program was rendered Friday evening, with many nonmembers present who expressed their appreciation. Saturday was devoted to district business with Brother Griffiths in charge. J. M. Hardin was sustained president and William Kimble, secretary. It was voted by a large majority to devote three days to our conference in the future, as this one has proved a great success. We were greatly benefited by sermons from Brother Clark, of Columbus, Ohio; Brother Griffiths and Brother Fred Simpkins, of Michigan. Sunday was devoted to social service with the Spirit of the Lord present in abundance. Next conference will be held at Saint Marys, Ohio, next September, date to be appointed later. The work of this district is growing steadily and with faithful effort will continue to do so. Harold H. Harms, Evert L. Ulrich, press committee.

Our Departed Ones

DEIBOLD.—Anna Elizabeth Deibold was born March 26, 1844, at East Troy, Wisconsin. Baptized July 10, 1888. Died at her home in Seneca, Illinois, September 29, 1922. Is survived by her husband. Funeral from the home. Sermon by Charles H. Burr.

WARD.—Hugh Ward, fourth son of Brother and Sister William Ward, of Toronto, Ontario, was born August 23, 1901. Died after a lingering illness, June 12, 1922. He was an attendant at Graceland in 1920. Funeral services in charge of T. W. Williams. Interment in Prospect Cemetery.

JONES.—William Thomas Jones was born at Lagonda, Chariton County, Missouri, October 5, 1860. Married Susa Howard, June 28, 1905. Baptized September 12, 1910. Died August 31, 1922. Leaves mother, wife, four sons, a daughter, eleven grandchildren, one great-grandchild, two sisters, and five brothers. Funeral from Christian church. Sermon by W. B. Richards.

GLADWIN.—Walter Scott Gladwin was born October 30, 1839. Baptized when about twenty-seven years old, ordained an elder a few years later. Moved to La Conner, Washington, over twenty years ago, opened up the work in that place, and he and his wife kept the work going as long as they were able. His wife preceded him some two years ago. Died September 17, 1922. Leaves three sons, two daughters, fifteen grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren.

BROLLIAR.—Lavaine, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maynard C. Brolliar, of Placerville, Colorado. Died at Saint Luke's Hospital, Montrose, Colorado, September 30, 1922. Interment at Grandview Cemetery, Fort Collins, Colorado. Funeral sermon by K. G. Brolliar.

SAPPENFIELD.—Ida May Sappenfield, wife of Charles E. Sappenfield, was born at Georgetown, Indiana, August 13, 1858. Married December 24, 1882. Baptized June 10, 1888. Died October 6, 1922, at Independence, Missouri. Leaves husband, one daughter, one son, four sisters, one brother, and one granddaughter. One son preceded her. Funeral in charge of G. W. Jenkins. Sermon by W. W. Smith. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BRYANT.—Sarah Jane Boyle was born in Ohio, December 25, 1845. Baptized at Buffalo Prairie, Illinois, when about twenty-four years of age. Born on the day we observe as the birthday of our Savior, she devoted her life, after his example, to serving others, sharing with them the rich spiritual experiences with which her seventy-six years were replete, and pointing them to the more abundant life. At the time of her departure she was leader of a women's Bible study class, who, though not of her faith, express great respect and deep love for her. She leaves one brother and two sisters.

BRYANT.—Ezra T. Bryant was born near Indianapolis, Indiana, April 8, 1847. At an early age he united with the church and was an elder for over forty-five years. He was always a very devoted worker for the cause of truth. Even in late years, when handicapped by the infirmities of age, he spared no effort to advance the interests of the church. Brother and Sister Bryant were married May 1, 1870. Of five children born to them, one daughter, Mrs. E. C. Machlan, of Ottawa, Kansas, survives. United in the service of their Maker for over fifty-two years, it seems fitting that they should be laid to rest together. They sustained injuries in an auto accident September 8, from which Sister Bryant died within an hour, and Brother Bryant, without regaining consciousness, passed away September 11. Double funeral service at Ottawa, September 12, in charge of James A. Thomas.

A Little Talk With Your Publisher

WE ARE fully in accord with the proposition herewith made by our advertising department. Very naturally it is a mutual affair—one in which we can both profit.

If we could conduct all the Saints through our plant and show them the equipment we have, all necessary to issue our church publications expeditiously, some would be amazed at the extensiveness of the business. We have a complete modern shop for a wide variety of printing and bookbinding.

Yet these machines and type and tables and desks, etc., are not ours. They are yours.

They are here to serve you. But the machines and the men ought to be kept busy. In the odd half hours and hours between periodicals, books, and office printing, we can do your work.

Your local group may issue a periodical or annual of some kind. We can handle this sort of work exceptionally well and assure entire satisfaction.

We can not only do it quickly and economically but correctly. For instance, we have proof readers whose sole business is to correct all sorts of errors. In a few minutes your job is scrutinized as carefully as though it were a reference work.

You need our facilities. We need your job work, little or big. Whether you have or have not patronized us before, let us submit estimates.

Do You Use Printer's Ink?

YOUR FARM ought to have a name. At the front gate a good sign should proclaim to all who pass that yours is a distinctive place, worthy of a name.

But the name ought to stand for quality and service. Whether you sell thoroughbred cattle, or hogs, or chickens, pedigreed seed corn or potatoes, berries or fruit, honey or sorghum, the name with yours ought to be a guarantee.

However, where the gatepost sign sells a dollar's worth of products for the specialist (and farm specialists are making the money), your letter head and effective advertising inclosures ought to sell five dollars' worth.

We not only offer you attractive rates on printing of this kind, but in addition will help you without charge to plan your printing so it will get most results for the least expenditure.

Stores, garages, shops, contractors—in fact, all sorts of business—will find our printing department specially equipped for all kinds of work, from the simplest to the most complex. We have stock cuts for many lines of business, especially poultry.

Write us for suggestions on how to make printer's ink work for you. Tell us all about your situation, and our advertising department will give you expert advice, without charge, for the good of the Zionie cause.

A Brief Summary of the Conference

The most important business of the recent General Conference was the communication presented on October 2 pursuant to which Floyd M. McDowell was ordained as one of the First Presidency and a counselor to President Frederick M. Smith, and John F. Garver, Daniel T. Williams, F. Henry Edwards, Edmund J. Gleazer, Roy S. Budd were ordained to the Quorum of Twelve, and James A. Gillen as president of the Twelve. Clyde F. Ellis, who was also called to the Quorum of Twelve, will be ordained later.

There were also several who were called as patriarchs, others to the Quorum of High Priests, and to the Quorum of Seventy, and R. V. Hopkins was ordained as counselor to President J. A. Tanner of the Quorum of High Priests.

The seventies urged the reaffirmation of General Conference Resolutions 230 and 231, which provide that the Twelve and Seventy are to be first sent and first supported from the church funds. This includes the support of their families.

The seventies also presented a resolution providing for the discontinuance of all projects during the conference year and the concentration of the church funds in the missionary work of the church.

The Order of Bishops recommended that, except emergency expenditures which may be approved by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, in no case shall the amount allowed to church appointees' families exceed $1,800, and the amount for personal traveling expenses exceed $1,800. This was interpreted by the Presiding Bishop as applying to the balance of the fiscal year, but was then construed by the conference that it would continue in effect until set aside by the General Conference.

The Order of Bishops recommended that expenditures for the conference year be reduced to correspond with the receipts and that a committee of three, one from the First Presidency, one from the Quorum of Twelve, and one from the Presiding Bishopric, be chosen to work out the details.

The Order of Bishops also recommended that on account of the deficit in operating receipts amounting to approximately $10,000 a month for the past twenty-seven months, that the building of the auditorium be postponed until next General Conference.

They also recommended that Graceland College be authorized to raise the necessary funds, $15,000, for a gymnasium by subscriptions from alumni and friends of the college, but this resolution was laid on the table.

The Seventy also pledged their support to the Twelve in an endeavor to carry out the spirit of sections 114 and 122:5 of the Doctrine and Covenants, and that the expenditure of money in any form not authorized by the General Conference or indorsed by the council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric be strictly prohibited.

All these financial resolutions except that with regard to Graceland College were adopted by the conference.

The conference set the date of the next meeting for October 1, 1923. The Quorum of Twelve elected F. Henry Edwards as secretary.

The conference approved the finding and recommendation of the joint council in the Warren E. Peak case, that the silence imposed should be lifted and that the right to represent the church should be restored.

A resolution was adopted favoring Near East Relief.

The church historian, the church secretary, one each from the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, were chosen to consider the book of Conference Resolutions and bring it to date, reporting to the next General Conference the results of their labor. A motion obtained that selection of alternates by districts and stakes be discontinued.

A committee of three was appointed, one from the Presidency, one from the Bishopric, and one from the Twelve, these bodies to make their own selection, to consider the rules of representation and report to the next General Conference.

A motion that it is the sense and understanding of the three Quorums of Seventy in council assembled that any communication coming to the church in the nature of a revelation should be presented to the several quorums of the church prior to its presentation to the general body was laid on the table.

A recommendation from the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric concerning the calling of men to the priesthood in branches, districts, and stakes was deferred until next General Conference, with the provision that it be published in the SAINTS' HERALD and Priesthood Journal.

The boundary line between Eastern and Western Colorado Districts was changed.

The boundary lines of the Utah District remain as at present.

The Massachusetts District changed its name to the Southern New England District.

The England and Wales Districts were changed to Northern and Midland and Southern Districts, and the Wales District.

The matter of the Department of Religious Education and a board to supervise publication of books in religious education was deferred until next General Conference.

The committee on Book of Mormon Archaeology maps and the committee on the Inspired Version reported progress and will probably be able to report by next General Conference.

A resolution that the Seventies be represented in the joint council was deferred one year.

A resolution that we favor the abolition of the Indian Bureau, so that the Indians may develop their potential usefulness, was referred to the joint council for report in one year.

The Sunday school was granted privilege to use its funds towards printing of textbooks in religious education.

The Christmas offering from January 1, 1922, to the end of 1923 was made a part of the general church fund.

The Standing High Council was approved as previously appointed.

Local Missionary Work

Opportunities are great for missionary work by local men.

The church is confronted with a grave need for an increased force of missionaries throughout the world. One way that this can be accomplished is for the local priesthood wherever possible to take charge of the work and release a General Conference appointee to go abroad and to devote his time to doing missionary work, where they have not had opportunity to hear the true gospel of Jesus Christ and the New Testament church as restored.

Unfortunately in many cases, as we know, an effort is made to secure a local pastor, then he is not supported by the local priesthood. They take a semi-vacation. Much of the work can be well handled by the local priesthood if they energetically desire to do all that is possible in fulfilling the duty of their office and calling. This requires the service of every deacon, every teacher, every priest, and every elder or man holding the Melchisedec priesthood.

In many instances the Aaronic priesthood is busy, but the Melchisedec priesthood considers that only the president of the branch should be energetically at work. This, of course, is an erroneous assumption. If it is a hastening time, it is a time when every man should be willing to thrust in his sickle and reap.

This local work in the branches may not be as glorious as missionary work, but the real work of the church can rarely be adequately reported, and the ministry to the Saints to feed and edify the body of Christ is as essential as is the missionary work to outsiders.

We have a great number of men holding various offices in the priesthood. How great would be the work accomplished if each man were doing all that lies in his power! How many to-day are doing a third or a fourth of their utmost capacity for service?

Again, there is missionary work to be done at home as well as abroad, whether it be in the large cities or in the country districts. There are opportunities, especially during the months when the roads are good in the country, for opening up new missions in various small towns. This is a work which should be particularly undertaken by the local eldership, with the assistance of the Aaronic priesthood so far as they may, after attending to branch duties.

If the whole priesthood of each branch were thoroughly organized and every man assigned his particular duty, and each man then sought to magnify his calling to do more than he is asked, and should study earnestly and considerately how he can organize the work under his direction for better results, how much, indeed, could and would be accomplished from each of our branches as a nucleus!

There are these two great opportunities before the local ministry, especially: first, to release the hands of men who are able to give their whole time to the work of the church by taking care of the local branch work wherever that is at all possible; second, on Sundays and evenings to arrange for missionary work away from the home branch, on the part especially of the eldership and others whose services can be spared, in order that the branch becomes itself a center of missionary activity.

This local missionary work can be supported by the young people and others in the distribution and collection of tracts. It is a work for the whole church that he who is warned should warn his neighbor. The field lies ripe to harvest. Why do we stand idle?

S. A. B.

A Look Forward

The late General Conference presents much of an encouraging nature, and some are already suggesting that we may in the future look back to it as one of the greatest that we have ever held.

The class work undertaken each week day morning at 8.30 was of high grade and has been splendidly commented upon by those who were privileged to attend. The educational features were also carried out in the morning and evening lectures at the Stone Church. Abundant opportunity was therefore offered of an educational nature for all who chose to profit thereby.

We recognize the splendid service that has been rendered by the retiring members of the Quorum of Twelve. They have traveled widely and have labored earnestly for the good of the cause. But the work of the quorum being primarily a missionary one, it is not surprising that men younger in years should be chosen to take up and carry on the responsibility, and to carry the gospel of the kingdom into the remote corners of the earth.

The spirit of the men released deserves our very highest commendation. Brother Russell, in accepting his call as patriarch, and Brother Griffiths, as he left for his home, voiced the spirit that they have expressed all the way through. At no time did they raise the slightest objection to their release, but expressed continuously their willingness and intention to labor and continue to pray and work for the cause of the church wherever the church wished them, and wherever they could labor to the best advantage. Elder U. W. Greene was too ill to attend and Elder C. A. Butterworth is in Australia. We do not doubt but that they will share the like spirit.

Some commented on the fact of the unity and the loyalty and devoted purpose of the men as expressed on Friday, the 13th. But perhaps the more striking factor is that these men of the minority at no time offered anything else than their best devotion to the church, and at no time did they express or hold any such idea as resigning or trying to secure a factionalism. At no time was their spirit one of, "I must have my way or I will quit." Their plea was for certain principles, and these principles were in the end recognized much farther than they had hoped for in the beginning. Their very earnestness and what they considered the cause of truth still holds them most loyal, not only to the work of God and his church, but also to their brethren and associates.

If any received a different impression, that is unfortunate, but it does not change the facts. And this fact gives us the greater confidence for the solidarity and success of our work, that we have not a few, but many men of strong caliber, who, while they may at times differ greatly, still are capable of a great reconciliation and a great work of cooperation and reconstruction.

It is true that there were not many spiritual manifestations in the prayer meetings, but those who can sense the undercurrent know that men were praying as they had not prayed before, earnestly and sincerely. It was a time of deep, silent prayer for direction by the Spirit of God.

The sermons were all of a very high order. When one considers the strain under which these men were laboring, the spiritual and intellectual power of their efforts becomes the more surprising.

Humility was shown also in splendid degree by the new men and by the leading officials of the church. We have published a number of these statements, which show their individual expressions of faith, and their determination to work together as fully as is possible.

We have stated elsewhere the action of the conference on finances. There seemed to be nearly a unanimity of opinion, and certainly a decided effort to reduce expenditures to a minimum and to do everything possible to create and build up confidence, and give the church the assurance that the funds contributed will be carefully administered. This is one of the striking and outstanding features of the conference. It does not bespeak an unwillingness to go forward, but a determination to take an accounting and to make our financial structure safe before we proceed.

S. A. B.

The Forum

The reason for its existence and the basis for assignment of articles to it.

The Forum is a department established in the HERALD in the first place for the discussion of social and economic questions, on which opinions differ so widely. But it was made broad enough to include all mooted or controverted questions.

Some have written and have demanded that articles be printed there because of an erroneous idea of a free press. A free press does not mean that everything offered must be published, regardless of its literary quality or value. That would be literally impossible. There must be editorial responsibility, but the criterion is never whether the editors personally agree with the viewpoint of the writer. Many things have been published in The Forum with which we do agree; articles have been published elsewhere with which we do not agree. Nor have these questions necessarily been determined by the church. Articles have been excluded from The Forum on the ground that they were not sufficiently well written.

The manner of treatment has much to do with the place where an article is used. If it is controversial, or the subject is inherently controversial, it is usually placed in The Forum. But that does not mean that the editors agree with everything that appears elsewhere in the HERALD, for that certainly is not the case. The criterion is whether an article is sufficiently well written and discusses a subject of general interest. Some articles to which individuals may take exception in some phases have appeared elsewhere, because the fundamental concept or manner of treatment is not essentially controversial.

We have doubted at times the advisability of so many departments. The HERALD should be a representative organ for the whole church and should discuss fairly the questions of general church interest, both pro and con. In many instances people have objected because the opposite side was not published when we have not received any manuscript discussing the opposite side. The editors have been strongly tempted many times to prepare such articles themselves, but considered it wiser as a rule to refrain from so doing. It should be and is open to all on a basis of literary merit and value, and general interest of subject matter. S. A. B.

Church Offerings

In view of the economic conditions prevailing, it is of interest to note the amount contributed by various denominations for all purposes. The average as given by the yearbook of the churches for all denominations, totaling a membership of over 46,000,000, is $10.50 per member.

The Seventh-day Adventists, with 100,673 members, donates over $6,400,000, an average of $63 per member. The Baptist churches averaged $8 per member, but this included the more than 3,000,000 colored people. The Northern Baptists, white, show an average of about $16 per member and the Southern $11 per member. The various societies of Friends (117,239) show an average donation of about $12.50; the Lutherans, $14; the Mennonites, $14; the Methodists, white, about $19; the Presbyterians of all kinds, an average of $24. But the Northern Presbyterians averaged $28, the Southern, $30. The Unitarians, with a membership of 103,936, average about $15. The Mennonites have a membership of 91,282, yet show a total donation of $1,339,000. As compared with this, our own church showed for the year 1921 a membership of 95,713 and a total amount of less than $594,000, an average of a little over $6 per member.

The Seventh-day Adventists practice tithing on the basis of one tenth of the gross income, but these various figures show what can be done and is being done by others.

We are, of course, not certainly advised as to the basis on which these figures are made. It is quite possible that they may include pastoral fees. In fact, the amount asked for is the total amount raised for all purposes. If so, it would seem that the amount contributed by this church, including special funds—Christmas offering, Auditorium, etc.—the amount contributed to local church work, would have greatly exceeded the sum of $600,000.

Most churches have suffered the last year or so from the economic conditions in the world, but some have arisen in faith and sacrificed more than ever before. And many of them show but a comparatively small decrease in the contributions per member. S. A. B.

Books Suggested by President McDowell

In a speech at General Conference, published last week, President McDowell urged the reading of late books on sociology. On request, he names the following as especially worthy.

- The Social Problem, Ellwood, $2.10.
- The Reconstruction of Religion, Ellwood, $2.35.
- Social Psychology, Ellwood.
- Sociology and Modern Social Problems, Ellwood, $1.50.
- The Social Gospel and the New Era, Barker, $1.60.
- Sociology; Its Development and Application, Dealey, $3.10.
- Sociology and Social Progress, Carver, $4.10.
- Applied Sociology, Fairchild, $2.35.
- The Family in Its Sociological Aspects, Desley, $1.10.
- Democracy in Education, Hart, $2.35.
- The Soul of Democracy, Griggs, $1.60.
- Causes and Cure for the Social Unrest, Finney.
- The Psychology of Social Reconstruction, Patrick, $1.60.
- Social Religion, Nearing, $1.85.
- Christianizing the Social Order, Rauschenbusch, $2.35.
- The Social Principles of Jesus, Rauschenbusch, $1.25.
- Christianizing Community Life, Ward-Edwards, $1.25.
- The Heart of the Christian Message, Barton, $1.60.
- The New State, Follett, $3.60.

Provisional homes were found for four of the children from the Children's Home last week. Bishop Yarrington and Miss Zilpha Monroe accompanied them to Independence. The children and homes are as follows: Christina McBain goes to her grandmother at Fresno, California; Javonna Pierson to Traverse City, Michigan; Isabelle Staggey to Independence and Elbert Rush to Troy, Kansas. The family at the home is growing quite small rapidly, but arrangements are being made for others who are waiting to take their places.—Lamoni Chronicle.

Does the Church Function Efficiently?

Sermon by Elder Leonard S. Rhodes, at Spokane, Washington, Sunday, April 23, 1922.

A colored parson had just finished his sermon in which he had emphasized the fact that the gospel is free to all, and the plate was being passed for the collection when a brother in the audience spoke up, "Say, Bre'r, Ah thought you said de gospel am free."

"Deed Ah did, Bre'r Jones, but yo all has to pay for de pipin' ob it."

My sermon this morning is free; but if we put it into practice we shall be obliged to pay for the "practicin'." It will cost real money and much persistent effort, but it will be an investment that will pay rich dividends in souls saved; yes, and in temporal riches, too.

There is a continent of undiscovered possibilities in every individual and in every institution which, when found, broadens and builds us spiritually, mentally, physically, and financially, and makes of us the embodiment of success. This church has not yet found itself, has not yet wakened, but it must and will; and when it does we may look for the gospel to go forth in power to the nations.

"Does the church function efficiently?" is a question you have a right to ask—which you should ask; and to which I shall attempt an answer this morning. But before I go into the subject I shall read two texts, one found in Matthew 16:30, Inspired Translation, and the other in Timothy 2:15:

For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

It will not do violence to the texts to paraphrase them thus: "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every church according to its works." Do you believe he will? In the past he has rewarded the nations according to their works, as Egypt, Babylon, and Rome. Then why not the churches—the Catholic, Methodist, Mormon, and every other church? Do you believe they will be punished for the martyrs they have made, or rewarded for the good they have done? Do you believe we shall be rewarded for the good we have done as a church? Oh, certainly! But have we any sins of omission or commission to account for? Are we willing to see and admit and correct them? Be that as it may, I believe we shall be rewarded as a church, as well as individually, according to our works, and the works we do not accomplish we may expect to receive no reward for.

Will our second text express a truth if rendered thus: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, an institution that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly presenting and applying the word of truth." Need we be ashamed? Are we presenting the "word of truth" by successful and result-getting methods? Are we getting a maximum of results for the effort expended? Are we utilizing the truth to the best advantage? It is ours. It is free. But it is worse than wasted if we do not put it to proper use, even though it may cost us something to do so.

A Business Man Seeks Salvation

Now let us imagine a case—a perfectly logical one. Suppose a business man, a sinner, wants salvation. He is seeking it. In this respect the story would be unusual because, like specialties which are always seeking the customer and are seldom sought by the customer, so it is with salvation. Far more often do we find salvation seeking the sinner than the sinner seeking salvation. But this business man feels the need of salvation and he is searching for it. Mind you, he is not a drunkard, a libertine, a gambler, a man with a criminal record. But he is intelligent, well dressed, successful in a business way, and has a winning personality. He feels a conviction of sin; that he is beneath the standard of holiness; and his soul hungers and thirsts after righteousness. "What must I do to be saved?" he is praying. He is logical enough to know that inside the folds of some church is his best chance for full and complete salvation, with less danger of falling from grace. What church shall he join?

Every Latter Day Saint author would of course in some way bring him into contact with the everlasting gospel and have him investigate it. And for the purpose of this discourse we are going to follow the beaten path and have our prospective convert do the same. But let us bear in mind that he is a business man—a hard-headed business man, looking for results. He cares little for theories, less for dogmas, and despises excuses—it is salvation he is after. Can the gospel and church service we offer save him to the uttermost? Can it make him a through-and-through Christian with the least wasted effort and risk? We may contend with our competitor churches as to who should have him. Doctrine may be debated and mud thrown. But to him his salvation is preeminent. He has a soul to save. We have but a convert to make, a new member to baptize. But his rights to salvation must remain unchallenged by any other consideration.

The Reorganized Church Investigated

But to proceed, his attention has been directed to the claims of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He finds it scriptural in doctrine and biblical in church organization. But does he end the search and embrace our faith with joy? Does he remark that at last he has found the pearl of great price? Not yet! His investigation has not gone far enough. To be sure, he is happy and hopeful, but what more does he demand? Results! Results mean more to him than anything else. He wants salvation—not victory in debate, private or public, but to be saved. “But, Brother Rhodes,” some one urges, “our gifts, doctrine, and organization are Christ-given; does it not follow without question that we should and do obtain superior results?” Let us withhold the answer to this question until we learn what our prospective convert learns by his investigation and comparison of us with other denominations.

Investigation and Contrasts

Last Sunday he attended one of the so-called orthodox churches. A quiet orderliness and dignity pervaded the service that impressed him. There was little or no talking and none above a whisper. A soft light came through the stained glass windows, upon every one of which was a picture and atmosphere of Bible times. Sweet notes began coming from the organ, and presently those of the choir quietly took their places. One part of the service blended harmoniously into another. Spiritual anthems prepared him for the sermon that followed. The minister has been schooled in the art of public speaking, and while some may call it “flowery,” his points were well made and not soon forgotten—he did not serve a big “meal,” spiritually, but it was easily assimilated. He knew when to quit and did. Our visitor felt impelled to worship, for surely God was there.

To-day he attends the Latter Day Saints' service. There is a noisy, confusing hum of voices as he enters to find himself a seat. I was going to say, “Babel of voices,” but that might offend. Truly we are a sociable people, and God grant that we may ever be, but we are not reverent (in actions at least), and there is little of dignity to the service. Finally, there is a peal from the organ or a call to order by the one presiding, and then a rush for seats in the pews and choir. Perhaps the organist or chorister must be looked up and tactfully urged to take his place. I have had to do that when presiding. After the two or three opening hymns, and prayer, the pastor, a local minister, or perhaps a missionary preaches the word. He prides himself in his ability and courage to call a spade a spade. He unflinchingly points out the defects and failings of the competitor churches in faith, doctrine, and practice—quotes some obsolete book on their belief in hell or some other monstrous doctrine. He does not know that it is a law of the human mind that it cannot be antagonized and influenced at the same time; but our visitor has friends and relatives in these other churches. He leaves with a headache because the deacon became so wrapped in the sermon that he forgot the ventilation and fire.

During the week he chances to be at one of the homes of the Saints where the priests are to call. He has learned of and appreciates the wisdom of this provision in the church law, and when they call he of course expects something uplifting. But fearing the “outsider” might not understand, they dispense with their prayer and exhortation and make it an informal call. Or perhaps they evade a legitimate question, ride a hobby, or stay till the family is on edge to be about other duties.

Our prospective convert is a manager of men—of salesmen. He well knows that where a group of men are concerned the science of success demands that they and their work be planned and directed; that “pep” meetings and conventions must be frequently called to arouse and enthuse them and call out the best that is in them; that they themselves must plan their work and work their plan; that bulletins filled with live, snappy suggestions, and accounts of good and unusual work accomplished must be circulated among them, all to the one end that success be overtaken. That he may intelligently do his part and help them overcome difficulties and their own weaknesses, he requires a detailed daily report from each man under him. He knows, too, how prone men are to lose time; not just a little time, but many hours, that soon amount to days and weeks, without their having the slightest idea how much they are actually wasting. In the light of all this knowledge and experience he observes our missionary. The latter appears to have no definite schedule, except to preach in the evenings during a series; he knows little or nothing of how to do effective house-to-house work; no records are kept of what little he does do; if he studies, it is not well directed; he attends no missionaries' meetings, nor does he receive bulletins of any kind to stimulate and encourage him; he is left to work out his own problems, to get discouraged or enthusiastic as the mood may strike him; the direction of the supervisor amounts to little more than telling him where to go, or of a call to preach or debate; the weekly report does not call for any definite information and often gets little or none, it goes not to the supervisor there to be summarized and forwarded to headquarters as it should, but direct to the First Presidency; and finally much time is wasted, not indolently, but because of a lack of systematic direction. And all this time souls are being lost because the message of salvation does not reach them.

Please remember that I am not charging that all of these conditions are true all the time in all the branches and of all the church representatives. But all of them are true some of the time, and some of them are true all of the time in most if not all of the branches and regarding many of the church representatives.

The Laggard

Further investigation reveals that an enormous amount in sermons, tracts, and money is spent to average one convert. We may object, but it is nevertheless proper to measure the success of our missionary and revival efforts by the number of converts we make and keep. Isn't that what we are working for? Is it not true that we make every church program second to the missionary program—the business of making converts? Again I remind you that our prospective convert, having found a people scriptural in organization and doctrine, is looking for results. Will he find them? Or will excuses be substituted? Will he be apologetically informed that the world is growing so wicked that it does not want truth and righteousness, and that we must expect to play a losing game? I plead with you, let us no longer insult the faith, hope, and intelligence of millions of God-fearing people the world over by such an assertion. Nor let us too hastily claim superiority of quality, even, for our brand of Christianity. Loyalty to our faith does not demand blindness, but rather a serious comparison of efforts and results. In spite of the fact that our organization was perfected and designed by Christ especially for missionary work, we are far outdistanced by several churches. The Christian or Campbellite Church, founded by Alexander Campbell a few years before ours was organized, has now over one million, two hundred thousand members. The Christian Science Church, founded by Mary Baker Eddy about 1866, has over a million members (1901 figures). Even our own church in the first fourteen years of its existence enrolled at least 150,000, while the Reorganized Church has been seventy years enrolling less than 100,000. Apparently we are the laggard church.

Will the Gospel Save the Church?

Our business man "seeker" has found the pearl of great price. But will he be able to recognize it amid all the rubbish and refuse? He has found the "body of Christ" striving to heal others, yet unaware that it, too, needs healing. The First Presidency has made efforts to remedy the condition, but well meaning Saints have resisted them, fearing innovations, worldliness, or apostasy. They argue that the gospel is unchangeable; that the law of the Lord is perfect; that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. All of which we concede—and now let us state it in a concise, definite manner: The gospel knows nothing of self-evolution; it needs no change, revision, or improvement; and is therefore the perfect, everlasting, and unchangeable law of Christ for the redemption of man. Therefore man by its power will be changed, revised, and improved by a process of evolution, mental and spiritual, until he shall be perfected and saved individually, as a church, and as a race. Does the gospel save? Will it save the church, or only individuals in the church? Can we as a church analyze our condition from the findings we make? Certainly the gospel of Christ is not at fault, but the church as a body of imperfect men and women may be. Let us, therefore, prove all things and hold fast that which is good. Twice I have preached a sermon entitled

"The Church Best Fitted to Save"

As evidence that the Reorganized Church is the church best fitted to save, I set forth the fact that its doctrines or principles, gifts, and plan of organization are in exact harmony with those set forth by Christ in the New Testament. From this I reasoned that we must indeed be the church best fitted to bring salvation to humanity since all acknowledged the infinite wisdom of Christ as compared to the founders of man-organized churches.

The position has seemed logical, but I have lost confidence in it. There was one disturbing element that I had overlooked and that was the human element. Unless this element functions properly, it will not matter what kind of an organization or doctrine is back of it. I would rather belong to a man-made organization that has adopted some of the teachings of Christ and which is functioning at a maximum of efficiency than to belong to a Christ-made organization that has almost ceased to function at all. Wouldn't you?

Let us make some comparisons. The Mormons, for instance, have an organization very similar to ours; they teach the six principles and claim the gifts. But do we admit that they produce the same brand and quality of Christianity? No, indeed! We charge that at certain times in their history certain men and quorums did not function properly, and as a result they lost some of their fitness and efficiency as a church. Or let us consider the Salvation Army. Their organization no more resembles Christ's than a battlefield reminds us of the millennium. Nevertheless they are going into the brothels, gambling and vice dens and hell holes, into the highways and byways of the earth, among the downcast, and bringing salvation (in some degree at least; see Doctrine and Covenants 76,) to those who respond to their ministrations. How many have we saved from such lives? bringing them up, as it were, from that lowly, unlovely kingdom of the telestial? Not many, I regret to confess. Do you suppose many of our self-righteous members would sit beside or recognize these lost or unfortunate ones from that great telestial underworld? Not much! We draw our righteous robes tightly about us lest they become contaminated, and pass by on the other side. Before we exultantly spread our beautiful peacock feathers, let us inspect our ugly feet of clay for a while. Let me ask you again, Is this church functioning at a maximum of efficiency? It is not creeds, titles, doctrines that count, but results.

By Our Authority

"But," some one argues, "we alone of all the churches have authority to baptize, administer the ordinances, and direct the church." True, but authority without results is an empty show, a display of titles. Authority does not spell efficiency. Nor is it a magic wand, the touch of which brings mysterious or miraculous results. It is results, not rights, that command respect. But our members do not show as much respect for our God-given authority as do the members of other churches for their man-authorized ministers. Neither do I blame them. Until we are trained for effective work, skilled in the art and ability of influencing the human mind, getting action where formerly we got assent, thereby making our services centers for the imparting of spiritual truth and knowledge that will be applied, instead of social gatherings only, we must not expect the fuller respect and confidence enjoyed by the trained ministers of other churches. The conferring of authority is but the conferring of an opportunity to enter a wider field of usefulness, an injunction to qualify by continuous study, the offering of a reward according to the results obtained.

An Uneducated Ministry

We have boasted that our ministry is uneducated, theologically at least. But why boast about it? Surely the results have been disappointing enough! I am not criticizing individuals, but our mistaken system. All honor and praise to the men who have worked faithfully against this handicap; they have done well and nobly. But the fact remains that we have been far outdistanced by those churches that have trained their ministers. Of course most of our local men are spare time men, earning their living outside of the ministry. We have asked men who are tired and spent from the day's toil to do the biggest things God ever asked at the hand of man, thinking to save a few dollars in allowance money. We need vigorous as well as trained men. But let us bear in mind that the things that we really need and are worth while we pay for, whether we get them or not.

But a few of our local men are said to be getting their just wants and needs from the church. Are they? Indeed they are not! They needed preparation and training, but they have not obtained them. They have wanted to acquire some modern aids and books enjoyed by ministers of other churches, but they have had to forego these things because we have supposed we could get something without paying for it. We have interpreted the law of "just wants and needs" as a chance to "save money"—we really mean a chance to "withhold our offerings"—when in reality it was intended to prompt us to greater service and liberality. We have been penny wise and pound foolish. We have thought in terms of scrimping, meagerness, and we have reaped the reward of an untrained ministry, a membership poor in this world's goods, and a church functioning at low ebb. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

Is the World Growing Worse?

We are solemnly and repeatedly informed that the world is growing worse. "The Bible says so and it must be true." The world cares little for Christianity in general and much less for the true gospel, we are told. Are you sure of that? Read the texts on which you base that doctrine again, and study them. Even if the world is growing worse, our preaching it from the pulpit is a mistake. It is pessimism with all its mischievous, harmful, stupefying results. It is a spiritual soothing syrup that puts us to sleep and slows down action. It makes us morbid and suspicious of the world. It deprives us of courage, makes slackers of us, and suggests failure as our goal. Did you ever notice how on the night before election the opposing political leaders each predict success for their cause? They suggest victory to their supporters to spur them on to one last effort. But we administer chloroform to our followers by suggesting victory for the Devil—failure for us. However, this doctrine supplies us with a good excuse for failing to make converts and Christians—and Brother Bronson assures us that back of every excuse is a falsehood.

I am convinced that our view of this doctrine or prophecy is wrong. If the world is growing worse the fault lies with us and the Christian churches in general. The world buys automobiles, insurance, cash registers, aeroplanes, and ten thousand other useful things, but it will not buy religion that saves! No; it does not buy any of these things; they are specialties that constantly seek the customer, and are seldom sought by the customer. Likewise salvation must seek the sinner, for the sinner seldom seeks salvation. If the world is growing worse it is because there are too many foolish virgins among the wise; it is because too many watchmen are fallen asleep; it is because the children of this world are wiser in their generation than are the children of light; it is because we have failed to warn our neighbors; it is because we have not been wise servants, if we are harmless as doves.

The world may be growing worse, nevertheless it is yearning, hungering, bleeding, dying for salvation. But with stammering lips, impotent arms, and trembling knees we have failed to respond. The great field is white unto the harvest—and we are unprepared. How hardly shall we be rewarded for the works we do not do. Let us, then, find a way over, under, around, or through every obstacle. Every church shall be rewarded according to its works, not its excuses; then let us quit making them and get results.

"Salesmen Wanted: Ministers Preferred"

Did you ever see that kind of an advertisement? I never have. But ministers, and especially our ministers, ought to be so well trained that every sales manager would consider he had won a prize in every minister he could employ. But what are the facts? J. S. Knox, an expert business man and teacher of salesmanship, informs us that one of the great insurance companies places ministers at the bottom of the list as possible successes in selling insurance—not at the bottom of the successful list, but at the bottom of the doubtful list. Think of it! Costly experience, not prejudice, forced them to do that. And ministers ought to be at the top. Do not suppose that selling insurance is "different"; it is not. In both cases a service, a form of salvation is offered the prospect. In both cases the prospect must be influenced to think as we think, feel as we feel, and act as we would have him act. F. H. Luhman, general sales manager for the North Ridge Brush Company, teaches that it requires ten years for one to develop into a real salesman, yet we put our elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, our salesmen of salvation, forward with little or no special training or preparation and expect inspiration to do it all. The province of inspiration, or "liberty," as we call it, in preaching and teaching is to elevate the message to spiritual planes; to illuminate the mind regarding the subject, and enthuse the speaker, giving the power of conviction and faith to his message. That inspiration is not to teach us the science and art of influencing the public mind is evident from the fact that so many spiritual ministers transgress the laws of this science with consequent scarcity of favorable results. The fact that there are no books, tracts, or sermons claiming to be written by inspiration and teaching salesmanship is full proof that such is not the work of inspiration. Rather has inspiration enjoined us to reason it out in our minds, to study all good books, and to study to show thyself approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed; and when we put these teachings to fullest use our ministers will not be classed as near failures, but we shall read in the want ad columns: "Salesmen wanted: L. D. S. ministers preferred."

Result-getting Methods

Failure is the result of ignorance. If our methods are forty-nine per cent right and fifty-one per cent wrong they lead to failure. Fifty-five per cent correct methods may bring a limited success, but we deserve nothing less than 98 per cent correct methods and the resultant full measure of success. Success is just as easy to attain as failure, once we have learned how to apply the laws of success. Why not study, learn, and apply them? Our creed is "All truth." Not that we have all the truth, but that we are seeking "All truth"; not alone in doctrine, but also in the best methods of spreading and continuing it. A few of our ministers have achieved success in their calling, but with their passing went the knowledge they had gained and used—no effort apparently has been made to conserve and use that knowledge. This is unfortunate. Their helpful experiences and result-getting methods should be constantly collected, classified, and forwarded to all the ministry; or at least made available to them. We should not stop here, but search among business men and other churches in our quest for the truth and the best methods of spreading it. We shall need to abandon nothing that is good, but rather to prove all things and hold fast that which is good.

Furthermore, every ordained minister in the church should be taught to apply the most successful and result-getting methods that can be used in his office work and calling. This should include knowledge of salesmanship, which means the ability to cause others to think as we think, feel as we feel, and act as we would have them act. "Scientific salesmanship," according to J. S. Knox, "is not a veneer, an outside polish. It consists in developing the man, physically, mentally, and spiritually, and in teaching him to harness these wonderful forces of his." If scientific salesmen, who are the ambassadors of commerce, seek to develop themselves mentally and spiritually, is it not of far greater importance that the ambassadors of Christ develop themselves in like manner? Or can we get along without this development and save the expense? It is a truth that the things we really need and ought to have we pay for, whether we get them or not. Ours is indeed the highest priced religion on earth, but as in commerce so in religion, both the world and the church are willing to pay for the best since the best costs the least in the end. Ours is not a cheap, untrained-minister religion; then let us not continue to cheapen it by price-cutting methods. The National Cash Register salesmen are the best trained salesmen in the world, and they get results. Let us make our ministers the best trained ministers in the world, and with the best gospel on earth the glad tidings should spread quickly to all people.

"Twenty Thousand Converts"

President Smith's slogan, "Twenty thousand converts," is a fine start in the right direction, but it needs skillful organization and thorough preparation to bring it about. Merely announcing it to the conference and through the church papers is not sufficient. A program for making twenty thousand converts in a year should be, and would be, backed up by the entire church as one. On this point it appears that in theory we are organically one church, but in some respects at least we are congregationally inclined; that is, we are too loosely bound together as congregations. We are a confederacy, not a union; we are the churches, not the church. We need church machinery set in motion that will cause us to function as one.

For a practical suggestion on this point, suppose each district and branch be given a quota of converts to make and the general church officers organize to help them reach it. It would be an excellent plan for the general officers of the church to map out a program of missionary meetings to be held wherever possible throughout the entire church. What a lot of unity, enthusiasm, and spirituality it would generate! To secure the best results, only the best trained speakers should be selected, with the meetings assigned to each speaker arranged in geographical order. It might be practical, occasionally at least, for every speaker to use the same subject, on the same evening, just as was done during the wonderful Zion Builder Series.

Missionaries not qualifying as trained speakers would be willing to sacrifice personal importance for the success of the effort. Those skilled in tracting and personal interviews should train the others for this work. Some of them could be sent in advance to prepare the way for each effort, by preaching, organizing and conducting daily prayer meetings, engaging meeting places when necessary, and supervising the advertising programs. They would not do all the work, of course, but would train the local workers along the same lines they themselves had been trained, especially in tracting and advertising. Activity generates enthusiasm.

The Publicity Department should be working full blast in fine harmony with the national campaign. Bulletins should be sent out almost daily with suggestions, reports of results, experiences, number of baptisms, etc. Perhaps access to the secular press could be more readily obtained with free publicity and paid advertising when a national effort is being made, than when there are fifty disjointed efforts going on. The wonderful radio, too, might be called into service. The more completely organized and planned such an effort would be, the proportionately less expensive it would be, and the more productive of results. Are we ready, Saints, to step forward as one in a grand effort to make twenty thousand, yes, fifty thousand converts in one year? It can be done; it will be done.

Aiding the Local Ministry

But why fifty thousand converts without a competent, active, well-trained, and well-organized local ministry to care for them? If the missionaries and their work need special attention, and they do, the local ministry and their work need it even more. It is my firm conviction, based on fifteen years of experience and observation, that no man should be permitted to assume the important office and responsibility of branch president without a course of instruction and training along the lines of his duties, how to conduct branch work, and the church's policies regarding branches, their history, form, purpose, etc. It may not be practical for him to attend school for this purpose, but a well-written and instructive correspondence course would fill the need. And oh, what a lot of grief, perplexity, and contention it would save! So far as I know, there is not a single book listed in the Herald Publishing House catalogue, the purpose of which is to aid a Latter Day Saint pastor in his problems. We are long on doctrinal books and tracts, we bristle with arguments, but we are short on how to put the teachings of Christ and the church into effect. Not only would I urge a course of instruction for branch presidents, and books prepared and published for their benefit, but I would also urge that there be pastors' meetings at the district reunions and conferences, and oftener if possible. Quorum meetings where possible may be helpful, I do not know, having never had the privilege of attending one; but I am sure that the exchange of ideas at pastors' meetings would be a wonderful help if conducted by a capable elder or district president.

Some house-to-house salesmen receive from several days to a month of training before they are sent out by the firms employing them, and their training is carried on continuously during the period of their employment. But what about our house-to-house men, the elders (not presiding), priests, teachers, and deacons? Their work is sufficiently difficult and of sufficient importance to demand training, is it not? After they are called and before they are ordained they should be given at least ten or twelve hours of training by the pastor or some one qualified to instruct them how to perform their new duties. Perhaps tracts or leaflets should be given them to study and learn and keep for reference. Duties of Branch Officers, by E. A. Smith, is fine but not extensive enough; that is, it does not deal with problems, and methods of meeting them. After ordination, study and training should be continuous, regular reports required, and attendance at priesthood meetings insisted upon wherever possible; and no minister should be considered in good standing who without good reason will not perform the duties of his office. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

A New Field for the "Priesthood Journal"

There is a new and broad field for another church paper, and undoubtedly the Priesthood Journal is the logical paper to enter it. If it were several times its present size, published at least monthly, and laden with result-getting experiences and suggestions for the pastor, the priest, the teacher, and the deacon, what a grand service it would be to the ministry.

One department of it should be filled with instructions, suggestions, experiences, and results, for the branch presidents, district and stake presidents. How to get all the local ministry to work and secure maximum results from them; how to aid the local effort of the national missionary campaign; how to aid and cooperate with and secure the cooperation of the Sunday school, Religio, Boy Movement, Women's Department with their Temple Builders and Oriole Girls; how to discourage the practice of theater going, dancing, and card playing; how to minimize factionalism; how to avoid elders' courts, or if necessary, how to conduct them; how to lead prayer and sacrament meetings, and how to conduct baptismal services; and any other problems that may be general should be live topics. In all these problems pastors are now left practically alone, each to work out his own solution.

In another department the priest should find helpful suggestions on how to organize his work; how and where (with the elders) to create new openings; how to encourage family worship; how to instruct members regarding their family duties; how to encourage and arrange for the baptism of children; and how to solve the many problems peculiar to their work. The teachers' department should teach them tact and the difficult art of the peacemaker; how to discourage hardness and indifference among the members, and when and how to bring a case before the elders.

He may be "only a deacon," but he has a great and important work to do, more far-reaching than acting merely as a janitor, though the latter may be and is a part of his work. His department should aid him in solving the heating, seating, and ventilation problems; suggest ways and means of collecting finances for local expenses; how to care for the church buildings and grounds, keeping them insured, in repair, and attractive in appearance; and how to do solicitor work for the bishop and his agents.

Do you not get a vision of the wonderful work there is before every branch officer of this church? Surely the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is a sleeping giant; how long shall it be before it is awakened to hasten its work in its time?

The Hidden Treasure and the Field

Saints, brothers and sisters, you and I believe in this church. We believe that in it we have found the pearl of great price, the perfect law of the Lord. We adore it as the divine truth restored from heaven by the messengers of God. Some of us have died for it; now shall the rest of us live for it? It is indeed the marvelous work and a wonder that we are associated with, but are we a part of it? are we doing a marvelous work and a wonder? or are we but the awestricken multitude at the foot of thundering Sinai? We have so long marveled at its splendors that perhaps we have forgotten to become skilled in the presentation of it to others. We have bought the field wherein the treasure is, but we have neglected to search for the treasure.

Just as we teach that faith without works is dead, so must we also learn that a doctrine unexpressed in action is of no value. This church was not built to admire for doctrine, titles, and beauty, but to get results—to save dying humanity. This church above all others will be rewarded according to its works, not its pleas of self-justification. Then let us remember that above all things, above claims, teachings, titles, above our rights and the rights of all other churches, is the right of the sinner to be saved. If we do not save him, and some other church, in spite of their defects, does, to them will go the reward. Our true doctrine, miraculous gifts, and marvelous organization alone will not save the sinner, but in this setting we must function at highest efficiency and as one or lose the reward. Lest we claim too proudly that we are latter-day Israel, let us be admonished that of the very stones can He raise up a church to carry His words into effect.

There is a human element in this church that shall be and is the deciding factor, whether we are the church best fitted to save or not. Too long have we existed with too meager results; let us awaken and teach all nations. If the world is growing worse, who is to blame? Is the arm of salvation shortened? is it weak? No; but it is not sufficiently active. To us belongs a large share of responsibility if iniquity abounds and the love of many wax cold. Let us awaken and go out into the night of storm, rebellion, hate, sorrow, and sin, and carry the message of salvation to poor, bleeding humanity. Mankind needs salvation; mankind wants it; mankind will accept it if we will but convince them that we are genuine. Is it not written that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess?

But before we go forth with the message, let us become great in love, welded in unity, and skilled in the methods of presenting the message; let us study all good books, to the end that men in greatest numbers may be saved. In the name of him who is the Savior of the world, let us so labor that we shall become workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly presenting the word of truth; and remembering that every church shall be rewarded according to its works, let us learn to function efficiently in the highest sense. To this end shall we labor and pray, God helping us. Amen.

Handel's "Messiah" is to be sung at the opening of the New American Royal Building in Kansas City, on the evening of November 18, by the Lindborg Oratorio Society, of Bethany College, Lindborg, Kansas. This aggregation of singers is famous for having specialized on this wonderful production.

The United States Government has provided for the recall of mail by the sender on the theory that a letter belongs to the sender until it is received by the addressee. Naturally, the expenses of the return of the letter must be met by anyone who wishes to recall. This applies even if the letter has left the city, providing the expense of telegram or cablegram both ways is prepaid and a satisfactory reason given for its return and proof of original authorship. This does not apply in the case of mail to Great Britain or its colonies, because according to English law a letter once mailed belongs to the person addressed and is accordingly delivered. This provision in the common law has been modified by Federal statute in America.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Pay for Conference Delegates

Delegates to our recent General Conference will no doubt be interested in the following item from the Toronto Daily Globe of September 30, concerning the Canadian Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

"One western visitor who watched the conference vote an allowance of $1.25 per day for meals to each delegate, expressed in an undertone his doubt as to the feasibility of stretching that amount to cover two visits to a restaurant, and car fare, but the vote went through without protest. Another delegate thought that $3.50 per day for meals on the train was too much, and suggested $3, but failed to secure support. Conference adopted the $3.50 without further question. In addition to meal allowances, each delegate draws transportation charges, cost of berth, and necessary hotel expenses while en route."

There are 378 delegates in attendance, 11 of whom are women. This is the first time that women have been admitted as delegate members in such a conference. Delegates came from all over Canada from the twelve Methodist districts into which the Dominion is divided. They were allowed railroad fare and a per diem allowance while traveling, as well as at the conference. The small amount allowed for expense at the conference would be a strong inducement to complete the work within a reasonable time.

Recent Finds in Relics of Lost Race

In the southwestern corner of Idaho, near the Oregon and Nevada line, some new finds have been discovered in a deserted section by Robert Limbert, of Boise, Idaho. An account of his finds, with photographic illustrations, appears in the Popular Science Monthly for November, 1922.

"More than thirty acres of rocks in the sage-covered plain near the junction of Battle Creek and Deep Creek in southwestern Idaho are covered with hieroglyphics," the account reads. "Two distinct types of rock writings have been found. One is the ideograph or sign type, similar to those discovered on the ancient rocks of China; the other is the pictograph type, used extensively by the early Indian tribes of America."

It is said that there are more than twenty mounds near by, all pointing north and south, and in the same vicinity are strange caves which have never been explored.

So far it is not known whether these records are left by people contemporaneous with the cliff dwellers or whether they are earlier work.

From the Santa Fe Magazine for October, 1922, we learn that some interesting hieroglyphics have been discovered of late in rocks on the Carriza plains of California. The place is called Painted Rock and measures approximately three hundred by twelve hundred feet and rises more than a hundred feet above the plain. The walls and ceilings are covered with drawings and paintings which indicate that these people living in the misty past were sun worshippers.

William P. F. Ferguson, archæologist and author of Franklin, Pennsylvania, was on his way east Wednesday after announcing that he had discovered the ruins of an ancient city, inhabited probably one thousand to two thousand years ago, on Isle Royale, off the north shore of Lake Superior.

Mr. Ferguson announced he would return next summer with another expedition to conduct further explorations of the city, which was situated, he said, on the southerly side of the island and consisted of a series of semi-underground dwellings.

"Most everyone knows," Mr. Ferguson said, in making known his discovery, "that copper was mined on Isle Royale many years ago on land now covered with pine trees. The island is covered with traces of these mines and yet almost nothing has been done to explore the workings.

"No one has found any of the remains of the old miners, although there are many stories of finding tempered copper weapons. I have found several stone hammers, each supplied with thongs.

"A writer named Gilman was authority fifty years ago for the report that the town existed, but his description and location were vague."

Further details concerning the uncovering on Isle Royale of what he believes to be remains of homes used by miners of the Stone Age while taking copper from Isle Royale were given by William P. Ferguson, archæologist, of Franklin, Pennsylvania, who is in Port Arthur while on his way home from his summer activities.

"Isle Royale is definitely placed as a Stone Age mining district," he said Wednesday. "Mining was in progress there at least one thousand years ago; how much longer we do not know, but we found pines six feet in diameter growing on the ancient rock dumps. We found an area covering at least half a mile in width and two miles long, over the whole of which we found remains of human habitations.

"There were larger pits which had been dug for homes. They ranged from eight to ten feet deep and they were protected by carefully built stone walls which kept them free from water, and apparently had been covered by wooden roofs. They, incidentally, used communal dwellings, as some pits were twenty by forty feet in diameter and one, which may have been a fort, was fifty by eighty feet.

"These people mined in solid rock the whole island over, but did not dig their shafts more than twenty or thirty feet deep. Their tools were black, egg-shaped stones of great hardness which are found on the shore of Black Bay, on the north shore of Lake Superior, but not on Isle Royale."—Saginaw (Michigan) News Courier.

Decadence of Morals

The Christian Work, an undenominational periodical, reviews a series of articles by Doctor Bernard I. Bell, president of Saint Stevens College, in the American Church Monthly, on the moral revolt of the younger generation.

He has conducted a series of conferences in one of our great universities and concludes that "our young people are not inquiring, What is the content of the accepted and conventional morality? They know what that is, but they want to know why they are bound by it. They want to know why they should remain chaste, honest, truthful, or should practice self-denial. They demand, in other words, a rationalization of morals. They have been educated to regard themselves merely as animals; there has also followed an over evaluation of sex. As one student said, "Ethics means just what is customary. Why should I be a slave to mere convention?"

A London clergyman is reported as saying to Doctor Frederick Lynch, editor of the Christian Work, that the young men and women of to-day are not questioning the doctrine of the church; they are questioning the validity and reasonableness of its morals and ethics. It is not the Apostles' Creed they are concerned about, but the ten commandments and others.

Doctor Bell, in a later number gives what he considers to be the reasons for this condition and emphasizes the church's responsibility for education. The great university is not concerned primarily with religion, nor even with character or manners; its direct business is research and technical education. There is more real tolerance and sympathy towards other people's religion in the small church college than is found in the large undenominational university.

The main point that Doctor Bell emphasized is that the young people of to-day have no moral sense, because they have no spiritual and religious background.

International Friendship

Nearly two hundred delegates met in Copenhagen in August as members of the World Alliance for International Friendship. This is a department of the movement for a united Christian church and has for its purpose peace between Christian nations.

When they met two years ago, according to Christian Work, the delegates from the Balkans would hardly speak to each other, because of trouble over religious minorities, and the French and Germans both came protesting. This is now past; the French and German delegates met frankly and courteously in open conference and straightened out their difficulties. The Germans admitted the mistakes made; there was a spirit of reconciliation on both sides, and a spirit throughout the meeting in favor of another and greater international conference meeting in an atmosphere of Christian brotherhood, to cope with the great problems now menacing the peace of mankind.

Another resolution, proposed jointly by the French and German delegates was: "The churches of the world strive together for the attainment of universal peace, which cannot be successfully realized without both mental and spiritual disarmament."

An Illustrated Lecture

On October 17, to a crowded roomful of people, Elder Charles F. Putnam showed about seventy stereopticon slides at the Church of Christ building on the Temple Lot.

The subjects included pictures of ancient American ruins, pottery, animals, etc., which substantiate the Book of Mormon story. His lecture accompanying was interesting and the entire evening's program was educational.

Elder Putnam carries with him about three hundred slides and a stereopticon machine. "The little machine has caused many baptisms," says Brother Putnam. Probably he uses archaeological subjects in this way more than any other missionary in the church.

He has a handbill with a small picture of himself on it, and the following wording, which he says never fails to fill the house with an audience. It reads:

WHENCE CAME THE RED MAN?

See the pictures of the ruins of palaces, temples, forts, towers, roads, aqueducts—that a once great race of people built in this land of America. See the skeleton of the great monster that measured 87 feet from the tip of his tail to the tip of his nose. Once he roamed at will over this land of ours. Astounding evidence along archaeological lines is at hand. You may not agree with us, but you are welcome to-night at the L. D. S. church at 8 p. m. where these pictures and evidence will be on the screen. You are welcome and there is no admission charge. Room for all. Elder Charles F. Putnam will be the speaker at the —

A Foretaste of Self-consecration

It has been so beautifully defined by Brother Joseph Flory and Brother I. M. Smith. It seems that it will do everything for us. It will purify and sanctify and remove all kinds of dross; then carnality will find no place among us, for we will be born again and adapted to the new life. Then we will sell our goods without extortion for we will love our neighbors as ourselves and will love our enemies, and bless them that curse us, and do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that spitefully use us and persecute us.

The stewardship plan will affiliate right along with it like drops of oil that cannot be separated. We will not care to sail on flowery beds of ease, but will want to be tested and tried as gold in a furnace. We will love the Lord's chastening hand, for he loves those whom he chastens to bring nearer and closer to him. Oh, how blessed will be they who abide this testing, refining process for the church militant. Thus is our foretaste of the fruits of self-consecration.

Many of us are only on the threshold of the kingdom, so let us consecrate self, each family apart, and enter in and occupy the glorious opportunities which the Lord has provided. Words are inadequate to explain the sublime grandeur of the celestial law, including the law of tithing which is beautiful.

Brother Ralph W. Farrell and others have cleared their skirts of our condemnation by their timely warnings to our rescue. May the Lord help us strictly to heed the Christlike admonitions that we may esteem the Lord's messengers as angels of light who are struggling hard to see that his law is kept.

Fijian Marriage Customs

Peter Laurie, of Australia, writes that in Islands Far Away, by Agnes Gardner King, a niece of Lord Kelvin, on page 177 appears the following:

"It was formerly the universal custom in Fiji for boys, as soon as they reached the age of adolescence, to leave the parental roof at night, and sleep in a large mbure set apart for unmarried men. Here also the married men generally slept during the long period when the wife was suckling her child (about three years). Women were never admitted to this mbure. The missionaries, in trying to establish family life according to our ideas, interfered with this custom, so that it is now found only in the more remote parts. The morals of the people, however, have suffered in consequence.

"The Fijian women generally nurse their children for a long time, partly because they have no other food adapted to them while they are young. They never have babies in quick succession, as it is thought highly improper and wrong, and in former days a woman's family punished her husband in a summary manner if a new infant appeared on the scenes sooner than they considered right. They say that the reason Englishmen as a rule 'are such shrimps' is because the families are too numerous, and the members too near of an age."

We think that the facts above related are now quite well established, that these so-called savage people, and the same is true with other savage people, allow three years between children; also that they have their puberty customs. It is quite a live subject and is variously discussed by different writers as some on the other hand claim to find a certain promiscuity or certain peculiar habits. Brother Laurie writes suggesting this as an interesting subject to discuss, "The heathen who know no law will have part in the first resurrection," evidently referring to those who keep the law that they do know and are careful in their habits.

Abraham Lincoln a Prophet

Statements attributed to this great man in which he seemed to have a foreknowledge of his end.

This great man, though dead for many years, yet speaketh, and in his unique manner gives us his wonderful observation in his day and time. It is with the hope of helping some one to know him from his own words, that I essay the task of compiling statements from the history of the past.

This answer was drawn out by an earnest appeal of one of his ardent admirers who approached him relative to the opposition that was working against him, and especially his administration as President of the United States:

"Man must not care where and when he will die, provided he dies at the post of honor and duty. But I may add, today, that I have a presentiment that God will call me to him through the hand of an assassin. Let his will, and not mine, be done!" Quoted from a book written by the Reverend Mr. C. Chiniquy, a Frenchman, in Fifty Years in the Church of Rome, page 695.

"But I see no other safeguard against those murderers, but to be always ready to die, as Christ advises it. As we must all die sooner or later, it makes very little difference to me whether I die from a dagger plunged through the heart or from an inflammation of the lungs. Let me tell you that I have, lately, read a passage in the Old Testament which has made a profound, and, I hope, a salutary impression on me. (Here are these passages.) Deuteronomy 3: 22-28: 'Ye shall not fear them; for the Lord your God shall fight for you. And I besought the Lord at that time, saying: O Lord God, thou hast begun to show thy servant thy greatness, and thy mighty hand; for what God is there, in heaven or in earth, that can do according to thy words, and according to thy might! I pray thee, let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon. But God was wroth with me for your sakes, and would not hear me: and the Lord said unto me, let it suffice thee: speak no more unto me of this matter. Get thee up unto the top of Pisgah, and lift up thine eyes westward and northward, and southward and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan.'

"I have read these strange and beautiful words several times, these last five or six weeks. The more I read them, the more it seems to me that God has written them for me as well as for Moses. Has he not taken me from my poor log cabin by the hand, as he did Moses in the reeds of the Nile, to put me at the head of the greatest and the most blessed of modern nations, just as he put that prophet at the head of the most blessed nation of ancient times? Has not God granted me a privilege, which was not granted to any living man, when I broke the fetters of 4,000,000 of men, and made them free? Has not our God given me the most glorious victories over our enemies? Are not the armies of the Confederacy so reduced to a handful of men, when compared to what they were two years ago, that the day is fast approaching when they will have to surrender? Now, I see the end of this terrible conflict, with the same joy as Moses, when at the end of his trying forty years in the wilderness; and I pray my God to grant me to see the days of peace and untold prosperity, which will follow this cruel war, as Moses asked God to see the other side of Jordan and enter the Promised Land. But do you know that I hear in my soul, as the voice of God, giving me the rebuke which was given to Moses? Yes! every time that my soul goes to God to ask the favor of seeing the other side of Jordan, and eating the fruits of that peace, after which I am longing with such an unspeakable desire, do you know that there is a still but solemn voice which tells me that I will see those things only from a long distance, and that I will be among the dead, when the Nation, which God granted me to lead through those awful trials, will cross the Jordan, and dwell in the land of promise, where peace, industry, happiness, and liberty will make everyone happy, and why so? Because he has already given me favors which he never gave, I dare say, to any man in these latter days. Why did God Almighty refuse to Moses the favor of crossing the Jordan, and entering the promised land? It was on account of his own nation's sins! That law of divine retribution and justice, by which one must suffer for another, is surely a terrible mystery. But it is a fact which no man who has any intelligence and knowledge can deny. Moses, who knew that law, though he probably did not understand it better than we do, calmly says to his people: 'God was wroth with me for your sake.' But though we do not understand that mysterious and terrible law, we find it written in letters of tears and blood wherever we go. We do not read a single page of history without finding undeniable traces of its existence. Where is the mother who has not shed tears and suffered real tortures for her children's sake? Who is the good king, the worthy emperor, the gifted chieftain, who have not suffered unspeakable mental agonies, or even death, for their people's sake? Is not our Christian religion the highest expression of the wisdom, mercy, and love of God? But what is Christianity if not the very incarnation of that eternal law of divine justice in our humanity? When I look on Moses, alone, silently dying on the Mount Pisgah, I see that law, in one of its most sublime human manifestations, and I am filled with admiration and awe. But when I consider that law of justice, and expiation in the death of the Just, the divine Son of Mary, on the mountain of Calvary, I remain mute in my adoration. The spectacle of the Crucified One which is before my eyes, is more than sublime; it is divine! Moses died for his people's sake, but Christ died for the whole world's sake! Both died to fulfill the same eternal law of the divine justice, though in a different measure. Now, would it not be the greatest of honors and privileges bestowed upon me, if God, in his infinite love, mercy, and wisdom, would put me between his faithful servant, Moses, and his eternal Son, Jesus, that I might die as they did, for my Nation's sake! My God alone knows what I have already suffered for my dear country's sake. But my fear is that the justice of God is not yet paid: When I look upon the rivers of tears and blood drawn by the lashes of the merciless masters from the veins of the very heart of those millions of defenseless slaves, these two hundred years: When I remember the agonies, he cries, the unspeakable tortures of those unfortunate people to which I have, to some extent, connived with so many others, a part of my life, I fear that we are still far from the complete expiation. For the judgments of God are true and righteous.

"It seems to me that the Lord wants, to-day, as he wanted in the days of Moses, another victim—a victim which he has himself chosen, anointed, and prepared for the sacrifice, by raising it above the rest of his people. I cannot conceal from you that my impression is that I am the victim. . . . My escape from their hands, since the letter of the pope to Jeff Davis has sharpened a million of daggers to pierce my breast, would be more than a miracle. But just as the Lord heard no murmur from the lips of Moses, when he told him that he had to die, before crossing the Jordan, for the sins of his people, so I hope and pray that he will hear no murmur from me when I fall for my Nation's sake. The only two favors I ask of the Lord, are, first, that I may die for the sacred cause in which I am engaged, and when I am the standard-bearer of the rights and liberties of my country. The second favor I ask from God, is that my dear son, Robert, when I am gone, will be one of those who lift up that flag of liberty, to the end of his life, as his father did, surrounded by the millions who will be called with him to fight and die for the defense and honor of our country."—Ibid., pp. 706-709.

This conversation occurred a short time before his assassination by the hand of a murderer sent by those who had undoubtedly fostered and fed him for this very act.

We generally speak of prophets as members of our church. Let that be what it may, yet here was a prophet who was a Christian man, and who understood what was to take place in the near future as touching his work and the problems of the Nation to which he was thoroughly consecrated. Though my people came from the South before I was thought of, yet they left there because of the situation that was apparent to every thinking person, that sooner or later (1832) it would bring a division between the North and South. Good people are often mistaken, and it is useless to abuse them for their misunderstandings, but to pity and help them to make discoveries of better way of doing things should be our method of procedure.

I could file the reason why the President of these United States spoke as he did at that time, but alas! Why should we keep the sins of a people before them, when they have departed to some extent from those unhallowed precepts of the Dark Ages? May we never be led to such conditions as many of our fathers and mothers had to submit to.

Respectfully I subscribe myself your colaborer,

A. H. PARSONS.

Thrift Talks

Cyrus Nelson was a farmer boy; a good-natured, hard-working young man who loved the soil and rural life. Cyrus was never out of a job at good wages. The farmers for miles around would be glad to hire him, and already he was drawing twenty-five dollars a month more than any "hired man" in the neighborhood.

Effects obey their causes by immutable laws. The reason young Nelson, at twenty-five dollars above the average, was still in demand, would be as true when applied to any other man. Cyrus Nelson took a genuine interest in his employer's farm. He could see things that needed to be done even on rainy days. On stormy nights, or when the stock was sick, he looked after it as though it were his own. He was kind to the children, pleasant and helpful about the house, and was able to accommodate himself to every condition. Men who never earn more than they get, will never get more than they earn. Thrift creates tithing.

Indian Meeting

Much interest was manifested in the meeting Monday evening, October 16, at General Conference, called an Indian meeting.

It was in charge of Elders A. H. Christensen and Hubert Case. Prayer was offered by Jack Koshiway, one of our Indian brothers of Oklahoma.

Elder Christensen spoke for about ten minutes at the beginning of the session. Evidently he summarized the points he intended to make in his sermon on "Grafting in the tame olive branches." That it is easier to convert the Lamanites than the Gentiles was suggested by the brother. "It is easier," said he, "to graft in these branches than wild branches. This church should not have, as other churches have, an Indian department, but they should be accepted as brothers and sisters on an equality with the rest of us. The fact that we had already manifested that spirit has had much to do with our favorable reception by the Indians.

Believing that the priesthood of the Lamanites, continuing down from ancient times, makes them natural branches ready to be grafted into our priesthood tree, the speaker believed the Indian mission work should be continued. We must first go to them so they will be able to come to Zion.

A verse was recited by a wee Indian girl, Birdie Koshiway, daughter of Brother Jack Koshiway.

"Our charge" was the theme of Elder Case, which was defined as the Book of Mormon. Briefly he reviewed the situation among the Indians. The Omahas, Winnebagoes, Sioux, Shoshones, Chippewas, Iowas, Otoes, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Utes, Poncas, Osages, Little Kaw, Kiowas, Commanches, Wichitas, were mentioned; and from most of these we have made converts, with many believing.

The Book of Mormon has not been put to work, quoted Brother Case, from a conversation with Sister Christiana Salyards.

The Indian wants the truth, the light. He prays for it, and therefore is ready for it. Brother Case is an enthusiast about the Indian work, and thinks it should be prosecuted with much vigor. "We have not thrown away our efforts. We have almost as many Indians in the church now as we have natives in the Society Islands," said he.

The song, "Where he leads me, I will follow," was sung, and a verse suggested by Brother Koshiway added:

"We have wandered long in darkness
But have found the narrow way."

The address of Brother Koshiway, following, was typically simple and full of the effective metaphor of the Red Man.

Though not wearing the costume of the Indians, he donned a war bonnet and blanket and demonstrated with the aid of Brother Case the coming together of the Book of Mormon and the Bible. His great-grandfather was a chief, and the oral tradition was that a religious authority passed down through the generations.

When he saw the trend of the recent conference he said he felt to say, "If you white people won't accept of the gospel, we Lamanites will, and come in and build up Zion ourselves."

The processes in his conversion were interestingly presented. He was interested in religion, but felt that the churches were not preaching the gospel in its fullness. When he heard the Saints he was interested, and especially in the Book of Mormon as a record of his fathers.

The fulfillment of the promise that the Lamanites would become a white and a delightful people was being literally fulfilled. The acceptance of and living of the gospel seemed to bring the whiteness suggested. Excepting "perhaps a little bottleful" of French blood, Brother Koshiway is a full blooded Otoe.

He explained the religious significance of the apparel and ornamentation worn by the Indians. Some exceptionally beautiful garments were shown.

Brother Christensen reported that the sending of the Ensign to the Indians by those who would send their papers to addresses furnished is a success and the plan will be extended.

A trio in Indian tongue was sung by Brother Koshiway, wife, and daughter, and the audience joined in the English version of the same song, "God be with you till we meet again."

Missionary Work for All

A short time ago the author of the following article was requested to prepare a brief story to be used in connection with our Foreign Mission Christmas Offering Campaign. She succeeded so admirably that we are giving the HERALD readers the benefit of her contribution as printed in Stepping Stones of October 15. This is one of a series of short articles which have been running in our Sunday school paper about our missionaries laboring abroad and their missions. Read them. Your interest in our missions will be quickened and your knowledge of their scope enhanced.

Superintendents and teachers can assist in this worthy cause by calling the attention of their school or class to these Christmas offering articles.

We will publish the picture of the Sunday school having the highest average-per-member offering for 1922, in the next issue of the Blue Stepping Stones. There are a few of the thermometer designs left which will be mailed to superintendents upon request.

THE 1922 CHRISTMAS OFFERING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

By Tevaite

Tahiti is a very, very small land—so very small compared with this great, large country of America, but it is our land, our birthplace, our land of inheritance. Tahiti is a little larger than the other small lands or islands of the sea. It is there that the steamers from strange or foreign lands stop. Many hundred tourists come ashore.

Our homes are very near the ocean; every one of us have seen the big body of water called the Pacific. We fish and bathe in it. We have little land and lots of water, while in America you have much land and little water.

You are accustomed to a great many things which are not known by us. It is surprising the many things here that we know nothing about. The large churches, schoolhouses, factories, and many, and many other things.

It gave me great joy to attend the Sunday school in Independence. I was astonished at the attendance, so many, many times larger than our little Sunday school in Papeete. There, we have one or two classes of children, two classes of young people, and two classes for the older ones, not more than that.

In the beginning, we did not bring our offering for Christmas until Christmas Day. That day we brought and gave our money, but now we bring our Christmas offering every Sunday.

My people are diligently trying to do the Lord's work. They are uplifted and strengthened by the marvelous things that the foreign missionaries make known to them. Their great desire is to know, "What is the condition in Zion?" They are trying to build up the kingdom of God there as you are here; also the priesthood, they are trying to fulfill their office. All the departments of the church are active.

It is now nearing the end of my fifth month among you.

Mrs. Anna a Avivi at the reader's left and Miss Tevaite Petis at right. Sister Tevaite, the author, returned to America with our nurse, Ethel Hanson, and is now studying to prepare for church service among her people. Both of these sisters are ardent Sunday school supporters.

I have seen and learned many things which are helpful to me, and I hope before the cold weather, that I hear of but know nothing about, is over I will have learned much more that will be beneficial to my people.

The Central Christian Advocate for October 18, 1922, again makes a comparison between the Book of Mormon characters and Egyptian hieroglyphs. We have repeatedly pointed out the absurdity of this comparison. Any person who knows enough to note the Egyptian hieroglyphs knows also how decidedly different such characters are from the demotic script of Egypt. We are planning soon to make such a comparison in reply to some of the attacks made upon these characters which were copied by hand by Martin Harris. But certainly to compare these script characters with the hieroglyphs of Egypt or the pictographs of America is absurd to any student.

Independence

The Quorum of Twelve adjourned last Wednesday, the 25th, and from reliable information secured we are assured that all the sessions were marked by brotherly kindness and the utmost of fraternal good will. Each of the brethren goes to his field or assignment with vigor and hope, to carry the spirit of harmony and affirmation into all the world. Some of them are in charge of definite fields to direct the missionary work. The appointments of the ministry have been turned over to the HERALD for publication this week.

Brothers Garver and Williams have returned to Lamoni, where a conference of the Lamoni Stake will be held. Brother Garver will resign as stake president. Brother Paul M. Hanson has been in Omaha the past few days. Brothers Rush-ton and T. W. Williams are in Independence still, but are planning to return to their homes in California ere long.

Brother T. W. Williams, as superintendent of the Religio Department, which is now being called the Department of Recreation and Expression, has been at work on the local side of his problem in this line. Sister Dora Glines and Doctor G. L. Harrington are also active in these conferences. Conferences are being held with heads of local departments in an earnest endeavor to arrive at a proper basis for procedure in the most progressive manner possible. In the meantime all Sunday schools and Religios and organizations of women are being instructed to continue as at present. Suggestions will be offered via the church papers whereby those who wish may try out new methods.

Brothers J. W. Rushton and J. F. Curtis preached morning and evening at the Stone Church.

President Elbert A. Smith left Friday for Iowa by auto, taking his family. He will visit Garden Grove and Lamoni, and if the weather is favorable possibly drive to Nauvoo.

The radio programs are going out with excellent radius each Sunday at 2 p. m., 360 meters. Last Sunday the speaker was Elder F. Henry Edwards. The previous Sunday it was Elder F. J. Lewis. The speaker on the last Sunday of the conference was Elder Glau R. Kuykendall. The music has been of a high character, Brother George Anway happily securing excellent talent and good variety. The attention given to this by the Central Radio Company is greatly appreciated, and as the Saints install more sets and hear these programs with ease without expensive equipment, isolation will be less disadvantageous. They hear these programs with ease at Lamoni.

The Religio program next Friday evening will consist of a stereopticon lecture by Apostle F. Henry Edwards. He will use slides made from some of the many pictures taken by President Frederick M. Smith while in England last year.

Elder Walter W. Smith was speaker at the annual Homecoming Day services at Des Moines on Sunday. He reports ideal weather, large crowds all day, with the Saints as usual on these occasions serving meals in the basement of the church. Brother Smith preached morning and evening.

Elder S. A. Burgess was called to Lamoni on Saturday to attend the funeral of A. D. Greer, husband of Doctor B. A. Greer, aunt of Brother Burgess.

The manager of the Sanitarium, J. W. Chapman, thanks all who so graciously donated fruits, vegetables, jellies, and preserves on Independence Sanitarium Day, August 31, to the institution.

Beginning next Sunday evening and continuing for seven weeks, the Sunday evening services at the Stone Church will be given for the special benefit of the young people of the Stone Church congregation. The sermons will be preached by younger men of the ministry and those considered specially qualified to speak to young people. Subjects to be discussed will be current problems of present-day interest to young people. Special congregational singing in charge of Harold C. Burgess. The following list of speakers and subjects have been chosen: Floyd M. McDowell, "A potential Zion"; Frederick M. Smith, "Loyalty, the watchword in Zion"; Walter W. Smith, "Spirituality plus preparedness our slogan"; Daniel T. Williams, "Zion the beautiful"; Roy V. Hopkins, "The two Zions"; John F. Garver, "Zion the pure in heart"; Elbert A. Smith, "Christ the pattern."

Elder U. W. Greene is considerably improved and has been out riding some of late.

Ideal autumn weather has prevailed of late. Heat records for this time of the year have been broken.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending October 28: Betty Sue Cameron, J. M. Burnett, Mrs. Ruth Whitmire and Baby Whitmire, and Mrs. Emily Grainger, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. B. H. Standefer, Dallas, Texas; Miss Louie L. Hall, Wichita, Kansas; G. W. Johnson, Lamoni, Iowa; J. F. Wortz, Blue Springs, Missouri; George Swain, Madison, Oklahoma; Paul Fiddick, Cameron, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. C. W. Trego, Clara Hansen, Violet Essig, Beulah Quick, D. S. Lentz, and Lela Peterson. X-ray patients: Mrs. V. D. Ruch, Bevier, Missouri; Mrs. Emily Grainger, J. M. Burnett, Kansas City, Missouri; John Fieldhahn, Levasy, Missouri; Charles Henry Heiszler, and Mrs. J. E. Davis, of Independence.

Kansas City Stake News

Stake missionary, Brother Amos T. Higdon, announces a series of special meetings at the Fourth Church, Forty-third and Garfield, commencing October 29 and continuing.

The home-coming at Second Church was a very happy gathering, many old-time members coming from various parts of the city to be present. The program was diversified but appropriate, consisting of speeches of reminiscent character with vocal and instrumental music. It is an annual affair with them.

The class work of the Women's Department opened all over the stake this week, the organization having been effected before the conference. A large enrollment was had. The Bennington group will study section 4 of the normal training course under Sister Gerber. Mount Washington, section 1, normal training, Lula M. Sandy teacher; Book of Mormon, Sister Sheldon teacher. Armourdale group, section 1, normal training, Sister Oxendale teacher. Argentine group will study with Armourdale. Grandview group will study household management, Sister Jellings teacher. Quindaro group, section 1, normal training, Sister Lula M. Sandy teacher. Fourth Kansas City group and Second Kansas City group will study together at the Fourth Church, section 2, normal training, Lula M. Sandy teacher. Malvern Hill, section 1, normal training, Sister H. O. Hands teacher. Heathwood mission group, section 4, normal training, Ray Lloyd teacher. Social service class will study under the direction of Sister Mary Moats. Forbush Study Club will work under the direction of Mrs. Charles Sandy. The Public Speaking Club every Thursday night under Sister Lula M. Sandy.

The Central class has planned a full day's work for every Wednesday, beginning at ten o'clock; from 10 to 11, section 2, normal training and vocal music, Sister Sandy and Sister Griffith, teachers; from 11 to 12, social service; from 12.30 to 1.30, English, Helen Smith teacher; from 1.30 to 4, millinery or sewing.

A Kansas City, Kansas, class in sociology will meet at the www.LatterDayTruth.org

Grandview church every Monday night and study under the leadership of Brother Merrill A. Etzenhouser, of Independence. This is open to both men and women.

Council Bluffs and Vicinity

About twenty-five of the members of the church attended the conference, and while all have returned to their homes, yet all have not returned with the same ideas in regard to the work of the conference; but I notice that all are entering into the local work as of yore. Some who did not attend, but have depended upon what they have heard, are seemingly more disturbed than those who attended the conference all the way through. While we are somewhat lonely, when we think of the loneliness caused by the vacancies of those who were released from the apostolic quorum, yet with the quorum filled with men who testified of the witness of the Spirit to them of their call to occupy in this responsible position, we feel that there is no reason why the work of the missionary arm should not work with equal or greater efficiency. The church should take upon itself new life, now that the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve with the Bishopric are now filled as God appointed they should be. It is not so satisfactory that the Quorum of Seventy is not more completely filled, but it is more disappointing that this last mentioned quorum is not more highly considered in the general councils of the church. May God hasten the day when each quorum may occupy in the place appointed of God and the Saints recognize their importance as ordained of God.

An effective-speaking class has been organized and is being conducted by O. Salisbury. Not enough progress has been made to make any comment, favorable or unfavorable. We trust that good may result to those who may need such development.

The sisters of the Women's Department are each invited to bring a sheet next Wednesday to be sent to the Independence Sanitarium. This seems to be a worthy object. We look for a large number of sheets being supplied.

A class social was held last Saturday evening by Sister Helen Anderson, at her home for her class in the Religio. We learn that a very satisfactory time was enjoyed.

When Elder J. F. Mintun returned from Independence, where he had been in attendance at the conference for near a week, he brought his son from Kansas City suffering with inflammatory rheumatism. He has been confined to his bed since, but is slowly recovering. Several of those who attended the conference returned home somewhat ill; some have not fully recovered yet. It is thought by some that the water was the cause; others that the food was so good that they overtaxed their capacity; while others thought that the social atmosphere was not health giving.

Last Sunday night the Religio hour was occupied by the junior choir in giving a musical for the entertainment of a large assembly, who felt well repaid for their presence. Such development as these young sisters have made is pleasing to the Lord.

Funeral service of Charles Heath, formerly of Logan and Missouri Valley, who came to his death by inhaling gas, was conducted at the undertaker's parlors last Wednesday, and the remains were taken to Neola for burial. The funeral service of Sister Artina Preston Lawrence was conducted at the home of her daughter, Sister Ellis, of Council Bluffs, August 25. This sister was formerly a member of the church in Bigler's Grove in the time of John N. Burton's ministrations. It was a relief to her from over twenty-seven years of confinement to her bed, and all but a few months of that time in a blind state. Through it all she expressed a patience and saintly fortitude shown by but few of the children of God.

General satisfaction is expressed with the Daily Herald as to promptness of its arrival, and the contents found therein. Several would have subscribed for it, but feared that it would not be as promptly received as it should be, judging this matter from experience had in former years with Conference Dailies. Much satisfaction has been expressed with the postponement of the building of the Auditorium, and the expenditure of moneys for the general missionary work, for which this church was primarily established. It has been thought a wise act in limiting all family expenditures to a maximum, and yet make that maximum so liberal. May God grant that such principles of economy may have been understood, and so much of the spirit of sacrifice—the spirit of Christ—characterize the Saints, especially the ministry and families, that it will be a pleasure to keep far below the maximum in their expenditures in the family this conference year.

Plans are in view here for a faithful and active conducting of all parts of the church work during the coming fall and winter. The home-coming day will be first provided for. Then will follow Thanksgiving services, which I trust will be appropriate in observing this ordinance of State and Nation, "for the Lord's sake."

Arthur C. Shupe Killed

President of La Junta Branch dies in railway accident.

On September 20 we were called to La Junta by a telegram which stated that our third son had been killed. We immediately started for La Junta to find that Arthur C. Shupe had been instantly killed by being thrown from a railroad motor car while in the discharge of his duty as a boiler inspector for The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway.

The account of his death as given by one of the men who were with him is as follows:

Three of them were making a trip over the branch lines of the Santa Fe, inspecting the stationary boilers. They had been out two weeks and were on the last lap of their trip, when as they were making a speed of about twenty or twenty-five miles an hour, on a piece of straight track, slightly upgrade, the motor car without any warning left the track, and Arthur struck his head on the rail or the end of a tie, splitting his head open and causing instant death. The other two men were not hurt and the car did not turn over. His body was brought to La Junta for burial, the funeral being in charge of Elder J. D. Curtis. The church was filled with Saints and friends from Lamar, Wiley, and other places, where he had been known and had labored as a servant of the Master.

He was ordained a priest three years ago and later an elder, and at the time of his death was presiding over the branch at La Junta, Colorado.

The work in Denver is still on the upgrade. Two more baptisms lately. The attendance is good; in fact, many times the church is filled, and we feel that we will have to provide a larger auditorium to accommodate our increasing numbers.

The Sunday school, under the management of Sister Brannan, is making wonderful progress. Many of the Saints who have been touring Colorado the past summer have paid us a visit. Two weeks ago Brother A. P. Crooker, of Wichita, Kansas, paid us a visit and preached the Sunday evening sermon. To-day, the 22d, Brother Frank Almond, of the South Sea Island Mission, gave us a splendid sermon.

Brother William Bradbury, wife, and daughter, of Providence, Rhode Island, were worshipping with us Sunday morning.
E. F. SHUPE.

Uncle John's and Aunt Mollie's Farewell

Eight years, two months, and nine days have passed since Brother and Sister J. M. Terry were ushered into their apartments at 102 North Thirty-ninth Avenue, Seattle, Washington, on their arrival from Oakland, California, as missionaries. They were met at the station by Sister Sarah Barney, and others, and were conducted to the above address, which was amply fitted up for housekeeping, with food in the cupboard and fuel and lights, all arranged for immediate occupancy.

We were soon left to rest and look around after the fatigue of moving. Our household goods had preceded us and had been placed by the thoughtful Saints prior to our coming. We had just completed a twelve-year service in Oakland and Northern California District and we now started on a new era in pastoral experiences under new environs.

A hearty and universal reception was tendered us a few days later, at which we were made sensible of the deep and abiding gospel love, all of which caused us to sense the deep and grave responsibility it placed upon us to respond to such confidence and trust. Days ripened into months and years until eight years have passed. In the mutations of time the period of separation from Seattle approached. During this long period of close association in pastoral work the chords of divine love had been strengthened until the question was, How can they be severed?

We chose to linger in the service beyond the time provided for our release, which was pleasing to the First Presidency, but the time of separation came. On the last day of July the Saints gave us a farewell party in the basement of the church. Members and nonmembers assembled to the number of seventy-two. The time was spent in conversation and words of regret. Our dear young sister, Jennie Williams, told us about "taking an elevator," which afforded much amusement; refreshments were served; and a wonderful social spirit was apparent.

One said, "What are we going to do?" Uncle John and Aunt Mollie, as we had now come to be called, were called to the front and after a few touching and appropriate remarks by Elder D. S. McDole, were presented with a token of regard in the form of a purse, which was responded to by the recipients. The event is stamped upon our memory as an evidence of genuine gospel love.

But our departure was not to occur till the twelfth of September, so sacrament Sunday came and a large assembly of Saints, and the Good Spirit. The Lord spoke words of comfort, telling the Saints though there would be removed one whom they looked upon as father, yet the work would prosper and the Saints would be blessed, if they were faithful.

Our household goods being sold and shipped, we were received cordially into the home of Brother and Sister H. R. Tabbut; the parents of the former constituted part of the Jerusalem colony under G. J. Adams. We were in pleasant conversation when suddenly there wafted into the room from outdoors in sweet musical tones, "God be with you till we meet again." Oh, how sweet; how heavenly! All was silent within, and the tears flowed as we listened. What but heaven, who but Christ, can produce such wonderful ties of sweet fellowship?

Soon they entered. It was a band of our dear young Saints whose spiritual minds and divine love had suggested this final demonstration of celestial love. God bless those dear young people. We want to meet them in the sweet future, where parting sighs will be unheard. We were told by more than one, if we ever needed help in any way to be sure and write them and they would come to our rescue.

On the morning of the twelfth Sister Marian Majors took us in her auto to the station, where we were met again by such staunch friends as Lillie Huch, Gerty Strom, Byron Inslee and wife, Sister Irene Emslie and children, Sister Inslee, Sister King, Emma, and Annie. The cruel train tore us away from many dear hearts and bore us south to Portland, where we hurriedly changed to our quarters on the tourist after a short talk with Brother Larson, who met and helped us. We answered the friendly waves of Sister Larson and Sister Dudley from within the fence. Again we were severed from dear ones whom we knew in Stockton, California, and our course was eastward over deserts and fertile spots, arriving at Zion on Friday evening after eighty hours of travel.

On Thursday night we were invited to the home of Sister P. L. Stillman to spend the evening, when suddenly others began to gather in, and soon the room was filled with former Seattle and British Columbia Saints, also Doctor Rannie.

A very pleasant evening was spent in happy converse and reminiscences. The emblem of purity was there in the form of little Bettie Jean Isenhardt, who received a goodly amount of attention. We are now in Independence and we trust in Zion, and hope to help build up and strengthen, as those who have long worn the gospel harness and delight in the blessed calling.

The blessed friendship of Brother and Sister Thomas McKevit is affording us a welcome home till we can arrange one of our own. We are overwhelmed with delight and astonishment in meeting so many acquaintances of the past, and others who bid us welcome to Zion, the Presidency included.

Church Opening at Lees Summit

On the fourth Sunday in October, the Lees Summit, Missouri, Saints worshiped for the first time in the church building lately purchased by them. The building was till recently occupied by the Methodist people. It has a seating capacity of about four hundred fifty, not including the small Sunday school room. The 11 o'clock sermon by Walter W. Smith was very interesting and profitable. A pleasant time was had during the basket dinner, as there were visiting Saints from Grandview and elsewhere.

Prayer meeting was had at 2.30 in charge of C. J. Hunt, I. M. Ross, and Glauud Kuykendall. Religio at 7.30.

We feel wider opportunities have increased our responsibility, and hope by our diligence that much good may be done. We regret the recent departure of some of our members, the last to leave being Brother L. E. Erter and family. They have located in Independence and will probably attend the Walnut Park Branch. We shall greatly miss Brother Erter, as he was superintendent of Religio and a faithful worker.

Mr. James R. Houghton, who is attending Harvard University this year taking work for an advanced degree in music, has already been chosen out of an unusually large number of candidates as a member of the Harvard Glee Club.

George M. Vandel, pastor in Sioux City, Iowa, received a good report of a recent sermon in the Sioux City Tribune. This paper apparently publishes one Sunday sermon each Monday morning, and on October 9 published that by Elder Vandel, together with cut.

Interesting Meetings at Oak, Missouri

We are pleased to learn of some excellent meetings held in the Far West Stake following the reunion at Stewartville, in which Elder Samuel Twombly, of the Far West Stake missionary force, was the speaker.

The Saints at that place, assisted by the Maple Grove choir, are especially to be commended for their cooperation, with the result that much prejudice and misunderstanding has been removed and friends made to the cause.

Brother John E. Hovenga is enthused over this demonstration of what a live branch, with the assistance of one missionary, can do when it extends its hands to assist sister branches in proselyting.

The stake tent was put up on a beautiful spot on the farm of a Mr. Campbell, a member of the Christian Church. The meetings began on September 15, at Oak, Missouri, about twelve miles north of Stewartville. The affirmative manner in which Brother Twombly taught the gospel story is especially noted, and there is an urgent request that he return at some future time to hold more meetings.

Balancing the Christmas Ledger

We have just printed an entirely new Christmas program for our Sunday schools, which we are sure they will appreciate as being distinctively different from those usually to be had. The theme is the spirit of giving and the Christmas offering is featured.

Small schools, middle-sized schools, large schools, all can use it to advantage, and the costuming is simple.

It is international in scope and will be appreciated by Canadians, Australians, British, and others, as well as by Americans.

It was written by Ermina Perkins Kearney, of Clinton, Missouri, a member of the Pen and Ink Club, and was edited by a committee of that club.

The price is 10 cents a copy, 75 cents a dozen. A dozen copies are desirable for the average school. Order at once and you will be pleased with the production.

Expert Cleaner Wanted

Bishop B. R. McGuire sends us the following: Brother Carl Wirth, 321 West Mifflin Street, Madison, Wisconsin, is anxious to secure the services of an expert cleaner, spotter, and dyer, who is a member of the church. He must be able to do fancy cleaning and sample dyeing. For a man who can qualify he is willing to pay fifty dollars a week, and the work will be steady, if his services prove satisfactory.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN IOWA. At Muscatine, Iowa, October 20, 21, 22. Patriarch Frederick A. Smith and District President Amos Berve, presided. Reports of the various officers and committees were read and approved. Secretary's report showed a total enrollment for the district of 631. Ordinations of four brethren were ordered and on Sunday, the 22d, Joseph S. Baggerly was ordained to the office of elder, Ora E. Lindsay, priest, and William F. Gimblett, teacher. John Gettett was recommended for ordination to the office of deacon. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout the entire conference, a conference that was full of hope and confidence in the ultimate triumph of the work and of faith and confidence in those upon whom the burden of directing the work rests. The Muscatine house of worship was dedicated Sunday afternoon with the dedication sermon by Frederick A. Smith. The preaching of the conference was done by Brothers W. D. Welday, F. A. Smith, and Wesley W. Richards. All those attending left the conference with enthusiasm for the work and with the determination to move onward and upward. Brother Smith gave eleven blessings during the conference. Muscatine ably and efficiently cared for the conference. Time and place of next conference was left in the hands of district presidency. Wesley W. Richards, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

TAYLOR.—Annie B. Taylor was born October 18, 1862, at Massillon, Ohio. Married Harlem Taylor. Baptized September 13, 1915. Died at Independence, Missouri, September 10, 1922. Funeral from the Walnut Park church with James F. Keir in charge.

McELVEY.—Thaddeus S. McElvey was born in Pennsylvania, July 25, 1842. Married Amanda J. Gillmore, November 6, 1910. Baptized five years later. Died after a lingering illness at his home in Eldorado Springs, Missouri, October 5, 1922. Leaves wife and two sisters. Sermon by R. T. Walters, assisted by J. Pleas Budd. Interment in Eldorado Springs Cemetery.

HILLMAN.—Edwin R. Hillman was born in Pennsylvania, May 15, 1839. Married Emily C. Rogers, November 17, 1864. Baptized in June, 1881. Died September 29, 1922, at Bayard, Nebraska. Sermon by Vivan W. Graybill. Interment in Bayard Cemetery. Leaves seven children, forty grandchildren, and seventeen great-grandchildren. Two children died in infancy.

TRIMBLE.—Edward D. Trimble was born October 28, 1847, in Morgan County, Ohio. Married Esther Larkey, November 10, 1870, who died March 14, 1911. On May 29, 1913, he married Mrs. Frank Smith. Baptized about thirty-five years ago. Died at Fulton, Iowa, October 13, 1922. Leaves one daughter, wife, and seven grandchildren. Funeral from the Saints' Church. Sermon by the Methodist minister, assisted by John Heide.

POWELL.—Lorenzo W. Powell was born in Merthyr, South Wales, July 29, 1853. At the age of five years he came with his parents to America. Baptized at the age of thirteen and took an active part in the work of the church. He applied himself to a study of the faith he had espoused and developed an efficiency in promulgating its teachings enjoyed by few men. In 1884, he was called into the ministry and six years later took up missionary work as a Seventy, at which he was successful for a number of years. Married Jennie Evans, of Kirtland, Ohio, in 1892. Established their home in Kirtland and resided there until his death, August 4, 1922. Leaves wife, one brother, three sisters, and a host of friends. Funeral from the home, with John F. Martin officiating. Being a man of lovable personality and excellent character, and having done much to make this world a better place in which to live, as well as giving hope to many through his kindly ministrations, his death brings a loss to his friends which cannot be measured by tongue or pen.

Excellent Chance to Earn Some Money

An excellent opportunity to earn money for Christmas offering or other good purpose is afforded in the sale of our scriptural calendars which have been very popular the past few years.

They are not only artistic and can well displace the cheap advertising calendars that usually clutter up one's home, but constantly encourage one to meditate upon the scriptural passage that accompanies each date.

We offer two kinds, equally attractive. Read the descriptions carefully and send your order. If preferred, order one for a sample and take orders. We will ship when you want them. Upon request we will send illustrated descriptive matter to help your sales.

In order to help you introduce these beautiful calendars we make this offer: Send us full price for one calendar. Then when you order a quantity later, we will credit you the amount you paid over the quantity rate for the first one. Mention this offer when you order your quantity.

SCRIPTURE TEXT CALENDAR FOR 1923

The Attractive Cover

The cover for the 1923 Scripture Text Calendar is a superlative work of art. The theme of the picture is at once the hope and the tragedy of the ages. Christ is knocking at the hearts of men—seeking to brighten their lives and bring them peace and happiness. It is 9¼ by 16 inches in size.

Paintings by Leinweber

The calendar contains the reproductions of twelve paintings by the great European artist, Leinweber, who painted many realistic illustrations of biblical scenes. Some of his originals hang in the leading art galleries of the world.

Twelve Reproductions

Reproductions of the works of this famous artist, all appearing in colors, occur in the following order:

- JANUARY—Jesus with Mary and Martha.
- FEBRUARY—Jesus Feeding the Multitude.
- MARCH—Rebekah at the Well.
- APRIL—The Annunciation.
- MAY—Simeon's Blessing.
- JUNE—Jephthah's Daughter and Companions.
- JULY—Jesus in the Synagogue at Nazareth.
- AUGUST—Isaac Blessing Jacob.
- SEPTEMBER—Jesus Walking on the Sea.
- OCTOBER—Flight from Sodom.
- NOVEMBER—Abraham and Isaac.
- DECEMBER—The Adoration.

Interesting Collection of Bible Facts

A collection of interesting Bible facts concerning the different translations of the Bible, and other items of interest relating to it, are found on the back page of the calendar.

A 200-Year Calendar

On the back page of the Scripture Text Calendar is a 200-year reference calendar, by the use of which you can locate the day of the week on which you were born, any important event in recent history, and, in fact, the dates within two hundred years. A table of the Easter Sundays between 1860 and 1950 is given; also a table of Standard Time Around the World. These educational features add to the practical utility of the calendar and enhance its value to old and young.

Special Offer

As both a very praiseworthy and profitable means of raising church money, the Scripture Text Calendar cannot be excelled. Hundreds and thousands of churches and Sunday schools, and other religious societies, the land over, have made it contribute generously to their treasury, and at the same time have enriched spiritually, both church and community. It blesses both those who buy and those who sell. Twelve members can easily sell 250; twenty-five members should quickly sell 500. Order now all you can use.

DAILY SERVICE CALENDAR

The 1923 Scriptural Calendar that we are introducing to our friends is one of rare beauty, outclassing those of other years in richness and coloring, originality of design, and superiority of workmanship. It is a choice bit of art for the beauty-loving eye to feast upon. Several features not to be found in any other calendar have been incorporated in the Daily Service Calendar for 1923, and they add perceptibly to its attractiveness and desirability. Its size is 10 by 16 inches.

The cover illustration, beautifully executed in seven colors, is by Stemler. This artist has devoted years to the study and production of religious themes alone. Many of his conceptions have been widely recognized as masterpieces. In this painting, entitled "Eunice and Timothy," Eunice is shown instructing young Timothy in the sacred Scriptures. She is availing herself of a mother's supreme opportunity—that of directing her child's early steps in the path of loyalty to Christ and service to his fellow man. No picture could be more inspiring and helpful to the thousands of mothers under whose eyes it will fall day after day throughout the year.

The twelve subjects used to illustrate the twelve months of the year are reproductions from the great masters. Each one illustrates one of the lessons occurring during the month. These subjects are:

- JANUARY, "The Prodigal Son's Return." Dore.
- FEBRUARY, "Pharisee and Publican." Dore.
- MARCH, "Christ in Gethsemane." Shonherr.
- APRIL, "Boaz and Ruth." Gleyre.
- MAY, "Young Samuel." Sant.
- JUNE, "Jeremiah and Priests." Lieberg.
- JULY, "Madonna of the Chair." Raphael.
- AUGUST, "Mary's Choice." Ploekhorst.
- SEPTEMBER, "Paul at Athens." Laporta.
- OCTOBER, "Jonah at Nineveh." Dore.
- NOVEMBER, "The Good Samaritan." Penrose.
- DECEMBER, "The Child Is Born." Scheurenberg.

A unique feature of the Daily Service Calendar for 1923—one that we do not believe can be found in any other calendar, and one that heightens the beauty of our product manyfold—is the floral decoration artistically combined with the illustrations. Each month's peculiar flower has been chosen: the snowdrop for January, the violet for March, the goldenrod for September, etc.

The titles of the International Sunday-school Lessons for the fifty-two weeks in the year are given, also the location of the lesson.

The "Daily Readings," beginning with Monday of each week, have a direct bearing on the coming Sunday's lesson.

The "Daily Readings" for Saturdays are the Golden Texts of the lessons.

The moon phases are shown throughout the year.

Taking the 1923 Daily Service Calendar as a whole, it offers an unequalled selling proposition. Church organizations will find it a wonderful agency for replenishing the treasury.

Study the liberal terms mentioned below. Write now for a sample, and begin immediately to outline your campaign. We will send a calendar, carefully wrapped, on receipt of thirty cents, and will include with it some successful selling plans that will be of value. Start early to secure orders. We will ship the calendars any date desired.

Our Terms

The retail price is thirty cents each. Our scale of wholesale prices is as follows:

The Common People

The gospel has always gone to the common people and they have received it gladly.

Lincoln is quoted as saying that the Lord must love the common people for he made so many of them. This is quite confirmed by the statement of Holy Scriptures concerning the work of the Master while here on earth. "The common people heard him gladly." (Mark 12:37.) He lived among the common people. He was a carpenter of Nazareth, a laborer among the laborers. It would ill become any of us, then, to discredit those whom he has accepted. He came from the bench with the odor of the bench upon him. He came as one of the least of the least of earth.

We have written before that in our opinion the people of this church are quite above the average. Our missionaries go out and should go out, not to baptize a selected few, but to find those whom God has chosen; and through the foolishness, perchance, of their preaching, he has called many unto salvation. We may work as we will, but it is God that gives the increase. (1 Corinthians 3:6, 7.) If this is true, then the results of our labor are accepted by him.

We see this confirmed in Acts 2:39: "As many as the Lord our God shall call." Also Romans 1:7: "I write to all who are in Rome beloved of God, called saints"; to which might be added also Romans 9:24: "Even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles." And again 1 Corinthians 1:2: "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours."

This is indeed a high and holy calling. Some are called to the holy priesthood; some are called to different offices in that priesthood; but those whom God has called are first called to be saints, as well as called to special service.

The same thought is expressed in 1 Thessalonians 4:7 and confirmed in 2 Timothy 1:9. Finally, if there be any doubt, it is at once resolved by the experience of Peter as related in Acts 10. In that case Peter considered the baptism of the Gentiles as a forbidden thing. He thought they were not worthy, but he was directly instructed, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common." This was done thrice. It does not become any man to cast reflection on those whom God has called.

Plainly is it written in modern revelation that no man can assist in this work unless he is humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity (Doctrine and Covenants 11:4). Those whom God hath called are not common, though full of humility and love.

How About Christmas?

Our best gifts should be the church periodicals.

Christmas is coming, and many of us already are making out our lists or soon will be doing so. For everyone in the church there could not be a better gift than the periodicals published by our own institution, the Herald Publishing House.

THE SAINTS' HERALD is published weekly and furnishes the general church news. It offers an open forum for the discussion of the immediate problems before the church. It is filled with articles of live interest to the membership, as well as a strong letter department. It is the official organ of the church and the normal method in which to receive the announcements of action taken by the leading quorums and the general officers of the church. If we are to keep in touch with the work of the church, this periodical is essential. Its price of $2.25 a year is higher than that of any other periodical published by the church, but comparison must be made with the quantity as well as the quality of the material offered. It is not economy to pay a lower price and to get less. THE SAINTS' HERALD is essential if we are to keep in touch with the work of the church; what is being thought and what is being done.

Then for the missionary arm of the church we have Zion's Ensign. This includes doctrinal sermons and articles and testimonies. It is also published weekly and is about half the size of the SAINTS' HERALD. The price has been greatly reduced, to $1 per year, and a special price made to nonmembers of 75 cents a year. This latter price is only possible because the price of running off an extra hundred or thousand copies is much less than the original publication, yet all help to support and send this missionary abroad.

The Priesthood Journal contains educational matter and items of interest to the priesthood of the church. It gives a special opportunity to keep in touch. It is published as a monthly at 40 cents a year.

Autumn Leaves is the one magazine published by the church, primarily for the young people, or later adolescence, but also is of interest to adults. It includes the Parthenon for the Temple Builders and Orioles, the Religio and Sunday School Departments. It includes biographical sketches of our missionaries and of their experiences and travel. It includes stories and articles of special interest to the young people and is published on a good quality of paper and profusely illustrated. The price of $1.75 a year is very reasonable when we consider the size and what it has to offer.

The Journal of History is published quarterly for $1.50 a year, with 128 pages to each issue. It offers an opportunity to preserve historical items at greater length than is possible in the regular volumes of church history. It includes biographies, district histories, as well as discussion of current history. It is classed by itself and compares favorably with other historical journals.

With the Stepping Stones and Hope we are all of us familiar, as they are distributed in our Sunday schools. The Stepping Stones is for early adolescence and later childhood, about nine to sixteen years of age; the Hope is for little folks, from three to nine. If you know of children who are scattered, who are away from an organized Sunday school, a year's subscription to Stepping Stones at 75 cents for single copies for one year, or Zion's Hope at 40 cents for single copies for one year, each of them published weekly, will be much appreciated. Because Stepping Stones is for this period of early adolescence, until about sixteen years of age, Autumn Leaves is somewhat older in tone, as it is for those from seventeen and over. Of course no hard and fast line is drawn, as young people are sometimes older at sixteen than others are at eighteen.

Each of these periodicals has its own special place to fill. They do not overlap, nor do they conflict. It is necessary to members of the church, in order to be informed in all aspects of the work, to have all of these publications.

When we come to make out our Christmas list, let us inquire as to which of our friends receive and which do not receive these publications of our own, and consider seriously how suitable a gift would such subscription be to any true Latter Day Saint.

There are some who do not feel they can afford the church papers, yet there must be very few indeed who cannot afford these periodicals. Consider for a moment how few moving pictures are represented by a year's subscription for the HERALD. It costs to run an ordinarily small car 6½ cents a mile, when we include the wear on the tires, the depreciation and wear on the machine, as well as the oil and gasoline. A thirty-five-mile trip represents the price of a subscription to the HERALD. A single extra trip to the county seat, seventeen and a half miles away, and back means the price of a SAINTS' HERALD for a year. A single party or social gathering will as a rule represent the price of several of these periodicals. Before we feel that we cannot receive these publications of the church, let each one go carefully over his or her list of annual expenditures and see if there is not something that we can afford to give up rather than to give up the publications of the church.

Finally, in supporting our own church publications we make it possible to print tracts, to send out Ensigns and other publications of a missionary nature. How could we better honor the day of His birth than in thus helping to send the word of God abroad?

What Departments Should Do Next

Detailed instruction offered, which should be read carefully.

We trust every reader of the HERALD will peruse carefully the article on page 1046 of this issue; also the official notice by all the heads of departments, appearing on page 1065. The recent conference and conventions will likely be considered in the not-far-distant future as epochal dates when the real nature of the action taken in regard to the departments is considered and understood.

In the proposals suggested for the improvement of our work are couched some wonderful possibilities. Those who have earnestly sought disentanglement from the maze of administrative detail into which we have gotten, will sigh with relief when they appreciate what this new vision discloses. But it is not to be considered as a magic wand which may be waved over the church and work immediate change. The problems will remain, but the hope engendered by the new way of solving them is as a beacon light to lead us on with greater diligence.

Those who are impulsively ready to adopt it all at once and surge ahead should cultivate patience and manifest wisdom, so others may also see the same beauties in the plan. Perhaps never will all the members of a branch see the same things in the new scheme, but it is hoped that the spirit of love and tolerance will prevail, and that the Saints will be open-minded and willing to consider anything intended to perfect human character. If they are, and will study the matter unbiasedly, there is no question that the day will come when we shall have a much broader basis upon which to build the spiritual situation necessary unto Zion.

This is not mere theory. It is something definite upon which we can build. Neither is it as the laws of the Medes and Persians—unchangeable. Our democracy is not assailed, but its operation provided for upon a sensible basis.

The proponents of the idea, the leaders in the departments, are welcoming questions and suggestions and criticisms. The editors of the church papers are glad to arrange space for a full presentation of discussion on these topics. They are urging all concerned to write frequently and in detail, especially the leaders in charge.

We commend those who have had to do with the adoption of the policy, of moving only as fast as the communities are ready. No edict is going out that all must follow. If a branch prefers to creep when it might walk, no official is going to command that it get on its feet and stumble along. Help will be provided, suggestions offered, advice rendered, and in every way all the Saints will be informed on how to improve their methods and thus the more efficiently attain the end of developing the best qualities in all the members.

A Summary of the Conference as Affecting the Departments

One significant feature is the passing of the separate departments of the Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department, the action taken by their several conventions to become a part of the work of the church, and that business should henceforth be transacted on the floor of the General Conference. For some reason this action was not presented to the conference for acceptance or rejection, nor was any report made of the meeting of these various conventions, as has been the case in the past. It was ruled in the conventions that this terminated the existence of the separate organizations.

It was designed that the general organization, in place of the Sunday school, should be the Department of Religious Education; and that the Religio should pass out of existence and a Department of Recreation and Expression be formed. As heads of departments the nominations of the Presidency were: A. M. Carmichael, superintendent of the Sunday school; T. W. Williams, superintendent of the Religio; Dora Glines, superintendent of the Women's Department. The names of the departments will gradually be changed to the new terms, but not all at once.

The effect of this action is no doubt to place the three named in charge of the work of the various departments. So far as other general officers are concerned, including the various boards or committee, it would seem that they are to pass out of existence automatically, until further appointments have been made.

The committee on Bible Normal Book resigned in order to clear the field for the work to be handled properly by the church, but action was deferred until next General Conference. It was not the intention that this work should go over immediately to the Sunday school consulting board.

In view of the changed nature of the work for the young people the name Religio will hardly now apply to their future work.

Our Missionary Program

At once the thinking reader will ask, What is it? But whether consciously or unconsciously, the church does proceed upon a definite platform or program. We can see it in her practice.

The Lord has emphasized time and again that missionaries, especially those to any new fields, should go out two by two. The missionaries should go two by two that they may be a support and a correction to each other. A man who is laboring locally has naturally the association of his brothers. In the early days of the church, when but a few missionaries could be sent out, they were yet sent in pairs.

We believe the church has made an effort, especially in sending to foreign fields where possible, to do this, and not to send one man alone. But this has not been the invariable rule.

Again, the church has sent men and women to the South Sea Islands who have remained two or three years and have then returned. We cannot even plead that their experience there has helped greatly to prepare them for work in other fields. The conditions there are so different from other fields that much of their work there is new, and will be different when they are appointed to any other field of service. Again, much of the time must be taken in learning the language and also the customs of the people. When this basis has been laid they then return.

Recently one of our missionaries spoke of his being sent to a foreign country for a couple of years. It was a country having a different language, and probably he is able to speak that language, but he expressed the opinion that perhaps his two years there would fit him to be sent back there at some other time later in life.

The church has not in many instances done this; but has sent a man to a certain field and then after a short period has appointed him elsewhere. It has given our missionaries a breadth of traveling experience but not a depth of understanding of any one field.

We have of late years observed many things in other churches and have tried to take the best of what we have learned. But in this instance we have not followed the practice of calling for volunteers to labor in a certain field, or calling a man to be appointed to a certain field, for life, so that he goes there and learns the language, the customs, and the people. He comes to love them and they come to know and love him; then he continues that service as a father and a missionary to them.

We have had a few such men in the church. Joseph Burton gave much of his life to the South Sea Islands. Other men have gone out and devoted their time largely to one field; but the number is very limited compared to those who have gone for a few years and have then labored in the States.

Even in Canada, let alone in Great Britain and Australia, where the same tongue is spoken, there is still a need to become familiar not only with the outward customs, but the feelings of the people. It is true that such a missionary becomes not only acclimated, but he eats the food of the people, comes to think like them, and see like them, and when he comes back to General Conference will be found to partake of something of their racial peculiarities. But that, instead of being a handicap in the end, comes to be an assistance in his work to properly preach Jesus Christ to them.

The missionary work oppresses us as never before, because of its great need; the need for men to be sent not singly, but at least in pairs, to be appointed with their families, to be appointed—not for a year—but for many years, if not for life, or until God calls us home to Zion, as he gathers his people.

If it is necessary for a man to learn the feeling of the people of England where a like tongue is spoken and similar customs obtain, how much more is it necessary when a different language must be mastered first, not only as book learning, but the practical, everyday tongue of the people and the additional peculiarities of a different nationality must be understood. How much more, then, when the races are far apart in color, in habit, and even per- haps in that which goes to make civilization.

The ideal of many of our local ministers is a good one, but is there not also need of consecrated men to make their life work as missionaries in Africa,

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The New Situation Regarding Departmental Work

An important announcement by the heads of the departments regarding new plans. This article should be studied carefully and preserved for reference.

The undersigned, having been charged with the responsibility of departmental work in the church, have after a number of conferences with the First Presidency and each other crystallized the following in the way of an initial announcement concerning proposed plans and methods for local work. Of necessity it must be followed with other statements and further discussion, both general and specific.

It will be noted that we are beginning with the plan perhaps best understood, and from it would encourage development into the further and more advanced steps till "Form 5" is attained. We are glad this is not a new proposition to many of our progressive schools. Most of the ideals and many of the methods have been considered and tried with more or less variation for years. The recognition of the problems before us is well-nigh universal among all who earnestly study them.

Many of our local churches have outgrown "Form 1." Others have tried and found successful the second, third, and even the fourth plan suggested in the following. We commend these for their proto India, to China, to France and Belgium, to Germany, to Russia, as well as to Palestine, Scandinavia, and Great Britain?

Then within our own country the query may well be put, "Should a missionary be changed frequently, or should he be appointed year after year to the same field, encouraged to establish his family there, to learn the needs, the opportunities and openings of that field, and persistently follow them up? A new man has always a little strangeness first to overcome. He must first become acquainted with the peculiar physical conditions, as well as peculiarities of the individual people. He is handicapped in following up the opening made by another man.

If signs do not fail, the time is soon before the church for a new and strong missionary policy and a program of consecrated service. After all, is a seventy, a missionary to Germany, consecrating his life to that service, worthy of less honor than an apostle sent to open up new fields?

When will the church call for such men and women, and when will they consecrate themselves to such service, until Zion calls in the elect of God?

gressive attitude which has made possible this necessary cooperation. It should not be difficult for them to advance to what we consider our ideal, suggested in "Form 5" at the conclusion of this article.

In no way do we depreciate the excellent work of the Saints, whether it has been under one form of administration or another. The many noble workers throughout the church so eminently qualified to serve humanity is a standing testimony of the faithfulness of those who have toiled and sacrificed that we might have the large number of devoted members enrolled with the church to-day.

But we are convinced that we might do better. We believe that in the following there are great possibilities. Let us discuss the subject here, then be privileged to help further.

The work in the local church is largely a matter of promoting the spiritual growth of the members of the church and their unbaptized children so they shall be able to live as full citizens in the social order which our church is attempting to establish, commonly designated as Zion. This growth is brought about by the supervision of the activities of the membership and in instruction relative to these activities. This supervision and instruction can be roughly divided into two classes, if our classification is made on the basis of number supervised or instructed. It is done either in person with single individuals and households, or by groups of persons.

Present General Procedure

The first classification consists at the present time of the visiting of families by the priesthood of the local church, the visiting of families by the friendly visitor of the Department of Women, by the local home department superintendent, now a part of the Department of Women, formerly a part of the Sunday School Department, and to some extent by such wide-awake Sunday school and Religio teachers, Boy Scout, Oriole, and Temple Builder leaders who care to visit their pupils personally. All of these could be largely included in the term pastoral visits. They consist of an attempt to supervise the activity of persons and instruct them in their religious growth through the use of personal or private contact.

The second mode is likewise conducted by various agencies. There are generally the eleven o'clock and Sunday evening preaching services in which the preacher occupies the entire time without any active participation by the listeners in the way of discussion. There are the Sunday school classes held on Sunday morning. There are the junior meetings held during the eleven o'clock hour. There are the Religio classes, held either on Sunday or some week day. There are the classes held during the week, which are under the auspices of the Department of Women, or under the auspices of the home department, or under the auspices of the normal training course of Graceland College. All of these various agencies are supervising study of the same nature. So far we have mentioned only those which are largely instructional in nature. It is true that some Sunday schools and some Religios attempt to supervise the activity of their children as well as to instruct them. The best expression of supervised activity is found in the Boy Scout, Oriole, and Temple Builder movements, the first of which is under the Religio and the latter two of which are under the Department of Women. The Department of Women is attempting to supervise the activity of the women of the locals in group method by having them meet and make articles for various charitable institutions. In many places the Sunday school is supervising the recreational activity of the young people, perhaps in more places than is the Religio. In some other places the Religio is supervising this recreational activity.

Too Many Doing the Same Things

The first thing that strikes one's notice in this discussion so far is the multiplicity of agencies which are attempting to carry on these two modes of supervising religious growth, that of personal visits and that of group work. Further to be noted is the fact that the main church and the departments are mixed up together in both modes. It is true, of course, that the departmental work is more concerned with the group method than with the personal method. However, the Department of Women is pushing with every energy the function of the friendly visitor, and live superintendents of local Sunday schools and Religios are urging their teachers to visit personally their pupils.

In the second mode, that of group or class supervision and instruction, the church proper is confining itself to the preaching and prayer service only and to a few priesthood meetings. In some few cases the church proper is enjoying the stimulation and assistance of the so-called junior meeting for children and young people, the meeting which is held generally at the eleven o'clock hour, following the same style of service as is found in the main preaching service, that of a sermon. The departments, however, are occupying their half of this classification.

As we have noted, there is a great multiplicity of agencies caring for the local work of our churches. These agencies are independent of one another very largely at the present time. The usual situation is about as follows:

The local church elects its pastor, who supervises the morning and evening Sunday preaching services and the midweek prayer meeting. Once in a while the local church conducts the junior meeting. The pastor, however, pays no attention usually to any of the work of the departments. The local Sunday school, which meets usually on Sunday morning, elects its superintendent and restricts its class work to the Sunday morning hour. In some cases the Sunday school carries on the recreational activity during the week. However, it acts generally independent of the main church.

Likewise, the Religio elects its local superintendent, conducts regular class work during some mid-week day or evening, or on Sunday. The Boy Scout work is generally conducted by some enterprising young man in the community with more or less felt responsibility to the Religio. The Oriole and Temple Builder work is conducted much in the same style, with more or less felt responsibility to the local women's leader, or young women's supervisor.

We believe many of the duplications outlined above should be avoided and better methods inaugurated, yet we are not desirous of urging a change upon local churches wherein the workers do not see fit as yet to take the step. It is our problem to help them see and appreciate the merit in better organization and clearer aims. We herewith outline five modes or forms of organization. The first one is probably the most universal. It should be considered as a stepping-stone to better attainments.

First Form of Organization

Under this plan the local church is to conduct its regular preaching, prayer, and sacramental services. Its officers are, further, to carry on the personal visiting by the priesthood.

The Sunday school is to conduct its Sunday morning study hour independent of the church; its organization is independent; its superintendent is elected by the business meeting of the local Sunday school; its constitution and by-laws, if any are desired, are drawn up by the business meeting of the local school, subject only to such limitations as are imposed by district and general authorities.

The Sunday school can, if it desires, conduct recreational activities during the week, but if the Religio organization exists in that local church the Sunday school workers are to give preference to the Religio officers in the matter of recreational activity, and yet need not surrender it entirely. Either the local Sunday school or the main church may conduct the junior meeting. It will depend largely upon which takes the initiative. Preference should be given the Sunday school superintendent in this regard. The Sunday school may, further, urge its teachers to make personal visits to their pupils.

The local Religio can be organized independently of the church, the same as we have suggested often prevails regarding the Sunday school. It may, further, organize the Boy Scout movement independently of the church. It may hold its class hour and study whatever subjects it desires, either on Sunday or some week day, so long as such time does not conflict with the Sunday school or church services. It may also organize local athletic clubs, dramatic clubs, and young people's social clubs.

Such local organizations, of a dramatic, athletic, or social nature, may be organized more or less independently of the local class hour of the Religio, with by-laws and organization largely of their own making. But the local Religio superintendent should stand as their monitor in behalf of the church. If the Religio superintendent does not feel capable of so acting, because of the particular nature of the club or organization, he can, with the approval of the local Religio, appoint an assistant so to act. It is the duty of the local Religio superintendent to foster such organizations.

If the Religio fails to function in any of these particulars, the matter may be taken up by the local Sunday school superintendent upon his own initiative or by the local pastor. If no Religio exists, however, in a given local church, and it is found impossible to organize one, its activities may be carried on by the Sunday school under the local Sunday school superintendent.

The local women's superintendent, nominated by the district superintendent after consultation with the local pastor and final approval by the local Department of Women, may organize classes for women to be held either during the week or on Sunday, and may organize women for various group activities within the local, independent of the church. The local women's superintendent may conduct the home department work of the local and in subject matter may cover any of the material put out by any of the departments or by the church itself. If there is no local women's worker, the Sunday school superintendent may organize such home department work. The Women's Department may appoint friendly visitors who are to make friendly calls to the members of the local church. This may be done independently of the visits of the branch priesthood, or it may be done in conjunction with and simultaneously with the visits of the local priesthood, if the priesthood so desire. Further, the local women's superintendent may establish a cradle roll department whose function it would be to foster better motherhood and better babyhood within the local church. If there is no local women's superintendent, the Sunday school may organize such a department. The Department of Women may, further, organize Oriole and Temple Builder groups under the supervision of a local young women's supervisor appointed by the local women's superintendent and Religio superintendent.

The chorister of the local church should be advised with in the selection of choristers for the various departments.

The general head of the Department of Health may call upon any of these departments to assist in the work of promoting the health of the members of the local church. Such health activities as are now being carried on may be continued.

Under this first mode of organization you will find that the chief characteristic is the working apart independently of the various organizations of the church. It attempts to define the activity of each department under such a system of organization. It attempts to give the preference to certain departments of certain kinds of work, and also to provide for such work if the departments specified do not exist in a given local church. This type of organization would permit the organization of Sunday school, Religio, and local groups of the Department of Women in communities where there are no branches.

will be responsible for advice as to the nature of such local organization. All correspondence with reference to their relationships should be directed to A. Max Carmichael, the General Sunday School Superintendent, Lamoni, Iowa.

Further, the departmental superintendents would prefer this sort of organization in such local churches where there is not a desire for further coordination and where the local church authorities are apparently not only unsympathetic with the instructional and supervisory activities of the departments, but are also unconscious of the relative value. We shall want to leave with our district representatives, and in some instances the general superintendents of departments, the matter as to whether any kind of organization other than the above discussed may be used in any local church. If the district representatives of the various departments agree that any other sort of organization except the fifth form may be used, then the people may vote so to organize.

Second Form of Organization

Reference to the outline will indicate that this form is largely a repetition of the first, except that the district officers of the various departments may nominate the local superintendents or directors, after consultation with the local pastor, if there be such. Such nomination is to be approved by the business meeting of the local departments.

The relationship of the local superintendents or directors to their local subordinate officers we leave to be worked out by local superintendents, advising in favor, however, of this principle of nomination by superior officers of their subordinates, subject to the approval of the body. The local departments may allow local superintendents or directors to appoint their subordinates.

This is a distinct advance step. It presumes a closer working relationship between the departments and implies an acceptance by the pastor of the responsibility of counsel and help, that all the departmental work may thrive.

The initiative in this step might well be taken by others than the district officers, for were they to urge this procedure, their motives might be misjudged.

Third Form of Organization

It will be noted in the accompanying outline that there is a difference in this form over the first and second, in the nomination of officers. There is a further safeguard for efficiency in the possibility of change between elections. But as in the second, the duplication of effort is existent.

Where the district departmental officers can concur, local pastors shall be permitted to nominate the superintendents or directors of the local departments as outlined in number one, after consultation with the district officers, such nominations to be subject to the approval of the local department. But the district officers reserve the right at all times to make such nomination, reverting therefore to the second form of organization. They, furthermore, reserve the unqualified right to reject anyone recommended to them whom they deem unsuitable, or refuse to continue the appointment of anyone who proves incompetent or neglectful of duty.

This furnishes an excellent incentive for constant cooperation between district and local officers. It is a stronger organization than number two, and should get better results.

Fourth Form of Organization

In case the Form 3 outlined above is adopted, any or all local departments, if the local church authorities concur, may order that the entire business of the department or departments, respectively, be taken care of on the floor of the local church or branch business meetings. They may, further, order that the departmental superintendents act as administrative subordinates, or in other words as a cabinet to the local pastor. Acting in this capacity, the departmental heads in supervising the activities of the various departments may coordinate their activities and officers in such detail as they may see fit. In more detail, acting as coordinating officers, the local pastor and local departmental heads may nominate local subordinate superintendents, as cradle roll and home department superintendents, local women friendly visitors, leaders of Boy Scout, Oriole, and Temple Builder movements, advisers or monitors to local organizations of athletic, recreational, or dramatic expression, or any other such organization. Such nominations are subject to the approval of the local church. If the local church concurs, such nominations may be made appointments.

Under this system the cradle roll superintendent, friendly visitors, home department superintendent, and leaders of Oriole and Temple Builder movements will be subject to the immediate supervision of the local superintendent of the Department of Women. The leader of the Boy Scout movement is to be under the immediate supervision of the Religio superintendent. The leaders of local organizations of an athletic, dramatic, or recreational type, which are organized independent of Oriole, Temple Builder,

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Enjoy Declining Years in Homes

The aged and infirm of the church are well cared for in Saints' and Liberty Homes. Interesting items from Lamoni "Chronicle" of recent date.

Among the institutions which make Lamoni famous and different from the ordinary town of its size are the two homes for the aged known as Saints' Home and Liberty Home. They fill an office in the church and town than which there is none greater, the care and protection of those feeble and infirm with age.

People in Lamoni and vicinity are more or less familiar with these institutions, yet a careful visit to them revealed many interesting facts. Should we attempt to enumerate all the details of interest in the history of the lives of the old people living there as revealed by an intimate visit with them, it would fill a good sized volume, so we have picked out only a few of the most outstanding characters, whose lives hold something of striking difference from the ordinary human being, and from whose experience some lessons can be drawn.

The home known as "Liberty Home" was established in 1906. It was the outgrowth of an overcrowded condition at the Saints' Home, necessitating more room. The building was remodeled from the large home previously occupied by President Joseph Smith and family. Later another large building belonging to the same home was rebuilt to add additional dormitory rooms.

The two buildings are now in use and are full most of the time. The main building has a large assembly room, two dining rooms, a kitchen, large pantry, two bath rooms, and twenty dormitory rooms. Besides these there is a large basement divided into vegetable and fruit rooms. One of the most interesting sights is the store of canned fruits and vegetables put away for winter use. Over twelve hundred quarts have been canned this summer, and include almost every variety grown in this country.

The smaller building contains fourteen dormitory rooms, one assembly room, and washrooms and storerooms in the basement.

The home employs very little help, considering the size of the family. A cook, dining room girl and house maid, and a man who takes care of the stock and garden. Much of the real work is done by the superintendents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Williams, who help out wherever extra help is needed. There are a number of old people who are able physically to help and are pressed into service when needed. The large amount of fruit cared for this summer was canned with no outside help, Mrs. Williams superintending the work herself.

Some of the men do considerable gardening, among whom Charles Pierce and George Hall were especially mentioned. To Al Hershey they look for any repairs which require a carpenter's skill, while some of the old men are handy in the kitchen. Mrs. Williams was recently laid up with a broken ankle, and a man by the name of James Mills proved to be exceptionally handy in this way.

Several of the ladies are also able to help. Mrs. Orton helps a great deal with the sewing, and Mrs. Freeland and others in the kitchen. The sick are also cared for by Mr. and Mrs. Williams, with the assistance of members of the large family, thus eliminating the cost of a special nurse. Most of the old people care for their own rooms, with a little help from the housemaid or superintendent, and several of them do their own washing and ironing.

The home has a large garden and some small stock. Seven or eight cows are being milked, from which they make their own butter, and a large flock of Rhode Island Red chickens do their share towards furnishing the table.

Among the inmates of Liberty Home those best known to Lamoni people are Elder John Smith and Mrs. William Ray, both of whom were residents of Lamoni a number of years before going to the home. The name of Brother Smith calls forth a tender feeling of love and sympathy from all who know him. He was for so many years intimately connected with the people of the church as president of the Lamoni Stake that he won a place in their hearts which will last for aye. Brother Smith is strong for one of his years and makes the long trip of about a mile to town on foot quite often.

Sister Ray was always known as a "blues chaser." Her cheerful disposition despite trials and difficulties made her association very desirable. She has retained her jolly laugh in a large measure, though much physical suffering and the loss of both other members of her family, her husband and a daughter, have sobered her considerably.

An example of patience and perseverance is found in the person of Mrs. Louisa Seward, who has not walked for twenty-two years. She has been a very great sufferer all her life as the direct result of a fall on ice when a child, which finally resulted in her crippled condition. Her hands are also drawn and cramped to the extent that would make many a person helpless. But despite this fact, she does her own sewing and mending and has until recently helped with other mending. She sits all day in a padded rocker, which she pushes over the floor with remarkable alacrity. She came to the home from Edgewood, Iowa, eight years ago.

George Hall, who came from Keokuk, uncle of Earl Hall, formerly of Lamoni, is also an example of fortitude. He has been a cripple all his life, yet he gets around by the aid of a cane, walking to town and church quite regularly.

Eliza Martin bears the distinction of being the oldest inmate in the home at present. She has seen ninety summers and winters, five of which have been spent at Liberty. She is quite spry for one of her years, but can see but little. She is the mother of eleven children, seven of whom are living, but prefers living in Lamoni where she can go to church, rather than making her home with any of them, she says. Next in age is Mrs. Meadowcroft, eighty-seven, who came from Canada. She is the grandmother of Mrs. Fred Goode. Her countenance at once gives one the impression that she lived in the good old days, when sociability and kindness were virtues much cultivated. Truly to such, old age is a crowning glory. She has been at the Home six years.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Freeland have almost grown up with the institution, having lived there sixteen years. They are perfectly contented and are valuable help in many ways, especially in caring for the sick. They came from Georgia. In point of length of residence Peter Rasmussen, who came from San Francisco, California, fourteen years ago holds second title.

Many pleasures are given these old people besides the ordinary comforts of life. Religious services are not forgotten. There is preaching every Sunday night, with special music occasionally; sacrament meeting once a month on Sunday morning; Sunday school on Tuesday evening, and Religio on Friday evening. At these Elder John Smith works in very handily, as teacher, his long experience in church work serving him well. Mr. Smith also does a good work among the sick in administering.

Besides Brother Smith, who holds the office of high priest and is also an evangelical minister, there are four who hold the priesthood, one teacher, and three priests. Two of the inmates recently attended General Conference at Independence. Mr. Headlund and James Mills.

Many of the people of Lamoni are very thoughtful of these old people in their midst, taking them for an occasional auto ride or making friendly calls. Some of the Sunday school classes go out and entertain them with programs once in a while, much to their delight. There is a wonderful field of opportunity for little deeds of kindness which really make up life, and many more could benefit by taking advantage of this rich field of service.

Among the interesting experiences which tend to break the monotony as well as being a necessary preparation for an emergency, are the fire drills. The inmates have become so efficient and alert that the two buildings containing close to forty old people can be emptied in between three and four minutes.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams, the superintendents, have been with the institution six years, and have during those years rendered efficient service to the church. Sister Williams is untiring in her devotion to the old people, and her quiet, patient manner soothes and comforts in many a trying hour.

An interesting story can be written of the Saints' Home also, but we will have to leave that for another time.

Counterfeit Wages and Our Industrial Problems

Service and cooperation is the solution. Because we have earned our wealth by the profit system is no reason it should be hallowed.

In a recent article in Collier's Weekly Edward A. Filene discusses with much interest what a rich man can do in the existing world condition. He and his brothers are proprietors of a large specialty shop in Boston, well known to those who have visited that city.

One point that he makes is that there are many demands for his money, but few suggest a use for the man himself. He adds:

"My tastes happen to be very simple and inexpensive—I do not even own a motor car. I should like to devote my fortune during my lifetime to some good purpose—to a purpose which will help to make the world better in a practical way. . . . In looking about for the opportunity for wise expenditure of what time and money my duty to our business leaves free, I am not making a pious effort to pay back to the public some of the money they have been cheated out of—I believe that the right hand of charity ought to disclose where the left hand gets the money. . . . Charity ought to start at home. Expenditure for the common weal ought to come from clean money. For instance, merchandise ought to be made and sold under 'just conditions.' If one 'serves' the community at the expense of any portion of it, he has not added to the sum total of the community's welfare, but has merely taken from some to give to others. . . .

"A manager's treatment of his employees must be just. Too much thought and planning cannot easily be given to creating good relations between employer and employee. But in the endeavor to improve these relations the fact should not be lost sight of that such work is not a final goal, but merely a very important factor among the means for attaining the true aim of business—service to the community. . . .

“Within a generation the working hours have gone down from sixteen to eight. There are enough indications and possibilities of further reductions in sight to make it not impossible that in time five hours' work a day will be sufficient to provide a living for a man with a family.

“This does not mean that a man will work only five hours for a mere living; many men under such circumstances will work eight or ten hours—spurred on by the desire to put their children through college or to satisfy other desires. It will also leave the workers free to have an avocation—five hours for necessary work and five hours for that work to which they would give their whole time if they could afford it. Personally, I have always thought that preachers and teachers would do better work if they followed their professions only part time and some other vocation the rest of the time. . . .

“Take the average rich man. Trace his course. He wants to be decent. (I mean, of course, the man who has earned his own money, and also I exclude the Napoleons of finance and industry who rise overnight and strut for a little while. They are just now mostly being carried by the bankers.) The man who has earned his own money has done so because he worked while others slept and denied himself while others spent. He has fought for what he has, and he regards it as his own to do with as he likes. He will not admit that anyone has a right to preach to him about what he ought to do with his money. And perhaps he may grow a little bitter, for much advice will come to him from those who slept while he worked and who spent while he denied. . . .

“It must be remembered that because a thing is right is no reason why it will succeed. The right has to be advanced through straight thinking. It takes what is known as business ability to make right effective. No miracle will intervene in behalf of the right. Idealism needs the backing of hard common sense, and hard common sense needs the urge of idealism. In one test for sanity the man under observation is given a pail and turned into a room where an open faucet is running water over the floor. If he works furiously with mop and pail to lap up the water, he is considered to be insane. If instead he turns off the faucet, he is considered sane. Why should it be always expected that the rich man's duty is to swing the mop? Why cannot he do something towards turning off the faucet?

“Doling out charity is but mopping up the flow of social injustice. The faucet is left wide open. And the man who has become rich and successful in industry is the only man with the practical knowledge to turn off that faucet. And therefore I take it that the first duty of the wealthy employer is to examine into the conditions of his own institution.

“Philanthropy becomes a sin when it uses for charity the earnings that should be used to promote justice in business. For the big question to-day—the one that includes all others and in its solution solves all others—is the relation between the employer and the employed. Unless we find out how to make that relation right, nothing else will need attending to, for little will be left—civilization will go up in smoke. . . .

“I define ethics in business as arranging so that the great buying public shall be given dependable merchandise at an ever cheaper price. This definition will give a suggestion for the settlement of wages. Many strikes arise because the employee receives an inadequate wage without the employer being really at fault. ‘Counterfeit wages’ is a term I have invented to characterize the wage which is reduced by the falling of the purchasing power of money. . . .

“The merchant who, by costly methods of retail or wholesale distribution, adds unduly to the manufacturing cost of commodities, makes inadequate and counterfeit a wage which might be adequate if goods were sold with less expense. . . .

“The limiting of output by labor unions, resulting in fewer and higher-cost products, is a method by which the workingmen themselves turn their own dollars and the dollars of other wage earners into counterfeit. . . .

“We shall have to think more broadly. For instance, the responsibility for reducing the excessive costs of retail distribution belongs to me and to my fellow retail merchants. All employers should fight any excessive capitalization on which the fixed charges help to turn into counterfeit the otherwise adequate wages of employees.

“Our men of finance should see that the English law is adopted and enforced that requires a statement to be made to every purchaser of stock showing the promoters' profit and the real assets and liabilities of the company. . . .

“Because those of us who have earned fair sums of money have done so under the present social order is no reason why we should hallow that order. The money ought to be used to improve on the order. The first legitimate use of large profits, and the main use, is to reduce prices. . . . Lower prices will, in turn, cause increased demand, increased production, and increased total profit, at which point prices can again be reduced. It is worse than useless merely to increase production. Prices at the same time must be reduced enough to bring in the

Dependence of Ministry on Education

By O. J. Tary

Education: Is it an important factor in successful work in the church, and to what extent is the ministry dependent upon it?

(A paper prepared and read before the district priesthood meeting of the Wheeling District, May 27, 1922, by the district president.)

This question covers a wide field and gives ample opportunity for diverse answers, according to the angle from which it is viewed.

Safety is seldom if ever found in either extreme of any question. The Catholic and the majority of Protestant churches take the position that no man is qualified for the ministry unless he has spent a number of years in a theological school, which is one extreme. To take the position that the success of the church and the ministry is not at all dependent on education, is the opposite extreme. Somewhere between those positions must be found our logical ground upon which to build. God is the source of all intelligence, and to man is imparted intelligence in a limited degree. But the opportunities to increase that intelligence are almost unlimited. The talent given us with which to start upon our work may lie dormant if not put to use, or it may increase and multiply if properly exercised. To anyone familiar with the parable of the talents as given by the Master, there should be no question as to which course is most pleasing unto the Lord.

Man is not able to bring into existence any truth that did not always exist. The many inventions of modern times have not created any fundamental truth, but they have discovered for the use and benefit of mankind many things that for centuries existed, hidden from the human family until discovered by those who exercised their God-given right to apply and improve their intellectual talents. Man has always had the opportunity for development and advancement, and wisdom has always rewarded those who diligently sought her.

Solomon said: "Get wisdom, get understanding: forget it not . . . love her and she shall keep thee. Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding."

greatly increased number of purchasers needed to absorb this greater output. . . .

"When the spirit of service comes to be generally recognized for what it is—good business as well as good ethics—then we shall have solved the really fundamental problem of business."

. . . She shall give to thine head an ornament of grace: a crown of glory shall she deliver to thee." (Proverbs 4.) Knowledge, when applied with wisdom, becomes a great blessing; but knowledge alone may become a curse as well as a blessing. Many great criminals possessed wonderful knowledge, but were deficient in wisdom. Knowledge is within the rich or good or bad alike, who may be willing to put forth the required effort to obtain. Wisdom being a gift from God, the Lord's servants should be most zealous in seeking it. But blessings from this source will be limited to the extent of knowledge possessed by the individual.

The Lord's approval of schools and education was given very early in the church. In a revelation given June, 1831, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 55: 2, to William W. Phelps, we have the following:

And again, you shall be ordained to assist my servant Oliver Cowdery to do the work of printing, and of selecting, and writing books for schools, in this church, that little children also may receive instruction before me as is pleasing unto me.

He is thus designated by the Lord to do the work of printing, selecting, and writing books for schools, in this church. Since it is mentioned here that little children should receive instruction, let no one suppose that the work was for them alone.

In a revelation to Joseph Smith, given March, 1833, he was commanded thus:

And now, verily I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that you continue in the ministry and presidency, and when you have finished the translation of the prophets, you shall from henceforth preside over the affairs of the church and the school; and from time to time, as shall be manifest by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom, and set in order the churches, and study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people. And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

Should anyone take the position that the Lord will give to his servants in the ministry all the wisdom needed, his position is very untenable in the light of this revelation. That he will assist them in seeking wisdom is not to be doubted, if they seek it as the Lord has instructed, and with a view to using it for the upbuilding of the Lord's work. But in this revelation to the one who was called to preside in the highest office in the church, while it was promised him that he should "from time to time, as shall be manifest by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom," yet there was associated with this promise the command to "study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people."

From this it is quite logical to conclude that while

God could give all this needed information to his servants, he will not supply that which may be obtained by study from the facilities within our reach. Paragraph 3 of this same section, referring to the time when the gospel shall go to the Jews, says:

And then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power in convincing the nations, the heathen nations, the house of Joseph, of the gospel of their salvation. For it shall come to pass in that day, that every man shall hear the fullness of the gospel in his own tongue, and in his own language, through those who are ordained unto this power, by the administration of the Comforter, shed forth upon them, for the revelation of Jesus Christ.

When that time arrives, the Spirit in great power will be given to assist those ordained unto this power, but from which class will the Lord be most likely to select men to "be ordained unto this power," those who have utilized their opportunities to prepare as much as possible to carry on the work, or from those who think no preparation necessary, and expect the Lord to supply everything?

On the day of Pentecost the apostles were able to speak in different languages, as the result of the wonderful endowment of the Holy Ghost, but as they went from there into their various fields of missionary work, I know of no record of their teaching in languages they had not learned. Like the giving of the Holy Ghost to the household of Cornelius before baptism, there was a special purpose in it, but it was not to be the rule to govern in general.

And let my servants Joseph Smith, jr., and Frederick G. Williams, make haste also, and it shall be given them even according to the prayer of faith: and inasmuch as you keep my sayings, you shall not be confounded in this world, nor in the world to come; verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 11, 12.

In this revelation the Lord makes a promise to Joseph Smith, jr., and Frederick G. Williams in this language: "And inasmuch as you keep my sayings, you shall not be confounded in this world, nor in the world to come." This promise, like all others, is conditioned on certain requirements. The promise of forgiveness of sins is predicated on obedience to the law of baptism, and the promise in this case is conditioned on keeping the Lord's sayings. Among the sayings of the Lord immediately following this promise is:

Verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion.

In the translation of the Scriptures, God provided the wisdom in his own way, for if he had not the work could not have been done. It would have been impossible for these men or any others to have by any amount of study or research corrected the Scriptures and eliminated the errors that had crept in by uninspired and evil-designing men during the centuries intervening between that time and the original writing. This was demonstrated by the work of the best scholarship of the world on various occasions, as evidenced by the King James and Revised Versions of the Bible. Hence it was that the Lord by inspiration, working through human instrumentality, gave to the church a correct translation of the Scriptures, and thus confounded the wisdom of the worldly wise.

But, when the Lord made it clear to them that they should hasten to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, he does not make any promise to give them that knowledge by inspiration, for the simple reason that it was within their reach, but it would require effort on their part.

Just as man is required to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, so must he enlarge his intellectual powers by exercising them, and obtain knowledge and wisdom by utilizing the God-given facilities that surround him.

The Lord helps those who make an honest effort to help themselves, but the person who refuses to make any effort to increase his store of knowledge, and consoles himself with the thought, The Lord is all-wise and can give all I need, is on a par with him who would expect the Lord to grow food products without our tilling the soil. The Lord miraculously fed the children of Israel while sojourning in the wilderness, but as soon as they reached a place where they could, by working for it, secure the means of sustenance, the miraculous supply ceased.

It may be urged that education is not essential to the building up of the church, because Christ chose unlearned men to the apostleship, and that in latter days this was repeated. Also, that wonderful success as missionaries attended the labors of unlearned men like J. J. Cornish and many others. Instead of this proving that education is not needed, it only proves that God is all powerful and wise, and that his purposes shall not be frustrated, either by the wisdom of the world, or by the lack of worldly attainments on the part of his chosen servants.

Of the twelve that Christ chose in his personal ministry, Luke the physician was probably the best educated, and he it was who gave to the New Testament Scriptures much valuable history in the Acts of the Apostles. Paul, chosen later, was an educated man, and the Lord directed him in writing more scripture than any other New Testament writer. There can be no question but that Paul's education was a valuable asset in his missionary work, when used in the spirit of humility, and coupled with spiritual inspiration.

In the early days of the Restoration, educational facilities for people of limited means were far behind what they are now, and but few well-educated people were available from whom the Lord might choose. True, there were highly educated men among the ministers of the various churches at that time, but the reason they were not chosen to establish the work of the Restoration, evidently is the same as Christ had for rejecting the learned rabbis and scribes of his day, and selecting his ministry from the humble and uneducated. In both instances the Lord chose men possessing the high degree of integrity, humility, and courage to stand by the right, so essential for true representatives of the gospel. Possessing these qualifications, necessary education might be obtained by effort, by experience, and by the assistance of the Lord. No amount of education of a scholastic kind could ever qualify a man for the ministry, if he lacked the previously named attributes.

As we look with admiration and joy on the accomplishments of untutored men in the service of God, we see with clearer vision man's dependence on God. The children of Israel were absolutely dependent upon God for their existence while traveling in the wilderness; but, when they reached the place where there was opportunity for them to provide for themselves, God no longer miraculously fed them. In the pioneer work of this church, God did wonderful things through men who had never had the opportunity for an education. If it was his purpose, he could and would continue in the same way.

After the passing of ninety years since the Lord instructed the leading men of the church what their duty was in the matter of school, and education, is it not possible that we have reached the place in our march similar to the children of Israel when they emerged from the wilderness? Not that we can ever hope to, or expect to reach the time when we will not be dependent on the Lord, nor when we will not need the assistance of his Holy Spirit, and his wise counsel. But, is it not time the church was producing from her ranks men and women qualified not only by spiritual experiences and training, but possessing also a higher degree of that knowledge that the Lord commands us to seek, relative to the things of this world?

In all ages of the world, all progress was opposed by many of the people. In the church there may be those who honestly oppose those methods that make for progress in the work of the church, on the ground that it is a departure from the old paths. The gospel is unchangeable with its law; but people and environment are constantly changing, which may necessitate a change in methods of work, while adhering closely to the original plan of salvation. As teachers we must adapt ourselves to the conditions under which we are called to work. In prosecuting missionary work in what is called a backwoods settlement, or on the frontiers of early civilization, while the people there might be just as good at heart and as much or more worthy than in a community of learned aristocracy, yet, an unlearned missionary (from a worldly standpoint) may succeed as well and possibly better than a highly educated one.

But, we must not forget that communities of that kind are not now the fields of great missionary endeavors. With the wide diffusion of schools and compulsory school laws, high schools and colleges everywhere, we have reached the period in our history when the educated are forging to the front in every legitimate line of human endeavor, greatly to the disadvantage of the less fortunate. Christ administered a mild rebuke to his disciples when he told them, "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of the light." Shall we merit the same rebuke, or shall we profit by that which is written?

All civilized nations have their representatives stationed at the seat of government of other nations. To fill those positions men are desired who qualify not only from the standpoint of diplomacy, but who are well versed in the laws and customs of the country in which they are stationed. They must qualify as true representatives of the government which sends them.

As representatives of the kingdom of God on earth, it is our duty to seek to represent that kingdom to the people in the most efficient manner possible, and with a view to merit the approval of him who called us. There is ample work for everyone occupying in the priesthood now, or who may yet be called, even though they have had but little opportunity for an education. But the important fact is before us that in carrying on our missionary work, we must deal largely with people who are educated in worldly wisdom and sciences, and whose attention is very difficult to obtain by one who is not able to clothe his message in a dress that bespeaks intellectual attainment, even though under the influence of the Spirit of God.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," is as timely now as when Paul wrote it to a young man entering the ministry. Study, to obtain the approval of God, in rightly dividing the word of truth, implies an effort to understand and rightly use language which is the medium of conveying thoughts to others. There have been successful ministers who could scarcely read when they began their work, but they had to overcome great obstacles to succeed. An edged tool may be made of the finest steel and properly tempered, but if it is not properly sharpened the user of it cannot do satisfactory work, and what is accomplished costs a much greater effort than it would were it properly sharpened.

The pioneers in this church had to work at a disadvantage, but the Lord knew the situation and worked with them. Now the gospel has not changed, but conditions surrounding us have changed, and many now cannot plead the excuse that those entering the work fifty or seventy-five years ago could. The church has tried to keep pace with the changed conditions as relates to educational work, but has not had the united support from the membership that she should have. Graceland College has not only helped many of the younger men and women of the church, but it is now giving prestige to the church throughout the country. To those of the priesthood who are not in a position to attend Graceland College, there is being offered valuable help in the way of extension work, which may be taken up at home with but little expense.

In the present time, when financial stringency prevents sending sufficient missionaries into the field, the course of instruction being given at Graceland for the special purpose of fitting young people who are willing to consecrate themselves to the work of the Lord, both in this and in foreign countries, will result in a great saving to the church and the people who avail themselves of the advantages offered. To send young people out properly equipped, will be the means of avoiding the long road that had to be traveled by many in the past before they reached the place where effective work could be done. In this way, both the missionaries and the church will profit.

I know of no nobler work any young man could take up, than to offer his services to the church and seek first to qualify by taking the course at Graceland College which is being given to those who are selected for that work. One sister from Steubenville, who is taking this work with her husband, is the only one from this district that I know of. Should there be any young men in the district desirous of taking up this work, I shall be pleased to recommend them for enrollment and assist them all I can. From the standpoint of financial remuneration, there is nothing to attract; but, from the standpoint of saving souls and laying up riches for eternity, there is no better or nobler choice you can make.

Wrecked Branches

By Edward D. Moore

If we will, we may learn some valuable lessons from the successes and failures of others in working out local problems.

Here and there all over the country, in this and some foreign fields, are little church edifices that stand pitifully and silently as monuments to the zeal of Saints who toiled and sacrificed that the gospel sound might be heard in that community and the pastoral needs of their families be provided for.

The composite history of many of these ought to reveal some valuable though sad lessons for us of to-day who are either helping to sustain and build, or to disrupt and tear down branches in our own communities.

Recently there came to our notice the case of a community of Saints who had not long ago in the height of their prosperity in "the regions round about" built a rather commodious church through the efforts of some three or four hundred people. To-day they are struggling along with not over seventy-five attendance, and the most progressive of these are planning to move elsewhere as soon as possible. Unless something—or some things—happens, they will some day be but a memory as a branch.

If history is valuable at all, it must demonstrate its worth in helping us to solve our problems. Most of us know the varying history of some branches. Let us discuss briefly some factors of the situation.

Not all disorganized branches are the result of internal dissension. Some of them were organized in the first place because of some special local situations that brought a group of Saints together and made it possible for them to thrive. Then later the means of employment, such as sawmills, factories, mines, etc., remove or close, and the Saints must go elsewhere.

This seems reasonable and to be expected occasionally. No one ought to complain over this sort of a climax to an otherwise happy situation.

Yet when we observe a fine group of noble people unite their energies and hopes in the erection of a suitable structure in which services may be held, then instead of growing in numbers and influence, gradually but persistently diminish until but a memory is left, we may well be greatly interested in and moved over the spectacle.

Occasionally we meet one of our well-known missionaries whose number of baptisms mounts high and whose vigor and zeal are the admiration of all. Usually we ask him something like this: "What is the biggest feature of the church program to-day?" Invariably his answer is something like this: "Missionary work! It is the key to our success as a church. Through it we cannot only evangelize the world, but develop our branches to the point of their highest efficiency. If every member in the church were to have uppermost in his mind the warning of his neighbor, most of our local difficulties would vanish, because the Saints would be too everlastingly busy to quarrel among themselves over minor matters."

It is indeed interesting to hear him orate on this his favorite theme. We do not dispute his statements. He may in his exuberance overemphasize some things and underestimate others, but in general we have seen his theory work some mighty miracles in the midst of the Saints.

Given: A band of loyal Saints, a fair amount of opposition and persecution, an outlook with some hope in it—and we are apt to find real spirituality and hopeful progress. But let the opposition cool, the missionary spirit lag, quarrels arise over who shall preside and how—down goes the banner of King Immanuel; away go the progressive Saints, and the church building becomes a monument to buried hopes.

If there had been some way to keep alive the zeal, patience, and forbearance that characterized the beginning, the end of the story could not have been written in many instances.

Saints differ in opinion. We expect it. It is not a sin, but rather a good sign. But when those differences degenerate into quarrels and feuds, everybody loses. The Saints lose the respect of their neighbors, lose confidence in each other, and the church loses the benefit of their constructive efforts.

Older people remember the "good old days" when imbued with love they were too busy to fight among themselves, and they drop out. Young people say to themselves, "The world affords a more pleasing scene than this," and they drop out. The weaker ones are absorbed into the Babylon about them; the stronger ones gravitate to other places where conditions seem more hopeful.

It is a life-or-death problem with every branch. If its constituents cannot put down the elements of disaster which spring up everywhere, they die. The branch may not be disorganized at once. The outward form may be retained for years, but death creeps on and on till finally the obsequies are in order.

Trees are often seen going through this sort of a death. The top may be partially dead, yet the trunk or body and the roots survive. Or the body may be hollow and the bark largely scarified and removed, yet some life remains. Roots may be dismembered and the tree suffer, yet live on, partly living, partly dead.

All manner of things arise to cause trouble in branches. To list them would be an imposition on the space demands of the HERALD, besides inviting criticism over the suggestion that sane persons ever quarreled over such insignificant things. Let's hasten from it and summarize some of the points by which we may not only escape death as organizations but live the more abundant life.

A branch should—

1. Have a dominant spirit of brotherly cooperation typical of the Zionie ideal.

2. Choose its most capable members as leaders, then give them a real opportunity to qualify.

3. Provide for occasional meetings at which the membership at large could come to understand the broader meanings of coordination.

4. Be willing to try out new methods fairly and in a spirit of willingness to progress.

5. Keep itself in touch with the progress of the church and the best thought of the times by reading and studying the literature of the church.

6. See that the priesthood not only visit the homes of the Saints, but are enabled to develop high ideals concerning results in this sort of work.

7. Give the young people an opportunity to work at congenial tasks, on the same basis as others.

8. Demand no higher standards in leadership than the equivalent rating of the members as followers.

9. Observe the financial law of the church and develop the social consciousness necessary to make stewardships possible.

10. Be earnestly concerned over the religious education of its children, both in its homes and class work.

The branch which fails to hold its members violates some or all of these points—sometimes many others.

The branch which is thriving is doing so because its leaders and members are concerned about higher standards, and are interesting themselves so much in their problems that petty difficulties receive but scant attention. Differences frankly exist, but the spirit of good fellowship dominates. A recent case in point: A brother had been elected as head of a department. Some votes were cast in opposition, to support arguments made on the floor. After it was over one of the leaders in the minority came to the officer-elect and said: "I tried to keep you out of the place, but having failed, I will work with you and try to help you succeed." Such opposition is inspiring—it puts one on his mettle.

So we are not only concerned with the decayed branches that have been cut off, but greatly affected by the progress and lack of progress prevailing among our existing organizations. If by some concerted action all the petty disturbances that eat away like cancerous growths on the body of the church could be removed, painlessly and effectually, what a transformation would result! But perhaps it is well that we must work out these problems ourselves. It develops our strength—and at the same time many others of our best qualities.

From Zion with its superbranch organization to the smallest group organized among us, we are responsible for the welfare of the group. We must progress or die. Shall we die fighting to decide what is or is not progress, or by our faithful efforts, guided by faith and diligent application, gloriously survive?

or Sunday school classes, are to be under the immediate supervision of the local Religio superintendent.

If any of the above activities in any given local church are working well under the supervision of any other department, we advise that other departments do not attempt to function in that activity. In case there is no local Department of Women, we urge such organization, and if it is found impracticable to organize one, the activities assigned to this department in this form of organization may be under the supervision of the local Sunday school superintendent. If no Religio exists and a Department of Women does exist, under this form of organization we advise that all group study further organized be under the Department of Women, if such groups are of adult women only and held at other times than those of the Sunday school meetings; otherwise they should be under the Sunday school. In such case a local recreational and expressional leader may be nominated by the pastor and approved by the local church. Such leader shall act as one of the coordinating officers. He shall act as an adviser upon matters of a recreational and expressional nature.

This form of organization will open up any detailed system of coordination involved in the apportioning of any and all funds in the local church under a budget system for the use of the various departments. The heads of departments, the local pastor, and such other officials of the priesthood as the local church wishes to appoint, may act as the budget committee or committee on appropriations.

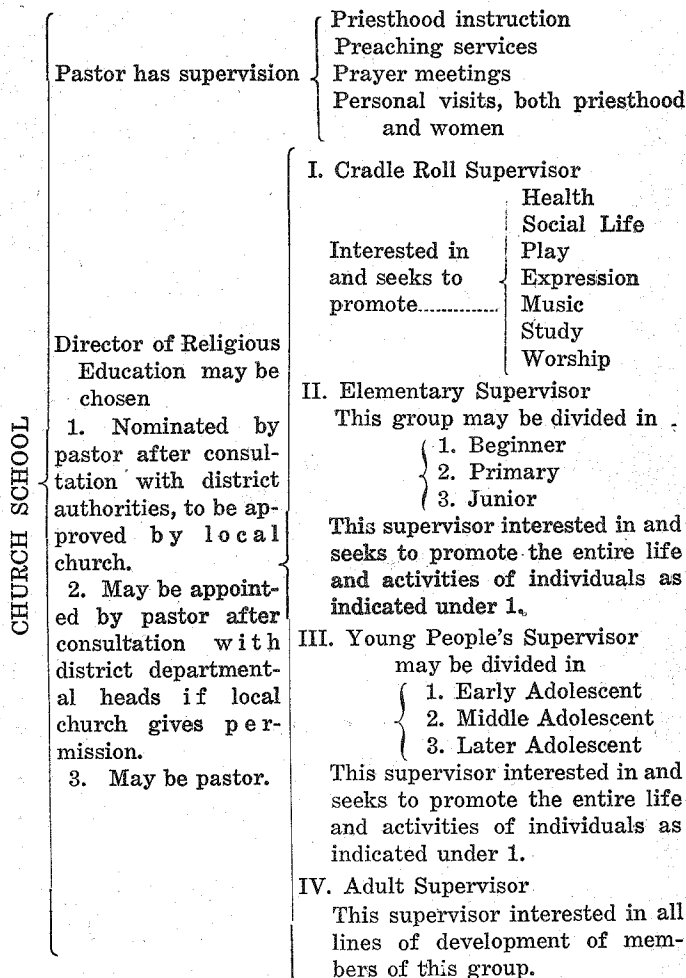

The privilege of using number four is, like number three, subject to the sanction of the district officers of the various departments. The reason this limitation is inserted is that the interests of the Sunday school, Religio, Departments of Women, Music, and Health must be conserved, and these district authorities must be assured that the local church authorities are in sympathy with and are strong advocates of the activities of the departments.

The general departmental heads, through the general Sunday school superintendent at present, will advise as to any further details in this form of organization. If any change in this regard is made, the general departmental heads will advise through the SAINTS' HERALD. This form of organization is

All departmental lines are erased. The whole group of individuals composing the local church are considered in groups divided according to ages. The entire life of the individual is to be considered as a whole and the best methods of conserving his religious education are to be inaugurated.

Music and recreational leader under and advisory to Director of Religious Education, except that the musical leader at such times as he may be acting as chorister and having charge of the church music will be under the immediate direction of the pastor.

much the same as the present relationships between the general heads of departments.

Fifth Form of Organization

Now for Form 5, our ideal, yet one which we are not now recommending for general adoption. Note the outline. Therein, it is to be noted, are the duplications of effort greatly reduced. The nominating scheme suggested in the previous forms is preserved, augmented somewhat if desired, and the division of effort realigned.

No doubt this form must be discussed from various angles and its good points elucidated in detail. Here we must be content with little more than a bare outline.

The aim of the proposed plan is to disentangle ourselves and eliminate the excessive competition we now so often engage in over the time of the child. Everybody gets together and considers the big aim of the church rather than the welfare of his particular organization. The full development of character is sought rather than large attendance on some special occasion, for instance. There is in it a strong attempt at evaluation. The leaders are required to consult frequently and to give the child—in fact all members—a chance to function and develop properly.

To us the plan seems pedagogical. The laws of growth and development seem to be recognized more fully, and the talents of the members given full scope for operation.

Upon receipt of consent of the general superintendents or directors, locals may organize under the following system: All departmental lines may be erased and the local work organized as follows: The use of the second, or group method, may be designated as the church school, and the pastor, after consultation with the district authorities, may nominate a local director of religious education subject to the approval of the local church, or, if the local church desires, the local pastor, after consultation with the district authorities, may appoint a director of religious education. Upon receipt of the concurrence of the district and general authorities, the local pastor may act as such director of religious education. Such director of religious education shall supervise the group or class activities, the work of the cradle roll and the work of the home department. Under such organization it is advised that the director of religious education divide the parishioners into groups according to ages and put over each group a subadministrator, acting under, of course, the director of religious education, and that all group activities of these subgroups—health, social life, study, play, and recreational life and music, be thus supervised.

Giving it a little more in detail, the ordinary small church would be divided about as follows: A cradle roll supervisor, an elementary supervisor, a young people's supervisor, and an adult supervisor. The adult supervisor, if a man, should have a woman assistant who would particularly supervise the group study and group activity of the women of the local church. If a woman, she would have charge of all group activities. The adult supervisor would also have under his charge the home department work. It is quite possible, of course, that the scarcity of workers would demand that the cradle roll and the elementary supervisor be the same person, or that other duplicates of personnel be made. In larger churches the division could be more in detail, as for instance in a church of perhaps four hundred members there could be appointed a cradle roll supervisor, a beginner supervisor, a primary supervisor, a junior supervisor, an early adolescent supervisor, a middle adolescent supervisor, a later adolescent supervisor, and an adult supervisor, with the assistants above mentioned. No personal visits would be under the personal supervision of this director of religious education except those which might necessarily come between the various teachers, the group leaders, and their students or followers. The pastoral visits, visits by women friendly visitors, priesthood instruction, preaching services, and prayer meetings are directly under the supervision of the pastor.

The local music director is to act as a general local officer and in his activities in the church school is under the local director of religious education—in his functions as chorister having charge of the church music, he comes under the immediate direction of the pastor. The leader of recreational and expressional activities provided in Form 4 shall act under and advisory to the director of religious education.

Local churches should adopt one of the above forms of organization and pay no attention to the others.

All correspondence to the general heads of departments relative to relationships of the departments shall be directed at present to the General Superintendent of the Sunday School Department, A. Max Carmichael, Lamoni, Iowa.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Congratulatory or Sympathy?

When a friend is assigned to a foreign mission, what should be our attitude?

Is it a trial to be sent on a foreign mission?

When we were children we played with various toys. The ones we liked best were those that expressed our desire to go and to do. The train, wagons, horses, cars, doll trunks, and threshing-machine, either real or imaginary, were among them. We rode stick-horses; we climbed trees, and sitting on the swaying branches imagined ourselves big folks riding on the waves of the sea, traveling somewhere. Some of us were soldiers going forth to conquer; others were merchants in pursuit of wealth; others were builders or teachers, while some were missionaries going to tell the heathen about Jesus.

What were these childhood fancies? Were they not a part of our very natures? An adventuresome disposition is one of the national characteristics of Americans. Hundreds of young men and women work steadily and economize month after month to be able to take a trip vacation time. And after they have been out West or back East, to the mountains, the falls, the seashore, or whatever coveted spot it may have been, their minds are full of pleasant reflections. And they take up their work again with greater zeal, and patience and satisfaction withal.

Perhaps you can remember once upon a time your parents stopped their work and took you all to a Fourth of July picnic. Several days after, you asked your mother what she was smiling about over her mending. She laughed and said, "Oh, I was thinking what Mrs. Brown said on the Fourth." The diversion had done them good and unconsciously the family machinery ran more smoothly.

Through lectures, magazines, and the screen, people enjoy distant scenes. Since travel has its charm for us we shall conclude that being sent to a foreign land is not a trial, but on the contrary is a pleasure.

Then, is it a hardship to be a missionary? Surely if there is a diversion of scenery in foreign lands, there is also a diversion of duties in missionary work. There is ever something new to do that will help directly or indirectly in the spread of truth and righteousness. Sometimes the way is clear, but often there are obstacles to overcome. And what a recompense is yours when you see homes benefited and souls rejoicing in the great plan of God that you have helped them to see! This joy in doing for others is a heavenly gift. You will find it in the heart of every little child, and you will find it in the heart of every grown-up if it has not been choked out by selfishness.

What is your attitude when you meet one who has been appointed to represent God in some foreign field? Do you say what you truly believe, or do you follow that human inclination to hide your most cherished thoughts from others? Here are some expressions that are easily and thoughtlessly uttered:

"Oh, you poor dears, going so far from home! It must be very hard on your mother! Oh, I could not go!" Instead one should say, "How proud your mother must be! And you will no doubt see her as often as I see my parents. They are not so far away, but I have not seen them for years."

Another will say, "So you're going to —, are you? Well, you have my sympathy! I would not enjoy laboring with that race." Yet all the while he may be thinking, "What an opportune time to be going! Those people once converted will make solid Saints. I wish I were young again."

And still another may continue the monologue thus: "So you've been sent across the waters, too? Well, what a pity, when you have just finished your schooling, too, and are qualified to take some good position!" Could we not rather say, "How good it is to send forth our young people, who not only have a good foundation of knowledge in church affairs, but who are also prepared to cope with conditions of to-day. Surely God can accomplish much good through you."

If we speak carelessly we may cool their ardor, cause them to think of self, weaken them, and if possible make them cowardly. Let us not say, "How do you like to go?" but take it for granted that they do. They do not know until they try, and if they try as God wants them to they will like their work.

Our very attitude may be recalled in their hours of discouragement. Make it that that will strengthen. Congratulate; don't sympathize. MRS. A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

REDROCK, OKLAHOMA.

A Sketch of the Sunday School Lessons

A better understanding of the lesson courses will increase work as teaching ability.

Sunday school work is comparatively new. Robert Raikes, two hundred years ago, established the first Sunday school which had as its primary purpose to bring the children in off the streets. They were taught to read and to write. We can remember as recently as forty and even thirty years ago Sunday schools of that character especially for little children.

When the gospel was restored the commandment was soon given to prepare books for the instruction of little children. It seems that the church did not promptly perform this duty, yet there must have been some basis laid. We know that common schools were soon established, and we know that in the Reorganization the Sunday schools quickly followed the church.

A Sunday school was organized in Saint Louis within two months after the organization of the branch in 1864, but we have been informed that there was a Sunday school in Nauvoo prior to that, and that the Twelve approved the Sunday school work as early as 1862.

These earlier Sunday schools were without mechanical help or even the teachers' Bible that we have to-day. Forty years ago we have known some that simply started with the first chapter of Genesis, read and discussed it, and so proceeded. Others, perhaps with better reason, started with the New Testament. In the eighties two small books, one for intermediate and one for primary, with questions and answers, were published, and in 1890 the General Sunday School Association was formed and shortly after a beginning made with quarterlies. One quarterly soon became two, then three, then five.

Earliest Quarterlies Had Uniform Lessons

The earliest quarterlies attempted to follow the uniform lesson plan. The graded lessons of five quarterlies for the last twelve years have required the labor of five separate editors with lessons especially adapted. We believe that practically all of our people are convinced to-day of the need and value of graded lessons, so we are ready for another step in advance.

While these changes have been taking place in the church we note that the International Sunday School Association some fifty years ago took a forward step in adopting uniform lessons. These lessons still continue with them, though somewhat modified. This permitted one to enter Sunday school in any part of the country in any denomination and find them teaching practically the same lessons, though each church publishing board was left free to handle the subject matter as it saw fit, and the denominational lessons differed in the manner of treatment. Fifty years ago only one speaker urged the necessity of lessons adapted to the need of the child. Uniform lessons are easiest for the adult; graded lessons are for the benefit of children.

Saw Progress Towards Graded Lessons

In 1892 Doctor E. Blakesley prepared some lessons partly adapted, but met with great opposition. In 1896 another effort was made for an elementary department. In 1897 ten lectures were delivered to religious teachers on child nature, one of them being on the religious nature of the little child. It was not until 1902 that a separate primary lesson was prepared, nor until 1908 that graded lessons were adopted, while the adult class work is still in process of development and is not nearly so effective as it should be.

The International Sunday School Council of Religious

a whole is finally secured. It is possible with the graded work, as some have stated, that a large part of the Bible is only referred to in this way collaterally, but that at least tends to secure a general acquaintance.

For our own work there appear strong reasons why the lessons should be adapted as nearly as possible to the age of the child. It is possible that such lessons, where fully prepared and adapted, may be used in the small schools as well as the large schools. It would seem possible that we should be able to utilize the research of others in the Bible, in Bible archæology, and in criticism and child study, but it is also clear that we should prepare our own lessons and that we should see that in our lessons the essential doctrines of the church are taught.

We believe we are ready to make a well-considered advance conservatively and not with upsetting changes.

Graceland a Miniature Zion

At 8 p. m., October 14, a Graceland program was presented in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church with Professor Lonzo Jones in charge, assisted by Apostle John F. Garver.

NEW CHRISTMAS PROGRAM FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS

We want every Sunday school to order at least a sample copy of the new Christmas program we are just printing, which has as a theme the Christmas offering. The subject is handled in a pleasing way, so friends and nonmembers will appreciate the rendering of the subject. Order by name: "Balancing the Christmas ledger." Price, 10 cents each; 75 cents a dozen.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Education is now preparing group graded lessons, uniform lessons, and have a subcommittee to prepare a course of lessons for both Sunday and day school use, and this committee will take over all of the material on closely graded lessons.

An interesting summary has also been made in their research, showing the quantity of the Bible actually studied in the uniform lessons and in the graded lessons. The uniform lessons in over forty-six years entirely ignored 65 per cent of the Bible, while 17 per cent was used three times or more, 7 per cent twice, and the remaining 11 per cent once. In the New Testament 85 per cent of the gospels, 95 per cent of the Acts, and about one third of the rest of the New Testament and less than one third of the Old Testament of the Acts, and about one third of the rest of the New Testament and less than one third of the Old Testament narrative was utilized.

The graded lessons have used 62 per cent of Old Testament narrative and a larger proportion of the New Testament.

Provision has, however, been made in the improved uniform lessons to use 40 per cent of the Bible, including 49 per cent of the Old Testament narrative, 90 per cent of the first three gospels, 57 per cent of John, 98 per cent of Acts, and 21 per cent of the Epistles. Very little of the Old Bible except the narrative is used.

The above is an interesting summary to show what others are doing and are attempting. After all, the percentage of the Bible used is of less importance than that those portions be used at the age for which they are best adapted to the child, and that a real acquaintance with the book as William Patterson, of Australia, was in charge of the music, with Miss Ruth Juergens at the piano. After a duet by Mrs. Bertha F. Burgess and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, Elder Blackmore, of Australia, spoke on the "Storm and stress of the Graceland students." He is proud of the fact that he has come from Australia but amused that people ask him how long it took to learn the American language.

The storm and stress is the mental stress. They come expecting to be told what to believe and think, to have knowledge imparted in chunks nicely wrapped up. They are prepared to believe everything they hear, but find themselves presented with many theories. This makes necessary mental effort, mental activity. Religion cannot be rammed down our throats. The mental activity causes growing pains of knowledge. It is good to pass through this period so as to be prepared to help other young people. Evolution is taught, not as a truth, but as a theory.

William Patterson was then introduced. As Australia was not satisfied to send just one across, they sent another along to keep him company. He gave an imitation of the birds of his native land, and ended up with a pot pourri which he called an oration.

Addie Belle Chappell gave a reading, beginning with the presentation of Il Trovatore before the Emperor and Empress. She was followed by Apostle F. Henry Edwards on "Embryonic Zion." Zion is not a place alone, but a matter of preparation and development. It is a place where we can put in operation things we have learned to do. We have Zion only in embryo; the spirit of Graceland is the spirit of Zion finding expression in the lives of the men and women willing to give their all for Graceland. Fame and wealth are put aside by these men who devote their services to teaching in our college and set an example for the students. "This spirit of consecration which is the foundation of Zion was the first thing that impressed me." The spirit of preparation is exemplified in the lives of the men who go there. The one word that stood out clearly last year was not education, knowledge, nor preparation, but the central word was service. This year the central word seems to be the spirit of youth, but both combine as the spirit of consecration and preparation, the spirit of Zion working towards the building of Zion. Zion in embryo, Graceland College.

Elmer Ohlert, who expects to go to Germany as a missionary, closed the program with a reading, "That something," the will to do and to be.

The program as a whole was one of ideals rather than of entertainment. In earlier days a Graceland program meant a defense and argument for education; later it has been the presentation of an entertainment. This year it is distinctly the setting forth of ideals before the people.

Reminiscences and Impressions of John W. Rushton

In the November number of Autumn Leaves begins a series of three articles by Apostle John W. Rushton, on "Impressions and reminiscences of my first visit to America." They are highly interesting and unique. The superficial is disregarded, yet some of the simpler aspects of life suggest some deep reveries to our thoughtful brother. Ere the series closes he discusses first impressions on meeting prominent leaders of the church, his views on revelation, and other topics which will make this article sought after in years to come.

"Feeding the elder" is discussed by Elbert A. Smith and emphasized by an editorial. It would be a wonderful thing if our sisters would be willing to let the elder live on the common, everyday menu rather than to insist that he have the best possible and eat some of everything in sight.

Thanksgiving is the theme of two articles. "Playing the game" is an excellent little Graceland College story. Sister Emma Burton gives the sequel to a former article on missionary life. There is a sermonet for young people. Two more chapters of "Social graces" appear.

Progress in Change

The big conference tent is taken down and conference is over, to meet again in October, 1923, and what the future has in store is known only to God. We are in the "hastening time" and must ever press onward. In Exodus 14:15 the Lord said, "Speak to Israel that they go forward." The work of God is onward, ever onward, and like Tennyson's brook, it goes on forever.

We can see changes, but in changes we can spell progress. In this forward march we cannot stop to look back and fail of our purpose as did Lot's wife of old. We need not be dismayed, but must fall in line. Old traditions must go and give place to progress. There is no place in the curriculum of God for old traditions. "The glory of God is intelligence," and to be in possession of even a portion of his glory we must get intelligence. God has given his free agency to every man and expects him to use it intelligently and not be like little robins who open their mouths to be filled. We have different viewpoints and see things from different angles, but an honest man will not steel his mind against truth as he sees it, but is broad and ever open to conviction. It is very plainly evident that in order to do business for God we should at least be well informed, but it is not necessary to have gone to college, for as Brother McDowell has said, "It is absurd to suppose that education is synonymous with having gone to college."

God has said, "It is my will that you . . . obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man." Knowledge is the foundation of all education and there is no education without knowledge, and it is not necessary to go to college to obtain a very broad knowledge of both books and men.

Keep our eyes fixed on the goal; never, under any circumstances look back. There may have been discouragements in the past, but power does not come from pondering on the past. "Press onward, press onward, the prize is in view."

Children's Home Board Meets

The Children's Home Board of Trustees met at the bishop's office in Lamoni November 1 for reorganization, resulting in the reelection of Bishop Carmichael as president of the board and the reelection of A. J. Yarrington as treasurer.

The board voted to retain Sister Callie B. Stebbins as its

FOURTH ANNUAL RED CROSS ROLL CALL,
NOVEMBER 11 to 30

The Saints have loyally supported the Red Cross in each call for memberships. We are confident they will do so again this year.

secretary, which office Sister Stebbins very graciously accepted. By vote of the board, A. Carmichael, A. J. Yarrington, C. B. Hartshorn constitute the executive committee. Sister Zilpha Monroe was sustained as superintendent for the remainder of the calendar year.

Good News From Cayman Islands

The following personal letter to one of his many friends gives interesting details of Elder Charles May's work in the British West Indies. A letter from Elder Tordoff follows.

After waiting in the Isle of Pines quite a while for a boat to bring us here, we finally set sail on a two-masted schooner, the Drew. Cayman Island is about two hundred miles from the Isle of Pines. We were, of course, dependent upon the wind and sails on the sailboats, as there is no motor power in most of them. We were just eight days journeying the two hundred miles, as the stiff breeze was a head wind, and it was necessary to tack to the right and left to use what wind there was, and in that way we sailed about six hundred miles in order to go two hundred miles. I am pleased to say that I was not sick at all during the eight days, and in fact enjoyed my trip very much, save that we were anxious to reach here much sooner than we did.

Now that we are here, we are in the midst of a lively series of meetings. Elder Tordoff and I are alternating in the preaching, while Elder Carr is leading in the singing. We have a half hour song service each evening before the opening of the preaching service. Sister Carr plays the organ, and this together with the guitar, ukelele, ocarina, and Brother Carr's violin, is proving a great attraction indeed. They are singing our songs as though they have known them for some time. We have used the "Gospel ladder" song and "What was witnessed in the heavens" with good effect. They are singing and whistling these songs all throughout the village.

The crowds are all that could be expected. The church when packed will hold about one hundred and forty, but it has been estimated that some nights at least three hundred people have heard the sermons. Our crowds are staying by us. We are looking for good results from these efforts. Baptism is to be performed next Sunday.

We are feeling very good over the wonderful interest and good attendance, when we consider the fact that last year when Elder Tordoff first came here there was so much prejudice, opposition, and persecution, his life even being threatened should he not leave the island, but he continued fearlessly and won a place in the hearts of many who eventually obeyed the gospel; also of many who will yet obey the angel's message.

Elder Carr and wife have been a power for good in their work among the people here, and he is fast adapting himself to the conditions one must meet in places of this kind.

This is a very beautiful little island, with about five thousand inhabitants. Tropical fruits are quite plentiful. We have several orange trees in the missionary-house yard, also breadfruit, guavas, limes, etc. We also have a few coconut trees in the yard.

We are located here about one hundred yards from the sea. We enjoy our early morning plunges in the clear blue waters of the Caribbean Sea.

Address me, Nueva Gerona, Isle of Pines.

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHARLES MAY.

Elders May, Carr, and I are in the midst of a series of meetings on the Cayman Island, in the British West Indies.

I first opened up the work here in October of last year, and in six months' time we began to build ourselves a church. We are now using this church. It has a seating capacity of one hundred and fifty, and every night during the meetings thus far, the church has been much too small to accommodate the crowds. Hundreds are hearing the message from the outside of the building, bringing their own seats, and some even climb the trees alongside the building. Elder May and I are alternating the preaching services, while Brother Carr has charge of the services, wielding the baton and singing the songs of Zion, half an hour before the preaching service commences. There will be baptism service to-morrow, and one of the brothers here will send you a full account of this series of meetings, and other series we contemplate holding at other points on the island, at a later date.

Sincerely yours, WILFRED D. TORDOFF.

Independence

The theme of the hour in Independence among the departmental heads is the new situation regarding the religious educational plans of the church. Some very earnest sessions have been held and as a result the various local church leaders are calling meetings of their leaders to discuss the question. We are informed that the superintendents of the general departments are issuing in this number of the HERALD a lengthy statement on the subject, and we are sure this will be studied with interest by many persons. We understand that copies of this will be sent out in booklet form to the departmental leaders throughout the church.

The attempts being made so far are mostly preliminary, though the heads of the departments in Zion are rapidly crystallizing their ideas and no doubt will ere long submit some definite propositions to larger groups for consideration and action. For the present the most attention will likely be given the Religio, allowing each local in Zion to take advanced steps as the people in them feel ready for them.

There is a different organization in Zion than in any district or stake, consequently some points are not so clearly defined and will take more time to work out. A. Max Carmichael and Floyd M. McDowell are being asked to meet with the heads of general departments in Zion on Sunday, November 19, to discuss these matters further.

The first sermon in the series of seven for young people, one each Sunday evening at the Stone Church, was by Elder T. W. Williams last Sunday evening. He preached a "good old gospel sermon" in his usual iconoclastic manner. His one big point was that to have all the scriptural list of officers and the gifts of the gospel was not to have a living church. We might have all these things yet be apostate. The solution was to comprehend the mind of Christ and live on that plane which would indicate our love for each other.

It seems no one of the seven announced last week could be obtained for the occasion, and Elder Williams substituted. The schedule provides that President F. M. Smith is to preach next Sunday evening, but no word has been received as to his acceptance for that date. If he is not here, some one else will occupy in the series.

An interesting time is reported by Elders Walter W. Smith and Frederick A. Smith and wife, who spent Sunday in Lawrence, Kansas, where the state university is located. They attended the "Dad's Day Banquet," put on by the university, enjoying much the speech of William Allen White, of Emporia, who gave a tribute to life and an apostrophe to youth. Frederick A., son of our presiding patriarch, is taking graduate work there this year, and Robert Wayne, son of our church historian, is a junior.

On Sunday Brother Walter W. Smith attended and administered communion to the group of Saints who meet twice a month under the auspices of the Lambda Delta Sigma in Room D, Myers Hall, University of Kansas. Following this service an hour was devoted to a discussion of the subject of "Revelation," by Brother Walter. These earnest young people, sixteen in number, meet on the first and third Sundays of each month. It is interesting to note that of the sixteen all are third generation Latter Day Saints, and some of them fifth, three of these being descendants of Joseph Smith the Martyr. That is, parent and grandparent of most of them were in the church, and in some instances this extended back to the fifth generation. As might be expected from so unique a situation, our church historian plans to write for us the details of this situation for publication in the Journal of History. The president of the Lambda Delta Sigma is Roland Flanders, and the secretary is Robert Wayne Smith.

The Second Independence Sunday School is announcing a Father and Son Luncheon at the church on Monday evening, November 13, at 7 p. m. There will be speeches and a social time, with the proceeds, if any, going to the Christmas offering of the school.

The radio sermon Sunday was by T. W. Williams, with vocal solos by Josephine Smith and some typical Latter Day Saint hymns by a mixed quartet. Elder Walter W. Smith will be the speaker next Sunday.

Sacramental services were largely attended throughout Zion on Sunday, and the churches were mostly filled at the evening services.

Apostle J. W. Rushton has left for his home in California.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending November 4: Mrs. Clifford Murry, and Mrs. Roy F. McIntire, Mount Washington, Missouri; Mrs. Charles Pace and Baby Pace, Kansas City, Missouri; Charles P. Mustain, Sugar Creek, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Rosa Teir, Mrs. R. A. Skinner and babies Robert and Dick Skinner, Mrs. G. G. Garton, H. B. Morris, Bernice Higdon, Mrs. Hubert Case, Miss Martha Logsdon, Miss Katie Hansen, and Lewis Mauzey. X-ray patients: George Swain, Madison, Oklahoma; Mrs. C. F. Bryan, Chariton, Iowa; Harvey L. Johnson, Mount Washington, Missouri; and Mrs. R. A. Skinner, Mrs. B. D. Andes, Juanita Echternacht, and Mrs. L. H. Haas, all of Independence.

Indians Appreciate Attitude of Our Church

The following resolution was adopted by the convention of the Society of American Indians when in session recently at Kansas City. Elder Roy V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, had been before the assembly in an address on "The Indians of To-morrow," and the adoption of the resolution was an expression of gratitude to him and the church. It reads:

"THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN INDIANS

"KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, October 21, 1922.

"REVEREND ROY V. HOPKINS,

Pastor Stone Church,
Independence, Missouri.

"Dear Brother: We, the Society of American Indians, in our eleventh annual conference assembled, do hereby extend to you, and to your church our heartfelt thanks for the kindly Christian consideration shown us and which you extend to our whole race. We hope that this may ripen into the prophecy that is to be fulfilled by your church. We thank you for your personal attendance and address. We feel that your earnest Christian devotion will find a higher and greater reward than it is possible for us to express.

"Most sincerely and faithfully,

"Thomas L. Sloan, President.

"Thomas G. Bishop, Secretary."

Kansas City Stake, at Central Church, Ninth and Lydia Avenue, November 19 and 20. Devotional services on Sunday with business session Monday evening at 7.45. Reports are required from the ministry through their quorums and secretaries and from the various auxiliaries. W. S. Brown, 811 Lydia Avenue.

Little Sioux, at Moorhead, Iowa, November 11 and 12. We expect John F. Garver to be in attendance. We would like to have a full attendance, especially of the priesthood, and all who have not sent in their reports will please bring reports with them. Priesthood meeting at 4 p. m., both Saturday and Sunday. Joseph W. Lane, president.

Notice to Local and District Departmental Workers

Requests have been coming in to ask what effect upon district and local organizations of the various departments the actions of General Conference will have. We answer: Your present organizations may remain, provided you are not ready for an advanced step. We advise making changes slowly, and only after you have consulted with the proper officers. We are now working upon a combined manual for all the departmental work. Notice will be given when it is ready. We are printing in the HERALD this week a preliminary statement of the form that local organizations may take.

Correction in Dates on Senior Religio Lessons

Lessons 7, 8, and 9, in the senior grade Religio Quarterly for October, November, December, 1922, are wrongly dated. The word October in each instance should read November. The figures denoting the days of the month are correct.

Do You Value Good Reading?

It is possible to be a good leader and a progressive thinker in the church without reading the current literature of the church, but it seldom happens. A Something is to be acquired by keeping up with the thought and development of the church which inspires confidence among the Saints. Knowledge is power, and this sort of knowledge is synonymous with spiritual power.

The ability to evaluate our own ideas and ideals, to appreciate and measure the beliefs and conduct of others, is the test of our conception of stewardships, of equality, of progress in general.

If we cannot see and hear and think straight we hamper our own progress and confuse many others. All these processes are largely shaped and influenced by our contact, personal and vicarious, with others.

The social side of our church work is getting more and more complex as we grow in numbers. In order to know what our leaders, general and local, are thinking, we must read as well as hear. Without this knowledge we are not good leaders or followers.

There is a tendency these days, with the pleasures and ease of the world beckoning us on every hand, to pass by the reading matter that comes to our table and to cut down our subscription list till little of value is left.

There are not too many periodicals of the church. Almost any family spends enough money for trifles of no value or for pleasure of less than no value, to buy all the church papers. The family which does not, often could by sacrifice secure them.

The real requirement is a desire to go forward in all that is wholesome and good. Those actuated by that desire will recognize that to read the church papers is a personal obligation.

Ideals of Loyalty

Friends may differ and still be most loyal to each other.

It is evident that no work can be continued unless the principle of loyalty obtains, especially in its broader sense of thankfulness and devotion to a cause.

In its original sense, loyalty means the same as legal, faithful to the law, then to the government, thirdly to the sovereign or prince. But this primary meaning has long given place to the broader sense of true to any person to whom one owes fidelity, especially as a wife to her husband, lovers to each other, friend to friend, a servant to his employer, and fidelity to a cause.

In a military sense loyalty implies implicit, unthinking obedience in the spirit that is shown in "The charge of the light brigade":

"Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die,
Noble six hundred."

At times this is confused with the necessary loyalty to a business concern, the esprit de corps, ignoring the fact that conduct of superiors has much to do with the esprit de corps. Of necessity in any undertaking there must be the recognition of right leadership. Nor does that conflict when properly construed with free agency, free will, or personal responsibility.

Another example and quite in a different spirit, is that of "Surely the captain may depend on me, though but an armor bearer I may be." The loyalty is by no means less, but is coupled with a free and independent choice. The instance was that where Jonathan and his armor bearer went up against the Philistine army. He was willing to go and to do, to follow after his captain, even though he was only an armor bearer. There was no command; it was merely the communion of friends, but there was the security that where a promise had been given it would be fulfilled. That presents a splendid ideal of dependable people and a larger ideal of loyalty.

As presenting clearly a high ideal of loyalty, our attention has been called to the following extract from The Philosophy of Loyalty, by Josiah Royce:

At the moment there is much speech, in current philosophical literature, regarding the "nature of truth" and regarding "pragmatism." An ethical treatise very naturally takes advantage of this situation to discuss the relation between the "practical" and the Eternal. I have done so in my closing chapters. In order to do so, I have had to engage in a certain polemic regarding the problem of Truth—a polemic directed against certain opinions recently set forth by one of my dearest friends, and by one of the most loyal men; my teacher for a while in my youth; my honored colleague, Professor William James. Such a polemic would be indeed much out of place in a book upon Loyalty were it not that my friend and myself fully agree that, to both of us, Truth indeed "is the greatest friend." Had I not very early in my work as a student known Professor James, I doubt whether any poor book of mine would ever have been written—least of all the present one. What I personally owe him, then, I most heartily and affectionately acknowledge. But if he and I do not see Truth in the same light at present, we still do well, I think, as friends, each to speak his own mind as we walk by the way, and then to wait until some other light shines for our eyes. I suppose that so to do is loyalty."

This presents a remarkably deep insight into his ideals of loyalty which are not commonly held, a friendship which is all the more loyal because of that deeper loyalty to truth. Or as Professor Royce quotes elsewhere, "I should not love thee, dear, so much, loved I not honor more."

Doctor Royce relates an incident in the House of Commons in 1642 when Charles I first sent, then came with his soldiers, to take prisoners certain members of Parliament and demanded of the speaker that he point them out. The speaker dropped on his knee before him and replied: "Your Majesty, I am the speaker of this House, and, being such, I have neither eyes to see nor tongue to speak save as the House shall command; and I humbly beg your Majesty's pardon if this is the only answer I can give to your Majesty."

Another instance he quotes is of a young man of splendid promise, a student with excellent prospects, who was called upon by his superiors to compromise some matter so as to deceive the public. He was loyal to his higher ideals, spoke the truth, and refused to conspire. Because his chief was plausible and powerful, he thus deliberately renounced worldly honor. Nor does he ask any recognition for that honesty. His is the ideal of loyalty.

Finally Professor Royce summarizes loyalty in the following terms: "Loyalty is the will to manifest, so far as is possible, the eternal, that is the conscious and superhuman unity of life, in the form of the acts of an individual self."

Or reexpressing it after the manner of his dear friend and colleague, Professor William James, he restates this definition thus:

"Loyalty is the Will to Believe in something eternal, and to express that belief in the practical life of a human being."

The theme is one of tremendous import, and Professor Royce makes it to be the dominant factor in human life, and so interprets it, though it may be seen that he places loyalty to the truth and our higher ideals above all other loyalty. One who is thus loyal, though he differ at times, is still the most loyal of friends.

We Must Read

If that part of our brain which allows us to read should suddenly cease to function, we would be objects of great pity. With all our faculties except this one active and alert, what a tragedy it would seem! Some anatomists say this is possible, that it has happened, but it is an uncommon situation and probably all of us will escape. Let us hope so.

Yet one might suppose that some people do not appreciate their ability to read, judging by the way they use and misuse this knowledge. Because reading matter is so cheap and facilities for its distribution so good, most any of us are apt to give up in despair over keeping up with what the market affords.

One visit to an ordinary news stand, with its ever-changing array of bright covers and alluring illustrations and typography, is almost discouraging to one who considers all he is missing. Then there are the trade papers and the professional periodicals. No matter what we are doing, some magazine or newspaper is trying to help us do it better and enjoy our work. The farmer is especially blessed with good literature for his line of work. All the trades and professions have their journals, each with its special value and appeal. Some who are interested in several vocations and avocations are often quite distraught over how to keep up with the developments in all the subjects which are of interest.

We might multiply instances and extend the discussion in this field, but we prefer now to suggest another, wider, deeper, and more important than the popular general literature or the special technical literature which should be considered.

As followers of Christ we all engage in the same great work. We are differently located, have representatives in many of the trades and professions of the day, yet in the gospel we have a great unifying force which demands attention to the matters of the kingdom of God.

Church literature is as important to church members as advertising and salesmanship literature to those who sell goods or service. The salesman who is not conversant with that which he offers to the trade soon loses out in favor of those who not only know but believe in their products.

If the gospel has any meaning at all for us, it is indicative of action. It is something that must find expression within us. We are either moved by it or do not long possess it.

This has been a year of book production for the church publishing house. Several new books have been published and advertised in these columns and will be advertised further. Within the recent past a number of new tracts have been issued and some old ones given a new dress.

The church periodicals have had in them the past year some invaluable material for immediate use and for reference. They have on hand and in preparation excellent material for the coming months.

It is true that not every article will appeal to every reader. No paper claims one hundred per cent efficiency. What one reader likes another will not care for. But if we buy for five cents a copy of the Saturday Evening Post, for instance, do we expect to appreciate every article or editorial or story or joke in that issue? The facts are that we will likely read but a very small part of the magazine, yet feel that we have had our money's worth. Because we cannot read the entire contents of a magazine is no reason for our refusing to buy or subscribe for it.

So if the family do not read all the material in the church papers, this should not be considered as a valid reason for not continuing a subscription, should it? It does not take very long to look through one of our papers. Make a quick survey. Note the headings and subheadings. Pick out the items that will help you most, read them quickly or deliberately, as the occasion demands. Converse with each other in the family and other gatherings about the church news, about the views being presented for consideration, about coming events in the church and their significance. Check up on who is who occasionally to see how well informed you are. Keep a mental or written record of where to get certain kinds of information. Keep your copy of the catalogue of church supplies where you can find it. If yours is lost, order another and file it conveniently. Look it through occasionally to learn what doctrinal books, textbooks, reading books, educational books, are to be had, and how many you can afford.

Buy not only for yourself, but think of how you may loan your books to advantage. Many friends and converts have been made through the reading of church fiction.

We must read or get away behind in the forward march of the church. Let us be wise and diligent in this regard.

The 1922 Christmas Offering for Missionary Work

The year 1922 is nearly gone and we are right busy now with our plans for Christmas. There is the practice for our entertainment to think about, and then the gifts to get and exchange with cousin, aunty, sister, and friends, but let us not forget about our Christmas offering.

This is one way we have of pleasing our very best friend—Jesus. We sometimes wonder and even worry about the gifts we are to give. What if we should fail to give to some one who will remember us with a nice gift; will the gift we send look cheap in comparison with the one we receive? This is the way many of us Christians celebrate Christ's birthday. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked" by this sort of thing. He looks upon the heart, upon the intents of our thoughts. There is no use to conjure in our hearts about how we can make him think we love him if we are not whole-hearted in our devotion. Better to manifest by our actions the feelings within our bosom. How much do you love your God?

The story of an eastern town is apropos: A visitor who was being shown about the city noticed that it had a large number of fine churches with spires towering heavenward. Finally he composed his thoughts into this expression: "These people must have a great love for their God." With familiar frankness his urban host abruptly replied: "I don't know how much they love their God, but I know they hate each other."

The Christmas offering of 1922 and 1923 will be devoted to missionary work. That amount which is not expended in foreign fields will be used for local evangelical work. The late conference ordered that it should become a part of the general church fund for this purpose. The attention of Sunday school superintendents and teachers is invited to the articles featuring foreign mission work appearing in our Sunday school paper, Stepping Stones, as a means of arousing the missionary consciousness and actively enlisting it in the Christmas offering campaign.

Has the goal set by your Sunday school been reached, or forgotten? The cause is a real challenge to the best there is in us. "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." It is required that we give ourselves for it also. We serve him and his church by serving others.

Very sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Cost of Publishing

The Herald Publishing House is sending out under date of November 2 to all publicity agents, bishop's agents, and branch presidents an announcement concerning our business. The report to the conference shows that the publishing house operated at a loss for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. The reason is that church periodicals show a decline of receipts of nearly $5,000, while the sale of books and merchandise was nearly $30,000 less than the previous fiscal year, this despite the fact that during the previous fiscal year the offices were moved from Lamoni to Independence.

The cost of printing the periodicals is indicated in the table below.

Cost per 1,000 copies, based on present subscription list:

SAINTS' HERALD	$ 54.25
Zion's Ensign	17.20
Autumn Leaves	125.70

Cost per additional 1,000 copies if our subscription lists were doubled:

SAINTS' HERALD	$22.40
Zion's Ensign	7.15
Autumn Leaves	41.15

It will be noted that if the subscription lists were doubled the cost of printing the extra copies would only be about from thirty to forty per cent as much as it now costs to print each periodical. The reason for this is that the editorial work, stenographic work, copy editing, proof reading, composition, make up, and placing in the press must be met regardless of the number of copies printed. It is only the paper and ink cost, and press work, folding, and mailing that is increased pro rata with the number of periodicals published.

Again, nearly as large a percentage can be saved on books if we could print a large edition. It is difficult to sell a book at a reasonable price and print less than 3,000, yet the office takes quite a risk in printing 3,000 copies of a new book.

We have urged before that if our subscription lists were increased, that then and only then would it be possible to consider reducing the price of periodicals. The publishing house belongs to the church and to you. It needs your continued support; it needs also that the church members use it more in the procuring of job printing. You can help the publishing house first, by subscribing for the church periodicals yourself; second, by buying the church books; third, by buying through the Herald Publishing House the books of other publishers, including Bibles; fourth, by sending your printing work to the publishing house; fifth, by selling specialties which are advertised by the Herald Publishing House, for example the Scripture Calendars announced in the HERALD for November 1, and the Ensign for November 2.

New Lamoni Stake Presidency

Because of ordination into Quorum of Twelve of former presidency, Cyril E. Wight is chosen president; Wilber E. Prall, counselor.

A special conference of the Lamoni Stake was held at Lamoni on November 4 and 5. Owing to the ordination of John F. Garver, president of the stake, and Daniel T. Williams, one of his counselors, to the Quorum of Twelve, a reorganization of the stake presidency was necessary. Presidents Floyd M. McDowell and Elbert A. Smith were present and in charge of the business session on Saturday afternoon and presented as nominee for the stake presidency, Cyril E. Wight. This nomination was approved by unanimous standing vote. Brother Wight then nominated Wilber E. Prall as a counselor, which was also approved by a unanimous standing vote. A resolution of appreciation was then adopted by unanimous vote concerning the work of Elder Garver and his associates.

At the Sunday morning sacrament service a very splendid spirit was present. Appropriate speeches were made by the retiring officers, Elder John F. Garver and Elder Daniel T. Williams. Speeches were also made by Elder Cyril E. Wight and Elder Wilber E. Prall. The two new men were then ordained, Elders Elbert A. Smith and John F. Garver ordaining Cyril E. Wight; Daniel T. Williams and Floyd M. McDowell ordaining W. E. Prall, the first named being spokesman in each instance. There was an excellent spirit of unity throughout the conference.

Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at night, closing the conference.

Brother Cyril E. Wight, the new stake president, is a son of John W. Wight and a grandson of Lyman Wight. He has been a member of the Lamoni stake presidency since June, 1918. Before that for several years he was secretary of Lamoni Stake, acting in the office of priest and later as an elder. He is a graduate of the schools of Lamoni and after completing a business course returned to take charge of shorthand and typewriting at Graceland College, about 1914-1915. For the school years 1919-1921 he was in charge of the class in religious education, resigning his connection with the business department of the college to undertake the establishment of this new work.

He is methodical and careful in all of his work and devoted to the service of the church.

Wilber E. Prall has also been a staunch supporter of the church and has assisted the stake presidency in many of the sacrament services the past few years since his ordination to the office of elder. He has been actively engaged in Sunday school work in Lamoni for a number of years. He also took charge of the Davis City Branch, about seven miles from Lamoni, several years ago. The church work there was at a very low ebb. He faithfully stuck to his post until now it is a flourishing little group of Saints with excellent standing in the community. It was an excellent demonstration of what a pastor can do with an unfavorable situation.

He possesses the confidence of the Saints in Lamoni where he has made his home for many years and where he is at present engaged, and has been for many years past, as a teller in the State Savings Bank of Lamoni.

Two More to Scandinavia

Elder and Sister V. D. Ruch will sail November 16 for Norway and Sweden where they expect to engage immediately in missionary work.

Elder Ruch was born in Bevier, Missouri, in September, 1890, and was baptized at an early age. In 1911 he moved to Huntsville, Missouri, and met and married Miss Zella Vanderveck. She was a member of the Baptist Church and especially strong in her belief and active in the work of that church. In the fall of 1917 Elder A. M. Chase and wife came there with the district tent, and as a result Sister Ruch, although she had very keenly resented the coming of the tent, through courtesy to her husband attended the meetings and was baptized. For a time she suffered severe ostracism, but her kindly attitude in time won back her friends.

A Sunday school was organized in October, 1917, and sent in an average of $11 per member to the Christmas offering for that year, and the following year took first place with an average offering of $25.01 per member.

In March, 1919, Brother Ruch was ordained a priest and began at once to hold preaching services twice a month. In June, 1920, he was ordained an elder, and in the fall entered the religious education class with his wife, at Graceland. They there took a foreign course and studied the Norse language. At the end of the school year he was appointed to the Northeastern Missouri District as a missionary, and last spring was appointed to Norway and Sweden to be gone five years and to leave immediately after General Conference. He has served as bishop's agent for the Northeastern Missouri District for one year and as district Sunday school superintendent for three years. Sister Ruch has been the leader of the Temple Builders in Bevier, taught in the Sunday school, acted as chorister in the Religio, and assisted in many other ways. They have one child about two years of age.

They are consecrated and devoted people and are giving up a fine modern home and comfortable living to carry the gospel story abroad.

Elder Griffiths's Statement

Some of our readers have evidently misunderstood the statement made by Elder Gomer T. Griffiths after the vote was taken to accept the document presented to the church on October 2. Brother Griffiths at that time said that he was still an apostle, though the voice of the conference had taken away his right to act.

This is no new position for Brother Griffiths to take. He has consistently held that men who were called to be apostles continued as apostles. He has taken that position with regard to his brothers, though he has fully recognized that previous revelations received by the church have released them from activity in the Quorum of Twelve, and he has fully accepted their release. The First Presidency are apostles, though not members of the Quorum of Twelve.

Brother Griffiths was satisfied with regard to his own release before it was presented to the conference. He raised no objection so far as we know on that score. His statement was therefore only a general statement that he has made heretofore on behalf of others. He fully recognizes that he has been released from responsibility as one of the twelve apostles, as a member of the Quorum of Twelve; but he considers that his apostolic authority, the authority of the priesthood, was bestowed by God and still remains with him, even though he recognizes that his heavenly Father may release him from special responsibility in this dispensation.

Safe Arrival in Australia

A letter from A. C. Barmore, dated October 16, informs that after a good trip they arrived at Sydney, Australia, on October 4. Sister Barmore, though not in good health, stood the trip well. A reception was held in their honor on the evening of the 7th, and about three hundred Saints and friends were present.

They have been busy among the Saints and are surprised to see the large number of young people the church has in that country.

He reports that Apostle McConley and Bishop Lewis have gone on a trip to New Zealand.

Wedding Announcements

To-day the editors received a lengthy account of a certain wedding of much local interest, likely, but probably of little general interest. The name of the sender was not accompanying and we are unable to explain to him that for many years the HERALD has printed a notice in each issue that marriage notices were printed upon payment of one dollar for each hundred words.

A brother recently came into the office to give us details of a double wedding at which he had officiated. He did not know the rule we have quoted.

Many others seem to be unaware of this situation, which has grown out of the fact that though the church has doubled and trebled its membership in the past forty years, the size of the HERALD remains the same. The number of marriages, births, and deaths has proportionately increased, but the space in which to discuss these items has remained the same. As a result the editors have been required to exclude all items of only personal and local value, in favor of those adjudged more general in scope.

If, for instance, a couple, one or both of whom are rather widely known throughout the church, are joined in marriage, a few lines about the event are not amiss, especially when they are accompanied with other items from the same place. But the kind of clothes worn by the participants, the various little details that should be in a local newspaper, should not have place in our church paper which goes all over this country and into several foreign countries.

The same principle applies to other local items, and we are using this space to explain the situation to our constantly changing list of readers, so they may be governed accordingly.

The Holden Home will celebrate its fifth anniversary on November 20 and announces that all visitors will be welcome, and the friends of the institution are urged to join with the old folks in making it a pleasant occasion. A bazaar will be held in the auditorium of the home in which articles made by the inmates will be placed on sale. The day's program will close with an entertainment in the evening.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the HERALD intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Zion Redeemed

By A. W. Whiting

This brother believes Zion is already redeemed but not fully established.

I believe Zion is already redeemed and shall give the reader my reasons for such a belief. In the first place, there could be no redemption of Zion if there were no Zion, so there must be a Zion and Zion must fall. Otherwise there could be no redemption of Zion.

To redeem Zion would mean to restore or place back in a condition at least as good as she was before her fall. We will not treat so much on the redemption of the land of Zion, but more especially the real Zion, the church, or the people, or Zion, the pure in heart.

In the first section of Doctrine and Covenants the Lord tells us that the promises contained therein will all be fulfilled. So, then, we will take God at his word and proceed to show that many of the promises of God concerning Zion, her fall, and her redemption, have already been fulfilled.

All who have read Doctrine and Covenants know that at an early day the Lord began warning the church of her downfall, and also made promises concerning her redemption.

In 1833 the Lord forewarned the people of their being driven and scattered, and few should stand to receive an inheritance.

And in 1834 he forewarned them of their going in bondage, and in 1837 the Lord warned the twelve apostles of a time when they would be in an unconverted condition and would have to be felt after and healed and converted again.

In a short time we find that these warnings or prophecies were literally fulfilled. In 1844 their presiding head was taken, and a few years later they were again driven and scattered and became disorganized and went into spiritual bondage. Along about this time we find the church without a quorum of the first presidency and without a quorum of twelve, without elders', priests', teachers', or deacons' quorums. So we find Zion, the church, in bondage in fulfillment of the prophecy given in 1834 of their going into bondage.

Church Existed Though Scattered

Now, while the church was disorganized and scattered, she still existed. Otherwise there would be no Zion to redeem. Finding Zion, the church, in this condition, there was certainly a necessity for her redemption or restoration. How can it be done? We will let the Lord tell us.

In section 100 of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 3, we read: "Behold the redemption of Zion must needs come by power. Therefore I will raise up unto my people a man who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel and the seed of Abraham, and must needs be led out of bondage by power and with an outstretched arm, and as your fathers were led at the first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be."

In the above I think the Lord has made it as plain as language could make it—just how the redemption of Zion will be brought about.

Now for the question, Has the Lord fulfilled his promise, or has he failed and not done as he agreed? If fulfilled, where is the man like unto Moses whom the Lord promised to raise up to redeem Zion?

Where was the church, or Zion, during the years from 1844 to 1860? We find many of the members in the different factions, and thousands stood aloof from any of them, and their names were still on the church records. The baptism of many of them was still good, and many had been called of God and ordained and their priesthood was still good.

But to-day conditions have changed and we cannot find any of Christ's church in any of the factions. We do not recognize any of their baptisms or ordinances as valid.

Do we want to admit that Zion, the church, is still in bondage to-day? Do we want to admit that the church is still rejected? Or has she been redeemed from that condition? Or, did the Lord suffer that people who went into bondage in 1844 to all die in bondage?

I will try to prove that God is not slack concerning his promises, and that he did raise up the man like unto Moses, and that God did through this Moses redeem Zion from her lost and fallen condition.

Revelation to Briggs

In Church History, volume 3, we read a revelation given to Jason W. Briggs in 1852 while he was praying over the condition of the church at that time. While the revelation is not in the Doctrine and Covenants, our elders have used it for fifty years to prove that our late Joseph was the lawful successor to the prophetic office in the church, and I was pleased a few months ago to read an article from one of our leading men quoting that revelation and saying that it stands on its own merits. Every promise in it has been literally fulfilled.

At the time that revelation was given there was some doubt concerning its divinity; but there can be none now. In it the Lord said that he has not cast off his people; neither has he changed concerning Zion. "Yea, verily my people shall be redeemed, and in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith and bring one forth and he shall be mighty and strong and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church and then shall the quorums assemble and Zion be inhabited."

In a few years after this our late Joseph Smith came, claiming that God had called upon him to preside over the church. Since then all of the quorums have assembled and the land of Zion is again inhabited. Some of it has been arranged by lot for the inheritances of Saints. Thus has the late Joseph Smith fulfilled all of the promises concerning the one mighty and strong. The Enoch Hill property was arranged by lot while he still lived.

I have before me some old copies of the Saints' Advocate published by the Reorganized Church in 1878. This paper was edited by W. W. Blair and published for the benefit of the factions, and in them we find articles from Brother Blair and other leading men of the church, teaching that the late Joseph Smith was the man like unto Moses whom the Lord promised to raise up to redeem Zion. Joseph must have believed he was the Moses man, otherwise he would not have allowed his name to be published to the world as he did.

In Doctrine and Covenants 98, the Lord said, "And now I will show unto you a parable, that you may know my will concerning the redemption of Zion," and goes on to foretell the destruction of his vineyard or the church, and also the breaking down of the twelve olive trees, or the fall of the twelve apostles, and then he calls one of his servants, our late Joseph, and tells him to go and redeem his vineyard or church and this servant was to be a ruler in his kingdom. And he goes on and shows that this servant (young Joseph) did go and redeem the vineyard, or church, or Zion, from their fallen condition.

Fall and Redemption Past

In reading these prophetic utterances and being able to see their literal fulfillment, our position as a church is strengthened, and we are encouraged. Now, I think that we have been able to show that Zion's fall and her redemption is a thing of the past.

In section 102 of Doctrine and Covenants is the last time he mentions the redemption of Zion. He says, "Let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her laws be executed and fulfilled after her redemption."

Having shown that Zion is already redeemed, our leaders and bishops are timely in trying to execute all the laws of Zion. But if it is, as some believe, that the redemption of Zion is still in the future, then our presidents and bishops should cease teaching the stewardship law, and all the laws of Zion, and wait until Zion is redeemed.

If my position is correct, then we have the arguments of all the factions answered and they have no come-back at us. One of them approached me in this way: He said, "You Josephites have been preaching for fifty years that Young Joseph was the Moses man that God promised to raise up to redeem Zion, and now he is dead and gone and Zion is not redeemed. What are you going to do?" I had to show him Joseph had proved himself to be the man like unto Moses, because he had done the work, and under his leadership Zion had been redeemed from her fall, and I do not believe we have to change and preach differently from what we preached fifty years ago.

But when we see the fulfillment of these promises concerning Zion and her redemption, we can still preach the same thing and do not have to apologize to the factions and admit we were mistaken.

After having said so much about the redemption of Zion, the people, what about the land of Zion as the land for Zion?

In 1833 there were twelve hundred Saints driven from Independence. At that time the headquarters of the church was not here. Central Zion was not organized here at that time, but to-day we have four times that number here. Central Zion is organized here with stakes all around. The headquarters of the church is here, presided over by the First Presidency.

Back With Songs of Everlasting Joy

And now, having been gathered back to Zion and having come from all over the world with songs of everlasting joy, in place of trying to redeem Zion—something that has already been done—let us try to build up and establish Zion on the principles of the laws of the celestial kingdom so God can receive her unto himself.

By complying with the stewardship laws and executing all the laws that the Lord said should be fulfilled after her redemption, this is possible. This could not have been done while Zion was mixed up with all of the factions and in bondage. But having been led out by the man like unto Moses, all of the laws of Zion are in force. Now, is it right for us to pray for the Lord to do something he has already done? We should rather pray that God will help us to establish Zion here on the land of Zion, build it up upon the principles of the laws of the celestial kingdom, and then the Lord will receive her unto himself.

If we use the word establish in place of redeem, we will not conflict with facts. We have commenced to establish Zion, and I think we have a fairly good start, with Central Zion organized, with stakes all around, with thirty-eight organized groups presided over by elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. Under these conditions we certainly should succeed.

So I am encouraged with regard to Zion and believe she will soon rise and shine. I hope no one will rise up and say that Zion can never be redeemed before she comes up and keeps all of the laws of Zion, because the Lord has told us that these laws shall be executed and fulfilled after her redemption—not before.

More Comment on Book of Mormon Geography

By J. F. Gunsolley

Location of "the land north," "the land south," "Hill Cumorah," "Hill Ramah," etc.

The writer presumes that all students of the Book of Mormon are agreed that the terms "land north" and "land south" mean north and south of the "narrow neck," "narrow pass," etc. There is, however, a difference of opinion as to the location of the narrow neck. It was known to the Jaredites, also the Nephites; Moroni speaks about it four hundred years, A. D. and there is no evidence that it has changed its form or location up to the present time. The distance across is stated as being "a day and a half's journey." A day's journey was known to the Jews as twenty-four miles, which is about thirty-three English miles. This fact of history ought to establish the location of the "narrow neck."

The writer further presumes that all are agreed that the Jaredites occupied the "land north" and the Zarahemlaites and Nephites the "land south."

The writer believes that North America is the "land north" and that South America is the "land south." The numerous population would not admit of any less territory. The Nephites came from Jerusalem 600 B. C. The Zarahemlaites came in 589 B. C. They became a united people under Mosiah about 200 B. C., thus being here about four hundred years before discovering each other. The Jaredites also occupied in the "land north" during the same period of four hundred years and were not discovered by either the Nephites or the people of Zarahemla.

The question naturally arises: How could these three peoples occupy any less territory than North and South America for a period of four hundred years and not discover each other? Their great numbers would prevent.

He [Coriantumr] saw that there had been slain by the sword already nearly two million of his people, and he began to sorrow in his heart; yea, there had been slain two millions of mighty men, and also their wives and their children. . . .

Wherefore they were for the space of four years, gathering together the people.—Ether 6: 73, 86.

After two million mighty men with their wives and children slain, it took four years to gather the rest of the Jaredites together. They must have been a great multitude or they were scattered far and few between.

"And at the time that Mosiah discovered them, they had become exceeding numerous." (Omni 1: 28.) Notice here that the people of Zarahemla were "exceeding numerous." Numerous means a great many; exceeding numerous must mean a great many more.

"And the people were as numerous almost, as it were the sand of the sea."—Mormon 1: 7.

This last quotation refers to time many years later. It is quoted to show how rapidly the population increased and as a definition as to what a numerous people consisted of in numbers.

Now it was the custom of the people of Nephi, to call their lands, and their cities, and their villages, . . . after the name of him who first possessed them.—Alma 6: 8.

It was not only the custom of the Nephites, but it is the custom of all peoples to perpetuate the name of ancestors. There were no Israelites until Jacob's name was changed to Israel. There were no "ites" of any kind until some one of extraordinary ability came into prominence. So with Zarahemla, who was king over his people, who were formerly called Mulekites. But after he became their king they were called the people of Zarahemla.

As formerly stated, the people of Zarahemla and Nephites under Mosiah became one people about 200 B. C.

"And now I, Amaron, write the things whatsoever I write, . . . in the book of my father. Behold, it came to pass that three hundred and twenty years had passed away," etc., i. e., since Lehi left Jerusalem, or it would be 280 B. C. Following Amaron were Chemish, Abinadom, and Amaleki.

Behold, I, Amaleki, was born in the days of Mosiah: and I have lived to see his death; and Benjamin, his son, reigneth in his stead.—Omni 1: 40.

Amaron wrote 280 B. C., which would leave eighty years to be allotted to Chemish, Abinadom, and Amaleki, up to the beginning of Mosiah's reign about 200 B. C. Figure it another way:

And Mosiah began to reign in his father's stead. . . . making in the whole about four hundred and seventy-six years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem. And King Benjamin lived three years and he died.—Mosiah 4: 5-7.

This would make 91 B. C. for the death of Mosiah. Add thirty-three years to his reign, which makes 124 B. C. for the beginning of Mosiah's reign, to which add the possible years of Benjamin and his father, Mosiah's reign, and it will not be far from 200 B. C. for the time of the uniting of the people of Zarahemla and the Nephites under Mosiah.

And it came to pass that the people of Zarahemla, and of Mosiah, did unite together; and Mosiah was appointed to be their king. And it came to pass in the days of Mosiah, there was a large stone brought unto him, with engravings on it; . . . and they gave an account of one Coriantumr, and the slain of his people. And Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla; and he dwelt with them for the space of nine moons.—Omni 1: 34-37.

This Coriantumr was the last man, save Ether, of the Jaredites, and was discovered by this people after their name was changed from Mulekites to Zarahemlaites, possibly in the days of Zarahemla and Mosiah, about 200 B. C. Zarahemla was alive at that time and the people were not called after his name until he was their king.

Now, there was great rejoicing among the people of Zarahemla; and also, Zarahemla did rejoice exceedingly, . . . Zarahemla gave a genealogy of his fathers, according to his memory.—Omni 1: 25, 33.

It will be noticed that Zarahemla was very much alive about this time and that Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla. This wording would not have been used had the people been called by some other name.

If the battle at Ramah happened 600 B. C. as tradition has taught us, then Coriantumr must have been about four hundred years old. But the Jaredites did not live to such an age.

And it came to pass that he [Coriantumr] had no children, even until he was exceeding old, and it came to pass his wife died, being an hundred and two years old. And it came to pass that Coriantumr took a wife, in his old age, . . . he lived until he was an hundred and forty and two years old.—Ether 4: 26-28.

Coriantumr was exceeding old at one hundred years of age and Coriantumr was several hundred years after Coriantumr.

"And their bones should become as heaps of earth upon the face of the land, except they should repent," etc. (Ether 4: 96.)

Amaleki says, "And their bones lay scattered in the land northward." (Omni 1: 39.)

Mosiah began to reign four hundred and seventy-six years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem, or 124 B. C. After having three years of peace, sixteen men were allowed to go in search of some people who had left the land of Zarahemla. These men fell into the hands of Limhi, who was king over the people whom they were seeking to find. The leader of these sixteen men was a descendant of Zarahemla. His name was Ammon. Some time prior to this, Limhi had sent out some men to find Zarahemla. They wandered, and returned a few days before Ammon and his band arrived. Remember that this was 121 B. C.

And they were lost in the wilderness, for the space of many days. . . . Having discovered a land which was covered with bones of men, and of beasts, etc., and was also covered with the ruins of buildings of every kind: having discovered a land which had been peopled with a people who were as numerous as the hosts of Israel. And for a testimony . . . they have brought twenty-four gold plates . . . breast plates . . . of brass and of copper, . . . and again they have brought swords, the hilts thereof have perished, and the blades thereof were cankered with rust.—Mosiah 5: 61-66.

You will notice in this reference that the bones were yet lying on the ground and the people had been as numerous as the hosts of Israel: also the swords made of steel were cankered with rust and the hilts gone. This was 121 B. C., and if the battle at Ramah was fought 600 B. C., then these bones and swords lay on the ground 479 years. It could not have so happened. It would be much easier to change the date than it would be to make the bones of men and beasts to lie on the ground for 479 years and not decay. If they could last that long there might be some of them found to-day.

This "bone" question can be answered in one way only. The writer put it before a priesthood meeting this way: Let a man or animal die anywhere between Alaska and Greenland on the north and Patagonia on the south, or between Maine and California. Take an average of the climate of America, and how long would it be until the traces of the man or beast would become extinct? The brothers of the priesthood responded quite freely and only one put the limit at fifteen years. These bones referred to were on the ground at the time the men of Limhi found the twenty-four gold plates. It was 121 B. C. when they were found. Now figure the time for the battle at Ramah.

While you are figuring on the time you may as well consider location also, for when you have located Ramah, you have also found Cumorah, for they are the same, according to the language of the book.

Putting these references together with others that might be cited, we get this: The Jaredites occupied the land north of the Isthmus of Panama from about 2200 B. C. to 200 or 150 B. C. The Mulekites landed in southern part of the land north and came from thence up into the south wilderness south of the isthmus in north South America, where they were discovered by Mosiah. The time of occupancy was 589 B. C., or as soon thereafter as they landed, up to about 200 B. C., when they united with the Nephites. Lehi landed somewhere in the land south. His descendants moving north, united with the people of Zarahemla as has already been stated. So the Jaredites, Mulekites, or people of Zarahemla, and the Nephites occupied somewhere on this continent at the same time for about four hundred years before they got acquainted.

Archæologists say that the oldest traces of man are in North America, the Toltecs, and that the Aztecs originated in South America. Emigrating north, they occupied the land of the Toltec. This is in harmony with the prophecies of Ether to Coriantumr wherein he says that he should only live to see the land occupied by another people and that he would receive burial at their hands.

The book says that the Jaredites spread all over the face of the land northward. The writer believes he has evidence to prove they inhabited the Great Lakes region. Others say they were the Mound Builders of the Ohio Valley and elsewhere. If this be true, and the people of Zarahemla, Nephites, and Lamanites were as exceeding numerous as the book says, how could these three peoples occupy any less territory than North and South America at the same time for a period of about four hundred years without discovering each other?

Coriantumr fled before Shiz and "came to the waters of Ripliancum, which by interpretation, is large, or to exceed all"; here they had a battle in which Coriantumr was defeated; "and they did flee southward. . . . And it came to pass that the army of Coriantumr did pitch their tents by the hill Ramah; and it was that same hill where my father Mormon did hide up the records," etc. (See Ether 6: 79-84.)

It will be seen in this reference that the waters of Ripliancum "is large to exceed all," and that Ramah is south of Ripliancum. This cannot possibly refer to the lakes in New York, for when you begin to search for the largest body of water you will stop at Lake Superior. No one will admit that Ramah is south of Superior, so you will have to look elsewhere, and in our research we find a body of water twenty miles wide by seventy miles long with none other anywhere in that region half so large. South of this water is a range of mountains with several peaks from four thousand to seven thousand feet high. "From the top of the hill Cumorah," Mormon viewed the destruction of the Nephites.

There is only one place in America that fits this description, and that is in southern Mexico.

Mormon hid records in Cumorah (Mormon 3: 8; Ether 6: 83), and there is no other reference in the book about Mormon hiding plates.

To make a detailed map of ancient America is an impossibility. One might as well read a history of Europe that was issued fifty years ago and one issued in 1920 and then try to draw a map to fit. It cannot be done.

The Use of Meat as Food

The eating of meat dates back to the earliest times. According to Genesis 9: 3, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things."

And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for, behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin, and woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 2.

Why Meat Stimulates

Now the purpose of this paper is to show that while the use of meat in the proper season and in the proper quantities is to be tolerated, its use under other conditions is to be condemned.

Meat as usually served contains only from ten per cent to fifteen per cent fat, yet its heat-making property is not confined entirely to the fat element. Meat contains a large amount of uric acid and other products of decomposition, which must be eliminated from the system by the exercise of energy or heat. Uric acid, residual in all meat, is a strong irritant and sets up what might be termed a local fever. This explains why meat is stimulating. The use of meat as food creates heat, because the body is constantly employed in throwing off and disposing of uric acid and other waste or decomposing food.

Meat as food supplies the body with three elements: fats, proteids, and water. The water from flesh is a source of heat, exactly as alcohol is a source of heat. Both of these poisons generate heat in the body because, being foreign substances, Nature quickens the action of the heart and increases the circulation of the blood in her effort to cast them out. The heat or energy required to do this work must be obtained from other sources of nutrition, and this energy must be expended in addition to that required for the ordinary work. This then is a source of heat that really consumes energy.

This explains why carnivorous animals do not possess the endurance of the herbivorous class. If the excess of flesh foods is not stored up in the form of fat and eliminated through the regular excretory channels, it undergoes a form of decomposition which produces what is termed auto-intoxication. Thus the circulation is quickened, the heart is worked overtime, and the blood becomes superheated in the effort of nature to rid the body of these poisons; this is disease. Human nutrition is one of the most important problems of life. The majority of diseases is traceable to wrong nutrition, while correct nutrition will render the body immune to most diseases.

Observe Laws of Nutrition

Of all natural laws the laws of nutrition are perhaps the least understood and the oftenest violated. Our diet should be composed of such things as chemically harmonize when combined. The more nearly this law is obeyed the more perfect will be digestion and assimilation of food and elimination of waste.

Food should be taken according to age, climate, and activity. Eating is the process of making energy. Activity is the process of expending energy; therefore we should make these two balance. The nearer we make them balance the stronger will become our mental and physical forces. The best food is often rendered useless, and in many cases positively harmful by taking it in greater quantities than can be digested, or in excess of that which the body really needs. Every ounce of food taken into the body, that cannot be used either in the process of life or in stored-up energy, is a menace to health. It is either cast out at great expense of energy or it undergoes a process of fermentation which is the beginning of all stomach trouble. The flesh of animals, strictly speaking, is not food, but the result of food. The best meat contains only about thirty per cent of food value, twenty per cent protein, and ten per cent fat. The remaining seventy per cent is water. The protein can be procured from milk, eggs, nuts, and legumes in larger proportions than from meat and in much cleaner and better form at lower cost. The fat can be procured from butter, cream, nuts, and vegetable oils, in much better and cheaper form.

Danger From Uric Acid

A better quality of water can be procured from the common hydrant. In fact, it would be difficult to procure water containing more toxic matter than is found in the water in animal flesh. When we take flesh into our bodies we take the uric acid with the toxic carbondioxide and carbon monoxide, poisons resident in all animal flesh. These poisons, added to those in our bodies, overburden the excretory organs which are unable to throw off the excess, and the retention of the poisons is one of the primary causes of disease. Persons of sedentary habits should be very careful in the use of too much meat, while persons of active habits could use more with less harmful results, keeping in mind the season of the year, and climate. The writer of this has observed that among vegetarians, some of whom have

Value of the Knowledge of Abnormal Psychology to the Pastor

By James E. Bishop, before High Priests' Quorum at General Conference.

Stating the question a little more fully, we ask, Has the study of unsoundness of mind brought to light any knowledge that would help the pastor in his work?

It would seem certain that one should know something of the science itself before he can appreciate its value. Perhaps it is beyond question that value and knowledge coincide. It is also true that the abnormal cannot be understood without some idea of the normal.

Before entering into a rough sketch of normal and abnormal psychology, it is well to say that men had as keen insight of human nature before this science was born as they have had since, and that there are men who understand the elements and principles of psychology yet do not understand human nature. To do the best for men and get them to do their best is the result of knowing men. However, the rule seems to be that the more we know about normal and abnormal psychology the better equipped we shall be to understand and render effective service to our fellow men.

When William James accepted the definition given by Professor Ladd that psychology was the study of states of consciousness as such, he got hold of the thesis that placed the study on a scientific basis, and removed it from the realm of such speculative questions as immortality. However, he acknowledged that these various states inhered in an ago.

Feeling, knowing, and willing are spoken of as three aspects of mind. There must be a knower as well as the thing known; a feeler as well as a thing felt; and a will as well as a thing willed. This suggests the bi-polar or subject-object sides of consciousness. The question has been raised as to whether the consciousness of self precedes the consciousness of objects and it seems that the best answer is, that these bi-polar aspects are coterminous with consciousness itself.

Professor Royce gave an interesting departure from the old tri-partite division of mind when in his "Outlines" he postulated sensitiveness, docility, and mental initiative as a threefold aspect of mind. Not only is this division novel; it is useful. Sensitiveness is characteristic of all animals possessed of a nervous system. Touch a stone, or even chop at a tree, and there is no response. But a live nervous system reacts, and reaction indicates its sensitiveness. The initial reaction predisposes it to react in the same manner to like stimulus. This suggests docility. If thought is taken of the reaction and it is found that there are more efficient ways of reaction, this brings into use mental initiative.

It seems also that this division of Professor Royce's harcome under personal observation, it is to be noted they have more power of endurance, never carrying an excess of fat or being subject to such diseases as rheumatism, gout, Bright's disease, and many others caused by toxins. May we as God's people study that we may, by every means known to science, have the knowledge to exercise wisdom and be temperate in our eating, as in all things connected with this life.

monizes with the three principles of psychology as stated by Pillsbury.

1. All our knowledge comes originally from sensation, the nature of sensation being determined by the character of sense organ; there are some forty simplest qualities the interaction and combinations of which give rise to complexes of qualities that are found in concrete objects of experience.

2. The order in which mental processes of any sort enter consciousness depends on the nature of the individual and not altogether upon the forces in the physical world. (Selection.)

3. Experience leaves a disposition in the nervous system that tends to the reinstatement of that experience on suitable occasions.

The reason given by Professor Royce for his novel division was that the old division seemed to sunder the intellect from the will. Professor Stout does not appreciate very much distinction between feeling and willing. In Professor Royce's discussion of perception and action he shows that perception is intimately bound up with action.

We must say, however, that no one has believed in a rigid division between knowing, feeling, and willing. It is clear that when one such aspect as knowing is dominant, that willing and feeling are in the mind as residuals.

We leave this side of the subject and pass on to a consideration of abnormal psychology and refer to a test of normal condition of mind as adaptation to one's world.

History shows that unsoundness of mind has accompanied men from their earliest experience. The Old Testament speaks of the recurring fits of depression that came to Saul. It speaks of the dementia of Nebuchadnezzar; how that he "did eat grass like an ox, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hair grew like the feathers of eagles, and his nails like birds' claws." Among the Greeks also we find record of this sad phenomenon. The explanation offered in those times is known as the demonological. Hippocrates, the father of medicine (460 B. C.) suggested that the brain was the organ of the mind and that unsoundness of the mind should be treated along the lines of ordinary medicine.

This attempt to attack insanity from the standpoint of science was not destined to prevail, for with the coming of the Dark Ages the phenomena was again explained as the complete result of demons, and people thus afflicted were forced into dens and chains and whipped to death in the efforts to beat the devil out of them.

We are told by Bernard Hart that the first work of humanitarianism was done in this field in England by Doctor Conolly, who abolished the use of chains. This work which was done towards the end of the eighteenth century was followed by similar reforms by Pinel and Esquirol, in France. The advance in administration and methods of treatment have been helped by the parallel advance in science. By the end of the eighteenth century it was fully realized that unsoundness of mind must be attacked along the lines that had led to success in other fields of activity. "This study, constituting the separate branch of science known as psychiatry, has undergone a great development during the past hundred years, and a considerable body of knowledge has now been accumulated."

At the beginning of the nineteenth century the physiological conception held the field. Research was devoted mainly to the anatomy and physiology of the brain. One of the main discoveries was the "strict localization of function in the cortex." It was enthusiastically believed that these discoveries would lead to the disclosure of the nature and causes of insanity. These hopes, however, were not realized. This led to the thought that while the physiological had considerable value, that there was room for another method, and from this developed the psychological conception. "The first great advances in this direction were made by the French psychologists during the latter half of the nineteenth century, culminating in the classical work of Janet. In recent years progress has been rapid, and with the researches of Kræpelin, Freud, and Jung, the psychological conception of insanity has become an accomplished fact."

The causes of insanity come under the general heading of heredity and stress. These factors are complementary and both enter into the causation of every case of insanity. The stronger the influence of one factor the less of the other is needed to produce the result, and all individuals have their breaking points. To determine the cause of insanity we have to find the factors that make for stability and instability.

The first thing of note in heredity is that the offspring tends to resemble the parents.

There may be an intimate blending of the maternal and paternal attributes, or a blend, with preponderance in favor of either parent, or yet a particular combination maternal in part and paternal in part. There may also be an apparent absence of maternal and paternal attributes and a resemblance of grandparents or remoter ancestors. This is called reversion or atavism. There may be something apparently new, called a mutation. Careful study should be made in each case to determine whether or not the apparent newness is not a new combination of old strains in inheritance.

Inheritance is not merely from the two parents, but is from the two lines of ancestry represented by both parents. So that almost everybody has had saints and sinners at work in forming their heredity. It has also been noticed that an attribute which appears in the parent at a certain time of life tends to appear in the offspring at a corresponding time of life, and attributes pertaining to one parent tend to be reproduced in the offspring of that sex only. Attributes peculiar to one parent may be most apparent at one period of life of offspring and those of the other parent at another; e. g., a girl may be like her father during time of adolescence then change to likeness of her mother.

There is a tendency for the offspring to return to normal type. Two parents above normal in height will likely have children slightly smaller. This applies to weight and intellectual capacity. Children of insane parentage may be normal. Nature tends to hold us to the normal, and when summation goes to extreme the persons are made sterile. In most cases at least, heredity is of general rather than specific character. For example, father and mother are expert and scholarly, inventors or scientists, etc. The tendency is to think that children of such parents will evidence same or greater degree of such talent and ability. There seems to be not the slightest ground for this belief. There may be an inheritance of greater mental capacity, but the inheritance of the specific direction or application of that capacity does not follow. This is true in matters of disease. The offspring does not inherit tuberculosis or Bright's disease; what he does inherit is weak lungs or kidneys, and if these are protected there is no need that this weakness be the basis for the specific disease his parents had. It is pretty well established that there are three poisons that have decided effect on the offspring, namely, lead, alcohol, and syphilis.

Stress is of two kinds, direct and indirect, and they cover any experience that becomes a handicap to a person's growth or health. Direct stress is, first; a blow on the head, resulting in paralysis of dendrite and neurones if the blow is strong enough. Unconsciousness is temporary paralysis. Death is the total and permanent condition. Insanity is interference with the brain's functions. Inflammation of the brain membrane; tumors and blood clots; alteration in the blood supply and alteration in quality due to hemorrhage and many other such things having effect on the brain, are stress. Indirect stress is those that are brought to bear indirectly upon the brain, e. g., poison affecting the heart, heart affecting circulation, circulation affecting brain.

The various classes of insanity are tabulated as follows: The exhaustion and toxic insanities; primary and secondary confusional insanity; melancholia. The toxic insanities are alcoholic, morphine, cocaine, etc. General paresis; organic insanities; hysteria, psychasthenia, neurasthenia; epilepsy; insanity of the critical period, adolescent, climactic, senile. Mania; circular; paranoia; moral; dementia præcox; terminal dementia; feeble-mindedness.

In this brief reference to the causes and classes of unsoundness of mind we have a mixture of the physiological and psychological methods.

The psychological method is of great interest to us in so far as it relates to the principle of confession. Doctor G. S. Hall gave an address in Buffalo, before the Liberal Club on November 26, 1893, in which he said, "A German alienist published a little while ago, I think it was eighty-three cases of melancholia, in most of which he thought he had traced the cause of melancholia. These people were in the asylum, depressed, some to the very last degree, some of them suicidal. All the joy of life had gone, it had been replaced by misery. What did he find as the cause of melancholia? In the great majority of those cases the root of the cause was some little, miserable, mean or dirty or contemptible act that they had done in seclusion, and from some turn of affairs their minds got to working on it and worked it larger and larger, until they thought they had perhaps committed the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost, and they worked themselves up to the point of being morbidly melancholy. That shows that the power of the sense of integrity of mind, conscious to itself of rectitude, is a good thing; and the opposite sense is a degraded and dangerous thing."

Another reference from Doctor Hall's book, Morale, will show how much trouble may have been avoided had those people applied the principle of confession. He says on page 351, "Confession has been a great institution in the church, and we are told that to confess is to forsake. But it has also lately become, with a slight change of terms, one of the most important of all psychotherapeutic agencies. The analyst is now the father confessor, and he knows as well as the priest does that to bring up clearly to consciousness, and especially to oral expression, a complex, an error, or a lapse, is the first step towards cure. In fact, consciousness itself is extradition or objectivization, and hence comes its cathartic quality. Religion sees a very vital part, but as yet only a part of this great truth."

In connection with this it is worth noting that the church was commanded to say nothing but repentance to this generation quite early in its experience.

We have only touched the borderland on a great subject; we have said nothing, practically, about psychoanalysis, which is supposed to be a new science. It has invented a set of new terms, a terminology for itself, which is supposed to explain the facts observed. But there is much speculation in this field, and perhaps it is not as new a subject as its terminology would suggest.

While we have only touched the borderland, we think that we have said sufficient, and if it is worthy of further consideration it can be done profitably by discussion.

Against Taking of Interest

A recent booklet, Common Sense, attacks at the base the taking of any interest or usury for money and refers to the following biblical passages as well as to the early history of the church:

"Hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase; shall he then live? He shall not live; he hath done all these abominations; he shall surely die; his blood shall be upon him."—Ezekiel 18: 13.

". . . ; thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbors by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God. Behold, therefore I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, . . ."—Ezekiel 22: 12, 13.

"Take thou no usury of him, or increase; but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury."—Leviticus 25: 36, 37.

"Then I consulted with myself, and I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers, and said unto them, Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And I set a great assembly against them."—Nehemiah 5: 7.

"And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all of them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers."—Matthew 21: 12.

"Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury. Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury"; . . . [The authenticity of the last sentence is questioned. See next chapter.]—Deuteronomy 23: 19, 20.

". . . ; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury . . . they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant."—Isaiah 24: 2-5.

"In the article, Interest, we have reserved the question of the lawfulness of taking interest on money lent; we have here to consider first, usury as a subject of controversy; and secondly, usury as condemned by all honest men. . . .

"The canonical laws of the Middle Age absolutely forbade the practice."—Catholic Encyclopedia, pp. 235, 236.

"We therefore decree, with the approval of this sacred council (of Vienna), that whatever authorities, captains, rectors, counsels, judges, councilors, or any other presume to make in future any statutes, either that debtors shall pay usury, or, that a usurer is not bound to restitution, shall incur sentence of excommunication."—English Economic History, part 1.

"Whoever eats up, robs and steals the nourishment of another, commits as great a murder as he who carves a man or utterly undoes him. Such does a usurer, and he sits the while on his stool, when he ought rather to be hanging from the gallows."—(Usury, Elliott, page 71.)

"It was in the Sixteenth Century that the theory was started, that a small interest should be fixed and that the excess charge should be called usury. Prior to that time usury of money meant any interest charge whatever."—Ashley's English Economic History.

This booklet, Common Sense, also calls seriously in question the whole of the monetary system, especially the delegating of the right to make money by the government to the banks.

The International Encyclopedia under "Interest" states that a certain premium for the use of money was quite common among the chief people of antiquity though the Mosaic law prohibited taking of usury from the Jews. It permitted it as for other races. The article continues:

"Aristotle speaks of it, but condemns it as vicious, holding that money is 'naturally barren,' and that to make it 'breed money' is preposterous and a perversion of the end of its institution, which, he declared, was to serve as a medium of exchange and not for purposes of increase. Through a misconstruction of the real intent and purpose of the law of Moses, which was clearly a political and not a moral precept, and following the curiously narrow philosophy of Aristotle on this subject, the Christian Church and laymen early condemned the custom, and held any interest to be usury and against good morals. The secular law in Christian nations naturally followed the ecclesiastical in those times, and the taking of interest was forbidden in England from the reign of King Alfred in the ninth century to the time of Henry VIII. The prohibition of interest led, of course, to many evasions; and to one of the most ingenious and successful of these the word interest owes its modern technical meaning. At Roman law, interest (quod actoris interest, the difference to the plaintiff) meant damages. The church itself did not deny that one from whom money was wrongfully withheld was entitled to damages. Contracts for the repayment of money loaned were accordingly so drawn as to insure a technical default on the part of the borrower, and the damages to be paid on default were stipulated in advance. The prohibition of interest led also to the development of new legal institutions like the commandita, or silent partnership, in which payment for the use of money took the form of a share of profits. The prohibition of interest was generally rescinded by secular legislation before or at the close of the Middle Ages; in Germany, however, not until 1577. By the statute of 37 Henry VIII, ch. ix, in 1545, interest to the amount of 10 per cent per annum was permitted. This was accomplished in a negative manner, by simply providing penalties for taking more than that amount, thus giving only an indirect sanction to taking it at all. By statute of 12 Anne II, ch. xvi, 5 per cent was fixed as the maximum amount of interest which could be demanded. . . . And even under such statutes interest does not begin to accrue until money is due and payable, because not until that time is there an unjust detention from the owner."

The Power of Healing

"The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, according to an Associated Press dispatch, has been formally placed on record as recognizing the ministry of healing, but this recognition is coupled with remarkable safeguards.

"The clergy and lay members of the church who believe they possess powers of healing (which some possibly misguided people have supposed to be God-given) are now authorized by the church to prepare themselves 'by care and prayer, and theological and medical study for their proper and safe exercise.' It is also provided that those who would exercise their supposed powers of healing shall do so only with the written approval 'after due consideration, of their bishop and in sympathetic conference with qualified Christian physicians.'

"It seems fair to presume that those who feel that they have this power of healing, if they have it at all, have the power which made possible what some people call the miracles of healing performed by Jesus Christ. Of course there are those who believe that the healing work of the Savior was not miraculous, but simply the application by him of laws of which ordinary men knew nothing. But that is another story.

"The safeguards thrown around the exercise of the power of healing by the followers in this day of Jesus Christ cannot but prompt the wonder whether he prepared himself for the exercise of his power of healing by 'theological and medical study' and 'after sympathetic conference with qualified physicians,' Christian or other.

The above extract from the Long Beach Daily Record of September 25 provides a valuable criticism of the situation. We are reminded that when John sent some of his disciples to Jesus to know whether or not he was the one who came Jesus sent word back:

"Go and tell John again of those things which ye do hear and see; how that the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, and the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them."—Matthew 11: 4, 5.

He thus gave this distinctively as a sign of his ministry. We are under the impression that modern revelation gives a similar sign of the church of Jesus Christ, that the blind see and the deaf hear.

There are some who feel that our people are fanatical on that subject. It is true we should take every proper step for the preservation of health and also for the restoration of health, and should use the knowledge of those who have made a profound study of the human body and of medical science. But there are not a few who are like the woman in the Bible, have suffered many things of many physicians and are not better, but rather worse.

The disposition of the world is to accept and attempt to explain these healings as the therapeutics of suggestion. We do not personally think it is amiss for one to be trained in the laws of health, but it is certain that no man or medical school nor any other school can give the power of God, and that the healing of the sick by the divine powers cannot be adequately explained in terms of abnormal psychology, even though in accordance with the laws of nature.

Heber J. Grant Not a Prophet

At a recent stake conference at Ogden, Utah, Heber J. Grant, president of the Utah Church, is quoted as saying, according to the Standard Examiner of Ogden (May 15, 1922), that he would appreciate not being referred to as a prophet of God. "He said there was but one prophet, seer, and revelator in the present age, and that was Joseph Smith. He did not wish to be misunderstood or to convey the idea that Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, or Joseph F. Smith, were not prophets, neither did he wish to deny that God had seen fit to call him to preside over the church, but in order to prevent the too frequent repetition of the sacred title, he desired to be called President Grant and not the prophet of God. He said apostles should be called elders."

On the question of education he is quoted as saying, "We were going nearly educationally crazy. Millions of dollars are being spent to educate the brain, but it was almost impossible to get a dollar to keep the body alive. Large sums were being spent on gymnasiums, but it is impossible to get a dollar legally to teach faith in the schools." The paper goes on to say, "He thought it strange that a prayer is offered in the United States Senate, but prayers are forbidden in the schools. He thought it was time to get rid of men who are opposed to religious training in the schools."

Ex-Governor Harding, of Iowa, recognizing the possibilities of dairying in southern Iowa, has this to say: "It is also interesting to note that southern Iowa, which is the oldest settled part of the State and well adapted to dairying, has so far done very little in commercial dairying. In other words, there is a vast undeveloped field in dairying in the State and, we might add, a very profitable field."

DEPARTMENT OF WOMEN

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

"Auf Wiedersehen"

"Auf Wiedersehen," but not "good-by"! There is that about the latter word that is cold, final, hopeless. So we turn to the former one, warming ourselves in its forward-looking confidence that we shall meet again.

In the rapidly changing and ever-upward tending movements of our departmental work, it has become necessary for us, as editor of this column, to lay aside the pen (and pastebrush), and witness a merging of the "printed word" from all the church departments instead. This does not mean, however, that we have lost interest, nor that we will not, in the future, perhaps often meet our friends in the columns of our much-appreciated church papers.

It has been a source of great strength and satisfaction to us to have received, from time to time, encouraging words from our readers. It has been our happy lot at our large church gatherings to meet and clasp hands with many who have spoken kindly of our efforts, who have expressed a definitely felt bond of interest and attachment through having shared at various times in the spirit with which our articles have been offered. This comes as recompense—rich, and poorly deserved, we feel—for the oftentimes heavy burden we have carried, and we can but wish to thank, with all sincerity and humility, our many friends for the help and encouragement they have so generously bestowed.

We look forward with hope and confidence that every step the church is taking is in the upward path and with the approval and guidance of the Master. We know that the interests of this church are nearer to God than they can be to human beings, and that, whatever may seem to be the discouragements with which we are contending, they are but mists that will dissolve into nothingness when he chooses. It is only for us to be pliant in his hands, to be open to his counsel, to earnestly strive to cultivate in our own minds and hearts and characters the beautiful flowers of love, obedience, humility, and unselfishness.

It is for church members to lay aside carping criticism, and to grasp anew the hands of brother and sister, forgetting all differences of opinion in the mellowing charity of love like unto the Master's, and all together face the future with a confidence newborn and irresistible. It is not a difficult thing to find fault. It does not take any great amount of brains to pick flaws, since we are on all sides confronted with human work, and being human, there can be no perfection about it. An imbecile or lunatic, with a sledge hammer and only sense enough to direct his blows, can destroy a beautiful marble statue into which an artist has chiseled an immortal and imperishable thought. And mark you, the thought will still be immortal and imperishable, even after the destructive force has reduced its material presentation to pitiable fragments! It is a sight over which angels might shed tears—this tearing to pieces of another's offering to God and truth.

As we say adieu as your editor, we feel to say to every reader as one of old, When ye see these things coming to pass, be ye not disturbed. In the hour of the Son's appearing, Satan will be using all his arts to destroy. He will seek to undermine confidence, to sully and discredit, to cause doubt, dissension, disorder.

But Zion is to be redeemed! It will not need a multitude of people to redeem it. A handful of the truly consecrated, who have lost sight of themselves and their own petty interests and triumphs in their great and overwhelming love for their fellow men, can accomplish the task that has been given to this church—that of demonstrating to the world that the Christ-life is possible to and adaptable to mankind.

Our one concern should be, Will I be of the few who will be successful in this demonstration? Is my faith able to stand, and will my life square up with my professions? Will I be numbered among those whose hearts are pure and clean and unspotted with selfishness, so that the Master may know me as one of his when he comes? Or will I be so contentious, so self-seeking, so given to plucking and digging at the mote in my neighbor's eye that I shall not perceive the beam in my own, until it has completely hidden from me the light of God's truth, and he will say of me, "I never knew you"?

Let us not be deceived by the clamor. Let us not lose sight of the real questions of the hour. Let us take firm hold upon principles which are fundamental and unchanging in their nature, and not allow human frailty or the mistakes of others, to swerve us from our allegiance to that which is good and true and kind. As our good conference chorister was so fond of emphasizing, let us "look up, and laugh, and live," that we may not only "be cheerful in our warfare," but "joyous in our triumph."

As Paul counseled the Saints at Philippi, let us "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel," that "good tidings" of love, peace, and good will.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Departmental Work at the Conference

It was encouraging to note, midst the unrest of the late General Conference, the steadiness with which the departments kept at work and carried out their daily schedules to the distinct advantage of the faithful ones who attended.

It is a matter of regret that the number of those attendants was not immeasurably greater. None who listened for twelve consecutive mornings to lectures on child welfare, by our church physician, Doctor G. L. Harrington, who is so well qualified to help our people solve many of their grave problems in relation to their children; or to lectures on the psychology of the adolescent by Brother M. A. Etzenhouser, fresh from his steadily pursued studies at the Utah University, and specializing in the problems of dealing with our young people; or to those on social service by our earnest Sister Ida Etzenhouser, whose deep-seated interest in all those in need of help, whether material or spiritual, is well known to our people the church over, and who has added to her studies along this line several years' practical work in applying the principles of relief, can but feel deeply grateful for the wonderful opportunity given them this fall during the conference period.

Strangely enough, many who come to conference do not in the least realize the value of the educational opportunities thus so freely offered by our departments. There may be a little excuse for them in the fact that our church conference programs have become so full and varied that it is difficult at times for one to decide which of the many attractions to attend. Our conferences may be likened to the three- or four-ringed circuses, with the two or three platforms between, upon which stunts are being pulled off so rapidly that one cannot fully or satisfactorily enjoy any of them.

However, we can see little reason or excuse for those who have been sent to conference as representatives from distant branches, to evince so little interest in that phase of church work which is being carried on by the departments as to absent themselves regularly from the meetings at which that work is being explained and demonstrated.

To illustrate: On the evening our Sunday school superintendent, Brother Max Carmichael, spoke upon the subject of "What should be the church curriculum?" (than which there are few more important subjects before us as a body to-day.) he was greeted by but a very sparse audience. Across the way, a throng numbering into many, many hundreds, listened to a good, gospel sermon. Later that evening, at the little party or reception given by the local musicians to the visiting ones, a good sister, bubbling over with enthusiasm, said, "Wasn't that a wonderful sermon to-night?"

Her neighbor was heard to remark, "Sermon? Where?"

"Why, over in the tent," she answered.

"Oh, over in the tent," her neighbor replied. "I did not hear it, for I was too anxious to hear the new plans the church is making about the teaching of religion to our children."

"What do you mean?" was asked.

"Why, surely you know that the Sunday School Association is abolished and we are about to enter upon a new order of things, do you not?"

"My goodness, no! When did that happen? And what are we going to have instead of Sunday school?" (Greatly disturbed and excited.)

"Well, that was just what Brother Carmichael was explaining to-night. I wouldn't have missed it for the world, for I am sure I would not dare to go back to my branch and district, and not be able to explain to them the new plans that are being made for a more efficient carrying on of our work among children and young people in regard to their religious training. I am sorry you missed it. What will you be able to carry back to your constituents from to-night's sermon, splendid as it was, that will be as helpful to them as if you were able to explain the details of the new departmental work?"

It was encouraging to note that the good sister was most constant in her attendance at the morning lectures thereafter.

Since the conference lasted longer than the fortnight for which lectures had previously been provided, the department superintendents arranged with the Presidency to have Doctor Harrington address the priesthood each morning of the last week, on subjects connected with mental hygiene. So many expressions of appreciation were heard concerning these lectures, that doubtless a series arranged for next conference will be gladly welcomed and utilized.

We hope to see the day when the annual gatherings of our people will be more strongly marked by educational efforts directed along some very important lines other than the usual preaching services. When we can come to see that "all good is of God," and that a so-called "lecture" can be as truly inspired and productive of good as a sermon, and that there should be no lines drawn between any of the various phases of our common church effort, it will not be so difficult for some of our leading workers and thinkers and speakers to find the audiences they deserve. Departmental work, such as our church is prosecuting, is as truly ecclesiastical as the discourse or prayer service, and the sooner we all awake to that fact, the more rapidly will the membership at large move upward towards that higher ground to which God has so repeatedly and patiently called us.

From the depths of our heart, a prayer ascends continually, that the leaders in our church movement, with whichever portion of the work they are concerned and busy, will be led and guided by God, to the end that in the character and lives of our members, be they children or grown-ups, the seeds of truth and encouragement they are trying to sow will blossom into that beauty and glory which marks the citizen of the celestial kingdom,

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Information on Departmental Work

Excerpts from a letter being sent out by Superintendent Glines to workers in Department of Women.

It is not wise to expect all local churches to conform to one set form of organization. It will be your privilege to make a study of these five forms of organization [in HERALD of last week] and help the others of your particular local church to decide upon which form to adopt. It will depend upon which form your local church adopts to determine how and to what extent the officers such as friendly visitors, cradle roll supervisors, young women leaders, home department supervisors, etc., function. However, we shall expect home department supervisors to enlarge their field by encouraging all members to study in their homes, this study to include all good books.

At present we are not prepared to give you any definite information regarding reporting. The superintendents of departments have under consideration this matter and will give you the information through the HERALD columns as soon as it is ready. The thing we are striving for is results in every line of activity in your local church.

At this time we are able to give you some special information by Mrs. Anne Roberts, General Cradle Roll Superintendent.

It now becomes necessary to discontinue the use of the birth and health records. When the Health Department asked us to do this work for them, they were allowed a trained nurse on full time. Now, because of financial conditions, the Health Department is deprived of sufficient funds to maintain the services of a nurse, whose entire time was required because of the magnitude of the work. We urge all our workers to affiliate with and encourage all organizations for the betterment of the child, the home, and the community.

We advise the cradle roll workers to keep in touch with baby clinics and all child welfare work in your cities or towns, and in fact anything that is for the betterment of the child.

Many have asked about the "Child care" leaflets. They are out of print and we recommend that you write to the United States Department of Labor, Children's Bureau, Washington, District of Columbia, for the three booklets: 1, Prenatal Care; 2, Infant Care; 3, Child Care, by Mrs. Max West. These books are written by an expert and contain information that we cannot afford to be without. They are free of charge. If you will have your secretary forward to the bureau a list of names and addresses, asking that a copy of each book be sent to them, you will have no difficulty in obtaining same. Some of the States put out excellent books of this kind. Kansas has a wonderful mothers' book, new and up to date. Find out what your State is doing along this line and make use of it. If you are a resident of Canada, write the Department of Health, Ottawa, for The Canadian Mother's Book. Also write the Chief Officer of Health, Parliament Building, Toronto, Canada, for literature on the "Care of the Baby," also "The Mother."

Sincerely,

DEPARTMENT OF WOMEN,
By Dora Glines, Superintendent.

Brother David W. Clow, of Davenport, Iowa, who was in California for his health last year and so much improved thought to spend this winter in Davenport, called at the office recently. He desires his friends to know that he is leaving again for California after trying unsuccessfully for a brief time to get acclimated in Independence, where his brother resides.

"Give Us Straw"----A Message to All

And afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness.

And Pharaoh said, Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go.

And they said, The God of the Hebrews hath met with us: let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the Lord our God; lest he fall upon us with pestilence, or with the sword.

And the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? Get you unto your burdens.

And Pharaoh said, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and ye make them rest from their burdens.

And Pharaoh commanded the same day the taskmasters of the people, and their officers, saying,

Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: Let them go and gather straw for themselves.

And the tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof; for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labor therein; and let them not regard vain words.

And the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it: yet not aught of your work shall be diminished.

So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt to gather stubble instead of straw.

And the taskmasters hastened them, saying, Fulfill your works, your daily tasks, as when there was straw.

And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?

Then the officers of the children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?

There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and, behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people. —Exodus 5: 1-16.

There are some poignant truths uttered in the foregoing reading:

1. Moses and Aaron were the servants of the living God.
2. They came to Pharaoh with a message from heaven.
3. The king did not know God, hence his refusal to obey.
4. Pharaoh expected the Israelites to continue to show results. "Get you to your burdens."
5. He made their task more difficult by withholding the straw. "I will not give you straw."
6. He had the straw to give.
7. He expected them to "fulfill your works, your daily task, as when there was straw."
8. The cry comes back, "Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?"
9. The king says, "Make bricks."

Have we said enough? The lesson seems clear, simple, and forceful. The officers of the church are your servants. They are ready, willing, and anxious to "make brick" by providing for the missionary needs of the church, looking after the orphan, the widow, the aged, and the needy. If we have failed to do as much of this as you think we should, we have but one request to make: "Give us more straw."

Can you hear the voice of God speaking to you now? Can you hear him say: "Behold, this is a day of sacrifice"? Are you trying to do more for the Lord's work to-day in a financial way than ever before? The indications are that there will be reasonably prosperous conditions during the coming year and, as God blesses us with health, employment, and business success, let us freely, cheerfully, and systematically give.

Don't wait till the end of a year to pay your tithes and freewill offerings. Do it weekly or monthly and you will be surprised how much more you can give without noticing it.

We are anxious to do more work. The field is white and ready to harvest. "Give us straw."

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

LETTERS AND NEWS

On Our Social Problems

A farmer in the bonds of poverty writes a strong letter of protest over the silence of the church. Reply of the President and second letter from the brother.

(The following letter from a brother in the church is a sample of those being received at the Presidency's office and by the editors of the HERALD. People are alive to the serious need of an economic solution of our problems, nor are the leading officials of the church blind to our responsibility but are giving the whole the most earnest and prayerful consideration.)

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Sir and Brother: I have a suggestion to make to you as President of the Latter Day Saints Church (Reorganized) and that is that you instruct the elders, apostles, and other traveling workers for the church to gather or collect data on the condition of the poor in the church by going into the homes of these people and seeing and hearing for themselves, and have them report from time to time to you as president, and that you then introduce this subject into the next General Conference with the view of getting action of some kind towards helping raise the standard of life a little among these people. Unless this church takes some definite position on this question in the near future I am going to strike, so to speak. That is, I am going to cease working for it, until it does do that. I have been a member of this church for three years and I have in a very feeble way given my very best to it, but I am growing tired of the cruel, unequal struggle to live, and the church's eternal silence on this question.

I am a poor renter on rather a large farm. My landlord is a good fellow and no worse than the rest of the landlords here. The house I live in has no screens and the flies run riot over everything we eat. There is only a barbed wire fence separating house yard and barnyard and the house being wide open, the flies swarm in from the barn every day by the thousands and the mosquitoes torment me at night when I am trying to rest. They are very bad here in the late summer and fall. I would screen the house myself, but have no way of obtaining the few dollars necessary to that end. Do you believe that is right? I do not.

I have not purchased myself a pair of shoes of any kind this year, and I had my foot poisoned by not having it sufficiently protected while at work in the dew. I like to read good books and the magazines, but I am never able to have either, as I could not buy the shoes. We could obtain no money to buy a few bushels of fruit for canning, with the exception of one bushel of plums which cost me seventy-five cents. My wife has the toothache almost continuously, and my teeth are so bad I can eat only with difficulty, and we have no prospect even of being able to have them looked to in the near future. The banker will take all we raise, or the proceeds of the sale of it rather, except just enough to allow us barely to live until we can start another crop. And thus it is year after year. By the time we pay rent and interest and taxes, and a little each year on the principal, we have next to nothing left. Do you believe this is right? I do not.

I work hard, and my wife has gone to the field this year to help me and left her two-months-old baby at the house. I am said to be a good farmer. If a few speculators have winter palaces in New York City and Paris and summer homes on the Riviera and in the Adirondacks, why can I not make a living at my work? I happen to know the answer. But do you believe that is right? I do not.

Why, oh, why do the churches not cease fighting the socialists, bolshevists, I. W. W.'s, and communists, and one another long enough to try to obtain for the American farmer a larger share of the products of his toil than he is now getting. That is what I want. I would not accept charity except in case of starvation. That is the way I feel towards charity. But I do want justice, and if the smug and comfortable church men continue to remain silent on this question I shall soon eschew the whole lot. I realize that this letter is strong, but I am not mad—only deadly in earnest. I say it all in good spirit, and no offense is meant.

I know of your labors and broad sympathy for the poor, or else I would not address this appeal to you. But perhaps I am asking too much. I may be thought presumptuous or even foolish to think that the church should seek to deal with this problem. Of course I know something of the Zionist movement or plan, but that will never benefit such as us, simply because we cannot go to Zion.

I have been an active socialist for fifteen years and in the main I still believe in those principles as much as ever. The leaders are either very nearly all in jail or ex-convicts and the principles are crushed and trampled under foot.

Now, why not attack this question in its own way—with a program of its own making? It is possible that there are so many rich and well-to-do in the church that it does not dare? I do not believe it; but I shall await with interest your reply to this, or your not paying it any attention, whichever the case may be. Pardon me if I have in any way offended or hurt you, for I have not meant to. I have all confidence in you as a leader, and as a Christian, or Saint I should have said, perhaps. I pray that I may always have that confidence and that I may be able to keep in bounds the raging storms of passion now sweeping my soul, that my grievance at the church's silence and apparent indifference to the conditions which make it almost impossible to live may not develop into a burning hatred for her. I believe the Bible as it is written and I am willing to try to live according to its teachings the year around. I believe that most Latter Day Saints and all other kinds of saints forget their religion on election day.

But I must close. I have said more already than I intended. I want to be right and I may see this differently after I reflect on it a long while. But just now I am having some rather bitter feelings about this matter.

Reply of President F. M. Smith

Dear Brother: Your letter of August 8 has been read with interest, having been forwarded to me while in Massachusetts.

In past years it has been customary for our missionaries in the field to report on conditions as they found them, so from reports at least I am not unacquainted with conditions such as you set out in your interesting letter.

You are quite wrong in thinking that our church through its leaders has not spoken against the maladjustments in our social organization; for the teachings of the church from its early foundation have been positive in denouncing the forces which have brought about such conditions as are reflected in the description of your own situation. We have done more than that, for the remedy has been clearly outlined. It is true that we have been a little slow in moving towards the improved condition; but our own social philosophy and system once introduced will eradicate experiences such as you have passed through and give to every man the chance to work out his own salvation—present salvation, I mean—without being dependent on charity. Under separate cover I am sending you two pamphlets. Please read them and note the freedom with which present wrong conditions are discussed.

Irrespective or without regard to your threatened "strike," I quite agree with you that the church must not only speak, but do something towards relieving distress such as you have experienced and giving every man who is willing to work a chance to get on to the standard of living which social solidarity and continuity demand. But in no other church will you find the social ideals we have, so you had best keep right on working with us towards better conditions. In the industrial world as well as in agricultural circles do these inequalities exist, and a tremendous burden rests upon us to contribute towards a composition of the troubled social conditions. May God give us strength to do for betterment as he has given us courage fearlessly to denounce present social ills. Our church is not silent on the question.

To contend with flies for your food and have mosquitoes disturb your much needed rest are experiences with which I am not unfamiliar. I sympathize with you. But that does not remove the evil.

I am asking the Bishop to send you a questionnaire to fill out. If we can secure for you a chance to rent a farm near Independence, I take it for granted that you are willing to work and be guided therein by the counsel of those who can advise both as to farming methods and business affairs. Perhaps in this way you can get a start. What say you?

I appreciate your letter, especially the fore part; but the latter part sounds a bit like Appeal to Reason language. I am wondering if you have been reading the HERALD and Ensign.

For one I have not been nor am I now concerned in fighting socialists. Our doctrine of stewardship holds, in my opinion, the greatest hope for social justice, and I am deeply concerned in seeing it introduced. Do you know what it means?

May God bless and hearten you, is my prayer.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH;

Dear Brother: Your most kind letter of the 11th to hand and has been read with much interest by your humble servant. In reply I wish first to say that I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your kind manifestations of sympathy and understanding as conveyed in your letter. I am glad to learn that our missionaries are reporting upon conditions as they find them in the agricultural and industrial world. I feel that great good may come from this alone.

It is not altogether for myself I am trying to fight. There are millions in these United States who are in worse condition than I, and I believe the great majority are worthy of help and uplifting. It is primarily a problem of education, a teaching of them to a true knowledge of their condition and a consciousness of their economic and political power. At least, this is my opinion. If I am wrong I am willing to be convinced of it by anyone able to do so. I have long been aware of your labors for making life a little better and brighter for the poor, but so many of the elders who were bred and born here amidst the insane prejudice which hangs like a dark pall over all, and so many of the traveling men who come this way representing the church are Torys, stand-patters, and conservatives without vision or powers of penetration that I may have become a bit prejudiced. That God will help me to weather the storm that is raging in my soul is the only prayer that my lips have given utterance to in a long while. I may be expecting too much. I may be making a mistake. I do not know. That I need help I do know but I will fight it out and I feel I will win in the end, God being my helper.

I have already read the pamphlets you sent me, but will read them again. Yes, I have read the Appeal to Reason for fifteen years. I am not taking the church papers, but read them when I can procure them.

Now in conclusion: I want to say that I do not wish you should give too much time to consideration of my case. I do not feel that I have any claim whatever upon your time and thought. There are others who need help too. I have all confidence in you as a leader and seer and ask you to forgive me the harsh sentiments expressed in my last letter. May God's blessings abide with you wherever you go.

Yours for the great cause,

A Protest Against Criticism

This brother says it looks bad to outsiders for the ministers to use the church papers to criticize work the Lord has given others to do.

I have read in the HERALD letters from several of the elders. I have been in the church thirty years and never wrote a letter to the church paper yet, but have felt like it when I have read these letters. I gleaned from these letters that each of the good brothers was sure there was something being done wrong in regard to the gathering, and also they knew how to do it better.

Allowing that to be so, if the work does not belong to them, it seems to me it is not good for the cause that they should be finding fault with others' work unless they have good cause. It is very easy to find fault with others' work, especially the nature of the work of gathering God's people, the most peculiar work of all. I say, let the men whom God has chosen do their own work, and uphold them by prayer and fasting. The gathering and stewardship and inheritance are all God's arrangements, and God is going to see his will is done. He knows best about all the peculiar phases of humanity that enter in. He has chosen these servants to do this work, so let us trust them fully. He is watching them as well as you, and he will check them and chide them if necessary. Even Brother Frederick holds his office with God on condition that he fills it acceptably. When God was leading the children of Israel in the wilderness, Koran, Dathan, and others of the ministry opposed the way Moses was working and said, "Have we not the priesthood?"

The Lord opened the ground and they were swallowed up. God stood by Moses, whom he chose, and I feel God is with these our brothers now and is working with them. I do not believe any of these letter writers, if they were in the position of the others, could do better, because of hindering causes that enter in over which they have no control. I think such letters hurt their work and that is why I write this.

How would we like to be placed in their position, trying to do what they feel should be done with all their might and it not be appreciated? Why, brothers, if this were in the affairs of the world, the men of God would quit. They would not stand for it. No doubt they make mistakes and so do all of us, but you can rest assured God is able to straighten out our wrongs sufficiently that all of us who wish will be gathered, and stewardship and inheritances will be in order because of God's power and might.

My wife does not belong to the church. I would not want her to read these letters in a recent HERALD criticizing the work. She would take it up against us, and so will other nonmembers.

W. HOBSON.

Ordering Books of Us

The manager explains that we meet all publishers' prices on general books.

For a number of years we have been selling books of all kinds as well as our own church literature. Through the cooperation in effect among publishers, they allow each other a discount that allows us to create sales for certain books and make a small profit in handling them.

If our patrons would order their books of us, we could furnish all at the same price as though they were ordered direct from the publishers and at the same time secure a profit to the church through its publishing house. The total amount thus saved would be a material help, and there would be no loss to our patrons.

We have appreciated the book orders sent us and believe they will increase as the Saints more generally understand that we are specializing in this literary service at no cost to our patrons.

Some have erroneously supposed we charged extra for handling these books. This is not true. Over our counter we sell at same price as all local dealers. Orders by mail are sent at same as publisher's price. Some of them quote postpaid price; some charge extra for carriage. We do likewise.

We carry in stock a goodly variety of books. Others are ordered at once from publishers or a branch house nearest, to be sent direct to customer.

May we have your orders—to our mutual advantage?

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
Manager Herald Publishing House.

Independence

President Frederick M. Smith and family returned from California Sunday night and have again made their home in their Kansas City residence.

President Elbert A. Smith returned Monday from attending the Lamoni stake conference and a week later the Holden stake conference at Warrensburg. He addressed the Saints in the forenoon at the latter conference. In attendance and participating last Sunday were also Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser.

The radio sermon to have been given Sunday was necessarily dispensed with because of the taking of the 2 p. m. hour by one of the large sending stations in Kansas City. The power of the latter station is so strong that they would dominate the air even if our Central Radio station were to attempt to broadcast at the same time on another wave length. A short musical program was rendered at 1.45 and announcements made that our program would be sent next Sunday beginning at 10.30. If some early evening hour not taken can be found, this may be used instead. The speaker will be Elder Walter W. Smith.

Many favorable letters have been received about the kind of radio programs sent, appreciating both the sermons and music. One recent letter was from New Jersey. Correspondence ensued to verify the facts, and it was ascertained that it was our program heard clearly.

A father and son banquet was held at Second Independence church on the South Side Monday evening of this week. It was under the auspices of the Sunday school, and over 138 were seated. The theme, "Father and son," was interwoven in the speeches of the evening, and the spirit of good fellowship was strong. All present enjoyed the occasion. The speakers were A. L. Sanford, A. K. Dillee, Arthur Allen, with toast by E. D. Moore, in charge.

The music was by a local male quartet and the singing in charge of Earl Audet.

"The Messiah" will be rendered for the sixth time as the Christmas program at the Stone Church this year. All singers in Zion who know this oratorio are requested to attend the first rehearsal Thursday evening of this week. Mrs. Cordie Hulmes will direct this feature.

Brother and Sister Thomas Mauzey, of East Independence, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on October 31. They have been members of the church since 1883, being baptized by Elder William Lewis. They have living three children of the nine born to them, with fifteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild. A surprise party was held at one of the neighbors, during which a program and ceremony were had and a purse given.

We are informed that Elder Max Carmichael will address the Saints at the Stone Church Sunday morning on the general aspects of the new program for the departments of the church. A committee meeting is announced for heads of general departments in Zion with the heads of the departments for the church, to meet in the afternoon.

Elder F. M. McDowell is expected to be present in this connection and for his scheduled evening sermon in the series for young people being held at the Stone Church. Elder Walter W. Smith was the speaker last Sunday evening. Because of rainy weather, the audience was not as large as usual.

A similar series of meetings for young people is being held at the Second Independence church each Sunday evening. Good speakers and good music are provided and the Saints evidencing their appreciation by good attendance.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending November 11: Mrs. R. H. Lunceford, Leo Pitt, and Frank Brown, Mount Washington, Missouri; Mrs. C. M. Clifford, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. T. P. Johnson, Nebo, Illinois; Carrie Lee Harris, Greenwood, Missouri; Perry V. Sewell, Cleveland, Oklahoma; J. W. Sacra, Kansas City, Missouri; Virginia Winchester, Kansas City, Kansas; William Evans, no address; and the following from Independence: Mrs. H. F. Dougherty and Baby Dougherty, Ed Beets, Mrs. Arthur Nunn and Baby Nunn, Leroy Culp, Mrs. Virginia Lee Franklin, Mrs. Roy Harding and Mae Robbins. X-ray patients: L. E. Clark, Humboldt, Kansas; Mrs. R. E. Davey, Deer Lodge, Montana; Harold Burson, Mount Washington, Missouri; and Perry Kittle, Mrs. Amos Allen, and C. B. Hartsborn of Independence.

Central Chicago

Central Chicago was never more wide awake, active, and enthusiastic, spiritually or otherwise, than it is to-day. The splendid spirit of unity and service that we brought home from our reunion is still in evidence in every department of the church.

The Sunday school is sponsoring a bazaar, the proceeds of which are to be used for improvements in the church, and every department is active in its behalf. Even the primary department is doing its bit preparing decorations.

The Bluebirds with their handcraft, the Temple Builders with their fancywork, the Department of Women sewing, soliciting, etc., and even the men are active in soliciting, donating, and sewing. Yes, sewing! For a committee of four has been appointed to make an apron—a special apron, which we understand is to be a masterpiece.

The choir has been doing splendid work and has given us some beautiful music, and the junior choir made their debut November 5, which was greatly appreciated by the audience. It is encouraging to see even the children interested and preparing for service. The glee club is preparing an entertainment for the near future.

Religio activities of late have been exceptionally interesting. October 27 was given over to a Halloween social. November 3, an interesting lecture was had on "The menace of the young of to-day," by Mrs. McCall, president of the Women's Club of Chicago. The perfect attention of the audience testified both to Mrs. McCall's ability and the audience's interest in the subject. Those not present missed a treat.

On October 22 we were surprised and delighted to have with us James F. Keir, of the Presiding Bishopric, at the 11 o'clock service. His subject was "Zion," a subject of which we never grow tired and are ever ready to listen. In the evening we listened to Frank F. Wipper. November 29 L. S. Wight addressed us in regard to late conference and the men called to fill the quorums of the church. Knowing many of them personally, he touched on their particular talents and preparation that made each specially fitted for the place to which he is called. At the evening service F. G. Pitt was the speaker.

Besides these, many of our local men have preached some splendid sermons, teaching us the things of God and bringing us to a better understanding of the things required of us to make our religion practical and useful to us and our fellow men, and the splendid spirit of unity and activity in our branch at present testifies to the effort being made to come up higher and more nearly reach Zion conditions.

HATTIE K. BELL.

Brother B. F. Creel, writing from Hardin, Missouri, says: "I wish to report the baptism of three on Sunday, November 5."

San Francisco, California

All is going well with us here at the Golden Gate. Our services are quite well attended, the preaching is good, and the Saints interested in doing their part in carrying on this work.

Among our visitors of late were Brother R. J. Kohlman from the Houston, Texas, Branch, N. Paulson and wife from Los Angeles, and also Sister Struzaker from Los Angeles. Among our regular attendants are Brother and Sister Joe from Independence. Sister Joe is quite an addition to our choir.

On October 29, Brother Prescott Foo, our Chinese missionary to Hawaii, with his wife, was present at our church service. He preached here in the morning and at Oakland in the evening. They sailed for their missionary field, Wednesday, November 1.

Other preachers here of late were: J. D. White, president of the district; John A. Saxe; H. B. Simpson; E. E. Hartsough, branch president; Emery Parks; Elder Krone; and the writer.

A few of our members attended the General Conference and entertained us "stay-at-homes" with their accounts of what they saw and heard in Zion. Brother Hartsough and Sister Simpson kept diaries of their journeys and gave us quotations from them. Sister Simpson's readings for the Religio were very interesting. We are very thankful that the leading quorums of the church are now full and with them we are ready to do our best for the cause. May God bless and prosper his work and may peace and unity now prevail.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

Topeka, Kansas

On October 22 Priest J. G. Juergen occupied the 11 o'clock preaching hour. "Spiritual gifts" was the subject of his sermon. The evening hour was occupied by Jonathan Koshiway, Lamanite, of Redrock, Oklahoma. The subject of his discourse was "Church apostasy." He continued the subject on the following Monday evening to a full house. At the close of the service the Saints surprised him and his family by bringing refreshments and spending a social hour after the service. He was in charge of the midweek prayer service on Wednesday evening.

On October 29 Elder James Baillie occupied the pulpit, assisted by Brother Koshiway. He delivered a fine discourse upon the "Power of the gospel." Elder Baillie lives at Scranton, Kansas. Brother Koshiway preached in the evening, subject, "Indian traditions and the true way." A large "two-way" chart was used.

Brother Koshiway is an Otoe Indian priest. The prophetic statement made to him through Brother Gomer Griffiths at the time he came into the church, two years ago, has been verified in Topeka that "he would not only be a power for good among his own race but the white people." Truly he has received a portion of the blessing promised "in the end" to the remnant of his race. And he seems to be blessed with a spirit like unto that of that ancestral father Lehi, as was shown when expressing his desire that we might be blessed with the spirit as the waves of the sea. His definition of the term world is a system gotten up by Satan to keep people as happy as possible without a thought of God. The lust of the world is the pride of the eye and the lust of the flesh.

He preached to the Indians at Mayetta, Kansas, Wednesday evening, November 1.

MRS. H. C. PITSEMBERGER.

Rockford, Illinois

The work here is progressing very nicely at present. All our services are well attended and greater interest is being taken in every department. The desire, as expressed by each one, seems to be to occupy higher ground, and we are all working by God's help to that end. We have enjoyed the Spirit to a marked degree, especially in our sacramental meetings.

A short time ago, Brother Oliver of Chicago met with us and gave us a very interesting talk on Sunday school work, impressing the need of object lessons in our work with the children. I am sorry to say we have not tried it in the lessons as yet, but hope we can reach this point in the near future.

One thing that has made us rejoice is that, as a branch, we have been able to live so that the Lord has verified a promise made through prophecy to us several months ago, and at our last sacramental meeting the Lord promised us wonderful blessings if we would only be faithful.

We ask an interest in your prayers that we may become more efficient workers in this great and grand work.

NELLIE STEVENS OTT.

Northern Wisconsin Conference

The Northern Wisconsin conference convened with the Porcupine Branch, October 27 to 29.

The Spirit of God was enjoyed by the Saints who had gathered from Chetek, Black River, Pine Creek, Balsam Lake (Minnesota), and Wyeville.

Of the missionary force were, Leonard Houghton, E. J. Lenox, and many of the local men.

Program opened Friday with a prayer meeting at 9.30 a. m. in order to fit everyone spiritually for the conference. E. J. Lenox was chosen chairman. Sunday school work was taken up at 2 p. m., in charge of F. A. Atwood, district superintendent, who gave a timely talk on Sunday school work. Sister Leroy Colbert contributed much to the assembly and was very successful in getting all to understand the new movements that were taken up at the late General Conference. Reports were read and accepted. Religio, Sunday school, and Department of Women were taken up under the coordination plan. Heads of these departments were recommended by the coordination committee.

Conference business was then taken up. Statistical reports from ex officios and bishop's agent were read and accepted. Election of district officers worked out much better under the coordinating plan than by open nomination. Every district officer was unanimously elected. E. J. Lenox, president; F. A. Atwood, Sunday school superintendent; George E. Clark, Religio superintendent; Mrs. Leroy Colbert, superintendent of Department of Women; Horace Scafe, bishop's agent; Mary Mair, clerk; Manley R. Shedd, chorister; Laura Clark, publicity agent; Mrs. G. E. Hemstock, librarian; and Mrs. J. C. Pratt, health superintendent. E. J. Lenox chose F. A. Atwood and Irvin Bowen as his associates, which was approved by the assembly.

Sermons by Elder Leonard Houghton, E. J. Lenox, and Leroy Colbert were much enjoyed. The prayer service, Sunday at 9 a. m., was peaceful and encouraging, with a large attendance. Sunday school, with an attendance of 112, was in charge of the district officers. Meals were served free by the Porcupine Branch in the church basement. A vote of thanks was tendered these Saints for their hospitality and kindness.

Conference adjourned to meet at Wyeville, time to be appointed by the district presidency.

LAURA B. CLARK.

Rejoices Over the Conference

I desire to express to you my thanks for the Daily Herald, which meant so much to those of us who could not attend conference. When reading the last two or three papers I felt like singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." The one thing that stands out as a great testimony of the truth of this work to me, in reading the reports of the different meetings, was the testimony of the new men who were called to occupy in the Quorum of Twelve, each one testifying how God had manifested to him individually how he should be called to this responsibility before coming to the conference. I thought how glad Brother F. M. Smith was to hear their testimony, and what a strong proof it was that the "revelation" was indeed from the author of this latter-day work. Hence my joy.

May the good work continue to receive the approval of God is my most earnest prayer.

Your sister in the gospel covenant,

MRS. H. P. DERRY.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, 715 North Sixteenth Street.

Wants More Used "Ensigns"

About two years ago, I appealed to the Saints through the HERALD columns to send me Ensigns and HERALDS to distribute among the people of El Paso, Texas. I received HERALDS and Ensigns until it looked as though I never would find place for all of them.

Not disposing of many of them there, I brought the most of them with me to Tucson, Arizona. I have found readers here until I am calling for more Ensigns and tracts if you have any on hand that you have read and find no place for them. My work places me with many different people every day and I can use more literature if I can get it.

There is no branch here and no elder. I have been trying to get some one interested in the Lord's work ever since I came here. I organized a Sunday school last Sunday, November 5, with sixteen in attendance to begin with. We organized in a nonmember's house. We have promise of more pupils later.

Some of the elders have had their eyes on Tucson for some time. I hope one will move here to help us out. This is not Macedonia but Tucson.

Remember us in your prayers.

A. M. TAYLOR.

TUCSON, ARIZONA, 329 East Twenty-first Street.

Brother Charles F. Putnam writes: "I am at work in Missouri Valley, Iowa, holding forth in a series of missionary meetings. Glad to be here following the good work of Brother Macgregor two years since. A good interest so far. About thirty nonmembers were present last evening. The clouds of the conference are passing away. In this district there seems to be more confidence than before that the church will now go forward. To this end we are laboring on."

A sister from Sperry, Oklahoma, writes: "Sunday at Sperry was a glorious day for the Saints. It was sacramental day and much of the Spirit was enjoyed by all. Sunday school attendance was one hundred forty-two. At 3 p. m. four more were added to the church. Brother W. P. Bootman was the speaker in the evening. The Ladies' Aid are doing a wonderful work. Their attendance was twenty-three last Thursday, with a prayer meeting at 10 a. m. and a study hour at 1 p. m. We are studying a book on etiquette and different studies of the Bible. We ask the prayers of the Saints."

An invitation is extended to all the priesthood of surrounding districts. J. A. Jaques, president.

Pastoral Notices

Permit me to ask of those in or out of the State of Washington who are interested in prosecuting missionary work in that State to advise me of opportunities and needs. I shall be pleased to hear from all branch presidents and the district presidents, as well as others in isolated communities. With a united pull we can accomplish much, as I am inclined to believe the people of Washington need the gospel as much as those of any other State. Write me at 857 Gladstone Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Respectfully,
DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND.—At Somerville, Massachusetts, with Boston Saints, October 28, the district presidency in charge. Only seven branches reported. It seems to be a hard task for the local secretaries to adjust themselves to the new system, hence we receive no reports. The seven branches report a membership of 975. The Eastern Quorum of Elders sent in a very fine report showing considerable activity on their part: sermons, 901; services attended, 4,137; baptisms, 70; confirmed, 117; children blessed, 58; administrations, 1,319; marriages, 9; visits, 626; administered sacrament, 322; new openings, 1. The name of Brother James Houghton was recommended to the general chorister for appointment as district chorister. The following ordinations took place: Edmund M. Brown, elder; Arthur H. Nichols, elder; John D. Suttill, jr., priest; Edgar Woodward, priest; Herbert Floyd, priest; James F. Perry, teacher; Alma N. Nickerson, teacher; Milton R. Millman, deacon; James A. Flagg, deacon. The preaching was by W. A. Sinclair, Myron C. Fisher, Edmund J. Gleazer, and James Houghton. Brother Houghton rendered several solos which were especially enjoyed by the conference, and a very good time was had by all. W. A. Sinclair, secretary.

KEWANEE.—At Kewanee, Illinois, October 21, 22, 1922. Elders George Sackfield and Charles L. Holmes, president. Branches reported were: Kewanee, 132; Rock Island, 99; Dahinda, 99; Joy, 84; Millersburg, 61; East Moline, 61; Peoria, 57; Matherville, 54; Buffalo Prairie, 47; Savana did not report. District nonresident 51; total, 745. Total baptisms in last four months, 25. There are 17 elders in the district. Eleven Sunday schools were reported. Religio work not so prosperous. No report from the Women's Department. Bishop's agent reported total collections for last four months $813.07. Treasurer, a balance of $90.79, and reported the reunion to have cost $620.37 and voluntary offerings to cover $625.52. Further reports indicated that the reunion at Galva, Illinois, last August was a spiritual success as well as a financial one. It was the unanimous decision to hold another one in 1923, and some improvements will be made in manner of conducting. Peoria Branch requested that an elders' court be appointed to investigate the standing of a member of their branch. The matter was referred to the district presidency. The second Saturday and Sunday in June was chosen for a permanent date for the spring conference. The place was left to the district presidency. Of the ten who hold district offices, seven were present at some time during the meetings. Attendance unusually small, but a very good spirit prevailed at all the sessions. Patriarch F. G. Pitt and wife came in Saturday evening and greatly assisted at the Sunday services, he being the preacher at all three services. This was the 191st conference held in this the oldest district in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the sentiment expressed by the Saints was Forward, march. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois; George Sackfield, president, Matherville, Illinois.

Religious Christmas Cards

Something New and Especially Worthy in Holiday Cards

Last year considerable criticism was offered in general that the Christmas and New Year's cards to be had on the market very generally lacked religious sentiment. Editorials and articles were written on the subject, and as a result several houses began to prepare for this season something worthy the theme of Christmastide.

In the Gibson Line, which we are handling this year, we believe we have the ultimate in beauty and excellence of theme. The cards are so beautiful that mere description does not convey adequate ideas as to their real beauty and harmony of color, nor can verbal allusion suggest the beautiful sentiments expressed. However, our patrons will be safe in ordering these on our recommendation in any of the sets and be assured that recipients of the cards or folders will be highly pleased with the remembrance.

Post Cards

We have in post cards two series of five each; one series is entirely on the Christmas theme and the other on Christmas and New Year's. The five designs in each set give excellent variety, and all are equally beautiful. They are printed in ten colors, very artistically done and sell at ten for fifteen cents, postpaid.

Christmas Folders

These folders are 3¼ by 4½ inches, contain in addition to the beautiful color work a greeting verse on the outside with a scriptural quotation on the inside, and are made in five designs. They come in sets of ten with an envelope for each, and sell at fifty cents a set.

Special Cards

These cards are for pastors, superintendents, and other church workers. Same style of color work and seasonable design for the holidays. Size 3½ by 4½ and 3 by 5½. Complete set of four, 10 cents.

Special Greeting Cards

These are a little smaller and less elaborate, but with the same quality in color work and beauty of sentiment. Ten in a package with envelope for each, 30 cents.

The Calendars Sell Easily

One sister in Independence between sixty and seventy years of age went out with samples of the calendars recently advertised and in a very short time came in with orders for 30 of one and 25 of the other calendar. She is earning her Christmas offering. One of our brothers living in Independence went out in his own group, comprising but two or three blocks, and in one afternoon sold 20. He has ordered thirty more for the next trip.

These calendars appeal to all classes. They are not distinctively representing our faith, but are strictly religious in appeal. Usually only an introduction is necessary, for to see is to like, and to like means to buy.

To Those Who Have Given Birthday Offerings

Through the kindness of many fond parents, relatives, and friends of the babies in the church through the birth offerings given, initial amounts have been made possible for the publication of several most excellent books for children.

The latest of these are Homespun Rhymes and Sleepy Hour Stories. Both of these are attractive books and contain material which any person may be proud to place in the hands of children up to about nine or ten years of age.

In the backs of these books are printed the names of the children in whose honor the book is printed. If it were possible, an announcement would be sent to each of these children. Those who have made the offerings will want to secure one of the books for the children named. If possible order both, but if not and you want us to look up the name, we will be glad to do so, reporting to you which book contains it.

Many of the children whose names appear are just the right age now to appreciate the book. It will have a special appeal to them when the child realizes it was gotten out for him and others like him. Order the books by name, $1 each. Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

The Mystic Writing Pad

This is a new invention in writing pads. It has a smooth celluloid surface with thin paper beneath, which rests upon a dark blue surface mounted on heavy board beneath. Write on the surface with pencil or any hard substance and the impression shows on the tissue paper. Raise the paper and the marks disappear, when the process may be repeated indefinitely. If the pad wears out, the blue surface sheet can be turned over, thus doubling the life of the pad.

Not only interesting but practical and convenient. Price 15 cents, postpaid if ordered with other merchandise, from Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

She Likes "Autumn Leaves"

Last year, with my magazine allowance, I subscribed to our church publications, though I fear, I must confess, with somewhat the feeling of a martyr. (I do so enjoy stories—too much, really.) However, I was due for an awakening. Autumn Leaves got better until I was actually anxious for its arrival each month, and with the first installment of "Social graces" my heart was captured entirely. How wonderfully interesting a story, how vivid the portrayal of life in the characters, and how refreshing the bits of humor!—From a recent personal letter.

Correction in Price of Christmas Program

Through a misunderstanding, the price of the new Christmas program recently announced, entitled, "Balancing the Christmas ledger," was quoted wrongly. It should have been 15 cents a copy, $1.20 a dozen. This program is complete and interesting, with full directions for producing. We are sure our Sunday school committees will appreciate it, and are urging that they order at least one copy as a sample. It will require about a dozen for the average school for the assignment of parts.

"Come, Let Us Anew Our Journey Pursue"

"The General Conference may have cleared the atmosphere and prepared the way for a forward movement."

The General Conference has now receded some weeks into history. All should have had time to compose their minds, get their bearings, and take stock of themselves spiritually. Probably it is true that never before in the memory of this generation did there occur a General Conference which so deeply stirred the emotions and so greatly aroused the feelings of delegates and visitors in actual attendance and the general church at large. Unfortunately many delegates and visitors were obliged to leave the conference at a critical stage when things did not look encouraging to them, and thus they went away with heavy hearts that might have been greatly lightened had they been able to remain until the close and appraise the spirit of reapproachment evident in some of the later sessions.

That there should be such marked division of opinion and such strenuous defense of positions taken, naturally caused uneasiness in the hearts of many, perhaps to an exaggerated extent. Now that the conference has receded into history, as we have before remarked, we may more correctly evaluate the situation. The General Conference is a legislative body. Those who come there expecting to find the spiritual peace, quiet, and unanimity that prevail in a prayer service will be disappointed. There are generally differences of opinion in a legislative body, and where these are strongly defined, feeling is likely to run high and some may even forget some of the rules of Christian deportment in their defense of that which they think to be right.

We Are All Human and Need the Church

If Jesus were to attempt to build his church out of perfect men and women he would avoid a great deal of trouble—only he would encounter difficulty in finding the perfect men and women, and when he found them they would not have the same need for his church that we have. We are all exceedingly human and have great need for the church, which is designed to bring us by gradual stages of development to the stature of manhood and womanhood in Christ Jesus. Finding us as he does he clearly recognizes that there are bound to be these divisions of sentiment and opinion, these conflicts and clashes and contentions, and for that reason the principle of reconciliation constantly appears in his gospel economy. For that reason he sets up his communion table. The pure and wholesome bread symbolizing the staff of life, capable of sustaining life and of satisfying hunger, the pure and wholesome wine, capable of satisfying thirst, both of them bring to mind that man who is capable of satisfying our hunger and thirst after righteousness, being himself the very embodiment of righteousness; and are administered to us periodically that we may remember that One who prayed for us that we might be one even as he and his Father are one. If there were not constant danger of estrangement, misunderstanding, conflict, and clash in the church, there would be less necessity of this periodical, monthly observance of the communion of the Lord's supper, which is but one of the many things that emphasize his constant effort to reconcile men to God and to each other.

Having emerged, then, from the conflict of conference, our pulses being stilled from the emotional stress of the occasion, we may as well clearly recognize that it was one of those instances evidencing the fact that we are still human and do not see alike or speak alike, hence there is the very evident need that we shall have charity, bear and forbear, and draw together under the ministry of reconciliation at the Lord's table and elsewhere, working towards the end that we may eventually see and speak alike.

The Conference as a Forum

The conference certainly demonstrated the fact that it is the forum of the people and that the principle of common consent is still vital. Anyone in the church who feels that things are not as he wishes them to be, may himself appear at the conference if a delegate, or acting through his delegates, may move for the correction of that which he feels to be wrong or the affirmation of that which he feels to be right. If so fortunate as to secure a majority vote his ideas have the sanction of common consent. If he does not secure the majority vote he must abide by the action which does represent common consent. So long as the conference remains the open forum of the people they may look forward to it periodically for an opportunity wherein they may participate in the work of regulating and setting in order according to their vision. Between conferences, however, we should to the greatest extent possible move forward unitedly in the prosecution of the work in which we are all interested, along those lines to which we are, by majority vote, committed.

It is a good time for us now to sing the old hymn, "Come, let us anew our journey pursue." The missionary work should go forward with greater vigor than ever before. Even those not under appointment who have the time, opportunity, strength, and talent to fill appointments of a missionary nature in territory contiguous to their homes should move out freely and do all that they can in such work. Neither should the local work be neglected. Those who have been converted and brought into the fold must be held together in the bands of love by wise, alert, and capable shepherds. High priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons should be active in their home branches as pastors, looking after the work intrusted to their care; remembering that the good shepherd giveth his life for the flock. Under the stress and strain of conference a few were so foolish as to talk of quitting. Those who are happy and cheerful when everything moves smoothly and who quit when there is trouble are at best "fair-weather saints," and not those upon whom the Lord can depend in times of stress and strain. The Presiding Bishopric also report that some of the church representatives have advised Saints in certain places that they should not pay their tithing—which is another mistake. God says, Pay your tithing. Servants of God speak the words of God. Whose servants, then, are they who say you shall not pay your tithing? We leave you to answer the question.

Increase Our Missionary Effort

Those who can help by the paying of tithing or by freewill offerings or consecrations by all means should do so now, so that it may not be necessary to reduce our missionary effort, but rather to increase it and send our message abroad to all the world. A commercial institution would not long stand if its salesmen went out advising the people that they should not support the house or purchase its goods. We would not think to send out missionaries to tell the people that they should not be baptized. We should all get together this year and speak an affirmative and constructive message. We believe in this church. We believe in the things it has to give to the people. Its message is the very essence of salvation. Let us then unhesitatingly move forward, affirming and declaring the beauties of the everlasting gospel intrusted to our care. Let us make broad the mantle of our charity that it may even cover the offenses of those who have presumed to differ from us in opinion; and under the direction of the divine Spirit move forward to the time when we may indeed be one people, with one purpose and with undivided counsels.

The stake and district conferences and other gatherings of the Saints that we have visited since the General Conference have been blessed with a remarkable degree of the Holy Spirit. The Lord is still with his people and blessing them. The General Conference may have cleared the atmosphere and prepared the way for a forward movement. Let us then with courage and hope take up our work, prosecute it faithfully and well, without cessation, until the Lord himself shall say to us, "It is finished." Come, let us anew our journey pursue.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Gospel Preached to the Poor

The Church of England realizes the need of attention to the poor and needy.

The Church of England, having become aristocratic, is feeling more and more the necessity of caring for the common people. We have noted the question the past two years repeatedly in their public declarations and we note it again in an extract from the Daily Telegraph of October 12 concerning a church congress held in Great Britain.

The Bishop of Chelmsford challenged the clergy as to their present standing.

"We have perhaps taught our people a wrong conception of what church work is," he said. "The founder of the church was the friend of sinners." Addressing the clergy, he asked if they were known as eloquent preachers, splendid organizers, and raisers of money, or as the friends of the riff-raff of the world. When he sat down he covered his eyes with his hands and his lips moved in prayer.

The founder of the church was the friend of sinners and he gave as a sign to John the Baptist that he was the true Messiah:

Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them.—Matthew 11: 4, 5.

The reason for this statement is that it was a fulfillment of the prophecy in Isaiah 61: 1, which is quoted in Luke 4: 18, 19:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

But the Church of England is not the first that has regarded the poor and has stood on the side of privilege. That is the indictment that has been brought repeatedly against them, and it is the indictment that they now bring against themselves. But it would appear according to the Apostle James that a similar condition threatened in the early church.

Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? But we have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called? If ye fulfill the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well; but if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors.—James 2: 5-9.

Evolution at the Bar

Review of a new book challenging the evolutionary theory.

Those who do not believe in the theories of evolution so commonly taught throughout the world have long been at a disadvantage because of the lack of usable material to meet the situation. On the other hand those who do believe in the theory have had at their call textbooks galore, ranging from the school books offered the child of the primary grade to the most profound treatment on the branches of the subject by men who have made a life study of this subject.

In the minds of the average believer in Christ there is a natural protest against this theory, the foundation of which is built upon a disbelief in God as a Creator and in the Bible as a product of humanity inspired by God, suggests this author. The past few years have brought forth a number of excellent books on this subject controverting the usual views on evolution. Among this number we note a new one by the Doran Company of New York entitled Evolution at the Bar, by Philip Mauro, which may be procured through the Herald Publishing House at 80 cents, postpaid.

Of this book, Amos R. Wells says, "I have never read a better or stronger book in opposition to evolution than Evolution at the Bar. The book is timely and should be read by every Christian who really wants light on this matter."

Those who prefer to confine evolution to the one realm where it belongs, the sphere of human affairs, and to believe in God as the Creator of mankind as well as the vast number of species of animal life which have inhabited the world from the beginning will find comforting argument in this book. His treatment of the subject is dispassionate and calm. He attacks the subject rather than those who hold to belief in it, and his proofs are simply but convincingly stated.

The principal hypotheses and arguments of evolution are brought forth, viewed in the calm, clear light of reason, analyzed, and their utter lack of foundation shown.

But alleged proof, such as the three- and four-toed horse commonly shown in the museums as the supposed ancestor of the present-day horse, is shown in its true light as being a mere supposition, and there is no proof to show that the horse with three and four toes did not exist contemporaneously with the horse with one toe or hoof as we know it to-day.

Darwin himself is quoted as saying that not one change of species into another is on record. This is observed to be a foundation stone upon which opposition to evolution may firmly stand and from which it cannot be shaken. Men like Luther Burbank have sought by every conceivable means to develop new species and have succeeded in some remarkable results in the way of varieties, yet never have they been able to cross the barrier and produce a new species.

Eminent authority from the side of evolutionists admit that no species showing an evolutionary transformation from one species to the other has ever been located in the rocks or other remains upon which proof is sought to be based. The thousands of species which have appeared have each one appeared suddenly and disappeared in the same way, all indicating that they were the work of a creator rather than having come into life through the evolutionary process.

One of the reasons for the issuance of this book at this time is suggested in the following quotation from its pages:

"Notwithstanding the fact that Darwinism is no longer believed in the circles in which it originated, its influence for harm was never so great as now. The reason is that the theory has found its way into the theological seminaries, and into the schoolbooks of the children, where it is doing the deadly and truly devilish work of discrediting, in the eyes of many, the statements of the Word of God.

"A parent, writing to a religious periodical, tells of a textbook brought home by his seven-year-old boy, the title of which was, Home Geography for Primary Grades. The following quotation will serve to show what is now being taught to children of the most tender years. Discussing the subject of birds, this textbook for primary grades says: 'Ever so long ago their grandfathers were not birds at all.

Then they could not fly, for they had neither wings nor feathers. These grandfathers of our birds had four legs, a long tail, and jaws with teeth. After a time feathers grew on their bodies, and their front legs became changed for flying. These were strange looking creatures. There are none living like them now.' Such are the monstrous fictions now taught to little children as scientific truth.

"It is a significant and disquieting fact that a determined effort recently made in the legislature of Kentucky to forbid the teaching of evolution in the schools of that State was defeated. Thus the arch enemy of God and men has maneuvered this 'Christian' country into the position where the accepted canons of education forbid the teaching of the Bible to the children of the taxpayers, but permit the teaching of the most anti-Christian and unscientific doctrine that ever made a bid for public favor.

"The support for the teaching of Evolution (which in practically all cases means the utterly discredited theory of Charles Darwin) came from 'educators and religious leaders' (so says the Literary Digest, March 25, 1922) like Lyman Abbott, Doctor Angell, President of Yale, Doctor Lowell, President of Harvard, and Doctor McFarland, Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches.

"It is high time for parents to be awakened out of sleep as to the dangers to which their children are exposed in our modern schools. These are indeed 'perilous times'; and one of the greatest perils thereof is the teaching which is now being given to the young. Parents, who would be careful to keep their little ones from the dangers of the streets, recklessly expose them every day to the more serious dangers of the schools, and give themselves little concern as to what they learn there from teachers and companions."

Lists of Good Books

In the HERALD for November 1 there appears a list of books on social Christianity as suggested by President Floyd M. McDowell. In the HERALD for this week is a second list on religious education prepared by Superintendent A. Max Carmichael. It is our intention to secure and publish from time to time other lists of a few of the best books in subjects of general interest, together with the price for which they may be procured through the Herald Publishing House. A careful reading of these books will show what others are trying to do and will help us to appreciate our own problems and opportunities.

When you order your books through the Herald Publishing House you help your own institution and through it the church. The prices are the same as those of the publishers themselves.

Books for Sunday School Workers

A list of books recommended by A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of Religious Education.

Besides the books recommended by the Religious Normal Training Department as found on pages 49-52 of the December 1, 1921, catalogue of the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, the following list is especially recommended as being worthy of study. These books may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House.

THE CHILD

Moxcey: Girlhood and Character. This book deals with the physical, mental, and spiritual characteristics of girls twelve years of age and upward. Price$2.00
 Hartshorne: Childhood and Character. A thorough study of the religious characteristics and capacities of the various stages of childhood. Price$2.10
 Cope: Religious Education in the Family. One of the best discussions of religious training within the home. Price$1.65
 Hodges: The Training of Children in Religion. A very pointed and plain book upon the teaching of religion to children. Price$2.60
 Alexander: The Boy and the Sunday School. A treatment of the religious training of boys by a man who has had a great deal of experience with them. Price$1.55
 Mumford: The Dawn of Religion in the Mind of the Child. A simple yet scientifically accurate discussion of the religious training of very young children, emphasizing prayer, consciousness of God, and service. Price$1.35

THE TEACHER

Betts: How to Teach Religion. The best all-around book on aims, methods, and material in teaching religion. Price$1.35
 Weigle: Talks to Sunday School Teachers. A very splendid, easy book on pedagogy involved in teaching. Price$1.45
 McKeever: How to Become an Efficient Sunday School Teacher. Takes up the problem of teaching in the various departments, beginner, primary, etc. Price$1.60
 Coe: A Social Theory of Religious Education. A discussion of the aims and modes of teaching religion from a view much allied to our Zionie plan. Price$1.85
 The books which follow speak for themselves in their titles:
 Miller: The Dramatization of Bible Stories. Price$1.35
 Wardle: Handwork in Religious Education. Price$1.35
 Danielson: Methods With Beginners. Price$0.30
 Munkres: Primary Methods in the Church School. Price$1.60
 Baldwin: The Junior Worker and Work. Price$0.75
 Lewis: The Intermediate Worker and His Work. Price$0.75
 Lewis: The Senior Worker and His Work. Price$0.75
 Wells: The Ideal Adult Class in Sunday School. Price$0.55
 Esenwein and Stockard: Children's Stories and How to Tell Them. Price$1.60

ADMINISTRATION

Fergusson: How to Run a Little Sunday School. A most excellent book for new superintendents of small schools. Discusses the preparation needed by new superintendents. Price$1.00
 Athearn: The Church School. Discusses the organization and operation of the various departments of a Sunday school. Price$1.85
 Paris: The Sunday School at Work. A good discussion of the various officers and phases of Sunday school activity. Price$1.35
 Cuninggim-North: The Organization and Administration of the Sunday School. A discussion of the tasks and various activities of the Sunday school. Price$0.85
 Wells: Successful Superintendent. Similar to Fergusson's How to Run a Little Sunday School. Price$1.00
 Betts: The New Program of Religious Education. Demonstrates the need of an educational aspect in our churches. Price$0.85

BOOKS FOR YOUR LIBRARY

After a Sunday school has provided itself with the books of the regular Normal Training Course of Graceland College, we recommend the following:

THE BEST FIVE

Cope: Religious Education in the Family.
 Betts: The New Program of Religious Education.
 Fergusson: How to Run a Little Sunday School.
 Betts: How to Teach Religion.
 Munkres: Primary Methods in the Church School.

THE SECOND BEST FIVE

Hartshorne: Childhood and Character.
 Coe: A Social Theory of Religious Education.
 Weigle: Talks to Sunday School Teachers.
 Athearn: The Church School.
 Esenwein and Stockard: Children's Stories and How to Tell Them.

There is a big demand for the new Christmas program issued by this office, entitled "Balancing the Christmas ledger." It is written by one of our members for our schools and is distinctive in tone. The price is 15 cents each, or $1.20 a dozen. About a dozen copies will be required by the average school for proper production.

Financial Problems

By James F. Keir

*The Bishopric stand ready to do their best.
Will you do yours?*

(Sermon by James F. Keir, of the Presiding Bishopric, October 8, 1922, at General Conference Tabernacle. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

I shall address my remarks, in part, to begin with, to the priesthood of the church, using for a text the language of our Savior, as found in the 19th and 20th verses of the 28th chapter of Matthew:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

I use this text because there has frequently come to our office requests from various parts of the country asking that some bishop be sent there to instruct the Saints regarding the temporal law. If I understand the duty of the ministry of this church it is couched in this commandment of the Savior. It is the duty of every man upon whom God has placed the responsibility of teaching, to teach all things whatsoever he has commanded, and I imagine if at any time Christ gave a command which was of more importance than any other, under the conditions that this one was given and at the time, he would have issued that command.

He had been crucified, and had demonstrated his claim that all power was given unto him, both in earth and in heaven; that he had power over death, hell, and the grave. He had been resurrected from the dead, and again meeting his disciples, he gives to them this instruction that they were to go into all the world and teach all nations, teaching them to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," with this splendid promise: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." So that no minister of this church has fully acquitted himself to God, has fully discharged his responsibility to God and the people until he has listened to these words of instruction, and can say like one of old, "I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God."

We are instructed to teach them to observe all things. I understand this to mean that we are to emphasize to the people of God that they shall comply with, adhere to, put in practice, be obedient to, every instruction that has issued from God direct or through his servants, by way of instruction as it is reduced to writing in his Scripture.

I want to stress for a moment the necessity of obedience. This is no new message to you. I can declare no new truth, but I want to emphasize what has been said of olden time—that obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams, but before we can expect the children of God to be obedient they must be taught. They must learn the lessons that God would have them know, and the first responsibility of teaching that message rests up the priesthood of God's church.

Jesus said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I have commanded you?" God is interested in having his children yield obedience unto his law, for it is by his law that we are perfected and sanctified, and made ready to enjoy celestial glory in the world to come. We all look backward with a degree of sadness as we recount the experiences of the Saints who gathered here years ago. Failure met their efforts to establish the kingdom of God here. That failure resulted from a lack of willingness on the part of God's children to give a listening ear to the instruction he had given to them. In section 102 we are told that Zion might have been redeemed even now. Might have been redeemed even now, but behold they have not learned to be obedient to the things which are required at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, etc.

Going farther on in the second verse of section 102 the Lord told us that we must learn to be obedient to the requirements of his law, and if necessary, that we would suffer until we learned that lesson, and "my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience." If needs be, by the things which they suffer. They suffered as a result of their iniquity.

Responsibility of the Priesthood

Possibly they had not been taught the things that they should have been taught, for I find in another revelation that the Lord said, Wait a little while for the redemption of Zion until my people are taught more perfectly, and have experience; so, as servants of the living God, there rests upon your shoulders and upon mine, the responsibility of acquainting ourselves with every phase of gospel law, in order that we may clearly carry to God's people the message that they should know; that they may thereby yield obedience to that law.

The purpose of obedience to the will of God is for our good. I never have believed that God wanted a lot of sycophants; that he just wanted us to be bowing and scraping to him; to be paying obeisance to him simply as a matter of gratification; but have always believed that God in giving his law to the children of men, had a very definite purpose, one through which he knew we could develop, and only through that process could we develop. Hence, I see the need of being obedient that we might grow, as was so beautifully pictured this morning "unto the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ"; for to the extent that we neglect to observe God's law, to that extent we are deficient in our development, and if we ever occupy as perfect beings before God, it will be because we have observed all things whatsoever he has commanded us.

Growth can result only from the application of principles. Principles are fundamentals truths. They are essential elements; things necessary to our growth and development, and when we refer to what we commonly term the temporal law I look upon it as a principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and without the application of that principle, the children of God cannot be fully rounded out.

There are certain things which attack us in life, one of which was pictured out to us last night in a pageant: Selfishness, a terrible evil; a thing which has caused, is causing, untold misery in the world to-day, and God, by a divine principle, by the principle of giving, has given to this church the remedy for this evil. It is God's antidote for selfishness. One of old declared, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." Why, you have heard that text preached on until it is almost threadbare. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for I know the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and that gospel is made up of certain principles, which, put into execution, will transform human nature into images that shall please our heavenly Father.

Spiritual Significance in God's Commands

I want you of the priesthood to get this thought: that there's a spiritual significance attached to every command that God has given to us. That the keeping of what we term the temporal law has a very deep spiritual significance. It is, if you please, the barometer that marks our spiritual development.

I remember a person who came into the office one time and laid before us a check for $1,000. We were glad to get it. I would like to have another one just now, but he said to us, Brother McGuire, I hope that that does you as much good as it is doing me. That told me a story. I recognized that the keeping of that law of God was transforming a life, performing a work in that life. He felt closer to God as a result of that act of obedience. There was a power attached to the observance of that principle of the gospel.

We sometimes refer to the financial law as the law of temporalities. I think that's a mistaken way to refer to it, and want to tell you why. Because God says that no law that he has ever given is anything but spiritual. Listen! "Verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal; neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam, your father, whom I created; behold, I gave him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual"; and they are spiritual in their effect.

The man who goes down into the waters of regeneration has his spiritual life renewed, and every commandment to which we yield obedience is spiritual in its effect. I want the ministry of this church to think about that phase of the temporal law, as we call it. We want you to sense its spiritual significance. I want men to pay tithing not only because we need the money, but because I know that there's a reaction in their life that draws them closer to God, and if I didn't sense that reaction, if I didn't feel that there would be that reaction, I would be slow to accept the offerings and the tithes of any individual.

God has a double purpose in many of the things which he does. In this law which we are talking about now, he provides for his work. That's a very necessary thing. We cannot get along without it, but at the same time, each one of us needs the development that comes by contributing to the Lord's work.

Excuses for Not Paying Tithes

People at times try to make excuses as to why they shouldn't pay tithing. We hear all kinds of excuses and arguments against tithing. Just recently a brother wrote in and said, "I don't think we will get anywhere until we go back to the old system of offerings, because tithing is a Mosaic institution." Is it? I find in reading the Scriptures that Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedec, and if the chronology of the Bible is correct, Abraham and Melchisedec lived before Moses, and the gospel was preached even in Moses' time, for we are told that unto them as well as us was the gospel preached, but it did not profit them, not being mixed with faith, and when we take up the Inspired Translation we find that even in Adam's time was the gospel preached, so that the law of tithing originated, not in the Mosaic dispensation, but under the gospel dispensation.

I hear people saying sometimes that I have no tithing to pay this year, because I have had no increase. That's right. You have no tithing to pay, if you have had no increase, but that does not exempt us from helping in the Lord's work. For tithing is only one of the means that God has placed in his church for its financing.

Malachi, you will remember, rebuked the people of his time. He said they had departed from the law, and when they asked wherein, he said, You have neglected to pay your tithes and offerings. You ave neglected to pay your tithes and offerings; so that even if we have no increase, and under the blessings of God we are able to make an offering, it is a duty that we owe to God to do that thing, because we need, from time to time, spiritual refreshment and regeneration. We need from time to time to crowd out the tendency to selfishness, and hence God has provided a way that even in the absence of an increase we can do our part in helping in the Lord's work.

Tithing But One Way to Help

We received a letter just recently from a brother up in the Dakotas who said, in effect, I have no increase this year, no tithing to pay, but want to help in the Lord's work. Inclosed please find a check for so much. I want you to get that. Carry it back to your district. Impregnate every Latter Day Saint with the notion that there is an opportunity always for them to assist in the great work of God.

That's not all. We have been declaring as a church that the time has come when we should enter into the program of stewardships, and instead of conducting our business for selfish purposes—well, I shouldn't just say for selfish purposes, but for the purposes of personal enrichment—I will put it that way—that we will conduct them for God. Are we ready? If not, why? God has surely directed clearly in his word that that's to be the program of this church. That without it we can never have a Zion, worlds without end. Have a proper vision of the needs of God's work and what he requires of us in his law.

We look upon our body of ministry. We admire them. A splendid body of men, who have turned their backs upon the opportunities of this world to enrich themselves, and have laid their all upon the altar of service. We think they ought to do it, but what about our responsibility to God, and the observance of his law? God has provided that his work shall be financed first by tithes, by offerings, consecrations, and surplus, so that at no time should the church of God be in a dilemma as it is to-day, running behind to the tune of from $10,000 to $15,000 a month.

Our Mental Attitude

Saints, I am persuaded that it is not because we are not in position to change that condition, but because our attitude is wrong toward the commandments of God. What is our present situation? Let us call your attention to it.

This chart [turning to a large chart hanging facing the audience] is divided into three sections. Each section represents one year. We have, in the first column, the year 1919-1920, during which we have a very healthy condition in church finances. The red line represents our receipts. In the first column we have the amount of money in thousand dollars: $50,000, $100,000, $150,000, $200,000, etc. We have represented by one line the accumulated annual receipts. For instance, if we collected $50,000 in July, which is the beginning of our fiscal year, and $50,000 in August, the total makes $100,000, and the line goes up. Notice that at the end of the year the red (the receipts) line is away above the blue line, which represents our expenditures. That's the condition that should exist always, and if it existed now we would be enabled to extend our church work, prosecute the missionary work, take care of our development, pile up a reserve fund, and such like. It was during this period that we were enabled to do the thing that you ordered done in General Conference—build an additional building at Graceland. Little was said about the financing of that. You never heard anything about it. Why? Because your contributions to the general fund were sufficient to enable us to do that thing without asking for special offerings.

Big Deficit in Expenditures

We come, however, into the next year, the second column, and now the lines run almost parallel for months, with the blue line on the other side, until we strike the 1st of November, 1920, when the business crisis came, and you notice the sharp falling off of the red (receipts) line until we close our year with about $100,000 deficit.

We come now to the third year, and we have even a worse financial condition in the year which has just passed, the red line falling off very sharply. The red line represents our income falling off very sharply, but a gradual pulling back, which is a very encouraging thing. Down in this little corner is the chart for the last three months, July, August, and September, during which time we have run behind something like $47,000.

Now it is always expected that during the months of July, August, and September, we will have a deficit. You folks go on vacations; you attend reunions; farmers are busy with their work; they have not time to write out checks, and consequently the Bishop has to suffer, and while that is an unusual deficit, for the present time it is not so alarming as it might be considered, but must be given consideration.

We set before you these facts as to our present situation. Now, I don't want to be understood to be painting a black picture. I am simply presenting to you the facts that confront us, and have confronted us for the past two years.

A Question of Our Attitude

What has been your attitude toward these facts? I have heard some of these sympathetic expressions. "Oh, well, I feel sorry for the Bishop." "He sure has some job." "I wouldn't like to be in his place." "You could not hand me his job on a gold platter," etc. But what, my friends, have you been doing in order to correct that condition? I am not persuaded that it is outside of the power of this people to correct that condition. It can be done just as easily as I could turn a somersault, and I am going to tell you why I know that.

If we would all only fast one day in the week for one meal—if only half of the membership of this church would fast one meal one day in the week and contribute to the Lord's work in excess of what you are now doing, 20 cents for that meal sacrificed, it would amount to $520,000 a year. Tell me that this people cannot do that thing! I don't believe it.

I know one man whom I have seen upon this conference floor, who, for the last two or three years, has had sufficient increase in his net income to wipe out our deficit each month. Do you mean to tell me that if one man could do that, that a hundred thousand people even of ordinary circumstances cannot by united effort and willing minds accomplish the task?

It is a question of attitude, that's all.

What is your attitude towards the needs of God's work. Are you willing to go out as these men do with the eye of faith? Are we interested most in building up the kingdom of God and establishing his righteousness, or is there, my friends, something that is obscuring your vision? Sit where you are now; don't move your heads one bit until I drive home a point. We have on this pulpit a little dial marked "My duty." Is something obscuring your vision? Can you see clearly what your duty is, or is there an eclipse? Is the weakness of some one individual or group of individuals hindering you from seeing clearly the thing you should do? If there is you know how to correct it. I don't have to tell you. Get a different viewpoint. Recognize that this is the work of God, and God has called upon you as a people, Teach them all things, whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

Closer Cooperation Needed

What do we need? We need, my friends, a closer cooperation between the spiritual representatives of the work and the temporal. How many of you branch presidents can tell me how much more tithing, or how much less tithing has been paid in your branch during the last year? How many of you can tell me whether there's an increase in the number of tithing payers or a reduction? How many of you have analyzed, or stopped to figure out why Brother A or Brother B has quit paying tithing? Cannot you see the relation of that act to his spiritual condition?

In the Presiding Bishop's office we can tell you how much more certain districts collected through the local bishop or Bishop's agent this year than last, or how much less the individuals pay this year than last or vice versa. We can tell you how many more new tithe payers there are this year, or how many of the old ones have fallen off. Are you making a close analysis in order that you may keep your finger on the spiritual pulse of the people to whom you are ministering? If not, perhaps I have pointed out to you a responsibility that belongs to you. God put it there. Teach them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you.

You district presidents, do you know whether your district is increasing or decreasing in tithing? Have you made comparisons of this year's condition with last year? I have set before you the general church's financial condition for a period of three years. Go home. Shout the needs as you find them. Keep your finger on the pulse of the finances of this church, for as I said before, it is a barometer of the spiritual condition of the people; for where a man's treasure is there will his heart be also, and if you want to get a man really interested in church work just simply get him to paying his tithing, and doing the things along that line, and you will find his spirituality coming up every time.

When we started in with the Christmas offering, the complaint was made that it would hurt the Sunday school. It would drive away their members. Why, bless your heart, it did just the very opposite thing. Members increased. They were interested in the Sunday school because they sensed the fact that they were given an opportunity to be participants in the great work of God.

We need a closer cooperation between the spiritual officers and those who look after the financial interests of the church. These men should encourage the Saints in systematic saving, and in wise investments. They should encourage economy and thrift, and a repression of unnecessary wants. Why? Because that's a good thing for the people. God urged it upon this church. God saw what was ahead of us in the financial world and urged upon this people that they learn to curb their desires, so that they might have in store that which would bridge us over a time of need. It isn't a good thing to let my appetite dictate as to how I shall spend money. If I permit myself to run riot on that proposition look out, lest I find myself being undermined along lines which are dangerous to my spiritual life.

Relation of Giving to Morality

I knew a man who once was a poor man; a very splendid fellow. He had a home that was ideal. Prosperity came to that home. As a result he lavishly spent money upon one hand and upon the other, and by and by I saw his home wrecked. I saw the affections of his wife alienated, and I said to myself, What relation is there between the results which have followed in this life and his looseness in the expenditure of money? and I became convinced that he had let down the bars. He no longer restrained his appetites and desires along what we may call legitimate lines, until finally there was an encroachment made upon his morality and spirituality, and his spiritual life went down. Can you see the wisdom of such a lesson, my friends, in listening to the counsel of Almighty God that we shall practice economy and the repression of unnecessary wants?

Don't Think in Terms of Yesterday

We should teach the people that they must not think of their offerings in terms of yesterday. I mean by that that we must not think that because I have in the past given $100 a year, that that is any gauge as to what I should contribute now. I have known men, when I was acting as Bishop's agent, who each year continued to pay $100 tithing. I don't think that was tithing at all. I mean I don't think that was all their tithing. They just got in the habit of giving $100 a year. That was very acceptable, but remember, my friends, that $100 today is not what it was four or five years ago; so that if you would do as well as you used to do you must think of the difference in the value of the dollar today as compared with 1914.

What shall be our policy for the year as a church? Personally, in the light of the facts presented, I would think there was something wrong with my thinking apparatus if I did not urge a sane, safe, and conservative program. Now, don't misunderstand me. I do not mean that we should not move forward, but I do mean that until we have been able to arouse your conscience to the fact that this condition must be removed, that we are not in shape to launch any big constructive program. I do believe that we should be reconstructing our missionary force. We should be doing many things that we are not doing yet, but my friends, awake first to the situation and correct this thing, and then we will be in a position to move forward.

I hope you will visualize the chart which is before you. I don't want to waste this effort this afternoon. I feel very deeply and keenly the responsibility that rests upon me and my associates in the work which you have assigned to us. I want you to move forward with a sense of your responsibilities to God and to his church.

We Need Reserve Fund

As a church, we should create a reserve fund. You know what you think of the fellow who lives from hand to mouth, don't you? Yes. Surely you do. You think he is a poor manager—a poor business man. If you are going to apply that rule to a person, I ask you this afternoon to apply it to the church. We must get back to the condition of 1919-1920. There must be a continual increase in the revenue of the church over and above the expenses. We should create a reserve fund to tide us over periods of depression, for they have come and they will come. And I feel that in that wonderful enthusiasm of the 1920 conference when we raised in cash and negotiable securities $400,000, God was with us, and had it not been for that, the church of God would have suffered, but God covered our folly and provided for the crisis, but he will expect us to use wisdom and prepare for the next.

I urge, therefore, that we must not live up to our income; that annually we must set aside a reserve fund. That in addition to that our institutions should be endowed for in times of distress such as this through which we are now passing. If these institutions were endowed we would be relieved of the burden of carrying them. Had we had, at the present time, an endowment of $500,000 for Graceland College, invested in good securities at six per cent, it would not only take care of the annual deficit of Graceland, but would provide $10,000 a year for its expansion. What we should do for Graceland we should do for the Sanitarium. Now, don't get excited. I don't want to do this all at once. I am just telling you what we ought to do as wise master-builders looking to the future.

Each year we should pile up a surplus and part of that surplus might flow over into an endowment fund, or be created in some other way, to take care of some of our problems. What is true of the Sanitarium should be true of the old folks' homes. We ought to provide a businesslike way of taking care of these institutions.

These endowment funds might be made of great value to the people who are moving into the land of Zion. Those of you who are farmers know that from time to time you tremble in your boots as you approach the time when the mortgage on your farm falls due, and you are not quite sure whether or not you are going to have it ready. You are in the hands of an alien. These funds I say, friends, might be loaned on long time loans under favorable conditions, to people who are buying farms or homes and thus serve a double purpose to the people of God.

All Depends on Our Attitude

I have already touched upon the question as to our ability to meet the situation. I think you can see that quite clearly. The solution of the financial problem of this church is a question of attitude. Are we persuaded, this afternoon, that as for me and my house we will serve the Lord? Are we persuaded, my friends, that let come what will, I am going to do the thing that God has required at my hands? Are we persuaded that that's the thing we are going to do?

This conference will go down in history as a stormy one. What is going to be your attitude as you go back to the people whom you represent? Are you going to encourage them to do the thing that God has required at their hands, or are you going to say the word which will destroy their faith? Which will cause them to neglect these means of grace? I plead with you; I plead with you, Saints, that as you go back to your districts, as you go into your branches, pray for and persuade others as I am trying to persuade you, to remember the responsibility that rests upon all as children of God; knowing that in the day of final accounting, you cannot be excused because some one else has failed to do the thing that he should do.

May God bless our feeble effort. I just want to call your attention to the charts here: This one shows why so many people have no tithing or offerings to pay; there are too many leaks in the barrel into which their income flows, and the financial water never rises to the level of increase overflow. Just look them over. If you haven't paid any tithing lately, look and see if there are any leaks in your financial system. Are you running that automobile more than you should? Curb your propensities along that line, and let the Lord have some of it. Are you buying a $15 hat when a $10 one would do just as well and make you feel just as happy? Happiness, my friends, is also based upon an attitude. It comes from within, and cannot be stuck on the head like an Easter bonnet. It is absolutely an attitude; so let us look at these things in the right light. Unnecessary traveling, knick knacks, fashions, foods out of season, and so on.

Now, let me show you some encouraging things. Here we have a chart which shows what was done with your contributions last year—how the 1919-1920 funds were spent. Eighty per cent was spent for missionary, aid, and education; thirteen and a fraction per cent for administration purposes—clerical help, office expenses, general church expenses, while six and a half per cent went for interest, and so on.

The Bishopric, upon whom you have placed the responsibility of gathering and dispersing your contributions, stand ready to do their best in the coming year. Will you do yours?

Children Born to the Righteous During the Millennium

By Isaac M. Smith

"It is evidently the will of the Lord that we should try to understand what has been written."

My excuse for writing upon this subject, if an excuse is necessary, is that I have been requested to do so, for the sake of some who have been somewhat puzzled over a statement in Doctrine and Covenants 45:10, where it is said of the righteous that they shall "multiply and wax strong," and that "their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation." Such subjects are not so important to us, perhaps, as that which concerns our present duty, and the problems concerning the same which lie immediately before us; but that which has been written by inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord, in all ages, has been written for the benefit and the learning of those who are of the household of faith, and it is evidently the will of the Lord that we should try to understand it.

"Great Day of the Lord"

Verse 6, of section 45, informs us that those who fear the Lord "should be looking forth for the great day of the Lord to come"; that there shall be signs shown forth in the heavens and also in the earth; and that "the remnant shall be gathered unto this place [Jerusalem]; and then they shall look for me, and behold I will come; and they shall see me in the clouds of heaven, clothed in power and great glory, with all the holy angels; and he that watches not for me shall be cut off."

But before they "shall be cut off," that is, before the arm of the Lord shall fall upon the wicked, "an angel shall sound his trumpet, and the saints that have slept, shall come forth to meet me in the cloud," and their "redemption shall be perfected"; and they are to come from the "four quarters of the earth." (Verse 7.)

Now, when "the remnant shall be gathered unto this place" (Jerusalem), and those who have slept in peace are raised from the dead, then "the arm of the Lord" is to "fall upon the nations," the earth is to reel to and fro, the heavens shake, and the Lord is to utter his voice so that it will be heard to the ends of the earth and by all nations; and then it is that "the scorner shall be consumed, and they that watch for iniquity, shall be cut off." (Verse 8.)

Next, the Lord is to show himself unto the Jews.

They are to see the wounds in his hands and his feet, ask where he received them, and when told that he received them in the house of his friends, they are to weep "because of their iniquities," and are to lament "because they persecuted their King." (Verse 9.)

Then the heathen nations are to be redeemed, "and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them."

Parable of Virgins Fulfilled

Then "Satan shall be bound that he shall have no place in the hearts of the children of men." The parable of the ten virgins is to be fulfilled, when the Lord shall come in glory; and then the Lord says:

For they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their king and their lawgiver.—Verse 10.

They are not to be "hewn down and cast into the fire"; but, on the other hand, they are not to be changed from mortality to immortality (so far as the record shows) at that time: THEY SHALL ABIDE THE DAY. And the Jews who are "gathered unto this place" (Jerusalem) shall see the wounds in his hands and his feet, and shall then and there, it seems, be converted to the fact that Jesus is their Lord and their King, and they will evidently "abide the day" also; but they are not yet ready for that great change from mortality to immortality; and they too, no doubt, will multiply and grow strong upon the earth. In fact, I am of the opinion that there will be but few, very few, who will be ready for that great change from mortality to immortality when the Lord shall come; but they are to grow, it seems, "wax strong," and "grow up without sin," after the Lord comes. Let me emphasize the statement that those who are not hewn down and cast into the fire, those who "shall abide the day," those who are to "multiply and wax strong," are to receive an inheritance: "and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance." And keeping in mind that they are to receive the earth for their inheritance, read Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13, beginning with the fourth line:

"Yea, and blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord in the holy city"; and after telling us that those who die in the Lord shall rise from the dead and receive an inheritance in the holy city, the Lord continues:

And he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; wherefore for this cause preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection of the dead.

A Difference in Assignment

Note the difference: those who are resurrected at the time of the Lord's coming are to receive an inheritance in the holy city; and those who are living and have kept the faith are to die at the age of man, that is, when they become old; but their death is not to be a separation of the body and the spirit, the body returning to the dust as it is with us now: it is to be a change, and is to be done in the twinkling of an eye. But his inheritance, until the time for that change, is on this earth; and, after the change, no doubt, he will receive an inheritance "in the holy city," with those who shall be resurrected at the time of the Lord's coming.

In Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5 will be found further light on this subject. The Lord first admonishes his children to "stand in holy places" and make the necessary preparation for that which is to come; speaks of the time when "all flesh shall see me together; says that all corruptible things shall be consumed or burned up; and speaks also of the melting of the elements, and all things becoming new. Like many other prophecies, the foregoing statements briefly refer to events which are to take place in the world's history, with little or no reference to time: speaks of what the Saints should do now; speaks of the coming of the Lord; and also speaks of the time when even the elements shall melt with fervent heat and all things shall become new. But what we are especially interested in just now is that part of the prophecy which relates to this subject. It reads as follows:

And in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts; yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall have no power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious.

Glorious Rest

When the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before the face of the Lord, "Satan shall not have power to tempt any man"; hence that is to be during the thousand years' reign of Christ on the earth. And during that time "there is no death"; and yet, as we have learned from section 63: 13, men are to pass through a change that is called death; but it is to be done so quickly, "in the twinkling of an eye," that it is not really death at all, in the sense in which we speak of death now; hence "there shall be no sorrow," even though our loved ones do pass through the change here referred to as dying. Death is swallowed up in victory.

You will note, too, that when this change takes place those who are thus changed "shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious," which is another evidence that he shall then receive an inheritance "in the holy city." But until that change takes place, they are evidently not immortal, hence they may "multiply and wax strong," as we have seen.

In Isaiah 65: 20-22, we are informed that the time will come when "there shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses, and inhabit them: they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands." And verse 23 tells us that "they shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them."

Lives of Infants Not Measured in Days

From the foregoing it will be noted that during the time here referred to, there will be no infants whose lives are measured in days, as it is now; neither will there be any old men who have not filled their days. The child shall not die until he reaches the age of one hundred years; and the sinner shall be accursed at the age of one hundred years. Their days (the days of God's people) are to be as the days of a tree. And in verse 23 it will be noted that they are to "bring forth"; but not for trouble, and "their offspring" are to be "with them." And the fact that we are also informed, verse 25, that "the wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord," makes it clear, to my mind at least, that this is to be during the thousand years' reign of our Savior on the earth, taking in, perhaps, the "little season" which Satan is to have, to go out to deceive the nations, at the end of the thousand years. And during this "little season" there are to be sinners in the earth, and men will "again begin to deny their God," Doctrine and Covenants 28: 6, and they will, of course, "be accursed," as stated in Isaiah 65: 20.

Keeping in mind that there will be nothing to hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain during this time; that there will be absolute peace, even among the most vicious and destructive animals; that children will live to be an hundred years old before they die; and that the Lord's people are to "bring forth" and "their offspring" are to be with them; keeping all this in mind, it might be well to refer to Isaiah 11: 6-9. There we shall learn that when this condition obtains in the earth that even a "little child" shall lead the animals which we consider so dangerous and destructive now; and there are to be "the sucking child" and "the weaned child," playing with those wild animals as they now play with a pet dog or kitten; and it is also stated here, as in Isaiah 65: 25, that "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." "Their young ones," speaking of the cow and the bear, "shall lie down together"; they are to feed, eat straw, even as animals do now: all going to show that they are not immortal, having never yet passed through that great change which is to make them immortal, but are still in the flesh, as we are, only they are to be living under different conditions; and, living under those different conditions, conditions of peace, prosperity, good will, and happiness, "they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation."

Changes Coming on the Earth

In Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7, the elders of this church are commanded to labor in the Lord's vineyard for the last time, and the reason given for this is that "in my own due time will I come upon the earth in judgment; and my people shall be redeemed and shall reign with me on earth; for the great millennial which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come; for Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall reign only for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire." Please note that there will be those living upon the earth "in righteousness," at that time who are still mortal as we are now; and who, when the end of the earth shall come, "shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye." It is then, too, that "the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire," or as Isaiah says, "but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

The Prophet Alma, speaking of the time when all shall come forth and stand before the throne of God and be judged according to their works, says of the wicked:

And now behold I say unto you, then cometh a death, even a second death, which is a spiritual death; then is a time that whosoever dieth in his sins, as to a temporal death, shall also die a spiritual death; yea, he shall die as to things pertaining unto righteousness.—Alma 9: 28, 29, Book of Mormon.

True, it is appointed unto man once to die; but death with those who are living "in righteousness," when the Lord shall come, is to be simply a translation; that is, they "shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye"; but the wicked shall die both a temporal and a spiritual death: be banished from God both spirit and body. "The sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

Changed Suddenly

There may be some living upon the earth when the Lord shall come who shall be ready for that great change, from mortality to immortality, and if there shall be such living at that time, I understand that they will be "changed in the twinkling of an eye," and will become immortal, and receive an inheritance in the holy city. But the great body of the Lord's people, according to my understanding, will live out their allotted time in the flesh, building houses, planting vineyards, multiplying upon the face of the earth, and bringing up their children without sin unto salvation, until they reach the allotted age for man to die, and then they will be changed, suddenly, and become immortal.

I believe, however, that there will be a great change wrought in the Lord's people at the time when he shall come to reign with them on the earth, even before they are changed to immortality: a change similar to what a man experiences when he is fully and completely converted to Christ: possibly a greater change than even that. How great the change may be, I do not pretend to know; but there will certainly be a great change wrought in those who continue upon the earth in mortality: those who "multiply and wax strong," and whose "children shall grow up without sin unto salvation." It could not well be otherwise. When God's Spirit is poured out upon all flesh, making even the wild and vicious animals as mild, gentle, and affectionate as the lamb is now, men and women, and children also, would naturally be affected in a similar manner by the abundant outpouring of that Spirit. But the final great change, from mortality to immortality, comes to men when they have lived out their allotted days, or at the end of the earth, as we have seen in the preceding references.

Hoping to be found worthy to live with the Lord and with his people when he shall come to reign, I am as ever.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Prime Minister and the Constitution

An illuminating British view on administrative attitude, especially seasonable in the light of the recent defeat of Lloyd George as prime minister.

We rarely comment upon political happenings but the defeat of Lloyd George in the parliamentary election is of more than usual significance. He is the last of the "big four" at Paris to go out of office.

The war has been blamed for many things. It is not difficult to trace to it a sort of hysteria and that which is conveniently grouped under the term Bolshevism with more or less accuracy. There evidently has been and still is a revolt against authority in the home, in the state, and in the church. But careful students note the origin as antedating the war in our educational system and in our social system. The war did not cause; it only hastened. It had the effect of past wars in emphasizing abnormal tendencies.

But on the other hand the war brings with it military authority not only on the field but especially in this late war the organization of whole peoples. This naturally leads to a form of autocracy. It did in ancient Rome when in time of danger they elected at once a dictator who promptly went out of office when the immediate danger was over. In our modern political system the change is not made so rapidly.

There can be scarcely any doubt that one great cause of the defeat of the League of Nations and leading to the defeat of Woodrow Wilson was the fact that he tried to keep everything in his own hands and seemed to prefer not to have men of the first rank as his immediate advisors. But he had shown this tendency in his first term of office. It only became accentuated by and after the war.

Clemenceau of France and Orlando of Italy went out of office too soon after the making of peace to permit of a personal analysis. But it is significant to note that in true Bolshevism itself Lenine and Trotsky have striven to centralize all power in their own hands.

We have noted these two diverse tendencies for the past several years, on one hand a seeming revolt in certain classes against authority, on the other hand the very marked tendency of strong men to assume extra constitutional powers and to assume more than leadership. That this was considered to be the case with Lloyd George is clearly shown by the following extracts which include the greater part of an editorial under the heading, "The prime minister and the constitution" in the London Spectator for July 30, 1921. It would appear entirely probable that this was a prominent cause of the division of the liberal party of which at this writing Lloyd George had secured 38 votes at the election. It probably also had a decided effect both in the majority secured by the Conservatives of 319 members out of the 545 and also to the success of the Liberal Party in electing 120, for this tendency of authority to ignore constitutional rights has doubtless increased the resistant tendencies. The returns from the remaining 70 candidates may affect the results but cannot materially change them.

The quotation follows:

The nation should be grateful to the Daily Express for turning the bull's eye of publicity upon the grave injury which is being done to our constitution. There appeared in Monday's paper, under the heading of "Where is our British constitution?" a timely article of protest against the way in which our government is being worked. The protest was not, we are glad to say, couched in the technical jargon of the constitutional jurist. Though written with adequate knowledge, it was expressed in such terms as the plainest of plain men could understand.

The first point made—and it is one of prime importance—concerned the altered position of the office of prime minister, in the old days, the prime minister, though, of course, far the more important man in the ministry and the man who appointed ministers to their posts, was only primus inter pares, the first among equals—a foreman, but not a superior being.

Lord John Russell once stated before a committee of the house of commons that the only difference between the prime minister and other ministers was that, if he differed with a colleague and no compromise could be arrived at, the colleague, and not the prime minister, resigned. That was quite true. It was, indeed, a necessary arrangement. There must be a final word in every controversy, or else there is chaos. What prevented this rule destroying the independence and responsibility of cabinet ministers was that the prime minister in former days always acted in and through the cabinet. He drew his strength from the support of his colleagues, and he spoke in their name. If he took action of an important kind, he took it in the cabinet. For example, if the prime minister came to a deadlock with a colleague, the matter was at once brought before the cabinet. If, which was usually the case, the cabinet supported the prime minister, they, in effect, told the recalcitrant member of the government that if he could not come to terms with the prime minister he must resign. It sometimes happened, however, that the prime minister was told, or rather made to feel, that the opinion of the cabinet was with the minister and not with him, and that therefore he risked a cabinet crisis if he insisted on having his own way. The result was very much to increase the power and the responsibility of the cabinet as a whole. They supported the authority of the prime minister because they thought he could keep the government together and in office, and lead the party to victory and so forth, and also because he was popular with the voters and had their ear. But they insisted on being consulted and on making the prime minister feel that his position was due to their loyalty and not to power inherent in his office. In a word, they obtained influence from the fact that they had knowledge, and also from the fact that in an extreme case they could say to their leader: "After all, the responsibility for this will come upon the cabinet as a whole, and it is not fair to put it upon us when the large majority of us greatly dislike the course proposed."

By acting in and through the cabinet, and by having no secrets from them, the prime minister was to a large extent controlled, and controlled to the benefit of the state. Now, however, we have evolved a change in the constitution, and a very mischievous change. The present prime minister, partly consciously, but no doubt still more unconsciously, has through his restlessness of mind, his desire to retain all essential power in his own hands, and probably also through his being overworked, come to assume a kind of superman position in the ministry. In effect, he claims to be not merely the first among equals—that is, a being different only in degree from other ministers—but a being different in kind. He is not even leader of the house. He stands outside every department and even outside Parliament. He comes in to say the final word when there is some difficulty or trouble, but otherwise he claims the position of grand vizier or of the chancellor of the German Empire. This claim, that especially difficult and delicate matters are always reserved for the prime minister, has a paralyzing effect on the work of government. Ministers have become afraid of being blamed by the prime minister, or, what is worse, the members of his secretariat, if they do this or that of their own initiative and without leave. They are told with the icy politeness of private secretaries that this is a matter that should be kept for the decision of the prime minister. . . .

But to return to the main issue. What we want to see restored is the sense of cabinet responsibility. That would prevent such usurpation of power by the prime minister as has undoubtedly taken place. We are not, however, going to put the blame for the usurpation of power solely on the prime minister. It rests chiefly upon the members of the cabinet. They could have stopped unconstitutional practices, and stopped them in a moment by their power of resignation. Resignation is the antiseptic of cabinets and of constitutions. It is the duty of cabinet ministers to use that power—not, of course, too freely, by always to keep it in reserve. It is this power which makes the difference between a gilded slave and a free servant of the state.

Now the war is over the cabinet should make it quite clear to the prime minister that, though they mean to let him be their chief and leader, cabinet responsibility must at once be restored, and with it cabinet government. As the Daily Express well puts it, the prime minister must realize that, constitutionally, he is only a member of the cabinet. He is not a grand arbitrator, he is not a referee, he is not the superman outside who lets the little creatures of the administration play or quarrel amongst each other, squeal, or smile, or fight, or backbite, but who, if anything important has got to be done, will do it so swiftly and with such determination that the thing is a fait accompli before the ministers have realized that the prime minister has "got busy." To quote the Daily Express once more: "Politics, as a direct result of these new methods, are [is] becoming a question of personalities rather than principles. The first duty of the conservative party is therefore to restore three things—the British Constitution, the supremacy of Parliament, and the collective responsibility of the cabinet."

Those who have not responded to the offer of scriptural calendars on the back page of the HERALD for November 1 should do so at once. A large number of people are ordering these and finding little difficulty in disposing of them. One of the brothers has sold over a hundred and still going strong.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Tearing Others Down

By G. B. Moore

No matter what your life work is, nor what you have to do,
Be careful that you tell the truth and let your life ring true;
Let all your deeds be kind ones, on others do not frown,
You cannot build yourself up by tearing others down.

If asked to speak of other men, reply with gentle grace,
Remember that this world is large and all may find a place;
For truthfulness and kind words resolve to gain renown,
You cannot build yourself up by tearing others down.

When others do not treat you well and strive your name to blight,
Be not cast down; remember this, truth always seeks the light;
Resent ye not their evil deeds nor meet them with a frown,
You cannot build yourself up by tearing others down.

Do unto others as you would have others do to you,
Forget ye not that others claim some rights as well as you;
Let perfect truth and honesty your every effort crown,
You cannot build yourself up by tearing others down.

By entertaining evil thoughts no good is ever gained,
One unjust word with vile intent a thousand hearts has pained;
Put then a bridle on your tongue, for it is ever known,
You cannot build yourself up by tearing others down.

In all your actions be sincere, of others speak no ill,
If you have nothing good to say, 'tis better to keep still;
Heed not the evil speaker's tongue, nor gossip of a town,
For you cannot build yourself up by tearing others down.

The Everlasting Promise

By Charlotte Pearson

One eve as the sun was setting,
And the world was going to rest,
I stood on a hill in Zion
And gazed in the gleaming west;
And I murmured, "Oh, Zion beloved,
Where are thy garments now,
So beautiful woven in heaven?
Where is the crown that shall deck thy brow?"

I thought of the strife and contention,
Till my spirit was burdened with woe,
And I wondered if Zion in heaven
Was like to the one here below.
But no! That bright Zion above us
Is perfect, for the Master is there—
It's our pattern to fashion our Zion
That God has bestowed on us here.

Then came his dear voice through the stillness,
Afar from the blue, misty hills;
"Oh, child, why so troubled in vision?
Know you not all shall be as God wills?"

There shall be a beautiful Zion,
Implanted on this earth below,
(I have spoken, my word shall not fail you)
Like the Zion above it shall grow.

And it shall become pure and perfect,
My Spirit shall rest like a flame
To burn out all self and contention,
For Zion must be more than name."
Then oh! the blest feeling of comfort
That surged o'er my sore-burdened soul!
I knew that the Master had spoken,
And his word would return to him whole.

Then up, all ye Saints, to the battle!
Gird on your armor. Be strong.
Conquer self, then we'll be victorious,
And we shall in Zion belong.
Equality is the crown of our Zion,
And love is her raiment so pure,
Whoever puts on these blest garments
Shall forever and ever endure.

The Gospel

By Thomas Newton

Oh, I'm glad that I obeyed it, as the Messenger conveyed it,
And my all, I humbly laid it—laid it at my Master's feet.
Then my darkened soul was lightened for more brightly it was brightened,
So I was no longer frightened at the future I must meet.
'Tis the gospel of salvation sweet.

For my soul it was benighted and with sin my life was blighted,
Blighted, blasted, breaking laws of God and man.
But the news my soul delighted, and my wrongs of life were righted,
So to Christ my troth I plighted through the gospel's glorious plan,
'Tis of God and not of man.

Thus the truth we must obey it, as the Master did convey it,
Having faith in God, the Father, and the Son,
So this truth we must receive it, and his every word believe it,
Then our future we can leave it with our Lord, the Stainless One,
Jesus Christ, God's only Son.

Next in order is repentance—sin forsaking, real repentance—
Thus escaping the dread sentence at the last great judgment day.
If to God we would be pleasing, from all sin we must be ceasing,
We should every chance be seizing all our sins to put away,
To be ready for that day.

Then we must be plunged in water, pure, pellucid, purling water,
Clinging, clear, and cleansing water. Being washed from every sin.
Greatly we are benefited as our sins are all remitted,
For God's service now we're fitted, life's eternal joys to win,
Freed from the results of sin.

Next we must have hands laid on us, then God's Spirit come upon us,

So according to God's promise, we are now the sons of God. Thus we are regenerated, as God's children now we're rated, From sin and death we're separated, through the Savior's precious blood, Sons and daughters of our God.

Now we go on to perfection, ceasing every evil action,
Thus securing God's protection in the last great judgment day,
Through the straight gate now we're entered, in the narrow way we've ventured,
All our aims we now have centered in the gospel's glorious way,
Leading to the eternal day.

Oh, my soul is full of gladness, no more sorrow, sin, or sadness,
Melancholy, mourning, madness can enshroud my happy life,
For the covenant I've entered and my whole life now is centered,
Simply centered, sweetly sensing 'tis for life,
Glorious freedom from all strife.

Life eternal, everlasting, always feasting, no more fasting,
Joyful, glorious joys we're tasting on that bright and happy shore,
No more sighing, sorrow, sadness, weeping, wailing, mourning, madness,
Always singing songs of gladness, sweetly singing evermore,
In our home forevermore.

Thus our joys will have no ending, everlasting praises sending,
Singing sweet songs ever blending with sweet music to our King.
One eternal round of pleasure, joy and gladness without measure,
Will be ours with splendid leisure, in the land of endless spring,
Singing praises to our King.

Oh, I'm glad that I obeyed it, as the Messenger conveyed it,
And my all, I humbly laid it—laid it at my Master's feet.
Then my darkened soul was lightened for more brightly it was brightened,
So I was no longer frightened at the future I must meet.
'Tis the gospel of salvation sweet.

Thrift Talks

If we desire to enjoy the material and spiritual blessings of life, we must think in terms of—earning and not of spending; producing and not consuming;
giving and not getting;
saving and not squandering.

This is the doctrine of the tithepayers.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Missionaries Stop on Way to Australia

Tahiti and New Zealand visited by A. C. Barmore and wife.

At Papeete, Society Islands, Monday, September 18, Brothers Clyde F. Ellis and A. V. Karlstrom were on the wharf to greet us. Since it was afternoon we went home with the latter with whom we enjoyed the evening meal. The evening of the 18th we held a service with the native Saints. My remarks were based upon John 15: 1-8, although the manner of treating the subject was quite different from my preaching to my own race. Brother Ellis interpreted for me, and from the look of the Saints and what I afterward heard, they were able to understand perfectly.

After the sermon there was an address of welcome by the branch president, followed by addresses in reply by myself and Sister Barmore, the latter also having been called to the stand. As the president spoke he presented articles of native manufacture as souvenirs of our visit. In my speaking generally I used a number of illustrations which were rendered by Brother Ellis by suitable gestures as well as words.

I was pleased with the ability of the natives to remember our visit of nine years ago. I may say, however, that between sixty and seventy of the Papeete Saints died of influenza, so many of the Saints we met on our previous visit were not present to greet us this time. The epidemic did not reach the outlying islands; if it had we would in all probability have lost eighty per cent of our native membership.

Our visit at Papeete was all too short—just one day. An attack of illness prevented Sister Ellis from taking any part in our social activities or public meeting; we visited her, however, in her home. Brother and Sister Karlstrom acted as host and hostess and the latter was present at the wharf with the two missionaries and the native Saints to bid us adieu.

As we passed out of the harbor of Papeete and proceeded on our voyage we left the island of Moorea on our right. This may be called the second island of the group. Like Tahiti it is noted for its natural beauty, being even more scenic, abounding as it does in waterfalls and tropical scenes of a sylvan character. Tahiti, however, has the highest mountain of the entire group; the double-peaked Orohena rises to a height of 7,340 feet, which is as high as Mount Kosciusco, the highest mountain of Australia. Just here I wish to correct the common mistake of referring to this group as the South Sea Islands. The latter name is much too broad, since it includes a number of other groups as well as this one.

Nothing had been provided by our entertainment committee for the days in which we were passing from the Society to the Cook Islands. The reason was that natives usually throng the ship during this part of the voyage. This time, however, it was not so, but it was just as well that we had nothing on hand, for there was a swell on; indeed, to our surprise, this run proved to be the roughest part of the voyage. We arrived at Avarua, Raratonga, Thursday, the 21st. We arrived early in the morning and left at midnight.

The next night we resumed our social functions, a concert being held on our upper deck, another one followed on Monday night, the 25th; and on Tuesday night, the 26th, still another, this one being in the third class. In all of these concerts I participated. All of them were exhibitions of considerable rhetorical and musical talent. On Saturday night, the 23d, there was a dress ball; it was certainly a unique affair and a great success. It is wonderful what can be done with the facilities available aboard ship.

On Sunday, the 24th, and Sunday, October 1, I held services in the music room of the first class both at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. The sermons gave great satisfaction to all who were present and heard. Tuesday night, the 26th, we crossed the 180th meridian, hence lost Wednesday, the 27th, that is, we retired Tuesday night, slept but one night, and when we awoke it was Thursday morning.

We spent two days in Wellington, New Zealand, where we visited pleasantly with Brother and Sister Lebherz and Sister Lebherz's son, George Wilson, and his family.

We arrived in Australia on Wednesday, October 4. Sister Barmore, though in infirm health but recently, stood the trip well. The sea itself did not disturb her in the least, her health being really better than when on land. The length of the trip, however, was wearisome to her as it was also to the rest of the passengers.

A reception was given in our honor on Saturday night, the 7th, at which about three hundred Saints and friends were present. Sunday, the 8th, was the first Sabbath for us in Australia on this visit. I attended the Balmain church in the morning and assisted in the distribution of Sunday school prizes, Children's Day having been the previous Sunday. (In this country it is called Sunday school anniversary.) In the evening I preached in the Leichhardt church, having attended a communion service in the same church in the afternoon.

Yesterday, Sunday the 15th, I preached in the Balmain church both forenoon and night. At 3 p. m. I presided at the communion service in Leichhardt church. This latter branch was organized and the church built in connection with my own labors when I was in this mission before.

My time during the week is being spent in visiting and in attending the various midweek meetings in the two branches. We are planning, however, a series of young people's services in which a number of missionaries will participate. Meanwhile I am employing and enjoying myself in renewing acquaintance with Saints and friends generally, which means much visiting. Attendance at all services excellent. It is surprising to see the great number of young people we have in this country.

Apostle McConley and Bishop Lewis have gone on a trip to New Zealand. In bonds, A. C. BARMORE.

The Work in Norway

A letter from Bon, Norway, to the Presidency regarding the missionary outlook.

I have now been in Norway two months and a half, have visited all the places where we have members and held meetings among them as opportunities have afforded. I have personally talked with each one to find out his or her condition in order to be able to know the standing of the church as it is in this country.

This work was in my opinion the first thing to do, and it was also in harmony with the understanding I gathered from the last talk I had with President F. M. Smith in Lamoni.

The work is not in as bad a condition as I feared it would be after six years of inactivity upon the part of missionaries.

In this work among the Saints I have been much blessed in the past and still more since my return this fall. I have enjoyed spiritual light and power in my preaching here this time which to me give promise of a successful future. I am not discouraged, lonesome, or homesick; I feel exceedingly happy and hopeful in my efforts, not because I am so able or strong, but because God has so abundantly blessed me with the influence of his Spirit. What the results of my efforts will be I do not know, neither do I particularly care. I am determined each day to do my best and to live in love and in purity of life and conduct, and if I can succeed in this I can gladly leave the result to him, in whose work I am engaged.

The condition outside has not changed a great deal, religiously. The different churches outside the state church are carrying on their work as usual. The Pentecostal people are gaining more converts than any other at present, I think. Healings, the gift of tongues and prophecies, of which they are making great claims, are the means of catching many. The main leader in Norway, the one who brought the power from Los Angeles where he obtained it, is a bright, well-read man of English parentage. He was formerly a Methodist minister. He went to America to gather money for the erection of a slum meeting house in the capital here, but being unsuccessful in this, he succeeded in hearing of and obtaining the so-called Pentecostal power. And if success is measured by the number of converts he gained he has had it. They claim one thousand members in their branch in Christiania, besides having members nearly all over this country and in Sweden and Denmark.

Economically, conditions are not good here. Work is scarce and nearly all commodities are high. This is unfortunate for our work, as we will have to rent rooms, both for living and for meetings, and we must operate in towns where we have to rent halls.

I have often felt that we should make a continued effort in Christiania, for there are many people and a great many religiously interested people. But there are also so many kinds of meetings that it is difficult to gather people. Each congregation hangs on to its own. The process must of necessity be slow, laborious, and expensive. I have not yet made up my mind to make the attempt.

Where I am now we have a little church of our own, many friends, more members than anywhere else in Norway, our living almost, if not entirely, free, so I have so far preferred to spend some time here instead of opening up other places where heavy expenses must be incurred.

Brother Hunker I have stationed in Porsgrund, my native town, where father and my sisters live. Expenses there are not very heavy, opportunities for developing in Norse good, and some Saints to associate with. He is progressing nicely in the language. Sincerely yours, P. MUCEUS.

A Letter From Germany

A personal letter to the Presidency from a sister at Bernburg, Anhalt, Germany.

Esteemed President and Dear Brother in the Bonds of Christ: I have greatly rejoiced in the letter which you wrote me, for it shows that even in the midst of all your work and care concerning the children of men, you have not forgotten me. I was ten weeks with my eldest daughter in Cuxhaven and received your last letter recently while there.

Yes, I feel very lonesome since the death of my husband, but heavy as was the blow, I must adjust myself; but I have found great comfort in my religion, and I hope God will further help me. . . .

That the work of the Lord moves forward I heard to-day from Brother Greene, who has visited me in my lonesomeness. We had a fine visit for two hours and I received good instructions orce more in response to all my questions. When the conversation is upon religion there seems to be no end.

Oh, how I rejoice in having found the true religion, but I am sad because I can attend no meetings.

Yes, Brother Williams returned too soon to America. How gladly would we have had another visit from him. Perhaps you may come again with him soon. What a great joy that would be for us.

My daughter has married well, and with her husband is living in Dresden with the father.

Now, dear brother, may you and your family have health. I greet you heartily.

Your sister in the bonds of the Lord,
MRS. A. SCHLOTE.

Brother Richard Bullard in England

From letter to Presidency from Gloucester, England, October 28, 1922.

I was very pleased to have for a week or two the companionship of Bishop Fry, and hope again to have this pleasure, but find the many demands here for helpfulness will not permit us to double up much in our labors.

I find Brother Fred M.'s visit here much appreciated and often referred to by the Saints, also the labors of T. W. Williams; and the later labors of Brother Gillen, who certainly won the love and esteem of those he tried so hard to help with encouragement. He has left behind true friends and warm hearts. To follow up the work of these brethren is surely pleasant and helpful.

I am not at all discouraged in the work, for God the Eternal Father is at the helm and will, when we all cooperate with him in all he requires of us, show us more of its wonderful mission and purpose, and the glory of Zion will shine forth as promised. May we all act as true servants of his for the establishment of harmony and peace in his great church. Then will come the power so much needed to bring about his purposes and the redemption of Zion (or the perfection of his people, for this is what that statement means), for when that is brought about the rest will become a delightful duty, and God will have his residence among his people. To this end may we all have grace to work and brush aside the differences which have so long disturbed us in our work of development and bend every energy of soul and body toward personal adjustment to the laws of God.

A Dream Fulfilled

Well, our big conference is over and indeed it has been big in many ways. One of which was, it brought to pass the fulfillment of Brother D. T. Mills's dream of the ship of Zion with the rafts attached. I heard Brother Mills tell that dream twice, I think, and talk of it as he told it. I may not remember it all in detail as well as I did eight years ago, when I wrote to Brother Elbert A. Smith that it would come to pass, but I remember the principal parts.

The dream was that he saw the ship of Zion sitting on the waters, but the sails were not filled. They were hanging to the masts and there were large rafts built out on either side of the ship and the men of the ship were at work very diligently on them. They would climb over the rail into the ship as though after something that they needed, and hurriedly go out again and work on the rafts.

He noticed that those rafts were built of very fine timbers and there was splendid work done on them, so that the surface was as smooth as a floor, but they were built so far around towards the bows of the ship that they hindered her progress and she merely drifted along.

Presently a large majority of those in the rafts came into the ship. Then a breeze came, a wind from heaven, the sails filled, and the ship started, broke away from the rafts and moved rapidly onwards with a fine poise on the water.

The auxiliaries, Sunday school and Religio, were not in full force at the time of the dream. I do not think the Religios were organized but some years after, when the conventions were in full force, at one time, it came to my mind that these rafts being the work of the people of the ship, the Saints, and being made of fine timbers and splendid work, that they represented the auxiliaries, at least their conventions. And though I did not know how the church could break away from them, I was sure that there would come a change like a breaking away, and it has come.

It will be remembered that for years the Sunday school and Religio conventions occupied during the first week of the conference gathering, and for nearly a week the vigor and energy of a large majority of the elders were given to those conventions so that when conference proper commenced the elders and the people were tired. Consequently, there was not so much vigor and enthusiasm for the work of the conference.

May the ship of Zion go onward carrying the glorious message of salvation to the ends of the earth. E. B. B.

Home Decorations

"Floors and floor covering," prepared by Charlotte Dryden for the Department of Women.

Years ago the floors of our homes and other buildings were not a question of great thought or expense. If they were smooth and well built that was sufficient, as they were usually entirely covered by carpets or matting.

Nowadays we give much care to the kind of wood, the finish and covering, and the increased cost of material makes one especially careful to choose what is most durable and most easily kept in order.

It is better taste to keep the floors in neutral shades darker than the surrounding walls and with inconspicuous designs, as the floor is a part of the background for the other furnishings of the room. In choosing floor coverings one should not let individual taste for certain colors control to the detriment of the rest of the room. For instance, some colors would look well in a room having a strong light, but in a small or dark room would not show to good advantage. A dark rug, or one of large figures, should not be used in a small room, or in one dimly lighted. Neither should we choose colors that fade easily, and that do not wear well. A rug or other floor covering should harmonize with the walls, furniture, and draperies. This does not require all articles to be of the same color, or even shades of the same color, for this would be monotonous. The floor should be darkest, the walls lighter and the ceiling lightest of all.

One must consider also the wearing quality and cost as well as color and design. Many shades and much material may be very difficult to clean, and not durable, which things are

New Rules of Order

The Saints have long waited the new book that is now available for parliamentary guidance. It is entitled Rules of Order for Deliberative Assemblies. This was used as the authority in recent General Conference business sessions. It is very conveniently arranged and is completely indexed. Price 75 cents. Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

readily to be desired in goods, especially in the case of people in moderate circumstances.

Rugs or other floor coverings when well chosen and properly laid make our homes much more attractive and warm, as well as more comfortable to walk on, and help to deaden sound. To choose carefully, the housewife must know what is the best, and most economical material. A rug of delicate color or soft nap is not good choice for a room where there is constant passing to and fro and danger of soiling from other sources.

In America the ingrain, brussels, wilton, velvet, and axminster rugs are the most common types. These are woven on power looms to a great extent. Beside these we have oriental rugs and many adaptations of the old-fashioned rag rug made in factories, as well as all kinds of fiber and grass rugs, and mattings.

All carpets, whether they have a pile, as in the case of the brussels, wilton, and axminster, or a plain weave like ingrain are made of warp and weft threads. The warp, or chain threads run lengthwise and are set in the loom; the woof, weft, or filling threads run crosswise through the warp.

We use worsted, woolen, cotton, linen, hemp, and jute for carpets and rugs. In general the best pile carpets and rugs have a worsted surface and a clean, smooth linen or hemp backing. The difference between the woven worsted and woolen for carpets is hard to detect, but worsted wears better and is made of coarse, hairlike wools doubled and twisted after spinning, while woolen is softer and less lustrous and durable.

Ingrain carpet is woven of two or three ply yarn, dyed before weaving. The method of weaving in the design gives the carpet its name, and the larger the number of threads in the warp and woof to the inch, the more durable is the product, if good materials are used. The all-wool kinds, with worsted warp, and woolen of worsted filling are best though more expensive, while those of cotton are cheap, but fade easily and do not wear well. Light-colored wool carpet is apt to contain more wool, as dark colors may be adulterated easily with animal hair.

Ingrain rugs are very good in bedrooms as they are easily cleaned, light of weight, and not expensive. In European countries where wool has become very scarce, linoleums in rich, dull colors have become very popular. In Holland the dark linoleums are the usual background for rugs. One firm in this country has put out an excellent linoleum, beautiful in both color and design, and guaranteed as very durable.

Carpets covering the entire floor are difficult to keep clean and are unsanitary. Rugs vary from rag to oriental, but one must be very careful in purchasing the oriental rug as the increased demand for these has stimulated a production of them which is detrimental to careful work or careful design. If one can purchase those that are real antiques of seventy-five years or more of age they make a safe investment. One can only judge these by texture, design, and a study of the old and priceless rugs found in museums or expensive shops. In imitations of oriental rugs the dyes will often run in the washing and bleaching process. The older the oriental rug the safer is the purchase, as a rule. One may distinguish a new rug by wetting a cloth and rubbing the surface until it becomes warm, when there will be a strong odor of chloride of lime, which is used in the bleaching process. These oriental rugs may be purchased for $25 to $25,000. Chinese rugs are beautiful but the old ones are beyond the possibilities of the ordinary purchase.

Vacuum cleaners are very hard on rugs and upholstery, and some firms refuse to guarantee material cleaned thus. Oriental rugs should never be steam cleaned, but cleaned by soap and water.

Honor to the Most Liberal School

The Presiding Bishopric are promising the school which has the highest-per-member Christmas offering for this year that their picture will be published in the Blue Stepping Stones the coming winter.

The money going to support foreign missions this year, it should be an incentive for extra effort, and it will be a worthwhile honor to have the picture of the school appear in the Sunday school paper.

Public Speaking Course in "Autumn Leaves"

One of the valuable features of Autumn Leaves for the coming year will be a new course in public speaking, by Apostle T. W. Williams, written especially for that magazine.

There is a general demand for material of this sort, and we are confident many will not only read this series of articles but will attempt to study it in class in Religion, priesthood meeting, Sunday school class, etc. Study exercises are suggested and questions accompany each lesson. There are fifteen lessons in all.

It will begin in the January number, for which subscriptions should be sent soon, as that issue is mailed in December. The price of the magazine for a year is $1.75.

The Story of the Bible in "McCall's"

McCall's Magazine will publish in 1923, "The story of the Bible," by Hendrik Willem Van Loon. McCall's paid what is held to be the highest price ever given by any magazine for a serial other than fiction for the privilege of printing this feature. The Bible is retold for the first time in history from the viewpoint of being the greatest story ever written, the unsurpassable story of the adventures of the soul of man since he first appeared in the Garden of Eden. Mr. Van Loon is a world-famous historian and the author of The Story of Mankind. No doubt some of his deductions and conclusions will be read with mental reservations, but in general we are confident the article will be very popular with all religious readers.

McCall's is considered an excellent home magazine and may well be recommended for a place in the family circle.

We are offering McCall's in combination with the church papers as follows:

Echoes From Zion

A little letter to the "folks back home" from a well-known pastor.

After the stirring and largely attended conference of eighteen days, Zion has put on her modest and quiet robe and seems real lonely. Here and there we see a lingering missionary preparing for another year's intensive work, and some delegates walking round about Zion with the idea of locating.

Sister Mollie McRoberts, one of our Sacramento, California, Saints, is still here, and loves the beauties of Zion, "beautiful for situation the joy of the whole earth."

The weather at this writing is most agreeable, mild and pleasant.

Brother L. E. Hills is holding a series of lectures at Enoch Hill church on Book of Mormon evidences. The church is filled each night.

We spent a very pleasant evening recently at the home of our Seattle and British Columbia district missionary, Brother S. S. Smith. The evening was happily spent with Brother and Sister Smith, his saintly mother, and Brother and Sister Thomas McKevit and Cathryn. Brother Smith has a very interesting family who represent the fourth generation in the church. Brother Smith has inherited a profound love for the work and has gone to his field in Central Texas, his mission field.

We visit the Sanitarium occasionally and find there the afflicted and suffering. We found Brother Thomas Hamilton in a paralyzed condition. We knew him years ago at Cameron and Stewartsville. We also found Brother Samuel Brooks from Saint Joseph, Missouri, in a similar condition. Brother J. C. Foss had been removed to his home. Sister Irene Pope, a graduate nurse, we found in charge of the X-ray department. She is a New Westminster, British Columbia, girl, her father, Samuel Pope, having charge of the church work there.

In dropping into one of our business houses we see the genial face of Brother Omer Cato, formerly of Centralia, Washington. Omer is still an ardent lover of the gospel and is mingling study with business. He is a son of Brother A. J. Cato, a former active worker in the church.

We often think of the many gospel ties in Seattle where we spent many happy days in church fellowship, and as we write there wells up a fervent prayer in their behalf.

We live just across the street from the church wireless—so listen for more echoes. In bonds, J. M. TERRY.

Another New Book

Among the new books issued by the Herald Publishing House this year is one that is sure to be popular with the children for many years. It is entitled Sleepy Hour Stories. The author is Ethel I. Skank, and the collection is gathered from Zion's Hope, being the best of many short stories written by Sister Skank for that publication.

There are thirty-one stories altogether. The type is large, open-faced twelve-point, and the illustrations are pleasing.

This, another of the birth offering series, contains names and addresses of a large number of children in whose honor offerings have been made towards the initial expense of the book. The children will find much pleasure in seeing their names in print. But most of all, the book is one they will enjoy, with its wholesome stories, just suited to children up to about nine years of age. Price, $1, postpaid.

Conference at Jonesport

On November 4 and 5 the Saints of Eastern Maine District held their semiannual conference at Jonesport. We feel no hesitancy in saying that it will go down in the history of this district as one of the best conferences we ever held. Everything seemed to unite to make it a grand success. The Saints coming from all over the district were in the best of spirits. The bracing November air of the Maine coast seemed to invigorate all with a desire to be alive and on the move. But best of all, and without which our meeting together would have been barren of good results, the Lord was with us.

We had the pleasure of having with us one of the new apostles, Edmund J. Gleazer, who in company with Sister Gleazer, made their first trip from Boston to Maine. We feel that they will not soon forget their visit to these parts, and most assuredly the Saints and friends of Eastern Maine will not forget the very pleasant experiences of this conference. We surely used Brother Gleazer while we had him. He preached Saturday evening, also Sunday afternoon and evening. At each service mentioned he delivered able sermons, full of spiritual food. He also called the priesthood of the district together and put before them some of the missionary policies of the Quorum of Twelve and urged the local men to get busy along missionary lines. At the morning prayer service he spoke by the Spirit to two of the brethren whom the Lord desired to use in his work.

Brother H. A. Koehler was also with us, coming from New Bedford, Massachusetts. He occupied at the eleven o'clock service on Sunday and was at his best. He also rendered valuable assistance along musical lines, leading the singing Sunday evening, and rendering with Brother Riley Beal some soul-stirring duets. While here at this conference he learned of his appointment to London and Chatham District. He has labored very extensively in Maine and we wish for him the best of success in his new field.

Brother Herbert Rogers, our district chorister, had the music well in hand, giving us all that we could expect and desire. The choir seats were full of spirited singers. At each preaching service there were solos, both vocal and instrumental. Brother Lewis Hinkley was there with his trombone and Brother Alton Rogers with his clarinet. Mr. Irving Ray kindly consented to be present with his violin. Sister Geneva Rogers pleased all with several solos. Professor Dempsey, of the high school teaching staff, sang for us Sunday evening.

The fine new church at Jonesport, with a seating capacity of over four hundred, was comfortably filled at each service, but on Sunday afternoon and evening every bit of available floor space was occupied, even into the entry.

There can be no doubt that the work in Eastern Maine is still onward. The excellent work done by Brother Orval Thompson, now of Graceland, will never be forgotten by this district. He put new life into things. May he be returned to us after his year at college.

We feel that the whole church has taken a step toward God. A new spirit is felt in this section of the vineyard. We are out for a constructive and an affirmative work. Maine is a hard place to come to if you have the gospel in one hand and a bunch of rumors up the sleeve of the other. But if you preach the restored gospel and are loyal to the church and her onward move toward Zion, then you will receive all the support that consecrated Saints can give.

Our prayers are for the President and his counselors, the Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, as well as every other quorum of the church. Without one dissenting voice we can and do pledge our support in every possible way. The Western Maine District finds itself in the same attitude. The cry all over Maine is, "Let's go." NEWMAN M. WILSON.

Independence

The Social Service Bureau in Zion is gradually getting into its place. Many calls for assistance, mostly in social, moral, and occupational problems, are coming to them and receiving attention. It is an excellent adjunct to the department of the bishopric in Zion, taking up not merely outward and imminent needs but lending invaluable service to many problems that require considerable research as to causes. Clothing is being collected, but so far the used material has not been placed on sale. Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser are actively engaged in this work and will without doubt soon inspire many others to study the factors involved in our social problems.

One of the big developments of the week was the Sunday afternoon session at the Stone Church at which President Floyd M. McDowell and A. Max Carmichael, of Lamoni, addressed an audience of officers and teachers in Sunday school, Religio, Women's, and Health Departments in Zion.

The effort was purely educational and there was no disposition to urge any of the five forms of organization which have been suggested for adoption by the local churches. The emphasis was placed on the spirit of working together, which if properly developed will demand some form of organization which will best allow that spirit to operate. The morning hour at the Stone Church was devoted to a discussion of the principles involved in religious education, divided into two general points: activity and thinking about that activity so it could be improved upon in the next effort.

The Saints in the various congregations in Zion are thinking seriously about these things. There is a disposition on the part of some to move ahead rather rapidly to see if there is a possibility of desired change in plans or methods before the first of the year, so officers to be elected may begin on the new basis. However, they are counseled to go slow, to develop the spirit of cooperation first, then proceed. The essentials of Form 3 are in effect in most of the congregations in Zion.

President F. M. McDowell was the speaker Sunday evening at the Stone Church, his sermon being one of the series for young people. Fathers and sons were on the platform, as part of the observance of Fathers' and Sons' Week. The sermon by Brother McDowell is highly spoken of.

Second Independence is also holding a series of Sunday evening services for young people with good attendance. F. Henry Edwards, J. F. Keir, and J. A. Gillen have been the speakers to date. Next Sunday evening Ammon White will speak on "Zion the beautiful."

President Elbert A. Smith preached the dedicatory sermon at the Post Oak Branch in Holden Stake on Sunday the 19th. Stake presidents D. J. Krahl and F. A. McWethy were in attendance. Elder Roy S. Budd was announced for a series of services for the week following.

The Walnut Park Saints in Independence have decided to erect a church building on the same lots now occupied. The covered basement will be enlarged and fitted for classrooms this fall, work to begin this week, and the superstructure probably put up next summer. Elder J. A. Dowker, the pastor, has taken an active interest in this movement.

Elder John C. Foss reports to his many friends throughout the church that after six weeks in the Sanitarium he is at home again somewhat improved and glad to recommend the Sanitarium as a good place to be.

A number of our musically-inclined people were in attendance Saturday evening or Sunday at the rendition of "The Messiah" at Kansas City by the Lindsborg, Kansas, chorus. We understand that the event will be reported more in detail by some who were in attendance.

The radio sermon last Sunday at 10.30 a. m. was by Elder Walter W. Smith, with several vocal numbers by a quartet from the Independence Music Club.

The Pen and Ink Club hold monthly meetings and are constantly taking in new members. They are producing some literary material and developing a good interest in literary matters. At their next session they discuss a sonnet by one of the members and an accompanying article on the subject.

Elder E. K. Evans, editor of Glad Tidings, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, commenting on the recent General Conference and impressions of local conditions observes that Independence ought to spend a dollar and a half for new street signs and house numbers. Evidently the suggestion is bearing fruit. A canvass is under way now to see that every residence and business place is numbered, and marking of streets will likely be taken up for definite action by the council.

With Church Architect Henry C. Smith of the Independence city council as a leading proponent, the council during the past season developed and adopted a zoning law, intended to restrict business districts to certain areas. A recent decision by Judge Willard P. Hall in a suit brought before him was that this law was not enforceable in cities of the size of Independence, under present statutes. The city may appeal the decision.

Bishop J. F. Keir is in Michigan and Ontario, speaking at Port Huron and London, Ontario, among other points. Elder R. C. Russell was making appointments in the latter territory for a week. London was observing anniversary day last Sunday.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending November 18: Marie Leslie, Mrs. E. G. Osborne and Baby Osborne, Englewood, Missouri; Frank Bell, Mrs. Harold Klein and Baby Klein, Kansas City, Missouri; Delbert Hall, Levasy, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Elsie May Whitman, and Mrs. M. L. Hubbs. X-ray patients: Virginia Winchester and Mrs. E. G. Wood, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. B. H. Standefer, Dallas, Texas; Mrs. John Mihan, Parsons, Kansas; Delbert Hall, Levasy, Missouri; and Mrs. Virginia Lee Franklin, B. H. Barker, and Elsie May Whitman, of Independence.

Hear "Messiah" by Lindsborg Chorus

The music lovers of Independence, especially those who have been interested in our own production of Handel's "Messiah," enjoyed the very rare privilege of hearing that oratorio rendered by the world-famous Lindsborg chorus in Kansas City on the 18th and 19th of November. The chorus of six hundred voices has left its home town only three times in the forty years they have been singing the "Messiah." So to hear it in Kansas City was an unusual privilege.

The six hundred voices and the soloists were accompanied by a seventy-piece symphony orchestra, also of Lindsborg.

Their rendition of this greatest oratoria was wonderful, and only gives us the increased desire to be able to do as well ourselves.

The oratorio was given Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, in the new American Royal Stock Pavilion, making their 120th and 121st renditions.

The soloists were artists obtained in Kansas City.

Such singers as Nordica, Schumann-Heink, Galli-Curci, Sembrich, Hempel, Fremstad, Gadske, Casals, Elman, Ysaye, and many others have been secured by this organization for their annual Festivals at Easter time. Lindsborg, a town of two thousand population, has accomplished much. We should have increased courage to go on.

A Little Story With a Moral

A Sunday school worker in Independence wanted some fancy reward cards for the pupils in her class. She rode on the street car ten miles to Kansas City after them, and of course came back the same way. Twenty miles, two hours, twenty cents car fare to get twenty cents' worth of cards.

We appreciate the zeal that prompted that trip. She is a faithful, thoughtful teacher. We need many more like that.

But the trip was unnecessary. Within a five-minute walk—or five-cent fare on street car—was the Herald Publishing House. We had on hand exactly the same cards at the same price she paid. Besides, there is all the rest of the Gibson line, making selection easy.

But she did not know we had the cards. They had been advertised in the church papers, but she had not seen the announcements. We should have reached her, somehow, with the information. Others like her should have been told about our good assortment of Sunday school supplies and facilities for getting quickly what we do not carry.

So the moral is, We should advertise more and better, not just to sell more goods but as a service to our patrons. We are attempting to do that. Will you help us by passing on some of the information your coworkers ought to have but are not reading?

Club Offers on Magazine

Some of our readers may not know that we are able to duplicate any club offer for magazines made by a reputable firm and make a little profit in the transaction.

For instance, we offer Youth's Companion and a new subscription to Autumn Leaves for $3.65 (regular price, $4.25); McCall's, Youth's Companion, with new subscription to Autumn Leaves, $4.50 (regular price, $5.25); Woman's Home Companion, Youth's Companion, with new subscription to Autumn Leaves, $5.15 (regular price, $6.25).

Elder Ira I. Benham writes from Fort Wayne, Indiana, that he baptized, on October 22, three people at Millet, Alberta, Canada.

Mrs. C. D. Carter, the correspondent of De Kalb, Illinois, on October 22, writes: "The work in De Kalb seems to be in a prosperous condition, and the Saints are striving to walk in the narrow way that leads to life everlasting.

"Our hearts were made glad on last Sabbath when Brother Herbert Lusha was buried in baptism by our branch president. Their family are now all within the fold of Christ. This makes sixteen that have been baptized here this past year, and others are near the kingdom.

"All departments of the branch are working harmoniously together and the Thursday evening prayer services are a feast to our souls. Old and young alike are active.

"Our branch president gave us a very instructive talk this morning. Our district president will occupy this evening and I am sure will bring us a message of hope, judging by the past."

"A Japanese Sunday school has lately been established among the Japanese in Honolulu," writes Elder E. B. Hull, "and over forty members enrolled." Brother and Sister H. K. Inouye are in charge. We also have a Sunday school on the island of Maui of about thirty-five members, in charge of Sister Dolly Lee. This sister is principal of a public school over there, and she gathers together some of her scholars on Sunday and holds a Sunday school. Some new members have been added to the church lately, both in the Honolulu and Hilo churches."

Books Every Saint Ought to Own

Bibles and Testaments

From our catalogue each family should select for gifts and home use various Bibles especially adapted to the needs of the individuals in the family. We have listed, fully described, and a number of them illustrated, Bibles ranging from the smallest New Testament to the large size home or family Bible. The teacher should have a teacher's reference edition, with concordance, Bible helps, maps, etc. The boy or girl at college should have a compact, convenient Bible conveniently at hand for regular reading. The preacher should have a Bible in keeping with his special preferences while the older people will greatly prefer the large type editions. If you do not have a catalogue one will be sent promptly upon request.

Book of Mormon

The origin of the latter-day work centers directly around the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the only record of the ancient peoples of America. The book not only had an auspicious origin in its coming forth in 1830 but contains wonderful doctrines, philosophies, and illuminating history. It is hard to conceive a thoroughly converted Latter Day Saint who is not well conversant with the Book of Mormon. It comes in various bindings, the most popular being cloth, at $1. The other editions are imitation leather, $1.25; stiff leather, $1.50; and flexible morocco with gold edges at $3.50. Name stamped in gold, 30 cents; same name on each additional book, 15 cents.

Doctrine and Covenants

The revelations of God to the church in the order of their dates with the Bible and Book of Mormon constitute the doctrine of Jesus Christ in its fullness. The organic and applied law of the church, historical documents, articles on marriage, etc., are in this indispensable book for every Latter Day Saint. No one can appreciate the latter-day work who does not read this invaluable book. Cloth binding, 80 cents; imitation leather, 90 cents; stiff leather, $1.25; flexible morocco with gold edges, $3.25.

Bible Dictionary

There are various editions of Bible dictionaries on the market but the later editions do not differ materially from the Standard Smith-Peloubet Dictionary of the Bible which we sell regularly in cloth binding at $2. It has biography, geography, antiquities, natural history, and literature, conveniently and alphabetically arranged. There are 8 colored maps and 440 illustrations. Valuable to every teacher and student of the Bible.

Bible Atlas

We list two Bible atlases, the most popular being the S. P. C. K. for Sunday-school teachers primarily, though excellent for any home. The maps are large and clear, there being sixteen each 7½ by 10 inches in size with numerous smaller inserts. This is very popular on account of the low price, 40 cents. The other one, the Poates Atlas, contains 110 maps all in color, 28 of these being physical maps of Palestine with 82 progressive historical maps indorsed by historical authorities and religious workers of all creeds. About 4½ by 7 inches, $1.

Dictionary

We are glad to offer the Webster's New International Dictionary which should not be confused with the many cheap editions from old plates. This is a standard work used by our publishing house in all its literary productions and in universal use in schools and among educators throughout the United States. In various bindings. Weight, 14 pounds. We sell various editions ranging from buckram, indexed, at $16. to full morocco, gilt edges, indexed, at $30. We have other dictionaries not so complete but reliable in every way at various prices including one at 50 cents, another at 75 cents, one at $1, another at $2, and an excellent one at $5.

Bible Concordance

Our best cyclopedic concordance is Young's Analytical which is very illuminating and broadening and sells at $8. The best work for the average student is Cruden's Complete Concordance in cloth binding at $2.25. We also have the Oxford Pocket Concordance at $1.65.

Church History

We sell in various bindings the four volumes of our general Church History, the most popular binding being cloth at $2.55 per volume. Each family should have the complete set of four volumes even if it is required to buy one volume at a time. We also have the Young People's History profusely illustrated and especially for young people. This is issued in two volumes the first covering dates from 1805 to 1859, 410 pages, at $1.55; volume 2, 1860 to 1906, 226 pages, at $1.25.

The Instructor

Perhaps one of the most liked books for the serious student of the three standard books of the church is The Instructor by Gomer T. Griffiths. It contains a synopsis of the faith and doctrines of the church with historical events from the works of eminent theological writers of the past and present. It contains as well memorable events and items of interest connected with the history of the church. In three bindings, the most popular being cloth at $1.

Doctrinal References

This small book contains references of passages in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on doctrinal points. Texts from the three standard books are arranged under subject headings. It is indexed and contains 71 pages. A unique work invaluable to one who desires to make a thorough study of the three books. Paper binding 15 cents, cloth 30 cents.

Family Budget Book

The stewardship plan of living implies consistent, careful, thrifty management of family expenditures. This book provides a systematic method of keeping account of one's income and expenditures on a monthly basis and eliminates guesswork in the matter of making out inventories or tithing reports. It has ample explanation as to location of items and if not already in use should be inaugurated at the beginning of the new year. Price 25 cents.

Thanksgiving Day

Once again have we approached the time of Thanksgiving Day, an event in celebration of the harvest homes for many ages past and added to it the devotion of the Puritans in thanksgiving to God.

So far as the quantity and quality of produce is concerned we have cause as a people to be indeed most thankful. The earth has brought forth abundantly; the rain and sunshine have been seasonable and there is abundance for all. It is true that many still suffer. The farmers are still having a struggle to make produce meet production cost, but there is less of unemployment in general and we hope and believe that we are on the eve of much better conditions for our farmer friends. Furthermore there is a growing recognition of the injustice of our social system and an increasing effort made for a solution.

It is a time to count our blessings over. It is true that many of us, if not most of us, can turn and find something disagreeable to remember or some unhappiness in the year that is past. The writer finds only one year in the last five in which his family has not been invaded by death. The past year has seen the death of two relatives. But we have the wonderful assurance of the life to come, of the immortality of the soul and of the possibility of eternal life or life in the presence of God.

It is a time for us to count over the blessings of our family. "Whatsoever things are lovely, think on these things." If business or politics or our life work has not seemed to secure all we have hoped, we may still find cause to rejoice in the peace and happiness of the family life.

As a nation in the midst of turmoil we have to give thanks for the peace in our own country, and for the progress made in the disarmament conference of nearly a year ago. There has been industrial strife; there is a shortage of coal. On the other hand the winter so far has been unusually mild and there is, we believe and hope, a growing recognition of the rights of labor in the management of business and we hope also a growing sense of social responsibility on the part of those who work with hands or head.

As a church we have to be particularly thankful for the peace of God that is with us, for his Spirit meeting with the Saints in many places, for the assurance we have of the onward progress of his work, and for the opportunity before the church to carry the message of peace and of truth abroad. We have as a people abundant cause for the giving of thanks unto our heavenly Father for physical bread and for the bread that is from on high. Let us not neglect on that day the assembling of ourselves together for the expression of our gratitude to God, as well as indulge in the feast of our harvest home.

The Word of Wisdom

(The following editorial, under the heading, "Hot drinks," was published in the HERALD for April 1, 1914, and is reprinted by request for the information of our readers.—EDITORS.)

We have been asked the following questions:

1. Does the term "hot drinks" appearing in the Word of Wisdom, Doctrine and Covenants 86:1, refer to tea and coffee?
2. Does the term "hot drinks" as used there apply to other drinks, such as "wheat coffee," postum, cocoa, and chocolate, not used or known at the time when the revelation was given?

There is no doubt in our mind that the term "hot drinks" was intended to include tea and coffee. True, the words tea and coffee do not appear, yet they are covered by the general term. In a similar way whisky and brandy are not specifically named, yet their use is discouraged under the clause which refers to "strong drink."

In a sermon in Nauvoo, May, 1842, Hyrum Smith, who at that time was presiding patriarch, formerly member of the First Presidency, said:

And again "Hot drinks are not for the body, or belly"; there are many who wonder what this can mean; whether it refers to tea, and coffee, or not. I say that it does refer to tea, and coffee.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 800.

Hyrum Smith was in an excellent position to know the understanding that the church had of the meaning of this revelation at the time when it was given.

So far as we know, his interpretation was never challenged by the early church or by any quorum or prominent leader of the church. It was consistent with the action of the church in Missouri in discouraging the sale of tea and coffee in the community. The following is from the minutes of a General Assembly of the church, November 7, 1837:

The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 120.

President Joseph Smith, who was "to teach those revelations which you have received," is on record as follows:

Tea and coffee are not named in the Word, but they are included in the sentence, "Hot drinks are not for the body or belly."—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 49, p. 1170.

So far as we are aware, no quorum or leading church officer in the Reorganization has ever challenged this decision by President Smith. While he is not presented as an infallible authority, for we know of none such among the human membership of the church, he is by virtue of his office, calling, experience, and personal qualifications as good an authority as we know of on such a matter of interpretation.

Other Drinks

In regard to the second question, we do not care to attempt to lay down any dogmatic decision or ruling but will simply make some suggestions that may assist others in reaching a personal decision. In a recent sermon, one of the elders deprecated the tendency to demand many restrictive negative rulings and enactments designed to relieve the membership of the "wear and tear of original thought." We will leave a little room for original thought.

Tea and coffee were the beverages in common use at the table at the time when the revelation was given, and they were almost universally served hot. Evidently the term "hot drinks" was, to a degree, at least, merely a term of convenience used in referring to them, just as the term "strong drink" was a term of convenience used to designate alcoholic beverages of various kinds.

The Lord must have had some good reason for advising against their use. Was their high temperature the objectionable feature, or did they contain injurious elements? If we assume that the high temperature was the only objectionable feature, pinning our argument to the word "hot," as here used, that would leave us free under the terms of the revelation, as so construed, to use these beverages at a lower temperature. Yet iced tea and coffee contain the same objectionable qualities that science discovers in hot tea and coffee.

Besides being subject to adulteration by wicked and conspiring men, as indicated in the opening paragraph of the Word of Wisdom, (a danger that has been reduced by recent legislation) both tea and coffee contain very objectionable elements—tannin in the case of tea, and caffeine in both tea and coffee.

Caffeine (formerly known as theine) is the alkaloid of tea, and is identical with that of coffee, guarana, mate and kola nut. It is closely allied to theobromine, the alkaloid of cocoa, and also to uric acid. In large quantities it is a poison, but in smaller quantities it acts as a stimulant. It exists in greater percentage in India and Ceylon teas than in those from Java, and is lowest in China and Japan teas. Tannin is a hardening and astringent substance, and in large quantities impairs digestion. Prolonged infusion increases the amount extracted.—Encyclopedia Britannica, Eleventh Edition, vol. 26, p. 479.

We are assured by eminent and reliable authorities that tea and coffee habitually used are injurious to digestion, heart action, and the nervous system. Hence the wisdom of the word of warning against them.

Drinks that have come into common use as table beverages since the Word of Wisdom was given must be weighed upon their merits. Those who regard the term "hot drinks" as largely a term of convenience, would not reject such drinks merely because of their temperature, but would inquire into their component elements.

It is evident that drinks made from home browned grains, such as "barley coffee" or "wheat coffee," to borrow common expressions, would not be subject to any suspicion of adulteration and would not contain deleterious drug qualities. It might be argued that the mere matter of temperature would not stand as an objection unless they were taken scalding hot so as to injure the tissues of the throat and stomach, and common sense would forbid such a practice in drinks as well as in foods. It is fair to state, however, that it is argued by some that all liquids taken hot have a tendency to relax and weaken the stomach, and that for this reason all such drinks should be avoided, and that this was the real intent of the revelation.

Patent drinks, such as Postum, might come under suspicion of adulteration unless put up by reliable concerns. The pure food and drug laws afford a welcome protection in such matters that was not had when the Word of Wisdom was given, nor for many years afterward. Manufacturers must now guarantee the genuineness of their food products. If these drinks are made of grain, with the addition of a small portion of molasses, as is guaranteed under the pure food act, in the case of Postum at least, they are in the same category with similar drinks made in the home. We have never known an analysis to disclose adulterants or injurious drug qualities in Postum and similar patent drinks, and anyone may at any time analyze them, and if such are found, prosecute the manufacturers.

Chocolate and cocoa are of a different nature. They might be regarded as questionable beverages, even when the question of temperature is waived, and are condemned by some authorities because of the fact that they contain an alkaloid much like caffeine, though in smaller quantities.

Cocoa as a beverage has a similar action to tea and coffee, inasmuch as the physiological properties of all three are due to the alkaloids and volatile oils they contain. Tea and coffee both contain the alkaloid caffeine, whilst cocoa contains theobromine. In tea and coffee, however, we only drink an infusion of the leaves or seeds, whilst in cocoa the whole material is taken in a state of very fine suspension, and as the preceding analysis indicates, the cocoa bean, even with the fat extracted, is of high nutritive value.—Encyclopedia Britannica, Eleventh Edition, vol. 6, p. 630.

While the presence of theobromine in cocoa and chocolate is to their discredit, unlike tea and coffee they are to be credited with high nutritive value as an offset to the bad qualities mentioned. They are very nutritious, and according to one authority nine tenths of their entire bulk is absorbed in the digestive tract. Tea and coffee have no food value whatever; they are stimulants.

The ideas suggested in our consideration of question number two may be taken for what they are worth. We have not set down ready-made conclusions but have merely essayed to present some thoughts that may assist others to reach common sense conclusions for themselves.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Agnostics

The testimony of one who knows and has seen is worth a regiment of those who do not know.

Some years ago the question was propounded, Is spiritual experience a matter which belongs to a few, this assurance of the existence of a God that you and my grandmother have, or is it something that is latent in all mankind? We answered clearly, It is the latter. The divine spark is in every man. The reason why it is not manifested with some is because it is dormant, has not been developed.

The illustration was then used that if it came to eating a Thanksgiving dinner you would rather that your grandmother baked the pies and roasted the turkey than you, would you not? To this he affirmed. He has spent years in college studying certain prescribed courses. Concerning that which he has studied he knew much more than did his grandmother but she knew much more about some things than he. Among other things she had studied the Word of God, had read it frequently, if not daily.

She had prayed night and morning and between times on occasion. She had sung the hymns of the church; she had desired to find God, to know something about him; and her seventy years of study had not been in vain.

Agnosticism is one of the most remarkable things of this or any other age, not alone that a man does not know, but in the attention paid to the agnostic. A man who says he is an agnostic simply indicates at once that he knows nothing about God. Why not accept him at his word? If he knows nothing about God, however well informed he may be in other subjects he is not a good teacher or a good leader in that particular.

If a professor of Greek should affirm before his class that he knew nothing about wireless telephony, in fact that he knew very little if anything about electricity, they might consider him an old fogey, they might pity him in his ignorance while respecting his knowledge of Greek, but they will not follow after his ignorance. If an electrical engineer or an instructor in physical science should state that he knew very little about biology, they would simply note the fact of his ignorance, and would not pay serious attention to anything he might say on the subject. But if he affirms himself an agnostic, though he be a geologist, an electrical engineer, a civil engineer, or a professor of mathematics, they at once open their eyes and ears, and because he knows more concerning these departments of human knowledge they are ready to reject the teaching of father and mother and minister and depart from and call in question the Christian religion and the church. This is the one instance in which ignorance is glorified, and to our astonishment this glorification is offered in our institutions of learning.

A man who knows any subject is worth more than a considerable company of men who do not know. This is true regardless of what may be his particular department of knowledge.

The story is told of a colored man who was up for stealing chickens. They told him he had better plead guilty for they had ten witnesses who had seen him steal chickens. He at once replied, "Why, I will bring you a hundred who have not seen me."

We at once recognize the absurdity of that answer. A hundred men who did not see him steal a chicken are not to be compared with one man who is an eyewitness, who saw him and knows that he did steal the chickens. The same is true in logic and common sense. One man that knows is worth a regiment of those who do not know.

Now we have in the word of God a multitude of witnesses, men who have written down their experience and assure us that they have received the knowledge of God. This is confirmed for us by the experience of men in our own age of the world. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, two of the witnesses of to-day, add, "After the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives, for we saw him."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

Men now dead, our forefathers, have borne similar testimonies through vision, through inspiration, through the visitation of angels. Joseph Smith relates as do the two who were with him, their experience at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple. He has related his experience when he went into the woods to pray as a boy, nor is he alone. He was associated with other witnesses who knew the work was of God.

To-day we possess other living witnesses, men and women who have received that assurance. We respectfully submit that the testimony of one who has weighed and considered, who has thought and studied and prayed and who knows, is worth more than the testimony of one and a half billion if they were brought into the court of justice who do not know anything about this particular subject. We are not confronted with a lone witness, but rather with a multitude of witnesses, men who have left their written testimony, men who are living and who are able to bear their oral testimony.

It would seem that it is time that agnosticism should no longer be respected. We may view it with pity; we may view the agnostic with sympathy, we may direct his steps to the path or source of knowledge and in all brotherly love seek to teach him that he also may know; but so long as he does not know God, so long as he is ignorant of the moving power of the Spirit of God, however great may be his wisdom in secular affairs, his advice in the realm of religion is worth no more than that of any other ignorant person.

Gift Subscriptions

We are very anxious to increase the subscription list of our church periodicals, and it seems to us that a more appropriate gift could hardly be made for Christmas than the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. This is a gift that acts as a reminder of our love all through the year.

To emphasize the gift, if in sending you make the request along with your own name and address and the name and address of the relative or friend for whom you are sending a subscription, we will send from the office a neat card to reach them before Christmas morning, stating that you have requested us to send them these church periodicals as a Christmas gift.

As many of our subscriptions are renewed at this time of the year these cards will be sent only upon special request for gift subscription.

We trust this will encourage a great many to include these publications in their list of gifts for Christmas and thus give not only a continuing gift for the year, but also help on the work of the church and its institutions.

Will God Hear Us To-day?

This question is before the world now as it was in the days of Jesus.

The Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures throws much light on certain passages in the Sermon on the Mount, and especially does it make clear that which is recorded in the King James Version in Matthew 7: 6-12.

In the Inspired Version this reads:

"Go ye into the world, saying unto all, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven has come nigh unto you. And the mysteries of the kingdom ye shall keep within yourselves; for it is not meet to give that which is holy unto the dogs; neither cast ye your pearls unto swine, lest they trample them under their feet. For the world cannot receive that which ye yourselves, are not able to bear; wherefore ye shall not give your pearls unto them, lest they turn again and rend you. Say unto them, ask of God; ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and unto him that knocketh, it shall be opened. And then said his disciples unto him, they will say unto us, We ourselves are righteous, and need not that any man should teach us. God, we know, heard Moses and some of the prophets; but us he will not hear. And they will say, We have the law for our salvation, and that is sufficient for us. Then Jesus answered, and said unto his disciples, thus shall ye say unto them, What man among you, having a son, and he shall be standing out, and shall say, Father, open thy house that I may come in and sup with thee, will not say, Come in, my son; for mine is thine, and thine is mine? Or what man is there among you, who, if his son ask bread, will give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him?—Matthew 7: 9-20.

We note here first that the saying is to the world, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The succeeding verses do not imply any secret mysteries which cannot be attained by an effort to understand God. They do not involve secret chambers, passwords, or grips, but the mysteries of the kingdom are only those that require the eye of faith in God, the pure heart, to receive. Hence the command is to ask of God.

To this we note the disciples replied, "They will say unto us, We are righteous and need not that any man should teach us. God, we know, heard Moses and some of the prophets but us he will not hear." They will say, "We have the law for our salvation and that is sufficient for us."

This describes the condition of the world as Jesus found it when he came; it also, with very slight changes, describes the condition in the present age of the world. Men are still saying, "We know that God heard Moses and the prophets and that he heard the disciples in the days of Jesus, but he does not give revelations to-day. We have the New Testament, the Bible, for our salvation, and that is sufficient for us." They will even refer to the 18th verse of the 22d chapter of Revelation, though any careful student knows that this says only that men shall not add, and does not prohibit God from manifesting his love to his children. Similar passages are found in Deuteronomy 4:2, and elsewhere. If this prohibited the reception of revelations from God now, it would have prohibited the receiving of the prophets by ancient Israel, let alone the New Testament.

In the second place the book of Revelation was not certainly included in the canon of the new Scriptures probably until the fourth century. It was accepted by part of the church, but not by all. When it was inserted it was included in different places in the canon. Its placing as the closing book of the Bible was not finally determined until the close of the fourth century A. D.

Therefore these words in the end of the book of Revelation could only refer to that book and could not refer to the book of books, the Bible, as a whole.

But in the third place, those who are acquainted with biblical criticism and biblical history, as can be seen in the article, the Bible, in the Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, know that the early Christian church did not at that time think the canon was necessarily closed. The church did not understand when John wrote this book, that it was the last to be received by them.

The old Jewish church continued to receive the word of the prophets and to include these words in their canon of scriptures. They did not come quickly to the conclusion that there was nothing else, but when after Malachi some hundreds of years elapsed with no further revelations, then this saying arose among them that "God had heard the prophets and Moses in ages past, but us he will not hear." The old Jewish church determined their canon by the acceptance and vote of the people. It was presented to them for their consideration both by Moses and again by the later kings.

So with the early Christian church, they continued to look for revelations. But when they recognized that nothing written by the early Christian fathers was to be compared with that which had been received and presented in the first century by those who lived in the age of the apostles, then in time they too came to say, "God heard Moses and the prophets, but us he does not hear. We have the writings of the apostles given unto us and that is sufficient for us." But this sufficiency was an after-thought, when they came to realize that they were no longer receiving the revelations of God. For with all the efforts of their learned men, not one was writing anything with sufficient inspirational value to compare with that which appeared in the New Testament canon.

The test of the Old Testament was its inspirational value; the test of the New Testament was the same. Jesus, then, answered for the Jews, for the later Christian church, and for the church to-day, and answered clearly and logically as follows:

Then Jesus answered and said unto his disciples, thus shall ye say unto them. What man among you, having a son, and he shall be standing out, and shall say, Father, open thy house that I may come in and sup with thee, will not say, Come in, my son; for mine is thine, and thine is mine? Or what man is there among you, who, if his son ask bread, will give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him?—Matthew 7: 16-20, I. T.

There is the logic and reason that applies to the Christian church to-day as much as it applied to the Jews in the days of the Master. S. A. B.

Courses of Study for Young People

In this issue of the HERALD appears a joint announcement recommending the advanced courses of study which have been previously outlined in the Religio Quarterlies during the past two years. These courses of study are prepared for young people and adults. They furnish outlines to assist in the study of certain textbooks or subjects of general interest. There is no reason whatever why these quarterlies should be used only when first published. In fact, it was impossible to use most of them fully at the time of publication, because they contain two courses of study while any one class could take up only one course at the time.

The price is ten cents a copy. Many of them, it will be noted, furnish two outlines, each outline sufficient for a three months' course of study. Advanced classes either meeting during the ordinary Sunday school hour or some other hour on Sunday or some evening hour or afternoon during the week, whether composed of young people or adults, whether composed of men or of women, or of both, can well consider them for their course of study.

Since the Religio has been merged into the church the purchase of these quarterlies does not so much help the young people as it helps the church itself so far as the finances are concerned, while the benefit to those who purchase is measured entirely by the time and thought given to the study.

Elder A. V. Closson

On the afternoon of Thursday, November 23, Elder A. V. Closson fell from the roof of a house near Independence where he was doing some work and was found upon the ground with his neck broken. The cause of his falling is not known. He was dead, however, when found.

At the funeral service held at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, the members of the high priests' quorum in Independence and vicinity met in the basement and then formed in front in two lines for the funeral procession to pass through. They attended the services in a body, as Brother Closson has been for more than twenty years a member of that quorum.

Brother Closson entered the missionary work of the church as early as 1895 and has been continuously in service until quite recently. For the first ten years at least his work was exclusively in Wisconsin, first as an elder, then April 14, 1897, he was ordained a seventy and on the 19th of April, 1900, a high priest. In 1896 he was secretary of the Northern Wisconsin District and also acted as president of the Frankfort Branch. In the last fifteen or sixteen years of his missionary work he traveled rather widely, being appointed in local capacity to the Mobile District, then Kentucky and Tennessee, Spring River District, the Spokane District with Spokane objective, the Portland, Oregon, District, the Pittsburgh District, Utah, the Virginias, and Southern Missouri.

New Publications

As the Christmas season approaches our attention naturally is turned to the Herald Publishing House catalogue to see how far our Christmas gifts may be supplied from our own church institution.

But to the catalogue of December, 1921, there are to be added a number of new books.

Last December Square Blocks, a book of sermons by President E. A. Smith, was issued just before Christmas. Also the Vineyard Story by Estella Wight and The Story of the Plains by Eva Bailey Short. These three, while published shortly before Christmas are announced in the catalogue.

During the past year (though not in the catalogue) we note the following books have been issued: Timbers for the Temple, by Elbert A. Smith, is just off the press at $1.25 per copy. This story was printed in Autumn Leaves and was then very much enjoyed. Many of those who read it there have desired to have it in book form, and this desire is now fulfilled, while those who have not read it in the original publication, now have an opportunity to secure it.

Another book recently published is A Reasonable Service, by Grace Baughman Keairnes, also quoted at $1.25. This story was recently completed in Autumn Leaves. All that is said above might be repeated here, as many have desired also to have this story in book form. Either of these books or both of them make an excellent Christmas gift.

In the Birth Offering Series we note two volumes published during the year, Sleepy Hour Stories, and Homespun Rhymes. Each of these volumes is sold at the price of $1. As the title indicates these are distinctly books for children and for the parents of children.

These new volumes are of course in addition to all of the regular publications, the books announced in the last catalogue of the Herald Publishing House. If your library of church books is as yet incomplete here is your opportunity to add a book or two. If the library of your loved ones has not yet been completed with the regular church books here again is your opportunity to honor the Christmas season.

A Challenge of Righteousness

The Psalmist tells us: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." (Psalms 37: 25.) We have seen the righteous seeming to have a hard time. They sometimes speak of their numerous trials. But weigh it well, have you ever seen their children beg bread? The righteous may not be the richest in worldly goods, but he who does his duty has the protection and blessing of God.

We note in Money, the Acid Test, by David McConaughy, the following which we extend to our readers for consideration and answer:

A prominent Pennsylvania manufacturer tells me that in his youth he heard a Friend at a meeting house near Philadelphia throw down a challenge which he declared he had made publicly hundreds of times without contradiction. My friend, likewise a Friend, took it up and has continued to repeat it for a quarter of a century and more with the very same experience. It is this: that no one has ever failed to prosper in material things who has faithfully put to the test this word of God: "Honor Jehovah with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy vats shall overflow with new wine." (Proverbs 3: 9, 10.)

Can you cite any exception to the fulfilling of that promise? Are you yourself putting it to the test and, if so, with what result? (Page 187.)

The Resurrection of the Dead Is Assured

Funeral sermon of Annie I. Fairhurst, preached in Independence, Missouri, February 5, 1922, by Ralph W. Farrell.

And after two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head. And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made? For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her. And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me. For ye have the poor with you always, and whosoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always. She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.—Mark 14: 1-9.

Anointing of Precious Ointment

The scriptural picture before us is gripping in its heart interest, and one that we can well afford to gaze upon in connection with the funeral service we have entered at this hour. On the one hand is Jesus, forsaken by his friends and spat on by his enemies. He is caught in the clutches of a maddened mob; abandoned by his relatives, save that one who never ceases to cling to the most forsaken child of earth, his mother. It is just before the hour of his betrayal by Judas Iscariot; the chief priests and scribes are plotting how they can take him by craft and put him to death. The Lord is fully conscious of these things, as he sits at meat in the home of a despised leper.

On the other hand is a poor, weak woman, with little influence and less means. She enters this home of the unclean and approaches the side of her Lord. She does not understand the philosophies and theologies that surround her; she can plan no release, speak no word of justification; but in her soul she knows that something is terribly wrong, and though the tragedy is too deep for words, yet she can love—she can give of her heart's best affection. She reads sorrow and loneliness in his benign face; she feels that he is hated by those who are jealous of him; that the finger of scorn and ridicule is pointed at him by those too small in mind to understand him. Carefully she takes from the fold of her dress an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious—ointment which had probably been saved for her own burial—and she breaks the box and pours its contents upon the head of her Lord and Savior. Oh, it was wonderful! She saw no future in it—it seemed so little to her. But Jesus saw an eternity of meaning in the deed—for she had done what she could!

And the Lord said: "Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel is preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her."

"She Hath Done What She Could"

We have, lying in state before us to-day, comparatively another unknown woman, but one to whom can be applied, without any qualification, the words of her Lord, "She hath done what she could."

Just as the orb of day pushed its way above the eastern horizon, on Saturday morning, February 4, the spirit of Sister Annie Fairhurst left its body and returned to God who gave it. And we meet to pay our last respects, in a public way, to her memory. And it is well that we do this, in order that we may draw from death valuable lessons for life. But not to express undue sorrow; rather to rejoice because a soul has winged its flight back to the presence of God.

I have not concerned myself with the routine items of birth and life and minor experiences of this sister. It suffices us to say here that a person of her character of holiness has been a Christian all the days of her life. But it is due her to state that at some period of her earthly existence she heard the teachings of the restored gospel, and believing them to be in harmony with the pattern left on record in the New Testament, she joyously embraced those commandments and became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. And to the covenant made at the waters of baptism she remained faithful unto death, and at his appearing will receive a crown of life, promised to the children of Christ, and he included her when he said, "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 2.)

These words of Jesus open to our understanding three things—a going, a coming, and a time between. Of these three periods we shall speak briefly at this time.

Bible Views on Death

We must all, sooner or later, face the mystery of death. All that are born must die, passing through nature up to God. Our sister has penetrated the veil—she has passed over the river of death to where the ocean of life is still. She knows now. But she did not doubt before; she trusted God and he walked with her through the valley and shadow. Hers was the death of the righteous. She did not fear. I know this, for I talked with her in the last hours. But where did she go? Millions have asked the question, when all the time the answer has been recorded in the Book of books. Let us consult the record.

Many years ago, standing out against the darkness of the heathen world, a believer in God, with pen in hand, wrote the words which have challenged the materialist: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 7. And a little before he wrote, "Who knoweth the spirit that goeth upward?" differing from the spirit of the beast which goeth "downward to the earth." (Chapter 3, verse 21.)

So Jesus said to the repentant thief on Calvary: "Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Surely the Lord of glory knew, and so did Paul, who had a "desire to depart and be with Christ." (Luke 23: 44; Philippians 1: 23.)

And from the book which our sister loved to read, I take these comforting words given by Alma: "Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known to me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care and sorrow."—Alma 19: 42, 43, 44.

And John the Beloved also writes of the time between: "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." And with this statement agree the words of Moroni, "I go to rest in the paradise of God." (Revelation 14: 13; Moroni 10: 31.)

Thus is set before us the testimony of the scriptures. And who among us will deny that which gives comfort to the longing soul of man? Who can believe that death ends all? But of what does this rest consist? Is it a state of unconsciousness; a sleep from which there will be no awakening? or a sleep that will be interrupted only by the resurrection of the body? In the light of the Word of God, we must believe that the intermediate state is one of consciousness. Paul, with mind illuminated by the power of the Spirit of God, and with a testimony born of the Spirit, settles forever this question of paradise and its state. Listen while he speaks to us: "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; . . . God knoweth;) such a one . . . caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter."—2 Corinthians 12: 2-4.

He not only tells us that in paradise there may be heard things of which the tongue cannot speak; but also that man—the inner man—may exist out of the body and be caught up to paradise. And of these joys ineffable, Jesus speaks when he tells us that the poor suffering beggar died and was "carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom," where he was "comforted." (Luke 16: 22, 25.) So the Prophet Isaiah speaks of the righteous being "taken away from the evil to come," to that place "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." (Isaiah 57: 1; Job 3: 17.)

Being "With Christ" in Death

This place of comfort, peace, joy, could hardly be called simply a sleeping place. If Paul were to sleep between death and his resurrection, it would matter little to him whether he was "with Christ" or not. Ah, no; this abode of our sister's soul is one of conscious happiness and probably of service, although of this latter phase of spirit existence we cannot authoritatively speak. Those fingers, once so tired from constantly sewing for an honorable living and to provide sufficient means to care for her in her declining years, are not now playing on a golden harp; yet her individuality has been retained, and in that place of glory is the personal spirit of Annie Fairhurst, just as distinct from all other spirits as was the spirit of Abraham who lived in paradise and received Lazarus.

This belief in continuity of life is so strong, so deathless, that the bravado of infidelity trembles and disappears at the grave. Robert Ingersoll, gazing into the ashes of his brother's coffin, cried through a mist of tears that were breaking his heart: "In the night of death Hope sees a star, and listening Love can hear the rustle of a wing."

Oh, thank God for this hope of immortality! It parts the clouds of gloom, puts a smile on the face of death, softens the misery of parting from loved ones, and sits like an eternal rainbow of promise in the sky of memory. And this is made possible through the atonement of the Lamb of God. Twenty hundred years ago there came out of the little town of Bethlehem a Being—we dare not call him a mere man—who took up the challenge of death and answered it. His name was Jesus Christ. He solved the world's greatest problem. With the golden key of authority he unlocked the grave and came back from that undiscovered country. He touched the harp of life and created deathless music; and with the voice of God earthquaked the centuries and left his shining footsteps in space when he said:

"I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me shall never die."

Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marble play!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own!

—Whittier's "Snowbound."

But this "unclothed" condition, this separation of spirit and element is not to last forever. Hundreds of years before the victory of Christ over death and the grave, the Psalmist had a glimpse of the reality of the resurrection, and he said: "My flesh shall rest in hope." (Psalms 16: 9.) And Job, lip-deep in the desert sand, called to enact the tragedy of the human race; Job, the deserted, the stricken one, sees in the dark night of his misery that Star of Hope. And he longs that the testimony which he is about to give might be written in a book. (And it is wonderful that that testimony has been preserved in writing for hundreds and hundreds of years.) "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19: 25, 26.

Centuries later, Paul catches the same vision, and cries out: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thessalonians 4: 16.

And John the Beloved informs us: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20: 6.

Resurrection the Hope of the Saints

The resurrection of the dead, or from the dead, was the hope of the saints in all ages of the world. Throughout the entire Bible we catch glimpses of this doctrine. Abraham accounted that God was able to raise Isaac from the dead. (Hebrews 11: 19.) And it was this hope that inspired him to make the sacrifice. Joseph expressed great concern that his body be preserved. And one translation of the Bible tells us that he was embalmed, the Israelites believing as did the Egyptians of that day that the spirit would return to the body in the resurrection. Of the testimony of Job we have spoken. Ezekiel saw more than a figure in his recital of the resurrection of Israel: "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel."—Ezekiel 37: 12. Isaiah, not one whit behind in his fervency of belief in the resurrection of the dead, speaks thus: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."—Isaiah 26: 19. Daniel points to the time: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake . . ." (Daniel 12: 2.) But why need we multiply these teachings of the prophets, for they are summed up in the example of the faithful women who, says the inspired writer, "received their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." (Hebrews 11: 35.)

It was that she might obtain this "better resurrection," this "first resurrection," that our sister lived, faithful unto death, and died firm in the conviction that she should come forth at the sound of the last trump to meet her Redeemer and reign with him a thousand years.

Where is she to reign with him? Let the Scriptures answer. Daniel is speaking: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Job: "I know that my Redeemer liveth and shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." The Psalmist: "For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord shall inherit the earth." John: "And they sang a new song. . . . we shall reign on the earth." Jesus: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." (Daniel 7: 27; Job 19: 25; Psalms 37: 9-11; Revelation 5: 9, 10; Matthew 5: 5.)

Can anything be more conclusive than this? It was plain to her. In the resurrection of the just she will come forth, with a glorified body, made immortal by the touch of God's power, and reign with him and other redeemed souls on the earth made beautiful by Christ's presence.

So it all comes back to us again to-day—that scene in the house of Simon the leper; and the fragrance of the precious ointment comes to us over the silent centuries as the scent of new-mown hay over dying fields. And we see, in the stead of that unnamed woman of Bethany, our sister who has just passed from us; she has done what she could and the very Lord of heaven could do no more. And in return for her devotion to him he has anointed her by the spirit of assurance for her burial. Anointed her not because she was a famous person known world-wide with a great monument ready to be placed over her grave, with millions of dollars to be distributed to her relatives. If such had been the case, these pews would not hold the people who would clamor for admittance. But anointed her because she was far greater than all this—greater because she was a true Saint. It is worth that counts, not popularity.

Religion Not a Theory but a Life

Religion is not a theory, not even a practice only, but a life, and for a Christian, a life of love and loyalty to Jesus Christ. And in one sense, man is not so much what he thinks nor what he says, and not always what he does, but what he loves. And she loved her Lord and showed that love by keeping his commandments.

To those who mourn the loss of this relative and friend, we give the message of the great Maine poet, whose heart, too, was torn by suffering:

Be still, sad heart; and cease repining;
Behind the clouds is the sun still shining;
Thy fate is the common fate of all,
Into each life some rain must fall;
Some days must be dark and dreary.

And for us all we have a message from England's great poet:

Sunset, and evening star, and one clear call for me.
And may there be no moaning of the bar, when I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep, too deep for sound or foam,
And that which draws from out the boundless deep, turns again home.

Twilight, and evening bell; and after that the dark.
Oh, may there be no sadness of farewell when I embark;

For though from out this bourne of time and space the flood may bear me far—
I hope to see my Pilot, face to face, when I have crossed the bar!

Let them ask whether psychology had invalidated the teaching of the New Testament. Let them try to imagine the apostles as deceived men. To do that they must eliminate the supernatural from the overwhelming psychical experience of the day of Pentecost, and put that experience down as an instance of crowd psychology. After Christ's death the apostles met together; they made themselves believe that the power from on high had come. After that they went forth and started a movement which proved itself a regenerating force in the world, and laid down their lives for the sake of it. How they were going to explain on naturalistic grounds the experience which turned Paul the Persecutor into Paul the Apostle he did not know. Psychology was a help to the understanding of natural processes, but with the ultimate cause psychology as such had nothing to do.—Doctor Lait, in London Daily Telegram, October 11, 1922.

"I Told You"

By E. O. Clark

Four short stories for the benefit of members and near members of the kingdom.

No. 1—About Mr. Worldly

Mr. Worldly was a man highly esteemed and respected by his friends and neighbors. He was honest, industrious, liberal in his benevolences, and of sympathetic, kindly disposition. He heard and believed in the gospel as preached in its fullness and purity, but did not obey. His faith was of the passive kind.

He loved to be popular, and this love of the approbation of his fellows was stronger than, and prevailed over, his desire for the approbation of God.

His pride in this respect kept him out of the church. If he obeyed the mandates of his reason and judgment and united with the church, his friends would desert him, acquaintances would shun him, coolness would pervade the atmosphere where cordiality had hitherto prevailed, excepting when among the little handful of people, ostracized and despised, who constituted the children of light in that community; and this seemed too hard for him to bear, so he decided to reject the invitations of God's people and the gentle, loving promptings of the Spirit, to obey.

By and by Mr. Worldly died. He was ushered into the presence of God to answer or give an accounting of his deeds and misdeeds.

The Book of Life was opened, but Mr. Worldly's name was not there. Mr. Worldly was seized with indescribable fear, and in desperation he began to plead; but the Great Judge said:

"I told you, 'Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter nor see the kingdom of God,' and you deliberately refused. I also told you that 'whoso would not forsake everything which might stand in the way of his obedience to my law, could not be my disciple.' This also you spurned; and now, after indulging your pride and vanity, and disregarding my will while you were on earth, you plead to be rewarded for deeds you never performed, and to escape the consequences of misdeeds which I warned you would surely follow. I told you my laws were fixed and eternal and could not be changed; and now you virtually ask me to repudiate my own word. 'Depart from me, ye never knew me.'"

No. 2—About Mr. Demas

Mr. Demas was a man who had heard and obeyed the initiatory principles of the gospel, but who loved worldly pleasures. At first he attended church services quite regularly and tried for a while to enjoy the pleasures of the world and the Spirit of the Lord which was in the Saints' meetings, too, but soon found that this was impossible; for as he indulged in these worldly pastimes and amusements his interest in spiritual things waned, until services at the church seemed very dull and uninteresting, and so his attendance became more and more intermittent and infrequent until it ceased altogether. He found pleasure only at the lodge, the club, the movie, the theater, and finally these were not enough, and he drifted to the bowling alley, the dance, and the pool room. Then came the use of tobacco, the sipping of liquor, and the card room.

The teacher and deacon visited him and tried in their humble persuasive way, to get him to see the folly of his actions. The elder and priest also called on him, and in a loving, brotherly way, tried to convince him of his errors, and persuade him to forsake them.

At first he accepted their efforts to reclaim him, in a kindly way, and came to church a few times, but having been up late at night almost every night during the week, especially Saturday night, he was very tired and sleepy when in the service on Sunday, and therefore the service was not only dull to him, but actually boresome. He felt that it would be better for him to be at home on the sofa recuperating from the "good times" he had enjoyed so much during the week; and then, he wanted to attend the ball game in the afternoon. So finally Mr. Demas informed the church officers that they need not call on him any more, and to take his name from the church record.

One day Mr. Demas fell ill. He grew rapidly worse, and in a few days was dead. His spirit stood in the presence of God, naked and destitute of that which would commend him to divine favor and clemency. The recording angel immediately read his life's record, and as he did so his face bore a look of sadness; and a shadow seemed to spread over the face of even the Great Judge. Mr. Demas stood quaking before him with unspeakable terror.

In dispassionate but sorrowing tones the Great Judge addressed him thus:

"I told you in my Scriptures and through the mouths of my servants whom I led and prompted by my Spirit to teach you, 'that the friendship of the world was enmity with God; whosoever therefore would be a friend of the world was the enemy of God.'

"I also told you that, 'to be carnally minded was death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.' You were fully informed as to this fact both by precept and experience; yet in spite of all this, you deliberately rebelled against the spiritual and chose the worldly and carnal. In fact, your acts defied both the law and the lawgiver. In doing so, you have left me but one course to pursue, and that is to pronounce upon you the dreadful sentence of death."

Heavenly music which had been flowing in indescribably sweet and soft cadences throughout the royal court, but in which could easily be detected a strain of sadness and pathos, suddenly ceased. A solemn hush, indeed an awful silence, fell upon all, and the hosts of heaven stood with bowed heads while Mr. Demas was escorted to the place he had prepared himself to occupy.

No. 3—About Mr. Mammon

Mr. Mammon was a man who also heard and accepted the true gospel, but his obedience to its principles was not complete and full as it should have been. He disregarded the fact that there were forfeiture clauses and stipulations in the gospel covenant.

He attended services quite regularly, was active to some extent in church work, bore frequent testimony in prayer meetings in which he usually exhorted the Saints to faithfulness and diligence. He was well to do, belonged to a popular fraternal order, and was very prompt in meeting all the dues and demands of the same. But Mr. Mammon was selfish; that was his greatest weakness; he would not part with his money unless there was some immediate and visible benefit to himself; therefore he had paid no tithing; his name was not on the bishop's ledger; and he had contributed but very little towards the local needs and expenses of the church, and that gingerly. He left the financial burdens of the church for others to carry.

One day while driving home in his auto, his car was struck by a fast train on a railroad crossing, and he was instantly killed. He stood in the presence of his Maker. The recording angel read his life's history. Mr. Mammon was smitten with a consuming fear. He began to plead, but the Great Judge said:

"What excuse have you to offer for neglecting to honor the temporal laws of my gospel? You were well acquainted with them, and you knew that I had told you, 'If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.' I must needs be true to my word, therefore you must go to the place appointed and there await the second resurrection."

Selfishness had wrought this terrible disappointment to Mr. Mammon.

No. 4—About Mr. Faithful

Mr. Faithful was one of God's noblemen; he heard the gospel, believed it, and unhesitatingly obeyed it. He loved the good will of his friends and neighbors, but his first and greatest concern was for the good will of God. After having found the kingdom of God, the uppermost thought in his mind was to build up the kingdom of God and to establish its righteousness.

He kept himself unspotted from the world, made annual inventories of his belongings and filed them with the bishop, and kept his tithing paid up, although he was by no means wealthy. He was generous in his contributions to local church work and needs, and was always solicitous of the welfare and needs of missionaries who came into the community. He was cheerful and congenial in all that he did; was thoughtful and considerate of others' welfare and feelings; belonged to no fraternal societies or clubs, for, said he, God has told us, that we must "love the Lord our God with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our strength, and with all our mind"; and also, "ye cannot serve two masters"; and again, "either make the tree good and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit." You see, said Mr. Faithful, there is no neutral ground upon which to stand. Jesus says: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." We should either be cold or hot, for God hates a lukewarm person, and says that he "will spew them out of his mouth." Therefore I cannot afford to divide my heart, divide my soul, divide my strength, or divide my mind between God who wants all, and the world or worldly institutions. Myself and all that I have are freely and unreservedly consecrated to his service.

Mr. Faithful fell ill. Serious symptoms soon developed, and his family became alarmed. The elders were sent for and responded promptly and administered with true and deep brotherly solicitude, but Mr. Faithful received only temporary benefit. He had been sick before and had been wondrously healed and blessed; but this time the conviction seemed to settle itself upon all that Mr. Faithful's time to depart this life had come. Friends, neighbors, and brethren were astonishingly plentiful and constantly at hand to render any assistance possible, and to encourage and strengthen the family for the soon-coming ordeal of separation.

Mr. Faithful died. He was ushered into the presence of the Great Judge. The face of the recording angel beamed with joy as he laid Mr. Faithful's life record before the Great Tribunal. As he did so, the face of the Great Judge seemed more glorious than usual. Other angels gathered near with radiant

Helpful Counsel to New Members

A pleasingly arranged eight-page booklet has come to our desk from Orval L. Thompson, then in Maine, now of Graceland College. It is entitled "Helpful suggestions for the Saint of God." The cover page bears a picture of Elder Thompson. The body of the booklet is written for new converts to the faith and reads as follows:

Dear Saint: As the one who has acted as the instrument in the hands of God of inducting you into his fold and kingdom, I naturally feel a deep personal interest in you and your success as a Saint of God. And I herewith submit some suggestions which will serve to aid you in your endeavors to be a true child of the heavenly Father. Remember it is the daily practice of Christian duty that makes a strong Christian.

Prayer

Without this you can never hope to succeed as a child of God—a true Saint. It is the key that unlocks the heavenly storehouse where you draw the heavenly influence, that will fill your heart with sunshine, and keep you near the Master. Pray often. Try to pray intelligently and from the heart. Make prayer one of your habits in the general routine of each day. (Luke 11: 1; Luke 18: 1; 1 Corinthians 14: 15; 1 Thessalonians 5: 17; James 5: 16.)

Habits

Remember in taking the sacred step you have, you should be changed: 2 Corinthians 5: 17; Ephesians 4: 22-32; Colossians 3: 2-10; Colossians 3: 25; Ephe-countenances, eager to welcome the new and worthy fellow servant; and the Great Judge said, as his arms were outstretched toward Mr. Faithful:

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

As these gracious words came from the Lord's lips, Mr. Faithful was filled and thrilled with unspeakable joy; but he could not quite understand why he should be given credit for so many good deeds, and so he asked the Lord—"When did I do all this?" and the Lord said:

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

sians 6: 10-18. Your heart being changed, you will show it by your conduct in both word and action. Swearing is an obnoxious habit. (See Matthew 5: 34-37.) Lying. (See Ephesians 4: 25; Revelation 21: 8.) Strong drink. (See Leviticus 10: 9; Proverbs 20: 1; Judges 13: 4; Isaiah 5: 11-22; Daniel 1: 8; Luke 1: 15; 1 Samuel 1: 15.) Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3 says, "Be not addicted to strong drink in any form." Section 119: 3 says, "Avoid the use of tobacco"; again, section 86: 1 says: "Tobacco is not for the body."

Dancing. See General Conference Resolutions, Number 317: "Resolved, that the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice as being one likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel." Number 377 has this precept as the stand of your church on both card playing and dancing: "Resolved, that we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians and should be avoided by all Saints." All habits should now be laid aside that are questionable in character. Remember you will be watched by both God and men. The influence you send out from your life will determine the amount of good you do for others and yourself.

Study

Read often from the Scriptures. Study the books of the church. You will be called upon from time to time to give an answer for the hope within you, and the reason why you are a member of your church. (See 1 Peter 3: 15; John 5: 39; 2 Timothy 2: 15; Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36; 11: 10.) Prayer and study and faith drive away discouragements.

Church

Meet as often with the brothers and sisters in your church as possible. Association is a power also that assists in our Christian experience. You can receive much strength from your brothers and sisters of the church. (See Hebrews 10: 25.) Also go to church not only for what you can get, but go also for what you may add to the service, by presence, prayer, and kindly greeting. If you are not in close touch with your own church, attend another. Do not be narrower than the Lord wants you to be. Manifest a Christian spirit toward all.

Testimony

You will meet at times in social services where prayers and testimonies are given. Go into the spirit of the service and with determination to add your testimony, however feeble, to that of others. Never fear to speak for your Savior wherever you may be. If you bear testimony often you will find yourself growing more efficient in speech; it will teach you to stand up before an audience and say what you want to say. It may be hard at first, but keep at it. You will succeed; you will grow strong spiritually and your effort will strengthen others as well as yourself. Remember it isn't always the lengthy testimony that is the best. (See Matthew 10: 32; Luke 12: 8.)

Helping Others

Remember selfishness shows that we have not the Spirit of Christ in us. The ambition of every true child of God is to help some one else. (See Ephesians 4: 32; Matthew 5: 16.) Help others as you would like God to help you. The best way that you can show your love for God is by being kind to his children. Be ready to lend a helping hand to any who may require it. Be cheerful. Happiness is one good sign of Christ within. Make smiles for others but be careful that you make them in purity. (See 1 Peter 3: 10-12.) Try to think kindly of others. (See Philippians 4: 8.) Don't be distant with your brothers and sisters in the church. Treat them as you would one of your own household. They are your brothers and sisters. (See Galatians 6: 10.)

Tithes and Offerings

The spread of the gospel of salvation in the world is dependent upon the consecration of the children of God. Help, therefore, all you can. By this you may be the means of saving many souls. Tithing and offerings, like all other things of God, are voluntary with you, so far as man is concerned, but God asks us to help cheerfully. Our tithes and offerings go to keep the missionary in the field, help the poor and needy, and thus do the work of God. (See 2 Corinthians 9: 7; Malachi 3: 8-10; Hebrews 7: 1, 2; Genesis 28: 20-22; Romans 15: 26; 1 Corinthians 9: 6-15.) The Lord does not require you to distress yourself, but just do what you can, and what he asks of you.

Companions

Keep good company. Do not seek companionship of those who are unworthy. Yet do not be unkind to them. As close friends, choose those who are upright and pure.

Church Papers

Try to take at least one of the church papers. Keep in touch with what is going on in the church. It will keep you up to date in the gospel, and you will be strengthened by the sermons, testimonies, and articles that will come to you from all parts of the world. You can order the following papers from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri: Zion's Ensign (weekly), price $1.00. SAINTS' HERALD (weekly), price $2.25. Autumn Leaves (a

The Three Measures of Meal

By H. J. Davison

Why hunt for constructions and interpretations that do not warrant the effort?

"Another parable spake he unto them; The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."—Matthew 13: 33.

Following is a partial list of the interpretations that have been placed upon the phrase, "three measures of meal."

1. "Jews, Greeks, and all others who may hear the gospel."
2. "Body, soul, and spirit of man."
3. "The sacred number used in spiritual things being three."
4. "Three dominant objectionable features of Catholicism."
5. "The earth before the flood and in the millennium."
6. "The people of this world, prison house, and millennium."
7. "Three dispensations—Adam to Moses' death, Christ until the apostasy, and from 1830 on."
8. "Eastern Continent, Western Continent, and North Country."
9. "Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants."
10. "Bible, Book of Mormon, and the second of the Lost Tribes."

To be logical, if it be shown that any one of these monthly magazine for the youth of the church), price $1.75. At least one of these papers should be coming to your home regularly. Good books for reading to place in your library can be purchased also from the Herald Publishing House. Write to them for a catalogue.

It is my prayer that these suggestions may be the means of keeping you faithful to Christ. Develop your talents that you might be more able to help, and help with a willing hand. If you heed these things, you will be happy as a Saint of God. Remember I shall ever pray for you. My interest shall be in your success. I shall be glad to help you any time that I can, wherever I may be, if you just ask me. May the love of Christ dwell in you richly.

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."—Ecclesiastes 11: 13.

interpretations is divine and true, then one must conclude that all the rest are purely human and untrue.

Query: Where is the authority for determining which of the above interpretations is correct, or indeed whether or not any of them are? If no authority is forthcoming, then we are to understand all these and others, with still others that yet may be given, are the honest efforts of different men striving to "declare the parable." That is to say, to make plain that which is thought to be obscure.

There is one thing that should not be lost sight of: The parable does not teach that the kingdom is like these measures of meal, but that the kingdom is "like unto leaven." Leaven has the quality of acting upon the particles (of the substance to be leavened) with which it comes in contact, permeating and infusing it with its own power; arousing it to life and activity. This thought seems obvious in the mind of our Savior when he chose the article leaven to represent the permeating features and powers of the kingdom of heaven. It is furthermore true that it is upon or in the mind of mankind that this spiritual leaven—the doctrine of the kingdom—is to do its work, and like the natural leaven, work on and on and on until finally the "whole lump" is leavened, or permeated with spiritual power, and aroused to spiritual power, and aroused to spiritual activity.

With this thought in mind, it seems quite difficult to understand how books of any kind could be consistently used to represent the three measures of meal of the parable. For some one might flippantly, yet quite pertinently, ask how long it will take to permeate either or all of those books with spiritual power and arouse them to the life of the kingdom. All must agree that it is mankind that is to be leavened: hence it is mankind that should represent the meal of the parable.

The question next following naturally would be, What were the three divisions of mankind in the mind of our Savior when he said, "Three measures of meal"? For two reasons the writer refrains from an attempt to answer that question.

The first reason is that he has no means of knowing. Of course one could guess and speculate and possibly come as near to, or as far away from, the truth as many others have, and that is all; nothing authoritative, hence of no special value.

The second reason is, The writer is very doubtful as to the Lord having in view any particular divisions of mankind or of anything else, since he left no clue or hint to base an interpretation upon. He said, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

Let the reader remember that the term measure was used in those days the same as we use the terms quarts, gallons, and pecks to-day, without reference to the vessel but simply the amount. For instance, if we read to-day that a woman put a pound of salt in three gallons of water, who would think of anything but the amount of water—three gallons and a pound of salt? So when Jesus said three measures of meal, according to their usage, it would simply mean the amount of three measures full, with no reference to three separate vessels.

We may not know that a measure in the time of Abraham was the same in amount as in the time of our Savior, some eighteen hundred years later, but we do know according to the Bible that the use of the term was the same. (Luke 16: 7.) "And he said an hundred measures of wheat" the same as we might say a hundred bushels of wheat (although the margin reads much more); not a hundred separate bushel measures, however. Compare with Genesis 18: 6: "Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal." We cannot understand that she was to make ready three separate measures, one for each of them, for Abraham says, "Knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth." We should understand that just the same as we do the phrase that we might use to-day, "Make ready three pints of flour," etc. An examination of other texts will bring the same conclusion. For instance, we do not understand that Boaz put six separate measures full of barley in Ruth's apron, measures and all. (Ruth 3: 15.) Then why make an exception of that one parable when there is nothing to indicate that an exception should be made?

The margin reads, "The word in the Greek is a measure containing about a peck and a half, wanting a little more than a pint." A learned writer says that was an unusually large amount according to the customs of that time. And yet the Lord placed that unusually large amount in his parable, doubtless to convey the thought that even though it was large, it finally became leavened.

The obvious lesson is that though the great "batch" of humanity or aggregation of human mind is very large indeed, nevertheless it will eventually be permeated with the spirit, doctrines, and principles of the kingdom of heaven.

After all, is that not about the extent of what the Lord had in his mind to teach with that parable?

Then why should one hunt for constructions and interpretations to certain divisions or separate parts of the parable when no such certain division or separate parts are found in it when the terms are given the meaning that their customary usage warrants?

Preexistence of Human Spirits

By Henry C. Smith

The fact of man's dual nature is too well known to claim our attention here, so we proceed to show that the inner man, as Paul said, that part that could be "absent from the body and present with the Lord," existed in an intelligent form before the natural man of flesh and blood was made, and had his agency and character before birth, as well as after birth.

I refer you to Genesis 2: 56 and 6: 52 (Inspired Translation). Here we see that man existed before flesh and bone; there was not a man to till the ground. The plan was laid, and the provisions outlined, but there was no flesh on the earth.

Please connect this with the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4. The Lord in speaking to F. G. Williams, Sidney Rigdon, and Joseph Smith, said, "Ye were also in the beginning with the Father." As Christ was in the beginning, so they in like manner were in the beginning, yet they did not exist in the flesh until nearly six thousand years after the "beginning."

Jeremiah was called and even ordained at least three thousand four hundred years before he was born in the flesh. (Jeremiah 1: 5.)

Christ was in the beginning with the Father and assisted in making the worlds before (perhaps) this planet was fitted as our dwelling place. (Hebrews 1: 2; Doctrine and Covenants 90: 1.) Yet he was not born in the flesh.

The disciples believed the blind man could have committed sin before he was born, and Jesus did not correct their belief. (John 9: 2.)

Christ existed "before the world was." (John 17: 5.) He was "anointed [ordained] with the oil of gladness above his fellows," signifying that others were anointed, as well as himself; and in this connection please note that he calls them "brethren," and that there were many of them, and that he was to be the "first-born" among them. "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." (Hebrews 2: 11.)

No wonder "the morning stars [his brethren] sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." (Job 38: 7.) Note the coincidence in Hebrews 2: 12. New conditions sprang to view in which they would have an opportunity to improve by the development of character in a body of flesh.

Jesus says, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me." (Hebrews 2: 13.) We now feel safe in saying that these "children," "brethren," "sons," and "morning stars" composed two thirds of that great throng of intelligent spirits that existed

Limitation of Armament

(Address by Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, jr., assistant secretary of the navy, in the tabernacle during the General Conference, October 5, 1922. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

Mr. Chairman and Folks: In my family we have a saying that when you understand people particularly well, and when they understand you, that those people are just "folks." So I am going to say, "Mr. Chairman and Folks."

To-night I want to tell you about something it has been my privilege to work in—something which I think is a very great achievement for this country, the Limitation of Armament Conference.

The way the whole thing started was this: When President Harding took over, all the countries in the world were running a race in naval building. One country would build two battleships, and then another country would say: "Hello! Building two battleships, are they? Well, we better build three," and each would race the other. The result was that much money was being spent every year; money which might have better been devoted to the development of civilization in the various communities, and the chances of war were not necessarily being decreased. No. President Harding saw that. He also saw that it would be folly for our country to attempt to reduce our armaments unless the other countries would reduce theirs at the same time. Never, my friends, must we put ourselves in a position of not being able to defend ourselves.

I think I can best illustrate what went on in President Harding's mind and in Mr. Hughes's mind, by a little simile. It is this: If you were a little boy, and were walking down the streets of Independence with an armful of ripe apples, and a half brick in the other hand, and if another little boy came along with a half brick in his hand and said, "Throw down that brick!" what would you do? You would say, "No; I won't put down my brick until you put down your brick." Now that's the underlying principle of the limitation of armament conference. That was, that everyone would reduce together.

Preparing for Armament Conference

In preparing for the conference, we took this as our underlying maxim. We wanted every country in the world to have enough armament to defend itself, but we didn't want any country to have enough armament so they could start out on aggressive wars against the other country.

We prepared the plan very quietly, because Mr. Hughes had this as his underlying idea. He wanted to get shut of before the foundation of the earth was laid, awaiting their time to take bodies of flesh and blood, and have an experience on the earth.

The other one third were those who rebelled against God's anointed and chose Lucifer as their leader and king, thereby forfeiting their right to an experience in the flesh; and their influence is being keenly felt by the people of the world, but kindly overruled by the Lord for the good of his followers.

LORAIN, OHIO,

the old method of diplomacy, negotiating between the representatives of the various countries behind closed doors. He wanted to get the plan thoroughly worked out and then present it to the whole world at once, so that the peoples of the various countries would be able to get the plan before their minds, and if they approved of it, come forward and bring the weight of their opinion to bear on their constituents.

The result of that was this: Only the people who were actually concerned in working out the plans knew about them. Noted gentlemen and ladies of the press, just after the plan had been sprung, my friends—the newspapermen in Washington—came to me and said, "By George! Colonel, that was kept secret." They said, "That's the only state secret that has been kept secret." We kept it so quiet that when I took up the plan for Mr. Hughes's final revision, about three days before the conference opened, and he made corrections on it, I took it back again to the Navy Department and had an admiral mimeograph it. We didn't want anybody to know about it until it was brought before the country.

After he had mimeographed it, just forty copies, I put them in a little black handbag and toted them up to Mr. Hughes, and he got them and said, "Now, Colonel, I will show you what we will do with this," and he went across his room and put them in the safe, and he turned the handle of the safe and said, "There they will stay until the morning of the conference and there cannot be a leak."

Opening of the Conference

It was very interesting in Washington when the conference opened. It opened in a G. A. R. hall. That morning people crowded in from all around. As I went over I remember seeing all the admirals and the generals and the diplomats from the foreign countries getting out of their automobiles, all dressed up beautifully with bright colors, and everything of that sort. I, needless to say, was dressed the way I am! I don't think bright colors help my rather elusive style of beauty.

Inside the hall there were four green baize tables around in a square. Behind in the galleries sat Congress: the House, the Senate, the foreign diplomats of the lands. Around the green baize tables sat the delegates from the various countries, the big men of Italy, France, Japan, England, Belgium, etc. Behind them sat other dignitaries. You would see, in one corner, Senator Lodge talking with Briand, in another corner you would see Balfour and some one else talking. There was a buzz of conversation. Then the President came in. The President opened the meeting. He opened it with a general speech welcoming everyone there. After he had finished he went out. Mr. Balfour then got up. Then comes an incident that reminded me a good deal of some conventions I have been to from time to time in this country. Mr. Balfour arose and said, "Gentlemen of the conference: I want to nominate for your permanent chairman, His Excellency, the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Hughes. Do I hear any objection? He is elected."

Then Mr. Hughes started on his speech. Now, mind you, no one knew that America had a plan. Everyone thought that this first opening of the convention was going to be simply a perfunctory opening. They thought Mr. Hughes would get up and would say the usual polite thing: glad to see everybody; hoped that they would be able to do everything—and so on. Well, he got up to speak and you could hear a general buzz all over. Everyone was talking, for they thought he was going to just give them the ordinary type of speech.

Turning a Page in World Events

Hughes started. He began to make his points, one after the other, with crushing logic, and, as if you would cut it off with a knife, that whole buzz of conversation stopped. Everybody sat up. The delegates would catch the various points and begin scribbling them down on pads. One after the other Hughes brought out his points; and finally, with a burst of applause, he laid the plan on the table for all the world to judge; and a page had been turned in world events.

Now, you and I are all interested in it. You and I are all interested in how this came to pass, but primarily, and rightly, every one of us is interested in this first of all: How does it affect our country—the United States of America? May I tell you? First: We get, as a result of that, a navy second to no navy in the world. Concretely, we get a navy equal to the navy of Great Britain, the proverbial masters of the seas, and 40 per cent greater than the navy of any other country.

Now, how do we get that navy? At a greatly increased cost? No. We get that navy at a greatly decreased cost. Roughly this: We scrap our building program, the ships we were building when the conference started. By scrapping them we saved $200,000,000. It would have cost $200,000,000 to finish them. Next: If we had finished our building program—and we would have had to finish our building program if there had been no conference—we would have had a navy which would have cost us approximately speaking, $600,000,000 a year to maintain. The navy we got from the conference, the navy second to no navy in the world, will not cost us much more than half that amount.

Again, to be concrete, we will save in annual expense about one fourth of a billion dollars a year; and that we would have had to pay otherwise; and we save it without in any way damaging our position in so far as the other countries are concerned. Indeed, our position is better than it would have been if all the other countries had completed their building program.

A Colonel in Charge of Admirals

This is what that situation would have been if all the countries had completed the building programs on which they were working when the conference met: On the basis of 100 per cent the United States would have stood 100 per cent. Great Britain would have stood 106 per cent. Japan would have stood 87 per cent. By the treaty, the ratio is fixed. The United States 100 per cent; Great Britain 100 per cent; Japan 60 per cent. That is the first concrete good that comes to the United States from that treaty. That was all worked out to present to the delegates by a committee of naval experts of the world; and that's where a joke comes in on me. The committee of the naval experts of the world that worked on this great problem was composed of the high admirals of the various nations: Admiral Beatty, high admiral of the British Fleet; Admiral DeB——, of France; Admiral Kato, of Japan, and so on; and as chairman of the committee of the high admirals, the naval experts of the world, I was chosen, and I am a colonel of infantry in the reserve corps!

Now, next. What effect has this Limitation of Armament treaty had on the question of future wars? Where has it greatly diminished the possibilities of future wars? I will show you how: There's nothing which prevents peoples, a man, or a nation, taking on a fight so much as a doubt in his mind as to whether he could win it or not. In the old days in Europe they tried to arrange what they called the balance of power. They did that by grouping three nations in one group in an alliance, and four in another group in an alliance, trying to get each alliance about as strong as the other; so that neither would want to get into a war. We have done much better by this treaty. With the underlying principle of which I spoke in mind, viz: that each country should have ample for defense, but not enough for aggressive warfare, we have created in the naval armaments a balance of power which will, I am sure, make countries think twice or three times, or more, about declaring war. Not only that, but we have carried a great conference to a successful conclusion, to the evident benefit of all the participants. The result inevitably will be that in the future, when difficulties arise, there will be more of a tendency among the nations to talk them over rationally.

Now, I want to make myself clear on that point. I don't want any of you to think that I am here telling you that there won't be any more wars. If I were, I'd be just a plain, ordinary liar. I don't want any wars that can possibly be avoided. I know what war is, and I have three little sons who would have to fight in the next wars. I don't want to see them have to go to war—though of course they will go if it is necessary for the country. I want to get that point before your mind, that I am not saying there will be no more wars.

Two Classes of Pacifists

Now, at this time in the country there is a dangerous sentiment abroad. There are two classes of people in the community on the question of peace. I divide them roughly this way: One I call the soft-headed pacifists. They are the people who say, "Disband the army; throw the navy away; we don't care what other countries do."

The other class I call the hard-headed peace lovers. I rank myself with them. We say, "We want no wars that can possibly be avoided." We say, "We want to save our children from the horrors of war if possible, but," we say, "we want at all times to be able properly to protect our country," and that is one of the best methods of fighting the wars.

Now, concretely, that is this: We mustn't let ourselves be controlled in this country by the soft-headed pacifists in cutting our navy below what the treaty prescribed. If we want to maintain our ability to defend ourselves; if we want the name of the United States to count in the world, standing for peace, justice, and the high ideals of which we are so justly proud, then we must maintain our treaty.

Let me give you a concrete illustration of just what I mean: Why was the conference brought about? Because the United States issued a call. Why did the countries of the world come eagerly to discuss the matter with the United States? Because the United States had a big and powerful navy. If we hadn't had a big and powerful navy, we would never have been able to achieve this reduction. That's common sense, and holds true with nations as well as people. If John Jones wants to make a treaty with Bill Smith, he has to have something to treat.

I hope there will be conferences in the future. We hope we will be able to work along the same scale of reduction in the future, and believe me, we will never be able to do it if we start in and reduce below the allowance for the navy given in the treaty, because the other nations wouldn't listen to us.

Where Were You on Primary Day?

Now, this is in brief the story of the limitation of armament conference. Before I close, I want to speak a little bit further on another topic. It is this: This country of ours is a republic. That is, it belongs equally to all of us. A republic depends for its success upon the interest that the various citizens take in its government. The franchise is not a privilege simply. It is a solemn obligation. I have often heard people in this country get up and say, "Well, I don't think I will vote at this election. I don't like their candidates." Who's to blame if neither candidate is a good man? The people. It means that the man who talks didn't take the proper interest in his party organization; that he didn't see that his party put up the proper man. I have often turned to men like that and said, "Here you are, going about, saying this candidate is poor, that policy is bad—where were you on primary day? Where were you on election?" and it is dollars to doughnuts that that man will scratch his head and say, "Well, I was off fishing." Now, he's got just what he deserves. He's got no kick coming. He's evaded his responsibility as an American citizen. There's a little verse I ran on to about a week ago, in a book of poems, that struck me as being pretty good philosophy for all of us folks. It is this:

"It isn't the work of the few,
The pick of the brave and the strong;
It is he, and it's I, and it's you Must drive the good vessel along.

"Will you work, will you save, will you strive?
Are you ready to take off your coat?
Are you serving the state? Are you pulling your weight?
Are you pulling your weight in the boat?"

It's a mighty good bit of philosophy for all of us Americans. Now! In closing—I see my time's up. In closing, just this: If you think what I have said is true, go home and act on it. Don't give me a nice round of applause and then say, "Well, a good deal of what Roosevelt said is true," and go home and sit down in the parlor and forget all about it. It is translating thoughts into deeds that counts. One ounce of performance is worth about ten tons of good resolutions. If you think I am right, if you want to see your country properly governed, go home and take an active interest in politics, no matter which your party may be.

Thank you. I want to say I have never more enjoyed speaking to an audience before. It is a great privilege and opportunity you have given me. Thank you.

Brother Russel Kennedy, of Bellaire, Ohio, writes that his youngest daughter, Miss Esther Kennedy, is in the P. and S. Hospital, in Tulsa, Oklahoma, and she would be pleased to have the Saints of the Tulsa Branch visit her.

Thrift Talks

Service is the standard by which the usefulness of our lives is measured.

Service is the measure of true greatness. The names of Washington and Lincoln have gone down in history as great men because of the service they rendered their fellow men.

Christ is the greatest example of service. He came not to be ministered unto but to minister to others.

Service to God and service to man are so inseparably connected that one cannot properly serve one without serving the other also.

A tithepayer's life is one of service to both God and man.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Saving by Fasting

Since attending General Conference I have been thinking of a great many things, and no doubt others have, too. Among these is the financial condition of our church.

While at conference I heard a sermon by Brother James F. Keir, and among other good things he said that if half the membership of this church would fast one meal each week and turn over twenty cents to the church it would amount to the vast sum of $500,000 per year. Dear Saints, would we not love to see our church go forward? Would we not love to see this glorious gospel preached in all the world? This would not be any sacrifice I am sure, to any of us, either financially or physically.

I am sure there is not one Saint above the age of twelve years who could not do this without inconvenience. How many will try it so the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands will soon fill the whole earth? So the kingdom of God shall be established in all the earth to take the place of the now existing perplexity of nations, and the unrest and dissatisfaction that exists among the masses.

May God help us do our whole duty is my prayer.

A. H. WARREN.

Charity, or, in Other Words, Love

While we look over the SAINTS' HERALD and also other church articles from time to time we read much on the doctrine of love. Yet sometimes we do not consider the question of great importance and so necessary to our salvation. In Doctrine and Covenants 11:4 we find these words have been spoken to us:

"I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

These are the words of the Savior himself, given to us in these latter days, yet we do not ponder on them, as with the other words, long enough really to sense the meaning of them—that we, you and I, cannot help in this work except we be humble and full of love. Are we dead members or are we alive in Christ Jesus? Sometimes we have love come to us to put forth by degrees, and the rest of the time we have not that love which should be with us continually. We at once put it down to the weakness of the flesh. But let us think for a moment. Are we our own agents? And when we falter, let us say to ourselves, "It was because I yielded to the satanic powers which I need not have done, and heeded not to the words of God."

Satan is ever ready to try to take us away from the things of God when we are in times of weakness and in our times of discouragement, and often when we get to talking together he comes to us and we talk about our brothers' and sisters' faults and weaknesses and very seldom tell of their good qualities; and we forget that while we are doing this that we ourselves are weak by not showing love and not abiding by the word of God. "Cease to find fault one with another." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:38.)

Love not only extends to our brothers and sisters but to our enemies, if we have such; also to the world at large—never mind what nation. God made of one blood all nations. But let us feel sorry for the sinner and show love, yet despise the sin, and hate all that is wrong, and try to show the world the need of love on this earth by practicing love ourselves all the time and not in periods, and then the Spirit of God will come to us with great force and power that we may be able to say as Paul of old, "Our gospel came not in word only but with power and with much assurance." The kind of life that we lead all the time is what will count at the day of judgment whether it be for glory or disappointment.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 35.

A Bulletin From Bishopric to Aged

A one-page mimeographed bulletin is being sent out twice a month from the office of the Presiding Bishopric to all the inmates of the homes for aged, of which there are two at Lamoni and one at Holden, Missouri.

The following are typical items:

A sister from Independence recently made some purchases in a Kansas City department store and offered a check in payment. The floorwalker was called. He asked her if she knew anybody in Kansas City. She named two people. The floorwalker looked straight at her and asked, "Are you a Latter Day Saint?" As soon as she said yes, he took the check and wrote his name across the back of it. What a difference it would have made had these men she named not been good Latter Day Saints, or had some one before her, bearing the name, proven false to their trust.

During the nineteen months ended September 1, 1922, there were 103 requests sent to this office for admission to the Saints' Homes. This is 25 per cent more than is now being cared for in the three homes.

One of the matrons in writing about the daily life of the home tells of the help received from an aged sister as follows:

"Treasurer for Sunday school. Arranges program for Sunday school, writes letters for those who cannot write, reads some to those who cannot see, takes fruit and flowers to sick rooms, chapel, and sitting room, takes care of her own room, recites pieces in our programs; and I will inclose copy of poem she composed."

The oldest member in the home family is Sister Anna Christiansen, of Holden Home, who was 95 years old on the 16th of last March. She was baptized 56 years ago the 24th of last January. Her record is closely followed by Brother James Perrin, of the Saints' Home, who is 95 years old, and has been a member of the church 55 years. Brother Perrin was born June 4, 1827, and was baptized September 8, 1867. The oldest member from the standpoint of birth into the kingdom of God is Brother H. W. Pomeroy, of Holden, who was baptized in August of the year 1858, two years before the Amboy Conference when "Young Joseph" came to occupy his father's place. Brother Pomeroy has been a member of the church 64 years.

The new editor of The Parthenon department in Autumn Leaves is Miss Addie Belle Chappell, recorder at Graceland College. As supervisor of the Young Women's Department of the Department of Women, she is in a position to represent important developments in the work. Her editorial debut is made in the December number of Autumn Leaves.

Help the C

A few thoughts about various things, mostly financial.

The General Conference is over, and to one whose heart is wrapped up in the good of the church everything has turned out just as it should.

The dark cloud has been ripped and some of the silver lining is beginning to show. Now let's all get together and turn the old thing inside out and have nothing but the shiny side showing.

From now on let's all have bright and shiny thoughts. You know what I mean, the kind that makes you say, "Isn't it wonderful to be a Latter Day Saint—to have that wonderful feeling of security and hope in a world filled with sorrow and doubt?"

This promise which is ours—do we value it as we should? Think what it would mean to the destitute and homeless Christians of Smyrna. If either you or I were there we would be on our knees praying, "Lord, lead us to that place of safety which thou hast promised to prepare for thy people." But we neither of us are there, of course, so why worry? We can sit back and watch other portions of this old world suffer, but until trouble begins to strike around our home we need not lose any sleep, because when it does come, why then we can gather our family around us and take the first short cut to Zion. But for the present we can lead our happy, carefree life, enjoy our three square meals a day, and forget about the multitude who are doomed to suffer and die.

"But," you say, "what can I do to help, and why shouldn't I have my three meals a day if I can pay for them?" Why, indeed, and since food is necessary to sustain life it would seem quite necessary. But nevertheless, just the fact of being well-fed, well-housed, and clothed makes us forgetful. The man who knows hunger is more apt to share his last bite than the man who has never felt the pangs.

Here is where we confess our weakness and our lack of faith. We who stand idle with guilty conscience try to justify our position by saying, "Well, what is there we can do? All that trouble over there is so far away, when you do give money to help them out you never know whether they get it or not." True enough, but we can help them a great deal more in another way; the method may seem indirect, but in this case the longest road is the shortest way home.

Oh, how blind we are not to see that in holding back this great program God has set for us to carry out, we are prolonging the suffering of the world. Has he not said he would shorten the days of suffering, but no matter what terrors might come upon us now we are in no position to ask that they might be shortened. If anything we are hoping that

New Christmas Program Popular

We are having a big sale on the newly published Christmas program, by Ermina Perkins Kearney, entitled "Balancing the Christmas ledger," and edited by the committee of the Pen and Ink Club. Sample orders for one copy are followed by orders for a dozen or so for those who participate.

The program is for an entire evening and nothing else is required. All the committee members working on the program like it so well they are having it at their own schools this year.

the evil day might be delayed to give us a little more time to enjoy the ease and comforts with which we are surrounded.

Do you want to know the answer to that question, "What shall I do?" Here's the answer, and it is the most effective thing you can do at this time. Sit down and write the fattest check you can and send it to the Bishop. "Oh," but you say, "I have given the Bishop something already this year and these are hard times, you know, and he's not expecting us to give as much under these circumstances." Yes, the Bishop has been very sympathetic with us in these hard times and it has been very easy for us to cut the customary check of thirty or forty dollars down to ten or perhaps even five just to make sure we wouldn't run short. But if you feel that you have done your duty, then it is apt to continue to be hard times with you.

Is your business such that you could use a little inspiration or additional wisdom in the management of it? If so, then why don't you ask God to become a senior partner? When you consider how much more you need him than he needs you, don't you think it would be greatly to your advantage? But first show your faith by your works. Sit down and write a check for the full amount of that little sum you have laid away for a rainy day. As long as you depend on your own strength and wisdom things will continue as they are with you. Set your house in order before God and in humility talk with him each day concerning those most perplexing problems and he will bless you according to your faith.

But here is a most serious question to consider.

As a Latter Day Saint would it be well for you to have prosperity? Will the checks to the Bishop grow larger in proportion to your bank account? Will you forget those daily talks with God now that things are going well with you? When you get that new automobile you have always longed for, will each Sunday find you miles away joy riding, forgetting about that little church that needs your help? Or would you make a list of all the things for which an auto can be used in the service of the church? Perhaps there are elderly people or a tired mother you could assist to church each Sunday, to say nothing of the way you could help the missionary and local ministers.

But none of us need to fear prosperity, for that same wisdom which was ours in the building of a fortune can be ours in the directing and management of larger interests, so that with our added income we can be a greater help and blessing to the church.

If you believe in God and the many promises he has made to us as a church, then don't you believe that even the poorest of us can become prosperous with his help? And don't you believe it would be to his interest to have us so, if we remained humble and faithful? Well, then, let's try it out. Let us do everything God has told us to do. Let us be generous with him and open the way for him to bless us as he has promised. Let's all join in the daily prayer, "Lord, help us to see more clearly what thou would have us do, and give us the strength and the courage to do it." A. F. J.

A Testimony

I wish to bear my testimony to the divinity of the revelation adopted by the late General Conference.

My sight and hearing have left me, to quite an extent; so I chose to take the Daily Herald rather than to attend conference. The revelation appeared in the first issue. As I began reading, the Spirit of the Lord came upon me, bearing witness to my spirit that the revelation expressed the will of the Lord to the church. I immediately wrote to President F. M. Smith to place my name in the affirmative touching its acceptance.

Successful Meetings at Burlington

The pastor writes the Presidency of increasing interest, with D. T. Williams as speaker.

We are enjoying a week's series of meetings with Apostle D. T. Williams as the speaker. He is enjoying also a splendid degree of liberty, and the attendance is increasing each night, with a splendid interest. We had tried to arrange for a series of longer duration, but Brother Williams is limited in time because of other work previously planned. Though the present effort is short, we contemplate a series of some weeks at a later date with Brother J. F. Garver.

Last Saturday and Sunday we enjoyed a splendid two-day meeting with the Saints at Ottumwa. Though the weather was bad the entire time, the attendance was good, and a fine spirit was enjoyed at every session. For a time we gave this branch special attention, and while things looked very discouraging we feel now that our efforts have not been entirely in vain.

Saturday and Sunday, 25th and 26th, a two-day meeting is planned for Montrose, and then we look forward to our district conference which convened at Burlington, December 16 and 17 with the prospects that Brother Garver will be present. Praying that we will be worthy of our Father's blessings most needful to each,

D. J. WILLIAMS.

A Letter From Sister Kippe

Some weeks ago I received a letter from Sister Alice Kippe, wife of Alexander Kippe who has been doing missionary work in Germany since before the war. The letter was written to me, and its general tone is personal; but it tells so simply and plainly of conditions in Germany and makes so earnest plea for help in church work that I present it to the readers of the HERALD without further comment, feeling sure the HERALD readers will sense the unselfish spirit and simple faith of the missive.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

HALLE ON THE SAALE, September 22, 1922.

Dear Brother Smith: We received your last letter with much pleasure. We truly believe that you have much work; more than to be answering our letter. Kate can read everything well in English. We are surprised that you can read German so well. On October 1 the postage will be much more to America; hence I shall now write to you and other American friends.

We discovered from the HERALD that you were ill and hope that it is quite well with you again. I was also sick awhile this summer without knowing what was wrong, for I was always very tired and very wakeful. The physician now terms it nerve exhaustion as the result of the bad war rations, troubles, and sorrow. When the latter things vanish out of my life then the suffering, which already is better, will be healed. For that we are very thankful to God.

Kate is at present not well. She is overworked in the present position. She was in Leipzig at the fair—in the evenings to Halle on the train; in the mornings to Leipzig. From early five o'clock until ten o'clock at night always on the go. Now she is ill and at home a few days for recovery.

You no doubt have read in the papers about the change in Germany. Everything very uncertain. No person can look ahead eight days. I shall quote you a few present prices; what they will be three days hence no one knows. So you can see the great difference from Christmas 1920, when you were here: 1 pound meat, 250-300 marks; 1 loaf bread, 34 marks; 1 pound sugar, 50-90 marks; 1 liter milk, 30 marks; 1 pound fruit, 10-30 marks; 1 dress, 10,000-15,000 marks; 1 pair boots, 3,000-4,000 marks. Cheap, are they not? Yet the need is not so great, not even among the poorest brothers and sisters as during the war, for the wages of the workmen are rising almost every week, and fat, of which there was such a shortage during the war, can be had. The coal and wood situation is the worst, for they are rationed. One has to be very saving with them. Our prayer is that this next winter will not be so cold. People certainly have reason to be converted to God; they do themselves the greatest favor. One can understand that Christ wept over the people. A person can still do it to-day.

During the summer I was in Berlin, eight days there in services. One day the people are inspired with the truth. The next they are weak. As a reed in the wind, they wave to and fro. They have the opportunity nevertheless to hear (receive) the gospel if they wish it. Until now we have had pretty good weather so that my husband can work there yet without coal. Then he wishes to go to East Prussia where he has been corresponding almost two years with people and where many wish to adhere to the truth. He is

The hearts of many were made sad by the sudden death on Thursday of Elder A. V. Closson, for more than twenty-five years a missionary of the church. Owing to the financial stringency Brother Closson has been devoting his time the past few months to work as a contractor. It is believed that he died of heart failure and so fell off the roof of a house where he was working. Death at least was instantaneous. Though the funeral services were at the early hour of one p. m. Sunday the church was crowded. Some twenty-four or more high priests were present and acted as guards of honor. Six other members of the high priests' quorum acted as pallbearers. The sermon was by Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, and the services in charge of Elder W. H. Garrett.

The morning sermon by Apostle James A. Gillen at the Stone Church was one of unusually high quality. He took as his text Isaiah 62, and as a subject, "Going through the gates." He spoke with great confidence as to the future of the work of the church, and with great feeling of the necessity lying before the church for missionary work and for support by the church to this end.

In the afternoon an excellent prayer service was held with several strong testimonies. In the evening, following the half hour of song service, Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker

Let Us Send Gift Cards to Your Friends

Upon request we will send a pretty Christmas or New Year card to any address to which you wish one of the church papers sent as a gift. In sending any new subscription, just state that you wish a notification to go from this office that it is a gift from you, and the card will be sent so as to reach the person thus favored by Christmas. We will start the subscription at any time you direct. It is an excellent way to express the spirit of giving.

invited from there, and though he is with Mormons it is better than in the hotel or tavern.

Dear brother, since you write so friendly it gives me courage to urge you to please do what you can that people come to Germany on a mission who see and feel everything themselves, who bring much, much love—a whole heart full, and still a sack full in reserve. I have wept many an evening and prayed to God for help for Germany mission work. One to be successful here must not hold himself wholly faultless and others wholly to blame for errors; he must love as Christ did, and who always speaks the truth.

Brother Passman was not fluent in German, and an American; but what a man! He truly has God's Spirit. In all his doings he thought not of himself, only of the German work. We love him—all, all; we would do everything for him and share everything for him. Have you not more such men in America? Oh! send such to Germany for work. The Germans are a sentimental folk, reserved at first, but always to be won by love, though stubbornly inclined to resist coercion.

Now I trust you will take no offense at my letter for it was with me thus: "Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." Now I feel much easier and I believe the German cause is in good hands now.

Greet the sisters and brothers for me. I wish you God's blessing in all your ways.
ALICE KIPPE.

on "Zion, the brotherhood of man." He spoke with his usual fluency and power to the edification of the audience. Instead of selfishness the world needs cooperation and brotherly love.

Thanksgiving morning a service is announced for 10 a. m. with Church Historian Walter W. Smith as the speaker. The choir has prepared a special anthem for this service.

Elder U. W. Greene is now able to be out and was in attendance at the church services Sunday and reports himself as feeling fair.

No radio program was given last Sunday, but it is hoped that a suitable hour may be found and the services resumed within a few weeks. The next speaker will be R. V. Hopkins on "The Book of Mormon and the American Indian."

Elder M. A. Etzenhouser and wife of the Social Welfare Bureau will open a community store of used articles Friday in the back of the old Ensign building. They will sell at a low price not only clothing but all household goods donated. They will be at this store hereafter on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons.

The Saints in the various congregations in Zion continue to hold meetings to discuss the new situation regarding departmental work. The Religio at the Stone Church discussed the matter in open session part of one evening and all of another. A large number of persons from the young and older classes were asked as to what they would like to have the Religio do in the future. A suggestion was offered that class work might be transferred to the Independence Institute and that the usual week-night sessions could then be devoted to expressional features, such as parliamentary drills, educational dramatics, and the like.

The vote resulted in a decision to continue the class work and programs as usual. It was suggested that the leading officers responsible for this work provide texts for the more comprehensive study of the three standard books of the church and that an effort be made to study these more and other books less.

Some of the local officers had hoped that at the Stone Church a trial might be made of the Sunday school taking charge of the study class work now handled by the Religio but meeting as heretofore on Friday evening and the young people's organization become entirely a department of expression and recreation. But it is evident that the change must be made gradually in order to secure the best results, and that a clearer understanding leading to administrative cooperation be first secured.

President Elbert A. Smith has been absent the past week in Colorado, but is expected home in time for Thanksgiving.

Bishops B. R. McGuire and I. A. Smith are also in Colorado on church business but hope to be back in time for Thanksgiving.

Bishop James F. Keir returned Sunday from Michigan and Ontario where he went primarily to attend the anniversary services at the London, Ontario, church. He finds the Saints in good condition and all desiring to move forward.

We are advised that of the Twelve, John F. Garver was in Des Moines last Sunday attending district conference. J. F. Curtis left Monday for Ohio and Paul M. Hanson expects to leave the early part of the week for Chicago and other points in Illinois. Roy S. Budd is holding meetings at Post Oak, Missouri. D. T. Williams was in Independence for the young people's service Sunday evening.

At the Second Independence junior meeting Sunday was shown the first of a series of slides being prepared by the Sunday school department with the cooperation of the Graphic Arts Bureau. The aim of the series is to impress the children of the church with the religious significance of our missionary work. At present foreign missionary work is being stressed and application made to the Christmas offering.

The twelve sets now in preparation by E. D. Moore for the Sunday school will cover the principal foreign missions, the first one being entitled, "With the missionary to Australia." This set will be sent to Lamoni soon and to other places that desire it.

Friends of Elder William T. Rushton and wife, parents of Apostle John W. Rushton, gathered at their home on the evening of the 20th, numbering about thirty-three, and gave them a pleasant surprise and spent a profitable social evening. It was composed mostly of the Doctrine and Covenants class with which they are associated.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending November 25: Mrs. G. M. Appleman, Portland, Oregon; Mrs. J. U. Roberts, Paxton, Nebraska; Mrs. R. DeHoney, Raytown, Missouri; Mrs. R. A. Thrutchley, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. J. L. VanValkenburg; Yates Center, Kansas; Helen Carr, Woodbine, Iowa; Atanacio Ferrazas, Cement City, Missouri; Mrs. Edith Wheeler, Buckner, Missouri; and the following from Independence: George C. Lightener, Beulah Quick, Mrs. Henry Stahl, Mrs. Sallie Weiler, and Mrs. D. A. Dimitry and Baby Dimitry. X-ray patients: LaVerne Allen, John T. Curtis, Elsie Whitman, George A. Tryon, Ettie Barnett, and Mrs. Roy Harding, all of Independence.

Holden Stake

HOLDEN. Elder I. M. Ross, counselor to Bishop Hunt, left for Grandview Thursday morning to take up work in the interest of the financial department of the church. Brother Ross intends to visit the Saints in the various churches of the stake in the interest of the bishopric.

Elder F. A. McWethy of the Stake Presidency is to be with the Saints of Lees Summit at their Thanksgiving services at 11 a. m. on the 30th, and with the Saints at Grandview for their annual program and dinner in the afternoon.

POST OAK. President Elbert A. Smith officiated in the dedication of the church at Post Oak, Missouri, Sunday, November 19. Brother W. S. Macrae had charge of the services. Brother Roy S. Budd offered the prayer. Brother Budd continued service there during the week. Sister Gladys Teeter, chorister from East Independence church had charge of the music. The Post Oak Saints made elaborate provisions to entertain the visitors at dinner, in the Woodman Hall. About 150 guests were served. The condition of the roads hindered many from coming. Warrensburg and Holden were well represented. This is the third church dedicated since the organization of the stake. In addition to this two more have been built, one purchased and one building site.

MARSHALL. Brother and Sister House and son and Brother and Sister Guy Foster of Nelson, Missouri, spent the day in service with the Marshall Saints on Sunday the 19th, Elder House preaching at eleven o'clock. Brothers Levi Phelps and House recounted ministerial experiences. Brother Harold Thayer baptized two, being some of the fruits of the Sunday school. The new font in the church yard is an asset, these times.

EAST INDEPENDENCE. Sunday night, November 19, the East Independence choir, in connection with Grandview choir, rendered the cantata "The Good Shepherd." The East Independence church was so small that the cantata was held at the Spring Branch church. The exercises were well attended and highly appreciated. Sister Lola A. Johnson, Holden Stake director of music, was with them and in her usual manner gave much encouragement. Grandview came in their usual enthusiastic way, seven carloads strong. The East Independence choir expresses their appreciation of the assistance given by the visiting choirs.

The Holden Stake conference held at Warrensburg, Missouri, November 10 to 12, 1922, was one where much good was received. Through the able help of Sister M. A. Etzenhouser and Elder F. H. Edwards of the Quorum of Twelve the Saints were inspired to greater activity and zeal in their work. The first session began Friday evening with a very interesting illustrated lecture by Brother Edwards. Views used were taken by President F. M. Smith during his mission to Europe.

Saturday morning at 8.30 prayer meeting was held in charge of Brothers R. E. Burgess and George I. Hansen. Business session began at 10.30. Brother F. H. Edwards was associated with the stake presidency in presiding over the conference. Reports from various stake officers and members of the priesthood were read. The following superintendents of departments were sustained: Sister I. M. Ross for the women's work, Brother C. F. Scarcliff for the stake Sunday school, Brother I. M. Ross for Recreation and Expression, and Sister Lola A. Johnson for the Department of Music. The stake presidency, bishopric, and high council were authorized to act between conferences in the distribution of funds from the church building and loan fund, and in the erection of new church buildings, sale and purchase of old church buildings. Brothers Peter Vasquez, Joseph Beebe,

Just the Opportunity You Have Been Waiting For

Our Sunday school and Religio workers have for a number of years looked forward to the time when a large variety of courses would be available for study by the various classes of their respective departments. In many places it has been impossible to satisfy all of the demands of the school, with one quarterly. Consequently, many classes have been forced to leave the outlined courses entirely and take up the church books or outside texts and do the best that they could without outlines.

We believe that we are in a position to offer some help at this time. During the past two years the Religio has published outlined courses on a variety of subjects. A large number of these are still available, and disregarding the dates on these quarterlies, they can be used just as profitably now as when they were first published. We earnestly suggest that our Sunday school and Religio superintendents and teachers look over the following list and when organizing new classes, be prepared to suggest to them the large variety of subjects that have been outlined under our supervision, and which, we believe, would be suitable for study by our church people.

Senior Religio Quarterlies

1. Outline for study of Ellwood's The Social Problem, and outline for study of Young People's History.
2. Outline for study of From One to Twenty-One and outline for study of Young People's History.
3. How to Teach Religion
Problems for Zion Builders.
4. Same as Number 3 (continued).
5. Problems for Zion Builders.
6. The Meaning of Service.
7. Religious Education in the Family.

Junior Quarterlies

1. Stories from Young People's History.
2. Different Ways of Serving the Church.
3. Lessons from the Book of Mormon.

Order by title and number given here, saying "Back number Religio Quarterly." The price is 10 cents a copy.

Let us again emphasize that there is absolutely no need of the dates of these quarterlies interfering with their use, whenever they are desired. Many are of the opinion that the dates could well be omitted from the quarterlies entirely. Why not make use of the material that we have on hand? This would be helping the Religio financially and would be putting into the hands of our people, outlines for study which they very much need.

Clergy Fare Certificates for 1923

Blanks for making application for Clergy Fare Certificates for 1923 have been distributed by the Eastern and Western Bureaus. Those entitled to these certificates who do any considerable traveling should secure a blank from the railroad agent if one has not been forwarded to you direct and after carefully filling out and signing, secure signature of the home railroad agent and forward to the undersigned with the necessary fee.

Important: In answering question 5, missionaries should show "Expense Budget" and not "Salary" as the former term is in accord with the facts.

If you have not received a blank and your railroad agent cannot supply you I will be glad to furnish, but try your railroad agent first.

and Chilton Ross were elected to fill the vacancies on the stake wireless committee.

Saturday at 2 o'clock a lecture was given by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, explaining social service in a very interesting manner. Business session at 3.30. Plan number four outlined by the general department superintendents was adopted except in the nomination of the department heads, other nominations being permitted if desired. A similar motion was passed relative to the nomination of pastors of churches by the stake presidency. The ordination of Brother J. G. Hass of Lees Summit to the office of priest was authorized subject to the approval of the stake high council. Committee reported on dining hall conducted at the State Fair at Sedalia, Missouri, the approximate amount cleared being about $950. A vote of thanks was extended to those who had made this splendid enterprise possible. Sermon Saturday night by Brother Edwards. Prayer meeting Sunday morning in charge of Brothers F. H. Edwards and F. A. McWethy. Sunday school at 9.30 in charge of Brother Walter Johnson, local superintendent of Warrensburg school. Because of limited room, the intermediate and senior classes assembled in one body and Brother Edwards addressed them for thirty minutes. Bishop Hunt spoke to the children in the lower auditorium, and at 10.30 he addressed the audience in the upper auditorium on the present needs of the church. Sermon at eleven o'clock by President Elbert A. Smith which was of great value to the conference and highly appreciated.

Sunday afternoon Sister M. A. Etzenhouser lectured on social service, giving practical illustration as to how the work should be done. Brothers J. W. A. Bailey and F. H. Edwards discussed missionary work in the stake. The stake presidency, Brothers Krahl, Macrae, and McWethy followed with talks on the needs and care of the work of the churches. Brother I. M. Smith, patriarch of the stake gave a brief closing address. The services were all accompanied by a splendid spirit. All went home with renewed courage and determination to serve to the best of their ability. The next conference will be held at Lees Summit, time of meeting being left to the call of the stake presidency.

Evidences of God

As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God? My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God? When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy-day. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance.—Psalms 42: 1-5.

The Scientific American Supplement quotes Henry Maxim:

All events of all history and all phenomena and all evolution of organic and inorganic, animate and inanimate nature through all time have been exactly those that have resulted from the sum of the combined forces of all the atoms in existence acting upon one another.

The above statement would make all existence and history dependent upon atomic action. The later ideal of the materialist to-day would no doubt be the motion of the electrons. Emil Haeckel in his Law of Substance takes exactly the position that all existence and life and history, the thought in the minds of men, their very prayers and religious nature, as well as the existence of table or forge is the true representation of the action of the electron or monads upon one another, or that life has just happened and intelligence is the development from the electron or monad in life.

We have previously pointed out that the planets move in regular course. They have their set paths and move according to certain laws. If any planet should vary by even a slight angle from its course the probable result would be to upset the balance of its position and the penalty a catastrophe. The very comets which seem to be such free agents are yet found to move according to definite laws in an elliptical course. There are some, it is true, which have not been proven to return, but it is found that some have returned after a period of a thousand years at a tremendous rate of speed, going out far beyond the solar system and returning. They move according to law. It is known that they move along a path which is a conic section. It has been proved many times that the course of particular comets is a narrow ellipsis. In any event they all move according to law.

Under the microscope the minutest particles, invisible to the naked eye, also move according to law. In chemistry acid acts upon a rock and produces a reaction and change but that reaction and change is definite and is understood and can be explained by a definite formula. In all the inanimate world we find law governing.

Man is influenced, it is true, by his environment and is influenced by his heredity, the kind of a body he has, but his life is also determined by his individuality, by his independent will. Many able papers have been written to prove the effect of endocrine action on the body and on life. It is argued many times that life moves according to satisfiers and annoyers, but a careful study of psychology, of actual living conditions shows that these satisfiers and annoyers, the will to live and even the will of the race to live is subordinated, and that life is not determined by such means purely biological. Man is more than an animal.

In the life of man and the life of the animals law is manifested even though man is permitted his free agency.

We have already discussed this in the realm of procreation, that if it were purely a matter of chance there would be a breaking away along the pathway before the single cell developed into the human being. There would be a tendency to break away all along the pathway of development, but instead each invariably produces after its kind. With a million chances to go wrong we have in each living instance man producing after his kind.

The old theory of the supreme being held by some was of one who set aside the laws of nature. We would rather suggest that his is the supreme intelligence which understands the laws of nature and how to work in accordance therewith. If the hand holds up a ball the law of gravity is not set aside. If there were no gravity the ball would have difficulty in being held in the palm of the hand. God is manifested in the laws of nature.

It is convenient to suggest that created things just happened; yet when an agnostic is confronted with a piece of machinery he will ask, Who made it, just as the agnostic asked one of the preachers of the East, Henry Ward Beecher, we believe, as to who made an unusually fine globe in his library. The preacher answered, "Why, man, nobody made it; it just happened by chance." Yet the agnostic was ready to believe that this more marvelous globe on which we live was the result of chance!

The earth is located in the universe, according to A. R. Wallace, in the one place where human life would be best. Off on the edge of the universe there would be extreme cold. Its size is such as to be convenient to man. If it were double the diameter each man would weigh eight times as much. He would probably be smaller and would find it harder to move around. Temperature is so adjusted as to make possible human life. The temperature of the surface of the earth varies comparatively little compared to temperatures which are known to us. Man can live in a climate from 120 to 60 degrees below zero, but not with his bodily heat below 90 degrees Fahrenheit or even over that temperature. But known temperatures go up into the thousands and down to hundreds of degrees below zero. The air around us tempers the climate as well as supplying air for man to breathe.

The very dust forms nuclei for the formation of the drops of rain. Where a poison or sickness is found the antidote is found so near at hand that expeditions are being undertaken to go where a disease originated, to find the vegetable antidote.

Then in addition to this there is deep in the soul of man the evidences of God. This we have already touched upon as well as the necessity shown by modern writers for the existence of Jesus. Deep in the soul of man is this belief in God.

Again, hundreds of great men have credited their best work to inspiration, to a flash from without.

Truly is it written in the words of the text, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." "Blessed is he that doth hunger and thirst after righteousness: for he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost." "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God."

When they ask, Where is thy God, let us answer with Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." (Job 19: 25-27.)

• Absolute agnosticism, or a negative attitude toward ultimate reality which must be the supreme object of religion, so far from being consistent with the positive and scientific attitude of mind, is wholly inconsistent with it.—Charles A. Ellwood.

Our Loyalty to Christ

It is true that the Apostle Paul rather reproved the early church.

For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal? Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.—1 Corinthians 3: 4-6, 21-23.

Still this statement must not blind us to the fact that our loyalty to Christ involves the rightful support of our brethren. We should follow in his footsteps, but should not make that following a means of offense or an excuse to the injury of our brethren.

It is right that in a business meeting each contend earnestly for that which he believes is right, for the election of the man, the adoption of the action that he deems to be best for the church. But when the vote has been taken it then becomes the part of all not to oppose or hinder the action taken, but to permit a fair trial. It were better, in fact much better, to give it our support, even if we cannot give our full mental acceptance, in order that the plan may be given a fair and just test. If it is wrong, opportunity is given for its correction, when again we meet for the transaction of business.

We have been much struck many times with the great difference it makes to a new man whether he feels that he has the support of his brethren or their opposition. Even though it be but the preaching of a single sermon, if he feels the spiritual and moral support of his auditors, he is quite likely to outdo himself, while if he feels their opposition or the dislike of a large part of his hearers he is quite likely to undo himself and speak below even his own normal ability.

We have noted many times with interest those who have rendered in the past good and even great service to the church and their readiness to step forward and congratulate and say "Good" to each new speaker. Especially are they in the front ranks if the speaker be a young man and practically untried. They give him immediate encouragement and make his next effort the easier.

Also in the carrying out of the work we have seen young men of practically little experience chosen for work in the large branches or districts. They have under them at times men not only of years, but of great learning and of piety, men who are in fact abler men. Sometimes it may even occur that some of these men who make up the rank and file of the priesthood are more able than the man who is chosen can ever be. Nevertheless those who are able as a rule show their ability in their kindly consideration and support. The young man may be diffident or he may be cocksure of his own ability; in any case he should receive our fair support so far as we justly can give it.

There is a time to speak and a time to refrain from speaking. But it is always the time to look for that which is good and to encourage others to see the good in our fellow men, and try to increase that good, and with gentle counsel assist in the success of the work as a whole.

It is true that if a man is elected whom we do not want we can by our attitude do much to insure his failure. But it is also true that even a man of mediocre ability if loyally supported in time becomes effective. A man without native ability, no matter what his training, will never become a truly great judge or ruler. But the work of the court or the work of administration consists so largely of routine items, that having learned the routine he will be for a time more effective than will be an abler man not in touch with these details.

Of course a man of mediocre ability cannot be expected to rise to meet new and great issues. But the regular and routine work requires but rarely the ability to think a matter through clearly and logically, to analyze it into its constituent elements, to study critically and to find the answer. But the work to be done does mean united support, for the sake of the whole work.

A man or woman of less ability will do far better work when supported by their associates, their brothers and sisters, than will be possible to a man or woman of exceptional ability without such support. It is not only that the work is in many ways the burden of all, but there is also the spiritual and moral aspects to be considered.

For the sake of the church of God and the loyalty we owe our Lord Jesus Christ we should support in righteousness all good works and endeavor to assist in putting into effect the orders of the body. Nor do we by this argue that any man should be guilty of that which he believes to be wrong or to uphold and promulgate the wrong. Rightful support in the church requires no such a departure from truth. It does require a fair opportunity to others and fair and just support to our brethren, every man in his place, not only according to his gifts but also according to the position to which he may have been called by his brethren, the church, or his heavenly Father.

Organization and methodology are valuable, but they are secondary. The world cannot be saved by pedagogy alone. It can be saved better with pedagogy than without it, but pedagogy itself is a secondary consideration.—Walter S. Athearn.

The Forum

In The Forum of the HERALD this week there appears an article written by the associate editor. The reason for putting it there was in the first place to offer a basis for an explanation, as we have received several letters from time to time questioning why certain articles were placed in The Forum and others in the Article Department.

The Forum was established at the instance of J. A. Koehler when he was manager of the Herald Publishing House, and primarily as a department in which to discuss social questions, though broad enough to include other moot or debated questions.

The line of division has never been that what the editors do not approve is put in The Forum and that which they do approve is put in the Article department. We have printed as articles, manuscripts which did not appeal to the editors; we have published in The Forum articles which we believed were a correct presentation of the law of the church and which agree with our own ideas.

At this point it may be well to state that by the term "the editors" we refer to the associate editor and the assistant editor and usually the former, for while the editors-in-chief have reserved the right to outline the policies, they have in fact never, so far as we can recall for over five years, passed upon an article for any department, and only perhaps once or twice in the past six years submitted an article written by some one else with the request that it be published. That which they have presented has appeared over their own signature, and usually in the editorial columns, or as official notices. They have also very kindly forwarded letters of general interest received at their office. They have not concerned themselves as a rule with what appears in the HERALD or what is excluded, let alone that which may be published in any one particular department rather than another.

The Forum is not at all a dumping place. The best articles often appear there rather than elsewhere. The HERALD for long has been open to discussions of general interest and has always taken the editorial position that the editors do not assume responsibility for that which others write. The criterion has always been and still is in every department to use that which appears to be of general interest or to present a point of view worthy of consideration. Literary merit, subject matter, and manner of treatment have been and still are the criteria.

As a rule very few articles have been printed in The Forum except those that deal with the temporal law of the church, and this because this subject is one of live interest and one in which diverse opinions are held. Other articles have been published there, those which discussed questions more or less moot, even if the active editors were inclined to accept the view taken by the writer in whole or for the greater part.

The article this week contains a few points on which an agreement has not been reached by the church. The purpose is not to present an argument. The writer has attempted to avoid so far as possible bias and to present the action taken by the church, the custom of the church, and the reasons for that custom in reply to numerous inquiries which have been made.

Ordinarily it would not then appear in The Forum. It has been placed there for the reason already stated, to give a basis for this note as an explanation concerning The Forum; and also to indicate as clearly as possible that while the writer has endeavored to present the position of the church and reasons for it, he is presenting it only as his understanding without an attempt to commit any other part of the editorial staff.

The article is longer than desired, but it seems preferable to consider the subject as nearly as a whole as possible at the one time. S. A. B.

Our Books

The Chinese make their sacred books the basis of their educational work. To memorize the words and letters of the Kings, to write essays on the theme therein considered, is itself the beginning and end of education.

This is one extreme. At the other extreme we may take the Christian community of to-day. Young men or young women can go to college and never hear a word of the Bible or be brought in contact with any religious influence. They can be graduated and receive a degree of culture, yet not know the Bible on which is based the best of English literature.

It is for reasons of merit that we find among every people that their sacred books are among the few writings preserved from ancient times to the present day. This is because of the tremendous significance of religion in the life of a people and also because of the literary character devoted to the sacred writings. The sacred writings have done much to make education possible, to preserve the language and give it continuity.

There are many good books that we should individually read, at least parts of them. We are commanded to study all good books but among the good books to be studied we must not fail to include the Holy Scriptures, the Bible. Even infidels like Heinrich Heine have been compelled to admire its literary style and the truth which it contains. It is indeed the book of books. No person can claim to be truly cultured who is ignorant of what this book contains. Nor is it a just substitute to read the representations and misrepresentations by writers in various departments of science, even though it be a Bible commentary. The book deserves to be read and studied for itself.

Scarcely secondary to the original Scriptures we should place the revelations of God to us to-day. The early church was admonished to remember the Book of Mormon. How much of our present failure to progress as rapidly as we should like is affected in part at least by the lack of a thorough study of the principles set forth in the Book of Mormon; to say nothing of the revelations given to us to-day as set forth in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants? We should read all good books, but with all our getting we should get understanding.

For Christmas there can be no better books to purchase for the young person who does not already possess a prized copy, or the older person who would appreciate a gift edition or who has worn out his present volume by much reading. The Herald Publishing House has Bibles as low as 70 cents and $1.30 each, and fine Bibles of India paper as high as $12 and many others at prices in between; New Testaments in large and small type at different prices. The Holy Scriptures, the Inspired Version, is published in four different bindings; cloth, at $1.75; imitation leather, $2.25; leather, $2.50; and flexible morocco, $6.

The Book of Mormon is also published in four different bindings from $1 for cloth binding to $3.50 for the flexible morocco; and a large edition, one with large type, is published with cloth binding for $2.65. This book is also translated into Danish at $1.85 and $3.50; and German, cloth for $1.50.

The Doctrine and Covenants can be procured for 80 cents in the cloth binding; at $1.25 for imitation leather, and $3.50 for the flexible morocco.

At these prices no family, in fact no person, should be without the three books of the church. And to add to their personal value the name may be added in gold letters for 30 cents for one book and 15 cents for each additional book. Thus the name would be put on all three of these books for 60 cents, or one can add the Zion's Praises and Saints' Hymnal for an additional 30 cents, making a set of the three books of the church and the two songbooks.

But whether we purchase this year or not we should hold firmly before us the ideal of possessing the word of God, and not only of possessing or holding it, but also of reading and of studying, for the seed that falls on good ground is he who receives the word and understands it. S. A. B.

PASTORAL

A Textbook for the Local Ministry

[Elder Leonard S. Rhodes wrote some time ago urging the necessity of a textbook for the ministry. We replied asking him for suggestions and in return he has offered the following outline which may be taken to stimulate thought and perhaps action on this important point. The outline offers only a suggestion in order to stir up such discussion as may produce some effective help.—EDITORS.]

(Suggestions for a book of instructions to the local ministry.)

78. The branch's duty in financing the missionaries.
79. Reports and reporting.

Comment on the Course

It is my opinion that a course of instruction like the above or similar to it should be placed in the hands of every local minister. They should be required to take it sometime between the giving of their call to the ministry and the giving of their license, the latter being withheld until they have satisfactorily passed examinations conducted by Graceland or qualified institution or committee. At the very least they should have access to such a course, those who care to avail themselves of it. No member of the church should be forbidden the privilege of studying these lessons, and perhaps taking the examinations.

To those called, the church could give the instruction free, including a neatly bound volume and certificate of ordination, or the branch or district required to pay all or a part of the cost of tuition, or the individual to be benefited required to pay all or a part of the cost as thought best. Of course the ultimate benefit would be to the church and this would be an argument for the church paying the expenses, since local ministers are not salaried.

Inasmuch as the deacons may be called upon to assist the teachers at times it is my opinion that both deacons and teachers should study all of Chapters 1, 2, and 3. Inasmuch as the higher offices may serve in the lower I believe the priests should study Chapters 1, 2, 3, and 4; the elders should study Chapters 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. Inasmuch as any ordained minister is eligible for the position of branch president they should all have the privilege of studying Chapter 6; but while it may be a privilege of the Aaronic priesthood to study these lessons, it should be regarded more as a duty of the elders to study them since they are the presiding officers of the church, and no one should be considered as qualified to preside over a branch until he has successfully passed an examination on those subjects. What a lot of trouble, heartaches, and contention some good uniform course for branch presidents would save. It would save both the branch presidents and the branches.

Lessons 1-3. These subheadings are worked out from memory. No doubt I can do better when I get my church histories from storage.

Lessons 4-6. These are not intended as normal courses but simply useful information concerning these books.

Lesson 7. A general outline of our beliefs.

Lesson 8. To give a clearer conception of branches, and the revelations that deal with them.

Lesson 18. There are correspondence courses on heating and ventilation. We would not want to go into it that extensively but our deacons need some good scientific instructions along these lines. It would save a lot of uncertainty and dissatisfaction. I could not do justice to any of Lessons 14 to 22 without further study and investigation, but I am sure you will recognize the need of that kind of instruction.

The ordination charge should come at the close of the lessons for whom the instruction is intended, elder, priest, teacher, or deacon.

Activity in the Church School

It is a very familiar saying that children learn by doing. It is the business of the church to stimulate and direct activity as well as to stimulate and direct thought. There is much activity that groups of children can do on Sundays.

As an illustration of this, a group of thirteen-year-old girls who were called upon to get up a twenty-minute program for a church service decided that they should get up out of their own minds a drama illustrating a home where family worship is not conducted and one where it is. It took them several Sundays to get up this drama, to determine the words, the conversation to be used, and then to act out the drama.

Along with the getting up of this drama they had class work, discussing the value of family worship in the home, what should be the content of this worship, whether it should be made up of stories, scripture reading, prayer, and songs; and if so, what should be the nature of each, whether all the members of the family should take part, what would be the difference in family worship where there are small children and where there are not. They were further asked to notice the prayers which were said at the opening exercises, prayers given in church services to find out whether these prayers were the best possible, and whether the most suitable prayers that could be said. Some illustrations of the power of prayer in the lives of people were given and a special study of the Lord's Prayer was made.

We see then that the activity of getting up a program to instruct and entertain others stimulated a large field of study.

Duty

By W. W. Powers

Read before priesthood meeting, Seattle, Washington.

We as the priesthood of Christ, the Son,
Should with our God and Christ be one.
Wisdom and charity should be our guide,
Virtue and purity close by our side.

Eyes fixed on heaven, mind on our God,
Studying always, his most holy word.
Espousing meekness and patience and love,
Directed by God, from the heavens above.

Earnestly striving and teaching our flocks
How to avoid the treacherous rocks.
Pressing unceasingly upward each day,
Guarding our deeds, and the words that we say.

Sensing our duty to God and to man,
Let us firmly, unitedly stand.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the HERALD intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Why Revelations Are Submitted to the Quorums and the Church

By S. A. Burgess

The principle on which it rests is found in both the Old and New Testament, in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants as well as in the practice of the church.

Several requests have been received for an explanation of why documents in the nature of a revelation are presented to the various quorums and to the church. Others have asked for the publication in the HERALD of certain statements made by leading church representatives. We are therefore in another column reprinting several of these statements for the information of our readers.

Also in another column there appears a very brief summary or memorandum of actions taken on each revelation presented to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with reference to minutes in the SAINTS' HERALD.

Pursuant to these requests and to comment both within and outside the church we herewith present a brief review of the principles involved and early history.

There are several quite distinctive terms that are used sometimes interchangeably, though their significance is different. Free agency was granted to man in the Garden of Eden in the beginning, and Lucifer fell because he would have compelled man to be saved. He possessed the ideal of a very strong authority, so strong that he would have compelled man to come in. According to the Inspired Version it was for this reason that he failed. Satan to-day tries to force his way into the hearts of the people,

Gird with the gospel of God, and his might,
Brother! how can we fail to do right?

With God as our leader and Christ as our King,
If only we follow, we surely shall win.
So buckle on closer the armor of God,
Prepared in all things to follow our Lord.

And blessings will follow wherever we go,
Our works will be good, and e'en the world know,
That we are the priesthood of God, and from him
The old gospel message and blessings do bring.

So fasting and praying for strength let us sing,
Praises and honor to Jesus our King.
And follow his footsteps by day and by night,
For God is with us and God is right.

but the ideal of the Master is, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Free agency is broad enough to include all aspects of judgment. In the primary sense it is the choice of right and wrong. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." But it has a broader significance.

Common consent is complied with if the people as a whole have an opportunity to vote. It implies democracy—the people rule. But there is in connection with revelations still a third question to consider. Some may consider that free agency is fulfilled if a man has the right to accept or reject the commands of God, others that common consent is fully complied with if the representatives in conference, or in branch or district, have the right to vote. A third question is, Have they the right and duty to consider whether or not it is a revelation from God? Is it their right or duty to test and prove, or must they accept or reject?

The People Want to Accept

Naturally people do not want to reject a command of God even if by the law of consent they have that right. It is doubtless because of this fact that some of our friends in other churches cannot understand why a document which purports to be a revelation and comes through the recognized prophet and leader of the church should be submitted to the quorums and then to the church. It is doubtless for a similar reason that many of our members are of a like frame of mind.

Others think that any consideration at once reflects upon the prophet. It is only fair to state that we have never known it to be taken up in that way, or the slightest breath of suggestion to be made of any question of the integrity of the prophet. Discussion and consideration is usual; opposition is very rare.

The fact that in a broad way everyone does judge, that even our critics of other churches pass judgment, was well illustrated by an editorial by R. J. Lambert in Zion's Ensign in April, 1920.

The Two Ideals

There are two general ideals concerning a revelation presented to the church. The first is that more commonly held by the sectarian world. They point out that the prophets of ancient Israel spoke and did not ask anyone's consent. But to this reply may readily be made that even to-day there is no objection to such prophecy, and such prophecies were evidently by way of exhortation and incitation. No action taken by the body prevents any man speaking by the voice of prophecy, nor by way of exhortation and admonition.

This ideal recognizes the prophet, in the sense that when he speaks it is the voice of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2.) It was well expressed by W. W. Blair at one time who urged that the only investigation to be made was whether the communication came through the recognized prophet of the church; if so, no further investigation was in order, for if it were not the very word of God, God would strike him dead. This was followed by considerable discussion, and it is noteworthy that for the succeeding fifteen years the utmost pains were taken that every such communication was presented not only to the usual quorums, but separately to each of the quorums of elders and to the unorganized elders, also to the priests and to the teachers and deacons. (Also note his testimony a few years later in Temple Lot Suit.)

This theory taken to its logical conclusion presents some phases of absolutism. The communication is not only presumed but is considered at once to be divine and infallible. This ideal is one of plenary or verbal inspiration. There remains, therefore, only the one question, that is, whether the church will accept the word of God. Those who will not accept the commands (if this theory is correct) quite rightly should be expected to withdraw, if they are not expelled.

It therefore follows naturally enough that some holding this view should urge that all those members of the leading quorums who did not vote affirmatively should at once resign. Out of this view also grew the fear on the part of some that a division was threatening and their surprise and delight when there were no signs of a division.

When a Prophet Is a Prophet

The other ideal does not for a moment discredit the man of God. It rather presents the picture of brethren upholding his hands. He does not stand absolutely alone, but is the first among equals, and his brethren share with him the burden. They recognize that Joseph the Martyr plainly stated that he was not a prophet at all times, but only when so directed by the Spirit of God. They note that his wife made a similar statement and that his son, our late President Joseph Smith, consistently took a like position, even going so far as to say that the president of the church may be mistaken as to the authenticity of a revelation. (Temple Lot Suit, p. 76.) It is the position that is presented by President F. M. Smith in a quotation printed elsewhere from an address by him in Independence in 1918.

This ideal is consistent with modern criticism and study and with our epitome of faith. It accepts the Bible as the word of God but not as verbally inspired, or as Peter expresses it, "Holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." God revealed the truth; the man wrote, but not as an automaton or without will. Those who hold this ideal feel that it is not only their privilege but their duty to weigh and consider. This is not in the spirit of "I must have my own way." Hence there is no thought of resignation, but only the support of brethren who are quite ready when the matter is decided still to do their best to support and assist in the work of the church. (This is more fully considered below in the discussion of the teaching and action of the church and the reasons for the action taken.)

These two ideals are well illustrated in the extract from an address by President Joseph Smith to the General Conference in 1900, General Conference Minutes, page 295, quoted in this HERALD. He plainly states that there are those in the church who under ordinary circumstances would receive his views with a "thus saith the Lord" attached to them without question. But he also recognized that there was another element and adds "must necessarily be there properly" that would scan anything that bears the impress of revelation closely.

Consideration Is Founded on the Law of God

In the Temple Lot Suit, President Joseph Smith stated at least twice that the principle there set forth of submitting first to the quorums was founded upon the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, though he did not then attempt to turn to or quote any particular passage.

Moses, when sent to the children of Israel, was sent first to meet Aaron. (Exodus 3: 16.) After meeting Aaron they then went and Moses and Aaron gathered the elders of the children of Israel (Exodus 4: 29). Also at Sinai he was directed of the Lord to the elders of the people (Exodus 19: 7), and when the law was written Moses delivered it to the priests, the sons of Lehi, and to the elders of Israel.

When Moses went up to receive the law he was directed to take with him Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel and they were permitted to see the God of Israel (Exodus 24: 1, 11, 14). Moses was then directed to come up farther, and took with him Joshua, but bade the seventy elders, Aaron, and Hur to tarry where they were until he came again. While it does not appear clear that they did so abide, still the intent evidently was that Moses would return to Aaron and Hur and to the seventy elders of Israel before returning to the people.

We note later in Israel's history Moses was directed to select seventy elders to assist him in bearing the burden and in administering to the people (Numbers 11: 16, et seq.) and on them was laid a portion of his spirit. Many similar passages may be found upon a careful study of the Word of God as where Moses was directed when he went before the people to take with him the elders of Israel (Exodus 17: 5). The principle of presentation to the people seems therefore to have been rigidly followed and also of presentation first to the elders.

It is true there were various prophets according to the Old Testament, though the word is used to indicate quite different spiritual manifestations. In Judea we are told that the prophets were not even permitted to preach, as they only incited and exhorted. As we have already indicated, this is quite in accordance with the church of God to-day. The right to draw near to God belongs to all.

Test of the Bible Was Inspiration

But it is significant to note that when the canon of the Old Testament Scriptures was formed, according to Sanday in the article on the Bible in the Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, the test was entirely one of inspiration. The people voted not only under Moses to accept; they were not only instructed that the law should be read to them at regular periods and again they should vote; not only is it true that when the law was lost for a season one of the kings finding the roll caused it again to be read before the people; but the canon of the Old Testament was determined by its degree of inspiration and each book was accordingly considered and accepted or rejected. The action was not only to do the will of God, but according to Doctor Sanday and other able critics it was to accept the canon of Scriptures, and that which was included in each instance was tested on the basis of inspiration. In the case of the Old Testament this has been considered a continuing process. The Jewish church therefore considered this question of inspiration and according to it judged that which should be included in the sacred writings.

With regard to the New Testament, Sanday is equally explicit. Nothing was written during the life of Jesus. The apostles wrote during the first century. The early Christian fathers also wrote. There were in existence some forty gospels, a number of apocalypses besides that of John. The gift of prophecy was plainly in the church (1 Corinthians, chapters 12 and 14). These different letters were written and passed from church to church and copied. Finally when it came to the making of the canon there was a meeting of the ecclesiastical authorities of the church. They carefully considered, the council and church carefully considered, and that was included which in their judgment showed the highest degree of inspiration of the Spirit of God.

The test was the moving power of the Spirit of God as shown in the writings of Moses, and as shown in the writings of Paul. This was not simply a vote to accept the commands of God, but to determine that which should be accepted as being of divine origin. Holy men of God wrote as they were moved upon by the Spirit of God. The mind and will of the prophet—the style of the prophet—can be seen as well as the divine truth expressed in his writings.

Our late president, Joseph Smith, also referred to the Book of Mormon. The principle is there set forth by Mosiah (Mosiah 13: 3, 4) wherein he points out the evils of a bad king and therefore the evils of having a king to rule over them. The people therefore chose judges and the people also chose and made the law. Even a purely military matter was submitted by Limhi to his people. (Mosiah 10: 1, 2; 13: 49-63; Alma 1: 56; 23: 7; 2: 23; 8: 26, 36; 3 Nephi 3: 31.) The laws of the church were so determined (Helaman 2: 55, 56, and 64; Alma 1: 1). It is not common for the voice of the people to desire that which is wrong (Mosiah 13: 36), but if they do they suffer the judgment of God. (Ibid., 37.)

A clear statement of the principle is involved in the close of the Book of Mormon (Moroni 10: 4, 5) in that the reader is directed to present these things, the book itself, in prayer to the eternal Father to receive the evidence of its truth by the Holy Ghost. This evidently recognizes that responsibility and privilege belong to the individual.

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the law of common consent is plainly set forth (25: 1; 101: 12, 13; 17: 16, 17). Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were instructed not to ordain each other elders until there was a meeting of the church to pass thereon. Also the elders were commanded to assemble to "agree upon my word" and did assemble and agree. (Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1; 42: 1, 2, 5.) These passages recognize the general law of common consent. Other passages show the right of the individual to receive revelations (Doctrine and Covenants 67: 3), also the right to approve or disapprove. (Ibid., 107: 46; 124: 3.)

The Practice of the Church

When the gospel was restored the early revelations were to Joseph Smith and the few immediately associated with him before there was a church. When the church was organized with six members evidently there were no quorums, yet the principle appears to have been carried out that whatever was received was presented to those concerned. Many of the revelations were to a group of elders. First a group of elders, and then as soon as the high priests were ordained, a group of high priests met to consider every important matter, this even before the high council had been established. When the manuscript was sent for the Book of Commandments it was certified to by other elders. Then as soon as the Quorum of Twelve and the Quorum of Seventy were organized in 1835 the commandments were submitted to all of the quorums. This plan is plainly set forth in section 108a in the minutes of the general assembly, which show clearly that each quorum was called upon in turn and bore testimony, and evidently each quorum had been required to consider and the various revelations had been submitted to them for that purpose. This is a very clear precedent. Evidently a revelation could not be submitted to a quorum before the quorum was in existence, but the principle of submitting to the priesthood and to the church was early established.

As to ordinations, they were made on the vote of a conference of high priests or a high council of a general conference of the church. Joseph Smith was presented as president of the high priesthood to a conference, but since all could not be there, the matter was again presented to the high priests and the Saints in Zion in 1831. The first Quorum of Twelve was chosen by the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon by the spirit of revelation. They each separately prayed vocally before proceeding.

Then we have the statement made by Orson Hyde and printed in the fifth volume of Times and Seasons in 1844. This was a short time after the death of Joseph Smith. Of course this has not been taken as a law to the church; but has been taken as a statement of custom in the old church. We do not know of it being contradicted, though this is apparently the only evidence we have that Joseph Smith made that statement. This however, carries with it at least the silent testimony of other men at that time. He made other statements at that time with which we do not agree. But the only question is as to its authenticity. It has been freely quoted by the Reorganized Church, as in the tract in 1864 probably by E. C. Briggs, in the tract by Jason W. Briggs, by Heman C. Smith, and others. But it also has been quoted among ourselves as stating the rule and was so far as we know without objection published and distributed for many years in the Manual of the Priesthood, by Charles Derry. The substance of it has been reaffirmed by leading men of the Reorganization as the rule governing—not in an ironclad way, that every communication must be presented first to one quorum and only when it has passed the first to be presented to a second quorum—but the principle of the submission of any document in the nature of a revelation to the quorums of the church and especially the three leading quorums: the First Presidency, the Twelve, and Seventy, is well established.

We quote elsewhere the action taken on each revelation by the Reorganized Church. We have already noted the action taken in 1854 that all revelations should be submitted to the Twelve and that they should try to examine the same.

A later resolution by the Reorganized Church appears in General Conference Resolutions, Number 308, paragraph 7, adopted in 1886:

"The sole mouthpiece of the church," is Jesus Christ. We are to receive commandments as a church only as Christ communicates the same; and we are entitled as a church, to be first satisfied that Christ did give any commandment purporting to come from him, before accepting or receiving the same.

Then when in 1901 President Joseph Smith made an oral statement of a communication received the night before which he stated he was directed by the Spirit thus to present, the following motion was at once made and adopted:

Concerning the Statement and Revelation, presented in open conference, the following was adopted: Resolved, That as soon as practicable the matter be prepared and placed before the quorums of the church, after which it shall be presented to the conference. (Resolution 500.)

We note also in Doctrine and Covenants (1841) the recognition of the right of the people to accept or approve or disapprove:

And a commandment I give unto you that you should fill all these offices and approve of those names which I have mentioned, or else disapprove of them, at my general conference.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 46.

Of similar purport is the following received by the Reorganization in 1897:

The quorum of twelve, my servants, may choose and appoint one of their number to take the place of my servant Alexander H. Smith, and if they shall choose William H. Kelley, from among them for this place it will be pleasing unto me; nevertheless, if directed by the spirit of revelation and wisdom, they may choose another.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 3.

We may also note that in 1906 after President Joseph Smith stated he had a revelation the people were asked to fast and pray and the matter was represented in order that we might have more light and more certainty, and when the revelation was finally received it was presented to the quorums in order: first, to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy; afterwards to the other quorums. In another instance a revelation was received and not accepted by the church, and later the church was instructed to let their action stand. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 7.)

Principle Well Established

It would therefore appear from ancient Israel down that this principle has been recognized, and the more the subject is studied the more evidence do we find of such care in testing. As already indicated, this by no means prevents the voice of prophecy (1 Corinthians 12, 14) nor speaking by way of exhortation and excitation, that which is given him.

But that which is to govern the church and be a law to the church must come through the President and should be carefully scrutinized by the quorums and presented to the body. And when men are called to office there is wisdom in having first such preliminary considerations before presentation to the body and election.

Statements of Leading Men

We have published elsewhere in this number in a separate column a few statements by some of the leading men of the Reorganization. Much more could be written. Thus we note in the decision of John F. Philips, United States circuit judge for the western division of the western district of Missouri, in the Temple Lot Suit, the following statement as printed on page 37 of the tract, "Decision of John F. Philips":

Claim is made by the Utah Church that this doctrine is predicated on a revelation made to Joseph Smith in July, 1843. No such revelation was ever made public during the life of Joseph Smith, and under the law of the church it could not become an article of faith and belief until submitted to and adopted by the church. This was never done.

Of course Judge Philips is not an officer of the church, but his decision was evidently founded on the testimony before him. It gives the opinion of an impartial judge as to the legal value of all of the evidence submitted, and it is pertinent to his decision. Nor do we know of it ever having been called in question.

In a tract published in Great Salt Lake City in 1864 entitled, "Polygamy," and signed "Truth conquers," and probably prepared by E. C. Briggs, we note in a discussion of polygamy a reference to the statement ascribed to Orson Hyde:

Now we ask, was this revelation on polygamy brought before the quorums to be tested? We answer, No! On the contrary, it was taught in the secret chambers, to this brother and that sister, creeping into houses, leading captive silly women, and not published as a revelation, until many years after the death of Joseph Smith. If it had been brought before the quorums, would it not have run against a snag? Would it not have been manifested to those in possession of the Spirit of God, that it was in direct contradiction to the revealed will of God? Most assuredly it would.—Polygamy, p. 29.

A similar statement was made by J. W. Briggs in his tract, "The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy":

Again; upon the trial of Sidney Rigdon, by Brigham Young and his associates, Rigdon's revelations were condemned and set aside, on the ground that they had not been submitted to proper authority for examination and sanction. This same rule applied to the document of 1843 requires it to be set aside. The measure they meted to Sidney is here measured to them.—The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy, p. 285.

These later were used against the Utah Church, but as already pointed out, this statement ascribed to Orson Hyde has also been used by us to indicate the practice in the old church—not alone in connection with controversy.

Call to Office

The principle is deeply engraved in the practice of the church. We are distinctly told that communications in the nature of revelation to direct in branch or district should come through the recognized authority. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14.)

It has long been the practice of the church to submit calls to the priesthood in the branch to the branch priesthood before submitting to the church. General Conference Resolution number 312 requires the presentation to the church, as well as Doctrine and Covenants 17: 16. In our stakes a call to the priesthood is presented to the stake presidency, then to the stake high council before being presented to the branch or stake. And the usual practice has been, if there is any objection to any name in local, district, or stake, to postpone action and endeavor to remove the objection. Local men are usually advised to be careful and go slow in the matter of ordination, and especially if there is any objection made.

The reason for thus submitting is that it gives an opportunity for quiet consideration. There may be a variety of objections; not all need impair a brother's usefulness. It is to the best interest of the man called that there should be this opportunity for quiet consideration first, as it provides a proper opportunity and place for objections to be made known. It protects also the church and it protects the presiding officer.

It should present to him the good will of his brethren who share with him a portion of the burden. The principal burden is, of course, his, but they share that burden with him as they also have the responsibility of presenting themselves in prayer before their heavenly Father to learn his will, and thereby they may render the stronger support to their brother, the presiding officer, and they may also lend the better counsel.

Ordinations in the General Church

This same principle applies in the general church. The seven presidents of seventy call from the eldership to the office of seventy (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43; 120: 10), and it will be noted that this is by the spirit of wisdom and revelation. They also have the right to nominate the seven presidents of seventy (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 1-5; 124: 5). But while this is true and by the spirit of revelation, nevertheless these men so called are first presented by the seven presidents to the First Presidency and Twelve. It has happened several times that names have been there held up. It does not follow that it is for reasons that reflect upon the brother called. If it receives the approval of the First Presidency and Twelve it is then presented to the seventies before the nomination comes to the General Conference. It has occurred that a name has been held up by the seventies.

High priests receive the approval of at least the First Presidency and then of the high priests quorum before being presented to the church. Patriarchs are called by the spirit of revelation through the Quorum of Twelve (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 17) but these names are first presented to the First Presidency, and then to the high priests quorum before presentation to the conference. This protects the man immediately affected—the one who is called, and it gives the support of their brethren to the men through whom the call is made. If a member of the Quorum of Twelve has what to him is the spirit of inspiration to call a man as an evangelical minister, this must first be approved by the rest of his quorum, and then by the First Presidency and quorum of high priests before presentation to the body.

If the names are first made public, such calm consideration becomes difficult. That it is for the good of the church should be apparent; that the responsibility is upon the church and upon the officers to test should also be clear from that which is written. But it is also for the protection in a double sense of the man through whom the communication comes. It should give him the support of his brethren; also if men are appointed or ordained who are not called of God or who are unworthy, it not only reflects back upon his work, but may seriously hinder it. A man may be possessed of splendid gifts for one position in the church and yet from that very fact be disqualified for a different work.

But the questions may well be asked and have been, What if one or more of the quorums do not approve? What if objection is made and persists? Is the church prevented from receiving and acting upon that which has been received for the direction of the church? Can, in fact, a few men or a quorum automatically prevent the body of the church, the people, from receiving that which has been presented?

Now there certainly is no presumption that the quorums are infallible. There is a strong presumption with practically all of us that what is received and presented is divine. That presumption is very strong, so strong that when there are added to it personal reasons, objections are rare. There is of course also the presumption of the integrity of other members of the priesthood and of a quorum in its action.

Care in Ordaining

The matter would not seem to be extraordinarily difficult though it is in part still a moot question. In branch, district, or stake, the advice has usually been to go slow, but one or two members of the priesthood could not rightfully continue to prevent church action. The proper procedure would seem to be for the officer who presents the call to look into it.

The same principle would seem to apply where the seventies present nominations for the seventy or the Twelve for evangelical ministers or the president of the church to the First Presidency or Twelve or especially that which affects the doctrine of the church. If it strikes a snag it should be looked into. That is in the spirit of ascertaining the nature of the objection and if reasonably possible to remove the objection. Normally that would appear to be by the officer or body who presents the document. This has been done in the past, for while the truth is of God, the language used is largely if not principally that of men.

But if a humble Christian effort fails to remove the objection and the difference is one which cannot be reconciled, then it would seem in reason that if the objection is only from one quorum or from a small number of the priesthood, the document and the objection may be laid before the body.

If two quorums, however, object and those two are two of the three leading or "apostolic" quorums of the church, the Presidency, Twelve, and seventies, there are many who would seriously raise the question as to how to proceed, though we believe it would be agreed that a general assembly would possess the authority. Certain it is that the work of God cannot be permanently held up by the opposition of a few.

Summary

We do not know that this interpretation is directly challenged by anyone. It seems to the writer, however, that there are two ideals, even if we do not consciously work out these ideals to a logical conclusion. The one ideal is the prophet of God who stands in the very stead of God and who speaks by the voice of God (Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2). This presents factors of absolute authority. If it is followed out as is sometimes partially construed, it would mean that no communication should be submitted to the quorums nor to the body, but should only be promulgated.

The other ideal is one of a broad brotherhood. Our late president Joseph Smith stated clearly that the president of the church may be mistaken as to the authenticity of a revelation. He also stated that the right to revelation inheres to every man possessing that gift. The burden is great upon those on whom is laid the presidency over the whole of the high priesthood and over the church, and especially upon him who is the president of the church. According to this ideal not only have his counselors to bear a portion of the burden, but it also inheres in others in the church—in the quorums—to weigh and consider and to test—not in a position of standing between him and the church, but as standing rather with him to uphold his hands in all brotherliness and bearing that portion of the burden which it is their duty to undertake, that they may thereby protect both the prophet and the church, if any error should be disclosed, and that they may also, as is usual, offer the support of their testimony to that which is received. Their responsibility is great to approach the work in that spirit of brotherhood which is akin to the Spirit of God.

On the other hand, the church does not want to attempt to limit either our heavenly Father or his prophet. It was for this reason that the resolution presented by the seventies during the late conference was voted down. It will be noted that the resolution merely stated that communications in the nature of a revelation should be presented to the quorums prior to their presentation to the conference. It was not made compulsory, but those who objected interpreted it as compulsory and hence moved quickly after the discussion to lay it on the table. It was under this misapprehension that the action was taken. At least those who were responsible for the motion denied that it was their intention absolutely to prohibit, but rather only to indicate and recognize the general rule.

Those who hold to this position of a brotherhood do not attempt thereby to deny Doctrine and Covenants 19:2 but interpret this passage in the light of other scripture, as it has in fact been interpreted continuously in the past. Furthermore it may be open to question that God demands of humanity unthinking obedience. Is not rather the position that he has taken that of a father, "Come let us reason together," that he has given man his free agency and his intelligence and expects him to use both?

The above constitutes a brief review of the law. The reader will no doubt distinguish between the fundamental law and the statement of the practice of the church in ancient and modern times. Also the opinions of individuals, however high in the church, is not the constitutional law. But on the other hand it is well recognized that practice does become law and is the law until the contrary is shown. The burden is naturally upon those who question to prove the contrary.

We know very little about how the prophets received and presented their communications in Old Testament times. There are many other things concerning which we know but little; but the absence of a definite, clear-cut knowledge is no proof against established custom. To the contrary, the burden is upon those who would appeal to constitutional or statutory law against established custom to prove that there is such a law. For the presumption is that custom is in accordance with established law.

The action of General Conference is the statutory law to this church, and hence binding. Opinions of leading representatives are fairly considered, and would be considered in any court as a declaration of the ecclesiastical law governing the body, and especially is this true in the absence of any equally validated denial. But the constitutional and statutory law and the reason of the law is also set forth above.

We have not only attempted to set forth the fundamental law, the practice, and the opinions of leading men, but also the reason for the law reaching back into common consent, free will, and the reason why it is wise that in branch, district, stake, or general church the call of men to office should be presented to the proper officers of the priesthood, so that there is opportunity for calm and deliberate consideration, and a like reason exists in the case of communications declaring the law to govern the church.

But this does not infer the establishment of an ironclad rule, though it is a statement of the principles that should govern as a rule. The practice of the church has been one of open-mindedness to receive the law of God individually and collectively as it may be presented, and as is so clearly set forth by President F. M. Smith in the brief extract from a sermon which appears in this issue of the HERALD.

We trust the above will make the reason clear to our readers why such documents are presented to the various quorums and then to the church, and that it will also assist to a better understanding of these two ideals. We are called to be workers together with God. That means we must work together, as well as working with our heavenly Father.

Inspiration is not a departure from reality. The more inspired a man is, the better able he should be for the tasks of everyday life, to see and to do that which is best. Inspiration should give a clearer understanding of our problems. The man who is inspired does not therefore always bring in the fact of inspiration, but strives rather to understand and solve the problems confronting him and his associates and often presents the solution in a matter-of-fact way. The inspired man is in a true sense both priest and king of God, for the king is the one who knows and inspiration helps him the better to understand—and the priest of God always serves.

On Receiving of Revelations

A few statements by leaders of the church on how revelations are received by the church.

A great many statements on the above subject may be found. We give the following only as illustrating the position taken by some of the leading officers of the church.

The statements in the Temple Lot Suit were reduced to writing, read over by the witness, and then signed and sworn to. Care was therefore taken to make an accurate statement.

It must be remembered that the method pursued was that of questions and answers. For that reason this particular subject was taken up at several different points of the examination. The questions are omitted and only the answers given. This may cause a little confusion in reading, particularly that from pages 63 and 64 as it is apparent that he is there discussing both communications in the branch and calls to general offices of the church. This is at an early point of his examination and the questions bring out simply what the lawyer was asking at the time. Of course a communication to call a man to an office in the church in a branch is not presented to the quorums. Even to-day a call to the high priesthood as a high counselor in a stake is not first presented to the high priests quorum. The law provides that a high priest may be ordained at the direction of a General Conference or high council. (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17.)

It may also be noted that President Smith plainly stated that the testimony of Orson Hyde is not law to the church. This has long been understood. At the same time, he states clearly that he believes the statement to be a correct one.

Following these various extracts from the testimony of Joseph Smith there is a short extract from W. W. Blair. Also some further statements made by our late president, Joseph Smith, and printed in the Conference Minutes or SAINTS' HERALD. Also a statement by President F. M. Smith and an extract from a sermon preached by the church historian, W. W. Smith, October 31, 1920, and after careful revision printed in the SAINTS' HERALD for February 9, 1921, and also in Zion's Ensign, and in tract form.

Joseph Smith in Temple Lot Suit

"The methods which were used in their adoption by the Reorganized Church required that they should be presented to the quorums, and acted upon by them; they are then presented to the body, and accepted by the body in Conference."—Abstract of Evidence, p. 56.

"As a rule, before a president or high priest can be ordained there must be some kind of a manifestation in regard to it individually, before he can be ordained to any office in the Melchisedec priesthood. There is no law of the church that such a revelation or manifestation before it can be enforced must be accepted by the quorum. It requires an acceptance by the body; I should say, acted upon and accepted by the body before which it comes, either a branch, district conference, or General Conference. It is owing to the nature of the revelation. For instance; a man may be called and ordained in the body or branch. In a congregational organization he may rise and speak what he considers is the voice of the Spirit, and be ordained by reason of this manifestation without the matter being submitted to the different quorums; but if it is a matter to be presented to the body, and to become a rule of action for the general body, it must be presented in that way; but in rising in a local congregation it must be acted on immediately by the voice of the people there assembled.

"I do not know that I can just turn to the law of the church to that effect. There are precedents in the Book of Mormon for it. You are asking for a special law of the church to that effect; I have stated that I do not know where I can find it, or whether I can find it. It is in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that has been identified here. That is, the principle is undoubtedly there. Yes, sir, the principle is in the authorized publications of the church prior to 1852, but I do not know that I can give you the exact location of it. What you read to me in your question, to-wit: 'There is a way by which all revelations purporting to be from God to any man can be tested,' down to the words, 'Brother Joseph said, "Let no revelation go to the people until it has been tested,"' that in itself is not a law of the church; it is a statement of one Orson Hyde with reference to what was the rule of the church; I say that is not the law of the church, as it is contained here. That is a statement of Orson Hyde, as to what was the rule, and he belonged to the Utah Church. I believe the statement to be a correct one."—Abstract of Evidence, pp. 63, 64.

"The right of revelation did not inhere in the First Presidency, because the right of revelation inheres to every member of the church who is possessed of the gift, but the gift to receive revelation for the church and its guidance inheres in the Presidency of the church, and whatever purports to be revelation is still tested, as has been the custom; that is, whatever purports to be revelation for the doctrine or government of the church, or affecting either in any material issue, before it becomes authority, must be presented to and acted upon by the presiding quorums of the church—the

Somewhere I've read: "If you want a tree for today, plant the poplar; but if you want it to be there to-morrow, plant the elm."

"The poplar and the elm are both ambitious, but the poplar lives for the present alone, and the elm has thought for the future. In the eagerness of its ambition, the poplar sends forth branches in the spring without developing the strength to support them in the sluggish days of summer. Its roots are constricted, its spread is narrow, its life brief.

"The elm grows roots that are deep and spreading. Expansion is its nature. Its fibers are tough and strong; it weathers wind and storm; it lives and grows for generations.

"The one provides for the present alone; the other has thought for the future."

A savings account is roots for future branching.

A member with a savings account owes tithing and he has the money to pay it with.

Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy especially."—Abstract of Evidence, p. 72.

"Revelations as I understand it, are received in different ways, sometimes by impression, sometimes by the person becoming conscious of it, and sometimes by audible voice heard by the individual by whom the revelation is received, and sometimes by a direct messenger, and sometimes by what we understand to be the intervention of the Spirit. No, sir, it does not rest on a man's own judgment as to whether or not the revelation is received by impression, or by audible voice from without. I do not so understand it. If anybody says anything to me I understand that they say it, and if I hear what they say clearly and comprehend it, it is not a matter of my own judgment as to whether I hear it or not. I am forced to accept it and judgment as to whether or not I heard the thing is not called into question, for it is a matter that is not involved in doubt at all. Whether I accept it depends on circumstances under which the communication is received, such as whether there is a reason for it, or occasion for it, or whether it comports with that already received upon that subject, if anything has been said upon that subject. A man may be mistaken even though he be the president of the church, as to the genuineness or authenticity of revelations claimed to have been received.

"Revelations received are not binding upon the church, nor do they become law or rules of action for the church until they have been formally adopted by the body; when they are accepted by the church, then they become binding upon it. Yes, sir, it is a law of the Reorganized Church that new revelations may be given and accepted by the church, and thereby become law to the church."—Abstract of Evidence, pp. 75, 76.

"The Reorganized Church gets its authority for submitting to the quorums and body for their indorsement, revelations, after they have been received, from the Bible—the teaching of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church in an early day, which required that the common consent of the people should be obtained, I may say shall be obtained; for I take it that it is mandatory.

"We have an illustration in the giving of the law from Sinai, and its submission to the people by Moses, and its acceptance by them, and the consequences attending its acceptance or rejection according to the word of God.

"This is not a new mode that has been introduced into the church since the reorganization. The Reorganization has endeavored to follow the teaching and precepts of the old church from its inception.

"Now there is one item of the law that requires or states, that the three leading quorums of the church have what may be called concurrent jurisdiction, and the decision by either one of them is equivalent to a decision by either of the others, thus exercising or maintaining a neutralizing power in cases of conflict, so that the rights of the people may be kept free from imposition by false doctrine or theory by anybody; and also in the rules of the Doctrine and Covenants, which require that matters of that importance shall be submitted to the body for their action, for approval or disapproval, at the conferences held from time to time when they meet."—Abstract of Evidence, pp. 85, 86.

W. W. Blair in Temple Lot Suit

"In the Reorganized Church revelations are first presented to the First Presidency, then they pass to the Twelve, then to the high council, then to the high priests, the seventy, the elders, the priests, and the teachers, and the deacons—that is the method of procedure; and if it meets with no snags, then it is presented to the body, the entire body of the church, and if accepted by them, it becomes binding upon the church. This was the course adopted from the beginning as I understand it. I do not say this was the course from my own knowledge, I say it was the course according to my understanding from the history.

"I have not stated that there was a Quorum of Twelve at the time this revelation was received. At that time there was no seventy. This was prior to 1834. This revelation I have been reading was presented to them. I can give you my knowledge on the subject, if you desire it, and read it to you also. It is presented here in section 61, which I have already read, that they held a conference with them and agreed upon what they would accept as the word of God. They met together in compliance with the requirement, and the presumption is that they proceeded right on in compliance with the spirit of that commandment, and decided what they would receive. That is not altogether a presumption of my own, for it states here that they did that very thing. [Doctrine and Covenants 61: 1, 1835 edition; 41: 1, 1906 edition and since.] There is no other conclusion that can be drawn from what is stated here. We have no evidence of that except what is in the Book of Covenants at that time. At that time they had no church paper printed. That was in 1831, and the Book of Covenants was printed in 1835. The doctrine adopted in 1831 would be the doctrine contained in the New Testament Scriptures and the Book of Mormon. The Bible is placed first in order, and the Book of Mormon comes next, then they were to remember the church ordinances and covenants to do them. [42: 5.] That we find in the revelation of February, 1831.

"Yes, sir, I say in the Reorganized Church, when a revelation is given it has to go through all the quorums; and then through the body of the church, and be accepted, before it becomes a law binding upon the church."—Abstract of Evidence. pp. 129, 130.

"Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessings; ye that hear me; and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest of all cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me."—Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1.

"Hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together. in my name, even Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, the Savior of the world, inasmuch as they believe on my name and keep my commandments; again I say unto you, Hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you; for verily I say, As ye have assembled yourselves together according to the commandment wherewith I commanded you, and are agreed as touching this one thing, and have asked the Father in my name, even so ye shall receive. Behold, verily I say unto you, I give unto you this first commandment, that ye shall go forth in my name, every one of you, excepting my servants Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon. And I give unto them a commandment that they shall go forth for a little season, and it shall be given by the power of my Spirit when they shall return; and ye shall go forth in the power of my Spirit, preaching my gospel. two by two, in my name, lifting up your voices as with the voice of a trump, declaring my word like unto angels of God; and ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying, Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. And all this ye shall observe to do as I have commanded concerning your teaching, until the fullness of my scriptures*are given. And as ye shall lift up your voices by the Comforter, ye shall speak and prophesy as seemeth me good; for, behold, the Comforter knoweth all things, and beareth record of the Father and of the Son."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 1, 2, 5.

It will be noted that they were commanded to assemble "to agree upon my word." Then evidently they assembled according to the commandment and were agreed as touching this one thing; also that the principles of the doctrine were to be the principles of the gospel in the Bible and Book of Mormon and to observe the covenants and church articles to do them. Joseph Smith in 1900

"I wish to make a few remarks; I do not know that I will edify you or change your sentiments in any form; but I have been seriously impressed during the last year and especially for the last six months touching this conference and its outcome, and I strove earnestly and continuously that the Lord might in his infinite wisdom give us the instruction that so many seemed to want, to desire.

"I do not know that any of you may realize the condition that the position I have occupied has put me into; I do not know whether you may realize the peculiar temptation that would beset a man of whom so much was expected and from whom so much was anticipated in relation to the voice of revelation. The peculiar temptation that must necessarily beset a man who has strong opinions of his own as to church work, as to doctrine, as to theory and practice, to formulate his opinions and add a 'Thus saith the Lord' to them. Knowing that under ordinary circumstances a great many would receive those views with a 'Thus saith the Lord' attached to them without serious question; realizing also that there was an element in the church—must necessarily be there properly—that would scan anything that bears the impress of revelation closely, especially anything affecting the word as it is written to us and the ideas that have obtained among us upon that word. . . .

"I hope that none of the brethren will go hence with the thought in their minds that I have not tried and placed myself in a receptive position before God. I am in no sense what is called a spiritist. I believe that if a man opens the avenues of his soul to the incomings of the evil spirits, he does it to his hurt, and hence I have been careful to avoid the approaches of the spirit of self-exaltation, and also of those spirits that seek to take captive the servants of God and lead them into disorder; willing only to receive ministration from the Spirit of Christ, who is the Master, the only infallible source to which we can look, from which we can expect anything to substantially help us in this conflict."—Address by Joseph Smith, General Conference Minutes, pp. 294, 295, 296.

Joseph Smith in 1906

"At this juncture [April, 1906] President Joseph Smith stated that matter had been placed in the hands of several of the quorum for their consideration and action, and thought it wise that these quorums be permitted to retire and take the matter under consideration.

"He also stated that it would be understood that when anything comes before the church for examination it was to be passed upon by the three quorums of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. If it passed these quorums it would then be given to the other quorums for examination, and finally to the public in open conference."—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 53, p. 381.

Heman C. Smith

On pages 46 and 47 of Succession in the Presidency of the Church B. H. Roberts quotes some detached extracts from President Smith's speech of acceptance of April 6, 1860, and especially criticizes these words, as extracted therefrom:

"I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you, or the code of good morals."

Mr. Roberts's criticism is based upon the thought that a prophet should not be governed except by revelation to himself, and should not be bound by the voice of the body. He evidently has overlooked the fact that God himself does not force upon the church an edict without consent of the church. In the revelation of 1841 he names the men who should fill the leading offices in the church, and then adds:

"And a commandment I give unto you that you should fill all these offices and approve of those names which I have mentioned, or else disapprove of them, at my general conference, etc."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 46.

According to this, God himself would not force upon the church that which it did not approve; but Mr. Roberts's ideal prophet would have no regard to church approval. He has perhaps overlooked the further fact that according to Orson Hyde, Joseph the Seer has established a rule that revelations were to be approved by the quorums ere they were promulgated.

Mr. Hyde says:

"There is a way by which all revelations purporting to be from God through any man can be tested. Brother Joseph gave us the plan, says he, when all the quorums are assembled and organized in order, let the revelation be presented to the quorums, if it pass one let it go to another, and if it pass that, to another, and so on until it has passed all the quorums; and if it pass the whole without running against a snag, then says he, it wants inquiring into; you must see to it. It is known to some who are present that there is a quorum organized where revelations can be tested. Brother Joseph said, let no revelation go to the people until it has been tested there."—Times and Seasons, vol 5, pp. 649, 650.

Mr. Roberts also fails to notice the positive assertion of President Smith as follows:

"I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me."

This indicates that he would not submit to any power other than the one that sent him, though he, as President of the church, would not promulgate any doctrine until approved.—True Succession in Church Presidency, pp. 31, 32.

President Frederick M. Smith's Views on Revelation

At a certain time of my life it became necessary for me, especially since I was asked to accept a position that is unique among all the organizations of the world, to give considerable thought to this question of how God shall reveal himself to his people. There was a disposition at one time on my part to limit God as to how he should reveal his will. But I passed this point and have been able to say, If thou, oh God, art desirous of revealing thy will to us, or to me, be it far from me to say how. If it be that thou desirest to write across the arch of thy heaven those words that thou shalt see fit to transmit to thy people, then give me the wisdom to read. Or if thou dost choose to manifest thy power in the thunderous tones that thou art capable of giving, so that they will ring through all the arch of heaven, let my ears be open. Or if, in the still, small voice that comes from within, thou shalt choose to reveal thy will to me, then let thy Spirit attune my spiritual ear to the reception of thy word. Or if thou dost choose to utilize those powers with which thou hast by nature endowed me, quickened by thine own processes of development, to transmit through them the message that thou hast to give to thy people, then my pen shall be ready. Or if thou dost choose to bathe my soul in thy Spirit until my spiritual vision shall behold what thou dost desire thy people to accomplish, even then shall I endeavor as thy instrument to transmit the message to thy people.

And so, when there arise persons claiming that they have had the will of the Lord revealed to them, that such and such is wrong in the church, and that such and such would be right, the safeguard that God himself has placed before you is always available for your protection, and you have the right, and not only the right, but the duty to weigh that which shall come, and be alert to the fact that God will reveal himself in the way that pleaseth him best; but always and at all times shall that will be in harmony and consistent with his revealments in the past, however they may have come.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 67, p. 49, January 21, 1920.

Walter W. Smith

"I believe it would be quite a dangerous thing to do to lay down a precedent that this church was to be guided, governed, or directed by the revelations of any one man or any group of men or any class of men, if they are not safeguarded by the witness and testimony of their fellows and the common consent of the people to whom the revelation is given, whether it be to a branch, a district, a stake, or to the general church. I have been under the direction of the general officers of this church for a good many years and I have always followed this rule. I do not now call to mind a single policy of the church, like the ordination of a man, the choosing of the location for a church building, the purchase of materials or otherwise—I say I do not now call to mind any time when any branch or district or stake of the church under my ministry has ever done anything without the common consent of the group. No, not even ordained a deacon, and that sometimes is supposed to be a very minor consideration.

"The laws that are to govern this church are to be surrounded by this safeguard. This church is not to be governed by the revelations, prophecies, visions, or dreams of its leaders without first securing the common consent of those governed.

"I want to read to you what to me in looking over this matter had more than ordinary meaning, meaning larger than I think it had ever had before. Turning back to section 1, I want to read the concluding paragraph. The Lord said:

"For behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever."

"The revelations in this Book of Doctrine and Covenants are not based upon the ipse dixit of any one man. Whether it is Joseph Smith the Martyr, Joseph Smith his son, or Frederick M. Smith, the revelations are only binding to us in the degree and to the extent that we have the witness of the Spirit touching their truthfulness."—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 68, p. 125.

Action in the Reorganized Church on Revelations Received

Believing it would be of interest, we have examined the minutes of the past conferences and the reports in the HERALD and give herewith a brief summary of the action taken on each of the revelations received and presented to the Reorganized Church.

It will be noted that there is no absolute uniformity. At first all revelations were presented to the Quorum of Twelve in accordance with General Conference Resolution 15:

"That this conference authorize the twelve holding the highest authority in the priesthood, assembled at Zarahemla, as a council to try and examine all revelation and manifestations, that has or may come through any member of this church, male or female, and that such revelation or manifestations after having been examined by this council and declared to be the word of God, may be taught as such until the next General Conference shall reject or receive it as the law. And if any member of the church assumes to teach, as law or doctrine, any revelation or manifestation before being presented to this council, shall be considered a transgressor of the law, and proceeded against as such."

None of these revelations were included in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants until 1878. The record, from the manner of presentation, naturally infers that the revelation of 1873 was likewise presented to the Quorum of Twelve and this is confirmed by the statement of Josiah Ells, who was a member of that body at the time.

We may add also to the statement below that each of the names were taken up separately and carefully considered. This included the two called to the First Presidency, the two released from the Twelve, the men called to the high priests quorum and to the office of seventy, and the nomination by the bishop of his counselors. The names were not considered informally in 1873 but taken up individually and discussed and approved on separate motions. This later statement is made at this point simply to avoid recopying the memorandum already made.

Revelation of 1861: Apparently no vote was taken upon this at the time nor was it submitted to the conference. It is found in SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 2, page 162, and was set out in connection with the first epistle of the Twelve under the presidency of the late Joseph Smith. It was evidently submitted to the Twelve in accordance with the previous resolutions of General Conference, received the approval of the Quorum of Twelve. There hardly appears to have been an able body of seventy at the time. Receiving the approval of the Twelve, it was sent out to the church, but not acted upon by the church until 1878 when they voted to include it in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Revelation of 1863: Section 115 was called up by J. W. Briggs, the president of the Twelve. It had evidently been submitted to the Twelve and received and approved. Others of the Twelve bore testimony to it before the substance of it was presented to the conference. (Vol. 3, p. 197.)

Section 116 was given May 4, 1865. This was given during a joint council session of the First Presidency and Twelve. They fasted and prayed to ask the Lord for light. This was received and unanimously accepted. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 7, pp. 163, 164.)

The revelation of March 3, 1873, is discussed in SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 20, pages 285, 286, 289, 290, 291, 293. It was presented first by J. W. Briggs, the president of the Twelve. It appears that there were then only five members of the Twelve. Two of these were released by the document and seven others called. Provision was also made for the better organization of the seventy. Though it was presented to the body it was presented to the body by the president of the Twelve and had been first presented to the Twelve, hence evidently had received the approval of that body as had all these earlier revelations. This conference was one of the most peaceful they had ever enjoyed and was practically unanimous in all action taken. (This also was not included in Doctrine and Covenants until 1878.)

The revelation of 1882 when presented to the conference came as a communication from the Twelve. It was signed as a revelation by Joseph Smith by "command of the Spirit" and bore the signed approval of the Quorum of Twelve, and of the seventy, a unanimous approval signed by their respective presidents and secretaries. It was also voted upon by the other quorums and the body. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 29, p. 321.)

Section 119, given April 11, 1887, was also presented to the Twelve and Seventy first, and then to the other quorums and finally to the body. There was considerable discussion in 1886 in the matter of receiving revelations. It was quite strongly urged that the only question to investigate was that it comes through the proper channel. This discussion was continued in the HERALD, but it is significant to note that from this time forward every revelation was submitted to the Twelve and Seventy and received their approval before it came before the body. Some of them were presented to each quorum of elders. This was true of section 120, received April 8, 1890. But all of them received the approval of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy without exception and as a rule from 1890 on, at least were submitted to each of the bodies of the priesthood: the high priests, the elders, the bishopric, the priests, and the Aaronic priesthood. The action of the conference on section 119 is set forth in the SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 34, p. 299.

Section 120 was received on April 8, 1890, and was presented to the First Presidency and Twelve, the quorum of seventy, the high priests, the bishops, the first, second, fourth, and fifth quorums of elders, to the priests, teachers, and deacons before being presented to the body.

In 1894 the answers made by Joseph Smith in 1885 were by vote of the conference included in the Doctrine and Covenants. This had to do with various members of the First Presidency and Twelve with regard to their being sustained by the body and was presented as the voice of the Spirit. It may be noted that these were accepted by the leading quorums prior to their being voted upon by the conference or accepted as law and printed in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It was not formally presented to the quorums, but evidently had received their approval prior to 1894.

On April 15, 1894, section 122 was presented to the church. It was presented to the First Presidency, Twelve, the first seventy and second seventy, high priests, elders, the first, second, fourth, third, and fifth quorums of elders and those not in a quorum, to the bishopric, to the priests, and also to the teachers and deacons. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 41, p. 257.)

Section 123 is a report of a meeting of the joint council. Section 124, the next revelation, was presented in 1897 to each of the quorums in turn. Prior to its presentation to the body it was in turn presented to the Presidency, Twelve, high priests, and elders. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 44, p. 241.)

Then in 1901, on the 15th day of April, President Joseph Smith came before the conference and stated specifically that he was bidden to come before the house and tell what had been given him the night before as light and instruction. This was, however, immediately referred to the various quorums and two days later, having been considered by each of the quorums in turn, was then read to the body and acted upon by the body. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 48, pp. 321, 322.)

On the 18th of April, 1902, President Joseph Smith presented a vision to the conference which is reported as section 126 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This, however, was presented for the approval or disapproval of the church (par. 13) and apparently was presented to the quorums before its presentation to the body. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 49, p. 371.)

In April, 1906, section 127 was presented to the church. President Joseph Smith stated in advance that he had "light" and the matter was referred to the joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric. They reported back, recommending a day of fasting and prayer, and in fact this revelation was again presented before the Lord for additional light. As a result section 127 was received on April 14. It was presented to the quorums in turn and approved by them and then for the first time was it presented to the body. The first statement by President Joseph Smith was only in very general terms. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 53, pp. 381, 386, 387.)

The next communications were received in 1909 and included sections 128 and 129. A meeting of the Melchisedec priesthood had been held for several days, fasting and praying for light on the economic questions. As a result section 128 was presented to the Melchisedec priesthood in mass meeting, but they immediately adjourned, dividing into quorum capacity, and in quorum capacity considered this communication. Immediately after, section 129 was also presented to the quorums in order. Section 128 was presented first to the Melchisedec priesthood because they had been meeting in mass conference, but was considered in quorum capacity and unanimously approved before submitted to the church. Section 129 was received first by the quorums in order and then read and presented to the church. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 56, pp. 392, 393.)

Section 130 was received on April 14, 1913. As reported in SAINTS' HERALD, volume 60, page 402, it went directly to the quorums first before being presented to the body.

Section 131 received on April 5, 1914, was presented first to the quorums and when approved by them was read to the body. (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 61, p. 374.)

Section 132, received by President F. M. Smith, was presented first to the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric on April 5 and then to the quorums before being presented to the body.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 63, p. 373.

The last two revelations received by the church, that of April, 1920, and that of October 2, 1922, were both read to the conference and then referred to the quorums.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 67, pp. 349, 350; vol. 69, p. 923.

LETTERS AND NEWS

From the Nation's Capital

May we have a little space in which to tell what has been taking place here in Washington, the Capitol City. There have been and are young people here from different sections of the country who came first as war workers for the Government, and while some have gone home others are here more or less permanently.

Under the guiding hand of Brother Davidson, a Sunday school was organized in their home with Brother Froyd as teacher. There was a membership of about fifteen, mostly young girls, and with their young enthusiasm and devotion to the church we had a splendid spiritual meeting with us and many valuable lessons were learned.

One never-to-be-forgotten Sunday President Frederick M. Smith met with us. We had an all-day picnic out in Virginia at the home of Brother and Sister Froyd. The day was ideal for such an occasion. There was a spirit at our morning prayer meeting which made our hearts one and made us feel that although far away from the center place the distance was swept aside and we were one in that spirit which unites all.

The dinner under the big trees was a happy incident and our young war workers demonstrated how large appetites could best be satisfied with pickles and pie.

In the afternoon Brother Smith treated us to a rare occasion. He allowed himself to become the center of a circle and gave us the privilege of asking any question we cared to concerning the church work—and no one hesitated. There were questions waiting in line concerning past, present, and future policies. But it was mostly to the future that these young people looked and questions of stewardships, school of prophets, and foreign missions were most plentiful. Brother Fred M. was most generous with his answers, giving us a vision of the future greatness of this work, and as he related an incident which occurred when the first list of students were chosen for the first class in religious education, we were able to see the working of that guiding Spirit leading and directing in these forward-looking policies of the church.

To Brother Fred M. no doubt, this day has long been forgotten as one of many such in a busy life. But to those who were present the personal contact and confidence will be reflected in loyalty and devotion to this cause, which seems just a little bit more ours and a more personal thing than it did before.

We want to express our appreciation to Brother and Sister Davidson for their leadership and for the use of their home in past years. While it must have been a sacrifice to the family to give up their big comfortable living room every Sunday morning there was never an indication to that effect; instead we were met each Sunday with such a cordial welcome we felt it was good to be there, and the influence of that quiet Christian home has made a deep impression on many young lives.

We would like to speak of the work of each member and what they have contributed to the cause, but the work of these girls is not in the past; we will hear from them in the future.

While many changes have occurred in our membership here, we feel that at present we are making real progress toward a permanent organization. We have rented a hall, a splendid place for services, lots of windows, carpets on the floor, and a good piano. Then best of all, we have Brother Edwards to preach for us, and when you have heard one of his sermons then you realize what a privilege that is. His

A Remington Portable For Christmas

The use of the typewriter is constantly on the increase. It is more convenient and gives better effect to write everything on a good typewriter.

The Remington portable is a boon to all, in having an exact replica of the universal keyboard. One who writes with the touch system can sit down to this machine and maintain the usual speed.

Better for the home than larger machines, and indispensable for traveling. Nothing could be finer for a Christmas gift. Upon request we furnish these in a holiday box.

message stands out clear-cut and vivid; it is fascinating to follow step by step his thoughts as they progress and culminate in establishing the main points. Then we have Brother Ray Carmichael for our Sunday school superintendent, and although he may not be with us long, he has already done much to put our school in better shape for real work, and if his plans will permit him to remain with us we feel sure that the work here will have to grow and that a branch can be established in the near future.

May this little group of loyal Saints grow and progress to be a support and an inspiration to those who must carry the burden of the work of establishing Zion, is our wish.

A Letter from New Zealand

I take pleasure in once again writing to let you know that we are still at 468 Colombo Street, Sydenham, Christchurch, and so far cannot complain at our change of residence. There is one thing we do miss, and that is the meetings which we enjoyed with the Saints in Dunedin, but we live in the hopes of seeing the good works established here so that we can resume our associations with the children of God. We are expecting Brothers McConley and Lewis from Australia this month. They are very likely in Auckland at the present moment and will no doubt be a great help to the work there.

I am sorry I could not send my subscription renewal to the HERALD in time this year, but have sent it some time ago now through the Sydney office, and I hope you will get it in due time, also the Autumn Leaves subscription and one for the Journal of History. I would be pleased if you would inclose a renewal notice two months ahead and that would give me time to forward the subscriptions to you. I know I should not require reminding, especially when I enjoy the articles in the church papers so much, but it seems to be a failing amongst us to keep postponing everything till the eleventh hour, a kind of death-bed repentance fallacy. I hope I will be able to keep ahead in the future and so try to lessen your worries at headquarters.

I am inclosing some verses which if acceptable may fill up a space in the HERALD or Autumn Leaves. If, however, they receive their death sentence it will be unnecessary to send me a wireless for at present I have no means of receiving same.

I hope that the conference was a huge success and that the work of God will be better established in all the world. There are many churches in these parts practicing divine healing and speaking in tongues. Surely the minds of the people are becoming enlightened to the truths of God. Is it that the famine for the word of God is abroad? We all pray for the advancement of this latter-day glory and the time to come soon when we shall be fit subjects to partake of the blessings of Zion and so be able to dwell in peace and unity.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. C. BRADLEY.

Willing Helpers

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Dear Brother: Please find inclosed three dollars to apply as tithing. As this is my harvest time I am trying to send one tenth of all I make, as by and by I shall not be making anything. I am anxious to see God's work spread and do not like to hear of any of the missionary families in want. I am a widow seventy years old, and have to live on what my poor old hands can do. For that reason cannot do all I would like but am glad I can do a little.

Your sister in the faith,

ALVENIA J. DALBY.

Orderly Giving

We are quoting from a letter received from Sister Alma Coop, of Estacada, Oregon, who, finding that she has no increase from year to year, is setting aside one tenth of certain things which she raises for the purpose of making her free will offerings:

"We are poor people financially. We have paid our tithing all up on our property and, had we paid only on our income above our real needs without any of the luxuries, we would really have had none to pay. We have pinched ourselves many times in the past to pay what my husband considered our tithing.

"I believe in paying tithing as much as anyone, but why cannot we take our tithing one out of every ten; say one egg out of ten, one bushel of wheat or potatoes out of every ten, one turkey out of ten, or ten cents out of every dollar as we have it? The church would be several thousand dollars ahead in a year and we would not miss it.

"I honestly saved one egg out of every ten last spring from January until July and I never missed them. I sold them for whatever the eggs were worth at the time till I have close to $5. It may not be quite that much or it may be more.

"We live on a farm, a small one, and we may not have any tithing at all if we take it from our income because we really need every cent of our income to live on and, if we follow the inventory plan, I am sure that we will have no tithing this year."

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Ottumwa, Iowa

On November 11 and 12 a two-day meeting was held here under the direction of our beloved district president, Elder D. J. Williams, of Burlington, Iowa. The first meeting was presided over by Elder W. H. Gunn and R. Herrick, of Fort Madison. At 10.30 Elder C. Smith preached a fine sermon, taking for his theme, "Forward." In the afternoon at 2.30 a problems meeting was held, and in the evening a department program. Some of the items given were a talk on "Stopping the leaks" by Brother Herrick, and a paper read from Sister Clara Williams, of Burlington, on "Play in the mental and physical development of the child." Sister E. Hughes, of Ottumwa, gave a talk on "The relation of the home to the church school." Several other good items were given.

The Sunday services began at 9.45 when the district Sunday school superintendent, Sister Ethel A. Lacey, gave us a good talk on the school work. At 10.45 Bishop George P. Lambert preached a very spiritual sermon; of such men the church should be proud. In the afternoon at 2.30 a social service meeting was held in charge of Elders D. J. Williams, William H. Gunn, and F. C. Bevan. It was a very fine meeting, long to be remembered. Words of comfort were given through the Spirit. The priesthood had a meeting at 6.45. The closing service was at 7.45 when Elder C. Smith preached to a good house on "Present-day revelation." Sisters L. Scott and N. Epperly sang a duet, and a solo was rendered by Sister G. Sontee. The whole service was a soul-lifter.

More two-day meetings are advised by the writer.

In Germany

Elder Alexander Kippe has been laboring in eastern Prussia, the farthest east of Germany, where he held a number of meetings of Bible lessons and converted and confirmed four, with others making preparation. He held a sacrament service and ordained one of the number a priest to care for the work. He found them hungry for the truth.

Independence

Thanksgiving Day started gloomy with a high wind and rain, hence there were but few to attend the Thanksgiving service and hear Elder W. W. Smith's earnest presentation of the theme at the Stone Church. His sermon was mostly historical, comparing the philosophy of the Greeks, Romans, Teutons, and Anglo-Saxons, discussing the settlement of North America and its peculiar differentiation from the Spanish or cavaliers. He also strongly criticized faultfinding as a waste of time and presented very optimistically his view of the work and conditions before the church.

The pleasing custom of Thanksgiving observance by the sending of baskets of food to deserving families was again carried out this year in Independence by the I X L ("I excel") and Nonpareil classes of the Stone Church. These classes are large aggregations of young people of about the same personnel in the Sunday school and Religio. Each year they notify the bishop in Zion that they will furnish a basket of food sufficient for a balanced meal for an entire family to the number suggested by the bishop. He does this, giving no names nor addresses, and seeing to the delivery on Thanksgiving eve himself. He says that at no time have the baskets seemed so well filled as this year.

This year there were thirty baskets thus provided, families represented in the class usually furnishing a basket, or in the case of unmarried young people they sometimes pool resources to the same end. We are assured that the response to this was so general that had the number of baskets been double that called for, it would have been supplied.

Mrs. E. S. McNichols is teacher of the I X L Class in Sunday school, with an average attendance of about seventy-five. They use the senior grade Sunday school quarterly as a basis for their study, enlarging the scope to cover the life of Christ and use as collateral evidence the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants.

In the Religio the same young people, with some differences in personnel, meet under the name of Nonpareil ("of unequalled excellence") Class, with Chris B. Hartshorn as teacher and Sister McNichols as assistant teacher. They are discussing the Book of Mormon in a large way, taking up such phases as the rise and fall of nations, America in prophecy, and so forth.

The Sunday morning services on the 3d opened with a goodly attendance at the young people's prayer meeting at 8 o'clock.

The sacrament service at 10.45 was in charge of President E. A. Smith, U. W. Greene, R. V. Hopkins, and James F. Keir. After the passing of the emblems Elder W. W. Smith was asked to lead in prayer on behalf of the sick. Then instead of the usual prayers and testimonies President E. A. Smith delivered a "communion sermon." Because of the large attendance which well fills the auditorium it is difficult at times to carry on a regular prayer and testimony meeting. An opportunity is given in the prayer services held each Sunday afternoon. President Smith took his text from Matthew 16: "Whom do men say that I am?" "On this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This becomes the great question, and the answer the most important in our life. The truth of the gospel stands unchangeable despite the passing of men. He made a splendid argument for continued revelation and the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ. He is the builder and he not only has built, but will build and is building constructively and affirmatively.

Owing to the recent illness of Sister Ruth L. Smith her many friends were glad to see that she was able to attend the sacrament service together with President F. M. Smith and their two daughters, Alice and Lois. She was also out in the evening to hear President F. M. Smith deliver the fifth sermon to the young people.

As usual when President Smith speaks, the upper auditorium was crowded long before the opening hour. The first half hour, from 7.30 to 8, was given to congregational singing. President Smith's subject was, "The essentiality of loyalty in the development of Zion." He spoke in his usually forceful manner concerning the establishment of Zion, stewardships, the need for unselfishness, and the need for loyalty first to the truth and to Christ, and hence to the leading officials of the church in Zion. As the sermon was reported we hope soon to publish it in full, hence do not attempt a review.

The speaker next Sunday evening will be Apostle John F. Garver on "Zion the pure in heart."

On the previous Sunday evening the director of music, Brother H. C. Burgess, had slips distributed and asked everyone to put down his age and list three favorite songs. As a result there were collected 73 lists from those under 25 years of age; 82 between 25 and 49; 30 by those above 50 years of age; and 57 by those who gave no age and therefore were classed by him as old maids and bachelors. It is curious to note that four songs were chosen and led for most of the classifications. Those four songs are in order: "Consecration," 58 votes; "The old, old path," 38 votes; "I need Thee every hour," 31 votes; "In the garden," 30 votes. Fifth place was given to "Admonition," 17 votes. The exceptions are that no one over 50 listed "In the garden," but instead gave second place to "Nearer, my God, to thee," which also received votes from each of the other groups. It will be noticed that "In the garden" and "Nearer, my God, to thee" are in some respects similar. Also "Admonition" was placed in fourth place by the young people, those under 25.

Another point of some interest and significance is the catholicity of taste. Many songs were chosen, but very near the same songs were chosen throughout for each age. The same time the choice was a very wide one. Thus the four leaders receiving a total of only 157 votes from 242 individuals, while these individuals actually cast 590 votes.

On October 8, Mrs. Mary Ann Clark died in the Independence Sanitarium after an illness of two years. Owing to the rush of General Conference local items did not appear at that time hence no report was made.

Sister Clark came to this country in 1840 when three years of age, living in Saint Louis, Missouri, then at Quincy, Illinois, where she joined the church about 1864. Hence she has been a member of the church for fifty-eight years. She was also connected for several years with the women's column in the Ensign. She has lived in Independence only for the past two years of her illness, but has been actively engaged in church work for many years. Sister Clark was the mother of Mrs. A. Morgan who has been reporting the sermons at the Stone Church for several years and reported most of the sermons at General Conference.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending December 2: Mrs. Charles Heck and Baby Heck; Mount Washington, Missouri; Mrs. H. M. Brown, Bevier, Missouri; John W. Clements, Lone Jack, Missouri; and the following from Independence: J. R. Harris, W. C. Chapman, LeRoy Rohrs, Ina Hattey, Catherine Stephens, Dorothy Smith, J. H. Botts, Mrs. B. D. White, and Alexander Klein. X-ray patients: Mrs. John Schneider, Mount Washington, Missouri; and M. A. Etzenhouser, Richard Trowbridge, and LaVerne Allen, all of Independence.

The youth who reads Autumn Leaves regularly knows that the church is an institution worthy of his best efforts.

Kansas City Stake News

From the opening till the closing session of our stake conference held on Sunday the 19th with the business meeting on Monday the 20th at 7.45, the period was marked by a very peaceful spirit and we were very busy withal. The department of Religious Education in charge of Brother David Blair is well organized at Central and with a few visitors additional to the regular attendance made a splendid showing in both junior and senior departments.

The morning discourse was by President Tanner who explained in detail a measure to come before the business session, a plan to coordinate the departments of the stake, both stake and local.

At 1.30 the elders' quorum had a fine attendance and at the same hour Sister Lula Sandy's class in normal work was held. The young people's social meeting has proven a success as the attendance at each conference shows a gain until at this meeting the north room was full, extra seats being needed to accommodate those coming. The hour was 2.30 and at the same time the older Saints occupied the main auditorium with a goodly number in attendance, both gatherings expressing themselves with spiritual utterances in song, prayer, and testimony.

At 4.15 the Department of Women was addressed by Doctor Edwin Lee Miller, of Kansas City. The priesthood meeting was held in the north room where they were addressed by Bishop Blair setting forth the needs of the stake from the standpoint of finances, urging support from all.

Stake missionary, Brother Amos T. Higdon, was the speaker at 7.30, using his large two-way chart for text material to an appreciative audience of whom several were non-members.

A number expressed themselves as enjoying the day, it being spiritually instructive and uplifting.

On Monday night more important business was transacted in an hour and forty-five minutes than was ever witnessed since our organization meeting in 1916 and without a suggestion of feeling or perturbation. The message from the stake presidency was hopeful and showed that they were alert to the many needs of the Saints and offered suggestions which would make for better service in the various churches.

The bishop reported a balance on hand last conference of $35.60; collected from various sources, $12,928.66; total, $12,964.26; expenditures $10,018.39; balance $2,945.87.

The conference approved a plan of the stake bishopric to finance the new building of the Grandview Church which will cost when completed about $15,000. It is found necessary to borrow $7,000 which loan will be negotiated by the Presiding Bishop, the members of the stake guaranteeing responsibility for the debt incurred.

There was an allowance made for two budgets, that of the Department of Women and director of the stake orchestra.

A recommendation from the Department of Women for a separate service for juniors at eleven on conference Sundays was referred to the stake presidency.

Bishop Blair tendered his resignation as committeeman on Grandview Church Building Committee.

Recommendation from stake council that R. E. Brown be ordained elder; E. S. Losey, priest; and Richard Hunter, deacon, was approved.

A resolution substituting a name for meeting places in the stake variously called branch, group, division, etc., resulted in the name "church" being decided upon. It is understood that the name "group" applies to the subdivisions of each church.

A resolution discontinuing the serving of meals in the church during stake conference was adopted. This does not hinder lunches being eaten brought by any who so desire.

The stake presidency presented the following, which was adopted unanimously. It takes up and adopts the outline denominated as Number 4 by the General Conference Coordinating Committee appearing in the HERALD of November 8:

"Whereas there has been a general sentiment throughout the various departments of church work for the past five years to get away from their general organization and to be handled exclusively by the church as church departments, and

"Whereas the late General Sunday School, Religio, and women's conventions passed resolutions dissolving their general organizations and thereby becoming amalgamated in their line of work with the church, thus formulating a coordinating committee composed of the heads of the departments, subject to appointment by the presidency of the church and ratified by the general conference, and

"Whereas the appointees of these departments have formulated a basis of operation under five different forms (see SAINTS' HERALD, November 8) and these forms range in degrees of progression or a step from one to another, giving each stake the right to make a selection from these forms to suit the conveniences of their work,

"Therefore, we, the stake presidency, recommend that our procedure in the Kansas City Stake will be as follows: That the stake presidency appoint the superintendent of Sunday school for the stake, subject to the approval of the head of the department of Sunday school and the stake conference; also the field worker for the stake for the Religio, subject to the approval of the head of the department and stake conference; also the organizer of the Department of Women in the stake, subject to the approval of the head of the department and the stake conference; also the chorister in the stake, subject to approval of the head of the Department of Music and the stake conference. With the stake presidency, these appointments will constitute a coordinating committee in the stake.

"We also recommend that the pastors of the various churches nominate the superintendent of the school, Religio, and the representative of the Department of Women and the chorister, subject to the approval of the stake coordinating committee and the stake conference, and in turn these local appointees will form a coordinating committee in each of the churches for the conducting of the local work, and they will appoint all the associate officers in the departments, subject to the approval of the stake coordinating committee.

"We further recommend that the appointment of pastors and stake department heads and local department heads and Sunday school superintendents be appointed at the November conference for the following reasons:

"1st. It is the first stake conference following the General Conference.

"2d. It will give these appointees the advantage of starting in with their work on the first of the year.

"We further recommend that the appointments made for the year 1923 be ratified at the February conference and, thereafter, at the November conferences."

Stake missionary, Brother Higdon, will commence a series of special meetings at Heathwood Mission, northeast corner of Troup and Valley Streets, Kansas City, Kansas, Thursday night, November 30. A temporary tabernacle has been provided.

Brother Higdon closed a four weeks meeting at the Fourth Church on the 17th. A good interest was awakened but without present results.

Stake President Tanner occupied the 11 o'clock hour on November 26 at Central. The Central Church choir gave a Thanksgiving musical service at 7.45 p. m.

Conference Notices

Spokane District, December 9 and 10. Oscar Case, president.

Appointment of District President

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder Allen Schreuer as president of the Northern Michigan District to succeed Elder E. N. Burt, resigned. The appointment is made subject to the approval of the district conference.

Elder Thomas G. Neville has been appointed president of the Kirtland District vice Elder A. R. Manchester, resigned. The appointment is made subject to the approval of the district conference.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 2, 1922.

Addresses

Prescott A. Foo and wife report their address to be 827 Young Street, Care E. B. Hull, Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii. They would be glad to hear from the Saints.

Amos Berve, The Mansion House, Nauvoo, Illinois.

Pastoral Notices

To the Missionary and All Local Forces in Southeastern District of Illinois: It has pleased the appointive powers to send again your humble servant to cooperate with you in carrying out the new missionary policy, which if we all unite together as a band of workers will be a great help to the missionary work in the district.

In order to accomplish this we must have the united help of each one, and especially that of the ministry both general and local, and in order that I, your missionary supervisor, may know who of the local priesthood can help, I desire the address of each one so I can send him a copy of the new missionary policy adopted by the Twelve.

By the advice and counsel of the district president and each branch president we shall arrange an annual meeting at each branch, and I wish to know from all the local workers where you can lend us your help in either preaching, singing, tracting; in fact we shall be glad to have the help of the young who can help sing or play.

I shall be glad to meet as many of the priesthood as possible at our next district conference (which convenes with the Bellair Branch, the first Saturday and Sunday in December) so we may talk these matters over. Now, in order to make a success, let us all be workers. You may address me until further notice at Bellair, Illinois.

HENRY SPARLING.

Are Your Reports All In?

In order that all reports may be in hand, our books for December business will remain open until January 8, 1923. Look through your diaries, notebooks, etc., and see that all baptisms, blessings, marriages, ordinations, and deaths have been reported. Be careful, very careful. Print the names. See that dates are correct.

Branch secretaries will please advise us of deaths, marriages, or expulsions affecting their records, and which have not been reported. Let each one do his part toward making complete the record for 1922.

Department of Women

We have appointed Mrs. R. M. Esgar, 817 South Third Street, Bozeman, Montana, district organizer for Western Montana.

THE DEPARTMENT OF WOMEN.

Lamoni Items

From the Lamoni Chronicle we learn that Elder John Smith and Mrs. Louisa J. Orton were married at Liberty Home on November 28 by Apostle John F. Garver. Elder John Smith was president of the Lamoni Stake for fifteen years with John F. Garver for eight of those years as a counselor. Prior to that he was the manager of the Herald Publishing House.

Announcement is also made of the engagement of Mrs. Anna A. Dancer and Bishop John Zimmermann and that their wedding would take place on Thanksgiving Day, November 30. Bishop Zimmermann is well known to the whole church as a church official and as a business man. Mrs. Dancer is the widow of David A. Dancer and has devoted her time since his death October 23, 1898, in the raising of their family.

Elder Wardell Christy and wife have moved to Lamoni and entered upon their missionary work.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker in Lamoni Sunday evening, meeting with them in the other services of the day; while Apostle John F. Garver was in attendance at a two-day meeting in Tabor, Iowa.

The Rock, the Builder, the Material

*An after-conference sermon by President
Elbert A. Smith.*

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16:13-18.

The Question

Jesus is represented as inquiring of his disciples concerning what men were saying about him. I do not suppose that he was merely idly curious regarding current speculation and rumor as we sometimes are. Evidently he had a certain objective in mind. One of the best ways to teach is to ask questions. Socrates employed that method. In the market, in the forum, at the banquets he "cross questioned humanity." By his method he led his hearers unconsciously to the truth. By the simple process of answering questions they found themselves led to certain conclusions. Having thought their way to these conclusions, step by step, perhaps without perceiving his guidance, the conclusions became theirs and were much more vital and precious to them than they would have been had he announced the conclusion at the beginning of the conversation.

Perhaps in a similar way Jesus guided the conversation by questions to a conclusion which he had in mind from the beginning. The time had come in his ministry and in the novitiate of his disciples for them definitely to recognize and boldly formulate in words certain conclusions concerning him that must have been taking shape in their minds for some time.

Hence he began, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" The reply, taken with certain other texts, indicates that men have not changed. Humanity in all ages loves to pull the curtain aside and peep out to see and comment on the passer-by. A most notable man was passing by. Very naturally gossip was rife. Jerusalem and adjacent cities had as many rumors then as we have now. One man was running about proclaiming that Jesus was Elias come to life again. Another was spreading the news that Jesus was Jeremias. Others, pop-eyed with importance, had other tales to tell. He had been seen eating with unwashed hands. He had dined with publicans. He was just a common glut-ton and winebibber. Rumor has neither cradle nor grave, gray hair nor bald pate; but is always in the prime of life in every age and clime. Brushing aside rumor, Jesus came to the point: "But whom say ye that I am?"

The Answer

That was a very important question, one that every man sometime, somewhere must face: "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter, self-appointed spokesman on most occasions, gave the answer, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

That was a wonderful answer. The idea there set forth grows bigger and bigger in my ministry as the years go by. I do not actually think less of the preaching of the principles of the gospel or of the proclamation of the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith and the coming forth of this work; but, relatively, they seem less important as the magnitude of Jesus Christ, his light, his personality, his mission, his divinity grow upon me. These others are to help men perceive Jesus and so are important, but only in the way of being the means to a glorious end.

If we had ninety thousand Latter Day Saints, united, living daily the Christ ideals, we would not need to preach the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith and the divinity of our work. That would be our sermon for all to hear. And on the other hand, in any community where Saints are in contention, and living slovenly spiritual lives, it is generally a waste of time to preach the principles of the gospel. The world replies with Emerson, "What you are shouts so loud that I cannot hear what you say."

I know it to be possible to proclaim the principles of the gospel in a way so harsh, censorious, and contentious as to drive people from Christ rather than draw them to him. It is possible to argue about religion with our neighbors in a very irreligious manner.

Christ should shine forth in every sermon, in every prayer service, and in every business meeting. Alas, in some business meetings he seems scarcely to be tolerated as a delegate. When Sunday comes and the prayer meeting arrives, we then invite him into the stand. Is it a matter of surprise that he does not always respond? I repeat, he should shine forth in every sermon whatever its theme, in every prayer meeting, in every business meeting, and during all the week in our department.

A Sure Foundation

Jesus declared, "Upon this rock I will build my church." At times when there is confusion and conflict in the church, when there is storm and stress, it gives me joy to realize that we have a sure foundation.

As a boy I lived in a frame house that had no foundation at all. To-day there is not one stick or timber of that house left. Had the builders taken time to provide a foundation it might have stood for generations. I am glad that the church has a foundation. When the superstructure seems racked and strained we may rest assured that the foundation of eternal truth stands sure.

I was not converted to men but to certain fundamental truths which never change. Why should my allegiance be shaken by what men may say or do? I wish to be true first to Christ and his teachings, and after that as a very natural result to the church which he has founded and commissioned to represent him and to the men selected by him to proclaim those truths and guide the destiny of the church under his direction. But let me not lose sight of the fact that under the church is a foundation of eternal truth, and under all that is something that Jesus called a rock.

What Is the Rock?

What is the rock to which Jesus referred? The interjection that Jesus threw into his statement, "I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter," together with the interpretation of "Cephas," as "a stone," given in one text, lends some coloring to Catholic claims that Peter was the rock. To us Peter seems a frail and inadequate foundation upon which to base so wonderful a structure as the church of Christ. Peter was very human. He was the most human of the apostles. Jesus in the same conversation said to him, "Thou savorest not of the things that be of God, but those that be of man." If Peter were the rock the church would have a human foundation—nothing more. True, Peter did become very dependable; but Jesus was speaking not of a possible or potential or future rock, but of one that was, always had been, and always would be a rock—a rock that would outlast the gates of hell.

Our early elders thought the rock to be continued revelation: "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." True, we have here a very splendid argument for continued revelation. Paul says that no man can say that Jesus is the Christ except by the Holy Ghost. You cannot read it in a book—comprehendingly—and no one can tell it to you. But one who has had the testimony that Jesus is the Christ burned into his consciousness by the Holy Spirit is not likely to misunderstand or forget, and this testimony is one that will have a stabilizing effect upon his life. Forever, so long as generation shall succeed generation by the processes of begetting and birth, there must be a continuous and personal revelation of that great fact.

Yes, we have here a splendid argument for continued revelation—but that is not the rock, as I see it. What was the important thing drawn forth by the interrogations of Jesus? "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And Jesus replied, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

There are many religions, Mohammedan, Buddhist, whatnot. The Christian religion is the only one having under it the fundamental fact that Jesus is the Son of God and the Savior of men. Destroy that fact, if it were possible to do so, and the Christian church is left without foundation. That is the great fact that cannot be destroyed by force or by argument or by false philosophy. It will outwear the gates of hell. On that fact the church stands secure.

Who Is the Builder?

Jesus said, "I will build my church." He is the builder. He is the triumphant Christ, the one who declared that all power was given into his hand both in heaven and on earth. We need have no fear then about the builder. And I am very glad that in the initial revelation of 1820, which led up to this work of ours, the heavenly Father presented Jesus to the Prophet Joseph with this declaration, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." Jesus reappeared in 1820 as the builder of the church in these last days. He still continues as its builder. He was the builder in 1820. He is the builder in 1922. If there seem to be blemishes, we may rest assured that he is working toward their eradication.

I may pause, however, incidentally to note his statement from another standpoint, brought to attention by shifting the emphasis, "I will build my church." The work is constructive, affirmative. Anyone who will assist Jesus must be a builder, not a tearer down. To destroy error is incidental—the work of life must be to build. Jesus said, “I will build.” He also said, “The works that I do shall ye do also.”

I do not wish to appear to depreciate the value of adverse criticism. Accompanied by the right spirit it is very helpful. Not so long ago I preached a sermon, and at the close the brother who had charge said to me, “Brother Smith, I kept tab on you, and by actual count you put your hands in your pockets and took them out forty-eight times during that sermon.” That was a negative criticism. It helped me and I profited by it—yet of course only in a negative way. It did not help me to present a convincing message; merely to avoid marring my message. Negative criticism does not help us to do things that should be done; it merely helps us to avoid doing things.

A noted physician in a recent article says that the man who becomes even fifty-one per cent negative in his attitude will be of little use in society; while one who becomes seventy-five per cent negative in his reactions will find himself without moral influence or desirable followers in the community.

If I observe a group of men building a wall, I may remark that one man is putting the stones in wrong and another is mixing the mortar wrong. But I have not helped to build the wall. To be a builder I must build. My best course is to go to work and lay a portion of the wall as it should be laid. I am then a builder. And my work serves the double purpose of negative and positive criticism in one. The other workers by observing what I have done may by comparison see their own errors and at the same time perceive the advantages of my system. Wherever you are, in branch, or district, or stake, try to build.

Our General Conferences give us an opportunity periodically to attempt to correct things that we think to be wrong. Any man personally or through his delegates may seek to correct whatever he thinks to be wrong. And he will have a fair chance and a square deal and be protected in his rights of free speech within Christian and parliamentary bounds. But between conferences let us get together and work together on the plans that seem to be approved by the common consent of the people, as well as by the law; and during the year, during this year, make our work affirmative and constructive.

I honored the stand taken by Brother Gomer T. Griffiths in his farewell speech to the conference. After long years in the Quorum of Twelve, he stepped aside for a younger man to occupy, and said, “I am not going home to sulk. I am not going to write tracts against the church. I am not going to start another faction. I have no use for such work. You will find me at work trying to build up the Saints.”

Jesus said, “I will build.” Will you pledge yourself to endeavor in all ways to build up the church this year? There are many sad hearts. Many wounds have been made. Some one must pour in the oil and the wine. Some one must speak words of courage and cheer. Who will do it? Will you? Will you do it this year?

I have heard some wild talk from a very few about quitting the church. I do not think that the test of manhood and womanhood is to be valiant when everything is smooth and lovely and to blow up with a loud noise when there is a little trouble. The test of Christian manhood and womanhood is to retain self-control and self-discipline under great stress, to retain faith in God and charity for our fellow men. Also Bishop Keir says that some few church representatives have told the people to quit paying tithes. God says to pay your tithing; who does the man represent who says to refuse to pay it? Would it pay this church to send out missionaries to tell people that they should not be baptized? Will it pay to send out men to tell the Saints that they should not obey the law? No! Let us build up. If there are things that we think should be changed, let us trust to time and the two corrective agencies available. These two are: first, the Spirit of God. Jesus said, “I will build my church.” We may assume that he is observing these things and in time will correct. Second, the common consent of the people which at any proper time at any General Conference may make desired changes, or in a local conference may make local changes.

The Material

At this juncture some one may say, Granted that the rock on which the church rests is secure, and Jesus the Master Builder, unapproachable for wisdom, why then do we have these delays, these contentions, these failures to achieve, this long waiting and hope deferred? To answer that question we must consider the material with which the builder has elected to work—human beings, like you and me. If we would bear that in mind it would save us many disappointments.

You say, “I can’t understand Brother A——. He made a speech yesterday on one side of the question and to-day he voted on the other side.” Or, “I can’t understand Brother B——. He voted yesterday on one side of the question and to-day he bore a testimony in prayer meeting on the other side. I can’t understand how people can be so inconsistent.” Perhaps you cannot understand others because you do not understand yourself. I can understand Brother A—— and Brother B——. I feel one way one day and differently the next. I think one way one day and differently the next. True, I endeavor to preserve a consistent course, and by exertion of will power and reason may do so fairly well—but I have enough lapses and sufficient wayward impulses and random thoughts that I can comprehend Brothers A—— and B——. Understand yourself, my friend. Do not measure others with an iron rod and yourself with a rubber cord.

You say, "I can't understand Brother C——. Yesterday he met me and shook hands and was all smiles and friendship. To-day he met me and passed by with head up and did not seem to wish to see me." Well, I can understand Brother C——. During conference one day I came down from the rostrum after presiding over three or four hours of very strenuous business session. Immediately some old friends from a distant point seized me from the left and wanted me to direct them to their lodgings, or something of the kind. At the same time some young people seized me from the right and wanted to know something about decorating the stand for the evening exercises. I tried to answer both of them while my mind was still busy and dizzy with the problems of the conference, and while in this dilemma a lady appeared from in front and shook my hand cordially. I shook her hand and smiled, and said I was glad to see her—but I did not see her at all. She became rather indignant and said, "You don't see me at all. I have been away from Independence for a year. I am back again, and you hardly give me a decent word." Yes, I can understand Brother C——. I am liable at any time to meet my best friend on the street and not see him. Perhaps Brother C—— has a single track mind like my own, with trains that run none too often.

If we would understand others, so as to work with them, or even bear with them, we must understand ourselves and face the truth about our own inconsistencies and limitations and follies. Then we will know why there are contentions and delays—and we will not put all the blame on others while we imagine we feel the budding of our own wings.

When I read the fleshly tablets of my own heart I am compelled to admit that there is no mistake or folly that this people or any portion of them could commit that I cannot comprehend and make allowance for, to a degree at least—even though I might lament it and seek to have it rectified. And there is no sin or transgression that one of them might fall into that I could not understand to a degree how it happened—and his shame and humiliation and agony of repentance and his struggle to rise again—and I will help him rise if I can. As a great English bishop said, while watching a condemned criminal mounting the scaffold to be hanged, "There I go, but for the help of God."

If you would understand the delays and troubles of the church, read your own humanity. Jesus understood man. He took upon himself humanity and learned rightly to appraise the struggles of his fellows. So it is said that "when he saw the multitude he had compassion on them." He did not have contempt for their folly and blindness, or disgust for their sin of misconduct and their bad logic of reason. He had compassion on them. Who are we to do less?

The rock is secure. The Builder is wise. But the material is difficult. It is finite. It is changeable. It responds slowly to the designs of the Builder. But you are a part of it. So am I. If we would only remember that fact, out of deep humility we might come to have patience with others while our common destiny is worked out.

But if the material with which Jesus works has its defects, it has its supreme values. Humanity is capable of all sorts of follies and inconsistencies. It is also capable of the most supreme sacrifices, the most prolonged endurance, and of development to the foreordained goal, the full stature of manhood in Christ Jesus. Knowing all this, Jesus thought it worth while to die for man—yes, to live for him. Can we do less?

If Jesus had selected perfect men and women with which to build his church many troubles might have been avoided. Only at the very beginning—where would he find the perfect men and women? But he declared that the well have no need of a doctor. He seeks the ailing. He gathers of all kinds—men and women with all sorts of habits of thought and life, with all sorts of previous experiences, with different intellectual development and emotional states—and from this material builds his church. We should not therefore be surprised that there come divisions and conflict of opinion and delays. That is why the ministry of reconciliation runs all through his gospel—priests and pastors to visit the homes and forestall contention, teachers to heal division, the monthly communion service to knit together estranged hearts.

Not long ago I had the great pleasure to see two men who had been at variance shake hands and promise to forget the past and press forward as friends mutually supporting each other. I wished then that I had the power and the influence to bring every two men who are at variance together at a communion table to make such a pledge. But then it occurred to me that I was presumptuous. One greater than I has set up his communion table for the whole church. He has commanded that when one shall come to that table and remember that his brother has aught against him, he shall seek the brother and make his peace and then return to the altar to make his offering. Will you go about your work in that spirit? Will you enter upon the ministry of reconciliation? Will you do it now?

A Christmas Gift

Jesus came and offered his life for the redemption of the world. He offered not alone his death, but he laid aside his glory and gave his life as well as his death in order that he might share with us that glory which he already had for himself. (John 17.)

It is a curious fact that on all other birthdays we celebrate by giving gifts to the one whose birthday we honor. But this day we celebrate by giving gifts to one another. That is beautifully expressed in a poem which we are reprinting from Autumn Leaves in this HERALD.

By giving gifts to our friends we honor him; by giving gifts to the poor, those in need, we honor him all the more. It is of course necessary that the poor be first fed and clothed, but we ought not to leave off too long their spiritual feeding. Man predominately differs from the animal creation in the fact that he is a thinker, and that there is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding. (Job 32.) It is well to remember the material needs of the poor, but it is well that we do not neglect their spiritual care.

We have an immediate means of giving to the cause of Christ in our Christmas offering which now will be used first for the foreign missionary work abroad, and then if there be sufficient abundance it will be applied to the missionary work in America. Nor need any feel he is too old to make a Christmas offering. It does not have to be made to the Sunday school, for the Bishop's office is always open to receive special offerings from anyone, an offering truly to the cause of Christ and to send the gospel of the kingdom, the message that he came to earth to give to mankind, abroad throughout the world. Such a gift provides not only for the spiritual feeding of those who are poor in heart, but also provides for the physical care and feeding of the ministers and their families.

It is a wonderful theme that because of the greatness of his love we give our gifts to him, when we give gifts to one another, when we love one another, and strive to help one another. It is also a splendid thing that we can extend this gift in the forwarding of the very gift He gave, or taking to the world the very gift that He himself came to give to the world, the message of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

S. A. B.

The Day of His Birth

Some 1925 years ago there was born in a manger in a stable of Bethlehem a babe, for whose coming the world had long been looking, and from whose coming time has since been measured. The intent is clear that the chronology of the world was intended to be based from his coming, even if later researches lead us to believe that his birth actually took place in the spring of the year, about 4 B. C.

He was not born in a palace, for they were too busy with the affairs of the world and their own interests.

He was not born in the inn, for the inn was full and they were too full of business.

He did not come to the house of the rulers of the times though he came of royal line and of royal blood, for the rulers were too busy with the business of government. He came to a humble family of Nazareth of Galilee, to one of the many descendants of David.

But he was born in a manger among the poor who, knowing what it means to be without, who realizing what is suffering, are ready to share what little they have with those in greater need.

His early life was therefore not laid in the courts of worldly fame and power, nor was his life in the busy marts of trade, but in the humble home of an artisan, a carpenter, and until his thirtieth year he, too, engaged in that trade and thereby made manual work henceforth not only respectable but glorious. For at the head of all the kings of earth there goes, not one of the wealthy of earth, but the carpenter of Nazareth with the smell of the shop, of the shavings and sawdust, still about him.

Therein was laid his broad sympathy for all mankind, his love for the poor, the signs of his coming that the blind see, the lame walk, lepers cleansed, deaf hear, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. Nor did he stand aloof to send others, but he himself went into the highways and byways to carry this gospel of the kingdom.

Those who are aloof from the poor are too often blinded to what the common people are thinking and doing. They may not be as extreme as was the noble lady of France before the French Revolution. When she heard that the poor did not have bread to eat she replied, "Why, then, let them eat cake." But the story illustrates something of the attitude of those who do not get down under, in order that they may lift up.

Jesus was the Son of God, the King of kings, the Lord of lords, very God of very God, yet he put aside all of his glory to come so humbly to earth to give his life itself for the sake of humanity. To what end? That he might gain added glory and added power? By no means, for his prayer at the close of life was simply, "Father, glorify thou me . . . with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." He came that he might call us to be his brothers and sisters in the Lord, to be joint heirs equal with him in receiving the inheritance of the Father. He came not to get, but to give the peace and blessedness that he had.

Being as he was the Son of God, we may have our doubts as to whether he learned anything or gained anything from the sacrifice. But all the word of God would give us to understand was that he had gained a deeper understanding and sympathy (Hebrews 2); that he was tempted and tried like us in all things yet without sin. (Hebrews 4:16.) But after all we believe that rather signifies his attitude on behalf of humanity. It is for the sake of humanity that this statement is made, that we may know that he not only expects us to follow in his steps, but has set us the pattern and has lived completely the example, and made his steps short human steps that we may follow.

His steps were not the long, proud steps of a mighty ruler or man of power, let alone those of which divinity is capable, but being God he became man and made the short, loving steps in which a little child may walk.

What matters it whether he was born in the spring or winter season? What matters it that in ancient times in connection with sun worship or solar mythology, the 25th of December came to be recognized as a special day for the coming of the Son? That after all is only a symbol or type.

The great fact remains that his is the only name whereby man may be saved and that those who came before him were looking earnestly for his coming and spread his story among the children of men; and those who have come since date the life of the world before and since from this event, the day of his birth, which we now celebrate.

Proof of Truth

"Of course, it is impossible to prove even that two and two make four, to a person who refuses to accept the first principles of mathematics. And so it is impossible to prove that the earth turns on its axis, to a person who ignores all the known facts of science. But when we speak of proving a thing, we do not mean proving it to those who are incapable of seeing the point when it is shown them; we mean proving it so that it will stand the test of rational judgment."—Pathfinder.

The above statement, which is true in mathematics, and is true in science, is also true in every other department of human knowledge, including the field of psychology, of philosophy, and religion. It is because this fact is so often ignored that some defy us to prove the truth of religion.

A Call to the Young People

Those connected with the work of the young people in the church in the former Zion's Religio-Literary Society have many times contemplated the advisability of holding a young people's convention at a different time than the General Conference. The General Sunday School Association has also considered the advisability of doing this. Elder T. W. Williams on behalf of the former Religio Department, now the Department of Recreation and Expression, has been seriously considering this for at least the past year, as has also F. M. McDowell as associate superintendent of both the Religio and of the Sunday School Departments.

The decision has been made and the call is now being sent forth for such a convention, as will be seen by the letter from President F. M. McDowell in this issue of the HERALD. This letter is being sent to all branch presidents for a special convention of young people to be held June 3 to 16 in Lamoni, Iowa. This will include for the first three days the commencement exercises of Graceland College, hence should be opened with a grand homecoming of as many as possible, if not all former students and graduates of Graceland College.

Further than that it is open to all young people, and comes during vacation. There is no limit on the number to be sent or to come from any branch or district. But there is a request that the branch take steps and the district make provision to see that at least every district, and if possible that every branch, be represented. There will be presented a program of a decidedly educational nature. Particular attention will be given to the problems of religious education, but the recreational activities will not be overlooked, nor will the course be made too strenuous. It should give a new impetus to all of the department work throughout the church. We should begin to plan to attend or at least to be represented by those who can go and who will best bring back the message there received and the benefit of the convention.

There will no doubt be further announcements as the time draws nearer, but it is the wish of the First Presidency, as stated in this letter, that the young people at once begin to plan to make this event a success.

Ethics, to overcome the conflict between classes and races, must have the support of religion.

A Young People's Convention

President F. M. McDowell on behalf of the First Presidency is sending the following letter to the various branch presidents for public reading.

To the Young People of the Church; Greeting: Since the late General Conference, we have been wondering just how we might reach you and just what sort of message we might send to you that would indicate in a small way our interest in you, and what we might be able to say that would stimulate an interest on your part in the general problems of the church. We have delayed writing you this letter until this time in the hope that we might be able to give you some definite plan to work upon and some goal to look forward to. We believe that we have partially succeeded in this in being able to call your attention to a young people's convention, the plans of which we are outlining below. Before telling you of these plans, however, let us explain a few reasons why we are interested so vitally in you and your work.

The Church Needs You

It needs your youthful vigor, to carry out its mighty program.

It needs your idealism, lest it become a mere machine.

It needs your vision, lest it cease to grow.

It needs your criticism, lest it become self-satisfied. Without youthful blood, an institution tends to become nonprogressive, mechanical, and content with the deeds of the past. Youth demands growth, progress, accomplishment. It looks to the future, not the past. Our church must have your allegiance. Will you give it willingly and whole-heartedly?

You Need the Church

You need the wonderful ideals of a new social order which the church program offers.

You need the organization of the church as a means of realizing your ideals.

You must have some means of harnessing your youthful vigor, making sure that it will be used for the betterment of humanity.

You need some guidance on the slippery paths of youth.

You need to be pointed to "a more abundant life."

You need an opportunity for cooperative service.

Youth unguided and unharnessed may destroy itself and the social order. The church assures stability and at the same time offers you a chance to express yourself and your personality in a cooperative, progressive way.

The worth-while achievements of the world's history have come as a result of definite purposes and high ideals. The call of to-day is that Christian youth catch the vision of the Master of men and with him yield their all to the end that righteousness shall triumph over sin and this world become a better place in which to live.

The application of Christianity to individual and social life means Zion. This goal can never be attained without your help. You can never share in these results except through sacrificing devotion to the church.

Indeed, it is almost a case of love at first sight. Youth cannot get along without the church; the church cannot get along without youth. Why not have a wedding? Why not unite our interests? Why not work together for the accomplishment of the great task that has been outlined for us?

It is for this purpose that we have called a young people's convention to be held at Graceland College, June 3 to 16, 1923. At this convention we want to weld the interests of the young people in the cause we all love. Every day of this convention will be full of religious, educational, and recreational activities. Just the kind that appeal to young people. Every moment will be full of suggestions for church workers. Here you will meet the leaders of the church and the leaders of the various departments. Here you will meet young people from all over the church, those who in the next few years will become the leaders in all the lines of church activity. We want every district of the church represented. Can you not begin to work at once to make sure that your district will not be missing when the record of the convention is complete?

The first three days of the convention will be given over to Graceland home-coming and commencement exercises. This will be the first real home-coming that Graceland has ever had. It is planned to have every graduating class represented. A large number of present and former students will also be here.

The last ten days will be devoted to a varied program of religious and educational activities. Among other features, there will be prayer and social services, inspirational lectures and sermons, a model church school, a course in recreational leadership, round table discussions of various problems, community singing, etc. Just the thing you have always wanted.

Remember the date of the convention: June 3 to 16, 1923. Remember the place—Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Here is a purpose which deserves the best you can give. Your leaders are calling. Will you boost?

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By F. M. MCDOWELL.

Moral Growth

By A. Max Carmichael

How parents and teachers may get better results in encouraging and directing moral ideals.

For the sake of a concrete illustration let us presume that all during the second, third, and fourth years of a child, we say in our prayer before him, "Lord, help little Johnnie to be honest." "Lord, help little Johnnie not to take anything that belongs to anyone else." We have further told him that his Uncle John, after whom he was named, was always honest, and never took anything that belonged to anyone else. We have built within the child the desire to be like many people whom he has been told have always been honest.

In his kindergarten experience during his first year at school little Johnnie finds one day that he has not brought a drinking cup for himself, as he was instructed by his teacher. She has previously explained that they should have their own drinking cup because it is cleaner to drink from one's own cup, and furthermore one child might give a disease to another child by drinking from the other child's cup. Little Johnnie desires a drink very much. He has no cup. He sees all the other cups standing beside the drinking faucet. No one is around.

How many will say that our prayers that he will always act honestly, that our earnest requests of him that he will always be like his Uncle John who was honest, and never took anything belonging to anyone else, have fortified Johnnie in this hour against taking up another's cup and taking a drink without the least conception that he has done anything that he ought not to do? It is our opinion that the average child would under these circumstances take the cup of another for a drink without the least hesitation and without any feeling of having done wrong.

We want you to note that our supposed circumstances have not included a telling of the child by the kindergarten teacher that he should not take the cup of another, because it is wrong to take the property of another, nor have the circumstances included the telling of the child by the parents that he should not take the cup of another with which to take a drink. The parents and teacher have gone no further than a general statement asking the child to be honest, and never to take anything belonging to another.

Abstract Teaching Not Enough

In other words the teaching of an abstract truth as to be honest proved insufficient when the child desired to take the property momentarily to satisfy a perfectly normal desire of his own. Why? Because neither the child's experience nor the child's ability to think was sufficient to interpret the act of taking the cup of another with which to take a drink, as a breach of the statement to be honest, or even as a breach of the statement not to take the property of another; although we should have to admit that the latter statement might be more helpful to the child in this particular situation of wanting a drink than the former statement. In other words his ability to interpret his present experience as a breach of "not to take the property of another" might be easier than to interpret such experience as a breach of honesty.

Again, let us presume that all during the life of a child up to his twelfth year we have been teaching him to be honest, that we have used the term honest continuously, and presume further that in certain specific instances we have helped him to interpret honesty.

Let us presume that these instances are the following: We have told him he must not take his fellow schoolmate's lunch; that he must pay for a window that he breaks at school. Let us presume further that in the main he responds correctly to these situations.

He meets for the first time a new situation; he has a large desire for gum; he has no money to spend for gum but in boarding the street car he sees an opportunity to pass up paying the conductor. If he does so, he will have a nickel for his gum. Have our teachings up to date been sufficient fully to fortify the average twelve-year-old child against this situation?

In asking this question we can further presume that the child would do what we wanted him to do. We expect in answering this question there would be a larger diversity of opinion than in answering the question about the five-year-old child. Many would say the twelve-year-old child would stop to say to himself that the failure to put in the nickel and the passing up of the conductor would be a dishonest act and, therefore, since he is supposed not to be dishonest he would not fail to put in the nickel. We are skeptical whether the twelve-year-old child would so stop to analyze the situation as a result of his previous training. It is hard work to tell, of course; we have ourselves experienced this, that children who have been taught to be honest, and who would become very angry to be called dishonest, will yet fail to pay for an article which they negligently break and do so without any feeling of being dishonest.

Of course, the idea involved in this illustration is this—Will the teaching of an abstract moral principle be sufficient when the child meets the concrete situation in which he may act according to the abstract principle or against it? Presuming that a child will act the way he is told, he will act in accordance with the abstract moral principle in the situation, whenever his experience or his mental analysis at the time make it appear that the given situation is one involving a line of conduct, either in accordance with or against the abstract principle. The reader will say that if the child fails to see in this situation of the street car the principle of honesty at the age of twelve, doubtless he will be able at a later age in his life to see that the principle of honesty is involved in the situation. Those who claim that the normal twelve-year-old child will react properly in this situation will have to admit that at some younger age he would not be able to react correctly to the situation even though he had been repeatedly taught to be honest.

Use Real Situations

But what is the best way to be assured that the child will not pass up the street car conductor in this situation? Is it by teaching the abstract truth to be honest, or is it by specifically referring to such a situation? We believe the latter. We believe further that even if this particular situation has not been discussed with the child, that he will more easily have the right conduct in this situation, if in his past experience he has met situations very similar to this one and has been taught to respond correctly in these similar situations. In other words, the surest method of getting a child to react favorably in a certain situation is to consider with the child that very situation.

Further, we cannot build up an ideal of honesty through any other method than that of considering concrete situations out of which the principle of honesty may be reasoned. A child cannot be taught to be honest as such; he must be taught not to take the pencil of his brother, not to bring home the doll of his playmate, not to take away the cookies of his brother, and out of all these he may be taught that to do otherwise would be to be dishonest. We will admit, then, that there can be built up in children the tendency to respond correctly to a situation in which they see the principle of honesty is involved; that in a new situation the children will react correctly, if they are told that to react in a certain way would be honest and to react in the opposite way would be dishonest, provided that such a thought came to them before their reaction was made. But with the growing child the surest way is to build up specific reactions to specific situations; or, in other words, a specific mode of conduct in specific situations.

All through our instructions with regard to these specific situations we as moral educators should be attempting to get the child to see the general principle of honesty in them all. This is done in order that he might be able to meet new situations, that is, new in so far as there is a slight difference between the new situation and the old situations in which he has already responded correctly. If a new situation has many elements which are quite different from the situations in which he already responded correctly, a young child is very apt to respond as expediency demands rather than according to the principle involved.

It is, therefore, possible to build up in children the tendency to respond correctly to the thought of honesty. This too is a very desirable tendency. But there are some very serious obstacles to securing a response in every situation that is slightly or greatly different from old situations. The child is not apt to see that the new situation involves the old principle. The new elements blind his perspicuity. He is not able to see in the new situation, because of the newer elements, the application of the principle which he has already been taught. It is hard to say at just what age in the child's life he is able to make an application of an old moral principle to a new situation involving more or less strange elements. It would vary with different children according to their mental capacity and according to the intensity and efficiency of the former training.

In order that the child may make the correct response in the more or less strange situation, he must have the power to think. This is a power that all children do not possess equally even after the same training; but it is also true that children do not receive the same training in the power to think.

The Child Must Think Out Meaning of Honesty

We must reiterate that people cannot be taught moral conduct by the preaching of mere abstract truths. A child cannot be taught to react honestly in every given situation by the mere preaching of honesty. He must first be taught to react properly in given situations of life, and out of these he must see a common element or combination of elements which constitute honesty. But even if he is taught to react properly in several different situations all of which are similar on the fact that they involve honesty, even yet this individual may not act honestly in a new situation, because he is unable to see in the new situation the combination of elements which involve honesty. He must further have the power of seeing in the new situation or of thinking out of the new situation the principle of honesty. It is not pessimistic, we think, to say that adults are largely unable to respond to new situations in accordance with abstract truths. This is demonstrated by the fact that the average adult would be insulted if you should call him dishonest when he fails to pay the railroad conductor, or keeps his ticket if the railroad conductor passes him by. He does not see in the new situation the principle of honesty involved. In other words, the average adult's conduct is governed by rules as applied to given situations rather than by general principles. The average adult who thinks himself clean and would be insulted if you would call him dirty, may yet be very dirty in given lines of conduct. A woman may be scrupulously clean with reference to her person and yet permit the pots and kettles in the kitchen to go filthily dirty.

What does all of this mean to teachers of religion and teachers of morality? It means they can never get away from discussing concrete situations of honesty. In order to teach honesty or concrete situations of cleanliness, they can never teach honesty and cleanliness by discussing abstractly honesty and cleanliness. But concrete situations must be discussed and the proper reaction to such situations must be first taught and the principle deduced from them, rather than that the abstract principle should be first discussed and an attempt made to apply the principle to concrete situations.

The best order of moral growth then is as follows, using concrete illustration. There comes into the child's life certain situations, as for instance, his desire to take a cookie from his playmate, or to bring home his playmate's doll or train. These situations are discussed by the tutor with the child, and he is encouraged to make the proper response to these situations. He is not told that certain conduct in these situations would be dishonest as though he knew what dishonesty was. He is rather told the exact response he should make. But if several situations of this sort come into his life he is told that certain responses would be dishonest, and he is reminded of similar situations that he has already experienced: He is reminded of how he acted in those similar experiences, he is told that to act in a certain way in all of these experiences would be to act honestly, and he is encouraged to act honestly in every other situation which he might meet which is at all similar to the ones already experienced.

Principle of Honesty in Life

After he has met considerable numbers of these situations he begins to learn there is a principle of honesty in life. Then if he has the power to make the application of honesty to new situations he will act correctly to the thought of honesty. But if he has not the power to think out the fact that the principle of honesty is involved in the new situation, in order to get him to act correctly in the new situation the religious tutor will have to discuss with him the correct response.

The average moral tutor is very apt to forget this. We have seen public-school teachers of children of about ten years old tell these children to be clean, but as a result of this teaching the children have not seen the necessity of keeping paper off of the floor. Even though they did wish to act in accordance with the commands of the teacher in order to get paper kept off of the floor the teacher cannot say, "Be clean, children." She must rather say, "Keep the paper off the floor." Ten-year-old children are incapable of making the application of cleanliness to having paper on the floor. Her rule must be specific. The children cannot be governed by abstract principles.

Sunday School Opportunities

The average Sunday-school teacher is not sufficiently mindful of this principle of teaching moral conduct. Her general course is as follows: She feels that to-day she must teach honesty, or love, or cleanliness: She talks about honesty, tells stories involving some situations of honesty, and then attempts to make an application to an imagined experience of the child. We might say that many teachers stop with the first third of this course. They merely discuss with the child honesty and "an application" of the lesson or scripture reading. An "application" is an attempt upon the part of the teacher to get the child to see the application of the abstract principle to similar concrete situations. The trouble of such a mode of teaching is that the concrete situation is too often one that the child has never experienced or never will experience or cannot imagine.

How much better it would be for the teacher to take an actual situation of the child, discuss that situation, and show that in that situation is involved the same principle that is involved in a like situation that the child has already experienced elsewhere. In other words, instead of starting out with the abstract principle of honesty and winding up with an application to an imagined situation the teacher had better start with the real situation, discuss the correct conduct in such real situation, tell stories involving conduct in similar situations, discuss real situations that the child has experienced which are similar to the one now being discussed, and out of these all show that there is a common principle of conduct involved. Then it is quite in line if time permits that the teacher should discuss imagined situations. It would then be hoped that the child would react correctly if he should meet these situations which are being imagined. The main point we are trying to urge with religious tutors is that we should start from a concrete situation with the average child rather than start with abstract truth and wind up with an application to a supposed situation.

Who is in a better position thus to properly teach; the person who knows the concrete situations in which the child finds himself daily, or the one who is not? Naturally, there is only one answer. To be the best teachers we must know the exact situations in which the child finds himself. The average Sunday-school teacher is greatly handicapped in this matter. He does not know the exact situations in which the child finds himself daily. He has no starting point. Naturally then he falls into a system of teaching which has been described above, that of discussing abstract truths and attempting to make an application to supposed situations.

A parent has by far the larger opportunity to teach properly moral truths; he knows more of the exact situations in which the child finds himself. He is acquainted with the concrete moral problems of the child. This means that we must rely more upon parents for the religious and moral training of our child than we do upon church-school teachers.

Discover Actual Problems of Pupils

But in order that church-school teachers may make the largest success they must discover the actual situations in which the children find themselves and start out with these situations in their teaching.

It is evident, however, that the Sunday school church teachers cannot discuss in front of all the children the moral problems involved in the situations in which each child finds himself. The teachers cannot discuss in front of eight or nine children the moral problem of honesty in which one child has found himself. Such a child will resent having his own situation discussed in front of the other children.

This means then that the Sunday-school teacher should discuss with each child separately as much as possible his own individual situations in life. To be able to do this with individual children would involve a larger degree of confidence than is now existing between the average Sunday-school teacher and her children. This but reinforces the fact that the parent is the logical teacher of religion in the greatest number of cases.

If the Sunday-school teacher cannot start off with the individual situation in which each individual child finds himself, the question then comes, With what situation may she start out? It is hardly ever possible to find a situation which is common to every individual child, and even if such a situation could be found, it is doubtful whether one child would want to discuss his particular experience in the situation before the other children, even though the experience was common to the other children. It means then that the teacher must start out with situations or problems resulting from situations with which the class is concerned as an organized group. For instance, if a class of eight or nine girls should attempt to get up a program to be given before the school or before an old folks' home or hospital, such activity would raise situations in which moral and religious problems would be involved. The moral problems aroused in such situations, the teacher could naturally discuss with the class.

This means then for the Sunday-school teacher to get the right point of attack. She should not start out as the ordinary quarterly does with a set of lessons concerning themselves with honesty, courage, cleanliness, and godliness, but she should rather start out with some group activity, which activity makes the class as a unified whole function somewhere in the system of the church or community. A teacher will not get very far until she finds a moral problem aroused which will be of interest to all of them. The problem will cause them to discuss such questions as how best to choose a leader, what powers the leader should have, what are the right relations between the followers and the leader, how best to criticize the leader.

Class Distinctions Need Removal

As a concrete illustration of the above discussed method, the following is a real situation that arose within the writer's own experience. A Sunday school class decided to entertain a group of older people. There was another class in the same school of the same age as the class that so decided. It seemed best to the teacher of the one class that the other class of the same age should be invited in. It immediately appeared that there was a feeling existing among the members of the class that they were above the members of the other class. Some slighting remark was made of the social standing of the members of the other class. Here was a situation involving moral conduct. This situation gave the opportunity for a couple of lessons. It involved the relation of children of the same church of the same age. It brought up the question as to whether the wealth of one class made them any better than the other. It would give grounds for bringing up Christ's attitude toward the Pharisees in their attitude toward the publicans. Reference to the caste system of India could be brought to bear upon the situation; in fact, the situation motivated a study of the historical growth of toleration, religious as well as political.

No doubt we shall get teachers of religion to see that this method of conducting the church school work should be used, long before we shall get them to practice it.

Timbers for the Temple is the title of a new book just off the press by Elbert A. Smith. It is a historical church novel concerning Nauvoo in the days of her glory. No. 888C, price, $1.25.

Building and Building Material

By P. H. Phillipin

We are admonished in the testimony of Matthew 6: 38 that we should seek first to build up the kingdom of God.

Connected with the idea of "building," there is always something which appeals to the practical man—particularly to anyone whose daily vocation lies in one or another of the many trades comprising what is known as "the building trades." We know of no busier people or more assiduous workers among men than those who are occupied in the construction of a first-class building, when the workers all realize that the architect and master builder is on the job and that every detail of their work is under his immediate inspection.

It is an inspiring sight, too, especially to the owner, to see the different materials being carried to, fitted, and secured in position and the whole building growing under the hands of the workmen towards completion. He is perfectly satisfied with each day's progress and feels assured that within the specified time the building will be ready for occupancy. But suppose that in the absence of the master builder the workmen begin to carry away the material so generously supplied by the owner, to some other job—some the bricks, others the mortar, some the various kinds of lumber, others the slate or the nails, or any of the building material provided for this specific building, how long will it be before it will be complete and ready for occupancy?

These thoughts came suddenly to the mind of the writer while assisting at a sacrament, prayer and testimony meeting recently and the application, emphasized by the prevailing conditions, came with irresistible force. The building materials for building up the kingdom of God consist of our tithes and offerings, our consecrations and surplus, and our individual and collective gifts—our time as well as our talents. And every individual, particularly every member of this church, the great Reorganization, who is using any of this building material in any other way than for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God is carrying God's building material off the job to some other building.

The thought applies to every activity of life. Can we sing? Are we assisting in the song service of the house of the Lord, or are we devoting this talent to the interests of the adversary? Have we ability as a musician, as a Sunday school, Religio, or Women's Department worker? Are we using this ability for God's building? If not, then we have another job on hand to which we are carrying all this material which God has provided for the building up of his kingdom.

Are we paying our tithes and offerings? Are we consecrating our means, our surplus, our time, our thought for the building up of God's kingdom? If we are, then all is well. The building is rapidly nearing completion, and God is pleased with the progress from day to day. If otherwise, then we have another job somewhere else to which we are carrying God's building material, not only robbing God, but also assisting to build up the adversary's structure.

That some are carrying away the building material is clear from the fact that as early as June, 1834, Zion might have been redeemed, the building might have been completed, had the builders had no other job on hand, or had every man observed the command given through Saint Matthew: "Wherefore seek not the things of this world, but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." Are we as individual members of the church to-day building all of God's building material into his building, or is history repeating itself?

A new building devoted to American archæology has been completed in New York City and contains nearly 2,000,000 specimens of the American Indians, including the Aztecs, the Peruvians or Incas, and it possesses the art of the ancient Mayas. The building is called the Museum of the American Indians and is located on Broadway and One Hundred Fifty-fifth Street and opens to the public the middle of November.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Star of Bethlehem

By Eleanor Waldorf Kearney

Behold the stars! Their brilliant light
Seem like a diamond studded sky;
'Twas thus they shone one distant night
On ancient shepherds, watching nigh.

One star stood out above them all,
All lights paled in its greater glow,
A king it seemed 'midst subjects small—
That scene two thousand years ago.

It was the Star of Bethlehem
Sent, Lord, to guide the wise to thee;
Lo! wisdom still abides with them
Who the vision's meaning see.

The King of all the world "is born!"
He by whose hands the world was made!
O Wisdom! of thy vain pride be shorn!
O Stars! your light forever fade!

The Maker of the universe
Was born to live despised and die!
Born, Holy One! to bear the curse
For earth's weak sinners—such as I.

Still glows his star 'bove stars or sun,
Lighting the way in which he trod;
All other ways be ours to shun.
Bethlehem's star still leads to God.

A Christmas Poem

By Florence Burgess

(Reprinted from Autumn Leaves, December, 1915.)

A little girl came, with her doll and toys—
"Is this Jesus' birthday?" she said.
"Then why don't we all give presents to him—
And not to each other instead?"

"Dear child, he wants it so; he says—
'Inasmuch as ye have done
Any good, even unto the least of these,
Ye have done it to me, the Son.'"

I know not whether she understood,
But after she slipped away,
I sat in the dusk and pondered long
Upon the wondrous way

In which we give to the Savior of men
By giving to a brother—
Thus blending the first and great command
With the second, to love one another.

And then another significance
Came stealing through heart and brain,
With "Oh, to be more like Jesus"—
How oft I had sung the strain!

Did I really wish to be like him?
Was I like him in this? Ah, no!
For oft I had envied more fortunate friends,
And grieved that I was not so.

Of the unselfish spirit embodied there
I had known but little, I fear;
"Do good to me by doing good
To those whom I hold dear."

Was it possible, then, to love like that?
Could I ever say that too?
And feel like that toward all my friends
Not a favored one or two—

Would I not be intensely thankful, then,
For every good they had,
And for every added joy that came,
To make their lives more glad?

Would I not pray, with "sincere desire,"
For their welfare, day by day?
Forgetting largely my own lack—
In short, would I not say:

"Inasmuch, dear Father, as thou hast blest
My brothers and sisters here,
Inasmuch as thou hast granted to them
Good health and comfort and cheer—

"It is e'en myself that thou hast blest
In this sweet and wonderful way?"
And so at last, as I sat in the dusk,
I felt in my heart to pray:

"O Jesus, dear and holy one,
Help me this end to gain—
To 'prefer another' in happiness,
Thy Spirit to attain.

"I thank thee for this beautiful thought,
Upon this holy day.
'Tis a thought that will lift me up, I hope,
Toward thee and from self away.

"I prize full well the gifts I found,
Beneath the festive tree—
But most I prize this thought divine,
Thy gift from heaven to me."

The Lord's Prayer

By Thomas Newton

Our Father dear, who dwells above,
Thy great name we adore;
Thy kingdom come where all is love,
On us thy Spirit pour.

Thy will be done by us below
As it is done above,
Our daily bread do thou bestow,
Almighty God of love.

Forgive us, Lord, our many debts,
As we forgive our brother,
His trespasses we would forget,
So we would love each other.

Lead us, dear Lord, in holy ways
Where no temptations are
And we will always sing thy praise
Beneath thy sheltering care.

Deliver from all ills that come;
O may we sheltered be,
That we may safely reach our home
And ever dwell with thee.

O may thy blessings on us shower
As we thy name adore,
For thine is the kingdom and the power
And glory evermore.

O Father, help me so to be,
That I may always give
A willing service, Lord, to thee
And in thy service live.

Shield me, dear Father, by thy power
From danger, sickness, pain,
That I may serve thee hour by hour
Washed clean from every stain.

Help me, dear Lord, whilst here, to loose
The bands of wickedness,
And always be inclined to choose
The paths of righteousness.

I want to live whilst I am here
So I can walk with thee,
Be always guided by thy hand
Unto eternity.

And when my work on earth is done
My greatest joy be this,
That I may come and dwell with thee
In everlasting bliss.

Think Not of Self

By Emma Irwin

O soul of mine! Think not of self,
But bend thyself to nobler aims,
Lift up thy head, and give thy strength
To that alone which virtue claims.

The power that caused thee to exist
And give thee place in this dull land,
Has watched thy rugged way, and makes
Of thee a wonderful demand.

For He requires of thee to learn
To live and freely sacrifice;
Be calm, be true in all you do,
No matter what may be the price.

Wherever in this darkened earth,
Thou mayest better service give,
Fly to that spot, forgetting self,
Henceforth alone for service live.

Oh, judge not that the weary years,
Shall altogether fruitless be,
For God shall cheer thee with a hope
And by his Spirit comfort thee.

Oh, thou shall stand with purpose bold,
To rescue those that slip and fall.
Let resolution hold thee firm,
That thou mayest help the weak who call.

Oh, toil for others' betterment,
For this shall be thy life, thy way,
Which, though 'tis grim to wander in,
Shall lead thee into perfect day.

Love

By J. R. Gibbs

Love is a dove of peace—Eternal
Is the term of its office;
Like God its source it doesn't cease
To offer its fair graces.

Good Books for Mothers and Others

The following list of books is suggested by Sister Dora Pankey Glines, superintendent of the Department of Women. These books are excellent, however, for fathers to read as well as mothers, and there are some of them of quite general interest and importance for teachers, ministers, or thinkers of any kind:

The Meaning of Service, Harry E. Fosdick	1.25
The Church and the People's Play, Henry A. Atkinson.....	1.35

Elder James E. Bishop has been holding services in the Kirtland Temple for the past two weeks. The opening Sunday he spoke on "Divine appointment, and safety zones and danger zones in religious experience." Through the week he lectured on such subjects as "The development of character," "The contribution of Joseph Smith to the thought of the nineteenth century," "Natural and revealed theology," "Jesus Christ an ultimate reality," "The four elements of the gospel," "Basilica and Ecclesia," "Priesthood authority," "The government of God," "Spiritual basis for the Book of Mormon." The second week his subjects concerned individual and social psychology, "Principles and nature of teaching," "The corner stone of right mindedness," "The nature of philosophy and sociology."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

War Saving Stamps

The Government of the United States requests that we announce to our readers that those holding the 1918 War Savings Stamps should not part with them for unstable investments or considerably less cash than they are actually worth. These certificates are due January 1, 1923, and have a face value of $5 per stamp.

But beginning November 15 arrangements have been made to change these War Savings Stamps for the 1923 issue of 4 per cent Treasury Savings Certificates. These Treasury Savings Certificates may be purchased for $20.50 for a $25 Savings Certificate and in increasing amounts of $82 for a $100 Certificate or $820 for a $1,000 Certificate. These Treasury Certificates will be due January 1, 1928, when the face value will be paid. But they may be redeemed any year with 3 per cent simple interest.

On January 1 there will doubtless be a rush to have these War Savings Stamps redeemed or transferred. It is for this reason that the Government offers to make the exchange at once for those who wish to continue their investment.

The Vital Test

An advertisement of boots and shoes contains this statement: "Into every pair go the results of sixty-six years of experience in making shoes." There is no doubt that the best recommendation a firm can produce is successful work after long practice.

The same principle is applicable to every department of life. "By their fruits ye shall know them." This is the essential truth which underlies the system of philosophy associated with the name of William James, called Pragmatism. It insists that the truth of anything is proved by its power to produce proper results. "Does it work? If so, it is true."

Now, while this is not the complete explanation, for it is not, and cannot be the last word on a subject, it is sufficiently accurate to warrant close and careful attention as one, at least, of the ways of testing reality.

This is part of the challenge of Christianity. What has it done? What is it doing? What can it do? This is one statement of the record of its past:

"It has changed the world's outlook, it has been the most potent factor in history, it has grown under fierce oppression, it has inspired the greatest philanthropists, the finest poets, painters, philosophers, and statesmen. Where it has flourished, nations have become strong and free; where it has been thrust forth, or only allowed in an impure and vitiated form, the nations have become weak and their individuals corrupt. Nearly two thousand years of experience of its vitality and power testify to its worth."

Individual lives tell the same story, as a book like Twice-born Men clearly indicates. A well-known incident has just been given renewed currency. The great English Methodist preacher, Hugh Price Hughes, was once challenged to a debate on Christianity by Charles Bradlaugh, the English Ingersoll. Mr. Hughes at once accepted the challenge, but said that as conventional debates are usually profitless they should have one on new lines:

"I will undertake to bring a hundred men and women of various sorts on to the platform of Saint James' Hall, and they shall witness to the saving work of Christ in their lives. You can cross-examine them as much as you like. But you, on your part, are to bring a hundred men and women who have been redeemed from a sinful life by means of your atheistic teaching."

This was the only practical way of settling the question. It is scarcely necessary to say that the debate was not held. The supreme test of life is the "pragmatic" one, the proof that comes through personal experience. This was the convincing argument of early Christianity in the face of its first opponents: "And seeing the man that was healed standing in the midst of them, they could say nothing against it."

This practical test of Christianity has a great and definite bearing on the many intellectual problems and discussions so rife to-day. Ideas and ideals are powerless against moral evil and the bias of the will, for until these ideas become part of human convictions and volition they remain purely intellectual and without moral potency.

A great deal of learning and scholarship is apt to forget this necessity of a "pragmatic" proof. A thoughtful writer recently said that "the constructive scholars of the church have never met their duty of popularizing the results of their studies; they have not matched the itinerant evangelist's ardent preaching with an equally effective presentation of their findings."

The editor of a secular newspaper wrote something very similar a few weeks ago when a meeting of "liberal" ministers was held in his city:

"The masses want less head and more heart, more that is vital in the religion of the church. Themselves intensely personal in their spiritual experience, they crave a Bible less punctuated with human comment and more literally a sword of the Spirit. There are some things a university cannot teach. Obedience is the organ of spiritual vision—to do the will is to know the doctrine—and here the college campus is on an equality with the shop and factory and field where toil abounds."

Christianity appeals to the whole man, and not to the intellect alone. Readers of If Winter Comes will remember the cry of Mark Sabre for "light." This is how a Chicago paper, The Evening Post, comments on the novelist's words:

"The authentic note of the human soul rings poignantly in that cry. It is both incitement and appeal. Its undertone is the moan of winter, but its overtone is the hope of spring. Can that cry be answered? Yes, but not in the weak compromise that Sabre strips naked with his edged words of scorn. Not by garbing religion in the motley of good-fellowship and joining the carnival. Not by abandoning the high demands of the Cross for the pliant policy of 'everybody is all right, and anything goes.' That sort of religion for a time may get glad hands, but it can never make glad hearts. Yes, there is light! And those who have seen its radiance must make it their task to remove the obscuring screens and let it shine. 'The light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ,' Paul called it. That is the light the world needs."

This is at once the challenge of Christianity, and a call to all who name the name of Christ. The great fact of religion is that it is essentially and predominantly concerned with man's welfare; not with his pleasure, except so far as welfare leads to pleasure. The religion of Christ is intended to produce a change in every part of human life, in man's thinking, feeling, and doing, and then will come the desire and determination to have others share this unspeakable satisfaction. The best recommendation of Christ to those around is to show in our lives what he has done and is doing for us. A lady who had befriended a fallen girl received the highest possible testimony when the poor repentant creature said on her deathbed after a life of sin: "I have not found it hard to think about God since I have seen you."—Toronto Globe, October 18, 1922.

Leadership and Lordship

Doctor Horne, of New York University, in a little pamphlet on Y. M. C. A. work suggests three types of leadership, giving several names in illustration of each, and he urges all young men to develop these qualities. The first type is said to represent the rule of reason; the second the reign of law; and the third the call of love. These are not only valuable in themselves as models for human life, but they are particularly suggestive in their application to Jesus Christ, because they all three are realized in him as in no one else.

The leadership of the first of these classes is connected with thought. These men may be said to do the thinking for their fellow men. The names associated with this type include those of Plato, Aristotle, Aquinas, Luther, Calvin, and many more. But at the head of this class stands Jesus Christ, because he proclaims and embodies the truth. "I am the truth," is his claim. He tells man about God, about human life, about redemption from sin, about holiness of character and conduct, about the world to come. No one else can do this except the teaching is derived from him, and although the Bible, which enshrines his teaching, has now been before the world for several centuries, not only has it not been superseded by any more recent teaching, it has never been more powerful than it is to-day. When Christ's enemies sent to apprehend him, the messengers returned without him, and could only say with evident astonishment, "Never man spake like this man." The ages have confirmed this testimony to Christ's uniqueness as a teacher, and at the present time the confession of every true learner is, "Who teacheth like him!"

What, however, is the secret of Christ's leadership as a teacher? It is due to the fact that his teaching is always closely and vitally connected with himself. We cannot accept the teaching apart from the teacher. He revealed the Father's will, and not only did that will himself, but set it before his disciples as the supreme and satisfying life for man. And in so doing he presented himself as the sole way of realizing that life. "No man cometh to the Father but by me."

The second class of leadership indicated by Doctor Horne represents that dominating will which lays hold of men and leads them step by step to the accomplishment of its purposes. Typical names are Moses, Alexander, Cæsar, Constantine, Cromwell, Napoleon.

This, too, is true of Jesus Christ, for no one has so completely captivated and controlled his followers as the lowly One of Nazareth. Saul of Tarsus was an outstanding personality, who would have come to the front and been a leader anywhere. And yet for thirty years he was a mere echo of Jesus Christ. "To me, to live in Christ," was his motto.

Some one remarked to Wendell Phillips that Jesus was "amiable, but not strong." "Not strong?" replied Phillips, "not strong? Measure Jesus Christ by the men he has mastered." This is true. Go through the centuries and mark the many outstanding men who have been disciples of Christ. A striking testimony to the uniqueness of Jesus Christ was, all unconsciously, given the other day. The well-known scientist, Einstein, said that the list of scientific geniuses of the first order consists of three names only: Newton, Faraday, and Clerk Maxwell. Newton is known by all; Faraday by many; but Clerk Maxwell by a very few. And yet, as a scientific article says, "it is Maxwell's name which has become more and more the dominating name of Victorian science." Now the interesting thing is that these three "scientific geniuses of the first order" were humble, devout followers of Jesus Christ. "Measure Jesus Christ by the men he has mastered."

In the third class Doctor Horne puts the great religious leaders, those who have been concerned for human suffering and have endeavored to relieve it. Names in this class are Confucius, Buddha, Socrates, Francis of Assisi, Mazzini, and others. But none of these can compare for an instant with Jesus Christ. All human suffering comes primarily for sin, and Christ alone deals with this root of man's troubles. His love prompted him to come to this earth to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and this is the only way in which sorrow and suffering can be abolished. And his love so dominates the hearts of those who follow him that they in turn go forth and bring to bear on the world's misery the love and grace of their Master. "We love, because he first loved us."

Here, then, is the true and complete leadership: in thought, in action, in devotion. And Christ's leadership is due to his lordship. The prophet said hundreds of years before Christ came: "I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people." He becomes "witness" and "leader" in proportion as he becomes "commander." Saint Paul tells us that the very purpose for which Christ died and rose was "that he might be Lord," and when man surrenders to him as Savior and Master he finds that knowledge of truth, that control of the will, and that inspiration of love which constitute the secret of all true life.

Full Salvation

At an institute held in Columbus, Ohio, at the First Congregational Church, great emphasis was laid on the inspired idealism of the teachings of Jesus. He is the master of life, the sure builder of a new order in the world. God is the intelligence within the marvelous natural order. True, Christianity does not disparage man and consider him as hopelessly lost, according to the conclusion reached by these Congregational ministers, but feel that the importance of man, and find also that individual salvation, which takes place between a man and God without reference to other men, is not enough for the modern world and is not true Christianity. The Christian idea of salvation is both individual and social, both present and future, both physical and spiritual. It is only when we combine these that we conceive of full salvation. Omit any of them and it is partial, incomplete, and unchristian.

Popular Common Sense

A reporter on a New York newspaper recently asked five people, two men and three women, chosen by chance from among the six million inhabitants, the following question:

"Would you rather be rich without education, or poor with education?" The answers were as follows:

Housewife: "If I had to choose I would much rather be poor with education. It is easy to lose riches, but if you have education you retain it and can enter most any field of endeavor."

Salesman: "Just as most of my friends are: educated and earning a fairly good living. There is nothing more offensive than an uncouth rich person who wants you to know he's rich."

Secretary: "I prefer education to riches. An educated person knows how to enjoy herself and appreciate life without spending a single penny. Riches are least essential for true happiness."

Compositor: "Anyone with sense would prefer education to riches because he could read and think intelligently and also mingle with people worth while. Riches alone give men very little standing."

Hostess: "I would choose to be poor with education. Igno-

LETTERS AND NEWS

The Lesson of the Prodigal Son

This is not a sermon. The writer is not of the ministry, but just one who has accepted the gospel, as taught by the Saints, and who does not hear it preached except through the church publications. Within the last year, there have been some discussions in the HERALD which might lead some isolated ones into contentious attitudes of thought.

I was glad when I read that the revelation presented to the General Conference had been accepted. Not being in touch with the work of the church, as those who have branch privileges, I, of course, was in no position to judge of the objections to it, nor the arguments for it; but the last sentence, "Let contention cease," just seemed to be the very words we were hungry for.

A good many years ago, when I lived at Rich Hill, Missouri, and was in the Sunday school work, we had, for a lesson, the "prodigal son." I had never seen anything in the narrative of much importance until it came in the Sunday school lesson. It seemed after that lesson had been learned and understood that all, from the least to the greatest, could learn a great lesson from that parable.

It seems no words are necessary to convince a prodigal that bread made from the good whole wheat is better than "husks which the swine did eat," or bran. And when he knows where it may be had he ought to show the good sense to go and get it on the right kind of terms. But if he would cry for the father to come and get him, and bring him home, he would have to look elsewhere for a precedent.

The son who had stayed at home, and had helped his father to increase his wealth, and had not spent his substance, had to be preached to by the father, because he did not hold his possessions for the right purpose. When he complained that the father had not so much as given him a kid with which to make merry with his friends, the father said: "All that I have is thine." Apparently he could have used it if he had chosen to do so.

The church has been propagating the gospel, wherein the righteousness of God is revealed, and it has interpreted that righteousness to mean nothing less than doing right. The parable of the prodigal son clearly shows that neither wasting of substance in riotous living nor of keeping it for a selfish purpose is right.

Each of us is having his individual problems to solve, and surely the Father knows the answer to the question: "What lack I yet?"

Some of us would not ask that question for we know of much that is lacking and are too deeply concerned with our tasks to ask another question: "What is Brother Rich going to do with what he has?" Some of us are not good managers and it seems to me a wise provision that the Father is allowing us the time for the experience of learning outside of Zion's stakes.

This may not be enjoyed by us as well as we think we would enjoy living in Zion. But are we not taught that if we come to Zion and are not prepared it will not be Zion for us? Is it not apparent to all of us, that the Father knows just how we stand in our individual preparation, as well as he knows who are qualified to act as ministers?

I was glad to read the letter of our socialist brother to President F. M. Smith, and Brother Smith's answer.

I am not in touch with many of the Saints, so I don't know whether many of them are being affected by it or not, but socialism is a stumblingblock to many of the good people who hope to become pure at heart through its tenets. Surely the gospel makes it plain that only the pure in heart can occupy in a condition of social equality.

Some of us know that we are not living in an ideal environment, but we may suppose the laundry is not an ideal place for the family linen, yet the housewife sees to it that it must remain in the suds until it is clean.

A sermon in the Ensign by Apostle Edwards, recently published, just fills the vacuum in the experience of some of us.

He says to educate a man we must act upon his affections, his intelligence, and his will. This is only accomplished by a course of activity, and in that course each of us must move from the place he occupies at present.

The one writing this looks back over more than a quarter of a century of time, since the gospel became the power of God unto salvation to him. He sees many failures, much that he is ashamed of, and some things for which he knows he is justly condemned. Out of it all he sees experience and, perceiving that this experience is his education, he would cease to think of the past in terms of "If I hadn't" or "If I had"; but to think of life in the present in terms of what I have and of how I may use it.

The fact that the recent world events have awakened us to the need of Zion as a city of refuge ought not to cause us to sing, "Beautiful Zion built above," and close our eyes to behold the heavenly vision, while at hand some common but wholesome work is waiting to be done which we fail to see because we are beholding Zion in our visions and dreams.

It ought rather to cause us to use the modern way of doing things.

In industry where electric lights are used, we have the metallic cord to carry the current from the circuit to the bulb which we may carry about with us, so that we may have the light aid us at every point where it is needed. If the gospel is the light of the world, we ought to so apply it that we may see just what is needed in our own selves.

It may be that some of us who are "poor" would not be so if we would learn management. And if that be the case, management is the thing for us to learn and do, and it is very convenient for us to have examples of thrift in our midst so that we may know that it can be done.

If there be those who withhold tithes and offerings selfishly, does not the Father know? If I have not written too much already, I will say that while I was in the Sunday school work I dreamed one night that the individuals composing our corps of workers, superintendent, teachers, and all, were working in a garden with ordinary garden tools. Some one said: "Let us get a drink." We went to where three springs of clear, cool water were bubbling from the ground. No one seemed to be thirsty, but each took a sip. The superintendent said, "On a day like this, and the kind of work we are doing, if we are not thirsty it is because we haven't been doing much. We are lazy."

Experience teaches that the best way to have a good appetite is to do a good day's work, and it will apply to those who would "hunger and thirst after righteousness."

rant rich people have friends only as long as they have money and spend it freely. The educated class makes worth-while friends who last."

The answers are worth quoting because they suggest a growing belief among people in varied walks of life that a sound education is very well worth while.—Christian Work, October 21, 1922.

Is This Your Church?

Editors Herald: One of our young people who is located temporarily in one of our large cities where she is pursuing advanced studies in her line, writes to a sister as follows:

"I went to church yesterday for about the third time since I have been here. I hate to go because it is so far, and the people are so unfriendly. There are hardly ever more than seventy or seventy-five people at church, but do you know that I can go again and again and never a soul speaks to me but the pastor. I think it is so strange in a small branch where everybody knows everybody else as they do here. I swear that although we never know at home, who is strange and who is not, I am going to speak to everybody when I get home again. It is an awful feeling to be so completely ignored! Guess I am a little bit spoiled from living in small towns and being rather run after. Maybe a dose of this is what I need. Anyhow it's what I'm getting."

May this letter cause us to look around for the other fellow—"Make your church a friendly church."

Shake hands with the stranger as well as each other. Let us greet each other with a "holy salutation" as becometh Saints.
Sincerely,
D. J. KRAHL.

From the Bishop's Office Bulletin

This bulletin is sent to each member of the family in our church homes for the aged. Among other items we note the following:

Thanksgiving! Make it a habit, not just a holiday.

Thirty-four of the Home family have belonged to the church over 40 years; 20 of these over 50 years, 3 for 55 years, 2 for 56 years, 3 for 57 years, 1 for 58 years, 1 for 59 years, and 1 for 64 years.

New members admitted to the homes during November: Brother A. B. Shumway, Brother and Sister James Allen, and Sister Mary Pascoe. The last three are to remain for the winter months only.

We neglected to make mention in our last Bulletin of Halloween at Holden Home. Sister Carr's report reads:

"After supper we placed some flowers and Halloween decorations in the sitting room; our help and a few neighbors came in masked and a jolly time followed while they tried to guess who each one was. We serve pop corn and apples which were donated to the home."

The fifth anniversary of Holden Home on November 20 was perhaps one of the most pleasant days in its history. Guests from far and near were in attendance. A very spiritual service was held in the chapel at 2.30 p. m. Apostle J. F. Curtis and Evangelist I. M. Smith addressed the audience. Those of the home family participating in the evening program were: Sister Frances Keeler, reading; Pantomime, "Home, sweet home," E. R. Boucher; a playlet, "The new college girl," written by Grace Daugherty, one of the home girls, was highly appreciated by the audience. At the close some one said: "This is the end of a perfect day," not a jar in the whole day's program.

The spirit of cooperation manifested by those in the homes who are able to help in one way and another is greatly appreciated by this office. Generally when they know what is wanted and how to do it, that is sufficient. We offer one suggestion which if carefully observed will save perhaps $10 or $15 each month. Turn off the lights and water faucets when you are through with them, or if you see that some one else has forgotten to do it. The approaching winter with its long, cold nights increases our fuel and light bills considerably and you can help the church just as much by saving as by giving.

"I have splendid interest at Gurton, Ohio," writes Elder O. J. Hawn, from Bradner, Ohio. "Baptized two Sunday and others have given in their names for baptism. I feel more determined this year to do my best."

TIMBERS FOR THE TEMPLE

A New Book by Elbert A. Smith

From the preface we quote: "This volume by no means represents an effort to write an historical textbook. Imagination stirred by the romantic records of the past, has endeavored rather to revivify and re-live some of the strange events of the past, occurring in that most unique city of modern history, Nauvoo."

The story appeared in Autumn Leaves in 1917 and 1918. David H. Smith served to an extent as model for the character of David Nobleman. Frederick G. Smith likewise helped to suggest the character of John Nobleman, we learn from the author's explanation of the story.

The illustrations are of considerable historical importance, including these titles: "Ruins of the temple at Nauvoo," "Haun's Mill Massacre," "Nauvoo— from below the city," "The trysting place," "The Nauvoo House," "The 'Mansion House,'" "Carthage Jail," "The expulsion from Nauvoo," "President Joseph Smith."

It is a book with a wholesome attitude on some events in our church history and the incipency of some of the factional departures. While not a "problem novel," it stirs the reader and incites some deep thinking.

The preface concludes: "If even one reader shall be fortified in his determination to help build the living temple first, a redeemed people the home and habitation of God, that the temple of wood and stone may not be in vain, the labor of love represented by this book will not be lost."

Independence, Missouri

Independence

The eyes of the church are turned upon the land of Zion, with many inquiries to know what is happening there. One interesting event showing the disposition of the people in this place is the advice from the office of the Presiding Bishop that the receipts of tithes and offerings in the local bishop's office for Zion are one hundred per cent higher for November than for October. In other words, they have more than doubled.

Apostle J. A. Gillen has been laboring locally and met with the Saints in group two in prayer service Wednesday evening. The result was the largest attendance ever had in that group.

Apostle John F. Garver was in Independence a few days in connection with his editorial work but primarily in order to deliver the sixth sermon to the young people Sunday evening on "Zion, the pure in heart." He stated he had formerly understood the pure in heart to signify moral purity, but he now interpreted it in terms of "an eye single to the glory of God."

At the same hour President Elbert A. Smith was the spokesman in the sixth of the young people's services at the South Side Church. He will be the speaker next Sunday

Church was held, and Elder E. D. Moore was chosen as superintendent. He nominated as his coworkers, all of whom were approved: Vernon A. Reese, assistant superintendent; Dewey McNamara, assistant superintendent; Bruce Gold, assistant superintendent; Enoch Cox, secretary; Marshall T. Jamison, financial secretary; Frank A. Russell, chorister; George Miller, pianist. Elder John A. Gardner who has been superintendent of this local department withdrew in order to give his time to his work as field worker in Zion in connection with all the local groups in this department.

On Sunday evening at the close of his sermon at Second Independence church, known as the South Side, President Elbert A. Smith announced that the pastor, Elder Arthur Allen, had been released and Elder Richard J. Lambert chosen to fill the place. Brother Allen would be appointed to other church work. The change is taking place immediately.

Monday evening, the 11th, the Sunday school business meeting of the Stone Church was held resulting in the reelection of the general officers and most heads of departments. Christmas offering to December 10, $2,859.90.

President F. M. McDowell and A. M. Carmichael were in town Saturday in connection with the work of their office, but returned to Lamoni for Sunday.

FOR BELATED BUYERS

Don't take any chances on not getting what you want by Christmas. If you are not sure what to give, send one of the church papers. Pick any you want sent to a friend, send us the order, with instructions to mail a gift presentation card to reach your friend by Christmas. If your order reaches us in time we will mail a beautiful holiday presentation card containing your name and the name of the paper which will be sent. SAINTS' HERALD, $2.25 a year; Zion's Ensign, $1 a year (to nonmembers, 75 cents); Autumn Leaves, $1.75 a year. These will bring the spirit of Christmas the year round.

evening in the last of the young people's series at the Stone Church.

Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, spoke at the Stone Church Sunday morning. He specially stressed that we should strive to understand one another and especially to have an understanding heart toward our brethren on whom is placed the responsibility of leadership. W. T. Goulee, of England, presided at the organ and played the prelude and offertory as well as the accompaniments. Brother Goulee has been visiting the United States for the past several months and takes much interest in the organ work.

The radio services will be reestablished next Sunday at 6 p. m. continuing till 7. Tune in at 360 meters. Their license as a sending station had expired, and it was necessary to discontinue sending until it was renewed. The speaker will be, as previously announced, R. V. Hopkins, on "The Book of Mormon and the American Indian." Elder J. Charles May who has recently returned from the Isles of Pines and the Grand Cayman Islands will have charge of the music, using the instruments and vocal numbers that he has been using in missionary work.

Sister Jenkins, the wife of Elder George Jenkins who has been for many years engaged in missionary service, passed away Sunday, the 10th. The funeral is announced for Tuesday.

Friday evening, December 8, the business session of the local Department of Recreation and Expression at the Stone

Mrs. Abbie Horton celebrated her 86th birthday on December 8 in a social gathering with some thirty friends. Sister Horton was for several years a correspondent of the SAINTS' HERALD and graduated last summer from a course in the Independence Institute.

The social welfare store being conducted Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons each week in the old Ensign building is gathering momentum, but lacks the patronage they might expect. The proceeds from the sale of used clothing and household equipment will be used for the establishment of a day nursery for children of mothers who must work.

An oyster supper and donation party was held Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Independence Sanitarium.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending December 9: Mrs. Julia Clark, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. M. Sandage, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. M. L. Guay, Grand Rapids, Michigan, and the following from Independence: S. M. Adams, Mrs. C. J. Spurlock, Miss Maud Martin, Mrs. W. M. Sherman, Mrs. J. P. Hess, Master Billy Clarkson, Mrs. Drusilla Johnson, and Mrs. Dewey Green and Baby Green.

X-ray patients: J. M. Burnett, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. J. H. Allison, Syracuse, Missouri; and Mrs. L. W. Cross, George Barton, Elmer Peer, J. H. Botts, Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson, and Mrs. H. W. Pruitt, all of Independence.

Kansas City Stake News

Elder J. A. Gillen of the Twelve was speaker at Argentine at 7.45 to a fine little audience. He is thrice welcome there, as a former ten years' pastorate endeared him to all who came under his ministry. His subject was from John 15: "I am the true vine. My father is the husbandman." His text was from Acts 16: 30: "What shall I do to be saved?" The effort, urging the Saints to occupy higher ground, to prepare for the endowment which is ready to be given the ones qualifying for it, was well received.

Thanksgiving was observed by a service at several of the churches in the stake, many being fervent in rendering thanks and praise to our heavenly Father for his bounties bestowed during the past year.

The first official gathering of the Post-Brown families was held Thanksgiving Day with twenty-nine present, the larger part of the members living in and near Kansas City, all descendants of John and Ruth Sherman Brown born near Palmyra, New York, the latter part of the eighteenth century. Nearly all are members of the church. An organization was effected with John H. Post, of Atherton, Missouri, as president. The organization was given the name, "The Post-Brown Society," its aim being to mutually strengthen the family ties by obtaining their genealogical history, not forgetting their present social and spiritual needs.

Lamoni Items

Elder D. T. Williams was the speaker in Lamoni at the morning service Sunday, and it was announced that this would be the last opportunity to hear him before his departure for Great Britain.

Lamoni announces a community Christmas tree this year to be held in Central Park with an open-air pageant to be held Sunday evening, December 24, at six o'clock.

"WHO SHALL FEED THEM?"

Matthew 25: 37: "Then shall the righteous answer Him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? . . . And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

All are anxious that the missionary force shall be increased and that none now devoting themselves to the work of the Master shall go unfed or unclothed or be forced to discontinue their work in order to provide for their families.

God has provided for their support. The tithes and offerings are the inheritance of the ministry. The righteous are those who do right, who observe every phase of the gospel law. It is they who feed and clothe Christ by caring for the needs of his servants.

JANUARY WILL BE INVENTORY MONTH. You can secure a tithing report blank from your local solicitor.

Presiding Bishop.

Creston, Iowa

It has been some time since the Creston Branch has had anything to say through the columns of the SAINTS' HERALD. Our only excuse is that we are so busy we don't have time to talk about it. But if anyone thinks we are dead, come to Creston to visit us and we'll prove to be a very likely corpse.

This branch is growing numerically as well as spiritually, and any Saints who are planning on heeding the advice of the church to move where their families might have church privileges would do well to come visit us. We have Sunday school and preaching every Sunday, prayer meeting each Wednesday evening, also an active Department of Recreation and Expression, and Department of Women.

The Creston home-coming is an event looked forward to with eager anticipation by the Creston Saints as well as those who receive invitations from year to year to attend. But the one held this year, November 19, will long be remembered by all who attended because of the good spirit that was manifest from the early morning prayer service throughout the entire day.

All of the Saints who know Brother J. F. Mintun, of Council Bluffs and Brother C. E. Wight of Lamoni Stake will understand better than words can express the wonderful spiritual direction of the day's activities by those very capable men of God. We also had with us Saints from Afton, Corning, Fontainelle, Des Moines, Kent, and Pershing. Everyone returned home feeling it was good to be there.

Bevier, Missouri

October 22 was Home-coming Day with Bevier Branch. There was quite a large crowd of visitors at the morning services, but towards noon a light, drizzling rain began, which got to be quite a downfall before night. Many of the scattered members who had come in cars, some of them a distance of forty miles, started back at the close of the morning meetings.

The Temple Builders had charge of the refreshments in the church basement and served a splendid dinner and supper to all who remained.

Elder A. M. Baker, the new supervisor of the Northeastern Missouri and Saint Louis Districts, was present and began a series of gospel meetings which lasted every night for two weeks excepting Saturday nights. There was good attendance and interest at most of the meetings and quite a number of outsiders who seemed interested. Brother Baker used a large chart to illustrate his sermons which made them much more interesting and instructive.

From Bevier Brother Baker went to Macon where he held forth for a week with good crowds and attention. From Macon he goes to Forker, Missouri, a new opening where a Christian minister has challenged our people to a debate, which challenge I understand has been accepted by Elder Baker.

Thursday night a farewell reception was given at the church to Elder and Sister V. D. Ruch, who left here on the morning of the twelfth for New York, from which port they will sail November 16, for Christiania, Norway, where they will enter the foreign mission field in Norway and Sweden, and expect to be gone for five years. An appropriate program was given at the farewell meeting and this fine young couple was given a purse of money as a token of the regard and esteem held for them by the local members. After Religion Friday night light refreshments were served in their honor also.

Brother and Sister Ruch are making a great sacrifice for the work. They broke up their beautiful home furnished with all comforts, Brother Ruch giving up his work from which he derived a comfortable living for himself, wife, and little daughter Velma. May God's choicest blessings go with them and be with them in the great work of carrying the gospel message to foreign climes. They were among the first to respond to the call to take up religious training for foreign mission work, and spent one year at Graceland College.

Brooklyn, New York

Although some months have passed since we met on the beautiful camp ground at Deer Park, we have a hopefulness in our heart that many of the Saints will be reminded of the comforting experiences and pleasant associations of those days by reading a few items from the Brooklyn Branch.

We were pleased with the ready response on College Day, also with the collection sent to the Department of Women, it being twice that of last spring.

Our sacrament services and most of the prayer meetings have been well attended. Distance is a factor of no small moment in this great city.

Twenty-four of the Saints have organized and will take the two-year course in teachers' normal training as given by Graceland College in her extension department. Sister Catharine Nichols is leader and we are looking forward to a pleasant winter of concentrated study and class work.

Our Rally Day service passed off nicely with music, recitations, etc., by the children of the Sunday school.

Brother Mulligan, of Philadelphia, recently preached two sermons for us which were greatly enjoyed. In the morning he took for a text, "What to believe and what to believe not." He said to believe depends on three things: investigation, concentration, and action. We like this definition.

Brother John F. Sheehy who is on his way to his mission field in the Far West Stake gave two wonderful sermons on November 26 to a very appreciative audience.

On November 3 and 4 the Women's Department entered a bazaar at the Thirteenth Regiment Armory given under the direction of "Women's Welfare Workers" of the different church organizations of Brooklyn. We ran a haberdasher booth and cleared something like $125.

The Women's Department feel greatly indebted to Sister Guilfof of 4 Shippley Place, Forest Park, who has so generously given us the use of her home during the cold months.

The Sunday school is making a special drive for the Christmas offering this month. We are glad to see the Sunday school attendance increasing and hope the coming Christmas tide will be fraught with much good will and happiness for this department.

To Poultry Raisers

This is the time of year to sell your extra stock and to create sales for your eggs for hatching. A few dollars spent wisely in advertising will pay good returns.

We are in a position to print your stationery, business cards and circulars to your advantage. We have a fine assortment of cuts of all standard breeds of poultry.

These include chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys. We even have some of the bantams.

We use these on your job without extra charge—but one of the ways we offer special service.

Upon request we submit designs for your letter heads, etc. We can furnish the regular typewriter size stationery or the ruled notehead as preferred.

There is something about well-printed literature that lends dignity to your business as well as creates immediate business. The cost is trifling and, done right, good printing always pays dividends—if you produce the goods.

There is a big demand for thoroughbred, carefully reared stock, and you could easily sell to advantage if people only know you have what they want.

We Have Moved!

A surprising number of persons still address the Herald Publishing House at Lamoni, Iowa, in spite of the fact that we moved from there to Independence early in the summer of 1921. This would not make so much difference with ordinary letters except for the delay which is naturally charged to us, but when Canadian money orders are sent to us at Lamoni it requires a letter and four cents in postage for us to cash the order. And frequently these orders accompany a remittance blank plainly printed with the present address, given below. Please help us in this little but important matter.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA: At Sperry we are at work and doing all we can. At the present time we have a large Sunday school and regular church services and the ladies' aid meet and have quite a number. Our superintendent was called away recently on account of his father's illness but we hope he will soon return. Our Oriole girls are doing well. We are all trying to learn the lesson of loving one another. There are others interested in this place and we hope we can increase their interest. Our orchestra may interest more people as it is doing well at present.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: I would like to enter your columns as I have never written a letter to the HERALD. I live at this place and like it very much. We have quite a church here. I have never had the opportunity to go to church since I was married, so I am more than pleased. I try to serve the Lord in every way I can, although it takes lots of faith and prayer; but I know that without this we can do nothing. I am strong on faith and believe if we would pray more we would have faith. I am asking the prayers of the Saints for my husband, as he got hurt and at present is in the hospital. He does not belong to the church, but I am praying that he may.
 Yours in the faith, MRS. BELLE KENDAL.

Thrift Talks

Thoughts are things in incubation.

Thoughts are the most powerful in the world.

The Atlantic cable was first a thought.

The Panama Canal, the Woolworth Building, and the airship were first thoughts.

The World War was a destructive thought which materialized into the most sanguinary struggle of civilization.

Watch your thoughts; they will make you either angels or demons.

Success or failure, prosperity or adversity, joy or wee depend largely if not absolutely upon the kind of thoughts you think. If you want to make large financial contributions to the Lord's work, watch your thoughts.

Think about prosperity.

Pray about prosperity.

Work for prosperity.

"And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted."

A New Edition of Roget's Thesaurus

Almost every institution has at least one copy of Roget's Thesaurus available for constant reference. Next to the dictionary it is indispensable for literary workers, professional men, preachers, or orators.

The Crowell Company has recently issued a new, large-type edition with thin paper, and the 650 pages total in thickness less than an inch. Considered by many the best book of synonyms, it is more than that. It has a very complete and convenient arrangement of antonyms (words of opposite meaning) with an index that literally beckons one to its inviting pages.

The new edition is a great improvement over the old ones, and they were considered a great boon to writers. For those who know the book we have said enough. For those who do not, we reproduce the publishers' ten reasons for owning it:

"1. It will recall the word that has slipped your mind.

"2. It will enlarge your vocabulary.

"3. It will assist and stimulate you in the writing of themes and essays.

"4. It will aid you in letter writing.

"5. Where a single word will not express your meaning, it will give you just the phrase or quotation, and the author cited.

"6. It is rich in slang and cant expressions.

"7. It gives Americanisms, colloquialisms, and newly accepted words.

"8. It contains information you cannot find in any dictionary.

"9. The purist and the scholar who seek the finer shades of language will find the expression which exactly fits the need.

"10. It is the most complete, scientific, and accurate work of its kind in existence."

The price is $3.60, postpaid, from this office.

Michigan District are urged to be present and bring instruments, also all those who are contemplating on learning an instrument. A district orchestra will be organized during the meetings. Let's all go and make it a success. B. H. Doty, director of music.

Slides for Children Furnished Free

Of the new sets of slides for use with audiences of children (and greatly appreciated by adults) two are now ready and may be had upon application to the Graphic Arts Bureau, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. There is no charge, transportation charges each way only required.

No. 59 is a set entitled, "With our missionary to Australia." It contains forty slides and takes the child on an imaginary journey to Australia and has as a theme a greater appreciation of foreign mission work, to find ultimate expression in contributing to the Christmas offering as well as in personal devotion.

No. 60. This is entitled, "Our missionaries abroad—Christmas offering series." The child is aided materially to vision the scope of the missionary work and to understand his part in making missionary work possible through his contributions.

Complete lectures are furnished with each set. Arrange in time to be sure of getting the slides. If you do not have a lantern, it is often easy to get some kind person to come and use his for the occasion. The expense is very small. Postage to Lamoni on the heaviest set was only sixteen cents.

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MAINE.—At Little Deer Isle, November 11 and 12, with district president, A. Beggs, in charge. Minutes of last conference read and approved. Reports of the various officers of the district read and approved. Five branches reported. Secretary's report shows a total enrollment of 447 in the district. Receipts of the bishop's agent, $1,289.19; expenditures, $1,289.19. Speakers of the conference were Brothers A. Beggs and Newman M. Wilson. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout the conference. Next meeting at Stonington at the call of the district president. L. J. Eaton, clerk.

LITTLE SIOUX DISTRICT.—Met at Moorhead, Iowa, November 11 and 12, with J. W. Lane, district president, and Apostle John F. Garver in charge. The bishop's agent's report showed total receipts from tithes and offerings and for special funds, from June to November 1, $2,244.52. Ministerial and statistical reports were read from nearly all branches in the district. Recommendations for ordination to priesthood were concurred in as follows: Parley Gamet, Mondamin, deacon; Charles Clark, Logan, priest; David Morgareidge, Sioux City, priest; Eovey Jones, Pisgah, teacher; E. A. Purecell, Missouri Valley, elder. Preaching by John F. Garver, A. H. Parsons, and Charles F. Putnam. The attendance was quite small, owing to rainy weather, but those present felt benefited and encouraged in the work. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

Convention Minutes

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—At High Hill, near Lynnville, Kentucky, October 3, 1922. First session opened at 2 p. m. with District Superintendent O. S. Caldwell in charge. After the regular routine of business the chair put the following questions: How can we create a greater interest in our Sunday schools? How shall we teach; shall we follow the quarterlies verbatim? What is the Sunday school worth to us? These were discussed by Brother William Bath, Professor Pierson, and others, and many good thoughts developed. A good spirit was present. It was like an old-time family reunion. Time and place of the next convention was left to the district officers. At 7.30 a program was rendered by the young people, children, and choir, which was well rendered. The large church was filled to capacity. O. S. Caldwell, superintendent.

Our Departed Ones

WHITE.—Ladelle Annie, daughter of Cecil A. and Emma White, granddaughter of S. G. St. John who is now laboring as a missionary in London District in Canada, was born November 26, 1918, at Owen Sound. Died of diphtheria, November 8, 1922. Memorial services at Saints' church, November 19. Sermon by Benson Belrose.

HOUGAS.—Harriet Elizabeth Teal was born August 2, 1841, in Columbia County, New York. Came with her parents to LaSalle County, Illinois, in 1849. Married Thomas Hougas, January 3, 1858. Died at the home of a granddaughter in Ottawa, Illinois, November 18, 1922. Sermon by F. M. Cooper, assisted by F. G. Pitt. Interment near the old homestead at Mission Branch, Illinois. Leaves four sons and one daughter, thirty-nine grandchildren, thirty-four great-grandchildren, one sister, and one brother. Six children have preceded her.

McMULLEN.—Mary Ann Reid was born April 3, 1880, at Bellwood, Ontario. Married Archie McMullen, January 6, 1909. Baptized in August, 1906. Died September 15, 1922. Funeral sermon by J. R. Neil. On September 27, her husband met with an accident while threshing and died the following day. They leave one daughter.

FRETZ.—Annie D. Fretz was born August 7, 1872, in Belmont County, Ohio. Moved with her parents to Nebraska when quite young. Married Edwin Fretz, September 8, 1892. Baptized at the age of twenty-three.

Died at Comstock, Nebraska, October 30, 1922. Leaves husband, daughter, mother, and two brothers. Funeral from Saints' church in charge of C. W. Prettyman.

PETERSON.—Margaret Erickson was born in Sweden, January 18, 1845. Came to America during the 60's and settled in Nebraska, where she married Andrew Peterson. Moved to Montana in August, 1870. Died November 9, 1922. A number of her eight children are members of the church. Funeral from the Christian church. Sermon by George W. Thorburn. Interment at Anaconda, Montana.

CLOSSON.—Andrew V. Closson was born September 22, 1862, at Scott, Wisconsin; was baptized November 8, 1876; ordained an elder June 5, 1882; a seventy April 14, 1897; a high priest April 19, 1900. Married Miss Mamie Brown April 4, 1886, at Lamoni, Iowa. To this union there were born two sons and two daughters, all living at Independence, Missouri. He died from or during a fall from a house on which he was working near Independence, November 23. He leaves a wife, two sons, two daughters, fourteen grandchildren, one brother, and two sisters, with several nephews and nieces and a host of friends. He was a devoted husband and a kind and loving father, a faithful worker in the church; a large portion of the time since his ordination in 1882 has been devoted to missionary work. He was energetic, very humble and conscientious and has made a good, clean record, his services covering a period, local and missionary, of forty years. Interment in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

CLARK.—Mary Ann Clark was born in Newcastle, England, February 19, 1837. Came to America at three years of age, living in Saint Louis for a time and later at Pittsfield, Illinois. Baptized about 1864 and married in 1867 to Charles J. Clark who preceded her. Died at the Independence Sanitarium on the evening of October 8, after two years illness, in the eighty-sixth year of her life. Funeral services in charge of Elder F. G. Pitt; interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Five children survive and mourn her: Mrs. H. B. Curtis, of Kansas City; Mrs. A. Morgan, Independence; Mrs. John C. Goodwin, Kansas City; C. J. Clark, Augusta, Georgia; and Mrs. A. A. Pitt, of Chicago.

EDWARDS.—Sarah Jane Edwards was born in Dallas County, Iowa, November 11, 1855; died November 20, 1922, at Mayville, Oregon. She leaves to mourn, husband, two sons, one daughter, and a host of relatives and friends. Baptized in 1898 and has remained a faithful member.

A Bargain in Dictating Machines

We have two Edison dictating machines, one transcribing machine, one shaving machine for records, three record trays, some records, and some extra equipment for these machines that we are offering for sale at an attractive price.

We will be glad to demonstrate these machines or describe in detail for those specially interested.

The Edison machine is highly perfected, has interchangeable parts, and is in every way a satisfactory equipment. Often one's office work is of such character that he can dictate only at a time when the typist is busy at something else. The use of these machines allows one to dictate at his convenience, at home or at the office, and any good typist can transcribe the records. It allows the typist to hear what was actually said rather than to ponder over illegible notes that have become "cold."

We will sell part or all of the equipment, as desired. One machine with transcribing attachment and the shaving machine would serve any ordinary office.

Next Year's Course in Religious Education

The work being done at Graceland College by the group of young men and women preparing for missionary and other church work holds so much promise for the good of the church and its work that it appears wise to issue another call for a class to enter Graceland College next fall. The preparation will be not alone for foreign service but for domestic as well, the ratio to be determined after the applications are in and it is known what material is available. The preparation will require intensive study along special lines. The great demand for qualified workers requires speeding up on our part. The course will include:

1. A thorough study of the doctrine and beliefs of the church with methods of their presentation.
2. Language, history, geography, customs, etc., of the countries in which the church has or is likely to have missions. For those in local work, courses in political history, political science, economics, or sociology with particular reference to the problems of Zion.
3. Certain academic studies to meet the needs of individual students.
4. Elementary sanitation, hygiene, first aid, simple nursing, etc.
5. Recreational leadership, scouting, Oriole and Temple Builder work.
6. Sunday school, Religio, and women's work.
7. Such incidental subjects as are found to be closely related to the particular work to be accomplished.

One of the outstanding benefits to be derived from the course will be personal association with the Lamoni Stake and general church officers.

The selection of the young people to make this preparation is highly important. The qualifications of those selected must be such as to assure the highest possible degree of success. These qualifications will include:

1. Consecration and call to the work of the church, and intense interest in the welfare of the church and prosecution of its work.

2. The necessary education and general intelligence: a high school education or its equivalent. Successful church and missionary work is in many cases the best equivalent. Systematic reading courses and travel experiences function as developers of intelligence.

3. Not over thirty years of age, with general good health and physical fitness. Those over thirty years of age, having formed the habit of study, should also apply.

Those desiring to enter the course should apply at once by writing to the President of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. Selections will be made from these applicants by the general church authorities.

Since the establishment of this course many of the conference appointees and church workers have spoken to me about young people qualified for the course. Such should write to President G. N. Briggs of the college, so that application blanks can be forwarded.

In the present financial situation it will be necessary for students not under missionary appointment to finance themselves either wholly or in part.

The work of preparation for church service is highly important and all interested in the progress of church work should assist in securing qualified workers for this course. Those who have taken the courses thus far feel deeply the responsibility and importance of the work, and are earnestly endeavoring to meet the divine approbation. The standard for next year's class must be raised rather than lowered.

May God bless our efforts.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

Says Conklin (The Direction of Human Evolution, p. 228): "The possibilities are almost infinity to one against the conclusion that the order of nature, the fitness of environment, and the course of progressive evolution with all its marvelous adaptations are all the results of blind chance. . . . In short, science reveals to us a universe of ends as well as of means, of teleology as well as of mechanism, and in this it agrees with the teachings of philosophy and religion."

Our Bible

As literature, as a sacred book, in every way, it holds a foremost place. No other book in so small a place gives us so much.

According to newspaper accounts a California court has decided to exclude the King James version of the Bible from the public schools of that State on the ground that it is sectarian. It is not surprising that this decision is receiving serious comment.

The Outlook raises the question, What would be the attitude of educators if all study or reading of the literature of the Romans or the Greeks were excluded from our public schools? Is it less of a calamity for a court to bar from the public schools all study of the equally great literature of the Hebrews to say nothing more? It would appear, however, that the objection comes from those who hold the Bible as having been infallibly dictated to an infallible writer and infallibly preserved and infallibly translated. It is this factor which has brought about the inability to sanction any particular translation, and hence raises the issue of partiality if any particular translation be received.

This is indeed gravely unfortunate, for it is not necessary for these arguments to be received at their face value. The facts are that regarded merely as literature the Bible is as ancient literature incomparable in its survey of life from early days to the present in its insight into the heart of man, in the elevation of its vision in the spiritual realm, in the conciseness of its words of wisdom, and in its simplicity of narrative.

In its variety of literary form it is not surpassed by any other literature either ancient or modern. The literature of the Greek in its perfection of form does not exceed portions of the Bible, nor, according to the Outlook, do the works of Shakespeare overtop the book of Job. It is indeed most unfortunate that such a book in any adequate translation should be excluded as sectarian.

But to this may be added also the fact as the Outlook suggests, that the King James Version itself is not merely a translation of this wonderful ancient literature, but is itself a masterpiece of English literature. It is so interwoven in the history of English literature that if it were destroyed it would nevertheless continue as a part of the living organism. Men of all faiths and of no faith have accepted it as a marvel of style, as a treasury of language, and as a pure fountain of thought.

As we have suggested previously, English literature cannot be rightly understood without a knowledge of the Bible. It has formed the basis of the writings of all of the great writers in England and America, as well as the great writers in other languages whose works have been translated and preserved.

Of all of the literature of ancient times, the sacred books have been preeminent in quality and have been the best preserved. When the scholar thinks of India he remembers the Puranas, the Vedas, and the Mahabharata; when he thinks of Persia he thinks of the Zendavesta; when he thinks of Egypt he thinks of the hieroglyphs, the monuments, and the Book of the Dead; when he thinks of China he thinks of the writings of Confucius and the Kings; when he remembers the archæology of the Northmen he turns to the Eddas. Where the archæology of America is concerned it is plain that most of their writings were religious in character and the great ruins of the southland are presumed to be great temples and altars for worship.

But of all the sacred books which have been written, the Bible, the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, excel all others for literary style, for conciseness of statement, for beauty of thought, for spiritual power, and in the New Testament especially, for high spiritual and ethical standards. This is true even though the Old Testament relates the failings of man.

Occasionally an item appears in some of our newspapers of some great find. Numerous comparisons have been made of the Babylonian books and the Bible. But the fact remains that book for book the early books of the Bible exceed and excel the corresponding books of the Babylonians. If even fair open-mindedness is preserved, one who is not thoroughly acquainted with this book cannot rightly pretend to culture. Yet it is excluded from our public schools.

No other book in so little space gives us as much. For a pocket book no other collection of equal size can compare with the New Testament. One must feel a sense of respect for the man, however learned, who carries as his constant companion the words of Jesus of Nazareth and the great epistles of the Apostle Paul.

One is not surprised when he enters the home of a man whose constant companion is the word of God to feel their peace, not only the peace of the family, but the peace of God. We have been permitted to enter the bedroom of such a man and felt at once the spirit of worship which must be the result of the many humble prayers there offered up.

It is not surprising that the talk of the day and the papers of the day are filled with criticism of our morality, when we remember how few children in fact are regular attendants at Sunday school and how very few have even read, let alone made a companion of, this book which contains the word of God.

January Is Inventory Month

Beginning last week there appears in the HERALD for five consecutive weeks a short item from the Presiding Bishop that next month, January, will be inventory month. The branch solicitors all have the proper blanks, on which to set down our assets and liabilities, to consider what tithing has been paid and how much is due.

If our tithing has been paid in full up to the present year we still have to consider what has been our increase for the year and this increase does not mean simply an increase of net assets, but it also means that which we have received and used above our necessities considered on a missionary basis of food, clothing, and shelter, the latter including fuel, light, water, rent, interest, and taxes.

This is the one way that we may determine frankly where we stand with the Lord financially. We can only do so accurately, if we keep an account during the year and distinguish between these expenditures which are absolutely necessary, and those which help for our service in the church or for our joy in life but which are not absolutely necessary. In these latter the bishop has included our gifts to others, education, books, and magazines, offerings other than tithing to institutions or church. It would also include any expenditure for food or clothing above that which is necessary. Many of these expenditures make for better service in the church; and some missionaries have therefore supposed that they have no tithing to pay. It is only by keeping account that we can be sure of this.

There are some who are backward about paying tithing. There are some who will find it difficult to pay anything, for the year has proved a difficult one. But whether we can pay or not, our attitude toward the work of God should be one that we desire to assist to the extent of our power.

As showing the attitude taken by the editors of the HERALD we learn that immediately after conference one of them took a private stock inventory and found that his net assets had decreased instead of increasing. Despite this fact he set down some expenditures for furniture and clothing and then added the donations to the various church offering funds, the money spent for education, for books, magazines, etc., noted the tithing already paid for the year up to July 1 and then at once paid the balance to the Presiding Bishop within three days after the close of General Conference.

The work of God belongs to all of us. It requires the support of all. The first step is not to guess but to take an inventory blank and set down our financial status frankly and then to set down all the expenses of tithable items. If we have kept account this latter will be much more nearly accurate. If we must err it is better to err on the right side.

Then when the balance of our tithing is paid, it is time to consider whether we can make an offering or not. But the tenth belongs to the Lord.

What the "Herald" Is Doing

Last week's issue of the HERALD was a Christmas number even though not so designated. It opens with the excellent sermon by President Elbert A. Smith, on Jesus the Christ, under the caption, "The rock, the builder, and the material." It was followed by two short editorials on the Christmas theme, by Christmas poems, and in General Interest by two excellent articles which will repay a careful reading: "The vital test of Christianity, What are its fruits," and "Leadership and lordship." That Jesus exemplifies the rule of reason, the reign of law, and the call of love.

In addition to these themes dealing more or less directly with Christmas and the mission of Jesus, there is the call for the young people's convention by President F. M. McDowell, which should be carefully noted and read. This is followed by an article on "Moral growth" by Superintendent A. Max Carmichael on how best to teach morals and religion. The article by P. H. Phillipin on "Building and building material," while short, touches upon another aspect of the question of the builder and the material. While in the General Interest department "Popular common sense" presents clearly and tersely that education is to be desired rather than great riches, for education holds worth-while friends, who last, while ignorant rich people have friends only so long as they have money and spend it freely. Also the item here that full salvation is social, and in the letter department the lesson of the prodigal son, "Let contention cease"; and the experiences of one of our young people in one of our city churches are well worth reading.

In January there will appear in General Interest an article clipped from the Kansas City Times for December 13, on the Bible, and particularly on the beauty of the English of the Authorized Version. It is well worth considering, as it is undoubtedly true that the age when the Authorized Version was translated into English, was the most glorious in English literature, the age of Shakespeare. The English translation of the Bible has done much to insure a beauty of language that certainly is not improved upon by many of the modern translations which have come to our attention. We have wondered many times why some will use an inferior text rather than the beautiful English of the Authorized Version, though there are a few other texts which are also models of good English. This week we publish a few pertinent extracts on the Bible.

It is difficult, week by week, to forecast what will appear in the HERALD, as the make-up of each week depends so much upon that which is received. For example in the past week a number of excellent sermons and articles have been received and probably more for the letter department of the HERALD than for all the rest of the time since General Conference. We have made it a general rule to give preference to letters, so long as we have good letters on hand. Nor is the literary test so severe for the letter department as it is for articles. We recognize that many of our readers prefer the letters to any other department of the HERALD, and therefore we try to give the very best of all we receive and much of the time all that we receive. If more is not presented it is because our readers do not write.

This week the Bishop again calls attention to January as the inventory month. We have an article by J. R. Lambert which will be noted with pleasure by his many friends. A Max Carmichael discusses clearly the status with regard to Form 5. This will settle much of the agitation on the subject. T. W. Williams publishes his directions with regard to the Department of Recreation and Expression. In General Interest appears the creeds of the churches belonging to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America with regard to the relation between brothers engaged as employers and employees, the issue between capital and labor and the social problem.

Now for the new year. We have many splendid manuscripts in hand and expected. In hand we have for the first issue in January the soul-stirring sermon by President E. A. Smith preached at General Conference on October 8. We have also an article from Elder Harry Passman concerning the mission house in Jerusalem, its building and its construction, together with four snapshots, which he has sent, of the building and its surroundings. If we secure the cuts in time we expect to use this also in the first issue in January.

And then early in the new year we hope to publish the Graphic Arts number for which the manuscript is completely in hand.

We also have sermons and articles by T. W. Williams which we will have to postpone until after the first of the year; and we expect to continue the articles on religious education by A. Max Carmichael. Also many announcements will appear and further explanation and details concerning the young people's convention by President F. M. McDowell. This is but a small indication of what the new year holds forth for us, as we have a considerable supply of manuscripts on scientific themes of general interest, for the Seminar Department.

Another Missionary Crowned

Word was received by telegram here Saturday, the 17th, that Elder Holmes J. Davison had passed away at his home in Stockton, California.

Elder Davison was a brother of Mrs. Emma Burton and has had a long and fruitful experience as missionary in the church. During the past few months he has suffered the ravages of tuberculosis and succumbed to its attack.

He was inclined toward literary pursuits and has painted some quite excellent pictures in oil. He considered that his best work had been put into a book manuscript in which he sought to present our peculiar ideals without especially mentioning the name of the church. The manuscript had never been accepted for publication.

An article by Brother Davison appeared in a recent HERALD, but it was written before his recent illness and was held up awaiting the time when space was available.

He was one of God's noblemen, a true leader and spiritual companion.

New Dutch Tracts

A development of the publishing business of the church of interest to our readers is the new tracts published in Dutch to be used by Elders Veenstra and Postma in Holland. They plan to go to that country soon. This is another instance in which the publishing house is of direct assistance to the missionary work of the church.

These tracts consist of a translation of the tract, "Church of Jesus Christ, Where is it, How shall I know it?" written by William Lewis. This translation is made by A. Wouters and bears the title, "De Kerk Van Jezus Christus, Waar Is Zy? Hoe Zal Ik Haar Herkennen?" Other tracts are, "Wordt Behouden Van Dit Verkeerd Geslacht!" and "Het Evangelie," and "Kort Begrip Van Het Geloof en Van De Leeringen van de Reorganiseerde Kerk Van Jezus Christus Van De Heiligen der Laatste Dagen." These shorter tracts are translated and prepared by Brother C. F. A. Roell.

This is a work which should be developed as rapidly as the support of our general missionary work will permit. Other tracts have been written or translated or are in process of preparation for use in foreign missionary work, carrying out the work of the church in sending this gospel abroad to all the nations of the earth.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The "One Spirit"

By J. R. Lambert

"How readest thou?" is the question of this veteran thinker.

My first article on faith and belief appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD for February 4, 1914. The first paragraph reads as follows:

I believe I am prepared to appreciate carefulness of thought and expression. I also admire true independence and originality. But it should be borne in mind that the only true purpose of all these efforts is to be right. The only proper end to be sought and secured is truth. The most important thing for us to do, as ministers for God, is to see to it that our teaching and practice are in harmony with God's word and Spirit. Without this harmony, our apparent carefulness, independence, and originality in thought and expression, together with our nice efforts to discriminate, are vain. For, when we are in harmony with God, we are right; but when in conflict with God, we are wrong.

This paragraph will, I trust, be found to be a suitable introduction to what I may be able to write under the above caption. I take it for granted that we all want to be right and, therefore, in complete harmony with God's word, as found in the sacred and standard books of the church, the Bible being the leading one. I am more and more impressed with the necessity for a correct interpretation of God's word as found in the Holy Scriptures which he has so graciously furnished us.

But One Spirit in the Divine Plan

The Apostle Paul, who, as I see it, stood next to the Master as a minister for God, furnishes us with the following valuable instruction:

There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling.—Ephesians 4: 4.

In 1 Corinthians 12: 4, 7, 13, we have the following:

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.—Verse 4.

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—Verse 7.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.—Verse 13.

For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another Spirit, which ye have not received, ye might well bear with him. (Or "with me," as given in the marginal and Inspired Translations.)

But "one spirit." This furnishes us with a good basis from which we can, if we are careful and wise as we would like to be, arrive at a correct and safe conclusion.

All Point to the One Spirit

On the other side of this question, it is virtually admitted that the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, and the Holy Ghost are synonymous; but that there is a marked difference between the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost.

They Are One

"The Spirit," "the Spirit of God," "the Spirit of Christ," "the promise of the Father," "the Holy Spirit," and "the Holy Ghost," etc., are the same and point to the one Spirit only. It is not enough to simply assume a clear distinction between the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost, especially in the absence of any direct statement, or even an inference that such a distinction exists.

We must not forget that there is but "one Spirit." Paul attributes the fruits of the Spirit to the one Spirit, and the gifts of the Spirit to the same source. See Galatians, chapter 5.

But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law."—Verse 18.

But the fruit of the Spirit is love [the greatest principle in the divine plan], joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law."—Verses 22, 23.

In 1 Corinthians 12th chapter, we have the following statements:

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.—Verse 4. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit. To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man as he will.—Verses 5-11 inclusive.

What is this one Spirit from which all these gifts and fruits emanate? Notice, Paul says they all come from the same Spirit, and the different kinds of fruit, he says, are "the fruits of the Spirit." Is this the Spirit of God? If not, what is it? In Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5, 6, 7, we have the following:

And to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God.—Verse 5.

And to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, etc.

And again, it is given by the Holy Ghost to some to know the diversities of operations, whether it be of God, that the manifestation of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal.—Verse 6.

To some it is given by the Spirit of God, the word of wisdom.—Verse 7.

This evidence from the New Testament and Doctrine and Covenants shows that "the Spirit of God," "the Spirit," and "the Holy Ghost" are synonymous and interchangeable. That is, they all point to the "one Spirit." But this is but a small portion of the evidence at command.

Additional Evidence

When Jesus was baptized of John, "he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." (Matthew 3: 16.)

Mark, relating the same events, says Jesus saw "the Spirit like a dove lighting upon him." (Mark 1: 10.)

Luke uses the phrases "the Holy Ghost," "the Spirit," and "the Spirit of the Lord." He says that Jesus was full of the "Holy Ghost" when he returned from Jordan, and "was led by the Spirit into the wilderness." When full of the Holy Ghost, did he need a different Spirit to lead him into the wilderness? "And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee." (Luke 4: 1, 14, 18.) Thus we have the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of the Lord, and the Spirit all referring to the Spirit with which Jesus was baptized, and by which he was actuated after his baptism. Surely none will deny that this is the one Spirit spoken of by Paul, that is, the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of God. One Spirit, described by different phrases, just as the gospel is known as "the doctrine of Christ," the "word of God," "the perfect law of liberty," and "the truth." (2 John verse 9; John 7: 16, 17; James 1: 25; 1 Peter 1: 23-25; John 8: 31; 1 Peter 1: 22.)

The Holy Spirit

At this juncture of our investigation, we desire to emphasize the correctness of our contention by submitting additional evidence. The crucial point is, no line of distinction exists between the Spirit of God (the "one Spirit") and the Holy Ghost. My position is that when we so interpret the word that our interpretation is brought in conflict with other portions of the word on the same subject, it is self-evident that our interpretation is wrong, or our standard books are wrong. Which is it? I prefer to believe the former. The mistake is in assuming a position that we cannot get from the books when we consider what is written on the work of the Spirit as a whole.

It will be seen from the following passages that the phrase, Holy Spirit means just the same as the Holy Ghost. And, to say the least, Holy Spirit is just as good a translation as Holy Ghost. Even in the King James Version, we have Ghost substituted with the word Spirit.

Caste me not away from thy presence; and take not the Holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit.—Psalms 51: 11, 12.

Notice that Spirit and Holy Spirit are synonymous and are here used interchangeably.

"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." (Ephesians 4: 30.) This passage shows that the Holy Spirit is God's Spirit, and that in its office work it is nothing less or different from the Holy Ghost.

Whosoever is born of God doth not continue in sin; for the Spirit of God remaineth in him; and he cannot continue in sin, because he is born of God, having received that Holy Spirit of promise.—1 John 3: 9, Inspired Version.

This is a very instructive and significant passage. First, it shows that the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit, and the Spirit of promise all are one. Second, not only the terms used, but the effects produced on those who receive it, show most effectively that it is nothing less or different from that which has been outlined and defined by the Master himself and his apostles, a brief record of which we have in John 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters, and elsewhere.

Christ defined the Comforter as being "even the Spirit of truth," and in another verse, "the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost." Thus we have the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, and the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit of promise, all pointing to the one Spirit. The Spirit of promise was evidently the promise of the Holy Ghost. Jesus said:

And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 49.

The promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. (See Acts 2: 1-4.)

In Isaiah 63: 10, 11, we find the following words: "But they rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit." "Where is he that put his Holy Spirit within him [Moses]?" Was not this the Holy Ghost?

How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?—Luke 11: 13, latter part of verse.

He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.—1 Thessalonians 4: 8.

But notwithstanding those things which are written, it always has been given to the elders of my church, from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they shall be directed and guided by the Holy Spirit.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1.

In connection with this read Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9: The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God." These two statements, like many others, are exceedingly plain. They show that the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost are unmistakably synonymous and interchangeable.

A little more on this point, after which much evidence will be left untouched:

But thus spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was promised to them who believe, after that Jesus was glorified.—John 7: 39, Inspired Version.

How plain! But we may refer to this passage again.

In the second chapter of Joel there is much said concerning the restoration of the house of Israel. The promises made are grand, cheering, and confirming. But after all these things have been realized, the prophet says:

And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.—Joel 2: 38, 39.

On the day of Pentecost the Holy Ghost was received, according to promise, but the assembled masses did not understand its manifestations. "They were all amazed, and in doubt." Some mocked and said, "These men are full of new wine." Peter stood up to explain, and among other things, he said: "For these men are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel." Then Peter proceeds to quote from Joel's prophecy.

This was the important question, What is this strange light and power which enables these disciples of Christ to speak in so many different languages, seeing they are all Galileans? Peter answered by saying, "This is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel." "That"—what? After the word that occurs what we call ellipsis—something understood but not expressed. How shall we supply it? It will not do to say this is a fulfillment of Joel's prophecy, for it was far from it. No old men dreamed dreams, nor young men saw visions on that day, that we know of. Let us supply the ellipsis in this way: "This is that Spirit which was spoken by the prophet Joel." This, so far as I know, agrees with all the facts in the case, answers the all-absorbing question of the Jews, from their own sacred standard, and puts Peter's defense in good shape.

We all know, of course, that it was the Holy Ghost which they received on Pentecost Day, and this was the same Spirit that moved Joel to say: "And it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh," etc. In the light of all this evidence, the conclusion that the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost are the "one Spirit" which we have in God's great gospel plan, is irresistible.

Objections Considered

First, we are referred to the statement of Jesus when he promised the Holy Ghost to his disciples. "Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." (The emphasis is mine.)

What did Jesus mean by the phrase, the world? Did he mean that there are none living outside of the church and kingdom of God who can, under any conditions, whatever they may be, receive and enjoy any portion of the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, or the Holy Ghost? (I care not which phrase you use.) I think not. When praying for his disciples and all who should believe on his name through their words, he said, "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." (John 17: 15.)

My position is this: Just as far as men or women come out of the world, renouncing the evil, and begin doing that which is right and true, they are not of the world. God gives them a portion of his Spirit to encourage and enlighten. It is his prerogative to give when, to whom, how much or how little, just as his wisdom and love shall dictate. I believe there are many in the reformed churches and the Roman Catholic Church (good, honest souls) who have received a portion of God's Holy Spirit. God knows when to give and what to give; and we notice that Paul said:

And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.—1 Corinthians 12: 5, 6.

And in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 6, we have additional light thrown upon these "differences of administration" and "diversities of operation." The paragraph is very instructive.

And again, to some is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, as it will be pleasing to the same Lord, according as the Lord will, suiting his mercies according to the conditions of the children of men. And again, it is given by the Holy Ghost to some to know the diversities of operations, whether it be of God, that the manifestation of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal. [The italics are mine.]

From this paragraph we learn that there are "differences of administration," and "diversities of operation" in God's distribution of spiritual gifts to the children of men, both those within and those without the church of God; but is it not reasonable to presume that God will observe the same rule in the bestowal of any portion of his Spirit upon those within and those without the fold? We think so. If we deny that God ever gives any portion of his Spirit to those outside of his church we do so in the face of the facts that prove our denial to be false. We know that God gave the Holy Ghost to Cornelius and his household before they had been baptized into the church of God. Peter said they received the Holy Ghost. And in making his defense before the council, composed of "apostles and elders," he said in part: "And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us."—Acts 15: 8.

In making his defense before his Jewish brethren, at Jerusalem, Peter said: "Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, what was I that I could withstand God?" (See Acts 11: 17.)

These testimonies are sufficient to show that God does sometimes give the Holy Spirit to those who are outside of the church and kingdom of God. Similar cases of more or less importance may occur at any time. One safeguard is to interpret always in harmony with the facts in the case.

Second, we are told that Jesus not only said that the world could not receive the Holy Ghost which he promised to his disciples, but he also made the following statement: "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." (John 16: 7.)

In connection with this passage is another which is thought to be even more prohibitive in its character. It is found in John 7: 39: "But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

Can we afford to interpret these scriptures to mean that the Holy Ghost was not given till after the ascension of Jesus Christ into heaven? Surely not. Why interpret any passage of scripture in such a way as to place us in direct opposition to existing facts? Is it safe to do so? We hardly need to be told that many, very many, at different times and places received and enjoyed the gift of the Holy Ghost.

How, then, do you interpret these scriptures? Here is the key to the whole situation: The work of organizing and establishing the church and kingdom of God, including, of course, the great gospel system, that is, "the perfect law of liberty," which is also the law of the kingdom, and the means by which we enter into it, was being established. (See John 3: 5; Matthew 23: 13; Luke 16: 16; Acts 8: 12; Mark 1: 1-3, 8, 14, 15; Matthew 24: 14.)

The disciples received the Holy Ghost by virtue of their obedience to the gospel law, and as an "abiding Comforter." Jesus said to them: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever."

The promise and office work of the Holy Spirit is an important part of the immutable law of salvation—"the perfect law of liberty"—and the children of God receive it, also by promise. It is true that we have the following statements in John 7: 29, but if we interpret them in a strictly absolute sense, we get into difficulty, and are placed in direct conflict with some of the facts in the case. Here they are:

"For the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." That is, it was not yet given to the disciples as an important promise of the divine law, and as an abiding Comforter. The Inspired Version throws light upon this topic, produces harmony, and leaves no room for doubt. It reads as follows: "For the Holy Ghost was promised unto them who believe, after that Jesus was glorified." Not a word about the Holy Ghost being "not yet given."

Jesus said to his disciples, after his resurrection and before his ascension: "And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." That is, wait until this great promise is fulfilled. John said as already quoted, "For the Holy Ghost was promised unto them who believe, after that Jesus was glorified." In Acts 1: 4 we are informed that Jesus commanded his disciples "not to depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father." They did wait, and they received it. The next mention we have of the word promise fell from the lips of Peter in answer to the question:

Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

This evidence shows that it was the design of God from the beginning to incorporate the promise of the Holy Spirit in the gospel plan, which was to be preached always, and everywhere, among the nations of the earth.

So it may be seen easily that this promise of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, to abide, is not given to those who are outside of the church of God, or to those who have not received the gospel of their salvation. These have no claim upon God for the fulfillment of the promise, for they have not obeyed the conditions upon which the promise is based. Jesus said to those to whom the promise was made, "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever."

As a fitting close to this article, I call special attention to the fact that the church has accepted the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as proper standards of evidence. And yet we may take any one of these books and read all the texts which apply to the work of the Spirit, and we will fail to find any line of distinction drawn between any two of the phrases mentioned in this article. In other words, we will search in vain for the distinctions referred to except as they are found in the different administrations and operations of the "one Spirit."

About forty-seven years ago I was present (by accident or design) and heard the last sermon of a series of discourses held by our church's representative in the Christian church. Our elder, who was one of our missionaries, stated that he was going away, and he expressed gratitude for the liberality and marked kindness which had been extended to him.

After the dismissal the Christian elder stepped up to our minister and said in substance: "Well, elder, you are going to leave us?"

The elder replied, "Yes, I will have to leave you now."

"Well," the Christian elder replied, "I want to tell you that I have enjoyed your sermons, and if you should ever come this way again, and I should be in charge, you can have our church to preach in whenever we are not using it. I notice this leading difference between the way you present your faith and the way in which many other ministers present theirs. You first get your doctrine from the Bible, and then you bring your argument and other passages of scripture to strengthen your position. They first assume their position and then hunt around to find scripture to sustain it."

This conversation made a strong impression on my mind, for I was near enough to hear every word that passed between them. Do we really get all our positions from the three standard books of the church? If not, why? and where are we? Just as faith and belief are but one principle, with two terms to express it, even so there is but one Spirit, with a number of phrases to express it. "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been made to drink into one Spirit."—Paul. There is a wonderful but harmonious oneness in the gospel plan. One God, one Lord, one body (the church), one faith, one baptism, one Spirit, and one gospel.

Form Number 5 for the departments is an ideal toward which we should work, but we do not want to be too hasty in undertaking it. To do so before the other departments are all functioning would be merely to have a new form of Sunday school. To do so before we are ready is likely to defeat real progress. The essential principle first as well as later is the desire to work thoroughly and fully together. This is necessary for Number 2, Number 3, and Number 4, as well as Number 5. Number 5 requires a fully informed pastor as well as a competent leader for all department work.

Is It True?

By J. F. Keir

Occasionally we find a person who has been a faithful, consistent tithepayer who meets with reverses in his financial affairs and our attention is called to the promise made in the 3d chapter of Malachi, with the query, "Why is it that when I have paid my tithing and have been generous in assisting the missionaries and helping with the local branch expenses that the promise had not been verified in my case?" You may have had this question propounded to you. We might argue that tithing is but a part of the law of God and that whatever virtue attaches to its observance might be offset by our neglect in some other direction.

It will be noted that this text is not addressed to an individual but to a nation. It is not an individual rebuke, neither is the promise individual but collective. "Even from the days of your fathers ye [the people] are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them."

Jevons warns us in his book on logic, that, "We must carefully avoid any confusion between general and collective terms."

By a collective term we mean the name of a number of things when all joined together as one whole; like the members of a church, the children of a school; thus a collective term is the name of all, but not of each.

"Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."

This neglect and curse was not individual but collective. There may have been individuals who were faithful tithepayers but as a nation they were negligent and those faithful ones suffered with the unfaithful. We have a splendid example of this principle in the experience of the early Saints in Missouri.

Section 102: 2: "Behold I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals they might have been redeemed even now . . . and my people must be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things they suffer." We cannot doubt but that there were many God-fearing, law-abiding people among these early Saints, but as a whole they came under the curse and the innocent suffered with the guilty.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

As the curse was to be applied collectively, so will the promised blessing. Obedience to the law by the people as a whole will bring to the church the promised blessing.

This interpretation removes the sordid aspect of the possibility of an individual paying the tithe for the purpose of reaping the reward. "And all nations shall call you blessed." Surely none will think that any nation will single us out as individuals and call us blessed but as a nation blessed with the favor of God this commendation would come.

Again the promise of God through Malachi was not limited to material blessings for he reminded those who said, "It is vain to serve God." "And what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance [tithes and offerings] and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" That the time would come when they should clearly see the wonderful advantages that come to the obedient even though temporal reverses and sickness or loss of loved ones might come, so that at times they "walked mournfully before the Lord."

"They that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, . . . And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I come to make up my jewels; and I will spare them as a man spareth his son that serveth him. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

The promises of God are yea and amen.

This Is Promotion Time

The giving of certificates to pupils in Sunday school who pass from grade to grade is practiced more and more each year. It helps him to appreciate the Sunday school as a real school.

We handle the Gibson National Line, which is lithographed on finest art paper in ten colors, with subjects suitable for the age as indicated in the illustrations. The size is 10 by 13½ inches. Price, 60 cents a dozen; less than one dozen, 6 cents each. Order any assortment you like. If any are left over they can be used next year.

Form Five

By A. Max Carmichael

Our great need is for teachers, then a spirit of cooperation. Be slow to change forms, for forms do not spell success.

As President Floyd M. McDowell has suggested, the five forms in departmental organization have become almost as famous as Wilson's fourteen points.

We would first suggest that there is no more magic in any one of these forms than the others. Mighty fine work can be done under any one of them. In fact, the forms do not disclose the secret of good Sunday schools, good Religio, or good Women's Department work. The secret of good Sunday schools or Religio or women's classes comes in having good teachers. Good teachers can be had under any one of these five forms. We urge district and local superintendents to turn the main emphasis of their attention upon the teaching process, upon teacher training long before they turn their attention to forms of organization.

The second secret in having a good Sunday school or other departmental work comes in possessing the spirit of cooperation among the various officers and teachers. This spirit of cooperation can be had under any one of the five forms as well as any other. True, we do feel that some of these forms are better adapted to an expression of this closer spirit of cooperation than do others, and it is for this reason that we have suggested the various forms. But we urge you to consider whether you have a spirit of cooperation or not, rather than whether you have certain forms of organization or not. Be sure you possess the spirit of cooperation first under your present form of organization, then talk of advancing to another.

Advice on When to Change

We would say in general that for the greater portion of our locals and districts we would urge them to go no farther than form two or three. Work under form two or three for several years; then think about going to form four. Work under form four for several years; then talk about going to form five.

Very few locals have any need of form five. Even these should work under form four for several years before going to form five.

In general we should want the following conditions prevailing before we should want any local to go under form five: There should be a well-organized Sunday school. There should be a well-organized Religio class hour either on Sunday night or some week night. This Religio class hour should have been running for several years with success and with every assurance that it will continue to run with success. Further, the locals should have classes under the Department of Women running week days. Further, there should be a well-organized Oriole, Temple Builder, and Boy Scout group running regularly and for such a length of time as to be an assurance that they will continue to run successfully. After such a local has run successfully with all of these activities under form four for quite a length of time, we believe that they can begin to think of approaching form five.

Form Five Is but a Theory and Ideal

Form five has proven a success nowhere; it is but a theoretical idea up to date. It necessitates a closer spirit of cooperation as a prerequisite to its adoption than we have seen exhibited anywhere up to date. Further, it anticipates the use of educational methods in the teaching of religion that have not been adequately put into operation anywhere, though the Religio has done a great deal of pioneer work in preparing the people for the use of this educational method.

We should like to repeat and emphasize that our success in locals is not bound up in forms of organization. You are not necessarily making any progress when you advance from one form to another. That is why we have urged district superintendents to be cautious in giving their consent. The feeling seems to be far too prevalent, that if our local organization can only change its form of organization it will have made a great step in advancement.

Some have suggested that Sunday school superintendents are at sea; anchor yourself; turn your attention to teacher training. Get better teachers, that's the main job of a local superintendent. As you progress in the quality of your teaching process the significance of form organization will drop immeasurably.

We are sometimes inclined to feel that many districts have already gone too far in permitting district presidents to nominate district departmental heads. Too many district presidents, we feel, who have this power given them are too much inclined to nominate men of the priesthood only, and have passed by women who are now competent. They have the feeling that only men and men of the priesthood can run a Sunday school. Neither the Sunday school nor the Religio can afford to go back entirely into the hands of the church, if that means losing the use of competent women as leaders and superintendents. We would much prefer having trained women superintendents than untrained men superintendents.

We would urge district Sunday school conventions to give their district presidents the right to nominate a district superintendent only after they feel assured that the district president is in hearty accord with the idea that women are just as good workers in the Sunday school as men, and that the departments are entitled to a much larger proportion of the total budget than is generally accorded them. More than all, we are asking district conventions not to pass to this form until the spirit of cooperation is evidenced already among the departments.

Have We a Message? What Is It? How Shall We Declare It?

By Ralph W. Farrell

Trumpeters, sound for the splendor of God!
Sound for the heights that our fathers have trod
When truth was truth, and love was love,
With a hell beneath but a heaven above
Trumpeters, rally us, rally us, rally us,
On to the City of God.

At times we wonder, when asking the question, Have we a message? We wonder because, though the answer is always, "Yes," the understanding of what that message is, is varied and often vague.

Europe is dying. Asia is in turmoil. America—alas, how is it with America? The divorce courts show an enormous increase in immorality; physicians' records show an alarming increase in venereal diseases; standards of modesty have been lowered, and crimes of violence are witnessed everywhere; dishonesty shouts from the mouth of the profiteer; individual unrest smolders in nearly every human heart; sectarian pulpits surrender to substitutes for the gospel. In the midst of this chaos, can we say that the Church of Jesus Christ has no message?

And this condition does not exist from lack of Bibles. In the past one hundred and two years the American Bible Society alone has issued 90,000,000 volumes in America. And it seems that with each Bible has come a new interpretation of that Bible, until to-day the mind of man is racked with doubt, division, and infidelity.

Indeed, we have a message, and it is a message from God, witnessed to the honest in heart by the Spirit of God.

"What Shall I Preach About?"

Every minister in the church has asked himself repeatedly, "What shall I preach about?" And most of us have attempted to introduce many and varied subjects, only to find the experiment unsatisfactory to us and unedifying to our audiences. And what has been the feeling of conscience after the night's sermon has passed into the silence of the hereafter?

As for my soul, it has been empty, as if I had trifled with God's time; for what time can more properly be called his time than the preaching hour?

The message, then, that we must declare to the world and to the church, is God's message—is the thing which he would teach were he here; for we are his messengers, sent to tell the truth and nothing but the truth. It is a serious matter to teach the doctrines and commandments of men; such taught the Pharisees, and for so doing were condemned.

Repentance the Keynote

The chief need of the world to-day is to turn from its idols and worship the true and living God. Such thing was emphasized by the angel who came with the gospel. "Fear God," said he, with a loud voice, "and give glory to him." Fear God. Give glory to him. These phrases give us the keynote to our message. That keynote is repentance. "Cry nothing but repentance to this generation." And the more this instruction is examined the more it burns in the heart.

Repentance means getting acquainted with God. Involved, however, in the process of getting acquainted with God, are several principles; namely, the knowledge of good and evil, conviction of sin, desire to do right, knowledge of right, obedience to right. As long as a prodigal son remains away from the Father's house, so long will there be need of telling him about that Father waiting on the brow of the hill, looking with dry eyes of compassion and love towards that distant land where the son is feeding on the apples of Sodom. As long as one Mary Magdalene remains, so long will it be necessary to tell of that garment whose hem will give "virtue." And after all has been said, all else pales into dimness when compared to the spirit of the message by which souls are to be brought into touch with God.

To be sure, there must be system to our effort—we must present a logical appeal, a practical theology. Jesus and his former-day disciples were plain teachers, and with words of simple beauty made glorious the lesson of the cross. True, I use here poetry, but may it not confuse us. Long before Jesus died his messengers were sent forth to proclaim "the gospel of the kingdom of God." They were to say, with the voice of authority, "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." In this story, which the disciples told, listening souls learned of the Lamb of God who came to take away the sins of the world. Can we tell this gospel of Christ effectively without emphasizing the gift of God's Son to the world? I think not. "Go so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." I believe that our message should be blazoned with the great truth found in Paul's words, "This is a saying worthy of all expectation, that Christ Jesus came to save sinners." No other message can ever be successfully substituted.

It should be freely admitted that we are preaching Christ when we preach of the baptism that admits us into the church, which is his body; that we are holding him up when we teach of the laying on of hands by which is conferred the Holy Spirit that testifies of him. In like manner do we preach the gospel when we expound the Scriptures which refer to faith, repentance, judgment; but it seems to me that Christ must be the background and the foreground of it all, lest our message be one of letter only, which letter killeth.

"What Must I Do to Be Saved?"

Added to Revelation 14: 6, 7, should be Luke 2: 14.

Man asks to-day as he asked anciently, "What must I do to be saved?" And the answer must be the same as was the answer twenty hundred years ago, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." "Repent and be baptized." Our message must be the word of truth. It will then be doctrinal because it teaches the doctrine of Christ; Christian, because Christ is its author. But let us bear this fact in mind—a congregation will grow little if it hears nothing but sermons on baptism or any one principle of truth. Our creed is "All truth." (See Hebrews 5: 12-14; 6: 1-3.)

And how shall we declare it? It is easy to say, Declare it simply, plainly, boldly, but what do these terms mean when placed to the test? The weak man thinks he is using gentleness when he is only timid; the arrogant speaker thinks he is using boldness. All in all, it is a question of spiritual preparation rather than of "style." (And who of us does not hate that word style?) Let a man be filled with love and he need not worry about the how of his declaration. There are, however, fundamentals, and the following, briefly mentioned, may help us.

Something of Methods

Do not speak fast. Appeal to sentiment as well as to reason, for man is an emotional as well as a rational being, both gifts being of God. One half of the average audience listen with their heart; we should not neglect these persons; they have a soul to save. Use the story. That man who argues against the use of illustrations, stories, is surely far afield from fact. Jesus is our perfect example of a teacher who made use of the story. Illustrations to the point are vitally necessary to make plain and hold attention.

The function of the introduction is threefold: to establish friendliness, create proper relation between speaker and audience, to state subject of speaker.

Audiences are friendly, indifferent, hostile. Indifference in an audience usually grows out of a distaste for being bored. This state exists when the subject touches neither their experience nor their interest. As a rule there are not many persons in an audience that are hostile. Boldness, sincerity, and geniality go a long way towards securing the attention of indifferent audiences.

Impress the importance of your subject. Use striking phrases. Use proper concession if necessary. State your purpose. Overflowing goodness is winning in the extreme. (It is the secret of John Cornish's influence.) Like your audience, for like begets like. Use charity as a garb. Be dignified, earnest, original. Do not "saw" the air too much, but I pray thee, move about once in a while, lest the audience think you dead. Stand up. Keep hands and arms off the pulpit. Look calmly and kindly into the eyes of your hearers.

Introduction.—Is it needed to win the good will of the audience? Does it set forth the speaker's theme clearly? Will it arouse interest in what is to follow?

Discussion.—Does it have unity? logical order? clearness? force? elegance? appeal? Is it free from things that hurt? Does it unnecessarily antagonize? Is it convincing?

Conclusion.—Is it the natural climax of the speech? or is its purpose merely that of leave-taking? Is it brief? Is it strong? Is it appropriate? —High Priests' Annual, 1921.

At the recent election Florence E. Allen, of Cleveland, Ohio, was elected a member of the supreme court of that state. She acted as judge in the Ohio county courts, was admitted to the bar some years ago, but is the first woman to be elected to the supreme court bench. The Columbus Dispatch approved her election on the ground of her legal learning, her judicial temperament so that the court will gain because of her possession of just those qualities which make a good judge regardless of sex.

"The greatest money-making machinery in the world is not to be found in Henry Ford's mammoth plants in Detroit, in Rockefeller's oil refineries, in the Steel Corporation's throbbing city of Gary, or in any or all of the colossal General Motors factories.

"The greatest money-making machinery in the world weighs only a few ounces. And, thank the Lord, it has been given to all of us.

"It is the human brain."—B. C. Forbes, in Current Opinion.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Bible

What some famous Americans say of the Book of books.

The following extracts are taken from the Herald of Holiness for November 22, the statement of various Americans on the Bible as the Book of books.

Andrew Jackson said, "That Book, sir, is the rock upon which our Republic rests."

Ulysses Grant said, "Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet armor to your liberties. Write its precepts in your hearts and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this Book we are indebted for all the progress made in true civilization; and to this we must look as our guide in the future."

Webster said, "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instruction and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity. The Bible is a book of faith, a book of doctrine, a book of morals, and a book of religion, of special revelation from God."

Roosevelt said, "Every thinking man, when he thinks, realizes what a very large number of people tend to forget that the teachings of the Bible are so interwoven and entwined with our whole civic and social life that it would be literally impossible for us to figure to ourselves what that life would be if these teachings were removed."

Woodrow Wilson said, "The Bible is the word of life. I beg that you will read it and find this out for yourselves, read, not little snatches here and there, but long passages that will really be the road to the heart of it. When you have read the Bible you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness, and your own duty."

Roosevelt said of Lincoln: "Sad, patient, kindly Lincoln, who, after bearing upon his weary shoulders for four years a greater burden than that borne by any other man of the nineteenth century, laid down his life for the people whom loving he had served so well, built up his entire reading upon his real study of the Bible. He mastered it absolutely; mastered it as later he mastered only one or two other books, mastered it so that he became almost 'a man of one book,' who knew that book and who instinctively put into practice what he had been taught therein."

Talmage said, "Walk up and down this Bible domain; try every path; plunge in at the Prophecies and come out at the Epistles; go with the Patriarchs until you meet the Evangelists; rummage and ransack; open every jewel casket; examine the skylights. . . . Yea, calculate on a lifetime voyage. Sail away, O ye mariners, for eternity."

The Social Creed of the Churches

The churches of America have spoken against class struggle, for cooperation, collective bargaining, living wage, and a share in shop control.

The following statement was adopted by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America in 1908, and has since been adopted by the leading Protestant denominations, the Y. M. C. A., and the Y. W. C. A.

This creed is as follows:

- (1) Equal rights and justice for all men and in all stations of life.

- (2) Protection of the family by the single standard of purity, uniform divorce laws, proper regulation of marriage, proper housing.
- (3) The fullest possible development of every child, especially by the provision of education and recreation.
- (4) Abolition of child labor.
- (5) Such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.
- (6) Abatement and prevention of poverty.
- (7) Protection of the individual and society from the social, economic, and moral waste of the liquor traffic.
- (8) Conservation of health.
- (9) Protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational diseases and morality.
- (10) The right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, for safeguarding this right against encroachments of every kind, for the protection of workers from the hardships of enforced unemployment.
- (11) The right of employees and employers alike to organize, and for adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.
- (12) Suitable provision for the old age of the workers, and for those incapacitated by injury.
- (13) Release from employment one day in seven.
- (14) Gradual and reasonable reduction of hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.
- (15) A living wage as the minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.
- (16) A new emphasis upon the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property, and for the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised.

At the meeting of the Federal Council in 1919 the following four amendments were added to the above "creed."

Facing the social issues involved in reconstruction:

RESOLVED: That we affirm as Christian Churches,

- (1) That the teachings of Jesus are those of essential democracy and express themselves through brotherhood and the cooperation of all groups. We deplore class struggle, and declare against all class dominion, whether of capital or labor. Sympathizing with labor's desire for a better day and an equitable share in the profits and management of industry, we stand for orderly and progressive social reconstruction instead of revolution by violence.
- (2) That an ordered and constructive democracy in industry is as necessary as political democracy, and that collective bargaining and the sharing of shop control and management are inevitable steps in its attainment.
- (3) That the first charge upon industry should be that of a wage sufficient to support an American standard of living. To that end we advocate the guarantee of a minimum wage, the control of unemployment through government labor exchanges, and experimentation in profit sharing and cooperative ownership.
- (4) We recognize that women played no small part in the winning of the war. We believe that they should have full political and economic equality with equal pay for equal work, and a maximum eight-hour day. We declare for the abolition of night work by women, and the abolition of child labor; and for the provision of adequate safeguards to insure the moral as well as the physical health of the mothers and children of the race.

International Ideals

At the meeting of the Federal Council in Chicago, December 16, 1921, the following declaration of International Ideals was adopted:

- (1) We believe that nations no less than individuals are subject to God's immutable moral laws.
- (2) We believe that nations achieve true welfare, greatness, and honor only through just dealing and unselfish service.
- (3) We believe that nations that regard themselves as Christian have special international obligations.
- (4) We believe that the spirit of Christian brotherliness can remove every unjust barrier of trade, color, creed, and race.
- (5) We believe that Christian patriotism demands the practice of good will between nations.
- (6) We believe that international policies should secure equal justice for all races.
- (7) We believe that all nations should associate themselves permanently for world peace and good will.
- (8) We believe in international law, and in the universal use of international courts of justice and boards of arbitration.
- (9) We believe in a sweeping reduction of armaments by all nations.
- (10) We believe in a warless world, and dedicate ourselves to its achievement.

Essentially similar statements have been promulgated by the Administrative Committee of the National Catholic War Council in America and by the Central Conference of American Rabbis. A critical summary of the various social programs of different religious bodies will be found in Ward, The New Social Order, Chapter XI.—From the Reconstruction of Religion, by Ellwood, Appendix.

Practice Makes Perfect--When?

From a speech by Walter S. Athearn, prominent as an advocate of religious education.

We were once told that all progress came into the race by means of rehearsals. The schoolmaster's motto in that day was, "Practice makes perfect." In harmony with this theory, penmanship was taught by the rehearsal method. The old-fashioned copy books had a steel engraved copy of the perfect model at the top of the page. Into the pupil's second line went the imperfections in his own first line. Into his third line went the imperfections in his own first and second lines, and, as the pupil wrote down the page, his writing grew poorer and poorer. If you will examine one of these old-time copy books, you will find that the poorest writing is at the bottom of the page.

The public-school teachers finally discovered that much writing does not make a good writer; much reading does not make a good reader. When they made this discovery the method of teaching penmanship was changed. Those schools still using copy books have the copy printed on a narrow slip of paper, which is fastened to a string running down the page in such a manner that it can be moved down the page as the pupil writes. The pupil writes his first line, following the perfect copy. Then the copy is moved down to cover his own imperfect copy, and again he copies the perfect copy. And so he writes down the page. If you will examine a copy book written after this manner, you will find that the poorest writing is at the top of the page. It is not practice which "makes perfect," but practice under criticism, practice under direction, practice under the stimulation and pull of a great ideal.

I think this is why we are exhorted not to neglect the assembling of ourselves together on the Lord's day, not to absent ourselves from the midweek prayer service, or to forsake our daily devotions and other "means of grace." We are, by this means, to pull down our copy each day and live each day in the presence of our perfect copy.

Washington's Advice

Washington's farewell address is the classic for those who declare that the United States ought not to be entangled in European politics. As it is more often referred to generally than quoted, it may be interesting to recall some of its sayings. Washington advised his countrymen "to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence." For that purpose they should avoid "permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others." Considering the time in which this was said, it may be regarded as a warning against antipathy against Great Britain and passionate attachment for France. In place of these sentiments, he said, there should be amicable feelings towards all. Political connections with European nations should be avoided as far as possible. He went on to say:

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities."

Commonly it is said in reply to those who appeal to the authority of Washington that his counsel no longer applies because conditions have changed. The change is beyond question. Steamships and telegraphs have brought western Europe nearer to the United States than some points in the United States were to others in Washington's day. But there is a sense in which Washington's advice still holds good. One would not expect the United States to be continually taking sides in European quarrels over boundaries and other local questions. But to-day the proposal is that the United States shall be guided, in Washington's own words, by "an exalted justice and benevolence," not towards one nation, but towards Europe and the whole world. Have we any warrant for believing that Washington would have opposed membership in the League of Nations, which is formed, not to help one nation and hurt another, but to advance the common interests of all? Have we any warrant for believing that he would have objected to the United States, "guided by an exalted justice and benevolence," giving financial aid to an impoverished Europe? He might have regarded such an undertaking as too great for the little nation that he ruled, but hardly for the vast, rich, and strong United States of our day.

Americans have to consider to-day, not "the ordinary vicissitudes of European politics or the ordinary combinations of her friendships and enmities," but the extraordinary condition of a continent threatened with ruin, in far worse plight than the Europe that had been ravaged by the Napoleonic wars. One can hardly believe that the statesmanlike vision of Washington would have failed to recognize the change.—Toronto Globe, October 18, 1922.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Three Measures of Meal

A letter to Elder Holmes J. Davison, printed by request.

I was glad to see your name in the HERALD again. Hope it is but the forerunner of many returns. But, brother mine, I was surprised at your rendering of the "leaven in the three measures of meal." Surprised because I did not know that anyone of this church of Jesus Christ saw that parable in any but the one way.

Jesus, we learn, was not given to saying unnecessary words, and when he said, "three measures of meal," he meant three measures, as well as that much meal. But as you say, the "leaven" is the main part of the parable in Matthew 13: 33. This leaven as we understand it is the gospel of Jesus Christ, or that that brings the kingdom of heaven, on earth, and prepares one for it in the hereafter.

Jesus Christ preached and established his church and taught the people of Jerusalem and the surrounding country, taught them his doctrine, the true leaven. And while with them he said, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold. Them also I must bring and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

In the Book of Mormon, 3 Nephi 7, we read that he came to this continent and taught the people the same gospel and doctrine that he did those in the eastern country and established his church in the same order, with the same gifts and blessings and told them what he had said to the people at Jerusalem concerning "other sheep that were not of that fold" and that because of their iniquity they understood not that he had reference to the people of this continent but thought he meant the Gentiles, forgetting that the Gentiles had never at any time heard his voice.

In verse 19 he told the people here on this continent that they were those whom he meant when he said to those at Jerusalem that "Other sheep I have who are not of this fold. And they also shall hear my voice." And while talking to them he said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you that I have other sheep which are not of this land, neither of the land of Jerusalem. . . . for they of whom I speak are they who have not yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself unto them." But the Father had given the commandment that he should go unto them that they should hear his voice, and should be numbered among his sheep that there should be one fold and one shepherd.

In verse 3, chapter 8, he says, "But now I go unto the Father, and also to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel." We do not have the record of his visit to that people, the lost tribes, but enough to understand that he taught them the same as to those of the Eastern Continent and on this the Western Continent since they were to be his sheep and of the one fold.

This fulfills the parable. The gospel of Christ, the true leaven, the people, the meal, the places in which they were the measures, Christ the one person who hid the leaven in the three measures of meal and at about the same time, for the purpose that all might be his people. E. B. B.

Elder Alvin Knisley reached Independence the 4th from his mission field where he has been engaged in preaching, using his steamer car for transportation and living quarters. He returned as they were so nearly snowed in at Pueblo, Colorado, and had to force their way through the snow to come east.

Care Needed for Scattered Members

A letter from one who is sacrificing for Graceland.

I have been wanting to express myself for weeks. I have been a member of this church for nearly twenty-four years and I have experienced the usual ups and downs of life. At times it has seemed I had more than my share of trials but one thought has ever been with me at those times and I have said, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." "My times are in His hands, and to quit would be like jumping from the frying pan into the fire."

There is the matter of the conference voting to use the money first for the Seventy and Twelve or for missionary work. I feel it is a sin for stock men to raise more stock than they can properly care for, or the housewife more chickens than she can feed in the fall and winter. They may live through the winter but they are poor and stunted. It seems to me that is what the church is doing. They baptize the convert and then he is left to shift for himself. It seems to me if we could just make good live Saints out of the membership we have and put in practice the "no poor among you" teaching, the eyes of all the world would be on us and they would be sending representatives to us to learn how it was done. Then our missionary work would prosper.

It makes my heart ache to see the scattered Saints starving, and some in the small branches not much better. It seems to me that the crying need of the church to-day is a trained, educated, and spiritual local force, and my hope is that those released from the Quorum of Twelve will be able to turn their attention to the membership. I believe it would be money well spent if the Bishop would send the HERALD to every family of Saints not on the subscription list. If it hadn't been for the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and the quarterlies I don't know what would have become of me and mine.

I would be glad to see the church establish a circulating library. Who! oh who! is going to feed these sheep? It seems to me the district president should be supplied with means to look after them. If it doesn't come from the district membership then from the Bishop.

We have read a lot of late about salesmanship. Business firms do a lot of advertising. We get that in the church papers. But where are the follow-up letters? It seems to me the members of the priesthood who cannot be instructed personally could be given a correspondence course. I don't believe there are any of them but would take time to read an encouraging letter. And why couldn't the isolated Saints receive a letter once in a while from some one interested in their spiritual development. If they don't answer, it isn't because they haven't read them. Do advertisers expect an answer to all their letters? Yet if they are answered, so much gained.

[The Presidency, Presiding Patriarch, etc., write to these scattered members who are not in a district. Those in a district are under the care of the district officers.—EDITORS.]

I have been one of the isolated ones about nineteen years of my church life, and many, many are the times I would have welcomed a letter of encouragement from some official. The only one that ever wrote us anything like a pastoral letter was Brother S. D. Condit when he was missionary in this field. I feel grateful to him for those letters.

I have read Sister Alice Kippe's letter in the HERALD of November 29 and am touched thereby. But it seems to me that if we could bring up the spirituality of the Saints, the Lord would bless them so they would have some thing to pay. I doubt very much whether at present the Saints "have the straw to furnish for the making of the brick." It seems to me that Pharaoh (financial depression) has withheld the straw from them, yet the Bishopric expects them to deliver as many bricks as ever. However, I'm willing to give all I can.

Brother Keir speaks of $15 and $10 hats. Maybe some of the Saints are wearing them, but 75 cents is the price of mine. Surely that is permissible, to go with a coat dyed and turned wrong side out. But I'm not complaining. I'm proud of that coat and only wish thereby I had saved a five to give to the church. But I didn't have the five to save.

In my opinion it is time we were learning to pray over our flocks and herds and in the fields morning, noon, and night, as the Book of Mormon teaches us.

While I haven't the money to give the church I would like to have I have tried and am trying hard to raise my seven children for the church. Our two oldest have gone from us and are now at Graceland. Graceland, how I love her! How glad I am to have my boys in her care and how I hope to be able to send the other five to her. I have always been her friend.

Your sister, MRS. A. W. PROBST.

Grand Cayman Islands

Seventeen baptized recently, thirty-four within the year, with others nearly ready.

Elders Tordoff and May gave me the duty of reporting to the HERALD the final news and outcome of the series of meetings we held recently in Georgetown. After reading the extracts from their letters in the November 8 issue of the church paper I realize that the result is all that is untold.

It was with gladness that we welcomed the brethren to this island the 7th of October. I had been promising the Saints and friends a few weeks of very interesting meetings and their expectations were realized when the brethren arrived. We began our meetings the 8th and had five weeks of meetings, with the exception of Saturday nights, and two or three other nights when the stormy weather kept the congregation in their homes.

Our church is small, seating about one hundred and fifty, but that did not hinder the crowd from attending. The church was filled each night while others were crowded at the windows, at the doors, some in trees; others brought their own benches and sat outside. All could hear perfectly as sound carries a great distance here. I have estimated our largest audience at about three hundred. Everyone interested and sorry to see the brothers leave when the time of parting came.

The results of the five weeks are seventeen new members, with many others very near the kingdom. Some of these are waiting for the return of their husbands to ascertain their position in regard to the church. We now have thirty-four of us on this island. One who was baptized here is on the Isle of Pines, and another in Texas. In other words, thirty-four have been baptized on this island since Brother Tordoff came here a year ago. Sister Carr and I will make the number thirty-six.

Our meetings stirred up some of the opposition anew. With that to help us along we should be able to grow together rather than apart. We have a very nice band of Saints and are hoping for a greater ingathering later. This is a very fruitful field of labor. When I first came here my work was more pastoral than missionary, as I had to build up the Saints who had long been without a leader. Now that the brothers have left me with so many more to instruct in their duties I have the pastoral spirit with me once more. Have organized a Bible class, and instead of the fifteen that I expected I found about thirty present the first night. The second night over fifty were present, some of them nonmembers who are very attentive. In this way we are really preaching missionary sermons to them in class form. We are going to begin a teacher training class next week to prepare teachers for our little Sunday school. In this way we will be able to reach those who were drawn by the sermons and music of the special meetings.

We did not have the opportunity to visit the other districts of the island while the brothers were here. Two small towns are very anxious to have us come. Lack of means and traveling conveyances hindered us then. The next time we will have better arrangements made. Now that Elder May is supervisor of this mission as well as the Southeastern States Mission we will probably see him again.

A boat is leaving for America to-day, which does not happen very often in this part of the world. We are glad to see them go, because they return with mail.

Your brother in the gospel,

THOMAS M. CARR.

Support the Conference

Gomer T. Griffiths urges that we hold fast to the church of Christ. Pay your tithing.

The late General Conference is now a matter of history, and those who were in attendance have had ample time to consider carefully the actions of the General Conference, and to get back to normal again.

It is to be hoped that those whose feelings were stirred up to a high pitch of uncertainty as the result of the strenuous days of the conference, have been able through sober reflection to arrive at a definite and satisfactory conclusion regarding the work of the conference, and have composed their minds by this time.

There was one thing that we did discover to our sorrow, that the Lord's people have not attained to perfection, or in other words we have not reached the point where we can see eye to eye in all things pertaining to the government and welfare of the church; however, it should be remembered that all of us are human, and in our opinions we are prone to differ as the result of our individual peculiarities and experiences.

It is not to be wondered at that men should disagree even at a General Conference when the divine record informs us that the angels in heaven could not agree, hence, I do not look for perfection among the brothers this side of the great millennium.

To the mind of the writer the idea is preposterous that individuals who claim to have received a knowledge, through the Spirit of God, that the church with which they are identified is the Church of the First Born, and that the gospel that they have espoused is true, should suffer themselves to stagger and stumble in their warfare, and allow their faith to be shaken to the extent that they threaten to leave the church and withhold their spiritual and financial support, because some things transpire in the church which do not conform to their personal opinions. It is quite apparent that such individuals who would cast aside the pearl of great price so easily do not appreciate the great sacrifice of our Savior in that he suffered the pangs and agony of death, and was willing to shed his precious blood, and thereby purchased the church of God, and they overlook the fact that only those who remain faithful and continue in said church will inherit celestial glory. Peter and the rest of the apostles in his day realized that only those who were loyal to Christ and remained in his church would be saved in his everlasting kingdom.

The church has always stood upon the principle of common consent and majority rule, and as minister of the church I have upheld this principle for over forty-six years, and it is to be regretted that any in the church, especially the ministry, should refuse to abide by a principle that has been ordained of God, and which is everlasting in its character; and it is exceedingly sad that some of the ministry use their time and influence in their travels among the Saints to destroy the faith and confidence of the Saints in that which has been adopted by the majority at General Conference.

It should be remembered that the Lord has spoken regarding this matter, and counseled the ministry against such unwise procedure, as the following from Doctrine and Covenants 125:16 will show.

Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly. They are sent out as ministers to preach the gospel, and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference should be heard in the conferences, and not in the mission fields, to prevent the accomplishment of the object with which the officers of the church have been intrusted.

I wish it to be understood that I am heartily supporting the change which has been effected in the personnel of the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve, and I do not believe that I or any other man who has been an apostle can act with the Twelve in quorum capacity unless he is reappointed by the Lord or the church, but I do believe that I am still an apostle and will have to answer to God for my apostleship. It is my duty to support the new apostles that have been installed in the Quorum of Twelve, and by the grace of God I shall uphold them in my prayers and by my faith and confidence, and every other member of the church should do so. I am personally acquainted with all the brethren who have been so honored, and they are men of integrity and ability. Some criticism has been made regarding the youthfulness of some of them, but such objections are groundless and have been made time and again in the past with reference to other men. I remember that some of the brethren objected to my going into the Quorum of Twelve because of my youth and inexperience. The age of an individual is not a matter of much concern with the Lord, if his qualifications are such as will fit him for the office. He may not be fully qualified at the time that he is called, but the Lord recognizes his latent abilities and what he can attain to, if he applies himself and seeks to magnify his holy calling.

It is the duty of every member of the church to honor God's law which requires him to pay his tithing, freewill offering, oblations, and consecrations into the hands of the men whom the Lord has commissioned to handle his moneys, and in case these men should use unwisely the funds thus placed in their keeping they will be held responsible by the Lord in the day of reckoning, and not the people who have paid in their money, and who have honored the law by being obedient to the commandments of God.

Therefore, dear Saints, if we wish to see Zion redeemed, and our blessed Lord come to earth to dwell with his people, it is necessary that we put on the whole armor, and strive to perform with all diligence the work that our heavenly Father has assigned us, his sons and daughters. There is no time to spend in pouting, complaining, and faultfinding: The demands that are made on the church are manifold, and you know wickedness is increasing and the whole world ripening in iniquity, and if there ever was a time in the history of the world when the people of God should awake and attend to their heavenly Father's business, surely now is the time.

I have been deeply pained when told by some of the Saints that they did not intend in the future to pay tithing and freewill offerings into the church, because things were not conducted as they thought they should be. They seem to think that they could manage the affairs of the church to a better advantage than those whom the Lord has ordained for this work, losing sight of the fact that by withholding their financial support they are hindering the progress of the church, and preventing the gospel from going to the nations of the earth, and working a hardship on the poor and the families of the ministry, and thus placing themselves in the same position as those whom the Lord through the Prophet Malachi charged with robbing God. No individual has the right to appoint himself custodian of that which belongs to the Lord.

Patience, love, and long-suffering are the precious jewels that we should ever keep in our possession if we are to have part and lot in Christ's glorious kingdom when he shall reign as King of kings and Lord of lords.

It is indeed good to be a Saint, as we often sing in our social services. Why then should we allow the Devil or the weaknesses of men to rob us of the peace which comes to us through the Holy Spirit? In conclusion I desire to admonish my many friends to cling to the rod of iron, and faithfully discharge their duties, both spiritually, and financially in the Lord's work.

I feel very grateful for the many letters that I have received lately from all over the world where our people are to be found, and deeply appreciate the kind expressions of confidence and brotherly love, and good wishes contained therein.

My wife is some better in health, although confined to her bed, but still trusting to our heavenly Father for his protection and loving care.

Have visited quite a number of the branches within the last month, endeavoring to cheer and stimulate the Saints to greater activity in the service of the Master.

Wishing all a Merry Christmas and prosperous new year,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

LOCK FOUR, PENNSYLVANIA.

"GOD'S LAW AND PROMISE"

Proverbs 3:1, 2: "My son forget not my law; but let thy heart keep my commandments; for length of days, and long life and peace shall they add to thee."

Doctrine and Covenants 85:8: "That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same."

Giving is a part of God's law, and its observance assists in the development of a perfect life. To neglect it retards our progress.

If you wish to compute your tithing, ask your branch solicitor for a blank. January will be inventory month.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

O. J. Hawn writes from Bradley, Ohio, that he baptized four noble people the first of December. God is blessing his effort and he is feeling splendid since conference.

Some Good Work in Connecticut

Thirty-one years ago this month I first heard the angel message, and while at first I opposed the elders, I saw that they had the Bible on their side. Being desirous of all that God had for me I went forward in obedience to the restored gospel and can truly testify that I know for myself that we have the light and the whole world is in darkness or semi-darkness.

Many times I have seen churches that refused God's servants the use of their buildings later break up. One nice church building that was closed against Brother A. B. Phillips in New London has been converted into an ice cream factory. They had promised Brother Phillips the use of the building. Another has been turned into a restaurant where Brother Phillips preached three times and then was stopped. One at Norwich, Connecticut, a beautiful Union chapel with a large congregation in a thickly settled district refused Brother Robley the use of it and it stands idle and has for many years. Two others near here are practically closed.

A number of fine men and women have united with the church here and at Westerly and we are rejoicing to see that the honest seekers are finding the fold of Christ. Brother Herbert Johnson has been and is doing a good work among us. He puts forth great efforts to bring to pass righteousness and works all the week in a foundry at Providence, Rhode Island. He goes home Saturday at noon and gets ready and goes fifty miles to Westerly where he visits among the Saints and outsiders and Sunday morning comes twenty miles on street cars to New London and gives us a rousing sermon. Then he goes back to Westerly and holds Sunday school at 6 p. m. and preaches at 7.15. He then takes the train for Providence at 8.45 and is up at 5 a. m. Monday morning to get ready to go eight miles to work. And Herbert pays tithing and teaches his converts to pay tithing. I saw a lady hand him her first tithing Sunday night.

I have noticed a number of articles in which it is proposed to go without one meal each week and give twenty cents to the church. I hope none of our members are so poor that it is necessary for them to go without proper food in order to pay into the church. We have plenty of members that have a surplus that should be in the Bishop's hands. God requires all our surplus property as a beginning of tithing (to make us equal in temporal things) and then a tenth of our increase. All that I possess I recognize as belonging to God and is at the Bishop's feet.

My prayer is that our leaders may be inspired and directed in their efforts to establish Zion. But in order for Zion to be established the Saints one and all must be willing to lay our all at the Bishop's feet and receive back just enough to make us equal with the poorest of God's Saints, for God says in Doctrine and Covenants that none are exempt from that law and that all have an equal right to draw on God's storehouse to help them in their stewardships that they may gain other talents all to be put back into God's storehouse for the common good of the whole church. In no other way can Zion be established but by this law of the celestial kingdom.

With love to all the household of faith I remain your brother in the only true faith,
THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

Mission Building Near Jerusalem About Completed

Elder Harry Passman wrote from Jerusalem under date of November 18 that the mission building was about finished and this will give him opportunity to turn his attention to other things. He includes an article concerning the construction of this building with description and snapshots to show its character and surroundings, which will be published in an early issue.

He again emphasizes the necessity of economic support for the work to be really carried on in that land. He has a prospective convert, a man who is engaged in one of the other missions, but he realizes that if this man is converted he will lose his employment and so will have to be provided with new employment as a means of support. The work in Jerusalem makes prominent the necessity for a consideration of the economic aspects of our work.

He has recently made a trip to the north and visited Hebron, where he regretfully found some of our church people near starvation, so he at once made provision for them.

"Ensign Better than Ever"

"I am renewing my subscription to Zion's Ensign. I think it better than ever and growing better all the time," writes Brother B. A. Wing, of Zion City, Illinois.

"I could not get along without it, nor any other of the publications of the Saints. I have always been interested in the missionary work and hope to see the time when our missionaries will be sent into the mighty nations of China and Japan and India and Russia. I wish our missionaries were in Russia now while the great religious awakening is on, while the field is fresh, and before the denominations with their traditions get such a hold on the people. I love this latter day gospel more and more every day. I love to read the experiences and testimonies of the brothers. It does me good. I am glad I have been dug out of the denominational pit."

An Appreciated Oratorio in Independence

The Independence Oratorio Society gave their first concert of the season on December 12 in the Independence Junior High School auditorium, before a highly appreciative audience. This is the second season of the society, and under the able and careful conductorship of Mr. John R. Jones we had a very real vision of what the near future holds for the town folk of Independence, Missouri. They had a right and can justly be proud of such an oratorio society. It was also a great pleasure to see such a good proportion of our church members who are members of this society.

The program of the concert was a popular one, and the selections from the operas "Carmen," "Faust," and "Aida" were warmly received. Miss Mary Joan Parks sang the solo in the Faust selections, a young singer from Mount Washington. She has a pleasing voice of much power.

The "Deep river," "Negro spiritual," "The rosary," "My Johnny was a shoemaker," and "Mammy's lullaby," sung to the tune of Humoresque by Dvorak, brought out the good work and careful training of the conductor. Mr. Jones is known in England and other countries in Europe as well as in America as one of the foremost choral conductors of recent years.

In the "Blue Danube Waltzes" the choir gave a versatile rendering of the famous Straus waltzes. The singing of the choir was exceptionally fine; good attack, backed up by proper enunciation, wonderful light and shade and strong sense of rhythm, impressed one again and again with the cooperation of the choir, conductor, and accompanist.

Much credit is due to Miss Cammie Johnston who so ably accompanied the choir numbers as well as some of the soloists. The violin solo by Miss Rosanne Clinton was much appreciated. The group of songs sung by Mrs. Ona Goodrich showed the beauty of the singer's voice and gave fine opportunity for expression. The group of songs by Mrs. Corrine Haines French added another triumph to her popularity as a vocalist. Mrs. Jennie Schultz, well known to music devotees here and in Kansas City, played the piano accompaniment for Mrs. French.

Before the choir sang their last number, Mr. Llewellyn Jones, president of the Oratorical Society, spoke encouragingly of the progress made by the society. Doctor J. E. Wolfe, president of the Chamber of Commerce, spoke of the good the society was doing, and how glad they were to have such a conductor as Mr. John R. Jones. Mr. Jones made a brief reply of thanks then for the kindness and courtesy shown.

WILLIAM T. GOULLEE.

Independence

At the annual Sunday school business meeting at the Stone Church the Christmas offering was announced as $2,958.90. A. L. Sanford was reelected superintendent; C. B. Hartshorn, assistant superintendent; J. A. Becker, treasurer; Louise Geisch, secretary; R. T. Cooper, chorister; Edith Bullard, purchase a large variety of homemade candy at a reasonable price. A number who did not come to supper brought gifts. The same evening the Independence Oratorio Society gave its first recital.

Elder R. D. Weaver and wife were in Independence a day or so recently for consultation and examination. Elder Weaver has been out of the Sanitarium since about the middle of October and though his wound has not yet healed on account of a fistula of the bowel, his general health is good and he is glad to be around. They will go soon to Traverse City and Brown City, Michigan, to visit their relatives during the holidays. They desire the prayers of the Saints for his continued improvement.

The entire evening last Friday was given over by the Stone Church Religio to a fine program by the Royal Holland Bell Ringers, Kansas City family composed of a man and wife, one daughter and three sons, all in native costume. They played on Swiss handbells, farm bells, school bells, cathedral chimes, Swiss cymbals, harp, and a small portable organ. It was a delightful program. These people do not play in theaters but visit hospitals, churches, cantonments, etc., and in the summer travel on a Chautauqua circuit.

The radio program Sunday was sent out from 6 to 7 p. m., with Elder R. V. Hopkins as speaker on "The Book of Mormon and the American Indian." The usual program of music accompanied. Brother George Anway is in charge of the musical part of the programs and E. D. Moore the speakers. The music Sunday evening was by Brother and Sister Charles May and Brother Anway. This is the first program under the new license recently secured with the station call of W. P. A. G., operated by the Central Radio Company of Kansas City. The wave length is 360 meters. Thousands of persons hear these weekly programs and the number is increasing. The speaker next Sunday evening will be President Elbert A. Smith with an appropriate Christmas sermon.

FROM ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF WALNUT PARK CHURCH

Work is now in process on enlarging the basement as indicated in the picture. The Saints are giving liberally in money and work to the completion of the structure.

Christmas offering secretary; Frank Holsworth, chairman reception committee; George Netter, custodian; W. B. Paul, superintendent adult department; M. T. Williams, senior department; Carl Wehrli, intermediate department; S. A. Thiel, junior department; Ruby Williamson, primary department; Eunice W. Smith, beginner department. The normal department was discontinued as a separate department and was turned over to the superintendent of the adult department.

Tuesday evening occurred the Sunday school election at the Second Independence Church at which the following were chosen: P. A. Sherman, superintendent; Mrs. A. K. Dillee, assistant superintendent; Delbert Whiting, secretary; Clarence Martin, treasurer; Earl F. Audet, chorister; Gladys Inman, pianist; Mrs. Goldie Wisemore, superintendent of primary and beginner department; Alma E. Campbell, superintendent junior department. All of these take office the first of the year.

Owing to the very cold weather the attendance was quite light at the supper given by the Patronesses of the Independence Sanitarium, but those who were present were amply repaid, were served a good supper, and had the opportunity to

On Friday evening a reception was held at the Second Church in honor of Elder Arthur Allen the retiring pastor, E. D. Moore, the retiring Sunday school superintendent, and R. J. Lambert, the new pastor recently appointed. Elder Allen has been the pastor of that church for about three years; Elder Moore, the Sunday school superintendent for the past year, but he has declined reelection because of taking up the work at the Stone Church Religio as superintendent of the local Department of Recreation and Expression. After a social program in which appreciation was expressed for the work of the department officials, Elder Allen was presented with a leather bound album suitably inscribed in gold and containing the signatures of the branch members together with a sum of money. Elder Moore was presented with a gold pencil in a plush case and a gold stamped loose-leaf notebook.

At the Stone Church the Sunday morning sermon was by Bishop J. A. Becker and concerned local financial conditions. There are more members of the church in Independence than can be accommodated in all of our present church buildings, including upper and lower auditoriums.

At 2.30 p. m. a problems meeting was held in the upper auditorium in charge of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishop. President F. M. Smith presented the broad vision of a coming acropolis for Zion. He referred to the Parthenon of Athens as an expression of the Greek people, and looked for the time when we would have a group of buildings expressing Zion and the brotherhood of man as beautifully as the Parthenon expressed the spirit of ancient Greece. All of our building program should be subordinated to this general ideal and built from now on so as to fit in with this broad vision and ideal. Bishop B. R. McGuire at once presented the immediate needs of a suitable church edifice at Walnut Park, as well as seen elsewhere, and the immediate problem to raise a building fund for Walnut Park. Our fathers have given us the building in which we meet. We owe a responsibility to the coming generation and our brethren who have not as suitable a place for meeting. Plans have already been drawn for this building and a cut prepared. After Walnut Park church is completed other churches will be taken up in like manner. Bishop Becker stated every family would be solicited this present week. If we could double our contributions for the past year to the church he believes it would provide an adequate building fund.

At the close of the afternoon meeting Elders Frank Veenstra and W. Postma were blessed and set apart for their mission to Holland by President E. A. Smith and Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith.

At the afternoon meeting President Smith announced the preparation of the two poems he had prepared during General Conference as sheet music by his niece, Helen Silsbee Smith. All of the copies prepared were quickly disposed of at the close of the service. He also explained how these poems came to be written.

At the 7.30 song service, "Zion the beautiful beckons us on," one of the songs mentioned above, was sung by the congregation as part of the musical program before the evening service. President Elbert A. Smith then delivered the seventh and last of the special series of sermons for young people on "Christ, the pattern," which he presented with his usual fluency and earnestness and clearness of statement. He made a review of the life of Christ from boyhood on to his death.

The choir expects to give as a Christmas oratorio the Messiah on Wednesday evening, December 27, at the Stone Church.

Next Sunday, December 24, is announced as the completion of the local Christmas offering at the Stone Church.

At the Second Church R. J. Lambert and Bishop J. F. Keir were the speakers.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending December 16: Mr. George Sherman, Rosedale, Kansas; Mrs. Olive Chrissinger, Sidney, Iowa; Miss Katie Bice, Holden, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. E. H. Garrett, T. M. Elsea, Morris S. Sharp, and Ruby Raveill. X-ray patients: Mrs. J. S. White, Hartshorne, Oklahoma; Miss Katie Bice, Holden, Missouri; George Sherman, Rosedale, Kansas; and Mrs. E. H. Garrett, T. M. Elsea, and Mrs. Roy Harding, all of Independence.

Indorses Help for Priesthood

"Nothing is more needed in the church at the present time than the book of instructions as suggested on page 1143 of the HERALD," writes Elder C. W. Clark, pastor of the First Columbus Branch, Columbus, Ohio.

"I sincerely hope this will be developed. Entirely too few know their duties. It will be a great blessing to the church if published."

Forty-Seven Years a Reader of Saints' Herald

Elder Edward Rannie writes the First Presidency that Leslie S. Wight, the oldest son of J. W. Wight, attended their services in Indianapolis on the 10th and spoke to the pleasure and edification of all at the evening service.

Brother Rannie adds that he himself has been a subscriber for the HERALD for forty-seven years and that it is forty-five years since he held his first conversation with a Latter Day Saint.

Ironton, Ohio

Gard H. Kirkendall writes that Sunday, December 3, was Sunday school rally day at Ironton, Ohio, and the little mission house was packed to capacity. Following Sunday school the sacrament service was marked by an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, giving encouragement and peace to those present and admonishing and encouraging several individuals.

After a basket dinner at noon Elder J. D. Shower preached at two o'clock on "The second coming of Christ," and was followed in the evening by the branch president, Elder Chambers.

On Saturday, Mrs. Jones, a graduate nurse, gave an interesting talk to the Department of Women. That department held a bazaar December 8 and 9 for the benefit of local missionary work.

Thrift Talks

Vanity—a strange disease of man's mind,
That looks ahead but never looks behind
To see the havoc that is wrought
By those who act, yet without thought.

She thinks not now in terms of weal or woe,
She plunges on with but desire for show.
"Care I if come a rainy day?
God will provide my needs some way."

Ever increasing appetite has she,
Though poor, rich would she appear to be.
Silk takes the place of cotton stuff,
Whether she lacks or has enough.

Slaves she makes of those that to her bow,
No victor's crown can rest upon that brow.
That follows in her riotous wake,
From such she strength and virtue takes.

Love, Joy, and Peace are no part of her life,
With Envy, Hate, and Disappointment rife.
She always self-denial will shirk,
She fails to see OK in work.

With rude disdain her nose upturned at thrift,
Her course is downward to disaster swift.
Wise are the men who folly see
In her mad course and from her flee.

Vanity, like a bandit, plunders the treasury of the Lord by diverting the tithe from holy purposes to vain, unprofitable pleasures.

MISCELLANEOUS

Department of Recreation and Expression

To District Presidents, District Religio Superintendents, and Superintendents of Local Religio Organizations:

I am sure you are anxiously awaiting word from this office as to the future of the Religio and its relation to other departments. We offer the following:

The general superintendents of all departments, Religio, Women, Music, Health, are in full agreement and working towards a common objective. We are now preparing a joint manual which will soon be published and for sale at the Herald Office at a nominal cost.

Do not attempt any change in Religio organization or plan of work other than suggested in this letter without the consent and advice of the superintendent of religious education, A. Max Carmichael, Lamoni, Iowa.

As you will note we have changed the name of the general department. Hereafter it will be known as the Department of Recreation and Expression. There is no desire to force this name on the districts and local churches. The name Religio may be continued where it is deemed wise to do so. We feel that the general department should minister to the whole church and function as a general church department and thereby serve all recreational and expressional life within the church, hence the change in name in keeping with our program.

We suggest that hereafter district superintendents be elected by the district conferences. It will be our studied purpose to make diligent effort to secure the election of the most capable persons in these positions. This office will circularize district presidents with a view to securing the most capable workers. This office will make nominations to the district conference. This will not invade the right of the conference to make its own nomination and to elect whomsoever the majority may decide upon.

Where the budget system is in vogue the district departmental expense may well be included in the district budget and the expenses of the department supplied from the district fund. All revenue derived from the department would then automatically go into the district fund. Where there is no budget system the Religio will continue to raise funds to meet its district and local expenses by assessments or donations as may be decided upon.

The first and primary work of the Department of Recreation and Expression is to the young people of the church. While we may minister to all, our duty to, and opportunity with, the young people commands special attention. Our work is to supply wholesome environment, a directive influence, vision, and perspective, to the youth of the church. We suggest:

1. Dramatics. We recommend the formation of dramatic clubs wherever possible. The club membership should not be too large. It would be better to have several of such groups than to have an unwieldy body which might easily eventuate in a mob. The purpose of these clubs will be to develop leaders in dramatic art, who can take over the training of the various group ages as we shall move to put into effect form five of the proposed plans of organization.

These clubs can take up the study of the drama, its origin, its history, its interpretation. This will comprehend church pageants, plays, pantomimes, charades, entertainments. Scriptural interpretations will be specially considered. We will give extended suggestions and information along these lines through the church papers. We suggest the following textbook as a primary study, either individually or in class work: Pageantry and Dramatics, by William V. Meredith. Price, $1.35.

2. Public Speaking. Graceland College offers an extended correspondence course in public speaking. The cost of this course is nominal. Commencing with the January, 1923, issue of Autumn Leaves there will also be a series of lectures from our pen and continuing throughout the year. These lectures are comprehensive and complete. They are suited for class work. There will be a series of exercises and questions accompany each lecture. We suggest that you organize classes in each locality where there are interested students. Work up club subscriptions for Autumn Leaves. Where possible induce students to enroll with Graceland College as correspondence students. We recommend as initial textbooks, Effective Speaking, by Arthur Edward Phillips, price $1.60; and Public Speaking, by James A. Winans, price $2.35.

3. Athletic Clubs. Our boys and girls are interested in athletics. It is little short of a crime to leave them solely to their individual resources. The church must lead the way. We must give direction. If the church will take the lead, the young people will follow. Go in for this rightful expression of life. Let the club select a leader, or better still, an instructor, and get to work. This comprehends gymnasias, playgrounds, courts, tracts; and all athletic expression. As your first textbook we recommend Gymnasium Problems, by Jacob Bolin, price, $1.60.

4. Physical Culture Groups. Many of our people are interested in physical culture in its manifold expression. Many more could become interested. We advise the formation of groups or classes to study and practice physical culture. The following texts will be good: Physical Beauty, How to Keep It, by Annette Kellerman, price, $2.60; and How to Develop Muscular Power and Beauty, by Bernarr MacFadden, price, $1.10.

5. Recreation. We need recreational leaders in every local church to plan and direct the recreational life of the people. It is the work of the district and the local superintendents to create an interest in wholesome recreation, to organize the recreational activities of the people in each locality, and to supply perspective and direction. Text to use: Recreation and the Church, by Herbert W. Gates, price, $1.35.

6. Organized Play. There is no man or woman too old to retain and express the play purpose of life. Well directed play is life—the very life of life. The work of district and local superintendents is to direct and organize the play content of the people. We suggest that you follow the articles along this line appearing in Autumn Leaves and SAINTS' HERALD. Text: The Church and the People's Play, by Henry A. Atkinson, price, $1.35; also Education Through Play, by Henry Curtis, price, $1.90.

7. Games. This field is limitless. One of the very best books on games is Games for Playground, Home, and Gymnasium, by Jessie H. Bancroft, price, $2.50.

8. Entertainments and Socials. Superintendents of recreation and expression will be foremost in promoting entertainments and socials. These may be held at frequent intervals and may embrace mixed programs, pageants, lectures, plays, orchestral and vocal renditions, choruses, exhibits, banquets, contests, etc. Text: Social Activities for Men and Boys, by Albert M. Chesley, price, $2.25; also Neighborhood Entertainments, by Renee Stern, price, $2.35.

Please bear in mind that it will not be wise to attempt to interest the same people in all of these activities. This would be a fatal blunder. Permit the people themselves, as far as possible, to decide which of the above courses they will take up. Find out how many people would like to engage in dramatics—organize them. Let this be true of each of the other expressions.

We advise that the class work be not discontinued in local meetings. It may be well to make provision, however, so that those who may be engaged in the activities mentioned

Songs by President F. M. Smith

Many of the Saints will remember the songs, "Onward to Zion," and "Come sweet Comforter," which were sung at the recent General Conference.

The words of these songs were written during the conference by President F. M. Smith and are very inspiring. The music as arranged by Helen Silsbee Smith is from sweet melodies and suitable for choir or congregational use. Because of the many requests for copies of these songs a small number of copies have been printed and can be had at above have their class study conform to the particular expression in which they are interested.

25 Cents a Copy

This music was arranged from records by J. Ehrlich and Foster. Please send orders to Helen Silsbee Smith, 3943 Garfield Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

It is not obligatory that the Book of Mormon be the only study. We learn that in some places there is a mistaken idea that the Religio was organized to study the Book of Mormon. This is incorrect. In some quarters there is an insistent determination to confine the study work of the Religio to the Book of Mormon and to ignore any and all of the different expressions, activities, and studies suggested. This we feel to be a very tactical blunder.

Let it be distinctly understood that it is not the purpose of this department, in any way, to discourage the study of the Book of Mormon or to force any other study or work on the local group. We believe in rightful democracy. We do not object to an intensive study of the Book of Mormon. In fact we encourage it. But we do not need the Religio organization to study the Book of Mormon. Book of Mormon classes may be formed and operate in Sunday school, on Sunday or on week days or nights, any time, and anywhere.

The general church has said that the primary work of the Religio shall be recreational and social. Would it not be far better to allow those who desire to confine their activities to a study of the Book of Mormon to do so and permit all others to follow their inclination as well? Nothing will be gained by trying to compel all to conform to the views of the few. Let the greatest tolerance obtain. The department exists to encourage, to help, to foster all wholesome expression.

The clubs, groups, and classes may have their separate organizations and may meet on separate nights from the regular meeting of the local Religio or they may hold their class study on the same evening and unite in either case in the general group expression. We hope at no distant day to see the interest along these lines develop until we can have contests, and even tournaments where selected representatives from the different local organizations may enter competition.

The general tendency now is to merge the business of the local church and also of the district dispensing with the different departmental business meetings. This is not arbitrary but we so recommend. There will be no restriction as to membership in this department. The business will be conducted by the church membership. Our classes and expressional work will be open to all those who will cooperate with us.

In order to be successful as a representative of the department it will be quite necessary for local and district superintendents to familiarize themselves with the scope and character of the work. Become an authority on church dramatics, athletics, physical culture, recreation, and organized play. These are interesting and illuminating subjects. They are things with which the church should concern itself. It is for you our superintendents to become leaders among the young people and not only be the means of supplying them with wholesome expression, but also to win them to an appreciation of the spiritual values for which the church stands.

The Herald Office informs us that there are only a limited number of copies of "What Can We Do at Our Religio?" on hand. Better order one or more copies at once. The price is twenty-five cents.

Please send us names of any book or books or periodicals relating to any of the subjects mentioned so that we can add same to our bibliography. In this way we will be able to secure a valuable collection of helpful material. Do not hesitate to write the department at any time for information or suggestions in regard to your work.

Write us a personal letter. Tell us what experience you have had in recreation and expression. Indicate your purpose for the future. We propose to make this department indispensable to the church. May we have your cooperation?

Superintendents will please present this letter to your locals.

Very sincerely yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS,

General Superintendent, Department of Recreation and Expression.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 15, 1922.

Appointment of District Presidents

Elder Otto Kueffer has resigned as president of the Northwestern Kansas District and Elder C. I. Carpenter has been appointed to succeed him, subject to the action of the next district conference.

December 12, 1922.

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder L. O. Pearson as president of the London District to succeed Elder J. H. Yager, resigned.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 15, 1922.

Warning Against an Impostor

One Reverend W. J. Baker, advertising as actor evangelist, has been in certain districts representing himself to be a member of the church and soliciting assistance from the Saints. He is not entitled to assistance on this claim.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Important Institute in Southwestern Kansas

To the Saints of Southwestern Kansas: Your attention is again called to the institute at Wichita, December 30 to January 1. Superintendent A. Max Carmichael of the Sunday School Department will be with us. Apostles Roy S. Budd and F. Henry Edwards will be present to organize this territory into a district, providing in their judgment that present conditions would justify such action. All the Saints of this territory are urged to be present. Thomas S. Williams.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Mrs. William H. Carter, of Maquoketa, Iowa.

A. H. Warren writes that Mrs. D. E. Ellis, of Fairfield, Illinois, desires the prayers of the Saints that her suffering may not be so severe in her present affliction.

Our Departed Ones

GERBER.—Eva Gerber was born in Germany in 1842. At the age of eight years she came to America. She was a pioneer of Wyandotte County, Kansas, living there since 1864. Baptized fifty years ago. Died December 6, 1922. Leaves four sons, three daughters, twenty-two grandchildren, and twenty-two great-grandchildren. Funeral services from the Chelsea Park church in Kansas City, Kansas. Sermon by J. A. Tanner. Interment in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Interesting Items About the Periodicals

"GREENBRIER'S LOST TREASURE BOX"

A new serial by Estella Wight will appear in the first number of "Stepping Stones" in January. Sister Wight is editor of "Stepping Stones," and is the author of the popular books, In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage and the sequel, A Vineyard Story. These books appeared first as stories in "Stepping Stones" and "Autumn Leaves," respectively, and have a year-round sale similar to some of the standard books of the church.

The principal character is Faith, a little fair-haired girl of fourteen, whose home is found in one of the Middle Western States, and whose childhood has been a very happy one. Her first real understanding of the sorrows and distress that come into the lives of some, comes during the summer of 1917 when the young men of the United States were called to take up arms in the great World War. In the invasion of war's grim hand, grasping for the brothers and fathers of her very own little circle of Sunday school and Religio friends, she realizes for the first time something of its awfulness.

As a thread running through the entire story is her desire to cling closely to her religious training and to the faith she knows to be true.

There is a touch of romance; there is war, mystery, adventure, pride. Prejudice against the latter-day work is a real factor in the story.

The story will run for several months. Keep in touch with "Stepping Stones." Buy it for your family if they do not get it in Sunday school. Single copies $0.65 a year.

A COURSE IN PUBLIC SPEAKING

One of the best features of the many good ones "Autumn Leaves" has carried will be a course in public speaking beginning in the January number of "Autumn Leaves." This is by Elder T. W. Williams, who has read and studied many books on the subject and who has culled from them and his successful experience as an orator of much power that which will inspire many people with a desire to qualify in this most commendable skill.

There is sufficient in one installment (especially if one will purchase one or more of the textbooks suggested) to supply a class with material for a month. It is especially a fine course for classes in Religio and is to be recommended for that purpose in addition to its value for private study.

"Autumn Leaves" costs only $1.75 a year and contains many valuable features in addition to the course mentioned above.

SERIES ON RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

In the issue of December 21 there begins a valuable series of articles in "Zion's Ensign" on the restoration of the gospel, by Elder E. E. Long. Saints and nonmembers alike will appreciate these articles, together with the weekly array of interesting material the "Ensign" presents.

The price is a dollar a year—seventy-five cents to nonmembers.

"AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF JOHN J. CORNISH"

Thousands of Saints have wanted to secure in written form the account of the many thrilling incidents in gospel work as related by Elder J. J. Cornish. Such an opportunity is now offered in the current issues of the "Journal of History," which contain liberal installments of the "Autobiography of Elder J. J. Cornish."

It is generally known that when Elder Cornish began preaching he could not read his own texts, but he has since then made such excellent use of his opportunities that in this lengthy manuscript written in his own handwriting, surprisingly few changes are required before publication.

The "Journal of History" is a quarterly publication of 128 pages for only $1.50 a year and has in addition many other valuable historical articles. It is edited by Church Historian Walter W. Smith.

"THE PRIESTHOOD JOURNAL"

The members of the priesthood throughout the church will profit by regular perusal and study of the articles appearing in "The Priesthood Journal." For the past year it has carried the lectures of Walter W. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, delivered to joint meetings of the priesthood in Zion, on teaching ideals and methods. In addition there have been various important items by the editors, President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire. It is a monthly the size of the Angel Message Tracts, sixteen pages to an issue, and costs 40 cents a year.

Many persons availed themselves of the opportunity to let us send gift announcements where subscriptions to the church periodicals were sent to friends. It is an eminently appropriate way to show one's good judgment and we predict that the number will be doubled next year. There is still time to send these cards—if you hurry and they don't have to go too far before Christmas. If the time does not matter, send them in anyway.

Go Ye Into All the World

How many are ready? How many will go?

Men of to-day are appreciating the need of consecration. Thus we note in a recent issue of the Christian Century a statement of the conversion of Sherwood Eddy. He has given his life and fortune to missionary effort in India, China, and during the war, in the west.

Frank L. Brown promised his heavenly Father that as soon as he had $40,000 he would give all of his time to Sunday school work and he was soon doing so.

A. A. Hyde, who makes Mentholatum, seven years ago had a net personal income of $100,000 a year, of which $90,000 was given to the work of the Lord as he understood it, while he lived simply on the $10,000.

Colgate gave first a tenth, then a fifth, then a half, and finally all of his income. Other business men are named who have in like manner arranged their affairs so as to give either their income or the major portion of their time and energy for social service in connection with the church and its departments.

Finally John R. Ewers concludes with the statement: "I never have been able to find that verse of scripture that says if you cannot go, send. The harvest is ripe, the laborers are few; pray the Lord that he send forth laborers. You know who he will call first? You. Pray, but pack your trunk while you pray. All will not be sent to China, all will not be sent to Africa, but more will be sent to both places. Some will stay in America; many will stay in their old home town; but all must go and teach. Christ called for a consecrated people. God has done much through plain men who are consecrated, who have laid themselves upon the altar, such men as Moody, who says 'I am not much, but God can have all there is of me.'"

We have summarized the above to show something of the missionary appeal being made to other churches, that we have the very gospel of the kingdom; we teach that we have the very voice of God to-day.

There is work to be done at home as well as abroad. There is justifiably work for the support of those who go abroad and give their whole time. We recognize the necessity for a direct call from God through the properly constituted authorities, yet we are also told that all are called according to the gifts and calling of God unto them (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8), and that if we have desires to serve God we are called to the work, "for the field is white all ready to harvest" (Doctrine and Covenants 4: 6.)

Last week there was a call from the President of the church for preparation. How many are willing to make ready? How many will go?

The call is to all; when will the church hear the rousing voice of the Spirit and go forth in the power of Jesus?

The Richest of People

The definiteness of our beliefs makes us rich in spiritual blessings.

How many times have we read this passage in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:

And if ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give; but beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6.

Verily, verily I say unto you, Ye are little children, and ye have not as yet understood how great blessings the Father has in his own hands, and prepared for you; and ye cannot bear all things now; nevertheless be of good cheer, for I will lead you along; the kingdom is yours and the blessings thereof are yours; and the riches of eternity are yours; and he who receiveth all things, with thankfulness, shall be made glorious, and the things of this earth shall be added unto him, even an hundredfold, yea, more; wherefore do the things which I have commanded you, saith your Redeemer, even the Son Ahman, who prepareth all things before he taketh you; for ye are the church of the Firstborn, and he will take you up in the cloud, and appoint every man his portion.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 4.

In the above there is promise of riches of earth but especially the riches of eternity. It is easy for us to understand material wealth, but how many have felt they were deprived of something when they read, "He who hath eternal life is rich." The opportunity of holding things now may not be greatly intensified over what it has been in past ages, but the strong emphasis everywhere on a social religion or an economic solution here, has tended towards a disregard of the factors, concerned with a future life. To some it seems like putting it off for a long time.

Occasional comment has been made as to the value of the temporal gifts that our heavenly Father has given us in these bodies of ours: sight, hearing, taste, and smell, as well as the living touch to feel that which goes on around us. A millionaire with indigestion feels that he would give all his wealth for a good beefsteak and the ability to digest it.

One who is afflicted or lacks one of these faculties indeed suffers from a terrible handicap, not only in fact, but more so in the mind of his associates. Psychologists and physiologists quite tend to discuss such individuals as though they were mentally deficient, because they are blind or deaf or dumb. But that does not always follow.

But one who lacks the ability to see, hear, or speak, or walk, would feel that he would give all that he possesses to possess that one faculty, while retaining those he already has.

Yet great are these physical blessings, and the privilege of holding material wealth, in the opportunity it offers for doing good for others, these forms of riches are after all less than the assurance that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, that right and justice will eventually triumph, that righteousness shall reign upon the earth, and that we and our loved ones shall be permitted to be there and enjoy the peace that eternity has to offer.

This is rather emphasized in the book, The Young Man and the World, by ex-Senator Beveridge of Indiana in his chapter on the young man and the pulpit. He said that a certain person, having a good opportunity to question ministers of various churches one summer proposed to each one he met three questions, preceding the questions with the announcement that one of the greatest transportation men in the United States had said that he would rather have a knowledge that he would live again, and that his soul is immortal, than to have the greatest honor that could be given to him in all the world. These questions were:

(1) Answer yes or no, Do you believe in God the Father, God a person, God a definite tangible intelligence, not a collection of laws floating like a fog through the universe? Do not argue, do not explain, but is your mind in a condition where you can answer yes or no?

Yet not one of these ministers gave an unqualified yes. Each wanted to explain that the deity might be a definite intelligence or might not, that the latest thought was much confused.

The second question was, Do you believe that Christ was the son of the living God sent to save the world? I am not asking whether you believe he was inspired in the sense that the great moral teachers are inspired, but do you believe that Christ was God's very Son? Again not a single answer was an unequivocal yes. The sum of most of the answers was that Christ was the most perfect man the world had seen, but that is short of being the Son of God. They knew not Jesus the Christ.

The third question, Do you believe that when you die you will live again in a conscious intelligence, knowing who you are and who other people are? Again there was not a single unconditional affirmative. Yet these men were supposed to be ministers.

How great, then, and how valuable is that assurance in the souls of the people of God that if a man die he shall live again, that God lives, and all is well, that Jesus is the very Christ, the Son of the living God and that in him, through him, and by him salvation is offered to all mankind.

Truly he who hath eternal life is rich, implying as that does to know God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent, and to receive life everlasting. (John 17: 1-5.)

To such the riches of earth are added with safety, for in his hands such riches mean blessings to mankind.

Is This Your Church?

In the Letter Department of the HERALD two weeks ago there appears a letter from D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake, under the above title.

That letter presents one of the serious problems not only of the city church, but of a large church where there are so many members that few are acquainted with all, and the result is that the members are much slower to shake hands—but not because of a lack of interest or of good will.

In Independence this is largely met by the group prayer meetings where the stranger is at once known and properly presented. When there are more than a thousand people in attendance a total stranger can be quite easily overlooked.

Also for the sake of the visitor it may be well to suggest that things are not always as they seem. We remember well during the World's Fair in Saint Louis going up to speak to a sister and being met with, "Well, I am glad that somebody will speak to me. I wondered how long I would have to wait." We replied, "I suppose that you think that the other people here this morning are members of the branch and that you are the only stranger, or one of a very few." She replied, "Of course!"

On the contrary, the facts were that I had been a member of this branch for some fifteen years, and more than half of the people who were there that morning had never before attended one of our services there. Added to that there were so many visitors to the World's Fair that many of our members, and especially the housekeepers of the families had to hurry home as soon as the service was over to prepare the noonday meal. As a result there were just a few of us left to greet all of the visitors, and we had been doing so just as rapidly as we could since the close of the service.

Would it not be well, when a young person or one older in years knows that he or she is going to be in a large city or in a large branch for a time, that he or she write ahead or at least make himself or herself known to the officers of the branch? Our experience is that most of the officers are more than ready to cooperate and see that everyone is looked after, if they have the opportunity.

The New Book of Rules

The new book now used as authority by the church. It was the standard at General Conference.

The membership of the church in general, and the ministry in particular, will be glad to learn that the revision of the Book of Rules ordered by the conference some years ago and carefully prepared by a specially selected committee is now published and on sale at the Herald Office for seventy-five cents. The title of the work is Rules of Order for Deliberative Assemblies.

The new work contains 162 pages, besides a copious general index of 10 pages, and is much more complete than any work of its size hitherto issued. It possesses several new features that will commend it to all who require a work on parliamentary law. One of these is a prefatory index of motions, containing all motions in alphabetic order, so that any of them may be instantly found. There is also a digressive table of motions, also in alphabetic order, containing the abbreviated rules governing each motion. In addition to this an explanatory table of words and terms used in parliamentary practice is provided, so that quick reference may be had to any term the meaning of which might not be perfectly clear to one not accustomed to parliamentary terms.

In order that the new work may be most easily consulted, the entire book is divided into 341 paragraphs, which are numbered consecutively. Instead of referring to a page when citing some point of order, the exact paragraph containing the desired matter is cited in the indexes mentioned. Another valuable feature added to the new work consists of a cross reference system, so that each paragraph contains citations to other paragraphs which deal with the same subject in any way, if found under another division of the work, as is sometimes necessary. The book deals with more than a score of parliamentary topics not found in the old book of rules.

Mistaken Identity

Heber J. Grant is not the president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We have received two copies of the War Cry for December 2, 1922, published in San Francisco, California, for the western territory of the Salvation Army in the United States. The first page of this paper contains some six or seven illustrations in connection with Salt Lake City, Utah, including the Commissioner and officers of the Utah and Idaho Division of the Salvation Army, the Governor of Utah, Main Street in Salt Lake City, the Brigham Young Monument, and the Tabernacle.

In addition to the above it includes a picture of Heber J. Grant, president of the church in Utah, and under it the following words: "President Herbert Grant, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

There seems some excuse for confusion when Joseph Smith was the head of the Reorganization and Joseph Fielding Smith was the president of the Utah faction. But it seems that there is but little reason why two men should be confused as different as are Frederick M. Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and Heber J. Grant, the president of the Utah faction. The names of the two men are radically different; their age is different; their personal appearance is very different. We can but protest against this serious inaccuracy and misrepresentation.

Incidentally it happens that Mr. Grant's name is not correctly spelled, but that is a minor inaccuracy compared to the confusion of the two organizations.

As one reads the synoptists, there cannot be much doubt that Jesus, in his few months of public appearance, proclaimed some kind of a social gospel. It is true that he was primarily concerned with individuals rather than organizations, but equally true that he selected and trained these individuals as a sort of charter members for a society soon to be. It is true that it was thus the spiritual redemption of men and women, not the improvement of existing institutions, for which he labored. But that was because he regarded those present institutions as essentially hopeless and about to perish, not because he did not have the vision of a better and perfected state.—Professor Fitch.

The Value of an Idea

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

If you have an idea worth while, capitalize it.

Most of us are like the needle on a phonograph, we run in grooves. We do things in the same old way that father and grandfather did them. We have never starved to death by following a groove and therefore feel satisfied to jog along year in and year out. If perchance some ambition jostles us in the highway we immediately administer the anæsthetic to him, "I'm a victim of circumstances, a creature of environment." It never occurs to us, as Shailer Matthew says, that the "tree lives in the soil and the soil lives in the tree." We must live in some environment and as masters of our own destiny that environment can be shaped and reflected through us.

An idea that does not find its expression in concrete form dies. It is the man who capitalizes his ideas that does something different from other men, that becomes an outstanding national figure. Mr. ——— who organized the Blank Chain stores is an example. Recognizing that the world was full of customers he decided that he would place his retail stores at points where customers were found most. To determine this he would place watchers at different points to count the number of people who passed daily. Having opened a store he then instructed his clerks to make it just as easy as possible for a customer to trade in the store. "If you," said he, "are at the other end of the counter when a customer enters, immediately approach him. If you know his favorite brand of goods, don't wait for him to ask for it, but quickly hand out the article."

You see he was doing things just a little different and somehow the public liked it and to-day he has over one hundred stores. He capitalized his idea.

We have been urging the Saints everywhere to make January inventory month. We recognize that the church can only prosper financially in proportion to the prosperity of its members. We become vitally interested, therefore, in your success, for you are the church.

The greatest undeveloped resource of the world to-day, says Roger Babson, is the human soul.

The unlimited field in which to develop new ideas will be recognized when one knows that all the railroads, industries and buildings employing more than twenty men or costing more than $5,000, have been developed by two per cent of the population. The inventions of the future will be as great or greater than those of the past. The new methods or plans of merchandising which make men outstanding figures of the age will develop to-morrow as they did yesterday.

Thirty per cent of the captains of industry have not been born in the cradle of wealth and ease, but in homes where frugality and industry were in evidence. This thirty per cent came from the homes of preachers and farmers, where vision, faith, hard work, and determination found daily demonstration.

Within a hundred miles of the Heart of America, as Kansas City calls herself, is the great country of the Ozarks, where land can be purchased for from $5 to $20 per acre, rough, stony, and undesirable in most places for agricultural purposes, poverty and undevelopment abounding; yet there gushes out of those hills springs which form rivers, awaiting only the man with an idea who by building great dams will harness this power, convert it into electricity and supply such growing centers of population as Kansas City, Saint Louis, Springfield, Joplin, etc., at a figure much below the present prices. Is there not at your very door like opportunities calling for your consideration?

When you have an idea that is worth while, capitalize it. Hang on like a bulldog. The hardest steel will eventually crystallize and break by constant vibration.

Do as a certain merchant prince did who in the development of his retail business reached a point where he had to go into the manufacturing business in order to insure a constant supply of the goods he sold. This required greatly increased capital. The logical man for him to hook up with was a millionaire, Mr. X, but every time he tried to secure an interview with Mr. X he was headed off by an army of secretaries. Mr. X was a manufacturer of the products the merchant prince was selling and on one of the packages put out by Mr. X was the picture of a naval officer. Merchant Prince had an idea which he capitalized. He hired twenty of the finest looking young men that he could find and dressed them in uniforms identical with the picture on packages put out by Mr. X. They were then stationed at every conceivable place that Mr. X was liable to be, in the hotel lobby, on the elevator, strolling up and down the corridors, at the club, on the streets, at the entrance to his office. They never spoke to Mr. X. or paid any attention to him. Their business was only to be seen. Finally the curiosity of Mr. X was aroused and he asked one of these naval officers for whom he was working. Having learned, Mr. X. immediately sent for Merchant Prince. Needless to say, Merchant Prince accomplished his purpose. What did he do? Capitalized his idea. What was it worth to him? Hundreds of thousands of dollars. The barriers of wealth, the barrage of secretaries had no terror to him. He had an idea that was worth while, and he knew there was some way to "put it across."

The world is made up of just plain, everyday, ordinary folk. You are one of them and your opportunity to be a business success is just as great as Ford's, Rockefeller's, Wrigley's or a thousand others. They capitalized their ideas, they had a vision, had faith in their idea and in their ability to make it win, but even with these failure would have been written on their history had they not been willing to work.

Capitalize your ideas.

Restatement of What's Wrong With Us?

By Edward Rannie

A missionary who seeks causes for existing conditions.

In the HERALD of September 20, 1922, page 885, occurs the following language: "In the city of Zion which God wants to be a holy city, a man of the world builds a factory that gives employment to a number of people, and some of our people, the children of light, build a pleasure resort near by to get the money of the titheless, pleasure-mad Saints. Perhaps that is what the Lord had in mind when he said the Gentiles would help build up Zion."

On my return from my mission field I met one of the brethren whose integrity as a man cannot be called in question, as a citizen among the best, and as a church member his loyalty to the cause we all love and try to move forward cannot be doubted, remarked to me that he and others thought I was a little too harsh and caustic in making the above statement. For fear that others and especially those personally concerned may have misunderstood me, I will try to make the thoughts in my mind plainer. I disavow any intention of making a personal thrust, insinuation, or innuendo of any sort toward those immediately connected with the business. I know of their friendship and many acts of kindness toward the missionaries and their families, and under the law of Jesus Christ I cannot strike an enemy, and to do so to those who have been my friends would be the basest kind of ingratitude, something that I am unable to think of, and could only do so when I had lost my reason.

I was trying to tell of things connected with our work and some of the hindering causes that prevent its onward march and was not thinking of men. I was trying to bring conditions before the mind of the reader and not individuals. They come and go in the great drama of life but conditions that make for good or evil are with us always.

There is a great and marvelous work to be accomplished before the Lord shall come and reign with his people. Two of them I will name: Zion is to be established and the gospel is to be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations. (See Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5; 87: 3, 4.) There has been so little done toward the accomplishment of either that it is not worth mentioning.

David said, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." (Psalms 50: 5.) Surely he did not mean that we were to sacrifice the things that our Lord wanted us to do, but rather the things of the world. He must have meant the things of the world that do not contribute to the accomplishment of his great work. The Lord must have had that in mind when he said to the church in 1913, "The church is instructed both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work." (Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.)

The Bishop's report for the fiscal year closing June 30, 1922, shows that the average allowance per family, not including the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, was $582, and it is a well-known fact that many of our young people in Zion and elsewhere who are not married have an income of more than double that amount. The Bishop's report does not show that they have paid any tithing, and many of our married people who have three times the income of the missionary's family allowance do not pay any tithing or even have a home of their own.

What is being done with the money of the class of people referred to? Most of it is spent in pleasure that does not enrich the soul. Paul said that one of the things that would make perilous times in the last days would be that men would be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." (2 Timothy 3: 4.) The missionary force has been reduced to about 110 men. About 70 were laid off in the present year, something that has not happened before in the history of the Reorganization. We passed through the panics of 1873 and 1893, each of which lasted about four years, and it was not found necessary to make such a wholesale cutting down of the missionary force. It has mainly been brought about by the wasting of the money of our people and most of it for pleasure. Under our present conditions our people could furnish the bishop with $500,000 annually and no one would want for the necessities of life. When business was good $1,000,000 could be paid and none go without home comforts. The men of the world know the path of success is not found in the world of pleasure. Such men as Edison, Marconi, DeForest, and noted men in the business world like Carnegie, Marshall Field, Stewart, Deere, and many in the professional world did not make pleasure the chief aim in life, but just incidental. When Miss Jane Addams graduated from college she did not go into the world of pleasure although she had plenty of money to do so, but went among the poor and lowly of Chicago and made her life one of service.

The Lord has told his people that if we do not make good use of our material wealth he cannot give to us the greater blessings which are spiritual. (See Doctrine and Covenants 77:3 and Luke 16:11.) We are now nearly ninety years behind in the work the Lord gave us to do, and only as recently as 1909 the Lord told us to establish colonies and industrial institutions and this was not to be done by the money belonging to the church but by the members under the direction of the Bishop and other general officers of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 128:6.) We have not yet done anything to be obedient to the command. As a means of accomplishing our work the Lord said we should "carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants. . . . And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard." (Doctrine and Covenants 130:7.) Some of our people are paying heed to the counsel of the Lord and from the people of small incomes is coming much of our tithing.

Reasonable and liberal-minded people believe that young and old should have pleasure and recreation, but as Paul said "temperate in all things," the great sin is when that is made the chief aim of life, and all people who spend their time in that way will be a failure in the commercial, industrial, and professional world, and as "workers together with God" they will have been "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

The people of Nephi attained such a standard of righteousness that they were the happiest people in all the world and it was because they were obedient to the teachings of Jesus, and we have so far failed in our work because we are continually disobedient to the words of our Lord. We cannot live like the world and accomplish the work that has been intrusted to us, except in so far as they may do the things that God asks us to do, and when such is done they get the blessing that our Lord wants us to have.

The Lord has told us that his people will be gathered into Zion from all the world and our people look to Zion, and especially the city which is the capital, for the practical carrying out of the ideals of Jesus Christ. Many come to visit and some to make it their home and go away disappointed because it is no better than elsewhere in the smaller branches, the main difference being larger numbers and better opportunities but not any more righteousness.

During the late World War the people were called on to make sacrifices so that the war could be won and the hungry of Europe fed. In doing so they were not deprived of any of the comforts of life and were happy. What a great impetus it would give to the work if the city of Zion could be pointed out as an ideal place to live and that the people were the leaders in everything that would win people to the cause of Jesus Christ, and the people of the world would come from near and far to see a practical demonstration of the social ideals of our Lord.

If in my previous article because of a poor use of our language it appeared that I was criticizing men I regret it very much. I was trying to point out the facts that were holding back our work, and as an evidence that many understood it that way, by letter and by verbal statement during the General Conference at least twenty-five people, some of whom I had never met before, expressed words of appreciation because I had set forth the true condition of things. The most important thing about the whole matter is, did I tell the truth about conditions? If not, then we should all forget it, if true then we should all work together to make Zion and the whole church the best place in the world for people to get into.

Baby Welfare

The census office in connection with the Department of Child Welfare has recently issued the report for 1921 which shows the birth rate in the registration area to have been 24.3. The death rate was 11.7. This shows a net gain of 1.26 per cent annually.

The infant mortality shows a decided gain since the national average is now 76 per thousand with such States as Oregon, Washington, Nebraska, and Minnesota ranking low, between 50 and 60 per cent. At the other end of the line are to be noted Delaware, South Carolina, Maryland, and Rhode Island, between 90 and 100 per thousand. But even these States have the honor of being in the registered area and therefore outrank in merit the States below that level.

There are ten cities in the United States where the death rate was between 30 and 40, to which must be added Hartford, Connecticut, and Hoquian, Washington, only 29. There are fifteen others with less than 50, a total of 27 towns and small cities with this low average.

On the other hand, some show as high as 190 and even 251 per thousand deaths. Such a percentage is rather a reflection on our administration of health laws.

Shall Our Local Adopt Another Form of Organization?

By A. Max Carmichael

"Progress does not necessarily come in adopting different forms of organization."

This seems to be the prevailing question in many departmental locals. The feeling is quite prevalent that a change in organization is indicative of progress. Let us not be deceived. Progress does not necessarily come in adopting different forms of organization. Changes in constitutional government come long after the spirit exists, practically effecting that same change in operation to which the form itself consents to. In other words, in most instances the legal change is made long after the actual change is made.

The first question, then, to ask during consideration of a change of form of organization is, Have we for some time in our local church and local departments been practicing the spirit of cooperation to which this proposed form for adoption gives consent? In other words, the spirit of cooperation which the proposed form of organization for adoption requires may be and should be existing long before the new form of organization is actually adopted.

Shall locals who are now operating under form one change to form two? Not until the constituents of that local department are quite well persuaded that some one person should be set apart to hunt out with much prayer and thought the best person to act as the superintendent of that local. They might for two successive business meetings ask the district superintendent to make a nomination, before they finally ask the district superintendent always to make the nomination for the local superintendent.

There is no doubt that as soon as they ask the district superintendent to make such nomination, he will immediately advise with the local church presidency as to who would make the best superintendent. Also for several successive business meetings the local department might give the superintendent-elect a chance to nominate candidates for the remaining elective officers. We feel that in most cases after experimenting with this mode of election the departmental constituency will feel quite willing to make it a permanent thing, and hence form two will be effected.

When shall form three be adopted? Only after form two has been used for some time and the district superintendent has been able to rely upon the advice of the local church presidency in making the best nominations for the superintendent of the local department. After the local church presidency has been taking a supervisory attitude and supervisory responsibility toward the local department for some time with success, the local department may well vote to adopt form three, and the district superintendent may well consent to such an adoption.

When shall a local adopt form four? This is indeed a bigger change and should be adopted with more precaution than any of the changes so far discussed. Not only should the local church presidency have assumed a proper responsibility for the local departmental work with success for some time, but further we should want the adult constituency of that church to be thoroughly converted to the need of the local departmental work and be thoroughly in sympathy with it. Further, the adult constituency should have an adequate appreciation of the relative rights and demands of the local departmental work upon the time, energy, talent, and money of the local church constituency. There is no doubt that this adult constituency should be willing to set aside the best talent in the church for the superintendency of the locals, before the locals should think of adopting form four. We would discourage locals as a general thing jumping from form one to form four. It will hinder in the long run the Sunday school work.

We have in another article discussed the prerequisites to a successful adoption of form five. (SAINTS' HERALD for December 20, 1922.)

Let us repeat again that progress does not come in adopting new forms of organization, but first, in securing better teachers, and second, in securing a spirit of cooperation between the workers of the various departments and within the same department.

The Near East Relief continues to warn us of the serious situation in Asia Minor. The rainy season is upon them and few have adequate shelter, blankets, or clothing. Those who were quite well to do before the recent sack of Smyrna have some of them lost as much as half a million dollars and are as penniless and hopeless as any of their neighbors. They need blankets and food in order to get on their feet and start. Arrangements have been made so that relief funds can be cabled without expense to the fund. Many sick are lying on wet ground without adequate covering.

The World League Against Alcoholism met in Toronto, Canada, November 24 to 29. Delegates were present from twenty-one different countries including Great Britain, France, and Scandinavia.

J. F. Curtis Answers John T. Bridwell

A review of the proposition of debate held June 19, 1922, and of an article by Elder Bridwell.

My attention has been called to an article published in the Christian Standard of August 12, 1922, headed, "A debate with Latter Day Saints." This debate was held at Dailey, Michigan, beginning June 19. Sixteen nights were devoted to the four propositions considered.

Propositions

1. Resolved, that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is identical with the New Testament church in faith, organization, doctrine, ordinances, and worship.

2. Resolved, that the Disciples of Christ, otherwise known as the Christian Church, or Church of Christ, are identical with the New Testament church in faith, organization, doctrine, ordinances, and worship.

3. Resolved, that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin and entitled to the respect and belief of all Christians.

4. Resolved, that the Bible is the complete and final word of God to man and contains the only authoritative rule of faith and practice for the government of all Christians.

I affirmed propositions one and three. Elder John T. Bridwell, pastor of the Christian Church at Coldwater, Michigan, affirmed propositions two and four. This article in the Christian Standard is not signed. Evidently Mr. Bridwell either wrote it or had some one write it for him at his dictation. The earmarks are Bridwell's.

In his effort to answer my affirmative argument on the first proposition Mr. Bridwell assumed the following thirteen rules as a premise on which to base his arguments:

Rule 1. The New Testament is the sole standard by which the New Testament church may be known, and, for this reason, it is the sole authority by which conformity with that institution may be established.

Rule 2. Any church claiming identity with the New Testament church must use the New Testament as its sole rule of faith and practice.

Rule 3. It must bear those names and only those names which are authorized by the New Testament usage.

Rule 4. It must be built on the same foundation, the rock, Christ Jesus.

Rule 5. Its sole object of faith, otherwise popularly called its creed, must be Christ.

Rule 6. Its only recognized head, both in heaven and on earth, must be Christ.

Rule 7. It must recognize no other general, or overhead ecclesiastical organization than the one existing in the apostolic age and described in the New Testament.

Rule 8. It will, therefore, acknowledge only those apostles who were made ambassadors by his personal selection, and upon whom alone he conferred the authority to bind and loose in the kingdom of heaven.

Rule 9. It must proclaim the identical message that was proclaimed by apostles and apostolic men.

Rule 10. It must observe the same ordinances, in the same manner, and for the same purpose.

Rule 11. It must inculcate the same manner of holy living and foster it by the same agencies and the same means.

Rule 12. It should pattern its local congregations after the models set forth in the New Testament.

Rule 13. It must offer the same hope of salvation and promulgate the same precious promises.

Let us examine these rules:

Rule 1. We object to this rule because it sets to one side the Old Testament which gives an account of the church under Moses. Speaking of the condition of the Israelites in the wilderness, Paul says: "For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. (Hebrews 4: 2.)"

Rule 2 is faulty on the same ground as Rule 1. Again, if, (as he claims) the New Testament church must use the New Testament as its sole rule of faith and practice, why do Campbell's disciples have and use in addition to the Bible, The Christian System, by Alexander Campbell; The Christian Minister's Manual, by Green; and a Church Discipline, by Hayden; and The Christian Worker, by Foy? Why have these books in addition to the Bible if the Bible is all-sufficient? We would also like an answer to the following question:

Why was it necessary for Thomas Campbell to write the "Declaration and address" which he submitted to his followers, and why did they adopt it, if the Bible is all-sufficient?

Rule 3. This has to do with the officers named in the New Testament church. I showed that Campbell's church was out of harmony with this rule, for while the New Testament church had live apostles, prophets, high priests, and the seventy, all these were lacking in Campbell's church.

Rule 4. While I have no objection to this rule, it hits hard against Campbell's church which was started by Thomas and Alexander Campbell and differs in organization, faith, doctrine, and practice from the New Testament church.

Rule 5. We object to this rule because Christ is not the "creed" of the church. His teachings might be referred to as the creed of the church and to this we would not object. But Christ is not the sole object of faith, for while we have faith in Christ we also have faith in God, the Father of Christ, and the Holy Spirit.

Rule 6. We do not object to the fact that Christ is the head of the church, but we affirm that he is, and we insist that he should be so recognized. What we do object to is that Campbell's church claims to recognize Christ as its head, yet they set up an institution which later they called a church without any sanction or approval from Christ, differing widely from the New Testament church. That Alexander Campbell, not Christ, because the recognized head of this "new religious movement" in 1827 is shown by the following:

"Alexander Campbell soon became chiefly and prominently known as the recognized head of a new religious movement, the purpose of which was to restore primitive Christianity in all its simplicity and beauty."—Life of Campbell, page 25.

"Doctor Campbell is among the eminent citizens of the United States, . . . the Head and Founder of one of the most important and respectable religious communities."—Professor Richardson, vol. 2, p. 548.

That Christ was ignored by Thomas Campbell so that neither a message or messenger from Christ was wanted by him or his followers, we read:

"We want no new message from the skies, no ambassadors from Christ. In short there is no need to have men among us professing to be called and sent by God."—Christian Baptist, p. 21.

In the New Testament church men were called and sent by Christ, but in the above statement by Thomas Campbell he says that "there is no need to have men among us professing to be called and sent of God."

Rules 7 and 8. We will consider these two together. Rule 7 asks us to recognize the "ecclesiastical organization of the New Testament, to which we do not object, but in Rule 8 we are asked to "acknowledge only those apostles who were made ambassadors by his personal selection, and upon whom alone he conferred the authority to bind and loose in the kingdom of heaven." Mr. Bridwell, during the discussion, repeatedly claimed that there were only twelve apostles. I asked him repeatedly before the audience to give me the names of those whom he claimed to be apostles but he always refused to do so. I showed from Matthew, chapter 10, the names of the first twelve apostles and then after Judas had fallen from his office I showed from Acts, chapter 1, how Matthias was selected to take the place of Judas. In Acts, 13th and 14th chapters, Barnabas and Paul were called to be apostles, and still later in Galatians 1:19 James, the Lord's brother, is referred to as an apostle, making at least sixteen apostles in the New Testament, which is four too many for Mr. Bridwell's position.

Rule 9. To this rule we have no objection but we do object to Campbell's church claiming to "proclaim the identical message that was proclaimed by apostles and apostolic men" and then refuse to accept the doctrine of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost as was practiced in the 8th and 19th chapters of the Acts of the Apostles; also they object to the manifestations of the Spirit in tongues and prophecies.

Rules 10, 11, 12, and 13. To these rules we have no objection, but we do object to the disciples of Campbell claiming to observe all the ordinances of the New Testament when, at the same time, they refuse to believe and practice the laying on of hands for the conferring of the Holy Ghost. Also they reject the anointing of the sick with oil as stated in James 5:14. "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." Also the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick as stated by Christ in Mark 16:18, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

Mr. Bridwell, claimed that apostles only had the right to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but when I showed that Ananias laid hands on Saul and that Ananias never was an apostle, Bridwell was silent.

I then asked that as he claimed that apostles only had the right to lay hands on those baptized for the conferring of the Holy Spirit, why they did not have apostles in their church for that purpose now. Strange to say, that while in Rule 13 Mr. Bridwell claims that the church to-day should offer the same promises to the believer, yet no church opposes the signs following the believer as stated by Christ in Mark, chapter 16, more strongly than do these assumed followers of Christ. Mr. Bridwell claimed that the church of the New Testament was not organized until on the day of Pentecost, but he could find no scripture to prove his assertion. I disproved the position of Mr. Bridwell when I showed from Acts, chapter 1, that the followers of Christ met together for prayer meeting in an "upper room" and before they separated they turned the prayer meeting into a business meeting and elected Matthias to be an apostle in the place of Judas. This argument he did not answer. When Mr. Bridwell could not find scripture to prove that the church was first organized on Pentecost, he quoted a statement from Parley P. Pratt, who was an apostle of the church from 1835 till 1844, where Pratt claimed the church was first organized on the day of Pentecost. I showed that Pratt was formerly a member of Campbell's church and that this was one of the false teachings received from it. Mr. Bridwell claimed that if a man was an apostle that he was inspired all the time and that Pratt's statement concerning the time the church was organized was true or that Pratt was not an apostle. In answer to this I showed that after Peter was an apostle, he cursed and swore and denied his Lord. Surely he was not inspired when he did this. I then called attention to the statement of Paul, "For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known." Paul only knew in part. Pratt only knew in part yet both knew many things and had some inspiration; neither was infallible.

On the question of the signs following the true believers in Christ, I affirmed. Mr. Bridwell denied. He claimed that the Utah Mormon Church claimed that the signs followed them and that they had just as good a right to make such claim as the Reorganized Church had. I replied that he was mistaken in this, that a church that advocated polygamy to be a true doctrine and that Adam was a God could not be the people of God and be the true church that God would bless with the signs following. He also claimed that the Christian Science Church claimed healings but I showed that they did not believe in, or practice, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, neither the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, therefore were not the true church.

When Campbell's church was on trial Mr. Bridwell argued that the Campbells had the right to organize the church without revelation from God. He denied that the church of Christ ever went into an apostasy, yet claimed that the Campbell's restored the church. I showed that if there never was an apostasy of the church there could not be a restoration by the Campbells. The word rock in Matthew 16:18 came up for consideration. I claimed that the word rock as here used meant the revealed truth that Jesus was the Christ. Mr. Bridwell seemed very much surprised at this, but that was not the only time he was surprised. He tried to show that my position was in conflict with the statement of Joseph Smith as found in the Life of Joseph the Prophet, by Tullidge, page 414, but I showed that he misrepresented Smith, as Smith and I were in agreement.

The writer of the article in the Christian Standard says: "Mr. Bridwell showed that the apostle contradicted the prophet." Had he told the truth about it he would have said that Mr. Bridwell tried to show a contradiction between Curtis and Smith, but utterly failed so to do. We were not surprised to hear Mr. Bridwell making objections to some of the revelations of Joseph Smith, for he not only objected to Smith's revelations but to all revelations since Christ. This position would destroy the book of Revelation by John. Jesus said: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you, for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."—Matthew 7:7, 8.

We prefer to believe Christ. That Jesus had not revealed all things to his disciples, but promised them revelations through the Holy Spirit, we read: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."

In proof of what was here intended we read of the wonderful demonstration of the power of God on the day of Pentecost, of the four daughters of Philip who prophesied, and of the speaking in tongues and prophesying of the new converts whom Paul baptized and conferred the Holy Spirit upon by the laying on of his hands. (Acts 19.)

Is it any wonder then that Paul said: "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. (1 Thessalonians 1:5.)

The Saints of latter days can truly testify to similar blessings now, but as neither Campbell nor his followers have been in touch with God or his gospel, we are not surprised to know that they think that God does not manifest himself now.

Priesthood

A ministry called of God by revelation and ordination to the different offices in the priesthood is all clearly set forth in the scriptures, but Mr. Bridwell and his brothers have only a call and ordination from the so-called Christian church which admits that they have never heard from Christ since their church was started by the Campbells. Paul was inspired when he said: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears." Heaping to themselves teachers is not in harmony with the scriptures which provide that: "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5: 4.) Jesus said: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."—Matthew 9: 37, 38.

Barnabas and Paul were called and sent by the Holy Ghost which said: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts 13: 2. Acts 14: 4 shows their call was to the apostleship. God's work is and should be carried on the same way to-day.

That there was priesthood in the church years after the ascension into heaven is shown by the Apostle Peter's letter written A. D. 60 as follows: "Ye also, as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 2: 5. Again: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people."—Verse 8.

As Campbell's church is in opposition to all this, it cannot be in harmony with the New Testament church.

Book of Mormon

On this subject the writer in the Christian Standard says: "Mr. Curtis affirmed that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and is entitled to the respect and belief of all Christians. He seemed rather timid about plunging into this subject, confining himself to the very vague and indefinite argument from scriptural prophecies of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon." The reason I confined myself to the scriptures so closely was that we had agreed that the King James translation of the scriptures should be the standard of evidence in the discussion. The scriptures clearly set forth the coming forth of such a "book" as the Book of Mormon, so I used these prophecies and showed their fulfillment. If I was wrong in my interpretations Mr. Bridwell should have shown my error, but no, he passed up the prophecies, no doubt, because he could not meet the arguments made therein.

The Spalding Romance was mentioned by Mr. Bridwell as being the origin of the Book of Mormon, but when I showed that the Spalding manuscript was still in the hands of Spalding's relatives in 1834, which was four years after the Book of Mormon was published, he dropped this Spalding theory as if it had been a hot poker. The Spalding story has been exposed so many times that D. H. Bays, representing Campbellism, said: "The Spalding story is a failure. Do not attempt to rely upon it—it will let you down. The entire theory connecting Sidney Rigdon and the Spalding Romance with Joseph Smith in originating the Book of Mormon must be abandoned."—Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, p. 25.

Mr. Bridwell's claim that the Israelitish origin of America was taken from books on archæology alone, proved a failure when I showed from the scriptures many passages, showing the scattering of Israel into all the world, their going over the sea, and finally their being gathered back into their own land in latter days. On the last proposition affirmed by Mr. Bridwell that "the Bible is the complete and final word of God to man, and contains the only authoritative rule of faith and practice for the government of all Christians," I showed that the Bible did not contain all that God had revealed unto man. That Philip's four daughters prophesied, (Acts 21: 9) yet not one word of what they said is recorded in the Bible. The new converts in the 19th chapter of Acts "spake in tongues and prophesied" but not one word of what they said is to be found in the Bible.

Mr. Bridwell admitted these and other prophecies, such as on Pentecost and in Acts 10: 46 where the Spirit was poured out on the Gentiles and they "spake with tongues, and magnified God."

Mr. Bridwell's answer to these facts was that I would first have to show that these prophecies were worth recording. This was the climax of absurdity. The idea of a revelation from God to man not being worth recording is so weak and was so weak an argument that all, or most all present at the debate, could see that he had failed to show that the Bible "contained the complete and final word of God to man."

In addition to the above I showed from Revelation 11 that two prophets were yet to prophesy at Jerusalem just before the second coming of Christ. The ground covering the differences between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the church calling itself the "Christian Church," "Churches of Christ," or "Disciples of Christ," was quite generally covered in the debate.

In the closing paragraph of the article in the Standard a statement is quoted from Mr. C. A. Breece in which he says that the "Mormons are now corralled." Well, if we are the people referred to as being corralled we have this to say, that the "corral" is so big that we have perfect freedom to carry on our work and preach and baptize in the community where the debate was held. I baptized two fine young men from different families at the close of the debate, and had a nice crowd of nonmembers at our services after the debate was over.

Mr. Bridwell is a pleasant man to meet in discussion, and splendid order was had all the time during the discussion. The people of the community treated us kindly and we think much good was accomplished by the discussion.

Brother F. F. Wipper acted as my moderator and rendered valuable assistance.

Yours for the truth, J. F. CURTIS.

Council Bluffs

President Floyd M. McDowell attends home-coming.

From the warm breezes of California or Florida climate to near zero weather has been our experience in the last week, and we still are experiencing a cold spell. This sudden change has caused much sickness, yet the Saints have largely escaped from anything of a serious nature.

The gathering at the home-coming of the branch was not all that was expected on account of the day being quite rainy and unpleasant. Elder F. M. McDowell gave two earnest talks at the regular services, and two at special services, which occupied his time and strength to the utmost. We were glad to see our brother and to note his enthusiasm in regard to his special work. The Saints would welcome him at any time when he can make us a visit.

The conference of the district will meet in the city Thursday, the 28th inst., to continue in session till over Sunday.

The business session is to be held Thursday evening. It is expected that there will be present the district officials here, and from the Fremont, Little Sioux, and Gallands Grove Districts, also Brothers J. F. Garver and C. F. Putnam, of the missionary force. A number of priesthood lectures are to be given during the time of the conference by Elder Garver. Arrangements have been made to care for the visiting Saints at the homes of the Saints of the city.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held last Wednesday night, at which time the departmental organization number four was adopted to govern in branch matters during the year, and those who were selected for cabinet positions are working on the program of work to be carried out. Elders O. Salisbury, H. H. Hand, and George Beaty were selected as the branch presidency, with James J. Hartnett as secretary. Brother Arthur Rasmussen was elected Sunday school superintendent, Brother Clarence Skinner as Religio superintendent, Sister May Skinner as director of music. Those in charge of the three missions are M. A. Smith, at Belmont; O. A. Currie, at Riverside; and Charles Nolan, at Orchard Heights. These men were associated with helps in the various departments, as follows: Sister Whitzel, at Belmont, as Sunday school superintendent, and Brother F. C. Fullberg as Religio superintendent; while at Riverside Sister Vinnie Hatch was elected Sunday school superintendent, and Brother H. M. Kerns as Religio superintendent. We are looking forward with hopes that the quality of the work done will be of a more spiritual nature, and more fully "perfect the Saints," as the first duty of those who hold a gift from Christ.

Preparations have been made for the holiday entertainment, and the necessary practice is occupying the attention of some of the workers.

The budget for the coming year has been approximately fixed at $3,200 for all departments of the work in all the places of worship. The budget fixed for last year quite nicely covered the expense, except in some emergency cases, which we are hoping will be met before the coming of the year. Brother Stephen Jacobson has been selected from among the deacons as the financial clerk.

Good attendance at the services of late indicate an increased interest.

Over Forty-Nine Years of Faithful Service

On the 22d of September, 1922, Elder G. W. Wilcox passed to his reward. His faithfulness to humanity, and especially to those in the church, has been of unmeasurable value. He was not a fluent speaker, but was a powerful man in the Christian characteristics prominent in his life. It can truthfully be said of him that he added strength to the cause of righteousness, for many a young man in the church has received counsel which has tided him through places of temptation.

As one that has known this brother almost a lifetime I feel his power lay in his humility, his faith, and sincerity. These gave expression in acts which made for good. During his ministry the spirit of healing followed his administration.

For many years he was called upon to preside in various places in branch work. Many were called to the ministry and were spoken to through our brother and will testify of the genuineness of these messages. He possessed great sympathy for mankind in their struggles. Two of the prominent characteristics of his life were that in a difference with others his attitude was always kind; he seemed to fear that their wrong viewpoint would hurt them in some way. Again, if a mistake was made upon his part no sacrifice was too great for him to make to make wrongs right.

He suffered intensely for one and a half years upon his bed. He stated to his wife that his suffering was greater than he could bear and he was willing to give up everything but the gospel and a hope of the resurrection.

"Our brother in the one great cause,
Your goodly works remain.
Memories of thy faithful life
Added strength and faith supply,
God's truth to still proclaim.

"We honor here thy splendid name;
And guard thy patient sowing.
May evil tares of sin and strife,
Worldly care or pride of life,
Never check its growing."

WILBUR F. YATES.

San Francisco, California

Quite a number of the Saints from distant points are visiting our branch of late. Among those we met Brother and Sister Emil Buline, from Chicago; Sister Hellen Goff, from Kansas City, who is attending the University at Berkeley, California; Brother and Sister W. H. Owens, from Illinois; and Walter Diefendorf, from Kansas City, who is in the navy but found his way to church to associate with the Saints.

At our late sacrament meeting we had an attendance of fifty-six members. Seventeen testimonies were given and four prayers. It was a good spiritual meeting enjoyed by all.

Last Friday the churches of the city adopted what they termed "Home Visitors' Day." All the different churches united in calling on every family in the city and inviting them to attend church the following Sunday. Catholics, Jews, Protestants, and Latter Day Saints all united in the effort. Our committee consisted of six members and they made seventy-three calls. Under instructions all visited were invited to attend any church they wished so long as they went to one of them Sunday. What the result was the writer does not know but our little church was not crowded with strangers. Cards were signed by those called on stating number in family and what church favored, if any. These were turned in at headquarters and we may hear more from them hereafter.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

New Church at Wyeville, Wisconsin

After much consecrated, concentrated effort on the part of the members of the branch and with the encouragement and good will as well as financial assistance of many that are not members, the new church building here is nearing completion. Although the basement is not completely finished, by a special effort the past two weeks it was made ready for a chicken pie supper and sale by the ladies' aid, assisted by the Oriole girls who, dressed in their uniforms, waited on the tables and conducted a successful candy booth. The affair was a decided success, the proceeds amounting to over $150. Considering the fact that Wyeville is only a village of four or five hundred inhabitants and that the active membership numbers about forty, it is significant of the friendly feeling of the community and of the truth of the promise God has made to bless those who try earnestly to do his will.

Wyeville is a small railroad terminal located three miles south of the village of Valley Junction where the Evergreen Branch sprang up, thrived, and eventually became extinct. A few Saints remained and were brought the gospel occasionally by missionaries traveling through this part of the State. Among them were Elder Leonard Houghton, whose inspiring sermons have done much to further the work here, and Elder Erwin Lenox, whose untiring efforts as district president furnished the initiative and under whose supervision the branch was organized April 6, 1921, at the old church building at Valley Junction.

With the consent of Bishop McGuire and the approval of the few remaining members of the old branch the old building (which was valued at $300 where it stood) was torn down and moved to Wyeville where, thanks to the counsel and excellent ability of Elder Leroy Colbert, Bishop's agent of the Northern Wisconsin District, three choice lots were purchased at a figure $200 less than they could have been obtained for any private purpose.

A building committee of five was elected and Brothers C. O. Root and J. C. Pratt were appointed to solicit funds for the erection of a new church building. Approximately $1,300 has been pledged and contributions are still coming in, $700 of which was subscribed by members of the branch most of whom are wage earners, a few farmers on a small scale contending with light soil and the business depression that has bankrupt so many worthy farmers. Six hundred dollars has been pledged by nonmembers and business men of Wyeville and Tawas, Wisconsin, an enterprising little city of four thousand inhabitants ten miles west of here. An especially nice contribution was made by the Tawas Cash Mercantile Company and Doctor E. J. Taylor, both of Tawas.

Besides making a contribution of one hundred dollars, several of the brothers have put in weeks of work on the building. Brother C. O. Root, chairman of the building committee and our only member carpenter, deserves special commendation for the effort he has put forth, having put in weeks of his time, sacrificing wages that he would otherwise have earned that would amount to a large item.

By this united effort we will have a building that would be a credit to any village or city. The building is 48 by 28, built according to the plans made by Brother Henry C. Smith, church architect. The roof is dark green composition shingle and the exterior is finished in white, red, and green Kellastone. It is a beautiful building. The large, roomy basement has, besides the room for general meeting purposes, a storeroom, furnace room, and a kitchen in which the Ladies' Aid have installed a nice range, also bought at a bargain. The property when complete will be valued at about $6,500. It will carry an indebtedness of between $1,500 and $1,800 which, with the spirit that now prevails, and God's help, should be lifted in a few years.

Northeastern Kansas District Conference

The district conference at Topeka, December 1 to 3, was presided over by District President Elder J. A. Thomas, assisted by Elder W. H. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, (missionary), and F. G. Hedrick, of Atchison, Kansas, Bishop's agent. District Chorister J. G. Juergens had charge of the music. The attendance was small but the spirit of it along educational lines showed a desire upon the part of those present to cooperate with those at the head of the different departments of the church.

The opening session was held Friday evening. The mind of a missionary is naturally turned to lines of doctrine and in this we were not disappointed in hearing a doctrinal sermon on "Faith" by Brother Kelley.

Whatever the gospel was, it is; and what it is, it will be in the future. The gospel must go to every creature in all the world. Not a creature under the canopy of heaven can be saved without it. Notwithstanding there were many religious sects in Jerusalem, Jesus said to his disciples, "Go preach the gospel to every creature." Though there were rich congregations with trained choirs yet he gave this commission: "By grace are ye saved through faith." (Ephesians 2: 8.)

Grace means the favor of God. Christ died to save us. He came through grace and truth that we might be saved. Lucifer was a bright and shining light, an angel in high authority before God. He fell from the grace of God and drew a third part of the angels with him. Adam walked and talked with God in the Garden of Eden but he fell from the grace of God. Some of the disciples walked no more with Christ because he said, "He that eateth of this bread shall never die." There is only one power that can sever us from divine grace and that is ourselves.

The first session Saturday morning was a prayer service at nine o'clock. The keynote of this service was "our needs."

At ten o'clock after the organization of the conference had been effected, a letter from the general superintendent of the Department of Women called attention to various phases of the work under the new coordinating plan. This was read by Sister Emma Hedrick, district organizer. Brother Hedrick then introduced the departmental work under the new forms and did it so well that the conference voted to adopt Form 4, knowing that it could succeed only by working together for the uplift of humanity. It was a source of encouragement to the conference when Brother Ellis Short, sr., of Independence, Missouri, spoke highly of the step taken as a step in advance.

An entertainment was given in the evening, consisting of two plays. One was a one-act play, "The schoolmaster," by the Boys' Dramatic Club of the Religio. The other was a two-act play, "Not a man in the house," by the Women's Department. Songs and recitations were given between acts.

Sunday morning a young people's prayer meeting was held in charge of Brother Roy Whipple and Ellis Short, jr.

The correlating of handwork in the primary department with the lesson, and program work in Sunday school were subjects discussed at a round table held during the usual Sunday school hour in charge of Vera Goffe and F. G. Hedrick.

Brother Hedrick spoke on "The perfect law of liberty" at 11 o'clock. This subject was treated from a Bishop's agent's viewpoint. If carried out in practice as well as it was received in theory, we predict better things in the financial work of the district.

The sacrament service was held in the afternoon. Though there were no outward manifestations of the Spirit, yet the Saints were strengthened by the earnest testimonies borne as they renewed their covenants in partaking of the emblems. The hallowed influence of the spirit was present.

While a priesthood meeting was being held at the church the Department of Women were entertained at the home of Doctor Carr-Juergens. Doctor Florence Brown-Sherbon, of the University of Kansas, gave an address on "The Kansas Children's Code Law." Particular stress was laid on measures to be submitted to the legislature of 1923 for the protection of children. Our thanks to Doctor Juergens for such educational instruction to the woman voters of this district, who were fortunate enough to be present.

Brother W. H. Kelley preached the closing sermon of the conference and we parted hoping to meet again in conference capacity at Fanning, Kansas, May, 1923.

MRS. H. C. PITSEMBERGER, Secretary pro tem.

In a letter from Brother C. W. Hawkins, we are advised that the Relief and Service Department of San Jose, California, have raised $950 to assist the branch in taking care of their street paving assessment. This is another splendid example of what can be accomplished when a band of united workers concentrate their efforts upon a definite purpose. Nothing can hinder those who are willing to try.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

New York District Conference

October 21 and 22. Those familiar with this district will be glad to learn of pleasant and profitable educational sessions at Fulton. Weather was fine, attendance good, and spirit present excellent. The Good Templar Hall was hired by the Saints for the occasion. Three auto loads came from Niagara. Brother Stone was very much missed. The Fulton Saints have a strong love for him. Brother Weegar did admirably presiding over the conference, assisted by the other counselor, Brother Spillsbury, and Elder Robley, confirming us in the idea that he will make an able district president. The doctor we consider resourceful and consecrated, two very necessary qualifications for that office.

Two excellent papers on the question of what is necessary to hold our young people in the church were read by two young Niagara Saints, and discussed at length in the afternoon session. The Book of Mormon came in for its share of attention, Brother Ely who has read it twelve times starting the defense. The evening program in charge of our district superintendent of Sunday school, Brother Morris Whitehead, was varied, lengthy, and enjoyable, considerable of it being furnished by Fulton talent, arranged by the wife of Brother Russell Tallman.

After a good prayer service Sunday morning, and preaching by Elder Robley, the Women's Department program was put on, dealing much with the subject of an ideal home, spoken on by Elder Robley, a splendid paper on Women's Department history, work, and ideals was given by Sister Clara Bradt.

Duties of priest's office, and subject of tithing were presented and discussed among other things Sunday afternoon. The Fulton Saints entertained us royally, giving of their time and means unstintingly. Brother Jay Whitehead's family was increased to twenty on Saturday night, due to several autos from a distance putting up with them, and they are fourteen miles from Fulton. Brother Robley preached again in the evening, though many of us could not stay to hear him; due to distance we had to make to get home that night with children.

The True Christmas Spirit

We ought to observe Christmas in the spirit of true worship.

With Christmas Day only a few days ahead we wonder how many homes within the church will cherish the true spirit of this season. How many of us understand the real significance of this anniversary?

In the world this holiday means feasting and the "trading" of presents. The Literary Digest for December 16, 1922, contains a timely article entitled "The degradation of Christmas." Charlotte Perkins Gilman says that in no other religion has there been so lovely a vision as that presented by Christianity in its beginnings—"divine love coming on earth as a baby, a little child; that child growing up to teach of human unity, of God in man, of worship in love and service. It is more fitting that such a birthday should come to be the children's festival." But "pre-Christian origins of the annual celebration have come to dominate it. Santa Claus has replaced the memory of Christ. The birth of Jesus is celebrated by an orgy of commercialism."

Another writer asserts, "The orgy of stuffing which usually accompanies the celebration of Christmas is not only a crime against the stomach, which results in many avoidable disorders, but, more to the point, a waste of food needed by millions who are really hungry and lacking in Christmas cheer."

What is our attitude in the church to-day upon this problem of the proper observance of this day? Certainly the answer is readily found by concentrating our minds upon the great outstanding fact that it is the anniversary of the birth of that greatest character of all time—Jesus the Christ, the very Son of God.

His life was one of love, of service to his fellow men, of study, of prayer, of diligence. Let us resolve that ours shall be likewise.

Never before in the history of the Restoration has there been such a call for loyalty to Christ and to those whom he has placed in general charge of the work. No one within the fold will question the love of Christ, his life of sacrifice, his ever-present interest in the establishment of his Father's kingdom. We will do well if we remember during this happy season the fervent exhortation of the devoted Paul to a congregation of Saints of his day:

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God is."

Before we again celebrate this most significant anniversary will we present our bodies anew "a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God"? To do so is no more than our "reasonable service." Are we being snared in the entanglements of the vanities and vices of this godless world? Are we being "conformed to the world" or are we being "transformed" by the renewing of our minds so that we may discover what is the will of God concerning us; i. e., that each one may, under the guidance of that wonderful teacher, the Holy Ghost, find the place in the church where he can give his maximum service.

Let us, as we take upon ourselves the observance of the anniversary of the birth of our Lord, do so in the spirit of true worship "looking unto" that same Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

And to those who are under the fire of sore trial or a iction or discouragement, let us bid you at this Christmas time to "consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds."

R. S. SALYARDS, JR.

Plan to Raise $1,040,000 for 1923

I have been thinking of the financial condition of the church and wondering how it could be increased, so I have done a little figuring. These figures may not be exactly correct, but they will give an idea.

There are about 100,000 members in the church. Suppose three fifths are children and people who cannot earn anything. That would leave 40,000. Suppose one half of those could not give anything. We still have 20,000 who can contribute. I believe there are 20,000 members who are able to give one dollar a week and not miss it. Let us see: 20,000 members, $1 a week, $20,000 a week. One million forty thousand dollars a year! Can it be done? Oh, yes, it can, if we are as much interested in the thread of the gospel as we would be in something we wanted; and we should be more interested in the gospel than anything else. If we wanted to buy a piano or a phonograph or some other article, on the installment plan at one dollar a week, we would find a way to do it. I know families who spend more than one dollar a week for story papers.

I once attended an ice cream social and the value of the pop consumed there would have been sufficient to keep a missionary in the field for a month. We can cut out many things that we want, but do not need, so we could give one dollar a week. Of course tithing must be paid first.

Dear brother and sister, will we do it for the year 1923? I am a poor man; all I have is what I earn with my hands, but I am willing to give one dollar on New Year's Day and one dollar each week for one year if God spares my life. Will you do the same? Come, all ye Saints of God, let us flood the Bishop's office each week with envelopes containing one dollar. You will never miss it. Let the Bishop hear from 20,000 of us for 1923 so at the end of the year instead of a deficit there will be a reserve fund. Seek first the kingdom of God, and he will help you to establish your own kingdom, the home.

"JESUS IS COMING"

"When I come," said Jesus, "shall I find faith on the earth?" Faith will be found in those who are faithful in keeping the commandments of God, among which is "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which are God's."

One tenth of our increase belongs to God. January will be inventory month. You can secure a blank from your local branch solicitor to assist you in computing the tithe.

News From Hilo, Hawaii

Christmas is drawing nigh, but in Hawaii we have no frost and snow to give us warning. No sleigh bells here to help make the yuletide cheery. Neither are we worrying about the shortage of fuel and heavy clothing to keep us warm, so in reality that loss is really our gain. While our many friends on the shores of Lake Huron and Lake Michigan are busying themselves keeping the furnace filled we are walking amid the ferns and flowers beneath the semitropical sun.

Because of the shortage of men in the field we are not able to extend our missionary work as we would like, but we trust that the time will come when more men here will be devoting their entire time to the prosecution of the missionary work. Brother Prescott Foo is now devoting his whole effort among the Chinese in Honolulu with the assistance of Elder G. J. Waller and other local associates.

Hilo was much favored a short time ago by a brief visit from Elder Waller. He was not with us long, but it does not take him long to leave good words of encouragement and instructions. A meeting was arranged for the afternoon of his visit and he delivered a splendid and beneficial discourse to the many Saints who attended. We hope that he will be able to pay us another such visit ere long.

Believe that as a people God is blessing us daily to the fullest extent of our worthiness. God often is manifest in our midst but Satan comes also. The holidays are now here and with them come many snares of that evil one. Our hope lies largely in the young. They seem able to withstand the blasts of the storm of life better than many of our older members in this particular branch. Our Thanksgiving service almost belonged to the young.

We wish a very Merry Christmas to our many brethren on the mainland.

Very sincerely,

GOMER J. REEVES.

The Bishopric Appointment of Agents

To the Saints of the Northeastern Nebraska District: Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder B. M. Anderson as Bishop's agent of the Northeastern Nebraska District to succeed Brother Jay Leeka, resigned.

We consider ourselves fortunate in having secured the consent of Brother Anderson to occupy in this position and feel sure that his wide business experience will commend him to the confidence and gain the financial support of the Saints.

We appreciate the work which Brother Leeka has done in the interests of this department and regret that because of his increased business responsibilities he finds it necessary to discontinue his services as Bishop's agent.

To the Saints of the Saint Louis District: Brother W. L. Wehrli has resigned as Bishop's agent account of moving to Independence. After due consideration Brother Edward C. Bell, 2817 University Street, Saint Louis, Missouri, has agreed to accept the office. His appointment will therefore take effect January 1, 1923.

Since leaving the district Brother Wehrli has been looking after the work from Independence. He has been diligent in service and we regret to lose his official connection with the work of this department.

Brother Bell needs no introduction to the Saints of the Saint Louis District. His past connection with the work of the bishopric and his active interest in church work well qualify him for the work he is now taking up.

To the Saints of the Pottawattamie District: Brother J. A. Hansen who has served for a number of years as Bishop's agent of your district has asked to be relieved so that he might have more time for his pastoral duties.

Brother T. J. Smith, 100 South Main Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa, has been appointed to assume the office January 1, 1923.

Appreciation is expressed for the faithful services of Brother Hansen and for the support you have given him. We are sure you will also find Brother Smith a faithful servant and we solicit your confidence and support in his behalf for the welfare of the work we love so much.

BENJAMIN R. McGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Our Departed Ones

BROWN.—Orville Brown was born November 19, 1853, in Kentucky. Married Charlotte Swartz in January, 1877. They had one son. Baptized July 16, 1914. Died December 7, 1922. Leaves his wife, one brother, and three sisters. Funeral in charge of C. N. Mayman. Sermon by J. W. Metcalf.

WILCOX.—G. W. Wilcox was born at Antwerp, Jefferson County, New York, February 15, 1850. Baptized July 13, 1873. Ordained teacher January 15, 1892. Ordained priest, September 11, 1897. Ordained elder April 10, 1899. Died after an illness of one and a half years, September 22, 1922, having spent forty-nine years of faithful service in the church. Funeral at Spokane, Washington.

ELLISON.—Alma Ellison, son of Isaac and Sinda Clark Ellison, was born March 27, 1840, in Pike County, Illinois. Moved to Pottawattamie County, Iowa, in 1850. Later moved to Harrison County, Iowa, and then to Lamoni in 1895. Married Sarah M. Runyan, August 24, 1862. Baptized July 19, 1863. Ordained priest April 3, 1870. Died suddenly at his home in Independence, Missouri, December 5, 1922. Funeral from the home in charge of Joseph Luff. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Leaves wife, one brother, and three sisters.

Miss June Whiting of Graceland faculty will render "The Famous Mrs. Fair," as a full evening's entertainment at the Stone Church Religio, Friday evening, December 29. Sister Whiting has delivered this play at several points and it is reported as enthusiastically received. The study of dramatics, especially educational dramatics, is being considered at various places.
