Covenants is not one of these three books, but is rather an interpretation of the law found in them, and especially pertaining to the building of Zion. It is an international book, and is in fulfillment of what Jesus said, "And I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth, and they shall write it." (2 Nephi 12: 70.) (See Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1-3.)

We know of no people other than the Jews and the Nephites, whom Christ visited, who made a record of it. So will the people of the north country have a record of his visit unto them, thus fulfilling the Master's word concerning the three measures of meal. I believe that God has led a people so far north that they are entirely separated from the rest of the world; and that in God's own due time, he will perform a great miracle and bring them to Zion.

There is no objection raised against the position of a people being in the north country, because it says countries. If we knew all about that country, we might have a different view of the whole matter. I do not believe that those people are living in the regions of ice and snow, but that they have a special place prepared of God, where they are dwelling just now; but the time is coming that they will have to come out of there, for God is going to roll the great deep back into the place where they now dwell. (Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5.) The thing that now seems impossible to men is that which will make it the miracle spoken of by Jeremiah.

little preparation; they merely teach for a livelihood. In the September number of the Ladies' Home Journal, Mary Garden, the famous soprano and grand opera manager, gives some very good advice as to the good and bad teacher. We should determine as to the honesty of a teacher, as many teachers only see the pupil from the financial side. Beware the flatterer who always tells you your child is unusually gifted and always does excellent work. The common sense type of teacher is the best to employ. However, there are a few qualifications that should be demanded in a teacher by everyone.

First, a love for humanity, with that inborn desire to impart to others that which one knows. If a teacher of children, she should have a lovable disposition and be actually interested in children. One should have had a course in practical psychology and pedagogy and should know much about science, art, and literature. The more we ourselves know the bigger and broader we'll be as teachers, for everything is a part of music. Through the power of music are we better able to express the truth in ourselves. Music is the expression of the soul, and unless we have beautiful souls we cannot create or present beautiful tone pictures. The true poet lives within this sphere. His thoughts determine what his poetry shall be.

There was and still persists a ridiculous notion that only those especially gifted should think of studying music. In this day talent without brains is useless; mentality is becoming more and more essential. Too often we find a pupil who has been told (by the flattering teacher) of his unusual (?) gifts and we usually find this type lazy and indolent, with little ability, believing themselves geniuses who do not need to study. When we have talent plus brains, all is well; but exceptional talent is not essential to anyone desiring to study music.

In the kindergarten class at school we often found that the child that could not carry a tune at the first of the year would frequently outdo some of the other children in hearing and singing melodies at the close of the year's work.

We as a church are rapidly developing and branching out along musical lines. We are beginning to demand better things in music and as our perception increases so may we all do our part in giving our children the best there is, and as a church be better prepared to supply this demand, that will eventually assist us as a people to come up higher and enjoy the spiritual blessings in store for us.

Saint Joseph Choir Banquet

The choir of the First Saint Joseph, Missouri, Branch gave its third annual banquet for active and associate members in the Sunday school rooms of the church on Monday evening, October 24, under the direction of the executive committee, Mrs. Minnie Scott-Dobson, chorister, Miss Edna Christiansen, organist, and Miss Mabel Burlington, treasurer. About fifty guests, who sat around the festal board and partook of the three-course "spread," proclaimed it "the best yet."

During the progress of the banquet special addresses on the mission and work of the choir, personal experiences in choir work, and the wit and humor of choir activities were given by Elder R. S. Salyards, the pastor of the church, Bishop J. A. Koehler, and Brother W. W. Scott.

Some very clever musical adaptations of a few well-known parlor games were played afterward, bringing a full measure of relaxation and mirth to those who had eaten to repletion of the well-served collation. A contest, involving the representation of well-known musical terms by means of various articles, was enjoyed by all, especially the active musicians of the branch.

A well-chosen musical program then followed, participated in by Misses Mildred Nesser, Pearl Kinnaman, Edna Christiansen, Mrs. Charles E. Haden, and Mr. Evan Ehlers, after which the banqueters dispersed with the firm conviction that the annual banquet is an institution that should be perpetuated.

Musical Activities in Michigan

Sister Louise Evans, chorister of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, writes us concerning the musical activities of her territory, which we will briefly summarize for the benefit of the musical workers elsewhere.

First, there is the junior choir work, which is receiving considerable attention. At Belding, Michigan, under the leadership of Sister Charles Thompson, the "youngsters" recently gave a fine program. Sister McNichols, at Coldwater, Michigan, evidences her knowledge of the child psychology in the development of that work in her branch. Similarly, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, under the direction of Sister Paul Belleisle, and at Lansing, Michigan, under Sister Ethel Martin, this work is being developed. Search is being made for a suitable cantata which the children of this district may render at the 1922 reunion. Who wouldn't enjoy hearing those children sing at that time?

The Grand Rapids choir (the adults this time) are at work on their Christmas cantata, "The Star of Bethlehem," by Lincoln Hall. Brother Walter Rider, the branch chorister, is directing this work.

Preparations for the musical work of the 1922 reunion are already being made. The cantata, "Daniel," which was so greatly enjoyed at the last reunion, will be sung again in 1922, and the desire is to render an additional cantata, either "The Holy City" (Gaul) or "From Olivet to Calvary" (Mauder) at this reunion. Rehearsals on these by the various choirs of the district will begin soon.

And now they want a district orchestra, too, to serve at this reunion, and they are urging everyone who plays an orchestral instrument to get busy on it and prepare for the reunion. We wish them success in all these projects and we predict that if they do succeed the 1922 reunion of this district will be a wonderful one.

Up in the northern district musical activities are crystallizing in the organization of a district orchestra. Brother Arthur E. Starks, the district president, is taking the initiative in this enterprise, and already has over twenty enthusiastic young people studying instruments and working, with the next reunion of the district in view. Brother Starks writes that this orchestra has already rendered some fine service at some four different two-day meetings held in various branches. At special services at Boyne City he took this orchestra out into the streets of the business section and played, taking the people by storm, many of them afterwards following to the church where they had the privilege of hearing the gospel, some for the first time. People were so interested that when further services were advertised the inquiry was on everybody's lips, "Is your orchestra going to play?" Thus we can see how the power of music may draw many to the truth. Brother Starks himself is directing the energies of this promising band and he writes that he and Brother H. H. Burt, the newly elected district chorister, are going to cooperate to make the district one of the musical ones of the church. And we believe they will.

Concerning Our Own Musicians

L. Eugene Christy. Friends of Brother Eugene Christy will be greatly pleased to learn of some very rapid progress he has made in his studies and musical development. Most of "Gene's" friends will remember him in his one-time capacity as director of the Stone Church Choir, a post which he held under the direction of the First Presidency for almost a year. Others will remember him as a young man with a remarkably fine tenor voice of lyric quality. But Brother Christy's capacities were such that it was determined he should have further study, to prepare him for greater activity and usefulness. So, in September of 1920, to Chicago he went and enrolled in the American Conservatory of Music, taking, besides voice under Karleton Hackett, theory, history, musical appreciation, and languages. With a courage that was commendable he worked so hard and faithfully as to secure his diploma "with honorable mention" this last June. He

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

On Citizenship

Sister Dora Young, supervisor of the "citizenship" division of our department, prepared for our May Institute the address which appears this week on "National politics and the home." It has been disappointing to us to hear, as we have occasionally, some sister remark that she does not care to "dabble in politics," or that she is not interested in legislation. We are specifically charged to do both—to see that good men are found for official positions of trust—and responsibility, and to support and uphold them in their discharge of duties. Proper lawmaking and law-enforcing is a part of the support they need, for even the cleanest-hearted official with the highest ideals of human welfare and personal integrity can do little without the laws and the people back of him.

Let not the ardor that flamed up during the presidential election days of last year die out, but rather let it burn steadily to illuminate the matters connected with local government, community welfare, national honor, and individual performance of duty. Let those classes of women who sought a year ago to acquaint themselves with the processes and mechanism of politics and government, turn their attention and concerted power and influence to the reforms that are so badly needed in many directions.

What is done with the small offender against law and order? What becomes of the nameless child? What protection has the subnormal girl or woman? What shall be done with wife deserters, with fathers who "side-step" their paternal responsibilities, with legalized vice, with procurors, places of immorality, dens of allurements or enticement? How shall we get adequate and honest police protection? How can we prevent greed and graft from influencing the making laws which affect us and our homes? Countless such questions have now become the business of woman, and investigate, weigh with her calm, unprejudiced mind, and is now going on with the same courage and determination, for the degree of bachelor of music. And (we say) he'll get it, too.

William Householder. The Saints who have attended the Kirtland reunions the past two years will know who "Will" Householder is and they will remember with pleasure his singing and choir work in the services of the reunion. They will remember that he was ready at any moment to render with his beautiful voice an enjoyable solo for any service, and they will recall how he added dignity and spiritual beauty to the services with his well-trained chorus choir. He was at one time song leader for "Billy" Sunday, and he is gifted in inducing people to sing. What will be more pleasing to his friends in the church, however, is that he is now "Brother" Householder, he having come into the church by baptism. We pray that his life may be long with us, for his fine talents render him one who can do us great good in our work of song.

Bernice Griffiths, chorister of the Kansas City Stake, has had her energies pretty well taxed since she assumed this office. For a number of months she has personally assisted the missionaries in revival services in various parts of the stake, a work which took practically every night in the week. At the last conference of the stake at Central church, on November 20, she had a big chorus of fully fifty voices, recruited from the various choirs of the stake, and so big that a special platform had to be built for them. This fine choir not only strengthened the congregational singing, but rendered two anthems for the principal services. Sister Griffiths is developing, in conjunction with the general department of music of the church, a series of musical institutes for the different sections of the stake. The object of these institutes is the development of the work of music in the stake.

determine by her divine instinct to the end that good and righteousness and equal opportunity for all may prevail in the land.

Read Sister Young's thoughtful article, and include in your program of study something progressive and systematic in regard to your civic responsibilities and power.

A. A.

National Politics and the Home

The nineteenth amendment has its historical setting in the fourth chapter of Genesis. At that period in the life of the world, woman was assigned the duties of home-keeping. She has held the position ever since and has never grown tired of her job.

No new responsibilities have been given, but new opportunities for elevating and ennobling the home have opened their doors to her. She will gladly avail herself of these privileges as soon as she is convinced that they will be a power for good in her hands.

The pioneer home of our ancestors was a little world in itself. Its members had no political questions to struggle with. Food, fuel, clothing, and housing were all provided by the immediate family. There were no schools, and religious services were only occasionally held, the traveling preacher contributing to this feature of their life at rare intervals.

To-day the home is the center of a network of civilization. Out from that center, radiating like spokes from the hub of a wheel, are lines which reach out to church, school, and the affairs of business. These outlying points and the home react upon each other. When one is affected the other responds.

Justice demands that society so direct these religious, educational, and economic activities that the home will be left untrammelled in its efforts for the good of the human race. When motives of religion or ethics fail, it is the duty of society, cooperating through the machinery of government, to intervene for the welfare of all.

Government, then, is a means to an end—the welfare of humanity. A study of the policies used by the Government in accomplishing this end is a study of politics. The word politics needs to be lifted out of the mire. Politics, as devoted to a principle, rather than to a mere scheme or system, should arouse our interest. A question is in politics whenever the greater part of the people of the country are talking, debating, or writing about it in an earnest, interested manner. A vote on such a question is merely registering an opinion as to how the voter thinks that question should be decided.

In the last quarter of the nineteenth century the idea that government existed for the protection of business was a prevalent one. Consequently "big business" flourished. The prevailing idea to-day is more humanitarian. We now think it exists for the protection of life—life in its highest sense—that we may grow by expression.

With this change in attitude towards the duties of government came the change in attitude towards woman's power to aid in civic work. Women are not claiming to be better, wiser, or more patriotic than men. They recognize that men have accomplished much in the national life that women never could have accomplished. They also believe that women can do much that men never can do. With the double vision which men and women working together will have, there will be a better chance for a just settlement of public questions. Instead of mere onlookers, women have become workers; and judging from their work in other lines, we expect them to be efficient helpers.

We have ample indications already that they are going to take a strong stand for the good of the whole Nation. At present they are making earnest efforts for the betterment of child life by working for the Sheppard-Towner Bill.

This bill has been in politics for some time, and I need not tell you that it is a bill designed to aid mothers and infants, for you have all read it. Neither do I need to tell you that nearly four times as many infants and mothers die each year as there were American soldiers killed in the last war; nor that statistics of seventeen countries show that the United States, with two exceptions, has the highest death rate among mothers: that it stands eighth in the death rate of infants; that it is claimed by experts that the lives of at least one half of the 300,000 babies under one year of age who die yearly could have been saved. But the background of the question, which is not so generally known, is as follows:

The Children's Bureau has been investigating this question for the past eight years. Their research has reached every nook and corner of the earth. It is conclusive. The infant mortality studies have brought out the knowledge that sanitation and decent housing are essential to the well-being of every family. The death rate of babies is highest among families where the father is underpaid or the mother overworked and ignorant. It is the old story repeated. Ignorance and poverty constitute the disease; the loss of lives among the babies is the symptom. We are asking, and it is a commendable request, for Federal aid for temporary relief when we seek only to eradicate external conditions. We must eradicate the disease if we obtain permanent relief. Can national politics come to our aid in this matter?

The housing situation in America is becoming more serious every year. Cities have been agitating this question. Some of the State legislatures have grappled with it. The National Government has indeed made a very good start towards it. But the entire legislative plan relating to the subjects needs speeding up. Once the Sheppard-Towner Bill becomes a law, the forces of the women's power should then be turned upon the housing situation.

The State of California has a plan by which a farm home may be secured by paying down five per cent on the land and forty per cent on the improvements. The remainder is paid in twenty annual installments. It's a straight-out business proposition. The new settler does not feel that he is an alms seeker, and in turn the State is not actually giving, but selling on easy terms.

Through the Federal Farm Loan Bill, passed by Congress, loans may be made direct from the Government to the amount of fifty per cent of the appraised value of the land, plus twenty per cent on the insurable value of the improvements. Long-time payments are also granted in this plan.

Several measures similar in purposes are pending in Congress. These are all worth close study by women voters, because they are all intended for the betterment of the homes of our Nation.

The Soldiers' Settlement Bill is primarily intended for the benefit of soldiers, but it would furnish a demonstration of a new and better form of life.

Representative Frank W. Mondell has introduced a bill asking for five hundred million dollars for creating community settlements in every State in the Union where feasible.

Senator William E. Borah's World War Farm and Home Building Act has much the same object. It is open to service men only the first year; after that to all applicants. Senator Reed Smoot's Rural Homes Bill also comes in the same class. The author of these three bills are all western men, reminding one of Bryce's idea that "the West is the most democratic part of America."

If any of these bills pass, it will be the beginning of a new era in the United States. State or national aid to home building has never been a policy of our Nation.

All these projects require an initial payment. Large numbers of homeless people are unable to make a first payment, although it may be only a small one. It is this class, more especially, whose children die by the thousands every year because their poverty precludes proper care in infancy.

Let us hope that in the near future some woman will be the author of legislation which will help these people to acquire homes. America has the spirit for this movement. She also has the money. She is only waiting for a leader to point the way.

The Latter Day Saint Church has been peculiarly blessed in having received an economic plan which, if put into operation, would end the agony of the homeless.* Religion applied to the business of America is the crying need of the hour. But until this condition prevails, such acts as the Sheppard-Towner Bill must be resorted to.

Many of the greatest political questions our National Representatives have to deal with are directly related to the food, fuel, and clothing used by our families. Housemothers are intensely interested in these questions, because they do most of the buying for the family, and no one realizes more than they that "a penny saved is a penny earned."

The meat-packing industry of our country is largely under the control of five big companies. The bills favoring government regulation of these companies have many supporters who think there is too great a margin between the price paid to the producer and the price paid by the consumer.

According to press reports, Senator Calder, of New York, has recently estimated that the coal barons have overcharged the American people one and a half billion dollars in a single year.

Tariff laws, which are being vigorously urged, will affect the price of both food and clothing, while increased freight rates charged by the railroads boost the price another notch.

Heretofore women could only have faith that conditions would change for the better. Now they can show their faith by their works. Twenty-seven million women voters now have the power to express their opinions, through the franchise, on the business methods of these powerful organizations. Twenty-seven million voters can accomplish much good when they become aware of their power.

It was Matthew Arnold who said, "If ever the world sees a time when the women shall come together purely and solely for the benefit and good of mankind, it will be a power such as the world has never known."

To-day this vision of Arnold's is being realized. Women are coming together purely and solely for the benefit and good of mankind. I am proud to say that a woman of my own State, Mrs. Philip North Moore, is president of The National Council of Women which includes twenty-eight organizations with a membership variously estimated at from seven to ten million. These women fully understand that the vote is only a means to an end and are daily asking, "How can I best use my vote?"

These seven to ten million organized women voters, intently studying and acting upon foreign and domestic questions, have the innate power to make and unmake nations. At a recent meeting of the National League of Women Voters in Cleveland, a resolution was passed solemnly pledging their association to urge the Government of the United States to take the initiative in calling a world conference to consider the reduction of armaments looking to world peace. All nations are desirous of international good will, but no nation is making any effective effort to bring it about. Because of her ideals, America is the natural leader in such a move. The world is now waiting for her to lead in the matter.

Advocates of disarmament in hearings before the foreign relations committee of Congress urging such a move, made the statement that fifty dollars out of a total of fifty-four dollars per capita was the Federal tax upon the men, women, and children of the United States for military expenses in 1920. The world is now expending annually for the purposes of war about eight billion dollars, with about two million men under arms. If half this useless expenditure were saved, Europe would have plenty of money to restore her industries ruined by the war. If half of these soldiers were released to return to industrial work, with this saved capital Europe's economic troubles, which now perplex the world, would be at an end.

Of the appropriations for the current year, over 68 per cent is for past wars, over 20 per cent for future wars, leaving only 12 per cent for all other functions of government.

Do you women not think that it is high time that you were called in to help administer the affairs of government? During the war just closed you furnished men, you gave a large share of the money, and you engaged in war work both at home and abroad. You were a partner in the huge affair, but you had no advisory powers.

Now this attitude is changed. Instead of being a mere visitor in the galleries of Congress, you have become a constituent, and the political boss is saying, "Whata' we gonna do with the women's vote?"

It is evident that she will not be in favor of saving him, while an infant, through the Sheppard-Towner Bill, only to sacrifice him twenty years hence to the god of war! Better let us take the fifty dollars per capita tax for his education, thus enabling him to grow into a life of usefulness. With it we can lift the inefficient school of the backwoods district out of its rut and transform it into a helpful institution, attractive and satisfying to the masses of its students. With this improved school as a base, we could gradually add other modern features, thus ennobling country life. This, with our congressional provisions for securing lands, would soon produce a revival of country life. The trend to the cities would be turned back. World disarmament would prove a world blessing. Mothers could bring no greater blessing to the home. It would be welcomed as the highest form of welfare legislation.

Women are leaders in community work, the home, the school, the church. These are the best places to start the spread of propaganda in favor of any question.

Does it not seem that it is woman's sacred duty to put forth her strongest effort to assist in making this Government stronger and finer, rather than by trusting it to irresponsibles—to see it revert to a tyranny under which there is no safety for either life or property?

Our present safety is a heritage from some ancestor who braved the perils of a frontier life and fought for the democratic principles we now have in our Constitution. It would seem ungrateful for us, now that we have the opportunity to aid in political affairs, to sit idly by while others bear the burden.

Only a little less than a hundred years ago, the Zion principles of this church were not allowed expression in the State of Missouri. In that day our ancestors, although they were lawabiding citizens, had to leave the State at the mandate of the governor. They left their comfortable homes, their fine farms, cattle, horses, and crops with no power of redress.

To-day we are welcome in this great Commonwealth. We are commended for our zeal and devotion to progress in civic affairs. Politics has wrought this change. In gratitude let us give political affairs a full measure of devotion.

DORA YOUNG.

Mothercraft

One of the greatest needs of our Nation is "one hundred per cent babies who will develop into "one hundred per cent" citizens.

In order to attain this ideal we must have educated parents; for this reason we urge all women to take a course in "Mothercraft."

This course deals with the child in all of its phases, spiritually, morally, mentally, and physically. It helps the parents give the child a happier childhood and causes him to develop into a better citizen. This course teaches the food to use in the daily diet which will cause the body to grow and develop. It teaches different games for children which are not only entertaining but instructive as well.

The games played in childhood are a great factor toward training the child to fill his position in later life.

The Mothercraft Manual, by Mary L. Read, is a good textbook, intensely interesting and easy to comprehend. In connection with this book we recommend From One to Twenty-One, by Murray, and A Study of Child Nature, also Misunderstood Children, both by Harrison.

We are sure the books mentioned will be a benefit to all who will study them carefully with thoughts of obtaining light on this very important subject.

We not only urge parents to take this course. The young men and women of to-day are the parents of to-morrow. The time for preparation is in youth. The mind takes on new ideas readily and retains them for future use. Parents are very busy, and often cannot find time for study. Fortunate are the parents who have improved the golden hours of youth.

We all come into contact with children during our lives. The better we understand child nature the more pleasure and benefit we will derive from our association with them.

All true men and women love children, so why not devote more time learning how to train them in the best way possible.

ANNE FRIEND ROBERTS,
General Superintendent Cradle Roll.

Mother Goose Is Good for Your Children

(Parents should exercise great care in selecting books for tiny children. Impressions made will be carried through life. Better a few well-chosen than many cheap ones.)

Every child should have access to a well-illustrated copy of Mother Goose, says the National Kindergarten association. "This is true not only because these little jingles represent the heartbeats of the race, but because they have within them great educative value. The tiny babe is lulled by their rhythm, to which all the primitive in him responds, and his eye is caught by the pictures long before he is able to interpret them. Grown-ups never outlive them. Poor indeed is the child who is denied this foundation of the classics.

"Mother Goose represents the first attempt of the race to give us a literature. Away back in the beginning of time, long before the days of books, these verses developed. The race, no doubt, was in that rhythmic stage where people loved to swing and sway their bodies to music; queer music it was, too, for we hear it was often made by beating stones or sticks together, but always the rhythm was the appealing thing. So, too, the sounds of rhyming words tickled their ears, and when they first developed these jingles they were so pleased with them that they repeated them over and over, handing them down from generation to generation, each generation refining yet leaving the plot unchanged.

"These rhymes, while but a sentence or two in length, are well-nigh perfect in construction. They will pass any test to which we subject adult literature. There is a plot, introduction, climax, and conclusion. The characters dance on and off again, yet so clearly are they represented that as long as life lasts we have a clear picture of them. With only a few words to describe them, Little Bo Peep, Jack and Jill, and Little Miss Muffet have as well-defined places in our minds as Othello, Hamlet, or Lady Macbeth.

"Our children of the preschool and kindergarten age are in this same stage of development. They, too, are susceptible to rhythm; they love to swing and sway and hop to music, and their ear is also caught by the sound of rhyming words. They need material like Mother Goose, for it is the product of many minds. They are to them what Shakespeare is to the adult, because these rhymes are richer than anything one person can give them.

"Many of us used to think that Mother Goose made these rhymes in Boston town long ago, and we liked to think of them as distinctly American, but such is not the case. These jingles came down to us from the primitive races and Mother Goose was only a very clever teller of these tales—a woman who made so many children happy that in her honor we call them Mother Goose rhymes.

"The child who is brought up on Mother Goose learns to read naturally. He memorizes the jingles from hearing mother say them and locates them by the pictures. Finally he sees them as word units and is able to recognize the same words in different rhymes. This equips him with a working vocabulary which is of inestimable value when he enters school. Best of all, it has not been work but only play."

To a Troubled Mother

(Sister M. Walker, always alive to our interests, sends the following heartening message from a well-known divine, with the comment, "There's many a mother whose aching heart needs this!")

If you had given me your name and your address, I would have written you.

As it is, all that I can do is to offer three suggestions that may be of help to other troubled mothers.

I. Remember that what we sometimes think are great moral principles are really only social conventions. The customs of the twentieth century are not the same as the customs of the nineteenth century. Some mothers are greatly troubled because their daughters wear short skirts. Sometimes, no doubt, they are worn from motives of vanity, or worse. But personally I think they are more cleanly and more hygienic than the skirts which formerly swept the sidewalk. Conventions, customs, consciences change. I can imagine a conscientious Turkish mother distressed because her modern daughter has discarded the veil.

II. In governing your child remember Micah's definition of religion: "Doing justly, loving mercy, walking humbly with God." Do not let your love for mercy prevent you from doing justly. Let your child suffer the natural consequences of his misconduct. If he lies to you, cease to trust him till he has earned your confidence. If he is habitually late to breakfast, let him go without. He will be cross now; he will probably be grateful hereafter. If he is not, still you will have done justly. And justice is his right and your duty.

III. Remember Faber's lines:

"I do the little I can do
And leave the rest to God."

Your child is God's child. That child he intrusts to you for a little while; but does not forget him. There are some lessons which only life can teach; some pupils whom only life can teach. When the Prodigal Son demanded of his father "the portion of goods that falleth to me," the father gave them to him and let him go. Life's school did for the son what the father had failed to do. Even if you have failed in your duty, still leave the consequences to God. He undoes our own undoing. If this life does not suffice, there is another. And "his mercy endureth forever."

To all troubled and anxious mothers I recommend two books, The Untroubled Mind, by Doctor H. J. Hall (Houghton Mifflin Company), and Gentle Measures in the Training of the Young, by Jacob Abbott (Harper & Brothers).—Lyman Abbott, in The Outlook.

Psychology

Text: The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts. Herald Publishing House, $2.10 postpaid.

CHAPTER IV

Mental Development and Motor Training

1. What is the misconception of education as noted in this chapter?
2. Not considering the influence of heredity, the nervous system is largely dependent upon what two factors for efficiency?
3. What is the first problem of education?
4. How are nerve cells and fibers developed?
5. Give the two conditions upon which this development depends.
6. In the light of the present chapter contrast the brain of the individual who has had an environment rich in stimuli and that of one not so rich.
7. Explain the justification for plays and games of childhood other than the ordinary pleasure side of life.

8. Give an example illustrating the eight factors involved in a simple action.

9. In view of the fact that the "most rapid and vital progress we make in our development is accomplished in the years before we have reached the age to go to school" what kind of parents should we all seek to become?

10. What governs the order of development in the nervous system?

11. Good tonicity or vigor of the nervous system depends, in large measure, upon what three things?

12. Discuss the influence of fatigue. Is school work done by a child when mentally fatigued of any value?

13. What is the effect upon the nerve cells of the loss of sleep? The effects of worry?

14. What are the factors in good nutrition?

15. Should a child be allowed to sleep until it naturally awakens? Why?

16. In what way is one's interest and cheerfulness in his work affected by fatigue?

17. Discuss "Problems for introspection and observation."

If possible have a lecture on "Nutrition." Assign to some member of the class whom you consider capable and who has the time and access to material, the preparation of a paper on the "Value of play." Discuss the paper in class.

DORA GLINES.

From the Heart of a Plain Country Woman

Not long ago we went berrying—Daisy and Donald, and our Little Woman, Son-man, and Croodlin' Doo (which is Scotch for "cooing dove"). With gay spirits we climbed the hill, pushing Croodlin' Doo in her buggy, while the older children, on stick horses, "galloped" ahead. Light-hearted, care-free were they, as the breeze that set the aspen leaves a-tremble, and made of the wheat field a lake of golden waves.

What a pity so few of us grown-up girls and boys ride stick horses! Perhaps, did we "make-believe" a bit going up the hills, they would not seem so long and steep!

Did you every "play like" the washing machine was part of a gymnasium apparatus? Try it once; feet straight, shoulders back, chest out, and head up! You'll be surprised—yes, you will! And when the song comes creeping into your heart, let it come joyously from your lips!

Every woman wants to be, and stay, beautiful. Once in a while play "gypsy," and kidnap your own (or some other) children, a few sandwiches, perhaps a cookie apiece, or apples to go around, and "hike" out of sight of the house, if possible. Forget Johnny's torn trousers and Nan's "holey" stockings—play fair! Hunt for hidden treasure—new flowers, odd leaves; watch the spider spin her web, and listen to the myriad voices of Nature in bird and brook and breeze!

Then separate your party, and try to be the first to reach camp—home! Chances are you will be "beaten," but somewhere you will have lost a load of care and burden of years, and have found a secret path into the hearts of your children.

If you long for beautiful pictures, don't forget, I pray you, the art exhibit put on for your enjoyment every day, at sunrise, noon, and sunset by a Master whose lights and shadows and colors no human artist has yet been able to copy. In the clouds you will see pictures of oceans and ships and tiny islands; of lakes of gold and mountains towering high. No two will ever be quite the same! And some day you may see the New Jerusalem painted there, with its gates of gold and walls of mother-of-pearl, and the towers of the city shining in the glory of God!

"Oh ye, beneath Life's crushing load,
Whose heads are bending low,
Who toil along the rugged way
With painful steps and slow:
Fear not, for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing—
Oh, pause beside the weary way
And hear the angels sing!"

F. W.

Culled From Reports

Sister Emma Volz, publicity chairman for the Eastern Michigan District, writes of the annual business meeting held at Marlette, in connection with the district conference. She reports the organization of three new locals, and several circles of Orioles and Temple Builders. This makes a total in her district of eleven locals, six Oriole circles, two Temple Builder chapters, and one relief and service circle. She urges all the locals to try to bring their work up to standard, caring for all the different divisions of our work.

She reports, too, that more circles are taking up study work, for which she expresses thankfulness. She speaks in warm terms of the faithful work of the organizer, Sister O. Engel, in trying to get the work understood and established throughout the district, and voices the appreciation of the women. Sister Harold Muir was recommended to the executive for appointment to fill the vacancy caused by Sister Engel's removal from the district, which recommendation has been approved.

Sister Lula Sandy, the hard-working and ever-alert organizer of the Kansas City Stake, reports 150 women studying in Women's Department classes, the popular subjects this year being Bible research, normal training, social service, recreational leadership, household management, food and the body, and child study. A millinery class opens the next week, and besides, there are four classes meeting under the home department, whose membership brings the total up to two hundred.

In six months, the social service department reports some 1,300 calls on sick, social visits, and those made in the interest of church and delinquents. Home department reports 194 members, 39 of which do not belong to our church. Thirty-six dollars Christmas offering collected and sent to Bishop. Department self-supporting. The cradle roll department is planning clinics for small children. Head of department temporarily absent, and contagion in the city caused some hindrance in work. Young Women's supervisor reports her work in fine condition, with two hundred girls in organized groups.

Six lectures have been given during the half year, five of them for women and one for girls. Doctor Harrington has been engaged to give a series of lectures on mental hygiene, beginning this month.

Sister Ida Monroe, organizer of Lamoni Stake, in her monthly letter reports the organization of a local at Lucas, Iowa, with Sister Hazel Heidman as leader. Branch President Farley is a very great help to the sisters, being very much interested in the work commissioned to them. Sister Monroe expresses pleasure in the recent lectures in Lamoni given by Doctor Throckmorton in connection with moving pictures. "She tells the story of life in a sweet and pleasing way. Spoke to the high school girls in the forenoon, to the college girls in the afternoon, and to the women in the evening.

Sister Ida Etzenhouser, organizer of Utah District, writes a very interesting letter, telling of her work with the social welfare agencies of Salt Lake City. She speaks, too, of the way the women of the Mormon church are studying social service, for more and more the responsibilities of investigating cases of need, and putting into execution relief measures, are falling to the women. Brother and Sister Etzenhouser were very busy through the reunion season, conducting educational classes and otherwise encouraging the members where opportunity offered.

Sister Lenore Christy writes from Mission, Illinois, where she was busy helping the local sisters, visiting and encouraging them, as well as assisting them to put on some playlets. Their thought was to present the women's work in drama form, to impress its importance and arouse and renew interest. Road conditions were fearful, however, she says, which has made her work difficult, but she is not discouraged. On the contrary she says, "Oh, the need there is for this work! The more I go about, the more I see of the need, and the

LETTERS

Will Give to the Church Instead of to Friends

Brother Pitt believes we might all do a better thing by donating to the Saints' and Children's Homes at Christmas time.

This morning in reading the Scriptures I was much impressed with the commandment of our Savior, as recorded in Luke 14: 12-14, which reads as follows:

"When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

I wonder if we could not carry out the spirit of this, at this time, by informing our friends in some way that they need not expect us to give or receive presents this Christmas, for we intend to donate what we have to give to the occupants of the Saints' Home and the Children's Home, hoping in this way to bring to these dear ones a happy Christmas, who otherwise would be denied this pleasure at the holiday season. In this way we would avoid giving to those who do not need, and bestow a blessing upon those who do, and who would not be able to give in return. In this way we would be making an effort at least to comply with the instruction of the Master as recorded above.

Would it not be nice for those who raise apples, oranges, lemons, figs, nuts, raisins, and other good things, to send a box to these institutions? And others, send a dollar or two to purchase candy and other delicacies. Then, in imagination, watch the happy faces of these who are less fortunate perhaps than ourselves, as box after box and package after package are delivered at their doors, and I feel quite sure we shall be happier, by far, than though we ourselves were the recipients. Let us give this suggestion a trial anyhow. Perhaps the editors will kindly state the addresses necessary. Should this article escape your notice until too late for Christmas, send your gifts in time for New Year's Day, and thus make these dear ones realize that they are not forgotten at the Yuletide. Hoping we will each do what we can in bringing happiness and cheer to those who are in need, and wishing all the compliments of the season,

I am yours in gospel bonds,

F. G. Pitt.

[The Children's Home should be addressed at Lamoni, Iowa. Saints' Home and Liberty Home, are homes of the aged at Lamoni, Iowa. Holden Home for the aged is at Holden, Missouri.—EDITORS.]

more our work impresses itself upon me. And as we work, we can see results sufficiently encouraging to keep us going!"

We have one other letter somewhat in the nature of a report, which has recently come to our desk, whose contents are extremely interesting, but we are going to ask our readers to wait another week before we disclose them. We will say this much, however, the letter is from our general department historian! Now, local secretaries will think, "Oh, she is wanting reports, I know!" Oh, of course she wants reports. How can she write our history without them? But that is not it, this time. Guess again!

A. A.

The churches founded by Saint Paul in Corinth, Ephesus, and Antioch gave men what the great Roman Empire, with all its magnificence, all its justice, had never given them,—a reason for living.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

"Our Creed All Truth"

Part of sermon by Elder Samuel Wood, from Fresno (California) Morning Republican, November 23, 1921.

The word of God is not only found in books and on parchment but it is everywhere engraved in nature. It fills the universe, men discover and translate the hieroglyphics of nature. They read in the strata of the earth the story of creation.

We are told that there are eighty-three elements or kinds of matter of which the known universe is composed. Among these are aluminum, carbon, iron, hydrogen, oxygen, radium, etc. We are also told by scientists that if one of these elements should change its substance or nature in the least, or be eliminated, all life would perish from the earth. Taken alone many of the elements are deadly but as a whole they give life. "In them, life is inherent." We call these elements truth. They are unchangeable, fixed, and eternal. They were not created in any sense of the term and hence cannot be destroyed. In the beginning they were assembled by that omnipotent power which is hidden in the universe.

The basic principles of the law of Jesus Christ are fixed and eternal just as are the elements of the universe. These principles we also call "truth." And truth, like the elements, was not created and cannot be destroyed. Neither is the truth subject to the law of evolution, yet man's conception of the truth is, we find here a little and there a little: line upon line and precept upon precept. Every discovery opens the way for new discoveries until we have found and applied to our social and national organisms the whole law of life.

The law of right relationship between man and man as set forth in the doctrine of Christ applies wherever and whenever intelligent human beings exist. It has its application in exact measure to the intelligence of humanity always and forever. And to the extent that society ignores this fact, to that extent will society suffer.

To say that men should "do unto others as they would have others do unto them," is not a counsel to perfection in the individual; it is the law upon which we must base our social and national relationship.

Again: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This may seem hard for imperfect, weak humanity, but it is the law and there is no other law for them.

Upon these principles it is intended that mankind shall build a social and national structure that will also have within it the principle of life everlasting. This not removed to a future state but applicable to the daily life and affairs of humanity here and now.

In the middle of the past century men who claimed divine guidance met together and organized a church whose adherents were destined to write a marvelous and wonderful creed. In number of wards it is the smallest yet the deepest, the highest, and the broadest creed in Christendom.

The men who wrote "Our creed all truth," wrote better than they knew, and the people who now center their faith in that creed are equipped from the changing conditions of eternity.

What would be more natural than for the people of this faith to meet the insecurity of present industrialism by the principle of cooperation in the establishment of industry of their own.

Not unlike the ideals of the Jewish Zionist, the adherents of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint faith contemplate and are in fact now in the act of gathering at Independence, Missouri, for the purpose of establishing a social organization wherein the fundamental principles of Christ may be applied to everyday life.

Where the church contemplates the establishment of industry in which men and women may engage as stewards, where the primary purpose of industry will be service to the people and not profits to the owners. This that poverty and the fear of poverty may be abolished under a system of equality of opportunity to all members of society; where the facilities for advancement in education will be greatest in the civilized world combined with the greatest opportunity for spiritual growth.

Lamoni Stake News

At the last stake conference at Lucas, Iowa, a committee was appointed, and by them a resolution drafted and submitted to the Saints at the sacrament service and unanimously approved and adopted, to be sent to Brother John Smith, who was for so many years an untiring and faithful servant in, and president over, the Lamoni Stake. On account of the many friends that Brother Smith has all over the church, the present officers thought that it might be desirable to give the resolution wider circulation. It follows:

"ELDER JOHN SMITH;

"Lamoni, Iowa.

"Dear Brother: The Saints assembled at the stake conference at Lucas, Iowa, November 17 to 20, 1921, through a committee duly appointed by order of conference, hereby formally express to you their kindest greetings and sincere regards.

"Your many years of patient and faithful labors amongst us are remembered with much appreciation. Your great devotion and constant ministrations to your companion, our beloved sister, during her long period of affliction and suffering, have been noted, and our sympathy for you in the lonely hours following her removal by death has gone out to you, and our prayers have ascended in your behalf.

"We are very glad, indeed, that your affection for your former flock has brought you back to our midst, and we welcome you most heartily. It shall be our sincere wish that you may be spared to visit and renew acquaintance with the many friends of former years in this part of God's vineyard, and that the blessings of the Lord may be visited upon you in the days of your retirement, even as you sought to bless others in the days of your active ministry.

"Accept, then, dear brother, this feeble expression of the sincere good wishes of a grateful people, entertaining the fond hope that the goal towards which you labored so earnestly, and towards which we trust we are still earnestly striving, may be reached by us, one and all—a heritage in Zion redeemed."

Though Brother Smith's physical vigor is not what it was in recent years, he takes a keen interest in the affairs of the branch and is enjoying very much talking over old times with his friends who were active with him in the work here of former years.

Sunday School Business Meeting

At this meeting, Monday evening, December 5, the assembly voted unanimously, asking the branch presidency to nominate the Sunday school superintendent, and further asked that the branch presidency, together with the superintendent they should appoint, should together appoint the other officers needed for the Sunday school work. This custom of asking the branch officers and the superintendent to nominate all Sunday school officers is not one that has been developed at the behest of any of the officers of the branch. It has rather developed from the fact that the Sunday school has recognized the need of coordination and efficiency in the management of its business and routine duties, and has found in this measure an admirable solution to its problem. Under this plan, the Sunday school has found itself in harmonious cooperation with the other departments of the church work, led by efficient and consecrated officers, and doing such a piece of work and reaching such a number of people as had not under any other plan been found practicable.

Accordingly, Brother Max Carmichael was sustained as superintendent; Lonzo Jones, associate superintendent, and the following assistant superintendents appointed: W. E. Hayer, W. E. Prall, Mrs. Emma Chasey, Martha Young, Olive Elefson, and Mrs. Verna Brackenbury.

Brother Carmichael has already served two years as superintendent of the Lamoni Sunday school, and the good effects of his broad and successful school experience, his adequate training for the place, and his unabated zeal, have been constantly in evidence. Lamoni people feel that he is the best in the church for his type of job. He has made the Sunday school orderly, a successful instrument in teaching religion, and one that is reaching great numbers of young people.

Lamoni Stake Missionary Effort

Although the stake is dependent entirely upon its own officers, branch officers, and local help from the members of the priesthood at Graceland, it is carrying on an ambitious program of missionary efforts over the vast expanse of territory assigned to its care. It is determined that the people, members and nonmembers alike, shall be fully cognizant of the fact that they are living within the borders of a stake of Zion. Brethren Garver, Wight, Williams, and Carmichael have been holding many series of meetings in new places, the very latest being Blythedale, Missouri, where D. T. Williams is laboring. Groups of singers and players from the college, as well as members of the priesthood, have been aiding him almost daily.

C. E. Wight has been appointed by the First Presidency of the church to go to Flint and Detroit, Michigan, to effect a transformation of the work of the group system in those places.

LEONARD LEA, Correspondent.

Northern California Valedictory

It is with deep emotional feelings that we try to express to you in this communication, our most profound appreciation of the love, friendship, and good will, expressed in the very substantial token presented to us by the Saints of the Northern California District; said token being a cash present of $63.50.

We wish also to tender to the Saints of the district our most sincere thanks, and express our heartfelt gratitude for their generosity and hospitality during the time that we have tried to serve them as president and coworker of the district. Our every want has been supplied. We have not had to go hungry, scantily clothed, nor without shelter and a place to lay ourselves down to rest at night. Our traveling expenses have been met to the full, and we have not had to travel on foot.

If we have ever been partakers of the hospitality of a single individual Saint where we thought we were not welcome, we have failed to note it in our diary.

In our weaknesses, and with the very limited amount of ability that we possess, we have tried to do the best we could.

We have realized that in conscientiously trying to fill our office in harmony with the law, we have not been able to please every individual; and at times some have taken offense, and entertained hard feelings toward us, for a time at least; but toward such there has been no resentment, and we have tried to bear with them in the spirit of true Christian love; and we know of none that would not now give us the right hand of fellowship.

While we shall not be permitted the pleasure of meeting you as often in the future as we have in days gone by, you shall oft be with us in pleasant memories of the past, and trust that we shall in like manner be remembered by you.

While we were willing to go forward and do the best we could in the work assigned to us, yet we were glad to be relieved from so responsible a position, which we have often thought that we were not able to fill as it should be; and we can truly say that without the divine aid of the Spirit of the Master, we could not have done as well as we did.

As regards the one upon whose shoulders the responsibility of presiding now rests, will say: we believe you have chosen a man that is much more capable, and better qualified in many respects, to be your presiding officer, than your humble servant whom you have thought best to relieve.

We believe that if he goes forward and gives you the best that there is in him, he will be able to accomplish more, and get better results, perhaps, than we have been able to get. We earnestly pray that it may be so.

We exhort you, dear Saints, to "go forward," as the Lord has admonished; using all of the powers of mind, might, and strength that the Lord has given us, to build up the kingdom of God, and establish his righteousness. That his greatest blessings may be yours to enjoy, is the sincere prayer of your brother and sister in Christ,

MR. AND MRS. C. W. HAWKINS.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

Cedar Rapids Grows

There are quite a number of things in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, that grow, but the thing we have reference to in our heading is the growth of the Cedar Rapids Branch in her efforts to help propagate the plan of eternal salvation.

There is a verse of one of the beautiful song poems that graces the Hymnal and reads like this:

"Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Thinking not 'tis thrown away;
God himself saith, thou shalt gather
It again some future day."

The truth couched in these poetic words looms up before us "newcomers" with a greater force, as we sense the quality of love, faith, hope, and fidelity that characterize the "faithful few" who "held on" throughout the years of trial that followed in the wake of the early sowing of "the word" in this place.

These "faithful few" formed the nucleus of the present ever-growing branch, and we can think of them as—

"Pilgrims in this vale of sorrow,
Pressing onward toward the prize;
Strength and comfort [they did] borrow
From the hand that rules the skies."

Back in those days of self-denial the bread was cast upon the waters and now, in the sturdy development and constant progress that marks the branch to-day, that bread is returning.

The past year has been one of continued and healthy growth. Last spring we moved into our present location, and even now we are cramped again, and we are sure we will be forced to seek more commodious quarters in the not far distant future. God is blessing our efforts.

Nearly every Sunday of late, new faces have appeared in our midst. The Sunday school has shown a remarkable growth. Several of the neighborhood children are now attending and most of our tiny visitors become so thrilled with the story of Jesus and his love that they work like little beavers trying to induce other "kiddies" to come.

The Religio still continues to hold its place among the Saints and the crowds she draws at every service lends courage to those who are laboring in the recreational field.

The Women's Department have done wonders in their particular field and have contributed immensely to the welfare of the branch. We feel sure that their future efforts will not be one bit less wonderful.

Some months ago, Elder Amos Berve, president of the Eastern Iowa District, took up his residence in Cedar Rapids and became the worthy shepherd of this flock. We feel that we have been indeed fortunate in securing such as he to preside over us. For often our ears have been made to tingle by the words of inspiration voiced by him, in sermon and counsel and prayer and prophecy. In consequence the desires of our hearts have been to eulogize the Son of Man by a daily course of life that would make us worthy of the appellation, "Latter Day Saint."

On the morning of June 12, before our Brother Berve arose from his bed for the day, the following words of admonition came to him and would not depart until he had written them down:

"Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
I have called you to be mine.
But my word ye have not heeded,
Yet I've given you line by line.
Arise; arise then, in your manhood
Seek to do what I have said.
Be not slothful but obedient
And my Spirit you shall aid.

"Thus I'm seeking to encourage,
And to give you strength divine.
And your strength shall be enduring
If you'll keep my word in mind.
Let your thoughts be in my keeping
And refrain from Satan's lure,
Then your growth shall be assuring,
And in me ye shall endure.

"Then be faithful to your mission;
Let your neighbors see and know
That I've called you to my kingdom,
And through you I've sought to show
That my word is in your keeping,
And your lives in Christ are hid,
That the power of the Gospel
Is in doing what he said.

"Get ye up then to the mountain,
And be one as I have said,
And I'll call into my kingdom,
By my Spirit they'll be led.
Put your light then on the hill top
That all men by it can see,
That you are my chosen children,
And forever mine shall be."

Our prayer meetings have been simply grand and soul-inspiring, and we have enjoyed a "wise" quantity of the gifts.

Our pastor is moving to 457 Eighth Avenue West. Anyone traveling this way look us up. You'll find the latch-string on the outside, always.

ELMER K. PATTERSON, Branch Correspondent.

First Woman Member of Canadian Parliament a Saint

Same electoral district that mobbed our men in days gone by elects one of our members to high office.

Called to Ontario to the funeral of the late Jean Campbell, I will be pardoned if I briefly mention another matter that has brought singular honor to our church. It is the election of Sister Agnes Campbell MacPhail to a seat in the Dominion Parliament. Her majority was 2,700.

Sister MacPhail is the first and only woman candidate that has ever been elected to such a position, consequently the press is giving her most flattering attention.

I happened to be in her constituency while the election fight was on and the enthusiasm following Sister MacPhail wherever she spoke was of the Joan of Arc type. Sister MacPhail, of Scottish descent, is a fighter and carries a rapier thrust in repartee which instantly silences the opposition in her meetings.

Needless to say she was bitterly assailed by the opposition on account of her religion. Both press and platform reviled her as being a Mormon and now that she is elected she and her religion will become a subject of national comment.

In her defense our sister bravely met the charge acknowledging her connection with our church and distinguishing it from that of Utah Mormonism.

In this same electoral Brother James McLean, R. C. Evans, and others were egged and shot at by a howling mob, many years ago and now they turn and confer upon another of the same faith the highest honors within their power to bestow. Verily the world do move.

Sister MacPhail was much sought after as a platform speaker by the Progressive Party whom she now represents and doubtless more than ever will the people of Canada call for splendid services.

Sincerely, DANIEL MACGREGOR.

THE NEW CATALOGUE

(Continued from page 1180.)

have been sent out the past two years, but it has been considerably enlarged by the addition of many more books and supplies.

The number of Bibles listed is greatly increased. Then there are the books recommended by the various departments of the church work, all of which can be had from this office.

Since service is the keynote of business success these days, the sort of service offered by our own publishing house should make it greatly appreciated by all the membership.

We note that three new books now on the press are listed: Square Blocks, by Elbert A. Smith (a collection of some of his best editorials); A Vineyard Story, by Estella Wight (a sequel to The Little Brown Cottage); and A Story of the Plains, by Eva Bailey Short.

No doubt many of our readers will appreciate the peculiar effectiveness of church literature as presents for the holiday season. Such gifts contribute to the higher spiritual life.

Subjects Being Discussed

Ireland to Be a Free State

The daily papers the past week have reported with much rejoicing a settlement of the Irish question. It appears that Ireland is to have self-government, electing a separate Parliament and executive officers, and is to have the like freedom of other dominions, such as Canada and Australia. There is an intimation that there is one exception, which probably concerns the Navy, but the military and also the Black and Tan are to be entirely withdrawn, so that the peace forces will be those of the Irish Government itself. Allegiance to the Crown and Empire is assured on behalf of Ireland. The six counties to the northeast, which constitutes the larger part of Ulster, are left free to join or not to join. But some officers of the Irish "republic" are not satisfied.

Sister Abbie A. Horton has written probably two hundred letters for the SAINTS' HERALD in the last twenty years. She recently celebrated her eighty-fifth birthday. Despite this fact, she is taking up studies in the Independence Institute in citizenship, sociology, psychology, biology, the philosophy of education, English, and the three books. She had previously graduated from high school about 1852.

The Sunday evening services at the Stone Church in Independence continue well attended and the interest good. The congregational singing in charge of Frank A. Russell gives an excellent setting for the preaching service. Walter W. Smith spoke on the evening of the 4th on Aims, and Elbert A. Smith on the evening of the 11th on Self-determination.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Appointment

Elder Clyde F. Ellis has been appointed by the joint council to labor in the South Sea Islands as missionary and as supervisor of the missionary workers. In addition to this responsibility it is thought wise by the Presidency to ask Brother Ellis to represent them there in caring for the local work. This combined appointment practically places Brother Ellis in full charge of the work there. This is necessary under existing circumstances, and we bespeak for Brother Ellis the support and confidence of all workers in the islands.

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, by F. M. S.

December 6, 1921.

Notice

Inasmuch as numerous reports and inquiries have reached this office touching the recent activities of Elder L. E. Hills in lecturing on Book of Mormon geography and traditional history, we take this opportunity to inform the Saints who are interested in this matter. Brother Hills is not under church appointment as a general representative or missionary; neither is he acting under appointment from the Presidency in this matter, as rumor which has come to us has it. So far as the general church is concerned, he is carrying on his work mentioned above entirely on his own initiative.

November 15, 1921. THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Far West Stake

Having been requested to labor as a missionary for the remainder of the conference year in the Far West Stake, I am requesting such Saints as reside in that section to correspond with me if they know of any prospective opening where the gospel can be preached to outsiders. Being a stranger in your midst, I am obliged to take this means to hasten my service where most good can be accomplished. Answer as soon as convenient.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 826 West Lexington Street.

Request for Prayers

Sister Jacob Miller, of Madison, Wisconsin, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She is sorely afflicted with neuritis. Sister Miller has been afflicted about eleven years and is gradually getting worse, now being almost helpless.

Addresses

Elder Amos Berve, 457 Eighth Avenue West, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Elder Richard Baldwin, Saint Leonard's, 19 Amhurst Park, London, N. 16, England.

Many of our leading church workers are

Good Writers

and month after month you may meet them in

Autumn Leaves

in a literary role that brings out a side of their nature you may not have known. It helps us appreciate their personalities and ideals. Their achievements inspire us.

In the thirty-three successful years that Autumn Leaves has brightened the life of the church it has never had a finer array of talent than will appear in its pages the coming months.

Its stories and articles and poems lend a culture and breadth that impel the church to "come up higher," according to divine pleading.

Not too long nor too short. Not too dry nor too frivolous. Not too often, but—

Twelve appreciative numbers a year for

$1.75

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

Conference Notices

Pottawattamie, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Central Church, corner of Pierce Street and Glen Avenue, commencing Wednesday evening, December 28, 1921, to January 1, 1922. Elsie Lapworth, secretary.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Our Christmas Gifts	- - - - -	1177
Two Philosophies of Life	- - - - -	1177
Who Should Pay Tithing	- - - - -	1180
The New Catalogue	- - - - -	1180
Subjects Being Discussed	- - - - -	1198

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Sword or Cross, by C. A. Smurthwaite	- - - - -	1181
Frugality and Thrift, by A. Carmichael	- - - - -	1184

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Maternity Bill Indorsed	- - - - -	1185
-------------------------	-----------	------

THE FORUM:

Israel in the North, by John Smith	- - - - -	1185
------------------------------------	-----------	------

More on Former and Latter Rains, by C. W. Prettyman	- - - - -	1187
A Remnant of Israel Led North, by J. W. A. Bailey	- - - - -	1188
THE STAFF	- - - - -	1189
Inez Schrunk.
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT	- - - - -	1191
Dora Young—Anne Friend Roberts—Dora Glines.
LETTERS	- - - - -	1195
F. G. Pitt—Samuel Wood—Leonard Lea—Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Hawkins—Elmer K. Patterson—Daniel Macgregor.
MISCELLANEOUS	- - - - -	1199

Some Christmas Gift Suggestions

CHRISTMAS time will soon be here and with it the season of giving. Why not make this a genuine Latter Day Saints' Christmas and give presents that will have lasting value? Dozens of gifts may be ordered by mail from the church publishing house, and a book or a subscription thus chosen will not only please but will bless. Give these suggestions your consideration.

Three Splendid New Books

SQUARE BLOCKS

and other sermons and articles by President Elbert A. Smith

This is a new book of about 450 pages, just off the press, and typical of the writings of Brother Elbert. It is rich in thought, beautiful in style, and original in expression. These articles and sermons are collected from his best efforts in the pulpit and in the church press. The reading of them will be a delight and a benefit to all. Order to-day.

817C Cloth$1.75

A VINEYARD STORY

By Estella Wight

A sequel to In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage, dealing with later events and happenings concerning the inmates of the cottage and their friends. It tells of their pleasures, struggles, misunderstandings, their battles for the cause of right, and the sacrifices they made in order to heed the great call of the Master who said, "Go work in my vineyard." It pictures their defeats as well as their triumphs, blending together humor and pathos, love and romance. Written especially for the young people of the church.

866C Cloth$1.50

A STORY OF THE PLAINS

By Eva Bailey Short

A true story in three parts. Told just as it happened, and one in which the hardships, dangers, and difficulties of pioneer life and a journey through the West in those days are vividly portrayed. Narrow escapes from death by the tomahawk and from the cunning craftiness of an evil-minded renegade bring in the thrill of adventure. Its chief character, Washington Short, became one of our "valiant" ones in the history of the Reorganization. How he became associated with the latter-day work after years of preaching in another church, is an interesting climax to the story.

869C Cloth$1.00

WHAT WOULD BE MORE TREASURED THAN THESE?

There is no better way to assure the interest of your children in the church than by giving them church books for their very own. Start their library by giving them one book each Christmas or birthday.

A Bible—We can furnish any style, any binding, any price. See catalogue.

Book of Mormon—Full flexible leather, excellent paper and type. Last a lifetime. 900L$3.50

Doctrine and Covenants—Bound in flexible leather to match Book of Mormon. 8032$3.25

Compendium of Faith—Same binding. Indispensable for reference. 801F$2.50

Church History—Comes in four volumes. Cloth per Vol. $2.55. Leather$4.10

A WORTH WHILE LIST

The Instructor. By Gomer T. Griffiths. 810C$1.00

Gospel Messenger—Sermons and Articles. 904C...$1.50

Old Jerusalem Gospel—By Joseph Luff. 814C$1.30

Young People's History—2 volumes$2.80

Birds of a Feather, a story. 865C$1.50

Hesperis—poems—De Luxe Edition$2.50

In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage$1.55

Joe Pine—a novel by Elbert A. Smith$1.45

The Call at Evening, by Jessie Ward$1.50

Zion's Praises, Leather bound$2.75

Saints' Hymnal. Flexible leather$2.75

Also a full line of best fountain pens, eversharp pencils, loose-leaf memo books, etc.

Look Through Our New Catalogue!
Mailed this week.

Give a Subscription---That's an All-Year Present

SAINTS' HERALD

The official church paper—brings news of entire church into home every week—best gift of all.

Subscription price $2.25 a year.

ZION'S ENSIGN

The missionary paper—filled with gospel message—splendid sermons, articles, and letters. Send to your nonmember friends.

Subscription price $1.50 a year.

AUTUMN LEAVES

The church magazine. Every month is laden with interesting stories, illustrated articles, helpful suggestions. For young or old.

Subscription price $1.75 a year.

JOURNAL OF HISTORY

Four times a year comes to you rich with stories of noble lives and splendid achievements of those who have built and are building the cause and kingdom.

Subscription price, $1.50 a year.

Make Up Your Christmas List From Our New Catalogue. Mailed this week. Order now from HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE Independence, Missouri

Prices Reduced on Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Instructor, and Compendium meeting in April; (one) because that has been our custom and we thus commemorate the date of the founding of the church (April 6), and (two) because April is a poor month for missionary work, therefore missionaries can best leave their fields. Were all other factors equal, custom might readily determine, for it is prima facie a good argument, but subject to consideration as to origin and reason for being, having especially in view the best possible procedure to-day. In this case, the reason for being is apparently the origin, that is, to commemorate the founding of the church on April 6, but there is no more reason why we should celebrate it by assembling conference on that date than that England should celebrate her national day by assembling Parliament, or America commemorate Independence Day by Congress meeting on July 4. We strongly incline to the opinion that April 6 as a date of great historical significance to us could better be celebrated or commemorated at some other time than at General Conference. It should be church wide and observed by all the congregations.

It should be remembered that those under appointment as missionaries constitute in numbers a minor portion of the General Conference delegates and ex officio members.

Several in presenting reasons for meeting in April injected the question of representation, and because they held that the conference should be "of the elders," therefore spring would be best because of field conditions then being not the best for church work; but the question of representation was settled some time ago, and the rules of representation are not likely to be changed.

The question of appointments was discussed by several in the bearing upon family conditions as affected by the time of the year such appointments were made. The Presidency has long been of the opinion that appointments should not be terminated and made de novo each conference, but should be changed, or releases effected as well as additions made, as they became necessary by circumstances; and this is a function of the joint council rather than General Conference, for factors therein must be considered which could not well be done before conference. Hence the question of appointments need not weigh heavily in determining the conference date.

In the letters submitted it is generally conceded that April at Independence (the permanent seat of the conference) is characterized as a month of rather extreme, frequent, and sudden changes of weather, especially the fore part; and weather for several reasons is a very important factor. The fall is therefore quite generally considered more favorable for large meetings, such as the General Conference.

After considering all the various arguments and opinions submitted, and all the factors of the question so far as we are able to consider them, the Presidency holds that the time for holding the General Conference should be in the fall. We, therefore, fix October 1, 1922, as the opening day for next General Conference.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 15, 1921.

There is established, in Sante Fe, New Mexico, a school of American research which gives its attention solely to research work in such special fields as archæology, ethnology, history, and art. No class work is attempted nor, at present, academic credits. They are also ready, by correspondence, to extend help with reference to suggestive courses of reading in American archæology, etc.

Men's Hearts Failing Them for Fear

The Saints may seem pessimistic over world situations and prospects, but they are optimistic in expecting the dawn of peace and righteousness.

Among other things indicating the end of the world and the second coming of Christ, Jesus said that there should be "upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity."—Luke 21: 25. And he added, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

The most casual observer must know that to-day all nations of the earth are distressed and perplexed, and from time to time voices are lifted expressing fear, if not actual terror. A great many well-known persons, statesmen, journalists, educators, are frankly expressing the fear that our present civilization is tottering to its fall. Six or seven years ago, such a thought would not have been given a moment's consideration, men were deeply rooted in the conviction that modern civilization rested upon a foundation as solid as the Himalayas; but to-day all is changed.

Frank Vanderlip, the American banker, recently returned from a five-month tour of Europe devoted to a study of economic conditions, in speaking before the economic club at the Hotel Astor in New York City, November 28, intimated that almost any disaster might be expected, even to the utter breaking down of the civilization of all western Europe.

James Beck, solicitor general of the United States, speaking before the American Bar Association in Cincinnati, August 31, denominated this as an age of shame and lawlessness, and declared, "Man is dancing upon the verge of an abyss."

No Peace in Europe

Frank Simmonds, whose wartime articles attracted so much notice because of their acute analysis of conditions and remarkable success in forecasting the turn of events, is pessimistic in his recent articles. He feels that the disarmament conference may result in the scrapping of a number of more or less obsolete warships, but cannot reconcile conflicting interests and national animosities in Europe. With bitter irony he suggests that the next monument to be erected by Americans should be "dedicated to the Atlantic Ocean." In his article of December 6, he says:

"But the cable is demonstrating daily that a bad situation on the Continent is becoming desperate. An economic crash, accompanied by very far-reaching political repercussions, is beginning to seem unavoidable, as the day when Germany must again pay approaches, and the British and French policy is revealed more completely divided than ever before since the war. The fall of Briand, the coming of Poincare, the adoption of a far more unyielding French attitude towards both Germany and Britain—this is freely and generally forecasted by Europeans here in the American capital. Indeed, the atmosphere of the last few days has strongly suggested the situation in Paris, when in the midst of the debates of the peace conference, there was suddenly heard the roar of revolution, not only in Russia, but in Hungary, when the march of bolshevism across Europe seemed inescapable. The inability of Paris to deal with the Russian situation instantly deprived that earlier gathering of much of its semblance of reality. There was then a profound feeling that those men who were sitting within heated rooms, debating academic questions while Europe was being menaced and in part consumed by anarchy, had lost touch with the world. In the same way to-day, while the delegates discuss the problems of the Pacific and the destiny of the states of the far East, when they spend their days in arguing whether the Mutsu shall survive or whether Guam shall be fortified or open, whether Shantung shall be evacuated or held, there is growing in many minds graver and graver apprehension as to what is going to happen in the immediate future in Europe. The shadow of a complete economic breakdown hangs heavily over the heads of all. . . ."

World Hastening Toward Social Disorganization?

H. G. Wells, the well-known British publicist and historian, now present in Washington attending the disarmament conference, is writing a series of articles which are published in America and Great Britain in various prominent papers and are quoted by the press of all the leading nations. Day by day he warns the people of the world that the present social order is crumbling rapidly and that there may be a complete failure of civilization. In his article of November 24 he says that the world speeds towards the fate of Russia, which is one of "almost entire social disorganization"; Russia is on the rocks; southeastern Europe back to barbarism; the collapse of Germany imminent. America, he thinks, may be the last nation to revert to the Dark Ages.

Some of his speculations are interesting, as the one indulged by him concerning the state of America if all Europe should go to pieces as Russia has done. He concludes that in that event America might possibly survive, but the Eastern cities and communities would be practically destroyed through their loss of trade, and that the center of prosperity and safety would shift to the Middle West, we may presume about where the Lord has located Zion. His prognostications may, or may not be correct. Time will tell.

Of course, it must be admitted that because of these utterances Wells is now more or less discredited on the ground that he is an extreme pessimist. It is worth remembering that the Jews regarded Jeremiah as a pessimist, and to get rid of his dismal croakings they entombed him in a cistern—probably considered by them a good place for a croaker. That expedient worked to the extent that it removed their temporary irritation, but it in no way altered the unfolding of events which eventually justified the pessimism.

Fulfillment of Prophecy

Whether these utterances are exaggerated or not, they indicate that the Savior told the truth when he said that in the last days there should be distress of nations, and that men's hearts should fail them for fear and for looking after those things coming on the earth. The unfolding of events seems to lead up towards that condition predicted in Doctrine and Covenants 45:13: "And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven."

We may even say that the present disarmament conference in Washington is to an extent the outcome of a spirit of fear. In response to the appeal for prayer for the success of the conference, one brother wrote that he could not pray for that cause, feeling that God had decreed wars and he could not pray for the decrees of God to be set aside. Another brother, however, was heard to pray earnestly that the conference might succeed to the extent that there should come a period of peace during which the gospel might go to the nations of the earth. Opinions may differ on that score. All that is good in us rises up in support of any attempt by good men to better the conditions of humanity. Yet we cannot avoid the thought that one dynamic back of the conference is not one calculated to bring permanent success. We have looked the situation over carefully and have come to the conclusion that one dynamic is that of fear.

We fully credit the high-minded statesmen, who represent various nations, with due nobility of purpose. At the same time it is true that all nations have looked over the brink into the abyss and see the fate that menaces them, and to say that they are distressed and perplexed and afraid is to put the case mildly. No one can escape the thought that civilization would not survive another great war. Probably no existing government would be left standing if the world were again wrenched and torn as it has been, and the statesmen of the various nations know this very well. Each nation may have some degree of concern for the welfare of other nations; but the thing that most intimately concerns them, that frightens them into a desperate effort to avert it, is impending bankruptcy and internal revolution, issuing into a state of anarchy. Not one government on earth but feels the danger of that threat. The question rises then, Is the spirit of fear sufficient to cause them to put away selfish motives and meet upon a broad platform of world cooperation where all men will do justly, seeking only that which is right, obeying the Golden Rule? We believe the motive to be inadequate, and that only love and a true spirit of Christian altruism is equal to the bringing about of such a greatly to be desired consummation. Is such spirit present in the world in sufficient force?

The Saints may be pessimists only in this sense, that they reckon with the dark, terrible, and disastrous times predicted by the prophets. They are optimists in the sense that they expect to see the dawn of peace and righteousness following those days of tribulation incident to the complete failure of man on his own initiative to build up a state of society in any way comparable to the Lord's idea of the millennium. When man's failure on his own initiative and in his own wisdom is complete and final, then, we believe, Christ will come to build up his kingdom and to establish his government. Noting the fulfillment of prophecies in the disastrous times coming upon the earth, we are strengthened in our belief in those allied prophecies which predict the establishment of Zion and the triumph of righteousness and truth under the leadership of the great Prince of Peace. E. A. S.

Joint Council Committee Considering Retrenchment

Recognizing the trend of church finances, the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric at its last meeting appointed a committee to consider the whole problem of church finances, and especially to ascertain where curtailment of expenses could be made, by such reductions as the welfare of the work would permit.

This committee, consisting of Frederick M. Smith for the Presidency, Paul M. Hanson for the Twelve, and B. R. McGuire for the Presiding Bishopric, have been in almost daily sessions for the past two weeks in the offices of the Presidency in Independence, and are giving very careful consideration to the budgets of the various departments, institutions, general church officers and conference appointees.

We are informed that it has been decided that the Quorum of Twelve will move their offices into the General Office Building at the corner of Lexington and River Boulevard, and the building now occupied by the Quorum of Twelve will be for rent after January 1. Likewise, the Women's Department will move their offices into the General Office Building, and the building now occupied by them will be offered for rent.

Wherever it is possible to reduce the clerical force in the several departments, or combine the work of the offices so that several offices can be taken care of by the same clerical and stenographic assistance, it is being done.

It has also been decided that the family allowances of all church officers and missionaries will be reduced ten per cent, effective January 1. This may not, however, affect a few who are drawing at the present time a very small amount.

A number of missionaries have opportunity to engage in secular work to provide their own means of support, and have expressed willingness to do this and give such service to the church as they can in a local way as ministers of the gospel. Wherever it has been considered that such offers could be accepted with no permanent injury to the church work, they have been accepted. If all our districts were to respond to the present need for service as well as the brethren in Northern Michigan, reported by Elder E. N. Burt in a pastoral notice in this issue, it would be less difficult for the missionary to do this, and the resultant advantage to those participating greatly to be desired.

Recognizing the necessity for general retrenchment, several of the missionaries have voluntarily requested that their allowances be reduced; and such requests have been acceded to so far as it is seen that the action would not work injustice or undue hardship upon the families affected.

After January 1 there will be further consideration of the entire proposition in the light of the financial situation at that time, so that unless there shall be a substantial increase in tithes and offerings, further retrenchments will necessarily have to be made.

Churches Retrenching on Expenses

"More than $500,000,000 a year is contributed to the leading religious organizations of the country, according to an estimate by the United States Census Bureau. This seems a goodly sum, but the different denominations carry on such extensive programs that they are being forced to economize on expenditures. They are afraid that tightness in money will mean a substantial reduction in next year's gifts. On the other hand there are church leaders who believe that the period of economic depression is about over and will mean larger contributions next year.

"With these annual receipts the denominational factions are enabled not only to maintain churches and parsonages, but also to conduct schools, colleges, hospitals, and missions and engage in general welfare work. Foreign missionary work is estimated to cost the churches about $200,000,000 a year, practically all of which is contributed by residents of this country. Church members are now contributing at the average rate of more than $12 a year, which is about one fourth what they pay the Government in taxes.

"The same report shows that there are about 40,000,000 persons in the country identified with one church or another, leaving 65,000,000 unaccounted for. The 40,000,000 includes members of church congregations, Sunday schools, and Bible classes. The Sunday school pupils make up one fourth this number."

From the above from The Pathfinder we note that other churches are retrenching on expenses. We note also that what they are really concerned with is not the reduction this year, but a fear of a falling off next year. From a recent report from the Methodist Episcopal Church, we learn that about 85 per cent of the Centennial Fund subscribed and due to October 1, 1921, had been paid by that date.

Another matter of particular interest to us is that forty million church members have contributed more than $500,000,000. At that rate, 80,000 in this country should contribute $1,000,000, disregarding our foreign membership and the membership of the church in excess of 80,000. To make the comparison fair, we should take into consideration the fact that this sum for the churches of the Nation as a whole includes the amount paid to local churches and their maintenance.

It should be interesting also to note that forty per cent of this amount has been contributed for foreign missions. On the same basis, we should contribute $400,000 for foreign missionary work. If we include our home missionary work, we, of course, make some approximation to this figure. But we are now approaching the time when there is a greater need for foreign missionary work than at any time in the past of which we have any account.

Marshal Foch Sails

Honor to the men who fought is not approval of war.

Marshal Ferdinand Foch, who came to America at the invitation of the American Legion, has sailed within the past week for France. He has visited throughout America quite widely and has been received everywhere with the greatest good will and appreciation. The American Legion was instrumental in bringing to America and, incidentally, to Kansas City, several of the great leaders in the recent World War. We are assured that the ovation given to these men, and especially to Marshal Foch, was not founded in an approval of war, but rather in admiration of the service that they have rendered and the offer they have made of their lives for the peace of the world.

So far as the church is concerned, its position is certain and must always be for a righteous peace and against war. As citizens, we also recognize that the evils of war are not limited to the relatively few years of actual destruction, but are felt in the aftermath of upset economic conditions and of upset moral conditions. This has proven to be the case after practically all of the great wars of the world. The wave of immorality and of licentiousness is the natural outgrowth and aftermath of war, as is also the spirit of unrest.

But a recognition of these conditions and a recognition of the conditions underlying, do not lessen our appreciation of the splendid character, not only of these visitors to America, but also of the soldiers everywhere who so willingly endangered their lives for the protection of their homes and country and the peace of the world. We are assured that with these boys, so far as we know, not only in America but also in England, France, Canada, and Australia, there will be found the very strongest opposition to any war that can possibly be avoided. If they have an immediate motto, common to all, it might be stated in the two words, "Never again."

Hence, a condemnation of war is not a condemnation of them, nor even a criticism. Nor is criticism of moral conditions in any way a reflection on the splendid services they have rendered individually, and collectively, but quite the reverse. By condemning war and its aftermath, we the more appreciate their service to humanity, their offer of the supreme sacrifice, and certainly their desire to secure peace and safety and justice to the world.

S. A. B.

Book of Sermons by President Elbert A. Smith

Square Blocks, by President Elbert A. Smith, is a collection of his sermons and other articles and editorials for the past several years in book form. It is a selection of his best sermons, editorials, and other articles and it includes his latest sermon preached at the Stone Church, December 11, 1921, at the special young people's services.

Readers of the HERALD who have long enjoyed his splendid editorials and appreciated the deep spiritual tone and beauty of treatment will be glad to know that the best of what he has said and written is now bound together into one book. The title very imperfectly expresses the deep spirituality and splendid qualities of this work.

The book is off the press, is being bound, and will be ready for mailing this week.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A God Who Answers Prayer

By Richard Bullard

Some faith-inspiring instances of blessings received through abiding faith.

The purpose the writer of this paper has in mind in submitting it to the Saints is to show how willing our heavenly Father is to manifest to his trusting children the unchangeability of his love, and that the plans and laws he has instituted are truly for the blessing of such as will trust him under conditions when his help and love are demanded, and especially to them when in the performance of such duties as are required of them, and when such duties become a delight; for all who are the followers of Jesus Christ should delight in his law, and try to apply the lessons he gave in his service to the world, and the willingness manifest in that obedience, even to the death on the cross.

"God is love," but it will require all the patience and endurance we can command, while passing through some of life's experiences, to really sense this declaration; and to be able to say through some of the processes employed for our purifying, "'Tis the Lord; let him do what seemeth him best."

There can be no law given of God, where love is absent, or where the observer of such laws, with a willingness to obey, are not benefited by such obedience: "For in keeping them there is great reward."

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church." What a stream of love has flowed from that source to God's suffering children! At times when hundreds of miles have separated the sick one from the elders of the church, when faith has been exercised, and a message has been received by these men of God, and the call responded to, and the Lord sought in the way appointed by him, through administration, comfort and blessing have been received, faith rewarded, and God glorified.

Some, in their distress, have called upon God to move upon his servants to come to them when one was not available near, and the faith thus exercised has been acknowledged, our Father in heaven has moved upon his servants to go to the one thus seeking help, and a twofold testimony given, that his ear is attentive to the cry of the sufferer, and this in his appointed way.

Some years ago, while located in the East, and having finished a series of meetings at Plymouth, Massachusetts, I had taken my ticket for Boston, my home, and was proceeding along the way. When about half the distance of my journey, the voice of the Spirit said to me, "Go to Brockton." To get to that city I would have to leave the train at Whitman, a junction station, and take electric car to the city named. I at first was unwilling to leave the train, as my ticket would take me where I wanted to go, but my experiences prior to this time had taught me to obey that still voice, and what followed through obedience to it had brought joy and testimony to my life. I therefore was obedient and left the train, and proceeded to Brockton. Standing near the station upon my arriving there, I asked the question, Where now, Lord? and the same voice answered, "Go to the home of Mary R. Chace," about one and one half miles from the depot; and when I arrived at the home and rang the bell, it was answered by her daughter Sylvia, who exclaimed, "The Lord has sent you here," to which I replied, "Yes, had he not I would now be at home."

I was at once escorted to the chamber of her mother, one of God's faithful and true Saints, one whose name was always on the tithing list, one whose heart was often touched by the love of God, and manifested in her loving service to his people; always found among the first to respond to the needs of the suffering one, especially to those of the household of faith. I found Sister Mary suffering excruciating pain in her limb, her husband by her side doing all in his power to ease the distress, but without result; on seeing me a smile passed over her face as she exclaimed, "I knew the Lord would send one of his physicians to me"; and as we honored his law, and gave proof of our faith in its divinity, by calling upon him, there came to her instant ease, and we all rejoiced together.

"No earthly Father loves like him,
No mother half so mild."

To love God implies love to our neighbors, a love to help them under conditions of need, a love to honor the methods ordained of God; a love to sustain his servants as ministers of his, to the blessing of such as they are called to minister unto, in spiritual as well as in temporal ways. Love begets love. The love of Christ in us will find an outlet from our heart to our fellows. "If ye love me, ye will keep all my commandments, and impart of thy substance to the poor."

When the writer was very young in the work of God, he was made to feel his dependence upon the Lord, through conditions which at that time prevailed, for financial depression had come upon the nation, and I, with many others, was made to feel the pinch. It was especially severe upon such as had no surplus on hand, and the experience I here relate will serve to demonstrate how the kind Father manifests his love when in sore need we go to him as our abiding friend.

One Saturday in the fall of 1885, after partaking of our evening meal, which was free from luxuries, as wife and I were preparing the little folk for bed, I was feeling rather cast down as I had nothing with which to replenish our food supply, and but a faint hope of obtaining the employment I had sought. The feeling of rebellion was manifesting itself within me, for all I wanted was the opportunity to support my family of three little ones. While in this mood the gentle love of our Father entered my being and he said to me, "Go and pray." I was in the habit of going to the attic for this purpose, and decided that I would repair to that secret place and pour out my heart to him who had said, "Ask and ye shall receive." To reach the attic I had to pass through a narrow hall, and as I closed the kitchen door and entered this passage, I was confronted with a power almost as strong as a cyclone, which tried to force me back, and it required all my physical strength to reach the place I had decided to occupy for my secret prayer. I said in an audible voice, "I am going to pray," and was soon upon my knees, while darkness of the darkest night surrounded me. But as I called upon the Lord, I felt a power come to my assistance, and enabled me to resist the power that tried to keep me from my supplication to the Lord. I then rebuked the power of evil and it left, and the room suddenly became light, and I was able to call upon my God. As I related to him my condition and the purpose I had in seeking him, my faith became stronger and stronger, as I talked with him, and plead with him for help for my companion and little ones, not in the way it was so soon to be demonstrated, but to direct me where I could find employment, that would enable me to meet the needs pressing upon me. I remained in supplication some time, and then went below to my wife and little ones, and picking up THE SAINTS' HERALD I was reading aloud to my wife, when a knock came at the door, and when I opened it two sisters entered the room, both with baskets laden with food and of such variety that our immediate needs were abundantly supplied.

These two dear ones have both gone to their rest, where poverty cannot enter, and where their lives which here have enriched so many, will continue under conditions of delight. They were Nellie M. Bond and Kate E. Smith, then Kate E. Blood, becoming later the companion of Brother John Smith, who for some years served as president of Lamoni Stake.

Sister Blood offered a kind of apology for bringing the food, saying, "Brother Bullard, we know you are of a proud spirit, and would not make known your condition, but we are acting through information received through a dream given to Nellie," which she related as follows: "Nellie saw you in your home sitting in a depressed condition, with your head between your hands, and while in this attitude your little boy climbed upon your knee and said, 'Papa, give me some bread and butter,' and you looked upon the little fellow with tears in your eyes and said, 'I have none to give you.'"

That was all there was related to me of the dream; but sufficient to call into service the love of God dwelling in their hearts, to answer the prayer offered to God only a few minutes before. The dream to them was a message divine, and the sequel has been related.

Many times have I placed to their credit tithes and offerings, for they had learned the lesson taught by the Master, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

When our duty is cheerfully and willingly complied with, that which supplies bread to the hungry, clothing to the needy, and extends the kingdom of God among men, we can prove how willing the Father is to hearken to our cry for opportunities to be used by him for the blessing of his children. When we have demonstrated to him our love by keeping the laws given, the paying of our tithes, offerings, and consecrations to meet the needs of his work, such faithfulness will bring to us a reward of divine recognition that will fill our hearts with joy and praise—the richest of our experiences; and the windows of heaven are opened to us and there is meat in God's house.

God is love. His word is a lamp to the feet, a light to the pathway of the righteous. Happy indeed are all they who obey him.

Some Observations on Education

By John W. Rushton

"To make the mind merely a receptacle or hopper into which vast stores of information or knowledge may be poured and reposed is not education."

"Henry Ford Resumes Studies"

"When Henry Ford made a sudden visit to Cincinnati there was speculation as to what new railroad he might buy. As it turned out, the flivver magnate was after bigger things—he wanted a copy of McGuffey's First Reader. And he got it! It was from this schoolbook that Ford is reported as saying that he gleaned the larger part of his education. The one long-cherished dream of his life was to obtain a copy of the reader that he had studied in the district school at Greenfield, Michigan. The elementary school was the extent of his school education.

"Ford had to use much strategy in buying the old volume. The proprietor of the store where the book was located after much search informed him that it was one of the 'only three unsold copies' in existence. The bookseller did not know his customer's identity at the time. In fact, he didn't seem anxious to part with the reader; but Ford emerged victorious from the store, with the book wrapped up under his arm.

Whether he traded in a new Ford car for the coveted volume, no one can say.

"The auto manufacturer says that he is the happy and proud possessor of not only the first McGuffey reader (which he bought in Cincinnati), but also the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh volumes of the famous series. Few of those who studied the McGuffey readers remember the sixth and seventh of the series; these seem to have been added as an afterthought. There are some who even dispute that there was a seventh volume, claiming that the series ended with the fifth, which was a collection of prose and poetry unrivaled.

"Perhaps at the time that Henry attended the district school those McGuffey readers were no more popular with him than with most other boys. Now that he is 'grown up,' however, he has quite an attachment for the old thumb-worn and familiar pages. To quote him: 'I would rather have my McGuffey reader than a railroad. I'm going to complete my "education" by reading it this winter.'"

The foregoing account taken from The Pathfinder, November 26, 1921, of Mr. Henry Ford's rather eccentric search for the primary reader suggests some rather pertinent ideas with reference to education and its true purpose. It also shows that education is not necessarily the result of association with colleges and universities, neither is it always identifiable with academic curricula. There is still further revealed the implicit idea that education is not altogether for commercialization and increasing one's earning capacity, but that there is a wide field for the culture of all that reading and art may give to the one who will become the perpetual student and not allow industrial and commercial specialization to rob one of the pleasures of the higher life.

Ford's experience is only one of many which the history of our advancements can afford, showing that the world's leadership in every department of life does not always spring from the higher walks of scholasticism. From Herbert Spencer, the father of "synthetic philosophy," to Schwab, the modern captain of the steel industry, is a long stretch, filled in with many illustrious names which mark epochs of the world's history who, while denied the privileges of academic training nevertheless were devoted scholars in the university of experience and wore the colors of that university with loyalty—"black and blue" sometimes streaked with crimson.

This is not intended as a slight to the inestimable privilege of a university career, nor as an expression of vulgar indifference to the impressiveness and value of the degrees which mark a person's academic attainments, for that would be mere affectation and a reflection upon the critic's integrity. Still it is worthy of remark and may give "heart of grace" to those who have been denied these privileges for one reason or another, that no place in the world's great field of service is withheld from any who have the determination to be worthy and do great deeds for the "honor of his fathers and the temples of his gods."

Education Not Immunity From Work

The old idea that education was a privilege which was to secure immunity from hard work and the responsibility of service to the common good, has long since been taboo. Education must qualify one to render the best of service to the good of the whole, and requires that one shall also cultivate agility of mind and elasticity in deftness, so that with changing conditions, the training and the disciplining of the will shall give one keys to open other doors when the familiar ones shall close. The law of continuity of life is expressed in the power of adaptation to ever-changing environment, without which life is not only poor and limited in capacity, but shortened in length. So education must teach one to meet life's demand from every angle and prove itself in the amount and quality of service rendered.

Ich dien is the true insignia of every man, and the Bohemian prince whose crest this adorned, expressed the truth underlying all regality, and when the victorious Black Prince appropriated this same crest and ever afterward made it the possession of the Prince of Wales, he demonstrated the high ideal which every true aristocrat possessed, viz: Position, privilege, and power must be employed as a trusteeship on behalf of all. This same truth was the foundation of that kingdom which Christ founded, "He that would be the greatest, let him be the servant of all." To rule over any community can only result from efficient service making for the uplift and enrichment of all.

The rather dramatic swing of the church to the enthusiastic indorsement of education as a necessary equipment for service in the ecclesiastical field is decidedly encouraging, and though we may run to extremes and possibly be guilty of painful or even ludicrous spectacles in this new zeal for that which had been despised for many years, yet we should cultivate ability to appraise education at its true value. It must not be a fad nor a conceit, but a means of efficiency, enabling us all to find our place, and discover our ability, and above all teach us to associate and cooperate with all who labor for the benefit of the race and the realization of the noblest ideal of the soul.

We Must Give Our Best

We are in the world, and largely of the world, though not partaking of the spirit which contradistinguishes the world from the kingdom of God, we nevertheless draw supplies from earth and heaven, nature and science, God and man in all the qualities and influences which make the component parts of our being. So must we give to all of the best which is in us, that as we are the blossom of the past we may become the fertilizer of the future, in which we find and reveal that immortality which Christ brought to light.

In America there are published more papers, pamphlets, magazines, and periodicals devoted to the cause of education than on any other single subject. There is also spent in this country over $4,000,000,000 out of the taxes, and over 56,000 people are employed as teachers, instructors, etc., for educational purposes. If this has a meaning, then it is that America appreciates education, and justifies the assumption that America is an educated nation, and further that the superiority of the American generally in nearly all fields is not either accidental or a vain boast.

It might be advantageous to find out what education means, and avoid confusing it with its ways and means of acquisition. Schools, curricula, etc., no more make education than houses and furniture make homes. The root meaning of the word educate is, to lead and draw out. In no case can education mean that something is given or bestowed ab extra upon the subject of the educative processes. For what culture is to plant life, education is to the mental life of man. Indeed a synonym of education is nurture, which means that which fosters or promotes growth. The evolution of the individual mind therefore, like the body, is determined by 'involution.' What is contained within, under proper nurture or education may be led or drawn out, and made accessible to the welfare of the whole.

Translate Knowledge Into Terms of Service

To make the mind merely a receptacle or hopper into which vast stores of information or knowledge may be poured and reposed, is not education. There must be a development of the faculties, which shall be converted from a latent to a kinetic state, and disciplined for service. Education is not accomplished until the student has learned to translate his knowledge into terms of efficient service. This service becomes the true index of the character, which is the sum total of qualities by which the individual is identified and marked off from the rest of his fellows. Education again is that process which in the laboratory of life develops the latent self, very similarly to the chemical combinations which are poured upon the sensitized plate, after being exposed. This word self is very significant, for whether we take the Celtic root or the Teutonic, the same meaning is in evidence, the one meaning "I can," the other, "I am." Being and doing. The personal existence demonstrated in actions. All growing out of the cultivation of feeling, judgment, reason, will, power, and conscience. The worth of a man is revealed in his activities as they react in the group to which he belongs. Even in the Science of Wealth the symbols of mathematics no longer hold the whole content of meaning, but as Hobson of Oxford says: "All definitions of wealth must include the 'welfare' of society."

The ultimate purpose of education, then, is to train an individual so that his powers of emotion, reason, will, and ideals which constitute the whole "self," shall be socialized for the benefit of the group to which he belongs. Not only the present, but the past as well as the future must be considered and provided for. For the past has produced that which is immortal as expressed in the fact of its survival, which is the inheritance of the present, and by the present held in trust for the future. All that goes to make up life and the tremendous issues involved, its methods and purposes of expression, is the concern of the educative forces. The head, hand, and heart representing the forces of science, art, and religion must bring their contributions as described by William H. Maxwell in the Journal of the National Educational Association for July, 1905: "In the training of every citizen individually and socially in such a way as to obtain the greatest measure of fitness for life in each member of a group or society as a whole."

Power to Produce Results

Here is the province in which educational efficiency has its sphere, "Education for efficiency means all of these things; but it means much more. . . . It means that each student shall be brought to use his hands deftly, to observe accurately, to reason justly, to express himself clearly, . . . that he shall learn to cooperate with his fellows for far-reaching and far distant ends."

Efficiency is the power to produce desired and desirable results.

So that far from education resulting in aloofness, and separateness, desocializing the individual, and making him either incapable or unwilling of cooperation with his fellows, it should issue in increasing ability to appreciate the good in all and lend itself willingly and effectively in teamwork to the great tasks which have and do and always will attract the great souls of the race.

Not only is this true of the individual, but of the group, any and every group, whether social, political, commercial, industrial, or religious. For this unity towards which all things tend is a "bond of spirit" and not of mechanical adjustments. Education, therefore, must be devoted to the discovery of the truth in all things; and as truth tends to coalescence, so must all truth lovers be brought inevitably into intimate association. Every influence therefore which tends to disintegration is a perversion of the principle which is the essence of education. Education has taught us the essential oneness of Nature, that her modus operandi is evolution, and the end of all things, God. The destiny of our race is solidarity with the divine. Education must not—cannot indeed—lead to misanthropic individualism, nor to religious sectarianism, nor to imperialistic nationalism. All of which manifestations sooner or later tend to degenerate into truculent struggles for individual supremacy, and seek to contradict the current flow of experience which is finding the wholeness of the universe as the end of philosophic speculation justified by every scientific experimentation. The hunger for spiritual unity in spite of denominationalism, the passion for the league or association of nations, the pathetic longing for peace through the international council at Washington while this is being written, are all evidences of the great and holy task to which our educational system must be devoted.

Do not the social problems of our times show a spiritual relationship to these things? Is not the urgent duty of every society to find out what each man is best fitted for, and in what way he can best serve the whole, and then provide for every man the opportunity, or at least see that no removable influence is allowed to prevent every man enjoying the opportunity for being all he is capable of being and doing; that which he can do so fully and perfectly that all may rejoice in the realization of that perfection? Nothing short of this is the task which lies before us in our effort to make Zion a reality.

Preach the Word

By Edward Rannie

"Children should be baptized as the law provides."

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psalms 119: 105.

"All scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."—2 Timothy 3: 16, Inspired Translation.

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7.

"And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

One of the shortcomings of the present generation is their lack of knowledge of the scripture, and this applies to believer and nonbeliever. The reader might ask the question, How do I know that that is the true condition? At least two reasons can be given, and that will be sufficient to establish it as a truth, viewed from the standpoint of the writer, and if the reader will apply the same rule he will likely be convinced. First, those people who are interested in the teachings of the Bible, when they hear its truths presented become keenly interested and declare that they never heard the like before; and the missionaries have learned by experience that it is the plain, simple truth of the Bible that wins the sympathy of those who hear. Second, the writer is painfully aware of how little he knows of the Bible, and when he finds others that know less, they must be in a cloud of dense ignorance.

And a second class of people, are those who will not do the things that are commanded in the scripture and want to hold an argument with God and try to convince him that he is mistaken in some of the commandments that he has given to his people. It is quite a common thing, with some people, that when they fail to keep the commandments and lose the promised good, or reward promised, that they find fault with the law. In this article the writer will be content to refer to only one law, that in some homes there is a laxity of its observance, and that is the proper teaching of children in regard to Jesus Christ and his gospel, that they may enter into the church at the age of eight years. First: it is said that they cannot understand. There are four things that they are to understand, repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. It is not stated how much or to what degree the children are to understand the above teachings, or principles. It is unbelievable to the one who has faith in a loving Father, that he would ask him to do something that he cannot do, and then condemn him for not doing it. The writer is not aware of any teaching in the word of God that requires an understanding of a law as a prerequisite of obedience to the same; if that were true transgressors would plead ignorance of understanding the law as a justification for their disobedience.

There are two ways to teach faith in Jesus Christ: by precept, and by example. We show our faith in Jesus Christ by being obedient to his commandments, and our children will have faith in him in proportion to our faith as manifested by our works of obedience, and that faith will lead them to be obedient to the ordinances of the church, and they will feel like Jesus did when he said, "The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." (John 8: 29.)

Alma taught that faith was a matter of growth. (Alma 16: 151.) "But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a particle of faith; yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words."

It is a matter of common experience among adults in the church that when they are obedient to the Lord's commands, that evidence of the Lord's approval follows. The child having been baptized, because God has commanded it and because of the childlike faith that it possesses, though it may be small, the Lord is just as willing to bless him because of his obedience. If he were not, then he would be a partial Father and his children could not love him, because he would be violating his own law as taught by his servant. (James 2: 1, I. T.) "My brethren, ye cannot have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, and yet have respect to persons."

For nearly one hundred years it has been the honest pride of the Latter Day Saints that they have stood in defense of the word of God, while others have minimized its value by teaching that there was some of it obsolete, so far at least as putting into practice the commands taught therein. It would be a sad condition to find at this late date that we were finding fault with God's word instead of encouraging both old and young to obey its commands and receive what was awaiting the upright, obedient, and pure in heart. We will prevent our children having the Lord's promised blessings, if we find fault with his word, instead of encouraging them to obey it.

Truth Versus Error

By O. L. Weaver

Why be deceived when the way is so clearly pointed out by Christ?

The attitude of mankind towards the truth has ever been one of the most stubborn opposition. From the days of our foreparents, who were placed in the garden of Eden, in the midst of perfect environments, enjoying perfect spiritual and physical happiness, with power to perpetuate eternal life, even down to our present day, we are led to realize that the forces of Satan are relentlessly arrayed against those forces that tend towards the recovery of that original happiness and perfection, by frail humanity.

In that unrelenting spirit of hatred, deception, and spitefulness, the enemy of God's promise is seemingly untiring; not one of his creatures but have been the objects of this prey, no; not even the Master himself, who possessing all power, in heaven and in earth, was able to say, "Get thee behind me." But how helpless do we frail creatures appear before these onslaughts; how readily do we lend a listening ear to that "Bow down and worship me," and how easily have we been misled out of our lawful inheritance.

How subtle the Evil One, even from the beginning: "Thou shalt not surely die," but "shall be as gods"; what misleading advice!

"God does not mean that. He means something else." How that method of deception has undermined the reason, impaired the vision, and deflected the inclinations of mankind, only he who has been successful in trampling down these barriers; he who has succeeded in opening up that channel of communication between God and himself; only he who has accepted the word, and taken upon him the name of the Son; he who has put on Christ, risen with him, becoming a partaker of that divine nature, through the indwelling of the spirit of truth, which lends sufficient power to ride triumphantly over the ever-darkening clouds of earthly sin and misery, and heightens and lightens our vision, even to the realms of God's eternal sunlight of truth, can understand aright the havoc wrought by our common enemy.

Perhaps here we feel like uttering, "How long, O Lord, how long?" And the answer comes, I have loved thee and have redeemed thee. I went before and cleared away that humanly insurmountable barrier. Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Thus our advocate has gone ahead and cleared up our case, placing at our disposal a vehicle that will carry us safely back to the old homestead, where abounds plenty and happiness, only asking in return: "Abide in my words; continue in my doctrine," walk hand in hand with me, and I will conduct you safely back to the Father.

Knowing that his burden is so light, his yoke so easily borne, why do we hesitate to become intimately associated with this best of all friends? Why do we stand, as it were, with our back on him, surfeiting on the delusions of Satan, groping along blindly in the dark, heeding that voice of deception, grasping at these bubbles of seemingly momentary happiness, only to find they are short-lived, unsatisfactory, leaving behind in the gloom an aching void which only can be satisfied by those rays of sunshine that are ever shining above the clouds and do always illuminate the paths of righteousness?

We who testify we believe in him, observe; do we believe? Does our faith impel us to action, to obedience to his commands? Do we accept his word at par, without any mental reservations? Do we follow him as a leader over the parapets and on against the relentless onslaughts of error, indifference, and deception? Down into the watery grave? ("Thus

OF GENERAL INTEREST

DARWIN'S CONFESSION

William J. Bryan says that "one who thinks his mind comes up from the brute is likely to distrust it in dealing with the great questions—hence agnosticism."

I have set forth in former issues what would seem to be the natural and logical effect of the Darwin hypothesis on the minds of the young. This view is confirmed by its actual effect on Darwin himself. In his Life and Letters he says:

"I am much engaged, an old man, and out of health, and I cannot spare time to answer your questions fully—nor indeed can they be answered. Science has nothing to do with Christ, except insofar as the habit of scientific research makes a man cautious in admitting evidence. For myself, I do not believe that there ever has been any revelation. As for a future life, every man must judge for himself between conflicting vague probabilities."

It will be seen that science, according to Darwin, has nothing to do with Christ, except to discredit revelation which makes Christ's mission known to me. Darwin himself does not believe that there has ever been any revelation, which, of course, excludes Christ. It will be seen also that he has no definite views on the future life—"every man," he says, "must judge for himself between conflicting vague probabilities."

It is fair to conclude that it was his own doctrine that led him astray, for in the same connection (in Life and Letters) he says that when aboard the Beagle he was called "Orthodox" and was heartily laughed at by several of the officers for quoting the Bible as an unanswerable authority on some point of morality." In the same connection he thus describes his change and his final attitude:

"When thus reflecting I feel compelled to look for a First Cause, having an intelligent mind in some degree analogous to that of man; and I deserve to be called a Theist. This conclusion was strong in my mind about the time, as far as I can it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness.") Are we willing to take up our cross, to endure our Golgotha? Are we willing to receive his testimony? "I speak that which I have seen with my Father"; "I and my Father are one." Shall we obey his command, "Observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you"?

There is no other name given under heaven whereby we may be saved; so why trust to the uncertain? Why travel the unknown road full of pitfalls, bypaths, and ends; Where? Stop! Consider! "Seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The road that leads to the kingdom is a straight, well-lighted, one-way thoroughfare, and the fruits of the kingdom are in abundance on either side of the path, supplying sustenance and acting in the capacity of a guide to the weary traveler, who finds as he nears the portals of this very desirable realm, this fruit more abundant and luscious.

Fellow travelers, we cannot miss the way if we get started aright. If these fruit trees are not bounding your present highway, you are traveling towards the country of the enemy, where abounds want, malice, hatred, and slavery. The husks of that far country will not satisfy; you are advised to turn about, go back to the crossroads, start out on the road where you find the fruit trees, partake of the fruit and feel your strength return, feel the glow of that vitalizing sunshine, watch the horizon clear, the vision brighten, and the journey become a real pleasure.

remember, when I wrote The Origin of Species; and it is since that time that it has very gradually, with many fluctuations, become weaker. But then arises the doubt: Can the mind of man, which has, as I fully believe, been developed from a mind as low as that possessed by the lowest animals, be trusted when it draws such grand conclusions?

"I cannot pretend to throw the least light on such abstruse problems. The mystery of the beginning of all things is insoluble by us; and I for one must be content to remain an agnostic."

A careful reading of the above discloses the gradual transition wrought in Darwin himself by the unsupported hypothesis which he launched upon the world, or which he indorsed with such earnestness and industry as to impress his name upon it. He was regarded as "orthodox" when he was young; he was even laughed at for quoting the Bible "as an unanswerable authority on some point of morality." In the beginning he regarded himself as a Theist and felt compelled "to look to a First Cause, having an intelligent mind in some degree analogous to that of man." This conclusion he says was strong in his mind when he wrote The Origin of Species, but he observes that since that time this conclusion has very gradually become weaker, and then he unconsciously brings a telling indictment against his own hypothesis. He says, "Can the mind of man [which, according to his belief, has been developed from a mind as low as that possessed by the lowest animals] be trusted in such mysteries?" He first links man with the animals, and then, because of this supposed connection, estimates man's mind by brute standards. Who will say, after reading these words, that it is immaterial what man thinks about his origin? Who will deny that the acceptance of the Darwinian hypothesis shuts out the higher reasonings and the larger conceptions of man?

On the very brink of the grave, after he had extracted from his hypothesis all the good that there was in it and all the benefit that it could confer, he is helplessly in the dark, and "cannot pretend to throw the least light on such abstruse problems." When he believed in God, in the Bible, in Christ, and in a future life there were no mysteries that disturbed him, but a guess with nothing in the universe to support it swept him away from his moorings and left him in his old age in the midst of mysteries that he thought insoluble. He must content himself with Agnosticism. What can Darwinism ever do to compensate anyone for the destruction of faith in God, in his Word, in his Son, and of his hope of immortality?—Editorial by W. J. Bryan, in The Commoner.

AGAINST LIMITATION: NONE

The Associated Press reports the following summary of public opinion on disarmament under date of December 11:

An analysis of the mass of memorials, petitions, and resolutions which had been received by the American delegates to the arms conference up to December 1 indicated that they voiced the sentiments of more than 6,535,000 persons, the general information sections of the advisory committee said today. Numbers of communications continue to arrive daily, it was said.

The communications received up to the first of the month were tabulated as follows:

Advocates of complete disarmament, 1,253; advocates of limitation without the cooperation of other powers, 1,611; advocates of cooperative limitation, guided by benevolence and liberality, 29,840; advocates of cooperative limitation left with confidence to the judgment of the delegation, 6,501,436; advocates of limitation with caution, 1,001; against limitation, none; those who beseech divine guidance for the dele-

PASTORAL

Unto What Have I Been Chosen?

Soliloquy of a newly elected Sunday school superintendent.

I am depressed, yet elated. I have been honored, yet burdened. I have been asked to give much, yet feel that I shall receive more in the office of superintendent of the local school.

The pastor nominated me and I may presume that he and those who voted for me thought I was the best available man. Likely the emphasis should be on the word available, for certainly there are others as well equipped and as willing. Possibly not so willing, but I have a willing colt in the barn who has no sense. . . . A few did not vote at all, to be sure, and may be counted among those willing to be shown—to let myself off as easily as possible, but if I cannot show them I am not worthy of their trust.

Now there will be opportunity for a demonstration of some of my ingrowing ideas. It has been a sort of diversion to sit in my seat as a pupil, then as a teacher, and list the failures of the superintendent to myself. I wasn't mean about it, but I did it as others will with me. It will be a long list. But the other man failed to see many things that I thought a blind man could not help but see. He was a good fellow, but not much interested in his task and wanted to be let out, so here I am without even the glory of having triumphed over opposition.

Not having been in the community very long, these people don't know me very well. Possibly I don't know myself any better. What do I know? What can I tell? And really, what is my job?

Let me go back to the beginning. But where is the beginning? My mind is confused and the whole thing chaotic. Evidently I don't feel well this evening, so I'll think more about this later. . . .

There's no use deluding my better self in this manner, for I am as well and strong right now as I ever will be. The children of our home are on hand as usual with their lessons and their experiments in seeing how much teasing can be endured before anger and eruption ensues, but they will be here to-morrow and the day after and for years to come—I hope. Other homes have children about like these that call me "Dad" and "Pop" and "Dad-dee." Some may have better offspring and some may have worse, but on Sunday all of them congregate at the church and we call it Sunday school. That is, they are supposed to, but some are late and others fail to arrive regularly.

Wife and I also go. Other fathers and mothers do likewise, and we collect into little groups to debate solemnly over whether Elisha drove his oxen abreast or strung out single file. We think we are the Sunday school. Evidently we are not, but just visitors who keep company with the children till they reach the ripe age of adolescence and avoid us like the plague, because only babies walk with and sit by their papas and mammas.

When these youngsters of ours have in a little while slipped past us into manhood and womanhood, what will they be saying and doing about Sunday school and church and the prob-gates in following a Christian policy, 5,011,620; those who especially request that disarmament be made the principal issue, 499,620, and those who especially advocate an association of nations, 38,406.

lems of the day? . . . Probably the kind of thoughts and acts we have planted there to-day.

I must read a lot and study furiously. I wish I could get out and see what other schools do. I've been out, but didn't know how to observe. If I could only get to Independence or Lamoni or some of the big places, I might learn something. Yet they say those places are so crowded they are handicapped awfully. We do have some room to spare, but I would like to fill it up and feel crowded, just for a change.

I would hate to have anyone ask me what to read to become a better teacher. There ought to be a lot of good books put out by the church, so we could send for them and brush up. But they would be badly shopworn if kept around till folks like me took a notion to order them. I hope others aren't as indifferent as I have been. Maybe the publishing house does have such books. I ought to look it up in the catalogue. Or perhaps I should write to the general superintendent and ask him. Some one from Lamoni said he was collecting some books on Sunday school work. That's it; I'll write him now. . . .

Worst time I ever had. I don't know what to say nor how to say it. I've gotten as far as—"I need some good books on Sunday school work. Please tell me what ones are good—," and then I thought, Suppose he should write back and ask me to tell him my problems so he could suggest the best books. I heard a good Sunday school worker put it up that way once and nobody responded. They hadn't thought hard enough to stir up any problems. I'm in the same fix. I am not clear myself . . . but I'm going to be.

I want the confidence and respect of these people, but to want is not enough. I must be worthy of it. If I want to be respected and loved I must have decent self-respect and lovable qualities. And till I am doing my best I'll have very little of either.

Let's see. I was going back to the beginning. Where was the beginning? I know. The pastor nominated me and the people elected me. That was it. But where does that lead? To his door. I will ask him what ought to be done . . . but suppose he refers it right back to me—which he will likely do, demanding that I take the initiative and let him cooperate and suggest. What do I want him to do for me? He said he would back me up in any good schemes I wanted to set on foot, but would like to see that what we do works into the church plan. That's something else. What does he mean by coordination? What do I mean when I use the word? We ought to see alike—we must if we succeed at all. . . . Probably that's what coordination means: seeing alike and working to the same end. What end? . . . Eternal life in the presence of God, eternal judgment (bringing it back to us) resurrection, matured and useful life of service developed and fostered by the church organization, which includes the Sunday school.

So here we are back again to earth. Strange I hadn't traveled that road before. Perfection of character—making good Saints of the children God has given us—and the best time to do it is when they are young and impressionable.

The Sunday school must be the church in session as a school instead of assembled as an audience for preaching or prayer. I must have read that somewhere; anyway it's mine now and it wasn't before. I'll remember that.

But what can I do as superintendent? As a teacher I could reach the hearts of a few persons in a class and so do some good, but as superintendent I become an official announcer of songs and the one to arrange for the opening and closing prayers. A phonograph could do that. Here

I am in a supposedly responsible position, yet it turns out to be a mere figurehead!

I hadn't thought of that. . . . I know; I'll tell the teachers they must do better work. . . . But will they? What will they say to me? They will ask me what I would do—what I can do to help them be better teachers. They'll have a right to do that. They ought to. Then what will I say? Think I'll have to dig . . . but again, how and where?

What's happening? Oh, the family want to retire, and prayers are in order. . . .

They all looked at me strangely after I had finished praying. Must have thought there was something the matter with me—and there was. I believe I prayed instead of merely saying a prayer. I am in earnest about this new job of mine and it's bound to crop out, dear kindred, and you may note it often in the future. . . .

The house is quiet and oppressive and I don't know how to think in such a silence, but I'll have to get accustomed to thinking a little more, no matter where I am. Some of the trash that has cluttered up my mind has not been worthy of the name "thought."

Those teachers worry me, for the more I think of them the more I am convinced that I must support them in every possible way, directly and through the other officers—in fact, in every way so they will have the best ideals and material for their work. I must meet with them and help them gather the very best from the lessons for our local needs. That means study on my part of all the lessons in all the grades, and a careful analysis of each, with a constant search for supplemental material. . . . I'll finish that letter to the superintendent and tell him I know scarcely anything except that I've got to help my teachers. He may be able to help me help myself do that.

But most of all, I want God to help me by stirring up my sluggish intelligence and arousing my slumbering talents so I may set an example as well as impart precepts. Perhaps he will if I try—and I haven't tried very hard before. I feel like staying up all night to-night—and every night till I am what I want to be and able to handle this assignment aright, for it looms larger all the time and I seem smaller, but perhaps if I am fully awake when I am not supposed to be asleep I shall with God's help make progress.

H. Hale Smith Lectures at University of Colorado

Heman Hale Smith, son of the dean of women, Vida E. Smith, who was on the Graceland faculty two years ago and popular among the students, is making preparations to deliver a series of lectures at the University of Colorado. His compelling personality, attractive platform manners, and able delivery are remembered by those who knew him. His subjects for the lectures are typical of the field of work in which he is interested: "Challenge of the living wage," "Aims of labor," "Aims of capital," "Weapons of industrial war," "The I. W. W., and the coming revolution," "The hope of industrial peace." Extensive personal experience and research qualify him to speak on the subjects chosen.—Graceland Record.

Religious Education Lectures

Last week J. A. Koehler, Bishop of Far West Stake, lectured to the class in religious education on the subjects, "Man, self-conscious," "Agency," "Levels of conduct." This week J. F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, has been lecturing on the subject, "Atonement." Both of these sets of lectures are in the regular series given to each year's class in religious education.—Graceland Record.

WHAT WE BELIEVE

"The Latter-Day Glory"

By Elbert A. Smith

*"The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter-day glory begins to come forth.
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit the earth."*

It is a time-worn axiom that truth is stranger than fiction. No romance ever written is stranger than the history that we are about to recount. Yet it is true. It is the record of that "marvelous work and a wonder" mentioned by Isaiah. (Isaiah 29: 14.)

It is the story of the restoration and growth of the church of Jesus Christ in these last days. For convenience we will divide that history into periods.

1. The Period of Preparation

One beautiful spring morning a boy came out of the forest, God's first temple, from his season of secret prayer, with tidings that set the world agog. He had seen a heavenly vision. His startling claim was that revelation from God to man had been resumed, in a hard, prosaic age of which the prophet had written, "the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered." (Isaiah 29: 10.)

Fresh from his forest seclusion he met a clergyman to whom he innocently recounted his experience, only to be told that it was all of the Devil. The controversy thus begun still rages in press and pulpit and has literally circled the earth. Strange, that a boy by an assertion should thus disturb and disrupt ecclesiastical circles!

This boy was Joseph Smith. He was born December 23, 1805, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, of poor but honest and intelligent parentage. At the time when this history opens he was in his fifteenth year, and was living with his father's family near Manchester, New York.

The First Vision

A great religious revival had been in progress conducted by leading denominations. Joseph Smith was powerfully moved upon, and became deeply concerned for his soul's salvation. He sought to find the straight and narrow path, the "one way."

But soon the revival terminated. Amity fled. An unseemly scramble for the lion's share of the converts ensued. Tearful penitents were plucked to and fro by contending pastors. Out of this shameful confusion came a strange denouement, best told in the language of Joseph Smith:

"While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads: 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.'

"Never did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine.

"It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart. I reflected on it again and again, knowing that if any person needed wisdom from God I did, for how to act I did not know, and unless I could get more wisdom than I then had would never know; for the teachers of religion of the different sects understood the same passage so differently as to destroy all confidence in settling the question by an appeal to the Bible.

"At length I came to the conclusion that I must either remain in darkness and confusion, or else I must do as James directs; that is, ask of God. I at length came to the determination to 'ask of God,' concluding that if he gave wisdom to them that lacked wisdom and would give liberally, and not upbraid, I might venture.

"So in accordance with this my determination, to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful clear day, early in the spring of eighteen hundred and twenty. It was the first time in my life that I had made such an attempt, for amidst all my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally.

"After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God.

"I had scarcely done so when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction.

"But exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction, (not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world who had such a marvelous power as I had never before felt in my being,) just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun; which descended gradually until it fell upon me.

"It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) 'This is my beloved Son, hear him.'

"My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner therefore did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the personages who stood before me in the light, which of all the sects was right, (for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong,) and which I should join.

"I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; 'they draw near me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.' He again forbade me to join with any of them: and many other things did he say unto me which I cannot write at this time. When I came to myself again I found myself lying on my back, looking up into heaven.

"Some few days after I had this vision I happened to be in company with one of the Methodist preachers who was very active in the before-mentioned religious excitement, and conversing with him on the subject of religion I took occasion to give him an account of the vision which I had had.

"I was greatly surprised at his behavior; he treated my communication not only lightly, but with great contempt, saying it was all of the Devil; that there was no such thing as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there never would be any more of them.

"I soon found, however, that my telling the story had excited a great deal of prejudice against me among professors of religion, and was the cause of great persecution, which continued to increase; and though I was an obscure boy only between fourteen and fifteen years of age, and my circumstances in life such as to make a boy of no consequence in the world, yet men of high standing would take notice sufficient to excite the public mind against me, and create a hot persecution; and this was common among all the sects; all united to persecute me.

"It has often caused me serious reflection both then and since, how very strange it was that an obscure boy of a little over fourteen years of age, and one too, who was doomed to the necessity of obtaining a scanty maintenance by his daily labor, should be thought a character of sufficient importance to attract the attention of the great ones of the most popular sects of the day, so as to create in them a spirit of the hottest persecution and reviling.

"But strange or not, so it was, and was often cause of great sorrow to myself. However, it was nevertheless a fact that I had had a vision. I have thought since that I felt much like Paul when he made his defense before King Agrippa and related the account of the vision he had when he 'saw a light and heard a voice,' but still there were but few who believed him; some said he was dishonest, others said he was mad; and he was ridiculed and reviled; but all this did not destroy the reality of his vision.

"He had seen a vision, he knew he had, and all the persecution under heaven could not make it otherwise; and though they should persecute him unto death, yet he knew and would know unto his latest breath, that he had both seen a light, and heard a voice speaking to him, and all the world could not make him think or believe otherwise.

"So it was with me, I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak unto me, or one of them did; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 8-11.

The Keynote: "Hear Ye Him"

Certain points stand out prominently in this revelation. Let not the reader overlook the most important of them all, the keynote of the message and of the work that followed, to the present day: "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

Too long have people listened to men and man-made doctrines. It was time to turn to Jesus and hear him. Within the churches reformation had failed to recover the ancient order; the hour of restoration had struck.

It was Alexander Campbell, one of the most noted of the reformers, who said:

"Since the full development of the great apostasy foretold by prophets and apostles, numerous attempts at reformation have been made."—Christian System, p. 3. (Edition of 1890.)

"Societies, indeed, may be found among us, far in advance of others, in their progress toward the ancient order of things; but we know of none that has fully attained to that model."—Ibid., p. 291.

And he concluded his discussion of the creeds:

"Do not . . . the practical result of all creeds, reformations, and improvements and the expectations and longings of society—warrant the conclusion that either some new revelation, or some new development of the revelation of God must be made before the hopes and expectations of all true Christians can be realized, or Christianity save and reform the nations of this world? We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things."—Ibid., p. 250. (Italics ours.)

Creeds and Professors

Joseph Smith was told to join none of the churches then existing; that the creeds were wrong, and "those professors" corrupt.

This announcement gained for him the enmity of many theologians, and in itself accounts to a large degree for the troubles that his followers afterward encountered. Yet the charge was no more harsh than some of the declarations issuing from Wesley and others of the reformers.

It was not alleged that all religious people were corrupt. Far from it. The term "those professors" may be logically held to find its antecedent in the reference to those professors of religion, particularly the professional clergy, who had conducted the aforementioned revival and had followed it by such disgraceful quarrels: "If ye are not one, ye are not mine."

But if he choose to do so, the reader may extend the scope of the language to include all professors who then taught or do now teach "for doctrine the commandments of men" and draw near to God with their lips while their hearts are far from him.

The charge against the creeds stands self-evidently true. Indeed in many instances its truthfulness is self-confessed by those churches which have since revised their creeds and are still revising them, a confession of past error. Some of the doctrines then contained in the creeds, notably the doctrine of election and predestination, may well be considered "abominable" in the sight of God. (See chapter 8, p. 127, of this series.)

A Second Vision

A second vision, thrice repeated in one night, was granted some three years later, described as follows:

"When on the evening of the above-mentioned twenty-first of September, [1823] after I had retired to my bed for the night, I betook myself to prayer and supplication to Almighty God for forgiveness of all my sins and follies, and also for a manifestation to me, that I might know of my state and standing before him; for I had full confidence in obtaining a divine manifestation as I had previously had one.

"While I was thus in the act of calling upon God I discovered a light appearing in the room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor.

"He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; nor do I believe that any earthly thing could be made to appear so exceedingly white and brilliant; his hands were naked, and his arms also a little above the wrist. So also were his feet naked, as were his legs a little above the ankles. His head and neck were also bare. I could discover that he had no other clothing on but this robe, as it was open so that I could see into his bosom.

"Not only was his robe exceedingly white, but his whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. The room was exceedingly light, but not so very bright as immediately around his person.

"When I first looked upon him I was afraid, but the fear soon left me. He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Nephi [Moroni]. That God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people.

"He said there was a book deposited written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang.

"He also said that the fullness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book. After telling me these things he commenced quoting the prophecies of the Old Testament."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 12, 13.

A full account of this vision may be found in Church History, volume one. The heavenly messenger went on to quote Malachi 3 and 4, Isaiah 11, and a part of Joel 2; saying that these were shortly to be fulfilled.

Outstanding Points

First. The young man was told in this vision that God had a work for him to do, and that his name should be had for good and evil among all nations. The work that he was to do was unfolded later in the organization of the church after the New Testament pattern, and the restoration of "the old gospel," with its doctrines and blessings, "sustained by the ancient order of things."

The prophecy that his name should be had for good and evil was literally fulfilled: the name of the boy who that night communed with a bright messenger from on high has been bandied to and fro for good or for evil among all peoples.

Second. He was told that certain prophecies were about to be fulfilled. A leading prophecy in the chapters referred to was that the Jews should be gathered back to Palestine and their land again be blessed (see in particular Isaiah 11: 11, 12.)

At that time the return of the Jews was hardly dreamed of. To-day the Encyclopedia Britannica (11th edition) says:

"Prior to 1858, when the modern building period commenced, Jerusalem lay wholly within its sixteenth century walls. . . . At present Jerusalem without the walls covers a larger area than that within them." (Italics ours.)

This is in striking fulfillment of the prediction:

"And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."—Zechariah 2: 3, 4. (Italics ours.)

These tidings Zechariah said should be given to a young man by an angel. Joseph Smith received them in that way and gave them to the world.

The Outlook April 1, 1914, announced that the city authorities of Jerusalem were contemplating selling the outgrown city walls for building material.

Third. He was told concerning a certain book written upon gold plates and containing a history of the ancient inhabitants of America and God's dealings with them.

Four years later, September 22, 1927, he obtained those plates from the hands of the angel, at the hill commonly known as Hill Cumorah, described as "convenient to the village of Manchester, Ontario County, New York.

By divine assistance he was enabled to translate this book, the Book of Mormon, and it was published in March, 1830. This book is an adequate reply to Ingersoll's charge that "the Christian God did not know of the existence of America until Columbus told him of it."

Authority Restored

Undeniably authority must be had to preach the gospel and officiate acceptably in the ordinances of the church.

"And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest."—Hebrews 5: 4, 5.

It is not a matter of deciding to go out and preach. A call and an ordination are necessary. Jesus said:

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you."—John 15: 16.

Men may attempt to trace their authority and priesthood by succession back to Jesus and the apostles. For those who reject restored authority this is the only alternative.

Yet that leads every Protestant minister back into the Catholic Church. John Wesley recognized that and said:

"When asked by what authority I did these things, I replied by the authority of Jesus Christ conveyed by the Archbishop of Canterbury when he laid his hands on me."

And the Archbishop of Canterbury traced his ordination back to Rome. The same is true of Luther:

"His [Luther's] ordination, therefore, and that of all his Protestant successors, is as valid as that of the Romish priesthood at the beginning of the 16th century."—I. Daniel Rupp, History of Religious Denomination, p. 400.

But is it sufficient to trace authority back to the Catholic Church and into the mazes of the dark ages of apostasy? There it is lost under the terms of this edict:

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God."—2 John 9.

Others may answer for themselves. We judge them not. But for ourselves we must answer in the negative. We believe in authority restored by angelic administration under divine direction.

The Priesthood Restored

As the work of preparation progressed the day came when the Aaronic or lesser priesthood was restored. That event is thus described:

"We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month, (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine,) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, 'Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins, and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.' He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter, and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

"Accordingly we went and were baptized, I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

"The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.

"Immediately upon our coming up out of the water, after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery than the Holy Ghost fell upon him and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass: And again so soon as I had been baptized by him, I also had the spirit of prophecy, when, standing up I prophesied concerning the rise of the church, and many other things connected with the church, and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation."—Joseph Smith in Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 865, 866.

Oliver Cowdery thus describes their experiences on that occasion:

"This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will.

"On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance!

"What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard.

"As in the 'blaze of day'; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, 'I am thy fellow servant,' dispelled every fear.

"We listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were rapt in the vision of the Almighty!

"Where was room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever!

"But dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, 'Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!'"—Church History vol. 1, pp. 37, 38.

In due time, in harmony with the revelation previously quoted, the higher or Melchisedec priesthood was restored to them. Under this authority they were commanded to ordain each other first, and then others, as God should point them out. However, they were instructed to defer this ordination until they should meet for church organization.

II. The Period of Organization and Growth

The period of preparation drew to a close and the work of organization began. The church was organized on the 6th day of April, 1830, in Fayette, Seneca County, New York. Of that event Joseph Smith writes:

"Whilst the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, we still continued to bear testimony, and give information, as far as we had opportunity; and also made known to our brethren, that we had received commandment to organize the church, and accordingly we met together for that purpose, at the house of the above-mentioned Mr. Whitmer (being six in number) on Tuesday the sixth day of April, A. D. one thousand, eight hundred and thirty.

"Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded, (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by an unanimous vote. I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." After which he ordained me also to the office of an elder of said church.

"We then took bread, blessed it, and brake it with them also wine, blessed it, and drank it with them.

"We then laid our hands on each individual member of the church present that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and be confirmed members of the church of Christ. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us to a very great degree. Some prophesied, whilst we all praised the Lord and rejoiced exceedingly."—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 944, 945.

The work of organization and growth went on rapidly. Even while yet their numbers were so few, they were told by revelation that the church should be organized with apostles, elders, seventies, bishops and all the quorums and officers contained in the New Testament church.

Men came at the call of God. The church grew. Elders were ordained, as we have seen. The first bishop was called February 4, 1831. Twelve apostles were ordained at Kirtland, Ohio, February 14, 1835. The organization of a quorum of seventy began February 28, 1835. A First Presidency was organized in 1833.

Other officers were called of God and set in their respective places until there existed again a church organized exactly after the original plan, containing all those officers that we are assured in Holy Writ, "God set in the church."

Missions also, and local churches were established. A complete judicial system was organized, also a financial department. The church was fully equipped to carry on its mission work and to perform all necessary legislative, executive, and judicial functions of an ecclesiastical nature.

III. Period of Persecution

The period of persecution may be said to have begun with the period of organization and growth, if not, indeed, previous to that date, as we have seen.

One of the first public baptismal scenes, 1830, was an occasion for mob violence. These persecutions increased in violence as the years went by and as the growth of the church brought it more into public notice.

This may seem strange to some. The fact that the Saints were driven from place to place with great slaughter and suffering is held to be an evidence against them. But Jesus said:

"But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another."—Matthew 10: 23.

"If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you."—John 15: 20.

"If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you."—John 15: 18.

At Kirtland, Ohio

In October, 1830, Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, jr., Ziba Peterson and Parley P. Pratt were appointed on a mission west to the Indians. En route they tarried at Kirtland, Ohio, for a time.

At this place they were very successful. Sidney Rigdon, afterward a member of the First Presidency, was among their converts, and with many of his congregation. He was a brilliant and powerful "Christian" minister of note in the Western Reserve.

About one hundred and twenty-seven were baptized, including many afterward prominent in the church.

A strong following was built up at Kirtland, and the church was directed to remove to that point. Joseph Smith and others arrived there early in 1831. For a number of years Kirtland continued to be one of the most important points of gathering.

The Kirtland Temple

The corner stone of the Kirtland Temple was laid July 23, 1833. This remarkable structure was completed after great labor, hardship, and sacrifice, the dedication occurring March 27, 1836. This building is still in good condition and in use by the church.

The Lord blessed the people wonderfully in this temple. The gifts of the gospel were manifested in tongues, prophecies and visions.

Schools were organized for the instruction of the elders, and for the study of the Hebrew language and other subjects—the Saints were a studious people, also they were pio-

(Continued on next page.)

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Women's Department Historical Collection

We told you it was a letter from the department historian, didn't we? And we promised it was not about reporting to her the items of interest concerning your club's activities, eager as she is for those items! Well, to make good, we're going to let you in on a bit of pleasant news; news which we imagine you may have already guessed as you read the heading of this editorial.

Perhaps you opened your eyes a bit, or caught your breath as you read, and exclaimed to yourself or some one near you, "Why, I didn't know we had a historical collection!" Well, that's the news we're trying to tell you; don't you understand? And to make it clearer to you, we will go back a bit, and begin in the dear old fashion of childhood's absorbing stories.

"Once upon a time" Sister Frederick M. Smith, Director General of our Department, wrote the superintendent, unfolding her hopes and plans concerning a collection of articles or documents of historical interest to the church, which collection she hoped the women would make, or help to make, before it was forever too late. What we have to tell you to-day is the result of that letter and the thought and effort which have been put upon the matter by various ones since its receipt.

Upon inquiry we learned that there was a beginning of such a collection already in the hands of the Church Historian, and that he was not only willing, but delighted, to have the Women's Department step in and attempt to augment that beginning to the proportions of a real and valuable collection, such as our church, with its unique and most interesting history, could not well afford to be without. The President of the church also expressed his pleasure in the plan, and we have found the heartiest of support and encouragement from these two church officials.

Our department historian, Sister Madge Siegfried, visited a short time with us in our home in late summer, and later, upon the occasion of our recent visit to Independence, we were able to push our preliminary plans to an encouraging near temperance workers in Ohio. At Kirtland, October 23, 1837, the High Council, Joseph Smith, president, adopted the following resolution:

"That we discountenance the use of ardent spirits, in any way, to sell, or to be brought into this place for sale or use."
—Church History, vol. 2, p. 110.

Much has been written against the Saints in Ohio, but Robert Lucas, who was governor of Ohio from 1832 to 1836, during the greater part of their sojourn there, and governor of Iowa at the time of their movement to Nauvoo, in a letter to President Martin Van Buren, dated at Burlington, Iowa, April 22, 1839, said:

"I think it due to that people to state, that they had for a number of years a community established in Ohio, and that while in that State they were (as far as I ever heard) believed to be an industrious, inoffensive people; and I have no recollection of having ever heard of any of them being charged in that State as violators of the laws."—Church History, vol. 2, p. 97. (This letter is on file in Washington, District of Columbia; a photographic copy being in the possession of the Church Historian.)

At this place, too, grievous persecution occurred. During February, 1832, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were dragged from their homes at night and cruelly beaten and tarred and feathered.

(Concluded next week.)

completion. A cabinet was obtained, provided with suitable locks and protecting devices, in order that all who send their treasured souvenirs and relics to this collection may know that they will be properly safeguarded, so far as wisdom and judgment may dictate. This cabinet has a glass top under which some articles may be displayed, and many drawers to contain others which, except for rare occasions of special display, may rest securely therein. Cards have been printed, containing space for number, description, and name of the one who makes the loan; and already, without one word of publicity in regard to it, our Women's Department Historical Collection has become a reality, and a number of most interesting articles have taken their places there.

A further word in regard to the project will not come amiss. There are some people who claim to have little or no interest in "dead and gone" people and events. They feel that the life of the moment is all-sufficient, and stirring enough to absorb all one's time and attention. We may grant a portion of justification for this attitude, but at the same time are unwilling to admit that the past has no part to play in our present. If we concede the statements of biologists and sociologists to be correct, what and who we are to-day are very largely the result of the lives and thoughts of those who have gone before, and anything that may throw a light upon them may become a light and guide to us who have followed. They lived that we might be, and as they passed the "torch of life" down to us undimmed or feebly fluttering, so our heritages have been abundant or paltry.

The men and women who were instrumental in bringing forth this wonderful restored gospel in a day of narrowness and bigotry, who braved the scorn and contempt of neighbors, friends, and loved ones, and who, in some instances suffered persecution and privation and even made the "supreme sacrifice," in order that we might enjoy to-day the privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of our consciences, are worthy a place in our grateful memory.

The cry is often raised to-day that the rising generation is irreverent and indifferent to many spiritual influences we would throw about them. They seem callous, hardened, disinclined to pause in their mad pursuit of pleasure, to consider with thoughtfulness the forces of life and eternity. They lack loyalty and regard for authority, and too often there are exhibitions of heartrending disrespect for parents and ungratefulness to those whose devotion has given them all they have, even their very being.

Where lies the fault for such a condition of things? Can it be that we, as parents, have been too engrossed in providing material comforts for our children to see, with clear eyes, our duty to them in spiritual ways? Can it be that our very unselfishness has worked harm and loss to them in that we have demanded and received too little consideration at their hands? Can it be that because we have not taken the time to talk to them of the people and events of the past in a way to awaken respect and gratitude we have failed to implant in their minds a saving appreciation of what has been done for them? And might it not be, if we, as a people, would unite in gathering together in one place, all the little articles which have a history and interest attaching to them connected with the rise and development of our church, and could take our children to view these things, or talk with them of the personalities and the spiritual impulses which established our organization, explain to them the sacrifices and handicaps suffered and the trials and persecutions endured for the sake of the gospel held precious, gently guiding by suggestion and example the trend of thought into appreciative comprehension that these children will receive a blessing of inestimable worth and beauty?

And it is indeed the eleventh hour! In the homes of many Saints to-day there lie mementos of some one who has labored valiantly under the gospel banner, the mere sketching of whose life and deeds would be an inspiration to many another, and yet, unless these mementos are taken care of, properly labeled and described, who, in a few more years, will understand their significances or be able to tell the story connected therewith? The "second generation" in large and sorrowful measure has passed away, and the snows are whitening upon the brows of many of the third. With their passing, think you the traditions and stories they heard as children at parents' knees will be kept alive in the hearts of the hurrying, scurrying, careless generation of to-day?

Shall we not, then, before it is too late, while still we older ones remember the incidents and the meaning of the little tokens we may have of the life and service of those who have gone before us, gather together what we, as a church, may have of such relics, and let them be cared for, and appreciated, and placed where their silent testimonies may, throughout the years to come, lift the hearts of beholders to God in thankfulness for his mercy in the past, his presence with us to-day, and the hope we have of joy to come, when we may meet and mingle with those to whose loyalty, courage, and devotion we owe so much?

This collection is regarded as a loan collection. Articles are "loaned," and thus no one but the donors can claim any rights of absolute possession. Anything which has connected with it some history which is of interest to our people, will be acceptable. Things which have been used by those of the early church who were instrumental in its establishment or things connected with the prominent missionaries of those days or their sacrificing families will all have a message. Likewise the spirit of the Reorganization may be reflected by souvenirs of its hopeful days, all of which have place in our appreciative memories.

Letters, diaries, documents, as well as articles of any kind will be received. Everything should be carefully described, dates verified, history or relation to individuals given, and interest and meanings explained. Care should be also taken to give names and addresses of donors, that labeling cards may be accurately filled out.

Now, what do you think of the project? We feel quite sure we hear a murmur of many mingled voices saying, "Splendid! Just the thing! We will do all we can to help make that collection! There's that fan of grandmother's; or those letters written by grandfather when he was on his first missionary trip; or that memorial which was presented to Uncle _____ when he went on that foreign mission; or that picture of good old Brother _____, who baptized father and mother, you remember!"

Good! Who will be next? Now perhaps you will read our historian's letter with added enjoyment, because you understand better what she is talking about!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Our Historian's Letter

Well, in the midst of my household "stewing and brewing" I will stop long enough to say I have enough on hand to warrant "opening shop"!

I have the little lace cap by my side—the one David H. Smith wore when an infant. No finer "footing" or insertion or lace can be found nowadays, either! Baby ribbon (pink) around the face, back of lace frills, drawstrings in the back—too cute!

And I have Brother Elbert's baby-boy frock—a bright, small plaid, bloomers separate, lots of dark blue braid on it, and most beautifully made!

I have Frederick Smith's silk vest—brother to Brother Joseph, you know. And here is, also, Sister Stebbins's gold pen, pearl-handled, given to her by Cousin Henry before their marriage. She was glad to give a souvenir to our collection, and of course the Women's Department attach extra importance to anything about these women who have done so much for us in the past. She says of this pen—"Used exclusively for all her writing until in later years she laid aside this friend of tender memories for the more convenient fountain pen. The well-worn condition of the case shows with what regularity the pen was replaced therein, each time after using." And now that he has passed away, this gift of his has double value, both to her and to us, hasn't it?

She also sent a silver (filigree) tea strainer, an heirloom in her family. Coming down to her through her father. Very beautiful. And a fruit knife and nut pick (combination; sterling) owned by Sister Rosalia Harvey Dancer, wife of Brother David Dancer. It was left to Sister Stebbins by Sister Dancer at her death and had been a gift to her by Cousin Henry when he resided as a member of her family in Plano, Illinois. (By the way, Sister Stebbins is going to furnish us with a biography of Sister Dancer, too—surely a woman who "went about doing good" and who "never let her left hand know what her right hand doeth.") Another interesting article sent by Sister Stebbins is a sewing case, which apparently is a war-time relic of Cousin Henry's. There's printing on it; something about an Illinois regiment.

Other things in view are a Testament carried by one of our prominent brothers in the Philippine War, and a little chest made by the father of one of our patriarchs. He said he had long wanted to see it in a church collection.

Then there is the painting of the Nauvoo House as it looked originally; very pretty and very interesting. I have framed it with a gold mat and placed it in the frame made by Brother Layton out of walnut from the "Old Homestead," in Nauvoo. The gold mat gives it the gold framing an oil painting needs, and this plan also puts the old canvas under glass to preserve it. It was painted by Brother Elbert's father, you know.

Then I have the book I told you of, printed in 1851 in Copenhagen, in the Danish tongue. It was left by Frederick Johnson, my grandfather, to my mother. It concerns the church work there. His name and many others familiar we find in it. Has a good engraving of Joseph Smith for frontispiece.

Feel very hopeful about this collection, for I believe when the people know about it they will be very glad to have their relics placed where they can be seen and appreciated by the masses. Some day we will plan for a real exhibit, during conference time, and have attendants to explain things to people who come to see it!

Yours happily,
MADGE C. SIEGFRIED.

The Spirit of Christmas

Are you willing to forget what you have done for other people and remember what other people have done for you; to ignore what the world owes you, and to think what you owe the world; to put your rights in the background and your duties in the middle distance, and your chances to do a little more than your duty in the foreground; to see that your fellow men are just as real as you are, and try to look behind their faces to their hearts, hungry for joy; to own that probably the only good reason for your existence is not what you are going to get out of life, but what you are going to give to life; to close your book of complaints against the universe, and look around you for a place where you can sow a few seeds of happiness—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to stoop down and consider the needs and the desires of little children; to remember the weakness and loneliness of people who are growing old; to stop asking whether your friends love you, and ask yourself whether you love them enough to bear in mind the things that other people have to bear on their hearts; to try to understand what those who live in the same house with you really want, without waiting for them to tell you; to trim your lamp so that it will give more light and less smoke, and to carry it in front so that your shadow will fall behind you; to make a grave for your ugly thoughts and a garden for your kindly feelings, with the gate open—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than hate, stronger than evil, stronger than death—and that blessed life which began in Bethlehem nineteen hundred and twenty years ago is the image and brightness of the Eternal Love? Then you can keep Christmas. And if you can keep it for a day, why not always?

But you can never keep it alone.—Henry Van Dyke.

Character Building

Very few of us are entirely satisfied with ourselves. We all have traits of character which we dislike and would gladly discard if we could do so easily. We make firm resolves to change our ways and perhaps exert our will power to eliminate the undesirable quality, only to find ourselves unconsciously slipping back again into the same old rut. The usual result is that after a while we give up the attempt, very likely, with the old excuse that one's character cannot be changed; that one must die with the one he is born with.

The truth of that statement is not so generally accepted as it was a few years ago. Character consists of the sum total of one's mental habits, inherited and acquired, and the changing of one's mental habits is a very practical possibility. All that is needed is an earnest desire coupled with a firm conviction that it can be accomplished.

The best way to kill an undesirable mental habit is to cultivate a habit of thought, directly opposite in nature. If you are afflicted with the blues and have the desire and courage to attack them, let your mind rest on the happiness which comes with a cheerful mental condition. Be consciously cheerful! Smile! Smile whether you have anything to smile at or not. Don't just smile with your face, but smile mentally at the world, and soon, when the engine of the brain gets running along that track, it will keep on with very little effort on the part of the engineer excepting, perhaps, some more smiles once in a while for steam.—Exchange.

Psychology

Text: The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts. Herald Publishing House, $2.10 postpaid.

CHAPTER V

Habit

1. Explain the meaning of the following: Habit is our "best friend or worst enemy"; We are a walking bundle of habits"; Habit is the "flywheel of society"; Habit is a "cable which we cannot break."

2. Do you agree with these: "Let me know your habits of life and you have revealed your moral standard and conduct"; "Let me discover your intellectual habits, and I understand your type of mind and methods of thought"?

3. Give the definition of habit in your own words.

4. In the majority of cases, are stoop shoulders, shuffling carriage, careless, halting articulation, and glum, morose expressions justifiable? Why?

5. The question is not, "Shall we form habits?" but, "What habits shall we form?" Give seven reasons why habit-forming is beneficial. Do habits work against progress? How?

6. It is not always best to keep on doing a thing in the same old way, to think and believe always the same, but we should encourage a plasticity which will enable us to keep out of "ruts," to keep us from being "old fogy." Examine yourself and see if you are in "ruts" or "old fogy" on any line of action or thought—say, as to kinds of recreation for our young people, your idea of religion, churchgoing, manner of dress, etc. Discuss.

7. Many parents and teachers do not realize the breadth of the term education. Is the child receiving an education whether he has a knowledge of books or not, if he is forming a large number of useful habits? Why?

8. At what period in the development of an individual is he most plastic? When, then, should the habit-forming process be most emphasized?

9. How can an individual become that which he wishes or dreams that he may become?

10. Let this burn deeply into the mind and soul of every parent or teacher who may read: So every school and home should be a species of habit-factory—a place where children develop habits of neatness, punctuality, obedience, politeness, dependability, and the greater graces of character.

11. Discuss James's three maxims for habit-forming.

12. Make a list of acts performed in a day that may be called habits. Indicate, in each case, the stimulus and the response.

13. Have you ever habituated an act that was at first unpleasant? If so, did the unpleasantness disappear? Did the act become pleasant later?

14. Suppose a bad habit had been broken many years. Why is there danger of "backsliding"?

15. From the point of view of habit, what is the function of education?

16. Sometimes the children of preachers go wrong—children that have been preached to and prayed for daily for twenty years. If you know of any such case, how can you explain it?

17. What can be done for a boy fourteen years old, normal mentally and physically, but who has had no moral training, and as a result lies, steals, etc.? If you have ever observed such a case, describe the treatment and the results.

18. Discuss the relation of religious belief to moral practice.

19. How can parents be made to see that the main work of moral training must fall upon them? How is it possible for the modern home to do its proper work in this regard?

20. Discuss fully the moral influence that may come from the group games of youth.

21. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

Notice to All Women's Department Workers

Another quarter is almost past, and reports are due January 1, 1922. Much depends upon each worker and local superintendent making out reports promptly and placing in the hands of the local Women's Department secretary in order that the report from the local may reach the district organizer not later than January 5, 1922.

If you are isolated from a branch and do not work under the direction of a local organization of Women's Department, send your report direct to your district organizer.

The district organizer will supply each local in her district with the necessary report blanks for each department of the work, and she should see that delay in reporting is not due to her neglect to supply these blanks promptly and in due time.

Organizers, please remember that your annual statistical report is due at the general office on February 1, 1922. If your locals do not report promptly, you will have still a few days in January for the correspondence necessary to obtain them to your satisfaction.

GOLDIE V. BROOKS, General Secretary.

Sister Clara Fleeharty writes from Fairfield, Illinois, of her appreciation of the good which the HERALD brings to her, and her friends to whom it is passed on. The Saints of that place have planned a pie supper for the church benefit and expect Brother Lloyd C. Moore, the district president, to attend. Their Sunday school placed the Christmas offering goal at ten dollars and have exceeded it. The school is small, with good interest.

A recent letter informs us that a series of meetings for the young people, similar to those held in Zion and her stakes, has been undertaken in the South Sea Islands and has been successfully conducted, according to reports. We hope soon to have a more complete report as to exactly what was done, who was the speaker, and what success was secured.

O. W. Tuck writes from Neligh, Nebraska, that they enjoyed the HERALD and also the few elders who visit them. They hope the day will come when there will be many missionaries in that district.

LETTERS

An Indian's Reasons for Belief in the Book of Mormon

So many have requested me to give my reasons for believing the Book of Mormon to be a true history of the Indian, his origin, etc., that it was deemed best to write the SAINTS' HERALD, giving briefly a few of these reasons. Therefore, it will be necessary to go into a little history of the Ojibwa or Chippewa tribe of Indians.

This tribe was the principal and most powerful of the Algonquin or Algonquin Stock. The North American Indian was composed of different great stocks or families, the best known of which were the Algonquin, the Caddoan, the Siovan, the Athapasean, the Muskogi, and the Iroquoian stock, etc. Each stock was divided into different tribes, who spoke the same language but with a different dialect. For instance, the Ojibwa, or Chippewa, and the Ottawa speak the same language, but cannot converse with each other without great difficulty, similar to the Swede and Norwegian.

The Algonquin was the principal and most numerous of those stocks. Their territory ranged from Virginia north to Labrador, west along the Saint Lawrence up to the Great Lake region, up north to Hudson Bay.

The history of our country mentions but briefly the once mighty tribe, the Chippewa; but few know that the father of Pocahontas, Chief Powhatan, was a Chippewa, as his name signifies in that tongue, "to dream."

The only treaty that was never violated was between the Chippewa and William Penn. This grand old gentleman is known in our traditions by his Indian name of "Ma-goun" which, translated from the Chippewa, means "Feather." Evidently, when the Indians asked Mr. Penn what his name signified, he showed them his pen, which in those days was made of a feather or quill, hence the name.

Since the Chippewa was the principal tribe of the leading stock, the Algonquin, we must attach some importance to his sacred legends, for the Chippewa were very religious in their worship of the Great Spirit, for, contrary to popular opinion, they had a form of worship called Meda-win, and believed in a Supreme Being which is called Geji-Munido, which, translated, means literally, pitying and loving God. They used the sun as a symbol or image of this God, because the sun gave them warmth; hence the world's erroneous idea that we are sun worshippers!

The secrets, or teachings of this Chippewa Meda-win have been hidden from the paleface, as carefully concealed, in fact, as are the secrets or passwords of our modern secret societies.

The sacred legends were handed down from high priest to high priest, and so much importance was attached to this ceremony that no one was allowed to approach the place of worship while the ceremony was in progress.

This religion, or order, was in four degrees. Very few ever attained the fourth degree. Every degree had certain truths, or secrets. At the third degree, the novice was told that Geji-Munido left or placed three men here on the earth to protect and guard the Chippewa, if he remain faithful, until He came again.

It is said that during some great calamities those men have appeared to some and given needed help; they appeared as a light, their countenances shone as a white light; even their hands were so white and pure that the finger tips seemed ready to let fall drops of light! This surely refers to the three Nephites who were allowed to remain on earth.

Should not this one point alone prove the Book of Mormon is a true record of God's dealing with my people, for how could this strange coincidence occur in the book; also in the teachings of this aboriginal religion?

Consider, too, this Meda-win required that if anyone would ask favors of the Great Spirit or Geji-Munido, he must first go into the silent forest, away from his fellows, and, after preparing himself by fasting for days at a time, usually ten days, then pray and ask in secret. Who knows but what this custom which was practiced for ages, did not win divine approval?

Shall we deny to this simple child of nature, the privilege accorded us when we ask gifts of the heavenly Father and receive them according to our faith?

The Book of Mormon says there was magic and unseemly witchcraft in those days. We have them among some to-day. For instance, the Che-suk-ki-win, or sorcery, as practiced by some Indians. This is not advocated by the Meda-win, but is a manifestation of the prince of evil. Are we not told that not all miracles are from on high, but of those whom we battle, principalities, etc.?

In view of the above and by reason of those facts—there are a great many more, but space will not permit me to enumerate them all—I, as a Chippewa Indian, believe the Book of Mormon to be a true history of God's dealings with my forefathers.

Later, I shall give some of our traditions or legends, containing our history, also visitations of different times, of those heavenly visitors.

JOSEPH A. NORTHRUP.

In the Wake of the Jerusalem Riot

The press continues to clamor for a British police force. The native police are the malesh (any-old-thing-will-do) type. There is no security with them guarding the city. Jerusalem has sixty to seventy thousand inhabitants and only seventy policemen. The taxpayers of Palestine pay $1,280,000 annually for public security and in return receive excuses after each riot is over.

I quote an extract from a letter sent to the Palestine Government by the Grand Mufti, representing the Arab population: "We wish to proclaim our deep resentment at the regrettable incidents which occurred yesterday." This same mufti came into court and did his utmost to have those that were instigators of the riot liberated. He said it was a great injustice to sentence them.

I talked with Mr. I. Snowman, an English citizen of Jewish descent and an artist of reputation. He related his story as follows:

"I left my house inside the Damascus gate to go to a lunch room, also located inside the old city. A fairly broad street, about one hundred yards in length, ends in a junction where two narrow streets start, forming a "Y." Standing at this junction was a crowd of Arabs armed with clubs, sticks, iron bars, and knives. I skirted this crowd and went on to the lunch room.

"From the window I could see similar mobs of Arabs located in various parts of the old city, with weapons corresponding to those in the hands of the mob at the "Y" junction. Suddenly, a bomb exploded, and heart-rending screams and groans proceeded from the same direction! A moment or two later a party of blood-spattered women carrying what appeared to be a wounded child rushed headlong past the window where I stood. In less than a minute these same women repassed the window; their escape had been cut off by the mob at the Y junction. The whole district was in the hands of an organized band of Arabs. Just outside the Damascus gate was a military guard, probably playing euchre. They had no orders and could do nothing.

"I could endure it no longer, so I left the lunch room to go to the governate to do what I could to arouse the officials to a sense of duty. As I was passing the crowd at the Y junction, an Arab landed me a terrible blow on the head with a club; simultaneously I caught the glare of the knife. This was stuck into my neck behind my ear. I fell to the ground and lay there some moments and was picked up and assisted by a girl until we reached the governate.

"The Arabs congregated, exposed their weapons, and operated within the sight of the police and military and were not molested in any way until they had finished their complete program."

Incidents like the above hinder our work, hinder the progress of the country, and set everything back. The average

Arab does not believe in progress. It irritates him. He prefers stagnation. What was good enough for his fathers is good enough for him. Under certain conditions he delights in murder and robbery: in all these riots robberies are perpetrated on a large scale. This is how Mohammed conquered; this is the example for all time to come.

On November 6 the French reported an engagement with the same type of people, at Deir el Zor, Syria, a little town of eight thousand population, on the right bank of the Euphrates, on the way from Alepho to Bagdad. French casualties were thirty-seven killed and one hundred wounded. Severe losses were sustained by the Bedouins. You can best imagine what this means when you compare the modern equipment used by the French with the antiquated arms of the Bedouins.

In Syria and in Egypt they do not have the Balfour Declaration to contend with, and in spite of this, their troubles are equally as great here. It's the "nature of the beast" to fight, and fighting and murder will continue in these places for many years to come.

Total number of dead and wounded up to date, forty-nine; about twenty of this number will die. This is called a small riot, but it is rumored that we will have one on a very large scale when the Palestine or Arab delegation return empty-handed. One thing we can be thankful for, the Arabs generally announce beforehand when they intend to start a riot. This gives a person a chance to purchase some supplies in advance.

HARRY PASSMAN.

JERUSALEM, November 21, 1921.

We Must Live Within Our Means

An elder who thinks we have run too fast and must slow up a little.

I believe that in telling the Saints the exact conditions, and how it has come about will surely help in the matter, but my more than fifteen years of experience in financial dealing with the Saints has convinced me that this begging is a poor policy.

I often think of the statement of "our Joseph" when he said at a conference one time when begging was going on for Graceland and such things, that "there is only one pocketbook in this church, brethren, and if you draw from it for one thing you will have that much less for something else."

For some time the expenses of the general church, or overhead, as we would call them in business, have steadily increased, and the missionary force has been reduced to allow it, which is bound to bring a decrease in income. Our church offices have expanded too fast with their ever-increasing expenses, and so many new offices created. The church has been going like the Nation and its States, counties, towns, and school districts, buying, building, and expanding in every line, but mainly in its indebtedness; the world has gone spend-and-debt mad; there will have to be a stop, and finally a paying, and that is what is facing us now as a Nation and also as a church.

I am not in favor of spending when we have not the price to pay for it. We had better stop and go without for a while.

Proper articles on "Retrenchment" are the biggest thing needed right now. We all need it; how properly to restrict our wants, how to live within our income, and as our income decreases to restrict our expenses. It may mean self-denial, but that is the big lesson every officer and member of the church needs to learn more thoroughly.

The Saints will sacrifice and go without anything that the elders and officials in general of the church will set them the example of doing, but priestcraft will not work in this church; there can be no "big men." The Saints in the cities and the officials and elders, especially in Zion, must not ask for anything better for themselves than they are willing others should retain or have. Those in the general offices of the church must not expect to live in modern ease with all its conveniences and expect it to be paid for by those living in homes too small without even the necessities of life, such as is the case in a very large majority of the Saints' families in this section.

Why Not a Dollar Day?

A sister urges that we could raise a goodly sum by this method, based on persistent economy each day.

Bishop McGuire: I have read the HERALD this week with interest. I am touched by the subject of the hour. The problem which faces us now at this time of year which should be the happiest season of all is a real one. But I believe it will be the happiest Christmas we ever spent if we do the better thing. Our church means very little to us if we do not sacrifice a little. "Each one just a little" should be our slogan, and here is the purpose of my letter.

Why can we not have a Dollar Day in our church? We are not very much in earnest if we cannot each give a dollar freely. Sometime during the past year about every one of us has spent a dollar or more foolishly. Now is the time to pay up for our mistakes. Let every adult give not less than a dollar and every child not less than fifty cents. From a financial viewpoint, considering all we owe, we as a family can hardly afford to talk this way, but we are willing to do it.

It has been a long time since we received our pay, and then we received only one third of what we should. This year we expected to make a big payment on our home, cutting ourselves to the limit on everything else. So far as clothes are concerned, my husband has to dress mediumly well for his work. My own clothes are meager. I have three dresses, four, seven, and nine years of age, which I continue to fix up for winter wear. We have never bought children's coats ready made. I make them from old coats which I saved for years back for that purpose. I am glad I learned to sew when I was a girl. It is a pleasure to me. If we would do more of that, we young mothers could save more.

We have heavy doctor bills to pay, but we are cheerful in the matter. We suffer no physical pain, so why murmur?

My husband thinks my suggestion of a Dollar Day is not practical, but somehow we do a lot of things that are not counted "practical" and make a success of them, don't we?

A SISTER.

Dedication of Buffalo Church

President F. M. Smith delivered dedicatory sermon. An impressive service.

A thrill that comes usually but once in a lifetime occurred on November 27, 1921, to the Buffalo, New York, Saints, after a number of years of sacrifice and toil and earnest devotion to the work undertaken by a small branch of Saints.

A number of years ago it was decided that property be bought and a house of worship be erected. The project was looked upon with favor by many of the earnest workers. Property was purchased, a building was erected, and then came the struggle to free themselves from the burden. The committee having the matter in hand did well their part, likewise those supporting them. So the dedication was made possible on November 27.

The indebtedness having been met, now the building was ready for the ceremonies that would place the property in the hands of the general church.

Sunday, November 27, was begun with prayer service at 9.30 with Patriarch A. D. Angus in charge, assisted by A. E. Stone and H. Dickout. The service was enjoyed by all present.

The service at eleven o'clock was a preaching service, with F. M. Smith as the speaker, G. W. Robley in charge. An excellent talk was given to the edifying of all present.

The afternoon service at three o'clock was the time in which the thrill came to the hearts of the devoted Saints of Buffalo, and in fact to all that had at any time labored in the New York District, when President F. M. Smith again discoursed in the dedicatory effort, leaving a wonderful impression upon his hearers from the masterful way in which he did his part. There was present a power which impressed everyone with the solemnity of the occasion. The idea of dedicating the place of worship to the true and living God in this age of the affairs of men caused one to reflect the remarks of the President to the end that it is intended that the building stands for service which is service to man, meaning service to God; so that while we may worship within the house, our duties well performed towards our fellow men make worship complete.

The dedicatory prayer by Patriarch Angus was impressive, also the presentation of keys and papers by the branch president, P. L. Weegar, to the Bishop's representative, Elder Frank Mesle, of Sherrill, New York, and in turn he presented the same to the custody of the branch deacon, George Schrier, in a few well-chosen words.

Truly every heart was swelling with delight, for every bosom surely felt the thrilling touch of the Spirit that makes for consecration in the lives of Saints.

The day was completed by a short discourse by ex-district president, A. E. Stone, of Kirtland, Ohio.

The day will be long remembered by all present, and the church was taxed to its capacity. May there radiate from that place and through those who may make it a place to offer their devotions to God, the Spirit that characterized the entire services of the day; and may the thrill that came to the Saints always remain, to actuate them to fuller service, if possible.

The sisters deserve credit for the way they cared for the outer man. The basement of the church was certainly full of activity and good things to eat.

Rejoice and Be Glad

The value of gladness as a factor in the redemption of Zion is one which none of us can afford to underestimate. Let us develop all the human sunshine that we can. Then our lights will grow brighter and we will be the means of helping those who are in darkness and despair.

It is one of the cosmic laws of the universe that all things respond to the call of rejoicing, all things gather where life is a song. Gladness and joy are magnets. Let us help those who are groping in the lowlands of gloom and doubt by making ourselves human magnets, that we may draw them to Zion.

If our faces are radiant with the joy and good will which the gospel should bring, then Zion indeed will be a magnet which will draw all that is pure and good out of the outer darkness that covers the world.

Eternal life with God is a condition of eternal bliss and joy immeasurable. God created man with the intention and purpose that he should be happy. He made the birds to sing and the flowers to bloom. He created the fruits of the field, the trees of the forest, the precious stones and metals, and all that is pure and good and lovely, and gave man dominion over them, that his heart might be full and his happiness complete.

Let us rejoice that we have the privilege of being of service to God and our fellow man by spreading human sunshine wherever we go. Let us be glad that we are indeed called to be sons of God, princes and kings. Let us rejoice that Zion will soon be redeemed, and many shall come, singing songs of everlasting joy.

Let us fill our hearts with gladness; then we will rise above the fogs of gloom and doubt and stand on the mountains where we can see the vision of Zion unhampered and be able to make the mountain of the Lord's house a reality. Gladness illuminates our minds and gives us faith that we may see the pathway clearly.

Gloom, doubt, and despair are evil agents which the Devil uses to darken our minds and thwart the purposes of God in us. If we are always glad, anger, jealousy, worry, and all their brood will depart and the Devil will find no place to get a foothold in our hearts.

Let us be glad, whatever happens, and the tide will soon turn and we will find more and more things coming to us to make us happy, for all things respond to the call of rejoicing; all things gather where life is a song.

Gladness will dispel all selfishness, because selfishness and genuine gladness cannot exist together. The sunbeam does not dance to please itself, but to gladden others.

As it is the full glory of the noonday sun that causes the flowers to bloom, the birds to sing, and the earth to rejoice, so it is the radiant joy of a full heart that makes us a delight to those with whom we come in contact and a tower of strength to the afflicted and downcast.

Gloom and doubt slow up our hearts' beat, darken our minds, and weaken our every power. Gladness quickens our hearts, gives us strength, brightens our minds, and increases our capacity for service.

Let us resolve always to be glad; then our hearts will be fountains of joy under whose warmth all the virtues of love, charity, kindness, faith, courage, and service will grow and blossom and make our lives of unmeasurable richness and sublime worth.

ROY WELDON.

Wilburton, Oklahoma, Church Dedicated

The Wilburton, Oklahoma, Branch had the misfortune of getting their church building burned one year ago, leaving the membership without a place to worship. They proceeded at once to rebuild. Friends out of the church subscribed $365 and the membership raised $835.

The twelve hundred dollars were paid out for material. Labor for rebuilding was given free by Saints and friends. The new building is neat and substantial, speaking well for the Saints of Wilburton.

On November 20, the church was dedicated at 2 p. m. The building was nicely decorated with flowers and ferns. The house was filled with Saints and friends and Pastor H. R. Harder was in charge. The dedicatory prayer was by J. Arthur Davis, the dedicatory sermon by Frederick A. Smith. The sermon was of a very high order and all were made to sense the value of Christ in one's life. Nothing but good can come out of such a noble effort as the Wilburton Saints have made.

Brother Frederick A. Smith has done splendid work in all the points of the district where he has labored. Meetings were held at Haileyville, Fanshawe, and Wilburton, also at Henryetta.

Brother J. Arthur Davis was ordained to the office of high priest by Brother Smith while at Wilburton. We have a promise that Brother Smith will come back prepared to give blessings. Many would like to receive them, we believe, if the good work can be continued until our district is gone over. The Saints will be strengthened so we can get ourselves in good working condition.

ALEDO, ILLINOIS, December 12, 1921.

Editors Herald: I wish to correspond with a Latter Day Saint farmer needing a hired man for next year, who would not object to my having a four-year-old boy with me.

I want to have my boy with me if I possibly can and in a Latter Day Saint home. I was left last spring with two children, a baby girl, and a boy three years old. I am boarding them both out in town until such a time as I may have a home of my own again. I have no relatives of my own in this country to take care of them at present.

I thought by making a request through the HERALD that I might come in contact with a family who not only need a man, but might be glad to have a little fellow around. There are such people; the only trouble is to find them.

Yours sincerely,

FRED HOWLETT.

Care of S. D. Godard, Route 4.

Favors Efforts to Further Indian Cause

Interesting items of news come to us just now, as for instance, the late reports on Indian matters which show an increased interest, on the part of the Latter Day Saints, and others in the native Americans receiving from the Government a full franchise or legal privilege, that they may be enabled thereby to enjoy a more perfect freedom as American citizens.

There are, no doubt, thousands who would gladly express themselves in sympathy with this movement, could they, at this crisis or turning point of affairs, sense the obligation, as free men and women, we owe in this, as many esteem it, righteous cause, upheld and appointed by a hand divine.

We believe steps should be taken at once in so great a work as the helping, with all our powers, to uplift in a general way, a group of people whose history from first to last we have so miraculously been made acquainted with.

Brother William Madison, in taking the initiative here in this work of appealing to our sense of justice and humanity, has proved himself, as did Chief Red Fox, at the Stone Church and elsewhere, to be a brave, praiseworthy champion of the cause of a hitherto despised, downtrodden nation.

As citizens of this great republic, the women of this country realize fully what a priceless boon it is to be enabled, legally, to have a share in framing and executing such laws as will tend to improve the condition of the family, and the community, and, in fact, to make the world better for their having lived in it.

The native-born people of a land like ours are surely entitled to just as great a privilege as the naturalized citizen, the man once a slave, and the female portion of the population now enjoy; and we trust the power of an overruling Providence will soon be shown to the world in the bringing to pass the emancipation of one of the noblest nations of the earth, and a people of whom the prophets have spoken, as destined to fulfill a promise glorious and sublime.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Good Meetings in Saint Joseph

A goodly number baptized and general effects good.

The revival meetings which were being conducted at the Second Saint Joseph Branch, by Elder R. D. Weaver and Bishop J. A. Koehler, closed Sunday evening, December 11, with the church filled to overflowing and many made the remark that they wished the meetings would continue, although this was the fifth week.

Meetings commenced Sunday, November 6, and many were turned away the first night, being unable to gain entrance, and night after night the house was filled with attentive and eager listeners, while God blessed the speaker with wonderful ability and power beyond that which I had ever witnessed for such a length of time.

Elder R. D. Weaver is certainly an able exponent and defender of the gospel, and from my acquaintance with him, is very humble and prayerful.

Bishop Koehler, in his mild and deliberate manner presented the economic, industrial, and stewardship part of the gospel, and on these lines as far as I have read or heard is without a peer.

A goodly number were baptized and we feel many are about ready, but as yet have not made a decision; we trust they will soon. Many who do not belong to the church are telling their friends that they never heard such wonderful preaching, and have invited their preachers to come and hear, but they didn't come.

We feel great good has been done, as we received a great amount of good publicity by the people who came to hear, and by the local press, as both papers gave us very nice write-ups for the first two weeks, almost daily, and once or twice a week for the balance of the time, and besides, we distributed two thousand bills announcing the meetings, and one thousand three-minute tracts.

Fifteen minutes were devoted each evening to congregational singing, solos, and orchestral pieces.

We wish to thank our chorister, Brother Herbert Pedder-son, Sister J. A. Koehler, Sister Rogers, and others who so faithfully helped in the music. In fact, the Saints were all very faithful, working harmoniously, which was a great factor in making the meetings a success. About two weeks before the meetings commenced the Saints in the branch organized to help.

J. L. BEAR.

Southern Wisconsin Conference

At Madison, Wisconsin, December 3 and 4, J. O. Dutton, district president, was in the chair and chosen to preside, assisted by B. C. Flint.

Saturday afternoon was given over to the Sunday School Department.

The Spirit was present to a marked extent during the Sunday morning sacrament meeting. The gift of tongues and interpretation was enjoyed, speaking words of comfort and encouragement to the Saints.

There were many visiting Saints from different parts of the district, but doubtless had the weather been more favorable there would have been many more.

We rejoice that a spirit of peace and unity prevailed at all meetings.

Brother Wirth acted as caterer, the meals being prepared and served in a very efficient manner by the members of the ladies' aid, and as one of the English brethren said, "the meals were moreish."

Time and place of next district conference left with district officers.

C. F. CLARKE.

JONESPORT, MAINE, December 12, 1921.

Editors Herald: The work here is progressing nicely, a large attendance at all services. Sunday evening from two hundred and fifty to three hundred people assembled and were very attentive while the writer spoke on the subject, "Creedal evolution."

Our branch organist, Sister Cora Rogers, has left us for a few days, to visit her daughter, Sister Wilson, wife of Elder Newman Wilson, at Vinal Haven.

Elder Arthur Rogers has gone to Bangor, Maine, for treatment due to a chronic ailment.

Services for the week follow: Monday evening at 7.30, Religio. Tuesday evening, those taking part in the musical program of the Christmas concert will meet at the church for rehearsal. This includes the orchestra, choir, etc. Wednesday evening, the regular midweek prayer meeting will be held at the church. We are pleased to see the splendid spirit prevailing and the large attendance at this service. Thursday evening, the Sunday-school teachers and officers will meet at the home of the branch chorister, Brother Herbert Rogers, for teachers' meeting. Sunday, Sunday school, 10.30 a. m.; morning sermon, 11.45; evening sermon, 7 o'clock.

The work throughout the district is progressing very encouragingly in all the branches: South Addison, Kennebec, Corea, Beals, and Jonesport. The work in these respective branches is under the able leadership of David E. Joy, George Manchester, James L. Clark, Fred Beal, and W. E. Rogers. All report increasing interest and activity.

O. L. THOMPSON.

The latest United States census reports as living in the United States January 1, 1921, 33,250,870 persons between 5 and 20 years of age, of whom 24,373,976 were attending school. Of the public school age, 7 to 13, there were 15,306,793 children, of whom 13,869,010 attended school. More than 70 per cent of those between 5 and 20 were attending school in Utah, Iowa, Nebraska, Montana, Idaho, and Oregon. More than 95 per cent of those between 7 and 13 were in school in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Ohio, Iowa, Delaware, Idaho, and Utah.

HELENA, OKLAHOMA, December 12, 1921.

Editors Herald: Last night I closed a seventeen-day meeting at this place. The interest was good and several families are interested in the church and its work, so we hope to see an ingathering here before long. Brother L. D. Dyke has an appointment here once every three weeks, so we feel that his visits here, along with the efforts of our local brother, J. L. Conyers, will keep the work moving.

Our work is onward in Western Oklahoma and we could find work for many more men, but by reason of the demands elsewhere we are required to get along with the present small force. We are fortunate, however, in that we have some excellent local men in this part of the country, and the Saints, generally speaking, are anxious to do their part towards the forward movement of the work. We are trying to so organize and systematize our work that all may become helpers, and that the day may be speeded when our work will make greater advancement in this part of the world.

The present financial depression in the country is weighing heavily upon many of the people in this part, but we are glad to say that the good people here are courageous and optimistic, and that is a great factor in helping recover the world from its present financial condition. We have absolute confidence in the integrity of the Saints, and feel sure they will if need be redouble their efforts to keep the work of the church moving.

There are many of the Saints with whom I have labored in the past that I wish to remember and extend the season's greeting to. May they, one and all, continue to pursue the way that has been set us in the life of the Just One whose birth we commemorate at this season of the year.

Very respectfully, J. E. VANDERWOOD.

EDITORIAL CONCLUDED

Activities in Zion

On Sunday evening, the 18th, the speaker at the Stone Church in Independence was President F. M. Smith. So many attended the service that it was necessary to provide an overflow service in the basement, which was addressed by Walter W. Smith. President Smith spoke on Zion's problems, with stewardship as the key to the situation. The song service began earlier, under the direction of Frank A. Russell, who has been in charge of that feature of the series of meetings now concluded, and the service was very inspiring.

President Smith left on Monday for Lamoni to be there a few days, then will proceed to California.

On the evening of Friday, the 16th, the Religio at the Stone Church dispensed with the lesson period and attended in the lower room a program by the Nonpariel Class of young people which was a representation of a General Conference. It was an educational affair and much enjoyed. It grew out of the fact that very few of the young people had ever attended a conference business session and they wanted to learn the methods and setting by actual participation in some such event. It was elaborately planned and its success largely enhanced by the spontaneous response of those present. Even a ye and nay vote was unexpectedly called.

The American Legion Visits Kansas City

An appreciation of that imposing event.

Elder Ralph W. Farrell wishes to state that he did not hear the sermon of President Elbert A. Smith on "The two philosophies of life," delivered at the Stone Church, October 30, and printed in the HERALD of December 13. The reason for this request is the number of similarities in principle between this sermon and his article which appeared in the HERALD of November 22.

If it is necessary, it is only fair to both of them to state that both expressions on existing conditions in the world today were made quite independently of each other.

We have received a few comments on this article by Brother Farrell, which was published November 22, beginning on page 1109, but that is principally on account of its title. The article is really upon the amusements of the day and drawing a parallel between some conditions in the world and the possibilities of the church. It was not intended in any way as a reflection upon the American Legion, which we think a careful reading would clearly show, and certainly it does not arise from any failure to appreciate the splendid work of our boys and their willingness to offer their lives for the protection of their homes and country.

It is only fair to add that such incidents as Elder Farrell referred to were indeed rare. Many of our people attended the dedication of the memorial in the morning as well as the parade in the afternoon; in fact, spent the whole day there without seeing one single instance of drunkenness or disorder.

The beautiful symbolism of the memorial made a decided

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The Day of His Birth - - - - -	1201
Next General Conference October 1, 1922 - - -	1201
Men's Hearts Failing Them for Fear - - - -	1202
Joint Council Committee Considering Retrenchment - - - - -	1203
Churches Retrenching on Expenses - - - - -	1204
Marshal Foch Sails - - - - -	1204
Book of Sermons by President Elbert A. Smith -	1204
Activities in Zion - - - - -	1223
The American Legion Visits Kansas City - - -	1223

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

A God Who Answers Prayer, by Richard Bullard	1205
Some Observations on Education, by John W. Rushton - - - - -	1206
Preach the Word, by Edward Rannie - - - -	1208
Truth Versus Error, by O. L. Weaver - - - -	1209

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Darwin's Confession - - - - -	1209
Against Limitation: None - - - - -	1210

PASTORAL:

Unto What Have I Been Chosen - - - - -	1210
--	------

WHAT WE BELIEVE:

"The Latter-day Glory," by Elbert A. Smith -	1212
--	------

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Madge C. Siegfried—Nellie E. Sampson—Goldie V. Brooks. - - - - -	1216
--	------

LETTERS

Joseph A. Northrup—Harry Passman—Roy Weldon—Fred Howlett—Abbie A. Horton—J. L. Bear—C. F. Clarke—O. L. Thompson—J. E. Vanderwood. - - - - -	1219
---	------

MISCELLANEOUS

- - - - -	1224
-----------	------

appeal to those who were able to attend. The presence of such men as Foch, Beatty, Diaz, Jacques, and others, made the event not only of national, but even of international, importance.

The order during the parade was remarkable, without disturbance, disorder, or quarrels of any kind; at least, in most cases. The crowd's good nature and order was worthy of comment, as was also the good nature and tact of the police. As one man remarked, "So large a crowd could hardly have assembled abroad with so little disturbance, nor could it have been held in Kansas City before prohibition without more of disorder." Even though the disorder affected but a relatively small number of the spectators. Those who have been permitted to see any such a parade will appreciate how very impressive and inspiring it was.

That there were a few cases of disorder is not at all surprising. The surprising factor is that there was so very little of disturbance and that the Legion as a whole endeared itself to Kansas City and all who were permitted to attend the convention or any of the attendant ceremonies. And over it all the international nature of the sacrifice made by the countless thousands and millions who gave their lives for peace was felt throughout in all of the various ceremonies and assemblages.

S. A. B.

Many of our leading church workers are

Good Writers

and month after month you may meet them in

Autumn Leaves

in a literary role that brings out a side of their nature you may not have known. It helps us appreciate their personalities and ideals. Their achievements inspire us.

In the thirty-three successful years that Autumn Leaves has brightened the life of the church it has never had a finer array of talent than will appear in its pages the coming months.

Its stories and articles and poems lend a culture and breadth that impel the church to "come up higher," according to divine pleading.

Not too long nor too short. Not too dry nor too frivolous. Not too often, but—

Twelve appreciative numbers a year for

$1.75

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

MISCELLANEOUS

Appointment of District Choristers

This is official notification of the appointments, with the approval of the First Presidency, of the following as choristers of the respective districts noted:

Elder N. L. Booker, Biloxi, Mississippi, for the Mobile, Alabama, District.

H. H. Burt, Boyne City, Michigan, for the Northern Michigan District.

For these we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of these districts.

ALBERT N. HOXIE, General Director.
ARTHUR H. MILLS, Secretary.

Pastoral Notice

To the Saints of Northern Michigan: Having been appointed missionary supervisor of this district, I would like to help as many as I can. Our missionary force is limited—Elder A. E. Starks of Boyne City and Elder R. D. Davis of the Soo and myself—but Elder J. C. Goodman and Elder James Blackmore have volunteered their services for the winter. I would like to hear from those who are scattered and would like the work opened up where you live. I will try to arrange to give you help.

Also those in branches that want missionary help should confer with me so that we can work in harmony.

There will be something doing in our district next year. Commencing January 1, there will be sixteen men turned loose in a special missionary campaign. This fall I solicited the help of the local priesthood; and ten elders, two priests, one teacher, and one deacon volunteered. I am proud of the hearty response. Every elder in the district, who possibly could, said, "Here am I, send me." I hope they will all enjoy the work and be instruments in the hand of God in accomplishing a great work.

The power of God has been with us in our reunion and two-day meetings and there is a great awakening among the young. An orchestra was organized among our young people with Elder A. E. Starks as their leader, which will be a great help in our work in the future gatherings of our people. Let us all work together and God will surely bless us all.

Address all communications to,
ONAWAY, MICHIGAN, Box 184.

E. N. BURT.

Conference Minutes

FREMONT.—At Shenandoah, Iowa, October 8. Prayer and priesthood meetings in the forenoon and regular conference session in the afternoon. Seven of ministry reported. Branch reports: Tabor, 76; Hamburg, 41; Bartlett, 35; Shenandoah, 122; Thurman, 147; and Glenwood, 66. B. S. Lambkin, district president, made report containing the following recommendations, which were adopted by separate motions as follows: That the district adopt as a budget for the district, $25; Sunday school, $15; Religio, $15; Women's Department, $15; that each of the departments be requested to assist in raising this amount; that all branch presidents be required to report to the district president once per quarter on regular forms; that hereafter this district hold but one regular conference a year, and that more time be spent in two-day meetings, or such other meetings as may be arranged for, from time to time, which in their nature provide for the spiritual and educational needs of the people. The bill of Royal E. Barber, district field worker, in the amount of $9.70, was allowed. The time for the next conference was set for June, 1922, at Tabor, Iowa. An elders' court of C. M. Roberts, J. C. Moore, and R. E. Pratt, was appointed in the matter of F. S. Lambkin, district president, versus Simon Becksted. Preaching by B. S. Lambkin and E. L. Kelley. R. E. Pratt, secretary pro tem; C. W. Forney, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

HOLM.—Mrs. Christina L., wife of Soren S. Holm, was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, January 29, 1859. Came to America when twelve years old. For a number of years the family lived in Salt Lake City, Utah, where they heard the gospel of the Reorganization and embraced it, her husband being now one of the missionary force of the church. She was a woman of a big soul, full of love and devotion to her family, church, and community. Died November 7, from tumor and complications. Survived by husband and the following children: Moroni R., Victor L., Francis W., Robert G., and Eva Margaret. Funeral sermon by Evan A. Davis at Salt Lake City chapel.

SCOTT.—Olive Vernell, daughter of Brother Earl and Ruth Scott, of Mobile, Alabama, was born April 25, 1913. Died November 21, 1921. Funeral at the home; sermon by James Cooper. Interment in Theodore Cemetery. Father, mother, one sister, and many relatives are left to mourn.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

ny man among you have
and concubines he shall
Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 68

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, DECEMBER 2

NUMBER 52

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing age provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized Ju

Issued
post-

EDITORIAL

The Passing of the Year

New Year resolutions should be based on deep conviction and a renewed covenant day by day.

The end of a year offers a convenient time for inventories, not only of our goods and chattels, lands and hereditaments, our liabilities and net worth financially, our fiscal gain and loss; but also our spiritual, intellectual, and physical or health account. We do not mean that we can safely wait the year's end to consider our health, nor for that matter our wealth and life business, but it is a time convenient for examining ourselves to see wherein lies our gain or loss.

Midwinter is a good time for the farmer, coming as it does between the productive season. It is also a suitable time for many business concerns. But though some may find another period better for the fiscal year, as for example, January comes in the midst of the school year, so July 1 is a better fiscal term, quite universally January 1, New Year's Day, is the time for personal account and new resolutions.

Reviewing the past year, to many it has brought the sorrow of the loss of loved ones; to many it has brought the joy of the establishment of new homes; to others the happiness of a new life from the Lord in a little child intrusted to our care. To many more it has brought none of these extremes, but has brought the steady joy of everyday living, and especially to those whose joy is in the Lord.

To many have come the peace and still small voice of conviction of the truth of God in Christ Jesus; so through the waters of baptism they have entered his family, being born again. To others already within the church of God there has come a new and great experience, a new conviction of what is meant by adoption into the family of God. To more there have been the still small voice, the peace and joy of the Spirit in daily work and in the assembly of the Saints; the gifts of the Spirit, and in their lives the fruits of the Spirit.

In the world there has been turmoil, with men's hearts failing them because of the things coming on the earth. There has been perplexity. There has been much of immorality seen, as the aftermath of the strain of war. There has been financial stringency, with many out of work and lacking the necessities of life.

But the end of the year finds the Washington conference of nations adjourning, with assurances of a reduction in naval program, as it affects the large battleships, and a better understanding among the nations. There is a great desire for peace, but for the elimination of armament, for the reduction of debts, which after all is a necessity for national survival in many European countries. But the thought is not entirely selfish. There are very many who have in view social betterment, a better use of assets for the benefit of all, a desire for cooperation for the good of others, as well as of self. It leads us to believe that the line is being more clearly determined between those who are lo their brethren, and those who are lovers of se pleasure.

In the church President M. Smith and T. W. Williams returned from a survey of church conditions and possibilities on the Continent of Europe to England, where they met J. A. Gillen, Charles Fry, James E. Bishop, and Daniel Sorden and wife, before starting early in the new year for Palestine. After a survey in that land, they returned via Egypt, Italy, and Switzerland to England, where Apostle Williams has since continued, associated with Apostle Gillen. President Smith returned to America late in June, and has since given his attention to the affairs of the church in America, both east and west, as well as at his office and in Canada.

In England the missionary forces have been strengthened by Patriarch Richard Baldwin and wife in the early fall.

To other foreign fields, Apostle M. A. McConley and wife sailed for Hawaii in the early fall, and thence with J. A. Davis and wife to Australia. E. B. Hull and wife have sailed to Hawaii. Clyde F. Ellis expects to sail as soon as possible for the Society Islands, where he is in charge of missionary and local work.

The significant facts in America have been the meeting of the joint council to attend to necessary matters in September, the Order of Bishops meeting for two weeks in May, and the young people's services, held out many places throughout the church.

The financial stringency in the world, and possibly other factors, have caused a serious decline in receipts for the operation of the work of the church. The Auditorium Fund probably caused a diverting of funds in good part, so that the total contributions for all purposes have been good, but the total of operating receipts, tithes and offerings, has fallen off to such an extent that the work of the church is seriously handicapped.

The Herald Publishing House moved to Independence, Missouri, in May, and thereby united all our publishing interests in America under one roof and one management. Graceland College dedicated the new fireproof building in September and thereby assured herself of adequate quarters for some time and began, by the constructing of this unit, a consistent plan providing for future developments of the educational work of the church.

So despite difficulties at times, the work of God moves on. Whatever may be our failures or the seeming failures of our brethren and sisters, we are assured the work of God will move on with increasing power to its ultimate and complete triumph.

It is a time for us to take account of ourselves. Has the Lord blessed our efforts the past year in our business and affairs of life? Then let us quickly bring in of our increase to His storehouse, in our tithes and offerings. Have we a surplus? Then let us remember the needs of this work.

Has the past year shown a spiritual growth? Have we drawn nearer to God? Has our compassion and love for others increased? Are we doing more for others and the work of God? A new year lies before us. It is not a matter of a new resolution for a day, but of a deep conviction, a renewed covenant day by day. It is not a matter of what others are doing, but let us examine our own selves.

Intellectually, what does our trial balance show? Has our knowledge of the work and Word of God increased? Have we a better grasp of fundamental principles? Has our knowledge been organized for humanity? Have we not only read and studied, but have we digested, made our own, that which we have studied? Is our motto to let some one else do the thinking, or do we offer an intelligent service of the church of God? Do we intensely desire to understand the law of God, or are we content with a superficial gleaning? Another year is before us. It will soon pass. Our best service is only possible with an understanding heart.

So let us examine not another, but our own selves. What have we to offer to-day? What can we do this year to prepare and fit ourselves to render a better service? Nineteen hundred and twenty-one is past. Nineteen hundred and twenty-two now awaits us.

May the New Year be one of deep realization of our responsibilities and opportunities! May the work of God move greatly to the convincing of the honest in heart! May it be a year of great and deep joy as we review its accomplishments a year hence!

S. A. B.

Angel Visitations

The seeking after a return of angels implies acceptance of their messages and the doctrines involved.

The tendency of the religions of the day is to dispense with angels, except as historical characters, and to argue that many of them were allegorical and had as a foundation the folk tales of a primitive people. A hundred years ago, or more, the guardian angel idea was quite generally accepted by devout religionists. It had a delightfully comforting aspect and it helped children to imagine, in a vague though somewhat visual manner, the protective care of God.

But as the leaders of the Reformation theology passed on and others arose, even unto the third generation, to take their places, there seems to have been more and more a getting away from the practical side of angel visitation, till, as a writer says in a recent number of the Homiletic Review:

"Should we not be somewhat startled if, taking up our newspaper, we came across words to this effect: 'Lost—the angel known to previous generations and to our own childhood'? Yet is not this strictly true? Gone have the angels from our modern life, and, save for decorative art and the frozen context of the Christmas cards, they would have been doomed to an ignominious oblivion. The winged creatures are an unused folk, except to augment the scenery of the stage. They remain over as the precipitate of a former solution.

"The peopling of the air has ceased for us moderns. The spaces have been vacated by the angelic host. So slowly and imperceptibly has been the withdrawal that we have scarcely considered it. Certainly we do not show signs of mourning because of their passing. We have organized no search party, neither do we feel impelled to issue a warrant for their return. But it is worth while considering the nature of our loss."

Continuing the discussing, the same writer says that "we have essayed to dispense with them [angels] in our dispensation. But this carries with it a deep responsibility. It is easier to discard than to discern." And the further declaration: "Never shall we rest until we recover the equivalent of the angel."

Then there comes to our desk from England a magazine called Light—"A journal of spiritual progress and psychical research." Its entire aim is as indicated in the subtitle above, yet it appears that perhaps ninety-five per cent of the aim is to establish the fact that there is some sort of communication between human beings and the other world and five per cent to the meanings of the purported messages. The location of the spirit world, the means by which spirits of departed friends communicate, their appearance—the entire mechanistic side—are given much space, but there is a persistent lack of religious sentiment pervading all of it. As a correspondent pointed out in a recent letter to us, there is an occasional account of purported angel visitation, but the discussion aroused appears to be over the material aspects rather than the spiritual.

A visit to the large Kansas City public library, when we made it a point to look over the religious magazines available, left the impression that about one third of the collection was devoted to the spiritualistic, the mystic, the occult. This may not be typical of the general situation, yet we must admit that there is a great wave of interest in, a rather universal seeking after, the occult and the mysterious. Orthodox religionists are inclined to translate this into terms of reality, such as has the writer from whom we have quoted, but "orthodoxy" is seemingly unpopular with the rank and file and numerous tendencies towards diversion are found in the field of psychic research.

We have chosen to discuss here but one important aspect: the visitation of angels, with no thought of disparagement of the other methods of divine communication.

Angels are primarily messengers from on high. They evidently have a definite work in the plan of salvation and visit humanity openly or in vision, as occasion demands. They do not seem to be limited in their methods of conveying their message to us. They may speak audibly to the ear of man. They may be seen with the natural eye. Again, their messages may seem to be heard with the inner ear only. Then the book of Revelation presents many symbolic appearances. The angel who appeared to Balaam's ass conveyed an important message, though he evidently said nothing. There was no mistaking the meaning of the angels who drove Adam and Eve out of the garden of Eden, for words were unnecessary.

Sometimes they bear a message for a group of people; sometimes they seem to carry a personal matter, but from the beginning of the race there seem to have been angel visits to earth in conformity with God's plans and methods for the salvation of man.

Both the Hebrew and the Greek words from which we derive our word angel mean "messenger, agent." The scores of passages in both the Old and the New Testament imply that meaning.

And it is puerile to try to conceive of a messageless messenger from on high. Certainly God has not decreed that these beings shall flit idly to and fro, from heaven to earth, merely for recreation. There is purpose in all God's dealings. His ways being perfect, we must concede that he does not change. If there were a fundamental need for angels in other ages, and if man has not materially changed in his spiritual advancement, there surely exists to-day the same need for divine communications as existed in the past.

The very foundations of our church structure are based on this need of communication, which includes angel ministrations. To believe thus is not to lose oneself in the mysticism of psychical research, not to tie to a swaying reed of superstition and dark seances, but rather it is a sane consideration of purposes involved, and acceptance of God's promises.

It is not credulity to believe in angel ministration, but it requires a comprehensive faith, based on intelligent knowledge and wholesome attitude towards the Scriptures and their promises. At least the beginnings of such faith was had by Joseph Smith in 1820, when as a lad of fourteen he cried unto God and was answered by heavenly voices and later by the visits of angels. His announcement of the event brought persecution, not only because of the seemingly presumptive claim, but on account of the message he had received. The message, the result and meaning of that message, were the dominant notes. John the Revelator had said an angel was to visit the earth and restore the everlasting gospel. (Revelation 14:6.) It transpired that this had been done, with Joseph Smith as a principal character.

Most of our coreligionists do not believe us when we tell them this. They often think we are either fanatics or deceived—or both—when we tell of our history and our convictions that angels have visited men with divine message in this age. Yet we think we have a reasonable basis for our faith.

Our religion, then, takes for granted the necessity for angel visitation, the fact that they have visited the earth in other days, in these days, and will continue to come till time is no more.

But further (and personally we consider it even of more importance) we would stress the relative value of the message brought by heavenly visitors. When we extend the sincere desires of our hearts to God and expect an answer to our petitions, we are demonstrating the value of prayer; but need we try to limit God in his means of answering? If he chooses to send an angel to bring that answer, shall we be unduly exercised? No. But always we must consider the character of the information afforded and the sort of impressions left.

Where the truth is manifested we may invariably expect the counterfeit will be. It has been so from the beginning and will continue to be till the very elect if possible are deceived. The Devil and his angels have the power to transform themselves into angels of light (2 Corinthians 11:1-14) and thus deceive many. If we seem to be favored with the sort of heavenly favor we have been discussing, we may safely review in the following manner:

What did he say? Does it agree with known truth? Will the message bear the scrutiny of intelligent comparison? If observed and treasured, will the memory of the occasion help to build godly character?

To accept blindly anything presented is to invite danger to ourselves and others.

We sympathize with the searchings of men after the old order which included this feature, though it is not vital merely because it is old, but because it is fundamental in its nature. A religion, to be progressive and meet the demands of the dispensation, must include continued revelation from on high to make it applicable to the new order. The old and the new invariably conflict except they be eternal verities—then they readily coalesce.

Yet if an angel should come to these men who seem to desire it and should proclaim the eternal verities, would there not be embarrassment? Would it not be to the condemnation of those who have so long combed the Scriptures for convenient interpretations, which to say the least have precluded present-day revelation? Would the creeds stand the strain of admitting bona fide angelic ministrations? And upon what basis would the message conveyed be considered?

For almost a century this church has preached to the world in no uncertain terms that we believe in angel visitation. We have pointed out that at the beginning there was such. Our history includes other occasions, when the church has been edified by their presence, and there is a vast accumulation of personal experience throughout the membership, confirming the existence of such messengers. But interwoven with it all and through it all is the divine purpose: the quickening of our intelligence and the increasing of our faith and devotion, even unto the perfection of our characters. E. D. MOORE.

The Law of the Lord Is Perfect

Forgiveness of Sin

In the Lord's Prayer we find the words, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." To some, this may seem a hard thing, for we feel that God is so good and great that he should forgive us anyway, but the prayer was given of the Master in this consequential way. For this there is doubtless a reason.

In Doctrine and Covenants 64:2 we read: "My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened; wherefore, I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin."

To many this would appear to be another surprising statement, "for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin." What if a brother injure me greatly and I forgive him not? Is my sin greater than his? It is so stated, and when we consider the matter we will see the reason why. In a moment of misunderstanding or of passing anger my brother may do something to injure me, but his wrongful act, though a grievous sin, is soon a matter of the past, while if I forgive him not, I keep alive the old wrong. It would seem to follow, likewise, that if he, having done wrong, is unwilling to be reconciled, that he comes also in the class of one who forgives not, keeping alive that which was wrong but which should have been permitted to become a thing of the past. Making mistakes ourselves, we should have compassion for the errors of others; nor does that mean any failure to hate and reject evil and sin wherever found, but in hating sin, it is not necessary that we should hate our brother because he has sinned.

It is probably natural for most of us when we are struck, to give back as good as we get. It is probably natural for most of us to feel when some one is annoying us, like the little boy did whose foot was being tickled by his brother, Jimmy, while he was trying to say his prayers. The boy was trying to do right, but when for the third time Jimmy tickled his foot he said, "Lord, please turn your back and excuse me for a few minutes while I lick Jimmy." But the Lord does not turn his back nor is that because of any harshness or lack of love upon his part. It may be passingly unfortunate that our word "forgive" brings at once to our mind the word "give" so that we feel that, in forgiving some one else, one who has done us an injury, we are giving him something to which he is not entitled. We are inclined to feel that there is a big hole left, something that belongs to us if we give up the idea of revenge, if we truly forgive. Hence it seems that it is something too hard or asking too much to ask of one who is injured that he forgive the one doing the injury. But the command of our heavenly Father that we should forgive one another is not exclusively for the sake of our brother, nor is it even primarily for his sake, but for our own good and peace of mind and happiness.

A temper is a good thing to have. If a man have no temper, he is not likely to have sufficient gumption to oppose the wrongs surrounding him. Nor is there any use in losing your temper, for no one else wants it.

But deeper than that are the reasons in the heart of man, hence we are not blind to what it means to overcome our natural propensities and to forgive, nor can we assure our readers that forgiveness, even complete forgiveness, will bring at once peace of mind, but we can assure them that a persistent effort will at last secure results well worth the years of effort it will take.

When we joined the church we resolved that one of the things that must be done was to control our natural temper. This was made a matter of frequent prayer, and continual effort and watchfulness were necessary. It may seem at such times that special trials are brought to bear to prove us.

We recall the story of a young man who was done a very grievous injury by a very dear friend, such as to make him feel that his friend must be, after all, without any feeling whatever, and to arouse a desire, if it were possible, to hurt him. In the midst of this intense agony of mind, he dreamed one night that his friend was dying and sent to him and asked his forgiveness, which was refused. The dream that followed was a terrible one, but showed clearly that death certainly would end all human power for the causing of pain. The dream was so strong that it caused the young man to awake, and instantly, he relates, he heard a voice asking, "My son, do you ever, through all eternity, want to enter my presence and the celestial glory, not in a hundred years, a thousand years, or a million years, but even through all eternity?"

To this, of course, there could only be one answer. He may be like the little boy then whose brother was tickling his foot while he was trying to say his prayers when he said, "Please, God, excuse me for a few minutes while I lick Jimmy." We may feel that we would like to be excused and do something else for a while, but in the end we want the best that is to be offered in eternity. Hence, there was only one answer.

Then followed the question, "Do you think you ever can, feeling as you do now?" We all know that the answer to that must be clearly in the negative. We did not want to enter the presence of God while harboring such a feeling of ill will.

Do you think it will ever be easier to forgive than it is now? To that, also, only one answer is possible. Every one of us knows that forgiveness does not become easier but harder, the longer it is delayed. The longer we harbor an offense, the more we brood over it, the more we foster it, the larger it becomes. Its roots become settled and become harder to remove. There is only one thing to do, and that is to pull it out at once, roots and branches, and put it from us.

This young man states that he did entirely forgive that person, then and there, and went out of his way time and again to do good to his former friend. Nevertheless, it was years before the aching pain had left him, but never since has there arisen an offense that it was not easy to forgive in memory of that occasion.

After all, the suffering that the three Nephites have known, the knowledge of the sins of the world, the suffering that comes therefrom is not a little thing. Sin brings with it its own recompense and punishment. It cannot be avoided. When some one injures, when we can see clearly, as it is in the mind of God, our feeling will be rather one of sorrow than of anger, and an intense desire to help rather than to injure. We no longer think of punishing sick people. Why should we desire to strike one who is spiritually ill? One who errs with either tongue or action deserves our prayers and commiseration.

It was for this reason that Jesus, seeing with clear eyes, even in the midst of his agony on the cross looked down and said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Having that clear insight, he commanded in the Sermon on the Mount, "Pray for them who despitefully use you." And why pray for them? Not because he desires primarily that we give them something, but because when we are converted, their spiteful conduct will cause us sorrow, and they are in need of our prayers and help.

Of course, possessing the spirit of Jesus, we will desire to do good, to give good to all men even to those who injure us. But the reasons for these commands is not laid in the arbitrary will of an austere Deity but in the loving heart of our Father and our God, pointing out the pathway that is best for our happiness and for the development of our souls, receiving from him that blessing. We then voluntarily desire to do good to others.

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5: 44-48. S. A. BURGESS.

Education as a Social Instrument

Because of existing economic conditions in some quarters, there has been an attack upon education on the grounds of the expense. We are reminded, however, by the following item, of the importance of the public schools:

The teacher is presented as the real antidote for criminality by Police Captain, Max Fisher, in an article in the Sacramento Union. The public schools are a protection, not only against crime, but also against the expense of crime. He stated that it cost the State of California $41,000,000 in 1920 to combat crime. Still, this amount was reduced because of the excellent school system of that State.

Now the London Daily News points out that for the school year 1920-1921, Parliament voted less than one fourth as much for education, science, and art, as for armaments, and they published a number of explanations from people of widely varying political thought concerning the value of public education.

Education is not waste; it is an investment, and one of the few which cannot be lost.

"The fitness of this country (or any other country) to hold her place in the service of the world will be tested by the decision which she is now called upon to make about her expenditure on national education."—Michael Sadlar.

Apostle J. F. Curtis reports to the First Presidency December 14, the baptism of four new members at Council Bluffs, a total of twenty-eight in the last four and a half weeks, with others expected and good crowds continually. He has invitations to several other points but has arranged to go to Woodbine, Iowa, after the first of the year.

Elder George H. Wixom has been delivering a series of lectures in Pueblo which are receiving favorable consideration in the daily papers of that city.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Fruit of Happiness

By J. E. Vanderwood

"Learn to honor the law of life and we find it laden with the fruit of happiness."

Each day brings to us new opportunities, and with each opportunity comes added responsibility and further duties. Come to think of it, this is as it should be. For, who is he, if he be alive and growing, that is contented with the childish toys and play of yesterday? When we come to see aright we discover that life is just one continual unfoldment; it is simply one new discovery after another. There is no place in life for us to retire; there is no time to sit idly by. Life denotes activity and growth, for where there is no activity and no growth there can be no life. The most important thing about life is that it gives us greater satisfaction and truer happiness as we grow into it and become larger. But few of us, I fear, have made the discoveries that are most needful. I wish, therefore, to consider that which shall tend to enlarge and ennoble our thought. For I am convinced, by reason of my observation, that the great majority of mankind have no other idea than that life consists in having and getting. They often say, "If I could only possess this or that, I would be happy," but they discover to their sorrow, in most cases, at least, that in place of happiness, the thing they so much coveted brought to them added responsibility, worry, anxiety, and sorrow.

Of What Does Life Consist?

Jesus, you know, conveyed the right idea when he said: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." That is to say, that it is not in the outer circumstances that we are to look for life and happiness, for they are not to be found there. Life and happiness can only be found in inner purity, in spiritual growth, in the ennobling of the soul, and in the poising of the character.

"Why am I not happy?" a good-meaning person once asked of the writer, and then went on to say: "I say my prayers, I go to church, and I keep the Sabbath; and it seems that the harder I try the more difficult life becomes. I feel like giving up altogether." Now, really, what was the matter with this good-intentioned person? Can you tell?

I said to that person, "My friend, you are not happy because you are not in pursuit of happiness. To the contrary, you are pursuing that which brings to you worry, discouragement, and grief. Neither the saying of prayers, the going to church, nor the keeping of the Sabbath in an outward, conventional manner, can bring happiness to you. To be frank in the matter, you are altogether too much concerned about yourself to have place for happiness. You can't be happy under such conditions, for no one can be happy who is thinking so much about self; really, you are self-centered, and no self-centered person can be happy. You will have to learn that happiness doesn't come to us by that process. Did you never consider the teaching of the Master? Hear him: 'He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he who hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.'"

"That is just it," the good person replied. "I think so much about the good things I will enjoy when I get to heaven that it makes me very unhappy to be in this world of sorrow and wickedness."

How to Be Happy in Heaven

"Do you think you could be happy if you were in heaven, unless you have that within you that makes you harmonize with the heavenly?" I asked. "I see you have entirely the wrong conception of the Master's words. I am, therefore, going to ask you to consider it carefully with me. But permit me first to say that you are loving your own little, insignificant life too much, and that is why you are bereft of happiness. You will lose your life here and hereafter as a result of your undue love for it.

"Now observe that Jesus says: 'He who loveth his life shall lose it.' Have you never learned why? It is for the best of all reasons, for he who is so anxious about his own little self that he is trying all the time to shield and protect what he calls 'my rights,' will lose all that is worth while in life. He can't help but be unhappy, because he fails to see the things that make for happiness.

"Now, on the other hand, 'He that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.' What does this tell us, anyhow? Simply this: If I hate to see my life dwarfed and stunted by reason of the littleness of the things that are seeking to lead me in the way of selfishness, and I, therefore, begin to think of higher and nobler things; if I associate myself with the big things of God's universe, if I begin to reach out in the spirit of service to others until I have completely lost myself in the work I am doing, I will be hating my life in this world and doing my level best to fit it for a better one. When I do this I will not have time to longer concern myself about my personal blessings and rewards, nor yet how I am going to get this little, insignificant self of mine into heaven; but I will be so completely wrapped up in my service to others that I shall forget all about my comforts. I will then be able to say, and say it truthfully, that I hate my life stunted and dwarfed in this world. I am, therefore, going to exert myself to the uttermost to develop it into a better condition, so that it may be fitted for the kingdom of God. I will, therefore, keep away from the ideas of selfishness and I will learn to love humanity and thus acquire the spirit of altruism, and by this process, I will find so much joy and happiness that I will be bringing heaven with all its blessedness right into my life, and I need no longer worry about how I am going to get into heaven. By reason of hating my life in this world I am keeping it unto life eternal.

Meaning of Life Eternal

"But what is life eternal? You know we often get a very incorrect idea of things. We are, therefore, going to let Jesus tell us what it is. We read: 'This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.' Life eternal, we discover then, is that we might know God and Christ. How shall I know them? and when shall I know them? I can know God and Christ only by developing and unfolding in my life sufficiently to become able to comprehend God and Christ. The time when I shall know them is to be determined by my unfoldment and development or enlargement of life. John says: 'Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.' Or, as it is translated by Doctor Weymouth in his New Testament in modern speech: 'Every one who loveth has become a child of God and is beginning to know God.' I may know God and Christ, then only in so far as I become a partaker, or more properly speaking, a possessor, of the spirit of selfless love. Thus it may be readily seen that I may be able to become a possessor of life eternal while I dwell here upon the earth; but I must rise above the littleness of selfhood before I can enjoy life eternal, either here or hereafter.

Selfless Love and Life Eternal

"It is quite evident then, that selfless love and life eternal are inseparably connected. One cannot lay hold on life eternal without having first become a possessor of selfless love; and no one can possibly be a possessor of selfless love without bringing the very portals of heaven, with all its joy and blessedness, right into his life, and thus becoming a partaker of life eternal. He only can have happiness who has partaken of the spirit of selfless love. Let it be remembered that happiness is a fruit that comes of the spirit of never-failing love. The life that is fully dominated by that spirit is made the recipient of happiness.

"Evidently we are all able to understand that fruit is something that cannot be made; it must be grown. Before the fruit can possibly appear the tree or vine must be produced. It, too, has to grow. The reason there is so little happiness in the lives of so many people is because they haven't a single stalk in their lives upon which fruit could mature. I trust we understand that if the fruit of a tree isn't good the husbandman grafts in a better variety. If you are destitute of the fruit of happiness you must graft into your life the spirit of selfless love, you must learn to serve humanity with a never failing love, you must pursue the life of service because you love it above all else; you must take a delight in making life less difficult for others, you must forget all about your selfish interests and see only the largeness and glory of the altruistic life, you must learn to give the very best there is in you, and the fruit of happiness in all its excellence and beauty will ripen in your soul. He who is destitute of happiness is divorced from God, for so long as the divine Comforter is with us peace and happiness must abound in our lives.

Eternal Life Begins Here

"It is not necessary, then, for us to wait until we have passed beyond the grave to be permitted to enter in and possess life eternal. No, indeed, for if we wait until then, the chances are that we may miss it altogether. For the life that is to be is only the legitimate outgrowth and continuation of the life that now is. As soon as I get in tune with the Infinite, life eternal is begun for me, and so long as I remain in tune with the Infinite, just that long will I continue to enjoy life eternal. The place of life eternal is not in the distance, it is here and now. The time is not in the distance but it is at hand. I must say when I will enter in, and you must do the same. The invitation is, "Whosoever will, may come." He who defers or procrastinates defrauds himself. Why should men and women who are made in the image of God be content to live in the littleness of selfhood when they might be enjoying life eternal? It is evidently because they fail to comprehend, they have been unable to form the proper concept of life. Look within you for the solution of the problem.

"That which we get out of life is determined by that which we put into life. It is pretty much like making cake; put in the proper ingredients and honor the law governing the baking of cakes and the cake is bound to come out right. So it is with life; put in the proper and necessary ingredients, learn to honor the law of life, and you shall find that it will be laden with the fruit of happiness."

We do not make our thoughts; they grow in us
Like grain in wood; the growth is of the skies,
Which are of nature; Nature is of God.
The world is full of wondrous likenesses.

—Bailey.

A Fallacy Concerning Divorce

By A. M. Chase

Deuteronomy 21:16, 17 does not refer to families raised in polygamy but does refer to cause of divorce.

(With apologies to Professor Isaacs.)

In the quoted article, "The common law of the Bible," in the HERALD for November 29, 1921, on page 1140, near the bottom of the page, this occurs: "The right of the first-born to inherit a double portion is another institute of the law. . . . But the only reference to it that we find in the purely legal portions of the Bible, strangely enough—or shall we say naturally enough?—comes a passage in which the institute is taken for granted. In speaking of an instance that may have been common under polygamy, an attempted preference in favor of the children of a favorite wife, the lawgiver says"; then follows the quotation from Deuteronomy 21:16, 17.

This is one of the strong passages usually relied on by the advocates of polygamy to-day, to prove that God sanctioned and provided for that relationship among his people.

My object in writing this is to call attention to the fact that this regulation is just as necessary to-day under monogamy with its divorce laws and privileges as it could have been under polygamy, and also to show that it was this condition of married life (where a man has a divorced wife and one with whom he is living and from whom he is not divorced) that this provision of the "common law of the Bible" was written. And, consequently, while it may have been a protection to the children born in polygamy, it was written to protect the unfortunate child born to a woman who was hated and put away. Let us hear the law:

"When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favor in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it into her hand, and send her out of his house. And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance. When a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business: but he shall be free at home one year, and shall cheer up his wife which he hath taken."—Deuteronomy 24:1-5.

Evidently, in every age, the law of the Master has been as given in latter-day revelation, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:7.) It is stated in Genesis 2:24 as follows: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." Paul puts it in a command in his Ephesian letter: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." In recognition of this law, and of the fact that there could be no true marriage relationship without it, Moses gave the law as quoted above, which not only made it obligatory on a man so to release a woman whom he hated, but also forbade him remarrying her, even though her next husband had died and she was freed from his rule.

In the light of this law, let us now read the law as cited by Professor Isaac:

"If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the firstborn son be hers that was hated: then

HYMNS AND POEMS

Friendship's Test

By Cora M. Reynolds

"He is my friend," you carelessly said.
But what is a real, true friend?
Cases are rare, although some are led
In deep friendship to the end.

The strong handclasp that uplifts the weak—
With an understanding smile—
Sends forth the weary, new life to seek;
Ah! Such friendship is worth while!

Those whom you have said you loved the best,
For them do you work and pray?
In your presence, do they sense sweet rest?
Do you think of them each day?

Do not call yourself a friend until Humbly, with truth, you can say,
"The test of friendship I can and will Meet bravely now and each day."

Love and Live

By Orval L. Thompson

(Read at the funeral of Charles Woodward at Jonesport, Maine, December 13, 1921.)

Look not upon death's cold and silent form,
As though 'twere all of death to die or life to live.
But hope and live and love in sun and storm,
And make thy life a fragrant flower to give.

For while the gates of heaven stand ajar
To welcome you, or bid you stay away,
It all depends upon the beauty of thy life,
If thou shalt enter realms of endless day.

Love clings to love in death, alike in life,
For God is love. Then in him let us live.

Then like a flower on a verdant hill
* Thy life shall bloom, eternal love to give.

it shall be, when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved firstborn before the son of the hated, which is indeed the firstborn; but he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the firstborn is his."

While the provisions of this law might reach to a family reared in polygamy, still it could not do so if the law of God given to regulate marriages, which were not based on the law of love, were enforced. But it could and would reach fully to such cases as would be found where the hated wife had been given that which was hers by right—the bill of divorce: and the child or children born to her by this former husband were safeguarded in their rights of inheritance. But by this protection of the law, Moses did not write a sanction of polygamy.

There Is a Race to Be Run

By George A. Kelley

There's a race to run
A work to be done,
The Lord has appointed the way.
Will you patiently run?
Will you faithfully work
For the Master who calls you to-day?

There's a race to run,
A goal to be won,
A glorious victory to gain.
Will you help to fight,
Till the dawn of the light,
That the race be run not in vain?

There's a race to be run;
Will you be the one
To murmur, refuse, or complain?
Or will you lay to
With a will to do
All you can ere he cometh again?

Will you, Saints, to-day,
Each weight put away,
Hear the voice that is calling you still;
'Tis the Lord's gentle voice,
For you to make choice,
Will you answer more firmly, "I will."

My Monument

By Charlotte Dryden

"Die when I may, I want it said of me by those who knew me best, that I always plucked a thistle, and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow."

When I have done the earthly task,
The Master Builder gave to me,
And sail beyond the misty shade
That rises o'er life's stormy sea,
May those who wait upon the shore,
As with wet eyes they watch my bark,
Thank God their friend moves toward the light
From out earth's turmoil, fierce and dark.

And may they bask in sunny thoughts
Of gladsome days and cheery task,
Of walks 'neath sturdy elms and oaks
Where ghostly shadows trip and bask.
And as these scenes of bygone hours
Like passing pictures, come and go,
May deeds of kindness to mankind
Leave every saddened heart aglow.

So in the days that come to me
Ere I shall reach the river's brink,
Let hours be crowded with the tasks
From which weak, selfish spirits shrink.
I ask no lofty spire or mound
To mark the lowly resting place,
But such a love and radiance kind
As glows upon a dear friend's face.

WHAT WE BELIEVE

"The Latter-Day Glory"

By Elbert A. Smith

(Continued from last week.)

A Remarkable Testimony

But as of old, persecutions were lightened by blessings. It was during the same month that a most remarkable vision was given. As a result of that vision a testimony was published to the world such as has emanated from no other body of religious believers in this age. We quote:

"We, Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, being in the Spirit on the sixteenth of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, by the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened, and our understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were from the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, even from the beginning, of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision. . . . And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

In Missouri

The history of the church in Missouri is to a large extent contemporaneous with the history of the church in Ohio.

Early in 1831 the missionaries to the Indians continued their journey from Kirtland. In his autobiography one of them says:

"After much fatigue and some suffering we all arrived in Independence, in the county of Jackson, on the extreme western frontiers of Missouri, and of the United States.

"This was about fifteen hundred miles from where we started and we had performed most of the journey on foot, through a wilderness country in the worst season of the year, occupying about four months, during which we had preached the gospel to tens of thousands of Gentiles and two nations of Indians; baptizing, confirming, and organizing many hundreds of people into churches of Latter Day Saints."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 178.

Following a conference in Kirtland, June, 1831, it was decided to hold the next conference in Independence. Many elders started on overland missions, to meet at that place.

June 19, 1831, Joseph Smith and others left Kirtland for Missouri, reaching Independence about the middle of July.

In July a revelation was given naming Missouri as a place of gathering, and the spot for a temple at Independence was designated. August 2, Joseph Smith assisted in laying the first logs for a house in Kaw Township. August 4 the first conference was held.

A Mob Gathers

The community grew rapidly. A publishing house, a store, and other institutions were established. But within two years persecution came upon them again. A mob assembled July 20, 1833, and demanded that the Saints should depart. They asked for three months, but were told laconically that they could have fifteen minutes.

The four or five hundred members of the mob then demolished the publishing house, and tarred and feathered Bishop Partridge and a man named Allen.

The mob came against them again on the 23d, at which time Partridge, Phelps, Whitmer and other church leaders generously offered their lives a ransom for the membership. But an agreement was reached by which the Saints were to leave Jackson County.

Amid great hardship and suffering they removed as rapidly as possible to Clay County. The armistice was not respected and the mob continued to expedite their departure by destroying their homes and property and maltreating their persons.

Seeking an Asylum

The wrath of the mobbers pursued them, and in 1836 an exodus took place to the newly organized county of Caldwell, which had been especially set aside for their uses. Settlements were formed at Far West and other points. Joseph Smith and others of the brethren came to Far West from Kirtland in 1838.

A pleasant testimonial to the character of the Saints at Far West is found in the History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties, published by the Saint Louis Historical Society:

"The Mormons very early gave attention to educational matters. There were many teachers among them and school-houses were among their first buildings."

The Saints were pioneer temperance workers in Missouri as in Ohio. The minutes of a conference at Far West, November 7, 1837, contain the following item:

"The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco."—Church History, vol. 2, p. 120.

The "Extermination Order"

In the disastrous times which came upon them, one of their worst enemies having been elected governor, they were denied all mercy or redress. October 23, 1838, the famous "extermination" edict of Governor Boggs was issued, in which he said: "The Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State."

We prefer to draw a veil over the scenes that were enacted. The Saints were at the mercy of the mob and the militia. Their leaders were imprisoned. Bloody butcheries occurred, notably at Haun's Mill, where adults and little children alike were massacred with guns and corn knives and their mutilated bodies buried in an old well in one common, awful sepulcher.

Joseph and Hyrum Smith were condemned to be shot at eight o'clock on the morning of November 1, 1838, and were only saved by the courageous action of General Doniphan who refused to execute the order, calling it "cold-blooded murder."

Eventually the Saints, those who escaped death, were driven from the State. Their property taken from them, many of them fled for their lives across the Mississippi River in the dead of winter, suffering from cold, sickness, and famine. At that time, an unprejudiced newspaper, the Argus, of Quincy, Illinois, under date of March 16, 1839, had this to say:

"We give in to-day's paper the details of the recent bloody tragedy acted in Missouri—the details of a scene of terror and blood unparalleled in the annals of modern and, under the circumstances of the case, in ancient history—a tragedy of so deep and fearful and absorbing interest that the very lifeblood of the heart is chilled at the simple contemplation. . . . It will be observed that an organized mob aided by many of the civil and military officers of Missouri, with Governor Boggs at their head, have been the prominent actors in this business, incited, too, it appears, against the Mormons by political hatred, and by the additional motives of plunder and revenge. They have but too well put in execution their threats of extermination and expulsion, and fully wreaked their vengeance on a body of industrious and enterprising men, who had never wronged nor wished to wrong them, but on the contrary had ever comported themselves as good and honest citizens, living under the same laws and having the same right with themselves to the sacred immunities of life, liberty, and property."

Causes of Persecution

One cause of the persecution brought against the Saints was their opposition to slavery. They were mostly eastern men and ardent abolitionists; they were surrounded by slave sentiment—a dangerous combination.

Also their customs, speech, and dress were different from the western men among whom they had moved. They encountered the prejudice that awaits the "outlander."

Most of all, their religious convictions were resented. Religious bigotry bore its usual bloody fruit of martyrdom.

Resolutions adopted by certain citizens of Clay County, June 29, 1836, support the above statements, as follows:

"These are some of the reasons why these people have become objects of the deepest hatred and detestation to many of our citizens. They are Eastern men, whose manners, habits, customs, and even dialect are essentially different from our own; they are nonslaveholders, and opposed to slavery, which, in this particular period when abolition has reared its deformed and haggard visage in our land is well calculated to excite deep and abiding prejudices in any community where slavery is tolerated and practiced."—Church History, vol. 2, p. 58.

While the document drawn up and signed by the Jackson County mob, July 18, 1833, said:

"It is more than two years since the first of these fanatics or knaves (for one or the other they undoubtedly are) made their first appearance amongst us, and pretending as they did and now do to hold personal communication and converse face to face with the most high God; to receive communications and revelations direct from heaven; to heal the sick by laying on hands; and, in short, to perform all the wonder-working miracles wrought by the inspired apostles and prophets of old. . . .

"They openly blaspheme the most high God and cast contempt on his holy religion by pretending to receive revelations direct from heaven, by pretending to speak unknown tongues by direct inspiration, and by divers pretenses derogatory of God and religion, and to the utter subversion of human reason."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 313, 314.

Was it a crime to believe God to be an unchangeable, loving Father?

"If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."—John 14: 23.

Yet for this belief they were driven out.

A Characteristic Epistle

During the troublesome times Joseph Smith addressed an epistle to the church, December 16, 1838. The following extracts indicate the ideals of the Saints:

"Brethren, from henceforth let truth and righteousness prevail and abound in you; and in all things be temperate; abstain from drunkenness, and from swearing, and from all profane language, and from everything which is unrighteous or unholy; also from enmity, and hatred, and covetousness, and from every unholy desire.

"Be honest, one with another, for it seemeth that some have come short of these things, and some have been uncharitable, and have manifested greediness because of their debts towards those who have been persecuted and dragged about with chains without cause, and imprisoned.

"Such characters God hates—and they shall have their turn of sorrow in the rolling of the great wheel, for it rolleth and none can hinder. Zion shall yet live, though she seemeth to be dead.

"Remember that whatsoever measure you mete out to others, it shall be measured to you again. We say unto you, brethren, be not afraid of your adversaries; contend earnestly against mobs, and the unlawful works of dissenters and of darkness.

"And the very God of peace shall be with you, and make a way for your escape from the adversary of your souls. We commend you to God and the work of his grace, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. Amen.

"JOSEPH SMITH, JR."

—Millennial Star, vol. 16, pp. 628, 629.

In Illinois

For a time the wandering exiles from Zion found refuge in Quincy. May 1, 1839, a church committee purchased two tracts of land at Commerce, Illinois, for the sum of fourteen thousand dollars. The name of this village was later changed to Nauvoo.

Into an old log block house located at this place Joseph Smith moved his family, and the Saints began to move upon farms, and build shops, stores, mills, and schoolhouses.

June 27, 1839, the first conference was held. By June 1, 1840, two hundred and fifty houses had been erected. June 6 of that year the first company of emigrants from the British Isles Mission started from Liverpool for Nauvoo—the first fruits of a very important foreign mission.

The Saints were pioneer temperance workers in Nauvoo. When provision was made for the "Nauvoo House," a lodging house where visiting travelers (of whom there were many) might be entertained, the building being promoted by the church under a joint stock company, one provision in the articles of incorporation was, that it should be a "perpetual rule" in said house that spirituous liquors of every description should be prohibited.

By act of the State legislature, Nauvoo received a very liberal charter, signed by the governor, December 16, 1840. Abraham Lincoln was a member of the legislature that granted the charter, and it was signed by Stephen A. Douglas, Secretary of State. Among other things the charter permitted the organization of the University of Nauvoo, and the establishment of a body of troops under State control, to be known as the Nauvoo Legion.

Such powers were common at that time in Illinois, as the State was very near the frontier. Many such independent military companies existed.

The Nauvoo Temple

April 6, 1841, the corner stone of the temple was laid. This remarkable structure was built of white limestone quarried near the city; the church artisans giving every tenth day of their labor to the temple building. The temple was erected, but never completed.

The beautiful city of Nauvoo grew rapidly. But the troubles of the Saints were not yet at an end. Their old enemies still harried them, making several attempts to kidnap leading church men and carry them back to Missouri for trial on false charges; also striving by intrigue with Illinois officials to secure them by requisition. Their religious teachings were still extremely unpopular.

With the idea of self-protection they took an active part in politics; also as we have seen they organized the Nauvoo Legion. These steps were taken in all sincerity, but probably did them more harm than good.

Added to their persecutions from outside sources, there were troubles from certain apostates who had been expelled from the church for immoral conduct. These latter began the publication of the Nauvoo Expositor, June 7, 1844. This paper was filled with exceedingly vile and slanderous stories.

June 10, the city council, partly composed of nonmembers, met and voted the paper a nuisance and ordered the mayor to suppress it. On order of the mayor, who at the time was Joseph Smith, the city marshal destroyed the type and press.

This may have been an unwise act. But on June 14, Joseph Smith reported to Governor Ford, of Illinois, offering to appear before any legitimate court for examination as to the legality of the proceeding.

The Tragedy at Carthage

The Saints were not afraid of the law, but they had good reason to be afraid of mobs. On the pledged word of Governor Ford that they would be protected, Joseph Smith, his brother Hyrum, and others gave themselves up, and were taken to Carthage.

Before he bade his friends good-by, Joseph said:

"I am going as a lamb to the slaughter; I have a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward all men—I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, he was murdered in cold blood."

The prediction was too literally fulfilled. The men were lodged in the jail at Carthage, like Paul and Silas of old. They were left under an insufficient and hostile guard. And on the afternoon of June 27 a mob of men with faces painted black and yellow surrounded the jail and shot and killed Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

Joseph Smith had approached heaven in his boyhood days with a most vital question. Receiving his answer he had conveyed the heavenly message to men. The fate of the prophet overtook him.

IV. The "Dark and Cloudy Day"

Following the death of Joseph Smith there ensued a period aptly termed in church parlance, "The dark and cloudy day."

The persecutions of the Saints, their sufferings and their sorrows, were as nothing to the shame that came upon them because of false leadership and the inroads of corrupt doctrines.

Numerous would-be leaders of the church arose. Most prominent among them was Brigham Young, who at the time of the death of Joseph Smith was president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles. Finding himself in a position of advantage and power he began almost at once to manipulate everything to his own advantage.

False Doctrines Come In

As soon as he was sure of sufficient following he assumed in reality the powers of a dictator. In this he was supported by a part of the Quorum of Twelve. At "Winter Quarters," near Omaha, December 5, 1847, at a council of the Twelve he arrogated to himself the title of first president of the church.

In taking that title it was necessary for him to confirm the resolution by his own vote, as without it a majority vote could not be obtained—there being only six others of the quorum present.

Without divine call and without ordination he proceeded to occupy his self-appointed position. With those who would follow him he moved westward to Utah and established himself by the Great Salt Lake, where for many years he was supreme potentate in things both ecclesiastic and civic.

Once thoroughly established he began the promulgation of doctrines corrupt in nature and utterly opposed to the previous teaching of the church, perhaps most notorious of these being polygamy, blood atonement, and Adam-God worship.

We purposely draw a veil over this period of apostasy and transgression, as we wish to make this series of tracts almost wholly affirmative. Suffice it to say that such doctrines and practices were utterly opposed to the teachings of the church under the administration of Joseph Smith, from its inception until his death, in 1844. (The reader may obtain from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, books and tracts dealing with this phase of church history and giving evidence in support of this assertion.)

The shame and dishonor brought upon the cause by the promulgation and practice of these doctrines can hardly be overestimated. It has been world-wide; and untold thousands of innocent and sincere believers in the message as delivered in the beginning have thereby been brought under undeserved suspicion and reproach.

Well was this period (approximately from 1844 to 1852) called the "Dark and cloudy day." It seemed at that time that the "latter-day glory" had become the "latter-day ignominy."

V. Period of Reorganization and Return

But a brighter day dawned. Iniquity had come in like a flood; yet there were many honest in heart who were not moved. God began to feel after them; as indeed they were feeling after the truth, some of them going from faction to faction in their search.

There were thousands in various parts of the world who gave no allegiance to false doctrines. There were some entire branches that maintained their organization and pursued the even tenor of their way in truth and righteousness.

The Prophecy of 1851

Presently there began a work of reorganization. Evidences of this movement were seen as early as 1851. November 18 of that year Elder Jason W. Briggs received a spiritual manifestation and divine direction, from which we quote:

"While pondering in my heart the situation of the church, on the 18th day of November, 1851, on the prairie, about three miles northwest of Beloit, Wisconsin, the Spirit of the Lord came upon me, and the visions of truth opened to my mind, and the Spirit of the Lord said unto me, 'Verily, verily, saith the Lord, even Jesus Christ, unto his servant, Jason W. Briggs, concerning the church:

"Behold, I have not cast off my people; neither have I changed in regard to Zion. Yea, verily, my people shall be redeemed, and my law shall be kept which I revealed unto my servant, Joseph Smith, jr., for I am God and not man, and who is he that shall turn me from my purpose, or destroy whom I would preserve? Wolves have entered into the flock, and who shall deliver them? Where is he that giveth his life for the flock? Behold, I will judge those who call themselves shepherds, and have preyed upon the flock of my pastures. . . .

"Therefore, let the elders whom I have ordained by the hand of my servant Joseph, or by the hand of those ordained by him, resist not this authority, nor faint in the discharge of duty, which is to preach my gospel as revealed in the record of the Jews, and the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; and cry repentance and remission of sins through obedience to the gospel, and I will sustain them, and give them my Spirit; and in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather, and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith; after many days shall all these things be accomplished, saith the Spirit.'"—Church History, vol. 3, pp. 200, 201.

This communication rests upon its own merits. As the years went by its predictions were literally fulfilled. The message was carried from branch to branch and from individual to individual.

Important Instruction

At a conference held at Beloit, Wisconsin, June, 1852, important resolutions were adopted, repudiating the claims of all self-appointed leaders and supporting the law of God as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

Another conference was held at Yellowstone, Wisconsin, October 6, 1852. And at a meeting January 9, 1853, the following instruction was received from the Lord:

"Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God: it is not of me; I abhor it. I abhor it, as also the doctrines of the Nicolaitans, and the men or set of men who practice it. . . . Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine."—Church History, vol. 3, p. 215.

Pentecostal Blessing

A conference was held at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, April 6, 1853. The gifts of the gospel were enjoyed to a wonderful degree. The occasion was pentecostal with prophecies, tongues, visions, and many wonderful and soul-cheering blessings.

The latter-day glory again shone forth. The Saints moved forward with the work of reorganization, as directed.

It may be proper at this juncture to state that at the death of Joseph Smith, his wife, Emma, chose to remain at Nauvoo, refusing to follow designing leaders and rejecting all false doctrines. Here she reared her sons in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

The oldest of these sons bore his father's name, Joseph Smith. To him the Reorganization began to look, as directed by revelation; also because he had been blessed by his father and indicated as his successor. (See Church History, vol. 3, p. 506, and True Succession of Church Presidency, pp. 39-49.)

The Conference of 1860

The work of reorganization moved on. Regular conferences were held. And at last dawned the memorable 6th day of April, 1860. The Saints had assembled in conference at Amboy, Illinois.

To that conference came Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith the Martyr, accompanied by his mother. At that time he was in his twenty-eighth year. At the afternoon session he made a speech in which he said that he had come in obedience to a power higher than his own.

In harmony with the revelations by which he had been designated, a resolution was adopted: "That Brother Joseph Smith be chosen prophet, seer of the church and revelator of Jesus Christ, and the successor of his father."

He was ordained president of the high priesthood (which carried with it the office of President of the church) under the hands of Z. H. Gurley, sr., of the Twelve, William Marks, who had been president of the Nauvoo Stake, and Samuel Powers and W. W. Blair, of the Twelve.

He was joined in his work by his brothers, Alexander and David. Thus after a lapse of nearly ten years the revelation to Jason W. Briggs had been fulfilled in one leading particular: "In mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith and will bring one forth, . . . and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church."

A Prophetic General Epistle

The man thus chosen moved forward with the true prophetic spirit. Let all read carefully this remarkable extract from his first general epistle, and determine for themselves as to its prophetic qualities:

"I would not that men should hastily run without tidings, nor do I ask that any should place the stake of their salvation upon an earthly arm. 'Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, and maketh flesh his arm.'

"I ask and desire that all may place their stake of salvation upon the author and finisher of our faith—upon the promises and principles of the gospel, pure as preached from the Savior's lips, for in him was no guile, and in his teachings there was no deceit.

"In the name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, I now call upon all the scattered Saints, upon all the broad earth, to arise and shake off the sleep that hath bound them these many years, take on the armor of the just, calling on the name of the Lord for help, and unite once more for the emancipation of the honest in heart from the power of false doctrines and the shackles of sin.

"In the name of bleeding Zion, I call upon all those who have been wandering in by and forbidden paths, and have been led astray by wicked and designing men, to turn from their scenes of wickedness and sins of convenience, to turn from their servitude to Satan, in all his seductive devices; from vice in every phase, and from the labor of sin, the wages whereof are ever death, unto their true and delightful allegiance to the principles of the gospel of peace, to the paths of wisdom, to the homage of that God that brought the children of Israel out of bondage; to turn and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon; to lay hold anew upon the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life; to remember that those who live to the Lord keep his commandments, and that the promises are unto the faithful, and the reward unto those that endure unto the end.

And in the name of the Lord of hosts, I call upon all the inhabitants of the earth to repent, believe, and be baptized, for the time cometh when the judgments of God are to be poured out upon all nations, and the besom of God's wrath shall smoke through the land; when men shall know that there is a God in Israel, and he is mighty to punish or to save; that the prayers of those under the altar have been heard, and a swift retribution is to come, when the despoiler will be despoiled; when those who denied justice shall be judged, and the measure meted unto others shall be meted unto them; when the prisoner shall go free, the oppressed be redeemed, and all Israel shall cry, "Glory to God in the highest be given, for he that is long-suffering and slow to anger, has arisen, and shall bring again Zion." Amen and amen.

JOSEPH SMITH,

"President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, July 19, 1861."—Church History, vol. 3, pp. 294, 295.

A Glorious Revival

What a splendid message after the councils of darkness that had obscured wisdom and debased morals! Thousands rallied gladly to the call. A time of glorious revival ensued.

In due time other portions of the promise were fulfilled. Jason W. Briggs had been told that the quorums should assemble. This has long ago been literally fulfilled. Every quorum has been filled and set in order.

He was told that Zion should be reinhabited. At that time few if any Saints lived in Missouri, nor would their return even singly have been tolerated. To-day under the wise leadership of the Reorganized Church there are thousands of Saints living in Missouri.

The Return

Best of all they are living in peace. Their principles are understood. Their morality is unquestioned. This is fully in harmony with a prophecy given during the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr:

"Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4. (Italics ours.)

In 1838 President Joseph Smith, then a child clinging to his mother's skirts, crossed the ice of the Mississippi River, fleeing from the mob. In 1906 he returned to Missouri, and lived in Independence, an honored citizen. At his death, December 10, 1914, there appeared in the editorial columns of one of the leading daily papers of Jackson County, the following well earned tribute:

"But in the death of the late venerable head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints the country loses an interesting and useful citizen. Joseph Smith was considerably more than a powerful churchman into whose keeping had been committed the destinies of one of the great denominations of the world.

"Those who ignorantly confounded the Reorganized Church with Mormonism, in the objectional acceptance of that term, will not appreciate the theological distinctions between the two nor understand that nothing was more hateful to Joseph Smith than the doctrines of Brigham Young, with their polygamous teachings and all the other features which make Utah Mormonism obnoxious in the eyes of the average American. . . .

"He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and good citizen. As such he lived, as such he died, as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith. . . .

"Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his own creed, tolerant of those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character."—Kansas City Journal, December 12, 1914.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is identical with the church from its inception in 1830 until the death of Joseph Smith in 1844. It is the criterion by which the "angel message," as it is termed, must be judged. It is the true exponent of that which the world from the beginning chose to term "Mormonism."

In the Civil Courts

This claim has twice been sustained in the civil courts, after thorough investigation before unprejudiced tribunals. That fact means more than merely that the Reorganized Church is in true succession, which question of course is not determined by number of adherents but by soundness in the faith. It means that what the Reorganized Church stands for to-day in morals, doctrines, and practices, the church under Joseph Smith stood for from 1830 until 1844.

The following is an extract from a decision rendered by Judge L. S. Sherman, in the Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio. (See Journal entry, February term, 1880):

"That the said Plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is a Religious Society, founded and organized upon the same doctrines and tenets, and having the same church organization, as the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, by Joseph Smith, and was organized pursuant to the constitution, laws and usages of said original Church, and has branches located in Illinois, Ohio and other States.

"That the church in Utah, the Defendant of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church."

March 16, 1894, Judge John F. Philips, in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western District of Missouri, Western Division, rendered a decision in the famous "Temple Lot Case," from which we quote:

"The Book of Mormon itself inveighed against the sin of polygamy. . . . Conformably to the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants expressly declared 'that we believe that one man should have but one wife, and one woman but one husband.' And this declaration of the church on this subject reappeared in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, editions of 1846 and 1856. Its first appearance as a dogma of the church [the dogma of polygamy] was in the Utah Church in 1852.

"Claim is made by the Utah Church that this doctrine is predicated on a revelation made to Joseph Smith in July, 1843. No such revelation was ever made public during the life of Joseph Smith, and under the law of the church it could not become an article of faith and belief until submitted to and adopted by the church. This was never done. . . .

"The Utah Church further departed from the principles and doctrines of the Original Church by changing in their teaching the first statement in the Article of Faith which was, 'We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost,' and in lieu thereof taught the doctrine of 'Adam-god worship.' . . .

"In 1852 the scattered fragments of the church, the remnants of those who held to the fortunes of the present Joseph Smith, son of the so-called 'Martyr,' gathered together sufficiently for a nucleus of organization. They took the name of 'The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' and avowed their allegiance to the teachings of the ancient church; and their epitome of faith adopted, while containing differences in phraseology, in its essentials is but a reproduction of that of the church as it existed from 1830 to 1844."—Decision of Judge John F. Philips in Temple Lot Case.

Later History

President Joseph Smith continued in the presidency of the Reorganized Church from April 6, 1860, until his death, December 10, 1914. Under his wise administration of over a half century the church was thoroughly reorganized and set in order in all the world.

At his death he was succeeded by his son, Frederick M. Smith, who had been designated by revelation for that position, and who was ordained to the office of president of the high priesthood, and as prophet, seer, and revelator, May 5, 1915, in harmony with the action of the preceding General Conference.

The headquarters of the church were removed from Plano, Illinois, to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1881, and is now at Independence, Missouri.

The work is now in a sound position. The annual gains are gratifying. Prejudice and misunderstanding have been removed to a great degree. The church is in a position to prosecute its mission work as never before. No man can justly object to that work, because everywhere those who accept the message and live by it become better citizens.

Wonderful events are ahead of the church, as indicated by the signs of the times. We may expect the "latter-day glory" to shine forth with increased splendor as God makes good his promise to pour out his Spirit, in the last days, upon all flesh.

Our Ideals

Identical in faith and organization with the New Testament Church, teaching the same doctrine, guided by the same Spirit, the church goes forward with her work. Our religious ideals include a people gathered and educated in righteousness, equal in things both temporal and spiritual, like the people of Enoch, without rich or poor, every man rendering justly according to his abilities and receiving according to his needs.

Looking forward to the personal second advent of our Lord and Savior, as predicted in the Scriptures, we shall ever

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Happy New Year!

In many a home this cheery greeting is ringing out, accompanied by tender glances from eyes that have looked on sorrow and childish laughter from throats that have not yet contracted with grief and anguish. And the gamut is run, from the three-year-old who tumbles into your bed trying to "beat you" in getting his good wish across: or the dreaming maid with pensive eyes trying to write down her new resolutions; or the smart youth at the telephone asking his friends, "Hello! Is this one-nine-two-two?" and grinning with knowing winks as the polite rejoinder, "You have the wrong number," comes back through the receiver; to the anxious father busy with pencil and pad trying to line up his budget for the coming year; or speculating mother scanning the bargain sheets for the "January sales"; or the backward-glancing grandparents by the fire, who dream, as they doze, of bygone days filled with joys and sorrows, and smiles and tears!

To one and all, there is something unusually impressive about this one point in all the year when the old leaf is turned, and a clean, fresh one is given for our use! What is to be written thereon for 1922? we ask, and, What will be the sum we place so proudly, or so tearfully, at its close? We wonder!

So far as our organized activities are concerned, let us make an effort to make this our very best year. There is nothing gained by putting off the plans we have cherished, or leaving to another time the execution of the dreams we have visioned. Life is ever moving—confronting us with hopes of the "to-be," but lulling us to sleep with easy procrastinations, while all the time it is slipping past us with hurrying feet, and some day we wake up to find we are no longer able to do as we wish, powers of mind and body are waning, visions do not beckon so alluringly, and opportunity has closed her door! We are dismayed to find the reins are slipping from our half-hearted clasp into the firm hands of those who press after us with shining eyes and eager hearts; and we seem no longer needed in the common task, the common achievement! Come:

"Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor—and to wait" only after we have satisfied ourselves that we have done what we could! Can we not be "faithful in a few things"? Shall we not make our own little corners beautiful—altars of inspiration to those who come near? Shall we not reach out from our sanctuary of spirit with love which may transfigure life for others? Shall we not earnestly study and labor together as sisters for the betterment of conditions about us and our children, that nothing may hinder development towards the divine?

So much to do, such a long and oftentimes weary trail it is to the ideal towards which we are striving! Is it true that the distance between that ideal and our present point of advancement measures our success or our failure? Is it true pray and endeavor to prepare ourselves and warn all others against that day, of which it is written:

"The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap."—Malachi 3: 1, 2.

"Be ye therefore ready also; for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not."—Luke 12: 40.

(Concluded.)

that it is impossible for us to conceive of beauty and perfection we cannot attain? How, then, can we be content to loiter or cease trying to reach that ideal?

Patience is needed—and much love. We will stumble, and mistakes will be marked up on our score, but our disgrace will lie in staying down or giving way to discouragement, which latter is one of the Adversary's chief weapons. What can be done to hinder our work will be done if that work is of a nature to "bring about much righteousness," for at no time is the enemy of souls asleep at his post! We organize and start out with good intentions, and then he gets busy with tattlings, jealousies, and contentions, and blindly we stumble, and yield the struggle, repeating (in a manner which would be amusing were it not so pitiful) the scenes of childhood when we would "just take our doll rags and go home, so there!" Fie! For shame! Shall we thus yield to discouragement? No, a thousand times no; for there is too much at stake! Zion, that dream of beauty and perfection of human character, must be "redeemed," must be demonstrated before the world, for a light to benighted humanity groping about in the spiritual darkness of selfishness and sin!

Shall we "assist in this work," which can only be done by those who are "humble and full of love"? It can be done, else God would not have commissioned his church to do it. Its principles can be demonstrated in our home and community and branch life, and our ideals can be reached, our gospel expressed in terms of service to those who need us, including our church in that category. Our church does need us—it needs the work we are trying to do in bringing home life and parent life up to the standards set up in the gospel law; and upon whom does more depend than the mother in the home?

May this fresh new year, with its untried paths, prove to be one which will more surely bind the sisterhood of the church together, and help them to find, in their love for each other and for God, a renewed determination to serve him as never before, offering for his blessing, in humility and consecration, their united efforts to "do good in their day and generation."

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Home Department Work

No doubt some will say, "Oh! I am not interested in that article, for I have more than I can do at home now," and others may say, "Why do we need home department work when we have Sunday school, Religio, Women's Department meetings, and many other services? Home department work may be very necessary for isolated members, but I do not need it."

We fear the above speakers have not been keeping abreast of the times, for the home department work has been making some rapid strides, and now opens a broad vista, a large field wherein every Latter Day Saint may enter and glean a rich mental harvest which will not only enrich the gleaner, but will enrich all with whom he comes in contact. Every soul gaining a larger vision of any subject in life unconsciously assists his companions to see the reflection of that vision, whether he wills it or not. Should he be willing and able to reproduce for the benefit of others a glimpse of the enlarged vision he has obtained, he will find many avenues of service open, and will realize the desired result, that of leading others to a larger and more useful life.

Is not this missionary work? Does not the missionary go forth endeavoring to give to the honest in heart everywhere the vision of the Christ life in such a way that those grasping it will follow all the way, even as the wise men of old followed the star? But oftentimes they catch only a glimpse and enter the path with dimmed vision and faltering steps. Do you see the need of fellow travelers all along the way with reflectors? We believe that the home department work should be, as it were, the fellow traveler. The missionary brings the people into the church, and then it becomes an individual warfare. They must purify their lives, grow and develop, to "go on to perfection."

There is no end to the study required. We have been commanded to read and study all good books, and again we have the command, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." We are all workmen; some in the affairs of business, some in the field, some in the affairs of education and government, but all are interested in the home.

If the home is to be the sanctuary it should be, every member must do his or her part to make it such, and each should plan to have some quiet moments in that home for study, meditation, and prayer, in order to gain the strength necessary to "go on to perfection."

Now the home department offers study courses along many lines: the Sunday school and Religio Quarterlies for the benefit of those who do not have the privilege of attending Sunday school and Religio; a child care course, food and body course, parents' and teachers' problems, and Health Department leaflets, which should be of vital interest to all parents; training in relief and service for those who may be called to officiate in that line of work; and papers for study and discussion, covering such lines as dress, textiles, table service, civics, etc. Several new courses are in process of preparation, two of which are "Psychology," using for text Betts's The Mind and Its Education, and "Sociology" based on Ellwood's Sociology and Modern Social Problems.

In addition to these, all of the church papers and books, besides many other good books, should be added to the home libraries for the study and assistance of the inmates.

It is true, no doubt, that nearly every member gives some time to reading, but not all employ systematic methods. The home department aims to introduce some systematic study in every home where none exists.

It has been said that study and prayer will pay larger returns on the investment than anything else in life. Is there any better way for our people to become the pure in heart, prepared to live in Zion and help in its redemption?

We cannot read, study, and learn these truths without catching the vision, mentioned in the beginning, that will enrich our lives, making us better fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, business men and women in every vocation in life, and thus we become true Latter Day Saints.

The home has been termed the bulwark of the nation. If every Latter Day Saint home would establish a sanctuary where its members would come for even a short time for quiet study, meditation, and prayer over these vital issues concerning the home, State, and church, many of the now vexing problems would be solved, and our homes be a true bulwark to the church.

NELLIE E. SAMPSON,

General Home Department Superintendent.

Psychology

Text: The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts. Herald Publishing House, $2.10 postpaid.

CHAPTER VI Sensation

1. Show the relation of the two great worlds—the world of physical nature without, and the world of mind within.
2. Ordinarily we hear the five senses spoken of. The author gives six, but states that there are three times that number. Name the six and illustrate each.
3. Give the three sets of factors which enter into a sensation.
4. Express James's definition of a sensation.
5. Sensations differ from each other in four aspects. Name these aspects.
6. What is the relation of the senses to the body?
7. Who are those who are able to fully enter into the wonderful world about us and receive the stimuli necessary to our thought and action?
8. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

DORA GLINES.

LETTERS

NORFOLK, NEBRASKA, December 19.

Editors Herald: Will all Saints in our vicinity please take notice that a series of gospel meetings will be held in our city, to last for at least ten evenings, beginning Wednesday night, January 4, 1922, in the hall above Mr. Winter's harness store, on Norfolk Avenue, between First and Second Streets. Elder E. E. Long, of Lamoni, Iowa, supervisory missionary, will be in charge. All scattered, isolated, and lonesome Saints will be welcomed, as well as all believers or unbelievers in the mission of Jesus Christ. Any who intend coming please write the undersigned at Box 364, Norfolk, Nebraska, and we will endeavor to provide accommodations.

We are few in numbers, therefore we earnestly request the united and especial prayers of all Saints for the complete success of these meetings.

We have a faithful and courageous band of sisters, who, although residing far apart, have at considerable sacrifice and by industry with the needle, provided funds to secure the hall.

Our attendance at Sunday school and preaching services has been slowly on the increase, and we are much encouraged to continue our efforts until all the honest in heart within our reach shall have opportunity to hear the restored gospel of our Lord and Savior in its fullness and purity.

F. E. COCHRAN.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Southern Missouri conference and conventions changed from Thayer, Missouri, to Springfield, February 24, 25, and 26, 1922. A. V. Closson, president.

Massachusetts, at Fall River, February 4 and 5. All reports should be in the hands of the district secretary by January 25. These include district officers, presidents of branches, quorums, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, branch historical reports, and reunion financial report as per reunion resolution. Business: election of officers and the special resolution presented at last conference, "That notice is hereby given that at the next district conference a resolution will be presented to change the name of the district from Massachusetts to Southern New England District." Address all communications to the district clerk, W. A. Sinclair, M. D., 166 Pearl Street, Winter Hill, 45, Massachusetts.

Seattle and British Columbia, at Centralia, Washington, February 25, 1922. As usual there will be a session for the Religio at 10 a. m., Friday, the 24th, and one for the Sunday school at 2 p. m.; also an entertainment in the evening of same date.

It is requested that all having performed ministerial work within the district, other than that in the capacity of a branch officer, will report to the undersigned immediately after December 31 for the six months ending on said date. Branch clerks will kindly send in their statistical reports promptly, on the forms which will be mailed them. It is desired that all who possibly can will be in attendance, and it is hoped that all will make special efforts to spend an enjoyable time. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Minnesota coordinate conference at Minneapolis, December 31 and January 1. Those desiring accommodations should address E. H. Bennett, district secretary, 409 Logan Avenue North, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Appointment of District President

Elder W. H. Kelley has submitted to the Presidency his resignation as president of the Spokane District. We hereby appoint Elder Oscar Case as president of the district until the convening of the next district conference.

December 21, 1921.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Index to Saints' Herald, Volume 68

EDITORIALS

- Abraham, The Book of, 3.
 Activities in Zion, 1223.
 Activities of some church leaders, 554.
 Address Lamoni young people, Elbert A. Smith to, 170.
 Aims of the Sunday school, 74.
 Amana Society, The, 697.
 Ambassadors of God, 49.
 American Indian, The, 1060.
 American Legion visits Kansas City, 1223.
 Analysis of wealth in the United States, 1132.
 Angel Visitations, 1226.
 Another attempt to destroy Manteno church, 1156.
 Antioch plan, The, 795.
 Arber, Joseph, 626.
 Auditorium drive, The successful, 171.
 Australia, Off for, 892.
 Australia, The women's work in, 1127.
 Baptism, 387.
 Baptisms in Europe, 651.
 Bargain counter of life, The, 1009.
 Be ye also ready, 698.
 Biblical scenes on plates found in Michigan, 464.
 Big snowstorm blocks missionaries, 412.
 Birth, The day of his, 1201.
 Bishop Blakeslee's life, A sketch of, 412.
 Bishop's number of Herald, 531.
 Bishops' number, The, 579.
 Bishop R. C. Evans's estate, 412.
 Blakeslee, Bishop E. A., has passed away, 336.
 Blessing of children, The, 842.
 Blue pencil notes, 26.
 Book of Abraham, The, 3.
 Book of sermons by President Elbert A. Smith, 1204.
 British comment on American labor, A, 844.
 Busy man's tracts, The, 650.
 Call to prayer, A, 1033.
 Catalogue of Graceland College, 509.
 Certificate of ordination, 1084.
 Children, The blessing of, 842.
 Christmas gifts, Our, 1177.
 Christmas, A neighborhood, 1130.
 Christ, "The seven last words of," 289.
 Church at Siloam burned, 1150.
 Church building, The use of the, 52.
 Churches retrenching on expenses, 1204.
 Churches unite? On what basis shall the, 531.
 Church finances improving, 650.
 Church headquarters of the past, 485.
 Church history to be completed, Fifth volume of, 796.
 Church membership, 964.
 Church news, 652, 772, 796, 835, 832, 940, 988, 1012, 1036, 1059, 1103.
 Church property not injured in San Antonio, 963.
 Church schools, 627, 940.
 Church union, Probable future of, 818.
 Citizenship, 1129.
 College building, The new, 342.
 College Day, 940.
 "College Day," 962.
 College Day, October, 16, 935, 962.
 Come to the Philippines and help us, 433.
 Community property, 651.
 Conference October 1, 1922, Next General, 1201.
 Consecration, A need for greater, 588.
 Constitutional law, Our, 217.
 Constitution of Missouri, The, 748.
 Cost of administration, The, 597.
 Cost of war, The, 627.
 Country school, The, 773.
 Dancing, 292.
 Day of his birth, The, 1201.
 Deaconate, The, 26.
 Death of R. C. Evans, 76.
 Decline in theological schools, 964.
 Demonstration of value of organization, A, 1132.
 Denominational gains in 1920, 626.
 Derry, Charles, an active man, 698.
 Derry, Charles, is at rest, 674.
 Department of Statistics, The, 819.
 Difficulty of getting reliable world news, The, 100.
 Diploma, The value of a, 553.
 Doctrine of stewardship, The, 1081.
 Does an education pay, 290.
 Doing their part, 1008.
 Dressing children, 1060.
 Easter and immortality, 625.
 Editor issues a frank statement, An, 723.
 Educational number, An, 793.
 Educational survey, An, 625.
 Education as a social instrument, 1228.
 Education pay? Does an, 290.
 Education—"With the goal of the church always in view," 1153.
 Effect of prayer, 193.
 Einstein and Zionism, 530.
 Ensign employees give reception, 530.
 Ethics and religion, Revelation in, 147.
 Eternal city, The, 650.
 Eternal judgment, The resurrection and the, 461.
 Europe and in Palestine, The work in, 458.
 Evans, R. O., Death of, 76.
 Evans's estate, Bishop R. C., 412.
 Evans, Mrs. R. C., Statement from, 243.
 Evidences of the existence of God, A few, 769.
 Evil, The problem of, 841.
 Exercises may be held in our churches? What, 51.
 Explanation, An, 650.
 Explanation of the charts, 590.
 Fair wage, A, 169.
 Faith, 337.
 Faith, He kept the, 985.
 Farewell to Lamoni, 457.
 Father, Our, 673.
 Fear, Men's hearts failing them for, 1202.
 Few of the evidences of the existence of God, A, 769.
 Fifth volume of Church History to be completed, 796.
 Foch, Marshal, sails, 1204.
 Finances improving, Church, 650.
 Follow thou me, 747.
 Foolish misrepresentation, More, 1059.
 Foreign missions, 591.
 Former assistant historian goes to Colorado, 886.
 For these two things I am thankful, 145.
 Freedom and truth, 914.
 Fundamentals, 601.
 General Conference, Next, October 1, 1922, 1201.
 General Interest and The Forum, 169.
 Girl leaders, 291.
 Gifts, Our Christmas, 1177.
 Going to school, 843.
 Good meetings in Saint Louis, 291.
 Good rule for writers, A, 1006.
 Good supplemental help for the missionary, 1006.
 Graceland, A new epoch for, 891.
 Graceland College, Catalogue of, 509.
 Graceland dedication, 916.
 Graceland graduates, 555.
 Graceland is not self-supporting, Why, 1034.
 Graceland's place in the program of the church, 937.
 Graceland, Sunday school training at, 412.
 Graceland, Uniform dress at, 341.
 Group work, 194.
 Growing spirit of unity, The, 123.
 Halfway house on the road to Zion, A, 1105.
 Healers of the sick, 866.
 Healing of sick, More believers in, 867.
 Healing the sick, 340, 1034.
 Health work of church, 771.
 He kept the faith, 985.
 Herald, An old reader of the, 50.
 Herald, Men who have made the, 529.
 Heralds for British Mission, 26.
 Herald in Independence, The, 486.
 Herald's place, The, 73.
 Herald Publishing House, 460.
 High council, Status of the, 243.
 History not a record of wars, 1006.
 Holden Home dedicated, 1151.
 Holden, Tithing campaign in, 386.
 Humility manifested, 292.
 Illiteracy in America, 195.
 Immortality, Easter and, 625.
 Immortality, Some intellectual consideration of, 889.
 Independence, graduates, 531.
 Indian organization, New, 1157.
 Indian work, Some new arrangements in, 868.
 Indians will hold annual convention, 1008.
 Inspired Version? Why not use the, 770.
 Isolated Saint, The, 553.
 Jazz music, 747.
 Jerusalem, More riots in, 1157.
 Joint council committee considering retrenchment, 1203.
 Joint council sessions, 915.
 Joseph Smith and the Presidency, 675.
 Joseph Smith on education, 796.
 Journal of History, October number of, 99.
 Kansas City, American Legion visits, 1223.
 Labor union, The, 820.
 Lamoni, Farewell to, 457.
 Lamoni Stake number soon, 243.
 Lamoni stake reunion, 838, 790.
 Lamoni young people, The, 148.
 Law, our constitutional, 217.
 Law of the church, Why we do not keep the, 50.
 Law of the Lord is perfect, The, 913, 988, 1227.
 Laying on of hands, 435.
 Lesson of the war, The, 195.
 Let us pay our tithing now, 554.
 Local announcements, 1102.
 Local appointments, 650.
 Manteno church, Another attempt to destroy, 1156.
 Marriage law in Ontario, The, 818.
 Marriages, Utah on plural, 721.
 Mars Hill, A modern, 964.
 Meaning of "evil" in the Bible, 1130.
 Membership and tithing, A survey of church, 589.
 Men's hearts failing them for fear, 1202.
 Men who have made the Herald, The, 529.
 Michigan, Biblical scenes on plates found in, 464.
 Midsummer young people's meetings, 676.
 Ministerial registration in Canada, 886.
 Mississippi about 1830, The, 820.
 Missionary, Support of the, by the church, 1035.
 Missionary, Good supplemental help for the, 1006.
 Missionary, One week in the life of a, 365.
 Missionary policy, Quorum of Twelve drafts a, 1010.
 Missionary services, 267.
 Ministry, Procedure in silencing members of, 410.
 Missouri centennial, 789.
 Missouri, The constitution of, 748.
 Modern Mars Hill, A, 964.
 Monthly cash receipts, 596.
 Moral support due the pastor, The, 819.
 More believers in healing of sick, 867.
 More foolish misrepresentation, 1059.
 More riots in Jerusalem, 1157.
 Motherhood, 385.
 Mothers' Day, 385.
 Mounds near Saint Louis, 1083.
 Moving delayed news items, 487.
 Moving of publishing house to Independence, 25.
 Moving to Zion, 1078.
 Music for revival services, 268.
 Music makes farm life more attractive, 1060.
 Necessaries or unnecessary, 596.
 Need for greater consecration, A, 588.
 Neighborhood Christmas, A, 1130.
 New college building, The, 342.
 New epoch for Graceland, A, 891.
 New Indian organization, 1157.
 Newspaper attacks, 532.
 Newspaper ethics, 627.
 Newspaper ethics—A code, 914.
 New teaching plan for Sunday school, A, 1036.
 New Testament law of divorce, The, 1057.
 New Year's greeting, 1.
 Next General Conference, October 1, 1922, 1201.
 Next reunion number, The, 241.
 Next war, The, 745.
 Next year's course in religious education, 457.
 Noted singer not colored, 365.
 Not our will, but His, 98.
 "Now is the accepted time," 28.
 Nurses wanted, 699.
 October Journal of History, 99.
 Off for Australia, 892.
 Omission, An important, 1036.
 On what basis shall churches unite, 531.
 One week in the life of a missionary, 365.
 Operating income and expenses, 597.
 Ordinances, The right to administer in the church, 722.
 Ordination, Certificate of, 1084.
 Organization of the young people, 291.
 Organization for young people's meetings, 266.
 Other good reunion articles, 268.
 Others, Think well of, 867.
 Our Christmas gifts, 1156, 1177.
 Our church Sanitarium, 1108.
 Our Father, 673.
 Our reunions, 241.
 Our spiritual inheritances, 505.
 Our third reunion number, 434.
 Our young people, 817.
 Palestine, Rainfall in, 1012.
 Palestine, The work in Europe and in, 458.
 Passing of Joseph S. Snively, 772.
 Passing of the year, The, 1225.
 Pastoral ideal, A, 700.
 Pattysen, W. D. C., Passing of, 28.
 Pertle Springs reunion, 820.
 Philadelphia, Services in, 292.
 Philippines, Come to the, and help us, 433.
 Philosophies of life, Two, 1177.
 Poetic justice to the Red Man, 862.
 Political ideals, 940.
 Popular education, 676.
 Prayer, A call to, 1033.
 Prayer, Effect of, 193.
 Preacher who practiced, A, 386.
 Preparation or superficial, Thorough, 795.
 Present-tense religion, 1033.
 President Smith in Utah in summer of 1920, 1011.
 President F. M. Smith reaches Jerusalem, 315.
 President Smith returns from East, 1156.
 President Smith returns to Independence, 363.
 President Smith returns to Zion, 700.
 President Smith to return soon, 532.
 President Smith was not in Utah last summer, 819.
 Probable future of church union, The, 818.
 Problems before the church, 593.
 Problem of evil, The, 841.
 Procedure in silencing members of the ministry, 410.
 Prophets, School of the, 1084.
 Public school music course, 815.
 Publishing house to Independence, Moving of, 25.
 Quorum of Twelve drafts a missionary policy, 1010.
 Radioharmony concerts, 1079.
 Rainfall in Palestine, 1012.
 Reception, Ensign employees give, 530.
 Red man, Poetic justice to the, 862.
 Reliable people, 699.
 Reliable world news, The difficulty of getting, 100.
 Religio Quarterlies, The, 627.
 Religion appeals to reason, True, 865.
 Religion, Present-tense, 1033.

- Religious education, Next year's course in, 457.
- Religious normal work, 1131.
- Religious pageant in Seattle, 790.
- Rent law, The, 773.
- Repentance, 361.
- Restoration, The, 481.
- Results of sacrifice campaign, 796.
- Resurrection and the eternal judgment, The, 461.
- Retrenching on expenses, Churches, 1204.
- Retrenchment, Joint council committee considering, 1203.
- Reunions, Our, 241.
- Reunion sanitation, 242.
- Reunion season nearing its close, The, 795.
- Reunion work, Our, 171.
- Revelation in ethics and religion, 147.
- Revival in Independence, Young people's, 98.
- Revival services, Music for, 263.
- Right to administer in the church ordinances, The, 722.
- Rural population, 626.
- Sacrifice campaign, Result of, 796.
- Saint Louis, Good meetings in, 291.
- Saints' Herald files, 748.
- Sanitarium, A social, 171.
- Sanitarium Day, 1108.
- Sanitarium, Our church, 1108.
- Sanitation, Reunion, 242.
- School, Going to, 843.
- School of the prophets, 1084.
- Schools, Church, 627.
- School this year? What about, 793.
- Second reunion number, The, 411.
- Secret orders, 459.
- Sermons, Valuable series of, 341.
- Services for Zion Builders, 193.
- Services in Philadelphia, 292.
- Seven last words of Christ, "The," 289.
- Sick, Healers of the, 866.
- Sick, Healing the, 340, 1084.
- Silencing members of the ministry, Procedure in, 410.
- Size of one star, The, 195.
- Sketch of Bishop Blakeslee's life, A, 412.
- Smith, Elbert A., To address Lamoni young people, 170.
- Smith, Joseph, and the Presidency, 675.
- Smith, Joseph, on education, 796.
- Smith, President Elbert A., Book of sermons by, 1204.
- Smith, President F. M., reaches Jerusalem, 315.
- Smith, President, not in Utah in 1920, 819.
- Smith, President, in Utah in summer of 1920, 1011.
- Smith returns to Independence, President, 868.
- Smith, President, returns from East, 1155.
- Smith, President, returns to Zion, 700.
- Snively, Joseph S., Passing of, 772.
- Social sanitarium, A, 171.
- Social unrest, 122.
- Social work in Iowa, 123.
- Some intellectual consideration of immortality, 839.
- Some new arrangements in Indian work, 868.
- Some notes on Spiritualism, 649.
- Some recent church statistics, 722.
- Spirit of consecration and sacrifice, The, 674.
- Spirit of the Reorganization, The, 589.
- Spiritual inheritances, Our, 505.
- Spiritualism, Some notes on, 649.
- Statement from Mrs. R. C. Evans, 243.
- Statement of church aims, A, 773.
- Statistician's office, The, 772.
- Statistics, Some recent church, 722.
- Status of the High Council, 243.
- Steel worker and the minister, The, 530.
- Stewardship enrollment, 99.
- Stewardship, The doctrine of, 1081.
- Steward, The unjust, 121.
- Subjects being discussed, 4, 23, 52, 100, 123, 172, 196, 268, 532, 556, 628, 652, 676, 723, 748, 838, 844, 964, 988, 1036, 1060, 1102, 1132, 1198.
- Successful auditorium drive, The, 171.
- Sunday school aims, 167.
- Sunday school, A new teaching plan for, 1036.
- Sunday school teaching, 891.
- Sunday school training at Graceland, 412.
- Support of the missionary by the church, 1035.
- Survey, An educational, 625.
- Survey of church membership and tithing, 539.
- Surveys of infancy, 342.
- Teaching, Sunday school, 891.
- Temple Builders Manual, 27.
- Thanksgiving Day, 1621-1921, 1105.
- There should be a Herald in every home, 1103.
- Think well of others, 867.
- Thorough preparation or superficial, 795.
- Time for sanity, A, 1155.
- Tithing campaign in Holden, 336.
- Tithing now, Let us pay our, 554.
- Tithing? Who should pay, 1180.
- Tobacco smoke a nuisance to many, 1007.
- To observe April 6, 243.
- To our subscribers abroad, 509.
- True religion, 409.
- True religion appeals to reason, 865.
- Truth, Freedom and, 914.
- Two philosophies of life, 1177.
- Two things, I am thankful for these, 145.
- Two rules, The, 1127.
- Unemployment, 1058.
- Uniform dress at Graceland, 341.
- Unity, The growing spirit of, 123.
- Unjust steward, The, 121.
- Unsigned editorials, 487.
- Use of the church building, The, 52.
- Utah on plural marriages, 721.
- Valuable series of sermons, 341.
- Value of a diploma, The, 553.
- Victim of maniac's bullets, 790.
- Visitors welcome, 676.
- War, The cost of, 627.
- War, The lesson of the, 195.
- War, The next, 745.
- Wars, History not a record of, 1006.
- What about school this year, 793.
- What exercises may be held in our church, 51.
- What shall we buy, 1157.
- When we move to Independence, 386.
- Who should pay tithing, 1180.
- Wholesale house proposed, 195.
- Why Graceland is not self-supporting, 1034.
- Why not use the Inspired Version, 770.
- Why we do not keep the law of the church, 50.
- Wight, John W., passes to his reward, 486.
- Wisdom of the ages, The, 961.
- With Zahnd under two flags, 97.
- Woman healed, A, 673.
- Women's May institute, The, 386.
- Women's work in Australia, The, 1127.
- Work in Europe and in Palestine, The, 458.
- Work of the Bishopric, The, 584.
- Writers, A good rule for, 1006.
- Year of centennials, A, 962.
- Young people are aroused, 315.
- Young people's meetings, 365.
- Young people's meetings, Organization for, 266.
- Young people, Organization of the, 291.
- Young people, Our, 817.
- Young people's revival in Independence, 98.
- Young people's services, 148.
- Zahnd under two flags, With, 97.
- Zion builders, 221.
- Zion builders in action, 242.
- Zion Builder services a success, 265.
- Zion Builder services not a fad, 433.
- Zion Builders, Services for, 193.
- Zion, A halfway house on the road to, 1105.
- Zionism and its finances, 651.
- Zionism, Einstein and, 530.
- Zionism, What is it, 773.
- ORIGINAL ARTICLES
- Adolescent, The responsibility of the adult to the, 845.
- Advertising the reunion, 414.
- Agnostic, I meet an, 101.
- Agriculture as a Zionic problem, The organization of, 77.
- Altar of worldly pleasures, 1017.
- American Indian, The, 5.
- Anderson, Audentia, and Mina Madison, Women's Department, 418.
- Angel of Revelation 14, The, 512.
- Annual tithing report? Why the, 293.
- "Any afflicted . . . any sick," 342.
- Arab and the Jew, The, 609.
- Armageddon, 1161.
- Auditorium, The General Conference, 1133.
- Baldwin, D. R., Farm loans, 538.
- Barmore, Alma C., Advertising the reunion, 414.
- Being broad-minded Saints, 269.
- Berve, Amos, The reunion cafeteria, 448.
- Betz, John H., Armageddon, 1161.
- Bible, A comparison of the Talmud and the, 965.
- Bishop, James E., The utility of fear, 707; What is the world coming to, 893.
- Bond, Myron H., The Lord's prayer in the Book of Mormon, 822.
- Book of Doctrine and Covenants, The, 125.
- Book of Mormon in our church program, The, 129.
- Book of Mormon, The Lord's prayer in the, 822.
- Boys at our reunions, The, 421.
- British mandate for Palestine, 487.
- Bronson, J. A., the second coming of Christ, 53; The church in relation to temporalities, 605.
- Bullard, Richard, A God who answers prayer, 1205.
- Burgess, Alice Mae, Our girls at reunions, 420.
- Burgess, H. C., Music an important feature at our reunions, 443.
- Burgess, S. A., Stake organization, 316; Church institutions in Lamoni Stake, 325; The conflict of science and religion, 366.
- Carmichael, A., The finances of the reunion, 247.
- Carmichael, A. Max, The Book of Mormon in our church program, 129; What shall the schools teach, 727; The relation between cities and the home, 917; Our ideal, 939; Frugality and thrift, 1184.
- Carpenter, C. I., The financial plan in Kewanee, 448.
- Cause of failure, The, 632.
- Chase, A. M., The Sabbath of today, 1114; Jerusalem and the coming of Christ; A fallacy concerning divorce, 1230.
- Chautauqua feature in reunions, The, 254.
- Children at the reunion, 425.
- Children in the camp, 423.
- Children's playtime, 422.
- Chocking the log, 749.
- Choice Seer, The, 557.
- Christensen, A. H., Intelligent work, 222; Preaching the gospel, 725; The middle of the road, 869.
- Christ's story of the age end, 1085.
- Church, at work, play, and worship, The, 415.
- Church in relation to temporalities, The, 605.
- Church institutions in Lamoni Stake, 325.
- Church, Taking the outsider to, 269.
- Church work, Music as a factor in, 150.
- Civics and the home, The relation between, 917.
- Closson, Eugene, and F. M. McDowell, The boys at our reunions, 421.
- Colbert, Leroy, Unusual method of financing a reunion, 449.
- Coming of Christ, Jerusalem and the, 1137.
- Comments, Notes and, 704.
- Commissary at reunions, The, 444.
- Comparison of the Talmud and the Bible, A, 965.
- Conflict of science and religion, The, 366.
- Cooper, R. T., The purpose of the reunion, 246.
- Cooperation for reunions, 413.
- Crabb, J. C., The "kingdoms" in Daniel 2, 1086.
- Cross, Sword or, 1181.
- Curtis, J. F., Reunions as revivals for Saints, 245.
- Daily paper at reunions, The, 255.
- Dancing, Our young people on, 294.
- Death of the righteous, The, 849.
- Design, volition, and destiny, 536.
- Divine healing, 562.
- Divorce, A fallacy concerning, 1230.
- Dobson, Minnie Scott, Music, and citizenship in Zion, 654.
- Doctrine and Covenants, The Book of, 125.
- Education, 223.
- Education and inspiration of the "spirit in man," 29.
- Education as a common blessing, 629.
- Education, Some observations on, 1206.
- Educational dreams realized, 942.
- Error, Truth versus, 1209.
- Etzenhouser, Mrs. M. A., Social aspect of the reunion, 253; The Religio's part in the redemption of Zion, 438.
- Europe, The Jews in, 653.
- Evangelizing the world, 465.
- Failure, The cause of, 632.
- Fallacy concerning divorce, A, 1230.
- Faith? How are we teaching, 535.
- Farrell, Ralph W., I meet an agnostic, 101; Notes and comments, 704; Valuable evidence regarding the Presidency, 821; What of to-day, 941; Signs of the times, 939; The legion visits Kansas City, 1109.
- Farm loans, 538.
- Farm problems, The solution of women and, 752.
- Fear, The utility of, 707.
- Fellowship as the objective of reunions, 259.
- Few more thoughts on stewardship, A, 680.
- Finances of the reunion, The, 247.
- Financial plan in Kewanee, 448.
- Financial situation in the church, The, 1158.
- Foreign fields, 197.
- Franklin, Faye, What nurses' training has done for me, 799.
- Freedom, The way to, 943.
- Frugality and thrift, 1184.
- Fruit of happiness, The, 1229.
- Gardner, Mrs. J. A., The church at work, play, and worship, 415.
- Garver, John F., Our aim, 314; Who's who in Lamoni Stake, 329.
- General conference auditorium, The, 1133.
- God who answers prayer, A, 1205.
- Gospel, Preaching the, 725.
- Gospel, The virtue of the, 990.
- Graceland gave to me, What, 797.
- Graham, Mrs. M. D., Children in the camp, 423.
- Grave indictment, A, 1061.
- Griffiths, Gomer T., The prayer meeting a key to successful reunions, 248; The choice seer, 557.
- Halley, Mrs. Maude C., A product of the Independence Institute, 798; Tiny tots at the reunion, 424.
- Hammond, E. G., Chocking the log, 749.
- Hanson, Paul M., Foreign fields, 197; Education as a common blessing, 629.
- Happiness, The fruit of, 1229.
- Harder, Howard W., The Religio at the reunion, 446.
- Harrington, M. D., G. Leonard, The health department at reunions, 251.
- Healing, Divine, 562.
- Health Department at reunions, The, 251.
- Health of the camp, The, 439.
- Heide, Clarence, The virtue of the gospel, 990.
- History of Lamoni Stake, 318.
- Holloway, L. G., The place of the reunion in the work of the church, 413.
- Hopkins, R. V., Young people's prayer services at reunions, 250.
- How are we teaching faith, 535.
- Hulbert, Mrs. Winifred, Taking the outsider to church, 269.
- Ideals of Judaism, 535.
- I meet an agnostic, 101.
- Independence Institute, A product of the, 798.
- Indian, The American, 5.
- Inspired Version, The teacher's edition of the, 631.

- Intelligent work, 222.
 Irwin, C. E., The organization of agriculture as a Zionie problem, 77; The solution of women and farm problems, 752.
 "I wish I could preach," 295.
 Jensen, A., Music as a factor in church work, 150.
 Jerusalem and the coming of Christ, 1134.
 Jesus Christ, Last will and testament of, 1037.
 Jesus Christ, The Jews and, 149.
 Jewish resettlement of Palestine, 677.
 Jews and Jesus Christ, The, 149.
 Jews in Europe, The, 653.
 Jews in Palestine, The, 848.
 Jew, The Arab and the, 609.
 Joseph Smith, the foe of polygamy, 173.
 Judaism, Ideals of, 533.
 Kaler, E. A., The commissary at reunions, 444.
 Kansas City, The Legion visits, 1109.
 "Kingdoms" in Daniel 2, The, 1036.
 Krahl, D. J., Reunion prayer meetings, 249.
 Lacey, Ethel A., The reunion newspaper worth while, 255.
 Lamoni Stake, 321.
 Lamoni Stake, Administrative methods and ideals in, 331.
 Lamoni Stake, Church institutions in, 325.
 Lamoni Stake, History of, 318.
 Lamoni Stake, Who's who in, 329.
 Larkey, A. G., Education and inspiration of the "spirit in man," 29.
 Last will and testament of Jesus Christ, 1037.
 Legion visits Kansas City, The, 1109.
 Leverton, Arthur, "Any afflicted . . . any sick," 342.
 Life beautiful, The, 1138.
 Lofty, Frank, Last will and testament of Jesus Christ, 1037.
 Log, Chocking the, 749.
 Long, Elmer E., The American Indian, 5; Order at the reunion, 253.
 Lord's Prayer in the Book of Mormon, The, 822.
 Madison, Mina, Audentia Anderson, and Women's Department, 413.
 McConley, M. A., The prayer meeting in the reunion, 248.
 McDowell, F. M., and Eugene Closson, The boys at our reunions, 421.
 McDowell, Floyd M., The responsibility of the adult to the adolescent, 845.
 McGuire, B. R., Why the annual tithing report, 293; Our heritage, 577; A wonderful response, 578; Things the church has accomplished, 531; Two kinds of tithing, 967; Altar of worldly pleasure, 1017; The two rules, 1113; The general conference auditorium, 1133; The financial situation in the church, 1153.
 Mann, Laura E., The health of the camp, 439.
 Middle of the road, The, 869.
 Miller, C. Edward, Social aspects of the reunion, 256.
 Mills, A. H., Music at our reunions, 441; Two beautiful organs we have recently acquired, 1134.
 Moore, Edward D., The reunion newspaper, 256.
 Mother, A tribute to my, 391.
 Music an important feature at reunions, 443.
 Music and citizenship in Zion, 654.
 Music as a factor in church work, 150.
 Music at our reunions, 441.
 Notes and comments, 704.
 Nurses' training has done for me, What, 799.
 Observations on education, Some, 1206.
 Order at the reunion, 253.
 Organization of agriculture as a Zionie problem, The, 77.
 Organs we have recently acquired, Two beautiful, 1134.
 Orioles, Temple Builders, and recreation at reunions, 419.
 Osler, William, Thanksgiving and service, 1109.
 Our aim, 314.
 Our girls at reunions, 420.
 Our heritage, 577.
 Our ideal, 989.
 Our mission in life, 990.
 Our young people on dancing, 294.
 Palestine and prophecy, 705.
 Palestine, British mandate for, 487.
 Palestine, Jewish resettlement of, 677.
 Palestine, The Jews in, 848.
 Parsons, A. H., Education, 223.
 Passman, Harry, A comparison of the Talmud and the Bible, 985.
 Patterson, Elmer K., "I wish I could preach," 295; The treasures of two kingdoms, 682; Wanted—one Saint, 894; Truth, 1037.
 Phillips, A. B., The teachers' edition of the Inspired Version, 631.
 Place of the reunion in the work of the church, The, 413.
 Pleasures, Altar of worldly, 1017.
 Polygamy, Joseph Smith the foe of, 173.
 Prayer, A God who answers, 1205.
 Prayer meeting a key to successful reunions, The, 248.
 Prayer meetings, Reunion, 249.
 Prayer services at reunions, Young people's, 250.
 Preaching the gospel, 725.
 Preach, "I wish I could, 295.
 Preach the word, 1208.
 Presidency, Valuable evidence regarding the, 821.
 Product of the Independence Institute, A, 798.
 Prophecy, Palestine and, 705.
 Purpose of the reunion, The, 246.
 Rannie, Edward, The Jews and Jesus Christ, 149; Preach the word, 1208.
 Recreation at reunions, Orioles, Temple Builders, and, 419.
 Reeves, Gomer J., How are we teaching faith, 535.
 Relation between civics and the home, The, 917.
 Relation between study and service, 701.
 Religio at the reunion, The, 446.
 Religion, The conflict of science and, 366.
 Religio's part in the building of Zion, The, 488.
 Responsibility of the adult to the adolescent, The, 845.
 Reunion, Advertising the, 414.
 Reunion, Cafeteria, The, 443.
 Reunion, Children at the, 425.
 Reunion grounds, Sanitation in relation to, 252.
 Reunion newspaper, The, 256.
 Reunion newspaper worth while, The, 255.
 Reunion, Order at the, 253.
 Reunion prayer meetings, 249.
 Reunion, Religio at, 446.
 Reunion, Social aspect of the, 258.
 Reunion, Social aspects of the, 256.
 Reunion, The finances of, 247.
 Reunion, The place of the, 413.
 Reunion, The prayer meeting in, 248.
 Reunion, The purpose of the, 246.
 Reunion, Tiny tots at the, 424.
 Reunion, Unusual method of financing, A, 449.
 Reunions as revivals for Saints, 245.
 Reunions, Commissary at, 444.
 Reunions, Cooperation for, 413.
 Reunions, Fellowship as the objective of, 259.
 Reunions, Music at our, 441.
 Reunions, Music an important feature at, 443.
 Reunions, Prayer meeting a key to successful, 248.
 Reunions, The boys at our, 421.
 Reunions, The Chautauqua feature in, 254.
 Reunions, The daily paper at, 255.
 Reunions, The Health Department at, 251.
 Reunions, Their objects and methods, 244.
 Reunions, Orioles, Temple Builders and recreation at, 419.
 Reunions, Our girls at, 420.
 Reunions, Young people's services at, 250.
 Revivals for Saints, Reunions as, 245.
 Righteous, The death of the, 349.
 Rushton, John W., Cooperation for reunions, 413; Reunions—their objects and methods, 244; A grave indictment, 1061; Some observations on education, 1206.
 Sabbath of to-day, The, 1114.
 Sabbath question, The, 560.
 Sanitation in relation to reunion grounds, 252.
 Saints, Being broad-minded, 269.
 Schenck, Marcella, Children's playtime, 422; What Graceland gave to me, 797.
 Schofield, James D., The Sabbath question, 560.
 Schools teach? What shall the, 727.
 Science and religion, The conflict of, 366.
 Scientific versus extraneous preaching, 774.
 Second coming of Christ, The, 53.
 Service, Thanksgiving and, 1109.
 Signs of the times, 989.
 Sinclair, W. A., Sanitation in relation to reunion grounds, 252.
 Smith, Alice Myrmda, The daily paper at reunions, 255.
 Smith, Hale W., The death of the righteous, 849.
 Smith, Joseph, The foe of polygamy, 173.
 Smith, Vida E., History of Lamoni Stake, 318.
 Smith, W. W., The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, 125; Joseph Smith the foe of polygamy, 173; Relation between study and service, 701.
 Smurthwaite, C. A., The sociology of the Bible, of "Christianity," and "the restoration," 1013; Sword or cross, 1181.
 Social aspects of the reunion, 256, 258.
 Sociology of the Bible, of "Christianity," and "the Restoration," The, 1013.
 Solution of women and farm problems, The, 752.
 Some observations on education, 1206.
 Speer, Ruby R., Being broad-minded Saints, 269.
 Spring, F. L., Divine healing, 562.
 Stake organization, 316.
 Steele, Mary E., Orioles, Temple Builders, and recreation at reunions, 419.
 Stevenson, E. J., Our mission in life, 990.
 Stewardship, A few more thoughts on, 630.
 Strachan, Lora H., Children at the reunion, 425.
 Study and service, Relation between, 701.
 Sword or cross, 1181.
 Taking the outsider to church, 269.
 Talmud and the Bible, A comparison of the, 965.
 Teachers' edition of the Inspired Version, The, 631.
 Temple Builders, and recreation at reunions, Orioles, 419.
 Temporalities, The church in relation to, 605.
 Thanksgiving and service, 1109.
 Things the church has accomplished, 531.
 Thompson, O. L., Our young people on dancing, 294.
 Thrift, Frugality and, 1134.
 Times, Signs of the, 989.
 Tiny tots at the reunion, 424.
 Tithing report? Why the annual, 293.
 Tithing, Two kinds of, 967.
 To-day? What of, 941.
 Treasures of two kingdoms, The, 682.
 Tribute to my mother, A, 391.
 True Isaac, Christ's story of the age end, 1085.
 Truth, 1037.
 Truth links, 296.
 Truth versus error, 1209.
 Two beautiful organs we have recently acquired, 1134.
 Two kinds of tithing, 967.
 Two rules, The, 1113.
 Unusual method of financing a reunion, 449.
 Utility of fear, The, 707.
 Valuable evidence regarding the presidency, 821.
 Vanderwood, J. E., A tribute to my mother, 391; Evangelizing the world, 465; Ensign and volition and destiny, 536; Vision, 729; Scientific versus extrane-

- ous preaching, 774; The way to freedom, 943; The life beautiful, 1138; The fruit of happiness, 1229.
 Virtue of the gospel, The, 990.
 Vision, 729.
 Walker, Marietta, Educational dreams realized, 942.
 Waller, G. J., The angel of Revelation 14, 512.
 Wanted—one Saint, 894.
 Warr, A. E., Fellowship as the objective of reunions, 259.
 Way to freedom, The, 943.
 Weaver, O. L., Truth versus error, 1209.
 Webbe, F. C., What they do at Kirtland, 450.
 What Graceland gave to me, 797.
 What is the world coming to, 893.
 What nurses' training has done for me, 799.
 What of to-day, 941.
 What shall the schools teach, 727.
 What they do at Kirtland, 450.
 Who's who in Lamoni Stake, 329.
 Why the annual tithing report, 293.
 Wight, Cyril E., The Chautauqua feature in reunions, 254.
 Williams, Daniel T., Young people in camp, 257.
 Williams, T. W., British mandate for Palestine, 487; The Zionist movement, 510; Ideal of Judaism, 533; The Arab and the Jew, 609; The Jews in Europe, 653; Jewish resettlement of Palestine, 677; Palestine and prophecy, 705.
 Women's Department, 413.
 Wonderful response, A, 578.
 Word, Preach the, 1208.
 Work of the church, The place of the reunion in the, 413.
 Work, play, and worship, The church at, 415.
 World coming to? What is the, 893.
 Yarrington, A. J., Lamoni Stake, 321.
 Yates, James E., Truth links, 296; The cause of failure, 632.
 Yates, Wilbur F., A few more thoughts on stewardship, 630.
 Young people in camp, 257.
 Young people's prayer service at reunions, 250.
 Zionist movement, The, 510.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

- Against limitation, None, 1210.
 Agriculture in the Hawaiian Islands, 1038.
 Aim of education, The, 1064.
 American Zionists announce break with world organization, 467.
 America's attitude, 57.
 Ancient wall in Tennessee, 58.
 Announcement of 1920, The, 491.
 Anti-prohibition parade, 754.
 Average mental age, The, 450.
 Bible stories in school, 451.
 Bible, The common law of the, 1140.
 British comment on spiritualism, A, 731.
 British Empire outlined in Genesis, "The, 633.
 Capital and labor, 1065.
 Carpenter and college graduate, The, 224.
 Child labor law enforcement reveals bad conditions, 656.
 Christ and immortality, 1039.
 Christian education, 478.
 Christian education? How shall we secure a, 103.
 Christian substitute for force, 684.
 Christianity and marriage, 151.
 Christianity and the war, 344.
 Church, Economics in the, 1026.
 Church headquarters, When Lamoni became, 370.
 Common consent, 272.
 Common law of the Bible, The, 1140.
 Community welfare, 1038.
 Cooperative movement, The, 2.
 Darwin's confession, 1209.
 Distributing the word, 656.
 Economics in the church, 1026.
 Education, 801.
 Education plus, 708.
 Education, The aim of, 1064.
 Education, Value of an, 635.
 Employers and the Y. W. C. A., The, 871.
 Employer and workman, 993.
 Europe looks for second advent of Christ, 343.

Experiment in missionary methods, An, 731.
 Explorer discovers tribe without laws, 58.
 Famine in Russia, The, 1163.
 Farmer cooperation, 633.
 Finding relics of ancient civilization, 709.
 Five million for Palestine trade, 298.
 Further steps in cooperation, 1088.
 Future of Palestine, The, 297.
 Giving "color" to Sovietism, 564.
 God's hand in the history of nations, 895.
 Harvard Glee Club, The, 33.
 Healing, Spiritual views on, 31.
 Healing, The Jews take up, 871.
 Health examination for Grace-land College students, 803.
 Hebrews are taking to farming, Many, 298.
 Higher criticism, The, 538.
 How shall we secure a Christian education, 103.
 Indian contribution, The, 392.
 Industrial program of Young Women's Christian Association, 852.
 Jew in music, The, 131.
 Jews of the world are going to Palestine, 466.
 Jews take up healing, The, 871.
 Justification of play, The, 775.
 Kaiser out-kaisered, The, 611.
 Kansas City in 1840, 825.
 Labor sharing in management, 150.
 Lamoni Stake in action, 369.
 Landing of the Saxons, The, 130.
 League of Nations has done, What the, 1087.
 Love that is to come, The, 132.
 Maternity Bill indorsed, 1185.
 Mayan ruins discovered in Guatemala, 225.
 Meaning of community service, The, 1020.
 Methodist Church, Stewardship in the, 1065.
 Missionary methods, An experiment in, 731.
 Money value of education, 803.
 Morgenthau, Henry, and Zionism, 1163.
 Music, the Jew in, 131.
 National cost of education, The, 478.
 Navy observes Sabbath, 657.
 New college building completed, 368.
 New Mormon invasion of England, 451.
 New publications, 34.
 New sort of revival, A, 150.
 Palestine, Jews of the world are going to, 466.
 Palestine, The future of, 297.
 Palestine's natural resources great, 34.
 Palestine trade, Five millions for, 298.
 Palestine, war, science, 466.
 Philippines, The, 104.
 Poetic justice to the red man, 824.
 Print paper situation, The, 479.
 Production and waste, 563.
 Protestant churches, The, 271.
 Red man, Poetic justice to the, 824.
 Regulating the dance, 492.
 Right education, The, 803.
 Russia, The famine in, 1163.
 Russia? What is happening in, 56.
 Saxons, The landing of the, 130.
 Sir Herbert as engine driver, 132.
 Something for nothing, Is it possible, 731.
 Spiritual element in government, The, 655.
 Spiritual views on healing, 31.
 Spiritualism, A British comment on, 731.
 Stewardship in the Methodist Church, 1065.
 Teach your children to be kind to animals, 492.
 This wonderful period, 514.
 Tithing story, A, 991.
 Value of an education, 803.
 Value of pipe organs, The, 851.
 Versions of the Bible, The, 392.
 War, Christianity and the, 344.
 Watch the moral atmosphere, 564.
 What education does, 611.
 What is happening in Russia, 56.
 What Judge Phillips said about polygamy, 178.
 What of the children, 1064.

What the League of Nations has done, 1087.
 When Lamoni became church headquarters, 370.
 Which version of the Bible, 491.
 Who succeeds, 802.
 "Will a man rob God," 1018.
 Workman, Employer and, 993.
 World in grip of mighty storm, 993.
 World revolt against tradition, A, 967.
 Worship, 825.
 Young Women's Christian Association, Industrial program of, 852.
 Y. W. C. A., The employers and the, 871.
 Zionism, Henry Morgenthau and, 1163.

PASTORAL

Administrative methods and ideals in the Lamoni Stake, 331, 344.
 Bailey, John, The work of an elder's quorum, 515.
 "Beat my sheep," 229.
 Calling and duties of elders, The, 229.
 Chosen? Unto what have I been, 1210.
 Christensen, A. H., Crusaders for Christ, 777, 803, 825.
 Church advertising, 104.
 Church, Why people don't go to, 298.
 Crusaders for Christ, 777, 803, 825.
 Doctor Gordon and his questions, 805.
 Duties of branch officers, 11, 34, 59.
 Elders, The calling and duties of, 229.
 Elders' quorum, The work of an, 515.
 Elders' quorum work in England, 229.
 Far West Stake, Group work in, 204.
 Garver, J. F., Group work in Lamoni stake, 201.
 Good work in Independence, 85.
 Groupwork in Far West Stake, 204.
 Group work in Holden Stake, 204.
 Group work in Kansas City Stake, 203.
 Group work in Lamoni Stake, 201.
 Group work in Zion, 200.
 Holden Stake, Group work in, 204.
 Hopkins, R. V., Group work in Zion, 200.
 Ideals in the Lamoni Stake, Administrative methods and, 344.
 Kansas City Stake, Group work in, 203.
 Krahl, D. J., Group work in Holden Stake, 204.
 Lamoni Stake, Group work in, 201.
 Lust for audiences, 299.
 Maloney, Edward, Elders' quorum work in England, 299.
 Moore, Edward D., Administrative methods and ideals in the Lamoni Stake, 331, 344.
 Morgan, Mrs. David, Church advertising, 104.
 Painful pupil mannerisms, 539.
 Pastoral commission, The, 778.
 Priest, A, 516.
 Pulpit mannerisms, Painful, 539.
 Quorum work in England, Elders, 299.
 Salyards, R. S., Group work in Far West Stake, 204.
 Smith, Elbert A., Duties of branch officers, 11, 34, 59.
 Smith, Hale W., The value of the social survey, 226.
 Social survey, The value of the, 226.
 Tanner, J. A., Group work in Kansas City Stake, 203.
 Unto what have I been chosen, 1210.
 Value of the social survey, The, 226.
 White, E. S., The calling and duties of elders, 229.
 Why people don't go to church, 298.
 Work of an elders' quorum, The, 515.
 Zion, Groupwork in, 200.

WHAT WE BELIEVE

Eternal judgment, The, 711.
 Immortality and the resurrection, 153.
 Hanson, Paul M., Laying on of hands, 85.

Laying on of hands, 85.
 Resurrection, Immortality and the, 153.
 Smith, Elbert A., Immortality and the resurrection, 153; The eternal judgment, 711; "The latter-day glory," 1212, 1232.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Christ is risen, 300.
 Confidence, 393.
 Cry, The, 634.
 Derry, Charles, A song of gratitude, 709.
 Dryden, Charlotte, When the heart starves, 1077; My monument, 1231.
 Earnest prayer, Our, 88.
 Easter praise, 300.
 Ellis, W. P., Exhortation, 1078.
 Erwin, Emma, My supplication, 755.
 Exhortation, 1078.
 Farrell, Ralph W., The cry, 634.
 Friendship's test, 1231.
 Gibbs, John R., Our eternal shepherd, 754.
 Gilbert, J. W., Kin, 480.
 Gratitude, 634.
 Harder, Mrs. W. E., Our earnest prayer, 88.
 Hughes, Hattie, Sabbath Day, 157; Easter praise, 300; Confidence, 393; Gratitude, 634; Lonesome, 754; Power of prayer, The 1077; Little things, 1168.
 Jenkins, Rees, Christ is risen, 300; The Saints' Herald, 393.
 Kelley, George A., There is a race to be run, 1231.
 Kin, 480.
 Kirtland, A tribute to, 1151.
 Little things, 1168.
 Lonesome, 754.
 Love, 300.
 Love and live, 1231.
 McArthur, Phyllis N., A prayer, 634.
 My monument, 1231.
 My supplication, 755.
 Near to my side, 755.
 Only sleeping, 634.
 Our earnest prayer, 88.
 Our eternal shepherds, 754.
 Pearson, Charlotte, A tribute to Kirtland, 1151.
 Power of prayer, The, 1077.
 Prayer, A, 634.
 Prayer of consecration, A, 156.
 Rejection, 1168.
 Resignation, 710.
 Reynolds, Cora M., Rejection, 1168; Friendship's test, 1231.
 Sabbath Day, 157.
 Saints' Herald, The, 393.
 Safety first, 1078.
 Smith, Elbert A., A timber for the temple, 334; Zion Builders, 480.
 Song of gratitude, A, 709.
 Stoddard, Pearl A., When shall we be like thee, 710; Near to my side, 755.
 Spurlock, C. J., Safety first, 1078.
 There is a race to be run, 1231.
 Thompson, Orval, Love and live, 1231.
 Timber for the temple, A, 334.
 Tribute to Kirtland, A, 1151.
 Vanderwood, J. E., A prayer of consecration, 156; Love, 300.
 When shall we be like thee, 710.
 When the heart starves, 1077.
 When life is done, 480.
 Williams, J. L., When life is done, 480; Resignation, 710.
 Zigler, Zelpha M., Only sleeping, 634.
 Zion Builders, 480.

THE FORUM

Aims of socialism, The, 1042.
 Anderson, George B., The Word of Wisdom, 1119.
 Bailey, J. W. A., 1188.
 Baldwin, D. R., Zion, the city of refuge 778; From competition to cooperation, 806.
 Cancer, Hot drinks and, 1118.
 Chase, A. M., The Children's Home; 14; The conflict of the ages, 105.
 Children's Home, The, 14.
 Conflict of the ages, The, 105.
 Cooperation, From competition to, 806.
 Davison, H. J., The eternal city, 657, 685; 710, 732, 755, Israel, the outcast, 1142.
 Dawson, W. N., Where are the lost tribes? Is the earth hollow, 371.

 Deam, W. H., "Rightly dividing the word of truth," 1115.
 Divine healing, 855.
 Equality, Some requirements for, 133.
 Eternal City, The, 657, 685, 710, 732, 755.
 Farrell, Ralph W., Try the spirits, 1165.
 Flory, Joseph, Some requirements for equality, 133.
 Former and latter rains, The, 827, 853, 872, 905, 950, 973, 998, 1024.
 Former and latter rains, More on, 1187.
 France, William, The ten lost tribes, 179.
 From competition to cooperation, 806.
 Healing, Divine, 855.
 Helping widows, 952.
 Hot drinks and cancer, 1118.
 Israel in the North, 1185.
 Israel led north, A remnant of, 1188.
 Israel, the outcast, 1142.
 Jones, Isaac L., The aims of socialism, 1042.
 Koehler, J. August, Social and economic aspects of the latter-day work, 896, 921, 945, 968, 994, 1020, 1040, 1066, 1090.
 Lambert, J. R., Hot drinks and cancer, 1118.
 Land question, The, 1088.
 Lost tribes? Is the earth hollow? Where are they, 371.
 McGuire, Benjamin R., Helping widows, 952.
 Moler, H. E., Our greatest need, 635.
 More on former and later rains, 1187.
 Mystification of simplicity, The, 135.
 North, Israel in the, 1185.
 Our greatest need, 635.
 Parsons, A. H., Word of Wisdom, 394.
 Perkins, D. E., The Saints shall be changed, 874.
 Prettyman, C. W., More on former and latter rains, 1187.
 Quinley, J. W., Divine healing, 855.
 Rannie, Edward, Weak spots in our reunions, 1065; The land question, 1088.
 Remnant of Israel led north, A, 1188.
 Requirements for equality, Some, 133.
 Reunions, Weak spots in our, 1065.
 "Rightly dividing the word of truth, 1115.
 Robinson, J. A., Why condemn the saxophone, 875.
 Saints shall be changed, The, 874.
 Savage, H. W., Stewardships, 230.
 Saxophone? Why condemn the, 875.
 Smith, John, Israel in the North, 1185.
 Social and economic aspects of the latter-day work, 896, 921, 945, 968, 994, 1020, 1040, 1066, 1090.
 Socialism, The aims of, 1042.
 Some requirements of equality, 1133.
 Sorensen, S. K., The ten lost tribes—where are they, 12, 36, 62, 88.
 Spirits, Try the, 1165.
 Stewardships, 230.
 Ten lost tribes, The, 179.
 Ten lost tribes, where are they, 12, 36, 62, 88.
 Try the spirits, 1165.
 Weak spots in our reunion, 1065.
 Where are the lost tribes? Is the earth hollow, 371.
 Why condemn the saxophone, 875.
 Williams, T. W., The former and latter rains, 827, 853, 872, 905, 950, 973, 998, 1024.
 Word of Wisdom, 394, 1119.
 Yates, Wilber F., The mystification of simplicity, 135.
 Zion, the city of refuge, 778.

SEMINAR

Aims of the church, The, 301.
 Carmichael, Max, The gathering and its relation to Zion, 180; The present status of the gathering, 206; Dangers of the gathering, 231; Vocational and industrial Zion, 272; The aims of the church, 301; The economic independence of the church, 347; Machinery for stewardship management, 372. Church, The aims of the, 301. Dangers of the gathering, 231. Economic independence of the church, The, 347. Gathering and its relation to Zion, The, 180. Gathering, Dangers of the, 231. Gathering, The present status of the, 206. James, William, on religion, 64. Machinery for stewardship management, 372. Present status of the gathering, The, 206. Sermon outlines, 564. Vocational and industrial Zion, 272. Wildermuth, J. E., Sermon outlines, 564. Zion, Vocational and industrial, 272.

OUR PUBLICATIONS

Autumn Leaves, 975.
Journal of History, 975.
Stepping Stones, The, 975.
Zion's Ensign, 975.

THE STAFF

About bulletins, 93.
Again, why the saxophone, 1094.
Brown, Mrs. Maude, The third branch orchestra, 566.
Choir Banquet, Saint Joseph, 1190.
Choir development in Far West Stake, 566.
Concerning our own musicians, 1190.
Congregational singing, 1026.
Council Bluffs, Iowa, institute, The, 350.
Cultivating appreciation for better music, 235.
Declares that jazz will not survive, 1027.
Decorum in church during the rendition of music, 351.
Department of Music, Important conference of the heads of the, 92.
Department of Music, The work and duties of district musical officers under the, 91.
Every child musical, declares music critic, 518.
Far West Stake holds a musical institute, The, 565.
Fine pipe organ at London, Ontario, 518.
Grapes, Myrtle, Praying in song, 234.
Guilford, Missouri, Orchestral and band work at, 565.
Hoxie, A. N. Some important reunion musical activities, 517.
Independence choir renders "The Messiah," 92.
Importance of music and music study, 1189.
Important conference of the heads of the Department of Music, 92.
Kapnick, Waldo W., Cultivating appreciation for better music, 235.
McCollum, Jeanette, Music and decorum, 831.
Michigan, Musical activities in, 1190.
Michigan, Musical meanderings through, 830.
Music and decorum, 831.
Music and music study, The importance of, 1189.
Musical activities in Michigan, 1190.
Musical activities in Southeastern Illinois District, 1027.
Musical institute at Joplin, Missouri, 516.
Musical institute of the tri-cities districts, The, 233.
Musical institute, The Far West Stake holds a, 565.
Musical meanderings through Michigan, 830.
Musicians, Concerning our own, 1190.
Nevada, Missouri, conference, The, 235.
Now for another season's work, 831.
Orchestral and band work at Guilford, Missouri, 565.

Ortleb, Esther, The spiritual value of song, 234.
Our own musicians and what they are doing, 1095.
Praying in song, 234.
Ross, William T., Orchestral and band work at Guilford, Missouri, 565.
Saint Joseph choir banquet, 1190.
Saxophone? Again, why the, 1094.
Saxophone? Why the, 757.
Scott, Mrs. Elma, Choir development in Far West Stake, 566.
Schrunk, Inez, The importance of music and music study, 1189.
Some important reunion musical activities, 517.
Spiritual value of song, The, 234.
Southeastern Illinois District, Musical activities in, 1027.
Third branch orchestra, The, 566.
Waller, Christiana, Some important reunion musical activities, 517.
What about "musical institutes," 851.
Why the saxophone, 757.
Winter's program, The, 1027.
Work and duties of district musical officers under the Department of Music, The, 91.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

About delinquent children, 493.
Addicott, Clara E., Am I my brother's keeper, 857.
Addresses, Those institute, 612.
Ahlstrom, Mrs. A., Woman as a "home" missionary, 782.
Alert branch president, An, 638.
Am I my brother's keeper, 857.
Announcing an assistant, 661.
Annual reports, 108.
And how was the reunion, 376.
Another view of the rural situation, 1121.
Appreciation, An, 108, 304.
Appreciative words, 209.
Armed of peace, The, 40.
As dew from heaven, 659.
Ban against powder big hit with mothers, 909.
Barber, Blanche, An appreciation, 304.
Barrett, Nellie, To cook meat, 782.
Beautify your home grounds, 303.
Beginners, To mothers of Sunday school, 1145.
Be pure in heart, 854.
Berve, Amos, A "snappy" comeback, 1147.
Body and its food, The, 262.
Book on dress, 614.
Books, 374.
"Books are friends," 375.
Books for children, 1146.
Brook, Goldie V., Notice to all Women's Department workers, 1218.
Brief survey of possible social service in our branch, 261.
Build as unto God, 468.
Bureau of miscellaneous study, The, 688.
Can you come, 373.
Carmichael, A. Max, To mothers of Sunday school beginners, 1145.
Challenge; A, what's the answer, 687.
Changes in general officers, 1043.
Child welfare, 398, 736, 1044.
Child welfare, Some spiritual aspects of, 612, 636.
Childhood, A plea for, 567.
Childhood, Lost idols of, 375.
Children's Bureau of Kansas City, Report of, 1001.
Children, Mother Goose is good for you, 1143.
Children, Supervision of the health of preschool, 1001.
Child welfare, 1044.
Children, Welfare of preschool, 735, 753.
Child-saving experiment, A, 928.
Christmas, The spirit of, 1217.
Citizenship division, Our, 715.
Citizenship, On, 1191.
Citizenship, Suggestions for studies in, 715.
Civics, For the students of, 661.
Clark, Sister A. M., Exercises to correct constipation, 108; Combining household duties with healthy physical exercises, 397.
Collection, The Women's Department historical, 1216.
College grads practicing race suicide, is charge, 808.

Color and other principles as applied to dress, 926.
Color in dress, 183.
Combating race suicide, 614.
Combining household duties with healthy physical exercises, 397.
Coming treat, A, 760.
Composer a colored woman, 305.
Condiments, A warning to users of, 783.
Congresswoman blames parents for immorality, 832.
Consolation for the cookless, 954.
Corner for rural women's problems, A, 1098.
Correction, A, 336.
Council Bluffs local, 468.
Cradle roll and the Sunday school, Our, 109.
Cradle roll demonstration, A, 158.
Cradle roll superintendent, New general, 157.
Cradle roll visitors, Just a little heart to heart talk with, 158.
Cradle roll visitors, Notice to, 158.
Cradle roll workers, Instructions to, 659.
Cramer, Hortense Sellon, A few words for the Women's Department, 716; The Women's Department in Denver, and the work in general, 903; Child welfare, 1044.
Crime, Eleven causes for, 858.
Culled from reports, 1195.
Currie, Blanche, and Blanche Salisbury, Council Bluffs local, 469.
Deal gently with children, 832.
Delinquent children, About, 493.
Denver, and the work in general, The Women's Department in, 908.
Des Moines scores a point, 1097.
Destiny of womanhood, Husband, home, and babies is, 809.
Director general's greeting, The, 492.
District organizers, To and about, 16.
Don't wait too long, 107.
Dress, 877, 908, 927, 953.
Dress and fashion, 831.
Dress, Color, and other principles of, 926.
Dress reform, Girls' plan, 928.
Eden, Mrs. L. F., A few views on parents' duties, 277.
Educational playlets, 639.
Eleven causes for crime, 858.
Ellis, Mrs. J. H., For both sides of the house, 736.
English sisters, From our, 717.
Entire physique suffers from high heels, 954.
Era of simplicity, 108.
Exercises to correct constipation, 108.
Exhibits at the May institute, 639.
Extracts from organizers' letters, 304.
Extravagance in high school, 1029.
Family singing, 761.
Farrar, Blanche R., "Books are friends," 375.
Fashions, On, 93.
Female relief society, 520.
Few views on parents' duties, A, 276.
Few words for the Women's Department, A, 716.
Field workers, Our, 303.
First library, The, 376.
Five-year experiment, A, 928.
Flapper Queen, 907.
Fly! Swat that, 427.
For both sides of the house, 736.
Foreign missions, two new field workers for, 1002.
For girls; attractive awards for effort, 760.
For the students of civics, 661.
Free booklets to home makers, 1028.
Friendly months, 1071.
From far away, 570.
From our English sisters, 717.
From the heart of a plain country woman, 1097, 1194.
From the watchtower, 261.
From their letters, 376, 715.
Garden of thy heart, The, 65.
Gardner, Pearl, History, 855.
Gentle hint, A, 1122.
Gift to the department, 542.
Girls' clothing conferences, 136.
Girl graduates, Simplicity for, 427.
Girls plan dress reform, 928.
Girls? What about our, 907.
Glimpses of local life, 262.

Glines, Dora, Psychology, 1122, 1146; Parents as teachers, 1170; Psychology, 1171, 1194, 1218, 1238.
Good things in store, 453.
Graduation, Outfits for, 427.
Greetings to the Women's Department workers' institute, 569.
Halley, Maude Campbell, Exhibits at the May institute, 639.
Hands, 977.
Happy New Year, 1237.
Harding, Minnie, A corner for rural women's problems, 1098.
Heard in passing, 543.
Health message to every woman, A, 274.
Healthy physical exercises, Combining household duties with, 397.
Helps for the students, 953.
Hendricks, Ruth, From far away, 570.
High mortality rates challenge national conscience, 569.
Historian's letters, Our, 1217.
Historical collection, The Women's Department, 1216.
History, 855.
Home and school, 780.
Home department work, 1237.
Home department workers, Instructions to, 38.
"Home department workers, 'tension'" 38.
Home grounds, Beautify your, 303.
Home makers, Free booklets to, 1028.
Household budget for the new year, 94.
Husband, home, and babies is destiny of womanhood, 809.
Infants thrive on maternal nursing, 661.
Institute, Exhibits at the May, 639.
Institute, Our May, 303.
Institute program, 396.
Institute, Women's Department, 494.
Instructions to cradle roll workers, 659.
Instruction to home department workers, 38.
Just a little friendly hint, 336.
Just a little heart-to-heart talk with our cradle roll visitors, 158.
Just letters, 1096, 1121, 1169.
Just to help us think, 1028.
Juvenile courts, Passing of the, 353.
Keairnes, Grace B., Woman's field of opportunity for service in the Sunday school, 781.
Kelley, Mrs. Ettella, Some modern methods of, 686.
Kind words, 40.
Kindergarten of God, The, 1003.
Kirkwood, Jennie, Child welfare, 398.
Kiss me, mamma, I can't go to sleep, 1145.
Kniffen, Leah B., Child welfare, 736.
Krahl, Mrs. D. J., Social purity, 354; Report of social purity division, 541.
Lack of dignity, in clothes, 94.
Ladies aid, The, 877.
Ladies' relief society, 304.
Leaders of girls, Open letter to local, 15.
Let me be remembered, 878.
Let's chat awhile, 426.
Lewis, William A., Some spiritual aspects of child welfare, 612, 636.
Little letter, A, 1044.
Local reporting, 467.
Lonely in the midst of many, 1043.
Looking backward, 540.
Losh, Miss Rosamond, Welfare of preschool children, 735, 753.
Lost idols of childhood, 375.
Mader, Bertha L., Textiles, how to know, buy, and use them, 93, 136, 183; Dress and fashion, 831; Dress, 877, 908, 927, 953.
Makers of history, 519.
Making maternity cheaper, 1002.
Mann, Laura E., R. N., A health message to every woman, 276; Notice to cradle roll visitors, 158.
Marys and Marthas, The, 876.
Maternity bill passed by Senate, 737.
May institute has become history, The, 519.

- May institute, Our, 303.
 McGuire, Benjamin R., Statement of Bishop McGuire on local money raising, 876.
 Message from the church Health Department, A, 1069.
 Message from the Sunday School Department, 570.
 Milligan, Barbara W., Women's Department activities, Deer Park reunion, July 2-18, 1921, 877.
 Miscellaneous study, The bureau of, 688.
 Modern girl, The, 907.
 Money raising, Statement of Bishop McGuire on local, 876.
 Mothercraft, 1193.
 Mothercraft film soon to be produced, 661.
 Mother Goose is good for your children, 1193.
 Mother's duty threefold, A, 759.
 Mothers of Sunday school beginners, To, 1145.
 Narcotics, 1028.
 National politics and the home, 1191.
 New course of study, A, 1121.
 New general cradle roll superintendent, 157.
 New material for organizers, 614.
 New series, A, 831.
 New York bill would make "going home to mother" criminal act, 263.
 Norton, Amy, From our English sisters, 717.
 Notes about women, 277.
 Notice to all Women's Department workers, 1218.
 Notice to cradle roll visitors, 158.
 November, 1147.
 November skies, 1122.
 Officers, Changes in general, 1043.
 Old-fashioned mother, 108.
 On citizenship, 1191.
 One moment, please, 714.
 One of our "100 per cent" babies, 777.
 One of time's changes, 454.
 On the warpath, 427.
 Open letter to local leaders of girls, 15.
 Opportunity, 1171.
 Organizers, New material for, 614.
 Organizers, Our, 207.
 "Other fellows" are doing. What the, 208.
 Our citizenship division, 715.
 Our cradle roll and the Sunday school, 1069.
 Our field workers, 303.
 Our historian's letter, 1217.
 Our May institute, 303.
 Our May program, 396.
 Our organizers, 207.
 Our rural sisters, 976.
 Our work at reunions, 614.
 Outfits for graduation, 427.
 Parents' and teachers' problems, 182, 211, 237, 262, 277, 305, 336, 355, 398, 427, 454, 469, 496, 518, 543, 570, 614, 640, 661, 689, 717, 737, 761, 783, 808, 832, 858, 878, 909, 928, 977, 1002, 1029, 1045, 1070, 1098.
 Parents as teachers, 1170.
 Parents' duties, A few views on, 276.
 Parents' opportunity, The, 1145.
 Parents' prayer, The, 1171.
 Parham, Maude Peak, Parents' and teachers' problems, 182, 211, 237, 262, 277, 305, 336, 355, 398, 427, 454, 469, 496, 518, 543, 570, 614, 640, 661, 689, 717, 737, 761, 783, 808, 832, 858, 878, 909, 928, 977, 1002, 1020, 1045, 1070, 1098.
 Passing of the juvenile courts, 353.
 Pictures of Women's Department leaders, 1028.
 Pigs and children, 263.
 Plea, A, 761.
 Plea for childhood, A, 567.
 Politics and the home, National, 1191.
 Poor little rich kids, 733.
 Practical child welfare work, 734.
 Protecting the home, 65.
 Psychology, 1122, 1146, 1171, 1194, 1218, 1238.
 Public speaking for women, 1122.
 Put a pin in the poison bottle, 108.
 Questions, 1171.
 Race suicide, is charge, College grads practicing, 808.
 Racial viewpoint, "A, 808.
 Reflections of Waimea, 1970.
 Relief, Some modern methods of, 686.
 Renewed offer, A, 1045.
 Report of Children's Bureau of Kansas City, 1001.
 Report of social purity division, 541.
 Reports, Culled from, 1195.
 Reserve, 1029.
 Results of idleness, 237.
 Reunion? And how was the, 876.
 Reunion hint, A, 639.
 Reunion, Our work at, 614.
 Reunion work, 659.
 Roberts, Anne, A plea for childhood, 567; One of our "100 per cent" babies, 977; Mothercraft, 1912; Rogers, Beatrice, Glimpses of local life, 262.
 Rural club women set example, 1070.
 Rural situation, Another view of the, 1121.
 Salisbury, Blanche, and Blanche Currie, Council Bluffs Local, 469.
 Sampson, Grace, Another view of the rural situation, 1121.
 Sampson, Nellie E., Home department work, 1238.
 Schofield, Pearl, Build as unto God, 468; A mother's duty threefold, 759.
 School, Home and, 780.
 Sears, Lucie H., The bureau of miscellaneous study, 688.
 Service in the Sunday school, Woman's field of opportunity for, 781.
 "Short-haired women," 908.
 Shumard, Mrs. Fern, Wherein lies the path of rectitude, 807.
 Siegfried, Madge Craig, Ladies' relief society, 304; Female relief society, 520; Our historian's letter, 1217.
 Simplicity for girl graduates, 427.
 Sister honored, A, 688.
 Smith, Mrs. Frederick M., The director general's greeting, 492.
 Snappy "come-back," A, 1147.
 Snow, Eliza R., 520.
 Social purity, 354.
 Some modern methods of relief, 686.
 Some old letters disappearing, 976.
 Some spiritual aspects of child welfare, 612, 636.
 Son's letter to his dead father, A, 1170.
 Special circular to pupils, 137.
 Special classes for married girls urged, 276.
 Speer, Ruby R., Home and school, 780.
 Spirit of Christmas, The, 1217.
 Starting to school, 928.
 State as super-parent, 358.
 Statement of Bishop McGuire on local money raising, 876.
 Stay at home an evening, 84.
 Steele, Mary, For girls; attractive awards for effort, 760.
 Study, A new course of, 1121.
 Study your child, 132.
 Suggestions for studies in citizenship, 715.
 Summary of attendance at institute, A, 639.
 Sunday School Department, Message from the, 570.
 Supervision of the health of preschool children, 1001.
 Swat that fly, 427.
 Textiles, how to know, buy, and use them, 93, 136, 133.
 Thank you, A, 463.
 Those institute addresses, 612.
 Thoughts, 784.
 Three months' hard reading, 375.
 To and about district organizers, 16.
 To go, or not to go—that is the question, 236.
 To mothers of Sunday school beginners, 1145.
 To our rural sisters, 1097.
 Twenty-one nurses make 40,000 calls on 5,000 patients, 276.
 Two new field workers for foreign missions, 1002.
 "Unto others," 807.
 Use a brush, 398.
 Walker, M., An appreciation, 108; Greetings to Women's Department workers institute, 569.
 Waller, Christiana, Reflections of Waimea, 1070.
 War and automobiles responsible for immorality, 236.
 Warning to users of condiments, A, 733.
 Warns of American morals, 1028.
 Wash day and poetry, 977.
 Watchman, what of the night, 495.
 Welfare of preschool children, 735, 758.
 Welfare work, Practical child, 734.
 Wells, Gomer R., Message from the Sunday School Department, 570.
 Western viewpoint, The Women's Department, A, 541.
 What about our girls, 907.
 What can we do about it, 493.
 What of the old-time chaperon, 236.
 What the mothers do, 1097.
 What the "other fellows" are doing, 208.
 What's the matter, 276.
 "When one member suffers—," 274.
 When to get there, 1045.
 Wherein lies the path to rectitude, 807.
 Whittemore, Flo Sterrett, From the heart of a plain country woman, 1097, 1194.
 Woman as a "home" missionary, 782.
 Woman's exercise, A, 397.
 Woman's field of opportunity for service in the Sunday school, 781.
 Woman's influence, A, 1097.
 Woman's new power, 39, 65, 107, 159, 209.
 Women as buyers, 355.
 Women's Department—a western viewpoint, 541.
 Women's Department activities, Deer Park reunion, July 2-18, 1921, 877.
 Women's Department historical collection, The, 1216.
 Women's Department in Denver, and the work in general, The, 908.
 Women's Department institute, 494.
 Women's Department workers, Notice to all, 1218.
 You are the spring, 469.
 Young, Dora, Woman's new power, 39, 65, 107, 159, 209; Suggestions for study in citizenship, 715; Just to help us think, 1028; National politics and the home, 1191.
 Your attention, please, 542.
 Youth, 907.
 Youth and the law, 353.
- ### HEALTH DEPARTMENT
- Adenoids in children, 734.
 Common fly, The, 520.
 Diphtheria, 734.
 Fifteen rules of health, The, 520.
 Hot drinks, 278.
 Important meetings, 954.
 Measles, 733.
 Scarlet fever, 1071.
 Smallpox, 1072.
 Typhoid fever, 733.
 When and how to tell the story of life, 278.
 Whooping cough, 1071.
- ### LETTERS
- Account of the death of Elder Rees Jenkins, 401.
 Adams, A. H., An Indian becomes probate judge, 456.
 Advertising in North Dakota, 278.
 Agricultural items, 214.
 Agricultural news items, 282.
 Agricultural notes, 310, 429, 475.
 Alldread, Mrs. Wesley, Northern Michigan reunion, 1081.
 Almond, Frank B., Letters from the Society Islands, 956.
 Almond, Mary, From the Island Mission, 764.
 Ames, Student organization at, 309.
 Ames students please note, 837.
 An appeal by and for the Indian, 1098.
 An appreciation of Charles Derry, 718.
 Ancient scenes visited, 496.
 Anderson, C. E., Gallands Grove conference, 619.
 Anderson, P. T., Missionary work in Denmark, 809.
 An example to the flock, 574.
 An Indian on the Book of Mormon, 1098.
 Anniversary, Wheeling Branch, 572.
 Annual titling report? Have you filed your, 140.
 Another debate pending, 1052.
 Another excellent reunion site secured, 619.
 Anspaugh, B. F., Third Flint, Michigan Branch, 214.
 Anticipating new Religio quarterlies, 938.
 A. O. Y. P. Z., The, 211.
 Appreciates his training, 959.
 Appreciated visit, An, 640.
 April 6 at Saint Leonard's, 405.
 Arber, Joseph, Regret at passing of, 664.
 Arber, Joseph, Tribute to, 663.
 Archambault, H. J., 477.
 Arriba a Natua, Greetings from Society Islands conference, 616.
 Arizona, 69.
 Arizona, Baptisms from tent work in, 739.
 Arkansas district reunion, 911.
 Armstrong, W. R., Farewell reception to Bishop May, 500.
 Arrived at Honolulu, 1029.
 Arrived safely at Isle of Pines, 910.
 Attack on the church in Des Moines, 42.
 Auto house in the West, With an, 785.
 Australia, A busy year's work in, 213.
 Australia, Making friends to the church in, 695.
 Australia, Street preaching in, 691.
 Australian missionary methods, 979.
 Australians to attend Graceland, 765.
 Bacon, A. R., More news from Philadelphia, 524.
 Baillie, James, God's law is just, 787.
 Bailey, John, Tribute to Elder, 1003.
 Baker-Adams debate, 403.
 Baker-Black debate, 1051, 1075.
 Baldwin, Alice H., Impressions of the work in England, 1046.
 Baldwin, Richard, blessed for foreign mission work, 766.
 Baldwin, Richard, Patriarch, arrives in England, 1005.
 Baptism in Palestine, A, 469.
 Baptisms in Holland, 185.
 Baptisms from tent work in Arizona, 739.
 Baptized after an angel visit, 621.
 Baptized six as result of a dream, 44.
 Barmore, Alma C., Northern California reunion, 883.
 Barney, Sarah, Prepare for musical work at reunions, 476.
 Bartley, Alfred, 71.
 Batchelder, Sarah E., 431.
 Bear, J. L., Good meetings in Saint Joseph, 1222.
 Bence, Charles A., Mission organized at Iowa City, 1148.
 Berve, Amos, Eastern Iowa District active, 44.
 Better times now, 499.
 Bevier, Zion builder services at, 1125.
 Bible now plain and simple, The, 1053.
 Bishop Fry has recovered, 523.
 Bishop, James E., 216; Debate at Leeds, England, 881; The public forum in England, 978.
 Bishop's business is on the increase," The, 68.
 Blackmore, John, Australians to attend Graceland, 765.
 Blessings received through prayer, 1075.
 Book of Mormon, An Indian on the, 1098.
 Book of Mormon, An Indian's reasons for belief in, 1219.
 Book of Mormon geography, 811.
 Booth at the Montana State Fair, A, 980.
 Footman-Lemmons debate, 1050.
 Footman, W. P., Another debate pending, 1052.
 Boston, Two-day meetings in, 403.
 Brackenbury, F. S., 788.
 Bradley, J. C., 21.
 Bradshaw, Earle R., Massachusetts ministerial conference, 523.
 Branch organized at Nauvoo, 379.
 Branches amalgamated in Detroit, 113.
 Britian, Labor troubles in, 615.
 British Isles, From the, 499.
 Bronson, Eli, A booth at Montana State fair, 980.

- Bronson, J. A., Baptized six as a result of a dream, 44.
- Brooklyn reports progress, 382.
- Brown, Mack, 46, 164, 1148.
- Brown, Robert T., Tax protest in Tahiti, 980.
- Budd, R. S., Misrepresentation in school corrected, 473.
- Buffalo Church, Dedication of, 1220.
- Building a character, 1173.
- Burr, A. E., Better times now, 499.
- Butts, Mrs. Edgar, Self-Graham debate, 786.
- Buschlen, George, A former church official comes to himself, 190, 284.
- Business by the golden rule, 1051.
- Busy year's work in Australia, A, 213.
- Cadow, Fred W., God helps those who help themselves, 880.
- Caffey, Susie A., 1053.
- California to Colorado, From, 643.
- Call from the Philippines, A, 472.
- Campaign news from Des Moines, 19.
- Canadian Parliament a Saint, First woman member of, 1198.
- Canadian protest against "jingoism," A, 811.
- Cancer, Healed of, 621.
- Carmichael, N. Ray, The student organization at Ames, 309.
- Carpenter, Mrs. S. P., A call from the Philippines, 472.
- Cedar Rapids grows, 1197.
- Central Michigan conference, 1076.
- Chandler, W. H., 21, 164.
- Character, Building a, 1173.
- Chase, Mrs. A. M., At work in Pennsylvania, 958.
- Chelline, H. A., Providence moves forward, 404.
- Cheney, Floy B., 885.
- Chippewa Indian chief baptized, 861.
- Christensen, A. H., Southern California conference, 280.
- Christensen, Mrs. A. H., Visiting the Indians in camp, 1074.
- Christensen, J. C., 116.
- Christenson, Blanche, Holden Stake conference, 718.
- Christmas offering, 1921, 1172.
- 141, 164, 188, 213, 238.
- Christmas offering, 1921, 1172.
- Christmas offering items, 186.
- Christmas offering, Total, 1920, 309.
- Church anniversary day in Philadelphia, 405.
- Church athletics in Des Moines, 617.
- Church dedication at Leichhardt, 402.
- Church instead of friends, Will give to, 1195.
- Church literature should be in every home, 140.
- Church work in Germany, 138.
- Civilization held as sadly lacking, 142.
- Clark, E. O., 284.
- Clark, James L., 644.
- Clark, C. F., 1222.
- Cochran, Edna, Young people's outing Mobile district, 981.
- Cochran, F. E., Norfolk, Nebraska, wants visitors, 833, 1238.
- Colaborer with God, A, 666.
- Colorado Springs, Colorado, 406.
- Comforting experience, A, 212.
- Confidence, 666.
- Consecration bears fruit, The spirit of, 691.
- Cool, Fred A., Pertle Springs reunion, 882.
- Cooper, Bert, 216; Ere Zion is redeemed, 642; God is everywhere, 761.
- Cooper, J. L., More misrepresentation, 765.
- Council Bluffs and vicinity, 405, 620, 934.
- Council Bluffs home-coming, 1047.
- Council Bluffs items, 113, 162, 282, 381, 475, 642, 666, 693, 765.
- Council Bluffs prepare for campaign, Zion Builders of, 429.
- Council Bluffs Zion Builders active, 501.
- Cousins, Charles, Impressions of President Frederick M. Smith, 1123.
- Cramer, Hortense Sellon, Business by the golden rule, 1051.
- Creed all truth, Our, 1196.
- Cross, Wave, Zion Builders of Council Bluffs prepare for campaign, 429.
- Crowley, M. J., Good report from Toronto, 213.
- Curtis-Arceneaux debate, 308.
- Curtis, J. F., The Curtis-Moore debate, 615.
- Curtis-Jones debate, 188.
- Curtis-Moore debate, The, 615, 784.
- Curry, John T., Kirtland services, 504.
- Dancing in colleges, 805.
- Daniel, G. Scott, 477.
- Davis, E. R., Arizona, 69; Baptisms from tent work in Arizona, 739.
- Davis, J. Arthur, 645.
- Davis, Margaret, Shall we have battleships or friendships, 1072.
- Davis, Mrs. B. G., Scriptural discourses in Honolulu, 617.
- Davison, H. J., Presentation in Northern California, 1076.
- Dawson, E. T., Faith in the church developments, 692.
- Dawson, J. E., A goodly report from Los Angeles, 859.
- Day's journey," "A, 786.
- Deam, W. H., When the Herald Office moved to Lamoni, 402.
- Debate at Flint, Michigan, 213, 281.
- Debate at Leeds, England, 881.
- Debate, Baker-Black, 1051, 1075.
- Debate, Bootman and Lemmons, 250.
- Debate, Curtis-Arceneaux, 308.
- Debate, Curtis-Jones, 188.
- Debate, Curtis-Moore, 615, 784.
- Debate pending, Another, 105.
- Debate, Self-Graham, 786.
- Dedicated, Holden Home, 1172.
- Dedication of Buffalo church, 1220.
- Dedication of church at Oakland, California, 1101.
- Denmark, Missionary work in, 809.
- Denver, Colorado, From, 521.
- Department of Statistics, Report of, 428.
- Depew, Elizabeth, 115.
- Derby, M. F., A request for prayers, 885.
- Derry, Charles, An expression of love to, 212, An appreciation of, 718.
- Des Moines Branch, 1005.
- Des Moines buying another building, 741.
- Des Moines, Campaign news from, 19.
- Des Moines, Church athletics in, 617.
- Des Moines Conference, 185.
- Des Moines meetings, Far-reaching effects in, 473.
- Des Moines, The attack on the church in, 42.
- Details concerning church damage at Manteno, 934.
- Detrick, J. L., 1175.
- Detroit conference, 1005.
- Detroit district conference, 380.
- Dickinson, Charles, Church dedication at Leichhardt, 402.
- Dobbins, Frank S., Massachusetts conference, 190; Two-day meetings in Boston, 403.
- Doing constructive work, 834.
- Dollar day? Why not a, 1220.
- Dorlandson, Mrs. L. M., 861.
- Dorsett, Edward, 45.
- Drake, W. H., 1175.
- Duluth grows rapidly, Work in, 617.
- Duluth, New branch at, 310.
- Du Rose, A. H., 308; Debate at Flint, Michigan, 213, 281; Curtis-Arceneaux Debate, 308.
- Dutton, Jasper O., Southern Wisconsin, 280, 640.
- Eastern and Central Oklahoma reunion, 958.
- Eastern Colorado conference, 285.
- Eastern Iowa conference, 618.
- Eastern Iowa District active, 44.
- Eastern Michigan, Worker's conference of, 763.
- Eastern Montana battling on, 522.
- "Ebenezer," the gospel car, 572.
- "Ebenezer," The peregrinations of, 825.
- Education, How one missionary feels about, 1149.
- Edwards, F. Henry, April 6 at Saint Leonard's, 405.
- Elliott, F. V., Letters from the Society Islands, 956.
- Ellis, Clyde F., Possible change of government in Tahiti, 1077.
- Ellis, Apostle Josiah, Sketch of the life of, 738.
- Emde, Ida, Arkansas district reunion, 911.
- Emde, Laura, 667.
- England, Getting into the work in, 237.
- England, Impressions of the work in, 1046.
- England, Patriarch Baldwin arrives in, 1005.
- England, Public forum in, 978.
- England, News letters from, 1052.
- England, The public forum in, 978.
- English students, Farewell address to, 163.
- Enlist in the German Mission cause, 282.
- "Ensamples to the flock," 96, 574.
- Ere Zion is redeemed, 642.
- Erwin, E. A., 524, 982.
- Etzenhouser, M. A., Utah-Idaho reunion well attended, 884, 1101.
- Etzenhouser, V. B., A fine thing in all the branches, 359.
- Europe, Good prospects for missionary work in, 373.
- European conditions, A summary of, 570.
- European situation, The, 134.
- Experiences in Quebec, 357.
- Expression of love to Charles Derry, An, 212.
- Faith healer in San Jose, 980.
- Faith in the church developments, 692.
- Farewell address to English students, 163.
- Farewell reception to Bishop May, 500.
- Farm opportunities in the stakes, 521.
- Far-reaching effects in Des Moines meetings, 473.
- Farthing, R. J., Toronto prepares for battle, 188.
- Far West, George M. Hinkle at, 545.
- Far West Stake, 112, 521, 931.
- Favors efforts to further Indian cause, 1222.
- Fifty years in the church, 929.
- Fike, Lyman W., Northeastern, Kansas conference, 238; Northeastern Kansas reunion, 812.
- Fine thing in all the branches, A, 359.
- First woman member of Canadian Parliament a Saint, 1198.
- Fleming, Andrew, 406.
- Flint, Michigan, Debate at, 213, 281.
- Florida, Lamanites of, 139.
- Floyd, Mrs. M. J., A reminiscence of stirring times at Jaffa, 812.
- Forder, Archibald, Account of the death of Elder Rees Jenkins, 401.
- Foreign mission work, Richard Baldwin blessed for, 767.
- Former church official comes to himself, A, 190.
- Forty-two baptisms at Moorhead, 1125.
- Foss, J. C., 788.
- Foster, J. H., News letter from England, 1052.
- Freeman, Mrs. C. B., 406; A testimony concerning the word of wisdom, 642.
- From California to Colorado, 643.
- From Denver Colorado, 521.
- From Onset reunion to Maine woods, 1073.
- From the British Isles, 499.
- From the Island mission, 764.
- Fry, Charles, 109; Missionaries write on route to England, 138; Getting into the work in England, 237; Bishop Fry has recovered, 523.
- Gallands Grove conference, 619.
- German Mission cause, Enlist in the, 282.
- German Saints, Visiting the, 140.
- Germany, Church officials in, 109.
- Germany, Church work in, 138.
- Germany, Good work in, 1150.
- Germany needs missionaries, 160.
- Getting acquainted with Jerusalem, 356.
- Getting into the work in England, 237.
- Gillen, James A., 109; From the British Isles, 499.
- Gillin, Mary E., 144, 646.
- Gleason, John V., 719.
- Glorious ingathering of souls, A, 399.
- God helps those who help themselves, 880.
- God is everywhere, 761.
- God's law is just, 787.
- Golden rule, Business by the, 1051.
- Good conference in New York, 620.
- Good meetings in Saint Joseph, 1222.
- Good prospects for missionary work in Europe, 378.
- Good report from Kirtland, 429.
- Good report from Toronto, 213.
- Good resolution, A, 959.
- Good results from a home mission, 1053.
- Good work in Germany, 1150.
- Goodly report from Los Angeles, A, 859.
- Gospel car, "Ebenezer," the, 572.
- Graceland, Australians to attend, 765.
- Graceland College, 910.
- Graceland college and a young missionary, 645.
- Graceland, National recognition for, 214.
- Graceland college notes, 955, 1030.
- Graceland, Opening of, 933.
- Graves, Mrs. J. A., 1101.
- Green, Kenneth H., and Gland R. Kuykendall, Detroit District conference, 380.
- Greetings from Society Islands conference, 616.
- Griffiths, Gomer T., Regret at passing of Joseph Arber, 664; Sketch of the life of Apostle Josiah Ellis, 738.
- Group work, A result of, 430.
- Gunsolley, J. F., "A day's journey," 786.
- Guthrie, W. A., 407.
- Hall, Abel, Tribute to Elder John Bailey, 1003.
- Hall, D. M., Ames students please note, 837.
- Hammel, F. E., Advertising in North Dakota, 278.
- Hanson, A. L., 812.
- Hanson, Ethel, Touring Society Islands as a nurse, 141.
- Harden, Jesse M., Northwestern Ohio, 68, 381, 620.
- Harder, Howard W., With the Religio, 761; The Independence picnic, 884; Anticipating new Religio quarterlies, 933.
- Harding, G. J., Light on the stewardship plan, 1172.
- Harpe, C. E., 523.
- Harrington, G. E., Successful institute work at Hamilton, 163.
- Hatch, Frank E., 935.
- Havana, A visit to, 979.
- Have you filed your annual tithing report, 140, 162.
- Hawkins, C. J., Faith healer in San Jose, 980.
- Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. C. W., Northern California valedictory, 1197.
- Haworth, Walter J., Australian missionary methods, 979.
- Haynes, Sister Frederick T., Richard Baldwin blessed for foreign mission work, 766.
- Healed of cancer, 621.
- Healing of God? Is all, 718.
- Hebron, A letter from, 616.
- Hedrick, Frank G., A good resolution, 959.
- Heide, John, 164, 1075.
- Hinkle, George M., at Far West, 545.
- Hiteman, Zion Builders attain success in, 428.
- Holden brings success, Organized effort at, 665.
- Holden Home for the aged dedicated, 1172.
- Holden Stake, 305.
- Holden Stake conference, 237, 718.
- Holland, Baptisms in, 185.
- Holloway, L. G., Result in Utah, 67; Williams and Bruce debate, 306; The situation in Utah, 957.
- Holt, Hiram L., 71; Is all healing of God, 718.
- Holy City, A trip around the, 377.
- Honolulu, Arrived at, 1029.
- Honolulu, Scriptural discourse in, 617.
- Hopkins, Roy V., A year of progress in Zion, 690.
- Horr, Ellen, 116, 1150.
- Horton, Abbie A., Favors effort to further Indian cause, 1222.
- How Lamoni received its name, 501.
- Howlett, Fred, 1221.
- How one missionary feels about education, 1149.
- Houghton, L., Northern Wisconsin, 618.
- Hoxie, Albert N., Philadelphia reports success, 379.

- Hudson, W., How Lamoni received its name, 501.
 Hull, E. B., 332.
 Hunker, E. Yewell, Appreciates his training, 959.
 Huntsman, Jarvis, Baker-Adams debate, 403.
 Hurd, Mrs. Dennis, 406.
 Impressions of President Frederick M. Smith, 1123.
 Impressions of the work in England, 1046.
 Independence picnic, The, 884.
 Indian, An appeal by and for the, 1098.
 Indian becomes probate judge, An, 456.
 Indian cause, Favors efforts to further, 1222.
 Indian feast, 142.
 Indians in camp, Visiting, 1074.
 Indian's reasons for belief in the Book of Mormon, An, 1219.
 Indian plea, A new note in the, 1143.
 Inspired Version, The, 812.
 Institute, Successful interdistrict, 548.
 In the wake of a Jerusalem riot, 1219.
 Investigator convinced, An, 279.
 Iowa City, Mission organized at, 1148.
 Irwin, C. E., Agricultural items, 214; Agricultural news items, 282; Agricultural notes, 310, 429, 475.
 Is all healing of God, 718.
 Island Mission, From the, 764.
 Isle of Pines, Arrived safely at, 910.
 Isle of Pines, Peculiar problems in, 232.
 Isolation often means, What, 1148.
 Italy, Viewing the masterpieces of, 544.
 Jackson, J. W., Baker-Black debate, 1075.
 Jaffa, A reminiscence of stirring times at, 812.
 Jenkins, Elder Rees, Account of the death of, 401.
 Jensen, A., Confidence, 666.
 Jensen, Mark, 983.
 Jericho, A journey to, 455.
 Jerusalem, 470.
 Jerusalem, Getting acquainted with, 356.
 Jerusalem, President Smith in, 400.
 Jerusalem riot, In the wake of a, 1219.
 "Jingoism," A Canadian protest against, 811.
 Johnson, Albert E., 165.
 Johnson, C. Oscar, Missionary work in Sweden, 163.
 Johnson, Mrs. Minta, 1005.
 Jones, Thomas, 644.
 Joseph Smith, Jr., The true successor to, 879.
 Journey to Jericho, A, 455.
 Karlstrom, Albert V., Missionary Christensen leaves islands, 43; Letters from the Society Islands, 956.
 Keith, Mrs. Mertie B., 216, 666.
 Kelley, A. W., A letter to a spiritualist, 641, 740; A veteran who believes in prayer, 1052.
 Kirtland, Good report from, 429.
 Kirtland has a 'Revive-all,' 502.
 Kirtland services, 504.
 Klaus, Peter F., 693.
 Knight, Thomas R., 788.
 Knisley, Alvin, With an auto house in the west, 785.
 Koehler, J. A., Farm opportunities in the stakes, 521.
 Konstantin, Anthony, Brooklyn reports progress, 382.
 Krahl, Elder D. J., Organized effort at Holden brings success, 665.
 Kuykendall, Glaud R., A missionary's message to his near relatives, 19.
 Kuykendall, Glaud R., and Kenneth H. Green, Detroit District conference, 380.
 Labor troubles in Britain, 615.
 Lamb, C. W., Lamanites of Florida, 139.
 Lamoni Branch news, 1100.
 Lamoni received its name, How, 501.
 Lamoni Stake activities, 933.
 Lamoni Stake, 1049.
 Lamoni Stake Bishopric, Surplus property, 67; The responsibility of a stewardship, 473; Stewardships-giving, 546.
 Lamoni Stake news, 955, 1150, 1196.
 Lamoni Stake news and college notes, 1003.
 Lamoni Stake reunion, 333.
 Lamoni, When the Herald Office moved to, 402.
 Lamanites of Florida, 139.
 Lancaster, Wisconsin, Rally day at, 741.
 Landes, W. J., Good conference in New York, 620.
 Lane, Joseph W., Zion builders of Pisgah, 497.
 Lap two, 17.
 Larche, E. C., Baptized after an angel visit, 621.
 Layton, J. W., Many visit Nauvoo, 96.
 Law of the church, Why we do not keep the, 66.
 L. D. S. Sales association, The, 45.
 Lea, Leonard J., Lamoni Stake activities, 933; Lamoni Stake news, 955; Lamoni Stake news and college notes, 1003; Grace-land College notes, 1030; Lamoni Stake, 1049; Lamoni Branch news, 1100; Lamoni Stake news, 1150, 1196.
 Lebanon as a fruitful field, 1076.
 Leeds, England, Debate at, 881.
 Leeka, Jay, Northeastern Nebraska conference, 380.
 Leichhardt, Church dedication at, 402.
 Leslie, Roy C., A Canadian protest against "Jingoism," 811.
 Letter from Hebron, A, 616.
 Letters from the Society Islands, 956.
 Letter to a Spiritualist, A, 641.
 Lewis, David, Good results from a home mission, 1053.
 Lewis, David T., 1052; Blessings received through prayer, 1075.
 Lewis, J. D., Good reports from Kirtland, 429.
 Light on the stewardship plan, 1172.
 Lakes the Herald, This brother, 309.
 Loevy, May C., Pastoral work still needed, 278.
 Logan, Mrs. Helen Smith, Why we do not keep the law of the church, 66.
 Los Angeles, A goodly report from, 859.
 Lost tribes? Where are the, 522.
 Loving, A. L., Mission work among the Maoris, 498; New Zealand needs more workers, 693.
 McConley, Myron, Arrived at Honolulu, 1029.
 McDonald, C. E., Successful inter-district institute, 548.
 McDowell, W. A., Rally Day at Lancaster, Wisconsin, 741.
 McElwain, Warren, North Dakota, 521.
 Macgregor, Daniel, That attack on the church in Des Moines, 42; There must be another "D. McGregor," 45; A glorious ingathering of souls, 399; Book of Mormon geography, 311; Forty-two baptisms at Moorhead, 1125; First woman member of Canadian Parliament a Saint, 1198.
 McGuire, Benjamin R., "The Bishop's business is on the increase," 68; 1920 Christmas offering, 69; "Ensamples to the flock," 96; 1920 Christmas offering, 96; Have you filed your annual tithing report, 140; 1920 Christmas offering, 141; Have you filed your annual tithing report, 162; 1920 Christmas offering, 164; The spirit of giving, 186; 1920 Christmas offering, 188; 213, 238; Total, 1920 Christmas offering, 309; An ensample to the flock, 574; A collaborator with God, 666; "Then am I bound," 980; 1921 Christmas offering, 1172.
 McKenzie, Mrs. A., Church literature should be in every home, 140; The inspired version, 812.
 McLaughlin, R., Young people's day in Sydney, 787.
 McLean, Olive, 766.
 Madden, Mrs. J. N., Southwestern Kansas reunion, 911.
 Madison, William, An appeal by and for the Indian, 1098; A new note in the Indian plea, 1148.
 Magargee, Birdie, 21; Branches amalgamated in Detroit, 113.
 Mair, Mary, Northern Wisconsin conference, 1100.
 Making friends to the church in Australia, 693.
 Manayka, Mrs. Agnes Rexroad, Testimony of healing, 20.
 Mannering, W. H., Southwestern Texas reunion, 836.
 Manteno, Details concerning church damages at, 934.
 Manteno, The mob spirit at, 1099.
 Many visit Nauvoo, 96.
 Maoris, Mission work among the, 498.
 Massachusetts conference, 190.
 Massachusetts ministerial conference, 523.
 May, Bishop, Farewell reception to, 500.
 Maynard, B. L., 983.
 Means, We must live within our, 1220.
 Meehan, Fannie I. Morrison, Healed of cancer, 621.
 Methner, William, sr., A young people's reunion, 1050.
 Mills, Thomas, 982.
 Miller, E. Edward, From Onset reunion to Maine woods, 1073.
 Minnesota reunion, 665.
 Mintun, J. F., 284.
 Misrepresentation in school corrected, 473.
 Misrepresentation, More, 765.
 Mission organized at Iowa City, 1148.
 Mission work among the Maoris, 498.
 Missionaries write enroute to England, 188.
 Missionary Christensen leaves islands, 43.
 Missionary, Graceland college and a young, 645.
 Missionary letter from Washington, 111.
 Missionary party depart for England, 109.
 Missionary work in Denmark, 309.
 Missionary work in Europe, Good prospects for, 378.
 Missionary work in Sweden, 163.
 Missionary's message to his near relatives, A, 19.
 Mob spirit at Manteno, The, 1099.
 Mobile District, Young people's outing, 981.
 Moler, H. E., The work in Indiana, 44; Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana reunion, 836.
 Moler, Ticy, Holden Home for aged dedicated, 1172.
 Montana State fair, A booth at, 930.
 Montrose acquires the spirit, 476.
 Moody, D. C., Minnesota reunion, 665.
 Moorhead, Forty-two baptisms at, 1125.
 More misrepresentation, 765.
 More news from Philadelphia, 524.
 More statistics, 502.
 Morgan, C. W., 788.
 Morrison, J. A., This brother likes the Herald, 309.
 Motter, Harold, D., Dedication of church at Oakland, California, 1101.
 Muir, J. N., 70, 645.
 Munro, C. L., 141.
 Murray, William, The L. D. S. Sales Association, 45.
 Musical work at reunion, Prepare for, 476.
 Naples and Vesuvius, A visit to, 545.
 National recognition for Graceland, 214.
 Nauvoo, Branch organized at, 379.
 Nauvoo conference, 139.
 Nauvoo district conference, 1051.
 Nauvoo district, Services in, 789.
 Nauvoo, Many visit, 96.
 Nauvoo, Reminiscences of, 476.
 Nauvoo reunion, The, 1004.
 Near east disorders spread, 662.
 New branch at Duluth, 310.
 New impetus to the work in Quebec, A, 1048.
 New note in the Indian plea, A, 1148.
 New type of services successful, A, 500.
 New Zealand mission, 762.
 New Zealand needs more workers, 693.
 New Zealand, The work in, 859.
 News letter from England, -1052.
 Newton, Thomas, Some old-time opposition, 741.
 Nichols, Mrs. Clara E., Central Michigan conference, 1076.
 Nichols, Mrs. E. M., 549.
 Norfolk, Nebraska, wants visitors, 883.
 North Dakota, 521.
 North Dakota, Advertising in, 278.
 Northeastern Illinois reunion, 620.
 Northeastern Kansas conference, 238.
 Northeastern Kansas reunion, 812.
 Northeastern Missouri, 665.
 Northeastern Nebraska conference, 380, 981.
 Northern California conference, 380.
 Northern California presentation in, 1076.
 Northern California reunion, 833.
 Northern California valedictory, 1197.
 Northern Michigan reunion, 1031.
 Northern Wisconsin conference, 1100.
 Northern Wisconsin, 618.
 Northrup, Joseph A., Chippewa Indian chief baptized, 861; The Bible now plain and simple, 1053; An Indian on the Book of Mormon, 1098; An Indian's reasons for belief in the Book of Mormon, 1219.
 Northwestern Ohio, 63.
 Northwestern Ohio District, 381, 620.
 Oakland, California, Dedication of church at, 1101.
 Oklahoma reunion, Eastern and Central, 958.
 Omaha, Nebraska, 112.
 Onset reunion to Maine woods, From, 1073.
 Oppelt, O. L., A new type of service successful, 500.
 Opening of Graceland, 933.
 Opposition, Some old-time, 741.
 Orday, B. F., Reminiscences of Nauvoo, 476.
 Organized effort at Holden brings success, 665.
 Orton, Maud, 69.
 "Owen creed all truth," 1196.
 Our Sound, Progress at, 404.
 Palestine, A baptism in, 469.
 Palestine, The races clash in, 571.
 Palestine, Trouble brewing in, 212.
 Parker, T. H., 548.
 Passman, Harry, Trouble brewing in Palestine, 212; The races clash in Palestine, 571; An appreciated visit, 640; Near east disorders spread, 662; In the wake of a Jerusalem riot, 1219.
 Pastoral work still needed, 278.
 Patriarch Baldwin arrives in England, 1005.
 Patterson, Elmer K., Cedar Rapids grows, 1198.
 Patterson, William, Making friends to the church in Australia, 693.
 Peculiar problems in Isle of Pines, 232.
 Peisker, Herman, A busy year's work in Australia, 213; Street preaching in Australia, 691.
 Pement, Philemon, "Ebenezer," the gospel car, 572; The peregrinations of "Ebenezer," 835; A new impetus to the work in Quebec, 1048.
 Pender, F. B., Arrived safely at Isle of Pines, 910.
 Pennsylvania, At work in, 958.
 Peregrinations of "Ebenezer," The, 835.
 Pertle Springs reunion, 882.
 Philadelphia, Church anniversary day in, 405.
 Philadelphia, More news from, 524.
 Philadelphia reports success, 379.
 Philippines, A call from the, 472.
 Pierce, Viola M., 550.
 Pisgah, Zion Builders of, 497.
 Pitt, Frederick G., Fifty years in the church, 929; Will give to church instead of friends, 1195.
 Pontiac flourishing, 281.
 Portland reunion, 860.
 Possible change of government in Tahiti, 1077.
 Prepare for musical work at reunions, 476.
 Presentation in Northern California, 1076.
 President Smith in Jerusalem, 400.
 Pritchard, Ivan N., 113.
 Progress at Owen Sound, 404.
 Progress in Zion, A year of, 690.
 Providence moves forward, 404.

- Public forum in England, The, 978.
- Quebec, Experiences in, 357.
- Quebec, A new impetus to the work in, 1048.
- Quebec, The work in, 882.
- Rabe, John F., An investigator convinced, 279; Enlist in the German mission cause, 282; Where are the lost tribes, 522.
- Races clash in Palestine, The, 571.
- Rally day at Lancaster, Wisconsin, 741.
- Rannie, Edward, 283.
- Rannie, Edward, Young people more interested, 331.
- Regret at passing of Joseph Arber, 664.
- Rejoice and be glad, 1221.
- Religio quarterlies, Anticipating new, 933.
- Religio, With the, 761.
- Reminiscences of Nauvoo, 476.
- Reminiscences of stirring times at Jaffa, A, 812.
- Report of Department of Statistics, 428.
- Responsibilities of a stewardship, The, 473.
- Result of group work, A, 430.
- Results in Utah, 67.
- Reunion site secured, Another, 619.
- Revival in Independence, 96.
- "Revive-all" meetings at Webb City, Missouri, 740.
- Reward of persistent labor, The, 1075.
- Rich, Calvin H., Colorado Springs, Colorado, 406.
- Roberts, Roy L., Lebanon as a fruitful field, 1076.
- Robinson, A. N., The work in New Zealand, 859.
- Roble, G. W., Good conference in New York, 620.
- Rogers, Earl D., Details concerning church damages at Manteno, 934.
- Rohlig, Molly, 885.
- Roos, Mrs. Julia, A letter from Hebron, 616.
- Rumble, Mrs. Clayton, 959.
- Rumsey, Ward P., 407.
- Runnels reunion, The, 860.
- Rushton, John W., Woeful lack of reverence prevailing, 165; Tribute to Joseph Arber, 663.
- Russell, F. A., Report of Department of Statistics, 428; More statistics, 502.
- Russell, R. C., Experiences in Quebec, 357.
- Saint Joseph, Good meetings in, 1222.
- Saint Leonard's, April 6 at, 405.
- Saint Louis items, 70.
- Salyards, R. S., Far West Stake, 931.
- Sandage, Mrs. Lizzie Boch, 549.
- Sanitarium, Thanksgiving at the, 1149.
- San Jose, Faith healer in, 930.
- Savage, H. W., New Zealand mission, 762.
- Savidge, A. T., Farewell address to English students, 163.
- Sawley, F. L., 1053.
- Saxe, Everett E., Northern California conference, 330.
- School-teacher in Toronto, A, 525.
- Scott, S. W. L., Holden stake, 305.
- Scriptural discourses in Honolulu, 617.
- Self-Graham debate, 786.
- Selfishness prevents Zionie conditions, 692.
- Sellers, G. O., 644.
- Services in Nauvoo district, 789.
- Shall we have battleships or friendships, 1072.
- Sheffer, William H., 285.
- Sheffield reunion, 1047.
- Shepard, Julia C., 933.
- Shirk, Oliver D., 114.
- Shultz, Vincent E., 283.
- Simmons, Jesse M., Southern California reunion, 834.
- Simmons, S. W., Baker-Black debate, 1051.
- Sioux City, Iowa, 113.
- Situation in Utah, The, 957.
- Sketch of the life of Apostle Josiah Ells, 738.
- Slover, Elizabeth, Eastern and Central Oklahoma reunion, 953.
- Slover, W. A., 524.
- Smith, A. W., Christmas offering items, 186; Valedictory note from, 308.
- Smith, Charles, 192.
- Smith, Charles J., The Nauvoo reunion, 1004.
- Smith, Elbert A., Council Bluffs home-coming, 1047.
- Smith, Floyd G., 144.
- Smith, Frederick M., Church officials in Germany, 109; Visiting the German Saints, 140; Baptisms in Holland, 185; President Smith reaches Jerusalem, 314; Getting acquainted with Jerusalem, 356; A trip around the Holy City, 377; President Smith in Jerusalem, 400; A journey to Jericho, 455; A baptism in Palestine, 469; Ancient scenes visited, 496; Makes a trip to Ain Fara, 497; Viewing the masterpieces of Italy, 544.
- Smith, Harry, 644.
- Smith, Impressions of President Frederick M., 1123.
- Smith, Samuel Stephen, Missionary letter from Washington, 111; Holloway-Williams and Bruce debate, 306.
- Society Islands as a nurse, Touring, 141.
- Society Islands conference, Greetings from, 616.
- Society Islands, Letters from the, 956.
- Some good publicity in Ohio, 44.
- Some old-time opposition, 741.
- Southern California conference, 280.
- Southern California reunion, 834.
- Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana reunion, 836.
- Southern Wisconsin, 280, 640.
- Southern Wisconsin conference, 1222.
- Southwestern Kansas reunion, 911.
- Southwestern Texas reunion, 836.
- Spargo, James, Building a character, 1173.
- Sparling, William, 214, New branch at Duluth, 310.
- Spirit of consecration bears fruit, The, 691.
- Spirit of giving, The, 186.
- Spiritualist, A letter to, a, 641.
- Spurlock, C. J., Doing constructive work, 834.
- Stakes, Farm opportunities in the, 521.
- Stark, Mrs. Robert, West Duluth, Minnesota, 498; Work in Duluth grows rapidly, 617.
- Statistics, More, 502.
- Statistics, Report of Department of, 428.
- Stewardships—giving, 546.
- Stewardship plan, Light on the, 1172.
- Stewardship, The responsibilities of a, 473.
- Stone, A. E., Temple activities increase, 571.
- Stover, George W., Portland reunion, 860.
- Street preaching in Australia, 691.
- Student organization at Ames, The, 309.
- Successful campaign at Boyne City, 381.
- Successful interdistrict institute, 548.
- Successful institute work at Hamilton, 163.
- Summary of European conditions, A, 570.
- Surplus property, 67.
- Sweden, Missionary work in, 163.
- Switzerland Mission, The, 110.
- Sydney, Young people's day in, 787.
- Tahiti, Possible change of government in, 1077.
- Tahiti, Tax protest in, 930.
- Tapu a Moana, Greetings from Society Islands conference, 616.
- Tarulari a Terihohora, Greetings from Society Islands conference, 616.
- Tary, O. J., Wheeling Branch anniversary, 572.
- Taylor, A. M., 21.
- Taylor, John, Sheffield reunion, 1047.
- Tax protest in Tahiti, 930.
- Temple activities increase, 571.
- Testimony concerning the word of wisdom, A, 642.
- Testimony of healing, 20.
- Thanksgiving at the Sanitarium, 1149.
- "Then am I bound," 930.
- There must be another "D. McGregor," 45.
- Third Flint, Michigan, Branch, 214.
- This brother likes the Herald, 309.
- Thomas, William H., Branch organized at Nauvoo, 379.
- Thompson, Pearl M., Successful campaign at Boyne City, 381.
- Thompson, O. L., 1222.
- Thorburn, G. W., Bootman-Lemmons debate, 1050.
- Times urge the gathering, The, 69.
- Timms, W. E., Farewell address to English students, 163.
- Tithing report? Have you filed your annual, 140, 162.
- Tordoff, Wilfred, A visit to Havana, 979; Peculiar problems in Isle of Pines, 282.
- Toronto, A school-teacher in, 525.
- Toronto, Good report from, 213.
- Toronto prepares for battle, 188.
- Touring Society Islands as a nurse, 141.
- Tribute to Elder John Bailey, 1003.
- Tribute to Joseph Arber, 663.
- Trip around the Holy City, A, 377.
- Trouble brewing in Palestine, 212.
- True successor to Joseph Smith, Jr., The, 879.
- Two-day meetings in Boston, 403.
- Utah conference, 1101.
- Utah-Idaho reunion well attended, 884.
- Utah, The situation in, 957.
- Valedictory note from A. W. Smith, 308.
- Vanderwood, J. E., 144; What are we doing now, 430, 836, 1054, 192, 1223.
- Van Eaton, C. S., 192.
- Van Someren, Mrs. P. C., 1126.
- Veteran who believes in prayer, A, 1052.
- Viewing the devastation of war, 41.
- Viewing the masterpieces of Italy, 544.
- Visiting the German Saints, 140.
- Visiting the Indians in camp, 1074.
- Visiting the scattered members on foot, 931.
- Visit to Havana, A, 979.
- Visit to Naples and Vesuvius, A, 545.
- Voltz, Emma, Worker's conference of Eastern Michigan, 763.
- Walling, W. H., The true successor to Joseph Smith, Jr., 379.
- Ward, Alice, 19.
- Warr, A. E., 165; A result of group work, 430; Far-reaching effects in Des Moines meetings, 473; Church athletics in Des Moines, 617; The Runnells reunions, 860; Des Moines branch, 1005.
- Washington, Missionary letter from, 111.
- Weaver, O. L., The work in Quebec, 882.
- Weaver, Richard D., Far West Stake, 112.
- Weaver, Mrs. U. B., 1174.
- Webb City, Missouri, "Revive-all" meetings at, 740.
- Webbe, E. A., Some good publicity in Ohio, 44; Kirtland has a "Revive-all," 502.
- Weldon, Roy, Rejoice and be glad, 1221.
- Wells, G. R., The A. O. Y. P. Z., 211.
- We must live within our means, 1220.
- West Duluth, Minnesota, 498.
- What are we doing now, 430.
- What isolation often means, 1148.
- Wheeling Branch anniversary, 572.
- When the Herald office moved to Lamoni, 402.
- Where are the lost tribes, 522.
- Whipple, Thomas G., The times urge the gathering, 69.
- Whitehead, Ellis A., 311.
- Why not a dollar day, 1220.
- Why we do not keep the law of the church, 66.
- Wight, E. E., Reward of persistent labor, The, 1075.
- Wilburton, Oklahoma, church dedicated, 1221.
- Wilcox, R. J., Progress at Owen Sound, 404.
- Wildes, R. J., Successful interdistrict institute, 548.
- Will give to church instead of to friends, 1195.
- Williams, D. J., Services in Nauvoo district, 789.
- Williams, Edward C., A school-teacher in Toronto, 525.
- Williams, J. L., 549; Northeastern Missouri, 665, 1053; Zion Builder services at Bevier, 1125.
- Williams, T. W., Lap two, 17; Viewing the devastation of war, 41; The Switzerland Mission, 110; Church work in Germany, 138; Germany needs missionaries, 160; The European situation, 184; Good prospects for missionary work in, 378; Jerusalem, 470; A visit to Naples and Vesuvius, 545; A summary of European conditions, 570; Labor troubles in Britain, 615; Good work in Germany, 1150.
- Wilcox, Earl, Eastern Montana battling on, 522.
- Wilcox, R. J., Progress at Owen Sound, 404.
- Wilson, Mrs. Alice, Zion Builders attain success in Hiteman, 428, 787.
- Winchester, John H., sr., 1150.
- With an auto house in the West, 785.
- With the Religio, 761.
- Wixom, G. H., From California to Colorado, 643.
- Woeful lack of reverence prevailing, 165.
- Wood, Samuel, Our creed all truth, 1196.
- Word of Wisdom, A testimony concerning the, 642.
- Work in Duluth grows rapidly, 617.
- Work in Indiana, The, 44.
- Work in Pennsylvania, At, 958.
- Work in Quebec, The, 882.
- Work in New Zealand, The, 859.
- Worker's conference of Eastern Michigan, 763.
- Yates, D. Amos, The spirit of consecration bears fruit, 691.
- Year of progress in Zion, A, 690.
- Young, Chester, Visiting the scattered members on foot, 931.
- Young people more interested, 331.
- Young people's day in Sydney, 787.
- Young people's outing, Mobile district, 931.
- Young people's reunion, A, 1050.
- Zion, A year of progress in, 690.
- Zion Builders active, Council Bluffs, 501.
- Zion Builders attain success in Hiteman, 428.
- Zion Builders of Council Bluffs prepare for campaign, 429.
- Zion Builders of Pisgah, 497.
- Zion Builder services at Bevier, 1125.
- Zion Builder services a success, 406.
- Zionie conditions, Selfishness prevents, 692.
- Zion is redeemed, Ere, 642.

BOOK REVIEWS

- American Red Cross Work Among French People, 237.
- Conquest, 766.
- Passing Legions, The, 116.
- Roberts, Roy S., The social problem, 667.
- Taft papers on the League of Nations, 116.
- The social problem, 667.
- The trust, 846.
- With the doughboy in France, 116.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Minutes

- Alabama, 575.
- Alberta, 863.
- Arkansas, 504.
- Central Nebraska, 504, 1056.
- Central Texas, 288.
- Clay Cross, England, 504.
- Clinton, 288, 648, 1056.
- Eastern Iowa, 1128.
- Eastern Maine, 1104.
- Eastern Michigan, 1056.
- Eastern Oklahoma, 287, 837.
- Fremont, 288, 1224.
- Gallands Grove, 191, 695, 1032.
- Idaho, 1056.
- Kewanee, 791, 1055.
- Kirtland, 288.
- Little Sioux, 792, 1104.
- London, England, 23, 648, 984.

Michigan, Eastern, 1056.
 Mobile, 72, 360, 984.
 North Dakota, 118, 960.
 Northern California, 237.
 Northern Saskatchewan, 792.
 Owen Sound, 362.
 Pittsburgh, 432.
 Pottawattamie, 191.
 Seattle and British Columbia, 287, 387.
 Sheffield, 166.
 Southern Missouri, 984.
 Southern Nebraska, 191.
 Southern Ohio, 504, 1128.
 Southern Saskatchewan, 768, 792.
 Spokane, 47, 695.
 Wales, 1056.
 West Virginia, 960.
 Western Colorado, 191, 760.
 Western Maine, 648, 934, 1176.

Convention Minutes

Alabama, 575.
 Chatham, 215, 1056.
 Fremont, 648.
 Gallands Grove, 191.
 Little Sioux, 288.
 Northeastern Illinois, 72.
 Pittsburgh, 432.

Pastoral Notices

Burt, E. N., 1224.
 Chrestensen, J. C., 408.
 Hawkins, C. W., 670.
 Farrell, Ralph W., 1199.
 Lane, Joseph W., 286.
 Martin, A. C., 1175.
 May, Roderick, 118.
 Moler, H. E., 46.
 Newton, Thomas, 767.
 Salyards, R. S., 669.
 Simmons, S. M., 1054.
 Vanderwood, J. E., 623.
 Yates, James E., 383.

General Miscellany

Applications for clergy certificates, 71.
 Appointments, 1008.
 Appointments, Changes of, 95.
 Appointments and transfers, 593, 742.
 Appointment of district chorister, 1079, 1224.
 Appointment of district president, 239, 408, 719, 742.
 Appointment of Sunday school superintendent, 862.
 Bishopric, The, 71, 95, 117, 166, 286, 503, 622, 742, 816.
 Book of Mormon Lectures free, 143.
 Books found, 360.
 Book wanted, 912.
 Boy Scout contest a success, 551.
 Call to chefs of the church, 862.
 Candidate for Indian Commissioner, 239.
 Chefs of the church, Call to, 862.
 Christmas offering, 1920, 46, 117.
 Clergy rates obtainable in Missouri, 383.
 Conference Minutes free, 1920, 360.
 Consecrated help wanted, 886.
 Correspondence courses, 47.
 Department of music, 95, 312, 432, 478, 503, 646, 1128, 1152, 1176.
 Department of Statistics, 22, 1175.
 Deputy recorder for British Isles, 22.
 Doctrine and Covenants wanted, 312.
 Extension Department, Graceland College, 1055, 1080, 1104.
 Good progress on new quarters, 287.

Graphic Arts Bureau members and those interested in amateur photography, To, 960; More lantern slides needed, 1079.
 Have you filed your annual tithing report, 117.
 Have you forgotten, 1175.
 Hills, L. E., 1199.
 Interdistrict institute at Des Moines, 408.
 Laboratory technician wanted, 936.
 Lantern slides for church and Religio use, 936.
 Lantern slides needed, More, 1079.
 Lamoni fiftieth anniversary service, 1054.
 L. D. S. Study classes at Ames, 286.
 London district presidency, 118.
 McDowell, F. M., Two valuable courses, 1128.
 McKim, Arthur E., Young people's gospel campaign services, 984.
 Missionary appointments by joint council, 1054.
 Missionary supervisors, 1032.
 Move toward consolidated reunion, 316.
 New bishop's counselor in Detroit, 312.
 New edition of a Marvelous Work and a Wonder, 264.
 Notice, 1199.
 Notice of appointment, 71, 95, 503, 527, 550, 622, 912, 1079, 1152, 1199.
 Notice of expulsion, 742.
 Notice of release, 239, 503.
 Notice of resignation from the Quorum of Twelve, 1008.
 Notice of silence, 264.
 Notice of transfer, 117, 646, 694.

Orchestration of hymns, The, 260.
 Ordination affecting British Mission, 239.
 Pharmacist wanted, 575.
 Power of speech, The, 1104.
 Players wanted for Auditorium Orchestra, 1104.
 Presidency, 71, 95, 117, 118, 239, 312, 336, 408, 503, 527, 550, 598, 622, 646, 694, 719, 862, 912, 1008, 1054, 1079, 1152, 1199.
 Price of Quarterlies advanced, 264.
 Presidency of Twelve, 71, 239, 312, 336, 408, 503, 527, 550, 598, 622, 646, 694, 719, 742, 912, 1008, 1054, 1079.
 Regarding attendance at reunions, 503.
 Religio quarterlies wanted, 1152.
 Scout troops reported, 551.
 Senior and adult lessons in Sunday school, 575.
 Songs of the Legion, 599.
 Statement concerning a pastoral notice, 383.
 Sunday School Department, 359, 584.
 Tithing report? Have you filed your annual, 117.
 To the doctors and dentists of the church, 550.
 Transfer of missionaries, 312, 336.
 Transfers, 719.
 Transfers and appointments, 408.
 Two valuable courses, 1128.
 Validation of certificates, 598.
 Warning, 647.
 Young people's day in Des Moines, 286.
 Young people's gospel campaign services, 984.
 Young people's outing, 646.

WHAT DO YOU READ?

The times are tense. The days are at hand spoken of by Christ: "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

In this day of stress the church has a wonderful work to do. It will be done by those who keep in touch with its ideals and progress as manifested in the church literature.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

As the official organ of the church, the Herald will continue to specialize on those subjects which will help all members to become better Saints. It will contain more and more church news and special features that contribute to intelligent spirituality. In addition to the regular quota of excellent material, several special numbers are furnished each year. Material is in hand now for a special British Number and a special Kansas City Stake Number. Price $2.25 a year in advance.

ZION'S ENSIGN

This popular church weekly will with the beginning of the new year become more strictly a missionary paper to help you in converting your friends to the gospel and informing them concerning the teachings of the church. It will contain less and less of the same material as is found in the Herald and have a more clearly-defined mission of its own to fulfill. Price $1.50 a year in advance.

An increased subscription list is the only thing that will allow us to lower the price of our periodicals. You can help.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
 INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

AUTUMN LEAVES

The mission of this monthly church magazine is to inspire and inform. It is published for the youth of the church but contains a wide variety of excellent reading for all ages. It broadens the mind and warms the heart to finer thoughts and nobler impulses. Many of our best church stories appear first in its pages and it is the official organ of the Religio, Sunday school, and Girls' Department. Price $1.75 a year in advance.

JOURNAL OF HISTORY

In this quarterly magazine are found the basic facts in our later church history from which we may proceed with intelligence to solve our present-day problems. It is supplemental to our recorded church history and contains historical matter which would not otherwise be published. Those who are seriously concerned with this side of our work appreciate this journal. Price $1.50 a year in advance.