But how could I obtain all these things? For a Morgan or a Rockefeller, a project of this magnitude would little disturb their slumbers. Yea, even to many in the church, the cost of such an outfit could easily be spared without much inconvenience; but for a poor and almost penniless missionary, such things look like mountains to get over, and seem so great that they are dismissed as impossible things. Then, what about the Bishop? Would he help to secure such equipment? I knew that our dear Bishop had more on his hands than he could attend to, and that it was useless to ask, and I would not bother him. But equipment I must get, and to whom should I go?

I resolved to go straight to headquarters, even to Him who is the possessor of all things in heaven and earth. I accordingly knelt beside my bed in solemn prayer, fully believing that God was interested in what I was doing, and there I asked him to give me the necessary means to carry on his work in a more expeditious manner than I had ever been able to do. He knew my trials as well as I did, but, nevertheless, I rehearsed them to him and prayed for the things I knew so well that were needed to enable me to do his will and fulfill the mission which was given me by the church. I arose from my knees full of faith that what I needed would be forthcoming. How? I really did not know, but I knowingly felt them coming. I packed up my belongings and went to Ottawa, determined to get me a motor truck, and, when it was ready, pack up my tent, etc., and strike out into the whitened fields of eastern Ontario.

On inquiry I found that an outfit such as I could get, that would answer my purpose, would cost nearly $1,000. I collected my forces in the way of assistance from brethren who were interested in my project, and made the first payment, $200, on a good Ford truck. I had to put a canopy top on the truck, which cost me about $50. It would have cost me much more had I not been mechanic enough to do it myself. But being a practical blacksmith of twenty-five years' experience, and having a working knowledge of the machinist, steam-fitter, painter, and tinsmith trades, I knew that I could build myself an outfit, if I had the tools and material. I had to give my notes and a mortgage on the truck for $550 (including insurance and interest) in twelve monthly payments of $41.50 per month.

To meet the expense of running the motor truck and make the payments, I must depend on collections and assistance from others who are interested in the work and who will assist to that end.

In view of the magnitude of such a project for one in my position, from a financial point of view, one brother, Doctor O. L. Weaver, of Cornwall, wrote me asking, "Do you think you can make the grade on your monthly payments?" To this I replied, "I really do not know whether I shall be able to or not; but I will tell you that my sand box of faith is very copious, and it is loaded clear to the top with the very driest and sharpest kind of sand; the steam gauge shows all the boiler can possibly carry with safety; and if I do not make the grade I can die on it, thank God. For I would sooner die trying to do, than to live without making any effort."

The grade has an angle of exactly $41.50 per month, for twelve months, and it is exactly $550 in length, and its summit must be reached by faith, interest, and good will; and by the help of Him, and his gospel, for whom, and for which, it was that this project was attempted, we will strive until the work is completed.

The reason why the Germans put up such an awful fight in the late World War, lay in the fact of their being so wonderfully prepared. As preparation and equipment are absolutely necessary to success in material things, so are they in carrying on the gospel; and by the help of our Master I have decided to continue getting equipment until my "Ebenezer," gospel car, is fully furnished with all accessories necessary to an intelligent, clear, and comprehensive presentation of the restored gospel, to which work "Ebenezer" is set apart. I shall be pleased to hear from any and all who are interested in a project of this kind, and who may have suggestions to offer.

Elder Guy P. Levitt and myself are in Cornwall, Ontario, battling away against prejudice and lack of scriptural understanding, which we find abundant everywhere we go. But we are thankful that we realize the presence of the divine Spirit sustaining us in the conflict.

With unfaltering faith and hope in the ultimate triumph of the beautiful gospel, I am in bonds,

PHILEMON PEMENT.

An Ensample to the Flock

One of our Bishop's agents in the Northwest sent in his Annual Tithing Report, and in an accompanying note made this pertinent observation:

"I thought I had better make out my own report before I urged others to do so."

Perhaps you can think of several good Saints who seldom, if ever, bear their testimony, although they are quite faithful in attending the prayer meetings. The reason for this lies mainly in the fact that they are prone to procrastinate until "following the course of least resistance" has become a habit which has insidiously depleted their spiritual strength.

The longer the doing of a task is deferred the more difficult it seems; but once begun is half done. If you are going to get anywhere you must start from where you are. Your objective may be ever so definite; you may be ever so anxious to reach your destination; but until the start is once made—and that with the equipment now at your command—your goal will never be attained, worlds without end.

A campaign of activity will give the inspiration to move, changing the attitude from one of indifference to that of a confident worker in a common cause. Is the membership in your vicinity reflecting your attitude in complying with the laws of the church relating to temporalities?

We sincerely hope that the brethren of the ministry will catch the spirit of this Bishop's agent and teach by example, augmented by precept.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

History without philosophy is history seen from the outside, the play of mechanical and unchanging forces in a materialistically conceived world: philosophy without history is philosophy seen from the outside, and veering and backing, rising and falling, of motiveless winds of doctrine. "Both these are monsters." But history fertilized by philosophy is the history of the human spirit in its secular attempt to build itself a world of laws and institutions in which it can live as it wishes to live; and philosophy fertilized by history is the progressive raising and solving of the endless intellectual problems whose succession forms the inner side of this secular struggle. Thus the two studies which, apart, degenerate into strings of empty dates and lists of pedantic distinctions—"To seventeen add two, And Queene Anne you will view," "Barbara celarent darii ferioque prioris"—become, together, a single science of all things human.—Hibbert Journal, January, 1921.

The London Times for April 29 prints a letter on women's place in the new order. Women have shown what they can do during the war. They wish now an opportunity to make a more complete contribution to the life of the community. The women feel keenly the need of better educational preparation, and urge that they should be given a further opportunity wherever they logically can do, and not be prevented by mere artificial restraint.

We note that Chief Red Fox, of the northern Blackfeet Indians addressed the Hyde Park Christian Church at Kansas City, Missouri, on the 5th in the interests of the rights of the Indian to citizenship. He addressed a large and appreciative Lamoni audience on the evening of May 15.

The Church Times, published in London, gives an account of a young lady leading a litany in one of the great churches in England, but the letter writer in that case expresses regret that it may be a barrier between the English Church and the Roman Catholic Church.

Senior and Adult Lessons in Sunday Schools

We are in the third year of the lessons course, and under ordinary conditions would begin to repeat the course next January, 1922. This we will be compelled to do in all grades except senior, which has been rewritten. All senior classes that want new matter will find it ready for them at that time, as the old senior lessons will not be repeated, at that date. However, if any feel they want other matter, we recommend the temporary use of the lessons now appearing and others to appear in the senior Quarterly of the Religio Department. Our Sunday school lessons board is working on new advanced lessons for the adult section, but are not ready to publish them.

A Correction

In the last issue of The Staff, in the article telling of the new pipe organ for the London, Ontario, church, we mentioned the name of Brother William Pycok as pastor of the London Branch.

We were mistaken, as the pastor of this branch is Brother William M. Grice, whose pardon we beg for the error.

Addresses

Elder Amos Berve, 510 Third Avenue West, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Conference Minutes

ALABAMA.—Alabama, with Lone Star Branch, May 14, 1921. District presidency presiding, D. F. Parker, secretary. Branches reporting, Pleasant Hill and Lone Star. Ministerial reports: 5 elders, 4 priests, 1 teacher, 2 deacons. Bishop's agent reported: Received since last report $724; paid out, $694.67; on hand now, $30. A committee consisting of D. E. Sellers, W. H. Drake, and Z. K. Patrick audited bishop's books and found them correct. Officers elected: Levi Gamet, president; J. R. Harper and W. J. Williamson, counselors; D. T. Parker, secretary; M. M. Salter, treasurer; D. E. Sellers, recommended to general church chorister for appointment as district chorister. Time and place of next conference left in hands of district presidency. A motion prevailed that the treasurer call on each branch in district for means to meet the expenses from time to time as it needs. John W. Baldwin elected librarian. Preaching by H. H. Wiggins, John W. Baldwin, Levi Gamet, and W. J. Williamson. This was one of the best conferences of the Alabama District. The good Spirit seemed to be present in the beginning and continued throughout the conference; even a greater interest was manifested among those outside the church than had been in quite awhile. D. T. Parker, secretary.

Convention Minutes

ALABAMA.—Sunday school, met with Lone Star, May 14, with W. H. Drake and H. H. Wiggins in charge. Reports of officers: W. H. Drake, superintendent; H. H. Wiggins, assistant superintendent. Short talks by Levi Gamet and J. R. Harper. W. H. Drake recommended for superintendent; the recommendation was accepted, with the understanding that the same be sent to G. R. Wells. Officers elected: H. H. Wiggins, assistant superintendent; M. M. Salter, secretary and treasurer; D. E. Sellers, chorister; N. J. Wiggins, librarian; Evie Sellers recommended for home department superintendent; the recommendation accepted. M. M. Salter, secretary-treasurer, McKenzie, Alabama.

Our Departed Ones

BATTEN.—Daniel Batten, born March 29, 1867, at Pittsburg, Illinois, died at Albia, Iowa, April 8, 1921, following an injury sustained in a mine at Chariton, Iowa. Married Margaret Thomas in 1897. To this union were born seven children. Sister Batten died in 1913. On March 29, 1918, deceased married Sarah Ellen Holt, who with his children survive. Brother Batten was baptized at ten years of age. Services were conducted at Chariton by J. F. Garver, and at Bevier, Missouri, by G. Russell. Interment at Bevier.

RENEAU.—Oney, oldest child of Landon C. and Lilly M. Reneau, was born at Tryon, Nebraska, August 23, 1897, died by drowning at Davis City, Iowa, May 22, 1921. Deceased was a student at Graceland College to have received a diploma from the junior college, June 8. He enlisted to serve in the late war, and spent nine months in France. He is survived by father, mother, brothers Floyd L. and Arthur L., sisters Jennie M. Reigel and Margie B., also by Zadia Sherman of Detroit, Michigan, his fiancée. Baptized in his boyhood, Brother Reneau remained faithful. Services at Lamoni church in charge of J. F. Garver; sermon by C. E. Wight. Interment at Lamoni.

STOUTENBERG.—Mary A. Wismer, born March 6, 1853, in Saint Clair County, Michigan. Married Jacob Stoutenberg, June 22, 1874. Came to Whittemore, Michigan, in 1880, while that section was still a wilderness. Baptized February 7, 1892. Has been a member of Whittemore Branch since its organization in 1892. Died at Flint, Michigan, May 13, 1921. Funeral at Whittemore, sermon by M. A. Sommerfeld. Burial in Saints' cemetery near Whittemore. Leaves husband, 3 sons, 3 daughters, 2 brothers, one sister, 9 grandchildren any many friends.

GOODENOUGH.—Lucretia Freich, born June 9, 1867. Married George Goodenough July 4, 1891. Departed this life May 16, 1921, at Kalamazoo, Michigan. Survived by her 6 children and many other relatives and friends. Baptized about 20 years ago and always tried to live a consistent Christian life. Sermon by W. P. Buckley, at Kalamazoo Michigan.

GREEN.—Laura Belle Munns, wife of Joseph B. Green, was born at Good Intent, near Atchison, Kansas, May 21, 1864. Died at Bogue, Kansas, April 21, 1921. Was the daughter of Daniel Munns, a pioneer elder in the church. Besides husband left a family of 5 children. Three sisters still living. Baptized in 1874 and remained faithful to her covenant until death. Funeral from Saints' church at Netawaka. Service in charge of Frank G. Hedrick, sermon by J. W. A. Bailey.

Will You Help to Solve the Problem?

In last week's HERALD a table of figures was shown and the estimate made that unless vigorous efforts were put forth at once, we would have to close our fiscal year on July 1 with a debt of $100,000 on the year's work. As was explained, this deficit was brought about by two causes: First, the General Conference of 1920 voted budgets of $100,000 in excess of the estimated receipts, and second, the financial depression struck the country in November and our receipts were cut down nearly $100,000 from normal. By postponing some of the contemplated work, we were able to keep the budgets down so that our deficit will not exceed $100,000 all told, but that sum is yet to be met.

There are only three possible ways of meeting this obligation:

First: Pay it by slackening the church work during 1921.

Second: Pay it by borrowing money.

Third: Pay it by each of us promptly meeting our unpaid tithing obligation, or by sacrifice, making free-will offerings that the Lord's work may go forward.

We know the choice you will make. You will not consent to slackening the work of the church, nor will you let it be burdened with debt. You will respond, we are sure, like true Saints, and out of your sacrifice will meet the need.

All that our church requires to do this or any task, is to unite in purpose and to concentrate our energies on the work. To get this unity of effort and to insure the cooperation of all the Saints, we have the consent of the Presidency to our plan of setting aside a period of self-denial and we have called this:

Twelve Days of Sacrifice and Self-Denial

June 19 to June 30

Will you sacrifice with your brethren?

Our Heritage

It didn't all happen in a day, nor in a year. It has been done during all the years since that first conference at Amboy in 1860. In this limited space, however, I can give you only a partial view of the development made and can only give you a suggestion of our material growth.

Properly to appraise the figures set forth in this issue it would be necessary for one to experience the sacrifices of the undaunted missionary, and the faithful wife and family of the earlier days. To-day, as we travel through the country and our souls are gladdened as we view the beautiful, green fields, we rarely think of the industrious labor that felled the trees, uprooted the stumps, and turned the sod. I wonder if those pioneers dreamed of these scenes, and enjoyed them in anticipation even as we do in reality. I wonder with what courage and zeal the missionaries of the sixties and seventies would have gone forward had they known that each time they left there was sufficient in the treasury to care for their loved ones until they themselves could return. Faith, rather than assurance, was their staff.

We are indeed glad to share with you the joy of our material achievement, but we joy the more in the possibilities of the greater accomplishment, which it affords. Shall we cultivate the fields which the heritage of the gospel has bequeathed, or shall we permit them to grow up to briars and weeds?

To-day, every institution among men is called to account, and the church is not excepted. It is indeed fortunate that we can show a substantial material net worth; more fortunate will it be in the future trying days, if we have a net worth of faith in God and his promise which standeth sure, sufficient to weather the storms that have power not only to waste our earthly goods and destroy civilization itself, but also to attack our faith so insidiously as to dissipate our trust in God and man.

Years ago the fields of gospel opportunity were ripe, ready to harvest. To-day, our day, the clouds hang low: the storm is approaching. Shall the harvest be saved? Every true Latter Day Saint says, "Yes," with a determination that reveals in his life a faith in God and in Jesus Christ, our blessed Savior. There is exhibited in them the power of virtue, truth, justice, and love. They understand that righteousness should be expressed in integrity, frugality, and thrift. Without this, our present position could never have been obtained.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

The Bishops' Number

"It may be necessary to economize along some lines, but the church cannot afford to slow up or discontinue its progressive movement."

This number of the HERALD is gotten out largely through the efforts of the Publicity Department, in connection with the Presiding Bishopric. Probably the readers will be particularly interested in the tables of comparison showing sources of our income and avenues of expense. The figures as presented by the Bishop indicate that 91.18 per cent of the operating church income comes under the head of tithing, offerings, consecrations, and surplus. This shows the source of by far the greater part of our income. As yet the church draws comparatively little from investments, endowments, or profits on commercial enterprises; and if it be true, as stated by the Bishop, that 91.18 per cent of our income comes from tithes, offerings, and consecrations of the people, it is probably equally true that 95 per cent thus rendered to the church comes from those who are in moderate circumstances—at least they are not wealthy people, if judged by worldly standards. True, they may be very well-to-do by comparison with people in some countries and communities where poverty is extreme and the standards of living very low.

Since the people furnish the greater volume of our income, it is perfectly natural that they should desire to know about the expenditure of their moneys, and it is only right that they should know. For that reason the Bishop of the church has always published an annual report. The Bishop may publish a financial report in all good faith, without the least desire to conceal anything, and still it may not be very enlightening to ordinary people, and sometimes, we have imagined, not very enlightening even to bishops. People like the undersigned, who may be able ordinarily to put two and two together, and in the language of the late Joseph Smith, are able to "see as far into the grindstone as the next man," still are not accountants and cannot digest and draw conclusions from a highly technical report. In this number of the HERALD an effort has been made by the Bishop to analyze and to present in such form and get into such shape his figures, that they may be studied and understood.

Assuming that the figures presented by the Bishop are correct, anyone who cares to do so has in his possession materials which will aid him to make comparisons. A glance will show the source of our income and probably will not provoke any great discussion. There will, however, without doubt be differences of opinion as to items of expenditure. It will be noted by the table furnished by the Bishop, that the item coming under family allowance and elders' expense is by far the largest item in the list. This is without doubt as it should be. All will concede that point. Some, however, may contend that the percentage should be even larger. One of the primary missions of the church is the evangelizing of the world, and most of our money should be expended for that purpose. We should not, however, neglect the culture and salvation of the people after they have been brought into the church, which of course necessitates activities other than those purely missionary.

In making comparisons, some will probably urge that there are families supported by the church whose expenses come under the head of family allowance and elders' expense that should have been charged to administration and expense of the general church offices. On the other hand, it may be urged that a good many so-called office men spend at least a portion of their time in ministerial work outside of the church offices: it may be difficult ever to draw a sharp line between administrative accounts and accounts supposed to represent the missionary field of our activities. Some departments of the work that come under the head of administrative exist very largely to facilitate missionary work and general ministerial work of the church. A good deal of the time of the Presidency, office of the Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric is given to coordinating, directing, assisting, and financing the ministerial work of the church. A member of the Presidency or a member of the Twelve may sit at the desk perusing a letter that has come from a missionary in the field who is asking for immediate advice on a very important matter, vitally affecting the church interests. The dictation is handled by a stenographer attached to the office force. The expense of all the men connected with the transaction might be charged up to office expense, yet are we not at the time engaged in missionary work? Are not the members of the Presiding Bishopric doing ministerial work when they are financing the missionary? Is the clerk who writes out the checks for the family allowances or who keeps the accounts not engaged in assisting missionary work? The Publicity Department expenses come under the head of administrative expense, yet the Publicity Department is always at the disposal of the missionary and ready to assist, and probably renders service in the way of spreading the gospel equivalent to the service of the missionary. So also with the Recorder's office. This is mentioned simply incidentally, to justify our conclusion that a line can never be drawn arbitrarily between these two classes of expenses.

We have been told by some that of late years our institutions have been robbing the mission field. It will be noted that the Bishop reports that the church institutions consume 13.20 per cent of the money expended. The comparison is better than we had anticipated, though perhaps to some minds it will seem worse. Probably it is true that not one of the institutions at present being financed by the church would be discontinued by a majority vote of the church. Comparatively few would vote to close any one of them, whether it be the Sanitarium, the Children's Home, the homes for the aged, or Graceland College. In considering the expenses of these institutions two things will be borne in mind: It is probably true that not one of them has had more than its just needs and wants. In fact, we may say that all of them have been inadequately financed and without proper equipment. The self-sacrifice and denial practiced by the men and women who have worked in these various institutions and helped to sustain them, is comparable to that of the missionary in the field. A further consideration is the fact that these institutions are all, in one way or another, tied up with our legitimate missionary work. The college, for example, has sent into the field many young men much better equipped for missionary work than they otherwise would have been, and it will probably fill a bigger field in that particular as the years go by. The Sanitarium has ministered to the needs of many a missionary, and probably will minister to many others.

Central, general administration plays a large part in our scheme of things, and our scheme of things is based on the revelations. Some churches are congregational. Each group shifts for itself. They are loose-jointed and have few com-

This number of the HERALD endeavors to give a comprehensive view of our church work. It endeavors to show the people, in a way that can be understood, the disposition that is being made of the contributions that come to the Bishop's hands in the form of tithes, offerings, and consecrations. At present, unfortunately, there exists a deficit. It may be necessary, and probably will be necessary, to economize along some lines, but the church cannot afford to slow up or discontinue its progressive movement. We must put more, rather than fewer, missionaries into the field as the years go by. We must have larger and better equipped institutions. We have at present scores, perhaps hundreds, of the finest type of young men and women who are not only willing but anxious mon interests. Some are individualistic. Their clergy are largely self-appointed, if not self-ordained, and shift for themselves. The members are inducted casually, by a handshake, or otherwise, and go their way without record. But in our philosophy the church is one church. General administrative functions tend to make it one body and help all Saints and groups of Saints to direct their efforts to common channels, whether it be in missionary propaganda or internal development in Zion and her stakes. Without direction and financial aid from headquarters, our missionary propaganda, for instance, would go to pieces in a very short time. This means that the church will always have administrative expenses (general overhead) that are not had by some loose-jointed and more or less aimless organizations. Whether or not our administrative expense is too great by comparison with other expenses is another question.

to go into church service. Finances will not permit us to avail ourselves of the services of very many of them. We must, however, go to the limit of our ability along that line, and those who cannot obtain support from the church so that they may be able to devote all their time to their calling, must do all they can locally while winning support for themselves. In this way splendid local work has been done in the past and the church has been able to go forward.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

When Joseph Smith the Martyr first taught tithing as a religious principle the world thought it a strange thing, but to-day it is not only accepted by churches all over the land, but taught in textbooks, and quarterlies, in Sunday schools and men's study classes.

Things the Church Has Accomplished

An encouraging summary which indicates progress and presages greater attainments.

Every Latter Day Saint is vitally concerned in what has been done, that a better vision might be obtained of what remains for the church to accomplish.

We are pleased with this opportunity to present such items of general interest as will give you a better understanding of things as they actually exist.

Membership Growth

The church has made a steady, healthy progress ever since 1834, the Lord said that she might even now be redeemed had she learned to be obedient in the things required at her hands. She was charged with evils, among which was the withholding of their "substance." While some may be still under this condemnation, yet, as this chart shows, a marked improvement has been made, especially since the year 1916. It will be observed that while the increase in church membership has gone steadily forward, the financial line has its ups and downs, yet for the twenty years since 1896 it has kept pace with the general trend of the membership line.

In 1917 a new era of finance gives a sharp turn to the tithing, offering, consecration, and surplus line, indicating that a deeper consecration and spirit of sacrifice is now mov-the Reorganization. The growth has been slow, it is true. The phenomenal development of the early church was arrested by the insidious attacks from enemies within and without, whose efforts did not cease in the climax of martyrdom in 1844.

A study of Chart number 1 will disclose a consistent membership increase year by year. The last decade the rate of increase shows 50 per cent better than the two preceding ones. Our average annual net increase during the years of 1910 to 1920 was approximately 3,000, while the normal rate for the preceding twenty years was 2,000.

Trend of Receipts—Financial Gains

Our gain in numerical strength surely has its bearing, yet it is our condition which seems to present the paramount issue. While the church was still in its infancy, back in ing the church than ever before. The conditions of unemployment and the fall in market prices without a corresponding decrease in living costs during the past eight months have so seriously affected church revenues that only a very special effort can save a falling back of the line from the vantage point attained in the sweeping gains of the last three years.

Operating Costs

A certain amount of our receipts are for a special purpose, and, when impressed with such a trust, are not available for any other purpose. Twelve of such funds exist at the present time, and during the past year about 50 per cent of all money received has been for trust funds. However, the auditorium drive made this year an exception in this respect.

The expense of operating has quite naturally increased with the volume of work done, yet it is not out of proportion.

Taking the financial department for example: In the year 1900 the total funds collected were $101,869 at a cost of 1.4 cents per dollar collected. In 1910 the cost of collection had increased to 1.6 cents, while in 1915 it was 1.7 cents.

With the increased cost of labor and supplies, the operating cost for the past year has increased to approximately 2.8 cents, an increase of 1.1 of a cent, or 65 per cent over 1915, while for the same period of time the best statistics show that the cost of living has increased 87 per cent. We hope our readers will consider the fact that number of dollars collected does not represent an exact gauge for the volume of work done by this department. The times, as well as the church, demand better service than formerly. Service always costs something. Even voluntary or consecrated service increases obligations which eventually must be repaid, whether rendered to individuals or institutions.

In addition to this, a part of our divinely assigned re-were spent directly for missionary purposes. To this should rightfully be added a certain proportion of the administration expense.

The amount spent in aid was larger last year than ever before; however, not much larger than in 1914. Lucrative employment and high prices for farm products reduced the calls for aid quite materially in the interim of the war. In addition to the $22,500 charged to aid, $56,000 was spent through our church institutions to assist the unfortunate children, old folks, and sick, and to maintain our school during the period from July 1, 1920, to May 1, 1921.

Considerable more aid has been extended in the shape of loans, which is not included in the above figures. The ability to aid along these lines is necessarily limited to the margin between the fixed operating expenses, such as elders' expense, elders' families, and administrative expense, and the current income.

Institutions

A few words under this caption are appropriate. The college was the first of these to come into existence. This was authorized by the General Conference of 1890, and was dedicated January 1, 1897. The fall of 1895 saw the opening of the first school year with a faculty of 7 members and with 34 students. Ten years later its growth is indicated by the facts that the faculty numbered 10, while the enrollment increased to 145. The records of last year about doubled these figures, being 19 and 324 respectively.

The original college building, in addition to serving as a college, also housed the heating plant, laundry, dining room, and kitchen, and the remaining space was utilized for dormitory purposes. The initial cost of the building was approximately $25,000, total assets listed at $40,000. Since then the college has acquired considerable real estate, increasing the cost of the properties to the total value of about $170,000. On its inventory we find the following buildings now listed: A heating plant and gymnasium, a superintendent's cottage, a farm home, three dormitories, and College Building Number 2. The last named has just been completed at a cost of approximately $85,000. This will provide ample college room, but the dormitory facilities are still inadequate. To relieve this situation the former Herald Office Building is to be fitted up for a boys' dormitory, until more convenient quarters can be established.

A factor which contributes quite largely to Graceland's popularity during the last two years is the religious education class work. This is a very worthy effort to equip those who may be selected for special church service with the tools for a more effectual work in the Master's vineyard. The church has invested a goodly sum in this phase alone. This is loaned to the students to be repaid after their school work is finished. Perhaps in the main this will be in the form of service. The same General Conference (1890) that authorized the building of Graceland, authorized the building of the Saints' Home for the Aged. This was dedicated for service March 27, 1898, and has a capacity of nearly 35 inmates. It soon became apparent that our facilities would have to be enlarged, and on May 1, 1906, Liberty Home was opened to accommodate 30 more.

In 1910 Bonheim Home was opened in Independence with a capacity to care for 25 more aged Saints.

In 1917 the church bought the Holden Home property, and soon after the inmates of Bonheim were transferred there, and the Independence property became the nurses' home. These eleemosynary institutions for the care of aged Saints are maintained at a cost to the church of approximately $118 a day, of $43,000 a year under present-day prices. On

STONE CHURCH: INDEPENDENCE

Here the largest congregation of Saints in the world meets regularly. The total value of the church edifices owned by the church throughout the world is about $1,300,000, yet none of us expect them to be revenue producers. In addition to the expense of maintaining adequate places of worship, each member's duty is to help maintain the general activities of the church.

sponsibility to the church is to teach the law, and a goodly portion of our operating cost goes into supplies, publicity, and educational expense. We have found it expedient further to organize and augment our forces so that in the functioning of the office we may have the capacity to handle the ever-increasing volume of detail which must be worked out before the consummation of our program of things Zionie shall be enjoyed. This investment is like the seed which is planted in the soil that will, under proper conditions of sunshine and rain, bring forth fruit in its season.

Trend of Disbursements

Chart Number 2 will give you a graphic idea of how disbursements have kept pace with receipts. And, peculiar as it may seem, the disbursements exceeded the receipts at times, and only since 1915 have the receipts been sufficiently in excess of the disbursements to permit an increase in the net worth of the church. Seventy-three per cent (73%) of the total operating receipts, not including Auditorium or Christmas offering funds, for the ten months ended May 1, April 14, 1906, the church was directed to build a sanitarium as a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted. On December 15, 1909, a sixty-bed hospital operating as the Independence Sanitarium was dedicated for public service. Occasionally some one manifests some surprise to learn that this service is not given free of charge, especially to the Saints who contributed towards the original cost of the building. Upon reflection it will be seen that to do so would only consume the funds of the church now used in other ways, and it is much more fair in principle that those who receive the service should bear their share of the expense of service rendered.

This institution requires the services of over thirty people. The actual cost per patient to the Sanitarium will vary, of course, in accordance with current prices and wages. However, to give our readers some idea, the figure for last February was $3.88 per day, or $27.16 per week. During the year 1919 the average duration of treatment was fourteen

The Herald and Ensign Publishing Houses were combined last month, having their new home in the Battery Block in Independence. The Battery Block was purchased by the church at a consideration of $67,500. Quite an extensive overhauling has been given to the old Battery Building proper, which now houses the publishing interests. It was formerly used for military purposes. The other building is a two-story office building, in which is housed the presiding and local bishops' offices.

Quite a neat little sum has been invested by the church this past year in foreign mission and survey work. Additional missionary forces have been sent to Scandinavia, England, and the South Seas. In the last-named place they were accompanied by a nurse. In England a mission house and hall were purchased at a consideration of approximately $4,000. This property, known as "Saint Leonard's," will nicely serve as a mission headquarters.

The church properties at Kirtland and Nauvoo have been

COMMODIOUS OFFICE BUILDING NOW OCCUPIED

In the purchase of the above building during the past year for the use of church offices, a much-desired acquisition was attained. The rental of the rooms on the first and second floors largely cares for the investment incurred, and there is space on the second floor for the numerous activities of the Presiding Bishopric.

days. In other words, the average patient costs the Sanitarium approximately $54.00, or the magnificent sum of $85,000 is paid out by this institution each year, when running at full capacity, in operating expenses alone. A comparison of the charges made by hospitals of similar size in Kansas City, such as the Swedish Hospital, Saint Luke's Hospital, and the Christian Church Hospital, shows that the Independence Sanitarium prices have been 15 per cent to 20 per cent less for the regular hospital service.

The patients have full choice in the matter of the physician who shall attend them, and it is a matter of concern between them alone how much the physician shall receive for his services. Drugs, dressings, laboratory, and operating charges are additional to the regular weekly hospital rate.

On August 15, 1911, another branch of Christian service was opened in the dedication of the Children's Home, which has a capacity of approximately 40 inmates. Under present-day conditions it costs the church approximately $43 a day, or $15,700 a year to maintain. Through this channel many homeless ones have been cared for, clothed, fed, educated; and in a number of instances adopted into good Latter Day Saint homes to bring sunshine and gladness by their merry voices and bright, cheery faces, such as were never known before.

repaired and beautified since last General Conference. The temple is in such a condition as to reflect credit upon the church to the thousands of travelers who visit this memorable sanctuary.

The old landmarks at Nauvoo, some of which are mentioned in the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, have been rehabilitated. The hundreds of tourists who come to "the City Beautiful" and visit the "Old Homestead," the "Martyrs' graves," the "Mansion House," and the "Nauvoo House" erected so many years ago on the banks of the Mississippi as a place for the weary traveler to find rest and comfort, now go away with feelings of respect and appreciation for the church.

Splendid opportunities are these to get respectful hearings, clear away misunderstanding, and break down prejudice. To neglect it would be wanton extravagance in comparison with the cost of many other publicity and evangelizing efforts.

Of course you are interested in the $220,000 spent for land and improvements, but as that came out of the Christmas offerings, rather than general church funds, that will be dealt with separately. The $250,000 received (up to May 1) and held in trust for the building of the General Conference Auditorium, will be featured elsewhere. Five hundred and fifty of our 830 branches own property. We find, in round numbers, $375,000 worth of real estate, $1,000,000 worth of buildings, and $20,000 worth of equipment. Against this there are incumbrances amounting to $95,000. A new appraisal is now under way.

Thus we have briefly reviewed some of the things to which the church is giving its attention, made possible by the loyalty and sacrifice of its members.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

The Work of the Bishopric

A strong mind and a healthy body are necessary for a life of the fullest possible accomplishment and service. The mentality may be ever so well equipped and trained for a career of usefulness, but if the physical part does not particularly qualifies them for the work of the Bishopric, in looking after the financial interests of the church and its institutions and managing the properties of the church.

District and Branch Representatives

Completing the structure of the Bishopric, there exists throughout the realms of the church organization, local bishops and Bishop's agents for territories known as stakes or districts; and in the several branches of each stake or district, local solicitors, to receive and receipt for the tithes, offerings, and consecrations of the Saints. The local solicitors report monthly their collections to their respective bishop or Bishop's agent, who in turn immediately transmits the funds to the Presiding Bishopric, together with a complete report of the month's collections within the territory under his supervision. Thus it is arranged for the bishops and Bishop's agents to represent the Presiding Bishopric in the several function properly, a man's activities will be correspondingly circumscribed.

The analogy holds true within the church—"the body of Christ." In the exercise of his wisdom, God has set within his church two departments, the spiritual and the temporal. These are so closely united that if one suffers they both suffer, and the progress of the entire church body is affected.

The Presiding Bishopric

The temporal department is under the supervision of the Presiding Bishop, Benjamin R. McGuire, and his two counselors, James F. Keir and Israel A. Smith, the three constituting what is known as the Presiding Bishopric of the church. Prior to their selection for this important work, the three were actively engaged in modern business pursuits. Bishop McGuire was connected with a large legal corporation, and the legal and business training thus secured is of great assistance to him in his office, and of inestimable value to the church. Bishop Keir has had a wide business experience, supplemented by the study of law; and Bishop Smith was engaged in the practice of law when selected as counselor, at the 1920 General Conference. Their wide range of practical business experience, as well as their legal training, stakes and districts, and the local solicitors in turn to represent the local bishops or Bishop's agents in the branches. The temporal organization is thus seen to extend as a network throughout the entire organized territory of the church.

Duties of the Bishopric

Briefly summed up, the work of the Bishopric consists of the "gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints, of money and properties under the term of tithing, surplus, free-will offering, and consecration." The gathering, caring for, and disbursing of over $875,000 has been the pleasant task of the Bishopric for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The foregoing not only involves the collection of all the church finances, but also the supervision of all disbursements, in caring for missionaries and their families; looking after the poor and needy; maintaining homes for the aged, Children's Homes, Independence Sanitarium, Graceland College, and all general church institutions and properties; as well as properly accounting for all money received and disbursed, and reporting same to the church. Interpreting the law of temporalities, and teaching and promoting the observance among the membership of the principles of steward-ships and inheritances are also placed under the direction of this department.

As "a judge in Israel" the bishops participate in the settlement of difficulties and transgressions within the church, by sitting as members of bishop's courts. It will be noticed that many of the bishops who were not, at the time of their call to the office, engaged in law practice, have seen the helpfulness of a knowledge thereof in their work, and have taken up its study. The advantage of this training is apparent to the church, not only in the conduct of the church courts, but also in representing and protecting the interests of the church in the courts of the land.

Mountains of Detail

Each of the foregoing tasks branches off into many channels of activity, through mountains of detail. For instance, receiving the tithes, offerings, and consecrations of the mem-bered special aptitude and ability for the particular task to be undertaken.

Departments

To date, the work of the office has been subdivided into three departments; namely, Secretarial, Accounting, and Real Estate. Other departments will be added to the organization as the work of the office increases in volume and new avenues of service are entered.

Secretarial Department

Vernon A. Reese, who has charge of the Secretarial Department, was for a number of years actively connected with commercial business firms in the city of Chicago; and at the time of his call to Independence, was acting in the secretarial capacity of one of the large railroad companies.

The work of the Secretarial Department involves the handling of mail, interviewing visitors, answering correspondence,

THE NEW PUBLISHING HOUSE AT INDEPENDENCE

Considerable expense was involved in the acquirement of this building by purchase, which has been remodeled and redecored throughout for the amalgamated publishing house of the church. And the fact that the Herald Publishing House building at Lamoni is still retained by the church, rather than being sold and devoted to nonchurch purposes, means an extra expense. But it seems justifiable from all angles. Some changes were made externally since this picture was taken, and many on the interior.

bership involves more than the issuance of the customary receipts. This act, though of vital importance, involves little effort in comparison with the work preceding and following the receipting of the funds, such as teaching and interpretation of the temporal law in sermons, personal letters, and the printed word, as well as the bookkeeping which follows, and the compilation of various reports.

Bishop's Work in City of Zion

Bishop J. A. Becker is closely associated with the Presiding Bishopric, especially in looking after the temporal interests of the church in Independence, which the 1920 General Conference in organizing the city of Zion placed under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. Brother Becker is an experienced and capable business man, and has increased his usefulness and service by the study of law.

Office Helpers

In the face of the foregoing, it is apparent that the Bishop and his two counselors cannot perform all of the work growing out of the multiplicity of duties devolving upon them. Therefore, from time to time they have added to the personnel of the department consecrated and qualified helpers. A devoted and steadfast consecration to the work of God is, of course, a prime requirement, but there must also be maniand preparing and distributing circular letters. Several thousand letters entering Latter Day Saint homes the last eight months, which were written and sent out over the name of a branch president or Bishop's agent, were prepared for them by this department.

Perhaps our readers will get a better idea of the volume of work handled by this department if we give a brief synopsis of the incoming and outgoing mail. During the first five months of 1921, 7,713 pieces of mail were received—an average of 62 pieces for each working day. In looking over the classification of incoming mail, we notice a few items which may be of special interest to our readers.

Aid Requests,	54; average 11 per month
Application for admittance to homes,	21; average 4 per month
Application for employment,	39; average 8 per month
Letters pertaining to the Zionie program,	221; average 44 per month

The outgoing mail during this same period consisted of 16,580 pieces, an average of approximately 133 pieces per working day. These letters consisted of replies to the above incoming mail, as well as acknowledgments of all contributions sent direct to this office, and various circular letters pertaining to the temporal aspects of the church work.

Accounting Department

Edward J. Smith, in charge of the Accounting Department, last year gave up a lucrative position as district manager for the firm of Tanner, Gilman & Ellis, certified public accountants, of Chicago, in answer to the Bishop's call to "come to Independence and help us." To him we are indebted for the financial statements and graphic charts appearing throughout this issue of the HERALD, reflecting the financial condition of the church and giving a relative view of the operating costs of the various departments and disposition of church funds.

The Accounting Department maintains the records of all the receipts and disbursements coming into this office, either directly or through the local bishops or agents, as well as other numerous accounts which are needed to ascertain, at any time, the financial condition of the church and its departments.

A daily balance of sixteen separate funds is maintained.

GENERAL OFFICES BUILDING AT INDEPENDENCE

This building houses the First Presidency, the Presiding Patriarch, the Statistical Department, and the Department of Publicity. It was not many years ago that the church officers were compelled to crowd into small and inconvenient rented rooms. The present quarters are not ideal, but they have an element of permanency and afford some otherwise unattainable conveniences. Just north of this building is a modern cottage devoted to the use of the Quorum of Twelve.

consisting of operating funds, such as tithes, offerings, consecrations, and surplus, as well as special funds, such as Auditorium, Christmas Offering, Temple Fund, Organ Fund, etc. These accounts show the daily cash balance of each of these funds. An itemized report is placed upon the Presiding Bishop's desk the following morning, thus enabling him to see, at a glance, the status of all church funds.

Approximately 75,000 individual tithing accounts are kept, to which posting is made each day from the local bishops' and Bishop's agents' reports, as well as the amounts received direct by the office. The value of this work will be greatly appreciated by the church membership as they have occasion to write into the office for a list of tithing payments. Each member who pays tithing has a ledger page in the proper alphabetical order. A balance is maintained of all these thousands of individual accounts, which is incorporated in the general trial balance of all the ledger accounts. A general balance will not be obtainable, if an error has been made in posting the figures of these accounts.

Since the Auditorium Campaign last fall, a big task was added to the Accounting Department in maintaining individual records of approximately 25,000 pledge cards, to which payments made thereon are posted daily, so that at any time inquiries can be answered as to the amounts paid on any card, and balance due.

Perhaps very few of the Saints, who know that the church is working on a budget basis, realize the amount of work involved in carrying out a budget plan of financing. In order that the membership may become better acquainted with the service rendered in this connection, let us dwell for a moment upon this feature.

A functional classification of general ledger accounts has been installed, which makes it possible to ascertain the operating costs of each branch or department of church work. The following is a summary of this classification.

BALANCE SHEET ACCOUNTS

1. Assets
 11. Current
 12. Permanent
2. Liabilities
 21. Current
 22. Permanent
3. Net Worth
 31. Surplus
 32. Reserves

INCOME AND EXPENSE OR OPERATING ACCOUNTS

4. Income
 41. Church Funds
 42. Contributions for Church Institutions
 43. Real Estate
 44. Other Income
5. Expenses
 51. Ministerial
 52. Aid Extended
 53. Administration—Church Offices
 54. Administration—Stakes, Bishop's Agents
 55. Administration—Church Institutions
 56. Real Estate
 57. General
 58. Other Miscellaneous

Each of the above accounts is further subdivided. For example, let us follow Administration Expense Account—Church Offices, Account Number 53, and we notice that it is subdivided as follows:

53. Administration Expense—Church Offices
 - 53A. Presidency's Office
 - 53B. Presiding Bishopric Office
 - 53B1. Secretarial Department
 - 53B2. Real Estate Department
 - 53B3. Accounting Department
 - 53C. Quorum of Twelve Office
 - 53D. Publicity Agent's Office
 - 53E. Statistician's Office
 - 53F. Auditor's Office

- 53G. Architect's Office
- 53H. Historian's Office
- 53J. Patriarch's Office
- 53K. Health Department Office
- 53L. Department of Music
- 53M. Women's Department

The above Administrative Expense subdivision applies to all church offices. The Administration Expense of each office is further subdivided as follows:

- 531. Salaries
- 532. Traveling expense
- 533. Printing and stationery
- 534. Telegraph and postage
- 535. Subscriptions to periodicals
- 536. Association dues, fees, etc
- 537. Repairs and maintenance to office furniture and fixtures
- 538. Depreciation of office furniture and fixtures
- 539. Other miscellaneous administration expense.

Perhaps it has escaped your notice, but it may be observed that this one control account on Administration Expenses—Church Offices, has been expanded into 136 subaccounts, consisting of the various expense accounts maintained under each office.

These accounts are necessary in order that a comparative monthly statement of budget appropriations and actual expenditures of each office can be prepared, showing the balance existing in each appropriation covering the administrative, stake, ministerial, and institutional branches of the work. Without going into further detail, suffice it to say that a classification of accounts, has been so designed as to enable general church authorities to be in constant touch with the financial condition of every activity of church work which is essential to successful management.

Real Estate Department

Bishop R. T. Cooper is in charge of the Real Estate Department, which involves the supervision of the general church property, as well as the local church edifices. When called to serve the church, Brother Cooper was actively engaged in the real estate business, as the managing partner of a real estate firm in Southern California. His experiences particularly qualified him for the work of this department, and he has also added to his training the knowledge obtained by the study of law.

At the present time a separate file is maintained for approximately one thousand branches throughout the world, consisting of deeds, abstracts of title, maps, pictures, insurance policies, and other correspondence pertaining to the respective pieces of property of each branch. This department also looks after some three hundred properties owned by the church, which are subject to sale, and fifty other properties which are being rented for residences or business. There is also listed with this department a large number of properties owned by others. The various items of income and expenses in connection with over 1,700 acres of farm land owned by the church is also supervised by this department.

Developing an Industrial Department

In response to the Bishop's call, Brother Chris B. Hartshorn last December severed his secular and church connections in the city of Chicago. He has put his shoulder to the office wheels to help push the work forward. His business training with a large manufacturing corporation, and his wide experience in branch and district church work, have well qualified him to study and assist in the handling of the problems relating to the industrial aspects of the church work. In this the Bishopric have taken the initial steps in the organization of an Industrial Department adequate to meet the increasing demands in connection with the Zioniac program. The present industrial and economic conditions, which have thrown hundreds of our people out of employment, emphasize the necessity of action in this direction.

Going Forward

These general features of this department's activities, upon which we have but briefly touched, will give our readers some idea of the volume of business carried on in the Presiding

INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM

The ideals of those in charge of the Health Department of the church are to keep the Saints well, but for those who are overcome with disease or accident this institution is maintained and is daily rendering most appreciated service to the many members, and others, who know of its excellent work. But having such ideals, it often does not pay its own way as institutions indeed of the world seldom do, and by our contributions to the general funds of the church we help those who need its skillful care, save many lives, and relieve much pain.

Bishop's office. It will be seen that an organization is being developed to keep pace with the growing demands of the work, and it is difficult to imagine what this department of the church will look like when the Zioniac program is in full operation.

Elder V. B. Etzenhouser and wife expect to leave Hawaii about July 23, on the S. S. Makura. They will return to Vancouver and by rail from there to Independence. The continued ill health of Sister Etzenhouser is one reason for their return.

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith left Independence June 16, to attend the Minnesota district reunion. From there he goes to other reunions in that part of the general field.

In a letter from Elder Harry Passman to the Presidency we learn that conditions in Palestine are very bad. Immigration has been stopped; business is very near at a standstill because of the riots. This makes conditions very hard on everyone and limits his efforts for missionary work. People are afraid to go out after dark and when the Jews open their shops it is only for a little while and with their keys in hand.

He rather urges again the necessity of a permanent investment there before missionary work can be undertaken.

A Need for Greater Consecration

The church should be able to raise from one to two million dollars a year.

A survey of figures and charts in the Bishop's office shows some interesting facts. Chart I, published in this number, shows that the line of membership is only a slight curve upward. This means that the increase of membership has been very nearly a constant quantity. It is very nearly the same now that it was twenty years ago, and even thirty years ago. It has shown a slight increase in later years over the gain of earlier years.

We note that the membership is double now what it was twenty years ago. We note that receipts from tithes and offerings is six times as large in 1920 as in 1900. With this increase in membership and figures in tithing one would naturally expect a geometrical increase in membership.

Part of the reasons why there has not been such a gain have already been indicated. As there is an increase in the cost of living, the value of the dollar has been only one half or one third of what it was twenty years ago.

The second reason is the growth of the industrial and institutional work of the church. This has both increased the receipts and diverted part of the expenditures.

But the third and decisive reason is that the number of men appointed to the missionary field has not materially increased. Many more men have been appointed for local work, many more have engaged in the industry and institutions of the church, but the missionary force has not gained.

If we keep all of our own children, that alone should mean a gain of between three and four per cent each year. Such a gain would be in geometrical ratio like compound interest rather than like simple interest. Many of the baptisms of our missionaries are in a class which could be church. In the early days of the church and in the early days of the organization men went out without purse or scrip; they felt the call of God to service so high, they counted not the cost. There is need for a great army of young men in both foreign and home mission work, in local and in office work, young men and young women filled with the spirit of consecration and devotion, whose great desire is: How much can I do? How much can I give, and at how little expense to the church?

The institutional work and the industrial work of the church must go on and be increased by way of establishing minimum conditions which will make Zion possible. The establishing of these works has indeed greatly increased receipts, but there is need for a consecration on the part of all members in the church to assist in sustaining the missionary work of the church. It is time that every member, from the leading officials of the church to the youngest member in the church; to the business man, the bookkeeper, the clerk, whether working for the church or for commercial interest, for every man, woman, and child to examine carefully his own self, his own desires and hopes, and his own expenditures, and then to try and reduce his expenditure to a reasonable minimum. There is "a withholding of more than is meet which leads to poverty." (Proverbs 11: 24.) Wisdom is necessary, but a spirit of consecration is necessary as well.

The minister in the field, whether local man or missionary, whether he gives his whole time to the service of the church, or part time, should examine himself and say: "What can I do to assist in forwarding the work of the church?"

The bishops, set as sentinels in the counting house, consider carefully all expenditures so as to secure the maximum of results. If the world is to be warned; if the work of the church is to be done; if we are to clear ourselves of the blood of this generation, more missionaries must be sent forth, more missionaries must be found ready to go. For them to go, for them to be sent, will require a continued effort of consecration upon the part of all of those who are laboring in the affairs of business and of work.

The great work shall continue as means permit.

Those who are in the employ of the church should strive to keep their requirements to a minimum and if possible to turn back into the coffers of the church as large a part as they can of the allowance received from the church, whether for family, for expenses, or by way of salary or wages. The responsibility is not less on the man who works in the office of the church than it is on the missionary on the firing handled by local men, the baptism of our children. The distinct gain from missionary work is the bringing in of new families.

Clearly there is need for a new spirit of consecration in the line. It is not less on the missionary of the firing line than it is on the man of business. Such consecration demands and requires the utmost care and wisdom in the expenditure of funds. The church should be able to raise from one to two million dollars a year and then spend it with economy, so that every dollar counts for one hundred cents of effective work.

The time is near at hand when a call must go forth for greater devotion, for the faith of earlier days with all the added knowledge that our people have gained from the experiences of the years. Are we ready to do our part?

A Survey of Church Membership and Tithing

A survey of the summary below shows year by year since 1890 a growth in church membership, the net increase and percentage of increase, also the amount of tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus paid in each year, and the amount paid per member of the general church. This does not include special offerings and funds.

A rapid survey shows that the gain in church membership averages about 2,000 for the ten years, 1890 to 1900, or 6 per cent.

*Includes $26,011.55 surplus tithing.

There is a slight decline in the net actual increase for the next ten-year period, 1901 to 1910, and on account of the increase in church membership a decided decrease in percentage to 3.56 per cent increase per year.

The last decade shows a decided gain both in members and in percentage, as the average per year has been over 3,000 and the percentage 4.4 per cent.

Summing up the tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus by ten-year periods, the average from 1890 to 1900 was $1.72; 1901 to 1910, $2.78; 1911 to 1915 inclusive, $2.95; but the last four years, 1916 to 1920, shows an average of $5.06 per member per year.

What will the future bring? We trust it will mean an increased devotion to the work of the church on the part of all.

The Spirit of the Reorganization

From the beginning, this church has been known for the spirit of faithful determination that has characterized its members.

From its beginning in 1852 to the present day the members of this church have been characterized by a persistent faith that has amounted at times to what might be called a dogged determination. Individuals and communities alike have developed this trait till as a church we have a reputation for thoroughness in our religious profession.

Only recently one of our religious opponents stated in public that we should be avoided by those not well posted in religious matters, the statement carrying the definite inference that we were all well posted concerning the Bible. We appreciate the compliment, given even as it was, and can only wish we were more worthy of it.

But even if we were all unusually well informed, it would still not be sufficient. To know is not always an insurance that we shall do good with our knowledge, so we must look further than to any superficial impressions we may give to others. There must be something more than appears to a casual observer that has not only held the organization together but has allowed it to make a steady and constant growth in spite of the scattered condition of its members and the impossibility of desirable cooperation.

As we analyze the lives of the stalwarts of the church, "The Old Guard," and the present line-up of its ablest exponents, we seem to find a dominant note, which if we were to try to express in a sentence would be, "A living faith in the ultimate success of the church." This unswerving faith in the future has been the saving ray of sunshine during many a dark day of discouragement. It has tided us over many years of slow growth, when as a church we have been too weak in numbers and means to carry out our most cherished plans.

This abiding faith is notably lacking in the lives of those among us who when the skies are clear and the times are favorable say they want to consecrate all, but who fail to do so and are not to be found among the faithful. The spirit of the world encourages a sort of faithless optimism in the present, but inclines its possessors to let the future care for itself.

A true Saint believes in the present, but analyzes its tendencies as to the future, seeking to give a true evaluation to all that goes to make up both our to-days and our to-morrows. He reads with faith the prophecies upon which this church is built, and has full confidence in their promises. He reads of the visions had by holy men of old, when a panoramic view of the future has been opened to their inner vision, and with them believes in the wonderful events of the latter days, the dispensation of the fullness of times.

He whose life is actuated by this living faith sees in the ripened state of iniquity prevailing in the world to-day the harbinger of a crisis that can only end in the manifestation of God's power to the destruction of the wicked. His optimism is of the most wholesome sort, being based on the triumph of virtue rather than in a blind hope that since

Yet we are convinced that the combination of interest, knowledge, faith, persistency, discrimination, self-denial, and attitude makes one an ideal Saint and has had the effect of fusing a body of people into an organization that is a marvel to those who study it.

Those whose characters are thus influenced are willing to sacrifice to the limit because of their vast faith in the outcome of the church program. In fact, those who are thus inspired have been the saving factor in the church from the beginning. They have exceeded their natural "quota" of virtues in order to make up the deficiency caused by the wavering and unfaithful.

For years the church struggled under discouraging debt, yet the members plodded valiantly on. When the call came for a special effort to pay off this debt the result was gratifyingly good. The debt was paid. It was a manifestation of the spirit of the church—it is the spirit of the church in operation.

The call is now made for a special effort to liquidate the present quickly-incurred deficit of the church. It must be done. We have confidence that the same spirit of courageous self-denial and sacrifice that has been a determining factor with us for nearly seventy years will prevail, and we shall notably succeed. It is mostly a matter of will, and the new generation should possess a double portion of it. We believe they do and that we shall now have still another demonstration of it. E. D. MOORE.

To a person of this type, the coming of the endowment of divine power is an accepted development of the near future and one fraught with unlimited possibilities.

And still another factor in the life of a genuine Saint is a wholesome appreciation for the present-day manifestations of the Spirit. When men and women of the church, inspired by the spirit of revelation, speak for God, there is not blind credulity manifested, but a friendly spirit of consideration for both the message and its bearer. The messages thus delivered, agreeing with the utterances of the divinely inspired of all ages and having the appreciated factor of local application, give one a wonderful sense of security regarding our spiritual affiliations.

Perhaps no one of these qualifications we have suggested is the determining factor in what we have chosen to consider "The spirit of the Reorganization." Rather it seems to be a combination of all these and much more that makes a member of this church essentially different from those of other churches.

There are many degrees of faith; there are innumerable combinations of personality, and a wide range of ability to stick to tasks till they are completed.

Explanation of the Charts

Graphic analysis of operating and expenses and assets and liabilities.

The charts on the opposite page give a graphical presentation of the "Condensed statement of operating income and expenses" for the period from July 1, 1920, to May 1, 1921, as shown on page 597 of this issue.

These charts have been prepared so that our readers may see, at a glance, the relative proportion of Operating Income and Expenses, as well as the proportions of Assets and Liabilities.

Chart No. 1. The Operating Income and Expenses for the ten months' period divides the circle in two halves, one half representing the Operating Expenses for ten months, and the other half representing the Operating Income and Deficit for the same period, including tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus. The Operating Income does not include special funds, such as Christmas Offering, Auditorium Fund, etc.

Chart No. 2. This chart represents the Operating Expense portion of Chart No. 1, and shows the purposes for which the $513,390.11 was spent. It will be noted that approximately 61 per cent of the total expenditures consist of family allowances and elders' expense, or approximately 73 per cent of the total income received during the period.

Chart No. 3. This chart represents the other one half of Chart No. 1, consisting of the Operating Income and Deficit. It shows the source of income as well as the proportion from tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus, as compared with other income; such as, contributions for church institutions, real estate, and miscellaneous income, such as interest, dividends, etc. It will be noted that the income from tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus is equal to approximately 76 per cent of the total operating expenses.

Chart No. 4. This chart represents all special funds, which include the Auditorium Fund and Christmas Offering, as well as other special funds, such as the Temple Fund, Organ Fund, etc. Approximately all of the Christmas Offering Fund has been used for the purchase of land. The Auditorium Fund, in the amount of $251,561.66, consists of the following:

Cash	$ 67,811.66
Certificates of Deposit	13,500.00
Liberty Bonds	122,600.00
Temporary investments properly secured	24,000.00
Real estate	23,650.00

In view of the stringent financial condition caused by the general depression in business, the Presiding Bishopric deemed it advisable to exchange part of the special funds for Liberty Bonds from Operating Funds, rather than to borrow the money needed for current operating purposes and pay

Foreign Missions

The church is doing successful work in a number of fields, yet only a start has been made.

In the early history of the church the need of carrying the gospel abroad in all the world was most keenly felt. In the early history of the Reorganization the same spirit was manifested; men went abroad at great personal self-denial.

Owing to the World War, work in Europe and the Near East was practically at a standstill for five years. It is only within the past year or two that foreign mission work has been at all a possibility, and even the last year has presented many difficulties and restrictions. It is but a few months interest at perhaps 7 or 8 per cent. Other temporary, properly secured, interest-bearing investments were made out of the special funds, the income of which will, of course, be added to the fund. The investments made out of the Auditorium Fund are of such a nature that they can be liquidated upon short notice and thus will not in any way interfere with the construction of the General Conference Auditorium.

Chart No. 5. This chart represents the financial condition of the church as of May 1, 1921, and shows at a glance the ratio of the assets to the liabilities and net worth. This chart, however, only includes the general assets and liabilities of the church and does not include the assets and liabilities of the church institutions, such as the Sanitarium, Graceland College, Herald Publishing House, etc. It is to be noted that all of these charts represent the business for the first ten months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

since permission was given for our missionaries to go to South Africa. It is only about a year since permission was given for missionaries to enter the Holy Land. There are still restrictions in certain parts of Europe, and difficulty in traveling from one part of Europe to another. Yet, as the way opens up, our best opportunity confronts us for entering this field of service.

Other churches are sending great numbers of missionaries. Some who will present the message in a very different way than that in which it was presented through Joseph Smith, are sending more than one hundred missionaries to Western Europe. There is a great responsibility upon the church to see that the world is warned and that the honest in heart have an opportunity to hear the gospel of Jesus Christ.

During the past year, six or more new missionaries were sent to the South Sea Islands. Two of the Twelve in Australia returned to America and arrangements are made for the return of Elder Butterworth and family.

A like number has been sent directly to England to labor in that field under the immediate supervision of Apostle J. A. Gillen, and since his return from Palestine Apostle T. W. Williams. Elder Charles Fry has been ordained bishop and placed in charge of the financial work in Great Britain. Arrangements were also made for the return of Bishop May and his family from England.

During the past year President F. M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams have spent ten months in a survey of conditions in the British Isles, Western Europe, and the Near East. They have not made simply a brief excursion, but have the year Elder A. H. Christenson and family returned to America from the Society Islands. Elders Carl Greene and Alexander Kippe are doing good work in Germany. Elder Peter Anderson, of Council Bluffs, has been having some success in Denmark. His wife, we are informed, has lately gone to join him there.

The establishing of missionary headquarters has also added to the clerical expense of the church. Classes are being conducted at Saint Leonard's in London in educational subjects, preparing young people both for mission work and also to take further work at Graceland College. The establishing of a definite headquarters gives an added dignity to our work and increases the possibilities for securing successful openings in Europe and presenting our work in a favorable way before the people of Europe and the Near East: for both Palestine and the Near East are under the jurisdiction of Great Britain.

These items, though relatively small in themselves, mean in the aggregate a very decided increase in expenditure for foreign mission work during the last year; and with the support and approval of the church this expenditure should be still further increased.

There are many people in Europe, especially in northwestern Europe, ready to hear the word of God if only sufficient missionaries can be sent to them.

At present the work is well established in the Society Islands, in Australia, Hawaii, Canada, and Great Britain.

Brother Halb and wife are conducting Sunday school and services at Basel, Switzerland, and Brother Passman and wife are doing the same in Jerusalem. It is a start, but much more remains to be done.

CHILDREN'S HOME: LAMONI

One of the finest philanthropic ventures in which the church has engaged is this institution for the care of the orphaned and unfortunate children of the church. It not only cares constantly for from twenty-five to fifty, but has become a clearing house for the placing of children in homes where they may become a part of a good family and thereby help others while they are being given a real home. The funds to maintain this place are largely augmented by the fine garden raised each year, and the fruit gathered, but most of it must come from the general fund.

remained in each place for days and weeks and months, giving sufficient time for a thorough investigation of social, political, and religious conditions. When one considers the tremendous importance of this survey for the future work of the church, the amount of expense involved appears indeed to be small.

We trust our readers have not been misled by the brief reports received. The reports concerning the church's outline for the work of the church they have tried to reserve entirely for the joint council, and to say nothing about it until the joint council had considered it, but we are assured that their best thought, time, and attention has been given to that problem, the possibility of the introduction of our work in Western Europe and the Near East.

Previously Elder Harry Passman and wife had been sent to the Holy Land, Jacob Halb and wife to Switzerland, Bishop A. V. Karlstrom and wife to the South Sea Islands. During

Problems Before the Church

An enumeration of some of the things before us with the emphasis on the key to the situation: doing the most important first.

There are two general attitudes we may have towards the problems developed in the growth of the church.

One is that of passive interest, which impels us to pray that Zion may prosper and triumph, but allows us to rise from our knees and straightway forget our responsibility because we know not the full meaning of the terms.

The other is born of the same good impulse, but is a living, moving, enduring force that persistently grows and broadens and deepens till it becomes more a passion than a sentiment.

We dislike the first so much that we can hardly be respectful towards it, so we shall quietly draw the curtain of silence and pass on to the second.

And may we take it for granted that our readers are dominantly of the second type? If they are not, we may earnestly hope that the time is near at hand when they shall change their state of mind.

Those who sense the responsibilities and appreciate the possibilities of the church organization that lists us as members are not likely to be among those whom, like the church at Laodicea in John's day, the Spirit condemned: "Thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

We prefer not to tarry here to consider the fearsome outcome if we fall into that condition. We do want to set forth rather briefly some of the fundamentals involved in the success of the church.

Two General Problems

Generally speaking, the problems of the church from the beginning have been divisible into two grand divisions:

1. The missionary or propaganda problem, which involves the carrying of the message of the church into new communities. The preaching of this gospel was the first great effort of the church, the taking of the Book of Mormon to

KIRTLAND TEMPLE: KIRTLAND, OHIO

This church building, erected in 1835 by the great sacrifices and exertions of a comparatively small group of devoted Saints, is a historic structure much visited by tourists. A missionary stationed here conducts through the place annually many hundreds of visitors from all over the world, who learn the facts concerning our faith. It thereby becomes one of our best mediums for the desirable kind of publicity.

the Indian race evidently being the prime motive back of the first missionary tour undertaken by the church.

2. Alongside the problem of extending the territory and increasing the membership of the church immediately sprang up the internal demand that those converted to the sound of the gospel be fully established in the principles that provide for the more abundant life. The establishment of Zion was by divine edict a definite plan for bringing about better temporal conditions and consequently greater spiritual perfection.

True, these may be subdivided into many specific problems, as we shall note as we proceed, but the two big ones cover the others.

There is no need for us to attempt to estimate the relative importance of either of these problems. Anyone will admit that the missionary work of the church is worthy our best efforts and thought.

Again, as many will give ready assent that the development of our present membership and natural increase is a very important responsibility. The internal problem is a very important one.

There is no occasion for comparisons that might become odious. It would be unseemly for the right eye to quarrel with the left over its superiority.

So, if we discuss one of our problems first, it may or may not be that we consider it the most important. The order of procedure might be for the same reason that a certain photography company lists its "releases" alphabetically: that there may be no seeming favoritism shown.

Let us reiterate. We believe that to set forth these problems and discuss them is to help us properly to appreciate all that is involved in our task. That is our aim; let it not be forgotten in the process.

It is logical to begin with the missionary problem of the church as it exists to-day. We have a message of import to Jew and Gentile. We have a special appeal to the Indian. We are charged to preach this gospel of the kingdom to the nations of the earth.

Missionary Problem Begins at Home

It is a problem that begins at home. We have been warned, and must warn our neighbor. It is just possible that in our tendency to turn over this missionary work to the men engaged definitely in it, we as communities have not cleared our skirts of responsibility towards those living near us.

Until a branch, through its ministry and members, has done more than hold its local meetings and attend to the usual routine, it may be held accountable at the judgment for the failure of the people surrounding it to hear the glad-sound of the gospel.

The missionary spirit must rule in our lives. It must permeate till it leavens and lightens the whole group. When this is so, petty and often distracting local issues are often forgotten in the wholesome unity prevailing. The joy of missionary attainment is by no means confined to those who stand in the pulpit to preach the gospel. All are called to the great work, though the work of each of us may differ.

But, though the missionary problem begins at home, like the child, there comes a time when it must go out into other fields.

The church must depend on the missionary spirit which has its inception in the home and the home branch, to impel its members not only to support the great work of spreading the gospel into all lands, but to send its representative members out under the direction of the missionary arm of the church till the field, ripening unto the harvest, is reaped, and the sheaves brought in.

The Response Is Good

Men and women of ability and consecrated purpose are required in an ever-increasing number to swell the ranks of the missionary army of the church. It may mean the rearrangement of other plans for them; it may demand considerable sacrifice; it may mean homesickness and heartaches; but it is a cause that God has set his approval upon and which he has promised to bless abundantly.

The wonderful response to the call for young men and women to enroll at Graceland College for the year of intensive preparation for missionary work indicates that the hearts of our coming warriors in the gospel cause are consecrated to the work. And the number of applications increases faster than the finances of the church allow provisions to be made to care for them. It costs a considerable sum to spend a year at Graceland, but the financial authorities of the church are willing to advance the money for this purpose to be repaid in service—when the funds are available. We must see that they are available, in order to carry on this necessary work.

The missionary out in the field invariably finds the demands so great and his efforts so infinitesimal in his big field that he writes in desperation to headquarters occasionally, asking that more men be sent into that ripening harvest field. He can see how it would be possible to utilize to advantage the services of dozens of men and women, yet often he is practically alone and must continue so because there are not enough funds to put the men in the field.

The field is indeed white and the laborers are few, but we have faith in the response when we can assure our workers that their just needs will be looked after.

We have but hinted at the missionary program. There is the entire foreign field with openings now ready and many others only awaiting the time when we shall be able to send out the workers. In every direction we might send many men and women with great advantage.

The printing of tracts in foreign languages is a part of our missionary problem that overlaps the internal problem. Indeed, the field of internal administration has already become somewhat complex and grows more so as the days pass.

Our Internal Needs

Our administrative forces must keep pace with our increased membership. In fact, the ratio should be greater, for with a doubled membership we could well triple or quadruple our administrative activities.

There are always some church bystanders who stand by and wail: "Why don't they do something?" "They" are doing something, in a broad way, and the results are gratifying. For instance, there is the smoothly-working real estate department in the offices of the Presiding Bishopric, wherein every piece of property owned by the church is carefully looked after, its title examined, its upkeep, insurance, and various details cared for. An employment bureau is planned for and will no doubt be an early development.

In the creation of some seventeen church commissions, each headed by an expert in his line, such as educational, labor, transportation, etc., we have the machinery for some wonderful achievements, but even the cost of their preliminary surveys must be advanced from the general funds of the church.

We have some industrial enterprises, such as retail establishments in Independence and Lamoni, managed by groups of men on a stewardship basis. There are also banks in which the controlling interests are held by Saints, and which are managed by Latter Day Saints. The church owns a complete modern laundry plant in Lamoni.

These are but a few of the institutions which should be the forerunners of many others. We should have groups of members cooperating on production and distribution, to the mutual advantage of themselves and the church at large. Anyone can suggest in a few moments a goodly list, but we must admit that the matter of financing them is an important consideration.

Daily there are hundreds of demands made on the bishopric throughout the church. A lad just out of school will ask for the loan of a few dollars to take him to the harvest fields to work. A sister needs a little help to procure medical advice and perhaps pay for an operation, until the list of legitimate and other calls lengthens amazingly. It should be possible for those charged with this sort of responsibility to furnish the needed assistance.

We have before us a wonderful educational program. Graceland College is unable to keep pace with the increasing demands made for courses there. The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences has an increasing enrollment, but no places adequate for its class work. At present they scatter all over town in order to have places to study.

Our entire department of religious education faces the tremendous problem of providing a course of study adequate for the Sunday schools and Religio classes all over the church. The initial effort and expense will be large, though any thoughtful person will realize that it is not only justifiable but imperative.

It is impossible to list all the undertakings before us to-day

THREE HISTORIC NAUVOO BUILDINGS

To the reader's left is the "Homestead," in the center the "Mansion House," and to the right "Nauvoo House." These old-time buildings in "The City Beautiful" on the Mississippi have been put in good repair and are now visited by hundreds of people annually, who pass through the once largest city in Illinois, sight-seeing.

or to suggest those possible for the future. In our Department of Publicity alone we might spend an increasingly large amount each year in profitable publicity for the church. We have it within our power to present ourselves to the world through the press in a way that will double the efficiency of our missionary force. It should be done. Our Health Department and our Department of Music furnish of themselves the method for a wonderfully effective program.

But all these propositions depend largely on the regular and consistent payment of tithes and offerings. It means that we must each and every one conscientiously pay not only our tithing but such offerings and consecrations as will enable the financial officers of the church to carry on the activities with which we have charged them. It means a definite loyalty to our own institutions.

One of our immediate problems is to rescue ourselves from a deficit by a short, quick pull. The one next in order is to understand the situation and see to it that we do not again relapse into debt and burden.

The times have been precarious. There has been unemployment; there have been falling prices for the farmer, the man upon whom we all depend. All these things are recognized and evaluated, yet who of us would let the church subsidize in a financial panic without a terrific struggle? We must do our part, and the time is now. E. D. MOORE.

Necessaries or Unnecessaries

Bishop M. C. Fisher, of Boston, Massachusetts, has for several years kept an account book of his expenditures, which he classifies under two headings: "Necessary" and "Unnecessary."

In the case of an individual this would be a matter of judgment. Is an education necessary? If so, how much of schooling? Food and clothing are necessary, but one can live on very cheap food, or can buy unnecessary delicacies. The man doing hard physical labor will require more beefsteak than the man engaged in clerical work or as a student. A sick person may require the delicacies that one in good health does not. There is, of course, a margin between that supply a large number of local pastors giving their full time to that work.

There is a decided advantage in foreign mission work in men receiving training in the customs of the country. The better the man is prepared, the better service he will be able to render. Still, missionaries have gone out who could not even read or write.

Is education necessary for the individual or for the church?

Is help necessary to the poor; to the boy who wants railroad expenses to get to the harvest fields?

The facts are, that so far as the church is concerned, the amount available for aid to the poor, for the support of our church institutions, including the college, the various homes, which is essential for bare living, and that which is advisable for efficient living; and between that which may be spent in ordinary course and that which is extravagant or wasteful. Extravagance or wastefulness is never excusable.

Judgments may differ as to necessaries. The man may give himself, or his account book, and the church, the benefit of the doubt.

For the church, what are the necessaries? Probably we would all agree that the missionary work is essential. Certainly pastoral work is essential, yet pastoral work can be handled by local men who spend the bulk of their time and energy in earning a living, even though it cannot be so successfully handled in the larger branches. Some small branches think they need a man devoting his whole time to their local services, others may think not. The finances of the church, the demands made upon the church, make it impossible to and the sanitarium, depends on the margin between receipts of tithing, offering, and consecration, surplus, and offerings made by Saints and friends to the elder in the field, and the amount required to meet the necessary expenditures for elders' expense, elders' families, and administration expense.

Yet this expense for the poor and for church institutions can hardly be classed as unnecessary.

Monthly Cash Receipts

The chart above shows month by month the amount received from July 1, 1919, to April 1, 1920, for tithes, offerings, and consecration. For purpose of comparison the chart also clearly indicates the amount received for the same purposes during a like period of the year 1920 to 1921.

The receipts for the General Conference Auditorium doubtless had their effect on the tithes and offerings for the past year, hence, these receipts are also charted. It will be noted that for the first four months the receipts for the year 1920-21 for tithes, offerings, and consecration exceeded those of the previous year, but for the succeeding five months has been decidedly less in total, though very near the same for the month of January.

When, however, the receipts for the General Conference Auditorium are taken into consideration, the receipts for 1920-21 greatly exceed those for the previous year, with the single exception of March. But it must be remembered that offerings for special purposes are not used for general operating expenses of the church.

The Cost of Administration

The cost of administration in the Bishop's office is shown forth clearly by five-year periods in the table below. The amount of receipts for 1920-21 has been estimated on the basis of actual collection for eleven months to June 1. All of the figures in this column include not only tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus, but also Christmas offering, the usual institutional funds, and the funds collected the past year for the auditorium.

E. J. Smith, the chief accountant in the Bishop's office, prepares at regular intervals, such charts as are used in this number. The amount of collection for the year is totaled month by month and compared with report to that month of the previous year. Expenditures are also totaled month by month and compared with the pro rata share the budget allowed and with the expenditures of the previous year.

This gives a constant check on the business of the church and previous figures on which to base an estimate of what the church is able to do institutionally.

The growth shown by the church financially and the increased contribution is a matter of great interest to all of us.

Operating Income and Expenses

Some meaningful figures are shown in accompanying tables.

Concerning the above statement on operating income and expenses, this statement does not include the Christmas offering or subscriptions to special funds, as the auditorium fund. There is included in the statement of tithes and offerings the offerings received by our elders from Saints and friends, amounting to over $43,000. The income from real estate is on current account, not from sale of real estate.

Under "expenses," "family allowance and elders' expense," include the family allowance, traveling expenses, and personal expenses of the general officers of the church. It does not include office expenses.

"Administration expense, local bishop and agents," is the same item which has been carried for years under the heading of "miscellaneous." Thus we note for the six months ending June 30, 1919, "Paid to miscellaneous, by local bishops and agents, $33,796.31."

As to the items included in "church institutional expense" and "administration expense: church offices," an analysis and comparing with the budget is given in the comparative statement which follows:

The new building for Graceland College is not included in the summary above, as that belongs to real estate account.

In the "church institutional expense," no statement has been made on behalf of the Sanitarium, but examination of their budget submitted to the conference of 1920 shows that their receipts and expenditures would very nearly balance, except items for permanent investment, of which the most important is for "new buildings, $25,000." This latter has not been undertaken. The comparative statement with the budget follows and should be self-explanatory.

Note that interest and other charges included above are not included in this statement of administration expenses. These items amount to $8,553.

Also note that to elders' expense there is added also $113, 275.37, received from Saints and friends, but not included in budget statement below. This added to budget statement below gives the total for elders' families and elders' expenses of $310,121.56.

News Developments

During the week, June 5 to 12, a series of meetings especially for the young people were held at Knobnoster, Missouri. R. D. Weaver was the speaker and Harold C. Burgess had charge of the music.

After the close of the special services for young people at Knobnoster, Elder Harold C. Burgess paid a short visit to Saint Louis the 14th, returning to Independence to take charge of the music at the week-end services of the Religio. These services consisted of special singing and talks by Elder D. T. Williams and Elder H. C. Burgess on their experiences in these special services. Elder Williams has been the speaker at five of such services, covering six weeks, and Elder Burgess has had charge of the music at seven of such special services.

Saturday evening and Sunday morning at 11 a. m. Elder Williams preached, and at 7.30 a. m. Sunday the young people's prayer service was held under the presidency of Elbert A. Smith, R. V. Hopkins, D. T. Williams, and H. C. Burgess.

A splendid spirit was manifested throughout. The theme was consecration and all the testimonies were on a high plane. Those who think the spirituality of the church is less than years ago should attend one of these prayer services. Two prophecies, a song, and a vision were received, and there was also much spiritual power in the testimonies, songs, and prayers.

Joseph Arber, for many years a general missionary of the church, passed away Saturday, June 18, at 8.30 a. m. On Children's Day, June 12, he was one of five who baptized forty-four children in the font on the Temple Lot. He was Married

BROWN-AREDONDO. In San Jose, California, June 5, 1921, Sister (Miss) Norma Edna Aredondo to Mr. Theodore N. Brown, of Yerington, Nevada. The wedding ceremony was performed in the Saints' church, corner of Spencer Avenue and Grant Street; Elder C. W. Hawkins, district president, officiating. Sister Norma had a host of friends, both in and out of the church, and the building was crowded to its seating capacity. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and valuable presents. The couple will make their home in Yerington, where Mr. Brown is engaged in the automobile business.

Songs of the Legion

A Good Songbook for Reunion Purposes

Reunion time is almost upon many of our districts, and many of the reunion authorities are puzzling themselves to know how to care for the feature of congregational singing at the various services. We feel that in Brother Hoxie's little booklet, Songs of the Legion, there may be had something that will answer the purpose nicely. It is a little book containing quite a number of the most popular songs (words only) from both Hymnal and Zion's Praises; is small, neat, and compact, and can be easily "toted" in an ordinary coat pocket. Besides these songs it has a number of popular folk songs that can be sung in a community way by the assembled Saints. It can be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, at the rate of fifteen cents per copy, or seven copies for one dollar. Owing to the fact that the second edition will not be reprinted, the supply is somewhat limited, and it should be remembered that the profits of this little book go to the church. A. H. Mills.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor, Granville S. Trowbridge, business manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

What Would You Have Left Undone?

The work of the church for the fiscal year will soon be a matter of record. However, its continuing influence in the lives of our people cannot be estimated, and the words and influence of our faithful men will be like the pebble that's dropped in the water and the waves circle out to the shore. The shores are eternity itself. The work has been done—BUT NOT ALL PAID FOR. Would you not far rather pay this $100,000 deficit than to have left that much work undone?

Ask Yourself---

Would you have put fewer missionaries in the field?

Would you have paid their families less?

Would you have closed the Children's Home?

Would you have turned the old folks out?

Would you have shut down Graceland College?

Would you have bought less land in Zion?

Would you have held back all improvements?

No! You would have done all that has been done. You ordered it in General Conference. You desire the church to move forward. You have faith in God and his Cause.

You are now called upon to sacrifice with your brethren for twelve days that means may be provided to meet the need.

What will your response be to the call?

Fundamentals

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, June 5, 1921.

"And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16: 18.

"Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And everyone that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand; and the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it."—Matthew 7: 24-27.

"Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."—Hebrews 12: 26-28.

If we ask any man any question concerning life he will give an answer that is based to a large extent on his own experiences, and in turn those experiences grow out of the fundamental philosophy of life that he has governed himself by. The application of these remarks will be seen later and may be illustrated by some examples.

If we ask the time-worn question, for instance, "Is marriage a failure?" we will receive a great variety of answers. One woman with the hardest, most cynical, and worldly-wise smile ever seen out of hell will say, "Yes, it is the biggest failure there is." She is thinking about her own experience. She recalls the brief courtship, the hasty marriage, the six weeks or six months of disillusionment, and then the divorce court. Another woman, with the happiest smile ever seen out of heaven, will say, "No, it is not a failure; but life would be a failure without it." She is thinking about her happy home, her loving children, her kind and considerate husband. She recalls the experiences she had as a sweetheart, wife, and mother. She feels that without these things life would have been a failure. She answers our question in the light of the individual experience that she has had. Probably in each instance the experience was the result of the fundamental philosophy of marriage that either the individual or her husband or both of them lived by while they were in that state. In the one instance the philosophy of one or both parties to the contract embraced only selfish gratification. It contemplated so much as possible the escape from responsibility and the gratification only of the senses. In the other instance, the philosophy of marriage contemplated duty and responsibility. It had in mind the home and the family. It contemplated the honoring of the marriage covenant and the promise to keep themselves "for each other and from all others." It cont... it would endure from the first joy ride of the... until one or the other took the last sad ride... the nodding plumes of the village hearse.

As a natural result of these experiences the answer to our question was determined. One couple got down to fundamentals and established themselves on a rock, and the other did not. It seems to me that, perhaps from the very start, in many instances there is made a sad mistake along that line.

I was out riding Decoration Day on the Blue Ridge Boulevard. There were thousands of automobiles on that road. And I noticed at intervals, quite frequently, there would pass an automobile in which there sat some young man with a young lady wrapped in his arms, while apparently he was guiding the car by Christian Science. This was on the public highway. Was the young lady trying to get away from him or shrinking back in maidenly reserve from the thousands of eyes? No. She was, I might almost say, trying to crawl all over him. It was not merely that they held hands in public, and I don't suppose you could hang a young man if he slipped his arm around his girl's waist out on the street; but there in the blaze of the afternoon sun, on a most public highway, viewed by thousands of eyes, they were giving themselves away to voluptuous embraces and passionate demonstrations that every atom of maidenly reserve and gentlemanly decency would dictate ought to be reserved for seclusion. Numerous couples were doing this.

I think that kind of a beginning presages a bad ending. That kind of a curtain raiser indicates there will be a tragedy in the third act, if it is not reached in the second act. And it may be that this passionate, shameless, Babylonian, premarriage love-making that goes on so freely in the streets and dance halls at the present time is the reason that so many people later on say that marriage is a failure.

This is not simply the alarm of religious cranks. There is not a college in the land that has not considered this new decadence of morals and the apparent recession of human modesty.

Is Christianity a Failure?

I started out to give you an illustration and it will be bad homiletics to confine a whole sermon to an illustration. But you may take any other question. The question, for instance, that so many are asking: "Is Christianity a failure?" Many are asking it and many are answering it; and the answer you get will depend upon the individual experience of the ones giving the answer, and their experience in turn depends upon the fundamental concept of Christianity to which they have conformed their lives. One man dug deep and established his Christian character on a rock, and he answers without hesitation that Christianity is not a failure. The other man builds his house on the sand; the storm comes and demolishes it and he rises up out of the ruins and says, "Christianity is a failure. The church has gone to the dogs." You have but to look around you to see that performance repeated continually.

The fault was not with the church of Christianity, but with the individual, and it rested with the difference there is between real Christianity and superficial Christianity. You know that old-fashioned mahogany furniture will wear for generations; it will never peel off. But mahogany veneer will peel off any time when it is subjected to hard knocks. So real Christianity will endure, but the Christianity that is put on the outside will fall away sooner or later.

Without doubt if you had asked this question of Judas Iscariot he would have said without hesitation, "Yes, Christianity is a failure." He was willing to sell it, or the hope and interest that he had in it, for thirty pieces of silver. But if the question had been put to John he would have answered, "No, Christianity is not a failure."

There was a time in the life of Peter when he would have said, "Yes, it is a failure." It did not keep him from lying and swearing and deserting his Master. Jesus said to him, "When you are converted, strengthen your brethren." Peter was trying to make love to the church with one arm while he hung on to the things of the world with the other. But after Pentecost, and more and more as he grew in grace and the knowledge of the truth, his answer would have been clear and definite, because there came a time when he established himself upon fundamentals. And he reveals that in his philosophy where he says, "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance."

This afternoon my exhortation to the people is that if we are to solve the problems of Zion and make a success of our Christian warfare, it is exceedingly necessary that we give attention to fundamentals. Any individual who is staking his faith on things that are transitory and of no enduring worth is liable to fall. The apostle tells us in the Hebrew letter that everything will be shaken, both in heaven and on earth, and that the things that will not stand must fall; but, he says, we have a kingdom that cannot be overthrown.

The Church Built On a Rock

So far as the church is concerned, Jesus Christ was very careful to establish it on a rock. He did not go out and find some nice level stretch of sand, where no excavation was necessary, and build the church there; but with love, and with sweat, and toil, and blood, and self-denial he dug down deep and established his church on the solid rock; and he demands that every individual in building his individual character shall with sweat and with labor and with self-denial dig down and establish himself on the rock. That is one thing that he won't do for you. He put the rock foundation under the church, but you have to put the rock foundation under your own character. That is in the sense that Peter says, we shall add to our faith, virtue; to our virtue, knowledge; to our knowledge, temperance, etc. That is practical Christianity. I have heard the Saints say they like practical sermons. We are getting down to the basis of success in Zion. It is going to depend on the individual who puts the rock foundation under his Christian character, who is like the wise man Jesus mentioned who established his house on the rock, and not like the individual who built his house on the sand.

Jesus says his church is established on a rock. We don't need especially to worry ourselves so much about the church; not if we believe this language. Jesus Christ said these words. Is there anybody in the house who for a moment doubts the sayings of Jesus Christ, or his power to execute them? We do not need to worry. If you think he is talking about this church there is no cause for worry concerning its final victory. If you think he was talking about the Methodist Church, the Baptist Church, or the Utah Mormon Church, or some other people, why, go and get in with them; but if you think he was talking about this church there is no occasion for doubt, for Jesus said he built it on the rock.

Of course this language that he used has been the subject of a great deal of speculation. People have wondered what the rock was he was talking about, some have have said it was revelation, some one thing and some another. I realize, of course, that the expression, "a rock," is figurative language that may be used sometimes to mean one thing and sometimes another. I will tell you how this language appeals to me, because it has a bearing a little later on some points I want to bring out. Jesus asked the disciples, "Whom say men that I am?" and when they answered him he said, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter answered and said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." There then followed a little conversation, but the main statement that followed was, "Upon this rock I will build my church." It seems to me that the rock that underlies the Christian church is the fact that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and the Savior of the world. Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Most religions recognize God, but there is only one religion that recognizes Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and that is the Christian religion. You take the fact away, if it could be taken away, and the Christian church would have no foundation. But fortunately that fact cannot be removed, and it stands the supreme fact on which the church of Jesus Christ rests. He is the Son of God and the Savior of the world. Of course, his message contemplates also the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

He established the church on the rock, then admonished individuals that in building their particular houses they should dig deep and build them on the rock. So the main thing for us to consider will be our individual foundations. We do not need to worry so much about the foundation of the church. We notice from time to time defections that occur within our ranks. Individuals lose the faith and quit the church for one excuse or another, some of which seem to us to be very trivial. This is no new thing, for even in the time of Christ himself there came a day when many would follow after him no more. And it continues to-day. For one reason or another individuals become discouraged and their faith is shaken and their spiritual house falls down, because it was not established on fundamentals. They were putting their trust in something that was transient.

Fundamentals in Theology

So far as the preaching of this church is concerned, from time immemorial the message that our elders have preached included what we term the principles of the gospel. It is said that when the elders asked Joseph Smith what to preach, he said, "Preach the principles." When they said, "Then what shall we preach?" he said, "Preach the principles." So the burden of our preaching throughout the world has included what we term the principles of the gospel.

Of course there has been associated with this the preaching of the Zionite principles as rapidly as we understood them and people were ready to hear them. I am aware that there has come a time when some are arguing that we have reached the stage when we should go into the world and tell the people first the story of Zion—that that is the first thing we should preach to the nations of the earth. That we should preach temporal salvation, the gathering, equality, etc., that the people are not interested any longer in faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, etc.

Personally I cannot agree with them. The message of Jesus Christ first, last, and all the time was, "Ye must be born again." He addressed the individual.

The mistake reformers make to-day is in thinking it is possible to establish a regenerated society out of unregenerated individuals. Now Jesus didn't make that mistake, but he said positively to every man, "Ye must be born again"; and he said also that except a man is born of water and of the Spirit he cannot even see the kingdom, much less enter into it. Most of these that we call the principles of the gospel cluster around this great idea of individual regeneration, of being born again through faith and repentance and baptism and the birth of the Spirit; so it seems to me that it is necessary and will be necessary to make those fundamentals of our theology so long as the church goes out to preach any message at all to sinful and sorrowing peoples. And not until individuals see the necessity of personal regeneration and actual obedience to it will they ever be in condition to "see the kingdom"—in other words, they cannot see Zion, or vision it, or get even a glimpse of it until they have actually yielded obedience to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Fundamentals in Belief

I think we must have fundamentals in our belief. I call to your attention the fact that individuals who do not pin their faith to fundamentals sooner or later come to grief. For instance, we at one time received a letter from a field where there had been given a prophecy through a certain individual. One of the missionaries wrote in and said there were four missionaries in that field who said that if that prophecy failed they would immediately quit the mission field; because if that were not true, they had no knowledge that anything connected with the church and the gospel was true.

We wrote this brother and said, "You have made a great mistake. You should build your faith on fundamentals, and one of those fundamentals is the fact that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; another is that the gospel is true and powerful to save and has been restored to earth again in these last days; another that Christ has established his church upon the rock. You must pin your faith to fundamentals and not to any passing, local, spiritual manifestation that may come through either man or woman."

A great many people have spoken in prophecy in the past and their utterances did not come true. There never has been such a manifestation that could affect the fundamentals of the Christian religion in any way; so we must pin our faith to the eternal verities and not pin it to some transient, local, passing, spiritual manifestation. So if there is anyone here who has ever been disturbed by the failure of a prophecy or tongue or vision or dream that came through any individual, it should not even remotely disturb his faith in the fundamental principles of the gospel.

Then I come in contact once in a while with an individual who concludes that Joseph Smith the Martyr was a polygamist, and, reaching that conclusion, it is the beginning of his downfall. That was the experience of W. E. LaRue, for instance.

I do not believe that Joseph Smith was a polygamist. I will just refer to two reasons. You know that every family has its family traditions that come down inside of the family and may not be known to the outer world. It happens that I was born in the old city of Nauvoo in the Mansion House. My mother and father lived there with my grandmother, the widow of Joseph Smith. I was knowing to the family traditions, and it is unthinkable to me that Joseph Smith should have had eighteen or twenty or any number of wives and some secret, family tradition should not have come down to me that would have revealed that fact. But I never heard one, even remotely suggesting that such was the case. And it is even more incredible that the late President Joseph Smith, who was twelve years of age at the time of his father's death, and lived with him in Nauvoo and continued living there for many years, should never have seen or heard or come in contact with such family traditions, if his father were a polygamist. You know what he said in the Temple Lot Suit, and you know if ever there was a man who graced Independence by his residence, who could be depended upon absolutely to tell the truth at all times, it was the late President Joseph Smith.

Again, the only time this question was ever aired before a disinterested court, competent to judge evidence, and before an unprejudiced judge, a verdict was brought in that absolved Joseph Smith. So I trust that no one will be too hard on me when I do not consider that a man is guilty when he has been proven innocent, because that would be the reversal of the principles of jurisprudence. Even Mr. Biederwolf, who lectured on Mormonism here in Independence recently, said that in his opinion the evidence did not suffice to convict Joseph Smith of complicity in the polygamy revelation; and Biederwolf, being an opponent, had every incentive to speak otherwise. Why should some of our own people be more eager than he to fasten this stigma upon the name of Joseph Smith?

I did not start out to argue this thing. I say I do not believe that Joseph Smith was a polygamist; but if evidence is ever unearthed that proves that he was, so that no one can deny it, it still will not change my faith in the least, for the simple reason that I was not baptized into Joseph Smith; I was baptized into Jesus Christ.

Some of our Whitmerite friends make a great spread over the idea that the church should take upon it the name of Jesus Christ. Did you ever stop to analyze the name of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints? What is the vital part of the name? The Church of Jesus Christ. All other words and phrases in that title are qualifying. The vital part of the name is The Church of Jesus Christ. And the church has taken upon it the name of Jesus Christ just as the Book of Mormon said it should.

If I am ever convinced that Joseph Smith was a polygamist it will not change my course in the least. I will go right on preaching the fundamental gospel principles which cannot be changed by anything Joseph Smith did or did not do.

But it seems to me that the very thing happened in the church that we would expect to happen if the claims of the Restoration were true. If he received the vision that he did, and brought forth the church that he claims to, and presented the gospel under the direction of Jesus Christ, you would expect that the powers of hell would array themselves without and within the church and try to cover the whole thing with slime, contumely, and disgrace, until no decent man would want to have anything to do with it. That is just about what the powers of hell tried to do.

There was one time in my life when a good brother came to me and said, "I have received a revelation which showed me that Joseph Smith was responsible for the introduction of polygamy." In two weeks he came back to me and said, "I have a different story to tell. I got that revelation, but it was from the Devil."

The Fundamentals of Character and Conduct

If we are to stand the trying times that are coming upon the earth, we must also give attention to fundamentals in our deportment and to the development of our Christian character. Peter, as I have already said, struck the keynote along that line in his second epistle and the first chapter. I know that this is read so often that perhaps you lose the force of it because it becomes so familiar to you, but just notice how exceedingly important it is:

"And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to your virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall."

That is getting right down to fundamentals. If you do these things, you will never fall. You will be like the wise man, who dug deeply and built carefully upon a rock, so that when the storm came his house stood. I have no fear that anyone who pursues this course will ever fall away from the church.

I think if you will stop to analyze even a few of these Christian virtues and this policy of deportment you will see how very important it is. You can see, at least, how important it is in the ministry.

Add to your faith, virtue. Is it necessary for the minister to have faith? You will say, of course, it is. If he doesn't have faith, he won't stay in the missionary field very long; and even if he did stay, what would his message amount to if he did not believe it? I do not believe anyone can put any lasting force into a message that he does not himself believe. There may be some pretty good actors in the pulpit, but people will discover, sooner or later, that they are only actors.

Is it necessary for the minister to have virtue? You know that the minister who goes out representing this church cannot successfully preach virtue unless he has it. You know that he goes into scores of homes where he is trusted as an angel out of heaven. You know that if he should betray the sanctity of one of those homes that his ministry would end. It would not necessarily follow that he would be found out. The appointing authorities might not know about it. They might not hear about it. But God would see that his ministry ended. I will tell you that no man can stand in the pulpit and preach to be godly while his conscience is saying all the time, "You are a hypocrite and a fraud; you talk godliness, yet you know what you did!" When a man goes into the pulpit in a joint debate of that kind with his conscience, he is going to lose out.

So our minister has got to have virtue, knowledge, temperance, humility. Why, if there is anything that sooner or later disqualifies a man for the ministry, it is a lack of humility. If he has the saving grace of humility he has the respect of the people. A little while ago we had a great revival for the young people in this room and the room was filled with young people. It was a wonderful affair. It was necessary while that was going on for some one to go downstairs to a smaller crowd and preach to the overflow meeting. Brother Phillips did that, and he was very successful in it. A little later I went to Lamoni and preached to a crowd of people. It was necessary at the same time for some one to go downstairs to a lesser audience and preach to them, and Brother J. W. Wight, my senior in years, did it with humility, and I honored him for it. But for years, when President Smith and I were making out the schedule for appointment for conference, there was at least one man we knew that we didn't dare ask to go downstairs and preach at conference time. Many a time I have taken the lower appointment out of consideration for the feelings of others. But, fortunately, we knew that among the ministers almost any one of the others would go anywhere we asked him to go.

There is a branch of the church not so very far from here, not more than a thousand miles, at most, where for forty years there has been a condition of discord, and it became necessary for the district president to go in and clean it up. He used some drastic means and silenced some of those men. One of those elders who was put under silence immediately wrote to the Presidency and said, "Now I appeal to you; you may immediately lift that silence or else take my name off the church record."

We like studies in contrast. I heard another story at the Sanitarium the other day. I called on Brother M. A. Etzenhouser, who had undergone an operation. He was complaining that he had not had a shave. You know how uncomfortable a man is when he has not had a shave. This brought out a little story by Brother Walter Smith, who was with me. Some years ago an elder in Independence got into trouble and was put under silence. What did he do? Did he ask that his name be removed from the record? No; but unable to serve the church in its ministry, he took his little shaving set, and every Sunday for two years he went to the Sanitarium and shaved the men who needed it. I presume it was as good as medicine to some of those men. It was the only service that he could find, and he went and did it. It was humble, personal service. It goes without saying that that man came back. He didn't even need to come and ask to have his license restored. The time came when he was sought out and his license was given back to him. He dug right down, clear down to the solid rock, and built his house on it. I will not tell you his name, because I do not want to embarrass him, but he is known to all of you.

I have said that you can recognize that these things are essential to the minister. Are they any less essential to the member? If the minister cannot get on without faith in Zion, do you think that you can? Why, certainly not. If you have ten thousand dollars surplus and you do not believe with all your heart in the principles that are going to redeem Zion, you will hang on to that ten thousand dollars surplus. Is it necessary for you to have virtue as well as the minister? Do you think that Zion can be built up from a people who are not virtuous? Do you think it is necessary for you to be humble and charitable?

I will tell you it is necessary for all of us to get right down to fundamentals in belief and in deportment and in the Christian qualities of our character.

Jesus, as we have said, laid the foundation, and he laid it sure. Every man ought to have a testimony in his heart that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. When you get that testimony you may occasionally run up against a solid wall. The church perhaps comes to a crisis; but you can always fall back on that testimony: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." I want, before I close, to testify here that Jesus Christ is my Savior. I do not say that simply out of form, but I know what he saved me from. Nobody else knows. You know what he saved you from. I do not. His gospel and his church have made me what I am. They have been everything to me in this world.

Now we ought to be careful, of course. We all think we are going to stand fast, but the old poem says, "Many who now stand proudly fast, shall, tried and tempted, fall at last." I have no more thought to-day of falling away than I have of cutting off my hand; yet I remember what Paul said. A cold fear, like an icy blast, came into his heart at one time, and he said: "I am afraid that, having saved others, I will make shipwreck myself." There is one way that we can make sure, and that is, to get right down to fundamentals and put our feet upon the solid rock—in our belief, in our theology, in our deportment, in our Christian development. I am sure that if we do this, God will be with us, and you remember that statement which says that if he is with us no man can be against us.

Recent word from President F. M. Smith is that he will spend a few days at the New York and Philadelphia district reunion, at Deer Park, New Hope, Pennsylvania, July 2 to 18, and probably will arrive in Independence on July 7 or 8. President Smith left Independence for the East on his way to Europe on July 3, 1920. In company with Apostle T. W. Williams, he has visited most of the places where our work is now established, and will be in a position to direct the church program in relation thereto.

The Church in Relation to Temporalities

By J. A. Bronson

A sermon on a most important phase of our church fundamentals, addressed to new members of the church.

Not alone does the church of God concern itself with the care of the spirit of man, but we find as well in the great gospel economy provision made for the temporal—the outer man. It is of that law I wish to speak this morning.

We do find comfort and encouragement in meditating upon the glories of the hereafter; joy in the hope of the advent of our Lord; peace in the quiet assurance that "the pure in heart shall inherit the earth," at such time as when "men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction," and when "the Lord shall be king over all the earth." But all this does not bring "rest" to the worn body of the widowed mother who labors daily from before the break of day till long after her loved ones have lost themselves in sleep at night, and neither does this hope of life beyond the grave clothe those children and provide them the wherewith that they may go to school and have a chance with the more fortunate in life. It does not lessen the weight of heavy loads or the minutes of weary hours for the thousands of slaves—our brothers—who are being driven in an almost hopeless warfare one against the other in their efforts to exist with their loved ones. No, it is not enough. God did not intend it to be so. He provides a plan for the salvation of man, not for but part of him. He says: "Come and learn," and gives us the assurance that "his yoke is easy," and that the "burden is light" under it.

Not by Bread Alone

The statement of the Christ, "Man shall not live by bread alone," tells us that he is concerned over both the temporal bread of life and the spiritual. Much has been said relative to the spiritual, but very little relative to God's plan regarding the temporal. It is beautiful.

The Sick in Body

"Is any sick among you?" inquires the apostle whom Jesus sent. If so, you are in an abnormal condition and have not peace and rest of mind and body such as God intends his children to enjoy; so he has provided his people help in his great plan, and so the apostle continues, "Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Here we find salvation for the sick. And if perchance one has not faith thus to come before God and receive from his hands, he continues to reach out to save. Hear him: "And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12. So we see that God wants us to enjoy health in the temporal, as well as the spiritual body. He wants us to have salvation—to be saved from those things that make us miserable.

The Poor Among Us

God has not failed the poor—the widows, orphans, unfortunates, oppressed. He wills that they be saved from the awfulness of want. He has caused that there be plenty, has prescribed the law of distribution, as well as has he the laws by which necessities of life may be secured. And he says to us, no matter how few or how many our numbers may be, there may be peace, rest, and plenty. "Learn of me." Listen to the law given to the children of God so long ago relative to the administering to the poor:

"If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thine hand from thy brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth. Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought; and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin against thee. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shalt not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto."—Deuteronomy 15: 7-15.

And then we hear the Lord saying:

"I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matthew 25: 35-40.

The Rich

There is not enough so that some may have so much. When one has too much it means that others cannot have enough. When properly converted to the spirit of brotherhood, the successful will labor for the interest of his brother who has not the natural ability to gain—cooperation. The incentive will be to bless. True joy comes through true love. We have in the world persons who are able to gather riches honestly, or otherwise. They use them selfishly. That is contrary to the divine plan. Notwithstanding these selfish persons, God has given his people a plan whereby they may separate themselves from the world, and so help and bless each other as to make it possible for them to have a Zion. It is of that I shall speak a little later.

While the Lord looks down in pity upon the poor of this earth, he rebukes the selfish rich:

"Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you. For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men. As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit; therefore they are become great, and waxen rich. They are waxen fat, they shine: yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy, do they not judge. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not mine soul be avenged on such a nation as this?"—Jeremiah 5: 25-29.

It is so to-day, surely. But as we shall show, there is salvation from all this.

Further, we find the selfish rich rebuked:

"Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them. . . . For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: they afflict the just, they take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right."—Amos 5: 11, 12.

The Sins of Sodom

"Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hands of the poor and needy."—Ezekiel 16: 49.

"What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts."—Isaiah 3: 15.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days."—James 5: 1-3.

And so we might pile up quotations from the word of God wherein it is plainly shown that it is not right in the sight of God to neglect the poor.

Consistency and System

It would not do to confiscate the properties of the rich and scatter them among the poor. To do so would not only mean to discourage the ambitions but to encourage the idler in his idleness. And it would only be a matter of a short time till the untrained would have again become poor and another dividing process would be necessary. The law of the Lord provides a system which is perfect in its nature and consistent in that it makes labor an object to all and places every man where he can best serve the body, and brings joy and gladness to all engaged.

That such a law existed in the days of Christ and under his law is evident from such quotations as may be found in the Acts 6: 1-7. Here we find that men were ordained and set apart to look after the business of caring for the poor. Also see Acts 2: 44 and Acts 4: 32. Here we find that those who believed had all things common.

The Lord's Storehouse

It is plain that in Bible times the members of the kingdom of God maintained a treasury from which the needy were supplied. In Malachi 3: 8-12 we find a very definite statement relative to the gathering of funds and means which are to be placed in the "storehouse" that "there might be meat in mine house." The means by which the "storehouse" is to be supplied, as herein stated, is by "tithes and offerings."

In 1 Chronicles 26: 20 we find this statement: "And of the Levites, Ahijah was over the treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the dedicated things." I wish to impress upon your minds that the law provided a treasure of the house of God over which a chosen officer presided. And let us not forget that this "treasury" or "storehouse" was maintained upon the principle of "tithes and offerings."

Again may we support the subject matter now before us, that we might see the more plainly the perfect way. I read from 2 Chronicles 31: 11, 12: "Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the house of the Lord; and they prepared them. And brought in the offerings and the tithes and dedicated things faithfully: over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next." "Chambers in the house of the Lord" which were prepared for "offerings and the tithes and the dedicated things" which the faithful brought in and over which men presided. System, if you please.

Tithes and Offerings

May I dwell a little longer upon the system of supplying and replenishing the "storehouse" of God with temporal things? It is so all-important! I wish again to call your attention to the reading of a part of the third chapter of Malachi, commencing with the eighth verse: "Will a man rob God?" Would you, my brother? my sister? Would I? Nay! A thousand times, nay! "Yet ye have robbed me."

Think of it! Have you? Have I? "In tithes and offerings." In this same chapter, the sixth verse, we find the Lord declaring: "I am the Lord, I change not." It is so to-day. Do we love God? Then, will we rob him longer?

What Are Tithes?

What are our tithes? Webster: "A tenth." In the twentieth verse of the 14th chapter of Genesis we find record of Abraham complying with the temporal law: "And he gave him tithes of all." And in Hebrews 7: 1, 2 we find mention of the same matter in these words: "To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all."

Jacob promised the tenth of all unto the Lord, Genesis 28: 20-22: "And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God: and this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of that thou shalt give me I shall surely give the tenth unto thee." Jacob seemed to well understand that a tithe or tenth of all that he gained belonged unto the Lord.

A Tenth of Your Increase, Not Income

I have both read and heard of organizations which tithe their members on the plan of a tenth part of all their income, principal among whom I may name the Mormons of Utah. We do not so understand the law. Rather, a tenth of the increase is our just tithe. May I read from our law relative to the matter, as given in detail, Doctrine and Covenants 106:

"In answer to the question, O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing? Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."

First, if you have more than is necessary for your maintenance, more than enough, a "surplus," put it in the "storehouse" of the Lord, where those who have not enough may be cared for. Then, when you find yourself with a justifiable amount of means to carry on your legitimate business of whatever nature, large or small, the inventory of your present worth should be taken, all of which is gain to date; a tenth of that gain is the Lord's, and after you have thus tithed your gain, it is plain to be seen that your just tithes will from then on be, not a continued re-tithing of that which you have already tithed, but of that which nets you gain or interest above that which you have already tithed. If at the close of the year or month you find that you have not gained, but have only been able to meet the just expense of up-keep, having once tithed your present properties, you have no tithing to pay. So, we see how justice is met in the divine law. It would hardly be a square deal to exact the same amount from a married man with a large family who was drawing but five dollars per day that we would from a single man who had no one to look out for but himself and who was drawing the same amount per day.

It Tries the Rich Man

We at once see that the rich man will be tried. Of what metal is he? The Lord well understood this law when he said it would be as hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven as it was for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle.

Upon one occasion the Lord was confronted with a problem similar to some of our problems to-day. He met a very rich man. This rich young man was converted to everything but brotherhood. He was selfish with that which was a surplus to him. Listen to the conversation, Matthew 19:16-22.

"And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother; and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. The young man said unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions. Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven."

May we note that this young man who kept the commandments, all save the financial law of the kingdom, had not eternal life? He lacked one thing yet. It stood between him and God. "Go and sell that thou hast, and give unto the poor." May we not say that the Lord directed him to turn his surplus into the treasury of the Lord? We find that such a treasury existed and that men were ordained to the office of caring for or presiding over it.

"He went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions." He loved his gold in a selfish way. He loved to see the glitter of it more than to see the hungry fed, and naked clothed, and the sick visited with it. Be it little or much, are we laying our part on the altar? God will judge.

The Government of God Restored

From such passages as the fourth chapter of Micah, we learn that the government of God was to be restored in the last days from which the law would proceed:

"But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

The last days are upon us. The "mountain of the Lord" (government of the Lord) has been "established" which should be exalted above all other "mountains" (governments of men), and the "God of Jacob" is "teaching us of his ways." The law is proceeding from "Zion," and from it now especially do I invite your attention on the law of "preparing the chambers," organizing the "storehouse" of the Lord, taking care of the needy, etc.

Bishop Appointed

In the days of the apostles of old, we find that men were set apart and ordained to look after the temporal affairs of the church, so that others might be free to administer to the spiritual. (Acts 6:1-7.) The poor were being neglected and the business of the church uncared for, so they were told: "Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom ye may appoint over this business." And after the men were secured they were "set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them," ordained them to a specific work. And so the law given in the government of the kingdom of to-day provides for a bishop and his counselors to take direct charge of the temporal affairs of the church.

Bishop to Receive and Disburse

In Doctrine and Covenants 72:3 we find in part the system under which the temporal law is to be carried out. Let us note carefully who is to take charge of these things, that we in our zeal do not reach out to steady the ark unwisely; that we do not run before we are sent:

"The word of the Lord, in addition to the law which has been given, making known the duty of the bishop which has been ordained unto the church in this part of the vineyard, which is verily this: to keep the Lord's storehouse [so then we are to have that to-day as well as in former years]; to receive the funds of the church in this part of the vineyard; to take an account of the elders, as before has been commanded; and to administer to their wants, who shall pay for that which they receive, inasmuch as they have wherewith to pay, but this also may be consecrated to the good of the church, to the poor and needy; and he who hath not wherewith to pay, an account shall be taken and handed over to the bishop of Zion, who shall pay the debt out of that which the Lord shall put into his hands; and the labors of the faithful who labor in spiritual things, in administering the gospel and the things of the kingdom unto the church, and unto the world, shall answer the debt unto the bishop in Zion; thus it cometh out of the church, for according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."

Thus we learn there are those appointed and ordained to the office and labor of taking direct charge of our temporalities. The law of the Lord is concerned relative to our welfare temporally as well as spiritually.

The Storehouse of To-day

In 1831 provision was made for a storehouse in the government of the church which had only been restored the year before. Doctrine and Covenants 51:4: "And again, let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop." I wish to lay emphasis upon the direction: "Let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church." That is his calling.

Now that the "storehouse" is provided for, let us notice how carefully the Lord has given us law on its maintenance and who it is that shall have direct charge: Doctrine and Covenants 42:10:

"And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people."

And herein we see salvation, Lord.

Notice further, section 82:2:

"All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that they have claim upon the church; or in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor. Amen."

An Organization Within the Organization

In section 77 we find that which was given to the church in the days of Enoch for the purpose of establishing the poor. In it we find the provision for an organization within the church of an order which was for the perfecting of the plan of the storehouse. I shall read a portion of it:

"The Lord spake unto Enoch, saying, Hearken unto me saith the Lord your God, who are ordained unto the high priesthood of my church. . . . The time has come and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you."

"Ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things" if "ye are not equal in earthly things." So the Lord has provided an order by which equality may be obtained.

Care was to be taken that Satan turn not their hearts away from the truth and they become blinded so that they would not understand the things which were prepared for them, we are told in the second verse; and that this might not be they were to be counseled by the leaders of the church. We have seen the danger of not abiding by the counsel of the leaders in our day.

Equality

We have already noted that the Lord demands that we be equal. It was so in the days of Christ and the apostles (Acts 4: 32). It should be so to-day. I am sure that you all will see the need of thus loving one another. This does not mean that we shall all have a barn of the same dimensions, a farm of the same number of acres, a barber shop with the same number of chairs; or an office with the same kind of books on the shelves. Ability must be taken into consideration. But I am sure that you see that plainly, so shall not spend time on that point.

There is another revelation regarding equality which is beautiful in spirit, and I wish to read a part of it to you. It is in section 70. I read from the third verse:

"Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; . . . in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."

Without this spirit of equality, which the law of the Lord demands, true happiness cannot be had. Those who try to find it at the expense of the poor and unfortunate cannot but stop at times and reflect on the conditions as are indicated in a poem written by Brand Whitlock, who was mayor of Toledo, Ohio, as was published in the American Magazine a few months since:

"Yes, it is beautiful; this peaceful scene
Of shimmering lake, deep in the pinewoods green,

With happy, brown-kneed children, youth and maid,
And elder folk in fine white arrayed,
At tennis, golf, and boating—all at play,
Wherewith they while these golden hours away.
And yet—and yet—I wish I could not see,
Back in the city's heat and misery,
Those patient men who toil in shop and mill,
Their work-worn wives, their children wan and still,
Wasting their lives in cruel sacrifice
To give these idle ones this paradise!"

Zion

We as a people have long dreamed of Zion. Last spring at our conference provision for the organizing of the "center place" was made, and in due time the organization was effected. The work is rolling onward; nearer and nearer do we approach the great objective. Our leaders have the vision and are pleading for full consecration. We have long tried to come up to that higher plane of clean and Christlike lives in our daily conduct, both in thoughts and deeds, so far as the spiritual side of the law is concerned. Will more of us see the need of living the temporal law? Our eyes have been set on the gathering. We see the need of a place where we can separate ourselves from the "spiritual Babylon." Just how much do we want to go to Zion? Enough to live the temporal law? Just how much do we expect the bishop to do in finding a place for us there? And how much are we willing to help him have that place ready? Do we expect him to do it all? Or are we numbered among those who sit back and by their actions say: "Won't they ever get things in order?" "I should like to go to Zion if only they would live the law and establish the conditions." Saints, the "they" should include "me"; and this is one place where the personal pronoun in the first person may very properly be used in preference to either the second or third person! When will I do my part? What am I contributing to the movement? Am I with the bishop with my means as well as with the prophet in my prayers? Or have I become a law unto myself?

May God help us to see the law in its fullness and give us such a conversion that we will be doers of it. Nowhere will we find a law so great and so beautiful as that given to us, and nowhere will we find such joy and satisfaction as is found in living this law. We cannot receive the spiritual and reject the temporal. God has joined them together; man must not cut them asunder.

A letter from the First Philadelphia Branch says the "little church on the corner that's doing something" had a successful annual picnic at Deer Park, the new reunion grounds purchased by the district. It was a most enjoyable day and included a big baseball game between Philadelphia and Brooklyn teams, resulting in an 8 to 5 score in favor of Philadelphia. A. N. Hoxie was rushed down a hill by enthusiastic jokers and, in his street clothes, given a big splash into the pool. Vengeance was had in like manner by the church chorister.

Elder W. R. Armstrong writes from Manchester, England, to mention the passing of Sister Martha Schofield, of that place, on May 4. She was a "Mary plus Martha" to the district, he says, caring for the church workers and living a life of devoted sacrifice which endeared her to all. She leaves three children, including High Priest John Schofield, of Birmingham.

Elder R. C. Chambers, of Rupert, Idaho, writes that since May 15 he has had the privilege of baptizing eighteen, and that others are interested.

The Arab and the Jew

By T. W. Williams

Some points of disagreement between the principal races occupying Palestine.

Ever since the Balfour Declaration the attention of the world has been directed to Palestine and its rehabilitation by Zionist influences.

The British Government has unequivocally declared in favor of a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine. She has designated the Zionist movement as the medium through which this is to be brought about. She has indicated that until something extraordinary arises to forfeit confidence she will confer and cooperate with the Zionist Commission in all matters relating to Jewish colonization and nationalization.

Arabs to Reason With

So far, so good. But the Arabs are still to be reckoned with. Already there have been a number of clashes between the Jews and the Arabs. A year ago last Easter an outbreak occurred in Jerusalem when some three hundred Jews and Arabs were killed and wounded. I have just received a copy of the London Daily Mail containing a Reuter dispatch to the effect that in a race riot between Jews and Arabs on May 1, this year, at Joppa, there were twenty-two Jews killed and a hundred wounded. The dispatch did not give the Arab casualties. So far all clashes have resulted measurably worse for the Jews than for their antagonists. This was not unexpected, as an attempt had been made on the life of the high commissioner before our departure from Jerusalem. The Arabs are a thorn in the flesh. Enthusiasts for Jewish colonization, together with the advocates for a national Jewish state, have not taken into account the Arab and his claims to the land which for centuries has been his uncontroverted heritage. A large part of the land of Palestine belongs to the Arabs. This right has come down from father to son during the centuries.

The Arabs look upon this move for Jewish nationalization as an invasion of their heritage and a menace to their future national life. Last December an Arab Congress was held in Haifa. A petition was drawn up and presented as a Memorial to Sir Herbert Samuel, high commissioner for Palestine, as follows:

Arab Petition

"The third Palestine Arab Congress, the rightful representative of the Arab population of Palestine, assembled in Haifa on December 13, 1920, relying on the covenant of 1915 between Great Britain and her ally, the King of Hedjaz; fortified by the declaration of the president of the cabinet at Glangow on June 23, 1917; and all other declarations confirming the necessity of permitting all the people delivered from the Turkish suzerainty to determine their fate and choose the form of government best suited to their needs, and appealing in the name of international honor, human rights, Moslem and Christian religion, the congress petition of a national (Watania) government in Palestine, which should be responsible to a parliament whose members will be elected by the Arab-speaking population, prewar residents of Palestine, in accordance with Great Britain's lofty principles of justice which she intends to carry out in Arab Mesopotamia and Transjordan in order to strengthen the traditional affection existing between her and the Arab people in general. The congress is convinced that this demand will be granted and realized without delay. Any hesitancy in its acceptance would be useless procrastination. The granting of this demand will soothe the agitation of the Arab people, and reduce the heavy expenditures of the British public on the maintenance at home and abroad."

Points of Dissatisfaction

"This congress, speaking on behalf of the Arab people, is dissatisfied with the present constitution and opposes it for the following reasons:

"The administration is exceeding its rights by drafting laws without consulting an elected legislative council and before obtaining the decision of the League of Nations on the mandate."

"The government's recognition of the Zionist Movement.

"The government is engaged in the execution of the Zionist ideal in admitting Zionist immigrants, using the Hebrew language as an official language and keeping silent in regard to the existence of a Zionist flag.

"The government has formed an advisory council by appointment, attempting to give the impression that there is an elected legislative council.

"The Zionist leaders occupy the highest positions in the government. Palestine is a holy country both to Christian and Moslem alike and it is impossible to hand it over to an authority other than Moslem or Christian."

Statement Sent to League of Nations

Following is the text of a statement sent by the Arab conference to the League of Nations.

"The Third Palestine Arab Congress, representing all sections of the Moslem and Christian population, voices its protest against Balfour Declaration with regard to the establishment of a home for the Jews. Although the declaration has been considerably modified by promises to defend us against any evil, it is the negation of all laws.

"The Balfour Declaration is an infringement on our natural rights. Our motherland is ours. We are its citizens and have worked it for the last thousand years. We have inherited it from our ancestors, who bought it with their blood.

"The Balfour Declaration is an infringement upon international rights as understood by the allies, and for which the allies fought. These rights do not provide that the inhabitants of the country may be deprived of the right to remain in it, or that the conqueror may deal arbitrarily with the land he conquered. Does conquest in our present time provide the right of the expulsion of the conquered people from its country?

"It is an infringement upon civil rights. A motherland to a people is like a house to a private person. No person has the right to share it except by reason of preponderance of numbers or the possession of the large part of the land. The Jews in Palestine comprise only seven per cent of the population and possess only two per cent of the immovable property.

"It negates the understanding reached by the allies with regard to the liberation of the peoples in the Turkish Empire, defies the principles of Wilson, and the blood of the heroes of the war who believed these promises, especially those concerning the Arabs, who themselves gave for the allies their blood and sword.

"The peoples concerned in the League of Nations and especially those having interests in the East, should have more foresight than to aim this arrow at the East and strike the world—the Moslem and Christian—in their most sensitive part—their religion and what is regarded by them as most sacred.

"We shall not be responsible for the results of that declaration, and its influence upon the East, and especially for the introduction of Bolshevism into it, as proved by the activities and proclamations of Bolshevik Jews.

"Palestine is too small to contain its present inhabitants. How will she absorb a foreign people which is flowing into it like a mighty stream? We call your attention to it because Great Britain is about to realize it against our will and desire."

Sir Herbert Samuel Replies

It is needless for me to point out the weakness and contradictory statements of the foregoing. Despite this, therein is contained the gist of Arab opposition.

In a short acknowledgment Sir Herbert Samuel states through his secretary:

"His Excellency, the high commissioner, notes that the memorandum asserts at the outset that the congress was legally representative of all the classes and communities of the Palestinian Arab people.

"The information in the possession of the government on the contrary is to the effect that the members of the congress were appointed by small groups and are by no means representative of the population.

"Before taking into consideration, therefore, the resolutions which were passed, His Excellency would be obliged if he could be informed:

"(1) By what societies the representatives were appointed.

"(2) What number of members of each society participated in the choice of the representatives?"

At the aforementioned conference the chief speaker, Sheikh Suliman Tajo, urged the union of Moslems and Christians against further immigrations. A delegation of two was sent to Europe, one to Egypt, and another to India to stimulate support for the conference action.

Arabs Petition Colonial Secretary

On March 29, 1921, a deputation of the executive committee of the Haifa conference waited upon Winston Churchill, colonial secretary of Great Britain, on the occasion of his visit to Jerusalem. They urged:

(1) The principle of a national home for the Jews be abolished:

(2) A national government be created which shall be responsible to a parliament elected by the Palestine people who existed in Palestine before the war.

(3) A stop be put to Jewish immigration until such a time as a national government is formed.

(4) Laws and regulations before the war be still carried out and all others framed after the British occupation be annulled, and no new laws be created until a national government comes into being.

(5) Palestine should not be separated from her sister states.

Churchill Replies

Mr. Churchill, in an informal reply, challenged some of the statements made and characterized it as a partisan statement. He gave assurance that the British Government would not retract the Balfour Declaration in favor of a national home for the Jewish people.

He continued: "It is manifestly right that the Jews, who are scattered all over the world, should have a national center and a national home where some of them may be reunited. And where else could that be but in this land of Palestine with which for more than three thousand years they have been intimately and profoundly associated?"

"We think it will be good for the world, good for the Jews, good for the British Empire, but we also think that it will be good for the Arabs who dwell in Palestine, and we intend that it shall be good for them and that they shall not be sufferers or supplanted in the country in which they dwell or denied their share in all that makes for its progress and prosperity."

Mr. Churchill emphasized the portion of the Balfour statement which promised to all the inhabitants of Palestine the fullest protection of their civil and political rights. He clearly pointed out the difference between "the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jews" and "Palestine, the national home for the Jews."

Purpose of Zionism

The High Commissioner, Sir Herbert Samuel, has declared:

"No responsible Zionist leader has suggested the immediate establishment of a complete Jewish state in Palestine. This would mean placing a majority under the rule of a minority. It would therefore be contrary to the first principles of democracy and would undoubtedly be disapproved by the public opinion of the whole world."

"The policy propounded before the peace conference, to which the Zionist leaders unshakably adhere, is the promotion to the fullest degree that the conditions of the country will allow, of Jewish immigration and of Jewish land settlement, the concession to Jewish authorities of many of the great public works of which the country stands so greatly in need, the active promotion of Jewish cultural development and the fullest measure of local self-government, in order that with the minimum of delay the country may become a purely self-governing commonwealth under the auspices of an established Jewish majority."

Why Arabs Object

And therein exists the Arab opposition. They are now a majority in Palestine. They have been so for centuries. They will not gracefully submit to a movement which has for its ultimate purpose the immigration of their hated enemies in such numbers as to place them in the minority.

To offset this Mr. Samuel says:

"Zionism does not mean injustice. There can be no question of dispoiling men of their land. There can be no question of hindering the free exercise of religion. There can be no question of depriving any portion of the population of their full civil rights. Jews have suffered too long and too often, in too many lands and during too many centuries under the hand of the oppressor to wish themselves to oppress. On the contrary, our ideal will not be fully attained unless Palestine becomes a state in which all its inhabitants are helped to attain a higher standard of civilization."

Racial Differences

One of the great difficulties which will have to be met is the difference in life and purpose between Jew and Arab. This difference has persisted from the days of Isaac and Ishmael. It is organic. It is inherent. The Arab lacks initiative. He lives the changeless life. As did father, so does the son, and so have done the fathers and sons for centuries.

One cannot expect much of a nation which largely taboos education. The Bedouins particularly consider education a disgrace. And this despite the fact that the world is indebted to Arabia for great fundamental truths.

The Arabs are not interested in the fact that Palestine was the original home of the Jews. They have no sympathy with the Jew's return to the home of his forefathers. A Jewish kingdom is repellant to him. The Arabs own most of the land

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WHAT EDUCATION DOES

Mr. Edison's questions have brought up once more the general consideration of what it means to be educated. Evidently a boy can go through college and come out without knowing how to sell goods, or take charge of a construction gang, or run a store, or do any of the things that are necessary to earn a living. The college doesn't supply the technique of business. What does it do? What is the use of a college education?

There is no magic about college training. It can't put real stuff into a boy who lacks it. It can't transform a stupid boy into a genius. What it does do is to provide a short cut to a view of the world and to experience, which otherwise might never be acquired, or acquired only over a period of many years.

Our ancestors in the Stone Age lived a simple life. They had to know how to hunt, fish, find shelter, make clothing, and defend themselves. There was no need of a college to teach the young people all that was known. They got all the information necessary and available in their daily life.

But now living has become vastly complicated. A single person's experience is likely to bring him in contact with only a fragment of all the activities that go on. He settles down in the routine of business or the home and things outside hardly exist for him.

Education tries so to organize the knowledge and experience of civilization as to make the student at home in the modern world, just as the young man of the Stone Age who knew how to hunt and fish was at home in that remote world. It gives him a background of wide information to reason from. It shows him the experiments society has tried and their results. It furnishes an idea of the methods by which science has subdued Nature and turned it to the uses of man. It unfolds to him the general principles which the experience of the race has set up as standards and guides of action.

of Palestine. The fact that they have occupied without molestation for centuries satisfies them as to their present and future right.

Primitive Customs

Their habits and customs are primitive. They till and sow and reap as did their fathers throughout the centuries. They spurn change and prefer to follow in the old rut.

It is not an unusual thing to see the primitive Arab chain pumps which consist of a crude set of buckets linked together with chains, the propelling power, a camel or mule or ox which, with blindfolded eyes, walks round and round. The old-fashioned crooked stick still serves as a plow—a half-grown heifer frequently unequally yoked with a donkey and hitched to the plow. The proverbial ass of Balaam's time is still the popular means of conveyance for men. The women walk.

Such people will not take kindly to new inventions and customs. The age-old conflict will be repeated in Palestine. If England should withdraw, there would be a wholesale massacre of Jews. Nothing but an imposing military program on the part of Great Britain will prevent interracial war. We may expect clash after clash before the ideal and practical will displace superstition and ignorance. The New Jerusalem is still in the distance. Many years will pass before David's vision of the Holy City will materialize. Abraham did a very foolish thing when he listened to Sarah and took Hagar to wife. He should have known better.

In short, it supplies the foundation for the business of living.

All these things might be acquired haphazard by a man mixing in the activities of earning his bread and butter. Exceptional men do so acquire them. Nature gradually educates us all. But the average person is at a great advantage if he can avail himself of the short cut offered by high school and college to a better adaptation to the world he lives in.—Kansas City Star.

THE KAISER OUT-KAISERED

"With the eyes of one who is aroused and indignant, in whose veins beats the pulse of a hot anger. . . . He comes forth as one who no longer seeks either friendship or love. . . . His garments are dipped in blood, the blood of others. He descends that he may shed the blood of men. . . . He will enunciate his claim by terror and might. He will write it in the blood of his foes. He comes like the treader of the wine-press, and the grapes are the bodies of men. He will tread and trample in his fury till the blood of men shall fill the earth. . . . He will tread and trample them beneath his accusing feet, till their up-spurting blood shall make him crimson. . . . He comes to his glory not as the Savior meek and lowly, not through the suffrage of willing hearts and the plaudits of a welcoming world, but as a king, an autocrat, a despot, through the gushing blood of a trampled world. And those who follow this emergent, wrathful King of Heaven . . . are represented as armies. They come forth as a body of fighters. They come forth to assist the Warriors to make war on the earth. In this way the Kingdom is to come, not by the preaching of the gospel and the all-persuasive power of the Spirit of God."

No, the words printed above are not a description of some degenerate in human form who is reeking his fiendish cruelty upon his fellow men in unthinkable bloody lust! Neither is it the story of some insane demon, escaped from a madhouse, and taking ghoulish delight in a most abhorrent and bestial, bloody holiday! But they are the words of the Reverend I. M. Haldeman, the pastor of the great First Baptist Church, of New York City, in which he gives his idea and description of what Jesus will be like in his second coming! We quote them here, as repulsive as they must be to every healthy and normal mind, just to show the extremes to which the doctrine of premillennialism is carrying some of its followers right here in America to-day. That any human soul born and reared outside of the pale of heathen barbarism could for a moment think that Christ would be guilty of such a loathsome orgy of blood and suffering, is almost unthinkable. But that this conception seems to be native to the doctrine is indicated also by the words of Doctor Torrey, another well-known leader in this school of thought, who speaks of the need for Christ to come as "Kaiser Jesus." Some of the zealous premillennialists have even ceased to offer the Lord's prayer, because it contains the petition, "Thy Kingdom come"—for one of the requisite and sustaining postulates of the doctrine is that the world must grow worse and worse.

It all illustrates to what extent all of the nobler and kindlier and more Christlike instincts and conceptions of the human soul can be, and usually are, dethroned by any religious dogma when one permits that dogma to become an obsession. Else it all illustrates how absurd any false doctrine can be made to appear simply by driving it to its logical conclusions. We leave our readers to take their own choice of horns in this dilemma. But it seems to us that it is hardly worth while to discuss the "dearth of worshipers" in our churches just as long as so many Christian preachers and teachers continue to offer to the people for their worship a God that out-kaisers the Kaiser.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Those Institute Addresses

We have planned, as we have told you, to present through these columns some of the addresses which were delivered before our institute recently held. So much of value was given us during that busy week, that all of us will gladly welcome having some of the splendid material preserved in this manner for future and more leisurely perusal and study.

Too, the circle of the influence exerted by these thoughts will be greatly extended, and will reach many who were deprived of the privilege of attending the institute itself. These addresses will make splendid material for local circles to study and discuss, bringing to us, as they do, viewpoints from students of the most modern social problems.

We are happy to present in this issue, and a following one, the address of Professor William A. Lewis, of Kansas City. This gentleman is head of the departments of history and sociology in the junior college, is member at large of the Social League, and president of the Social Workers' Conference, composed of three hundred prominent workers in Kansas City and vicinity. Therefore, he combines with his scholastic message, that which comes from one who is busying himself with a practical application of the principles of welfare he believes to be fundamental and most potential.

Some Spiritual Aspects of Child Welfare

In this day and age, when kingdoms, even empires, are tumbling about us because they have been based upon the shifting sands of modern philosophy, it is well for us to pause and ask why. I am not sure that I can answer that why for you. We are yet too close to the events that have just occurred properly to evaluate them, but we see through the mists of the last few years two great conflicting philosophies: one, the philosophy of materialism; the other, a philosophy of idealism.

We are wont to talk of the cost of this war in dollars or in men. It was left for a business man, not a preacher, nor a sociologist, to tell us the great loss we sustained. Babson, the great statistician, says, "It is not dollars, not men, but standards of morality." He says, further, "You and I can hardly hope to live to see the day when the standards of morality will be as high with our general mass of people as they were when this world conflict began." If that be true—and most of you will agree with me that we have lost a part of the idealism of everyday life—I say, isn't it high time that we took an inventory of what we have, to see whither we are going?

Again, why should we spend our time in discussing spiritual aspects of child welfare when what the nations of Europe are calling for is men and more men—children and more children. In Poland there was a period of five years in which no children survived. In France nearly the same thing was true. In Belgium it is even worse than in France. In all these countries they have put a premium upon children, and I wonder if the spiritual aspect of child welfare is a factor. I trow not. It is men and more men that they want, to build up the armies of the nations of Europe.

Let us pause for a moment to see what that means to us as a lesson from the last few years. We are not far enough removed from these events to discuss them without prejudice, without feeling. The finest soldier who trod the soil of Europe was the German. Before the American boys went into Europe his equal was not to be found, and why? Because his body was trained according to the materialistic philosophy of Wilhelm and of Frederick the Great. He had been educated with one sole aim in view; to make a good soldier. He knew nothing about the higher aspirations of the German peoples. He knew only to do and to die.

When the American soldier went into Europe he took a new ideal there—a strong body—but back of that strong body, in the words of Marshal Foch, "The will to do." The will to do that the American boy took with him is the product of the American school system, the finest democratic school system on God's fair earth to-day. It is a school system that looks not only after the material welfare of the pupil, but after the spiritual side as well. It is not without its faults, as we shall see later, but it is a system that gave to the American youth a versatility, a poise, and above all, a reserve strength that stood him well on the battlefields of Europe.

But what of it all? If we had in mind only the destruction of life, the cataclysm of character, what good is it? Out of all of this warfare, what idealism shall we get to guide us for the future? For those of you who have accepted the materialistic philosophy of life, I am afraid I have little to offer, but if you will agree with me that mind dominates matter, that soul rules our body, that the spiritual element is the important element, then I will commune with you to see if we can find a common basis for our beliefs.

If we have in mind the social amelioration of our classes, let us, for a moment, take this thought of the instruments at hand. In this discussion of the problem of the domination of mind over matter, of the preeminence of the spiritual forces, I need only to call your attention to the results of these spiritual forces as we find them, not only on the battlefields of Europe, but as we find them in our midst.

A few years ago we awakened to the fact in this country of ours that there was a tremendous waste of spiritual life. To put it practically, there was too great a loss in childhood. Too many of these little folk that had just wandered out of the kingdom of heaven to come down to live among us found conditions so hard that they shortly wandered back again; and so we began to invite them to stay with us longer. Science came to the rescue and in my day the average length of life has been increased from twenty-nine and a fraction years to thirty-nine and a fraction years in this country of ours, and almost all of the gain has been in the saving of children.

Is it any wonder, then, that if, in the short space of twenty years, we can make such wonderful progress that it shall attract the attention of the very best of our land, not only in the conservation of our physical resources during the physical childhood, but also the conservation of our spiritual resources during that same period, for we are coming to take a new view of childhood; coming to realize that in these plastic years from the first few days after birth until the child is three or four or five years old, these few minutes or years are really the deciding years in the spiritual welfare of the child. An old Catholic priest some years ago made the statement, "Give me the education of a child until he is seven and I care not who has him afterwards." I would amend that for you. I would say, "Give me the spiritual guidance of the child until it is three, four, or five years old, and its spiritual ideals are largely fixed."

Another thought which I would like to put before you tonight before I enter into a formal discussion of my subject, is this: Prevention, in the world of social endeavor, is worth ten million pounds of cure. I wonder if you people realize how vital the efforts of the social reformer are. Perhaps figures might help you to see it in a somewhat materialistic light, it is true, but they will at least convey an idea to you.

Do you realize that in this country of ours only about twenty per cent of those who are addicted to the use of drugs are ever redeemed? Do you realize that only about four times that number are redeemed from the use of alcohol? Do you realize that the number redeemed from the use of tobacco is even less? Do not misunderstand me. I would not lessen our efforts, because if one sinful soul is redeemed it is worth the price. We are spending in the United States at the present time approximately $100,000,000 on those who are not right mentally, the insane—the feeble-minded. An adequate social program at the present time calls for $400,000,000, a sum that before this war fairly staggered us. Now that we have begun to think in terms of millions, it doesn't seem so large. Granting that we spend $400,000,000 in the care of that class, it would mean that with our increasing population we would continue to spend $400,000,000 a year for years to come, and the tragedy of it all is, that a hundred years from now we would have more of that class in society than we have to-day.

Oh, yes, it is even worse than that! If, by some sort of legerdemain, I could remove from society every member so affected, there are enough feeble-minded protoplasm in your blood and mine to have a crop of feeble-minded children a hundred years from now. Isn't it time that we wake up to the need of prevention, rather than spending the amount in cure, alone?

But the climax of my thought is to come. It is this. There is one strong point of attack against all this array of weakness, and that is, education. Whatever else we may do is merely palliatingly remedial. I would not lessen the significance of that effort—God forbid!—but the only true point of attack, the only hope for success, is in education. Through education we may hope to prevent these deplorable conditions of society, and it is prevention we must seek!

For those of you who will agree with me that mind dominates matter, then I shall say that, practically speaking, mind is a soul, of which the body is an emanation; not that the body has a soul as a sort of by-product. I am not speaking of metaphysics or theology, but stating what I believe to be, in simple truth, the first law of sound mental hygiene. The most important thing to make children well is to provide them with the fullest mental life. It is true that the mental life of a child is largely a motor life. He lives and thinks largely in terms of muscular action. The use of his muscles is important, not chiefly because it serves certain physiological ends, but because it is an expression of the soul. We make too much a fetish of air and exercise. We must have these, but they are not, even in the promotion of physical health, the only things. The mind life is even more important. Better a stuffy schoolroom, with zealous work, than fresh air and mental flabbiness.

We must call upon the great constituent instincts. As a means to this active mentality our schools must call forth the full life and power of the child as it exists in him. They must call into play the great human instincts which are in truth his constituent elements, of which body and mind are the instruments. We must ask that education be not all receptive, but in the main a putting forth of power; for it is not what a child takes in, but what he puts out that is added to him. Our schools must call out the creative instinct, the impulse to shape material in obedience to imagination. We must, through dancing, music, literature, give scope to the great rhythmic instinct that sets the small child dancing, marching, chanting—that during the earlier period of growth sets the whole world to music—the instinct, which, married to the creative faculty, is parent of all of the arts, and in the satisfaction of which more than in their so-called serious pursuits, men often find their life.

We must give wider scope to the great instinct of curiosity, with its lessons in discovery, experiment, exploration. We must develop the nurturing instinct which so largely constitutes the spiritual life of girls, and of boys, too, to a greater extent than is generally realized—by means of school gardens and by giving the elder children responsibility in relation to the younger ones. We must continue to use the great instinct of competition.

Education, in short, must bring out in each child the common life of humanity of which he is an example. Except as he is maker, competitor, nurturer, explorer, citizen, man does not exist; and you cannot promote his existence. As a part of every child's education, the value of play, both pedagogically and hygienically, is of great importance and cannot be overlooked if we would give him that well-rounded development which every true educator is seeking to establish. We can no longer look upon it only as a valuable substitute for the spanking rod, or a kindness and special concession on the part of the teacher who finds herself at the end of her powers for keeping up interest and deportment. Nor do we meet the needs of our high school students by a tolerance of athletics as a kind of moral enema for congested scholarly ambitions.

Because of the almost universal acceptance of the value of play hygienically, I shall at this time discuss more at length the great and ever-increasing, overshadowing pedagogical value of play. We can only realize this value if we study the environment and the conditions of the children below seven years. Everyone will admit that the first seven to nine years of a child's life are of the utmost importance as brain-making years. The physical growth of the brain is practically completed at nine years. The development and the modification of the motor areas of the brain during these years determine to a very large extent the future mental capacity and characteristics of the child. If the motor life of the child is a limited one during the first years of its existence, its capacity for future mental training will be limited. To quote Doctor G. Stanley Hall:

"The motor areas are closely related and largely identical with the psychic, and muscle culture develops brain centers as nothing else yet demonstrable does. Muscles are the vehicles of habituation, imitation, obedience, and of character and of manners and customs. For the young, motor education is cardinal and has now come into due recognition. All education is incomplete without a motor side."

Herein lies the whole foundation of our education. But this foundation is practically laid before the children come to school. I have observed for years how our pedagogues are putting into our schools one new thing after another in an effort to make our school education more effective. All kinds of physical and manual training have been added, and still we hear that our children are not well versed in the three R's, and that our schools are overloaded with fads and fancies. Why is it that our children do seem to lose interest after a few years of schooling? Why is it that even in our upper grades practically one half of our pupils need an intellectual forcing process? Why do we have so many young precocious children who soon fall below the average?

The reason lies in the poor motor life of the child before it comes to school and, consequently, in a too early application to purely mental training when it enters school.

The kindergarten and the primary schooling is to-day in the greatest need of our profoundest attention. If we can correct this we can do away with many of the so-called fads and fancies during later school years.

No other age of childhood is more largely handicapped than the preschooling age. The home environment of a child up to seven years of age is the greatest drawback of our civilization.

Where do our boys get their opportunities for chores and occupation play? The father is never home, and the old-fashioned doing of things in the home and for the home have disappeared. Everything is ready-made.

My second contention, therefore, is that we must cut off at least two years of our primary school desk education and substitute for these play rooms and play yards, and that we must get hold of the children at least two years earlier than we do by providing baby playgrounds in every primary school district. By playgrounds I do not mean only a ball field or a place filled with swings and other apparatus, but a place where the child can get in touch with "Mother" Earth; a place resembling an old-fashioned back yard and garden and farm; a place full of opportunities for doing things, for caring for things, for testing latent powers of muscular control; a place filled with opportunities for occupation, play, and for initiation of everything that moves and acts.

Stains on Blouses

Perspiration stains may be removed from white blouses without any trouble if they are soaked before washing in cold water to which a little carbonate of soda has been added.

Boiled white clothes will come from the wash boiler much whiter if a few drops of turpentine are added to the water.

Our Work at Reunions

Our second assistant superintendent, Sister Mina Madison, to whom was committed the task of "booking" our field workers for the various reunions which desired their services, writes that Sister Sandy is to go to Clinton and Spring River, Sister Gardner to Central Illinois, Sister Burwell to South-eastern Illinois and Kentucky and Tennessee, and she herself to the Minnesota, and perhaps one or two other northern reunions. Sister Tier is to make several of the Canadian ones, Sister Evans has a splendid program under way for Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, while Sister Christy is planning good things for Northeastern Illinois. Sister Walter W. Smith is to present our work at the New York and Philadelphia reunion, Sister Vida Smith at Kirtland, and Sister Glines will make both Northern and Southern California. Several other bookings are made and others under consideration. Those workers who attended our late institute, are bubbling over with enthusiasm, and have a fair number of interesting and instructive ideas and plans to put into operation. These workers will be glad to be with the Saints at the reunion season, and present our departmental work as attractively and efficiently as possible.

It is expected that the expenses of these field workers will be borne by the districts who will benefit by their labors, but by writing to our office early, and stating your desires in this regard, we can schedule our workers at less railroad expense to you than will be possible if you put off communicating until later in the season. Let us all work together towards the highly desirable goal we have in sight, the "perfecting of the Saints."

Book on Dress

Miss Evelyn Hansen, who lectured before our institute on the subject of "Dress; its lines, color, and texture," recommended to us the following text: Principles in Correct Dressing, by Ethel Winterburn. We fancy those who failed to make note of it at the time, will be glad to see this announcement.

New Material for Organizers

Our secretary writes us that she has the envelopes of new materials almost ready for mailing to our workers. These will contain, among other things, sketches or outlines of most of the addresses made at our institute, as well as complete copies of three of the playlets which were presented there.

"Cradle Roll" playlet brings out quite clearly the value of visiting the young mother and keeping in touch with her and the development of her child, in whom the church has a great interest.

The "Friendly Visitor" play, in two acts, represents first a conference between a Women's Department local leader and her group of assistants, among them the "friendly visitor," to whom she explains carefully the nature of their work. The second shows a visit of the worker to the ill-kept home of a discouraged woman with a sick child, the good accomplished by gentle counsel and advice, and hope and courage implanted in the heart of the mother.

"The Friendly Road" is a clever presentation of the work of the Young Women's Bureau, especially that of the Oriole and Temple Builders organizations. It is in several short scenes which can be given with little or no stage equipment, and will serve to arouse a keen interest in the aims and purposes of this department. A "setting-up" exercise in the early morning, after a sunrise prayer meeting at a reunion, is one happy feature, while the closing "farewell" gathering around the glowing fires, with attendant toasting of marshmallows and singing of tender songs, is most effective.

These playlets are mailed free to our organizers and field workers. To all others, the price will be twenty-five cents each. Address our office.

CHAPTER XVII

Play

1. Contrast the old idea of play with the modern idea of play.
2. Illustrate how play is self-expression.
3. What, then, is the importance of play?
4. How does the physical development of a child control the kind of play. Illustrate.
5. How does play develop physical strength?
6. What effect has play on mental development?
7. How may it exercise attention?
8. What social value has play?
9. Show clearly the moral effects of well-directed play.
10. Of what value is play to self-control?
11. What is self-direction, and how is it developed through play?
12. Illustrate how play may be used as a means for developing desirable traits in a child.
13. Of what value is dramatic play?
14. What is meant by "impersonation is the chief part of morals"?
15. How may dramatic plays be encouraged in the home?
16. What are the advantages and disadvantages of theater going?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Combating Race Suicide

The French, who have worried over their falling birth rate for many years, have at last come to the point of doing something practical to counteract it. A bill pending before the deputies provides a pension of 360 francs a year to the fourth child born in every French family, with 60 francs added for each succeeding child.

The only opposition to the measure is based upon the great burden which it would impose upon taxpayers, the estimated total cost running from 220,000 francs a year up. A Parisian deputy proposes a tax upon all childless married people to meet the cost of the pensions for large families. The author of this extreme measure is the mayor of the richest arrondissement in Paris, and he points out that its birth rate is the smallest. He accounts for this by the greater cost of raising a child under conditions of wealth or even of well-to-do comfort. He makes the same complaint so often made in this country, that professional men of good income cannot afford to raise a family and educate their children for the sort of positions which they themselves hold. He argues that such men should be taxed to raise the children of others living in simpler conditions where the cost is less.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Women as Horse Trainers

Dairymen know that kindness to their cows brings more milk than does neglect or brutality. However, many animal trainers depend on harsh rather than gentle methods to attain their particular ends, and there are some persons who can never enjoy performing beasts for the thought of the rigorous discipline that may have been used. It is interesting, accordingly, to learn that the owner of Man-o'-War, the race track sensation of the past season, has placed him in charge of a woman caretaker, Mrs. Elizabeth Dangerfield. Her policy is no blows and no harsh treatment. This is not the first time that a woman has been given charge of valuable horses—August Belmont's nursery stud has been in charge of Mrs. Elizabeth Kane for years. There is no monopoly on kindness to animals, and many men also handle them with similar care, but the success of these two women brings the gentler way into prominence.

The highest Federal position ever held by a woman is that of civil service commissioner, Mrs. Helen H. Gardener.

LETTERS

Labor Troubles in Britain

Great suffering and even actual starvation in England. Race riots in Palestine also discussed.

The miners' strike is now in its eleventh week. From all appearances, it is no nearer solution than at the commencement. The stolid fortitude displayed is remarkable. It is also significant that, although the strike has now been in progress for two months and a half, there has been practically no disturbance.

Suffering is acute throughout the country. Women and children are the worst sufferers. Some pitiable instances of actual starvation are creeping into print. People are pawning their keepsakes, trinkets, rings, and sewing machines, to buy food. The unemployment and disemployment runs well into the millions.

A case comes to our notice of a man in Cardiff who called at the city hall recently in a destitute and almost exhausted condition. He had been out of work for two months. For three days the only sustenance which either he or his family had was water; that and nothing more. This man served during the war as a mine sweeper. Another case of a woman, the mother of eight children, dying of starvation. Ex-service men, not involved in the strike, are without food or employment. These are only typical cases.

Our people are suffering in many quarters. They are making no complaint. Even though the strike be settled soon, the condition of suffering will continue for a long time.

Much concern is being felt in business circles because the United States is entering markets which have been monopolized by England for years and there is great apprehension lest America will permanently displace England.

The Anti-Jewish Trouble in Palestine

Just a line in regard to the recent riots in Palestine. Jewish immigration into Palestine has been temporarily suspended. This pursuant to the recent riots throughout the country. To continue this indefinitely would be a mistake. If the Arabs come to feel that by creating disturbance they can prevent Jewish colonization, they will not be slow in following up their recent lawlessness by more grievous aggressions. The government cannot afford to surrender or modify its purpose.

The high commissioner must secure life and property in Palestine or the mandate of Great Britain fails. From reports at hand the Arabs were almost wholly at fault. The large number of casualties on the part of the Jews, with the small number on the side of the Arabs, would bear out this conclusion.

The Arabs have been preparing for trouble for months. They were but waiting an opportunity for a demonstration. The opportunity came when a mere handful of Communist Jews created a slight disturbance at a Jewish labor meeting in the Jewish quarters.

Jewish Communists in Palestine are a negligible quantity. A recent election showed two hundred and fifty Communists as against five thousand others. This is only five per cent. This riot was premeditated. Agitation was going on before we left the country.

Aside from the killing of thirty-three Jews and wounding over one hundred and twenty more, some of whom were women, forty Jewish shops were looted. The Jews were unprepared and helpless before the well-defined and organized attack of the Arabs. Jaffa Arab policemen joined the mob in the attack on the Jews. Several of these policemen have already been remanded for murder.

This incident strikes a very heavy blow at Zionism and Jewish colonization. The Jews throughout the world will be loath to go to Palestine if life and property are to be in jeopardy.

The question is racial and we can well afford to watch closely the developments. In any event, it should not deter us from establishing our work there and prosecuting it with all diligence.

The Curtis-Moore Debate

Public discussion at Akron, Ohio, with representatives of the nonprogressive wing of the Church of Christ.

The "Church of Christ" as they call themselves (but the facts of their own history show their church had its origin with Thomas and Alexander Campbell and others as an offshoot from the Baptists in 1827) challenged our people at Akron, Ohio, for a public discussion. This debate has been talked of for some years, but not until recently were our people able to get them to sign up fair propositions. Ira C. Moore was selected by this nonprogressive wing of Campbellism to represent their side, while I was selected to represent our side.

The debate was held in their church at Akron, Ohio, May 16 to 27, 1921.

The usual church propositions were discussed. I affirmed our church proposition first. Mr. Moore having written a tract against us, depended on his position in said tract to destroy our position, the main attack being against the Book of Mormon.

As much of the ground covered in the debate has been fought over before, I will pay some attention to this new position taken by Mr. Moore. The Keystone in the Arch of Mormonism Removed and Crushed, is the title of Mr. Moore's tract. He begins his tract by saying that he had acted as moderator in one debate for A. M. McVey when he debated with Elder C. Scott, of our church, in 1906, and the same year Mr. Moore debated with Elder D. L. Shinn, of our faith. He then says: "There has been much written against the Book of Mormon, and a great deal more said. Some things written have been very good and convincing, and some not so conclusive." Again he says: "But I purpose to cast one more fatal dart through the modern Absalom's heart and a few more stones upon its disgraceful carcass—something that I deem irretrievably fatal to the claim that the book is genuine and authentic."

The first stone he throws is, "First they tell us that the messenger of the covenant of Malachi 3: 1; Matthew 11: 10; Mark 1: 2; and Luke 1: 76 was to be the favored son, Joseph Smith." We do not claim any such thing. I have been in the church for thirty-eight years and for twenty-one years a missionary of the church, and I never heard anyone of the church make any such claim. What we do claim is that the references offered refer to John the Baptist, and we claim that he, John, came as a forerunner of Jesus Christ, but that John was to come again and that he did come and ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery.

In Matthew 11: 11-14 John the Baptist is referred to as Elias. In Matthew 17: 11 Jesus says: "Elias truly shall [future tense] first come and restore all things." Jesus explained that Elias, who was John the Baptist, "is come already," which referred to his coming before Christ, but here he tells us of a future coming of John where "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things." Mr. Moore, why didn't you state what we believe, and then, if you think we are wrong, give us your reasons for so thinking? You have misrepresented our position and then you want to hold us responsible for your mistake. Your first "stone" hurts no one but yourself.

His supposed "second" stone is another misrepresentation. He represents us as claiming that "Revelation 14: 6 was John the Baptist coming to show Joseph where the plates were, on which the record of the Nephites and their unceasing conflict with the Lamanites or Indians was found." Our claim is that Moroni, not John the Baptist, appeared to Joseph Smith and showed Mr. Smith where the plates were to be found. (See our Church History, volume 1, page 12.) So his "second" stone does not tell the truth about us, but shows that Mr.

Moore is unreliable as an editor and debater, and that he is a blind leader.

On page 3 of his tract Mr. Moore says of Lehi and those with him that they were "three hundred and forty-four days" crossing the ocean "for the promised land." The Book of Mormon says no such thing.

It says, "after we had sailed for the space of many days we did arrive." So all that is said of the time Lehi and company were crossing the ocean is "many days." To show you how Mr. Moore got his three hundred and forty-four days, he goes to the account given of Jared, where it says they were three hundred and forty-four days on the water, and he connects this account with Lehi, but these two companies were hundreds of years apart and had no connection with each other at the time of their coming. Later in the tract Mr. Moore refers to the three hundred and forty-four days and says: "The Book of Mormon gives us the certain information that Lehi and his family were three hundred and forty-four days coming over on their first trip." This is positively untrue, and I forced Mr. Moore to admit that it was untrue before the audience in the debate.

The Book of Mormon represents Lehi and company leaving Jerusalem and going south (1 Nephi 5:16) and east (1 Nephi 5:55) to the ocean, but Mr. Moore tells of their leaving Jerusalem and going to the Indian Ocean, then represents them as "wandering down the coast of the Adriatic Sea after they started."

In the discussion I called Mr. Moore's attention to his blunder in geography. Lehi and company went south and east to the ocean, so how could they go down the coast of the Adriatic Sea on their way when the Adriatic Sea is northwest of Jerusalem, several hundred miles on the east of Italy. When I showed his mistake in geography, he was certainly bothered, but could make no explanation, except to admit his mistake. This geographical blunder by one of Campbell's polemics puts me in mind of the story of the fellow "who shot at the fish and missed the river." Yet on the same page that contains two of his mistakes, Mr. Moore says: "We are told by divine inspiration that God is not the author of confusion." He certainly is not, but Mr. Moore is here shown to be one editor and debater who is the author of confusion.

Mr. Moore, in the debate, also in his tract, tried to disprove the Book of Mormon. He claimed that Lehi did not keep the law of Moses as claimed by the Book of Mormon, because all men of the Israelites were to appear before the Lord Jehovah three times a year. (Exodus 23:17; also Deuteronomy 31:11.) He quotes: "In every place where I record my name I will come unto thee and I will bless thee." (Exodus 20:24, American Revised Version.) Note that this says: "In every place." Then there is more than one place where the Lord will record his name. The King James Version reads, "in all places," showing also more than one place.

He then quotes 2 Chronicles 6:6: "I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there." He then claimed that Lehi and all other men must go to the temple at Jerusalem three times a year in order to keep the law of Moses. In reply I showed that "in every place" and "in all places" showed that there was to be more than one place. That Jerusalem was only one place. I showed from Exodus 23:17 when this command to meet three times a year was given was in the year 1491 B. C. (King James Version.) That according to Joshua 1:1 when the Israelites entered the land of Canaan was 1451 B. C. and that the Israelites were forty years in the wilderness keeping the law of Moses before they reached the land of Canaan. I showed that the temple at Jerusalem was not dedicated (1 Kings 9:2) until 1004 B. C. This dedication was four hundred and eighty-seven years after the command was given to the males to make an offering three times a year. That if God would accept of the offerings of the Israelites for four hundred and eighty-seven years before the temple was built at Jerusalem, then he would accept of Lehi and company's offerings in their journey.

Mr. Moore insisted that Lehi should have gone to Jerusalem three times a year to worship in the temple in order to keep the law of Moses, but when I showed that Lehi left Jerusalem 600 B. C., and that the temple was burned about ten or twelve years afterward, and the Israelites were carried captive to Babylon, so if Lehi had returned he would have found neither temple nor priest at Jerusalem, Mr. Moore was again confounded and did not know what to do.

I showed from the Book of Mormon (2 Nephi 4:22) where a temple in America was built and then showed (Mosiah 1:28-32) where the law of Moses was observed in a temple. That this was one of the places where the Lord had accepted of their offering.

Elder R. C. Russell acted as moderator for me in the discussion and did well. The Saints attended the discussion in large numbers, several coming from Canton and other places.

I left the Saints feeling fine and rejoicing in the gospel. Some others were baptized on Sunday after the debate, while the disciples of Campbell seemed very much down and out when their church history was shown up.

Sincerely yours,

J. F. CURTIS.

Greetings from Society Islands Conference

To the President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the Saints in the land of Zion:

Greeting unto you all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, who causes us to meet through the means of this letter. Amen.

We the Saints assembled in mission conference desire to make known the appreciation and great rejoicing of this mission for the words that have come to us through our beloved Brother Paia a Metuaoro, who has made known to us the conditions that obtain in Zion, and also for the many expressions of kindness shown to him in his journeyings among you in viewing the church as established in Zion, also the famous places in the rise of the church, that we have heard of from time to time, even until the present.

Now we have witnessed these things through our delegate, Brother Paia, who was permitted to be one in your midst for a short time; therefore may you, President Smith, your assistants, as well as the membership, be blessed and assisted in building up Zion.

And for the many kindnesses to this mission of the islands of the sea who are trying to support the cause until His coming again, prove a source of encouragement to the extent that we may not lack on our part in the building of Zion and the cause.

Signed on behalf of the conference by the committee.

A Letter from Hebron

Mrs. Julia Roos states that she and her husband, Elder Frederick Roos, are now at Hebron, Palestine. They had a very quiet passage on the Mediterranean which, as usual, was as peaceful as an inland lake. They report some interesting experiences as, when some Jews attempted to ruffle up the passengers against them by asking when did Messiah come? to which they were able to answer, six thousand years ago. This was so unexpected that it gave opportunity to refer to Solomon's statement in Proverbs 8:30: "When the Father created the world, I the Messiah was his workmaster," to which Paul added, (Hebrews 1) "without me was not anything made that was made." That it was Messiah who spoke to Adam, Abraham, Moses, and all the prophets (1 Peter 1:10 and 11) and thus followed Isaiah 5:3, saying that "he is led like a sheep to the slaughter." This gave an opportunity for further discussion on succeeding days.

On the train to Jerusalem they greeted an Arab with Isaiah: "Aulad Abraham barakat alkoli umam." ("The sons of Abraham shall be a blessing for all people.") This led to an interesting conversation concerning the Messiah. He is soon going to fulfill all things. They felt for the ragged Arab boys. It brought tears to their eyes "when we gave to them pictures with a baraki (blessing)." This caused a much larger crowd to assemble, asking also for a blessing, so they had 10,000 leaflets printed in Arabic with brief passages from the Psalms and Isaiah, and with some instructions concerning hygiene for the prevention of diseases of the eye.

They apparently traveled slowly on foot from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, on to Hebron, meeting and mingling with the Arabs, whether camel or donkey traveler, sheiks, officials, women, or children. To all they gave their greeting: "Il Mes-siah Bjidchi bad schoai in u bad schrai, bad schrai, a u l a d Abraham barakat all kul umam." ("The Messiah comes soon, and soon, very soon, he will make a blessing for all you sons of Abraham.") They feel that this gives them a special opening to the two hundred million Mohammedans. One sheik sent to them asking for fifty leaflets, another invited them to his house. The latter was the priest of Abraham's mosque. They have also translated parts of the Bible, especially Isaiah, and have been asked for the complete Bible. A Turkish officer, speaking French, begged for a Bible in that language. They state they are not able to meet the demands upon them.

Scriptural Discourses in Honolulu

Good interest by nonmembers as well as Saints.

Beginning May 8, Brother Gomer J. Reeves, who is supervisor of the missionary work in the Hawaiian Islands, has been conducting a series of scriptural discourses at the church in Honolulu.

We expected to conclude the series in two weeks, but requests came in to continue, so Brother Reeves decided to go on with the meetings as long as the interest keeps up.

We have had a splendid attendance every evening throughout the series, a large part being nonmembers. Brother Reeves is a powerful young speaker; his sermons are crisp and to the point.

One evening at the close of the service one gentleman said he was convinced that Brother Reeves was divinely taught.

Brother Reeves has had no hobby but has tactfully combined history, prophecy, philosophy, and gospel sermons. Some have already given their names for baptism.

One of the leading newspapers has been very courteous, publishing for us some of the sermons.

We tried a new method of advertisement by having a number of invitation cards printed and distributed among the members to hand to their friends. The topic is announced every morning in the daily paper.

Perhaps you would enjoy reading one of the announcements:

"Follow the Blue Prints

"No man would accept a building that was not constructed according to the specified plans, the blue prints. The master-builder is careful to be guided in every detail by the plans before him in order that his edifice may be accepted when completed. In building an organic structure called a church, care must be taken to erect it according to the divine blue prints, the Scriptures. If they are followed carefully, the building will be magnificent in appearance, serve well its intended purpose, and be acceptable to the Designer. We will compare our structure with the blue prints to-night."

We are very hopeful and optimistic about the outcome of this campaign.

Church Athletics in Des Moines

Gratifying results reported by the pastor, who enters the sports with the young people.

First Presidency: I am wondering if you would have time to read a letter about baseball. Perhaps, in the first place, I have not time to write one, but I shall take the time. The diversion may be worth something, for I am persuaded your reading of letters sometimes grows very monotonous, as you survey page after page of the usual branch activities and difficulties. Various departments of the work are moving along nicely, so I am writing about baseball.

The Y. M. C. A. of Des Moines sponsors a Sunday school baseball league. Last year my class of young men joined this league, and while we lost more games than we won, we gained the reputation of being the cleanest team in the league. This paved the way for us to come back strong this spring. So far we have won all our games, including practice games. We have won four scheduled games in a row, as follows: Defeated the United Evangelicals, 16 to 7; Capitol Hill Church of Christ, 11 to 3; Zion Norwegian Lutherans, 6 to 0; United Brethren, 8 to 3. This last team is one of the fastest in the league. To-night we play Clifton Heights Presbyterians and expect another victory. (Later: Won this, 15 to 2.)

The rules require that every player attend Sunday school three Sundays in four in order to be eligible. No profanity or smoking is allowed on the field, and no one allowed to play who plays Sunday ball. It is needless to say that the results of our efforts along this line are very gratifying. Personally I find the relaxation well worth while, but best of all, when I come before that class of young men Sunday mornings I can talk to them heart to heart, for having played with them during the week I understand their dispositions. It is before this class Sunday mornings that I enjoy the greatest influence of the Spirit; not in the pulpit even do I enjoy more. Yesterday the wife of one of the young men was baptized, and others will come, for three or four of my class are nonmembers. I am happy in the work of the church, and am convinced that clean athletics will contribute much towards holding our young.

Very sincerely,

A. E. WARR.

Work in Duluth Grows Rapidly

Our work is surely bringing great results in this branch, as we have now 83 members.

Brother Kress also was at Pine River with the gospel and baptized thirteen there. While there he had some wonderful experiences. The deacon of another church rang his church bell and then went to where Brother Kress held meetings, as his congregation was there. He was baptized into the faith and is now at the head of the Religio there, which Brother Kress organized. Brother William Sparling is out there now to stay for two or three weeks. May God bless him, for he surely is a faithful servant.

Brother Kress had a wonderful experience a few days ago. He felt that he must go to a meeting up town. If I rightly remember, it was the Utah Mormons who held it. He could not think why he should go there, but now he very plainly sees why, and so do all we Saints. There was an Indian there of the Chippewa tribe, Mr. Northup by name, and a Mormon there was holding a conversation with him. Of course Brother Kress made it his business to get in on that, too. The Mormon did not like it, but Brother Kress cared not at all. The Mormon handed him the Book of Mormon to look at, and Brother Kress searched in his pocket and found a pamphlet of the history of the Lamanites, taken from the Book of Mormon. He wondered why he carried that around in his pocket, but it was for this great purpose. Of course Mr. Northup had to hand the Mormon back his book, but the tract which Brother Kress gave him he could keep and study, which he said afterward he surely did, over and over. Brother Kress got him to come and speak to us last Sunday evening and we enjoyed it very much. It was on the life and history of his people. He was educated at the Carlisle Institute. He has asked Brother Kress to come and preach to his people next Sunday evening, service at his place.

Brother Kress wishes to hear from those who have relatives or friends in Hibbing, Minnesota, and Virginia, Minnesota, as he would like very much to get those places started in the faith. So please write to Elder C. A. Kress, 31 South Fifty-third Avenue, West Duluth, Minnesota. He will be pleased to hear from the Saints, and we all want to help the service along in every way we possibly can. Do we not, dear Saints?

Some of us will be at the reunion, where we shall meet many of you. We look forward to a grand and glorious time, with God's blessing over all.

Northern Wisconsin

This leaves me in the hilly and wooded country of northern Wisconsin, near the Harshaw post office. We have about twenty Saints in this vicinity. There has been no missionary work here for a year or more.

The Saints have a little Sunday school which has been the means of keeping up the interest among them. Brother and Sister J. Loomis live here and are active in helping in the Sunday school work. It may be remembered by some of the older Saints of Wisconsin that Sister Loomis is the daughter of Brother and Sister Samuel Whiteaker whose home was in Trempealeau County fifty-one years ago; when Brother Carl Lang was directed by divine instruction to make a trip of about one hundred miles on foot, not knowing the end of his journey nor what its object was to be. Sister Whiteaker had lain an invalid for eighteen months with an inward cancer which had eaten through to the outside of the body, and was discharging in a very unpleasing and serious condition. Brother Lang sat by her bedside and taught her the gospel which she was anxious to hear and ready to accept, as she had long believed that such a gospel should be preached today as in days of old, and after only a few days she was ready to be baptized. But being reduced to only seventy pounds in weight and her body drawn in a doubled condition from the effect of the cancer, it was necessary to carry her to the water in a chair. Brother Lang lowered her in his arms into the water and thus baptized her. While in the water she was healed and was able to stand when reaching the shore and able to walk when reaching her home. She soon began doing her home work. There was not even remaining a scar where the cancer had eaten through the body, and only a few days before they could not raise her from the bed because of fainting caused by her weakened condition.

A mob of about thirty men, some with guns, stood on the opposite bank of the river at the time of the baptism, ready to kill Brother Lang in case of her death. Others in the vicinity were soon baptized, and later the gospel was taken by Brother Whiteaker and Elder Savage to Brother Whiteaker's relatives in Crawford County, and several were baptized. Since that time many have been added to the church as the result of that small beginning and they and their children may be found in distant States.

And thus the gospel work is like a little stone cast into the water; the waves extend on and on, and only the eternal world can tell the good that may be wrought by a small beginning.

During the year the writer has sought to be busy in mission work, visiting almost every vicinity in the Northern Wisconsin District where a few Saints reside and where opportunity for gospel work seemed favorable.

Have not baptized many, but the seed has been sown. Good lives have been made better; some are investigating, and in due time the growing and ripening grain will be seen. Like in Nature's great field, God must give the sunshine and showers to finally bring the golden harvest.

During the past few weeks the writer has been in the cities of Green Bay, Appleton, and Antigo; during the winter months visiting Chetek, Porcupine, Black River Falls, Sparta, and Wyeville. In most of these places some are interested and are planning on being baptized in due time. Brother E. J. Lenox, who was elected district president last fall, has done a good work in Wyeville and other places, and we are glad to see the local work being moved forward, which is so necessary.

After living five years in the beautiful little city of Chetek, the writer moved his home and family to Madison last September. We were sorry to move, but the two older boys had finished their school work in Chetek and it became necessary to locate where they could finish their education and also partially support themselves while doing so.

With anxious interest in the forward movement of the church, I am your brother in gospel bonds,

L. HOUGHTON.

Eastern Iowa Conference

The conference held at Waterloo, June 10, 11, and 12 was indeed a foretaste of joys to come. In spite of rain, bad roads, and hard times, the hunger for a spiritual feast brought forth an exceedingly good attendance. This is surely an encouraging indication, showing, as we believe it does, that the Saints are alive to the responsibilities that rest upon them in these troublous times, and how it behooves them to fortify themselves by union and the greater strength and intelligence that these conferences supply.

The conference moved as on oiled wheels under the leadership of the district president, Elder Amos Berve. A quiet spirit of peace and brotherly kindness reigned throughout the three days.

One of the most enjoyable meetings was that of the Women's Department. The district organizer, Lyda Beil, of Clinton, Iowa, brought to her sisters a message straight from the throne of God.

The stereopticon lecture on the life of the Master by Elder Berve, Saturday evening, brought to a keener realization many dull hearts, which had not fully appreciated the great sacrifice that had been made for them. The little stone chapel was packed and the platform was edged with boys and girls who came in from the street, attracted by the pictures, and who listened with breathless attention. Who can even guess what the seed sown that night might bring forth?

Sunday morning everyone who could be was on hand early, for the good things the day had to offer. The early morning prayer meeting would have cheered the heart of any Saint. Peace and comfort entered our waiting hearts. Prayer and testimony came earnestly and rapidly; two prophecies were given, addressing certain members of the priesthood especially, but satisfying the hearts of all with the assurance that God does speak to his children as in days of old. Two babies were blessed and one brother ordained to office of priest at this meeting.

Brother Milo Burnett, of Davenport, whom we are sorry to report as leaving our district soon, delivered the morning sermon. His tongue was clothed with the spirit of his calling; thought after thought, sublime and grandly simple, flowed in speech without a single halt or hesitation.

Brother Benson, also of Davenport, spoke in the afternoon, briefly and very much to the point on many things dear to the hearts of the Saints.

Surely all those who are outside of the kingdom were brought a little nearer Sunday evening by the masterly sermon by Brother Berve. The gospel plan was plainly set forth in just this one sermon.

The Saints of Waterloo feel more than well paid for any effort they may have put forth to entertain this conference and as has always been the case with these Saints they had enough and a little to spare. No charge was made for entertainment, but many contributions were made by those so inclined. We would also note that tea, coffee, and meat were conspicuous by their absence as the meals were served.

Some day in the near future Waterloo is going to need a larger church to accommodate the audiences at like assemblies, for the building would not hold all the crowd at some of these conference services.

Next comes the reunion. Begin to prepare. Let's go.

DISTRICT PUBLICITY AGENT.

A fair outline of one half column of the history of the church appears in the Beeville Picture, Beeville, Texas. Services being held by Elder W. H. Mannering are announced. It was a clear statement of the position of the church.

Another Excellent Reunion Site Secured

[The recent articles appearing in the HERALD on the advantage of district reunions has awakened a new and general interest in these district and stake get-together gatherings. The great revival in the New York and Philadelphia District is no doubt due in a great measure to plans and activities radiating from the purchase of what is considered the most attractive reunion grounds in America.—EDITORS.]

"God is marshaling his army
For the rescue of his truth;
He is calling now to battle
Both the aged and the youth."

When we think of armies and their preparations for service, there comes to my mind the marvelous way our Nation gathered up her youthful forces and built, mainly in isolated spots, great concentration camps, where our boys were intensively trained to fight the foes of liberty and democracy.

As we come nearer to the day when our church must engage more fully in her preparation for the establishment of Zion, we cannot help but feel that the reunion is to occupy a place far more important than we dream of to-day, for is it not destined to be the training camp for the generation of the present hour, which is being so strangely moved upon to carry out that which has been written shall be fulfilled?

Our hearts were thrilled at the February district conference of 1920 as this subject was brought up for discussion, but it seemed impossible for us to arrange in the time at our disposal for a gathering, although the outlook at one time was very promising.

But our fondest hopes are to be realized, for after many months of reconnoitering our persistent reunion Knight Errant was rewarded and the weary search ended when on one of his quests he landed in the village of New Hope, thirty-five miles from Philadelphia, and cultivated the acquaintance of the village squire. In him he found a friendly, kindred spirit, and it was he who led the Knight, Sir John, jr., to Deer Park, which was destined to pass into the hands of this district shortly after. As Squire Polk unfolded the traditions of this beautiful and historical spot, Brother John felt, as many of us have since, that he was standing on holy ground. Here at the entrance of the grounds was the same deep, clear pool, fed for ages by bubbling springs, around which were held the powwows of the aristocratic tribe of Lenni-Lenape Indians. Later, William Penn (the founder of Philadelphia), realizing the beauty of the spot, acquired it for his own purposes, but later deeded it to his secretary as a reward for faithful service. It subsequently passed into the hands of other famous families until, in the early eighties, a group of people attempted to establish it as an amusement park and wild game reservation. Thousands of dollars were spent in buildings, roadways, and improvements, but the venture proved unsuccessful financially and the project was abandoned.

At what might be considered a reasonable expense, the spacious buildings have been put into good repair, and with their new coats of paint and shingles look refreshing—yes, inspiring—in the midst of the fine timber-growth setting. But if you will venture with me up this winding roadway that leads from the famous spring, I will take you into the great auditorium, the second largest in the church. Over fifteen hundred people can be seated comfortably, and the stage is already planned and erected to accommodate the chorus of one hundred and fifteen that have been busily preparing two oratorios and a pageant for the reunion and its multitude of visitors.

None the less attractive is the dining hall overlooking the beautiful lake, and the long rows of tables will accommodate one hundred fifty people at a sitting.

All modern hotel equipment is being placed in the kitchen and dining hall, and our chef, Brother E. A. Kaler, will have a pleasant surprise in store for him as he pops in on his rounds of reunion service. Our Knight is a practical sort of fellow and it is he who is responsible for the power plant that is being installed to provide electricity for the buildings and the pumping of water from the spring to our own great cistern in the heart of the camp. Captain Potts also did a work that will be greatly appreciated in stemming a stream and making it possible, by use of a new seventy-five-foot concrete dam, to have our own lake for swimming, the large lake being too cold for this purpose.

But the greatest surprise is before us at the end of this wooded lane. Here, as we step out of the dense woods, is a panorama of hills and fertile valleys, and there is spread directly before us twelve acres of cleared land which has been set aside for our recreational purposes.

Here many a hard-fought battle will be fought. These grounds will be the scene of band concerts, community sings, fireworks, and camp fires, and another year, outdoor pageantry, the scenario for which has already been written.

Across this great field came the great crowd on Memorial Day. How interesting it was to see them wend their way from the special train down the hill, over the dam, across the fields, up through the wooded road to the great buildings.

How could anybody feel otherwise than it is God's purpose that we gather here often, communing with his Spirit, receiving spiritual comfort and physical rejuvenation. We are looking forward to our experience. Soon the long rows of white tents will be nestling under the great trees, and the servants of God will abide in our midst, giving needed instruction and strengthening us in the faith.

The voices of many singers will be heard in beautiful oratorio works. The songs of Zion will reverberate through the wooded dells and across the lakes, and the sounds of many instruments will mingle with the whole in great pæans of praise. May we gather in humility of spirit, for this is a great hour and the work will be too great a burden unless the Spirit of God reigns with us.

A. N. HOXIE.

Gallands Grove Conference

It was the writer's pleasure to attend our district conference held at Mallard, Iowa, on the 11th and 12th, and it is possible that some of your readers may be interested in a short item from the Gallands Grove District.

District President James B. Barrett was placed in charge of the conference, with his counselors. The business session passed on very smoothly from one item of business to another, including the election of officers. All were reelected.

The prayer meeting on Sunday morning was a blessing indeed to the Saints. Many came fasting in an effort to draw nearer to the Lord, and the good Spirit was there very noticeably. The Saints were given the suggestion in the early part of the meeting that Christ and his gospel were still on trial, and we were all called as witnesses; that the world would judge him and his gospel on the basis of our testimony; and, further, that Christ himself would rejoice if we showed ourselves in all things faithful witnesses. One after another arose to tell of the blessing, joy, and peace of the Christ service. Old and young had the same good message to tell; and the testimonies of the isolated—how they warmed our hearts to the sweetness of communion with Saints, which is sometimes too little regarded by us.

Just before the close of the prayer meeting, and as a sort of benediction approving our effort to draw nearer to Him, we were given a Father's blessing and admonition through Elder A. R. Crippen. As we ponder over an experience of this kind, the mind is somehow led to make a comparison, seeking to find relative values outside of the church, if such there be. And what do we see? People running to and fro, hither and thither, seeking, always seeking for something to satisfy, something new, which they do not find.

The Saints love to sing, and old and young join in it joyfully. Sometimes a discordant note is heard, or sometimes a voice breaks on a high pitch, but this, if noticed at all, is quickly forgotten. Many of the Saints are only average singers, but their hearts and souls are in the song.

Of special note was the work of Brother J. Dean Talcott, who has charge of the musical work of the district. Out in the world of business we are constantly looking for men who can deliver the goods, and each of us knows this is the only sure ticket for a bigger job. Brother Talcott is making good. It was pleasing indeed to note how easily he led his choir and the congregation through the song service, using hymns both new and old. We understand he also has organized an orchestra, or it may be a small band, in his home branch at Arion and Dow City.

Brother Carroll, of Auburn, who has attended meetings in this district for years and years, was present with his good wife. Another face we were glad to see was Elder Crabb, who is nearing his fourscore and ten, and yet preached a good sermon on Sunday afternoon. Our missionary, Elder S. T. Pendleton, preached several times in good form, and one of our young men, Elder E. R. Butterworth, son of Patriarch C. E. Butterworth, preached a very forceful sermon, it being based on the interrogation, "What lack I yet?" The congregation were invited to behold themselves in the gospel mirror, remembering and correcting the defects.

Our new district tent which we are setting up for the first time in Glidden, Iowa, will be in charge of Brother Pendleton, who has already shown himself to be a hard worker and a good proselyter.

The work in this district should take on new life after such a conference, and we trust it will not soon be forgotten. But did you ever stop to think how much like the Apostle Paul many of us are? The Lord has to knock us down before we realize he is doing anything. Let us hope that, also like Paul, we shall rise up and say, "What wilt thou have me to do?"

In bonds, C. E. ANDERSON.

FORT DODGE, IOWA, Box 211.

Council Bluffs and Vicinity

The district conference convened at Hazel Dell from the 3d to 5th inst. It was a pleasant gathering and in several ways beneficial.

Last Sunday occurred the funeral of John W. Price, one of the unfortunates who lost his life in the late war. He was much interested in the church while staying at Woodbine, Iowa. Funeral was conducted from the Central Church by J. F. Mintun. At the same hour the funeral rites of another boy who gave his life in the same war were held at the Danish Lutheran Church. Both funeral processions proceeded from our church abreast to the cemetery, led by the American Legion, who performed the last rites at the cemetery.

To-day the funerals of three soldier boys were held at the Park, and the three processions proceeded abreast to the cemetery. These scenes are very impressive.

Elder G. J. Harding occupied at Missouri Valley the 12th. Friday, the 10th, the Women's Department gave a play at the Riverside Mission in the evening, entitled, "Sewing for the heathen." A large gathering witnessed it.

The Riverside Mission Religio and Sunday school held a picnic Saturday afternoon at the Fairmount Park. All seemed to enjoy themselves in games, singing, and lunch.

J. F. Mintun Sundayed at Magnolia, Iowa, May 29, and occupied forenoon and evening; also gave a short talk at Decoration services the following day.

Pastor O. Salisbury is out of the city for a trip of three or four weeks, expecting to worship at Boone, Iowa, and Nauvoo, Illinois, while absent.

Northwestern Ohio District

At Bradner, Ohio, on June 12, was held a Sunday school convention of this district, Elder Walter Wierbaugh, superintendent of the district, in charge. The day was ideal, clear, and cool. A suitable grove was secured near town. The Saints gathered in from all parts of the district; Sylvania, Toledo, Oak Harbor, Saint Marys, Uniopolis, and Kalida being represented. Saint Marys, the youngest school, made the best report.

The forenoon was taken up with the general Sunday school work and the reading of reports. After a bounteous good dinner the afternoon passed away with good singing and the very best of speeches by Brother Brough of Oak Harbor.

Brother Brough was recently ordained an elder. He has a future. He spoke on "My ideal Sunday school." Brother Wierbaugh, the superintendent, spoke on "The things most needed in our Sunday school work." "Methods of teaching" were presented by the veteran, W. S. Hettrick, of Toledo. "A successful Sunday school" was well presented by Elder Ed. Patten, of Bradner. "The welfare of the Sunday school," by the genial young brother, Roy Yeager, of Sylvania. A very able paper was read touching "The primary department," by Sister Lora Strachan, of Youngstown, Ohio.

At the close of the convention Elder O. J. Hawn preached an excellent sermon, and everyone felt the day was well spent. He also occupied in the evening at 7.30. Brother Wierbaugh, the superintendent, is to be complimented by all for the manner in which he handled the convention. The Sunday school at Saint Marys averages about 75 and the preaching service 50 to 200.

Everything looks well in the district except finances. A farmer in this district sold the wool from 72 sheep which brought him $34. He added $6 to it and purchased a suit of clothes. Can you figure it out?

Sincerely,

JESSE M. HARDEN.

UNIOPOLIS, OHIO.

Good Conference in New York

The conference of the New York District held its sessions on June 4 and 5 at Niagara Falls.

Saturday afternoon, the priesthood met at 1.30 p. m. The conference business session followed at 2.30 with Elder Frank C. Mesle presiding. The officers elected for the following year were: George W. Robley, district president; Doctor P. L. Weegar and C. A. Spilsbury, vice presidents; Anna Lloyd, secretary; F. C. Mesle, treasurer; Anna Lloyd, chorister.

The Sunday schools held their session at 4 o'clock, and F. C. Mesle was elected district superintendent. The evening session was a combination of the talent of the Sunday schools and the Religios of the district, and was without doubt one of the finest sessions of this kind we ever witnessed.

There were papers written on "The ideal Religio," and on "Coordination," also original Religio songs, a spelling contest, new ideas for Religio, and mottoes that were hung up from different Religios. The Sherrill Religio received the largest percentage and was given a prize. There was not one minute in the whole two and one half hours that was not enjoyed. Great credit was due Doctor Weegar, the Religio field worker, for the excellent showing.

The Sunday morning sacrament service was very spiritual. The morning sermon was by Elder William Place, who was instrumental in forming or establishing the branches of the district. The afternoon was devoted to a round table in which all departments were heard. The evening sermon was by G. W. Robley. The conference was the best that the district has held in a long time, so declared by all.

Northeastern Illinois Reunion

There are two weeks of every year all look to with great interest. These weeks mean rest, enjoyment, and an opportunity to withdraw from the general routine of life. It means an opportunity to get out into the woods, close to nature and God. Where will you spend those two weeks (known as vacation) this year? Have you made any plans? If not, possibly this article will help you.

The Northeastern Illinois reunion will be held the two weeks of August 14 to 28 on our grounds in Villa Park, just outside of Elmhurst, Illinois. The transportation is hard to excel and still affords one a maximum degree of solitude and quiet. The Chicago & North Western and Illinois Central railroads, also the Chicago & Aurora electric are within easy walking distance of the grounds. Bus service will be provided from Elmhurst. Plenty of woods, good water, good meals, instructive meetings, and recreation, which can be enjoyed by all. The spiritual uplift one receives will repay you many times for the effort put forth.

Those arriving before reunion opens or remaining after its close could spend a few days to no better advantage than visiting the world-known city of Chicago. There are within her bounds many places of interest, such as the various parks with their lakes, lagoons, zoos, etc. The Art Institute and Field's Museum both contain many things of interest to Latter Day Saints and especially to Book of Mormon students. Other places of interest are among the many not mentioned.

Arrangements are being made for hikes through the surrounding country and trips to places of interest.

The cost of nearly all groceries is lower than last year, so we expect to have a reduction in the price of meals.

The price of cots and tents will be announced as soon as the committee secures this information.

Remember the date and the place. Come, bring the family, and enjoy the privilege of basking with God's people in the sunlight of his love. Meet the many consecrated workers and renew your spiritual being.

REUNION COMMITTEE.

Healed of Cancer

Sister Morrison Meehan gratefully reports that she has been signally blessed through the faith of the Saints.

Many of your readers and my dear friends will no doubt be pleased to hear from me since I have been so wonderfully blessed in answer to their prayers for me on sacrament Sunday in April. Two weeks before that date, many to whom I had written were praying for me, and I was getting stronger every day and have been improving in health so rapidly ever since that those who see me now can hardly believe that I was so very sick at that time. The "lump" in my side that the doctors thought was a cancer seems to be entirely gone, and I am so much better and stronger that I expect to return to my work in the office the first of June.

I am so grateful to my heavenly Father for this wonderful blessing that I cannot thank and praise him enough for his goodness and mercy to me. I am striving to be faithful and worthy of such a blessing as I have received.

I wish also to express my thanks to all those who so kindly offered prayers in my behalf. I read in Doctrine and Covenants, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive," and I believed if it was God's will to spare my life that he would hear your prayers for me, and I am very thankful to tell you how abundantly he has answered.

I desire also to thank the many friends who have written letters to me—some of whom were "Sunshine" friends, known long ago but not forgotten. I have answered quite a number and others will hear from me later.

There are many verses in the Bible that were very comforting to me while I was sick, a few of which I give below:

"This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby."—John 11: 4.

"And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matthew 21: 22.

"With God all things are possible."—Matthew 19: 26.

"According to your faith be it unto you."—Matthew 9: 29.

"Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."—Isaiah 41: 10.

"Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt."—Matthew 26: 39.

And I want to bear witness to the wonderful way in which God has again fulfilled his promises in these latter days, and to him and his Son, Jesus Christ, be the glory and praise forever and ever.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

FANNIE I. MORRISON MEEHAN.

Baptized After an Angel Visit

A brother in our branch has been married twelve years, and his wife had never been convinced that this is the work of God until the night of May 30, 1921. Our missionaries had warned her to investigate. More, our branch president, and a sister who exercised the gift of prophecy in one of our prayer meetings, had warned her.

She had given up for an operation since she had been in bad health for two years, but last Monday night while she was praying to the Lord, an angel appeared to her, and gave her an important message. By her request I shall give the words that were spoken to her:

"I have come to tell you that this is the true work of God for which you have so diligently prayed to know for the past two years. You must repent and be baptized or else you will die."

She did not even tell her husband about this. I chanced to visit her home the following day, and while I was there she became very ill. She called me to her bedside and told me in tears that she wanted to be baptized not later than Thursday afternoon at three o'clock. She also related to me the angel's message.

By her request I wrote her father and other relatives about it, and invited them to come at the said time for baptism. Her folks have always been bitterly opposed to her becoming a member of our church, but her father came and was perfectly willing. She was very weak and had just gotten over a hard chill when the hour arrived for her to be born of water. We thought it might be wisdom to put it off, but she constantly said, "Carry me on." Of course we did, but while they were preparing her she fainted twice. Still she said, "Carry me on." When she reached the place where the ordinance was performed she seemed to gain her strength and was indeed happy. Our missionaries will be glad to learn now, I know, that Sister Eunice Fuller is a soldier for our Savior. We ask the Saints to pray for her that she may receive her health again and be permitted to raise her four little children and work for the Master.

We, the members of Eros Branch, in dear old Louisiana, desire the prayers of all that we may be faithful workers and do much good for the upbuilding of this work.

Sincerely, E. C. LARCHE.

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN, June 6, 1921.

Editors Herald: There has been a marked increase in the attendance at the services this spring. Two carloads, not of our faith, from the town of Artland have the habit of motoring out here each Sunday evening. One of them, a musician, who had played the organ at one church for nine years, was hailed by our musicians as a real find, and they have him playing with them in the orchestra, Sunday evenings. This did not please the congregation at Artland, who straightway elected him organist during his absence, because he was so proficient, or because they believed the Saints' church an undesirable place to attend. However, he told the orchestra boys that when he played at Artland, not one of the members spoke to him or shook hands; while he said on the other hand our people were so cordial he nearly missed his car, as so many had to shake hands or speak a word to him. Some of these outsiders are interested, because J. J. Cornish preached in Artland awhile, more than a year ago, and the message rang in their ears, and they came to hear him here because he has been refused the schoolhouse to preach in near Artland.

Our annual joint meeting of the three branches to pray for the blessings of rain and moisture on the crops and the welfare of the country was held June 5, and was successful. A prayer meeting was held first, then a meeting to discuss matters of interest to the three branches and to appoint a day of Thanksgiving after the crops are garnered.

The ladies are having a bazaar with ice cream and cake on June 16, to swell the Christmas offering fund.

MISCELLANEOUS

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District: As business interests have made it necessary for Brother Milo Burnett to move outside of the district, we wish to announce as his successor in the office of Bishop's agent, Brother Ralph R. Welday, 712 South Sixth Street West, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. This appointment became effective June 11.

During the time he has held this office Brother Burnett has served the church well and faithfully, and we are sure his interest in the Lord's work will continue to be expressed by his works in his new location.

Brother Welday comes to us well recommended in church and business experience for the duties of this office, and we solicit the confidence and support of the Saints in his behalf.

This is a day of tithing and sacrifice on the part of all. "Let him that laboreth in the ministry, and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

I pray that the blessings of the Lord may attend the efforts of each one to assist in his work.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Williams, 725 Lewis Street, Burlington, Iowa.

Two-Day Meetings

At Wyeville, Wisconsin, July 23, 24. At Black River Falls, September 24, 25. We hope that all isolated Saints in near-by localities will try to attend these services, as well as bring a few nonmembers along. Special efforts are being made to make these services a blessing to all. E. J. Lenox, president.

Requests for Prayers

Josiah E. Carter requests prayers of the Saints that if it is God's will that he might be healed of diabetes.

Pastoral Notices

To the Saints of Western Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas, and Eastern New Mexico, Greeting: It having pleased the appointing powers to return me to your field to again take up the labor of love in the gospel of Christ, I take this means of getting in touch with you. After the six years that I spent with you and the many kindnesses that have endeared you to me, I feel that we need no special recommendations nor formal introduction. I know that you are all interested in the gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and I rejoice that I am again permitted to share my labors with you. I trust also that you will fully cooperate with me in the work and I feel sure you will, because I know your hearts and the high ideals that you have set by reason of your faith in the gospel of our blessed Lord.

To the end that we may be able to reach the highest possible mark of efficiency, and render the best possible service, I am asking you to write me fully and freely regarding any matters that may need attention, and I will give them consideration as rapidly as I am able to get to them. I have profound confidence in you by reason of our association together in other days and I feel that we ought to make this year a banner year for the church. Our work is onward and the demands for both missionary and pastoral work are increasing; I hope, therefore, that you will, one and all, give your best efforts to the furtherance of the work. I have felt in the past and now feel that the Saints of the Southwest are loyal to the cause and are ready to make any sacrifice needful to push forward the work of the church. I, therefore, come to you again with the assurance that the work you have so loyally maintained in the past shall now be pushed forward with a zeal and earnestness that cannot be surpassed.

I beseech of you in all earnestness that you honor God, which thing I feel sure you are ready always to do, with your life and with your substance. I am your fellow servant and minister for Christ, and you know the nature of my labors in the past. I have now even a greater desire for the unfolding of your lives. I am, therefore, coming to you with the assurance that my confidence in you shall be justified.

Mail sent to 1302 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri, will always reach me. J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Our Departed Ones

ARTHUR.—James Arthur, born July 16, 1854, in Scotland. Died May 25, 1921, at Sacramento, California, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. M. Joseph. Leaves to mourn, Mrs. E. M. Joseph, Mrs. J. S. Harris, E. M., G. E., Merie T., Naomi M., and George R. Arthur. Sermon by T. J. Lawn.

McNUTT.—Abbie Strang, daughter of the late Judge and Mrs. J. J. Strang, was born at Burlington, Wisconsin, January 1, 1857. Married F. J. McNutt at Millston, Wisconsin, September 16, 1873. To this union 4 children were born, all of whom were at the bedside during her last illness. She died, after a lingering illness, in Saint Joseph, Missouri, May 20, 1921. Besides the husband, she is survived by 2 sons and 2 daughters, one brother, and one grandchild, and a host of relatives and friends. Funeral from the home in charge of E. F. Robertson; address by R. S. Salyards. Interment, Mount Mora Cemetery.

FRANCIS.—Stephen A. Francis died May 26, 1921, at Saint Joseph, Missouri. Born in Henry County, Illinois, May 22, 1861. Baptized at Omaha, Nebraska, October 3, 1897; ordained a teacher at Saint Joseph, Missouri, November 7, 1917, in which office he rendered faithful service to the last. Survived by wife, Mary Sullivan Francis, and daughter, Lois of Saint Joseph, and 4 sons, Ray, of Saint Joseph; Jonas and Harry, of Omaha; Frank, of Chicago, all of whom were present at the funeral service conducted from the First Church, Saint Joseph, in charge of E. F. Robertson, address by R. S. Salyards. Interment in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Omaha, Nebraska.

THOMANDER.—Hanna Thomander, pioneer of Bitter Root Valley, having come to Montana 42 years ago, was born May 15, 1843. Died May 9, 1921, at the old home place. Married Peter Thomander, at Payson, Utah, 1876, who died three years ago. To them 9 children were born, 3 of whom survive, Mrs. Jason Jones, of Missoula, and Oscar C., Phoebe, and May Thomander of Victor, Montana. Funeral at Presbyterian church, Victor, Montana, George W. Thorburn officiating.

BULLARD.—A. Egbert, son of A. E. and Olive L. Bullard, was born April 15, 1919, at Denver, Colorado. Passed beyond to the paradise of God April 21, 1921, at Lamoni, Iowa. Besides his parents, leaves 2 half brothers and many relatives to mourn his early departure. Funeral from Brick Church in Lamoni with an attendance of nearly five hundred as evidence of how "little Bert" was known around Graceland College. There were beautiful floral offerings. Sermon by J. A. Gunsolley.

CONRAD.—Grace Eileen Conrad, daughter of John G. and Nada G. Joslin Conrad, was born near Viola, Iowa, August 14, 1918. On May 21, 1921, she was run down by a cow, receiving injuries in the skull which resulted in instant death. She leaves to mourn, her parents, a baby brother, her grandparents on both sides, and other relatives. She had a sweet disposition and was loved and admired by all who knew her. Funeral from the home of her grandfather, C. Conrad; sermon by J. E. Vanderwood. Interment in Riverside Cemetery, at Anamosa.

ROBSON.—Lula Viola Robson, wife of John Robson, died at New Philadelphia, Ohio, May 10, 1921. Born in New Philadelphia, March 14, 1879. Baptized when 15 years of age. Married John Robson November 23, 1898. She lived a clean and consistent Christian life. Leaves husband, 7 children, 2 brothers, and 2 sisters to mourn. Funeral in charge of Elder Dowdy; sermon by L. W. Powell, of Kirtland, Ohio.

HANSEN.—Emma Jensen was born February 14, 1897; baptized July 15, 1906; married Lehman W. Hansen, August 31, 1919. March 27, 1921, a little son was born to this union. April 19 this lovable wife and young mother died at Saint Francis Hospital, Maryville, Missouri. She was a faithful and devoted Saint. The beautiful floral tributes and large attendance at the funeral evidenced the love and esteem of those who knew her. She leaves to mourn, mother, husband, infant son, 4 brothers, and 2 sisters. Funeral at Union Church near Bedison, Missouri; sermon by Samuel Twombly.

JENSEN.—Andrew Jensen was born May 3, 1854, in Denmark. Died May 1, 1921, at his home near Conception Junction, Missouri. Married Karen Marie Peterson of Denmark. They came to America in 1877. To this union 13 children were born, 7 having preceded him. Baptized July 1, 1877, by H. N. Hansen. Leaves wife, 4 sons, Harry, Alec, Edward, and Raymond, and two daughters, Mrs. Will Froyd and Mrs. Will Rowlett. He was a faithful and loved father, a noble citizen, and a devoted Saint. Funeral at Union Church near Bedison, Missouri; sermon by Samuel Twombly, assisted by H. N. Hansen.

ANDERSON.—Roland, little son of Hilga and Inez Anderson, was born September 30, 1917, near Conception Junction, Missouri. Died May 15, 1921, after a short illness of diphtheria. He was indeed a lovable child. Leaves to mourn, father, mother, one sister, Margaret, and a host of relatives and friends. No funeral services were allowed, so the little one was quietly buried in Swinford Cemetery, near Bedison, Missouri. A few remarks and prayer were offered at the grave by Samuel Twombly.

LAWTON.—James Mumford, oldest son of Doctor John S. Lawton, of Saint Joseph, Missouri. Born at Brockton, Massachusetts, November 11, 1896, and died May 27, 1921, of double pneumonia. Baptized April 23, 1905, and was buried at Mount Mora Cemetery; funeral sermon by B. J. Scott. He made friends everywhere and was always spoken of in highest terms.

DAVIES.—Amelia, born March 14, 1852, at Bridgend, Glamorgan, Wales. Baptized December 13, 1875, by John Harry, confirmed by Benjamin Thomas. Died at her home in Llanelly, Carmarthen, Wales, May 25. Funeral rites performed by David Thomas and William Crouch. Leaves one married daughter and many friends that will miss her. Our late sister was well known by all the traveling elders for her hospitality. Lived and died strong in the faith of the restored gospel.

INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM

Opportunity for Service

The Independence Sanitarium offers an unusual opportunity to young ladies between years of 18 and 35 to learn the nursing profession. Such training is of value to you physically, spiritually, and financially. Are you willing to qualify? For further information write:

EDITORIAL

Easter and Immortality

The Messiah's Advocate prints the following on an extract from an editorial in the SAINTS' HERALD:

"To-day we still have the Easter egg, Easter lilies, the rabbit, and even the bonfire. But we are able clearly to consider them for what they are, symbols of that wonderful part of which they are after all but a feeble type.

"Death comes in time to all; one by one we see our loved ones and friends of other days pass from us. But Jesus having risen from the dead gives us the splendid assurance that man does not die; and that what we call death is after all but a change. And so, though in Adam all die, yet in Christ are all made alive. There may thus come something of selfish joy to us in what Easter signifies.

"But after all, with all of its symbolism and all its meanings, Easter is still preeminently a day set apart to Him who has risen triumphant over all human weaknesses; who has met every trial and has conquered; who has risen supreme over death, and all it signifies. For he has ascended on high to sit down on the right hand of God, and is alive forevermore."—SAINTS' HERALD, March 30, 1921.

"Is it not passing strange that intelligent men will so pervert the word of God? Where does the Bible tell us 'that man does not die'? In Genesis 3: 4 you will find a basis for such theology; but who is the author of those words? The 'immortality of the soul,' and the theology 'that man does not die,' is the preaching of Satan in Genesis 3: 4, and his ministers are preaching the thing to-day with all powers and signs and lying wonders. Whosoever he be that denies actual death denies actual sin."

We fully agree that it is passing strange that intelligent men will pervert the word of God and also pervert the writings of men.

It will be noted above that the HERALD editors do not deny the fact of physical death, nor do they deny that the soul that sinneth dies, for it is plainly stated, "Death comes in time to all; one by one we see our loved ones and friends of other days pass from us." But it is also true that Jesus comes with the splendid assurance that man does not die, but after all what we call death is a change.

Without attempting an exhaustive search, we read the following words of the Master:

"Verily, verily I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."—John 6: 47.

"This is the bread that cometh down from heaven that a man may eat thereof and not die."—John 6: 50.

"I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh which I will give for the life of the world."—John 6: 51.

"This is the bread which came down from heaven, not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead; he that eateth of this bread shall live forever."—John 6: 58.

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life; for God so loved the world that I gave my only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3: 14-16.

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, but he that believeth not on the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John 3: 36.

In John 11: 25 and 26 Jesus said unto Martha: "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

These statements from the lips of the Master should be sufficient for any lover of the truth as set forth in the word of God. They speak of "everlasting life," "eternal life," "shall not die," "shall live forever," and "whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

Adam was told clearly that the soul that sinneth dies. It is true Satan denied this, and in doing so misrepresented the truth. That the disciples understood Jesus clearly may be shown from many passages, but one immediately pertinent to this issue is the one referred to by us in the original article, namely: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15.

We do not now attempt any further explanation. We did not and do not deny the physical appearance of death. We do, however, stand firm on the assurance given by the Master, a consolation given to those who were weeping and mourning for a loved one passed away, and we most respectfully refer our contemporary to: "Whosoever liveth and believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

An Educational Survey

Some thoughts gleaned from the address of G. N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, to the graduating class of the Independence Sanitarium and Independence Institute May 31, 1921. This is not a verbatim report, but a few of the fine thoughts gathered there.—EDITORS.

If you don't have the best teachers and the best schools, it is your own fault. You can get what you want.

The fact that we have failed to a degree in this land in our educational system is our own fault. Any community in this great land of ours can have just what it wants educationally, eventually.

It is not a question of how fast we are going, but in what direction. We have had a number of joy rides educationally, and many of them have brought us to a wreck.

It is true that under democracy we can do as we please and experiment educationally, but to get anywhere educationally we must have a definite philosophy of life; we must know whither we are going.

Perhaps there has never been in the history of the world such amassed wealth as there is in this country to-day. We are more sanitary, more luxurious, more comfortable. We are smarter than our fathers were, but less wise.

A king who had indulged himself all his life in the good things of this world, when he came to die could not think of anything else that he could try to make himself happy, but sent a courier through the land to ask a wise man what he could do. The hermit sent word that if he would only sleep one night in the shirt of a happy man he would be happy ever after. They searched through the land for a completely happy man and finally found a beggar who appeared to be so. They begged him for his shirt for the king, but he had none.

There is a lesson here for us. Happiness is a matter of service rendered, not of how many shirts we have, nor a matter of the salary we receive. Happiness comes from within, not without.

Denominational Gains in 1920

A summary of denominational gains and losses, prepared by Doctor H. K. Childs, for the Christian Herald, shows considerable gain in communicants for the year 1920. In 1919 the Methodist group showed a loss of nearly 76,000; the Presbyterian, 46,000; and the Baptist over 11,000. In fact, the Protestant churches showed a net loss for 1919. The gain for all denominations for that year was only 43,830.

On the other hand, the grand total for 1920 showed a gain of 667,000 communicants, of which 127,579 represented the gain of the Catholic churches.

In church edifices, the Methodists appear to have been losing quite steadily, and report a loss of 200 churches in the year just past. In 1919 they showed a loss of 288. The loss of all churches for 1920 totaled 556.

There is a total gain of nearly 2,300 ministers, giving a total of nearly 196,000.

While the total church membership is listed at 42,140,997, it must be remembered that many individuals are friendly to different churches, but are not directly associated with them. Also many children are below the conversion age. Records made of students at the University of Iowa show a considerable number friendly to particular churches, who are not fully affiliated therewith.

Joseph Arber

Elder Joseph Arber, who passed away at the Independence Sanitarium June 18, was born in Sheffield, England, on December 23, 1871, and thus was not yet fifty years of age. He was baptized in the same city on May 29, 1888, and ordained a deacon shortly afterward, June 29, 1890. Two years later he was ordained a priest of the same branch on June 5, 1892. He apparently engaged in missionary work in the British Isles, for after his ordination as an elder on January 13, 1901, he was appointed by the General Conference of 1902 to Scotland, but he had previously labored as a local missionary. In 1906 he removed with his family to Independence, Missouri, where they have since made their home. On April 16, 1906, he was ordained a seventy under the hands of Joseph Luff and Gomer T. Griffiths and was appointed to labor in the Fremont, Iowa, District by the General Conference of 1907 and 1908, but the conference of 1910 transferred him to the Kewanee, Illinois, District where he continued for three years. In 1913 he was appointed to the Northeastern Kansas District, but in 1914 he was appointed to the Central Oklahoma District, where he continued until his appointment in 1918 to Des Moines, Iowa, District. Since then he has labored in Missouri, in the Northeastern District and Kansas City Stake.

At one time he had charge of the Sanitarium and is much beloved by the nurses at that institution, to whom he was a constant adviser. He was also called upon frequently for administration in that institution, as his residence was near the Sanitarium.

His services, therefore, as missionary of the church have covered a period of nearly twenty years, first in Scotland, then in Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Missouri.

In the last few years he has held many special services in Kansas City and vicinity. He has spoken on the street corners and has held tent services there, with great interest.

He was well beloved by those who knew him best and, besides his numerous friends, leaves to mourn him, a widow and five children.

Rural Population

One of the surprises of the census of 1920 was the fact that more than one half of the people of the United States now live in towns of 2,500 or over.

Still, as the Omaha Bee informs us, the farms are able to produce sufficient food and only a very few of the rich or poor are idle; all others, while they do not directly produce food, do produce other things that are needed for economic life.

"Over half the people in the United States live in towns of 2,500 or more inhabitants. Many solemn sermons will be preached on this text, reminding us of the decadence that follows as the country dwindles and the town waxes. Yet those who are inclined to look on the picture as a somber presentation of our national course should be comforted with the thought that while the rural population has lost its proportional relation to the whole, its importance has not been lessened nor its activities diminished. The farms of the United States last year produced more than ever in our history, enough for all the people and an exportable balance that not so many years ago would have amounted to a pretty fair total yield. The people who live in town are employed in useful occupations. Only a negligible few, very rich or very poor, belong to the idle class. While they do not produce the food they consume, they do bring forth things that are needed in the world, and provide the market for the farmer. Thus the balance is preserved. The lugubrious lines from Goldsmith's delightful poem—will spring into many minds, but they may be smiled at so far as the United States is concerned, because with our rapidly-mounting increase in wealth no corresponding decadence in manhood may be noted. We have the bold yeomen, just as we did in the beginning, and we have the equally bold artisans and clerks, whose service to humanity is as necessary and whose devotion to freedom is as unquestioned as if they all lived on farms."

"'Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,

The census shows that Missouri has increased its farm acreage slightly, to 34,774,679 acres, of which nearly 25 million are improved. The number of farmers has decreased from 277,244 in 1910 to 263,004 in 1920. The actual number of farms owned and operated by their owners decreased over 7,000, to 185,030 in 1920. In 1910, 46 per cent of the farms were mortgaged; in 1920, 51 per cent. The value of farm land was slightly over two billion in 1910; in 1920 it was $3,600,000,000. The price per acre had advanced from less than $50 per acre to $88 per acre. Farm mortgages also showed an increase of 80 per cent over 1910. Tax statistics have been supplied from 68,784 farms, and show a deficit of over 216 million dollars in mortgages. Statistics are not yet reported from the additional 65,000 farms also under mortgage. The report shows that crops have increased in value over 150 per cent, until they are worth more than two and a half times as much as ten years earlier. However, the figures for January 1, 1920, were before the great decline in prices had set in. The amount of live stock shows only a slight increase.

The Cost of War

E. B. Rosa, of the Department of Standards of the Government, delivered an address on May 20, 1920, before the Washington Academy of Science, on the economic importance of the scientific work of the Government. He discussed with some detail the scientific work being done in the various executive departments, and its value. But the matter of especial significance in view of the action by this Government on the League of Nations, is the fact that recent and previous wars represent 67.81 per cent of the total expenditure of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. In other words, over $3,855,000,000. Of this amount, one billion dollars is interest on the public debt; one billion and a half is on account of Federal control of transportation. The shipping board represents nearly 700 million more.

In addition to this, the War and Navy Departments for future wars, account for over 25 per cent of the total expenditures, or over $1,424,000,000. In other words, the total budget is about $5,686,000,000; of this amount 93 per cent is represented by war. Three per cent by the primary government functions; three per cent by public works, including the national park service, post roads, and harbors. Education and development work represent only one per cent of the appropriation, and of this, by far the larger part is represented by the Department of Agriculture. The department of education represents about one two-hundred-and-fiftieth of one per cent.

Yet we note, "For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, Congress appropriated nearly $420,000,000 to the War Department, after cutting the department's estimate more than one half. And for next year the War Department is asking for nearly $815,000,000. The Navy Department for the year ending June 30, 1921, received an appropriation of over 437 million. The estimate for next year calls for nearly 693 million.

In 1914 the United States Army and Navy were costing nearly $240,000,000; in the face of $240,000 for the year ending 1920, for the United States Bureau of Education, this figure is significant. But when it is compared with $1,424,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1920, which year began over seven and a half months after the armistice, and when it is compared with over 857 million for the year ending June 30, 1921, and over a half billion more asked for the coming year, the pittance for education becomes the more significant.

Past wars must be paid for, but why should we continue to expend so very large an amount preparing for future wars, instead of endeavoring to secure reasonable provisions for peace?

Church Schools

The Catholic Times, an organ of the Catholic body in England, published recently a short article on church schools. It is very insistent that all Catholic children should attend Catholic schools as it was impossible to give a Catholic child a Catholic education unless he attends a Catholic school. They have tried instruction in the church for their children attending counsel school but could not get them together in that way.

We have before commented on the amount of time given by both the Catholic and the Jews to the religious instructions of their children, yet Protestant churches are content with half an hour a week.

For our own part we stand firmly for as broad and liberal an education as possible but little children should be at least informed concerning the teaching of their own church.

The "Religio Quarterlies"

Numerous inquiries have come to the office concerning the Religio Quarterlies for July to September. The Senior Quarterly was on the press at the close of last week and we hope to be able to mail out all the quarterlies before the close of the present week, so they should be received thereafter in due course of mail.

The cause of the delay has not been the moving of the publishing house, but because the copy for these quarterlies was turned in so late in June.

The price made by the publishing house to both the Sunday school and the Religio for their quarterlies is based on an agreement that copy will be turned in long in advance, so that the work may be done at convenient slack periods at a minimum of cost.

The Sunday school turns in copy five months in advance; thus, the copy for July quarterlies was turned in in February, and the quarterlies were ready to be mailed by the first of June, so as to reach all parts of the world on time.

The Religio Department has not as yet tried to secure this advance publication of their quarterlies. But their agreement calls for copy to be turned in three months in advance; that is, the first of April, for July quarterlies.

The publishing house is doing all they can to get the quarterlies out as soon as possible, but since the copy was turned in from ten to twelve weeks late, it necessarily makes some delay in their publication.

Newspaper Ethics

An interesting discussion has recently taken place between the Chicago Tribune and Reverend J. T. Bradner Smith, of the Methodist Publicity Board. Doctor Smith is inclined to accept the statement of the Tribune that the ethical purposes and responsibilities of newspapers of great circulation must be of course secondary to their central function, the dissemination of news. This principle, he insists, is wrong, for there are moral and ethical responsibilities resting on the daily press quite as pronounced as the spreading of news.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate is quoted by the Christian Work stating that the chief function of the newspaper is to print news, but this concession must be accompanied with the statement that the printing of news involves a moral issue, then the chief function of the newspaper is ethical and moral instead of reportorial.

"We can agree with the Tribune," says the Advocate, that the 'chief function of the newspaper is to print news,' but this concession must be accompanied, and insistently so, with the statement that when the printing of news involves a moral issue, then the chief function of the newspaper is ethical and moral rather than reportorial. Illustrations can be adduced to prove this point, showing that the suppression of a certain story involving, for example, the future happiness and standing of an innocent person vastly outweighs the interest the publishing of the story might have as a matter of news. There is hardly a day but that a great paper is called upon to suppress news in the interest of morals.

The cash receipts at the Bishop's office of tithing, offering, and consecration, June 21 to 30, was $5,168.29, but this is only the amount sent direct to the Bishop's office, and does not include reports from the local bishops and Bishop's agents.

Subjects Being Discussed

Church News

The coming of the summer season causes the usual exodus of general church workers to other fields to attend reunions and have part in the usual activities of the summer.

Elder Walter W. Smith and wife have left for the East, to attend the Philadelphia reunion and possibly the one at Onset, and will take work at Columbia University ere they return. Elder H. Arthur Koehler and family have left for the East to attend the reunions and be in his field of work, Maine. Elder R. V. Hopkins has gone to Wisconsin to attend the Chetek reunion, in company with Elder F. M. McDowell and family. Mrs. A. M. Chase has gone to join her husband in missionary work in the East, to devote her time to that work with him. Elder Max Carmichael expects to attend Columbia University for a summer course in religious education.

Other items of this character are:

E. J. Smith, chief accountant in the Presiding Bishop's office, was called to Washington, District of Columbia, on important business last week.

John F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, was in Independence on church business June 23, 24.

D. T. Williams, of the Lamoni stake presidency, was in Independence all week, June 17 to 24, for the special services of the young people.

G. N. Briggs and C. E. Wight, of Graceland College, and Heman Hale Smith, of University of Wisconsin, were in Independence on business at the general offices about the twenty-second of June.

Bishop B. R. McGuire was in Chicago the last of June. He is expected at the eastern reunions this month.

The meetings on the church lawn June 19 to 23 proved a great success. There was a good crowd every night, even though the rains on Thursday, the 23d, forced the last meeting to be held in the church.

The first thirty minutes consisted of singing under the leadership of Harold C. Burgess, then followed a sermon of about one hour with Elder William I. Fligg as speaker. Elder Fligg has a splendid voice and readily made himself heard, so he had no difficulty in keeping the close attention of his audience, most of whom were young people.

After the service a reception or song service was held in some other part of town.

Immediately after the close of the services Brother Fligg left for Port Huron, Michigan, where several await baptism. From there he will go to attend the Erie Beach reunion.

Word of Wisdom

Frequent items come to our desk from the daily press which favor the Word of Wisdom. The Department of Agriculture has recently made a survey of 1,500 homes in forty-six different States, and states that the average cost of food is about fifty cents a day. That, as compared with twenty years ago, meat has diminished 8 per cent, grain products 11 per cent; dairy products have increased 6 per cent, vegetables 4 per cent, and fruits 8 per cent. This is in line with what science says we should eat—fruits and vegetables, and much less meat. There is doubtless still room for improvement.

Infant Mortality

Being born in America is more dangerous than to go to war. The London Press of March 24, 1921, has an excellent editorial on child welfare. They recognize that the criminal population is simply a result of bad birth and poor environment. A child with a strong, healthy body, and a mother who has had the right attention, gives the foundation for a future good citizen. Ontario has a death rate of 137 for the first year for every 1,000 births. The dean of the University of Arizona has said that it is more dangerous to-day for a baby to be born in America than it was for the soldiers of America to enter the front line trenches of France. We have given so much emphasis to the horrors of war, that we are slow perhaps to realize the fact that a larger percentage of babies die in the first year than of soldiers who lost their lives in France. In each year the United States loses more than five times as many babies as there were soldiers from the United States killed in battle.

Success in a Small Town

For several years Charles B. Woodstock was a member of the faculty at Graceland College, but about eight years ago he transferred to the Lamoni high school and from there two years ago went to Pisgah, Iowa, as superintendent of schools. Pisgah has 421 people in the town, yet it has a consolidated school, a large group of Camp Fire girls, held a community fair last year, and has practical demonstration work for its boys in the school and in the garden. Three hundred and fifty children attend the consolidated school every day. A decisive factor in the establishing of the consolidated school and of the community fair has been Professor Woodstock.

In The Nebraska Farmer for June 4, 1921, there appears an article "Putting pep in Pisgah," written by Professor Woodstock and illustrated by small pictures.

Professor Woodstock has been an elder of the church for a good many years past and does not neglect that part of his duties. He was an active force in having special services conducted at Pisgah in May with John F. Garver as the speaker. He has also been the past few years president of the Lamoni Quorum of Elders, but we understand on account of his continued absence he has recently tendered his resignation.

Strain on Colleges in the Future

College attendance has increased from 187,000 to 294,000 in the last six years. Julius H. Barnes, chairman of the Institute for Public Service, has attempted to carry the same rate into the future to 1950, and forecasts 1,139,000 college attendance by that year.

Doctor Frank Crane refers to the problem of financing, and asks, Must this increase in schools depend on private benevolence, or will we deny this throng of youth, and send them back home? A third solution would be to continue the present course, keeping out of all agreement to establish peace, which would naturally result in another war, so would solve the problem of the elimination of an excessive number of young men.

On the other hand, if we kept out of war, quit preparing for war, the entrance of one million or ten million into college would be a very simple and economical process. The amount spent to maintain the Army and Navy, year by year, to say nothing of the debts of past wars, would be an amount far in excess of all that is spent for school and college work, from the lowest kindergarten to the highest post graduate course.

Bishop Roderick May and party reached Independence the latter part of June. In the party was Alexander Klein, a Jewish lad, who brought with him the books of Moses in Hebrew.

Education as a Common Blessing

Baccalaureate address for Graceland College graduates by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, evening of June 5, 1921, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Rupert Wight.

Mr. President, Members of the Faculty, and Members of the Graduating Classes of Graceland College: Education as a common blessing within the reach of the majority is distinctively associated only with high forms of government. It is a priceless blessing that belongs to advanced civilization. Not all are so fortunate as we are in being able to secure an education. I have traveled in many foreign countries where the percentage of those who could read and write was very low. While it is true that the opportunity to secure an education is within the reach of our American boys and girls, yet, because of the choice that is necessary, persistency, sacrifice, and all that is entailed in the passing successfully of examinations in accordance with the studies prescribed, the graduates before me, who I am pleased to say number about one hundred, are deserving of commendation for what they have accomplished. Much is represented in their diplomas.

Having secured their education in a Christian atmosphere, there is not one of them who would take the credit for what has been accomplished all to himself. We are debtors to all. Much that we enjoy has come to us from hands, brains, and the toil of our fellows. Some of the graduates were inspired by others with the ideal of securing a liberal education—which led them on to college and to stay there until their courses of study were completed. The mothers and fathers at home are entitled to much of the credit for the achievements of this splendid body of graduates.

In every person is a germ of a larger life. When one looks into a cradle upon a babe, one little knows what powers are wrapped up in the little one. There may lie one who will take part in the noble profession of teaching and impress himself upon the life work of others, the far-reaching results of which cannot be forecasted. There may be lying in the cradle in embryo one who will fill the world with music. There may be one who will some day go to remote parts of the earth with the power of Christ to help men free themselves from all that oppresses. There may be one who some day will take a prominent part in affairs of government; possibly hurl back an invading foe; or will stand at the head of a great commercial institution. The powers, possibilities, and potentialities wrapped up in every human soul have yet to be set forth. Surely they have never found full expression.

Larger than a grain of wheat is the germ of life within when the grain is planted by the farmer, and it surrenders itself to sunshine, rain, and soil. Instead of one grain, there will be something like fifty grains. In an acorn is the possibility not only of a towering tree, but also a forest.

How much greater is man than a seed! He was made in the image and similitude of his God. How can life be developed beyond that which we ordinarily enjoy? One may pray, fast, and agonize, but not get life except by the law by which life is produced. There is something else to do. You must plant life to produce life. Reproduce yourself as many times intellectually, morally, and spiritually as the persons you meet. The thing you aspire to for yourself you must endeavor to bring into fruition in the lives of others. Pour out your life into the lives of others. The building up of character, and obtaining of life, is governed by law as much as anything in the physical realm.

Christ is not only a giver of pardon, but also a giver of law.

Tragedy in Isolation

To spend oneself isolated from one's fellows and from one's own home folks is a tragedy. The world is full of such tragedies.

Some attempt to get out of life what they think it holds for them by indulging in selfish whims, and in gratifying little vanities. Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die it abides alone. Except one gives his life to others, he abides alone. One should not foster a life of loneliness. One should give of those wonderful powers locked up in his soul to his mother, his greatest friend; to his father; to his brother and to his sisters; to his friends and to his neighbors; and without fail to the trinity of home, church, and state. It is the privilege and duty of all to safeguard the home; to contribute to the advancement of the church, which is the beginning of the glorious kingdom of God on earth, for which we pray; and also strengthen the bonds of the state. Who are better qualified to do this than those who have been properly trained and are inspired with lofty ideals—who have received their education under Christian influences? It is for you to create and maintain a Christian atmosphere wherever you may be.

What has brought into existence the things that are worth while? It is true that from the remote past there has been a great struggle going on. But it has not been might, cunning, and selfishness that have brought these things to us, upon which we place the affection of our hearts and that win our admiration. The factors that have contributed in bringing these things to us are mutual help, compassion for the infirm, help for the helpless, benevolence, faith, and love. Think it over and find out if it is not certain that these have contributed more than anything else in the bringing to us of those great blessings that we now enjoy as American citizens, and as believers in the One who was altogether lovely. Have faith, therefore, in that which is right. Never think you are in a losing cause if you find yourself on the right side of the question. Just as assuredly as the farmer is rewarded who places seeds of wheat in the ground, by the working of an unchangeable law, in seeing waving fields of grain, like billows of the deep, so you, by the operation of law will live to see, or some one will, the triumph of all righteous principles upheld and advocated.

The greatest danger to national and individual life, it appears to me, is moving in the world without God. No man is so great as the one who looks to some one greater than himself. It is eminently fitting that the book which stands out preeminently above all other books be properly recognized. One of the things to be noted everywhere is that where one attempts to move without God, the Holy Scriptures are treated lightly. What is not understood cannot be appreciated, and often what is not appreciated is abused and sometimes flippantly set aside. The Bible provides a firm, broad, and deep foundation for belief in God, in prayer, and in the hereafter.

The Influence of the Bible

It has fallen to my privilege to be associated with a committee in working very closely with the Bible for the past five months. This has led to a frequent turning from Genesis to Revelation, and the increasing marvel that has come to me is the wonderful insight, the profound depth that was reached by the Bible writers respecting human life and all that pertains thereto. What book is it that one desires as life draws to a close, as one is about to be ushered into the world to come—when one is in the vestibule that leads to the next life? Not a book on poetry, nor on philosophy, nor on science. It is that book that unquestionably contains a revelation of God's will to man. There is nothing more abundantly supported by evidence, nothing more certain than the fact of the existence of God and the certainty that the Bible is what it purports to be.

Did you ever stop to consider the Bible came from a very small country; not written all at once by a galaxy of men gathered from the best universities of the earth, nor was there an employment of agencies for transmitting intelligence in any sense equal to or similar to what we have to-day. Not at all. It came from a very small country and yet to-day what man, what set of men, selected from the world's best universities, who of them individually or as a collective body could produce a book equal to the Bible? If there has been an advancement along the ages, they should be able to produce a better book. I say that that book without a doubt contains a revelation of the will of our God to mankind.

Think of the twenty-third Psalm—just one Psalm:

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

I may say that my valuation of the Bible has risen, has grown beyond all power to portray, as a result of the intimate association with that book that has come to me in recent months.

In it is a synopsis of the life of the world's Savior, covering a period of thirty years. Then think of the Proverbs and those proclamations of truth announced by the prophets, all of which are so wonderful. It deals with life from creation to beyond the grave. It teaches how to live, and sets up danger signals along the way.

Religion is an element in life that cannot be safely set aside. It gives to one an interpretation of facts. How much one lacks who has in his possession only an abundance of facts. Some know of many things in relation to the stars, and of the earth whirling through space, which they conclude is whirling in the direction of annihilation. The one inspired by true religion can say, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the great things that God has prepared for those that love him, but they have been revealed by his Holy Spirit." "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the earth shows forth his handiwork." It is a matter of difference of interpretation.

We Lack a Basis for Comparison

Too often our perspective is not correct. We look too much immediately in front of us. I remember seeing the Gizeh group of pyramids for the first time. I was anxious to see them—one of the wonders of the world. One morning I left Cairo, crossed the Kasernil Bridge that spans the Nile, moved westward along the roadway on each side of which were Acacia trees, and I soon saw looming up the misty outlines of these most interesting pyramids, situated on the edge of the Libyan Desert. Upon arriving near I viewed them as best I could, but my impression was not equal to what I had thought it would be. They were one of the wonders of the world, according to description. I was not able to place the proper estimate upon them. I did not have a correct perspective. There was nothing big with which I could compare them.

Nothing big that had been left by human hands. There was the broad, blue canopy of heaven; the valley of the Nile outstretched to the east; and the desert losing itself in the westward horizon.

And so, with the desert and the sky only to judge these monuments by, I was not able to sense what really they represented. But I started to walk around Cheops and my conclusion was, when I reached the first corner, that it was quite a long walk; and when I arrived at the second corner I began to understand what the monument meant, that I was encircling. After walking around that monument of stone, covering about thirteen acres, I realized that I was in the presence of the greatest monuments ever left by human hands. I had been in the presence of small mountains of stone, but did not appreciate the fact.

That is often true in regard to things of great importance. Respecting our Maker, the Bible, or whatever the subject might be that is worthy of serious reflection, endeavor always to form a true perspective, then form your conclusion and do not waver therefrom.

The Law of Heredity

I stated that within every human soul is a germ of a larger life. How do we account for this? The pedigree of man affords full explanation. We read of the genealogy of Christ, which is traced back to Jacob, Isaac, and Abraham, and then on to Enos, who was the son of Seth, who was the son of Adam, who was the "son of God." The law of heredity does not stop with Adam. Our being sons of Adam is an incident, and not the outstanding fact.

The teachers will continue to live in the lives of all these graduates; because the teachers gave their lives to them. They planted life, and so there shall be an ever increasing production of life—only when that law ceases to be put into operation will there be a cessation of the great work represented in what has been achieved by the members of the graduating classes. The results will not be confined to America. There will go forth those who shall successfully take their part in the business affairs of life; there will be those who shall take their places in the musical world; there will be those who shall take their places in responsible offices of government; there will be those who shall be noted as men of influence in the farming districts of which they may form a part; and there are others who will probably find themselves, sooner or later, in Australia, in Europe, Asia, Scandinavia, the islands of the sea, and many other foreign fields.

Take advantage of your opportunities. Be equal to your responsibilities. Remember that success and happiness are indissolubly associated with virtue and righteousness.

Some time ago I heard a truth expressed that I judged to be classical; remember it: "An ounce of guilt is always heavier than a ton of sorrow." That is a profound truth. Beware of any theory that may take prayer out of your life; or that weakens your conception of God that carries with it a sense of responsibility for your conduct. See that you develop not only your critical, but also your appreciative faculties. Be able to join with the Psalmist in saying, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

May success follow the graduates along the whole pathway of life, and may the aim of the rising student body meet with happy and full realization.

Ethics alone is not enough to save man from sin. Religion is a necessity.

The Teachers' Edition of the Inspired Version

A much-needed work being pushed towards completion.

[The work being done by this committee is very interesting and will doubtless be of decided value to the church. On our request A. B. Phillips, secretary of the committee, prepared the following brief sketch. In his letter sending this article he states that the index contains nearly one third more topics than any other index thus far published, so far as we know. They are not attempting a complete concordance, but they are preparing a subject index with cross references and marginal needs and added helps.—EDITORS.]

As authorized by the Board of Publication, the teachers' edition of the Bible as corrected by Joseph Smith is to be arranged with a digested topical and word index. This index will contain about six thousand topics and words of importance. The words or topics will be arranged in alphabetical order under each letter of the alphabet separately, and will be numbered consecutively. These numbers are to be used for a cross reference system, so that other topics of a similar nature may be suggested to the student seeking texts on any particular subject.

The texts on any given subject are to be arranged or classified under subdivisions of that subject, in order to avoid assembling a mass of texts on voluminous subjects that would be of varied application and would necessitate an extended search if a particular division of the subject were to be sought. This, of course, necessitates an examination of the texts in order to determine what subdivisions of the subject are practical. For instance, the subject of "Affliction" is arranged with the following subtopics: Benefits of; consolation in; from God; grievous; purpose of; resignation in. The texts seem to lend themselves to this arrangement quite readily, and include those of chief importance.

In many instances there are so many texts on a single division of a subject it was found impractical to collect them on the margin of one page, and to distribute them on several pages would make it difficult to find them all. Hence it was thought best to arrange them in the index under the proper subject, beginning with Genesis, or whatever book contains the first instance of the texts being collected, and ending with the last book of the Bible containing a desired text on the subject. The marginal references are arranged in the same order, one at a place, and cite the next verse used until all are employed. The last verse cited will refer back to the one first used, thus constituting an endless chain of references.

Besides the chain reference system there will be occasional texts allied to the topic which will be noted on the margin of the page. These will be so indicated that they will not interfere with the general reference system, or be confused with it. In some instances they are texts that are identical, or nearly so, with those used in the reference index, but do not add anything to the subject matter itself. They are placed there simply for a comparative reading when desired.

As is common to the issue of any voluminous work, there have been found a number of errors in the present edition which will be corrected in the new edition and made conformable to the original manuscript and the marked Bible from which Joseph Smith made the corrections. This, of course, necessitates a careful scrutiny of the present edition, in connection with the manuscript and the Bible referred to.

References to other versions of the Bible will also be given in footnotes when the importance of the text seems to demand it. In this way the inspired rendering can be compared with the translations of most importance in various cases and the actual value of each be made more apparent.

The best scholarship of the world will thus be available to the student who wishes to weigh the distinctions that can be found as to the meaning of the text thus referred to.

The subject of Bible helps must also be decided on. Those published with the various editions commonly used are valuable and in most respects cannot be greatly improved upon, but there are a number of important subjects more or less distinctive of our faith which could well be supplied in connection with the contemplated work. Especially is this true of historical matter touching important phases of our doctrine, and some recommendation will probably be made to cover this matter.

The fact that every text must be compared with the Inspired Version, and that much of importance is found there which is not contained in any other version, and also that the versification is different, makes the work much more difficult than otherwise would have been the case. In many instances it has necessitated a reading of many chapters of some particular book in order to be sure that important texts were not omitted, at least so far as reasonable caution could guard against.

It is not possible to avoid the use of the same text several times in some instances, because not only do some texts contain several topical ideas, but they are sometimes divisible into several phases of the same general subject. But the most relevant texts are sought as a rule, and by the cross reference system it is possible usually to make closer distinctions as to the meanings those employed and still make available various shadings of the subject as well as various allied topics. In doing this the scriptural word largely guides the selection of the topical heading, and one familiar with that particular phraseology will find the text for which he seeks more readily than if the word is unfamiliar.

In order to make the changed readings of the Inspired Version more quickly available, it is possible that heavy faced type, or some other means to distinguish such verses or words, will be employed in the published work. This will make it easy to tell at a glance just what corrections were made in the text by Joseph Smith, and his work will stand for exactly what it is worth to the discriminating mind.

It should be borne in mind that it is impossible to collect all the texts on every subject found in the Bible and arrange the matter in index form without swelling the size of the volume beyond the scope of a practical work. The present attempt does not assume to do this, therefore, but simply to arrange in topical form the principal or more significant texts, and to connect allied topics by the cross reference system. By this means the student should be able to get the scriptural viewpoint on practically all phases of his subject.

The texts selected on each topic are such as in the judgment of the compilers are clearly applicable, and strained or specious interpretations in order to make a text apply have been avoided. The reader must necessarily determine for himself whether or not they suit his own convenience, but, unless they appear to bear directly on the subject, it was thought best to omit texts of doubtful significance. The manner in which the texts have been classified brings into use many that would not otherwise have been suitable, however, and it is hoped that practically all of the more familiar and important ones have been employed in proper places.

During the work of compiling the matter many truths of the scripture have been reinforced by inspired utterances that had not been generally noted by the ministry hitherto, it is believed. The unfolding of the doctrines of the Book of books is a very wonderful thing as one becomes better acquainted with many of its varied expressions. And the general unity of spirit characterizing the ancient writers is nothing less than marvelous, considering the varied conditions under which they lived.

One thing that will be noticed, is the fact that texts found in some of the common versions of the Bible are in some cases so changed in the Inspired Version as to clear up doubtful meanings, and sometimes even to correct very apparent errors. Occasionally it happens that a verse which has been quoted commonly in support of a particular idea is given a very different meaning in the Inspired Version. Errors of this kind corrected make the work of unusual interest from a theological point of view, however much it may affect the dogmatist.

On account of the various other duties urging those who have been engaged in this work of preparing the new edition, it has not been possible to give it constant attention by all of the committee at all times, and with the opening of the summer season the work will be suspended and some time devoted to other church work in various fields of labor. It is intended, however, to resume and complete it next fall.

The Cause of Failure

By W. F. Yates

Success or failure rests with our own faithfulness to God's commands. Envy and strife are of the Devil.

When any person or organization which has been called into existence by divine appointment fails in a work, there is but this conclusion: Faithfulness to duty was lacking upon the part of such person or organization. Well, says one, a brother said or did that, which was so wrong I was justified in doing what I did; it was but righteous indignation on my part.

In all the differences that have arisen between men in the church, and resulted in some dissenting from our ranks, I have no doubt but what there were mistakes upon each side; but there never was justification for bitter feelings or malice upon the part of either.

A rule that can be applied at all times in these cases is found in James 3: 16, 17:

"For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work, but the wisdom [or spirit] that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy."

Should anyone feel that he should take a conscientious stand against a church, there is absolutely no reason for such an one getting malicious and mean; when he does, we feel that this evil comes because of his fear of his wrong position. A man taking a righteous position can always wait with patience, and as sure as he is right he has met the enemy and conquered.

The complaints that are frequently indulged in by many when failure is experienced, "If it had not been for so and so, or this or that, I should have succeeded," are human, to say the least. To carry this false idea to its ultimate result places God as a failure.

"When ye do as I say, then am I bound, otherwise ye have no promise." (Doctrine and Covenants.) So, if we see failure along the line, either there was no divine calling or the laws governing were not complied with. Should the writer of these lines fail in his calling as a minister, he hopes he shall still be in possession of enough truth to acknowledge that his failure commenced with himself. It makes no difference what others have done or failed to do, for there never was but little appreciation for those who would stand by the truth as is revealed by past history, at least till they passed on. As I say, Should I fail, I could not attribute it to a mistaken calling, because that would go against my own testimony that there was a divine influence which conveyed knowledge (not faith) of that call. God never called a man without giving him the power to accomplish all that he required at his hands. If a man is a conqueror of his own self, could all powers of earth and hell combined separate him or swerve him from his purpose of faithfulness to his God?

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ; shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or perils, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter, nay in all these things we are more than conqueror, through him that loved us, as I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor heights, nor depths, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord." —Romans 8: 35-39.

None of these things could prevent us from an onward march to success, even as the prominent characters of the past have accomplished their work. But there are those inward, carnal, lustful enemies, which must be conquered. They constantly make their attack upon all. These may do that work. The conquering of these attackers within will indeed make one greater than he that taketh a city.

Taking Nephi of old as an example; he many times met the most unrelenting opposition on every hand. Cannot we say that he came out conqueror, and was a success as a minister? And his influence will be felt down to the end of time, no doubt. When he was left to his own human feelings, he might have felt that he was almost a failure, but his adherence to God's law brought him successes that will remain.

We may feel at times that success will come in an easy way, and feel that there is a way for us to work where we would not meet these opposing, trying, discouraging, and sorrowing things. But all we can glean from books of the past conveys the very opposite thought. Evil follows closely upon the good; we have no reason to believe but what they shall continue until the good is made better by the opposing forces of wrong; at least, till the divine purpose is accomplished.

There was a Cain to torment the rest of the family; an Esau to perplex those who sought the face of their Creator; a Judas to try the faith of the disciples of old. The Devil talked face to face with Jesus, bringing his darkening, miserable influence to bear; also Laman and Lemuel were on hand to bring sorrow to their brethren. In our own day men have been willing to listen to the voice of the Good Shepherd; the Devil still has occupied his seat of power.

From the fact that "the Lord causes the wrath of man to praise him," we can conclude that if any should resolve to be faithful to the commands of their Maker, then yield to the carnal, they would still be used as instruments, but perhaps "this time" as tormentors of the other class who were to be perfected. We have heard, at times, Saints speak with seeming anxiety as to what might come upon the church in the way of persecution. Why should this be? If God has called us into existence, we can accomplish our work; but, if we are not obedient, the Devil can whip us to our knees. Should this be needed, surely we should not complain, since it has ever been the process of teaching man that God is true. Fear comes when we sense our weakness, but pure love casteth out all fear. When man awakes to the realization of his sin and repents, he places himself back in the path of success, but if he realizes his condition and fails to make a clean breast of the whole thing by repenting, but seeks to hide it, no success could possibly come to him, so far as accomplishing a particular calling of the Lord is concerned.

Of course this is true, as individuals or as a church. We

"THE BRITISH EMPIRE OUTLINED IN GENESIS"

[The following extract from a lecture by Mr. T. W. Plant, of Doncaster, was delivered under the auspices of the Southport British-Israel Association and printed in the Southport Visitor and then in The Banner of Israel, both publications of Great Britain. The association is founded on the theory that Great Britain is Israel. It is interesting to know how others have interpreted some of these texts, and is printed for this reason, not as showing the position of the church.—EDITORS.]

Genesis has been criticized more than any other book of the Bible, but the same point of view runs throughout it—the progress and expansion of the Hebrew race, or one portion of it, even down to the present day. Why do some people consider it impossible for the Bible to forecast the rise and fall of nations? It does so in many cases, and if it does not deal with the greatest kingdom and empire that has ever existed, there is a flaw in the Bible. Many most momentous prophecies are skimmed over or spiritualized, but British-Israelites dive into the depths. Members of the old school of interpretation say: Are not the Jews God's chosen people? Then why look for them elsewhere? Well, the Jews of the present day know that they are not the only chosen people, and they pray weekly for the discovery of the ten tribes who are not of their own tribe, Judah. Recent utterances of their chief, Rabbi Adler, show this, and he looks forward to the coming junction of Judah with Israel and great blessing to come to the whole race. The last time the twelve tribes were united was in the reign of Solomon, after whose death the kingdom of Israel continued with ten tribes and the kingdom of Judah was formed. Israel was carried into captivity in Assyria, and 130 years later Judah went into the Babylonian captivity. Scripture teems with prophecies about the two distinct houses, about three quarters of them referring to Israel and the other quarter to Judah—the Jews. Three times out of four, when ministers say that the prophecies refer to the Jews, they are wrong. The Bible is never caught napping on the prophecies about the two houses. It never says Israel if it means Judah; it never says Judah if it means Israel. A divine purpose runs through the whole Bible.

In Genesis we see this mapped out. Great things are promised to the seed of Abram. Multitude, territory, a great nation, and even to be called "great," which term applies only to Great Britain, whilst British is practically Hebrew for covenant men and Britannia for covenant ships. In chapter

15 we see the promise of the land from the river Nile, in Egypt, to the river Euphrates, in Asia. Did the Jews ever hold this land or did Israel in Bible times? Who has it now, or nearly all of it? The rest is assuredly to follow. The divine promises go on, and the best known are those to Abraham when he obeyed God over Isaac. We see them in chapter 22, and the material part of them never applied to the Jews, but all apply to the "chief of nations" now in existence. Did the Jews ever hold the "gates," or are they ever likely to hold them? No! The late Admiral Lord Fisher knew who held the gates of the world, and did not hesitate to say that we were the Israel of modern times. One of the gates was the Falkland Islands, and Fisher's hurried dispatch of an ill-equipped fleet preserved this gate to us and destroyed the German fleet. Not long ago, Israel, but not Judah, reentered Palestine. Obadiah 18 forecasts this event in prophesying that the "house of Joseph" shall beat the Turks, Esau-Edom, and possess Jerusalem and Zion. It was done, and did the house of Judah do it? No! It was the house of Joseph! Why cannot people open their eyes? The Turks are not done with yet, but they will be by Joseph, otherwise by a combination of Ephraim and Manasseh. In Genesis 48 we see how these two tribes were blest by Israel, otherwise Jacob. They were both to be great, but Ephraim, the younger, was to be the greater and to be a "company of nations." In the history of the world there has been only one such "company of nations," and it exists. Where is it? Is prophecy wrong? Judah did not, and does not, fulfill this prophecy, and no one can possibly make Ephraim and Manasseh into Jews. In chapter 49 Jacob shows the destiny of his sons as to what will befall them "in the last days." Read the chapter and you will see the difference between the destinies of Judah and his half brother, Joseph. In what part of the latter days? When the "seven times" of prophecy have been fulfilled, or 2,520 years from the time it was made. In 1800 our islands became a united kingdom, and it has made gigantic strides since over the world. The "seven times" was at an end. Another prophetic date is the 1,335 days of Daniel when we took possession of Jerusalem. Much can be said on these points but there is no time during this lecture. Our race has been traced back from Israel to Assyria and link by link to these isles of prophecy. It has been said that the "grave of Israel is the birth-place of the Saxon race." We are the descendants of Isaac, and as the Bible says, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called."

FARMER CORPORATION

Better and faster transportation and better distribution are essential.

Among the things cooperation can do for the farmer, Mr. Herbert Hoover states the advantage of a national organization to work out a plan by which farmers may grade and standardize and pack their products uniformly. This will insure a dependable quality to the jobber, wholesaler, and consumer. It is uncertain quality and grade which now takes a large share of the profit from the producer. He further urges, in Farm and Fireside, a faster system of distribution for perishable products, thus saving loss from deterioration, and enabling the dealer to pay a higher price. This would include better transportation and storage, and should reduce the wasteful marketing cost on both perishable and staple crops.

Further, that the farm bureau gather facts the world over, and state for one or two years in advance the probable consumption of different grades of farm products. This would enable the farmer to produce a supply somewhat near the have a right as a ministry or as a church to live close enough to the eternal laws of Christ to establish a "Zion." There is nothing that stands out so prominently as that God will have such a people or condition.

Should we ever fail in this thing, we could be used, but with the past record before us, it would be to harass or act as tormentors to those God would call in the future to accomplish that work. If that should be the case, there is yet no room for anxiety to the righteous, for things would only be working out according to the wisdom of God.

We are informed in the word of God that when Babylon falls, people will become very sorrowful, and say, Alas, alas, that great city in one hour has fallen, etc.

A sad time for those who have built upon error, but the righteous will glean the lesson that will help them on to success. Then, within our own selves, we can learn and live the right or the wrong. Men are the guides to their own destinies, according to the power they list to obey.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Gratitude

By Hattie Hughes

I'd like to write a song,
That wouldn't be too long,
But something that would really be worth while;
A song of sunny bowers,
And pretty summer flowers,
And everything that Nature's arts beguile.

But nothing I can say,
Can make this earth more gay,
Or change the blue in God's ethereal sky;
But I can grateful be,
For every flower and tree,
And everything his goodness doth supply.

The birds in every tree,
The honey and the bee,
And whispering zephyrs murmuring in the air,
And cooling running streams,
Where gentle sunlight beams,
All seem to say that God is truly there.

And all the pastures green
With grasses tall and lean,
And cattle grazing softly in the shade,
And flowers of every hue,
All wet with heavy dew,
And sheep and lambkins sleeping in the glade.

The Cry

By Ralph W. Farrell

If these frail hands, so weak and old,
Could lift the burden of the world,
Could heal the broken hearts that cry
Day after day, uncomforted—
If this faint heart, once strong and bold,
Could mother all the sons of men,
Could dry the tear from every eye,
Then would my life be comforted.

If in that land beyond the sea,
Where Christ in glory waits for me,
Where loving hearts have passed to stay
Until the resurrection day—
If then revealed God's will I see,

If then his hand will reach to me,
My life shall not have lived in vain;
I shall be glad I found the way.

Only Sleeping

By Zelpha M. Zigler

Only sleeping till the turmoil
And the cares of life are done.
Only sleeping till the coming
Of that great and Holy One.

Only sleeping, this fair casket,
Safely resting 'neath the sod,
While the tiny soul rejoices
In the paradise of God.

Only sleeping, this rare blossom,
That once bloomed on earth so fair,
Now is safe among the jewels
That are treasured over there.

Only sleeping till the dawning
Of the resurrection morn,
When the sleepers shall awaken
At the sound of Gabriel's horn.

Only sleeping till Christ's treasures
Will come forth from earth so fair,
When the living Saints, if faithful,
Will rejoin them in the air.

A Prayer

By Phyllis N. McArthur

Dear heavenly Father, hear my prayer,
And thou, who knowest all,
Who knows my every single care,
Who sees the sparrow fall,

Look down upon thy erring child.
To thee I lift mine eyes,
And now, when I feel so beguiled
I know you sympathize.

O Love divine that stoops to share,
Thy servant's bitter tear;
O guide me from the tempter's snares,
O Love, forever dear.

I ask thee, Lord, to give me skill,
I want to set apart
My life, to do thy holy will,
And comfort every heart.

If I can make one heart more glad,
May I not spare my hand,
If I can cheer one who is sad,
May I not idle stand.

I want to, also, in my small way,
Comfort every one,
Whatever else, teach me to say,
Oh God, thy will be done.

demand, and prevent overproduction and the resultant low prices, such as the food administration attempted and did.

He further urges that the price of all farm products is practically determined at the receiving door of the retailer. A retail dealer in butter in New York is offered daily Danish, American, and Canadian butter. He naturally buys where he can get the best butter for the most reasonable price.

From a shorter view, the farmer's price is not the cost of production, plus a fair return. But in the long run it is, for the reason that he would cease to produce if he does not receive adequate return, the friendly way between the farmer's door and the retailer's door, which makes possible a better price to the farmer.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the Herald intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Our Greatest Need

By H. E. Moler

Amusements and recreation? or more spirituality? Which? asks this missionary who fears extremes.

We are engaged in a great work. We often refer to it as the "latter-day work." Isaiah calls it a "marvelous work and a wonder." It is not a play, neither a pastime. Work is the dominant feature of the church. We have much to do and a long way to go to reach perfection. The time allotted to us in which to work is short, and the matter of our salvation so important that we have no time to waste, neither excuse for delay. The Master's business is urgent. We are facing momentous problems. The power of the Adversary is prevalent everywhere, and working with all his subtle cunning to prevent the success of the work of our Father. The pleasures of the world, and carnal things of this life are the means of decoy and deception chiefly used.

For a few years now the inclination of our young members to go after these pleasures of the world have been a matter of great concern to the older ones. It is a great question, as the young are our future hope for the carrying on of the work of the church. Some have believed that the best way to keep our young interested in the church is to furnish all the amusement and recreation they desire within the church. Others believe that to furnish anything of the kind, we are merely following after the world and worldly things.

Two Extremes

The writer believes there are two extremes. One extreme is to hold before church members, whether young or old, amusements and temporal pleasures as the inducement to stand by the church. The other extreme is the position that all temporal pleasures and physical recreations are sinful. Let us avoid both extremes by keeping before our members the love of God and the beauty of the laws of his kingdom; the practicability of keeping his commandments; and the gospel as the great solution of the problem of this life, and which gives us assurance of the life to come. God has done so much for us, through the manifestation of his wonderful love and the gift of his Son, that we should recognize as our first and greatest duty our obligation to love and serve him. This duty, when recognized and performed, becomes a great privilege, because he "makes us free indeed." We may have the benefit of all the pure, clean, and invigorating recreations available, but this will be merely a subsidiary consideration and not the great attraction.

We cannot extend to the young a "Welcome you just as you are," as has been suggested by some. If there is a lack of devotion to the worship of God, or if their spirituality is deficient, there is need of a change. Jesus did not use the "loaves and fishes" as an inducement to the people to follow him, and neither can we offer to any the pleasures of temporal things, entertainments and amusements, as the chief object.

God Does Not Command Play

It has been said that "it is as religious to play as it is to work." This is not true. God in all ages has enjoined upon his people work as a religious duty, but never has commanded play as such duty. Jesus said: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." (John 5:17.) "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9:4.) Paul wrote, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Philippians 2:12.) There may be some religion about some plays, but it is not to be compared with that of work, or works. Work and industry go hand in hand. Play is often associated with idleness, but work, never.

Have we noticed that it is the idle who clamor the loudest for play? It is the idle—those who prefer play to work—who are our greatest criminals. Men and women who are constantly engaged in legitimate work are seldom found to be criminals. But when they are thrown out of work and forced into idleness they often turn criminals. The juvenile offender is usually the idle boy—the boy who has nothing to do but play. The incorrigible girl is the girl who is allowed to play while her mother does the work; the girl who goes to all the plays and spends her time in what she calls pleasure. The boy or girl who is trained to work and taught to recognize work as his first and greatest duty, will soon find delight in his work and will not care so much for the follies of worldly pleasures. The chance of going wrong is always greatest with the boy or girl who has been encouraged in the idea that he should be privileged to go to all places of amusement and have what he calls a good time, rather than enter upon and perform his part in the great responsibilities of life.

To those who work and take delight in their work there comes a greater enjoyment of the recreations afforded members of the church, than can possibly come to those whose minds are set exclusively upon play and entertainment. The latter soon become dissatisfied with the pure, simple recreations that accord with the gospel, and go out among the world to find what they esteem as greater pleasure. We question if the furnishing our young people with the amusements they desire alone will bring them closer to God, or into a higher spiritual life.

We are not condemning healthful and chaste physical exercises, nor clean moral plays; but these should not be held out to any as chief inducements. The things of God and the law of life should be, to those who seek salvation, attractive above all other things. First, let us recognize our duty to God, to love and to serve him, and then all things good, pure, and virtuous, whether temporal or spiritual, are ours. But let us not put the temporal first, as there is danger that this may eclipse from our view the other.

Recreation Must Not Be Overemphasized

Amusement and play, while having their place, can never take the place of the specific duties imposed upon us in the word God has given to us. And the fact it makes no provision for temporal amusements should not be construed as condemning them, but should cause us to pause and consider before making them prominent or first even for the consideration of our youth.

We believe Paul spoke by inspiration when he said: "And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."—Romans 12:2. Also Peter when he admonished: "As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance."—1 Peter 1:14. And also John, when he wrote: "Love not the world nor the things that are in the world. If

By William A. Lewis

(Concluded from last week.)

The Social Value of Play.—All students of social conditions must be convinced by this time that mob spirit is very rapidly developing in all of our cities and towns. We must concede that our American "mobs" are made of very young people, and we must further, to our shame, admit that these young people have received their education in our American schools. True, many of them live in a home environment which is still elementally foreign.

It is truly astonishing to observe the rapid deterioration of the manners of our young people almost as soon as they leave school. It is remarkable how soon even the school youngsters degenerate during vacation when they are out of their glad school clothes.

They very soon seem to turn into a crowd of young unmanly rowdies with nasty speech and nasty manners. Those who are students of social conditions and those who have come in contact with the "gangs" in our parks and playgrounds are astonished by the fact of how rapidly boys and girls, who have only recently graduated as "angels," turn into a tough lot of loafers. Not all of them, by any means, and not even a majority of them, but enough to make us wonder what is wrong with our school system.

The real culture which a boy and girl gets in school will show itself best if he turns into a self-respecting wage earner, if he becomes an honest voter and a law-abiding citizen.

More Outdoor School Life

What is wrong then with our schools?

There is to-day hardly need for more arguments in favor any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life is not of the Father, but is of the world."—1 John 1: 15, 16.

Study Environment

Many of the pleasures we long for, and think to be perfectly natural and legitimate, are due to our environment. We see these things, become accustomed to them, and finally adopt them. Had we not seen others partaking of these things we would never have known of them, and hence would not have desired them. This is clearly shown by the differences in the games and amusements of different races and nationalities. Environment has a great influence which is felt all the time everywhere we go. There are two kinds of environment to every individual: the inner, and the outer. The outer we may not be able to help or change, but the inner environment we make ourselves. We alone decide what that shall be. We may so conform to that which should be only an outer environment that it becomes an inner environment. Whether we be transformed from the world, or conformed to the world is a question that must be decided by everyone for himself or herself.

There is so much in the great love of the Father and his Son for our consideration, so much in the gospel for our joy and comfort, and so much in the great plan of redemption for our work, that these should first of all receive our consideration and occupy the greatest portion of our time and employ the best talent we have to give. Indeed, if we are diligent in these things, we will have but little time for anything else. Let us have an increase of spirituality, and a great awakening to the necessity of the higher life.

of more outdoor school work, and the great influence which organized play may exert in the building of character. Organized recess exercises not only insure an equal opportunity for every child, be he weak or strong, but it gives the teacher an opportunity to know the child, the real child—the child as he unbends during spontaneous action, as he unfolds during intense application and when close to nature. The school-room child is a product of an artificial environment. The playground child is a product of fundamental emotions and hereditary instincts. Play, then, as a method of recreation and of physical training, is unsurpassed.

We appreciate, also, since the advent of experimental psychology, and pedagogy, that a rational, wholesome, safe, and sane motor life throughout childhood affects beneficially not only the child's health, in the commonly accepted sense of this term, but that it affects equally as favorably the intellectual and moral life. We appreciate more than ever that moral strength is dependent upon physical health, that character is in the main a "plexus of motor habits," that "man is what he does." In other words, we know that in order to be really efficient, means we must not only be healthy in body but must have a healthy and rational mind.

Teacher Must Know Whole Child

We are more than ever learning that education for service demands on the part of the teacher a knowledge of the whole child and not a knowledge of his capacity for academic training alone. How are we going to know about the "wrinkles" in a child's character, and how can we find out the "queer" habits he may be developing, unless we give him a chance to expose them? It is a teacher's business to iron out the wrinkles and to train away the queer habits.

The real teacher (and by this I mean one who looks beyond the mere passing of examinations and satisfying of the powers that be to a tribunal that deals with the roots of things and to whom mere externals and pretenses are abhorrent), is longing and hungering to do real teaching. Give her a chance and see how willingly she will throw off the shackles of grind and cram.

For my own part I have been reckless enough this last year to leave the regular course for days at a time to look after itself, while together my pupils and I explored the byways of history. We had many a comfortable talk together, talks which, although not labeled "instructive and profitable," served to make us better friends. Nine tenths of our teachers to-day would do the same thing if you'll only let them. I say, give them a chance.

The Teacher We Respect Most

Look back over your own school days. Who was the teacher for whom you entertain the kindest feelings—the one who most influenced your life? It wasn't that teacher who held you off at arm's length and administered the school course to you straight. It was the one who got at your inner self and let you see a little bit of his own in the process. Again, in throwing the whole work of teaching on the school, I feel that there is danger of depriving the home of its legitimate influence. Children of this generation are losing a something that nothing else in this world can supply. Their busy, overcrowded school lives are robbing them of that direct mother influence which belonged to us of the last generation of children. The quiet, heart-to-heart chat, at the end of the day's work, the children's hour, is it not slipping away? Then let me say that if I were one of the mothers of these days I would be jealous of my influence with my children—I would be loath to give up so much of it to the teacher. Educating children in the mass has its advantages, but it is the family, not the fifty children in a school grade, which forms the unit of national greatness. God's own plan is the family plan. A mother can, if she will, do more in foundation character building for the child in those first and only years when she represents to him the law of life, than any teacher can ever hope to do afterwards.

Mothers Are Queer

tion's nurseries, the kindergarten and the primary school. Your child will in his school journey have many teachers, and they will, some more and some less, influence his life, but he has and can have but one mother. Mothers are queer. There are some inexplicable points about them. I have studied the subject from an exoteric standpoint for years, and there are some things that I cannot understand. One is the attitude of that mother, who, when you are trying with all earnestness to strengthen the moral fiber of her child, thrusts herself in between that child and the natural consequences of his own acts with a note of this tenor: "Miss Teacher: Please excuse Johnny for being late; excuse him from his home work; don't keep him in after school; don't punish him for anything at any time. Let him out of school at half past two; excuse him for all his delinquencies, past, present, and to come; shut your eyes to everything that is wrong; take pretense for performance, and, in short, Miss Teacher, make yourself one of a partnership of three to call wrong right and right wrong."

Let me, with all the force at my command, emphasize my deep conviction that the action of this mother (and her name is Legion, for she is many) is the cruelest folly.

It must result in keen disappointment and undoing when the child learns in the sterner school of the world of men and women that surely and without one deviation does the great Father enforce his rule: "As a man sows, so must he reap." I think it is Goldsmith who says, "There is often the truest tenderness in well-timed severity." I suppose I will offend again when I say that I have little sympathy with that school of educators who would remove from a child's path all difficulties, and make it ever for him plain sailing. The tendency to sentimentalism in our age is, I know, constantly seeking excuses for not doing unpleasant things. Textbooks and school journals tell us how to keep our pupils wide-awake and interested so that they may need no rules. This may be very pleasant for the time being for all concerned, but there is no discipline in it. There are hard duties in citizenship, and I contend that the habit of always expecting to be pleased and interested while a child, does not help the man or woman to do earnest work in hard places. There can be no discipline unless the child learns to do unpleasant things because they are right.

Know Your Child's Teacher

Another thing difficult for me to understand is how a mother can be willing and content to send her child to school to be taught by a teacher whom she does not know. I couldn't. I wouldn't. If I were a mother I would want to know the teacher into whose care I was turning over my little one for more than one half of his waking hours. And I would want to know her thoroughly, too. I wouldn't be at all curious about her family history—it would be a matter of equal indifference if her father had been a doctor or her grandfather a ditcher. I wouldn't exercise myself about finding out what church she attended, or what names were on her calling list. The question of "caste" would not trouble me. But I would want to know what she was doing in the world, what she was thinking about, what she was teaching, and why she was teaching it—just what she stood for in the busy ranks of the world's workers. If I couldn't approve of her, I would not leave my little one in her care. If I found in her a woman to esteem and respect (we might differ on a thousand matters if none were on vital things), it seems to me that I would try hard to make a warm, personal friend of her. If I could not succeed in this, I would at least be loyal to her; I would, I trust, not be guilty of the bad form of discussing her actions and questioning her methods, or of permitting others to do so, in the presence of my children. I would honestly try to strengthen her hands in every possible way. And why not? Is not the teacher the mother's substitute for the time being—her full working partner?

Again parents allow their children to grow away from them. And too often just at the time when boys and girls have arrived at the borders of manhood and womanhood, at the time of all times when they feel the need of counsel of a personal nature, parents and children find themselves miles apart. At different times I have had boys and girls come to me with troubles and questions of a personal nature, confidences too sacred to touch upon here; and after we had been freely talking together, I have asked, "How about your home people; have you talked it over with anyone there?"

The reply generally is, "No, I didn't like to talk to my mother about it."

Now I speak from own point of view, of course. Isn't there something wrong somewhere? Does not the mother, busy and crowded though her life may be, who, in following after the many lines of present-day activities, fails to keep in close touch with her children, allow something to drift out of her life, the loss of which nothing else in the world can replace? And the pity of it is that that confidence is such a subtle something! We don't let it slip one day and go back and pick it up the next.

Requisites of a Real Parent

Some of the essential requisites of a real parent are: One who desires the child to be born; one who makes a continuous effort to form a character worthy of his child's emulation; one who never forgets his obligation to study his offspring with a view to learning what are his tastes and tendencies; one who allows no person to be a more sympathetic friend to his child than himself, and to whom the child instinctively turns for information and advice of all kinds; one who inspires love and respect, instead of fear; one who plans for his child's pleasure and entertainment, while leading him into the avenue best suited to his temperament and abilities; and one who uses every effort to make the home the most attractive, restful, and inspiring place that his child can find, where love, sympathy, and patience have their abiding place.

Not until only such parents are called good parents can we expect much growth and development from the human race. The world has too long accepted the theory that mere parentage is ennobling and that children should love, honor, and respect a father and a mother however ignoble they may be. It is time that a higher ideal be set for parents, and that they realize their responsibilities.

An article in The Arena for November, 1920, on "Desirable reforms in motherhood," seems to leave something still to be desired on behalf of the children. We are reminded by the writer that mother is a sacred word, full of hallowed associations, and that to become motherless is a sad fate to befall any child—all of which is undoubtedly true; but why should we continue to ignore the sacredness of fatherhood, and the loss the world sustains through bad and incompetent fathers?

The civilization of to-day is held back by a dead-weight of barbarism and hopeless inefficiency, and since the sympathetic nerve of the social organism has been so developed that we cannot accept the advice of a late writer on heredity, and gently and painlessly put to death those who fall behind in the race and disturb the peace and order we desire to establish, we are compelled in self-defense to ask what makes it so, and seek to remove the causes.

The article referred to answers this social problem with unthinking fluency: "All the wickedness of the world can be traced to incompetent motherhood." Let us see. We will begin with examining the prison inmates, of whom we find a large majority physically deficient in some way. If we follow them back to what by courtesy we may call their homes, we are quite likely to find ourselves in the city slums where families live in one or two rooms, for which they pay excessive rent—rooms in which privacy and cleanliness are well-nigh impossible; where the high price and poor quality of food, bad air, and lack of sunlight and drainage combine to check physical development.

Going to institutions for the care of other defectives we find on examination of the records that most of these unfortunates were born with a defective physical organization, for which, by the way, fathers and mothers are equally responsible, and often circumstances over which they have no control are more responsible than either.

The interaction of physical, mental, and moral forces is not yet fully comprehended, but nothing is more certain than that poorly nourished, overworked, nervously exhausted fathers and mothers will produce children that are weak, unbalanced, and defective, lacking in power of resistance either to disease or temptation. In our factories and shops there are multitudes of boys and girls forced by grim necessity to long hours of exhausting toil, under very unwholesome conditions, just at the age when they should be storing up vitality for future generations.

A Mother Who Knows How to Work

Again, our author tells us that the best mother is the one who understands how to work—how to cook, how to prepare the washing, etc. Then a washerwoman in my neighborhood is well qualified for motherhood, for she can do all these things admirably and goes out washing till within two or three weeks of the birth of her babies; while her husband, who earns $2.50 a day, comes home and abuses her because she is having babies—which necessity interrupts, ever so briefly, her possibilities of wage earning.

We hear a good deal about the "fashionable mothers" who do not want babies to interfere with their pleasures, but the story of the fathers who do not desire babies has never been told. It is a harrowing tale, and shall be left to a more graphic pen than mine.

The first great right of children is to be well born, and the second is like unto it: the right to have a good, wholesome environment. The man who said, "Give me a child until it is seven years old, and I will make it what I will," was not, after all, very wise. Emerson, who said, "I am a part of all I have met," was nearer the truth. Impressions are easily made and easily effaced at that plastic period of life, and the more delicate hothouse care is given to the child the more likely it is to go down before the rude blasts it is sure to encounter later on.

Too Much Haphazard Parentage

Parentage has been too long haphazard and ignorant on both sides. If a child is to go into business or a profession, we recognize the need of preparation and training, but the highest and holiest function of human life is considered an improper subject of discussion, of education. The growing interest in physical culture gives promise of a better heredity; and the slow awakening of our educators to the fact—so succinctly stated by Oliver Wendell Holmes: "I believe that the whole boy goes to school, and that his hands, his eyes, his ears, and all the rest of his body need training in order to give him a good mental equipment, gives greater hope for the development of character."

If love, with all its blessings, came into the world through the mother, law is the father's gift. Some fathers have abdicated this right in family life, which is bad for the children. But they still maintain it vigorously in public affairs. Now, as in the days of Paul, law is a schoolmaster; and it is high time to ask what are the lessons our growing youth are learning from law and its administration. Are the representatives selected to this high duty of a character to serve as models for boys? Boys, you know, want to be men, do as men do, and vote as men vote. The mother's loving wisdom can hardly prevent them.

Then some of our wise women are not exactly patient under their limitations, and it is for the sake of the child that they are now asking for a wider cooperation with men. The race can never come to its best without the united effort of men and women; neither one can escape the divinely appointed burden of parenthood without irreparable loss to the child.

The position of women has been created in much the same way as races and classes. Alfred Russell Wallace in his last book, Social Environment and Moral Progress, puts the cart in this eugenic matter where it belongs. He says that when social justice shall have been established and women are free to choose their mates without the artificial conditions that now prevail, then natural selection will take care of itself. I am convinced that as a move for race improvement, the equal suffrage of women, with the eventual consequent assumption of intellectual and moral responsibility and economic independence, would be infinitely more valuable than all the eugenic laboratories in the world.

We should use all the forces of science in dealing with pathological conditions, but an attempt at artificial selection of mental and moral characteristics is aiming in the wrong direction.

Children's lives can be shaped to some extent, but they are not positively liquid, and no mold can be invented into which they all may be individually and profitably poured.

A very great fault of the American parent is the ignoring of the intelligent existence of their children. By so doing they create some sort of a barrier between their children's lives and their own. Children cannot be ignored, or listen to comments or discussions upon or about themselves, without a growing sense of remoteness from their elders' minds and hearts; for they rarely hear a grown intimate of the family discussed in the same impersonal way in the presence of the intimate. No parents can expect their intelligent child to feel truly in their confidence when the child's intelligence and very humanity are persistently ignored.

Teach by Example

It is not surprising, therefore, that children, as they grow older, retire more into themselves, and develop that reserve which so greatly puzzles and distresses their parents. Anglo-Saxons have a horror of wearing their hearts upon their sleeves, and even when their hearts are warm and innocent, they are apt to wall them away, like cold and guilty things, not only from the world at large, but from those most dear to them, to whom these hearts are supposedly of most importance. Little children give their confidences freely, and retire them only when they find them socially condemned.

Our trouble is not that we do not care, but that racially we are more inclined to act than to think. There is only one comprehensive rule for bringing up children, and that is that we must honestly rack our reluctant minds until they give us back something of our own forgotten emotions; that we must give in measure as we expect to receive; that we must acknowledge the child's mind and emotions to resemble our own in scarcely limited counterpart. Subjective teaching is the only teaching worth while, and sympathy the only kind of love which will buy the best. Children learn most by example, and they throw open the doors of their hearts to those who have shown them that hearts have doors. The old quarrel is the most wasteful and unnecessary one. It is human to desire some friendship, and those of us who have children, and in whom the desire is strong, may really know at least one or two men and women a decade or so from now.

An Alert Branch President

A few issues back we offered to send a collection of instructions and explanations of our work to all missionaries, branch or district presidents, or other church officials who desired it and who would make application to our office for same. The following request is typical of the spirit which is working with some of our priesthood, and is a hopeful sign of better cooperation between all departments of church work, to the end that our common objectives may be the more speedily attained.

The brother writes:

"Dear Collaborers: I cannot finish reading my HERALD until I take advantage of your generous offer. The envelope of pamphlets and leaflets of instruction is something I have long desired. Feeling as I do, that a branch president should be thoroughly conversant with the duties and aims of all departments under his supervision, I have many times wished for just what you offer.

"May God bless your earnest, faithful endeavor to build up his kingdom, and prosper you all in the things that your hands have found do.

"One who wishes well for your department."

Exhibits at the May Institute

The ten booths arranged in the dining hall during the Women's Institute represented as many phases of the women's work.

The "Women's Library" covered a wide range of books for mothers and children, and was in charge of Mrs. Alice Lawrence. A table of Women's Department literature for sale was in charge of Mrs. Pooler, and proved a successful venture.

The Laurel Club, Mrs. Margaret Sturges, president, stressed the work along civic improvement lines. A model house, surrounded with miniature trees and a well-kept lawn, was charming and helped to sell a quantity of potted plants offered by the club. The booth was shared by the ladies' aid society. An exhibit also of quilts and various woven articles from the South Sea Islands (the property of Brother and Sister Alva Christensen, returned missionaries), covered two sides of the booth.

The Young Women's Department, Miss Mary Steele, supervisor, had a most interesting display of handwork done by Orioles and Temple Builders. Record books having a marked degree of artistic value, were in evidence; among them one arranged by the young women of Graceland's recreational leadership class, who completed courses in Oriole and Temple Builder work. Mrs. Grace Morrison most capably presided over this exhibit, one other interesting item of which was a perfectly preserved Oriole's nest, constructed chiefly of white horsehair. This was a gift from Bishop Bullard, who found it on one of his recent trips to Colorado. It especially delighted the younger girls.

The cradle roll exhibit, arranged under the direction of General Superintendent Mrs. Anne Roberts, contained many helpful hints to mothers and cradle roll workers on layettes, nursery equipment, food, bathing, and general care of infants.

The Child Welfare booth, Mrs. Lydia Wight in charge, displayed proper and improper foods for children, play equipment, suitable clothing for growing children, and some house garments for women, fashioned to minimize time and labor. The outfit of proper clothing for a baby was prepared for Sister Wight by appreciative members of a large class in Lamoni, which is studying "Mothercraft" under her guidance.

A booth in charge of Miss Laura Mann, head of the health division of the Women's Department, covered a very broad field, for the question of health and sanitation enters into every phase of activity. Posters and pamphlets compassed the entire range, and with the help of her able assistant, Mrs. Vesey, this booth became one of the popular places in the room. Some carefully chosen charts dealing with phases of the social purity work, were arranged in counsel with Mrs. D. J. Krahl, supervisor of that division of the work. A number of social purity books were also on display.

An exhibit of foods and elements of nutrition was prepared by Mrs. Mabel K. Smith, who wrote the "Food and Body" course being studied by Women's Department members. A great many posters and materials of instructive nature emphasized many a lesson.

A sanitary kitchen and an unsanitary one had been prepared, and set up in one corner of the room. The lessons of tidiness and cleanliness, of purity and health, were silently taught by a glance at the two booths, the contrast being brought out forcibly. The unsanitary room represented, not poverty, as some might have supposed, but the careless, untidy habits and methods of many housekeepers, to be found in every walk of life. Dirty boots and soiled clothing, outdoor wraps, and farm or garden equipment have no place in the room where food for human beings is to be prepared.

MAUDE CAMPBELL HALLEY,
Chairman Exhibit Committee.

In view of the progress made in women's education in Japan during the last decade, it is not without interest to recall that one of the very first schools for girls in that land was opened by a Vermont woman in Yokohama in 1871.

A Summary of Attendance at Institute

Field workers 8, organizers 17, out-of-town 53, total registration 500. The following States were represented: Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Nebraska, Michigan, New York, Kansas, Colorado, Idaho, Arkansas, Kentucky, Texas, Alabama, and Oklahoma.

Nova Scotia, Ontario, British Columbia, and South Sea Islands were also represented.

Early morning sessions would begin with an attendance anywhere between 50 and 250, with gradually increasing numbers as the forenoon advanced. Afternoon sessions usually had from 200 to 300, while all evening meetings had large crowds, four taxing the seating capacity of the building.

One hundred and seventy-five went on the automobile trip, while 200 attended the banquet.

A Reunion Hint

The cradle roll and child welfare exhibit at the May Institute would serve as suggestions for any worker desiring to arrange one for use at reunions or district conference.

There was an infant's bed, with the small wheels to allow easy moving from place to place. Also the small child's iron bed, with its adjustable or removable sides.

There was the approved baby's layette, as described in the Mothercraft Manual, which so many of our women and girls are studying. Side by side, too, were displayed the sanitary nursing bottle with its large nipple, and the old-fashioned one with the small neck and long rubber tube. Also there was displayed, the unsanitary and harmful rubber "pacifier," as well as the approved celluloid rattle.

Paregoric was branded as a harmful drug. Twelve charts on "Child Care" were hanging on the wall, and a large number of pamphlets and other Government publications connected with the subject were placed on a table for examination.

Proper food for children of different ages was shown, as well as plates containing food which should never be given to any child. Labor saving clothing was on display, of plain design, with "butterfly" sleeves, and made of goods that does not require ironing.

There was a sand box with a miniature slide, a "teeter-totter," pail, shovel, and an approved "merry-go-round" for tiny tots.

Posters made by school children during the recent campaign to emphasize the value of milk as a part of every child's diet, were on display, and aside from the lessons they taught, were interesting from an artistic standpoint.

On a table by itself was "A Mother's Library," a row of about a dozen of the best books on child care and child training.

Educational Playlets

The following playlets, three of which were presented at the recent Women's Department Institute, may be obtained from the Women's Department, box 255, Independence, Missouri, price, twenty-five cents each.

Cradle Roll. Illustrating a portion of the cradle roll work of the Women's Department.

Friendly Visitor. Showing how a tactful and sympathetic friend may encourage a disheartened sister contending against the odds of poverty, illness, and unenlightenment.

The Friendly Road. Presenting the work of the Young Women's Bureau in its Oriole and Temple Builder activities. Adapted especially for reunion use, since various groups of girls in different localities may prepare the various acts, and all unite in the closing "bonfire" scene.

Everygirl's Quest for Happiness. Emphasizing the need in every girl's life for friends who will lead her to appreciate the best influences. An allegorical presentation of the various powers for good and evil which beset the pathways

Southern Wisconsin

We are trying to keep the Lord's work moving along in this part of the vineyard and to some extent have succeeded. Brother B. C. Flint, as the one in charge of the missionary work of the district, has been meeting with success and has baptized twelve in the last six months. His health has improved greatly in the last year. The Saints in the district are not all in one part of the district, but on the contrary, there are three branches in the western end of the district: Soldiers Grove, Buckwheat Ridge, and Flora Mountain, so we generally have the June conference in the western part and the December conference in the eastern part, where we have Madison, Janesville, Beloit, and Milwaukee, Milwaukee being in the extreme eastern part.

For many years Brother C. C. Hoague, sr., as Bishop's agent, held what was called a June meeting at his home east of Evansville, and many of the Saints of Madison, Janesville, Beloit, and Evansville have gathered from year to year in this all-day meeting in June. Brother Hoague passed away about two years ago and his son, Charles C. Hoague, who is now Bishop's agent, had the meeting this year at his home, June 12, on the outskirts of Evansville. The gathering was well attended, there being present between one hundred twenty-five and one hundred fifty Saints. The day was fine and the meeting held in the front yard under the shade of some large trees.

On June 18 and 19 the district conference convened with the Soldiers Grove Branch, and a very good conference was had. Patriarch W. A. McDowell has been giving us some assistance thus far in this district of late, holding meetings with the writer in Beloit, Evansville, and Madison, and also being the speaker at the June meeting at Brother Hoague's and also attending the conference at Soldiers Grove, the preaching of the conference being by B. C. Flint, W. A. McDowell, E. J. Lenox, and the writer.

We are now on our way to the Chetek reunion, Brother McDowell going by way of Antigo, to tie the knot for one of Brother and Sister J. H. Howe's daughters to the man of her choice. The writer stopping off here at Wyeville, at the request of Elder E. J. Lenox, president of the Northern Wisconsin District, preaching for the Saints here for two nights, before reaching Chetek. The Saints are feeling the depression in the financial world, but are putting forth a good effort to pay the auditorium money subscribed, and also tithes and offerings, for the most part.

14. Through what is the necessity for proper supervision of work?

MAUDE PEAK PARHAM.

Certainly the conditions confronting the church to-day are such that we all should deepen our willingness to sacrifice as never before since the Reorganization was effected in 1860. I hope that both old and young will see the foolishness of following worldly pleasures, that do not enrich the soul, but rather weaken those who are exercised thereby, so that from now to then some one falls by the wayside, but let all be strong and keep away from the danger line. Remember that the Presiding Bishopric need every dollar that we can save for the church and the several demands made by the several departments of church work. How glad we will all be that we did not follow the world, but that we stood firm for the right, and supported the church as best we could! To this end may we labor, hope, and pray.

Your brother and servant in Christ,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

An Appreciated Visit

Missionary in Jerusalem feels much good was done by visit of officials.

President F. M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams were here and spent about two months with us. It was a very momentous visit. Other fields have their earmarks but they are not like Palestine. This is a peculiar field, like a peculiar disease, and needs special treatment. A prescription issued from the home office will not alone meet the requirements. A physician must be on the ground and diagnose this case, then write out the prescription. This has been done by President Smith and Apostle Williams and now we are waiting for the druggist to fill it. The next question is, Will the patient yield to treatment? This remains to be seen.

Can you visualize the Tombs of the Kings without a visit to Jerusalem? You may in a degree, but it will be very slight. You may read and dream about it, listen to lengthy lectures, still you will not comprehend it, but when you arrive here and gaze upon it with your own eyes, what a wonderful revelation! Shelves and vaults carved out of one piece of solid rock, to the number of about sixty, with a rolling stone such as adorned the tomb of our Savior, in front of the main entrance.

Just so with our work in Palestine: its needs cannot be understood and prescribed for from a great distance. It was necessary for representatives of the leading quorums to be present here.

It is possible for a person to come all the way and then not comprehend what is needed, but our representatives scrutinized the situation so closely and analyzed the details so carefully that none of the essential elements that go to make up a successful plan for the development of our work were omitted. They rolled up their sleeves and put on their overalls and waded right into the mire to get at the facts, where the plebeians and the patricians mingled daily.

President Smith occupied the "dark room" at the mission house here. I have since learned that there is a weird history attached to it. Several persons well known to former missionaries to Palestine have breathed their last in this room, and when I read part of a letter written by Sister H. A. Koehler in which she stated that her health had become impaired in this dark room, President Smith simply said, "Humph." It did not seem to frighten him. Brother Williams occupied the glass room. There a Bedouin could reach in through a hole in the glass and murder and rob his victim without creating any disturbance. Brother Williams said he feared not, but I noticed that any time we might arise in the morning, even before five, Brother Williams was up and out of that room.

President Smith and Apostle Williams preached, taught, and organized a branch and won a lofty place in the affections of the natives who attend school and service. We receive numerous inquiries for them. When we left them at the Jerusalem station at 6 a. m. one of the native boys said to me, "Now you have become alone just as you ware before, but you are not alone because I am with you."

It is a long time since we left the shores of good old America, and somehow or other a person gets lonesome for his former society, but just at a time when lonesomeness was at its height, our welcome guests arrived. To say that we were delighted is putting it mildly; it filled a long-felt want in our lives that could have been supplied only by a visit from some of the Saints. Come again, brethren! When you consider that a Latter Day Saint occupies a position vastly different from people of the sectarian churches, you will appreciate our condition. Members of nearly all Protestant churches chum together, but they do not have much use for a Latter Day Saint. It practically segregates you to your own little circle, so you can appreciate in a degree how happy we were to have visitors from our own church.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, Box 417.

A Letter to a Spiritualist

I received a post card lately saying there was no death. Why did you not add "only the body"? I believe the spirit never dies a natural death, but I don't believe the spirit of man is right here among us when it leaves the body. Why don't I believe it? Because in the record we have of God and his dealings with his people, not one word can you find between the two lids of the Bible where God ever made any such arrangements for man to call up the dead, and talk with them. God had his own way of dealing with his church and people. He had his prophets and when he wanted anything done he communicated to them by his Spirit, or sent an angel or messenger.

God sent angels to Abraham, to Lot, to Mary, to Joseph Smith, and lots of others. And Amos, the prophet, says, He will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. (Amos 3: 7.)

You claim you call up the spirits of the dead when you want to know anything that man can't reveal. Now I don't doubt but there is a power that works through the ouija board and tipping of tables. But with all that we can learn of God, from creation down to the present time, we do not find where God ever gave his consent or permitted his people to work that way. The Psalms tell us when the body dies the spirit goes to God who gave it. (Ecclesiastes 12: 7.) Now where is God? He surely is not on this wicked earth. When Stephen was stoned to death, he saw the heavens open and the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. So there is where our spirits go, not to stop here to entertain people here on the earth.

Here is a sample of this kind of calling up the dead. Saul was going to have a big battle, and he felt uneasy about how it would end. He went to God in prayer as he had been in the habit of doing, but God would not answer him as he had done in the past. Why? Because Saul had transgressed. God saw and he would not answer him.

Saul was king, and he had given out a proclamation that if there was any found with a familiar spirit, he should be put to death. They were not allowed to act as they are now and deceive the people. So Saul could not get anything from God, either by dream or vision, or by prophecy. Then Saul asked his servant if he knew of a person with a familiar spirit. He told him there was one down in Endor. Saul disguised himself, and went to the woman. She wanted to know whom she should call up, and he said, Call up Samuel. When something came up, then the woman knew Saul and was afraid. Saul made her good promises, and then said, "What form is he of?" and she said, "An old man with a mantle," and he perceived it was Samuel, though the Bible does not say it was Samuel.

Now you see they worked the same in those days as they do to-day, but the penalty was death to all that used that power. In the first place, it was done to deceive, for when Samuel died and his spirit left the body, he did not take any old mantle with him; neither was it Samuel; it was all an imitation, for if that power could imitate Samuel's old clothes, he could imitate his body and his voice. You see it was not from God, for God would not answer him. It is a power that works against God. God always works by law. His promise is if people will obey his law they shall have everlasting life, when this earth has been cleansed and purified, and God's people receive a resurrected body that can never die nor anything hurt or make afraid. When will this take place? When the gospel is preached in all the world for a witness to all nations, then all of God's children that have been baptized for the remission of their sins and received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, by them that were called of God by revelation, will have everlasting life in a body that can never die.

The Devil that is deceiving you never had a body and never will have, but it is his mission to deceive the human family. He has been doing that ever since Adam and Eve were in the Garden of Eden. "When they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?"—Isaiah 8: 19.

You see they practiced calling up the dead in Isaiah's day the same as they do now. Isaiah was a great prophet of God, and he knew from whence it came.

Now I am going to show you just who is the author of this work in calling up the dead, tipping tables, and writing mediums:

"And there was in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him." Now he said, "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." (Revelation 12: 7, 8, 9, 12.)

"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs." Why were they like frogs? Because they could live in a church or out of it. The card I had from their headquarters says: You can have your religion. Well, that is what John the Revelator says. They are like frogs; it doesn't make any difference what you believe as long as you believe in that ouija board.

Now John says these spirits "are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." (Revelation 16: 13, 14.)

Now God does not do miracles to make people believe. He gives us his gospel, and we can accept of it or reject it, but after we obey, then he will give us such gifts that we will be settled and grounded in the gospel of Jesus Christ if we live faithful. But the Devil always does perform miracles to make people believe. The Devil tells you when you leave your old body you never will have any more body, but you are just enjoying yourselves right here forever.

Now God intended for us to live without a body, to suffer in this wicked world for a few years or a hundred years, then drop out of the body, and still live on in this wicked world, that is an unreasonable story. But God made man and gave him a body, and made him a free moral agent to that body. And God gave certain laws. If we allow our bodies to obey his laws and keep his commandments, a time will come when we will have a better body; one that could suffer no pain, sickness, or death on a purified and glorified earth. Man cannot have full enjoyment while out of the body. That is why the Devil is so angry, because he was cast out of heaven and not allowed to take up a body. So he gets into any body, even if it is nothing but a hog's body.

You see God made man's spirit to live in a body, and he is not perfectly happy. Like those crying under the altar, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" You see these men were tired of waiting for their bodies that God had promised them, for the great work they had done that they had laid down their lives for. They were told there were others that had to lay down their lives before they could receive an immortal body. I think that has been fulfilled in Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Now hasten along the gospel to them that have not heard it and build up Zion.

Now, my brothers and sisters and friends, I want to warn you to have nothing to do with that evil power, or that ouija board, for if you do you will be lost. I know what I am talking about. The Lord made known to me, so I am satisfied that it is the evil power.

A. W. KELLEY.

INDIAN RIVER, MAINE.

A Testimony Concerning the Word of Wisdom

I have never been exceptionally strong physically. After I was married for four years I was very miserable, most of the time unable to care for my home and family. The Word of Wisdom was observed in our home as fully as we understood it. I was administered to frequently, and many times the Saints fasted and prayed for me. While I did not receive health and strength, still, pain was relieved and I was encouraged by dreams, prophecy, and the Spirit of God, which can speak much peace in our hearts in our hours of need.

At the reunion in Glasgow, Montana, in 1918, a spirited discussion came up at one of the sessions, concerning the Word of Wisdom. Brother E. L. Kelley was in charge. After the meeting a sister said in substance: Here is Sister Freeman. She claims to keep the Word of Wisdom, and there is not a woman in our branch who is sick as much as she.

How well I knew it was true! How often I had thought that seemingly no benefit came in a physical way, but I was sure that in a spiritual way benefit came.

After returning to my home, I tried to observe the law more closely and often prayed concerning the matter, and one time that fall while in earnest prayer, the Spirit gave me the assurance that never again would I have to suffer what I had in the past if I continued faithful to the gospel law. Since then I have been well. As yet I cannot run and not be weary, but I can do all necessary duties.

I drank tea and coffee and ate meat all seasons of the year in my younger years, so it is not surprising if this would leave its imprint. To the young the promise will be fulfilled in its entirety, I believe.

I am very much interested in the articles in the HERALD on health, and wish we could attend the reunion this summer.

May God guide, direct, and keep his work in this and in foreign lands, is our prayer. May we become more prayerful as a people, and more consecrated to his service.

Hopefully,

MRS. C. B. FREEMAN.

Ere Zion Is Redeemed

Many times of late I have wondered why it was Zion had not been redeemed years ago, and the more I ponder over it the more I can see that the fault lies with us, his chosen people. We are not ready! Oh, dear brothers and sisters in the gospel, do we fully realize how patient, kind, and merciful God is to us? He sees our carelessness and our indifference towards this great latter-day work, and he alone knows our hearts. Yet in spite of our weaknesses he patiently awaits our sincerity and our self-sacrifices of the world and its evils, so that we can come to him as a perfect body, one in spirit, one in faith, and one in love to him, our heavenly Parent. Can we as Saints say as did the saints of old, "Here is my all"; or are some of us like Ananias and his wife Sapphira in the days of Peter and John when they had all things in common?

It would be wise for every Latter Day Saint to read Acts 4: 31-37, also 5: 1-16. This gives us a beautiful illustration or idea of Zion conditions when we shall all gather there, and also shows us the Lord will not allow the unfaithful to remain there. We have to meditate only a few moments on this subject to realize how great and marvelous the love of God is to us, and how patiently he waits for us to allow him to bless us. Let us ask ourselves, Are we ready? ready to lay our all down as the saints of old did? If not, Zion cannot be redeemed. Many Saints to-day may think they have nothing to offer, but God wants our hearts. Our worldly substance we give to him, and it is a token of our heart being full of love to him and our fellow men. Money is not prolonging the redemption of Zion, but we are. God's Spirit is striving with us all, in power, and the time is now here, dear Saints, when we must choose whom we will serve, "God or Satan." Think of it seriously, very seriously.

Wars are coming again, and scourges and famines, and the time is speedily coming when we will have to flee to Zion for safety. Woe unto them who wait too long. They may never reach this haven of rest. My heart goes out to-night with love to all the Saints, and I want to help them to become stronger. Let us all put our hands to the wheel, go in prayer often and get our hearts with God, and if we all pull together God will surely bless our efforts and Zion will be redeemed.

Your brother,

BERT COOPER.

Council Bluffs Items

Children's Day exercises held on the 12th were short and impressive and very appropriate for the occasion.

Brother Leslie S. Wight occupied at the Central Church May 29, this being his second sermon. The statement that he was glad to take up his father's work where it was laid down will long be remembered by those who heard it.

Many of the Saints are complaining of less work and less pay, and this is causing a slackening of interest in spiritual things.

Elder G. J. Harding spent Sunday, the 12th, at Missouri Valley, where he ministered the word. Funeral services for Brother David Evans were conducted by Brother Harding last Friday.

But little sickness among the Saints during the last two weeks.

A district picnic of the Sunday schools will be held at the grove of Brother Arthur Darrington on the Fourth. This is located about six miles northeast of Council Bluffs. Brother Raymond A. Nelson took to himself a wife on the 13th. Sisters Cora Bratches and Glow Salisbury have changed their names of late. Marriages are occurring very frequently of late.

A class social was held at the home of Sister Doctor Stage-man last Friday evening, for her class in the Sunday school.

A social was held at the home of Brother Bellville in the west part of the city, near the Riverside Mission on Thursday evening.

We are advised that the junior orchestra is doing well, and continuing to improve their talents for the good of the church.

Renewed efforts are being made at both the Belmont and Riverside Missions to increase the interest and spread the work of God.

Spiritual conditions are about the same in a general way as before the special meetings. Hot weather is causing a falling off in attendance at all the services. The moisture and heat of the last week is having an opposite effect on the spiritual growth to that which it is having on vegetation, so that the vegetation is showing a greater appreciation for these blessings than the Saints are. This is not as it should be.

It is a matter of serious concern that it seems necessary to choose teachers and officers from among those who frequent dances and other public and worldly entertainments not any more in harmony with the spiritual. This the Sunday school and Religio cannot safely do. It seems that some do not yet understand that the church is and should be Christlike, and not like the world.

On Monday and Tuesday nights of this week there was held at the church musicales under the auspices of Sisters B. O. Burton and Olivetta Salisbury.

From California to Colorado

Well-known worker changes his field of labor and finds much to do.

After receiving my appointment to the Eastern Colorado District, I immediately made arrangements to make the transfer.

While waiting for my transportation, which the Sante Fe Railway Company kindly furnished me, I made the trip through the Imperial Valley, where I was invited to preach at Seeley, California, some of the people driving over thirty miles to attend these services.

Through the kindness of Brother Evan V. Davis, of Brawley, I was invited to speak at the Sunday morning service in the First Christian Church of that city, and at the close of this service the pastor, Reverend Burton, publicly thanked me for the sermon and invited me to preach for them at any time when I might arrange for it, stating that he had observed that I was a preacher with a hobby, and that hobby was the whole Bible.

The Saints at San Diego, Santa Ana, and San Bernardino, each gave me a farewell party, where all united in wishing me success in my new field. Their many kindnesses, and the hearty support which these dear Saints have ever shown to me, will never be forgotten.

Before I was called to leave the district where I have lived all my life, it seemed that I was especially favored in being privileged to lead four young men down into the waters of baptism, all being heads of families and men of ability, whose influence will be felt for good in their respective branches. I refer to Brethren J. F. Rabe and I. J. Sullivan, of Santa Ana, Will A. Stiles, of Hermosa Beach, and Harry Jones, of San Diego. These brothers came into the work after careful study and investigation. I, with others, tried to present the message as clearly and as positively to these men as we were capable of doing, and felt content to leave the matter with them. Each one requested baptism unsolicited; may they be blessed and guided in this new step, and in their search for truth.

I was called to go north to Sacramento, the capital of the State of California, to speak for the Saints there and to deliver the Mothers' Day address, and upon urgent request from the officers of the branch, I consented to speak for them the following week, remaining with them over the following Sunday. The attendance was good and the interest splendid, and the song service under the direction of Sister Birdie Clark was excellent. We were especially favored by a solo from Mr. R. F. Ross, a leading singer in the Catholic Church and a member of the Schubert Club and McNeal Club of that city.

The work at this place is presided over by Elder C. E. Ball, who is in dead earnest and is doing all in his power to build up the work in that city. He is to be congratulated in having so many faithful workers to support him in his work.

After leaving Sacramento I stopped over and preached one sermon at Stockton, where Elder H. J. Davison is the pastor. There is a fine lot of Saints at this point. I was much pleased with the splendid showing made by the orchestra, which has been organized only a short time.

I arrived at Colorado Springs May 22, at 4.10 a. m., where I was announced that day to be the speaker at both services. I felt a little tired from the long trip, but this excuse would not be considered by the pastor there, Brother Calvin H. Rich, so I gave them the best I had.

I was given a hearty welcome by all the Saints there and invited to make the home of Brother and Sister R. S. Salyards, jr., my headquarters while in that city.

While there I looked over the grounds that had been selected for the coming reunion, which were offered to us for $9,250, there being over seven acres in the piece. A good substantial brick building is on the place, which can be used for a dining hall or cafeteria. This ground is very favorably situated between Broadmore and Colorado Springs and near to the street car line. After looking into the matter and being assured that the title was clear and the property worth far more than the price asked, I recommended that the place be purchased, which was done immediately by Elder J. D. Curtis, who advanced the money for the district with the understanding that the district will pay this amount off as soon as possible.

With the aid of Brother Rich, who has been asked to assist in this matter, arrangements are being completed to run a cafeteria on the ground, where meals can be served at a reasonable price to all who may attend this reunion. Brother R. S. Salyards, jr., has been asked to take charge of all orders for tents and cots which may be needed on the ground.

It is planned to have an entertainment on the evening of Friday, August 19, the program to be in charge of Brother Arthur C. Shupe, the field worker for the Religio in this district; Sister Louisa Fishburn, the district superintendent of the Sunday schools, and Sister Effie Gregory, of Fort Collins.

My next stop was at Denver, where I was the speaker at both services May 29. I was welcomed by the pastor, Brother E. J. Williams, and the officers and members. While there I met Brother Hale W. Smith, who is doing what he can to push the missionary work in that city, and to assist the pastor in visiting among the sick, some of whom were sorely afflicted.

I returned to Colorado Springs to look after some matters regarding the reunion grounds, and while there was invited to preach at the home of a man not a member of the church but who is interested.

While at this place I received an urgent invitation to go to Wiley and assist Elder J. D. Curtis, who was announced to speak at that place from May 29 to June 5, and I was requested to speak from June 5 to June 12.

I arrived in Wiley June 3, just ahead of the great flood that swept Pueblo, a few hours after our train passed through that city. It was reported that the wall of water stood up from ten to thirteen feet high, which wrecked the city and drowned quite a number of people. I found a very fine body of Saints at Wiley, who are presided over by Elder M. F. Ralston. There was a good interest throughout this series of meetings and at its close Brother Curtis led three earnest souls into the waters of baptism.

On account of the flood, quite a number of people of Lamar, an adjoining city, were deprived of attending part of the services at Wiley, so arrangements were made to hold services in the courthouse of Lamar. Handbills were put out and cards placed in the windows of the business houses of the city. I was the speaker Monday and Tuesday nights and will speak again to-night. Elder J. D. Curtis will continue the services the rest of the week and over next Sunday, while I go north to meet with the Saints at Wray and other points in that part of the field.

The services so far have been well attended and the crowds are increasing every night. One young lady came up to me last night and said she was ready to be baptized if she could get her father's consent, and as he was present at the meeting and seemed to be well pleased with what was said, we feel that it will not be difficult to secure his consent.

I shall be pleased to hear from all the branch presidents of this district, setting forth the true conditions in their localities, and what are some of their needs and problems. My address will be, until further notice, 653 Filmore Street, Denver, Colorado.

Yours for service,

G. H. WIXOM, District President.

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since you have heard from the Parkersburg Branch. We are still in the race with everything progressing as well as could be expected under the circumstances. We are beginning to feel the effect of the business depression to some extent here, as it is every other place. Some of the Saints have lost considerable time this year. Don't seem to be much prospect of its picking up very soon here, judging from the present condition of things.

The members of the priesthood in charge of the branch attended the priesthood meeting of the West Virginia District at Clarksburg, West Virginia, February 12. The district was well represented and we had a good meeting. Action was taken to make the priesthood of this district a live and active force for the building up and the extension of our work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Next meeting to be at district conference this fall.

Death entered our branch, on May 10 and took from our number Sister Clara Call. She had been bedfast with consumption for about two years. Her loss is deeply felt by all who had the pleasure of knowing her in life. Her daughter, Bessie Call, and Brother Hubert Mitchell, of Akron, Ohio, were married about the middle of May. They will make their home at Akron, Ohio.

Brother Thomas Newton is with us at present. He has just finished a series of meetings here. Several nonmembers had the opportunity of hearing our message. Mr. Frank Johnson and wife and son George Criswell were baptized by Brother Newton last Thursday as the results of his preaching. They are fine people and will be a great help to us. I hope more will follow soon.

We started to hold weekly prayer meetings at the homes of the Saints the first of the year and have been holding them every Wednesday evening since. We have had some fine meetings, and I am sure much good has been accomplished by them. Both young and old have attended well and taken an active part in them.

At present we are beginning to make preparation for our district conference, which will be held here the last of August. We hope to make it one of the best ever held in the district. It will be the first ever held in Parkersburg, West Virginia. We are going to try to give the people a chance to hear and become acquainted with our work. We have planned to follow it up with a series of meetings, if nothing happens.

NANTYGLO, MONMOUTH, WALES, June 7, 1921.

Editors Herald: Respecting the work in Wales, there is but little of an encouraging nature to say. We have had visits from President Smith, T. W. Williams, and James Bishop, which we have all appreciated.

We are yet in the throes of an industrial struggle which has come about primarily because of the costs of war and the great struggles made by all classes to hasten to become rich. The workers must now by reduced payments meet the past extravagances. War is an unnatural state for intelligent beings, and it punishes us some way, sometime.

We have lost by death from our district a good Saint in A. Davies, of Llanelly. Brother Demi Lewis, of Llansamlet, is near to death's portals. He has internal trouble. He is today one of our oldest members, no doubt the oldest elder in this land.

We are sorry to lose from this country Brother and Sister May and family. He has wrought a good work here and has always made the interests of the church "first fiddle" to great inconvenience at times to themselves. As one that knows, I can say, with many others, that we had in Bishop May a man of sterling character, full of Scotch perseverance. His reward for his labors is sure. As yet I have not this time met Brother Fry whom I have known many years by personal contact and repute, and we believe he will work out all right in the British Isles Mission.

Some time in the future, when industrial matters brighten, we expect to meet Brother Gillen. We pray the Lord's blessing to attend every legitimate effort to spread the preaching of his word in this land. We are all praying for our native land and people, clannish in spite of our protestations to the contrary.

Some of the brethren I know in the States have written to me as to why I have given up missionary work. Let me say that I have only acted as any other person may do under conditions that were not compatible with the sacrifice. I am still in the faith and anxious to see the work spread in all the world, but most especially in Wales.

We are hopeful and prayerful that our heavenly Father will bless the brethren sent here, to endure and press onward with sufficient help to enable them to reach the goal of success.

As ever, your brother in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

COREA, MAINE, June 15, 1921.

Editors Herald: The Eastern Maine district conference convened at Corea, June 4 and 5 with good attendance, and a spiritual feast was enjoyed. Our hearts were made to rejoice when we saw three precious souls inducted into the kingdom. The speakers were N. M. Wilson of western Maine and O. L. Thompson of eastern Maine.

We were blessed with good weather so that people could come in boats as well as by land.

Our home branch received much strength, and rejoice in the same, and we are glad to know that some others are about to enter the kingdom.

Ever praying for the progress of this work, I am ever,

Yours for the Master,

JAMES L. CLARK.

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, June 20, 1921.

Editors Herald: After reading the appeal of the Bishop for funds, this thought came to me: Are we willing to make a sacrifice, if necessary to dispose of something we think we cannot do without? With this thought came a gentle whisper: If my people will do this, they will prove to me that they love me and my work, and I will multiply my blessing to them, that the consecration will not be a loss, but a blessing.

Times are hard with the Saints here and at other places, but the Lord is able to bless so I am going to prove him.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, June 24, 1921.

Editors Herald: Brother D. T. Williams, of Lamoni, stopped in Burlington May 5, with his brother, E. R. Williams, on his way through from the East where he had been conducting Zion Builder services. He spoke for us in the evening in his forcible and characteristic way on "The sphere of service," his central thought being that we should be found doing the little things of every day that we might be fitted for a greater service of to-morrow. Brother Williams preached his first sermon in the Burlington pulpit, and has always held a warm spot in the regard of Burlington Saints.

Mothers' Day was observed May 8 with appropriate program entitled "Mothers of the Bible," which is reported as well rendered and impressive.

Our young people have been admonished many times to move out more actively in prayer and social services, and many promises have been extended conditioned on this activity. We were therefore especially glad to see the number in attendance at the June sacrament service, which proved to be an active and spiritual gathering. Messages came to two of our older sisters, and to three of the young people, in each of these instances indicating especial work and promise in store.

The Children's Day program, June 15, entitled "Message of the flowers," was one of the most elaborate rendered for some time, and the theme was a beautiful one. Four of our junior boys were baptized.

At the district conference at Fort Madison, Iowa, there were two ordinations of Burlington brethren: H. F. Bromann to office of elder, and E. F. Kunz to the office of priest. Bishop Lambert also offered the name of Brother Bromard for indorsement of the conference as his second counselor.

At the close of the prayer service Wednesday evening, June 22, provision was made for a young people's prayer meeting to be held hereafter at 8.30 Sunday morning. It is hoped that this service will prove a development and encouragement to those participating, that our other services may become more active.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, June 27, 1921.

The work here in the Eastern Michigan District is growing steadily. Missions Nos. 1 and 2 are both in a healthy condition. We had one baptism on June 7, and four on June 12. Sunday, June 26, was banner day for the month, also for the year, at Sunday school. Children's Day was also celebrated, a fine program being given.

At 9.30 a. m. prayer service was held with a large congregation present. There were three children blessed at this service. This was followed by Sunday school session. It was indeed a banner day, there being three hundred and ten present. It was the largest Sunday school in the city on that day. The church was beautifully decorated with palms, flowers, and other appropriate decorations.

At 3 p. m. about three hundred people gathered at the light house on Lake Huron where they witnessed the baptism of sixteen Sunday school scholars. Confirmation services were held at the church at 7 p. m., which was followed by a short address by City Missionary William Fligg. During the whole day's exercises, the Spirit of the Lord seemed to rule supreme, there being not a ripple on the day's work.

We expect five or six more baptisms in two or three weeks. As the work is progressing in other places, we are trying to keep pace here. Everyone is kept busy in either one department or the other, and thus the good work goes on.

We are glad to have Elder Fligg with us again, as we find the burden too heavy without his services.

The truth is coming in contact daily with the outside world and the result is in the Lord's hands.

J. N. MUIR.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, June 28, 1921.

Editors Herald: Our territory is large and Saints are scattered, making it very difficult to serve all demands as we would like with the limited missionary help we are granted. I am pleased to say that improvement and progress are being made in most places. Quite a number have been baptized the past year. Our district has done excellent work in paying tithing and giving to the auditorium fund, considering the low price of cotton and the scarcity of work with the coal miners. A willingness to help is manifested by most all of the people of God in these parts.

Last November at Wilburton, Oklahoma, the Saints lost their church by fire. It is thought it was the electric wiring that caused the fire. The insurance had run out only a few days, so it was a total loss, and only a few Saints, poor in this world's goods, to bear the loss. Matters looked dark for the future building up of our work in the place but the old saying, "Where there is a will there is a way," proved true in this case. Brethren H. R. Harder and J. B. Kelsey, both aged men and good carpenters, determined that the Lord's work should not go down. With the assistance of the Saints they arranged to rebuild. The people of the town helped better than they expected, and now they have a better building by far than the old one. Brother J. E. Kelsey is president of the branch, Brother H. R. Harder recently requesting to be released from the presidency on account of age. I am looking for a good work to be done here.

We have a new branch organized at Henryetta, Oklahoma, with Brother D. C. Clevenger as president, and the outlook for the branch is good.

The Haileyville Branch is in the care of Brother John S. White. They are always willing to help spread the gospel.

Our Saints at Fanshawe are doing all that can be done to keep our work before the people. Brother Jasper N. Perkins has the oversight of the branch. He has a splendid line of men in the lesser priesthood at Winthrop, Arkansas. Brother F. B. Sharp is the president, a live wire, and a good preacher.

The branch is doing well at Dierks, Arkansas. The old Jacksonville Branch has Brethren J. S. Moore and J. W. Jackson as shepherds. This branch has a poor outlook on account of the Dierks Lumber Company buying out all the farms, so the land may grow timber again. The end of this branch is not far distant. The Saints will move elsewhere.

Our work in Texas needs help at Dalby Springs and around. We have some good Saints. Brother W. H. Colley is their pastor. They need some missionary help. We are to hold a ten-day meeting commencing August 10 or 12. I hope all the Saints in the southern part of our district will attend, so the work will take on new life. Brethren F. B. Sharp and J. W. Jackson will have it in charge; other speakers will attend.

The old Manchester, Texas, Branch is widely scattered. The meeting place is now in Fort Towson, Oklahoma, with Brother B. F. Brown as president.

Last September I preached at our little church near Manchester, Texas, to a splendid hearing of people—aged Brother F. Thompson arranging for the meeting before I arrived. This is old ground opened up by Heman C. Smith, William Aylor, and others whose names are mentioned often by these people.

I am hoping and praying that men can be sent to this field, so our work can be looked after as it should. Our district conference is to be at Fanshawe, Oklahoma, August 5 to 7, and if we could organize some good plans for a more systematic way of reaching the people and holding our young, it would be gratifying to me.

Your brother, strong in the outcome of the work,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

Graceland College and a Young Missionary

Following is a letter from a member of the class in Religious Education at Graceland College to the First Presidency. This young man, whose name we withhold, in order that we may not embarrass him, came to the college last year in time to get only one semester. His record, however, was splendid and he will return next year to complete his course. His letter will give our readers a glimpse of the spirit of devotion and consecration in the hearts of the young men who are taking this course from year to year. No cleaner or keener young men have ever rallied to the support of our standard. To presume that a year in Graceland College, under the spiritual influence prevailing there, and imbibing the instruction received, will unfit them for the ministry, or in any way be displeasing to our heavenly Father, is to put forth a presumption that can hardly be credited, even by the most credulous.

We look for the young men of this class to be the best argument that can be made in favor of the idea of preparation for service now being fostered in the church.—EDITORS.

"I have been notified through the Quorum of Twelve that provision has been made for my continuance at Graceland next year and that the details of it would be furnished me by the First Presidency.

"Of course, you understand that if the government were not paying the tuition, books, etc., I would not be able to do this.

"I do not like to look forward to leaving the field again in September, for there is nothing that I would rather do than proclaim the doctrines of Christ's gospel to the peoples of the earth. However, I want to be able to represent our God equipped with the very best means of doing so. During and after my schooling it is my intent to consecrate what I have gained to the service of Christ's church. The little time I was able to use at Graceland this year has so broadened and cleared my vision of what lies before the church that I sense the bigness and the difficulty of the solution of the problems ahead of us more than ever before. It is going to take more of our best trained men both in the ministry and the temporal affairs of the church than have heretofore consecrated their time and talent to the work of establishing the kingdom of God.

"I have written this that you might know my attitude in regard to the program of the church, and that it is with no other design than to increase my capacity for service that I desire to avail myself of the opportunity afforded.

"I trust that I am doing the will of God in this."

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, June 5, 1921.

Editors Herald: On May 21, Henry Norris, of Kewanee, Illinois, passed on to the life "over there." After an illness extending over many weeks, death came as a sweet release from pain and suffering.

Brother Norris came from England to America when but a child and had lived in Kewanee for nearly sixty-three years. He was the stepson of John S. Patterson, whom many of your readers will remember as an elder in the early days of the Reorganization; so that Henry Norris has been associated with the church the greater part of his life, and a member of Kewanee Branch almost since its organization. Many a missionary has found rest and comfort under his roof and received food from his table. As a deacon in the branch, and as a member, he was faithful, and was always to be found in his place when able to be there.

He was a veteran of the Civil War and very loyal to this country.

But while "change and decay in all around we see," we are reminded that the word of God waits now for other hands, and other faithful ones to arise and carry it on to a triumphant victory. So we comfort our hearts and are glad that he was able to "keep the faith," and has gone on to join that host of loved ones waiting on the other side. He bore his "testimony" that this is God's work, so ultimate triumph is certain.

Elder Amos Berve preached the funeral sermon, and the remains were laid to rest in Pleasant View Cemetery, Kewanee, Illinois.

"They are gathering homeward, one by one,"

MARY E. GILLIN.

Sister Celia M. S. Prescott, of Pittsburg, Kansas, asks that the Saints in Twin Falls, Idaho, call on and visit Mrs. Will Crotley, 260 Seventh Avenue North, who is investigating the gospel.

District convention and conference held in Sioux City, Iowa, June 9, 10, 11, and 12. Elders A. H. Parsons, E. E. Long, and L. E. Hills in attendance and delivered very able sermons.

Of the eleven branches in the Little Sioux District nine reported a membership of 1,627. Missouri Valley was unanimous by vote of the delegates as the place for the autumn conference.

Brother W. M. Keck sends us a picture of a large musical aggregation at Princeville, Illinois, in which he and his wife play, and of which he is director. They use the Gloria Band Book and play at the Sunday evening services in the park, where union services are held. They say the book referred to, published by Fillmore Music House, 528 Elm Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, can be used for all band and orchestra instruments except the viola.

The secretary of the Sterling, Colorado, Sunday school reports a membership of twelve. Church services are held Sunday morning and evening and weekly prayer meetings are held at the homes of the Saints. Two elders, George E. McConley, resident, and A. F. Henderson, of Winnipeg, Canada, are with them for the summer. A few weeks ago three were baptized and they expect to baptize four or five more in a few days.

Book Reviews

A new novel with an especially high moral tone.

THE TRYST. By Grace Livingston Hill (Mrs. Lutz.) Published by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. We are pleased to recommend this book to our readers, along with the other works by the same author, for it has a most refreshing tone as compared with many of the productions on the market to-day. The theology is very weak, being based on the current interpretation of religion, but the forcefulness of character portrayed, the wholesomeness of ideal manifest throughout, furnish adequate inspiration to the reader, along with the pleasing plot development. The author implies what amounts to direct personal revelation from God for one of the characters, but very naturally, in view of the dominant practices in the "evangelical" churches of the day, revelation as to the call to the ministry, etc., is precluded. But one with discrimination will not be annoyed over this phase of the book, but rather will appreciate and enjoy its unusually good qualities.

Notice of Transfers

Elder John R. Grice has been transferred from Toronto District to Chatham District, missionary.

Elder C. I. Carpenter has been transferred from Kewanee District to the Central Illinois District, missionary.

Linotype Operators Wanted

The Herald Publishing House needs two linotype operators for its work in the plant at Independence, Missouri. If you want to come to Independence, here is a chance to come to work in the church publishing house. Write G. S. Trowbridge, business manager, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Department of Music

Appointments of District Choristers

Mrs. Mamie Miller, 404 West Street, Shenandoah, Iowa, chorister of the Fremont District.

Mrs. Henrietta Davis, 228 East Milwaukee Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, as chorister of the Detroit District.

For these we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of these districts.

ALBERT N. HOXIE, General Director.

ARTHUR H. MILLS, Secretary.

Young People's Outing

Mobile District will hold its first annual outing at San Souci Beach, Alabama, July 13 to 18. The committee secured this site, one of the most beautiful along the Gulf of Mexico, where there is excellent fishing, oystering, crabbing, shrimping, bathing, and boating—in fact, everything to make camping pleasant. We will have the gospel tent from Mobile in which to hold services and small tents for camping. No eating tent will be provided, so everyone come prepared to camp. The district conference and conventions will be held during the outing. Those coming by train take Mobile and Ohio train at Mobile, Union Station, a branch road running direct to the Gulf. Get off at San Souci Beach, which is near the camp ground. N. L. Booker, for committee, box 300, Biloxi, Mississippi.

Request for Prayers

Mrs. Aylmer Powell of Nokomis, Saskatchewan, has had an affliction for a number of years, and recently had a nervous breakdown. She asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed. Ida Powell.

One-Day Meeting

Eastern Michigan, at Juniata, July 10. Everybody invited. Bring baskets, also songbooks. "Good singing," also good speakers. Prayer service, 9; Sunday school, 10.15; lunch, 12; preaching, 2, 4, and 8. Meetings subject to change. Ethel Peer, secretary, Vassar, Michigan.

Warning

Saints: Beware of one Leonard Wiley, claiming to be member of church and of priesthood. He is neither. Give him no money.
T. J. ELLIOTT.

Reunion Notices

Southern Missouri District reunion at Tigris, August 12 to 21. Begin preparation now, for we are striving to make this the best reunion in every way ever held in the district. Those having tents, bedticks, bedding, bring them; and if you have a Dutch oven it would come in handy. Wood, and straw for bedding will be furnished free of charge. Free pasturage for horses of those coming by wagon. The church will be divided up into sleeping rooms by means of curtains and the Saints are willing to help care for the visitors. Butter, eggs, milk, and honey will be plentiful, and stores are handy. We are to have a Canadian apostle, an English and Irish seventy, a Dutch and Swedish high priest, an American elder, and others. This array of talent should bring a splendid attendance. Try to get there. Henry Sparling, 2002 Kilham Street, Springfield, Missouri.

Des Moines district reunion will be held at Runnels, Iowa, August 12 to 22. We expect Apostle U. W. Greene, Patriarch F. A. Smith, and Elders J. A. Dowker and A. E. Warr as the principal speakers. Bessy Laughlin, Rhodes, Iowa, secretary.

Reunion of Far West Stake, at Stewartville, Missouri, August 19 to 28. Prices of tents: 3-foot wall, 10 by 12, $3.50; 3-foot wall, 12 by 14, $4.25; 6-foot wall, 12 by 16, $7.75; single cots, 65 cents; chairs, 15 cents. An added charge will be made when persons do not put up and take down tents. Order tents early. Z. J. Lewis, chairman tent committee, Osborn, Missouri. Tents must be ordered and set up ready for opening day. Good grounds; meals at moderate prices. Large attendance desired. R. S. Salyards, chairman of committee. 517 North Twenty-second Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Eastern Iowa, at Maquoketa, Iowa, August 12 to 21. Order tents of the undersigned at once. Prices as follows: 7 by 9, $4.30; 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $5.25; 12 by 14, 3-foot wall, $5.60; 14 by 16, 4-foot wall, $6.25; 14 by 20, $7.35; 14 by 21, 5-room compartment, $10.25; single canvas cots, 60 cents. Campers may put up their own tent, by permission only, and may deduct 25 cents from this price. Clarence Heide, Fulton, Iowa.

Northern California, at Irvington, August 11 to 21. We are expecting to have with us Elbert A. Smith, of the First Presidency; Evangelist F. G. Pitt, and D. Amos Yates. Conference convenes August 19. Tents are $2.25 cheaper than last year. 12 by 14, 4-foot wall, $3.75; 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $3.25; 8 by 10, 3-foot wall, $2.25; double-box mattress, $1; single-box mattress, 75 cents; double bed springs, 75 cents; single bed springs, 50 cents. Breakfast, 20 cents; dinner, 35 cents; supper, 30 cents; children, 3 to 8, half price. Send orders to C. W. Hawkins, 615 Spencer Avenue, San Jose, California.

Conference Minutes

LONDON (ENGLAND).—At 19 Amhurst Park, Stamford Hill, London, February 19, 1921. District President J. A. Judd, associated with J. A. Gillen, presided. A communication from President F. M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams, advising amalgamation of various branches of the different districts, was read and adopted unanimously. It affects the London District as follows: London District would comprise London Branch, in Gloucestershire and Oxfordshire; Enfield, in Northamptonshire and Huntingdon; Gloucester, in Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, and Suffolk; Exeter, in Essex, Kent, Sussex, Surrey; Plymouth, in Middlesex, London, Hertford, Bedford, Buckingham, Berkshire, Hampshire, Wiltshire, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall. District president reported. Communications received from Bishop R. May and Elder Charles Fry in connection with the work of the bishopric in British Isles Mission. Bishop May's financial report and that of treasurer referred to auditing committee. Various elders and district officials reported. Visiting members given privileges of the floor. Election of officers: In accordance with a previously adopted resolution, J. A. Gillen presented as the nomination of President F. M. Smith the name of J. A. Judd for district president, and he was elected. Dover E. Judd, secretary; Sister E. E. Judd, treasurer; W. Goullee, chorister. Sunday services were: Sunday school at 10 a. m.; preaching at 11 by Charles Fry; Sunday school institute at 12 in charge of Blanche Edwards; fellowship meeting at 2.30; priesthood meeting at 4; preaching at 6.30 by J. A. Gillen. General church officers sustained and vote of thanks extended to Saints of London Branch for courtesies shown.

OLINTON.—At Fort Scott, Kansas, June 3 to 5. Large attendance, and a fine spirit prevailed throughout. Much interest was taken in the business of all departments. Preaching by A. H. Christenson, B. R. McGuire, and Lee Quick. Others of the conference appointees present were R. T. Walters and A. C. Silvers. A. H. Mills was in attendance in the interest of music. Friday night a musical and literary program was well rendered. The services were in the new district tent, which was dedicated at the forenoon service Sunday by Bishop McGuire. The basement of the church was used as a dining hall, and the physical wants of the Saints were well provided for. Sunday morning Brethren Mills and H. Ross Higdon took the young people to the park for sacramental service, and the report brought back was that twenty-four of the thirty-six present bore testimony, some for the first time. Another sacramental service was held at the tent at the same hour. All regretted the absence of our district president, Edward Rannie, and the conference made provision that an expression of sympathy be extended him. Election of officers resulted in the reelection of E. Rannie as district president; Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary; Pearl Oglevie, member of library board. W. E. Reynolds, Bishop's agent, and Mrs. A. C. Silvers, local historian, were sustained. Mrs. Oscar Masterson tendered her resignation as district chorister, and Clarence Higdon was recommended as her successor. Mrs. A. C. Dempsey elected district treasurer. District president given power to choose his assistants. Next conference at Mapleton, Kansas, October 14 to 16, 1921. Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary.

Convention Minutes

FREMONT.—Sunday school at Glenwood, Iowa, June 10, 1921. Some features of the program were: talk, "Our greatest present needs," Jessie Vance; "Function of various officers," B. S. Lambkin; "How to make a secretary's report interesting," Robert J. Wildey; "Aids in teaching beginners," Cecil Stark; pageant, "Ideals," given in the evening by local talent. Business meeting Saturday morning; Jessie Vance elected superintendent; Brother Lambkin assistant superintendent; Winifred Rhode, secretary; and Maggie Watkins, treasurer. Talk by assistant superintendent and superintendent. Sister Vance is doing and has done much valuable work in this district and has things moving. Winifred Rhode, secretary.

ANDERSON.—John Theodore Anderson was born at Moline, Illinois, April 14, 1877. Some Notes on Spiritualism

It has long been contended that Spiritualism presents marked danger to the novice, nor are Christians the only ones who have ascribed much of its manifestations to evil powers. The Theosophists through Madame Blavatsky declared several years ago that all that is real in their manifestation is from earthbound and evil spiritual influences.

Speaking of these manifestations which are presumed to be authentic, we note the series of articles by Miss Estella Stead which are called, "The W. T. Stead messages," published in the London Weekly Dispatch. This series of articles is following those of G. Vale Owen.

In the issue for May 24, a problem is directly stated of expelling malevolent spirits:

"As soon as a seance begins a number of unhappy spirits crowd around in the hope of finding some relief for themselves. These poor beings are in the desolate state in which their ignorance or ill will confines them and if no kindly thought of a friend reach them, if no one call to them, they rove restlessly about until slowly, very slowly, it may be the mists around them are dispersed. If the medium had not a guide to protect him and divert from him the torrents of beings who wish to speak, it would be almost impossible to effect a manifestation; the medium would be overwhelmed.

"Highly intelligent mediums with powerful auras are less exposed to the intrusions of wandering hordes, but a medium with a weak will and a feeble aura easily becomes a prey to unhappy or malevolent spirits. A medium must live a strict life, must discipline his thoughts and cultivate his will power in order to be free from the danger of obsession.

"A certain number of cases of obsession are due to the spirits of the 'dead,' but many more to elementals imprudently provoked by experiments or created by the constant repetition of fixed ideas.

"You do not realize how much power thought has. For instance, if every day you evoke the same imaginary person in your thoughts—say, a D'Artagnan or a Hamlet—you will in time construct a D'Artagnan or a Hamlet in a fluidic state. If you persist in your fantasy, you will create a sort of fluidic automaton, which can manifest itself through clairvoyance, writing, and table rapping; and mediums will be able to describe a personage conformable to the idea you have in your head. The more you repeat the experiment the more you will vitalize that image. True, the thought manifestations of that image will be mediocre.

"How many are there, individuals or groups, who in all good faith imagine they have for guides such celebrities as Voltaire, Saint Vincent de Paul, Joan of Arc, and Napoleon, and that the owners of these names follow them step by step, responding to them immediately they take to the planchette or the table! They have set a trap for themselves; they are in contact only with some trickster on the 'other side,' or with the image-automaton they have themselves created. If nothing else showed this, the inanity of the messages received would not leave it in doubt!

"This is a frequent form of obsession. We spirits see very clearly the image-automaton attached by a fluidic bond to its creator and drawing its vitality from him. We see that, when he ceases to turn his thought constantly to it, it gradually dissolves and disappears."

Again in the issue of May 1, we note that mediumship is a tremendous draft on the vitality, and the medium must receive careful treatment, otherwise he will become a physical and even moral victim of his mediumship. There are repeated warnings of the danger of catching sickness and breakdown. The article continues concerning the "recent dead":

"People should carefully avoid evoking the spirits of those recently 'dead.' If there is a manifestation of that kind—and it cannot always be avoided—the medium should be disengaged—with the greatest care and obliged to rest for one or more days.

"Many persons immediately on passing from earth are a prey to profound despair, to intense emotions. A sensitive medium receives a strong impression of these emotions, of that despair, and may be considerably shaken.

"That is one form of moral damage. There are others. Say a young man, who was a pleasant fellow but dissipated, is evoked. He may awake in those with whom he comes into contact elements of passions similar to his, which until then had lain dormant. If he manifests often, and the medium has similar tendencies and has not a strong control over himself, the latter may be drawn into bad habits."

Though these articles are not only friendly to Spiritualism, but written decidedly in the affirmative of that belief, they still continue with similar warnings, especially concerning the great care that must be taken in seances. The right kind of people must be secured for the group and that all conditions should be right for the protection of the medium and the group from malevolent influences.

This same theme is continued the following week in the issue of May 8, on the danger of the medium gathering hurtful influences in the group and urging that some one be in authority who is able to keep order and promote concord, and that he should be one of firmness and energy, keeping and preventing malevolent spirits taking possession of the medium, or at least limiting their influences.

In the issue of May 41, of a British magazine devoted to psychic research we note an article investigating the authenticity of an alleged medium. She offers the possibility: First, either he does the manifesting by fraud; Second, he was a medium who associated with a group of beings on the other side who were lying or simply impersonating the celebrities named; or, Third, he is what he professes to be, a remarkable demonstrator of psychic powers.

It is interesting to notice these three alternatives: First, fraud on the part of the presumed medium; Second, the possibility of lying spirits from the other side controlling the manifestations; as well as, Third, of genuine manifestation.

This may well be taken in connection with the witch of Endor and her description of Samuel. To-day, as then, false spirits impersonate personages who have passed into the beyond. Also it is well for us to remember Isaiah 8: 19, 20.

"And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards, that peep and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Local Appointments

Though the letter by the president of the Far West Stake in this issue on the subject of local appointments is pastoral in character, as an address to the priesthood of that stake, it will well repay the reading by our membership everywhere.

Repeated efforts have been made in various fields in this country and in Great Britain and her colonies to organize the local men, but much more yet remains to be done, both of organization and of preparation for effective service. The church has but a few hundred men under General Conference appointment, but two years ago reported over five thousand eight hundred ministers.

The thousands of men under local appointment should make their influence felt for good and should not depend upon the General Conference appointees to carry the burden of the work, or even the greater part of it.

Along with the missionary drive we need a great awakening of our local ministry.

An Explanation

We learn that some misunderstanding has arisen and that some feelings have been hurt over the editorial treatment of a communication from Bishop R. May appearing in the HERALD of February 2, 1921, page 118, as a "pastoral notice."

The facts are very simple. The original letter came to us as a letter from Brother R. May, addressed to the Saints of the British Mission, evidently for publication in the usual department for letters. But since it is not our custom to publish letters to specific groups or individuals in that department, but rather in the department for general miscellany, we wrote the heading that was used, with no special consideration of the various interpretations that might be given the word pastoral.

If there be censure due regarding this feature, let it be placed on the shoulders of the editors, where it belongs.

The Eternal City

In this article we are beginning a series of articles under the heading "The eternal city." The view presented by the author is quite different from that usually held by your readers, but is worthy of careful consideration.

A careful student of the Bible will note that Jerusalem was sometimes referred to as Zion, that Mount Hebron is also so referred to in Deuteronomy; again the term is used to refer to the city of God, evidently not referring to earthly localities as has been pointed out before in our columns.

The word originally means simply a hill; then, according to Webster's unabridged, it signifies the hill in Jerusalem which became the site of the royal residence of David and his successors, the place of the temple, the center of Hebrew religious and national life. It then was used to refer to the chosen people, the Israelites, later to the theocracy or the church of God, and finally to the heavenly Jerusalem.

It is well, therefore, to know in what sense the word is used in each passage.

There is a possibility of some other good articles discussing this important subject. And there is the query: Does the term New Jerusalem always refer to exactly the same place?

One very important consideration is that in the twelfth chapter of Luke, Inspired Version, it is very plainly stated that Christ will come three times. This is confirmed by other scriptures as, he comes to meet with his saints during the thousand years of the millennium, and then after the millennium he appears to leave the earth for a short period. But when Gog and Magog come up against the saints' camp and the Holy City, he then comes wreaking vengeance on those who knew not God. (Revelation 20.)

A really important question is, Where will Christ be during the millennial reign? at Jerusalem, or on this continent? Next, where will he come at the end of the millennial reign? After that the earth is purified, celestialized, and the sea is moved back into its place and the land reunited. When this is done we shall hardly be dealing longer with our present geography.

The Busy Man's Tracts

As a parallel to the Angel Message tracts, President E. A. Smith has rewritten five of the Angel Message tracts. They are now handled by the Bureau of Publicity as part of a series of "Busy Man's Tracts," to be read in three minutes. Each tract is a neat folder of eight pages and is about vest pocket size. In the same style of makeup, "The Epitome of Faith" has been reprinted. This places it in a convenient form for handling, and on a good quality of paper.

As previously announced, the sermons by President Elbert A. Smith at Lamoni, which have been published in the HERALD the last two months, are being reprinted in pamphlet form. This is in answer to inquiries received. Due announcement will be made, no doubt, when these tracts are ready for use.

The sermon by W. W. Smith on the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants" has been revised and is published as a tract in the same style as the Angel Message series, under the title of "The Book of Doctrine and Covenants." This tract, as well as the "Busy Man's Tracts," is being handled by the Department of Publicity.

Church Finances Improving

The reports in the Presiding Bishop's office show an improved condition of finance for the months of May and June. The results of the special effort made the last twelve days of June cannot be determined before August 1, because most of the solicitors closed their reports about June 25 and only three fourths of the agents and bishops have yet been heard from. The effect of the effort will, therefore, be shown in the reports for July, which will not be available for another month.

The reports from three fourths of the bishops and agents, excluding, however, Independence, show receipts of tithes and offerings for April of $17,105.95; for May $18,286.30; for June $28,870.51. This shows an increase of over $10,500 from three fourths of the bishops and agents, those who have so far reported. The total figures will be much better. These figures are given only for purposes of comparison.

The receipts in Independence Stake for June are $7,591.61, as compared with $1,482.77 for May. In the Presiding Bishop's office we have not complete figures, but for the two weeks, May 21 to June 4, receipts of tithing and offering were $2,864.91, while June 21 to July 5, the receipts were $9,646.57.

These latter figures show clearly a gain of nearly $13,000, and probably more, for these two offices over the preceding month; while the indications are that the receipts from bishops and Bishop's agents will show at least an equal gain. It should be noticed, however, that the reports from the Presiding Bishop's office of receipts by that office cover the two weeks of the drive, while the effects of the special effort will probably be manifest during July in the Independence local office and certainly will affect the reports of other bishops and agents for the present month.

It is encouraging to see the gain made by the other bishops and agents in their receipts for the first few days of this special effort. We know the church is interested in the final results, but regret that they cannot be given for another month.

The receipts for June will be the highest in the fiscal year just closed, as the reports indicate that they will exceed the receipts for tithes and offerings for December, 1920, of $50,915.12.

We trust the returns for July will show a decided increase over June as including the close of the twelve days of consecration. Present figures are showing an encouraging increase, but it is clear that our support is still needed by the general church. Our efforts should not be relaxed because of this special consecration and sacrifice the last few days of June, but should be continued as the Lord has blessed us and shall help us.

Zionism and Its Finances

The question is raised as to the basis upon which money shall be raised.

"Dose the masses with moral maxims; dope them with visions of Utopia; stupefy them with grandiose schemes; and you will get all the money you want."

The above statement is ascribed in The Jewish Guardian to one of the leading members of the Zionistic movement. It is a principle, however, which has been applied by others, and arouses a clear-cut issue. Shall church progress and church finances be founded on high-sounding phrases, or must it be based on clear thinking? If there is to be clear thinking, there must be full and exact information.

Whatever may be the position of other organizations, ours is clear-cut for the democracy of individual responsibility and clear thought.

The Jewish Guardian takes the position, "If we may not think clearly about Zionism, if we must think of it in exaggerative terms wholly outside the bounds of effective, practical reality, it were better not to think of it at all." . . . "In our view, money is not the only object, and we are old-fashioned enough to believe that not even for the sake of collecting money are the sensational methods to be approved."

Corybantic methods of propaganda have been tried out, according to the Guardian, by the church of Rome, in that indulgences were preached in Saxony in the sixteenth century and also by General Booth in recent times. Still we agree with the Guardian that money is not the only desirable end, so that in itself it justifies any and all means. But it is only valuable as the result of a propaganda which brings continued development, in that it only is successful when it is the means of education, helping the people to think clearly and rightly on their own problems.

Baptisms in Europe

Reports from church workers in the European Mission received recently include the following baptisms: Hannover, Germany, twelve, by Elder Carl Greene; Aalborg, Denmark, two, by Elder P. T. Anderson; Birmingham, England, one; Enfield, England, two; Sutton-in-Ashfield, England, one.

President F. M. Smith has been delayed in the East but expects to be in Chicago about the 12th and in Independence before the end of the week.

Community Property

After the Saints were driven out of Nauvoo, some Frenchmen under Etienne Cabot came up the river and took over the site. They had made a previous attempt to establish a colony in Texas, but a survey by a small party had led them to proceed farther, so they moved up to Nauvoo, and took over the houses there left vacant in 1849.

In 1844, according to The Palimpsest, published by the State Historical Society of Iowa, Nauvoo was the largest city in Illinois. An attempt was made to rebuild it on the community plan. Community dining halls were erected, and all property was held in common.

These men were evidently idealists, as they expected to make a success, and proceeded in all confidence, but in a very few years there was such dissension that Etienne Cabot lost the support of the majority, a division arose, part going to Saint Louis, settling in its outskirts at Cheltenham, and another part going to an unsettled region in Adams County, Iowa.

Here they soon quarreled again, because one group possessed individual gardens around their houses, where flowers, vines, and even fruit trees were raised. These gardens were a concession to the members who lived in the old log cabins instead of the newer frame houses which the community was building. A demand was made that these gardens be turned over to the community. So a second or third division arose in 1886. It would seem from this that the effort was persistent, yet failed.

We read in the early history of this country that the Pilgrim Fathers attempted the holding of property in communities, and the cultivation of land by the group. Living in a new and undeveloped country there seemed much reason for their pursuing this course; preserving their own personal homes, but doing the work of the community jointly. Yet almost immediately there was division and objection. The stronger men objected to doing the larger share of the work and supporting the children in the families of those who were weaker. The women were willing to cook, scrub, clean, sew, mend, or do anything else for their own families, but considered it slavery to do it for any other man.

After the dispersion from Nauvoo a colony was established in northern Iowa. Charles B. Thompson presented three revelations, first, tithing; second, consecration; and third, complete sanctification, or turning over of all of the property. There soon arose division, the matter was carried into court, and the holding was held to be that of trusteeship; the trusteeship was wound up, placed in the hands of a receiver, and the property to be disposed of and divided as equitably as possible.

We do not cite these ventures by way of discouragement. They are only a few out of many, and should warn us that the adoption of a constitution is not enough. In fact, if our eyes are open to conditions in the world to-day, we can see plainly that the writing of words is not sufficient; the making of laws will not solve the problem; the turning over of all of the property to the organization as a whole, or to the group, will not meet it. That has been tried time and time again. It was tried during the Dark Ages when the Catholic Church secured so much property that the statutes of mortmain, the statute of trust, and the statute of use were passed in England.

The difficulty is that a community holding means control by a few men, and the centralization of power in their hands.

We believe in cooperation. We believe firmly in all that Zion signifies. But the initial step is the conversion of the people, so that each man will love his brother as himself. It cannot successfully be imposed from above, or urged by law by a small group. Full conversion is a first prerequisite.

Church News

Elder John A. Gardner, field worker for the Religio in Zion and president of the Amalgamated Organization of the Young People of Zion, was taken to the Sanitarium July 7, to undergo an operation for appendicitis.

The assistant editor, E. D. Moore, has had to do his office work in between times the last month. Since removing to Independence Sister Moore has been seriously ill and on July 4 was taken to the Sanitarium with typhoid fever. Her condition has not materially changed the past week.

Plans have been fully made for the reception of President Frederick M. Smith on his return to Independence. The reception has been placed with the Religio Department. Elbert A. Smith and John Gardner are the committee on the program. It is planned to have a song service from 7.15 to 7.30, then President Smith and the committee will enter and the service be formally opened with song, prayer, and special musical number, followed by an address of welcome, musical number, a response by President Frederick M. Smith, and benediction. To this first meeting, 7.30 to 8.30 p. m., the older people are invited and the priesthood will be seated on the stand.

At 8.45 the service will be repeated for the young people, who will have assembled on the lawn ready to take their places upon the dismissal of the first meeting. At this service members of the amalgamated classes will occupy the stand.

H. C. Burgess will have charge of the music.

Everyone is anxious to hear from President Smith upon his return. He has been gone a little over a year in a survey of our missionary work, and returns with a clear understanding of our problems abroad.

Practically all the general officers are now in the field. President F. M. Smith attended the reunion at Deer Park, Pennsylvania, a few days. President Elbert A. Smith expects to leave soon to attend the western reunions. Bishop B. R. McGuire is at Deer Park, from where he will go to the Massachusetts reunion at Onset. Bishop Keir has been in the Northwest the past month and is still busy in that field. Bishop Israel A. Smith is in Chicago, but expects to attend several reunions this summer. Bishop Becker is in Kirtland preparing for the reunion at that place.

Nearly all of the members of the Quorum of Twelve are attending reunions, and others expect to be undertaking that work in the near future. Paul M. Hanson is in the East, at Deer Park. U. W. Greene is in the Northwest. R. C. Russell is in Canada. J. W. Rushton is in Independence on his way to Erie Beach reunion. M. A. McConley is at the North Dakota reunion and expects to attend others, including Lamoni Stake. J. A. Gillen and T. W. Williams are in England, C. A. Butterworth in Australia, as he has not yet returned to America. Gomer T. Griffiths is at home at Columbus, Ohio, because of illness, while J. F. Curtis is in Independence taking care of necessary office work.

Joseph Arber was at one time in charge of the early morning prayer meetings held each morning for the classes and employees of the Independence Sanitarium, and was well beloved in that work. He was not in charge of the Sanitarium as a whole as some might infer from the item in last week's HERALD.

Apostle U. W. Greene returned to Independence, July 8, and Bishop James F. Keir, July 9. They have been attending reunions in the Northwest and looking after church business which seriously needed attention in that part of the country.

Apostle J. F. Curtis spoke at Rayton near Independence Sunday evening. Twenty autos and one truck went out loaded with young people to assist in the singing which was under the leadership of Elder Harold C. Burgess.

Subjects Being Discussed

Indian Citizenship

The American Indian Tepee is now in its second year of making an appeal for American citizenship. The Indians stood by the Government and helped in the late war. They are willing to be and want to be full-fledged Americans with the right to vote and own property and live their own life.

For those who are not able to look after themselves, there are the usual courts in each State and county, which usually allow any ward over fourteen years of age to have the privilege of nominating his or her guardian. Nor is it necessary to keep the whole race in bondage because of these not able to look after themselves.

All who study the situation admit that some Indians still require guardians or curators to help take care of their property. But many Indians insist that the majority of their race are able to look after themselves, and the majority of those who still need special protection and help, are the result of a policy of many years' standing of close restriction and of no opportunity for personal independence in business affairs.

Many of the young Indians go so far as to say they would prefer to lose all they have in gaining experience rather than remain in continued bondage because they are Indians. They can read and write; they can pass every test for citizenship; the only thing that prevents their full citizenship is that they are native-born Americans, in other words, Indians.

New Interpretation of Balfour Declaration

Sir Herbert Samuel, the high commissioner of Palestine, is quoted as making a new interpretation of the position of the British Government as set forth in the Balfour declaration of 1917. According to this report in the London Times, immigration must be limited to the openings for newcomers left by the existing population, and it is recognized that conditions in Palestine do not admit of the reception of immigrants en masse. In the future the quality and quantity of new arrivals in Palestine will be strictly supervised.

It is not surprising to note in the Jewish World, of London, England, that this statement is meeting with serious consideration and implied objection on behalf of the Zionists.

It is inferred that this new statement is the result of Arab opposition, as well as the opposition of some British officers, to a Jewish Palestine.

Michigan Finds

We have received numerous clippings the past few months concerning the collections made by Monsignor James Savage and Daniel E. Soper of mound curios in Michigan.

The latest clipping received by us from the Detroit Free Press of June 19 states that Notre Dame University has accepted the collection of four thousand relics and will build a museum to house them.

The Reverend Savage, Mr. Soper, and John A. Russell have been gathering the collection for forty-five years and have secured some six thousand specimens.

This clipping states that the Reverend Savage says it is evident that the plates are at least five hundred years old, basing this conclusion on local conditions, particularly that of a half-rotted trunk, the roots of which pass through the charcoal in one of the graves.

Apostle Greene was the speaker on the lawn of the Stone Church Sunday evening

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Jews in Europe

By T. W. Williams

The attitude of various nations and peoples towards the seed of Abraham.

The status of the Jewish people in the various countries of Europe furnishes grewsome evidence of racial hatred and oppression.

To what extent the Jews were responsible for the death of Jesus I know not. That many of them were accessory thereto is in evidence. The prejudices of the present justifies conclusions as to the actions of the past. But the culpability of a frenzied mob, stirred to action by unprincipled demagogues and trusted leaders, is beyond human arbitrament.

No one with sane religious views can, in any sense, connect God with the atrocious persecutions which the Jews have been subjected to throughout the world during the past two thousand years. It is inconsistent to affirm that God thinks so much of the entire Jewish race that he is going to gather them en masse back to their homeland regardless of moral or spiritual status, and, at the same time, contend that he inspires the brutal and inhuman wrongs which have been and are still inflicted upon them.

God Is Just

God is not vindictive. He is not revengeful. He does not retaliate. He does not punish people to-day for the sins of men who lived two thousand years ago. Men may suffer for the sins of their fathers. This is the cosmic law. It is in the nature of things. It follows as dark follows day. Its operation is not suggested by passion. Every action has within itself its own arbitrament. God's attitude towards the Jews is precisely the same as he manifests towards all other nations. God is no respecter of persons. He has no favorites, either among men or nations.

In the nature of things the Jews should have asylum. This is imperative, if they are to be permitted to live their own life. The right of peoples to self-determination was the slogan of the late war. Anything short of this means that millions have died in vain. The long series of wrongs to which the Jewish people have been subjected demands world recognition of their claims.

The Homeland

It is but natural that they look to Erez Israel as their future home. It was in Palestine that the Jewish people lived for many centuries as a nation. Here has been centered the hope of the exiled for two thousand years. Palestine is essential to the rehabilitation of the nation. The relation between the Jewish people and Palestine must be recognized as the relation between a nation and its homeland. The British Government so recognized and gave expression through Mr. Balfour, committing itself to the "establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people." Later the peace council of the League of Nations confirmed the declaration. The United States, France, and Italy had already done so.

Despite all this the Jewish people of Europe have, since the war, been subjected to the most inhuman treatment and frightful tragedies in the various countries of Europe. Violent and inhuman pogroms have been prevalent in Eastern Europe during the past few years.

Tens of thousands of Jews have been massacred in the Ukraine. In some instances whole Jewish communities have been destroyed. Other persecutions pale in the face of these modern inhumanities. They exceed in frightfulness the atrocities of the Middle Ages. In the past Jews, under severe persecution, have had recourse to flight. This now is denied them. All frontiers have been closed. They are not permitted to leave one country and enter another. In some instances they have resorted to forged passports to save their lives.

Millions of Jews to-day are living in a veritable inferno—unable to free themselves. Jewish citizens of the United States and England have held protest meetings and petitioned their respective governments for redress. The persecutions still continue. There is but one solution: the establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine. This will act as a safety valve. In areas where persecution makes life intolerable, the Jews can then migrate. Such migration will inevitably modify persecution. The citizens of these countries will come to know that the Jews are an asset, and in order to prevent their entire withdrawal, will modify their attitude.

Russia

Prior to the Russian revolution of March, 1917, the Jews of Russia were confined to cities within what was known as the Pale of Settlement—a territory which they were permitted to occupy. This comprised about one two-thousandth part of the whole of Russia. They could not own land. They could not engage in agriculture. They were limited to minor industrial occupations. Only a small proportion were permitted education. They could not take up professional life, with very few exceptions. Unjust taxes were heaped upon them because they were Jews. They were hunted by the Black Hundreds. The police persecuted them. Periodical massacres decimated their ranks. They were continuously robbed of their possessions. Thousands of statutes and judicial decisions were enacted and aimed at them for their extermination. The future of the Jew in Russia is very problematic.

Poland

Since 1912 the Poles have waged an economic boycott against the Jews. The persecutions have been more intense than hitherto. All this has been done to consummate a well-defined purpose for the extermination of the Jews or driving them out of Poland. It is claimed that this is being done to punish them for their refusal to elect to the duma a pronounced anti-Semite. It is claimed that in so doing the Jews made "attempt on the sovereign rights of the Poles." This has been admitted by Roman Dmowski, president of the National Polish Committee.

This boycott extended to Galicia and Posen. Its result has been far-reaching and disastrous. Hundreds of thousands of Jews have thus been brought to the verge of starvation. Mr. George Brandeis, and other writers, have pronounced the persecution the worst ever suffered by the Jews in any part of Europe. The political newspaper of Mr. Dmowski has continuously denounced the Jews as aliens and foreigners. As late as July 14, 1918, there appeared an article in this organ denying the right of Polish Jews to Polish citizenship on the ground that it was not desirable for the state to admit this alien element. The article concluded:

"The weal of the country demands above all to be relieved of the awful burden of the Jewish mass of two millions, which, owing to its excessive concentration and shopkeeping mode of life is regularly poisoning itself and the Polish milieu."

Recently there have been instituted in Galicia and Russian Poland vicious and class pogroms which have cost the lives of many Jews and subjected these people to terrible atrocities and indignities. These caused intense suffering. Much property was confiscated or destroyed. The London Times published a report of an impartial investigation which revealed that during one month pogroms occurred in one hundred and ten towns and villages in Poland and Galicia. Six hundred Jews were butchered at Lemberg and over eighty per cent of all the property of the Jews at this point was demolished.

Rumania

What is true of Russia and Poland is correspondingly true in Rumania. There are now about three hundred thousand Jews in this country. They have lived here for generations. Throughout this time they have been subjected to continuous persecution. Some two hundred and twenty statutes have been enacted since 1878 against the Jews. These have abrogated practically every right.

The annexation of Bessarabia and Transylvania to Rumania means that about five hundred thousand more Jews are subjects of Rumania. Here they are literally as men without a country. They are aliens in the land where they reside. They are not permitted to swear allegiance to another country.

Under the treaty of Berlin in 1878 a treaty was made which was intended to remove Jewish disabilities. It provided as follows:

That the differences of religious creeds and confessions shall not be alleged against any person as a ground for exclusion or incapacity in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, admission to public employments, functions, and honors, or the exercise of the various professions and industries.

The freedom and outward exercise of all forms of worship shall be assured to all persons belonging to the Rumanian state, as well as to foreigners, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchial organization of the different communions, or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

The subjects and citizens of all the powers, traders or others, shall be treated in Rumania, without distinction of creed, on a footing of perfect equality.

Rumania never complied with the provisions of the treaty. She formulated her constitution and laws so as to evade compliance. The constitution among other things provided:

Every foreigner (all Jews are foreigners) without distinction of creed, whether enjoying any foreign protection or not, can acquire naturalization under the following conditions:

(a) By addressing to the government an application for naturalization in which must be declared the capital he possesses, his profession, and his wish to establish his domicile in Rumania.

(b) By residing in the country for ten years after having made the application, and by proving by his acts that he is useful to the country.

Naturalization can only be granted by law, and individually.

Rumanians, and naturalized Rumanian citizens, can alone acquire rural estates in Rumania.

It will be seen that civil and political rights were thus adroitly withheld from the Jews. The most elemental rights are thus denied them. During the forty years since the proclamation of this treaty, not over three hundred Jews have received naturalization papers.

The gross infraction of this treaty led Secretary Hay in 1902 to protest the treatment of the Jews by Rumania in these words:

"This government cannot be a tacit party to such an international wrong. It is constrained to protest against the treatment to which the Jews in Rumania are subjected, not alone because it has unimpeachable ground to remonstrate against the resultant injury to itself, but in the name of humanity."

This brought no results. Similar attempts were made by other governments with no better effects. When Rumania was overcome by the Germans, an attempt was made to enforce the treaty referred to, but in such a way as to make the effects of no value to the Jewish people. Through the effort of Mr. Bratianu, the prime minister of Rumania—a bitter anti-Semite—a recent decree has been made which ostensibly emancipates the Jews, but it is so worded that the grant is worthless.

In Other Countries

In Czechoslovakia there has occurred in the last few years uprisings against the Jews in various towns and settlements. Attempts have been made to drive them out of the country entirely. To the credit of President Masaryk it may be said that he used his powers to quell the mob and protect the Jews. In Transylvania the Jews have been granted citizenship rights, but they have no economic standing. This is likewise true in Galicia. Memorials have been presented to the various nations asking that the status of the Jews throughout Europe be investigated and relief granted.

It is difficult to conceive how nations claiming to be Christian can resort to such bitter persecution of any class or race of people. It would be well for those who despise the Jews because they are Jews and because they do not hold to the divinity of Jesus Christ, to familiarize themselves with the following:

"Love your enemies." "Do good to those who despitefully use you." "Return good for evil."

The future of the Jews is a living problem.

Music, and Citizenship in Zion

By Minnie Scott Dobson

"It is time for those to whom God has entrusted the gifts of music fully to awake to the significance of that trust."

(The following very excellent article, from the pen of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, daughter of Bishop B. J. Scott, was read at the musical institute at Saint Joseph, May 15, 1921. We have esteemed it worthy of a place in the HERALD, as treating very effectually one phase of our Zion-building scheme.—ARTHUR H. MILLS.)

Speak but the one word, Zion, and latter-day Israel is "at attention." In this day of stress and turmoil, when the whole earth is in commotion, when kingdoms rise and fall over night, when millions of the children of men are without life's very necessities, the mind turns to the hope of a temporal salvation, and great interest is manifested in the establishment of temporal Zion.

Zion, the place, has been known to us since that day in July, 1831, when to the elders of the church assembled at Independence the voice of the Spirit declared: "This land, which is the land of Missouri, is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the Saints; wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion," and "the place which is now called Independence is the center place."

Ninety years have elapsed since this message was received, years fraught with tribulation for the people of God, for they were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord and did not those things which he commanded. "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom." Those who would qualify as citizens thereof must shape their lives in accordance with the requirements of this law; must prepare themselves by doing the things which Messiah, the King of Zion, has commanded; must eliminate all that is evil in their natures and become "pure in heart."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE SPIRITUAL ELEMENT IN GOVERNMENT

"The only full and final object of all endeavor upon earth is the development of the human soul."

Doctor John H. Finley, one of the most eminent educators in the United States, who resigned the office of Commissioner of Education of the State of New York to become an editor on the staff of the New York Times, has been making an extensive investigation of conditions in Europe, and we commend to the attention of our readers the article by him which appears in the Globe-Democrat to-day. "The saddest, most depressing place that I touched in my journey," he says, "was Berlin. The question kept rising as I looked into the faces of these people with cheerless eyes and sagging bodies, 'Are these the supermen that the world has so much feared?'"

Between Cologne and Hannover, he says, in another place; "there was an almost continuous row of factory chimneys. More than once I counted a hundred in clear sight. 'Fabrik' was the only word written upon the wall of this, Germany's prewar mechanistic structure. It is a worthy word, but as fateful to the nation that makes it the goal as was the legend on Babylon's walls. It is a happy augury that the new Minister of Reconstruction in Germany, Walter Rathenau, in a book of his on The New State, has said practically what a great English statesman was saying to me: 'The only full and final object of all endeavor upon earth is the development of the human soul.'"

If more statesmen could but realize this truth and build upon this foundation, civilization would advance more rapidly, nations would grow stronger in the qualities that constitute real strength, and all humanity would be better and happier. There are two principal obstacles to this conviction and its application. One is the prevalent feeling—it can hardly be called an opinion—that the soul is a mere appendage to physicoordinate the musical interests of school, church, and state, in the development of a higher type of citizenry, and set the goal of attaining such service ten years hence.

Is it any wonder that my thoughts turned to our Department of Music, with its well-planned system of general, stake or district, and local choristers, whose privilege it is to occupy as ministers of music among this people? Who shall say that in the discharge of their sacred office, if they enter their field of endeavor with full consecration of spirit, they will not receive direction from him who conducts the "choir invisible"? It is time for those to whom God has intrusted the gifts of music fully to awake to the significance of that trust. The Lord requires that every man improve upon his talent. And for what purpose? Think you the blessed gift of song or the inherent ability to master some instrument of music was granted you for your personal gratification, or your individual good? Ah, no; but that the sum total of your development of that talent might be cast into the Lord's storehouse, so to speak, for "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together . . . for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

My fellow musicians, "when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." The musically gifted of Far West Stake have not begun to glimpse the possibilities before us. That Zion's characteristic, "of one heart and one mind," must be displayed by our vocalists and instrumentalists. We must pull together to the accomplishment of the set purpose that we become "the pure in heart and have part in that Zion out of which God, the perfection of beauty, shall shine.

To hearten us in this endeavor we have knowledge of the success attained by Enoch and his city who, in the midst of a world full of discord and strife, faithfully observed the gospel covenant. "They dwell in righteousness"; they were "of one heart and one mind," living in peace and harmony. The Golden Rule was given practical demonstration in their daily contact one with the other. Each sought the interest of his neighbor. There were "no poor among them, neither were there any rich," for they lived upon a high plane of equality. They were accepted of God. He came and dwelt among them, and at the end of three hundred sixty-five years took them to himself.

To Enoch was the promise made that before the coming of the Son of Man again to the earth, there would be a place prepared, a holy city, to which would be gathered from the four quarters of the earth the Lord's elect, who would make themselves ready to receive him, and that Enoch and his city should be united with them, and there God would make his abode.

What can music have to do with preparation for such citizenship?

The great Master Musician—the source of those beautiful harmonies which awaken the soul and lift it up to him—is fully aware of the ennobling influence of this mighty art. Hear his declaration in 1887: "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit." This admonition came to us thirty-four years ago, since which time the advance that has been made in musical education in the world is little short of revolutionary. In that day, music was not part of a serious education; it was considered more as "a fashionable accomplishment." To-day it is a fully accredited subject in many institutions of learning. Our educators are recognizing it as a science and an art, the study of which involves invaluable training in concentration, precision, patience, and endurance. For improvement of mind, refinement of morals, and elevation of soul it is taking its place in the front ranks. Cultivation of one's musical talent embraces a wide range of study. In addition to the detailed application essential to a knowledge of structure and form and the attainment of technical ability, one must know history, be familiar with the character, religion, and customs of peoples. One must know biography, for the nationality, character, and experiences of the composer are woven into his work.

It was my privilege to attend some of the institute sessions of the National Conference of Music Supervisors which was held in Saint Joseph early in April, and, as I moved among those devoted teachers of our children, I could not but sense the spirit of consecration to their task. They are engaged in a conscientious effort to make music a living force in our national life. They know that "rightly pursued," it "is not only an addition to the gladness of life, but also a means of inward culture," and are giving their time and talent that this end may be realized in the lives of many.

I cannot refrain quoting H. Augustine Smith, of Boston University, who, in his address on "Self-expression in religion," very earnestly declared: "We must link education with religion; otherwise we will be pagan in another century. The church must function three hundred sixty-five days in the year," and he asserted that under our present religionless public school system this can best be accomplished through music, introducing the best of Christendom's 400,000 hymns in the school songbook—hymns, void of doctrine and dogma, which breathe forth in universal language, the soul's response to the Source of life and light. He advocated a public "minister of music" in every county, whose duty it would be to cal life, that it has only an indirect relation to our physical aspirations, that it has no place in our daily occupations, and, if considered at all, it is in connection with purely religious matters to which we give more or less attention on Sundays. In this vague conception it has a great deal to do with the hereafter but little or nothing to do with the here-now, and the hereafter being indefinite at best, and doubtless a long way off, it is needless to bother about souls except in the way of insurance for the future, a form of policy that is not as generally sought after, it would seem, as in the past. The second obstacle is the theory developed by the researches of physical science and by the reasonings of some metaphysicians that there is no such a thing as a soul anyway. The scientists tell us, or many of them do, that we are all mere machines; that thought, however high, and feeling, however exalted, are but the reactions of the brain to external impressions. They have convinced themselves and convinced many others that the soul is a delusion, that death is the end of life, and therefore we need not concern ourselves about the future.

But here we have two eminent statesmen who, in the consideration of the governmental questions which involve the application of statesmanship, concur in the belief that "the only full and final object of all endeavor upon earth is the development of the human soul." Evidently they have reached the conclusion that there is a human soul, and that it has a preeminent place in the affairs of nations. It is not the soul in its relation to the world beyond they have in mind, but the human soul in its relation to physical life upon earth. They perceive that the soul has a commanding influence upon the finite, whatever may be its relation to infinity. They see that in the concrete and practical advancement of human affairs it is the supreme agency; that only as the soul is developed in men do men go forward and upward. Rathenau has good reason to realize this. The Germans created a state that was presumed to be above moral considerations. The only force it recognized was might, and its deities were material creations of which "Fabrik" may well be termed the verbal symbol. We recall that when in the summer of 1918 the war was at its height we were impelled by the heroism of France to discuss this question of the soul in its relation to national effort. France, we said then, has a soul; Germany has none. "Germany has erected a soulless state and deliberately it has labored to eradicate the soul from its people. Germany with a soul would never have done what Germany has done, and France without a soul would have perished ignominiously in the summer of 1914." Rathenau understands that the one way to restore Germany is to restore the soul of its people. That Frankenstein monstrosity that once was Germany is gone. In its place must be erected a state with a soul if Germany is to survive.

But the soul of a nation is only the sum of the individual souls of its people, and the development of individual souls is indeed the supreme endeavor of statesmanship as well as religion. For the soul is life in its highest meaning; it is the thing that urges men forward and upward; it is the constant inspiration to high achievement, not only spiritually but materially; it is the creative power of good; it is, in short, God in man, that bit of himself which he puts in man to distinguish him from the beast, but which grows through the exercise, conscious or unconscious, of itself. The purpose of all human life is that development, the creation of a personality in preparation for the infinite. As Keats expressed it, "Earth is the vale of soul-making," and it is through the varied experiences of life, through its labors, its contacts, its struggles, its sacrifices, its pains and its joys, through its dealings with the material facts of daily life, every one of which contains its portion of the spiritual, that the soul grows to its full stature, or else it fails in that measure of development for which it was designed. It is supremely the exercise of the soul that raises men and nations up the slopes of real progress, and without this they fail, even as Cæsar and Kaiser failed.—Saint Louis Globe-Democrat.

CHILD LABOR LAW ENFORCEMENT REVEALS BAD CONDITIONS

Federal law administration has brought automatically into view the vicious circle of child labor, illiteracy, bodily feebleness, and poverty.—Administration of the First Federal Child Labor Law, United States Department of Labor.

In five States it was necessary for the Children's Bureau to handle directly the issuing of certificates. During the nine months over 25,000 children in these five States applied for certificates of age. Nineteen thousand, six hundred and ninety-six certificates were granted to children between fourteen and sixteen years of age, almost as many to girls as to boys. Less than one per cent of these children could furnish birth certificates as evidence of their age, and only two per cent offered baptismal certificates. Two fifths submitted Bible records and over one fourth life insurance policies. About one fourth of the children, however, could furnish no documentary evidence, and had to secure a physician's certificate to show that they were over fourteen years old.

Many of the children who were found under weight when examined by a physician had been working in the mills for several years. Some gained quickly when taken out of the mill and put on a better diet. With others it was difficult to reach even the low standard which the physical requirement required.

One fifth of the children in the five States left school when they were in the fourth grade; almost a tenth of them had never attended school or had not gone beyond the first grade, and only one twenty-fifth had attended the eighth or a higher grade. Their educational equipment was even more limited than the grade which they last attended would indicate. While 1,803 children expecting to go to work had not advanced further than the first grade even when they had gone to school at all, 3,379 could not sign their names legibly and 1,915 could not sign their names at all. Over one fourth of the children would have been refused certificates if ability to write their names legibly had been a requirement.

DISTRIBUTING THE WORD

The following may be surprising statements for some of our readers, and very hard for us to appreciate in America. The report is that of S. H. Anderson, who has been engaged in mission work for fifty-six years, and who undertook the distribution of the gospel as a means of introducing his work in Paris. He says:

"The ignorance of the gospel among the people of Paris has always astounded me. A workman asked, 'What is the Gospel according to Saint Matthew?' and when told, he inquired, Was I the author of it?"

"Another person asked a lady worker whether she had written the Gospel according to Saint John. A policeman asked: 'What is the Gospel according to Saint Mark?' I said, 'It is the history of Jesus Christ by one of his contemporaneous friends.' The man said: 'It must be interesting; I will read it with my wife this evening.'

"In taking a Gospel of Luke, a police officer said slowly and aloud: 'The Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ according to Saint Luke! What can that be?'

"Another gentleman, in taking an epistle of Saint Paul, said: 'I have read of excavations in Syria; this must have been found in the sand of that country.' One asked, 'How in the world do you happen to possess letters written by Saint Peter?'

"The owner of a book and picture store in the rue de T., on being presented with a large Bible by an Englishman, said: 'This is a big book of theology.' When told it was a Bible, he added: 'It is the first time I have seen the inside of a Bible.'

"Opposition must be expected. It is often violent, but distributors must not be discouraged, there is also great joy in this work. Naturally the booklet is often refused or thrown away. It should be immediately picked up and offered to another person. If it is torn up, the fragments should be gathered up, as the sight of so many bits of paper may suggest tearing up to evil-disposed people. A wretchedly clad one-armed man shouted at me: 'You fool, get away with your gospel.' A gospel hit me under the eye and caused pain.

"A 'gentlemanly' looking fellow raised his stick above my head, saying: 'You deserve to be suppressed for distributing gospels.' An angry police officer said, on examining the book: 'If I could, I would imprison you all your life.' The police have often asked to see my permit. Several of my friends have been taken to the police station. Nevertheless, encouragements also are numerous. Souls have been won for Christ by the simple reading of one gospel. Hundreds of persons have bought the Bible or the New Testament, year after year, after receiving the booklet."

NAVY OBSERVES SABBATH

The Secretary of the Navy is calling particular attention to general order Number 456, relating to Sunday services, and cessation from all except absolutely necessary work on the Sabbath. He quotes the following issued by President Lincoln, November 16, 1864, at close of the Civil War:

"The President, Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, desires and enjoins the orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military and naval service. The importance for man and beast of the prescribed weekly rest, the sacred rights of Christian soldiers and sailors, a becoming deference to the best sentiment of Christian people, and a due regard for the divine will demand that Sunday labor in the Army and Navy be reduced to the measure of strict necessity. The discipline and character of the national forces should not suffer nor the cause they defend be imperiled by the profanation of the day or name of the Most High. 'At this time of public distress (adopting the words of Washington in 1776) men may find enough to do in the service of their God and their country without abandoning themselves to vice and immorality.' The first general order issued by the Father of his Country after the Declaration of Independence indicated the spirit in which our institutions were founded and should ever be defended. 'The General hopes and trusts that every officer and man will endeavor to live and act as becomes a Christian soldier defending the dearest rights and liberties of his country.'"

The Missouri Legislature is discussing the improvement of Missouri roads. Last fall $60,000,000 state bonds were voted for better roads. To this $30,000,000 is added by the Federal Government. This should result in much better roads in Missouri, both on the mainly traveled highways and also on the byways, the latter not participating directly, but likely to profit by the incentive afforded.

William Howard Taft was appointed chief justice of the supreme court of the United States by President Harding on June 30. He is the first man in the history of America to occupy as chief executive and also as chief judicial officer of the country.

The Eternal City—Part I

By H. J. Davison

Something concerning its history and destiny; including its occupancy by the Twelve Tribes of Israel.

With due respect to Hall Caine, the author, we have elected to prefix the above distinguishing title to the city of which we are to write, with the conviction that it is far more appropriate than it ever was or will be to the city of Rome. For when did inspiration ever proclaim, "Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised is the city of our God, on the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Rome on the sides of the north, the city of the great King"? (See Psalms 48: 1, 2.) Or again, "At that time they shall call Rome the throne of the Lord; and all nations shall be gathered unto it." (See Jeremiah 3: 17.)

It is true that Rome has had much to do with the shaping of religious thought, or at least religious observances of a vast portion of the inhabitants of this earth; and her influence is still enormous, nevertheless long years before the tiara even adorned the head of him who pointed men towards Rome, it was proclaimed by inspiration: "For the Lord hath chosen Zion. He hath desired it. (Psalms 132: 13, 14.) And again, "Blessed be the Lord out of Zion which dwelleth at Jerusalem." (Psalms 135: 21.)

The history of this wonderful city and its future destiny are inseparably connected; being linked so many times by the golden chain of prophecy, which reaches from the infancy of humanity down through and past the eschatological happenings of the near future, into the wondrous unfolding of the eternal world.

Not to be vitally interested in the history and destiny of this chosen city of God, is to be dead to one of the grand features of the working out and consummation of the Christian faith. Howbeit, only a meager outline will be attempted in this article.

Our starting point will be the incident when Abraham, returning from the "slaughter of the kings," met Melchisedec and was blessed of him. Although we would not be surprised if, when Jared's brother's vision is made known to us in full, that it would be revealed that Jerusalem was the site of the city of Enoch. And perhaps an important point long before that. (Ether 1: 101.) The blessing of Abraham by this Melchisedec occurred nearly two thousand years before Christ, according to Bible chronology.

As one of the indications that this Salem, of which Melchisedec was both priest and king, was none other than Jerusalem of later date, we quote from Marvelous Discoveries of Bible Lands, pages 40, 41, and 42, as recorded in The Exegesis of the Priesthood, by Gomer T. Griffiths, page 12, last paragraph:

"There is a reason, too, why Melchisedec should be termed King of Salem rather than King of Jerusalem. In the cuneiform inscriptions the name Jerusalem is written Uru—Salem. And a lexical tablet explains Uru as the equivalent of the Assyrian Alu city. Salem was the God of peace. And we accordingly see in 'Jerusalem' the city of the God of Peace. In fact it is plainly stated in one of the letters of Ebod—lot now preserved at Berlin, if the reading of the somewhat obliterated cuneiform characters by Doctor Winckles and myself is correct."

In this we have pretty good evidence that Jerusalem at that time even was looked upon as the city of God, not only by the Canaanites, but the Assyrians and Egyptians as well. At least the name is found in the language and used by an Egyptian governor.

This Melchisedec is often referred to as a type of Christ, in that he reigned as both priest and king.

The offering of Isaac by Abraham, his father, at a later date, is often alluded to as typical of the great offering that took place at Jerusalem.

In Genesis 22 we learn that Abraham was to go into the land of Moriah and offer a burnt offering upon a certain mountain. Whether that mountain was the one on which the temple was built, or Mount Olivet close by upon which Christ suffered, may be questioned. At any rate, if either be correct, it took place at Jerusalem, which makes one more event to immortalize the name of the eternal city.

Jerusalem has passed through many extreme changes. Almost it looks like a bone of constant and determined contention between the hosts of heaven and the legions of the nether world, as it alternates between the highest pinnacle of fame and glory, and the lowest vaults of darkness and degradation. Still, God has never lost sight of this wonderful city, and his children in all ages have by faith beheld it, as indeed the city of the great King.

As Jerusalem stands to-day, it has in reality no comparison with many, very many cities of the present or even the past ages, along the lines by which the world counts greatness. But Jerusalem has a future and a destiny of which all the cities of the world cannot or will not deprive her. In that day the more poetical and ecclesiastical term Zion will be more appropriate than at the present time. Zion as a name in connection with this city is not found in the King James Translation until the days of the conquest by King David, said to be 1048 B. C.

After the day of Melchisedec and Abraham, the city fell into bad hands. Perhaps worse during the sojourn of the children of Israel in Egypt. At all events, at the time of the departure of the Israelites under Moses, Jethro, the Melchisedec priest, was not dwelling in Jerusalem, but down south by the Red Sea in Midian. At least he was the only Melchisedec priest that we read of at that time.

Some forty years later Adonizedec, king of Jerusalem, perhaps a Jebusite, with four other kings, united their forces to withstand Joshua in his conquest of the "Promised Land." The army, however, was destroyed, and the five kings were hung. (Joshua 10.)

The Jebusites were the descendants of Jebus, the son of Canaan, the son of Ham, one of the accursed children of Noah.

It might be interesting to know how much relationship there is between the hordes who are pledged to oppose the Joshua of the nineteenth century, General Allenby, and the British army, and prevent the children of Israel from establishing their kingdom on the promised land, and the armies that withstood Joshua of old, if any.

The hairy son of Isaac (Esau), who sold his birthright to Jacob, took his wives of the daughters of Canaan long before Moses' day, and raised up a powerful people who dwelt in Edom and Mount Seir, and sought to prevent Moses and his followers from reaching the promised land as they journeyed. Of this matter we will speak later.

Joshua conquered and subdued the land of Canaan. Yet there were some parts of tribes that were not driven out. Among them were the Jebusites. As it reads in Joshua 15:

63, "As for the Jebusites, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out."

They remained there until the days of David, about four hundred years. After David reigned in Hebron seven and a half years, he went to Jerusalem and overthrew the stronghold of the Jebusites, which was the fortified southwestern portion of Jerusalem, called Zion, and set up his throne there, and called it the city of David, in which he reigned thirty-three years. (2 Samuel 5.) To this city he brought the ark of the covenant from Gibeah. (Chapter 6.)

It may be a safe prediction that Joshua Allenby will not free Jerusalem and surrounding country from the Canaanites altogether. And not until the "Prince of the house of David" reigns in that same Zion will Jerusalem remain unmolested.

Let the reader note carefully that the throne of David was in Zion at Jerusalem. And that the ark of the covenant was also there. For in a succeeding chapter we will have occasion to refer to it.

David also is referred to as the typical king. Read in this connection Ezekiel 37: 24 and Jeremiah 23: 5.

This king had it in his mind to build a house unto the Lord, even the temple, in which to install the "holy of holies" with the ark of the covenant, but was not permitted to do it, although he made preparations for his son Solomon to accomplish it.

It does not appear that the city was called Zion while in the hands of the Jebusites. But as soon as it was taken by David, the writer in 2 Samuel 5: 7 (see also 1 Kings 8: 1) calls it Zion, the city of David.

It was during David's reign that the greater part of the Psalms was written.

No doubt the poet, the singer, as well as the prophet David, had glimpses of the time when the city should shine in its beauty, when Solomon should reign in royal splendor in Zion, and the holy light of God should shine out from the mercy seat in the temple on Mount Moriah; when it should be said of its grandeur, "The half has never been told." No doubt he saw, too, far beyond that day, to the time when the great Antitype should reign in that very place before his ancestors gloriously.

It is easy, then, to account for the term "Zion and Jerusalem" getting into poetry, song, and prophecy, as referring virtually to one city. Thus it was known and understood in Bible times. And thus it has been understood by Hebrew and most all Christian writers ever since. Although some of them seem to have a vague conception of what it really stands for in prophecy.

Some instances of Bible usage may be given: "In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion.—Psalms 76: 2. "Remember thy congregation which thou hast purchased of old; the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt."—74: 2.

Again, in Lamentations 2: 13, 14, 15, at the time when Judah was in Babylonish captivity and Jerusalem forsaken. "What thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? . . . All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their heads at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?"

But when did men say such things of Jerusalem? Sure enough. Had it not been written in the Psalms, 43 and 52, and been sung by the children of Judah for about five hundred years? And no doubt it was among the songs which they could not sing when asked to while in captivity, referred to in that most touching and pathetic Psalm, 137: 1-5.

"By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we went, when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof. For there they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion. How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land? If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning."

The prophets who followed wrote in the same manner regarding Zion and Jerusalem, especially when they broke forth in strains of rhetoric or oratory. For instance, Isaiah 2: 3, which if only casually read by one not familiar with the writer's methods might infer that two distinct cities were referred to. But a little attention by way of analysis will correct this idea.

As to the expression, "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem": First, Isaiah should not hold to the phraseology that he and other Hebrew writers employed elsewhere to signify one city if he wanted to be understood as signifying two cities a long distance apart without making some explanation.

Again, if we make distinction in terms and think of two separate cities, then by the law of logic we are committed to the discrimination between "the law" and "the word of the Lord," which evidently means the same thing. For most assuredly if Christ reigns in Jerusalem the law will go forth from there. Which as a matter of course would be the word of the Lord. (The 119th Psalm has 176 verses, and every verse speaks of the same thing evidently, with only a difference of terminology.) A parallel passage may be found in Isaiah 31: 9 (same author), "Whose fire is in Zion and his furnace in Jerusalem." A similar passage by the same author, "The light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame." (Chapter 10: 17.) Again chapter 40: 27, "Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest thou, O Israel?" These statements are coupled with the conjunction and, which ordinarily, in our present method of speech, would imply two separate ideas, but in Jewish poetry and rhetoric does not necessarily. Rather, in most cases, a repetition of the same thought.

Referring to Isaiah 2: 3, another evidence that Isaiah had Jerusalem in mind is that when Jeremiah spoke of the same time and event, he used almost identical language, calls it Jerusalem, and also the throne of the Lord. Chapter 3: 17: "And all nations shall be gathered into it" (singular). (See Micah 4: 1-7.)

But to put the matter at rest, Isaiah states in the opening of the chapter, just a verse or two preceding, "The word that Isaiah the son of Amos saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem." (Italics mine.)

The reason for being so particular regarding this matter will appear as we proceed.

The birth, life, work, death, and resurrection of our Savior, as well as the operations of the infant church, and the destruction of the temple with the dispersion of the Jews, are all so well understood that to dwell upon them is unnecessary, except to note that they all took place in the land and city of Jerusalem.

As a closing thought to this chapter, let the reader remember the words of Jesus, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem," etc., and then contemplate all that is expressed in that beautiful production, "The Holy City," which ought to mean more to us than any other people in the world.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Reunion Work

Our first assistant superintendent, Sister Mina Madison, reports a fairly successful reunion at Glenwood Lake, Minneapolis. She had a set of health panels, books from our church publishing house, and some child welfare charts. She conducted a round table discussion each afternoon at half past one, for Sunday school workers, and one at four each day on Women's Department work. She addressed the assembly on "The necessity for women's work and how we are trying to fill the need." The subjects discussed other days were, "The relation of study and service," "Money raising in locals," "Our duty to children as to government," "Social purity," "Dress," "Cradle roll," and "Women's Department organization." She reports a rather small attendance of campers, but fairly well attended sessions. Several sisters have urged her to come to their local branches and address their groups of women.

We were gratified on receiving the completed list of reunion appointments for our field workers, to discover that twenty reunions have been provided for in that way. We think this a very fine showing, considering the fact that our general department was not, in any case, able to finance such workers, and their expense has had to be met by district or reunion committees. This is evidence of the awakening consciousness that the Women's Department has a distinct message for the people of the church and a place in its program. We would that every gathering of the Saints this reunion season would partake of that consciousness and receive that message. The sooner our homes are uplifted, our parents inspired with spiritualized impulses, and our children surrounded by the best possible environment and recipients of the wisest training and heritages, the sooner will the church be able to present a purified body for the coming Savior.

Instructions to Cradle Roll Workers

The cradle roll is an important division of the Women's Department responsibility and we are very anxious to carry it on successfully. As a part of the work of the child welfare bureau, we hope, through its activities, to accomplish some definite and effective results for the development of the children of the church. That all children might have the best environment and adequate opportunity to reach the highest plane possible to them, is an ideal which should lie close to the hearts of all women.

We read in Luke 2: 52: "Jesus increased in wisdom [mental development] and stature [physical] and in favor with God [spiritual] and man [social]." If it was thus necessary for the Christ child to grow and expand in all these ways, how much more necessary for our own children, if they shall be able to render acceptable service to our church, our nation, and our God!

A portion of this developing work is intrusted to you, as cradle roll superintendent over a local territory. We have confidence in your ability to carry it to a splendid culmination if your heart is in it, and you ask God's blessing upon what you do. If your branch is large, you may appoint assistants and in turn try to imbue them with the spirit of consecrated service which is moving you. Each of these cradle roll visitors should have only as many homes under her care as she can visit regularly—preferably from ten to fifteen.

You should know your own community and be in touch with its activities and opportunities. Thus you may call the mothers' attention to lectures, programs, study classes, and other things which will be helpful to them in the very important work of nurturing and training children. In every possible way you and your assistants may try to be a real friend and comfort to the mothers. Regard the babies as your special wards, whose proper development is dear to you and of great importance to the church. As they grow older, try to bring them in touch with every opportunity for physical, mental, moral, and spiritual progress, in so far as lies within your power. Remember always, as you work, that your influence for good is increased in proportion to the prayerful consideration you bring to the task, and the wealth of loving, sympathetic interest you manifest in it.

In making visits to the home, remember also the father of the child. Encourage the mother to interest him in her study, that he may make it his. Let him feel that he is not forgotten, and that his intelligent and faithful cooperation is necessary to the well-being of his child. On the father and mother jointly rest the responsibility and privilege of rearing their child in righteousness, and each must bring to this holy commission his best and highest powers.

Duties of Cradle Roll Visitors

It will be the privilege of the cradle roll visitors to represent the home and child welfare bureau of the Women's Department by the performance of certain specific duties, described below:

Calls

1. The first call is to be made upon prospective mothers if possible. Books, pamphlets, leaflets, or other literature as directed by the general superintendent of cradle roll, should be left. Try to create an interest in the child care course issued by the home and child welfare bureau, the first few lessons of which deal with prenatal care and preparations for baby's arrival.
2. A second call should be made after baby comes, preferably during the latter part of the "lying-in" period. This call should be for the following purposes:
 - a. Express appreciation of and interest in the new baby.
 - b. Get permission to record it upon the cradle roll of the church.
 - c. Fill out (in duplicate) the birth record blank.
 - d. If your call has been postponed until baby is six months old or older, fill out, also, one of the health record blanks. (You may not see the value of all these items, but the Health Department does. We rely upon your faithful cooperation.)
 - e. If there are other children in the home under three years of age who have not previously been recorded, fill out birth records and health records for them also, always remembering to make two of the birth records exactly alike.
 - f. Ascertain whether or not the baby has been registered with the State Board of Health. If not, endeavor to see that the attending physician reports birth and proper registry be made.
 - g. Leave with the mother the "cradle roll leaflet" from the Women's Department, the "health message" from the Health Department, and the birth offering envelope.
 - h. If not accomplished at first call, try again to secure the mother's subscription to the "child care course." (See "supplies" below.)

3. Later calls should be made as regularly as possible. The church certificate (sent you by the birth registrar of the Women's Department upon receipt of the birth record you sent in) should be left with the mother promptly. Collect the birth offering envelope, giving a receipt for the money so donated. Each month a copy of the little paper for parents, The Golden Now, could be left with the mother, if your local Women's Department will furnish the small amount of money necessary to obtain it. (See "Supplies.")

Always keep alive to the situation in the home. Do not permit sickness, trouble, or accident to pass unnoticed. Sympathetic help in times of need is the best way to secure for you the friendship of the mother, and to establish her confidence in your work, thereby enlisting her full cooperation.

Birth anniversaries, Christmas, Easter, or other special occasions in the life of the child, should be remembered in some small way by the cradle roll visitor.

Reporting

1. Birth records (made out in duplicate as directed above) should be mailed at once to General Superintendent Cradle

Roll, Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. (One of these is intended for the birth registry office, and one for the Health Department.)

2. Health records should be taken every six months (or oftener), and should be mailed promptly to address as above. Use the same blank for all ages (under three) filling out the items pertaining to the child you are recording, but answering in some way every question. (For instance, if the child has no teeth, say that.)

3. Report quarterly to your local Women's Department, where organized. If none exists in your branch, send report to your district organizer. (For report blanks, see below.)

4. Birth offerings should be sent to Treasurer Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. (This fund was started years ago to furnish means to publish children's books, and give parents an opportunity to make in this way a "thank-offering" for the child God has given them.)

5. Report all three-year-old children promptly to the local Sunday school, giving name, age, and full address.

6. Keep an accurate record of your work, number of visits made by self and assistants, materials and literature placed, offering collected—in fact, every item that will help you to report clearly and fully the work you have accomplished.

Supplies

1. Birth record and health record blanks, envelopes, and receipts for birth offerings, and your quarterly report blanks may all be obtained without cost from your district organizer, through your local organization of Women's Department, if you have one; direct, if otherwise.

2. The "Child Care" leaflet course may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. It is composed of about thirty lessons covering the essential points of caring for a child from birth to the adolescent years. Each cradle roll worker should have a set of these lessons, for personal study as well as to serve as samples to show the mothers. The course costs but twenty-five cents.

3. The Golden Now, very helpful to mothers in obtaining a fine appreciation of, and attitude towards, children and their spiritual needs, may be obtained from the David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois. It costs but six cents for the year, when ordered in lots of ten to one address, and comes monthly.

4. "Prenatal care," "Infant care," and "Child care," all by Mrs. Max West, may be obtained free by applying to Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia. In writing, ask also for a list of the various bulletins and pamphlets which are distributed by the bureau. A list of some desirable ones of these may be found in the bibliography printed in the back of the Women's Department Centennial Year Book. Obtain these for the mothers.

Birth Registration

We desire to assist the Government in its effort to record and register the births of all children born in this country. The need for this is vital, some of the reasons being set forth in the "Health message" to new mothers. This is distributed by the church Health Department through our cradle roll.

The laws in regard to reporting and recording the births of children are not uniform throughout the United States. In some it is not even required. In others the time limits vary greatly. Cradle roll workers would do well to consult town clerks, the city board of health, the county officer commissioned with the task of registering births, or, failing in these, the State Board of Health at the state capital. Then proceed according to the information received, to see that each mother obtains the properly made out certificate of her baby's birth.

Local Activities

Be alive in your work. Stir up a just appreciation of it by little affairs which are planned to bring the cradle roll work prominently before the people. Be enthusiastic about it yourself. Have occasional cradle roll parties, in which the local Women's Department may act as hostesses to the babies and their mothers, with a little program and refreshments. Have an occasional lecture planned for the benefit of the mothers, inviting the fathers as well. Cooperate with the local Sunday school in making special festivals, at least once a year, in which the transfer of the cradle roll children to the Sunday school is made a feature. If your local Sunday school wishes to have its primary pupils keep up an interest in the new babies, you may report each birth to them as of old, tying the names on the little cradles or placing upon the wall record.

Make a point of reading good articles, papers, lectures, or books on the subject of child welfare. If you live in a city, get in touch with the workers along this line and cooperate with them. Some of them are organized with the special object of caring for the tiny, preschool children, just as you are. It is a splendid and interesting goal to have in view—to see that children are physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually fit to enter school and meet its requirements. Clinics, health centers, visiting nurses, instruction and protection to mothers, all are part of the plan, and our cradle roll workers could well be alive to the many opportunities of the hour, if they indeed seek to be "workmen who needeth not to be ashamed."

We trust you will feel the great importance of the work of this division, recognizing it to be fundamental and essential to all later work with the children, and giving it your very best service in the wide field into which it has entered. May the spirit of your office descend upon you with illuminating insight, that together we may work towards the purification of God's people and in an especial way, the salvation of his little ones.

Infants Thrive on Maternal Nursing

Breast fed babies have a better chance for life than artificially fed babies. This fact is brought out in a brief monograph entitled "Breast feeding," which has just been issued by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau.

Studies made in many different countries have demonstrated that the death rate among artificially fed babies is at all times higher than among breast fed babies; that where for any reason breast feeding is the custom, the mortality rate is low in spite of other unfavorable factors; and that when for any cause breast feeding is increased in a community the infant mortality rate is lowered. Studies made in overcrowded and poverty-stricken districts of New York, Chicago, and other large cities, indicate very clearly that where by race or custom it is the practice to feed infants at the breast, the infant mortality rate is relatively low. It has been further shown that the good effect of breast feeding is manifested not only in infancy, but in later childhood, and even in adult life.

The problem of insuring breast feeding to babies involves economic, educational, and health aspects. As factors to be considered in promoting maternal nursing, the report includes high standards of medical and nursing care before and after babies are born, instruction of all mothers in the importance of breast feeding and in the means of promoting it, and the interest of the community in this phase of child welfare. The report emphasizes the importance for the nursing mother and her family of an adequate income, in order that the mother may have proper nourishment and freedom from overwork and from the strain and worry that are inevitably attached to insufficient income.

Address, Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.

Announcing an Assistant

Sister Anne Roberts, who is our general superintendent of cradle roll, announces that she has found a very great help and a willing and capable assistant in the person of Sister Stella Chapman, of Independence. Sister Chapman has had some experience along the line of child welfare and cradle roll work, and is one who is willing to give time for further preparation and study in order that her work may be marked by efficiency and success.

These devoted sisters are planning to advance the work as the way opens up, and are depending upon God's Spirit to guide them into worth-while channels. They hope to have materials and suggestive helps to place in the hands of the workers in outlying districts that will enable them to bring the cradle roll work before the people in an interesting and instructive way.

For the Students of Civics

Sister Dora Young, a few months ago appointed to supervise the study of our women along the lines of civics, writes that she is getting out some material on texts and lesson helps. This will be good news for those who perused with pleasure and profit Sister Young's articles of last winter in our column. She has given deep study and research to this subject, and we can hope for something very concretely helpful. Some there are who believe that women are not sufficiently aroused to their responsibilities in civic affairs, or rather, not so in sufficiently great numbers. One speaker at our late institute stated that "emancipation had come to women before they were prepared for it." Let's show them! What do you say?

Mothercraft Film Soon to Be Produced

The Mothercraft Movement for the instruction of school-girls in the care of children, founded by May Bliss Dickinson, a representative of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, is to be given wider publicity through the medium of motion pictures, according to an announcement by Miss Dickinson.

Arrangements have been completed for the production of a Mothercraft film which will be circulated through such organizations as women's clubs, parent-teacher associations, chapters of the Red Cross, Camp Fire Girls, Girl Scouts, and Child Welfare and Americanization societies.

Miss Dickinson went to Los Angeles recently from Boston on a mission for the advisory committee of the child welfare department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which has made Mothercraft this year a part of its departmental work. Her mission is to inaugurate a visual education campaign through the medium of the screen.

King Vidor will have charge of the making of the Mothercraft film at his Hollywood studio and he will use many Los Angeles children of all ages in the scenes.

"Mothercraft means nothing more nor less than the instruction of girls in the upper grades of the grammar schools in the art of caring for babies and young children," said Miss Dickinson. "A practical knowledge is imparted to those destined to become the mothers and teachers of the next generation."—The Bulletin.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XIX

The Story

1. Of what value has become the "art" of story-telling?
2. Trace children's interest in stories as to the order in which they appeared in history.
3. At what age do children like fairy tales?
4. What is a fable? A parable? An allegory? Discuss the value of each.
5. When do children enjoy stories of everyday life?
6. Illustrate from your own experience the physical value of a story.
7. Tell how the story is an intellectual aid.
8. How do savage tribes teach the tribal morals to their children? Of what value is this?
9. What is the social value of story-telling?
10. What activity on the part of the child should follow the telling of a story?

LETTERS

Near East Disorders Spread

Anti-Semitism continues a menace in Palestine and Egypt.

Riot and bloodshed occurred at Alexandria, Egypt, during the period of May 20 to 24. Europeans have been singled out as objects of murder, and many have succumbed to a cruel death. Eyewitnesses tell a sorrowful story of murder, robbery, and looting. A British soldier was assassinated at the Attarine Caracol on Thursday. He was stoned until he fell, then the Arabs took a large wagon wheel and beat him until life was crushed out of the body. Another European was on his way home. A few yards from his door he was fired upon by a policeman. He dropped. A second policeman bayoneted the prostrated body, then fired another shot at him to finish him. Another European was soaked with a quantity of kerosene oil and burned alive. Later on, the hearse was going to receive his mortal remains and was attacked by a band of Arabs who tried to murder the funeral attendants. Shopkeepers were brutally beaten into insensibility, some murdered, others burned alive, shops looted and burned, because they are European, and the Mohammedans know that they believe in Jesus Christ. The Egyptian Gazette states there were fifty-eight dead and two hundred and ten wounded on May 25.

In Egypt as in Palestine, the native police set their oaths of office to one side and joined in with the rioters to kill and destroy. In spite of this poor precedent, the high commissioner of Palestine has announced that five hundred native police have been selected to safeguard the people of Palestine. These are to receive a remuneration slightly greater than the regular policeman, who receives five dollars per week and uniform. The people are voicing their sentiment through the press and are asking for English policemen. They have little or no confidence in the native police.

The following is an extract from a pamphlet circulated widely through Alexandria by the Mohammedan Arabs:

"Where are you, students? Where are you, fellaheen? Where are you, devotees? Where is he who offers himself for his homeland and saves his country from disaster? Let you be rising! Rise, you heroes! and generously give what is dear and cheap for the sake of your fatherland, and for the consolidation of the throne of the nation, and its faithful agent, Saad Pasha. Know yet that heavenly laws and worldly laws allow killing and shedding of blood in these circumstances. Let the prophet (may Allah bless him) be the best example. He killed many in the way of spreading the Mohammedan call, and exterminating the influence of infidels, and the night resembles the preceding night. We defend the dearest thing on earth; defend our life and death, defend ourselves, our children, and grandchildren. Remember the prophet's word, 'The love of home is part of the faith.' What have you decided upon? History is on the alert. Long live Saad. No chief like Saad. Down with the Government's delegation. Down with the dissentient members."

A circular of this kind calling attention to what Mohammed did, is all that is necessary to get them started, and, like an insane man, you never know where they will stop.

Palestine is full of Mohammedans and the Europeans and Christians are not any too sure we will not experience a duplication of what occurred at Alexandria. A Mohammedan, like a bulldog, must give vent to his inward feelings, and if he cannot find Jews to fight with, he selects Christians; if both these classes are not handy, they fight among themselves. East of the Jordan, tribal wars are almost constantly in operation.

The refined Jews are returning to their respective countries daily. Immigration to Palestine has been stopped. Money invested in business enterprises is not safe. The banks will advance no money to business enterprises, neither on real estate. A fortune invested in a factory could be lost in one night, burned, looted, and building destroyed. Under these conditions people will not invest their money in Palestine. Palestine is set back two years.

On June 3, the occasion of the king's birthday, High Commissioner Herbert Samuel delivered an address in which he modified this phrase of the Balfour declaration, "The establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people." "I hear it said in many quarters that the Arab population of Palestine will never agree to their country being taken from them, and given to strangers; that they will never agree to a Jewish government being set up to rule over the Moslem and Christian majority. People say that they cannot understand how it is that the British Government could ever have consented to such a policy. I answer that the British Government has never consented and will never consent to such a policy. That is not the meaning of the Balfour declaration. It means that the Jews, a people who are scattered throughout the world, but whose hearts are always turned to Palestine, should be enabled to find here their home, and that some, among them, within the limits that are fixed by the members and interests of the present population, should come to Palestine in order to help, by their resources and efforts, to develop the country."

This reduces the Balfour declaration to a farce, and does not offer the Jews as much as America and several other countries. Here the Jew has a common enemy that may arise and smite him at any moment. He is not allowed to furnish himself with weapons to defend himself, but must live in fear. The present police force is inadequate and the army cannot prevent local riots in obscure places. The Jewish colonies, located miles from the cities, are not protected and would suffer a great loss if attacked again. Under the

JERUSALEM, June 1.

Tribute to Joseph Arber

It was the last day of the reunion of the Spokane District for me, and we sat together (Brother Greene and I) under the shade of a tall and shaggy pine tree. We had finished lunch and the sister with whom we had dined was busy in the open tent behind us, clearing the utensils away and getting ready for the Sunday school convention soon to commence. Bishop Keir had left us two days before, calling en route home at the reunion to be held in Montana, and our little party, which had been associated for nearly three weeks, in a few hours would be scattered, and the pleasant experiences would become memories: and, like so many similar experiences, would never be duplicated in facts of personnel and conditions. The work which had called us together had been completed; even the reports were finished, and the hope of success in the removing of difficulties and the adjustment of long standing troubles justified the feeling of relaxation which is the remuneration that cannot be substituted, and literalizes David's poetry in the "sacrifices of joy" which is the offering of all ministries.

Only in a semiconscious way were we absorbing the magnificent scenery for which the Northwest is so famous; particularly this strip of Idaho which separates Montana from Washington, and reaches the Canadian border on the north. All around us the serrated mountains, covered with the dark green pines, lifted themselves up to the heavens and punctured the soft, fleecy clouds, which slowly moved in their cumulus formations along the horizon, billowing away like an ocean of light, to burst into glorious radiance upon shores far from human ken. The air was filled with the music of birds, and the drone of the far-away sawmill, while the sweet voices of the Sunday school workers supplied the obbligato, and the vibrant air was fragrant with the odor of the pines. The coming of a messenger who was to bear me away to the city from which I would entrain for other points was expected, and beautiful Cour D'Alene, with the recollection of the happy times and the associations of the Saints and friends, would enrich some future period of reminiscence, the heritage of all who "serve and wait."

Suddenly a shadow fell across the greensward, and our reverie was broken by a voice crying: "Here is mail for you!" Some letters were handed to Brother Greene, and one to myself. Mine was official and lifeless; a swift glance wrung it dry as dust, and it was pushed into my pocket for future acknowledgment. I waited for my comrade to read his letters before we would leave our quiet nook and poetry, for prose and fact again.

While reading Brother Greene drew in his breath sharply between his teeth and exclaimed "My! my!" and then read the news of Brother Joseph Arber's sudden illness, and that he had been taken to the Sanitarium, where the verdict was rendered that he had but a fighting chance for life, but there was little hope of victory. Ere we had recovered from the surprise, the next letter was opened and one of the first items read was that Brother Arber had died that morning at half past six and would be buried Monday.

The shadow that fell across our path deepened, and gloom filled our souls, for we had lost a friend. Brother Arber was one of the earliest of my acquaintances in this church and the first missionary companion I had. We started our ministerial career almost contemporaneously, while I was in my teens. We married about the same time and commenced missionary activities almost at the same time and in the same place, and in mutual sufferings, trials, and hardships laid the foundations of a friendship which endured through many changes. In that experience I learned that men who suffer and endure hardships as soldiers of the cross, in brotherhood and sympathy, lay the foundations which stand all kinds of tests, and without which church officialism cannot win its way either to the hearts of men or to the portals of the kingdom. The joy of sacrifice becomes the vocabulary of love, and under the pressure of such work there is a revelation of soul, which is the essence of enduring friendship.

As the train sped through the night and the iron wheels ground out their monotonous dirge, I conjured up much of the past in which the fortunes of our deceased brother had been linked with mine, and whose passing enriched me while making me poorer, in the manner which Doctor Russell Conwell so beautifully described in the current American Magazine, as the peculiar wealth of age, the friends of the past, the friends of the present, and those of the past who have gone on before and wait to welcome us when we shall leave the "hotel of life and go home." With the rapid passage of time, which is surging through the orifice of the "present" as the "future" rushes into the "past," which is the French astronomer's way of putting it, (Camille Flammarion) our wealth surely is interesting.

My first meeting with Joseph Arber was at the mission conference of the British Isles, held during the Bank Holiday, at Leeds, in the year 1892. We had been in the church but three years, and we were looking for two of the apostles of the church, Brethren J. W. Gillen and G. T. Griffiths, from whom we expected much and to whom a warm welcome was extended.

From all over the country there came men whose names were household terms in the church communities: Thomas Taylor, whose early life among the Mormons in Utah was illustrated by episodes of frontier dangers, and the attacks of Indians, which gave him an unique standing among the Saints, and to some of us in whose minds the immortal stories of Fenimore Cooper and other tales of adventure of perhaps not quite so classical and dignified a standing as this author, were still fresh. We hung on every word, and slyly found our way to a place where we could hear our aged brother tell of his strange and adventurous life. Charles H. Caton, the versatile and brilliant associate of Brother Taylor, who could always win a hearty laugh by his quick and deadly repartee, and whose ability as a defender of the work put him in the front rank of the constellation of local ministers who have done so much to make the history of the Reorganized Church in England what it is. Brother Bradshaw, of London, the Manchester three, Joseph Dewsnup, James Baty, and Henry Greenwood; John Austin and John Hoole, of Sheffield, and many others, some of whom long since have passed to their reward, and some, alas, have fallen by the wayside. It was at this conference that we met many of the younger men, Joseph and Ernest Dewsnup, William Armstrong and Samuel F. Mather, William Greenwood, Howell, of London, and George and Joseph Arber, of Sheffield.

Our conference was held in an attic on Wellington Road, but the Sunday services were held in the New Wortley Cooperative Hall, called Gladstone Hall, and how proud we were to see the large congregations, and the sermon by Brother Griffiths in the morning, then at night a masterpiece by Brother Gillen based on John's second letter. The logic, sarcasm, eloquence, and fervor of that occasion is burned into memory, and always after that in my imagination James W. Gillen was the incarnation of Paul. We young men and women easily fraternized and foundations were laid for associations which still remain, though some have left us as we journeyed, and still others are in heaven, among whom is my youngest sister.

My next recollection of Brother Arber is when, on my first missionary trip into England from Scotland, I made my home with him and his new wife, while their new baby was still in that stage of helplessness which finds no other expression than in "muling and puling." At that time our brother was engaged in the immense works of Brown & Sons, engaged in the armor-plate manufacturing business. It was while following his occupation that the accident occurred which injured one of his eyes. Some one of the gang he worked with used a ladle which was not quite free from moisture to manipulate the molten metal, and when it touched this superheated mass, an explosion occurred and the fire splashed all around, a little of which lodged in his eye and burned the sight.

Then came my first journey to America, to attend the General Conference of 1902, and some one was required to care for the newly developed interests in Scotland, where I commenced my apprenticeship as a missionary, and only after six months of almost daily tracting and preaching on the streets at night did we win our first converts in Brother and Sister Alexander Porteous, with only our good and loyal brother, Robert Munro, of Hamilton, to hold my hat and cheer with his smile and warm sympathy a condition which was freezing and paralyzing in the extreme.

Then it was that Joseph Arber, in response to a call through Brother Griffiths, came up to Scotland in the midwinter of that year and became my comrade, and also for the time becoming a member in our little household. Just before I left for Liverpool, Sister Arber with their young baby came up, and so they remained in our home during part of the time I was away. Then came some help for us. Brethren George Thorburn and John Davis were sent to Great Britain that year, the former to Scotland and the latter to Wales.

How often have the three of us, Arber, Thorburn, and myself, tramped, or cycled along the beautiful highways of that romantic land? Friends were few, money was very scarce, and our labors seemed to be in vain. We shall not forget the generosity and kindness of men like Robert Munro and Brother Black, of Edinburgh; James Wilson, of Glasgow; and Brother and Sister Harry Pratt who, coming from Boone, Iowa, lived for some time in Keltly, Kinrosshire. The days and weeks spent by Brethren Arber and Thorburn and myself in tramping up and down the streets of Glasgow and other towns and climbing up the stairways of the tenements, four and five stories in height. Then at night time we would meet at Cathedral Square or in Springburn or on the green and preach to all sorts and conditions of men until branches grew up in Hamilton and Glasgow and fair prospects encouraged us at other points. These were days when we lived over the New Testament experiences. God kept his promises with us in marvelous ways, which stimulate us even now when hope dies down, and the human frailties and official perplexities obscure the Divine presence. The singular omission to place "the end" at the close of the "Acts of the Apostles" can only be appreciated by those who passed through such a baptism of fire.

It was under such conditions that our brother learned his missionary duties and became expert in the service which for fifteen years he rendered in the United States.

Then came the time when our little group broke up, Brother Thorburn and his brave wife, Allie, who at her own expense came all the way to Scotland and rendered valuable service to the work in those days in that land, returned to their home. In a few short months her intrepid soul went forth upon the last and greatest adventure. Brother and Sister Arber decided to go to America, and once again wife and I, with our two babies, were left alone as missionaries, and with that the romance of missionary work for us died down, for soon the exigencies of presiding over the whole British field made it expensive and inconvenient to remain there.

Since being in America, only once were Brother Arber and myself associated again in missionary work; that was when my mission supervision included the State of Kansas, and our brother was stationed at Blue Rapids.

It is not necessary for me to speak of his work in this land, for he made a record which has become an imperishable monument to his memory, and he has a place in the hearts of men and women who have enjoyed his ministry and appreciated his devotion to our common cause. Whatever talents or gifts Brother Arber possessed, he gave them ungrudgingly to the church, and the loss of such men in the very prime of life, when men are so badly needed, should fertilize the hearts of all young men who love God and humanity better than they love themselves, to respond in the same manner our brother did to Christ's call to service, without regard to loss or gain, personal comfort or discomfort, possessing little by way of equipment, yet possessing all in the knowledge that the power of Christ can take the base things of this world to confound the mighty and the wise, in the very poverty which in those days were autochthonous to the missionary experience, we found treasures of mercy which no monetary terms could appraise.

His work is finished and his reward is sure; but his wife and children are treading the valley of shadows, and the chill of a voiceless loneliness grips their hearts, and they call the familiar name, to which there is no response but the dull echoing through the corridors of memory and imagination, and out of the impalable darkness the shape of the well-beloved arises only to mock the touch of sensibilities while it whispers,

"Soul of my soul, we shall meet again."

One who was his friend,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Regret at Passing of Joseph Arber

The announcement in last HERALD of the sudden demise of our worthy brother and faithful minister, Joseph Arber, was a great shock to the writer. I formed the acquaintance of the brother in England many years ago when he was an officer in Sheffield Branch.

He was appointed his first mission when Brother John W. Rushton and I were in charge of the British Mission. I found Brother Arber to be a willing and faithful worker, and a congenial companion to be associated with in ministerial labor. He had a good faculty of making friends, both among the Saints and outsiders. I considered him to be one of our most successful proselyters, being a very able speaker in the pulpit and a first-class fireside preacher.

Our brother rendered acceptable service as a presiding officer and city missionary in Glasgow, Scotland, and was a missionary in the Sheffield and Leeds Districts. He was a success as a missionary, and brought many people into the church during his missionary experience.

It is sad indeed to have to part with such noble and faithful ministers as Brethren Arber, Peter Anderson, M. H. Bond, and J. W. Wight, and others who have gone to their reward within the last year. But the Lord of the harvest is raising up others to take their places in the ministerial rank, and we feel it to be our duty to be resigned to the will of him who doeth all things well for those who trust to his judgment.

We pray our heavenly Father to comfort the sad hearts of the loved ones who are left to work out their own destiny in life, and sincerely hope that the sons, especially, of those good and valiant men, will strive to walk in the footsteps of their worthy fathers, and make for themselves a grand record, so that they may occupy in the important positions that their fathers held in the priesthoods. It is possible for them to surpass the excellence attained by their fathers, providing that they will qualify themselves by being humble, prayerful, and studious.

The spirits of the departed ones are at rest in the beautiful paradise of God, and I feel confident that some of their sons and daughters will endeavor to imitate the example of their loved ones called to their happy home. In fact, we know of some young men who are already preparing themselves for lives of usefulness in the service of the Lord. God help them to be as true to their trust as were their beloved fathers to theirs.

Yours in gospel bonds,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Organized Effort at Holden Brings Success

[The following are extracts from a letter to the Presidency from Elder D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake.]

We wish to first thank you for your kind effort in securing Brother J. F. Curtis to conduct special services under the direction of our young people here at Holden. Our meetings have closed and the verdict is that it was the greatest revival service ever held in Holden. The young people are greatly built up in the faith, and zealotry to move forward in the upbuilding of Zion. Brother Harold C. Burgess worked with inspiration among the young people and the old as well. He was successful in inducing many to sing the songs of Zion who never before had made the effort to use their talent. The gospel was certainly sung into the hearts of the people.

Brother Curtis's work was such that no one could attend the services without being informed relative to our position, and our conception of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The series here were of twofold; to educate our people, especially the young people in the things which the Latter Day Saints stood for. Many of our young people were raised in the homes of Saints and were taught the gospel from their childhood days, but in clearness and attractive way Brother Curtis gave them a new view, or an enlargement rather, so that their souls were filled with joy, and they were made to rejoice that they were Latter Day Saints. I cannot say too much in appreciation of the splendid manner in which our young people organized and carried on these services. Their work of preparation was one thing which meant much for the success. They were ready for the song leader, also the preacher, when he came. Brother Burgess arrived on Saturday, and was conducted from the station to the church, where a body of young people met and went over some of the work to be handled during the meeting. Brother Curtis arrived on Sunday night, the 29th, and a splendid audience greeted him. He commented on the splendid spirit which was prevalent throughout the entire week.

The other purpose, to educate nonmembers, was realized in having forty to sixty outsiders present at each service. In conversation with Brother Burgess we remarked how necessary it was that there be a preparation and a proper one. Few people know how to put on a revival and get the best returns for their efforts and expense. I believe that it would be well if all revival services should have consideration beforehand and all necessary preparation.

Northeastern Missouri

The Northeastern Missouri conference convened at Bevier June 18 and 19. Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire was with us a short time and explained the present urgent needs of the church financially. F. T. Mussell, Arch E. McCord, and Vernie Ruch, of the missionary force, were present, also visiting Saints from Lagonda, Macon, Huntsville, Higbee, and Kirksville. Dinner and supper were served in the church basement by the ladies of the Women's Department.

All the district officers were sustained. V. D. Ruch was re-elected district superintendent of Sunday school, Lena Moss, of Macon, secretary; Carl Weeks, of Bevier, treasurer; and Ben S. Tanner, normal superintendent.

Brother J. A. Tanner, pastor of Kansas City Central, was with us during conference and occupied several times. This is Brother Tanner's old home. Charles, his son, and Sister Tanner and the grandchildren accompanied Brother Tanner.

We are pleased to have with us Brother V. D. Ruch and wife and baby. Brother Ruch and wife were students at Graceland the past year and Brother Ruch is one of this year's graduates in the religious education class. For the present he will labor in this district and when the church finances are in better condition expects to go on a foreign mission to one of the northern countries of Europe. Brother Vernie and wife are earnest, consecrated workers for the Master.

Sunday, July 3, the Macon Saints held the formal opening of their newly-acquired church building, which formerly belonged to the Catholic Church. The interior of the building has been remodeled and redecored and new windows put in to permit God's blessed sunlight to enter the building, and disperse the darkness and gloom that formerly prevailed. The interior of the building presents a very pleasing appearance; a large auditorium room with alcove and choir loft, two rooms suitable for classrooms, and a furnace room in the basement. The exterior is of yellow brick, bell tower, and situated on two lots, with a nice lawn and shade, good cistern, and in a fairly good neighborhood, which will no doubt be improved by Saints moving in to be near the church. The church is two blocks from the business section. The Saints of Macon deserve much credit in securing this splendid home, and it should be the means of advancing the work greatly in that city. Brother Mussell has also rendered much valuable service in making the enterprise a success.

Brother Ammon White was the speaker of the day, and will hold forth there all this week. J. L. WILLIAMS.

Minnesota Reunion

Minneapolis was hostess to the Minnesota Saints under the most favorable weather conditions possible to imagine. The Saints gathered for a reunion that began Saturday, June 18, and extended through the week, ending June 26.

The reunion committee, consisting of Brother Atkinson, chairman, and Brothers Malley and Charles Johnson, wisely selected a camp site fully twenty feet above the street level, near beautiful Glenwood Park, on the Glenwood Park car line. The grounds being so high and unobstructed, we were favored with every breeze that blew and with the shade of all the lovely trees. The camp site was one of the coolest spots in the city.

The attendance was fine, Duluth, Two Harbors, Pine River, and other up-state points being splendidly represented and several parties motored in from other near-by States.

Fourteen tents were pitched on the grounds, all housing visitors, except the assembly tent, the Women's Department, the Orioles, the Boy Scouts, and the dining tent. Each family of the Saints living within a reasonable distance from the grounds housed from one to six visitors.

Our combined kitchen and dining tent, the food served, the prices charged, and the kindly smiles of the ladies, who served through those trying hot days, were the occasion of a great deal of favorable comment. The kitchen was in charge of Sister Fred Green, assisted by volunteer helpers, and they certainly did well. Meals were served cafeteria style, a large blackboard announcing the menu. The meals ranged in price from twenty to thirty cents.

The writer was not able to be present at any of the day sessions but was informed that the meetings were nice indeed, the Spirit of God being present in marked degree at all times. The young people's prayer services were held at eight o'clock in the morning, followed by prayer service for adults at nine o'clock, at which time the spirit of prophecy was manifest. Afternoons were devoted to business sessions, preaching services, games and swimming, and the evenings to preaching, with the exception of three evenings. One was given over to a program by the district Religio and Sunday schools; two were held lectures on the Hawaiian Islands, illustrated by picture slides, by M. A. McConley. All were greatly appreciated by the audience, which crowded the large tent, occupying the aisles and overflowing to the outside. Our assembly tent was provided with a mosquito netting about the outer edge, to keep out the mosquitoes and other pests.

We were extremely fortunate in having with us as outside speakers, Patriarch F. A. Smith, Apostle M. A. McConley, Missionary Wildermuth, of Fargo, North Dakota, and Brother William Sparling, our local pastor. All of them preached very stirring sermons which were eagerly absorbed by attentive audiences, anxious to hear good speakers, of whom there is ever a dearth.

Two baptisms were reported. A splendid spirit of coordination and unity was manifested and we all feel that God was present with us and will bless the effort put forth, even as we are humble, faithful, and prayerful.

The expense of this reunion was about six hundred dollars; the dining room turned over $125, which we considered a splendid achievement indeed. I am told that the balance of the cost had been slightly oversubscribed.

Duluth, which turned out so splendidly to make our first reunion a success, has been chosen to hold the 1922 reunion. Duluth, we wish you every success. The Saints of Minneapolis should turn out en masse to help you accomplish this, which, with God's help, we know will be achieved. We feel great good will result from this our first Minneapolis reunion.

Council Bluffs Items

The Pottawattamie District held a picnic at the grove of Brother Arthur Darrington on the Fourth. A heavy rain in the forenoon prevented many from going, but those who went enjoyed a pleasant time.

We have now added to our priesthood force Brother Milo Burnett, who was at once appointed to do some missionary work in the city. Several changes were made at the last priesthood meeting, all of which we have hopes will result in good.

The business meeting of the branch was held Tuesday night, and at that time Fred Timm and F. C. Fullberg were ordained to the office of deacon, so that we now have four deacons. These brethren believe that order should be observed in the house of God, and we look for results that will be very satisfactory.

The last Sunday in June, the Bishop's agent, John A. Hansen, gave an excellent address at the Central Church on our present duty to meet the deficiency that exists in the funds of the church. To this appeal there was a response.

Cooperation at times leads to consolidation. It is now thought that the consolidation of the missions at Riverside and Belmont would be more economical, and still accomplish the work necessary.

The favor of God is abundantly manifest in the supply of rains, the continued warmth, and the continued healthy conditions that at present prevail in this city. This is cause for increased praise from the people of God.

A Colaborer With God

The Church News (Pittsburgh) tells of the good accomplished by one man who desired to be a coworker with God in "the work intrusted to all."

The article follows:

"He was fourteen years old and earning four dollars a week. He went to his pastor for advice.

"And that week, out of his four dollars, he put aside forty cents in a separate account and marked it for the Lord.

"That was fifty years ago. He has lived just an average life; his income has never been great; no one knows him as a great philanthropist. Yet he has expended on the Lord's account more than $60,000.

"He has educated twenty-five men. Some of them are ministers; some physicians; one is a college president.

"He has helped cripples to be self-supporting. He has identified himself with a multitude of good works."

Perhaps it would work a hardship on some to support a large family on nine tenths of their earnings. It should not be considered a hardship—God is always just—for everyone to pay the tithes of the increase, or "The amount which is left from one's income after deducting all necessary living expenses." This is God's way to provide for the spread of the gospel in word and in deed.

When the membership of the church as a whole are as willing to put God to the test, permitting him to work out his plans for man's redemption through them as did the subject of this article, there will be an abundance to redeem Zion, and "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."

We urge those who have not already sent in their tithing report to write to us for an Annual Tithing Report Blank and begin now as a laborer together with God in "the work intrusted to all."

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Confidence

Confidence is of greatest necessity, and should be deeply considered by all Saints. We assume a grave responsibility in essaying to follow Christ. We need confidence but only the right kind. Our lives should be of such a character as will form a just basis for confidence. If our life is not so, there is something wrong.

To be laborers together with God for the accomplishment of the great work intrusted to us, requires confidence in ourselves that we can do our part. We must also exercise confidence in our brothers and sisters, as well as in God. Brotherly love is the guiding star. If we do not love our brother whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen?

Brother Elbert A. Smith said: "No subject is of greater importance than that: How to live." The message Christ brought to the world was intended to teach man the art of right living. It contemplates a continuous, unceasing growth of character.

As church members the closer we can get together, the better acquainted we become with each other, the greater confidence we will have in each other.

Truth embraces truth, light cleaveth unto light. Those that love the Lord meet together often and speak one to another. The idle member hinders the work of God. This latter-day work is a life-and-death business in which we are engaged. No time to waste.

A. JENSEN.

DAVILLA, TEXAS, June 26, 1921.

Editors Herald: After reading my letter in the HERALD some time ago, some at least are wondering whether I had obtained a chance to get the gospel before my neighbors. Brother and Sister F. A. Rowe came on May 11. He obtained the Christian church and preached eighteen days, but only a few came, as it was the first time any of them had heard the Latter Day Saints. We visited with some of my neighbors in their homes and talked the gospel. On account of the prejudice here, Brother and Sister Rowe went to other parts, but have been back twice, for a day, and met some to whom they talked.

They came back on June 18 and administered the sacrament to me and my three little boys who were baptized when Brother Rowe was here before. They spoke in another neighborhood that day but at night came back and we attended the Christian church. The minister had met Brother Rowe at another time, so before he closed his discourse, he said we were fine folks but radically wrong and that he would come back in about two weeks to preach against "Unknown tongues and miracles." He went on and challenged anyone, man or woman, to prove them by the Bible.

People were surely happy to think some one was willing to call the Latter Day Saints down. Brother Rowe told the people that we would accept the challenge. The preacher came to the car to tell us good-by, and talked with Brother and Sister Rowe. People were standing around listening and cheering their man. They were worse stirred up than they ever were. People have been praying for an awakening, but they didn't want us to do it. There are more folks here talking and thinking about the Bible than ever before.

Brother and Sister Rowe were ready to leave Monday, but it rained the whole week, so, as the Christian man was to speak against some things we believed, he stayed to explain them. We were promised the church for over Saturday and Sunday, but the doors were closed against us. Everyone is wanting a debate.

I want an interest in the prayers of God's children, especially those who know me, that God in his kindness may lead me to show some honest soul the fullness of the gospel, that they may rejoice even as I rejoice, and that amid the trials of life, I may prove faithful. MERTIE B. KEITH.

WILEY, COLORADO, June 29, 1921.

Editors Herald: Things have been pretty well stirred up locally the past few weeks and we believe some progress has been made in eastern Colorado.

Brother J. D. Curtis, of Colorado Springs, came to Wiley on May 29 and held a series of Zion Builder services for one week, using the same subjects that were used in the Independence meetings. Elder George H. Wixom, of California, came the latter part of the week, and as the interest was so good, the meetings were continued the following week with Brother Wixom as speaker.

We hardly know how to express our appreciation of the efforts of these two brothers. We thought when we secured the promise of Brother Curtis to speak for the young people's services that we had a speaker who could not be excelled. But when the second week's services began, any doubts as to the continuation of the good interest were soon dispelled. We just enjoyed every service. Two of Brother Curtis's sermons deserve especial mention; the one on "Repentance" and the one on "Church organization." Surely no one could present the gospel any more plainly than he does.

But we never heard a better sermon than Brother Wixom's on "How will Christ save the worst man mentioned in the Bible? and how will Christ save the best moral man mentioned in the Bible?" Each has gifts peculiar to himself, and we enjoyed them both.

More nonmembers came out to these services than we have ever had before and most of them expressed themselves as enjoying the services. A feature of the services was good music and they were well advertised all over the town and country.

After leaving Wiley, the brothers went to Lamar, where they held services one week. Elder Wixom expressed a desire to return in the fall and hold a longer series of meetings there. We believe much good could be done there and look for some aggressive work to be done under the direction of our energetic district president.

Leaving here, Brother Wixom went to Wray and Brother Curtis is holding meetings at Plains, about thirty miles from Lamar. He goes soon to Utleyville, about one hundred miles from Lamar. Each of these places represents earlier missionary efforts, where a very few were baptized, but those few are calling for the gospel to be preached to them.

We feel that we derived much benefit from the efforts put forth of late. New interest has been aroused and a greater degree of unity exists. CORRESPONDENT.

BOOK REVIEWS

The Social Problem

By Roy S. Roberts

A review of a most excellent book by Charles A. Ellwood—used as a text by the Religio.

The world is in the greatest throes of social chaos it has ever known, unless a very similar condition existed during the decline of the Roman Empire. Some writers have gone so far as to say that the world is in the same condition to-day as at that time.

Whether we agree with that or not, we will have to acknowledge that we are in a very chaotic condition. Professor Ellwood, in his book, The Social Problem, says that "there is scarcely an institution from the family to the State which is not in the crucible of fiery criticism and in apparent disintegration." He also adds: "How permanent world peace is to issue from the present atmosphere of suspicion and hate which now enshrouds the classes, nations, and races of the world is difficult for even the wisest man to see," yet, "let no one suppose that the road which our civilization will ultimately take is predetermined. That will be a matter to be decided by the amount of social intelligence and character which the individuals of the present and of the immediate future can show." Who knows but what this is the travail out of which our Zion condition is to come?

"Those who see that our civilization is rooted in mental attitudes and conscious values must also see that the attitudes and values handed down to us by the nineteenth century have often proved unsound in practice; that the nineteenth century really understood little of the principles of human living together—of the social problem; and that it was for this reason that it failed to develop a stable civilization. The reconstruction forced on us by the war demands, then, first of all, that we reexamine our social theories; for, as has been well said, 'We need not simply a bigger house, but a better house to live in.'"

have learned to some degree how we are helped by the personal touch with those interested in like endeavor.

When Arkansas was organized into a district in May, 1920, there were four branches to come into the organization with a Sunday school at each branch. These are located at Fisher, Hot Springs, Hardy, and Bald Knob. Since the organization has been effected there have been four schools organized away from branches, Jonesboro, Needham, Wiener, and Clarendon, in the order named.

We appreciate very much the enthusiasm of these new schools, although they are working under severe disadvantages, no church building, few in number, inexperienced, but brave and courageous for their task. As these small organizations come before us we are reminded of the meeting, April 6, 1830, when the church was organized with only six members, yet stood the storm of the world and now numbers its members by the thousands. Truly no organization is too small under the favor of God.

We are very much indebted to our missionaries, J. T. Riley and E. A. Erwin, for their support to the Sunday school interests. They are encouraging this department wherever they go and organizing schools where practicable, which has been of much assistance to the district superintendent on account of visiting being an inconvenience to her. She is truly thankful to them for their aid and cooperation. We trust that all schools may be well represented at the district reunion, which convenes August 20 at Bald Knob.

The pageant, "A hundred years of Latter Day Saintism," will be presented by the Sunday School and Religio Departments during the reunion.

Bald Knob is hoping for the happy privilege of meeting all the Saints of the district and many from other districts.

Yours in the gospel, LAURA EMDE.

In another place he makes the following statement: "The reconstruction of our civilization, it has become evident, should not be a patchwork. It should grapple with the whole problem of civilization—the whole social problem of the present. It should aim at the harmonious adjustment of all elements and factors in our social life, so that we should no longer have an inharmonious and divided world."

The Historical Element

The first one of the factors is the historical element, and "until we know something of the history of the ideas and ideals which make our civilization what it is, it is fatuous to think that we have any scientific understanding of the social problem of the present."

"From the Hebrews, indeed, we get the things most intimately connected with our social ideals—our ethics and our religion. Nominally at least, western civilization accepts Hebrew ethics and religion still to-day as its standard, though there are not wanting signs which indicate that whole classes in our population are on the point of throwing off even nominal allegiance to this standard." This falling away indicates a decay because "they [the Jews] thought of the moral ideal, not as something subjective and individualistic, but as the harmony of an ideal social group, especially as the love and service of an enlarged family." If the nineteenth century had followed this plan we probably would not have the present condition; however, other factors entered in and kept them from following it.

"While we cannot regard the Greeks as having made the most important contribution to western civilization, we must acknowledge that Greek traditions have in many ways been very influential. In two lines of human activity—the artistic and philosophic—they were preeminent as the Hebrews in religion and ethics and have set the standards for the modern world. . . .

"We owe to the Greeks, then, our artistic and intellectual traditions in western civilization; and incidentally, through these, Greek influence has had not a little to do with our ethics and our social life generally. Another ancient people, however, gave us our traditions in government and law. That people was the Romans, who, on account of their extensive conquests, were compelled to develop the machinery of government and law to a point which the world had never before known. Essentially a military and warlike people, with their standards in ethics, religion, philosophy, and art but little developed above the level of barbarism, their genius for political and legal organization laid the foundation for all modern government and legal institutions. . . .

"It has been said that they (the Germans) contributed nothing to modern civilization except the men and women who developed it. However, this seems to the writer a mistake. One strong tradition among us is certainly rooted in the life of the ancient Teutonic tribesmen; and that is the tradition of individual liberty."

These constitute the main ancient historical elements. However, they have not always mixed as well as they might. "Hebrew ethics and religion have not always fitted in well with Greek philosophy and art, Roman government and law, and Teutonic individualism. Indeed, the conflict of ideas and ideals in modern life springs in no small measure from these inharmonious traditions which were originally united to form the main current of European civilization."

The peculiar features of our modern life have also exaggerated the conditions. "Upon the virgin soil of the New World the seed of modern individualism and industrialism and of social negativism have sprung up into gigantic growths." All of this has been increased by the millions of immigrants who came to our country.

"Finally, our industrial system has tended . . . to generate antagonism between economic classes. Class conflicts have been an increasingly disturbing factor in our social order."

"Such, in briefest outline, are the chief historical and traditional elements which enter into the social problem of the present. And let us always remember that the geographical, biological, and spiritual elements in problem act only in their historic settings."

The Physical and Biological Elements

Another factor that enters is that of the physical and biological elements. In speaking of these, Professor Ellwood says, "The importance of the physical elements in the social life is manifest. We cannot have an A-1 society with C-3 physical men or even exhausted natural resources. In the rebuilding of our civilization, then, such things as sound heredity, health, sanitation, physical training, proper food, the conservation and development of natural resources must be considered basic. They are not themselves civilization, but they are the foundation upon which it is built. And civilization cannot be higher or stabler than these basic elements permit. In social reconstruction we must not forget the foundations of the social life which these physical elements along with the economic elements about to be discussed constitute."

The Economic Element

Professor Ellwood does not agree with the cry, "Make economic conditions right and other things will take care of themselves," but he does say that "our economic system is so intimately wrapped up with the modern social problem, that there is no solution of that problem unless we provide a better industrial system than the present world has yet realized. It may be that what the world needs most of all is a new spirit, a new system of values, but it cannot get this new spirit in any adequate or complete way until it has a new industrial system. Our present system of industry, in other words, is such that it hampers and restricts the social and spiritual development of mankind. . . . Just as human slavery at a certain period came to be a stumblingblock to all further progress, so modern capitalism has come to be a similar stumblingblock."

His three chief indictments against the present system are: "It leads to the exploitation of labor, it results in an unjust distribution of wealth, and it fosters materialistic standards of happiness and living."

As a remedy he proposes the "assuming of fuller social responsibility for our industrial situation and fuller social control over all industrial processes." This he interprets to mean a combination of public and private ownership, so that the best of both systems might be used. These businesses, both large and small, must be run for the interest of the public.

The Spiritual Element

"What the world needs is a new spirit, that is, a new set of values, even more than a new economic system." This new set of values are as follows: "First of all, there is the idea of Humanity and its common life, as above that of any nation, race, or class. Closely related with it is the ideal of human brotherhood, as embracing all men, whatever their condition. Then the idea of the service of humanity, or social service, especially on the part of the stronger nations, races, classes, and individuals, toward the weaker. Then the coordinate ideas of self-development and self-sacrifice, not as ends in themselves, but for the sake of the service of humanity. Then such ideas as justice, peace, and good will, not simply between man and man, but between races, nations, and classes. Finally the whole list of social virtues which make possible the family, the state, and the whole harmonious living together of men in groups, which has made possible human civilization."

The Educational Element

"Science and education must become the chief means of controlling and reorganizing the society of the future," in fact, "the creation of social intelligence and character in the individual is the heart of the problem." The knowledge that will do this and that which is "most worth while to our human world is knowledge of human beings in their relationships—of human living together and the problems involved therein." This knowledge must be gotten by a study of the social studies, such as history, civics, domestic science, public hygiene, economics, politics, or government, sociology, ethics, anthropology, etc.

Alabama, at Pleasant Hill, August 13 to 21. Tents, 16 by 16, large enough for two families, $5 plus freight from Mobile and return. Order by August 1 to give committee ample time, through J. W. Baldwin, McKenzie, Alabama. Levi Gamet.

Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 13 to 28. We are expecting to have with us Apostles J. W. Rushton, Paul M. Hanson, G. T. Griffiths, Bishop B. R. McGuire, Sister Vida E. Smith, and others. Services held in the "House of the Lord." Prices of tents: 10 by 12, $3; 12 by 14, $4; for two weeks. Meals served cafeteria plan in our new building, E. A. Kaler, chef. Groceries furnished to campers at wholesale prices.

"So our hope of solving the social problem must be not through revolution, external machinery, or one-sided reforms, but through the education of the young, the transformation of the subjective environment, of ideals and values in society, and the development of a well-balanced program of social progress. The development of a fuller social intelligence and social character in the individual is the heart of the problem. Practically it becomes, therefore, largely the problem of social leadership and social education. Social machinery and even social 'mutations' may assist, but they are powerless without the inner, spiritual transformation of our social life, since that life consists in the mental attitudes which individuals maintain toward one another."

We anticipate a large gathering, so kindly send in your order for tents and rooms at once. J. D. Lewis, secretary, Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. 2.

Northeastern Kansas, at Netawaka, August 5 to 15. Beautiful shady park, playground, and ball park for recreational activities. Tents: 10 by 12, $4; cots, 50 cents. Abundance of free straw. Bring blankets and bed ticks. Meals in masonic dining hall adjoining park. Service will be cafeteria style and all meals will be at a minimum cost. Apostle J. F. Curtis, district missionaries, and probably a patriarch will be in attendance. Women's Department will be in charge of Mrs. J. A. Gardner, of Independence, and the district organizer. Bring textbooks and songbooks, prepared for a ten-day session of spiritual and intellectual activities. Order tents now from Frank G. Hedrick, 714 Parallel Street, Atchison, Kansas.

Two-Day Meetings

At Bay City, West Side, Michigan, July 16 and 17, corner of Catherine and Thomas Streets. Bring full baskets. No charges for meals. Come and do your part to make the meetings a success. Matthew Umphrey, Bentley, Michigan.

Pastoral Notice

Far West Stake

The next quarterly priesthood meeting of the stake will be held at Cameron, on Sunday, July 10, at 3 p. m., for the special benefit of brethren resident in the southeastern portion of the territory. All invited.

Local Appointments

It is the policy of those responsible for administration to make more local appointments for preaching, and to induce and secure close, systematic, and intelligent service from all appointed to such responsibilities. The law contemplates and there should be a universal extension of local ministerial service, with many elders and priests preaching the word, tracting, and visiting among the people in the various stakes and districts. Local appointments are as important and responsible as any other, in a general sense, and should be regarded as sacred, made by authority of the church, through its authorized representatives. We have some excellent local men, who want to work, and who are capable of doing good work.

Method of Filling Appointments

Men having appointments will be expected—

1. To fill such appointments personally, regularly, and faithfully, and not to send others except when strictly necessary; those sent to be competent for the service. Experience indicates that to secure consistent presentation of the word, discourses must be organized and presented in continuity of orderly succession. This is not done ordinarily where different speakers follow one another, unless a well-prepared course of service is acted upon; and not so well done even then. It is better that one mind study the local situation, counsel with those concerned, organize his entire effort, and work out his plan, by regular, systematic, studied effort to meet the general situation.

2. To organize the work of preaching, tracting, visiting, etc., methodically—by preparation to preach the gospel definitely and consecutively—in such form as to give the people a clear, comprehensive knowledge of the faith.

3. To visit and work among the people and by friendliness, distribution of literature, etc., push the work and build up local centers, including preaching appointments, organization of Sunday schools, etc.

4. To report work monthly on the regular report blank. Intelligent, kindly, live, spiritual men can do much to extend our cause among the people. If a man really believes in his message and is full of it, he can present it interestingly and convincingly and reap fruit from his labors. Some are doing it; we need and must secure "an enlargement of the number." It is remarkable, the degree that men are blessed, when they are energetic, trust in God, and move out and do their duties. Enoch was "slow of speech," so was Moses; even Demosthenes had an impediment of speech; but these "brethren" "went at it," "stuck to it," "worked by faith," and accomplished big things for God and man.

Definite Announcements

When stake appointments are more nearly completed we shall announce places, dates, and names, that the people may know who is who and what is what, and be looking for the service of "good men and true and attentive to their duty," and rally to their support. It should help every branch to maintain near-by local appointments. They brush up men wonderfully; they deepen the interest of the membership and promote unity.

Unity of System

As a result of experience in this and other fields, and consultation with numbers of general officers, and with due respect to the methods of the past, it becomes more and more apparent that a more specific, definite, well-considered system for developing and getting results from the local ministers should be provided, if the necessary percentage of those chosen to local offices are to function intelligently, steadily, satisfactorily, as the service demands. The church has found it necessary to provide a course or courses of instruction for missionary men and women; for department teachers, recreational leaders, musicians, nurses. Special training is found necessary for those mentioned; why not for all grades of ministers? Are they not designed to be among the most important assets of the church? Some years ago the writer took the liberty of presenting to our progressive president—not then the president—the need of more specific preparation of men and others for ministerial and general service. The revelations of God provide therefor; and whenever the people of God have been brought into being, the divine counsel has been given that schools and other means of special training for ministry and laity be provided.

For years the church has been trying to train men for local service but in a very general, irregular, haphazard manner. To us it seems apparent that a more clearly defined system for local officers—elders, priests, teachers, and deacons—must be provided; a course that will provide a definite amount of preparation and a specific amount of doing—for we learn by studying and doing.

Too Large a Percentage Not Functioning

The church has many efficient local officers, whose service is very valuable. However, it has too large a percentage who for some reason or cause have been ordained and remain inactive and undeveloped. We fear that the tendency to consider the service of general appointees all-sufficient with very limited realization of the great value and importance of local men is a growing tendency.

Increasing Importance of Local Service

It becomes apparent that with the gathering of the people into local groups, the importance of the local ministry must be apprehended; that if the people are to be shepherded, educated, cared for in general, and Zion to become a place of spiritual and moral power, local men must very largely do the work of supervising and educating the flock while the missionary force push out into their fields. We believe that in a general sense every man should develop "initiative" and "find" himself and his work and "go to it." However, we say all this with the hope of "starting something," and that something more comprehensive and effectual than the past system or lack of system has produced. General study of the problem, with a view to the ultimate extinction of individual inactivity, is a thing to be more than desired; it is a consummation devoutly to be wished and patiently to be worked out.

The Reunion

Mr. Editor, we may have already exceeded both speed and space limit, but there is more to follow. "May I say" that the reunion of the stake will be held at Stewartville, August 19 to 28; that a progressive program has been provided; that all directly concerned are asked to pray and work for the success of this gathering; and not last and not least, to get there and have tents up ready for the opening service, Friday, August 19, at 9 a. m. Reunions are spiritual or not spiritual, according to the condition of the people. A rushed, hurly-burly gathering, with the main thought a general, easy, good time, gets people nowhere. Recently a number of people worked diligently to provide a musical institute for the stake. The Spirit of the Lord signally blessed the gathering, clearly evincing commendation of the application of those concerned with the occasion. "Go thou and do likewise" is a good slogan for the reunion. Let us come on time, as wise virgins, with lamps trimmed and burning, prepared to meet the Lord, who will meet those who so come.

In General

We are "carrying on" in the stake, trying to "go forward." The sun is hot in this season of the year, in old Missouri; but men and women may work hard and also see to it that some time is given regularly to thought, and reading, and other things that, unlike "the passing show," do not perish with the using.

Life is what we make it, not necessarily what it is. To systematize work and get it done promptly and efficiently, to give a portion of each day to "what is worth while," and thus to secure steady, progressive development of mind and soul, is essential if people are to reach a definite goal. To organize one's time, to intelligently outline a well-organized method of living, to "stick to it," and to reorganize our habits that they be our servants and not our masters—this is essential to any successful program of living. Latter Day Saints are supposed to be "called and chosen and faithful" to a great and marvelous work. The "intellectual life"—of "plain living and high thinking"—putting more into head and heart and less upon bodily adornment and indefinite meandering—all this tends towards retention of mental power and clearness until "the silver cord be loosed or the golden bowl be broken," and life come to a normal ending. An increasing number of our people are applying themselves to personal study, etc.

You know, Mr. Editor, and I know that you know, that the path of the just is as the shining light; that there are bright spots all along the way, to those who see with calm, clear eyes and who believe in the love and orderly methods of God and in the intelligent use of their own powers. To paraphrase Tennyson:

"For what are men and women better than sheep or goats,
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer and also work their heads,
Both for themselves and those who call them friends?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by golden chains about the feet of God."

Pastoral Notice

To the Saints of the Northern California District: As the president of your district, I am once more sending out our annual letter of greeting. While we have urged the Saints in the past and tried to point out the necessity of attending these reunions, and the lasting good that may be derived therefrom, we are admonished by the Spirit at this time to emphasize all that we have said in the past, and to specially urge your attendance at this coming reunion.

Those of you that have read the sermons and articles of Brother Elbert A. Smith, in the church publications, and have been thrilled by the spirit in which they were written, have no doubt longed for the opportunity of sitting under the sound of his voice and hearing the message with your own ears. Dear Saints, this opportunity is to come to you. Will you embrace it? It may never come to you again.

If the dark clouds have hovered over you, and Satan has sorely tempted you, and you feel discouraged and all down and out, come to the camp of the Saints at Irvington. We are going to have a grand rally under the banner of Immanuel, and we are not going to furl our banner till we have won the victory. Come, brother; come, sister. We need your help. Satan is marshalling his mighty host, using all the powers at his command to discourage the Saints and hinder this work of God. If we fall before the victory is won, let us fall with the armor on.

We realize that under the present conditions that are in the world it will seem almost impossible for some to come, but let us do our best, even if we do have to make a seeming sacrifice.

C. W. HAWKINS, President.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. Della Hague Watson, of Skiatook, Oklahoma, requests the prayers of the Saints for her sister, who is seriously afflicted.

Sister Nettie Meyer, of O'Malley, Saskatchewan, desires the prayers of the Saints for her recovery from various diseases and afflictions. She has five children. She suggests August 1 especially as a day for united prayers.

Autumn Leaves for July

A most wholesome Latter Day Saint serial begins in the July number of Autumn Leaves, written by Grace Baughman Keairnes, whose work has hitherto appeared in both Autumn Leaves and Stepping Stones. It concerns the philosophy and practice of our Zionie ideals, along with pleasing romance and personal incentive.

Another pleasing feature is the first of a series of articles by men who have known intimately the late Joseph Smith. They write of their impressions and experiences from various phases, and give us some delightful pen pictures of this wonderful man, that his memory may flourish in our hearts.

A travel sketch by Apostle T. W. Williams appears, this issue carrying the first of two installments on "The home of the Dutch," a strange land of dikes, canals, and windmills. The church is fortunate that its apostolic representative in the recent European survey was also a journalist, for he sees many things with the trained eyes of a writer, and is able to help us see them as he did.

President F. M. Smith, who is skillful with the camera, contributes a photo of our Sunday school in Jerusalem and an illustrated article entitled "The Giants' Ring," being peculiar archaeological remains near Belfast, Ireland, visited by him in company with Brother Williams.

To see Kirtland Temple is not the privilege of all of us, but to read of the experiences of others in viewing the wonderful structure and to see pictures of the places they see, is our occasional privilege, and this month Sister Ruth M. Wood is our benefactor in an article, "A trip to Kirtland."

The "Burden bearers" series continues, A. W. Smith giving another article on Mexico and the peculiar methods of transportation in that land.

"Out of the night," is a two-part serial concluded in this number, a missionary and a legless man being leading characters in a moving western story by Elmer K. Patterson.

"Dear old father" is a letter written to his father by a missionary who wishes he might have appreciated the paternal care earlier in life, but not having done so, is seeking to express his deeper emotions now.

A pretty little essay is, "In the newness of life," by Ruby R. Speer.

"Opposing the powers that be," by Leon Burdick, is a missionary experience in which a young missionary whose zeal may have been greater than his wisdom, said a few things and got into trouble. But the ending was happy and he had learned something that we can also profit by.

There are other articles, poems, and departmental offerings that make the number of special interest to every progressive Saint.

Sanitarium Needs

In our nursery we need: Baby gowns of outing flannel, bands, squares, old cloths to be used for rags.
In bedding we need: Pillow slips, size 20 by 32 inches, finished; bed spreads, 76 by 90 inches; dresser scarfs, 18 by 40 inches; tray cloths, 11 by 14 inches; stand covers 24 by 24 inches. (Prefer these articles made of Indian Head muslin.)

Two kitchen refrigerators.

J. W. CHAPMAN, Superintendent.

Notice to Musicians

This is to notify the musicians and singers who expect to attend the Kirtland reunion that we are counting on you to help make the reunion a big success, musically. We want to make this the best reunion in the history of the Kirtland association, so come prepared to do your part.

The choir work this year will be in charge of Brother Will Householder, Willoughby, Ohio, Route 1, whose ability in this line assures something worth while. The material for the choir work will be selected from Winnowed Anthems, Numbers 5 and 6, Hope Publishing Company, Chicago, and the singers are urged to secure a copy and get acquainted with its contents before reunion.

The orchestra work will be under the direction of Brother Charles Romig, who needs no introduction to Kirtland reunion goers. All who can help with the orchestra are requested to write him at 514 North High Street, Barberton, Ohio, for instructions.

Brother Hoxie's book, Songs of the Legion, will be used for the congregational singing; if you have any, bring them along.

Musicians, be sure to bring your instruments! Singers, don't forget your music. Above all things, let each one bring the spirit of consecration and we will make the sacred old temple fairly swell with inspiring music and song!

JOHN F. MARTIN, Music Committee.

Fill the Gap!

The World Is Short Educated Men and Women

There is a great shortage in all lines of production to-day, due to a temporary shortage of real productive labor. This shortage is only temporary, however, for the ten or twelve million workmen destroyed by the war were only a small percentage of the world's billion workers. And education has made labor ten times as productive as it was. It used to take two hours of a man's time to raise a bushel of wheat. Now it takes less than fifteen minutes. Do not become alarmed. The world shortage of material goods will be quickly supplied.

The most alarming shortage that the world faces is in a commodity which cannot be quickly replaced. Education is the scarcest and at the same time the most indispensable commodity in the world to-day.

According to the World Almanac, for the three years, 1918, 1919, and 1920, there is a shortage of 97,802 college years of education, due to the war, the draft, and the diversion of young men from college to the industries. These figures apply only to America. In Europe the condition is worse. It is estimated that the supply of college graduates has been decreased by over 90 per cent there. Taking the world as a whole, this means that the world shortage of educated leaders is at least 60 per cent of the normal supply.

In the face of this world shortage and a need so overwhelming that it is tragic, the American college trained young man for the next decade will hold in his hand that commodity that the world wants most and has least of; from the altruistic or selfish standpoint, as you will, he will possess, in the highest degree, the power of conferring benefit and of demanding his own reward.

Will you qualify?

Come to your own church college.

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—With Mission Branch, June 18, 19. District President J. L. Cooper, associated with W. L. Christy and J. J. Oliver, chosen to preside. On Friday evening prior to the convening of conference, a very well rendered program was supplied by the members of the Mission Branch and their friends. Business sessions were marked for their evidence of the spirit of unity; the selection of the officers resulting in unanimously reinstating each officer for the ensuing year. At the recommendation of First Chicago Branch and also one from Deselm Branch, John Peterson and William Bell were ordained elders, having previously occupied as priests. Just after the opening of the prayer service on Sunday morning, the confirmation of ten precious souls who had the day before been led into the waters of baptism by O. T. Hayer, took place, and the Spirit of God, the promised Comforter, was manifest to a marked degree. R. N. Burwell, our esteemed Bishop's agent, was present for a short time on Sunday, and at the morning service gave us a rousing sermon on the conditions of the finances of the church at the present time and our part in the great program. His report shows as follows: On hand last report, $819.58; received to May 31, 1921, $8,731.35; total $9,550.95; paid out, $9,252.65; leaving a balance on hand of $298.28. Other speakers were Ward L. Christy, Doctor C. D. Carter, and J. L. Cooper. We believe all attending felt benefited and strengthened in the work. Next conference with Plano Saints, time to be set by presidency. O. A. McDowell, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

HAYER.—Bertha Ann, eldest daughter of Christopher and Ann Danfelson, was born in LaSalle County, Illinois, August 3, 1861. Died at Lamoni, Iowa, June 27, 1921. Baptized September 21, 1879. Married Lorenzo Hayer, March 17, 1881. To this union were born 4 daughters, who with their father and their families are left to mourn. The daughters are: Mrs. J. F. Garver, Mrs. J. E. Kelley, Mrs. V. C. Bailey, and Mrs. R. L. Brackenbury, all of Lamoni. Funeral from Saints' church, in charge of G. W. Blair; sermon by D. T. Williams.

CAIRNS.—Robert M. was born in Scotland, November 8, 1833. Came to United States when six months old, moved to California Township at the age of twenty. United in marriage to Emma Rose Lindsley, April 1, 1858. To this union were born 4 children. During his years of activity, he held many offices of trust in society, district, and township. Baptized in 1897 by S. W. L. Scott. Lived an honorable and faithful member. He is survived by his daughter, Libbie, 6 grandchildren, 8 great-grandchildren, and many friends. Funeral sermon by S. W. L. Scott at residence of deceased's daughter.

Our Father

When one of the sons of any of the leading ministers of the church signifies his willingness to take up a portion of the burden and to assist in carrying on the work in which his father has been so long engaged, there is a feeling of general rejoicing.

It is true that the children are called to assist and take up the work of their father in the work of the church, and this is true not only to leading ministers, but should be true to all members of the church. Naturally those who can occupy in any particular position are limited, but it is evident that the sons, other things being equal, should possess a better initial understanding of what the work means than would a stranger. On the other hand, the church is entitled to and should have the ablest workmen to be found within the fold.

"I must be about my Father's business." It is a wonderful thought. "My Father works and I also work." There is one father to us all, even our heavenly Father, and we are called to be workers together with him.

"Safe in the arms of Jesus," is an appealing song, and conveys a beautiful image, but it brings to mind a figure of infancy that must be carried. In the time of our spiritual infancy it is good. Also in the time of great sickness and of death or severe trial it is good to feel that the eternal arms will bear us up, "safe on his gentle breast." But if we are to be workers together with Him, we must while health and strength holds, have a broader ideal, and must strive to put on more nearly the stature of a man in Christ Jesus.

Another figure is, "How safe I am with my hand in his." It brings to mind the toddling child who can go anywhere, though slowly, if only he has a hand or finger on which to hold. But if that is withdrawn, his faith is not sufficiently strong and he falls. Unfortunately we have some such sixty-year-old babies, though some are younger.

Another figure which is very popular is represented in the song, "Where he leads me I will follow," "I will go with him all the way," or "If Jesus goes with me I'll go anywhere."

But even this falls short of the ideal of "my Father works and I also work." For that unto which we are called is a true workmanship.

"There was a man sent of God." "I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God." "I will go where you want me to go." Can we be depended upon to go and do the work whereunto we are sent?

In infancy, it is a wonderful thing to be carried. In childhood, it is a delight to go out with father or mother and toddle along, perhaps holding to a hand. In later childhood, it is great to go out on a vacation or on a trip with father and mother, even if our steps, at first, are short.

But there comes a greater time, when father introduces us to his own business, tells us what he is trying to do and what he has accomplished. Shows us his plans for the future, asks our assistance, even though in some little thing. Then, "I must be about my father's business." The joy of that experience exceeds all of these earlier experiences.

Even so the experience of baptism, when we join the church, and all earlier experiences are swallowed up. When our heavenly Father takes us and shows us his work, his plans in this world, at least, and we are called upon to work with him and are given, therefore, a divine vision, with the understanding of what the work means. Such an experience is wonderful beyond all that has gone before, and we realize anew at once, our own weakness and incompetence, and that as our Father works so also must we work, for this is the work of our Father in heaven.

A Woman Healed

Testimony by an opponent that there was actual healing in the church; also explains apostasy of Ezra Booth.

In the Origin and Early History of Disciples of Christ, by Walter W. Jennings, speaking of Symonds Ryder, he says:

"His relations with the Mormons were very interesting. Ezra Booth, of Mantua, a Methodist minister of more than ordinary culture, with his wife, a Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and other citizens visited Smith at his home in Kirtland, in 1831. During the interview, conversation turned to the subject of supernatural gifts such as were conferred in apostolic days. Some one remarked: 'Here is Mrs. Johnson with a lame arm; has God given any power to men now on earth to cure her?' A few minutes later, when the conversation had changed in another direction, Smith rose, walked across the room, took Mrs. Johnson by the hand and said in the most solemn and impressive manner, 'Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole,' and at once left the room. Hayden continued the account thus:

"The company were awe-stricken at the infinite presumption of the man and the calm assurance with which he spoke. The sudden mental and moral shock—I know not how better to explain the well-attested fact—electrified the rheumatic arm—Mrs. Johnson at once lifted it up with ease, and on her return home the next day she was able to do her washing without difficulty or pain."

Comment on the above is hardly necessary. It is exactly the attitude that Pharisees took in the days of Jesus. The fact is that the woman was healed. Mr. Hayden evidently prefers the idea of shock, instead of accepting the statement of the New Testament concerning the healing of the sick. He prefers to consider it physical shock to giving the credit to God.

Continuing, Mr. Jennings quoted from a letter from Ryder to Hayden concerning the conversations which took place in Hiram, Ohio. Mr. Ryder refers to the fact that Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were tarred and feathered, but he does not relate that he was the leader of the mob, and that they dragged Sidney Rigdon in a way that his head continually bumped on the frozen ground. Such brutality is not argument.

Concerning Ezra Booth, who left the church at about the same time as Ryder, Joseph Smith says, in his diary:

"About this time Ezra Booth came out as an apostate. He came into the church upon seeing a person healed of an infirmity of many years standing. He had been a Methodist priest for some time previous to his embracing the fullness of the gospel as developed in the Book of Mormon, and upon his admission into the church he was ordained an elder, as will be seen by the foregoing revelations. He went up to Missouri as a companion of Elder Morley, but when he actually learned that faith, humility, patience, and tribulation, were before blessing; and that God brought low before he exalted; that instead of 'the Savior's granting him power to smite men, and make them believe' (as he said he wanted God to do him), he found he must become all things to all men that he might peradventure save some, and that too by all diligence, by perils by sea and land; as was the case in the days of Jesus, which appears in the sixth chapter of Saint John's gospel, he said: 'Verily, verily I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled.' So it was with Booth, and when he was disappointed with his own evil heart, he turned away."

Whatever may be said with regard to the Saints in this incident, it is certain that their opponents were wrong, and actuated by a wrong and mob spirit, and by a spirit of personal ambition.

Charles Derry Is at Rest

We have just received word, on the 16th of July, of the passing of Elder Charles Derry. The funeral was held from the home on Monday, the 18th. Elder Derry was in his ninety-fifth year, as he was born in the County of Stafford, England, July 25, 1826. His father died before he was born. His mother dedicated him, when three weeks old, to the service of the Lord. When seventeen years of age he joined the Free Will Baptists, but on October 3, 1847, was baptized by an elder from Utah, and was ordained an elder three months later and sent into the mission field in England without purse or scrip. In 1854 he left for Utah, but he left Utah in 1859 as from his observation of polygamy he was "satisfied that it had its origin in lust."

He settled with his wife and children in eastern Nebraska. The last of February, 1861, having heard of the Reorganization, he walked seventy-five miles through the snow, which was eighteen inches deep on the level, to interview W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs, and was baptized the 3d of March, and ordained an elder. He thereupon entered the ministry of the church, was ordained a seventy August 31, 1861, and at the semiannual conference, October, 1861, was appointed on a mission to England with J. W. Briggs, so he left home on December 6, 1862, without purse or scrip, as he always traveled, leaving his family in the hands of the Lord and of certain of his neighbors, who agreed to see that they were cared for, and did so, as there were no family allowances in those days.

He arrived in Liverpool, February 4, 1863, and was followed by J. W. Briggs and Jeremiah Jeremiah the 15th of May. He labored in various parts of Great Britain until June, 1864, when he returned home, reaching there the 6th of September.

He moved with his family to Nauvoo, where President Joseph Smith called upon him shortly before the April Conference of 1865, asking him if he was going to conference. He replied that he had no means. "If I will pay your expenses will you go?" "Certainly." So Brother Joseph gave him ten dollars.

At this conference he and Josiah Ells were nominated by a committee of three for the Quorum of Twelve, and he was ordained April 8. He continued in that quorum until the conference of 1870, at which time he resigned, not on the ground of lessened faith or lack of support for the church or its ministry, but because he had served when the church had but few members; but he felt that now there were those more worthy, and younger men should be called to take his place. He said he considered his capacity was that of an elder, and asked to be permitted to continue and labor in that capacity. After a long discussion the conference released him, but appointed him to the Quorum of High Priests, of which quorum he was made the president on the death of Isaac Sheen, in 1874. He was ordained to that office October 23, 1874, and continued until 1901, when he again resigned, as he believed that younger men should take up that work.

As a missionary he has labored in Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Illinois, Missouri, Utah, and Idaho in this country, and in England and Wales. He was regularly appointed by the General Conference until 1906, when he was in his eightieth year. But he continued to labor while life lasted, as his strength would permit.

He was called to the High Council by the conference of 1890 and continued in that capacity until October, 1902, when he resigned, having been called to be an evangelical minister and ordained June 8, 1902. He was then past his seventy-first birthday.

His life closely approaches the human ideal of that of a Christian. He was humble, did not esteem himself above others. He was willing to labor wherever he could and wherever the church wished. Yet whenever he felt that the time had come when another should take his place, or when he felt the work could be better done by another, he gladly gave way. He not only felt no jealousy that younger men were taking his place, but was anxious to see them do so, his great ideal being the good of the church.

Surely such a follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene is at rest in the paradise of God, and rejoices with the many loved ones who have passed on before. S. A. BURGESS.

The Spirit of Consecration and Sacrifice

There is much commendable sacrifice now made for the church and there will be more.

Much has been said and much more should be said concerning the spirit of consecration and devotion manifested by our general ministry as a body. There have been some men, a few, who have set their own good first, but they have been few.

That same spirit of devotion has been manifested by the men and women in the various institutions of the church and in the general offices. There have again been exceptions of those who have set their own selfish ends first. But, on the other hand, there are many whose great desire has been and is, to be of service to the church and kingdom of God.

Occasionally we hear criticisms of some one who draws more than sufficient for bare living; some one who is working for the church in a business or commercial capacity. We know of more than one who has been offered $6,000 or $7,500 a year, yet has chosen to work for the church in some industry for $3,000. We know of men who have stated that they can earn $5,000 a year, yet have taken $2,000 and the extra rebuffs and criticism that comes with this work. Men who do that are showing a spirit of sacrifice and a desire to be of real service to the church. They have at least denied themselves a substantial sum.

We know of other men who have left business employment which would pay them as much or more than those set forth above, men who have charged as high as $50 a day for their time, yet who come and work for the church in these recent years of high prices for $100 or a little over per month; so little over that it has been a continual problem to meet necessities.

It is an interesting problem and is more so because these men are not entirely free, but have taken upon them the obligation of a family and keenly realize that he who does not provide for his own family is worse than an infidel, according to the Apostle Paul. But we would suggest again, as we have before, that those who would call upon the missionaries' families for a greater sacrifice should first themselves set the example. We are all called to the work of God. If we are convinced that anyone should live on a certain plan in order to assist this work, that conviction is one for our own selves.

Surely in this day of preparation there should be a spirit of consecration and sacrifice, with due regard to family needs. The family that lives carefully assists in the work as does the man who goes out to preach the gospel, or who labors in the institutions of the church.

Regard must also be had to the size of the church and the necessary expenditure for effective work.

While there have been many men who have come to us from the world whose market value has been thereby determined, we have also many who have given their best services to the church, men who have no estimated worth, but if they are not capable of being worth $10,000 or over, are failures. The fact that a man has given his best efforts to the church should not discredit him, but the fundamental spirit that should actuate us, one and all, children and adult, is to follow in the footsteps of the Master.

How much was Jesus worth? We do not know certainly, in dollars and cents, but we do know that the cattle on a thousand hills were his, and we do know that he was offered a good price, but it was refused, nor did he return to the church and ask that he be given a fair percentage of that offer. He did not sacrifice one half, or three fourths, or nine tenths, for he had not where to lay his head. Nor did he in the end ask for a recompense for his service, but only for the glory that he had with the Father before the world was. He asked only for that which was already his, and then he asked that those who followed him might share in that which was already his.

He came for what he could give, not what he could get. He sought not his own gain, but the profit and blessing of the whole world.

At the Stone Church Religio July 15, Elder J. W. A. Bailey addressed several combined classes on the tribes of Israel and the descent of the priesthood. He argued that Great Britain and United States belong to Ephraim.

The program of the whole society then consisted of several young people who were called upon to give a reason for the hope that is within them. First, Miss Mary Curtis, the daughter of Apostle J. F. Curtis, spoke; then Brother Francis Holm, son of S. S. Holm, of the missionary force; then Vernon Reese, the grandson of Elder A. W. Reese and Bishop William Anderson, both of whom were active in church work in Saint Louis and Decatur County, Iowa. Finally C. B. Hartshorn, from Chicago, who is now in charge of the industrial department in the office of the Presiding Bishop.

This is an excellent idea for others to consider.

Joseph Smith and the Presidency

An extract from the Memoirs of W. W. Blair offers an explanation.

The matter of Joseph Smith being proposed as candidate for President of the United States in 1844 has been a subject of much criticism. It is clear that any citizen of the United States has a legal right to appear as a candidate for the Presidency.

In addition to this, the church was confronted with a situation not now clearly understood. They had been expelled from Missouri, and they had found the state government of Missouri prejudiced against them and unwilling to give them justice. When they appealed to the United States Government, they were informed that the Federal Government had no jurisdiction over such matters in the State; their only recourse was to the government of the State. Some doubtless felt that with a more friendly administration, a different answer would and could be secured. They petitioned at the feet of the governor, and at the feet of the President, and approached Henry Clay and various other candidates. Only when they received an equivocal answer, or one which they considered unsatisfactory, was the name of Joseph Smith proposed.

But we note in the Memoirs of W. W. Blair, page 32, he states that Emma Smith gave an additional reason:

"During the evening Sister Emma related many incidents in respect to church affairs which were both interesting and instructive. She said Joseph, her former husband, very reluctantly consented to allow his name placed in nomination for the Presidency of the United States, a matter urged upon him by two or more consecutive councils in Nauvoo, prominent in which were Brigham Young and some others of the Twelve. She stated that in those times his attention was so taken up with persistent appeals from ambitious, aspiring men, that good men like Father Marks did not have much chance to be heard by him. Joseph at first pronounced the scheme unwise and uncalled for. In this Sister Emma concurred, but their judgment was overruled and Joseph yielded on the claims set forth by his blind political advisers, that in permitting his name to go prominently before the Nation and the world in a political way, it would give popularity and impetus to the work of the church.

"This statement is due the memory of both Joseph and Emma Smith, and is essential to a correct understanding of the causes that led Joseph into such unfavorable notice politically and which eventuated largely in causing his assassination."

It is easy to see how readily such an argument could make its appeal. It has been objected that because of his great responsibility as president of the church he should not have entered the political arena. Many have considered that he made a mistake in doing so. But that he would thereby forward the cause of the church naturally would make its appeal.

Thus John C. Bennett approached him with regard to Freemasonry, and urged that if he became a member, it would be the end of the persecution from Missouri; that he would thereby gain the respect of the leading citizens of Illinois, and of men throughout the Nation, and thereby he would forward the cause of the church and protect them from persecution. It is not surprising that so humanitarian an appeal should have had its influence upon any man. And while he was always a good man, and prophet of the Lord when acting under the inspiration of the Spirit, unless God specifically directed, it is not surprising that he should have been at times influenced as other men would have been.

But most of his efforts, though well meant, proved a failure for the advancement of the church. Truly it appears that the work of God can only be advanced by the methods approved of him. We are told we should contend against no church save the church of the Devil. We are told that we shall go in and out and find pasture. We can well study concerning nations and kingdoms, things past, things present, and things to come, things at home and abroad. But we can hardly expect that any methods we may use that are not approved of God will help to forward the work, no matter how good the intention may be.

Popular Education

We are still far short of where we should be in educational attainment.

The National Educational Association has been meeting in Des Moines, July 4 to 9. Among other statistics appears the statement that only one in four of high school age in Iowa enter high school, and not to exceed one out of eighteen enter college. In the country as a whole, the percentage appears to be even lower, and is stated as being only one out of eight or nine are in high school, and not more than one in twenty-four of college age are in college.

This is only a loose estimate, but it emphasizes the fact how far short we are of universal popular education in this country, yet to-day we are limiting attendance, and most of our colleges and high schools are turning young people away. Most of the men in Congress are college men.

The practical missions of the world are accomplished to-day by college men. In the recent war it was found that college men were more alert, both mentally and physically.

As the Des Moines Register points out, the difference between 150,000 and 175,000 soldiers in our standing army represents more money than the salaries of all the college professors in the two hundred and forty-nine colleges, surveyed by the National Bureau of Education. It is unfortunate that educators themselves approach the problem in an apologetic way.

Do we need a big navy at so great a sacrifice of educational facilities?

Midsummer Young People's Meetings

The young people of Walnut Park church in Independence are trying out a series of special meetings adapted to midsummer conditions. From July 24 to 29 they will hold a series of special services on the lawn at the Walnut Park church, with Elder T. W. Curtis as speaker, Orlando Nace in charge of instrumental music, and Mrs. J. C. Schwab in charge of the song service.

The young people of the community are well organized, with J. C. Schwab as leader, and have the cooperation of the local church officials. They are sending out invitations to all the young people of Independence and surrounding territory to attend and help make the services a success.

We are glad to believe there are no seasonal limitations to the idea of holding these special meetings in the interests of the young people of the church and those interested in our beliefs.

Miss Sarah E. Rodgers, for several years head nurse at the Independence Sanitarium, was married to Mr. John Chapman, present business manager of the Sanitarium, on the evening of July 15, President Elbert A. Smith officiating.

The effect of the recent riots has not yet been fully determined, but we hope by recent action of the British Government the difficulties will soon be brought to a close.

Visitors Welcome

The Herald Publishing House is now in running order, so that visitors to the publishing plant are welcome, and a suitable guide will be provided.

We appreciate that the church membership is interested in seeing how well we are established and how their work is being carried on. It is important, however, that the workers should not be unnecessarily interrupted, because if one or two are hindered, it hinders the whole establishment, for one man's work depends upon another. Personal visits, therefore, should be made outside of office hours. Visitors to see the plant in running order are always welcome.

Subjects Being Discussed

The British Commonwealth

From the English and Colonial papers and from other sources, we notice a great change has taken place in the British Empire since 1914. Canada, Australia, and South Africa, as well as other dominions, are allowed almost complete independence, and have the right to engage or not to engage in any foreign policy, and may repudiate an imperial policy dictated in London at any time. Both in England and in some of the colonies the question is being discussed whether the day will come when the people will find it necessary to ask themselves whether they desire to keep their place in the British national partnership, or not.

Some may see in this a dissolution of the British Empire. It is more likely that it will mean a free basis for cooperation, allowing to each dominion the largest possible liberty. Canada is asserting her right to be represented at Washington, at least, by her own minister, and certain Canadian thinkers are frankly saying that Canada's first community of interest as a nation is with the United States, and second, with other British dominions, and third, with the imperial organization. While this independence of thought does not imply the dissolution of the British Commonwealth, it is of interest in connection with the international relation, and with the actual administration of a League of Nations.

But Canada granted the right for separate representation has not availed herself of that opportunity.

British Coal Strike

The coal strike in Great Britain has finally been settled. At first an effort was made for nationalization of the mines and to have the railway and transportation workers join in a sympathetic strike. Public opinion, however, was evidently against nationalization. The government advanced $50,000,000 as a subsidy to insure that the less profitable mines shall not decrease wages lower than they were before the war. A standard wage of twenty per cent above the prewar rates is established and the wage worker has his share in the profits. The percentage of increase rises with the greater profit; thus by the effort of the miners his profits are not only increased pro rata, but on a rising scale. It is hoped that this will lead to new relations in all industries.

President F. M. Smith met with the Saints at Deer Park July 2 to 10, helping them to get this new reunion better organized for successful work, not only this year, but for future years; taking his part with the other missionaries, both on the stand and serving in the dining room.

After a conference between President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire in the East, Bishop McGuire cabled Elder Harry Passman in Palestine, $10,000.

Jewish Resettlement of Palestine

A land of many possibilities, some of which are being realized already.

By T. W. Williams

The Jewish resettlement of Palestine is not colonization. It has a different spirit and purpose. A colony implies a parent country from which men emigrate. The purpose may be either economic, religious, or political. It presupposes relationship. The Jews have no parent country but Palestine. Their national life for many centuries has been well-nigh obliterated. They can scarcely be called a nation. They are exiles. They wish to return.

Colonization implies national expansion. This is a move for national reunion. It is not dispersion; it is concentration. It is not expansion; it is gathering back. It is centripetal rather than centrifugal action. There is no mother country to resist. There is none to render allegiance to. The Jews seek rehabilitation of home and country and nation.

History of the Movement

The idea of establishing Jewish settlements in Palestine is not a new one. In the sixteenth century Don Joseph Nasi, a Jewish duke of Naxos, made an attempt to rebuild Tiberias. He planted many mulberry trees and induced resident Jews to cultivate silkworms. In 1629 Jews near Jerusalem, in Tiberias and Safed, were engaged in the cultivation of cotton, cereals, vegetables, and in the rearing of silkworms and bees.

The history of Jewish settlement in Palestine covers three periods.

First. This period is purely religious and covers many generations. It is the reaction from the peculiar Jewish sentiment that final rest depends upon the repose of the body in sacred soil. There is a tradition among the older generation that should a Jew die and be buried outside Palestine, his spirit must wander around the earth for forty years and journey alone to the Promised Land. This accounts for the almost fanatical desire to return to Palestine before death and thereby insure physical and spiritual repose in Abraham's bosom.

Second. This phase represents what was called colonization, for want of a better term. In 1854 Moses Montefiore influenced the Sultan to permit the Jews to secure holdings in certain parts of Palestine. Under his supervision some thirty-five families secured farms. In 1860 some Russian rabbis secured grants from the Ottoman Government for six hundred and twenty-five acres near Jaffa. A farm school was established in 1870. In 1879 some six hundred and seventy-five acres were secured and Petach-Tikwah was founded. Persecutions in Rumania and Russia forced many Jews to flee, and numbers went to Palestine. Settlements were made at Rishon-le-Zion, Wad-el-Chanin, and Katrah, in Judea, Zichron-Jacob, in Samaria, Rosh-Pinah, Yessod-Hamaaleh, and Mishmar-Hajarden in Galilee.

Handicaps

Many handicaps developed. The people were ignorant of local conditions. None of them knew anything about agriculture. They were unacquainted with the language or custom of the natives. The government offered every possible obstruction. They were unprepared to fight grain and fruit pests. Cattle breeding was impossible owing to recurring epidemics. They exhausted their resources in purchase of lands, building homes, and securing tools and seed. The crops did not furnish subsistence. There were no railroads. Some of the old roads remained but were well-nigh impassable. The camels and donkeys used the fields. Malaria, opthalmia, and other diseases were epidemic. There were no physicians, no druggists, and no hospitals. Sanitation and hygiene were unknown. Many of the people died and the remainder retired to Jerusalem. A group of learned and orthodox Jews settled at Ramlah. Despite inexperience in agriculture they persisted against tremendous odds and finally succeeded.

It was Baron Edmund de Rothschild who gave life and hope to the settlers. He investigated the cause of failure and thereupon assumed responsibility. His representatives reported that the growing of cereals on the land then owned would not produce enough to furnish food for the present, let alone caring for the future. Accordingly fruit culture was undertaken. Immense vineyards were planted with the best variety of French grapes. Large wine cellars were built at Rishon-le-Zion, with capacity of one million six hundred and fifty thousand gallons. Between 1884 and 1888 new settlements were established at Ekron, Sheveys, and Bath-Shlomo. Between 1889 and 1899 Baron Rothschild purchased large sites in Lower Galilee and also in Samaria. Twenty-nine thousand acres were secured at El Muzerib.

Reverses and Disappointments

During this time other settlements sprung up—Rechoboth and Castinieh Chederah, founded by Jewish settlers; Metula, at foot of Mount Hermon, by Baron Rothschild; Artuf, by a Bulgarian society; and Mozah, by Jerusalem Jews. Most of these societies went in for grape culture. The price of wine fell in the European markets. Crops ceased to support the family. Total ruin stared them in the face. It was at this juncture that Baron de Rothschild again came to the rescue, and agreed to take the complete output at an artificial price to tide over the crisis, hoping for a rise in price. He was disappointed. The next year he was compelled to abandon the effort.

At this period the Jewish Colonization Association undertook to reorganize the various settlements. Arable land suitable for the growing of cereals and vegetables was secured. The vine growers were grouped into a syndicate. All surplus wines were syndicated. Production was curtailed. In four years production fell from one million four hundred and thirty thousand gallons to five hundred and twenty-eight thousand gallons. Hundreds of acres of vineyards were uprooted, and oranges, almonds, and olives substituted. During the next ten years settlements were made in Sedjera, Mes'ha, Melhamiel, Yemma, Bedjen Alit, Kinnereth, and Mizpah.

Beginning of Zionism

The third phase known as Zionism dates from the publication of that famous pamphlet Der Judenstaat (The Jewish State) by Theodor Herzl, in 1895. He affirmed that the Jewish problem could not be solved without the reestablishment of the Jewish nation. This gave national and political interpretation to the hitherto undefined efforts of the Jewish people. In 1897 the first Zionist World Conference was held at Basel and formulated the Zionist program, which remains the slogan to which the Jewish race is now adhering.

Zionism strives to create for the Jewish people a home in Palestine secured by public law. The congress contemplates the following means to the attainment of this end:

1. The promotion on suitable lines of the colonization of Palestine by Jewish agricultural and industrial workers.
2. The organization and binding together of the whole of Jewry by means of appropriate institutions, local and international, in accordance with the laws of each country.

3. The strengthening and fostering of Jewish national sentiment and consciousness.

4. Preparatory steps towards obtaining government consent where necessary to the attainment of the aim of Zionism.

At the outbreak of the war the Zionist movement had the financial support of some quarter of a million Jews and the active sympathy of millions more. The number of agricultural settlements had grown to upwards of forty, with a population of some twelve thousand. Swamps had been drained and made fruitful; sanitation and drainage had largely modified the scourge of malaria. The societies were now prosperous and engaged in growing various crops, composed of oranges, lemons, grapes, almonds, different kinds of deciduous fruits, figs, vegetables, and cereals. Farm schools had been installed. An agricultural experiment station had been established. Afforestation had been commenced. The Jewish population in the towns and villages had grown rapidly. Co-operative societies flourished and cooperative workingmen's settlements were giving satisfaction. Then came the war.

Local Self-Government

Administrative autonomy obtains in all Jewish communities. There is a general council called "Waad," which represents the settlement in all outside affairs and has complete charge of internal matters. The members of the "Waad" are elected annually at a general assembly composed of all the land owners, together with all others who are residents of the colony and have paid taxes for two years in succession. The franchise is exercised by men and women.

The "Waad" controls the sanitary condition of meat shops and meat. It inspects all animals used for food. It determines the amount and regulation of the water supply for domestic and irrigation purposes. It passes upon the quality and quantity of bread sold by bakers. It oversees the health and condition of flocks. It determines the annual budget and fixes the assessment of each family, basing same on income and expense. A bachelor pays a larger tax than a family with the same income. A large family pays a smaller tax than does a small family. The doctor is employed and secures his salary by keeping the people well. It is to his interest to have all the people well, as he is paid by the colony. This is also true of the druggist. The pharmacy is conducted by the community and the drugs are sold at cost.

Every man belongs to the police force. A signal of danger, either by night or by day, assembles within a few minutes the complete man power of the settlement, fully armed and ready for action. The Waad ha-Tisha (Council of Nine) is intrusted with all revisions and additions to the laws. The Waad ha-Mishpatim is the board of arbitration and settles all civil disputes among the colonists.

There are two schools, lay and religious. In the lay school religion is tabooed. All children of school age are expected to attend. An educational committee supervises these communal schools and kindergartens. In the People's House (Bethaha-Am) young men and women are given a gymnasium course under direction of an expert teacher. Various lectures are held here on different subjects. It is the social center of the community.

Sanitation

The indifference of the Ottoman Government as to sanitation and health compelled action on the part of the settlers. There are many marshy spots in Palestine. The water becomes stagnant. This breeds malaria and eye diseases. Millions of eucalyptus trees have been planted and these have served as disinfectants through their power of absorption and evaporation. There are four Jewish hospitals, one at Jerusalem, one at Haifa, one at Safed, and one at Hebron. Special attention is given to the treatment of trachoma. Jerusalem has a Jewish ophthalmic hospital, a home for the aged, an institution for the blind, as well as a lunatic asylum.

Reverting to schools, nearly every religion and every denomination has its own school. The Zionists control one hundred and eighteen elementary and secondary schools. These have a total attendance of some twelve thousand pupils. The cost of maintenance is over one hundred thousand dollars a year. The Arab children have no schools. The government is considering a special grant to Arab villages which will erect a school building. There are some four hundred Arab villages in Palestine. This grant would consist of an annual subsidy. The nongovernment schools will have no financial aid. This will react heavily on the Zionist schools.

Install Modern Machinery

The Jews are installing modern machinery and conveniences. The old Arab chain pump, propelled by a blindfolded mule or ox walking round and round, has been supplanted by modern suction pumps. These are worked by oil or gas motors and by means of these the orange and lemon groves are irrigated. The Jewish Health Bureau of Jerusalem supplies microbe culture for the destruction of all kinds of rodents and vermin. The Agricultural Experiment Station furnishes free information and material for combating insects and scale which destroy the trees. The Anglo-Palestine Bank grants credits for the purchase of dairy cattle on the joint guarantee of a given number of settlers. Demonstrations are given in dairy work and the cultivation and care of fodder. A model poultry farm has been established to instruct colonists in the best poultry methods.

Agricultural Experiment Station

The Jewish Agricultural Experiment Station was founded and is maintained by a group of American Jews. Its main object is to introduce cereals and other plants which will best resist weather, disease, and parasites. The offices and laboratories are situated in the Zichron-Jacob settlement. The fields for experiments and demonstrations are at Atlit. The results are summed up as follows:

It has succeeded in isolating and fixing a new form of sesame with a yield of more than double the ordinary sesame. It has created five species of wheat and barley, which have a special power of resistance to the sirocco. Several species of wheat, particularly rich in gluten, have been developed. These serve admirably in the manufacture of macaroni.

Between July and August each year Egypt imports about $300,000 worth of table grapes, which come exclusively from Smyrna and Cyprus. The experiment station has succeeded in acclimating in Palestine a variety of table grapes ripening three weeks earlier than the Smyrna and Cyprus product and which compare favorably in flavor and size. Information had been supplied which will make the Palestine olive second to none in the world, both as to the weight of the fruit and the quantity of oil.

Indigenous spineless cactus has been developed which will shortly supply valuable fodder for cattle. A new method of growing the mulberry tree has been evolved, bringing the tree into leaf three weeks before normal time. This will facilitate the silk worm culture and supply more food for cattle.

Other Activities

Some forty different varieties of plants have been evolved to keep the sand dunes from shifting and of inestimable worth along the entire Mediterranean coast. They also provide shelter from the sea. Some forty different species of eucalyptus, most of which are specially adapted to the different soils of the country, have been introduced.

A permanent agricultural service has been organized and a technical staff has been selected to study local agricultural conditions. This service has direct personal touch with each individual farmer. Agricultural assistants are posted in all districts and instructed to tour villages and settlements continually. These report fortnightly on crops and live stock and suggest ways in which the department can render assistance.

Plant disease and insect pests are reported immediately and immediate steps are taken to prevent their spread. When locusts appear an immediate campaign of extermination is commenced, and printed instructions issued to all settlements. Circulars, spray pumps, and material is furnished for treatment of scale and other pests. There is a field staff of veterinary surgeons which deals with all disease in live stock. Quarantine stations exist at Jaffa and Haifa. All live stock entering the country is subject to examination. The forest rangers are preserving devastated woodlands. Public forest lands are being sown or replanted from established nurseries. Permits must now be secured to fell olive, oak, or careb trees. Charcoal burning henceforth will be done under the supervision of forest guides.

Steps have been taken to develop the sea and lake fisheries and to prevent the wholesale destruction of young fish and larvæ resulting from use of dynamite and poison. The migration and habits of fish which visit the Palestine coast are being studied. A weather bureau has been organized and been brought into close relation with Cairo. Six public stations have been installed. Local farmers are urged to lay out experimental plots, for which supervision, seed, fertilizers, and material is furnished free. Such plots are organized and planted from ten different centers, stretching from Gaza to Safed.

Present Settlements

There are at the present time some fifty settlements with a population of fifteen thousand persons, scattered throughout Palestine. They cover a total area of one hundred and ten thousand acres. This represents about two per cent of the entire area of the country and about fourteen per cent of the cultivated area. The present population of Palestine is seven hundred thousand. The area is about twenty-seven thousand square kilometers. There are about one hundred thousand Jews, of which sixty-five thousand are in Jerusalem. Jaffa, Safed, and Tiberias each have ten thousand. There are some forty odd Jewish settlements.

Thirty per cent of all citrus fruits and ninety per cent of the wines which leave Palestine from the port of Jaffa come from Jewish settlements. These represent one half the total exports. In 1890 an acre of irrigable land in Petach-Tikwah cost about fifteen dollars. The same land to-day will bring from two to five hundred dollars per acre. In 1880 the total value of this colony was less than five thousand dollars; to-day it is easily worth three million dollars.

The Bezalel School of Arts and Crafts enrolls five hundred students who are instructed in the weaving of oriental carpets, the inlaying of copper with silver, the manufacture of silver filigree ware and ivory carving. Mother of pearl workshops teach the manufacture of buttons and beads. In Jerusalem the Jews have established schools comprising workshops for iron smelting, weaving, carpentry, machinery, as well as working in dyes. Knitting machines are furnished to poor families on small annual payments. Special schools are established, giving instruction in the manufacture of oriental lace.

Topography

The valleys or plains of Palestine are fertile. Along the Mediterranean shore the plains run side by side. The plains of Gaza lie to the south, devoted principally to barley. Then come the great plains of Sharon, with soil of chalk and clay, and covered with orchards of orange and almond trees. Farther north lie the plains of Esdraelon. The soil here is rich in humus and specially adapted to wheat. The mountain regions of Judea and Samaria have artificially raised terraces -with small patches of earth. Most of these terraces have been destroyed during the long neglect of the land, but these are to be renewed and, where now there are only hill after hill of bare rock, there will be mountains of terraces, bearing olives and grapes and figs.

The Jordan Valley is a miniature valley of the Nile. Every species of semitropical and many tropical products can be grown. East of the Jordan are immense areas now almost uninhabited, which at one time furnished the entire Roman Empire with its bread supply. It was called the granary of the world. The land of Palestine is capable under intensive cultivation of supporting a population ten times its present inhabitants. If seven million people once flourished here, seven million and more, under modern conditions, can now live in ease and abundance.

The Rainfall

The rainfall is from twenty to twenty-eight inches. The drawback is that it all falls within the space of less than six months. This has been overcome in past ages by means of the pools and cisterns for storing water for irrigation. The Plains of Sharon have six rivers which carry water all the year round. The Plain of Esdraelon has two rivers. If the waters of Jordan and the Sea of Tiberias were conserved it would water the entire Valley of the Ghor. The coastal plain is entirely underlaid with water strata. Inexhaustible wells can be developed at a depth of from ten to sixty feet. There is an abundance of dew, sometimes nearly as heavy as rain, throughout most of Palestine. This dew is the only moisture of the hills of Judea during six months of the year and furnished sufficient foodstuff for the vast number of sheep and goat herds which abound.

It is impossible in an article like this to cover many of the activities of this versatile land. Suffice to say that Palestine has its future and, if the Jewish people with their industrious and enterprising spirit and purpose, are given opportunity, the next quarter of a century will see wonderful changes wrought and Lebanon shall yet be esteemed as a forest and the land shall yield her increase.

The British Commonwealth which is taking the place of the British Empire since the close of the World War has reached an important stage in the meetings of premiers now being held in England. Each colony is allowed the utmost liberty and is recognized as having an interest in the Commonwealth as a whole. One development of the meeting of premiers of British Commonwealth in England is an effort to secure the admission of Ireland as a constituent part of the Commonwealth, enjoying self-government, and thereby bring about peace. Meetings to this end are now being held in the hopes of finding a solution satisfactory to Southern Ireland, to Ulster, and to Ireland as a whole.

The Annals of Iowa for April, 1921, contains as a reprint from Gregg's Dollar Monthly, eight synopses of "The Mormon Era," printed in that periodical September, 1873, to August, 1875. These sketches show very plainly antipathy to the whole movement, though evidently some desire to be fair. A much better account appears in the Governor's Letter Books, republished by the Illinois Historical Society a few years ago.

A Few More Thoughts on Stewardship

By Wilbur F. Yates

The Lord has said, "It is expedient in me that mine elders should wait a little season for the redemption of Zion . . . that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience." We are now having the experience of discussing the matter, perhaps later we shall have group organization and have added experience in our operations.

A common expression is that self-preservation is the first law of nature. There is such a thing as putting too much stress on this thought, in that it leads to self-interest, to the exclusion of what is required of us as Saints. It is the writer's belief that when men occupy as stewards according to the true plan, that preferring one another will be the characteristic of Saints.

The Basis for Stewardship

Can we imagine people who are to occupy as workers of Zion rushing to get in possession of some choice corner lot? Will the Lord recognize the method we see so prominent in the world when his work begins? Who will be granted stewardships? Does it not stand to reason that history would repeat itself and men be appointed now just as they were in the days of Enoch as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 101? Let my servant So and So occupy upon the lot in such a location. There we find that the voice of inspiration pointed out their various stewardships.

When the Lord commences this work, could we imagine anyone being pointed out who loved self-exaltation or who was quick to see his own interest and slow to see the other person's interest? Should the church announce that the people inside of the stakes were to be granted their stewardships and commence to receive their just needs and wants from the storehouse, what an array of opinion there would be as to just needs and wants! If to-day we as individuals are willing to live luxuriously and not comply with the law in its fullness, it stands to reason that we might feel that we were in bondage to confine ourselves to what the Lord would call just, for when groups of people with moderate means were starting to work together (as sometimes they must), who could think of some enjoying luxury while many of their good brethren could not have the necessities?

Surely the people who are called to commence this work will be just as they were in Book of Mormon times, when they attained their spiritual heights in so much that they were of one heart and one mind from sea to sea. It is said of them that they would not contend one with the other and that each sought the interest of his neighbor continually. If there is anyone contending when Zion is putting on her beautiful garments, it no doubt will be that each person will contend that he will not have that that is above his brother, but would constantly seek the interest of his neighbor by his vote, industry, and self-denial, if need be. There is no such thing as that kind of people failing. They would gain the favor of both God and righteous men.

Responsibility

Responsibility always comes upon the one who stands to build or assist in any of the Lord's onward moves. Many might be quick to run and occupy as stewards, but when pressure came I fear they would feel more like running the other way, unless prepared by a righteous character. A glimpse into society reveals to us a constant shirking of responsibility, seeking the easiest job without regard to right—let others carry the burden, while they look to receive. There seems always to be work and responsibility if we care to stay with the right; but, by compromising with the wrong here and there, Satan promises that our path will be a little more rosy so far as this life is concerned, and he is quite true to his promise, as a rule.

The freedom taught so much to-day seems to be to throw off responsibility, be free to complain, free to infringe, free to backbite, free to oppress the hireling, that we may ride in a bigger car, free to quit our employer because labor is scarce and we can make him feel our power, free to charge, "free, free Americans."

How Will Division Be Made?

In Zion we will be free to do right, and happy in it, but oh! how out of place one would feel in a short time who had not rid himself of carnality! Perhaps we shall learn more about the insistent teachings of the church in the past as to what being a true Saint really is, and what it will take to be a fit subject to occupy as a real steward in Zion. We have seen, at times, rough men fall in company with those who did not follow in or love that manner of life. How out of place they seemed! An excuse was soon offered and they made their departure. For us to think of living the law or abiding the required condition, when in our individual lives those things are apparent that could not be tolerated if our cooperative institutions should live!

Could the church permit people to occupy as stewards at a loss? Shall I be satisfied to pass by all this desire we see in the world to look as good or better than my neighbor? Who will be first to announce that I am willing to place myself down on the simple life, to make this business or this farm pay? Who of us can see the necessity, as yet, of saying, I will enlist my all to release the burden from the backs of the Saints and establish an example for the world?

The spirit of caution will no doubt be ours when we remember what the Lord has said of him who would turn from his covenant, that he be "turned over to the buffetings of Satan, to be trampled under the feet of whomsoever I will." We note the question at times, Will one who is diligent be required to divide up with one who is indolent? Under the true plan it will be impossible for an idle person to eat the bread or wear the garments of the laborer. We cannot imagine God calling or appointing as stewards any but the honest in heart, "but woe unto him who will not labor with his own hands and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold of other men's goods."

Will the Saints buy their inheritance?

Yes, and no. When Saints enlist all of their production, above their just needs and wants, we consider that they are paying for their inheritances, and no just law could require any more. In this sense they may buy many times over, but personally we cannot feel that the method of the world which does not consider the health of the steward and the misfortunes that might overtake the same, are applicable to God's high order, because the method of the word is so ironclad and rigid the world is groaning under the pressure. To meet their obligations men are filling premature graves, working themselves, their families, their servants, and their beasts, that they may meet certain payments. God cannot be the author of such means to justify an end. Everywhere we look, we see men and women broken in health at forty-five, all because they had to meet a certain obligation or lose the home. This is only one of the evils we might mention which grows out of the worldly methods, which are foreign to the stewardship plan. Righteous stewards will surely have a righteous plan to work to.

God's Plan Equable

Christ's plan is to care for the body, the mind, and the spirit, and his will is to prepare men to do many years of paying work, instead of a wasteful few with an impaired body and mind. The incentive under the stewardship plan will be to honor God and bless men (and not man alone). Because of existing evil, man has become accustomed to believe everyone a rogue and deal with him as such, then if he proves himself honorable, deal with him the same way for fear he will fall from grace. The Lord, however, has always dealt with man upon man's honor. When we adopt in full God's plan, our dealings will be in the same way. We would not infer that things are not as they should be.

Present society is burdened with nonessentials. A big percentage of the work to-day in the world seems to induce man to do wrong, another percentage to keep track of him and his doings, a goodly percentage to handle and deal his portion according to what is agreed that he merits. What must have been the condition of man before he evolved to his present state? A beautiful picture is revealed to us through the Seer of latter days. Under the direction of the bishop, is a supply store which from its very nature will absorb banks, insurance companies, and so forth, and into which will be placed all surplus property, and from which all stewards may receive such property as is not produced on their stewardships that may be a need or just want.

Think of the short-cut business methods and unnecessary work that can be avoided when we shall have adopted God's plan, Saints receiving their just necessities, recuperation assured to all. We can hardly conceive of the happy result. How wonderful that we are the recipients of this information. We contrast the future with what is seen in the commercial stores of to-day, especially around factory towns. Tired, careworn mothers counting pieces of cold metal while watching her waiter take a spoonful of sugar from a small sack on a teetering scale, while her little offspring clings to her skirt and peers through the picket fence at some of God's big oranges and is pulled from the forbidden fruit in childish bewilderment.

How beautiful the promise that some day the earth will rest! Yes, some of society partakes of the abundance the Lord has made; others hunger for the necessities. The two classes meet and try to worship together; and as they listen to long sermons upon honesty they rack their tired brains and try to adjust themselves to the out-of-jointedness of conditions. Honesty, honesty, where shall we place the standard? Shall it be lower than the gospel requirements? If not, let us place it upon Zion's tower. Until then we can place before the word honesty three more letters, d-i-s, unless we have done all things intrusted to our individual care.

Can We Abide the Law?

It is said that Israel delivered from Egypt was not able to abide but the carnal law, but that now we live in the gospel dispensation. Perhaps this is true, but we see recorded in the scripture measures in their fundamental law that indeed seem superior to many in our dispensation. They permitted men to be free from bondage once in seven years at least. Certain portions of grain along the public road were to be left for the poor and unfortunate.

The only way we can account for the law in Israel's day and now is that God appointed their carnal law and that many of to-day were instituted by that power that was spoken of in Revelation, that sought for dominion over nations, kindreds, tongues, and people. Should this be the case, how may the methods and policies in the business world which have within them elements which are wholly human, to say the least, be used? When God's plan is in operation we cannot think of a people being dependent upon human law. Of course, it will not be out of harmony with governmental law.

For a people to live and occupy as stewards under the law will indeed try every timber in their character. Forsaking the world with all her unholy practices has and will be required of the people who shall set an example to the world sufficiently to cause the world to say, Let us be subject to her laws.

Let us pause and ask, Do we find the world picking up our method of doing things, or do we find it convenient to follow the world? There is in the mind of the writer nothing so small and void of gospel requirements as false accusation and evil-minded criticism. But with sober reflection I ask, How many of our weapons are yet carnal? How much must we retrace our steps? What degree will we have to suffer? How oft we should be found in sober prayer, because of things that must indeed be met by the Saints, who are called forth to occupy as stewards. It will mean the turning of their backs upon all the pride and foolishness of our time. The gospel requirements must be in those lives to meet the "fiery darts of the adversary," successfully.

Three Years of Valuable Experience

Several years ago the writer was impressed with the possibility of Saints moving towards the condition required; also the experience that would be needed before they could live harmoniously and receive the promises to us as a church. Our meditations and teachings resulted in some four families studying to come if possible closer to the law, learn and have more experience in cooperation as we saw was taught there. We are in our third year of operation; others have joined with us since we started. We still operate pending the time when there will be a closer understanding between us and those in authority. We have never given our experience through the paper, not desiring to appear forward or boastful. Our hope and prayer is that our experience will be helpful to all concerned.

The only thing I wish now to get before the reader is, that being born and raised in the church and lately reaching forty years of life, the three years just passed have indeed been fraught with varying experiences, and nothing ever came into my life before that gave such an insight to the human character, to the good and bad qualities in humanity, in those inside the experimental group or those who just look in. We are made to feel the importance of what was said by the Lord, "Wait a little season till you have more experience."

We give it now as our experience and are agreed that a source of education will come to any people making an honest effort in their lives to honor these things which were given to the world such as can be given only through actual experience and effort to apply. In respect to the members of the church, I have been made to see a lovable side of humanity I never did years past, which has a tendency to increase charity, and it seems to me that the greater part of our weakness crops out as the result of our imperfect environments.

Our desire to know and sense the requirements of a loving Father has increased. Nothing but pressure and responsibility will rest upon the heads of the ones called out to take their place in the stupendous work just ahead and occupy as foremost stewards. I solicit support and prayers for those who stand in the gateway.

Wireless telephone service between Independence and Lamoni is already an established fact. On the morning of the 15th messages were sent to Lamoni by the church station at Independence and these were heard fairly well, though not entirely distinct. Some phonograph music was played into the instrument and it carried well. Paul E. Anway, of Independence, reports that they hope to develop this service until it is readily available for use throughout the central regions where most of our members reside.

The Treasures of Two Kingdoms

By Elmer K. Patterson

"We as Latter Day Saints, who are citizens of the kingdom of God, should seek after the treasures of the kingdom to which we owe our allegiance. This will be the test of our faith."

A certain Latter Day Saint at one time wrote to a friend in the same faith and made this statement: ". . . but I'm like the common run of Saints in that I am not greatly overburdened with any excess quantities of this world's goods; therefore, I cannot always do my heart's desire, but must be content with things as they are and with that which I possess."

This statement leads the mind of the writer into a chain of thoughts relative to a subject uppermost in the minds of a great many Latter Day Saints to-day.

In these very troublesome days, the days of the end, there seems to be considerable discontent within the fold of latter-day Israel, because we as a people are poor and most of us are more or less compelled to stand aside and view the wealth of this great world and its attending pleasures pour itself into the laps of those who are outside of the kingdom of God.

Among innumerable evidences of the apparent unjust distribution of this world's goods, we stand aside and behold the luxuriously equipped horseless chariots jostle to and fro in the highways and byways. We see them manned in many instances by high-salaried servants, and quite often occupied by people adorned in costly raiment and decked with expensive jewelry.

We follow some of these wealth-laden folk to their home and a palatial abode greets our vision, and were we to pass its portals, we would, no doubt, find every kind of labor-saving and pleasure-making device created for man's convenience.

And is it not true, when we see this grand display of wealth and contrast it with our own meager possessions, the thoughts of our minds rebel somewhat and we recognize "man's inhumanity to man"?

We also see the great employer, who in many cases has much of this world's goods, perfectly at ease in mind after granting the hireling a mere living wage, while he apparently sits in the lap of luxury.

We see the rich getting richer, and so far as we are concerned, the poor are getting poorer. But the evidences of wealth are so profusely lavished on every side that we are dazed somewhat by its grandeur and are quite unable to see so much of the opposite condition, so prevalent among the less fortunate.

Are We Discontented?

What is the result of all this upon the minds and hearts of many Latter Day Saints? Are we not prone to wonder at this great inequitable distribution of earthly treasure? Yea; and we allow ourselves to become discontented because we do not possess what our minds would call "a more reasonable possession."

We may be safe to add right here that this condition of mind has much to do with the prevailing unrest in the world to-day.

But to get at our subject: We believe the real reason why we find the treasure of this world, in its greater distribution, in the hands of those who are not of the kingdom of God is simply because they are not of the kingdom of God.

By this we mean that the world, as the Scriptures inform us, is the kingdom of Satan, and its treasure is mammon, and the glory of this world is in the possession of an abundance of its mammon, which the Bible is pleased to term "the unrighteous mammon."

But Saints, the kingdom of God hath a treasure of a far different quality, nature, and worth; yea, a treasure more precious than diamonds or silver or gold; a treasure banked in the vaults of eternity, where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal. Yet God, the holy, righteous banker, offers any man the key that will unlock the vaults, and he bids all to come and partake of the good things which he has prepared and preserved for his faithful children.

The glory of any kingdom is its treasure, its possessions. And mammon, which the apostle called "filthy lucre," is the glory and treasure of this world. But let us ask: "How limited is the world's treasure? How short-lived is its glory?"

"The Earth Is the Lord's, and the Fullness Thereof"

The treasure of this world is limited in that it has no real, intrinsic value. Each unit represents a like unit in another form. Mammon is the medium of exchange. We might also add that money has no intrinsic value, because it represents man's own inscription of usurpation. By this we mean that the inscription on any money produced by any people (bodies) of the world, represents the usurpation of the power of property, or both, of another, without absolute right.

It is written: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein."

In the beginning God intended that the possession of the treasures of the earth should be man's natural inheritance. And had it been so, all earth treasures now possible of possession would have become intrinsic because of their inheritable value.

But no; Satan came into power and instilled in the hearts of man the spirit of greed. Beginning with Cain the earth and its treasures began to be usurped by men who claimed to be the legal possessors, and then they instituted laws that would permit the system to expand under the protection of so-called civil rights, until to-day we behold the earth and the fullness thereof, not in possession of all men as a natural inheritance, but held in the power of civil authority. And money is the only means by which any of it can come into the possession of the individual, money that bears the inscription of this usurpation.

Earth's Glory Short-Lived

Now the other question: "How short-lived is the glory of this world?" The glory of this world can last no longer than the world itself; and the Bible, Book of Mormon, and latter-day revelation teach that this world and all its glory will fade like the flower that to-day is, but to-morrow is not, for the kingdom of this world cannot last, and this for at least two very good reasons.

First: This world, which is the kingdom of his satanic majesty, the Devil, cannot last, for it is the lowest order of kingdoms that we know anything about in all the universe of God, and it is so low that even the earth itself is cursed. But by the natural evolutionary law of progression, it must eventually give way to a higher order, even the kingdom of God, the "little stone hewn out of the mountain without hands."

Second: This world cannot last, because we believe it to be the gates of hell that have prevailed or tried to prevail against the kingdom of God and its celestial righteousness since its foundation; and God, who has had his arms of mercy outstretched all the day long towards those who dwell upon his footstool, will some day be unable to withhold his just wrath against the disobedient children upon the earth; for in their low estate they have ignored the God who created them, his Son who bought them, his kingdom that would save them, and his righteousness that would perfect them. They have ignored his holy counsel, changed his holy ordinances, and deliberately and willfully broken the "everlasting covenant." As a result they have poured iniquity unto iniquity until their cup is nearly filled. And, Saints, when it becomes full, they will have sealed their own doom. They will have brought down upon them the vengeance of a God, who cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. In that great and dreadful day of the Lord, the wicked shall be burned as stubble by the fire of his righteous indignation, the elements (of evil) shall melt (vanish) with fervent heat (before the onslaught of hot wrath), the world with all its treasure, pomp, and glory shall pass away, the higher order of kingdoms, even the kingdom of God, shall be fully established, and Jesus Christ, the Son of him who liveth forever and dwelleth on high, shall become King of kings, and Lord of lords, and the great and mighty Prince of Peace.

Pleasure-Seeking a Test of Faith

Thus we can see that the treasures of this world, this Satanic kingdom, alluring as they are, are confined exclusively to immediate possession, use, and pleasure. It stops at the earth portal, the grave, and goes not beyond, while the treasures of the kingdom of God are not only possible of immediate possession, use, and pleasure (at least in part), but its more abundant possession, use, and pleasure is to be had in the world to come, worlds without end, to be enjoyed throughout all eternity in a sphere of civilization so high we cannot now measure it.

So we Latter Day Saints who are citizens of another kingdom, the kingdom of God, should seek after the treasures of the kingdom to which we owe our allegiance. This will be a test of our faith, for we are compelled, during our probationary period of mortality, to remain in the world, for as yet our kingdom is in the midst thereof.

But we are not to be of it, for we hear the voice of warning: "Come up out of her, crieth Jehovah; partake not of her sins, that in the day of wrath ye shall not receive of her plagues."

The kingdom of this world is the kingdom of Satan, and it is full of wrath and violence, sin and degradation, and her treasure is filthy lucre, the unrighteous mammon, which in the days of the end (even now) shall become as canker in the possession of all those who do wickedly and repent not, and their glory shall wane unto midnight.

Unwise indeed are the inhabitants of the earth who seek after an abundance of the glory and treasures of this world to satisfy the hungering of a lustful soul, who so do and fail to seek after the kingdom of God, and to establish its righteousness (in themselves), loving pleasure (world treasures and glory) more than loving God.

Ungrateful Man

Unwise virgins are they of the kingdom of God who seek to hoard up unto themselves the treasures of an alien kingdom (the world), a kingdom grossly at variance with their own; a kingdom whose citizens either willingly or ignorantly blaspheme the God who so loved them that he suffered his Only Begotten Son to be slain in atonement for them.

O thou man, how ungrateful thou art? This Jesus, Son of God, came unto you from the courts of real glory and laid treasures at your feet. He beckoned you to partake freely, for freely they were given, but ye would not. Ye had rather roam the face of the earth in sheep's clothing, while inwardly many of you were like unto wolves, seeking whom ye may devour and oppress, that ye might possess more and more of the unrighteous mammon; for the glory of this world is now, and ye could not wait a little season for the full glory of the kingdom of God, which is hereafter.

O thou man, ye who claim to be pious but reveal only your outer cloak. Ye who hoist up a false ensign in this sinful generation and attempt to penetrate the gross darkness, having a form of godliness, but denying the power of an all-wise, righteous, holy, and unchangeable God. Ever learning but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, the truth that makes man free from error and puts him in possession of treasures laid up in heaven, in glory, against eternity, where moth and rust doth not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal.

So, dear Saints, we are to be in this wicked world and behold its glory, but are not to be of it; content to work in honest labor and possess such of its treasure as will supply our just wants and needs, and to assist in the propagation of the cause of celestial righteousness.

Therefore, we should not feel so badly when we see the laps of those of the kingdom of the world laden with wealth, for it will be but a little while and man shall plant his own vineyard and eat the fruit thereof. One shall not plant and another eat. Then shall the glory and treasures and the fullness of the earth come unto man as his natural inheritance (gift from God), and there shall be no poor among us. All shall have an abundance, for we shall all be obeying the full laws of God, and the windows of heaven shall be opened and remain. And the earth, cleansed of all the unrighteousness of man upon her, shall yield her increase, even as it was in the days before it was cursed, and all shall be filled with the glory and love of God, the eternal Father.

But remember: "He who endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved," and, "Where our treasures are, there shall our hearts be also," and as God, the righteous judge, judgeth from the heart, we should be very careful, and examine ourselves often to see whether we be in the faith, in the kingdom of God, or yet in the world, the kingdom of Satan, selfishly seeking its unrighteous mammon.

The Big Omission

The current number of the Hibbert Journal contains one or two challenging articles on the religious situation to-day. But we miss something in them, and it is this omission which is characteristic of nearly all the discussions which deal with what is supposed to be current Christianity. Doctor McGiffert, for example, takes the line that the church needs to deal with living issues, that it is not doing so at present, and that, in order to do so, it must emulate the earnestness of the scientist, and continually retest the fundamental assumptions of our faith.

This is excellent, so far as it goes, and if it applied only to the mere phrases of conventional Christianity, there would be nothing more to say. But Christianity is Christ. One fundamental fact is the lordship of Christ over the lives of men, and it is this that so often is omitted from these religious discussions. "The quest after truth" is a fine phrase, but it may be very misleading if it is understood to sum up the meaning of the gospel. Truth, even religious truth, conceived of as a system, is not the first thing that challenges us. We cannot certainly be Christians and yet indifferent to truth, especially that which is revealed in Holy Scripture. But the first word of the gospel concerns the claims of Christ upon the souls of men. It is not knowledge, primarily, that men need, but salvation from sin and saving for the purposes of God. And Jesus is the sole Savior. Why, in so many religious discussions, is this central fact either omitted, or relegated to an inferior place?—The Christian, October 21, 1920.

THE CHRISTIAN SUBSTITUTE FOR FORCE

In these days of much-discussed disarmament plans, the following from the Society of Friends (Quakers) will prove of interest.

Spiritual forces form the foundation upon which our institutions rest. Great social structures, like the family, church, and state are sustained by the power of faith, loyalty, justice, and love.

It is not only the kingdom of heaven that is "within" men, but also the empires of earth. When loyalty to the Czar died out of the hearts of the Russian people, Nicholas found himself a helpless man in the midst of his vast estates and former armies. Napoleon could conquer Europe after he got an army of soldiers, willing to die, if need be, for France and the emperor; but Napoleon did not get the "grand army" by the might of his fists. He won them by championing their cause, by dazzling their imaginations, and winning their hearts.

Physical force alone is inadequate to preserve our institutions. Its use is unnecessary and usually harmful. Once men believed that Christian faith could only be preserved in the last resort by violence. The dungeon, rack, and stake were used to protect the faith and preserve the church. To-day in America the church still survives and flourishes without reliance on force. There probably was never an age when Christian belief was so widespread and vital. Likewise the family has survived, held together by affection, although we no longer force unwilling women into the marriage bond, and the rod is little used on the child. When will the state be wise enough to disarm its most dangerous foes by treating them with justice and love, without the threat of armaments?

Altruism is as ancient in the history of even prehuman life as selfishness. Kropotkin has shown in his Mutual Aid that the popular misconception of the doctrine of the survival of the fittest is far from scientific. It does not mean the survival of the most selfish or most brutal or even the strongest physically. God is not always on the side of the heaviest battalions. We have learned to train men to courses of conduct within limited areas controlled by altruistic motives. Parents give themselves for their children; patriots die for their country. Tradition, history, literature, monuments, public ceremonies and celebrations glorify the deed, praise the heroism, and perpetuate the motive. A similar all-pervasive education enjoining the practice of universal brotherhood, calling out in us and trusting in others a code of unselfish honor in all personal and international relations would produce a Christian universalism as reliable as the basis of social institutions as is nationalistic patriotism; and as far above it, as modern patriotism is above the tribal clannishness of ancient Scotland or Israel.

We believe there is ample basis in history, as well as in the science of life, for belief in the sufficiency of the higher forces—justice, sympathy, kindness, love, and faith—to provide for all that we value in our present social order. When the American Union was formed, the States "in order to provide for the common defense and to promote the general welfare" disarmed against each other. Succeeding generations, trained to recognize common obligations throughout the Union and to trust the processes of justice, have found these far more effective in making life, person, and property secure than the armed peace of the medieval barons or the individual preparedness of the western frontier. Women and children who form the great bulk of human society are, from the point of view of physical force for its protection, quite helpless. Yet women and children are quite safe in any society, where the appeal of their winsomeness and need is sufficient to beget in the hearts of men respect, chivalry, or pity. It is only in war time, when force is invoked for their ostensible protection, that women and children suffer wholesale violence, when the force fails, as it did in Belgium and in France.

We should equip ourselves as a Nation to deal with the problems of international relations, not by the use or threat of force, but by the agencies of helpfulness and good will. We ought to have a Secretary of Peace in the Cabinet, to direct such work as the sanitation of Havana, Vera Cruz, and Panama, the Panama Canal, and helping less favored countries like Haiti with their finances and elections. Under him should be a force of workers as effective as the army, but as inoffensive to the pride and liberties of other peoples as the Red Cross. They should be engineers, financial experts, administrators, teachers, missionaries, editors, physicians, nurses, and statesmen. He should have direction of the Red Cross. The American consuls and diplomats should report to him all cases of need in other nations and all other conditions that threaten the internal peace and welfare of less favored nations or which might involve us in conflict with other peoples. The Secretary of Peace would then use the forces at his disposal in a way to help the needy peoples without any such suspicion of aggression or evil designs against their rights, territory, or sovereignty on our part, as the presence of soldiers excites.

While waiting for such provision in our Government for the use of good will as an agent of national self-protection and neighborly helpfulness, we must rely on the voluntary work of men of good will among us. We must call for the services of the missionary and educator. If a mere handful of our choicest young men and women, compared to the number a war could call for, would not wait for the call of a limited and militant patriotism in case of war, but would volunteer at the call of Christ in response to the deep needs of such countries as Mexico and Japan, it would do more than an army to make us secure from danger; and if our people at home were willing to support these volunteers with a tithe of what they would give in case of war, and if in addition they would treat the inhabitants of these countries with Christian courtesy and impartial good will, the danger of war with these countries would disappear forever.

We do not expect the immediate application of the law of love to solve all difficulties or to have no failures. Jesus refused the sword and met evil with truth and love. And we are reminded that Jesus lost his life; that love and truth were not sufficient to protect Him. But he saved his cause by losing his life. On the other hand, we must not forget that a large part of those who attempt to defend property, life, or country, by armed force, also suffer the same fate. It is a curious mental twist that leads so many to assume that a person or nation that is armed and defends itself is always safe; while a person or nation that follows Jesus' method is sure to be injured or destroyed. Both assumptions are historically false. Not all wars of defense are successful. Witness the fate of Egypt, Greece, Judea, Poland, the Boer republics, Belgium, Serbia! But the early Christians, the seventeenth century Quakers in England, and Penn among the American Indians, won without fighting and suffered less than most peoples who take the sword. We do not claim that reliance on spiritual forces would always and infallibly succeed. But we do believe that after a century of such a trial, as the forces of force, hate, and national selfishness have had, it would not have failed in 1914 as they failed after having formed the basis of international relations for millenniums.

We draw out from others largely what we give them. War produces hate, and hate produces war. Good will educes a response of good will. In 1871 Germany imposed an enormous indemnity on prostrate France and took Alsace from her. It refreshed an ancient enmity, made Germany and France armed camps for a generation, and ended in the deluge of blood in 1914. Now France is demanding exorbitant reparations from prostrate Germany, and seizing territory. She must henceforth squander the earnings of her peasants on an army to guard against German revenge. The only way to end this entail of hate and fear is by active good will; by the healing grace of mercy, and the ministry of reconciliation. A part of the people of the United States have intrusted the Society of Friends with the distribution of their gifts of mercy to the underfed children of Germany, Austria, and Poland. The work is making the name "America" a talisman with which to conjure up in the hearts of the coming generation of Germany feelings of friendship rather than of hate. Recently one of the workers came upon a group of German children holding United States flags. Recognizing him, they waved the flags, shouting, "Uncle Sam is our uncle, too?" They will cherish no desire for revenge against America, for in their case we have effectively overcome evil with good.

VALUE OF AN EDUCATION

College training is worth nearly a thousand dollars a year to Middle Western Farmers.

The United States Bureau of Education has just published some facts gathered from farmers in some of the Middle Western States.

"That a college education is the best investment a young farmer can make is shown by investigations in various agricultural regions of the country, reported by the University of Missouri Bulletin. Not only do the results show that a college graduate makes more money than a common school graduate, but that a high school graduate also has a monetary advantage in proportion.

"Of tenant farmers in Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, it is shown that the labor income of the man with a high school education averages $526 more than that of the man with only a common school education. A further increase of $453 is earned by the man with a college education, making the difference in labor income of the common school graduate and the college graduate, $979. Approximately the same result appears from a survey of the incomes of 635 Kansas farmers.

"Of 409 farmers in Nebraska, those who had attended high school made 32.1 per cent more than those who had only a common school course. Men who attended college make 19.7 more than the high school men, giving the college man an advantage over the common school man of 51.8 per cent.

"In an inquiry as to those who earned more than $1,000 a year, a Cornell University report shows that while 5 per cent of the farmers with a district school education were in the class that had labor incomes of more than $1,000, 30 per cent of those with more than a high school education were in that class. This report estimates a high school education to be worth as much to a farmer as $6,000 worth of 5 per cent bonds, and a college education nearly twice as much."

The Eternal City—Part 2

By H. J. Davison

Jerusalem as mentioned in the prophecies of the Bible.

Information concerning the destiny of Jerusalem is couched in the prophecies found in both the Old and New Testaments, as well as in later revelations. Many of the prophecies in the book that all Christendom professes to believe are direct, plain, and easy to be understood from a literal standpoint, yet many stumble. Many cannot believe them, or at least will not believe them in their plainness, and feel called upon to clothe them with spiritual mystery until they mean about nothing, and then proclaim that God does not deal with nations as nations, and cities as cities, any longer, but only with individuals. Whereas, the facts are, God is committed to his word, and therefore must deal with nations as nations and cities as cities, at least until the last authorized prophecy concerning them has had its fulfillment.

The first of these which will be noticed in this article will be found in Isaiah 9: 6, 7, coupled with the declaration of the angel to Mary, found in Luke 1: 31, 32, 33, both referring to the same thing. We will quote from both. First:

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Second:

"And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

By the passages we learn that Jesus is to have a kingdom upon this earth; that it will be an everlasting kingdom. It will comprise Jacob, and it will be upon the throne of David that he will reign.

In a previous chapter we have shown that the throne of David when fully established was in Zion at Jerusalem; also that David reigns over the twelve tribes of Israel, which is Jacob.

There are three things quite evident. Jesus cannot reign over Jacob as a whole, until the house of Judah and the house of Israel, or Ephraim, are again united.

Second: Jesus cannot reign upon David's throne in Jerusalem until Palestine reverts to the Jews.

Third: The city where Jesus reigns is destined to become the capital city of the world.

When Jesus of Nazareth was upon this earth, some two thousand years ago, one Herod reigned in Jerusalem, under the emperor of Rome, over parts of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi. The "ten tribes" were in some north country, while some remnants were scattered in different parts of the earth.

Jesus could not have reigned over Jacob at that time, even had the people succeeded in placing him on the throne, for really Jacob was not there; nor has he been there at any time since.

The God of Abram, Isaac, and Jacob must needs have dealings with nations as nations to make it possible for those two prophecies to be fulfilled. Some writers say that it never will be done. Others say it cannot be done. But we are reminded of what the angel said to Abram: "Is there anything too hard for the Lord?"

In connection with the foregoing, we note other prophetic statements concerning the destiny of this wonderful city that may be of interest.

"Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."—Zechariah 2: 4.

"Many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day."—Verse 11.

"The Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again."—Verse 12.

"Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean."—Isaiah 52: 1.

That must be still in the future, according to the reports of our missionaries who have been there.

"Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people: He hath redeemed Jerusalem."—Verse 9.

Truly a Glorious Destiny

Yes, the angel told Mary that Jesus should reign over the house of Jacob. Other prophecies teach us that his kingdom shall extend until it shall embrace the whole earth. Malachi 1: 11; Zechariah 9: 10.)

Jesus told his apostles at Jerusalem that when he should come to the throne of his glory, that they also should sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. (Matthew 19: 28; Mormon 1: 83, 84.)

Here, then, is the set of the government of the future ages. From the very spot that "grew dark with mystery" while nature shuddered and wept at the tragedy of the cross, will God "shine" forth the "perfection of beauty," as he has never shone before, though it has been the center of the "light of the ages" from time unknown.

John, in his great vision of things future (Revelation 21: 22), saw no temple there at that time in "the city that lieth four square" with the names of the apostles in her foundation, and the twelve tribes on her gates. (Ezekiel 48: 31-35.) For the Lord God should be the temple, and the Lamb the light thereof.

Jesus in his kingdom will have no need of the Jewish tabernacle, with all its paraphernalia—the mercy seat and the ark of the covenant, with the perpetually burning shechinah, no more than he and the apostles had in the setting up of the preparatory kingdom after the veil was rent, two thousand years ago.

It is quite significant that when John caught a glimpse of things as they passed before him—thrown upon the heavens as the screen for the greatest moving picture production ever recorded, the ark was represented to him in a temple, accompanied with thunder and lightnings, voices and earthquakes, and great hail: a memorial of Mount Sinai and the ministration of death. (Revelation 11: 19.)

In fact, Jeremiah tells us that when Jerusalem should be called the throne of the Lord, the ark would not be remembered nor come into mind. (Jeremiah 3: 16, 17.) And faithful Paul, the "able minister of the New Testament" or covenant (2 Corinthians 3: 6), sought long and hard to cause the Hebrew converts to forget it in his day, but with discourag-

Some Modern Methods of Relief

(Address at Women's Department Institute, by Mrs. Ettella Kelley, Social Worker from the Provident Association of Kansas City, Missouri.)

I have been thinking how limited we people who do certain kinds of work become in our vocabularies. And that reminds me of a little story. While I was working for the Provident Association, four or five years ago, one of the workers brought a man to me and told me I might give him a good scolding. He had been a heavy drinker and did not provide for his family, and had come to the association for help. I told him just what his obligations were to his family, that his money should be used to support them, and that he should not spend it for drink in his home. He denied that he did this. "Well," I said, "where there is so much smoke there must be a little fire." At once, with tears in his eyes, he said, "Alas; we have no fuel!" So I learned that I must not talk in figures of speech.

I think the people who do welfare work learn these things early. I have been in the work for eight years. Some three and a half years ago the Kansas City Red Cross asked me to take over and organize their home service work, doing welfare work with sailors and soldiers and their families; and it was mostly working with the families, as the men had gone away or were going away soon.

We began our work with a basic idea. There never was a case that did not rest upon that basic idea. That idea is the solidarity of the home and family, the solidarity of community life, the solidarity of state life, the solidarity of our Government. This included the morale of the man at war and the winning of the principle for which he fought. So we began our great work with the basic idea of the family and our duty in keeping it up to the standard.

Early in my relief work there came a letter from our division office saying we were giving less relief than most cities of our size. I felt that we were absolutely giving adequate relief. What did that mean? It means that we had given a careful diagnosis of the family life. We knew that in pauperizing the individual we pauperized the community, and that a community was just as easily pauperized as an individual. So we were protecting our community life by giving less money and more opportunity.

We social workers build to a standard. I expect you know, many of you, what that standard is. It is, help, education, employment, and recreation. When we begin our diagnosis, we try to find out just where the family is out of harmony with our standard.

When we are asked to go into a home to give relief, we may have all sorts of sympathy, and yet we know there is a real fault, or a cause for the condition which we are seeking ing success in some instances. (Galatians 3 and 5; Romans 14: 5, 6; Colossians 2: 16, 17; Hebrews 7, 8, 9, and 10.) Yet many saw the truth concerning that matter and the ark was forgotten.

Nevertheless, in our day there are many from whose eyes the veil has never been taken away, who are seeking to revive it in the name of Christianity with a zeal and persistency worthy of a better conception of things ecclesiastical; at the same time stoutly opposing the idea of the house of Israel setting up a kingdom in the Holy Land—one of the plainest things taught in the Scriptures.

Inspiration says that when the Lord has done it, the Jews shall know, and the heathen shall know. (Ezekiel 37: 13, 14; also 28.) What about those who are neither? unless the word heathen is intended to mean Gentile.

to overcome. We must analyze and get down to the basic thing that is wrong. In the old days, we satisfied ourselves by giving; but brief is the good it does. We must systematize relief, finding the reasons for the disease. I think some place in one of Mrs. Eddy's books she calls it "dis-ease."

In the cities, of course, we have what we call exchanges. Then we know, or are in a position to know, what each individual agency has done for any one case. This lady may belong to one church, that lady to another church, that lady to some lodge, etc., and all of them in some way are called upon to attend some one in distress. I once had a case of which I thought I would like to make a synopsis. I went to the president in charge and told him what I should like to do. He gave his permission and I made the synopsis of the case. Well, I found that sixty-eight persons and institutions had helped that family—sixty-eight persons and institutions working on one poor widow and three children! Think of the waste of effort in a case of that kind! And that could happen right here in this community unless you get together in some way in a sort of exchange system. We are apt to spoil or harm a person by too much giving, so we should work together and get together, because we want to do the greatest good to an individual.

I am reminded of a woman I knew several years ago, with three children, the oldest two in their teens. She was very hard to work with. A great many of the churches had been called in, though she was a Baptist. One of my workers once asked me to go with her to see this woman. I went, and this poor woman talked all the time. She was so nervous and excited that I couldn't get a word in. When we left I told my worker that I thought that woman was mentally "off" in some way, as she was too excitable. She said she had never thought of her in that way. She went with me to a physician for examination and diagnosis. I thought perhaps she had inherited a social disease. The physician looked her over pretty carefully and decided she had not. Then the physician said that her record was something like "four plus" and that she probably should be in the asylum. Think of demanding of that woman the functioning of a normal mind! Think of the injustice of the thing!

Before taking this woman to the doctor, I called in all of the workers and each one told her experience with the woman. They decided that she didn't tell the truth, that she had not been "on the square." We figured out what we should do. She had not been "on the square," she had not done the things she should do, so we would not do anything. Is that justice? Sometimes we call this relief work, but there are some of our workers who think we are very cold-hearted. They say we still systematize too much.

Another thing we should do in our work is to take the father into our confidence, and not visit the mother and the children only. We must put some of the responsibility upon his shoulders. Sometimes he steps out of the door and lets the wife do all of the talking; then we must get him back in by some hook or crook.

Then, again, we must be very careful not to let the little children know all the things we do. They are very early pauperized. I remember families that we have worked with for eight years. I suppose you are saying that that is too long a time to aid any family, yet you cannot make people over in a day. Sometimes these people have a great pride in being helped by an organization, and the children will say to a neighbor's child, "Mrs. So-and-So comes to see us every week and brings us things, so we are just a little better than you are." Think of the peculiar reaction.

I know a little Irish woman who has two of the finest boys one ever saw. She came to this country when about eleven years of age. It has been my privilege to help one boy through high school, and in doing this it has been necessary to help this woman a great many times. She deserves it, as she is a hard working woman; yet, I sometimes see such an unfortunate reaction from those boys. I so wish that they had not had to know.

I wonder what it would do to any of us to be helped. Just what effect does it have? So I say, when you have a case to work on, make your diagnosis, form your plan; find the trouble to begin with, and make your plan and live up to it as quietly as possible.

In our modern day we are carrying on in a much more definite way than before. We are analyzing the situation. Sometimes I wonder if we do not spend too much time upon an analysis of the problem. As I said before, we don't want to think we can make the world over in a day. Not long since it was my privilege to look over a report that came to me from one of your own institutions. It was a modern method of diagnosis. The diagnosis began back at his prenatal life. It gave his record at birth and the environment at birth; then it gave his blood test and the date and form of that test; then it gave the physical history of the boy; then his reaction to institutional life; and, finally, it recommended what should be done for the boy. That is the modern analysis.

I say relief work has fashions. Each spring we have a new bonnet, or at least a new bee in our bonnet. A great many reports come to us from other cities. I remember one case of a man who had been shellshocked. I sent to New York for his home history. I was very much interested in it. He had been a soldier for a short time; had a social disease, and had become mentally unbalanced. This history told about how he lived as a child, how he did not play on the streets as the other children did, but played more as a girl would play. This report carried him on into his manhood and told of his peculiar actions, how he traveled the country and roamed about. At our public health service, I asked the doctor who had handled his case to read his history. He read it over and then asked me what I was going to do about it. I told him he could use the knowledge gained by its perusal in his treatment of the case.

Sometimes I think we carry on just a little too far in that work; but there is something that we are going to do about it. There will sometime be certain laws which will prevent a young man from getting into that condition. And if we cannot use these records for any other purposes, they will be valuable for statistical purposes.

In treating a family case we think first of the family. We think of the source the information came from about this family. Who called? Did the minister, or did the jailer? It will make a little difference in your estimation of the individual. We get our resources; what relatives the family has; and what is the condition of finances. What do the relatives say about the family? In this way we find our problem, and plan to help.

I think I cannot leave you without idealizing just a little bit. There is no work of greater satisfaction than working with individuals who are in distress in some way. There is no place you feel so humble as you do in stepping into the life of such a one. It meant very much to me to be able to step into the lives of those two boys, sons of the Irish woman, and direct them. It will mean much to you when you do something of the kind.

A Challenge; What's the Answer?

Omaha has plenty of "welfare" workers; sessions of the juvenile court are always well attended by men and women, who profess to be eager to aid in taking boys and girls from what may be unfit homes and placing them elsewhere. Volunteer inspectors are ready to report cases of negligence they may observe, and officers of the court interfere wherever they think proper.

This probably is the natural working out of the juvenile court destiny. But on Saturday a wifeless father sobbed as he told the judge no woman had ever come into his home to help, or to give instruction to the motherless daughters who are striving to make a home for themselves and their father. Complaint had been made by a volunteer "worker." None made offer of help, however, nor was it shown that any had inquired as to the circumstances before the father was hailed into court on charge of neglecting his family. A God-fearing man, member of a church, honest and hardworking, he told the judge, and none denied his statements; he also told the judge that no woman had crossed the threshold of his home, even when his oldest child was dangerously ill, and none denied that statement.

The judge expressed surprise that none of the good women of the church to which this man belongs had interested themselves in the case. This surprise will be shared by many. What happened? A juvenile court officer is under instructions to visit that home once a week, to inspect it.

What is the answer to such a challenge? Is there no way by which this man and his children may be kept together, made happy, and the needed instruction in home-making be given, and that they may lead their lives under ordinary conditions and not be subject to official oversight merely because they are bereft of wife and mother?—Editorial in Omaha Bee.

A Sister Honored

Sister Franc Hawley, of Lincoln, Nebraska, has recently been appointed chief probation officer for Lancaster County, that State. She succeeds Mrs. Sarah Gregory, who was forced to resign because of failing health. Sister Hawley has been acting as Mrs. Gregory's assistant for several months, and this appointment is an evidence of the confidence and trust she has won. Commenting, the Lincoln Star says: "During Mrs. Gregory's recent illness, Mrs. Hawley acted as chief juvenile officer. Before her marriage Mrs. Hawley was an instructor in the Burdette College of Boston and came to Iowa as member of the faculty in Graceland College, at Lamoni, Iowa. After her marriage the family moved to Lincoln where Mr. Hawley was for many years manager of Armour & Company's branch house. A few years ago they moved to Wyoming and took a claim. While there Mrs. Hawley was deputy county clerk of Weston County, and was the first woman in that county to run for a county office, being a candidate for county treasurer. Mrs. Hawley has been active in club work, both in Wyoming and Lincoln. . . . Over seven hundred juvenile cases were handled through the probation office here last year."

The Lincoln State Journal says: "Mrs. Hawley has for several months been chief assistant to Mrs. Gregory, and those interested in juvenile court work are certain it will be handled with rare intelligence and energy."

Sister Hawley will be remembered by former Graceland students as Miss Rich. She is a daughter-in-law of the late Brother Gideon Hawley and wife.

The Bureau of Miscellaneous Study

(The following message to the members of the institute arrived too late to be presented. Sister Sears' annual report was substituted and read before the assembly.)

The name of this bureau is self-explanatory. Unlike the other departments, it offers no specially prepared courses of study along any lines. Its function is to help our girls and women find the course already prepared by some other department that will fit their need; it will suggest books and texts already published that will be helpful to groups, classes, or individuals taking up some particular study; it will give earnest attention to the requests of individuals who, feeling the desire to contribute their "mites" of service to the cause we all love, ask for advice and counsel in making preparation for that service.

"What can I do to help?" is the question that comes to the lips of every woman. An opportunity comes, and too often it finds us unprepared to meet the demand of the hour. We were willing but, alas, we were not ready. Too meager knowledge, or a lack of training, kept us from performing the service we would gladly have done. That has been the experience common to all. So, feeling the need of increasing our sphere of usefulness and of broadening our vision that we may see and welcome the opportunities for service that will arise for women more and more, we must make preparation for it.

To the woman who stands at the threshold of the Women's Department, wondering in what way it can aid her, or where she shall turn for guidance in choosing something to study in the limited time she can spare from her daily routine, we suggest that she regard the bureau of miscellaneous study as the "information desk" of the department that will answer her questions about the various courses offered, give her suggestions of study, and information about the subjects that the department finds our women are interested in and that are specially helpful in preparing them to be of service.

No subject will ever come closer to the women than the home. Every woman is potentially a homemaker, whether that home be cottage, mansion, or a hall bedroom in some stranger's house. Her lot may be cast in the busy marts of the world, but even here she finds that the world's business centers in the home, great industries have arisen because of the demands of the home. She finds that many functions of family life, once dealt with by the individual family, have pushed out into the community and become matters of town, city, and state government. Our interest in home and child welfare, for the advancement of our own dear ones, will lead us into the broad field of civics, where we must study house-keeping on a big scale. For example, compulsory education, public health, clean streets, factory laws, child labor, public amusements, housing conditions are all extensions of home life. The bureau of miscellaneous study will put the women who desire to know more of their civic responsibilities in touch with women of the department qualified to plan and outline a course in civics that can be put to practical use in the community.

To give our best service we must know something of the workings of the human mind, and to the women who are seeking for more satisfactory solutions of their problems in the home, school, or business, or social service, we recommend the study of psychology. Nature's laws, like God's laws, are fixed, but man's interpretation of them changes as his understanding of them advances, so the psychology of to-day is far in advance of the old. In fact, psychology is as new a science as though no one had studied the human mind before the twentieth century. We are learning to apply the knowledge gained through this important study to our human relations.

There is general psychology, which gives us general information of the mind at work; applied psychology, which challenges our interest because it helps to direct our everyday affairs by making us see psychology in action; and there is child psychology, which to mothers and teachers makes a knowledge of psychology a real asset in dealing with children, as it helps them understand how to use the personality of the child and find a stimulus for his guidance in his looks and acts.

There has been a demand for courses in English, elementary and advanced work, reading courses for information, culture, and appreciation of our literature. This demand has been met by offering them courses obtained from the Bureau of Education, at Washington, District of Columbia, and from the courses offered by the best elementary and high schools. There is a growing demand for courses prepared by our own people, and to those who have had training and education a big field of usefulness waits.

Sociology, closely related to the work of social service bureau, offers a broad field of study to those interested in the age-old question, "Who is my neighbor?" and who feel the need of rendering service to the poor, the needy, and to their community.

Parliamentary practice, current events, government, are other subjects the bureau recommends. Any other subjects the women want will be arranged for, if their wants are made known. Through it they may be put in touch with the many pamphlets, bulletins, and the various courses in reading, domestic science, household economy now put out by the Government.

Make use of your bureau of miscellaneous study, that you may be of greater use. LUCIE H. SEARS, Supervisor.

As Dew From Heaven

(Two letters recently received have contained testimony of blessing received from the divine source of all good. Another that has lain in our desk some time, tells of encouragement given at a reunion. Our readers will catch, on the rebound, some of this spiritual manna which came to our workers as "heavenly dew.")

" . . . The more I thought of what you wanted me to do, the more I felt and realized my inefficiency. True, I had a vision of the possibilities, but did not feel I understood it all well enough. I prayed over it, and fasted, and asked the Lord to make my duty known to me, through some one of his choosing. . . . This morning we went to sacrament meeting. I soon perceived the spirit of love and unity which was present, and, as well, the seeming presence of angels, to which others also testified. Many prayers and testimonies were offered, and the gift of tongues, in which all were spoken to, and three individuals, as well. As the meeting neared its close I said to myself, 'Well, you need not worry; the Lord does not need you!'

"Just then a brother arose and began to prophesy, speaking to all present. Then, suddenly turning to me, he called me by name and said, among other things: "Seek not to lay the armor down, nor be discouraged. Move forward and God will enable you to do much good and to speak many words of comfort and counsel to the daughters of Zion!" There was more, but I cannot remember all. This brother had known nothing, could know nothing, of my prayers or thoughts along this line of work. So this is evidence enough to me that I should at least try to do what you ask, which I will, most humbly. . . . "B."

" . . . At the district convention just closed here, our department was given Saturday night. I tried to present our work and its policies under the new order of things, and especially did I try to get the sisters to see our part in the redemption of Zion. We had about three hundred out, and I felt good in addressing them. Next morning, at the prayer meeting, which was of a very spiritual nature, the dear Lord saw fit to speak to me through Bishop B., encouraging me in the work I have undertaken to do, and assuring me that my influence would be felt for good in all the districts, and that he would send his angels before me to prepare the hearts of the Saints to receive my message. I was also warned to keep humble and prayerful. This, dear sister, I will always try to do, for I very well know I can do nothing of myself. . . . Surely the Lord is blessing our work and bringing it into such prominence that it can accomplish much good. . . . "T."

" . . . The burden of the Spirit that rested upon me that morning with a message for the handmaidens assembled upon the camp ground, and especially to those mothers upon whom fall the burdens of caring for little ones, was to remind them that, many times as they had rejoiced under the influence of the Spirit in these meetings, their hearts had burned with a desire to be of service to God. They were told to rejoice now, for they were called with a holy calling already, than which there was none holier! They were called to be coworkers with God in fashioning and developing the physical and spiritual natures of his little children. Their prayers and desires were known unto him, and also the fact that the burdens of love they were carrying did not allow them much time for study. Therefore he had raised up throughout the church handmaidens who were free from such duties, who should study and be teachers and instructors unto those more burdened. . . . He also spoke to those mothers whose hearts had been troubled by the censure of the play of their children, which censure came from those who have forgotten the gladness of youth. He told them to be comforted; that play is an instinct implanted by Him who delights in the song of birds in the forest, or the frolic of young animals on the hillside. He said that the cooing of the babes and the gambols of the children are as pleasing to Him as are the songs of praise by the older ones in their prayer and testimony meetings, for they are but their expressions of joy in their creation! It was also added, that play was innocent until perverted by man, and the mothers were urged to seek wisdom, and ask of Him in secret, that they may guide their children aright. Also, if it be the desire of His people, there should be those appointed among us to supervise these matters. He expressed pleasure with the children upon our reunion ground, and promised to bless them that they should become a righteous generation.

" . . . He urged his handmaidens to come often before him. As they go about their duties, they should lift up their hearts to him concerning the food and care of their little ones; yes, even concerning their raiment, for the material needs of the children are dear to their heavenly Father's heart. Instruction concerning these things shall be given and his law shall be made plain unto them, if they will but remember that theirs is, indeed, a most holy calling. . . . S."

Dresser Drawers

Even for the tidy women, it requires effort to keep the dresser drawers in order. They demand constant attention if they would be sightly and the contents be preserved from "mussing." Many a dresser contains a varied assortment of boxes in which small accessories are kept. If cretonne pockets are made similar to a shoe pocket, only made in strips to run around the inside of the drawer, it will greatly facilitate the matter and give more drawer space.

Sister Dennis Hurd, of Ingram, Wisconsin, sends her appreciation to the Saints who have sent her reading matter and subscribed for papers for her children. It has helped the family in many ways and will likely be the means of their getting to move to a community where there are Saints.

LETTERS

A Year of Progress in Zion

Report of the pastor in Zion to the Presidency and Saints.

Since assuming direct responsibility of the work in Zion under the Presidency, and establishing my office one year ago, the needs of the work have been constantly before me day and night, and it has been with much prayerful concern that I have carefully moved forward in the things that I felt ought to be done. Wherein I may have failed, I hope to benefit by such failures in the future; wherein I have succeeded, I give thanks to the Master of life, whom I have constantly sought for guidance, and to the noble and consecrated band of my collaborators in the priesthood who have worked so faithfully for the welfare of Zion. Notably among these I desire to mention the pastors and supervisors under my direction, who have labored and advised with me freely and without friction. I desire to mention especially the services of my assistant, Brother Arthur Allen, who has been faithful and painstaking in the details of the office work, and upon whom the burden of such detail has largely fallen. Indeed, it is difficult to see how the work that has been accomplished, especially in the important field of reporting and visiting, could have been brought to a successful consummation without his aid.

I owe much and the church owes much to the excellent work of my predecessor, Brother Walter W. Smith, in laying the foundation whereby it was made possible to carry on the work consigned to me from his hand. With whole purpose of heart he has rendered much valuable assistance by his kindly suggestions and counsel when sought.

We established our office in regular working order July 1, 1920, and immediately took a survey of all the families of Zion, and turned our attention to stimulating the work of visiting among the various officers of the groups, making various changes where we deemed it advisable and pertinent to the work. Such changes were made with much prayerful consideration, and have resulted for the good of the work. The work of clearing out of dead timber from our quorums and of readjusting them has largely been accomplished, and to some extent they have taken on new life, but much still remains to be done in this respect.

In our opinion, a systematic course of study should be arranged throughout the church for each quorum of the priesthood, so that all could be working to a common end, and developing conjointly to the same purpose. The attention of the Presidency has been called to this matter and we are hoping that something may be done in the near future.

The group system is accomplishing very effective work, and as a result of the large number of visits made by the officers, the prayer services have been constantly growing in attendance, until there are upward of a thousand in regular attendance every Wednesday evening.

Since taking charge three new groups have been organized, two in the Englewood territory, which church we took over from the Kansas City Stake, and one about a mile east of Independence and one half mile north of the Spring Branch road where a number of Saints have recently gathered. Brother A. L. Sanford, of the Sunday school organized in Zion, has just lately organized a Sunday school there.

During the year the Bishopric has bought a lot in Englewood, where it is contemplated building a church as soon as practicable. That congregation has outgrown its old quarters.

A fine church has also recently been purchased on North Liberty for the North Liberty Saints. This church is the most centrally located of any of our places of worship, and bids fair to become very popular, both to our own people and outsiders.

The choir and orchestra have rendered very valuable assistance, and by their faithful services under competent direction have been an eminently contributing factor to our success in our preaching services. The band also has been giving valuable assistance in a half-hour concert preceding the Saturday evening picture program on the east lawn, which from two to three thousand people attend regularly. These pictures are the best that can be procured for the purpose, and are better this year than ever before. Much credit is due Brother George H. Hulmes for his faithfulness in this service.

The Sunday school work is progressing in all our churches under their various leaders. The Stone Church is very much crowded for room. The attendance has constantly grown, reaching a maximum of nearly fifteen hundred during the young people's meetings last winter. The same is true of Walnut Park church, which is also crowded.

The Religio also is doing good work. Brother John A. Gardner has recently been appointed field worker in Zion to fill the place of Brother John M. Lloyd, who was under the necessity of resigning on account of business affairs taking him out of the city. Brother Gardner is pushing the work with his usual enthusiasm and has an able helper in Brother Henry Stahl, president of the Stone Church Religio. Brother Stahl is developing rapidly and is accomplishing a good work in this field.

We do not wish to fail to mention the noble, consecrated band of young people, literally hundreds of them in Zion, who under the direction of the pastor through the organized classes, have worked untiringly for the welfare of Zion. All are acquainted with the success of our young people's revival. The impetus was given by our young people and the movement is rolling round the world and will become an annual affair in all our larger branches. We reverently and prayerfully say, "God bless our young people," and confidently commend them to the Master, whom the vast majority so faithfully serve.

Independence being the central place where our general church organization centers, as well as those local to Zion, there has been some little overlapping in the working of these organizations; without friction, however. These matters will soon be adjusted, on the return of the President.

We wish here to commend all the various departments of the work, which time will not allow us to mention upon this occasion.

We wish publicly to commend the men of the priesthood working in the groups, for the visiting done. Much care and attention has been given this feature of the work and the perfecting of our group system. We require that every family shall be visited once every six months, and two special visiting campaigns have been launched, aside from the regular systematic visiting which many of our officers do. We have in all 37 groups organized and nearly 203 men actively engaged in group labor. During the year, from July 1, 1920, to July 1, 1921, every family in Zion has been visited, according to our records; nearly every family twice, and a large number several times; some where sickness prevailed, as many as five of six times. During the period above stated the elders have made 1,880 personal visits; the priests, 1,873; the teachers, 1,104; the deacons, 650; making a grand total of 5,507 family visits during the year. This report of visits does not include the financial calls made by the deacons, which work is under the supervision of the Bishop. The work of the auditorium drive, too, was largely done by the group officers.

Brother Allen and the church recorder have been busily engaged in a comparison of our newly revised records and those of the recorder, which is revealing much carelessness in reporting deaths, marriages, and some baptisms in the past which has made a difference in the records. These are now being eliminated as information is procured.

These items record briefly our progress in Zion during the last year. The outlook is hopeful in the main, but with that brightness of hope there is mingled a sadness that some of our people yet fail to comprehend the meaning of consecration. Some apparently have not yet been touched by the Holy Spirit, which is their heritage by the laying on of hands, according to their faith. There are petty bickerings, and unseemly gossiping among some who should be above such things by reason of having named upon them the name of Christ. . . . We call upon the Saints in Zion to come up higher. Let us put away all that stands in the way of full service and consecration to our heavenly Father.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am

Your fellow laborer,

ROY V. HOPKINS, Pastor in Zion.

The Spirit of Consecration Bears Fruit

The Saints of San Bernardino are not impoverished by giving liberally.

A letter from our part of the field might be of interest to some of your readers, and it might also be of some encouragement to others to know what the faithful Saints in the San Bernardino Branch are doing. It is due the Saints here that some mention be made of their splendid work, and it is due others to know that the spirit of the latter-day glory is working among God's people even away out here on the borderland of the great West.

Much has been said already, in the church papers, of the work being done here, but I wish to speak of some of the more specific things instead of the work in general. My wife and I came to this city in November, 1919, total strangers to everyone here. From the very first reception the Saints received us with open arms, so to speak, and have continued from that day to this to be more than solicitous of our personal welfare and comfort in every material way, and at the same time they have given exceptional moral and spiritual support to every effort to do ministerial labors in this vicinity.

While I have not been engaged in missionary work very long myself, I have been a missionary's son for a long time and have had opportunity of seeing both missionary and Saints in "action" at various places. I am frank to state that it has not been my privilege to be among a better class of people than the Saints of San Bernardino Branch, and I am sure that few missionaries have received a more hearty support than it has been my fortune to receive from these good people, one and all.

At first I was laboring here as missionary and assisted the pastor, Brother Will A. Boren, as best I could, by preaching for him Sunday evenings. His work is such that it is impossible for him to attend night services. Because of the burden of his work, Brother Boren resigned as pastor some nine months ago and I was placed in charge by sanction of the First Presidency and Twelve. Since that time I have conscientiously devoted my entire time to the interests of the work in the branch and the immediate vicinity. Brother Boren has been my right-hand man, and it is with pleasure that I am able to state that his services are of a high order and that they are highly appreciated by myself and others. I have had the unreserved support, also, of each and every other member of the local priesthood, and there is that spirit of brotherly love and good feeling among these members that is encouraging to see.

The branch has been doing good work for a long time. There is a spirit of consecration and of devotion to the interests of the church work that is above the average. But I feel that the real awakening came when the call was made for the new auditorium. There were those who honestly thought it could not be done. They even gave utterance to their doubt many times. Possibly they could not be blamed for this, because it was a big thing to undertake, and as it was the first big thing of its kind that the Reorganization has ever tried to do, we did not know what our strength was until we tried. We set to work, however, with our might and main and placed our goal at four thousand dollars—and we raised it. We only number 146 members now, and at that time I believe we were only 135, including children and young people. Our achievement in this endeavor seemed to fire the Saints with a zeal and a determination never felt before. Everyone was happy in the thought that they had done something in a material way towards the literal upbuilding of Zion.

There were some who predicted that our tithing receipts would fall off and that other necessary expenses could not be raised. But time has proved these fears to be unfounded. Our branch has raised more money for tithing, for branch expenses, for Religio and Sunday school work, and for Christmas offering since then than they ever raised in the same amount of time before. Not only have the Saints done more in a material way, but they have been greatly helped spiritually. There never was a greater spirit of zeal and consecration in this branch than there has been since that "drive." Instead of being impoverished by their giving, they were enriched an hundredfold. The more they give the more they are able and willing to give. No one here has suffered because of the special efforts made in this thing. There never was a greater time of rejoicing than now, since the Saints have all cooperated in this big effort.

When the call came a few days ago for a special consecration to raise the church indebtedness, there was not one word of complaint, but after the Sunday morning's discourse, which was made in an appeal for this deficit, over one hundred dollars was paid to the Bishop's solicitor, with a promise of much more. Considering the fact that this is our vacation time, when many are away, it will be seen that this was doing well.

The cooperation of the Saints and their good work have enabled us to get the gospel message before the people here as never before. There is not a household in town nor in the suburbs and small towns around here that does not know of our work, for it has been published and republished in the daily papers, upon the front pages and in bold type, what the Latter Day Saints were doing. Our faith is held in respect by the better class of people all over the country. Our church services are being well attended by members and non-members alike. Of course, we have a little outside opposition occasionally, but it always results in good for our cause. We have nothing to fear from outside pressure—that only brings us closer together. What we need to fear is trouble within our own ranks. We are glad to state that none of that has occurred to bother us here of late.

We had a little "brush" with the Baptists here recently and had the satisfaction of coming out with our colors flying and with a great many more friends for the work than before. The First Day Adventists are now trying to run us out of the country and have imported a lecturer from Portland, Oregon, to do the work. The result of this attack is to be a ten-night debate some time in September between the writer and the imported lecturer, a Mr. E. W. Shepherd, of the other faith.

A great deal more could be said of the progressive attitude of the Saints here, but we will refrain. Suffice it to say that there is a wonderful degree of spirituality and determination manifest towards the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, and a placing self and selfish interests in the background. As pastor of the branch, it has created within me a desire to return all that is within me for the good of the work, in part payment, at least, for the many kindnesses shown to me and mine, personally, and towards the work which we are trying to uphold.

With a greater hope for the future of the church than ever before, and with a desire to consecrate all that I have for its advancement, I remain,

Yours fraternally,

D. AMOS YATES.

Street Preaching in Australia

The First Presidency: During the past month my labors have been mainly in the neighborhood of the South Brisbane Branch. In the first two weeks of the month I completed my series of special services, which I had been holding at Eagle Junction.

I have been doing house-to-house tracting in different neighborhoods. I have been preaching on the streets of the city regularly every week, and in this have been well assisted by the local priesthood and Saints. We are being blessed greatly in the work. The interest is of the best. We are able to hold the crowds. There are no interjections, but there are always many private inquiries. The multitudes are tired of the present order of things and are looking for the kingdom of God.

I have also continued my lectures to the Brisbane priesthood on "Practical homiletics." The young men are also invited to these lectures, and I believe that the result will be good. We will be taking logic, grammar, etc., next, after which we will probably take up lectures on systematic theology, from the three books.

I work in perfect harmony with the local and district priesthood, and while they assist me in my work on the street and otherwise, I assist them in their branch, preaching, etc., when I am asked to.

We have just had a consecration week locally, and have raised about 9 pounds ($45) for a publicity campaign. We have taken a public hall for nine nights, every Sunday and Thursday evening from July 17 to August 14. We expect Elder Haworth (seventy), Bishop Lewis, and another missionary to assist us. We are advertising well, enlisting the local priesthood and Saints to assist in door-to-door work, organizing, singing, etc. It is to be held in conjunction with the Southern Queensland conference.

May the Lord bless and prosper every department of his latter-day work.

Your brother in Christ,
HERMAN PEISKER.

Faith in the Church Developments

This brother is not worried over the affairs that trouble some others.

I do not see why some of us weak members are wondering why the Herald Publishing Company moved to Independence. I thought we all knew that when it moved here from Plano, Illinois, that Joseph Smith was one of the editors, and he said he thought it was one step nearer Zion. Ever since he said that I have looked forward to the time when it would be moved to Independence, and of course am not in any way surprised. We feel as though an old friend was gone, and the town seems more quiet, yet the one-time Herald Office whistle makes as much noise as ever.

When I first came here in 1906 I heard some call Lamoni the head of the church, which surprised me. This is the second largest branch. Independence is the largest in the world. The Lord said that the center place of Zion was Independence, Missouri; and that Zion should not be moved out of her place. (See Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1, also 98: 4.)

Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God, just as his father was before him, and the moving of the Herald Office is another evidence that he was a true prophet and of his foresight and clear understanding of the work of God.

Some of us are wondering about President Frederick M. Smith and his expensive long trips. I believe that he is the right man in the right place and that he is also a true prophet. His long trips are of great importance to the church and to the world. It seems that he has a greater work to do than his father had, and that no other man could do the work. He has sent young men here to college that in a short time were ordained elders and became shining lights to the church and to the world. I will name one of them: Brother Frank B. Almond.

Some of us are not thankful enough for the very many blessings that we have received and for the many good things God has done and is still doing for us. I have always been thankful for Graceland College. I love its very name. Its teachers and professors are all good men of God, the right men in the right places. God in his goodness and great wisdom placed them there. Great blessings have come to us in that God has placed good and pure men in the Presidency of the church and in the presidency of this stake and also in the bishopric here; men that love God and love to do right, and God loves them in turn. I praise God for it, and that he has set good, wise men over other stakes also. God could hardly have made a better choice for the president of the Far West Stake, a good, wise, and faithful brother, that I call a product of this stake. Brother R. S. Salyards spent the best of his life here in building up this branch and is able to do much good there.

LAMONI, IOWA.

E. T. DAWSON.

Selfishness Prevents Zion Conditions

A brother writes to the Presidency rather feelingly of the tendency to be petty and selfish, to the detriment of the work and our own progress.

Am inclosing a report that covers some of my work for the month of June; the easier part; other labor cannot be represented in or by figures so easily.

The task has not been a pleasant or light one, in some respects, the past month, nor so far this month. It seems that one no sooner gets difficulties and problems settled in one district or group, than other troubles arise in some other district; the main trouble, I think, is selfishness and self-assertiveness.

You will recall how that prior to the Civil War the States were quite contentious and jealous of so-called rights. One need not but expect the same human nature to manifest itself for some time, as we coordinate and bring hitherto more or less independent bodies into closer relationship, bound together under one head. In time, that recurrent manifestation of insubordination, selfishness, and desire for individual, independent action will give way to hearty cooperation and ready response as a unit, submerging all else for the good of the whole.

We are endeavoring to impress upon those who need it, the thought that we cannot dwell in Zion and remain there, unless we shall develop to the point as above suggested.

Brethren, we are in school, preparing for Zion now. Many will not make grades in this school of preparation good enough to entitle them to occupy in Zion. Many, I think, will drop out before we reach our goal, too selfish and self-willed.

Again, if I am able to read the times, the church may expect considerable defection and falling away.

The Lord gave as one of the signs of his coming, the fact that "because iniquity should abound, the love of many should wax cold." The fact that many will cease in their love and work for Christ, because of the faults they see in others; many, aye, will be developed to the point where they will turn aside also, because they disagree with this or that temporary, or permanent policy, which they, in their judgment, think is not good; also, they will be looking for faults, and though they may not find any grievous ones, they will imagine some one or ones at fault and turn aside just as readily as though some were really grievously at fault.

It will draw the line between those whose fidelity is steadfast for Christ and his church and those who trust in the arm of flesh, and so are affected when they see imperfections in the arm which they trust, or think they see mistakes. The former class will trust and have confidence in flesh, their fellow laborer, and those in authority as they should, but remain unaffected towards the church if they (their brethren) do fail.

Probably I have not expressed myself as clearly as I should, but I hope that you will understand the point I have tried to make. If it seems unnecessary that I should have written you thus, I may explain that I did so, in part, that you might be informed of conditions as I feel they are out away from the central point, though this condition may exist there for aught I know; I think it will become more or less prevalent. But with the sort that can be depended on under any and all conditions, far more can be accomplished than with many more who are not so dependable, so any such sifting may be of service to the church; another case of Gideon and his army.

May the Lord bless and favor Zion and those who labor for her weal.

CULDESAC, IDAHO, July 2, 1921.

Editors Herald: Children's Day was observed at Gifford Branch, Sunday, June 12. The young folks certainly had a day of rejoicing as well as did those of senior years, who enjoyed the young people's activities in the program, such as drills, recitations, songs, etc.

The program was nearly two hours long, and every minute was enjoyed by all. The seating capacity began to be taxed towards noon. There were nearly two hundred people present. The program was well gotten up. Much time and pains were taken to make it a success.

We were fortunate in having with us Apostles J. W. Rush-ton and U. W. Greene, and Bishop J. F. Keir. So, after the program, Brother Rushton gave us a twenty-minute talk that thrilled all with the spirit of service to the Master, Brother Rushton expressing himself that it was a day of rejoicing for him as well as the young, though he was not very old himself.

Noontime came and a bounteous lunch was spread for all, Saints and nonmembers. After lunch and the house was cleared and reseeded, U. W. Greene gave us a splendid sermon touching on many phases of the work and giving us a brief history of the people in Palestine and the downfall of the city of Jerusalem, etc., which was very interesting to a thinking people. After an hour and a quarter of attentive listening to Brother Greene's sermon, all went about one half mile to a beautiful pond of water, where baptismal services were conducted. Five splendid people were baptized, and the good Spirit prevailed.

In the evening services at half past seven, those who were baptized were confirmed, and after the confirmation Bishop J. F. Keir delivered to us a splendid sermon, touching on tithing and other duties of the Saints, and the plans of the bishopric moving out to handle the work intrusted to their care.

This Children's Day will long be remembered by all present, and we are all looking forward to the time when we can enjoy the sweet communion of the children and Saints and friends again.

PETER F. KLAUS.

Council Bluffs Items

The attendance of last Sunday at all services was somewhat affected by the heat.

Elder John W. Peterson gave an illustrated lecture on the South Sea Islands, which was much enjoyed, and favorable comments were heard on all except its length.

Elder Milo Burnett and family, late of Davenport, Iowa, are now located in the city, and we note with pleasure the interest they still evidence in the work of God.

At the last business meeting two were called to the office of elder and one to the office of priest, besides those who were ordained to the office of deacon. The great need of men to occupy in the office of teacher is very noticeable, and we are trusting that the heavenly Father will satisfy this demand soon.

Brother Roy Harrington, of Wisconsin, with his family, is spending a vacation of about a month with relatives and friends in western Iowa, more especially in Council Bluffs and vicinity.

Much comment is heard relative to a sermon delivered by Elder G. J. Harding last Sunday, the 10th. He spoke feelingly and disapprovingly of the demoralizing effects of the bathing resorts, public dance halls, and places where pool and other games are indulged in, which is even affecting the morals of some who are in the church. Brother Harding has occupied for some months the office of justice of the peace in the city and occupies a position to observe correctly the causes of moral lapses. It is certain that modesty is at a very low ebb among the people generally, as it has been prophesied that it would be. Iniquity does abound, and the Christ said it would, while many are saying that the world is getting better. This saying comes from those whose ideals of something better is being brought to a lower plane.

10th, and while making a visit to relatives and friends ministered for us the word. He also spoke at the Religio of the vitiating effects of dress and the exposure of the human body, at the bathing resorts especially. He said that it was the duty of the Religio to set our standards of purity and righteousness higher, and to protest against those conditions which are having a demoralizing effect on the modesty of the people.

The subject of how the Reorganization received its authority was treated at the Religio, and in the evidences produced it was shown that those who held authority in the old organization did not lose their authority by making mistakes where those mistakes were made unintentionally, and they repented of the mistake as soon as discovered, as was the case with Gurley, Briggs, and others. The authority of men became affected when men willfully entered into sin and willfully continued therein, showing no desire to repent. The reorganizing of the Presidency and the Twelve of the church of to-day, it was clearly demonstrated, stood upon as high authority as did the original Presidency organized in 1832, and the Twelve organized in 1835. It was emphasized that the command of God to exercise the authority already held was sufficient to confer all grades of the priesthood on those whom he might call. Men in the old church held the Melchisedec priesthood, that was not vitiated by any willful error, and no crime, and the men holding this priesthood were called upon by direction of God to ordain men called to occupy in the apostolic quorums of the Presidency and Twelve, and God has borne witness and is bearing witness that the church as at present organized is approved of Heaven.

New Zealand Needs More Workers

First Presidency: I have been pleased to read of the onward movements of the church, especially in the realization of the great need for the establishment of Zion.

I have also been interested in hearing of the work in foreign fields and hope to see the needs of those places supplied.

Notwithstanding the urgent need of those fields in Europe, etc., I desire to put a plea before you for more efficient and advanced workers to be sent to this land.

I have just returned home, after spending three weeks in Auckland assisting Brother Robinson. While up there we were pleasantly surprised by Brother Waller, from Honolulu. I received much help and encouragement from him and the work there has been benefited greatly through his fatherly advice and counsel.

We hope to be successful in planting the work among the Maoris of this country. To the present our efforts have lacked the persistent vim necessary for this kind of work, but there is still a strong desire in us to do the business.

I have ordered a lantern outfit from Brother A. W. Smith which we hope to receive and have working in the spring.

Best wishes for your welfare and the success of the church,

Sincerely, in gospel bonds,

ROTORUA, NEW ZEALAND.

ALBERT L. LOVING.

Making Friends to the Church in Australia

Fireside talks are an effective method of missionary work in that far-away land.

First Presidency: Am inclosing a statistical report of labors performed in the Northern District, New South Wales.

When last reporting I spoke of a "new opening" at Kempsey and have the pleasure of reporting good results there since. I have just returned from a tour including the mentioned place, and prior to leaving two names were submitted for baptism, which will be attended to later. There seem bright prospects for future work there and we have made lots of friends to the church. Convincing people—in this far distant land—that there are two churches named Latter Day Saints is a big job, but we have succeeded at Kempsey.

I have also labored at Bulahdelah where we have a zealous

Two-Day Meetings

Central Michigan: Butman, August 6, 7; Coleman, August 13, 14; Brant, August 20, 21. Everyone invited to attend these meetings, and please bring full basket. Matthew Umphrey, district president, Bentley, Michigan.

Conference Notices

Northern Saskatchewan convention and conference with Pleasant Lake Branch, at Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, July 21-24. All trains will be met at Shellbrook. Those coming by auto, please bring bedding. A charge of 25 cents per meal will be made. W. J. Cornish, president; Eva Land, secretary, R. F. D. 1, Senlac, Saskatchewan.

Spring River, at Nowata, Oklahoma, October 7 to 9. A. C. Silvers, district president, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Southern Missouri, with Beaver Branch during the reunion at Tigris, August 19 to 21. Branch presidents and secretaries will please send their reports and assessments to the undersigned a few days previous to conference. All who contemplate coming by railroad, please come to Cedar Gap on morning trains and notify us several days ahead so that arrangements can be made to transport them out to conference. A. V. Closson, president; Benjamin Pearson, secretary, Tigris, via Cedar Gap, Missouri.

people. I also visited Johns River, where I called upon some of our people and performed a marriage ceremony in our local church building.

Apart from the inclosed "report" I have visited a number of people, both day and night, holding private meetings and discussing church propositions with bright prospects. These meetings are more effectual at times than the public preaching services, and the two prospective candidates are the direct outcome of these talks.

I have accepted the kind offer of the church to undergo the prescribed course in religious education and will be leaving Sydney by the S. S. Tahiti for San Francisco on July 23, arriving some time in August. Elder Blackmore will be traveling for the same purpose by the same boat.

I will avail myself of every opportunity for development while in America so as to be better fitted for my high calling, and to this end do I desire the assistance of the Presidency.

Hoping to make your acquaintance in the near future, and with a desire to assist in forwarding the interests of the church, I am

Fraternally yours,

WILLIAM PATTERSON.

BULAHDELAH, NEW SOUTH WALES.

Upon the leaving of Toronto for his new appointment in the Chatham District, Elder J. R. Grice was given a surprise by the Mnemosyne chapter of Temple Builders and presented with an edition of Canadian verse, containing the Canadian colors for a bookmark. In their address they expressed much appreciation of his work in the community and a desire that he might succeed as well in his new field.

The Byrnville Branch, in Harrison County, Indiana, presided over by Lea Byrn, has about ninety members. They are operating a Sunday school with good interest, and prayer meetings are well attended. Brother Metcalf has been holding a series of meetings there which were very well attended.

Conference Minutes

SPOKANE.—At Coeur d'Alene reunion, June 25, 1921. Apostle U. W. Greene, associated with district presidency, chosen to preside. Thirteen ministerial reports were read. Statistical reports were received as follows: Spokane District (N. R. Group) 37; Spokane Branch, 396; Gifford, Idaho, 123; Sagle, Idaho, 73; Palouse, Washington, 34; Valley, Idaho, 56; Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, 57. Quite a satisfactory report was read from a committee sent out by the Presidency of the church, consisting of U. W. Greene and J. W. Rushton, of the Twelve, associated with James F. Keir, of the Bishopric, to investigate certain conditions disturbing the work in the district. The report was approved. Recommendation was presented by U. W. Greene that Carl Crum be ordained to the office of elder, and that Harry Fry and Guy Crum be ordained to the office of priest. Recommendation was approved. It was provided that the next conference be held at Sagle, Idaho. Location of next reunion left with district presidency and reunion committee. District presidency, associated with bishop's agent and two others elected by the body, constitute the reunion committee. James Sage and S. N. Gray were so elected. Resolution that all ministerial reports be in hands of district secretary ten days before the convening of conference was approved. Recommendation that W. H. Kelley be president of the district with W. P. Yates as counselor was approved. W. H. Kelley then named Oscar Case as second counselor, which action was approved. Oliver Turnbull was sustained as secretary and W. W. Fordham was chosen as assistant secretary. Rufus T. Smith was recommended to the general chorister for appointment as district chorister. District treasurer was instructed to purchase six dozen song-books for district use. Oliver Turnbull, clerk.

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Mallard, Iowa, June 11, 12. Presided over by District President J. B. Barrett. Reports from all branches in district save one. Officers elected: J. B. Barrett, president; C. E. Anderson and E. R. Butterworth, counselors; Lena M. Talcott, secretary; C. E. Anderson, treasurer; J. D. Talcott, chorister; L. V. Butterworth, district librarian. Preaching during conference by S. T. Pendleton, E. R. Butterworth, J. C. Crabb. On Sunday morning the Saints came fasting to the prayer service and a time of great rejoicing was had which will long be remembered by those privileged to be present. Ward B. Johnson was ordained to office of teacher, under the hands of J. B. Barrett and A. R. Crippen. The attendance was good and the Spirit of the Master was manifest throughout the conference. Adjourned to meet at Deloit in October. Lena M. Talcott, secretary, Arion, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

DEMPSEY.—Gomer Wells Dempsey, born at Nevada, Missouri, March 16, 1895; died at base hospital, Commercy, France, January 24, 1919. Enlisted in the Machine Gun Company of Nevada, Missouri. Was sent to the border in 1916 for six months. Called to service again in 1917. Spent nine months at Fort Sill. From there was transferred to the 110 Train Ammunition Company. Passed through the Argonne engagement, continuing in active service until the signing of the armistice. Died of bronchial pneumonia, following influenza. His body was shipped to Nevada, Missouri, arriving July 2, 1921. He leaves a father, mother, 2 sisters, and 3 brothers. Baptized July 16, 1908. Funeral sermon by George Jenkins, assisted by A. C. Silvers.

DAHLEM.—Glen G. Dahlem was born May 19, 1898, at Joliet, Illinois. Baptized September 5, 1909. Killed in action in France, August 3, 1918. His body was returned to Madison, Wisconsin, where the funeral took place June 11, 1921. Sermon by W. A. McDowell. He leaves father, 4 brothers, 2 sisters, and many relatives. Glen was loved and respected by all who knew him. He was willing to lay down his life for his friends.

WILLIAMS.—Geraldine Williams, daughter of Brother and Sister Dave Williams, died at the age of 15, at Denver, Colorado. She was loved by all who knew her. Surely a godly character was exhibited in her life. Funeral services conducted by Hale W. Smith from Yeager's Parlors.

TONKS.—Alfred Tonks was born August 21, 1854, at Shropshire, England. Came to America when but a young man. Was led marvelously to the light of the gospel, baptized August 17, 1894. For several years he has been a conspicuous figure in the congregations of the Saints in Chicago. He, with his wife, lived faithfully. Died at the close of a seemingly "perfect day," May 7, 1921, at his home in Chicago. Funeral by Ward L. Christy; interment at Joliet, Illinois.

CHANDLER.—Willis R., eldest son of William and Phoebe Chandler, born July 13, 1859, at Cambridge, Iowa. Departed this life, June 22, 1921, at Colorado Springs, Colorado. Married to Harriet M. Thomas, May 16, 1885. To this union were born 2 sons, Roy and Chester, who with his wife, three grandchildren, one brother, and many relatives and friends remain to mourn. Baptized while yet a young man at Des Moines, Iowa. Funeral at Lamoni, J. A. Gunsolley in charge, sermon by C. Scott.

BRUNSON.—Hiel Brunson was born near Princeville, Illinois, September 4, 1862, and died at his home near Lee Center, Illinois, June 10, 1921. The most of his life was lived in Illinois, except a few years' residence in Wisconsin. Married Laura Whiteaker, February 8, 1883. To this union were born 2 children, Maude, now Mrs. Frank Ford, of Lee Center, Illinois; and Marion Hiel, who preceded his father in death twenty years ago. Baptized in early life and came of a line of people on the Brunson side who united with the church at its inception in the days of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and who passed through the persecution and expulsion of the Saints from Missouri. Buried from the union church at Lee Center. Services in charge of J. L. Cooper; sermon by F. M. Cooper. Hundreds were in attendance from different parts of Lee County, and all seemed to vie with each other in paying homage to the man who was said to be one of the best men in the entire community. Modest and unassuming in his manners, broad-minded and just to all, firm and steadfast in his religious convictions, made his life a living Christian epistle, "read and known of all men." He leaves to mourn his departure, his faithful wife, one daughter, 3 grandchildren, 2 brothers, and one sister. He leaves behind a life and character as an irrefragable argument demonstrating the reality and utility of the Christian religion as the one moral and spiritual force in the world to make men good.

ANDERSON.—Andrew K. Anderson was born June 24, 1832, at Stavanger, Norway. Came to America in 1857 and married Inger Oiehaven, at Mission, La Salle County, Illinois, on July 5, 1857. To this union were born 8 children; the first, a son, dying in infancy; the others are all living, Andrew, Mrs. Anna A. Dancer, Daniel, Oscar, and Nellie, of Lamoni, Iowa; Benjamin, of Omaha, Nebraska; and David, of State College Pennsylvania. Baptized March 17, 1862; ordained teacher, September 9, 1866, and diligently and wisely performed the duties of this office until within a few years of his death. Was faithful unto his trust until death. Died at Lamoni, Iowa, June 9, 1921. Leaves to mourn 2 daughters, 5 sons, 12 grandchildren, 5 great-grandchildren, besides many other relatives and a host of friends. Funeral in charge of J. A. Gunsolley; sermon by Frederick A. Smith.

BLOWERS.—Ella M. Blowers, born September 28, 1916, at Morrisville, New York; passed away May 5, 1921, at the home of her grandfather, Moses Sheehy, Fall River, Massachusetts. A beautiful, promising child with an intelligence seemingly beyond her years, she was ill but a few weeks and died suddenly of paralysis of the heart. Administrations, expert medical attendance, the loving, devoted service of Aunt Florence and others, failed to restore her, and her young spirit

MOORE.—Benjamin, born August 29, 1853, at London, England. Married Harriet Yott. Had lived in Windsor the last five years, moving from Detroit, Michigan. Baptized February 2, 1887; died May 1, 1921, at Windsor, Ontario. Besides his widow, he is survived by 3 sons, Bert, Edward, and Thomas, all of Detroit; 2 daughters, Mrs. Wakeman, of Detroit, and Mrs. Deneau, of Windsor; one brother, John, of Port Huron, Michigan; one sister, Mrs. Spencer, of Windsor; 9 grandchildren also survive and one son, Fred, died about two years ago. Funeral at the home, 506 Dougal Avenue, interment at Woodlawn Cemetery, from Detroit, Michigan, by Leslie Brown. Sermon by R. C. Russell.

FIELDS.—Franklin Fields was born April 19, 1854, in Linn County, Oregon. Died at Agatha, Idaho, June 23, 1921. He had been a member of the church for over forty years and was one who was much interested in the welfare of the church. He was never united in marriage. He leaves a sister, Mrs. C. E. Aldrich, besides many other relatives and friends. Funeral services were preached and conducted by O. D. Shirk.

LYTLE.—Mary A. Nigh was born August 24, 1868, at Towanda, Pennsylvania. Married to F. B. Lytle, July 19, 1883. Died June 9, 1921. To this union were born 7 children, one preceding her in death. She leaves husband and 6 children, and a number of grandchildren. Baptized 7 years ago by H. E. Winegar, at Blackfoot, Idaho. Lived a faithful member.

LANE.—Louise M. Scott was born at Canton, Illinois, March 3, 1853. She came to Emerson, Iowa, 1871, and married Joseph W. Lane, November 3, 1873, at Glenwood, Iowa. They went to housekeeping in Dunlap, Iowa, and the spring of 1874 moved to Sioux Township, Monona County, Iowa, where they lived for 33 years and raised their family of 7 children James A., Mrs. J. W. Reilly, Mrs. F. M. Reeves, Mrs. Henry Johnson, John P., Charles R., and Ora Louise, all of whom are living except the last named, who died June 28, 1905. The family moved to their home in Pisgah, Iowa, in the spring of 1912, where she passed away June 17, 1921. Baptized at Garner's Grove, Iowa, October 7, 1889. Besides her immediate family, she leaves to mourn 22 grandchildren, 2 great-grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends. Lived a faithful, consistent, Christian life. Was one whom it was a pleasure to know. Funeral in church at Pisgah in charge of D. R. Chambers, sermon by Sidney Pitt, sr., interment in the Little Sioux cemetery.

GRIFFITH.—Blanch Stoddard Griffith, daughter of Ernest and Lulu Stoddard, granddaughter of I. A. Morris, was born April 25, 1891, in Wayne County, Illinois. Baptized in 1914 and lived a faithful Christian life. Died at Los Angeles, California, March 19, 1921. Married September 26, 1909, to John Griffith who, with an infant son, preceded her in death. Leaves to mourn 3 sons, Dale, James, and John; father, mother, and 4 brothers. Funeral at Brush Creek, Illinois, by R. H. Henson, assisted by William Clements.

BROWN.—Jacob Brown, born February 8, 1838, in New Jersey. Died June 7, 1921, near Galesburg, Illinois. Stricken with heart failure, died within half an hour. Member of the Dahinda Branch. Leaves to mourn, 2 sons and 2 daughters. His wife preceded him in January, 1905. Funeral from the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. T. Thompson.

COFFEEN.—Lucy B., wife of C. C. Coffeen, was born August 19, 1882. Married to C. C. Coffeen, December 24, 1903. To them were born 2 children. Baptized July 4, 1907. Died July 2, 1921. Leaves to mourn: husband, 1 son, mother, 6 brothers, and 3 sisters. She was a devoted wife and mother and an active sister in the church work.

SWAIN.—Frederick Joseph Swain, oldest son of Lorne J. and Frances K. Swain, was born September 2, 1911, at Ontario, California. Baptized June 13, 1920. He had his foot run over by a truck while on a hike with the Boy Scouts, which resulted in his death, June 21, 1921. He leaves his parents, 1 brother, 2 sisters, and a number of relatives and friends. Funeral from Draper's parlors; sermon by F. G. Pitt; assisted by F. B. Van Fleet and R. C. Stone.

NORRIS.—Henry Norris was born in Sunderland, County Durham, England, December 28, 1845. Came to America in May, 1856; lived for a time in New York and Chicago, thence to Kewanee, Illinois, where he spent the remainder of his life. Served in the Civil War. On November 4, 1869, married Miss Alice Mort, who died December 28, 1916. To them were born 6 children, 5 sons and 1 daughter. Six grandchildren survive. Baptized October 10, 1869, and was a faithful member and a devout worshiper during 51 years as a member of this one congregation. Died May 21, after illness of about three months. Funeral from Saints' chapel at Kewanee; sermon by Amos Berve.

MOORE.—Zella R. was born near Saint Joseph, Missouri, November 7, 1859. Died at Saint Joseph May 27, 1921. Baptized at Piper City, Illinois, by T. W. Smith, May 29, 1878. She was faithful and an enthusiastic worker to the end of her life. She was loved by all who knew her, both in the church and outside. She was ever ready to help others in need. She leaves 1 brother and 2 sisters, besides other relatives to mourn her departure. Funeral at Stewartsville, Missouri, in charge of T. T. Hinderks; sermon by F. A. Smith; burial at the Pleasant Grove cemetery.

HOWARD.—Marion Legan Howard, son of George W. and Maria Howard, was born February 6, 1894. Married Emma Wentworth, June, 1915. There were born to them 4 children. Died at the Wise Memorial Hospital, July 6, 1921. Leaves to mourn, his wife and children, and many other relatives and friends. Funeral from Saints' church in Persia, Iowa. Sermon by Sidney Pitt; Frederick Hansen in charge. Interment in Valley View Cemetery.

HARP.—Geneva Almata, youngest child of Edward G. and Zelta F. Harp, living in Harrison County, Missouri, near Lamoni, was born December 9, 1918. Died July 11, 1921. There survive father, mother, 1 brother, and 3 sisters. Services at the home, D. T. Williams in charge; sermon by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rose Hill.

The Amana Society

Since we have recently referred to the Icarian colony, and to the communistic effort made by the Pilgrim Fathers, we are pleased to refer in this issue to a successful community settlement, namely, the Amana settlement in Iowa. They are using the same constitution that was established sixty years ago. They have continued a successful community settlement for nearly eighty years. Their fundamental law, however, was not a declaration of mental independence nor a scheme of world-wide socialistic brotherhood, for their constitution only provides a sufficient social and civic organization for the religious society, which is primary, according to Bertha M. H. Shambaugh in the July Palimpsest, published by the State Historical Society of Iowa.

It is curious to note that this society made its first effort for a community settlement in America in 1842. It is also very interesting to note that the successful cooperative society of England begun by Rochdale Weavers began in 1844, though it has since spread over the world. Owen's New Harmony Society attempted to establish an ideal settlement of model towns in rural community, adopted seven constitutions in two years, but failed, leaving as its relic the city of New Harmony in Indiana. But the Amana Society adopted a new constitution in December, 1859, which still continues.

They were established in Germany and owned several villages. They were an outgrowth of the German Mystics and Pietists of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and became a distinct religious sect about 1714, owning several villages. Their faith is a simple one of belief in guidance through divine revelation; that the same God will inspire his followers to-day as in ages past, and use the same means of communication.

It was Christian Metz, one of their spiritual leaders and prophets, who first conceived the idea of estates in common. He foresaw that the rents and unfriendly government of the Old World would make it necessary to find a home in the New World, so in 1842 a committee of four set out to find a home in America, under the devout belief that their journey was ordained and directed by divine revelation. They suffered both from the rigors of winter and from the unscrupulousness of some with whom they had to do, but finally purchased five thousand acres of the Seneca Indian Reservation near Buffalo, New York, and within four months the first village was laid out and peopled. Soon five more villages were established and the name "Ebenezer" given to the group.

Each village had its store, its school, and its church. There were also sawmills, woolen mills, and flour mills. The constitution provided for common possession, but in twelve years they found it necessary to secure another settlement for the increasing membership, as land could not be readily secured so near the growing city of Buffalo.

Once more a committee of four, again with Christian Metz as leader, were ordained and directed to find a new home. They visited Kansas and elsewhere, but finally purchased land in Iowa County, on the Iowa River. Unlike the French tailors and shoemakers of the Icarian community who settled at Nauvoo, the Inspirationists knew how to farm as well as to labor in the mills.

They built up a number of villages, having sold the old estate in New York piecemeal, and in the summer of 1855 started the settlement of Amana, in Iowa County, Iowa.

The villages are built on a middle European style; no city is built, but only small villages. The board of trustees consists of thirteen members, who are elected annually out of the whole number of elders, and they are known as the "great council." This is the head, both spiritual and temporal, of the order.

Each June a full statement of the real and personal estate of the society is submitted to all voting members, who include all the male members, who have signed the constitution, all widows, and all female members who have reached thirty years of age and have no man to represent them.

The administration of the order is handled by the great council. Each village manages its own affairs and has a spiritual leader as well as a trustee. Kitchens are established, where it appears advisable and convenient, and provide for from sixteen to fifty persons. A woman is appointed in charge of each, who is assisted by younger women. The work is arranged in rotation, so that every third day is part time. Each village is supposed to be self-supporting, but whether it is or not, the equal distribution according to necessities does not change.

No set garb is prescribed, but the members dress more plainly than do their neighbors, and do not attempt to follow the extremes of style. In the cemetery there are no family lots, but each person is buried in order, regardless of family, age, or position. Christian Metz, one of their greatest leaders, was buried according to this plan, and only a simple stone with the name, Christian Metz, and the date of his death, has been erected. There is equality in death as well as in life.

Minimum expenditure is not the final criterion, as it might be cheaper to have a unitary dining room, but purity and simplicity of spiritual life is primary, hence, they avoid getting too much together.

Bertha M. H. Shambaugh, who prepared this excellent article, credits its survival and its hold on its fifteen hundred members, to its spiritual and religious ideals, rather than to its communistic aspect. Its fifteen hundred members are not wealthy, but are comfortable, as they possess 26,000 acres of land, principally in Iowa County, which is assessed at considerable over two million dollars for taxation by the State of Iowa.

The society was originally far from the railroad, but now is not only on two railroads, but on one of the interstate auto trails. Their spiritual convictions hold this voluntary association together, even after so many years and so closely associated of late years with the world.

The love of the beautiful is expressed in flowers, for in the villages is a great profusion of flowers, in school yards, church yards, as well as around the home.

However, we learn through recent visitors, that the colony is finding itself unable to retain the young people of to-day.

No provision is made for recreation by the young people. A further reason is that there is no money issued, but only checks or coupons which are good in the Amana stores. There is no difference because of work or education, or limitation of personal initiative. These at least are assigned as some of the reasons for the defection. However, it is noted that they still retain fifteen hundred members.

This fact is of great significance. While so many plans communistic have been tried and failed, this society has behind it eighty years of successful effort, and the reason assigned by Bertha M. H. Shambaugh is also of great interest, namely, that the organization is primarily religious, and that it is the spirit of worship, the religious belief which has made it possible for them to continue so long, even though now so closely surrounded by neighbors who are not associated with them in their effort.

They are in close communion with the rest of the world through the usual methods of communication of to-day. Their separation has ceased, except so far as the land of the colonies belongs to them; yet they have continued to function with an increase of membership.

This confirms the position we have previously taken, that conversion is essential for the establishment of Zion, and that it cannot be accomplished until there is first a converted and united people.

This account also points out some of the difficulties, though, as we understand our plan of Zion, it is not the extreme communistic which excludes individual initiative; also we are already providing for the recreational needs of our people. The plan for Zion is one of beauty and reason upheld by faith.

Charles Derry an Active Man

During his lifetime he contributed more than ninety articles to the Herald alone.

In looking over our HERALD index file we are rather surprised to find that Charles Derry has written more than ninety articles for the HERALD.

His first communication appeared in volume two, giving his reasons for leaving Utah. His last signed article appears in volume 62, 1915, written in memory of Edmund C. Briggs; but a poem of his, written in 1918, was included in a sermon of President F. M. Smith and printed in the HERALD for November 6, of that year. In this issue appears another of his poems, written about the same time, namely in his ninety-second year.

There is much that he has written well worthy of being quoted, but we find the following extract has been republished in the Church History, as showing his position on favoritism:

"If I lacked an evidence of the impartiality, justice, and liberality of the Reorganized Church, I could not fail to see an indisputable one in the fact of the publication of the article under the head of "Favoritism." In that act the motives of the church are impugned, and charges grave enough, if true, to sink the church in the depths of obloquy and shame. I have had the privilege to sit in the highest councils of the church, and of observing the secret springs, if there were any, that moved the whole machinery. I have helped to consider plans and measures for its onward progress. I have seen and heard the schemes of men tried and examined. I have seen the efforts of the powers of darkness to destroy, by seeking to corrupt the noblest minds; and I can testify before God and men that no base scheme, nor any stratagem of the archenemy, has been able to sway those councils nor fascinate the minds of God's anointed into the adoption of any measure that would crush or injure in the least the very least of God's little ones, much less to betray the church of God into the hands of the enemy."—Extract from letter in SAINTS' HERALD, June 15, 1875, by Charles Derry.

All through his life he has shown the spirit of self-sacrifice, and devotion to the cause of the Master. He seemed never to have felt himself slighted, nor to have wondered why he was not given more of responsibility, or anything else. His faith has been steadfast, his memory and love for his associates without limit.

When his wife passed away on the thirty-first of May, 1917, he wrote a beautiful tribute to her memory.

Recently he wrote the following verses:

"I want to live for Thee alone,
To Thee I consecrate my life;
Thy precious blood for me atones
For all my sins through this dread strife.

"But I am weak, Thy help I need,
That I the victory may gain,
And from the chains of sin be freed,
Through Him who on the cross was slain."

Be Ye Also Ready

The prophecies indicate that all will not be ready, which should be an incentive for preparation.

"And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them, and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo, here! or Lo, there! For, behold the kingdom of God has already come unto you. And he said unto his disciples, The days will come, when they will desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and they shall not see it. And if they shall say to you, See here! or, See there! Go not after them, nor follow them. For as the light of the morning, that shineth out of the one part under heaven, and lighteneth to the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of Man be in his day. But first he must suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation. And as it was in the days of Noe; so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot: they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed. In that day, the disciple who shall be on the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he who is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Remember Lot's wife. Whosoever shall seek to save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life, shall preserve it. I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered and said unto him, Where, Lord, shall they be taken? And he said unto them, Whosoever the body is gathered; or, in other words, whithersoever the saints are gathered, thither will the eagles be gathered together; or, thither will the remainder be gathered together. This he spake, signifying the gathering of his saints; and of angels descending and gathering the remainder unto them; the one from the bed, the other from the grinding, and the other from the field, whithersoever he listeth. For verily there shall be new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. And there shall be no unclean thing; for the earth becoming old, even as a garment, having waxed in corruption, wherefore it vanisheth away, and the footstool remaineth sanctified, cleansed from all sin."—Luke 17: 20-40, Inspired Version.

At times our hearts feel heavy because of conditions in the world or in the church, and we wonder what the outcome will be. It should be noted in the above passage that it is the disciple who was up on the housetop or in the field who shall be gathered whithersoever the Saints are gathered.

We find a similar passage in Matthew 24: 40-51. It must be remembered that this is not referring to the time of the Jews, for that was discussed in the earlier portion of the twenty-fourth chapter. It refers to those who have taken upon them the name of Jesus. "Be ye also ready, for in the hour that ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

Those who think the Lord delayeth his coming are standing on dangerous ground. We cannot afford to look to see what others are doing. He will not excuse us in that great day because some other answer or principle is felt.

The Master plainly told the church in that day, and has told us in this day, that when we see certain times we may know that his coming is nigh at hand. The warning voice has been lifted. Let no one deceive you. The failure to prepare will not forever prevent the coming of the Lord, and those who make ready will truly be blessed.

It may seem a sad thing to ask, "When the Son of Man cometh will he find peace on the earth?" There are some things that should be done. First, there are signs of his coming; but we think that many times we are in danger of confusing his second and third coming, just as the Jews confused the prophecy of his first and second coming.

Of one thing we are certain: no man knows the day or the hour. Of another thing we are certain: that we cannot forever delay the coming of the Lord by failing to do our duty as individuals or as a church, for the Lord is able to raise up those who will do the things essential.

The great question before each one of us is, Am I doing all that I can do to uphold the work of God and to prepare the way for the coming of the Son of Man? Another's failure will not excuse us forever. Man must stand or fall for himself. (Mark 9:)

It would seem evident that part of the church will not be ready. One shall be taken, another left. It seems evident that for some the final gathering will be, not only in haste, but in great haste, yet that need not cause us anxiety if, wherever we are, we are striving to do, day by day, the duty intrusted to our hands.

Nurses Wanted

The annual call of the school for nurses is worthy consideration of prospective students and those who help them decide on future careers.

The good people in charge of the Independence Sanitarium and its nursing staff are frank in their desire for a liberal number of girls to enroll in the nursing school which begins operations each year in September for a three-year course.

The proposition is rather simple in its details. They want girls of good character, sound physical condition, with two years of high school training or its equivalent, and preferably possessing some of the idealism which characterizes Latter Day Saints. There are a few items of clothing the girl is expected to furnish, but no tuition fees are required. In fact, students receive a small sum of money monthly, and are furnished room and board, with free medical care in case of illness.

The training includes special class work at the institution and practical work in hospital service as they advance in proficiency. During the past season eight of the nurses in first-year work were given one semester's work of five days a week in the Kansas City Junior College in the following subjects: Dietetics, anatomy and physiology, history of nursing, materia medica, bacteriology, practical nursing and ethics, hospital housekeeping, chemistry, and hygiene.

In addition to this, there is an existing arrangement for affiliation with the Mercy Hospital for children in Kansas City, where the student receives four months of actual work in that institution especially to get experience in nursing children. Two at a time, these girls are getting this valuable experience now.

A wonderful spirit pervades the place. And it is not by accident, either, but rather from a studied effort on the part of its executives to provide a high code of morals and religious ethics. They have succeeded so well that a girl gets as good training in this regard here as she would in any average Latter Day Saint home.

She can be assured that the professional men with whom she will be associated are gentlemanly in their demeanor towards her. She may always count on the strong moral support of her superintendents and matrons. Indeed, she will find that her associations daily with professional people of high ideals and exceptional skill ennoble and develops in a very concrete manner. As the days go by and she acquires skill and the power which knowledge brings, she, too, will value greatly the ideal of not only restoring health, but preventing disease. And upon graduation she will realize that she is in a position to help others help themselves perhaps far more than in any average profession one might consider. Even if she were not to use her skill in a public way, she is fitted for far better citizenship and a higher appreciation of the meanings of cooperation.

E. D. MOORE.

Reliable People

Some question if conversion increases honesty. Are the unconverted more honorable?

The statement was printed in a leading scientific magazine that the principal difference between converted people and other people is that the unconverted are the more reliable. This would appear to be and is an extreme statement, taken as a generality. Of course it was limited to the acquaintance of a student, and he was comparing men of deep ability as thinkers with some of his more ordinary friends who were professed Christians.

Later this idea was repeated by a free-thinker to one of our elders. He said he would think more of Christianity if professing Christians around him were as honest in their ordinary dealings as were those who were not professing Christians. That he was set in this sentiment may be inferred from the fact that he asked some sectarians if they really believed that a man is free from sin after baptism and that if he entered at once into the presence of God after baptism, he would be in a saved condition? "For if he is," he said, "and you get a chance to baptize some of these professors around here, if you don't drown them you ought to be hung, as that will be the only chance they will ever have to die saved."

Both of these critics offered as a reason that professing Christians have their minds too much on the other world; that they are apparently too much lifted up to high things to pay attention to their duties here on earth and keep their ordinary promises. Or, as one of them expressed it, they expect Jesus to pay for all their sins, so they are willing to let him do it.

This statement applies much more to the sectarian world than it does to us. It is not surprising, in view of the frequent repetition of such songs as "Jesus paid it all; all to him I owe," and "That will be glory for me." All too many professing Christians are willing to go into partnership with their heavenly Father and work with him on the same basis as the negro went into business with his wife. He published a notice that all those who owed the firm would please see him; and those that the firm owed, see his wife. Too many are quite willing to enter into a partnership, if their heavenly Father will take care of the liabilities, and leave them to take care of the assets.

It is natural that our profession should be judged by the manner of our life from day to day, and the manner in which we keep our word. We recall that a few years ago a business man related how he went to a man's house at a quarter to twelve Saturday night, because that happened to be the day on which his money was due, and he was kept too busy until eleven p. m. to pay it earlier, and the good effect that this had upon his credit. His word was given to pay that day and his word was inviolate. Then he proceeded to run over a list of various ministers and state how much he would be willing to loan different ones on personal notes. It was a little shocking to have him place the maximum at $100, providing his wife would sign the note, when he had already indicated that he would loan a young man without security $1,000 on his note. It was more shocking when the amount dwindled down to one of whom he said, "I couldn't loan him more than $5, and I would be scared for my life until he paid it back."

Honesty is an individual matter. It is gravely unfortunate that some who profess conversion are not honest. For naturally the world watches more closely the conduct of those who profess to have received a new birth and moral regeneration. They naturally watch closely professed children of the kingdom.

On us who have directly taken His name there is laid a graver responsibility than on the rest of the Christian world. Professing to be the children of God, professing present day communion with him, the world will naturally judge the work of God by the manner of our lives, however unfair that may be to the Captain of our salvation. Having taken upon us the name, they judge the quality of the goods and the value of the name by the sample we offer in the personal package of our life.

Formerly we sang in the Sunday school, "Surely the Captain may depend on me, though but an armor bearer I may be." But can the Captain depend upon us keeping our word when we want him to pay it all? Can our next door neighbors, our business associates, depend upon us? We believe that in a majority of cases they can. But in the least matters we often need to watch ourselves closely to see that we carry fairly our own share towards future salvation and towards bringing the kingdom of God on to this earth.

S. A. BURGESS.

Elder J. F. Curtis is in Centralia, Illinois, engaged in a debate with Reverend Moore, the debate to cover twelve sessions, beginning July 18.

Apostle John W. Rushton has been at the Erie Beach reunion and expects to go to Toronto reunion at Lowbanks, then to Kirtland, returning in time for the reunion at Pertle Springs.

An effort is being made for the settlement of the Irish question, giving to them the same liberty that is allowed Canada and Australia. The principal existing difficulty is that Ulster has organized a separate parliament which has been indorsed by the king. They are willing to associate on purely Irish questions, but insist upon a separate parliament from the rest of Ireland. The question seems to rest on internal conditions in Ireland.

President Smith Returns to Zion

President F. M. Smith left the Deer Park reunion Sunday evening, the 17th, to finish up necessary work in the East. He arrived in Independence Sunday morning and was the speaker at the Stone Church at the 7.30 p. m. service.

This service was held on the lawn and was a meeting of all of the congregation of Zion. There were several thousand present. Hundreds of extra seats had been provided, but not sufficient for the crowd. Owing to the street and other noises, it was not possible for those on the outside edge to hear the sermon. This emphasizes anew the need for a larger assembly hall than is yet available, with proper acoustic properties.

President Smith referred briefly to conditions as he had found them abroad, in fact, in every country, and the great need for a gathering place for the honest and pure in heart throughout the world. He emphasized again the responsibility laid upon the inhabitants of Zion, and that the work before them does not permit of time or strength for external affiliations, but emphasized anew the necessity of the plan of stewardship.

He expects to be in Independence only a couple of days, as members of the joint council are away attending various reunions. He is proceeding westward to meet his family, whom he left in southern California the last of May, 1920, when he went to Europe.

A Pastoral Ideal

The morning speaker at the Stone Church at Independence recently was Pastor R. V. Hopkins. He explained at considerable length his ideal of a pastor. One who goes before, removes obstacles from the path, parts the briars and makes a way for the sheep to follow. Then, when the sheep come into the fold at night, he stands at the gate and anoints their bruises with oil and watches over them while they sleep.

So the spiritual pastor tries to remove the obstacles from the path of the people, to go before them to meet first their danger, to make the way easier. Then, when they are wounded, to stand ready to anoint them. When they go astray, he goes after them. When their spiritual souls are torn and bleeding, he soothes and tries to heal.

The Fort Collins (Colorado) Express of July 16 contains announcements of our services in that city, with sermon by George Wixom, formerly of San Bernardino, California.

E. J. Smith, chief accountant in the office of the Presiding Bishopric, has returned after a visit to Washington, Chicago, and Wisconsin.

Sister Mary Curtis, daughter of Apostle J. F. Curtis, was operated on Monday morning at nine o'clock in the Sanitarium for appendicitis. She has been very active in the A. O. Y. P. Z. movement and revival meetings.

Elder John A. Gardner, president of the A. O. Y. P. Z., also in charge of the Religio work in Zion, left the Sanitarium on Thursday, the 21st, and returned to his home. He is making a good recovery from his operation.

President Elbert A. Smith expects to leave to-day, July 26, to attend the Southern California reunion. From there he will on his return trip take in part, as least, of the Eastern Colorado reunion.

In the Ensign of July 14 we note reports from thirty missionaries give one hundred and seventy-five baptisms.

Relation Between Study and Service

By Walter Wayne Smith

An address delivered at the Women's Institute, May 15, 1921, and reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.

Madam Chairman, Workers in the Women's Department, and Fellow Church Workers: I feel highly honored to be invited to make this initial address in this great women's work convention. The text which I have chosen in connection with the subject which was assigned to me is in keeping with the spirit and nature of this Sunday evening service.

I have thought that in the nature of your meeting, perhaps, no better authority might be cited than the Apostle Paul who, writing to one of his fellow church workers, admonished him to study to show himself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not to be ashamed; and if I should put upon this text considerable emphasis upon the first word of the sentence, study to show thyself, it would not be out of keeping with my full thought and appreciation of the meaning of the text. It would not, in any way, be stressed unduly by reason of the nature of the gathering, for I am certain that my work along that line would warrant you in expecting that, if at any time we were discussing that text.

In connection with that, may I invite your attention to a portion of scripture found in the fifth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the word of the Lord to the church in these the latter days; and while this word was perhaps directed to others than the sisters—to the ordained men of the church—it nevertheless displays the mind of God in relation to the question of study as it relates to service; "seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith."

These two texts would offer me abundant opportunity to discuss almost at any length the question of training, the question of education, the question of acquiring skill, the question of preparation of all forms, and kinds, but I shall not have time to-night, and the nature of the occasion is such that it might be very prudent for me to confine this discussion more directly to the relation that exists between study and service.

What Service Means

I judge that it will not be necessary for me to make very much of an effort to clarify in your minds the ideas that we are liable to have relative to study. I think you all understand what we mean by "study." Taking it for granted, perhaps, that we have a common understanding on that ground, we shall pass to the second problem presented in this theme, that of service.

I am sure that we do not have a very common idea about service. I am afraid that sometimes when the word service is used we unconsciously, I suppose, by what the psychologists call a sort of hiatus, arrive at the idea, or get the idea in our minds, of being a servant; and while the idea of service and being a servant are perhaps somewhat related, to be sure, I am quite sure the main idea and chief thought that ought to be raised into consciousness when the word service is used, is very far from one that is under a boss.

The word service of course is the act of serving, and certainly the meaning of the word servicing is very clear. This is a form of the verb serve. Now what sort of vision arises in consciousness, what ideas cluster around each other, and come rushing through your mind when the word serve is spoken? What does it mean to you? Well, to serve means "to work for." That's what it means. To serve means to work for. It means "to labor in behalf of." It means "to contribute to." And I am quite sure that if, with this thought in mind, we could get these three very simple ideas so closely connected together that they would, one after another, arise in our consciousness when the word serve was ever mentioned, or when the word servicing was spoken in our hearing, or when we see the word—if these three small, simple ideas should immediately follow each other in our consciousness, we should be able to see what we are asked to work for—what we are asked to contribute to, to labor in behalf of, it would be a very, very much different idea than the turning of the matter around, like we frequently do, when we want to know what sort of orders somebody is about to give.

Work and Labor

There is a great deal of difference between giving and getting; between work and labor. Do you know the difference between work and labor? I heard a definition a good many years ago that stayed with me, because I had had an experience that warranted me in believing that what the definition implied was so and maybe more. I heard a man say once, defining the difference between work and labor, that labor was that employment or occupation in which you were a participant, and work was where you got worked. Somebody was the boss, and you did what they said, but in labor you performed a voluntary service. That's the difference between working for and working with; and the Lord says, "We are laborers together with him."

Whenever the idea of service is raised in consciousness, we ought instantly to ask ourselves the question, What sort of service could I render? What amount of labor can I do; what contribution am I qualified to make to the cause I love so well?

In the discussion of this matter there are two problems that present themselves. They inevitably come in regular order. They come to you every day; in the home; in your relation to your family; as fathers or mothers; brothers or sisters; in your relation to the church; whether as an ordained man, or an organization worker or helper, or whatever may be your position in the church. They come to you when the question of obligation is raised.

What Ought I to Do?

The first question is, What to do? What ought I to do? What is it my duty to do? What do I owe it to my fellows to do? You know there are two words in the English language that are associated very closely together in meaning, and very frequently we get them far apart, because you cannot look at both of them from the same angle. The two words I have already used—ought and duty. They are very simple in their origin. The fact that the human race has linked together the words, ought and duty, brings to us the thought that God has written in the souls of men the feeling of responsibility.

The word ought is very simple. It rises out of what we owe. If I owe anybody anything I ought to pay it. My "ought" bears an obligation. I ought to do whatever it is my duty to do and whatever there is any obligation on me to do; but duty arises out of the thought of what is due, and is your way of measuring what I ought to do. What is my obligation to me is ought. What is my obligation to you is my duty. It is your way of saying what I ought to do when you say it is my duty. It is my way of saying what is my duty when I say what I ought to do.

What Is Our Obligation?

I shall not spend very much time on that subject to-night. I have reserved the major portion of my time to suggest the second thought which I am about to introduce; but I want to ask you this: What is the work of labor or contribution that you are under obligation to do or make?

I shall not attempt to say what is the obligation of these women—these mothers, sisters, and friends—these people who occupy the unique position of being the mothers of us all, and I wonder how it was that men were so slow as to compel the women to be under the necessity of knocking at the doors for the privilege of expressing themselves as freely as the men for so long, when it was theirs in the beginning. I don't know whether it was because they were derelict in their duty and let it slip out of their hands or not, but I am very thankful that the privilege has come to them to work on a common basis, and that women are made as responsible for the upkeep of the nation as men; and it will be well to acknowledge them in the church, for their place is as important as that of the men. I may even make it a little stronger. The world could better dispense with the teaching influence, the molding, directing influence of men than they could of women.

Let me ask, and let these women, and men as well, answer for themselves, What is the work, the labor, the contribution that we ought to do or make? and I shall not try to name the large list of things, for I rather think that it would be an easier matter to tell what they are not obligated to do than to tell what they are obligated to do. The list would be far shorter and more easy of enumeration, but it is the business of religion, of spiritual culture, of prayer meeting influence, of sacramental service, of prayer and consecration to God, to determine for each and every woman as well as every man, what their particular task is.

I doubt very much if any man can point out, with any degree of definite certainty, to any other man, what his particular duty in life is, so that he may enter in, if he himself does not discover it, and if, by the direction of God, he is not made to know it. We shall not say any more of that.

Direction of the Spirit

The second consideration is how to accomplish the task, once it is determined upon, and herein lies the burden of what we want to say to-night. If it is the duty of the direction of the Spirit of the living God, if it is the business, the function, the work, the task or field of the Holy Ghost to help men to find the things, to direct men and women in the field of activity where they are obligated by their equipment, opportunity, or circumstances to occupy, then, my friends, then it is the duty and responsibility of all of us to study to qualify for that work, so it can be done skillfully and well, so that even your Master in heaven may say of you, "She hath done what she could." Any opportunity that may be open to any man or woman in the world, is limited to the ability of the person to enter in and occupy. If a man should offer to me the opportunity of being his private secretary and taking from his lips the dictation concerning the most secret things connected with this church work, or the important things of state, or the weighty matters of business, it would be no opportunity to me, for I have not that ability. I am not qualified. The opportunity would be limited, self-limited in me, because I am unable to write shorthand. There are those to whom such an invitation would be the opportunity of a lifetime, because study had made them ready and able.

It is the duty, then, imposed by religion; it is the duty imposed by spiritual direction and responsibility—it is the business of the individual, whether he be called to teach in the Sunday school, or make a friendly visit for the Women's Department, or lead a class for the Religio, or preach a sermon for the church—in any and all and everywhere a man may be called to occupy, it is the duty, the self-imposed duty and responsibility, that falls upon the individual, once he has found what he ought to do to qualify to do that with the highest degree of efficiency.

The Question of Integrity

The first consideration, the consideration of what to do, involves the question of integrity, and I would like to say to you, and perhaps I am bringing coals to Newcastle when I do it, but it is a good self-defense, at least, lest some one may perhaps misunderstand me in the fervor of my exhortation—it isn't any use to educate a man, woman, or child if integrity is wanting. The man of ability enough to make a watch, if integrity is the driving motor, the discreet and discriminating preceptor of his life, is well equipped, but if lacking in integrity and yet possessed of skill, it may help him to pick a lock or break a safe. So the first consideration in all matters, whether man or woman, is that men and women may be taught to know God, and knowing God, shall have in their hearts, breaking forth in their emotions, in the feeling of the human soul, integrity, that will make a man feel as badly when stealing a pin as when stealing an automobile. It doesn't make any difference how large or how small the sin may be, if a man is making the law of God the rule of his life, if he has a well-regulated conscience, he is going to feel badly when he does wrong, and the amount of wrong he does will perhaps have something to do with the weight of responsibility that falls upon him; but the question confronting us is, when integrity has once determined what a man ought to do, study enters in as the immediate necessity to show him how he ought to do it.

Three Phases of Activity

I suppose it is well for me to say this. You have heard me say it many times. Perhaps these visiting sisters have not heard me say it. When I speak on this subject I feel like I very frequently repeat myself, which is not as good as a story-teller in our midst who never tells the same story twice.

Conscious activity may be generally classified into three phases or levels or spheres or attributes. We must know about things, or else we couldn't have, or wouldn't be conscious of them—we wouldn't be aware. We must have some sort of feeling about them, their place or disposition, give satisfaction or annoyance and whether we are satisfied or annoyed, is the thing which determines what we will do, so we have the three phases, knowing, feeling, and then action follows. Now accuracy in knowing is truth, and that's divine. Accuracy of feeling is integrity, about which we have just spoken, and accuracy in doing is skill.

Now anyone may choose to be anything that the Spirit of the Lord indicates as needed in this church, and that God would be pleased to have them do. We find women entering and occupying with great skill and with great efficiency. But whenever a woman finds the place where she should occupy, the question is, Can she do that work?

What is service? Service means "to work for." Now, I say, Can she do that work? Can she perform the work required? service also means "to contribute to." Now can she make the contribution, or perform the labor required skillfully? That's the question. She may have chosen wisely, and served freely—and that happens with men, too. Because God has chosen a man, and because the church has acknowledged him in his labors, and ordained him to an office in the church, is no surety, by any means, at all, of an approval of what he may subsequently do. He may be so unskillful that he may be asked to resign.

A woman may be appointed to teach a Sunday school class; to nurse a sick person; to make a friendly visit; to superintend the welfare of children, and she may have chosen exactly what humanity needs to have done, and yet be so poorly qualified that her work will be a menace to humanity.

A Case Where Knowledge Was Needed

Now, that you may just exactly understand what I mean, I want to give you an illustration that came under my particular observation as pastor. I was called out of bed in the wee sma' hours of the night to administer, and when I tell you about it you may laugh, but it was no laughing matter that night, I will assure you. It was a good sister who was given somewhat to fainting spells; no uncommon thing for her to have terrible headaches, and sometimes she needed help. So that night when one of these spells had gotten to a point where it was dangerous, she sent out for her neighbor who lived only two or three doors from her. When the neighbor got there the sister who was ill had become unconscious, and of course this good woman who came in was a most devoted woman, a devoutly godly character. I assure you that she was a person of more than ordinary worth, and she had heard that mustard plasters were used in cases of fainting, so she made a real good and warm mustard plaster and put it on the sick sister's neck—the back of her neck and head, and of course the sick lady went into convulsions immediately. In her struggles she fortunately knocked most of the plaster off, which was a very good thing.

They called in a physician, and I arrived about the time the physician did. I administered without very happy results, but the physician gave her some good advice. He said, "It is true that mustard plasters are used in cases of fainting, but they are applied to the soles of the feet, rather than the neck and head, in order that they may draw away the blood from her head, and not to it."

Now, with this woman, her determination was all right. Her intentions were good. She had chosen to serve, but she filled her responsibility in such a way that she nearly killed the patient. I wouldn't have called her a murderer if the woman had died in the fit, but it would have been a calamity to the husband and children, I assure you.

Study and knowledge would have made her wise in her administration until her "work for," her "labor in behalf of," her "contribution" in the help of this woman would have made her better instead of worse. She would have applied her mustard plasters to the feet rather than the head, which would have brought the blood from her head and relieved the congestion, and she would have promptly become conscious. As it was, the result was doubtful for a while, and a family of little ones stood a chance of being left without a mother.

Study and Service Inseparable

That's exactly what I mean. Study stands in relation to service in exactly that attitude. It is in the consideration of the how that study is effective. Study is not the means of regulating the soul. That's God's business. Education can never hope to enter in and occupy in that place, because education does not work in that sphere, but when the person has been directed by the Spirit of God, then study, education, training shall make the worker skillful, prudent, wise, and efficient.

When you go into the house to-night, on your return, if the house should have been deserted in the meantime, you will push a button perhaps, or pull a string, and presently there will be a light in the house, so suddenly you can hardly see the difference between the time you push the button and the time the light appears. Now, I will venture this guess, that you have already thought about this, but perhaps never made an application of this kind, that pushing the button will not sweep the floor, arrange the chairs, decorate the walls, put any pictures on the walls, nor anything of that sort, but it will reveal what is already there. Now education never gave a man a good soul. That isn't its specialty. Education never made a man loving. It is not its mission. Education never gave a man integrity. It does not belong in that field, but education does show what is there. It illuminates, enlightens, and reveals, and many a man who has walked through his own house and stumbled over a chair could very well wish there had been a light somewhere; and many a woman who, in the task set before her in the Women's Department, Sunday school, Religio, church work, any of its branches of work, could many and many a time have wished, after she has stumbled over something and hurt herself or others, that she had had a little light on the subject, before she proceeded to the doing.

That is the province of study, seeking, learning. It is to qualify for service. It is not the business of education to direct the church as to what it should do. It is the business of education to direct the church as to how it shall do it; and when you first heard a minister preach the gospel you perhaps were yearning for the truth with as much zeal as you are now.

I can only testify for one. I know I was, and laboring as a member of the Methodist Church with as much integrity and zeal as I have now, but I certainly lacked something that was abundantly needful, and that was how I should do the thing that I was yearning to do. It was by the preaching of the word, illumination of my mind that I found out even how to get baptized. I had already tried it once. I knew what to do, but didn't know how to do it; so they did it wrong. The second time I knew how, and so insisted on doing it right.

So all along down the line. It is the same with every phase of the work connected with the church, in all its ramifications. It is the business of God to direct his church. It is the business of the church to study, illuminate, enlighten, open, become acquainted with truth and acquire skill.

Skill

You know what a mechanic is. Most of you live in a house with some wood in it. You know how unsightly it is to see where the carpenter struck at a nail and hit the wood. How unskillful! The carpenter who does these things is a blunderer. A skillful mechanic hits the nail every time. Skill didn't decide him to build the house, but after he decided to build the house it was study, practice, acquiring skill by the doing that leaves his work so nice and even, so that we say, that's what we want.

That's what these sisters need. That's what we men need. That's what all of us need. The church needs, the Sunday school needs, the Women's Department needs skill. We want to do God's will. We know what to do, but do not know how to do it well.

I must say that the relation of study to service is that of an amplifier. It is similar to that of a megaphone. You know if I were speaking to a great multitude, it would require a megaphone, to carry the voice to all. Now, to me, speaking through a megaphone bears the same relation as study to service. It is that which makes it go longer and extend farther; which makes it strong enough to accomplish more; which enlarges, amplifies, strengthens, and extends, and surely the Lord has admonished us to study.

I trust that each who finds his duty, the sisters, brethren, and all concerned in the same great cause of Christ, when he has discovered what is his duty, will then become wise and prudent; become acquainted with all good books and seek learning even by study.

May our Father help us to make our work so skillful that the church shall be proud of us and those to whom that ministry shall be conferred be thereby rendered happy.

Notes and Comments

By Ralph W. Farrell

A criticism of a recent number of the Herald by one who frankly says what he thinks.

A Speaker's Rights

The heading of this article is very old, but it is as good as any other for the purpose for which it is used. Impressed by many of the writings in the late number of the HERALD (volume 68, number 26), I desire to make a few comments relative thereto.

To begin with the editorial on "Fundamentals." This was a sermon delivered at the monthly "Problems meeting." It speaks for itself. In preparing it for the press the author has omitted one or two statements, which were of no special consequence, but the incident raises the question as to the rights one has in preparing spoken matter for the paper. It has been said that certain sermons do not read like they were spoken. Doubtless many disputants would line up on each side of the subject—Resolved, That spoken matter should be different from printed matter. It matters not which side wins, the fact remains that in most cases one says a thing differently than one writes it. Should this be the case? That is another question.

I believe this, however, that a speaker has the right to have his real thought expressed in print, it mattering not just how he may have tried to express it in the heat of speaking (and if there is no heat in his words, he is simply an essayist rather than a speaker). Sheppard, who went over the country delivering lectures on public speaking, tells us, in his book, that the secret of effective public speaking is "fire, life, heat, and more life." As we know, this was Roosevelt's style. Likewise Doctor Aked, Doctor Hillis, Doctor Beecher, and of the latter it may be said that America never had a greater pulpit and platform orator. It may be said further of Beecher, that his secretary once came with a complaint against Beecher's poor English (strange as it may sound). This exceptional man made answer: "When a word gets in my way it has to move out or get hurt." (Substance.) Meaning that he valued the thought, the freedom of action, and all that goes with it, more than he valued pure English. Yet Beecher would recommend by precept and example the most careful study of proper language.

George Wendling, whose words fell like gold from his lips, used calmness and passion as occasion required. I am told that Talmage raced back and forth somewhat like a caged animal. Woodrow Wilson is an exception to it all, being calm as well as scholarly, more of an essayist than orator (of the old school). His style would not fit some of us, and a man would be foolish indeed to imitate anyone, though the student might profit by adopting certain good points in various speakers, for no man has a monopoly on art; what he does was done before his day.

It is well to bear in mind that in the process of weeding out imperfections we see to it that we do not pull up good plants. It is true that if you conserve your originality and possibly get a bit away from the beaten path you may be classed with the "soap-box orators" or the Philistines. But why mind the vaporings of the small-minded? Go on and be yourself, and what you say will be remembered and do its effective work long after the bloodless piping of the weaklings has been forgotten almost before uttered. Jesus has expressed it in his direction concerning Lazarus, "Take off the grave clothes" and let him speak and move.

Must Spoken Words Be Retained?

But I am away from my theme. What I have said has no personal reflection. We were speaking about spoken and written utterances. I am reminded of Frederick W. Robertson. He, considered by a multitude of voices the greatest preacher England ever knew, wrote to some friends who wanted to take down his speeches in shorthand: "There are a great many things said in extempore preaching which pass with the occasion, which are meant so to pass, which have not been deeply examined, and which will, therefore, not bear to be coldly scrutinized in manuscript. A printed or written sermon is always scrutinized as if it claimed infallibility, and positive injury might be done to influence if such a hasty expression were stereotyped as it were. . . . I think the knowledge, too, that what I said was being taken down in this way would hamper entirely the freeness of expression. As it is, I try to speak unshackled by any attempts to please, to form sentences, and to deprecate disapproval." (Volume 1, page 339, Life and Letters and Sermons.)

Wendell Phillips, ranking with Edward Everett as one of America's great orators, once said that certain statements imparted to him, unless impressed as sacredly confidential, would "pop out" in the heat of his oration. I imagine this was true of Jeremiah, who, for speaking the truth, was cast into a filthy pit. And of Enoch, called a "wild man" when he prophesied against the sins of his brethren. His pulpit was the hills, but it was free, and God blessed his preaching to the sanctification of the people.

A Worth-while Article

The original article by J. A. Bronson is certainly worth while. The principle he stresses cannot be emphasized too strongly. There is but one law given by which we are to be sanctified; the law of Christ; and if we are not willing to be sanctified by that law we must inherit another kingdom. There is no middle ground about it. I never did understand why there should be a greater regard shown for the feelings of transgressors than for God's word. It is truth that will make us free. By all means let us use care, and be humble, and all that; but let us not lose sight of Jacob's great lesson when he preached with boldness against the crimes of pride and polygamy; or of Samuel the Lamanite, facing death as he thundered against the sins of his times; or of the denunciations of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Noah; in fact, of every servant of God who has been willing to stand in the breach and speak forth the words of God to a gainsaying and hissing generation.

In this article by Brother Bronson we have an illustration where verse can be used with telling effect; it would seem that Isaiah spoke through Brand Whitlock.

Gathering of Israel Still a Problem

As to the issue between the Arab and the Jew, who can tell its outcome? I hardly think that God will allow the sons of Ishmael to prevail against the sons of Isaac. We will go on with full faith in the prophetic word of God. Jacob's face will soon lose its paleness, for his children shall be gathered in the midst of him. God can bring it about—he is bringing it about. "The first shall be last." "Blindness in part has happened to Israel." The natural vine will be grafted into the natural stock in God's due time. The "three books" are our standard of authority on this great problem of the gathering of the Jews.

"The Kaiser Out-Kaisered" as a clipping is interesting, but I do not quite fully grasp the point. Surely the Herald of Gospel Liberty would not discountenance the words of the prophets. The "Reverend I. M. Haldeman" may not put it in a way to suit the spiritual and softening taste of the editor of Gospel Liberty, but the fact remains that the coming of Christ is to be terrible, and God had a reason for making the picture awe-inspiring.

Falling Birth Rate

From the Women's Department I take one thought on which to comment. It is the reference to the French who have worried over their falling birth rate. The other day brought us a newspaper statement about the teaching, in public and private, of birth control, in Japan, England, and France. It was urged that there was an excess of population. Passing strange, when we consider the millions lost in war and the millions of women who have no mates. Of course we cannot go into this matter to the point here, but one is amused when he takes into consideration the personnel of the advocates of "birth control." Let us get at the cause of this wild talk about sacred matters—talk usually based on ignorance or made by perverts. Birth control, certainly; but in God's way. The thing which strikes death to the hearts of women in France and England to-day is that they never can become mothers, for under the poppies of Flanders' field lie the men who might have become the fathers of their might-have-been children.

In speaking of foreign affairs, very interesting items of which we have received, from time to time, in the letters of Brethren Smith and Williams, it may be said, and truthfully so, that in the English issue of The Review of Reviews are given great accounts by Sir Phillips Gibbs. Without doubt Gibbs is the greatest writer of to-day. In reading him, however, I find one fly in the ointment, he does not give sufficient credit to the power of Woodrow Wilson.

Are Debates Worth While?

The reference to the Curtis-Moore Debate raises the question, Are debates worth while? Personally I am not prepared to answer the question. Arguments can be given for and against the proposition. It might be interesting for our Religians to have a debate to prove that debates are profitless. It may all depend on circumstances. Debating may be a quick way of proving points. It was quite common, in the old days, for other churches to hold these seasons of discussions. If the truth is known, doubtless we would find every church or person willing to discuss differences if they thought they could prove their side of the controversy. Much depends on the temperament and honor of the disputants. A good man with a poor cause will, with the rank and file, make a better impression than a vindictive man with a true cause. I enjoy reading debates; one reaps the benefit of much hard work. Yet, are they worth while?

But I must close with a reference to the "Greeting from the Islands." It reveals the psychology of that people. They are humble, quaint, Book of Mormon like in expression, simple in their make-up, and withal, a pattern to us here, in some respects.

The Kansas City baby clinic examined in the year 1918-19, six thousand children under six years of age and found sixty-two per cent defective. Two years of work in this clinic with babies showing for the year 1920-21 fifteen thousand children under six years of age examined with only thirty-three per cent defective. Still Kansas City is one of three cities of over 250,000 population with a death rate under one year of age in excess of ten per cent.

President Harding has issued an invitation to Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan to attend a conference in Washington looking to disarmament and also to consider the far eastern problem. All have signified their acceptance and other nations have indicated their approval.

Palestine and Prophecy

By T. W. Williams

*"We have a work to do among the Jews.
Let us continue and extend the Palestine mission."*

The Promise

"And God said unto Abraham,
Go thou from thy land,
And from thy kindred, and from thy father's house,
Unto the land which I will show thee;
And I will bless thee, and I will make thy name great;
Therefore be thou a blessing,
And I will bless those blessing thee;
But those making light of thee shall I curse;
And all the clans of the earth will bless themselves with thee."
—Hebrew Text.

God's promises to Abraham were clear and comprehensive. They were conditional. All God's promises are. Abraham's faith and loyalty to the divine stipulations were "counted to him for righteousness." The demands were executed in letter and spirit. He did his part. The promise thereof is sure.

God exacted of Abraham:

- (a) To separate himself from the land of his birth.
- (b) Leave his kindred and his father's house.
- (c) Go to a land which God would show him.
- (d) Prove himself a blessing to others.

God obligated himself to:

- (a) Make of Abraham a great nation.
- (b) To bless him as well as his seed.
- (c) Make thy name great.
- (d) Clans of the earth will bless themselves with thee.

Abraham left Chaldea. He entered Canaan from the north. He journeyed its entire length. It was at Moreh where he received his first revelations in the promised land. The former blessing was extended to his seed. Here was created the first Jewish altar. It was dedicated "unto the Lord who appeared unto me." Abraham was given to understand that he was in the land which God had promised him. He builded an altar at the top of Mount Moriah, where the temple afterwards stood.

Description of the Land

And the Lord said:

"Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward. And remember the covenant which I make with thee; for it shall be an everlasting covenant. . . . For all the land which thou seest will I give thee, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, thy seed shall also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee."—Genesis 13: 12-15, Inspired Translation.

The Lord spoke to him later and said:

"Thou shalt be a father of many nations."

"I will make thee exceedingly fruitful."

"I will make nations of thee and kings shall come of thee and thy seed."

"I will give unto thee and thy seed after thee a land wherein thou art a stranger; all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession." (Genesis 17: 8-13, I. T.)

This land was to be from "the rivers of Egypt unto the great River Euphrates." (Genesis 15: 21, I. T.)

It was to embrace the land of ten nations as: "The Kenites and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaims, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites." (Genesis 15: 22, I. T.)

This covenant was sealed with the sign of circumcision and by an expressed change of name.

When Isaac went up to Beersheba the Lord confirmed the promise to him saying, "Fear not, for I shall be with thee and bless thee and multiply thy seed, for the sake of Abraham, my servant." (Genesis 26: 24.)

Herewith the blessing given to Jacob:

"May God give thee the dew of heaven
And of the fatness of the earth,
And abundance of corn and new wine;
May peoples bless thee,
And nations do thee homage;
Be thou a mighty one to thy brethren,
And let the sons of thy mother do thee homage.
Cursed be those cursing thee,
And blessed be those blessing thee."

—Genesis 27: 28, 29, Hebrew Text.

This promise was amplified at another time when Jacob was on his way to Haran:

"The land upon which thou art abiding, to thee will I give it and to thy seed."

"I shall be with thee, and keep thee in every place whither thou goest."

"I will bring thee again into this land." (Genesis 28: 13-16.)

When Jacob lay dying he gathered his twelve sons around him and delivered his final blessing. There is no question as to the specific character of the blessing given to Judah. He said:

The Blessing of Judah

"O thou, Judah, thy brethren will praise thee;
Thy hand will be on the neck of thine enemies.
The children of thy father shall do homage to thee.
O lion's whelp, Judah!
From the prey, my son, thou dost go up,
He doth bow down. He doth lie down as a lion,
And as a lioness. Who will rouse him?
The scepter will not depart from Judah,
Nor the ruler's rod from between his feet,
Until Shiloh shall come.
Unto him shall the gathering of the people be;
Binding to the vine his foal;
His ass's colt unto the choice vine;
He doth wash with wine his garment,
And with the blood of grapes his clothing;
Dark flashing his eyes with wine,
And white his teeth with milk."

—Genesis 49: 8-12, Hebrew Text.

This promise was a prophecy of the ascendancy of Judah in the land of Canaan. He was to triumph over his enemies.

God indicated to Abraham that these things would not come immediately. He foretold the sojourn of his seed in Egypt, but indicated that the fourth generation would possess the land. He raised up Moses for this specific purpose and the promise was markedly fulfilled.

Disobedience and Scattering

The Lord, speaking through Moses, warned Israel and indicated what would happen to them in case of disobedience. He said:

"If ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments; and if ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant; I also will do this unto you; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart; and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it. And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies; they that hate you shall reign over you; and ye shall flee when none pursueth; . . . And your strength shall be spent in vain; for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruit. . . . And I will bring the land into desolation; and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it. And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you. And your land shall be desolate and your cities waste. . . . And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up. And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands. . . . If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me; and that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity; then will I remember my covenant with Jacob . . . and I will remember the land. . . . And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them. . . . But I will, for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors."—Leviticus 26: 14-45, I. T.

Condition of Gathering

"And the Lord shall scatter you among the nations . . . if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shall be obedient unto his voice (for the Lord, thy God is a merciful God), he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he swore unto them."—Deuteronomy 4: 27-31, I. T.

Moses emphasizes this in a further elaboration of the purposes of God:

"And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither the Lord, thy God, hath driven thee: and shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the Lord, thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee; and the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers."—Deuteronomy 30: 1-5, I. T.

Reasons for Dispersion

The people were driven out of Palestine because they forsook God and defiled the land. Future inheritance is contingent upon repentance, renunciation, and a return to God. It will not be enough to yearn for the homeland. Going back because they are persecuted elsewhere will not make for permanent residence. A desire to possess will not suffice. Israel must put away her idols before she can come into her own.

If we base our argument on the major and minor prophets, we must conclude that the specific reason why the Jews were driven out of the promised land was because they set aside the great social plan which Moses instituted relating to land tenure, inheritances, social justice, and equality, and followed after the ways of their neighbors.

The Jews must come back to the divine plan relating to inheritances. They must abandon the ways of the Gentiles which are in contravention to justice and equity. When they do this, God is bound to cooperate with them. It is not imperative that they all believe in Jesus Christ. They may not recognize Christ as Messiah and King. They must, however, return to the terms under which Abraham and Isaac and Jacob secured possession. This means a renunciation of private ownership, competition, usury, and wage slavery.

Some Further Predictions

Amos, who lived some seven hundred and eighty-seven years before Christ, prophesied:

"And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them. . . . And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall be no more pulled up out of their land which I have given them."—Amos 9: 14, 15, I. T.

Isaiah was optimistic when contemplating the final inheritance of his people.

"The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."—Isaiah 11: 11, 12, I. T.

Ezekiel, speaking of these coming events, said:

"I will make a covenant of peace with them: it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them and multiply them and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore."—Ezekiel 37: 26, I. T.

Significant Indications

Attention is again called to the Zionist conference held in Pittsburgh some time ago. This declared for a program of colonization which embraced the following:

- (a) Equality of opportunity.
- (b) Ownership and control by the whole people of the land, of all natural resources, and of all public utilities.
- (c) Land owned and controlled by the whole people.
- (d) The cooperative principle should be supplied so far as feasible in the organization of all agricultural, industrial, commercial, and financial undertakings.
- (e) The fiscal policy should be so framed as to prevent land speculation and prevent financial oppression.

With such a program is there anything to prevent the rehabilitation of the Jewish nation? Having such a program does it not afford the Church of Jesus Christ an excellent opportunity to demonstrate to them that the highest ideals of Judaism finds clearer and more complete expression in the gospel of Jesus Christ?

If the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon was for the express purpose to "show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations," is there any possible argument which can be produced which would justify us in not doing our utmost to consummate this purpose?

We have a mission to perform which relates to the whole house of Israel? We have a work to do among the Jews? We cannot ignore it. If we fail in this we fall short of the demands which the Almighty has imposed upon us. Let us continue and extend the Palestine mission.

The pace that kills is stated to be a crawl, according to Doctor Woods Hutchinson. He says there are many instances of men of active life who have passed away within a short time after retirement.

The Utility of Fear

By James E. Bishop

Fear, properly utilized, may become a great incentive for productive action.

To claim utility for fear is to run counter to such theories, that whenever we read of fear in the Scriptures it means reverence, or that "fear is the tool of the Devil." To urge that fear of God always means reverence is to fail to understand human nature, and to say that fear is a tool of the Devil is to miss the mark that fear is the result of definite causes.

It is true that "perfect love casteth out fear" and that fear is the antithesis of faith. But perfect love is a result of development, as also is strong faith. And before that development is attained one passes through several stages of growth, and it is in the lower stages of growth that fear has utility.

Alma 19: 10, 11, appeals to the emotion of fear: "And now, my son, I would to God that ye had not been guilty of so great a crime. I would not dwell upon your crimes, to harrow up your soul, if it were not for your good." Doctrine and Covenants, 18: 2, says, "Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scripture, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men."

Fear is an instinct and is manifested early in child life, and with the majority continues until death. It is a very powerful instinct, but is subject to sublimation into caution. Perhaps if men were born without fear the human race would not live very long, for all would become reckless. When the instinct of fear is aroused through some object, it becomes an emotion. An emotion is an intense feeling accompanied with strong bodily activity.

We All Fear

All men are afraid. Some people are afraid of water (hydrophobia), others are afraid of high places, and others of fire. In fact, there are almost numberless objects that arouse fear in various people. But all these fears inhere, or find their basis in the awful fear mentioned in Hebrews 2: 15: "And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." The sentiment in this verse, in connection with the fear of death, is identical with the following, which is attributed to Huxley: "It flashes across me at all sorts of times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more of what is going on than I did in 1800. I would sooner be in hell a good deal, at least in one of the upper circles where the climate and company were not too trying."

Nature of Fear Is a Phenomenon

We are told that the nature of fear is a phenomenon of interrupted conscious action, manifesting itself in two ways. (1) We have a temporary suspension of the forward movement of consciousness, and (2) the overflow of motor impulses into channels leading partly to the involuntary muscles and partly, because of heredity, through the voluntary system.

When fear is thus aroused, the person who allows the major portion of the impulse to go through the involuntary system fails to make the proper adjustment. He makes poor battle, if any at all; and perhaps this is the physiology of cowardice. The person who controls the major portion of the impulse and directs its usage in the voluntary system, usually makes the needful adjustment, and lays the basis of new habits. This latter phase is very important in a gospel sense. When one who has sinned is brought in contact with the gospel, he envisages the harvest of his life. It causes him to fear. And "the significance of emotion as a fact of consciousness would seem, therefore, to be resident in this monitory function, represented by its compelling announcement of needed adjustments. He who makes the adjustment gives birth to faith, and if faith is nurtured, fear is crowded out, and one is on the royal road to that perfect love that casteth out fear.

A Contrast in Results of Fear

In the lives of various men we find the factors mentioned above manifested. We refer to two. One made the adjustment, the other did not. He who made the adjustment was Alma, and we read of his experience as follows:

"But I was racked with eternal torment, for my soul was harrowed up to the greatest degree, and racked with all my sins. Yea, I did remember all my sins and iniquities, for which I was tormented with the pains of hell; yea, I saw that I had rebelled against my God, and that I had not kept his holy commandments; yea, and I had murdered many of his children, or rather led them away unto destruction; yea, and in fine, so great had been my iniquities, that the very thoughts of coming into the presence of my God, did rack my soul with inexpressible horror. O, thought I, that I could be banished and become extinct both soul and body, that I might not be brought to stand in the presence of my God, to be judged of my deeds. And now, for three days and for three nights was I racked, even with the pains of a damned soul. And it came to pass that as I was thus racked with torment, while I was harrowed up by the memory of my many sins, behold, I remembered also to have heard my father prophesy unto the people concerning the coming of one Jesus Christ, a Son of God, to atone for the sins of the world. Now as my mind caught hold upon this thought, I cried within my heart, O Jesus, thou Son of God, have mercy on me, who art in the gall of bitterness, and art encircled about by the everlasting chains of death. And now behold, when I thought this, I could remember my pains no more; yea, I was harrowed by the memory of my sins no more. And O, what joy, and what marvelous light I did behold; yea, my soul was filled with joy as exceeding as was my pain; yea, I say unto you, my son, that there could be nothing so exquisite and so bitter as was my pains. Yea, and again I say unto you, my son, that on the other hand, there can be nothing so exquisite and sweet as was my joy."—Alma 17: 10-19.

Here then, we have Alma having brought to his consciousness the consequences of his sin. It caused him terrific fear. This fear announced his maladjustment and the need of readjustment. He utilized the monitory effect of his experience and called upon him that had power to deliver from fear. Faith was thus planted in his mind and it grew until it brought him peace and joy.

Our other case is Felix. Paul stood before him and reasoned of temperance and righteousness and judgment to come, and Felix trembled. Evidently the emotion of fear was aroused in the heart of Felix and he must have envisaged the evil harvest of his wicked life. But he needed not the monitory effect of his experience and told Paul he would hear him at some more convenient season.

Much is written nowadays concerning psychoanalysis and character reading preceding employment. Leslie's weekly makes a comment on the recent test of a New Yorker of unusual ability who was made a very tempting offer by a large firm. The expert read him high in latent ability but deficient in self-esteem and selfishness so he was not employed, as he was told there was not sufficient iron in his blood. This, of course, is quite in controvention of Christian principles.

EDUCATION PLUS

We do well to give homage to education, but we must give due credit to that intangible quality which gives it the breath of life.

Every college commencement, every high school graduation day, tacitly or outspokenly pays homage to learning and education. It is—and rightly—so deep-seated a habit to exalt the powers of schooling that we have come almost to regard it as omnipotent, forgetting sometimes that education, like everything else, has its limitations. The intake of learning nourishes and furnishes the mind as food builds up and renews the body; but neither mental nor physical fare that is not digested and assimilated has the slightest nutritive value.

There are gluttons in lecture hall and seminar just as truly as there are in the dining room. Among the saddest spectacles to be seen at any great university are men who study year in and year out simply for the sake of study. They teach no classes, write no books, engage in no useful research and add nothing to the sum total of human knowledge. They fairly drip with knowledge that spoils from sheer stagnation, but they have less of initiative and constructive faculty than the manager of the college tea-room or the bright newsboy on the corner. Learning unquickenened by inborn gumption or mother wit is like a dynamo without an engine to keep it spinning. Schooling affords the materials upon which intellectual vigor works; but it is not and it never has been the great prime mover.

For every young man who wins a college degree or goes through the high school there are two to envy him the opportunities that were vouchsafed to him and denied to them. Their envy is well founded; and yet many of these boys may have within them that inbred vigor, that inherited momentum that will compensate for their lack of other advantages and enable them to outdistance the very men whose lot they regard as so much happier than their own. It is an old maxim with athletic trainers that, in the long run, the best man will win, no matter how great his handicap.

One of the most eminent of university presidents was once asked which is of greater service to a young man, ability or experience. "Ability," was his wise response, "for ability will get experience." Very often it gets schooling of a useful sort, as well.

The heritage of a vigorous and aggressive mind can scarcely be overestimated, not only because it is in itself a gift above all price, but also because it is likely to be associated with a strong character, a high sense of personal obligation, and a sturdy self-reliance.

Often an unlettered mechanic who has by chance read some great book will get much more out of it and establish a much closer contact with the author's mind than other men who have ten times the reader's schooling, but not his capacity for hard thinking or his power to grapple with new and complex ideas.

Education stimulates the mind and makes for the clarification of thought; but it is by no means the same thing as brain power, nor is it even a passable substitute for it. If it were, we should have only to feed upon the wisdom of the ages to become a race of intellectual giants in a single generation; and yet scientists who have given much thought to the matter declare that the human mind has in no wise added to its powers since the days of Plato and Aristotle, and some of them date the arrest of our racial mental development back among the unnumbered years of prehistoric ages.

It is right and fitting to do homage to education, but it is willful blindness to ignore those intangible faculties that breathe into it the breath of life and enable it to score the mighty achievements for which it too commonly receives undivided credit.—Reprinted by permission from the Saturday Evening Post, June 25, 1921. FINDING RELICS OF ANCIENT CIVILIZATION

William Nevin, archæologist, continues to find remains that substantiate Book of Mormon accounts of American peoples.

In the Valley of Mexico, about seventeen miles from the city, at a place called Atzacapozalco, a Scotch gentleman named William Nevin goes out to dig twice a week. Sometimes friends go with him. Sometimes he digs alone.

Mr. Nevin is digging up Mexico's past history—her remote past. He has already dug up proofs of three distinct civilizations, lying not very far down, and one upon another, like the filling of a layer cake.

Probably where he is digging is one of the richest archæological deposits in the world. Every time he digs he unearths little ancient figures and decorated pottery, much of it intact. Yet nobody pays any attention to his activities. He wraps up the choicest of the day's haul in an old newspaper to take home and leaves the rest lying around the ground.

He finds his treasure usually concentrated in cuts twelve to twenty feet deep and one hundred to three hundred feet across.

Down anywhere from three to fifteen feet below lies the first deposit. It isn't far to dig to all that is left of the conquering and migratory Aztecs.

Lowest Objects Best Preserved

Then comes a layer of gravel—less than a foot—some six to ten inches. Then something very curious, the remains of a sort of cement floor, eight inches. Then more soil, usually some three feet; and here lies the second story. No one has exactly decided just what this story really tells—so they call it simply, the "pre-Aztec."

Then three to six feet of ashes and charcoal, and below that the lowest layer, and the third story, the "primitive."

Strange as it seems, the objects at the lowest level—those that have endured the greatest period of time—are the best preserved—due, undoubtedly, to the superior preserving quality of the surrounding medium. Here are skulls, pottery, household objects, well kept, but all in the wildest confusion.

Those who dream over the buried mystery say death came suddenly to these people. Who were they? Why did they disappear from the face of the earth? And when? Neither history nor mythology gives so much as a hint. But the traces of their civilization are all distinctly Mongolian, while those that came after, and over them, resemble Egyptian.

The ashes and charcoal that lie just above give meditative diggers ground for believing that whoever they were who once inhabited this high mountain-circled valley, a volcano ended them.

A Period of Animals

Was it Popocatepetl, which to-day sends up ominous clouds of smoke, or "The Sleeping Woman," who still sleeps? Who knows?

In the soil that then gradually settled over these ashes and these buried people are now found skulls, skeletons, and pieces of pottery badly broken and not to be matched. It is thought that blood wiped out these, and that then came a pe-

HYMNS AND POEMS

A Song of Gratitude

By Charles Derry

(An unpublished poem.)

Jesus, our great redeeming Lord,
Thou willing sacrifice for sin,
Be thy great name for aye adored,
Thy love did endless glories win.

Not for thyself—thou hadst no need,
The boundless realms of bliss were thine;
Mean would have been earth's brightest meed
Compared with glories so divine.

Infinite glories thus laid by,
To bear man's woes, endure his ban;
Thou didst not shrink for us to die,
Such is thy boundless love for man.

Yea, thou didst die that we might live
And reign with thee in endless bliss,
Enjoy the glory God can give.
Oh, where is love divine like this!

Eternal praises swell my soul,
For love is precious, pure, divine;
Dear Lord, accept me; take the whole
Of this poor soul and make it thine.

riod when man no longer lived here, while great animals roamed at their ease among dense and luxurious vegetation. For here are huge deer horns and elk and javelin teeth.

For man came again—great migratory tribes from the north. The animals were driven out, the rank vegetation subdued. These new people built cement floors to their houses—and laid streets.

These were the last people to sink into the soil of Mexico. Here, only about three feet from the surface, lie the remains of the advanced Aztec civilization.

Here is decorative pottery of a high class. Here are clever tools, finely made from bone, needles for sewing, needles for knitting, spindle whirls similar to those found in Troy, cylinders for rolling manuscript, tools for printing, pipes for high glaze.

Clothes Were Scanty

It is clearly established that these people were the Aztecs who founded the city of Mexico—that they called Tenochtitlan—in the early part of the fourteenth century.

But who those were who went before them, no one can say, although the Aztecs have a vague myth of a great fire and a great deluge, and two great peoples' destruction.

Perhaps the most illuminating idea of the advances made by the successive civilizations is found by putting side by side figures of the women of each period; and pondering on the difference in their style.

The first woman was evidently an ardent devotee of simplicity. In fact, her only adornment seems to have been something in an unpretentious doughnut design worn upon the head.

The woman who came after her had a far more elaborate headdress, and had advanced (or rather descended) to the necklace or collar stage. The Aztec charmer's headdress was overwhelming, and her necklaces without number.—New York Tribune.

Resignation

By J. L. Williams

(To an afflicted friend.)

Beneath the chast'ning rod I stand,
 And sore afflictions bear me down;
 Still let me be resigned to Thee;
 Without the cross there'd be no crown.

Lord, give me faith that I may see
 With wisdom's clear, discerning eyes,
 What now appear great trials here
 Are but true blessings in disguise.

Man's earthly days at best are few
 And filled with trouble everywhere;
 Each has his share of sorrow here;
 Sometimes the load seems hard to bear.

Lord, give me strength and courage, too,
 That I may ever faithful be
 To spurn the dross and bear my cross;
 My hope and trust be all in Thee.

When Shall We Be Like Thee?

By Pearl A. Stoddard

Tune: "Glorious things are sung of Zion."

When, O Lord, shall we be like thee,
 Ready for our home above;
 Fit to dwell within thy presence,
 Worthy of thy boundless love?
 Now we walk this vale of sorrow,
 Weary of the ceaseless strife;
 Ever hopeful that thy coming,
 Shall our effort crown with life.

As the morning dawns with splendor,
 With its promises of hope;
 As the gates of day unfolding,
 The eternal portals ope;
 When we take our journey onward,
 In sincerity and trust,
 He will lead us gently upward,
 Till we triumph with the just.

And although the path is narrow,
 Though 'tis oft beset with care;
 If it be where service calls us,
 'Tis our duty to prepare.
 We shall find in helping others,
 That our cross has lighter grown;
 And the joy which thrills our being,
 Greater than we else had known.

Edgar Lucian Larkin, director of Mount Lowe Observatory states in the San Francisco Examiner of June 15 that the temple of Ptah in Egypt had walls thirty to forty feet thick and the inclosing wall is one third of a mile long. In the pyramid of Sosis there are rooms filled with scientific instruments and priceless astronomical records. The ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter is graphically expressed.

The Eternal City—Part 3

By H. J. Davison

The place of Ephraim and his descendants in the history of the Jews.

When the house of Jacob was divided and became Israel and Judah, or the northern and southern kingdoms, there were ten tribes who followed Jeroboam, who set up his capital at Shechem in Mount Ephraim, and went into idolatry.

The tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and many of the Levites and remnants of the other tribes remained with Rehoboam, who reigned in Jerusalem (1 Kings 12: 20-25, and 2 Chronicles 11: 12-14); not the tribes of Gad, Reuben, and the half tribe of Manasseh, as many seem to think. That division was made by Moses before the settlement of Palestine by Joshua. They preferred to settle on "the other side of Jordan" and their request was granted. (Joshua 18: 7.)

The original tribal territorial lines or boundaries had become largely obliterated at the time of the dividing of the kingdom, some 460 years later, and became more so after the revolt.

About 250 years later, or about 720 B. C., the Assyrians took the northern empire by conquest, and removed the inhabitants into an eastern country, from whence they went into a north land (if the Apochrypha is to be depended upon for history concerning the later move, I think Esdras 3), and are known as the "ten lost tribes," or the outcasts of Israel. (Psalms 147: 2; Isaiah 11: 12.) Among them was the house of Joseph, represented by the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh—so understood by both Jewish and Gentile historians. Otherwise, why say "ten lost tribes"?

True, there were scattering ones of both these tribes who did not go—notably the family of Lehi of the tribe of Manasseh (Alma 8), whose destiny we will outline in a following chapter.

Also from the scattered ones of Ephraim came a large portion of the English people, attested by so many patriarchal blessings bestowed upon the Saints of this and other countries, who trace their genealogy through Anglo-Saxon lines.

Many authorities also make the same claim by genealogical research. Other nationalities as well.

Nevertheless, as tribes, there seems to be no question but that both Ephraim and Manasseh went into Assyrian captivity, and are to-day associated with the other eight in some unknown land. Ephraim, always in the ascendancy, to whom belongs the leadership, is no doubt chief among them, and who has been writing the record, of which the Book of Mormon speaks in 2 Nephi 12: 66-70. If so, when that record comes forth, which it will, it will be a record of Joseph, in the hands of Ephraim, and all the tribes of Israel his fellows; or, in other words, the other nine tribes, until it is joined with the writings of the other division of Jacob or the house of Judah, or on its way.

Our friends, the Jews, naturally think they have the last word on Jewish history, and the Jewish situation, generally, but there is a surprise in store for them, that will be appreciated by some when they shall have fulfilled some prophecy regarding themselves, and have access to a few ancient records that will be known, some of which are already familiar to a part of Christianity.

Concerning Ephraim, let the reader remember that when Jacob, his grandfather, placed upon him his patriarchal blessing, he conferred on him the honor of the first born. Although his brother Manasseh was really the older of the two, he also claimed them as his; which would place them among the tribes. (Genesis 48.)

God seemed to sanction that conferment when he said, "Ephraim is my first born." (Jeremiah 31: 9.) Why should God claim Ephraim as his first born in the house of Israel unless it meant something? What does it mean to have the honors of the first born conferred upon one? It means that he shall be heir to a double portion, and also to the rulership. This is the birthright. (Genesis 27: 36, 37; 1 Chronicles 5: 1, 2.) Reuben did evil and the rulership went to Judah, in the house and kingdom of Judah. But we read that the birthright was given to the sons of Joseph, and Ephraim was designated. Therefore it is logical for us to look for supremacy in Ephraim outside of the house of Judah.

Among the prophets the term Ephraim stood for at least four things, and one should be very careful in reading to discriminate which of these things the author had reference to when writing, whether Ephraim as an individual, a tribe, the whole house of Israel, or the land in which Israel was located.

Especially in the book of Hosea is this true. For instance, Hosea 8: 12: "I have written unto Ephraim the great things of my law, but they were accounted as a strange thing." This could not apply to Ephraim as a man, or Ephraim as a separate tribe, but to Ephraim as a nation; for it was the house of Israel that God was rebuking for doing two especial things that God had forbidden—setting up idols or "calves" to worship, and allying themselves with other nations. (See chapters 5, 6, 7, and 8.)

And it was somewhat strange that others, even idolatrous nations, could become allies and be stronger.

Ephraim as a man did not attain to greatness, yet his descendants, as a tribe, were conspicuous and powerful. And after the revolt the whole ten tribes took the name of Ephraim and as such were taken into Assyrian captivity.

The remnants, also, of Ephraim, which percolated down through our progenitors, were marked with distinction. So one need not be surprised that in the United States Ephraim holds the ascendancy over all other nationalities, and especially Manasseh, who is in the land in the person of the American Indian. Nor that Great Britain should rank high among the nations, and should be the chosen people of God with her modern Joshua—Allenby—to drive the unspeakable Turk from Palestine and secure to the Jews the possibility of returning to their "promised land." And yet leading religious men proclaim that God deals no longer with nations, as nations, but only with individuals.

And what will they do with Jeremiah 30, especially verses 10 and 11: "Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee." This is concerning Israel and Judah. And we will cite many other passages hereafter.

"Cut out meat and be happy," was the advice given by Doctor Edwin Antisdale, of Chicago, in an address before the convention of three medical societies. "If you would enjoy life in its highest form, with good health, the ability to think clearly, with freedom from anger and other disagreeable traits, cut out the meat diet and eat plenty of spinach, cabbage, and celery. These foods are rich in minerals and solids."

WHAT WE BELIEVE

The Eternal Judgment

By Elbert A. Smith

A theme of universal interest discussed in a convincing manner.

"The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed."—1 Samuel 2: 3.

Our theme is not a popular one in polite society. It is not a theme that is often discussed at dances or at card parties or at feasts. Society has agreed to ignore it. It is tabooed.

But God does not always observe good form (according to some standards, at least). He thrust this subject upon the attention of King Belshazzar at a time when he was giving a feast to his wives and concubines and a thousand of his nobles (Daniel 5).

The king beheld a hand in the act of writing on the wall. When the king with shaking knees and quavering voice asked for the interpretation, Daniel gave it. In part it was:

"Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."

That was in harmony with our text: "The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed."

What bad taste (some might say) to drag a pair of balances upon the scene of that great social function and proceed to weigh the king and to write the result on the wall for all to see. But God is no respecter of persons. At some time every man who ever lived must be weighed in the balances. Are you ready for the test?

Men Judged Now

In a certain sense judgment is going on now. Men are constantly judged and punished or rewarded, according to the laws of Nature, which are the laws of God.

If you put your hand into the fire you commit a physical sin and you are judged and punished immediately. If you do a mean, contemptible, vile act, the result to yourself may not be so obvious, but it is no less sure. Paul speaks of some whose consciences are seared as with a hot iron.

Spiritual injuries, malformations, and deformities resulting from corrupt thinking and doing are more hideous, monstrous, and terrible than anything resulting to the flesh from violation of physical laws.

Men bear in their own souls the marks of God's judgments on sin. You can see it in their eyes.

Nevertheless, many apparently escape the consequences of their evil ways, to an extent at least; though probably their immunity is more apparent than real. On the other hand many innocent people suffer for the sins of others, due to the interdependence of humanity; for no man liveth to himself alone. Consequently in the providence of God there is a set time coming when all things will be equalized and every man will get his deserts.

Men may appear to sin with immunity for a time, but it is a true saying: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7.

"Ye have plowed, ye have sowed, and the harvest shall be of its kind;

What ye sowed ye shall gather and grind;

What ye grind ye shall bake, saith the Lord, and, or bitter or sweet,

In the days that shall be ye shall eat."—Shoonmaker.

Special Judgments

There are special judgments of God, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5). A case in point also is that of King Belshazzar already referred to. The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah might be mentioned in this connection. Their object is mentioned in Isaiah 26: 9: "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

We must not flatter ourselves that these special dispensations are altogether a thing of the past:

"Did ye deem that my wrath was a cloud that had thundered and gone, Swallowed up in the smile of the dawn?"

Preliminary Judgment

There are also what might be termed preliminary judgments. We are told that at death: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 7.

All kinds of men are dying all the time. All kinds of spirits are ascending to God. Do they all remain with him?

We understand that those who find favor with him are received into paradise to await the final judgment; while the wicked are sent to the prison house to await the same great event. This presupposes a sort of preliminary judgment at death.

To the penitent and forgiven thief Jesus said: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23: 43. See also Revelation 14: 13; 2: 7; 2 Corinthians 5: 1-9.

While of the wicked and unforgiven it is said:

"The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psalms 9: 17.

"And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit."—Isaiah 24: 22. See also Psalms 55: 15; Zechariah 9: 12; 2 Peter 2: 4-9; Ezekiel 31: 16, 17.

The Final Judgment

But there is also to be a final great day of judgment. We are told:

"He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."—Acts 17: 31.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Revelation 20: 12.

Events Leading up to That Day

Jesus is to come again. He left that definite promise on record: "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again."—John 14: 3.

The angels confirmed this promise at the time of his ascension:

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11.

His departure was real and personal; his second coming will be real and personal:

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 27.

At his coming, the first resurrection, that of the righteous, is to take place, and they are to be with him a thousand years:

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thessalonians 4: 16.

"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection."—Revelation 20: 4-6.

This is followed in John's account by his description of the great judgment, when the dead both great and small were judged.

The events then are: The second coming of Jesus; the first resurrection, at which time the dead in Christ are resurrected and the living righteous meet him; the thousand years millennial reign; the resurrection of the wicked, followed by the loosing of Satan for a time; and afterward the final great judgment.

Characteristics of That Judgment

John tells us (Revelation 20) that both small and great shall stand before God—the king from his throne, the peasant from his hovel, Dives who lived in luxury, Lazarus who lived in rags—all will be there.

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it." The men who now sleep in the luxurious staterooms of the Titanic and the Lusitania at the bottom of the sea, in the most splendid coffins ever constructed by man, will be there.

"And death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." The most remote recesses of the bottomless pit will yield up the lost spirits that cower there. Men must face that judgment bar. It is not a matter of choice, but a matter of necessity.

The judgment will be just. God will be our righteous judge in that day, in connection no doubt with the Master: "Because he hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."—Acts 17: 31.

"He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth . . . and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."—Isaiah 11: 3, 4.

A judge stopped a runaway horse and saved a man. Afterward that man was charged with murder and arraigned before that judge. He pleaded, "Judge, you do not know me. You saved me once; you cannot take my life from me."

The judge replied: "I was your savior then; but now I am your judge."

When Jesus was here he said:

"I came not to judge the world, but to save the world."—John 12: 47.

"The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."—John 12: 48.

Jesus came once to save the world. Presently he is coming to judge the world. He is both savior and judge. By his word we shall be approved or condemned.

The Basis of Reward and Punishment

It is distinctly stated that all men are to be judged according to their works:

"And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Revelation 20: 12.

"And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."—Revelation 22: 12.

This idea of merit as a basis of reward appeals to common sense. It is just, as God is just. Yet it controverts the old theological idea of one great, eternal reward of everlasting glory in heaven, and one great, eternal, everlasting punishment in hell—just two places and conditions—heaven on the one hand, hell on the other.

A Line of Men for Judgment

To illustrate; let us in imagination arrange a line of men before us for judgment. At one end of the line is the meanest man that ever lived. At the other end is the best man that ever lived. They are graded down morally from the best to the worst, and stand shoulder to shoulder, scarcely an inch apart physically and morally.

Tell us now, where can we put our hand down in this line and say that all on this side shall go to heaven and all on that side shall go to hell?

And if God fixes the dividing line between two certain men, will he say that this man who has missed hell only by the thickness of a hand shall go into heaven and share celestial glory equally with the best man who ever lived? And that this other man who has lost heaven by an inch shall go to hell and suffer the same punishment that is meted out to the worst man who ever profaned the human form?

We do better than that here, in our high schools and our police courts. We at least try to give reward in proportion to merit and mete out punishment according to degree of guilt.

Drawing the Line Elsewhere

But one says, We will not draw the line in that way. We will draw the line between those who accept Jesus and those who reject him. Very well, we will rearrange our line of men.

But the problem is not solved in that way. For there still exists the utmost diversity of character, service, merit, and development among those who have accepted Jesus. Some are not worthy to receive, neither are they prepared to enjoy the reward that others merit. And the same great differences exist among those who have not accepted Jesus.

Most noteworthy of all, perhaps, some who have professedly accepted him are not so worthy as some who have failed to accept him. Following is a case from life. It is a true incident, excepting that correct names are not given.

A Case From Life

Henry Clay Bates, a young man, member of a well-known aristocratic family of Virginia, fell in love with a dissolute girl of the neighborhood. He became so enamored of her that he took his young wife, mother of his little boy, riding in his automobile, stopped at a lonely place on the road, took a shotgun from the weeds where he had hidden it, and killed her.

He was arrested, tried, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged. After he had carried the case through the various courts, and exhausted every artifice that money and legal talent could employ, after appeal for pardon had failed, and as the day of execution drew near, and the time approached to set the death watch at his cell door, he sent for a clergyman of an orthodox church (so-called), confessed his crime, "accepted Jesus," received "religious consolation," and declared, "I die happy."

We are asked to believe that the executioner swung him, black-faced and strangling at the end of a hangman's noose, right into eternal glory. Can you picture Peter meeting him, removing the hangman's cap, loosening the noose, taking him by the hand and saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord"? Will John the Beloved and the devout Stephen move over to make room for Henry Clay Bates, up close to the great white throne?

What about Mrs. Bates? She was a good woman, but not a member of the church. She had not accepted Jesus, by formal profession. Her husband gave her no time for confession. We are asked to believe that the explosion of that gun that blew her gentle mother spirit from her breast blew it right into hell. Must Judas Iscariot and Jezebel move over to make room for Mrs. Bates, up close to the hottest fire forever and forever?

The Theologians' God

If judgment were held before that kind of a God, we believe that some one would be there with courage to stand up and declare, "You may be a God of power, but you are not a God of justice." And that kind of a God would have no answer to that kind of a charge. He might stop that man's mouth with brimstone and fling him into the bottomless pit; but he could not answer him.

But, thank God, such a deity is merely a creation of the theologians. He does not exist. Our God is a God of knowledge, and a God of justice; by him "actions are weighed." By him men are judged, "according to their works," for so his word assures us.

The Glory of the Stars

God has a reward for every man proportionate to his works, his merit, his service, his spiritual development. He has a punishment for those who are condemned, adapted to the degree of moral turpitude of each. And he punishes to reform; not for vengeance.

Paul says:

"The glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—1 Corinthians 15: 40-42.

The heavens refute the theologian's travesty upon divine justice. As the psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God."

The glories and rewards that he will bestow are as diverse as the glories of the stars, the moon, and the sun. They range from the glory of the dimmest star that you can perceive, to yonder constellation of the first magnitude, and on up to glories like that of the moon and the sun.

It is clear, too, that he will differentiate in punishment as in reward. Jesus said of certain people: "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city."—Matthew 10: 15.

Predestination and Mohammedanism

Needless to say, this basis of judgment according to works is utterly opposed to the old predestination theology, which is stated in one of the creeds thus:

"By the Decree of God for the manifestation of his Glory, some Men and Angels are predestined upon everlasting Life, and others foreordained to everlasting Death.

"These Angels and Men thus predestinated, and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite, that it cannot be either increased or diminished."

And this creed goes on to say that God did not base his foreordination on any foreknowledge of their faith and good works, or the reverse. He merely selected some for eternal bliss and chose to pass others by, reserving them for hell, and all "to the praise of his glorious justice."

This accords well with Mohammedan theology, which is thus stated by Clarke:

"Accordingly, when God—so runs the tradition—I had better say blasphemy—resolved to create the human race, he took into his hands a mass of earth, the same whence all mankind were to be formed, . . . having then divided the clod into two equal portions, he threw the one half into hell, saying, 'These to eternal fire and I care not'; and projected the other half into heaven, adding, 'and these to paradise, and I care not.'—Ten Great Religions.

But it does not accord with the divine love and justice of God; who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (2 Peter 3: 9.)

"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth."—1 Timothy 2: 3, 4.

Salvation and Reward

Jesus has worked out our salvation in the sense that he has made it possible for us. He made the sacrifice. He lived the perfect life. He presents the divine plan. It is ours to accept and obey. But while he saves us out of love, when it comes to the question of reward, we must work that out. We will get that for which we work.

This is made very clear in the following:

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."—1 Corinthians 3: 11-15.

Some, then, may be saved terribly, and as by fire, and receive little or no reward. Others may receive reward according as they have built of precious stones, gold, or silver on the foundation laid for them in the divine wisdom and mercy.

It is conceded that works have a vital bearing on salvation, and acceptance of Jesus has a vital bearing on reward; but broadly speaking, salvation comes by acceptance of Jesus, and reward comes according to works. By acceptance of Jesus we mean sincere acceptance and obedience. Many profess to accept him who do not accept him at all, neither obey him. Others make no outward profession, yet really accept some at least of the truths that he taught.

By and by the hypocrites will be exposed. By and by those who now accept a part will openly accept all—if they follow the leadings of God, otherwise they will go backward and lose that which they now have.

Building Our Mansions

It becomes of the utmost importance, then, that we shall begin now to build wisely and well, that our works may stand the test mentioned above, and we receive the highest reward. Jesus said:

"Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock."—Matthew 7: 24.

"In my father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."—John 14: 2.

We do not presume that those mansions will be like rows upon rows of tenements, each exactly like its neighbor, and with no individuality. But each will express perfectly the individuality of its occupant.

In a sense we are building our own mansions on high. Oliver Wendell Holmes, strolling along the seashore, picked up the cast-off shell of a chambered nautilus. Holding it in his hand, he soliloquized:

"Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step the shining archway through,
Built up the idle door,

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

One Moment, Please

Field workers, district organizers, and local officers, one moment of your time and attention, please!

This is just to bring to your attention a certain condition of affairs which we have had to face, and certain adjustments that have been necessary to overcome certain hindrances to the development of our work.

While we are rapidly approaching the point where all the districts in the church will be provided with an appointed organizer, we are still a long, long ways from being as well organized locally. Only about forty per cent of the branches have a women's organization. Most of them, however, have a Sunday school, and, because of this latter fact, we found the cradle roll and home departments active in many places where the Women's Department had not yet found its way.

To meet this, our instructions from the first upon assuming responsibility for the conduct of the work above mentioned, had to be given with extreme care that the work could go on even while we were confronted with every possible combination of local conditions. Likewise, those instructions must be changed from time to time to meet the various steps of our progress and development.

At first, requesting that cradle roll and home department workers, wherever located and active for the Sunday school, accept appointment from us, we instructed them to report directly to our general executive. Later, as we became better organized in the districts, we asked these local workers to report to our district organizers.

This last rule will still hold good in all those localities where there is no local women's organization strong enough, or closely enough in touch with our plans successfully to prosecute, direct, and be responsible for the work of those divisions.

Let it be emphasized now, however, that just as rapidly as the locals become fully organized and functioning, and carefully trained in the various phases of our women's work, they will assume the direct care of and responsibility for that work in all its divisions—always, of course, under the general supervision of the district organizer. This responsibility of the local will include seeing that the cradle roll, home department, and young women's work is active in the branch, as well as the usual child welfare, social service, social purity, civics, community, and other work as shall develop later.

This responsibility upon the local organization will in-Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more."

Then the poet turns upon himself and with introspective gaze continues:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

The eternal judgment is not a popular theme in polite society. It has been tabooed. Yet it is not such a terrible theme excepting to the unprepared. It is not presented to frighten.

In it are revealed the greatness, love, mercy, justice of our God, "who is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

[Note: The above article may be had in tract form of the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri; No. T1225, 5 for 10 cents; 100 for $1.75.]

clude, also, the appointment of the superintendents in charge of all special lines, reappointments when vacancies occur, the receiving of reports from all of these officers, and a systematic and regular reporting of all activities to the district organizer. A persistent and consistent effort should be made by all locals to keep our department ideals and objectives in sight, and to direct all organized effort possible to the improvement and welfare of our homes, the establishment of Zionie conditions throughout the church, and a steady increase of consecrated, intelligent, and religious service of its women and children.

Summing up, then, the ideal local organization is one in which all divisions of our Women's Department work are being steadily prosecuted, fully organized, fully equipped, and all officers intelligently functioning, each one in charge of special work or division working in harmony with, and reporting to, the local organization, which in turn is working in harmony with, and reporting to, the district organizer.

Organizers, shall we not set our goals for this ideal local condition throughout all the districts? Shall we see what can be accomplished along this line by January first, next? Fine! "Let's go!"

Our Citizenship Division

One bit of good news has been waiting announcement to our readers and members of the Women's Department everywhere. It is the appointment of Sister Dora Young as supervisor of our citizenship division, an appointment which will meet with the hearty approval of all who read and enjoyed her series of lessons last winter.

Sister Young is intensely interested in her subject. She wishes to interest every other woman likewise, and will feel richly repaid for assuming the responsibilities of this important division of our departmental work, if a number of our women are encouraged thereby to inform themselves upon their civic duties and privileges.

We are distinctly gratified in making this appointment, for we feel that in preparing themselves for intelligent citizenship, our sisters will be wisely guided by this supervisor who has taken advantage of several splendid opportunities to obtain and master courses of instruction in her subject. Too, Sister Young has had experience in teaching, which adds greatly to her qualifications for this position.

Suggestions for study, with references to texts, books, magazines, and other helps, will be found elsewhere, and we hope every local of our department will include some study of citizenship in their program for the coming season.

Suggestions for Studies in Citizenship

A correspondence course in citizenship presented in a series of papers written by experts may be obtained from the Educational Section of the New York League of Women Voters, 37 West Thirty-ninth Street, New York City. The pamphlets contain information concerning the history, obligation, and privilege of citizenship, grouped under such titles as "Structure of government," "Women's special interests in government," "Questions of the moment," "Public schools and the child problem," etc. Ten cents for a single paper, or one dollar for an order of twelve.

The Missouri League of Women Voters also has a citizenship course, prepared by Miss Marie B. Ames, which may be obtained from Mrs. Richard Edwards, Peru, Indiana. Fifty cents for the course.

The Extension Division of the University of Missouri, Columbia, Missouri, has a series of lessons on citizenship which are sent free to applicants.

From Their Letters

Our district conference has gone into history, with our women's work better understood, I think. I tried to give a brief outline of what the May Institute at Independence was like, and emphasized its benefits. Doctor E. W. Phillips gave us a short talk on child welfare which did much good, judging from the comments heard afterwards. Elder P. G. McMahan lectured on moral education for children, with a few closing remarks on social purity. He speaks from experience along educational lines. . . . One local has raised a good sum of money towards finishing the interior of their church. Another group is laboring hard to complete a new building recently started. . . . Some intense interest among the brethren was aroused at our conference by a statement about the value of the time used by our women in raising money to help finance the churches, compared to the time that should be used for spiritual uplift in our homes and for the family's welfare. One brother said, "I think it is a ridiculous shame that the men of this church cannot go down into their pockets and finance it, and let the women spend more of their time in hastening the work along their particular lines of activity in physical, social, moral, and spiritual uplift." . . . We are considering the work to be done at reunion, and were so glad to receive the package of good outlined work and suggestions. . . . Still striving for success.—Cora Henson, Organizer, Southeastern Illinois.

Well, it is nearing our conference time, and every day is full to overflowing with preparation. We had about eight meetings last year under the auspices of the Women's Department, and plan about a dozen, at least, this year. . . . We have not been in a position to finance the coming of one of your institute workers to help us, so it means a lot of study and preparation for us. . . . Had been at my wit's end for some way to demonstrate the cradle roll work, when along came your lovely packet of good things, which was just what I was wishing for! We are hoping to put on both the sketches, the "Mrs. Adams," and the cradle roll playlet. We get much help, too, from the leaflets and papers. Many thanks for the "helps"; they were much appreciated, I assure you. Have been reading all about your institute at Independence. It must have been inspirational. How I wish I could have been with you!—Lottie Clarke Diggle, Organizer, Northern Saskatchewan.

Mrs. Jennie Jones, Seattle, has interested a cradle roll worker of the Methodist Episcopal Church in our work, and ordered for her the child care leaflet course.

I received the package of reunion supplies, and immediately called up the Oriole leader and told her about the playlet, and she was delighted. We are surely pleased with the young women's work in this city. We are fortunate in having successful leaders for both Orioles and Temple Builders, Sister Floye Griffin and Sister Lillian Ewing. The latter organized a circle of eight charter members a few weeks ago, and initiated several new members. Each and all are much enthused. This is the first year anything has been done in the young women's work and we are justly proud. We are going to have a delegation from San Jose, fifty miles south, to attend our regular meeting as soon as we get back from reunion.—Cleda Simpson, Organizer, Northern California.

Well, the reunion at Race Track is over and I hope some good was accomplished and I believe it was. Think they have a better understanding of the requirements of mothers and the women's work of the district. . . . I think there is better prospect for the work now. One sister who has been an active member all her life—she is now seventy-five—came to me and said, "I thought my work was done and that I could look on now, and see others do their share; but after hearing you this morning, I feel that I must keep on and work harder than ever." I believe every mother, and every other person who wanted them, went away from our reunion with a good supply. I had gotten nearly everything put out on child rearing, and if the mothers will just read them and put what they read into practice, I shall be very glad.—Anna Wyckoff, Organizer, Western Montana.

We are busy getting things ready for our reunion. We want to have a tent, with booths like we had at the institute in Independence. We are assured the reunion committee will supply one for the purpose, and Sister Gunsolley and I are making enthusiastic plans for it.—Ida Monroe, Organizer, Lamoni Stake.

A newspaper clipping coming to our desk tells of a very successful "Baby Week" held in Cheltenham, Pennsylvania, the home of Sister Barbara Milligan, our organizer for the New York and Philadelphia District. This write-up gives Sister Milligan unstinted praise for the work she put upon the various events, and much credit for its success. She worked with the women of the W. C. T. U. in this demonstration, which lasted three days, and ended with a parade in which eight babies took part. Forty-five decorated vehicles gave color to the pageant, and were filled with small children, while three hundred marching school children added interest to the event. These were led by two tiny tots dressed to represent George and Martha Washington. Emphasis was laid upon the proper care of children, and instruction and information imparted to the mothers. It is planned to have this "baby week" as an annual affair.

One of our locals will, I believe, compare favorably with any other in the church of its size. That almost sounds like bragging, but it is not meant that way. I refer to the local at Malad City, Idaho. I visited them some time ago, and invited the pastor to assist in presiding over the meeting which I conducted. Before the session I had discussed the matter with him and he readily assisted me by suggesting those whom he felt would make good workers in the different fields of women's work.

I recommended his selections of those to have charge of relief and service, Mothers' Clubs, Orioles, and Temple Builders, etc., and the report I have just received shows that they acted upon my suggestions. The whole town was divided into wards, with a visitor and assistants appointed over each. They got the church records and went over them carefully, giving a list of those living in the various wards to the visitors.

Every family was visited and conditions noted. If there were any sick, appointed ones rendered service by sitting up with them. Mothers with large families, overburdened with work, were visited by about a dozen sisters who took their lunch with them and spent the day in darning, mending, cutting, and making (or making over) garments. Thus they had a pleasant social time, as well as rendering appreciated service.

The older sisters who love to make quilts are allowed that privilege, but instead of raising money by their work the finished product is turned over to those who are not able to provide that which they need. All of this remedial work is done under the direction or with the approval of the president of the branch.

One feature of relief and service work which originated, I think, with them and is quite unique, is their "missionary calendar." Malad City, like many another place, has a sister who, though not very strong, has a great heart, and her home had become the stopping place for all the missionaries visiting there, as well as for any conducting a series of meetings. Her spirit was more than willing, but her body was weak, and therefore it at times became really burdensome, although she loved to do all that she could. The sisters got together and made what they call a "missionary calendar." They listed the available places where the missionary could be cared for, and made arrangements for the days when he would visit each. Thus he knew just where he was to go and they knew just when he would stay with them. This has been very successful, and the burden, being shared by several, has been lifted from one pair of shoulders. Too, the missionary is having the privilege of entering, at some time or other during his stay, almost every home in the branch, and each family is having the benefit of the intimate contact with and spiritual ministrations of an official of the church. The resulting good can hardly be measured.

The "mothers' club" has taken up the study of One to Twenty-one, and Mrs. Harrison's Study of Child Nature. They are meeting in their neighborhood circles. The Orioles and Temple Builders have organized, and besides their social gatherings, have a study period together during the Religion sessions.

I might add that Mrs. Flo Richards has been a moving "power behind the throne" in all of this good work. One item I see I have overlooked, is, that in connection with all the other work, several of the sisters at Malad took a course in home nursing which was offered by the Red Cross. So, you see that in more ways than one, the good sisters of that branch are preparing themselves to render service to the church.—Ida Etzenhouser, Organizer, Utah District.

A Few Words for the Women's Department

I want to tell you why I am standing before you on this Rally Day: First, because I was asked to talk to you a few minutes; and second, I consider the work of the Women's Department of great importance, and I want to call it to your attention and emphasize it.

Another very great reason is that the Lord has admonished us to "Come up higher," and this is a means worked out for us by which we can joyfully and whole-heartedly climb a ladder, round by round, which will bring us nearer to the Master.

The work of our women in the church has been given the seal of approval by the General Conference at different times by the First Presidency and by the Lord speaking through his servants.

The work as at present outlined reaches from the cradle to the grave. The cradle roll has been transferred from the Sunday School Department to the Women's Department. In some places there may be a Sunday school where there is no local organization of the Women's Department. Such an important work as that must not be allowed to lag. Everyone—you—can help with this work by suggesting that your neighbor's baby be enrolled if you have none of your own. They are tiny buds of promise and we need them in the Sunday school as soon as possible, and they will surely need the splendid teaching which is given in the Sunday school of the church of Christ.

The work of the home departments of the Religion and Sunday school were, at the General Convention, given over to the Women's Department also. If you have not the opportunity to attend the Religion and Sunday school, are you studying the Quarterlies at home? There are no better Quarterlies printed than our own, and we gain a wonderful amount of good by studying them, even if we have to do it alone. I demonstrated that fact over a period of a number of years when I was away from the church.

I had the pleasure of visiting for a number of days with the editor of the senior Quarterly. Just when she thought she might have to give up her work she was asked to assume the labor of editor in chief of all the Quarterlies. She and the other editors need our sustaining prayers that they may be upheld in this work.

There is the greatest feeling of satisfaction over the fact that we are keeping up. If we do not study the word of God and the good books which are recommended to us by those who are working out plans to help us, we will be the losers—the loss will be ours and the harm will reach down to future generations. It is an immense satisfaction to make an effort, and God will recognize it and bless us in putting forth a greater. We will grow as he wishes us to do, till we become workmen of whom he shall not be ashamed.

One is impressed, as one studies the "three books" with the wonderful harmony in them—they agree absolutely. And those ancient writers had such an appreciation, such a realization of the importance of the work of Christ, especially in these last days. They saw our day, and it seems to me that they may be looking to us now to fulfill our little part of this great work.

It would be hard to say that one department is more important than another, but our home and child welfare department offers much in the way of study for mothers and fathers—yes, I said fathers. While the leaflets are prepared for mothers' classes, they are all good for the father of the family also. The leaflets are interesting as well as instructive, and books can be taken up in connection with them. Four good books which are being used are From One to Twenty-One, The Making of a Teacher, Seven Laws of Teaching, and A Study of Child Nature.

The relief and service department gives an opportunity for just what is there stated. The sick and those who need help in any way are to be looked after and cared for. The work of our old aid society may be continued, money raised, the pastor aided. And an opportunity for study is here given also. Sociology is studied. Poverty, Misery and Its Causes, Friendly Visiting, and books of like nature may be read and discussed.

In the Young Women's Department we have the Oriole Girls and the Temple Builders, and if you acquaint yourself with the work outlined for this department you will see how beautifully the teaching harmonizes with the gospel plan and how well worth while it is. The motto of the Temple Builders is, "Build ye more stately mansions, O my soul." The director of the Young Women's Department is to be on the executive board of the Religion.

In the miscellaneous department we may take up such studies, as history (church, ancient, or modern), English, psychology, or any study which we may elect to take; and those who have had little opportunity for study will have great pleasure and profit.

The work of our departments is here only very briefly outlined. Anyone, with a group or isolated, may study to help and improve herself, her family, and others.

One great help in this work is the church papers. The HERALD gives splendid lessons in the Women's Department, and Autumn Leaves will keep us in touch with the work of the Oriole Girls and the Temple Builders.

Each baby, child, woman, has a part in this great work. The few must not do it alone. We need the cooperation of every one of you and earnestly solicit your help, to-day.

From Our English Sisters

Dear Sisters: We are inclosing two pounds which we would be glad if you would hand over to those in charge of the auditorium building fund, and we feel perhaps you may be interested to know the way in which we have raised it.

It was as follows: Our branch undertook to have a beautiful white-tiled font built in the schoolroom at the rear of the church, which incurred a debt of one hundred pounds. We all made a brave effort to pay this off, and as we are only few in number we found this somewhat of a strain. However, as a last effort the sisters of the Women's Department in this branch decided to clear the debt. We therefor held what we call here a "Sale of Work" and "Jumble Sale." That is, the sisters made garments and fancy ware for the sale of work, then we collected all the old garments, etc., that were to be disposed of for the jumble sale. Having advertised it among the school children's parents, we were delighted with the result—a grand total of twenty-four pounds. Considering the sisters of the Women's Department here only number about eighteen, we were still more delighted when we found we could clear the debt and also have a nice little balance which we disposed of as follows: branch fund two pounds, Birmingham District fund two pounds, auditorium fund two pounds, and we gave the Orioles (which we organized some months ago) fourteen shillings.

Now I am sure some of you dear sisters will be wondering what we think of President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle T. W. Williams. Well, we were very pleased to make their acquaintance and to find they were such supporters of the Women's Department. While they were visiting this branch we rendered a service of song. President F. M. Smith spoke to us for a short time, much to our edification, and we are looking forward to having Apostle T. W. Williams with us again after Christmas.

We are still continuing to study Forbush's Child Training, and I am writing for leaflets on child study, foods and the body, so that we may study these along with the child training course.

We have been organized just twelve months and have made good progress during that time and we still hope to continue along progressive lines to the glory of God.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXI

How to Teach a Child to Pray

1. What two facts regarding the child are evident to the person who gives him his first religious training?
2. How can a child be made to associate God with his everyday world?
3. Is any benefit derived by teaching a child parts of a prayer, teaching him to kneel, or cover his face during prayer, before he is old enough to be told much about God? If so, how?
4. What is the importance of kneeling?
5. What should be the sentiment of the evening prayer? The morning prayer?
6. What should be expressed in a child's prayer?
7. How may the mother encourage the child to make its prayer spontaneous?
8. May the mother use prayer as a factor in discipline?
9. Explain how the child may be taught to think of God as a "Friend" and Jesus as a "Brother."
10. Correlate obedience with the child and Nature.
11. Is obedience any easier if the child know his parents also must be obedient?
12. According to Pestalozzi, what is the best way for a child to learn to "fear God"?
13. What is the need of teaching the child reverence in church? How may it be done?
14. Is this, in your opinion, overestimated by the author? Why?
15. What improvement could we suggest in this particular?
16. Should it be done? How could we as mothers cooperate?

Parents' Problems

Should children be deprived of food (dessert, etc.) as a punishment?

No, this should not be practiced. Children require the entire meal planned for them. They should early learn that food is eaten, not for pleasure (though it should be enjoyed), but for nourishment; depriving them of it for a punishment would interfere with such teaching.

LETTERS

An Appreciation of Charles Derry

Copy of telegram sent by the First Presidency to Charles Van Eaton, Woodbine, Iowa.

Your telegram announcing the death of Elder Charles Derry was received yesterday. As good a man as ever lived in any land or in any age has gone to a well-earned reward. The late President Joseph Smith and a host of old-time friends and comrades in arms will greet him on the other side. He has taken his last great appointment. We congratulate you and all the members of the family that this able and pious man was spared to you so many years and that he left you such a splendid record of good deeds for you to emulate.

Is All Healing of God?

And how are we to determine whether it be from God or another power?

Your letter reached me some time ago. Also noted your letter in the HERALD on the same subject, and also your article in Autumn Leaves on dancing, which I want to tell you is the best that ever came under my observation. It was exhaustive, plain, and not severe, as so much that is written and spoken often is, which has a tendency to create sympathy for the other side, so lessening the effect.

As to this woman healer's power, our minds are open to conviction. This woman's apparent faith in Christ and general teachings, is about as all the other healers of the day. All profess great faith in Him and this will always be the case by those who are healing by direct power of the Adversary. No one will be fool enough to claim otherwise.

Jesus says, "Many will come in my name saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many." A question may be asked, How can the people be deceived by hearing a truth, namely, that Jesus is the Christ? The deception is in their claim that he sent them, and it is probable that many will perform acts of healing, strong in the belief that the healing is of Christ when it is of the Adversary. The healer will be as much deceived as those who are healed. Those who follow their teachings will have no better means of knowing the source of their power. A clear case of the blind leading the blind.

This idea is supported by the words that will be addressed to Jesus, "Have we not in thy name prophesied and cast out devils?" etc. Jesus did not say that they had not done the miracles, nor would they make such a claim unless they had, but he said, "You never knew me," equivalent to saying, You never did it by my power. This reveals the astounding fact that a class, and perhaps a very numerous class, will actually do miracles, supposing they are doing them by the power of God, being what we might call honestly deceived.

I confess I hardly know where to draw the line. To claim that all healing outside of our church is spurious, is saying a good deal. More than that, we are warned in saying the church has always recognized the fact that God will answer the prayer of faith by whoever exercises it, in the church or out of it. This will take healing outside of the church, limiting it to faith.

Some years ago, when Brother Chase and I were in Cottage Grove, Oregon, we were told of a woman living there who had been almost blind. The doctors thought an operation might help her. Her friends urged her to have it, but she hesitated, fearing she might lose what little she had. She said the Lord could heal her, and made it a subject of prayer for some time, but received no blessing, so reluctantly consented to the operation. When lying on the operating table she suddenly cried out, "I can see." The doctors supposed her mind was giving way, but on examining her eyes were surprised to find they were perfectly normal. Such answers as this I regard as being direct from God. It may be noted that a second party was not involved in this healing.

The question arises here, If healing is so widespread, how are we going to determine when it is from God and when it is from the Adversary, for both do and will heal.

When the prayer is individual, direct to God, the healing will be from God; but if a second party is in the deal, who claims to be a representative of God but is unauthorized, the healing is pretty sure to be of the Adversary. But you will say, "Cannot one pray for another?" Yes, as many as desire, but a distinction must be made between such, those who presume to be authorized of God. There is where Satan gets in his work.

The Lord cannot answer the prayer of one who is unlawfully representing him, but Satan can and does. I do not believe that God will allow Satan to answer the prayer of any who come directly to him or through an authorized representative. We have a case in mind where one of old presumed to officiate in the name of Christ, I believe, and was immediately set on by the evil spirits.

As time moves on we are going to see a great deal more of this healing, and I hope more in the church, for it is surely needed.

Holden Stake Conference

Coordination plan adopted and building and loan fund for stake provided for.

The conference met with the Lexington, Missouri, Branch, June 17, 18, and 19, with Stake President D. J. Krahl, F. A. McWethy, and W. S. Macrae presiding. Prayer service was held Friday morning and institute work for the departments in the afternoon. The evening program was by the Religion Department.

On Saturday there was prayer service at 8:30 and business session for all the departments at ten. Reports from the presidency, bishopric, and heads of departments, were read and approved. A new standard of excellence for Sunday schools was adopted, including one point that called for "special and consistent efforts on the part of the officers and teachers to have every member of the school who is a Latter Day Saint, a tithe payer." Another point provided for handwork in first two grades and exhibit at conventions. Promotion standards for each grade were provided for, to be agreed upon by stake and local officers and teachers, with annual promotion exercises and certificates granted.

In the February conference it was voted to create a building fund for the building of chapels in the stake. At the present conference the Presiding Bishop submitted a plan wherein this could be carried out, the same to be known as the "Holden Stake Building and Loan Fund," same secured by donations, subscriptions, etc., from the Saints and friends residing within the boundaries of the stake. The third Sunday of the month in each quarter was designated when offerings were to be received in each congregation in the stake for this purpose. The plan is as follows: That the congregation which raises 25 per cent of the amount required for church building purposes is to receive an additional 10 per cent of the total amount required as a gift from the fund, if there is that amount in the fund, and a loan on the balance at 3 per cent per annum to be repaid in ten installments, which shall amount to at least 10 per cent per annum of the principal. Thus the fund would be kept intact, as the interest would nearly offset the gift. As the principal is repaid it would be available for further service in other branches.

A resolution relative to further perfecting the stake organization by a consolidation of the branches, making the stake the unit of organization, was adopted.

It was voted that all Sunday school and Religion superintendents are to be nominated by the pastor, and that the pastor and heads of the two departments nominate the subordinate officers, subject to the approval of the respective departments.

The stake high council recommended the following names for ordination, which were approved by the conference: Frank Ball, deacon; Ivan Beebe, deacon; H. H. Schwenson, priest; R. E. Daugherty, teacher; W. J. Phelps, deacon; Willie F. Sisk, priest.

Saturday evening a very fine musical program was rendered, under direction of the stake chorister, Mrs. Lola A. Johnson.

Young people's prayer meeting at 8.30 Sunday morning, Sunday school 9.30, preaching 11 o'clock by Elder George Jenkins. Five short talks along local missionary work in the afternoon. Sermon Sunday night by Bishop C. J. Hunt. Next conference is to be at Grandview, Missouri, time left to the stake presidency.

BLANCHE CHRISTENSON, Secretary.

LAKESIDE, ONTARIO, July 14, 1921.

Editors Herald: During the latter part of March, and April and May, Elder C. M. Clifford labored with the Saints of Saint Marys Branch in a missionary effort. The first three weeks in June he conducted a series of open air lectures at the village of Lakeside, about ten miles from our branch, preaching from the back seat of a Ford.

Elder Clifford is quite adapted to open-air work, because of the far-reaching powers of his voice. A good interest was obtained at both places. One characteristic of Brother Clifford's efforts is that he advertises well and stays at a place long enough to give it a fair trial.

After the open-air services questions were asked. One was, "Do you believe in a fire-proof Devil?" On one occasion, after successfully answering a hard question, another one standing by remarked, "The boy has got you."

JOHN V. GLEASON.

Elder Arthur H. Mills is traveling through Michigan in the interests of the Department of Music. He has visited Minden City, Owendale, Port Huron, McGregor, Crosswell, London (Ontario), and Sandusky. He intends yet to visit Flint, Detroit, and the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana and the Northern Michigan reunions.

Barberton, Ohio, reports that they are still alive and trying to do their bit for the Lord. In the past year they have gained eighteen new members. H. Rhodes baptized six; Ira A. Kelsey, twelve. They have a fine chapel in which to meet, dedicated April 17. The young people are active; the Sunday school is the largest in the district. Paul Corrillion leads the Sunday school and Melvin Corrillion, the Religio, each assisted by able officers. The Women's Department is fully organized, with Mary Romig as supervisor.

MISCELLANEOUS

Appointment of District President

Reunion Notices

President Elbert A. Smith will not be at the Northern California reunion as announced, but President Frederick M. Smith will be there in his stead. C. W. Hawkins, president.

Arkansas, at Bald Knob, August 19 to 26. Price of tents: 10 by 12, $3 a week; 12 by 14, $4.50; 14 by 16, $5.50, plus the freight from Little Rock and return. Bring your bedding. We will try to have cots and springs for all. Tents should be ordered not later than August 10 from W. F. Martin, Box 181, Bald Knob, Arkansas, or J. T. Riley, 109 West Adams Street, Pittsburg, Kansas. Everybody come and help make this reunion a grand success. J. T. Riley.

Oklahoma City reports that they have good crowds and excellent interest in their services. Six were recently baptized.

The Religio Quarterly for the present quarter is well worthy of careful study, as was the case with the preceding issue. This one offers two courses of study: First, Ellwood on the Social Problem; second, an outline of the history of the church, founded on volume one of the Young People's Church History. The preceding quarterly offered courses in the first principles of the gospel, also a course in the Seven Laws of Teaching.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free, a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Monday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Saturday if possible.

Utah on Plural Marriages

A brief historical sketch setting forth the position on polygamy taken by the Utah authorities to-day may be of interest to our readers. We note the following in the Deseret News:

"In unmistakable terms at the Sunday School Union conference Sunday evening in the Tabernacle President Heber J. Grant announced the stand of the church on plural marriages. The practice is no longer sanctioned, he said, and he declared: 'Any man professing to have the power through revelation to perform plural marriages is a liar, for the church does not sanction the practice of polygamy. Those who enter into such contracts are adulterers. Furthermore, only through the official head of the church are revelations received for the church.'

"President Grant's address followed addresses by Elder Stephen L. Richards, assistant superintendent of the general Sunday School Union board, and Elder Melvin J. Ballard. President Grant commended the Sunday school work and pronounced a blessing on all who are working for the advancement of the work of the Lord, and on all members of the church, that they might have the strength to live the principles of the gospel."

This is one of several recent renunciations and denunciations. Still an occasional statement in their periodicals leaves room for doubt how thorough at times is such renunciation. For example, an article appears in The Improvement Era for June, 1921, page 695, on "Marriage and married life," which would give one the impression that it has not been entirely discarded. Still we are glad to note the verbal renunciation of this "abomination." (See the second chapter of Jacob, Book of Mormon.)

At a special conference August 29, 1852, Brigham Young attempted to deliver a prophecy. He forecasted that the ordinance of polygamy he was then instituting in the church should triumph over all opposition. Whether he was a true prophet or not can readily be determined from the outcome.

As the result of this renunciation an occasional statement is made by them concerning its early history. The position taken by the Reorganized Church has been uniformly one of denunciation: that nothing could possibly under any conditions ever make polygamy right. Our opposition to it has been greater and more deeply seated than that of any other church.

It is interesting, therefore, to revive a little of the evidence. As late as July, 1850, John Taylor, at Boulogne-sur-mer, France, entered a direct denial with regard to polygamy, and a defense of monogamy, quoting the action of the General Assembly as set forth in the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants and as also set forth in our present edition of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others during your lives? . . . We believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband except in case of death."

Orson Spencer a in The Millennium

"Next to the long Mackneyed and bugaboo whispering of polygamism, is another abomination that sometimes shows its serpentine crest, which we shall call sexual resurrectionism. The teachers and abettors of such a doctrine have no need to hang out their colors in order to show their pedigree. And they have no need to preach it long, in order to make their 'calling and reprobation sure.' Such wandering stars as J. C. Bennett and Higbees, do not seem to be sufficient beacons to keep some restless and aspiring spirits from the maelstrom of pollution and apostasy. 'Fools ever will be meddling,' says Solomon. The doctrines of corrupt spirits are always in close affinity with each other, whether they consist in spiritual wifeism, sexual resurrection, gross lasciviousness, or the unavoidable separation of husbands and wives, or the communism of property."

Everything that was published during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, and even everything published by the Brighamite Church up to 1852 was a denial of polygamy. In this should be included the denunciation of October 1, 1842, of the secret-wife doctrine of Doctor J. C. Bennett, as published in the Times and Seasons.

Even after the introduction of this abominable doctrine, George Q. Cannon is quoted in the Journal of Discourses, volume 14, page 166:

"It was not on account of our belief in this that we have been hated. Joseph and Hyrum Smith were slain in Carthage jail, and hundreds of persons were persecuted to the death previous to the church having any knowledge of this doctrine."

H. B. Clawson is also quoted in the Salt Lake Herald, February 9, 1882: "Polygamy at that time was unknown among those of the Mormon faith. . . . The doctrine of polygamy was not promulgated until they got to Salt Lake; no, in fact, until some little time after they arrived there."

Brigham Young is quoted in the Alta Californian, as saying in an interview with United States Senator Trumbull, in 1869, "As to our institutions, we know we are right, and polygamy, which you object to, was not originally a part of our system, but was adopted by us as a necessity, after we came here."

To this may be added from the Millennial Star (1920), volume 52, number 53, page 837: "If Mormonism is not true, why is it so reviled? 'Polygamy,' some say. No, certainly not. It did not begin with polygamy, and polygamy is not practiced now." This is ascribed to Fred W. Bennett, in Liahona, The Elders' Journal, from which apparently it is copied.

Now in The New Bedford Evening Standard, of March 12, 1921, Elder F. Wallace Walton, is quoted as saying:

"What is the chief obstacle that you meet in your missionary work?" Mr. Walton was asked.

"Large numbers cannot seem to think of Mormonism in any terms other than that of polygamy," he replied. "This feeling is not so strong though, as in time past. We have to overcome this attitude first."

"What is the present position of the church on polygamy?"

"Of course, it is not practiced now. One of the articles of faith of Mormonism is that men will be punished for their own sins. If those who proclaimed the decree of plural marriages and those who practiced it, they will suffer from it. The Mormon faith does not permit an individual to pass judgment upon the acts of another.

"Many are led to believe that the harsh treatment accorded the Mormons was solely based upon opposition to plural marriages. But the Mormons were persecuted from the first. Yet the law of plural marriage was promulgated by Brigham Young, after he became the prophet in 1844. How far the facts contradict such a claim is shown in the fact that Joseph Smith and several of his followers were killed by an Illinois mob."

Will the clear statement made with regard to origin of this doctrine be noted? We are quite willing to give them the benefit of this repeated denunciation. We sincerely hope that it will now be entirely eradicated from their lives and teachings. The spirit of repentance is Christian. The spirit of toleration towards those who truly repent is also Christian. Polygamy is and has always been wrong in the sight of our heavenly Father.

Modern history of its origin is of no importance to our faith. It is wrong, no matter who was guilty of teaching or practicing it. It is only a question respecting the character of individuals. Still we are glad to see a reaffirmation of our position—a reaffirmation that it was not any part of the teaching of the early church. And in justice to his character, we are glad to make the additional statement, that to the best of our knowledge and belief, after a careful investigation, Joseph Smith neither taught nor practiced that abomination.

The Right to Administer in the Church Ordinances

A contemporary religious publication answers a correspondent's query.

"Who has a scriptural right to administer baptism? Give book, chapter and verse.—Suppose I should ask you who has the scriptural right to officiate at the Lord's table, giving book, chapter, and verse. Could you do it? Surely the validity of this is as important as that of baptism. Yet you could no more answer technically my question than I could yours. The fact that Christ said nothing about who must do the baptizing shows that it is not important. The general principles of the New Testament which teach that the Lord's work should be done by the Lord's people is all that we need on this subject."—Apostolic Review.

With regard to the above, it is worth while to note that in the Jewish church only certain officers had the right to administer baptism. It was performed by the priests and was an official duty. It is interesting to note that all of the baptisms recorded in the New Testament were performed by recognized officers. John the Baptist baptized. He was certainly a priest after the order of Aaron. Christ baptized. He was a priest after the order of Melchisedec. His disciples, that is, the twelve who followed him and the seventy chosen and appointed by him, baptized.

Jesus, communing with the twelve, commanded them to go into all the world and preach the gospel, baptizing. Ananias baptized Saul.

But if we take each and every instance we note the one performing the ordinance was one having authority.

So likewise in the case of the sacrament of the Lord's supper. The few instances in which it is specifically stated who acted, we find it was one having authority from God.

Yet it is true that the New Testament does leave a great many questions unanswered. Are we justified in concluding therefore that it is immaterial and that anyone may perform the act?

It is just for that reason that there is a need for further revelation from God. We have the same officers as did the early Christian church, but it rests upon revelations from God to us to tell us what work these officers should perform.

The New Testament tells us clearly that God set some in the church, apostles, prophets, evangelists, priests, teachers, and deacons, also bishops. It is certain that these officers have been set there for a purpose. That purpose was doubtless well known to the early Christian church, but is not known to most of those who pretend to take upon them his name in this age of the world. It is for that reason that God has not left himself without a witness, but clearly indicated in his word in the New Testament continued revelation.

Some Recent Church Statistics

Some figures that bring us to July 1, 1921, in which the list shows many changes.

The report of the church statistician to the First Presidency states that during April a complete recount of all the cards in the files in his office was made, giving a total of 94,682. This represents a gain of 575 over the number previously reported, but this is, Elder Russell thinks, largely due to the failure of the branches to make the necessary changes in the records in case of death. The number of deaths was deducted from the numerical statement of membership by the branch clerks, but the items were not set forth in the record and duly reported. A recheck of the records will probably wipe out this apparent gain, as appears to be the past tendency according to reports for May and June. During May there was a gain of 408 by baptism, and 10 by correction. But against this is noted a loss of 102 deaths, 9 expulsions, 197 carried to the unknown list, 8 by correction, giving a net gain of 102 for May.

During June there were 703 baptized and a gain of 115 by correction, principally from branches not hitherto reporting; against this is to be noted a total loss of 592, consisting of deaths 341, expulsions 19, unknown 198, correction 34, or a net gain of 226 gave a membership July 1, 1921, of 95,010.

Elder Russell calls particular attention to the excessive number of deaths. This is due to the fact that in rechecking the various branches there were found many deaths unreported, some of which occurred many years ago.

During May there were 28 ordinations, 74 marriages, 1 divorce, 183 blessings, and 925 transfers reported.

For June there were 34 ordinations, 122 marriages, 2 divorces, and 956 transfers reported. The record of blessing of children for June is not yet completed.

The significant factor in the above report is the number of baptisms, 1,111 for two months, particularly the large number for June, of 703. Although the net gain in church membership is small, this is accounted for by the large number of previous losses through death charged off during these two months. There was a total of 443 deaths deducted and also 395 carried to the unknown list, who are those presumably spiritually dead.

This report is decidedly encouraging, because we are facing directly our losses and charging them off. We are also reporting a decided gain. If the record for June in baptisms can be maintained for the coming year it will certainly be a good year for the church.

An Editor Issues a Frank Statement

A Pennsylvania editor disabuses the minds of his patrons concerning the character of our people.

In the Lambertsville Record, of Lambertsville, New Jersey, for July 15, there appears a very clear and complete statement of our church history and teaching by the editor of that paper, Mr. Gordon Cooper. It appears that there had been some objection to our people purchasing the seventy-six acres constituting Deer Park. Mr. Cooper was away at the time of the objection, but returned during the reunion, attended some of our services, met the representative men there present, and had quite a talk with Elder Walter W. Smith, Church Historian, who made a very favorable impression upon him.

As a result Mr. Cooper gives a very clear statement of the history of the church and of our people in that part of the country, referring among other records to Doctor William S. Stevens' Centennial History of Missouri. Doctor Stevens, the secretary of the Missouri Historical Society, devoted over one hundred pages to the story of the Latter Day Saints in Missouri. He, of course, is not and never has been a member of this church, but bears quite a testimony to the honesty of the Saints in moral character, and states upon their expulsion $250,000 of property was confiscated at the low value extant seventy-five years ago.

Mr. Cooper pays quite a tribute to our people in eastern Pennsylvania, and especially Philadelphia, to the conduct and character of our reunion there, which he declares is a credit to the community. He concludes with the following paragraphs:

"All in all, the organization is a credit to the community. Its members are educated, commendable people. They are not bigots, nor are they what some overzealous religionists feared they would be as to morals. They are the kind of people you meet every day in business and society. They are paying their way, and ask for nothing but the good will of the people who are invited to enjoy their music and recreation.

"These things are said in a sincere desire to disabuse the minds of some people in the community who tried to make 'a mountain out of a molehill.' The signed statement of some of the residents of New Hope, disclaiming any connection with these people was rather premature, and as one of them said, 'it was all due to a misunderstanding growing out of the agitation by two individuals.'

"The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints are not paying for this statement, nor did they ask it. I am saying these things, after a careful investigation, because I feel they are due this splendid body of people who have conducted themselves admirably and without rancor against the uncharitable things that have been said about them. The community should feel gratified at their coming."

The improvements being made there have favorably impressed the people of the vicinity as is shown in The Daily Intelligencer, of Doylestown, Pennsylvania.

Elder J. W. Metcalf has entered the Independence Sanitarium for treatment. He has suffered for years from bronchial and heart trouble.

United States and Canada are one of the great examples of two nations living side by side at peace. There are no forts and no soldiers along a boundary line of several thousand miles; but there has been no war and no danger of war for much over one hundred years. American and Canadian ideals are in common, they speak the same language, basically they come from the same race. They offer a splendid example on which to build an association of nations for peace.

Subjects Being Discussed

Church News

Apostle J. F. Curtis was called home from his mission work on the 30th on account of the serious illness of his daughter Mary, who has been in the Sanitarium about two weeks and has abscess of the throat. At the time of this writing she was a little better.

President F. M. Smith left for California on the evening of the 1st, accompanied by his secretary, O. W. Newton. Brother Newton is afflicted each summer with hay fever, so the trip, though apt to be a busy time for him, will afford a welcome relief and change, no doubt. On the 26th President Smith went to Omaha, returning on the 27th.

President Elbert A. Smith left on the 26th for California, and is in attendance at the Southern California reunion.

Bishop B. R. McGuire is still in the East, at present attending the Onset reunion.

Granville S. Trowbridge went to Chicago to attend the Graphic Arts Exposition and returned July 29.

A. E. McKim, manager of the Publicity Department, and wife left for the Southwest and West on July 24, to be gone about five weeks. In the month of May they spent a similar period in the East. The purpose of both trips is to introduce to the larger newspapers and bookstores of the country the art work for children of Mrs. McKim, as she is gaining quite a wide reputation for her art work.

R. B. Trowbridge, the general church auditor, has been confined to his home the greater part of the time since July 11. Some infected teeth which have produced toxic poisoning, and the strain of serious dental operation are causes. He has been able to spend only a few forenoons at his desk in the past three weeks.

Anti-Zionism

In connection with the several articles published by us on Zionism, it is only fair that our readers be advised that the Jews are not at all united on such a program. During the past few years we have read several Jewish publications, which in a very conservative tone have shown a great deal of opposition.

The Kansas City Star of June 29 contains quotations from Henry Morgenthau, late United States minister to Constantinople, who was there through the war and who also visited the Holy Land. He declares the idea of a Jewish state to be the most tremendous fallacy in Jewish history. For one thing he urges that the land cannot take care of 13,000,000 Jews; in fact, he thinks they would do well to take care of an increase of more than 1,000,000 inhabitants. Others differ from him greatly with regard to the fertility of that land.

He urges that Jews should be Jews in religion, but nationally they are Americans or English, and that the Zion of the Jews is in America, or for the British Jews in England.

It is well to consider both sides of the question.

Opposition in California

Two lectures were announced to be delivered in Colton, California, on "Mormonism," by the Reverend E. W. Shepherd, of Portland, Oregon. The speaker distinguished between the Reorganized Church and the church of Utah, but made an attack upon Joseph Smith as a prophet.

As a result of these lectures the Reverend F. L. Richardson, pastor of the Advent Christian Church, issued a challenge to Elder Yates to debate the proposition: "Resolved that Joseph Smith was a false prophet and that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are not in harmony with the Bible and are therefore not inspired." Elder Yates submitted church propositions, as the teaching of the church and the gospel of Jesus Christ are much more important than any one man, but this was refused and other propositions of limited range substituted.

One of these propositions which Mr. Richardson would affirm and asks Elder Yates to deny, is not a point of controversy but rather of agreement between the two churches. It is rather amusing for a supposedly intelligent person to select a series of themes for debate without regard to the position of his opponent.

Wanted: A Man of Experience

All requests for pastors in the past, says The Christian (London), began with the statement, "We want a young man," but during the last eight or ten years this statement seldom appears, and the majority of demands are now for a man who has had experience; a man who has proved his competency; one who has shown that he can bring things to pass. This is taken as a sign growing out of the strain and confusion of the times, of adjustment to new conditions, and the great need for mature, wise leadership. The crisis of to-day causes the churches to seek earnestly for ministers of fully ripened powers and judgment. So that the large churches of to-day are manned by ministers whose average is somewhere around fifty years.

A careful study of thirty Baptist churches of commanding importance, which have called new pastors within the past year, and which include almost every large city between the Atlantic and Pacific in the Northern Baptist Convention, shows that two thirds of the new pastors have crossed the half century line.

Using Trust Funds for Other Purposes

A writer in the Christian Work charges the sectarian churches with obtaining money under false pretenses and points out the usual penalties for so doing. For example, raising money for special purposes, as for Americanization, then perhaps only ten per cent is actually spent for such purposes, the rest of the money going to maintain small churches scattered throughout the country. The point most emphasized is, that money raised for a special purpose is a trust fund, and should be used for that purpose, and not for narrow sectarian purposes.

The Comforter

In the Christian Science Monitor some time ago, there appeared one and a quarter columns under the above heading. It states that men and women have longed for the coming of the Holy Ghost, but many have prayed in vain because they held erroneous views concerning what it meant; and also the manner of its operation; and that even to-day the majority are ignorant.

They then quote Mary Baker Eddy (page 55, Science and Health), "In the words of Saint John: 'He shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever.' This Comforter I understand to be Divine Science."

The article then continues in its attempt to define God, as one infinite principle of cause, presence, and power, and including individual man, so that there never can be any separation between God and man. It then continues:

"It will now be becoming evident what the Holy Ghost actually is. The Science of Christianity, or Christian Science, as it reveals Truth, as it makes God known as divine Principle, infinite and eternal, and reveals the unity existing between Principle and its idea, man, is the Comforter which 'shall teach you all things.' Knowledge takes the place of surmise, the so-called supernatural gives place to the perfectly natural, and God is inseparable from His creation. The Holy Ghost 'descends,' in a measure, on whoever gains some understanding of Truth. The fuller the understanding of divine Principle, the more does the Comforter abide with men. 'Our Master said, "But the Comforter . . . shall teach you all things." When the Science of Christianity appears, it will lead you into all truth. The Sermon on the Mount is the essence of this Science, and the eternal life, not the death of Jesus, is its outcome.'" (Science and Health, p. 271.)

We print this, not because we accept it, but because it may prove of interest to our readers, as to what Christian Science really is and teaches.

New Marriage Law in Ontario

A number of items from different Canadian papers have been forwarded to us, showing that there is a new marriage law which will take effect in Ontario October 1, requiring registration of ministers authorized to perform marriages.

Some of these items stated that only a few of the larger denominations will have such permission; some state specifically that Latter Day Saints will be excluded. So far as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is concerned, this is probably an error, for, as Elder Frank Gray stated in an interview in the London Advertiser of July 14, a decision by the Supreme Court at Osgoode Hall in 1892 gave the ministers of our church the right to perform this ceremony. It is, therefore, probable that all that is needed is registration, but this should be attended to.

A list of our General Conference appointees, branch and district presidents, has been sent to Bishop A. F. McLean, of Toronto, to see that they are properly registered.

Our local ministry in Ontario should examine the law, and those authorized to perform this ceremony should register. If any difficulty is encountered, write to Bishop McLean in Toronto. We are not, however, anticipating any difficulty.

Good Work as Police Chief

High Priest Harry E. French has rather recently been made chief of police of Columbus, Ohio. He has been for several years the head of the Bertillon Bureau and was made chief of police in March, 1920. In April, 1921, The Policeman's News, a national periodical, states that he is chief in every sense of the term, exercising the fullest authority that ever any chief had in Columbus. Politics plays no part in the police force. All changes and assignments are left entirely with the chief.

Columbus has a charter form of government which authorizes J. P. McCune, director of public safety, to make what changes he sees fit in either the police or fire division, but he has transferred his authority to Chief French.

The work is very heavy on Chief of Police French, but he is decidedly making good and is the choice of all the better element, his excellent example giving a good effect to the work in Columbus.

His position is known to the ministerial union, but the ministers of Columbus are all his ardent supporters.

Two Sunday school classes from the Stone Church, comprising about one hundred and twenty-five young people, held a sunrise prayer meeting Sunday morning in the woods, a few miles from Independence. This was followed by a camp breakfast.

Preaching the Gospel

By A. H. Christensen

We should preach more philosophy of the gospel and possibly not less fact; convert not only to the gospel, but the church.

This is without doubt the choicest profession within the realm of human possibility. This is proven by looking over the pages of ancient and modern history; for those who have been greatest in every age are those who have been preachers of righteousness and truth.

When we consider Jesus, the greatest of all, and remember, too, that he was the greatest gift to mankind, we at once ask, Of what did this great gift consist? Was it his body, or his blood, or his person, that was given to mankind, and upon which they manifested their wrath? No; but the greatest gift that this world has ever received was advice. This is that which came down to you and me. This was his alms; this his benevolence; and this, too, yours and my greatest gift to our fellow men. Better far that we should amass great wealth and at last die poor because of having distributed all of it to the widow and the orphan. This is indorsed from heaven in the words of revelation to John Whitmer (Doctrine and Covenants 13), saying:

" . . . for many times you have desired of me to know that which would be of most worth to you . . . and now I say unto you that the thing that will be of most worth unto you will be to declare repentance unto this people, that you may bring souls unto me, that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father. Amen."

How, What, When to Preach

But the question of how to preach, and what to preach, and when to preach it, are questions that are difficult for the preacher to decide; and here it is that he makes his greatest mistake. It is with a desire to answer these questions that I attempt this article.

Paul, who was a valorous preacher, said, "Yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." And again he said, "I have not shunned to declare all the counsel of God." And at another time he said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation."

And so we believe that the answer to the question of what we shall preach is, the gospel, the whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel. We will say at this point that the "fullness of the gospel" shall be preached as it is revealed in the Inspired Translation of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. To this plan all the ministers of the church agree in general, but disagree generally in particular; viz, upon the question of when and where to preach the gospel of these three books.

Use the Three Books

Now there is a common idea among the ministry of the church, and among the membership as well, that it is a matter of option when and where the Inspired Translation and the Book of Mormon are to be preached. This is wrong. It is also a common idea that the Doctrine and Covenants was written to the Saints and should be preached to them only. This is also wrong.

In the early days of the church, before the Inspired Translation was available for reference, we were commanded to preach the Bible, (some of the accepted translations,) but after the translation that God and the church were to indorse was available, we were released from the former commandment by another, and in its stead were to preach the Inspired Translation of the Bible, as the following extract will show:

"Thou shalt ask and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldest hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.

This reference will no doubt be sufficient to convince all that the Inspired Translation of the Bible should be preached in and out of the church.

But, some one may say, I am afraid the world will not have grace to listen to me if I shall preach from it. That, God answered properly to Moroni thus: "If they [the Gentiles] have not charity, it mattereth not unto thee, thou hast been faithful, wherefore thy garments shall be made clean."—Ether 5: 37; Doctrine and Covenants 113: 5.

That it was the original intention that the Book of Mormon should be preached to the world is evident from the reading of Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7-9, which it is not necessary to insert here.

The first part of paragraph 7 gives a commandment that we shall live by "every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." And that word (whose fullness is contained in the three books of the church) is light that enlighteneth every man in the world. And they of the world will come to that light and shall be taught the covenant which He has renewed and confirmed upon us, and not for ourselves only, but for the sakes of the whole world.

Rebuked for Not Teaching Book of Mormon

The eighth paragraph is a rebuke to the church because they had forgotten the Book of Mormon. Treating lightly, and failing to remember, and saying, but not doing, was not failing to obey the doctrines contained therein, but consisted in failing to bear testimony to all the world of those things which were communicated unto them. In other words, they failed to teach the things contained inside the book, which were communicated to us. See paragraph 9.

God's preface to the Covenants and Commandments states:

"Behold this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface to the book of my commandments, which I have given unto them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth; wherefore fear and tremble, O ye people, for what I have decreed in them shall be fulfilled. . . . Wherefore I the Lord knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world . . . that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers."—Paragraphs 2, 4.

The quotation above shows that it was not the fact that Joseph Smith had received the things spoken of that was to be proclaimed to the world; but it was the fullness itself that was contained in the book (internal evidence) that was to be proclaimed before the world.

In 1 Nephi 3: 192, we read:

"These last records which thou hast seen among the Gentiles shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from them."

Now, in preaching from the Bible upon some subject which is not quite plain in that record, would it not be proper to turn to the Book of Mormon and there read a clear analysis of the subject, and then depend upon the coherency and the logic of the argument produced therefrom to convince the hearer, rather than to depend upon the authority of the evidence to frighten him into obedience? How shall the latter establish the former except by a free and full use of the latter before the world, and they are they whom we wish to convert.

A portion of the seventh paragraph of the one hundred and eighth section reads thus:

"O inhabitants of the earth, I have sent forth my angel, flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, and hath appeared unto some, and hath committed it unto man, who shall appear unto many that dwell upon the earth; and this gospel shall be preached unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue," etc.

This is the angel message, and certainly would be incomplete without the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Furthermore, these three books, which contain the "angel message," "the fullness of the gospel," should be preached more fully and fearlessly than they have been hitherto.

Men Are Afraid

Here we are, almost at the close of "the times of the Gentiles," and the Inspired Translation of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants have not been preached to the world in more than a weak, apologetic, inadequate manner. Men have been afraid, like Peter walking on the water, that they would sink. In holding meetings before the world with the objective of converting men to this work, how many times have we outlined a list of subjects, and in support thereof have presented the King James Translation of the Bible exclusively in evidence? And then the last night of the series gave the fact, but not the philosophy of the Book of Mormon a flying salute, and next day "hit the grit" for the next point, forgetting altogether to give another book which was written as well to them, (the Doctrine and Covenants,) any consideration at all. That we may know that we should not fear the consequences of presenting the Doctrine and Covenants to the world we insert the following:

"And for this cause, that men might be made partakers of the glories which were to be revealed, the Lord sent forth the fullness of his gospel, his everlasting covenant, reasoning in plainness and simplicity, to prepare the weak for those things which are coming on the earth; and for the Lord's errand in the day when the weak should confound the wise, and the little one become a strong nation, and two should put their tens of thousands to flight; and by the weak things of the earth, the Lord should thresh the nations by the power of his Spirit. And for this cause these commandments were given; they were commanded to be kept from the world in the day that they were given, but now are to go forth to all flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 12.

The world has a right to hear the warnings which these revelations contain. And the commandments referred to are the commandments of the three books, and not of the King James translation of the Bible alone. They are to be one in our hands in preaching on any subject at any time and place. They were given for the purpose of converting the world, as well as a help to the Saints. If anyone should doubt whereunto such a plan of preaching shall grow, they should read the following admonition:

"Wherefore, I have called upon the weak things of the world, those that are unlearned and despised, to thresh the nations by the power of my Spirit; and their arm shall be my arm, and I will be their shield and buckler, and I will gird up their loins, and they shall fight manfully for me; and their enemies shall be under their feet; and I will let fall the sword in their behalf; and by the fire of mine indignation will I preserve them."—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 4.

Oh! what a power some of our revivalists would be if they would adopt this viewpoint and rescue the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants from oblivion!

Waiting for Endowment

Perhaps some are awaiting the "endowment." Did you ever try to anticipate what and how you shall preach when you shall have received the endowment? Let me suggest some of the principal ingredients of the endowment. They are light and courage, two things lacking to a certain extent to-day. Of course the endowment is Spirit; but it will crystallize in you and me largely in the form I have stated.

So, in times past, our minds were darkened so that we did not know the touchspring of our success; but now let every man lay aside his collection of Bibles and take up the translation which has been corrected by inspiration from God, and the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, and go preaching by the way, and God will open his mouth as he did that of Nephi of old; and I think it will not be long until we shall find ourselves upon a certain day at Kirtland, experiencing an outpouring of the Spirit that we have not seen for many a day.

I believe we should preach more philosophy of the gospel, and possibly not less fact of the same; that we are to convert men not only to the gospel but to the church; and in order to do this they must hear of present day church law, which is auxiliary to the abstract gospel of Christ, which treats of virtue and sin and salvation; and that church law is to be found largely in the Doctrine and Covenants. To be convinced that this is the church of Jesus Christ, is not only to know that the church now has certain officers, but it is to know how those officers are functioning to-day.

I believe that the Spirit that has prompted the church to prepare a teacher's edition of the Bible, and no doubt to put it in the bookstores, is the Spirit that has prompted some of the ministry to adopt the three standard books of the church as their traveling companions, and is also the Spirit that will soon make this plan universal throughout the church.

Be Safe But Courageous

Some one may say, "All things with me are right, but all are not expedient." To be a safe man is good; but if it carries one into the ranks of the reactionaries, or puts the fullness of the gospel under a bushel or a bed, or under somebody's private lock and key, you may safely say it is false expediency; for the time a revelation is received is the time to preach it, and they are not born out of due season.

Some may be looking forward to a time when the fullness of the gospel shall be "preached upon the housetops," and are awaiting a new revelation or development to inform us that it is now expedient to do so. This revelation came a long time ago, and some of the men are even now, like Nephi upon his tower, upon the housetop holding aloft the fullness of the gospel, and like Samuel upon the wall, the people are not able to hit them with their arrows.

The year I was appointed to the islands, my aged father called me to his side and told me of a dream or vision that he had had, in which he saw the Stone Church, and completely surrounding it a company of young men, arranged upon the lawn in single formation, facing outward to the world, and they were going forth in mighty power. He said the old guard of his time were not in the ranks. The tears were streaming down his cheeks as he told me of his experience. It was near the last time I ever saw him.

Let them come! Oh, let Helaman's young sons arise; let them put on the whole armour and enlist under the one mighty and strong, and go forth modernly equipped for the last great victory!

What Shall the Schools Teach?

By Max Carmichael

An address delivered at the Women's Institute at Independence, Missouri, May 18, 1921.

The subject of school curricula is one in which the mothers should interest themselves in the future more than they have in the past. Perhaps the reason that mothers have not interested themselves in it is because they felt ignorant of the factors that enter into the choice of school curricula, and so, to encourage you to take an interest in it, I shall discuss these factors with you.

I am sorry to feel that many times the only thing in which mothers seem interested in our schools is some little difference of opinion which arises with reference to the discipline of their children. Then they come to the school only to tell the teacher that the teacher has treated their child differently from the others. To treat children differently is the prerogative of the school-teacher, as well as of the mother. There is no mother here who would assume to treat every child the same in her family, and yet she would deny the school-teacher that right, and would wish to accuse the school-teacher of being partial. Your interest in the school should take a bigger aspect than that.

One reason many superintendents are rather afraid of the parent-teacher association at times is because these associations assume to adjust differences of opinion that have already risen, rather than to take upon themselves a propaganda for the future benefit of the school. I have seen superintendents who would like to kill the parent-teacher associations, and have done their best to do so, because these associations have taken on the task of trying to adjust differences that the board of education has had in its deliberative assembly, and adjust differences that have arisen between the superintendent and some parents.

The function of a parent-teacher association is to interest the women folk and the fathers of the community in the future welfare of that school, and there is no superintendent of schools who would not welcome such an association as that.

This is a time in which we must become interested in our schools; and because we are paying higher salaries to our teachers, we are forced to do so, because we must justify the time and money that teachers spend, and we want to know what they are doing with that money, and whether they are doing something worth while or not.

Most of you folk take for granted that the thing the teacher offers is all right, when you know that the teacher has been used to traditional thinking about as much as you are. One of the hardest things we have to do is to get women and men away from traditional thinking. They refuse to think new things. This is one thing that is in the way of our church progress, and I rather think that, as a church, we have an added tendency in this direction because we claim that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and therefore that once having taken a stand we assume that our mind is identical with God's mind, and therefore we don't try to change. We must get away from it; we must be willing to think new things. I believe the trend of the times will make us think new things.

What are the teachers doing with your children six hours in the day? is the thing you want to ask. Are they giving these children the thing you want to be given them?

Some of the material we give them they have to take. Now naturally the child should study those things of universal value. That's the big factor in determining what the child must have, and therefore that which we demand of every child should be determined from that point of view.

Universal Values

If I had had more time previous to giving this talk, to look over my material, I would have been able to show that educators are now dividing the universal values into seven different heads. I cannot repeat them all. One is the ability to earn a living. Another universal value is the ability to express oneself. Another one is to be a good homemaker, both boy and girl. Another is good citizenship. Another is moral and religious tone. Good health is another one.

Everything we ask every child to take in school should be measured in terms of these universal values. I will speak with reference to each one, one at a time.

Ability to Express Oneself

We will first consider the ability to express oneself. You know that the thing that distinguishes the human being from other animals more than anything else, is the power of expression, and we do concede that grades in expression, in writing and in language, are of universal value, and we do say, too, that these things should go clear through the entire school course. Educators are well agreed upon that fact. The question of expression is one of the seven values that we are agreed upon as being universal. We find the need of it in every trend or walk of life. We see the need of it here. When we get up to speak we see the need of it. We see the need of it in prayer meeting. We see the need among the elders of the power to express themselves.

We have recently begun to see the need of it in our church ministry to a greater degree. We have been too prone to consider that a man of God was so moved upon by God's Spirit that he would say things beyond his own power of expression. We won't deny it altogether, but we think the principle very limited in its application, and many of our ministers now are really so set in their phraseology that they cannot say anything new, and yet because they have these phrases so well in mind that they can deliver an hour-and-a-half sermon without any preparation, they claim to have the so-called "liberty," an expression which is misused very much by us. It is not because they have any message for the people. It is not because they have the Spirit particularly, but because they have a set of phrases that they can get off glibly and because they do repeat them glibly, we think they have a good deal of liberty. It stands us in hand as audiences to judge our ministry, and find out whether they are giving us anything or not, and to demand of our ministry a higher tone of expression. Expression is the thing we need.

Health

The next universal value in our public schools which I wish to take up is the question of health. It is useless to spend our time in teaching a child music if he has ill health. It is useless to spend our time in teaching our children so fundamental a thing as arithmetic when they have ill health. Yet we have no standards of health. We are recently declaring standards of health. The day is coming when the public schools must refuse to teach a child such a thing as United States history, until that child has first had the opportunity to be in excellent health. I have seen the time in my school when the teachers had the task of teaching boys United States history, when those boys were dead for sleep, and because the boys could not pass they had to repeat. The school spent the money on those boys for one year with no returns. Consequently I think we need new thinking upon this question of health, and to get out of the ruts.

All over the State of Iowa, with the conditions of which State I am best acquainted, it is becoming quite the thing that a boy and girl must measure up in the matter of health before we are going to permit him in the schoolroom.

A custom is growing of providing half-hour rest periods during the middle of the school session for children who are particularly under weight, during which period the child lies down and completely relaxes. I knew one mother who said her girl must pass, whether the girl took the rest period or not. The mother did not want the daughter to miss her history lesson for fear she might not pass the grade. In order to get around this, we told the mother that her child should pass anyway, if she would give the child the chance for a rest period. We would be willing to pass the child upon attainments in better health. This same mother has had some trouble in keeping the child's health up to where it should be. Now what value is that history to such a girl? None at all. Unless that child has good health, she cannot use the history to any advantage.

Some school boards hire athletic coaches at twice the salary that they pay the English or hygiene teacher, upon the assumed justification that athletics are productive of good health. This justification is quite questionable, especially as athletics of an interscholastic nature are administered in the ordinary school. We had better hire some one directly connected with the health of the school, such as a nurse or doctor.

Health is the thing we need, and, of course, that means we should have in our schools a good deal more of hygiene than we used to have. Hygiene has been sandwiched in, and is being sandwiched in, in all our public schools. Of course, our hygiene courses have undergone their revolution. Our good teachers twenty years ago, in order to find something to do during the day, taught us the number of bones there were in the human body, and the names of all of these bones. I doubt if many of you who knew them then, know them now. But a change from this has come and is still coming.

We need to teach, then, something with reference to the science of health. Now, do you know the percentage of the classes of your high school as to health? You will find that perhaps a course for physiology is given somewhere along the line as an optional course. Your children can take it if they want to, but they have in mind the old physiology that used to be taught, and they generally figure on missing this course. That has been the condition. You must see to it that it is changed. I believe that you folks should look well to the question of health, and you should insist that hygiene be given much more than it is, perhaps, in your grammar schools and high schools. You will find subject matter in your school that is traditional in its nature, and cannot justify itself. Insist that in your high schools there should be courses on home nursing, and health maintenance.

Home Making

Another fundamental of universal value is home making. Our girls have not been fairly treated in our public schools in this matter, for the reason they have had to take the old traditional subjects instead of those of universal value. Their Latin is the book Latin I used to learn; and geometry—all Greek to the ordinary girl, and of no use to her whatever.

I knew of a girl in one of our public schools who repeated geometry three times. Her mentality was of such a nature that she couldn't get it. It took three years of her life to get the concept of a triangle and a parallelogram, as though, perhaps, some day when she became a home maker, she might have to fit a hat to her paralleloped of a head. Of course the girl may in her graciousness some day ask the good Lord to forgive the public for requiring her to waste her time on geometry.

Few mothers to-day are capable of teaching their children how to sew or cook. It is asking too much of the mother, both from the standpoint of time and science. It should be done by an expert, because there are scientific aspects to that problem that the most of us have never heard of, and scientific aspects of that problem, the problem of cooking, are being developed with which we cannot keep up. Consequently I think that you ought to work towards a scientific teaching of these fundamental problems.

Some of you may figure that the servants and the colored people will do the cooking, the washing, and the sewing about your house. I understand that in Independence the only domestic science you have in the public schools is in the colored school. Of course I would not agree with that at all. I agree that they should have it, of course, but I think that the others should have it, and by a scientific teacher, too.

We should attempt to introduce these subjects into the child's life at that time that she cares most for them. It is true that the ordinary girl cares more about home making subjects at the age of nine, ten, eleven, and twelve than at eighteen, and therefore these subjects should be taught at these lower ages and displace some other material of not so much relative importance.

In a great number of our schools, these home-making subjects are taught only when the tendency is towards the boy rather than towards the child. You cannot get girls about eighteen to play with dolls as much as at eight or nine. Their idea is more towards the mating, rather than towards the rearing of children. The girl of eight, nine, or ten will take these subjects with more relish and interest than at eighteen. Hence, we should give her a chance at that time when she is capable of an interested, and hence a scientific, attitude towards it.

At this age she is quite capable of appreciating design and lines in dress, and of appreciating the question of balanced rations. The problem of a balanced ration is much more easily understood than some of the problems in our eighth grade arithmetics. I could give you problems out of some of our less recent eighth grade arithmetics that would be hard enough to stump a college graduate, three fourths of whom would have to stop a long time to think about the method of solution. Yet we have been feeding our eighth grade girls these hard and oftentimes impractical problems, and refusing to give the easier and more practical problems of balanced rations and other questions of home life. The question of a balanced ration is easy, and is quite capable of being understood by the smaller child.

Religion

The question of more and religious values is another one of the universal factors entering into curriculum making. Our public schools have studiously left religion and God out of consideration in their curriculum. This is because of some historical situations and developments which need not be discussed here. Nevertheless, it is a shame that we have to teach in the public schools with religion and God left out. We teach medieval and modern history with God left out. We teach physics with God left out. We are slowly changing and are allowing these subjects to be taught with God considered as a requisite factor. This tendency ought to be encouraged, as this mode of religious teaching in our public schools can be done to a far greater extent than it is now being done without bringing in denominationalism.

How are you women folk going to secure this further and proper introduction of religion into our public schools? It is a very delicate problem, but it must be solved. Your greatest avenue is in organizing a parent-teacher association, perhaps. Be sure that you secure wise leadership. Remember that the school is yours; not the teacher's. Remember that the school belongs to the state; and not to the teachers. It is your privilege to criticize and to improve. Remember your own limitations, but get together, and there is no superintendent of schools who is worth while at all, but who is willing to consider constructive policies for the future with you folks, and if he is any good at all he should be willing to jump in with you and go out to educate the rest of the community, who are still traditional in their thinking.

It is probably true that on account of the possibility of the charge of denominationalism, our public schools will never be able to put God and religion into its curriculum to the extent and in the form that we Latter Day Saints as a denomination would like. It will be up to our Sunday school and college to supply the deficit. Our Sunday school must interpret public-school science, public-school history in the light of Latter Day Saint religion. Yet there seems to be a fear in the minds of some that there may be put into the Sunday school something besides the Bible. Yet the fact that I have studied medieval and modern history with God in it has been more proof to me that God is, and meant more to me than all the elaboration of Jewish history in the light of God as we find it in the Old Testament.

Vocational Guidance

I have but two minutes more to speak of another factor of curriculum making of universal value, that of vocational guidance. I imagine but little time is given in most of our high schools to give a child a vision of the world's economic relationships or get before the boy or girl the opportunities to earn a living. They were not taught to me. I happened into the trade I am now in. The ordinary mother doesn't know, or the ordinary father is not acquainted with all the opportunities of making a living. The boy is growing. He hunts around and hunts around and goes to his father for advice, and father has no advice. Vocational guidance must be put more definitely into our schools. It is an entirely new field, but it is bound to come. Absolutely.

I think that this very problem of vocational guidance is one of the greatest before our church to-day. We are bringing thousands of people into this community who have no knowledge of what they are going to do after they get in here. They just come in to get a job, and as a result so many come in that are without a job that we give the world the idea that we are an indolent people. They should have had some vocational guidance in their childhood. They should have some now. Then we may as well, as intelligent followers of an intelligent leadership, face this problem. It is a problem of fitting our children into a large and intricate economic system. It is a problem of guiding them in choosing their vocation from among the many. Yet the public school offers the best permanent agency to solve this problem.

The Missouri Legislature this year fixed the age of majority at twenty-one. This places young women in the same class as young men. Under twenty-one they are minors, at twenty-one they are of age, and can vote, and make contracts, including the contract of marriage. Young women cannot marry in Missouri now under the age of twenty-one without the consent of their parents, for under that age they are still infants in the sight of the law and under parental supervision.

Vision

By J. E. Vanderwood

"Where there is no vision, the people perish."—Proverbs 29:18.

In my childhood days I heard a number of discussions concerning the matter involved in the foregoing text. Childlike as I was, these discussions puzzled me, for I was not able to understand the reasoning of those who were discussing it. At that time I had a very limited concept; in fact, I could only understand vision as some kind of apparition or nightmare, and it is needless to say that I was perplexed beyond measure.

Since growing older I have discovered that the word has meanings that at the time referred to I had no idea could be related to it. But in mingling with my fellow men in the various walks and vocations of life, I have observed that a goodly number of grown-up people understand the word in the same limited way that I did when I first heard the subject discussed. I am therefore going to attempt to write a short treatise on the matter involved in the text, that peradventure I may be able to assist some one to extend his vision, for I believe I can quite fully appreciate the philosophy which says: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." I ask, therefore, that it may be considered carefully.

Meaning of the Word

The first thing necessary for us in considering this matter is a clear understanding of the meaning of the word vision. The Intercollegiate Dictionary defines it thus: "The act or sense of seeing: anything seen: anything imagined to be seen: a divine revelation: an apparition: anything imaginary."

It will very readily be observed that the prime meaning of the word is, "the act or sense of seeing." It is from this angle that we wish especially to consider this matter, but we may later consider in part some of the other phases of its meaning, but in any event they shall be treated in the light of this prime meaning. It will, I am sure, require but little argument to enable us to see and understand that where people have no sense of seeing they must necessarily perish. To express the idea in other words, it is simply this: My life must be as limited as my vision. This confronts me with the awful reality that convinces me that I can only see that which I have the capacity or the disposition for seeing. In other words, a limited vision spells for me limited possibilities, but an extended vision means extended possibilities, and an enlarged vision prophesies for me enlarged possibilities. A clear vision means a clear understanding of the real and sometimes perplexing problems of life; while a clouded vision means a darkened mental state for me. Cause and effect is the order of the universe, and I must determine my own destiny thereby.

One of the most prevalent errors with which man is circumscribed, is that he is prone to mistake a part for the whole. I would like to urge thinking beings to guard against this error. If, however, we were to paraphrase our text, it would read like this: "Where there is no act or sense of seeing, the people perish. When this idea is rightly grasped it is very closely allied to the statement made by the Prophet Hosea, which reads: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."

Knowledge Is Power

It has been said, and rightly so, that knowledge is power. This being true, we are safe in concluding that the lack of knowledge is weakness. Power protects and invigorates; it is dynamic, but weakness destroys because it has a tendency to paralyze. It is therefore literally and scientifically true that "my people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Even a weakling, with knowledge, can conquer and subdue a giant who is destitute of knowledge. It is well to observe, therefore, that that which distinguishes man from the lower animals is his power and ability to acquire knowledge. That which distinguishes God from man is his superior power and knowledge. And we should remember always that we can acquire knowledge only in so far as we possess or acquire the art or sense of seeing things correctly.

In his book entitled Personal Efficiency, Professor James Samuel Knox makes the following statement: "The great American need is for a vision of larger life and its possibilities. Our vision is limited, our aspirations are limited, and therefore our possibilities are limited. Our vision is limited because we lack a definite aim, a definite ambition, a definite purpose."

The serious situation in the life of the average man is that he is willing to content himself in the mediocre things of life when he ought to be extending his vision and thus enlarging his possibilities in life. One must energize beyond the ordinary if he would attain unto the extraordinary. Energy rightly expended means achievements. Again Professor Knox says: "Unless an individual's vision is bigger than the boundary of his own business or his own country, it isn't big enough to help him solve his own problems."

We Must Appreciate Philosophy of Others

This is simply saying that unless my vision is broad enough to grasp the other man's philosophy, as well as my own, I am not able to rightly understand or develop my own. It is really appalling when we begin to discover our limitations, but we are so circumscribed with the commonplace that we have permitted the ego to stand between us and the Eternal. We have permitted the personal rather than the universal to dominate our thought and action. We cling to a shadow, but let the real thing escape our notice. We have been exclusive, and hence have set our own limitations. That is to say, man is too prone to exclude the truth if it is in any way connected with other than his own cult. He rejects the good others would give him, but he clings very tenaciously to his own error. He interprets everything in the light of his own concepts, and measures the corn of others in his own peck measure.

Thus, in carrying into the problem the further definitions of the word, we are confronted with this difficulty, viz, our act or sense of seeing will determine for us the whole matter. When the idea of a divine revelation or an apparition is involved, we must fully realize that our understanding of that divine revelation or apparition will be limited to us in just such measure as we are limited in our sense of seeing. So it is obvious that a divine revelation or an angelic visitation can mean no more to me than I have the sense of seeing. I am here reminded of a circumstance that may serve to illustrate my idea. At one time a very scholarly man told me of his trip through the Royal Gorge in Colorado. He said that the train stopped in the gorge, the tourists got out and began to look about, and as they beheld the grandeur of the art of nature, they in their ecstasy expressed appreciation for what their eyes beheld, when rather an ordinary man, whose slumbers were disturbed by their exclamations, came out to see what was arousing the ecstatic vision of the tourists, evidently supposing there were some wild animals in evidence. As he came out of the coach he asked, "What is it?" They answered, "See the wonder and beauty of nature, of that mighty cliff, that overhanging rock, and the wonderful blending of those colors on that picturesque mountain side." The man, with a disgusted look upon his face, said, "Well, I'll be dog-goned!" and turned and reentered the coach.

The limitations of this man obscured his vision, and he was unable to see the beauties of God's creation. He was so circumscribed that he was unable to appreciate the art of a master hand. He was dead so far as the art of nature was concerned. He had no way of comprehending the finer phenomena of nature. The idea is quite fully and beautifully expressed by President Smith in his work, Higher Powers of Man, when he says: "Each dreams his own fantasy according to the nature of his own brain and special stimulation to which he is subjected; for our fancy magnifies or reduces, just as the telescope enlarges or reduces according as we look through the ocular or objective.

We Are Limited by Our Own Capacity

We see only that which we have the capacity or inclination for seeing, we comprehend only that which we have the capacity for comprehending; nothing more and nothing less. So it is again verified that when there is no vision the people perish. If another sees that which I am not able to see, because he has energized up to that point where his vision has been enlarged and clarified, I have no moral right to say he is a deceiver or a dangerous person, just because his vision is capable of taking in that which lies beyond my horizon. That is to say, if I put myself in a dungeon, my vision will be circumscribed by the darkness of that dungeon, but if I put myself on the mountain peak, my vision will be clarified and extended by reason of the higher and clearer atmosphere that I have penetrated. Lethargy may put us in the dungeon, but it requires energy to place us on the mountain peak.

Christ stands on the mountain peak of wisdom and knowledge. Man is in the mist-bound valley of tradition and superstition. Nothing short of wisdom and knowledge can lead us out of the dark valley. We must learn also that it is only as we ascend the mount of wisdom and knowledge that we are able to approach unto the Christ life. And as we ascend our vision will be clarified and extended, and when we reach the crest we will be able to see over into the borderland of eternity. Latter-day revelation informs us that "the glory of God is intelligence, or in other words light and truth." In the proportion that we acquire the art or sense of seeing light and truth, to just that proportion shall we partake of the glory and power of God.

Algebra is obscure to me so long as I lack the art or the sense of seeing algebra, but when I have acquired the art, or the sense of seeing algebra, it is no longer obscured. At first I see only figures and they confuse me, but when the art or sense of seeing is acquired, I see an exact science, a workable problem. So, in like manner, when I have no vision of the Christ life, I am and must necessarily be dead to that life; but when I acquire the art or the sense of seeing Christ as he is revealed in the universe around me, I find that his glory, his life, is an exact science, a demonstrable problem.

What We Vision Determines Our Destiny

It is well here to observe that the thing we vision is the thing that determines our destiny, for it is a well-known and scientific fact that we must grow into the likeness of the thing we most earnestly and habitually contemplate. In the measure in which I am able to vision the truth will I be able to approximate the divine ideal. That is simply to say that in the manner in which I see the word of truth shall he be made flesh and dwell with me. If I see him as he is, I will surely be like him when I have energized up to that point that will push me beyond the mundane limitations, but if I fail to see him as he is, I will never be like him, worlds without end. If I see imperfectly my life will develop imperfectly, but if I see more

AN EXPERIMENT IN MISSIONARY METHODS

Kansas City pastor tells how his church expects to make more use of the printed word in European mission work.

Doctor Everett Gill, pastor of the Westport Baptist Church, who will leave September 1 to take charge of the activities of the Baptist Church in southern Europe, discussed his new work last night in the Central Baptist Church, Tenth Street and Park Avenue.

Doctor Gill will represent the Southern Baptists of this country and his duties will extend throughout the countries of southern Europe, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Caspian Sea. Northern Baptists will be represented in northern Europe in a similar manner.

Doctor Gill described a new type of missionary work last night, and he said that it was to be an experiment. Instead of sending Baptist missionaries into communities where that church is not known, the aim will be to strengthen the little Baptist groups that are in existence. In some cases money will be loaned them, and in other cases there will be gifts. In every case, an attempt will be made to arouse a spirit of self-reliance.

Preaching by means of the written word will be used on a larger scale than ever before in the missionary field, Doctor Gill said. Propaganda has been used with telling effect in every other line of endeavor, and written messages will supplement the voice from the pulpit in this new enterprise. From a central office Doctor Gill will direct a corps of writers, and what they write will be translated into many languages. The doctrines of the Baptist Church will also be sent out by executive boards in each nation of the group.

"It is difficult for the average American to think of Europe as a missionary field," Doctor Gill said. "That continent has been the center of Christianity for centuries, yet it is a simple fact that the gospel has never taken a very deep hold on Europe. The church in most European countries has been entangled with the government. Priests and bishops have often received appointments through governmental influence.

"Only in recent years has the gospel begun to take hold. The simple gospel did not have a fair chance to grow. All attempts to return to the original faith were suffocated by persecution.

"The missionary executive in southern Europe will work through national boards. One important duty will be to organize training schools for ministers. Without such training little can be accomplished. The executive will deal with a particular country only after the national board is organized."

clearly and more nearly perfectly, my life will more nearly approximate the life of the Matchless One.

A broader vision then will lead us into a clearer atmosphere, and that clearer atmosphere in turn will give us a more extended vision. And if this clearer vision be once caught, it will continue to beckon us on until we have reached the coveted prize. The conclusion of the whole matter then is simply this; if I have no sense of seeing I can never choose the most valuable, and I will therefore perish in my ignorance, but if I have a clear vision, my sense of seeing will enable me to make choice among the things that surround me, and the right choice will give me the necessary intelligence, which is the glory of God, and as I acquire this I may be able to enjoy the more abundant life.

A BRITISH COMMENT ON SPIRITUALISM

To the novice in psychical affairs it must seem a wonderful thing that all these great or notorious men and women should come back and honor us again with a friendly greeting. But the only wonderful thing about it is that anyone listening to the post mortem discourses of these spirits should have any doubts as to the veracity of the entities who claim to be the persons they name.

So old in the history of Spiritualism is this nauseous folly that the Hampstead Heath Bonfire on Guy Fawkes night would be a small affair by comparison if all the records of such impostures were collected together, and met the fate they deserve in the flames. True, it may be urged that Mr. Munnings cannot help it. That he has gathered around him a group of lying, mischievous and earthbound spirits is reasonably certain. Impersonating spirits are as old as the hills. We know of seances conducted in America to-day where for one dollar Queen Victoria, Julius Cæsar, and Shakespeare are guaranteed at each sitting. The singing of "Lead, kindly light" in quick time, followed by "Way darkies down the Suanee River," and "There are angels hovering round," is enough to produce a voice.—Light, June 25, 1921.

Something for Nothing. Is It Possible?

Millions of people have been greatly disappointed throughout life because they have not been able to secure something for nothing. In God's economy of the universe there is no such provision as will enable one to secure worth-while things except on payment of their full value.

It may be that the postponement of full or partial payment is possible. That is true in the case of a college education. The tuition paid by the student covers only 20 to 50 per cent of the cost of his education. If every student paid full value received for the cost of his education he would pay from two to five times as much as he does in the way of tuition. Because the church feels that her young people will be so much better qualified to render efficient service, both to the church and to the community, she is willing to help in your education. By attending college you are apparently receiving something for nothing—you are receiving from two to five times as much as you are paying for—but in reality you are preparing yourself to repay in the form of service to society and to the church many times what it cost you and what it cost the church.

If you are looking for a place for quick returns and large dividends you need look no further than in the securing of a college education. You can make no better investment!

In Great Britain the consumption of liquor has greatly increased since the war, though it is less than it was seven or eight years ago. On the other hand, the amount expended for liquor is nearly three times what it was before the war, namely nearly 470,000,000 pounds. It is surprising to learn that the British expenditure for drink in 1919 exceeds the total amount spent for meat and bread, yet the drink bill was "only" eight pounds, eight shillings per head, while for 1920 it was ten pounds.

The Reverend A. B. Curry in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, says: "If you will look at all the conditions to-day, all the dishonesty, the holdups, the oppression, the bloodshed, the murder and violent deaths, you cannot escape the conclusion that man is not right with God. He is either serving his own depraved nature or serving another master."

The Eternal City—Part 4

By H. J. Davison

It is an opportune hour for the hopeful Israelite, says the author, who shows reasons for his belief.

The loyal Israelite has all along the ages cherished the fulfillment of promises made to them by Jehovah through the prophets. Even the smooth, wet stones at the wailing place of the pilgrim Jews by the wall of Old Jerusalem testify to the grief and disappointment, because the dawn of a better age did not come in their day and generation. And that Messiah did not come.

It is not strange that Christendom has made so little impression upon the Jew in the matter of proselyting. Christianity heretofore has offered them no Messiah to reign on the throne of David in Jerusalem, and only a Zion beyond the clouds. One Jewish lecturer of note recently said, "There is so much of Christianity that is Christless."

Alas, that has been too true, both as to genius and program. They read of the "meek and lowly," but see so little of the reflection. They read of the angel's proclamation to Mary concerning the Christ, but who of Christianity believes it?

To-day there is a spirit working in the heart of the Jew, vitalizing the prophecies which have for ages been but an empty sound to the masses. The star of hope beams brighter than ever before in the hearts of the loyal and true.

One of the executive board of the Zionist movement recently said, "It is the psychic moment of the ages—the pivotal hour in the history of the race. The tears and graves of the disappointed dead, and the golden dream of the idealist who looked for a shining Messiah from heaven to transform the world and place Israel into a kingdom of transcendent glory, without an effort upon the part of the Jew, has given place to a more practical faith, and a more rational conception of their future. A faith not only in God, but a faith also in the higher qualification and moral excellencies of the Hebrew race. God, he says, will fulfill his promises, but it will be when Israel is ready as he was once before, to pull away from the lash of the taskmaster and the leeks and onions of Egypt, and strike out under divine direction for the promised land. Also that they were being imbued with the spirit of Caleb and Joshua, and were more willing to make sacrifice and put forth effort for liberty and a national home.

Ishmael Still Lives to Oppose

The informed Jew is alive to the magnitude of the situation, and aware of many of the obstacles that are to be overcome.

Ishmael still lives, and Esau is not dead. The blood of the Canaanite still flows, and is yet warm with hatred towards the seed of the followers of Joshua.

Mohammedanism, Catholicism, and a great part of Protestantism will join heart if not hand to oppose the Zionist Movement.

The Jewish hope from a national standpoint is in the strength and integrity of the allies. Their only outlook is emigration. But where! England is full; France has no place for ten millions of emigrant Jews, with more to follow; Australia has said, No; United States would say the same to colonizing. They have no faith in Africa, South America, Eastern Europe, or Asia. Where, then? Palestine—only Palestine.

And yet they recognize their own inability to organize and perpetuate an independent government in the world, and cope with all the forces of nations with experiences and foundations of centuries.

Future Is Bright

Still, with all that, the predictions of Holy Writ gleam with a brightness never before realized:

"Behold, the days come that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely, and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS."—Jeremiah 23: 5, 6.

Again,

"For, lo, the days come, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it."—Jeremiah 30: 3.

"At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."—Jeremiah 3: 17, 18.

The Jews know full well that these, with a score of other prophecies along the same line, have never been fulfilled, and also are not susceptible to a spiritual fulfillment only, as some proclaim; neither do they antagonize the prediction of the broken bottle found in Jeremiah 19. For that had reference to the house of Judah alone.

Ezekiel, in chapters 36 and 37, is quite clear and very strong touching the coming together of the two divisions of Jacob, and becoming one nation in Palestine.

The Jews furthermore know that the spirit of the gathering is working mightily in places where it did not, a few decades ago. Although they do not know concerning the "dispensation of the fullness of times" and that God is also working mightily in the hearts of the remnant of the seed of Joseph, even Ephraim and Manasseh, and is establishing among them the foundation of the very government that will finally obtain in the Holy Land, when they shall have passed through the transitional periods of gathering and constructive operation, ere the righteous branch shall sit upon his throne. The central activities of said foundations are now fostered and perpetuated in America—the land promised to the remnant of the seed of Joseph, even by Jacob in his patriarchal blessing, and elsewhere.

An Opportune Hour for Israel

That there must be a period of construction along international, civic, commercial, social, and industrial lines before the more religious features of the prophetic program can be woven into history, is quite evident. The duration of that period, however, may not be known. Yet it must be in a time when some nation, friendly and strong, is in a position to throw around the protecting arm and extend a fostering care. And at no time since the Romans expelled the Jews from Palestine, have so many powers and forces converged to such a point as at the present. At least, so it would appear to us who are not behind the stage settings of international dictation and diplomacy.

It is an opportune hour for the hopeful Israelite, though it be a compensation for four years of the horrors of war upon the fields of Belgium, France, Italy, Russia, and elsewhere, besides the hills and vales of Palestine.

Hosea 11:1 says: "When Israel was a child, then I loved him and called my son out of Egypt." We do not know why there should be long years of degrading, rigorous slavery, the death of the "first born" of Egypt, and all the calamities of the seven plagues, to make the liberation of the child "Israel" possible, nor do we know why the death of Herod and the slaughter of the innocents should precede the calling of the Great Antitype, the child Jesus, out of Egypt, back into the land promised to Abraham and his seed, no more than we know why in the great scheme of the final planting of Jacob upon his God-given possessions should be the result, or at least accompanied by the blood of thousands not interested.

The end not yet being accomplished, we may not hope that the shedding of blood is ended. Jealous and merciless religionists will seek in every way to influence the rulers of state against the movement just as soon as it begins to take visible shape. The enemies of the allies will seek to sow distrust in the heart of the Jews, and ruin their confidence in the agencies chosen of God to aid their emancipation. All this and much more which would occur in any age and under any common circumstances will be brought to bear against the Zion movement. Nevertheless, the project will succeed, either now or in the near future. God has spoken upon it many times in ancient days, and has renewed his decree, touching the movement, in modern revelation.

Latter-day Work at Beginning of Restoration

It is a matter of fact, as well as of general record, that at the very proclamation of the latter-day work, announcement was made by the Seer of Palmyra, that the time was at hand for the restoration of the Jews, as well as the gospel. And it became a part of the faith of the Saints; at a time when all outward appearances were decidedly against even the possibility of such a thing—no doubt the first of any people of any phase of Christian belief to take such a stand. That record cannot be changed (nor indeed do the Saints wish it changed). By that record will the Saints with their first prophet of these days stand or fall as interpreters of heavenly message—both among the Gentiles and the Jews.

Upon the fulfillment of that proclamation will faith be engendered in the mission of the latter-day prophet, with the record of the remnant of the seed of their brother Joseph, which he translated by the power of God, by which agency will the Jews with their adherents be brought to a knowledge of their Messiah. Then will be presented to them not a Messiah that shall reign eternal in the heavens, but a literal descendant of David, who will more than fulfill their fondest expectations.

When this takes place, and they have accepted a covenant in which the ark of the ten commandments with all that it embraced will not be remembered nor come into mind, then the spiritual phase of the gathering prophecies will be realized. Then Judah shall be saved and Israel will dwell safely.

Hear, O Israel, this is the day in which God has set his hand the second time to recover his people. Despise not the hour of your visitation.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Typhoid Fever

Four hundred thousand persons annually contract this disease and thirty thousand deaths a year result. Yet it is, compared to many "catching" or contagious diseases, readily preventable. Typhoid fever prevails in nearly all parts of the United States, and thus the loss of life and economic waste from typhoid is many times more than the trouble of preventive measures.

Typhoid fever is caused by a germ that originates only in human refuse, and is taken into the mouth when contained in water, milk, etc. The germ, under favorable conditions, will multiply at enormous rates, often dividing itself into two germs every forty-five minutes. It is but one-twelve-thousandth of an inch long, colorless, and causes no disagreeable taste or odor. Thus milk and water that look sweet and pure may be teeming with germs. These are carried, if sewage and human refuse are not properly disposed of, by washing rains or by surface drainage, into water supplies, springs and wells used for drinking purposes, truck patches, orchards, and yards where children play.

There are three ways to prevent typhoid. (1) By increasing individual resistance. (2) By protecting against contamination with human refuse all food and drink. (3) By disposing of sewage in a sanitary manner.

Typhoid inoculation, or vaccination with dead typhoid germs, has proved very successful. The injections, three in number, are made by any physician, inexpensively, at ten-day intervals, causing no appreciable inconvenience on the part of the person inoculated. According to results obtained in the United States Army, the inoculation gives protection for at least two years. While this is not absolute immunity against infection in a highly concentrated form, experiments have shown that, upon equal exposure, inoculated persons are one fourth as likely to contract the disease as those who have not been inoculated.

This must not, however, be regarded as a substitute for sanitation.

Flies are a great source of typhoid infection and spread. Swat the fly. Get rid of it in the home and the community as much as possible.

Water for drinking should be obtained from known pure sources. If any doubt exists, the water should be boiled or treated with chloride of lime. This may be done by keeping a tightly corked solution containing one teaspoonful of fresh chloride of lime to one quart of water. To two gallons of water for drinking, one teaspoonful of this mixture should be added, and allowed to stand twenty minutes before using.

All milk which is not known with reasonable certainty to be free from uncontaminated sources, should be pasteurized by being heated to 145 degrees for twenty minutes and quickly cooled.

In rural communities each home without sewage should be equipped with a sanitary privy. Unsanitation in this respect is a grave source of typhoid infection.—Article printed by the Red Cross Society.

Measles

This is the disease of which it is commonly said that the children "should have it young and be through with it."

No graver misconception could exist, because measles is really a dangerous disease, as following it occur many of our active cases of tuberculosis. An attack of measles in childhood leaves an unusually fertile field for the development of tuberculosis germs. A child ill with measles loses most of its strength, and great care must be taken during recovery, as, in addition to the danger of tuberculosis, other aftereffects to which the child is rendered liable without proper care, include pneumonia and kidney trouble.

The first signs of the disease are sneezing, running at the nose, and a slight cough. The eyes are often red and watery and the child complains of the light hurting them. In the beginning, there is very little fever, but shortly the tongue is coated and the patient's skin becomes very hot, and the mouth and throat red and inflamed. About the fourth day red spots commence to break out on the forehead and face and rapidly spread downward over the body, grouping together into large red blotches.

As soon as the first signs of the disease appear, be sure to keep the child away from other children, as measles is highly contagious. The discharges from the nose and throat are dangerous to healthy persons who have not had the malady. Send for the doctor at once, and put the child in a darkened, airy room. Give it light food only, and keep the bowels freely open. It is important to keep the child in bed a few days after the temperature has returned to normal.

When the rash has faded the skin begins to peel, which may last several days to a few weeks, according to the severity of the case. When the skin is peeling the body may be oiled, or bathed in warm water. Be sure to keep the mouth, ears, eyes, and nostrils, perfectly clean.

As many persons die from measles as from scarlet fever. It is a dangerous disease which no child needs to have.—Article printed by the Red Cross Society.

Adenoids in Children

The human lungs need filtered air just as much as does the general system need pure, filtered water. One child in every ten, according to estimates and results of examinations of large numbers of children, are not getting filtered air because of an obstruction in the nasal passages called "adenoids," which cause mouth breathing.

Air breathed into the lungs should be moistened and filtered by passing through the nose and coming in contact with a moist cushion or filter of tissue. If this tissue becomes abnormally enlarged, it stops up the common avenue of breathing, and air must then pass directly through the mouth and into the lungs without filtration.

The strain upon the lungs in receiving this unpurified air lessens the child's resistance to disease. It is likely to have repeated colds and soon show signs of nasal catarrh. The nose, shut off from its normal supply of air, becomes an ideal breeding place for disease germs. The development of chronic catarrh, a frequent result of adenoids, may lead to loss of the sense of smell, altering of the facial expression, and disfigurement of the jaws and teeth.

Adenoids can be detected in children by a variety of signs, sleeping with mouth open, snoring, and frequent strangling coughing spells, being among the most common symptoms. Backwardness in school is a very frequent result of the obstruction in the nose.

If there are signs of an obstruction in the air passageway, the child should be examined by a reputable physician, and if adenoids are discovered they should be removed. If the child is under ten, the operation is a very simple one.

Even a few months neglect of adenoids may result in considerable damage from mouth breathing, and a permanent physical defect.—Article printed by the Red Cross Society.

Diphtheria

Take no chances with a sore throat in your child. Be sure to go to a doctor, as this is one of the first symptoms of diphtheria, which is an acute disease of the throat and is very dangerous.

It is caused by a germ, which not only causes a sore on the spots where it grows, but distills a poison which attacks the heart, tending to weaken it. Diphtheria is contagious and it may be contracted by children who use spoons and cups that have not been cleansed since use. Do not allow your children to cultivate the habit of putting in their mouths candy or

Practical Child Welfare Work

We recall a story read in childhood which illustrated by the simple picture of a large door swinging open upon small hinges the fact that upon apparently trivial happenings important events will turn. The impression received through the reading of that story is revived somewhat as we contemplate the fact that as a child is guided in the small beginning years of its life, so will its life develop, and we may safely prognosticate its general trend if we are familiar with the direction of its early days.

That the most practical thing one may do for the betterment of the human race, for the community, and the Nation at large is to concern one's self with the tiny citizens, whose bodies and intellects are to-day in the shaping processes and whose future usefulness will be determined by the influences which to-day are being brought to bear upon them, is a truism all students of social conditions might easily concede. Granting this position, one would not wish to withhold from a group or organization whose purpose it is to improve the condition of the infants and preschool children of the community, a full measure of commendation and whole-hearted support in the movement.

Miss Rosamond Losh, executive secretary of the Children's Bureau of the Welfare Board of Kansas City, came before our workers at the May Institute with a clear and definite message whose burden was the good of tiny children in the homes of the people. She explained the work of the bureau with which she is identified, and made a strong appeal for similar work to be prosecuted all over the country. There is no reason why the sisters in any of our branches cannot duplicate some of the essential things Miss Losh presented, and insure to the childhood of their group correction of physical defects (possible at an early age), removal of handicaps and weaknesses, and, through the careful instruction and training of their parents, an environment favorable to their best development.

Miss Losh's address will appear in our columns in two installments. A. A.

pencils that have been in the mouth of some one else. You are taking chances with their lives if you do.

If the child contracts diphtheria, place it in a room alone. Take out all unnecessary furniture, and if possible, choose the room on the top floor of the house. It must be well ventilated and sunny. Select the brightest and most airy room in the home. Do not allow any person not taking care of the child to enter the room. Boil all dishes thoroughly after use in the sick room. Before washing, all soiled clothes and linen of the patient should be soaked an hour in a tub containing one pound of carbolic acid in five gallons of water.

If the doctor says that antitoxin should be used, be sure that it is done. It may save the child's life. Before antitoxin was used, one out of three children who had diphtheria died. If antitoxin is used the first or second day, 98 out of 100 children recover.

Do not allow the child to get up too soon. It may affect the patient's heart if you do, and occasionally result in paralysis.

Only after the doctor has stated that the throat and nose are clear of diphtheria germs should the child be allowed to go out of the house or to play with other children.—Article published by the Red Cross Society.

Welfare of Preschool Children

Address of Miss Rosamond Losh before the Women's Institute, May 17, 1921, Independence, Missouri. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.

A healthy child is the pledge of a healthy, live nation. Along with the evils that we feel were the outgrowth of the war, we have learned one lesson that has been a blessing to millions, and that lesson has to do with the conservation of human life. When our Government began examining boys for the selective draft by thousands, tens and hundreds of thousands, some startling discoveries were made regarding their physical condition. They discovered that thirty-five per cent were physical discards. A much larger percentage were found to be physically under standard, but not so much so but that with a great deal of reclamation work they could be worked over and put into service, but thirty-five per cent, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-five, when they should have been men, fit, were put in the physical discard class, absolutely and hopelessly.

The encouraging and yet pathetic aspect was this, that seventy-five per cent, had they been taken in the earlier years, in the preschool years, could have been cared for, if we had just known about it; and these same boys and girls could have grown to strong, vigorous, healthy manhood and womanhood.

As a result of the appalling discovery, a survey was made throughout the whole United States of the conditions of the younger children, and we were more appalled by the discovery made in this survey: 62 per cent of the children in our own Kansas City were found to be under standard, and found to be suffering from physical handicaps that were just almost intolerable. The condition was about the same throughout the United States. Just think of it! Sixty-two per cent of our children so physically handicapped that they were not able to climb the ladder of life because of the mental and physical defects holding them back, and sentenced to see their healthier companions pass them in the race for success!

A manufacturing plant that turns out 10 per cent defective product fails. The discards must be cut down to 3 per cent in order for that plant to succeed. The only reason the human product has not failed is because of its peculiar rebounding powers. With this reconstructive, reclamation work, we are able to save a good many of what would otherwise be discards. When any of us reach a certain degree of understand, we can call in medical aid, or aid of some kind, that we can be put into some sort of condition again.

When England awoke to the gravity of the situation (they had made a similar survey and discoveries), they immediately set about doing something; and notwithstanding the fact that their rations were reduced at that time, and the necessity for conservation on all sides was great, yet they were able to reduce the rate of infant mortality far below what it was in the prewar period.

Statistics have shown us in this country and England that one child out of every ten born dies before one year of age; and about 33½ per cent die before they are six years old. So you see what a critical period is this preschool age. As many deaths occur between birth and six years as between six and fifty years; if they survive these first six years, the probabilities are they will last somewhere near fifty years, even with their physical handicaps.

As soon as the United States realized the size of the problem they had before them, they set about doing something. All that was necessary was to point out the enormous need, and something was done; and now, throughout the whole United States, while we are not doing all we would like to do, a great deal is being done to correct the conditions. Practically every county and small town now, as well as the large cities, has some sort of organization working to raise the standards of their children. It is surprising and very encouraging to note what has been done.

Child welfare is now receiving the attention it should have received many, many years ago, and we are hoping for still greater things. In Kansas City, at the close of a campaign launched by our Government, the mothers, realizing how important, it was to do something and to work in an organized way, insisted that we make the bureau, or organization, a permanent one. They hadn't any idea where funds were coming from, or anything like that, but the demand came from the mothers of Kansas City that the work be made permanent.

The city's far-sighted Chamber of Commerce volunteered to finance our work, because they realized that while they had never financed anything of that kind before (their work had always been charity), it would in time eliminate the necessity for a great deal of other charity work. So they volunteered to finance our organization which, completed, was modeled after the Children's Bureau at Washington, where Julia Lathrop is the head.

Our work was known as Child Welfare before, but when we became a permanent organization, we chose "Children's Bureau" because it gave us larger scope. We didn't intend to stop with the limited amount of work, such as weighing and giving physical examinations, but we wanted to do more effectual constructive work. We wanted to get at the root of the thing, so we chose the name, Children's Bureau, because as a bureau we could do a greater number of things, in the future, as our organization grew. We chose the broadest name we could think of.

The Children's Bureau is managed by a board of trustees composed of thirteen trustees, people who are interested in children's welfare, and people who are of sufficient prominence and standing that they can put the work across where necessary. We have on this board two members of the city board of education, in order that our work may be closely connected with the public school's health program. We have six men and seven women on the board. They are responsible for the organization. In addition to that we have a revised medical board, composed of men prominent and representing different lines of medicine, such as physicians, dentists, dieticians, a child specialist, and others, in order that we may have the very best along these lines. These men have standardized the physical examination given to the children of Kansas City of the preschool age, so that every child now receives the same sort of examination. They are all examined for the same points—the same things. It makes it more satisfactory; every mother feels her child gets the same care as every other.

We also employ about fifty-eight physicians for our work. The names of the physicians must be submitted to this board before they are employed, and they decide whether he is peculiarly adapted to succeed in this sort of work. In addition to this, we have four paid employees in the office, the executive secretary and three field executives, and the secretary's stenographer. However, in times of urgent demand, we forget what we are, and we are all out in the field. We are all helpers—field helpers—in such rush times. The paid employees in the office are kept just as few as possible. In fact, we don't want paid help. We want merely enough to manage the machinery and keep things going.

The greatest value of the work, as we feel, is in getting all the mothers of Kansas City back of the movement, and to-day we have quite a few over two thousand. We have not prepared our statistics yet: we won't have them until after the latter part of June; yet it has reached something like two thousand of the mothers of Kansas City who have become interested. Not only mothers, but many other women of Kansas City and community are interested in our work.

This volunteer work comes from various organizations, such as parent-teacher clubs, Women's Catholic Clubs, women's civic clubs, civic organizations, eighteen of the fraternities of the city, many city clubs, and the Amber Girls of the Catholic Church. All of these volunteered to help with the general work throughout Kansas City. To help in all the districts we have parent-teacher associations, and after three years of the work we have a considerable force of trained volunteer service that we can send anywhere in the city to help get behind any piece of work.

However, the majority of the work is done by the parent-teacher association. These women are organized in fifty-five districts where there are parent-teacher organizations, and they do the work, with the help of two or three of these associate volunteers in each district. We get the mothers together simply because we want to make it educational as well as put the examination across. We want a good deal of educational work done; so we get the workers together, perhaps twenty-five or thirty in each district.

I may explain, very crudely, what we are trying to do, and the message we wish to get over. These workers take a square block or two, and make a house-to-house canvass, and explain to the mothers everything in favor of physical examination in order to determine the physical standard of the child and to learn if there are any defects that need following up. If we do not educate our mothers to the ideas of prevention of disease, of raising health standards, and of keeping children to those new standards, we are not getting very far. We feel if we do a thorough piece of work, educational work, this year, it won't be necessary to do it next year.

You may judge of the progress we have made when I tell you the first year we began this work—which is three years ago—we examined something like 5,118 babies; the second year it jumped to 8,200 something, and this is our third year. We will finish in about two more weeks after this, and we are getting so close to the 15,000 mark that we are very hopeful of reaching that in our home classes. So you see it almost doubled the second year, and almost doubled again the third year.

We are reaching every home in Kansas City with the educational end of the work, and we are getting out to the examinations and meeting with the cooperation of over 85 per cent of our mothers. It may go even a little higher than that because districts yet to be gone over (fifteen or sixteen remaining to be done), are districts that will cooperate more than this. We always begin with the most difficult and work up to the ones most easily done, because our efforts are spent by that time. We need work less in districts where we have a large force to assist us. We will be disappointed if we don't reach the 15,000 mark this summer, which I think will represent about 87 per cent of the children in Kansas City.

This year we have ever so many "100 per cent" districts, but are unable to say how many until the year closes. Out of the 12,000 children we have examined to date, 8,000 of them show physical defects of some kind—something that needs attention. We have been able to get follow-up reports on 5,000 of these cases. That is, we learn that something has been done, the child brought to a clinic, or (in the majority of cases, of course in the well-to-do districts,) they took their children to the family physician and had the defects attended to.

In other districts we have to go to a great deal of trouble getting them into clinics, and we consider it encouraging that we have succeeded in getting 5,000 follow-up reports on the cases which our workers found in the homes.

One of the most encouraging things is the way our physicians have been cooperating with us, as well as the schools. Doctor Parker, who has charge of the health programs in the public schools, tells us the children are now coming into the public schools 50 per cent better physically than ever before. As a result of our work, too, the work of the doctors has increased 33½ per cent, showing that after these defective tonsils, adenoids, etc., have been pointed out to the mothers, they have had something done.

(To be concluded.)

In less than a century, four women occupied the throne of Russia, and one of them—the Empress Elizabeth, the able daughter of Peter the Great—proved herself far in advance of other rulers of her time by conferring on women full civil rights.

For Both Sides of the House

In reading the letters in our column and other matter on social needs in general, I have often noticed how much more emphasis is laid on the responsibilities and duties of the wife or mother than on those of the husband or father.

Allowing that the mother is with the children more, and is seemingly more interested in social affairs than the average man, does that relieve or excuse him from even the least of his family and social responsibilities? I cannot see that it does. Women cannot solve all these home and community problems until men are willing to cooperate with them, and will train along the same channels.

It seems to me this work has been left altogether too much to the woman, and the man seems to take it for granted that if he holds the authority of the home and church in his hands, his duty is done when he gives wordy advice and looks after the money end of the proposition!

If the men of the church, both old and young, husbands, sons, and fathers, had a department on the same lines as the women's, and would study the same problems we are studying, and try honestly to bring to pass the desired ends, we might arrive at our goal much more quickly.

The women of the church have always been willing, and in most cases, capable, in meeting the needs of every occasion, but in many instances they have been misunderstood and their efforts unappreciated because the men did not know what was being attempted. There are many things in the social lives of the membership which it is not within the power of the womanhood of the church to correct without the intelligent assistance of the men, educated along the same lines.

I believe this social and child welfare training includes obligations on both sides of the house, and that men should have an educational department and competent instructors, and then we will see what we will see! Then would our dreams come true, our goal be more quickly reached!

Child Welfare

The subject that has been allotted to me is a very large and difficult one, and the more I see of it, the deeper it seems.

Within the last few years our country has awakened to the needs of the child.

Our children of to-day will be the men and women of tomorrow, and a great responsibility rests upon us as parents in caring for these children:

We will start with the child from six to nine years of age. This is the habit-forming age, and a great deal depends on the training, as many of the habits formed at this time last through life.

If they are good habits, the child will grow up and find it much easier to fight the temptations that will present themselves.

On the other hand, if the habits formed are not good, the child will have a much harder struggle to overcome them.

At this age the child is asking questions. Curiosity is aroused, and here the wise parent will answer the questions in a way that the child can understand. In doing this, you gain the confidence of the child, and see that you do not lose that confidence in later years, or you may awaken to find you have a stranger within your doors.

During the adolescent period the child needs the most careful training. If we have taught them properly, we have laid the foundation for the time when they need the guidance and protection of the parent. At the beginning of this period, the boy or girl is very active. Some boys like the outdoor life, playing vigorous games, craving adventure, and exploring new places.

Others are students and prefer getting off in a corner with a book and excelling in school. They love heroism, but they prefer reading about it.

It is the same with girls. Some like to work in the house, and garden, roam in the fields, and others are students.

Good books should be chosen for all of them, as reading leaves a great impression on their minds for good or evil.

They seem to feel a freedom at this time and resent any authority over them, which makes it very difficult for parents. This is the time boys sometimes leave home.

A little later on they find their highest pleasure in associations with the opposite sex. They want to attend parties; social affairs of all kinds, where young men and women are together.

They fall in love, and sometimes fall out again just as quickly. Their minds change rapidly. This is the period that criminals are made, and the papers reveal the fact that many of the robbers, train wreckers, rioters, etc., are around twenty years of age. This makes it important that our young people should choose good company, for the stronger will prevail, and many a boy or girl has gone astray through the influence of companions. Keep their confidence, that they may feel free to come to you and tell you all their troubles. Warn them of the dangers and pitfalls that lie all around them. Don't keep them ignorant of the evils in the world; and teach the results of sin.

Many an innocent girl has been led astray simply because she was kept ignorant and was not prepared to fight temptations when they presented themselves, for to be forewarned is to be forearmed.

As they crave for society and parties, let them entertain their friends at home. See that proper entertainment is provided. Be one of the young folks yourself, that they will feel proud of mother and father, and will not be ashamed to present their friends to you. Be their chum, then they will feel like coming to you with their troubles.

We are living in an age when the world seems to think mainly of having good times, wearing fine clothes, caring nothing about where they are drifting. Walk down our streets and see some of the clothes that are worn (or not worn) perhaps would be more correct.

It seems to be a common thing to see exceedingly low necks, dresses very thin, and very little under them. Faces painted and powdered, lips colored, and eyebrows stenciled. This has not all come in a day. A few years ago a person dressing as they do to-day was attracting very much attention and was very severely criticized. But to-day we seem to have gotten used to it, and don't pay as much attention. But where is it going to end? Each year seems to bring a little more, and those who first introduced these extreme styles were considered people of questionable character.

I have heard it said that people first abhor, then tolerate, then embrace. That seems to be what the people as a whole are doing.

These styles seem to be originated to appeal to man and not the higher senses either, and then we wonder why there are so many bad men in the world.

Now, I am not here to say we are not to wear fashionable clothes, but we as Latter Day Saints should set the example and teach our girls to keep themselves neat and clean, dress becomingly, and not revealing too much of the body. There is no objection whatever in having clothes made in the latest fashion, but our idea is to avoid extremes, whether it be plain or fancy. Some go to the extreme in plainness, and are just as proud as persons in the finest clothes, and attract just as much attention.

Our aim should be to train our boys and girls, that they will be best fitted in life for the responsibilities that come to them; that they may make good, honorable, law-abiding citizens and good homekeepers; that they may be a credit to the country in which they live.

Maternity Bill Passed by Senate

Washington, July 23.—The Sheppard bill, providing for cooperation between the Federal Government and States in "protection of maternity and infancy" was passed Friday by the Senate and sent to the House.

The vote on passage was 63 to 7, after sharp clashes between advocates and opponents. The former declared the legislation was a great humanitarian step, denying that it contemplated interference in the home, and the latter asserted it was "socialistic, paternalistic, and bolshevistic."

The Federal Children's Bureau would administer the act. The bill carries initial appropriations of $1,480,000, which the States would be required to match.

Things to Forget

If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbor's faults. Forget all the slander you have ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the faultfinding, and give a little thought to the cause which provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and remember only the good points which make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out as far as possible all the disagreeables of life. They will come, but will only grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thought of the acts of meanness—or, worse still, malice—will only tend to make you more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday, start out with a clean sheet to-day, and write upon it only those things which are lovely and lovable.—Exchange.

Born March 4, 1806; died October 15, 1885. The accompanying article presents interesting sidelights on his life.

West Virginia. It is beautifully situated on a high hill, and all the surrounding country is very lovely. Within this magnificent burying ground are to be found two Latter Day Saint graves, which contain the mortal remains of Apostle Josiah Ells and his beloved wife, Eliza. Sister Ells died August 2, 1880, and our brother's demise took place on October 15, 1885, at the home of Brother Gomer T. Griffiths, Wheeling, West Virginia.

Very few men, if any, have left a better record behind them than the subject of this sketch. Brother Josiah Ells was born March 4, 1806, at Lewis, County Essex, England. At the age of twenty he united with the Methodist Church, and was ordained a local preacher in said church at the age of twenty-four. In 1831 he emigrated to the United States and after four years resided at Monmouth, New Jersey. Here is where he heard for the first time Elders Benjamin Winchester and Orson Pratt preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. He was baptized by them and soon afterwards ordained an elder and elected president of the branch which had been organized by these two elders. It was at this place that he first met the Prophet Joseph Smith, and, acting upon the advice of the Seer, he later moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, April 1, 1840.

In June of the same year, the Prophet Joseph appointed him to conduct a discussion at Quincy, Illinois, with Reverend David Nelson, who at that time was president of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Quincy. However, the doctor became confused and his friends requested him to desist. He remarked before he took his seat that Brother Ells had treated him courteously. The Seer then challenged all the clergymen present, but none of them felt disposed to accept the challenge. (The Doctor Nelson in question was the author of the well-known work entitled, The Cause and Cure of Infidelity.)

Brother Ells was ordained an apostle in April, 1865, at Plano, Illinois, and he continued in said office for over twenty years. He prosecuted many important missions, went to England, was sent to the Utah Mission, and traveled in all the Eastern States, as well as the Central and many of the Western States.

During his last sickness Brother Ells told me that his family were next-door neighbors of Joseph the Prophet, and that they were very intimate with each other, visiting back and forth almost every day among the families, and he himself was closely associated with the Seer in church affairs. "He came into my house very often, and I visited him in his house. Therefore, do you suppose if he taught and practiced polygamy that my family and I would not have discovered it?" said Brother Ells. He told me time and again that there was not a word of truth in the statement made by the Utah people that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy and that Emma Smith knew it to be a fact.

Brother Ells was one of the brethren who accompanied the party consisting of the Seer, his brother Hyrum, and a few others, to Carthage. The heat being intense, the party stopped at a well by the roadside for a cool drink of water. On his deathbed, he told me of the following conversation between the Prophet and his brother. The Seer said, "We must go and lay our heads on the sod, or they will go into the city and murder the women and children," adding that it would not be necessary for his brother Hyrum to die and for him to return to the city. But Hyrum answered him, "But I must die, for the mob will not be satisfied until they shed my blood. Brother Joseph, if you die I will die, too. I am going with you, and if they kill you they will have to kill me." Brother Ells returned to the city that same day and it was the last time he saw the two brothers alive, whom he loved so dearly.

Just a short time prior to his departure he called me to his bedside and requested me to kneel where he could place his hands on my head and pray over me. I willingly complied with his request. In the beginning of his prayer his voice was very weak, but as he continued to pray his voice grew stronger, so much so that my wife heard him very distinctly downstairs. He predicted, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, that I would live many years and would, in the due time of the Lord, take his place in that mission. He also intimated that I would occupy in the office that he then held, namely the apostleship. In less than two years I was called to the apostleship and was appointed in charge of the mission of which he had been in charge. I presided over it for many years. Hence, all of his predictions that I can remember, were fulfilled.

A few weeks previous to his death I sent him an invitation, to his home in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he lived with his only son, to accompany me to Glen Easton, West Virginia, where we were going to hold a four-day meeting. On the Friday preceding the meetings he arrived in Wheeling and seemed to be feeling fine in body and spirit. He was elegantly dressed and had just procured a new high silk hat, which was very becoming to him. He surely looked grand. We never had a minister who was more particular about his appearance than Brother Ells. He was a handsome man and his large, beautiful black eyes would penetrate into your soul. The old and young loved him because of his kindly disposition and his thoughtfulness of others. It was "thank you," and "God bless you," for each little service up to the time of his passing.

On the last Sunday afternoon of the special meetings he was spoken to in prophecy through Sister Dobbs, who has also gone to her reward. He was told in this prophecy that the hour of his departure had come, and that the Lord was going to take him unto himself. His work on earth was at an end, and he was commended for his faithful service to God and the church. He was told that his soul would soon rest in the paradise of God.

Strange as it may appear, that same night the brother was taken very ill, and the next morning he sent for me and requested that all the Saints gather at the home of Brother Joseph Wayt, where he was at the time. I realized that he was a very sick man and gladly complied with his request. We experienced a good spiritual meeting, and at the close of the service he was so much better that he insisted that I take him to my home, where he said he wanted to die.

A few days before he arrived in Wheeling, I dreamed that he came to our home and took sick and died. I related the dream to my wife the next morning and jokingly told it to the aged brother soon after he arrived, for I had not given it serious thought at that time. However, he remembered the dream and called my attention to it. When his son was notified of his serious illness he directed that a doctor be called. The doctor informed me that nothing could be done, for he was sick unto death. At his son's insistence we called the second doctor, who said he could do nothing for him. Brother Ells told this doctor that he was going to die, and told me not to have him call again, as the church would have to pay the bill. He himself told the doctor not to come the next day. The doctor replied that he was coming just the same, and that it would not cost Brother Ells nor the church one cent. He kept his word in that respect, for he never missed a day for about six weeks and never presented a bill. He would often stay an hour at a time and Brother Ells would preach the gospel to him. He explained all about paradise, the prison house, and the doctrines of the church in full.

The doctor who attended Brother Ells contended that he was a rank infidel, and, on the afternoon that our dear brother passed away, came into the room just as we thought the spirit had left the body. The doctor came close to me and said in a low whisper, "The old man is gone." To our great surprise the dying man answered in a weak voice, "Doctor, I am dying, but all is well." The doctor broke down and cried and left the room. When he returned he said that Brother Ells was the first Christian he had ever seen die and he had witnessed a great many deaths. The same doctor soon afterward united with one of the sectarian churches in Wheeling.

On the Sabbath prior to his demise he remarked to me that he would be with the brethren with whom he had been associated in the church on the next Sunday, in the paradise of God. He arranged all about his funeral, selected his pallbearers, the passages of scripture from which to read, and the speaker. He noticed that I thought it strange that he talked as he did about dying, so he said to me, "Now, I want to say to you that I have been preparing for this very event for fifty years." I have often thought of those words within the thirty-six years that have passed away since they fell from the lips of the dying brother. Am I prepared to meet death as sweetly and calmly as did our brave and worthy Brother Ells?

Just a day or two before the end came he informed me that he had made a last request of the Lord, that it was the desire of his heart that he be conscious while the spirit was leaving the body. He then told me that the Lord had made it known to him that his request should be granted. He asked me to watch him while dying, so that I would have the evidence that what the Lord had promised would come true. As the spirit of this grand brother was passing out of the body, I was on the bed fanning him, and his son was holding his hand. He said good-by to his son soon after he had spoken to the doctor, and his voice died out with the words. He could not move his head nor open his lips, but he raised one of his fingers and, pointing it upward and in my direction, I understood it to mean, "I am going to my heavenly home; good-by."

That the reader may be able to form a proper idea as to the greatness and faithfulness of this brother, I herewith add to this article the resolution of condolence that was presented to the General Conference by his brother apostles, April, 1886:

"Whereas, since our last General Conference, death has entered our ranks, and stricken down our venerable brother and fellow laborer, Josiah Ells, as a tribute of respect we offer the following: While with profound reverence and respect to God, and a desire to exhibit a becoming resignation to the dispensation of his providence, we nevertheless are made to feel sad at the loss of so worthy and able an exponent of the faith, who through long and tedious years, and life's changing scenes, stood unyielding to the opposing powers brought to bear against the latter-day work.

"During his earthly career he bore the cross as a noble soldier, evincing by precept and by example a virtue and love for equity and truth equaled by few and surpassed by none. In his death we lose a wise and able counselor, and the church a faithful, competent, and worthy representative. Let his name be kept in memory as one of earth's noblest men."

Yours in gospel bonds,

Baptisms From Tent Work in Arizona

Some people will hear the gospel if it is taken to them, but otherwise would not.

The past forty days has found us very busy in the Lord's work. We have been engaged in active church work every evening save one during the past forty days. During this time a series of tent meetings was held in Warren, Arizona, beginning June 1, and ending July 3, resulting in the baptism of one. Three more have handed in their names for baptism, and still others are investigating. Elder William Anderson, missionary to Arizona, came up from Douglas, and assisted us during the third week of the series.

The latter part of May the writer went to Warren to look for a location for the gospel tent. We first made application to the Copper Queen Company, as they had lots of vacant land there. After waiting a couple of days we were informed by the general manager, through his secretary, that he would prefer that we get a private lot upon which to erect the tent. We made several inquiries, but could not seem to locate a vacant lot belonging to private parties. After making several trips to Warren, we returned to Bisbee somewhat discouraged, but as a last resort, dropped into the office of a real estate man with whom we were quite well acquainted, and inquired of him if he knew of any private parties holding vacant lots in Warren, stating that we were looking for a place to erect a gospel tent. He at once spoke up and said, "I have a vacant lot there in a very good location. You are perfectly welcome to use that and it will cost you nothing. You surely will do no harm, and you may do some good."

I at once wrote Brother Taylor at Douglas, asking him to bring the tent to Warren on a certain day. I went to Warren on the morning of the day set, in company with Brother Henry Goldie, where we met Brethren Taylor and Farley, of Douglas. Together we erected the tent on the lot, about twenty or thirty feet from a brick house. After we had finished setting up the tent and before leaving the spot, Brother Goldie went into the brick house to telephone to his wife. The inmates of the house questioned him regarding the purpose of the tent, and when Brother Goldie told them the Latter Day Saints were going to occupy there, the lady of the house said, "Oh! Mormons." Brother Goldie said, "No, we have no connection with them, whatever." The lady remarked, "I knew you would say that; I made up my mind that if you were Holy Rollers I would put some dynamite under you and blow you up."

This lady attended every meeting and at the close was the first to offer herself for baptism, and was heard to remark since that she was very thankful that the gospel was brought to her, and said that if it had not been brought to her she no doubt would never have gone to it. Now she is rejoicing in the new-found faith and hoping and praying that other members of the family will obey in due time. This lady had been a Baptist since she was a girl of fourteen.

Another woman who is to be baptized, had all arrangements made to be baptized in the Baptist Church, but after attending most of the tent meetings, notified the Baptist minister that she had decided to join the Latter Day Saints. We feel like saying to Brother Garnett, of the Baptist Church; "We are very sorry for you, but we could not help it; they would come to the meetings, and it is not our fault if they have changed their minds; and if you would give yourself the same chance we would get you also."

The other man and wife who have given their names for baptism are members of the Methodist Church. This will cause the Methodist parson sorrow also. The Methodist minister, meeting these people on the street one day after they had become interested in our meetings, told them that a person could prove anything from the Bible; that he could prove from the Bible that Christ hung himself, and that it could not be proved that Christ was ever baptized by immersion; that the only baptism Christ ever received was when he was sprinkled in the temple when he was a child. No wonder the world is not becoming Christianized, when such men as he are being sent out to teach the people the way of salvation.

The good Spirit has been with us during these meetings, and we are rejoicing in the fact that the Lord is blessing his work, but sorry that some have deprived themselves of this joy and of the reward that might have been theirs had they placed themselves in the way to receive it.

We ever pray for the success of Zion's cause, and are hopeful that the ingathering of souls may continue until all have obeyed who will. We are still desirous to press onward and labor while it is called to-day, lest the night come when no man can work.

E. R. DAVIS.

BISBEE, ARIZONA.

INDIAN RIVER, MAINE, June 14, 1921.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church most fifty years. I was shot down in the field of battle on June 18, 1864, with a bullet in the leg and head, and have been a cripple and on crutches thirty-seven years. I have had a hard time of it in this life, but God has been with me in all my trials. On my next birthday I shall be eighty-seven years old.

I was ordained a priest in 1874 and soon after an elder. I have never done much, but I have done what little I could for the cause of Christ, and when I got so I could not meet with the Saints, I gave up my license. I kept going to meeting when it was where I could, but, for the last few years, I have not been able to attend.

My hearing is bad and my eyesight is bad and no Saints call on me to encourage me in the great warfare. If God had not made known to me that the latter-day gospel was true, I should have been discouraged and fallen by the way. I have not had the privilege of partaking of the sacrament for three years.

Now I want to say a few words to these young elders, priests, teachers, deacons, and Saints. If you know of one isolated Saint, old or young, be sure to call on him or her and give him a good talk of the gospel and the coming of the Lord to redeem his people. These Saints who are left alone and never had any great experience in the gospel will soon give it up and go back into the world where they love their own.

I know something about their feelings, for it has been over three years since an elder has called on me. They pass by on the other side. I do not have a very pleasant feeling for them when they call on Saints a few hundred yards from my house.

"Revive-all" Meetings at Webb City, Missouri

Sixteen baptized and others convinced as a result of the preaching of Elder R. D. Weaver.

Efforts having been launched in several directions to land a speaker for a special series of meetings at this place, June 19 to July 10, all were failures until that peerless Apostle U. W. Greene "got busy" and dispatched a genuinely grand man to our assistance, which was Richard Darwood Weaver, of Cameron, Missouri, and one of the most successful series of meetings ever held in Webb City was the result. Good audiences came from the first and continued until the last meeting.

Preceding the beginning of the series, the priesthood were subdivided into four bodies, and separated into as many different sections of the city, and held special prayer meetings, the theme of each being the "special meetings."

Publicity was given through the advertising committee of the local branch, assisted by the efforts of the membership, each responding nobly to the trust placed in their care. It seemed that each vied with the other to see which could be of the most worth in the effort, this thought being most noticeably manifested among the younger members of the branch. Brother Weaver attended some of the young people's prayer meetings and made the remark that he had not been privileged to attend many prayer meetings with more spirituality manifested, there being, sometimes, seven or eight prayers offered before arising from their knees.

The newspapers gave us a write-up in their columns nearly every day, which gave us quite a degree of publicity.

The local committee provided two electric fans for the comfort of the audiences, who greatly appreciated them, as the weather was extremely warm, and with the exception of one night in which the rain came down in torrents, the weather was exceptionally excellent.

Brother Weaver laid special stress on the statement that he was only a backwoods lad whom God had condescended to bless, and we have come to the conclusion that God surely did bless him, judging from the high degree of esteem which the people seem to hold for him.

The outside people seemed to be particularly interested in the message he brought. Many came nearly every evening, one family each night excepting the night it rained. Sixteen fine people were led into the cleansing waters of Lakeside Park and took on themselves "newness of life," nine of whom were adults. More are nearly ready to come over, and we pray that ere long their convictions may be realized.

Three special collections were taken up, one for expenses, and the last two were for Brother Weaver's benefit.

The meetings were grand, and those who were partakers of the feast of good things accompanying them, still rejoice in the wonderful degree of the Spirit that seemed to flow from heart to heart, in the lives of each one since the advent.

Let us each breathe a prayer for Brother Weaver, that as he goes out on life's tempestuous voyage he may have the anchor of God's love and the compass of his guiding hand pointing the storm-clad way to that bright hereafter which indicates the haven of rest he is trying in his efforts to tell lost mankind.

Des Moines Buying Another Building

New ordinations, many baptisms, and a spirit of activity reported from Iowa's capital city.

We have not been dreaming dreams, but we have seen visions. Visions of greater possibilities made possible by more consecrated service. Supplementing our ever-inadequate intelligences, the ineffable Spirit of Christ has enlarged our horizon, cleared our vision, and made possible the seeing of our work in relation to world problems in a truer perspective. Moreover, we have sensed as never before the meaning of the statement, "For we walk by faith and not by sight." Our visions have not been natural sight, but insight. While some temperaments demand to walk by sight, all should walk by insight, or faith, such as characterized the life of father Abraham when he "looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." "The substitution of judgment for sight and verified realities for the appearance of things, is one of the greatest steps of progress," says a contemporary writer.

The work in Des Moines is onward. It must be. Our responsibility is great, greater than the average branch, for during the past two years the most able men of the church have ministered to us. From the First Presidency down, the best talent of the church has been brought to us and has left us without excuse. We have heard President F. M. Smith in his fervent appeal for Zion to rise and shine. We heard President E. A. Smith in fatherly counsel and spiritual admonition. We heard the inimitable Rushton for a week on "Essentials in religious philosophy." Then there was that never-to-be-forgotten week when Professor F. M. McDowell preached to the young people. We have heard Floyd many times, but never did he preach as he preached that memorable week. Besides the above we have had U. W. Greene, of the Twelve, who left a distinct message with us, the dynamical Bishop Keir, the ponderous Macgregor, the resourceful Dowker, and many others, including a loyal band of local helpers.

In answer to fasting and prayer, five young men were called to positions in the priesthood, and two others assigned other positions, which makes our priesthood force more nearly adequate to meet the needs of the work in this city. Still we need more, for the harvest is great and the laborers few.

During the last few weeks fifteen have been baptized. In fact, of late almost every Sunday, some one asks for baptism. One of the most effective accessories of missionary work is a live and active branch. We lay claim to being alive and active, although we must admit that all activities engaged in by everyone are not in the right direction. This, however, is being gradually eliminated, as the Saints learn that the essence of the kingdom of God is right relationships, a fellowship of justice, equality, and love.

We have outgrown our church building and are buying another in west Des Moines. This is a substantial brick building, well located, and with the necessary repairs will make a splendid home for Saints living in the west side of the city, of which there are more than fifty families.

Our greatest task seems to be to get our people to think in terms of the group. Extreme individualistic attitudes are prohibitive of catholic thinking. We must learn that ours is a social gospel, and that that which is best for the group is best for every individual in the group. The problem, then, is one in psychology. We need, many of us, a new psychology of religion. We must think and labor in terms of the group, at the same time retaining our proper individuality and initiative. The poet has expressed it thus:

"Thou seemest human and divine;
The highest, holiest manhood thou.
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them thine."

Some Old-time Opposition

[The following letter to the Presidency shows that the opposition is resorting to some of their favorite arguments of days gone by. Our men have stood verbal mud slinging, they have even stood up as did these brethren against personal attack, but when the attack was shifted to the congregation, the people were afraid to come out. Such a mob spirit will not be long sustained in any civilized community.]

We have just finished a week, during which we have had a somewhat exciting experience. On Wednesday night, after our service at Gillespie, West Virginia, we, Brother McConaughy, myself, Brother and Sister Cole (who reside here) were assailed by a shower of eggs, from a gang of grown men who were barricaded behind a pile of cross ties. I fortunately escaped with only a splash on the leg of my pants. Brother McConaughy was struck on his back, the egg bursting and messing up his coat. It was a fresh egg, so the damage was not great. The interest here had been good up to this date. On Thursday I preached unmolested, but on Friday they bombarded the outside of the hall in which we were preaching, and on Sunday evening I was preaching with excellent liberty. About half an hour after I had started, they threw eggs right in the midst of the congregation. Some of those attending were badly mussed up with the eggs, and the meeting broke up in confusion.

Brother McConaughy and myself were fortunate in escaping, with the exception of a spot or two, which was easily removed. We feel it would be unwise to try to continue meeting at this place, as the people are afraid to come out, so we are now going to Orlando. The Devil is raging, but we feel that good is being done, and I am confident that seed has been sown at this place that will yield a bountiful harvest in the near future.

THOMAS NEWTON.

Rally Day at Lancaster, Wisconsin

First Presidency: After the Chetek reunion I attended the rally day gathering on Sunday, July 10, under the shade trees on the farm of Brother George Nobel, near Lancaster, Wisconsin. The day was fine, but very warm. The Saints came from far and near, so there were about two hundred Saints and friends. The day was spent in meetings. At a very good prayer meeting at 9 a. m. some of the gifts were enjoyed. At 11 a. m. Brother J. O. Dutton preached. At the noon hour a basket dinner was enjoyed by all. At 2 p. m. the sermon was by W. A. McDowell, and a good spirit pervaded the assembly. Immediately after, the Saints and friends returned to their homes, feeling glad they had thus spent the day together, and thankful for the encouragement they had received.

In the evening, Brother Fred Smith, of Independence, spoke in Lancaster, and Brother B. C. Flint in Ellenboro. The writer and Brother Nobel were called to Plattville, some sixteen miles away, to administer to Brother F. Lighty, who has been poorly for some time. I learn that he is improving some.

Last Sunday a friend took Brother F. M. McDowell and the writer in his auto to the branch at Mission, Illinois, where we attended the Sunday school at 10 a. m. At 11 a. m. Brother F. M. McDowell was the speaker. His discourse proved interesting to all present. We returned to Plano in time for Brother F. M. McDowell to preach at 8 p. m. So we think the day was well spent, even though it was one of the warmest days of the season.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Expulsion

This is to notify the Saints in general that the name of Robert Newby, a former missionary representing the church, has been stricken from the church list. This action was taken pursuant to the recommendation and findings of an elders' court, proceedings being instituted at the request of Robert Newby himself, who wished to be released from church membership.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Appointment of District President

Elder J. L. Benson having tendered his resignation as president of the Idaho District, the Presidency with the concurrence of the Quorum of Twelve has appointed Elder R. C. Chambers to fill out the unexpired term. Those concerned will please note.

Appointments and Transfers

The First Presidency and Twelve have approved the following changes:

A. H. Christensen transferred from Clinton District to Oklahoma Indian work; missionary.

P. R. Burton transferred from Nauvoo District to Nebraska Indian work; missionary.

Charles J. Smith released from Indian work and appointed to labor in Nauvoo District; missionary.

J. W. Paxton appointed to Holden Stake, Atherton objective; local.

The appointment of Otis D'Arcy has been changed from missionary to local, Southern Saskatchewan District.

John F. Sheehy transferred from Brooklyn to the Massachusetts District; missionary.

William B. Hartley transferred from Nauvoo District to the British Isles Mission; missionary.

Richard Baldwin transferred from Massachusetts District to British Isles Mission.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

The Bishopric

Idaho District: Owing to the removal from the district of Brother J. L. Benson, we have arranged with Brother Ed. Haas, Rupert, Idaho, to continue the work of Bishop's agent of that district. Solicitors in the various branches which have hitherto been reporting to Brother Benson will kindly report hereafter to Brother Haas, and scattered Saints may forward their tithes and offerings direct to him.

The Idaho District has been making a splendid showing in the last few years, which will be shown by the increase in tithes and offerings since 1914: 1914, $339.83; 1915, $890.04; 1916, $1,620.34; 1917, $1,416.20; 1918, $996.26; 1919, first six months, $889.61.

As the Lord prospers the Saints in this district, we feel confident that they will continue to support the Lord's work in even greater measure.

Brother Haas is well known to most of the Saints in the district, and we solicit for him your valiant support.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of the splendid work of Brother Benson during his term of office.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Our Departed Ones

MOORE.—Mary, wife of Thomas Moore, of Beloit, Wisconsin, was born March 28, 1888, at Blaine, Boone County, Illinois. Baptized September 14, 1913. Died July 15, at her home in Beloit as a result of burns received from an accident with a kerosene stove. Her suffering was for but a few minutes. She leaves her devoted husband and 4 small children. She was a devoted wife and mother and did what she could in church work. Prayer by William Darmon; sermon by J. O. Dutton; interment at Beloit.

HIDY.—William C. Hidy was born in Fayette County, Ohio, October 3, 1855. Came to Iowa with his parents when a baby. Baptized when sixteen. Married Caroline Hampton, December 19, 1877. To them were born 4 children, 3 of whom remain to mourn. Died April 23 at Des Moines General Hospital. Funeral at Lilly's Funeral Home, conducted by A. E. Warr.

MONROE.—Theodore M. Monroe was born at Springfield, Ohio, January 26, 1859. Died at his home at Mayville, Michigan, July 13. Married Eva Putman, January 19, 1884, who departed this life June 2, 1919. To them were born 7 children, 3 boys and 4 girls. Baptized October 23, 1903. Ordained elder, October 11, 1915. Funeral at Saints' church, in Rose City. Sermon by Elder Fisher, A. E. Burr in charge.

The Next War

There is a quite general belief that there will some day be a "next war" and that its horrors will greatly surpass those of any other, even those of the late World War.

It is easy to wax prophetic and give emphatic assent to what others are saying. And in these days of international tensivity, when the future bodes ill, we might believe almost anything said about that which is to come if we are at all inclined to do so.

Yet we must admit that one of the distinguishing features of the name of our church is "Latter Day Saints," which at least implies a fundamental belief that our day is near the end of the last dispensation, when the various calamities prophesied of by men of God in all ages shall be fulfilled.

Our ministry have consistently and persistently preached on the signs of the times, basing their conclusions on various scriptural passages, such as "In the last days perilous times shall come."—2 Timothy 1; and the justly famous twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, wherein the Master evidently foretells both the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem and the scenes at the close of time, the whole prophecy concluding in the following prophetic chapter with its account of the parable of the ten virgins, the five talents, and the description of the judgment. These are some of the passages, though there are many others of a similar nature well known to all scriptural students, portraying with much vividness the signs by which we might know that Christ was soon to come again. (Those who wish should read Joel 1: 4, 10-12; 15, 17-20; 3: 1, 2, 9, 12-14; Isaiah 29: 6; 30: 30; Jeremiah 30: 11, 16; Isaiah 8: 9; 13: 4, 6; Ezekiel 38: 1-23; Zephaniah 1: 14-18; 3: 8; Malachi 4: 1, Inspired Translation; Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25; 94: 5; 45: 4; 61: 3; 2 Nephi (Book of Mormon) 11: 116-118.)

A careful reading of the scriptural prophecies, together with a fair exercise of rational judgment, would indicate that as the world ripens in iniquity it will hasten its own destruction. In fact, it seems to us the greatest argument against the commonly accepted idea that the world will go on as it has been doing for centuries and millenniums with its repeated cycles of history is in the marvelous development of the "art" of destruction. Of this we shall speak more fully later.

Not only do men and women nowadays madly seek out new pleasures and indulge in destructive vices which hasten their individual physical and spiritual destruction, but society at large is so impregnated with selfishness that the effects of sin are becoming as a virulent cancer, eating at the vitals of our civilization.

When nations and peoples lose the ideal of common brotherhood, there is little to suppress the racial, economic, and religious antagonisms that are soon fanned into world conflagration. The Golden Rule becomes an allusion only, its true import lost deep in a riot of pleasure-seeking, business pursuits, and self-serving. From its lack we see these things degenerate into mobs, riots, lynchings, and similar eruptions on the face of society, to say nothing of criminality in its ever-increasing frequency.

In 1830 the church was given a revelation, very striking in its details, concerning the closing scenes of time, from which we quote as follows:

"... the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe . . . that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled . . . for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the host thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand. But, behold, I say unto you, that before this great day shall come, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall be turned into blood, and the stars shall fall from heaven; and there shall be greater signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath; and there shall be weeping and wailing among the hosts of men; and there shall be a great hailstorm sent forth to destroy the crops of the earth; and it shall come to pass, because of the wickedness of the world, that I will take vengeance upon the wicked, for they will not repent; for the cup of mine indignation is full; for, behold, my blood shall not cleanse them if they hear me not. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will send forth flies upon the face of the earth, which shall take hold of the inhabitants thereof, and shall eat their flesh, and shall cause maggots to come in upon them, and their tongues shall be stayed that they shall not utter against me, and their flesh shall fall from off their bones, and their eyes from their sockets; and it shall come to pass that the beasts of the forests and the fowls of the air shall devour them up; and that great and abominable church, which is the whore of all the earth, shall be cast down by devouring fire, according as it is spoken by the mouth of Ezekiel the prophet, which spoke of these things, which have not come to pass, but surely must, as I live, for abomination shall not reign."

That we may associate with this and other similar predictions the belief of men of the world who have studied the question, one of them being Hudson Maxim, whose predictions in years past concerning future military developments have been remarkably fulfilled, we offer the following from his pen, appearing in the New York Tribune. He says in part:

"In the next great war we are going to see germs of the most deadly diseases sown broadcast by airplanes. We are going to see inland cities smothered in poisonous gases and tens of thousands of inhabitants, men, women, and children, killed in a few minutes.

"Fleas and cooties, or body lice, will be infected with bubonic plague and typhus fever and other deadly ailments, and sowed by billions over the inhabitants of enemy countries. Rats and mice will be infected with bubonic plague and let down from airplanes to spread contagion. There will be no place that one may hide himself and be safe from attack. All noncombatants will be exposed to destruction, as the sinful, according to Revelation, are to be exposed on the Judgment day.

"Bombs carrying from half a ton to a ton of high explosives can now be carried by airplanes and dropped with most disastrous results, either upon or about enemy warships, and upon enemy fortifications and enemy cities.

"Warfare to-day has lost most of the old heroics of combat between man and man, with pistol and clanking sword. Present-day warfare is viperous work; it is murder, pure and simple. There is nothing glorious about it, for there can be nothing glorious in smothering with poisonous gases a city full of women and children.

"As chairman of the committee on ordnance and explosives of the naval consulting board, I had an opportunity during the war of examining more military and naval inventions than anyone ever before was called upon to examine in the same time. Among the inventions submitted was a poisonous gas which the inventor claimed would be far more deadly than anything yet produced. I have lately seen in the press announcements that we have a poisonous gas three drops of which, striking the body of a man, will result in certain death, and the vapor from one drop will surely be fatal. Possibly this is the same gas that was submitted to me. We mean by 'gas' the vapor of the poisonous substance that produces the gas or vapor.

"Mustard gas, so-called, is not a gas; it is a liquid with a boiling point higher than that of water, but dissolves in the air quite rapidly and the air impregnated with it is very deadly. Chlorine, however, is much more volatile. Chlorine is carried in cylinders in liquid form, and the instant that it is liberated it becomes gaseous, whereas mustard gas, or the liquid from which mustard gas is evolved, will remain in a liquid state for many hours. Some of the positions of the allies attacked with mustard gas by the Germans were so saturated and covered by the Germans with that material that it is said that mustard gas actually ran down the gutters of village streets.

"Is it possible that we have reached a stage of intellectual development and mechanical accomplishment that is going to be suicidal? Is it possible that the human race is going to turn all its wonderful instrumentalities of this great mechanical age to the destruction of humankind? Are the same instrumentalities which have lifted mankind out of barbarism to be employed to send him back to barbarism?

"I have often, in lectures and writings, called attention to the fact that the human race has advanced more in everything that makes for human progress during the last hundred and fifty years than it had previously advanced in all the long-drawn ages that had elapsed since man came out of the cave.

"I am sixty-eight years old, and during my lifetime have seen wrought three quarters of all the accomplishments to which man to-day owes his elevated position. In terms of human progress, I was born more than half the way back to the cave man. Is it possible that I shall live to see the work of the past century and a half undone? I expect to live another twenty years, perhaps thirty. Is it possible that I shall live to see Mars undo all that the inventor and his inventions have done in one hundred and fifty years for human betterment?

"It is time for the nations to take counsel of one another—time to make serious inquiry as to whether or not there is some better use to which we can put our science and our inventions than mutual destruction."

Then there is the late book by Will Irwin, the war correspondent, on The Next War. He saw the late World War. He once stood on a hillside overlooking the Ourcq in France and watched two American infantry divisions charge in the open in broad daylight. Yet he suggests that such an event will never happen again, for—"The final form of human strife, as I regard it, is germ warfare. I think it will come to that; and so far as I can see there is no reason why it should not. . . . We must envisage these new forms of warfare, and as far as possible expend energy, time, and money in encouraging our inventors to study the waging of war on the wholesale scale instead of . . . thinking so much about methods that will kill a few individuals at a time."—Irwin's quotation from Major General E. D. Swinton, of the British Army.

But this is the climax to the development of terrible gases that are so terrible that with one like the Lewisite gas, which was being manufactured at the time of the Armistice, "a few planes could visit New York as the central point of a territory one hundred miles square every eight days and drop enough gas to keep the entire area inundated. . . . Two hundred tons of phosgene gas could be laid every eight days and would be enough to kill every inhabitant."

In discussing this Lewisite gas that was being manufactured, but had not been used in warfare at the time of the Armistice, Mr. Irwin says:

"At the time of the Armistice we were manufacturing for the campaign of 1919 our Lewisite gas. It was invisible; it was a sinking gas which would search out the refugees of dugouts and cellars; if breathed it killed at once—and it killed not only through the lungs. Wherever it settled on the skin it produced a poison which penetrated the system and brought almost certain death. It was inimical to all cell life, animal or vegetable. Masks alone were of no use against it. Further, it had fifty-five times the spread of any poison gas hitherto used in the war. An expert has said that a dozen Lewisite bombs of the greatest size in use during 1918 might, with a favorable wind, have eliminated the population of Berlin. Possibly he exaggerated, but probably not greatly. The Armistice came; but gas research went on. Now we have more than a hint of a gas beyond Lewisite. It cannot be much more deadly; but in proportion to the amount of chemical which generates it, the spread is far greater. A mere capsule of this gas in a small grenade can generate square rods and even acres of death in the absolute."

He is speaking of the developments among American chemists. What has been done along the same line by the experts of other countries which led in this awful thing can well be surmised.

As a church and as individuals, we can wish every success for the disarmament conference being called by President Harding, at which all the great powers may discuss measures to prevent another world holocaust. None of us would seek to hasten these terrible things by furthering strife in any way, but it is evident that they cannot finally be evaded when the time is ripe. Hudson Maxim believes they might be evaded were it not for the politicians, who always dominate.

The hopeful element in it all for Latter Day Saints is that no matter how dire the calamities ahead, we have had ample time and opportunity to know of them and be prepared for them. Whether or not these men are right in their predictions about a "next war" matters not. As in all ages, God will allow the wicked to slay each other, but though some righteous persons shall lose lives and many good people will endure tribulations not brought upon themselves, his gospel shall triumph and Christ will come to establish a peace that man cannot disrupt.

E. D. MOORE.

In The Literary Digest for May 23, it is stated that at Harvard University no student will now be permitted his bachelor of arts degree until he passes an examination in the Bible. The study of the Bible is developing everywhere in our colleges and universities to a much greater extent than ever before. In some instances it is being introduced in the hope that it may tone down the tendency towards frivolity and carelessness.

Printers Wanted in Zion

The Herald Publishing House is badly in need of experienced printers in the composing room and press room. If you are an experienced linotype operator and are willing to work for from $30 to $35 per week in an open shop, please let us hear from you at once. The call is urgent. Will you respond?

Follow Thou Me

Though we may be distracted or discouraged by the conduct of men, we can safely follow Christ.

Near the close of the life of our Master here on earth, after Peter had made his own request that he might soon be with the Master, Peter, seeing the disciple that Jesus loved, asked, "What shall this man do?" and Jesus answered, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me."

The statement continues that the saying went abroad that the disciple should not die, yet Jesus said not he shall not die, but, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" (John 21: 21-23.)

The principle of this applies much further than to that one instance. We are responsible according to the gifts and calling of God unto us. There is a certain extent to which we are responsible for one another. Still, in the end we are not to be judged by what another has done, but by our own life and effort.

We can, if we listen, hear the voice of the Master, saying, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." He is the one pattern, the one example, that has been given unto us, that we may follow in his steps.

At times we see conditions among our brethren and sisters to which we object. No two people are exactly alike in their tastes. We have after all to remember that our own salvation depends on no one except ourselves. Nor do we in this question the responsibility we owe as members of the church to association or refusing to sustain the officers of the church by our votes. It is necessary that we judge, every time that we vote. It is necessary that we exercise some judgment at least when an elder's court reports, but we should judge righteous judgment and watch closely our own faults.

Some refuse to accept a position in the church because of education. The church may help a few. But most of those who receive an education must do so at their own expense and without any financial recompense thereafter, and often without the opportunity to use their special qualification. They object to the strong urge that is made on behalf of education, when they consider the effort and expense it means and that others without such preparation are remunerated as much, or more in some cases. Again, they become discouraged because of some of the foolish things that are said on behalf of education.

There certainly have been said some foolish things, so foolish that they are only exceeded by some things which have been said against proper preparation. If our aim is what we can get for ourselves, it may seem doubtful at times how far an education will pay, but if our desire is, how much can we do? what service can we render? proper preparation or education increases our possibility for giving, as it means the development of our natural talent. In education is included all that tends to preparation, as well as school work, though school work is usually the quickest and easiest way of securing the necessary preparation.

Others object because of some who fall away, but the Apostle Paul suffered also from fallen brethren, but continued also with the work intrusted to him.

Others object because they find human weakness among those to whom they have given their confidence. We are commanded to worship God, and him only. Our brethren are workers with ourselves. When we consider the mistakes we make we should be lenient with our brethren and sisters, and when we examine the intellectual objection, or the objection on account of finances, we find that a similar reply can be made. If others do not sacrifice, if others are not consecrated, our responsibility still continues, and we may rest assured that when we strive to do our part our heavenly Father will sustain, encourage, and instruct us, and help us to learn and understand.

It may be at times we do not understand the work that a brother is trying to do, but if our Master calls another to a different service, what is that to us? Our duty is to follow one only; namely, the Lord Jesus Christ. S. A. B.

Jazz Music

Jazz music persistently leads to immorality, and the saxophone is charged with being primarily a jazz instrument.

In The Staff of this week Elder Mills presents an urgent appeal to our musicians and those who would be members of a church orchestra to avoid the excessive use of the saxophone. In his letter sending this article he writes very feelingly upon the subject. He says, "I assure you the necessity for this article is very real. Everywhere I go, where there exists an orchestra in the church, I find from one to four or more of these muchly overrated instruments." One of our orchestras actually consists of seven saxophones, with only three other instruments, including the piano.

Elder Mills refers to it as an instrument of jazz music. Elsewhere we have seen it referred to as the instrument of red colorature or of passion in music. Jazz has its origin among the voodooes of Africa. It is used to work up the hearers to indulgence in orgy. Some writers declare that has been the only use of jazz, that it has been proven that it has not under any circumstances an exalting effect, but invariably arouses the basest passion and throws its force in the end towards immorality. One writer goes so far as to say, if there is one thing that is musically universally bad, so as to be positively and continually immoral, it is jazz. Jazz is the syncopation of melody and harmony. It should be distinguished from the syncopation of rhythm which occurs in Slovak music, and which is often to be found among oppressed people.

It may be amusing for a change to watch the mechanical dexterity which is attained by some musicians on a single instrument. We recall hearing Les Miserables played on a mandolin. It was a wonderful performance as an instance of manual dexterity, because he succeeded in playing two and three note chords. But from the point of view of real music, it was travesty to anyone who had heard a good orchestra render that masterpiece.

Yet, according to Elder Mills, the mandolin is in quite a different class from the saxophone, for the mandolin is cheerful in tone. It is true that it is thin in colorature and tone quality, but it certainly is not the instrument of jazz, even though it, along with other instruments, may be degenerated for that purpose. But the true lovers of music will never run to the extreme in the use of instruments of such limited variety of tone quality, though they may properly utilize such instruments, when well balanced with either orchestra or band instruments of fuller tone quality.

Our interest in the question is not alone from the standpoint of music, though that is important, for good music is the most joyful of all sounds and the most fit instrument for the praise of the Lord. But our interest is deeper than that, as the moral question is involved.

Instruments of jazz react directly on the nervous functions and have a tendency towards immorality, which at times becomes very marked. It may be seriously questioned if the public demand for jazz is nearly as well established as some have thought.

Doubtless the saxophone properly used, along with other instruments in sufficient number, will add a pleasing touch. It may provide a pleasing change, though we note that Brother Mills states that parts for the saxophone are not being written. Jazz music has no right place anywhere, and especially not in a church orchestra.

The Constitution of Missouri

Missouri voters have given assent to the formation of a new constitution.

The constitution of Missouri has been a subject for intense discussion for many years past. There are certain clauses in it which appear to limit progressive social work. We have known of men meeting to discuss an essential problem of great importance and spending from a day to a week trying to solve a difficulty, which originates in the constitution of 1875, the one still in force in Missouri.

Tuesday, August 2, was an election day in Missouri to vote for a constitutional convention to revise or rewrite the constitution in the light of present industrial and social problems. Yet the vote was surprisingly light. In Jackson County there was only about one sixth or one seventh of the vote cast at the general election last fall.

We regret to say that the Herald Office force, those who came from Lamoni, could not vote; as they had voted in Iowa last fall and had not resided in Missouri for a sufficient period of time. But all those who have resided in Missouri for one year and in their present precinct for sixty days could do so.

We may talk at great length about the need of political reform and better government, but this is without value unless we vote, and the question submitted to this election particularly the question of a constitutional convention, was of far more real importance for the citizens of Missouri than has been the case with any recent election, for the constitution provides the fundamental law of the whole State.

It is not our place to take sides on political questions, but so fundamental a question as this rises above partisanship and is of so great importance that it deserves the attention of every citizen. If Missouri is unprogressive for the next ten years, the responsibility will rest with those who did not vote. Even those whose business required their absence from the State are left without excuse under the absentee voters law.

As persons interested in good government, as citizens of the United States, and especially those who are citizens of Missouri, we should watch closely the development of this measure. Fortunately, it appears to have carried, even though the vote was so very light throughout the State.

The next step will be the election of delegates to the constitutional convention, and then the work of that convention. Finally the new constitution will be submitted to popular vote.

We should be quick to see in the interest of good government, that honest men and wise men are sought for diligently. Good men and wise men should be upheld.

"Saints' Herald" Files

When the Herald Office removed to Independence, all HERALDS on hand prior to January 1, 1920, we turned over to the Church Historian to enable him to prepare complete files of the HERALD where needed for church work. All of the extra copies in the office, bound and unbound, were also turned over to him. It is useless to send us requests for HERALDS prior to 1920 as we have no copies available. The Historian's office may have some extra copies in excess of those needed for completing volumes.

Any requests for back numbers of the HERALD should be addressed Historian's Office, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Subjects Being Discussed

Church News

At the Sunday morning sacrament service at the Stone Church, Independence, Sister W. S. Pender was blessed under the hands of Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith and Apostle J. F. Curtis, for her mission to the Isle of Pines. She and Brother Pender had labored in the Southwest of the United States, where he died while at the post of duty for the cause of the Master. They both of them became fluent in the Spanish language. Sister Pender has been asked to go to the Isle of Pines to conduct classes for children and do other work as her time and strength permit.

This week Doctor G. L. Harrington, church physician, and Miss Laura Mann, superintendent of nurses at the Sanitarium, leave Independence to attend five reunions in the interests of the Health Department. They will deliver lectures at each place and hold clinics for medical examinations. They will have with them a stereopticon machine and slides to illustrate lectures. Their itinerary provides for two days each at the reunions in Northeastern Kansas, Eastern Iowa, Des Moines, Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, and Far West.

Estella Wight, editor of Stepping Stones and Zion's Hope, went to Lamoni, Iowa, the 5th, to attend the reunion of that stake.

A post card from Bishop B. R. McGuire informs us that about forty from the reunion camp at Onset, Massachusetts, visited Plymouth and attended the pageant, which proved a thrilling event. He reports splendid meetings at Onset, with thirteen baptized on the 31st, and delightful weather. The camp saluted President Harding as he sailed by Cape Cod Canal Monday morning, as Onset is but a short distance from the canal.

Elder McKiernan's Picture in Wrong Place

Several weeks ago there appeared in the Des Moines Register, a picture of our worthy brother, Elder James McKiernan, as one of the few thirty-third degree Masons in Iowa. Under the picture was written the name of C. B. Jones, of Farmington, Iowa.

We wrote to Elder McKiernan at once, and in return, learn that he was selected by the board of the American Legion and G. A. R. to deliver a memorial address, May 30. As a result there was a write-up of his address by the local correspondent, who requested his photograph.

At the same time the Des Moines paper had requested the photograph of Mr. Jones, who is a high degree Mason. The pictures were sent together and, although marked, were mixed in publication. In other words, it was simply a mistake and Elder James McKiernan pleads not guilty. He also writes very highly of Mr. Jones, who is a neighbor and friend.

Far West Lost a Good Man

The Saints of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and of the Far West Stake have been made sad by the passing of Elder George W. Best. Brother Best has been a power for good in Saint Joseph for many years, and his absence will be sorely felt. The Far West Stake conference, held at Saint Joseph, Missouri, March 12, 1921, adopted some resolutions of respect at length, setting forth his virtues as an elder, and as a member of the Far West Stake high council, as well as a member of the church and a man.

Elder R. C. Chambers reports from Rupert, Idaho, that he has recently baptized three.

Chocking the Log

By E. G. Hammond

Synopsis of sermon at Cleveland, Ohio, February 13, 1921, urging that we retain the essentials of our faith.

I have read a few verses from the seventh chapter of Acts, and our text will be the fifty-third verse, the words Stephen spoke to the Jews as to those—"Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it."

In connection with this it will be well for us to keep in mind the inquiry of Jesus as to whether, when the Son of man shall come, he shall find faith on the earth.

Dear friends, I am glad to be here this morning, and my heart is happy as I stand before you, for, although I am a stranger, I feel welcome among you.

I hope you will not require an oration this morning, but that you will be contented if I shall just talk, and continue in the same quiet spirit manifested in the exercises before this service began.

There is something fine among you here, I can assure you; and as I sat observing the play of intellect on the discussions in the classes, there was occasion to notice that "the teacher is no better than the learner," which seems a beautiful thought to dwell upon as we reflect that our Great Teacher has admonished us to be equal.

We often emphasize the importance of equality in temporal things, and we hope we shall become willing to be equal also in spiritual things, and in intellectual things, and in all things.

But as I sat apart, giving attention to the discussions, I suddenly realized that in a few minutes it would be necessary for me to stand up and speak to these same people, and the thought was attended with a little pain; such pain, perhaps, as only preachers know. For I wondered what one who is little more than an amateur could teach to those who are so old in learning. However, as the anxiety deepened, in the kind mercies of Heaven there came to my mind some thoughts we shall try to use.

While I was yet a very small boy, small as these boys here, we lived among the hills of West Virginia, and had to cut the trees from the clearing, draw them to the edge of the field, and roll them in piles out of the way of plows and harrows and instruments of husbandry.

Chocking the Log

It was necessary for each one to work in those days, including the children. And you might wonder what one of my size, the size of this boy here, could do at a log-rolling where strong, heavy men were employed: daddy, and the hired men, and a big brother. They could break the strongest handspikes, and the cant hook handles snapped, and burst into splinters in their hands. What could a boy do in such a place?

Well, when men are rolling logs and have turned them just so far, they must get a new hold. If they let loose to do so, the log will roll back, and they'll lose what they've gained. But a boy with a chock can avoid all of that, and can hold the log just where you want it.

Now the importance of something similar to this in our efforts as Saints will appear, I believe, if we notice the work of those engaged in former days as we are now. The Jews, you know, failed to chock the log. They lifted, and put forward their work with great show of power. Pleased with their labors, Jehovah talked with them face to face, parted the sea out of their path, scattered their enemies before them, and when they were poor and had little to eat, he sent supplies from heaven, so that men enjoyed the taste of angel's food. But, after all this, they failed to chock, they failed to make their gains secure, and Stephen told them, ye have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it.

To keep is the hard thing, as we shall see. As Wordsworth says,

"'Tis difficult, yea, it is a thing impossible to keep the heights the soul is competent to gain."

There's where our trouble lies; the angels, even, we have been told, "kept not their first estate," and were cast down.

We excuse not ourselves by their failure; and, in fact, many did not fall; but we mention these to show what difficulty there is in keeping those conditions we prefer.

Keeping the Stream Pure

A stream at its source is pure. But it will not have gone far in its way till other streams flow into it and there discharge the dregs of baser soils, and it is spoiled. It cannot keep pure.

A gentleman recently told me of what they call The Sinks in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, where, in the top of the mountain are great fissures, whence issues an incalculable supply of pure water, clear as crystal. He says it is so pure and clear that you may see objects through it to a great depth. And, as though the Creator planned a huge irrigating system, it forms in a goodly sized lake on the top of the mountain, and from thence it flows out to the sea in four or five different courses, watering widely separated regions. Some goes out by the Tygart's Valley River, some through other valleys; and I believe he said some down through the Little Kanawha.

This was the more interesting to me because I had played on the banks of this stream, and had fished in the depths of its waters. But I had to think of how muddy and thick they were, by the time they flowed past our place. Having such a pure source as he gave them, they did not keep their purity.

This difficulty of keeping things pure in the earth dates from the time that individual was cast into it and the cry went forth, "Woe, woe to the inhabitants of the earth, for Satan is cast down among you." And perhaps the best examples of it are to be found in the case of the farmer, "Whose God doth ever instruct him to discretion."

Pure Seed

Being so instructed, of course, the farmer knows the importance of starting with pure seed; and having obtained it, he selects a good piece of ground, clears, fences, prepares it well, and plants his seed, government-tested and certified pure.

We will suppose he plants corn, the purest white. His hopes are high, as he works away, and the neighbors watch anxiously, perhaps jealously, till a marvelous crop is harvested, the wonder of the neighborhood. How white it is!

He gets a harvest or two; but across the field a little way, his neighbor also, who is not so particular about purity in seed, is raising corn, an old-established strain; and after a few seasons gathering from his pure white variety, one day the soft breezes of summer shake off a little pollen from the tassel of his neighbor's plant, it sifts through the air, the merest speck lights on the silken shoots of his pure white, and that fall you notice a yellow grain here and there.

Next year it is still more contaminated, from this and other sources, and waxes worse and worse each year till his bin no longer shows clean white, but a medley of color, a spotted variety, a veritable "Bloody-Butcher," as they call it.

He did not keep it pure.

The clover crop gives an illustration embodying principles we shall need, and we will suppose that you try a crop of this. You get the best seed, warranted free from buckhorn and dodder, make costly preparation, sow, and for a year or two you harvest the cleanest and most excellent hay. How fine it is!

But one day a swollen stream carries a stalk or two from your neighbor's swath, lodges it against a willow at the edge of your clean field, and next spring you are astonished with the poison yellow of the dodder vine inserting itself in outermost clusters of the patch. You uproot it, but thereby you ascertain that it thrives very well without roots, and draws strength from the plants. Strive as you will, in a year or two it takes the field, notwithstanding how pure at the beginning, and lest the whole farm become infested, that one field is plowed up and destroyed.

However, you cannot go out of business merely because you have lost one field, so you straightway obtain a fresh quantity of clean seed from the seed house, and sow it again—in the same field.

Well, no, not if you have any discretion at all you won't, but you'll let the hogs run in the old field, and the briars and weeds have it, select a new patch where there's no trace of dodder, and begin all new.

Now the point we are driving at is that, as with the streams of the earth and the crops of the fields, so is it impossible to keep doctrine pure.

Doctor Holmes knew this very well, and he said,
 "Keep any line of knowledge ten years, and some other line will intersect it."

You cannot keep it pure.

Corrupted Doctrines

That there has been a similar pernicious creeping in of impurities and evil doctrine into the work of Jehovah himself in the earth, is shown by the fifth chapter of Isaiah where he says:

"I will sing to my well beloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My well beloved had a vineyard in a very fruitful hill; and he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine . . . and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. . . . What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it? And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard; I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and I will break down the wall thereof and it shall be trodden down; and I will lay it waste; it shall not be pruned nor digged, but there shall come up briars and thorns."

You see how that field of the Lord, though planted with the "choicest vine," became so corrupted it had to be destroyed. That choicest vine did not continue to be choice.

But Jehovah did not go out of business because one field had been spoiled. In due time he sent a fresh lot of clean seed to sow by his Son, and when he came and began sowing it without regard to former sowings, the stewards of his Father that had charge of his corrupted fields complained of him, that he did not go into business with them, and sow in their fields, seeing "We keep the whole law."

But Jesus answered them saying, No man soweth clean seed in an infested field.

No, these were not the exact words he used, but to the same effect he did say,

"No man putteth a piece of new cloth on an old garment, lest the rent be made worse."

He had better judgment than to intrust pure doctrine to a corrupted organization, a corrupted church, even though that church was of his own planting, and its beginning pure. Its rejection came because it did not continue pure.

They would not admit, however, that they had become corrupt, and when Jeremiah told them so, they opposed him, and devised devices against him, trying to assure themselves that "the law shall not depart from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet." (Jeremiah 18: 18.)

But Jesus rejected them, and sowed his clean seed in a new field.

Now, over this new field which Jesus sowed in person, the world makes the same awful blunder as over all those before it, by supposing that no evil could ever get into his field, and that it could never become corrupt.

However, Jesus knew better, and of the church he organized he said:

"The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man that sowed good seed in his field; but while he slept his enemy came, and sowed tares among the wheat."—Matthew 13: 24, 25.

He knew that evil ideas would be worked right in among his pure doctrinal principles, and he warned the world that ever since the time John began to preach them before him the kingdom of heaven had suffered violence, and the violent would take it. Tares, weeds, false principles got in. Paul noticed them in his day, and he said, "The mystery of iniquity doth already work." (2 Thessalonians 2: 3, 7.) Peter told the church there should be false teachers among them that would bring in damnable heresies. (2 Peter 2: 1, 3.)

The field Jesus himself planted, then, was to become corrupt; it did not keep pure, but became contaminated. And what then? Shall the Creator of all the earth nourish a foul field and market wild grapes because they happen to be found growing in his own field? Nay, but as of old, he will tear down the hedge, and break down the walls, and give it over to briars and thorns and poisonous vines and weeds.

Then after all this, after the church he himself planted has become corrupt and been rejected, will he go out of business in the earth? And again we say unto you nay, but he will obtain a fresh quantity from the storehouse above, and as before will send it to the earth by the disposition of angels, as our text says he did before Jesus' time, even as John, when he was viewing the things that should occur after his day saw it coming, and he said:

"I saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation."—Revelation 14: 6.

Yes, John saw that as of old it would come in the hands of an angel, and as of old you may be assured that it will not be sown in an infested field, but begun in a new.

Now this was the beginning of this very church we are laboring to establish; and after all this we again voice the inquiry, "When the Son of man shall come, shall he find faith on the earth?" Shall we be able to keep pure what has been given, or shall we cross it with improvements and allow new lines of strange doctrine to intersect?

Well, it would seem like a wonderful thing indeed if this church should escape having a little of the same difficulty that has injured the work of the Lord in all ages; and so, in Doctrine and Covenants 50: 2 we find him saying: "Behold, I have seen abominations in the church that professes my name."

Yes, they got in there; and as you notice weeds springing forth in most fertile spots of the ground, so doth iniquity often find root in high circles. Jesus chose twelve, and one became a devil. So in this church the adversary found an agent in Brigham Young, of the Twelve, who drew away a great following to the acceptance of evil principles, leaving the church almost a wreck, indeed.

But "gleaning grapes were left in it," we are glad to reflect, "as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outermost fruitful branches thereof," and these that were left united their forces in the Reorganization. The corruption that got in formed into a body and went out, leaving sound principles behind, so that we who are left are still the custodians of the pure word and doctrine, and the question for us to consider with solemnity is whether we shall keep it pure, and be able to keep our trust as a church.

Will Faith Be Found on Earth?

I believe when Jesus was here he knew this church would be organized, and he seemed to question whether it would not go the way of all the rest, when he inquired whether he should find faith here on his return.

We believe this is the only church with which heaven is well pleased, the only one that has authority to administer the word. I believe this with all my heart. But if false principles do not creep in here and there, and if false teachers do not arise right among us, it will be something different from all that has ever happened in what is now a fairly old world.

It seems to me I have noticed the mystery of iniquity working in the disposition of so many of our people, to modernize the word of the Lord so as to have it harmonize with the wisdom of this world.

Recently I heard an elder whom we all love and trust where he is known, explaining with emphasis from the stand, that faith to the amount of a mustard grain could not move a mountain in reality, but that it was a developing principle, and that that seed would so develop (I suppose he wished me to believe it would become a bushel, or a million bushels), and then!

Well, when a grain becomes a bushel it is no longer a grain, and I believe it will do the work before it even sprouts. I believe Jesus meant what he said, and that we do not have to excuse him to the world with the suggestion that he meant mountains of sin, but that he meant real earth, with rocks in it; and that he did not mean we should cause them to work down through ages by erosion and abrasion, but that we could speak the word and it would be so!

Like as before the little faith that Moses had, "the sea saw it and fled," not by a slow process of evaporation, but at once, and stood up like a wall. "The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs. The rock turned into standing water, the flint into fountains of waters." (Psalms 114.)

Wonder how many Latter Day Saints believe these things are literally true.

God is a God of miracles, saith Isaiah (29th chapter), and to me it seems a bit dangerous to have our opinions of him bound by indenture to harmonize with all the theories of a world that knows him not.

How often have I heard my excellent brethren explain that God never does anything in a hurry, and cite an oak tree as an example of his miracle working power, that it takes a hundred years to produce.

Too Much Explaining Away?

The same argument makes out the six days of the creation to be long periods of time, in order that there might be time enough for God to create great forests, and bury them in the earth that we might have coal. The same argument makes it necessary when Jesus desired to feed the multitude and had only five loaves and a few fishes, that he first sow some wheat, develop it into high straw that blooms and bears grain, then harvest it, thresh it, mill it, mix it into dough, and bake it in a pan before the multitude could eat. So also must the fishes first be pinheads in a pool, go through all that developing business to become big fish, then some one must dig bait, catch them, and cook, all this before the multitude could eat.

Well, my faith is different.

No wonder Jesus questioned whether he should find faith on the earth; and you need not be surprised if the mysteries of iniquity work right among the people that profess his name.

Well, what shall we do, then? And with the answer to this we shall hope to chock the log.

What shall we do when we are convinced that these corrupting powers may get in and work right among us?

Why, this is what ye shall do, ye shall remember, "Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

Consider then, what you would do if you were the member of a fleshly body, and that body would get something wrong with it, whether you would cut yourself off in order to avoid partaking of the disease. If you were a foot, and the back became afflicted so its weakness would reflect in you, you would scarcely cut off yourself to avoid the embarrassment. If you were an arm, and the heart had poison blood in it, and you knew that that poison must flow out to you and through your veins, you would scarcely sever yourself to be free from contaminating influences, for the arm could not live at all when cut off.

And again, if you were a hand, and the head should go wrong, causing you to partake of things you did not approve, still you would not sever yourself to be rid of the error, for the hand cannot live when it is severed; and the only sensible thing is to prop up that dizzy head, and put ointment on it, and present nostrums, hoping it some time will come well again, and abide in the body.

Abide in the Body

Our chock is, therefore, our only hope of life that I can see, to abide in the body. Be fixed to that purpose. Be established in that determination. And when you are so fixed and established there is glad tidings for you, to calm your distresses, in this, that the Great Physician, if he sees it needful, knows how, skillfully, to adjust that spine and relieve its palsy. He knows how to rowel the head as a vent for the froth of worldly-mindedness; how to tap the heart and draw out its impurities, and drain every such thing away from the body. And these things he has promised us firmly to do, saying that before the coming of the Son of Man he "shall send forth his angels and the messengers of heaven, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity."—Matthew 13:41.

Well, I desire for myself to be of those who are left in when the impurities are drawn out, and all wickedness is put away, for I know of no other society, either in heaven or in earth, that has even the promise of being so cleaned up and purified, none other than the kingdom, the church, the body of Christ.

Wherefore we shall abide in the body. Our firm purpose to do so will be our security, our stay, our chock, if you will. And if you think fit that the burden of your anxieties settle to this stay, then I bid you to take a new hold, and to lift as you have not done before.

May He who enlightens us give us more light, and help us to keep what he gives.

The Solution of Women and Farm Problems

Synopsis of lecture by Charles E. Irwin, Professor of Economics at Graceland College, delivered at Women's Department Institute, May 19, 1921.

I feel that I ought to congratulate the Women's Department; I suppose everyone who has spoken for you has felt about the same way. I therefore take this privilege of congratulating you on the success that has so far attended your services. You can do the things which perhaps no other group would dare attempt to do.

But I come to you to-night with a message of the farmer, the farmer's wife, the farmer's son, the farmer's daughter. I presume I come to you with this kind of a message very largely because I was reared in a farm home. I was a farmer's son, and perhaps my earliest recollections are things which come to me as I recall the times I walked over the old cow path in those cold mornings in the fall when I had to walk first on one side of my foot then on the other side, to keep the middles warm. There are, however, far more unpleasant things, connected with rural life, and the stories I have to tell you to-night are not pretty play stories.

I am not presuming to discuss this problem specifically from a woman's viewpoint. I have tried the best I could to do what Sister Anderson said she wanted me to do; but I cannot divorce the women's problems specifically from the problems of the men, of the boys, of the girls. So my theme to-night will be much broader, as I shall try to discuss the thing as I see it, though not especially as a woman's problem.

The time has come when we are facing the necessity for intelligent cooperation, the united effort of both the men and the women—the boy and his father, the girl and her mother. It is a partnership affair. So the time has come when we shall be required to put aside our pink teas and our stag parties, and attack the problem from a conscientious point of view in the hope that some solution will be forthcoming. We must eliminate functionless organizations, and put our energies in the things which make for accomplishment. Our present position, therefore, is serious, exceedingly serious.

Many Have Lived on Farms

I wonder how many women in this audience are women from the farm. May I ask you to favor me with a show of hands? Does that mean that you are now living on the farm? Some of you indicate that you are not. There is the point, exactly. What, then, is your interest? Some of you who are living on the farm are interested as farm women. Some of you are interested because it stirs up pleasant or unpleasant memories, and some of you who have never been on the farm are probably interested in it from the point of view of an "investigator."

Of course there are disadvantages of rural life, just as there are disadvantages of our urban life. There is isolation, for instance. Three days ago, I had occasion to go out in the country adjacent to Lamoni and I visited a typical farm home, three miles from a small town of perhaps five hundred. For the first half mile, the roads were quite passable; farther out than that, they were little more than cow paths. That house was built on a plot of ground between two swamps—just room enough to drive between them. That yard has, once upon a time, had a fence of two wires around it. In most places, the wires were down and it was part of a pasture. The house had not been painted for twenty-five years. There were no screens on the doors. Now, that is a sample of a typical farm home, much as we may be ashamed to admit the fact.

Then there is illiteracy to be found in the rural districts.

That is too weighty a subject to be discussed here, but how many of you have visited the rural school? If you have, you know something of the nature of that institution. It is usually a one-room structure twenty feet wide and thirty feet long, with a few seats which are usable. Usually the teacher who holds forth there is a young, immature, high school girl, who is getting experience with the idea that she is going to leave there just as soon as she can.

There is the matter of health. It is, of course, the "delight" of every doctor to have to drive four or six or ten miles across the country, especially in the winter months, over that kind of roads. So, there you have it. All of these things are staring us in the face. They are disadvantages which we would not know if we lived in the city.

This organization, this church of which we are members, encourages us in the custom that we call each other brothers and sisters. In riding across the country, a friend of mine said: "Oh, how I would hate to live in a place like that!"

The Farm Is Fundamental

But we must not forget that they are human beings just the same as we, and furthermore, we depend upon them very largely for the good things we enjoy. The farm is fundamental. All progress in this country or in any country actually dates from the beginning of their agricultural industries. It precedes manufacturing. You would not think of capitalizing a $100,000 corporation for the manufacture of products if it were not for the fact that there was in view a source of supply for raw materials.

In 1919, we produced 640,000,000 bushels of wheat; 2,900,000,000 bushels of corn—more than all the rest of the world put together; 12,000,000 bales of cotton. In 1918 we had 165,000,000 head of live stock on our farms. And yet, in spite of these things, in spite of the fact that we say agriculture is fundamental, basic, we are inclined to poke fun at the farmer and minimize his importance. We are coming to realize that we are depending not upon the industrial mills for our cotton goods, but we are depending upon the cotton producer of the South. The bread we eat makes us obligated to the farmer of the North and his wheat. For the corn from which our live stock is produced we are dependent upon the farmer. All these emphasize the fundamental aspect of our problem.

Problem of Marketing

What are some of the problems? First, the market problem. Sam went to his grocer and wanted an extension of credit. The grocer said, "Sam, what happened to your cotton crop?" And Sam answered: "De ducks got it, sah." "The ducks got your cotton crop—how could that be?" "Well, sah, I sent my cotton down there to market, and dey deducts for shortage in weight, and dey deducts for weed seed, and dey deducts for commission and for freight. Yes, sah, deducts got de whole blame shootin' match!"

Too many deducts; too many intermediate steps through which the crops must pass. And to make bad matters worse, the consumer has had it in his head all the time that the farmer was the robber. And when the farmer declined the invitation to unite with the laboring man, the laboring man turned around with: "You profiteer." So the farmer has had to be subjected to indignities both going and coming.

In the agricultural yearbook for Missouri are some startling facts. The consumer thinks that sixty cents a pound is a high price to pay the farmer for wool, but he does not understand that a suit of clothes costs as much as the farmer got for one hundred pounds of raw material. And it is not worth more than half that now. You are paying fifty to sixty dollars for raw wool worth $2.50. The cost of wheat has increased four hundred per cent from the time it leaves the farmers' hands until it reaches your table. There are two goats—the producer and the consumer. A piece of calf-skin made into shoes sells for more than the farmer got for the calf alive.

Some of these things, if they do nothing else, ought to serve to open our eyes to the problem before us. These people who live in the rural communities are, and of necessity must be, the backbone of our Zionitic program, because they are the producers of the raw material. It may be that because this is so common to us, we may refuse to think about it.

But we might be able to do something. In other words, I am quite sure that unless this Zionitic program does do something, we shall fail miserably. It is a condition which needs changing.

That is not the most important problem; but perhaps it is one of them. Take the problem of farm credit, for instance. About sixty per cent of the farmers of this country are not land owners—they are tenants. That tenant would be a land owner if he could. And the man who says the farmer does not work hard is misinformed. The tenant farmer is a hard worker, and if there are any of them here, I think they will bear me out in that statement. One reason we have the problem of absentee landlordism is because we do not have an elastic credit system.

We are very fond of lambasting our friends of North Dakota because, we say, they have adopted the bolshevik program; but they still have some things that they could teach us. No worthy tenant farmer in the State of North Dakota need quit if he does not want to. The State has placed at his disposal a credit machinery which will make him a land owner if he desires to be one. Contentment, efficiency, and happiness go with ownership; and the moment you detach the farmer from his soil, he ceases at that minute to become an interested, efficient producer and citizen.

Then there is the problem of farm parents in relation to farm boys and farm girls. We have been asking the question for a long time, Why does the boy and the girl leave the farm? It is an actual fact—our farm population is constantly on the decrease; the movement is away from the soil towards the centers of population. This is the way we have it summed up in the 1919 yearbook for Missouri:

“Why did you leave the farm, my lad?
Why did you bolt and leave your dad?
Why did you beat it off to town,
And turn your poor old father down?
Thinkers of platform, pulpit, and press
Are wallowing in deep distress;
They seek to know the hidden cause
Why farmer boys desert their pa's.
Some say they long to get a taste
Of faster life and social waste;
And some will say the silly chumps
Mistake their suit cards for their trumps
In waging fresh and germless air
Against a smoky thoroughfare.
We're all agreed the farm's the place,
So free your mind and state your case.”

“Well, stranger, since you've been so frank,
I'll roll aside my hazy bank,
The misty cloud of theories,
And tell you where the trouble lies:
I left my dad, his farm, his plow,
Because my calf became his cow;
I left my dad—'twas wrong, of course—
Because my colt became his horse;
I left my dad to sow and reap
Because my lamb became his sheep;
I dropped my hoe and stuck my fork
Because my pig became his pork.
The garden truck that I made grow

Was his to sell, but mine to hoe.
It's not the smoke in the atmosphere
Nor the taste for life that brought me here:
Please tell the platform, pulpit, press,
No fear of toil nor love of dress
Is driving off the farmer lads;
But just the methods of their dads.”

That, I am afraid, is too true. We have not yet learned to appreciate the psychology of youth on the farm. He likes to be a manager, an enterpriser. Give him that opportunity and that responsibility and in the majority of cases he will stick.

Rural Schools a Failure

But the most important problem of all, it seems to me, is the problem of our rural schools. To make the matter to the point, and as brief as I can, it seems to me that the trouble with our schools in the country is that the development which they have had has been towards the city instead of towards the farm. We have urbanized our rural schools. The kind of arithmetic we have in our schools has tended to teach the boy to think in terms of ledger balances and yards of cloth; not in terms of bushels of corn. The English we teach is the kind of English we expect to use when we go to the city. To the teacher in the rural school the great land of opportunity lies yonder in the city, rather than here in the country. We tell the boy and the girl that they have a future if they go to the city, the implication being that they shall be able to do nothing worth while if they remain on the farm. The whole trend of our educational program has been to take the boy's mind away from the farm to the city.

The rural school could and should be made a social center about which would center all the interesting activities of the community. We are just beginning now on our Zionitic program. At least we say we are. The time to be interested, to be alive to the issues of the day, is now. If we learn the lesson now, we will not have to be humiliated later on. There are two types of people—wise and otherwise. These two people have this experience. Those people who are otherwise do not learn the lesson with the first bump—they have to be pulverized before they learn it. Let us not be otherwise. Let us learn the lessons as we go along. The issue is coming.

More than three million farmers have registered in the American Farm Bureau Federation, and they are becoming acquainted with the fact that they have power. No one group in this United States or in any other country can wield such a tremendous weapon as these three million men if they chose to do it.

Other Organizations Succeeding

Understand the fact of interdependence between us—between you and the other fellow. Let us feel that we are a part of one great whole. Failing to do that, we will of course be a very miserable failure. The Farmers' Union and Equity has been doing and will do a wonderful work in this direction. We can do equally as well. And if all of us have faith strong enough so that we will be willing to make the trial, and having tested it out in our laboratory, we shall be able to discern the right from the wrong, and casting aside these functionless organizations, let us organize and build one which will function and achieve. This should be one of the objectives of the Women's Department.

I would suggest that the Women's Department organize a rural life bureau in connection with the work of our agricultural commission, that the two of us may join hands in this affair. Your farm women, those living in the rural districts, ought to be encouraged, ought to be working along with you. The representative of the church must be able to speak in the language of those whom he or she seeks to serve.

ANTI-PROHIBITION PARADE

The anti-prohibitionists claimed that in New York on the Fourth of July 250,000 marchers would be in line. But in fact the Anti-Saloon League had an official count made and there were just 14,922, including twenty-four policemen and nine hundred and twenty-two bandmen. This represents only about one quarter of one per cent of the inhabitants of New York City, though an effort was made also in the surrounding territory, as New York City and surrounding territory was closely organized into wards and districts in an effort to get out people for a monstrous parade.

From the New York City papers it would appear that at least eighty per cent of those in line were middle-aged or older, and eighty to ninety per cent were of foreign birth. There was but little enthusiasm, except in the case of those who had managed to secure too much of intoxicants. The claim was made that the heat prevented many from marching, but over 50,000 lined up in a parade on behalf of Ireland.

Another "wet" parade attempted in Baltimore registered 375 in line.

It would appear from this that there is no overwhelming demand against prohibition. Still those who are opposed are organized and will make an energetic effort to secure the election of favored candidates as executive officers. In the New York parade there were fifty-five ex-soldiers on foot and three in an automobile. It had been announced that ten thousand women would be in line. There were less than two hundred. But with only about one quarter of one per cent in line, New York City is represented "wet," in the United States Congress. To make the law effective men must be elected who will enforce it.

Every branch, especially in the cities, must fight the tendency of the season, to ease up in activity because of the hot weather. While we must recognize the natural lack of energy resulting from extreme heat during the summer months, we must also avoid the establishment of a habit which easily degenerates into an avoidance of all responsibility when the weather is warm. The necessary demoralization resulting from vacations and travel trips should be counteracted by special attention to the possibilities of outdoor social times, which are sources of inspiration alike to young and old. Preaching can be held outdoors, and Religio classes have been known to greatly increase in interest and attendance when thus taken close to the heart of nature. The more recognition we give to the hot-weather let-down, the more insidious it will become in our ranks.

The farmer should be able to see God in his field, in his harvest. He should be able to see God when he measures the proper amount of fertilizer to adjust his soil to the type of crop he wishes to bring forth. He should be able to serve God in building up his registered herds and in the bounty of his harvest.

So far as I know, this question has not been discussed throughout the church. I hope that it will be. I hope that it will spread from you to others. What I am particularly concerned about is that your literature shall find its way to the farm home; that the Women's Department will find its way to the farm home. But you must go with a spirit of understanding, with a spirit of helpfulness, that the work you do will redound to the honor and glory of God, to the building up of Zion here and now.

Our Eternal Shepherd

By John R. Gibbs

Jesus, our Eternal Shepherd,
Guide us always with thy rod,
Keep us in thy fold forever,
Holy, holy Son of God.
Feed us in thy richest pasture
That forever groweth green;
Let us drink that living water
Which shall from thy presence stream.

We will follow thee forever,
Wheresoever thou shalt lead;
Thy strong arm is always able
To supply our every need.
Keep us safe from every danger,
Lead us forward with thy rod,
Till we end our earthly journey;
Holy, holy Son of God.

Thou alone shalt be our leader,
Thou canst all our wants supply;
From thy fold we'll part, no never,
Till the dawn of thy great day.
Lead us onward, onward, onward,
Guide us safely with thy rod,
Till we join that host in heaven;
Holy, holy Son of God.

Lonesome

By Hattie Hughes

I once spent pleasant Sundays
In worship, prayer, and praise;
But, oh, how blessings vanish
When we at home have stayed!

They're all at camp reunion,
Enjoying Spirit's power,
Where blessings flow more freely,
Than e'er was known before.

I never once imagined
That days could be so long,
When separate from service
Of prayer and praise and song.

But this I know most truly,
That next time I will go
With them to camp reunion,
Where blessings freely flow.

I'll not stay home complaining
Until I get the blues,
But I'll go right 'long with them
To hear the joyful news.

I hope the Lord forgives me;
I know he's good and kind;
I pray he'll send his Spirit
To those who're left behind.

Near to My Side

By Pearl Stoddard

Tune: "Nearer, my God, to thee."

Near to my side he walked
 All through the night;
 Beat back the power of death,
 Gave me the light;
 But when the morn appeared,
 All evil I had feared,
 Vanished as mist away—
 Vanished away.

Then with the trial o'er,
 Feeling secure,
 I took my journey on,
 Thought to endure;
 Careless as days passed by,
 And as the moments fly,
 I walked by sight alone—
 Walked quite alone.

Then as I journeyed on
 The flower-strewn way,
 Seeming to be the path
 To endless day;
 But as the morn advanced
 The pathway led, it chanced,
 Where snares and pitfalls lay—
 Where pitfalls lay.

Darkness descended then
 Over the way;
 In fear I cried again,
 Oh, come to me;
 Though I have strayed afar,
 Lend now thy guiding star,
 In mercy hear my prayer—
 Oh, hear my prayer.

My Supplication

By Emma Erwin

Out of thy treasure house, oh, give me, Lord,
 Sweet-toned and fitting words to praise thy name;
 And give me reverence for thy holy word,
 And boundless faith in Him who earthward came.

Oh, teach my stubborn heart how weak and mean
 Were every human effort, save for thee;
 And teach me now—e'en now—on thee to lean,
 Both when in need and when my soul is free.

And if need be that through the deep I go,
 Of human sorrow, human suffering, too;
 Then, Father, oh, let it be even so,
 That I may rise thence wearing virtues new.

Honor and glory be to thee alone
 Who bendest down to hear thy weak one's prayer,
 And sendest peace from out thy very throne
 To those oppressed with weary, worldly care.

The Eternal City.—Part 5

By H. J. Davison

The new Jerusalem as the Zion of America is the theme of this the final article of the series.

The Bible being essentially a Hebrew book and written in the land of Jerusalem or Palestine, it would naturally deal with conditions, events, and associations that cluster around that city and country. In the main it does; nevertheless, there are statements and prophetic utterances which reach even to the Western Continent, notably in the combining of the blessings of Joseph by Moses and Jacob. (Deuteronomy 33: 13-17, and Genesis 49: 22-26.) The Bible is furthermore committed to the authenticity of another book which deals with America historically and prophetically from shortly after the confusion of the language at Babel to the end of time. A notable reference and indorsement of this book can be found in Isaiah 29.

This book, the Book of Mormon, claims to be an abridgment of a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites. Both peoples were descendants of Lehi, of the tribe of Manasseh, who migrated from the land of Palestine to America some six hundred years B. C. (Alma 8: 3.) It also contains an abridged account of the people of Jared, who came to America from the dispersion at the Tower of Babel, who had become a great people, but were all extinct except one man when found by the Nephites.

This book was written primarily to the Lamanites; also to the Jews and Gentiles. (See introductory note, and 2 Nephi 12: 43.)

It could be truthfully called the book of the remnant of the house of Manasseh, since it was in the custody of and written by the descendants of Manasseh concerning the people of Manasseh to the people of Manasseh, with others. It could not consistently be called the book or record of Manasseh, as a whole, for Manasseh as a tribe went with the other nine tribes into Assyrian captivity and their record has not yet come forth. (2 Nephi 12: 69-72.)

A Colony From Jerusalem

About 600 B. C., Lehi, with his family, consisting of his wife and four sons, left Jerusalem by instruction from the Lord. Accompanying them was a family consisting of Ishmael, his wife, with five daughters and two sons with children, number not given. Also one man, Zoram, a servant of Laban. It is not stated as to what tribe these people belonged. They did not become prominent and had nothing to do with the sacred writings, so far as we have been able to determine from the records, the writers of which claimed lineage from Lehi, even to Moroni, which record was written by Ether, whose progenitors antedate by perhaps three centuries the family of Jacob.

Lehi and his little colony left Jerusalem. Let the reader note that it was from Jerusalem that they migrated, not Syria nor Moab, but Jerusalem; and traveled southward to the border of the Red Sea; thence south southeast to the sea—probably the Persian Gulf, from which place they embarked in a ship which they had built, and finally landed on the west coast of South America.

They had hardly begun their journey before they began to have visions of a Zion upon their new promised land, the government of which would include the reign of Christ. And all the way through their record we find that matter at times brought before the people.

Zion to Be Built Up Unto the Seed of Joseph

It is quite remarkable that in most cases it is especially stated that this Zion should be "built up unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph." (Italics mine.) (Ether 6: 1-13; 3 Nephi 9: 47-52.) And also quite remarkable that from the very first they were taught not to confuse this Zion with the Zion of Jerusalem, nor to think that it would supersede it in point of governmental powers as pertaining to the "whole house of Israel" or "Jacob," but to the contrary, as seen in Nephi's vision (1 Nephi 3: 114-116), where it is shown that the "twelve" that should be chosen on this continent should judge the seed of Nephi, but they themselves should be subject to the judgment of the "twelve" apostles of the Lamb; which agrees precisely with what Mormon writes (1: 84):

"And I write also unto the remnant of this people who shall also be judged by the twelve whom Jesus chose in this land. And they shall be judged by the other twelve whom Jesus chose in the land of Jerusalem."

This is in harmony with the statement of Jesus found in Matthew 19: 28. Speaking to his apostles: "Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

And later on in the Book of Mormon, attention is called to the prophecies of Isaiah, and a number of them are quoted quite lengthily concerning the gathering of the house of Jacob to their land, and Jerusalem should become the Zion of their hopes and expectation, showing that none of those prophecies are to be disturbed, or that none of the readers of later prophecies are to be disturbed as to their import and fulfillment.

No, these Bible prophecies have lost nothing of their force during all these years of changes and conflicting thought, but on the other hand, are shining out clearer and more definitely beautiful since the unseen forces behind the national and international vicissitudes of our age are rendering their fulfillment more imminent.

Therefore, though we as a church are committed and contend for a Zionistic movement in this country for a remnant of the house of Joseph, who was of Jacob, and as many Jews and Gentiles who will come into the covenant and assist (3 Nephi 9: 65-68; 9: 85-95; 10: 1-8), yet we do not for a moment lose sight of the great world-wide movement pertaining to the land of Palestine. Neither do our standard books deteriorate from its importance and grandeur, but to the contrary, they verify and confirm it. Thus in 3 Nephi 9: 67, 68:

"And I will remember the covenant which I have made with my people, and I have covenanted with them, that I would gather them together in mine own due time; that I would give unto them again the land of their fathers, for their inheritance, which is the land of Jerusalem, which is the promised land unto them forever, saith the Father."

Also, Doctrine and Covenants 108: 4, speaking of the people of this country: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee into Zion. And let them who be of Judah [House of Judah—H. J. D.], flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house." (Italics mine.)

Agreeable with Micah 4: 1, 2; Isaiah 2: 2, 3; and Jeremiah 3: 17, 18:

"At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem. . . . In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel."

To those who have objected to, and may yet object to, that program, on account of the size of that country, we would commend the reading of a prophecy recorded in 3 Nephi 10: 10, 11. "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles and make the desolate cities to be inhabited."—Isaiah 54: 2, 3. The above language should settle all doubts as to territorial limitations.

The Book of Mormon being a record of the people of this country, containing prophecies concerning their destiny, it is but natural to expect more in it concerning their Zion. And it certainly does not leave us in doubt upon the matter of their being one, nor much room for doubt concerning the general nature of it. In all that is said of it, there is no intimation of anything like competition, or antagonistic rivalry, but in its inception it precedes Jerusalem in point of time. For let it be understood that there is doubtless to be a political or national Zion in Jerusalem or Palestine some time before the spiritual Zion, when Christ shall sit upon the throne of his father David, will be consummated; whereas, in America the spiritual aspect of it comes first. In fact, the writer is not cognizant of any distinctive political or national feature that will ever enter into the program, except that which will come by natural evolution and divinely aided transition, which indeed will be more social and industrial in its nature than political.

True, there has been a center city with a temple site set apart and dedicated by divine appointment, and the hope of the Saints is largely wrapped up in the progress, development, and sanctification of Independence, Missouri, and her surrounding stakes. But the type of methods of propaganda and development will be of such a wholesome nature that the fair-minded of the populace will hail it as a boon to be fostered and cherished, rather than a menace to be antagonized, being grounded in the principles of Christian altruism, even the benign foundations of the Golden Rule.

This, of course, can be done only by the centralizing of individual conversion and consecration; for a Zion which does not comprise the "pure in heart" and is not perpetuated by the light of divinity, is but an experiment of humanity, and is doomed to decay if not to more sudden destruction.

A writer in the Book of Mormon makes this statement (3 Nephi 4: 7): "Behold our father Jacob also testified concerning a remnant of the seed of Joseph. And behold, are not we a remnant of the seed of Joseph?"

And Jesus while visiting the Nephites in this country, after his crucifixion, said (3 Nephi 7: 13), speaking to the twelve whom he chose: "Ye are my disciples; and ye are a light unto this people who are a remnant of the house of Joseph." And again (3 Nephi 8: 42): "Verily, verily I say unto you, thus hath the Father commanded me, that I should give this people this land for their inheritance." (Italics mine.) And again (9: 58): "And behold, this people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob; and it shall be a New Jerusalem." (Italics mine.)

The New Jerusalem

Moroni is very explicit about the term New Jerusalem, and is exceedingly clear and plain upon the distinction between the New Jerusalem and the Jerusalem of Palestine, also as to whom these cities should be built. Ether 6: 7, 8: "And that a New Jerusalem should be built up upon this land unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph." Paragraph 10: "And then cometh the New Jerusalem; and blessed are they who dwell therein, for . . . they are they who are numbered among the remnant of the seed of Joseph, who were of the house of Israel."

And lest any should doubt as to who should inhabit Palestine, the writer adds: "And then also cometh the Jerusalem of old; and the inhabitants thereof, . . . they are they who were scattered and gathered in from the four quarters of the earth, and from the north countries, and are partakers of the fulfilling of the covenant which God made with their father Abraham."

The reading of Ether 6:1-13 is strongly commended.

While we cannot show that any of the tribe of Ephraim came to America in Book of Mormon times, yet to-day the United States and Canada give the remnant of Ephraim a splendid showing in the Anglo-Saxon race.

Upon this latter point, as pertaining to the United States:

"William S. Rossiter, former chief clerk of the census bureau, and now chairman of the advisory committee to the director of the census of the American statistical and economic associations, writes to the August number of the Atlantic Monthly of an exhaustive study of American census returns. . . . He discovered that 55 million persons are of British ancestry. . . . Further that it is this group which manages and controls the United States with the Anglo-Saxon thought and ideals. The Anglo-Saxon, even in those sections where he is greatly in the minority, is still in the position of management, authority, and prestige."—SAINTS' HERALD, December 1, 1920.

Out of this group many have had their patriarchal blessings, assigning them to Ephraim. These doubtless are not of the tribe of Ephraim that was taken into Assyrian captivity as a body, but of the remnants who did not go.

Does anybody remain blind to at least a partial fulfillment of the blessing bestowed upon the sons of Joseph by Moses (Deuteronomy 33:17): "and they are the ten thousand of Ephraim and they are the thousands of Manasseh," in all this?

What a wonderful thing is prophecy; and what a wonderful thing is "the testimony of Jesus, which is the spirit of prophecy." And what a gloriously wonderful thing it would be if the posterity of Jacob could be possessed of enough of it to discern in this great Zionistic movement the purposes of Jehovah, relative to their peace and final triumph. And withal, what a transcendently wonderful thing is the patience and fatherly love of God, to care for and arrange the plan of the centuries for the consummation of the redemption of Israel and the glory promised to their fathers thousands of years ago. Would, like Jacob of old, his children could rise up from their sleep with heads pillowed upon the stones of adversity, and exclaim, "Surely the Lord is in this place and I knew it not. This is none other but the house of God, and this the gate of heaven."

However, it is written in connection with the building of the New Jerusalem: "And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in their midst, and then shall the work of the Father commence, at that day even when this gospel shall be preached among the remnant of this people. [The Indians—H. J. D.] Verily, I say unto you, at that day shall the work of the Father commence among all the dispersed of my people; yea, even the tribes which have been lost, which the Father hath led away out of Jerusalem. Yea, the work shall commence among all the dispersed of my people, with the Father, to prepare the way whereby they may come unto me, that they may call on the Father in my name; yea, and then shall the work commence, with the Father, among all nations, in preparing the way whereby his people may be gathered home to the land of their inheritance."—3 Nephi 10:4-7.

Why the Saxophone?

Elder Mills warns aspiring musicians against this over-popular instrument.

Just now there exists in society an almost unexplainable craze for the saxophone, a musical instrument invented by a musician named Saxe. This craze seems to be at its height and might almost be described by using the title of a one-time catchy song, "Everybody's doing it." We have saxophone solos, saxophone duets, saxophone trios, saxophone quartets, quintets, sextets, octets, and even saxophone bands and orchestras in which this instrument is exploited in various ways. Musical organizations touring the country, bands and orchestras that appear on Chautauqua circuits, all, or most of them, feature prominently this instrument. And the public invariably applauds the appearance of this novel instrument, the performers usually having to respond to demands for encores.

Not only has the public "raved" about the saxophone, but ambitious music students everywhere have embraced it enthusiastically. Does Johnny, or Susie, or cousin Harry, or Mary Jane's beau desire to cultivate his talents and learn to play some musical instrument? It is an even break that every one of them will pass by every other instrument and take up the saxophone as the choice vehicle of his musical expression. The manufacturers of musical instruments have not been slow to take advantage of this universal tendency, and have pushed the sale of saxophones to a thriving degree of success. The result is, that everywhere one can find students striving to master this instrument, and its somber tones are heard in many quarters.

As we said, the craze for this instrument is hard to explain. It is comparable to the mania that flourished about a quarter of a century ago for the mandolin, a pear-shaped, stringed instrument imported to us from Spain. Then everybody wanted to learn to play this tinkling instrument, and mandolin and guitar clubs and orchestras (!) flourished in varying degrees of perfection (or imperfection). Or, it is comparatively similar to the more recent craze for the ukelele, a small, strummy, wooden guitar from Hawaii; which obsession has fortunately not lasted very long.

Some of the phases of this saxophone craze are peculiar. We recently read a timely little squib captioned, "Did jazz music produce the saxophone or has the saxophone brought jazz music?" Certain it is that this instrument has been made a principal factor in the novel and often unmusical effects of so-called jazz music. This matter of novelty, we think, affords some measure of explanation for the present craze for the saxophone.

We feel it is necessary to warn the Saints against this unnatural craze. From every quarter of the church we hear of our "young men and maidens" taking up this instrument, earnestly desiring, doubtless, to master a musical instrument and to obtain musical culture thereon. We feel that in most of the cases, those who do so are destined to meet with real disappointment, and we are going to tell them why.

The saxophone is a band instrument, made of metal, with a quaint, Dutch, pipe-looking shape, getting its tone from a bamboo reed of same shape as the clarinet, and fingered practically the same. In fact, it has been styled the "illegitimate offspring" of the clarinet. But, unlike its respected parent, it is an instrument of very limited capacity and range of tone color. But little in the way of real expression can be realized from it; its tone qualities are always reedy and its tone color always somber and grotesque, and if heard to excess become tiresome and oppressive. In these respects it is totally unlike the clarinet, which has a wide range of expression, from grave to gay, and a variety of beautiful tone color; so much so that it has been styled the "dramatic soprano of the orchestra."

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Welfare of Preschool Children

Address by Miss Rosamond Losh before the Women's Department Institute.

(Part 2.—Concluded.)

After we have examined a child at the center, and given it a card with the doctor's findings on it, we make another one for our own office, which will finally be sent to Washington. This card goes back to the office, and a permanent physical history is made from that. So that if we get a child in its first year and keep it until it is six years, that card will be a complete physical history record of that child from birth to six years of age. This history can be turned over to the public schools to form a basis for their health program—a decided advantage to the teacher. One will know if there is a trace of tuberculosis in the child and will see that it enjoys plenty of fresh air and sunshine; that it takes advantage of all the play periods, and that it is safeguarded in other ways. If it has defective eyes or hearing, she will know how to direct the studying of that pupil in the schoolroom. He needs safeguarding, too, in his physical activities. So we feel a great many of the teachers' problems will vanish when she can take advantage of this record and act accordingly for the child's best physical good. We don't want to classify these children as stupid when they perhaps are merely physically handicapped. We know very often from our experience mothers are not able to detect physical defects, and teachers might think a child stupid when it wasn't measuring up to the standard, until it is discovered that the child was physi-

As a solo instrument the saxophone does not rank very highly on account of the limitations just described.

Another thing that calls for great consideration by those who are thinking of taking up the saxophone is the place it now holds and will continue to hold in bands and orchestras. Many of our instrumental students doubtless are studying their instruments with the hope of later using them in either bands or orchestras. They should, therefore, understand the measure of opportunity that awaits those who play the saxophone.

First, the saxophone is distinctively a band instrument, and in most large military bands of fifty or sixty players a trio, or perhaps a quartet, of saxophones may be found. But on account of its limitations and character, it is not given serious prominence, being used mostly to add "body" to the ensemble rather than tone quality and color. P. S. Gilmore, the famous conductor of the military band which bore his name, and which was famous in the eighties of the last century, occasionally placed a saxophone solo on his programs, but he was noted for resorting to novelties, and his example has not been followed by succeeding bandmasters. In the modern orchestra and the orchestral scheme, the saxophone is not recognized, orchestral authorities and conductors refusing to introduce it anywhere. It has, therefore, remained for the jazz orchestra, or the orchestras that feature the unusual, to use it to the extent it is now heard.

In fact, it is very hard to accommodate the saxophone to the present orchestral scheme. Orchestras and orchestral arrangements do not include saxophone parts, and hence, whenever the instrument is allowed to play at all, it has to play a part assigned to some other instrument, frequently with unsatisfactory results.

We feel, therefore, that our young who desire to master some musical instrument will do well to consider carefully before adopting this limited instrument. There are a number of other very fine instruments, of proven qualities and resources, that our young people could just as easily master, and they would have the assurance that their labors would result in their being able to play an instrument of worth and recognized possibilities.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

cally handicapped in some way that was not at once apparent.

We have no record of any physician in Kansas City having failed to cooperate with us by bringing their own children to our centers. Not that the children need it, but it was done simply to add the strength of their indorsement to our work. This has certainly been a wonderful help to us.

We have all the child specialists of the city either on our board or examining for us. All these specialists, and those on the board, go out for our examinations. They can give only a limited time to us, but they give us what they can.

The prevention idea is spreading all over the entire country, as you know. For a long time, in eastern parts, it has been the custom for people to pay the physician by the year to keep them well: but I was astonished to learn to what an extent this custom has reached Kansas City. A few weeks ago one of our most prominent physicians told me he had over a hundred patients who were paying him by the year to keep them well. He said out of 107 of those patients, 105 were men, professional men, who could not afford to be ill; so they paid him by the year to keep them well. Once a month he gives them a thorough physical examination: kidneys, lungs, skin, blood pressure, and all, and in this way can detect the slightest approach of danger, and is able to ward it off, and the man goes to his business. It seems to me if it is a good investment for the head of the house, it isn't a bad one for mother and the children. However, out of this physician's 107 patients of this kind, 105 are men.

We insure our automobiles and houses, our Liberty Bonds, and sometimes our jewels, etc., but it doesn't seem to me we have been doing very much about insuring the health of our children. The periodic physical examination referred to is a sort of health insurance. Through it we are able to detect the approach to danger, and ward it off before it becomes worse and jeopardizes the whole future of the child.

It is sometimes thought that because a child has no striking defect there's nothing the matter, but we have learned it requires a great deal greater skill than is possessed by the average individual to tell when a child is up to standard. Our Government has furnished standards for us on the basis of the normal, healthy children of the entire country, and it seems to me that every mother should wish to know if her child is or is not up to standard. She oughtn't to be satisfied to merely think they are all right, but she should know, and as I say, there are many afflictions that only a skilled physician, a specialist, can detect. Take curvature of the spine, heart trouble, tuberculosis, and many other things; we are not able to detect them at the beginning when they might be easily overcome.

Two or three weeks ago we had with us the national president of the Tuberculosis Society, and she told us physicians have thrown up their hands and said it is absolutely impossible ever to wipe out tuberculosis unless we can educate mothers in prevention. The element of success lies with the mothers. Our mothers must do it if we are ever to stamp out disease. The tuberculous case comes to the attention of the physician when well advanced, and then it requires a long, hard pull for people to overcome it; but if we would keep our children up to standard we make it possible to prevent the development of this dread disease. When mothers learn this fact, they will help to stamp it out by doing what they can in this direction.

We ask people to get behind this movement, even if their children are well, in order to safeguard their own homes. A child is no safer than the most understandard child it comes in contact with. If a tubercular child and other diseased children are present, they are a constant menace to the well child. We ask the mothers of well children, even though under the care of child specialists and getting every attention that we could even suggest, to get behind the movement for the sake of all children. We want to raise the standards of all children in order to safeguard the well child.

The normal, healthy child is not the result of accident. It is simply intelligent care and right health habits which are necessary to bring the child up to standard, and just as necessary to keep it there. In the schools we often found children were as much as 78 per cent under standard. Immediately milk food was introduced, which brought them quickly up to standard. Then they thought it was all right to relax, with the result that the children dropped down again; and ever since it has been sort of an up-and-down movement. Don't you see that it is just a clear waste of time trying to raise this health standard if we don't try to keep it there? If we will just do this we will have little further trouble.

The healthy child is the happy child, and a saner companion for other children. We have specialists who tell us that such a child is more wholesome and has more wholesome thoughts. This seems a very excellent reason why we should try to keep it in the best of condition.

Statistics show that 90 per cent of the juvenile court offenders and reformatory habitues are physically handicapped. Not only that, but 75 per cent could have been helped if taken in the preschool age. Some were crippled, 50 per cent of which could have been returned to normal if taken at an early enough stage. Curvature of the spine is a thing that is very easily cared for if taken in time, and almost anything can be corrected if taken in the preschool age. Call attention to the posture, using simple corrective exercises, and the spine is straightened, but let it go until the adult age and the probabilities are it can never be corrected. If at all, it means a long, hard pull.

The same thing is true about tuberculosis and heart trouble. Heart trouble is so often from very small beginnings with merely a heart murmur in the child of preschool age. If the intelligent mother is aware of the fact she knows the child needs safeguarding that he may outgrow a tendency which, if neglected, becomes chronic. If the child is allowed strenuous physical exercise the probabilities are the heart will be seriously strained.

You see how much the home can do, and the same is true of tuberculosis. These things come to the physician when they are more advanced and more difficult to deal with.

Mr. Codding, formerly of the State Penitentiary of Leavenworth, Kansas, and familiar with juvenile court subjects, tells us 90 per cent of the people coming into the penitentiary are physically handicapped, and 75 per cent could have been corrected if taken in childhood. So, you see, there is a big relation between crime and understandards.

There is another very, very important reason why we should raise the standards of our children to the very highest point possible. We like to give our children the very best advantages possible. We want to see them go into the public schools and do the work there the other children are doing. We don't like our children to be repeaters. A child takes nine years to do the work that it should do in eight. It cannot do better because of physical handicaps. He easily gets to thinking of himself as a failure and finally adjusts himself to that thought in life.

It is an age of progress, and methods of child care and home training are progressing just as well as methods in school work. It is the duty of the mother to keep herself in the march of progress as well as for the teacher to do so. You know our teachers go to summer schools and universities, and take advantage of special courses in order that they might be fitted to give children better advantages in their mental, moral, and physical training. The responsibility of the home is surely no less than that of the school.

Now, is it worth while to raise these physical standards? Higher physical standards mean higher mental, moral, and spiritual standards; mean a bigger, more useful life. When we go to the children's hospitals and see the little physical wrecks, our hearts are touched, and we think we would like to do something, but how much more important it is to prevent these wrecks in the first place, for prevention is so much more to be desired than correction afterward.

Question. "Is there any practical way for the organized women of rural places and small towns to carry on the real child welfare work?"

Answer. "Yes. If you have parent-teacher associations I certainly would work through them as a unit. We have nine different counties in Kansas and Missouri that have been coming to us for just this help. I suggest that they organize just as we have in Kansas City. Have as many representatives of as many organizations interested in child welfare as possible. Then most of these counties I mentioned in Kansas and Missouri got their executive secretary or field worker or nurse at the expense of the Red Cross through their local chapters and parent-teacher associations, and they get behind this work. We were called out to Olathe, Kansas, some two or three months ago to start the work there. The Red Cross people helped, going all through the county, speaking at the different schoolhouses, the work being directed from the county seat at Olathe. They found the children with bad teeth because they had no dentist there and the distances were so great, and they had not realized the importance of caring for the children's teeth. A dentist volunteered to go out there and take care of them. In four districts we have well children's stations opened once a week, and in these districts we have a nurse from the visiting nurses' associations who does intensive work. There are some districts where we have no people up to standard, and we need to do much educational home work. These centers are open weekly. We ask sick and well to come to these centers. By all means do not overlook your physicians. They are a little peculiar. They are perfectly willing to help if you go to them and enlist their cooperation; but if you go your own way and do not consult them, you are apt to get in on the wrong foot. When they understand what you are trying to do they will help you direct the work."

Q. "Is this medical service given free, or is it always paid for?"

A. "We have about 50 per cent paid and 50 per cent free service. The big public specialists can only afford to give an hour here and there. Our centers are open only from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. It would injure our own work if we didn't have a man there at nine o'clock. So in order to be sure of that, we employ men trained for this work; but we can always use extra physicians, and have about an equal number of physicians who drop in. If information on this work is wanted, write the Children's Bureau at Washington, which supervises our work. That is, we are supervised to the extent we wish to be. If we wish to initiate something new, it is all right. You can have, absolutely free, every advantage they have to offer. Two years ago Julia Lathrop came to Kansas City and talked for several days to a number of our groups. The bureau also sent a field expert and office expert to organize our work in connection with clinics, etc., and tried to standardize the work in Kansas City. This was done at Government expense. You have the same privilege. If you write to Miss Lathrop to send Miss Hunter, the office expert, they will help you to put on foot any health program."

Character Study

One great writer has said, "Talent develops itself in solitude; character in the stream of life." Therefore, in fitting yourselves for the future, do not shut yourselves away from things. We are told that Christ, as he worked in the carpenter shop, learned obedience and grew in wisdom and favor with God.

Do not complain of the cares and vexations, the temptations of life, for these may be the things God has appointed unto you for the forming of your character. It is having its work in making you patient, humble, generous, and kind. Perhaps this character is growing more beautiful each day, though you do not realize it, and every temptation may add to its perfection. So do not isolate yourselves from people, nor from troubles and difficulties, but go into the midst of things, never forgetting to "pray always" lest you enter into temptations.

Home Building

Brother Charles Derry once said to me, "Govern your household with love." I have always found that a good motto, for it seems to assist in solving all the problems of everyday life. Listen carefully: "Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not, love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, unselfish, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things!"

Did you ever watch a bird build its nest? It builds so true, so well, so strong. It sings as it builds, and when the home is done and ready for occupancy, it is a place of comfort rather than luxury. Birds know nothing about wealth, but they are happy. They have a shelter and a place of refuge which brings them contentment and rest.

So, in building your homes, let love be your foundation, and all these other things will be added to you unconsciously. Differences will arise; problems will have to be worked out; you must learn to give and take; but by living up to your motto, you are sure to find happiness. There is only one thing greater than happiness in this world, and that is holiness, which is not in our keeping alone. God has put in our care the happiness of those about us, which can be secured by our being kind to them.

See to it that your home is a place of refuge, rest, contentment, where the body may be rested and the mind comforted from the cares and buffetings of the busy, unsettled world. Keep your home clean, in order, and free from unjust criticisms; then it will be a place of rest.

Child Study

The laugh of a child will make the holiest day more sacred still. "Strike with the hand of fire, O weird musicians, your harps strung with Apollo's golden hair! Fill the vast cathedral aisles with symphonies sweet and dim, deft touches of the organ keys! Blow, bugler, blow, until thy silver notes do touch and kiss the moonlit waves, and charm the lovers wandering mid the vine clad hills. But know your sweetest strains are discords all, compared with childhood's happy laugh. The laugh that fills the eyes with light, and every heart with joy."—Ingersoll.

The training of a little child, O what a responsibility! To undertake the molding of the character of a little child!

Have you ever seen parents cruelly whip a little child? and did you ever stop to think that that child has inherited from the mother and the father, and its forbears a temper, a disposition, a great many characteristics, and that it is being whipped for something it is not accountable for?

Education should begin with the parents; they should study to meet these temperaments as they are manifested, and meet them with firmness, but never unjust punishment. Some are apt to whip a child as the quickest way out, when a little patience and reason would have solved the problem.

Do not make a promise to a child unless you are sure you can keep that promise. The foundation in the building of a child's character is obedience. Try never to lose the confidence of your child, for it means much through all the years of its life to know that all its sorrows and troubles can be brought in confidence and love to mother. Study to make yourself approved, that it can be said of you, "Mother understands, and she will know what to do and how to help us."

I never look into the face of a little child that my heart does not go out in love to it, and these words come to me, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." I love to read in the book of Alma where Christ appeared to the people of this continent, and after he had talked and ministered unto them, he asked that they bring their children to him, that they be placed on the ground around him. He took them in his arms and blessed them, and prayed to the Father for them. And he stood in their midst, and we are told that he wept. He cared for them, he loved them, and prayed for them; he understood!

That is the example for us to follow—a prayer always in our heart for the little ones, that we may be guided, and directed, in our training of them.

A Coming Treat

The general supervisor of our Young Women's Bureau, Sister Mary Steele, submits an announcement of prizes to be offered in connection with the coming special "Girls' number" of Autumn Leaves. We all look forward to this number with pleasant anticipations of a real treat, for it is the first to reflect exclusively the activities of the girls of the church, and who will claim that the girls lack either "pep" or cleverness? We have had issues devoted to the interest of the boys. These have been exceedingly pleasing. But in this new age, this "age of woman," are we not justified in feeling that when the girls of the church get "on their toes" for a number of the young people's magazine all their own, we are sure to get something worth while?

Now, let the mothers who read this column pass along the good word to their daughters, the Orioles and Temple Builders, and each one do what she can to create a lively interest in this initial effort. Sister Steele is happily to become still more closely associated with our Women's Department work, and the Lord is using her, as he does all truly consecrated souls, as an instrument of good to work out his will among the people. Let us get behind her efforts, and help her make this November issue of the Leaves a brilliant success. The contests are varied, and open to all girls, and we mothers who are justly proud of our lovely and capable daughters should help to kindle the fires of enthusiasm in their hearts—for who knows to what great future service they may tend?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

For Girls; Attractive Awards for Effort

The November issue of Autumn Leaves is to be a special "Girls' number," and we hope that all the girls of the church will feel a personal interest in making it a success from first to last. We want it to be the means of enthusing our girls, enlarging their vision, raising their ideals, and giving them many practical suggestions which will add to their local pleasure and profit. Too, we hope it will arouse latent talent to the pleasant opportunities which are open to them in assisting to advance the cause of the girls of the church.

We want to hear from every live group throughout our broad land. Circular letters are being sent to the monitors and leaders of Orioles and Temple Builders, but we make this public announcement in order that knowledge of these contests may reach all.

We are offering the following awards for the first and second best articles and pictures sent to me at Independence, Missouri, Box 255, before September 10. Remember the date, and do not lose your chance by unnecessary delay.

For pictures of Oriole or Temple Builder groups in uniform, with a write-up of what they have accomplished since organizing:

First prize (to Temple Builders), Kodak; second prize, Temple Builder pin.

First Prize (to Orioles), Kodak; second prize, Oriole pin.

For best original article on any of the following subjects:

1. "The kind of woman I want to be."
2. "How girls may serve."
3. "Plans for good times the year around."
4. "What a fine girl avoids."

Prizes on each: First, Choice of Eversharp Pencil, or material for Oriole or Temple Builder uniform.

Second, Choice of Oriole or Temple Builder pin, or silver thimble.

Which will you win?

Supervisor Young Women's Bureau.

Family Singing

"Why," asks a contemporary writer, "do so few parents nowadays sing either to or with their children?" She goes on to urge a revival of this fine old custom.

Perhaps, as she suggests, the phonograph, with its music-making facilities, or the automobile and the movie, forever dragging people from their homes, or jazz with its exotic and difficult cadences, have driven the old sweet airs and the habit of family singing from the American homes.

Old hymns of noble verse and nobler music, beautiful old ballads in setting of simple but perfect melody, are a valuable part of the equipment of any life and memory. Every little while music of real merit is produced which should be added to the collection as pearls are added to a string.

Home in which such songs are sung, homes in which fathers and mothers sing such songs first to and then with their children, are among the greatest influences of civilization. More important than the songs or the singing is the habit instilled in early life of finding pleasure in home itself.—Concord Monitor.

A Plea

God grant me these: the strength to do
Some needed service here;
The wisdom to be brave and true;
The gift of vision clear,
That in each task that comes to me
Some purpose I may plainly see.

God teach me to believe that I
Am stationed at a post,
Although the humblest 'neath the sky,
Where I am needed most,
And that, at last, if I do well,
My humble services will tell.

God grant me faith to stand on guard,
Uncheered, unspoke, alone,
And see behind such duty hard
My service to the throne.
Whate'er my task, be this my creed:
I am on earth to fill a need.

LETTERS

With the Religio

Howard W. Harder, General Secretary of the Religio, gives us some important announcements.

Through the kindness of the editors, we are going to be permitted occasionally to occupy a column in the HERALD to inform Religians, and others, as to what is being done by the Religio Department. We trust that, as this column will appear only occasionally, we may be able to make it of sufficient interest to insure its reading.

Constitution and By-Laws

Religians will remember that at the last General Convention, held in April, 1920, a motion carried to empower the executive officers of the Religio and the First Presidency of the church to draft a plan of operation for the Religio Department consistent with the new phase of Religio activity as outlined by the coordinating committee, upon the adoption of which plan the old constitution was to be automatically discarded. This, as you know, has been done; and the Religio for a year has been operating under the new plan, the object of which is to enable the Religio to do the work for which it was specifically set apart, that of furnishing opportunity for the social and recreational expression of our young people, which will make for physical, mental, and spiritual strength.

However, while the Religio has been operating under this plan for some time, we have delayed issuing in printed form the new rules for the guidance of locals, as we desire first to be sure that the new plan was feasible. This has now been demonstrated, so we have issued a 16-page pamphlet containing these rules. This will take the place of our old constitution and by-laws, but we have called it Rules for the Operation of the Religio Department.

This pamphlet is now ready for mailing, and will be sent postpaid to locals and individuals upon receipt of request. The price is five cents each, or fifty cents per dozen. Stamps in small denominations will be accepted. Send requests for this pamphlet to the Religio Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

What Can We Do at Our Religio?

Some who read this may not have seen announcements of the publication of the Religio's new 48-page manual, What Can We Do at Our Religio? To those, we want to say that this little book is brimful of suggestions that will help any gathering for social purposes. There are suggestions for outdoor games and indoor games, games for boys and games for girls, community programs, pageants, etc. Rules for playing a great many games are given, and a very complete bibliography of recreational literature is included. While this is essentially a Religio manual, it will be found useful at any gathering of young people for social purposes. This booklet is sold by the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, and the price is twenty-five cents, postpaid.

God Is Everywhere

This brother finds many object lessons in nature.

This beautiful morning I feel that I would like to speak to you all, and if possible try to make each one feel that in spite of trials we may encounter, there is a kind and loving God watching over us. I am just back from a little stroll in the Waterworks Park and I could not help feeling that this is a wonderful old world that we are living in. The sun was shining brightly, the sky was cloudless, and a gentle breeze seemed to whisper comfort and love to me. I passed a patch of wild flowers, and each delicate little blossom was facing the sun; it made me feel happy, as each flower seemed to convey a message of faith and its result. In the far corner was a little flower all by itself, yet it was in full bloom, as God had not forgotten to take care of it. The rain had fallen on it and the sun was shining on it just the same as on the other flowers, and to me it looked better and brighter because it was alone, and it brightened up the lonely, dismal spot in which it was growing.

What a great object lesson we can learn just from that little wild flower! Many of us feel at times that we are alone, and some of us are deprived from the association of the Saints, but if we can only shine out pure and bright and cause as much cheer and happiness as that little flower, I am sure that we will not feel so lonely, and God will bless us to the extent that we will feel happy to know that we are helping others who need us so badly.

God is everywhere and is speaking to us in many different ways. The warm sun shining up in the sky proves that there is a never-failing God. The tall, stately trees prove that God protects everyone who puts his trust in him, and the beautiful flowers speak of the joy and happiness obtained from having faith in God. Nature depends solely on God for help, and that is why we see perfection in nature. Oh, dear Saints, if only we can exercise enough faith in God I am sure that he will protect us just the same as he does the trees and flowers, etc. He says that even the very hairs of our heads are numbered, and also that never a sparrow falls to the ground but what he sees it. I find that just as soon as I kneel down and ask help from God, when I am feeling discouraged, then my very body seems lighter, a feeling of happiness comes over me, and I see the world in a different light. Never has God failed me, and I can plainly see that when I feel lonely and discouraged it is my own fault, because I have failed to put my trust in God. Dear Saints, when you feel that way, go to the Lord in prayer, and then take a walk in the country, or, if you are living in the city, go to the park and look at the beautiful flowers and the tall trees and listen to the beautiful singing of the birds; when you step on the soft grass, try to think clearly who made all those beautiful things. There is only one answer, but what did God make them for? Entirely for us, that we might feel happy, and that we might not forget him; also that we might see the results of putting our whole faith in God. Dear Saints, my prayers are for you all that we may always be an unbroken family, firm in faith, and faith with works, and works with love, remembering that prayer is the key to spiritual success.

BERT COOPER.

New Zealand Mission

Saints much benefited by visit of Elder G. J. Waller. Mission work among Maoris very difficult.

It is some time since I have written you anything directly concerning the mission here in New Zealand. It is concerning the visit of Elder G. J. Waller to this mission that I would interest you at this time. Elder Waller arrived here about a fortnight ago and found our address by wiring Dunedin. They gave him the address at 31 Eden Terrace, Auckland, New Zealand, and he visited the house the next morning after arriving.

The address at the close of this letter is that of the writer when at home. I am now visiting the Saints in Auckland as a result of developments of recent date. Some little time before Elder Waller arrived, we had arranged for Elder Loving to visit Auckland to attend a meeting to be held in the concert chamber of the town hall in Auckland, where Elder Robinson, who is stationed in Auckland, made reply to misleading stories told by the Utah people regarding this church and the conduct of Elder Loving and the writer when we attended the mission conference of the Utah church at Huntly, New Zealand.

I shall not detail the Huntly affair just here, but will outline it for you separately from this letter. Suffice it to say here, that the Utah people manifested the usual spirit of Brighamism, or rather reverted to the spirit of 1852. For they attacked us and ejected us from their camp grounds within five minutes after we asked them for the privilege of speaking to the people at a time when they had no meeting in progress. Then they lied about us, saying that we had conducted ourselves in an ungentlemanly manner. We replied to them on the streets of Huntly and elsewhere, hence the meeting in the town hall above referred to, and Brother Loving's visit to Auckland, where he was laboring with Elder Robinson when Elder Waller arrived unannounced and unknown to any of them in Auckland.

Though very busy with the affairs of his company, Elder Waller felt the need of the blessings of the Lord through association with the church, and the church has been blessed through his coming among us. And we are pleased to learn that he shall be with us till September; for his advice and counsel have done much already to help us get in line with the church work at headquarters, and the Saints here seem blessed with the Spirit of God through being brought closer together in the attitude of prayer and service under his direction and counsel.

I think it is proper that I should refer just here to a spiritual dream given to Elder Robinson just a few days before Elder Waller arrived. I quote his words:

"Just a few nights before Brother G. J. Waller arrived in Auckland (who, by the way, came unexpected and was not known to any of us other than through the church papers), I dreamed the following:

"We were sailing in a beautiful new auxiliary ship. Everything seemed in perfect order and the ship rode the mighty waves all right, and we thought everything was going along all right. Presently a man stepped up and took hold of the wheel. We had not seen him before. He began giving instructions, and the people did not want to carry them out, but when I looked in his face I turned to the people and said, 'Why do you refuse to carry out his instructions? He is a safe pilot.' Then they began to carry out his instructions. He ordered the sail to be set properly, and gave instructions for the benzine to be turned on, so that the motor might be set going. We were soon to realize why the instructions were given so hastily, for when we looked ahead we saw that we were sailing straight for the rocks on the shore. The pilot was just in time, and he turned the ship. So close were we to the rocks, it seemed we could touch them from the side of the ship. He guided the ship into the right channel and the danger was passed, and then the pilot left us.

"During Brother Waller's visit he gave us good instructions, and whilst I was presiding at our midweek meeting, the above dream came before me again, just as clearly as though I were dreaming it all over again. This was impressed upon my mind. I began to pray about it and asked God to shut it out of my mind if what had been given to me was not of him. As I prayed, the plainer it became, and this is what was given to me as the interpretation of the dream.

"The ship was the New Zealand Mission (which is really a new mission, especially this end), which was fully equipped with the gospel. We were riding over the waves of opposition, and thought all was going along all right, until this pilot came and gave his instructions. (I asked that I might see the face of that pilot again, and Brother Waller's face came before my eyes.) He showed that the Spirit of God was the all-important thing to carry us into the right channels, and then he left us.

"We feel that Brother Waller has indeed turned on that tap which has given us fresh courage and hope, and he truly has given us spiritual food in time of need. His instructions and counsel will help us all to live closer to God.

"A. V. ROBINSON."

The writer has been much encouraged by the arrival of Elder Waller, and his advice is being taken by the Saints. There is new hope, courage, and energy manifest. The Saints are moving in the direction advised by Elder Waller and we expect that a branch will be organized in Auckland while he is with us. The Spirit of God is manifest in his preaching and counseling us, and the message is being borne into the hearts of his hearers. The little craft (the New Zealand Mission) is moving forward. We have passed some dangerous rocks, guided by the hand of this kind-hearted and experienced pilot, and we feel that we shall have further cause to be thankful to God for sending him among us.

Elder Waller wished to be remembered by the Saints and friends in prayer, that he may receive the spiritual support he needs, as well as the blessings of health and strength. He wishes to be excused from writing long letters to you, as his business takes much of his time and he feels the need of rest from letter writing. He is making a short business trip to Australia and will be back in about three weeks. He expects to be with us till September. We shall miss him, we know, for he has endeared himself to us here already.

Elder Loving and the writer have been engaged in working among the Maoris but have not adhered strictly to that work. We have done some preaching and tracting among the Europeans as well during the past three months. This was necessary on account of misrepresentations coming from the Utah people, who have spent years in this field while we are just newly opening our work among them. I think I never found a place where people more persistently confounded the true Latter Day Saints with the church in Utah, commonly called the Mormon church.

The natives here, as well as many Europeans, have been led to believe that the Utah church is the only church known as Latter Day Saints. They are surprised to learn that the church in Utah was organized by Brigham Young seventeen years after the inception of the latter-day work in 1830. The Utah elders publicly deny that Brigham Young and all his coadjutors submitted to a new baptism in 1847 in the creek where Salt Lake City now stands, thus repudiating their former baptism and completely severing themselves from the church organized by Joseph Smith by that act and their new confirmation, and their entering into the practice of polygamy.

These people are astonished, many of them, to learn that the so-called revelation on polygamy was not known to the church in the days of Joseph Smith. I have heard the Utah elders tell them that the polygamous document was in the Doctrine and Covenants of the church in the days of Joseph the Martyr. We have never let such a falsehood pass unchallenged, and have shown the 1835 and the 1852 editions of the Doctrine and Covenants to prove the fallacy of their statement. They have even then deliberately lied to the people, telling that we have "faked up" those books. But when requested to produce a genuine edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of an early date they make excuses.

Elder Loving and the writer have walked many miles through the back country, from camp to camp of the natives, preaching and delivering literature to them. By the help of the Tahitian and the Tuamotuan dialects, which I acquired in the Society Island Mission, I have been able to get a start in the Maori language. Most of the young people understand English, but many of the adults need to have things explained to them in their own native tongue. We feel that the Lord has blessed us in this work and in the study of their language. Elder Loving has made splendid progress and can speak quite a good deal of Maori.

Our work is up hill all the way, due to the very scattered settlements of the natives and the great distances we have to walk and carry our blankets and books, and, worst of all, the falsehoods of Brighamism, which must everlastingly come up, and the muck be cleared away before the minds of the people will open to the truth. We have walked about one hundred miles, forded streams, swam a river to get potatoes to cook in a hot spring, camped out under the trees, slept many nights on the hard boards of the floor, glad to get shelter. When the road seems long and dreary we turn off into the bush and pour out our hearts to God in prayer, and he knows and understands our needs, and gives the comfort of his Holy Spirit, which we cannot do without.

For reasons mentioned above, and the fact that polygamy has been common among the natives from of old (in fact, a polygamist was looked up to as a great man), I am frank to say, that the introduction of the gospel among the natives here is the biggest undertaking I ever tackled in my life. But we meet with some kind-hearted people, and some of them manifest interest which I hope will grow into activity. The numerous religions of the Europeans and Maoris also, have made the people very slow to act. They are very suspicious of Europeans until they have had time to satisfy themselves that we have not come to rob them of their land, which is a very sore point with them, and not without cause.

Sincerely, your brother in Christ,

H. W. SAVAGE.

Workers' Conference of Eastern Michigan

The usual good results attained when the workers get together for an exchange of ideas.

A workers' conference convened at Minden City on June 18, 19, in charge of department leaders. Meetings were held at the church on Saturday, and in the opera house on Sunday, the attendance being far too large for the church.

The opening session each day was a prayer service. On Saturday morning the theme was unity. The sentiment expressed and the spirit prevailing were in harmony with the theme. It brought peace and comfort to all, strengthening the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love.

On Sunday morning, at 7.30 a. m., a young people's prayer meeting was held. The plan was to have the meeting at the grove one half mile from the church, but conditions changed the plan so it was held on the church yards. The general prayer service following this one was well attended, but did not reach the spiritual height we had hoped for.

The eleven o'clock service on Saturday was a speech of welcome by Patriarch A. Leverton, which was seasoned with the spirit of the preceding prayer service, that of unity and love. At this session a motion prevailed that a message of sympathy be sent to the local branch president, Brother C. K. Green, who was at the Bad Axe Hospital where he had undergone an operation for hernia. The message, with a beautiful bouquet of flowers furnished by Brother W. Parks, was taken to Brother Green on Sunday by the Oriole girls. In return, a message of appreciation was sent by Brother Green, but reached here too late to be read at the conference, which he regretted very much.

On Sunday at eleven o'clock a Sunday school session was held, in charge of the district and local superintendents. The song service at this session was a pleasing feature, the first conducted by Brother A. H. Mills, of Independence, whose coming on Saturday evening was a pleasant surprise to all. The well-selected songs by the district Sunday school chorister and the little incidents related as to the origin, etc., by Brother Mills, helped to bring the true spirit of song into the service.

The afternoon sessions were taken up by department meetings in charge of leaders, short talks, discussions, a round table, conducted by the district president, Brother W. H. Sheffer, with special musical numbers by Crosswell and Minden City workers. A scout dialogue by members of Minden City Sunday school, and a reading by Brother Tennyson Summers were features.

Music was furnished by the Sandusky orchestra, under the leadership of Brother Lewis Binder, whose efforts along this line are commendable. In his talk on music he expressed some splendid ideals. Following his effort was a talk by Brother A. H. Mills, also in the interest of music and song. He referred to section 119:6 of Doctrine and Covenants, which states quite clearly that it takes music and song properly rendered to make our church service acceptable in God's sight. Among many other good thoughts expressed, he said that if opportunities for developing musical talents do not come our way, we should try to make opportunities. God helps those who help themselves. When striving faithfully to advance along any line we will find means of help coming our way from time to time. This we know to be true, from experience.

The district Sunday school superintendent, Brother Lewis Grice, spoke in favor of a uniform program for Children's Day, including promotion and graduating exercises and baptism of children.

Religio field worker, Brother Willard Parks, spoke mainly on the social and recreational work of the Religio. This was followed by a discussion, whether a lesson study would be continued in connection with the Religio, and the nature of it. According to a statement made by the editor of the Religio Quarterly some months ago, there will always be a lesson study of some kind connected with Religio work. Brother Wells also gave a very consistent explanation in June number of Autumn Leaves as to the rights of the Religio, that to have study classes on religious subjects was its secondary privilege.

District President W. H. Sheffer gave several short talks on general lines. In one of his speeches he said he was glad that all Latter Day Saint churches are not in obscure places.

In the absence of our district organizer of Women's Department, Sister Lewis Grice and Sister F. S. Brackenbury gave talks on women's work. Sister Grice explained the different departments of the work, emphasizing the great need of more study classes, which is a means of qualifying for better service.

Sister Brackenbury spoke on general lines of women's work, and in a later talk told some good things she heard and saw demonstrated in the institute of Women's Department at Independence, which was very interesting and instructive.

Sister Jennie Booth, district Sunday school secretary, speaking in the interests of Sunday school and Religio work, said that great care should be taken in selecting officers in the different departments, choosing the best qualified for the particular work, and when a good secretary is found, do not make a change unless it is necessary, not simply for handing the honors around.

Brother Myron Carr and G. St. John spoke on, "Learn your duty, then act," both expressing good thoughts on the subject.

On Saturday evening Brother St. John lectured on the Christ ideal, taking up his life of service. He referred to an experience in his own life when, afflicted and discouraged with his efforts in the work, comfort came to him in these words, "If serving to the best of our ability, be that little or much, it will bring eternal life."

The closing service on Sunday evening was a sermon by Brother A. H. Mills on the second coming of Christ, in which he expressed some consistent original thoughts which many appreciated.

Hoping and praying that the desired results of encouragement and more effectual work will follow this workers' conference.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, July 20, 1921.

Editors Herald: On July 16 and 17 the two-day meeting convened with branch at Bay City, Michigan. Matthew Umphrey presided. It was well attended, there being about two hundred Saints.

Several States were represented, along with local branches, all having an enjoyable time and being blessed with the divine Spirit.

The speakers were: Patriarch G. W. Burt, Saginaw, Michigan; H. E. Syckle, El Reno, Oklahoma; E. Fultz, Beaverton, Michigan; O. J. Hawn, Bradner, Ohio; B. H. Doty, South Boardman, Michigan; G. E. Burt, Ottawa, Canada.

The congregation enjoyed Elder Syckle's discourse on "The Indian and his religion," and then Elder O. J. Hawn took the Saints for a one hour and forty-minute boat ride from earth to heaven, which was enjoyed by all excepting those who might have gotten somewhat seasick on the journey.

All attending were well taken care of, everything being furnished free by local Saints.

Looking forward to a repetition and renewal of the Spirit.

From the Island Mission

After being here four months we took a trip to the different islands where help seemed to be mostly needed. We helped in every way we could to strengthen the natives spiritually and develop them mentally and physically. Frank was on the go from morning till night, preaching, teaching, administering, baptizing, translating new hymns, and teaching singing, having fireside or rather oceanside talks with Catholics, etc., and I helped the sick as well as I could, besides teaching the women cleanliness, cooking, care of children, etc. We thoroughly enjoyed our work. Came home just in time for the island conference, which was in Tahiti.

Immediately after conference Frank went out to the distant islands, about a thousand miles from Tahiti. It took him six weeks to get there. Brother and Sister Elliott started at the same time on their first trip. May was not very well, so they will stay in the near-by islands for a time. I wanted to go, but I came back sick and run down from the last trip. I just suffer martyrdom on those small boats. They are not fit for an animal to travel on. Honestly, my bones are sore right now from a trip we took six months ago. While we were returning to Tahiti, a terrible storm came up, and we lay in a bed of water for two days and nights. . . .

Sister Blanche Edwards is a very dear friend of mine. I want to see her so badly. The church has started in fine shape to help England. I know they did in the early days, but for years it seems that England was badly neglected. I am well acquainted with London, being born and raised there, and I could do a good work in the slums if there is an opportunity for our church to clean up such places. . . .

Of course, my mother being Jewish, I have a natural interest in the Palestine work. I have always loved the Jewish women and children, but it seems rather queer that I never cared a great deal for the men. I am interested in Doctor Garnett M. Brickner's address, as published in the HERALD for March 30, because it agrees so well with the prophecy given through R. V. Hopkins two years ago. . . .

There is always a lump rises in my throat when I read about the young people and the good spiritual times you have been having. My heart aches for something like that for these young people. I remember one time, especially, when we felt moved by that same sweet guiding influence of Zion. It was during the islands conference. Frank and I were very anxious for young people's meetings, but some thought it would not be wise to have them too often, so we managed to have two. I think the first in the history of this mission. The young people were very active; every minute was occupied. They were fully enjoyed and the children wanted more. . . .

There has been talk of a school, or children's home, and the translation of some books, but it all looks far in the distance. How I wish something or somebody would get started. Miss Hanson and I were talking the other day about translating some books, or getting our teachings in booklet form so that they could go out to all the islands, but the big question is getting them printed.

There are no schools in the coral islands where most of the natives and all our people are; no books or games or amusements of any kind. Teaching health and modern household science, or young people's organization, is like teaching Greek, because they have never been used to it and do not see the necessity for it. However, they have responded to our teachings better than we expected. Music appeals to them more than anything else. Sister Ellis did a splendid work along that line. Many of the young people and the ones who can play so well are teaching the younger children. Sister Brown is also helping to teach the children to play our hymns. Frank is teaching singing. Paia is about the only one who really realized the necessity of all our teachings. His people tell me that when he first returned from America they would sit up all night listening to him tell about his experiences the wonderful things of the church, and of America. We stayed at his home in Manahi and he used to talk to us for hours. We felt the spirit of that General Conference every time he talked.

When the steamer came in from America the other day I took my native girl all through, let her stop and play the piano and see everything. She marveled. Said that Paia had tried to explain, but she could not realize anything so beautiful. She said she wants to go to America. "Well," I says, "you will have to study English and the ways of the foreigner." "Yes," she says, "I realize now, that was like a dream to me." She went to bed that night and dreamed about what she had seen. She is studying music and I am teaching her English and domestic science. I wish I could send her to Graceland College. Many times I wish I were there myself, but that is selfish and I am enjoying my work here, though I could do ever so much more if I was real well. I hope the Saints in Lamoni will pray that I might gain strength to carry on more faithfully the part intrusted to me.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, May 24.

More Misrepresentation

[In a letter to the First Presidency, J. L. Cooper, president of the Northeastern Illinois District, reports that persecution is but strengthening the Saints and has opened the way for the proclamation of the word of God.]

I was notified by Brother William Pinkerton, of Belvidere, Illinois, of the intended lecture by Mrs. Frances J. Diefenderfer, the topic being, "Is Mormonism a menace to our country?" But being unable to be present that evening, owing to another engagement, I asked him to see that notes were taken, and if she dragged us into the mud we would endeavor to get a correction later.

Well, she pulled us in all right, stating in answer to the question put by the wife of a Baptist, "Is there any difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah?" that we were the thin edge of the wedge; that we tried to be more respectable than did the members of the Utah church, but not to let us fool them; that we were all the same. She also involved us otherwise.

Upon learning of the facts I went to her sponsors, she having gone, and asked that I might bring proof to them of her error, but they were busy, etc. I then got permission to speak on the street, and spoke that night, telling the people that we would be back in a few days to hold a series upon the street for their further information.

I immediately got in touch with the missionary director of our district, Elder Christy, and on the tenth of this month opened up on the street corner. Our crowds varied from one hundred to three hundred, standing with us through the entire service some of the evenings. Brother Christy did the speaking on the street and I looked after the hall meetings. The Saints and myself surely felt proud of Brother Christy and thankful to God for the outpouring of his Holy Spirit upon us all, and oftentimes to the confounding of those who would attempt to belittle his servant and distort the truths of God.

We closed our effort on the 17th, amid much rejoicing and greater humility among the Saints. They say that this has been the greatest thing to the local church that has ever happened. Some are interested and feel very kindly towards the Saints; others are raging. We also tracted different parts of the city.

[A challenge was printed in the Belvidere Republican as soon as it was clear that those responsible for the lecture were unwilling to be informed or to make correction. But no reply has been received.]

Council Bluffs Items

Much rain and warmth has caused vegetation to advance beyond its usual maturity. This causes the Saints to return thanks to the Giver of every blessing. On account of a low price for grain, but little profit is realized. Trying times are being experienced in the industrial and social world, and many are out of work, and several out of touch with spiritual ideals because their love for God and godly things has waxed cold, as the Savior said would be the condition preceding his second coming.

The Oriole Girls have an organization, and preparation is being made for an organization of Temple Builders under the direction of Sister W. T. Spanswick, who has charge of the girls' movement and will have such charge at the coming reunion.

Sister Lucy White has been associating with the young people in their church work while making an extended visit with her sister, May Skinner.

Sister Nellie Turpen and two sons, Stephen and Eugene, are located here and show an interest in the work of the church.

Brethren Civits, of North Platte, and T. J. Elliott, of Omaha, Nebraska, were present at the prayer service, Wednesday evening. Brother Elliott is looking after the Religion work for the reunion.

Elder Carl Self and wife, of Omaha, worshiped with us Sunday evening, August 17.

Brethren Edwin Lowe and Milo Burnett are seeking to deepen the interest at Riverside Mission, both having lately moved into the city.

The departure of Elder Charles Derry, of Woodbine, from earth life the evening of the 16th, has caused many to recall his excellent labor performed among the Saints now living here, but the purity of his life and humility of ministrations contrasted with many others. Unflinchingly he has ever stood for the truth and against error and evil, and his instruction on modesty has been of great benefit to both young and old.

The young people's class with friends held a picnic Monday evening at one of the city parks, where a pleasant time was had. About forty-one gathered, and had it not been for the very heavy rain on Monday morning, many others would have been there.

The boys and young men's department are enjoying baseball exercises about every week. The younger boys have been organized into a Boy Scout band. Preparation is being made along this line for various exercises during the reunion.

We are hoping to hear good news from President F. M. Smith on his return from his first missionary journey. We look for a forward movement in missionary work among the nations. Some of our young men are becoming very deeply interested in a preparation for whatever work the Lord has for them to do, whether at home or abroad.

Australians to Attend Graceland

Two new students for the class in religious education.

During the month of May I have been engaged in carrying on the propaganda campaign started in Kempsey. I have been doing quiet work, confining myself principally to home fireside talks and conversational effort. We are pleased to report a measure of success as several people are now awaiting baptism.

I am pleased to say that though people generally do not want religion we have made some good friends to the church in that district.

Recently I received from the president of Graceland College, G. N. Briggs, a notification that upon the recommendation of Apostles Butterworth, Hanson, and Rushton, and the approval of the joint council, I have been designated as one to enter Graceland College for the Religious Course, commencing September 1.

I have accepted that notice, and have made arrangements to sail from here by the S. S. Tahiti on July 28.

Elder Patterson is responding to a similar invitation. We intend traveling together, and expect to arrive in San Francisco by August 17. Will get in touch with the local bishop upon arrival.

As I am missionary supervisor of Northern New South Wales District, it will now be necessary to appoint another during my absence. I am reporting this matter to the Quorum of Twelve.

Sincerely,

JOHN BLACKMORE.

Richard Baldwin Blessed for Foreign Mission Work

Blessing service at Kirtland Temple, Apostle Griffiths officiating.

On Sunday afternoon, May 15, we drove Brother G. T. Griffiths from Cleveland, Ohio, to Kirtland, Ohio, to meet Brother Richard Baldwin at the Temple, as per previous arrangement.

The priesthood had been called to gather at the house of the Lord at three o'clock, to witness the blessing of Brother Richard Baldwin for his foreign mission. My sister and I, being stenographers, were requested to attend the service and take the blessing, which we esteemed a great privilege.

The service was opened by Apostle G. T. Griffiths, who was in charge, with the singing of "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah," after which Patriarch Squires offered a most spiritual prayer. God's Holy Spirit was present to a marked degree. "Nearer, my God, to thee" was then sung, and many were touched by the divine unction from on high. Many eyes were wet with tears and voices faltered in the singing because of being filled with the Holy Spirit.

A few short prayers were requested by Apostle Griffiths and many of the priesthood fervently prayed for a continuance of God's blessing upon the assembly. After the prayers were offered the assembly sang "Jesus, I my cross have taken." Speaking for myself I was so filled with the divine favor of God I could not control my voice to sing. Surely God was looking down and smiling upon us.

Apostle Griffiths blessed Brother Baldwin, assisted by Patriarch Squires, and set him apart for foreign mission work. Many precious things were told our brother, and God reminded him of his blessings in his official work in the past, also of the many trials and disagreeable circumstances he had been called to pass through, and told him he would be with him in his new field of labor, and while he would be greatly blessed there, he would be called upon to pass through times of lonesomeness and discouragement, for none are exempt from these things while surrounded by earthly environments, yet, if he would put his trust in God, he would uphold him and bless his labors abundantly, and he would be a comfort and help to God's people in the lands he should visit.

After the blessing, Apostle Griffiths spoke to the priesthood of the near approach of the great endowment God would bestow upon his holy priesthood, and warned the brethren to prepare themselves for it. Long and earnestly did he speak to them of the many experiences of God's dealing with his priesthood, and related many things of a personal nature.

The service was brought to a close by singing the doxology, and Brother Richard Baldwin offered the benediction.

SISTER FREDERICK T. HAYNES.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, July 26, 1921.

Editors Herald: The hot weather has had its usual effect upon the attendance here, or in other words the summer slump is on, but we hope that the cooler weather, which will soon be here, will have an opposite effect upon the slothful ones.

Brother Parsons is working very hard to get the branch better organized. Since his coming the coordinating system has been adopted, and is proving very successful. The pledge cards and one treasury is putting the finances in much better condition.

He has started an orchestra, and though nearly all are beginners, they show marked progress; and if they will only stay by Brother Parsons, Missouri Valley will soon have a fine orchestra.

The Boy Scouts, Orioles, and Temple Builders are planning to camp at our reunion at Woodbine; we feel this will be a fine thing for our young people.

The last Sunday morning in each month Brother Parsons has planned to preach especially to the children, and the Sunday school choir will furnish the music for that service.

He has also started the young people's prayer meeting every Sunday at 8.30 a. m. They report splendid meetings.

BOOK REVIEWS

CONQUEST.—By Gerald O'Donovan. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London. $2. The charm of this book lies chiefly in its delightfully sympathetic character portrayal. The emotionalism and romance, the strong prejudices and stronger loves and loyalties; all the charming inconsistencies of the Irish temperament so endearing the world over, are to be found in the characters of this story. The book has a serious purpose which is more or less successfully accomplished. It would be difficult to comprehend how anybody could read it without absorbing a more tolerant and understanding attitude towards the Irish question. The author does not try to solve it, but seems to attempt a very conscientious elucidation of the Irish problem from all angles: English, Ulster, and Sinn Fein. This explanation of the complex issues and factors involved is presented in bits of clever dinner talk which sometimes degenerate into page-long monologues. The reader's interest is caught in the first chapter, however, and is held throughout the book by the mixture of humor and pathos, of tragedy and comedy which makes up the plot. The book is well written and is surely worth while both from the viewpoint of entertainment and of information. It does not fail to amuse, yet has a big message which is faithfully delivered.

There were thirty-four in attendance last Sunday, and nearly all took part in the service.

Last Sunday, July 24, we were favored with a visit from Apostle McConley and Patriarch F. A. Smith, of Independence. Brother McConley occupied in the morning and Brother Smith in the evening. There was a good crowd out at each service, and the sermons were very fine. Brother McConley preached again on Monday night, giving a very powerful sermon on "True Americanism"—one that thousands should have heard. These two are visiting all the branches in the district, getting acquainted, and studying local conditions. Brother Hills is also in the district at this time, giving his Book of Mormon lectures. He will be in Logan next week. He surely has a message all should hear, adding another great testimony to the truthfulness of this "marvelous work and a wonder."

This will be my last report of Missouri Valley Branch, as we move to Logan next week, but we have the greatest confidence in the Missouri Valley Saints, and it is with reluctance that we sever our connections. Nevertheless we shall always have a prayer in our hearts for the ultimate success of the great work that has been launched forth by Brother Daniel Macgregor, and which is now being so ably followed up by our pastor, Brother A. H. Parsons.

Sincerely yours in gospel bonds,

OLIVE MCLEAN, Press Correspondent.

That the United States ranks very high in the number of divorces has been known for a number of years; for there are more divorces in America than in most other civilized countries. A recent survey found six counties scattered through five States in the United States where there are more divorces than marriages for the year. In Kansas City there is one divorce for every three or four marriages. This is a very high number of divorces as compared to most of the cities. Utah reports seven and sixty-one hundredths marriages for each divorce.

A report to the Christian Work, by its editor, Frederick Lynch, who has recently traveled in Europe, says that Germany is making heroic efforts to get on her feet. The worst conditions in Europe are in Russia, Poland, and Austria, and even a month ago, hundreds and thousands were perishing in the cities of Russia. Outside of Russia, the worst conditions are in Vienna and the Slovak states. In his opinion, American relief must be continued in Poland, as well as Russia and Austria, for another year. Poland is getting on its feet, but its children still need help.

At Tawas City, Michigan, September 11. Matthew Umphrey, district president, Bentley, Michigan.

Conference Notices

Wheeling, at Wellsburg, West Virginia, September 3 and 4. O. J. Tary, Wheeling, West Virginia.
Central Nebraska, at Inman, September 2 to 4. All communications to the district president should be sent to F. S. Gatenby, Clearwater, Nebraska. All other reports to Mrs. J. H. Butler, Inman, Nebraska. Mrs. J. H. Butler, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Southwestern Kansas, at Wichita, in Linwood Park, south part of the city, August 26 to September 4. Plenty of shade and good water. Come prepared to enjoy tenting. Committee has sent stamped envelopes and letters to all the Saints over the district for donations to finance this reunion which will require between $200 and $250 to start with. Some have responded very nicely with donations, while others have not up to date. Let everyone give according to circumstances. Donations from 25 cents to $25 will be gladly accepted. For speakers we will have J. F. Curtis, apostle; Ammon White, patriarch; T. W. Curtis, missionary in charge; local men and missionaries of the district. Order tents at once of J. W. Wooten, 857 North Saint Francis, Wichita, Kansas. Tents for entire time, covering drayage both ways: 10 by 12, $4; 12 by 14, $5.50. Remember this is your reunion, whether you attend or not, and we would ask for the support of all, that it might be a success. Annita Wilson, correspondent.

Pertle Springs reunion, August 19 to 29. Arrangements have all been completed for the Independence, Kansas City, and Holden Stake reunion, August 19 to 29, at Pertle Springs. Announcements have appeared from time to time in the HERALD and Ensign. Definite information as to tents, cottages, etc., has been published and reference made in the reunion calendar of the HERALD as to page on which such information appears. Reservations are going rapidly. Anyone not yet having made arrangements should phone or write Bishop F. B. Blair, 811 Lydia Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. We have a strong corps of speakers and workers for this reunion. D. T. Williams, beloved by our young people for his services among them, will have charge of the young people's prayer services and the recreation. Walter W. Smith will supervise and direct the school, which has proved so beneficial in the past. Of the Twelve, Myron McConley and John W. Rushton will be present. We feel grateful to have secured the services of these two brethren. Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith will be present, as also James Keir, of the Presiding Bishopric. Other speakers in attendance will be J. A. Tanner, D. J. Krahl, J. W. A. Bailey, R. V. Hopkins, and possibly others. The music will be in charge of Sister Johnson, of Lexington. Sister Etta Hunt has general supervision of the women's work and submits the following program: 10 o'clock session each day will be utilized in the Women's Department for lectures on the following subjects, followed by questions and discussions: Saturday, "How to study"; Monday, "Social purity"; Tuesday, "Child welfare"; Wednesday, "Organization"; Thursday, "Citizenship"; Friday, "Adolescence"; Saturday, "Essentials of good health." The girl leader in each stake will have charge of the girls from her stake. Special entertainment is being planned for the Orioles and Temple Builders. Every girl is requested to register at the Stewart Cottage as soon as she comes on the grounds. We will have with us, to assist in the Women's Department: Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Miss Dora Young, Mrs. I. M. Ross, Mrs. W. W. Smith, Mrs. C. J. Hunt, and others. Every woman who can do so should plan to be present every day and receive the full benefit of this very helpful course of lectures. No one should come to this reunion for the primary purpose of enjoying a vacation or recreation. This feature may be an object, but should be only secondary to the great purpose of feeding the spiritual man with the good things of God. If a reunion does not do this, it fails in its purpose. Let us all pray and prepare for this end. R. V. Hopkins, president.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the West Virginia District: The annual conference of the West Virginia District will convene at the North Parkersburg town hall at Parkersburg on Friday, September 9, at 2.30 p. m., continuing over Sunday. Business for the Sunday school will be attended to on Friday. Visitors please take the Market Street and North End cars, getting off at the Emerson school, then walk east about two blocks until you come to the town hall. I trust that all the Saints will make a special effort to be present and make this the most spiritual and successful conference we have ever had. Branch secretaries please have your statistical reports ready, also officers of the priesthood make out the reports of your labors during the last conference year so that these reports may be presented to the conference. Our semiannual district priesthood meeting will be held during the conference. Let all the priesthood make a special effort to be present, as I am sure great benefit can come to us as a result of these meetings.

We are hoping one or more of the Twelve may be present with us during the conference, so everyone come prepared to have a good time. Thomas Newton, district president.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN.—At Weyburn, Saskatchewan, July 14 to 17. Daniel Macgregor and A. Otis D'Arcy were present. The past year has been a trying one financially in the district, and not the usual gathering of the Saints were present, but a profitable time was had. Sunday school reelected their old officers; the Religion field worker in person of Sister I. M. Bergersen was present, and some good papers read. Sister Zella Maldum, of the Women's Department, gave an instructive lecture on food, its preparation, and care of children. The adoption of the budget system by the Sunday school and district is considered an advance. A. Otis D'Arcy, of Regina, was elected president, with J. R. Neil and John Tomlinson as counselors. All other officers remain as previous. A winter institute was provided for if found practical. C. B. Bergersen, secretary, Radcliff, Saskatchewan.

It's Up to You Are You Shaking Up or Rattling Down

Do you know that when a number of big and little things are shaken together, the big things go up and the little things go down? The same bump that sends one up sends the other rattling downward.

The same law holds in our everyday lives. The same bump that sends a big man up sends a little man down. The same trial that makes the strong man still stronger makes the weak man still weaker.

The only way to meet the trials of life and go up in the jar of life is to grow bigger.

WESTERN COLORADO.—At Bayfield, July 16, 17. Conference was not as large as usual, owing to the heavy rains in the vicinity. The prayer meeting was very spiritual, the Spirit being present in a marked degree. Edna Slick as women's organizer was present and spoke on the women's work in the church, which was greatly appreciated by all present. Women's Department was established at Durango at this time. Election of officers: District president, Chester Young, Ridge-way; first vice president, J. T. Scannell, Durango; second vice president, Josephus Hubbard, Delta; secretary, Jewel Harshman, Cory; bishop's agent, David S. Boyd, Ouray; chorister, Albert Rose, Delta. J. T. Scannell, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

BOWER.—George Franklin, son of Mr. and Sister O. T. Bower, was born October 26, 1919. Died after a brief illness, July 24, 1921. Funeral service from the home near Dorchester, Nebraska; sermon by C. H. Porter.

SITES.—Mary Janes Sites, was born October 20, 1854, at Louisville, Kentucky. Died July 27, at her home in Ava, Illinois. Baptized February 5, 1911. She is survived by a host of friends. Funeral from Saints' chapel, sermon by G. E. Meisenheimer, interment in Ava Evergreen Cemetery.

MILLER.—Alice, wife of George Miller, died at Canuck, Saskatchewan, from convulsions, July 18. Baptized June 1, 1921. Was a faithful Saint for the little while she lived after entering the kingdom.

AMMENHAUSER.—Lille May Bentley, wife of Gerhard Ammenhauser, was born November 20, 1876, in Laurence Township, Van Buren County, Michigan. Died June 23, 1921. Baptized August 7, 1885. Funeral at Ottumwa, Iowa, sermon by D. T. Williams.

A Few of the Evidences of the Existence of God

The existence of a Creator is seen manifested in various ways throughout the universe.

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for to see God, for to see the living God; when shall I come and appear before thee, O God? My tears have been poured out unto thee day and night, while mine enemies continually say unto me, Where is thy God? When I remember these mine enemies, I pour out my soul unto thee; for I had gone with the multitude; I also went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with the multitude that kept holyday. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance."—Psalms 42: 1-5.

The writer of this psalm had an experience that many of us have had. He had gone with the crowd, he had even gone with the crowd to the house of the Lord. He had not then received the consolation he needed, for his enemies had turned on him and asked, "Where is thy God?"

It is true that some have challenged the existence of God. Some have attempted to explain the universe in clearly materialistic terms. Hudson Maxim stated in the Scientific American Supplement in 1889 that—

"All events of all history and all phenomena and all evolution of organic and inorganic, animate and inanimate nature during all time, have been exactly those which have resulted from the sum of the combined forces of all the atoms in existence acting upon one another. The sum of all the forces of all nature at the present moment is exactly that of the sum of gravitative force and of the momentum acquired by its ultimate atomic solid units in their nearer approach to one another, occasioning the passage of matter from rarer to denser form.

"Every atom in existence follows a course mathematically exact—that which is determined for it by the combined forces exerted upon it of all the other atoms in existence. And every atom in existence follows a course as mathematically exact under the combined influences exerted upon it as do the heavenly bodies."

Haeckel, in his Law of Substance, made, in the end, force the determining factor, but found in the electron the source of all thought and energy. One emphasizes the existence of the atom. The other emphasizes the primary value of force.

Planets Move in Regular Courses

It is easy for us to believe that if the heavenly bodies were set back fully a thousand years that they would pass through exactly the same course through which they have passed, for we are able to perceive they move according to set laws. We are able to determine where they will be a hundred or a thousand years from now, always provided that no external powers or law intervenes.

For comets have been moved out of their course by coming too near the sun or one of the planets. The comets have had some effect on the motion of _____ also for inanimate nature, so far as the movements of electrons and atoms are concerned. But it is not as clearly certain that they follow a predestined course.

If acid be poured upon a rock, it dissolves it. There is here a change in the molecular structure by dispersion and a change in the atom movement. But when it comes to a free acting agent, like man, in history, the proposition is somewhat different.

It is true that the word of God says that we are foreordained and predestined. Christ and certain prophets were chosen before the world was, but what he has predestined is that those who are worthy shall be saved. There is no compulsion or limitation of the individual human will.

Influences That Affect Us

It is true that we are influenced by our surroundings, animate and inanimate. Our thought is influenced by our physical body, as is also our power of observation by the ability of our eyes and ears, though thought beyond power of eye and ear has not been prevented by this fact. We are also affected by endocrine action and hence by heredity. Our physical ability influences our thought and will. But so far as we can determine from observation and experiences, it does not absolutely limit either intelligence or will.

Mind affects body as well as body affects mind. There is a controlling monitor or censor which is coming to be more clearly recognized by leading psychologists.

The old idea of a supreme being, who interferes with the laws of nature in an arbitrary manner and without reason, but according to whim, is not so generally held to-day. But that does not mean that a supreme power of intelligence cannot and does not act according to law to bring about logical results by a new combination of forces acting according to natural laws.

In the familiar example, to hold a ball in the hand does not suspend the law of gravitation. If gravitation were not acting the ball would not remain in our hand, but would be carried away by every passing breeze.

The existence of a supreme being is seen in these great eternal laws of nature, that every planet moves according to the same laws that govern all the stars; the sun and this earth itself act by a like law; then under a microscope we find the same laws in force in the infinitesimal. Such facts presuppose intelligence rather than chance. It would be impossible to suppose that going over the same thousand years a second time the result would be always exactly the same without one single variation. According to the law of probability, such a thing could not occur if it were left to pure chance.

Nothing Creative Just Happens

There is the instance of a watch, which infers a maker. Has, then, the universe a Maker? or, is it the result of a thing of chance?

There is the other instance of the globe. According to this story a certain agnostic or atheist had insisted that there was no ruling power in the universe, no intelligent creator, that things had just evolved and happened. One day he entered the study of a certain minister and noticed there a very fine globe of the earth. He admired it very much: "My, that is a fine globe. I never saw a finer one. I must get me one like that. By the way, who made it?"

"What are you talking about? Who made it? Why, nobody made it. It just happened. It just evolved out of pre-existing matter. Go and evolve one yourself," replied the minister, turning the agnostic's argument back on him.

Yet how trivial is the creation of such a globe compared to such an earth as ours, let alone compared to numerous other worlds and suns throughout the universe! And how wonderful is the adjustment of this earth for the life of man!

We have previously noted how marvelously this earth is located for size, temperature, relation to the sun, the necessity of deserts and of dust, that there may be rain. We may add the very significant fact that wherever a disease is found, a form of fever or other organic disease, there is found so often an antidote right at hand, usually vegetable in nature, that it is believed to be a universal rule. The existence of such vegetable antidotes would seem very strongly to infer a direct intelligence, which has made it possible for humanity to win its battle over a myriad of insects and bacterial foes.

Deepest Evidence in the Soul of Man

But, after all, one of the deepest evidences rests in the soul of man himself. However he may scoff, in the hour of greatest trial he prays. Men who are agnostic in health, when approaching the great transition of death, pray.

A story is told of an English bishop, at sea in a great steamer, who asked the captain if there were any hopes. The captain told him he could not be bothered, but just to watch the men. So long as they were swearing, there was no particular danger, "But if once they begin to pray, prepare to meet your God." The story goes that the bishop sent a man down to find out what the men were doing and when he returned with the reply, "They are swearing something awful," he lifted up his hands and said, "Thank God!" apparently caring more for his own physical skin than their souls. But the vital factor is that this captain, from long experience, knew that when the men were in real danger, they prayed.

Agnostics in the face of death of loved ones have spoken of the life to come, beyond the curtain. Several agnostics have died with the name of God on their lips. But it is only fair to add that of some who have been called atheists, they did not in fact deny God, but only attack the errors of the organized church of their time.

It is such facts as these that have caused men like Doctor G. Stanley Hall to declare that if no such a person as Jesus ever lived, mankind would have had to create him, for there is planted so deep in the soul of man this belief in a supreme being and in a divine type that is a very son of God.

Perhaps of lesser weight, but not without importance, is the fact that so many men of science credit their greatest discoveries to a flash of inspiration, from a power outside of self. A book has been written in Germany of several hundred of such instances of inspiration of a power beyond the man himself.

These degrees of inspiration give an added testimony to a supreme power by whatever name it may be called.

A Child of God Not Confined to Reason

But the true child of God is not left to such a reasoning, or such an attempt through logic to reason the existence of God. For to this other testimony, to his own experience of this light that lighteth every man who cometh into the world, there is added a deep personal testimony, until like the Psalmist he cries, "As panteth the hart after the water brook, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

How wonderful is that imagery, which is repeated by the Master in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5:8): "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost."

For they that hunger and thirst after righteousness. As man long deprived of drink longs for water, so does a hungry soul thirst after the waters of life. Having tasted thereof, having the assurance of God, renewed and strengthened, there is a longing akin to the imagery of a physical thirsting.

Such a one can tell us, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Such a one may see God and live, though not after the carnal man. Such a man will find the so-called sacrifice of Zion a little thing to achieve that greater end of the coming of the Lord, as their souls are raised in prayer. "My soul thirsteth for to see God, for to see the living God; when shall I come and appear before thee, O God!"

Why Not Use the Inspired Version?

Many a point is made clear by the use of the divinely corrected version of the Scriptures.

Perhaps one of the reasons the extant and current editions of the Inspired Version of the Bible are not more generally used is that the type is small and that the book lacks concordance and index. We admit that this is a handicap and hopefully look forward to the day when the committee now charged with this duty shall have finished their task, and the long, tedious task of printing the entire book in its new form is completed. But we must not delude ourselves that it will be next fall or next spring. In fact, it is not safe to make any predictions, for it will take many months after the work of the committee is finished, and even that is an unknown date. Already some are sending in tentative orders for the new books, but this should not be done at this time. Announcements will be made when the time of issuance can be estimated.

But we have a very usable book in the editions now in our hands, all from the same plates which have been in use since 1867. Though bindings differ, the type is the same. We realize that with the King James Version of the Bible available in any desired style and size of type, with concordances, helps, maps, and pictures of all kinds, in any language or dialect, we must note the difference, and are apt to leave the better rendering on the shelf unused.

Aside from the advantage one has with the correct viewpoint in a general way from an intimate knowledge of the book, we cannot but wonder at the amazing number of arguments made by our own writers from an incorrect translation existing in the King James Bible. Often the mere expedient of turning to the new version and reading the clearer wording would clarify the argument and even remove wrong premises.

For instance, how many have stumbled over John 4:24: "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth"? Many weighty arguments have been advanced over this by otherwise intelligent persons who had the following at hand in the Inspired Translation:

"Ye worship ye know not what [said Jesus to the woman at the well]; we know what we worship; and salvation is of the Jews. And the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him. For unto such hath God promised his Spirit. And they who worship him must worship in spirit and in truth."—John 4:24-26.

We quoted more verses from the Inspired Version in order to give the setting for the statement. Altogether, it makes a most consistent proposition, and agrees with other passages concerning the character and attributes of God.

It is just possible that many of our people rather tacitly prefer the Authorized Version because to use it exclusively does not arouse unnecessary antagonism. They fear that they are not equipped to answer objections to the idea of a different version. Others may dislike the possibility of a main argument being diverted by a counter attack which would dissipate the force of the underlying theme.

We have sympathy with both these attitudes in those who have not had opportunity to acquire self-confidence, but not in those who should know better, for even a cursory acquaintance with the matter in the preface of the book would give one ample historical material upon which to base his arguments. The reading of a few other books on the subject, along with the exercise of common sense evaluation of situations and a working knowledge of other versions of the Scriptures in common use, would give one sufficient debating information. Yet not one person in ten thousand is going to call in question the use of the version.

The testimony of one of our prominent men is: "I have no fear in using the book, either outside the church or inside the church. I believe that the time has come when, moving in harmony with the command of God, it should be in general use in the church, and if put in more general use would be the means of helping to get our new edition with its references and such helps as may be desired to use." This is from the pen of Presiding Evangelist F. A. Smith, in his article in the HERALD of February 25, 1920.

For over sixteen years he has used it exclusively in his pulpit work, and says, "I have been wonderfully surprised to find quite a number of men, ministers of other churches, who had the book and have conceded that it was an excellent version of the Scriptures. On the other hand, I have been quite surprised to find how few of our missionaries and local ministers are using the book."

We are not making this plea for the book as a personal matter, but for the principle involved. It seems to us the inferential command in Doctrine and Covenants 42:15 is very clear: that we should now teach the Scriptures in this form to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

Our newer and younger members who have not had occasion to know the leading differences in the versions would do well to order the tract listed by the publishing house on "The three Bibles compared," as it will give in convenient form some of the major differences. But a consistent perusal of the books themselves is one of the best methods.

We should study the Bible more because of its own internal value, on account of its literary excellence, but primarily because it is the great basic source for our religious beliefs. And all too few of us in these busy days are studying the actual texts of the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. Because we study occasional lessons based on a set of selected texts we conveniently delude ourselves by thinking that is sufficient. It is the right thing to do—if we do not let it be our only method. But there is no finer educational assignment than to peruse carefully and yearningly the pages of the Bible, especially in the clear light of divine inspiration shed on it by the newer version we have suggested here.

E. D. MOORE.

Sister Lillie Maud Cox writes from Paris, Texas, that she enjoys reading the HERALD and that she is feeling sad over the loss of her daughter, Sister Virgie Hall.

The command, "Love your enemies," is not a hard impossibility on the one hand, nor a soft piece of sentimentalism on the other. It is possible because there is a human, lovable side, even to the worst villain, if we can only bring ourselves to think on that side, and the possibilities it involves.—Hyde.

Health Work of Church

The church physician insists that we must extend our disease-prevention program.

At the problem meeting at the Stone Church, Sunday afternoon, Doctor G. Leonard Harrington spoke on the public health work of the church. He stated that the purpose of the department was not only to treat the sick and prevent certain diseases, but to help people to live happy lives by following the laws of health. One great task is the prevention of disease.

We should have some arrangement by which people are examined periodically. There are certain illnesses which may be latent for years, then carry one off suddenly; while with proper treatment he could live on for many years.

Doctor Cabot reports that at a certain hospital the patients they were sending home well often came back sick. What is needed is a medical social department to follow the patients into their homes, determine the causes of the sickness, and eliminate them. We need medical social workers to help to do this work. We should have a social medical supervisor and a nurse in each group. We need sanitary workers to instruct people in public health work. We should have doctors of health, not doctors of medicine.

To accomplish this we need lectures and demonstrations. Milk that looks all right may be full of typhoid germs. If one could see a test demonstrating what is in milk there would be no difficulty in preventing people drinking infected milk.

An autopsy in every case of death would be a great help. Doctor Cabot says everyone should ask for it. This helped in Vienna to develop physicians whose diagnoses seemed almost miraculous. Doctor Harrington believed that no one should refuse the privilege to physicians desiring it.

In the past it would be the policy of the doctor not to talk to the patient frankly of his condition. It was a shame that they did not dare to talk honestly. We should not expect too much of the doctor, or expect the doctor to know everything. Let us meet him half way and enable him to talk honestly with us.

We as a church have received instructions how to prevent disease in the Word of Wisdom. Live the simple life. We need lots of fresh air. Even the damp air outside is better for us than the air in the house. We need instruction concerning our diet. This is given largely in the Word of Wisdom. We must have rest, we must have sleep, we must have work, but we must have play, too. We must not worry. Worry is nothing but going around in a circle and accomplishing nothing. By following the Word of Wisdom we should prevent the disease developing. Cure it on the inside before it develops.

Diseases may be classified under three heads: physical ills, mental ills, and social ills. The first are largely preventable. As to mental ills, some think the mind and body are of one organism. Kipling said that a woman was "a bone and a rag and a hank of hair." I think there is more to us than that. There are the emotional powers and the higher powers. The emotional powers may be considered like the lower part of an iceberg; the higher part to the upper part of an iceberg. So often the iceberg moves in the face of a strong wind because it is borne along by the submerged part which is in the grip of a very strong current.

Plato laid down the axiom, "Know thyself." Socrates, a pupil of Plato, "Be thyself." Aristotle, a pupil of Socrates, combined them: "Study nature and you will have both."

The world is disintegrating. Family and home life are being destroyed. This brings up the question of the delinquents. Zion must be the pure in heart. When a delinquent comes we must know something of the physical as well as the mental condition. The trouble may be due to an insufficiency of the thyroid. We are surrounded by morons, with the intellect of a child from seven to twelve. It is very important that we have some idea of what age the person is mentally.

For here in Independence we have asked for some workers who are going to come here and help us work out this problem of delinquency. There are so many people emotionally unstable it brings up the problem of accident; and it is astonishing how many come into a hospital and die as a result of accident. Some one must get busy and learn what social work is and come back and help us. We need some one to go out and learn what the laws of health are and then come back and teach us.

We need some one to help with mental cases. A few of us do not know it all. We need workers of all lines of knowledge and of training.

We need nurses at the Sanitarium, we need them badly—girls who have the three I's, Integrity, Intelligence, and Industry. Give this serious consideration.

If we carry through this program we will have to have nurses to help us. It is harmful to lay out this beautiful program and none of us pay anything or help to earn it in any way. As a philanthropic institution it cannot stand. The people must make the thing to come to pass and that takes finance.

We will have to get on the stewardship basis. Pay enough so that workers can live comfortably and business can expand and grow. If this splendid plan is carried out it will require the support of all of our people.

Church News

Bishop B. R. McGuire is still in the East and is expected to return about September 1. Bishops J. F. Keir and Robert T. Cooper will leave Thursday of this week for Lamoni on church business, and expect to attend at least part of the time at the Little Sioux and Gallands Grove and Stewartsville reunions ere their return.

The Women's Department is being represented by various leading workers of the department at several reunions. Mrs. William Madison is in Oklahoma. Mrs. J. A. Gardner has been in attendance at the Northeastern Kansas reunion at Netawaka, and expects to attend the Central Illinois reunion at Taylorville. Mrs. Ward L. Christy has been working in the vicinity of Chicago and in Wisconsin and Michigan. Mrs. Dora Glines has been at the two California reunions.

President F. M. Smith, accompanied by O. W. Newton, his secretary, is in attendance at the Northern California reunion at Irvington. President E. A. Smith is now at the Eastern Colorado reunion at Colorado Springs, having returned that far from Southern California.

Walter W. Smith, church historian, is expected back in Independence this week, as he has charge of the study course at Pertle Springs reunion. He and Sister Smith have spent the summer at Columbia University, also attending the reunion at Deer Park. Sister Smith has continued her special study in kindergarten work. Brother Smith has continued work in his specialty and has spent much time in the New York City Library, in historical research work. Because of his position as historian he has been granted special privileges, which have greatly assisted him.

A. M. Carmichael has taken work this summer at the Columbia University in religious education and Sunday school work. He has also attended the reunion at Deer Park, Pennsylvania, and Onset, Massachusetts, and has assisted also in the Sunday school work in Brooklyn.

The Auditorium Orchestra of thirty pieces, of Independence, under the leadership of Bishop R. T. Cooper, rendered an excellent ten-number program at the Girls' Home near Independence on Sunday, the 14th, with about five hundred visitors present. The opening prayer was by the Reverend W. E. Brown, of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. An excellent address was rendered by Judge Allen C. Southern, and the benediction was by Bishop J. F. Keir.

Passing of Joseph S. Snively

Again we were made sad, to learn of the death of Joseph S. Snively on the morning of August 11, at his home in Lamoni, Iowa.

Elder Snively was born on February 21, 1844, at Springfield, Illinois, and was baptized June 20, 1867. He was ordained an elder on April 9, 1868, by Jason W. Briggs, and was sent that year on a mission to Canada with John H. Lake. He continued to labor in that field for many years, so he was frequently referred to in the conference minutes as "J. S. Snively, of Canada."

In 1873 he was recommended for ordination to the office of seventy, but declined. As late as 1890 he was still appointed to Canada, but in 1892 was assigned to Decatur District (now Lamoni Stake).

In 1890 he was ordained counselor to E. L. Kelley, as president of the First Quorum of Elders. On April 19, 1894, he was ordained a high priest, by William H. Kelley, and continued to labor in Decatur District until the middle of the year 1896. He then labored in Southeastern Illinois a short time and in the Nauvoo District from 1896 until 1901, when he was appointed to Nodaway, Missouri. In 1903 he was appointed to the Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts.

Of recent years his services have been principally confined to Lamoni Stake on account of failing health. His service therefore, in his office in the Melchisedec priesthood and as a minister of the church, has been long continued. His heart has been with the work of the church and he has spent the best part of his life in work in the missionary field.

The Statistician's Office

An interesting system for keeping the records of membership.

Recently business took us to the office of our church statistician, Elder F. A. Russell. The business completed, he very kindly explained to us their arrangements and what they are trying to do.

In view of the fact that the general church record is the important record and we are members of the church rather than of any particular branch, and because of numerous errors which have crept into the records in times past, his office is now made the place of original entry of birth, baptisms, marriages where the bride is a member of the church, and deaths.

They maintain there a card index of every member of the church, alphabetically arranged, giving name, dates of birth, baptism, ordinations, marriage, branch affiliation, and transfer, together with registration number.

This is again checked by slips giving the more important items filed in the order of numerical registration.

Then there is a file of small cards, arranged according to branches and States, giving just the name and age.

There is, fourth, an ordination index classified according to office, alphabetically arranged. We note from this there are more priests in the church than any other office. Probably second, all members of the Melchisedec priesthood.

Those who cannot be located have their cards transferred to a loss and gain drawer. Those who are dead or expelled from the church, and all who have clearly withdrawn from the church in any manner, have their cards transferred to

The Country School

The country school is the basis of our educational work in America, yet Forrest Crissy, in the Saturday Evening Post, states that there are about 200,000 one-room, one-teacher country schools, of which 20 to 35 per cent could be at once consolidated, with great advantage to the pupils and the country as a whole.

The country school is the basis of our educational system. A professor of the university teaches from fifteen to twenty hours per week. Twenty-five hours is considered very near a maximum for high-school teachers, though in some cases there are members of college faculties teaching twenty-five hours and high-school teachers thirty hours a week. This, however, is considered excessive. Yet these teachers usually handle but one or two subjects. The country-school teacher, on the other hand, often handles as high as forty different classes in a day, on many different subjects.

It would seem that such a teacher should be paid well, for it would be false economy to have such basic work poorly done. But to the contrary, they are the poorest paid, and conditions and conveniences are such that they teach often there only as preparation for teaching in the city grades.

United States Commissioner of Education states that 62 per cent of all money spent on elementary, secondary, and higher education is expended for elementary schools. This is nearer the percentage that it should be, especially when we remember that by far the greater mass of education is done in these early grades.

One authority is quoted that 4,100,000 pupils are now in the first grades of the schools of this country. Two and a half millions have their first school experience each year. The presumption is that they will continue until the grade work is completed. Educational laws are built on that presumption.

But in the fourth grade, four per cent are absent without leave. In the fifth grade, we find only 57 per cent of those who started in the primary are still in school. In the eighth grade, there are only 976,000 of the 4,100,000 who started in the first grade.

Of those beginning their education in grade one, less than one fourth enter high school. The reason for this is assigned primarily to the inadequate way in which it is handled in the lower grades.

Zionism, What Is It

What is meant by Zionism has been a subject of some dispute. To some even of the Jews it represents merely a place of refuge for the persecuted Jew of Europe, hence, a place in which the British and American Jew is personally but little interested, and only so far as he may be able thereby to help his coreligionists. But in this connection the Jewish World says:

"But when we come to contemplate Palestine in this respect sheer practical consideration forbid. If an asylum, or a refuge, is to be found for persecuted Jews, Palestine should be about the last place on earth to be chosen. It has not the capacity for rapidly absorbing large numbers of immigrants, while its natural resources are not such as are capable of supporting for many years to come a vast population such as would be a sensible relief to the millions who live in Eastern Europe. Palestine can be made to flourish only by the expenditure of a large amount of capital and great energy and patience, which can be expected only from those to whom the country becomes their patria. And to the Jew—the true Jew—whose life is Judaism, and to whom Judaism is life, even Palestine cannot be fatherland unless it be bound up with Judaism, unless, that is, it be Jewish."

This same publication for July 6, has much to say concerning the riots in Palestine making it rather less safe than other places for the Jews as a place of refuge, and they also discuss adversely Mr. Morgenthau's attack on the Zionist program.

The Jewish World is distinctly an Anglo-Jewish publication but it is also distinctly Zionist, though recognizing the seriousness of present conditions.

A Statement of Church Aims

The reunion at Erie Beach for 1921 is now past history. Good fellowship is stated by the Chatham Daily News to have been the keystone of this reunion, which has given somewhat over a column in the News, including a brief statement by Elder J. W. Rushton on the aims and object of the church, and something of its history.

The statement of these aims as published in the Daily News is as follows:

"Our church takes this position, that it has returned to the original and simple Christian ethics to be found in the New Testament Scriptures. Its line of operation is to get men and women converted to Jesus Christ and to show that conversion by obedience to his teachings—faith, repentance, baptism by immersion, and the laying on of hands for confirmation.

"The object is to organize such people into a society that will become the kingdom of God—Christianized men and women living their social life under the direct influence of God. We believe that the union of the Christian world can only be brought about by that recognition of the supremacy of Christ, and the acceptance of his teachings as the basis of that union."

The Rent Law

The decision of the United States Court concerning the New York rent law and that of the District of Columbia has created a great deal of discussion. The law permitted the tenant to renew a lease at its expiration without an increase of rent. This was held by its opponents to be the taking of property without due process of law, contrary of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

However, this decision is supported in principle by a long line of previous decisions by this court, and some state it is as old as the common law itself. In the Slaughter House Decision, 1872, the Supreme Court ruled that the Fourteenth Amendment did not deprive States of their piece power, for on that power depends the social order and life and health of the citizens in the thickly populated community.

In Canfield versus the United States, the same court declares that the piece power extends to all great public needs. Justice Hughes, in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy versus McGuire, laid down the principle, "Liberty implies an absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions in the interest of the community."

These rent laws will expire November 21, 1922. The general principle, however, is far-reaching.

The Lamoni Stake High Council met prior to the reunion on their reunion grounds one mile south of Lamoni, and decided to recommend the purchase of fifteen acres, more or less, on the west, for an addition to the ground now held. This will give a fine camp for the Boy Scouts, for the Oriole Girls, a fine athletic field, and a place for a pool, and a better place for the big assembly tent. They state it will be one of the best and most beautiful reunion grounds in the church. They have decided not to erect an expensive permanent tabernacle, but will probably build a permanent dining hall and use it for a store room; also a permanent pulpit platform, and steel frames on which to stretch a canvas tent.

Scientific Versus Extraneous Preaching

By J. E. Vanderwood

"The scientific preacher speaks with authority, and not as does the extraneous preacher."

There is a tendency on the part of almost all mankind to find fault in others, but to justify in themselves all manner of weaknesses. This is quite nicely illustrated in the case of the good old Quaker, who said to his good wife: "The whole world is queer but me and thee, and thee's a little queer sometimes." This left only the Quaker as being beyond criticism. While this is the natural tendency of man, it seems that the time ought to be now when those who love truth should get beyond this childish state. The Scotch poet expressed the idea that should form the ideal towards which we, as Christian believers, should be striving. It reads:

"Oh, wad some power the giffie gie us,
To see oursel's as ithers see us!
It wad frae many a blunder free us,
And foolish notion."

If we could once acquire the ability to see ourselves as we are seen by others, we would be making progress towards the cherished goal. If we could only acquire the art of seeing straight, what a boon it would be to the race of mankind. I mean by this, that if we could just learn the principle laid down by the Master Teacher, when the poor unfortunate woman was brought before him, who had been taken in the very act of sin (and I have always wondered why the other party to the act was not brought also), and he answered them, "Let he that is without sin among you cast the first stone." If this philosophy were learned and carried into effect, there would be less heartaches, less suffering, and less sin. There is one thing above all else that should enter into our lives, and especially into the lives of those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and that is the philosophy expressed by Shakespeare in these words:

"This above all, to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

One Must Be Honest With Himself

I take it that no man, be he whomsoever he may, is qualified to represent Jesus Christ or to preach his gospel, unless he is absolutely honest with himself, honest with his fellow men, and honest with his God. For the moment a man resorts to any kind of double dealing or trickery, he that moment severs himself from the presence of the Highest. No man can be true to God who is not true to his fellow men, and no man can be true to his fellow men who is not true to himself. It is admitted that the finite mind is subject to error, but the point I wish to make is, that our profession demands of us absolute sincerity.

When I say absolute sincerity, I do not wish to convey the idea that I am always orthodox, and the other man is always heterodox; far from it. But I do mean to say, that we ought not to deny to others that which we claim for ourselves, because absolute sincerity will forbid this. The unfortunate thing in life is, that the man whose mind and attainments are limited is always ready to set boundaries for the minds of other men. That is to say, the individual who is circumscribed with mediocre understanding or attainments, generally seeks to put shackles on the man whose mind is enlarging and whose vision is extending. This is a great tragedy, for truth should mark the only limitation that should be placed on anything. We should be content always to abide by the truth. We should make truth our guest, and, having discovered it, we should be willing and ready to be governed thereby.

What Is Truth?

Of course a difficulty arises here, because each one says, I have the truth, and all that is outside of my little horizon is error. But pause a moment, for I would here like to reason with you a little. We may be able to make a discovery. Pilate asked, "What is truth?" and it may be possible that many of us, like Pilate, may be asking, What is truth? Well, one says, my theory is truth; and another says, No, you are wrong, for my theory is truth.

What is the trouble, pray tell? Simply this: Each one has a fragment of truth mixed up with a goodly amount of error. But, what is truth? Latter-day revelation informs us that "truth is knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to come." Truth, then, is absolute knowledge of things, past, present, and future.

It was said of Christ that he had no need that any man should teach him, for he knew all things. That is to say, he had the truth, for he had an absolute knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they are to come. I have truth in part only; my brother or my sister have it in part only; but they fragmentarily possess that which I am lacking, and I in turn fragmentarily possess that which they are lacking, so that unitedly we may more nearly approximate the whole truth, but individually we are materially lacking. If I would know the truth I must understand what my fellow men understand as well as what I may have discovered individually.

What Are Scientific Sermons?

Our caption says, "Scientific versus extraneous preaching." This may sound queer to a goodly number of people, but in the light of the foregoing definition of truth, I believe we may profitably give it a little consideration. That I might illustrate the matter, permit me to say that not long since a certain minister was told by his presiding officer that complaints had been made to the office concerning his preaching. The nature of the complaint was this: This minister had been preaching wonderful scientific sermons, but he had not preached to suit the ideas of this informant. This we must admit is a very nice criticism, but it involves a principle that I believe is worthy of more than passing notice. We therefore wish to draw especial attention to it.

Suppose that another informant should have written to the same office and said that another minister had been preaching wonderful extraneous sermons, but he had not been sufficiently scientific in his preaching. What would this presiding officer have concluded? Evidently this, That the first minister had been giving reasons for his conclusions, while the latter had been making assertions that were not warranted in fact. I wonder if the informant who criticized the minister for preaching "wonderful scientific sermons," really knows what the term means?

When but a boy I learned a little motto, that if learned by all of us would help us over many a difficulty in life. It is simple, but it is excellent. It reads:

"If Wisdom's ways you'd wisely seek,
Five things attend with care:
To whom you speak, of what you speak,
And how, and when, and where."

In order to get right down to the real facts, permit me to ask, What is scientific preaching, anyhow? We should know that he who speaks disrespectfully of that which he does not understand is foolish. Prudence would demand that we give a reason for our conclusions. It is childish in the extreme to answer "Just because," and have no good reasons for our criticism. Before we can determine what is scientific preaching we must get a definition of the term science. The intercollegiate dictionary defines it thus: "Knowledge systematized; truth ascertained; pursuit of knowledge or truth for its own sake; knowledge arranged under general truths and principles; that which refers to abstract principle as distinguished from 'art'; preeminent skill; trade; a department of knowledge."

That the idea may be more nearly complete, we must also get the definition of the adjective scientific, which is as follows: "Producing or containing science; according to or versed in science; used in science; systematic; accurate."

Therefore, reasoning either a posteriori or a priori, this presiding officer would be required to reach the same conclusion; namely, that this first informant objected to the scientific preaching of the minister because it was in keeping with knowledge that had been systematized, or with truth that had been ascertained, or because he was accurate in his knowledge, and hence accurate in his deductions. Scientific preaching, then, is that which is in keeping with the truth of the matter.

Knowledge Should Be Systematized

Is it a crime to have knowledge systematized, or to have ascertained truth? Is it wrong to pursue knowledge and truth for its own sake? If not, what does the informant mean when he says, "He preaches wonderful scientific sermons, but doesn't suit the people." Does he mean that the people don't want to hear knowledge that is presented systematically, or that they don't like to hear one speak who has ascertained truth? Or does he mean that because this minister is accurate in obtaining and presenting facts, that the people don't like to hear him? Or, what does he mean?

It is quite evident that a scientific preacher is not a haphazard preacher. A scientific preacher is one who will know his ground before he occupies it; yes, a scientific preacher is one who systematizes his work and thus will produce the best with the least expenditure of time and means.

Really, to be sincere about it, I don't know of a higher tribute that can be paid a man than to say that he is a scientific preacher, because that is tantamount to saying that when he speaks he will speak with authority. It will be putting him in a class very near akin to the Christ, who was able to speak with authority because he knew the truth of the matter.

Must Have Knowledge to Speak With Authority

A scientific preacher, then, is one who speaks with authority, and not as does the extraneous preacher. To use an idea expressed by Brother Rushton, it may be put thus: One can only speak with authority when he has knowledge, and one can only have knowledge when he has experienced the real thing.

We may rest assured then that a scientific preacher will not speak without knowledge, neither will he run without tidings. Indeed, it is a worthy compliment to be paid a man, to say that he is a scientific preacher, because to me such a one more nearly approximates the preaching of the matchless One.

On the other hand, the extraneous preacher is unstable as water; he flaunts things in the air; he takes drastic measures without any possible means of maintaining them. The word extraneous is defined thus: "External; foreign; not belonging to or depending on a thing; not essential." The extraneous preacher is the one, then, who is always wading through externals, who is feeding on husks, and is concerning himself about that which is foreign to the real truth. He is

THE JUSTIFICATION OF PLAY

O. F. Lewis, for the War Camp Community Service, Inc., says: "The leisure of life should become a great national asset, not a liability."

A noteworthy thing is happening, these days, all over our country. People are discovering a new continuing element in life—or rather, a new application of an old element. The element of play, or a "good time."

High authorities are quoted. Theodore Roosevelt is cited: "He is not fit to live who is not fit to die, and he is not fit to die who shrinks from the joy of life or from the duty of life." And there are to-day organizations, like Community Service, Incorporated, and the Playground and Recreation Association of America, proclaiming persistently the importance and necessity in life of recreation and play. The movement cannot be ignored. That life which is "all work and no play" is publicly challenged.

Earl Grey, who was Secretary of Foreign Affairs in England when the war broke out, has just written a treatise on recreation as an essential in the rounded life. Edward Bok, the noted editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, wrote in the Atlantic Monthly for September the reasons why he had resigned from the important work of editing, to play for the rest of his life. Not "play" solely, in the simple sense of physical sports and games, but play also through diversions, and hobbies, and cultural satisfactions.

What does this "play movement" mean? What significance has it for the church? How much play should there be in life? Let us quote Earl Grey:

"I do not recommend recreation as the most important talking of that which is not belonging to or depending on a thing. He gives his time to that which is not essential; he takes delight in assailing others, but fails to see that his own position is vulnerable.

Such a one has need to become scientific, for the scientific man knows; the scientific man classifies; he systematizes; he experiences; he becomes exact in his observations, he becomes thorough in his research, he is accurate in his deductions, he has ascertained the truth, and hence is able to speak with authority. Let it be fully understood that in order to speak with authority one must know, and in order to know one must make research, he must assimilate, he must classify, he must experience. This the scientific man does while the extraneous man worms about in the husks or skims lightly over the surface. The scientific man seeks for the hidden treasures of eternal worth while; the extraneous man, butterfly-like, flits about amid the already decaying flowers of his present pleasure.

About sixteen years ago I learned a little motto that will be very fitting as a concluding thought, for it is worthy of more than passing notice. It reads:

"In men whom men condemn as ill,
I find so much of goodness still;
In men whom men pronounce divine,
I find so much of sin and blot,
I hesitate to draw the line
Between the two, where God has not."

May our God in his perfect love and tender mercy illuminate our minds and lead us to a larger vision, a nobler aspiration, and a more nearly complete life.

thing in life. There are at least four other things which are more or less under our own control and which are essential to our happiness.

"The first is some moral standard by which to guide our actions. The second is some satisfactory home life in the form of good relations with family or friends. The third is some form of work which justifies our existence to our country and makes us good citizens.

"The fourth thing is some degree of leisure and the use of it in some way that makes us happy.

"To succeed in making a good use of our leisure will not compensate for failure in any one of the other three things to which I have referred, but a reasonable amount of leisure and a good use of it is an important contribution to a happy life."

In short, Earl Grey says: "Religion; family; work; leisure." And the thread of recreation running through life, and manifested particularly in the leisure time.

The experience of our country in the great war was the chief impetus to this new social problem—the problem of the good use, by all the members of the community, of their leisure time. Everyone remembers that in the communities around the hundreds of camps, the millions of our boys in khaki and blue could find wholesome, clean recreation, provided by the citizens. We sent to France the cleanest, most socially-minded army that ever went into a war. And it was the decent recreational opportunities of their free time that helped greatly to bring this about. Probably every reader of this article contributed in some way to make a soldier's or sailor's off-time more interesting and pleasanter, during the war.

What was good for the millions of fighting men now strikes this country as good for all of us! Recreation, play—in their proper places, and for proper ends. We have as a nation thought of play heretofore largely as belonging to child life. But even there the Scriptures seem to insist that the spirit and habits of childhood should be in some respects our guides to the righteous life. Unless we become as little children, we shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. And for little children, play is life.

It cannot be so for us adults, but play, diversions, recreation, amusements can be profitably admitted to most people's lives in much greater quantities than they now are. So says Community Service, the organization that has assembled the countless recreational experiences of the war. And it draws many of its arguments from what churches did during the war and are now doing, to establish, develop, or continue the wholesome and entertaining recreational work that is often spoken of by the one word: "Play."

Citations of the activities of churches throughout the country might be given by the hundreds, and each day many reports come to the headquarters of Community Service, at One Madison Avenue, New York, of most varied developments of the community spirit in church life. The words of Theodore Roosevelt gain daily a greater significance, as this movement grows stronger throughout the country:

"This country will not be a good place for any of us to live in unless we make it a good place for all of us to live in."

The writer has seen in Brooklyn a large basement room of a church made over into a most delightful club center for the boys and girls of the parish, who may invite their young friends as guests to the many functions held there. Equipped with games, and with opportunities for the normal, vigorous sports of youth, the room served first during the war for young men in khaki and blue, and now for the peacetime recreational life of the church. The adults join with the children at times in their jollifications.

One might paraphrase the famous verse, as follows:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said—
—'I'd like to play!'"

In the larger sense, the desire to play and have recreation is but a part of the very serious problem of proper use of the leisure time of life, as Earl Grey has said. There is going to be much more leisure time in life for most people than there used to be. Higher wages, shorter hours of labor, and indeed, the determination in the hearts of even millions of people that life shall not continue to be or to seem as hard as it used to be, all mean that people everywhere are bound they will have a good time in life!

Is that not the very core of the problem, to-day? How shall the leisure time of life be spent by communities, nations, the world over? Shall it be spent destructively, in dissoluteness, debauchery, gambling, immorality, extravagance, and in all the vicious activities that make a nation worse? Or shall the increasing amount of leisure time in people's lives be spent profitably, for the making of better citizens, for the development of a more rounded and finer life?

Churchmen and churchwomen will answer this question in only one way. The leisure time of life should become a great national asset to our country, not a great liability. But how?

By helping to provide means whereby people may profitably spend their leisure time. And we shall find we mean by "profitably" not alone study, and educational classes, and individual betterment along cultural lines, but also profitable amusements, recreational games, and sports.

Is it not time, in the year 1920, that we finally recognize that the determination to be amused and to have fun cannot under any conditions be eradicated from the human heart. Indeed, commercial amusements, like the movies, the theater, and all amusement parks and other undertakings to get people's money in return for amusements are, perhaps, in their totality, the largest single industry in the country.

What is the answer? The development, in our own home communities, for us all, and particularly for those who have few chances to choose their own amusements, of wholesome, simple, interesting amusements, that will create neighborliness, a better community spirit, law-abiding dispositions, and will lead to the desire for higher and better things.

The church is already vigorously entering upon the problem of adequate, sound recreation as an essential part of life. It is powerfully affecting its neighborhoods. Community Service, Incorporated, stands ready to assist, counsel, place its great experience at the service of church organizations. Shall there not be herein a practical example of cooperation for the common good?

Whatever else you may be, you must not be useless, and you must not be cruel. If there is any one point which, in six thousand years of thinking about right and wrong, wise and good men have agreed upon, or successfully by experience discovered, it is that God dislikes useless and cruel people more than any others; that his first order is, "Work while you have light"; and his second, "Be merciful while you have mercy." Remember that the happiness of your life, and its power, and its part and rank on earth or in heaven depend upon the way you pass your days now. Perhaps you think there is no chance of your being cruel; and indeed I hope it is not likely that you should be deliberately unkind to any creature, but unless you are deliberately kind to every creature, you will often be cruel to many.—John Ruskin.

When thou forgivest, the man who has pierced thy heart stands to thee in the relation of the seaworm that perforates the shell of the mussel, which straightway closes the wound with a pearl.—Richter.

PASTORAL

Crusaders for Christ.—Part 1

By A. H. Christensen

"The elder, priest, teacher, and deacon ought to have a million eyes, like the house fly," to perceive the opportunities in every situation.

"Where there is no vision the people perish."—Proverbs 29: 18.

Some of the attributes of vision are: Attention, perception, discernment, observation, and penetration; and all these may be expressed in simple language by the infinitive, to see.

No quality is more needed by one than clear sight. It is another of the latent gifts of man that may be improved by cultivation. And a branch officer will find his efficiency multiplied by even a few months' diligent study of the science of seeing; just as an athlete can lift, sometimes, a thousand pounds or more because he has studied the law of leverage, and intelligently uses his body accordingly. Or, even the farmer boy can shoulder a sack of wheat that his city cousin cannot lift, and it is not because of greater strength so much, as because he has learned, consciously or unconsciously, the laws governing the art.

The Bible and the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants reveal the names and accomplishments of a great many effectual servants; and the reason is not far to seek. Was it not vision? And having vision and decision as well, they became men of action and opportunists. Success followed in short order, and ever will.

When Paul Discerned a Situation

A good illustration is found in the case of Paul before the council, where he was smitten on the mouth by commandment of the high priest; and as the mob spirit was about to make way with him, "he perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out, 'Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.'" (Acts 23: 6.) This discernment was his deliverance upon that occasion.

I believe the gift of discernment of spirits can be cultivated, notwithstanding it is a gift from God.

"The cheek is apter than the tongue to tell an errand."—Shakespeare.

"Look in the face of a person to whom you are speaking if you wish to know his real sentiments, for he can command his words more easily than his countenance."—Chesterfield.

When Nephi was charged with the murder of Seezoram, he discerned a motive in the deed which pointed to one who would naturally be profited by the deed; and I think the spirit of assurance convinced him that his discernment was correct. So he directed that men go to the house of Seantum and put certain leading questions to him. And then to observe whether he should grow pale, etc. Thus was Seantum discovered to be the guilty one.

A lawyer once asked a certain question of a criminal who was in the witness chair, to which he received an answer. Then the lawyer said, "I noticed when I asked you the last question that you uncrossed your legs." To him this was evidence that his questions were hitting pretty close to a dangerous point in the man's story. Still, outward signs may be from fear or nervousness. A better lead in any case is to see if the alleged motive agrees in intensity with the deed, and thus discern the consistency of the case. This principle can be applied to one's own contemplated action in any work; viz, does the end justify the means?

Be Sympathetic With New Plans

Some one may feel like undertaking a plan for evangelizing the neighborhood, or the town, or the city. Then the question of a new method or the application of an old one will present itself to mind. Then is when penetration comes into use. Some one will say, It will be a futile effort. If all begin to say that, it will assure failure. There must be a way. Try the role of an inventor. Then if a plan presents itself to mind, write it down on paper. Then analyze it, looking sharply for incongruities with facts, but not necessarily with public opinion. If it is in harmony with facts and with what public opinion ought to be, it is sound. Then if it be deemed sound, set the plan away a few days to cool. Then go over it again, exercising sharp vision. Then submit it to some of the most conservative men you know. When it is thus cured, submit it to the president of the branch. And with a start like this, go out boldly and risk your reputation and your church and your family and friends, and your hat if necessary, and your all on the issue.

If I ever have a debate with an opponent upon questions of my own making, it will be in this form:

First (issue): My God against his; my church versus his; my Bible versus his; my logic and wit versus his; my reputation, my all, versus his.

Second (rules of debate): Catch as catch can.

Third (judges): The people, for themselves.

I would not debate a man who would limit me to the field from which I might draw truth.

Ammon's Tact a Good Example

When Ammon and his brethren went down to the Lamanites, their brethren laughed them to scorn, saying:

"Do ye suppose ye can bring the Lamanites to a knowledge of the truth? Do ye suppose that ye can convince the Lamanites of the incorrectness of the traditions of their fathers, as stiff-necked a people as they are; whose hearts delight in the shedding of blood; whose days have been spent in the grossest of iniquity; whose ways have been the ways of the transgressor from the beginning?"—Alma 14: 106, 107.

But these men believed it could be done, and they braved the dangers and endured the criticism of the public. They went among them and used many ways of the opportunist. Ammon's keen vision showed him, that if he could convert the king and his household, it would be a capital stroke towards bringing in the rest of the nation. He attempted the novel scheme of allowing himself to be arrested, and as a result became a servant to the king. We are familiar with the rest of the story of the conversion of King Lamoni. In the writings of Jacob we read,

"... many means were devised to reclaim and restore the Lamanites, to a knowledge of the truth; but all of it were vain for they delighted in wars and bloodshed; and they had an eternal hatred against us, their brethren."

"Speaking at the Sign"

In the South Sea Islands some of the early missionaries in the past hit upon a fine scheme to develop the native people in the art of public speaking and in a knowledge of the gospel. It is called in their language, "parau tuu tapao," and interpreted is, speaking at the sign. A Bible reference is placed on the blackboard and three or four questions upon the paragraph are also written. Then the chairman reads the reference and presents the question for open discussion. This brings forth spirited discussion and results in the advantages above named. The chairman has the last and closing speech on the subject. By this plan a host of Bible scholars and orators has been developed among them. Perhaps this plan would work well among the young people of the different branches. I feel sure it will work among the Indians. A sentiment for a thing must always be developed rather than found.

Some Branches Lack Vision

If there are any branches of the church that are not progressing, I am persuaded that it is primarily because of lack of vision, because,

"After the spirit of discernment, the next rarest things in the world are diamonds and pearls."—Bruyere.

"It is attention, more than any difference in native powers, that makes the wide difference between minds and men. In this is the source of poetic genius, and of the genius of discovery in science. It was this that led Newton to the invention of fluxions, and the discovery of gravitation, and Harvey to find out the circulation of the blood, and Davy to those views which laid the foundations of modern chemistry."—Brodie.

If you see a genius of wit and desire to be witty, cultivate the ability to see an allegory. Wit is that. Do not try to commit to memory certain fragments of ready-made wit, but learn to see the double meaning which exists in most every proposition. If you desire to be humorous, cultivate the ability to see an absurdity or the incongruity of a thing.

The elder, priest, teacher, and deacon ought to have a million eyes, like the house fly, and when they go to and from their daily work, every vacant storeroom will be a church; lakes and rivers will be baptismal fonts; groves will be reunion grounds; good roads and clear skies will insure a good "turn out"; and if they live in a rural place, a full moon will be a faithful ally come forth in the cause of truth; and even a drouth will be cooperation of God for a full house; and these are more easily believed than disbelieved.

Let them also learn the value of a notebook. And when they see a good successful public plan in operation on any subject and among any people, sketch down the fundamentals of the plan that their keen vision reveals is adaptable to the church work. Above all, have it handy in time of trouble and affliction, for Gethsemane is the birthplace of the most illustrious children that light has ever borne.

Don't Wait for Policies—Help Make Them

Thus let the extremities of the church organization develop themselves; let them become inventors; don't wait for the church to announce a policy, but help make it. Not arbitrarily, but always remembering the rights of those whom the Holy Ghost has made "overseers." An overseer is that which, added to a prophet, makes a seer; added to an elder, or high priest, makes a district president; added to an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, makes a branch president. It is that which, added to a member of the priesthood, makes him the censor over his diocese, let it be the branch, district, stake, or the whole church.

It seems reasonably certain that the missionary force, and especially the seventies, will soon be called away to push their way into new fields. This will leave the responsibility of missionary work largely upon the shoulders of the standing ministers. So, I can be of no greater service to my fellow laborers than by assisting them to the inspiration that will qualify them for the noble task of warning their neighbors. I therefore write of forces that will qualify them as producers. I could invent many plans and possibly be successful in having them passed by the conferences, but this would not equal the service of helping them to help themselves. By making the local laborers producers is not to limit the pro-

Zion, the City of Refuge

By D. R. Baldwin

What are her fortifications? Are her ramparts to be strong enough to challenge the battering rams of modern warfare?

"Gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion. And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12, 13.

The subject of Zion is occupying a prominent place in the minds of many who are wondering and asking, "What is to be the nature of Zion's fortification? Are her ramparts to be strong enough to challenge the battering rams of modern warfare? What the particular nature of her stronghold that is to strike terror to the souls of the wicked? Are her inhabitants to be so strongly armed, so marshaled and disciplined ducing prerogative of the overseer, for this is a common privilege.

The Pastoral Commission

The pastoral commission involves the evangelistic commission. Edification is not the sole pastoral function. The original apostle was not a permanent pastor. He was an evangelist. The earliest preaching was evangelistic, not pastoral. The original preacher's commission was that of the evangelist, not of the pastor. Christ chose and commissioned evangelists, not pastors. The pastor was a later product of church life. A special class of men was needed for the work of spreading Christianity. A special class may be needed in our day, and those who enter upon such a work must vindicate their calling and prove their credentials by their training, their consecration, their wisdom, their unselfish devotion, and by their success in their work. But the modern pastor should not fail to represent, in some form and in some measure, the evangelism of the apostle. The apostle is a fisher of men, and if the modern pastoral preacher represents in any worthy material sense what is left of the evangelistic phase of the apostolic commission, he cannot cease to be a fisher of men. The flock of God must be fed, but those who are not of the Good Shepherd's fold must also be won. Building up and gathering in cannot be affected wholly by the slow process of Christian nurture. The church receives those whom Christ receives, and who receive him, and those who receive him are not all nurtured into his grace.—The Work of the Preacher.

in the arts of wholesale murder, that the wicked will say, "The inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand?"

There will be some marked differences between the security to be found in Zion and the exposure in her neighboring cities. What is the nature of this difference? The signs of the times sound definite warning. Why are not the searchlights of inspiration focused upon this momentous question?

With our city unfortified, the abomination of desolation is liable to wipe us off the map. The only answer we hear to this question is, "The pure in heart are called Zion." Very well. But how will our purity terrify our blood-hungry neighbors? Christian purity will make us the most harmless, most inoffensive people on earth. The Holy Spirit that begets purity in our hearts with the same stroke begets within us good will toward all men, begets a strong love for peace. Is there then anything in mere purity to terrify the wicked? If there is, what is it?

The purity of Saints and the glory of God are very closely associated. Let us reason for a minute from cause to effect: If we can learn what will cause the maddened masses to lay aside their civilization and set them to murdering each other, if we knew what is to bring the desolating scourge upon the world, we might then see a way to avoid the cause and thus prevent the great scourge from coming into our midst. An ounce of prevention has always been worth a pound of cure.

With the light turned upon this part of the subject by the editorial of A. Max Carmichael in the HERALD for July 28, 1920, no one should be in doubt as to the cause that is producing the great upheaval. All students of economics should be able to see that it is the anarchy of capitalism that is driving producers into the coming revolution. A great poet has said, "The cause of the poor against the rich is always right, notwithstanding the poor make many mistakes."

Our Industrial Relations Commission reported that each of their investigations "show producers to be living below the line of decency." Wage workers in large corporations have learned that they annually produce from $1,000 to more than $2,000 worth of wealth per capita: and a mean imitation of living is all they get in return.

Our exports in 1920 to Canada alone amounted to $950,000,000, according to Current Events. This one item shows that we are producing a tremendous surplus of wealth.

W. J. Spillman, Chief of Farm Management, Washington, District of Columbia, as also our census reports, show that the average United States farmer's labor income is narrowed down to the disgraceful pittance of $318.22 and the average family budget at that time was $787.47. So it is that average farm families are living $469.25 below par, living on less than half fare. What becomes of the tremendous surplus wealth produced in our country?

Secretary McAdoo answers this question. He says that coal barons are clearing two thousand per cent on their investment.

Senate Document Number 259 answers this question by citing net profits of some supercorporations ranging from 1,000 per cent to 9,826 per cent of their investments.

Our attorney general answers this question by telling us that some coal companies are clearing from 8,000 per cent to 10,000 per cent on their total capital stock.

Our Federal Trade Commission answers it by citing proof that big corporations are piling away billions of profit by taking advantage of the crazy war propaganda.

Saint James answered this question by the spirit of prophecy many years ago. He said rich men would heap treasures together for the last days by exploiting the producers, and he told us the result.

Our war tax now amounts to $200 for each family, or each group of five persons. The recent advance in railway rates adds $300 more to the expense of each family or group of five persons. Add these figures to the present-day family budget and try your skill in figures by subtracting the sum from the average annual labor income. Where are you?

Add to the above producer's deficit the bill now before Congress to lift excess income tax from the shoulders of millionaires and place it upon the backs of common people; add to it the nation-wide drive to crush labor unions, and you catch a glimpse of the impossible thing that we are up against.

When men know they are producing more than a good living, so that they are entitled to the luxuries of life, and then see their wives and babies going cold, ragged, hungry, uneducated, themselves and their fellows deprived of constitutional rights and liberty, we may well judge the breaking test is being applied.

When our administration applies ninety-three per cent of Uncle Sam's big budget to accounts of war and only one per cent to education and preservation of health (Bureau of Standards, page 347), the blind should be able to read the signs of the times and see that the devastating scourge is ready to break upon us. When we spend ninety-three times the energy baiting for war that we do for any other purpose, we are quite sure to catch the kind of fish we bait for.

Since the common people refuse to organize and vote en masse for a new administration that will restore to us our Constitution and take the financing of our country away from private interests, it looks like a bloody revolution is inevitable. And this brings us back to our subject.

The text says of Zion, "The glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it." The glory of the Lord will be as in all former ages. It will be the same as in Zion of Enoch's day, the same as in America in Book of Mormon days, the same as in Jerusalem in days of the apostles—genuine legal and political equality. All things done by common consent, the laborer getting the full value of his products so there were no poor among them, for God has not changed. It is only the lack of this same Zion equality that prevents the glory of the Lord being with his people to-day. (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.) This is all clear enough. But the thing that tangles us is, What is the "terror of the Lord." that is to shield Zion from the vengeance of war? Of course no one dreams of physical fortification for Zion at this stage. They are futile as feathers. We all know that physical preparedness invites war instead of repelling it. The mightiest preparations for war known in history have recently been crushed.

Oh, Zion's fortification must be altogether different. The reckless spirit of war robs our boys of all caution, insomuch that at times they become eager to go over the top in the face of certain death. It is not at all likely that the wicked referred to are the war lords, the money lords who are heaping treasures together for the last days. These are they who coin their millions from the spoils of war. These are they who inveigle our boys into the shambles while they rob their own nation of her treasures. These are the slackers who never see the front, therefore their terror is not a fear of armament; it must be something else. Really, is there any difference in the "glory of the Lord" and "the terror of the Lord" other than the difference of man's viewpoint? Is not this principle of intelligent purity, this righteous equality, that which is called "the glory of God," the very thing that deals terror into the hands, heads, and hearts of the wicked profiteers?

Some way the writer catches the idea that the same thing that will bring the righteous to Zion "with songs of everlasting joy" will at the same time greatly terrify the wicked. History teems with illustrations of this fact. What so ter-

Home and School

A phrase which seems uppermost in the minds of a great many thinking people to-day is this: "The salvation of America lies in her school children." If we grant this to be true, then certainly this is a time for serious thinking, and we ask ourselves the question, "Is the school doing its part?"

A child receives his most important influences and development in the home; after that comes the school. These two institutions have more to do with making or marring a child's life than any others. From these two he is to get the ideals and training which fit him for living.

So many times people have an erroneous idea that the school is a place where children learn to read and write and spell, and nothing more. But the school should be very much more. It is a substitute home in many cases, and we, the teachers, are substitute mothers to the best degree we can be. I suppose I get a great deal of that attitude from my work here with the Mexican children, because in 99 per cent of the cases, the only "home" training they receive at all, is gotten from the school. We are the ones who have to give the right ideals of life—in fact, to educate them in the true sense of the word—to prepare them for complete living.

I think the crying need to-day is more cooperation between the mothers and the teachers. I know that mothers are very busy and often "put it off," but oh, mothers, take time to visit your children's school. It will be time well invested. It is your business to see what your children are doing, and why. I also know that some teachers do not care to be "bothered" this way, but I am certain that the majority of them do appreciate any interest you show in the school work.

Ideas in pedagogy have advanced rapidly the last few years. The teaching profession has always been accused of hating change and advancement—but in the last ten years there is a marked change for the better, and I believe we will see in the next few, a complete revolution in the methods of teaching. Mothers may think that will not concern them, but it will, very much.

There was a time when children had to sit with their ried the wicked profiteers as to see society organized to withhold their monstrous profits?

If news should go out that the Lord's people were organized so that producers get the benefit of their products, right thinking or righteous people would flock to Zion with songs of everlasting joy, and if news should go out that producers in Zion get full value of their products it would naturally strike terror to soulless corporations that now absorb seventy-five per cent of our net products (which means our savings or the amount we have added to capital) as no other act or thing could do. When all the inhabitants of Independence become workers, and all get full value of their work, their hearts will become knitted together in love. This is God's way; in no other way can they become one.

When righteous equality or Zionie conditions become a fact in Independence, Missouri, and the regions round about, of course the army against capital would not lay siege against Zion. They will most naturally do all in their power to protect a people known to be free from graft and greed. The common people will hear the message gladly as they did in Jesus' day; so will Zion become very great, very strong, very terrible, inasmuch that the wicked profiteers will give her a wide berth, for there they would starve to death.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of two articles by this author. The next will appear in an early issue.)

hands folded and listen while teacher poured her stock of information into their heads. Now we are trying to get away from that "lock-step" method of teaching and are catching up the child's interests, teaching and helping him develop through them.

Sometimes mothers are discouraged by the modern method of teaching, because it is so different from the way they were taught. I have friends who ask me about the way their children are being taught because they are worried. I remember one friend last year came to me and asked me about it in a way that showed she was worrying about it. In her conversation she said, "Do you know, Ralph has been going to school several months, and doesn't even know his letters yet."

Now, if that mother only knew, she would have been glad that he didn't! We have almost entirely gotten away from the old alphabet method of teaching reading, because it is unpsychological and is harmful to the child.

In the first place it is bad from a common sense point of view, because no one would say, "The dog ran after the cee-a-tee"—You see? We almost never use oral spelling, and never in reading. Then, from a physical point of view it is worse. Scientists have studied the eyes of children and have found that the eye should move in long sweeps, and with this system of dividing the word up into letters, it reduces the movements to short, jerky ones. These are exceedingly harmful to the muscles of the eye and are a great strain also upon the nervous system. It also makes for slow reading and hinders thought getting. Reading is chiefly for pleasure and to gain information, and thought getting is the main object.

An improvement upon the alphabet method is the phonetic method, which is used in some States. In it the letters are sounded instead of named. We use it in Arizona—because we have to—but we are given a great deal of freedom in presenting it. It has the same disadvantages as the alphabet method, except that the children can sound out new words to form their names like ca-t instead of cee-a-tee. But the eye strain and slowness are there still. The best method is the word or phrase method where children are taught to read in large groups of words, mostly by memory. This does away with nervous eye strain, and tends to make rapid readers. Reading for content is also emphasized. The alphabet should not be taught until the end of the first or beginning of the second, when the study of spelling is taken up.

So, if you do not understand just why your child is being taught a certain way, I am sure his teacher will be glad to explain why.

There is also a tendency towards more freedom in the schoolroom, too. If you visit a school, and there is seeming confusion, just wait a while and see what kind it is. If it comes from lack of discipline, then you have a cause for complaint, but if it is the busy confusion, like ants around an ant hill, then be thankful, for your children have a teacher who is helping them find the best in them. One of the best schools in this country often gets criticized because people glance in and say, "Why, they let the children play all the time!" Then you should say, "Glory be to the teacher," for play is the greatest thing that God has equipped your children with, and through it they are to develop physically, mentally, and morally. I'll venture to say that in the end, those children can pass much better tests than from some other school where the teacher teaches at the children. I think a book could be written on the benefits of play, and then not half would be told.

The schools have been accused, and justly, too, of being places where joy is crushed from the child, and his initiative and imagination are subdued. I am glad we are getting more and more away from that. We are working to the point of more freedom in the schoolroom—freedom with law—not license. When freedom degenerates into license it is no longer freedom.

I have been asked about home study. All I can do is to give my personal opinion, which may not be worth very much. I am a primary teacher, and say positively that home work is not only unnecessary, but is not desirable under the fourth grade. Some teachers require it above that, but I really don't think it is necessary under high school. If classes are small enough, children should be able to get all their work at school under supervision. If parents would let them work out their own problems it might not be so bad, but so many work them for their children, and it makes them dependent. The home is responsible in this much: Every home should have good books, and the child should be read to, and stories and poems told, from the cradle up. With this for a foundation, the school should do the rest. I really don't approve of home study, only in the case where the schoolroom is overcrowded. No teacher can give the individual attention each child needs when she has forty or fifty children in the room. In that case, anything is justifiable. But if your child's teacher requires home study, it probably is for a good reason. Often children get behind through sickness or absence, and, with a little outside help, the child can make it up. In this case the mother should help the child to help himself—not do his work for him. His development is the end to be gained, not the finished product of his work.

There really is a very serious burden resting on our shoulders—the mothers and teachers of young America. We are responsible for the development of the highest power of these little lives God has given. In that light we are really coworkers with him. Doesn't it make you feel grave and serious and a little "shaky"? It does me—because if I fail I do not injure myself half as much as I do these little lives intrusted in my care.

There are three very important things which are responsible to a large degree for the serious state of affairs with many of our children. The worst of it is, the responsibility can be traced back to us, the parents and teachers, and we are guilty. These are: lack of responsibility, lack of reverence, and love of pleasure.

These are well worth studying over carefully, and with an eye to planning how we can overcome them.

Oh, let us unite our efforts more than ever before, and help our boys and girls become the kind of men and women God intended they should be.

Woman's Field of Opportunity for Service in the Sunday School

We hear a great deal to-day about woman's opportunities. She has come to be a force in the business world, in social service, and more recently in the government of the Nation. She has always been a factor in religious movements, and it is hard to distinguish between man's work and woman's along these lines. In the church of latter days the work of both has become linked together in the home, in the Sunday School and Religio, and in the church and missionary field. Long ago the Prophet Joel, speaking by inspiration, caught a glimpse of this work, and we read, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those last days of my Spirit."

Just how far woman's opportunities for service in the Sunday school may reach, we do not yet know. That is one of the beautiful things about this gospel work, there are always new opportunities, undreamed-of possibilities ahead of us. We find her at her post as teacher, as organist, chorister, secretary, and often filling the office of superintendent, with efficiency.

More particularly, it seems to me, does her work lie in the primary department, and with the junior girls and boys, as well as with the older girls. No one but a woman, with a warm, overwhelming love for little children, can draw the charmed circle close and pour into the childish ears the old, sweet stories of faith and the love of the heavenly Father. She may be a past mistress in this art of story telling through teaching her own little ones, or she may be a young girl with a kind, big-sisterly interest in the little folks—many of our best primary teachers are from this class—but if she has the art, either natural or acquired, and a prayerful and sincere heart, she will succeed. The responsibilities of this work of teaching the younger children are greater, it seems, than any other, for the impressions made on the plastic minds of childhood last through the years when the cares and pleasures of life crowd out the later teachings.

The woman teacher may hold the interest of the older children as she recounts the heroic deeds of men and women in days gone by and implants in the young hearts a love of truth and right living. As she teaches the girls just merging into young womanhood, she will relive the days of her own girlish dreams and aspirations, fight again the temptations of youth and help these, her younger sisters, through this period of emotional battles to the surer, safer harbor beyond, by the richness of her own experience.

But not only within the four walls of the Sunday school proper is woman's work apparent. Stand on the doorstep some bright morning when you happen to get there early and notice how many parents bring their children and how many send them—and you will have your finger on the pulse of the school. Be it far from me to censure the patient mother who spends six days of the week and perhaps part of as many nights in wearying household duties and gets up early on Sunday morning to scrub little faces and brush bobbing heads that the children may go off clean and happy to their classes. But if you can possibly go, mothers, you will be amply repaid by the fuller companionship of your children and the good you will receive yourself. I know mothers who bring their little ones and have their own lessons also—busy mothers, too; so you see it isn't impossible. Let me digress a moment to say that the same rule will apply to the father with equal force, and if he will be a comrade to his sons in the serious things of life, as well as in their sports and pleasures, he will find them ready to come to him for advice and support when they may perhaps begin to feel that mother is unable to cope with their problems. You see there is a current notion that the fathers have a little easier time of it than the mothers, so it does no harm to tell them their duties sometimes.

So we find that the responsibility is the same, whether in the home or in the Sunday school; that of helping to build the character of the young people of the church. Upon this rests the whole future of the work, for upon their shoulders will come, at no distant day, labors that will make those of the present seem light in comparison. May we so fulfill our trust that when Zion shall stand redeemed, a light to the world, there shall not be found wanting "one of these little ones."

Woman As a "Home" Missionary

Our women of the church have a great responsibility, not only in their own homes in rearing their own children, but in helping the mothers who have not the influence of the gospel in their homes and lives, in their efforts to bring up their children in a right and proper manner.

The Bible teaches us to do good to all men, especially to those of the household of faith.

A large percentage of the children of this generation do not attend any Sunday school and are not getting any religious training at home. What is the result? We all meet it every day. Children reared in homes of the Saints associate to a large extent with such children daily and are influenced more or less by them. If we can arrange to associate with the mothers of our neighborhood and talk over these problems, we can let our light shine—if we have any—and if we are true Latter Day Saints we should be full of light, shedding it forth to those less fortunate. We should be the very first in our neighborhood to assist in any good cause.

We have all heard the old sayings that we cannot all be preachers and cannot all do great things, but one thing we all can do is to build character, and, as we are often told, people of the world are always watching (and many times without spectacles) the lives of the members of the church. We, then, as "home" missionaries, can try to live that our lives may be a living witness of the truth of the gospel, so that we can be coworkers with Christ.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants to "bring up our children in light and truth." To do so we should study and try to become enlightened concerning the gospel; also, we should read all good books and the church publications as well, so we can properly train our children.

Missionary work in a Latter Day Saint home means a great deal of work to properly rear our children. To do this work properly our children should be taken to Sunday school, not sent, thereby setting a good example to both children and men-folk.

Children should not be allowed to grow up in idleness, but should be taught concerning the ways of the Lord in their youth, that they may not depart therefrom in later years.

The field is a large one for a "home" missionary, even if we seem to get no farther than our own homes, for there are many opportunities open to us for work.

Then we, as "home" missionaries, cannot afford to sit idly by and wait for "opportunity" to knock at our door, but like Abraham Lincoln, "Let's meet them on the way." Greater fields for service are opening for the women of the church, and as this is the hastening time, we also must hasten to accomplish our work, that we may in this way have our part in the redemption of Zion.

(Paper by Mrs. A. Ahlstrom, read on Women's Day at Sharon Branch, Sharon, Pennsylvania.)

To Cook Meat

Having been requested by our local Women's Department president to write an article on how to cook tastily the cheaper cuts of meat, I submit the following:

Good cooking can make any meat tender and bad cooking can make any meat tough. If we take a little piece of raw meat and put it in cold water the juices gradually soak out of it, coloring the water pink and leaving the meat white. Take another little piece of meat and pour boiling water over it, and though no juice can be seen escaping, the whole surface of the meat turns white directly.

In cooking meat we should always have our cooking dishes hot to begin with. If it be frying, the skillet must be hot;

if boiling, the water should be boiling, and if roasting, the pan must be hot, as well as the oven, so as to sear the surfaces of the meat at once, in order that the juices will be retained in the meat.

Any kind of roast is better to be dredged with flour, and while roasting it should never be pierced with a fork. Times without number we have seen people take a fork and stick it into the breast of a fowl to see if it is cooked. This is a great mistake, as it lets out the rich and nourishing juices, and leaves the meat dry and tasteless.

Give a fowl plenty of time to cook, and do try to keep the skin unbroken. It is not necessary to stick a fork into it to turn it over. The fowl should be placed in the pan, breast up, until nicely browned, and then turned and basted often. If you have an idea that it is old, by adding a little vinegar to your basting water, it may be made more tender.

In boiling a soup bone, put it on in cold water, thus extracting as much of the juices into the soup, broth, or "beef tea," as possible.

Liver is a very cheap meat and can be of service in many palatable ways. A common one is combining it with bacon. First, fry your bacon and have your liver sliced and dredged with flour. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, and fry to a good brown, being sure it is well done without burning. Place the liver in the center of the platter, the bacon around it, and pour over a gravy made by adding a little flour, a couple of tablespoons of vinegar, and boiling water to the fat in which the meat was fried. Another way is to slice some raw onions into the bottom of a pudding dish, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and over it place slices of liver, with a little sage sprinkled over them. On top, place a few strips of bacon, and put in the oven, adding a tiny bit of water if you are afraid it will burn. Baked potatoes are splendid served with this.

"Shin" beef can be used many ways. Boil until tender, seasoning with salt and pepper. Pick the meat to pieces with a fork, and place in a mold, pouring over your rich stock. Let get cold and slice it for serving. You can have a real nice boiled dinner with this same cut of meat, by putting it in a large pot to cook, letting it simmer gently for some hours, and adding to it, later, vegetables such as carrots, parsnips, turnips, cabbage, onions, potatoes, a sweet apple or two, a few cloves, etc. Don't forget the seasoning.

Pork "shanks" can be used in much the same way I have described for shin beef.

Pork tenderloin makes a very nice salad, used much as chicken is for the purpose. Boil the tenderloin, and when done, let it stand in its stock until it has absorbed all the moisture it can, and is quite cold. Chop it in dice shape and add two cups of chopped celery to one of the meat. Mix with a good boiled salad dressing and serve with crisp lettuce or a bit of parsley.

Sweetbreads should be soaked in salted water until the blood is drawn out. Blanch a little more by putting them on to boil with a little salt and a teaspoon of vinegar in the water. Boil for just a few minutes, and then take off and pick out the hard, gristly parts, and the stringy membranes. Dip in beaten eggs, roll in dry biscuit crumbs, and fry in hot buttered pan. Another way is to continue boiling them until tender, and serve with a white creamy sauce on buttered toast. They are delicious.

For Swiss steak, pound into ordinary round steak all the flour it will take up. Place a bit of suet in your frying pan, and let get very hot. Brown your steak on each side, add a little hot water, and let simmer very slowly, allowing an hour and a half at least for it to cook. Season with salt and pepper. It may be prepared with a little onion if one wishes, cooking the onion slowly in the hot fat before browning the meat.

Another treatment of round steak is to put it through the meat chopper, add a little salt, pepper, cinnamon, sage, and savory. Make it into a loaf and roast it. It can be served cold. It can be baked in a pudding dish, which holds the juices even better than the roasting pan. You can make the same mixture into balls, roll in flour, and fry if you wish.

Round steak can also be made into an appetizing meat pie. Let it stew on top of the stove gently, until tender. Season and thicken the gravy a little. Place meat and gravy in baker, cover top with a good pastry crust, and bake in oven.

When you fry chicken, have it partly boiled first, then flour it, and place it in a hot buttered pan to fry. It takes less butter to do it this way, and if you have a small portion, you can "stretch" your dish by adding a little cold veal cutlet or lamb chop, and it helps out wonderfully well.

Smoked ham is much nicer baked than boiled. If it is too salty, throw away the first water and add more, being careful to have at boiling temperature, and then bake gently several hours. Let it cool in the water. This is a good plan to follow with all boiled meats, too, as it prevents the outside getting hard and dry, and the meat re-absorbs much of the juices.

Here is a pickle brine for meat. One cup of brown sugar, a piece of saltpeter about the size of a little white bean, one and a half pounds of salt. Boil in a gallon of water. This will pickle a ham weighing from six to ten pounds. In "corn-ing" beef or pickled tongue, allow from eight to ten days for the meat to stand in the brine, which may be used over again by skimming and adding more salt and water.

The main essential in learning to cook meat well is to get really interested in what you are doing, and take note of your experiences. If you do this, everything will usually turn out all right.

Education an Unfoldment

10. What criticism can you offer in considering only the first aim in the education of the child?
11. Explain the following statement: "Paul may plant, and Appollos may water, but it is God that giveth the increase."
12. Apply the preceding statement to the education of the child.
13. What do you think of the creed of F. Clement C. Eger-ton?
14. According to our author, anything that hinders the development of a child should be taken out of his way. Name some of the things to be taken out of his way.
15. What is meant by the lock-step method?
16. Name some things that will help his development.
17. How is the teacher responsible for the child's growth?
18. Discuss Doctor James's definition of education.
19. What are some of the problems of the school?
20. What is meant by the problems of opportunity?
21. Give reasons why the school does not train for "life."

22. Why is the problem of expense in the schools a handicap to the child?

23. How does ignorance affect the school proper?

24. What are some of the questions that arise out of the social question?

25. What can the schools do towards moral education?

26. What place should religious education have in our schools?

27. Suggest way in which the religious question may be settled.

28. Are we, as a church, solving this problem satisfactorily?

29. In your opinion, what could be done to improve the situation?

30. Answer individually the ten questions at the close of the chapter. Read carefully the Reading References at the close of the chapter, for hints for further study.

A Warning to Users of Condiments

A prominent physician of Chicago, who uses the public press through which to disseminate his gospel of correct living, in a recent article on the decrease of certain diseases which has been noted contemporary with nation-wide prohibition, speaks particularly of the disease known as cirrhosis of the liver, sometimes called drunkard's liver. He says in one great hospital in his city 160 such cases were cared for in 1916, while in 1920 only 19 of that sort were entered.

He queries what is to be done, if prohibition continues to eliminate this disease, for the education of the young doctors. Where will be obtained the cases for the clinics where the student is privileged to observe the ravages of various ailments? Shall we have to call for volunteers, who in a spirit of consecration to science will proceed to drink themselves into a condition in which medical students may study their "drunkard's liver"? And then the doctor answers his own query by saying that the "hootch" brigade will probably supply a considerable number of patients for observation, and adds that even if that source fails, they will be able to get a number of such cases from the "mustard eaters." The concluding paragraphs are:

"The German literature in the main ascribes this disease to alcohol. . . . The British literature ascribes it to liquors in the main, but the Hindus have it, and they do not drink; they get it from eating ginger. The Egyptians have it, and they do not drink; they get it from eating highly-spiced foods.

"When the day comes that prohibition approaches perfection and the cases of alcoholic cirrhosis of the liver are not longer found, we will be able to find enough cases to teach our students with, among the pickle eaters and those who varnish their meat with mustard, not to mention those who eat cove oysters swimming in pepper and salt, and those who sop their rare roast beef in high sauces! But why think of it? Let us be thankful for what we've gained."

Poor Little Rich Kids!

CHICAGO, June 12.—Woeful conditions exist among the poor little rich children of the Gold Coast aristocracy, according to Doctor Caroline Hedger, director of the Infant Welfare Society.

Elaborate attention has been paid the children of the slums and the poor districts of the city. They have visiting nurses, swimming and wading pools, and schools equipped with every modern convenience. The children of the rich were left to shift for themselves, the idea being that they had everything they desired or needed.

Doctor Hedger says, however, that in one exclusive north side school fully 50 per cent of the pupils are of subnormal weight and more than half of these are 7 per cent under correct weight.

By way of comparison, the children "back of the yards," that wild, free domain which thrives on the redolent odors from the stockyards and the rare perfumery emanated from Bubby Creek, are growing "fat and sassy" and only 18 per cent of the children in this district are under weight. In the tenement districts on the lower north side, but one child in six is under weight.

Miss Sarah Place, superintendent of the Welfare Society, says children of the wealthy people are fed too much rich food. Their exercise is confined largely to riding in limousines, whereas they should be permitted and encouraged to get out and romp, swim, play all sorts of games, eat simple food and plenty of it, and get long hours of sleep.

Wool Saves Labor

How the styles have changed in kitchens, and how the styles have changed in caring for them! In the days of iron skillets and kettles, of earthenware or tin pie plates, and of iron spoons, brick dust was one of the kitchen requisites if the things were to be scoured.

To-day, with aluminum spoons, pots, pans, and dishes, with fireproof glass baking dishes, and benefits of scientific manufacture, "cleaning ways" have changed. If the aluminum is scoured with any cleaner that is handy, dire may be the results. Unless you have already placed the mysterious woolly glistening stuff called "steel wool" upon your market calendar, do so. It will save a world of labor. A bit of this rubbed over the aluminum kettle or saucepan rewards one with a mirrored surface.

It is also successfully used on nickel, porcelain, enamel ware, and glass. Then, too, it may be used in cleaning enameled woodwork or stained floors. In fact, until you begin using this magic servant so new to the household worker, you won't believe the labor it can save.

Thoughts

Thoughts are strange things—
Some thoughts will roam
As though on wings;
Some stay at home.

Some thoughts hold tears,
And some are sweet;
Some thoughts fill years,
Some moments fleet.

Brave thoughts may bring
A hero's part.
Love thoughts will cling
Around the heart.

My thoughts to me
Are precious, true;
Each one, you see,
Is filled with You!

—Iris.

Steam Dangers

Do you give the proper amount of heed to which way you put the kettle on the stove? If the spout is turned out into the room, many a nasty burn is liable to be had. Children are very apt to be just tall enough to catch the dangerous vapors in the face while passing, as well as the liability of burning the arm of one who is cooking and reaching over it. Always turn the spout to the back of the stove.

The Curtis-Moore Debate

Satisfactory results in debate with Baptist representative at Centralia.

The debate between Elder J. F. Curtis and W. J. Moore, of the Missionary Baptist Church, is now a matter of history. The debate, from our viewpoint, is a decided success, and the Saints are greatly pleased with the results. The Baptist people have been anxious for a debate for some time. The propositions they submitted they had held for the opportune moment for three years.

Our branch has been organized less than two years, but our people have been held together, for a time long antedating our organization, by cottage prayer meetings and the occasional visits of the missionaries. After the organization of the branch we held regular services each Sunday, as well as midweek prayer meetings and Religio, in a hall. We soon outgrew our little hall and purchased a site for a church building. Our Baptist friends, however, purchased a site in the same block with us, and succeeded in erecting their building before ours was even begun. We lost nothing by this, however, for the decline in building material more than showed our good judgment.

But having a real church inspired the Baptists to try to steal our young people. In this they were unsuccessful, for they preferred their "little hall" and the gospel to anything these people could offer. One Sunday, just before we moved into our new church, the Baptist minister announced that the Latter Day Saints had challenged them for a debate, and in a fifteen-minute boastful speech proclaimed their ability to meet any church or denomination. The pastor of our branch had on this particular day committed an unprecedented act; that is, had dismissed our regular 11 o'clock preaching service and had, together with many of his flock, attended the Baptist service. Therefore, being present, he at once arose and contradicted the Baptist preacher's statement, telling the congregation that no such challenge had been made, and that no debate was wanted, nor had been even thought of by the Saints. The Baptists were not to be put off, however, and the usual church propositions were finally agreed to. The Baptists chose W. J. Moore, whom they claimed to be the best man they had, to represent their church, and J. F. Curtis upheld the gospel for us. The debate was held on the Baptist church lawn, commencing on July 18, and closed on the 30th. On account of the hot weather no day sessions were held.

The Baptists were in the affirmative in the first proposition, and in his first speech, Moore, instead of setting up his church, went back into the Old Testament for references to try to prove and lead up to his pet theory that the gospel, which he called "the covenant of grace," was made between God the Father and God the Son, and that the people had nothing to do with it.

As proof he read the 89th psalm, and it must have taken Moore's breath to see how easily Brother J. F. Curtis destroyed that theory by reading from Ezekiel and others where God said that the new covenant was to be made with the house of Israel and the house of Judah, Jesus Christ being the Mediator.

Brother Curtis read from their Philadelphia Confession of Faith, where in one paragraph it declared God had decreed all things, and following this, farther on it declared that God had not decreed anything.

Then, too, their pet theory of "Once in grace always in grace" was proven faulty through the life of Judas and David. But, of course, Moore claimed Judas was a devil from the beginning. When it was shown from the Bible that he was a disciple, chosen an apostle, and sent out with the others as a sheep, the theory fell flat.

Since Moore seemed slow in setting up his church so the people could see plainly his organization, Brother Curtis had the usual thing to do, that is, reading from their Confession of Faith and histories to show their belief and origin and practices and organization; then from the Bible pattern he showed the Baptists faulty in regard to all.

Brother Curtis sprang a surprise on them by showing they have unchanged on their records a decree permitting polygamy in India, where those who are already living in that condition when joining the Baptist Church are allowed to continue to live in that state as members of the church. Moore claimed that the apostles, prophets, seventies, etc., as well as the miraculous gifts, were placed in the foundation of the church organized by Christ and could not be projected through the superstructure; therefore, they were only enjoyed during the primitive state of the church. This was easily met by showing a succession of men chosen to the apostolic office and referring to 1 Corinthians 15 and Ephesians 4, as to how long all these officers and the confirming gifts were to continue in the church.

Moore of course denied the apostasy, and in a weak effort to trace the church from John the Baptist, accomplished the remarkable feat of unearthing a tombstone and a baptism in England as far back as the date of 1643.

Brother Curtis proved by reading from their own histories that the first Baptist church in America was founded by Roger Williams in 1638, and that afterward he left them, believing it would take divine guidance to organize and set in order Christ's church.

Mr. Moore declared that those who believe and repent are instantly saved by grace and cannot fall, and therefore that water baptism is not a saving ordinance, and where water is mentioned in Christ's answer to Nicodemus, that it should be understood as meaning the blood of Jesus cleanseth us from sin.

It was shown in answer that "If we walk in the light as He is in the light, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin," etc., and that included obeying all the gospel law, including the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, as well as for other blessings mentioned in the Scriptures.

Mr. Moore declared that in Peter's answer on the day of Pentecost where it is stated that baptism is for remission of sin, it should be understood to mean that they were to be baptized because they had already been saved.

Moore tried to prove his position by a diagram before the audience, but Brother Curtis in his answer took Moore's diagram and analyzed the sentence and proved that Moore was wrong, and the reverend gentleman did not boast any more of his superior scholarship.

When Brother Curtis affirmed our proposition, he used his large dispensation chart, showing the setting up of the church in the different dispensations, after times of apostasy, including the restoration of the church in latter days and the latter-day apostasy and the need of the work of the Reorganization because of it, was in harmony with prophetic statements of the Scriptures.

Moore's reply during the last half of the debate was a rehash of the same old stuff that he has used in the debates with our men in the some six or seven times he has met them.

He read from John D. Lee's history, and Roberts and others on Utah History, and the Utah edition of the Book of Covenants, reading from the so-called celestial marriage revelation, trying to impress the audience with the idea that we endorsed and believed all this. But Brother Curtis in reply easily showed up his duplicity and cunning in trying to mislead the audience, and presented a number of court decisions in our favor, and also showed the audience that Moore had misrepresented in his reading from the encyclopedias in not reading all of the statements relating to the Reorganized Church, etc.

The splendid service rendered by the Saints of Centralia and the local choir in the musical numbers, and in leading the congregational singing, seemed to be very much appreciated by those attending the debate.

The daily papers of the city were anxious to get daily news items of the debate which were furnished by a press agent, and they gave prominent place to the items furnished, and the meetings were the talk of the town during the time of the sessions, and the attendance was good, not only from the city, but from the surrounding country. Many of the Saints from the many parts of the district attended.

The sentiment at the close and since the debate, of those not of our faith, seems to be very favorable, and there has been a gain of four in membership and we expect baptism next Sunday.

One feature of the debate worthy of note was the daily prayer meeting held by the Saints, to which we attribute the successful result of the debate.

CENTRALIA, ILLINOIS, August 2, 1921.

With an Auto House in the West

Elder Knisley reports unique situations concerning the steamer auto campaign.

We are again encamped on the banks of the Little Wind River at Fort Washakie, Wyoming, where we baptized the four Indians last fall. And again are we entertaining the native redskins at our home on wheels.

The four we baptized were an Indian and his wife and two daughters. The Indian died last spring, leaving the wife and daughters to survive him. We are observing the effect of his saintly influence and his testimony and message to his fellow tribesmen, for he truly was born again and proved himself worthy of the Great Spirit which evidently abode with him to the end.

He had the copy of the Book of Mormon which he had purchased through me put at his head in his burial casket. They said that he read it from day to day, would both read aloud to them and tell of its marvelous accounts of their forefathers.

Our trip here was from Independence via Topeka, Camp Funston, Denver, Fort Collins, Tie Siding, and Rawlins.

Our registration from Independence to where our car stands is approximately eleven hundred miles, with some detouring.

Our first missionary pause was out from Laramie some fifty miles in the canyons, where a couple of weeks ago I baptized three widely known ranchers, all adults and parents, people of isolation but of literature, of intelligence and ideal refinement. They were Mr. T. B. Dodge, and his father and mother who live about five miles distant.

They are far from town, but they have Franklin cars, which cuts the distance down materially. We expect another pause there on return journey in the fall. It is interesting to hear the stories of pioneer life way back to near the buffalo days. Brother and Sister Dodge, senior, are about seventy years of age, and they can tell the story of the plains.

Crossing here from Rawlins we saw several antelope and many flocks of sage hens. There is a five hundred dollar fine for killing an antelope, so we kept the Word of Wisdom.

Since writing the above we have entertained in our car Charles Washakie and wife. Mr. Washakie is son of the widely known late Chief Washakie, who was buried with honors here some years ago by our soldiers. They came to see us and to inquire and learn about our message. They were quite modernly dressed and are fine-looking people.

Temporarily we will presently pull away from the Shoshones and go over among the Arapahoes, where I have in particular view an Indian by the name of White Antelope who has met some of our people in his travels.

Our car with its burden weighs between two and one half and three tons, but our power plant has proved the master of every hill, sand draw, and hole. Steam is the real thing for power.

Last fall on our way home we went via Pueblo, Colorado, and had installed in our car the new Baker watertube boiler, which we have reasons to believe will serve us many years without trouble.

On our one running board we have a cozy place for six laying hens which we carry along and which have been our plentiful egg supply ever since we left home.

Near us is an oil well and a small refinery where distillate can be purchased for eight cents per gallon, which makes cheap fuel for steam generation. And soon we expect to install the burner which will permit us to burn crude oil which is purchasable at one dollar and twenty-five cents per barrel.

Self-Graham Debate

Results very gratifying from a two-night debate in Nebraska.

Brother Self was holding a series of meetings in our little church here at Decatur, Nebraska, and a certain minister of another church became very much agitated because we were having good attendance. Now it is almost impossible for his church to hold services in their church, for they cannot get enough people out. Two other churches together here do not have half as many as we do at our regular services. They have been trying to combine, but there seems to be too much friction between them. Each organization is fearing that they will have to give up. They are agitated because our attendance is increasing and we have reason to rejoice over the outlook of the work of the Lord at this place.

This man came to our services a few times, but instead of coming inside would lie out on the grass and listen. Finally one evening he ventured in and began without permission to ask questions and make assertions and talk very loudly and ungentlemanly. He finally challenged Brother Self for a discussion. The presiding elder, Brother Ira Lewis, called him to order, and said, "Let the brother finish his sermon, and when he is through you can come forward and make the necessary arrangements for debate."

At the close of the service he came upon the rostrum and Brother Self wanted him to affirm that his church was the church of Christ, but he positively refused and was disgusted with the idea. He was very anxious to affirm the question, "Is salvation by grace through faith alone, without works?" They each signed the proposition, he affirming and Brother Self on the negative.

The opposing preacher set the time and did all the advertising and evidently thought he was going to do great things, but he utterly failed. It was evident from the first that almost the entire crowd was in our favor. Brother Self took all abuse pleasantly and met every argument successfully and in a gentlemanly, Christlike way. This turned the public sentiment very strongly for us.

We feel that the debate has resulted in good for us. Saints are strengthened, much prejudice removed, and it has caused people to think who hitherto have been practically asleep. It was amusing to hear the comments from different people as you passed along the street. Our village marshal said to a man who was a nonmember, sitting beside him on the walk, "The Latter Day Saint people are all right if it just was not for old Joe Smith and that Book of Mormon." He went on to say that the Book of Mormon was man made, etc.

The other fellow replied, "Tom, if you had ever read the Book of Mormon, you would never say it was man made. I have read that book through twice and no man could make that book."

So you see the witness of the Spirit is given when the book is read with an unbiased mind, consequently the man who has read the book through twice is investigating further and has started his little boy to our Sunday school. His wife says that she is going to attend our services regularly. They have never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon, but we are hoping they will soon be attending regularly.

Another family of nonmembers drives six miles regularly to attend our Sunday morning services. They say they are coming just as often as they can and regret that they cannot attend our midweek prayer service.

The following Sunday, after the debate closed, we had forty-four at our service and at the other church there were only two. The preacher accused our elders of sneaking around and stealing other churches' sheep. We feel encouraged and can see that nothing but the gospel will hold people and keep them from the allurements of the world.

The preacher was a $1,300 man, but he is going to have to leave because he has no crowd and there is no one to pay the preacher. When there is too much begging at a church the people just simply stay away. One poor washerwoman told me that they were too poor to pay the preacher anything and he tormented them so for money when they did attend that they just stayed at home.

The following editorial appeared in a local paper:

"The debate between Reverend R. Graham and Reverend W. M. Self at the Decatur opera house last Thursday and Friday evenings was a real attraction to the people of Decatur. For both evenings the house was crowded to seating capacity and the speakers, not trying to catch each other on points so much as trying to place his stand on salvation before the people, told many things and gave readings from the Bible that have and probably will for some time to come, prove of great value to the people. In fact, both gentlemen gave a splendid exposition on many things in the Scripture, and in the whole there were two splendid sermons preached."

We rejoice more and more in the beautiful restored gospel and desire that we may be worthy to assist in building up the kingdom of God. Ever praying for the work of God in every land, I am,

MRS. EDGAR BUTTS.

"A Day's Journey"

A brief comment on the key to Book of Mormon geography.

There are, personally known to the writer, readers of the Book of Mormon who are puzzled about the "map question," and if they had some sure starting point they could solve the puzzle to some extent.

After searching the Graceland College library and all other places available to find out what was the distance of "a day's journey," the writer gave up. One day while looking up some information, the following was very unexpectedly found:

	English miles	Paces	Feet
A cubit			1.824
400 cubits equal 1 furlong		145	4.6
5 furlongs equal 1 Sabbath day's journey		727	3
10 furlongs equal 1 mile	1	399	1
24 miles equal 1 day's journey	33	76	4

"A sabbath day's journey" is less than one mile, as we in America and England measure distance. "A day's journey" is a little more than thirty-three miles. The above table of measurements was used by the Jews in Palestine years ago.

The Nephites, coming from there 600 B. C., were users of these measurements and perpetuated their use as they did many manners, customs, characters in writing, etc.

So, when Mormon was giving a description of the land, he used the following: "And now it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite, on the line Bountiful, and the land Desolation, from the east to the west sea; and thus the land of Nephi, and the land of Zarahemla, were nearly surrounded by water; there being a small neck of land between the land northward, and the land southward."—Alma 13: 76, 77.

This and other passages show that there was a "narrow neck" connecting the land north with the land south. The distance across on the line Bountiful and Desolation was "a day and a half's journey." A day's journey being about thirty-three miles, "a day and a half's journey" would be nearly fifty miles. Present measurements across the "narrow neck" (Isthmus of Panama) is nearly thirty-two miles in the narrowest place, and about forty-five miles in the next narrowest place.

If this forty-five miles place can be located, we will not be far from the starting point from which to begin drawing our geographical lines.

The "narrow neck" was known to the Jaredites; it was known to the Nephites, and is known to all those who will accept facts.

Notwithstanding the book says the whole face of the land was changed, the "narrow neck" was known to Moroni when he made the abridgment of the twenty-four gold plates, more than four hundred years after the face of the land was changed.

God's Law Is Just

Thirty-two years on the sixth day of this month, I and my wife were conducted into the waters of baptism by that noble servant of the Lord, Elder E. C. Brand, who instructed me in the perfect law of liberty wherein we found rest and food to our hungry souls. Paul said that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe and obey the same.

There has been much said of late about our stewardship and much more could be said. It is surely a very important subject, and every member of the church should understand it correctly. In Psalms 24: 1 we read: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." And in Psalms 50: 10: "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills."

In any society of men, or fraternal orders made for the benefit of men, just as soon as you become a member you are assured of all benefits that the order gives to any of its members, because you are a full-fledged brother when you take all the degrees of the order and have paid for the same. But suppose you stop at any time or never start to pay your monthly dues, do you think that you shall continue to keep in good standing? No; if all the members neglect such an important principle, pray, how long would the order stand? It would fall and fall soon, for want of support according to its laws. The church that we all love so much will not progress if we will not abide its laws.

Suppose you accumulate great wealth and give it all to your family when they become of age: you make a contract with your family and say to them, "I am giving you this wealth, and all I ask is one tenth of the whole, and then only one tenth of the increase. Are you willing for me to have a tenth as my share?" Yes, surely all are willing to do that, for the father is very kind to give all that he has. So it is put out to usury, to receive a reasonable profit. They promise to remember the father. To give him besides, a little present once in a while, a gift, an offering, or a Christmas present. They promise never to see the parent suffer or be short of means as long as he lives, for they have plenty and it had all been his. They are his stewards and expect to do right.

Dear brothers and sisters, our Father's church is just at the point now, and the call is to all for help. The question is very important, "Will a man rob God?" (Malachi 3: 8.)

The same law is in force to-day. God's law is perfect and always was. Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people."

"He that turneth away his ear from the hearing of my law, even his prayers shall be an abomination."—Proverbs 28: 9. "But he that looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, shall be blessed indeed."

The Lord has said that he would prove if we walked in his way or not. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7.

"Will there be any stars in my crown?" Yes, there will be all that our policy calls for, providing our policy is a paid up policy. Better look up your date, for God is no respecter of persons. We are all living above the law if we comply as we hear it. But obedience is required of all. May God help us all to be more obedient than ever before in my prayer continually for all.

Young People's Day in Sydney

While by no means disrating theory (for theory is the precursor of good actions), it truly can be said that an ounce of good example is worth a ton of mere abstract theory. The young people of Independence will be pleased to learn that the influence of their splendid example in revival meetings has traveled across the rolling Pacific to the sunny shores of Australia, stimulating into soul-cheering activity the spiritual potentialities of the young Saints in Sydney.

The presidency of the Balmain Branch arranged with gratifying results, "A young people's day" for Sunday, May 22. The day was wholly given over to the young men and women, the older Saints attending only as silent witnesses of the day's services. At 8.45 a. m. forty young Saints partook of the sacrament. Then followed one of the finest spiritual meetings held in the church in a long time. The many prayers and testimonies were full of zeal and were of a particularly intellectual character.

The meeting opening at 3 p. m., was addressed by six young men, each speaker being allowed ten minutes. The speeches and singing were very commendable.

At 7 p. m. another young man, Deacon G. R. McLaughlin, made his debut as a preacher before an unusually large audience. His twenty-five-minute address showed considerable originality and the effort was much appreciated.

The day's services and experiences have had a fine stimulating effect upon all who attended and have given the young Saints a vision of their own power for usefulness. What a power in the kingdom of God they will be if they continue in the good paths so earnestly entered into on the memorable May 22!

HITEMAN, IOWA, August 1, 1921.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since we contributed anything to the HERALD, but nevertheless we are still interested, although rather downcast, as the mines are working very little (one day a week). Several families have moved to other places, but it seems as though the ones of our faith are trying to "stick it out" as long as possible, even though it is trying at times.

Though downhearted as to temporal work, we are still enthusiastic as to the spiritual work. We are trying to make things as cheerful as possible. On last Thursday evening our junior choir held a weenie roast which was greatly enjoyed by all. They were chaperoned by their leader, Brother John Wilkinson, and wife. On the following evening our Religio society had a marshmallow toast and had a very large attendance.

Our senior choir try to have a social "stunt" about once every month. One evening we went to the country home of one of our sisters, about fourteen miles away, and had choir practice. Ice cream and cake were served at the close and everyone came home feeling that it was indeed good to be of one faith.

Our Sunday school work is still progressing and we are still trying to hold early Sunday morning prayer meetings about once a month in behalf of the Sunday school.

Our young brothers, namely, Thomas Williams, John Jenkins, William Phillips, and Floyd Barker, are doing missionary work in a little town called Buxton Number 19, not far from here. They, Brethren Williams and Jenkins, take their turns preaching and are doing fine work. Brother and Sister Barker have organized a Sunday school and everything was going fine until last Sunday when a minister of the Congregational Church came and occupied the schoolhouse, where our men had been holding their services. He had erected a tent next to the schoolhouse and he gave them permission to use it. They had their services as usual, and when they had finished he got up and preached another sermon.

After all the sermons they got into an argument that lasted until about twelve o'clock, trying to show the difference between our faith and his. Brother Jenkins challenged him to debate, but he would not listen. They are still determined to carry it through and see what the outcome will be.

There were quite a number planning on attending reunion this year, but because of the lack of work all were disappointed except the Oriole Girls, who worked hard to get money to go.

Yours in gospel bonds,
MRS. ALICE WILSON, Correspondent.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 8, 1921.

Editors Herald: I read in the HERALD of August 2 from the pen of Brother G. T. Griffiths a sketch of the life of Apostle Josiah Ells. I read and shed many tears, for I labored two years under him on the coast of Maine, and from him I received much information.

"After the Prophet Joseph Smith was shot," he said, "there were several that claimed the right to lead the church, and I followed Sidney Rigdon as far as I cared to go. I made up my mind that I, with others, would wait till little Joseph took his father's place, as that promise was confirmed upon him by his father before his death."

He told me he was ordained a Methodist preacher and one day while crossing a street in London, England, a voice spoke to him and said, "You shall preach the gospel to Israel." He thought he was preaching to Israel then.

After the General Conference of 1880, he stopped with me a few hours before he left for Brother Griffiths' home, where he died. He said to me and my wife, "I will never attend another General Conference. Brother John, I am going home to die." So he did.

He told me when the first missionaries came to his place to preach, his good wife, Eliza, said to him, "Pa, are we going out and hear the Mormon preacher?"

"Are you going, Liza?" he asked.

She said, "I am."

"Well, I will go with you," he said.

The next evening she said, "Are you going to hear the Mormon preacher to-night?"

"Well, Liza, are you going?" he asked.

She answered again, "Yes."

"Well, Liza," he said again, "I will go with you."

The third evening he asked, "Are you going to hear the Mormon preacher to-night?"

"Yes," she replied.

When they got home, she said, "Now, what do you think of that kind of preaching?"

"Liza, he uses a great deal of Bible to prove his position."

"Well," she replied, "my mind is made up. I am going to be baptized."

"Well, Liza, I will go with you." So he did.

I never labored under a better man, and may his ashes rest in peace and his saintly spirit enjoy the beautiful paradise of God till the resurrection morn, is the prayer of

J. C. Foss.

RANIER, MINNESOTA, July 28, 1921.

Editors Herald: The gospel reaches the border city, International Falls, with the result of one family's home made brighter and a good impression made on a number of others.

Elder C. A. Kress, of West Duluth, was called to International Falls by a family desiring the true gospel of Jesus Christ, and arriving on Tuesday, July 19, by automobile, conducted preaching services the remainder of the week in the above-mentioned home, with the exception of one evening. The elder was then privileged with the pulpit of the Methodist church of this place.

Brother Kress presented the gospel through the aid of the Holy Spirit in a manner that touched the hearts of his hearers. Each of his services was well attended and on Saturday four were baptized and on Sunday morning at 11.30 we had the confirmation, followed by the partaking of the sacrament. There was another family of Saints present at this service to rejoice, seeing new members added to the flock.

We can safely say that we have attended church and Sunday school all of our lives, but were not satisfied with the way things were run and were continually looking for something better, until one day a friend of ours handed us some of the HERALDS. We read them and were very much pleased with the belief, and then we prayed to our Savior to in some way show us the church he would have us unite with. To-day we feel grateful to our heavenly Father, for we know he has answered our humble prayers, and we are much happier now than we have been in many years. So now at this place we number six and others almost persuaded to accept the true gospel.

Elder C. A. Kress was accompanied by Brother Stark. They left here July 25 and I am speaking very mildly when I say we miss them much in our homes since parting with them.

We ask an interest in your prayers that there will be more added to our number soon and that we may remain faithful.

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS R. KNIGHT.

McCLELLAND, IOWA, August 2, 1921.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines in regard to the progress of missionary work in Pottawattamie District, in western Iowa. Since writing last, I have held meetings at the Parker school, Carlile school, and Wheelers Grove. On June 24 I started meetings in Neola, labored there seven weeks, and the outcome of my labor was eight baptized.

After finishing my meetings I went to McClelland. Brother Hoisington, the new missionary, came, and with Brother Campbell's assistance we put up the tent and commenced to tell the Old Jerusalem gospel. We labored there five weeks and three were baptized and others interested. The good work is still moving on and it is my only desire to feed those who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness.

About six weeks ago I had the pleasure of baptizing a gentleman eighty-two years old. Never before did I sense this, that God is calling now to battle both the aged and the youth.

This is a large field and many places to hold meetings, and I assure you I am trying to do my best. I hope to continue in the building up of the kingdom of God. Let us seek for the old path and, when we have found it, let us walk therein. I ever pray for the success of the cause of Christ.

Sincerely yours,

C. W. MORGAN.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN, July 30, 1921.

Editors Herald: I desire to say to my many friends through your columns that on July 26 I left my field of labor, Eastern Michigan District, and came home. It was not because of any lack of interest in my field or lack of desire to labor among those I love. I really stayed on the job much longer than I should have done. I am now located in the home of Elder H. A. Doty, 116 Monroe Street, Traverse City, Michigan, where I am tied to my bed with a nervous breakdown, which will undoubtedly make it some time before I can return to my field.

It was one of the trials of my life to have to give up, as there is so much to do and so few to do it. I take this means of reaching my many friends, as I cannot reach them all individually and would be much pleased to have any who can, write to me. You can realize how it would seem to an active missionary to be tied down in bed, and likewise know how cheering to hear from those we have labored among. Therefore, we solicit an interest in your prayers that God's will may be wrought out in us.

Fraternally yours,

F. S. BRACKENBURY.

Services in Nauvoo District

First Presidency: Last Friday to Sunday we were at Nauvoo and Montrose; preaching at the latter place twice on Sunday and attending our district priesthood meeting at Fort Madison in the afternoon. A fine spirit was present at each meeting and we think that some good was accomplished, more especially at Montrose. We also had the privilege of attending on Friday evening, the services held at Nauvoo by Brethren Burton and Campbell. These brethren expect to go to Ottumwa at the close of their meetings there. Brother Campbell's labors are being received with favor wherever he goes, and he is very much encouraged in his work. Graceland is truly demonstrating her ability in helping our young men prepare for missionary work. Would that we had such a privilege. May our heavenly Father bless them in their work.

another file, and the index cards are removed from the branch and ministerial records.

When a person is baptized a proper card and leaf for use by the local secretary is prepared in the statistician's office and mailed out. All the local secretary needs to do is to insert them in the proper place in the binder already provided.

When a bride is a member of the church a marriage statement is mailed out. In like manner when some one is charged off to the missing list or is lost to the branch through death or in any other manner, a statement is likewise sent. It is not necessary to send a separate leaflet in each case, but a loss or a gain statement is sent periodically.

The local secretary reports to the branch and to the district conference on blanks provided. This includes a statement on a single sheet of loss and gain, together with name and date. To this is attached the report slip of the branch, stating merely the previous number, the gain, loss, and present number. This present number can be verified by counting the number of pages in the binder, for there is one small page for each member.

This loss and gain statement is mailed regularly to the statistician's office and serves as a recheck on the local record.

For those who reside in a district but not in a branch, provision is made for a special list of nonresident members, to be carried by the district secretary, though this list should be kept as small as possible and should receive the special attention of the district officers. This provides a special check on the scattered members, so that they are not simply placed with the nearest branch, and then forgotten because it is inconvenient for the branch officers to visit them.

It is indeed a sad commentary that so many people have wandered off and are lost track of. The church statistician, by very diligent effort with the local and district officers and with other persons who may possess information, is managing to locate a large part of these, but it is clear that it should have been done by the local officers long ago. It is clear also that anyone removing from the branch with which he is affiliated should be sufficiently interested in the church to send his name and address to the proper branch officers, so that he will not be lost track of. It should be clear also that any member of the family, or the local officers, knowing of anyone leaving town, should be diligent in securing the new address and see that he is properly enrolled with the proper branch and district.

Does church membership mean so little to us that we will wander away and forget to let the church officers know where we are? Does church membership mean so little to us that we will go to a large city, as has happened several times, and make no effort to look up our local church and make our presence known?

There is a responsibility upon the local officers of the branch to which we are moving. A second responsibility on the officers of the branch from which we are moving. But the first can do nothing unless they know of our arrival.

In Independence the work is getting much better organized. The city is divided into groups. The groups are combined into districts. The districts make the branch (the nearest term we can use, though it is not really a branch). There are officers assigned to each of the groups: an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. The day after we arrived in Independence, before we were yet settled, the group elder called and secured our transfer items, reported it to the officers of the branch, and within two days the transfer had been made at the office of the church statistician, and the proper notices and cards issued. That is an example of "doing it now," which it would be well if all the church would imitate. Yet this caring for the membership is quite a recent thing in Independence, as there are over a thousand members listed on the branch record who cannot now be located in that city.

In a small city, or a city organized into small groups of only a few blocks, this method of checking may work well. It may also work well in a country district, or in a small town, but where some one removes to one of the larger cities of the country, if the count of our members is to be retained, it must be because the member himself is sufficiently interested to report, or else the officers of the branch from which he removed keep track of him and make the necessary request for transfer.

The statistician's office is trying to do all they can. They have certain rules, in fact, but these rules may be modified if a better method can be found. It is a matter that concerns all of us that these records be as accurate as possible.

Missouri Centennial

Missouri was admitted to the Union one hundred years ago August 10. This event is being quite generally celebrated throughout the State, including the State Fair at Sedalia.

Missouri is now under its third constitution. The first was adopted in 1820 and was in force at the time that the church was established in these latter days, and through all of the trouble in Missouri. In this constitution, church organizations were absolutely prohibited and ministers were hindered from receiving or holding property for the benefit of church edifices, and ministers were prevented from receiving bequests for the use of the church.

A new constitution was submitted in 1845, but was rejected by the people. The second constitution was adopted in 1865. The third in 1875.

Progress during the last fifty years has been far more rapid than at any other like period of the world's history. The past hundred years has meant more progress, not only in Missouri and the United States, but throughout the world, in general knowledge and the laws of nature, than apparently has been achieved in the historical ages past. We make this classification because history is very limited, in comparison with the age of the earth. Dates more than 500 B. C. are only an approximation and differ very widely.

We know there existed great records of the past which have been destroyed. The Alexandrian library contained two million volumes; that is, rolls, manuscripts, and other ancient records, but was destroyed.

One hundred years ago the settlement of Missouri was confined to narrow strips along its two great rivers. Three cities of to-day date back to then: Saint Louis, Saint Genevieve, and Hannibal.

The settlement of Iowa consisted of a few settlers along the Mississippi River. Chicago was but a small trading post, with many tribes of Indians in the vicinity. In fact, the whole Mississippi Valley was still the home of the Indian, and only the lower valley, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and the eastern bank of the Mississippi, had yet been divided into States. North of Missouri was part of Wisconsin Territory. Beyond the Missouri was the free ranging ground of the Indian and the buffalo.

It is surprising to turn back and read the city directory of those days for Saint Louis. Five streets on the side of the hill and three on top of the hill. Kansas City was not in existence, but the first house was erected later in that year by traders. Later Independence, though small, was the largest settlement in the western part of the State, when the great trails to the West were developed. Saint Louis was a great fur-trading post and has continued until now as the leading raw fur market of the world.

It is interesting at times to turn back the pages of history and consider conditions existing when the gospel was restored to earth. One hundred and one years ago, Joseph Smith, a boy of fourteen, received his first vision.

Victim of Maniac's Bullets

While bravely trying to capture a crazed maniac in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Policeman Francis Wilson was shot and brutally killed. The local press is vigorous with praise of his courageous work on the police force, where he has served faithfully for twelve years. Especially are they proud of his conduct in this affray. He lacked the advantages of early education, and because of this was not able to pass a civil service examination, hence did not attain the rank of patrolman. He was a faithful member of the Cedar Rapids Branch, and leaves a wife and crippled son, the latter being wounded while in the service of the Government during the war. Subscriptions are being received for the benefit of his family, the widow also being a stanch member of the church. Though because of his lack of education he was not able to attain to the rank of patrolman and therefore his family was not legally entitled to the twenty-dollar-a-month pension, the mayor has announced that the rule would be suspended and the pension granted. Elder Amos Berve delivered the funeral sermon, while for two hours the wheels of civic government stopped.

Lamoni Stake Reunion

Excellent reports have been received from the Lamoni Stake Reunion. It is said to be the most spiritual and best attended ever held, also the best organized and most orderly. Lamoni reunions have excelled in these two particulars. We have sometimes wished that those in charge of other reunions could take a course at the Lamoni reunion and learn the value of organization and the preparation of all things before us. So many reunions suffer seriously spiritually from a lack of due preparation and organization in advance.

The young people's meetings and their work have been a remarkable feature in this reunion. They have had a definite program with a different subject for each prayer meeting, and have had 150 to 200 in attendance at the sunrise prayer meeting each day. Wednesday, the 10th, was given over to the young people. They have also supported the regular prayer meetings at nine o'clock, and in their testimonies have manifested a spirit of true consecration.

The spirit of the reunion has been manifested outside of

Reunion Notices

Everyone planning to attend the reunion of the Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts is urged to send in his order for tents promptly to D. M. Vredenburg, Woodbine, Iowa. This is the last notice. Do not forget the time and place: August 19 to 28, at Woodbine, Iowa. The various departments of the church will be represented by earnest workers. For speakers, we will have a representative from the Quorum of Twelve, the high priests, the seventy, the bishopric, the patriarchal order, and the Health Department. You cannot afford to miss the messages that these representatives will bring for you. The music, under the direction of Brother

Religious Pageant in Seattle

During the period from July 23 to 30, excepting Sunday the 24th, Seattle, Washington, witnessed the wonderful spectacle of a religious pageant, requiring 3,000 singers, 2,000 actors, and 200 musicians. The scenery requires seven cars to transport and weighs 100,000 pounds. Its total cost is $265,000, and the electrical effects cost $35,000. More than six miles of cable are required to serve the stage. It is not a serial, as is the passion play, but is presented in three hours, from a giant stage. It has been produced in New York City and Columbus, Ohio. From the Seattle Times we quote:

"The Wayfarer represents an average citizen of the world, sickened by the horror of the World War. The opening scene is a battle in a Flanders village, with the Germans driving back the French and thrusting the inhabitants from their homes. Arrival of American troops saves the day.

"Wayfarer watches this scene in despair. 'Understanding,' a woman who throughout the pageant shows him that the World War is no greater crisis than many which Christianity has survived through the centuries, then allows him to view religion in travail, from the Babylonian captivity up to the present. These episodes make up the pageant. Christ crowned and Wayfarer restored to hope and asking a burden to bear for the world is the conclusion."

J. D. Talcott, has been well taken care of, and will be a prominent feature of every service. F. R. Schafer, secretary; J. W. Lane, chairman.

Conference Minutes

KEWANEE.—At Kewanee, Illinois, June 11, 12; J. F. Curtis, C. I. Carpenter, and George Sackfield presiding. Reports showed conditions fair in district business depression and other matters affecting the work of the branches as well as the missionary work. Baptisms exceeded deaths by 16. Owing to a general clean-up of the records there was a total net loss in membership of 27, a large number of the lost sheep are being transferred to the unknown list. Financial reports were: Total receipts, $4,904.64; disbursed for aid in district, $228; balance paid to Bishop. District treasury had a balance of $131.01. Death of H. C. Ziegenhorn, Bishop's agent, was noted and the appointment of Edward Jones of Kewanee to fill his place. Committee reported with regard to purchasing property for residence of district president; no definite action had been taken so the committee was discharged. Report with regard to purchase of tent for district use, nothing had been done about that; no further action was taken. Resolutions were adopted creating a missionary fund to which all the Saints in district be requested to subscribe, and which is to be used to assist in opening up new places. Another resolution provided for a church building fund to which all members in district be invited to subscribe and that said fund be loaned to branches desiring such loan, and that the buying or building of church buildings become a district proposition. Another permitted district officers to draw upon district treasurer for traveling expenses, when making official visits; and still another requested the reunion committee to arrange for a reunion this year. Annual election of officers resulted in choosing or sustaining: George Sackfield, of Matherville, president; Charles L. Holmes, Buffalo Prairie, vice president; Mary E. Gillin, Peoria, secretary; Edward Jones, Kewanee, treasurer; J. G. Cole, Peoria, chorister; Edward Jones, Kewanee, Bishop's agent; Mary E. Gillin, Peoria, historian; Harland Cady, Millersburg, Sunday school superintendent; Edward Jones, Kewanee, field worker for Religio; W. V. Holmes, Joy, on auditing committee; Harland Cady, Millersburg, and Roy Huntley on reunion committee. Next conference left to the district presidency as to time and place. Saints were much benefited and cheered by the wise counsel and instruction of J. F. Curtis. Rock Island orchestra as well as others, assisted in making the meetings breathe the spirit of the latter-day work. However much we disagree as to methods, we are all agreed as to the fact that this is God's work and there is neither time nor talent to waste nor to lose. The general trend seemed to be a wish to go on and do our little part in the great latter-day work. Quite a representative gathering was present and Kewanee Saints did nobly in caring for them. May the Lord reward them. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Sioux City, Iowa, June 11 and 12. Conference opened with a prayer meeting at 9 o'clock. Business sessions opened at 10.30 with Joseph Lane and Fred Fry of the district presidency in charge. A. H. Parsons was chosen to sit with the presidency. The following branches reported: Missouri Valley, Magnolia, Mondamin, Moorhead, Biglers Grove, Pisgah, Sioux City, Logan, Little Sioux. Persia and Woodbine statistical reports were not received. Ministerial reports were received and read, showing activity among both missionaries and local members of the priesthood. In order that the news might be ready for the evening papers, the location of the fall conference was made a special order of business. By unanimous vote the conference made selection of Missouri Valley, the date being October 9 and 10. The usual order of services was followed throughout the conference. Preaching by A. H. Parsons, E. E. Long, and L. E. Hills. On recommendation of the Sioux City Branch, Robert Sheets was ordained a deacon. The conference ordered that the district request the branches to report to each regular conference a summary of the work done by the priesthood of the respective branches, also the spiritual condition of the branch, this report to be concurred in by the branch in business session. Joseph W. Lane was chosen as district president for the ensuing year. He selected as his assistants Fred A. Fry and J. C. Balantyne, the selection being concurred in by the conference. Ada Putnam was elected secretary, C. S. Van Eaton, treasurer. A. M. Fyrando was sustained Bishop's agent; Ollie Derry, chorister. The conference throughout was a spiritual feast. Visiting members were royally entertained by the Sioux City Saints, meals were served in the basement of the church. Joseph Lane, president; E. E. Gamet, secretary pro tem.

NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN.—At Pleasant Lake Branch, July 21 to 24. District presidency, associated with Birch Whiting, were in charge. The following branches reported: Artland, 94; Battleford, 35; Minnesota, 120; Pleasant Lake, 23; Rabbit Foot Lake, 31; Iowa, 74; Senlac, 43. Priesthood reports were read, and some reported verbally. Officers elected: W. J. Cornish, president; C. E. Diggle and J. A. Beckman, vice presidents; Eva Land, secretary; C. E. Diggle, treasurer; E. L. Bowerman, historian. The conference was very good and enjoyed by all present. W. J. Cornish, president; Eva Land, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

HITCH.—John Harvey, born at Bloomington, Illinois, February 26, 1863. Married in 1890 to Miss Fannie B. Stowell. To them two sons, Clyde and Harold, were born. The mother passed from earth life April 15, 1911. November 4, 1916, he married Miss Helen Ruby Jackson, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, who survives him. He united with the Latter Day Saints July 8, 1917, and lived a consistent Christian life to the hour of his departure, July 26, 1921, at his home in Kansas City, Missouri. Besides his wife, he leaves his aged father, W. F. Hitch, and son Clyde, of Geneva, Nebraska; son Harold, of Saint Joseph, Missouri. Funeral service conducted from the First Church, Saint Joseph, Missouri, July 28, 1921, in charge of Elder E. F. Robertson, address by Bishop B. J. Scott. Interment, Mount Mora Cemetery.

DERRY.—Charles Derry was born in parish of Bloxwick, Staffordshire, England, July 25, 1826. Died at his home in Woodbine, Iowa, July 16, 1921. Came to America with his family in 1854 where he united with the Reorganized Church, March 3, 1861. This same day he was ordained an elder; August 3, 1861, a seventy; April 8, 1865, an apostle, serving in this office for 5 years; president of the High Priests' Quorum from 1874 to 1901; a High Councilor 1890 to 1903; evangelical minister, June 8, 1902, which office he held up to the time of his death. December 6, 1862, he was sent to England as a missionary and was abroad 2 years. He leaves to mourn 1 son, George, of Logan, Iowa; 2 daughters, Pearl Van Eaton, of Pisgah, and Alice Askwith, who has made her home with him for a number of years and faithfully cared for him throughout his declining days. Seven grandchildren, 9 great-grandchildren survive. A loyal, true servant has gone to a well-earned rest, and his reward is sure. Funeral at Saints' church, in charge of Fred A. Fry; sermon by one of his collaborators, Charles E. Eutterworth, of Dow City. Interment in Woodbine cemetery.

AMMENHAUSER.—Lillie May Bentley, wife of Gerhardt Ammenhauser, was born November 20, 1876, in Laurence Township, Van Buren County, Michigan. Died June 23, 1921. Baptized August 7, 1885. Funeral at Ottumwa, Iowa, sermon by D. T. Williams.

ANTHONY.—Henry Rountre Anthony was born at Union Springs, New York, July 19, 1849. Died at Denver, Colorado, July 19. He leaves to mourn 3 children by a former marriage and his wife, known to Independence Saints as Sister Josephine Bowers. Sermon by Hale W. Smith, assisted by E. J. Williams.

An Educational Number

An educational note dominates this number and is provided to help students and those who advise them to decide aright regarding educational plans.

Since this church has always taken a leading place, theologically at least, in educational matters, the subject continues to be of perennial interest. One who is truly born again feels that there is constantly much more that must be learned in order to qualify for attunement with God, whose very glory is intelligence.

The testimonies and discussions in this issue on the subject of education are presented with the frank desire that they may help directly and indirectly those who might feel that somehow it does not pay to spend much time in anything but practical education—that which will lead directly into a "job" and financial remuneration.

Careful thought on the subject, with sympathetic observation of the conditions prevailing around us, brings us the invariable conclusion that the brightest minds may well be polished by a balanced education, while the ordinary mind may require it to compete with the skill of the world.

Statistics compiled by men who have studied the question bring us to the positive conclusion that from a monetary viewpoint at least it pays to get a good school education. A student making the average progress at school earns nine dollars a day, receivable in increased salary or earning power in later years.

Which is sufficient on that score. It is an important point, but it is too limited to be a decisive factor. To be a better, wiser, stronger, more useful man or woman should be the real impulse back of educational endeavors. If it brings greater recompense, may it be so, but that should be incidental.

The articles in this issue representing the three church educational institutions contain no mention of increased earnings. That did not occur to any of them, though as a matter of fact with each the training they received made their services worth more in the open market. But while this is almost universally true, it is also an important fact that many of these same people are actually receiving less remuneration than many others with none at all.

Why? Largely because their education has brought a vast vision of service, which they have interpreted to mean a necessity for sacrifice if need be that those who need what they have may receive it and likewise see the vision. The church needs the ability of supertrained men and women, but is not able to pay the price the world would give for their service—a compromise is effected wherein a minimum salary is accepted or even a mere day-by-day allowance, so those whose hearts are converted and whose talents are trained may proceed on the same basis as those not so fortunate.

Thus we are bringing to pass among us a measure of the equality that will characterize us more and more as we develop ourselves and become universally educated people—educated to an appreciation of all that is good and pure and holy. Thus shall we bear the fruit of sanctified lives.

What About School This Year?

If a decision has not been reached, it must be soon. We should take care to decide wisely.

In many a family the final decision as to attendance at school the coming season is being made now. And if possible it is harder than ever to decide now with economic conditions as difficult to anticipate as they are. The immediate earning power of the youth affords a temptation to utilize it at once rather than hold it in abeyance for a year or period of years while an education has time to take effect.

But every family should consider well all the aspects of the situation, and especially should it place the proper value on education as a development of character rather than as some miraculous and mysterious change. Some individuals will need to make the decision for themselves, without the advantages and disadvantages of family counsel, but the principle is the same.

A young man or a young woman with the right basic training and experience, with wholesome habits and good ideals, may succeed without much schooling, but if they do it will be because they have become educated in spite of lack of schooling. It has been done that way and will continue to be, but the handicaps are many, and the percentages of failure heart-rendingly large. Therefore the school has come to be accepted as the best system, with the best methods for developing one's powers, though it is not the only way.

It is much as Roosevelt believed about religion: "Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees, or by a running brook, or in a man's own house, just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact the average man does not thus worship."

The resolution that will determine whether one is to succeed or fail is what really counts. But resolution persisted in usually ripens into wisdom, and wisdom has decreed that the most economical method of acquiring knowledge, of having one's good qualities burnished to a noticeable brightness, of having his vision widened and broadened, is to enter a good school of some kind and work hard to get all that is to be had.

Our own church schools are announcing their courses and offering their services. These advertisements speak for themselves and we need not reiterate their statements. They quote statistics that are convincing and make offers that are alluring. But personally we may urge that in spite of the tenseness of the times, in spite of what might seem to be legitimate excuses to capitalize on the present at the expense of the future, our standards be maintained. There truly is a demand for those who have the ability to do better work than the average; for those who have what we call executive ability which might be called the prophetic instinct operating in business—ability to foresee the outcome of a present-moment decision. All of which implies a thorough foundational knowledge derived from both training and personal observation.

The whole world with its innumerable opportunities demands a superior ability and offers commensurate rewards. The character of the program of the church indicates that our needs for trained men and women in all sorts of vocations and professions are bound to increase in distinctively "church" positions and those which contribute indirectly to the furtherance of our cause.

Only recently one of our leading professional men said he had been looking for experts in his line for a special assignment of vital concern to the church, but had been unable even to locate one of them. As a prerequisite to this profession one must have a college education or its equivalent. His plight is coming to be a typical one. We must supply not only the "hewers of wood and drawers of water," but the men and women of ability to plan and direct and execute.

It is possible that in some quarters there is manifest a disposition to overevaluate the possession of a diploma. But we must concede at the same time that there is also as much of a tendency to overevaluate the so-called "practical" training of actual experience.

A college education is not an open sesame to profitable and desirable positions, but it is a valuable recommendation. It means to most prospective employers a mental equipment worthy of consideration. In fact, such an equipment is considered as either the making or the breaking of a candidate for a "position." If the graduate has sense enough to use his training, he will ordinarily succeed, rise more rapidly and go higher than his untrained associates. If he does not have this, he may be discharged even more ignominiously than would those not so educated.

So none of us should formulate our judgment regarding college or other special training by its freshest and poorest output any more than we should judge the whole preaching fraternity by the maiden efforts of those called to the priesthood.

Education furnishes the advantages—on the possessor thereof depends how he will use them.

School life is bound to be more or less artificial, in spite of efforts to make it otherwise. Youth and youthful hilarity predominate. Effervescence is sought after and found. Pep—whatever that really is—is a word muchly used, and those who do not seem to possess that quality are pushed into a metaphorical corner and isolated in the midst of much youthful confusion. Those who would avoid all this apparently unseemly riot of youthful vigor gain something, but are said to lose more in the social development that comes from whole-hearted participation in the many legitimate student activities; athletic, social, forensic, and gastronomic.

But we may be pardoned for believing that in our own church schools the ideals of service are more definitely fixed than in the average, and that along with all the fun and frolic—some of it indulged in to dispel homesickness—there is a deeper prevailing sentiment that will finally rise to the surface and assert itself. The exemplary lives of those on the official roster are an inspiration. Students come to realize—often for the first time—that people can be good without being "goody-goody." The effect is good because they see that it is possible for human beings to practice what they preach.

Occasionally, it is true, fond parents induce their offspring to attend college or training school because they don't know what to do with them at home. There is a vague but fond hope that the experience will reform the lad or lassie.

Sometimes it does; sometimes it does not.

Occasionally, it is equally true, a student from a good home enters the school with a good reputation and leaves with a poor one.

There is sure to be a constant flux in the lives of young people. Some rise above, some respond to, and others fall below the demands of their environment. Some are adventurous and seek the risqué in experiences—and lose out. Others become wall flowers and suffer great tortures because of it.

True education is a drawing-out process, and sometimes the student will not exert himself so there may be materials to draw from.

But on the whole, most commendable results have been attained in the vast majority of cases by our institutions of learning. And each year they are getting established better, increasing the efficiency of faculties, curricula, and equipment; seemingly turning out a better finished product. Yet we would not limit the idea of further schooling to our own institutions. In their field they have advantages not possessed by schools of much larger size. This is conceded by those who have made a study of the situation along general lines. There is more opportunity for personal interest and direction by the faculty. There is a community of interests and a unifying ideal in a small school not possible in the large ones.

However, some will find it necessary to attend school elsewhere, and if that be the case, let the goal be established and the energies be centralized on making the experience worth while.

Some have enrolled in correspondence schools and by perseverance greatly enhanced their ability in special ways, though a very large percentage never finish these courses because it is easily possible to procrastinate, and the student finally loses out altogether. If he would, he might progress even more rapidly than in a class taking similar work, but too disappointingly often he does not. In fact, most of us require the discipline of necessary daily routine, such as an instructor daily imposes.

But after all, the dominating sentiment should be that each of us must fit ourselves to serve more efficiently. Whatever training will help us to this end should be obtained and utilized, keeping in mind the necessity of a rounded-out personality that can assimilate knowledge and transmute it into wisdom. Some may seem to attend school over a long period of years to escape responsibility, but we should be slow to think so, for very seldom is it true.

Even those who cannot enroll in any definite class work the coming season would do well to plan definite courses of study and research, so real progress may be made. There is a constant temptation to drift mentally, but we must valiantly resist that tendency. For none of us are exempt from the demands of the hour for better equipped men and women whom God can use in every avenue of service for the establishment of Zion and its glory. E. D. MOORE.

According to a press dispatch in the Sunday Kansas City Star a party of Saints from Mount Washington (between Independence and Kansas City) on the way to the Pertle Springs reunion, were badly injured in an auto accident on Saturday. Their car overturned and Roy E. Newkirk was severely cut on the right arm, his wife received a wrenched shoulder, a scalded leg, a lacerated hip; Mrs. Fannie E. Lytle, mother of Mrs. Newkirk, fractured collar bone and other bruises; Mrs. Mabel Thorp, bruises.

D. T. Williams, of the Lamoni Stake Presidency, is one of the speakers at the Pertle Springs reunion this week.

The Reunion Season Nearing Its Close

A quick check shows on the list of advertised reunions forty-two in America this summer. A few years ago some one suggested that reunions were outgrown, a thing of the past. But the past ten years has shown this to be a mistake. The reunions were never better established than to-day, or their value more fully appreciated.

Eleven reunions were meeting when the HERALD came out last week. Of these all but two closed last Sunday. Ten are in session this week but will close next Sunday evening. That leaves four reunions yet to be held and all of them open next Friday, August 26.

Excellent reports have been received from all points of the country and many have reported greater spiritual gathering than ever before.

The Antioch Plan

Training for leadership is as valuable as equal time given to technical studies. Social and athletic functions have also their vital place in college training.

It may surprise many of our readers to learn that which is well known to those of experience in school work, that schools as a whole train men for subordinate positions, as draftsmen, as superintendents, as supervisors, but do not as a rule train them for executive positions.

A change has been made in one small college in Ohio, (Antioch,) and as a result the number of courses is reduced from about two hundred and forty to eighty. There is a mixing of technical and vocational work with the study hour so that actual experience is gained in the administration. Factories are undertaken and opened as part of the college to give this practical experience, for its purpose is to train men to carry on an ultimate responsibility. It is training for proprietorship and management.

To make such a plan a success it requires that great care be exercised in the first selection of students, as well as in the conducting of the college work. Courses are offered in administrative methods, economics and sociology, together with the liberal arts and engineering courses. This mixing of the study hour and of practical work causes an extension of the work from four to six years, yet the time is felt to be well spent by those who undertake it, for they gain much more than by the first two years of ordinary post graduate work. It is recognized that such a course requires not only technical knowledge, but also citizenship, in other words, general culture.

As a result one of the criticisms made points out the value of those activities of the college which are called so frequently into question, namely, the social and athletic features. The value of these features is that it gives one training in human relations, in dealing with men and women, and it results in courtesy and a knowledge of the proper attitude in social functions, given in a practical way.

Which will be paid the more, a young man who has thoroughly mastered all of the mathematical formulas so he can repeat and use them at a moment's notice, or the man who possesses only a sufficient knowledge of the technical details to be able to find and use them when he wants them, but who has experience in human relations, can meet men, discuss plans and lay them out; who is a ready speaker? We all know that the latter is likely to be the better paid, and often we find the former working for him and supplying the necessary technical details.

It is the well-rounded-out man who is able to give a larger service to society. It is the man who has such a broad outlook that he knows what subject he will have to deal with and acquaints himself with the best sources of information. In other words, it is the so-called outside college activity which develops leadership and gives practical experience in etiquette.

The successful engineer should also know corporation finance, civics, marketing, and accounting sufficiently to be able to read a financial paper intelligently and know some of the reasons for success or failure. He should be sufficiently based in civics to know his own part of his government and how to express his ideas clearly.

Leadership is as important as technical knowledge for success. Knowledge of men certainly is as valuable as knowledge of machinery. The social and athletic activities are an important part of college life and work.

Thorough Preparation or Superficial?

"A little learning is a dangerous thing; Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring."

—Pope.

A complete education according to the etymology of the term would be the complete development of all of one's natural powers.

According to the motto at Hampton Institute, "The purpose of education is preparation for life. The test of life is capacity for service."

It may seem unfortunate at times that we are able to use so small a part of our capacity for service. We are limited by our humanity and by our environment and by the fact that we cannot do very many things at the same time. There are very few people who can do more than two things at the same time. But the fact that in earning our living we only use a small part of that which we have learned in our general education is by no means a sign that that general development is wasted.

For one thing, general development will help us to determine where lies our strongest preference for a life vocation. Again, general training, though apparently affecting our daily work but little, still gives a perspective which at times proves very valuable. Further, all of life is not accomplished in earning a living.

If there is any department in human knowledge which will not help a man in the sacred desk in presenting the Word of God, we do not know what it is. Life is not simply food and clothes, nor is it limited by the efforts made to procure the material things of existence. A broad general training increases our capacity to extend and appreciate that which is presented to us in our leisure hours of reading and study and in family and social life.

In industrial conditions to-day the tendency at times appears to be to limit the worker to the learning of just one thing until it becomes a purely mechanical act. Clerical work, such as bookkeeping, may become mechanical, as well as the work of the common laborer or machinist. To perform such functions as well as they should be performed requires this concentration of effort. We cannot know all things, therefore it becomes essential to know some one thing thoroughly. But to know that one thing as well as we should, requires in a cultural sense a world view at least, a sufficient grasp of other departments of human knowledge that we are able to appreciate the relations of our particular problem to the work of the world as a whole. The worker who knows the relation of his particular task to the other processes and to the finished product will probably be a better workman and happier.

One of the unfortunate things which confront us at times in education is the desire to get just sufficient training to get by with, whether it be in the machine shop or in the schoolroom. The engineer may learn how to use the formulas which are given him. Most engineers, in fact, depend almost exclusively, if not entirely, on a small book of formulas which most of them do not even attempt to understand, let alone know how they are derived. Still, when the unusual confronts us, it is necessary to have some one who understands the underlying principles, who can re-derive a formula if lost, or prepare a new formula if needed. Even if a man does not use such knowledge once in a year's time, it helps his understanding of the problems before him day by day.

It is those who have a smattering of psychology, sociology, philosophy, and science who tend to bring our educational work at times into disrepute because of a superficial self conceit. A man who is well grounded realizes keenly his limitations. Vanity comes with a little learning.

Bringing the matter into terms more simple, many a young person rushes off to secure stenographic training on the basis of eighth grade or even sixth grade general preparation. At times this is a necessity from the standpoint of their living, or family conditions require it. At other times it is used as a basis to secure the means for further education.

All too often, however, we find those who have had such a limited preparation, and who have no desire to improve. A job can be secured which requires only a limited knowledge in spelling, and that satisfies. It is considered indeed an imposition if a letter is dictated that requires more than the knowledge of a grammar school student. Yet the time is coming when to do really effective work will require not less than a high school graduation for a good stenographer, who will be remunerated with some regard at least to real worth.

As Bacon has suggested, a little learning may be a dangerous thing. But even a little learning may do good if we keep a due sense of proportion. And the better our preparation the better our opportunities for right service in life.

Results of Sacrifice Campaign

Total tithes and offerings for June and July	$81,045.49
Total tithes and offerings for April and May.....	62,467.29
Increase in June and July	$18,578.20

One of the encouraging results of the special sacrifice effort conducted throughout the church during the last two weeks of June is the many inquiries which have been made as to what was accomplished.

Cooperation is the key to success. For the church to succeed in its great mission to bless and save mankind, it is necessary that there be an intelligent cooperation throughout the organization in the tasks undertaken. Finances play an important part in the conduct and extension of the work. The bishopric therefore desires to maintain and promote a unity of purpose in temporal affairs by keeping the Saints fully informed in regard to church finances. But before any definite information could be given out with reference to the sacrifice results, it was necessary to wait for the receipt and compilation of the July reports, the June books having been closed before the total returns were received.

The results are therefore incorporated in the June and July receipts, but it is not possible to state the exact amount which is due to the sacrifice effort. If we knew what would have been received in tithes and offerings had this special appeal and effort not been put forth, a simple process of subtraction would give us the figures desired. As it is, our only recourse is a comparison of the June and July receipts with the two preceding months.

The total receipts in tithes and offerings during the two months in which the sacrifice effort played a part are seen to be $18,578.20 more than during April and May. All things being equal, this would tell the tale. However, we may experience an increased satisfaction in the possibility that had the campaign not been waged the June and July receipts might have fallen considerably lower than the April and May returns.

Be this as it may, a comparison of the receipts of the church this year and last year reveals the fact that the church has not been excepted in the universal decline of receipts due to falling prices of farm products and consequent lack of employment in industrial centers.

We rejoice in the promise that all things will work out for good to those who love and obey the Lord. May the faith and consecration of the Saints be strengthened and developed as a result of the additional requirements now demanded of the church in prosecuting the Lord's work. Exercise is conducive to physical growth and development. The same principle holds true in our spiritual activities. As workers together with God, let us be obedient and diligent in all things required of his people, and he will not leave us alone. If we will do our part, God will do his.

"Verily this is a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Church News

Practically all the general officers of the church are out of Independence at present, attending reunions, including every member of the Quorum of Twelve, for a brief time. Bishop I. A. Smith and family are attending the Nauvoo reunion. Bishop B. R. McGuire is attending the Kirtland reunion and will likely return to Independence about September 1. The whereabouts of many of the others have been given in these columns.

Fifth Volume of Church History to Be Completed

The half-finished manuscript left by the late church historian, Heman C. Smith, is now being finished and brought to 1914 by his son, Heman Hale Smith, who is spending some weeks in Independence for that purpose. The style of the former volumes will be maintained, both from a personal and typographical viewpoint. It is hoped the completed book may be issued some time next year.

Joseph Smith on Education

Our late president, from the first, to the end of his life, favored educational preparation for church work, and labored hard for the establishment of a college.

When the assistant editor suggested that special consideration be given to education in this number of the HERALD, the only question at first considered was: "Shall I go to school?" Advice to parents and young people on this very important question. Though the work has been rather hastily done, the question has become somewhat enlarged, so as to include historical aspects.

Believing it would be of interest to know the position taken by the late President Joseph Smith, two editorials are published in this number from the very early days of the organization (1865-66), but these extracts are by no means exhaustive. Joseph Smith spoke and wrote frequently on behalf of education and always in favor of it. That is no new theme in the church.

We have referred several times to the action taken by the

What Graceland Gave to Me

By Marcella Schenck

Of the many Graceland alumni who could write interestingly of their experiences we could give space here to but one—much to our regret, for it is inspiring reading that follows.

A few years ago I heard one of the traveling missionaries, who was bitterly opposed to the continuance of Graceland, in a very oratorical manner demanding of a group of Saints, "Tell me one, just one person, that ever attended Graceland who ever did anything for the church."

The group were shaking their heads ignorantly. I had no idea at the time who this man was, and he had not been speaking to me; but Graceland was dear to my heart, and I was surprised at his lack of knowledge, so I timidly ventured a name of a man with whom I judged he ought to be acquainted, "Frederick M. Smith."

"Yes; but that is only one. He is only one, and he would have done his work anyway, if he had never gone to Graceland. You cannot name another."

A good many eyes were directed toward me by that time. "James Kelley," I said.

"He is only one," cried the missionary. "You can't name another."

"W. E. Haden."

"You have only named three." Well, he had only asked me to name one to start out with, and at that instant I was so surprised I could not think of the names I did know, that I thought he might be likely to know also; besides, I had never committed to memory the Graceland alumni list, having never expected that I should be called upon to recite it. Taking advantage of my hesitation, he went on to tell his audience that these men would have done all their work anyway, without the aid of Graceland. I suggested that Graceland perhaps helped them to do it better. He thought not. He pointed out failures who had been to Graceland. I suggested that they might have been failures anyway. He admitted that they were such before they had ever attended Graceland. He was so sure that the place had assisted no one to do more service, that I indignantly cried out, "Well, Graceland helped me. I never would have done some of the things I am doing if it had not been for Graceland."

"And what are you doing?" he asked.

Now I will admit that my own weak record cannot speak for what Graceland is able to achieve. One does not have to be recognized abroad for great works in order to accomplish. I knew of many who had attended Graceland, whom he would not know at all, who in many unknown places were nourishing the ideals they had received at Graceland, and they were growing, blossoming, and bearing fruit.

But this incident belongs to the past. As I said in a testimony at a Graceland prayer meeting last year, if that missionary has not yet seen any Graceland student who has accomplished anything in the church, let him come into a prayer service there and I can show him many who will.

Graceland Gave Independence

What did Graceland give to me? One September morning, fourteen or fifteen years ago, I stepped from the morning train into the town of Lamoni. I had caught a glimpse of Graceland as the train had rounded one of the many railway curves in that country. It had burst upon my vision of a sudden and I had recognized from the pictures I had seen of it, my Mecca. Here was my reality of dreams. And then I in another moment recognized my inexperience, my rawness, my verdancy, my ignorance, and I knew Graceland was to bring me something that had not yet come into my life.

The first thing it gave me was independence. This comes to many who are thus separated from their own family and are put upon their own feet to make their own decisions. I think it is good for all youth that after they have been nurtured in the ways of righteousness they be put into a place where they can bring their knowledge into practice. People sometimes make mistakes by going to college with their children. They rob them of an opportunity to learn independence.

You say this can be obtained at any school. You are correct. I found it easy, however, to make good decisions, because the good things were popular. I have been in other places where the line between right and wrong was rather hazy in the minds of my associates. When this state occurred with my friends at Graceland, it was more apt to be an excuse than the lack of knowledge of right and wrong.

A New Outlook

Secondly, I got a new outlook on life. I had not been very many miles from the community where I had been born and raised. I began to see there were a great many ways to do various things. I once asked a brother what he considered the biggest thing that he got his first year at the university. He replied, "I learned that some people sugar their coffee and other people sugar their milk." And so I discovered also that some people put sugar in their soup and others season it with vinegar; here was one eating jelly on cheese, and horrors! this girl eats gravy on her pie! These were actual observations, and they typify a great many things in my new outlook. The vinegar people and the sugar people were all good, honest-hearted souls, that loved the gospel. Under faded clothes and under fashionable ones beat hearts that were warm and true to the church.

Along with this new outlook, we learned to live together. I, who came from a large family and was used to sharing with others, did not perhaps obtain quite so much as some only daughters who came there and learned to live and give and share, and not expect the family of students to move about their pivot as the folks at home were apt to do.

You were saying that this new outlook, too, can be obtained in other places. Yes, indeed. I heard one professor in a big school say that this new outlook was often the most valuable thing that a student possessed after four years of college life. It was of greater worth than all the knowledge he received from books.

But while I got this new outlook upon life, I also got a new outlook upon our church. Somewhere I had gathered a notion that Latter Day Saints were a poor class of simple-hearted people, and that very brilliant and intellectual men and women did not take up with this simple faith. It was for that reason that I would have been prone to hesitate to own my religion had it not been instilled into my mind that it was my duty to uphold it. This idea was most certainly eradicated from my mind before I left school. Would it have been in any other school? For that very reason I have been glad that I went first to Graceland before I sought learning elsewhere.

Personal Acquaintance With Teachers

The third great thing was personal touch with my teachers. I failed to get that at the other school, for the teachers who had eighty or more pupils each hour, changing year by year, had little opportunity to know their pupils personally. They told their big ideals to us and we believed them. These ideals were voiced at Graceland, and their value was further enhanced to us because our instructors, living and moving among us, gave an opportunity not only to hear but to see and feel their ideals in living action.

Thus the individual touch led to a fourth—inspiration. I got that from my fellow students, who teemed with it. I absorbed it from my teachers. I breathed it from the air. It was reflected from the very walls—an inspiration to live and learn; to be the sort of person that is of value to the world.

And that also is to be found in other schools? Surely, surely. It has come down through our educational institutions for ages. That is their great end. This inspiration excelled that manifested elsewhere, because here I was taught to take God as my comrade in accomplishing my value in the world. I knew my instructors were doing it. The majority of my companions were likewise seeking to do so. Of course we all made mistakes, none of us are perfected, but the inspiration I took with me was more deep-seated and firmly founded because God was to be my companion.

A Definite Aim

Along with this inspiration came a fifth thing—a definite aim in life. Elsewhere I had this definite aim held out to me, but whether it were to better the world or better myself, I was a little uncertain. I fear the balance favored myself. At Graceland I very definitely knew I was expected to let the climax of my inspiration bring forth something that would return glory to the church we love.

In what other institution of learning, out in the world, are you apt to stand thrilled, enrapt, baptized with the divine glow of heavenly power and vow, "So help me God, I shall give my all to Him."

I took these five things with me from Graceland. Of course I did not keep the standard always high, like Graceland had placed it in my hands, but I am very sure I and those about me profited somewhat from the ideals I gathered there. Then I returned to live and work in the shadow of Graceland. While I lived and worked I met, year after year, the young people you sent to Graceland from all over the land. You sent your best and they became an inspiration to me. I do not doubt they were an inspiration to each other.

I have seen boys and girls arrive there and have observed their development. One marvels sometimes at the progress. I personally know two boys who at home were badly needed in the church work. They took no interest. One year of Graceland and they returned on fire with enthusiasm. A few years later they married Graceland girls and that branch had four active members thereafter. There it is—a matrimonial bureau! Can you put young people of that age together anywhere and not expect this? What does it matter, then, if there come back to us two, instead of one, with such ideals? And is it not cheering to behold a home established where the altar of Christ can be set up and kept burning?

It was because I had been to Graceland that I could make one of my characters in Jimmy Umphrey say,

"To-day I am going back into the past and dreaming of the castle on the hill, and as I dream I hum softly,

"Oh, fair Graceland, like the blue
Of the heavens over you,
And as faithful as the seasons we behold;
May thy sons and daughters ever
In their heart of hearts be true
To the honor of the Navy and Old Gold."

"Have you wished with me that you were a millionaire and could build for her the buildings that she needs and cancel the debt that troubled her? Perhaps if we are faithful and true we can help do that from our own little corners where our feeble lights are burning. . . . Our names may never be known on the conference floor. In the church records they may have but little history written about them. Though we be the humblest mothers in Zion, training our children to walk in the ways of righteousness, or fathers living honest lives, farmers, clerks, day laborers, or whatever we may be—let us be true to that which we vowed to do when there and Graceland shall not have lived in vain."

Infinite Satisfaction

So I dwelt in the shadow of Graceland for eight years and I reentered a student. Some evidently kept faith with their vows, humble mothers and honest fathers lighting up their corners, for Graceland was growing. Oh, there was infinite satisfaction in seeing the dreams we dreamed beginning to be fulfilled. The new building was lifting itself upward. Some of my former companions, who had come as green and as raw as I, were teachers there now and greeting the new students. It was their right to do so. They had been nurtured there and they had not only kept pace with the ideals of Graceland, but had helped to lift the ideals that yet are growing day by day. I was proud of the boys.

I recall how I used to sit timidly and quietly in the class corners and wonder how on earth anyone could find words to talk about such learned things as ancient history or psychology. The salesmanship class will bear witness that somewhere between my first advent to Graceland and my second, I found my tongue.

What did I obtain the last time? The same fine things. It was like returning to the fountain and being refreshed. I learned independence this time in expressing my thought; my new outlook was directed to the growing church and I caught the vision of its bigness. I renewed my individual touch with teachers consecrated to the work. I took another sip of inspiration. It still radiates from faces and walls. And my aims? They said we were worthless without a definite aim, and so one of those same boys that I said I was proud of asked us to write out our definite aim in life. It looked hopelessly far away when I wrote it on paper last November, and now here I am in Independence hard at work on the thing that I then wrote I wished to do. If I can keep true to the ideal of Graceland, I shall not work in vain.

A Product of the Independence Institute

An interview with Mrs. Maude C. Halley, a graduate of the kindergarten course of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Desiring an article that would indicate something of the work of the popular school in Independence, Missouri, "for those who must work but are willing to study," I made inquiry as to some typical graduate who could write about her experiences, impressions, etc. Most of those who would be available were on vacations, or soon going to be, but we discovered that Sister Maude C. Halley was at home, though so busy moving she had no time to do the work for us. So we asked her to desist from her pleasant occupation long enough to tell something of her experiences.

"One of your friends tells me your work in the Independence Institute made a wonderful change in your life, and I wondered if you would discuss it for us," we suggested.

"I'm willing to admit that it is true. But no one who was not born as I was could understand how much it has meant to me," she said. "Strangely enough, I was born with a dislike for children. It was a feeling that bordered on to hatred. Prenatal influences had something to do with it, and arriving in this world with that tendency, I took no trouble to cultivate any other.

"As I grew up I was quite Pharisaical in my attitude. Constantly I said to myself, What fools people are to make so much fuss over children! What is there about a mere child that attracts anyone? They are mischievous and noisy and dirty—always a nuisance and in the way. At any rate I am not going to let them run over me. And I didn't.

"Oh, you cannot imagine how foolish I was. I would even go around a block in order to avoid meeting a group of children on the street. Indeed I felt that I was right on this subject, and everyone else wrong."

As she conversed, a small child belonging to a neighbor brought in a toy pig that had been wrecked, and there was no hesitancy about presenting the remains to this former child hater, who paused to confess to the innocent one that it was she who had accidentally stepped on the poor porker and brought about the untimely end. One could hardly understand how she could have ever been otherwise as he saw her natural attitude towards the child.

"But finally," she went on, "it gradually dawned on me that it was hardly possible for everyone to be wrong and me to be right in this attitude of mine. So at about the age of thirty I began to experiment a little. I tried a small dose of human kindness on an unsuspecting specimen of childhood, and to my surprise and gratification he held no resentment towards me, and even reciprocated the act. Of course I had no right to expect that, and I was touched—a little.

"As the days went on, I occasionally broke other bands of reserve and came to have a real delight in associating with children, but of course I was out of my element, and must have shown it painfully. Though I came to be liked by the boys and girls until they called me 'Aunt Maude,' including some of the little negro boys, it came to me with increasing force that all these years when I had avoided children I had been missing an opportunity to know them. I had not learned childhood's ways and was not in a position to help them much.

"About this time Sister Eunice Winn Smith visited our ladies' aid society and made a call for sisters to enroll in the kindergarten class of the institute. As a result of that call, seven of us sisters responded. She had promised something definite in the way of handwork, and that interested me at once.

"I immediately recognized in it a means of supplying the thing that was lacking in my life. It seemed that I saw as in a vision the possibilities, and I grasped them eagerly. It has indeed served as a means of escape from spiritual idleness. It has opened a new vista of light, broadened my outlook on life, and opened a new field of activity. Four of us graduated at the end of two years, and during that time I never missed a lecture, I was so interested."

As she explained the sort of work she had to do, which included much notebook keeping, on which a third of her grades were based, I saw a big armload of hand-covered books carefully made up of notes on lectures, samples of cutting and pasting, patterns of sewing, illustrations of all kinds. In another place she kept a big batch of alphabetically arranged envelopes, with samples of pictures to be adapted for handwork in the prebeginner, beginner, and primary grades of Sunday school.

Since she graduated from that kindergarten course she has very evidently worked. And she has not only spent her time and energy lavishly, often working into the wee sma' hours of the night to be ready for the Sabbath, but she has a collection of books on the subject dear to her heart that has cost no less than three hundred dollars, all purchased by herself to increase efficiency. Yet we have seen her at work, have observed her application to duty, and know she is very modest and unassuming about it all—which is usually typical of those who do things.

Having lately arrived in Independence, we felt justified in asking as to the character of her present official work.

"As superintendent of primary and beginner work in Independence, I must spend all my spare hours with the teachers and officers in these departments of the various schools. I spend from a month to four months with each of the schools in the center place, imparting information, giving demonstrations, and meeting with the teachers, all for the sake of the children I as loyally love now as I once hated—and I attribute my ability thus to humbly serve very largely to the institute."

We are sure those who labor so diligently and without financial remuneration, teaching the various courses offered annually by the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, mostly evening classes, should be encouraged with the possibilities of that work. They may not be able always to witness the striking transformation described here, but the extent of the good done will never be known.

Not everyone will begin with the same handicap that this sister had, nor will all labor as diligently to overcome. It is one thing to see the light, and another to follow the gleam till it brightens into a glorious ray of intelligence, augmented by the indwelling of God's Holy Spirit. But the way is open to all who will enter and labor diligently.

What Nurses' Training Has Done for Me

A profession which lays an excellent foundation for service in the profession or in the home.

It is needless to say that every normal girl has a high ambition to do something worth while. Various lines of activity are open to her; various vocations and professions are worth striving for. And having a desire from childhood to become a nurse, as I reached the requisite age I enrolled in the Independence Sanitarium Training School for Nurses.

The path ahead looked long and hard. It seemed useless to try to reach the end of it, after learning of the demands made upon those who would graduate from the course. But my doubts were dissolved in faith as the days went by, and I kept on striving.

For the first three months they keep us on probation. We are distinctly on trial, and we can largely determine for ourselves whether we shall succeed or fail. This was a wonderful experience, as I happened to enroll about the time that first awful epidemic of influenza swept over our land.

It surely brought a vision of duty to my bewildered brain. And oh, how little I knew! Would I ever know what to do for all those who were stricken, the multitude filling the building to capacity and overflowing into other quarters?

And those hall bells that were forever ringing, calling me to the side of sufferers all over the building! I became a literal bell hop, and I frankly believe I made a good one, too.

The Fear of a "Prob"

But did you ever feel chills begin at the base of your brain and trickle down your spine? One after another of these would chase down my back as a doctor here or one there would come my way. I feared each of them would soberly announce that I had made some fatal mistake, so I would take refuge in the linen closet and pretend to be very busy. But it was mostly imagination, and I would—outwardly brave and calm but inwardly quaking and fearful—take his orders and incidentally decide that I must still be worthy to continue.

After a while these awful times grew less and less frequent and I could meet a doctor and take a full breath at the same time.

Now, as I look back on those probationary days I can see a group of "probs," as we were called, seated in our cozy room at night, relating our experiences of the day and giving expression to our thoughts and the wonderful (!) progress we were making. We rehearsed the "ifs" and the "don'ts" we had received from our senior nurses, such as, "If the superintendent addresses you, stand, and do not speak hastily"; "If a doctor gives orders, always remain standing, and give strict attention," etc.

But the wonderful day came that we received our full uniform. It was a day on which we promptly forgot all our difficulties and seeming trials, for we had been accepted as pupils of the training school.

It was a pleasure to watch the girls as they fitted quietly to and fro, performing the various tasks, wearing "the smile that won't come off." The girls had succeeded in cultivating the smile and I think most of them felt that way inside most of the time. Even in trying ordeals, if a frown appeared upon their troubled faces, it was hastily dispelled as they resolutely mastered the situation. I sometimes wondered how they could do it, but soon learned how to go into a patient's room and elicit a hearty greeting and a warm welcome, which indeed was sufficient recompense.

Chapel Service

One thing that has helped us through many of the trials of the day was the little chapel service at seven in the morning. We joined heartily in the songs of the church, which not only helped us, but inspired many a patient throughout the building, as we would learn during the day. During the past years we have had some excellent talks, by local members of the ministry and visiting brethren, and our hearts have been made light and the daily tasks easier as a result. We all eagerly anticipate each morning, and one cannot express in words the feeling in our hearts as a result of these brief addresses.

We pass from chapel down to the floors, and with songs of praise on our lips are prepared to meet our patients, not only with mechanical skill, but with a deepened spiritual interest in them as fellow beings.

The days pass so quickly the night is upon us ere we are aware, and the day's tasks are done. Sometimes we are on the day shift, and sometimes on the night, and one of our greatest pleasures is the night work. It seems to bring about a less distracting situation, as the falling of twilight inspires the tongue of the story-teller and the heart of the listener. We find the night work somewhat wearisome, because we are able to give much of service, and possibly, as in the case of the Savior when his garment touched by the sick woman, he felt that healing virtue had gone out from him. But altogether the work is resultful and pleasant.

The Value of Music

Somehow I never, before entering training, appreciated good music, but my taste was developed as I would sit during the silent hours of the night and listen to the melodious strains floating out from various convalescents' rooms, whereupon they would blend as one grand choir singing, and I would sit in ecstatic silence, unable to applaud for fear of waking some who slept.

Dawn was welcome, for our tired bodies demanded food, and we have excellent food to build us up. Occasionally we would gather together a lunch and make our way to the woods, where Mother Nature had prepared a table before us, and we blended into the day with satisfaction over the privileges the night had brought.

Training is indeed a school where many lessons are learned, some of which will never be blotted from memory.

The Heavenly Physician

It is indeed a touching scene to see the afflicted in such a pitiable condition, some of whom are beyond medical aid. Often we are made duly humble and grateful over the results of the administration of the elders, wherein the patient is relieved of pain and sometimes restored to health. So we not only seek to minister according to the best skill of the profession, but are glad we may also invoke the aid of a heavenly Physician, who knows all our ills and the means for their cure.

Through training we can see the working of our heavenly Father and feel that he is with us in our daily work and is ever ready to draw near us if we only place ourselves in a position where his Holy Spirit can be about us.

It may not be as a bed of roses to become a nurse, for there is hard work and much study, but to have the roses we must have the thorns.

It is difficult to appreciate the full value of this sort of training. Many avenues are open for service and great is the demand. It seems worth while to devote three short years to so fine a profession, for it lays a foundation upon which we can build, whether we continue to serve professionally, or in our own homes, or in the various combined activities growing out of both.

One of our physicians illustrated his remarks by saying there were two kinds of people that he knew: those who had wishbones in their backs and those who had backbones. So those of us who enter this training with but a wishbone may weakly fail, while if we possess a real backbone we may succeed.

I thank God I have had the privilege of training in our own church institution, the Sanitarium. We are looking and longing for the time when the influence of the Health Department of the church, including the Sanitarium as its central institution, will radiate all over the church and be a greater factor in bringing about the Zion conditions we are all looking for.

On how to get people to church, the Guardian, of London, suggests that above everything else the true object of worship needs emphasis. A great deal of ignorance exists. The people think the assembling together is to listen to the preacher or the music. In fact, a sermon is often reduced to a second or third rate affair, to make way for music and ritual. But the object is not what I can get; it is the giving of praise, thanksgiving, and worship.

In the next place, if men are to be held, ritual is not enough; there must be an earnest, thoughtful discourse, of primary importance.

Finally, the reading of the Bible in the home should be encouraged. This should be accompanied by explanation, that is, particular texts or chapters should be assigned, and some discussion secured in the home, not simply the general request to read.

Just a statement, a bit out of season, for I am preparing an article on the Word of Wisdom, regarding barley and other grains for mild drinks. Careful students of the food question are discovering that the consumption of too much or too little of certain kinds of foods causes diseases. What better way could be found for the replenishing of mineral salts, found in the outer coat of grains, than for the whole grain to be boiled and used as a beverage?

In my judgment the Word of Wisdom is one of the most wonderful revelations given to the church.—R. W. Farrell.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

EDUCATION

Two editorials from the Herald, in 1865, by Joseph Smith, indicating his views on education at that early date.

It has been said that by educating the masses you destroy religion. If this saying be true, then the effort that was made in the days when the Scriptures were confined to the care of the clergy, and came to the laity only as doled out to them from the pulpit, was a just and laudable endeavor to keep men in subjection to the law; so also would the effort made early and continued yet by some who teach, to keep the mystery of the learning of the Scriptures in few hands, be a just and laudable one.

We differ with those who have held the above statement to be true. We hold that by a proper system of education man would not only be made wiser, but much better, for in proportion as he advanced in wisdom, his capacity for good and noble action would be increased, and so religion acquire a clearer and more steadfast hold upon him. All efforts then, calculated to withhold from man that which will increase his usefulness to his fellow man, is an injury to him and to them, and is therefore an evil, and ought to be eradicated from the body politic.

If knowledge is power, (and who doubts it?) then man ought to be justified in obtaining it; for power is desirable if used for a good and noble purpose; but if for an evil and ignoble purpose, the design of the giver of power is not accomplished, and the one abusing the power is condemned and lost.

It is also evident that man was intended to hold, either in himself, or as a gift of the Creator, that which should mark him as the highest of the animal organization, namely, power to subdue and bring under his rule for his benefit, all the lower orders of animal life, as well as those inanimate objects in nature by which he is surrounded; but there seems to be a something in the design of the Creator which man often loses sight of, if he does not in fact entirely ignore, and that is the fact that in using this power given to man, God must be acknowledged, and man made a secondary consideration in the work, and for a demonstration of his almighty power, God oftentimes frustrates the schemes of man by what seems to be the most trivial circumstances, for by the exercise of a very little of his reserved power, overthrowing the gigantic efforts of man.

There seems to have been, on the part of men, a continued effort to become independent of God's power, by the exercise of their own knowledge, and as God has endeavored to call men to the consideration of the fact that there might be such a blending of the knowledge of man, or that which might be acquired by him, with an acknowledgment of the power of God, that God would deign to take cognizance of his actions, and aid him by a light from above to carry on the great design of his creation. From these considerations we are impressed to believe that the church should take into serious consideration the subject of education, and that definite action should ere long be had with reference to it.

Under our present imperfect systems, the rising generation is brought under the influence of many things calculated to develop and strengthen immoral tendencies, rather than to repress their growth. We are now fitting the young for an active period of the world's history, and as much of the labor of the harvest field of the last days will depend upon them, may we not ask ourselves the very pertinent and important question: How are we fitting them for it? Is it in such a manner as will make them able ministers of the word? A fear is expressed by some, that if we seek to fit our young for the field, we detract from God's power by our own learning, striving to build up the kingdom. This is an unfounded fear, for we are told God will choose his ministers for himself, and if so, can there be a fear of anyone containing so much knowledge as to need no increase of light from God? The answer is obvious.

Moses, we are told, was skilled in the knowledge of the Egyptians. Solomon was very wise, and while Moses and Solomon strove lawfully, were they not blessed? It need not to detract from the office work of the Spirit in qualifying those sent as laborers, for their calling, in the least particular, neither do we wish to be understood as hinting in the remotest degree to a state of things wherein our knowledge should take the place of the Spirit in declaring the word, but we do wish to be understood that God requires at our hands the acquisition of knowledge, and for this cause he has opened up new fields for our investigations, and bids us search diligently into every avenue open unto us, that we may be more thoroughly prepared for the work intrusted to our care.

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good," says Paul in his first epistle to the Thessalonian brethren, and this is an apt and efficient prelude to the commandments given unto us in the covenants of the church, section 85, paragraph 21, where we are commanded to teach one another diligently all things appertaining to the kingdom of God, of countries and of kingdoms, wars and perplexities of nations, etc., and the object of this is told unto us, that we may be prepared in all things when we shall be sent again to magnify the calling whereunto we have been called.

Now the spirit of the foregoing commandment is so comprehensive in its extent, as scarcely to need an argument in favor of a more united, vigorous, and persistent effort to inaugurate a day of light and its diffusion in the church, and if it loosens the bands of the adversary now inclosing hundreds who would gladly embrace the truth, we are in duty bound to carry its promises into operation.

We have only hastily scanned the matter, and trust that some able and willing hand will be found to give, through the columns of the HERALD, a more extended view of the why and the wherefore.

For the present then we are content to abide in the hope that the church may begin to awake, and arise to shine.

Of whom shall it be said, They chose darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil?—THE TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, May 15, 1865.

Education

Having waited in vain for some one to take up the subject left by us in an unfinished state, we wish to bring the subject once more before the Saints. It is believed by some that we are not to take steps towards education, because God can qualify his ministry for their labors, and if he fails to do it, then they are excused, and nothing is required of them. We consider this objection as fallacious, and only another excuse for indolence in the ministry. Our reasons for saying so are briefly these: That God can amply endow any man for any designated labor we do not for a moment doubt, and moreover, we do understand that none can preach and declare his word effectually, unless assisted by the influx of the Holy Spirit, but we also believe that God's Spirit is given with a greater power, and more lavish kindness unto that servant who is found actively engaged in the study of the word of his Master, and earnestly trying to qualify himself for his duty; hence, Moses was skilled in the learning of the Egyptians when the word of the Lord found him, and by it he was much more able to meet the magicians in their machinations to deceive Pharaoh, and through it the children of Israel were judged when Moses sat in the judgment seat. But lest we should place ourself in the position of the lawyer, who demurred to a bill as a reason why it should be quashed, that the man was dead as a last resort, we shall place our strong reason first.

In Doctrine and Covenants 85: (7) 21, we find a commandment concerning the doctrine of the kingdom, of things in heaven, of things in earth, and under the earth; things which are abroad and at home; wars and perplexities of nations; a knowledge of countries and kingdoms, that we may be prepared in all things when we may be sent again to magnify the calling whereunto we are called, and the mission where-with we are commissioned. This commandment we consider as binding upon the Saints, and to the effect that they shall educate themselves in all things of a nature calculated to advance their usefulness as propagators of the gospel; and how we can consistently oppose any scheme having for its object the diffusion of knowledge and intelligence, without infringing that command, is an enigma we shall not attempt to solve.

There must have been an object in giving such a commandment, and we are of the opinion that it was intended that the Saints should become as learned and wise as it were possible for men to become. That knowledge is a dangerous acquisition we are not prepared to admit, although we shall not deny that the abuse of knowledge is an evil. But if anyone should despise the office of an apostle because Peter denied the Christ, and Judas betrayed Him, there would be none apostles; and if any refrained from uttering prophecy because the high priests of Baal proclaimed things of no import, would not condemnation attach unto them? And because a man can preach with the Spirit of God, being an unlearned man, is there any reason to suppose that a man may not preach with the Spirit of God while in the possession of knowledge acquired by application and study? If there is such reason, then why is there any necessity of "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have told," which the great teacher so urgently commanded his disciples, or why the necessity of an order like the school of the prophets, or why the commandment already referred to in the 85th section to obtain an understanding of countries and kingdoms, the wars and perplexities of nations?

If the Saints are to become the light of the world; a city set upon a hill; a fountain of knowledge and of intelligence, the streams of which shall flow to the ends of the earth, enlightening the clouds of moral darkness as the rays of light emitted by the sun penetrate and dispel the darkness of the night, while the days chase each other from the east, and if there are to be no avenues opened for the acquirement of such knowledge as man can obtain, by reason of the exercise of his natural faculties, how is it all to be brought about?

When the grand Sanhedrin sat in council, is it reasonable to suppose that they were ignorant of the many branches of learning, the pursuit of which, added to their wisdom and experience, rendering them more able to sit in solemn consideration upon questions of policy, or of law; of church and state governments; of matters of temporal and spiritual import; of things occurring without the reach of church policy, which might or might not affect the center of faith, or to be short of everything connected with the interest of the represented people? We answer that such a supposition is at variance with common sense, and unworthy of the council, and of the one who makes it.

Now while we cannot, and would not if we could, take from the great power of the Spirit any of the prerogatives of a teacher, nor for a moment be willing to dispense with its offices, we understand that whoever is taught must be willing to receive, and must use endeavors to place themselves in a qualified condition to accept the influence of the Spirit, and everything which increases man's usefulness to his fellow men is to be sought after by the true seeker of righteousness. To illustrate the idea with a homely figure: if a man have a rich legacy left him, in the shape of one vast tun of choice wine, and he desires to remove it, and not being able to remove the whole tun at once, he brings all the vessels from his house and fills them full to the brim; are they all equal in their usefulness to contain wine? The answer is: that so far as the quality of the wine is concerned, there may be vessels containing one gallon, and others ten gallons, and in this particular they are unequal, the larger ones being more useful for the purpose of holding and conveying the wine to his home than the smaller ones. Now suppose that after the vessels are all full, there be a vessel holding one gallon standing by the side of one containing ten, and looking up to its neighbor it becomes dissatisfied with its usefulness to its owner, and asks that more wine may be poured into it, and because no more is added, discontent and sorrow pervades it, and it ceases to be useful to carry one gallon, because it cannot carry ten. We see that if wise and really desirous of becoming useful to its owner, to the extent of carrying ten gallons of the choice wine, it would examine whether by any means it could increase its capacity, and were the way open it would add to itself another stave and another hoop and another stave and another hoop, till it had achieved its desire.

Now all are desirous of doing much good for the cause of God, and some may be more capable than others, but being capable of improvement, and progressive beings, all may add to their power for good by obtaining knowledge, and in doing so, they are admonished to strive lawfully, and a most excellent adviser and assistant is promised in the Comforter. The admonition of Peter is to add to faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, etc.

Now brethren, let us awake to this matter, and by a united effort and purpose, let us come to an understanding, that the more we know the more good will we be able to do, if it so be that charity be and abound in us, and as we journey, let us educate ourselves in all things necessary to usefulness. Let us become as wise as serpents and harmless as doves.—

WHO SUCCEEDS?

In making a survey of Who's Who in America? some years ago, a student discovered that of those who had made good in certain walks of life, only 31 of them came from the 5,000,000 uneducated of the United States. This represents less than 1 in 160,000. Of the 33,000,000 grammar school students, 808 were listed. This represents less than 4 out of every 160,000. Of the 2,000,000 of the high school graduates estimated for the country, 1,245 are listed. This represents nearly 100 in 160,000. While of the 1,000,000 college graduates 5,768 are tabulated, a total of over 920 out of 160,000 made good in a big way.

Roger W. Babson points out in the Pittsburgh Dispatch that while less than one per cent of American men are college graduates, this one per cent has furnished 50 per cent of our presidents, 36 per cent of our members of Congress, 47 per cent of the speakers of the house, 54 per cent of the vice presidents, 62 per cent of the secretaries of state, 50 per cent of the secretaries of the treasury, 67 per cent of the attorney generals, and 69 per cent of the justices of the Supreme Court.

HEALTH EXAMINATION FOR GRACELAND COLLEGE STUDENTS

The authorities of Graceland College are very glad to announce that the Health Department of the church has made plans to be present during the first week of the coming college year for the purpose of giving a thorough health examination to all of the Graceland College students.

Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, Church Physician, and a corps of assistant physicians from Independence, will be present to thoroughly examine the physical conditions of all students entering the college. This examination will be free of any charge and will be of very great help, not only to the Graceland officials in the matter of providing for the welfare of the students, but will enable the students themselves to correct any difficulties which the examination may disclose.

Two graduate nurses have been secured to be in constant attendance at the college, to assist all students throughout the year in the matter of any health programs which may be needed in individual cases to correct physical difficulties.

The college officials are also happy to announce the appointment of a graduate dietitian to be in charge of the dining rooms at both dormitories. It is expected that this will greatly assist in the matter of furnishing balanced meals for our college students. The young woman secured is a member of the church and has had a number of years successful experience as a teacher of domestic science and home economics, and also as dietitian in a large city hospital.

It is felt that these provisions for the health and welfare of Graceland College students will be of very great assistance during the coming year.

THE RIGHT EDUCATION

Closely allied with definite religious training is education in general. It is through mental development that one learns to think for himself. Learning to think for oneself is best accomplished through some educational process.

Many reforms should be made in America's educational system. Too many frills and fads have found places in our schools and colleges. Too much time is required to accomplish results. Too many impractical theories are being taught. There are too many teachers with book knowledge and too few with practical knowledge. Despite all these things the educational process, even in its present state, is one of the most constructive aids to making good. The educational period of a man's life is the most important period. It is the period in which habits, character, associates, friendships, moral and religious attributes are made, formed, and acquired. The educational period is the foundation builder of our future existence.—Roger W. Babson.

MONEY VALUE OF EDUCATION

Not only does our individual success depend upon religious education, but even the national prosperity of our country depends upon it. In Spain, Russia, Turkey, and Mexico, where there is a lack of Christian education, there is the same story of poverty, revolution, and misery, regardless of race, climate, or abundance of natural resources. On the other hand, wherever there is adequate provision for such education there follow industrial efficiency and national wealth. Witness such countries as Denmark, Scotland, Switzerland, England, and the United States.

Statistics have been tabulated showing that productivity per man varies directly with the schooling. The poor farmers of Asia, Russia, and India receive from 3 to 14 cents per day and only 5 per cent of them are literates. In Russia about

BOLDNESS

"That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel. Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ; to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord; in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him."—Ephesians 3: 6-13.

"But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Ephesians 4: 15, 16.

The Pangs of Inefficiency

Thus Paul, the effectual minister, speaks of a very important grace, i. e., the ability "to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery" of religion. And in the sixteenth paragraph he indicates that every member should acquire this effectiveness. This we will call efficiency. Perhaps no one feels the pangs of inefficiency to make men see what he himself sees, more than he who has become a minister. And following them are all they who have a message to impart. It is not more a question of having a superior message than it is a question of being able to pass it on to mankind. Paul became the effectual minister because of certain abstract gifts or acquirements which he expressed through certain plans or modes or methods of publicity.

He speaks of the quality of boldness. I pause to examine minutely this quality as a gold hunter who strikes his boot against a stone in the gulch where he is prospecting, and turning about, taps it with his hammer, and, securing a 40 per cent of the people read and write. In the United States 92.3 per cent of the people read and write. From the shoulders down neither men nor nations are worth more than the product of their labors.

There is a class of individuals who still insist that manual labor is the only kind of productive labor. Statistics show that the contributions of intellect are far more productive than manual labor. I say this with the highest regard for manual labor—a most honorable kind of work. At the same time we must not close our eyes to the contributions of the intellect. Had it not been for the mechanical inventions in industry would not be developed as it is to-day. We could not clothe our people or feed them under primitive methods of production. If prices have been high during the past few years, think what they would be if production were still in the household stage.—Roger W. Babson.

piece, proceeds to pulverize it; and with test tube and acid, or with blow-pipe obtains a bead of precious yellow metal. He then follows up the gulch—not down—with eyes alert, looking for the “blossom” (ledge) from which it fell. It may have been carried miles by the turbulent little brook; but his observing eyes will quickly detect whether the original sample over which he stumbled, had sharp edges, or whether they were smooth and rounded by much tumbling. Thus keen observation, another abstract quality, suggests its importance. And so in reading we should not pass in haste over words, for sometimes a word will reveal the key to knowledge.

The Boldness of Paul

“We make room for the man who boldly pushes past us.”—Bovee.

Everyone knows this. History repeats this truth on every page. Paul went up on Mars Hill, right among the leaders of a spiritual culture which had its strong tower, which was the best knowledge and the science and the public sentiment of the times; but there he boldly declared a greater truth to them. He says again:

“I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak. Howbeit, whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly) I am bold also.”—2 Corinthians 11: 21.

“And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.”—Philippians 1: 4.

“And [praying] for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds; that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought.”—Ephesians 6: 19, 20.

These passages reflect the character of the man, Paul; as well as suggest one of the qualities that helped him to deliver the message he bore. He was bold, as the passages above reveal, in seeking or making an opportunity; and when he had the center of the forum he was bold to strike out upon the fundamentals of the subject.

One of the best illustrations of the fact that we make room for the man who pushes past us, is the man Roosevelt. Anyone who has read the story of his life has not failed to admire his valor. It was he who coined the phrase, “My hat’s in the ring.” When I first heard this phrase, I formed a mental picture of a ring of men, western men, and Teddy’s old cowboy hat was lying on the ground in the center, in token of his acceptance of the challenge. But since I began to write his name into this article, the vision has changed. His hat was not on the ground; he had it on! He had elbowed his way through the crowd and simply jumped into the ring.

Boldness Requires Wisdom

I heard Bryan make his nomination speech at the Denver convention, and the following anecdote which he told there has been a source of profit to me ever since. He said, “A public speaker was once making a Fourth of July speech in a village down in Alabama, and in the exultation of his heart said, ‘I can lick anybody in the county’ (no takers); ‘I can lick anybody in the State’ (still no takers); ‘I can lick anybody in the United States’; whereupon, a man from Missouri stepped up and administered the sleeping powders. When he came to, he said, ‘I guess I took in a little too much territory the last time.’”

This brings us to the fact that boldness needs something to go with it. The following will illustrate:

“Boldness is ever blind, for it sees not dangers and inconveniences; whence it is bad in council though good in execution. The right use of the bold, therefore, is, that they never command in chief, but serve as seconds under the direction of others—for in council it is good to see dangers, and in execution not to see them unless they be very great.”—Bacon.

Give the Young Ministry a Chance

But the commander in chief, whether he be the president of the branch, who desires to effect missionary work in his neighborhood, or whether it be another, should not be too quick to cry “radical.” But he should discern well between boldness and radicalism. He may have in the bold, impetuous young priest of the branch, the very best instrument imaginable for his work. Give him some latitude. Use him for city missionary work. Don’t furnish all the detail for him. He may be too fast for your plan. Farther on I am going to suggest a plan for this young crusader.

Boldness needs faith and faith needs boldness. One is born of the other. Bacon says that boldness is blind. Yes, but faith has eyes. Let faith, therefore, point the way. Boldness is the expression of faith. Fear holds men back. He who hesitates is lost. It is useless for a timid one to pray for success; better he should pray for that which he lacketh. Be militant!

Many have said, “A man should not seek the job, but the job the man.” I thoroughly disagree with that sentiment. I have proved it false all my life. All other successful men have done the same. From my eighteenth birthday to my thirtieth, I earned my living in city life; and I tell you right here, my dear friend, that I kept many a job from seeking the man. I had the job before the whistle blew.

An Early Experience

Now for the benefit of the young crusaders—let them marshal themselves—I will tell of some of my experience of the first year of my missionary life. I, a priest of Aaron, was sent as a missionary to the world. A young elder was to be my traveling companion. We reported in the district where we were to labor, and were told by the one in charge to go over in the western part of the State and “start in.” I had never preached a sermon in my life before taking this appointment, and my companion had had but six months’ experience the previous year.

So, we landed in a county seat, and going up from the depot, we kept a sharp lookout for a place to preach. When we arrived at the center of the city we found a vacant store building next but one to the corner. We lingered long on the sidewalk, peering into the cool depths of the building, and we noted that the electric lights had globes intact. We thought, “Oh, that there were only seats; then it would be in verity a church where passers-by on the sidewalk could turn in for half an hour to hear the fullness of the gospel.

Turning around and looking across the street we saw a paint shop, and beside it a goodly number of park benches that had recently been painted. Something like an electric current came over us. We knew we were going to have a meeting. We went to the painter and found that he did not have to deliver the seats for ten days or more, and then argued to him, that since the benches belonged to the public and were intended for them to sit upon, that no one would be able to form any potent objection should we put them to use for a few days before the appointed time. He gave us the seats. Then we went to the banker and obtained the building. That night one of the greatest meetings of my life sprang into existence.

A few months later I returned to this city and found that there was a certain ladies’ society of one of the churches that was taking up “Mormonism” study via Bruce McKinney’s book, which violently misrepresents our faith. I went to the presiding elder’s house, who was some sort of a division overseer. I knocked at the front portal of his house. I was admitted to his study, and as he laid aside his meerschaum pipe I noted layer upon layer of cirrus clouds of tobacco smoke which extended from floor to ceiling. After I had finished stating my errand he went to the door, and opening it, ordered me into the welcome sunshine outdoors.

And so, I believe that the principle of boldness, when rightly used, has become a prime element in the promulgation of the gospel. All of the ministers can tell of the successes attained through its use.

"Who bravely dares must sometimes risk a fall."—Smollet.

But,

"Fortune befriends the bold."—Dryden.

Doctor Gordon and His Question

The "Christian Work" describes a successful method of conducting services.

When Socrates taught in the streets of Athens he accomplished it by the use of questions which he asked of his auditors. This has been known ever since as the Socratic method of teaching. In the slangy but vivid words of the army, Doctor James L. Gordon puts the "reverse English" on the Socratic method in his crowded church auditorium in San Francisco thrice weekly, because he allows his listeners to ask the questions and he answers them. The results are startling.

When Doctor Gordon came to the First Congregational Church of San Francisco he found a morning congregation of approximately two hundred, a handful for the evening worship, and about fifty at the midweek service. It is a downtown church, beset by all the usual difficulties of such a field. Its immediate neighborhood consists of hotels, apartment houses, and retail establishments; none of which contributed in any material way to the upbuilding of the church. In addition to these forces of life there was considerable negative power in the cabarets, theaters, and dance halls which were located in the same district, and this city by the Golden Gate loves to think that it is more Bohemian than most any other city of its size in the country. Doctor Gordon found that he had a task which was worthy of him.

Some little time after Doctor Gordon's arrival modest newspaper advertisements began to appear, announcing that on Wednesday evenings of each week there would be a "Question Drawer" conducted by the pastor of the church. The attendance of this service went up from fifty to thirteen hundred, and at last became so large that the meeting had to be taken to the main auditorium so that the fifteen hundred people who wanted to hear Doctor Gordon could get in. Now there are always some people standing because they cannot find seats.

He then adopted this method for the Sunday evening meeting, and immediately the attendance record went higher than ever before. He then adapted the method to the morning service, by considering in one discourse a number of related questions on the same subject. Again the results were more than gratifying. Three times a week Doctor Gordon fills every seat and then some by the use of questions. The church and Doctor Gordon have become the talk of the city. Transients in the hotels are attracted to see "what manner of man this was," and the cliff dwellers in the apartment houses on Nob Hill come down to listen.

There follows here a list of some of the typical questions which Doctor Gordon answered on May 22 (Sunday) and which he advertised extensively in all the papers of the city:

1. Who saves the most money, a single or married man?
2. Why did God combine his energies to form a poisonous rattlesnake?
3. Are Edison's test questions to the point?
4. Are you merely guessing at immortality, or have you witnessed a spirit materialization?

5. Should parents insist on a "blood test" examination before approving of their daughter's engagement?

6. Does Christian Science rob one of emotion? Should a musician be a Christian Scientist?

7. Are Jews selfish?

8. Is there any way by which an evil hypnotic influence can be detected and resisted?

9. What is a trance?

10. What are the legal grounds for divorce in California?

11. Should motion pictures of Henry VIII, produced in Germany, be shown here?

12. What is the difference between the Greek Catholic Church and the Roman Catholic Church?

Here are the questions for the midweek service of May 25th:

1. What is Zionism?

2. Will it be necessary for men of scientific minds in behalf of truth and religion to withdraw from the churches?

3. Is purgatory the lowest realm of the astral world?

4. Will you pass a criticism on Sinclair Lewis's novel, "Main Street"?

5. Do you believe in "wireless healing"?

6. Do you believe the "memory can be improved in one evening"?

7. Is the "Epstein Christ" repulsive?

8. Is Lord Northcliffe right when he speaks of the "pin-pricks" of American newspapers?

9. What is the agreement between England and Russia?

10. What advantage is there in having your thoughts photographed?

11. Who is Ghandi, Britain's foe in India?

12. Does not death equalize all souls?

13. Who invented moving pictures?

14. If God created man, is He not responsible for man's actions?

15. Do you approve of the "San Francisco Cemetery Removal Bill"?

Each question seems to appeal to a different class of people, and there is a wide variety of interest which attracts immense crowds to hear these live questions discussed by a live man who injects all sorts of humor and "pep" into the process of answering the queries. Doctor Gordon's replies are not always the expected ones, nor are they always the popular ones. Of course, all of the congregation cannot be pleased on any one question, but almost every attendant finds some point of agreement during the evening of questions. Of course, those who have asked the questions are on hand to hear what he has to say about their query. The novelty of the Question Drawer attracts many for the first time, but the personality of the man who answers the questions is what brings them time and time again. Doctor Gordon is too wise a man to stop with simply attracting the people to his service by the use of questions, but he uses other methods, such as giving away his sermons which have been a help to the people of his congregation, engaging the very best musical talent possible, and inviting noted celebrities to be pulpit guests of Doctor Gordon, and the entertainment of different fraternal orders by the congregation.

Yet the fact remains that the people are attracted to the service by what lies before the question mark and are fed on the food of spiritual life which Doctor Gordon gives in reply. These two factors have increased attendance, interest, and membership of the First Congregational Church of San Francisco.

Elder Edward Rannie has now returned to his mission field in the Clinton District after an absence of about four months on account of disability. He underwent a serious operation at the Sanitarium some time ago.

From Competition to Cooperation

By D. R. Baldwin

How can the change be made? The author's answer is, that we must begin now to effect the necessary change.

A letter from one of our editors tells us that the councils of the church are working day and night, doing all they can to figure out a proper basis upon which to found right economic conditions. A noble calling indeed. They are entitled to our prayers and our support.

It would probably be folly to attempt an immediate transition. The change must be made by degrees to succeed. We are not sitting in the councils of the church, but there is no law against asking questions and offering friendly suggestions. If thereby a beneficial thought be set in motion we shall be satisfied.

All should get the stubborn fact fixed in their minds at once that money is not wealth. The late Professor Hoffman said, "Money simply measures wealth as the yard stick measures the bolt of cloth."

Howe, in Evolution of Banking, proves that "money [in circulation] is only an evidence of debt."

The commercial interests of the world are no longer transacted with money, but with credit. There is but very little money in circulation. The bank notes we handle are not money, they are only the promise of issuing banks to pay in money on demand. But, according to reports of the comptroller, there is less than one tenth money enough in existence to redeem the commercial paper in circulation. There is no law to compel bankers to fulfill their promise to redeem their notes. These bank notes or "credit money" that we handle have back of them as security the solvency of our Nation.

A more simple, more safe, and much better medium of exchange is found in our modern check book and clearing system, by which ninety-five per cent of our commerce is handled, for back of these checks stands the actual wealth of the country. Banks loan us credit in the place of money, and by the way, it is our own credit that we borrow.

William G. Roylance recently tells us that the banking resources of the United States is forty-five billion dollars, which is three times greater than the banking resources of the world thirty years ago.

Our present crisis is caused by holding "credit money" out of circulation. It is one of the greatest levers in existence to concentrate the wealth of our Nation in few hands by penalizing the millions. Therefore the church should as speedily as possible arrange to finance herself, so that the stunts pulled off by the unwieldy credit trust cannot again cripple us as at present, and no great amount of money is needed for this purpose if we cooperate.

With these few important facts fixed in mind, we proceed to suggest that there are different ways that we can, in harmony with commercial law, launch a broad, humane cooperative system for conducting our commercial interests.

Rules fixed, or laws passed by commercial clubs, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, are not all written into our statute books. Many of them prevent proper cooperation of dealers and their customers. One illustration: If a dealer sells farm machinery for less than price fixed by manufacturer (which reaches as high as one hundred per cent profit to dealer) he is quickly boycotted. This works a hardship. How can it be avoided?

The writer used to sell beef hides for $12 and over. At the same time he bought dress shoes for $3.50. The tanners and shoemakers made a good living; but now, despite the fact that the work is done at much less expense, these prices are reversed. This works hardship. How can it be prevented? The answer is short and simple, By group-owned industries.

Is there any law of God or man to prevent forming great stock companies that pay dividends to stockholders? Any law to prevent stockholders manipulating their dividends as they please? There being no such law, what prevents the Order of Enoch organizing such a company, capitalizing, issuing stock, and placing it upon the market? Can they not limit individual stock and prevent big fish consuming the small fry? Can they not choose their own venders of stock and place it in the hands of bishops, to be exchanged for capital and commodities with which to start the business? Could not all tithe payers be made bona fide stockholders? Why should there not be in connection with the Lord's storehouse a credit bank which would be a clearing house for the whole church? Could the Lord's storehouse not then sell to the trade at prices fixed by the chambers of commerce and rebate or credit every cent of illicit profits to monthly dividends of individual purchasers who are tithe payers, said dividends not to be moved from the house only as applied to subsequent purchases? Why should not the Lord's storehouse do retail, wholesale, mail order business, thus benefiting the entire membership in our great and growing Nation.

Would not this be operating the Lord's storehouse at cost (which of course includes running expenses and depreciation) and at the same time not conflict with commercial rules? If not, why?

The writer has no idea that he can figure out a cooperative plan that should be the last word in so great a change. We believe that no system can be devised that will fit unto all this crooked, disjointed, competitive regime and at the same time do justice to anyone. Some great changes must be made and no great change can be made that will not create rank and bitter opposition. Cooperation will finally survive as it abolishes competition.

Something of the kind outlined above would be a start towards cooperation and we believe would go farther towards healing wounded confidence than any other move. It would shorten and straighten the distance from producer to consumer. It would be conclusive proof to a thousand doubtful souls that the latter-day message has something better than "a blast of wind for the shorn lambs."

Great savings are reported from various quarters through cooperative stores, buying and selling which is now attracting nation-wide attention, and many cooperative stores are springing up in various States, but common people are now too badly pushed to give proper attention. Many cannot keep up their dues, so it is that all too often men are placed in charge whose heads rattle to the expense of business qualification. It would be much better if we had one large institution centrally located and properly managed with which all large branches and all scattered members could cooperate.

And yet, the savings, great as they are, that would come by cutting out many unnecessary middle men, are in reality small compared with other and greater savings under cooperation. The great waste of unnecessary advertising exceeds the profits of middle men in many lines of trade. For one with the spirit of cooperation it is interesting to secure advertising cards of such magazines as the Ladies' Home Jour-

"Unto Others—"

"An awful thing," said my informant. "I don't see how anyone could be so cruel and inhuman!"

The item in our morning paper that had caused such indignant outcry had stated that "A baby girl, a few weeks old, had been found on a vacant lot with its hands and feet frozen so badly they would probably have to be amputated." It surely was hard to believe anyone could have abandoned a little, innocent baby, not providing even covering to protect its helpless little body. Not long afterwards we were happy to read in the same daily, that "The doctors say the child will live and they can save its hands and feet so it will not have to go through life a cripple."

It was then I took courage to say to my informant: "There are thousands of mothers to-day more heartless than the one who put her baby on a vacant lot!" Of course she was duly aroused and questioned my statement. This gave me the chance to touch on her pet theory of "birth control," and I said:

"That mother bore her child and gave it life. Not only that, she gave it a chance to live, and I am so glad it will live. But there are thousands of women to-day who are unwilling to give their unborn child that chance. The spirit that comes to lodge in the tiny bodies is forced back whence it came. Do you think such mothers stop to think from whence that little spirit did come or why? Do they consider whether or not they have the right to assume a relation ordained by the Creator of us all for his wise and eternal purposes, and then refuse to entertain the stranger provided for in such relationship?"

"We shun the 'fallen woman.' We deny her access to our homes, and pass her by with Pharisaical rectitude, yet there are those who take the vow 'to live together according to the law of God and man,' who accept the support and comforts of that position, and rule in the home provided, and yet refuse to accept its responsibilities—are they any better than she?"

"If these conditions were a matter to be decided by us as is our dress, our food, our environment, there would then be no wrong in evading the responsibility while accepting the nal, Saturday Evening Post, and others and study average issues.

Most people are startled to learn that corporations are glad to pay from $10 and $12 per single line up to $10,000 and $15,000 for page and cover advertisements in a single issue which carries from $400,000 to $500,000 of advertising. To be conservative, let us take a prewar issue of October 20, 1917, of Saturday Evening Post. Here we have 100 advertisements roughly summarized as follows: Food, $37,600; clothing, $48,750; shoes, $31,850; automobiles, $54,000; light, $8,250; watches, $10,000; other articles, $212,100; total, $402,550. Multiply this by 52 and it equals $21,931,600 per year, paid by consumers for advertising in one magazine, and there are hundreds of big publications, all reaping their share of this lucrative business, which multiplies the cost of many staple articles by more than two.

Under our crazy competitive regime, of course all this is necessary; just so long as each is looking out exclusively for self and the bad man for the hindmost, that long will it be needful to boost cheap, inferior articles to the clouds, that they may outsell the genuine.

As cooperative industries come, deceptive things will disappear, advertising will be disposed of, together with the profiteer.

(EDITORS' NOTE: This is the second of two articles by this author.)

carnal gain. But life is not for us to bestow. The Creator ordained the relationship of husband and wife, and provided for the law of life. He gave this wonderful blessing, by which mankind enters into a creative partnership with the divine, and can those who seek to evade and make futile the law go unscathed?"

Why spirits should come to this world we may not know; but we do know that a divine plan is back of the relationship called "marriage." The Creator of the universe said, "They twain shall be one." He also said, "Multiply and replenish the earth." In the light of this injunction, no one has the right to assume the relationship and reject the responsibility. Anyone may refuse to enter the sacred relationship; that is his right and privilege.

Is it not strange how everyone clings to this life? It would be considered a dreadful crime for anyone to be allowed to stop our living at his will, or because he was stronger than another be allowed to cut short a victim's life! So it would seem that here, as in all other affairs of life, a safe rule is the golden rule. "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." The opposite rule of "Might makes right," is one which has been the primal cause of all wars and ambitions, schemes for personal ease, and personal advancement, and unless one is willing to give sanction to this sorrow-working rule, one should hesitate indeed to "send back" one soul seeking earth-expression.

Our gospel teaches that "he who keeps the law of God has no need to break the laws of the land." The "laws of the land" prohibit the spreading of "birth control" literature. The law counts abortion a crime, and legislates against "contraception" propaganda. Yet we find, among so-called religious (?) people, these laws are being broken to an alarming extent. Health and happiness are being wrecked and homes broken up as a direct consequence of the transgression.

A prominent journal, Reedy's Mirror, had an article in which it stated, "There is no safe receipt for birth control or contraception." A sample of the letter received was printed, and the writer adds, "It is true, nevertheless, and I can prove my statement by the best physicians."

The "golden rule" is safe, sisters, and good to live by.

Wherein Lies the Path of Rectitude?

If all mothers could realize the sacredness and beautiful mission of motherhood, how much better the world would be! That mothers should carefully educate and train their daughters for this, the most important of all professions, I have always believed. That wifehood and motherhood are too often approached with carelessness and gross ignorance of their sacred duties, is the cause of most of the sorrow and disaster which to-day enter the homes of the people. Less infant mortality, fewer wrecked homes, and more permanent happiness would come with proper knowledge gained beforehand.

It is sad when a girl marries, and, while yet but a bride and unaccustomed to the new wifely duties, she is confronted with the grave task of maternity. When motherhood comes within the first year of wedded life, the young wife has no time to meditate or study for the good of the coming child, whose right it is to be well born, to have health, and a heritage of welcoming love. Few young mothers realize all this; few have made any real preparation for it.

In conversation with mothers the question often comes, "Do you think it wrong to have large families?" In answer I have said that the first consideration of all parents in bringing children into the world should be the welfare of those children. No individual whose physical or mental condition is not perfectly normal, should consider it his or her duty or privilege to become the parent of children. And it is a question whether a woman can maintain this high standard of physical and mental strength when forced to bear children at the rapid rate often observed.

Parenthood is a blessing from God inasmuch as his laws are followed. Nature does not countenance a woman's passing through the Gethsemane of childbirth every year. Such frequency is evidence that the parents have been intemperate or otherwise have broken the unchangeable laws of the Creator. He placed husband and wife together, one flesh, for their betterment, physical, moral, and mental; but if, through violation of the law, a woman's health is wrecked at twenty-five, her nerves frayed at the edges, and her little ones anemic and undernourished, it is not the will of the Master, who "doeth all things well."

I do not agree with those who believe that, in spite of intemperance, faith and prayer will prevent too frequent inceptions. The decree is established, and it must be obeyed just the same as other laws of God and nature. However, I believe there may be instances where God, in his infinite mercy and compassion, has stretched forth a hand for the protection of a helpless mother.

At our last Saskatchewan conference a request was made that before another year went by, arrangements might be made whereby our men, married and single, might have opportunity to hear the pure, sacred story of their physical selves. This is very essential to a right attitude towards the subject under present consideration. If taught in a sacred way, men would have a different conception of parenthood, and a more reverent understanding of the holy relation between husband and wife. Unreasonable physical demands made of an expectant mother are not only inconsiderate and selfish, unjust and unholy, but are distinctly injurious to both mother and child, and exert an undesirable influence upon the latter's physical and mental condition.

You have perhaps read of Kaiser Wilhelm's crippled arm. It is said he quite frequently speaks profanely of his mother because he attributes his affliction to her self-indulgence. On the other hand, we may never know the real number of self-sacrificing and noble men who have placed themselves under strong inhibition through love for wife and coming child.

Children should never be accidents. Husband and wife should plan and arrange for them before conception, and dedicate themselves and their desired offspring to lives of holiness and the service of God. There is nothing so sacred as parenthood, and the happiest moment of a woman's life is when her babe is placed in her arms—whole, sound, and perfect. It is a grave responsibility, but one a real woman welcomes with gladness and seeks to discharge in humility.

It is said of the Greeks that when a woman is pregnant, she is not only treated very tenderly by her husband, but is surrounded with beautiful pictures, flowers, quiet and peace, and only beautiful thoughts conveyed to her, in order that the prenatal influence upon the coming child may be noble and worthy. What a blessed custom! Why cannot our boys and young men be taught, from earliest childhood, to reverence motherhood in like manner?

All mothers should be impressed to teach not only their daughters, but their sons as well, concerning their own origin. Much of the sanctity of motherhood is lost by parents failing to do this, and leaving the children to find out certain of life's truths from impure sources. No one is so well qualified to tell the beautiful story of life to a child as the mother who went down into "the valley of the shadow of death" to give that life to him.

Some children become curious in regard to some of these things at a very early age, and their questions should always be answered truthfully. Roland comes to me at five and a half, questioning, "Mamma, what does God make us of?" and, "Why can't we come down from heaven big men and ladies?" Little, pure, innocent one! My fervent prayer is that I may be able to keep him always thus! I try to answer him truthfully, in a way to keep his confidence the while I satisfy his present curiosity. As he grows older I want to meet his inquiring mind with truths presented in a way to impress him with their beauty and sacredness, as I continue steadfastly to make his will strong to resist, his vision clear for decision, and his heart and soul chained in love to his Creator and God.

"A Racial Viewpoint"

A thoughtful letter, recently received from the supervisor of our social purity division, contained among other things the following paragraphs, which will be read with interest and profit by many who are too prone to examine some of these troubling and modern problems from the narrow restrictions of personal comfort or convenience, and forget that there are social, national, racial, universal, and spiritual aspects to the question.

"I discovered a new viewpoint—new to me—in the discussion of the question of birth control. It is in the textbook used in the State Teachers' College, Educational Hygiene, by L. W. Loper. Here is a brief idea of it: 'When we think what history that germ plasm has had, through the billions of accidents of not being continued it passed unscathed to the present day; when we contemplate the wrong that we should do society and the world if, through our neglect, an excellent germ plasm should not be continued for another generation, then we realize, dimly, the magnitude of the trusteeship that is ours in the care of this germ plasm that we carry. The germ plasm belongs to society, to the state, and to injure it or prevent it from carrying out its manifest destiny, save for eugenical reasons, is to be unfaithful to one's trusteeship, is to commit a crime against society and the state; and it should be so considered by the state.'

"This is a racial viewpoint, and I believe it is correct."

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXV

Home and School

1. Why should the mother and teacher be close friends?
2. Give some reasons why they, usually, are not.
3. How may this be corrected?
4. What relations exist between the home and the school?
5. What organizations tend to bring parent and teacher closer together?
6. What are some of the things gained from these organizations by both parent and teacher?
7. Why should parents visit the school?
8. Have you ever heard parents say they did not feel welcome by the teacher? Do you think this a just excuse?
9. Can you notice any difference in the child's attitude at school, when the mother is a regular visitor?
10. What is the best time to go, as far as the child's work is concerned?
11. What are the arguments in favor of teaching the child at home?
12. Give the arguments against teaching the child at home.
13. How can home study be made advantageous to the child before he enters school?
14. In what ways are private schools advantageous?
15. Are they satisfactory as public schools? Why?
16. What background for the school should the home furnish?
17. Can the home be made to supplement the work at school? If so, how?
18. What should characterize the ideal home?
19. How can the school be used to enlarge the opportunities of the home for pleasure? study? recreation? etc.

College Grads Practicing Race Suicide, Is Charge

Newspaper reports of the recent meeting of the National Education Association at Des Moines, Iowa, contained the following:

Race suicide is being practiced on a vast scale by American college graduates, Maurice Ricker, assistant director of the United States public health service, declared in an address before the department of secondary education to-day.

He submitted a series of figures to substantiate his statement. "Investigations by the Federal Health Service," he said, "over a period of years indicate that the progeny of 1,000 graduates from such institutions as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Vassar, and Smith will not exceed fifty in one hundred years from now."

A similar investigation conducted among illiterate foreigners, he said, showed that in a like period the original thousand will be multiplied at least one hundred times.

The ratio, therefore, will be, he said, fifty men and women descended from educated parents to 100,000 individuals begotten by ignorant parents.

Shirk Responsibility

This condition, Mr. Ricker said, is premeditated, college graduates shirking the responsibility of children. Mr. Ricker's statements created somewhat of a minor tempest at the meeting.

He urged that sex matters be taught openly in the schools. "It must be placed on the same footing as other sciences," Mr. Ricker declared.

During the discussion that followed, Judge Ben Lindsey, of Denver, raised the question whether the teaching of sex matters would not increase immorality. This contention was strenuously denied by Mr. Ricker, who cited figures to disprove it.

Husband, Home, and Babies Is Destiny of Womanhood

"A husband is the end of a perfect girlhood; home and babies the destiny of our womanhood.

"But Miss Alice Robertson is wrong in discarding all of her experience in favor of marriage. The ideal woman's life combines wifehood, motherhood, career.

"And marriage is not to be accomplished hit-or-miss at the first opportunity. No girl should marry until she is twenty-five!"

Thus the composite opinion of various men and women upon our girls plus marriage combination indorsed in the remarkable statement to young women of our only Congresswoman, the "Lady from Oklahoma," in which she points to herself as a "horrible example" of what the American woman should not be, Miss Robertson said:

Ideal Future

"I've done a man's work in this world and paid the price. Don't follow in my footsteps. A girl's ideal future is a husband and babies in a home of her own. The greatest thing in the world is mother love."

That two things are more to be considered by marriageable girls than plunging into the "ideal future," one a sensible age and the other ability to keep herself from being a parasite upon her husband, is the reply to Miss Robertson's statement.

Mrs. Sarah Christopher, as a member of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Purity, declared:

Physical Lure

"In the ideal marriage the girl should be at least twenty-five before she becomes a wife; the man at least thirty before he marries.

"When a girl is younger, particularly when she is in her teens, she is looking for a husband that combines Apollo, Solomon and Cresus. She ends by eloping with most anybody. As a usual thing the woman of thirty finds only amusement in the boy she adored at twenty.

"I am opposed to early marriages. They are based on physical attraction, for between sixteen and twenty-five the physical lure is strongest. To be ideal, marriage must unite two minds; possible only after minds have developed."

The same age limit was set by William Rice, the famous "marrying justice," of Denver, Colorado. Justice Rice, whose record was 1,000 marriages in five years, continued:

"The idea of marrying to grow up together is all wrong. The young couple will drift into childish quarrels and will have neither restraint nor tolerance, gift of the years.

"Every couple should be engaged at least one year. Dur-

LETTERS

Missionary Work in Denmark

Elder Andersen writes interestingly of the experiences he has had in Scandinavia.

It will no doubt interest the HERALD readers to know that Brother P. T. Andersen, who was sent to Denmark, is not dead as yet, although I have not written for the HERALD. The reason for that is, I am a poor hand when it comes to writing the English language.

August 10, 1920, I landed in Copenhagen, and when I look back over that year I wonder what have I accomplished. I visited with my folks for a little time, then I hunted up our old friends of former years and found them all glad to see me. I started meetings in my home town, Hundslund, and also two other places, so I had three meetings a week and several miles between. I worked along that way until the middle of November. I had to go to Copenhagen to have my passport renewed and at the same time visit the few Saints we have in that city. I was glad to meet them and I think my visit did them some good.

I went to Helsingborg, Sweden, to visit a few Saints that we have over there. I stayed there a week and we had meeting with Brother Appelkvieti. We were only seven, and two were outsiders, but we felt the presence of God's Holy Spirit and we all felt that God is true to his promises that where two or three gather together in his name, there he will be to own and to bless. They were all very good to me and I had to promise to come again.

When I went to the consul to have my passport renewed he wanted to know what church I represented. I told him the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He looked me over for some time, then he went in another room, came back, and told me to come back the next day.

I came back the next day and I was told the consul wanted to have a talk with me. I told him that would suit me all right. I was taken to his office and there he told me that he could not give me more than two months on my passport ing that time they should follow the Old World custom of gathering a trousseau of linen and clothing sufficient to last three years, for it takes that long for a man to find his bearings and put away a nest egg.

"Furthermore, the wife should be better educated than the husband. Her accomplishment will balance his opportunity to keep up with the world through his work, and will, to a great extent, help her to realize the mutual obligation of the marital contract, as against the greed of a 'parasite wife,' who wants all and gives nothing. It is the husbands of parasite wives who seek divorces."

Doctor Scott Nearing, authority on social and economic questions in this country, believes this way:

"If a girl of twenty-two can find a man of twenty-five who has physical health, ability, and compatibility, such an early marriage is ideal. But she had better wait for this man until she is thirty or thirty-five, or forever, than to marry the wrong man.

"It is hopeful for the future of the race that our educated women are setting up standards that men eventually must meet."

Threaten Ruin

"But to-day's young man shrinks from the burden of the parasite wife, the one who is an economic liability. Often the whole concept of the women of the middle and upper classes is to sponge upon the men.

"Every woman not engaged with the care of small children should give herself to some other productive work. Wives who will not cooperate actively in the marriage relationship with their husbands, and who are economic burdens to our men, threaten ruin to this country, just as Rome was ruined by its dissolute women."—Exchange.

because I was a Mormon. I asked him how he knew I was a Mormon. "Well," he said, "you are a Latter Day Saint, and they are Mormons, and they will not be allowed to do missionary work in this country."

I told him that all Latter Day Saints were not Mormons and I told him that I thought a man in his standing ought to know that. He asked me if I had been to see the chief of the state police. I told him I did not think I had anything to do with the chief of the state police as long as I had not had my passport stamped by the consul. He told me to go and see the chief. "He wants to have a talk with you, and if he gives you a permit to stay, you come back to me and I will give you the other four months."

Next day I went to the office of the state police and was led up to the chief's private office. He told me to take a seat. I will say for him that he treated me like a gentleman. He said, "I have called you to my office because I am interested in you and would like to know who you are and what you want, and I suppose you will be glad to tell me."

I told him most assuredly I would.

He said, "The consul has told me that you are representing the Latter Day Saints and still are not a Mormon. That is what I would like to have you explain to me."

I did in as few words as I could, and I had some literature with me on the difference between the two churches, which I told him to read, and that would give him all the information he needed. He told me that he would. He then pushed a button and a man came in and I was introduced to him. He was a reporter. The chief told him to treat me like a gentleman, because I had not done violence to the law. He said, "You are in a free country, Mr. Andersen; we simply want to know what your church teaches so we in time to come shall be able to judge intelligently and not classify you with those we call Mormons in this country."

He gave me the parting hand and said, "You have interested me very much and you come back in four days and I will let you know what we can do for you."

I went with the reporter down to his office and gave to him the same report as I had given to the chief. I also gave him some literature. He asked me, "Are you going to tear down the doctrine of the state church? Not that I care, but I would like to know."

I told him, "I am sent to preach the gospel, and if the preachers of the state church are preaching the gospel they have nothing to fear, but if not something is liable to fall."

I went back in four days and went to the window where it read, "Foreign Passports," and asked for my passport. The lady handed it out to me and told me it cost four crowns and that it was O. K. I asked to see the chief. She wanted to know what I wanted to see the chief about. I told her, "Even if I tell you, you will not know anyway."

While we were talking the chief came along. He came over and shook hands. I asked him if he had read the literature I gave him. He said, "Yes, and it was all good. You can preach all you want to and you shall have no trouble in getting your men in here as long as you preach that kind of gospel. You can go down to the consul and let him give you the four more months and then come back here and I will put my seal on it and you will have no trouble hereafter."

So I did. I surely felt the truthfulness of the Master's words to his disciples in Matthew 10: 14-17, I. T. "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye therefore wise servants, and harmless as doves. But beware of men; for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues. And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak; for it shall be given you in the same hour what you shall speak; for it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."

And Luke 12: 11, 12: "And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say; for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say."

I returned to Hundslund and spent the holidays with my folks, and while there I received a letter from Brother and Sister Krestoffer Sorensen, near Aalborg, that they had lost their baby that had been born to them just before holidays and they wanted me to conduct the funeral. My brother-in-law, where I stayed, had a couple of days previous met with an accident, falling from a milk wagon, and breaking two ribs. He had been hauling milk to the creamery and I was hauling for him. I wrote them that I did not feel justified in leaving them under these conditions, but at night I had a dream wherein I was shown that I had to go, for there was something for me to do. I told my sister that they would have to get some one to take my place, because I had to leave, and I packed my grip and went the same day.

Brother Sorensen had invited a Baptist minister to come, thinking I could not come. When the minister found out that I was a Latter Day Saint minister, he refused to have anything to do with the funeral if I should assist. I told Brother Sorensen not to pay any attention to me, but let the minister have charge of the whole thing, and so he did. I suppose he felt like the Pharisee that stood and prayed thus with himself, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are; extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Mormon publican." He did not have much to say to me. He acted as though I did not know anything.

The next day Sister Sorensen said to me, "I want you to bless our little girl before you leave, and as soon as I get strong I want to be baptized."

I stayed with them a few days and before I left I blessed their little four-year-old girl.

I went from there to Aalborg, rented a room, and started to hunt up old friends of former years. I couldn't find a place where I could hold meetings for some time, but I visited around. I attended Mormon meetings when I could, and took part in them when I was allowed. At first they did not know who I was, but soon found out. I was told by some of their members that they would meet anybody in a discussion. I told them I did not think they knew what they were talking about. They soon found out I was right. I attended their April conference and the president over the Scandinavian Mission was present. His name is Petersen. He told them that Joseph Smith at one time just before he was killed had prophesied that the Saints would be driven from Nauvoo and that they would go to Utah and there build up Zion.

After meeting I went up to shake hands with him. I asked him if he would please tell me where I could find that prophecy of Joseph Smith recorded, that the Saints would be driven out of Nauvoo and go to Utah and then build up Zion. He could not tell me just where it was recorded, but he thought it was in the Life of Joseph Smith by Andrew Jensen. He said he would find it and send it to the president in Aalborg and he could tell me. I wanted to have a talk with him, but he pretended that he did not have time. The truth of the matter was, he had been informed who I was and did not care to answer my questions. So I had to go and am still waiting for his answer.

I asked the local officers for the use of their baptismal font. I had two that wanted to be baptized. They would have let me use it all right, but they had to ask their president about it. I knew he would not permit that. That was not all. He said to them, "We cannot prevent him from attending our meetings, but I will not allow him to take any part in them. Try if you can to get him to join our church. If not, have nothing to do with him, for he is an apostate and our worst enemy."

Some of them told him that they thought it would be I that would get them instead of them getting me, because I knew too much about Mormonism and had too much light, so they could not get me to be a Brighamite. Some of them are investigating our claims and I hope they may have courage to step out and obey the truth. One Mormon lady told me of a dream she had. She had been thinking that she never could be baptized over. She thought her baptism was as good as mine. I told her that they had no authority, but she could not believe that, so she had this dream. She thought she was standing between two congregations. One of them was larger than the other. The larger was standing in darkness, but the smaller one was in the light; she was undecided which to go to, but she would rather join the larger. While she was thus standing an old man came up to her and said, "You see these two congregations. The larger one is the Brighamites, but they are all in darkness and have no authority; the smaller one is the Josephites. They are in the light and have the authority to baptize."

I told her that dream was from God and that it would stand as a testimony against her and the whole house, but she is still in the dark and I suppose always will be, "for every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God."—John 3: 20, 21.

On June 8, I baptized a young married couple; very fine young people. I have known the brother from my first mission here and the Mormons thought they were going to get them. He attended their meetings for years but he already had so much truth that it never left him nor allowed him to join them. They are both good singers and willing to take hold. You can always depend on them. That is worth much here.

On June 24, I baptized two more. Brother and Sister Kristoffer Sorensen, who had lost their baby, and their little girl and myself went up there in the morning and we all went out to the ocean, the North Sea, and there I baptized the two new ones and confirmed them out in the open, and we enjoyed God's Holy Spirit. We had taken lunch along and we had a real good time together. We stayed with the new members all night and we left them feeling glad that they were now in the kingdom of God.

I am holding meetings in a hall here every Sunday evening, and on Wednesday evening. I am holding outdoor meetings in Hasseris, a little village out about two miles.

If any of my brethren in the States have any old charts on the Bible or Book of Mormon which they could spare, send them to my address. I will make good use of them here this winter.

Wife and baby are going to leave me, September 2, but I am thankful to my heavenly Father that they came and stayed with me this summer. I hope they have a safe journey home and find the rest of our children well. Remember, the missionary has to pay for everything he has here, and it is very high. Postage is double what it was.

Sister Andersen joins me in the best wishes for all the Saints in the homeland. Your brother in gospel bonds,

A Canadian Protest Against "Jingoism"

Which indicates that we must avoid partisanship in all our ideas and statements.

In perusing the HERALD of June 28, I came across an article on "child welfare" by Professor William A. Lewis, of Kansas City, in which he makes the following startling statement:

"The finest soldier who trod the soil of Europe was the German. Before the American boys went into Europe his equal was not to be found and why?"

The last two words interest me, "and why?" As a member of the church and a reader of the HERALD I must express my regret at seeing this kind of jingoism given countenance in our publication.

May I ask your readers to go back with me to the early days of '15, when the dogs of war were fresh, when the Germans were pouring the flower of their well-trained armies into Belgium and France. Things were looking black for the allies, and incidentally, for America, too. The gallant British and French and Belgian troops were warworn and weary, a mere handful to cope with millions.

Then came the crisis, at Ypres in April, the line smashed and Teuton barbarity came pouring through the gap, bound for the coast. It was there and then that they met their equals; yes, their betters. Fighting against fearful odds, six to one at the least, overwhelmed with artillery, far beyond anything they had to match it, the Canadians stood in the breach and bore the brunt of it. April 22, 23, and 24 are historic days.

During that time they hung on, lost their guns and regained them; suffered the first attack of gas launched by the Germans—fighting even for breath, they stuck to it and saved the situation. Where then were the German equals? Canada has paid the price in blood. We could go on down the list, naming fields of fame where Canadians have stood the test through four years of terrific warfare—Givenchy, Courcelliti, Passchendaele, Neuve Chapelle, Cambrai, Lens, Mons, Vimy Ridge.

Now let us consider Verdun. When Marshal Foch put down his foot and said, "They shall not pass," who was it then that stopped, "the finest soldiers who trod the soil of Europe"? For months and months the crown prince's legions coming on in never-ending waves, only to break upon the solid rock, Verdun, held by the soldiers of France through the most frightful and most Titanic siege in all history. These were men who proved themselves the equals of the Hun in courage and efficiency.

For these reasons, therefore, I think it highly unbecoming in Americans so boastfully to elbow out the men who were "over there," from the drop of the hat, who spilled their blood in torrents for two years and a half before America saw fit to take a hand in her own defense. English, Irish, Scotch, Italians, Russians, Serbians, and our splendid Australians have left behind them records of valor and worth, which mark them equals of any.

These are a few points which I think are worth considering. As the professor says, "We are not far enough removed from these events to discuss them without prejudice, without feeling." We can understand the feeling, but why not do away with the prejudice?

Book of Mormon Geography

May I say a word in advocacy of the new map of Book of Mormon lands as diagramed by Elder L. E. Hills. It is undoubtedly a find, the greatest in connection with that book since its discovery in 1829.

I have given much time to painstaking research of the map, comparing it with the Book of Mormon, and I must say that the harmony is nothing short of marvelous.

Our brother is now lecturing in western Iowa and his efforts are awakening unprecedented interest and enthusiasm. Several years ago his map was referred by General Conference to a committee for report. Up to date we have had no report.

Whatever the inconvenience of saying "We were wrong" we may as well square away, back up, and take a new course—one that will lead us into avenues of harmony, opening up into an oasis of wealth such as we have never heretofore experienced.

Brother Hills is a student of the Book of Mormon, the greatest I have ever met, and his contribution to the geography of that book will be handed down to generations unborn as one of the grandest discoveries of the age.

I am fully conscious that my remarks will occasion questioning, but be it so; there is only one way to determine their accuracy, and that by securing from our brother his atlas, comparing it with the Book of Mormon itself.

With profound appreciation of the splendid services rendered the students of the Book of Mormon by the laborious researches of our brother, and with honor to whom it is due,

Yours in the interest of truth,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Northeastern Kansas Reunion

The reunion which was held at Netawaka, Kansas, for the Northeastern Kansas District has concluded and become an event to look back to with fond recollections by those who were fortunate enough to have attended. The writer has attended a number of reunions, but never have I been to a reunion where there was a more humble spirit and a greater desire to contribute to the general success of the camp meeting.

The prayer meetings were strengthening to each one and there was no occasion to urge the people to be present at these meetings. Each desired to contribute and tried to make the meetings a success. Apostle J. F. Curtis was to have been with us the fore part of the reunion, but was prevented because of sickness at home, but he came the latter part and contributed to a great degree to make the meetings a success. T. W. Curtis was here and preached several times for us. C. E. Guinand took this occasion to visit his old home place and old friends. He preached for us twice. The missionaries of the district, L. W. Fike and John Ely, were present, doing what they could, also District President James A. Thomas and Bishop's Solicitor, F. G. Hedrick. There was a tent reserved for the Women's Department work. Sister J. A. Gardner, from Independence, was greeted by a goodly number of sisters eager to learn, so they might discharge their family duties in a more excellent manner. In the latter part of the reunion Sister Laura E. Mann, from the Sanitarium at Independence, gave lectures to the boys and girls and to the mothers.

Doctor Harrington was present and gave lectures on hygiene and other subjects pertaining to the making of a better race. His work was appreciated. The Goff sisters were present from Topeka and gave lectures on dietetics. Their instruction was very practical and much appreciated. Come and meet with us next year.

The meals were served in the Masonic Hall by the sisters of Netawaka, and some who are interested in our work who are not members but we hope will be some time.

The expenses were met by those present, and a surplus was left in the hands of the treasurer for next year. It was voted to have another reunion next year at Netawaka. Reunion committee: James A. Thomas, F. G. Hedrick, and Lyman W. Fike.

There were twenty-five tents in the park. The weather was grand. Only one storm, and the old ship of Zion passed through that in a first-class manner.

The advertising was carried on by the use of a mimeograph. The Oriole Girls distributed the announcements over the town. Then announcements were sent out over the rural routes. Many nonmembers were present. The writer believes that the impression on this community will not be forgotten.

Yours in gospel bonds,

LYMAN W. FIKE,

The Inspired Version

"Here we are almost at the close of the 'times of the Gentiles' and the Inspired Translation of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants have not been preached to the world in more than a weak, apologetic, and inadequate manner. Men have been afraid, like Peter walking on the water, that they would sink."

These words were taken from the HERALD of August 2, and are from the pen of A. H. Christensen. They are startling words and we would do well to pause and consider whether the commands of God which he gave at the beginning of the work are being fully carried out. In Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2, God speaks to all men and warns them that all he has decreed in the book shall be fulfilled. In paragraph 4, he tells us that he called Joseph Smith, jr., his servant, and spoke unto him from heaven and gave him commandments. The world was to be warned. God saw that Joseph Smith possessed the qualities he required for this great work and chose him from among men for that purpose.

It required courage then and it requires courage now to proclaim that God has broken the silence of centuries and speaks by revelation. Fearless, faithful men will always be in demand, because God values such. The Lord told Jeremiah, "Whatsoever I command thee that shalt thou speak. Be not afraid of their faces."

Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, was a brave, fearless man and delivered the word of God in the midst of opposition. He had an important message to deliver to mankind, viz, the birth of Christ. God sent an angel to the prophet to tell the people, but they were angry and tried to kill him. "But the Spirit of the Lord was with him, inasmuch that they could not hit him with their stones, neither with their arrows."—Helaman 5:112. But their anger and opposition did not deter him from delivering the word of God.

Paul is an example of valor and fearlessness. He said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." Also he said, "Wherefore, I take you to record this day that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God."

Let me ask, Is not the "whole counsel of God" contained in the three books. In them are God's message to the race, the fullness of the gospel. Then by what right does man treat the word of God so lightly. The world has a right to hear the warnings which those revelations contain.

Can we be free from the blood of this generation if we are not fearless in declaring the whole counsel of God? "Let him who is warned, warn his neighbor." Hold up the three books, for therein are to be found the words of God, and let who will take offense, since God has commanded us to proclaim his word.

A Reminiscence of Stirring Times in Jaffa

I sit again in what used to be the Mediterranean Hotel years ago, which brings back memories of many years. Cannot remember the date just now, but during the Russian and Turkish war, I believe, I was here with my mother, who had come up from Jaffa to consult Doctor Chaplin, an Englishman who demanded great confidence.

One morning on a Friday, there was a great rushing in the streets in front of the hotel, and the children of the proprietor came rushing in, saying, "A revolution, a revolution." The big door, more like a gate, was closed, and then all of us gathered here in this room, where we intended to rush to the cellar when we would hear the gate burst open, but it did not come to that although it very nearly happened, for a young man had gone to the governor and, with revolver in hand, ordered him to send out soldiers to put down the mob or his life would be taken. A rush of armed men had come out of the mosque, crying, "Down with the Christian." Many dropped dead from fear, and in the rush and crush, people left their shops without stopping to close them, but it passed without a revolution, as God's protecting hand was outstretched; yet all knew that one shot or a start, then nothing would have stopped it from going full length.

That night about eleven o'clock, I retired to my room, but the fright was still upon me, it seems, for I awoke crying for mercy in Arabic, for I dreamed they had come in, and there was no escape for me. I awoke in a crouching position, and it was some time before I could really believe it was only a dream and my room undisturbed.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.

MUNISING, MICHIGAN, August 9, 1921.

Editors Herald: Munising is on the map. Although there have been a few Saints living here for several years, there had never been a regular series of meetings here until about one year ago, when Elders Ernest N. Burt and Arthur E. Starks came here with the district tent and preached a few weeks for us, which resulted in the baptism of seven. Shortly afterwards Elder Charles O. Howe came here and a branch was organized with about fourteen, then others moved here and some were located that had been living here but were not in touch with the district presidency.

Last Sunday, August 7, Elder Ernest N. Burt concluded a series of meetings which he had been conducting since July 17, which resulted in the baptism of ten more precious souls into the kingdom and others deeply interested, so the work is moving forward. We have a splendid Sunday school, but are handicapped by having to hold our services in the homes of the Saints, as our town is overcrowded and there is not a building to be rented. Besides, times are too unsettled to build.

General Conference in April, 1869, and reported in the SAINTS' HERALD, volume 15, page 281, and in Church History, volume 3, page 520. It has been republished within the past few years and it would bear a republication, but we give here only an extract from the preamble (General Conference, 1869):

"School of Prophets. The need for an educated, intelligent, and sincerely devout body of seventies to promulgate the gospel, and high priests to preside over the churches, has been, and now is, felt very sensibly by very many who have salvation of souls and prosperity of the church at heart.

"Etiquette is not taught in the camp, nor the art of war in the nursery, neither are priests educated at Oxford, nor rabbis with the Jesuits; nor can we reasonably expect a plentiful supply of genuine Latter Day Saint elders to be furnished by the schools of the Gentiles; as well might we look for the sturdy oak in the hothouse, or the orange in Lapland, as for thorough, devout, self-abnegating elders from the popular schools of fiction and fashion; 'tis contrary to the common course of nature—the child clings to the breast from whence it derives its nourishment, and the faith of the pupil is tintured with the mind of his professors."

It is here referred to as the school of the prophets, but was in fact outlined on almost exactly the lines afterwards carried out at Graceland College.

Because it was designated as the school of the prophets President Joseph Smith later suggested (1870,) that that belonged to the First Presidency to instigate and that he did not feel prepared to establish it at that time. But that by no means indicated a lack of interest on his part and certainly was not because of any opposition, because he was not opposed. This is shown by an editorial of March, 1871, the following year, after the matter of the school was deferred:

Important Statement of 1871.

"We suppose that there will be an attempt made at the April Conference of 1871, to revive the question of an educational movement to be made by the church. We have not the slightest objection to the agitation of the question, but do hereby respectfully submit the following suggestions for reconsideration.

"Ignorance of those things clearly within our reach, is not excusable. How to obtain a knowledge of that which it is necessary to know, is the constant study of those who are not contented to abide in ignorance, and the faint support which these have received from those, who, if they are not patrons of learning, should be advocates of its acquirement, has materially retarded the efforts that they have been able to make.

"Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting, get understanding."

"There is a wisdom gained in the schools, and there is a wisdom which is the gift of God. We should not undervalue the one, nor overestimate the other. That there must be a medium is conformable with most rules, and wisdom—true wisdom would point to this medium as the one best adapted for Saints to pursue.

"There is no real necessity that a moderate, or even a thorough education should destroy the reliance in and respect for God, which every Saint must feel; but there is some danger that by reason of overweening confidence which sometimes follows education, a trust may be placed in man's strength; and so man being weak, may fall.

"To the pure all things are pure,' is the embodiment, in terse language, of the following truth. The pure-minded seek and find the true, good, noble, and intelligent developed in all things around them, and whatever the conditions under which they may live, move, or act, they respond only to that which finds its counterpart, or answering chord in themselves. They find good among their fellow men in all conditions, and in every avocation, [vocation] because they are on the alert for that good. The evil they may see, but it finds no lodgment in them because that the good has predominant possession.

"To the pure-minded then—the pure in heart—there lies no danger in education, and only those who have fear of the ground on which they stand should refuse their assent to an educational movement.

"Those who possess the feeling that they should be progressive, will not base their objection to an educational effort among us, that if it be a success it will be used as the means to educate for the ministry, unless the advocates of that effort make this proposition. But it is not a necessary consequence that because men may favor a general system of education, that they propose to make it to supersede the most essential qualification that can be given to man—the power of the living God.

"In the discussion of this question, let the general principles govern, not the isolated, close, conservative element, that snarls at progression, for fear cherished institutions may be found to be defective.

"We say, therefore, let the light shine. Let the pure-minded take the lead, and let all unite to wage successful warfare against ignorance."—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 18, p. 144.

Many Are Called to Prepare

This appears to be a very positive statement. The position that no schooling could take the place of the power of the living God, he held throughout his life, and it is our position as a church to-day. No amount of training can take the place of the inspiration of Almighty God. No amount of study and no course of study or department of any school or college can take the place of a divine call to represent God. That depends upon the direction of his Spirit. But a man called of God may rightly fit himself for better service, and where a representative of God directs certain young men to prepare for service in the church, that is at least a call for preparation. It may or may not be followed by a call to actual service and ordination; that will depend upon fitness.

But even if such a case should arise that a young man be directed to prepare for service by a man duly appointed of God to direct the affairs of his church on earth, that would be no new thing, nor would it be confined to the last twenty-six years since the opening of Graceland College. Young men have been called through the inspiration of the Spirit to prepare for future service from time to time in our various local prayer services.

We regret that space does not permit of our publishing in full all that President Smith wrote on this subject; that he favored every day of his life education and the establishment of schools cannot be successfully controverted. His public expressions were numerous. Thus we note the following from the TRUE LATTER-DAY SAINTS' HERALD, volume 20, page 738, December 1, 1873:

The Church at Nauvoo

"So far as we now remember anything about the sunny days of the prosperity of the church at Nauvoo, and the policy of the then leaders, there was a manifest tendency to encourage the education of the people.

"When the necessity for a change in this policy occurred, we are not informed; but so late as January, 1914, President Joseph Smith, in an 'Epistle to the Elders in England,' published in the Times and Seasons for January 1, 1841, congratulates the church upon the fact that there was then a bill before the legislature of the State of Illinois for the incorporation of a seminary of learning. Elder D. C. Smith, then editor of the Times and Seasons, in his editorial for that number, says that General Bennett had just returned with a charter for the 'University of Nauvoo.'

"In this charter, certain trustees were to 'have all the powers and privileges for the advancement of the cause of education which appertain to the trustees of any other college or university of this State.'

"The city council acted upon the provision of the charter for the university, on the 3d of February, 1841, appointing certain men trustees, of whom, as regents, were Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Hyrum Smith, D. H. Wells, C. C. Rich; thereby showing that it was the opinion and earnest conviction of those men that education was of paramount importance.

"In pursuit of the measures adopted by the leading men of the church the citizens of Nauvoo were notified, in the Times and Seasons, for March 1, 1841, that J. P. Greene, C. C. Rich, D. H. Wells, and Vinson Knight were appointed school wardens for their respective wards.

"This charter for the university was received by the church in conference, at Nauvoo, by a unanimous vote.

"This shows that the church then, together with its leading men, were a unit in favor of education.

"On page 631, of the Times and Seasons, there will be found the following significant language:

"While this city is lengthening her cords, and strengthening her stakes, and exhibiting such a spectacle of bustle and enterprise as was never before witnessed, it is to be hoped that mental culture will not be passed over as a little thing. Knowledge is power. A finished education always gives an influence in cultivated society, which neither wealth nor station can impart nor control."

"An extract from the Evening and Morning Star, reprinted in the Times and Seasons, for January 15, 1842, shows that:

"If children are to be brought up in the way they should go, to be good citizens here, and happy hereafter, they must be taught. It is idle to suppose that children will grow up good, while surrounded with wickedness, without cultivation. It is folly to suppose they can become learned without education. . . . In order to do this as it should be, it is necessary that children should be taught in the rudiments of common learning out of the best books."

"Here seems to be the key to the subsequent action of the church in fostering the cause of education."

Religious Education

But his position with regard to religious education has been called in question by some since he is no longer here to speak for himself. In this connection it is interesting to note his early expressions as set forth in this issue of the HERALD. They clearly provide for preparation and study by men called to the ministry. The action of General Conference of 1869 also provided for a school complete with regular faculty members, with farm land surrounding, in which young men should be especially trained for the ministry. This does not mean that men would go there and thus call themselves to be ministers. It was to be not a theological seminary in that sense. It was for the training of men called of God to his service, and future calls would doubtless depend upon fitness.

Graceland Not a Theological Seminary

Our attention has been called to SAINTS' HERALD, volume 42, page 68, January, 1895:

"There has been as yet no thought indulged by the committee suggestive of the idea of endowing a theological chair, or of making a theological department a part of the curriculum. Nor do we think that the present committee is likely to attempt such a change in the avowed and understood intention of their appointment; neither do we think any future committee will undertake it."

This was at the time that Graceland College was being established and just shortly before its opening. The paragraph immediately following the one above quoted states:

"It is quite time that the prejudice against learning, in layman or minister, should be done away. There was a time when God winked at the ignorance of a nation; but that day is past. He not only commands men everywhere to repent; but he also commands the church, especially the ministry, to seek for and obtain information—

"Words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books, words of wisdom: seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

"If this injunction is to be heeded, then the sooner our young people may be put in the way of acquiring the habit and the method of securing information, the better for us whom those of our children coming after will succeed and represent us and the work.

"All other things being equal, the educated man, whether his education is scholastic or self-obtained, is the better representative of his class and his associates, and the more likely to succeed in his work either as principal or agent."

It would seem from a careful reading of the whole editorial the writer by no means decried the value of preparation for the work of the ministry, but quite the reverse.

At the laying of the corner stone of the Graceland College building, President Smith's address was summarized as follows:

"We do not plead for this college because we deem it essential to educate men for the Lord's ministry. The very principle of our faith that the Lord himself calls the laborers whom he may select and command, precludes the idea of educating men for the ministry. God may or may not choose an educated man, for a specific work. Paul said that 'not many wise, not many noble' ones were chosen; but the term 'not many' suggests that there were some 'wise' and some 'noble'; though they may have been few. One thing is certain, that is, that though God may have chosen the 'weak things, yea the foolish things,' to bring to naught the wisdom of the wise; the wisdom and the foolishness written of were the wisdom and the foolishness of this world, not the wisdom, or the seeming foolishness of God.

"One of the leading gifts, if not the leading one, is wisdom; second; knowledge; third, faith. Luke, the historian, was an educated man; so was Paul. The most intelligent of the Gospels, for its historical accuracy is that of Luke. The most comprehensive dissertations on the gospel found in the New Testament, are those of Paul. There is no evidence that John, the Beloved, was what would now be called an illiterate, or unlearned man; he was of a poetic temperament, mild and pleasant in disposition.

"Joseph Smith was an unlearned, uneducated man, at the beginning of his work; but the Lord sent to his aid men of letters and learning, upon whom the literary work of the church was placed.

"From all this we draw the conclusion that while there is no intention to attempt to educate a ministry, for the reason that we cannot by so doing indicate to the Lord whom he should choose; it is becoming in us to 'seek learning and instruction,' by the spirit of wisdom and revelation; from 'all good books'; a knowledge of countries, their people, language, history, the things in the air, water, earth, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work.

"Let us build, as if for time and eternity, characters of men and women of usefulness to their race, if none of them are ever called to act as his ministers or not."

It will be noted that his exact language is not quoted, but a summary only is given.

But as frequently quoted, the second, third, and fifth paragraphs above are omitted. Reading the passage as a whole the effect is somewhat different, and it becomes an argument for a trained minister.

The Present Situation

We recall hearing President Smith speak ten years later at a reunion at Independence, Missouri, where he again took the position that a college education is not a prerequisite to the work of the ministry. This position we believe is not controverted to-day. The necessity and importance of the call of God is not brought in question by the church or her representatives. There has been established no theological seminary, in the sense that the world uses the term, that a young man expresses his desire to enter the ministry, takes a course of study, and so becomes a minister.

The course of religious education at Graceland College is a benefit to anyone who takes it. It is not a prerequisite to ordination to the priesthood. It is a training of men already called.

Some have challenged the establishment of this course because in 1916 the president of Graceland College proposed special courses to train "auxiliary workers." This was approved by the joint council but was finally rejected by the conference and has not been further carried out, though President Briggs still holds in mind the ideal of establishing such courses to train workers for various departments of church work, such as Sunday school, Women's Department, and Religio.

The class in religious education is not a carrying out of that plan. Perhaps some may consider the work in recreational leadership, the Scout movement and the like offered at Graceland College this past year as being a partial attempt to prepare workers for the Religio. Frankly, we believe it to be such.

But the class in religious education was brought into being as a result of President F. M. Smith's recommendation to the conference of 1919. He stated at the conference if he were sustained he would expect to carry into effect the program then laid down. This was part of that program, which was stated as an immediate necessity. After the conference he gave published notice that it would be put into effect, and special work given to prepare those already called, who were expected to go upon foreign missions. In fact, some others were admitted to the class and have been appointed to no mission.

But this class is by no means in contravention of the refusal of the conference of 1916 to approve courses of training for auxiliary workers, nor is it intended to be by the officers of the church as a theological seminary, in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used. It does profess to be an effort to give special information and training on the teachings of the church, and to foreign missionaries on the conditions in the land to which they will be sent.

Nothing can possibly take the place of the call of God through his Holy Spirit. Nothing can possibly take the place of the inspiration of the Spirit of God for our work. If the church should ever attempt to make such a substitution it will certainly be to her loss.

Some things may be learned in the school of hard knocks or may be studied quietly and quickly in an organized school or college. The Spirit of God may quicken our intelligence and direct us in either or both of these schools.

The position of the church in favor of education has been age long and has been practically unbroken since 1830 to the present day. The present head of the church, President F. M. Smith, does not differ from his father and grandfather in urging education, but differs in that he personally has had greater opportunities for work in organized schools. From his position he realizes keenly the needs of the church in all departments for more trained workers. S. A. B.

Public School Music Course

Graceland recognized by the State in a two-year course in public school music.

Further official recognition has been accorded to Graceland College by the State of Iowa in the way of granting to her graduates in the public school music course the State teacher's certificate. Music has come to be recognized as of paramount importance in the public school curriculum and the demand for well qualified instructors of public school music is large.

Graceland is offering a two-year college course in public school music, graduates from which will be granted the Iowa State Teacher's Certificate on exactly the same basis as her other graduates have been receiving State certificates. The course is standardized by the State and consists of approximately half college subjects and half musical subjects, such as harmony, history of music, ear training, and sight singing, music appreciation, methods, voice, and piano. This course will be offered with the opening of college, September 15.

Conference Notices

Chatham, at Chatham, Ontario, 10 a. m., September 23, continuing over the 24th and 25th. All reports and credentials should be sent to district secretary by September 15. Anthony R. Hewitt, district secretary, 41 Lowe Street, Chatham, Ontario.

Southern Ohio, at Vales Mills Branch, September 24 and 25. Conference will open Saturday at 10 a. m. Visitors take the Hocking Valley train to Radcliff, or the K. & M. to Carpenter. T. D. Harnish will arrange to meet all trains. Please notify Brother Harnish if you intend to go. Address T. D. Harnish, Vales Mills, Ohio. A. E. Anderton, president.

The Bishopric

Seattle and British Columbia District: Having received the resignation of Brother John Hartnell as Bishop's agent of this district, we hereby appoint Brother Hugh A. Sprague, 1321 Humboldt Street, Bellingham, Washington.

Brother Sprague's name has been recommended to us by the district conference, and I trust in this time of financial stress that the Saints will remember the needs of the Lord's work. Our constant prayer is, that the Lord will cause his people to be so diligent in their daily tasks that their positions may be secure and their businesses prosper, and that being thus blessed they may in turn liberally support the work of God.

We solicit for Brother Sprague your earnest and devoted support.

For the work which Brother John Hartnell has done in the district, we express our appreciation. He has served faithfully and well.

Respectfully,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Sanitarium Grateful

Superintendent Chapman reports that in response to the call made recently they have received a goodly supply of clean cloths. In lieu of a personal letter to each donor, their appreciation is hereby expressed for the gracious kindness shown.

Move Toward Consolidated Reunion

Copy of preamble and resolutions adopted at the business meeting of the reunion, Erie Beach, Ontario, July 23, 1921:

"The Erie Beach reunion having been demonstrated successfully to meet the needs of our church people socially, intellectually, and spiritually, we believe the time has now arrived when steps may be taken to place this reunion upon a permanent basis, and widen its influence for good: therefore be it

"Resolved that we, members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, assembled in reunion at this place and time, extend an invitation to the Saints of the London, Chatham, Detroit, and Eastern Michigan Districts to take this matter under consideration; and, if this suggestion meets with favor, suggest that a committee be appointed in each of the aforesaid districts to meet with committees from the several other districts named to make recommendations touching the advisability of uniting in one reunion, and devising ways and means of realizing this purpose.

"Further, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the secretary of each of the above-named districts."

The movement initiated by the above resolution, it is hoped, will result in permanent reunion grounds being secured and a better environment for the proper presentation of our reunion work. We have a population of over six thousand Latter Day Saints, within a radius of 150 miles of a central point located within the four districts named.

Because of geographical location the environs of Sarnia, Ontario, and Port Huron, Michigan, will no doubt receive consideration. Walpole Island has been suggested as affording the needed facilities.

The Church Needs

Business Men

Prepare to become a competent business secretary. One of the new courses to be offered at Graceland this year is a two-year training course for secretaries. The course is especially designed to meet the needs of the business world and the great shortage of competent business secretaries.

EDITORIAL

Our Young People

Despite criticism and human failings, as a body they are going forward.

We have had a number of criticisms in the past few months concerning different oral and written statements about the young people of the church.

Some point out the frivolity of the young people. There are some of the young people who go to dances. There are some who follow the pleasures of the world in other ways. There are some who show comparatively little interest in the work of the church, that is true, even in Zion, though that is no reason why young people elsewhere should take such as their pattern.

There is often a larger attendance at the Saturday night moving pictures than at the Sunday night preaching services, but despite this fact, great progress is being made. There is indeed a great revival of interest among the young people. There are large numbers of them showing the spirit of consecration and a desire to give all for the work of the Master.

The young people have crowded out everywhere to the special services held on their behalf and have enthusiastically supported every such effort made on their behalf. The young have been doing splendid work at some of our reunions, holding sunrise prayer meetings and also supporting the regular morning prayer services, especially on the day set apart to their services.

There are more of the young people than ever before applying for admission to Graceland College. There are more than ever before asking for the course in religious education, preparing for future service in the church. There are many thinking of taking work at the Independence Institute, who have not done so before, and young people elsewhere are seeking to make a better preparation.

There have been young people's meetings held in Independence, two series of them already this year. There have been excellent prayer meetings held at 8 a. m. Sunday morning by the young people.

On the other hand, there are those who are seeking after the pleasures of the world, young men of good families who are smoking and keeping late hours. Because of this seeking the so-called pleasures of the world, Elder R. V. Hopkins in a recent sermon in Independence gave considerable attention to this tendency, especially to the wrongfulness of dancing, making his statement in all kindness, but with vigor as a pastor.

But this should not blind us to the fact, that there is a great body of consecrated young people, who are showing a devotion and unity of purpose heretofore uncommon, and that this is the case while many other churches are having difficulty in holding their young people.

Another objection has been made that these efforts are too largely emotional; that the appeal is almost entirely emotional, rather than intellectual. That presents one of the serious problems, not only in religion, but in all of our life. Some psychologists have urged that thinking is a very recent development, because of the tendency shown by humanity to avoid the drudgery of thinking and the comparatively few who attempt to do constructive thinking.

But in our observations we have reached the conclusion that our appeal as a church is more intellectual than that of any other religious organization. It is true there are many able thinkers in every denomination. There is also a splendid critical literature that has been developed by students throughout the world, but the fundamental appeal of most sectarian churches appears to be emotional; especially is that true of their revival services.

We have attended several of these young people's meetings and have noted the distinctive intellectual appeal; nor are we at present convinced that the emotional appeal should be excluded from religion, though we do not personally believe that it should be predominant and controlling.

Still it would be a mistake to infer, as some do, that the young people are taking over the work of the church as a whole. That certainly is not true, if we mean by the young people, those under thirty years of age. In fact, there are none in the joint council under thirty years. There are none under thirty-five, and only one under forty years of age. But there are ten or eleven below fifty years of age, and a man of fifty or even of sixty is by no means old.

We are reminded of a statement in an English paper some eight years ago, of one of their military leaders, which concluded: "But important as has been his work heretofore, we may truly say that the best years of his service are yet before him, for he is only sixty-five years of age."

If sixty-five years of age leaves for a military officer his best years before him, and when we realize that the great leaders in the World War were not young men, we can appreciate the value in our intellectual and spiritual service of men of experience, and rejoice that the church has many such in her councils.

It is important that the question is usually considered from a personal standpoint. We consider age as compared with our own; like the little girl who came home from school and told her mother that she had an awful old teacher.

"Why, how old is she?" "Oh, I don't know, I guess she must be almost twenty years old!"

But while the work of the church has not been turned over to those in the teen age or even to those below thirty years of age as a whole, still it is true that a splendid army of young people is even now entering upon a life of service to the cause of the Master, and very many others are preparing themselves for better service in the years to come, and will soon be ready to go forth to the ends of the earth, carrying the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is a need that they be encouraged in that preparation, and that many more be called and go forth in the name of Jesus Christ.

The young people have their faults; so have we. We want to help them to reduce the number of their faults and encourage them to go forward. There is work enough for all. Let each man learn his duty and do it. S. A. BURGESS.

The Probable Future of Church Union

There are two ideas, the sacramental and the individual, which are only reconciled in the true priesthood of God.

There are two ideas, the sacramental and the individual, which are only reconciled in the true priesthood of God.

There is a prevalent opinion among laymen and some of the clergyman of the different churches that the chasm existing between the churches is caused by such rites as modes of baptism, eligibility for the communion, ecclesiastical polity, theories of organization, and things of minor importance.

In an editorial by Frederick Lynch in the Christian Work for July 2 and 9, the reason for the existing chasm is given as something of much more vital importance than the differences noted above. It is the fact of two conceptions of religion as a whole, the sacramental concept of the church, held by the Roman, Greek, and that large portion of the Episcopal or Anglican communion that calls itself Catholic, and the spiritual concept, or belief in the direct communion with the soul of God, held by those of the Protestant belief, or Free Churchmen.

Mr. Lynch says in a review of the Free Churches and Reunion by T. R. Slover, that the sacramental belief of the Catholic Church emphasizes the church to be the official organ of Christ and that the church precedes the gospel, the gospel being the product of the church, and that the church speaks with His authority and is the seat of authority. They are interested in the body as a whole. Individualism does not enter into their creed; the voice of the church must take all precedence over the voice of an individual.

The belief of the Protestant, or the Free Churchman, is stated to be that Jesus and the gospel come before the church, both historically and experimentally. Christ in his mission to earth, we are told, was interested in saving the individual, not a society as a whole. It calls for the development of the individual, a communion with God through his own soul, rather than through the agency of the church or a God-ordained priesthood. They believe it is not possible for a priest, or one of a priesthood, to intervene for them, but they must receive their salvation through their own spiritual conception of faith.

His comment of this subject is

The chasm is very great and it is a question for much discussion whether two utterly different conceptions of not only the church and its proper position in religion, but of religion itself can ever be brought to a unity or reconciliation?

No matter what the result may be, he goes on to further state, the greatest thought of all is that truth must prevail. We cannot say because they have come so far to meet us, how far we will go to meet them. This is not religion in its truest sense. Religion will stand no compromise. If the theory of a spiritual concept be true, they cannot go half way or even part of the way to meet the sacramental. Truth comes before union. Truth stands majestically alone. No compromise can be made and no union can be based on half-truths and stand. Whatever the church may claim, whatever its power as a body, the real allegiance must be to Christ.

We agree that there can be no compromise of the truth. But each of these have a portion of truth, and a portion of error. The concepts as held by them are irreconcilable. The truth is not.

In the plan laid down by our heavenly Father and as presented by Jesus, every man has a right to approach as near to his heavenly Father as he is able to do; to seek him for the answer to his own personal problems; to seek him in the affairs of his own family. There is no interference with a full and free communion, for no man stands between another man and God to shut him away from God. Even Jesus Christ, the Mediator, stands not between man and God, but rather set us an example that we may follow in his steps and thereby be reconciled to God. His purpose is to lead man back to God.

On the other hand, God has from the first organized his church and set in it a priesthood. He has organized it wisely for administrative work, as even men of the world must acknowledge. It is fully provided with courts and with legislative bodies, the greatest of which is the assembly of the church itself. This priesthood has not only the right, but a duty to act in the sacraments and ordinances of the Lord's church. But in doing so they do not stand between the man and God. Their work is rather to lead men to God. They are mediators to help men to be reconciled to God, not to stand in the way and prevent.

There is a fundamental democracy in the kingdom of God in the responsibility of every man. There is also an organization for effective work. The two ideals are thus perfected in one.

The priesthood of God never lords it over others or attempts to stand between a man and his Savior. Jesus well expressed it when he stated that the kings of this world exercise dominion, and those who exercise authority were called great. "But whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister." (Matthew 20:26, Inspired Translation.) He then states that he himself came not to be ministered to but to minister, and he set them an example in the washing of their feet, a task usually performed by a slave. He plainly taught that service meant being a servant. They were called to be ministers, or those who minister or wait upon others. The duty of the priesthood is that of a minister, whether it be to enter frozen waters for baptism, to go out in the night hours to administer, to wait on the tables in the house of the Lord, to enter the home of the members to bring about reconciliation to one another and their heavenly Father and the performance of their duty, or whether it be the physical care of the cleaning of the house of God.

It is a tremendous theme and a wonderful one that these two seemingly contrary ideals are united in that plan that combined gives us personal independence and responsibility. In the gospel we have personal spiritual approach to God and with it a priesthood having certain duties to perform for their heavenly Father and their brethren before the church.

One does not prevent the other unless the church insists upon the right of individuals to act without the direction and help of our heavenly Father, or unless the ministers are, in fact, men chosen by the people or themselves and not appointed or selected by the Spirit of the Most High. The true priesthood must be called of God, not of man, and work to help man return to God, so that every man may draw near and have communion with God in his own soul.

The Marriage Law in Ontario

A letter from Bishop A. F. McLean to the First Presidency informs us that he has made arrangements with the registrar for the enrollment in Ontario of our ministers who are authorized to perform marriages. A list of the general missionaries was sent to him from Independence. He states that the registrar's office informed him that they prefer that all applications come through him, rather than for each individual to make application.

The decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario is of great weight in this connection, and no difficulty is anticipated in securing registration. Bishop McLean writes that it will be all right to present the names of all our ministers for registration and he will take this up in due course.

The Moral Support Due the Pastor

The work of the church may be seriously injured by captious criticism of the minister.

"What should be the attitude of a minister living in a given city and preaching in another towards the minister serving the church in that particular field?" is asked by a writer in the Christian Standard, who proceeds to discuss some of the difficulties arising when a change of ministers occurred and especially where the older minister retires, but remains in the same city. In so many instances the life of the younger minister was made miserable, because of criticism and hindrances, or because the local man performed the bulk of the wedding ceremonies and was in great demand for funerals.

As is there pointed out, it is a grave problem. Weddings and funerals offer the minister an especially good opportunity to become acquainted with members of his church and their friends. The writer in the Christian Standard thinks that all such requests should be referred to the minister in charge, the man who has the responsibility of the church work, and especially the new minister, for the reasons above indicated.

The question confronts us at times in missionary appointments to some of our larger cities. It should be quite clear that the men who are present and continue to reside year after year and decade after decade should be better acquainted with existing conditions than can be the case with the man newly arriving in that especial field. But the way we shall utilize this knowledge is not by criticism among ourselves, but by counsel to the new man.

It must be remembered that on many questions a decision must be made, and this decision, when made by the pastor, should be upheld both in public and in private by the associate local ministers. If he is in error, there is a proper time and place to make a correction. The proper method is not by criticism to tear down and destroy the effect of his work and prevent a fair trial being given to his ideas.

We have received letters from many, at churches in widely scattered parts of the country, wondering why the appointing powers did not realize their necessities and send them a good man. But, happening to know personally some of the conditions, we know there are two good reasons. In the first place, in many instances there is abundant local talent, who are well able to do the work, but who are lying down on their job and are not giving even a fifty per cent efficiency. In the second place, every man who has been sent has been hindered and prevented from doing his work. They want some one to do the work, but they want to do the managing and supervising themselves.

The fact that a man is removed is by no means a sign that his work has been a failure. It may be and often is merely a recognition of the fact that the local men and missionary are not working well together. The appointing powers can move one, and do so, even though they have reason to believe that ninety per cent of the fault lies with the local officer.

How long will it be before we realize that it is the work of the church as a whole that is essential, even if we do think we know better how to do a work, the criticism of predecessor or successor has a deadening effect and hinders the progress of the work rather than helps.

There is a proper place always for constructive criticism, but faultfinding with the work that has been done by a predecessor may destroy the value of his work without building up the influence of his successor. We should be workers together; that is, we should work with one another as well as with God. To secure the best results, the missionary and local man should work hand in hand for the work intrusted to both of them, each recognizing the other.

Where a man is sent by the general church authorities to undertake pastoral work and is located as president of a branch, his leadership should be recognized and he should be loyally supported. There is a proper time and place for the discussion of policy and for the determining of local legislation. But in the administrative work he should be supported. There may and should be opportunity for counsel, but some one must finally direct the work.

We recognize the high ideals of our men and their intensive interest in the work. Our ministers are not of the caliber to be led around blindly. We are glad that this is so; that they are men of independent opinion. But we regret at times that this independence becomes perverted into a hindrance to the work of God, intrusted to all of us. We cannot attack the minister of the church without attacking the church. When we discredit our brother the effect is felt in the work as a whole.

Being human, we should all recognize that we occasionally make a mistake. It is quite possible that the pastor makes a mistake, but there is a proper way to correct that mistake and to insure the upbuilding of the work of God.

The Master in his great prayer at the close of his mission here, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, prayed repeatedly for the unity of the church of God, that they may be one, even as we are one. They in me, and I in Thee. There is a need of that unity in the church of God to-day.

President Smith Was Not in Utah Last Summer

Our attention has been called by Mrs. Orman Beverage to the Rockland Courier Gazette of July 20, which states that Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard is conducting meetings in Maine. As Mrs. Shepard speaks in all parts of the country, what she said there may prove of interest to our readers everywhere.

Mrs. Shepard states in part the difference between the two churches, though inaccurately referring to the Book of Mormon as our Bible, and then is quoted as continuing, "Last summer Frederick Smith visited the president of the Utah division and was the guest of the Mormons at a number of functions given in his honor."

This last sentence is no doubt intended to infer a close relation between the two churches, but is entirely incorrect. President Smith sailed from New York City for England, on July 20, and more than a month prior to that he was in his office and in the East. He states, however, in a recent letter, "All that it will be necessary for me to say is that I have not even a personal acquaintance with President Grant and have never met the man. Last summer I was in England, and certainly attended no functions given in my honor at Salt Lake City."

The Department of Statistics

A report from the Department of Statistics to the First Presidency for the month of July shows 650 new baptisms; corrections of old records, 27.

There have been lost by death 84, by expulsion 8, by correction 16, and 130 carried to the unknown list. The net gain is, therefore, 439, and enrollment August 1, 95,449.

During the month there were reported 32 ordinations, 82 marriages, and 2 divorces; 222 certificates of blessings have been issued.

So far a total of 3,418 names have been carried to the unknown list. The number changing their place of residence has meant 605 transfers of enrollment as part of the work of the office. The current work of the department is practically finished to date.

The Mississippi About 1830

It is interesting to consider conditions in the Mississippi Valley at the time the Book of Mormon came forth. The Palimpsest for August reprints the account of a river trip by Charles J. Latrobe in 1833 up to Fort Snelling, Minnesota. It was a slow trip by canoe from one fort to another. At that time there was little more than a few forts to be found, except for an Indian encampment on the upper river: there was no Wisconsin, no Iowa, no Minnesota. Michigan extended to the river, beyond which there was no organized government. Up to 1835 Michigan held sway over the entire territory, but one year later yielded the western domain to the Territory of Wisconsin. In 1838 the Territory of Iowa was formed, including the land west of the Mississippi and including much of the Dakotas as well as Minnesota. It was not until 1846 that Iowa was limited to its present boundaries.

This book by Latrobe, A Rambler in North America, relates the occurrence of falling stars in the night between the twelfth and thirteenth of November, 1833, but he relates that he did not see it, as he was asleep at the time. The account is so interesting that we repeat it here:

"Our encampment in the forests, near the Bad Axe, on the night between the twelfth and thirteenth of November, was rendered remarkable by one circumstance.

"The night was calm; and wind, which had been northerly the foregoing day, chopped about early in the morning to the south, and blew with some force with a clear sky. Early, it might be between two and three o'clock, the whole heavens became gradually covered with falling stars, increasing in number till the sky had the appearance of being filled with luminous flakes of snow. This meteoric rain continued to pour down till the light of the coming day rendered it invisible. Millions must have shone and disappeared during the course of these three or four hours. They appeared to proceed from a point in the heavens, about fourteen degrees to the southeast of the zenith, and thence fell in curved lines to every point of the compass. Whether they remained visible down to the horizon or not, we do not know. There were some in the shower of larger size than the others, but for the greater part, they appeared as stars of the first or second magnitude. Their course in falling was interrupted like the luminous flight of the firefly."

It is one of the most detailed accounts we have seen of the nature and extent of this phenomena.

Pertle Springs Reunion

Those returning from the reunion of the Kansas City and Holden Stakes and Zion, at Pertle Springs, report that it closed auspiciously, with perhaps some of the best prayer services ever held. It seemingly gathered momentum as it went.

Details are promised us later, but we note that the customary school was held, about two hundred attending daily the various classes, such as doctrine, history, Oriole and Temple Builder work, kindergarten, and vacation school work.

Among those present were: Elbert A. Smith, F. A. Smith, John W. Rushton, J. F. Keir, M. A. McConley, W. W. Smith, D. T. Williams, R. V. Hopkins, and the usual line-up of stake officials and local officials.

Denial of human personality is absurd, and belief in a personal Deity is necessary not only because in Kant's phrase, any other is "not a God that can interest us," but also because any other is to us unthinkable.—William V. Kelley, in A Pilgrim of the Infinite.

The Labor Union

We have presented a number of articles decidedly favorable to the laboring man. The sympathy of most writers goes to the laboring man because his very life depends upon his work, and many of the evils of the labor union are no doubt an outgrowth of existing conditions.

But we recently read an article concerning the hindrance to constructive effort by them, in particular by some of the regulations of the labor unions. The original article appears in the Engineering News Record for June 9, 1921, and is a summary of a paper by C. R. Gow, read before the Boston Society of Civil Engineers.

Colonel Gow is a Boston engineer and contractor and during the war was the army officer in charge of the Boston Army Base. That which is set forth is concerning his experiences in connection with this work for the United States Government.

Among the rules hindering are the following: A foreman must be a member of the union. If he does not stand up for the union they will insist that he be fired. During the construction of the army base, one of the ablest of the foremen was fired for this reason, because he insisted on securing results. Foremen are prohibited from reporting delinquencies of the men. The unions, of course, have taken over all apprenticing, so that no boy can be trained except by them.

The limitation of equipment: the plumbers and steam fitters require all pipe up to two and a half inches in diameter must be cut on the job by hand. Of course it is much cheaper to cut at the shop with a power machine. Ornamental work in plastering was once cast in molds at the shop; now the union requires all this work be done at the place by hand. Paint spraying machines are barred, as is also the use of a brush more than four and one half inches wide in applying paint by hand. Plumbers require that they handle all plumbing material after it is delivered on the first floor. Bath tubs could be readily raised by derricks, but the rules provide that they must be handled by plumbers.

Automatic electric pumps will run for months and even years, requiring only occasional oiling. On a construction job the union requires that such a pump have the constant attention of a union engineer at a dollar an hour. A gasoline diaphragm pump can be run by any intelligent water boy, in addition to his other duties. The union requires a union engineer. The same is true of other engines, even though the engineer gives no time to the engine he must be paid just the same.

The carpenters' union requires that all temporary work, such as working stagings, shall be erected by union carpenters, and the stripping of forms from concrete surfaces must also be done by union carpenters, though this work can be well done by ordinary laborers. Many other such cases are cited, as in reinforced concrete work. Formerly the steel reinforcing bars were placed by common laborers; later the iron-workers' union ruled all this work should be done by their members. A recent job in that locality by a nonunion contractor, using laborers, cost $7.00 per ton. A similar union job at the same town, requiring union iron workers, cost $37.00 per ton.

Men used to do any work in connection with erecting, dismantling, or operating derricks, except operating the engine; now loading and unloading machinery and so forth must be by union iron workers.

On the army base job the men actually used were from various walks in life, such as street sweepers, bar tenders, janitors, but all had to be rated as skilled iron workers and paid accordingly. Stoves used at night for drying out plastering

Valuable Evidence Regarding the Presidency

By Ralph W. Farrell

It seems evident the case is very clear and decidedly in favor of the succession of Joseph Smith in the Presidency.

Speaking to us from the yellow leaves of old newspapers is a bit of evidence which ought to be more frequently emphasized. I refer to the statement concerning the successor to Joseph Smith, jr., who was killed in 1844. It seems that God's hand has preserved the wonderful testimony of Egypt and Central America, which corroborates the Scriptures, and even the writings of Volney, the infidel, which verify the words of the prophets concerning the land of Palestine and Egypt and other countries. It seems that we see the same Hand preserving certain statements recorded in the newspapers of the Eastern States. It is written that Tertullian on one occasion wrote to the Roman Senate to search its records and therein find proof of Christ's divinity. The secular newspapers of this age, resting serenely under their cover of dust, in the great libraries, Boston, New York, Saint Louis, also may be searched successfully for evidence supporting a most important point of latter-day church history. The following is a sample.

On page 2 of The Saint Louis Morning Republican for the year 1844, seventh month and eighth day, we read these words: "Much speculation is abroad as to who will be the successor of the impostor Joe. It is asserted by those who profess to know, that his eldest son, a youth of about twelve years of age, is to be the new ruler, and that a revelation to that effect was left behind by the departed Prophet."

Thus, within a few days after the death of the Prophet, "it is asserted by those who profess to know" that a successor had been appointed, and that that successor was the oldest son of Joseph Smith, jr. Whence the origin of this claim? It harmonizes splendidly with the testimonies of Father Whitehead, Young Joseph, and others. Let us look at a statement from the late President of the Reorganized Church:

"Before the death of my father and Uncle Hyrum, I was blessed by the first, in the presence of quite a number of then prominent elders in the church, this blessing being confirmed just prior to the tragedy at Carthage."

Mr. Smith understood this blessing to be a setting apart, or appointment, to serve the church, etc. And this in harmony with the revelation given some years previous to the special appointment. Section 43 (Utah edition, same), verse 2: "For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him [Joseph Smith, jr.,] whom I have appointed." Surely there are two persons referred to in the reading before us, and two tenses employed—the present and the future: the Prophet Joseph Smith, jr., and his successor who "shall [future from 1831] come in at the gate and be ordained [future again, from 1831]."

Appropriately at this juncture, may be introduced the "position" held by the Utah church relative to the above revelation and the reply of our late church historian, Heman C. Smith. On page 84 of Succession in the Presidency of the Church, by B. H. Roberts (Utah), we read: "The only provision made in this revelation for him [Joseph] to appoint his successor is in the event of his own transgression; and I affirm that Joseph Smith was faithful to God and the church up to the day of his death." To which H. C. Smith replied:

"We do not so comprehend the language. The words,

'Verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed into this gift except it be through him,' admit of no modifications or exceptions. The words following: 'For if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead,' etc., simply convey the impression that this right, vested in him by virtue of his office, he would retain, even in case of transgression, to avoid confusion and uncertainty. To take the position, as Mr. Roberts does, that Joseph Smith was not authorized to appoint his successor except in the event of his transgression, is to make the authority to appoint contingent upon transgression.

"We can readily see the possibility and even advisability, for this specific purpose, of a man retaining a part of his authority, already bestowed, after transgression; but the idea that God would bestow authority not before held, upon a transgressor, which would be denied him if faithful, is absurd. We have long been taught that God bestows authority, honor, and power as a reward for faithfulness; but it remained for this illustrious guardian of the 'order of the priesthood of God, and the facts of church history,' to inform us that God reserves certain authority for the transgressor alone.

"What to us seems very peculiar is that notwithstanding Mr. Roberts' claim that Joseph Smith had no authority to appoint his successor except in the event of his transgression, and notwithstanding he affirms that Joseph did prove faithful, yet he asserts, on the authority of Brigham Young, that Joseph did appoint his brother Hyrum to succeed him. (See Roberts' book, page 66.)

"Certainly God would provide for succession and the perpetuity of his work in case of Joseph's death, as much so as in case of his transgression.

"We are impressed to close this chapter with these words of Mr. Roberts, which we commend:

"'Can it be that God, with whom all things are as present, had not foreseen this fate which overtook his servants Joseph and Hyrum, and failed to provide for such an emergency? Oh, charge not the Lord with such lack of wisdom, or his church with such imperfection in its organization!'—Roberts, p. 85."—Pages 65, 66 to True Succession in Church Presidency, by Heman C. Smith.

I have given quite a lengthy quotation from Brother Smith's work, but the importance of the subject justifies my so doing. It is urged by the followers of the Utah institution that the one supreme issue between them and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is that of "priesthood." And of course they emphasize the claim that the Utah church alone possesses the keys of the kingdom. The issue is one of fact rather than fancy; it is a question settled by just such matter as has been furnished above. Affirmations and assertions prove nothing unless they are true.

The following quotation taken from a letter published in the Millennial Star for May 1, 1846, is not an assertion. It is from the pen of James Kay and dated Saint Louis, Missouri, November 22, 1845. This line is very significant, referring as it does to the claim of William Smith: "He contends that the church is disorganized, having no head; that the twelve are not, nor ever were, ordained to be head of the church; that Joseph's priesthood was to be conferred on his posterity to all future generations, and that young Joseph is the only legal successor to the presidency of this church, etc."

This statement of William Smith corroborates the one found in the Boston Bee, Saint Louis Republican, and other secular publications of 1844, regarding the appointment of Young Joseph to be his father's successor. And it is in harmony with the word of Joseph Smith, jr., written to John C. Calhoun, January 2, 1844, as published in the Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 395: "I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence."

It seems evident to me that the case is very clear and decidedly in favor of the Church Reorganized; that facts are on the side of the claim that the successor of Joseph Smith, jr., was his son, and on him was conferred the presidency of the high priesthood.

Please note, I have written this brief word with no ill-feeling towards the people whose headquarters are in the "salt land." Let us get at the truth of all things of immediate concern. And we can say with Paul, "I would to God that all Israel might be saved."

The Lord's Prayer in the Book of Mormon

By Myron H. Bond

Paper read before the Quorum of High Priests, April 10, 1918, General Conference.

Why are not the Lord's prayer and other quotations from Jesus in the Book of Mormon just as they are found in the Inspired Translation?

In assigning to myself the task of an endeavor to discuss, or furnish an answer to this question, I am assuming that it is mutually understood that if we are confined to the reported sayings of Jesus alone, it would be a handicap to anything like a full or complete answer, as the subject naturally involves the whole question of inspiration, and of degrees of inspiration. This has already become a not uncommon subject for discussion among the eldership of the church, and, to the mind of the writer, demands more time and a larger and freer latitude for discussion than the time allotted for this paper will allow. For, in the first place, not only the sayings of Jesus, but the statements of the apostles and prophets to whom he committed his instructions, and whom he commissioned to speak for him, as well as other inspired teachers of the canon, are involved in this discussion.

We will begin with a statement made by Paul in his second letter to Timothy, 3d chapter, 16th and 17th verses, quoting from the common version: "All scripture is given of God, and is profitable," etc. But it should be remembered that the word scripture applies not only to the Bible, but to other books held sacred as being the product of a revelation from God. The Inspired Translation removes the cause for doubt or criticism by the simple omission of the words or terms is and and, making it read, "All scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable." etc. And the Revised Version of 1881 gives a rendering which is practically the same.

In the Authorized Version which makes Matthew to say, in what is commonly called the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation," is a statement which seems to compromise the ethical value of the Savior's teachings, and also furnishes a flat contradiction to the statement of the Apostle James, where, in the 13th verse of his epistle he says, "Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." (See also Genesis 22: 1.)

Moroni's Explanation

We also call your attention to statements made by Moroni, in his conclusion, or completion of the record made by his father, Mormon:

"And whoso receiveth this record, and shall not condemn it because of the fault therein, the same shall know of the greater things," etc. Or again, "If there be faults, they be the faults of a man," etc., (Mormon, chapter 8,) for of course, Moroni cannot be made responsible for the faults of translators, or printers, etc., after his time.

For example, again, we find Saint Paul in his writing to one of the churches in his day, said that he thought he "had the Spirit of God," which is equivalent to saying that he was not certain.

Again, he also enjoins the prophets in the church to "prophesy in proportion to their faith." A wise provision against possible compromise of the Almighty, by the substitution of admixture with human opinions, sentiment, desires, or suggestions of false, flattering, or delusive agencies having a semblance of spiritual character.

These, with other scriptures, and experiences of a personal character, seem to us to furnish warrant for belief in a measure also of inspiration which may not be plenary, or full, but be clouded, or admixed with fallible ideas, or ideas that may have been already formulated in the human mind.

In conclusion upon this point, it may be noted that Moroni, in the beginning of his second chapter, says this: "And now I have written the words which were commanded me according to my memory."

Thus, in part, according to our mind, the answer may be had: First, In the errors of typists in setting the forms, the printer's art ninety years ago not having reached the perfected state now attained by publishers. Second, A failure to get the exact word or words of the "seer" as he might have given them to an amanuensis, who also might sometimes fail, in rare instances at least, or be led for one reason or another to substitute or copy from his own memory that which familiarity with, or knowledge of, the common version of the Scriptures had furnished him with. Neither are proof readers, whose business is to correct, always infallible, or the various handlings at the hands of men who claimed no knowledge of an inspirational character, or of the letter or the word of the manuscript until it comes to us in book form from time to time.

Inspiration

Third, The danger of accepting the theory of plenary inspiration for all that is written may be emphasized in a measure by referring to a letter written to the church by Joseph Smith, the "choice seer" spoken of in the Book of Mormon. A prophet of God, and the last in the great chain of certified prophets through whom Jehovah had spoken, in a letter dated September 6, 1842, in the discussion of the doctrine of baptism for the dead, he submits as evidence or proof the statement of Saint Paul as it appears in the Authorized Version, while in the version corrected by inspiration, we have Paul committed thus, that "without suffering, they could not be made perfect," and which only is in harmony with the context. (See Hebrews 11: 40.)

We are not assuming here that Joseph Smith claimed inspiration for his argument in this letter. We only know that Latter Day Saints have done so. It was his belief as being true, but whether or not he was susceptible to an admixture of sentiment in this regard or not, we are not prepared to say. We are only calling attention to the danger of claiming plenary inspiration for all that may be found in the letter, or of the doctrine of infallibility of utterance upon the part of any man. The "letter" alone, Saint Paul says, "kill-eth," and to which must be added the indorsement of "the spirit which alone maketh alive," in order to insure safety. For it goes without saying that the doctrine, or dogma, of human infallibility has led the masses into more error, misrepresentation of the deity, and of provoking in the intelligent mind criticism, or hostile unbelief of anything that bears the claim of inspiration from divine sources, than from any, or perhaps all, other causes combined.

The fact that documents purporting to be of divine origin presented through and by our own oracle are submitted for examination by all of the quorums of the church, and of the body as well, ought to be evidence of the legality of the presumption that there might be an error or flaw somewhere.

What of the Scriptures? How readest thou? In the "letter," or "with the understanding also"?

The Apocrypha

Permit us in this connection to call your attention to a revelation given in 1832 in answer to some inquiries regarding the apocryphal record:

"Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, concerning the Apocrypha: There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true, which are the interpolations by the hands of men. Verily I say unto you, that it is not needful that the Apocrypha should be translated. Therefore, whoso readeth it let him understand, for the Spirit manifesteth truth; and whoso is enlightened by the Spirit shall obtain benefit therefrom; and whoso receiveth not by the Spirit, cannot be benefited. Therefore, it is not needful that it should be translated. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 88: 1.

An elaboration of this one text might furnish a complete argument and cover all of the vital points of this great question.

In the longer and shorter catechisms of the church of Rome, we have the question propounded: "How are we to know the things we are to believe?" A statement and inquiry not infrequently made of the writer in the course of his ministerial experiences. The answer of Rome to her adherents is: "By the Holy Catholic Church, which subsists in all ages, and maintains all truth." Question: "Can she err in matters of faith?" "No! she cannot err in matters of faith," etc.

Do we need to be told here that Protestants who reject the apocrypha from their canon are as much divided in their interpretation of the Authorized Version which makes for uncertainty and confusion as much as does the creed of Rome?

Purge out the old leaven that is among you, said Jesus to his disciples. Are we still more or less under the shadow of the church of Rome and the traditions of her daughters?

"The Letter Killeth"

"The letter killeth," said Paul, and the strife and "killing" will go on until a more holy living and a more complete service will result in more fully uniting the professed disciples of Jesus Christ, and in a union with the Father and the Son, which was the burden of his prayer, and which can find its accomplishment only through the leadership provided by them, and to be left behind him and in the world, as the convicting and convincing force whose infallibility they were willing only to indorse.

What an amount of misrepresentation, of fiction, and of needless and profitless surmisings and differences of opinion alone separate people by the failure to bring their prejudices, or their opinions into the court where the "spirit of truth" presides, for correct solution and settlement!

That there are many true things in the Apocrypha, we may concede. There is much more in the Authorized Version, as we believe; and in the Inspired Translation, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; but the attainment of an infallible conclusion through the study of any or all of the "sacred" or of all of the so-called books that have claimed divine origin have no warrant from God for absolute dependency after having been filtered through the brain that furnishes us with so large a proportion of "the wisdom of this world."

"I give unto you these sayings, that you may understand and to know how to worship, and know what you worship, and that you may come unto the Father in my name, and in due time receive of his fullness, for if you keep my commandments you shall receive of his fullness and be glorified in me as I am in the Father."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 3. The "glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one," and without "light and truth" a man may be liable to fall into the snare of human fallibility, or of admixtures thereof.

A "knowledge of the truth," then, becomes a necessity to those who really desire to worship God "in spirit and in truth" only.

We call your attention in closing to a statement of Peter, as we have it in the common version, and as found in his second letter, chapter one, verse 19:

A Knowledge of the Word of Prophecy

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

In the Inspired Translation we have a far safer rendering of this text, by the substitution of the word knowledge in the beginning of Peter's statement; which makes it to read: "We have therefore a more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy," etc.

While Peter and others may have had acquaintance with the correct transmission of a verbal character of that which the prophets had recorded, it should be noted that the power to understand their true meaning came only by and through the revelation of Jesus Christ to them upon the mount.

Our Adventist friends have been working assiduously and faithfully in securing interpretations of the Scriptures by their wisdom and scholarship; their interpretation of the living and dead languages; and have been able to construct many divisions, and several conspicuous and notable failures, having steadfastly refused and opposed the only practical method of a true solution which the Holy Ghost alone is able to furnish.

Scriptural Examples of Inspiration

Further illustration of this matter is to be found in the record made by Luke (Luke 24: 32, 45):

"And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures? . . . Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures."

And in the gospel of Saint John, chapter 16, verse 13:

"Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."

Also John 8: 31, 32:

"Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Tremendous thought! freedom from the awful and tremendous religious blunders and crimes which the world has been led into, and from which it has not as yet escaped.

It would seem that evidence is clearly sufficient to demonstrate that God and Christ are not responsible for the religious strife and quarrels of the past centuries, or for those that now exist to a greater or less extent in every church in Christendom.

Rome has assumed the authority from God to exterminate fifty million of people who refused to acknowledge their interpretation of the canon; and Protestants have evidenced their lineage by their treatment of dissenters; and Latter Day Saints have demonstrated so clearly their willingness or disposition to repeat history, that we of the Reorganization should become fully awakened to the fact that, if the Holy Spirit was promised by "our Leader and Commander" as the supreme guide to truth, true freedom and that larger latitude and broader charity of the preventative sort should fur-

OF GENERAL INTEREST

POETIC JUSTICE TO THE RED MAN

The following, from The Nation's Business, by John Burnam, presents an interesting viewpoint, though we should remember that perhaps a majority of the Indians are not so favorably situated as those mentioned.

Those who think the United States the richest nation per capita in the world are in error. It is true that we have other countries on our ledgers for about ten billions of dollars, and that our investors and bankers hold about eight billions more of obligations; and so we are inclined to think of ourselves smugly as cock of the monetary walk. As a matter of fact, the Cæsus of nations is the Osage tribe of Indians.

Not long since, thirty thousand acres of Osage oil land near Tulsa, Oklahoma, was sold for a bonus of $4,500,000 plus a bonus of one sixth of the oil products. The oil interests are tribal property, and this brought the individual Osage income, from papoose to grandparent, up to $10,000 a year. There are 2,100 Osages, and they run to large families. A family of ten, which is not unusual, thus has an annual income of $100,000.

This ancient tribe is nouveau riche. Fifteen years ago its members were so poor that each of them received from the Government an annual check for $265 and counted himself lucky to get it. That was after the Government had induced the nation to give up its fairly fertile fields in Kansas and Missouri, and move to what were known as "billy-goat" lands in Oklahoma. The Kansas and Missouri land had aroused the covetous attention of the white man in his march toward Pike's Peak; and by a series of treaties, beginning in 1808, the Indians were gradually persuaded to give up their holdings, and finally to emigrate to a county which was named in their honor, Osage, and which comprised nearly a million and a half of Oklahoma acres, capable of yielding little save honor. In the exchange the Indians acquired a substantial school fund and a balance in the Treasury of more than eight million dollars. With the average income of $265, paltry as it seems now, they were accounted well-to-do for their race.

And then King Midas, in the person of an oil prospector, touched the Indian reservations in Oklahoma. Over night the status of the native residents changed. Osage County is larger than the State of Delaware, and well after well was bored, to spout forth its viscid stream of wealth. Richer and richer waxed the tribe, what with bonuses for leases and production royalties, until to-day its opulence constitutes a genuine governmental problem.

For the Osages do not take up readily the ways of their white brethren, and they lack the white man's aptitude as a spender. Even when they have been college bred they return as a rule to the blanket and the moccasin. Their fancy runs to automobiles and food. Money so easily come by means little to them, and the unscrupulous trader sometimes takes nish an open forum for free discussion, where books, or canons, or purported letters from God can be openly considered and discussed.

The way to God is the way of holiness, but it calls for intelligence and courage and honesty to walk therein that is not always found in a world where prayer and watchfulness and self-denial are imposed by our heavenly Father, but receive so little consideration upon the part of the masses; and by and through which the term salvation can only possibly furnish an intellectual, moral, or spiritual meaning.

advantage of them. Oddly enough, they buy lavishly of Indian curios, manufactured in many cases, it is suspected, by union labor. Their chief diversion is poker, in which the youth as well as the elder is proficient. On their reservation motion pictures afford about the only other diversion.

There is a story about a rich Indian who bought a hearse, provided an upholstered rocking chair as his throne, and from within the motor vehicle surveyed the sights of an Oklahoma city; there is the story of another who could think of no more delectable way of spending money than by hiring an automobile to bring him steaks from the near-by town of the Osage village of Pawhuska, at ten dollars per steak; and there are many stories of substantial outlays for crayon enlargements of photographs and for oil portraits.

There are now in effect oil and gas leases in practically every State where there are restricted Indian lands. The Osages are not the only tribe of the race to become suddenly wealthy, but are conspicuous because of the big yield of the Oklahoma field. The Kiowas, Otoes, Pawnees, and Kaws are among those blessed or cursed, as the case may be, with sudden wealth. More than 40,000 oil and gas leases have been made in Indian lands, and in the six years prior to July, 1919, they returned a revenue of more than $20,000,000. These are the latest aggregate figures available. Since they were obtained the number of wells and the volume of wealth have increased amazingly.

About eight hundred of the 2,100 Osages are full-blooded, but few are more than half white. Even those of mixed blood share equally in the oil royalties. The last census showed a diminution of 8.6 per cent in the number of Indians from the preceding census, but this was explained as due to the enumeration as whites, in 1920, of persons having only slight traces of Indian blood. If the race is vanishing, it is by intermixture. It is true that the number of Indians has greatly fallen off since the white man conquered America. The Bureau of American Ethnology estimates that at that time there probably were more than a million Indians north of Mexico, of whom about 846,000 were within the limits of the United States proper. The last census lists but 242,959—excluding many persons in whom other blood predominates. Since the United States began keeping official tab, the highest number reported has been 400,764, in the census of 1850.

Liberty Bond subscriptions by Indians, to the World War, running into the millions of dollars, first awakened the public to the importance of the race as a business factor. A glance at their income return is enlightening. In Oklahoma about 116,000 Indians received during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920 (the latest date available), incomes aggregating more than $39,000,000; in North Dakota 9,000 received more than a million and a half; in Utah more than 11,000 received nearly two and a half millions; and in South Dakota, 22,000 received about four and a third millions. The total income of the race was $72,696,431 that year, and since then has greatly increased. Many of those not overrich through oil are busy with basket weaving, pottery, and other native pursuits; but they make good farmers, too, and about 50,000 of them are thus engaged. The crops raised, for instance, in Oklahoma and in South Dakota each amounted to substantially more than a million dollars. The total value of Indian crops was nearly $37,000,000 in the year named.

Many members of the race have achieved distinction through their political and literary activities. To name but a few of them: United States Senator Robert L. Owen is a Cherokee; Representatives Charles D. Carter and Senator Charles Curtis are, respectively, of Choctaw and Kaw blood. Doctor Charles Eastman, a physician and writer of Chicago, and a graduate of Dartmouth, is a Sioux. The Reverend Doctor Sherman Coolidge, of Denver, an Episcopal minister, is an Arapahoe. Houston B. Teehee and Gabe Parker, former Registers of the Treasury; Doctor Charles Montgomery, author of The Indian To-day, and a practicing physician, are Indians.

Adult Indians are being admitted to citizenship as rapidly as they prove their ability to manage their own affairs, and no longer require the Government as a guardian; but the total fully freed of Government supervision, as shown in the last report, was only about 21,000. The Government provides for them sawmills, grist mills, and agricultural equipment, and supplies excellent educational opportunities; but in many tribes, when a daughter returns to her home from college, accomplished in fudge-making, and toddling and matinee-going and domestic science and, perhaps, Latin, she puts aside her silk stockings and high-heeled shoes more often than not, and marries a young man of the tribe.—The Nation's Business.

KANSAS CITY IN 1840

A clearing, or old field, of a few acres, lying on the high ridge between Main and Wyandotte and Second and Fifth Streets, made and abandoned by a mountain trapper, a few old girdled trees standing around in the field, surrounded by a dilapidated rail fence; all around, on all sides, a dense forest, the ground covered with impenetrable underbrush and fallen timber and deep, impassable gorges, a narrow, crooked roadway, winding from Twelfth and Walnut Streets along down on the west side of the deep ravine toward the river, across the public square to the river at the foot of Grand Avenue; a narrow, difficult path, barely wide enough for a single horseman, running up and down along the river under the bluffs, winding its crooked way around fallen timber and deep ravines; an old log house on the river bank occupied by a lank, cadaverous specimen of humanity named Ellis, with one blind eye and the other on a sharp lookout for stray horses, straggling Indians, and squatters, with whom to swap a tin cup of whisky for a coonskin; another old dilapidated log cabin on the point below the Pacific depot; two or three small dwellings and cabins in the Kaw bottom, now called West Kansas, which were houses of French mountain trappers engaged principally in raising young half breeds. The rest of the surroundings were the still solitude of the native forest, broken only by the snort of the startled deer, the bark of the squirrel, the howl of the wolf, the settler's cowbell, and, mayhap, the distant baying of the hunter's dog or the sharp report of his rifle.—Kansas City Star, July 17, 1921.

Worship

Theodore Roosevelt's church creed was contained in nine pungent paragraphs. We quote a few:

"Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees, or by a running brook, or in a man's own house, just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact the average man does not thus worship.

"He may not hear a good sermon at church. He will hear a sermon by a good man who, with his good wife, is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier.

"He will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible. And if he is not familiar with the Bible, he has suffered a loss.

"He will take part in singing some good hymns.

"He will meet and nod or speak to good, quiet neighbors. He will come away feeling a little more charitably towards all the world, and even towards those excessively foolish young men who regard church going as a soft performance."—Chicago Tribune.

PASTORAL

Crusaders for Christ.—Part 3

By A. H. Christensen

The best methods should be used for making openings for preaching, but it will require study to hit upon the most effective. The author tells of a novel method he is using.

Having the vision of the work to be done and the boldness to attempt it, the next important consideration is the method by which it can be accomplished best. It is not, however, essential that one have the best or none, for, sometimes even an old common method diligently worked, will, like a low grade ore, yield a steady income. It is better of course to keep up to the latest discovery and invention in religion, as well as in any other line of work.

Since the subject matter of this article deals with "warning one's neighbor," and that too in relation to how the local forces can become efficient preachers of the gospel, and take over some of the responsibility of preaching the gospel in their locality, I will maintain that phase throughout the present chapter. I also believe the branch to be partly missionary in its nature, as is also every one who is warned.

There was a case of a Sister Tucker, in one of the Kansas City branches, who got out and made a house-to-house effort in the vicinity of the church, taking the houses of a street as an agent selling some household article. She distributed reading matter and engaged the people in conversation on the gospel theme, and is said to have asserted that the Spirit directed her in the choice of houses where the honest in heart could be found. Sixteen, I have heard, was the number baptized as a result of her campaign, perhaps it was more.

She had a plan and was bold enough to face doubting mankind and tell them of her pearls. If all men and women were such as she, how the work would go forward.

There Are Possible Converts Near You

You may wonder if there are any good people who would accept the gospel in your neighborhood or town. There are; for they are everywhere, and there is always an opportunity to reach them. Remember how Jonah gave up the city of Nineveh, and fled, but was returned by the hand of God to carry on the work in that place. The instructions of God to Eden Smith reveal the opportunities open to us as follows:

"I give unto you my servant, Eden Smith; wherefore go ye and preach my gospel, whether to the north or to the south; to the east or to the west, it mattereth not, for ye cannot go amiss; therefore declare the things which ye have heard and verily believe, and know to be true. Behold this is the will of him who hath called you, your Redeemer, even Jesus Christ. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 79: 1.

No Method Better Than Preaching

There is no better method of warning one's neighbor than by preaching. Note the following:

"And now, as the preaching of the word had had a greater tendency to lead the people to do that which was just; yea, it had had more powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword, or anything else, which had happened unto them; therefore Alma thought it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the Word of God."—Alma 16: 32.

Much preaching to the world is bound to increase the membership of the branch; and automatically interest and zeal will grow apace among the members. We may ask, Where are some good places to preach the gospel to the world? The following will show:

"And now behold, we have come, and been forth amongst them; and we have been patient in our sufferings, and we have suffered every privation; yea, we traveled from house to house, relying upon the mercies of the world; not upon the mercies of the world alone, but upon the mercies of God. And we have entered into their houses and taught them, and we have taught them in their streets; yea, and we taught them upon their hills; and we have also entered into their temples and their synagogues and taught them."—Alma 14: 112, 113.

Appreciate Specialties

Give due attention to specialties. Music, vocal solos, quartets, and duets, phonographs, charts, slide lectures, and the like will give staging and will play an important part in the meeting; but the greatest of these is music. Singing is staple and always in order. Instrumental specialties draw a crowd and interest; and should be of a quality equal to the standard demanded by that particular audience, but not necessarily better.

I never held a more successful meeting than one in the island mission where we took our pulpit out on the front porch of the church and used a brass band. We opened the meeting in the usual way, and then we alternated sermonets with selections by the band for the space of about two hours. The speakers were a combination of native and white speakers. This was a little out of the ordinary but was successful in that place, although it might not work in every place. We should not be slaves of public opinion, but help change or make it.

"That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been, and God requireth that which is past," is true of principles, but untrue of the mode by which those principles may be published.

Charts, if good ones, to the point and well painted, are a good auxiliary to a meeting. The old two-way chart, though a little stale before a Latter Day Saint audience, is still good before the world. The chart on the woman in the wilderness is another good one to help make clear one of the fundamental arguments. I have one in mind which will be a picture of the "Book of remembrance," which I shall have made soon.

A Revolutionary Plan

I am at present holding a meeting built on a revolutionary plan as follows:

I went over in the "sticks" at Oyer, Missouri, which is sixteen miles from a railroad, and am staying at the farmhouse of an aged couple who are members of the church. After a few days I learned that there were quite a number of people of honest hearts in the community. I resolved to hold a meeting. We went east to a village and found that it was not advisable to attempt the work there. We then went to another village to the west a few miles, with like results. We then looked up the schoolhouses and found that means inconvenient; next we met a young man who owned twenty acres of land in the very center of the community, at the crossroads. He said we could have any place in his farm that suited us for a tent. We had no tent. I then began to ask myself, What are the elements of a tent with reference to a meeting? I decided that seats were the principal element; light was another; and an organ if possible. As we passed his house, the porch was suggested for a rostrum; and the organ could be pulled out on the porch for services and back again afterwards. The seats could be arranged upon the lawn before the porch. Thus, with the light of a couple of gasoline torches, we would have a complete tent outfit whose canopied dome vaulted to the skies.

It happened that two of the elders were conducting a meeting in the new district tent at a place about sixteen miles away. They had a double supply of seats, so they divided with me, and we soon had a good meeting going. We have had a good crowd and intense interest throughout. Two have given their names for baptism, and others want to be, and may be later. Now, I can go right down the section line and am sure I can conduct this "front porch campaign" at other crossroads, depending on the world for support.

Any Branch Could Do It

And I do not see why a branch could not try out this plan for evangelizing a town. Some have done it. Others ought to. There are many homes of Saints where the outfit could be set up, and this would be a novelty for the summer season. I would suggest that sometimes this plan be tried by the young people exclusively. Let them feel that this is their plan. Let the young priest be preacher and all his young friends help him out. No one over thirty years of age should be allowed in sight save in the audience. Let this be their crusade for the evangelization of the world. Let them get up their campaign through the spring months with the idea of an all-summer campaign, and at the close of the season count results. I tell you it will work. I know, too, what backing the choir of young people will give him with their songs and specialty program.

After services get down among the people and make friends and distribute some Busy Man's Tracts. To very interested persons loan heavier reading matter, such as The Instructor, Mother Smith's work, etc. They have weight with that class. Don't be afraid to use oldtime subjects and arguments, for fear that they have been heard before. They are ever new.

If people find fault and criticize you or your plan, remember the story of the "speckled bird."

"Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the hosts of the field, come to devour."—Jeremiah 12: 9.

The Former and Latter Rains

By T. W. Williams

The trip to Palestine was not without surprises and even revelations. Positions, hitherto complex and obscure, became simple and self-evident. Grave doubts arose concerning issues long accepted as proved.

On returning to London, I resolved to do some intensive research work. I wanted to test out some leadings received in Jerusalem. The British Museum is one of, if not the greatest, literary clearing houses in the world. Thither I went for facts.

The restoration of the gospel presaged the restoration of Israel. From the very inception of the latter-day work we have been looking forward to the fulfillment of God's promises concerning the land of promise. Isaiah's prediction to the effect that, following the coming forth of the "sealed book," in "a very little while," "Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest," is nearing fulfillment. Evidences multiply that God is moving in this respect. Just a century has passed since God spoke to Joseph Smith. One hundred years, as compared with nineteen hundred years, is but "a very little while."

A Prevalent Theory

A theory has persisted in certain quarters to-wit:

For a period of eighteen hundred years, following the anathema of Jesus, the curse of God rested upon the entire land of Palestine, as well as the Jewish nation; the former and latter rains ceased, the soil lost its fertility; what was once a garden lapsed into a wilderness; the Promised Land became a desert; Jerusalem, a mass of ruins, shunned by all save wandering bands of Bedouins or Arabs.

Coupled with the above is a singular affirmation that about the middle of the last century a miraculous change took place; the curse was removed, the former and latter rains returned; the fertility of the land was restored. It is likewise urged that the blessing of God has displaced the curse and Palestine is now a "land flowing with milk and honey."

Not until recent years has authentic information concerning these matters been available. Uninformed travelers have, possibly unconsciously, misrepresented the facts and drawn wrong conclusions. Exaggerated newspaper articles have appeared from time to time. These have been accepted as reliable by the reading public. Owing to the difficulties of verification, many of these have gone unchallenged. In some instances they have been used as proofs for otherwise sound positions. They may be discarded without affecting the major premise.

In confirmation of the aforementioned theory, the following communication relative to the rainfall and fertility of Palestine has been used:

Restoration of the Rains

"I arrived in Indiana a few days since, from the Eastern Continent. I stopped at Joppa nearly the whole winter. For my part I was well pleased with the country. It is certainly a land of most wonderful fruitfulness, with a delightful climate, producing everything, if properly cultivated, and from two to three crops a year. They have grain, fruit and vegetables all the year round; in fact I never was in such a country before. I have seen much good country in Europe and America, but none to compare with Palestine; its fruitfulness is uncommon, and the climate the most delightful; even in winter I did not see the least sort of frost, and vegetables of every sort were growing in perfection in gardens. It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored, recently, in 1853 the former and the latter rains were restored, to the astonishment of the natives. The Jews have been returning to the Holy Land for some time, and are increasing, going to their beloved Canaan from many parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. They are making preparations to rebuild cities, and [build] railroads. The fruit in Palestine is better than in Europe and America. They have camels, mules, horses, asses, cattle, sheep, and goats; but I saw no hogs. The natives are generally friendly."—Louis Van Buren, sr., November 14, A. D. 1867.

A Mere Assumption

It is sheer assumption to affirm that Jesus cursed either the land or the people. Reference is made to the following scripture:

"Then Jesus began to weep over Jerusalem, saying,

"O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! You who will kill the prophets, and will stone them who are sent unto you; how often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, and ye would not.

"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

"For I say unto you, that you shall not see me henceforth, and know that I am he of whom it is written by the prophets, until ye shall say,

"Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord; in the clouds of heaven and all the holy angels with him."—Matthew 23: 37-40. (I. T.)

The foregoing is a prophecy rather than a curse. Jesus was not in the cursing business. The entire chapter is an analysis of cause and effect. It was an attempt to interpret life. It was a review of the lapses of the scribes and Pharisees. They were "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Jesus recognized the cosmic law. These people had sinned. They were sinning. They would continue to sin. They rejected the New Covenant. They were treacherous to the Old Covenant. National disintegration had already set in. Disolution was inevitable. This Jesus foresaw. His ministry had been primarily to the Jews. They spurned his message of peace. As he reviewed the long-suffering of God and recounted their perfidy, it was not difficult for him to predict what must inevitably befall them. The attitude of Jesus is clearly indicated in these words, "Then Jesus began to weep over Jerusalem."

Van Buren Not Sustained

The Van Buren letter presupposes the cessation of not only the former and latter rains in Palestine, but also the summer dew, some time prior to 1853. Mr. Van Buren did not visit very much of the country. He speaks only of Joppa. His position as to the entire absence of frost would not hold save on the coastal plains and in the Jordan Valley. His statements as to crops has only local application.

Mr. Van Buren could not speak from experience as to the summer dew. He was there only in winter. His visit was in 1867, some fifteen years after the supposed return of the rain.

A thorough and exhaustive examination of over one hundred authorities, embracing civil engineers, travelers, historians, meteorologists, geologists, together with a number of encyclopedias, brings conviction that:

(a) The climate of Palestine and Syria has remained practically the same throughout the centuries. Slight modifications will be indicated later.

(b) There is nothing to corroborate the contention that the former and latter rains ceased for any extended period. Seasons of drought occurred during Bible times. Such is the case to-day.

(c) The desolation obtaining in Palestine during the past eight hundred years has been due to:

(1) The overthrow of the political and social structure of the Jewish Commonwealth.

(2) The consequent abandonment of the intensive land cultivation and water conservation which obtained during the Jewish occupancy of the land.

(3) The ruthless vandalism, rapacious greed, and maladministration of the nations which have occupied in this territory.

(4) The abandonment of the divine plan which produced Israel's greatness and the consequent forfeiture of God's blessing upon land and people.

(d) The claim as to the cessation and return of the former and latter rains is not essential to the vindication of Bible prophecy or the validation of Book of Mormon claims.

Topography

In order that we may intelligently consider this question, it will be well to study the nature of the country and the causes which affect the climate and modify the rainfall.

The Coastal Plain

The Coastal Plain lies between the mountains and the sea. It varies from ten to fifteen miles in width. Its elevation is from one to three hundred feet. The surface is slightly rolling in the region of the foothills, or flat on the alluvial plains.

We may, for convenience, associate under this head the Plains of Esdraelon or Megiddo lying between the Carmel range and the hills of Lower Galilee, and which connect the Jordan Trough with the Plain of Acre. The narrow valley of the Kishon connects it with the Coastal Plain, and the Valley of Jezreel connects it with the Ghor. It has an elevation of two hundred and fifty feet. The soil is a rich loam. The Plains of Asochis and Ramah also extend inland from the Coastal Plain near Acre.

The Hill Country

This section lies between the Jordan Trough on the East and the Coastal Plains on the west. It extends from the mountains of Lebanon on the north to the peninsula of Sinai on the south. From Esdraelon north it is called the Hill Country of Galilee, which is divided by the plain of Ramah into lower and upper Galilee. South of Esdraelon we have Mount Ephraim in Samaria and Mount Judah in Judea, or what is commonly called the Hills of Samaria and the Hills of Judah.

This Hill Country consists of limestone which has been "raised by the folding of its beds into a saddle or anticline and then dissected into hill and valley by the wadies that carry off the surplus rainfall." This great watershed reaches an elevation of three thousand feet. Some special peaks exceed this. The Lebanon Mountains reach an elevation of nine thousand feet. The drainage is the Mediterranean on the west and the Ghor (Jordan Valley) on the east.

From the Coastal Plain the hills rise steadily to the summit. The eastern slope is regular to the level of the western wall of the Ghor. The drainage lines are well developed, dissecting the land completely into hill and valley. The wadie bottoms are steep and well graded. The valleys are V-shaped.

The hills are exceptionally rocky and in many places, particularly around Jerusalem, the only way in which they can be cultivated at all is by means of terraces where sufficient soil may be accumulated or be artificially placed to support vines or trees such as the grape, fig, and olive. Under this head we will also include the Shephelah which has played such an important part in Jewish history. South of the Valley of Ajalon are foothills which are more or less separated from the Hill Country through the development of valleys north and south, tributaries of westward flowing wadies. These are in alignment and by headworth growth have breached the dividing ridge. This gives rise to a valley which separated the foothill district. This is known as the Shephelah.

The Ghor

The Jordan Trough or Ghor (hollow) is a very deep and comparatively narrow canyon. It is a great fault or dislocation in the surface of the earth along which the west side has relatively sunk. It is encompassed on the east by the Mountains of Moab and on the west by the Mountains of Judah. The famous Jordan River meanders through this valley for a distance of one hundred and eighty-five miles, although in a straight line it traverses less than seventy miles.

This Ghor is only a part of a great rift in the earth's crust which extends from the Lebanons through the Gulf of Akaba to the Red Sea. Its length from the source of the Jordan to the Gulf of Akaba is two hundred and sixty miles. Its width varies from four to fourteen miles. The mountains on either side rise abruptly from one thousand five hundred feet to two thousand five hundred feet. The discrepancy in the elevation of both sides of the Ghor is more marked farther north, amounting to as high as five thousand feet at Mount Hor.

North of the Dead Sea the actual fissure is not visible. The east wall of the Ghor is the fault scarp. There have been no glaciers in this valley, so this depression could not have resulted from erosion. There has been no river flowing into the open sea. The almost universal explanation is that this trough has been formed by the actual sinking of a strip of the earth's surface between two parallel faults. The floor has dropped down.

The source of the Jordan is at the foot of Mount Hebron, which has an elevation of over nine thousand feet. From here the river descends to Lake Tiberias. It drops six hundred and eighty-nine feet in a distance of twenty miles. This lake (Sea of Galilee) is six hundred and eighty feet below sea level.

The Dead Sea lies in the lower end of the Ghor. It is forty-eight miles in length. It is some twelve hundred and ninety-two feet below sea level and has a maximum depth of from thirteen hundred and twenty-six hundred feet below sea level, or about six thousand feet below the eastern plateau. The soil of the Jordan Valley is exceedingly rich and only requires irrigation and cultivation to revive its great fertility.

Land Subdivisions

Palestine is located, therefore, between an immense desert on the east and south and the sea on the west in a series of what may be called four parallel lines running from north to south. These range as follows: The Sea; The Coastal Plain; The Jordan; The Eastern Range; The Desert. Stated in another way we have:

1. The Sea.
2. The Maritime Plain.
3. The Low Hills of Shephelah.
4. The Central Range cut in two by
5. Esdraelon and running into
6. The Negeb.
7. The Jordan Valley.
8. The Eastern Range.
9. The Desert.

This irregular contour from plain to mountain peak, together with the varying elevation, ranging from thirteen hundred feet below to nine thousand feet above sea level, must have material influence on climate and rainfall.

Palestine, from Dan to Beersheba, is one hundred and forty miles. The breadth at Gaza from the Dead Sea to the Mediterranean Sea is slightly over fifty-six miles, and at Dan, from the Jordan to the Mediterranean, is twenty-four miles. The average breadth is forty miles. The area of the country west of the Jordan is about sixty-seven hundred square miles. The area of the country allotted to the Twelve Tribes was about twelve thousand square miles.

The Climate

The seasons throughout Syria, including Palestine, may be divided into two: a dry, hot summer, and a rainy and varying winter. The climate may be divided into four distinct zones—the summits of Lebanon and Hermon—the mountains of Judah, known as the Hill Country and having a continental climate; the subtropical sea coast region; and the tropical valley of the Jordan. These climatic zones vary, from the tropical found in the Ghor to the arctic in the summits of Lebanon. They range from moist to desert.

The climate in summer is quite uniform. Sea breezes start about nine or ten o'clock each morning and continue throughout the day. A land breeze makes the nights cool and pleasant. The Ghor temperature is quite regular. While very much more torrid than other parts of the country, still a fresh breeze blows from off the Dead Sea up the Ghor during the day and reverses itself at night. The plateau country is somewhat irregular—the days are hot and the nights cool.

From the first of May to the end of October the sky is almost "uninterruptedly cloudless." The dews are copious and sometimes very heavy, and fall during the night throughout the summer, reviving vegetation and relieving the extreme dryness of the day breezes. The latitude of Jerusalem is thirty-one and a half degrees north. The whole of Palestine is included between thirty-one and thirty-three and one half degrees north. In respect to climate, as well as many other features, Palestine should be compared with Southern California.

The subtropical and temperate climate of Palestine increases its climatic diversity. The rainfall of countries lying in a more northern latitude is derived from cyclonic storms which move steadily forward and precipitate moisture despite topographical hindrances. It is different in Palestine. The rain is derived, with very few exceptions, from winds which blow inland from the Mediterranean Sea. The prevailing winds of summer traverse great expanses of desert, which do not furnish moisture.

During six months in the year west winds rise from the Mediterranean Sea and blow toward the Judean plateau. The air gradually expands and grows cooler. It cannot hold all of the moisture, and rain is precipitated in comparatively large amounts. In summer when the winds blow from the land they are compressed and thereupon become warmer and more capable of retaining moisture. Just as soon as these winds descend to the east of Judea they not only cease to distribute moisture, but conversely they absorb it from the land. The faster the air ascends or descends the more pronounced are the variations of drought or rain. Moist air ascending produces rain. Dry air descending precludes rain and absorbs moisture from the land. (See Civilization and Climate by Ellsworth Huntington.)

The Rains

The rains start about the end of October or the first of November. These are called the first or former rains. (Pourer.) They fall at the time of the autumnal equinoctial gales. The rain at this period is very necessary to moisten and soften the parched and baked soil, enabling the farmer to plow and prepare the soil for his crops. (Deuteronomy 11: 14; Jeremiah 14: 4.) These first rains were always hailed with joy and festivity. Their deferment was looked upon as a calamity, necessitating self-abnegation and national contrition.

Rain continues at intervals for six months. From the middle of December until the end of February is particularly a rainy season. The rains at this time are more frequent and copious than in the autumn. January ordinarily has the heaviest rainfall. The latter rains come in March and April, after the crops are laid by and about the time of the spring equinox. In March spring begins. April is the month of grass and flowers. In May and June east winds prevail and dry up the vegetation. Whether the harvest will be sparse or bounteous depends upon the copiousness of the rain throughout the seasons. The winter rains are as essential to good crops as the latter rains. The average annual rainfall is about 26.05 inches. (See Historical Geography of the Holy Land, by George Adam Smith, Article, Palestine.)

Temperature

The mean annual temperature at Jerusalem is 64 degrees Fahrenheit. The year 1882 registered the highest known temperature, which was 112 degrees. The lowest known temperature was recorded in January, 1864, as 25 degrees. The mean temperature ranges from 46 degrees Fahrenheit in January, to 74 degrees in August. The average number of rainy days varies as follows: January, 11.9; February, 10.5; March, 8.9; April, 5.1; May, 1.6; June, 0; July, 0; August, 0; September, 0; October, 1.6; November, 6.4; December, 9.8. The temperature in the Jordan Valley runs as high as 120 degrees.

The climate of Syria has an extreme annual range of temperature. This is correspondingly true of the day amounting to 23 degrees, in summer, to 14.5 degrees in winter. The thermometer occasionally falls below freezing during the night, but rises again in the middle of the day to 77 degrees and more. Snow is not infrequent in Jerusalem and Damascus. This melts quickly. East of the Jordan it lies for days. The Lebanon mountains are covered with snow the year round.

Winds

The winds of Syria, their character and direction, are influenced by the predominating winds and modified by a regular system of land and sea breezes. One has but to refer to the Scriptures to know that the north wind is cold, the east wind dry, the south wind warm, and the west wind damp, this last especially during the winter months.

The north and northwest winds blow for about one hundred and fourteen days, the west winds for forty-five days, and the south and southwest winds for forty-six days during the year. The northwest winds prevail in summer and the west winds in winter. The winds from the south and east are called Khamsin, Sherkiyeh, or Strocco (The East). These are dry and hot, having little ozone. They blight the whole land and prostrate the inhabitants, producing fever and various ailments. While these winds blow, which happens frequently in May and June and occasionally throughout the summer, the atmosphere is oppressive and sultry. The air is filled with a fine white dust.

In our next article we will deal with the claim that the rains returned in 1853.

Emerson, who was accused of pantheism, does not, in speaking of Deity, agree with the gentlemen who prefer "which" to "who." In one place he writes, "in its highest moods the soul gives itself alone, original, and pure to the Lonely, Original, and Pure, who, on that condition, gladly inhabits, leads, and speaks to the soul."—William V. Kelley, in A Pilgrim of the Infinite.

Musical Meanderings Through Michigan

On June 12 the writer left home hearth, and scenes, and embarked on a Santa Fe "boat" plying between Kansas City and Chicago. The object of this pilgrimage was to visit some of the important branches of Michigan in the interest of the work of the Department of Music. The work of this department and its correspondence had been such as to make us feel that Michigan was a very important field in the musical work of the church, and we wanted to visit it in the performance of our labors and obtain knowledge at first hand concerning all its possibilities.

A detailed account of our travels and all the experiences had and places visited would make this article too much of the nature of an extract from a personal diary and would be interesting only to the different places visited. A casual mention of these and then we will pass on to discussion of work and the principles involved; the results obtained and the objectives to be reached in the future.

Work in individual branches was had in some localities and institutes affecting large districts were held in others. The places visited for both kinds of work are as follows, in the order in which they were visited: Grand Rapids, Minden City, Elkton, Owendale, McGregor, Port Huron, Saint Clair, London (Ontario), Crosswell, Sandusky, Erie Beach reunion (Ontario), Flint, Detroit, Lansing. And now we are at the reunion of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, at Indian Lake, Michigan, conducting daily work. One more reunion, that of the Northern Michigan District, at Boyne City, and our work will be completed and our steps will turn gladly towards the blessed haven of home.

Special institutes, involving extensive, prepared, and developed work along educational lines, were held in the following branches, participated in, to a greater or lesser extent, by those from surrounding branches, for these institutes were designed to affect as wide a range of territory as possible: Port Huron, London (Ontario), Sandusky, Flint, Detroit. In the other locations the work was almost local in character, except in the instance of two two-day meetings, held at Minden City and Elkton, in which gatherings there were present those from other branches near the place of meeting.

The character of the work done naturally divides itself into two classes, urban and rural; country branches and city branches. Each class has its own distinctive features as well as each branch its own individual problems.

The musical needs of the rural branch are entirely different in many respects from those of the city branch, and their problems are also different and often more unsolvable. The country branch wants a choir, it wants an orchestra, just as badly as the city branch, but its problems of attaining these are entirely different and often practically unsolvable. The opportunities for the realization of these are far more often present for the city branch than for the country branch. In the city branch of moderate size there is always to be found the usual average of those who have natural, innate talent, and there are always to be found in the city those competent instructors who can train and develop such talent. Such competent instructors are seldom found accessible to the country branch, and many of our talented Saints living in rural districts are lamenting this unfortunate lack of opportunities. To the shame of many Saints living in cities where ample opportunities are found, it must be said that many of them are allowing precious time to waste and valuable opportunities to pass unheeded in the culpable neglect of their God-given talents. These will be held to account for this in God's time.

The country branch nearly always wants a choir more earnestly than the city branch, and often it is more willing to grasp opportunities than the more favored city branch. But very often the country branch, realizing its isolated condition, makes the fatal mistake of concluding that, because of its lack of advantages, its situation is hopeless and no choir is possible. Such branches always fail to have a choir because they presuppose failure. A choir, even in its most rudimentary and undeveloped state, is a body of singers chosen out and set apart from the branch, and sustained with the leadership and care of the song work of the services. In every branch of moderate size there are always a number more qualified to lead in singing and who, therefore, are able to serve in the capacity of choir members. Such should be put into service, for it is better for these to function, even though imperfectly, than that the branch should have no choir. God requires that men shall function in all the things he has commanded of them, as best they can, even though, in their weakness, they function but crudely and imperfectly. In the divine economy it is the earnest, sincere effort that stands out in preeminent virtue before God. He respects and aids those who try.

The city branch which realizes the extent of its resources in talents and possibilities, and which embraces and improves its many opportunities, always evolves that which is truly worth while in spiritual and intellectual development. Such a branch always thrives; it continually elevates its spiritual, intellectual, and moral standards; it always develops individuals of character and purpose. Situated where culture, progress, and intelligence have centered, it enjoys preeminent advantages in this regard, which it must improve if it would stand blameless.

Many of the rural branches of Michigan are eager to develop their natural resources and are imploring help to aid them in doing so. We could have spent a month or two in every one of these we visited, helping and instructing them, and not have exceeded our welcome. Yet, as a general employee of the whole church, needed in many quarters and ways, we could stay but a few brief days. We feel that we helped them in some ways, particularly in the attainment of ideas and visions. Yet the problem still remains for them and we want to assure all country branches that are yearning for development, that their problem is an anxious one with us. We hope that as the future shall enlarge our experience and capacities, that we may be able to render some really effectual aid.

All of the things we have said about choirs may be said, in the same principles, regarding orchestras. Many of the branches of Michigan are wanting to develop orchestras, and in many of the rural branches there are young Saints wanting to study orchestral instruments but can get no one to furnish instruction on same. We long to help them in time.

The institutes held in the places mentioned were very largely like those we have described in other issues of The Staff, varying according to locality. At each one much interest and enthusiasm was developed; some very valuable educational features were introduced, and new ideas and stimuli were engendered. These institutes, while focusing attention and interest upon the musical work of the church, stimulate lines of thought and incite towards development that may in time result in positive, worth-while, progressive development. Institutes are fine things, and every progressive branch should strive to hold musical institutes for the benefit of musical forces at regular intervals.

We must not close this article without some critical mention of some particular things and persons. These may serve to illustrate the possibilities of development that are to be found in this State, and which may presage the development of the future.

London, Ontario, stands unique among the musical possibilities of the church. The Saints of this branch have recently installed an excellent pipe organ, one of the best instruments we have ever seen. It occupies a place of great beauty in their gem of a church building and if their possible organists and present chorus choir develop as their opportunities undoubtedly allow them, this branch will some day stand as one of the musical strongholds of the church.

Flint, Michigan, also offers some very bright, promising hopes for musical future. There is an abundance of fine talent among the Saints of this city, and the musical forces are gifted, alert, enthusiastic, and eager to forge ahead.

Detroit, Michigan, also affords a situation distinctly unique, teeming with possibilities of fruitful development. Before its amalgamation the church interests of this city consisted of six separate branches. Now all are in one branch and the former six meeting places have been consolidated into three. Needless to say that this concentration of forces offers many possibilities for culture and development, and we hope that these Saints will enlarge upon these many opportunities. Such efforts on their part can only result in an ample harvest.

Sandusky, Michigan, also has excellent possibilities in the way of talent, which is at present functioning more in the orchestral line. Port Huron also abounds in actual possibilities, having a large number available for choir service.

We mention these particular places because they are large branches and important points, advantageously situated. They should develop into actualities for the great good of the church, and their leaders should see to it that nothing prevents the realization of such possibilities.

Our trip through this important State, containing so many branches of the church, has been a very profitable one, we feel, not merely to the locations visited, but to our own understanding of the work and the needs of the church.

Music and Decorum

Personification of Music and Decorum during the rendition of musical numbers.

(Read before the Musical Institute at Detroit, Michigan, July 31, 1920, by Sister Jeanette McCollum.)

I am music. My home is on the staff of five lines and four spaces. Above and below are added leger lines which add to the beauty of my domain.

I am harmony, a succession of sounds or a combination of simultaneous tones so modulated as to please the ear.

I have magic power, for I can both soothe and fire the soul of man.

I am master of languages. I speak to you in tones of sadness, sobs of grief, and give expression to joy and ripples of laughter.

I even choose text and sermonize and breathe prayers. I am rarely understood by the masses, but loved by all who can bring themselves in tune with my harmonious nature. To be fully appreciated I must have an interpreter. I am interpreted both by skillful fingers and human voice. Those who interpret me study me long and diligently, for the artist must convey the message of the two great minds, the poet and composer.

I am very sensitive and easily offended and the least bit of confusion grates on my finely organized system.

One of the things that grieves me most is when I am ushered into an assembly of unappreciative people and I do not receive the respect due me. I cannot endure bad decorum, yet many times I have tried to bring to you my message amidst giggling and loud whispering. I do not believe you realize the harm you do me under these conditions. If you must whisper or move about, there are always intermissions given for that purpose.

One thing more I must mention, that makes my message hard to bear. It is your thoughts. If your mind is filled with hatred or jealousy it is at once felt by my sensitive interpreters, having received them by your thought waves, of which you were unconscious. I would not have you think I am always treated with disrespect, for I am not. Allow me to tell you of the royal way I am received in some places.

The moment my interpreters enter and I am ready to give an instrumental or vocal number, all motion ceases at once. Some were yet in the aisle and had not time to get their seats, yet they stood and waited until that number had been rendered, then quietly took their places. Order was the ruling of that house and they had ushers that saw that those

A New Series

We are happy to announce the beginning of a new series of articles written by Sister Bertha L. Mader on the subject of dress and fashion.

The first, which appears in this issue, deals with the responsibility of the mother in regard to the subject. This responsibility goes deeper than the thoughtless mother may be willing to admit. Just how much she can or cannot govern or influence the choice and decision of her daughter in these matters may indicate just how successful or unsuccessful she may be as a mother, who should be a tower of strength and an unfailing guide to youth.

At our summer institute the question was asked, "Just how can a mother explain to a twelve-year-old daughter what immodesty in dress is?" How would you reply? Let us have an open forum on some of these problems, and in the multitude of counsel we may find wisdom.

Read Sister Mader's thoughtful little articles, and take them to your local meetings, to discuss with other mothers. Talk them over with your young daughter, and see if we cannot establish for our girls and for ourselves some standards in regard to this ever-present question which will be a credit to our good taste, good judgment, and good religion.

Dress and Fashion

1. The Mother's Responsibility

We mothers must learn one fact well: When a girl reaches the adolescent period, she will no longer do our bidding without question, even though that question go unexpressed. For she has reached the period of independent thinking and she questions every request, every new thought for which she does not know a reason. And she has a right to know the answer, for upon each answer depends a tiny step in the development of her reasoning ability and her store of information.

The mother's capacity and willingness to answer every question will decide in no small measure her success in molding the child's ideas and ideals in harmony with what she wishes them to be. This applies to questions of dress as well as to the other multitudinous problems that meet the mother daily for solution. The mother may object strenuously to some fad or fashion, but, unless she can give a reason for her objection, it will fail to have much weight.

Fortunate is the mother who has taken advantage of the earlier years of a child's life to prove the right to a wholesome respect for her ideas. That respect, to be permanent, rules were enforced. I could not help admiring the dignity of those quiet, mannerly people. Could you?

Come, seek knowledge of me, and we will all sing with the harmony and inspiration we had in celestial spheres, when the morning stars sang together.

Now for Another Season's Work

By the time this issue of The Staff reaches its readers, another summer shall have passed into the eternal past, and another autumn will be pausing at our threshold. It has been a summer filled with development in many quarters and perhaps a cessation, or slowing up, in others. But now that the summer is ended and the cool autumnal months have come, all the musical forces of the church everywhere should resume activities, if such have been suspended, and should prepare for another season's energetic work and development.

Let the slogan be, "Now for another season's work."

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

must be based upon the girl's realization of her mother's intelligent, unprejudiced understanding of the problems of girlhood, and her knowledge of the best adaptation of all questions to suit her daughter's needs.

It is easier to let Mary do and dress as other girls do, but such an attitude will never help the daughter over the period of the immature judgment of youth without experiencing its mistakes, nor will she be able to reach the right conception of such matters without wasting precious years that might be given to wholesome, constructive service, could she have the benefit of her mother's years of experience and knowledge as she grew to womanhood.

When I endeavor to find the reason for young women's usual choice of extreme fashions, I am convinced that one of the main causes so many of our girls follow the extravagant styles of the hour is because their mothers do not know how to criticize constructively, so either fail in their endeavors or do not try to direct the girls. Moreover it requires decided persistency to buy either patterns or ready-made garments that are comfortable, modest, and in good taste. Perhaps a few admire the extremes, or simply do not know how to select suitable garments; but they are not many.

Last summer, at a meeting of about seventy-five women with the Zion Council, I am told not one of the members wore an immodest gown. Think of that! It is unusual. Doesn't it speak well for our leaders? I feel sure a happier day is not far away when we will have those of our own members who can help us select clothing suited to our needs—beautiful and modest.

For the present one of the most prolific sources of help in determining what may be in good or in bad taste is our better class of women's magazines. They frequently illustrate their articles, too. Some of our more progressive domestic art teachers are giving a course of lessons in the fundamental principles of good dress. The best art schools are offering a series of lessons in applied art along this line and sometimes send out lecturers to help local organizations or clubs. Some of our more conservative women's clubs are endeavoring to do their part in establishing saner styles. These are a few of the sources of helps, some of which are probably available in your community.

As our girls to-day grow into womanhood, it is my most earnest hope that some of them will prepare to be our leaders in counseling those of us who may not have had the opportunities we needed to produce the best results in the matter of dress in our own home circles. And I just as earnestly hope and pray that each of our girls of to-day will realize the grave and responsible problems she must help solve in her own home, in this as well as in other questions, and prepare to meet them, that the homes of the future may typify more nearly the ideal home of a Latter Day Saint.

Congresswoman Blames Parents for Immorality

"There is too much jazz among young girls these days because mothers and fathers have stopped watching over their children."

This is the opinion of Miss Alice Robertson, of Oklahoma, the woman member of Congress.

"Miss Alice," as she is affectionately known, refuses to believe that the world is becoming bad, but does believe that young girls are not being restrained enough.

"You cannot legislate against these things," said "Miss Alice." "We have too many laws now. After a while we will be a toothless race through getting all these predigested laws regulating us—this antismoking bill is an example. We ought to have to chew things more for ourselves.

"I don't go around much myself, and all I know about girls smoking and rolling down their stockings is what I have been told. I have seen some bathing suits that were a little too scanty, but when I have seen them I have thought, 'Poor girl, she wouldn't be wearing such a bathing suit if her mother were looking after her.'

"The only way to correct these things is for parents to look after their children, and for each one of us to look after himself or herself. The trouble to-day is that most of us are too busy trying to look after everybody else. We neglect to look after ourselves."

Deal Gently With Children

Our attention has recently been called to two accounts dealing with children who have not been dealt with gently. They touch the heart, and mothers and fathers who read can but look upon their own dear ones with renewed consecration of purpose to strive to deal as intelligently and tenderly with their own as possible.

We refer to the two clippings which follow, both of which contain a lesson and a warning to parents.

A Tragedy

At five Agnes Katherine Hughes was a prodigy; at six she is a crushed flower.

A year ago she could speak three languages, could sing beautifully, and could dance like a fairy sprite; to-day she is mute and paralyzed.

The tragic transformation is laid to eleven words: "There's a bogey man in that room and he'll catch you."

These words were spoken by a thoughtless woman; spoken in the same thoughtless way that many adults speak to frighten little children.

The child, highly strung and extremely sensitive, was at first merely scared—then became hysterical.

LETTERS

Lamoni Stake Reunion

Its reputation for good results has been maintained.

Just a few words concerning the Lamoni reunion, which we were privileged to attend during a part of its twelve-day encampment, and to partake of its many enjoyable features. Several circumstances combined to make it what is considered by some one of the best, if not the best, ever held in that vicinity. Of these might be mentioned, ideal weather, with just enough rain to cool the air and keep the dust settled; a splendidly organized and working corps, working together almost as a unit; orderly conduct; and the unity of purpose with which they came together.

The theme of last year's reunion was "Reconsecration," which was well followed this year by "The perfecting of our offering." That theme was not only discussed at various times in the prayer meetings by both young and old, but was also touched upon in some of the sermons.

We remember a time in the history of the Lamoni reunions when meetings were held almost continuously, morning, afternoon, and evening. Then the only time allowed for recreational purposes for the young people was the short time between the morning and afternoon meetings, and between the afternoon and evening services. When the dinner and supper hours were taken out of that, there was not much time left, especially when the girls were required to wash dishes and perhaps the boys carry water. In those times the only way for the young folks to get a little recreation and amusement was to slip away without permission for a hike or bonfire.

We are glad to say that in recent years a much better plan has been adopted and the results are gratifying indeed. When the young people are given a chance to have good, wholesome amusements, we find they are quite willing and happy to cooperate with the more serious work of the reunion.

At their reunion this year two good prayer meetings and one preaching service every morning provided goodly feasts of spiritual food for the day, with sometimes a sermon in the evening. The afternoons were given over almost entirely to recreation and supervised play for the children and young people. A variety of games and athletic sports were provided, such as volley ball, baseball, indoor baseball, pole vaulting, jumping contests, races, swings, croquet, hikes, and swims.

Appreciative of all these provisions made for their enjoyment and benefit, the young people gave willing heed and response to the requests to be at their own meeting tent each morning at 7.45 and there take part in their own prayer service; and it was an inspiration to be present, to see their tent overflowing with boys and girls, and to hear their splendid testimonies. Each morning a subject or theme was announced for the following morning, all leading towards the one great theme of the reunion, "How can I perfect my offering?" These themes were:

Dedication of the temple.

Preparation for the journey.

Beginning of the road.

First crossroad—true or false ambition.

Second crossroad—true or false pleasure.

Third crossroad—service or selfishness.

Fourth crossroad—intelligence or ignorance.

Fifth crossroad—love or hate.

Watching the sign posts.

How may I perfect my temple?

The talks and lectures to the girls at the young people's tent were also well attended. These talks were practical ones, given mostly by young women workers, and some by the girls themselves.

The twenty-six Boy Scout tents on the ground constituted an interesting feature, and the good work of these Scouts about the camp was commended on every side.

The prayer services at nine o'clock each morning at the

After a few days a numbing paralysis began to creep along the muscles of her body; finally it affected her tongue and her last spoken words were, "Bogey man."

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hughes, of 638 Evergreen Avenue, Millvale, Pennsylvania, have almost frenziedly spent their money to undo the havoc wrought by the eleven senseless words. All without avail.

Finally they have appealed to the healing profession of the country for aid. Hundreds of physicians have answered, offering aid.

Meanwhile, Agnes is being cared for in a Pittsburgh hospital, where a dozen doctors are giving their best to cure her, while they sift the suggestions that have flooded in upon the parents.

And these twelve men, wise in the ways of little children, send out this warning to the parents, and aunts and uncles, and brothers and sisters, and people everywhere:

"Never frighten a little child."—Exchange.

No Disgrace to Fail

A teacher wrote with red ink the word danger on a little boy's card at school to warn him that he might fail.

She might as well have written death, for that is what it has amounted to. For a long time the little fellow hid the card in fear of his parents' wrath, and at last when his mother insisted upon seeing it and there was nothing left to do but show the tragic thing, the poor, thoughtless mother, her pride for the moment getting the best of her, said something about his father attending to the matter when he returned from his vacation, and with that the little fellow, heart-heavy, found his father's pistol and ended it all.

God rest his little soul in peace!

If his act will make parents think and be less strict about this silly old school stuff his little life has not been stilled in vain.

There must have been great fear of that father's wrath in the little heart—no wonder there was no room for lessons and such in a little head distracted with terror.

What matter if he failed—once, twice—or never finished school?

Some of our greatest men had little or no schooling.

I remember well how I suffered in school memorizing boundaries and battles and imports and exports and a lot of other stuff. I could grasp anything I'd see and devour geography and history and travel and biography, if it came in a library book; but in a schoolbook, it just wouldn't stick—that's all.

Some children in the schoolroom are like little parrots. They can reel off reams of lessons, but they aren't able to observe or reason things out for themselves.

Not every child has the advantage of older sisters and brothers or an educated father and mother who can help them with their studies.

Fear of a father is enough to drive all else out of a youngster's head.

It isn't how fast you learn things, but how well you learn things.

It may take one child twice as long as another to learn the same lessons, but he may do twice as much with his knowledge in the end.

Parents should be the port of peace and confidence for their children, where the little ones can find comfort, and consolation. There should never be the least fear to bring any trouble to the fireside.

It is no disgrace to fail—who cares whether the successful man in life passed with highest honors or ran away from school?—Kansas City Post.

big tent were attended by large numbers and participated in by many. The Spirit was present in power on many occasions, expressing encouragement and cheer, its admonitions being given in gentleness and love. On the last Sunday morning Bishop Carmichael's sermon, following immediately after the sacrament service, consisted more of a testimony than a sermon, relating as he did many of his own personal testimonies of the work and of the divine calling of our present President of the church and also that of his father. Strong and convincing was his testimony, accompanied as it was by the power of the Spirit poured out in great measure.

We feel indeed that the reunion was one of spiritual uplift and benefit to many. Provisions were made to purchase about seventeen more acres of beautiful woodland adjoining the twenty now used as a camping ground. May the work so increase and grow that in days to come even this enlarged camp ground shall prove inadequate for the numbers who shall in future reunions gather there.

Southern California Reunion

The Southern California District conference and reunion has passed into history. On July 29, at Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, there seemed to spring up as if by magic, a city of tents where the Saints had gathered together at this season of the year for many years past to worship and be associated in the one grand reunion of the year.

For several months prior to this gathering there seemed to be an unusual desire on the part of all the Saints to make this reunion the best in the history of the district, and to this end all labored and prayed. When the Saints were assured that President Frederick M. Smith would attend the reunion part of the time and that his counselor, Elbert A. Smith, would be with them from the beginning, they rejoiced much, and felt indeed that they were to be specially favored.

So when the reunion was formally opened on Friday evening, July 29, the Saints gathered in one happy throng under the folds of the big gospel tent to greet each other with that greeting which is only experienced among the people of God, and to listen to short addresses made by our genial district president, David E. Dowker, President Elbert A. Smith, Patriarch F. G. Pitt; also J. M. Simmons and Amos Yates, general conference appointees. The first service closed with the feeling of good fellowship and unity, that truly the Lord would meet with his people and bless them with an outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

All the different departments of the church were ably represented during the reunion. The Women's Department, in charge of our genial district organizer, Sister Grace Adams, was especially favored by having Sister Ruth Smith, wife of President F. M. Smith and Director General of the Women's Department, to assist them with her advice and counsel. Also Sister F. G. Pitt, as well as Sister Dora Glines who was especially active in study class work.

The Sunday School Department was ably represented by active workers from all parts of the district. This work was in charge of the district superintendent, Peter Kaufman. Under the auspices of this department there was rendered a beautiful pageant representing one hundred years of Latter Day Saintism, which was enjoyed very much by all.

The Religio Department was presided over by the district organizer, Wilfred Burton, and the work of this department was very much enjoyed.

The music during the whole time was of the very best order, under the able direction and leadership of our district chorister, Sister Lois Aldredge. Music was furnished for every occasion, which was indeed delightful.

The meetings were of the highest spiritual order. The principal speakers were President Elbert A. Smith and Patriarch F. G. Pitt. Their excellent sermons and wise counsel were indeed a spiritual feast. The prayer and testimony meetings which were held every morning from 9.15 to 10.30 were indeed services long to be remembered because of the spiritual blessings that were enjoyed. The gifts of the Spirit were manifested in tongues, interpretation of tongues, vision, and prophecy, to the edification and comfort of his Saints.

The whole camp was made to rejoice on Friday evening, August 5, by the arrival of our beloved leader, President Frederick M. Smith, and a hearty welcome was extended to him.

The district conference convened Saturday, August 6. It was presided over by the district presidency: David E. Dowker, D. Amos Yates, associated with the First Presidency of the church. A fine, peaceful conference was enjoyed, and in the selection of officers for the ensuing year Brethren David E. Dowker and D. Amos Yates were unanimously sustained. A very timely talk was given us by President F. M. Smith, which was very instructive and highly appreciated.

During the reunion seven were baptized by Brother Dowker. The cafeteria service was the best the reunion has ever enjoyed and was ably directed by Brother J. C. Clapp and wife.

On Sunday, August 7, as a fitting climax to the closing of the reunion and conference, Brother Elbert A. Smith occupied very ably at the eleven o'clock service. At 2.30, p. m., President F. M. Smith delivered a very excellent discourse, which was enjoyed by all the Saints. The sermon in the evening was by Patriarch F. G. Pitt and was well fitted for the occasion. Thus closed one of the most eventful and generally conceded to be the largest attended and best reunion ever held in the Southern California District.

Doing Constructive Work

"Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee."—Proverbs 4:25. Solomon believed in constructive work. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Proverbs 4:18. If we as the church of Jesus Christ reorganized in these last days keep in the path mentioned by Solomon, then we must do constructive work.

Sometimes, after a good General Conference we do constructive work for a while, but after a time we seem to forget and begin the work of destruction instead. In order to do constructive work we must do constructive thinking; for as a man thinketh in his heart so is he. If any man or woman speaks against the church or its officers, it is because they think evil thoughts. Should the workers in our department store continue to speak evil against each other or of those in another department of it, how long before that business would fail? They might be in a good business and in a good location, yet where one department continues to work against another, failure must be the inevitable result.

So it is with the church of Christ; if one department continues to work against others, we cannot succeed. We are engaged in a good business and have a fine location, with splendid opportunities to bless mankind as no other people can. What shall we do? The war we wage must not be one of rebellion among ourselves, but with love for each other and all people let us unitedly make war with our combined enemy, viz, the world, the flesh, and the Devil.

Constructive work in the home is necessary. Parents who in the presence of their children speak disrespectfully of the church or its officers are quite likely, sooner or later, to see with sorrow, their children outside the church. There are plenty of forces outside the church to turn the young from it without that force being augmented at home. True, there is much to be destroyed, but how shall it be done? I answer, By seeking to build up the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Satan will fall. It seems to have no cohesion, hence "Babylon" or the kingdom of the Devil must fall. Let us, then, not merely for the sake of the young, but for all, both old and young, do as did our Master, do constructive work. He says, "Contend against no church save it be the church of the Devil."

Let us as a church and as individuals get the beam out of our own eyes, then we shall truly be as salt, having saving qualities for the salvation of mankind, in Jesus' name.

The Peregrinations of "Ebenezer"

Elder Pement finds much opposition in Ontario and Quebec as he journeys in his "gospel" car.

To peregrinate is to wander; and wandering is surely the term that can be used in describing our movements here in Eastern Ontario and Quebec. And were it not for the fact that there are a few Saints in Cornwall, Ontario, the lot of the wandering missionary would be most uncertain.

A number of interested Saints have written, saying: "We are watching you in your work, and are interested in what you are doing." We are thankful indeed for such encouragement and interest, and will herewith set forth some of our experiences for their benefit and information.

Elder Levitt and the writer left Ottawa, with "Ebenezer," for Cornwall, where Brother and Sister O. L. Weaver and Brother and Sister J. E. Phillion reside, whose homes are havens of comfort for the missionary. Here we thought to be able to accomplish some work for the Master, but the degree of prejudice existing here is very great and very few came to the meetings.

After holding forth we concluded to move out from Cornwall into the surrounding little villages. We went to Moulinette, but the various pastors made a house-to-house visiting campaign and warned their people away, and we only had a few for three nights and then we were left alone. The same tactics were carried into effect at Williamsburg, where last winter I held three meetings with good congregations each time.

At the last named place we had but few in the tent, but a fairly good crowd outside for three nights, then not a soul showed up. We began to tract the town on the morning of the fourth day, and when we came to where the tent was located we beheld the whole thing flat on the ground and seats. The two main guys were cut, as also all the ropes on one side and one end. We had a lot of very hard work at this place. We had to make three or four trips to find a place to put the tent. No one seemed to want to give us enough room for even a tent. Finally we secured a place, and then we required electric light connection, and the town people, or rather trustees, were not willing that we should have that. The main trustee objected, and after a conversation with the superintendent we were informed that we would have to take out a six months contract. That in itself would prohibit us from having light. We secured a connection with a residence, however, and proceeded with our meetings. We presume when they saw that we were not going to be shut out in that way, then they decided to cut us down.

It was in a scorching hot sun that we cleared up the wreckage, and got our things all packed to go away from that place, where the people gave such evidence that they did not want our message to them. The inconvenience, hardships, and humiliation were certainly ours; but the loss (and who can tell how far-reaching that was) was certainly theirs; and probably when it is too late those who now refuse the gospel of salvation, at that place, may be willing to recognize our ministrations under conditions which will not bring them as great possibilities as they once had opportunity to embrace.

While at Williamsburg a night vision was presented to me which had some very difficult features connected with it and which have caused me to ponder very seriously, and more especially as no interpretation has been given to give the light so much desired. I seemed to be standing in a very crowded street car, of the interurban type; and we were going up a very gentle incline. Presently the hill seemed to rise very rapidly, and on looking out it appeared awfully steep, and a sense of fear for my own safety, as well as for all on board, came over me; and yet there seemed to be an assurance that all would come out all right. I looked out to see how matters stood, and discovered that instead of being propelled by a trolley pole, as such cars are, we were being pulled up by a very strong cable, but it seemed to be all the cable could stand. Presently the ascent became perpendicular, or upright; and I looked out again and saw the cable almost at right angles with the car and that the car had risen about six or eight feet over the level of the ground, and there it stopped. I seemed to realize that an awful accident was about to take place, for I felt sure the cable would break. Presently the car began to drop back, and to see that cable strain was something amazing. Then I heard a voice say: "The North-Western Company will never allow that car to go back." (These are the words as I remember them.) Presently, I felt the power being applied once more, the wheels began to turn, and the car glided upward over the curve, and I awakened a much relieved man, I can assure you. Can anyone give the interpretation?

After having been so cruelly treated at Williamsburg, I wrote to Apostle R. C. Russell, telling him of our experience and treatment and asking directions as to what was best to do. He wrote me, informing me that as I was appointed to Quebec as well as Ontario, that I should try that field. Well, Quebec is Rome's real stronghold in America. There she is entrenched and proposes to stay. There is where there are more traditions and commandments of men among the people, and less understanding of the Bible than in any part of North America; but there I was ordered and there I went.

After putting "Ebenezer" away as safely as I could at Brother J. E. Phillion's home, I struck out "to spy out the land" as it were, and the first place I struck was Valley Field. There a few people reside, who have left the Roman Church, but are divided into different sects, and as the name of one had been given me, I was desirous of finding the party.

I was directed to a man (who had left Rome) who might be able to give me the needed information. I went to see him. I found a smoking and chewing character whose words were only bitterness and cursings against the church he once was a member of. I thought to myself, Here is work for me to do. I began gently to show him that such feelings should not exist in him; that he should show a better example; and incidentally I asked about the party I was seeking. He proved to be a brother of the same. Our acquaintance was pleasant and he invited me to have dinner, and then I walked two and a half miles to see the party I was seeking.

I found a very pleasant, and striking lady. One who can surely hold her own in a conversation. She told me in a few minutes the entire details of their efforts in coming out of Rome. I was informed where I could find the rest of their little society. Some of them had become disgusted with a religion that is as lifeless as the average evangelical church, and had gone into skepticism; others into Adventism, and as I am particularly suited to that class of people, I determined to interview them. I finally got the skeptic to read Stebbins's Lectures on the Book of Mormon, and he is now reading the book itself. He likes them very much and says that they appear reasonable. He said that we had been lied about to him and that he would find the truth.

I was directed to where the Adventist lived and had to walk about six miles to his home. The last three quarters lay along a canal overgrown with grass and wild clover, and as it had rained a short time before, I was soaked from the knees down when I arrived at the house. I found a real pleasant couple about sixty years old. They have a son and a daughter, both of whom are married. This makes three families. They have a nice farm of about one hundred acres, possessing all the evidences of care and thrift. I told this party my mission to him; that I was a missionary of the restored gospel. It was about half past four in the afternoon and he took me to the house and introduced me to his wife; a very pleasant woman. They speak the French only. The conversation turned to religion at once. We talked till supper was ready, and after we had eaten we continued our conversation till after one o'clock. He is certainly a well posted man, for one who never heard our work; and he fell in line with a great many things I had the pleasure of putting before him that were new to them. Next morning, as soon as breakfast was over, we went at it again and talked till dinner time. I had the opportunity of telling him about the apostasy, restoration in detail, and apostasy in these last days. He received all in a very friendly spirit and the only objection to our teachings was that we did not keep Saturday or Sabbath as commanded in the fourth commandment. I am going to see them again, as there are three families who would no doubt be affected, if any change were made in this one family.

It is now almost seven years since I have been assigned to this part of the world by the church. The field is a most difficult one. I have been home only a few times in all that time, the expense of travel being too great to go back and forth, and I am looking for a change in which I will be permitted to labor nearer home. So far I have not been able to use my gospel car to the advantage that it can be made use of. This has arisen partly from the lack of equipment, and largely from the hostility of the people. But that it can be made of great advantage I well know, and hope to fully demonstrate in the future.

I would like to be permitted to take it with me when I go, but I really do not know whether I will be able to "make the grade" or not. I am about only half way up the hill; and if the vision given me at Williamsburg has any reference to that "grade," the balance of it will require strenuous efforts to pull the car up and over the curve. I would not like to think that I would have to be compelled to return "Ebenezer" to its former owners, after expending as much as I have on it, but, if I am compelled I will only have to do so; I hope not, however.

If the reader will be one of "The North-Western Company" to assist me in pulling "Ebenezer" over the "grade," I shall remember him with a blue print copy of a very comprehensive dispensational chart, together with a key to explain the same, 40 by 10 inches in size.

I have made arrangements with the customs officials of the United States whereby I can take "Ebenezer" with me, without paying duty, the truck having been made in the United States.

I pray for the success of the work, which is bound to triumph in the end.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Reunion

We are pleased to report that the reunion of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Districts, held in Lemon Park, at Indian Lake, near Vicksburg, Michigan, and which closed after a ten-day session on last Sunday night, was a successful one. The attendance was greater than was anticipated, but would no doubt have been larger still were it not for the present financial depression which leaves so many of our brothers and sisters out of employment. The weather inconvenienced the campers to some extent, as it rained almost each alternate day. There was some sickness in camp also. Despite all this the meeting was seemingly greatly enjoyed by all who attended.

The preaching was done by Paul M. Hanson, of the Twelve; F. F. Wipper and Clyde F. Ellis, of the Seventy; T. U. Thomas, A. H. Mills, and the writer, of the high priests; and E. K. Evans, of the elders.

From one to two hours were spent daily in class and educational work, which held the interest of a great many day after day. The instructors were Sister Etta Ryder, on "How to teach effectively"; F. F. Wipper, "The church doctrine and polity"; and T. U. Thomas, "Doctrine and Covenants." Brother Mills gave talks and instruction almost daily on music. Sister Huss and Sister Earhart gave several splendid lectures on foods and child welfare.

Under great disadvantages and trying circumstances, Sister Louise Evans, district chorister, prepared and directed a rendition of the cantata, "Daniel," which was greatly enjoyed by all who were present to hear it. Thus, this district which has hitherto been somewhat delinquent in this department of church work, is beginning to step forward. May it continue.

At the business session it was voted to hold another reunion in 1922, place and time left to committee. There are some drawbacks to the present site and there is hope of finding a better location.

Brethren Hanson and Wipper left before the close of the meeting to attend the reunion at Elmhurst, Illinois.

All left the reunion grounds seemingly in good spirits, and with renewed courage. Notwithstanding the success of this reunion we see the possibility of improvements which we hope may be realized at the next reunion.

All were pleased to have with them, for a very short period though it was, Brother Clyde F. Ellis, who has labored extensively in the district in former years, and were made sad by the thought of his going back to the islands of the seas, although rejoicing that he is counted worthy to fill the important mission to which he is assigned. Our prayers go with him, as with all those called to labor in the Master's vineyard.

H. E. MOLER.

Southwestern Texas Reunion

The district reunion closed its interesting sessions August 14. The big tent witnessed a large attendance, many of whom were nonmembers and friends in the community. The principal speaker was Evangelist Ammon White who was well blessed in both missionary and pastoral discourses, stirring the hearts of the congregation. Discourses rendered by D. S. Palmer, T. J. Jett, jr., Alma Rannie, and W. H. Mannering were pronounced edifying.

A conference of the district and a Sunday school business meeting employed their share of the time advantageously. Patriarchal blessings added to the interest of those receiving them. The music was inspiring and well ordered by Chorister Mary Barber and Pianist Emma Jackson, strengthened by Mrs. Flossie Waite and other efficient helpers, all of whom are devoted members of the church.

Several church books were sold; eight persons were baptized, and others have advised the local ministry to provide for their baptism next Sunday. All the Saints are encouraged, the young folks in particular, from whom we have reason to expect valuable service in the future.

In the faith,

W. H. MANNERING.

ALVA, OKLAHOMA, August 22, 1921.

Editors Herald: Seven years ago I begun my labors in this place and have begun to see the fruits of it appearing. Out in the rural districts, at which point I am at present laboring, we had at that time a couple or three families of Saints. The spirit of prejudice and intolerance was at that time very apparent. I began, however, to do constructive work, since I have long since learned that our work must be constructive and not destructive. I gradually got the ears of the people and thus began to gain their confidence. Among other things that helped to get the good will of the people was the auctioning of the boxes at a candy social held in the schoolhouse and directed by the teacher. When the young people learned that I could auction off candy boxes they could venture to come to church and hear me preach.

As I have already stated, my work was constructive. I did not discuss the failures of other churches, nor trouble the people with an exposition of the incorrectness of their doctrines. To the contrary, I showed them what the gospel of Christ really is—how it will change the hearts and minds, and hence the lives of men. I was careful in trying to distinguish between true and false religion, but I did not become personal in my statements. The interest increased and the spirit of good will became more apparent. The local pastor of the Baptist Church, who at that time was in charge of their work, came to think quite well of me, and after I had preached here the second time he told the people, "You have been hearing the gospel preached. I know the gospel when I hear it and that man has been preaching the gospel to you; the thing you should do now is to begin to live it." This to me was much better than having his ill will, although he meant to say that the people should come into his church and live a consistent life.

This brother became very friendly, and when I was present on his preaching day he would ask me to preach for him. The amusing thing was some three and a half years after I began my work here, I began to baptize. I baptized two young ladies first, and the next Sunday after this first baptizing I had an appointment at another schoolhouse, because our Baptist brother's appointment came on that Sunday. I, of course, was not there to hear him, and he now thought it an opportune time to warn the people, so he took the liberty to give us a good combing. He tried to cause the people to see that if there was any difference we were a little more dangerous than the Mormons. He spread himself considerably and thus got the ill will of the people and even of his own members. I made no reply to his attack upon us. To do so would have tacitly admitted there was some truth in the charge. I simply preached from the text: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" The people saw the point and the next Sunday I baptized six, and the following two more. While the spirit of good will was gradually increasing and the people coming to think more favorably of our work, the good pastor who had tried to oppose that which I was doing lost out entirely and was obliged to leave the place.

This early spring Brother J. D. Shower held a meeting and baptized sixteen more. Our work is onward in this part and the Lord is working with his people here. Most of our membership here are young in years and we hope to see them advance and grow valiant in the work of the church. We have some very promising young men here. What is more, the opposition that once existed is broken down and the people at large think quite favorably of the work. Next Sunday I am to baptize again at this place.

On yesterday Brother Moreland, the president of Freedom Branch, where the Saints here hold membership, was with us. At the sacramental service in the afternoon, the Spirit was present in power, calling a young brother to the priesthood who was, by the voice of the branch, recommended for ordination to the office of priest. He was thus ordained and a group organization was effected here with Brother Robert Hada as its officer.

I see a bright future for the church here if they will remain faithful and humble in spirit. I trust also that they will always retain the spirit of unity and brotherly love that now characterizes them. There are others here who will occupy in the priesthood in the near future if they will remain faithful and studious.

The work here has built slowly, but it is evidently on a solid basis. May God speed his work.

Respectfully, J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THE LABOR UNION

must not be looked after by an ordinary watchman, but must be tended by a member of the Plaster Tenders Union; also all dirt or debris made by the plasterer must be cleaned up by a union tender, not an ordinary laborer.

The Hoisting Engineers' Union requires that men who report for duty will receive two hours pay, if not put to work, unless they have been notified at the end of the previous shift. That is, if it is stormy and no work can be done, the engineers must be paid two dollars each. (But men often lose much time waiting on doubtful days and are put to expense to be on the job.) If any work is done on or with the engine, during the absence of an engineer, he must be paid just as if he were there. A hoisting engineer can be used only at his own machine. He cannot be shifted even temporarily to another.

In one case an engineer was requested by his employer to work on Saturday afternoon and Sunday in order to make some needed repairs on his engine, so that the work would not be tied up on the following Monday. The engineer refused, because of another engagement. Thereupon the employer hid some machinest from a near-by shop, who made the desired repairs. The engineer subsequently made a claim for and received pay at double-time rates for the period during which the machinist worked (i. e. $2 per hour).

Some steel reinforcement was placed by union iron workers on a Saturday. On the following Sunday a gang of laborers was used to place concrete around the rods. The steel was found not to be in its correct position, and so was taken out and replaced by the laborers. The iron workers subsequently demanded and received pay for the work, as if they were present.

A hoisting engineer can be used to operate only a particular machine. Even though his engine be temporarily idle he cannot be shifted to another, but a second man must be employed for this purpose. On one job some repairs were to be made upon a large grab bucket. Machinists were brought out on a Sunday to do the work. An occasional lift by means of a derrick was required, for a few minutes at a time. An engineer who was on duty, looking after the pump, was competent to do the necessary work, but he could not be used, because the rules required that the regular engineer on the derrick was the only man who could touch the machine at any time. As a result, the regular man was used and paid at double time rates about six or eight lifts, while the other engineer was an interested spectator. Incidentally it costs an engineer $5 fine if he is caught breaking this rule.

A certain wood carver paid his men the union rate and in addition gave them a bonus for all work over a definite amount. The union agent, upon discovering this fact, ordered the practice stopped on the ground that it served as too much of a spur to the men.

This slowness of production has been a factor probably all of our readers have noticed, especially if it is a job around our own home. It is quite a general rule to charge from time of leaving office to return.

It is a rule that tools must be fetched during working hours. It is trying at times to see a ten-minute plumbing job extended to four or five hours, though it is by no means an uncommon experience. We have heard of the case of an electrician who would so arrange his work as to return to the office after it was closed and would then charge time and a half for all night. Especially if he went out of town, in addition to his railroad fare for his trip on the train. Though the work only took two or three hours he would usually get back after hours and so charge overtime for all night. In other words, he would charge for twenty-five hours for a three-hour job—and sometimes as high as thirty hours.

It is quite possible that the original rules were more to correct some wrong condition, but they certainly have been many times misapplied.

Ames Students Please Note

It might be of interest to a number of the prospective students of the Iowa College to know that at the Iowa State College at Ames there is a small but live group of church students who are holding services regularly. We are holding two meetings on Sunday and frequently have social gatherings on week days.

For the coming term we are trying to help locate any new student and provide for his spiritual welfare as best we can. If those who are to attend will correspond with us, or meet with the class at 9.30 Sunday morning, we shall then be able to get in touch with them.

Sincerely yours,

D. M. HALL.

AMES, IOWA, 400 Ash Avenue.

R. J. Wildey, who has handled the Lamoni Steam Laundry for several years as a stewardship, has resigned and will take a position in a large laundry in Hutchinson, Kansas, with the view of later taking over the general management. O. O. Thomas will succeed him in charge of the Lamoni Steam Laundry.

Subjects Being Discussed

Church News

As the reunion season draws to a close, members of the joint council are returning to Independence.

President Elbert A. Smith returned the 25th after attending the Southern California and Eastern Colorado reunions.

Bishop James F. Keir was expected Monday morning, the 29th, returning from the reunion of the Little Sioux, Iowa, District, and also from Lamoni, Iowa, where he was called from reunion on account of damage to the ice plant.

Bishop A. Carmichael, of Lamoni, was also in attendance at the Little Sioux district reunion.

Bishop I. A. Smith is expected in Independence within the week. He has been in attendance at Nauvoo reunion.

Bishop B. R. McGuire left Kirtland about the 24th to attend the reunion of the Northeastern Illinois District, from which he expects to go to Southern Wisconsin and then to Central Illinois reunion, returning home about September 6.

President F. M. Smith is expected back about the middle of September.

John W. Rushton and M. A. McConley, in attendance at the Pertle Springs reunion, were expected in Independence Monday. Elder Rushton has attended reunions at Erie Beach, Low Banks, and Kirtland.

U. W. Greene attended Nauvoo reunion.

J. F. Curtis was expected home Monday.

Paul M. Hanson is expected home this week. He has been in attendance at the Eastern reunions the last two months.

Many took advantage of the Pertle Springs reunion and took their vacation at that time from the general offices. A goodly number from Independence were at Pertle Springs the latter part of the week and over Sunday. All reports are of an unusually good reunion and great spiritual power.

A Cooperative Society

The Cooperative Herald, issued by the Manchester and Salford Cooperative Society, shows that this one organization did business of over one and a half million dollars in the second quarter of this year. They sell all kinds of goods, including wearing apparel, drugs, and coal, but the larger number of retail stores are groceries and meat markets.

Its activity is not, however, confined to the sale of goods, as it has an educational department and also does a banking business, operates cooperative halls, subscribes to various hospitals to which the members may be sent in case of illness, and provides free insurance for purchasing members and spouse. The amount of this insurance depends upon the amount of purchases. These are added features, in addition to the usual dividends.

Immigration Restrictions

Comparisons are sometimes odious but it is an advantage sometimes to see ourselves as others see us.

A recent number of the Outlook is devoted largely to the question of immigration, and severe adverse comment is made on the present system in the United States limiting immigration to three per cent of those of the same nationality already in this country. That tends to limit greatly immigration from France, while it permits more than twelve times as many to come from Germany, or southwestern Europe.

Another objectionable feature is that the question of admissibility is not determined until arrival in America necessitating the extra expense of a return trip. Recently two ships were racing into New York port because the one which would arrive first would discharge its passengers; the other would have to take them back to Europe.

Canada on the other hand has established facilities abroad, where the question of admissibility is determined before the immigrant leaves. The restrictions in Canada are severe, but are determined by quality rather than quantity, and immediate consideration is given to the type of immigrant, and the workmen needed and where they will settle upon arrival. This appears to be a far more logical arrangement.

Elder E. D. Moore, assistant editor of the HERALD, has purchased a bicycle to facilitate travel between his home and the office, partly on account of the recent illness of his wife. On the morning of the 24th he was very badly bruised through collision with an auto, while riding down Maple Avenue. The auto driven by a young boy ran over both Elder Moore and his bicycle with both wheels before it was stopped. Though badly bruised, he is able to return to the office after only a couple of days enforced absence.

Elder C. B. Woodstock, who is also superintendent of the Pisgah consolidated schools, is again manager of the Pisgah County Fair, held August 12 to 14. This community fair is held primarily to exhibit the work of the boys and girls in various lines of work during the summer months under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture and Iowa State College and county farm bureau and the school board.

The Lamoni Ice Plant, run in connection with the Lamoni Electric Light Plant, exploded Saturday evening, August 20. Fortunately no one was injured, so far as we are advised. The damage to the machinery will put the ice plant out of commission for the rest of the season. The storage room we believe was not injured, so ice will be shipped in carload lots from near by.

As another of the signs of the time, the Church Times, of London, England, July 22, 1921, advertises a book, Angels Seen To-day. The book is by an English country clergyman and his wife, who declare that they have seen angels and talked with them.

Lamoni Stake Reunion

Favorable reports continue to come in of the excellent reunion held at Lamoni, Iowa, August 3 to 14. Plans were made to enlarge the grounds, by purchasing approximately seventeen acres on the west of the present grounds. It may be in the future that a good swimming pool and athletic field will be included, but Lamoni does not possess the scenic advantages of some other grounds, nor can it be placed in the first rank as the most beautiful reunion ground we have, either naturally or as the result of artificial improvement. Yet it has many excellent features and is well arranged and kept up.

But from a material standpoint, where it excels is in organization. The grounds are put in excellent condition before the opening of the reunion, the location of tents is definitely assigned. Everyone is expected to be on the ground before the opening prayer and sacrament service at 9 a. m. on the first day. So far has the organization been carried that the question of police and maintaining order has progressed to the point that for several years there have been no police at all, no watchman, and no disorder of any kind.

The provisions for recreation this year are stated to be better than ever before, yet there are not natural water facilities immediately at hand. Much progress has been made at the Lamoni reunion in this particular, in adequate provision to entertain all, from the young children to the oldest adult, which of course includes special provision for the young people.

But that for which the reunion is held is spiritual recre-

Conference Notices

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Coldwater, Michigan, Saints' Chapel, October 14 to 16. This will be a coordinate conference of the church and all the departments thereof in this district. The first meeting will be held on Friday, at 10 a. m. All branch presidents and secretaries are requested to see that the usual statistical report is prepared and sent in to the district secretary, C. E. Buckley, 726 West Main Street, Battle Creek, Michigan. Also each branch president is requested to prepare a report of the ministerial labor ation. We are pleased to note from reports from various reunions the progress reported in this respect. Lamoni had only one outside speaker this year and that despite the fact that she has lost through death such men as Heman C. Smith and J. W. Wight in the past few years and that she has lost by removal Elbert A. Smith, F. A. Smith, and many others. But the local men, the stake presidency, and stake bishopric, with a few of the members of the stake high council, such as F. M. McDowell, moved forward and occupied, with the result that the preaching was of an unusually high order. It is not necessary to import a large number of visiting ministers to have a good reunion.

The Spirit of God was there in power from beginning to end, seemingly in increasing measure, and we are glad to learn that experience was enjoyed at many other reunions throughout the country.

performed by all the priesthood in his branch covering the period intervening since our last conference, and send in to the secretary prior to the convening of conference. H. E. Moler.

Western Michigan, at South Boardman, September 2 to 4. Meals will be 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children under 10 years. Missionaries and families cared for gratis. H. A. Doty, district president, 116 Monroe Street; Sadie Irish, clerk, 317½ West Ninth Street, Traverse City, Michigan.

London, at London, Ontario, coordinating conference, October 1 and 2. Friday evening, September 30, there will be a musical entertainment. Dinner will be served, Saturday and Sunday, in the basement of the church; breakfast at the homes where entertained. William M. Grice, district president. Lucy Yerks, district secretary.

Our Departed Ones

HERRON.—Baby Beverley Mae, daughter of Daniel Frederic and Bertha Mae Herron, born September 20, 1920, at San Francisco, California; died August 2, 1921, at Casper, Wyoming. The body was brought to Independence, Missouri, August 4. Funeral services were conducted at the Stone Church August 6, by J. A. Tanner, F. E. Farr speaking. Interment at Mound Grove Cemetery.

DODSON.—Emily Elizabeth, wife of Stephen Dodson, of Humber Bay, Ontario, was born in England, June 30, 1870. Came to Canada nearly nine years ago. Baptized September 24, 1920. Died August 10, 1921, at Victoria Memorial Hospital, in Toronto, after a serious operation. She leaves a husband and three children to mourn. She was loved by all. Funeral at Saints' church in Humber Bay, Ontario; sermon by A. C. Martin. Interment at Park Lawn Cemetery.

HUDSON.—Sarah Ann Fox was born at Pomfrit, Chautauqua County, New York, October 4, 1845; died at her home in Lancaster, Wisconsin, August 8, 1921. She married Henry Hudson December 30, 1869, at Beetown, Wisconsin; and to them five daughters were born: Mrs. N. H. Suttle, Mrs. Homer Irish, Lancaster, Wisconsin; Mrs. Nellie Frost, Denver, Colorado. These with eight grandchildren and six great-grandchildren mourn her departure. Baptized July 2, 1905. Funeral service at home August 10, and at the Dodge Methodist Episcopal Church, near her old home, where she rests beside her husband. Both sermons by Elder B. C. Flint.

SNIVELY.—Joseph Smith Snively, son of Hugh and Eleanor Snively, was born February 21, 1840, in Pike County, Illinois. Died at Lamoni, Iowa, August 11, 1921. Baptized at the age of twenty-seven, a year later was ordained an elder, and later a high priest. Engaged in missionary work 30 years. Married Ann Martha Traxler, in Canada, November 22, 1871. To this union 7 children were born. In 1862 he joined the Indiana Infantry, engaged in 36 battles, and received his discharge after three years of service. Moved his family from Canada to Harrison County, Missouri, in 1878. Moved from there to Lamoni in 1918. Leaves to mourn; wife, 3 daughters, 1 son, 4 brothers, 6 granddaughters, 1 great-grandson, and many relatives and friends. Funeral services from the home, in charge of D. C. White; sermon by Frederick A. Smith.

ENTREKIN.—Mary A. Walker was born July 19, 1842, at Daphne, Alabama. Married George W. Entekin, August 15, 1878. To this union 11 children were born, 4 preceding her in death. Those who live are all Latter Day Saints. Baptized early in her married life. Stricken with paralysis about two weeks ago. Died August 15. Missionaries who labor in Alabama remember the welcome of her home. Leaves to mourn: 7 children, 21 grandchildren, and many other relatives. Funeral from the home near Biloxi. Sermon by A. G. Miller. Interment in Biloxi Cemetery.

The Field Is Ripe Unto the Harvest

The Church needs educated men and women in EVERY FIELD of endeavor, industry, science, arts, education, and the ministry.

To redeem Zion the young people of the Church must prepare along the lines in which they are interested.

Only two per cent of the young people of the World finish high school.

The young of the church must excel this percentage, for we have greater problems to solve than ever before.

Leadership Through Education

The young people must consecrate their lives, but how much greater a consecration it is when the lives consecrated are prepared for LEADERSHIP AND SERVICE THROUGH EDUCATION.

YOUR Church has provided a College for YOU, which is fully accredited and officially standardized.

Many NEW COURSES are being offered beginning this year, so that you may prepare to help solve the social, economic, educational, and religious problems of the Church.

For a full description of courses in Commerce, Law, Liberal Arts, Engineering, Medicine, Dentistry, Business Secretarial Work, Teachers' Training, Public Speaking, Music, Religious Education, and Academy, address

The Problem of Evil

In a recent letter the following question is asked:

"In studying the Sunday school lesson for to-day, September 12, 1920, and in the Bible reading, my attention was attracted to a passage following the lesson reading found in Isaiah 45: 1-6, and the seventh verse reads thus: 'I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil; I the Lord do all these things.'

"I would like you, if it is not asking too much, to give your explanation of this passage in the columns or through the HERALD. Does the Lord, or did the Lord create evil; and in what way, if so?"

To answer this question the whole of the forty-fifth chapter of Isaiah should be read, and it would be better if the forty-fourth chapter were also read. To gain something of the contents we quote from the first to the ninth verse:

"Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut; I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron; and I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the Lord, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel. For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me. . . . That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things. Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together; I the Lord have created it. Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the earth. Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?"

There is only one other place in the Bible where similar language is used in the King James Version, namely in Amos 3: 6, but in the Inspired Version this verse reads:

"Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord not know it?"

This quotation, no doubt, presents much more closely the real meaning of this text: "Shall there be evil and the Lord not know it?" That God creates evil would be contrary to other passages of Holy Scripture.

It is also well to remember that this passage in Isaiah was addressed to Cyrus, the Persian king in Babylonia. For according to the religion of Zoroaster, as set forth in the Zend-Avesta, which was the religious book of Persia, there are two gods of supposedly nearly equal power, Ormazd and Ahriman, the one the power of good, the other the power of evil. The mystery of evil was then explained by this equality of power.

As we examine carefully into other oriental religions we find similar concepts. Such was the case in India. They worshiped a power of destruction and evil, as well as a power of good, and the evil power was equal or greater than the good. Such was the case in Babylonia. This passage directly challenges that assumption. There is one God, supreme over all; not a god for each city or state. There is one supreme God who permits good and evil.

The question is sometimes asked: Why does not God destroy the Devil? Or, Why did he make the Devil? Lucifer, the son of the morning, dwelt in the presence of God. It was not our heavenly Father who made him a devil; he was the Prince of Light and became the Devil, or Satan, and was cast out of heaven. (Psalms, Jude, and Revelation.) During the millennial reign he will be bound for a little season. After the millennial reign his power is again limited and it is evidently within the power of God, according to Holy Writ, to limit his power at any time, but he permits him to continue. Why?

Much has been written concerning the problem of evil, but not to prolong the discussion we will consider only the affirmative reasons founded on the Holy Scriptures, the word of God to us.

In the first place, apparently before the creation of the world, Lucifer offered to save mankind:

"And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning; and he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever. Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him; and also that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down, and he became Satan. Yea, even the devil, the father of all lies, to deceive and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice."—Genesis 3: 1-5, Inspired Version.

We see from this that Satan would have carried out the plan of compulsion so many have favored, and offered to save all of humanity; not one soul should be lost. He would have made it easy to decide all questions of right and wrong for mankind. This plan has been attempted many times in ages of the world and has resulted in priestcraft.

It is always the place of the true priest of God to help man back to God, not to stand between man and God, but priestcraft does stand between man and his Lord. Priestcraft offers to do it all, the thing that no man can do for another. Even our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, who took upon him the responsibility in the beginning, only sets us an example that we may follow in his steps. He does not compel us to leave evil and do good. The sin of Adam is done away with in Christ, but it does not relieve us from our responsibility to become the sons of God. Because Satan would have taken away this responsibility and would have taken away the free agency of man, he was cast out of heaven, and became the Devil.

It is not enough in the providence of God that we are being placed within a locality called heaven. It is His plan that we should take upon us the divine likeness of sons and daughters of God.

Christ received not the fullness at first, but line upon line and precept upon precept. He learned obedience by the things that he suffered, and so he was called the Son. We are told that God permits the bitter that we may be able to appreciate and understand the sweet. But the reason is somewhat deeper than that, for the art of sin is not a necessity to understand it, for Jesus was without sin, though he was tempted and tried like us in all things.

Sin is not necessary for suffering, for he suffered beyond any other who has taken upon him the likeness of humanity (Doctrine and Covenants 28). He sweat great drops of blood in his agony (Matthew, Mark, Luke, John). He suffered because of his realization of the sins of the world. That realization was great enough to cause even God to weep, as shown in the vision of Enoch (Genesis 7: 35 seq.). To some it may seem a strange idea that God would weep for the suffering of the world, having power to end evil, to end that suffering, and yet not exercising that power.

The reason is again that heaven is not simply being set down in a place. If we are not ready for the celestial glory, if we are not ready for the presence of God, we would rather call upon the rocks to fall upon us.

It requires development, intelligence, for the glory of God is intelligence that requires development even though it be through suffering for us to become in truth the sons of God, learning to do and to choose wisely. We cannot believe that God ever causes or permits needless suffering to any of his children, not even to those whom we would call vile. But we must learn that nothing can separate us from the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ, not even death or scourging.

If the Son of God himself came to earth, as we are told, entering upon the life of mankind so that we might have a captain who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, how much more do we need the suffering of mortal life, a time of probation to prove us, of what material we are, and that we may become perfect through suffering and so learn to help others.

Only the pure gold is left by the fire. Again and again is that figure of purging used. Only those who love the truth enough to stand the rebuffs of the world are fit or prepared for the presence of God. Only those who have come up through much tribulation and have made their robes white are prepared for the conditions of the celestial glory. That is not a matter merely of speculation, but a necessity for spiritual, intellectual, and moral development.

The idea of hell troubles many, because they see in it a place of punishment and of vengeance. We cannot personally view God as such a being of wrath, though the word wrath is sometimes used in Holy Writ as representing the human concept. God so loved the world that he gave his Son; that Son so loved the world that he ministered even to those who were in the prison house.

We recall once meeting a man who had been in the penitentiary, and there for the first time learned to read part of the word of God; and he came out declaring it to be the greatest book he had ever seen. He urged some of his friends that they should have gone to the penitentiary and have nothing else to read, then they would have been of the same opinion as he.

There are many people who sing, "Take time to be holy," but do not take the time. There are some people who have thought they have not even time to sing. In eternity, in the prison house, time is given them. Their suffering, which is like unto a lake of fire and brimstone, will be because they see themselves as they are and realize what they might have been. It is the recollection of all their guilty remorse for a life misspent. Yet the mercy of God reaches far. Particularly is this set forth in modern revelation, as will be seen from a careful reading of the 76th section of Doctrine and Covenants. "Truly if I descend into hell, Thou art there. If I ascend into heaven, Thou art there." (Psalms 139: 8.)

God permits evil because of his love of humanity and the great good that he has in view for man to achieve. If all that was necessary was to put people in a place, that could be readily done. But his purpose is to develop humanity into his divine likeness, knowing good and evil, yet able and ready to choose the good, ready to suffer all things for the sake of the truth and those things which are good. In other words, he would make us sons and daughters of God. To that end he permits evil to prove us, not only as a test, but also to develop us and prepare us for better things.

Truly his love is from everlasting to everlasting and his power without beginning or end. S. A. BURGESS.

The Blessing of Children

An ordinance with divine precedent and possessing much spiritual value.

When the church we represent was organized in 1830 it had among its distinctive doctrines that of the blessing of children by officers of the Melchisedec priesthood, after the pattern given by Jesus Christ himself.

When we read of how he blessed little children by the laying on of hands, we wonder that so simple an example has not been followed by all professed Christians. Possibly the inability to decide on by whom it should be done and the effect on the recipient's membership, has been so largely at issue that it has prevented its acceptance; along with some of the other ordinances that have been adopted and cherished, such as healing.

Not long ago in a Disciple convention at Great Falls, Montana, a simple thing happened that created quite a whirlwind. The near relatives of three children desired that the children be presented to the Lord in a public way and have the prayers of the convention. It was done by three of the leaders of the assembly.

Whereupon the occasion was seized upon by the press of the church as a divisive issue raised that could only result in trouble. The Christian Standard commented, in part:

"The 'leaders' in the Great Falls convention, who staged the infant dedication service, may have meant well; but they, by identifying this fad with a missionary convention, increased a little the cleavage between the State missionary societies and many churches and brethren."

But it was evidently with a sigh of relief that a denial was published not long after, explaining that it was not a dedication service, and that at the time one of the men participating had explained this and ruled that the children affected should not even be brought forward.

So it seems that the ordinance of blessing children by the laying on of hands will not soon be accepted by this church, whose slogan is, "When the Bible speaks, we speak; when the Bible is silent, we are silent." It is difficult to imagine how much more plainly the Bible could speak than it does on this topic. (Matthew 19: 13-15; Mark 10: 13-16; Luke 18: 15-17.)

But we are not disposed unduly to criticize those who do not accept the light of modern revelation concerning not only the mechanics of these and other ordinances, but the part they have in the gospel plan. We are more concerned that we ourselves appreciate more fully the value of these things to us as individuals and a church.

Long before the word psychology was invented, it was psychological to bring a little child before the church to have it dedicated to the Lord and to have his continual blessing invoked on its head. The child is received by the church, but not into the church as a member. That is, the blessing of a child does not confer upon it the privilege of membership, but in the words of the late Joseph Smith, it is "intended to bring the children of believing parents into a relationship with the Spirit of the Master, in the way adopted by the Master himself, and to secure for them so far as can be done for them by the spirit of sacrifice and devotion, the care, nurture, protection, and guidance of the spirit of the family of God on the earth, and so far as the Saints are concerned it is commanded in the law and should be observed, without dubiety and without ceremony." (SAINTS' HERALD, volume 42, page 274.)

It cannot but have a wholesome and soul-stirring effect on the hearts of parents thus voluntarily to dedicate their child to a life of godliness and commend it to divine care, supplementing this by their own best efforts towards its proper rearing. (Doctrine and Covenants 17:19.)

If there were no other effect than this, it would be worth while, but those who have faith in God's promises are convinced that the same beneficent Being who notes the fall of the sparrow also takes greater cognizance of the personal doings of this young soul and sets into operation protective, sustaining influences that have to do with the most plastic period of its life.

As the child comes to the age of eight, when it can comprehend the principles of the plan of salvation and is ready to be baptized of its own volition, the thought of God's special care having been invoked upon it can but have both an impelling and restraining influence upon its life. Impelling to do constructive good and restraining from indulgence in sin.

We are grateful for this provision in the law of God and could only wish it might be so greatly appreciated that those who have occasion to do so would let the spirit of dedication extend back into the eugenics side of the question and directly affect, to say the least, the prenatal influences that have so much to do with the child's life. E. D. MOORE.

Going to School

The value of preparation pays many times for apparent loss of present gain. The joy of knowledge exceeds all the other pleasures of the world.

The great question that confronts young people every year is, Shall I go to school? School is likely to seem a waste of time, as an old college song expresses it, "We long to get out and forget it all and begin life's holidays," but the next line gives the answer for those who have finished or quit school, "But now we'd like to live again in those good old college days."

Young boys and girls want to go to work. They see others earning money and it irks still to be a schoolboy or school-girl. It is hard to see the good of it all, and especially when so many who have been through school and college will tell us there is so much they had to learn that they did not use and have forgotten.

It is difficult, not only for boys and girls, but for those of older years, to learn the value of deferring present pleasure for lasting happiness, or putting away a small present advantage for a much greater one secured by the hard work of due preparation. There is a drudgery about some school work. An effort to-day is made to lessen that factor. But in the end, to the true student it brings a lasting pleasure that cannot be equaled by anything else the world has to offer.

The value of an education from a financial point of view has been discussed at considerable length in recent advertisements of Graceland College, as well as in the editorial columns. It has been shown time and again that the average college man earns considerably more before he is forty-five than does the high school graduate, and still more than the common school graduate. It has been estimated that each day of schooling is worth nine dollars or more in total income for life.

In this issue a suggestion which has been made many times is repeated, that if our aim is successful work, the opportunities for success are greatly increased by adequate preparation, as is shown by an analysis of names in Who's Who in America? and a reclassification according to previous schooling. It is not on the basis of education, for education is the development of the natural capacity and talents, however gained. It is a test of schooling.

It is true, there are some wants which are so immediate that they must be met if life is to be continued. In the present economic condition there are many who will be prevented from attendance by financial difficulties; but all who can should plan additional study by way of preparation for better service the present year. The very fact that times are comparatively slack gives more time that we should be able to give to preparation for the future.

From the financial point of view, only one answer is possible to those who are able to make further preparation. From a standpoint of happiness, to those who know, there is again but one real answer. The joy of wisdom and of knowledge is so incomparably greater than are the pleasures of the world.

With those pleasures that appeal only to our physical being one soon becomes sated or blase. They cannot satisfy for man is more than animal. But the joy of right knowledge is an ever flowing fountain. It is more, for if we pursue that course of wisdom it means increasing joy, such as can only be represented by the law of growth and that on a permanent basis.

That which is true of intellectual knowledge is pre-eminently true of the peace of the spirit and of the joy gained in knowledge of spiritual things and through spiritual experiences.

Men with clear sight have sacrificed everything possible for this schooling and have never regretted it. The curriculum of school work is being continually improved. But our gain is not simply one of the amount of knowledge of definite facts, but rather of growth and understanding, so that we know where to go and how to find what we want, and judgment developing through mental ability to be able to weigh rightly those facts, when learned.

Spencer defines life as response of environment. The more fully our faculties are developed, the more fully our intelligence is cultivated, the more fully we are able to respond with pleasure to our environment. That is one thing that is meant by culture.

The true scholar is never proud. It is those who have only a smattering, a superficial veneer of learning, who bother us with their supercilious attitude. But that should not deter us from making all of the preparation possible for more complete living in every sense of the term.

To those who are able and competent there is only one possible answer to the question, Shall I undertake school work this fall? For the work of the church its significance is exceedingly great, for the church needs trained thinkers and workers for her service, and experience shows that the Spirit of God can teach us more when we try ourselves to learn all we can, providing we remain sufficiently humble.

A British Comment on American Labor

We are accustomed to reading in American papers that it is the best citizens of Europe, the pioneers, who have come to America. But the Daily Telegraph, of London, England, states that "America has kept the door open and has received many immigrants from every state in the Old World. In the main these immigrants have not been the successful people of Europe, but to-day the United States is undoubtedly the most successful of all the nations."

When we think of it we can see that the first part of that sentence is true. Those who are successful, who are possessed of ample means, do not in the main leave home. Of course, there are exceptions. Other causes arose for immigration, such as faith, friends, or adverse family conditions, but in the main it is not the most successful who are the most ready to move. Yet on the other hand it is also true that it takes considerable stamina and took still more seventy-five years ago to face the expense and tribulation of the ocean voyage.

The reason given for present success in the United States is at least interesting, even though Mr. Ernest Benn, who is quoted by the Daily Telegraph, drew his conclusion from a visit of only five weeks. He says concerning prosperity in United States:

"In a sentence, it may probably be said that the secret of the prosperity of the United States lies in the fact that it is a country of workers without 'bees in their bonnets,' who have the will to work, and work hard. 'Could they imagine a land of 110,000,000 civilized persons, without a political labor party—a land in which the workers had never heard the words "ca" "canny," and regarded restriction of output as a mythical madness?' We have a myriad of labor leaders, at sixes and sevens with each other; the United States has one, a veteran giant, who has not committed the error of believing that men can live on the dead fruits of senseless strikes, which have done so much to impoverish the workers of this country. Mr. Sam Gompers does not measure his success by the number or violence of his speeches, but claims that the effective evidence of the success of the labor movement in the United States is to be discovered in the homes of the people. In the ideal state every worker would be a capitalist, and every capitalist a worker, and in America they are approaching that ideal, with results which are in striking contrast to those which we have seen produced by revolution and bloodshed by the communists of Soviet Russia, and which our extremists would produce here. We can well believe Mr. Benn when he tells us that Mr. Gompers points with pride to the six million working-class homes which are either completely or partially owned by their workmen occupants; to the 12,000,000 automobiles among 110,000,000 people; and to the 15,000,000 owners of shares or other forms of property who lead well-ordered and self-respecting lives in the United States."

Like most generalizations, the above is only partly true. We are sure that the employers of this country will be glad to learn that the laborer favors every new machine and is anxious only to produce more. It is true, however, despite the high wages paid in United States, labor cost is relatively low, because each man produces more. And it is undoubtedly true that the amount which can be paid labor will be limited always by the amount produced.

The conditions in United States are certainly far from ideal, though it is probably true that the great bulk of the laboring men are anxious to retain their jobs and do a day's work therefor; to secure their own home and to invest in the stock of their company when given the opportunity. It is only a small portion who are extremely radical.

Subjects Being Discussed

Church News

Brother E. D. Moore, assistant editor of the HERALD and editor of Autumn Leaves, appears to be making a good recovery from his accident. He is still lame, but the X-ray disclosed no broken bones. He was in the office a couple of days the past week to look after necessary work on the HERALD and to write the Postscript for the September Autumn Leaves. But a severe rash appeared on the 29th which caused him a great deal of suffering and also for twenty-eight hours severe pain in the sciatic nerves, but by midnight of the 31st, these had all subsided. The result has been to greatly weaken him, but he is making steady recovery and expects soon to be able to be out.

William Patterson and John Blackmore, from Australia, are in Independence to get acquainted with conditions in Zion before proceeding to Lamoni, where they will take the course in Religious Education at Graceland College this winter. Several young people have now arrived from Great Britain, from Germany, and the Holy Land, as well as from Australia, to take work in Graceland this coming scholastic year.

Mrs. Mary Poscoe, the mother of Sister Gomer R. Wells, recently arrived in San Francisco from Australia. She expects now to make her home with her son-in-law. The sea voyage of twenty-four days proved a very trying one for her and she suffered a stroke of paralysis from which she has partly recovered, but she is not able to either walk or talk very much as yet. Elder G. R. Wells met her upon her arrival in Kansas City and took her at once to his home in Lamoni.

Disarmament Conference

Naturally everyone is glad to know the arrangements being made for a Disarmament Conference at Washington in November, and many are hoping that the result will be some form of a definite association or league. It must be remembered that there have been no requirements made for a strict agreement with the letter of the present league of nations; but there is a great need for such an association or league, and with reasonable modifications it should be substantially in the shape in which it has been made.

Men entirely disfavorable to the present league still recognize the great danger to America in standing aloof. By entering some such an association we shall at least be trying to secure better conditions. America was late getting into the war and is late in getting out. The question is one that should not be approached from the standpoint of partisanship, but rather from that of statesmanship with a recognition of home and world needs.

In 1914 the record showed and still shows that England was making every possible effort to prevent war. To-day she is in a similar position. America could well join her and other nations in an effort to maintain the peace of the world and to secure provisions preventing future wars.

The efforts towards disarmament and the settlement of some vital questions should receive the heartiest support of

The Responsibility of the Adult to the Adolescent

Lecture by Floyd M. McDowell before the Women's Department Institute, May 20, 1921, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

I take it that those who are here to-night, when it is so warm as to be uncomfortable, and after a very busy week, are those most anxious to hear something that will help them in this most important problem. So, while the audience may not be large, it is perhaps composed of those who are most interested in this topic. I suppose you have heard this week from a good many different speakers who have their hobbies. I suppose I have a hobby, too, and if I have, it is the young people of this church.

I do not believe that any organization is stronger than the extent to which it holds its young people. I do not believe that any race or civilization exists which can dare continually to neglect its young. I do not believe there is anything that is more important than that which has to do with the care of the coming generation. Any civilization could well neglect any other subject and get along, but I cannot possibly see how in the long run it could neglect its young and still continue to be a strong civilization. After all, the only excuse that a country or civilization has for existence is the care which it is enabled to render to its young. So the subject given me is one particularly dear to my heart. I shall try to remember how uncomfortable you are and not weary you long, but there are a number here from various branches and districts of the church with whom I have not had a chance to come in contact, so I shall try in the few minutes that I have to leave some of my heresy with them.

Importance of Adolescence

Adolescence: may I define it and describe it so that you can understand it? Roughly, it is the period of youth between the ages of twelve and twenty, beginning somewhat earlier and ending somewhat sooner with girls than with boys. A few other earmarks of that period will help you to recognize it when it comes. It is the period of rapid growth, the period in which the boy is awkward; a period of physiological instability; a period when the whole organism seems to be in chaos. Before that time habits are well formed. Before that time Nature seems to be quite well satisfied with what has been accomplished, but now comes the period of revolution. In this young boy or this young girl all the former habits seem for a time to be lost and the organism seems to go to pieces. Parts of the organism grow several times more rapidly than other parts of the organism; and it is not only the period when the boy is awkward physically, but also mentally.

The period of adolescence is a time when individual tastes vary. The boy does not like this or that on the table, and he changes from day to day, from week to week, in those things. It is the period of the change of voice. It is the period of the development of the social and sex instinct. Before that time the individual is more or less selfish. His instincts have made him selfish. Now he becomes a social being. I have tried to take a group of boys of nine years of age and teach them some group games, but every three or four minutes I have had to stop the game in order to quiet the boys who had engaged in a fist fight. The boys of nine are individualists and the boys of fifteen are socialists. And it is a period of the development of sex instinct. It is the period of the desire for companionship, particularly for companionship of the other sex. Ask the young Boy Scouts, or those just below Boy Scout age, if they would like to have the girls go with them on a hike. Nothing doing. Then watch the boy of fifteen. He has changed. He has to have a mirror in his room and he has to shine his shoes. It is the period of the girl's use of the third person, singular pronoun, masculine gender. They stand on the street corner and say, "he said this and that," and "he said the other thing."

This is also the period of the disregard for authority. Before that time they have taken things for granted. They have learned their memory verses. Now the teacher and the mother and the father "don't know very much." The boy says, "I am going to stand out against the authority of all those." It is a period of wild oats. It is a period of daydreams. It is a period when the former active student will be found sitting in the schoolroom, staring into space, dreaming daydreams. And wise is the teacher who knows what is taking place in that individual.

Science has also discovered a very remarkable thing about the period of adolescence. It is the age of most frequent so-called conversions, and we find thousands and thousands of adolescents who have passed through severe religious awakening.

This is a period of ups and downs. It is a period of doubt and uncertainty. During this period the young man and woman would not dare to have you know the seriousness of their thoughts. As I was going home from college prayer meeting the other night I chanced to hear a couple of young men ahead of me talking about church work. As I slipped by them, one was making a statement quite characteristic of the attitude of many young men of the church: "Oh, I expect that sooner or later I'll work for the church, but I don't want them to know that I feel that way now." I know another young man who tried to indulge in some of the habits of society around him which were actually repulsive to him. He absolutely forced himself to smoke just to be popular. When he was with his social group he put his worst foot forward, but behind all that there was a sincere love for decency, for a morality which has since secured the upper hand in this individual.

The outside is not always the true adolescent. Beneath that seeming indifference there is a heart as true as gold. Don't forget that and don't forget that the thing you parents and teachers must do is to get beneath that exterior. Doctor Hall says that adolescence is a period when all the floodgates of heredity are loosed, when all of the past takes the individual by storm. Your habits were pretty well formed when you were ten or twelve, but now there seems to come a spring freshet so strong and so full that it seems to run over and find expression in a number of different ways. Doctor Starbuck, of Iowa University, calls it a period of storm and stress.

Perhaps that is sufficient as a characterization of this period. I am sure that if there is a mother in this house whose children have passed through that period she has recognized the truth of what I have said. I have time and again had a mother come to me and say, "What shall I do with this boy and this girl? They are so different than they ever were before. They have changed completely. All their early training seems to have been set aside."

Importance of Adolescence

You may ask, then, What is the importance of this period? Why is it so critical? Why is it so important a subject? Probably this is because it is a time when these instincts appear which may either make or ruin the lad. It is at once the opportunity for the most sublime or the most abominable in life. The instincts which appear at this time are those which can make or break a life. Those instincts are both the cause for a life of virtue or for a life of immorality. If you take a pen and paper and make a list of the worst vices and the noblest virtues, you would find behind those same virtues and vices the same instincts. They appear at adolescent time.

Now, the lesson is clear. It is for us as church workers in Sunday school, Religio, home, and community. It is for us to determine which path the adolescent will take. Should we feel sorry because they have these instincts? No, because just as sure as your boy and girl are normal, these instincts will appear. It is for you and your home and school to determine what development these instincts will take. I refer particularly to sex instinct. Certainly no normal boy or girl will reach that age without having those instincts appear. It may ruin the young man or young woman before the age of twenty is reached, or it may develop into the most sacred thing in life. Did you ever notice that the best things in life are the most dangerous?

So I say that the adolescent period is important and we should understand it because it presents some of our greatest problems. Sometimes I think that "man's free agency" simply means this, that God gave to mankind those twenty-one years of infancy and said to him, "Now, you can use that to determine what shall become of the future man. If you want to use that twenty-one years for your own destruction, you will fall lower than the beasts around you; if you want to use that twenty-one years for your own exaltation, you shall rise to heights almost equal to that of God." I say, sometimes I think that is one of the places where mankind is given his free moral agency. The animal is born mature in two or three weeks. Would that the human being were born mature in two or three weeks, if it is going to use that twenty-one years in its own destruction.

I shall not weary you with details, but everyone knows that a large percentage of our juvenile crimes had their beginnings in these few years of adolescence.

By the way, what is crime? We look down upon this boy who is brought to the court to-day, and we are apt to draw our skirts about us. What is crime? Most of those boys in the juvenile court have taken a bicycle or knife or something of that character. Did you ever think of taking anything that belonged to some one else? Why, I once heard Brother Elbert Smith in a sermon tell of a penny which he had taken and put in his pocket, and his mother with one of those X-ray attachments that all mothers have, actually saw that penny.

Here is the thought. How many of you are sure that you are blue-blooded enough to withstand the temptations, the delinquencies of those boys and girls in the court? Reaction is bound to come unless inhibited by a strong tendency in the opposite direction. That strong reaction may come from a normal mind, which is well developed, but these boys and girls many of them have not that normal mind. They were born defective. Temptation is presented. With you and me it is met successfully. Why? Because we had good fathers and mothers and good home surroundings, strong bodies and minds. And are those boys and girls responsible? Not at all.

I say the second thing that makes adolescence important is that it is a time susceptible to petty crime. In the third place, it is a time of dangerous tendencies along the line of mental breakdown and insanity. I just took from one of the recent leading magazines this story: A girl of fourteen failed to pass an examination in one of our public schools. She went home, went upstairs, found a loaded revolver and shot herself. Perhaps the most amazing thing about this tragic episode is that it is so common. Every month or two in the newspapers we read of some such incident. And every one of these temporarily deranged children could have been saved by a few words. The trouble was, that in no case did anyone realize how grave was the trouble that these children had. We know that their troubles should not be worried about. But they do not seem to know this. And that is why I say this is one of the serious periods of childhood, because just that sort of thing is likely to happen.

Again, it is the period of mental instability. It seems like the body and mind get all out of tune with each other. And it is just at that time that a mental breakdown may come. It is the period which brings to many girls that which is even worse than death and insanity, if such be possible, a life of terrible immorality. It is the period when the individual is not adjusted to her temptation, when she may still be a child in mind, with an adult body and an adult temptation. It is at this time when some man, if he has the opportunity, may ruin her for life. It is that period of life when a girl can take a downward step which will forever curse her life. So I say, again, it is a very important period in the life of the boy and the girl. It is a period that may leave us, as we said before, the most noble and happy of homes. It is a period, also, that may leave us a heritage of sin and social diseases, of blindness and feeble-mindedness.

Feeble-mindedness, social diseases, blindness—one fourth of all the blind children born in Iowa are blind because of social diseases. The children are absolutely helpless, but they were born blind and they haven't a chance to live a decent life, just because of these social diseases and sin.

In short, this is the period that can be the cause of either a blessing or a cursing to humanity. A child before that time loved his home and home surroundings; now he must find companionship. Now he will leave the home, no matter how good it has been, and try to find in the community something to fulfill his desire for companionship. This is that period which we must somehow anticipate. It is that period which we must somehow recognize as normal. We have the habit, we have the tendency of making the adolescent boy or girl feel that he or she is a criminal. We have the habit of making them feel that they are abnormal, because they do the things that are absolutely normal. We allow the boy to become the prey of patent medicine advertisers who advertise that the thing that this boy is feeling is abnormal, and he is made to feel that no one else has these bodily passions. Mothers, parents, teachers should make the adolescent feel otherwise.

Right to Be Well Born

What shall we say of the responsibility then of the adult to the adolescent? That is our question. First of all, the adolescent of to-morrow must be well born. You were out to the Home for Boys this afternoon, a number of you. A young man out there has tested one hundred of those boys and has found twenty-five of them feeble-minded. Do you know what that means? It means that twenty-five of them never had a chance to do anything else but land in that institution. A year ago a girl came from the court of Kansas City. She was sixteen years old in body, but only ten years old in mind. She had the passions of an adult, but the mind of a child to meet the temptations that came to her. There is only one possible outcome. When the temptation comes that girl will fall.

It is the duty of this generation to see that the next generation, so far as we are concerned, shall be well born. It may be hard to try to get people to think of the child that is to be born to-morrow, but in all our communities to-day in the State of Missouri—you heard the situation this afternoon. In an institution capable of taking care of only four hundred feeble-minded there are now six hundred, and there are a thousand on the waiting list. I will warrant there are fifteen or twenty thousand feeble-minded children in the cities of Missouri to-night who are not capable of protecting themselves. These boys and girls, when they reach adolescence, and meet the temptations when they come, have not a chance. And when the hour strikes that girl and that boy will become delinquent. Are you doing anything to see that the child of to-morrow shall be well born? It is an ideal, I know, but it is an ideal worthy to be set up.

Home Training

In the second place, we shall see to it that they have the very best possible home training in the early years. Over at the juvenile court the other day a father whose boy was charged with some petty crime said, "I don't have time to take care of this boy; I am too busy." The judge glowered at the man and said, "Don't you know the most important job of your life is the raising of that boy?" The boy, when he reaches ten or twelve, must have a fixed set of habits, and those habits and that training shall stand him in good stead when that temptation comes. Each temptation is a sort of stimulant. Drinking and smoking and the other things that come into the boy's life are nothing but stimulants. He will react unless there is something stronger in his life to prohibit them. It may be his mother's prayer. It may be the habits of rightdoing. But you cannot expect a boy to act successfully when the strong temptation of adolescence comes unless he has been trained in his early life. I have gone into a juvenile Sunday school class and seen the distracted teacher trying to explain the Apostasy to those children, when the best thing he could be doing for them was to teach them cleanliness and such other things. That is why I am interested in the Boy Scout movement. It says, "The boy is kind; he is reverent; he is clean." Would to God that the one hundred thousand Latter Day Saints to-night had all the habits of the Boy Scout ritual in their systems, and if they had we would soon have Zion in fact.

Early Environment

In the third place, we must secure for the child the best possible early environment. We must secure for him the best chance for early schooling. You don't have to go outside of this community to find the boy who has left school in the early grades. He was thrown out into the streets to mingle with older people and he is unable to meet the temptations which come to a boy of that age. If he is in school with teachers who are sympathetic and in touch with him, he is going to be ready for the day when that stronger temptation shall come. In short, before going out into the world for themselves the boy and girl ought to reach the age of twelve or fifteen and have strong personal, social, and moral habits which shall stand as a barrier against the day when that stronger temptation comes. I am inclined to think that one of the values of baptism at the age of eight years is that somehow that very act of baptism leaves a trace in the child's nervous system that somehow or other stands him in stead against that day when the strong temptation comes.

Should Be Understood

The first thought that I want to impress to-night is that the adolescent boy and girl has a right to be understood. I once had a chance to read one hundred autobiographies of adolescents, and the main trend of their story seemed to be, "Oh, that my mother or my father or some teacher could have understood me." The more I come in contact with the young people, the more I become impressed with this same thing. They need sympathy, love, personal communication. That is one of the places where I think our missionary efforts may fall down. I have come to be more and more impressed with the need of some one who shall go out and "feed my sheep."

The adolescent has the right to be understood. He has the right to have human sympathy and human love. They may not show that they want it, but in that most wayward boy there is a heart that calls for love more keenly than at any age of the boy's life. The world needs not so much more organization as it needs a living interest in the adolescent boy. We need active, constructive teaching. "Do not break down the boy's house or the girl's house, even though they be a house of cards," says one writer, "without showing him a better way to build another one."

We say, "Don't, don't, don't," all the time. We must have constructive teaching. We must show the adolescent boy or girl a better way. In my contact with the young I have come to realize that you can lead them and lead them nicely. I don't know whether there are any college people here or not. When I was going to college and it came along about Christmas time, fortunately or unfortunately I found out that the lady friend in whom I was interested was going to stay in Lamoni for the holidays. As soon as the matron found this out she came to us and said, "You are going to get in at ten o'clock just as usual." That suggestion made us think that we would stay out; and, in fact, we did stay out and sit on the steps five or ten minutes after ten, just to show the dean that we could do it. I was just a normal boy. Somehow or other you are just about the same. Some one comes along and tells you you have got to do this and you stamp your foot and say you won't do it. Then why think the adolescent boy is terrible because he does the same thing?

A couple of weeks ago I had charge of some missionary work. On the last Sunday morning at Des Moines we had a wonderful prayer service. I went into the back end of the church during Sunday school still wondering what I was going to do, and then the thought came to me, I am going down to that class of girls and talk to them on the dance question. I had the presumption to go to that teacher and say, "I want to talk to your class." We had the room by ourselves, and if I was ever blessed I was blessed in presenting that question to those girls. Here is the interesting thing: One girl said to me afterward with tears flowing down her cheeks, "Dancing has kept me out of the church for two years. I am now ready to be baptized." I had talked with them as an older brother. I had tried to find their need, that which is often left out by our missionaries. I shall never forget that moment. I shall never believe otherwise than that I was directed by the Holy Spirit to go to that class and talk on that subject and help that particular girl.

Community Education

And finally it is a period for community education. I wish I might have a longer time to talk to you on that. Why, it has taken us ages to get to the place where we could have at public expense better schools. We still have in some States the sum total of two months attendance requirement in public schools. I saw a statement, issued by the bureau of public education of one of the States, which said that a boy who would start in at eight would be thirty or forty years of age before he ever got through the eighth grade at that rate. You and I are going to live to see under public expense public playgrounds, even a swimming pool, and perhaps even motion pictures at community expense. Why not? Do you know what we are doing now? We are allowing the boy to go to school from nine o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon and then we turn him loose to those agencies which are after the dollar. We are turning our boy and girl over to those who care nothing for the soul of youth. Shall we allow our work from nine in the morning till four in the afternoon to be absolutely nullified by the thing that the adolescent sees and hears in the evening? Shall we allow them to see immoral pictures? Shall we allow them to spend hours with temptation? Or shall we come to a system of community education where we shall at public expense take care of, if need be, the whole twenty-four hours in order to see that the boys and girls have a decent chance to be developed physically, morally, and intellectually?

Woman's Responsibility

I charge you to keep alive in your communities those virtues for which motherhood has always stood. May I be frank with you? I want to tell you one of the most destructive agencies in the downfall of our adolescents to-day is the fact that womankind seems to be losing those virtues for which she has always fought. I say, Woe be unto mankind everywhere if women shall continue to do as they are now doing. I want to tell you women that the feminist movement, not only gives you a chance to rise to heights never before attained, but it also gives you an opportunity to fall to greater depths. It is for you to choose. I want to tell you women that the adolescent boy is not prepared to meet the temptations he has to meet on the streets to-day due to the carelessness of dress of the women-folk.

If I had adolescents talking to them alone here to-night I would confess to them, I am a man who has tried to pride himself on his morality, a man who has a happy home and family of his own, and I have sometimes been shocked at myself to see how some of these temptations that we constantly meet, affect me. Woe be unto civilization unless you women shall continue to fight for these ennobling virtues of life, those virtues of purity for which motherhood is praised to-day.

The latest doctors tell us that sex is a reflex called out by its environment. Please note how many times that reflex is called out and how much strength it takes you to overcome the temptation. I am convinced myself that man alone will not be able to solve this problem or to meet these temptations, if women shall continue as they are now doing.

Some of the responsibility for the care of our boys rests with the fathers. I am made happy every time I see a sign that reads like this, "John Smith & Son, Poultry Raisers." Even if they only had an acre, it tells me that the father is a companion to the boy, and the boy is a companion to the father. That boy and that girl is abnormal, who in the long run does not prefer the companionship of the father and the mother. I remember seeing a mother not long ago, whose husband had died—a missionary who had given his life for the church, and left a young wife with a family of boys—out in the back yard playing Rugby—old-fashioned football—with those boys. She knew how to handle her boys, and let me tell you, if you see a mother who is doing that you will certainly see a mother who has the respect and sympathy of her boys. But to-day the great cry for wealth and popularity has become a creed which is ruining the souls of our boys and our girls.

Let us understand more sympathetically this period. Would to God that the time will soon come when we shall have a number of men and women in the field full time looking after this period in the lives of our boys and girls. Men and women who can sympathize with that age, who with prayer in their hearts and God's Holy Spirit with them shall feed the lambs of this church.

The Jews in Palestine

By E. K.

An argument that ere the Jews return to possess Palestine they must be converted and accept Jesus Christ as their Messiah.

This subject is one of deep interest to all Latter Day Saints, but to the thoughtful student of scripture a great many questions and problems connected with it must present themselves. The Jews are supposed to represent what was known as the kingdom of Judah, which was composed of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin with some fractions of other tribes which adhered to them in the revolt of the ten tribes which formed the kingdom of Israel.

All those connected with Judah seem to have lost their tribal identity and were thereafter known as Jews, or citizens of the Jewish kingdom. Is Palestine to be recognized as the national home of the Jews as Jews, regardless of the ten tribes? For Israel has equal promise of restoration to the land of their fathers. The promise is that Israel and Judah shall be reunited under one government. Can the Jews become a nation without Israel?

It is true that Israel has been forgotten of mankind for thousands of years. But God says that he has not forgotten them: "Thou art my servant; O, Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten." The hunters and fishers have been at work for years trying to locate them. They think they have identified Ephraim in the English nation, including the English of the United States, where he has fulfilled prophecy by thoroughly mixing himself among the people.

The English are a Christian nation; they accept the fundamental of Christianity that Jesus is the "Christ of God." As nations their basic law is the gospel; and wherever you meet those of English blood you find them identified with the new covenant. (Jeremiah 31:33; Hebrews 8:10.) Here is another of our problems, Will the Jews with their hatred of Christianity acknowledge Christian Ephraim? Will they submit to the domination of Ephraim as holding the authority of birthright? All of these are problems that must come up in the settlement of Palestine in which Israel as much as the Jews are concerned.

Because of Wickedness Were the Jews Scattered

Why were the Jews scattered? Their indictment is clearly stated by the Lord to the Prophet Ezekiel, eighth and ninth chapters. Both Israel and Judah had become loathsome idolaters and a nation of murderers. "The land was full of blood," as in the house of their fathers, "instruments of cruelty were in their habitations." Is it to be supposed that the Lord God would overlook all this and visit on them his fearful indignation because they had set aside the law instituted by Moses relating to land tenure and inheritance? Why then has Ephraim in England and America been blessed above all other nations, though having followed the way of the Gentiles in the matter of land and inheritance?

The Jews had forgotten that Moses' law said, "Thou shalt not kill."

"They sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils, and they shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and the land was polluted with blood. . . . Therefore was the wrath of the Lord kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance."—Psalms 106: 37, 38, 40.

"Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them ye shall scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city: that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of the righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar."—Matthew 23: 34, 35.

To all this they added that sin of all sins—the murder of the Christ of God. And they accepted the responsibility of that crime—"His blood be on us and on our children."

The Jews of to-day still show that they are children of their fathers. Not long since a converted Jew lectured here in my home town. His subject was "Judaism and Christianity." Cruelty characterized the former, and kindness and pity the latter. He told how his own kindred had crossed the ocean to kill him for having become a believer in Christ, and mentioned other instances where Jews killed their children for the same cause, and friend took the life of friend.

A letter from our own mission at Jerusalem published in the HERALD told of a young Jewess lady who was prevented being baptized because her father told her that he would kill her. Does not this show that they are still the same as in the days of the Psalmist and the prophets—as ready to shed innocent blood and take the lives of their sons and daughters right now in that same land that their fathers drenched with innocent blood and brought upon themselves the wrath of God—no better than the Turks? Why should they be reestablished as a political power, hostile to Christianity?

The Jews Will Be Converted First

The Book of Mormon states that the Jews will be converted first, as we learn in the following quotations that it is expedient that the Jews shall believe in Christ as the Messiah, and that they must come with pure hearts and clean hands:

"But behold, thus saith the Lord God: When the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance."—2 Nephi 7: 12.

"Wherefore, the Jews shall be scattered among all nations; yea, and also Babylon shall be destroyed; wherefore, the Jews shall be scattered by other nations; and after they have been scattered, and the Lord hath scourged them by other nations, for the space of many generations, yea even down from generation to generation, until they shall be persuaded to believe in Christ, the Son of God, and the atonement, which is infinite for all mankind; and when that day shall come, that they shall believe in Christ, and worship the Father in his name, with pure hearts, and clean hands, and look not forward any more for another Messiah, then, at that time, the day will come that it must needs be expedient that they should believe these things, and the Lord will set his hand the second time to restore his people from their lost and fallen state."—2 Nephi 11: 25-28.

"For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."—Matthew 23: 39.

If those Jews now at Jerusalem and all who are now trying to people the old homeland shall show themselves worthy by receiving the teachers now being sent to them with the Book of Mormon to do as therein admonished, then they will be gathered, for they will know that Jesus, the true Messiah, is to come and reign on the throne of his father, David. But an attempt to rebuild their old Jewish kingdom, even on a social land tenure basis, will be vain, as it is clearly stated in the parable of the householder who planted a vineyard and put it out to husbandmen who showed the Jewish characteristics in their treatment of the servants and the heir, so characteristic that they recognize their own portrait for "they perceived that he spake of them," so bloodthirsty, so devoid of any moral righteousness.

And what was the judgment which was pronounced upon them? This: "Therefore say I unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."

Of course that is interpreted as the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, and this is true, but it applies also to the Jews in Palestine, and it seems to me that the nation which shall bring forth the fruits will be the sons of Ephraim.

The Death of the Righteous

By Hale W. Smith

Funeral sermon in memory of Geraldine Williams, at Denver, Colorado.

"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."—Numbers 23: 10.

To die the death of the righteous is a consummation devoutly to be wished for by everyone who has the least belief in God and a future state of existence. And we may observe that, however different the conduct of men in their progress through life, they will all readily concur in this sentiment expressed by the Prophet Balaam.

Indeed, looking forward to that awful period when the places which now know us shall know us no more, and when we shall be obliged to take our solitary departure to the unexplored region beyond the grave, who would not wish for the hopes and promises which sustain the heart of the good man and open a cheering prospect before him? Why do we not then, while time and opportunity are afforded, secure to ourselves an interest in these things? We are perfectly convinced that we must die; we cannot hesitate a moment under which of the two characters, that of the righteous or that of the wicked man, we should choose to meet the King of the earth and heaven, and yet we pass our days in fruitless wishes. We are devoted to vain pursuits and perhaps to sinful pleasures; and yet when the idea of mortality for a moment arrests our attention, we still hope that, somehow or other, it shall come to pass that we shall die the death of the righteous, and our last end shall be like this.

Such is the delusion of a great portion of the world; but you, my brethren and sisters, I would hope by the grace of our Father, to bring to a better and more consistent state of mind. I therefore request your attention, while, in the first place, I briefly represent the circumstances under which the words of the text were uttered; and secondly, unfold their full import; and thirdly, state the means by which they may be accomplished in reference to ourselves.

1. The children of Israel, in their progress towards their destined land, had pitched their tents in the plains of Moab. Balak, the king of that country, terrified at their great numbers and their previous success at destroying the enemies that opposed them, resolved to use against them the art of divination. For this purpose he sent messengers with presents to induce Balaam, a distinguished person, whose blessing or curse was supposed to have a peculiar efficacy, to come and solemnly consign his enemies to destruction. In a matter of such importance, the prophet sought those express directions which in the early ages of the world the Lord vouchsafed to communicate to his chosen people. The divine permission was withheld, and the prophet declared to Balak's messengers that he could not violate the injunctions of God. Thus far his conduct was commendable, and such as became his holy character.

The king of Moab, however, sends other and more honorable messengers, and with larger promises, and urges Balaam to let nothing hinder him from coming. To this application he made a most noble reply: "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God to do less or more."

This was certainly the language of resolute virtue; but it was only its language, for the integrity of Balaam began to give way to the temptation of riches and honors. Instead of again dismissing the messengers, and refusing to engage in an undertaking which he knew would be displeasing to his God, he hoped to extort a permission from him. The Lord, who saw the workings of his mind, and that he longed to receive the wages of his iniquity, permitted him, as he often permits evil men, to follow the bent of his headstrong desires. He had, however, many supernatural warnings to convince him, if possible, that his way was perverse before the Lord.

Still he went forward, and when he came to Balak, practiced enchantments against the people of God; and by removing from place to place, and performing sacrifices, sought the fulfillment of his desires. But he was overruled, and forced repeatedly to pronounce blessings upon the chosen people of God.

In his first prophetic communication the words of the text occur. They appear to be a solemn reflection suggested to the prophet while announcing the future prosperity of the children of Israel. From the eminence on which he was placed he looked down upon their camps, filling the extended plains of Moab, and exclaimed, "Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end, or my reward be like his." Thus while he was anxiously endeavoring, for the sake of a reward, to discover the means of cursing a people whom he knew to be favored of God, he could yet desire that his course might terminate like that of a righteous man!

Balaam could not plead ignorance of the divine plan or will, or the manner in which the divine favor was to be propitiated. Indeed he was remarkably well informed as to the duties of the good man, for it was Balaam, and on this very occasion, that the Prophet Micah ascribes that remarkable delineation of what God requires from all his creatures. Balak asks, "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the High God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?" To these questions of the king of Moab, Balaam returns this sublime answer: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

At the very time he was expounding the whole duty of man, he was violating every one of these requisitions. He was trying to procure the destruction of a virtuous and unoffending people, that he might thereby gratify his avaricious desires, and thus he offended against the laws of justice and mercy; and he was attempting to evade what he knew to be the divine will, and thus he was walking perversely instead of humbly with his God.

Are we surprised that a man of Balaam's character, and in the very midst of his iniquities, should yet hope to die the death of the righteous? This is neither an uncommon nor an unnatural occurrence; for although men are tempted into the paths of sin, and expect to find in them a higher gratification, they still cannot help acknowledging that the ways of wisdom are the ways of peace. And however false their estimate may be of that which constitutes the true happiness of life, they are assured that virtue is the only security for a serene and happy life and death. The most abandoned of men will often bear this testimony to the power and value of religion, and will say, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

2. But let us now, as was proposed, examine the full import of these words. They involve a great deal, much more than thoughtless sinners comprehend, or they could not indulge the vain hope of terminating a career of vice and folly with a peaceful and happy departure from the world. To die the death of the righteous is to depart out of the world with that hope and comfort which surround the dying bed of the man who has lived a pious and virtuous life. Certainly our sister lived such a life.

What the righteous man is, we may learn from the passage of scripture just quoted from the Prophet Micah. He is one who does justly, loves mercy, and walks humbly with his God. To such a man, one who has passed thus his life upon earth under the influences of these principles, death will seem divested of its terrors. While on the contrary, to him who has lived in violation of his duty to his fellow men, and in the neglect of his God, the period of dissolution must generally be one of sorrow and dismay.

Terrors do not always surround the bed of the wicked, for their hearts may become hardened and insensible, and the principles of a false and pernicious philosophy may sometimes destroy fear while it shuts out hope. But to a man who believes in the existence of a God and a future state of rewards and punishments—and there are very few men who entirely shake off these solemn truths—what can be more awful than to be suddenly awakened to the convictions that his days are numbered, if at the same time he must look back upon these days as spent in folly and wickedness? The past furnishes him no cheering reflections; the anguish of regret for time and privileges irrecoverably lost, pierces his inmost soul. And to look forward is still more dreadful. He is fast hastening to a world for whose society and occupations he is conscious of being totally unfitted, and he is to be summoned into the presence of God, whom he has neglected and despised.

The death of the righteous is the death of one who, amidst many infirmities and great imperfections, has still endeavored to live in obedience to his Maker's will, and who at the closing scene can look back upon a well-spent life, as grounds for acceptance into the kingdom of heaven. All his thoughts are of peace and joy. His memory and conscience are not tormenting fiends, goading him to madness and despair; they are like kind and cheerful companions, who beguile his way through the dark valley of the shadow of death. He remembers, it is true, that he has often transgressed, but not often willfully, and these the errors of his sinful nature, which he knows obedience to the gospel will atone for, and remove. His comfort is, that he has loved and he has tried to serve his Redeemer. He can speak words of comfort to weak children and grieving friends; he tells them that there is joy in believing, and that the whole world could not tempt him to give up the satisfaction he enjoys. Even upon the bed of languishing and death, he resigns the spirit in the full hope of a glorious immortality, and he leaves behind him the rich legacy of a spotless reputation and a virtuous example. Such a scene as this says more for the power and truth of religion than thousands of volumes; and he who has beheld it must acknowledge that it almost made him covetous of death, if he might die the death of the righteous.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE VALUE OF PIPE ORGANS

[If there is one instrument that is richest in tone quality, in color, and all that goes to make the best and richest music, it is a good pipe organ. We are glad to note that several of our churches now have a good pipe organ, but Elder A. N. Hoxie, in sending us the following extract from the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, says that he is expecting to make a drive for a big organ for the General Conference Auditorium, as he wants to have the greatest that has ever been built. This is quite an ambition, but a real good organ cannot be measured in terms of money alone.]

Making America musical is a task that has been carried on with energy in the last decade, and largely through mechanical means. The player piano and the phonograph have done their part in this. The organ, known as the king of musical instruments to musicians and laymen alike for centuries, has played a less demonstrative role, but there is at present a strong movement to perpetuate the memory of the men who fought in the great war by nothing less than this king of instruments. Public buildings and especially schools in all parts of the country are either installing or planning to purchase pipe organs as memorials to those who fell in France.

The argument in favor of this is that granite monuments, which may be seen in cities everywhere in honor of the dead of the Civil War, are lifeless and cold in their beauty, while a large instrument such as a modern organ is a living and almost human memorial—a thing which may be used through the years to furnish beautiful music, to inspire to future deeds of patriotism, and to lead communities in singing, which, as proved by the war, is a decidedly important factor in strengthening the morale of the nation. While one form of memorial appeals to the eye, but has no useful attribute, the other makes a daily or weekly appeal to the ear and to the mind and is valuable in diverse ways.

Among the cities in which there have been recent movements which have led to the purchase of large organs for schools are Cincinnati, Jersey City, Milwaukee, and Spokane, Washington. These are only a very few mentioned at random. In Pittsburgh a great movement in which the leading musicians of the city are taking part is under way for the acquisition of a splendid organ for the large Schenley High School. In New York City a number of schools have organs and public recitals at regular times, which are greatly appreciated by the public in the sections in which the schools are situated.

Besides the public use of the organ, there is a distinct educational benefit which has been realized for years by the leading universities. Many of these have large instruments. Cornell has two of the largest organs in the country. Yale University has a monster organ famous throughout the world. Leland Stanford, Harvard, the University of Illinois, and many others have notable instruments and regular recitals for the students. The University of Virginia has just installed a remarkable outdoor organ, placed in its Greek theater.

The school organ is at the same time a municipal organ in the cities of ordinary size and thus serves its double purpose at small expense. Larger cities have gone in for immense municipal organs and concerts by distinguished artists. Saint Paul and Cleveland are the latest to be added to this list. In the former city the immense organ is being installed and Cleveland has ordered an organ which will be one of the most notable in the world. Portland, Maine, has a splendid one which is to be played next year by Edwin H. Lemare, the famous English organist. Pittsburgh, in its Carnegie Hall,

Are we induced by representation earnestly to desire that ours may be the death of the righteous? Surely we cannot be so insensible to our eternal interests, at that trying period when we are done with worldly concerns, as not to desire it. We cannot so entirely set at naught the power of our Lord and Savior as not to care about arming ourselves to meet him. We cannot so undervalue the satisfaction of yielding up our spirits with serenity and joy into the hands of our Maker, as not to wish for such a conclusion of our mortal career. Let us faithfully employ the means at our command by which we can secure the death of the righteous.

3. We must be with the righteous in our lives, if we would have our part and lot with him in death. There is no other possible method of obtaining the consummation that we wish for. We have seen that no sacrifices, even the most costly, thousands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil, nor even to give up what is dearer than all wealth, the offspring of our loins, will propitiate the favor of the Almighty. His constant and unchanging demand is, that we do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly. And that conduct which is well-pleasing to God can alone smooth the bed of death.

Of this truth all the holy men under the Old Testament dispensations were firmly convinced. Therefore, Job resolutely declared, "My righteousness I hold fast, and I will not let it go; my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live." The Psalmist had this to say, "Keep innocency, and take heed unto the thing that is right; for this shall bring a man peace at last." In the New Testament we see a nobler spirit and a more animating hope inspiring the apostle when he exulted at the point of death, "The time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of glory, which the righteous Lord shall give me at that day."

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace," and to him alone can it be peace. To the worldly and wicked man, it must be anxiety, remorse, and despair; a fearful looking for judgment and fiery indignation, which shall punish the wicked. But to the righteous man it is peace. Conscience is serene, memory recalls to him pleasing images of the past, faith represents to him his sins removed. Hope stands beside him like an angel of light, and turns the shadow of death into morning light—the bright morning of a cloudless and eternal day.

Who is there so stupid, so insensible, as not to say, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his"? To him who truly and earnestly adopts this language, on the warrant of the gospel of Jesus Christ, I can say, if he die, yet he will live again, and in his flesh shall he see God. I plead with you, my friends, consider now the things which belong to your eternal peace. May God enable us all to keep in view the time of our departure, and to regulate our conduct accordingly. Thus may the bed of death have no terrors for us, but may we look upon it as our passage from sorrows, to the unspeakable and enduring happiness of the kingdom of heaven.

Sister W. S. Pender expected to sail for the Isle of Pines August 31. A letter has been received from her by the First Presidency stating that she was en route to Birmingham, Alabama, and that she is well. Sister Pender labored with Elder W. S. Pender in the southwestern States for several years, and while there learned the Spanish language. It is on this account that she is appointed to the Isle of Pines, to take up the work in connection with the women and children, organizing classes for the latter.

has one of the finest examples of the possibility of organ music, with Charles Heinroth at the keyboard. San Francisco has the famous instrument built for the exposition there. Atlanta, Georgia, was one of the earliest cities to purchase a fine city organ. Evansville, Indiana, acquired one two years ago. Portland, Oregon, Denver and Pueblo, Colorado, are others which have up-to-date instruments that delight the public ear and are the pride of the citizens. Salt Lake City for years has been famous for its Mormon Tabernacle organ and people come from all parts of the United States to hear it played by John J. McClellan.

To the average man the pipe organ is a mystery. The wonderful advance in organ construction which amounts to a revolution has never been advertised extensively. The reason is that, unlike the automobile or even the phonograph, the organ never has been commercialized. There are in the United States only about thirty prominent manufacturers of these instruments. They and their workmen are artists, and they make no more ado over their work than does the artist who paints a wonderful picture. But in the last fifteen years the pipe organ has actually become an entirely different instrument from what it was. Before that day it was confined to church use largely, and was a means of worship. It is that just as much as it ever was, but it is also more of a complete orchestra in itself. It was that always, but the limitations of ten fingers and two feet and the ponderous work of playing a large organ were such as to keep the instrument and its music within its own field. Electricity and mechanical ingenuity have combined to change all that. On a modern electric action organ the performer makes perhaps three times as much use of the facilities at his disposal, and does it much more quickly. Thus the orchestra is imitated in practically all its possibilities on a well-equipped organ. By the touch of a finger the man at the keyboard puts on or off one instrument after another, or any number of instruments at once, in any one of the thousand combinations, having tone colors in profusion at his fingers' tips. From the whisper that can hardly be heard to the majestic full organ that shakes the entire building is only a touch. French horns in organs are made nowadays that cannot be told from the genuine, even by a French horn player. Tubular chimes operated electrically make the listener feel that he is in a European cathedral.

Advocates of the school organ point out that one of its greatest advantages is that the pupils' minds are directed to the full depth, richness, color, and variety of the world of sound, which no other instrument can produce as well. In many listeners the desire will be kindled to explore for themselves its fascinating possibilities. And organ practice is more likely to appeal to the growing boy and girl and is more likely to hold their interest than either the piano or the violin. Educators of broad views admit that one of the great defects of child training is lack of more general musical education. As music continues to make its advance on this side of the Atlantic and is ranked as a necessity rather than a luxury, the public provision of musical instruments is expected to make corresponding progress.

INDUSTRIAL PROGRAM OF YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

When the Young Women's Christian Association of Pittsburgh set out the first of the year to raise funds for its budget, the employers' association sent out a letter in opposition. As a result, the funds were not raised. The reason for objection was that the Pittsburgh Employment Association claimed that the Y. W. C. A. was going outside of its field in attempting to discuss an industrial program.

The industrial program appears to have been that of the social ideals of the churches, adopted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in 1919, and approved by both the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. These principles are as follows:

Protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational diseases, and mortality.

The right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, for safeguarding this right against encroachments of every kind, for the protection of workers from the hardships of enforced unemployment.

Suitable provision for the old age of the workers and for those incapacitated by injury.

The right of employees and employers alike to organize and for adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.

Release from employment one day in seven.

Gradual and reasonable reduction of hours of labor to the lowest practicable point and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.

A living wage as a minimum in every industry and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.

A new emphasis upon the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property and for the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised.

Facing the social issues involved in reconstruction, resolved that we affirm as Christian churches:

(1) That the teachings of Jesus are those of essential democracy and express themselves through brotherhood and the cooperation of all groups. We deplore class struggles and declare against all class dominations, whether of capital or labor. Sympathizing with labor's desire for a better day and an equitable share in the profits and management of industry, we stand for orderly and progressive social reconstruction instead of revolution by violence.

(2) That an ordered and constructive democracy in industry is as necessary as political democracy, and that collective bargaining and the sharing of shop control and management are inevitable steps in its attainment.

(3) That the first charge upon industry should be that of a wage sufficient to support an American standard of living. To that end we advocate the guarantee of a minimum wage, the control of unemployment through Government labor exchanges, public works, land settlement, social insurance, and experimentation in profit sharing, and cooperative ownership.

(4) We recognize that women played no small part in the winning of the war. We believe that they should have full political and economic equality with equal wage for equal work and a maximum eight-hour day. We declare for the abolition of night work by women and the abolition of child labor and for the provision of adequate safeguards to insure the moral as well as the physical health of the mothers and children of the race.

The Sunday school at Stockton, California, recently sent to Sister Estella Wight, editor of Stepping Stones, the Sunday school paper, an oil painting done by their pastor, Elder H. J. Davison. The subject is in the nature of an allegory, showing mountains with ascending stepping-stones that lead to a better view of the splendors of Zion. A note of appreciation was inclosed, signed personally by the members of the school, and money forwarded to purchase a suitable frame.

A letter from Elder Richard Baldwin to the First Presidency dated August 31, informs us that he is on his way to New York City expecting to sail from there September 13 for the British Isles.

The Former and Latter Rains.—Part 2

By T. W. Williams

The Miracle of 1853

Reverting to the statement of Van Buren. His position is not borne out by a single authority. He was either misled by unreliable informants, or he jumped to conclusions. During the year 1853 the rainfall was 858 mm., which would be about 34 inches. The rainfall in 1850-1 was 844 mm., or 33 inches. The rainfall in 1867 was slightly above the average.

Robinson, in his Biblical Researches, volume 1, page 119, speaking of the rains of this year 1852-3, states that "There were heavy rains in March, once for five days continually and the weather continued variable, with occasional heavy rain till the close of the first week in April. The 'latter rains' thus continued this season for nearly a month later than usual, and the results were afterwards seen in the very abundant crops of winter grain." (See also Smith's Bible Dictionary, 1867, vol. 3, p. 2666.)

But this, in no sense, marked the return of rains long since withheld. The natives were not astonished. It was a good year, such as occurred at times during Israel's occupancy of the land, such as have been obtained at certain intervals during the past century. Mr. Van Buren evidently did not take note that in the year 1867 in which he visited Joppa, that the annual rainfall was only average, and that the rainfall for the two preceding years was the smallest for any two consecutive years between 1846 and 1867.

The rainfall in 1864-6 was 395 mm., or about 15.5 inches. During 1865-6 the rainfall was 482 mm., or nearly 19 inches. The significance of this statement will be appreciated when we state that the rainfall for 1846-7 was 586 mm., or about 23 inches. The average annual rainfall between the years 1848 and 1908 was 662 mm., or 26 inches.

A Phenomenal Season

It was in 1856, however, when a very unusual rainfall occurred. I am inclined to believe that Mr. Van Buren predicated his thesis on some flimsy native recital. He may have become mixed as to the phenomenal year. The fact that some fifteen years had elapsed since the supposed occurrence, we can well understand how incomplete would be the recital when gathered from the natives.

Robinson, speaking of this year (1856), says:

"On the first of May at evening there was thunder and lightning (which are frequent in winter) with pleasant and reviving rain. The sixth of May was also remarkable for thunder and for several showers, some of which were quite heavy. The rains of both those days extended far to the north—but the occurrence of rain so late in the season was regarded as a very unusual occurrence."—Biblical Researches, volume 1, p. 430.

Smith, in his Bible Dictionary (1869) remarks:

"In 1856, however, there was very heavy rain accompanied with thunder all over the region of Lebanon extending to Beirut and Damascus, on the 28th and 29th of May; but the oldest inhabitant had never seen the like before and it created almost as much astonishment as the thunder and rain which Samuel brought upon the Israelites during the time of wheat harvest." (See also Porter's Handbook, Preface XLVIII.)

Henry H. Jessup, D. D., who resided in Palestine for over half a century, wrote in May, 1856:

"The coast of Syria has just been visited with one of the most violent storms ever known at this time of the year. The rainy season usually begins in November and ends in March or April; and from that time onward a shower is rarely known on the sea coast. The amount of rain which fell during the past winter was not as great as usual. In the month of April there was but little rain and by the middle of May the weather became unsettled. The owners of mulberry trees had built their frail summer houses of reeds and matting in the open air; the process of feeding the silk worms was considerably advanced and all were anticipating a fine yield to compensate for the losses of last season.

"But on Wednesday, May 28th, the air was thick with a dark cloud bank over the sea, and distant thunder towards the south and on the mountains, threatened a storm. Before midnight the rain fell in torrents. The thunder and lightning were fearful. The whole atmosphere seemed one sheet of flame. On Thursday the storm continued with such violence that the streets were flooded—it swept over vineyards and orchards destroying property.

"In Beirut the storm continued a whole day. Three men were killed by lightning and some had their beards burned off. . . . During this one day three fourths as much rain fell as during the whole previous winter."—Fifty-three Years in Syria, p. 128.

Here is a man who lived in Syria and Palestine during the years when it is claimed that the former and latter rains were returned, but who makes no mention of same. He does say that in 1856 the rains had not been "as great as usual." He speaks of the "rainy season" which "usually begins in November and ends in March or April." Would he have done that if there had not been either former or latter rains for centuries prior to 1853? He also makes mention of the mulberry trees and of the silk industry, which could not be developed in a few years, and which would have been impossible without rain.

It will be noted that neither of these writers express surprise as to the annual rainfall. Not one of them even suggests material change in the annual rainfall. The astonishment of the natives was due to the fall of rain on the 28th and 29th of May, a very unusual occurrence. But this could hardly be taken as a manifestation of divine pleasure, as it came at a time when it would destroy rather than benefit the crops. A rain during harvest was considered a calamity in the days of Samuel. (1 Samuel 12: 16-19.)

Rains Prior to 1853

We will now present conclusive evidence to show that the rainy season has not materially changed in Palestine.

Mr. Edward Robinson, D. D., published his Biblical Researches in 1841. It comprises a Journal of Travels made during the year 1838. Doctor Robinson was professor of biblical literature in the Union Theological Seminary, New York. Speaking of conditions as he found them during his travels, he says:

"The autumnal rains, the early rains of Scripture, usually commence in the latter half of October or beginning of November; not suddenly, but by degrees, which gives opportunity for the husbandman to sow his fields of wheat and barley. The rains come mostly from the west and southwest (Luke 12: 34), continuing for two or three days at a time and falling especially during the nights. Then the wind chops round to the north or east and several days of fine weather succeeds.

"During the months of November and December the rains continue to fall heavily; but at no period during the winter do they entirely cease to occur. Snow often falls in Jerusalem in January or February to the depth of a foot or more but does not usually lie long. The ground never freezes but

Mr. Whiting has seen the Pool back of his house (Hezekiah's) covered with thin ice for one or two days.

"Rain continues to fall more or less through the month of March, but is rare after that period. During the present season there has been little or none in March, and indeed the whole quantity of rain has been less than usual. Nor are there, at the present day, any particular period of rain or succession of showers, which might be regarded as distinctly rainy seasons. The whole period from October to March now constitutes only one continuous season of rain, without any regular intervening term of prolonged fair weather.

"Unless, therefore, there has been some change in the climate since the times of the New Testament, the early and latter rains which the husbandman waited with longing seems rather to have implied the first showers of autumn, which revived the parched and thirsty earth and prepared it for the seed; and the latter showers of spring which continued to refresh and forward both the ripening crops and the vernal product of the fields." (Joshua 5: 7; Proverbs 16: 15.)—Biblical Researches, vol. 11, pp. 97-100.

"During the whole winter the roads, or rather tracks, in Palestine, are muddy, deep and slippery; so that the traveler, at this season, is subjected to the utmost discomfort and inconvenience. Whoever, therefore, wishes to profit most by a journey to Palestine, will take care not to arrive at Jerusalem earlier than the latter part of March. During the months of April and May, the sky is usually serene, the air mild and balmy, and the face of nature after seasons of ordinary rain still green and pleasant to the eye. Showers occur occasionally; but they are mild and refreshing.

"On the first of May we experienced showers in the city, and at evening there was thunder and lightning. . . . The rains extended far to the north; and overtook our missionary friends who were returning from Jerusalem to Beirut.

"In ordinary seasons; from the cessation of the showers in spring until the commencement in October or November, rain never falls, and the sky is usually serene. If, during the winter, there has been a sufficiency of rain, the husbandman is certain of his crop and is also perfectly sure of fine weather for the ingathering of his harvest."—Biblical Researches, vol. 2, p. 98.

Doctor Robinson, speaking of a terrible storm on Wednesday, April 11, 1838, when he was on a trip from Akabar to Jerusalem, said:

"The tempest now seemed to have reached its greatest fury and had become a tornado. It was with the utmost difficulty that we could pitch our tent, or keep it upright after it was pitched. For a time the prospect was dreadful and the storm in itself was probably as terrific as most of those which have given rise to the exaggerated accounts of travelers."—Biblical Researches, vol 2, p. 289.

Testimony of a Civil Engineer

General Claude Reignier Condor, who so admirably served his country (England) as civil engineer throughout the East, devotes a special chapter to "The fertility of Palestine," in his book, Tent Work in Palestine, published in 1877. To him was delegated the survey of western Palestine in 1872. He says:

"There is apparently, a general impression that the Holy Land is, at the present day, a barren and desolate country, and that a great change, due not only to decay of cultivation and to disappearance of former forests, but also to a material decrease in the rainfall, has come over the land. . . .

"Palestine is described in the Pentateuch as 'a good land, a land of brooks and water, of fountains, and depths, which spring out of the valleys and hills; a land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates, a land of olive-oil and honey' (Deuteronomy 8: 7, 8,) and these verses epitomize the natural features, and the cultivation of modern, quite as well as of ancient Palestine. Two points, then, should be considered: first, Is there any change in the water supply or climate? secondly, Is there any decrease in the amount of woodland and forests?"—Tent Work in Palestine, p. 364.

Speaking of the geological formation he concludes:

"We have no reason for supposing the geological formation to have undergone any change since the days of Moses; and indeed we have every reason for judging that the distribution of the springs was then the same as now."—Ibid., p. 365.

The Question of Water Supply

Reverting to the water supply:

"The question of water supply lies, indeed, at the bottom of the whole inquiry. We have, unfortunately, no ancient observations which can be compared with those now taken, from which comparison positive information as to the amount of the rainfall, and the volume of the rivers, might be deduced; but we have very important indications that the character of the water supply is unchanged."—Ibid., p. 365.

Mr. Condor now takes up the question of springs and cisterns:

"The springs mentioned individually in Scripture—the fountains of Samaria and of Jezreel, of Engedi and Jericho, for instance, are found to be still plentiful and perennial; and it must not be forgotten that there are twelve considerable streams in the country, which contain water even to the end of the dry season, without counting the Jordan.

"The great number of ancient tanks and cisterns occurring in the districts where there are no springs, and in connection with Jewish ruins and Jewish tombs, show the necessity which existed, even at an early period, of storing rain water for the supply of the towns."—Ibid., p. 365.

The writer reasons, and rightly, too, that springs must be replenished by drainage produced by rain or snow, and that cisterns with rain water is unanswerable proof of the continued existence of rain. His position that the geological indications, the sources and locations of springs, the continued use of cisterns and reservoirs are unanswerable proofs that climatic conditions have remained practically unchanged, with local modifications.

Mr. Condor continues:

"As regards the seasons, and the character and the distribution of the water supply, natural or artificial, there is thus, apparently, no reason to suppose that any change has occurred; and with respect to the annual rainfall (as observed for the last ten years), it is only necessary to note that, were the old cisterns cleaned and mended, and the beautiful tanks and aqueducts repaired, the ordinary fall would be quite sufficient for the wants of the inhabitants, and for irrigation."—Ibid., p. 366.

Change Due to Other Causes

Whatever changes may have occurred can be attributed to other causes than lack of rainfall:

"The change in productiveness which has really occurred in Palestine is due to the decay of cultivation, to decrease of population, and to bad government. It is man and not Nature, who had ruined the good land in which was 'no lack,' and it is therefore within the power of human industry to restore the country to its old conditions of agricultural prosperity."—Ibid., p. 368.

"Such is the present condition of Palestine—a good country running to waste for want of proper cultivation; truly may it be said, 'a fruitful land maketh He barren for the wickedness of that that dwell therein. . . .'

"There is but one fundamental cause for the ruined condition of the country, namely, the corrupt and inefficient system of government; so long as there is no stability or patriotism in the upper ranks, so long will the subordinates be venal and tyrannical and every attempt at bettering the condition of Palestine will be foredoomed to failure."—Ibid., p. 370.

The writer attributes much of the desolation of the land to the maladministration of the Turkish Government, which controlled the country prior to its occupancy by Great Britain.

"There must be a radical reform in government, before anything can be done to restore Palestine to its former condition. The undertaking is beyond the power of either private individuals or of semi-religious societies, for it involves the entire opening up of the country and the creation of public works, which have as yet no existence."—Ibid., p. 372.

(To be continued.)

Divine Healing

By J. W. Quinley

I often meet Latter Day Saints who say all healing is the work of God. I want to deny this proposition; not for the sake of controversy, but to get at the truth of the matter. Now I can name two prominent societies that claim to heal through prayer, and the foundation of both of them is based on a special case of healing. While they both teach many grand truths, they flatly deny the true doctrine of Jesus Christ, and neither of them conform to the scriptural command on healing. Now who does the healing? I am willing to admit that some healing is done by the efforts of these people, but is it done by the power of God, the eternal Father? I will stand firmly on the proposition that God has no hand in the game.

I am told that I am prejudiced. I deny the charge. I am rooted and grounded on divine revelation, from Genesis to Revelation. Some ask, What if some other power does do the healing? So far as the healing of the person is concerned, it might not work any great harm if it were not done in the name of the Lord and did not cause honest people to believe in a false doctrine and cause them to reject the true teaching of the Christ.

I once worked with an intelligent man who told me he and his invalid son had both been healed by one of the societies that I spoke of, and he said he knew the Lord did the work. At the same time he would get mad and swear and take the Lord's name in vain. I tried to teach him the gospel. He said, "_____ has all the gospel I want." That may save the body for a while, but will it save the soul?

There are two great powers in the world working among the children of men. They both work through mankind as agents. Now if I refuse to be led by the greater power, I am sure to be led by the lesser. The glory of God is intelligence. Satan can transform himself into an angel of light and if possible he will deceive the very elect. It is no wonder, then, that mankind rejects the true gospel or doctrine of Jesus, the Christ. He is deceived by many false spirits that are gone out into the world.

To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. It is hard to tell honest men and women who believe that they are right that they are led by a false spirit. The Apostle Paul said he verily believed he was doing God service when he was binding men and women and having them put to death for the testimony they bore. He said he lived in good conscience up to that time, but God showed him his wrong. He will show you and me when we are wrong if we will believe the gospel law.

Now as to divine healing, Jesus gave specific law that we should go into the world and preach the gospel, not man's theory, to every creature, and he that believeth not and is not baptized shall be condemned or rejected.

Now, listen. Do you believe that God works through those whom he rejects to heal the sick? Jesus says, "These signs shall follow those that believe (not the unbelievers). In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

History

An address delivered before the Women's Department Institute, May, 1921.

Webster gives a very comprehensive meaning of the word history. He says, "A narrative of events connected with a real or imaginary object, person, or career, nation, department of culture," etc. He defines the word narrative to mean "the recital of a story; an account of a particular event."

Then, history in its truest sense is not a chronicle of dates, facts, and events, with no explanation of conditions leading up to certain developments and progress. It is a story of events. These events must have a relation to something: "events connected with real or imaginary object, person, career, nation, department of culture."

We will classify these events into individual and group experiences.

In writing the history of a nation, we study the experiences of individuals and record those experiences which have a bearing on the progress of that nation.

The history of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and others cannot be written without involving the history of this country. The story of this Nation cannot be written without including much of the lives of these two men.

In writing the history of the Women's Department, we study the experiences of those men and women who have contributed to its progress, and record those experiences which have influenced its development.

The story of Emma Hale Smith, of Marietta Walker, and of Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, Mrs. B. C. Smith, and others, is not complete without involving the Women's Department. Likewise, not only the history of the Women's Department, but the deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

The Apostle James, who was the head of the church on earth at that time, said,

"Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

If I am healed any other way, who did it? The so-called Christian world cannot practice the law of healing, as given by Jesus Christ through his church, because they do not have the church, neither do they have a called ministry, according to the law of God. Many so-called divine healers do not even have a church organization. God cannot be God and change his law.

We concede that others are just as honest as we are. So was Saul of Tarsus, but God showed him he was wrong. Am I to believe that God works through all these healers, or must I believe the law and the testimony? I, at one time, had a learned gentleman tell me that the Latter Day Saints damn everybody but themselves. I told him that we were the most liberal people on earth, for we believe God would save all of his offspring in some condition, but he would do it in his own way, and that way is made plain in the gospel law; but they tell men that they can be saved in God's kingdom by the sawdust trail. Where is the law and evidence for such teaching?

In conclusion, let me say to Latter Day Saints, Try the spirits, whether they are of God; for many false prophets are gone out in the world. If I am wrong in my exegesis, will some one set me right?

history of the church, is not complete without mention of the works of these women.

We connect the events in the life of anyone whose history we are writing with the important movements of his time.

The experiences of representative men of any period give a basis on which to form conclusions concerning the economic, political, social, and spiritual life of the people of that time.

Group experiences are important in history, since we get the reaction on society of certain movements, events, and experiments.

We say the history of this Nation is not complete without an account of the experiences of the people known as Latter Day Saints. We begin with the story of one man. Many events led up to the time in his life when in the woods he pleaded with the Lord to show him which way was right.

Follow this event with the story of a group of people who believed as he did, and agreed to certain social and religious principles to regulate their lives. Shall we say that the story of this people is not history when we know that midst the world's unrest, with dissatisfaction with the accepted religions, as well as their social and economic conditions, there are men of great intellect and national renown and influence whose eyes are on this people, awaiting the results of their experiences?

The story of this church is history! The history of this church will never be complete until there is written into it the history of its women.

The history of any people must be written from the angle of the poet, the artist, the politician, the educator, the financier, and from the growth of its homes, its children, and its women.

The Value of History

In history we find parallels of our aims, ambitions, and even our disposition to yield to failure. One of our sisters said: "I believe if more men and women studied history and learned what was accomplished by others, with no more and even less advantages than we have, but who have developed their opportunities and looked for the help they might find in the history of other men and women who worked under similar conditions, there would be more accomplishments and fewer failures."

The history of this Nation, its struggles, its fights for the rights of its people, is an inspiration to us. The history of our church, its accomplishments, firm, healthy growth, is an inspiration, just as its failures are warnings. The history of its noble men and women cannot fail to inspire and enthuse us to endeavor.

Does it not inspire confidence in the women of our church for you to know:

That, the National Congress of Mothers was organized in 1898, but that our own Daughters of Zion, which was likewise to be a federation of women, had been organized for five years?

That, our organization sent a delegate to the second convention ever held by the National Congress of Mothers?

That, the subjects for discussion in 1893 (recorded by Sister Abbie Horton) were such vital ones as "The child's will is his truest personality, and should be trained, not broken." Another was "Eggs and their uses as foods."

That, in 1898 resolutions were adopted which have later become a matter of great concern to women's clubs and civic organizations.

That, we protested against the habit of children attending night meetings unprotected and unattended.

That, we should visit the teachers of the public schools, and that our conduct towards them be courteous and kindly.

That, other subjects for discussion in 1898, twenty-three years ago, were: "Effects of different foods on the body; bone, muscle, and flesh producing foods." "Economy of strength." "Nursing. "Ventilation." "Dress reform." "Home decoration."

Max Carmichael said in his talk with us in Lamoni a year or two ago, that we would do well if we would see the fruitage of such work as the Women's Department was doing, in twenty-five years. Twenty-five years have passed, and these are some of our reports:

"To study more and not burden ourselves with the financial care of the church.

"In a district where there were only seven women and five children, four copies of Forbush's Child Study and Child Training were ordered, and study began at once.

"We are not so much concerned with organization for the purpose of raising money for the church, as we are in studying for better parents."

For fifteen or sixteen years the Women's Department struggled along with very little apparent growth; but they kept pace with the times. The women of the Nation were doing likewise.

History must record our failures. They are frequently stepping-stones to success. Hence, though the following appear to be failures, we will call them stepping-stones:

In 1894 the first movement towards organizing the young women was made. It took twenty-four years for it to develop into a permanent department.

In 1901 a movement was begun to start a kindergarten training school and a committee appointed to solicit funds, but it is twenty-one years later before we have our school of kindergarten.

In 1901 Sister Hulmes, in her annual report, made this recommendation: "Need to send out one or more energetic organizers, who by visiting the different branches and properly presenting our work, could organize locals and in various ways labor for its advancement. Let us earnestly pray the Lord of the harvest that such may enter into our ranks." Sixteen years later, organizers were appointed.

Over sixteen years ago the Women's Department worked with the home class department in the distribution of its literature, and it was a successful experiment, but we find no further mention of it until 1920.

History makes it possible for each new generation to gather experiences of the past and combine them with the present in dealing with certain problems. One writer says: "History makes a young man old without wrinkles or gray hair; gives him the privileges of the experience of age without its infirmities and inconveniences."

History gives us the opportunity for a close study of causes for certain conditions, the effect and the remedies that have been applied. Laws are made because experiences have told us that certain regulations and restrictions are necessary. History gives us a full account of these and their reaction on society.

There is also an attraction for us in reading history. Take for instance the Jews. We follow them through all their successes and failures on to their rejection of the Christ. Today, though we had no uttered prophecy, we would watch, with sympathetic anticipation, their return to their native land.

An account of the nomads of Africa show them to be a wandering, unstabilized people. German history tells us of their highly organized system, which permitted them to place millions of men into war, and fill workshops and industrial places with workmen.

Yet history proves to us that man has one universal nature. We have hopes, ambitions, aims, passions, but the difference in men is in the manner in which we classify and associate values and objects.

To some men certain things are good. To some, the same things have no attraction. One writer says: "To the poet, to the philosopher, and to the saint, all things are friendly and sacred, all days holy, all events profitable, and all men divine." To this class belonged President Joseph Smith when he said in his address to the women at the organization of the Nauvoo Relief Society: "Do not injure the character of anyone. Hold all characters sacred."

True history is a story picture of all that men and women have done. It teaches us the lives of other men and women, and brings to us messages from other times and peoples. It is a witness of what has been accomplished, and a prophecy of what can be done.

We have reports that picture progress: "Our women are taking the dressmaking course from the Women's Institute of Pennsylvania."

"Our Young Women's Department gave a demonstration in a contest in Red Cross work at the state fair."

"We invite the educators of the town to talk to us."

"We have had lecturers in, to teach women how to vote."

"We have classes in citizenship."

Several societies report giving time on their programs occasionally to fathers.

One society sent letters of appreciation to the judge and governor of the State for the stand they took on questions concerning women and children.

"Interest increased in civic affairs and child welfare."

"Devoting one day of each month to sewing for the Day Nursery."

"A number of our women are serving on different local committees and boards for child welfare and social service."

"An increased interest in civic affairs; joined the Federation of Women's Clubs."

"Sewed for mothers who could not get work done."

"After a fire destroyed part of a hospital, sisters made bundles of sewing to replenish the supply, and in turn received a personal letter from the mayor thanking them for their work."

"During the flu epidemic they converted the basement of the church into a hospital."

"Fifteen women took the Red Cross course in home nursing and received diplomas. Also keep up their study in current events and parliamentary law."

Reports that show progress socially:

"We had a big social gathering of the entire branch under the direction of the Women's Department. It was a success."

"Our object is to promote sociability among all our branch members."

"We filled baskets and took them with us to the home of a sister in the country who had not been to church for a long time. Stayed all day and visited."

Reports that show a need:

"Need for leaders locally."

"Women to give entire time in district work. Would that we had a Graceland in every State."

"Need more helps and literature."

Report to us your spiritual experiences and expressions insofar as they affect your department. Here is a story which gives spiritual experience and tells us of an active, alert organizer:

A resolution had been drafted by a certain district to be forwarded to the Dominion and Provincial Governments. Divine direction had been felt in the matter, and the organizer had fasted and prayed about it, but the resolution still remained in her hands and had not been forwarded. It was during the time of the flu, and one morning a telephone message begged her to nurse a family down with the flu. At first she refused, as she had been working too hard, nursing, but they begged so hard that finally she consented, not even hearing the name of the people to whom she was going. When she reached the home, she found it was the home of a member of Parliament. She was there two weeks, and when arranging for her services he said he wished he could do more than offer her money; he wished to be able to confer some favor; so she handed the resolution to him and he promised to personally present it.

Tell us of consecrated women of ability, who have accomplished something.

Report any effort that has brought numerical growth to the local; has increased its strength physically, mentally, socially, and morally; facts that show you are gaining power and influence in your homes and among neighbors.

An item may seem too small to you to be mentioned because you consider the work of others greater, but if it marks progress for you, it makes good history.

To the historian of the Women's Department we say, that a story of your failures and successes now is as important to us as those of twenty-five years ago. Emerson says: "No man reads history aright who thinks that what was done in a remote age has any deeper value than what he is doing to-day."

PEARL GARDNER.

Am I My Brother's Keeper?

(Read at an open meeting of the Women's Department.)

Ever since Cain asked that question of God and sought to free himself from any obligation towards his brother Abel, whom he had slain, men, instigated by influences from the same evil source, have sought to rid themselves of any responsibility, as far as their fellow men are concerned, that they have not wished to carry.

The common slogan has been, "Let my brother attend to his own affairs; I've enough to do to take care of myself." Now I speak this concerning the race of man, but more especially the worldly class. However, I think that if we would search within ourselves and harrow up our minds to remembrance we would probably find a little of the same feeling creeping into our hearts.

It is hard sometimes to say, "I will give of what little I have, to him that has less"; or, "I will divide with my needy brother, though it be but a crust of bread that I have." I say that there are times and conditions when it may be hard for us to say this, especially if we think that those who stand in need are at fault and have caused their own neediness.

How often have men said, "If such and such a person had gotten out and been willing to work as I have worked, he would have as much as I have." We do not know, however, our brother's condition and surroundings—not nearly as well as we sometimes think we do. No matter how sure or certain we may feel that we are right in our judgment of him, yet we must learn that we may be wrong. Only God knows a man for what he really is, and lest we be condemned by Him who maketh the sun to shine upon the evil as well as upon the good, we must give to those whom we may think are unworthy as well as to those whom we may think merit our gifts.

When I say that I believe we are our brother's keepers, I do not mean that we, in order to be Christians, must care for him physically, spiritually, or otherwise, whether or not he tries to help himself. But I do mean that we should not withhold good gifts to those who stand really in need, the poor in spirit as well as the poor in goods.

I think all will agree with me when I say that we, one and all, are poor in some things and at some times. In other words, there is not one of us that does not stand in need of something. It may be only a smile, an encouraging word; or again, it may be the necessities of life. Whatever the need may be, great or small, the giver who meets the need will have his reward. Even so great a person as a king may pray, as did King David, "Lord, I am poor and needy."

Christ clearly understood that there was and would be those who were poor in other things than the necessities of life. Speaking to his disciples he said, "Blessed be ye poor, for yours is the kingdom of God. Blessed are ye that hunger now, for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh. Blessed are ye when men shall hate you and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you and cast out your names as evil, for the Son of Man's sake!"

We know that for the disciples and followers of Christ then, there was only scorn and persecution, and no thought whatever for their physical needs. They were poor in earthly things, but they were rich in heavenly things! The world might have given to them and provided them with that which they needed physically, yet how much greater were the gifts that the people of the world might have obtained through obedience to their teaching! But for them the world could not spare a smile, could not give an encouraging word! No, not even a crust of bread. They had comfort only in their Master!

And when we think how He was also given—given to be slain for the sins of the world, we know who has set the wonderful example of giving. "Freely ye have received, freely give!" Let us try to have the same care for our brother as our heavenly Father has for us.

Eleven Causes for Crime

The president of the National Surety Company of New York, William B. Joyce, ascribes eleven causes for the increase in crime. He cites the fact that the several insurance companies of the country paid out more than $16,000,000 last year in settlement of embezzlement and burglary claims to indicate the prevalence of dishonesty, and then fixes the blame. His first cause is wide disrespect for the law. Second in the list comes the greater opportunity for dishonesty. Unemployment is another, revenge, inadequate accounting methods, "bolshevism," and so on through a category the items of which are all related to the first, that of disrespect for the law.

These are all removable or capable of remedy, although Mr. Joyce does not suggest the cure, beyond the fact that if employment is provided those who now steal to secure something to live on may give over the practice. In general and in particular the moral nature of man was sadly disturbed by the war. Instead of our emerging from it cleansed and strengthened, we actually came out with the ilableness accentuated, the baser passions no longer held in check, and the nobler attributes of human nature overcast by envy, greed, and hypocrisy.

Respect for the law may be inculcated in two ways. Most important of these is the exact and impartial enforcement of the law. Unfortunately, this does not pertain throughout the length and breadth of the land. In Idaho business men are kidnapping speakers whose views do not suit their own; in Texas cities masked "vigilantes" are snatching victims from the street, smearing them with tar and feathers and dumping them thus decorated in front of crowds leaving theaters. Lawlessness of this sort prevails all over the United States. It is idle to say we are orderly and law-abiding when such things go on.

The other way to inculcate respect for the law is through moral teaching. This method, too, is failing, because those who may be said to be charged with its application are lax. Preachers and teachers are busy enough, God knows, in their endeavors, but they may only look for failure in communities where bootlegging is frowned upon, but the respectable citizen who can when occasion presents produce a bottle or a demijohn is counted a "good fellow."

Mr. Joyce may have catalogued the chief causes for embezzlement and burglary but he omitted the real danger, the growing disrespect for law that has the sanction, passive or active, of those who would be most shocked if the indictment were pressed home directly to them and their responsibility fixed by their own conduct.—Omaha Bee.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems

Text: Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush

CHAPTER XXVII

The Home Training of School Children

1. What is the necessity for obedience by children?
2. How may self-obedience be developed?
3. Give observations of your own, of the attitude of a young child towards law and right.
4. How much does conscience enter into his attitude?
5. What is the benefit of obedience as a habit?
6. Is it easy to train a child in the habit of obedience? Give reasons.
7. How may obedience as a habit hinder the development of the child?
8. The obedience habit is of value to the child until what period is reached?
9. How may it give way to self-control?
10. What is the responsibility of the parents during this transitory period?
11. Why is insight of so much importance?

State as Super-parent

In proclaiming the state as super-parent, Judge Lindsey of the Denver children's court is very convincing, but convincing of something quite different from what he apparently intends. The state has accepted the responsibility of educating the child and "no one to-day seriously questions this responsibility." "It is far more its duty to feed the child" and in general to take responsibility as to its "health and morals." "The child must no longer be the victim of conditions over which it has no control, but for which society and the state itself are to blame." The words are doubtless inspired by a high spirit of humanity and patriotism; but constructive statesmanship requires something more than that.

Let us first reconnoitre the pass to which sentimental philanthropy has already brought us. The cost of state aid—public schools, public baths and playgrounds, maternity hospitals, Americanization schools—falls upon those who pay taxes, which is to say very largely upon the middle class. So heavy is the burden under which the class struggles that it can no longer afford to have children and educate them according to the traditional American standard. In this important field statistics are mainly lacking, but there are certain straws in the wind. We know that, on the average, a Harvard graduate and his wife have one child and a Vassar graduate and her husband seven-tenths of a child. If any of our advanced institutions were limited to children of its own graduates, it would shrink by approximately one half with each generation. What else can this mean than that the brain power of the nation is shriveling? For several decades the increase of our population has come almost exclusively from immigrants and the children of immigrants. Yet Judge Lindsey proposes that the national wealth be still further diverted to the care of the children of the incompetent and improvident.

A curious sign of the times is that women of the middle class seem blind to this danger, and not always because of philanthropic sentiment. When committees of the House and Senate were lately struggling with the question of salaries in the civil service, they gave several reasons, some of them rather clumsily expressed, why men should receive higher pay than women. They were sharply taken to task by the president of the National League of Woman Voters. If

The Work in New Zealand

A branch organized at Auckland by Elder G. J. Waller.

Things have been happening in this part of the Lord's vineyard. On May 24, I delivered a lecture in the town hall, my subject, "Mormonism." There were about six hundred present and good attention was manifest. The difference between the two churches was explained and the abominations of the Utah church brought to light. Since then the Mormons have been very much upset and they held a meeting last night in the town hall, subject, "Mormonism," but of this we will write later.

The following Sunday we received a pleasant surprise, when Brother G. J. Waller, from Honolulu, called at our office. This pleasure was increased when he said he might be with us for a few months, and since that day he has won a place in our hearts, for he has manifested the true spirit of a Latter Day Saint.

Brother Waller has since visited Australia and had an enjoyable time in the various branches of the church, returning to Auckland, July 11. Elder H. W. Savage, who is in charge of this mission, had given Brother Waller authority to organize a branch of the church in this city. It was decided by a unanimous vote that we organize the branch on Sunday, July 17.

Brother Waller presided at this meeting and was elected president of the branch during his stay in Auckland. Sister Murdoch was then elected as secretary. Brother Murdoch, who had been called to the office of elder, was then ordained and elected as branch priest. Brother Harry Johnston was also ordained to the office of deacon. Sister Johnston was elected organist, and myself, chorister. The Spirit of the Master was present and all were made to rejoice in this latter-day work.

Brother Waller then began to set the branch in motion, both men and women. So a Women's Department was born; also a Religio. Thus the good work goes on. He has visited the Saints as president of the branch and all have learned to love him, and we shall be sorry to see him go from our midst, which we realize is too close to think about.

We were sorry that Elder Savage could not be present at the organization of the branch, but he arrived here July 23, in time to hear Apostle McKay, of the Mormon church, give his lecture. Recently we blessed six children, all Sunday school pupils whose parents are not in the church.

July 24, at 7 p. m., the priesthood had a little prayer meeting before going to hear Apostle McKay of the Mormon church. Brother Waller presided and we felt encouraged. There were about six hundred present at his meeting. Their small choir sang very nicely. After the opening exercises, woman's sphere is the home, argued Mrs. Maude Wood Park, it is "up to the men" to "make that career so desirable that women will choose it!" What else had the dear congressmen intended? If men are to be husbands and parents, they must have incomes scaled to the service they are rendering to the future. As an abstract principle, equal pay for the sexes is as convincing as the super-parental responsibility of the state; but in the actual world of to-day both would work inerrantly and powerfully against all the high interests of women and children.

The tendency of modern impulse, and of such thought as it inspires, is somewhat too individualistic, considering only the particular hardship, the particular "right." The prime concern of the state is with the family; its future lies in its women as related to their children. The problem is by no means simple but it cannot be solved by insisting, whether from motives of philanthropy or of selfishness, upon individual rights which can be granted only at the expense of the family.—New York Times.

President Taylor, president of the New Zealand Mission, told us that their missionaries had labored here for forty years and at present there were sixty missionaries laboring in New Zealand. It was at least good to see the respect that was manifest to the priesthood. All stood at attention when their apostle came in, and on his taking his seat, then all were seated.

Apostle McKay began by describing how he drew the map of New Zealand when a boy, congratulated New Zealand on its wonderful future, stating that he never expected to visit here till quite recently. He referred to the wonderful growth of Utah since Brigham Young led the pioneers across the desert. Here he quoted Matthew 25:24-41 and this is what he kept before the people, stating that it was service that had made Utah and the Mormon church what it is to-day. He said the church had been a service since 1830. He said Mormonism is in the world for the world's good and that he did not know of any other church that catered for not only the spiritual but the secular also. We kept a straight face when he said that every gentleman should show every courtesy to his wife, by opening the door, or putting on her cloak; in fact, every courtesy that he manifests while courting. We wondered how Brigham Young got on and how his courtships were managed, for he must have had to court more than one at a time by the dates of his marriages, for I notice that he married four in 1844, three in 1845, and five in 1846. He must have been a champion courter.

He stated that Utah was second on the list of those free from venereal diseases during the war. He said that the "old church is not afraid of the light; we have nothing to keep in the back." He explained their method of providing for the poor and showed how it worked. It might be well for our people to take the hint. It is this: They have what is called fast offering; that is, they fast two meals a month, and he gave his illustration thus, "Say each meal costs ten cents each. Well, if there were ten in the family that would amount to one hundred cents, two hundred cents a month, or twenty-four hundred cents per year." That would cost them nothing, but with a membership of say 200,000, just see how much this would amount to. He says if all the countries carried out this simple sacrifice there would be no starving or poor people in the world. He gave a very nice talk along these lines.

I had issued a challenge to him in the paper the previous evening and at the conclusion of his address I asked the privilege of questions. I was asked to wait until the benediction was pronounced. I thanked him for the privilege, but they were about to bustle off when I said, "Mr. Chairman." They turned around and waited. I said, "While it is a good thing to investigate any man's claims, why not accept my challenge to canvass your claims before the public?" When he found out who I was, he said we were "dissenters and parasites" and refused to meet me.

Elders Savage, Waller, and myself spent the next hour discussing with various members of the Mormon church, also some Maoris. Thus they fight and run away, or, I should say, they throw stones but will not face a fair issue. Thus by smooth speaking they try to hide the real facts of Mormonism. We are getting a write-up in the papers.

Elders Savage and Loving are creating a good interest among the Maoris and expect to see good results in the near future, but it is a hard battle.

A Goodly Report From Los Angeles

(A few extracts from a personal letter to one of the editors gives an encouraging account of the work there.)

We just finished our reunion down by the sea and had a fine time. I got the scenery ready for the pageant, "One hundred years of Latter Day Saintism." It was pretty good, considering the handful we had.

We have a fine branch at Los Angeles, but the church is too small. On sacrament Sunday they have to stand outside, and on Easter and Children's Day there were about seventy-five or a hundred who could not get into the church.

They had fine decorations both of those Sundays and the people just went wild over the flowers. Children's Day we used daisies and lilies, with white and green drapes. It made the church look nice and the people appreciated it.

We are trying to do what good we can for the upbuilding of the work out here. Brother David Dowker is the pastor. He is loved by the Saints. He is one of the working kind that you cannot help but love. He just goes out of his way to do good. He worked so hard that he had to rest, so he has been up at Big Bear Lake for a week. But he was here for Sunday.

The church is growing. We baptized seven or eight at reunion. We also baptize almost every Sunday. There are a good many Utah Mormons here, but I am glad to say there are some good ones among them.

Some of us are going to San Pedro, Sunday, to help open the work there and see about getting a branch started.

These people seem to be Zion lovers and I would not be surprised when the call came that they would all go to Zion. I never heard so much about Zion since I have been in the church as I hear in California. Their whole thought is of Zion and what they wish to do when they get there. It seems as though we are in a different country on the other side of the mountains. You would think from what they say that they were in Europe and had the big ocean to cross.

There are a few Saints who tell the others that God made a mistake when he chose Missouri. He should have chosen Southern California. Of course this is a lovely country, but they don't realize that it is volcanic and there are earthquakes all the time.

In bonds,

J. E. DAWSON.

The Runnells Reunion

"The meetings were of a highly spiritual and intellectual order."

Written history sometimes poorly reflects the persons and events it seeks to perpetuate. Especially is this true of an effort to record and properly evaluate spiritual entities. We may record facts, cold, bare facts, but who can reproduce the spirit of a reunion? Where is the vocabulary adequate to its definition? It is an oasis in the desert of man's existence; a bright spot in his spiritual experience; an approximation of the kingdom of God.

Perhaps in none of our gatherings do we come so close to a demonstration that play, work, love, and worship are the things by which men live, as in a reunion. Especially is this true if we see to it that they are distributed in the true Zionic way, so that "no one has less than is needed, and no one has more than he can use." Thus the reunion becomes a "place of sweet commingling with those of like precious faith." Such a place was the Des Moines district reunion, held at Runnells, Iowa, August 12 to 22.

This little park, with its thick carpet of grass, stately trees, fine water, and excellent drainage, affords an ideal place for such a gathering. Much credit is due the committee in securing this location, and in doing so much to make the Saints happy and comfortable. In fact, they did their work so well that they were unanimously elected to succeed themselves next year.

Most of the meetings were of a highly spiritual and intellectual order. The mornings were fully occupied from six and seven o'clock until noon. The afternoons were given almost wholly to recreation. This, which consisted mostly of indoor baseball, volley ball, swimming, and "barnyard golf," was under the supervision of Brethren E. G. Beye, Edgar Skinner, J. W. Rudkin, and others.

Forty-seven tents, including two assembly tents, were on the grounds.

Besides local helpers, there were present of the general ministerial force, F. A. Smith, U. W. Greene, F. T. Mussell, J. A. Dowker, Asa E. Smith, and A. E. Warr. Brother and Sister W. W. Hield, of Ames, were present and rendered valuable service.

Brother Henry Castings, district president, was the "big man" of the reunion. His wise foresight and planning, his timely counsel and able leadership, both by example and precept, stand out prominently as a feature of the reunion. Des Moines District should congratulate itself on having the service of this type of man.

In the Women's Department, Sister Bertha Emslie, district organizer, ably marshaled a cosmopolitan gathering of women and provided interesting programs, using local talent.

Another interesting feature of the reunion was a tent full of Temple Builders. (Did I say full? Well, ask them.) These young ladies, under the able leadership of Sister Mary Wilkinson, of Des Moines, in full uniform and with their saintly discipline and deportment, were an inspiration to the camp. Oriole Girls were also in evidence. We commend this tendency towards group activity.

The many earnest prayers and the constant solicitation for the welfare of the sick and afflicted of our number bore testimony that many have "passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

"This mutual love revives

Our courage by the way;
While each in expectation lives,
And longs to see the day

"When from all sin and pain,

The ransomed shall be free;
And perfect love and friendship reign
Through all eternity."

A. E. WARR, for Press Committee.

Portland Reunion

The Portland district reunion of 1921 is history, but the memory will long remain. It was decidedly the most successful ever held in this district. There were in all forty tents pitched on the ground. The meetings were well attended, and a calm spirit prevailed during the entire session. The Saints were strengthened and thirteen precious souls were initiated into the kingdom.

The matter of providing speakers for the occasion was given over to the district presidency and they in turn referred the matter to headquarters for appointment.

When the report came that Brethren H. O. Smith and W. H. Kelley would be our speakers, a gloom seemed to spread over some, for none of us were personally acquainted with the brethren, and we were informed that they were both elderly men. This feeling, however, vanished quickly as soon as they arrived on the grounds, and in a short time we were all pleased with our guests. The brethren were both loved by all and are surely qualified to occupy in their respective callings. A good many of the Saints received their blessings under the fatherly hands of Brother Smith, and equally as many were cheered by the experiences of Brother Kelley, as related by himself in his interesting way when we gathered after the night meetings for entertainment as provided by the young people. Both brethren also delivered very able sermons.

The district decided that we should have an annual reunion, so a committee of five were appointed, one for one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years, and the fifth man for five years, and hereafter annually, a five-year man will be elected. This arrangement provides an experienced committee each year.

We are hopeful of helping to make the 1922 reunion the best ever. Before leaving the grounds this year, more than two hundred dollars had been subscribed for the support of next year's reunion. We hope to be able to announce the date and place shortly after the first of the year.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. STOVER, Secretary of Committee.

Chippewa Indian Chief Baptized

In the first place, I am an Indian belonging to the Chippewa tribe in Minnesota, and yesterday I was baptized by Elder Kress, of Duluth, Minnesota. I rejoice in the fact that I am become a brother in the Church of Jesus Christ, whom I searched for, but did not find until yesterday. Praise be His name, I am a wanderer no more.

I have been educated in a Catholic monastery and finished off at Carlisle, but left the Catholic Church and became a worker in the Y. M. C. A. and followed this work in Minnesota after leaving Carlisle, always seeking truth, or Christ, but did not find him. Finally I became disgusted with the so-called Christians and their churches, because everything which ought to be held sacred was commercialized, and all was false.

My own great passion was and is the uplift of my own people. In fact, I have succeeded in making many dear enemies of those in political power! I was taken back here to Minnesota in handcuffs from Washington once, simply because I had spoken for the rights of my people in strong terms.

It was while lecturing in Duluth this last spring on the rights of my people that I first met Elder Kress, and it was in an unusual manner. There was a Mormon in the audience and he started to talk to me on the origin of the Indian, when a certain man got up and handed me a tract entitled, Whence Came the Indian? That man was Elder Kress, who baptized me yesterday, and now I ask all the Saints to pray for me, because I have an uphill battle to fight, as all my people are Catholics—people who are very dear to me. So pray for me, so I may have strength from on high to brave the storm. I have already been laughed at, and it hurts.

Yours for Christ,

CLOQUET, MINNESOTA.

Editors Herald: I realize I am missing many good things since I do not get my HERALD and Ensign, and am sending money for them, also for Autumn Leaves to be sent to my daughter. I wish that I could say something that would be of some comfort to the Saints. We are isolated, but attend the Wellston Branch. It is three and a half miles to the church. We have missed one Sunday in almost a year, and we walk, too. I will just tell the ages of my girls to show you how good the Lord is to give us the courage to go. Emily is sixteen; Betty, eleven; Bernette, nine; and Lillian, six.

Brother W. A. Moler is our branch president, and we are proud to say he is a good, humble man, who seems to be coming up higher each day. He is a son of the late James Moler, who is known and loved by so many of the Saints. Brother George Ferguson is his counselor, and he is truly a man of God. They work together in perfect harmony, which is an encouragement to the rest of us.

Brother John Williams, son of Jane Williams, who is known by so many as a true Ephraimite, has located in Columbus, and we miss him and his wife, whom the branch loves. She was our organist. Our priest, Brother George Stephens, had to play for us yesterday in the absence of Sister Ada Ely, who was missed very much. Brother Stephens is alive in the work, as well as Brother Marion Downard, our teacher.

Our district president, Brother A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, visited our branch lately and was an encouragement to us. I visited at Creola a short time ago and found Sister Mattie Kirkendall improving after a very bad sick spell. She and Brother A. B. are still the same good Saints they always were and continue to scatter sunshine.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. L. M. DONALDSON.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson returned September 5 from Taylorville reunion. He had previously been in attendance at the reunion, at Deer Park, Pennsylvania, Onset, Massachusetts, Indian Lake, Michigan, and Elmhurst, Illinois.

all thinking citizens. We must remember that there is no other alternative except one of these two: either there must be a working international agreement or the United States will certainly be involved in another great war in the not far distant future.

There may be an agreement or league and still a war, but without an international agreement or league of nations the war is certain. All who do not wish our boys again to be sent abroad in millions must favor disarmament, and then the establishing of an international court supported by an international association or league.

Child Welfare in Belgium

In the United States, eighteen States provided for physical examination for every child entering industry. Belgium has now adopted the advanced program of a medical examination of each juvenile within a month after entering industry and repeated once a year until the child reaches the age of eighteen. In the case of illness or deficiency, the examinations are more frequent. None of the United States as yet, make such a provision.

The national children's board in Belgium, maintained by public and private funds, supervises a children's welfare organization. This program includes free examination of children under three years of age brought by their mothers for examination. Free dispensaries for expectant mothers, diffusion of knowledge relating to infant health and nursing. Children under seven years of age boarded out are also given supervision. The cost of this work is borne, one half by the state, one fourth by the provinces, and one fourth by the municipality. (Summary from reprint from Children's Bureau, Washington.)

Tom Paine and the Bible

The Christian states that Tom Paine in 1804 in a public address in New York City said: "In four years from now there will not be a Bible in America." To explain this he stated that he "had been through the Bible with an ax and cut down all the trees so that there is no more timber but only lumber on the shelf."

Despite this prediction, in all lands of Anglo-Saxon population, the Bible remains first of all books. Just a few years after this prediction the American Bible Society was formed. In the first half century they distributed over twenty-two million copies and now distribute many million copies every year, in addition to those which are sold in ordinary trade.

Eight years after the prediction the streets of New York were blocked by wagons waiting to receive copies of the revised New Testament.

The Christian further states that at this time in order to permit distribution in Chicago a few hours earlier, the chapters from the beginning of Matthew to the end of Romans were telegraphed from New York to Chicago.

The World Takes Christianity

According to Doctor Selbie, member of Mansfield College, in England, England is not Christian in policy, social life, education, or industry. But there exists a great need for Christianity. Success requires a strong moral foundation, while morale depends upon religion and Christianity is the biggest religion we know. We need a Christian church in which each member is a practicing Christian. Unfortunately, we do not know what he says Christianity is.

Doctor Selbie says that during the war inquiry was made as to the religion of the soldiers, and to their surprise many of those young men had no idea what Christianity is, nor who Jesus Christ was. By the scores they gave some such answer as, "If a man doesn't smoke, and doesn't drink, and doesn't go to the theater, I suppose he is a Christian."

All don'ts, while Christianity is the most positive force in the world. There evidently is a need to re-teach Christianity, not only in church and Sunday school, but even in the day school. Listening simply to a nice sermon is about as satisfactory to spirituality as eating nothing but chocolate creams would be to physical well-being.

Religion must be recognized as something that concerns a man's everyday life.

The Ideal Sunday School

In the Sunday School Department of the September Autumn Leaves appears an excellent article entitled, "My vision of the ideal Sunday school," by Miss Blanche Edwards, superintendent of the Sunday School Department in the British Isles. She not only presents valuable suggestions for the building of an efficient organization in England, but if followed out elsewhere it would help materially in this most important educational work. Sunday school workers would do well to study this article.

Poetic Justice to the Red Man

As an item of general interest, there appeared in last week's HERALD, a clipping from the Nation's Business, under the above heading.

If we are correctly informed, the Indian rather objects to this present classification as separate nations, as a large number of them wish to be recognized as American citizens. By treating them as small nations they are kept in a species of bondage as well as wardship.

There is, it is true, poetic justice that these Osage Indians, driven from their rich farming land to what was considered worthless soil, should have been made rich by the finding of oil, yet we must remember that their average of $10,000 a year does not appear large compared with the income of many men of great wealth in the United States, some sixty or more of whom have an income of more than $1,000,000, a year each.

The 90,000 Indians of North Dakota, according to this statement, receive an average of $167 a year apiece. The 11,000 Indians of Utah, $230 each. The 22,000 of South Dakota less than $200. The total income for the whole race of 242,959 is less than $300 for each individual. This hardly equals the average for the citizens of the United States as a whole, for the same period.

It is significant to note that only 21,000 Indians have been fully freed of government supervision, nor are we yet informed how full is this measure of freedom.

Many full blood Indians are making their mark in this country. To the list given there may be added others, notably Thomas L. Sloan, attorney at law in Washington, District of Columbia.

Elder V. B. Etzenhouser arrived safely in Independence. We are informed that his return was caused entirely by the ill health of his wife, not partly, as stated in the HERALD for June 21.

MISCELLANEOUS

Appointment of Sunday School Superintendent

Gomer R. Wells has sent to the First Presidency his resignation as superintendent of the Sunday School Department. This has been accepted by the Presidency, and A. Max Carmichael has been appointed to fill the vacancy. We feel sure that the entire Sunday School Department appreciates the earnest work of Brother Wells in the past and will rally loyally to the support of the present incumbent.
