. . . It grieves me to think I am not bubbling over all the time with something to say, as I used to be, but I suppose that is because youth and vigor have gone from me and I sit with the silence all about me. I know that I love the Lord just as well as ever, and that I am just as firm in the faith. Yet there come times when I get a bit cold or dreary in my own mind and then I must recount my blessings to cheer myself up, and seek to gladden my heart in the love of God and his goodness.

But, sister mine, let me tell you, that this earth life is so constituted that it blends with and partakes of the heavenly life, and when one is shorn of an object upon which to lavish the natural, earthly love, and by which to be loved in return, the wings are clipped a bit, upon which the higher, purer love mounts upward.

Marriage is indeed ordained of God, and for a higher and holier purpose than many recognize. It is to keep the incense of love ever burning on the altar of the heart. The little ones that are given, bring with them such an atmosphere of purity and innocence that the world would become defiled indeed without them. The blessed little children! What a ministry is theirs, to soften and beautify, and how well they discharge it!

. . . I feel joyous and happy most of the time, but sad and sorrowful at other times. I try not to let those latter moods last but a short while, and so life runs on, for the most part, in an even tenor, peaceful and content, while I await the last call. I do not have a hard thought or feeling against anyone that I know of. I sometimes think my lack of great emotion is given of God for my peace of mind, but there are times when I wish I could shed tears as I used to do. But the Lord knows my life and my desires. His will be mine.

I have tried to call to mind some instances of experience which I have not already written about, but have not so far succeeded—that is, instances that would be of benefit to the sisters' work and be of interest. I pray that God will bless the workers all over the church. My, how the work has grown! It is so different from what it was in "my day." I can scarcely keep pace with it!

Lovingly and trustingly,

EMMA B. BURTON.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XI

State and County Government

I. County and Town Government

1. Three types of local government.
2. Counties.
 - a. Extent of local self-government in America.
 - b. The county board and other county officials.
3. The American township.
4. Double duties of town and county officials.

II. The State Legislature

1. Its importance, powers, and restrictions.
2. Organization.
3. How a bill becomes a law.
4. Limitations, general defects, and remedies.

III. State Administration and Courts

1. The governor.
 - a. Importance.
 - b. Administrative control.
 - c. Powers.
2. Organization of the State administration.
 - a. Superintendents, commissions, and boards.
 - b. Centralized and decentralized systems.
3. State courts.
 - a. Judges and sessions.

IV. Fundamental Laws and Sphere of Activity

1. Sphere of State action.
2. Classes of duties performed by the State.
 - a. State and local government.
 - b. Constitutional rights of the individual.
 - c. Vast scope of the private laws of the State.
 - d. The system of state courts.
 - e. Administrative work.
3. Legislation.
 - a. Uniformity and diversity.
4. The character of a state constitution.
 - a. Its relation to the national Constitution.
 - b. Its adoption and amendment.

5. The contents of our state constitution.
 - a. Need of continual amendment.
 - b. Bills of rights.
 - c. Miscellaneous provisions.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. "What is this thing we call democracy?" by Doctor Frank Crane, in Red Cross Magazine, November, 1919.
2. "American political ideals," speech by Hon. Garland Pollard, LL. D., former Attorney General of Virginia, on the Chautauqua platform, June, 1921.
3. Subjects for papers:
 - a. Relation of county government to public health.
 - b. Relation of county government to education.
4. Give a report of the work of the Children's Code Commission in your state legislature.
5. Send to your Secretary of State for the State Manual.
6. Do you think the salaries of your state officers are sufficient? Give reasons.
7. Have you a county nurse? What has been accomplished through that office?
8. Have you a county home demonstrator? Tell of the work.
9. What do you think of the county unit school system?
10. Give the names of your governor, state senator, and state representative.

DORA YOUNG.

The Rights of Children

One thing noticeable about children to-day—they expect much more than did the boys and girls of former years. Where once the heart's desire was a modest doll filled with sawdust, now the prayer is for a boldly painted doll of lifelike proportions, that can walk and talk. Instead of a little red wagon, boys now ask for a motor car and hope for an airplane.

They are not born with these desires—the fault is that of parents—not, perhaps, sir and madam, of you, but of your neighbors who lavish gifts on their children and thus set the pace. What might be done is to interest the youngsters in making toys for themselves, leading them to take especial pride in their craftsmanship. Boys used to value above all things the wheels off the old baby buggy, out of which they would make a wagon of their own. Nowadays even kites may be bought ready made, and the nearest many boys come to the real thrill of making something is from fastening together the materials of a kite, furnished from a factory.

So many parents are too much concerned with the affairs of the grown-up world to guide their children in simpler ways. To try to make up for this spiritual neglect by giving them whatever it comes into their little heads to ask is not fair. Time has shown that the love and respect of a child cannot be held by mere gifts and free indulgence.—Editorial in Omaha Bee.

This Day

This day is like you, dear child,
Like your moods of deepest gray,
When the cares of the world onto you are hurled,
And sorrow seems here to stay.

This day, too, is like you, dear child,
With your wonderful golden hair
And your eyes of brown, and your little blue gown,
And you laugh like the brook's rippling air.

—Florence G. Loomis.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Curtis-Bridwell Debate

The inclosed clipping from the Cassopolis (Michigan) Vigilant for July 13 will be of interest concerning the outcome of the debate between John T. Bridwell, of the Christian Church, and J. F. Curtis.

The editor of the Vigilant assumes a neutral position, but the publicity received through this medium even from a neutral standpoint is after all quite favorable to our interests. Bridwell's friends were quite outspoken in their belief that their champion would floor our man without any trouble. When it is considered that we were literally forced into this discussion, and that therefore our battle was purely a defensive struggle, a report such as this one practically concedes a victory, for it admits that we were not defeated in the conflict.

However, when the sentiment of the community is canvassed it will be readily conceded that Brother Curtis gained the laurels for the cause of truth. The writer bases this conclusion upon the fact that many of the opposition are circulating an alibi to the effect that their man was no match for our man, not being as well posted. But our readers should know that Bridwell is the much-touted champion of the anti-Mormon forces.

Moreover, when even the chairman of the meetings personally compliments our man because of his able argument in favor of the Book of Mormon, despite the bitter attack of the opposition, it should be considered very favorable indeed for the cause of truth which we represent. Bridwell did his best to discredit the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and hurled a broadside of opinions from the most recent publications on American archæology, but unfortunately for our opponent, although the explosion made a noise all right, the solid shot scattered so badly because of the diversity of opinion that very little if any of it actually hit the object aimed at. Most important of all, the standard of evidence was the Bible, and this standard was practically ignored by Bridwell, to his sorrow. The chairman being a lawyer, and accustomed to analyzing evidence, readily noted that the defense of Curtis was based upon the Bible, and that the attack of Bridwell failed to hit the point. Following the discussion on the last proposition, the chairman in his closing remarks urged all of the community to bury their prejudices, and not to deny revelation.

Bridwell contended that the Bible as it is, is the Bible as it was, and that it is as perfect as God wants it to be, and that nothing more was to be revealed, and then to hear the chairman admonish the people not to reject revelation after all of the discussion was in, is virtually to hear him declare that Curtis was right.

It was indeed very trying for Bridwell to have Curtis read from the Millennial Harbinger an admission by Alexander Campbell (1842, volume 6, p. 514):

"To rely upon the Scriptures, or to enter the arena with only a Bible in our hands, would be foolish and unwise; inasmuch as it is confessed at the outset that from the Bible the whole Christian institution cannot be learned."

The founder of this church unintentionally admits the necessity for more light, but rejects the principle in the tenets of his institution.

Bridwell devoted considerable time and effort in his last discussions to prove that the Bible has come down to the present time through connected links of ancient manuscript, thus preserving its original purity. His principal authority for this position was the work of a Professor McGarvey. It was pointed out by Brother Curtis that this man was connected with the Disciples, and naturally would be favorable to their views. It was claimed by Bridwell that the Peshito, a Syriac version of the Bible, was written in the days of those baptized by the apostles. A certain class of authorities was quoted to prove this position, and thus an effort was made to establish the purity of the present text. Curtis suddenly produced evidence in the form of a quotation from a very recent authority (Dictionary of the Bible, James Hastings, M. A., D. D., vol. 4, p. 740) to prove that the Peshito did not originate until 411 A. D. This surely was a destructive explosive, judging from the bewildered look of our opponent.

Bridwell very elaborately described the growth of revelation. He claimed that the patriarchs lived in the starlight period, the followers of Moses in the moonlight stage, and those in the days of Christ lived in the sunlight age. Curtis reviewed these descriptions, and finally became curious to know just what the Disciples had to-day, denying as they do present revelation. Curtis then declared that they did not have starlight, moonlight, sunlight, nor any other kind of a light but Campbell-light.

Bridwell supplied another description of the growth of revelation by comparing the periods of the past to the description given by Christ, namely: "First the blade, and then the ear; then the full corn in the ear." Of course the full corn was pictured as the perfect revelation in Christ. Curtis replied by saying that if the coming of Christ represented the full ear of corn, there could be no more room for more corn, or mere revelation, and that this would be a most unfortunate predicament in the light of Bible facts that provided for more corn of revelation, and continued by telling of a report of an Arkansas corn crop by the natives: "The crop that year was a big one. There were two stalks to a hill, and two ears to a stalk, and still there was more corn, and there not being enough room on the stalks, shelled corn was found at the bottom of the stalks in gourds!"

The debate has advanced the cause of truth in this section of the country. Two young men were baptized the day following the close of the discussions, and more are to come.

FRANK F. WIPPER.

Clevenger-Clark Debate

A debate between Elder D. C. Clevenger and J. R. Clark, a Missionary Baptist, is over. It began July 4 and was unexpected to Brother Clevenger. He had begun a meeting on July 2 with a Mr. Davis, a Freewill Baptist preacher, who not being able to meet the proposition, ran this man Clark in on him. So Brother Clevenger drew up the proposition which read as follows: Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine, organization, and practice. D. E. Clevenger affirmed. Resolved, That the Baptist Church of Christ is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine, organization, and practice. Blank.

He never signed them, but was given his time, which he took up in crying "Joe" Smith and the Book of Mormon, using Beadle's history, which was defeated by Brother Clevenger in a very able way by using the court records and bringing the governor of Illinois and Jacob Gregg, sheriff of Jackson County, Missouri, and many others on the stand.

His argument against the Book of Mormon (Isaiah 29) was that it meant that Christ was to rise from the dead. "Truth shall spring out of the ground" he said referred to the returning blessings of God to Israel, and the fulfillment of his promise to Abraham, and their land yielding its increase. He said Ezekiel 37 did not mean books, but sticks, which argument was met by Smith's Bible Dictionary and many others. He never touched the organization of the church. Brother Clevenger proved that the gospel was taken from the earth and restored by an angel in 1830 to Joseph Smith, the prophet.

He tried to prove that Joseph Smith was not a prophet because he could not tell the future. It was met by a prophecy foretelling the Civil War and all other things coming to pass. He met that by saying that God would never make a full end of all nations.

Brother Clevenger had the ENSIGN showing where Clark had left this proposition with J. D. Curtis in Colorado, which Clark denied. But Brother Clevenger told him until he met the same proposition before this people or elsewhere, it stood as evidence against him, and the only way out of this was to meet J. D. Curtis. This man, J. R. Clark, will be found at Wewoka, Oklahoma, Seminole County, and will meet J. D. Curtis anywhere, so he says. I am sure that friends have been made here, and a bright prospect for labor.

Ever looking for the Giver of all blessings and the redemption of Zion that it shall continue to gather in, until the gospel of Christ shall have penetrated every heart and every nation, I remain.

Your sister in the faith,

SEMINOLE, OKLAHOMA.

MRS. D. C. CLEVINGER.

Cheerful Givers

Brother Frederick Ode, of Caldwell, Idaho, writes:

"Inclosed find draft for $520, $450 being tithing on farm. Tithing was already paid on the farm, but I sold it for $5,000 more than valuation which I had placed upon it in my inventory. One tenth of this, less the commission, together with $70 income since last settlement, makes up the inclosed check. I am eighty-four years old."

Sister Nellie Martin, of Perry, Iowa, shows her determination to do the thing that God requires of her, regardless of the attitude of others. She writes:

"I am at present paying the Lord off (back tithing) at the rate of $1 each week. If you fail at any time to get my weekly payments, you will know that I am away at school or at the bedside of some sick relative. When visiting in another city recently I was shocked at the attitude of two noble, talented young married women who took me to task. One said: 'Nell, you are nothing but a dunce. You pay tithing on every lesson, regardless of whether you have a decent dress or anything else. Now we have decided, since some of our head people travel, travel, travel, that we will not pay tithing to help them celebrate.' I said, 'Oh, I see. Well, in Perry town we have a different law governing us.' 'What's that? It is all the same church!' 'Yes, but up there we are under this law: "Pay ye your tithes to the men whom I have appointed."'"

Sister John A. Newman, of Milnor, North Dakota, shows her interest in the Lord's work by creating an opportunity to earn that she might give. She inclosed $40.55 which she earned by selling flower plants. She says:

"I raised some of the plants in my window real early and had a small hotbed and had good sale for them. I shall continue to do what I can for the good cause."

Our beloved Sister E. B. Burton, of Santa Ana, California, passes on to us her observation, which may explain why some are not able to assist in the Lord's work as they otherwise might. She says:

"While at Newport on July 4, I thought I saw the cause of the financial depression both in the church and with the working class outside. I was appalled to see how the ground was fairly covered with automobiles, and almost the whole distance to Balboa. The streets were lined on either side with them. On our return we met a steady line of them, like a funeral, the whole six miles. And that is the smallest watering place on the Slope, and a 'drop in the bucket' to what the others were. Almost every family now has one. They are very expensive and expensive to keep up. Because of automobiles many Saints have nothing with which to pay tithing. It looks as if we were going to run this country off the track."

Sister Henrietta Dahl, a nurse from Kansas City, having read in the HERALD that Brother and Sister Thorburn who are engaged in missionary service were willing to reduce their family allowance from $45 to $25 during the summer months, decided that she might also do something for the Lord's work and brought in her special free-will offering of $25.

May God graciously bless these willing hands and inspire many others. In the day of final accounts, when you and I appear before the judgment seat of God, we will be judged and rewarded for what we have done. There is perpetual joy in being associated with the doers.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

A Memorial Sunday Innovation at Providence

Sunday, May 28, was generally observed by churches of all denominations as Memorial Sunday. But since the doctrine and creed of the Reorganized Church is different from all others, we are at liberty and should present to the world our original ideas. In this instance, the idea originated with our pastor, Elder J. D. Suttill, and was carried to a successful conclusion under the direction of one of our priests, Edward A. Fox. Brother Fox is a master of detail and a tireless worker for the church.

The decorations were simple, but in excellent taste. American flags, ferns, wild flowers, and fresh-cut flowers were used discriminately against the walls of two-toned cream and buff, the decorative upholstery of forest green velours and two-toned reseda green carpet.

At the left of pulpit stood a large fourfold screen on which were pinned the photos of eighty-one deceased members of the branch.

The Providence Branch was organized May 17, 1869, and to date there are 140 known to have departed this life. The morning service was in memory of these departed members. During the service the names of these members were read by Priests Edward A. Fox and Edmund M. Brown, interspersed with a soprano solo, by Mrs. Cora Brown, and selections by the choir, Saints' Hymnal 207, 388, and 55, after which we were addressed by Elders J. D. Suttill and William Bradbury, followed by a selected reading by Miss Evelyn Robley.

In the evening at seven we had as our guests members of the Slocum Post G. A. R. Also members of the Slocum Relief Corps No. 6, Sons of Veterans, and the Allyn K. Capron Camp Spanish War Veterans. Our own Boy Scouts (and we are proud of them, too,) acted as ushers. This service was in charge of Elder William Bradbury, Past Commander Slocum Post G. A. R. Elder Bradbury was baptized January 17, 1869, ordained a deacon May 17, 1869, and to-day enjoys the distinction of having been associated with the church longer than any other living member of our branch. And we can truly say, "He has kept the faith." Our pastor, Elder Suttill, preached the sermon on "Loyal citizenship."

"Our church" is the theme with Elder Suttill at all times, and we could see that our veteran friends received the message cordially. Then followed a selected reading by Elder Bradbury and benediction. Thus passed a perfect Memorial Sunday. A day that will live forever in the minds of those present. A day that gave inspiration to greater service to the cause that is most dear to our hearts.

A Voyage of Life

The summer sun had long commenced its diurnal course and the people had gathered on the pier; some to take their departure for far-off lands, others to bid a parting farewell to their friends and relatives. High above the clattering of human voices is heard the loud blast from the iron throat, only to be followed by the thousands of voices in unison like a mighty magnified voice, "She's off!"

The inanimate giant begins to pulsate and throb into life, and from her stern the sparkling water is hurled into commotion. Slowly she churns her course until free from obstacles she quickens her speed and makes for the mighty ocean. Sweetly we glide over the trackless waters, and as a child in its mother's care we are rocked to shadowy shores of sweet memories.

Suddenly a dark cloud appears on the horizon and soon the peaceful waters are lashed into foam, by a furious storm. Higher and higher rise the watery mountains until with bated breath we await the consequences. The storm has reached its height, the waves are hurled against our trembling craft and the water sweeps over the deck, taking everything portable, in its way. The captain stands at his post and skillfully steers the steamer through the storm; aided by chart and compass. The storm is passed and we are made to appreciate more the quietude.

Away in the distance is seen a gray, cloudlike object which, as we near, takes shape, and transforms itself into an emerald isle, and our sea satiated eyes behold mother earth with delight.

The travelers soon hasten ashore and begin their evaluation of the first place of call. Some stroll along the seashore and see only sand and water; they walk into the woods and see trees; they ascend the mountains and see rocks, and as they walk the streets they breathe the stifling dust and behold mere antiquated buildings. Others gaze upon the luxuriant foliage; they ascend from the rich valleys to the gorgeous mountains; they hear the songs from feathery songsters, view the laughing cascades, talk to babbling brooks, and from the mountain they look out upon the magnificent scene and see the handiwork of God. The antiquated buildings link them to the heroes and heroines of the past who have made the present possible, and with the eyes of the seers they behold the future.

Other lands were visited with the same results. Some saw the exterior, the others saw into the heart of things. Each evaluated according to his capacity and development. Some lived their experiences in their lives and others said, "Oh, I've been there!"

Recently I talked to a man who had traveled very extensively and in the course of our conversation he made reference to his visit to France. While in Paris he met a fellow countryman who acted as guide and took him to many places of interest. Upon entering a large building the guide pointed to an old table upon which stood an old-fashioned inkstand. When asked what he thought of it, he replied, "Its very old, isn't it!" and made little further comment. The guide then mentioned its historical value; of the great treaties signed on it by world-famed men, with the very pens that lay upon the table. The crude, antiquated piece of workmanship became a living thing in the mind of my friend.

Few of us have gone on a sea voyage, perhaps, and have not visited the places of interest in other countries; however, we have all embarked upon the voyage of spiritual life. We have left the shores of mammon for the kingdom of God, but we are still far from our destination. Some of us have gone down in the storm and are wrecked; others have weathered the gale and are just drifting along, while others are standing by the wheel which the chart, i. e., Word of God, and compass, i. e., Spirit of Christ, manfully facing the storms and issues of the journey. Some of us have reached our first port of call, and walking along the shore can only see water, barren rocks, and relics of antiquity; while others descend the rich valleys of humility, ascend the mount of God, and viewing the tablets of antiquity see the treaties of God and men, and seek to govern their lives accordingly. Few of us appreciate our privileges and so some are living short of the high ideals which are born of the gospel of Christ. Few are able to evaluate the rich experiences which come to us and so some passing along become human derelicts. "We don't know where we're going, but we're on our way."

Since coming to America and attending Graceland College I believe I am better able to evaluate life. This fact, however, must be demonstrated in my life. It's not what I know, but what I am that counts. If education is to be of value, it must help us personify Christian character and prepare us for our life's work.

Some would have us believe that the only thing lacking to-day is education; but the very commercial and social vampires which are bleeding the nations are educated men. That scientific nation of Germany which was responsible for the twentieth century deluge testifies to this fact. If education alone would make the world better, then the people should be in every way superior to the generations of the past. Jesus said: "Iniquity shall abound." Is it so? Read your papers!

Moses was an educated man, but he found God on the lonely mountain and heard his voice in the burning bush.

That kind of education which enables man to find God, and gives expression in saintly character, is desirable.

Graceland College should furnish this, or it fails in the purpose for which it was dedicated. I cannot estimate the good that has come to me.

The religious education class offers much to the consecrated life that has been touched by the life of Christ, that has beheld God on the mount, and heard his voice in the burning bush.

Let preparation be our password!

WILLIAM PATTERSON.

A correspondent from Ontario, California, writes: "We are still trying to hold up the banner of King Immanuel. Eight were baptized recently. Quite a number of outsiders attend at times. We had an interesting program on Children's Day. All took an interest in learning their parts. The title was, 'Zion redeemed,' and I believe all enjoyed it. On July 4 the district met in Santa Ana Canyon, in an all-day picnic. We had for speakers, Elder A. C. Barmore and T. W. Williams. I am sure everyone enjoyed hearing them. We certainly miss Brother and Sister Tower and their two daughters, Zella and Lela, from our midst. Our numbers are not lessening, but rather are increasing by the eight who were baptized. May we not count so much by numbers but that every one may be filled with that zeal for the work, that each will strive to live worthy of the name of Saint."

Independence

President F. M. Smith left his office about a week ago for a month's trip north and east. He went via Lamoni, where he stopped a few days to meet with Graceland College faculty and attend to some other church matters.

The members of the Twelve are here and there throughout the country, most of them attending reunions. Brother Curtis has just concluded another debate in Michigan. Brother Gillen has been at Council Bluffs. T. W. Williams is rusticiating a few weeks at his home in Los Angeles, California. J. W. Rushton is attending summer school for a time in southern California.

A priesthood prayer service was held in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church last Tuesday evening, the welfare of the coming General Conference as it relates to the problems before the church being the theme. A very fine audience was in attendance, and fervent prayers continued for almost an hour, followed by a few testimonies. It was a profitable session.

Mrs. Maude C. Halley has been appointed to have charge of the Sunday school exhibit at the coming General Conference. The exhibit two years ago was very educational and it is hoped it can be materially increased in both scope and inspirational value this year. The general superintendent is publishing a call in this issue for exhibits from other schools everywhere.

Bishop B. R. McGuire is in Colorado where he has been for several weeks on church business.

The band concerts on Sunday evening preceding the preaching service on the lawn at the Stone Church are much appreciated. Their playing is so good and the music so well chosen that the service blends nicely into that which follows. Attendance has been good, last Sunday night the crowd practically filling the large number of seats provided, with autos full of people parked thickly around the sides. The capacity of the seats is estimated at 1,200. Elder Ammon White was the speaker, Bishop Bullard having preached in the church in the morning.

The radio sermon was by S. A. Burgess, the musical program by a sextet composed of Dorothy Case, Mary Curtis, Nellie Curtis, Ruth Nunn, Evan Fry, and Kenneth Morford. Next Sunday at 2 p. m. the program will be by the Moorman brothers, cornetists, with S. A. Burgess speaker. These are sent out on 360 meter wave length.

The Religios in Zion continue with lesson work and programs following throughout the summer, with attendance fair to good. The Stone Church Religio had as a program three reels of scenic motion pictures last Friday evening, shown on the lawn.

The Saturday evening motion picture programs under the auspices of the Stone Church Religio continue popular, being attended by not only our people, but many others. The subject for next Saturday evening is "The old nest," by Rupert Hughes, a high-class picture of nine reels.

A tennis tournament is in progress by the local athletic association, exciting much interest among the young people. It is in charge of G. S. Trowbridge.

On account of illness of the writer these items were somewhat curtailed last week and report of the city election omitted. The only proposition submitted to the voters to carry was that allowing a franchise to the natural gas company. The purchase and improvement of the fair grounds as a city park and the renewal of the franchise for the manufacturers of artificial gas were all defeated.

Brother R. T. Goullee, of London, England, artist and musician, indispensable in church work in England, visited our office recently. This is his first trip to America. He has been staying at the home of Bishop Roderick May.

The following have been appointed by the Presidency as a credential committee for the coming General Conference: Frank Russell, C. B. Hartshorn, P. G. Fairbanks.

The British Social League, composed of about 150 members, gave a reception to Bishop Richard Bullard and wife last Thursday evening. They sail for England in the early part of August, where Brother Bullard will labor in the interests of the church. A pleasant program was rendered, refreshments served, and games played. Brother Bullard was presented with a fountain pen and Sister Bullard with one of the popular pencils now in use. They attend the Onset reunion ere they proceed to England.

There are several organizations in Independence more or less loosely held together, similar in purpose to the British Social League mentioned above. They are not, as some suppose, to maintain or encourage exclusiveness, but rather have a social value in renewing old acquaintances and friendships while new ones are being established. When properly understood, the British Social League, the Michigan Association, the Iowa, the Minnesota, and other aggregations are sources of good, their annual or other meetings furnishing in a way the spirit of reunion and brotherly fellowship that should characterize Zion.

Recent word is to the effect that Bishop W. A. Blair, of Detroit, is quite seriously afflicted with a paralytic stroke.

Brother Frank Holmes, who was so sadly bereft in the recent passing of his brother Harry, expresses his gratitude to the many friends of Independence and Lamoni for their sympathy and assistance in his hour of need.

The large picture of the children of the cradle roll department in Zion was taken successfully and makes an imposing scene. It will be published later in the Sunday Kansas City Journal, probably within a month. A motion picture film was also taken and is being distributed (probably this week) all over the country by the Kinegram News Service. The General Sunday School Department has purchased a copy of the film and it will be available for those who wish to show it in their communities. It is about 175 feet in length. It is also planned to make slides in sections to show the entire "still" or panoramic view and send them out to the schools desiring to make use of them.

A party of four will sail from New York on August 1 for missionary work in Norway, composed of Elder Peter Muceus, of Lamoni; Elder E. Y. Hunker and wife, of Independence; and Elder Nels T. Hansen, of Council Bluffs. Elder Muceus spent fourteen years in that land with his family in mission work for the church, this time contemplating a shorter term of service and leaving his family in Lamoni. Elder Hunker spent two years in Graceland taking the course in religious education and other work. There he became acquainted with Sister Nellie Smith, daughter of Elder William C. Smith, formerly of Maine and now of this city, whom he married. The two have been in western Iowa for a little over a year, where he has been in missionary work. Brother Hansen is a new man of whom we have as yet learned but little, but expect much.

Those entering the Sanitarium for the week ending July 17 are as follows: Mrs. Grace Still, Mount Washington, Missouri; Oscar Engel, Port Huron, Michigan; Gertrude Gwinn, Blue Springs, Missouri; Mrs. Johanna Heman, Levasy, Missouri; Harvey T. Hite, Knobnoster, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Miss I. Booker, Mrs. J. W. Chapman, Mrs. Gladys Closson, Elmer L. Duncan, Mrs. Ella M. Halsey, Mrs. Anna Taylor.

Reunion at London, Ontario

The first annual reunion of the London District was held at Springbank Park, London, Ontario, July 1 to 10. The executive, appointed by the preceding conference in 1921, were approved and continued for the ensuing year: Charles Alford, president; J. Vasbinder, vice president; T. Timbrell, treasurer; and Elder F. Gray, secretary.

Owing to the change in the mission of Elder William Osler, the late incumbent as president of the London District, Elder Gray was left almost alone in caring for the spiritual part of the work until the arrival of Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths to assume control of the reunion.

There were present visitors from the Chatham and Toronto Districts, from Port Huron, Detroit, Sarnia, Windsor, and one brother all the way from California in his side car motorcycle—over four thousand miles purposely to attend the reunion of the London District Saints.

Brother Senman, who trained with some of our London boys after the adoption of the Militia Act some five or six years ago, was baptized by Elder Macgregor.

The reunion was attended throughout by the Boy Scout troop of the London Branch, under the scoutmaster, Elder Blanchard, and Chaplain Gray. Together with the Orioles and Girl Guides, who also assisted in various duties, these young people took alternate turns raising the flag each morning and lowering it during the evening.

The Nursing Guild, Number 1, had their hospital tent well equipped and ready to attend to any case of emergency which might occur during the reunion and we believe had the good will and best wishes of the entire camp.

Among the general church representatives were Sister Glines and Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, who were among the able, earnest speakers attending the reunion and district conference.

During the conference or last day of the camp services were two ordinations and one baptism.

The London district reunion fills a long felt want and we are assured that it will be essentially esteemed a success, spiritually, intellectually, and educationally, and in other ways.

The dining tent was annexed to the cafeteria, so that its patrons could sit at tables as near the serving counter as was practicable. These remained closed as much as possible, particularly the latter, during the services, so that none should be debarred from partaking of the spiritual feast which it was the first object of the reunion to provide and which we believe it has succeeded in doing.

P. H. PHILIPPIN.

North Dakota Reunion

This reunion was held at Fargo, or rather five miles west, on the premises of the Equity Packing Company, with whom arrangements were made to occupy some of their buildings, since the plant is not in operation at present.

Services opened Sunday morning, June 25, with prayer meeting at nine o'clock, Sunday school Children's Day program at 10.30, and preaching at 2.30 and 8.30.

The daily program was as follows, with some variations: Young people's prayer meeting at 8; general prayer meeting at 9, preaching at 10.45, departmental work at 2.30, recreation at 4.15, preaching at 8.30.

Due attention was given to the interests of the young people. Boy Scouts, Orioles, and Temple Builders each had their organization camp, and special meetings were arranged for them.

An excellent orchestra gave very acceptable assistance, and a very interesting program was given by the Women's Department, demonstrating certain features of their work.

Meals were served at very reasonable prices in cafeteria style by the Women's Department to those not providing their own. While the sisters worked under much disadvantage because of the lack of space and other inconveniences, yet satisfaction with their efforts was general, and those who so cheerfully gave their services deserve much credit.

There were present of the ministry: of the local brethren, Thomas Leitch, president of the North Dakota District; J. E. Wildermuth, missionary supervisor for North Dakota and Minnesota; Elmer Weddle, president of the Fargo Branch; F. E. Hammil, president of Dunn Center Branch; M. Rasmussen, assistant president of the North Dakota District; J. W. Darling, president of Dunseith Branch; George Lindsey, priest of Fargo; S. A. Davis, Frank Anderson, and Frank Spalding, priests; Chester Moffit, deacon, who did acceptable service as caretaker of the premises and policeman; John Thompson, elder, and William Baker, teacher. Visiting brethren were William Sparling, president of Minnesota District and of Minneapolis Branch, and J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa, special representative of departmental work.

There was one early morning prayer meeting for the young people accompanied by fasting, and several baseball and other games. One camp fire and weiner and marshmallow roast was held.

The spirit of the reunion was excellent. A very active interest was manifested upon the part of both young and old. The gift of prophecy cheered, counseled, and admonished the Saints, and some of the young were called to the work of the ministry.

While not very many nonmembers were in attendance, much good was received by the members. Two were baptized.

A resolution was adopted inviting the Minnesota Saints to unite with North Dakota in a joint reunion next year to be held at either Fargo or Moorhead, and the district officers and missionary supervisor were chosen a committee to make arrangements.

Local Priesthood at Eros, Louisiana, Are Busy

As the general missionary force of the church has been decreased and also because the missionaries could not fill all the openings in this part of the vineyard, the local priesthood have decided to fill all openings possible. Brother E. C. Larche and the writer on July 2 began a short series of meetings in a schoolhouse near Mount Pleasant, twenty-five miles from Eros. We have a brother and his family living there.

We began with only a small crowd, but they were very attentive. Soon the cry of "Mormons" was raised and we two Latter Day Saints, amateur preachers, felt small. But we decided to do what we could, so we began to tell them about the apostasy, restoration, and about the difference between our church and the one in Utah. When the people found out who we were, they were pleased with our preaching. Outsiders began to be interested. They would send their neighbors word about the meetings, and on the last night of our weak efforts, a lady who had been noted for her opposition to the church, asked us to come back in the midsummer and hold a ten-day meeting.

I left my Book of Mormon with a splendid young man, who expressed a desire to read it. I understand that Elders E. C. Larche and W. H. Fuller intend to begin a meeting at a church one mile from the city of Monroe in Louisiana. If any of the scattered Saints of any part of Louisiana want any preaching, write me. Or if any desire to locate in our branch, we would be glad to have them.

On our little missionary tour, we had a fish fry on July 4. Several families met on Horseshoe Lake, ten miles from Columbia, and the fish certainly did bite good.

Yours for the progress of the angel's message,

EROS, LOUISIANA, Route 3.

J. ERWIN PHILLIPS.

Onaway, Michigan

On June 10 and 11, the Northern Michigan District enjoyed its first two-day meeting since weather conditions have been favorable at Onaway.

A good many visitors from other branches were present. Among them were Patriarch G. W. Burt, wife and son Floyd, of Beaverton; Elder Allen Schreur, of Gaylord; Elder Leonard Dudley, of East Jordan; Elder Arthur Starks, of Boyne City; Elder Roy Kleckler, of Alanson; and Elders James Blackmore and David Holly. We enjoyed splendid discourses by each of them. They were all well blessed with the Holy Spirit and gave us some excellent counsel and advice.

Sunday morning the young people met at 7.30 for prayer meeting. We enjoyed a very spiritual meeting. This was followed by a general prayer meeting at 9 o'clock, in charge of Patriarch G. W. Burt and our district president, Arthur E. Starks. The Spirit was with us in abundance, the Saints being prompt in discharging their duties.

At 10.45 some very fine Children's Day exercises were thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Much credit is due those in charge of the same.

At 2.30 Sunday afternoon, five were baptized by Elder Starks. May many more be led to see the light and do likewise.

In the evening we heartily enjoyed a thirty-minute song service which was followed by a very instructive and spiritual sermon by Elder E. N. Burt, of Onaway.

The Northern Michigan district orchestra was well represented and willingly gave their best service to contribute to the success of the meetings. We feel sure that the Lord was pleased with the orchestra's organization about nine months previous, because of the wonderful progress it has made. We only hope we may render even better service in the future.

All were sorry for the parting time to come, but hoped that we could soon meet again to enjoy more such blessings as we always do enjoy in our two-day meetings.

ALTA HARPER.

Missouri Valley, Iowa

Mr. Roy Mason, one of the committeemen on Fourth of July arrangements, called on Brother E. B. Purcell and asked him if he thought our people would put on a float and help them out in the celebration on the Fourth.

We concluded to have some one to act as the Statue of Liberty and another as the angel coming to earth with the everlasting gospel, and had a scroll printed with Revelation 14: 6, or that portion which refers to the angel and the gospel. Then there were six of the nations represented by six young women with costumes and national flags with our young Brother Marvin Fry as the preacher standing by the Statue of Liberty with a Bible in his hand. These representatives were holding their hands out toward the Statue of Liberty, pleading for help. Prizes of $15, $25, and $50, were offered for the best looking floats. We did not get any prize. Some felt a little hurt, but soon saw it was better for us that we did not, for the people were surprised and many said we should have had the first, for our float was the only one that represented anything. The others were nicely decorated, but none of them, except the Legion's, represented anything.

The Christian Church were awarded first prize and the ladies' auxiliary of the same church the second; Peter Jensen the third, and the Saints got the compliments of the people for the fact that our float represented something as well as being beautiful, though not so beautiful as these other ones. We are happy and pleased with the results.

A. H. PARSONS.

Yale, Oklahoma

As Brother Slover has moved to Bristow, Oklahoma, we, as a small group at Yale, have had but one sermon preached in our church since February. Our district president, Brother Earl Bailey, of Tulsa, met with us once.

On June 4, Brethren Bailey and Shakespeare and a goodly number of other Saints whom we tried to welcome by bringing dinner and serving at the church, were with us. Brother Shakespeare remained over and preached for us each night the following week and twice on Sunday. Then Brother Bailey returned to preach the next week and did quite an amount of visiting from house to house, encouraging the Saints as wisdom directed.

The group have kept the Sunday school alive. Sister Carrie Adair is superintendent. The Sunday school averages from fifteen to twenty-five, according to the weather or the general health of the Saints. Sunday school begins at ten o'clock, after which we choose one from our number to lead in prayer service. We usually have from eight to eleven present, with an average of about seven or eight testimonies and two or three prayers. Thus we are trying to keep the work alive.

As the Indians were all meeting to hold some of their tribal affairs, Brother Shakespeare and wife were both with us a part of the week. She is certainly a real missionary. I say this without fear of being disputed, for I quote such men as Brother Case when I say it.

We are trying in our weakness to keep the work moving onward as best we can with such a small number, and we pray that sometime we may have one among us who is worthy to hold the priesthood.

ELLEN S. ADAIR.

Port Huron, Michigan

As the spirit of unrest and indifference has been felt in other places, we have felt it to some extent here, but the dark clouds are gradually passing away and the sun is beginning to shine again, and those who are grounded in the work still have their shoulders to the wheel, rolling the work along.

Others are gradually joining the ranks, realizing that the prize is at the end of the race, and the Lord is at the helm, and man cannot frustrate his plans.

Our prayer meetings are gradually growing in numbers and spirituality. The past few Wednesday night services have been the largest in attendance since organization of the branch.

The Sunday school is in a flourishing condition. Children's Day, June 25, we had an attendance of two hundred ninety-six, a fine program, and in the afternoon twelve were baptized. On July 2, we baptized three, and on July 9, one more. Others are coming.

Our preaching services are well attended considering the hot weather. On July 9, we were greatly favored by having our worthy district president, Elder William Grice, with us, and our morning prayer service was one that will long be remembered. The Lord spoke to us through Elder Grice, calling

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

West Virginia, at Indian Creek, known as the Harmony Branch, August 25 to 27. Friday, 10 a. m., in charge of the Sunday school; 2 p. m., Women's Department; 7:30, entertainment by Sunday school and Women's Department. Saturday, 10 a. m., the district conference will convene. We urge everyone to start for conference on Thursday morning, so as to be in time for the Sunday school session. Expecting some of the Twelve to be present. Take the Baltimore & Ohio train for Cornwallis, then transfer to the Harrisville Southern which leaves Cornwallis at 10:30 a. m. Another train leaves there for Harrisville about 6 p. m. Thomas Newton, president.

Wheeling, at Moundsville, West Virginia, September 2 and 3. Jasper N. Dobbs, secretary.

Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni Stake reunion, Friday, August 11. Helen R. Bootman, secretary.

One-Day Meetings

Western Michigan, at Fountain, July 30; Burdickville, August 6; Lake City, August 13; Hoxieville, August 20; Marion, August 26 and 27; South Boardman, September 3; Bendon, September 10. It is expected that Elder W. D. Ellis will attend all these meetings. Brother James Davis will attend some also. These men, together with the local force, will be the speakers. All attending are asked to bring well-filled baskets and thus equalize the burden. H. A. Doty, president.

Kirtland Singers Notice

This is to notify the musicians and singers who expect to attend the Kirtland reunion that we are counting on you to help make this feature of the reunion a success. We anticipate good results this year, as the choir work will again be in charge of Brother William Householder and the orchestra in charge of Brother Charles Romig. Singers are requested to bring copies of Winnowed Anthems, Numbers 5 and 6, and Joy to the World. Be sure to bring your instruments. John F. Martin.

Obtaining Money Fraudulently

One giving the name of Fields, also of Ward, claiming membership in the church at Toronto, has obtained money under misrepresentation, at Saint Joseph, Missouri, and at Topeka, Kansas. Description: Light complexion, slender, weight about 150 pounds, age 45 years. Claimed to have one of our number to office of priest and one to teacher. He also preached to a good-sized audience at night.

Our priesthood meetings are being held weekly and short lectures given by each on various topics. In this way we are striving to become more efficient in the work, trusting that the Lord will continue to prosper the work here and elsewhere.

Seth O. Osborn, reporting the two-day meeting at Muskegon, Michigan, writes: "The Saturday services July 15 were poorly attended, except the evening service, when Brother Evans, district superintendent, was the speaker. Sunday we had a fine attendance. Speakers for the day: Brethren Forbes, Ellis Whitehead, and Evans; also there were two priesthood meetings and one round table. Visitors: from Grand Rapids, E. K. Evans, Brother and Sister Williams and son, Sister Louise Evans, Brother and Sister Curtis, Brother and Sister Malone and daughter. From Ionia, Brother Joe Russnell and Brother Albert Stanky. Meals were served in the hall by the ladies. There have been twenty-eight baptisms during the past year. Sunday school and Religio are in good condition.

served in war, in England, came to Canada; that he was a butler with T. E. Eaton & Company, Toronto; English in speech. Brother A. P. Crooker, Topeka, states he carries a letter of recommendation from J. L. Bear, Saint Joseph. Brother Bear declares such letter to be a forgery. Such characters should be denied help, arrested, and put to work where their time and talents may be exercised in a way to produce something of value.

A Call for Sunday School Exhibit Material

Having appointed Mrs. Maude C. Halley as chairman of a committee to have charge of an exhibit of expressional work from the Sunday schools of the church at the coming General Conference, we hereby extend a call to all the schools for contributions to the exhibit.

We want especially the work your children have done in connection with their Sunday school work, though of course the demonstration material of teachers and officers properly labeled will also be highly educational.

We have no objection to the preparation of special material by the schools for the exhibit, for the results you are able to obtain may be just the inspiration others need. While we are concerned with getting a large display, let care be observed that the material submitted is the best that can be had from your community.

If in doubt as to details concerning the exhibit, write to Sister Maude C. Halley, 132 East Kansas Street, Independence, Missouri. Material for the exhibits should be sent to her at the address given, by mail or express prepaid. Write her early about what you plan to send so she can, if necessary, advise you. The General Sunday School Department will pay return transportation, returning the material soon after the close of the conference.

At the International Sunday School Convention recently held in Kansas City there were a thousand articles in a similar exhibit. We believe we can do proportionately better.

A. MAX CARMICHAEL, Superintendent.

Addresses

C. Edward Miller, 131 Quebec Avenue, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parentheses give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

- New York and Philadelphia, at Deer Park, near New Hope, Pennsylvania, July 22 to August 6 (589).
- Portland, at Portland, Oregon, July 22 to August 6 (494).
- Black Hills and Western Nebraska, at North Platte, July 22 to 31 (638).
- Massachusetts, at Onset, July 22 to August 7 (445, 589).
- Southern California, at Convention Park, July 28 to August 6 (565).
- Toronto, at Lowbanks, Ontario, July 29 to August 14 (350, 638).
- Alabama, at Pleasant Hill, near McKenzie, July 29 to August 6 (373).
- Kentucky and Tennessee, at Foundry Hill, July 29 to August 6 (660).
- Central Texas, at Hearne, July 31 to August 6 (589).
- Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, Iowa, August 2 to 14 (397, 638).
- Spring River, at Joplin, Missouri, August 4 to 10 (612).
- Western Oklahoma, at Eagle City, August 4 to 14 (247, 589).
- Central Oklahoma, seven miles north of Tulsa, three miles south of Sperry, August 4 to 14 (612, 685).
- Chatham, at Erie Beach, Ontario, August 4 to 14 (271, 660).
- Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 10 to 20 (319, 638).
- Northeastern Kansas, at Netawaka, August 11 to 20 (271, 685).
- Fremont and Pottawattamie, Iowa, and Northeastern Nebraska, at Prospect Park, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 11 to 20 (319, 589).
- Seattle and British Columbia, at Centralia, Washington, August 11 to 20 (397, 564).
- Central Michigan, at Pineonning, August 11 to 20 (469, 565).
- Des Moines, at Runnells, Iowa, August 11 to 20.
- Eastern Iowa, at Maquoketa, August 11 to 20 (469, 660).
- Southwestern Texas, at San Antonio, August 18 to 27 (660).
- Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, August 18 to 28 (638, 685).
- Utah, at Malad, Idaho, August 18 to 26 (541).
- Nauvoo, at Nauvoo, Illinois, August 18 to 27 (541, 589).
- Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Woodbine, Iowa, August 18 to 27 (541).
- Central Nebraska, at Inman, August 18 to 27 (516, 685).
- Northern Michigan, at Park of Pines, near Boyne City, August 18 to 27 (222, 660).
- Western Montana, at Race Track, August 18 to 27 (638).
- Far West Stake, near Stewartsville, Missouri, August 18 to 27 (319, 660).
- Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, near Xenia, August 18 to 27.
- Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, August 18 to 27 (685).
- Southern Missouri, at Springfield, August 18 to 27 (685).
- Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Vicksburg, Michigan, August 18 to 27 (685).
- Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3 (350, 589).
- Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3 (638).
- Northeastern Illinois, August 24 to September 3 (589).
- Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3 (295, 685).

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices; $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The Need for Consecrated Men.....687
Beside the Still Waters688
Delegates to General Conference691

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Apostasy and Priestcraft, by S. K. Sorensen.....693
Education, by Ralph W. Farrell696
Right Education, by F. W. Brose696
The Trouble With Sectarianism697

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

The Oriental Believes in Inaction697
Life in a Leper Colony697
Is Europe Bankrupt698
Use the Mind to Create698
Bishops and Their LL. D.'s698
Fuel Supply Ample699
Single Standard Emphasized699
College Societies Must Reform699

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Lula M. Sandy—Emma B. Burton—Dora Young.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Frank F. Wippen—Mrs. D. C. Clevenger—Benjamin R. McGuire—William Patterson—P. H. Phillippin—J. Erwin Phillips—Alta Harper—A. H. Parsons—Elten S. Adair.

MISCELLANEOUS

.....708

Our Departed Ones

MCGLACKEN.—Ida Martha, daughter of Charles W. and Narcissus Breedlove, was born in Jasper County, Illinois, March 15, 1899. Married Charles Melvin McGlacken. Baptized at the age of eighteen. Died at Indianapolis, Indiana, June 12, 1922. Leaves husband, infant son, mother, two sisters, and four brothers. Funeral sermon by Ira Benham, assisted by Charles Fish. Interment at Plainfield, Indiana.

BRUNTWELL.—Jane A. Fisher was born in Glasgow, Scotland, February 4, 1843. Moved with her parents to Canada at the age of twelve. Married Aaron Bruntwell, March 1, 1864. Moved to Michigan about fifty-five years ago. Settled first in Sanilac County, then moved to Twining. Baptized July 28, 1878. Died June 24, 1922. Funeral services conducted by Matthew Umphrey. Leaves eight children. Two have preceded her.

JACKSON.—Alfred Jackson was born in Van Buren County, Iowa, July 9, 1841. Located at Gallands Grove, Iowa, when about seven years old. Enlisted in Civil War, October 3, 1860; was discharged February 4, 1863, and drafted again into service in November, 1864; served until July 21, 1865. Baptized October 6, 1860. Ordained an elder the following month. Has served as president of the Gallands Grove and Dow City Branches at times. Married Martha M. Holcomb September 18, 1866. Died at his home in Dow City, June 10, 1922. Funeral services from Methodist church, sermon by E. R. Butterworth, assisted by Charles E. Butterworth. Interment in Dow City Cemetery. Leaves wife, four sons, one sister, and ten grandchildren. Five children have preceded him.

WARRINGTON.—Samuel S. Warrington was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, February 3, 1833; departed earth life July 5, 1922, Saint Joseph, Missouri, aged 89 years, 5 months, and 2 days. His wife, Mary Jane Couchman Warrington, two sons, and three daughters preceded him to the spirit realm. Two sons, William S. and Alfred V., and two daughters, Mrs. James Graham, with whom he had made his home for a number of years, and Mrs. Roy Weamer, all of Saint Joseph, survive him. Funeral service conducted from the home July 8, 1922; address by V. M. Goodrich. Interment in Ashland Cemetery.

HOLMES.—George Henry Holmes was born May 26, 1901, the fourth son of Simon and Rachel Holmes, of Clay Cross, Derbyshire, England; baptized in 1916 and at once entered into local work as organist and secretary. He came to America January 8, 1921, to attend Graceland College and prepare for future service. Died of typhoid fever at the Independence Sanitarium July 12, after a brief illness. Funeral service from the Stone Church, with sermon by U. W. Greene, with Frederick M. Smith, Roderick May, and William Ecclestone having a part in the service. The pallbearers were Graceland students, and Graceland students and the British Social League attended in numbers as mourners. The body was temporarily placed in the Criley vault at Mound Grove Cemetery.

SHELDON.—Martha E. Leeds was born at Edgington, Illinois, June 15, 1877. Moved with her parents to Cherokee, Iowa, in 1882. Married James O. Sheldon, March 4, 1896. Baptized September 12, 1897. Died at Atlantic, Iowa, following an automobile accident, July 6, 1922. Funeral services from the Baptist church at Cherokee. Prayer by the Baptist pastor; sermon by Charles E. Butterworth. Interment in the city cemetery. Leaves husband, one son, two daughters, father, mother, five brothers, and five sisters. Two children have preceded her.

PARVIS.—Susan Lutz was born May 15, 1832, in Augusta County, Virginia. Married Thomas Parvis, in 1863. Her husband died many years ago. Sister Parvis has lived at Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, for many years. Died July 6, 1922, being past ninety years of age. Funeral from the Saints' Home. Sermon by J. S. Roth, assisted by William Loranec. One child preceded her in its infancy.

An Added Offering

The following letter was received by Bishop B. R. McGuire, from England, though it is unsigned and no address was given. It shows that these Saints plan to give not only their tithing, but also sixpence on every pound that they take in their business. This may easily amount to more than tithing, being assessed on gross receipts.

"In reading through the HERALD we have often noticed your earnest appeal for funds for the work of the Lord, and though we are paying our tithing and freewill, it did not seem to be enough, so we just thought out a plan and made a resolution to pay sixpence on every pound we take in our business, and we are now paying considerably more and are hoping to pay more still.

"We can truly say that God has blessed our effort. Although our business is small and trade is bad, we feel it a pleasure to be able to contribute to the Lord's work more than we have in the past.

"You may use this letter as you like, because we realize that others may be encouraged to make a like resolution and prove for themselves how easy it is to accumulate money for the Lord's work and also feel the spirit of endeavor within them to achieve more."

Instructions to Districts

A new booklet has just been issued by the General Sunday School Department and is on sale at this office entitled, "Instructions to districts." It should be widely circulated, and a copy at least in the hands of every district officer. Local officers will also be greatly interested in the matters presented in this new booklet, which is on an entirely new basis in many respects over other instructions previously sent out.

From the preface the following is quoted: "This little pamphlet of instructions to districts is an initiatory step by the present general Sunday school officers to administer schools of religious education through district organization. We invite your hearty cooperation with our efforts. This pamphlet will serve somewhat as a manual for district officers and in so doing will meet the demand of the 1920 convention."

The table of contents includes: List of general department officers, preface, aim or purpose of district organization, visiting, district institutes, suggested topics for institutes, correspondence, library, superintendent, assistant superintendents, secretary, treasurer, librarian, elections, meetings, district legislation, finance, score sheet, constitution.

The score sheet mentioned is to take the place of the standard of excellence for districts, and should be studied carefully and steps taken at once to put it into effect in each district.

The booklet contains 48 pages and is the size of the constitution and by-laws. The price is ten cents each, postpaid. Order of Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

"I just closed a series of meetings that lasted for three weeks at Sperry, Oklohoma, where seventeen were baptized," writes Elder W. P. Bootman, from Tulsa, Oklahoma, on the 17th. In addition he blessed three children and performed one wedding ceremony. He says all the Saints of Sperry did what they could in promoting the meetings, and Pastor W. P. Rumsey has the respect and esteem, not only of the Saints but of the community at large. In addition he is said to be a splendid Sunday school superintendent. The son of Brother Bootman, who is in the hospital, is doing very well.

"A desire for knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind; and every human being whose mind is not debauched, will be willing to give all that he has to get knowledge."—Samuel Johnson.

Prepare for Leadership Through Education

The Church needs educated men and women in every field of endeavor, industry, science, art, education, and the ministry.

To redeem Zion the young people of the Church must prepare for efficient service.

It is good—and necessary—that the young people should consecrate their lives, but how much greater the consecration, when they have thoroughly prepared themselves for leadership and service through education!

HERALD HALL

Formerly the home of the Herald Publishing House in Lamoni; now a dormitory for men students of Graceland College.

Your Church maintains a college for you which is fully standardized and officially accredited. Many excellent courses are offered in Graceland, and her students are recognized everywhere. Resolve to-day to prepare for more efficient service.

The World Is Short of Educated Men and Women

Education is the scarcest and at the same time the most indispensable commodity in the world to-day.

For this reason Education Is Capital—a Good Investment.

Your future is just as big as you see it; your possibilities are just as great as you imagine them; and your realization will be exactly in proportion to the amount of capital you accumulate with which to convert your dreams into realities.

Take an Inventory—Increase Your Capital Secure an Education

The world needs you just to the extent that you are willing to prepare for service.

WILL YOU QUALIFY?

COME TO YOUR OWN CHURCH COLLEGE

For catalogue and further information, address
THE PRESIDENT

Graceland College

Lamoni, Iowa

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, August 2, 1922

Number 31

EDITORIAL

What of Evolution?

To most people the primary question is, Was man descended from a monkey? In fact, we know nothing of the origin of species, but do know each produces after its kind.

What of evolution? What should be its place in our philosophy and what is its relation to religion?

On any subject the position taken by the individual will necessarily vary according to the extent of his information and study. To-day there is a great deal of agitation on this subject of evolution, a revival of the discussion of twenty-five and fifty years ago. We find our young people time and again seriously upset by the teaching in high school and college. This is so because such teaching is, as a rule, not adequately presented. Often the teacher is a thoroughgoing materialist. Often the textbook reflects the position taken twenty-five or more years ago. It is very rare, if ever, that the men who do original research are connected with any of the textbooks used in the colleges or high schools of to-day.

In the name of evolution there is included a great variety of theories: Darwin's origin of species and the survival of the fittest are not generally accepted as a complete solution by original thinkers to-day, though it is quite clear that the principle of the survival of the fittest has at least a limited application. It is worth our while to note that which he actually discovered, rather than be too much upset by what others, or even he himself, has inferred therefrom.

Evolution means really an unrolling or unfolding. Many thoroughgoing students insist that it necessarily involves an involution, and only that is evolved which has first been involved. This we have discussed more than once in these columns. It is evident that there is such an evolution, for "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him." Again, from 1 Corinthians 15 we learn that that which is resurrected is not the body that is sowed. It is sowed in mortality and is raised immortal. Again, the baptized man puts on the new man in Christ Jesus and attempts to grow into the stature of a man in Christ Jesus. In such a sense at least the ideal of evolution of progress is accepted.

Descent of Man

But to most people the primary question appears to be, Do you believe that man was descended from a monkey? From the Bible we note the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. (Genesis 2: 7.) Also we note Genesis 3: 19, 23:

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. . . . Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken.

He remembereth that we are dust. As for man his days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.—Psalms 103: 14, 15.

Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.—Ecclesiastes 12: 7.

But now, O Lord, thou art our father; we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we all are the work of thy hand.—Isaiah 64: 8.

The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven.—1 Corinthians 15: 47.

Some would construe these passages as meaning that man is purely mortal, that he has no other existence than an earthly one. Others hold also to the mortal-soul idea, but believe that those who are redeemed are later to be resurrected by the Savior, though they are not free from death till the resurrection. Still others would interpret it to mean that God took some dust from the street and directly made man therefrom, and that it contradicts any possibility of the derivation of the body of man from other forms.

Still we may note that while the body is referred to many times as dust and of the earth, it is still by far the larger part water. It is this fact that possibly has caused some to insist that the Bible says we are made of mud.

The question may well be asked, Do these passages of necessity imply the taking of ordinary dust and the immediate creation therefrom of the body of man? We may note that the original word in the Hebrew, aphar, means ashes, clay, or dust. Some therefore urge that the real meaning of these texts is to emphasize the earthly nature of man's body, that he came from the earth, especially as only five or six per cent of the body in weight is mineral or dust, about sixty per cent water, the rest being protein, fats, and carbohydrates common to the vegetable and animal kingdoms.

The scientist notes the similarity of man to some simian forms, and the similarity of all mammals, and has supposed that one animal is derived from another in a gradual process of development, and finally that man and the monkey, who are so very similar in their physical structure, may have been derived from a common ancestor. There are two or three such distinct series which have been noted of such a possible sequence, one of which is the horse; another of which is the man and monkey sequence.

Leaving aside religion and the Bible for the moment, it seems to thinking men possible that one form may have been derived from the other. That was Darwin's inference. At one time an attempt was made to list the whole animal creation in a single sequence. To-day there is rather a tendency to consider the development of life as though it were a tree, with multiple variations and branches, but with the added possibility of the fusion of some strains to produce a new individual, though there are in fact some eight or ten distinct theories of evolution.

These theories of physical evolution seem to receive some confirmation from the physical development of the child. The similarity of the embryo of the child to other animals and even to the embryo of vegetables, the process of the development of the cell to the embryo, and the embryo to the fetus. But the remarkable fact still remains that the human cell always produces the child, and while there is a certain parallelism, it is not safe to base thereon our whole theory of life.

Now to the writer it does not appear of very great importance whether in the creation of the first man some kind of mud or dirt was used, or through a process the Lord from inorganic matter developed the human body. In any event, as one writer expresses it, "Once he became a man he was separated by an immeasurable gulf from all that went before."

Man in the Image of God

Again, he was made in the image of God. Man is decidedly different from all other animals in important respects. He therefore would appear to be a separate creation, no matter which idea is held.

He is the son of God, but not because of his physical body. According to Genesis 6, Inspired Version, Adam became the son of God through a definite process. It is the spirit in man to which the Almighty gave understanding. Whatever may have been the derivation of his body, the tremendous factor of his mind and soul still remains unexplained by any physical genesis of his outward body. This being true, we will confess that as far back as we can remember we have cared very little as to just how the body was derived, if ever it should be proved that God used one method or another in the formation of that body.

But when we come to view the facts, we find Eliot, an anatomist of note and one of the first anatomists thoroughly to examine the existing prehistoric skulls, finds one after another to be in contour, cubical contents, and the slope of forehead, etc., quite comparable with modern western European skulls of to-day. We find other writers finding that the so-called Java man is probably two individuals. Eliot, while not accepting the idea of the evolutionary derivation of the human body, states it must be dated back at least a million years, for there has been no noticeable change, according to the anatomy of man as shown by their skulls and other bones, for at least five hundred thousand years. This because others have so dated various skulls and bones back for several hundred thousand years.)

Origin of Species Unknown

Again, as we have noted before, Bateson, in the fall of 1914, in Australia, in his address as president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, plainly stated that nothing has been secured from the wild crab apple which was not inherent therein in the beginning. This last winter he confirmed this in his address in Toronto to the American Society for the Advancement of Science, and took up one by one the various explanations of the origin of species and concluded that we as yet know nothing concerning the origin of species. We have not even a beginning. We never yet have shown that anything produces otherwise than after its kind. Monstrosities occasionally occur, but even where two individuals are closely related sterility follows in a large percentage of cases almost immediately.

Also he states that while it has been commonly supposed that if two individuals were alike in structure that they were probably derived from a common ancestor, that research has rather proven that they are neither one derived from the other nor from a common ancestor; for if any of these had been true, we would expect to find more individuals near the mean between the two extremes rather than at the two extremes; while the reverse is true.

Thus we might take the illustration, were man and monkey derived from a common ancestor we should expect more man-monkeys than either men or monkeys, while in fact monkeys produce after their kind and man produces after his kind, and no monkey-men, the mean, have been found.

There seems nothing impossible in the idea that an all-wise intelligence might have utilized previous forms to produce existing forms. It is certain that there are very fundamental principles that are apparent throughout nature. This we would expect from a great common lawgiver. But the method actually used man does not know. A special creation would be a miracle, that is, outside of our knowledge of the laws of nature. But for a monkey to produce a man, or anything to produce otherwise than after its kind, would likewise be a miracle, for we know nothing of the origin of species.

Evolution a Convenient Guess

It would take many pages to give anywhere near an adequate discussion of the various ideas of adaptation and to show how far they apply and where they do not apply. It is worth while noting that all of these men are strong advocates of evolution. Bateson still is such and still believes it in the sense that faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. But it is not therefore demonstrated as a certain natural law. It is a convenient hypothesis; or as some insist, guess.

What, then, should be our attitude? The Bible says that God formed man from the dust of the earth. We have already pointed out that it could hardly be the dust of the road. Jesus fed five thousand on one occasion with five loaves and two fishes, and it would seem on another occasion fed four thousand men (besides the women and children present) with seven loaves and a few small fishes. There must have been, evidently, a calling together of the elements. It would seem possible that there may have been such a calling together of the constituent elements from the air to form the body of man, of which, after all, only six per cent is mineral, ashes, or dust, in the ordinary sense of the term. To this the reply may be made that such is contrary to the known laws of nature. In this age of the world, with our rapid progress of scientific knowledge, we should indeed be slow to say impossible, simply because we do not understand.

But let us for a moment consider the alternative, that man is evolved from earlier animal forms, pre-simian forms, even though as already pointed out, this should have brought more man-monkeys than men. Leaving aside all such contingencies, we still find and must find that such is contrary to the known laws of nature and quite as much as would be the calling together of the elements. For a monkey to produce a man is indeed a miracle. Nor can it be met by the theory of minute accretion as that has been answered by evolutionists themselves, by Bateson and Fabre and others, and in fact, all who accept Mendel's law of unit properties. So in either case we are confronted with a miracle; that is, the operation of the laws of nature outside of our present knowledge.

Our Attitude

What, then, should be our attitude as religious teachers, as lovers of the truth? We certainly should be open-minded, ready to prove all things, at the same time holding fast that which is good.

Again, a serious difficulty is: If we are to consider just the common sense point of view, the child is at the most two hours in the church in Sunday school or listening to a sermon, against twenty-five and more hours in school, to say nothing of the hours spent in reading and study at the direction of the school. In one case, the church teaching has been often but poorly adapted for children and without regard to their capacity and limitations and desires. In the other case, with a much longer time an effort is being made to teach according to capacity, however crude the adaptation may have been at times.

There is thus created an artificial conflict in which the weight of the many hours under diverse influence will make its effect more or less felt in an attitude towards all religious principles, especially if an attempt is made dogmatically to limit thought.

As lovers of truth our attitude should rather be one of open-mindedness to all truth, also willing to learn and ready to accept all truth; but not carried away with every fad and hobby, or to accept as demonstrated fact every convenient theory or hypothesis. We want no dogmatic assertion to prevent thought, neither on the part of religion, nor of science. For this hypothesis has been presented on the part of science as dogmatically by some as has the "dust" of Genesis been dogmatically and persistently construed by some in the name of religion.

The eternal truth is not brought in jeopardy by such an attitude of open-mindedness, for truth will ultimately prevail.

In the words of the Apostle Paul, "Keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called; which some professing have erred concerning the faith."—1 Timothy 6: 20, 21.

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."
—1 Thessalonians 5: 21. S. A. BURGESS.

The Saint who is never disturbed, always complacent and satisfied, may be a good landmark by which others may measure their progress, but usually he is making none himself. Distraction, heat, worry, are not desirable manifestations of one's feelings, but too much serenity, too much smugness, are indications of stagnation.

An Agricultural Conference

At Lamoni, Iowa, on July 20, a conference of church officers, college representatives, and farmers was held in Graceland College.

In 1920 a group of farmers near Lamoni approached Bishop A. Carmichael with a request for organization on a stewardship basis. Pending official direction as to procedure the further steps have not been taken, though the original interest has continued, as no doubt it has in many other localities throughout the church.

In the meantime Elder Charles E. Irwin has been specializing in agricultural economics. He is a farmer boy and appreciates from practical experience some of the difficulties and problems of farm life. Though he has been teaching during the winter at Graceland the past two years he has continued his special studies during the summer, and as opportunities have arisen, having previously spent some two years on the special problem of farm economics and better methods in organization. His recent work has been under the direction of Doctor Nourse, of the Iowa State College at Ames.

President Frederick M. Smith is also keenly aware of the necessity for better farm organization and provision, and has even suggested that in that department lies the beginning of our work of stewardship.

As a result of their correspondence, this meeting was arranged at Graceland College. Doctor Nourse and Ray Carmichael came down with Professor Irwin from Ames. President F. M. Smith and Bishops Keir, Becker, and Blair went up from Independence and Kansas City. The meeting was one of farmers of the three agricultural stakes, Lamoni, Far West, and Holden, together with representatives of Graceland College. The attendance of farmers from Lamoni was large. From Far West Stake Bishop J. A. Koehler, Sherman Sloan, and Roy S. Budd were present; and from Holden, Brethren Ford, Thompson, McRae, McWethy, and I. Ross.

As a fundamental preliminary to the work Professor Irwin urged that many personal conferences must be held with the various community leaders, and with the farmers themselves. The work is to be practical and is to be by the farmers and of the farmers, as well as for them. For this reason no formal organization is yet made, giving an opportunity first for the farmers to discuss and consider what they want and are willing to do, and how.

This meeting is expected to be the first of several to be held. As a result of this first meeting, Brother Irwin will make as soon as possible a survey of the agricultural districts in the three stakes, to collect data as to the number of families residing in the stake, those owning farms, the number of tenants, and general social conditions, but especially for the purpose of personal conversation with the men who are interested:

As a corollary he urged very strongly the need of work at our own college, and a beginning will doubtless be made in a preagricultural course. But it is hoped that this will lead soon to the establishment of an agricultural department at Graceland, though at present facilities are lacking.

The Hindu Revolt

Some months ago there appeared an item in the HERALD concerning M. K. Gandhi and his work in India. A recent article in The Outlook sums up some of the good and bad points of his propaganda. The good points are: his simple habits; love for his native land; the injury to India which he sees through the materialism of the West; his deep religious sense influenced by the teachings of Christ, especially love for all men and refraining from returning evil; his hatred of intoxicants and advocacy of temperance.

On the other hand, while he insists on absolute abstinence from violence as the chief item of his teaching, he often indulges in very violent language, which normally results in violent action by others. His reference to Europe is such as to destroy the good feeling and friendly intercourse which had previously existed. Again, he uses the religious excitation in politics and has brought about a superficial harmony between the Mohammedans and Hindus in the interest of politics as an attack on the government.

But more serious probably is the promotion of lawlessness. While he has done his utmost to promote lawlessness only against the government, this spirit has naturally spread to rebellion against parents, teachers, and religious guides and leaders of all kinds. In the end it is tending to result very nearly in nihilism.

The idea is commonly held that there is some ineradicable antagonism between science and religion. This is a mistake. If it were not, there would be no basis of truth in either. Science and religion are both studying the same thing—life; but one is at the circumference of things and the other at the center. In reality science and religion are one. The ancient world found that out ages ago, and the modern world is in process of finding it out. . . . The trouble with modern science is that it looks at things too much from the outside; for there is an esoteric science—a science of things unseen—as well as exoteric science, and the one furnishes the key to the other.—The Light of Men, John Barr.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A Definite Move Towards Stewardships

By J. F. Keir

Synopsis of speeches made at a meeting called by President F. M. Smith at the suggestion of Charles E. Irwin, at Lamoni, Iowa, July 20, 1922.

This meeting was composed of bishops and leading farmers from the church stakes, together with President F. M. Smith, Professor Nourse of the Iowa State College, and members of Graceland College faculty. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the organization of our agricultural interests under the stewardship plan.

President Frederick M. Smith

Stewardship implies: First, that every one shall be a contributor to the welfare of society. The present stimulus is individual welfare and this must be changed to the welfare of all. Each must look for the place and avenue of endeavor that will bring to the community the largest possible benefit.

Second, stewardship requires that we must develop our abilities to a point where we can perform to the maximum capacity. This calls for physical perfection and increases mental capacity which in turn calls for medical attention—in the way of disease prevention by our health department. The theory of the survival of the fittest is fundamentally wrong, the spirit of who can get the most is destructive. To reform these sordid and brutal instincts we must shift the emphasis from self to altruism and must have religion as a foundation.

When I say religion, I know I get into a field in which there is great confusion. All have a religion of some kind. The man who says he has no religion is thereby declaring his religion. In our social reforms our attitude must be "each for all and all for each."

The surplus must flow back to those who made its creation possible. In this social reform the question of life insurance, inheritance, fire insurance, must receive consideration. Life and fire insurance exist because they are profitable. The ones who need it most can least afford to get it. Under the stewardship program the needy are stimulated by religious desire to do their part.

Turning to the present situation among agriculturists, we are confronted with the question, Why do men leave the farm? First, the young men see the glitter and glare of city lights and are enchanted by the siren voices which offer more money.

Second, they have been inculcated with the idea that they can make more money with their brains than with their hands. We must exalt the station of farmer and regard his position as of equal importance with the doctor and lawyer, because he is serving the community best and because he is best fitted for that particular work.

From the Speech of Charles E. Irwin

Agriculture is only one phase of our economic life. It will doubtless take a long time to work out our program; perhaps ten, fifteen, twenty-five, or even fifty years. I warn you, therefore, not to expect this ideal system of stewardships to be worked out in a few years.

I am interested in agriculture; first, because of the experiences that I have had on the farm that were pleasant; and second, because of the experiences which I had that were unpleasant. The boy who has never had experience on the farm has missed something really worth while. The growing up with his feet on the soil and close to nature, even the companionship of a dog, are all things which are pleasant in the development of a boy on the farm. While, on the other hand, in the past there has been the deadening isolation of the farm, miles and miles from civilization with no means of communication or association; there has been the awful loneliness and a lack of opportunity for development in our farm life.

The old view that "the wisdom of the artificer shall not be sought in the counsels of the wise" must be replaced by a new view. We must provide for a fully developed man. No matter how highly our civilization may develop, we shall always need farmers to raise wheat, corn, cows, and supply milk. In the light of this, what then shall be our program?

First: any organization which we bring into being must demonstrate that our religion will fuse with life.

Second: Its aim must be to require the highest development of its members.

Third: Each must render an accounting by making a distinct contribution to society. This shall be the index to his social worthiness.

We must emphasize: first, the social aspect; second, we must develop a consistent economic plan.

Education

We must prepare specialists in various lines, including agriculture, who shall be willing to come back and give to the group the benefit of their special research. This principle should be widened; to neglect to do so is a fundamental error. Agricultural communities have and are constantly being drained of potential leaders. We have said to the young: You want a career; the city is the place and we have adopted our college curriculum without taking into consideration the need for agricultural leadership. We have virtually said to these young people: Take what we have at Graceland or go elsewhere. We have appealed to their emotional side and said: You should stay here because of the splendid environment—and they have done so in some instances to their injury. I mean by this that we were not equipped to give them the thing for which they had a liking and which would have placed them in a position to have greatly increased their powers for good in society, hoping that at some future time we would be able to give them what they wanted.

How can this be changed? Our means are meager; we are cramped because of a lack of equipment; but the same difficulties which confront us in the development of an agricultural course have confronted us in our attempt to develop a junior college and will continue to confront us in any future expansion.

To drain an agricultural community of its best minds means a depletion of our force of leadership. We should, therefore, first add a preagricultural course to our college curriculum; second, develop an agricultural extension course; and third, provide for short courses during the winter months. The church and college farms near Lamoni could be used to cover the cost of this agricultural education.

Social Work

We must not make a one-sided development. Some things which in the past have militated against rural social development have been bad roads and the cost of securing some advantages. For instance, health has been neglected on the farm because of the great cost of calling a physician, who on account of his dislike for traveling over bad roads either made his charge prohibitive, or, when called on the telephone, would give some excuse as to why he should not come.

Statistics show that the labor income of the average farmer is less than $400 over and above his living. It is obvious that this does not provide sufficient for the extension of his equipment and the improvement of his farm. There are certain elements in our agricultural communities that are a distinct disadvantage. For instance, the retired farmer, instead of building up the community, tears apart the social fabric.

We might profit considerably in the analysis of our problem by a study of German rural credit associations, Denmark's cooperative activities, the Rochdale plan of England, so that we might have the benefit of their experience. There are to-day about six hundred cooperative elevators in Iowa.

Our Approach

We must approach our work quietly, yet persistently. We must know the attitude of the people who are to be affected by this program. The organization of stewardships should be the outgrowth of a desire in the hearts of the people to do something that would bring about an economic readjustment. Of course, the educating of the people up to this ideal is a part of the work of the church. These organizations should be formed by men who are key men in each neighborhood. If it is done on a democratic basis, it is most likely to succeed. Mold your groups; weld your stake together for stewardship in a union of life and labor.

From Speech of Doctor Nourse

(Doctor Nourse is head of the Economic Department, Iowa State College, Ames Iowa. He stated that he would give us an outline of what they had been attempting to do at the State College, where about thirty-five men are working in the interests of agricultural economics, rural sociology and farm management. It is their aim to train leaders for rural community work.)

We are not confining our efforts to the college, but are teaching outside of its walls. My keynote is that we have come to the end of an epoch in our economic development in this country. Cheap lands are no longer obtainable. Our farmers are no longer pioneers, but they are a part of a great industrial country, passing into a new period—a period of permanent agriculture.

We have not had this in the past and it has militated against successful farm life. Probably in no other place has the farmer had as high a plane of life as in the North Mississippi Valley.

Our problem as builders is to find a form of farm production and organization which will enable the farmer permanently to maintain this high standard. We have made some important steps in placing agriculture in our high schools and in providing an extension course which tends to make leaders in our agricultural communities. There is a new school of economics to-day, not every man for himself. We have shifted the emphasis from the thought that competition would work out balances and adjustments to the psychology of the motive power that operates the machine. Back of the machine is the philosophy of spiritual idealism that is a factor. A stream cannot rise higher than its source. For this reason unionism lacks spiritual light; operators lack spiritual light, for their motivation is selfishness.

When we begin to build a machine to meet our social and economic needs, we fear the manner in which the power shall be applied. Shall it be a benefit or a menace? It is the haunting fear that looms up because of the selfish, fighting disposition of a few that this power shall be misused.

We need a great education of technique over the whole country for better farmers. We must set the good of the whole in the forefront. In our college work we have insisted on working with the community groups. A strong feature of the new type is the farm bureau. Through it we obtain a nucleus—a sending and receiving station. In our work we cannot be dogmatic. We simply pass on our suggestions to a continuing agency and say to them: See how these suggestions fit your community. If there are reasons why you cannot use them, let us hear from you. Discuss the problems in your group meetings and, should any technical questions arise, pass them on to us and the college will try to answer them for you.

(Professor Nourse stated, among other things, that he was very much pleased with what we as a church were undertaking to do. He said that other religious organizations had attempted in a very vague and vacuous way to find a solution for the economic ills of the present age, but that nothing definite had ever come out of these efforts. After the above discussions, arrangements were made for Brother Irwin to make a survey of the agricultural interests of the Lamoni, Holden, and Far West Stakes, with a view to effecting an organization of stewards among our farmers.)

What Will We Do With Our Young People?

By T. W. Williams

As General Superintendent of the Religio Department, Brother Williams issues here-with an important call.

One of the pressing problems of the church is the one which relates to the place and function of our young people in the church. That they have a very important part to play in the establishment of the kingdom of right relations no one will dare to question. What that place shall be is a subject of dispute and opens up a wide field of discussion, with many divergent views.

Whatever organization we finally accept as being compatible with the needs of our young people, it is clearly evident that it must be something more unifying than that which exists at the present time. One really wonders how our young people have connected up with the church work as well as they have, considering our disconnected, individualized, loose form of organization. We have the Boy Scouts operating as a disjointed part of the Religio, the Orioles and Temple Builders chaperoned by the Department of Women and trying to find expression, together with the various class organizations operating in a meteoric way in both Sunday school and Religio. This disjointed form of organization is clearly an indictment of our methods.

There has been no common purpose, no definite objective, no great rallying point, no inspiring slogan, no unifying organization for achievement which would fire the imagination and supply a wholesome atmosphere for the creative idealism and inspiring romance of youth. We have set tasks for our young people to do. We have placed restrictive limits as to this doing. We have very patronizingly told them what they should not do. We have failed to enlist their enthusiasm and whole-hearted cooperation. We have not made it possible for them to come forward and indicate what they wish to do.

The Boy Scouts as an appendage of the Religio, the Orioles and Temple Builders as a tag end of the Department of Women, the individualized class expression in Sunday school and Religio is proof sufficient that the time has come when we should permit the young people themselves to devise ways and means for active participation in church work. We must harness up the energy and enthusiasm of the young people to the church, or fail. A church which does not command the first love of youth must perish from the earth.

We cannot afford to permit conditions to continue as they are. The young people will not be satisfied with a hand-picked, adult-formed organization handed down to them by their seniors. They want to have a say in the formation of the organization in which they are to play such an important role. They should have. They must have if the church ever expects to command the dynamic power, the unlimited idealism, and the magnificent vitalizing power of youth.

Let the young people in the various local organizations—Religio, Orioles, Temple Builders, organized classes all over the church, discuss this matter. Get together. Plan! Execute! Do not wait for others to lay out and plan all your activities. Decide for yourself what you want to do. Take counsel of your seniors. Hold council with them. When you have carefully formed your plans, present same to the proper church officials. You will find general cooperation and support. All that is needed is a definite, concrete, workable plan which will, at once, command the hearty and enthusiastic support of the young people, and we can trust them to do the rest.

Inquiries have been made and numerous requests have come in, asking the general superintendent to indicate in a definite way what our young people should and should not do. I have steadfastly refused to comply, knowing that it would be unavailing, and at the same time destroy what little influence I already had with our young people. It would be impossible to secure the genuine, whole-hearted cooperation of the young people to any such plan, however meritorious it may be.

The young people are not dumb cattle to be herded and housed by seniors. They are an integral part of the great kingdom of God on the earth. Their agency, their freedom of will, their right of expression is as sacred as that of their seniors. I am not talking now about children under the age of accountability. I am speaking of that magnificent and splendid body of young people scattered all over the church who are ready, aye, more than willing, and anxious to contribute their part in the onward move of the church whenever we, as adults, will give them opportunity.

We have failed to appreciate the young people as an asset to the church. We have treated them as wards. We have, with commensurate dignity and affection, tried to make available to them our wealth of experiences, both good and bad. We have given them both counsel and advice. I am not disposed to offer criticism as to this. Let time speak! We must go farther and treat them as sentient beings having their part to play in the work of the church precisely as the adults have their part to play.

We need a convention of young people. This convention should comprise young people from all walks of life, from all parts of the church, and from all the world. It should be a meeting where young people may get together with other young people and, with the utmost freedom and good will, put their heads together and canvass, plan, and execute. Such a gathering would give birth to a young people's movement such as the church has hitherto not dreamed of. I would set no age limit. I would not classify as to years, or sex, or station. Every man or woman who is young in spirit, who still experiences the tang of youth, who understands and fellowships with youth, should have welcome and place in such a gathering. But such must be "one of us." He or she must be a "jolly good fellow" and belong to the gang.

I believe that the coming October conference is the time and Independence is the place for just such a meeting. And it is up to the young people. Where there is a will there is always a way. The heads of all departments are sympathetic and interested. The leading men of the church will cheerfully cooperate. Then why hesitate? Why wait on others? If you have desire to further the work of Jesus Christ among the young people of the church then indeed are you called. "Thrust in thy sickle and reap," and to-day.

We desire to hear from the young people throughout the church. Let us know what you are thinking. Tell us what you would like to do, what you think others of the young people can do for the church. Above everything else, plan to come to the

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Welfare of the Youth

The past ten years has measured the real growth of the young people's division of the Sunday school. Ten years ago only a few were discussing the possibilities of young people and were talking of the church neglect of teen age children. To-day there are organizations for adolescents on every hand. Ten years ago only a few books were written, such as that by G. Stanley Hall on the adolescent age. To-day there is quite a large library of literature, and much of it in leaflet form.

"To-day the welfare of youth is a popular slogan. Practically all national and local, non-profit institutions raise their budgets on its magic formulæ. The 'welfare of the youth' is echoed and re-echoed, and has been standardized by the modern golden rule, Christianity-applied men's business clubs. But it is now beginning to be glimpsed that real welfare must have a religious heart, and these business men's organizations are calling to the church to put the needed note into the work for the good of the adolescent."—William H. Danforth.

There are probably to-day 100,000 classes holding certificates of organization.

"The Steward Psalm"

The Lord is my partner; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down and dream new possibilities for developing our joint business; he leadeth me beside those who still need the water of life.

He restoreth my sole excuse for calling myself "Christian"; he leadeth me in the paths of world service for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of denominational deficits I will bear my share, for thou art with me; thy work and thy tithe they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table of budgets before me in the presence of mine inertia; thou anointest the hinges of my safe deposit box with oil of gladness above its fellows; my purse runneth over.

Surely stewardship and tithing shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will build up the King's Business forever.

—The Baptist.

next General Conference in October, and at Independence, Missouri.

Field workers and local superintendents are requested to bring this matter to the attention of their respective organizations.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Superintendent Busy

A letter from our general superintendent, Sister Glines, written from London, Canada, indicates that she lost no time in getting into the center of activities. She had been on the reunion program several times to occupy the eleven o'clock hour, as well as conducting a study class from 9.45 to 10.45 each morning, and another regular lecture period from 3.30 to 4.30 p. m. In addition, she provided for the boys and girls, arranging for classes and teachers for them, and in large part having their general oversight.

She speaks in appreciation of the efforts of two nurses who were in attendance, and who gave her most valuable assistance by giving lectures to women, to boys' and girls' and adults' classes of various descriptions. There was a regular hospital tent on the grounds, with supplies, and about one hundred cases had already been cared for since the opening of the reunion. These nurses have been supervisors of the Nursing Division of the Saint John's Ambulance Division of Canada.

From this combination of circumstances, Sister Glines received the impetus to organize a guild of nurses, wiring President Smith for permission to act in the matter. He replied by wire: "Your telegram of July 3 just received. On consultation with Doctor Harrington and a number of brethren, I unhesitatingly advise you to go ahead and organize the nurses' division, placing it in charge of what officer you need. The matter of where this officer will function can be determined later."

Thus it transpires that we have the first organization of the kind in the church. It is called, "Nursing Guild No. 1 of the Latter Day Saint Church of London District." The district by hearty vote indorsed and supported the move. Mrs. E. K. Swindall is the supervisor, with Mrs. Sarah Fishleigh as assistant, Mrs. Frank Gray as secretary, and the bishop of the London District, Brother John L. Burger, as treasurer.

This forward-looking movement is very encouraging to our superintendent, who has great ideals for our department, and is anxious to see all things moving towards their achievement. She is hoping that similar organizations may be effected elsewhere, and is already laying her plans to have regular and expert instruction made available where needed.

Sister Glines lectured one evening upon the subject, "The educational supremacy of the home." She was interviewed by a press reporter who gave her a very interesting write-up in one of the London papers, which we herewith present to our readers, as it will serve excellently to further acquaint them with the ideals and hopes of our superintendent.

"Among the many interesting visitors brought to town by the annual camp reunion and convention of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in this district, Mrs. Dora Glines, of Independence, Missouri, is outstanding.

"Mrs. Glines, who arrived in the city on Saturday, holds the responsible position of international general superintendent for the department of women in the church, in the United States where her headquarters are, in Canada, and in all countries of the world where this communion exists, the scope of her activities covering some 50,000 persons.

"Faced with the gigantic task of organizing the spiritual, educational, and recreational activities of so great a body of women, Mrs. Glines has a remarkably clear vision of the world of to-day and of the ideal world of to-morrow, an ideal which she claims is to be reached largely through education.

"Interviewed upon her arrival in London by the Women's Department of The Free Press, she stated that the work of which she is superintendent is mainly a great educational process.

"Every normal living person wants to do something, and the church is realizing that they must be given something worth while to do to prevent their energies being turned in the wrong direction,' Mrs. Glines stated. 'We want to teach our women to become intelligent, thinking citizens, or the vote in their hands would be a dangerous thing rather than a privilege and a benefit. We want to teach them the scientific and systematic methods of caring for their homes, that they may be given sufficient freedom from drudgery to exercise their rights as citizens, and take an interest in the affairs of the world. Under our Department of Women, we have organized classes of all sorts, in sociology, women's work, parent and teacher problems, child welfare, food values and laws, etc. We want our women, and our men, too, for that matter, to learn about parliamentary law, that they may be able to voice their opinions intelligently in their community, and most of all we want to make intellectual fathers and mothers, that the next generation may not be faced with the problems that we are contending with to-day.'

"Asked for an opinion on the present social outlook of the work, Mrs. Glines admitted that the social conditions of the present day were not at all desirable.

"The war was, of course, a big factor in producing this condition,' she said, 'but we are too prone to regard the situation as the natural outcome of the war, when it is largely due to lack of discipline and parental control in the homes.'

"Why should home discipline be especially lax at the present day?' Mrs. Glines was asked.

"I believe that improved economic conditions are greatly responsible for this,' was the somewhat surprising answer. 'In city life, particularly, there is not enough for the boys and girls to do. In the old days, when everything was made in the home, all food, even to meats, prepared, all sewing done, and earlier than that, weaving and spinning, these things provided occupation for the sons and daughters as they grew up. Too much leisure is a dangerous thing for cultivated minds, and since economic conditions have brought leisure, we must educate the people to make fit use of it.

"If the churches are going to function as social institutions, they must provide something to do,' declared Mrs. Glines. 'Every church should have supervised play periods, though there is one drawback to this in the fact that it takes the children away from their natural guardians, their parents, for this cannot be helped; but we are in a long process of education, the result of which, we hope, will be trained, intelligent parents, prepared to exercise jurisdiction over their children.'

"That the church should be educative, spiritually and mentally, but not entertaining, was Mrs. Glines's opinion. 'The world to-day is entertained too much, and the average person is unable to contribute to that entertainment,' she said. 'The movies are a factor here, though they are a wonderful institution if put to a right use. I would like to see a more complete supervision of them, however.'

"Commenting on the present women as citizens, Mrs. Glines has a warm tribute to pay to her emancipated sex.

"They are coming along wonderfully,' she said. 'Men who have opportunity to judge, inform me that they are making record progress, and that their enlarged activities are yet not affecting their home duties.'

"An important branch of her church, the work of which the general superintendent finds most interesting, is the cradle roll department.

"Our workers are interested in the new babies, and in many cities have the cooperation of the health department,' she said. 'In Detroit, where I visited recently, the city health department was most interested in our cradle roll work, part of which is the complete and prompt registration of the new babies and the education of the mother to the fact that her baby is a citizen, and the Government of her country wants to know about him. This is a work in which every church could take an active part.'

'Educational work outside of college, is the objective of the Department of Women of Mrs. Glines's church. 'A great majority of people who cannot take academic courses in our colleges need practical education, and that is one of the main activities of our department, which provides various courses for both men and women,' she stated.

'Study hours, lecture periods, and addresses will be Mrs. Glines's share in the program for the reunion, which opened on Saturday with a banner attendance of visitors from all over the district, and many distinguished leaders. Handwork for women will be especially introduced and demonstrated by the general superintendent, who is a charming, cultured, and gifted woman, with a broad outlook on her work for her church and for humanity at large.'

Sister Glines expects to visit Buffalo, Niagara, Toronto, and Montreal before the Onset reunion. She had splendid meetings in Chicago and Detroit on her way to London, and feels encouraged about the work all along the way. She is enjoying, too, her work as general field worker for all the departments, and says that some of her "questions and answers" meetings have been most lively and interesting.

We await eagerly further reports of the work of our superintendent and hope that her experiences throughout this arduous reunion itinerary will be so rich and varied, that when she returns to her desk in the fall, she will find, in the stores of memory, increased and abundant stimulation and inspiration for the important commission that is hers.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Discipline at Home

Do you have some system of discipline in your home? In all too many homes there is no semblance of discipline either for the children or the grown-ups.

With the beginning of another year, pause and think. Are you training your children for the kind of a world they must live in? Are you trying to inculcate that spirit of helpfulness so that your children refuse to allow you to wash up the dishes after dinner in the evening just because you are their mother and they want you to have a much-needed rest? You can inculcate this proper respect for womanhood and "the older person" by explaining carefully to the child just what part the mother has played in the scheme of things.

Perhaps Robinson Crusoe could live without discipline, but just as soon as he doubled up with Mr. Friday immediately he lost his right to consider no one but himself. Each man had certain duties which had to be performed in a certain way at a certain time (in their case either nighttime or daytime) so that both might profit.

And just so, there must be a division of duties in the home, and some one must maintain sufficient discipline to see to it that the duties are performed.

If Willie has been assigned the time between 7 and 7.10 as his opportunity in the bathroom and he does not avail himself of that time for one reason or another, then he should be made to wait until the others have used the bathroom in their turn. This will teach Willie the value of promptness, and also he will learn consideration for those he must live with.

Every mother or head of a family should sit down and formulate some plan whereby the members of the family will each have certain duties to perform, a definite time for bathing, playing, eating, looking over the wardrobe, and the like. Every mother owes this kind of training to her children even if there is a servant or maid-of-all-work in the family. She particularly owes it to them if she, herself, must do all the work.

Deprive the little boy who is habitually late for meals of one or two meals or of a trip to the "movies" when his favorite is there, and you will have taught him promptness, consideration for the mother whose patient effort the meal represents, consideration for the folks he must eat with, and you shall have also begun training in discipline—that training so necessary to every successful life.—Loretto C. Lynch.

Do You Legally Exist

The following item appeared not long ago in the daily papers:

"NO SUCH PERSON; AND SO CAN'T WED

"By United Press Cable

"PARIS, January 6.—You cannot be married, because legally you do not exist, was the Lorient registrar's answer to Mlle. Kergue's application to wed. Her birth had not been recorded."

Do you legally exist?

Have you legal proof of your parentage? In other words, Has your birth been recorded? This is a matter of rapidly increasing importance in this country.

Failure to record the birth of children to-day will most surely result in much trouble for the man or woman to-morrow. Give your child legal evidence of its existence and of its parentage and save it future trouble and embarrassment, if not worse.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley
CHAPTER XII

The National Constitution

I. Historical Development

1. Early American unions.
2. The Confederation.
 - a. Its character and organization.
 - b. Its defects.
3. The Constitutional Convention.
 - a. Why called.
 - b. The "Virginia Plan."
 - c. The Connecticut Compromise.
 - d. Questions touching slavery.
 - e. Provision for amendment.
4. Adoption of the Constitution.
 - a. Development of political parties.

II. The Constitutional Amendments

1. Reasons for amendments.
2. The character of the constitutional changes.
3. The national bill of rights.
 - a. The first eight amendments.
 - b. The ninth and tenth amendments.
 - c. The twelfth amendment.
4. The war amendments.
5. Recent amendments.
6. The difficulty of amending the Constitution.

III. The Written and Unwritten Constitutions

1. The unwritten constitution.
 - a. Define it.
 - b. Give its characteristics.

LETTERS AND NEWS

2. Congress.
 - a. Its original powers.
 - b. Enlargement of original powers.
 - c. New powers.
 3. The Presidency.
 - a. Election and term of office.
 - b. Powers.
 4. The national courts and their judges.
 - a. Jurisdiction.
 - b. Principle established by Chief Justice Marshall.
- IV. The Nation and States
1. Five classes of governmental powers.
 2. State and national government interdependent.
 3. Relation of the state and national.
 4. The unity of our Federal system.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. Memorize: "Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land."—Doctrine and Covenants, section 98, paragraph 10.
2. "The Constitution of the United States, with its fine equilibrium between efficient power and individual liberty, still remains the best hope of the world."—James M. Beck.
3. "The changing constitution," by Charles W. Pierson, of the New York bar, in The Outlook, April 9, 1919.
4. "Of governments and laws in general," section 112, Doctrine and Covenants.
5. Consult Story's Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, for an account of the convention which framed the Constitution.
6. Tell the story of Benjamin Franklin's efforts towards an American union.

DORA YOUNG.

Then Laugh

Build for yourself a strong-box,
 Fashion each part with care;
 When it's as strong as your hand can make it,
 Put all your troubles there;
 Hide there all thought of your failures
 And each bitter cup that you quaff;
 Lock all your heartaches within it,
 Then sit on the lid and laugh.

Tell no one else its contents,
 Never its secrets share;
 When you've dropped in your care and worry,
 Keep them forever there.
 Hide them from sight so completely
 That the world will never dream half:
 Fasten the strong-box securely—
 Then sit on the lid and laugh!

—Anonymous.

First, determine the ideals to be achieved by Christianity. Bureaus of religious research are necessary to draft a comprehensive program of Christian living.

Second, it is necessary to determine the purpose to which these ideals are to be employed. A list of common, everyday actions and duties should be studied in order to apply Christian ideals to them.

Third, the selection of the best methods of attaining these ends.—W. W. Charters.

The Olive Leaf or the Cudgel?

In our study of some of the old records of the church we occasionally find items that are extremely interesting in the light of present-day conditions and we think they can have an application to us as we labor and pray for the welfare of Zion, and her redemption.

In the Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 720, we find a letter written by Joseph Smith the Prophet from Kirtland, Ohio, to the Saints in Independence, Jackson County, Missouri. In part it reads as follows:

"KIRTLAND, January 11, 1833.

"BROTHER WILLIAM W. PHELPS,

"I send you the olive leaf which we have plucked from the tree of paradise, the Lord's message of peace to us; for though our brethren in Zion, indulge in feelings towards us, which are not according to the requirements of the new covenant, yet, we have the satisfaction of knowing that the Lord approves of us, and has accepted us, and established his name in Kirtland for the salvation of the nations; for the Lord will have a place, from whence his word will go forth, in these last days, in purity; for if Zion will not purify herself, so as to be approved of in all things, in his sight, he will seek another people; for his work will go on until Israel is gathered, and they who will not hear his voice must expect to feel his wrath. Let me say unto you, seek to purify yourselves, and also all the inhabitants of Zion, lest the Lord's anger be kindled to fierceness. Repent, repent is the voice of God to Zion; and yet, strange as it may appear, yet it is true, mankind will persist in self-justification until all their iniquity is exposed, and their character past being redeemed, and that which is treasured up in their hearts be exposed to the gaze of mankind. I say to you, (and what I say to you, I say to all,) hear the warning voice of God, lest Zion fall, and the Lord swear in his wrath the inhabitants of Zion shall not enter into my rest.

"Our hearts are greatly grieved at the spirit which is breathed, both in your letter, and that of Brother G— . . . the very spirit which is wasting the strength of Zion like a pestilence; and if it is not detected and driven out from you, it will ripen Zion for the threatened judgments of God. . . .

"It is in vain to try to hide a bad spirit from the eyes of them who are spiritual, for it will show itself in speaking and in writing, as well as all our other conduct. . . .

"JOSEPH SMITH, JR."

Too many times as a people we have cried, "Persecution, persecution," when the sad facts of the case have been chastisement instead. For it would seem that the timely warning as voiced in the above letter was poorly heeded, if at all, for in November of the same year mobs came upon the Saints, destroyed their property, and drove them from the land of Zion, or at least from Jackson County.

It doesn't take very much study for us to learn why the Lord suffered this calamity to come upon his people; as we read in the first verse of section 98 of the Doctrine and Covenants we are told that the Lord suffered these things to come upon them in "consequence of their transgressions." And what were the transgressions? Were they murder, theft, or the breaking of some of the ten commandments? No! But the third verse of the same section tells us what they were: "Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they have polluted their inheritances."

Again in Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2, given in 1834, the Lord said that Zion might have been then already redeemed had it not been for the transgression of his people. By these evidences we are led to believe that the redemption of Zion even at that early date was prevented as a result of unjust criticisms, divisions, and strife within the church. Can it be possible that after all the hue and cry of persecution from the outside world by Latter Day Saints, that within our own ranks we will find the greatest enemy? The enemy of distrust and unfair criticism, etc. As Saints with a commission to redeem Zion, are we one whit better than the Saints were in 1833-34? Or are we, too, allowing ourselves to waste the strength of Zion in the same way that our predecessors did? and if we are, can we expect more or less than they received?

These are solemn questions, vital questions.

And now we presume our reader is wondering why the above statements and questions. Because, there has floated across the broad prairies and the mighty mountains whisperings of conditions of unfair criticisms, destructive criticisms of those whom God has called and set apart to do an especial work. In these days of trials and uncertainties, while men's hearts have ached with anxiety for the welfare of the church, and while these men whom a few years ago we received with open arms as men sent of God, have struggled under untold difficulties to span the financial breach that has come to us as a result of world conditions, some of us have stood by with wagging heads and idle hands and our only contribution has been criticism and faultfinding. As we have meditated upon these things our soul has cried out from within us: Shame, shame; until our pen will no longer remain idle. Some of us who pay ten dollars tithing a year would like to dictate the spending of ten thousand, and think the church is not democratic in its legislation if that opportunity is not granted us.

Some think that in the days of prosperity the funds of the church should have been more carefully conserved. Perhaps so. But then, that again is a matter of: "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone." Is it not a fact that hundreds of Saints as individuals prospered during the high prices for farm produce and good wages? Where is all of your prosperity now? Is it not a fact that many farmers and business men bought automobiles and other luxuries during the high prices of war times and are now feeling the pinch of poverty as a result of their extravagance? True to human nature, the more we receive the more we spend. Then why find fault with the other fellow? Remember the above quoted scripture and it will help us to soften our criticisms and withhold our faultfinding.

But, after all is said and done, are we so badly off, in the light of other institutions of like nature? We are creditably informed that Heber J. Grant, president of the Utah Mormon Church, at last April conference in Salt Lake City, Utah, stated that he had borrowed fifty million dollars in behalf of the interests of the sugar company, of which the Mormon Church is by far the greatest stockholder.

Again we are told that the same institution borrowed another ten million for church purposes. In the face of these colossal sums, when we compare their 500,000 membership with our 100,000 membership, and their $60,000,000 loan with our little deficit amounting to less than $100,000 (less than one dollar per member), we think we should be thankful instead of distrustful and faultfinding.

We think it is about time some of us lay down the cudgels of criticism and faultfinding, and hold aloft the "olive leaf which we have plucked from the tree of paradise, the Lord's message of peace to us": lest we ripen ourselves for the same condition that beset the Saints of 1833. If we will read carefully the instructions and warnings in the letter and scriptures above quoted, and diligently try to apply the same for the next ten days, they will work wonders for us and the cause of Zion.

In Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3 we are told that the Lord promised to gather the Saints back to the land of Zion to build up the waste places, no more to be thrown down, nevertheless if they polluted their inheritances they would be thrown down.

We see by the foregoing evidences how the Saints polluted their inheritances in 1833. We have gathered back in fulfillment of prophecy to build up the waste places of Zion, and had hoped and believed we were so doing, but inasmuch as God is no respecter of persons, we may look for the same results from the same causes, and if we do similar things, similar punishments will follow.

God will direct the men whom he has called, if we will support them, otherwise the strength of Zion will again be wasted in useless jangling; and worse than nothing accomplished. The time is now for every loyal Saint to put his shoulder to the wheel and push. This is the hour of Zion's need. Will we forsake her at the critical moment? Then she will forsake us in the hour of her triumph.

Let every man learn his duty and stand in the office of his calling.

R. L. FULK.

Are We Foolish Virgins?

*Our financial troubles are not in the service;
our real need is for the application of the law of God.*

In the HERALD of March 29 and June 7 respectively are to be found articles written by T. W. Williams and Leon A. Gould which should engage our careful attention, as they concern our eternal welfare. We have been theorizing and talking on the question of stewardship and inheritance for nearly a hundred years, with the result that we are still talking, but have not accomplished any practical results. A speaker of recent date stated with emphasis that we had come to the point where we must either "shut up or put up"—in other words, give a practical demonstration of the economic principle laid down by our great leader. We make large claims of our superior knowledge, but if we have nothing more to offer than mere words and theories, let us be forever silent.

Our missionaries have been called out of the field because of the financial situation, but to a superficial observer our financial troubles are not seen on the surface, as all around us is evidence of prosperity. Do we really have financial troubles? If so, in what way do we suffer? The Lord says, "This is a day of sacrifice." Have any of us gone hungry or in rags? If not, why do we complain? I know one sister who wears ragged clothes in order to help the Lord's work. Who is to blame for the missionaries being taken out of the field? It is our duty to sacrifice and help the missionaries to remain in the field, where they are so much needed. If we lived according to the law of "Love your neighbor as yourself," there would be no poor among us and the Lord's treasury would be filled and the missionaries would need have no anxiety regarding their families. But even the Golden Rule is too old-fashioned and out of date for these modern days, and the motto of to-day is, "Do your neighbor before he can do you."

We are living in a commercial age, when money and a good appearance form the highest and only standard and the only passport necessary to worldly society. These superficialities blind us to the real things of life and create false standards.

By patterning after the world we lose sight of the real issue, the redemption of Zion.

Zion is the pure in heart and is the work of God, and is far more necessary than adding acre to acre or building houses or piling brick on brick or anything else that is transitory. I charge that we are following the world with its pleasures and bowing down to its money god and despising the humble things of the lowly Nazarene. The poor are being oppressed by "charging all that the market will bear," while over our counters meat is being sold in all seasons and we are selling merchandise for profit by selling tea, coffee, and tobacco. We think when we offer a small portion in tithes and offerings to God he will overlook the way it was made. But God is not mocked. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." We cannot serve God and Mammon. We need not offer God any tainted money. God wants a "peculiar people, zealous of good works." We cannot conform to the world and serve God at the same time.

If we conform to the world we must be in league with it and against God as he is an enemy to all unrighteousness. The great money power of which capitalism is only part is seeking to destroy the work of God, and many are being deceived. We are living in "perilous times." A great struggle is going on around us unseen, but nevertheless very real. The great money power is arrayed against God. Concentration of great wealth has always been a menace to the world. Rome fell when her wealth was in the hands of a few. History repeats itself and our money is being concentrated in the hands of a few millionaires. The fate of Rome should be a warning. The enemy is using commercialism, as well as every other weapon, to destroy men's souls. Will our real estate deals and every other act bear scrutiny when God turns on the searchlight. Will they? We are sitting over a volcano which may engulf us at any moment. Are we asleep? Let us remember the parable of the foolish virgins. It is not yet too late to put oil in our lamps.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

A Successful Church Book Store at Sioux City, Iowa

What this branch has done is most worthy of emulation. The results, in a better informed, therefore more zealous membership, do not appear here, yet are bound to follow.

I have been interested in the publicity department for the last two and a half years. I have talked to several of the traveling ministers of the church and they tell me that this is the first church bookstore that they have seen.

We have had very good success with it. We started to raise the money for it two years ago last Valentine Day by asking each member that could to loan us five dollars each. Our aim in loans was one hundred dollars. We got one hundred and three dollars by the last of July. We received our first order of books about the first of August. We give all the profits to the library of the Sioux City Branch. By the last of the year, we had ordered over two hundred and twenty dollars worth of books and they were nearly all sold.

We have ordered over four hundred and twenty-five dollars worth of books this far with about thirty-seven dollars worth on hand, with the expense of about five dollars. I would like to see a bookstore in every branch. There is no reason why there shouldn't be. I believe there is only one way that we can make a real success of the books and that is having them on hand when the people call for them. And we have to know them and be able to talk them the same as anything else that we sell. Anyone can do what we have done here.

Brother George M. Vandel, the branch president, organized the young people of the branch to go out and solicit for the church papers last Wednesday night. One young brother came in with two subscriptions to a church paper, and a sister with one. I would like to get in touch with some of the publicity agents if I could so I could get some of their ideas and success on this work.

I am at your service in anything that I can do in this work.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
HEMAN TURNER, Publicity Agent.

Have Joined the Sacrifice Club

Brother R. K. Ross and wife, of Mound City, Missouri, have joined the sacrifice club. He writes Bishop McGuire in part as follows:

"In reading the HERALD and Ensign I find there stated that June, July, and August are the three months in which our receipts from tithes and offerings are least and, this being the case, it throws a brake on the Lord's work.

"One of the great needs of the present time is unity. The men at the head, as well as the membership, will have to humble themselves. Let us all be humble and full of love, then this work will move on.

"I see that some one of our missionaries is willing to have his allowance cut down to $25, so it came to me this way: Can't I give $5 for each of those three months? Yes; I can by sacrifice. So I inclose check for $15. Now can't a thousand of us do likewise? Yes, I believe two thousand of us can. So come on, brethren, let us come to the front and see how our numbers will swell."

Aged Brother Craves Better Sermons

I attended a priesthood meeting last Sunday evening, and the trend of the talk was the lack of interest among the Saints in the Sunday afternoon prayer services, also the Sunday night preaching services. It was conceded there was a general apathy, but what is the cause and the remedy? I said nothing pro or con. Any physician that makes a study of books and his profession, should be able to diagnose a case and prescribe the remedy.

Now the trouble with us to-day is that we are fed on skimmed milk, not the sincere milk of the word, which is the doctrine of Jesus Christ, the old Jerusalem gospel of the Master of men. While Jesus Christ was here on earth, he never uttered a sermon that was not filled with doctrine.

The world is hungry for the gospel. I sought it for years before I found it. Others are doing the same. I get hungry to hear a good, wide-awake, "all wool and a yard wide," doctrinal sermon, delivered with power and demonstration.

Jesus said, "I do always those things that please my Father." Can we do that, too, and give the world and the church less than the pure gospel? It gives something to feast on through the week, and we go back the next opportunity to get fed up again.

Not long since I heard a young brother read a text—the language of Jesus. It was full of good, rich food, but he soon drifted into biotaxy, which tickles the ears of some, but it does not feed the hungry soul. Psychology, biology, bioplasm, biotaxy, and the like, never did and never will save the soul.

Look around at our neighbors, the Christian Scientists, who teach healing and make it a hobby. Our Unity friends have the same hobby and fill their pews. Our Holiness friends preach sanctification to fill theirs. Our Seventh-day Adventist friends make the seventh day the Sabbath. With strictness and great zeal they fill theirs, but it is not according to knowledge.

We, as a people, have the biggest thing on earth and are often too cowardly to use it. And the reason we do not fill our pews is because we do not use what we have. May the Lord help us to vision the right and walk in the old, old path.

Safety in Old-fashioned Virtues

Honesty, virtue, strong faith, and self-sacrifice, I believe were characteristics of the old-fashioned Saints. I would be old-fashioned to the extent that I would practice these virtues, being humble and full of love at all times. These virtues, with added advantage of education, would make efficient, true, loyal Latter Day Saints.

The fault of the world now is not that they are too well educated, but they are not educated in the right manner. Too much training for the purpose of grasping dollars, and not enough stress on the moral qualifications to make a good man or a virtuous woman.

I believe the world is indeed growing wiser and weaker. Wise in the sciences and weak in moral fiber. Honesty is growing rare, virtue also, and love of the Lord is reserved for old age, or at such times as convenient when not otherwise occupied with something which they think more important or interesting.

Now I don't wish to be a pessimist, but the world was in just such a condition before the flood in Noah's time. Humanity had forgotten their God for pleasure and vice. So, only a few souls were saved out of many. We can see that the second coming of Christ is at hand. It is well to study the condition of the world to-day and examine ourselves and see if we are practicing the old-fashioned virtues, such as honesty, faithfulness, and self-sacrifice. Or are we drifting with the world?

ROY STRICKLIN.

New York Conference

Our June conference at Niagara Falls, New York, was presided over by Elders G. W. Robley and A. E. Stone, the latter being elected president for the ensuing year. A fine spirit prevailed throughout, and those well able to judge admitted it to be practically beyond adverse criticism in program as well.

The young were much in evidence on the program. Institute work on Friday evening, arranged by Elder W. J. Landes, was very good, aiming to demonstrate what had been done. The Niagara Falls, Ontario, choir, also their orchestra, helped materially.

A priesthood prayer meeting, Saturday afternoon, at two o'clock may have had to do with the spirit of unity which prevailed. A Sunday school session followed the district business. Brother Morris Whitehead, of Syracuse, was chosen superintendent and his wife secretary. Sister Anna Brothers Lloyd was reelected district secretary and was sent a congratulatory telegram on the birth of a daughter.

Doctor Weegar's resourcefulness was in evidence as usual on the Saturday evening program. Papers on such topics as the following were read: "The spirit of contest," "Diseases found in the two departments," "The cure," "The time thief," "What is encouragement? its value; how to cultivate it; and from whom should it come?" The program was interspersed with music of various kinds, and readings. The Niagara Falls Orioles, twenty of them, gave a splendid drill. The Niagara Falls music and entertainment to visitors were both excellent.

Toronto was largely represented by young people. We were glad to welcome them.

At close of sacramental services, Sunday morning, ordinations of four brethren took place, after which four elders gave interesting talks on miracles in New and Old Testament times, Book of Mormon times, and latter-day times.

At Women's Department session, Sunday afternoon, we were fortunate to have with us Sister Maggie Macgregor, who gave us an inspiring talk. The Buffalo local gave a home department pageant which was much enjoyed. Niagara Falls group gave a fine play on Women's Department.

MARY LEWIS MESLE.

My Visit to Lamoni

My visit to Lamoni will never be forgotten by me. My trip was for the purpose of taking a dear little girlie, less than three years old, to the Children's Home. As I was somewhat acquainted with the children's homes of the world, imagine my surprise when I was greeted with warm, sisterly love and invited to make my home with them, through my five days' stay in the beautiful little city.

I wish I could tell you all who have never visited one such home, what these homes mean to the church, to our dear old people and our children, and should mean to every Latter Day Saint.

They are not run by machinery, like the homes I had visited, but are real homes, where love and comfort and all that goes to make real homes are found. And such loving discipline! The child hardly knows, yet he gets to do the things he most desires to do. Surely these sisters, Sisters Monroe and Marks, with their good helpers, are making a great sacrifice and doing a great work. Perhaps all do not know what these good women are doing, but if all could spend five days, as I did, and see the many great tasks that fell to their lot, you in your homes, with perhaps only three or five children to do for, little realize how much making over of old clothes, mending, yes, and patching as few do, to keep the little feet and bodies clothed. Then the garden must be cared for; the flowers and lawn tended; housework and cooking done. And never one morning or evening is the worship neglected. No one knows the steps that must be taken each day in this home, and it is cheerfully and lovingly done.

Money is expended here only where it is absolutely necessary. I say, God bless and reward these dear sisters, for surely they are doing as much, if not more, than as many missionaries.

But I must not forget to tell you of the other two homes. Brother Yarrington kindly took me in his car to Liberty and Saints' Home, where Sisters Williams and Dancer kindly introduced me to their little "families" and showed me the comfortable homes. But since the old "high cost of living" struck all so hard, they have done without until they are badly in need of many things. I believe if the church realized just what these homes are doing for the church they would rally to their support. If each of us would tax ourself twenty-five cents a year for the support of these homes, surely there would be no need of such strict economy as those in charge must practice now.

I know of one order that supports two homes beautifully by taxing each member twenty cents a year, and they must pay it, too. Surely we as a church care as much for our dependent ones and their comfort as these orders of the world. So let us rally to the help of these noble men and women who have the care and burden of these homes on their hands, and send in our mite to help lighten their burdens.

I only had the pleasure of viewing "beautiful Graceland" from afar, but am sure it is a fine place for our young, and may God bless all who are trying to make these institutions a success.

I cannot close until I tell of the wonderful conference I attended at Bloomington Branch. Again I was the recipient of Brother Yarrington's kindness, in taking me in his car to enjoy one of the best spiritual feasts I ever attended. And such whole-hearted Saints! Though a stranger, they took me in. May God bless them all is my prayer.

Your sister, LAURA G. BRUNSON.

AMBOY, ILLINOIS.

Far West Stake

J. W. Rushton and J. F. Curtis of the Twelve visited Saint Joseph early in the summer, where they inaugurated a missionary campaign by local ministers. Brethren Curtis and Roberts also visited Cameron, Far West, Kingston, Hamilton, Stewartville, Maple Grove, and Guilford in the interests of this local missionary effort. At Cameron, brethren in that vicinity were gathered together, and at Guilford the brethren from Ravenwood, Ross Grove, Bedison, and Fortescue were called to meet the brethren in charge, with a view to obtaining the cooperation of all. No doubt the work will be developed in the vicinity of Hardin and Lexington Junction later on. We hope for excellent results in extending the missionary campaign through this effort inaugurated by the Quorum of Twelve. We understand it is to be introduced into the various stakes and districts of the church.

The work in general is moving forward. There is great demand for more laborers in the vineyard to cover this vast field. We are hoping that when church finances improve more missionaries may be sent into this extensive territory.

Ray C. Dice has been placed in charge of the Religio Department in the stake, for the time being, and will represent it at the August reunion. He would remain in charge did not his teaching engagement prevent longer continuance. He is well qualified for the place and we hope conditions will permit him to extend his work. He is doing well for the department at points he has been able to visit.

R. D. Weaver began a series of meetings northwest of Cameron, but was obliged to desist on account of illness, which required two operations for appendicitis. He is still at the Sanitarium, slowly recovering under the good care of all concerned, and of Sister Weaver in particular. Brother Weaver desires to continue in the stake and we trust it will be possible for him to remain in this territory.

E. F. Robertson labored extensively in the vicinity of Richmond, Hardin, and adjacent points, following with work at Fortescue and elsewhere. He has been obliged to visit his home, Franklin, Nebraska, but will soon be again in the field, in the city and elsewhere.

J. W. Roberts and J. A. Koehler have been among various branches. Brother Salyards has devoted his week-end services mostly to Saint Joseph, making other points as special duties permit, supervising the work during the week while at Independence.

Brother Joseph Bates, sent to us from the Graceland College missionary class, is at work. He was at Fortescue; is now at Maitland, Missouri, trying to find openings as such may be made available.

The HERALD contained an account of a picnic held near Far West by Saints of Cameron, Delano, Far West, Oakdale, and Kingston Branches. This annual gathering is largely attended and greatly enjoyed. Our people in this vicinity are able to make an excellent showing in numbers and quality; also to cooperate to mutual good and profitably to the cause.

The First Saint Joseph Sunday School, in charge of Superintendent R. E. Stone and assistants, held its annual picnic at Bartlett Park July 4. The gathering was excellent throughout, and was generally enjoyed by church people and their friends—a goodly gathering and a good time.

The First Branch was favored with report of its delegation to the late International Sunday School Convention at Kansas City, on Sunday, July 9, when Sisters Edna Christianson, Anna Salyards, and Minnie Scott Dobson addressed the congregations at the morning and evening services. Their reports covered the general program of the convention—methods, organization, and equipment, school attendance and nonattendance, religious education, including training for leadership, teaching, etc.; also music, art work in religion, including pageantry, vocal and instrumental music, paintings, illustrated lectures, etc., etc., a very comprehensive and interesting summary. Indeed, the one man delegate wisely refrained from having anything special to say, under the circumstances, in the face of such able presentations by the intelligent, cultured sisters named. There are times when even a man should know enough to keep still. However, we gladly welcome fine talent, and hope, pray, and work for the appearance and development of "lots" of it. The church needs big men and women with intelligent minds and great hearts, everywhere. The work is a great work and it requires largeness of heart and of mind to do much for its advancement.

Church life in the city, in the First, Second, and Third Branches, also at the South Park Mission, generally is advancing. One noticeably encouraging feature in all the places named is the steadily increasing number of young people who are becoming more definitely attentive to church privileges. A number of capable young men give promise of clear-cut usefulness in their respective branches. Young women are also preparing for the very necessary work that must be done by them. The various branches of study and service in the Women's Department, including Temple Builders, Orioles, and others, are being taken up actively and systematically.

It is coming to be more fully comprehended that service in the church, by both ministry and laity, means well-assimilated systematic courses of reading and thinking; that it is not enough that our people believe in the divinity of the church and are well disposed towards it. To reach the goal required and to give the service needed, spiritual, intellectual, and moral education are necessary, by our people. "Bearing testimony" to the truth logically means attainment in knowledge of its principles and use of personal powers in efficient living and doing. If we can develop a consecration of soul and body, of mind and heart, which shall be manifest in capable service, as members and ministers in our respective branches, we have substantial ground for confidence in the success of the church; otherwise we have no reasonable ground for such hope. To be "called" is to respond at our very best, in consecrated talent and real, steady work. It means this, or it has no meaning worth while.

The coming reunion of the stake, at Stewartville, August 18 to 27, is expected to be "better than ever." Last year's gathering was the most spiritual and social and intellectual we have noted here—why not a better one with increasing experience? Preparations are being made for prayer meetings, class and lecture work, preaching, department programs, recreation, etc. The end sought is not merely recreational or vacational—it is mainly to cooperate with a view to sending back into every branch a corps of trained teachers, leaders, workers in all lines of church activity. We trust none will miss the mark by merely seeking passing enjoyment. Train yourself for better and more clearly effectual service in your own branch! Keep in mind the object in view; to make our branches illuminating centers of spiritual, moral, and social training, where our young people will find life largely and inspiringly visioned, competently interpreted, and wisely lived—this is life—high thinking and noble doing. In this both you and they, and with you others who shall see the Christ made prominent in the good work of the church—these will join with you in due time, and your work will bring glory to God and substantial happiness to yourself and others. What is your program in assisting your branch president, as an elder, priest, teacher, deacon, or member? Is it a big program—or is it practically none at all? What are we doing, what thinking about? How are we using time and talent? Let us not wait for some traveling elder to build up our branch—he could only point the way, at best. To attack the problem and solve it ourselves, as local members of our home branches, with everybody busy, we would soon have a steadily growing church.

Brother Hawker Sloan, formerly of Cameron, has been and is yet quite ill at his home in Independence. Brother Sloan is one of our best men, a staff and support to the church in Far West Stake. We pray the Lord to spare him for further service.

Brother R. S. Budd is busy, doing good work at Cameron as heretofore. Brother Samuel Twombly is on the job in the northern end of the territory. Wish we could name all the good people worthy of mention.

Brother S. J. Hines writes from Pleasant Grove Branch: "We have had quite an addition to our branch by baptism. We are proud of the earnest, intelligent young people baptized here. The Lord has not forsaken us; we are reaping results of years of earnest work. I believe there are more to follow." Such reports will be quite general, from now on, from branches where good work is steadfastly persisted in.

We learn that Brother Caspar Hinderks, of Stewartsville, passed on to his reward. He was one of the old-time members of the former German Branch, widely known as among the pioneer members of the church in the vicinity of Stewartsville. He is survived by Sister Hinderks, his sons Moses and Elias, and other members of his family.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Yes, Lincoln is still on the map but in a rather feeble, indifferently condition. We have not written for some time, since there seemed so little to report.

One of the nicest sessions we have had for a long time was the Mothers' Day program, given at 11 a. m. on that day. These special days seem to be very valuable in keeping up the interest.

We were favored and much encouraged by a visit from our district president, H. A. Higgins, and F. S. Gatenby, of Central Nebraska District, some few weeks ago.

Brother J. L. Parker, our former pastor, and family, arrived in the city July 6, for a brief visit with Sister Parker's parents, Brother and Sister Baker, and the Saints. The evening of the 7th, the Saints gathered at Brother Baker's home, where a fine program was rendered, refreshments were served, and a very pleasant evening spent by all present. Incidentally, Brother Baker was presented with a nice little sum of money as a token of appreciation to him, our present pastor.

Sunday, at 11 a. m., Brother J. L. Parker was our speaker. Following the service the Saints had a basket dinner in the basement of the church. This had been planned to give all an opportunity to meet Brother and Sister Parker, who were leaving that afternoon. A fine time and a fine dinner were enjoyed, and we bade them farewell with the expressed hope that they would soon return to make their abode with us.

If I remember correctly, our letter written soon after Brother Parker's moving to Des Moines, after being abbreviated by the editors caused us to say that this move to Des Moines had been made upon the advice of the Bishop, which was not correct, and might cause some to put a wrong construction on the matter. The move was made purely as a matter of convenience in his business and had no bearing on the work in the church. What was meant to be said was that Brother Parker's quitting the mission field for a time and taking up secular work, had been done with the proper advice and because of the financial stress.

At the present time all the services we have are the Sunday school at 9.45 and church services at 11 o'clock. Midweek prayer service was abandoned long ago. The Religio later was given up, and then the Sunday evening service. There may be good and sufficient reasons for all these moves. We are not a large organization and the summer season here is always slack, which is somewhat discouraging, but we hope for new life when fall comes.

The Women's Department has decided to meet every two weeks at the home of Sister Pearl Scofield and take up the study of the Book of Mormon. Does some one think we are behind the times to do that, instead of taking up some of the newer courses presented? Well, just how many of you are thoroughly familiar with the book and able to defend it? Ask yourself the question.

BLANCHE I. ANDREWS.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Tent meetings began June 25 on a lot purchased for the erection of a church building to care for the Riverside Mission, the building of which has begun, and the basement and frame are nearly completed. Brother J. A. Gillen did the preaching till July 9. Since that time Brother O. Salisbury has delivered the word. The interest is not all that was desired. Bugs and mosquitoes, with summer outings, and heated term, which has caused some sickness, has, no doubt, been partially the cause.

Several of the Saints are taking outing trips, some to California, some to the east as far as Philadelphia, some to Colorado, and some to Minnesota, and it may be some elsewhere that have not come to our attention.

Marriages among the young people have frequently occurred of late, some going as far as California to enter that holy state, the state of matrimony.

The strike has no doubt affected the spirituality of some, but we are glad to note as little disaffection with the duties of attending the services as we have.

There will be a two-day meeting and a called conference of the district at the Boomer Branch the last Saturday and Sunday of this month.

A hailstorm which extended over but a small area, did much damage to the crops of the Saints at Hazel Dell Branch. We learn that all the crops except the corn were a total loss, but the corn is coming out, and will yield a crop.

With the added expense of living resulting from the prices fixed by different associations, it seems that the Government has not begun too soon to regulate this feature of the consumer. We trust that God may give great vision to the officials who represent the consumers, so that the burden of life may not prevent them from the enjoyment of the necessities of life. Even though some may have more than they need, we are interested in all having what they need, and in some way we trust God will move upon those who have more than they need to minister so that suffering will be less than it otherwise would be, as I believe has been the case in many instances during and since the war especially.

Some preparation has already been made for the coming reunion, to be held in Council Bluffs. We are expecting a profitable gathering.

Brother B. S. Lambkin has so far recovered that he has returned to his home. This was a wonderful recovery. To God be the praise.

Fruit is quite plentiful in this part of the State, but the price is very high thus far. God has favored the people, but the people have not favored themselves as well. In more ways than one is peace being taken from the earth. God has also produced coal in abundance, but the people will not get it ready for their own use. The Lord has provided a government of the people and for the people, but it does not seem that all are possessed with wisdom to know how best to apply the advantages of the government to their profit and enjoyment. This is apparent in many ways in the present age.

Parkersburg, West Virginia

We are having several meetings now which keep us pretty busy and take most of our spare time. Brother Thomas Mills, of Moundsville, was down to see us in April and stayed three weeks with us and preached for us. Brother Thomas Newton came in soon after and they worked together and we had some good meetings. They make a good pair, as they are both Englishmen. One young lady was baptized while they were here. There have been a few Saints who have moved in here of late whom we hope will be a help to us.

Brother Newton organized a unit of the Women's Department, acting under the instruction of our district organizer, Sister Clara Warren. Sister Desda Beall was selected as leader and they have been busy getting organized for work. They have taken the name of Zion Workers. They have been sewing and have sold some of the things that have been made.

In May the local brethren made their first attempt to preach. The talks have been rather short, but have been well received by the members. Those who have been speaking are Baronet Beall, George Criswell, and the writer.

Our Sunday school had a very enjoyable picnic at the City Park, July 4, with twenty-two present.

Several of the Saints here are planning on going to the Kirtland reunion. We do not have a reunion in our district. Our conference will be the last of next month, out in the "good old country" near Harrisville. All are looking forward to a good conference and time when all the Saints of the district can meet for a few days. I see from the HERALD that we have a new missionary, Brother Leon Burdick. We have not had the pleasure of meeting him yet.

In closing I must say a good word for the HERALD. I enjoy reading its many good articles. It is the best paper that comes to me. I think it is worthy of being regularly read by all the membership. I do not see how we can keep in close touch with the work without it.

HARRY SMITH.

Holden Stake

SEDALIA. Elder W. S. Macrae, of the Stake Presidency, and Sister Macrae were with us over Sunday, July 2. There were no meetings in Sedalia, but several of our number accompanied Elders Macrae and House to Fairview Schoolhouse, twenty-three miles north of Sedalia, for an all-day meeting. There were also several in attendance from Marshall and Houstonia. Elder House led six young people into the waters of baptism and they were confirmed by Elders House, Macrae, and Levi Phelps. One child was blessed, after which Brother Macrae delivered an excellent discourse to a crowded house. At noon a basket dinner was enjoyed by all.

What About the British Isles Mission?

As one travels round the various parts of this no mean mission, so full of historical places and memories sacred only to those who understand the sacrifice, patience, and long-suffering endured by those early pioneers, who persevered against bigoted ignorance, prejudice, and all the various forms of opposition to be met in such highly conservative places as England, Scotland, and Wales, (being an Irishman, I must not say too much about the nation just now, except to state the conviction that if left alone, she, like the Saints, can make success shine out from her own efforts, to govern and control her own affairs, socially, politically, yes, and religiously. It is the interference of outsiders who think they can run the other fellow's business better than they can run their own), one may be asked, and rightly so, "Why does not the church make more progress than she does?" "What's wrong with the folks, anyway?"

As the missionaries travel round, they report finding in the branches good men and women, both old and young, capable of great things, fit to meet any and every emergency that may arise.

First and foremost the answer comes, "Leadership, leadership."

We have members who have stood the acid test of time, the great revealer of the secrets of men's stability and talents. Yes, the school of human experience defies the caliber of the individual and leaves him naked for the eye to see and the mind to understand.

We look back (dangerous practice though it may be at times) over the few years of the past, and consider the men who have been sent to this mission to help build it up to maintain itself, a thing it can do, despite the pitiable condition it is in at the present, and ask, "How far have we progressed in the last twenty years?"

Among some who have come here are the following: J. W. Gillen, G. T. Griffiths, James Caffall, E. L. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, President Joseph Smith, R. C. Evans, R. Bullard, John Davis, E. B. Morgan, U. W. Greene, R. May, and recently President F. M. Smith, T. W. Williams, J. A. Gillen (the man who left us believing himself a failure, despite the fact that he won the hearts of the Saints and friends here more than any other member of the Twelve ever did).

Various things were suggested, changes in district presidencies, branch presidencies, changes in district boundaries, changes in names of districts, ordinations to various offices in the priesthood, changes in the methods and times of reporting of labor, various appointments and recommendations to the missionary staff, and yet we are further in the mire of despondency than ever we have been in the memory of the writer, who has had twenty years in ministerial activity, chiefly in the Manchester District, first as a deacon in two of the largest branches in the district, then as a priest, and as an elder since 1912. Labored as a missionary and took part in some of the hottest periods of attack against the church by the sectarian forces we ever had to encounter.

Well, what's wrong? Why don't we grow and develop, after all the experience of the past, all the advice and counsel that the leading men of the church could give us? Why cannot we proselytize when all the churches and societies around us are admitting their inability to hold their own members, to say nothing of attracting converts to their ranks, and men are crying out for "The man with the message," "The man with the clarified vision," "O God, give us prophets," "O God, give us men."

First, we want personal conviction of the truthfulness of our message, its possibilities and own power to reduce it to common, everyday practice. In the language of J. A.

Gillen, to witness by our deeds the divine possibilities in the human, or to bring out the kingdom of God from the midst of all this, I believe, to the actual realities of the kingdom of God is amongst men.

Second, to know that our district and branch officers are only human, like ourselves, and can only reflect the greatness of the work just so far as we have confidence in them; and to feel they are striving to understand their duties and the possibilities of the general membership so as to know just how much to ask, whom to ask, and when to ask, that every circumstance may be rightly understood and the right men set to meet it; that out of the united efforts success may come to the Saints, advancement to the church, and glory and praise to the Father of us all.

In contrast to this we find that jealousy is prominent amongst our leading men. The difficulty along this line is in the fact that these very men do not know they are jealous, or how far the said weakness both mars their efforts and hurts the work.

Others want to occupy, but are not qualified, therefore hold aloof from discharging the duties of their office and calling, and get annoyed if some good-intending Saint, trying to help them, tells them how to overcome the drawbacks to efficiency.

The greatness of future possibility rests with the branch presidents, and their officers getting into close touch with the membership, so as to understand them, teach and counsel them, so that unity may prevail and the work develop and grow.

District conferences can never solve the difficulty until the presidents of districts know just how far to coordinate with the various branches of the districts, with the various officers of the Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Departments, for the simple reason that as, with the late war, failure met the allies on every hand until they learned by bitter experience the way to success was through the means of coordination of the leaders of the various nations and the various branches of the forces, sea, land, and air; that policy, and that alone, brought out the finer qualities of the men, and success crowned the united efforts.

What is the value of mission reunions?

Here is this great mission without a head, no person to whom one can go for advice. This is a grave mistake and ought never to be, not even for a day. Further, there has been no reunion since the visit of President F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams. One might say, "Oh, but conditions would not permit holding a week's reunion." Quite so, but why not have held the usual three-day affair so long practiced in this mission with great success? It is a noted fact and the proud boast of the Saints, that whatever they were asked to do within reason, they have done. We did expect great things after the war was over, and the visit of the president of the church was an accomplished fact.

Schemes were outlined, recommendations made, ordinations carried into effect, districts renamed, their boundaries altered, all with the idea of giving the work a stimulus, and creating amongst the Saints a desire to come into line and work, but we feel disappointed with the prevailing conditions.

One great drawback to our progress has been the high mark to which unemployment has grown, with the consequent lack of money, meaning shortage of food, and the crippling of our schemes and ideas.

Another is the seeming isolation of this mission from the general church. On all hands complaints are heard of the treatment meted out to us. Our Religio local (the East Manchester) entered into its majority this year. To celebrate the event we arranged special attractions for the weekend. Arranged a supper (tea party) and concert, for which we had the help of a great professional person, that came free to the Religio. Although the bill had to be met, it was done by one who has great sympathy with Religio work. On Sunday we held special services with special speakers, and during the afternoon Brother J. A. Gillen (who has won the hearts of all young folks) was presented with a model ship and lighthouse as a token of regard from Warrington Local. Particulars were sent to HERALD and Autumn Leaves for publication, but to our surprise not a word has yet appeared in either periodical, despite the fact we wrote in February and it is now July. [The presentation to the Independence Religio was mentioned in the Independence items at the time it occurred. No such items as suggested here ever reached the editors of the HERALD or Autumn Leaves.—EDITORS.] Our letters and communications get muddled up and misquoted and a general mixup is the result.

To sum up the position, give us a mission supervisor to take charge of the work of the mission, get the elders who are lying idle into line of work. We have about twenty in this Manchester District who are doing very little, if anything. Let district authorities coordinate with mission authorities and both do so with Religio, Sunday school, women's work, and every line of activity that comes within the purview of church activity.

Submitted without feeling, with the hope that good may accrue and finally success to the work we all love.

Yours in bonds,

EDWARD MALONEY.

Man Here and Hereafter

A valuable new book, by W. J. Haworth, of Australia.

This is the title of a book, of which we recently received a consignment from our Australian Publishing House. The author is Elder W. J. Haworth, and the manuscript represents years of consecrated study and labor. Its publication was sanctioned by the First Presidency, after an examination by the head of the Department of Publicity, under their direction.

The book was not written as a church pronouncement on the matters treated, but our chief publicity officer made the following comment upon the opinions expressed by the author in his report to the Presidency: "From all the reading I have done, his views follow very closely after the views of most of our men."

Of its literary value, Elder Arthur E. McKim, General Publicity Agent, writes: "It is a splendidly written book, and shows a great deal of work as well as a vast store of information acquired by Brother Haworth."

The scheme of the book takes in the nature of man here and his destiny hereafter, and treats, incidentally, the whole of the matters involved therein. Following is a list of the titles of chapters:

1. Introduction; stating the case.
2. Body and flesh; new points against materialism.
3. Matter and mind; the mind proven to be spiritual.
4. Matter, mind, and spirit; proving the constitution of the soul.
5. Whence comes the Spirit? various theories examined.
6. The nature of spirits; most valuable proof.
7. Scriptural use of the words spirit and soul.
8. Mortal, immortal, and immortality.

9. The historical point of view; containing most valuable evidence not previously available in any book on this subject.
10. The spirit consciously survives the death of the body.
11. The materialist's hell; theories of Adventists, Christadelphians, and others exploded.
12. The popular conception of hell; a hot chapter.
13. A more moderate view of hell; a milder climate.
14. The purpose of hell; this chapter deals with future probation, supplying evidence never previously published in any one book.
15. Objections examined; in which the various objections to future probation are considered in detail.
16. The resurrection; an interesting study.
17. With what body do they come? what the Scriptures teach on this phase of the question.
18. Every man in his own order.
19. Who will be destroyed at Christ's second coming?
20. The coming kingdom—the millennial future.
21. The judgment seat of Christ; millennial conditions.
22. The great white throne; the various rewards.
23. Falling from grace; the lot of the finally impenitent—the “sons of perdition.”
24. Conclusion.

Ministry and membership, we are constantly meeting Adventists, Christadelphians, Russellites, and other mortal-soulists. The twenty-four chapters outlined above set forth our beliefs on the matters named in considerable detail, and make available to all, in concise form, that which the author has searched hundreds of volumes for. Our views on the matters in question are unique. This book presents them in a way which aims to make a special appeal to those who do not already believe as we do. On sale at $2.50 a copy, postpaid.

Cheerful Helpers

I love to tell of the happy experiences that come to me in the Lord's work, the things that will inspire faith in God's work and that stir the hearts of his people with a deeper spirit of consecration.

God is good, and what a joy it brings to us to see his Saints appreciate his goodness.

To-day a widow lady came into the office from down in the Ozarks. She laid down $35 in cash and said, “Brother Keir, I want to give:

“To the Auditorium fund	$15.00
“Christmas offering	10.00
“Children's Home	5.00
“Sanitarium	5.00”

I felt satisfied in my own mind that she was a woman of ordinary circumstances, for I knew that it was with difficulty that people in that section of the country were able to make a living. So I said to her, “What kind of a country is it around —?”

“Oh,” she said, “it is rough and stony and the roads are very poor.”

“How many acres have you under cultivation?” I asked.

“About thirty-five, from which I get two fifths of the crop.”

“Then your income is not very large,” I ventured.

“No,” said she, “only about $100 per year.”

I wish you could have seen the look of satisfaction that was pictured on that face as she made this freewill offering.

As she left the office I bowed my head and asked God to reward her a hundredfold in material things and a great outpouring of spiritual blessings.

May many catch this spirit of helpfulness.

Sincerely yours, JAMES F. KEIR.

Independence

An auto load of Saints drove from here Sunday to Greenwood, about 20 miles southeast of Independence, where Elder J. W. A. Bailey has been holding tent meetings with an average attendance of 110 and once reached a total of about 400. This was the closing service at this place, with four baptized on the last day. From there the tent will be moved to Lees Summit for a time.

The Dramatic Club of the Religio in Independence, composed of about twenty-five members, plans to produce on one evening during the General Conference a church historical pageant, written for the occasion by Vida E. Smith, who has been in the city this summer and has been working with those who will manage the affair. It will portray scenes and incidents clustering around the earliest of Independence and Missouri church events and will emphasize the importance of the home as a factor in Zion. We hope the day is not far distant when we may preserve these renditions by motion picture films, so they will be available to all our communities. At least this should be written for publication and made available to those who wish to impress definite religious lessons through visualization.

An interesting local event was the Graceland Rally last Monday evening (24th), at the home of Jessie and Mabel Morant on Van Horn Road. It was attended by a large number of former Graceland students and those who intend to be. Speeches were made by S. A. Burgess, I. A. Smith, G. N. Briggs, R. V. Hopkins, E. Y. Hunker. Games were played and a good time had. A general good-fellowship spirit prevailed, culminating in a simple organization headed by R. A. Wight as president, Louise Hagler, secretary-treasurer, to hold a similar meeting once or twice each year. A goodly number plan to attend Graceland this year from here.

While no such meeting by the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences has been held that we are aware of, those in charge of its interests wish to be considered as always on the job. The “school for those who must work but would like to study” seeks to be of the utmost service, and to this end offers free courses in cultural and practical subjects. It has already done much good, and as a larger list of alumni develops, this should and will inspire more interest and a larger enrollment.

And as the days go by the school of nursing is making its bid for students—and getting them. Though the hot days of summer are debilitating, they will soon pass and leave us at the entrance of another school year, when all should arrange for some definite study.

The electric power being off in that section of Kansas City at the time set for sending the radio sermon Sunday, no program was broadcasted. S. A. Burgess will be the speaker next Sunday. The music will be by the Y. K. T. Quartet, of Independence. Tune in at 2 p. m. at 360 meters.

The speaker at the Stone Church Sunday morning was S. A. Burgess, with J. F. Keir at the lawn meeting, which is such a pleasant place it draws from the other services in the city to a considerable extent. Brother Keir discussed in a frank and helpful manner our attitude towards bits of information and misinformation that circulate among us. The sermon was reported and will be a fine contribution on the various aspects of the subject when printed.

Brother R. T. Goullee, of London, England, contributed pleasingly to the Religio program Friday evening with several pipe organ selections, and he also played for the choir and congregational singing at the Sunday morning service. His technique and expression were much appreciated.

Bishops Keir and Becker attended the agricultural meeting in Lamoni last week, reported elsewhere in this issue.

An accident occurred at Joplin, Missouri, during the night of the 25th in which Elder George E. Harrington, former president of Independence Stake, was seriously injured by being struck on the head with an iron tent stake. He with others was trying to make the gospel tent at that place more secure during a storm, with the results stated. His son, Doctor G. L. Harrington, hurried to his side and soon brought him to the Independence Sanitarium, where he has been making good progress towards recovery.

Brother F. T. Mussell, in the Sanitarium for some time, has been having quite a struggle with pleurisy and pneumonia. Brother R. D. Weaver expects soon to be back to normal.

The Second Independence Sunday School, with an average attendance of 292 for the past quarter, installed the tithing card system some time ago, just prior to the time when the system was advertised and recommended by the Presiding Bishop. Without special campaign among the children, to date 99 have made payments on the cards. This includes children up to and including the junior age (10, 11, and 12 years). The Stone Church Sunday school started a little later and have included the young people, or early senior age. The plan is much appreciated by those who give it thoughtful attention, as an aid to the practice as well as preaching of tithing. It is not a new plan, having been in use in various schools for a long time, but like some other good things, needs periodic revival where through neglect it falls into disuse. The Presiding Bishopric recently reported having distributed free over 1,700 of these cards and were ordering a new supply printed.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church is undergoing extensive interior decoration; workmen are gilding, painting, varnishing, and papering throughout; repairs are also being done. This was very much needed and when finished will add materially to its appearance.

The Malvern and Argentine Saints held a beautiful baptismal service at Central, July 23, when three from Argentine were baptized by Brother Higdon and four from Malvern by H. J. Bootman. The attendance of the Holy Spirit intensified the sacredness of the occasion. Brother Higdon baptized one, July 16, at Argentine, bringing the total so far to four during the series of meetings at that place. He continued there as long as the people came to hear. Though the weather is warm, he is not perturbed over wilted collars, but shows unabated energy. (Later. The meetings closed July 30.)

Northeast Mission shows diligence in its Religio Department, debates on live topics being the drawing feature now. They report two baptisms recently.

Second Church reports three baptisms since last heard from.

Grandview is on tiptoe just now, as they expect to begin work on a new church soon. A meeting of committees and other workers of the stake was held at Central July 25, to organize for ways and means to that end. It is surely due them, as the present meeting place is inadequate from all points of view.

The strike of maintenance of way men on the various railroads is being felt in the stake, as a number of the brethren have felt compelled to go out with others of the union with the usual privations attending a long strike resulting. Various lines of business suffer for lack of material and goods, owing to curtailed service which in turn places their men on part time, so our men suffer whether strikers or not, if employed by them. Of course when the railroads really begin to suffer the strikers no doubt will be called back; those not needed can seek work elsewhere.

The quarterly business meeting of the stake will be held Monday night, August 21, the devotional conference services usually held on the Sunday preceding being omitted on account of the vacation period.

Spokane, Washington

We want the readers of the HERALD to know that Spokane is still on the map of religious progress. The writer, having recently been transferred to this district, was more than pleased to find a goodly portion of the missionary spirit in the officers of the Spokane Branch. And better still, that spirit is being expressed in terms of active service.

Aside from the regular weekly services in the church, arrangements have been made for street preaching every night except Saturday. Brother Charles Crabb has been given charge of this part of the work, and his work is commendable. Brother Crabb works every day and preaches on the street six nights a week. Oh, yes; he works hard, and is tired, but that doesn't count with Charley; he is right there just the same. And God is abundantly blessing him and his work. He is being assisted in this work by Brethren W. W. Woods, Reuben Porter, Joseph Stockdale, and others.

Brother George Leech, better known as "Grandpa" Leech, is also one of our faithful missionaries, and is a living demonstration of the fact that if one has the proper amount of determination no ordinary obstacles will prevent him from helping in this great work. Grandpa's physical eyes no longer function, but his spiritual vision grows brighter as the days go by. Feeling his way with his cane and counting the blocks to keep his bearing, he spends hours and days distributing literature, inviting people to the services, and telling the gospel story to those who care to listen. We need more Grandpa Leeches in the church.

Elder Carl Crumb and myself are holding tent meetings every night in the vicinity of Spokane. We are having a regular attendance and good interest. We expect to continue these tent meetings for several weeks.

Elder Oscar Case, district president and branch president of Spokane Branch, is making good use of all his spare time visiting branches of the district, caring for the needs of this branch, helping the boys with the street meetings, and rendering valuable assistance in the tent meetings.

And thus the good work goes on. Hundreds of the people of Spokane are hearing the restored gospel, not because Spokane Branch has better opportunities than other branches, nor because her officers are more zealous or intelligent than others, but for the simple reason that they are organized and working together. If each branch in the church had the faculty of converting good intentions into actual service, the 1920 slogan of our president would have been realized before next General Conference. Unfortunately, too often the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak.

We are looking forward to many pleasant, and we trust profitable, experiences in carrying out the missionary program of this district. In order that we may waste no time or money in finding the missionary needs of the various parts of the field, I am going to ask that branch officers and isolated Saints kindly write to the undersigned at South 231 Smith Street, Spokane, Washington, and advise as to the missionary needs and opportunities of your community. This restored gospel must go to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. We are anxious to cooperate with you in doing our bit towards carrying out this great commission.

Your coworker for Christ,

ELI BRONSON.

Saint Louis, Missouri

"The prettiest baptismal service I ever saw," was what one sister remarked Sunday morning, July 23, after eight of our Sunday school children had been baptized. It seemed very appropriate that Brother Robert A. Lloyd, the Sunday school superintendent, should baptize most of them, even though the ceremony by Brother Hampsen was just as impressive. If we could produce the smile on Jane Lloyd's face as she looked up at her father, gave him her hand, and stepped down into the water, it would be a lesson on faith to many older ones who fear to trust our Father's care.

On this Children's Day occurred the baptism of Alice Evans, whose mother, grandmother, great-grandfather, and great-great-grandmother were all members of the church, and the first two of whom were present in person at her baptism. We think it possible that her maternal grandfather, great-grandfather, and great-great-grandfather were also members of the church. We know that the first three were. Have any of the sixth generation of any family been baptized yet?

To a gentleman standing near the door after the morning sermon some one asked, "Will you go down stairs and see the baptizing?" I had seen him at several preaching services, but thought him a stranger to our gospel; hence my surprise when he smilingly answered, "I certainly intend to go. I have two children being baptized this morning."

E. BURGESS.

Seattle, Washington

With sadness we note the severe illness of our dear Brother John Hartnell, of Sumas. His affliction of long standing has assumed a worse form of late. He is tenderly cared for at his home. Brother Hartnell is universally honored by all who know him, as a worthy example of genuine Christianity.

We learned recently of the expected soon removal from our district of our beloved missionary, S. S. Smith, and family. It brings to us a feeling of sadness and loneliness. His new appointment in Central Texas will gain a faithful worker for the cause, while Zion will be benefited by the residence of his family. May abundant success follow the labors of Brother S. S. Smith. He thinks of making the trip to Independence by auto.

We learn of the presence of our new missionary, Brother T. C. Kelley, in Spokane, and will soon meet him at our reunion at Centralia, August 11 to 20, for which preparations are being perfected for a first-class reunion.

Our Tacoma mission is still being continued by the energy of Brother J. O. Hower and Brother and Sister Gordon Thomas, with Sister Snyder in charge of the Sunday school. We expect to visit them on Sunday next. The work there was crippled by the removal of Sisters Mary and Emily Thomas to Independence. They were great helps to the work.

Our Sunday school enjoyed a pleasant picnic on the 15th at Woodland Park. About seventy partook of the sumptuous dinner.

We are about to lose another of our good workers in the departure soon of Brother Medell Brown, who will take up residence in Independence. Medell is a pleasant spirited young man and we hope for him abundant success in Zion.

A recent visit to Everett found the little flock still united and at work. They are preparing for a special service at the opening of their church which still is not completed, as the work is done by a few and that in the evenings after their days of work are done. No definite time is set for the opening. Brother G. R. Brundage was about to remove his family and make his residence there, he being at work in a mill, and this will surely be a help to the cause.

J. M. TERRY.

MISCELLANEOUS

Appointment of District President

Elder C. Edward Miller having presented his resignation as president of the Saint Louis District, the First Presidency hereby appoints Elder G. F. Barraclough to preside over the district until the convening of the next district conference.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Appointments and Releases

By concurrence of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, the following appointments and changes have been made:

Peter Muceus, Scandinavia, missionary supervisor.

E. Y. Hunker, Norway and Sweden, missionary.

Mrs. E. Y. Hunker, Norway and Sweden, unordained missionary.

C. Edward Miller, transferred from Saint Louis District to Toronto District, Toronto objective, local.

Daniel Sorden, British Isles Mission, missionary.

F. V. Elliott, released at his own request.

Richard Bullard, England, Southern District, local.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

Square Deal Dining Hall at Missouri State Fair

The Holden Stake will operate the Square Deal Dining Hall at the State Fair, Sedalia, Missouri, August 19 to 26, the proceeds of which will be turned over to the building fund to assist in building churches where needed in the stake. We will be glad to have the Saints attending the fair visit us. We are located one and one half blocks west of the Grand Stand on the street leading west to the New Swine Building.

We will furnish pass to grounds, room and board, to hustlers fifteen years of age or over, who will help in kitchen and dining room two or more days. You will have time between meals to see the fair. You will help if you bring enough bedding for a cot.

Write the undersigned at once, stating the day and time of arrival. If not met at the train, call Square Deal Dining Hall and you will be met at the gate with a pass.

Do not come expecting to be cared for unless arrangements have been made.

W. S. MACRAE.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, Box 125.

Ensign Does Not Carry Notices

It should be borne in mind by secretaries and other officials sending notices of various kinds for publication that since the first of the year, when Zion's Ensign changed its policy to become more strictly a missionary paper, it has not carried such items as notices of conferences, reunions, two-day meetings, obituaries, etc. The HERALD is the only periodical that carries these notices, which it is attempting to do as fully and as promptly as possible. Those who have been sending duplicate notices for insertion in both papers need no longer continue the practice.

Missionary news from all sources, interesting letters and articles, clippings of special interest on missionary subjects, etc., are welcomed by the editor of the Ensign, who hopes to use the space formerly devoted to miscellaneous notices to better advantage in making the periodical of general interest to both members and nonmembers.

Quorum Notices

Eastern Michigan, First Quorum of Priests, at Port Huron, September 2 and 3. Annual business session will be held during conference, election of officers and other very important matters to come before the quorum. Full attendance requested. Get your full report into the secretary's hands with dues at once, so he can make report to conference. Fred W. Cadow, president; W. R. Curtiss, secretary.

Department of Music

Correction of Address. The address of Elder James Schofield, musical director of the Northern District of England, is hereby corrected to read 164 Stanton Street, Clayton, Manchester, England, instead of at Birmingham, as originally published.

-ARTHUR H. MILLS, Secretary.

Conference Notices

Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, during the reunion, August 26 and 27. Sunday school convention the day previous, August 25. Branch clerks send all reports to C. G. Smallwood, Hockerville, Oklahoma.

Chatham, at Bothwell, Ontario, September 1, 2, and 3, 1922. Election of officers and delegates to General Conference. Branch and other reports to be sent to the undersigned by August 15, 1922. Anthony R. Hewitt, secretary, 41 Lowe Street, Chatham, Ontario.

Western Maine, at Vinalhaven, August 26 and 27. A large attendance is expected and a grand time anticipated. Also election of district Sunday school officers. A. Begg, president, Vinalhaven, Maine.

Two-Day Meetings

Michigan, at Bay Port, August 6, one-day meeting; at Shabbona, August 12 and 13, two-day meeting; at Uby, August 20, dedication services; at Caseville, August 26 and 27, two-day meeting. Bring well-filled baskets. Good speakers will be provided. Come and help build up the kingdom of God. William M. Grice, president.

Requests for Prayer

F. M. Burch, of Green City, Missouri, writes requesting the Saints to fast and pray for Sister Elda Haywood, who has been sorely afflicted.

Convention Notices

Western Montana, at Race Track, August 25. Mrs. G. W. Thorburn, superintendent.

Reunion Notices

Kewanee, at Galva, Illinois, August 11 to 20. George Sackfield, president.

After August 5, all orders for Kirtland reunion should be sent to J. D. Lewis, Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. 2.

Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, August 18 to 27. Order tents of A. M. Powell, Hartshorn, Oklahoma. John S. White.

Nauvoo. We regret to inform the Saints that the Nauvoo district reunion as previously announced in the SAINTS' HERALD for August 18 to 27 is called off. This decision is necessary because of conditions arising from the railroad strike and others over which we have no control. A bigger and better reunion is contemplated for next year. To meet the present need, there will be two-day meetings held in each branch of the district. D. J. Williams.

Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3. Admitted to be an ideal camping ground by all who have seen it. Lots of room, fine shade, good wells of cold water, grounds rolling, no marshland. Madison is a hard city to excel in beauty. Come and see. Tents: 12 by 12, 4-foot wall, $4; 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $3. Breakfast and supper, 20 cents each; dinner, 25 cents. Speakers: Apostle R. C. Russell, Patriarch W. A. McDowell, Elders B. C. Flint, E. J. Lenox, L. Houghton, and J. O. Dutton. Send all orders for tents not later than August 15 to J. O. Dutton, Janesville, Wisconsin, Route 8, Box 36. Later than August 15, address J. O. Dutton at 117 West Niffin Street, in care of Carl Wirth, Madison.

Central Michigan, at Pinconning, August 11 to 20. The young people of Central Michigan are very enthusiastic over their reunion. We realize this is a big undertaking and we need the cooperation of every Latter Day Saint in the district to make it successful. Any assistance rendered will be greatly appreciated. A cordial invitation is extended to old and young of all the district to attend. Every train will be met. We expect to have with us Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, Brethren Max Carmichael, John Grice, William Fligg, O. J. Hawn, B. H. Doty, and those of our immediate district. Meals free. Everyone is expected to bring camping necessities, such as lamps, towels, wash basins, etc. Straw will be provided for bedding. Don't forget to bring bathing suits. We suggest that all Latter Day Saints who care to, in their devotion to God will make our reunion a subject of prayer and fasting. Mildred Mitchell, secretary.

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts will meet in joint reunion August 18 to 27, inclusive, at Woodbine, Iowa. Ample shade, good water, electric lights, well-drained grounds. Everyone planning to attend should be present for the first day's activities, and remain during the entire reunion. The program provides for each day being well filled—the departments occupying each afternoon at 2.30, with the exception of the two Sundays and the last Saturday. Young people's prayer meeting every morning at 8 o'clock; general prayer meeting at 9 o'clock. Meeting for organization will take place at 11 o'clock, Friday morning, August 18. Friday evening at 8 o'clock an address of welcome by the mayor of Woodbine, followed by a special musical program. Tuesday evening Graceland College students will feature in an interesting program. With these exceptions, each morning and evening will be devoted to preaching. Saturday afternoon, August 19, the Religio Department will occupy; Monday afternoon, the Sunday School; Tuesday afternoon, the Health Department; Wednesday afternoon, the Women's Department; Thursday afternoon, Orioles and Temple Builders. Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be in attendance the forepart of the reunion; Bishop Israel A. Smith during the latter part. Patriarch Charles E. Butterworth, Bishop Charles J. Hunt, A. H. Parsons, and Samuel T. Pendleton will also be with us. Orders for tents, accompanied by remittance, should be sent to D. M. Vredenburg, Woodbine, not later than August 10. Prices are: 8 by 10, $3.75; 10 by 12, $4.25; 12 by 14, $5.75; each with low wall. Those wishing high wall can be furnished with 12 by 14 at $9.25; or 12 by 19 at $10.75. No extra charge for setting up tents. Single cots may be had at $1 each. Rooms can be secured in private homes at 50 cents per single person, or 80 cents where two persons occupy. For further information regarding rooms address Mrs. Floy Holcomb, Woodbine, Iowa. Meals, at reasonable rates, will be furnished in the commodious basement of the church, two and one half blocks from camp grounds. May we have the cooperation and boosting spirit of every lover of spiritual progress? Come over into Macedonia and help us. Joseph W. Lane, president, Pisgah, Iowa; F. R. Schafer, secretary, Denison, Iowa.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parentheses give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Southern California, at Convention Park, July 28 to August 6 (565).
 Toronto, at Lowbanks, Ontario, July 29 to August 14 (350, 638).
 Alabama, at Pleasant Hill, near McKenzie, July 29 to August 6 (373).
 Kentucky and Tennessee, at Foundry Hill, July 29 to August 6 (660).
 Central Texas, at Hearne, July 31 to August 6 (589).
 Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, Iowa, August 2 to 14 (397, 638).
 Spring River, at Joplin, Missouri, August 4 to 10 (612).
 Western Oklahoma, at Eagle City, August 4 to 14 (247, 589).
 Central Oklahoma, seven miles north of Tulsa, three miles south of Sperry, August 4 to 14 (612, 635).
 Chatham, at Erie Beach, Ontario, August 4 to 14 (271, 660).
 Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 10 to 20 (319, 638).
 Southern Idaho, August 11 to 20.
 Northeastern Kansas, at Netawaka, August 11 to 20 (271, 685).
 Fremont and Pottawattamie, Iowa, and Northeastern Nebraska, at Prospect Park, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 11 to 20 (319, 589).
 Seattle and British Columbia, at Centralia, Washington, August 11 to 20 (397, 564).
 Central Michigan, at Pinconning, August 11 to 20 (469, 565).
 Des Moines, at Runnells, Iowa, August 11 to 20.
 Eastern Iowa, at Maquoketa, August 11 to 20 (469, 660).
 Southwestern Texas, at San Antonio, August 18 to 27 (660).
 Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, August 18 to 28 (638, 685).
 Utah, at Malad, Idaho, August 18 to 26 (541).
 Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Woodbine, Iowa, August 18 to 27 (541).
 Central Nebraska, at Inman, August 18 to 27 (516, 685).
 Northern Michigan, at Park of Pines, near Boyne City, August 18 to 27 (222, 660).
 Western Montana, at Race Track, August 18 to 27 (638).
 Far West Stake, near Stewartsville, Missouri, August 18 to 27 (319, 660).
 Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, near Xenia, August 18 to 27 (660).
 Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, August 18 to 27 (685).
 Southern Missouri, at Springfield, August 18 to 27 (685).
 Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Vicksburg, Michigan, August 18 to 27 (685).
 Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3 (350, 589).
 Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3 (638).
 Northeastern Illinois, August 24 to September 3 (589).
 Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3 (295, 685).

Convention Minutes

EASTERN MAINE.—At Kennebec, Maine, June 17 and 18. A much needed spiritual recuperation was enjoyed by all, and a most friendly relationship manifested. Daniel Maegregor was placed in charge, assisted by the district presidency. Herbert Rogers wielded the baton, assisted by Orville Thompson, John F. Sheehy, and the reporter, who responded with duets and trios. All of the above-named missionaries dispensed "The word." Delegates to General Conference were appointed, while provisions were made to raise funds to send the district president (E'en Rogers) there. The district showed an improvement in the statistical reports given. Next conference will be in Jonesport, in October. H. A. Koehler, secretary pro tem.

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—At Macon, June 10, 11. F. T. Mussell, Benjamin S. Tanner, and V. D. Ruch presiding. W. C. Chapman and F. L. McKane clerks. Bevier Branch reported. Elders Arch McCord, F. T. Mussell, V. D. Ruch, Benjamin S. Tanner, and T. D. Williams reported. District auditor's report was read and approved. A resolution passed doing away with the semiannual conference and establishing a two-day meeting in its place—time, place, and speakers to be appointed by district president. Carl Weeks and Ed Moss were ordained priests, and provisions made for A. H. Wintermeyer to be ordained at a future time, as he was not at conference. Benjamin S. Tanner was elected district president, and he chose W. C. Chapman as associate. W. C. Chapman elected secretary and J. L. Williams auditor. As F. T. Mussell was appointed to a different field of labor, a vote of thanks was tendered to him for past services. Preaching by A. E. McCord and V. D. Ruch. Adjourned to meet at call of district president. William C. Chapman, secretary.

SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN.—With Disley Branch, of which John Tomlinson is president, at North Plains Schoolhouse, July 6 to 9, where a large tent had been provided for the meetings, the schoolroom being used for serving meals, and a granary for a cooking room. There were present Patriarch F. A. Smith who was kept busy giving blessings, assisted by Sister C. R. Bowerman who did the typing. J. J. Cornish, whom we are all pleased to see, hear, and meet. There were ten baptisms; one ordination to the office of priest, viz: J. A. Maas; one person referred to his branch for office of deacon; and two brethren not fully satisfied as to their call to office of elder. Three children blessed. Jennie Neil selected as Religio field worker; Ida May Bergersen as district chorister. The young people's prayer meetings early in the morning proved a success, and the seniors enjoyed the spirit prevailing in theirs. Otis D'Arcy elected president, John Tomlinson and J. R. Neil counselors, J. R. Dickson treasurer, and C. B. Bergersen secretary. The opinion was freely expressed that it was one of the best conferences in the district and that the time passed only too quickly. C. B. Bergersen, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

McPEEK.—Price McPeak was born in Ohio, July 6, 1844. Died at Pawnee, Missouri, July 8, 1922. Married Sarah Jane Slack. Six children were born to them, all of whom survive. His companion preceded him. He later married Mary M. Pool, who survives. Baptized in 1874; held offices of teacher, priest, and elder. Services by J. F. Garver. Interment in Lone Rock Cemetery, near Lamoni, Iowa.

HALL.—Dorothy Velma Smith, daughter of George H. and Florence Smith, was born July 31, 1899, in Providence, Rhode Island. Married D. J. Hall, September 1, 1918. Died at Glockner Hospital, Colorado Springs, Colorado, July 6, 1922. Leaves husband, and mother, Mrs. J. A. Teckney. Her brother Clifford preceded her in April, 1921. Sermon by J. D. Curtis. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery, Colorado Springs.

THOMSON.—George Alexander, son of James and Nioline Thomson, was born at Nebraska City, September 16, 1868. Baptized in 1885. He was true and faithful and helpful to others. He lived always in the city where he was born and was known there as "Sandy" Thomson, whose word was always good. Died at the city hospital March 12, 1922. Funeral from undertaker's parlors. Sermon by H. A. Higgins. Leaves mother, three brothers, two sisters, and many friends. His father preceded him in 1914.

GORE.—Eldora May Seaton Gore was born May 3, 1883, near Puryear, Tennessee. Baptized at an early age and remained faithful. Married William Lee Gore, November 15, 1899. Moved to Independence in April, 1918. Has been an invalid for thirteen years. Underwent an operation at the Sanitarium, May 28, 1920. Returned to Tennessee in November of that year. Died July 11, 1922. Leaves husband, two daughters, one son, two sisters, one brother, and other relatives. Funeral from Foundry Hill church; sermon by C. L. Ross. Interment in Foundry Hill Cemetery.

LEACH.—Frank Delorums Winfield Scott Leach was born June 20, 1885, at Blair, Nebraska. Baptized August 14, 1921. Was a patient sufferer for one and a half years. Died June 24, 1922. Leaves wife, three daughters, mother, father, two sisters, two brothers, and other relatives. Funeral from the Presbyterian church in Florence, Nebraska. Sermon by T. J. Elliott.

McGARRISON.—Joseph Alma, son of William and Ina Belle McGarrison, was born May 10, 1922, at Kansas City, Missouri. Died July 7, 1922. Funeral service from the home, 811 Lydia Street, conducted by J. A. Tanner and F. B. Blair. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri. Leaves father, mother, grandmother, and great-grandmother.

TOWNSEND.—Ervin Alstyn Townsend was born December 25, 1851, at Reading, Vermont. Married Minnie Duquet in 1875. Baptized April 18, 1880. Ordained an elder, November 14, 1912. President of the Beloit Branch for a number of years and did his work well. Died at his home in Beloit, Wisconsin, June 28, 1922. Leaves wife, one brother, one son, six grandchildren, and other relatives. Funeral from the Saints' church. Sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by E. J. Lenox. Interment in Beloit Cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

- What of Evolution 711
- An Agricultural Conference 714
- The Hindu Revolt 714

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

- A Definite Move Towards Stewardships, by J. F. Keir 715
- What Will We Do With Our Young People? by T. W. Williams 717

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

- Welfare of the Youth 718
- "The Steward Psalm" 718

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT 719

- Dora Young.

LETTERS AND NEWS 721

- R. L. Fulk—Mrs. A. McKenzie—Heman Turner—Roy Stricklin—Mary Lewis Mesle—Laura G. Brunson—Blanche I. Andrews—Harry Smith—Edward Maloney—James F. Keir—Eli Bronson—E. Burgess—J. M. Terry.

MISCELLANEOUS 731

The Church Needs Business Men

The world is full of unemployed men clamoring for jobs. Yet there are thousands of jobs calling for men. The trouble is, so few men are willing to make the necessary preparation.

Prepare to become a competent business secretary, a salesman, an accountant, or other leader in the business world.

One of the courses offered at Graceland is a two-year training course for secretaries. This course is especially designed to meet the needs of the business world and the great shortage of competent business secretaries.

Observe the practical business subjects given in this college course:

- Salesmanship
- Accounting
- Corporation Finance
- Business Law
- Stenography
- Office Practice

Other supplementary subjects offered in this course are:

- Psychology of Business
- Typewriting
- Economics
- Sociology
- Business Efficiency
- Public Speaking
- English
- Dictation

For catalogue and further information, address

The President

Graceland College

Lamoni, Iowa

Church Books on Sale at Reunions

This year the church publishing house is sending out to various reunions sets of books that are being used as samples, then shipped on to another reunion, thus serving at a minimum of transportation a maximum number of people. Those in charge of the books will take orders for books to be shipped at once from Independence.

Care is urged in handling the books, but in case of damage noted in transit or after the final return of the books, they will be sold at a discount.

It is to be hoped that all Saints in attendance at these reunions will make it a point to visit the booths at the reunions and become more fully acquainted with the books on display, not only for present needs but as an aid to better selection in the future. We have an increasingly good assortment of church literature, and with new authors and new editions it is worth while to spend a little time looking them over.

A few items in one's notebook might help materially in ordering books for next Christmas.

July Journal of History

The July, 1922, Journal of History contains the interesting biography of John J. Cornish, also the journal of Ethan Barrows, the history of the Lamoni Stake and of the high council, and a sketch of Duncan Campbell and Daniel F. Lambert.

A feature of especial interest in this number is the first article giving a history of education in the church. This gives additional details over articles previously published and shows the determined support of education by the church from its very beginning, with detailed reference to the university of Nauvoo.

The writer, H. S. Salisbury, is a grandson of Katherine Smith Salisbury, therefore a great-grandson of Joseph Smith, sr. He first pointed out that Joseph Smith was not as ignorant as has been supposed, that his New England reader would take some of our college men to fully appreciate. Joseph Smith, jr.'s, grandmother was a school-teacher. Joseph Smith, sr., was also a public-school teacher. Also he quickly availed himself of every means to acquire advanced education.

The first publication by the church, The Evening and Morning Star, of June, 1832, contained an article and editorial on education. A school was established in Jackson County by Parley P. Pratt (Doctrine and Covenants 94:2). The Liberty, Missouri, Tribune, the Encyclopedia of the History of Missouri, the History of Caldwell and Livingstone Counties are all quoted on the high intelligence, literary ability, and school work of the early Saints.

At the same time a school for the elders was established in Kirtland in 1832 where, in addition to the doctrine of the church, geography, literature, and philosophy were studied. Joseph Smith lectured on grammar daily.

As in Missouri so in Kirtland where the Saints were to the fore in the establishment of common and high schools.

In Illinois also they were ahead of other citizens of the times, according to the Chicago Tribune Pictorial Weekly, in their insistence upon education. At the head of their system was the University of Nauvoo in which Orson Pratt was professor of mathematics and English literature; Orson Spencer, language; Sidney Rigdon, rhetoric, belles-lettres, and church history.

Floyd M. McDowell, of the faculty of Graceland College, and prominent in various church assignments, is attending various reunions in the West this summer as general worker representing all the departments.

Recent Numbers of Autumn Leaves

Our popular church magazine has of late carried a number of imposing articles and stories and poems by the best church writers. Travel sketches have continued with interest and profit, including illustrated descriptions of the streets of Jerusalem, and the strange lands of China and Japan. President F. M. Smith writes of Jerusalem as he and his camera saw it, while Sister "Billie" Carpender's eyes beheld more in passing through China and Japan than most of us see in a lifetime.

The new serial by Marcella Schenck entitled "Social graces" is woven around Graceland characters and situations so intimately that all the Graceland students are trying to guess who is who.

"The ubiquitous printer" in two articles by one of our most expert printers gives us an illuminating glimpse behind the scenes where printers (using the term in its broader sense) operate in one of the most interesting trades.

"Could we only understand" is a gripping story by Hallie M. Gould, sounding the depths of some of our most persistent church problems.

"The church and its play" is an important article by T. W. Williams, superintendent of the Religio Department, discussing a subject of vital interest to the church—deemed by some so vital that it must be solved soon and right or it will wreck the church.

One gets variety from a discussion of salesmanship by Ray Lloyd, in the monthly sermonets by J. E. Wildermuth, in a discussion of wholesome operas by R. T. Goulee, in a typical article by Emma Burton on "When duty calls a missionary's wife."

These are just a few of the items on the literary menu of Autumn Leaves, inciting its readers to better ideals and methods.

Rally Day Cards

Very attractive post cards for rally day in Sunday school are offered by the Herald Publishing House. They are printed in fine offset process color work in appropriate designs, with suitable message printed on the back of each. They are for all ages, such as cradle roll, beginner, primary, junior, young people, senior, and adult. The price is 20 cents a dozen, $1.25 a hundred. Not carried in stock, but are ordered promptly upon receipt of the order. Allow about two weeks for filling of order, though near-by points will likely be supplied more quickly.

A Good Reunion Chart

Elder R. S. Salyards, president of Far West Stake, was in our office recently, and we noted he was formulating a very interesting schedule chart of the coming Stewartville reunion. It looked similar to the average high school principal's chart of his daily class periods, yet upon examination it is quite simple, and when hung in a conspicuous place informs anyone who cares to consult it as to the entire schedule for the reunion. The names of the speakers, the character of the services at the various tents, etc., are all set down in convenient form and should be a source of inspiration as well as information.

Elder and Sister F. V. Elliott, who have been in the Society Islands on a mission for the church the past two years, have returned to Lamoni, the home of Mrs. Elliott's mother. They brought with them Frederick, jr., born in the islands last fall. Elder and Sister Frank Almond, who accompanied the Elliotts to the islands, remained. We understand Brother and Sister Elliott are considering further school work, though have not as yet decided on what they will do.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, August 9, 1922

Number 32

EDITORIAL

Who Owns You?

Each of us owns one person whom we should care for reasonably.

An audience was recently greatly surprised to hear a Negro woman say that slavery was a success. She stated, according to The Outlook, that she hated slavery as the "wickedest" institution known to man, but anything for which men are willing to die is worth something and, in a sense, is successful. The slave owners owned the Negroes. They woke them up; they made them work; they brought their Negroes in. They were willing to die for them because they were valuable.

She then continues that that is what Tuskegee meant, the education of the Negro, because the Negro is still owned. White men no longer own them, but every Negro owns one Negro, and that is what the schools are for, to wake your Negro up, to make your Negro work, to bring your Negro in.

But this is exactly true of every white man and woman as well. Every one of them owns one white man or one white woman. Every one has that responsibility, to wake up, to work, and to see that that person is turned in at a reasonable hour and gets proper rest.

The message that Booker T. Washington used to give his people of self-discipline is taught by the same methods at Hampton. It combines the work of the hand and mind. It coordinates the academic and the industrial. They were made to work together. Geometry is not a thing to be studied apart but to be applied on a wagon wheel or a pair of shafts. Arithmetic is to be used in manual trades simultaneously.

Ernest Hamden Abbott, who wrote the article in The Outlook, adds that on the Sunday preceding Founder's Day, on which a monument was unveiled to Booker T. Washington, he attended a sermon preached by a Negro on overcoming. The following Sunday the sermon was on warfare, reaching its climax in Paul's second letter to the Corinthians, bringing into captivity every thought. An external enemy may be driven back and completely defeated and yet will be as mean as ever, because while we have captured their bodies, we did not bring into captivity their thoughts. But that is the work of the church, to bring into captivity, to harness for useful work, the thought of the world.

Work has therefore become, instead of the badge of servility, the key to mastery. The result is that Negro scientists are now being sought for guidance, in certain fields at least, and especially in the field of agriculture, in the securing of paints and stains from the soil, in the carrying out of better methods of farming and living. The ideal set before them is nothing but the best of appliances; but learning how to use the best, they learn also how to do without particular appliances in their private work until they can afford them.

This is a splendid theme for a sermon: "Bring into captivity your every thought," our self-ownership and responsibility, hence the need of self-discipline, as the Master has said, "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

If we do not practice self-control and self-discipline, we then logically become the servants of sin and so are brought into moral slavery. We thus see again the grave need for self-mastery.

But after all we are not our own, for we are bought with a price (1 Corinthians 3: 19-20; 6: 15, 16). Our bodies are the temple of the living God. But while we are bought with a price, stewardship is shown in that the care of our bodies is left fully to us, and we are fully invested with the control and title here on earth, though accountable to him who has bought us. Therein our very bodies, as well as our spirits, are a stewardship for God. But this stewardship is not bondage, for stewardship is never bondage, but is in order that we may enjoy a fuller life, spiritually, intellectually, and physically.

S. A. B.

Music is an important feature of our church services, and especially is this so of our General Conference services. Saints at large will do well to look over, carefully, the announcement in this department, of music for General Conference services. Vocalists and instrumentalists will both be interested in the statement.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Conference Musical Program

Albert N. Hoxie not being able to attend the coming General Conference, arrangements were made by the Presidency for the local forces in Independence under the direction of our musical director, Harold C. Burgess, to take over and arrange and carry forward the conference musical program. In consultation with us, Brother Burgess has arranged a program which he sets forth in the following announcement.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

"And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy." —Doctrine and Covenants 45:14.

It is a recognized fact that music is one of the greatest powers for good in the world; therefore it should be given a prominent place in the home, the community, and especially in the church.

The real function of music is spiritual. In this connection J. H. Edwards, in his book, God and Music, says: "Music is a spiritual product." He also states: "Infidelity has no hymnology. Unbelief in spiritual realities is incompetent to produce or fully to understand the highest order of music, which is always religious in character if not in immediate purpose." "All nations," says Carlyle, "that can listen to the mandates of nature have prized music as their highest vehicle for worship, for prophecy, and for whatsoever in them was divine."

General Conference convenes the first day of next October at Independence, Missouri, and, if it is to be "complete and wholly acceptable," the music must play an important part. All those who expect to attend are urged to come with a prayer in their hearts, that we may be "as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising . . . the Lord." Commence now to make preparation and "Sing a song a day," and remember, "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me."

This announcement is to everybody, for everyone will be expected to take part. There will be the choir, the orchestra, the band, and, most important of all, the congregation, and whether or not you can help in any of the first three, you can certainly join with the congregation in singing the songs of Zion. The following quotations are self-explanatory: "Let them who shall be moved thereto by a desire and the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care of the service [choir], and use therein instruments of music of the reed and of the string [orchestra], or instruments of brass in congregations that are large, and as wisdom and choice may direct [band]. Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth . . .

and remember that saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph [congregation]. Nevertheless, let the organ and the stringed instrument, and the instrument of brass be silent when the saints assemble for prayer and testimony." (From Doctrine and Covenants 119:6.) "Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power. Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: praise him with stringed instruments and organs. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." (From One Hundred and Fiftieth Psalm.)

To all, whether you play or sing, I want to emphasize that real music is spiritual.

General Outline

At the morning preaching services there will be congregational singing and solo, duet, or quartet work only. Preceding the afternoon business sessions there will be about twenty minutes devoted to congregational singing. The evening preaching services in the big tent will be preceded by a thirty-minute musical program by the choir, orchestra, or band, including solo work, with congregational singing especially featured. At the Sunday preaching services all will join to make this indeed a time of worship and rejoicing. Special programs, each requiring an entire evening, will be given as follows: Thursday, October 5, in the Stone Church, program by the orchestra, to be repeated one evening the following week. Friday, October 6, in the Stone Church, oratorio program by the choir, to be repeated one evening the following week, this program to consist of the best choruses and solos from the standard oratorios so arranged as to follow out a definite theme. Saturday, October 7, in the tent, will be a pageant, written by Sister Vida E. Smith, beautifully portraying the story of the beginning of Zion, in which will be featured some of the old familiar hymns. Monday, October 9, in the tent, program by the band.

Choir

There will be choir rehearsals at the Stone Church, Independence, every Thursday at 7.45 p. m. till conference time, and also Sunday afternoons at 4 p. m. commencing Sunday, August 20. Those who can attend these rehearsals are urged to do so, and those who cannot attend should secure copies of the music to be used and make the necessary preparation. Following is the complete list of anthems and choruses (alphabetically arranged) that have been selected, including those to be used on the oratorio program:

"And the glory of the Lord," from "The Messiah," by G. F. Handel.

"As pants the hart," arranged from Spohr's "Crucifixion," by James Stimpson.

"Be not afraid," from "Elijah," by Felix Mendelssohn.

"Gloria," from "Mass in B flat," by Henry Farmer.

"Gloria in Excelsis," from "Twelfth Mass," by W. A. Mozart.

"Glorious forever," by S. Rachmaninoff.

"God is our refuge and strength," by Dudley Buck.

"Hallelujah," from "The Messiah," by G. F. Handel.

"Holy art Thou," Largo from "Xerxes," by G. F. Handel. (Arranged by L. Kingsmill).

"How beautiful upon the mountains," by Charles G. Buck.

"I saw in the night a vision," by C. M. Estill.

"Jerusalem, O turn thee unto the Lord," from "Gallia," by Charles Gounod.

"O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion," from "The Messiah," by G. F. Handel.

"Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem," by J. H. Maunder.

"Praise ye the Father," by Charles Gounod.

"Remember now thy Creator," by Carrie B. Adams.

"Seek ye the Lord," by J. V. Roberts.

"Send out thy light," by Charles Gounod.

"The heavens are declaring," by Beethoven, adapted by Dudley Buck.

"The heavens are telling," from "The Creation," by J. Haydn.

"The king of love my shepherd is," by H. R. Shelley.

"The lost chord," by Arthur Sullivan, adapted by John Hyatt Brewer.

"Unfold ye portals," from "The Redemption," by Charles Gounod.

"When thou comest," (Inflamatus), from "Stabat Mater," by G. Rossini.

Orchestra

By R. T. Cooper

The Auditorium Orchestra has been assigned one evening, and possibly two, for an orchestra program to be given at General Conference. This orchestra recently played a special program of its own in Convention Hall in Kansas City for the International Sunday School Convention, and is already at work on the program for General Conference.

The orchestra is under the direction of the regular leader, R. T. Cooper, Room 15, Battery Block, Independence, Missouri, and all orchestra players who expect to attend General Conference and would like to take part in the concert and other work of this orchestra should write to him at once, stating the instrument played and experience had in orchestra work, acquainting him with the individual ability, so that assignments may be made to a definite position in the orchestra and the proper music furnished, so that the players can begin working on their parts without delay and have them mastered so that one or two rehearsals at General Conference will enable them to join the orchestra.

Band

The band will be under the direction of the leader of the Latter Day Saint Band in Independence, Roy F. Turner, corner Scott and Short Streets, Independence, Missouri, and all players who expect to attend General Conference and who would like to take part in the band activities should advise him as soon as possible, stating instrument played, etc., so that proper assignments can be made and the necessary music secured for the various parts.

Congregational Singing

On account of the large attendance expected, instead of purchasing a sufficient quantity of Praises and Hymnals to supply the congregation, it has been thought best to have printed a song pamphlet containing the words only of about seventy-five of the best songs and hymns from Zion's Praises and the Saints' Hymnal, including a few others that have won a place in the hearts of our people. After giving the matter careful consideration the following list has been decided on:

Zion's Praises: Nos. 1, 71 (372 Hymnal), 87 (145 Hymnal), 94, 99, 104, 105, 110, 131, 141, 152, 153, 160, 162, 181 (14 Hymnal), 183 (247 Hymnal), 206, and 207.

Saints' Hymnal: Nos. 12, 21, 34, 42, 51, 52, 54, 72, 80, 83, 92, 93, 95, 97, 99, 107, 110, 111, 120, 122, 131, 141, 158, 161, 165, 172, 175, 178, 179, 182, 187, 201, 211, 214, 217, 230, 251, 297, 325, 337, 347, 350, 351, 353, 368, 386, and 388.

Miscellaneous: "Admonition," "Consecration," "Inspiration Chorus," "Preparation," "I need thee ev'ry hour," "Let the lower lights be burning," and we hope to secure permission to use "Beautiful isle," "Just as I am, thine own to be," "I would be true," and "Rise up, O men of God."

"And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy."

H. C. BURGESS,

Music Director in Zion.

Saints in attendance at reunions should make it a point to inspect the church books on sale at these places, not only for immediate purchase, but as a source of information for future buying. We are constantly adding to our list of good books.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Children of God

God's gifts to his children are always useful and for our blessing.

What does that mean—to be children of God? It is a wonderful possibility that through baptism we are adopted into the family of our heavenly Father, the King of kings and Lord of lords, and our future assured.

Though our children are thus adopted, we are still permitted to keep them with us, and it is our privilege to rear them, to care for them, and to prepare them for the time they will be called upon to reign. That is at once a tremendous responsibility for parents.

From time to time our heavenly Father sends us choice gifts—those for which we are fitted. There are times when like a child we may lift up our eyes and hands and wonder why he permits some things to be and wish we could understand.

Our experience in the gospel has convinced us that our heavenly Father is not unwilling that we should know the reason why and is quite willing to tell us when we are old enough to understand. But to-day we are not, nor do we mean that that understanding must be postponed to ages long to come or the life hereafter after we put on the stature of Christ Jesus as we grow in light and truth. As our understanding increases, our experience is that he gives us to understand as much as we are able here and now, and that as we grow in understanding he willingly explains more and more of that which had been a mystery. It is our privilege to develop so that we can understand more of the great purposes of God.

We often hear of the rich blessings he is ready to give us when we are ready to receive. Perhaps too often we think of them merely like giving candy or toys to a child. But this we believe is doubtless a mistaken idea. The gifts of God are useful gifts. They are for our blessing and for the blessing of others.

But there are many gifts which cannot be given until we are ready to receive. Otherwise there is danger that instead of proving a help they would prove an injury, a condemnation to us and not a blessing to others. As we increase in the knowledge and understanding, so will we receive these larger gifts. A knife is a valuable instrument, but to give it to a child is a menace. The same is true of many other instruments of life. The same is doubtless true of spiritual blessings. Some have at times exercised the blessings of God in a way to discourage and hinder others rather than to help.

There is a need, a grave need, for moral worthiness. There is also a grave need for spiritual and intellectual preparation and understanding. When we have made ourselves ready, he has many rich gifts to give to his children. In the assurance of his love through these gifts they may be instruments in his hands for the greater blessings of others, especially those of the household of faith. S. A. B.

Fruitless Knowledge

To know is but an assurance of right doing. We must change and guide the mental attitude.

It is exceedingly difficult for us to remember some things, especially when we are not entirely convinced or clear about them. For instance, most of us act as though we believed in the old delusion that to know good is to do good.

On that basis we evolve rules and arrange facts in convenient teaching form, line up our children, inveigle them into swallowing our fact-pills, and thank the Lord at night that we have been able to do a great work.

We explain that Moses was good, that Elijah was vigorous, that Solomon was wise, thinking that the knowledge will as a natural course be assimilated and the child be guided accordingly.

Too often the swallowing process is all we can be assured of—if even that is to be ascertained.

Now at the outset let us explain that in common with others we respect facts. It is a joy and an inspiration to find one who not only knows where to locate his facts, but is also careful to marshal them accurately. The writer spends a great deal of time verifying the statements of those who assume to tell something, but do not tell it correctly. So we editors would be the last ones, generally speaking, to discount facts, or in other words, knowledge.

Yet rather often, when we have occasion to inform one of his violation of say the spelling of a word, he will remark, "Oh, I knew that, but I forgot about it." The knowledge was evidently hazy, therefore unused.

Which is not the only kind of knowledge that fails in practice. In every city of size there are certain men of ability and training who know the principles of democracy better than most of us; who are aware not only of the laws on the statute books, but the processes by which they were placed there.

Yet these creatures cunningly and deliberately use this knowledge to their personal advantage and to the detriment of the public. We all know the type. Some of them are in the penitentiary—many more of them ought to be.

What they know is not used aright. That is our argument, briefly stated.

A religious survey was made in Quebec, a Roman Catholic province of Canada. The children were thoroughly grounded in certain lines of religious knowledge. Almost without restraint the church had taught their tenets to their own children, and even the most violent Protestant would admit that the curricula of such schools for children is, to say the least, morally wholesome.

Yet those who made the survey were convinced that while these children had considerable advantage over others in the amount of religious knowledge possessed, there was strong doubt as to the advantage it lent them in citizenship. One might expect them to rank above other children in conduct, yet as a matter of fact they seemed to be lower in their respect for law and order. They knew, but were not inclined to do.

As one listened to Doctor J. C. Robertson, in Kansas City recently, portray the results of various religious surveys in Canada, the conclusion was that everywhere people are attaching too much importance to possession of facts and too little to the attitude manifested towards those facts.

All of which is intended to preface our insistence that we ought to follow less the line of least resistance and try harder to impress attitudes and habits.

Let us be clear on this. Recently we used the word attitudes in conversation and found later the word was confused with beatitudes. We mean attitude of mind—one's feelings towards, or his mood concerning. Our attitude may be one of indifference, or respect, or fear, just to illustrate.

Loyalty is dependent on attitude of mind; so is patriotism. As we respect and appreciate, we are apt to love and revere.

So we continue our plea that in all our preaching and teaching we do not forget to recognize the extreme value of the right emotions.

The problem of the missionary is to get people to feeling respectful towards us, then receptive to new truth, then loyal to that truth. Fully half the burden of their effort is just this.

The problem of our pastoral work is to arouse our total membership to action. Most of them know their duty, but they must be stirred and set to work, which is another way of saying their attitude towards the church must be changed from indifference to loyalty and devotion.

When we teach in large groups or small, we find the same percentage of effort necessary in regard to attitude. We must inform through the teaching process, but when we neglect educating the attitude we too often reap empty husks when we were expecting ripened, useful grain.

We may check results by habits. They are the manifestation which in the end tells the story accurately. They do not always keep up with the changing attitudes, but they must follow. Let us illustrate. We approach a person who uses tobacco and remonstrate with him. Often we find he knows it is harmful, but is violating his knowledge. He is apt to be indifferent about results and over the effect of his habit on others. We labor lovingly with him and are able to change his attitude of indifference to one of thoughtfulness, his selfishness to love for others, until finally when his attitude is sufficiently changed he drops the habit. We have changed his knowledge very little, but what world of change in his habit—and his attitude.

Our spiritual advancement would be enhanced and increased a hundred per cent if every one of us who attempts to teach would but give due thought to this part of our teaching problem. E. D. MOORE.

The Sin of the World

In the HERALD for June 21 there appears under "Questions and answers," a question with regard to the use of the word sin in the singular form in John 1: 29: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." In this question it was pointed out that 1 Nephi 3: 19; 2 Nephi 13: 1; Mosiah 8: 1; Doctrine and Covenants 53: 2; 46: 5; 54: 1; 1 John 2: 2, the plural form is used, that Jesus was crucified for the sins of the world or the sin of the whole of the world.

The answer there offered was perhaps too terse. Elder P. H. Phillipin objects to the manner of answering and adds: "It seems to me that John the Baptist, when he spoke of the 'Lamb of God which taketh away the "sin" of the world' was giving, in that little word, the sum total of the transgressions of the human race, as a bookkeeper would give the sum total of his firm's indebtedness; while the other passages in which the plural number is used, expresses the idea of collective items or individual sins. This, it seems to me, is a much more logical and consistent explanation than that given by some of the ministry who hold that Christ died for Adam's transgression only and not for the sins of every individual."

It will be noted that this answer corresponds quite substantially with that which we offered. The particular question was, Does the church put any different construction on these two words; if so, will you please tell us? We answered simply that we know of absolutely no distinctions such as referred to in the question. That is, that the reference to the sin of the world has the same significance as the other references to his taking away the sins of the world. In this it seems that Brother Philippin is quite in agreement.

We referred to some other possible explanations which we confess that personally we do not accept, but we do not attempt to say that ours is the only possible explanation, even though we believe it to be correct. The practice of the church has been and still is to permit individual opinion, and to recognize that our brother has as good a right to his opinion as we wish to have for ours. It was in this connection that we suggested that some may "speculate," and attempt to infer that this refers to the sin of the world, and the world afterwards becoming celestialized. We did not and do not know that any hold such an opinion. It is a possible construction, but does not appeal to us.

We are very glad to have Elder Philippin's contribution suggesting that the word sin in the first instance is used in a cumulative sense, with which we are quite prepared to agree. S. A. B.

Conference Daily

As announced last winter, there will be a General Conference Daily HERALD. It will consist of eight pages each issue, unless the material justifies sixteen pages occasionally. It will be published each week day and mailed at 7 p. m. The sorting for the mail trains will be done by the Herald Publishing House, so as to insure prompt dispatch each evening.

The Daily HERALD will include reports to General Conference, report of all sessions of the conference and departments, but especially of the business sessions, with articles or editorials discussing matters of general interest connected with the conference, its work and personnel. A summary of the most important facts of the day of issue to 4 p. m. will be included, with a fuller presentation in the next issue, where the facts so justify.

Send in orders early so all arrangements can be made to handle to your best advantage. Price will be 25 cents, as in the past.

Stewardship Teaching Spreads

Many of the popular churches of the day have been preaching and practicing what they term "Christian stewardships" for some time. Considerable literature, both informational and inspirational, has resulted, and many adherents to the plan have been found.

One of the latest developments is the issuance of a book entitled Studies in Christian Stewardship, by the Standard Publishing Company, publishers of the Christian Standard, one of the leading organs of the Christian or Disciples Church.

In this book (which is similar to those used in other churches) these subjects are treated: "Ownership," "Stewardship," "Stewardship of life," "Stewardship of service," "Stewardship of time," "Stewardship of money," "Tithing stewardship," "Stewardship accounting," "The fellowship of stewardship," "A tithing catechism," and "Stewardship digest."

A page of the Standard is being devoted each week to studies of the book. One is not deeply impressed with these lessons after having considered the views our own church has held on the subject for lo, these many years, but we are constrained to compliment them on the vigor with which they go right ahead with what they have.

Perhaps the slight consideration of having the complete plan as to ideals and methods does not deter these good people, and they are able therefore to proceed on an easily constructed foundation of doing good while we patiently plan and build for permanency. E. D. M.

College Day September 24

Usually the first Sunday in October has been set apart and observed as College Day, in accordance with conference resolution to that effect. However, of late years the date has been changed because of its conflict with sacrament Sunday.

This year General Conference convenes in Independence on Sunday, October 1, and since this might detract from the occasion here and elsewhere, it has been decided to observe Sunday, September 24. It is hoped that all the branches will observe the day in a special way and make a special offering for Graceland College expenses.

Women Recognized in New Zealand

The Anglican Church in the Synod of New Zealand has resolved in favor of the Bible in the public schools. They have also taken decisive action admitting women to the full privileges of laymen in that church, to share in any business or work open to laymen, including attendance at the business meetings. It is well to keep in mind the fact that women have not previously in all churches been granted these privileges, when we read some of the accounts of the extra rights granted to women.

Historical Theories of Atonement is a valuable book by Robert Mackintosh which will be found profitable in connection with the article in this issue on the atonement. The subject is a fundamental one and worthy much study.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

References on the Atonement of Christ

By J. W. A. Bailey

There are many parts to the great plan of salvation, but none so great as the Atonement. It is through the atonement that the rest of the plan is made effective.

The primary object of the gospel is redemption, to save mankind from sin; and the remission of sins was made possible only through the atoning blood of the Son of God. (Genesis 6: 65; Alma 13: 13; Helaman 2: 71.)

The full benefit of the atonement can only be applied to the lives of men by and through the principles of the gospel.

On entering the church, all our former sins are remitted through faith, repentance, and baptism, predicated by the atonement of Christ.

If we sin after entering the church, and will truly repent, we can renew our covenant and obtain forgiveness of our sins through the blood of Christ. (1 John 1: 7-9; 2: 1, 2.)

The communion was provided for, for this purpose. Jesus said, "Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." (John 6: 53, 54; 3 Nephi 9: 44.)

Had Jesus not given his body to be sacrificed, and his blood to be shed for the remission of sins, but had died a natural death, we would not have had the communion of his flesh and blood. (3 Nephi 9: 44.)

The plan of salvation being provided for from before the foundation of the world, and the communion being a part of the plan whereby we have a constant remission of our sins, therefore the atonement must have been foreordained that the plan might be made perfect; if not, then the communion was an afterthought, something added to the original plan, which would go to prove that the original plan was not perfected at the beginning as the result of the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, but was worked out according to circumstances.

Some have taken the position that God could have redeemed man by some means other than the death of his dear Son. This argument is like saying that God could have perfected the spirits of men without providing them with bodies (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5), or that man could have reached the highest state of development without being tempted. (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 10; 36: 7; Genesis 3: 4.)

I believe that God is perfect and that he used the most perfect means in creating, redeeming, and the perfecting of the human race. Had there been a better way, one more divine and humane, I believe he would have used it instead of the one that cost the life of his dear Son upon the cross.

According to the foreknowledge of God, he knew that when the spirits of men were granted their agency and provided with bodies that they would fall; thus he provided the plan of salvation according to the nature of the fall.

In this great plan of redemption it was ordained that an infinite atonement should be made. This was not arbitrarily placed upon anyone, but God extended the opportunity to the council of the "sons of the morning." At this council, Lucifer, who was a son of the morning (Isaiah 14: 12), an angel in authority (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3), offered to go and redeem all mankind, saying, "I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind, that not one soul shall be lost, wherefore, give me thine honor." (Genesis 3: 2.)

But because of his selfishness, desiring the power of God, and to become like the Most High, he was rejected; and because he would have compelled man to be saved, thus taking away his free agency; and from that time he became Satan, and designed to destroy the purposes of God; but the best and the brightest of the "sons of the morning" came forward and said, "Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever."

From the foregoing we can see that Christ offered himself to redeem the world, and from that day it became the determinate counsel of God that he should go and make the atonement for the redemption of man. Thus it is so wonderfully written, "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten [chosen] thee." (Psalms 2: 7; Hebrews 1: 5; 5: 5.)

"This day"—the day when Christ offered himself, and was chosen above all the angels (Hebrews 1: 5), or the "sons of the morning" to be the Redeemer of the world.

Christ knew then that the plan of salvation provided for an infinite atonement, and if he accepted the position of being the Redeemer of man, it would cost him his life as a ransom.

But when he came to earth and took upon himself the nature of man, in his humiliation his judgment was taken away (Acts 8: 33); so, when he approached that crucial hour, he shrank from it and prayed the Father to take away the cup; but being conscious of the fact that he came into the world for that purpose, he said, "Not my will, but thine be done."

And as we behold our blessed Master approaching that dreadful hour, and hear his cries to the Father, we can almost hear the Father say, Go on, my Son; this is the plan we made before the foundation of the world, for the redemption of man.

It is written, "That though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things he suffered, and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal life unto all them that obey him." (Hebrews 5: 8, 9.)

As the hour of his death drew near, God sent an angel to strengthen him (Luke 22: 42, 43), and just before the end, our heavenly Father withdrew his Spirit from him, that he might taste death for every man, and thus make the atonement both vicarious and infinite. See Matthew 27: 50; Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.

Because of the statement made in Genesis 6: 55, "And the Lord said unto Adam, Behold, I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden," some have taken the position that man could have been redeemed without the death of Christ. But we should bear in mind that the atonement of Christ was provided for from before the foundation of the world, and that Adam had offered sacrifices as he had been commanded as a similitude of the atonement of the Only Begotten; also he had repented and was baptized before the Lord said his sins were forgiven.

Hence [from that time] came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for the original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world.—Genesis 6:56.

While it was true that such a saying did go abroad among the people, it was not of God, but was another trick of Satan, trying to keep the children of Adam from obeying the gospel, trying to get them to believe that the original sin had been atoned for, and that there was no further responsibility to God.

And the Lord spake unto Adam, saying:

Inasmuch as thy children are conceived in sin, even so, when they begin to grow up sin conceiveth in their hearts, and they taste the bitter, that they may know to prize the good. And it is given unto them to know good from evil; Wherefore, they are agents unto themselves.—Genesis 6:57, 58.

Adam was also instructed to teach his children that they must repent, and that they must be born into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of Christ, and that the plan of salvation is through the blood of the Only Begotten who shall come in the meridian of time. (Genesis 6: 59-65.) From this we can see that the atonement extended back as well as forward unto all men who would exercise faith in Christ and keep his commandments.

By a careful study of the great plan of salvation, we can see why Satan introduced the doctrine of anti-blood atonement. In so doing he hoped to defeat the divine atonement of the Son of God.

Christ was the personification of God, and Cain was the personification of Satan.

A thorough study of this great subject will inspire one with faith and love in and for the Redeemer of the world.

May God so bless us that we may fully sense and appreciate the cost of our salvation.

From Ten Great Religions, by James Freman Clark

The theory of the atonement, developed by the scholastic writers, illustrated this view. In the east, for a thousand years, the atoning work of Christ had been viewed mainly as redemption, as a ransom paid to obtain the freedom of mankind, enslaved by the Devil in consequence of their sins. It was not a legal theory, or one based on jurisprudence, but it was founded on warlike notions. Men were captives taken in war, and like all captives in those times, destined to slavery. Their captor was Satan, and the ransom must be paid to him, as he held them prisoners by the law of battle. Now as Christ had committed no sin, the Devil had no just claim over him; in putting Christ to death he lost his rights over his other captives, and Christ could justly claim their freedom as a compensation for his injury. Christ therefore, strictly and literally, according to the ancient views, "gave his life a ransom for many." But the mind of Anselm, educated by notions derived from jurisprudence, substituted for this original theory of the atonement, one based upon legal ideas. All, in this theory, turns on the law of debt and penalty. Sin he defines as "not paying to God what we owe him." But we owe God constance and entire obedience, and every sin deserves either penalty or satisfaction. We are unable to make it good, for at every moment we owe God all we can do. Christ as God-man, can satisfy God for our omission; his death as offered freely, when he did not deserve death on account of any sin of his own, is sufficient satisfaction.—Part 1, pages 352, 353.

Either of the above positions proves that the death of Christ was vicarious—that he actually died for the sins of the world.

Some Definitions

Definition of the word atone, formerly written at-one, according to Webster: Atone: To reconcile, to appease; to make satisfaction for; to expiate.

Reconcile: to adjust, to settle, to appease.

Appease: to make peace, to propitiate.

Expiate, to purify with sacred rites, to atone for.

In 1 John 2: 2, it is suggested that Christ is our propitiation or atoning sacrifice.

References

All scriptural quotations are from the "three standard books," namely, the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, the Authorized Edition of the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

God gave unto them commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God; and should offer the firstlings of their flocks for an offering unto the Lord.—Genesis 4:5.

And Adam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord. And after many days, an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying, Why dost thou offer sacrifice unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him; I know not save the Lord commanded me. And then the angel spake, saying, This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father.—Genesis 4:6, 7.

Satan Originated Anti-Blood Offering

Satan commanded Cain, saying, Make an offering unto the Lord. And in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord.—Genesis 5:6.

And Abel, he also brought, of the firstlings of his flock, . . . and the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering; but unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not respect.”—Genesis 5:7.

Now Satan knew this, and it pleased him. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell. And the Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? Why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well thou shalt be accepted, and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door; and Satan desireth to have thee, and except thou shalt hearken unto my commandments, I will deliver thee up, and it shall be unto thee according to his desire; and thou shalt rule over him, for from this time forth thou shalt be the father of his lies.—Genesis 5:8, 9.

Thou shalt be called Perdition, for thou wast also before the world.—Genesis 5:10.

Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy introduced the same doctrine that Cain did. (See Science and Health, page 25.) “The material blood of Jesus was no more efficacious to cleanse from sin when it was shed upon ‘the accursed tree,’ than when it was flowing in his veins as he went daily about his Father’s business. His true flesh and blood were his life; and they truly eat his flesh and drink his blood who partake of that divine life.”

Cleansed by Blood

Even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin.—Genesis 6:62.

For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified [cleansed].—Genesis 6:63.

Plan of Salvation Through His Blood

And now, behold, I say unto you, This is the plan of salvation unto all men, through the blood of mine Only Begotten.—Genesis 6:65.

Sacrifices Commanded of God as a Type of the Atonement

Genesis 22:1, 2. God commanded Abraham to offer up his only Son. (See Hebrews 11:17-19.)

Exodus 12:1-13. God commanded Israel to offer a lamb on the fourteenth day of Abib. It was the Lord’s passover.

It was eaten with bitter herbs—repentance. (Verse 8.) Israel was protected by its blood. (Verse 13.)

No stranger was to eat of it—type of the communion. (Verse 43.)

Not a bone to be broken—see John 19:36. (Verse 46.)

All the firstborn were to be redeemed with a lamb. (Exodus 13:13.)

Leviticus 12:7, 8. There was a poverty provision. (Luke 2:24; Leviticus 12:7, 8.)

God commanded Israel to build an altar and gave them instruction concerning their burnt offerings and sacrifices. (Exodus 20:24; Leviticus 1:1-14; 4:1-35; Deuteronomy 12:1, 14.)

God Acknowledged Sacrifices by Fire

Elijah repaired the altar of the Lord, and offered an offering thereon, and God acknowledged it by fire.—1 Kings 18:30-38.)

God commanded David to build an altar on Mount Moriah and offer sacrifice thereon. David did so and God acknowledged his offering by fire. (1 Chronicles 21:18-26.)

When the temple was dedicated, God answered Solomon by fire; and the glory of God filled the house. (2 Chronicles 7:1-12.)

God said that if Israel would keep his commandments “that their burnt offerings and sacrifices shall be accepted on mine altar.”—Isaiah 55:6, 7.

The Atonement of Christ Foretold by Isaiah

For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of dry ground.—Isaiah 53:2.

He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.—Verse 3.

He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.—Verse 5.

Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief; when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin.—Verse 10.

He poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bore the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.—Verse 12.

Foreordained

And truly the Son of Man goeth as it was determined; but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed. [Judas not excused.]—Luke 22:22.

Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain.—Acts 2:23.

For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.—Acts 4:27, 28.

We are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world. (1 Peter 1:10-20.)

And also, the atonement which was prepared from the foundation of the world, that salvation might come to him that should put his trust in the Lord.—Mosiah 3:10.

A Ransom

The Son of Man came not to be administered unto, but to minister; and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matthew 20:28; Mark 10:45.

Take, eat; this is in remembrance of my body which I give a ransom for you.—Matthew 26:22.

For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all.—1 Timothy 2:5, 6.

Redemption

But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.—1 Corinthians 1:30.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.—Colossians 1:14.

But by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.—Hebrews 9:12.

And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood.—Revelation 5:9.

Propitiation (Atoning Sacrifice)

“The mercy seat” or propitiatory. (See Exodus 25:17-22; Leviticus 16:1-22; Hebrews 9:12.)

But if any man sin and repent, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.—1 John 2:1, 2.

Saved Through His Blood

Even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin.—Genesis 6:62.

For, by water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified.—Genesis 6:63.

By the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.—Zechariah 9:11.

Take heed therefore unto yourselves; and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20:28.

Whom God has set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood.—Romans 3:25.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.—Colossians 1:14.

And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself.—Colossians 1:20.

But by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.—Hebrews 9:12.

Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate.—Hebrews 13:12.

We are redeemed “with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.”—1 Peter 1:18-20.

And hast redeemed us to God by thy blood.—Revelation 5:9.

For they have overcome him by the blood of the Lamb.—12:11.

And without shedding of blood is no remission. [Remission of sins].—Hebrews 9:22.

Atoning Blood of Christ

And yet they hardened their hearts, and understood not that the law of Moses availeth nothing, except it were through the atonement of his blood. (214; 628:49.)—Mosiah 1:113; see Alma 16:207-217.

For behold as in Adam, or by nature they fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins.—Mosiah 1:115.

Salvation Through His Blood

But men drink damnation to their own souls, except they humble themselves, and become as little children, and believe that salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent.—Mosiah 1:118.

And they all cried aloud with one voice, saying, O have mercy, and apply the atoning blood of Christ, that we may receive forgiveness of our sins, and our hearts may be purified.—Mosiah 2:3.

There could be no redemption for mankind, save it were through the death and sufferings of Christ, and the atonement of his blood.—Alma 13:13.

No Other Way

O remember, remember, my sons, the words which King Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ.—Helaman 2:71.

Remission of Sins Through His Blood

For this is, in remembrance of my blood of the new testament, which is shed for as many as shall believe on my name, for the remission of their sins.—Matthew 26:24.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.—Colossians 1:14.

And not as those high priests who offered up sacrifice daily, first for their own sins, and then for the sins of the people; for he needeth not offer sacrifice for his own sins, for he knew no sins; but for the sins of the people. And this he did once, when he offered up himself.—Hebrews 7:26.

Covenant Dedicated With Blood

How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the mediator of the new covenant, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. For where a covenant is, there must also of necessity be the death of the victim. For a covenant is of force after the victim is dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the victim liveth. Whereupon neither the first covenant was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the covenant which God hath enjoined unto you . . . and almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.—Hebrews 9:14-22.

Behold, he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin, to answer the ends of the law.—2 Nephi 1:72.

For behold as in Adam, or by nature they fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins.—Mosiah 1:115.

Not a Human Sacrifice; Atonement Defined

For it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; yea, not a sacrifice of man, neither of beast, neither of any manner of fowl; for it shall not be a human sacrifice. . . . Now there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood, which will atone for the sins of another.—Alma 16:210, 211.

Therefore there can be nothing, which is short of an infinite atonement, which will suffice for the sins of the world; therefore it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; and then shall there be, or it is expedient there should be, a stop to the shedding of blood; then shall the law of Moses be fulfilled; yea, it shall all be fulfilled; every jot and tittle, and none shall have passed away. And behold, this is the whole meaning of the law; every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice; and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God; yea, infinite and eternal; and thus he shall bring salvation to all those who shall believe on his name; this being the intent of this last sacrifice, to bring about the bowels of mercy, which overpowereth justice and bringeth about means unto men that they may have faith unto repentance.—Alma 16: 213-216.

When ye partake of the sacrament, . . . remembering unto the Father my body which was laid down for you, and my blood which was shed for the remission of your sins.—Doctrine and Covenants 26:1.

Vicarious

And the Lord said unto Adam, Behold, I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden. Hence came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world. And the Lord spake unto Adam, saying, Inasmuch as thy children are conceived in sin, even so, when they begin to grow up sin conceiveth in their hearts, and they taste the bitter, that they may know to prize the good.—Genesis 6:55-57.

He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.—Isaiah 53:5.

And the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all.—Verse 6.

Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief; when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin.—Verse 10.

And he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.—Verse 12.

For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.—2 Corinthians 5: 21.

But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, . . . that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.—Hebrews 2:9.

My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?—Matthew 27:50.

Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed.—1 Peter 2:24.

Standing betwixt them and justice; having broken the bands of death, taken upon himself their iniquity and their transgressions; having redeemed them, and satisfied the demands of justice.—Mosiah 8:37.

And behold I am the light . . . of the world, and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning.—3 Nephi 5:12.

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.

It Was the Will of God

For I came down from heaven, not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me.—John 6:38.

(The Cup)

And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done.—Mark 14:40.

Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done.—Luke 22:42.

Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour.—John 12:27.

Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath; the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?—John 18:11.

I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me.—3 Nephi 5:12.

But if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I, which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and Spirit, and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink; nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 18:2.

For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.—Acts 4:28.

Laid His Own Life Down

(No man took it from him)

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.—John 10:17.

No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.—John 10:18.

Thinkest thou that I cannot pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?—Matthew 26:51, 52.

Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above.—John 19:11.

Who gave himself a ransom for all.—1 Timothy 2:6.

And this he did once, when he offered up himself.—Hebrews 7:26.

Behold, he offereth a sacrifice for sin, to answer the ends of the law.—2 Nephi 1:72.

From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that he must go to Jerusalem . . . and be killed, and be raised again the third day.—Matthew 16:22.

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up.—John 3:14.

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die.—John 12:32, 33.

And behold, again, another sign I give unto you; yea a sign of his death; for behold, he surely must die, that salvation may come.—Helaman 5:68.

Wherefore, as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ should come among the Jews, among those who are the more wicked part of the world; and they shall crucify him: For thus it behooveth our God.—2 Nephi 5:5, 6.

To Appease the Demands of Justice and to Bring About Mercy

Standing betwixt them and justice; having broken the bands of death, taken upon himself their iniquity and their transgressions; having redeemed them, and satisfied the demands of justice.—Mosiah 8:37.

And that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God, yea, infinite and eternal; and thus he shall bring salvation to all those who shall believe on his name; this being the intent of this last sacrifice, to bring about the bowels of mercy, which overpowereth justice and bringeth about means unto men that they may have faith unto repentance.—Alma 16:215, 216.

Now the plan of mercy could not be brought about, except an atonement should be made; therefore God himself atoneth for the sins of the world, . . . to appease the demands of justice, that God might be a perfect, just God, and a merciful God also.—Alma 19:97.

But God ceaseth not to be God, and mercy claimeth the penitent, and mercy cometh because of the atonement; and the atonement bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead.—Verse 105.

The Resurrection Made Possible Through Atonement

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.—John 10:17.

For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.—John 15:21.

Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil.—Hebrews 2:14, 15.

Who layeth down his life according to the flesh, and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit, that he might bring to pass the resurrection of the dead.—2 Nephi 1:74, 75.

Wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement; save it should be an infinite atonement, this corruption could not put on incorruption.—2 Nephi 6:15, 16.

For behold, he suffereth the pains of all men: yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women, and children, who belong to the family of Adam. And he suffereth this, that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great and judgment day.—2 Nephi 6:46, 47.

But God ceaseth not to be God, and mercy claimeth the penitent, and mercy cometh because of the atonement; and the atonement bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead.—Alma 19:105.

For behold, he surely must die, that salvation may come; yea, it behooveth him, and cometh expedient that he dieth, to bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, that thereby men may be brought into the presence of the Lord; yea, behold this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death.—Helaman 5:68-70.

By His Cross

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up.—John 3:14.

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die.—John 12:32, 33.

For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness, but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God.—1 Corinthians 1:18.

He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (Philippians 2:8.)

And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself.—Colossians 1:20.

Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross.—Colossians 2:14.

Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree.—1 Peter 2:24.

And I, Nephi, saw that he was lifted up upon the cross, and slain for the sins of the world.—1 Nephi 3:87.

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 46:5.

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.

Christ, the Lamb of God

The paschal lamb was a type of the Christ. (Exodus 12:1-13, 43, 46.)

Isaiah spoke of Christ as a lamb. (Isaiah 53:7.)

Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!—John 1:29.

With the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.—1 Peter 1:19.

For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us.—1 Corinthians 5:7.

For they have overcome him by the blood of the Lamb.—Revelation 12:11.

Communion of His Flesh and Blood

Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.—John 6:53.

Take, eat; this is in remembrance of my body which I give a ransom for you.—Matthew 26:22.

For this is in remembrance of my blood of the new testament, which is shed for as many as shall believe on my name, for the remission of their sins.—Matthew 26:24.

And now behold, this is the commandment which I give unto you, that ye shall not suffer any one knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall minister it, for whoso eateth and drinketh my flesh and blood unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul; therefore if ye know that a man is unworthy to eat and drink of my flesh and blood, ye shall forbid him; . . . and if it so be that he repenteth, and is baptized in my name, then shall ye receive him, and shall minister unto him of my flesh and blood.—3 Nephi 8:60-62.

He that eateth this bread, eateth of my body to his soul, and he that drinketh of this wine, drinketh of my blood to his soul.—3 Nephi 9:44.

The manner of their elders and priests administering the flesh and blood of Christ unto the church.—Moroni 4:1.

That they may do it in remembrance of the blood of thy Son which was shed for them.—Moroni 5:3; Doctrine and Covenants 17:22, 23.

Verses From Saints' Hymnal

Here at thy table, Lord, we meet,
To feed on food divine;
Thy body is the bread we eat,
Thy precious blood the wine.

—Number 386, verse 1.

That sacred, holy offering,
By man least understood,
To have our sins remitted,
And take his flesh and blood.

—Number 390, verse 2.

The Methodist Church appears to be much disturbed over the shortage of the Centenary funds, as there was a further shrinkage in payment of subscriptions of approximately $2,000,000 for the year ending June 1, 1922.

They have as a result assigned two additional bishops to make a special effort to raise this amount. It should not prove difficult for 5,000,000 Methodists even though it has seriously affected the foreign missionary work for the present.

On the other hand, we note a disposition to move forward.

Religio Convention

The various departments may give way to the church school through complete coordination.

Provision has been made for the Religio Convention to be held during the sessions of the next General Conference in October.

The time to be allotted to Religio work will be determined by the First Presidency of the church and will be indicated in the General Conference program, to be issued later.

We propose that this shall be far and away the very best convention ever held by the Religio Department. Having dispensed with the delegate system of representation, every member of the Religio Department in good standing will be entitled to voice and vote.

It is quite necessary, however, that the locals throughout the world be represented. Local and district superintendents and field workers are requested to bring the matter of representation to the attention of their respective organizations, and to take steps to see that one or more members of the organization attend the convention.

Work up an interest in your locality. Seek out your live wires. Develop concert of action. As this will be a convention of representative workers from all parts of the world, it is quite necessary that each local be represented. If, owing to distance or other obstacles, it will be impossible for representatives to be selected by your own local, then combine with the other locals in your district and send representatives.

We already have assurance that workers from Canada, England, Hawaii, Palestine, Scandinavia, and the Society Islands will be in attendance. We desire full representation from all parts of the United States. We suggest that each local plan to send one or more of its best workers. Do not leave it with the missionary to look after your interests. The time of the missionary will largely be taken up with quorum and other duties. Pick out your very best workers. Authorize them to represent you. See that they get to the convention.

We hope to make this a thoroughly educational gathering. To do this it is quite necessary that the best minds from all parts of the church shall be in attendance. It is the purpose of the several departments of the church, including Sunday School, Women's, Religio, and Health to move for complete coordination at the October conference. This is the only sensible thing to do. Our departments are top-heavy. We work at cross purposes. There is too much overlapping and duplication. We lack system and cohesion.

It has been suggested that in order to unify all of our activities as departments, and to provide for proper integration, that the entire internal educational activities of the church, apart from established educational institutions and that comprehended in pastoral and missionary work, be centered in an educational board nominated by the First Presidency and approved by General Conference. It is proposed that this board will have power to call to its assistance expert advice along the various phases of human life, such as health, music, methods of teaching, proper recreation, and other activities, from such persons as it shall deem wise, and may appoint such persons as advisers.

If this plan is carried out it will do away with the departments as now constituted, and, in their place all educational activities, whether recreational, expressional, instructional, or of a religious, health, or play content, will be drawn together under one head, which will be named the church school. Should this plan be adopted, the same form of organization would necessarily spread to locals just as fast as leaders could be found. Each local would then substitute an educational board for the present departmental officers, which would take complete supervision of all activities indicated above. Pastors would necessarily become ex officio members of the educational board. This would unify and coordinate the work along the lines of anticipated desiderata.

Whether this or some other plan will be adopted, it is self-evident to close observers that radical changes must be made in some phases of our work if we ever expect to reach the maximum of service. The term Religio is meaningless disassociated as it now is. It is part of a hyphenated term which we have saved from the old Zion's Religio-Literary Society. It can well be dispensed with.

The church in General Conference action has decided that the primary work of the Religio is social and recreational. Nothing is said as to its other activities. The Religio executive has been handicapped and limited in expression, owing to conditions which made coordination with other departments, for the time being, impossible.

The time has come when we should go ahead and complete the work of coordination. There is nothing now standing in the way. All heads of departments are agreed on the course to be pursued. The Presidency of the church is very anxious that a forward step be made. Then let the Religio workers get in line. Come to the October convention with open minds and hearts. Come with your experiences and your observations. Come with definite aim and consecrated purpose. Let us enter in and occupy in this splendid field of Christian service and in such a way as will give concrete evidence of divine direction, as well as complete consecration on our part.

T. W. WILLIAMS,

General Superintendent Religio Department.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Literature and Life

When we read literature we are studying life. The writer takes the ambitions and hopes, the loves and hatreds, the disappointments and sorrows of people everywhere and so presents them as to make each experience seem to be a part of our own life. The individual that we are, or might have been, or hope to be, is pictured in the words that we read. This fact emphasizes the necessity of reading only good literature. What we read has a tremendous influence upon our life. Theories of life which work out so well on the printed page, whether practical or desirable in everyday life, make a strong appeal to the reader. The fact that they have been lived out in the life of hero or heroine makes them worth trying. Life is enriched along pathways opened up to us by the skill of some writer.

To live the life of the ages is a great experience. To have ancient dates and documents become alive with human interest because linked up with real men and women is a joy worth possessing. And good literature makes this possible for us. We live in the development of the race. Romance, adventure, essay, and poem breathe with the vitality of those who inspired the writing. The limitations of our actual environment are pushed aside as we read. We become a part of the world forces of all time.

Even those of us who are mature men and women are much like children in our eagerness for life in the form of a story. From the "once-upon-a-time" delights of childhood until the days when the description of the Holy City holds fast the attention, there is pleasure in learning of life's problems, hopes, sorrows, and achievements by a story. Youth finds its great material for help in "following the gleam" in the pages of good literature. And each of us goes forth on his great adventures fortified by the wisdom culled from the failures and successes of those who fared forth before us in some book we once read.

How the finer lures of life are held up to us in the writings of those who have made the good real and the beautiful worth while! We who have vainly asked "the giftie gie us, to see oursel's as ithers see us," discover how like are we to those whose strange, queer ways draw forth our laughter. And we actually live a part with the characters in a novel. Either as a hero or heroine each man or woman reads on to the very end. The experience becomes personal. It is forever after a part of the whole background of our thinking and living.

And what short story is there whose setting does not become a personal possession! The poets seem to have written their lyrics just for us. As we read them we feel that our joy was known to them or that they felt our sorrow to the full. And what satisfaction is ours to find a brilliant essayist setting forth our very thoughts in strong, convincing argument! The author reflects life so truly that it seems to be our own experience or one that should be ours.

All this makes literature life in a very real way. It becomes the channel through which we discover the kinship of the race through all the ages. Out of this realization comes the consciousness that perhaps we may be a part of the literature of the future. We shall be. Our lives right now are being caught by the master mind of some author. He is portraying us so vividly that future readers of books will be able to know what sort of folks we were, what we thought, and how we lived.

The fellowship that we enjoy with the characters from good books is a priceless heritage which it is within our own power to enrich. They sit with us in our meditations. They reason with us in our perplexities. They comfort us in our sorrows. They rejoice when we rejoice. Around our hearthstone they make free. They come and go at will. They are the eternal comrades of our way. They bring the world to our quiet hours, the distant ages to our thoughtful reflections. Friends are they whom we knew not would stay so long when first they came. Fortunate indeed are we that we choose wisely when we take a book in our hand and make such acquaintances.—Kingdom News, pp. 3, 4.

Second Missouri Convention

The report of Marion Lawrance, general secretary of the International Sunday School Association, recalls that this is the second time that the association has met in the State of Missouri. The previous occasion was when in 1893 it met with the World Sunday School Association in Saint Louis in joint convention.

A big parade was then held, composed of over ten thousand children from the Sunday schools of Saint Louis. The interest was increased as various parts of the tabernacle were carried through the crowded streets of the city. This was particularly true of the furniture of the tabernacle, including the golden candlesticks, the table of showbread, the brazen altar, etc. The interest in the tabernacle continued through that convention, as it was erected in the fair grounds in Saint Louis. It presented a scene of exceeding great interest, but the total registration at the convention was only about nine hundred, compared with over seventy-two hundred at the Kansas City Convention.

In fact, the Kansas City convention is the largest by far that has ever been held. The convention text at Kansas City was, "Jesus the Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." There is much change going on in the world. Nations go down and rise almost in a day. In all departments of human activity there seems to be change, but Jesus the Christ is always the same.

The theme of the convention was, "Building Together," with Jesus Christ himself the chief cornerstone.

Would Abolish the Jail

Miss Rosalie Jones eight years ago led a small army of young women from New York City to Washington on foot in behalf of suffrage. She has since been admitted to the bar and has taken a special interest in boy and girl delinquency. She insists that in nearly every case they are not the real criminals, but the people who are indifferent to existing conditions and fail to aid them are the real wrongdoers. She would abolish the jail and give an earnest study to the reasons why people do wrong, according to the Washington Times of April 16. She continues that we should punish the offender and not the offense, that is, take also into consideration the individual conditions rather than the technical nature of the offense.

A Fair Statement

In discussing "Items of interest to Iowans," Newton R. Parvin, editor and grand secretary of the Iowa Masonic Library, offers a number of interesting items about various religious sects which have made settlements in the State of Iowa, and includes the exodus under Brigham Young, with the following about this church:

"There is another branch of the Mormon Church known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which has had its headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa. This branch has never recognized plural wives and their Book of Covenants forbids polygamy. John [Joseph] Smith was the first president of this reorganized church, a man standing very high among the community. This branch owned its own printing press, printed its own church Bibles and other works. Their Journal of History, running into more than twelve volumes, as also a magazine entitled Autumn Leaves, both give very full accounts of the history of this branch of the church which has had a wonderful growth and many followers. (Quarterly Bulletin, Iowa Masonic Library, April, 1922.)

Fear Loss of Leadership

Some managers set themselves against this trend toward opening the industry to the workers and the public, fearing the loss of their leadership. These managers face their questioners with folded arms and unexpressive eyes; yet these questioners are, with few exceptions, not enemies but friends. They are willing that large powers of leadership should remain with the managers. They say, not, "Give way to us," but "Let us understand and let us help." They are friendly in tone and intention, but they are also firm, and one suspects that these reluctant managers will either come forward with outstretched hands offering information and welcoming assistance, or else they will make way for more enlightened leaders.—The Outlook, February 1, 1922.

Success Not Easily Attained

Dean Barrows, the Chancellor of the University of California, in his commencement address at the graduating exercises of the southern branch of that university, advised the students not to expect their successes too early in life or too easily. His observation has taught him that only at the conclusion of about twenty-five years' hard work could one hope for the feeling that success was theirs in the creation of an influence among men and the securing of economic independence. He admonished them to keep in mind the great need of cultivating faith in spiritual ideals. Science has nothing to offer as an answer to the question, What does life mean and what does it end in? The best philosophy can do is to explain the truth which science has discovered and seek to guess at ultimate meanings. Faith in God is the dynamic by which greatness and nobility of human character is maintained.

Must Have Evangelism

There is no Sunday school program without evangelism. There must be missionary work; there are two or three phases of it. It is not the methods of different persons so much as different modes of approach. The missionary work must be given a primary place in all thinking and planning. It is quite generally supposed that the evangelization of the world is going to be a long, tedious process. But I believe it must be done by this generation if it is done at all. We must go to work devising means to carry the gospel to the ends of the earth according to the great commission. This great mission of the church will be discussed under three heads though that does not cover all of evangelism.—W. O. Thompson, superintendent of International Sunday School Association in introducing speakers on the subject of "Evangelism."

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Leadership

Leadership Defined

From time to time, many definitions have been given for leadership. A few of these I want to note at the close of this series of sketches.

"A leader is one who goes before, keeps in advance of others, and so influences them."

One test of leadership is the ability to appreciate the good work done by others, to be able to withstand adverse pressure, and to do a large amount of work overflowing the usual.

Always going somewhere definitely, always pushing something worth while, a real leader seems to be able to defy fatigue. She seems to rest by doing things, and seems to be able to tap unlimited reservoirs of strength and power.

The best evidence of ability is large capacity for hard work, and an intense conviction of its necessity. Many mistake tendency for talent, and talent for hard work. The test is this—that talent carries with it the willingness to do any amount of hard work to accomplish the ends desired. If you can toil and wait and deny yourself for that which you desire, you have at least one proof that you have some degree of talent, for true greatness consists in persistently rising above all personal considerations and efforts.

Doctor Frank Crane says that a leader thinks clearly, speaks intelligently, lives simply. He always has time. He is quiet. He has no vanity, seeks no praise. He is teachable. He works for the joy of it, not for wages. He believes that every man comes at last into his own, and is not impatient. Bitterness, cynicism, pessimism, he has not; but love abounds in him, for these are by-products of greatness.

Champ Clark has this to say: "Courage is not synonymous with the quality of leadership, though necessary to it. Learning does not render a man a leader, for some of the greatest scholars were wholly without influence over their fellow men. Eloquence does not make a leader, for some of the world's greatest orators have been the veriest cravens. Indeed, eloquence, learning, talents, courage, all combined do not make a leader. But whatever the rare quality is, people recognize it and intuitively and inevitably follow the man who possesses it."

Meredith Nicholson gives us some wonderful thoughts on leaders. "The hour and the man do not meet by chance, but through the operation of laws we can only believe to be divine. Preparation for leadership is rarely conscious; but always, somewhere, the masterful man is moving forward to keep tryst with opportunity. It is an error to say that leaders are chosen. Rather, it may be said that, responding to some inner prompting and conscious of their power, they arrive. They step into their destined places and thousands catch step with them and press on joyfully."

The ultimate source of all ability is energy. Physical energy makes possible mental energy. Your energy is your capital. Use it wisely and well, and it will pay you an unusual rate of interest.

A strong will develops power.

Decision, too, is necessary. A good executive never wastes time, but decides quickly, and sometimes is right.

Cooperation is important also. The executive who does team work, moves along with his people towards the goal.

One writer says, "Two things determine success: right policy and hard work. And there must be no lust for power, dominancy, personal profit. To get and maintain a hold, an executive must be square with his workers, and he must be a toiler with the others. So, bring hustle and activity along with your carefully-planned program!

So here we have strong will power, decision, cooperation, right policy, and hard work—all based on abundant energy. These are the sources of power for the leader, and will give ability, reliability, endurance, and action.

Moving forward all together, now, the leader sees in advance the result desired. He keeps his ear to the ground, reads shrewdly the popular mind, the tendencies of the times, accepts human nature as he finds it, develops certain and numerous contact points, and studies his work and his people until he often knows his workers better than they know themselves. Complaints are met with, "Sit down; let's discuss it." Knowing it is not possible to please all, and using criticisms as stepping-stones to reconstruction and progress, he is content to labor on in the direction chosen.

A leader does not move too fast. While it is pleasant to see before others do what is just ahead, one must be willing to wait until enough others see it to make the coming and accomplishment assured and possible.

This sketch would not be complete unless we considered a while, the greatest and highest source of power known to us, the close communion and contact with the Eternal. Without a sense of close companionship and partnership with God, there can be no real leadership. God wishes to direct us, and wishes to help us carry whatever task he has committed to us. He expects us to talk over with him our problems and perplexities, that we may have his aid and counsel. To our human must be added the divine fire.

So a leader must be humble, sympathetic, helpful. He must have knowledge; not only of men, but of God. He must be kingly in character. He must refuse to be separated from his fellows, must mingle with those he would serve. He must have a brave spirit and a mind full of reserve power. He must be free from sin. He must have fellowship with divine things, and be in touch with God through his Holy Spirit. He must be ever listening for the voice of God, and seek to conform his life to the highest pattern given.

There may be temptations, great ones, massive, because of his very strength, but through resistance is the strength made greater. Leadership often means pain. The greater the servant, the greater the loneliness and the greater the suffering. Only the all-seeing and all-knowing Mind can understand when a leader sacrifices everything on the altar of his service.

Jesus, the greatest example of leadership the world has ever known, was always going about among the people, giving of his best, and ever pointing them to higher and higher ideals. His help was extended to the weakest and most neglected, and he spent his wonderful vitality to the uttermost, in order that he might the more adequately give them strength and power.

May we, humble and faltering followers in his shining footsteps though we may be, seek to profit by a careful study of his life and example, and thus make ourselves more truly his servants through a living and loving ministry to those about us!

"Some leaders lead so far ahead,
High-visioned, unafraid;
Yet ages after they are dead
We tread the paths they made.

"Some leaders lead so far behind,
And seem to lose the track;
Yet they bring on the deaf and blind,
Who else would hold us back.

"And some seem not to lead at all,
Slow moving on the way,
Yet guide the weary feet and small
Of those who else would stray.

"Lead on, oh, leaders of the race,
Your path is long and wide;
We need your help in every place,
Before, behind, beside."

LULA M. SANDY.

About Clothes

Several years ago, it was my good fortune to become well acquainted with eight charming girls of high school age. These girls represented six different families that at one time had lived in the same city neighborhood. All but two came from the homes of the working classes—carpenters, brick masons, mechanics, teamsters, etc. Two were from a doctor's home. While they were very different as to type, they were equally noticeable for minds well stored with worth-while knowledge, and the ease and grace with which they could do helpful things.

The standard these girls had reached was made possible, as I analyzed it, entirely by the experience, far-sighted knowledge, and wisdom of a mother who had had many opportunities and believed in being a helpful neighbor. Feeling sure her ideas will be an inspiration and help to those among us who are of more restricted experiences, I shall give one of her outlines about clothes.

Her sole idea at the beginning was to free the mother from unnecessary household duty, that she might find time to devote to study and comradeship with her children. The first point of attack with the sewing basket, from which she sought to eliminate extra work by planning to dress the children with greater simplicity, and to select materials that would wear well. She believed in pretty, but sensible, useful clothes.

Her outline plan follows. It will be found sufficiently elastic to meet individual needs.

Materials:

- a. For undergarments: Ready-made knitted, unbleached and bleached muslins, colored gingham, sateens, etc.
- b. For petticoats or bloomers: Muslins for best; gingham, sateens.
- c. For dresses: Percales, gingham, romper cloth, etc. Sheer materials for best only; silk for best only.

Styles:

"Butterfly" dresses, "string" aprons, middie and skirt, one-piece dresses.

Trimmings:

Braids, bindings, etc., for everyday wear; hand embroidery trimming for best only, and then only quick, easily-made stitches.

Number of garments:

(Underwear is not usually over-supplied, so is not given here.)

- a. Under two years: a clean dress and petticoat daily.
- b. Two to six years: Three or four dark dresses. Three or four petticoats or bloomers. One or two best dresses and bloomers.

- c. Six to twelve years: Two or three aprons for home wear. Two or three school dresses. One or two best summer dresses. One best winter dress.
- d. Twelve to eighteen: Much the same as for the preceding group. Girls of these ages should begin to make their own dresses, and to take their places at the ironing board, and help with the laundry. During vacations, the older girls should be given full charge of the house.

I have delayed sending you the above article, in order to watch the practical working out of the suggestions it contains. They "work" very nicely, I find, in other hands than my own, though I feel sure some of our mothers and, especially, the growing girls will feel considerably restricted if they have been accustomed to more.

The secret of finding the number of garments sufficient lies mainly in being careful to keep them clean and in repair. To keep them clean means thoughtfulness on the girls' part, —but that isn't a bad idea, is it? BERTHA L. MADER.

Are Wives Independent?

A well-known student of home conditions discussed the recent agitation regarding a "wife's right to be independent."

"The problem of the penniless wife which was recently raised," says this authority, "calls up the equally interesting case of the wife whose lot it was before marriage to be economically independent. She is, it is true, not so common a type, but each year sees an increase in her numbers.

"It is obvious that even if she continues her work in a profession, on the stage or in the office, after her marriage she will not any longer have full independence, although she is economically her own mistress. Nor, surely, can she expect entirely to be free. Very few women are capable of being intrusted with absolute freedom nor do many desire it.

"Marriage is a bond, and can never be a happy relationship unless each party to the contract is prepared to sacrifice a good deal of personal liberty. A wife's ultimate sphere is, and always must be, her own home. Every girl should recognize this before marriage.

"A shrewd husband will realize that his wife adds to her self-respect by being an efficient wage earner, and will be prepared to give her at least a proportionate amount of her previous earnings as 'housewife's salary' if he requires her to discontinue her professional duties in order to look after his home.

"The fact that most women of initiative can be economically independent to-day ought to remove some of the grievances which wives have aired in the past about the prison bars of marriage.

"The ordinary man finds it impossible to lose suddenly all the possessive and domineering instincts which have characterized the male through the centuries. He must be the master in his own house. There comes inevitably a conflict of wills. He fears lest he should be 'henpecked' if he gives away. On principle, rather than by inclination, he asserts himself, and denies his wife the right to come and go as she chooses.

"If she gives in and comes into line, the husband congratulates himself that he understands women, and becomes convinced that the only way to hold a wife is to keep her fettered. Few men are sufficiently wise to give their wives rope enough to make them feel as much mistresses of their own affairs as they were before marriage, but it is only by such methods that 'the 12-pound look' can be banished from a wife's eyes."—London, England, correspondent, in Omaha Bee.

Some Canadian Activities

The Social Progressive Club of the Women's Department of the London (Ontario) Branch, consisting of young married women, was organized on February 8, last, and boasts of sixteen zealous members. A few weeks ago they sent us a little sketch of their activities, which may prove suggestive to other circles similarly situated.

They meet each week at the home of one of the members, where they enjoy a good program of an educational nature. Papers prepared by different members have been presented, dealing with such subjects as "First aid"; "Why Joseph Smith was one of the most prominent men of his day"; "Explanation, accompanied with views, of the Kirtland Temple"; "Has the intellect of woman been kindled since the power of franchise was granted, or has it been lying dormant?" "Why the activities of a club should be like the movement of a clock"; "Thrift"; and other interesting ones.

One two occasions they engaged in debate, the topics being "Resolved, That capital punishment is justifiable," "Resolved, That money has a tendency to lead one nearer to God." The members taking part advanced such excellent points on both sides, it was found hard to determine the winners.

At their meetings they are always favored with vocal and instrumental music, and one of their number also reads a portion of the serial story in Autumn Leaves, entitled "Rescue the perishing." At one meeting they had a game, with prizes attached, called "progressive peanut," using three tables. Twice their hostess received a surprise "shower," and always the members are treated to a dainty lunch. On Good Friday evening they put on a successful concert in the basement of their church, the proceeds to be used for beautifying the church grounds.

Their motive is to promote sociability and to develop themselves mentally, as sisters in the one faith. Mrs. Richardson is president and Mrs. Hardy secretary.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XIII

The National Government

- I. Congress
 1. Senate.
 2. House of Representatives.
 3. Sessions and organization of Congress.
 - a. The long and the short session.
 - b. Special sessions.
 4. Salaries.
 5. Special characteristics of the Senate.
 - a. Give three reasons for its power.
 - b. Committees.
 - c. Its conservatism and dignity.
 - d. Treaty-making power.
 6. Special characteristics of the House of Representatives.
 - a. Special powers.
 - b. Committees.
 - c. Debate and law making.
 7. The committee system.
 - a. Its importance.
 - b. Meetings.
 8. How a bill becomes a law.
- II. The President
 1. His prominence.

2. His constitutional powers.
3. The election of
 - a. The nominating convention.
 - b. The November election.
 - c. The election by the electors.
4. Presidential term and succession.
5. General powers of the President.
 - a. Civil and military.
 - b. Legislative.
 - c. Judicial and foreign.
6. Power of appointment and removal.

III. The Executive Department

1. The President's Cabinet.
 - a. Members and their duties.
 - b. Their administrative and supervisory work.
 - c. Discretionary powers.
 - d. The original departments.
 - e. Departments added in early days of the Republic.
 - f. Recently organized departments.

IV. The National Judiciary

1. Interpreters of the Constitution.
2. National courts.
3. Term and salaries.
4. Jurisdiction.
5. The separate courts.
 - a. The supreme court.
 - b. Circuit court of appeals.
 - c. District courts.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. "Again the Senate," by Samuel W. McCall, in Atlantic Monthly, September, 1920.
2. Sections 3 and 8 of Article I of the Constitution.
3. Article II and Article XII.
4. Memorize the last sentence in Section 8, Article I, known as the "elastic clause."
5. In your opinion, would it be wise to increase the number of members in the House of Representatives? Why?
6. Do you consider that the Senate has become a more powerful and important body than the House of Representatives? If so, suggest probable causes.
7. Tell the story of how a bill becomes a law.
8. Name some dangers in the committee system of law making.
9. How many presidential electors is your State entitled to?
10. Can you suggest any improvements in our method of electing a President of the United States? If so, describe them.
11. Do you think it would be better to elect a President for a term of six years with no chance for a second term? Give reasons for your answer.
12. Explain these expressions: franking privilege, Monroe doctrine, executive session, committee hearing, tenure of office.

DORA YOUNG.

There are approximately three hundred people devoting their full time under a salary to the work of Sunday school organization. In addition to this there is a great voluntary army throughout the States and townships. The Sunday school enrollment for the United States and Canada has been carefully estimated by denominations at over 23,000,000, with over 2,000,000 teachers.

LETTERS AND NEWS

An Australian Circular Letter

Good advice for Saints, wherever they may live.

METCALFE STREET, WALLSEND, 19th June, 1922.

Dear Coworker: That an application of the religion of Jesus Christ is much needed to-day is self-evident. The unsettled conditions predicted by the Master are universal. Perilous times are in every land. The world is war-weary and sin-sick.

Strenuous efforts are being made by the leaders of the British Empire and other nations to stem the tide, but the best of diplomacy can only effect temporary relief. The trouble is deep-seated in the hearts of the children of men, and until they are changed, the world's troubles are bound to continue. Men must be born again. The gospel is the only medium that can accomplish this.

A gospel dispensation has been committed to our care and it is not only the duty, but the privilege of every member to assist in proclaiming it (Doctrine and Covenants 85:22). We desire and invite your cooperation to that end.

This subdivision of our work comprises the States of New South Wales and Queensland and New Zealand. In these States we have ten men under General Conference appointment—five in New South Wales, one in Queensland, three in New Zealand, and one in general charge. These brethren are using every means available to extend our work, and some very encouraging prospects are in view. New people are hearing of our work from day to day and we are trusting a goodly number may prove to be "sheep."

In addition to the General Conference appointees we do not forget the good work being done in different places by our local officers and members.

Financial Needs

While it is not required that all go out as missionaries yet all have a share of responsibility in that work. The Lord has said: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." Doctrine and Covenants 119:8. Here is personal responsibility which cannot be evaded.

Some have felt their responsibility and have observed the law of tithing, for which they have been blessed. As a further means of assistance from such, we call attention to the avenue of consecrations and freewill offerings.

Many have not complied with the law of tithing. In all sincerity and kindness we invite such to begin to do so now, for it is as much a part of the gospel as is baptism. Let us not count material things of more value than human souls. (Malachi 3:8: "Will a man rob God?") The Lord says to-day, "Verily it is a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.)

Some have nothing to tithe, but all can at least send in a freewill offering. It is not the amount, but whether you do what you can that counts. The widow was commended by Christ, not for her large offering, but because she did what she could. Even our young people can assist in this way and should be encouraged to do so.

At the present time the receipts are not sufficient to meet the necessary expenditures. We have reduced the missionary allowances recently and every effort is being made to conserve the funds. Will you not kindly join with the missionary in this work of sacrifice?

In order that you may ascertain your financial standing, the church has provided inventory blanks for your use which will be gladly furnished on application to the bishop. If you do not understand the financial law of the gospel, additional information will be furnished with pleasure.

Payments should be made to your local representative or mailed direct to the bishop, G. Lewis, Metcalfe Street, Wall-send.

Systematic Giving Recommended

Spasmodic giving is ineffective. While a little sacrifice on the part of all will meet the present needs, it will not suffice for the successful continuance of our work. The Lord admonishes his people to be "temperate" in all things. We therefore solicit upon your part, a regular observance of your obligations towards the Lord's work. We desire to reach the standard of "every member a tithe payer."

The field is ripe and ready to harvest. Let us all pray to the Lord of the harvest that the day may be hastened when more laborers may be sent forth, and work to that end, rendering a faithful account of our stewardship.

We solicit an interest in your prayers, that we may be able to perform, in righteousness, the work intrusted to our care.

Praying that the blessings promised to the faithful may be yours to enjoy, and that we may all be permitted to receive an inheritance in the celestial kingdom,

Your servants for Christ's sake,

M. A. MCCONLEY,

Missionary in Charge.

G. LEWIS,

Bishop of New South Wales, Queensland, and New Zealand.

First Two-day Meeting in Maine

Probably the inspiration for a Maine reunion next year.

On July 22 and 23 convened the first two-day meeting ever held in Maine. It was held at Sargentville, one of the most promising branches of the Western Maine District. Our experiment proved a grand success throughout. Both the preaching and the social services were of a high order of spirituality.

The attendance was good, considering the busy season now on. Brother O. L. Tompson came from Jonesport, in Eastern Maine, a distance of sixty-five miles, bringing with him three car loads of Saints. Brother H. A. Koehler, who was on his way to Onset reunion, was also present, and with him came four of the brethren from Corea. They also made the trip by car, a distance of more than fifty miles.

The Saints of Western Maine came from Stonington, Little Deer Isle, and Vinalhaven. It was the most general assembly yet effected in Maine, and it surely marks the beginning of a get-together movement in this section. The visiting Saints were delighted with the saintly hospitality extended to them by the members of Sargentville Branch. Some outsiders very generously responded in housing some of the visitors. Some acquaintances were made which will bring pleasant memories of the first two-day meeting in Maine.

The Saints of Maine are talking of having a reunion. Why not? We are over a thousand in number and scarcely a score have ever attended a reunion. Onset is the nearest to us, but the time and expense required to go is too much. What more inviting place could be found to spend your vacation than down on the coast of Maine? That is where John D. comes. What do you think of the proposition, those of you who like clams, lobsters, and fresh fish? To say nothing of the bathing, and scenery, and the cool sea breezes! We don't feel that the Saints here need any recommendation as to their ability to make things comfortable for visitors.

Watch for our reunion notice next summer.

N. M. WILSON.

Tent Meetings at Greenwood, Missouri

About a month ago Elder J. W. A. Bailey came here with the new stake tent. The first service held in it was the dedication. Elder Macrae preached the first sermon. The weather has been somewhat threatening, yet there were only two nights that services could not be held.

Elder Bailey has done the preaching since the first night, giving some special lectures on the House of Israel, proving that America was the place where the church was to be restored in the latter days. There were a few nights the "Russellites" held services here, but from what we could learn we had the largest crowds.

Brother Bailey gave us several stereopticon lectures on the history of the church, the Cliff Palace ruins, ruins of South America, etc. Hundreds of people turned out to these lectures, one time there being nearly four hundred there. Brother Bailey made it plain that it was the Book of Mormon people who built these ruins. These lectures are sure to have a good effect upon the young people.

Several nights Brother H. C. Edwards, who is an agent for the Central Radio Company, of Kansas City, favored us with the use of his receiving set. This of course drew large crowds, which gave Brother Bailey an excellent opportunity to get this glorious gospel before the community.

The last few nights Brother Bailey has preached some wonderful doctrinal sermons and many outsiders seem deeply interested.

Some of the very best families have become very much interested. Several have been baptized, and a lot of the prejudice has been broken down, for which we are sincerely thankful. This has been a very prejudiced community in the past and now that an opening has been made we hope soon to have several more come into our church here.

We have no branch at Greenwood, but there are about fourteen members, and it is our desire to have a little mission Sunday school here with some one to preach for us once in a while when possible.

The tent goes to Lees Summit next and many outsiders from here have promised to attend.

We appreciate the kindness of the Independence musicians, who have helped us with our music several evenings.

There have been several donations given by outsiders for tent expenses.

The Saints here have been strengthened and encouraged by these meetings, and we feel that the efforts put forth have not been in vain.

Sincerely, your sister in the gospel,

ESTELLE REINKING.

Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith reports a very fine trip into the Northwest, attending reunions. He especially mentioned the conference of the Southern Saskatchewan District, where the spirit of peace and unity prevailed.

A New Zealand Letter

Street preaching the principal method of reaching the people.

A line from this land of the Maori and Pakeha may be of interest. New Zealand is a long, narrow strip of rugged, volcanic country, divided by Cook Straits into North and South Islands, with a smaller one, Stewart, farther to the south. It is a land of long railway travel to the north and south, but scarcely any running from east to west. To go from Auckland, where we are laboring with a small branch, to Dunedin in the south is about eight hundred miles by train, boat, and again train to get to the only other branch in the dominion. Expensive? Rather!

It is a land of perpetual rain. Drouths of twenty days are a calamity. It is a land of luxuriant grass, top-grade butter, world-famed cheese, beef, mutton, and fish in abundance, and generally speaking it is "God's own country," as an erstwhile premier used to say. This means temporally, for spiritually it is conservative and does not catch on readily to advanced theological ideas as represented in the progressive latter-day work in contrast to their old, obsolete, iron-clad, and withal repudiated theories.

The New Zealander is a lover of conventionality and orthodoxy in religion, and looks with suspicion upon new cults and, as a rule, gives them scant courtesy. The Mormons who preceded us by forty years, have not made any impression on the Pakehas, but among the Maoris they have progressed wonderfully.

The Mormons seem to have arrived here about 1880, just a few years after the Maori revolt against the government, which gave rise to a new religion called "Pia Mareri" which means "Goodness of grace." It was originated by a Maori named Le Ua about 1860, and continued till 1872. This cult was based on the Bible, and embraced mesmerism, prophecy, and a barbaric and frenzied ritual. It was believed that the cry of "Hapa! Pia Mareri! Haw! Haw!" accompanied by a gesture, would turn a bullet.

A number of these were banished by the New Zealand Government, including a wily man named Te Kooti Rikirangi, to the Chatham Islands, without trial, but Te Kooti seized a ship, brought the company back, and for a few years caused great depredations against the whites. He was finally allowed to retire into the country unmolested. This happening in the seventies and the Mormons coming here in the eighties and finding their chief stamping ground about Thames and the Bay of Plenty, proves that the Mormons reaped the benefit of the psychological condition of the Maoris caused by Pia Mareri, or as it was most commonly called, "Hawhawism," which also operated chiefly in the same region.

When our missionaries came to Auckland about six years ago, they found the Mormons comfortably located and housed in a church and fine mission quarters in Upper Queen, one of the principal streets. Our work was begun on the streets and now the Mormons are not to be heard thereon. Maybe they have an aversion to the "Josephite" elders. These meetings are still continued, every Sunday from 4 till 6 p. m., and some have followed them from the beginning and have not yet joined the church. Some of these men will stand up for the honesty and integrity of the elders, but that is as far as they get.

I have heard all kinds of eulogistic remarks, as well as some disparaging ones, from prominent men of the school which includes infidels, agnostics, Catholics, schoolmasters, and sometimes clergymen. At times when no controversial matter is spoken and there are no interruptions, the crowd dwindles, but as soon as a controversy starts they are there in hundreds.

Thus this remarkable street movement goes on week after week, the people coming to get all the religion they want, and so our time flies away and the cause does not seem to consolidate.

Can you find a man who is capable of turning this situation to account? If so, let the church send him by the first boat. I have preached to this crowd almost every Sunday since coming, in conjunction with Elders A. V. Robinson, missionary, and Elder L. C. Bhery, local, both of whom are favorites and brave defenders of the faith. The crowd has given me a good reception, and one day a Church of England clergyman eulogized my effort, though he had "no sympathy with any phase of Mormonism."

Recently Brother Robinson baptized a young Church of England man. He went to his clergyman on Friday and as a result did not arrive for confirmation on Sunday.

He came to our office on Monday and said he had entered into an agreement with his father and his pastor not to read our literature or talk to us for three months. He says he did this to prove to them that he had not been hoodwinked by us, but that he knew his mind and could stand the siege. He said, "I will be with you in three months." So the case now stands.

They play the game low down when a Church of England minister will go to a Mormon elder to get evidence against Joseph Smith with which to counter our work. That is what this minister did, and the Mormon supplied it to defame one whom he pretends to believe a prophet. The minister also tried to work on the young man's feelings by saying, "If your dead sister knew it she would turn in her grave."

Brother A. H. Loving, the only other missionary in this dominion, is laboring at different points among Maori and Pakeha. He is now concentrating in a fine sized town named Thames, and with Sister Loving, who is a splendid tracter, is doing good work.

Thames is a Mormon stronghold and we expect some hot work ere long. Brother Robinson and I are going there to assist. We are doing quite a lot of house-to-house canvassing but though we meet some fine people who will read our tracts, they do not as yet turn to the Lord.

My health has not improved in Auckland, as I find the hilly city very hard to negotiate on foot, and too uneven for my bicycle. One needs a motor. My wife is better than when leaving Australia, but our daughter, Phyllis, though well, cannot get employment at the millinery trade. There is a great financial depression here and much unemployment, but rents and properties are fabulously high in price, I presume a full third higher than in Australia.

After spending three months of winter here I am more than ever in love with the sunny skies of my native land, Australia.

With fraternal greetings,

J. H. N. JONES.

The Busy Life of an Apostle

Apostle J. F. Curtis writes to the Presidency from McKenzie, Alabama, July 31, that the reunion at the Alaflo Branch was well attended and the meetings he had held after the reunion resulted in the baptism of twenty-five persons, some of the best people in the community coming in with us.

He was at the reunion at McKenzie at time of writing and interest was good with attendance satisfactory. Since his debate at Dailey, Michigan, he had preached fifteen sermons, baptized 27, confirmed 10, and ordained one priest.

Independence

President F. M. Smith has been in the East, attending Deer Park and Onset reunions. President Elbert A. Smith goes to Lamoni this week and will attend the Eastern Colorado reunion. Others of the general officers have been busy attending reunions in various sections of the country and will be for some time. G. T. Griffiths has been taking in Canadian reunions and others to the south of Ontario. J. A. Gillen was at Onset. U. W. Greene has been in Oklahoma and at Joplin. Paul M. Hanson at Lamoni. J. F. Curtis at southern reunions. T. W. Williams will be in Western Iowa and at Stewartville, Missouri. R. C. Russell is attending northern reunions. J. W. Rushton will attend the Idaho reunion.

The employees of the church offices in Independence held a picnic last Thursday afternoon at Horseshoe Lake, about six miles southeast of Independence. About two hundred attended and thoroughly enjoyed the day. Dinner and supper were served picnic style on the grounds, and recreational features were well organized and enjoyably executed. Speeches in keeping with the occasion were features, participated in by Elbert A. Smith, J. F. Keir, S. A. Burgess, R. S. Salyards, with a story for children by Marcella Schenck. It was a delightful day and altogether a pleasant event. It was proposed by the employees and they made up the time lost by working Saturday afternoon.

It so happened that the picnic was held on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of President F. M. Smith and wife. Yet the exigencies of church demands made it necessary that on that date he be on the Atlantic coast while his wife and family were on the Pacific coast.

Brother R. D. Weaver, who has been at the Sanitarium over eight weeks has developed fistula of the bowels, which will retard his recovery, and he asks the prayers of the Saints for his recovery, that he may be about his Master's business.

Elder F. T. Mussell, also in the Sanitarium for about two months, has so far recovered as to be about the building and out on the porches.

Local conditions are quiet, yet commercially we are favored by having oil-burning electric plant, the gas plant using oil for power purposes, and some coal coming in constantly from southern fields. Unemployment is probably at a minimum, with crops of all kinds good, and fruit plentiful.

Power trouble delayed the radio sermon Sunday, but after arrangements were completed to send by battery power, Elder S. A. Burgess preached a twenty-minute sermon on "Our Father," and a musical program was given by the Y. K. T. Quartet. Next Sunday Bishop J. F. Keir will be the speaker at 2 p. m. Tune in at 360 meters and let the HERALD Editors know how successfully you are receiving these programs.

Patients entering the Sanitarium for the week ending August 5: Miss Helen Bivens, Gashland, Missouri; Mrs. Fred Heman, Levasy, Missouri; Mrs. Jewell Patrick, Warrensburg, Missouri; Frank A. Fuhr, Sibley, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. Llewellyn Jones, Mrs. Charles Kemper, Miss Agnes Urton, Mrs. Bessie Kittle, Mrs. P. J. Travis, Miss Gladys Moore, Mrs. L. W. Cross, Mr. S. A. Rogers, Mrs. Veva Davidson, Mrs. Charles Stewart, and Miss Goldie Davis. X-ray patients: Sam Randall, Mount Washington, Missouri; Mrs. Lloyd Hill, Ayrshire, Iowa; and D. T. Lewis, L. W. Closson, and Ralph Smith, of Independence.

Holden Stake

HOLDEN. A feeling of deep gratitude flows from the hearts of the Holden Saints over the improvement in the health of their pastor, D. J. Krahl. While he is not sufficiently recovered to enter into the active duties of his office, he can take much more physical exercise than for some time past.

Between thirty and forty of the Saints went to his home Monday evening, July 24, to cheer him and make him feel the deep solicitude that has been felt for him during his affliction. Light refreshments were served and a very pleasant evening was spent.

Brethren Macrae and Ross are very busy making arrangements for the Square Deal Dining Hall at the Missouri State Fair. The profits from this hall go into the Stake Church Building Fund. It is hoped that the Saints will look up this eating place when at the fair.

The copious rains of the recent past have made the crops look fine. Prospects for corn, fruit, and vegetables are exceptionally good.

MARSHALL. A special day of service was provided by our stake president, W. S. Macrae, he being associated with Brethren Fred Scarcliff and I. M. Ross. The special social service called at 8.30 Sunday morning, was spiritual and uplifting indeed, and evidences of the goodness of our heavenly Father were made manifest. All the services of the day were of a high order and we anticipate results.

Burlington, Iowa

On Sunday, July 16, Brother Charles J. Smith (missionary in charge in the Nauvoo District) and wife, stopped over in Burlington, en route from their home in Sioux City to Nauvoo, where they expect to spend some weeks in the Mansion House. Brother Smith spoke at the chapel here both morning and evening, and good interest is reported.

On the same date Brother and Sister Ralph Welday drove to Burlington from Cedar Rapids, where Brother Welday is engaged in the fruit business and laboring locally as an elder in the branch. He spoke for us in the morning, an able presentation of some of the essentials in preparation for Zion.

Brother D. J. Williams, both district president and president of the Burlington Branch, has been out in district work over Sunday, the 30th, together with Sister Williams who is district organizer for the Women's Department. During his absence, members of the local priesthood occupied to good advantage.

CORRESPONDENT.

Elder Davis Has Been Ill in Australia

A letter from Apostle Myron A. McConley, dated July 6, and written at Taree, New South Wales, Australia, tells of the recent illness of Elder James W. Davis from blood poisoning in his leg.

He had suffered from erysipelas in his feet following an attack which came on him while en voyage between San Francisco and Hawaii. Following treatment in Hawaii, he was apparently cured. About June 1 he was attacked again following a slight abrasion in the skin of his leg, from which he recovered and was in fine spirits. About June 27 the leg again became inflamed from the abrasion, but a physician thought it nothing to worry about. However, Brother Davis took ill while at John's River church and it was found to be blood poison. He was taken to the hospital at Taree where, after a strenuous fight on the part of those caring for him, he was thought to be out of danger at the time of writing.

Brother McConley intended to return to Argents Hill, where, in company with Bishop Lewis, they intended to visit

MISCELLANEOUS

RAILROAD RATES FOR GENERAL CONFERENCE DELEGATES

One and One Half Fare for Round Trip Possible

We have completed arrangements for special rates for delegates coming to General Conference, beginning October 1, 1922. These rates will apply from all points in the United States and Canada under the following conditions:

Tickets at normal one-way tariff rates for the going trip may be bought on any date from September 28 to October 4, both inclusive (except from Pacific Coast States where the dates for purchase will be from September 27 to October 3, both inclusive).

When purchasing these tickets be sure to ask the ticket agent for a certificate. All agents should be supplied with certificates, but if any agent does not have a certificate, get a regular receipt for the fare with indorsement, "No certificates on hand at this station." Be sure to get either a certificate or a receipt with indorsement signed and dated by the ticket agent on the same day as the ticket; also be sure that the certificate or receipt shows the same point of starting and destination as the ticket.

Tickets must be bought through to either Independence, Missouri, or Kansas City, Missouri, preferably to Independence, if possible. If, for any reason, you cannot buy a through ticket to either Kansas City or Independence, buy a local ticket to the nearest place where you can get a through ticket, and then buy from such place through to either Kansas City or Independence, securing a regular certificate or a receipt signed by the agent at each place.

Immediately upon arrival at Independence present your certificate to the undersigned. If we have 250 or more certificates properly made out and presented for validation, it will entitle those presenting them to purchase return tickets on or before October 18, 1922, over the same route they came for one half fare; but, until 250 certificates are presented for validation, no one will be entitled to purchase return tickets at reduced rates; hence, the necessity for immediate presentation of the tickets, as some may desire to return home earlier than others.

No refund will be made on account of failure to obtain a proper certificate, or on account of failure to have the certificate validated, so be sure to attend to these two important features.

These reduced fares will be available to all attending the conference, or to members of their immediate family.

Particular Notice to Pacific Delegates

Delegates coming from Ogden or Salt Lake City, Utah, and points west thereof, who desire to do so, may save themselves railroad fare by purchasing the regular round trip, summer tourist tickets to Kansas City and return, which will be on sale until August 31, 1922, and are good for return on or before October 31. These tickets are good for stop-over at any intermediate points in either direction. The price of these round trip tickets is only a very small amount more than the one-way fare, but they must be bought and the journey must be started on or before August 31.

scattered groups of Saints at Dorrigs, Ashton, Coramba, Boambee, and Corindi, en route to Queensland. He had suffered more from the winter season than he had anticipated, the recent cold, frosty nights giving a real meaning to the word winter.

Edwin T. Dawson, of Lamoni Stake, writes: "For several months I have noticed good improvement in the sermons from the ministry of this stake, and some whom we thought the most feeble have greatly improved, now seeming to be among the best speakers. I am hopefully and prayerfully looking forward to a still greater improvement. I see much to encourage and nothing to discourage in this Stake."

Those who wish to take advantage of these rates, but who do not desire to leave for conference before the latter part of September, may buy these tickets, board the train, notify the conductor that they desire to stop off at the first station, get off there, and buy a local ticket back home. Later, when they wish to start to conference, they can buy a local ticket to the station where they left the train, using their tourist ticket from there on to Kansas City. This plan is perfectly lawful in every way, and for those who are willing to go to the inconvenience will save, for those coming from the Pacific Coast points, from $25 to $35 per ticket as compared with the cost of the round trip journey, using the certificate plan outlined above, and a less amount for those further inland. Ask your ticket agent what the difference will be from your station between the round trip summer tourist rate to Kansas City and one and one half times the regular one way rate.

If you do not understand any feature of the reduced rates outlined above, I shall be glad to hear from you, and it is also suggested that before buying your tickets you consult your district secretary, if possible, as we will make some recommendations to them as to the best routes to be used by delegates, particularly where a number may be traveling together.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
Transportation Manager.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 7, 1922.

Reunion Notices

Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3. Expecting good speakers: Elders Elbert A. Smith, B. R. McGuire, Ellis Short, and M. A. Etzenhouser; also the regular local and missionary forces of the district. Cafeteria plan worked admirably last year and will be in operation again with meals from fifteen to forty cents. Tents: 10 by 12, $4.50; 12 by 14, $5.50; cots, not over $1. All mail for people attending reunion should be addressed to 1015 West Cheyenne Road. Yellow cabs will carry one person from either station to grounds for about $1; two persons for $1.20; three for $1.40; four for $1.60. If wanting this service upon arrival call Main 4700. If coming out to grounds by street car and paying only one fare, take Broadmoor car and get off at Fox Street (Broadmoor cut-off) and Cheyenne Road and walk four blocks up Cheyenne Road to old Cheyenne Schoolhouse. If paying only one fare on Canon car, get off at Fox Street (one-fare limit), walk one block south to Cheyenne Road and up this road to old schoolhouse. Those wanting to pay two fares from town take Canon car, get off at O'Malley Avenue, walk one block south over to Cheyenne Road and half block west to old schoolhouse which houses our cafeteria. Some had difficulty in locating grounds last year, hence the fuller directions this year—follow them and you'll have no trouble. Order tents and cots at once from R. S. Salyards, jr., 920 North Cedar Street, Colorado Springs.

Conference Notices

Western Montana, at Race Track, during reunion, August 26 and 27. Please send all reports to J. P. Wyckoff, Deer Lodge, Montana.

Eastern Michigan, at Port Huron, September 2 and 3. We hope to have a report from all men holding priesthood in the district. Please send all reports to Herbert Swoffer, secretary, Sandusky, Michigan, not later than August 29. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths will be with us and possibly other leading officers of the church. William M. Grice.

Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, during reunion, August 26 and 27. Much important business, including election of delegates to General Conference. Send ministerial reports at once to R. S. Salyards, jr., 920 North Cedar Street, Colorado Springs.

Three-day Institute at Wichita

A three-day institute will be held in Wichita, Kansas, August 18 to 20. All the Saints in the surrounding territory are invited to attend. Sunday, August 13, has been set aside as a day of fasting for the success of these meetings. Hope all will observe it if possible. Anita Wilson, 321 Grove Street, Wichita.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parentheses give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

- Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, Iowa, August 2 to 14 (397, 638).
- Western Oklahoma, at Eagle City, August 4 to 14 (247, 589).
- Central Oklahoma, seven miles north of Tulsa, three miles south of Sperry, August 4 to 14 (612, 685).
- Chatham, at Erie Beach, Ontario, August 4 to 14 (271, 660).
- Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 10 to 20 (319, 638, 732).
- Southern Idaho, August 11 to 20.
- Kewanee, at Galva, Illinois, August 11 to 20 (732).
- Northeastern Kansas, at Netawaka, August 11 to 20 (271, 635).
- Fremont and Pottawattamie, Iowa, and Northeastern Nebraska, at Prospect Park, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 11 to 20 (319, 589).
- Seattle and British Columbia, at Centralia, Washington, August 11 to 20 (397, 564).
- Central Michigan, at Pinconning, August 11 to 20 (469, 565, 732).
- Des Moines, at Runnells, Iowa, August 11 to 20.
- Eastern Iowa, at Maquoketa, August 11 to 20 (469, 660).
- Southwestern Texas, at San Antonio, August 18 to 27 (660).
- Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, August 18 to 28 (638, 685).
- Utah, at Malad, Idaho, August 18 to 28 (541).
- Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Woodbine, Iowa, August 18 to 27 (541, 732).
- Central Nebraska, at Inman, August 18 to 27 (516, 685).
- Northern Michigan, at Park of Pines, near Boyne City, August 18 to 27 (222, 660).
- Western Montana, at Race Track, August 18 to 27 (638).
- Far West Stake, near Stewartsville, Missouri, August 18 to 27 (319, 660).
- Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, near Xenia, August 18 to 27.
- Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, August 18 to 27 (685, 732).
- Southern Missouri, at Springfield, August 18 to 27 (685).
- Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Vicksburg, Michigan, August 18 to 27 (685).
- Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3 (350, 589).
- Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3 (638, 732).
- Northeastern Illinois, August 24 to September 3 (589).
- Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3 (295, 685).

Conference Minutes

ALBERTA.—At Ribstone, July 7 to 9. Officers: William Osler, sustained as president; William Roy, first counselor; Melvin Hanna, second counselor; W. H. Chandler, secretary. The conference was one of the best held in Alberta for some time. A large crowd was present and a peaceful spirit prevailed during the entire conference. District Sunday school convention was held on Friday. Will Cooper, of Metiskow, was elected superintendent, and Minnie Burton, of Ribstone, secretary. William H. Roy reported total receipts, 1,374.76; expenditures, $506.91; remitted to Bishop B. R. McGuire, $345; balance on hand, $22.85. District auditor reported Brother Roy's books in splendid condition. The speakers at the conference were Elders Stead, Osler, Roy, and Lloyd Gregory. There were five baptisms Sunday afternoon, Elder Beckley officiating. W. A. Cooper, secretary.

LONDON.—At Springbank Park on the reunion camp grounds of the first annual reunion of the London District. The reunion began July 1. The conference was held on the 8th and 9th, with Gomer T. Griffiths presiding, as he did throughout the reunion. The following officers were elected, providing the consent and approval of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve can be obtained: J. H. Yager, present appointee of the general church as missionary supervisor for the district, president; L. O. Pearson, of Saint Thomas, first vice president; L. Burnard, of London, second vice president. Officers sustained were: Lucy Yerks, of Waterford, secretary; Bishop Burger, of Saint Thomas, treasurer; Elder and Sister W. A. Withrow, of Stratford, chorister and organist respectively. The Religio field worker, Sunday school superintendent, organizer of the Women's Department, were also sustained, receiving a vote of appreciation for the good work done during the year. The committee for two-day meetings was continued and made a standing committee of the district. Sister Glines, representing the general church Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Departments made a host of friends and we believe a lasting impression for good upon the mind of everyone privileged to meet with or listen to her. Under her immediate leadership, with the unhesitating approval of President F. M. Smith, the organization formerly known among us as the Saint John's Nursing Division was renamed "The Nursing Guide of the London District of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Number 1," and Sister E. K. Swindall, as supervisor of this new department of the church, was approved by the conference. The reunion committee was sustained, receiving also a vote of thanks for the arduous work done in connection with the inauguration of London District reunion. P. H. Philippin, secretary of conference.

Our Departed Ones

GIBBONS.—John Fitz Gibbons was born at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, October 21, 1845. Moved to Dodge County, Minnesota, in 1857. Served in Company M, First Minnesota Artillery, during the Civil War. Baptized in 1877. Moved to Pelican Rapids in 1900. Married Florence Elizabeth South, December 11, 1873. Died from paralysis, July 14, 1922. Leaves wife, three daughters, three sons, one sister, and two brothers. Two children have preceded him. Funeral services in charge of Marcus Erickson and Thomas Leitch.

STAFFORD.—Henry, son of Edward and Prudence Stafford, was born July 19, 1851, at Utica, Tioga County, New York. Moved with his parents when a child to Abingdon, Illinois. Moved to Decatur County in the spring of 1915, settling across the road from what is now the reunion grounds, one mile south of Lamoni. Married Hannah Tibbets, October 19, 1875. Baptized in 1875. Died at Lamoni, Iowa, July 8, 1922. Leaves wife, one sister, and two brothers, and a number of nieces and nephews. Funeral from the home in charge of William E. Lorance. Sermon by E. E. Long. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Who Owns You	735
Conference Musical Program	736
Children of God	738
Fruitless Knowledge	738
The Sin of the World	739
Conference Daily	740
Stewardship Teaching Spreads	740
College Day September 24	740
Women Recognized in New Zealand	740
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
References on the Atonement of Christ, by J. W. A. Bailey ..	741
Religio Convention, by T. W. Williams	747
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Literature and Life	748
Second Missouri Convention	748
Would Abolish the Jail	748
A Fair Statement	748
Fear Loss of Leadership	749
Success Not Easily Attained	749
Must Have Evangelism	749
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT
Lula M. Sandy—Bertha L. Mader—Dora Young	752
LETTERS AND NEWS
M. A. McConley and G. Lewis—N. M. Wilson—Estelle Jenkins—J. H. N. Jones ..	756
MISCELLANEOUS

A Sharp Ax!

Is Your Ax Sharp or Dull?

It has been well said that an educated man has a sharp ax in his hand, and an uneducated man a dull one. The purpose of a college education is to sharpen the ax to its keenest edge.

No Time Lost in Sharpening!

The man who has a forest to clear realizes the importance of sharp tools. Time spent wisely in sharpening is his best investment, because it leads to greater efficiency. So it is with education. It has been proven conclusively that a college training pays. Education aids nature in the development of the physical, intellectual, and moral faculties of man. It adds to his perfection, his happiness, and does not leave his social destination to mere chance.

The Man With a Plan Succeeds

Plan your career! A general studies the country, considers the line of march, takes account of his supplies and equipment, calls into consultation critics of his plan, because he knows that conquest or captivity depends upon a plan. So it is with you—young man or young woman—whoever you may be. A plan determines whether you will succeed or fail, whether you will be master or servant. The difference between economic independence and industrial slavery is a plan—an education if you please.

Go to Graceland College
Your Own Church School

Officially accredited and fully standardized

For complete information write

The President

Graceland College

Lamoni, Iowa

Good Rules for Children

President Harding is quoted as referring to the moral laxity, shifting of standards of duty: "The failures of the past invariably have been preceded by spiritual paralysis and moral looseness."

One hundred and thirty mothers of the Parents' League of Brooklyn, New York, have adopted these rules for boys and girls between fifteen and eighteen:

What They Must Do

- Limit party hours from 8.30 to 12.
- Parties on Friday and Saturday nights only.
- Wear simple, refined clothes, always.
- Have chaperons always.
- Have carefully censored shows.

What They Mustn't Do

- Dance improperly.
- Serve refreshments after parties.
- Attend more than one party per night.

Rules for Those Still Younger

- Entertain in small groups.
- Use simple favors; cut out prizes.
- End parties at 8.30.
- No shows unless approved by parents.

It will be remembered that the mothers of Independence took a similar action a few months ago, not recognizing any dance as proper. It is both necessary and right that parents should assume a responsibility in the present social situation. They owe it to their children as well as to society.

Good Advertising

The branch at Hutchinson, Kansas, Elder R. J. Wildey pastor, have been putting out some pleasing printed matter of late. One was a regular invitation style card, mailed in appropriate envelopes to various families. The date is filled in by hand, with subjects for the morning and evening services on Sunday. The card we received announces as the subject for morning, "Consecration," and for the evening, "Baptism," and is signed by the pastor.

They also have had printed a blotter 4 by 8½ inches, in black and red ink, white, with blue blotter surface. The headline says: "The best insurance plan ever offered to mankind." The display is continued with a statement that "Eternal life is offered on terms not duplicated or even approached by any other organization." "The church built after the Bible pattern." A large replica of the church seal occupies a prominent place; Jacob 2: 36 and John 8: 31, 32 are quoted. Time of services on Sunday is given, location of meeting place, name of the city and State, with the line—"Our creed all truth" make it a complete statement, well displayed, and likely to be seen and considered frequently. They had the work done locally. Both jobs are exceptionally clean in appearance, well balanced, and effective for general advertising.

Special Offer on Colored Post Cards

In order to reduce stock, a low price is being made on our post card views of various church buildings. These are printed excellently in three colors and are good, clean stock. The views are of Graceland College, Liberty Home, Saints' Home, Stone Church, Lamoni Brick Church, former Herald Publishing House.

The new price is 6 for 5 cents, or 36 for 25 cents, post-paid, in any assortment desired. Simply framed, these make excellent wall decorations and have considerable historic value.

Will You Help This Missionary to Find Work?

Many have been converted to the gospel through the chance reading of a tract. The Lord blesses his written word as he does the spoken message, and our most gifted men have written tracts that are as interesting and convincing as their best sermons.

A tract box, filled with well-assorted literature, placed in railroad station, post office, or hotel, will reach many strangers, and may do untold good. Every local church should also have a well-filled literature box, that the visitors may have free tracts if they wish.

ARE THERE 100 BRANCHES WILLING TO COOPERATE TO THE EXTENT OF $10 EACH?

This is our plan: Let each branch raise a fund of $10 for this special purpose. On receipt of this money the Herald Publishing House will make up and ship the following assortment of tracts that are especially well adapted to this work:

- 100 Statement of Belief
- 100 Busy Man's Tract: Faith
- 100 Busy Man's Tract: Repentance
- 100 Busy Man's Tract: Baptism
- 100 Busy Man's Tract: Laying on of Hands.
- 100 Busy Man's Tract: Resurrection
- 100 Busy Man's Tract: The Great Restoration
- 100 Nineteenth Century Prophet and His Work
- 100 L. D. S. A Question of Identity.
- 100 The Church of Jesus Christ.
- 20 Open Letter to the Clergy.

These 1020 tracts at catalogue price come to just $10, but to help in this special campaign we will give with each order one of the tract boxes pictured above. This is a very practical box, durable, attractive, and creditable to the church.

Then let the local publicity agent or a special committee or a class find suitable location for this box, make arrangements for its placing, and see that it is regularly supplied with this assorted literature.

What a splendid missionary effort that would be!
Who will be the first to respond?

Send your orders to HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, August 16, 1922

Number 33

EDITORIAL

Called to Be Priests for God

The people of God are blessed with great talents; they have therefore the greater responsibility.

It is a good thing to be humble; to get down to earth—not think more of ourselves than we should. Yet there is also at times a necessity for honesty, a careful weighing of the truth.

Some years ago we saw a statement signed by one of our ministers to the effect that those who were normal, those who were able to receive their education at the proper age and in the proper way, could go into other schools, implying that Graceland had little to offer such for Graceland is for the abnormal. He continued that while there are many orders of society our church draws from the very dregs of society.

The intention was doubtless very good. It was to emphasize, for example, that those who can receive a grammar school education or high school education at the customary age would well take advantage of the other public schools of that class, but that Graceland had an academy for the benefit of those whose early opportunities had been neglected. But he quite overstates the fact when he declares Graceland to be for the abnormal, for in the collegiate work especially, the need of watchcare over our young at a critical time of life is becoming more and more apparent.

As to the statement with regard to the members of the church, he was of course very greatly in error. Our opponents have stated it more truly when they have accused us of drawing our members from other so-called Christian churches instead of going out into the byways and into the gutters and getting our converts there. This is doubtless in part true, and there is a very good reason that such is the case. The Mosaic law was a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ. We have reason to believe that there has been inspiration, as claimed by other men, for the same purpose, to act as a schoolmaster to prepare a people for true Christianity. The so-called Christian churches likewise have a portion of truth and have as members many excellent individuals. They all have truth and are entitled to a portion of that light which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world.

But to the church of God as reestablished on the earth, there belongs the responsibility of being the crown of his work here on earth. It might in a sense be called the post graduate course. It requires more of thought, more real conviction, to join the true church of God than it does to follow in the way of so-called Christendom. It is therefore both logical and to be expected that such an organization established by God would draw strongest from those whose religious convictions are established, those who really desire to serve the God of heaven, those who have studied his word and recognize the truth when they hear it.

The church does not take the position that those belonging to other churches are doomed to hell. The church has never assumed such an attitude. To the contrary, many of those who have been guilty of grievous sins and have gone to a place of suffering, to hell for a season, will come forth and receive in the judgment a certain reward better than eye hath seen or ear heard. The honorable men of the earth receive a still better glory, to everyone as he is able to receive; and to those who are truly children of God there is also given a fullness of the celestial glory.

It is right that the honorable men of the earth should be found capable of promotion, of advancement and preparation for a better glory and for showing forth a great sacrifice and devotion to the purposes of God. It is right, therefore, that the church of God receive revelations from God, acting under the direction of his Holy Spirit, preaching again the message as it was given by Jesus Christ, and that this church should draw from other churches, and it is an honor to other churches that such should be the case.

But if these people then are a peculiar people, if they are a chosen people, a select people, there rests upon them, therefore, the greater responsibility, for from him to whom much has been given much shall be required, and he who possesseth the greater life, if he fail, shall receive the greater condemnation.

The world is moving forward and there are many individual instances of personal sacrifice. Other churches are doing much with tithing and with stewardships, so far as they have been able to comprehend these terms. It behooves us, the people of God, to move forward with greater earnestness and with a feeling of that greater responsibility.
www.LatterDayTruth.org

Called to be the light of the world, the people of God cannot justly excuse themselves by the standard of others. That members of other churches dance is not necessarily an excuse to those on whom has been placed this responsibility. The test applies to all of our life. That ministers of other churches smoke tobacco is no excuse for us. The use made by others of moving pictures or other instrumentalities does not thereby become an excuse for us. Our conduct must be judged by the standard of right in the light of inspiration. Called to be the light of the world, his children are indeed not hid under a bushel, but rather set on a hill to be considered of all mankind.

The work of God shall not fail. Let us take care that we ourselves do not fail. S. A. B.

The Young People

A great band of enthusiastic, self-denying, sacrificing young men and women is needed.

In the midst of the turmoil of the world there is much criticism of the young people. At the same time there is an appeal made in many quarters for the young people to save the race, and that the only hope of a new world and of better conditions rests with the young.

The fact that the world is confronted with a grave situation is generally acknowledged by those who think and observe the signs of the times. It will require strong men and more men than ever before. It will need, as one writer suggests, whole-hearted men, clean-hearted men. Yet how many leaders have any of these characteristics, let alone all of them. This writer continues that such leaders must be found among the young men, as the "old men are all steeped, branded, tarred and feathered with the materialism of the late nineteenth century." In patriotism they see only loyalty to a political machine, and that for personal benefit. They are slow to see the value of the common weal. At the same time no one is going to get anywhere who thinks primarily of his own leadership. There are times in history when men are called on to give up everything for an ideal; there is a call for consecration, for what we can give and do for an ideal.

The above is in part a summary from one of many articles coming to our attention in recent years. In the church we are also confronted with the emphasis of the value of the young people. The reason for that is that we know that older men become set in their ways and but few new habits are formed or many new ideals undertaken after growth is fully completed; say after thirty or thirty-five years of age. The sutures of the head remain open until about twenty-five, and with the ablest thinkers perhaps to thirty, but rarely beyond thirty-five. This does not mean that older men may not do the best work, may not continue to develop and grow. It does mean the establishment of fundamental ideals is effected. But we also note it is the older men who continually do the most for the social service.

We note in the earliest days of the Restoration the number of young men in the places of leading importance in the church. There were several reasons for this. It takes the zeal of young men to carry on a new hope and master new ideals. There was much aggressive work to be done. In addition to this, the one chosen as the leader and head of the church was himself a young man. It was therefore natural that he should surround himself with young men, though it is true that there were many older in years also affiliated closely with him.

We are inclined at times to forget our own youth and the needs and value of youthful energy. Men who were themselves called to office in the church in their early years are yet loath to nominate men who are even five or more years older than they were at the time of assuming responsibility. It is difficult, perhaps, to realize that Joseph Smith, the Martyr, was only a little past twenty-four when the church was founded; that his son, our late President Joseph Smith, was only a little past twenty-seven when he became the president of the high priesthood and of the church.

Yet when he, at seventy years of age, called his own son as a counselor, already ten months older than his father at the time he assumed the sole responsibility as president of the church, and also named R. C. Evans, a man then fifty years of age, he wondered why men so young in years should be chosen. The matter of age is relative, but it is not relative that we should consider what each man has to give and should secure the best attainable for the church.

We look for young men in the Quorum of Twelve for the reason that this quorum is so clearly the leading missionary quorum of the church. When the Twelve were called in 1835, their ages ranged from twenty-four to forty; the average age was less than thirty years. In the Reorganization, when the Twelve was reorganized in 1873, the age of members then named ranged from twenty-eight to forty-eight, and the average age of these new members of the quorum then was thirty-six years.

But while we look and realize that the church needs the energy and enthusiasm of young men, we realize very thoroughly that she also needs the experience and wisdom of those older in years. And there are several reasons why the leading officers of the church will now not be quite so young as during the days of the early Restoration. One reason is that the church has now many men who have their ideals established, and rightly established. There are perhaps more men past forty who are ready for the establishment of Zion than we ordinarily realize. That one great reason for the choosing of young men, those under thirty, is largely minimized, while there is the added advantage of deeper thought in those older in years.

Again the greater need for preparation and training, the emphasis laid upon education, will tend to mean a few years difference. There are these and other elements to be considered.

If the church is to carry on the program before her, there is needed a great band of enthusiastic, self-denying, and sacrificing young men and young women to step forward in all their zeal and power and do their great part to that end, though there may be associated with them those who have looked for years for the coming of a better day.

Men who are whole-hearted, who really believe and hold for fundamental principles, men who are pure in heart, men who are courageous, are needed; but there are many of them in the church who are waiting patiently a time of greater service.

S. A. B.

Saints Awakening to Need of Church

Reports from our bishops in Australia indicate that the business depression has seriously affected their income, but that by special effort on the part of the Saints, conditions are improving.

We are glad to report that the Saints generally are beginning to feel that the financial problem of the church is their individual problem, and there is an increased disposition to try and help. This, together with the improved business outlook for the year ahead of us, is encouraging.

We want to be able to report to the coming General Conference that our receipts are equal to our disbursements. We can do it. You can help. Don't wait until to-morrow, but do your part to-day either by way of free will offering or the payment of the tithe.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Over $2,500 worth of books were sent out to reunions from the publishing house this season, so the Saints might have opportunity to make personal selection from the best in church literature.

Religious Aspects of Evolution

Summary of the views on evolution of a noted editor.

Lyman Abbott, in The Outlook for March 22, discusses briefly the subject of evolution as affecting religion. He states that creation even now is going on all about us, that it is a process and not a product. He refers to Huxley's description of the marvel of the development of the single cell in the egg into some animal such as the newt; how after a certain stage, as though by the hand of the Master a spine begins to appear, then the head at one end and the tail at the other until, watching the process hour by hour it would seem almost that by some greater vision we might see a hidden artist with his plan before him striving with skillful manipulation to perfect his work.

This same process seen through a microscope is also disclosed by the telescope in the distant stars. Evolution does not banish God; instead, it enables us to see him at work by our side, whereas before we thought we detected indications that he had been at work long ago.

Hugh Miller saw in the rocks the footprints of the Creator and the universe pervaded by the spirit of service and sacrifice. Love, service, and sacrifice are the processes of continuous creation.

Doctor Abbott rejects the explanation of the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest, quotes Henry Drummond as saying that the struggle is the villain of the drama of life reacting to bring the other players for higher ends, finding love and sacrifice throughout the universe. He continues:

To interpret the course of evolution without this [law of sacrifice] would be to leave the richest side even of material nature without an explanation. Retrace the ground even thus hastily traveled over, and see how full creation is of meaning, of anticipation, of good for man, how far back begins the undertone of love. Remember that nearly all the beauty of the world is love-beauty—the corolla of the flower and the plume of the grass, the lamp of the firefly, the plumage of the bird, the horn of the stag, the face of a woman; that nearly all the music of the natural world is love-music—the song of the nightingale, the call of the mammal, the chorus of the insect, the serenade of the lover; that nearly all the foods of the world are love-foods—the date and the raisin, the banana and the breadfruit, the locust and the honey, the eggs, the grains, the seeds, the cereals, and the legumes; that all the drinks of the world are love-drinks—the juice of the sprouting grain and the withered hop, the milk from the udder of the cow, the wine from the love-cup of the vine. Remember that the family, the crown of all higher life, is the creation of love; that cooperation, which means power, which means wealth, which means leisure, which therefore means art and culture, recreation and creation, is the gift of love. Remember not only these things, but the diffusions of feeling which accompany them, the elevations, the ideals, the happiness, the goodness, and the faith in more goodness, and ask if it is not a world of love in which we live.

Leaving Drummond, Doctor Abbott refers to the development of individual man from the single cell through the various forms of animality until he reaches the human form and then birth into the world. Romanus is quoted as showing side by side the embryos of a fish, salamander, a tortoise, a bird, a hog, a calf, a rabbit, and a man. Three successive stages of development were examined. "There is very little difference between the eight animals at the earliest of the three stages represented, all having fish-like tails, gill slits, and so on."

Even the baby is but a seed bed of human possibilities for good and for evil. Doctor Abbott continues by rejecting the story of the fall, which he says is confined to the first chapter of Genesis, that the only other passage attempting to discuss the origin and nature of sin is the seventh chapter of Romans, which is essentially evolutionism.

Finally he concludes that this is only a summary of the views reached more than one fourth of a century ago.

It is well indeed that we consider frankly every side of the problem and that we recognize frankly this development of the cell to the embryo even in the case of the human species as well as all others. But we should clearly remember that these are opinions reached by a man already old more than a quarter of a century ago, and by a man who was, and is, a clergyman and editor, not a scientist by preference. The other great fact should not be overlooked. Whatever may be the similarity between the embryo at the earliest stage, however difficult it may be for man to distinguish, the fact remains that each one invariably develops after its kind, and that the various theories of the origin of species have been found untenable one by one.

It is difficult for people to-day to see a difference between a man of God and a man who follows the ways of the world, striving to do a little good as he goes. Under the microscope they discover no difference between the vilest sinner and the most devout Saint. The mere fact that man cannot see the divine likeness does not change the fact that those who are born again possess the possibility of becoming the sons of God, and through a right life will develop greatly the divine likeness.

As we have urged before and doubtless shall again, the theory of evolution is not one to be accepted, rejected, or discussed solely from a religious point of view. We are justified in rejecting positivism or an attempt to explain all creation in terms of matter and substance, with a rejection of God.

We have written before concerning the law of sacrifice to be found in the universe. The control of appetite does, in humanity, work through sublimation into higher æsthetic value. It is true that part of our food is connected either with maternal love or the attempts of the plants and animals to continue the species. In part it may be explained as the close correlation of self-preservation and the preservation of the race.

In the meantime we are pleased to present this another point of view, to our readers.

The Church of Jesus Christ and Other Churches

Thoughts gleaned and derived from the International Sunday School Convention.

Professor Walter S. Athearn emphasizes that God is not an algebraic symbol, but an independent reality. He is not simply a biological combination of that which is pleasing within oneself. If that be true, and it is true, then we are reminded again of Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and of the unchangeable God.

If the speakers at the International Sunday School Convention are sincere in the presentation of these ideas, very common sense and logic must lead to the conclusion that if the prophet of God spake in ages past, so may we expect the prophet of God to speak to-day; or rather, that God will continue to reveal himself to humanity through the agencies which he himself has selected. We should really expect the vision, the voice of prophecy, the gifts of the Spirit, which were with the church as established by Jesus.

We are reminded that the Church of Jesus Christ, this church, is distinctly and most emphatically a Christian church, and is composed of people with a high moral average. We are a Christian church. The principal difference between this church, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and other churches which call themselves Christian, is that we insist more strongly upon the teaching of the New Testament, and if anything more strongly on New Testament Christianity, and much more strongly on the necessity of having the officers which Christ set in his church.

Second, as a corollary to that is the fact that we believe in present-day revelation, not to one man alone, but to all of the children of God, those who seek him and strive to keep his commandments.

Third, we differ perhaps in the fact that our social plan for the solution of economic problems is one of the first in the field. This church was also one of the first to recognize the social aspect of Christianity, and that as far back as 1832 and 1833. The plan submitted, we believe has been given by divine direction. It is therefore more definite and better adapted to the needs of humanity.

These are the outstanding points of difference. The similarities are numerous. But even concern-

(Continued on page 779.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

While the Bridegroom Tarried They All
Slumbered and Slept

By A Layman

Covetousness as the cause of spiritual slumber.

On account of the busy rush in life, both in business and in pleasure, men have not acquainted themselves with a certain line of education that is of great importance to each of us to-day. Each man, woman, and child will be pleased to learn more about the teachings of our heavenly Father. We should have a great desire to become personally familiar with his teachings concerning eternal life. If we should pass his teachings lightly by, we will likely be found among those who slumber and sleep, for the percentage will be so great that our Savior has used the term "all." If we should follow his teaching on one particular subject until we get a thorough understanding of that particular principle, then we would be better prepared for another. Otherwise, our minds may become confused.

A Fundamental Principle

Not but that each command of God is a fundamental principle of itself, but man in his shortsightedness has possibly considered certain portions of the commands of God of less importance than others.

If we had the privilege of examining a chain that was to be used to elevate us to a great height, we would be very particular to examine, critically, what might look to us as being the weakest link. Therefore let us apply the same rule when we are seeking to learn the principal cause for this sleeping and slumbering condition that will exist just previous to the coming of our Lord.

By reading the ten commandments, we find one principle that, to all appearances, is nearly, if not totally, ignored by the world. We have seen it violated so universally all the days of our lives that we have generally neglected its import. This commandment reads (see Exodus 20: 17): "Thou shalt not covet . . . anything that is thy neighbor's." This makes it quite plain that man shall not desire to possess anything unless he should possess it honestly and justly. Many to-day have gone far afield from this fundamental principle.

Teachings of Man

Man, in these modern times, has different ideas in regard to justice; so different, in fact, that many have united themselves with organizations which are both teaching and practicing not only covetousness, but extortion. These teachings are not only the reverse of those which come from our heavenly Father, but they are dividing men into different groups and classes. This condition of things has made some so uncharitable that they refuse to allow one who is not of their particular organization to be employed where they themselves are. This is destructive to Christianity. It not only violates the Golden Rule, but it breaks the tenth commandment as well, which reads: "Thou shalt not covet."

In order that we may better understand this word covet, let us divide this act into four different classes.

(a) Paul says, "Covet earnestly the best gifts." If we should covet any of the gifts of God, such as the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, virtue, faith in God, etc., we could well consider this a godly covetousness.

(b) And again: if one should covet the things that he stands in need of, such as food, raiment, home, etc., and if he should come in possession of these things lawfully and justly, he would feel that this desire had been lawful and just, and would not feel that there had been any sin committed.

(c) But on the other hand, if one should obtain the thing which he desired, or coveted, by unjust method, such as murder, violence, violation of law, including the unlawful coveting of the opposite sex, extortion, misrepresenting facts, cunning and shrewd methods whereby the owner is cheated out of part or all of his property, or any other method that is not just between man and man, it could well be called an unjust and wicked covetousness.

(d) Again one may fail to meet his obligations by reason of his desire to use money which he had obligated himself to pay. To some degree, at least, this kind of covetousness takes the nature of extortion, for the creditor is forced by the debtor to lose the use of the amount, for a time at least. The Lord commands us (see Job 22: 21): "Thou shalt pay thy vows." Again (Romans 13: 8): "Owe no man anything, but to love one another."

Brotherly love comes from God, but covetousness is forbidden. This is evidently the kind our Savior had in mind when he said: "Beware of covetousness."

Others covet office and power, which frequently is obtained by fraud. Judge Landis, a few days ago, struck the keynote when he said, "There are lots of men doing legal things who belong in jail." Most, if not all, of such injustice, can be traced to covetousness.

Spirit of Coveting Quite Universal

The gambler gambles because he desires to gain from another without performing the necessary labor of producing. Even our children are taught to covet. When they play marbles "for keeps" it is because they desire to win the other's marbles without giving anything in return for them. We older ones unthinkingly often create a covetous spirit in small children by offering a reward to the one who is most efficient; it may be in work, or it may be in study. This creates in the child a desire to obtain more than the other child has. It creates a selfish desire, and these desires grow as the child grows in years.

The Richest Nation

When we realize that we are not only the richest nation in the world, but one of the most highly educated, and then when we think of the crimes that are being done every day, and we think how our jails and penitentiaries are being filled mostly by young men, we may well wonder with amazement what can be the cause of this. Covetousness is the forerunner which has caused much of this sin.

This unjust coveting, notwithstanding its popularity, is a direct violation of the law of God, and its principles (or lack of principle) are so corrupt that the Scriptures state clearly that no covetous person nor extortioner "shall inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Corinthians 6: 10; Ephesians 5: 5; 1 Corinthians 5: 11; 6: 9.)

If we, either individually or collectively, think to "serve two masters," we must expect, to a greater or less degree, to be spiritually asleep. But is there no way by which we can arouse ourselves? Our Savior commands as follows: "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love."—John 15: 10.

Brethren, let us awake to Zion conditions. "Zion is the pure in heart." Can not we arouse ourselves from spiritual slumber? Can not we fear to offend God, who has done so much for us, that we might be saved? Jesus said (see Matthew 25: 5): "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Will we be prepared to do so? Or will we be like Judas?

The Fall of Judas Iscariot

On a certain occasion when Mary, the sister of Martha, anointed the feet of Jesus, and the house was filled with the odor of the ointment, Judas asked: "Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence and the money given to the poor?" This he said, not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and had the bag and bore what was put therein. He had a desire to get possession of money that did not belong to him.

Matthew, in his 26th chapter, 14th and 15th verses, records that on another occasion Judas manifests the same kind of a coveting spirit. Judas knew of the failure the Jews had made when they had tried to take Jesus. He likely reasoned that because of his miraculous power they could not harm him; but anyway, whether that was his reasoning or not, he went to the Jews that he might make a financial deal with them. The record reads as follows: "Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests and said unto them, What will ye give me and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver."

In the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh chapters Matthew informs us that Jesus said to his apostles:

Behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. And while he yet spake, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people. And forthwith he came to Jesus and said: 'Hail, Master!' and kissed him. . . . And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor. Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders. Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood.

Here we can see the effect of a wrong act or deed. Here we may ask, What act or deed was it? Was it the acknowledging that Jesus was his Master? Or was it the kiss? Or was it something that caused these things to be brought into action? We read in 1 John 3: 4 that "sin is the transgression of the law." We find no law forbidding the kissing of Jesus. Neither do we find any law forbidding his followers acknowledging him as their Master. Evidently these things, of themselves, were not what caused the fall of Judas, for we read in Acts 1: 25: "Judas, by transgression, fell that he might go to his own place."

The law reads: "Thou shalt not covet." Ah, we are able now to see and know in what way he had "sinned." He was covetous of obtaining unjustly that which did not belong to him. In Hebrews 12: 1 Paul instructs the brethren and says, "Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us." This one sin, on account of its many angles and phases, is perhaps the most common, most alluring, and does more "easily beset us" than any other. Therefore we should be on our guard continually lest we continue to be deceived by it.

Brethren and friends, where do we stand? We have seen that through covetousness, Judas wronged another, and also what the effects were. Has this anæsthetic, this coveting desire, had such an effect on us that we cannot arouse ourselves from its effects? Can not we realize that this is one of the links of the chain upon which the welfare of our

OF GENERAL INTEREST

A Business Investment for the Redemption of Zion

The United States Commissioner of Education is in the midst of what he calls a campaign to "sell" education to the American people. He says he notes in some sections of the country a "slight reactionary tendency in regard to our schools."

In this period of retrenchment and economy there is a natural tendency to scrutinize closely every item of public expenditure and when expenditure for the schools is attacked by some who go so far as to advocate that "the schools be given a two-year holiday" there is a certain apathy on the part of some few of the people towards educational affairs which sometimes results in very great injury.

We talk about education being the bulwark of our democracy, and yet some people object to spending the necessary sums to maintain that bulwark unimpaired. "The schools are not only the bulwark of American democracy; they are the bulwark of civilization. Close the schools for a few years and we will be back to our primitive selves."

Smoke and Education

Last year the total expenditures for education in the United States amounted to about $800,000,000—almost exactly the amount we paid for cigarets.

Fifty per cent more went up in smoke in cigars last year than was paid for the education of the Nation's twenty-seven million children.

Women last year spent $750,000,000 on paints and powders—nearly the same amount that was spent on education.

The total expenditure for luxuries last year was $22,000,000,000; practically the amount of the national debt even after the most costly war ever carried in the world's history; or, more for luxuries in one year than would maintain our schools for twenty-two years.

A nation that can spend such amounts upon luxuries of such doubtful value can certainly afford to spend $800,000,000 a year for the preparation of their children for life.

Education an Asset

The commissioner says, "Show me a state or community with a poor educational system and I will show you a state or community backward in business and lacking in prosperity; show me a state or community with a good educational system and I will show you a state or community that is alive with progress and prosperity."

He says he has been criticized for placing education upon souls rests? Here is the question: If we wish to arouse from the spiritual sleep, shall we continue to follow the shrewd methods of Judas, or shall we not study the law of God, that we may know individually how we may follow the lowly Jesus, and reap the rewards of the just?

Awake! ye saints of God, awake!

Call on the Lord in mighty prayer,
That He will this great bondage break
And bring to naught the tempter's snare.

Awake to my laws and be one,

Or, saith the Lord, "Ye are not mine,"
Yea, like the Father and the Son,
Let all the saints in justice join.

the sordid plane of commercialism, but, perhaps unfortunately, the commercial appeal is a hard one for the business people to resist.

When the business man knows that an educated community means dollars and cents in his own pocket, as well as dollars and cents in everyone else's pocket, he is far less likely to object to paying an additional mill for the schools.

Present expenditures for the schools must be considerably increased to insure the security of our American democracy and the future progress of the Nation.

There is an educational renaissance going on all over the world. In all civilized countries education has come to be looked upon as the fundamental factor in national prosperity.

America and Russia

There is no more terrible parallel in human history than that of the United States of America and Russia of to-day. The natural resources of both are great beyond calculation. Here in America we have education and prosperity. In Russia they have ignorance and dire poverty.

Natural resources are practically valueless without the knowledge to utilize them, and knowledge means education. Russia could produce sufficient wheat to feed the world if the people only knew enough to handle the soil intelligently.

There is enough iron ore in the Ural Mountains to supply the world with steel for many years to come if the Russians knew enough about modern machinery to extract the ore and make it into steel.

There is probably oil enough in the Russian oil fields to keep the world supplied for many generations.

But at present these resources are practically valueless to this colossal state, and will remain so until the people are sufficiently educated to make use of them, or until some more enlightened foreign nation steps in and takes them.

Aid of the Press

With the aid of the press the Commissioner believes any reactionary tendency towards education can be quickly overcome.

When the people of America as a whole come to understand what education is doing for the children and what it means for the future of civilization, there will be no talk of retrenchment of educational expenditures.

The slogan for education must be "Forward," and not "Backward."

The "bulwark of American democracy" must not be weakened, it must rather be strengthened until every child in America shall be given that opportunity for the kind and degree of education that will best fit him or her for life, and for the ever-increasing duties of citizenship in our democracy.

Investment for Zion

If Zion is to be redeemed in God's way, it must have an economic foundation as well as a spiritual one; and that economic and industrial foundation cannot be laid without a highly educated people.

It has been demonstrated so many times and the illustration used by the Commissioner is so apt, that industrial prosperity comes only to the educated community, that it behooves us to leave no stone unturned to secure for ourselves and those dependent upon us the very highest degree of education possible.

With the opening of the new school year next month, it is the hope of the Educational Commission of the church, speaking in behalf of the forward movements of the church now upon us, the hastening time, the necessity of further preparation for the redemption of Zion, that the Saints responsible for the educational preparation of their children will not fail to take full advantage of the excellent educational systems of the country wherever found.

Unless we do so we are failing in our part of the preparation so essential for the redemption so much longed for.

It is our prayer that we may be weighed in the balance and be found not wanting, and that we may all be willing to make the investment for the redemption of Zion.

EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION.

Churchless Children

There are twenty-five million boys and girls outside of the Sunday school in this country. Every child in America should be in some Sunday school every Sunday morning. Every child should be accompanied to Sunday school by his parents.

The mother who doesn't bring her child into the world dedicated to God has committed a crime against the child. The father who doesn't lead his child to the altar of worship, reverence, and devotion, has committed a crime against his child and against society; for he has left out of the child's training the greatest factor.

Parents who refuse to bring their children to church, and who refuse to allow their children to unite with the church and become devout Christian workers, are stumblingblocks; they are curses to their children.

There is but one remedy for the condition in this country, and that is salvation by Jesus Christ. There is but one place in which that salvation can be found, and that is in God's infallible word. There is but one institution authorized to teach that word, namely the orthodox Christian church.

Every child should be in Sunday school, and in the church pew on Sunday morning sitting beside his parents.

Children are never too young to be saved, but if they are neglected and grow to be old men and women hardened in sin, they may become too old to be saved. It is extremely expensive to the Government for a child to grow to be old in sin and crime. It costs millions to save an old man from the error of his way. A child can be saved at the threshold of childhood and thus save his soul and society untold expense.

The father who uses his automobile on Sunday to take his child away from the church, not only breaks the Ten Commandments, but he is a curse to the child and a menace to this Government.

The father who spends his Sunday on the golf links is a fraud so far as a religious influence is concerned, and he is a menace to the spiritual development of his child.

It is the business of the father to be in the Sunday school with his child, and it is the business of the child to be in the church pew by the side of his father.

Why do people neglect to bring their children to Christ and into the church? Such parents and such neglect are bringing untold sorrow and expense and reflection upon this country. The juvenile courts and the penal institutions are full of the children who come from such homes.

Parents, you are either a curse or a blessing to your children. If you neglect your Sunday duty you are a curse to them. Children ought to be in the Sunday school and church if the Nation is to be saved.

For every girl we have in Sunday school there are two and one eighth girls not in Sunday school. For every boy in Sunday school there are two and nine tenths outside. It is hard to hold those who are in because of the influence of those without.—Durham. Which means that approximately one girl in three and one boy in four is in Sunday school.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the HERALD intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily endorsed by the editors or the church at large.

A Right Basis of Exchange

By A. H. Christensen

The monetary system of the Book of Mormon stands up under investigation and comparison.

Is the Book of Mormon invincible? One would think it is, when he sees the frequency with which developments of the present day verify its theories. If it is the discovery of the geographical location of a prehistoric city, or the bones of an animal not previously believed to have existed in America, or a scrap of silk from the burial casket of some ancient American woman, or whether it be the discovery of a tradition among the present-day Indians relating to their having come to America in ships, or a custom reflecting their ancient form of religion, or manner of life, or whether it be some development in the realm of the sciences, the Book of Mormon has the persistent quality of being able to step forward and say, "I told you so." And the frequency of its doing so, removes it from the realm of chance utterances and jokes into a realm of far more serious thought.

And this time it comes forward upon the subject of finance. Just now, when financiers and economists are racking their brains to solve the present problem of the maladjustment of the necessities of life among the millions of American humanity, its theory of finances seems to be preeminent. I shall here quote a few paragraphs from the Book of Mormon which set forth some of the vital principles, it seems, of the industrial and commercial plan which will insure equality to all, even under the profit-system under which we live.

And the judge received for his wages according to his time: A senine of gold for a day, or a senum of silver, which is equal to a senine of gold; and this is according to the law which was given. . . . Now the reckoning is thus: A senine of gold, a seon of gold, and a limnah of gold. A senum of silver, an amnor of silver, an ezrom of silver, and an onti of silver. A senum of silver was equal to a senine of gold; and either for a measure of barley, and also for every kind of grain.—Alma 8: 52-58.

I have quoted here but a part of the account of their money system, for there were smaller coins and measures; but this will be sufficient to show that the measures of grain or foodstuffs were the basis of their monetary system as well as the basis of their wage system. This is the important thing to remember as we examine the following extracts of the writings of some of the most able statesmen and economists of the present day. The following is from the pen of T. A. McNeal, in Capper's Weekly for January 7, 1922.

Our Money System Is at Fault

My opinion is the trouble can be traced largely to a fault in our money system. Money has but one legitimate function, and that is to facilitate the exchange of the things that are either necessary for the lives and well being of the inhabitants of the world, or if not necessary to their lives and well being, they are such things as contribute to the pleasures of men and women, usually denominated luxuries.

Money alone, no matter of what material it may be made, is the most useless thing that can be imagined. Suppose a man were cast ashore on a desert island with no food, but with a million dollars in gold. The gold would not delay his dying of hunger or thirst for a single minute.

Suppose A builds a grain elevator and B stores one thousand bushels of wheat therein. A gives him a warehouse receipt for it. This receipt is negotiable. B sells it or puts it up as collateral, and borrows money upon it. At the end of three months, he or the party to whom he transferred it may take the receipt back to the warehouse and receive the same number of bushels of wheat, whether the market price has gone up or down. The intrinsic value of the bushel of wheat or a day's labor does not vary, provided of course that the person performing the labor does as much one day as another. The bushel of wheat will make just as much flour, and will feed just as many people when wheat is low as when it is high. Not so with our money system. Under our present financial system, however, money has no relation to the intrinsic value of the thing for which it is exchanged. The farmer borrows a thousand dollars when wheat is selling at two dollars a bushel. He can therefore exchange this money for five hundred bushels of wheat. When the debt falls due wheat may be selling for only one dollar a bushel, and he has to supply one thousand bushels to pay the debt. This tends to induce gambling.

Business is done not on the theory of giving back in payment of a debt, that which has an equal intrinsic value with that borrowed, but a purely speculative value. Under this system the persons who control the money necessarily have a great advantage. They are in the position of the dealer of a faro game, or the operator of a roulette wheel. The percentage is always in favor of the dealer, even when the wheel is honestly run, which is not common.

So we have hard times when the earth is bringing forth in abundance; farmers losing their farms in years of plenty and being driven to poverty when their herds are fit and fat for beef. If the country had a stabilized currency so that the holder of it might have a reasonable assurance that it would at all times purchase the same amount of necessities, and the producer have the assurance that his crop would always have the same relative exchange value in proportion to amount, there would not be the horrible crop of failures we see now. Farmers then could plant their crops with the assurance that if they raised a crop it would be worth a certain amount, or that they could exchange it for relatively the same amount of other things he and his family needed one year with another. Of course the same rule would work out with reference to wages. Wages would not rise and fall, working hardship both to the wage earner and the employer, as in the case at present.

Could this be done? The men who control the money supply will say no. But no less a man than the ex-Secretary of Agriculture, and one of the most successful publishers and business men in the United States proposes a plan which is based on that very principle. True, he is only going to apply it to certain farm products, but if the principle is correct it should be applied to all exchange as well as to the exchange of farm products.

Agriculture Fundamental

The ex-Secretary of Agriculture referred to by Mr. McNeal is Honorable E. T. Meredith, of Des Moines, Iowa, who wrote an article under the title, "What is the matter with business?" This article was published in the North American Review for October, 1921. I quote below, some extracts from this article.

It is commonplace in this country to say that agriculture is fundamental. Everyone seems to recognize it. Yet few seem to feel, as indicated by their lack of interest, that it is of importance that no serious harm come to agriculture, that prices of farm products be stabilized, and that every reasonable facility be furnished to agriculture. . . . Agriculture is fundamental, and it follows that we are anxious to keep upon the farms a contented, prosperous citizenship, giving them an American standard of living, which means cost of production plus enough to keep the children in school. . . . Decisions for the whole people can be made only through our Government, and it might be possible for us to influence a balanced production by our Government's fixing one year in advance, for the following year's crops, the minimum price it will guarantee on five articles; wheat which is bread, wool and cotton which are clothing, corn which is meat, and sugar of which we import a very large quantity. . . . I grant that the Government cannot buy, at the end of the harvest, the twenty billions of dollars' worth of agricultural products produced annually upon our farms. The Government could not possibly receive and distribute these products, thereby taking the place of thousands of business men. This would not be desirable, even though it were possible. Therefore the Government would agree to buy only the surplus crop, that portion left over after the consumption year.

Now we shall add one quotation more and then summarize. Honorable Mr. Meredith says further:

Since writing the above the following quotations have been brought to my attention by a friend, as follows: "Your suggestion in your article in the North American Review that the Government might set a minimum price on certain commodities and buy the surplus lends interest to the following quotation, which shows that the Chinese worked at a very similar plan 400 years B. C.

"When Li K'o became minister of Wei, he said that if the price of grain were too high, it would hurt the consumers; and if it were too low, it would hurt the farmers. If the consumers were hurt the people would emigrate, and if the farmers were hurt the state would be poor. The bad results of a high price and a low price are the same. Therefore the good statesman would keep the people from injury and give more encouragement to the farmers.

"Those who want to equalize the price of the grain must be careful to look at the crop. There are three grades of good crops: the first, the second, and the lowest. In an ordinary year, one hundred acres of land yield one hundred and fifty bushels of grain (rice). In the first grade of a good crop the amount is fourfold—that is, one hundred acres yield six hundred bushels. Throughout one year, a family of five persons needs two hundred bushels for their living, so that they have a surplus of four hundred bushels. The Government should buy three hundred bushels from them, leaving them a surplus of one hundred bushels. In the second grade of good crop the amount of grain is threefold—that is, one hundred acres yield four hundred and fifty bushels. The family would then have a surplus of three hundred bushels. The Government should buy two hundred bushels, leaving them one hundred bushels. In the lowest grade of good crop, the amount is twofold—that is, three hundred bushels. The family would then have a surplus of one hundred bushels. The Government should buy fifty bushels, leaving them the other half. The purchase of the Government is for the purpose of limiting the supply according to the amount demanded by the people, and it should be stopped when the price is normal. This policy will prevent the price of grain falling below the normal and keep the farmers from injury.

"There are also three grades of famine: the great famine, the middle famine, and the small famine. During the small famine, one hundred acres yield two thirds as much grain as the ordinary year—that is, one hundred bushels. The Government should then sell at the normal price what it has bought in the lowest grade of crop. During the middle famine, the hundred acres yield one half as much grain as in the ordinary year—that is, seventy bushels. The Government should now sell what it has bought in the second grade of good crop. During the great famine, the amount of grain is only one fifth of what it is in an ordinary year—that is, thirty bushels. The Government should sell what it has bought in the first grade of good crop. Therefore, even if famine, flood, and drought should occur, the price of grain would not be high, and the people would not be obliged to emigrate. This would come about because the Government takes the surplus of good crops to fill the insufficiency of bad years. In other words, the Government controls the excess of supply in a good year in order to meet the demand in a bad year."

Now, in the article by Mr. McNeal, these main points stand out, viz, that our economic policy should be founded upon the necessities of life instead of as at present upon the gold dollar which vacillates in value, and that farm products and labor's might should be that basis.

Handling Surplus

This, Honorable Mr. Meredith originally affirmed, and adds a very enlightening observation upon the question of surplus. His proposal for the Government to buy the surplus production and sell it back in lean years, is identical with the Lord's plan for a steward to give the surplus and for the church to give it back again in lean times to him who has need in his stewardship.

He also defines very clearly that farmers should be taken care of upon the basis of their just needs. This is in perfect harmony with the principle in church usage that defines that a steward should receive according to his just wants and needs.

He further states that agriculture is fundamental, and the principal part of his article argues that when the farmer's buying power is limited, the buying power of every other individual in the commonwealth is limited as a consequence. And this argues that agriculture is the basis of our mortal existence.

I heard President Smith make the same statement in one of his speeches this fall.

This plan of Mr. Meredith's seems to be in complete agreement on the question of surplus with that of the church in all fundamental points. Even the Chinese understood the principle of the proper disposition of surplus property 400 B. C. He proposes that this plan can only be brought about through legislation by the Government. I should have liked to agree with him in every point of his admirable indorsement of an admirable plan, but as the kingdoms of this world did not fall as the Jews thought they would, at the coming of the Savior, by legislation, so I believe the kingdoms of gold will not fall now in that way. I do believe, however, that a body of people, small though it may be, is able to put this plan into effect while yet a part of the commercial world, for they (the church) have the advantage over the world in that they are of one mind [we hope they are], while the world is divided; and who can manage a divided body? The Scriptures say it cannot stand; it will fall.

Stewardships Will Stabilize Wages

When they of the church will become true stewards and work for their just needs, that will stabilize wages; and since there shall be none but workers there is nothing else to stabilize. The farmer-steward can then load up his surplus that he cannot consume and haul it to the storehouse to be returned to him in a lean year, or he can sell it and do likewise with the proceeds. But in that case that profound enigma of the medium of exchange appears to torment us. Let it be based upon produce or labor, and let the disks of gold or silver or copper or brass or leather bear this inscription: Good for one measure of barley or a day's labor. You know what I mean; but this is the principle.

Near the place of the first quotation from the Book of Mormon that we used in this article, it states that some tried to bring about unnecessary work in order that they get more money. This seems to be a potent argument in favor of the plan, for if that is the only way they could profiteer, the misuse of the system would result less disastrously than a corner in wheat under the present plan.

The monetary system of the Book of Mormon does not have the force of law, it being merely historical, yet we rejoice to see how well it stands up under the present investigation. It is a marvelous work and a wonder.

Reunion season makes serious inroads on the general church officers' presence in Independence. Practically all of them, with many of the local force, are participating in the various reunions.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Honesty With Children

Sometimes parents make the grave mistake of thinking that little children need not be told the exact truth, inasmuch as their powers of understanding are not largely developed. Such parents are laying up for themselves serious disappointment in the characters of those children, and the mutual love and respect which should underlie all relations with them.

Undue fear is often engendered in children by the criminally untruthful threats and statements of older people. That a teacher will torture them, a doctor will pull out their tongues, or a big uncle cut off their ears—such remarks have caused sensitive children undreamed-of agony, and can but insure them growing up under great handicap.

Rather should parents try to instill universal love in the hearts of their children—love for all people and all things that are in the world of God's creation, which even he looked upon and pronounced "good." Soon enough will come the shock of learning that some people miss the glory of life by dwelling upon low planes of thought and impulse! Soon enough will come the pitiful knowledge of wrongdoing and cruel intention, but let that knowledge never come to the little ones in our homes through thoughtless remark or untrue statement of ours!

Luther Burbank pleads: "Be honest with your child! Do not give him a colt for his very own, and then, when it is a three-year old, sell it and pocket the proceeds! It does not provoke a tendency in children to follow the Golden Rule, and seldom enhances their admiration and respect for you. It is not even sound business policy, or fair treatment; it is not honest! Bear in mind that this child life, in these first ten years, is the most sensitive thing in the world. Never lose sight of that! Children respond to ten thousand influences which would leave no more impression upon a plant than they would upon the sphinx. Vastly more sensitive are they than the most sensitive plant. Think of being dishonest with them!

"The wave of dishonesty which seems to be sweeping up over this country is chiefly due to a lack of proper training—breeding, if you will—in the formative years of life. Be honest with a child, whether it is your child or some other person's child. Be dishonest, in word or look or deed, and you have started a grafter! Stealing will never be taken up by a man whose formative years have been spent in an atmosphere of absolute honesty.

"Nor can you be dishonest with your child even in thought! The child reads your motives as no other human being reads them. He sees into your own heart. He is the purest, truest thing in the world. He is absolute truth: that's why we love children! They know instinctively whether you are true or dishonest with them, in thought as well as in deed; you cannot escape it! The child may not always show its knowledge, but its judgment of you is unerring. Its life is stainless, open to receive all impressions, just as is the life of the plant, only far more pliant and responsive to influences, and to influences to which no plant is capable of being responsive. Therefore, upon the child before the age of ten, we have an unparalleled opportunity to work; for nowhere else in the world is there material so plastic!"

One of the saddest experiences in the world for a child to pass through is to become convinced that his father or his mother is not dependable. Parents stand in the simple minds of their children, so nearly in the place of divinity that they should be extremely careful to live as nearly as they can to the ideal which the pure thoughts of their children have set up for them. Can any of us have greater incentive to right living? Can we have hearing before a juster tribunal than the clear eyes of a trustful and loving child? Let us take heed how we acquit ourselves there!

A. A.

Exterior Decoration

I. The Lawn

The lawn as the setting for the house is an important factor in the artistic appearance of a home. A south slope, in the temperate zones, seems preferable, as the benefit of the sunlight during cold months is much to be desired. It seems best to have the house located on high ground, so that the yard is well drained. This is especially beneficial on the farm, where barn lots are located at no great distance from the house, and drainage and disagreeable odors are thus avoided. The higher location of the house also places it in a more prominent position, suggesting as it should that the home is the most important thing of all.

The use of foliage to beautify a yard has long been acknowledged. Even an old house, with high foundations, may be made beautiful, by the use of bridal wreath, crimson Rambler, or other decorative shrubs or vines. There are also many types of trees which give a most attractive appearance, if correctly located. Too many trees and shrubs, if grouped together, give a crowded, cluttered appearance. This form of decoration is good only in a very large yard, where it is desired to obtain a tropical effect. In a small yard it is much better to have a few shrubs close to the foundation, and only a small number of trees in the yard.

Flower plots in small yards should be small and simple in arrangement; showy plants or elaborately designed plots are adapted to larger yards. In these the higher plants should be near the center and low ones at the edges of the beds. An old-fashioned house painted white, or some light color, with beds or borders of old-fashioned flowers, is one of the most attractive and refreshing sights.

If the house has sleeping porches, it is best to have them in the rear and on the second story. These should not be placed high, without visible support, or with frail-looking posts or braces beneath them, as those so constructed give an overbalanced appearance and are not pleasing in effect.

A white house among the green trees is very attractive. Dark paints make a house look small, and if it is not large in structure, a light color is best. A very small porch on a large house is out of proportion, and seems to be only an afterthought; windows, porches, etc., should be in harmony with the house in size and structure. A porch too large in comparison with the house gives a sensation of disproportion and gives an impression of an overbalance, not pleasing in effect. Too much ornamentation and elaborateness give a "fussy" appearance and soon grow wearisome, just as too elaborate decoration in costume detracts from its pleasing effect. Many houses are so overburdened with cupolas, domes, and other decorative forms, that a most unpleasant effect is produced. Simplicity in form and decoration is most artistic and least wearisome.

The shrubbery used on an unassuming property should not be too elaborate, or expensive. In fact, harmony in design and proportion should ever be the watchword in all decorative work. If, for instance, tall shrubs, trees, and many flower plots were used in the yard, it would look crowded, and in many cases the house is too much shaded to be healthful or cheerful for its inmates. The smaller and lower shrubs should be nearer the house, and most of the trees at a sufficient distance to give some direct sunlight during the day. Such shrubbery as bridal wreath may be placed close to the foundation and is especially desirable where the house has very high foundations, as it covers an unpleasant expanse and adds a graceful aspect to the scene. Simple and old-fashioned plots and hedges, in connection with a large old home, give a restful impression, and a relief from the monotony of overdone decoration, and barren yards where no touch of God's handiwork is visible. Many a home can beautify its surroundings by ferns, woodland flowers, and mosses.

Drives are impossible except on large estates, but when used, the winding, hedge-set way is wonderfully pleasing. Walks, with hedge low cut, or with borders of flowers, are refreshing and beautiful. Even on our farms these can be easily produced. Too long we have made our farmhouses and yards only places to stay, assuming that enough of nature was about us. There is no reason why most of our homes in the rural communities should not be as tasteful and pleasing, with lawns properly plotted out, and kept, as in the city.

All buildings in a yard should be similarly painted, as a uniform color is unified and harmonious in effect. The foliage of vines and shrubbery about barns, garage, and other buildings is pleasing and effective and often covers defects in architecture, in buildings too good to be removed, or too expensive to be remodeled, yet of design or form displeasing and unharmonious with surrounding buildings.

The pleasure in everyday life is contributed to by the pleasing details about us. Is it not worth while, as well as money, to surround ourselves with everything possible to bring joy to our families, friends, and ourselves? Let us attempt to do so and we will soon find our lives more worth while, though we may leave a smaller sum of money to our relatives or descendants.

Exterior Decoration

1. The Lawn.
 - a. Slope of the lawn.
 - b. Location of house.
 - c. Foliage and trees.
 - d. Flower beds.
2. The House.
 - a. Painting.
 - b. Porches, etc.
 - c. Shrubby.
 - d. Drives and walks.
3. Other Buildings.
 - a. Painting.
 - b. Other decorations.

Ignorance Claims Its Sacrifices

"How shall we train our daughters?" "In millions of homes, women are losing the joy of their motherhood (and too often their little ones), because they are bungling, stumbling blindly, groping at their vocation." How very true!

Not many miles from where I sit writing, a little form lies needlessly still because a mother was "stumbling blindly at her vocation." She had accepted the most responsible position in life with little knowledge of its requirements and no preparation for its duties. With a broken heart she forced the truth from her physician, and pledged from that day her efforts, her mind, and her strength to the study of mothercraft and the enlightening of other mothers who, like herself, were "groping at their vocation."

Three babies she had denied their God-given birthright in nourishment because she did not appreciate its importance as the perfect food for the making of healthy bodies and sound minds. When sorrow and pain awakened within her a sense of her unfitness for motherhood, she began to study all that came within her grasp, and consulted her physician on questions which his knowledge could make more clear to her understanding. She found him willing and anxious to explain the reasons for various methods prescribed.

When her fourth baby was laid in her arms—a precious little girl—she clasped it to her breast with a new understanding of motherhood. She knew better, now, how to take care of herself in order to provide her baby with its proper and priceless nourishment; she understood more fully the various needs of that tiny bit of humanity.

Like the unfolding of a flower the baby grew—healthy, happy, without the sickness and fretfulness, the days and nights of crying which had robbed the babyhood of her brother and sisters of much of its sweetness and had made them more of a burden than a pleasure. Truly, the joy of motherhood, lost through ignorance, had been found through knowledge.

However, that ignorance had claimed its sacrifice, and only a parent's heart can realize the pain that years cannot ease. Only in the thought that other mothers may be awakened before it is too late is there a soothing balm. She was my own little babe; I loved her as my life, but I didn't know how to feed her. I thought she could be fed as this woman or that one had fed her babies, so long as she had plenty, regardless of the fitness of other conditions, environment and inheritance.

Need I now answer your question: Will you send your daughter to a school where a course in homecraft, in mothercraft, is taught? Need I tell you that all of me is behind the effort to place in our Graceland those courses which shall make of our girls better mothers—mothers who shall intelligently serve in their vocation?

May I soon see the time when such a course shall be taught in our high schools as well! And may the day come when we mothers shall be so awakened, so cognizant of our wondrous opportunities in the molding of human souls, that we shall not leave all to the school-teacher, but shall instruct at home our little ones day by day, as the petals of their understanding unfold, in little games of "playing house" and mothering "dollies"; in patiently answering the eternal "whys" of childhood; in the little morning talks, when the child mind is as fresh as a new-born day—oh, of what infinite importance those few minutes each day! What lasting impressions we may make on the pure white freshness of a little child's mind!

And what of our boys, who are to be the fathers? Will they "just grow"? Must not an intelligent parentage include fathers? One of the most beautiful things I ever witnessed was the behavior of an eleven-year-old boy whose mother had as boarder and occupant of one of her rooms a pregnant woman. There was no curious staring or spying on his part, but a gentle attention to her wants—the tendering of an easy rocker, the lifting or amusing of her two-year child, the quite, cheerful demeanor, and many little courtesies that showed how precious he considered the little life she was shielding beneath her heart. What a wonderfully wise little mother he had!

No one has ever been allowed to make fun of my little son for loving his doll. As surely as I want my girls to be intelligent mothers, I want my son to be an intelligent father. I want him to understand the care required (and the expense necessary for that care) for the little children for whose presence in the world he is responsible. I want him to understand the environment, and the loving attention a pregnant woman should receive. I want him to know how to care for a mother who is nursing her baby, and to be able to estimate the limitations of her strength. There are many wives who would be better mothers if their husbands had received a course in fathercraft or could be converted to this "new-fangled foolishness." Haven't you heard men objecting to opening their pocketbooks, saying: "My mother raised eleven of us and she never had—" this or that hygienic necessity, or some toy that develops the child's mind while it amuses, or some little convenience to lighten the labor of a pregnant or nursing mother? It isn't because he is stingy, or doesn't care. He simply doesn't understand the necessity—he has never been trained to be a father!

Yes, by all means, let us have mothercraft in our schools, and homecraft, for girls—and boys! F. W.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

PART THREE

SOME PUBLIC ACTIVITIES

CHAPTER XIV

Public Health and Welfare

I. Education

1. The public schools and our Republic.
 - a. The need for an educated citizenship in a democracy.
2. The State system of education.
 - a. School laws and revenues.
3. State colleges and universities.
 - a. Agricultural.
 - b. State universities.
 - c. Normal schools.
4. Grammar and high schools.
5. School finances.
6. The school as a social center.
7. The general work of the library.

II. Public Charities

1. Discuss the causes of poverty.
 - a. Personal causes.
 - b. Economic causes.
 - c. Remedies.
2. Care of dependent children.
 - a. Children's homes.
 - b. Schools for the deaf, dumb, and blind.
3. Care of the insane.
4. Other forms of charity.

III. Health and General Welfare

1. Conservation of human life.
 - a. Saving the lives of little children.
 - b. Reduction of death rate in cities.
 - c. Quarantine.
2. Disposal of waste.
 - a. Need of clean streets.
 - b. System for handling rubbish and garbage.
 - c. Sewage.
4. Pure food laws.
 - a. Successes and failures.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. "Development of religious education," by Cyril E. Wight, in Journal of History, July, 1920.
2. "Progress of education in America in the past one hundred years," by George N. Briggs, President of Graceland College, in Saints' Herald of December 15, 1920.

3. "Education and world citizenship," by Joseph Fort Newton, in the commencement address at the State University of Iowa, June 14, 1921. Published in The Christian Century, June 30, 1921.

4. "The teacher's personality," by Henry Louis Smith, in The American Teacher, April, 1920.

5. "Welfare of preschool children," an address by Miss Rosamond Losh. In Saints' Herald, August 2 and August 9, 1921.

6. Book I, Infant and Child Mortality, from Child Problems, by George B. Mangold. (Macmillan.)

7. Write to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, District of Columbia, for Farmers' Bulletins No. 396 (Habit forming Agents), and No. 377 (Harmfulness of Headache Mixtures). They are free.

8. Free health literature may also be obtained from the State Boards of Health, the State Department of Education, The American Medical Association, Chicago, or the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City.

9. Give a Good Health Day Program. Discuss:

- a. How to prevent typhoid fever.
- b. How to prevent consumption.
- c. How to cure consumption.
- d. Care of smallpox patients.
- e. Some things that cause bad colds.
- f. Fresh air in the sleeping room.
- g. The house fly, pure water, bathing, etc.
- h. How to build a sanitary outdoor toilet.

10. Invite a local physician or your county nurse to talk to your class on some health topic.

11. What are your schools doing to promote the health of your boys and girls?

12. Do you think it possible or desirable that our schools should play an important part in the attempt to effect a better state of civilization? Explain.

13. Look up the facts of the Gary school system. Write a clear exposition of them.

14. Give a talk on the aims and principles of Graceland College.

DORA YOUNG.

The object of the children's division is:
To afford teachers, fathers, and mothers an opportunity for training.

To afford the children an adequate opportunity for receiving religious education and training.

To afford the children adequate opportunity for expression of Christian life at home, in the school, and at church.

"Education goes on during the vacation," is the title of an article in the Iowa Magazine section by Elder Charles B. Woodstock, who for several years has been superintendent of the Pisgah, Iowa, consolidated schools. Brother Woodstock goes this year to Mondamin, not far from Pisgah, to take charge of the schools in that place.

A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the Sunday School Department, is in New York City attending a summer course in religious education at the Columbia University. This is his second year. As his thesis this year he is evaluating for adolescents the International Graded Series of Sunday School Lessons. This will be of much value to him and the church in the outlining and construction of new lesson courses for our Sunday schools.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Seconding the Motion for Stewardship Procedure

In reading the Saints' Herald of June 7 there is an article entitled "Zion for the poor," written by Brother Leon A. Gould, which should appeal to every true Latter Day Saint who wishes to conform to the Bible plan of establishing Zion.

Brother Gould's first statement in setting forth the main theme, "If we are to have Zion, let us have Zion; not a modern capitalistic hell with all the trimmings."

Now straight to the point at issue: If what our brother has said is imparted to us through the HERALD as a motion or an appeal, I am ready to second, and to stand with him in his earnest appeal to all Saints that wish and are willing to take the Lord's way in establishing Zion.

The way is plain, the outcome sure, if we will but comply. But as long as those who have more of this world's goods in the way of possessions "than some of their fellow men" and are unwilling to surrender all and follow Jesus, just so long as they are in this frame of mind and have the desire to enjoy their possessions among those of their kind above those of poor circumstances, Zion will never be established by this class of people, for they are contented with the small Zion they are enjoying now and would reject being placed on even basis with their brothers and sisters of the same faith.

The worthy poor, "and I say it because my heart yearns to better their condition," should be helped and given a chance in the midst of better surroundings and modern facilities. Let us awake to the point of action. Let us examine ourselves and see if we have made a complete surrender to God, or are we holding in reserve our means, so as to enjoy certain luxuries to which we have always been accustomed; and that if we obey the call to Zion we would have to do without them, so we say, "Let's not be in any hurry moving to Zion; better not go in haste."

Yes, it is best not to go in haste; but, dear brother and sister, that means do not go until your heart is right with God, until your heart desires to do God's will. No, do not go until you are willing to lay all at the Master's feet and say, "All to Jesus I surrender, all to him I freely give; take and use me and my possessions for the furtherance of the cause."

Oh, brother and sister, let us use our means, whether it be houses and land, stocks and bonds, sinewy muscle, intellectual muscle, all for the glory of God. Our rewards will not be in dollars, in wealth of silver and gold, but they will be based upon our merits.

How wonderfully wise is the almighty God, for he has given each one the same chance. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. All that we have belongs to God. Each one of us has possession of a talent; are we using that talent to the glory of God, or have we been a little selfish in using our talents in endeavoring to fare better than our fellow men? Did Jesus do that?

No, my dear readers; Jesus had no place to lay his head, yet at all times we find him helping the poor and needy.

If the rich are satisfied outside of Zion, why keep the poorer classes under the worldly pressure of high rents, interest, and profiteering of ungodly men, men who are living sumptuously off the poor people's labor?

Give the renters and hard daily laborers of the church a chance to move to that designated place and build a Zion city where their hard work will produce means to help their fellow men and better their spiritual conditions, instead of keeping up grafters and men who will not work, but sit in a swinging chair pushing a pencil.

Let all those who have possessions do as was done of old: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common." (Acts 4: 32.)

"Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold and said them down at the apostles' feet, and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." (Acts 4: 34, 35.)

Now if the believers in Christ of these last days, or in other words, if the Latter Day Saints will do the same today, only substitute the word bishop's instead of apostles' and lay the price of their possessions in the bishop's hands to distribute as each one needed, then we would have all things common as far as earthly things are concerned. All would be faring equally, and if our hearts were all right with God we would all be happy and each would have a fair chance to use the best of his ability, the talent God endowed him with, whether it be on a farm, in an office, or in the various occupations we are adapted to, we could labor with all our might for the glory of God and the salvation of the children of men, and our reward as before mentioned would be based, "not upon how much money we could make above our fellow men," but upon our merits. The life we live in devotion to good done by our labor, the personality we formed, the character possessed,—all this, my brothers and sisters, will our glory and reward be based upon.

Are you using your talents and means to the glory of God and the welfare of your fellow men? or are you like the rich young man that came to the Master and asked what he must do to inherit eternal life? "Sell thy possessions and give to the poor and come and follow me." What did he do? He refused because his heart was set on this world's goods. To-day the value of our possessions is to go to the storehouse of the Lord, and then you and I will become stewards of God and do that which we are talented to do and be contented to fare equally with our brothers and sisters in temporal things.

As one of the unfortunate ones who are descendants from a poor family and knowing from actual experience for thirty years or more under the bondage of ungodly masters, I appeal to all true followers of Christ our blessed Savior, and those who are called of God and ordained to officiate in his divine places: Open the gate to the fields of Zion to the poor, hard-pressed families of the church, and give them a chance to establish themselves in Zion where they can produce for use and not for profit, where they can be of mutual assistance to each other and enjoy equally the opportunities and advantages of living in a community where up-to-date schools, church privileges, roads, sanitary dwellings with all modern conveniences, can be accessible to all.

As Brother Gould stated, let those officiating under divine authority form and frame the basis of this plan and carry it out as described. Call for, say $100 from each family, and I venture to say that five thousand families would in a very short time have the stipulated amount.

Let us all rally to the only way to establish our cherished hope—Zion. May the Lord create in us an unselfish heart, that we will not think we are doing our duty when we are faring better than our fellow men.

When we can have all things common and fare equally, the only difference would be in stature and talent, each free to advance in knowledge and wisdom in favor of God and man. Our spiritual growth will depend on how we conform our lives to the Word.

The pure in heart will live in Zion. May God create in us submissive wills, "Not our will, but thine be done," and we will say, "All to Jesus I surrender," and let the Spirit of God, our teacher, be showing the things of Christ to us.

Your brother in gospel bonds, T. R. KNIGHT.

Cheerful Helpers

A brother handed us some funds as a loan to the church. We asked him what rate of interest he would want, to which he replied, "You cannot pay me any interest; God pays me more interest than you can afford to pay."

Sister A. L. Fisher, who placed her money with the church upon a consecration contract, which entitles her to twenty dollars a month, writes us to reduce this to fifteen a month, as she wishes to do something to assist the work of God.

A Real Concept of True Religion

The act of forgiving and what it means.

We remember that God said that if we brought a gift to the altar and there remembered that our brother had aught against us, to leave there the gift and go and be reconciled to our brother and then come and offer our gift. He also said to forgive and we should be forgiven. I will tell you the experience of one who was not of our faith, and what this act of forgiving meant to him; and it seems to me when it could mean so much to one who is not of our faith, it should mean to us as Latter Day Saints a great deal more. As he told the story I wept, for I was able to sense the deep interest and sincerity of his soul and how he felt the responsibility that was resting upon him.

This man was an evangelistic minister. He did not know how hard it was to do the things that he taught till he was brought face to face with the real problems that sometime and some way face every one of us.

He commenced the story by telling what a good mother he had. His father died when he was quite young, and he and his mother were left alone. She had always tried to do for him everything that was in a mother's power to do. He loved his mother very much. He always tried to be with her all he could till he entered the work as a missionary and then she was left alone a great deal.

When he was holding a series of meetings at one certain place, news came to him that his mother had been murdered. What a terrible shock it was to hear such news as that about his mother who had always been so kind! The first thing that came to him was the first thing that would come to most of us; the thought of revenge. But there came another thought also: Here I am representing Christ as a minister preaching the gospel; telling people how they should forgive those who had done them injury and wrong.

But now the problem faced him. What should he do? He thought, "I cannot forgive him for murdering my poor mother." The more he thought, the more he thought he could not, and yet he felt that he must. If he was to continue his work as a missionary, he would have to practice what he preached. If he could not do it, there was no use in his telling the gospel story any longer. There was only one thing for him to do. He had to make a decision. What would it be? He knew that so far as his own strength was concerned he could not forgive. This is what he did. He got down on his knees before God and plead with him for that degree of strength that would enable him to forgive the one who had done him so much wrong. He never gave up until he had gained the victory that he so earnestly sought. He arose and went to the jail and sought the pardon of the one who had caused him so much grief.

I wonder how many of us, as Latter Day Saints to-day, under like conditions, would do the same as he did. I am afraid we would fall far short, for there are many of us who find it a difficult thing to forgive very little grievances sometimes. We just like to cuddle them up in our hearts and keep them there, not giving it a thought that just as long as we do we are hindering our own spiritual development as well as being a hindrance to others. So far as I am concerned, I know that I have had a little bit of real experience, enough to teach me that we cannot grow and develop in this work as we should and hold in our hearts a thing against anyone. For just as long as we do, the Lord will have to hold them against us.

The first thing for us to do if we wish to have God forgive all of our failures and mistakes in life, is to tear out of our own lives and hearts any and all things in the way of harsh and bitter feelings that we might have felt towards any. When we have learned to do this from the very depths of our hearts, then when we go to God and plead for our pardon, we will not only find him ready, but willing to bestow the blessing upon us that we are in need of.

We might not always find it an easy thing to do, but surely when God can help those who are not of our faith, do not you think he is much more willing to help us when we try? I believe he is. I believe he is always willing to help us when we give him a chance. But we have to be willing to let him help us before he can do very much for us. It seems to me this is one of the greatest lessons human beings can learn. How great our dependence upon God really is, and our littleness before him; how we must first learn to do for others the things that we would like to have God do for us. When we have learned this lesson, we have not only won a victory, but we have conquered the enemy of our soul.

Your sister in the gospel bonds,

MRS. WILLIAM C. PEACOCK.

A Case of Misrepresentation

We would like to warn the Saints to beware of taking in strangers in their homes.

There is a woman going around in Connecticut saying she is a Latter Day Saint. She has stayed at Brother Charles Frank's home in Norwalk, where there is a branch of Saints, and has stayed at our house which is fifty miles from there.

She has said she was from Cleveland, Ohio, Branch, and Lansing, Michigan, Branch. She goes by the names of Walters and Davis, evidently taking different names and claims different places wherever she goes. Her story is about the same. She pretends she is buying a house, but fails to keep appointments with the real estate agents. She just wants to get free board and whatever else she can pick up. She stole five dollars from us incidentally.

She is very familiar with the names of some of our church people and the doings and also branches. She is fifty-eight years old, medium brown hair, blue eyes, and wears glasses, is tall and thin, shoulders stooped, has a few front teeth, and speaks English. She claims she has thousands of dollars, speaks of a son, daughter, and a maid. Puts up a very plausible story and is a very clever actor. Has the art of skillfully getting information, but resents being questioned herself. I don't think she goes to any church.

We will be more careful another time we take in strangers. She stayed three nights and two days with us. The real estate man found just the house she described, but she said she would have to see her son who would do the buying. She went to New Haven to meet him from Newark, New Jersey, so she said, and we have not seen her since.

CALVIN C. SEARS.

A Mark of Discipleship

We have from time to time written to branch presidents and called their attention to the fact that there are certain needs of the missionaries who labor in their midst that might be overlooked. We naturally expect the church representatives to be tidy and neat in appearance, and those among whom they labor should see to it that their clothing needs, as well as their traveling and incidental expenses, are supplied.

There are two very good reasons why this should be done: (1) "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." As we give for the above purpose we become more interested in the work which the missionary is trying to do; our love for him as a servant of the Master is increased, and his virtues are enlarged in our eyes, while his faults fade to insignificance as we behold his zeal for the saving of souls. (2) The man of God is made to feel that his work is appreciated by those among whom he labors and he goes on his way rejoicing and revived for the task just ahead of him. The Lord has said, "Whosoever receiveth you, receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you and clothes you and gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward; and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple; by this you may know my disciples."

We are just in receipt of a letter from one of our missionaries in California, Brother Charles W. Hawkins, who writes: "My wife has made me a present of $35 worth of clothing this month, for which she worked and earned the money. Yes! she is a 'helpmeet' and loves this work."

If one who is devoting her life to the service of God with her companion is willing to go one step farther in order that she might give additional assistance to her companion, what ought we do who devote our entire time to secular affairs?

May God open our eyes to the wonderful opportunities all around us to be helpers in his work.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

From the Land of Evangeline

The writer, upon advice of the appointing and supervising authorities, recently spent a pleasant and interesting sojourn among the Saints in Nova Scotia. It was our first experience in the province, and it was a much appreciated privilege to go there to the land made popular by Longfellow's immortalized portrayal of the touching experience of the early Acadians in his beautiful poem, "Evangeline."

Our first stop was at Amherst, at the home of Elder Boyd Johnson. Here as elsewhere wherever we found Saints we were given a royal welcome. Brother Johnson is president of the Nova Scotia District and resides at 23 Havelock Street, Amherst. He and his wife and little son, Elbert, are the only Saints residing in this city.

One night while there, by arrangement with the ensign of the Salvation Army, we were privileged to speak in the Salvation Army Citadel.

On Saturday, July 1, we left Amherst for Williamsdale, in company with Elder Johnson's family to attend the district conference, going by train and automobile. (The latter refused to go when we were within two or three miles of our destination.) The rest of the journey we rode over the winding roads of that beautiful country on the good old lumber wagon.

We arrived, however, and found the little company of Saints patiently waiting for our coming. We soon entered into the business session with Elder Boyd Johnson in the chair. After singing and the opening prayer, the writer was chosen to preside, associated with the district presidency. The business was discharged very smoothly. The following officers were again chosen for the ensuing year: Elder Boyd Johnson, district president; Sister Leander Johnson, secretary. Reports were read, and it was noted that the Nova Scotia Saints are very faithful in the important financial part of the work. Not only are they good tithe payers, but they also remember the Christmas offering, Sanitarium, Homes for the Aged, Children's Home, and Graceland College. They also contributed very liberally to the auditorium fund. This is very commendable for these isolated Saints, and we who have so many privileges should take notice. Brother and Sister Leander Johnson keep the camp fires blazing in this part of the vineyard. And faithful Saints they are.

On Sunday morning a little company of us repaired to the brookside, where we were privileged to lead the little son of Brother Boyd Johnson into the waters for baptism. After this service we went to the church and assembled for prayer and sacrament service. A splendid spirit prevailed. And it was very impressive to see the Saints who had assembled there for the first time for over a year, being so widely scattered, taking such a deep interest in the work and showing by their activity and expressed desires that they were "rooted and grounded" in the work. We lunched in the church at noon. And in the afternoon we preached to them, some of the people of the vicinity being present. We spoke again in the evening to a nice large audience, enjoying good liberty, and the Spirit of the Master. Thus ended the conference of the Nova Scotia District. All parted in good spirits, and apparently more determined than before to press on.

The writer after conference went to River Philip with Brother Blair Filmore, where he was royally entertained. Brother Filmore and his widowed daughter, Sister Calla Canning, seem very loyal to the work. Sister Canning lost her husband in the Halifax disaster. We held a service in Brother Filmore's home the following night, singing the songs of Zion and talking a little while to the little company that had assembled. Elder Kenneth Hyett also resides in this community, and after the evening service we went to his home, remaining until the following afternoon, when we took train for Scotch Village. Here reside Sister Hattie O'Brien and Sister Margaret Dimock; they are very faithful Saints. Sister O'Brien's genial companion, James, helped to make our short stay there very pleasant. We then went to South Rawdon where we have a little church built by the sacrifice of early Saints. We arrived on Friday, and that evening listened to a discourse from a Methodist minister who has a regular monthly appointment in our church there. On Saturday night the writer spoke, and again on Sunday afternoon and Sunday evening. Here reside Brother Walter Haley and wife, who are faithful Saints, as also are Sister Georgia Wood and Sister O'Brien.

From here we went to Scott's Bay. This was a beautiful trip, through the Annapolis Valley, over high hills to the bay. Here reside Brother Roland Legge and wife; also Sister Rufus Jess; these are very faithful Saints, and the geniality of Brother Roland, with his happy smile, also the kindness of his faithful wife and little girls will not soon be forgotten. These Saints come from the faithful pioneer stock of the H. J. Davison and Joseph Burton families. 'Nuff said! Upon leaving here we were permitted to cross the Basin of Minas, see the dykes built by the Acadian farmers, and the village of Grand Pre. Having reread the story of Evangeline while in this vicinity to refresh our memory we found the experience of being so near the scene of action very impressive. We returned to Amherst, calling again at Brother Boyd Johnson's home, thence back to our work here in Maine. It was a splendid experience. It was all too short, however, and as we parted with these faithful Saints and saw on their faces the expression of reluctance we felt to heed the admonition of the Master, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he may send more laborers into his vineyard." We feel that good work can be done in the province if some one would go there and stay on the ground awhile. May God bless the faithful Saints of Nova Scotia, and may the time come when their homes will be outposts where the weary missionary may find rest and encouragement while he battles with the adversary for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God and his righteousness in this province.

O. L. THOMPSON.

Independence

In some instances regular activities in connection with departmental activities in Zion have succumbed to the summer weather, but in general everything keeps moving about as usual, with somewhat diminished numbers. Which is not assent that all's well in Zion with nothing to be concerned about in the way of progress. There are those who seem to be unduly exercised over conditions and those who refuse to be stirred at all. Possibly somewhere between the extremes one will find the indicator on the dial of progress.

A meeting of all the superintendents of departments and subdepartments in Zion was held on Sunday afternoon at the Stone Church to discuss the propositions set forth by T. W. Williams in the HERALD for August 2 and August 9. Considerable interest was manifested and a wide variety of opinions expressed. No definite action was taken, the meeting being a sort of informal affair to allow wide latitude of expression. The proposal for the discontinuance of the departments and a reassignment of the work under the management of a board was freely discussed and many interesting views presented.

Sister Eunice Winn Smith is calling a meeting of all mothers of small children in Zion for 2.30 p. m. on Sunday, the 27th, at the Stone Church to consider an enlarged program of kindergarten and Sunday school work. She has had the indorsement of various officials of the plan and desires to present it to the mothers for their consideration at that time.

The committee on new edition of the Inspired Translation are continuing faithfully at work these days. A new member of the staff is Elder C. I. Carpenter, who has been at work several months and has lately brought his family here to their home, from Central Illinois, his former mission field. No dates are being set for completion of the work, their efforts being applied now to a mass of details which are vitally necessary but about which it is difficult to make estimates of progress of value to others.

Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, was scheduled to leave on the 15th to attend the Kewanee district reunion. Elder Arthur Allen will care for the pastoral work in his absence, and Bishop M. H. Siegfried will look after the details of the services at the Stone Church.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was in the city recently and reported attendance at tent services he is holding at Lees Summit ranging from 110 to 265, mostly adults. He is quite enthusiastic over the situation. On last Sunday evening a truck load of young people composing the Young People's Research Class in Religio, Mrs. J. A. Gardner teacher, drove to the services and furnished the musical program for the evening. Editor S. A. Burgess and family are attending the reunion at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending August 12: Mr. Rolla Duzan, Rich Hill, Missouri; Mrs. H. W. Haviland, Sergeants Bluff, Iowa; Mr. Roy D. Gassner and Miss Helen Gassner, Fowler, Colorado; Mrs. S. S. Jeffries and Baby Jeffries, and Robert T. Phillips, Kansas City, Missouri; Catherine and Lewis William Chick, jr., Pleasant Hill, Missouri; Mrs. Joseph Kirby, Marshall, Missouri; Samuel Pope, British Columbia, Canada; and the following from Independence: Miss Stella Martin, Miss Mabel Morant, Mrs. May Edson, Noel and Carry Edson, Dorothy Augusta Summers, Mrs. Arlo Hunt and Baby Hunt, Mr. Irvin Urton, Mrs. L. G. Evans, Miss Kate Hansen, Mrs. J. R. Jones, and Mrs. E. A. Payne. X-ray patients: Mrs. M. R. Swift, Pleasant Hill, Missouri; and Mr. Harry Barto, Independence.

San Francisco, California

We had a good spiritual prayer meeting last night. The hour of service was not long enough as all the time was fully occupied. We had with us, Elder A. C. Barmore and wife, Elder Merchant, wife and child, also Elder George Daly from Sacramento, and a good attendance of our own members.

Monday, July 30, Brother and Sister Merchant and children, and Brother and Sister Almond and child arrived from Tahiti. Brother Merchant and family left for Independence to-day. The others will remain here for some time. Brother Savage, from Tahiti, has been appointed missionary for this district, so we hope to hear from him occasionally.

Our Sunday school and Religio gave a very fine entertainment last Friday evening. The program was far above the usual and enjoyed by all. The little folks did very well, which showed a wonderful amount of training on the part of those who had the affair in charge.

Elder Barmore gave us a very fine discourse recently. The local priesthood are keeping our pulpit supplied and preaching the gospel nobly. Sunday school and Religio are doing well. The sisters are valiant in their work and making a good showing. We still have one of the best branches on the coast and are actively engaged in the cause we love. We are glad we belong to the Northern California District.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

Trenton, Missouri

Last Sunday was sacrament day, and not all the Saints availed themselves of the opportunity, but those who were present took a part in the devotional exercises following the partaking of the sacrament, and their prayers and testimonies were very fervent, and the Spirit was strongly manifested. The writer will say here that this service has always been one of special interest to the Saints of Trenton Branch and has done much towards keeping them alive in the work.

The sermon last Sunday morning on the subject of "Faith" by the branch president seemed to afford much comfort to the Saints; and the sermon in the evening by Elder Moroni Traxler, of Lamoni, Iowa, who happened to be in our city over Sunday, on the value of the Book of Mormon to the Saints, and some of the reasons why it came forth, seemed to be of special interest to some, who had never before given it any thought. Come again, Brother Traxler, for we feel that your message has been very helpful.

The Trenton Branch has not held any special meetings for over a year, but is thinking very seriously of putting on a meeting in the near future. We are very glad indeed to hear of Brother R. D. Weaver's regaining his health, and if he places his confidence in the Lord, we feel sure the Lord's hand is over him for good, and assure him and his loved ones of our prayers and sympathy in his behalf, and hope that his voice will again soon be heard in defense of the faith.

BRANCH PRESIDENT.

Honolulu, Hawaii

We baptized a brother a couple of weeks ago that we believe will make a good member; he comes from a family outside of our church affiliation altogether.

Some of our young people graduated from the different schools this year. John C. Thompson from the University of Hawaii; Henry O. Thompson from McKinley High School; Miguel DeLaCruz from the normal (teacher training) school; Elfrida Pilger graduated as a registered nurse from Queen's Hospital. (This sister is a Graceland student). Many more moved up a grade in the schools with good averages.

Our members see the necessity of education. They keep their children in the schools longer here than we have noticed in many of the cities and towns in the States. Another thing is noticeable, the Orientals are taking advantage of the educational advantages, as most of the graduates in the higher grades are Orientals. It is also true that there are more Orientals here than any other class of people. The population of these islands is about 240,000; of this number 95,000 are Japanese and 22,000 are Chinese; while the whites (including 11,000 in the Army and Navy) only have about 55,000; there are 24,000 Hawaiians and 17,000 part Hawaiians; 16,000 Filipinos, 5,000 Porto Ricans, and 5,000 of other nationalities.

A number of our members are teachers in the public schools; some are principals of schools, one a teacher in the normal school.

Honolulu being a tourist city, there are many attractions to draw the attention of our young away from their church duties. We have made it possible for the young to have most of their activities right here at the church home. This has been brought about by the mission house being remodeled so as to accommodate the pastor, as well as to furnish rooms for some of our departments in their work. A large yard between the church and the mission house is being fixed up as a tennis court and for other outdoor sports.

We are free here from some of the industrial conditions that are causing so much trouble in all parts of the United States. May the Lord help the Saints to see the necessity of preparing for the protection that the "city of refuge" (Zion) will afford, when conditions will be such that it will be almost impossible to live without partaking of the world's ways.

E. B. HULL.

Island Missionaries Return

A news letter from San Francisco states that Brother and Sister H. A. Merchant, and their two children, and Brother and Sister Frank Almond, and child, have returned to America from the Society Islands. The Merchant family were proceeding at once to Independence while the Almonds were to remain in that region for a time. Elder H. W. Savage is now laboring in that part of the country.

Australian News

In a report to the First Presidency, Apostle M. A. McConley writes as follows:

The conference of this district was held at the church at Johns River, June 23 to 27. This is a country branch and the church is located on a level slope lying between two mountains on cleared ground of what, a few years ago, was a dense Australian forest. In the neighboring paddocks are the stumps of trees that date back to the days of the Crusades, and the dead trunks of hundreds of giants of the forest that have been killed by ring-barking still bear silent testimony of their former grandeur.

It is supposed to be winter, but since this climate is quite similar to California, the word must be accepted with reservations. The weather most of the time was all that could be desired, though we had enough rain and mud to make the hymn, "Sunshine and rain," appropriate.

[In a later letter from which we extracted some items in a recent issue, Brother McConley had come to realize that "winter" in Australia had a real meaning after all.—EDITORS.]

Every home has an orchard, in which the predominating tree is the orange. At this season the trees are loaded with their golden product and all could eat to their satisfaction.

All five branches in the district were well represented and many of the isolated Saints were on hand. Quite a delegation was in attendance from the southern district, coming from Newcastle and Sydney.

A bullock and a sheep were killed before conference began, and these with the numerous products of the soil for which New South Wales is famous, made it easy to feed the crowd, meals being served free.

The spiritual experiences of the conference were very encouraging. Sister Davis and Sister McConley were associated with Sister Parker and Brother Sam Mansell in charge of the departmental work, and all did good work, though Sister McConley was prevented from attending the latter part of the conference because of a bad cold.

Elders W. J. Haworth, James W. Davis, George Lewis, and myself did the preaching, and all seemed to be at their best.

The people were touched and responded liberally of their means in support of the work, more than three hundred and fifty pounds being paid into the hands of the bishop in tithes and offerings.

At present Sister McConley and I are here at the home of Elder George H. Parker, the mission recorder. We have arranged to have the necessary material printed at the Standard Office in Sydney to start the statistical department system here, and hope to install the new forms of records here within the next few months.

En route to Queensland.—Accompanied by Bishop Lewis, I intend visiting all the scattered groups of Saints from Argents Hill Branch north, traveling with horse and buggy, after which Sister McConley and I will go north to Brisbane for the Queensland conference which convenes on August 5. This will give me a first-hand view of that part of the field, which is reported to be one of the best sections of New South Wales. And at the same time, we hope to feed some of the scattered and isolated Saints residing in various places en route.

New Mission Sulky

Some time ago we sold the old mission wagon, and as the mission sulky used by Elder James W. Davis and wife is getting pretty old, and needing repairs, we took the money from the sale of the mission wagon and invested in a new (second-hand) sulky. Bishop Lewis is also buying a much-needed new harness, and in a few weeks Brother Davis will be able to travel in both comfort and style.

Since conference things are taking a brighter outlook and we are moving out in our work, happy that we are permitted to engage in this great work of latter days.

Praying that the spirit of light and peace may reign supreme in all sessions of the council and with best wishes to all,

Sincerely yours,
MYRON A. MCCONLEY.

Beaverton Two-day Meeting

The two-day meeting held at Beaverton, Michigan, Saturday and Sunday, July 29, 30, was largely attended by Saints from different parts of the State, also some from Ohio. It truly was a great success. One brother stated in his testimony that they had fasted and prayed for two weeks that these meetings would be a success. We feel they were richly repaid for the sacrifice and efforts put forth to make them what they were.

Saturday morning at 7 a. m. a priesthood meeting was held in the main auditorium of the church. At 9 a. m. prayer meeting with district presidency in charge. At the close of this service we organized for the further care of the services, as follows: district presidency chosen to preside, B. H. Doty chosen chorister, Sister Banks organist, local deacons as ushers with power to choose assistants. The presidency were given power to appoint other officers as needed. An administration committee was appointed, and A. E. Starks was named as press committee, he choosing others to assist.

At 10.45 preaching by Elder Arthur E. Starks, of Boyne City, from Psalms 102: 13. He brought forth many thoughts that will give those who heard him food for thought for many days. He spoke of him who is mindful of our heritage in this sin-cursed earth, and that we should beautify the ordinary with his adornment, sweeten the bitterness with joy of overcoming, crown the mortal with immortality, and conduct ourselves with dignity and calmness.

At 2. p. m. preaching by Patriarch G. W. Burt. Those who have once heard him can truly appreciate the joy felt in having an opportunity to hear him at this time. At 4 p. m. Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, delivered a wonderful sermon in which he dwelt somewhat on the possibilities before us as a church, and more especially before our young people.

At 8 p. m. Elder O. J. Hawn, of Bradner, Ohio, preached to a full house. He gave us many beautiful thoughts, each one a sermon in itself.

Sunday commenced with a young people's prayer meeting in the main auditorium of the church and a priesthood meeting at the same hour, 7 a. m., upstairs.

At 8.30 a general prayer meeting opened with Patriarch G. W. Burt and Elder E. S. White in charge. At this service sixty testimonies were borne, eleven songs were sung, and eight prayers were offered. A truly pentecostal meeting was experienced when God comforted and strengthened his people by speaking to them in three beautiful gifts of tongues, through Elder O. J. Hawn.

At 11 o'clock Elder Arthur E. Starks was the speaker and brought forth some of the necessary requirements for Saints ere they shall be ready to dwell in Zion. He pointed out the fact that mothers who encourage their girls in wearing half-

Why Is Education Needed?

This is a legitimate question, if asked in sincerity. It should be answered for those who ask it. Is Education needed in the church to-day? If so, why?

----Here Are the Reasons----

BECAUSE as a church we are committed to a plan of development, spiritually, culturally, and industrially.
BECAUSE we are attempting to build a ZION in which the labors of all shall contribute to the common good.

BECAUSE one must be especially prepared for his task if he is to make an effective contribution. He must know his chosen profession from A to Z. He must know how it coordinates with the other work of the church in achieving the common purpose.

BECAUSE education means the unfoldment of one's native powers. It means the awakening and development of one's capacity, which otherwise would lie dormant.

BECAUSE education means the training of one's powers for his specific task, when he has selected it. It means the acquiring of the necessary knowledge and skills for rendering an effective contribution.

BECAUSE education develops one's potentialities to be. It increases his chance to know. It multiplies his ability to do.

BECAUSE education means the preparation of men and women, who can build Zion, and the fitting of people to live in Zion.

BECAUSE each of us wants to know the plan of the church. We want to discover our part therein. We want to be prepared to help build Zion, and to be fitted to live therein. We need Education.

Let Us Strive for Zion's Progress Through Education

Issued by
THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION

sox, low-necked dresses, and short skirts, were leading them away from modesty and assisting the world in the downfall of humanity.

The women held a very interesting meeting at 1.15, in charge of Sister Harder. Elder George E. Burt, of Saginaw, was the speaker at 2.15. His sermon was very much appreciated by all who heard him and will help us all to remember that His coming is drawing near. District President Matthew Umphrey was the speaker at four, and he preached a sermon of wonderful power and force. He spoke of the many discouragements and perplexities that confuse and bewilder the elders of the church. He expressed the thought that we can learn much from those who are not even on the side of good and truth. What a wonderful transformation it would make if those who profess Christianity would labor as earnestly for its extension as those who are in sinful pursuits labor for their goals. Speaking of the accumulation of money, he brought out the thought that we are kind even to the man against whom we have an almost inherent aversion. In business we are kind to such. When a dollar is the forfeit, we smother dislike and force ourselves to be agreeable—not only agreeable, but pleasant. The question brought to mind was, suppose every church member, for Christ's sake, practiced that until it became a habit.

At seven thirty we enjoyed a spirited song service accompanied by the orchestra, and at eight Elder O. J. Hawn preached a very eloquent sermon. The beautiful thoughts so forcefully presented went home to every heart, and everyone felt that instead of its being the end of a perfect day, it was the end of two perfect days. A vote of thanks was tendered the Saints and friends of Beaverton for their kindness and hospitality in caring for their visitors.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Northern California Conference

The institute, convention, and conference of the above district were held in the Oakland Church August 4 to 6. Religio institute convened Friday forenoon under the direction of W. H. Dawson, district superintendent. The session was quite interesting, although the attendance was small. In the afternoon the Sunday school convention held its session. J. T. Smith, jr., the district superintendent, and first assistant, W. H. Dawson, in charge. The attendance was much larger than in the morning and the business was lively. The election of officers resulted in the retention of the existing presidency, with one exception: Roy C. Barmore was chosen to take the place of Robert E. Cowden as second assistant superintendent. Lizzie Day was reelected as secretary, Hazel Burgess Powell as treasurer, and Rush Gilbert as librarian.

On Friday night a concert, musical and rhetorical, was held by a combined effort of the Religio and Sunday school. It was as usual a splendid success, and made a very strong appeal to the writer as an evidence of what our young people can do.

Saturday at 10 a. m. the conference convened in charge of the district presidency. While the credential committee was preparing its report, A. C. Barmore, C. W. Hawkins, and J. D. White addressed the assembly. Much important business was transacted at this session; also in the afternoon session which was held at two o'clock. It was unanimously decided to hold a reunion next year, and the district presidency, district bishopric, and the president of the Women's Department were elected as a reunion committee. Modesto was selected as the place for the spring conference. A large number of delegates were chosen to represent the district in the coming General Conference, some of the same persons having been elected as delegates by the Sunday school convention Friday afternoon. Among the district delegation we may mention Sister Clea Simpson, the president of the Women's Department, who is now visiting in the East. The election of officers resulted in sustaining the incumbents; that is, J. D. White as president, J. T. Smith, jr., and W. H. Dawson as assistants or vice presidents; A. C. Hawley as secretary; and the bishopric as treasurers. Brother Rush Gilbert was chosen to succeed Sister Mary E. Hawn as librarian. Both the secretary of the Sunday school and the conference were authorized to choose their own assistants pro tem, but the district secretary was also authorized to nominate a permanent assistant, which he accordingly did by naming Nina Davison, which nomination was regularly confirmed by vote. The appointed officers, Christiana Waller as chorister and G. S. Lincoln as historian, were upheld by regular motion and vote.

Saturday night Elder F. B. Almond, late of the South Sea Islands Mission, preached a most excellent sermon. Elder A. C. Barmore spoke on the "Restoration of the gospel" Sunday morning, following the regular Sunday school session, while at night Elder J. D. White addressed the audience with words of admonition and encouragement. The Sunday being the first one in the month, a communion service was held at 2.30 p. m. High Priests J. A. Saxe and J. B. Carmichael presided, while the emblems were distributed by Priests Emery Parks, Harley Bates, W. P. Bush, and Roy C. Barmore. Following the sacrament a very spiritual prayer meeting was held, and since the time was long, a goodly number were permitted to bear testimony. The room was crowded both in the morning and afternoon, and for this reason the district president ruled that only four prayers should be offered, and at his request the following prayed while the audience stood: High Priest J. B. Carmichael, Bishop Edward Ingham, and Sisters Lily Barmore and Elizabeth Keefer.

Thus was held the best-balanced conference which it has been my privilege to attend. It does not look as if the management could have been improved. For this credit is largely due Elder J. D. White. Altogether the prospects for Northern California District appear to be "Onward and upward." One thing, however, which marred the pleasure of the assembly was the illness and consequent absence of Elders H. J. Davison and Joseph Pressley. In gospel bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

Western Colorado in Conference and Reunion

The Western Colorado district conference and reunion which were held at Durango, July 14 to 24, were successful.

Opposition was strong but perseverance won the day. The district tent was set up in a good place. The missionary effort was of a high order during the entire conference and reunion. F. M. McDowell, of Graceland College; M. A. Etzenhouser, Salt Lake City; J. D. Curtis, Colorado Springs; and J. E. Yates, of Phoenix, Arizona, were present. A number of visiting Saints of the district were present also.

The reunion was educational in every way, but mainly from the viewpoint of the Women's Department. Some interesting talks were given by the following: Sister Edna Slick, J. T. Scannell, F. M. McDowell, and M. A. Etzenhouser.

There was a splendid attendance of nonmembers each evening. A good program was given which was well received, the tent being crowded and many having to remain on the outside.

There were eight baptisms. A good spirit prevailed throughout the meetings.

The place of the next reunion is to be decided at the next conference to be held in Delta, Colorado, in the wintertime. CORY, COLORADO. JEWELL HARSHMAN, Secretary.

Superintendent A. Max Carmichael plans to attend four reunions, Pinconning, Boyne City, Vicksburg, Michigan, and Elmhurst, Illinois, in the order given, two days at each, reaching Lamoni August 28.

Brother L. E. Erter, of Lees Summit, Missouri, writes: "On August 3, the Holden stake tent in charge of Brother J. W. A. Bailey was moved from Greenwood, Missouri, and hoisted on a business lot near the center of the business part of town. On Sunday evening, August 6, Brother Bailey opened fire in an unusually powerful sermon to approximately two hundred people—his subject being 'The creation.' Darwinism was dealt a crushing blow. We look forward hopefully that much good will be done by this series of meetings. The Lees Summit Branch is progressing to the extent that it is now necessary to secure a larger place of worship. A new building is now under consideration. So the work moves and gains prestige. You will hear more from Lees Summit in the near future."

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST AND OTHER CHURCHES

(Continued from page 762.)

ing these differences we note a growing recognition of the place of the church as a social unit and the duty of the church in helping to solve the social problems. Others are entering that field and are studying the subject with great earnestness.

Other churches declare a return to primitive Christianity. They have not yet seen its full truth, the necessity of carrying out of all of the commands and a return to the organization as given by the Master. Still, in broad principle, they are expressing a desire for a return to primitive Christianity.

In the third place, ministers here and there are speaking of the Spirit of prophecy, that if the early church possessed the gifts of the Spirit, we should be able to possess them to-day. There is more and more talk of the need of the prophet, the great

When General Conference Opens---Will You Be There?

Less than two short months now and General Conference will convene. The eyes of all the Saints will be centered upon Independence, and the meetings will be of church-wide interest. If you cannot attend, you will want to read day by day all that occurs. You will want to follow the business sessions item by item; you will want to know who is present and what they are doing; you will want to share in the inspirational prayer meetings and the enthusing sermons; you will want the benefit of the lectures and the pleasure of social intercourse. All of these you will want if you cannot be present yourself—and even if you can attend you would want it written down for future reference.

A Daily Herald Will Be Published During Conference

just to give you the information you will want. Beginning Monday, October 1, the Daily Herald will be issued each week-day evening while conference lasts. One page will give a synopsis of that day's proceedings and seven pages will be devoted to the minutes in detail and to reports, etc.

SUBSCRIPTION DURING CONFERENCE 25 CENTS

The Daily Herald Will Give You All Conference News

leader, who will speak with the voice of authority. We recognize him, however, as something more, that is, one having the right to receive the inspiration of almighty God. We also recognize the right of others than the prophet of the church to receive the Spirit of God, by which they may carefully test and examine all that is presented, and that they may have the witness of the presence of God for themselves.

In principle, therefore, there still remain some clear differences, though not such as should prevent a proper association in the interest of the community, of society, and the solution of educational problems.

Questions and Answers

Who May Receive Celestial Glory?

Question. In Romans 4: 15, we read that where there is no law, there is no transgression. From this we infer that those dying on earth without having heard or known the gospel of Christ will have a chance for celestial glory as they come up in the first resurrection, when they shall hear and be permitted to obey the gospel. But in Doctrine and Covenants we read that those who died without law are the terrestrials. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6.) Does this mean that only those who have the opportunity of hearing and obeying the gospel in this life can hope for celestial glory?

Answer. Those who knew no law, the heathen nations, come forth in the first resurrection. (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10; Mosiah 8: 58-60.) Evidently the first resurrection includes those who receive the terrestrial as well as the celestial reward. (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5, 6.)

We must remember that conditions hereafter are not wholly a matter of acceptance or repentance. We have been preaching that for years. But it is also a matter of preparation or fitness. In this connection it is plainly stated that those of the celestial glory shall minister to those of the terrestrial, and those of the terrestrial to the celestial, for they shall be heirs of salvation. (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.) Those of the terrestrial also receive not only the Holy Spirit, as do those of the celestial, but also the presence of the Son, though not the fullness of the Father. This, and the whole divine plan, leads us to believe that every individual will receive that glory for which he is best fitted and in which he will be happiest. It will be tolerable for those who knew not the law, but lived truly according to the best law they had. If any such are fit for the celestial kingdom, the writer feels that the Father in his wonderful love towards humanity will gladly place them in that glory and receive them into his own bosom.

We feel certain of the depth of his love for humanity and feel assured also that in his wisdom each soul will be placed in the best possible condition. To this may be added that Joseph Smith stated that he saw in the celestial glory one of his brothers who died without baptism, and received the assurance that all who would have accepted had they had the opportunity—all those who are fitted—will receive that glory. So our faith is founded on the whole scripture as it manifests whole love of God and Jesus Christ towards humanity.

We have also to remember that all those who come forth in the first resurrection will have the opportunity for the wonderful experience and schooling of the millennium and may have the association with Jesus at that time.

The terrestrial glory is well discussed in the True Latter Day Saints' Herald, volume 5, pages 113-117. The heathen nations, those who knew not the law, and children have part in the first resurrection. Those who kept well the portion of the love of God they had, who would have accepted if they had had opportunity in this life, who improved their opportunities in the millennium, will receive the celestial glory. All who are fitted for that glory at the end of the millennium will receive it.

It is those who reject the light they have, who commit sins worthy of the prison house, then repent, who receive the celestial glory. (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6.)

S. A. B.

Sanity and Health Are Dominant

Good health and sanity are inherited more than bad health and insanity.

In the midst of existing pessimism it is worth while to remind ourselves that according to scientific observation there are certain unit properties which are passed on from generation to generation though they may lie dormant for one or more generations.

Thus, if a feeble-minded and sane person marry, as an ordinary thing we would expect to find on the average one feeble-minded, one completely sane, and two that could be either and who might pass on something of both strains.

But we further learn that certain unit properties are dominant and tend to prevail more frequently than this general law would indicate. In fact, in every child there is a tendency towards a dominance on the part of one more or less marked.

It is interesting to learn that sanity is found to be dominant, so that in fact descent does not work out as above indicated, but the number of sane individuals tends to predominate. Some writers have gone so far as to assure us that if an insane asylum were set on an isolated island, to which no new blood came but they married and intermarried, in time they would develop an aristocracy of sanity, a group of individuals who were sane and who reacted to all tests of sanity and whose children were all sane, the same as in the case of those having as progenitors sane ancestors; that there would arise also a subaristocracy of a middle class though the original founders were all mentally defective; that the longer the experiment continued the larger the proportion of sane and half-and-half would become.

Again we hear much of inherited sickness. The facts are, that though the mother may be sacrificed, nature tends to feed the child if possible and to give every child a fair start in life. Environment, poor feeding after birth, may enter in to the extent that the nervous strain may be manifested in the child; but in fact, good health is inheritable, and nature tends to pass on good health even though we accumulate the wrong habits of living and many illnesses, small and great. The mother of Beethoven was a consumptive, his father a drunkard, but their genius entered in. The facts are that for every child the tendency is towards health and there are only a very few blood diseases which affect the germ plasm and which are passed on from generation to generation.

This fact should render great encouragement that sanity and good health will dominate and will prevail in the majority of cases. This of course does not justify any abuse of the laws of nature. It does not justify or excuse the marriage of the insane or mentally deficient, since there will result a certain proportion of defectives. But it does cause us to know that the powers are on the side of rightness and goodness.

Thrift Talks

A dollar to-day is worth about 61 cents as compared with the 1915 value.

Many think that the dollar will return to its 1915 value within five years. If true this means that every dollar that you place in the savings bank now at 4 per cent interest will have a purchasing power in 1927 of $2. This is equal to 20 per cent interest on your savings.

Begin saving to-day.

It is the savers who pay tithing.

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Called to Be Priests for God	759
The Young People	760
Saints Awakening to Need of Church	761
Religious Aspects of Evolution	761
The Church of Jesus Christ and Other Churches	762
Questions and Answers	780
Sanity and Health Are Dominant	780
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
While the Bridegroom Tarry'd They All Slumbered and Slept ..	763
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
A Business Investment for the Redemption of Zion	765
Churchless Children	766
THE FORUM:
A Right Basis of Exchange, by A. H. Christensen	766
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT
Dora Young	769
LETTERS AND NEWS
T. R. Knight—Mrs. William C. Peacock—Calvin C. Sears—Benjamin R. McGuire—O. L. Thompson—George S. Lincoln—E. B. Hull—Myron A. McConley—Alma C. Barmore—Jewell Harshman.	772
MISCELLANEOUS
	781

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Nauvoo, at Fort Madison, Iowa, September 9 and 10, for election of delegates to General Conference and other matters of business. D. J. Williams, 725 Lewis Street, Burlington, Iowa.

Florida, at Santa Rosa, September 2 and 3. Send all reports to Cal T. West, secretary, Milton, Florida. W. A. West, president, Catawba.

Central Nebraska, at Inman, August 25 to 27. Kindly send all reports to Miss Zada Derry, Elgin, Nebraska. We would like a good delegation from all branches and any other Saints who can attend. F. S. Gatenby, president.

Fremont, at Glenwood, Iowa, September 9 and 10. Convention Friday evening as usual. C. W. Forney, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Woodbine, Iowa, August 18 to 27, reunion committee announces that Charles F. Putman will be present and that competent help will be present to take charge of the recreational activities and boy movement.

Appointment of District Superintendent

Having been notified of a vacancy in the superintendency of the Sunday School Department of the Massachusetts District, we herewith, with the approval of Brother Daniel F. Joy, the district president, appoint Sister Lucie Sears to act in that office, until the next district convention or conference. A. Max Carmichael, superintendent.

Conference Minutes

KEWANEE, At Joy, Illinois, June 10, 11, 1922, George Sackfield and Charles L. Holmes presiding. Every district officer and every field worker was present. Each of the branch presidents was present, as well as Bishop's agent, and three missionaries counting J. R. Lentell from Davenport. Reports, both written and verbal, showed some progress being made, or else a desire to improve and accomplish something. Branch reports showed present number to be: Kewanee, 134; Rock Island, 101; Dahinda, 95; Joy, 84; Millersburg, 60; East Moline, 57; Peoria, 57; Matherville, 47; Buffalo Prairie, 45; Savanna, 30; district record, 37; total, 747; net gain in baptisms, 6. Sunday school secretary's reports showed 11 schools in district; total enrollment, 489; average attendance, 320; teachers, 52; largest enrollment Kewanee; best average attendance, Peoria, 34 out of 37 enrolled. Financial reports read, but auditors were unable to find the time to prepare report until next conference. A resolution in favor of a strict adherence to General Conference Resolution No. 377 was adopted. Resolution requesting secretary of district to prepare list of scattered members of district and list of all elders in district to be kept on file for help of missionaries was also adopted. The ordination of Edward Jones, Kewanee, to the office of elder was ordered. Reunion committee reported that a reunion had been arranged for at Galva, Illinois, to be held August 11 to 20, 1922. Annual election of district officers resulted in either choosing or sustaining the following: President, George Sackfield; vice president, Charles L. Holmes; secretary, M. E. Gillin; treasurer and Bishop's agent, Edward Jones; chorister, Leah Denton; historian, M. E. Gillin; Sunday school superintendent, H. R. Cady; Religio, Edward Jones; Women's Department, Mrs. J. R. Lentell; auditors, W. V. Holmes, J. W. Bean, and E. C. Dillon. Delegates to General Conference to be held in Independence, Missouri, in October, 1922, were chosen and were: Mrs. R. D. Weaver, Leonard Stiegel, Mrs. H. H. Martens, Mrs. George Sackfield, Mrs. Leah Denton, Mrs. J. R. Lentell, Mrs. Charles L. Holmes. Alternates: Mrs. J. G. Cole, Mrs. Kitty Pine, Mrs. Bert Sackfield, John Stiegel, Robert Gunlock, Mrs. Edward Willman, John Lindburg. Next conference to be held at Kewanee this fall, date to be left to district presidency. A very peaceful conference. Made more enjoyable by the splendid work of the musicians of the district who rendered the oratorio-cantata, "Shiloh," by Charles H. Gabriel, under the leadership of Sister Leah Denton, on Sunday afternoon. Joy Saints and those near-by branches are to be commended for the care they took of the visitors. Regret was felt by the Saints because of the illness of Brother R. D. Weaver, missionary newly appointed to district. And disappointment felt that F. T. Mussell, also a new appointee, was not able to be present. Mary E. Gillin, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

JENSEN.—Andrew Jensen was born at Alborg, Denmark, September 21, 1848. Moved to America in June, 1879. Settled at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he lived in or near until February 17, 1919. Moved then to Hamilton, Missouri. Baptized in September 1914. Died at Hamilton, June 24, 1922. Leaves four sons and three daughters. His wife, two sons, and one daughter preceded him. Interment at Grange Cemetery, Council Bluffs. Sermon by J. A. Hansen.

JENKINS.—Hannah Jenkins of Scranton, Pennsylvania, was born in South Wales, England, in 1839. Married James Jenkins in 1860. Died July 23, 1922. One son and two daughters survive. Funeral sermon by R. J. Hawkins, assisted by Evan Lewis.

GARTHWAITE.—Benjamin Charles Garthwaite was born October 16, 1846, at Little Grant, Grant County, Wisconsin. Married Lucy Ann Shelborn, September 4, 1874. Baptized June 26, 1905. Died at his home in Lancaster, Wisconsin, July 19, 1922. Wife and six children survive. One child has preceded him. Funeral from Methodist church at Lancaster, in charge of and sermon by B. C. Flint. Interment in Providence Cemetery, near Bloomington, Wisconsin.

ROBSON.—Mary Robson was born July 26, 1855, at Saint Tula, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania. Baptized January 20, 1886. Died at Beloit, Ohio, July 8, 1922. Sermon by James C. Carlisle.

AYLOR.—Nancy Rodecker was born in Pennsylvania in about 1838. Moved to Saint Louis, Missouri, in 1858, coming by boat down the Ohio River. Married Clinton Aylor the same year. Baptized in December, 1915. Died at Bellflower, Missouri, August 3, 1922. Funeral from the Christian church. Sermon by J. W. Peterson, assisted by the Christian and Presbyterian ministers. Leaves two sons, Elmer C. and William M., the latter lately of the Quorum of Twelve; and four daughters, Alice Deeding, Emma McClure, Carrie Spears, and Dora Blew. The Aylors were among the oldest residents of Montgomery County and highly respected.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parentheses give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 10 to 20 (319, 638, 732).
 Southern Idaho, August 11 to 20.
 Kewanee, at Galva, Illinois, August 11 to 20 (732).
 Northeastern Kansas, at Netawaka, August 11 to 20 (271, 685).
 Fremont and Pottawattamie, Iowa, and Northeastern Nebraska, at Prospect Park, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 11 to 20 (319, 589).
 Seattle and British Columbia, at Centralia, Washington, August 11 to 20 (397, 564).
 Central Michigan, at Pineconing, August 11 to 20 (469, 565, 732).
 Des Moines, at Runnells, Iowa, August 11 to 20.
 Eastern Iowa, at Maquoketa, August 11 to 20 (469, 660).
 Southwestern Texas, at San Antonio, August 18 to 27 (660).
 Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, August 18 to 28 (638, 685).
 Utah, at Malad, Idaho, August 18 to 26 (541).
 Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Woodbine, Iowa, August 18 to 27 (541, 732).
 Central Nebraska, at Inman, August 18 to 27 (516, 685).
 Northern Michigan, at Park of Pines, near Boyne City, August 18 to 27 (222, 660).
 Western Montana, at Race Track, August 18 to 27 (638).
 Far West Stake, near Stewartville, Missouri, August 18 to 27 (319, 660).
 Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, near Xenia, August 18 to 27.
 Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, August 18 to 27 (635, 732).
 Southern Missouri, at Springfield, August 18 to 27 (685).
 Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Vicksburg, Michigan, August 18 to 27 (685).
 Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3 (350, 589, 756).
 Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3 (638, 732).
 Northeastern Illinois, August 24 to September 3 (589).
 Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3 (295, 685).

MAKE THE START

Go to College

According to the law of inertia it takes more energy to start an object than it does to keep it moving when once started.

The habit of making starts is important.

The lazy man is inclined to go on when once started. If started properly he has made one great step towards success.

WELL BEGUN IS HALF DONE

DECIDE TO-DAY TO IMPROVE YOUR EDUCATION BY GOING TO

GRACELAND COLLEGE

OFFICIALLY ACCREDITED

FULLY STANDARDIZED

MANY ATTRACTIVE COURSES

Commercial
 Teacher Training
 Secretarial Courses Music:
 Vocal Instrumental Public School

Liberal Arts
 Public Speaking
 Academic Courses
 Religious Education
 Correspondence Courses
 Home Economics
 Scouting

Pre Law
 Pre Medical
 Pre Dental Engineering
 Commerce
 Physical Training
 Recreational Leadership

Catch the spirit of the times. Join the great army on the road to an education—and efficient citizenship. For catalogue and full information write

THE PRESIDENT

GRACELAND COLLEGE

LAMONI, IOWA

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, August 23, 1922

Number 34

EDITORIAL

The Church Has Always Fostered Education

We must build solidly for the demands of the future in religious education.

It is of interest to note that in practically all ages of the world it has been the church that has fostered education. In ancient times education was more or less confined to the priesthood. Even among so-called pagan people in Egypt, India, Peru, Babylon, and elsewhere in the ancient world it was the priest who was the teacher of the youth, usually the older priests.

Among the Jews this effort of the priesthood to instruct the young in the law was by no means an unimportant activity. The doctors of the law are by their very title teachers.

It is probably true that in those ancient times learning was kept for the few and was deliberately kept from the mass of the people; but we note that through the Dark Ages it was the monasteries and the churches which preserved the ancient writings, which studied the philosophy of Plato and of Aristotle, and that it was from the churches that the first great students of science came. Throughout all that dark period it was the church that kept alive the light of learning.

So in America, it was with the various universities. Harvard was started a score of years after the landing of the Pilgrims. William and Mary was incorporated in Virginia as early as 1660. Yale was founded in 1701. All these were founded by the churches of the day, as was also the case with Princeton, Brown, Columbia, and many others.

In the early days, according to Doctor W. O. Thompson, in the Christian Work, the history of the college was one of privation, poverty, and sacrifice by both the faculty and student body. It is significant to note that the principal impulse, however, was invariably religious.

The curriculum was at first limited to such works as Paley's Natural Theology and Butler's Analogy.

In the early part of the nineteenth century it was still a case of small colleges struggling with poverty and a very limited curriculum, an inadequate library, and with a small faculty which made it necessary that education be confined within the narrow limits. After the Civil War there came large forces, also the wide publicity of the Darwinian hypothesis, the demand for science in the colleges, and the development of the elective idea. There also followed the development of State universities and of high schools as an expansion of the free public school system. Prior to this time it was the academy which was largely under church influence that had furnished the supply of students to the better established colleges.

After the middle of the century there followed the elimination of the Bible in the public schools. Ezra Cornell established his college at Ithaca, New York, to teach all subjects. For these reasons there came a marked decrease in the importance given to moral philosophy; and in many cases philosophy as a whole, which had been the very foundation of collegiate work, entirely disappeared from the curriculum. This, we know from observation, was the case with many colleges founded about the middle to the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

The theological seminary became the only institution immediately interested in the field of religion, and that instruction was only for the ministry, not to be teachers of the Bible and of religion. Their graduates could preach but not teach.

Now there has come a new departure and a recognition of the great importance of religious teaching as distinguished from preaching. This is largely a development since the World War. Before the war, even in Christian colleges, not more than one third were doing anything worthy of mention in the field of religion, and the work of the State universities is practically nil so far as value is concerned.

As a result, there has come a great call for a priestly endowment to colleges under the influence of the church, and in the call the importance of Christian education has been emphasized. But the fact remains that these colleges have not at present a sufficient number of competent teachers. The fact remains that the State universities are not meeting this particular need. The graduate schools are preparing men to teach in the general fields of science and education, but very few are pursuing courses that will equip them for a professorship in Christian education.

There is, therefore, according to the Christian Work, a need for men to teach in this field who will command the confidence from a scholarly point of view, of men working in other fields. It is no longer a matter of more or less sentimental devotion to the Bible and religion, but a well-defined conception of the need of the organization of education in the interest of the Christian view of society. The supreme importance of the Christian college is to provide a program that is scholarly as well as Christian. The contest between faith and unbelief is not part of this problem. Christianity is the religion of freedom; no conception is adequate which will restrict freedom of teaching. The State institutions will probably never give adequate expression in this general field.

In recent years there has been a great humanizing process in education. Our views upon all the social sciences are beginning to reflect the effect of the teachings of Jesus. The college is the center of idealism as it is the home of youth. The Nation, therefore, needs, our educational institutions need, and the Christian colleges especially need as teachers, men of profound conviction, of great faith, and of clear vision as to the future.

This which is stated of church colleges in general is preeminently true of our own church college. The field is before us. An effort has already been made in this direction. We voice the profound hope that its present dreams may, in the very near future, find fulfillment and hence there be opened before us the great vision yet to come.

S. A. B.

The Work of the Auditor

At the request of the Presidency made after the release of R. B. Trowbridge as auditor, Brother A. H. Knowlton made an audit of the books of the Presiding Bishop as at February 28. At our request, too, he has submitted a condensed balance sheet. This request was made because we felt it wise to make a public statement of his findings. We submit herewith his report to us as made May 30:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 30, 1922.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH;

Dear Sir: At your request we submit a condensed balance sheet and income and profit and loss statement of the accounts of the Presiding Bishopric as at February 28, 1922. The income and profit and loss statement covers a period of eight months from the time of the last Report of the Presiding Bishop on June 30, 1921, to and including February 28, 1922, the date of the examination of the Presiding Bishop's accounts made by myself.

The balance sheet indicates the financial position of the church (excluding Graceland College, Independence Sanitarium, and the Herald Publishing House, which are operated as separate units) on February 28, 1922.

The cash balances were verified by communication with the respective depositories, and amounts on hand at the office were counted.

All bonds, war savings stamps, and industrial securities were examined by us and book balances adjusted to the actual amount on hand.

Real estate contracts, deeds, leases, and such other papers as were on file in the office of the Presiding Bishop were examined.

Notes, with two exceptions, were inspected or verified by communication with the holders at February 28, 1922. We found no reserves for uncollectible items had been provided and we have created for this feature an amount of $8,957.54

Statement of Income and Profit and Loss

(For the eight months ended February 28, 1922.)

INCOME—General
Tithing	$159,080.45
Offerings and oblations	26,540.88
Bequests	12,700.00
Consecrations	10,416.78
Miscellaneous bishops' and agents' receipts	7,891.78
Interest earned	6,599.95
Recoveries on notes and accounts previously charged off	3,729.14
Dividends earned	352.13
Commissions earned	20.00
Profit on bonds purchased	99.15	$ 227,430.21
DEDUCT—EXPENSE—General
Family allowances	$163,912.48
Elders' expense	36,977.91
Aid extended	9,563.76
Administrative expense	37,870.01
General church office building expense	2,913.04
General church miscellaneous expense	1,752.00
Consecration contract interest	2,516.71
Bishops' and agents' miscellaneous expense	248.75
Bad accounts charged off	269.19
Interest paid	4,441.50
Exchange and protest fees	2,273.02
Miscellaneous—presiding bishopric expense	252.17	$ 262,990.54
Excess of General Expense over General Income		$ 35,560.33
REAL ESTATE OPERATIONS
Profits on sales, rents, interest received and contracts forfeited	$22,594.20
Deduct—expense of real estate department and buildings from which rents are received	24,987.27
Excess of Real Estate Expense over Real Estate Department Income		$ 7,606.93
FOREIGN MISSIONS
Palestine—Contributions by Saints and friends	$ 31.42
Expenditures by Presiding Bishopric	451.77
Excess of expense over contributions		$ 420.35
CHURCH INSTITUTIONS
Contributions by Saints and friends	$ 3,562.86
Deduct—advances by the Presiding Bishopric	28,447.17
Excess of advances over contributions		$ 24,884.31
Deficit before deduction of reserves		$ 6,273.99
DEDUCT RESERVES
For depreciation for eight months	$ 2,527.37
For uncollectible notes and accounts	7,612.22	$ 10,139.59
Total operating deficit or excess of expense over income for the eight months' period		$ 73,393.15

on unsecured notes in the face value of $59,717.85. Security for notes shown as secured was examined and is believed to be ample.

We have made an analysis of the accounts receivable and in a few instances have communicated with the persons from whom the accounts are due. We found no reserve for loss in the collection of these accounts had been provided. To indicate the amount of loss that may be expected we have created a reserve of $8,012.86 on the book total of $53,419.09.

Inventories of machinery and equipment, furniture and fixtures and church libraries as taken by the Presiding Bishopric June 30, 1921, with such additions as have been made since, have been accepted in this report. Depreciation reserves have been provided, however, as this has not heretofore been shown.

Amounts heretofore carried as cash on hand in the hands of bishops and agents, which were in reality advances to them for expenditure and accounting, have been shown in this report as deferred items.

Records of the special funds were examined for the entire year 1921 and the two months of 1922, except in the case of the Auditorium Fund, which record was examined from the receipt of the first payment. As indicated in the

Others on Stewardships

Stewardship ideas are generally taught and widely practiced by other churches.

The Baptist for January 21 especially stresses the subject of stewardships. This is the fourth of a series of special numbers the past winter on this subject. It comments on the fact that seventy-eight out of every hundred who give to charitable purposes

Accounts of the Presiding Bishopric. Balance Sheet, February 28, 1922

ASSETS
CURRENT
Cash on hand and in banks	$ 82,772.94
Certificates of deposits in banks	3,344.20
Cash in hands of bishops and agents	25,744.01
Government bonds and war savings stamps ..	141,035.26
Notes Receivable—Secured	65,936.43
Notes Receivable—Unsecured—less reserve for uncollectible notes	50,760.17
Real estate contracts receivable	116,696.60
Accounts receivable—less reserve for uncol- lectible accounts	65,265.74
Investments—stocks, bonds and partnerships	45,406.23
Real estate—for sale	81,956.38
	95,895.98
Total Current Assets	$658,117.34
FIXED
Real estate—subject to life estate	$ 71,334.81
Real estate reserved for church use	553,911.54
Real estate reserved for church (leaseholds)	57,027.97
Church edifices and grounds	1,478,291.98
Machinery and equipment—less reserve for depreciation	14,491.18
Furniture and fixtures—less reserve for depreciation	22,929.95
Church libraries—less reserve for depreciation	8,510.20
Total Fixed Assets	$2,206,497.63
DEFERRED ITEMS
Advances to Bishops and Agents for expenditure	$ 20,411.76
	$2,885,026.73

LIABILITIES
CURRENT
Notes payable	$ 180,972.22
Accounts payable	56,094.74
Receipts from sale of church edifices subject to refund	10,351.48
Special Fund Liability:
Auditorium	$ 380,742.51
Temple	7,911.24
Organ	176.95
European children relief	16.00
German relief	2,157.42
Poland relief	16.00
Musical education	1,000.00
Foreign missions	348.10
Wireless station	96.92
Christmas offering for 1921-22	52,817.14
Land	5,927.00
Total Current Liabilities	$ 451,209.28
Excess of Assets over Liabilities
Balance June 30, 1921	$2,280,259.12
Deduct—adjustments	20,461.96
	$2,259,797.16
Deduct—excess of expense over income for the eight months ended Febru- ary 28, 1922	73,398.15
Balance	$2,186,399.01
	$2,885,026.73
Contingent Liabilities
Guarantor on notes	$ 405.00
Consecration contracts	76,807.03
	$ 77,212.03

This Balance Sheet does not include the Assets and Liabilities of the Independence Sanitarium, Herald Publishing House, and Graceland College.

balance sheet submitted, the liability for these funds at February 28, 1922, was $451,209.28, which means the total collections less legitimate expenses in connection therewith. Of this amount there was at that date on hand and invested for the account of these funds $95,988.52, leaving a balance of $355,220.76 which had been transferred to the general fund of the church. The balances to the credit of these funds were verified by us.

The income and profit and loss statement submitted indicates an excess of expense over income, for the eight months ended February 28, 1922, of $73,398.15, or an average of $9,174.77 per month deficit for the period.

Respectfully, ALBERT H. KNOWLTON.

We are pleased to publish the above report, as reflecting the condition of the finances, for doubtless many are interested in knowing what the auditor has found.

Additional audit is being carried on by Brother Knowlton, so that the matter of audit can be kept up to date.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

are church members, though this is represented by about forty per cent of the population and probably those who gave the additional twenty-two per cent are of a church-going ancestry.

One should be not only a tither but also a steward. That means that it is not sufficient to give one tenth to church agencies, but one is also accountable for his use of the remaining nine tenths. Stewardship leads to self-discipline in the organization of our work.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is making the year 1922 Stewardship Year, with the immediate goal of a million signed tithed stewards by January 1. A drive conference has already been held in Chicago and a working organization is planned for each local church.

The Presbyterian Church, as early as 1902, began the movement for foreign missions. "Let every one of you lay by in store on the first day of the week as he has prospered." Systematic giving was first stressed. Then in the winter of 1916-1917, it was emphasized that "we give as the Lord has prospered." A letter was sent to all Presbyterian pastors urging not only systematic giving but also proportionate giving. They sent out the texts: Money the Acid Test. God Owns All ("in that in our partnership with him we try to administer each dollar in accordance with the will of God"). A special Sunday is set aside each year for enrollment as Christian stewards. They present stewardship, not as a scheme for raising money, but as a school for men.

The Southern Baptist convention has also organized and set its aim at half a million tithers, about one sixth of the total number of enrolled Baptists.

Other organizations are also undertaking systematic stewardship campaigns as far as they are able to understand and utilize that term.

The main question is stated, first, "Not how much of my money shall I give to God, but how much of God's money shall I keep for myself." "When a Christian begins to make money, God either gains a fortune or loses a man." As an illustration, a widow, and her son who was the sole support of a family of five, were saving up money for a Ford car but turned over the whole $400 for the erection of a church, saying, "It is more important to have a church than to have a car in which to go to church."

The above gives us some idea of what others are trying to do. We note throughout a real urge for a consecrated purpose of life as well as of means.

Christian stewardship is taught as a regular part of the Sunday school work by the Presbyterian Church. The stewardship book for the adult department takes up the subject in some detail.

Lesson one is to the effect that God is the owner of all that we have on earth. He is both the creator and the owner.

The second lesson considers the place and use of things. Life does not consist in the multitude of things. The Father knows what we need. Things should be put in their place. Money is only a measure of value. It represents the stored up power of man. As a steward we must consider our obligations in acquiring, in spending, in saving, in giving, in accounting, in influencing others.

The third lesson emphasizes that there are three partners in all property: the one who holds the property as ordinary legal owner, God, and our neighbor. Charles M. Schwab is quoted as saying:

We have entered upon a social era in which aristocrats will be men who have done something for humanity and their nation. There'll be no rich and poor. The rich (and I am told I am a rich man) are learning this. There has never been a time when I have had the sense of ownership or when my riches gave me any happiness. It is the doing of something myself for others that has made me happy.

Secretary Lane, addressing the National Chamber of Commerce, said:

We have come upon a new day and a new philosophy. We are to judge men henceforth not by what they have, but what they give.

George W. Perkins, in an after-dinner speech, preached a truly Christian sermon in which this passage occurs:

The problem of the man of the future is not how he can acquire a very large fortune, but . . . a competency and at the same time fit himself to be an all-round citizen and render some worth-while public service. . . . The Christian's wealth is held in trust—a means of service to others and, like all the work given us to do and the trusts given us to keep, it is a means, precarious indeed, as Jesus so unmistakably taught; but still, if wisely, humbly, though fully employed, a means of character development. S. A. B.

What Prohibition Has Done

The survey in Massachusetts, which was a State formerly very wet, made by Elizabeth Tilton on behalf of the Family Welfare Society of Boston and published in World's Work shows that as a result of prohibition comparing 1921 with 1915, there has been a decided improvement in Boston and throughout Massachusetts. There has been a decrease of arrests of 15 per cent; of cases in which drink was a factor of 90 per cent; a decrease of the penal population of 51 per cent. The question is considered from a dozen different points of view. Everyone shows a decrease of delinquency, including a decrease of diseases in which alcohol is a predisposing cause, including a decrease of pneumonia of 51 per cent and tuberculosis of 23 per cent.

On the other hand, despite the fact that 1921 was a time of very great depression there was an increase in savings bank accounts of 9 per cent and a decided decrease in the number of applications for help as compared with 1915. She adds that comparison with the last normal license years, 1916 and 1917, would show a still greater rate of decrease, and that if the year 1920 had been taken instead of 1921 there also would appear great decrease.

On the other hand, there has been an increase between 1920 and 1921, but there have been added causes: unemployment, and the effect of civil team play is declining. Third, the forces against prohibition are better organized, while the Government has not had time to organize any equivalent equipment. These conditions are temporary, but despite this increase from 1920-1921 there is a decided improvement as compared with 1915 and a still greater improvement as compared with 1916-1917. In fact she concludes: "As a result, we have in an economic depression vastly worse in the State of Massachusetts than the former one, (1915) a vastly improved condition in morals and social well-being."

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Disintegration of the Home

By T. W. Williams

*Sermon delivered in the Stone Church,
Independence, Missouri, March 17, 1922.
Mrs. A. Morgan reporting.*

[The choir loft was filled with bright-faced boys and girls who supplied several instrumental and vocal numbers. Before launching out on his address, Brother Williams expressed keen regret that he was unable to direct all his remarks to the young people, but assured them inasmuch as he could not speak to them he would talk for them. He took for his text the fifth and sixth chapters of Ephesians]:

Children, be obedient to your parents as a Christian attitude, for it is a duty. Honor your father and your mother. This is the first commandment, which has a promise added to it, so that it may be well with you, and that you may live long on the earth.

And you, fathers, do not irritate your children, but bring them up tenderly, with true Christian training and advice.

Married women, be submissive to your husbands, as is fitting unto the Lord.

Married men, be affectionate to your wives, and do not treat them harshly.

Children, be obedient to your parents, for that is right for Christians. Fathers, do not fret and harass your children or you may make them sullen and morose.

As a further preliminary to what I may say, I wish now to read excerpts from an article appearing in the Kansas City Star of January 23, this year. It carries the heading, "A juvenile crime wave; The American home out of gear, Doctor Crafts declares." You have undoubtedly read this article, but I will read it again to refresh your minds.

"Ratio of arrests is seven minors to one adult, and for every boy lawbreaker ten girls go wrong," Reform Bureau head says.

Washington, January 22.—The American home is confronted with a juvenile-crime wave in the Nation to-day, according to Doctor Wilber F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau.

"A personal survey of twenty-eight States," Doctor Crafts declared, reveals that:

Seven minors to one adult is the ratio of those arrested now for crimes.

The majority of big crimes—murder, burglary, and highway robbery—are committed by minors.

For every boy arrested for a crime, ten girls are taken into courts for immoral acts.

The average age of fallen women has dropped from twenty-eight to sixteen years, and in some cases to fourteen years.

Parents Are Afraid

The reason for this alarming situation, Crafts says, is simply this:

Parents are afraid of their children and the children know it.

Parents, from the richest to the poorest, seem to lack initiative nowadays, the veteran reformer says. Fathers and mothers are not sure of themselves. They are afraid to express an opinion to their growing children because they dread the ridicule of these youngsters. And the collective parenthood of the Nation hasn't the slightest idea of the way to spend an evening at home guiding its own and its children's leisure hours.

Only this parental fear makes possible the cheap movie, the dance hall, the use of the motor car promiscuously, and all the vicious amusements of this day and age. The two extremes—the rich and the poor—give us the spectacular news stories.

Up to Middle Class Parents

It is the middle class parent, however, who goes unnoticed in the press, who presents the greatest problem, for there are many middle class parents just comfortably fixed. The responsibility of the Nation lies with the middle class parent. He either laughs at or is ignorant of the thought embodied in "The children's hour." Too often he has stopped his education early in order to make money that he might live well. And he has never tried to improve himself.

Thus parents are too often unworthy of parenthood. They are not only ignorant of the elementary duties of parenthood, but ignorant of those refining facts which serve to make them the inspiration of their children.

But parents to-day have lost their confidence. Fathers have lost something of their manhood. They forget that the obligation of parenthood does not stop with providing sustenance to the family.

What the Nation needs is a convention in every town, where fathers and mothers can meet to determine what makes boys and girls go wrong.

Let me emphasize and reiterate: What the Nation needs is a convention in every town, where fathers and mothers can meet to determine what makes boys and girls go wrong.

This recital of social conditions by men who give their lives to a study of these problems should stir the red blood in every man and woman—that is, if we have any red blood left. It is, indeed, a very serious indictment of the present order of society. To some this picture may seem too lurid and overdrawn. It is a statement of fact, nevertheless—and this is the real tragedy of it. This indictment not only applies to the United States as a whole. It is equally applicable to Missouri and Independence. The evil is world-wide. The problem is one which relates to the entire Anglo-Saxon race.

Conditions in Great Britain

I am sure my British confreres will bear me no malice when I say unhesitatingly that the former splendid morale of the British Isles as well as Canada has broken down. This great people, with a glorious and imperishable past and who, prior to the great war, could boast, and justly, too, of the splendid standard of morals maintained, among them, are to-day face to face with the identical problem now menacing the people of the United States. The editors of the great English newspapers and magazines, together with the astute statesmen and consecrated clergymen of Britain, are expressing great alarm over the conditions prevailing in the British Isles.

One of the causes to which is attributed this unprecedented let-down of morals in the neglect of the children who are in the adolescent age during the preceding years of the war. During this period the children of Britain were largely left to their own resources in all of the expressional activities. Despite the heroic efforts of civic organization and the insistent pleas of moral institutions, these seemed unavailing in stemming the tide. Criminologists declare that license and misdirection during the plastic period of childhood make it well-nigh impossible to prevent what is now occurring in the foremost nations of the world.

What is true of Great Britain is doubly true of France. Germany and Italy are also threatened. It was indeed pitiable during our recent trip through Germany to be compelled to listen to the recitals of the breakdown of the entire moral code. That the war has had to do with these conditions we cheerfully admit, but back of the war and beyond the war are other and more permanent causes, and it is of these we wish definitely to speak to-night.

Cause of Degeneracy

Here in the United States we cannot fall back on the war and thereby give satisfactory explanation for infantile degeneracy and juvenile wantonness. There must be, there is, deeper and even more sinister causes, and to which the great mass of our people are seemingly oblivious. These things to which reference is made, this shocking abandon and degeneracy, are effects. They are primal causes. They are danger signals, which, if unheeded, point to the inevitable end. These things, if unchecked, will dwarf and even make abortive the efforts of church and state to preserve our race.

I do not wish to appear as an alarmist. I am, in no sense, a pessimist. I feel to say with Edwin Markham:

"Keep heart, O Comrade. God may be delayed
By evil; yet He suffers no defeat.
Even as a chance rock in some upland brook
May change a river's course; yet no rock,
No, nor the mountain fastnesses
Can hold it from its destiny, the sea.
God is not foiled. The drift of the world's will Is greater than all wrong. Earth and her years
Down Joy's bright way or Sorrow's longer road
Are moving towards the purpose of the skies."

Despite this optimism—this supreme faith in the final expression of the Universal Will in some succeeding age and with people who have evolved to the point where they can and will give rightful expression, still I am filled with an unrequited anxiety as to what may yet be the end of the Anglo-

Saxon race. We have no assurance—no divine guarantee—that our race will make good. Our future is in the making. God's purposes as to humanity will yet be expressed in men, but whether it will be the present peoples of the world who will finally vindicate his wisdom as a Creator remains to be seen. It rests with us. Fatalism fails here and predestination will not be permitted to invade agency. It does not coincide with prophecy and is out of keeping with all history.

We Must Have Faith

It is cowardly, however, to throw up our hands and say, "It is beyond us. We can do nothing to stem the tide of unbridled license." We would deserve only divine anathema to take shelter under the prophetic utterance of Paul wherein he says, "In the last days perilous times shall come," and "Men shall be lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." It is no justification for inaction to insist that prophecy must be vindicated and quote, "Men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good." Prophecy is never given to dishearten or cause men to give up the race. Prophecy serves to forewarn and forearm. It suggests means of escape.

It is unbecoming the dignity of parenthood for any man or any woman as the head of a family, or for the church or the state even, to suggest defeat. Pessimism is anarchy to the state and blasphemy against God. It is ignoble to refer this matter to the Almighty for disposition and say, "Let Father do it." This is our problem. We must meet it, manfully and unafraid. We can do this by mutual purpose and concerted effort. It is not one man's fight. It is the work of the nation and of the church. It is the supreme test of our civilization. It belongs to the home, the church, and the state.

A Strong Appeal

Would that I might be possessed of some super-sense or faculty whereby I could arouse your minds and disquiet your spirits so that when you return to your homes to-night you would be unable to find rest—and that during the silent watches of the night you might hold introspective communion with your own soul and not find repose until you had covenanted with almighty God to do your best to save to God and the church the rising generation. I do pray that my appeal shall be so intense that it will awaken the people of this church to the responsibility and obligations we are under and for which we must answer to God.

If the fathers and mothers of this church will give this problem—and indeed it is a problem—careful thought and prayerful attention—if they will go down to the very roots of the matter, they will, with the help of God, be able to solve it, and thereby save to the church thousands of Latter Day Saint children who to-day are apathetic or indifferent, both as to the dangers which confront them and the need of allegiance to the divine program.

History is but repeating itself. Let us go back to Rome and review the history of the rise and fall of that mighty empire. The contributing forces which made for the downfall of Rome are at the very threshold of American life to-day and, for that matter, of the entire civilized world. Let us consider some of these:

First. The destruction of domestic religion. The old ancestral worship, which was the heritage of the patriarchal age, held the family in such compact form that no individual force could undermine or overthrow. I am making no claim for ancestral worship. I would not return to, nor yet institute, a religion which forever harks back for precedent and authority.

Domestic religion under the patriarchate had all the elements of solidarity. It centered in the family. The home was the sanctuary where man and God met and where men met together. When this broke down under the degenerate and idolatrous pagan philosophy, it was the beginning of the end of the Roman civilization.

The Family the Unit of Society

Sociologists agree in this: that the family is the essential unit of society. We may abolish the state and still survive, but we cannot dispense with the home without going into savagery. As goes the home, so go both church and state. This is inevitable. Back of the church stands the home. If you would know the strength and power of the church, then study the home life of the people. It is impossible for the church to persist unless the essential elements contributing to its very life find expression in the domestic life of the people. History records no church or state worth while unless at the same time the virility and power making for greatness were bedded deep in domestic life.

The home was God's first social institution. He started out with one man and it would not work. He then gave to Adam a helpmeet. Without the home you cannot have a church worth the name. Without the home the state is impossible. Whatever threatens or invades the home strikes at the very foundation both of church and state.

In this old domestic religion, the father as patriarch was the mouthpiece of God to all of his household, including his offspring and those who married into the family. He gathered his clans together and talked to them as a father should talk to his children. The entire family came together on such occasions with assurance and gave heed to the counsel given. During the years of Rome's growth and power this attitude persisted. But in her decline and fall domestic religion of the patriarchal sort was wholly discarded, and as a result both church and state collapsed. This was likewise true in Grecian history.

To-day parenthood is discredited. The boy no longer seeks counsel from his father. There is an ever-widening chasm between father and son, mother and daughter. The very terms used on the part of children to-day reveal the exact status: "My old man," "My old woman." We have domestic religion only in name, and we are following in the wake of Rome.

Economics and the Home

Society is based in economic life. Without some community of interests there can be no social life worth while. Given an equitable economic and social life and the ideal church and state are inevitable. In the patriarchal age the family group was the unit, not the individual—all worked towards one common purpose. This was the condition in the early history of Rome. But as population increased, the solidarity and unity of the family was invaded. The economic readjustment disintegrated the family solidarity. The power of the home life was destroyed. Vice and immorality became general and Rome went down.

What startling parallels do we find between the United States and Rome! One has but to study the history of both countries to realize the danger which now confronts America. If you wish to know the danger which confronts America, read Gibbons's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. What has become of our boasted domestic religion? Let us go back to the old Puritan days. Those were the days of virility and power. True, some of the laws were exacting and harsh, but despite the rigorous and sometimes unjust exactions of those days, still we must concede that religion was entrenched in the home. The father and mother, both morning and night, gathered the children around the family fireside and read Scriptures to them. This was followed by fervent and earnest family prayer. This practice was well-nigh universal. The Bible was not only read, it was studied. They hung on every word. And then in the seclusion of the home they all knelt around the family altar and gave thanks to almighty God for his care and blessing, and petitioned for grace and power to continue and overcome.

Perfunctory Family Worship

But that day is past. Oh, I know that we have family prayers, when we have the time. I know we say grace at meals, but this largely in a perfunctory way. Brother Rushton was twitting one of the brethren the other day, saying that he could not for the life of him tell whether the man was asking a blessing on the food or praying for the joint council. Possibly he was dealing in some of his hyperbole, but I plead guilty with Brother Rushton to a real lack of rightful religious devotion. We do not ask for a return of the old days, but we should insist that domestic religion in keeping with the needs of the present be encouraged and fostered.

The day is passing in America when the word of God stands enthroned in the home. It is now the exception to find a home where prayers are offered to God both morning, noon, and night. Over in the Near East there is a god in every well-regulated home. They could not well keep house without their family idol. And I have an increasing respect for some of the idolatrous practices of these people. While they do have idols, they do not worship them. The oriental cannot imagine a God which he cannot see. Such a God is remote, abstract, intangible. The oriental demands something concrete. He demands materialization. So he makes an image—something on which he can concentrate the mind and through this image which he can see he offers up his devotion to the God which he cannot see.

When you remove God so far away that he is "beyond the bounds of time and space" you make effective prayers impossible. Prayer is unavailing unless you can see God so divinely near that his consciousness touches yours and your consciousness touches his. I plead for a restoration of the family altar. I plead for a revival of domestic religion. I plead for a revival of the old-time family circle where father, mother, boys, and girls meet for a common purpose.

Breakdown of Political Forces

Another cause for the disintegration of Rome was the breakdown of the old political forces which made for the unity of the empire. To unselfishly serve the state was the highest privilege. Patriotism was the inspiration of the people. This gave way to divisions. The once great state became a nation of plebeians and patricians. The slaves were brutalized, and sank into unparalleled degradation. The surfeited rich gave themselves over to unmen-tionable degeneracy. How well this fits into our own history to-day.

The fourth contributing cause to the overthrow of Rome was the breakdown of its laws as to marriage. We talk glibly about divorce, but this again is only a symptom. The disease lies much deeper. Divorce is but an effect. To deal with the effect and ignore the cause is abortive. No real physician would do this. A surgeon would not be so unwise. Should a scientist be so illogical he would be locked up for the safety of the community.

We need education rather than legislation—self-discipline before restraint. Legislation has never moralized a race. It may temporarily hold in leash the onrushing flood of passion, but education and self-discipline are essential to the exaltation of the people. Penalization is seldom reformatory. It may protect society. It does not regenerate.

The Evil of Moving Pictures

Let me here speak of the moving pictures. The tendency is to hold the war or the movies or the dance hall responsible for every moral infraction or unprecedented lapse. If a man gets up in the morning cross-grained and ill-tempered, his wife may attribute it to the demoralization of the war, or to the movies, but I suggest that she has another guess coming. As a matter of fact the war is not responsible for many of these things. The war in itself was only an effect of an anterior cause. I grant that the war was in itself a cause for many unusual things; but on the other hand, there are very many evils in the world to-day for which the war is not even remotely responsible. They were here before the war. We must go farther back than the war to locate the cause.

The war does register the breaking down of the old order of society. It was God saying, "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin"—There was written across the sky where all could read: "God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it. Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided." The selfish purposes, the narrow partisanship, the clannish interests, the sordid aspirations for self must give way to the larger purposes of life. Man shall not longer live for himself alone. Nations can no longer live of themselves. We are forced to accept the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man or perish from the earth.

As in all past epochs in human history, the breakdown of the old order disturbs moral standards. Pain is an element of birth as well as of death. Carnage may, and does, register the passing of the old. It may herald the advent of the new.

The war has made possible the rebirth of nations—a readjustment of the social order, but whether this materializes depends on those who survive. Vicarious service avails nothing unless the thing for which men die become the practical realization of those who still live. If we who live have not yet learned the causes of carnage, then we must have recurrent wars until we do. War will continue until men adjust their lives in harmony with divine fellowship.

Forces Which Disrupt the Home

There are many things in our modern life which disturb the home. We need only to go back to the experiences of our forefathers to understand what great changes have taken place. There was an absolute necessity for interdependence of family life. They had no theaters, no automobiles in which to go out and spend the evening; no motion pictures, no public dances save the "country meet" once or twice a month. It was not difficult to retain the normal home relation, but in just a few years there has come a mighty revolution; and as a result of the magnificent gifts to men of invention and mechanical creation we have been projected into an entirely new experience and one for which we have not been prepared, either socially or morally.

I wish to speak of the prostitution of marriage. I would talk of the prostitution inside rather than outside wedlock, for prostitution within the home is far more destructive of the home than even prostitution outside the home. Everywhere prostitution out of wedlock is recognized as illegitimate. It is decried. Yet ministers close their eyes to the evils within the home which are sapping its very life. We give divine sanction to the union of individuals who are wholly unfit and unsuited for married life, and all this in the name of the church. Professional men in the ministry and as physicians are silent in the face of this great tragedy. And why?

They would be execrated and driven from their positions if they would speak the truth. Society as it is now constituted would have no such indictment. Ah, but you say, "If they are men of God, if they are men of science, they should fearlessly decry evil without regard to the cost." It is easy thus to speak. The man who would dare tell all the truth as he sees it would suffer martyrdom as did Jesus of Nazareth.

Only One Thing Will Sanctify Marriage

There is only one thing which can sanctify marriage. It has its concomitants of course, but it is spelled in just four letters, L-O-V-E. No minister of this church, if he be true to the idealism of the church, will even presume to invoke the sanction of God on the nuptials of a man or woman, unless he is satisfied in his own mind that the impelling force is that of love. It seems such desecration, such an ignoble thing, for a minister of the gospel to use his office to give sanction to the union of man or woman unless he feels that it meets with approval of God. Marriage is a divine ordinance, as is baptism. We demand that those who come forward for baptism shall bring forth fruit meet for repentance. Shall we not ask that men who ask the sanction of the church in the holy bond of matrimony give evidence of their preparation and fitness for the authorization of the church? I sincerely think so.

The Bible teaches that a man shall leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife and none else. Cleave! Cleave! C-L-E-A-V-E! He shall hold to his wife. He should be drawn to her as the magnet to the pole. There should be something in her life that instinctively impels his confidence and trust. This should be reciprocal on her part. This is the only basis of true marriage. When people really love each other and enter the marriage state with love as the true basis of relationship, having prepared themselves for the responsibilities of this new relationship, your divorce mills will quit for lack of work to do. Without this relationship preachers prostitute their calling in officiating in the marriage ceremony.

What is the real attitude of the church? Are we sufficiently loyal to Jesus Christ when we see the home being desecrated to speak out against the evils which exist? Have we the courage of our convictions? Will we run to cover whilst our Master is being crucified in the house of his friends? No; let us be men, and declare that from henceforth we as ministers of the church will not give our sanction to any marriage unless the contracting parties show a spiritual, moral, social, and physical bill of health.

A Divine Institution

I am not here to condemn any man or to pronounce judgment. God knows that all men need our sympathy and love, but I would arouse our people to the awfulness of our present prostitution. There is something more in the sacrament of marriage than even the love of a man for his wife or a woman for her husband. If marriage is ever to become more than a mere civil institution, we must recognize that it was instituted by God. And what for? Was it so that some men could secure a good cook, or that a woman might be supplied with a comfortable home? Is that the idea of marriage as we gather it from the Bible? Is this the purpose of marriage? You say no. Let me ask, Is this not generally the underlying impulse among men and women to-day? We cannot ignore this fact. How can you have a home worth while under such circumstances? How can the home be perpetuated when selfishness sways and passion rules?

Where do we stand? Is passion greater than the Almighty? Are we to follow our own purpose, or shall we rally to the divine slogan and insist that marriage was the first institution and the provisions for it couched in these words, "Leave father and mother and cleave unto thy wife and to none else." And the function of this relation was to "multiply and replenish the earth." The man or woman who steps aside from the busy affairs of life and pledges fidelity to each other must know that marriage is a sacrament as sacred and divine as the Lord's Supper. Wedlock is a trust, imposed by the Almighty, and it is asked of everyone who enters to leave behind the things which destroy and wreck and to subordinate self to mutual purpose. If right relations always existed, both before and at the time of birth, a revolution would be wrought in the race.

A Divine Birthright

It should be the studied purpose of parties to it that every child born to them is in very deed created in the image of God. Every child has the right to be born aright. It must be born not of passion, but of love. But let us not linger here. A civilization which will allow a mother to go to work when she ought to be at home with her children is sure to go down. It is doomed. Why, heathens have done better than this! Nations, long before they laid claim to religion, deified motherhood and placed such protection around the mother that she could be with and care for her children. You cannot have a race worth while without the real mother impulse. You cannot preserve the race if the mothers are forced to the treadmills of industry when they ought to be with their children.

And to the mothers of the church let me say, You cannot do your duty to your children if you spend all your time in attending committee meetings or department gatherings, while your children are running the streets. I do not say that the woman's place is in the home, but I do say the home is out of gear when the mother is not in active oversight. You might as well expect to have an ideal heaven without God as to expect to have a home worth while without having it presided over by a real red-blooded mother.

Women in the olden day had to do much that was unpleasant. They had no freedom, no privilege. They were mere chattels. The freedom of any race of people must be determined by the privilege which is accorded to women. Thank God the day has passed when women are to be relegated to menial servitude. The mothers of the race should have every privilege of expression. She should be honored and respected. She should have the right to determine when she will assume the duties of maternity. This should not be forced upon her.

Economics and the Home

One of the prolific causes for divorce is the economic problem. You are my witnesses. The economic problem is vital. Men expect the wife to stint and save and the women are clamorous that the husband shall be a good provider. And out of this misunderstanding grows and separation ensues. The whole economic system in the world is anathema with God. We do wrong in attempting to patch it up or to prolong it. Some of our men suggest that we accept the situation as it is and try to make the best of it. Out with such heresy. In the days of old Israel, some there were who clamored to be like the nations round about. They wanted a king because others had a king. History relates what happened to these shortsighted conformists.

God has given to this church an economic program which, if adhered to, will give opportunity to all to enjoy the privileges and blessings which make for the abundant life. There are divine possibilities within the keeping of the law of Jesus Christ which will liberate the world. Under its provisions mothers would not have to be breadwinners. The woman who turns over to the state a reliable citizen and trustworthy man or woman has made her full contribution. Her hands should be free to give her attention to motherhood. It is a shortsighted state or church which does not appreciate such service and recompense accordingly.

What does the home mean to you? If the present economic program continue, then woe betide the home. Individualism—where every man is for himself and every man's hands is against his neighbor—has come to judgment. It must be overthrown ere we can hope for home as it ought to be.

American Family Life Unstable

A certain writer has said that family life in America is more unstable than it has been since the beginning of the Christian era. He expressed a fear that family life is passing and that monogamy is soon to be displaced by something else. In some ways I share his fears. Monogamy is in the balance. What the next state will be it will take a prophet to foretell. We have had polygamy. We have had polyandry. The Mormons of Utah practice polygyny. Polygamy means many wives or many husbands as the case may be. Polygyny means one husband and several wives. Polyandry means one wife and several husbands. The laws of the several States say that monogamy must be observed.

The will of the people is largely changing from this standard. The frequency of divorce, the manner in which flagrant infractions of the law is winked at, is evidence that the present system is breaking down. What will we substitute in the place of monogamy? Let us recall Rome and become sane. At the present rate we are going it will only be the question of a few years, a half-century at most, when we will be in the same condition that Rome was in, or worse.

What are we going to do about it? Sit still and let it go on? Will we be cowards in the face of this threatening danger? No, if we are worthy the name of Jesus Christ we will be unafraid. We will cry out and spare not. We will reiterate the divine plan. We will stand by the truth, let the consequences be what they may.

We have too many meetings in Independence. We have too many church departments which are demanding too much of our time. If the mothers in Independence would attempt to give attention to all that is going on, they would have no time to devote to their children at all. The Department of Women deserves much credit for the work accomplished, but it would be shortsighted indeed to draw on the time and energy of the mothers so as to take them away from imperative home duties in order to carry on department work. The home comes first. The home is the unit in all social progress. The home must not be neglected, even to serve the church.

Back to the Home

Back to the home, I say. Back to that home which God established where a man loves his wife—loves her with all the enthusiasm of a holy and sanctified passion—with all the devotion of heroic courage and respect—loves her, not for what she gives him, not for what she does for him, but loves her for what she is. A man who marries a woman for what she does for him or gives to him is selfish. He is worse. He outrages woman. A man who truly loves a woman loves her for what he sees in her—loves her for her virtues, her goodness, her charms. And as he contemplates her he says, I will devote my life so that I may be worthy of her virtue and purity and goodness; I will so live that I may qualify as the father of her children. And when the man does this then the real woman will look upon him and love his courage and manhood. She will find in him a protector, one who embodies her idea of strength, or virtue and kindly prowess. And these two, hand in hand, can rightly stand at the marriage altar and before high heaven plight their troth to each other. They can ask and receive divine blessing.

Fellow ministers, let me ask you as men of God, do not discredit this holy sacrament by ever giving your support or sanction to a marriage unless you feel in your own soul that each party to the covenant brings to the altar the perquisites for divine sanction. Why should we for a paltry few dollars lend our support to the union of a man and woman unless we know that they are worthy to assume this holy relationship?

Let us glorify marriage. Let us bring our boys and girls to realize the seriousness of this relation. Let us impress them with the fact that parenthood is the most responsible and sacred trust. It is for us to create such an ideal in the minds of our boys and girls that they will be stimulated to the best rather than be subjected to the worst.

What We Would Have in the Church Must First Be Put in the Home

It has been said that what we would put into the church or the national life we must first put into the life of the home. For nearly a century we as a church have been giving primary attention to missionary work. I would not have you lessen your ardor to convert men and women to the truth of Jesus Christ, but it seems to me that the gospel has a preventive application as well as a remedial. It is as much our duty to save our children from becoming sinners as it is to spend of our energy to convert others from the ways of sin.

We must not only be parents of children, but we must be parents to children. We must know them mentally, physically, spiritually. We must bear in mind that they are the greatest of imitators. Their eyes and ears miss very little. It was Doctor Calm A. Scott who said:

It is not the child of six who sits at the table and listens—it is a human spirit, eager, curious, and wondering, surrounded by mysteries, willingly taking in what it does not understand to-day, but which will take possession of it next year and become a torch to light it on its way. It is through association with older people that those fructifying ideas come to a child; it is through such talk that he finds the world he is to possess.

How necessary it is therefore that each family has its quiet hour daily when all other cares are put away and where together they may assemble as a family group there to discuss the experiences of the day. At this time there should be no restraint but each, young and old, should feel the utmost freedom of expression. It is at this time when the parents can use their powers to unite the family forces and direct them towards a unified purpose.

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.—Franklin.

Sobriety

By H. E. Moler

"Let us be more reverent in assembling for worship in the house of God."

Let us watch and be sober.—1 Thessalonians 5: 6.
That they may teach the young women to be sober . . . young men likewise exhort to be sober.—Titus 2: 4-6.
Be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.—1 Peter 4: 7.

Surely there must have been a great reason for these apostolic exhortations. The Saints to whom they wrote were engaged in a great work. They were required to "Love the Lord their God with all their hearts, and with all their minds, and with all their souls." This obligation was so important that it could not be treated lightly.

The great things of this life are achieved by men and women of sober minds, not by the frivolous and careless. This being true of success in temporal things, it cannot be less true of success in spiritual things. In the everyday affairs of life we continually encounter problems that demand our most serious and thoughtful consideration; and the more sober our consideration, the greater our chances of success, or possibilities of good results. So in the performance of our duties unto the most high God, and in the preparation for the life everlasting, we cannot afford to be otherwise than most serious and deeply in earnest.

There are those who think that sobriety and gravity are required of our older church members, but not of the young. But such a conclusion certainly is not justified by the texts above quoted, neither is any such a distinction found anywhere in the word of God. Sobriety is especially enjoined upon young men and young women. It is sad to realize that it is often the case that if a girl or boy show an inclination to be sober-minded and serious they are looked upon as being either mentally or physically defective, or both. That if they are not inclined to run after the frivolous things of the world, they are regarded as being odd and queer, and as persons to be shunned; or, at best, to be merely endured. Some teachings I have listened to have a very discouraging effect upon those who are inclined to be pious, and serve to encourage frolic and light-mindedness. Why not encourage and commend those who are sedate and serious, especially when we discover that it brings them closer to God? Why not point to them as examples for others?

It is a mistake to conclude that there can be no happiness or joy without levity or mirth, and equally as erroneous to believe that there is no happiness in sobriety.

Mirth and levity make us thoughtless and careless, and the more indulged in, the greater is our attitude of unconcern regarding the things that pertain to the higher life. Men, as a rule, do not laugh when they are considering serious matters, but become very sober. The reason is apparent. In a sober state of mind they can do much more effective thinking.

Jesus said: "Every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment."—Matthew 12: 36.

No comment is necessary. The language of the Master is too clear to be misunderstood. There is no possible grounds for indulgence in idle or frivolous talk.

True, we can make our own choice, but we cannot escape the consequences. Solomon says: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment."—Ecclesiastes 11: 9.

Certainly, go ahead and do as you please, if you are determined so to do, but there is no escaping judgment.

Paul said: "Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks."—Ephesians 5: 4.

Let us be admonished by commands God has given to us in this last dispensation.

Cast away your idle thoughts and your excess of laughter.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 19.

Cease from all your light speeches, and from all laughter.—Ibid., 85: 37.

Not with much laughter, for this is sin—Ibid., 59: 4.

There is no need of misunderstanding the foregoing. Laughter may not always be sin, but if indulged in to excess there is danger of its becoming sin.

All Saints agree that Jesus is our great example. In the history of his earth life it is nowhere stated that he laughed; but more than once is it recorded that "he wept."

Joy and happiness can be without excess of laughter; and laughter is not always an indication of real happiness. Great joy often abounds where there is an entire absence of laughter.

The foregoing thoughts should be considered by all Saints everywhere and every day, but let us consider the need of a greater reverence and deeper solemnity when we assemble in the places set apart for the worship of God. In many places we sometimes find our own dear people very thoughtless in their attitude and conversation when they have assembled for divine worship. Loud and boisterous talking, jesting, and laughter are sometimes witnessed, and the children are allowed to run and romp, up to the very time for the opening of service, and sometimes the leader must call for quietude the second or third time before he is heard or heeded. This is not due to willfulness on the part of our people, but rather to thoughtlessness, and the sin of neglect. If we make proper preparation beforehand by prayer and meditation, we will enter the house of God with solemn, quiet reverence, and with that worshipful mood that will remind us of the purpose of our coming together, and will keep our thoughts on holy things and make us forgetful for the time of worldly things. We should come together with the expectation of meeting our heavenly Father, through the presence of his Spirit, and our children should be taught to come together with that same expectation. If we could only get a glimpse of God in his glory, power, and majesty in our places of meeting, there would be no light speeches or jesting, but the most solemn reverence and holy fear instead. Then why not be just as solemn and thoughtful when we are expecting to meet God by the presence of his Spirit.

There have been times when we had reason to believe that the Spirit was grieved and withdrew because of the lack of seriousness and prevalence of light-mindedness. May God help us to be more sober.

Believe me when I tell you that thrift of time will repay you in after life with a usury of profit beyond your most sanguine dreams, and that waste of it will make you dwindle alike in intellectual and moral stature beyond your darkest reckoning.—Gladstone.

Members of the faculty and students of Graceland College are enrolled in at least six different universities for summer school work this year; namely, State University of Iowa, Iowa City; State Teachers' College, Cedar Falls; Iowa State College at Ames; also the University of Colorado; Chicago University; and Northwestern University. President G. N. Briggs, of Graceland College, is in attendance at the University of Chicago.

Considerable work has been done in interpreting the hieroglyphs of the Mayas. We just note that under the direction of Doctor Luis Castillo Ledon, Doctor Ramon Mena, and Doctor Pedro M. Elias have been making considerable study of the pictographs of the Nahua priesthood. The only words so far deciphered are the nouns and names of towns, according to an article in the Christian Science Monitor.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Bible in Kansas City Public Schools

The desk of each teacher in the school in Kansas City, Missouri, has on it (or in it perhaps in the case of some teachers) a readable copy of the Bible which she is allowed to read to the pupils daily but must not seek to explain. According to the Sunday School Times, which tells of how this happened, about 1,460 Bibles were thus placed on the desks of the Kansas City public schools.

This is the result of the activities of a group of men in Kansas City known as the Noon Prayer Meeting. They prayed that the Lord would open the way for this step, then forthwith went about seeing that it was done. They formulated some points in a written message, to the effect that the ladder by which we have climbed to our present civilization has been kicked from us in discarding the book upon which our code of morals and laws was founded. They further state that the gods which were the ruination of the Greeks and the Romans are now taught and exploited in our public schools, to the ruination of our children. It is but natural that they should further state that the Bible is the only revelation of God and of Jesus Christ his Son, not knowing of any other revelations, but the principle of their appeal is good. The board of education finally reached a unanimous decision to allow the placing of the Bibles.

The prayer group paid the expenses of purchasing and delivering the Bibles. Reports are that the teachers are generally using them, especially in the high schools.

A Pledge to the New Patriotism

[Eugene Christy has sent us the following pledge which he states is distributed by Frank P. Johnson at the close of his lecture. He sends it because of its similarity to the declared position of our church.—EDITORS.]

To this day that is mine, my country's and my God's, I dedicate my all. My talents, every one, shall be held subject to the sight draft of the emergencies of others. I will enlarge my soul by cultivating love for those against whom I feel myself recoiling. No man shall ever feel his caste in my presence, for within my heart there shall be no consciousness of it. The man who has fallen will find in me a friend, the woman down—a helper. And more than this: Those falling shall have my trust that they may still stand. The cry of every child shall find my heart, whether it be cry of need or aspiration. Cherishing every life of whatever land or race and mindful of hidden struggles, in all things I will strive to help. No word shall ever cross my lips that hurts another in face, form, station, or estate. My own weaknesses, foibles, sins, shall chasten speech and spirit and deny me pride. My life shall be a dedicated thing; I shall count it desecration to pervert it. The vandal hands of lust and hate and greed shall not be permitted to despoil. And thus I do resolve—not because I am good, but that I want to be; not because I am strong, but that I fear weakness; not that I feel myself above others, but that with all my heart and soul and strength I long to be of humankind both helped and helper. So do I dedicate my days; so do I set apart my culture; so do I receive but to give again to others; so do I press humbly into the presence of the Sacrificial Son of Man, crying out in larger consecration: "Master, let me follow thee. Wherever the world needs ministry, wherever life is still to be given for the many, help me, thou whose manger cradle brought democracy to life, to meet in my own worth democracy's final test, and to my own great day be true."—Charles S. Medbury, Des Moines, Iowa.

Scientists Reject Darwinian Theory

In 1889 Professor Virchow, of Berlin, said:

In vain have the links which should bind man to the monkey been sought; not a single one is there to show.

Ten years later this foremost anthropologist of modern times said:

The attempts to find the transition from animal to man have ended in total failure. The middle link has not been found and never will be.

Doctor Etheridge, the learned fossilologist of the British Museum, is quoted thus:

Nine tenths of the talk of evolutionists is sheer nonsense, not founded on observation and wholly unsupported by fact. This museum is full of proofs of the utter falsity of their views.

Professor L. S. Beale, of Kings College, London, asserts:

There is no evidence that man has descended from, or is, or was, in any way specially related to any other organism in nature through evolution or by any other process. In support of any naturalistic conjectures concerning man's origin, there is not at this time a shadow of scientific evidence.

Professor Fleishmann, of Erlangen, says of the Darwinian theory:

It has in the realm of nature not a single fact to confirm it. It is not the result of scientific research, but purely the product of the imagination.

From an address on "The present state of the problem of evolution," given by Professor M. Caullery, at Harvard University, February 24, 1916, and published by the Smithsonian Institution, I quote this:

And it comes to pass that some of the biologists of greatest authority in the study of Mendelian heredity are led, with regard to evolution, either to more or less complete agnosticism, or to the expression of ideas quite opposed to those of the preceding generation; ideas which would almost take us back to creationism.

This does not sound as if evolution were a scientifically established certainty universally accepted by scholarship.—J. M. Sjordahl, in article on "Signs of the times" in The Juvenile Instructor for June, 1922.

Practical Brotherhood

In the Bowery in New York City the Y. M. C. A. have established a dormitory where a man, if he is not drunk, violent, or a manifest panhandler, can find a stopping place. He is given a simple but substantial meal, then strips and takes a hot and cold shower, and if necessary, a hair cut and shave. A doctor examines him to see if he has any contagious disease. If so, adequate hospital treatment is furnished. If not, he is given a clean night shirt and bed in a well planned dormitory. While he sleeps, his underclothing and linen, if he has any, is washed and ironed; his outer clothing is fumigated, repaired, and pressed by a competent tailor. When he wakes in the morning, all of his clothing is by him in order. After breakfast, he is told that this is not charity, as it is charged to his account and he is expected to pay it when able. Ninety-six per cent of all the bills thus charged are ultimately paid.

When he gets steady work, perhaps with the help of their employment agency, he is urged to move into a private room in order to make room for others who need the quarters. This is an evidence of practical brotherhood as reported in a recent number of The Outlook.

Education Is in Doing Things

One reason perhaps why there are so many Christians and so little Christianity is the habit of church-going and listening to sermons.

To attend a church service, to hear the music and look at the stained glass, to follow the prayers in the book and the preacher's homily may easily become a sort of a bad habit.

That is to say, we may get into the way of assuming that this sort of thing is religion. It is no more religion than the taking of plenty of food is health. Food is health only in proportion as we translate it into vigor by good digestion and exercise.

The real and usable morality we acquire is that

THE SEMINAR

The Crowd Mind

By Ralph W. Farrell

To think and act with the crowd may lead to disaster. The hope for us as individuals is in creative thought, always keeping our heads.

Who has not felt the fascination of a crowd? I recall the first large gathering of people I witnessed. It was at the time Roosevelt spoke in the Arena of Boston. Thousands of people stormed the doors for entrance. I live it again—the jam, the sweat, the swaying back and forth, and with it all the good nature manifest everywhere. And I live again that experience which was mine in a riot at the time of the Philadelphia car strike. I feel again the policeman's club as he attempted to press me back against an unrushing mob of thousands of men. I told him that I was not a striker, so he let me pass. But the air seemed charged with electrical power. Everything was strained and men's faces wore a look that cannot be adequately described.

And next in interest to witness a mob, is the study of one. In fact, there are valuable lessons to be learned from the study of crowd psychology; not that the textbooks are perfect, but that they contain sufficient truths to start the student along the right line of thought, provided he keeps his head and studies with the desire to learn, that he may benefit his fellow men.

Le Bon says that a crowd is "a state of mind"; not a mere aggregation of people. To turn an assembly into a "crowd" is to infect that assembly with something that stirs the emotions beyond the control of the reason. There are different stages of this emotionalism, running the gamut from hypnotic attention to shouting out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians"; or, "Let him be crucified." If a crowd always responded favorably to good influences, no harm would result; but such is not often the case, and for this reason no man is fully educated until he is capable of detecting the wild bubbling forth of what some have called the prim-which we acquire by overcoming, not by receiving; that which we acquire by utilizing our moral principles in the give and take of life, and not that which we get morally by hearing moral precepts recited from the pulpit.

There is more education in one thing done than there is in a thousand things listened to.

The place to learn navigation is on a ship. The place to learn soldiering is in war. The place to learn business is in the market. The place to learn botany is in the field. So also the place to learn those underlying laws of life which we call morality and religion is in the midst of affairs; in the complex actualities of family life, and amidst the hard facts of the business world.

It is only thus we become spiritual athletes.

The Word is of no particular use or vitality until the Word is made flesh and dwells among us.—Doctor Frank Crane, in Current Opinion for May.

itive herd instincts. When an audience has lost its power to think as individuals, then true and valuable discussion ceases. The mass of humanity may be moving towards some point, but it is not receiving profitable instruction; and the sooner the meeting is adjourned the better it is for all concerned. The Lord may have been thinking of this state of affairs when he said that without the Spirit man should not teach. The demagogue does not teach by the spirit of good; his mission is to agitate unwisely. The anarchist never influenced his audience to hurl a bomb until he had first bereft his tools of reason and moved them as one body impulsed by hate or imagined wrong.

Appeal to Reason and Emotion

Who but Shakespeare could have created the speech which Mark Antony used in the great play "Julius Cæsar"? When the emotions of selfishness and hate were inflamed to the combustion point, the crowd moved to do the very thing which before their reason had told them they ought not do. It is all very marvelous, this play on the feelings of humanity; and, when we consider the matter carefully, we do not wonder that the old elders of our church were constantly reiterating such caution as this, "I appeal to your intelligence." But the interesting fact is that they did not wholly appeal to the brain of their listeners, for had not the heart been touched no conversions would have followed; still this "appeal to reason," as made by them, was the safer course, and persons who received their message did not turn back to the beggarly elements of the world in so large a percentage as Billy Sunday's converts. It is safe to say that there is little of the "crowd atmosphere" that fans the brain of a Latter Day Saint audience, as a rule; but the exception might do sufficient damage to justify us in studying some of the symptoms of this phenomenon. For it is to be borne in mind that the most intelligent audiences can be so worked on as to be caused to react as a crowd; and nothing but harm can come from a body of people moving under the influence of forces that are sinister.

The crowd mind will applaud and vote for a measure which, in calmer and more rational attitude of mind, it would denounce and vote down. If there be any place where reason should have its perfect sway and calm, dispassionate judgment predominate, it is in a business meeting of members who are doing work for the kingdom of God. But how often we have felt that certain persons voted for certain measures simply because So-and-So voted that way. Or some irrelevant sentiment had moved the voter. Or possibly (but we hate to think it) the delegate was moved by prejudice, or even spite. God has given us our free moral agency and he will never force us to vote either way. It behooves a delegate to be alert mentally and to vote intelligently, unmoved by the baser passions (if there be such) and moved by his understanding of the evidence submitted, irrespective of whether the speaker be an apostle, the president of the church, or some humble woman who might for the occasion be specially blessed to say just the right thing at the right time. And if, after both sides have been heard, a delegate is still in doubt, he should humbly and earnestly pray to God to direct his choice.

Beecher's Experience in England

If the reader will pardon me for having made a sort of application of my subject before it is hardly introduced, I will resume the thread of the theme. Men interested in the psychology of the crowd will never tire of referring to Beecher's remarkable experience before a vilely prejudiced audience in England. I doubt that Mr. Beecher has studied much about psychology, as modernly interpreted, but he possessed rare natural ability, much enlarged by experience.

In the year 1863 this great pulpit orator visited England. This trip was not undertaken at the instance of the United States Government, as has been erroneously supposed. He went for the benefit of his health. He found that the upper and middle classes in that country were in favor of the South, and Mr. Beecher availed himself of every opportunity to express his indignation at the clergy, who had thrown their sympathy on the side of slavery. Everywhere he went there were demands for him to speak, but he refused as often as asked. However, something occurred which changed his resolve; it was the move on foot to turn the lower classes from their adherence to the cause of liberty. He finally consented to speak at Manchester. He knew what he was to face, but fear had no place in the creed of Henry Ward Beecher. The address was delivered in the Free Trade Hall. As soon as Mr. Beecher appeared the scene baffled description; the cheering, hissing, stamping, clapping, shouting, and groaning shook the hall almost to its foundation.

Thomas Knox has told us something about it in his Life of Beecher. We can do no better than read the account given in chapter 8. One paragraph reads:

"He arose, a carefully prepared manuscript in his hand, and had got as far as 'Mr. Chairman,' when the cries of approval and disapproval burst forth anew. Ever quick at noting the temper of his audience, he quickly responded to the groans and hisses of his opponents by tossing his manuscript aside, and then set himself down to a regular fight. For two hours he was on his feet. At the outset he had noticed that his earnest sympathizers and opponents were about evenly matched in point of numbers, so he decided therefore, not to address himself directly to either of these, but to endeavor to impart instruction and bring conviction to the large number who did not possess strong feeling either way."

"With quick retort and ready repartee, he gazed on his audience calmly and determinedly, replying to questions hurled at him, smiling and laughing outright at ludicrous interruptions, patiently waiting the subsidence of tumult," etc.

It is needless to add that Mr. Beecher won. As he was leaving the hall he was congratulated on all sides. One big burly Englishman, some distance away, wanted to shake hands with him, but could not get near him on account of the crowd. Reaching over the heads of the people, he held out his umbrella and called out, "Shake my umbrella!" Mr. Beecher did so, and the man shouted, "By jove, nobody shall touch that umbrella again!"

We learn from this experience that it is possible not only to create the mob mind, but also to unmake it; for Mr. Beecher faced a hostile audience at the start, but with rare patience, good humor, tact, and determination, he brought individual thinking to the front. For discussions of intense difference can go on intelligently so long as the speaker does not indulge in generalities or time-worn forms of expression. Anything which savors of ritualism, "bits of bathos in rhythmical cadences and platitudinous terms," will often cause a most intelligent audience to react as a crowd. Even "tenets" may be discussed with interest if the method of treatment is kept free from crowd-making stuff. But this would not hold good on every occasion.

Speaker and Crowd Both Influenced

It is interesting to observe that the speaker himself is strongly influenced by the "crowd" which he has created. He waxes bold and possibly defiant. He defies the laws, damns the president of his government, and swept on by a probably sincere belief in the righteousness of his cause, he makes much of little things, and his message becomes a recital of abstract principles. To hold the "interest" of this "mob" he must indulge in the luxury of talking about things which require little, if any, thought by his hearers. As I said, it is an appeal to emotion. There is no weighing of facts. To be sure, many an audience after listening to such harangues will remark, almost to a man (but, thank the Lord, there are a few exceptions): "What a wonderful sermon!" And straightway they go off and forget everything that was said, even if they ever did know what was said. Such is the frailty of the thing called mind. For this reason it may be that Isaiah wrote, "Come, let us reason together." And Paul: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Both instructions involve a mental process. But how few among us are willing to undergo the wear and tear of original thinking!

Listening a Lost Art

I wonder sometimes whether or not the art of listening intelligently is not becoming a lost art. Congregations want to be entertained; they ask for short sermons lest their brain capacity be overtaxed; they think that the minister who succeeds in touching the well of emotion and drawing therefrom a few tears is by far a better preacher than the pastor who shuns not to declare unto his listeners "all the counsel of God"; who keeps "back nothing that is profitable." The house of God is not a place to afford amusement. The sermon is to instruct, exhort, reprove, rebuke, encourage; but never to amuse, nor to play so much on the emotions that the brain will be lulled into the sleep of carnal security.

Serious-minded men have been pained as well as amused when listening to the praise of a congregation which has been strongly influenced by the crowd spirit. It has taken in nothing that will really influence towards better living. No great truth has been learned. As one of my friends has often expressed it, "It is all nothing!" To the point, I recall a sermon given long, long ago. It was a terribly hot night in August. The sermon hour was spent in an "oration" on hell. Copious extracts were read from Catholic writers about infants' brains boiling in the pit of heat. Thinking men turned away in disgust. The "crowd" said, "How wonderful!" Great is reputation. Great is nonsense. Little is truth. Yet, as Emerson said, though it is ever born in a manger, it will live till it has all souls for its kingdom.

"Herd Impulse" Unnecessary Term

Martin thinks that the "crowd mind consists, therefore, first of all, of a disturbance of the function of the real. The crowd is the creature of Belief." Martin does not agree with Le Bon, in everything concerning the subject before us; but Martin thinks that every man has repressed in his bosom savagism, the primitive feeling, and that crowd impetus lets this loose, and swayed by emotions only we become like a stampeding herd. Personally, I see no need of all this talk about the savage instinct, the impulse of the herd, etc., in order to explain mob psychology, for I believe that the brain was just as fully developed in Adam as his emotion of love or fear. Instincts did not evolve from nothing. My love for my child did not evolve from a monkey's love for his child—but I must be careful not to deal in platitudes lest I create a crowd mind in my readers.

Seeing things alike is good if our seeing is based on some intelligently discerned truth. Unity of belief is not always safe, unless that unity is the result of belief of true principles. Two persons, moved by hate, "get their heads together" and seek to plant in the emotions of others some mischievous idea. It may be an attack on the pastor. It may be an attempt to "get back" at some one who stands in the way. Rapidly this idea finds response in the hearts of others and we have a demonstration of the mob mind or consciousness outside of a gathered mass of people. Facts that bear on the situation really play no part in the minds of men and women inspired with a desire to gain a point irrespective of law and order. These people may be called "plot-hatchers," "scandal-mongers," "lawbreakers," "mischief-makers on a large scale." It is well to note that this pernicious condition can be brought about outside of large gatherings. Even the privacy and sanctity of the home is often invaded by this destructive spirit.

Lynching Mob Demonstrates Hate

And to show you how it works, I cite the lynching of the Negro. The real motive of the lynchers is not to avenge the death of the girl victim, although the crowd thinks this is the case; the real motive is to give vent to hate under the guise of vindicating honor. There is little "honor" in the hand that lights a fire to burn to death a fellow being, it matters not what crime he has committed. The mob which does this thing is temporarily insane. If not it would see that the very safety of its homes depends on the upholding of the law which is thrown to the winds. When the tables are turned the lawbreaker cannot consistently invoke the law in his defense. So the Master said, "Whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do ye likewise unto them." For he that sows to the wind shall of the whirlwind reap damnation. That building which rests on sand will fall upon the head of its builder. Touching these things Jesus was frequently cautioning, "Take heed!"

Then cometh, often, the reaction. After the heat of the battle men become men once more. And if there remain any good in people who have forgotten themselves in the frenzy of crowd hysteria, these persons feel remorse. There is the haunting suspicion that the one crucified by them was a godly man, an innocent victim. As one writer puts it: "After it is all over, the persons who have thus relapsed come to their reason, repress the old animal desire, and feel ashamed. The voter 'loses interest.' The convert in the revival 'backslides.' Men come to their senses. Fiery patriots realize that they do not hate their enemies half so much as they thought was the case."

Zion Outgrowth of Consecrated Lives

I am glad that the Great Teacher put the birth of water first, for there is hope for us who have been baptized that some day, if we run lawfully, we may enjoy the birth of the Spirit. Thinking men know that the call of the hour is for twice-born men—men and women who are really converted, for from such only can the Lord Almighty get such service as will redeem Zion. Certainly the redemption of Zion is not to be the outcome of temples and large stores and much land, for these things are to be the outgrowth of consecrated lives. (However, all these things will be necessary to the complete upbuilding of Zion.) Had the rich man truly been born again he would not have turned away sorrowing.

Some "Soothsayers" Among Us?

So in every organization, the church by all means included, are some who believe as crowds. They do not think for themselves. They are moved almost wholly by sentimentality. Brother So-and-So is a good man because he prophesies. Such may be the case. Such may not be the case. Everything which Sister So-and-So says must be true because she enjoys, apparently, the gift of visions or dreams. Thus we have in some branches certain persons who are credited with much more wisdom than they actually possess—they are unconsciously posed as a sort of "soothsayers." If an elder preaches to suit these highly gifted creatures, his sermon is of God; but, alas, if his message does not suit them, it is of man or Satan. Many times the followers of these invisible leaders are swayed by the crowd spirit. Their actions are not based on the "law and the testimony." They are influenced by passion. Their favorite has been abused, he is a man of great wisdom, God is with him, his face reflects communion with deity. Therefore (you must not forget to add the therefore) such an one is right and all others are wrong. These reasoners (?) do not see the golden rule which God hangs before their vision; they do not consider the law which touches the matter. They are victims of an unscrupulous mind which has used every illegal device imaginable to keep his dupes from "coming to." Individual thinking, careful deliberation along lawful lines, is crushed by this process which is so sadly opposed to God's plan of free moral agency.

I would not be misunderstood: I believe that a person should feel as well as think. The emotion of love is as much a property of my soul as is thought. But we should not love as a mob. Love is as individual as thought. Loyalty of the mass is composed of loyalty of the units. Indeed, let us be moved to action by emotion plus reason based on proper concept of right. It is interesting to realize that the Lord deals with us as individuals. He said: "He that believeth shall be saved." "If any man will follow me." "Except a man be born again." With us it is one for all and all for one.

Cure Is Education in Thinking

Another aspect of this problem is this—repression of individual thinking, individual expression, results, sooner or later, in crowd thinking. At first a leader might consider that this condition is desirable, but it is not, for, as we have learned, he crowd really does not think; and while the policy of intimidation, coercion, suppression, might work for a season, the end would be disastrous. When this emotional tide begins to ebb or when it has washed out another channel, it will be seen that permanency based on rational construction is essential. This fact will be apparent when we add to it the other fact, that a cure for crowd manifestation is education—education concerning those things which are involved, plus the proper application of the knowledge possessed. There is little if any practical value in possessing an intense desire to do things if we do not know how to do them.

Everett Martin, in his interesting work, The Behavior of Crowds (a work I have tried to avoid, in a sense, so I might not truthfully be accused of simply penning a "book review"), gives this practical statement: "The first and greatest effort towards social redemption must be to free democracy from crowd-mindedness, by liberating our own thinking. The way out of this complex of crowd compulsion is the solitary part of self-analysis and intellectual courage. It is the way of Socrates, and Protagoras, of Peter Abelard, and Erasmus, and Montaigne, of Cervantes and Samuel Butler, of Goethe and Emerson, of Whitman and William James. People in crowds are not thinking together; they are not thinking at all, save as a paranoiac thinks. They are not working together; they are only sticking together."

Who could say the above better than Mr. Martin has said it? And he gives a warning voice, too. But comment is unnecessary. Another statement from him will be more to the point:

"I am sick of this oozing democracy. There must be something crystalline and insoluble left in democratic America. Somewhere there must be people with sharp edges that cut when they are pressed too hard; people who are still solid, who have impenetrable depths. They are the hope of democracy, these infusible ones. And this is the business of every educator who is not content to be a faker. What we need is not only more education, but a different kind of education. There is more hope in an illiterate community than in a high-school educated nation which reads nothing but trash and is fed upon advertising, newspapers, popular fiction, and propaganda."

Those Who Think Along Wrong Lines Dangerous

If we have followed the theme of this article carefully, and agree with it, we will disagree with the statement of Shakespeare that some men who think too much are dangerous. We prefer to modify it by adding these words: "Men who think much or little along wrong lines are dangerous." And just a word of warning about "sincerity." Let us welcome the honest thinker, for there is hope for him. If he is wrong, in time he may think himself into the right. But let us keep our eye on what is called "sincere crowd thinking." A crowd's logic leads to crowd behavior. The crowd deceives itself. Its real motive is not the one held before its eyes. Under the spell of its madness it justifies itself in doing a wrong thing by thinking that it vindicates some sacred principle. There is no place for crowd thinking in a general conference or a branch business meeting. In order that we may get at the crux of the matter, God has provided quorums, in which groups may carefully discuss important matters. Free from heat, which always stultifies proper judgment, men may dissect and put together great problems. In such favorable environment, if humble desire be present, godly conclusions are reached and the cause of heaven is therefore vindicated. And the Lord of order has commanded that nothing shall be undertaken until prayer has created a proper atmosphere.

And it is sometimes necessary to invoke the blessed influence of prayer to banish the insidious and destructive menace of the crowd spirit which is constantly watching for opportunity to enter, as did Satan, to disturb the peace of the "sons of the morning."

Individuals Create

For this reason we can see the divine wisdom in establishing quorum assemblies; and the wisdom of God in imposing upon one man only the right to receive revelations for the government of the church. A body as such cannot create. There is but one perfect trinity. Committees appointed to draw up resolutions know how impossible it is for more than one member to furnish the real backbone of the message. Men cannot improve Shakespeare. Thomas Jefferson worked alone on that Immortal Document. Who but Christ could create the Sermon on the Mount? Bodies through their representatives have amended certain rules, but we see it was some one man who created the best resolution. And the vote should represent the view of the individual.

A conference of people, then, should "keep its head" (a very significant phrase). If it does this there will be no danger of any irrational action being done by it. Discussion should be carried on in such a manner as to conserve clear thinking. The call for the vote is not in a technical sense to determine the mind of the body but rather the mind of each individual which constitutes that body. Paul says, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

May that Spirit which baptizes us into one body so move upon us that as individuals we shall see eye to eye because we see only with an eye single to the glory of God.

An Appeal to the Youth of the Church

Youth is the time when the decisions, which lay the foundation for life and which determine the size and nature of the superstructure, are made. It is a time when one is least prepared by experience to make such important decisions. One of the decisions which must be faced this fall is: What shall be the extent of my education? Shall I enter high school? or is the elementary schooling all that I shall need in my foundation? Shall I enter college? or shall I limit my life's work by stopping with a high school education? How much education must I have?

Now is the time to make that decision. Few people go to school after they reach the age of thirty. In your youth is the time to prepare. YOUTH IS THE TIME WHEN A MAN EARNS LEAST WITH THE MOST EFFORT; AND LEARNS MOST WITH THE LEAST EFFORT. Those years spent in a specific industry tend to chain a man to that particular industry, whether he likes it or not. Those years spent in school tend to free a man to make the choice of occupation which he most desires. Too early specialization means a narrowed vision. Those early years spent in a liberal education mean a broad and comprehensive outlook.

Education is needed to build Zion and to prepare us to live therein. You, the youth of the church, are at the age where it pays to educate. The chance is yours. Ten years from now your youth will be gone. Five years from now you may not have the chance. Even one year may be too late. Youth is the time when the decisions which lay the foundation for life must be made. Youth of the church, your time is now.

Issued by

THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Women in Civic Life

The following brief sketch of the address of Miss Anne Gilday before the Independence Saints on March 7, was furnished us by Sister J. R. Sturges, president of the Laurel Club, which club sponsored Miss Gilday's lecture.)

We are living to-day in a great materialistic age, and there is the need for a great spiritual force to come forth and call a halt. We worship far too much the dollar; we are criticized as a nation for worshipping not the golden calf, but a whole herd. The old myth of Midas and the golden touch is true to-day, for every man who makes money-getting his ambition, becomes hardened of soul and sacrifices the finer things of life. There are a number of things that we must think about in different terms in this country of ours. In Europe, in the large and even smaller cities, when you look at the sky line, you see always a church spire, prominent to view, reaching heavenward, saying in its symbolic manner, "We put spiritual things first." Does the sky line of our great American cities reveal the symbolic church spire and building? Our sky line is made up of high business buildings, typical of money-getting. The Cathedral of Milan typifies very beautifully the higher aspects of life. We are in need of that great force that is to go out and clean up all this materialism. Shall women become that force?

Human life and human happiness are the greatest things in the world. That government is best which brings happiness to the greatest number of its citizens—considers the masses in preference to the privileged few. Everybody in America should have a right, a chance, an opportunity for the thing for which he struggles, the keenest thing in life for him—his home. Everybody is entitled to have his home comfortable and beautiful, and to give his children an education.

The old tradition is that woman's place is in the home, caring for her family; but in our age there are so many things necessary for the family that woman must go out and get them. Woman is the preserver of the race. She is also very persistent. When she begins a piece of work, it is very difficult to persuade her to let go. She is an expert on details. There are certain vital things that women must attend to—things that have to do with the children of the nation. She must go into politics for their sake. We have worked for thirty years to get certain child labor laws passed.

Women's clubs are great educators. When women learn to work together, to stay together, to forget personalities and deal with questions impersonally, and give and take, as club work requires, they are getting a good education. There is a little city in Washington, called North Waukeema, which is the most beautiful city in the United States. Every home stands in a garden. The women have made it beautiful. The touch of woman is needed to-day in every market, office, street, and city.

There are many things that women should work for, in most cities and towns. In the first place, do not be content to live in little, corporation-owned towns. Insist on having the things that you and your families need for their health and betterment. Pure water is the most important thing. Get pure water for your city, and you can have it without having the rates raised. Have a proper disposition of your garbage; provide public comfort stations; beautify your city hall and grounds and watch the political situation.

Some of the things that the women in Kansas City have accomplished are: They organized a loan agency department in the board of public welfare; they established a legal aid department in the board of public welfare; they cared for poor women during a year of depression; they procured a new home for the aged; they cleaned up Kansas City, every yard and vacant lot in the whole city being cleaned and made orderly by the women in two weeks. Are not women needed, then, to clean and beautify their cities?

I fear the tendencies of our age; I fear we are losing sight of the finer and higher things of life. God bless the good mothers of yesterday, who made it possible to bring us our big men and women of to-day. The old ways were not altogether wrong. They were fine and virile; and we must preserve all of these fine things and pass them on to the next generation, and give them just as fine manhood and citizenship as were given to us. Let us cultivate in our hearts that high spirituality, and let spiritual force triumph over the material things of life.

Food and Its Relation to the Physical and Mental Life of the Child

In order to understand thoroughly the relation of food to the body, let us first consider how the body is built.

"In building any kind of a structure it is necessary to consider the unit first. In the brick building the unit is the brick, and these bricks are placed together in such a way that they form the foundation and walls of the structure, each brick depending upon the other."

And so it is with all living structures—everything that has life.

The human body is built up of units or cells which are placed together in such a way that they form the tissues of the body, each depending upon the other. There are eight of these principal tissues—the bone, gristle, nerve, muscle, fiber, fat, skin, and connecting tissues. Each of these tissues must be fed by proper food, and what may feed one tissue may not feed another. So, it is necessary to have a balanced food.

God, with his wonderful power, has formed a natural way in which the babe is nourished, and all the scientists have never found a substitute perfectly to take the place of this natural nourishment with all its essential qualities. Thus it is vitally necessary not only for the prospective mother to have food that will give her baby a chance to be born as it should be and properly start it on the way to healthy development and growth, but the nursing mother as well should take into her body foods that will give to her child a nourishment that will properly feed every tissue of its little body.

When a very young child has decayed teeth, we know it is not so much the improper food it has had after the teeth appeared as that it was improperly nourished before and while the teeth were forming, and that time is before birth! How closely related, then, is the mother's food to the development of her child! As the teeth are forced through the gums and make their appearance, there must be ever at hand a sufficient supply of minerals and other substances to form a perfect tooth, or the teeth will soon decay when they come in contact with the acids of the mouth.

The most important time in the child's life is that period from birth (or long before, to speak truly) to two years of age. It is born with inert possibilities, which, with proper nourishment and care, it may develop by its own intuition and not from another's teaching. It will never be as busy in later life as it is in developing its natural gifts. The first thing it learns to do is to cry, long before its little ears are accustomed to sounds; and the strength it puts forth to make this cry, brings the very breath of life into its little body. It learns to laugh, and again muscles and nerves are brought into action; and so on, as it learns to play with its hands and to creep and to walk. The strength and effort that the child puts forth during this period can be compared to "Atlas carrying the world," and the child must have proper food not only to supply its physical strength, but to nourish the brain which forces and directs that strength in an intelligent way. On account of improper food and care, the mortality of children at this early and important age is greater than among those who are older.

We must carefully study our child to see what food it needs and can digest, for what may be one child's food, may be another child's poison. In forcing our children to eat something they do not like because our neighbor's children thrive on it, we do them a great wrong. An unappetizing food retards digestion. Sometimes children are told that if they do not eat a certain food on the table, they cannot have any of the dessert. Thus, in order to have the dessert, they take into their stomachs something that is likely to overtax their digestive ability, for the digestive organs are very sensitive, and if any undesired food passes through them, their fluids refuse to act normally, and the food is thus deprived of that much digestion. That is why an unpleasant taste remains in the mouth longer than a pleasant one, for the saliva refuses to act as it should. The food is passed into the stomach largely unchanged, and the work of that organ is largely increased.

Grief, anger, or fright will affect the food in much the same way. Because of this, it is vitally important not only to consider what kinds of food our children need, but to see that the surroundings during the meal are as pleasant as possible.

There is a serious problem connected with many of our school children who have for breakfast only bread and coffee. This mistake is one made not only in our foreign homes, but also in what should be our better ones. During a recent clinic for children it was satisfactorily demonstrated that the child who was allowed to drink coffee was undeveloped mentally and physically. Just to show what the effect of food on the child is, let me tell you of a little foreign child that was brought into the clinic for examination. Its birth record showed that it was a perfect baby at birth, but improper feeding had deformed the child. Its abdomen was three times its natural size, due to the fact that it had been fed on "beer soup," quite common among the foreign people. Its head and neck were enlarged with tuberculosis. Needless to add, the child was lacking mentally. All of the children examined were of similar environment, were shy, nervous, and ill-humored.

Among our so-called better homes, it was found that the children are as apt to be undernourished as in the poorer ones. This, it was claimed, is due to the fact that the mothers are careless as well as ignorant of their duties, not getting up to get their children the proper kind of breakfast, and often running about to clubs or parties and not being at home to get proper lunches. In the more common homes, mothers who cannot buy a variety of luxuries, usually give their children at least one nourishing dish.

In choosing our food, we must be careful to avoid adulterated foods. The fact that a food has been passed by the pure food inspector does not necessarily mean that it is absolutely pure, for there are preserving qualities which have no food value. We find this is true in a great many prepared foods. The prepared breakfast foods win their popularity not so much because of food value as because it takes so little time and effort to prepare them. This may not be true of all prepared breakfast foods, but most doctors will recommend a food to be cooked. If you want to see what unappetizing dishes these prepared foods make, try to cook them, and if there is anything left at all after the process, try to eat them!

Milk has always been the "staff of life," not only to the child, but also to the adult. In our schools we have children who at first could not drink milk, but are now taking it through a straw from a bottle, and the reports show a great improvement, physically and mentally. Milk taken through a straw is more easily digested than when taken from a glass, for when taken more slowly, it has more time to mix with the digestive fluids of the mouth.

When we are asked the question, "What is the relation of food to the life of a child?" we can answer, "It is everything!" For without food, there would be no physical or mental life of the child, for there would be no child. It is necessary for us to study the proper food and its relation to our particular child, in order rightly to develop his every tissue and build up where waste is thrown off in energy.

When we realize that "God is the only power, the only Creator, and the only Ruler, and we in his consciousness are the activities and demonstrators of what he creates," whose fault is it when he sends into the world a perfect little body and that body is not kept perfect? If we studied as we should, the action of food on the mental and physical development of our children, and would live and practice these principles accordingly, would we not be instrumental in laying a stronger foundation for the future generations?

Each child carries within its brain, its heart, its soul, just what life expects, and it is in our hands to make or mar the life of our child.

A tiny bit of human clay
May be placed in your arms some day—
Just waiting for some one like you,
To fashion its life, all tenderly;
To bring its loveliness into full view,
As daily it grows, all splendidly

And when the miracle seems wrought,
Rejoice, oh, heart, but tarry not!
Be diligent and trust, from sun to sun,
For love's magic work is never done!

A precious, immortal body and soul
Is intrusted to you, to guard and to mold!
Be true to your task, for when boyhood is past,
There blossoms a pure, noble manhood at last.

(Written and read by Sister Ruby Kahler, at a Women's Department meeting in Akron, Ohio.)

Neglected Homes

A letter from a young mother who is big enough to admit that there are faults in her household management and wants some help, says in part:

"When I married a few years ago my home was a model. It was in marked contrast to the home my mother kept, and I was really delighted with myself. Then, after a year and a half of this a baby came. Since then I have either grown careless or the baby is taking too much of my time.

"My husband is very annoyed when he finds things neglected and the home not what it used to be.

"I have been all through the horrors of living in a home without a head and lacking in system and order. And so I shall appreciate any suggestions."

The average city man does not look upon marriage and home-making as a partnership game. I think that is one of the troubles with the home.

If the mother is still nursing her child, she probably has not the physical strength she used to have. Her husband fails to realize this. But what shall she do?

First, send to the Bureau of Child Welfare at Washington and request some literature from experts on the raising of a baby. This includes feeding, training, and so on. It is free. Then send for some woman friend to help you go over your house, remove and store away every object you can do without. This includes ornaments and silver growing tarnished.

Haven't you a woman friend or a mother-in-law who would come in and keep house for you for several days while you rest? Then plan your simple meals on paper. Do not let the baby have all your time. If you were dead, do you suppose any home for children would allow this child to usurp all attention?

Then have a frank talk with your husband. Ask him to sweep the home thoroughly one day a week. It is his home, too, you know. In business, when one partner is incapacitated the other fills in for a while.

Ask him to mind his baby one evening each week while you dress neatly and make that long-promised call for an hour or so on that girl who used to work with you.

Remember that you owe yourself something. Remember that you are one of the state's most valuable assets, and that if you become discouraged and run down, not only you but your home, your husband, and your child suffer.

What do other readers think of this woman's problem?—Loretto C. Lynch, Omaha Bee.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XV

Labor and Industry

I. Labor

1. The laborer.
 - a. His wages and contracts.
 - b. As a citizen.
 - c. Organization.
 - (1) Give some reasons why unions are formed.
2. Woman and child labor.
 - a. Extent and effect of child labor.
 - b. Public regulation of child labor.
 - c. Problem of enforcing the law.
3. Women as wage earners.
 - a. Women in industry in the nineteenth century.
 - b. The pay of women workers.
 - c. The tenement sweatshop.
4. Conditions and hours of woman's labor.
5. Minimum wage regulations.

II. Employer, Employee, and the Public

1. Industrial accidents.
2. Employer's liability.
3. Workman's compensation.
 - a. The California plan.
4. The problem of unemployment.
5. Industrial warfare.
6. Conciliation and arbitration.

III. The Promotion of Industry

1. Government in its relation to business.
 - a. Desirable relations.
 - b. Supervision of corporations.
 - c. Public interests.
2. Development of business combinations.
 - a. The "gentleman's agreement."
 - b. The pool.
 - c. The trust.
 - d. The holding company.
 - e. The giant corporation.
3. Advantages and evils of combinations.

IV. The Control of Industry

1. Corporation control.
2. State antitrust laws.
 - a. Definition of the term, monopoly.
3. The Sherman antitrust law of 1890.
 - a. Provisions.
 - b. Application.
4. The Clayton Act, 1914.
5. The Federal Trade Commission.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. Memorize: "Our goal, then, is a society which shall seek after the best by seeking out the best in every man; it is a society in which there shall be equality in that every man shall have a chance to bring out the best that is in him and to use it for the common good."
2. "The church in world problems," an address by President Frederick M. Smith; Saints' Herald, May 26, 1920.
3. "Industrial Zion," a speech by Heman Hale Smith; Zion's Ensign, January 1, 1920.
4. "An industrial peace plan," by William Jennings Bryan, in The Commoner, January 1, 1920.
5. "A school that brought farm and town together," by Macy Campbell, in Saints' Herald, July 14, 1920.
6. "The problem of the ages," by C. E. Wight, in Saints' Herald of September 1, 1920.
7. Book III, Child Labor, from Child Problems, by George B. Mangold.
8. Give a history of the movement for minimum wage laws in this country.
9. Does your State have a minimum wage law? If so, how is it working?
10. Tell what you can about the growth of large-scale industry in the United States.
11. "I have many forces at work in the world, saith the Lord, I have many spiritual forces at work in the world that ye know not of; you see but the smaller part of my work and the world perceiveth it not at all."—Doctrine and Covenants.

DORA YOUNG.

The Bisbee Sunday school has been having an "auto race" for the past six months, to increase attendance, punctuality, studying of lessons, etc. The primary class made the best "mileage," and the young people's class taught by Elder E. R. Davis made the poorest showing, and as a result were required to entertain all the members of the Sunday school, with their friends.

J. M. Terry writes from the camp grounds at Centralia, Washington, on August 14: "Our camp is well settled. There are thirty-five tents on the ground. Thus far, there have been four sermons, two prayer meetings, one young people's meeting, one entertainment. The weather is quite unfavorable, but we are hoping for better when 'the mists have risen above us.' Brother T. C. Kelley is present and is delivering some good sermons. The general health is quite good. We are hopeful for a peaceful time."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Central Chicago

Central Chicago is still on the map, regardless of hot weather.

The Women's Department held two very interesting sessions recently. At the first the speaker was provided by the Elizabeth McCormick Society. Several nonmembers were present, and all who attended felt the meeting was both interesting and instructive. The second meeting was held at the home of Sister Christy. Sister Glines, head of the Women's Department, was present and gave us a talk about our aims and responsibilities. We certainly appreciated her talk; it gave us a greater vision of women's part in the upbuilding of the church and the redemption of Zion.

The Religio Department has given several splendid programs. At one of these, "The tale of the hat" was rendered and was indeed a huge success. We felt that each character was well chosen and so splendidly given as to allow of little improvement. We certainly feel to rejoice that we have such an active, enthusiastic number of young people as co-workers in our branch activities.

At present we have a number of people from Grace-land and Independence attending school and incidentally working with us here. We certainly appreciate their work and shall miss them when they leave us.

June Whiting favored us with a recital, assisted by Alta McNickle and Sister Brackenbury, which everyone enjoyed immensely. Sister Leslie Wight has taken charge of a class in mothercraft in Sunday school.

Those occupying the pulpit recently have been Philemon Pement, Roy Cheville, Leslie Wight, G. N. Briggs, H. H. Gold, H. P. W. Keir, and Ward L. Christy. We have been given much spiritual food which if properly assimilated should be productive of much good.

Everyone is looking forward to our reunion, which takes place August 24 to September 3. A large majority of our branch people will be there, and from all indications it should be a spiritual feast from which all should return strengthened and encouraged for greater and better service.

HATTIE K. BELL, Correspondent.

Independence

The speaker at the Stone Church Sunday morning was Elder H. A. Merchant, recently returned with his family from the South Sea Islands, after an absence of two years. He told of the faith of the island people in an effective manner, and inspired the audience to live better lives unto the day when these and similar people would be gathered to Zion, expecting to find people of unusual righteousness.

The speaker on the lawn in the evening was Elder Chris B. Hartshorn, the usual band concert of a half hour preceding.

Sunday school officers are calling a meeting for Sunday morning, August 27, at eleven o'clock, to discuss care and training of the child, and methods of teaching. A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the General Sunday School Department, will address the audience in the lower auditorium. On the clothing of each child in the beginner department was pinned a tag inviting his parents to attend.

The annual Labor Day picnic given under the auspices of all the Religio organizations of Independence will be held this year on Monday, September 4, at the golf links on South Noland Avenue. The entire membership of the church in Independence, with their friends, are invited. Saints of adjacent branches are invited and will be welcomed. British Social League, Michigan, Iowa, and similar social organizations, are invited to attend as organizations and as individuals.

The radio sermon last Sunday was by Elder E. D. Moore, with program of music by Erwin and Oscar Moorman, Mrs. Erwin Moorman, Mrs. John Griffice, Ada Griffice, Orland Nace, Mrs. Orland Nace, Milford Nace.

Handbills have been received from Elder Charles May, who recently reached Nueva Gerona, Isle of Pines, announcing "Special gospel services" by Brother May and Elder T. M. Carr. Services are announced to begin August 6, to continue each evening except Saturday.

Elder G. E. Harrington, injured in an accident in a storm at Joplin, is still confined to the Sanitarium, though he is evidently making good progress toward recovery. Elder R. D. Weaver is still confined to the Sanitarium and greatly wearied from his experience with illness. Elder F. T. Mussell has sufficiently recovered to leave.

Apostle U. W. Greene is ill at home in Independence from malarial fever.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending August 19: Mrs. R. R. Bowers, Greenwood, Missouri; Mrs. Lloyd Hill, Ayrshire, Iowa; Mr. Frank W. Baker, Miss Fern Lawrence, Miss Margaret Burns, Mr. O. P. Hallett, and Master Benny Gethens, Kansas City, Missouri; Freida Crandell, Grandview, Missouri; Miss Maurine Fields, Lees Summit, Missouri; Master Fred Snell, Lexington, Missouri; John Warren, Sugar Creek, Missouri; and the following from Independence: E. A. Thomas, Mrs. G. B. Langdon, Mrs. J. R. Leighter, Miss Ina Hattey, Mrs. W. F. Perry, Miss Zora Carter, Master Laddy MacKay, Miss Idella Neff, Mrs. J. L. Brents and Baby Brents, Mrs. Ila Lurwick and Baby Lurwick, Clarence Snow, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Reeve, Miss Eva Franklin, and Mrs. A. R. Hurst. X-ray patients: Mrs. Joseph Kirby, Marshall, Missouri; Miss Wilhelmina Doudna, Lees Summit, Missouri; R. D. Weaver, Traverse City, Michigan; and Mark Siegfried, Miss Lela Peterson, and Mrs. G. W. Somers, all of Independence.

Holden Stake

GRANDVIEW. Brother I. M. Ross, of the stake bishopric, was with us a few weeks ago and meted out the bread of life to us in a very satisfying manner. Also Elder Teeters, of East Independence, has made us a visit and he gave us a wonderful sermon on faith. His daughters and son-in-law were with him, and during the afternoon his son-in-law, having a radio set on his car, tuned in and gave quite a concert, entertaining all in the block.

We feel that we have been blessed wonderfully in the past two weeks. One of our young brethren, Willie Westfield, has been afflicted for some time and had gotten in a serious condition. The branch held a special prayer and fasting meeting which was very spiritual, but not being satisfied, a few of the Saints met at the home of our brother on Monday, the 31st, in behalf of him, and the Spirit of God was there in great power. One brother said he had been in the church for fifteen years and never before experienced such a spirit of meekness and prayer as was poured out. Again on the following Wednesday at our weekly prayer meeting the Spirit witnessed unto us again that God's arm was not shortened. Our young brother was certainly baptized with the Holy Spirit, and if not entirely healed he has received that which he will not forget soon. These past few weeks have been indeed a time of feasting on spiritual food for this branch.

The Grandview Choir intend to give "The Good Shepherd" cantata some time during September.

KNOBNOSTER. The Saints of this group were saddened by the death of Sister Sarah J. Hite (formerly Weidman) which occurred June 30, at her home in this city. She was a charter member of the Knobnoster Branch and was widely known and loved by the Saints. Sister Hite was in her 82d year. Brother Almond Burgess, father of our pastor, passed peacefully to rest June 8, after an extended illness. An encouraging feature of our branch work at the present time is the recent organization of a junior choir. Sisters Vivian Hansen and Emma Ross are in charge. The Sunday school under the leadership of our genial Superintendent R. B. Henderson is still maintaining its lead in regard to attendance. Elder C. C. Joehnk has given us two interesting sermons recently on stewardships. We are looking forward to the coming General Conference with pleasant anticipations.

BATES CITY. Friday, the 11th, we held our annual Sunday school picnic at Swope Park. We left Bates City about seven o'clock in Mr. Grover Harp's big truck, which had been provided with temporary seats. The truck seated forty-three comfortably. There were well-filled lunch baskets stored away under the benches. After eating our dinner and visiting the different places of interest at Swope we started home by way of Fairmount Park and stopped there for a while, then on home. The day was certainly an enjoyable one.

The Women's Department have not been idle. One day each week they meet to sew for those who need help in getting ready for school, besides taking care of some relief work. Sunday, the 9th, Brother and Sister McWethy and family were with us. Brother McWethy preached one of his splendid sermons for us.

We Don't Want Your Twenty-Five Cents!

—At least that's a small part of our interest. The big thing is that we want you to have

The Daily Herald

You will want it, too, when conference opens, October 1, if you are unable to attend. You will want to know what business is transacted, who are there, what lectures and sermons and programs are given—in fact, all of the interesting events that take place only in our General Conferences. Every evening during conference, except Sunday, the Daily Herald will be mailed out to its subscribers, and its eight pages will be filled with just the news you will want to see. If you yourself are coming, send it back to the home folks. We only name a quarter, because it costs that to make this service possible for you.

All the news of conference daily while it lasts, 25 cents.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
The Church Has Always Fostered Education	783
The Work of the Auditor	784
Others on Stewardships	785
What Prohibition Has Done	786
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Disintegration of the Home, by T. W. Williams	787
Sobriety, by H. E. Moler	794
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
The Bible in Kansas City Public Schools	795
A Pledge to the New Patriotism	795
Scientists Reject Darwinian Theory	796
Practical Brotherhood	796
Education Is in Doing Things	796
THE SEMINAR:
The Crowd Mind, by Ralph W. Farrell	797
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT		801
Ruby Kahler—Dora Young.
LETTERS AND NEWS		804
Hattie K. Bell.
MISCELLANEOUS		805

MISCELLANEOUS

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Eastern Michigan District: Brother Otto Fetting has offered his resignation as Bishop's agent and we have selected as his successor Brother Robert H. Huston, 1010 Pine Street, Port Huron, Michigan. The solicitors of branches and the Saints outside of branches should send their tithing and offering hereafter to Brother Huston.

Brother Fetting has labored in the interests of the church for many years and we regret losing his active connection with the work of this department. However, Brother Huston is well recommended for the duties of this important office, and we welcome him as a coworker and look forward to pleasant association in the work in which we are all engaged and which we love so much.

To the Saints of the Western Michigan District: Owing to the fact that Brother F. W. Hastings, who has served as Bishop's agent of your district for the past eleven years, is moving away from the district, it has become necessary to select another for this office, and Elder H. A. Doty, 116 Monroe Street, Traverse City, Michigan, has been appointed to take up the work beginning September 1. We want to take this opportunity to express our appreciation of the services rendered by Brother Hastings.

Brother Doty is well equipped and qualified to take up this work and needs no introduction to the Saints of the district among whom he has labored diligently.

May the blessings of the Lord, spiritually and temporally, crown the efforts of the Saints everywhere to be his children and to be coworkers with him.

Your fellow laborer,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Agent's Notice

Notice to the Saints of Manitoulin Island, Owen Sound District: Owing to the fact that J. L. Mortimer, our well-known missionary, intends to visit many of the isolated Saints of the island and North Shore, we thought it wisdom to have him speak on tithing when occasion permitted, also authorizing him to give receipts for tithing received. We trust that the isolated Saints will feel at liberty to give their tithes and offerings to Brother Mortimer. F. B. Stade, bishop's agent.

Conference Notices

Mobile, at Escatawpa, Mississippi, September 8 to 10. It was previously announced for September 1 to 3, but this change has been found necessary. Alma Booker, president.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Eastern Michigan, at Port Huron, September 2 and 3, in Liberty Hall, Corner of Tenth and McPherson Streets, two blocks north and two blocks west of Pine Grove Depot. Saints coming to Tunnel depot take street car to McPherson Street, then walk two blocks west. Lunch will be served on the grounds and regular meals served at Metropole restaurant at forty cents. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths will be with us. William M. Grice; H. C. Swoffer.

Quorum Notices

Eastern Michigan, quorum of elders, at Port Huron, during conference, September 3 and 4, at an hour convenient, to be appointed by the president of the quorum. All the members are requested to be present. W. J. Rushton.

Two-Day Meetings

Eastern Maine, at Milbridge, September 2 and 3, in the Union Church on the east side. First services will be held at 2.30 p. m. on Saturday, and at that time a Sunday school will be organized. Preaching service, also song service, Saturday evening at 7.30. Services all day Sunday. Let all come that possibly can and make this a good meeting. There are few Saints here and most of them new in the work. Bring well-filled baskets of food. Preaching by Elders O. L. Thompson and N. M. Wilson and possibly others. The Jonesport choir will also be in attendance. O. L. Thompson.

At Bisbee, Arizona, September 3 and 4. The program will be as follows: September 3, Sunday school, 9.30; sacrament, 11; preaching, 3; priesthood meeting, 4.30; preaching, 7.30. Monday: prayer meeting, 9.30; preaching, 11; picnic lunch at Warren Park, 1.30; after lunch will be sports. Joint program by the Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department, 7.30. Saints from Douglas and near-by points are asked to bring their lunch. Saints coming from Phoenix, Tucson, or other distant points will be cared for by the Bisbee Saints. Come and bring the good Spirit with you and let us have a good spiritual meeting. E. R. Davis, president.

Notice to General Conference Delegates From Western Canada

The Western Division of the Canadian Passenger Association has finally refused to grant reduced rates to General Conference delegates. Therefore, delegates from Western Canada should buy to the American border and re-buy from there at the normal one-way rate, being sure to secure certificates so that return tickets to the border may be purchased at one half rate. Reduced rate of one and one half times the one way fare for the round trip is available from all points in the United States and Eastern Canada, as announced in the HERALD of August 9.

Notice to Delegates From the East

I would like to get in touch with and receive the names and addresses of all members who are intending to attend the coming General Conference and intend to pass through Chicago. We have arrangements whereby we can secure chair or sleeping car from Chicago to Independence specially for our delegation, but we must have the names and the dates that you wish to leave Chicago in order to make preparation. It would be well for everyone going through Chicago to communicate with me in regard to this and we will try to secure the best possible accommodations for all. Send names and your desires as early as possible. Ward L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Requests for Prayers

Sister M. A. Dick, of Oxly, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be restored to health.

Conference Minutes

SPOKANE.—At Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, on reunion grounds, June 24, 1922. District President Oscar Case and Patriarch F. A. Smith selected to preside. Ministerial reports from six. Statistical reports from district; also from Coeur d'Alene, Spokane, Palouse, Valley, and Sagle Branches.

Fall conference to be held at Spokane. W. W. Wood recommended to First Presidency for ordination to office of elder. Oscar Case selected president of the district and Oliver Turnbull, secretary. W. W. Fordham was sustained as Bishop's agent, and Rufus Smith, chorister. Delegates to General Conference: Brother and Sister Frank Shirk, Brother and Sister Guy Crum, Brother and Sister Oscar Case, Sister Grace Fry. Those present to cast full vote of district, and in case of division to cast a majority and a minority vote. Oliver Turnbull, clerk.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parentheses give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Southwestern Texas, at San Antonio, August 18 to 27 (660).
Utah, at Malad, Idaho, August 18 to 26 (541).
Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Woodbine, Iowa, August 18 to 27 (541, 732, 781).
Central Nebraska, at Inman, August 18 to 27 (516, 685).
Northern Michigan, at Park of Pines, near Boyne City, August 18 to 27 (222, 660).
Western Montana, at Race Track, August 18 to 27 (638).
Far West Stake, near Stewartville, Missouri, August 18 to 27 (319, 660).
Southeastern Illinois, at Brush Creek, near Xenia, August 18 to 27.
Eastern Oklahoma, at Haileyville, August 18 to 27 (655, 732).
Southern Missouri, at Springfield, August 18 to 27 (685).
Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, at Vicksburg, Michigan, August 18 to 27 (685).
Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3 (350, 589, 756).
Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3 (638, 732).
Northern Illinois, August 24 to September 3 (539).
Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3 (295, 685).

Be a Master of Your Own Destiny—Go to College

Thousands and tens of thousands of lives each year are being wrecked because of haphazard choice of a life career. Their ambitions, their hopes, their desires, their passions, their very life blood—all have been shattered and wasted upon a cruel, cold, and heartless social machinery.

ATTENTION TO DETAILS IN PREPARATION

This is the secret of success. Preparation means a knowledge of the truth, breadth of vision, and the power of readjustment to an ever-changing environment. All of these are secured through education. Decide to-day to prepare. It is easy to say: "I am going to do it next year."

"Going to" means "Never," says the sage.

HE THAT PROCRASTINATES IS LOST

Do not waste the days of youthfulness and vigor in mere pleasures and idleness, nor even in work that does not pay, or that does not tend toward development. Decide for self-improvement to-day! Tomorrow might be too late! Graceland offers splendid opportunities along many lines of education, is fully standardized and officially accredited. Her work is recognized as being of the highest type of educational institutions everywhere.

Patronize the school supported by your church.

For catalogue and complete information write

THE PRESIDENT
Graceland College Lamoni, Iowa

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, August 30, 1922

Number 35

EDITORIAL

Prophets of God

It takes inspiration to judge rightly and fully.

Lately we have noted in an item that our late President Joseph Smith was referred to in his early days in the Presidency as a "silent prophet." We note when we examine the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that only three revelations were received in the first thirteen years, that is, prior to March, 1873, and these three are short. A prophet can only keep himself in readiness to hear the voice of God. He must await both inspiration and the divine direction to submit to the church.

It seemed to those in touch with the work of the church that there was a great need for a revelation, as the church had to organize and gather in the scattered Saints; also because the Quorum of Twelve was far from complete. Nor was the Quorum of the First Presidency filled during those years. William Marks was named one counselor in 1863, but his death in 1872 left two vacancies.

Also we learn from the statements of Joseph Smith that he was approached by others who asked him if he were a prophet. His reply was characteristic. He asked, "Was my father a prophet?" To which the answer was made, "He most certainly was." "Do you know he was?" "Yes, I am certain." "But how do you know?" "Why, the Spirit of God manifested that to me plainly." "Well, all I can say to you is to refer you to the same authority, so far as I am concerned."

In every age of the world there doubtless have been many who have attempted to judge a prophet by externals. It is the common thing that genius cannot be perceived by ordinary eyes. Men and women are quick to see the outward man, the physical appearance, but are slow to perceive the man or woman who is capable of the great thought and great work. This being true with men of great secular ability, is not less true with the prophet of God. In every age of the world the noble have been found lacking in those outward signs which would seem to others to be convincing.

We have read, not once, but several times, of men who went to Lamoni and saw our late President Joseph Smith in overalls and old hat and a red bandana handkerchief and have felt certain that this could not be a prophet of God, only to learn on the morrow or some other day by the inspiration of God that this man was indeed the one chosen of him to represent him in these latter days.

The externals neither make nor mar divine inspiration. Joseph Smith was not less the prophet because he lived in a rural community and dressed as did his neighbors. His son, F. M. Smith, is not less the prophet and leader of the church, because he has had opportunity to attend the leading universities, has acquired several degrees, because he associates with men of business and of marked success in politics, government, and other fields. A man does not become a minister of God riding in a day coach all night, nor does he cease to be a minister because he thus sacrifices his own convenience in order that he may go further on the money of the church. A man does not lose, of necessity, his inspiration or right to divine direction because he travels in a Pullman car, though of course he is no more likely to find the Spirit of God there than elsewhere.

It has pleased God in ages past to call many men of many abilities. Prophets have spoken from sackcloth and ashes; they have also spoken from the lips of the ministers of the emperor. Joseph was next to Pharaoh, yet possessed the Spirit of God. Moses was raised in the court of the Egyptian king and gave up his princely rights to lead the children of Israel through the wilderness, and took with him the Spirit of God. David and Solomon were kings of all Israel, yet gave us the Psalms and Proverbs, and communed with the Lord in their youth, even though both of them sinned in their later life. Jeremiah spoke in sackcloth and ashes; Daniel was the prime minister of the king. We might multiply such instances.

Yet no one will deny that the man touched by the Spirit of God, directed by his inspiration, has the interest of his fellow men at heart, is not concerned with what good he gets out of it. He is concerned with using his powers, his worldly opportunity for the benefit and blessing of his brethren of the family of God.

But the man who attempts snap judgment, who reaches his conclusions from a few superficial facts, who sees only the outward likeness of the man and the most outward form of his manner of living, is certainly not competent to judge on a question of inspiration, or of capacity to receive divine direction and the light of the presence of our heavenly Father. Nor does this fact justify of necessity personal peculiarities of the prophet.

Finally, before each of us is the great problem of making ourselves fit for association with our Elder Brother when he comes. To each of us belongs the duty of so living that we may receive the inspiration of Almighty God for ourselves and enjoy the spirit of prophecy for our own enlightenment and direction and bring upon us the blessing of those with whom we are associated or who sit under the sound of our voice when so directed by the Spirit. That is the great task before each of us. S. A. B.

A Dearth of Hearing the Word of the Lord

There is needed a prophet and a ministry specialized as in the days of the apostles. Excuses for failure have little value, as they do not help produce results.

Under the title, "For preachers only," Richard Roberts, in the Christian Century for August 10, 1922, presents several points of great interest. After setting forth the danger of famine of the hearing of the Word of the Lord in the Protestant churches, he continues to the effect that there is a growing recognition of the need of the prophet. Materialists like Robert Blatchford are repudiating agnosticism and pleading the immortality of the soul. But there is hunger and famine for the word of the Lord.

Some may plead the preachers have not lost the point, but the people have wandered after strange gods: sensationalism, materialism, and the like. He continues, "Let it be admitted at once that there have been outward conditions which have aggravated and hindered the preacher's task. But I seriously mistrust the temper which pleads the prevailing apathy as an excuse for the preacher's failure. For indifference, materialism, sensationalism, these are our problem always."

There are three points above. 1. There is a growing recognition of the need of the prophet, the man of God. 2. The Protestant preachers are not meeting the need. "There is a famine of the hearing of the word of the Lord." But they offer excuses.

On these two points, "The call of the kingdom of God is the most romantic and adventurous affair in the world." The "ministry a great creative vocation," but in fact, "the preachers have fallen to the grade of second rate public functionaries." And why? He continues, and this is of especial interest to us:

And frankly, I see no hope of a recovery until we have reconsidered our relation to our task and set its part in a rational proportion. The average minister to-day is a jack-of-all-trades and master of none. It is not merely that the church has abandoned the apostolic distribution of its ministry between apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and expects the minister to be all these in his own person: but under the pressure of a well-meant but mistaken purpose of social helpfulness, the minister has suffered himself to become a maid of all work to the community.

This admission of a departure from the apostolic plan and from common sense (for common sense and reason are with the plan laid down by Jesus and the apostles in the name of God, no matter how long it may take man to see it) possesses interest for all, but especially for our missionary forces.

Excuses for Failure

But there is in the above something for all of us to consider, and of which the writer has often thought, especially of recent years. "I seriously mistrust the temper which pleads apathy as an excuse for . . . failure." This is true not only of the preacher, but of every walk of life. Excuses are too often a substitute for mental and physical effort. Excuses do not produce results. It is foolish to ignore the facts or conditions before us; but is it not equally foolish to sit down before the facts, and do little or nothing, because they do not suit us?

Excuses do not convert souls; excuses do not win battles in the physical or mental or spiritual realm. Excuses do not mean success in business. Excuses will not redeem Zion. It is right and just that we consider the serious handicaps under which our brethren labor; that we should be ready to find excuses for them and help and encourage them. But we do not want our own excuses to be a reason for sitting down and doing nothing.

As an instance in passing, the country has been passing through a severe financial crisis, yet some merchants have done more business than ever before, and have made more money. How and why? By considering conditions as they are and acting accordingly, adapting methods to conditions. Because they have gone forward and not sat still.

Some of our people have suffered severely in the present stringency of nearly two years, some out of work, others suffering loss in falling value of merchandise, including farm products; loss of investment and in other ways. But there are many who have not suffered serious loss. As a people we are in no such conditions as are to be found in the war regions of Europe and the Near East.

The very conditions confronting us mean that there lies before us the greatest opportunity for sending the word of the Lord abroad we have ever had. There has not been a greater need for an aggressive missionary policy. Shall we then sit down and offer excuses of economic conditions? Or shall we arise and go to with our might and main, by sacrifice, by self-denial, and with devoted prayer, to take and send the word abroad through all the earth?

Shall we as younger people offer excuses now and hereafter, or shall we set to work with all our might and main, to make a way to secure all possible preparation for service, by study and by prayer? It may not be easy. It is not easy to decide and do. Especially when we see through a glass darkly, and issues are often much confused in their statement. There are, alas, many who cannot; but there are also many who could, but do not make the sufficient effort. Preparation, faith, virtue, knowledge, and wisdom are needed for Zion.

How long shall we offer excuses in place of stewardships, consecration, and Zion? Those who will, can do very much more than they think they can. Excuses are sometimes necessary. But why offer excuse for those who have never tried?

Thoughtful consideration of our problems is needed, wisdom, faith, and prayer, with a determination to do the whole will of the Lord. S. A. B.

More on Stewardships

Some most wholesome views from contemporary religionists.

In the fourth lesson of the Presbyterian course in Christian stewardship, stewardship is presented as a school to prepare us for better things. This is followed by the fifth lesson, which discusses the three compartments of income. This is the giving compartment, the spending compartment, and the saving compartment. If anyone be lacking, equilibrium is lost. The prodigal son did not learn the value of wealth, did not find himself, until he began to get his first wages. Regular employment, work in some form or another, is valuable even in childhood, and is essential in later life. The child should be taught to figure an allowance and report on good habits. Earning is not enough, but we should be careful with our spending and also give wisely. This lesson includes several stories of those who have consecrated their life to the service of others.

Spending is the topic for the sixth lesson. The simple life is the best life, sufficient to promote health, to secure needed recreation and reasonable comfort. But all extravagance should be avoided. Spending will include living necessities for one's welfare and dependents. It will secondly include education and music. Third, it will include care and repair of body and mind, recreative, mental, and up-building. Fourth, it will include government and public utilities; and fifth, the maintenance of the means of livelihood.

A steward who is a good spender will never spend what he has not, buy what he does not need. The best is cheapest if really needed. He does not seek to get something for nothing. It is even suggested that the steward may not patronize the bargain counter, as our Lord is a Lord of labor and is not a party to the sweatshop. One should secure full value for his outlay, but some "economy" is really waste.

For example, a Scotch lad went to London for the first time and sat down on a chair in Hyde Park. Before long a Bobby appeared and demanded two-pence. Upon learning that it was for the use of the chair, but that he could sit there as long as he liked, the boy, on returning, announced triumphantly that he sat there the rest of the day.

Finally, a necessity is defined as something indispensable to our being. A convenience, though not essential, makes living easier. A convenience is that obtained without extraordinary expense, but a luxury is something that affords self-gratification in an unusual and costly manner. (Robert Irwin McBride, in Luxury a Social Standard.)

But again, standards of luxury are varied according to different social classes. As income increases, expenditure also increases. In the concept of the standard of living, social position, and even the necessities of business, will produce not only a different concept, but make a difference in that which is wise. For example, several persons have to go a mile. A's time is ample, his labor cheap, so he walks. B has less time and more profitable labor; he takes a trolley car. C, finding his time in great demand, hires a taxicab. D, who is really hard pressed for time, keeps his own automobile and goes in it. A might consider the trolley a luxury; B would not regard the taxicab as at all necessary. There is, therefore, no rigid rule, but there is the broad principle, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added."

Stewardship, however, is more than money. It includes time and one's own personality.

Giving

Stewardship also requires giving for the benefit of others, to others, to develop grace in the giver since it is more blessed to give than to receive, and to glorify God.

The eighth lesson on Christian stewardship by the Presbyterian Church emphasizes giving as a trait of God, and hence one belonging to his children, and points out that it is commanded in the Bible in both the Old and the New Testaments. "Freely ye have received; freely give."

Yet much giving is not really giving, because it is but an attempt for the sake of acquiring merit or because services of the church are sold. That which is given through compulsion and without free will is not a true gift.

As to the question of bequeathing after death, in exceptional cases the result has been a foundation for a needed institution, but after all the question is not as to how long the worker may keep his tools, but how did he deal with his income? Did he set apart and give a worthy portion all the while?

Stewardship involves saving, but unfortunately, as during the war, we often save at one point only to waste at others. For example, according to the Presbyterian Sunday School Lessons on Christian stewardship, we were urged to cut out all possible expenses, not to spend money for candy, flowers, or other luxuries, that those who gave dinners and decorated their homes for entertainment, or bought things they could do without, were all presented as allies of the Kaiser. It was surely fair, if the soldier was laying aside all impedimenta, that those at home do the same, but at the same time, money thus saved was taken to buy tobacco in various forms, and especially cigarets. While we were practicing economy by observing meatless days and meatless weeks, why was it thought wise to raise extra funds for smoking so that the number of cigars consumed increased over a billion, to a total of more than nine billion, an average of ninety for every man, woman, and child, while cigarets were increased forty per cent to over thirty billion? This provided nearly one cigaret a day for every man, woman, and child.

What, then, should be our sacrifice as soldiers of the cross? Are we ever justified in spending money for such waste?

The time to begin saving is in youth. It gives a longer time for investigation. Also those who procure life insurance may then secure it at a much lower rate. In fact, if the average young worker would save ten per cent of what he earns until fifty years of age and would put this money in a savings bank even at that low interest, his savings will be earning more from then on than he himself can earn. There are many departments to help us to practice thrift. Of course there is danger in excessive savings. Money should not be saved merely for the sake of saving, as that will have a dwarfing effect and may lead to the misery of the miser. Again, many churches practice saving at the expense of their ministers.

We may add that the decreased value of the dollar during the war resulted quite naturally in a great increase in number of dollars. Church debts were paid off, but they postponed for a few years an adequate remuneration to the ministry. It was the minister, in fact, who paid the debt, and not the church or its officers, since, while receiving the same money remuneration, its purchasing power had been divided.

Is Creation by Chance Alone?

All life seems to proclaim a great creative Lawgiver.

There are a number of thinkers in the world whose analysis has proceeded to the point where they accept a classification of all living things on a progressive scale and are ready to accept the idea that from the single cell all living things have evolved, first earlier formations and then gradually more complex forms up to and including man. They find much confirmation for this idea in the fact that each man does come from the single cell and that a gradual process of development takes place prenatally and to a less extent postnatally.

Having accepted such an ideal some go farther and reject all religion, partly because certain aspects of the practices of some churches do not appeal to them. They demand the proof that there is a God while their minds in fact are closed to evidence. Perhaps it is of such that the Lord warned his disciples concerning those of the world: "Give not that which is sacred unto dogs and cast not thy pearls before swine lest they turn and rend you; but rather say unto them, Seek and ye shall find; ask and it shall be opened unto you; for he who seeketh findeth, and to him who asketh it shall be given."

Consider for a moment the alternative. On one hand there is the ideal of a Supreme Being, a supervision, and a directing intelligence which has brought to pass the creation of all things. On the other hand there is chance. Things have just happened so. There has been an adaptation to environment; a gradual development from wart to limb; irritation of light that becomes an eye and the like. The improbability of such a miraculous development is quite ignored.

But consider in the field of biology alone what it means. From the single cell there developed in time an embryo. This embryo of man is quite similar in appearance to the embryo of a bat, a monkey, a dog, and even at one point to other specimens of the animal kingdom, at a similar earlier stage of development, and even to vegetable embryo. Yet there remains the tremendous fact that from this single human cell there develops, not occasionally but invariably, a human being—never a bat or a monkey. Yet if it were left to pure chance, what is the probability?

(Continued on page 830.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The Work of the Spirit

By E. R. Davis

"The fruits of the Spirit can be manifested outside of the church, while the gifts of the Spirit belong only within the church."

There has been a great deal of controversy regarding the workings of the Spirit of God, as to how it should manifest itself in behalf of mankind.

The question arises in the minds of some, Is there a difference between the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost? And if so, what is that difference?

Answering the above question directly, we would say, Yes, there is a difference. The Holy Ghost is the Spirit of God; but the Spirit of God is not always the Holy Ghost.

In the first chapter of Genesis we read that the Spirit of God moved upon the waters, or the great deep, in creative power, and in Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8 we read that all things, both spiritual and temporal, were created by the power of his Spirit. The power to create, then, is one of the functions of the Spirit of God. Through the power of his Spirit all the works of his hands were brought into existence.

In section 90 of the Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 1, we learn that the Spirit of Christ is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. In this connection we would say that every person born into this world who has the least degree of intelligence, receives of the Spirit of God to their enlightenment. The glory of God is intelligence, so that where we find intelligence there we find the Spirit of God in operation. To this extent every person is entitled to the Spirit of God, whether he be Jew or Gentile, bond or free, black or white, Christian or non-Christian; but this is not the Holy Ghost.

The Spirit of God enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world, only so far; but if he would receive the greater light he must get out of the world and into the kingdom of God, the only place where the greater light can be enjoyed. The greater light, the Comforter, or the Spirit of Truth, Jesus says the world cannot receive. And in Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6 we learn that he that receiveth light and continues in God will receive more light, and the light will grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day. This is provided one continues to receive; but when the receiving doors are closed darkness comes, which darkness will grow thicker and thicker until the creature is overwhelmed thereby.

In Genesis 6: 3 and Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5 we read that God's Spirit will not always strive with man. One of the functions of the Spirit of God is to strive with man to try to induce him to receive more light and to lead him on into the ways of truth and light; but if man continues to resist the leadings of the Spirit, it will finally cease to strive with him, and man is left to his own resources. Jesus says that no man can come to the Father save the Father draw him. This drawing power, 'or striving of the Spirit with man, is not the Holy Ghost in the full sense of the term.

Fruits and Gifts Not the Same

Again we read of the fruits of the Spirit, and the gifts of the Spirit. Here is where some get confused and fail to distinguish between the two. Turning to Galatians 5: 22, 23, we read, "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." Here, as in the before-mentioned case, where everyone born into the world receives the enlightening influence of the Spirit, so anyone may receive the fruits of the Spirit, whether he be in the church or out of the church, whether he be Christian or Mohammedan. One does not even need to come in contact with the church in order to have the fruits of the Spirit, such as love, joy, peace, long-suffering, etc. This is not, however, the operation of the Holy Ghost as the term is commonly used in the Scriptures.

When Jesus was here upon earth with his disciples, they were in possession of the Spirit of God, but not the fullness of the Holy Ghost, the abiding Comforter. In John 14: 15-17 we read that if they would keep his commandments, he would pray the Father to give them another Comforter, that would abide with them forever. They were already in possession of the Spirit of God, but not this Comforter, or Holy Ghost. It was to be given on condition that they should keep his commandments. They could have the fruits of the Spirit, even if they were not careful about keeping his commandments.

The Function of the Comforter

Now in John 14: 26 we read, "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Again we read in John 16: 13, "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come." From these last two scriptures we learn that this Comforter, Holy Ghost, or Spirit of Truth, was something that had not yet come. It was something that would teach them, bring things to their remembrance, guide them into all truth, and show them things to come. While Christ was with them they needed no other teacher, but after he went away and the Comforter came, we find their faith in him increased, we find them more steadfast, having a better understanding of the things he had taught them and having the things he had taught them brought to their remembrance.

In John 16:7 we read: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you: but if I depart I will send him unto you." It would seem from this that it was necessary for the Lord to go away before the Comforter would come.

Just before his ascension he gave instructions which we find recorded in Luke 24:49: "And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." In John 20:22 we read that he breathed on them, and said: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," but there is no proof that they received it at that time; in fact, the evidence is against such a supposition, because he had previously told them the Comforter would not come until after he went away. In confirming baptized converts by the laying on of hands, the elders often say, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," but that is no evidence that the Holy Ghost is to be received at that moment; it may be days, weeks, or months before the promise will be realized. We shall see when the promise was realized in the case of the early disciples. They had previously been told to tarry in Jerusalem until they had received this promise of the Father.

Holy Ghost Not Always "Rushing, Mighty Wind"

Turning now to the first chapter of Acts we find some of the parting words of the Savior, and in the 8th verse we read, "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." It is evident that the promised Holy Ghost had not yet come, even though these disciples had been baptized and confirmed. Now according to the instructions received, we find them gathered in Jerusalem to wait for the promise of the Father. In the second chapter of Acts we find the promise fulfilled, and in this case we find the Holy Ghost coming as a rushing, mighty wind, and causing the people to speak with other tongues; but even this is no evidence that the Holy Ghost must come only with a rushing, mighty wind, and that the people must speak in tongues if they receive the Holy Ghost. It may come as a still small voice, bringing conviction to the soul that Jesus is the Christ. We read that no one can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost. It is not necessary that the Holy Ghost should always manifest itself in tongues, or some other outward demonstration. In the seventeenth and eighteenth verses of the same chapter Peter explains something about this power: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams, and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy."

Here we learn that the pouring out of God's Spirit in the last days is to cause some to prophesy, some to see visions, and some to dream dreams. Now one may have a spiritual dream or vision without being in possession of the Holy Ghost. Nebuchadnezzar had a spiritual dream, Belshazzar had a vision of the handwriting upon the wall, yet neither of these men were in possession of the Holy Ghost; the Spirit of God rested upon them, yet both were wicked men; their bodies were not fit temples for the Holy Ghost.

In Acts 2:38, 39, Peter tells how to proceed in order to be entitled to the Holy Ghost. Through repentance and baptism in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, they should be entitled to the promise.

In Acts 8:14-17 we find that the Samaritans whom Philip had previously baptized, received the Holy Ghost as a result of the laying on of hands by Peter and John, but we are not told how the Holy Ghost operated at that time. Simon tried to buy this power, but Peter informed him that it was a gift of God and could not be purchased with money.

In Acts 9:17 we find Ananias laying hands on Paul that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost. Again, in Acts 13:1-4 we find the Holy Ghost speaking and calling Barnabas and Saul to certain office work in the church, and in the 19th chapter, first 6 verses, we find twelve men speaking in tongues and prophesying as a result of the laying on of Paul's hands.

Gifts of the Spirit

Now we turn to the 12th chapter of 1 Corinthians and learn Paul's explanation of the gifts of the Spirit in the first eleven verses. He calls them spiritual gifts, and we find that these gifts of the Spirit are nine in number, and that they are somewhat different than the before-mentioned fruits of the Spirit. Paul tells us that while there is but one Spirit and one Lord, yet there are diversities of gifts, and differences of administration, and of operations. In Ephesians 4:8 we read that when he ascended up on high he gave gifts unto men, and in the twenty-eighth verse of the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians we read, "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." We learn from this that these gifts were to be in the church, or body of Christ, and they are evidently there for a purpose.

Now in the seventh verse we read: "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." So it is evident that the church, or body, is to be benefited, or profited by the different manifestations of the Spirit. These gifts are not given specially for individual profit; but for the profit of the church. Now we read on and find that there are nine of these gifts given by the same Spirit, even though the gifts themselves differ. Now we read the eleventh verse, "But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will"; not as I will, or as you will, but as God wills. It is not for us to say what kind of gifts should be bestowed, but it is for God to say, as he knows that which is best. We call to mind a certain sacrament service where some of the members were very desirous of seeing the gifts manifested. At this service, three of the nine gifts were had, viz, healing, faith, and discernment, and yet some of those present did not recognize these gifts nor feel satisfied, because they did not get the kind of manifestation they wanted and in the way they wanted it to come. They seemed to think that because the manifestation was not outwardly in the nature of prophecy or tongues that the gifts were not with us, but it was not their will that was to be satisfied, it was to be according to God's will, and God willed to speak through the gifts of healing, faith, and discernment.

In 1 Thessalonians 5: 19-21 we read: "Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings. Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." It is evident, then, that the gifts of the Spirit should be in the church as well as the fruits of the Spirit; that the fruits of the Spirit can be manifested outside of the church, while the gifts of the Spirit belong only within the church, the body of Christ, and that one may receive the Spirit of God and still not be in possession of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit of God is to enlighten every man that cometh into the world, to draw men to God, and to cause them to manifest the fruits of the Spirit, such as love, joy, peace, long-suffering, etc.

Charity With Gifts

Now in 1 Corinthians 12, last three verses, we find that all are not to be apostles, all are not to be prophets, all are not to be teachers, all are not to be workers of miracles, all are not to have the gift of healing, the gift of tongues, or the interpretation of tongues; but that we are to covet earnestly the best gifts. And then the chapter ends with the statement, "And yet show I unto you a more excellent way." He then goes on in the thirteenth chapter to show us the more excellent way, telling us that it is better to have charity alone than any or all of the gifts without charity. In the last verse he tells us that of the three, faith, hope, and charity, charity is the greatest of all. Charity, then, is the more excellent way. God would be more pleased with a body of people where charity abounded in the hearts of all, even though the gifts were not manifested, than with a body of people where the gifts were common, but charity was lacking.

Let us, then, so order our lives that we may be entitled to the manifestations of God's power at all times. We should always keep the doors of our hearts and minds open to receive the enlightening power of his Spirit. We should allow the drawing power of his Spirit to bring us nearer to him, that it may cause the fruits of the Spirit to abound in our lives, and that we may not be barren or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We should so live and conduct ourselves before him at all times that when we come together in prayer and testimony meeting, or when sickness comes, or when we otherwise need special direction, that we may be entitled to the gifts of the Spirit, for our profit and according to his will. Our prayer should be, that according to our worthiness God might bestow upon us such gifts and blessings as shall be for our good and the good of his cause. We should never seek to counsel God, nor to set up stakes and ask God to come to our terms.

We must not lose sight of the fact that there are three powers at work in the world: The power of God, which is the greatest of all powers; the power of the Devil, who is to have such power in the last days as to be able almost to deceive the very elect; and the power of man who, because of being over anxious, and of a failure to earnestly seek the direction of God's Spirit, often presents that which is not of God, thereby deceiving the people, and many times he is deceived also. As a safeguard against these deceptive powers, God has given to the church the gift of discernment, which is a very valuable gift at times.

Our prayer is that the Spirit of God will so prevail in the earth that the actions of all mankind shall be actuated thereby, and that the time may speedily come when there shall be none but those who know the Lord.

Lost! Somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone forever.—Horace Mann.

Offerings to the Lord on the Sabbath

By W. H. Deam

No need of mental disturbance over the practice current in some churches.

I have heard objections, not only to the taking up of collections, but to the paying and receiving money in any manner, on the Sabbath Day, one good man going so far as to say that to do so is a sin. He is honest, but "straining at gnats," and depriving himself of salvation because of a too contracted vision of what is right and just.

There are people who believe the gospel as taught by the Saints, but are holding off because of some faults they see in the church or its members. They are looking for perfection, the immaculate and faultless attainment which, were they members, they would come no nearer consummating. I once heard a man say that when he joined the church he expected to find everyone in it like Peter and Paul. Well, Paul did a lot of harm in his life, though not after he united with the church, but he made mistakes according to his own writings, and if Peter attained perfection it must have been after many years of experience, trials, and hard knocks.

Now to the point. It seems that it was necessary in the time of Moses to have rigid laws, and a man was put to death for picking up sticks on the Sabbath. The Jews were sticklers for the letter of the law, and when they tried to catch Jesus at various times through the application of technicalities as regards the breaking of Sabbath law, he asked them if it was not right to do good on the Sabbath. Here is one instance:

At that time Jesus went on the Sabbath day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn and to eat. But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto him, Behold, thy disciples do that which is unlawful on the Sabbath day.—Matthew 12: 1, 2.

In answering, Jesus referred the criticizing Pharisees to what David did on the Sabbath when he was hungry. After that conversation Jesus left them and went into the synagogue where there was a man with a withered hand. Again the Pharisees asked him if it was lawful to heal on the Sabbath. Note his answer:

What man shall there be among you that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day.

I might ask, Is it doing well to pay into the Lord's treasury? At another time, as recorded in the fourteenth chapter of Luke, when Jesus was about to heal a man of dropsy, he forestalled the lawyers and Pharisees by asking them if it were lawful to heal on the Sabbath. As they did not answer, he used a similar illustration of helping an unfortunate animal out of a pit, and again made the assertion that it is right to do good on the Sabbath.

I have made some study on the topic of this article and have been unable to find, either in civil or ecclesiastical law, anything that would prove that it is a sin or not right to pay or receive money on the Sabbath for the work of the Lord. I do not think there could be found in what are known as the "blue laws" anything that would prohibit such giving and receiving. But to the reverse, I find in the Mosaic laws it is made obligatory that offerings be made on the Sabbath. See the twenty-eighth chapter of Numbers, the first and second verses:

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, My offering and my bread for my sacrifices made by fire for a sweet savor unto me, shall ye observe to offer unto me in their due season.

The offerings should be made in "their due season." Now let us find when the "due season" was. The 9th and 10th verses say:

And on the Sabbath two lambs of the first year without spot, and two tenth deals of flour for a meat offering, mingled with oil, and the drink offering thereof. This is the burnt offering of every Sabbath besides the continued burnt offering and his drink offering.

By reading the 25th and 26th verses we find the seventh day set apart for a holy convocation, when there should be no servile work done, and offerings of the first fruits and meats should be made. These should be an "offering unto the Lord on the seventh day" (the Jewish Sabbath). There were also special sabbaths—the first and fifteenth of the seventh month—when there should be holy convocations and no servile work performed. Both the regular and special sabbaths were the times set apart for offerings. And another thing, one must not suppose that these offerings were all consumed by fire, for they were largely for the benefit of the priests and their families. But it matters not what the Lord wanted them for, they were offerings unto the Lord and were commanded to be made on the Sabbath days. An offering unto the Lord, whether of money, lambs, or cattle, should be holy, and being holy, it would be very opportune to make it on the holy day.

The Mosaic law commands that offerings be made on the Sabbath, and Christ, not bound by priestcraft nor a technical application of the law, makes it right to do anything that is good and helpful on the Sabbath. No one should let little gnats loom up as elephants to bar them from the kingdom of God, because they may show up in reverse, to their detriment in the day of accounts.

Those who would narrow their consciences down to scruples so fine in regard to the keeping of the Sabbath Day to the point that it is a sin to give to the Lord on his day, should not fail to read the Apos-

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Oliver Lodge on Suicides

Our readers have forwarded us extracts from an address by Sir Oliver Lodge on the condition of suicides in the next world. He states that he knows that suicides are punished because on more than one occasion a suicide has appeared to him. He says disembodied spirits are kept in captivity in a reformatory undergoing punishment. They are in a spirit prison. He speaks especially of a young scientist whom he knew who in some way made his presence known but was taken back, and evidently to prison.

On these matters we are not left in doubt, for the Bible plainly teaches that these spirits of sinners are kept in prison. (1 Peter 3: 18, 19; Isaiah 42: 7; 49: 9; 61: 1; Luke 4: 18; 2 Peter 2: 4; Jude 6; Zechariah 9: 11, 12.)

This is, in fact, referred to in the word hell as used in the Word of God. (Psalms 16: 10.) It is the prison house. It is inferred in Alma 17: 16, 25. This prison house is a place of punishment and of preparation. It is also referred to in modern revelation. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 28; 110: 22.) Referring to those who sinned in the days of Noah, we learn that they were sent to a prison house (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7) and were released in the days of the Master. (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 11.) This latter is also to be found in the Inspired Version, Genesis 7.

As we understand it, this prison house is also a tle Paul's instructions to the Corinthian saints, as recorded in 1 Corinthians 16: 2, as follows:

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

It is obvious that to "lay by him in store," that there "be no gatherings" when the apostle came, means given to a custodian who should hold it unto the apostle's coming, and the giving should be on the first day of the week—the Christian Sabbath.

In latter-day revelation, there is a positive statement regarding offerings on the Sabbath, in section 59, paragraph 2, as follows:

Nevertheless thy vows should be offered in righteousness on all days and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments unto the Most High.

This certainly specifies plainly that prayers and vows to the Most High should be made on all days, but the giving to the Lord should be on the Lord's Day.

schoolhouse. It gives to some who had not the time on this earth, time to be holy. It is its purpose to instruct men for better living. It is not an evidence of the wrath of God, but rather of his infinite love towards humanity in preparing always that condition for which each individual is best fitted and which will enable him to be happy so far as happiness is possible to a sinner, in finding that condition for which he is adapted, but also to help him in the divine providence to a realization of better conditions.

Of course no rational soul would ever seek that course in preference to right living during the little span of life allotted us here.

Denominational Organization Not Adequate

Is the denominational apparatus adequate to the great task of present-day Christianity?

No denominational machinery is or can be adequate to that task. It is the realization of this fact which is producing the widespread desire for a more effective organization of the Christian forces than any which is possible under the denominational regime. More specifically with reference to the Disciples, their "denominational apparatus" is rather notably inadequate for even their proportionate part of the great task. They have generous purposes and high hopes, but they are afraid of any organization sufficiently compact for efficiency. Up to the present time, they have preferred a doctrinaire independency to a functioning organization. A few years ago, when their general convention was reorganized on a delegate basis to make it representative of the churches, this organization was promptly scrapped at the next session and the convention reverted to its former status as a mere mass meeting. The fear that a convention of delegates would attempt to exercise authority over the faith and practice of local churches, prevents the organization of a representative democracy for the effective transaction of business.—The Christian Century, July 20, 1922.

The man or woman who neglects to read the daily paper even for a week loses touch with the great issues of life which are stirring the world. Yet underneath all of the manifold affairs of life which the daily press records are the spiritual implications of the kingdom of God. Only the church press interprets this phase of what is going on in any full and adequate manner. And only through the reading of the church press can one keep in touch with the marvelous way in which God is working among the peoples of earth to-day.—Kingdom News, p. 6.

PASTORAL

To What Extent May Notes Be Used in Preaching?

By S. A. Burgess

This question can be very briefly answered by simply saying, To any extent the speaker desires, so long as he is able to possess the Spirit of God and so holds the attention and interest of his audience.

A longer consideration shows that the problem is necessarily related to the art of public speaking in general. In this particular aspect it raises the question of preparation, which may extend for a short time before delivery, or may cover an extensive education. Certainly one who does not prepare himself for a public address will not be troubled with notes. Usually we note that the man of education attempts to express himself with greater exactitude and to insure this prepares more or less voluminous notes.

In public speaking there are at least three general elements to be considered, i. e., the subject matter and thought; the language, or vocabulary; the art, or manner of presentation. The first two elements enter also into the written treatise, of whatever form; the last belongs only to oral address. It is significant that many times the scholar, or man of wide reputation for his general education or special preparation on some one topic, will read a prepared paper in a very tiresome monotone. Some have considered this a necessary outcome of preparation and study, while the facts are, the cause of his poor delivery is not his great knowledge of the subject, but rather what he does not know and does not understand, namely, how to speak in public. Often a man who is interested in educational work will speak orally without the use of notes and directly to the people, but still in a tiresome manner. And some will say that this shows that education destroys the spiritual influence, since to their minds spiritual influence is synonymous with hollering and excitation. The fact is often that the man has no natural gift in the art of public speaking and but a limited education.

No man can know too much, can understand his subject too well, have too clear a concept of the value of words, nor have too much natural or acquired ability as an orator. The trouble is always with what he does not know, though that may be that he knows so little, or that he is in need of divine direction in the sacred desk. It is because of what he does not know that he fails.

Now, first in importance in any public address we would place the thought and subject matter. If a man has no particular message, no particular thought to present, his discourse will be of doubtful benefit. But some will point out that the Bible says: "When they shall deliver you up, take no thought how or what you shall speak." (Matthew 10: 19, also Mark 13: 11; Luke 21: 14, 15.) For it is written, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. . . . Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? . . . Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men, for ye see your calling, brethren, how not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty and not many noble are called, but God has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise." (1 Corinthians 1: 19-29; also Psalms 8: 2; Doctrine and Covenants 43: 4; 42: 5.)

But on the other hand, we have, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36; see also 85: 21; 90: 12, and many other similar passages.) There is also the plain fact that men who have been inspired do not remain ignorant men, but that the influence of the divine tends always to greater understanding, to study and preparation in the broad, general sense of the term. But our subject does not permit of elaborate consideration of this phase of general education, but only this incidental reference.

For similar reasons the matter of vocabulary will be deferred, although it is evident that the more a man knows, the wider his vocabulary—the finer the shades of meaning he may express. Though in public speaking he also may be handicapped by the limitations of his hearers, since too many beautiful words will possibly prove obscure to those who are accustomed only to the common garden variety of words.

Now when we come to the art of public speaking in general, we are advised by those who profess to know, and observation confirms the advice, that a read article or discourse is tiresome; even long readings will detract from the attention of the audience. It is better to talk to your hearers, looking squarely into their faces, as much as possible, and this is not possible if the eyes are needed to closely follow voluminous notes. However, many teachers of the art of oratory advise that brief headings or notes be made, which can be held on small cards in the palm of the hand, and so not detract from the personal appeal or the forcefulness of the discourse.

When the discourse is a sermon, we have an additional element for consideration: Man is not then standing to represent some mundane matter alone, to speak for himself, nor deal with human affairs alone, but is attempting to stand before the altar of his God, to speak in the name of the Father and in his stead. It would seem to be self-evident that no preparation can be too great for this service, no study too profound, provided always that the man does not place his full reliance in the arm of flesh, but keeps his heart and mind open and pure for the reception and direction of the Spirit of God. And as we turn to examine the various citations of scripture, and sacred history as well, we note that while not many learned are called, still it was Moses, taught in all the learning of the Egyptians, taught for forty years of the priest of God in Midian, who ascended the mount to talk with the Father face to face, and who was called upon to lead the children of Israel out of bondage; that it was Joseph, also with extensive training, who became the prime minister of Egypt and cared for his people. It was Daniel, learned in the learning of Babylon and Chaldea, taught by the wise men and taught of God, who was the prince of his people in that foreign land. Not to multiply instances, it was Paul, the pupil of Gamaliel, a Pharisee of the Pharisees, a Roman citizen, learned in all the Hebrew law and Greek culture of his day, who went down into Arabia to be taught of God, and then became the single influence, next after the Master, which left the greatest impress on the early Christian church. Such men have been used, but they are not men who have placed their trust in the arm of flesh or in their human learning, but meek men, humble, willing to be taught from on high.

"When standing before kings, take no thought," yet the command is made that we shall store our minds continually with truth wherever found, "for it shall be given you in the hour." Both are necessary for the highest and best service, and if this study and general preparation is to take place, one, three, ten years in advance, it cannot be amiss that notes be made and the best thought preserved; especially as we may have as much of inspiration in study and preparation years in advance as at the very time. Notes may also take the form of clippings, and be used for review prior to entering the sacred desk. There is nothing we know of in the law, either forbidding or commanding such a use, so that we are not prepared to say that notes may not be used, and clippings, even at the time of delivery.

But the art of public speaking alone would suggest that it is unwise to read to great length from any writing, and in appearing in the sacred desk we cannot afford to have a lack of flexibility, or inadaptability to the present needs nor risk a preparation carried to the point where there can be no room for inspiration in the very hour to fit the special need of the hearers.

The extent to which notes may be used will be an individual matter. He who relies solely on the occasion, who enters the sacred desk and opens his mouth with some curiosity to see what will come forth, will have no use for notes in preparation or at the time, and may even serve a rambling talk, a sort of intellectual or spiritual conglomeration, without particular form or definite aim, and defying analysis. Others have such splendid gifts of oratory that very little can be made to sound like something wonderful, until the mind attempts to analyze the spiritual meal served, and then all too soon the limitations are discovered.

The writer may be a little prejudiced, for, though an ardent bookworm, he has yet to see the time when he can use notes freely at the sacred desk, and he has experienced occasions when he has had to depend upon the direction at the time. Personally, it comes almost with the force of a command to us to study, read, make notes, work; yet in the hour the notes can be used very little. Rather it has been a case of the fulfillment of the promise, "He shall bring all things to your remembrance." We have always felt it to be too great a sacrament to rely on human learning alone.

So, very respectfully we suggest that preparation should be made continuously, not only by study and prayer, but by personal cleanliness and watchfulness in every possible way; so when man attempts to stand at the sacred desk, as far as lies in his power he is prepared to stand as the priest of God. All other parts of the service prepare for that consummation, that he may, in accordance with the promise, have that marked direction, that inspiration by the Holy Ghost, that "Whatsoever they shall speak shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation," that he may ever sacrifice himself for the sake of the people, and place his own soul, if need be, on the altar, sensing at once the need of the people and also the divine will, that in his person there may be consummated in what he shall say, that seeming miracle, even if seen by none except himself, of the actual presence and direction of the Spirit of God, fusing his thought, taking his preparation and making of it a spiritual discourse, a heavenly feast for the hungry soul.

Notes may be used to any extent which does not interfere or hinder that service, whether it be in preparation or at the sacred desk. Notes may be used far enough to insure continuity and unity of thought, but not so far as to interfere or prevent this divine overshadowing in the very hour.

I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.—
Shakespeare.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the HERALD intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Bear Ye One Another's Burdens

Sermon by R. E. Crawford

"Let us put our hands with our hearts to make Zion a city of refuge, a place of peace and justice—all that is implied in the word 'Zion.'"

Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ.—Galatians 6: 2.

In my daily toil or in the silent watches of the night my mind has often been attracted to the simple, forceful, and deep meaning of the words of this text. Much more often and forceful have these words recurred to me since the great World War, with its attending depression in every walk of life and line of endeavor, which conditions have always followed in the wake of every great war of more or less severity, including the falling of prices of raw material and labor furnished by the masses everywhere.

Amid these distressing times on every hand, many will ask how they can possibly bear more. But we at present are not bearing these burdens according to the gospel law of Christ, hence the above words come to us as a trumpet call. They come to every human being to help the distressed internationally as well as at home or in the church.

Kinds of Burdens

Everyone knows what a burden is, of one sort or another. But to realize the numerous and varied burdens borne by humanity can be understood by many only after much thought and observation. They are spoken of in the Scriptures as "burdens of sin," as the "yoke of bondage," and "burdens grievous to be borne," with the attending promise and comparison of the Master, "My yoke is easy; my burden is light." A yoke represents a cooperative condition. When those yoked together carry their respective ends with the others faithfully, it represents a united effort and more than an individual result. The gospel yoke gives the church the united power of fellowship and harmony; therefore it is easy, as the Master said.

The gospel of Christ is "the power of God unto salvation," or again, the process or law by which God saves man.

Now the gospel, like all truth, is in harmony with, or can be used with (or yoked to, if you please) truth in any other realm whatsoever. To illustrate: The truths a doctor learns in his work do no violence to any other truths learned by a farmer, a sailor, a surveyor, or whatnot. Each person would be vastly more capable in his line of endeavor if he knew all the truth in all other lines of occupation, even though he did not have time to put them into practice. So much for truth. It always agrees with truth wherever found, and by this we can know whether anything be true or false.

Little Attention to Real Needs of Man

Any religion, faith, or code of ethics, that is adhered to by man that does not provide for the three great elements of man, viz, spirit, mind, and body, in their various stages of development and attainment, is just that much short of what it should be to fulfill the law of Christ. So-called orthodoxy has for nearly four hundred years been preaching the spiritual Christ alone, crucified, and they then sit down as it were at the foot of the cross and let the physical man starve to death. Until the last hundred and fifty years there has been little provision made for the mental man, or development of the mind of man at large. And with their boasted high standards of learning, our various countries, and even our States so far, have been mostly "ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth." The needs of the physical man have scarcely been mentioned since the time of Christ until the Lord revealed himself to Joseph Smith and to the world in Doctrine and Covenants, as well as the history of the people of ancient America through the Book of Mormon. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10-13; 102; 98: 6-10; 45: 12-15, and elsewhere; also Book of Mormon, Alma 1: 32-49; Mosiah 11: 154-156.)

The Lord raised up wise men to draft the Constitution and make the laws of our land, America. Christ's church at Jerusalem, after his ascension, provided for the financial needs of the people of the church. (See Acts 6: 1-9; 4: 30-37.)

No doubt the Master had outlined this work before his ascension or they would not have taken it up so thoroughly nor so soon. The financial proceedings given to Joseph Smith, while new to the present world, were no new thing in the gospel economy, as the above few of many quotations will show.

We, as church people, have not obeyed the admonition given the church through Joseph Smith, viz, to build hotels to feed the laborers and the stranger; also those that desire to investigate the latter-day work, the gospel; to establish a store and send "goods by messenger"; to make our own clothing; to make our own wine; as well as to bring foodstuffs to the storehouse. How much better for the world and the church if we, as a people, had heeded the admonition to "send goods by messenger" and by so doing there would not now have been a Gentile estabishment performing this very duty, sending goods from the land of Zion for lucrative reasons alone. The church should have had this asset to advertise the gospel as well as this concern now does for the things that perish.

Nine Days Reduced to Six Minutes

In the days of the Roman Empire, while at the zenith of her power, it took the labor of a man nine days to produce a bushel of wheat. To-day in California with the most improved machinery, a bushel of wheat represents six minutes of a man's time engaged in that work.

If in Enoch's time there were "no poor" among his people, then how much more should we of the church be able to feed the needy among us with the improved methods of producing everything from the raw material to the finished product, canning and preserving foodstuffs, milling and preparing grains and cereals. It would weary one to itemize and compare with even the methods used in 1832 when the outline was given the church. By doing this it shows the real brotherly spirit that we are so urgently counseled to have in all ages of time. "No man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself" is nearly as old as the history of man.

This, as well as the gathering of Enoch's people into Zion, and the gathering of thousands into other clans, ilks, and tribes shows the innate gregarious instinct of man in all dispensations of the gospel. In the latter days the Lord revealed for this people to "be one," "be steadfast," "show brotherly kindness one to another" in their gathering to Zion. He no doubt meant for them to start the movement of social and commercial enterprise that should, if faithfully carried out, offset and head off, if you please, the organizations of the great commercial syndicates and trusts that now exist, as the oil, steel, grain, fruit, lumber, and hundreds of others that now practically control the world, and to make the land of Zion the center, and the Lord's people the stewards of the maritime and internal commerce of the world.

Cooperation Rampant in World

But we as a people did not do it and the Lord poured this desire out on the people of the world that would receive it, in that they see where brotherhood and concerted action would win. They organized these above orders or trusts; the artisans and workers did likewise, and organized fraternal orders, unions, and clubs to protect each special class and help bear their brothers' burdens for selfish ends, and not to "fulfill the law of Christ." This spirit of cooperation, of brotherly feeling, is rampant in all the earth, causing contention, strife, variance, the trusts against the unions and vice versa.

This is really a good desire wrongly carried out, or a virtue misused. It is "up" to the people of the Lord to draw these forces to a center, to direct these benevolent desires of man to a use, not for a few, but for all mankind, to "fulfill the law of Christ." The Lord said through Brother Elbert A. Smith, "I have many forces at work which ye know little of, the world knows not at all." Surely is this not one of the forces, the desire of many to unite."

How can this be done? you will ask. It must be done, according to the law of the land, without the shedding of blood, according to the law of Christ to the glory of God. The unions and trusts are acquiring property, trade, and patronage in their particular line. "And shall the children of darkness be wiser in their generation than the children of light?" In Utah a few years ago I was told that the president of that church was president of more than one hundred enterprises within the borders of his realm. I know by experience that the people of Utah will take over every enterprise possible coming among them. Among the godless and terrible things Brigham Young did in his lifetime he had one good trait of character; viz, he fixed matters under his jurisdiction so his followers could be self-supporting.

Godly Ideals in Bartering

Let me repeat: "Shall the children of darkness be wiser in their generation than the children of light?" The objector will say people of the Lord cannot get out and do as the worldly do in commercial and business lines. We are commanded to lay treasures up in heaven, etc. No, it is true, a godly person cannot get out and make such sales as are often made, or engage in much business as is done to-day, but they can handle the necessities of life and comforts as a godly person, exchange value for value. The shoemaker has to trade his wares to the farmer directly or indirectly through a medium of exchange, as each pair of shoes represents so much of his time or life, for bread that takes so much of the farmer's time or life, and the time of the miller, the drayman, and the handler of goods. An even and godly exchange, whether it is by money or a direct barter, is good, and so all the way around can be made by anyone.

Now about the treasures in heaven. These words were spoken by the Master to the few particular ones whom he had "chosen out of the world" to devote their lives to the gospel work. If that is to be applied to all mankind, why did the Lord place Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, where it was well watered, where things grew "very good"? Why did he not have Noah and his people land on a mud bank and starve instead of sustaining them in the ark with food, even sustaining all manner of beasts until vegetation grew after the flood?

Why did the Lord take Abraham to a goodly land of Canaan and even provide for Lot in the mountains after leaving Sodom? Would not a bare rock have done just as well to lay up treasures in heaven? Why lead the Jaredites where there was water, vegetation, and animals to bring to America, and the Nephites, and the brothers of Joseph to Egypt with Israel, their father? Why not leave them in Canaan during the terrible drouth there?

Why Was Manna Provided?

Why did the Lord feed the children of Israel manna in the wilderness, if they could have laid up treasures and not need to take thought of the morrow? When a child, a good old orthodox sister taught us at Sunday school that manna was "given to the Israelites in the wilderness as a symbol to us of the spiritual food we were to receive to-day." Now I cannot believe that construction is true. I say it was to preserve the lives of God's people so they could travel and obey him and inherit the promised land of Canaan. In Egypt they were worked heartlessly. They did not feel the red blood coursing through their veins; did not feel that strength of true manhood and true womanhood. The Lord desired them to feel and desires us to feel as well to-day, that confidence in themselves and the Lord to go up and engage the giants of Anak man to man as they fought the tribes after they did enter Canaan. That generation that grew up on manna were not the whining slaves who left Egypt forty years before. They felt it good to live and serve the Lord in the land flowing with milk and honey.

What have we in comparison to-day? In the city of Philadelphia, where the "Cradle of Liberty" stands, are (or were some time since) twenty thousand children going to school hungry, according to the official report, and this condition exists, more or less, all over America. What think you, will these children grow up strong enough, with the courage of those fed on manna? or will they be as the whining slaves that left Egypt?

The United States Government reported some years ago that the honest toil of every able man, exclusive of women and children, about four hours a day in this country would produce as much of all earth's bounties perfected for the use of mankind as now is produced with the work of women and children and long hours of many toilers. Under the gospel economy there will not be any of the earth's bounties misused; there cannot be if the people comply with the law of Christ. Much less can there be the wholesale debauching of manhood and womanhood as is done throughout the land to-day; fifty-five thousand white slaves in New York City alone; over one hundred twenty-five thousand (per Government report) women in houses of ill fame, whose lives and virtue are at the beck and call of man's basest desires. And we as a people have done little, compared to the need, to prevent this wholesale misuse and utter debauching of mankind and the God-given bounties of the earth. Which of our colleges have turned out one champion of economics to better the financial needs of the masses of people, much less fulfill the economic law of Christ? [Graceland has several to her credit.—EDITORS.]

A Challenge to Educators

Parents labor at the most menial labor to send their children to college, and the graduates can quote some very beautiful sketches of classics and tell the valedictorian of the respective classes, who was the most elegantly dressed at commencement exercises, the champion football, baseball, and basket ball players; but no outline, no desire is expressed, no concern is shown to change the flow of earth's wealth from the "Goddess Diana," so to speak, to the wholesome use of the gospel work.

Let us all take the example of Caleb and Joshua, go up in the strength of the Lord and possess Zion and make it a delight and a model for all the world to look to. This is a time of "imminent necessity," so let us put our hands with our hearts to make Zion a city of refuge, a place of peace, justice, and all that is implied by the word Zion, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Amen.

Eternity itself cannot restore the loss struck from the minute.—Ancient Poet.

Thrift Talks

Don't frown; smile.
 Don't kick; pull.
 Don't doubt; believe.
 Don't cry; sing.
 Don't negate; affirm.
 Don't sour; sweeten.
 Don't complain; rejoice.
 Don't growl; chuckle.
 Don't whine; laugh.
 Don't loaf; work.

And you will be happier and more prosperous and will contribute to the happiness and prosperity of those around you.

Tithe payers are a happy people, for they know that in this they please God.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

HYMNS AND POEMS

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Friendship's Farewell

By Cora M. Reynolds

Like a bright comet appears in the sky,
Thou, with thy friendship, art soon to pass by;
But friendship's essence shall be the end—
E'en though far distant thou wilt be, my friend.

Like as the godly, may your life and mine
Prove that our Savior's rule makes our light shine,
That to all others our lives are worth while,
Cause none to weep, but in gladness to smile.

Should We Forget

By R. E. Hubricht

Should we forget the sorrows we have known?
Forget our bitter moments of despair,
The sickening anguish o'er a broken hope?
Forget that we in doubt and darkness grope,
While hidden from us, are our visions fair?

Oh, it were pleasant if we could forget,
If only we could stay our troubled thought,
Could cease from knowing all our joys were lost;
Could cease from pondering over all the cost
That we have paid and misery have bought.

The price we paid! Ah, thus we're brought to see
That anguish ne'er had been, had joy not fled!
Would we shut out from memory life's joy
To hide the sorrows which our souls annoy?
In memory joy is sweet, though hope be dead.

Would night be dark, had there not been a day?
Had we not bitter known, would life be sweet?
Did we not love the very prize we lost?
Had we not owned, could we have paid the cost?
Anguish and rapture our experience meet!

Thus life's great scheme is wrought by Master hands,
And 'neath his touch both lights and shadows blend;
Then who can see the beauty he hath wrought,
And know the truth experience hath taught,
Save those who see it finished at the end.

"Train Up a Child in the Way He Should Go"

By J. R. Gibbs

The prayer, "I lay me down to sleep,"
My mother planted in me deep;
It always lingers in my breast,
I say it o'er before I rest.

And so is every precious truth
You 'press upon the mind of youth;
'Twill always linger in the heart,
And never from its place depart.

This every mother ought to know,
And train her children as they grow;

The Right Kind of Environment for a Child

A seed, in order to grow unto its highest plane, must needs be placed in an environment conducive to that growth. Warmth, moisture, and soil containing the elements essential to its nature, with sunlight to coax and show the way, insure the plant sturdiness, development, and fullness of flower and fruitage.

What of the environment needed for the nurture of a child, the human plant; of all plants most tender and most precious? Must it not have warmth, food, and the sunlight of love and good cheer? And do all children get these essential requirements?

What a grave responsibility rests with parents, and with it all what a priceless privilege? To shelter and nourish an immortal soul and train it into the semblance of a being approaching, for nobility and truth and purity, the divine Pattern! "Let the little ones come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Where else may we find such trust, such innocence, and such love as among the little children about us, and who else are so well worth our patience, our tender care, and our most earnest study as they?

One educator pleads with us to "keep out fear. . . . The child should grow up to the end of a long childhood and not learn what physical fear is. . . . And keep out, also, all fear of the brutal things men have taught children about the future. . . . Give them nature. Let their souls drink in all that is pure and sweet. . . . Rear them, if possible, amid pleasant surroundings. Let them see and feel the light! Do not terrify them in early life with morbid fear of an after-world. Let nature teach them lessons of faith and trust, of good and proper living, combined with an abundance of well-balanced nourishment for body and mind. . . . Put the best thoughts and incentives within them, by allowing them to come in contact with the best that is outside. They will absorb it as a plant absorbs the sunshine and the dew!

"Keep your child in the sunshine. Keep him happy. You cannot do this if you have a sour face yourself. Smiles and laughter cost nothing.

"Smile at and with him. Dress him for tramps in woods or slides down cellar doors. Don't be cross with your child; you cannot afford it! Love it. Be gentle, not abusive; be firm, never harsh.

"And let the children have music. Let them have pictures, good pictures. Let them have laughter; let them have a good time; not an idle time, but one full of cheerful occupation. Surround them with all the beautiful things you can. Plants need the sun and air and the blue sky; give as much to your boys and girls!

"There must be sunlight, but even more is needed fresh, pure air. The injury wrought to-day to the race by keeping too young children indoors at school is beyond the power of anyone to estimate. The air they breathe, even under the best sanitary regulations, is far, far too impure for their

And on their tender minds impress
The way that leads to righteousness.

Then as the years shall come and go,
And trials on their paths will grow;
The voice of mother whispers still,
And keeps them safe from every ill.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

lungs. Often it is positively poisonous, a slow poison which never makes itself fully manifest until the child is a wreck.

"Keep the young child out of doors, and away from books and study! Much you can teach him; much he will teach himself, all gently, without knowing it, about nature and nature's God, just as he is taught to walk, or run, or play. But education, in the academic sense, shun as you would the plague for the little child. . . .

"The atmosphere, too, about the child must be pure in another sense. It must be free from every kind of indelicacy or coarseness. The most dangerous man in the community is the one who would pollute in any way whatsoever the clear stream of a child's life!"

As we read the above earnest words, do we not well to each ask himself the question, "Is my child developing and expanding his God-given possibilities in as pure, wholesome, and happy an environment as it is within my power to give him?"

A. A.

Doctor Watters on Federal Children's Bureau Staff

The appointment of Doctor Ethel M. Watters, of San Francisco, as consultant in the administration of the Sheppard-Towner Maternity Act, is announced by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. Doctor Watters has been since 1919 Director of the Bureau of Child Hygiene in the California State Board of Health, and is a well-known pediatrician. She becomes a member of the staff of the Federal Children's Bureau, which is charged with the duty of administering in cooperation with the States the Federal funds appropriated for promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy. All but six of the States have to date accepted the provisions of the act. In most States the administration will be in charge of the child hygiene divisions of the State boards of health. Plans under which the individual States will administer the funds locally vary with local needs and resources.

Doctor Watters studied medicine at Leland Stanford, Jr., and Johns Hopkins Universities, receiving her degree from the latter. In addition to her services as Director of the Bureau of Child Hygiene, she has been Sanitarian of the Bureau of Social Hygiene in the California State Board of Health, and physician to various children's homes and institutions in San Francisco. She has been a contributor to medical and health journals.—Children's Bureau Bulletin.

What a Girl Needs

Favorite poems? Is it too late to suggest Lowell's "June-time" from The Vision of Sir Launfal?

"What is so rare as a day in June?

Then, if ever, come perfect days.

Then heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,

And over it softly her warm ear lays.

Whether we look or whether we listen

We hear life murmur and see it glisten.

"Every clod feels a stir of might,

An instinct within that reaches and towers

And groping blindly above it for light,

Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers."

The last four lines might easily be compared to an individual seeking for spiritual light and finding it.

Perhaps of all that has found place in the Women's Department columns, none has found a more ready appeal to my interests than your own editorial, "How shall we train our daughters?" I wish, yes, pray mostly earnestly, that our mothers (better still, we mothers) could and would sense the deep significance of working out and giving to our daughters some broad, constructive plan for their preparation for life—the normal life of wife and mother in the majority of cases.

For my own part, I shall be only too glad to have the opportunity to send our daughter to Graceland, if our college offers a practical course in the preparation for home life, home making, and motherhood. She may choose a business or professional career, but even then the training for home life will give her a preparation for active, helpful service to others that may not have had her opportunities.

As the college courses are arranged to-day, there seems but one way, to take such work along with other college training necessary for most of us who must enter the business or professional world. All work leading to a college degree may be divided into major and minor units. The major units must be made up of such subjects as the special line of work sought requires, but often the minor units allow considerable individual selection. If courses in home making and motherhood are offered, they can be selected for some of the minor units.

Big strides have been made in the last twenty years in the home economics courses, but much remains to be done in the way of selecting vital subjects, and training teachers able to present both the practical and theoretical sides of those subjects.

Even yet there seems to be no definite idea of what should be taught in the subject of household physics, for an example. The same situation is found in other subjects of just as practical a nature. And yet, if we mothers require it and work for it, the time will come when such courses will be offered, not only in our colleges, but in our high schools and grammar grades as well. They can be made practical, and we must see that they are!

There is so much for a girl to learn in order to make even a fair foundation on which to build her experiences of home making. Did you ever try to outline it? I have just finished a meager sketch on a piece of waste paper beside me. Yet it is hardly a start. I shall give it to you, however, just as it lies before me:

I. Knowledge of physical needs.

(a) Care of home.

1. Materials—What is needed?

Must know money values of furnishings.

Must know relative value of equipment in the home.

Must know ethical values of equipment, etc. (This applies to home, house furnishings, and clothes.)

2. Upkeep and repair.

Must know what is needed from cellar to garret, and how the work should be done if it is to be hired.

(b) Care of family.

1. Knowledge of foods, values, and how to prepare them.

2. Knowledge of general nursing. Knowledge of embryology in its elemental form, and such kindred subjects as will help to produce more intelligent mothers and cut down the death rate that may be due to ignorance and superstition in such matters.

3. Knowledge of sanitation and hygiene essential to cleanliness and health.

II. Knowledge essential for educational and spiritual growth of the family.

(a) Educational needs.

1. General knowledge of good literature, history, science, etc., both past and present.
- 2, 3, etc. A good general education.

(b) Spiritual needs.

1. A nature that senses, believes in, and tries to live a real, Christian life.
2. A discernment of right and wrong in everyday affairs, and a courage to choose the right and lead others to do so.
3. A knowledge of fundamental Christian principles.

I realize this is but fragmentary in its nature, but I feel that if all the mothers would offer their thoughts freely and frankly on the subject, in the "multiplicity of counsel" we would "find wisdom," and thus help to bring nearer a realization of our hopes.

BERTHA L. MADER.

From the Heart of a Plain Country Woman

"I bargained with Life for a penny,
And Life would give no more,
However I begged at evening.
When I counted my scanty store.

"For Life is a just paymaster—
He gives you what you ask;
But once you have set the wages,
Why, you must bear the task.

"I worked for a menial's hire,
Only to learn, dismayed,
That any wage I had asked of Life,
Life would have paid."

In these simple words, Jessie B. Rittenhouse has summed up the philosophy of a lifetime!

There is a story of a farm woman, the mother of several children, who was entertaining a friend during the week end. Just before departing, the friend asked: "What university did you attend?"

She of the farm laughed. "I have never even attended high school, much less a university."

"Then where," questioned the astonished friend, "did you obtain your knowledge of subjects and events that would shame two thirds of the university students?"

"Right here on the farm. Whenever I sat down to nurse my baby, to rock a little one to sleep, whenever I had to wait five minutes for the men to come to a meal, I picked up my book. I always keep my study books in a handy place in my kitchen or living room. My books have brought the outside world to my hearthstone."

Think of the wage Life will pay her when the shades of evening gather and she walks down the western slope with Memory as her companion! Think of the heritage she will leave to the world in her children and the friends of her everyday life! She can give and be richer for the giving—she has made use of little moments, of "fragments," to bring to her the fullness of Life.

What are you and I asking of Life? Are we content with a "menial's hire"? Let us take count now with our hearts, ere the daylight begins to fade, and "gather up the fragments that nothing be lost."

F. W.

College Day September 24

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XVI

Commerce

I. The Government and Commercial Development

1. History of means of communication in America.
 - a. Importance of highways.
 - b. Means of transportation previous to 1800.
 - c. Development of railways.
2. Public highways.
 - a. City streets.
 - b. County roads.
3. Government aid to inland commerce.
 - a. River and canal improvement.
4. Consolidation of railways.
5. Railway problems and the public.
 - a. Local rates and rates between competing points.
 - b. High freight rates.
 - c. Need of public control.

II. Control of Railways

1. State control.
 - a. State railway commissions.
 - b. Public service commissions.
2. The first interstate commerce commission.
 - a. Composition and powers.
 - b. Evils arising.
 - c. The Elkins Act.
3. The present interstate commission.
 - a. Its powers, methods, and successes.
4. Relation of interstate commerce to state and foreign trade.

III. Foreign Commerce

1. The Government and foreign commerce.
2. Aims of commercial laws.
3. Promotion of foreign commerce.
4. Commercial treaties.
5. Dollar diplomacy.
6. Protection of American shipping.
 - a. River and harbor improvements.
 - d. Subsidies.
7. The consular service.
 - a. Classes of consuls.
 - b. Duties.
 - c. Selection reforms.
8. Our American tariffs.
 - a. Protective tariff.
 - b. Tariff for revenue only.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. "Our share of foreign trade," by Joshua W. Alexander, in The Independent, December 4, 1920.
2. "The Interstate Commerce Commission," by Franklin K. Lane, in The World's Work, March, 1913.
3. "The Plumb Plan and the railroads," in The Farmer and Stockman, February 5, 1920.
4. Talk: "Our foreign commerce."
5. Illustrated talk: "The Panama Canal."
6. Do you think that a railway system is most efficiently managed: (a) under full control of private owners, (b) under full public ownership and management, (c) under joint control of owners, employees, and the public, as proposed by the "Plumb Plan"? Give objections that might be urged against each of these methods.
7. Do you agree with the idea that high freight rates tend to decentralize industry? Why?
8. What effect has a tariff on international trade?

DORA YOUNG.

LETTERS AND NEWS

A Proposal to Consider Sunday School Constitutional Needs

Delegates to the Sunday School Convention have been officially notified in the August Autumn Leaves to consider the following resolution:

"Resolved, that we favor a consideration of a change of the entire constitution, with a desire to adapt it to our present and future needs."

This proposed resolution opens up the entire question of whether we will continue a constitution or whether we shall put the Sunday school more directly under the supervision of the general church officers.

The constitution of the Sunday school has been practically worthless during the past few years, due more particularly to the actions of the general coordinating committee. If this committee continues to act with reference to the Sunday school as it has, a constitution is worthless. To abolish the constitution is gracefully to give the coordinating committee the power that it has already been exercising. To continue the constitution under such regulations as we have been undergoing would be to confuse our local workers throughout the church. In the process of integrating the departments of the church with the general church, the constitutions have been found to be a serious handicap. The whole question involved is whether we shall continue to keep the departments as largely separate from the church as possible, or whether we shall put them under the close supervision of the church, both generally and locally.

Our administrative attitude is towards the latter policy.—
A. Max Carmichael, General Sunday School Superintendent, in September Autumn Leaves.

Reflections of a Returned Prodigal

A brother who for fourteen years has been in the "far country" warns all who would be tempted by the lure of sin.

Something over a year ago I wrote to your pages stating that after twelve years of my separation from the church as a prodigal son it was my intention to try to return to the "old homestead" (the church).

Shortly after writing that letter I was rebaptized, and no sooner had I started the trip for home than it just seemed all hell was let loose to stop me, so strong seemed the powers against me, and so weak were our efforts. Once again, some months ago, I was pondering over the hard road back and feeling that I had gone so far into riotous living that it was almost useless to try any more, for with the realization of causing so many both in and out of the church to stumble, peradventure God had but little use for me.

Now, after wasting my substance and squandering my portion, it became a question with me whether to try on or return to the "husks"; so while the storms blew, once again I tendered my resignation to the church and asked for my name to be entirely erased from the church books.

At this critical point of turning back, there came to me in a dream an experience that was equal to the beckoning hand of God. The dream was that Jesus Christ was coming to Toronto. There was a great stir, and much concern and comment throughout the city as to his coming and as to where he would locate, and to our greatest astonishment a message was given me that he was going to make his abode at my home. This caused me to wonder why he would come to my place, as I counted myself the least worthy for him to visit.

While pondering over these thoughts, he appeared in person and I saw him. His appearance was that of a well-formed man of about five feet, ten inches in height, of about one hundred and sixty pounds in weight, with dark brown hair, wearing no hat; his clothes were slate-colored, a dark suit, shoes black. He leaned the least bit forward in walking. His features were rather fine and thin, and some one spoke to me and pointed out and said, "That is Jesus Christ." I gazed upon him with the greatest admiration. That experience and the influence that touched me will never be forgotten.

The interpretation of that dream to me was notwithstanding all our faults, he is still ready to extend a helping hand; or, like the story outlined by himself as recorded in that Bible illustration of the wonderful mercy and pardon of the Father of the wayward son, who turned prodigal. For his appearance to me, and that he would reside at my house while on a visit to this city was equal to the bringing of the best robe and the placing of a ring on my finger and an invitation to a dinner of the fatted calf. The measure of the Holy Spirit which he has poured out upon me in my feeble effort to reform has been as great a surprise to me as was his appearance to me in this marvelous dream. What I wish to impress upon anyone who feels tempted to leave the church and go back into the world with its pleasures is, Don't ever try it, for with every ounce of pleasure you get out of sin there will be a pound of misery attending it.

For instance, let me illustrate "the far country" as representing the sinful pleasures where Satan is the leader. His picture of pleasure is but a deceptive bunch of lies, and experience teaches fools. To the point of illustration—listen! To the writer one of the worst feelings I ever experienced in all my existence would come at a time and place when least expected. When right in the midst of what sports call a good time, under the influence of drink, at a dance, at a burlesque show, in a motor party, or any and all other questionable games or pleasures, some one would spring this on me: "I hear you used to be a preacher in the Latter Day Saints' Church." Talk about a rebuke! You could buy me with two cents. That's just a sample of Satan's talked-of pleasures.

His reward for service is well pictured in the Bible, for he pays wages, but his wages are death and he brings a train of sorrow, suffering, selfishness, disappointment, always wanting something, misery, worry, dishonor, jealousy, divorces, quarreling, contention, strife, murder, and whoredoms, with a train of diseases following. These are but a few samples of the bill of fare for pleasure seekers who live in "that far country" over which Satan presides.

The writer lived on the old homestead (the church of Jesus Christ) for about fourteen years, then moved to that "far country" for about fourteen years. I tried some of Satan's bill of fare and can say I found more real happiness and joy in one good spiritual prayer meeting, where the Spirit of God was so poured out upon a pure, living, virtuous band of Saints with tears of joy streaming over their faces and listening to the inspiration of God, using his people to speak comforting words of cheer in their efforts against Satanic forces. Surely they deserve much credit, for this is an awful age of wickedness, and most of them do well under the terrible opposition of Satan's forces which appear so tempting. This is why I speak so plainly. I was trapped and led away and I found, as I said, only a pound of misery at the end of sinful pleasures every time.

In closing, let me say that we had the pleasure of meeting with many of our old church acquaintances at the late Low-banks reunion held under the direction of the Toronto Branch and it was good to enjoy that same sweet influence of the Holy Spirit among them. It is about fifteen years since we attended a gathering of this kind, and I could not but feel a burning regret for the good old days when Brother Evans was among us. In his time he was a wonderfully spiritual man and a great leader, but like myself he wandered away. What a lesson to us all! There is but one safe leader and that is Christ the Lord.

GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Who Has a Right to Partake of the Lord's Supper?

A letter to a nonmember regarding our attitude on the sacrament.

The members of the church only, as we will see by the Scriptures. Matthew 26: 26, 27: "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body." You will see that he gave it to his disciples, and to no one else.

Now for more proof: 1 Corinthians 11: 23: "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me." Now read verses 27 to 29: "Wherefore whosoever [that is everyone, no difference who,] shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man [everyone] examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body."

Not discerning, or understanding, or belonging to the Lord's body or church. So no one who does not belong to the church of Jesus Christ has a right to partake of the bread and wine. For if they do, they eat and drink damnation to themselves. Oh, how terrible that would be!

In 1 Corinthians 10: 15, 16, 17, we read: "I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many [many members, but only one body, one church] are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread."

You see Paul says that they were all one body, or one church. So, if one wants to commune, he or she must belong to that one church to which Paul belonged.

Now to prove that the body that Paul spoke of is the church we will see Colossians 1: 18: "And he [Christ] is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence." In John 3: 5: "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man [or woman] be born of water [or as Luther says, out of the water] and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Then if a man is not fit for the kingdom of God, he is not fit to commune with God's children.

Now we will prove that Christ had but one church. Ephesians 4: 4-6: "There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism. One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Now for another witness, 1 Corinthians 12: 12-14: "For as the body is one, [not three or four hundred, but one. Mark now the body is the church, the church is one,] and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, [not hundreds] so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit. For the body [not bodies] is not one member, but many."

Yes, there is but one body, but it is composed of many members.

Now, of all the different churches, which is that one body or church? For if we want to commune with God's children, we must belong to God's church, so which of the churches is his? For proof, see 1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28: "Now ye are the body, [church] of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."

This is a list of some of the officers and gifts in the church of Christ, and no one has a right to commune in his church or with his people unless they belong to the church which has these officers and gifts before mentioned. There were about thirty-three churches in existence at the time that Christ set up his church, but he recognized none of them, as we see in Acts 2: 38: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And after they are baptized by being buried in water, as Paul says in Romans 6: 4, "Therefore we are buried with him [Christ] by baptism into death." Then, after that we must have hands laid on us for the gift of the Holy Ghost, as we see in Acts 19: 5, 6, "When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied." So now we learn that if a person wants to commune with the Saints in his church he must first be baptized by being buried in water, then have hands laid on him for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

If one wants to be saved, he must join the church of which Paul was a member, as we see in Acts 2: 47: "And the Lord added to the church [not churches] daily such as should be saved." Or, as Luther has it, "desire to be saved." Now, what church did they join? 1 Corinthians 14: 33: "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints." We must belong to the church of Jesus Christ, the Saints, before we have a right to commune with them, and in order to join that church we must repent, be baptized by immersion by one who is called of God by revelation, have hands laid on us for the gift of the Holy Ghost, believe in the resurrection, and the judgment, as we learn in Hebrews 6: 12. When we have done that, then, and only then, it is our duty to partake of the bread and wine with the church of Jesus Christ. We must partake of it or we cannot be saved, as we see in John 6: 53: "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. [Cannot be saved in the glory where Christ is.] Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life [salvation]; and I will raise him up at the last day." These words are figurative, as we see in the 63d verse, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

From the foregoing we learn that no one has a right to partake of the bread and wine unless he or she belongs to the church which is organized according to the pattern given us by the Savior, which has living apostles, as we learn in Ephesians 4: 11-15: "And he [God] gave some apostles; some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body [the church] of Christ." How long shall they be in use? The 13th verse tells us, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Also see 1 Corinthians 12: 28.

I think I have given proof enough to show that it would be very wrong for us to permit outsiders and members of other churches to partake with us; those who do not belong to the body [church] of Jesus Christ; for if they partook with us, it would be condemnation to them. But we, knowing this, and letting them partake, might be held responsible for their condemnation, as we know better.

J. S. ROTH.

Sister Burton Writes of Southern California Reunion

Just a few words about our excellent reunion at Hermosa. While the number was not so great as last year and the spirituality not so much for the enjoyment of the present moment, it fairly gave forth the "pick and shovel" ring in digging deep and building sure for the future.

This was largely owing to the splendid lectures and talks of Brother Floyd M. McDowell, the worthy leader of the young people. How glad we all are that he deemed it worth his while to come to Southern California and help our young people! For the help was not confined to the young alone, but to the old as well, which inspired each to a greater determination to the life and activity that will help build up Zion.

But how can I, who was given only a few sentences of one address, do justice to the occasion? Brother McDowell was the principal speaker, and I can only say that he seemed as inexhaustible as a fountain, sending forth continuously the life-giving substance. Those few sentences that came to me were an uplift, an inspiration that I hope will abide with me all through the year.

Then we had good sermons from others. How could it be otherwise when besides the ministry from the local and surrounding branches, there were also Brethren Pitt, Rushton, Williams, Anderson, and last but not least, Brother Savage? Just the day before closing we had the pleasure of meeting our good Bishop McGuire and Brother Etzenhouser to enrich the Sunday gathering that crowded the big tent to overflowing.

It was pleasant, too, to see the notice taken of the little ones so they would feel that they had a part in the reunion. One morning as the people gathered for prayer meeting the little children, mostly boys, filled two of the long, front benches, presumably according to previous arrangement. Brother H. W. Savage led the meeting, and, after a few brief testimonies, he stepped to the front and looking at the children told, in a feeling way, the story of Samuel. When through he said, "Now you have had your meeting, run away and play while the rest have theirs." The little people filed out quietly and ran to their playground, out of sight of the tent, and there was no running in and out of the tent all during the meeting.

There were no little folks included in the Friday evening play, so Sister Anderson gathered all the children that she could together, and before the play commenced had them all on the platform and beat time for them and sang with them a short song, which seemed to please them greatly.

I don't think I can close without mentioning what was done by the president of the district for my personal comfort, which was to provide me with a cozy little house tent with rug-covered floor and the usual tent furniture, and daughter Dora provided a comfortable spring bottom rocker. No wonder I enjoyed the reunion, with such a cool, restful home between meetings, which others could come and enjoy with me!

E. B. BURTON.

Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion

The Kentucky and Tennessee reunion was held at the Foundry Hill Branch, about four miles from Puryear, in a natural grove on property owned by the Saints of that district. The meeting was held in a tabernacle, the size being forty feet by fifty feet, all made of native timber except the shingles, which were cedar, at a total cost of about $165 for material, the labor having been given free. It is far superior to a tent. It is cooler, and also a better protection from storms, and at only about one fourth the cost of a tent. With one reshingling it will easily last twenty-five years. A neat and commodious church was also on the tract of land. It is a credit to our people, more so than some of our city churches. It was used as a lodging place for campers, affording a very comfortable place.

The only General Conference appointees were Elder William Bath and the writer. Elder J. R. McLain, the president of the district, was present part of the time. Being a farmer, it was necessary to be absent the rest of the time to care for his crops. Sister Burwell, of the Women's Department, could not be present because she had a sick boy at home, and none were present to represent the Sunday School and Religion Departments.

Four meetings were held each day; sometimes two sermons were preached and at other times three, and prayer meetings in the morning and business occupied the afternoons, except when used for preaching. It was arranged that except for one sermon that the preaching at night was to be by Brother Bath and the sermons were to be of a missionary character; the other sermon was by Brother McLain. For the morning sermons the writer was assigned, and they were to be of special interest to the members. The district president preached one morning sermon on the law of tithing. There were three sermons in all in reference to temporalities, one being, "How the use of material wealth affects our spiritual life"; another, "How the tithes and offerings are disbursed."

The attendance was good for a rural community, and especially so at night when the congregation was about three times as large as in the daytime. During the day services the tabernacle would accommodate all, and at night additional seating was used and the automobiles were permitted to come close enough so that the occupants could hear the preaching. The preaching by the two brethren referred to was edifying and served to give the people a proper view of our faith and doctrine. Modesty will not permit me to speak of my own. One sister expressed her view of the matter by saying that Brother Bath was the Ensign, and the writer the HERALD, meaning to convey the thought that he spoke to the world and the writer to the Saints.

The general conditions were very favorable. There was a small army of young people and smaller boys and girls, and their conduct was most excellent. Not at any time was it necessary to reprove them for unseemly conduct; the boys and girls occupied the seats of honor without any invitation, the front rows of seats. There was plenty of good water and food, which included fried chicken and watermelons in abundance. The weather conditions were favorable; only one storm, and that did not prevent the holding of the regular meetings, and it served to cool the air. Only about the last two days did the dust make it less pleasant on camp ground.

The people were "just plain folks," neatly and cleanly dressed, and one could not discern that they were different from city folks in dress except that they were not ultra fashionable; or, did not follow the extremes of fashions. When I looked into the faces of those young boys and girls, the thought rushed to my mind, Oh, what a field and opportunity for service for those who are able and willing to serve them. Willing minds and kind and loving hearts in their plastic period, when they can be fashioned into vessels fit for the Master's use. It was from such raw material that such men as Lincoln, Clay, Garfield, Grant, and many others came. Such women as Frances Willard and Clara Barton, and our own Sisters Emma Smith and Marietta Walker came from such surroundings. The potential power for usefulness and greatness is found in those boys and girls. They are the raw material that lives close to nature and they have not been spoiled by the customs and habits of modern life and are like clay in the potter's hand, waiting to be molded into a useful vessel. Will we mold them or throw them away as waste material? Are we not making a mistake by crowding our talent into places where wealth, learning, and the ultra fashionable congregate, and leaving these verdant fields uncared for? It was from such that Jesus gathered his followers. The "common people heard him gladly." Have we better judgment than he had, and will we pass by the kind of fields that he thought fruitful for precious souls for his kingdom? May the Father of our souls save us from such a calamity.

Eleven were baptized. Three were adults and eight were just in their young childhood.

It was hard and strenuous work for two preachers, and at its close we were tired, but happy, because our heavenly Father had blessed us and our service was appreciated by a kind and generous-hearted people. Long live the Saints of Kentucky and Tennessee.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Independence

As school days approach, the air begins to carry a hum that sounds like preparations for mental work. The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, with day and evening classes "for those who must work but are willing to study," has issued its annual announcement of courses. Forty-two names are listed in the faculty. The board of directors is composed of Frederick M. Smith, John A. Becker, Elbert A. Smith, Benjamin R. McGuire, Israel A. Smith, James F. Keir, George N. Briggs.

Elder A. Max Carmichael, en route from attending a summer course in religious education at the Columbia University in New York City, and having on his way, going and coming, attended various reunions, addressed a parents' meeting at the Stone Church at the eleven o'clock hour on Sunday, the 27th. It was a goodly gathering and his discourse was built around emphasis on directed play that will lead to real religious education. As a means to this end he recommended a carefully-conducted kindergarten where this play instinct in small children could be realized upon and the child enabled to live religion in his natural play life.

The public schools of Independence do not provide kindergarten facilities, so private kindergartens are quite well supported, especially the one under the auspices of the Independence Institute, directed by Eunice Winn Smith. This year there will be on the staff one or more paid leaders. The sessions are held in the Dining Hall back of the Stone Church.

The evening service on the church lawn was a band concert by the new band which was organized this summer and which has been functioning at all the Sunday evening services. Under the direction of Roy Turner it has done most excellent service, in spite of the fact it was handicapped from lack of funds. When the annual budget was made up for the year, no allowance was made for this item of expense, and as there are always necessary expenses to be met in work of this kind, a collection was taken at the Sunday evening concert, which amounted to over ninety dollars. A Sousaphone (a very large brass horn for the bass section) was recently purchased.

It is to be noted that of this aggregation of over thirty persons who labor diligently that they may serve in this and other similar capacities, none are paid for their work. While this is what might be expected, it follows that it ought to be appreciated—which we believe is the case.

Two local weddings occurring the past week involve principals rather widely known. John Feldhahn, proprietor of the Independence Drug Company, and Dorothy Madeline Crick, daughter of Brother and Sister Thomas Crick, were united in marriage at Liberty Church on the evening of August 22. Elder Walter W. Smith officiated. Brother Feldhahn formerly lived in Lamoni, Iowa, and was educated at Graceland College and the Iowa State College, graduating in pharmacy from a Kansas City school the past year.

On Sunday afternoon, August 27, at the home of the bride's parents, Elder and Sister Hubert Case, occurred the wedding of Richard M. Maloney, son of Elder R. M. Maloney, of Oklahoma, and Dorothy Case. Elder C. E. Wight, of Lamoni, officiated. Sister Case of late has been acting as secretary in the office of the Quorum of Twelve. Brother Maloney is employed at the Central Radio Company, Kansas City.

Practically all the general officers of the church are still in the field attending reunions. President F. M. Smith has not returned from the East, nor Bishop McGuire from the West, though the latter is expected to return about Friday, after attending several reunions in the West, the latest being the one at Colorado Springs.

Considerable interest is shown in the coming Labor Day picnic to be held September 4. The entire membership of the church in Independence is expected to be present, and each congregation is interested in the competition for the silver loving cup offered to the congregation scoring the most points in the athletic events. The baseball game will be played with the team from Holden, Missouri. Upon request, each Religious superintendent will furnish transportation for the older members of each congregation who otherwise could not attend. A splendid program of entertainment is provided for all.

Apostle U. W. Greene is still confined to his home here after suffering about two weeks from an attack of malarial fever contracted while in his mission work in Oklahoma.

Elder R. D. Weaver, who has been in the Sanitarium for three months, still suffers considerably from complications following his operation for appendicitis. He desires and deserves the prayers of the Saints. His wife rooms in the city and does all possible to aid in his recovery.

The 31st is Fruit Day for the Sanitarium. A movement under the auspices of the Sanitarium committee is working on plans to provide for intelligent application of the universal desire to do something definite for our church institutions. This Fruit Day is but one of these manifestations, and is being carried out locally under the direction of the Women's Department. Each family is invited to contribute canned fruit, jellies, etc., as they feel able to spare, to the Sanitarium. The group workers of the Women's Department gather it into one place. Kansas City Stake Women's Department have added a special subdepartment to their work in order to educate their members along these lines.

It is to be hoped that the church at large will be interested in this move for cooperation, which will no doubt eventually extend to our homes for the aged and the Children's Home.

The radio sermon last Sunday was by Patriarch Ammon White, with music furnished by Gomer Watson, violin; Ammon Fry, flute; Miss Fairchild Wiggins, accompanist. Don't forget to tune in at 2 p. m., standard time, each Sunday, at 360 meters. The program usually continues approximately an hour, beginning with phonograph for tuning in.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending August 26: James N. Curtis, Naylor, Missouri; Mrs. Dora Henderson, Nauvoo, Illinois; Ralph Lyon, Bayard, Nebraska; William H. Rawson, Holden, Missouri; Ruth Grenawalt, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. W. E. Bean, Atchison, Kansas; and the following from Independence: Carol Gillen, Clarence Sutton, Mrs. R. E. Strodman and Baby Strodman, Mrs. Kogee Madison, Milton Wrigley, Howard Kerr, Marion Peters. X-ray patients: Mrs. John Eliason, Race Track, Montana; Earlene O'Flaherty, Little Blue, Missouri; Mrs. J. S. Santmyer, Higginsville, Missouri; and Woody Turney, George Hedges, John Warren, Mark Siegfried, Clarence Sutton, W. E. Davis, and A. Kingcomb, of Independence.

News From the Reunions

Items excerpted from official reports of the missionaries and their personal statements.

Patriarch Ammon White attended the Northeastern Kansas reunion and reports a high degree of spirituality manifest among the membership, if not in outward demonstration. It was a spiritual feast indeed.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood reports the reunion at Eagle City, Oklahoma, closed after a series of most excellent meetings throughout. "The spirit of unity and peace that characterized the camp," he writes, "is certainly worthy of note. The Spirit of God was present in power in all of the meetings. The preaching was of a high order and the prayer meetings very spiritual."

Elder W. E. Shakespeare writes that the reunion at Sperry, Oklahoma, was a very good one. "Everyone seemed to enjoy it very much," he continues. "There was a good attendance. A very good program was followed out, which made it one of the best reunions I have ever attended. We tried to follow out so far as possible the suggested programs that were sent out by the church, and we had study classes each day, which were quite well attended. There were plenty of recreational features, which made it very enjoyable for the young people, and I am sure from all appearances that they had a good time. I never was at a reunion where the children seemed to have such a time as they did there."

Elder A. C. Martin writes from Portland, Oregon, that the reunion there resulted in "a grand time together." They had no other outside speakers, which made the responsibility rather heavy, but he has survived and was planning a big tent campaign at Silverton, beginning the 13th.

Elder R. L. Fulk, writing from Rupert, Idaho, said that the reunion there was under way, with small attendance to begin, increasing at time of writing. He and A. J. Layland were the only ones of the general force present.

Elder J. R. Grice attended the Erie Beach reunion, but left early to attend at Pinconning in the interests of the departments. Erie Beach seemed to be successful in many ways. He was enjoying his experiences with the young people in his work at Pinconning and planned to go on to Boyne City.

Elder J. F. Curtis has already reported twenty-five baptisms at meetings following the Alafra reunion, they being some of the best people in the community. He wrote from McKenzie to say the interest was good and he busy.

Editor S. A. Burgess and family have been in attendance at reunions at Council Bluffs and Woodbine, Iowa; kept very busy and enjoying it in spite of excessive heat.

Visitors at Lamoni Stake reunion were impressed with its usual well-organized and successful meetings. The theme which dominated the services this year was said to be "stewardships," and not limited to the financial. It is customary at Lamoni Stake reunions for such themes to be started by the stake president at the beginning of the meetings and continue as a central thought to fruitful resolutions at the close which bear fruit throughout the year.

Elder Asa E. Smith writes from Dumont, Iowa, that the Des Moines district reunion was a very spiritual affair, with wonderful work accomplished.

Elder T. C. Kelley reported the Centralia, Washington, reunion a success, with good attendance for the West. J. W. Rushton and F. M. McDowell were with them during the last half of the reunion and their work was well received, being timely and profitable.

Elder L. O. Wildermuth writes from Xenia, Illinois, on the 24th that they are in the midst of their reunion with attendance good and weather all that could be desired, refreshing showers at intervals cooling the air and laying the dust. Five had been baptized and more announced as ready.

Elder Guy P. Levitt writes from Toronto that the Lowbanks reunion was a success, with much spiritual food meted out in every service.

Church Historian Walter W. Smith and wife attended three reunions this year, and as usual with our people, when a general worker appears over the horizon he is immediately set to work. Brother Smith says of the Des Moines District's reunion at Runnells, that they are to be congratulated on having a committee who know how to work a program to a finish. They know how not only to do the work of ten men, but keep ten men at work, is his opinion.

The Runnells reunion was counted a splendid success, with large attendance, spirituality very high.

Elder Smith and wife had previously attended the Deer Park reunion in Pennsylvania, where he reports the unity perfect, programs well arranged, and carried out with splendid success. In fact, he considered it a great success in every way.

He was at the Stewartsville reunion several days and says its success was not affected by the extremely hot weather. The two prayer services held simultaneously with each other at another time did not conflict. The attendance was very large. The program of the school features revolved largely around Zion's problems, which aroused large interest. The preaching services were well attended.

Apostle G. T. Griffiths writes for publication concerning successful reunions at Erie Beach, Pinconning, Kirtland, and Boyne City. His letter will be published next week. He tells about how the young people of Central Michigan have been working for months to make their reunion worth while, with a veritable pentecost as a result. No tea, coffee, or meat was in evidence; no charge for food, about two hundred dollars to their credit after paying all expenses. Brother Griffiths observes that if the presence of the Spirit of God at the reunions presages coming conditions, we ought to have one of the greatest General Conferences in the history of the church.

College Day September 24

www.LatterDayTruth.org

MISCELLANEOUS

Corrections of Bishop's Report

(Items published in SAINTS' HERALD of April 5, 1922.)
Seattle and British Columbia District, 1919-20

Items credited to I. M. Miller and wife, $3; I. M. Muller, $4.50; Isaac McMuller, $13.50; also for year 1920-21, I. M. Mullen and wife, $13.35; Isaac McMullen, $6.50; and J. McMullen and wife, $5 should be credited to the account of Isaac McMullen and wife.

Items in 1919-20 report to credit of Isabelle McMullen, 60 cents; Isabelle M. Muller, 30 cents; and for year 1920-21, Isabelle McMullen, 25 cents, should be credited to account of Isabel McMullen.

Saint Louis District, 1919-20

Items in favor of Carl H. Wehrli, $14.78; and Wehrli and wife, $97.50 should be credited to Carl H. Wehrli and wife.

Independence Stake

Items credited to C. H. Wehrli, year 1920-21, $4.42, should be credited to Carl H. Wehrli and wife.

Eastern Iowa District

Items for year 1920-21 to the credit of Mrs. E. A. Ching, $10 should be credited to Sister E. A. Gimblett.

Detroit District

Items for year 1920-21 to credit of Frank Sweetman should be credited to Frank Sweetman and wife, $70.

Spring River District, 1920-21

Items credited to James W. Evans, $73.30, should be credited to James W. Evans, senior, and wife as $91.30.

Items credited to James W. Evans, jr., $21.50, should be in the amount of $3.50.

Items for year 1919-20 credited to John and Melvin Ulmer in the amount of $2, should be credited to John and Melvina Ulmer.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana

Items for year 1919-20 to credit of Walter Ryan and wife, in the amount of $48.83, should be credited to Walter Ryder and wife.

Northeastern Missouri

Items for the year 1920-21 credited to John Plaison and wife, in the amount of $2.50, should be credited to John Pearson and wife.

Southern California District

Items for year 1920-21 credited to Nelson M. VanFleet, in the amount of $1,204, should be $204.

Item of $1,743, to F. B. VanFleet and wife, should be $2,743.

Southern Wisconsin District

Items for year 1920-21 credited to F. A. Kishuer, $18, should be credited to F. A. Kirshner.

Janesville Branch credit of $22.30, should be $15.49.
Janesville part of Evansville, as $12.16, should be $18.97.

Presiding Bishop, 1919-20

Emma A. Eames $1.50, should be credited to Macey A. Eames.

Elders' Expense and Family Allowance, 1920-21

Item of $550.07 charged to R. May as family allowance, should be $150, as the balance of his family allowance is published in the British Isles report.

Also items of $838.95 charged to R. May as elder's expense should be $350 only, as the balance of $488.95 was published in the British Isles report.

Items for year 1920-21 charged to S. S. Smith in the amount of $1,170 as family allowance should be $1,080.

Item of family allowance charged to Mrs. H. C. Smith (1920-21) in the amount of $612, should be Mrs. Heman C. Smith; and item charged to H. C. Smith in the amount of $100 as family allowance for 1920-21 should be charged to Henry C. Smith.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Prophets of God	807
A Death of Hearing the Word of the Lord	808
More on Stewardships	809
Is Creation by Chance Alone	810
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Work of the Spirit, by E. R. Davis	811
Offerings to the Lord on the Sabbath, by W. H. Deam	814
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Oliver Lodge on Suicides	815
Denominational Organization Not Adequate	815
PASTORAL:
To What Extent May Notes Be Used in Preaching? by S. A. Burgess	816
THE FORUM:
'Bear Ye One Another's Burdens, by R. E. Crawford	818
HYMNS AND POEMS
Cora M. Reynolds—R. E. Hubricht—J. R. Gibbs	821
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT
Bertha L. Mader—Dora Young	821
LETTERS AND NEWS
George Buschlen—J. S. Roth—E. B. Burton—Edward Rannie	824
MISCELLANEOUS	829

Item for year 1920-21 charged to Guy P. Levitt as donations from Saints and friends, in the amount of $456.85, should be $95.85.

Item for year 1919-20 charged to W. P. Robinson, of $592.84 as family allowance, should be $540.

These items of correction have been called to our attention by the persons interested and we trust that any other corrections which should be made will be called to our attention, as it is unavoidable on our part, and we desire to show the proper names and amounts in all respects.

Thanking the Saints and friends for their cooperation in this regard, I am Sincerely your brother,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Barber Wanted

Position open for a good barber, member of the church; good wages for competent man. If interested, write to Wiley A. Skinner, Chariton, Iowa.

Conference Notices

Central Illinois, with Taylorville Branch September 23.
Fred O. Prichett.

Entertainment of Conference Delegates and Visitors

The reception committee for the General Conference has been appointed by the First Presidency. They are as follows: R. V. Hopkins, president; Arthur Allen, vice president; George A. Gould, R. T. Cooper, and John A. Gardner.

Rooms. The committee is arranging as far as possible for rooms for the visitors during conference at reasonable rates.

Tourists' Camp. A site about seven blocks from the conference tent has been reserved where those who wish to do so may park their cars and erect their tents free of charge. A tourist's oven for cooking is being build on these grounds and city water furnished. Cars may also be stored in local garages at regular rates.

Cafeteria. Meals will be served in the dining hall at the Stone Church on the cafeteria plan, at reasonable rates.

Young People. The committee has arranged for the entertainment of the young people who attend conference. Sunday school and Religio superintendents and other leaders of the young people of the church should advise the committee how many will attend from their locality.

Do You Expect to Be With Us? The amount of space available in Independence is limited, so if you are expecting to be here, write immediately to Arthur Allen, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, and reserve your room or camping space.

THE RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Book Reviews

LIFE STORIES FROM THE OLD AND THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Jenny B. Merrill, Pd. D. George H. Doran Company, publishers, New York City. Sold by Herald Publishing House, for $1.10 postpaid.

This is a new book of value with the distinct aim of building character dominant throughout. It is a course of Bible lessons for daily vacation Bible schools, week-day religious schools, and religious training in the home.

Twenty-three stories selected from Genesis and from the gospel of Matthew and retold in the form in which they should be presented to any group of boys and girls ranging from nine to thirteen years of age. With the stories are a great number of helpful, practical suggestions as to picture material and its use, handwork, dramatizations, Bible games, and memorization.

The expert story-teller would find the book to be of value in the arrangement and method, while those who are not specially skilled in this important art will appreciate both the content and style of the book. The stories are in the language and mood one would desire in impressing children.

For our average needs, we should say it would be a distinct advantage to those who would provide definitely religious material for children's meetings or what are sometimes called "junior" meetings. Pictures are suggested, Bible texts to be read, memory texts, etc., with suggestions for their use. The thoughtful reader will profit by using the same methods on many other stories he desires to use in this way.

Reunion Calendar

(The figures in parentheses give the page of the HERALD on which details have been given.)

Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs, August 19 to September 3 (350, 589, 756).

Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3 (633, 732).

Northeastern Illinois, August 24 to September 3 (589).

Clinton, at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3 (295, 685).

Our Departed Ones

MAMEROW.—Jennie Caroline Mamerow was born April 1, 1885, at Conway, Livingston County, Michigan. Baptized November 12, 1906. Died at her home in Bay City, Michigan, August 12, 1922. Leaves husband, one son, and two sisters. Funeral from the Saints' church. Sermon by E. S. White, assisted by Charles Bellinger.

IS CREATION BY CHANCE ALONE?

(Continued from page 810.)

ity that the single cell starting up this long ontogenetic track, in other words following the phylogenetic path of the race, would not break off at some point? It would seem very improbable that it would with success follow the whole of that long pathway by pure chance. To explain this some speak learnedly of ids, determinants, chromosomes, and the like.

But really, what is the probability that these determinants, etc., which after all are only inferred and have never been seen or measured, will always act just so within the cell by chance alone? In fact, it is quite a speculative presumption. Following a natural law, it becomes reasonable; following the law of chance, it is most improbable.

It seems a miracle that that path is followed correctly once. What is the probability of its being followed a billion times without a failure? Certainly it takes much more credulity to accept such an assumption than it does to accept a belief in a supreme creative intelligence.

On the other hand, there are many facts in nature, as we have pointed out before, which strongly infer an overruling intelligence. The very fact of the similarity of the different mammals would indicate a common author, rather than the pursuit of chance. The fact that the same law governs under the microscope dealing with the infinitesimal as rules when we look into the telescope at the mighty heavenly bodies argues a common lawgiver. The very adaptation of this earth for human habitants argues a design and hence a designer.

This is only a small part of the affirmative evidence. The witness within the soul of man is itself strong additional evidence, except to those who deliberately reject their own inner testimony.

S. A. B.

"Knowledge is the only fountain, both of the love and the principles of human liberty. . . . Knowledge, in truth, is the great sun in the firmament. Life and power are scattered with all its beams."—Daniel Webster.

Your Big OpportunityLAST CALL

You know, of course, that you are not likely to start to school when you are old—at least few people do.

And you know that every time you defer beginning your course you add to the improbability of your EVER starting to college.

So when we refer to your "Big Opportunity" and call your attention to the dates on which you may make your upward start towards success, higher service, and greater efficiency, we are SAYING something that deserves your most earnest attention.

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday
SEPTEMBER 14, 15, and 16

On these dates your "Big Opportunity" will look you squarely in the face. Will you grasp it? Will you have the vision to picture yourself a dozen years in the future? Will you be able to realize that if you are educated your chance to get on in the world and to be of the greatest service will be a thousand times better than it will be if you miss the opportunity for an education?

Of course you will. But—and here's the test—will you have the good JUDGMENT to do NOW the thing you ought to do? Or will you wait and wait, while your neighbor boy or girl makes the temporary sacrifice and attends college, thus making the preparation essential for the work of life?

What do you say?

Don't let neglect fool you into failure.

This is the last call for this college year.

Graceland College

Lamoni, Iowa

OPENS SEPTEMBER 14

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, September 6, 1922

Number 36

EDITORIAL

What Is Our Own?

Man, being an animal, can apprehend the animal kingdom through all five senses. He can hear, smell, taste, feel, and see. The mineral and vegetable kingdoms, however, he cannot hear, but he can smell, taste, see, and feel. Of the elements, pure water he can neither hear nor smell, but he can taste, feel, and see it. Fire he can only see, feel, and hear. Air he feels, though he may see its results. But life is beyond all of his senses; he can grow only through apperception and faith.

God, therefore, in Christian stewardship, has led man up to a perception not only of the material world, but of his responsibility to him, so that things might be transmuted into real personal possession. Stewardship is a test of character. Riches are often a burden in getting, anxiety in keeping, a temptation in using, and many times of guilt in abusing. Those who treat riches as a trust will find that the exercise of Christian stewardship affords a safeguard. It is not enough to say, "I have surrendered all"; but life must show the practical proof.

A blacksmith in Cleveland for years contributed $350 a year to maintain a missionary in Africa as his own personal stewardship. He earned $25 a week and supplemented this by overtime and thus was able to support his family comfortably while contributing generously to the church and other charitable work. What others would have wasted in tobacco or strong drink, he invested in bringing eternal life to many. But real stewardship cannot be measured in terms of money.

The rich young man had been tithed, yet it was not enough. There may be the giving of oneself, as was the case with a missionary in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, who never received a salary of more than six hundred dollars, often less; yet during the forty-two years of service he took into his own home forty young men and fitted them for college. To-day they are leaders as ministers at home and abroad; as physicians, as lawyers, and one is a college president.

Stewardship principles should be applied to everyday problems. Jesus led the way in attempting to conquer pride in his disciples' hearts by washing their feet. He gave the classic illustration in the Good Samaritan who knew how to save as well as how to spend, so that he had supplies and knew how to give when there was need.

The great cause of wars is covetousness; the great cause of unrest is likewise covetousness. The recognition of our responsibility to God, of our brotherhood one with another, offers the solution for our problem.

We have above completed a few short articles in review on the book on Christian Stewardship written by David McConaughy, the author of Money, the Acid Test, issued by the Presbyterian Church. We have given it at some length for two reasons: to give a review of some of the principles involved, and to show how far others are advancing, both in theory and practice, in this respect. S. A. B.

More on Stewardships

The grading idea in stewardships is interesting at least.

The ninth and tenth lessons on Christian stewardship as published by the Presbyterian Church, set forth seven grades of stewardship. First, there is dispute as to whether tithing is a universal obligation or only legalistic. The first grade, however, is stated to be the tenth, which was found not only among the ancient Jews, but tablets disclosed that tithing was also a custom in Egypt, Assyria, Chaldea, Babylonia, India, and China. In China, in the Li Ki, a tenth of the year's expenditure was for sacrifice. This is probably an earlier ancient tradition. Professor Sayce, in the Religion of Ancient Egypt and Babylon, states a tithe of all the land was theirs (the authorities') and was rigorously exacted for the support of the temples and priests. "Babylon, in short," he says, "was the inventor of the tithe." Xenophon's Anabasis states that they divided the money raised from the sale of captives, and a tenth they took out for Apollo and for the Ephesian Artemus. The generals took each a part to keep for the gods. It is also stated that in the city of Carthage one tenth of the residue from the siege of Sicily was dedicated to the gods. Selden, in his Historical Tithes, says the Arabians required every merchant to give one tenth of his frankincense. It thus appears to have been a very ancient practice.

The second grade of tithes was called tithes in patriarchal times. The amount is not different, but it was a tithe devoted exclusively to religious purposes in recognition of God's sovereign right and a recognition of the fact also that the priests should pay tithing as well as the laity.

The third grade, under the Israelites as a nation, required that each head of a family give one tenth of all his yearly increase to the tribe of Levi (Numbers 18: 20-24), and in addition a second tithe for the support of the three temple feasts. (Deuteronomy 16: 16, 17.) Then once in three years a tithe was required for the poor. (Deuteronomy 14: 28, 29.) But the question is raised whether this is really a third tithe or whether every third year the tithe for the Levites was laid up at home instead of the sanctuary. (Deuteronomy 26: 12.) Some from this suppose that the Jewish heads of families were under religious obligation to give, when one includes the sin and trespass offerings with the long and costly journey to the temples and other religious charges, an amount of perhaps one third or more.

These Presbyterian lessons make a fourth grade, that of Zaccheus when he said, "The half of my goods I give to the poor." This is loving thy neighbor as thyself, even to giving a half.

The fifth grade is called the Silver Rule. It is not limited by any percentages, but is "as we are prospered." This is the passing from Sinai, they say, to Calvary, though our Lord mentioned tithing in Matthew 23: 23. This so-called Silver Rule is found in 1 Corinthians 16: 2, to which they add the suggestion, "Make your offerings according to your income or the Lord may make your income according to your offerings."

They then find a sixth grade in the statement of Paul in 2 Corinthians 8: 105, the giving of their own selves, a giving to their power and beyond. This means, evidently, giving to the point of actual sacrifice.

In the seventh, a certain widow gave her all. This is the summation of stewardship, the recognition of the divine right of ownership in the earth and all it contains by the consecration of life and all it includes.

While we may not attempt, and do not, such gradations, we do recognize that there is a difference between the paying of tithing either on increase or gross income, though the latter is not the teaching of the church, and a full consecration under real stewardship.

We may note with interest that these Presbyterian lessons point out the danger of their being fixed standard for our giving which becomes the case with a full consecration of ourselves. Thus some, like the deacon, may thank God that the gospel is free. He had belonged to the church for forty years and it had never cost him a cent.

Another one, where the subject of proportionate giving came up, said quite sanctimoniously that since he was wholly consecrated, all that he had now belonged to God; hence he could not offer any mere fraction. The leader of the class replied quite quickly, "If I were the Lord and you were to say that to me I would say fifty per cent off for cash."

Or again, a certain minister, in discussing the tithe with a fellow minister, said, "A tenth! Why I have given God ten tenths: I am devoting my whole life to his service." But his attitude was a stumblingblock to his own family and the whole church.

Under the Mosaic law, the Levites who were supported by the tithings of the people in their turn paid tithing. The first of everything should be offered to the Lord.

In the maintaining of Christian stewardship, accounting is indispensable. Those who do not keep account cannot be sure that they are meeting their obligations as they should. Particularly is this true of expenditures beyond the bare necessities. Some may be like a certain young lady in a recent book who said, "A tenth indeed! I think Mr. Randolph is perfectly morbid on the subject. Of course, I do not keep an account of how much I give; I'm not such a Pharisee as that; but I'm sure it is much more than a tenth. Indeed, I should not be surprised if I gave almost a twentieth!"

Accountancy reveals the character. As Daniel Webster replied to the question of the greatest thought that ever entered his mind, "My accountability to Almighty God." As we have urged this subject of proper accounts before, we shall not now repeat, but every family should have a budget showing the living expenses, self-improvement, and pleasure under separate headings, and also savings; and distinctive from this, the amount given to the Lord, showing the offerings. It perhaps is best divided under the three headings of living expenses, of that set apart for giving and that which is saved.

The income tax is training many people for proper stewardship accountancy, since they did not of their own accord. Man is a trustee. To make proper offering he must keep strict account. He must have a definite plan of giving. A certain lawyer in one of the Southern States who was quite widely known for his ability, upon his death stood revealed through some very commonplace books of accounts. He kept separate his personal account and that with the Lord. He set down month after month his receipts, including legal income, interest, dividends, legal fees, and increase in the value of his investment. He set down estimated advances in the land values or in the rise in value of bonds. For thirty years no gains in value in assets were failed of entry in the account.

He also set down his expenditures, including even the smallest item for fruit or shoe polish, including also presents to friends, physicians' fees, and traveling expenses. But almost always the first item was the tithe. If at the end of the year, in balancing his books, he found he had paid an excess of tithing he balanced the account. Never was the excess carried over to his credit for the next year. In addition to tithing, from time to time he paid out various offerings to various charitable institutions.

This brief review shows what some others are doing. We claim the perfect plan. Are we doing more?

Graceland College Day

A time when we can demonstrate our loyalty to education.

It is becoming more and more apparent that we must have truly educated men and women for the work of Zion. By truly educated men and women we mean those who have first a firm faith in God and in his work which continues, have also added all that Paul meant by virtue, who choose those things that are lovely, those things that are good; who are devoted and consecrated to the common good and the work of God; and who, possessing such faith and purpose, have developed their natural capacity for service. After all, the right definition is, The purpose of education is preparation for life; the test of life is the capacity for service.

If we are to do the work of the church we should know the fundamental principles on which others have proceeded and have succeeded or failed. We should, in other words, possess a knowledge of "all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.)

It is necessary that we shall develop and use our talents if we are to be capable of understanding the things of our heavenly Father. We must grow up spiritually and intellectually if we are to prepare ourselves to receive the greater blessings which he is ready to bestow.

It is quite true that education is not synonymous with school knowledge, nor with a knowledge of books. It is rather the ability to understand and appreciate the life around us, and to respond thereto. It is rather the extent to which our learning has become a part of ourselves, so that we can use it. It is not simply the amount of learning stored away in the attic.

But at the same time, in books we have summed up the learning of the ages, the experience of man for thousands of years past. We have at our hand the learning of Aristotle, of Plato, as well as Roger Bacon, and Edison, and men of the present day. Also in a school is the most effective way for learning, especially where the teaching is given its practical trend through the project method, so that one increases not only in knowledge but also acquires right habits and attitudes and strengthens them. The school gives one an opportunity to devote his time primarily, if not exclusively, to this work of preparing himself by developing the natural talents already given him of God.

The value to the church in having a school of our own to which we can send our young people during the critical period can hardly be overestimated; the value of the work in a school where service and consecration is the watchword, and in which our young people are associated with men and women not only well trained for their special scholastic work but also called of God for service in his church.

No institution of higher learning is self-supporting. The student pays but a fraction, sometimes as little as one tenth of the cost. The percentage paid by the student at Graceland College is much higher than that, but it is not just that the students be required to pay sufficient to meet the whole expense of their training, because society, and the church in particular, have a direct interest in that special preparation, and this is especially true with our church where we expect many of these young people, after finishing college, to enter into the service of the church. It is right that the church should bear at least a portion of the burden. It is right that those of us who appreciate what is being done by Graceland should give her our voluntary support.

The method the church has adopted is, first the College Day collection. That which we contribute to Graceland College on College Day this year, September 24, will relieve not only the necessities of the college, but also the burden on the church and the general tithes and offerings, because this direct support to the work of education to that extent relieves the church of its special burden.

The Bishop has sent out letters to the various branches and to the missionaries, not only approving, but urging that this day be fully recognized. We would urge that the Saints respond as the Lord has blessed them, and that they respond generously. Of recent years the College Day collection has been far below what it should be. This condition doubtless arises from a failure to appreciate fully the work there being undertaken and accomplished.

This is a splendid opportunity. Let all who have attended Graceland College and received of her benefits respond liberally themselves, and also let others know what Graceland has meant to you and urge them to match your liberality. Let all those whose educational work has been taken elsewhere, but who appreciate its value and need for the church, also respond, that this portion of the work of the church may be greatly strengthened. September 24 is the one opportunity that is given to the church to help in this important work. Let us respond as our means will permit, and let us then pray that God will bless our donation to the blessing of his church in an outpouring of his Spirit that we may become better prepared for the service before us. And let us pray that the spirit of wisdom may be manifested by all.

Things to Which We May Tie

In these days of stress and distraction there are some things we find consolation in.

The confused state of the world must have reacted upon the individual mind. There has been a breaking down of standards. One writer states that the trouble is not so much a lowering of standards as it is an absence of all standards. The old standards of belief and conduct are gone. A great many men and women have no fixed belief and no well-defined, soul-gripping ideals and principles by which to govern their conduct. In that condition they are swayed from day to day by emotional states and do good or bad according to the dominant emotional impulse. Not conforming to law, according to the Book of Commandments they can neither be sanctified nor saved by law:

And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willetth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment, therefore, they must remain filthy still.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.

Added to the changes in moral concepts and the breaking down of old beliefs, political and economic changes in the world are so kaleidoscopic as to leave the individual confused and bewildered. In the midst of all this, a man is wise to take stock of his beliefs, to find such permanent things as appear safe and worthy to tie to, and by which he may stand, come what will.

We may make bold to say that in the church also there have come some conditions that must inevitably have distressed the observing individual. The beauty of the gospel, its simplicity, its power, its virtue, and its truth grow brighter and better and more admirable to us as the years go by. But slowness to approximate its demands, bickering and contention, lack of unity among quorums, quarrels in branches and districts, become distressing and sometimes almost unbearable to the observer who longs for unity and internal peace and power and forward progress; while to the one who is required to exercise administrative functions in the endeavor to set in order, the distress is multiplied until he may be pardoned if sometimes there comes to him a wayward desire to quit and be free from it all. Yet there is this consolation. A teacher in mathematics may find in his class many who blunder and who disregard the principles of mathematics and so never do work out their problems, and his soul may be distressed and perplexed, but he can take consolation in the thought that the principles are true, and where even two or three in his class abide by them and work in harmony with them their truth is verified and reaffirmed. These two or three who obey the laws of mathematics become the living witnesses. If the whole class should fail, the teacher can demonstrate to his own satisfaction that he has taught the truth. The fault has not been with the principles.

In the midst of this world confusion and the troubles confronting the church, there are certain things to which the individual member may well cling. The first of these is the truth and divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ (which is indeed the power of God unto salvation) and the divine Sonship of Christ himself and his power and willingness to save those who believe his law and do his will. To this may be added the truth of that which is termed the Great Restoration, the bringing back of the gospel in its simplicity and purity in these last days.

In private life the individual may well cling to the ancient, rock-bottomed, Christian virtues and graces—honesty, temperance, chastity, humility, faith, and charity. These things never can fail, no matter what confusion and disaster may come to church or state. They will make the individual who has them “neither barren nor unfruitful,” but very profitable indeed in the Lord’s vineyard, and will comfort and stay him when all else fails. “Now abideth”—thank God for some abiding principles—“Now abideth faith, hope, and charity.”

To the things above mentioned the individual church member may well add the old-time virtues of frugality and economy, particularly in view of the present financial situation in the church. That should be the attitude of the minister in his own personal expense account. It was admonished by the revelation given through the late President Joseph Smith some years ago. He should spend wisely and only so liberally as is consistent with the needs of the situation and the coordinating needs of his brethren. The wife in the care of the family expense should be equally willing to be frugal and economical and to ask only such portion of the available funds of the church as is consistent with the needs of other ministers' families the world over. The revelation referred to above, in the light of present conditions, was and is timely and purposeful:

The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.—Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.

The church itself may very well tie up to a few great duties devolving upon it and attempt to perform them well. The first of these is the duty to preach the gospel, under the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." And that means primarily to preach the pure, clean, powerful, saving, fundamental principles of the gospel—faith and repentance and baptism and the kindred principles that are gathered up under the commission, "Cry repentance to this generation." The need to cry repentance to this generation and to preach the gospel in its purity and power becomes more and more imperative, to the point where failure would be appalling. As the Apostle Paul said, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." The need of preaching repentance mounts higher and becomes more and more insistent as the world lapses in sin, folly, violence, and anarchy.

The next great duty devolving upon the church is to feed, sustain, and nurture those who are "of the kingdom," to educate them and indoctrinate them with the truths of the gospel and the true principles of right living as followers of Jesus Christ. And no part of that work is more important than that which has to do with the training, teaching, and saving of our children. It is gratifying to know that a great many of the younger generation, young men and women of the church, are profoundly impressed with that important part of our work and are coming to emphasize the necessity of religious education among our own children, beginning at a very early day in their lives, even in the cradle itself. To us who are older their theories may seem radical, and we may doubt the ability to teach children at such a young age, but we must admit that it is better to endeavor to teach before perception has begun to dawn on the part of the child, than to wait until it is too late, or perhaps altogether neglect this duty, as has so often been the case in the past.

Refraining from any effort to impress the world or to do spectacular things, the church, to use a homely expression, should attend strictly and diligently to her own knitting—knitting the missionary robe for those who warn the world and the pastoral robe for those who tend and feed the flock.

If the church will demonstrate its willingness to enter upon a period of economy, of careful, frugal, high-minded living, in order to lead to the accomplishment of these two great purposes, the evangelizing of the world through missionary efforts and the conservation and salvation of our own people, particularly our children and young people, we are sure that it will be very greatly blessed in that act.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

College Day September 24

The great adventures of life are not all in the realm of present-day fiction. Nor are they all embedded in the story of the past. Each day sees brave spirits venturing forth to the unknown and untried. Especially is this true of those who are making the history of the kingdom of God on earth. And the achievements of these men and women are alive with all the heroism and interest of the "best sellers." Yet many of those who yearn for the kingdom's advance in our day are unaware of the great things that are going on.—Kingdom News, p. 5.

A letter from Elder E. Y. Hunker, written en route to Norway, and mailed from Porsgrund, Norway, on August 21, says the party consisting of Brother Hunker and wife, Peter Muceus, and Nels P. Hansen had a fairly pleasant trip and were in good health as they neared their new field of labor. Brother Hansen went on to Denmark.

Periunt et imputantur,—the hours perish and are laid to our charge.—Inscription of a dial at Oxford.

College Day September 24

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Functions of the Presidency in Relation to the Work of the Bishopric

By J. A. Koehler

There is need for better understanding on these points.

1. "Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom"; but after ninety years of opportunity and endeavor to build the kingdom of Zion ("which is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9), as a people we seem to be about as far from effecting this purpose as if we had not begun; and the vision of the task (if vision it may be called) is so obscure, and the opinions, sentiments, and notions so multitudinous and incompatible as to make a united effort almost an impossibility.

2. It is our purpose to point out what we believe to be the ultimate cause of this state of affairs. We do this, not in the spirit of criticism, but wholly from a sincere desire and longing to have the causes of disunity and inaction done away. Our position may not be wholly correct in some of its details, some conditions may be overdrawn and some underestimated, but we have a strong conviction that our premises and deductions are fundamentally correct.

3. One of the traditions—the common beliefs concerning the question in hand is that the temporalities of the church, the fashioning of our Zionite policies and institutions, the interpretation of our economic doctrines, the presidency and administration of temporalities in the church are matters with which the First Presidency has little or nothing to do; that the chief functionaries in this department of church work are the Bishopric and not the Presidency. This tradition has made us unwilling to allow the Presidency to function as intended; and out of this attitude towards the Presidency, and the consequent nonperformance of certain functions by it, has arisen the confusion that persists in relation to the redemption of Zion, with all that that phrase comprehends.

4. When a few years ago the President of the church in his message to General Conference suggested that the work of the Bishopric be brought more closely under the supervision of the Presidency, there were many who protested because they believed the President had a misconception of prerogatives; and some even surmised that this intimation or recommendation grew out of an ambition for something approaching a dictatorship. I confess that I joined in some of the current feelings about the matter (a "feeling" it was, and not a "judgment" growing out of investigation and deliberation).

5. But the responsibilities of the last two years and the "neutrality" towards and opposition to my efforts to inaugurate the stewardship regime within the Far West Stake have led me to call in question the widespread and the divergent notions about the functions of the Presidency and of the Bishopric and to draw an independent conclusion based upon the explications and the evident implications of the law given to the church. The results of this investigation have compelled me to abandon some positions generally taken by even the men of the ministry.

Principles Governing in Judging

6. In judging this question the following principles have been relied upon:

First: The doctrine of the church must be interpreted as a whole, and each provision must be thought of in its relation to every other provision as well as to the social organization (the sum of the formal relations in which the associating individuals are held together) in its entirety.

Second: No function or power can inhere in any organ except as a part of the whole, and such functions or powers must accord with the general plan of action as formulated by the law-devising organ or organs of the group.

Third: The functions and prerogatives of minor or subordinate or subsidiary offices must be determined or ascertained by reference to those of the primary or major or superior offices; and the former must always be subject or subservient to the latter.

Fourth: A distinction must be made between normal functions and emergent or exigent functions; and the latter may be exercised or performed only because and when and while emergencies or exigencies exist.

7. In judging this matter, the circumstances of the origin and development of this church surely are significant; they are in fact the landmarks which point out the course that should be taken in the administration of the affairs of the church; they reveal the principles of government which partly give the church its identity. In reason we cannot claim identity or the right of existence under and because (among other things) of the operation of specific laws of government and at the same time continue to claim that identity without continuing to subscribe to or fulfill the conditions of that law. The genetic processes, the fundamental and distinguishing relations that made this church divine, are at once the processes or relations by which alone its divinity can be maintained.

Facts on Origin and Development

8. What are the facts concerning the origin and development of our church?

First: We see the call of God to one individual selected for the purpose of communicating revelations and commandments to the (prospective) church. After the organization of the church the following principle of government was adopted: "There is no other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me"; "and this shall be a law unto you, that you receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments"; "and no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant . . . (the president of the church), for he receiveth them even as Moses, and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2; 27: 2.) "Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto his words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2. Thus it is clear that this church came into existence, as it also realized its development, under a principle of government which limits the lawgiving (or law-communicating) function to the President, who is at once the prophet, and to his successors in office. This is the functionary whose office it is to be "inspired of the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation of [the church], and to build it up unto the most holy faith" (Doctrine and Covenants 19: 1), and to preside over its affairs.

9. We would be guilty of self-contradiction and the grossest kind of inconsistency as well as infidelity to the cause to which we pledged ourselves, if we voted to "sustain" this office and the one who fills it as "prophet, seer, and revelator to the church," and then said of him or to him that "We know that God spoke to Moses [or Joseph, et al], as for this fellow, we know not whence he is." We should either sustain the functionary, or dismiss him as unfit for this holy calling, or repudiate the doctrine. And what is true concerning this specific function is true also of all other functions that inhere in this office.

10. Second: It was provided that two other men were to be associated with the President and that they were to be "equal with [him] thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3), but not equal with him in the right to receive revelations and commandments to the church, except as witnesses and for the purpose of insuring the church that what is given through the president is in fact the will of God. It is according to the will of God, and with our sense of the fitness of things that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word be established." (See 2 Corinthians 13: 1; Deuteronomy 19: 15; John 8: 17; Doctrine and Covenants 6: 13.) These three men, the President and his counselors, compose the First Presidency of the church. It is upon the testimony of the First Presidency that the church is asked to adopt rules of government. "The keys of the kingdom belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood." (Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1.) It is the function and the prerogative of these men to have "the spirit of revelation" (see Doctrine and Covenants 8: 2, 3; 27: 3), to find out the mysteries of the kingdom of God (see Doctrine and Covenants 6: 5, 13; 10: 3; 34: 5; 43: 3; 64: 2; 87: 5); and it is their business to expound the scriptures and teach the doctrines of the church to the ministry of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 23: 4; 27: 1, 2; 43: 2; 85: 39.)

11. Notwithstanding the members of this First Presidency "preside in council [or as a body of men chosen to administer affairs of government] and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5), it is still true that the President is first in authority—he is the "first elder" in the church (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1), and his counselors are "second" elders. Of the second elder it is said that the first elder "is at thy head, and at the head of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2), and stands foremost in the right to "the keys of the mysteries and the revelations" and in the right to preside.

12. This rule does not create a dictatorship as some seem to suppose. The church may or may not permit these men to function in its midst as God designs. But we cannot escape the conclusion that the success of the efforts of any group of men to build the kingdom—the success of this church in that effort—is conditioned in an acceptance of the will of God as it is revealed through the men chosen to fill the office of Presidency. And this function of receiving revelations and commandments to the church may never be taken over by other organs—it belongs peculiarly and exclusively to the presidency of the high priesthood.

Functions of Presidency

The functions of the presidency then are—

- (a) To hold the keys of the kingdom. (Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1; 87: 3.)
- (b) To unfold the mysteries of the kingdom. (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.)
- (c) To teach the revelations of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 23: 4; 27: 1, 2; 43: 2; 85: 39; 122: 1, 2.)
- (d) "To preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

Listen: Not all the affairs of the church except the temporalities, but "all" the affairs of this church. It is impossible, therefore, that there should be any department or aspect of church work over which the Presidency does not either immediately or mediately preside.

13. What the rights and limitations of any subsidiary organ in this church are must be ascertained by reference to the rights and limitations of this, the major, the foremost, the superior organ of organs, which has the right of presidency and to set in order all the affairs of the church. Whether or not certain functions require to be performed by this presidency depends upon what the conditions are in the body as a whole or in its parts. Such rights to function as are ascribed to the Bishopric or any other office surely must be second to the rights of the major office, and must be done in the light of the facts regarding the functions of the superior office—the First Presidency. And whatever powers inhere in the Bishopric, they inhere in that office as a part of the whole; and the whole is presided over by the Presidency.

14. Third: What we see next follows logically and necessarily as an outgrowth of the first and second. We see that every office in this church has place in the church under the administration (either immediately or mediately) of the First Presidency. We see that the functions of each and every office as well as the doctrines and modes of administration are determined by the advice and counsel or the direction of the Presidency and the concurrence and choice of the membership. Under this principle every other office becomes subsidiary to the office of the Presidency. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 2.) With regard to the Bishopric, the First Presidency selects, ordains, and designates the fields of labor of each and every bishop. (Doctrine and Covenants 41: 3; 104: 8, 32.) So that the Bishopric, in common with all other offices, are adjuncts to the office of Presidency and created for the purpose of and engaged in carrying out the will of God as it is revealed through those chosen for that purpose. This is no less a fact because all these things are done by common consent in the church. It is for the church to say whether or not it will accept the leadership of those who are chosen to be leaders. Obviously these are the only conditions upon which they may become leaders of a people.

Bishops as Agents

15. Upon their nomination, choice, and ordination, the bishops become agents for the church and are charged with the responsibility of the administration of temporalities, acting as trustees for the church and custodians of its common properties. But reverting to paragraph six, no function or power can inhere in any office except as a part of the whole, and the provision for these powers of administration—for this assignment of function is not made without regard to the prior rights of the Presidency to preside over all the affairs of the church. This secondary provision does nothing more than to make the Presidency and administration of temporalities by the First Presidency mediate instead of immediate. But the major offices do not become shorn of their prerogatives because secondary offices are brought into existence to assist in carrying out the purpose for which the major offices were created, or because the duty of immediate administration is placed upon subordinate functionaries.

16. That the Bishopric is not independent of the Presidency in the administration of finances or temporalities, but that the Presidency—even after the Bishopric is created—have general or prior administrative powers, is evident from the following facts:

First: The law specifies that the properties of the church are to be administered to the poor and the needy, and that the purchasing of lands and the building up of the New Jerusalem (or Zion) etc., are to be done "as shall be appointed by the high council of the church and the bishop and his council." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.) The Presidency preside over the high council.

Second: That the direction to organize, the selection of stewards, and the allotment of properties as to kinds and amounts—on the only occasions when such action was had—was given and done through and by the Presidency of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 77: 2; 81: 4; 101: 2-8.)

Third: That the members of the Presidency were members of the stewardship organizations, and in their rights as presidents had immediate charge and management of the literary or publishing concerns of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4; 70: 1.)

Fourth: That the gathering was to be directed by the Presidency and the Bishop. (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2.)

And fifth: That as advisers the high council (over which the Presidency presides) is over the Bishopric in the administration of temporalities. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.)

All Offices Subject to Presidency

17. In reviewing the origin and development of the church we find, sixth: That subject only to the rights of Presidency herein set forth, each and every officer in the church has certain rights and powers to exercise in the field in which he is set apart to labor. But the sense in which each presides, interprets, or administers must be judged by reference to the powers of the Presidency which has the superior and prior right to "set in order and preside over all the affairs of the church." It should be clear that no subsidiary office has rights and powers of administration or interpretation, or whatnot, independent of or not limited by the prior rights or prerogatives of the Presidency, otherwise the "burden of the care of the church" would not be upon the Presidency, neither could they "preside over and set in order all of the affairs of the church."

18. Such are the functions of the Presidency in relation to the work of the Bishopric; and "Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1, 2.) Our misconception of relations has left us unwilling to allow the Presidency to function as intended; we have set ourselves against the principle of government which gives the First Presidency the power to "preside over and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom"; and the fruit is lack of understanding, confusion, and a most lamentable failure to progress towards the ideals set before the church.

19. Associated with and in a sense forming part of the Presidency for certain purposes, are twelve high priests who together with the First Presidency compose the Standing High Council of the church, as already stated.

Functions of High Council

I confess that I have not been able to judge to my own satisfaction precisely what all the functions of the high council are. Certain it is, however, (see Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10) that the resources of the church "shall be kept in my storehouse to administer (rights of administration here) to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed (designated, fixed upon, established, or ordained) by the high council of the church and the Bishop and his council"; and for the other purposes specified.

20. In referring to the functions of the high council, section 122, Doctrine and Covenants, presents some problems difficult of solution. Paragraph five states that the twelve were instructed to perform an emergent function: They were to "take measures in connection with the bishopric to execute the law of tithing," etc. Normally the Twelve are called "to go into all the world to preach my gospel" (Doctrine and Covenants 16: 5); they are "traveling counselors" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11); they are to "travel and preach" under the direction and counsel of the Presidency (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 3) and to extend the borders of the kingdom, setting all other officers in their places in the church; but having done this, they are to continue this work of extension by moving out into new fields; evidently not having normally the care of organized territory. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8.) It is not to be presumed, however, we believe that the Twelve are not to be available for such presidency and administration of affairs in organized territory as the circumstances or condition of the work may require and the First Presidency direct.

21. But an emergency had arisen; the church was scattered and torn; the membership had lost confidence; and the son of the Martyr, the late Joseph Smith, "had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock." Now note: The quorum second in authority in spiritual things evidently took over temporarily the functions of the quorum first in authority so that "those who had been made to suffer might have assurance that I would not suffer that he whom I had called (i. e., the late Joseph Smith) should betray the confidence of the faithful nor squander the moneys in the treasury for the purposes of self." (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5.) Now, note the implication as it is brought out by the following question: How could the President of the church "squander the moneys in the treasury for the purposes of self" with the Bishop in charge of the treasury unless the President had some prior rights and powers in the administration of finances? How could he misappropriate that over which he had no charge? The implication is clear, the President did have something to do with the administration of finances and therefore he could have misappropriated funds.

22. But to insure the interests of the people, these functions of the Presidency were directed to be taken over by the Twelve temporarily, or while the exigency lasted. But this was a transfer of rights from the quorum first in authority to the quorum second in authority. The implication, then, is that the Bishopric does not have rights and powers to administer in temporalities independent of and not subject to the more general rights and powers of the Presidency. The second quorum took the place of the first, thereby becoming joint administrators with the Bishopric. Therefore, normally, the Presidency are joint administrators of finances with the Bishopric.

23. Let us refer now to paragraph six of section 122. "In the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people"—these are matters in charge of "the presidency, the twelve as a quorum, the councils or other officers of branches or stakes, . . . the conferences and the general assembly of the church, and the direction of the Lord by revelation." In an administrative way, the high council is not "over" the bishopric. That accords with section 42:10 that the high council and the Bishopric administer "jointly," or on an "equality" one with the other. But the language "except as they may do so in an advisory manner" clearly gives the high council advisory powers which are over the Bishop in the affairs of his office.

24. But this language does not warrant the inference that the presidents as such, and aside from the functions as presidents of the high council, do not have prior or superior administrative powers in a general way; but, as brought out in paragraphs 20, 21, and 22 of this article, it is evident that the Presidency does have this prior right.

25. The Presidency, however, cannot direct, try, condemn, and punish all at the same time. The presidency may "direct" in its own right, but if it wishes to "try and condemn" it must call into action the high council with its judicial functions. This is the force of the language of Doctrine and Covenants 122:6.

26. In paragraph six we laid down a rule to govern in the interpretation of doctrine. This principle is identical with the principle governing interpretation set forward in Doctrine and Covenants 122:8. Each rule must be understood or interpreted in the light of what was given before and what follows after. As an example: Doctrine and Covenants 104:30 says, "It is the duty of the twelve, also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church. . . . This word "all" is doubly emphasized—over and over. Now if this provision is thought of out of its relation to other provisions of the law, or to the law as a whole, the law is made self-contradictory, for the law says also that all bishops are to be ordained under the hands of the First Presidency. Now it cannot be true that the Twelve are to ordain all other officers in the church if a prior right is vested in the Presidency to ordain bishops.

Some Special Duties of Presidency

27. There are not a few provisions of the law which must leave wrong impressions and give rise to confusion unless the principle set forward in Doctrine and Covenants 122:8 is employed in the work of interpretation or inference. We have another instance in the provisions of Doctrine and Covenants 129:8: "The temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the Bishopric . . ."; and "The church has been instructed to accede to the rendition of the Bishopric with respect to the temporal law." Unless the principles governing interpretation are applied, the law becomes self-contradictory again, for it has been previously provided: First, that the church shall give heed to the words and commandments given through the prophet or president (Doctrine and Covenants 27:2; 43:1, 2); second, that it is the special business of the Presidency to find out the mysteries of the kingdom (see Doctrine and Covenants 6:5, 13; 10:3; 34:5; 43:3; 64:2; 87:5) and to "expound" (i. e., to explain,) the points, principles, or meanings of, to elucidate and to interpret the scriptures and the doctrines of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 23:4; 27:1, 2; 43:2; 85:39; 19:2.) And third, the presidents have a superior right "to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom." (Doctrine and Covenants 87:5.) Now, if Doctrine and Covenants 129:8 is interpreted to mean that separately and independent of and without the advice, counsel, direction, and general supervision of the First Presidency, the Bishopric have rights of interpretation and administration, the law becomes at once a mass of self-contradictions, an enigma, a puzzle in itself, and by its own nature an inevitable source of confusion. And yet such provisions of the law are over and over again thought of out of their relation to the whole, and subsidiary organs are given preeminence over the major and primary organs; they are thought of, not as parts, but as separate and independent identities.

28. It is true, as it is sensible, that having the character, scope, and field of duties defined, the Bishopric should be left to "apply" the law and to preside over and administer temporalities; and "unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to." (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.) In fact, unless more and more men individually are charged with responsibilities and left free to initiate methods for performing their tasks, and are not unnecessarily interfered with in their work, the kingdom of God can never grow and develop.

29. Personally, I have yet to find the first sign of an inclination on the part of the First Presidency to interfere with my work. I have complained somewhat of being left too much alone. But that does not mean that I as Bishop of the Far West Stake have a right to go into my field and set forth one theory of Zion and build at will, and another bishop into another stake and build on principles that contradict my theory of stewardships, and another bishop into another stake with still another idea of Zion. Surely not. The whole institution would fall into disrepute if such were tolerated. We have a head to the church, and while the "head" cannot say to the "eyes" or "hands" "I have no need of thee," surely the eyes and hands cannot say to the head we have no need of your counsel, advice, or direction. The function of the head is to direct; and until the eyes and hands and feet will allow the head to coordinate the functions of all the parts of the body there will be confusion, and no progress towards our goal is likely to be made.

Having effected a coordination, the parts of the body may then be expected to act without constant immediate oversight and direction, but when confusion arises the head again must act or disorder persist and dissolution finally set in.

30. The references made to parts of the Doctrine and Covenants to support the antithesis of our position are too numerous to be taken up and analyzed one by one in an article like this, but they are all susceptible to the very same kind of explanation as we have thus far made. The inference drawn from them cannot stand when the doctrine is interpreted as a whole.

New Hopes for Jewish National Home

By T. W. Williams

"Developments confirm the wisdom of the church mission at Jerusalem and suggest strengthening our missionary force in that land."

"The supreme council of the League of Nations approves the British Mandate for Palestine."

This cryptic message was carried on the world's wires and appeared in leading newspapers and magazines throughout the world. The contents of this message meant nothing to the uninitiated. Others, having only a slight knowledge of its meaning said, "Another potpourri for the sheeny," "Allies playing politics with Shylock," "A real Semitic menace." To the well-informed the news conveyed in this message meant more than any single act of the supreme council since the armistice.

The Zionist organization of America was not slow in following up the advantage gained through the decision of the supreme council and immediately issued a manifesto in which it rightly interpreted this action to be a confirmation of "the right of the Jewish people to establish their national home in the land from which they were exiled over nineteen hundred years ago."

There has been a very definite change of front on the part of the extreme Zionist wing in the past few years, and this also is a very hopeful sign. It will be remembered that the one thing which aroused a united Arab opposition and provoked the anti-Jewish crusade throughout Palestine and Syria the past few years was the unfortunate wording of the Balfour pronouncement in the early days of the war. Since then the British Government has had opportunity fully to express its purpose, and which in no sense does violence to the rights of the residents of Palestine.

The supreme council in its action has expressed the purpose of the League in straightforward, unequivocal terms, and which must be understood alike by the Arabic and Jewish peoples. This does not commit the allied nations to support the project of making Palestine the national home of the Jewish people. No! The council in confirming the British mandate construes this to mean the recognized right of the Jewish people to establish a national home in Palestine. Here is the difference—

a. Palestine, the national home of the Jewish people.

b. A national home for the Jewish people in Palestine.

The Arabs will never stand for the first proposition. For the Jewish people to attempt to assert their age-old claim of Palestine as their divine heritage, even though backed by such a formidable ally as Great Britain, or the League of Nations for that matter, would at once precipitate a racial and religious war with the Palestinian Arabs backed by the western world on one hand and the Jews and their allies on the other. Nothing but an overwhelming and overawing British army of occupation could possibly prevent the massacre and utter extermination of every Jew now living in Palestine.

Under this clear and definite statement of the purpose of the League of Nations, and which we sincerely hope will be enthusiastically supported by a safe and sure attitude on the part of the Zionist organizations throughout the world, it will be quite possible for the Jewish people now in Palestine and those who may migrate there, as well as the Arabs, to live side by side in peace and come in time to forget their age-old heritage of hate, and to know that even blood relatives have some things in common and when once they understand each other can live as happily together as strangers.

The manifesto of the Zionist organization in America contains the following:

We remember with gratitude the chivalrous cooperation of the men of vision and statesmanship, the representatives of great nations, who made our cause their cause, and who fought our battles as their battles and who now rejoice with us in an achievement which is an honor to them and to humanity.

It will be remembered that here in America, as well as in England, there exists a strong anti-Zionist sentiment. This prevails largely among prosperous Jewish business men who have come into affluence and power in their land of adoption and who are fearful that any propaganda, looking to an extensive Jewish migration to Palestine, would forfeit prestige and possibly minimize or even abrogate the privileges which have been won through heroic sacrifice and continued struggle, and this against tremendous odds.

There is another group willing to support any conservative move to provide homes for indigent and homeless Jewish families in the Old World, and who, because of the anti-Semitic attitude of the various governments of Europe, are in danger of extermination. Still this group is strongly opposed to the Zionist movement. The American Hebrew of New York is the mouthpiece for this group. The editor remarks, "Zionism had been eliminated and Jewish nationalism declared taboo."

This group, according to The Literary Digest, is "only interested in the economic reconstruction of the Holy Land." The members of these groups are opposed to any attempt to revive the Jewish state. They say, "Scrap Zionism and build Palestine." They urge that, "As quickly as possible the international organization of all Jews for economic rehabilitation of Palestine, which we have been urging since 1918, should go apace. The Zionist organization will in time become a part of this greater organization; the rebuilding of Palestine may now proceed."

This action of the supreme council has provoked comments favorable and otherwise, some of which we herewith reproduce as giving some excellent sidelights on the whole situation. The editor of the Brooklyn Eagle states the question fairly as follows:

To attempt to create a homeland for the Jews in ancient Palestine will be one of the most interesting experiments in history. The task of safeguarding the right of Arabs and Christians, as well as Jews, is tremendous, and the responsibility of the British Government is very great. Unlike some of the other mandates, this Palestine mandate carries with it the promise of more cost than profit for the mandatory power.

The Cincinnati Enquirer opines that under the hand of the Jew "longing to restore the sacred places of his forefathers, the dry desert is beginning to blossom like the rose." This paper deprecates the efforts of protesting elements in "defending the Arabs and Turks for wishing the country to remain as it was."

The editor of the Springfield Republican states that "there seems no longer reason to fear that the hope held out of the famous Balfour resolution for a 'national home for the Jewish people' will not be substantially realized." "The demonstrations going on in New York since the decision of the council was reached are eloquent of Jewish opinion on this point. Full realization of the hope remains, however, in the future. The British Government, zealously watched by the League of Nations, will undertake to preserve the rights of all the inhabitants of the land and allow free scope for their legitimate enterprise."

Captain W. Stanley Show, late of the Middlesex Regiment of the British Army, is quoted by the Literary Digest as follows:

What have the Turks, the Arabs, and the natives done for Palestine in the past five hundred years? Nothing! Up to 1883 the land was but a dust heap and a ruin. The question answers itself even stronger. What they have done is to increase the desolation and spread of ruin.

Casting aside all religious, national, and racial matters, it can be said that any movement to increase the arable area of the world and to bring peace and comfort to human beings who now lack them is worthy intrinsically and above criticism. If the projected restoration work is permitted to be carried through and law and order is maintained until a sound political organization is effected, the land that once flowed with milk and honey will again be sustaining millions of happy and contented people, where now there live most miserably a few more than half a million.

The Literary Digest gives assurance that "Vatican opposition to the mandate grounded on the fear that it would give the Jews political domination of Palestine is removed." It quotes a British paper which states the case in such a way as to tend to allay all religious opposition.

There will be only one status of citizenship in Palestine, and that will be Palestinian, and the document makes it quite clear that any special position which the Zionist executive may enjoy will not entitle it, in any degree, to share in the government of the country.

As to the Zionist, the heads of the Zionitic organization have given assurance that their activities will be carried on in accordance with the policy set out in the official statement, which, on the face of it, implies and virtually promises an abandonment of the plans for making Palestine a Jewish political state.

The American Jewish World affirms that the provisions of the mandate, while conferring a privilege, at the same time imposes a responsibility which makes it "a test of manhood and merit." It continues:

Non-Zionism and anti-Zionism can never again take the same position as before the mandate. The public opinion of the world recognized the needs, the possibilities, the promise of Palestine for the Jews. The Jews must do the building! The world can give its approval, its moral support, its sanction, but the accomplishment must be of and by the Jew. Those who have all along been ardent will not dare fall back now. Those who have been aloof cannot stand back indifferent. Palestine calls for a united Israel to rebuild it. Shall the call fall on deaf ears? That we can never believe.

And what does all this mean to the Church of Jesus Christ? Developments confirm the wisdom of the church in establishing a mission in Jerusalem, and clearly suggest the strengthening of our missionary force in that land. We should enter in and occupy and fulfill the divine command to bring these people to a knowledge of God and Jesus Christ.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Cultivating the Soul

The desire to have lived when Jesus walked among men in the flesh, and to have been privileged to realize the glow and enthusiasm which personal contact with him would give, need not be laid aside in despair. The greatest contribution which Jesus would have made to our lives would be the great ideas of God and his kingdom which he taught and interpreted. These great ideas have been lived out in practice by thousands since that day. The interpretation of the way of life set forth by Jesus as seen in the lives which they lived has broader and more far-reaching significance than the few illustrations which we might have seen at the hand of the Master. All manner of conditions and problems have been touched by the teachings of Jesus. Methods of making practical each teaching have been preserved in the stories of those who have tried and succeeded. The way that obstacles have been overcome, by-paths to avoid, the encouragements available, all are made plain for the adventurer in spiritual fields to-day.

What better companionship for the quiet hour than a book alive with the development of an untutored soul into a great world leader in the affairs of the kingdom. How encouraging to read that the handicaps and obstacles overcome by "the Saints" were just the same human difficulties and temptations with which we struggle to-day. How delightful to sit and turn the pages as a strong, fine thinker carries us through our own doubts and misgivings to a place where we find sure footing for all time.

It is said that a man is known by the people with whom he associates. A man also becomes known by the books that he reads. For the thoughts which become his in the quiet hours spent with a book often take stronger hold upon his thinking and life than the ideas proposed by a neighbor across the way. Whether they are presented in cold, dispassionate essay, or with the red-blooded argument of a character in a story, the propaganda put forth is in such form as to permit studying without the embarrassing demand for an immediate conclusion. In that personal privacy of mind which the presence of another person ever prevents, is opportunity for such unhurried appraisal as is essential for the full mastery of another's ideas.

The habit of reading for the purpose of securing soul-guidance and strength is easy to acquire. A little reading of this kind each day soon gives a new stimulus to life. The fresh viewpoints obtained make the day's task a field for adventure. The fellowship of those "who follow in his train" gives a sense of companionship in Life's great adventure. The constantly growing sense of power and assurance because of increased knowledge of the Way helps to convictions that rapidly ripen into service which is of constructive value to the Kingdom. Conversation becomes replete with a new and virile Christian vocabulary. The entire outlook of life is changed. And the delights enjoyed stir to seeking for more reading of the same kind until the one-time self-centered Christian man or woman becomes akin to all the brave souls who have through their lives and pens given to the world an interpretation of the things brought into the thinking of the race by the Son of God.

Wise counselors of youth have ever commended this fellowship of the best in Christian literature. The Reformation saw the possibility of multiplying the message by the timely arrival of the printing press. John Wesley early advocated that his followers read and study for the purpose of cultivating their soul-life. And the many groups of study-classes throughout the church to-day indicate that our own day is awake to the great value of books which give to the developing Christian life faith, knowledge, and definite data of the Kingdom's progress. . . .

There is not a pastor but who can make suggestions. Just a sign of interest will bring to your doors lists of the treasures of Christian literature. From these may be selected those books which in a winter's reading will alter the currents of thinking and turn all one's spiritual power towards a definite purpose and service. The reading of books for soul culture is a task which returns to the reader large compensation in soul growth, spiritual vision, and kingdom outlook. It is one of life's choicest privileges, and it is available for all.—Kingdom News, pp. 8, 9.

Education—in What?

"Education," declares our good friend Mrs. Maud Wood Park, in addressing the International Convention of the League of Women Voters the other day, "is the reliance of our democracy."

Sure, Mike, and amen to these lofty sentiments! But education in what? They all have grand educations, those million of voters. They can spell a little, write a fairly legible hand, and bound the Ukraine, and toss around logarithms, and make angel food cake and quarter-sawed oak music-racks, and chatter about the Shakespeare folio—but what do the kids know—really? Which one of them knows how to define a grafter? Who can tell in plain, one-word language why it is wrong to take the interest on public funds, if the law does not specifically declare the appropriation of the interest a crime? What graduate from our common schools knows a social act from an anti-social act? What child ever learned at school any fundamental definition of patriotism outside of flag waving and creed memorizing, or baiting the foreigners, or being a "100 per cent American"?

The trouble with education as a panacea for the ills of democracy is that it is all outside of the needs of democracy. We spend billions to teach children nothing about right or wrong in our public morals, and jam their poor heads full of perfectly useless facts and theories about things that are unrelated to the safety of the republic as the moon dogs.—William Allen White, in Judge.

Thrift Talks

Success is the result of effort intelligently and wisely directed.

Success does not grow on trees, nor is it wished into existence.

Success is hammered out on the anvil, plowed into the furrows, written into books, sung into a song, born in the brain and purposed and directed by the heart.

Success has no substitutes.

Success gives full weight and gets back its equivalent, never watches the clock, works as faithfully when the boss is away as when present, always gives the best and wants the best.

You cannot do otherwise and satisfy the demands of your own conscience. Tithe payers, aim for success, work for success, and reach success.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Come to Conference!

As the time approaches for the great gathering of the Saints in general conference capacity, we feel impressed anew with the urgent spiritual need of individual members to be present and partake of the outpouring of good things which will there be given. Burdened and engrossed from hour to hour, and from day to day, with the material and entangling activities of this earthly life, as we are, sometimes our spiritual natures droop and fade because of the lack of re-vivifying influences. We drift along, without thought or consciousness of our drifting, until suddenly we awaken to the fact that we have become cold or indifferent concerning many things which once were meat and drink to our souls! Or, worse still, we find ourselves in grooves of habit, grinding along in a semi-service which has in it little vitality or appreciable results.

It is time for new showers of blessings. It is time for new ideas and new perspectives. It is time for new visions of our goal, a new sense of the ideals towards which the church is moving, surely, however slowly. Who of us cannot be benefited by coming to the General Conference, and there establishing the new contacts our spirits need; being baptized anew in the waters of unity and consecration, and building afresh the structure of our faith and hope?

The general superintendent of the Department of Women expresses the wish that every woman in the church who can "find a way or make one" to attend the conference, will do so. She writes of her plans briefly, telling of the department sessions at which vital and absorbing subjects will be discussed, of talks and lectures, for which are being enlisted some of the best talent in the church, specialists along various lines, and, best of all, a program of procedure upon which the several leading departments of the church will unite.

The "signs of the times," lately, seem to indicate that the Women's Department, the Sunday school, Religio, Health, Educational, Music, and other departments may in the near future, lose some of their present lines of demarkation and a more precise and scientific adjustment of their work be made in order that it may be the more efficiently performed. Should some definite progress in this adjustment be made at the coming conference, would it not be to the interest of every woman to whom has been given responsibility, such as local leadership or superintendency, or the care of the district as organizer, to be present, and to get at first hand a good and workable understanding of the progress and changes made? Much of the confusion of the past has come about because women did not put themselves in a position where they might be well-informed concerning changes which have come about in the management of the work.

Some people have complained about so many changes. They say that they no sooner get their workers lined up under one plan than it is all upset, and from headquarters comes out announcement of a quite different procedure. Dear souls! They fail to grasp the thought that changes denote progress. Where would the reapers of to-day be if they used only cradle and flail? Who would wish to journey by ox team across this teeming country? Who would choose to go back to the fireplace, crane, and brick bake-oven of our grandparents?

Nay, nay; let us cease crying out against the rapid progress which is being made, or the changes which become automatically necessary to meet new conditions! Let us rather determine that we will lose no time and spare no effort in acquainting ourselves at once, of all such changes, and putting them into effect as soon as possible, that the greatest amount of good may be done.

So come to conference! Decide to become one unit in the splendid body of Saints who will assemble to do the will of the Lord, to receive his instructions, to drink reviving draughts of inspiration and enthusiasm, to meet and greet old friends and to make new ones, between whom and yourself are established bonds like unto no others in the world!

"Come, let us reason together!" Let us sit at the feet of our Lord!

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Our Parents and Their Books

September is the month for the resumption of study. Children will be getting back to school, young people to college. What of their parents? "Study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people." Do we feel that we come under this good counsel? Is parenthood so unimportant that we need not study to discharge its duties and obligations successfully?

The study of "people" is what is undertaken when we open a text on sociology or psychology. To become acquainted with mankind is almost necessary if we would pass through this earthly existence profitably and be of benefit to our fellows. We cannot well minister to our children, our families, our neighbors, or our church, unless we know of fundamental needs, and how to most completely supply the same. Parents who concern themselves about the little minds and natures which have been given them to train and mold unto a semblance of divinity feel that the utmost they can learn, the greatest amount of information and assistance they can obtain from the study of "good books" is little enough for the accomplishment of their task in righteousness.

"Bring up your children in light and truth," in order that Satan shall have no power over them. Is it a light task, think you? Do you feel you, yourself, have a just comprehension of truth, or an adequate knowledge of the "bringing-up" processes, that you will be able to present these precious souls to God, "acceptable offering"?

Let us hope and urge that September will see not only the children of the Saints returning to their books and study, but also the parents, either in groups, or alone, with God for guide and counselor, making fresh beginnings in their search for light and truth. The tendency of the day is away from God, away from things of the Spirit. Only by utmost zeal and determination may any of us make appreciable progress in the other direction. And the danger to these little ones, in their impressionable years, is great and grave indeed. As parents we should have a definite program in our work. We should prayerfully consider what lacks there are in our home life, what needs we have in the way of knowledge and development, what environment and influences we wish to throw around our loved ones; and then, with courage and the conviction that God will be well pleased with our endeavors, patiently set out towards the goal we have set.

The Women's Department has prepared, for your help and encouragement, outlines on various subjects. These have been frequently advertised, and may all be obtained from the Herald Publishing House. In addition to the courses in Psychology, Sociology, Mothercraft, Parents' Problems, Civics, etc., which have been prominently before us the past year or two, there soon will be ready an outline of Elizabeth Harrison's splendid book, A Study of Child Nature. This book has a most admirable attitude towards child life, and no parent whose heart may be reached by an intelligent appeal for a sympathetic understanding of the little ones committed to his care, can read Mrs. Harrison's book without feeling a new determination to deal wisely and justly with his children.

Another new outline is "elementary biology," based on that simple but beautifully-told story of life and its beginnings written by Ellen Torelle, viz, Plant and Animal Children; How They Grow. Even adults who have read and studied in advance of the simple forms of this book may read and digest with profit, and be the gainers in having had freshly impressed upon their minds, some of the better methods by which a knowledge of sex truths may be imparted to the young. As a foundation for deeper study, this little book has few superiors. Ministers, to whom our young people should feel free to come with some of the innermost problems of life, would do well to make its contents their own, and from its stores of simply and purely-told truths, draw inspiration for their own kindly and spiritual ministrations. One dear young soul, set right about the God-made laws of his being, and saved from the whirlpools and eddies of to-day's hurrying tide, would be worth a hundred times the effort made in preparation for the service rendered him.

Mothercraft for Girls, simplified from the text used by Women's classes, will also soon be ready for distribution, we hope. Many of the deplorable mistakes of the past generation will be avoided by the mothers of the future, if we have our way in early teaching our girls concerning the responsibilities and duties of motherhood—that blessed crown which is almost sure to be placed upon their brows sometime in their lives. A right attitude towards this race obligation, a desire to discharge it wisely and well, a steadying of the tides of influences that seek to regard it lightly or irreverently—all this a true parent desires for his children. May the time come speedily when both fathers and mothers will have learned the fundamentals of child care and training before assuming such responsibility!

So, as September has come and your classes are forming and you are looking forward with appreciation and pleasure to the serious and worthy accomplishments of the coming season, do begin early, decide what you will undertake to do, set your goal, (and set it well up on the path, the long, long path to perfect understanding and knowledge,) and then allow nothing to dissuade or discourage or disappoint you! Perseverance brings its own rewards, even if your efforts cannot be measured by other standards! Righteous desire and patience are both coins of the spiritual realm, and their possession is worth while!

Write to our office for information about these courses of study.

Out of the Boy

In a characteristic little poem with the above caption Edgar A. Guest has given us some food for thought. He calls attention to the care with which folks will save money 'gainst future need, or treasure seed from finest flowers, that they may, later, revel in their beauty and fragrance, but how seldom they seem to remember that the boy is but the seed of the future man, and is much more worth saving and treasuring than gold or blossoms.

A fine thought conveyed in the poem, also, is that of our responsibility to the children of the "other folks." "Anybody's" boy may become the wonderful man of genius and accomplishment, and none of us should withhold the "word in season," the steadying hand, the loving counsel which may be the blessed means of saving just at some critical moment.

The closing stanza is worth pondering:

"Who touches a boy, by the Master's plan,
Is shaping the course of the future man;

Father or mother or teacher or priest,
Friend or stranger or saint or beast.
Is dealing with one who is living seed,
And may be the man whom the world shall need!
For who can measure the pride and joy
That may some day grow from a little boy?"

A. A.

About the Courses

A word of explanation in regard to the "Child Care Course" as put out by the Department of Women, is due those writing for said course. The original supply of pamphlets is exhausted and the issuance of the new edition is indefinite.

We are happy to present for your study our question outline course based on Mary L. Reed's The Mothercraft Manual, which deals very clearly, simply, and authoritatively with the care of children, and in addition presents other much needed information. Every home should have this Mothercraft Manual in its library. The text is $2.10 and the Outline is 15 cents. These can be had by writing to the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XVII

Other Business Activities

I. Interrelation of Modern Government and Business

1. Sherman antitrust law.
2. Interstate commerce laws.
3. State action.

II. Money and Banking

1. Money standards.
 - a. Bimetallism.
 - b. Market ratio and legal ratio.
 - c. Monometallism.
2. History of the American coinage.
 - a. Alexander Hamilton's recommendation in 1792.
 - b. Discuss the financial laws of 1834, 1873, 1878, 1890, and 1900.
3. Our national banking system.
 - a. Gold and silver certificates.
 - b. Bank notes.
 - c. Present national banking system established 1863.
4. The Federal Reserve system.
 - a. Its purpose.
 - b. The Federal Reserve Board.
 - c. Number of Federal Reserve Banks, their notes, and business.
 - d. Land loan banks established 1916.
5. Wages and prices.
 - a. Changes in the value of gold.
 - b. Need of comparing wages with prices of commodities.
 - c. Improvement in standards of living in America.

III. Miscellaneous Activities

1. The post office.
 - a. Its work and development.
 - b. Extension of its work in recent years.
2. Government and agricultural development.
 - a. Federal appropriations to agricultural colleges and experiment stations.

- b. Soil surveys.
- c. Plant breeding.
- d. Plant importation.
- 3. The Weather Bureau.
- 4. Indian Affairs.
 - a. Indian agents.
 - b. Aid given to Indians.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. "Deflation, the Federal Reserve system and the farmer," by George E. Roberts, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York City. In the Independent and Weekly Review, December 31, 1921.
2. "The cooperative movement," in The Saints' Herald, January 5, 1921.
3. "The Indian and the Government," by Thomas L. Sloan, in Zion's Ensign, December 16, 1921.
4. "Taking banking out of politics," in The Independent, December 11, 1920.
5. "What Congress should do," address by John Skelton Williams, former comptroller of the currency, in The Com-moner, July, 1921.
6. "The farmer and cooperative banking," by Frederick C. Howe, in The Farmer and Stockman, March 17, 1921. Mr. Howe is secretary of the Committee on Banking and Credit of the All-American Farm Labor Cooperative Commission, Machinist's Building, Washington, District of Columbia. Write him for information concerning cooperative banking or the general cooperative movement.
7. Discuss the treatment given the Indians by the Government of the United States.
8. Consult some text on political economy for short talks on the following:
 - a. Money and its use.
 - b. Fiat money.
 - c. The use of gold and silver as money.
 - d. Early banking institutions.
 - (1) Bank of Venice established in the twelfth century.
 - (2) Bank of Genoa established in the seventeenth century.
 - (3) Bank of England established at the close of the seventeenth century. DORA YOUNG.

Prehistoric Mexicans

At Chalchihuites, Zacatecas, Mexico, a room one thousand feet square has been discovered amidst the ruins of that place by J. L. Killer, of Andover, Massachusetts, according to a recent newspaper account. Many beautiful carved columns of stone have been found.

The statement is made on the authority of archæologists who have visited the ancient city at Chalchihuites and inspected the ruins brought to light by the recent excavations, that they were the work of a civilization which had no connection with the prehistoric race that built the buildings and temples that are now in ruins in southern Mexico, nor are the ruins at Chalchihuites similar in any respect to those of San Juan Teotihuacan, where the pyramids of the moon and sun are found. Neither do they bear any resemblance to the ruins at Casas Grandes in the northern part of the country. It is said to be evident that the people who built the wonderful city where the little pueblo of Chalchihuites now stands were highly cultured and especially advanced in the arts.

College Day September 24

LETTERS AND NEWS

The Church and Democracy

The word democracy comes from the Greek, and literally mean the rule of the people.

A pure democracy is where all the people of a given community or of a nation can meet together and express their will by legislative acts. Where the community is large all the people cannot meet together, and the nearest approach to democracy is to delegate to a smaller number the authority to act for the whole body. When such is done by a government, it is called a republic, and the people's democracy or will is expressed in that form.

A king when he is an absolute monarch rules without the people having a voice. A limited monarch is restrained by law and cannot do all he wishes to do without consent of the people. That is just one step towards democracy.

God, who always knows what is best for the people, does not favor kings, and he has expressed his disapproval on several occasions. In the eighth chapter of First Samuel he tells of his objections to a king and the trouble they would have if they had one, but the people wanted a king, so the Lord granted their request.

Nephi disapproved of a king. (2 Nephi 4: 28.) Alma was of the same opinion and advised the people of the troubles to come by having a king. (Mosiah 11: 7, 14.) The reference to a king is not made because of any fear that we will have a king in the church nor one at the head of our Nation, but because there is a principle involved and we should know how it will apply in our church government.

In the very beginning of the church in 1830 the Lord gave instructions so that our people could begin right: "And all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.) "For all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 27: 4.) In the Book of Mormon is found the following instructions: "Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people." (Mosiah 13: 35, 36.)

When our Government was organized in 1787 the members of the convention and many others did not want to put much power in the hands of the common people, and so the right to vote went with property qualifications in most of the states. The creation of the Senate was to get a body of men from whom at that time the common people was removed two steps. The provision for the electoral college was to get the selection of the president away from the people as far as possible.

Our Church a Religious Democracy

Our church is a religious democracy, though it also has some theocratic features, one being a prophet through whom the Lord speaks and gives us his law. The Lord had good and sufficient reasons for wanting his church to be democratic in its organization, and only two will be noted in this article, as they will be sufficient for the purpose that is had in view.

He knows that no man, nor any small group of men, can possess all the knowledge that can be connected with a given subject, nor all wisdom to apply that knowledge, and without that knowledge and wisdom it is impossible to form the best conclusions. It is an old adage, "It takes all the people in the world to know all things in the world, and each one only knows his small portion." Solomon said, "Where no counsel is, the people fall; but in the multitude of counselors there is safety." (Proverbs 11:14.) He knows that no man, or small group of men, has so far advanced in the development of character, in moral qualities, that they are not influenced in their judgment by their prejudice, their jealousy, their enmity, their desire to please, their desire for praise.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Democracy may move slowly, it may make mistakes, it may sometimes temporarily fail, but it is always moving onward and upward, and developing men in whose lives are revealed the ideals of Jesus Christ. Democracy is making men to-day whose names will be honored by the future historian for a record of faithful service in the cause of right.

There are two honored names that represent the spirit of democracy in their widely separated fields of labor; both represented Jesus Christ and interpreted his message to many. One was the late President Joseph Smith, who would grasp the hand of a sister in a calico dress and a sunbonnet in a friendly touch as quickly as the one bedecked in jewels and dressed in the garb of wealth. He could not be jealous; he could not be hateful and resentful; he honored and respected the man who with manly firmness opposed him; and he loved the brethren because of their manhood and not for their wealth.

Abraham Lincoln loved friend and foe and could not hate his enemies. He worked with men who were his political enemies, and it only made him nobler in their sight. Mr. Stanton, Secretary of War, was a man of the opposite political party with whom he had many trying episodes because of their opposite temperaments. Mr. Chase, Secretary of the Treasurer, while a member of his cabinet intrigued to defeat him for the second term for the presidency. Yet for four years he worked with them and sat in the cabinet meetings with them. Why could he do this? Because he was above the little things of the world and only gave recognition to their sterling worth as men in the service of their country.

Put on the Brakes

We need the spirit of democracy, and we need many other things, but I am only writing of that now. We are drifting from it; we must put on the brakes and stop the car before it gets going too fast; if we do not, there will be a catastrophe at the turn of the road.

We must return to the annual General Conference. The people must be brought together oftener, and especially the ministry; separation will kill out the spirit of democracy and finally spirituality. We cannot express the gospel of Jesus Christ unless we are social beings. The ministry must take upon themselves their God-given responsibility and assume their proper place as legislators, and this is especially true of the Quorum of Seventy, as the law makes them a responsible body of men, in some things equal with the Quorum of Twelve. We must not make the mistake that has been made by men of good intentions, but wrong in judgment, that the common people are too ignorant to be trusted with the responsibilities which democracy brings.

We must increase the intelligence of our people wherever it may lack. God knows the potential power resident in man and it should be brought out and not suppressed. Isolation will kill all the reserve force we possess. Intelligence, light and truth, is the great friend of democracy, and ignorance is its deadly foe. France in 1870 and Germany in 1918 became republics. With scarcely a ripple on their political seas they passed from their monarchical forms of government, and it was made possible because of the intelligence of the people. We need to reform our methods of doing business. By custom we have practically limited ourselves to from twelve to fifteen days, and it often occurs that one speaker will occupy one to three hours in speaking on a subject before the house. Such a course might be permissible where the time of adjournment was indefinite, but it is unfair to the body and others who may want to speak. It is not necessary to shut out debate within the time custom permits, but it should be divided more equally among the members. There is more knowledge from the many than from the few, and we should give better opportunity for a greater range of expression than to narrow it down to a small number. We need a permanent rule that will be more fair and just and at the same time will not prevent a proper discussion of all important questions.

Conference a School

Our General Conference ought to be the university of the ministry, where once each year they could take a post graduate course of two weeks or more in scriptural teaching of the law of the Lord as a supplement to their year's work in the itinerant ministry. It would add greatly to their efficiency, encouragement, and happiness for the years ahead of them. The teaching should be by those whom the Lord has made the interpreters and teachers of the law, the First Presidency and Bishopric (Doctrine and Covenants 122:1, 2; 129:8) and it should not be passed on to some one else. Teaching the various "ologies" of the worldly wise, and abstract and abstruse questions of doubtful utility will not get us anywhere in our gospel work. What we need and must have, if we are to go to the world in unity with our message, is that those whom God has appointed as our teachers will interpret the message of Jesus Christ to the present world in a language they can understand.

In the 119th Psalm, 105th verse, David said, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." That is what we need in our work; light to a world that sits in darkness and is dying before our message can reach them. I can imagine Jesus our great leader with his great heart of tenderness and love as he looks down on the world of sorrow and sees those who sit in darkness and cannot extricate themselves because they have no light to lighten their pathway, and hear him say, How long, oh, how long, my children, will you divide your allegiance between me and the world? Why cannot you be mine and mine alone?

The hearts of most of our people are right. They are anxious to do the right thing. They will respect and follow a leadership that will trust them and take them into their confidence. Isolation and government by the few, whether in church or state, creates suspicion and distrust. Our people will respond to the missionary call and sacrifice many of the pleasant and comfortable things of life and of their material wealth if we will trust them and help them to feel that they are partners with the church and with God in this great latter-day work. The whole world is awakening and answering to the call of democracy, and we must not permit it to die out in the church. We must feed it, nourish it, encourage it, and it must be fed on light and truth, and then it will become a living flame to enlighten the world as well as the church.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Apostle Griffiths at Four Reunions

Gratifying results at some of our biggest reunions.

I have thought perhaps a little information regarding the four reunions I have attended of late would be of interest to the readers of your paper.

The Chatham reunion, held at Erie Beach, was a success. The brethren having supervision, viz, Brother Lamont, Bishop

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Dent, David Snobelin, and others, did all within their power to make it interesting and profitable to all in attendance. Brother Lamont had business to attend to during the day, which necessitated his being absent a great deal of the time except on Sunday. Bishop Dent had his hands full caring for the needs of the camp, but his genial smile made all feel welcome. We feel that he is the right man in the right place. Brother Lamont is an expert at making people feel happy and has the good will of old and young. The district president, William Leverton, was unfortunate in that his farm work kept him from most of the services.

The preaching was good and the social services were of high order, up to the time I left. The young people did not come up to the high mark reached by other young people in other reunions. It is possible that the environment had much to do with this condition, as the locality is quite a summer resort. We learn that before the reunion ended the young people had a wonderful meeting, at which the power of God was displayed to a remarkable degree. However, the writer felt impressed that another location, free from the present environment, would be more acceptable to the Lord and prove more beneficial to the young spiritually.

I had occasion to appreciate the kindness of the Saints of this camp, having been unfortunate in losing my suit case on the way from Windsor to Chatham. They took up a collection, materially assisting me to procure new clothes, etc. The luggage carrier bracket on the automobile worked loose, allowing the suit case to jump off, and I have not heard from it since, notwithstanding we advertised in the newspapers. There were many things in it which cannot be replaced, and we have almost lost hope of ever seeing it again. Our Canadian Saints are generous and kind-hearted and make one feel at home in their midst.

The Central Michigan reunion, held at Pinconning, on the bay, under the auspices of the young people of the district, was a decided success in every respect, a veritable Pentecost from start to finish. This demonstrated what the young can do when they cooperate and put forth an effort. They had spiritual prayer meetings every day. Upwards of two hundred were in attendance, and it was amazing how they deported themselves; always on time, united in their efforts, and taking active part in the meetings. I wish to say to their credit that they are the first reunion that I know of to carry out the Word of Wisdom—no tea, coffee, or meat in evidence. No charges were made for the food; meals were free to all. No wonder they were blessed so abundantly. They have one hundred fifty or two hundred dollars to their credit after paying all expenses. Subscriptions were received from the various branches throughout the district, showing that the old cooperated with the young to make their meetings a success.

Their preaching tent would hold two or three thousand people. Automobiles could and did drive inside the tent. Great crowds of outsiders attended, and among the number many Lamanites. One remarkable gift of tongues through Brother John Shields was understood by some of the Indians present, one Indian saying he could understand the tongue better than the English interpretation. Many gifts of the Spirit were manifested, to the encouragement and unlifting of the Saints, thus showing the approval of God.

Brethren Umphrey and Doty, and Patriarch George Burt, with others of the older people, rendered all the assistance within their power and were kept busy from start to finish. Brother Otto Bartlett, Sisters Grace Doran and Mildred Mitchel should receive special mention for the part they took in the reunion. The preaching and all the other meetings were graced by the power of God to the comfort and edification of all. This young people's reunion will go down in history as one of the most remarkable ever held in the church, and those who had the pleasure to be in attendance will bear witness to the truthfulness of this saying, "No one privileged to meet there will soon forget what he saw and felt of the outpouring of the Spirit of God."

God bless the young! And his holy name be praised that so many of them are coming to the front, manifesting willingness to be of use to build up the kingdom of God and establish righteousness among men.

Kirtland reunion is still maintaining its reputation as being one of the best in all the world. It was thought that in view of the General Conference being held so soon and so many of the people apparently desirous of attending the same, that few would be in attendance this year; however, there was a larger attendance this year than at any time previous. There were people there from Canada on the north to Texas on the south, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Temple seems to be the Mecca of latter days, and those who had the good fortune to attend were well repaid for the time and money expended.

All the meetings were graced by the power of God, which was wondrously displayed from beginning to end. The last social service on Sunday morning in the sacred Temple was a reminder of Pentecost day. The sacred building was packed with Saints, and God's Holy Spirit baptized all within its hallowed walls. I am not able to describe what we experienced on this glorious occasion, but only wish that all of God's children could have been there to experience the blessings enjoyed. Tongues, prophecies, and visions were manifested in great abundance.

Surely the God who directed in the building of the Temple, and who has preserved it throughout the years past, is demonstrating still that it is the temple of his choice.

Here again the young people of the church, between two and three hundred of them, met in the woods every day, with the exception of one day when they assembled in the upper or apostles' room. What a wonderful sight it was to see this great army of young people marching to the place where services were to be held! Here the Lord met with them daily by the outpouring of his Spirit.

Every morning the great assembly of the Saints met in front of the Temple for their morning devotions. This was the key, opening for them blessings of the day. This was again repeated at the close of the day's labor, ere retiring for the night. It was wonderful to hear the voices of Saints from Canada, east, west, north, and south, joining in singing praises to Jehovah for the privilege of assembling at "the house of the Lord."

While these young people and older people engaged in worship, Sister Strachan gathered all the smaller children in the large tent, at the rear of the Temple, where they were cared for and instructed in things which they could easily comprehend and which would be useful to them in future.

The spirit of peace which comes from God and that no man can take from us prevailed through the reunion, and all were glad of the opportunity to be there and dreaded the time of parting. Surely such experiences are but a foretaste of the great reunion over which Christ will preside when the Saints from east, west, north, and south shall assemble in the marriage supper of the Lamb.

At the reunion still in session at Boyne City, Northern Michigan District, we are pleased to report that the same power and Spirit which prevailed at other reunions is here to bless. They have a beautiful location, five miles from Boyne City, in "The Park of the Pines" on the shores of beautiful Pine Lake. It is gratifying to the undersigned to be able to inform the readers of your paper that the young people are having prayer meetings every day by themselves and enjoying the blessings of God, which proves to us that God is no respecter of persons, but is pleased with all, wherever and wherever they may be, who are earnest in service and desirous of doing the Lord's will.

One beautiful thing about the young people named above, is their willingness to participate and help make the meeting a success. Their faithful attendance at each meeting has had much to do with the success of the reunions named above.

There is quite a large gathering in this north country in view of the size of the district and the scattered condition of its members. All move about the camp with pleasant countenances and smiling faces, which is an indication that they are glad they are here. The preaching has been of the highest order, here and in all the other reunions I have attended, the speakers being blessed with light and liberty and a message for the people, which proves to us that the Father above, and his Son, Jesus Christ, are concerned in his people and the work committed to their keeping.

If the power of God which has been present in all the reunions shall characterize the coming General Conference, it will be one of the greatest and most spiritual in the history of the church. And if we will carry the Spirit which has attended us in the different gatherings of late to Independence, its success is assured; and if dark clouds should seek to intervene, this power will penetrate and roll them away to our entire satisfaction and the glory of God. We would advise the Saints throughout the world to fast and pray to this end.

I wish to call attention to the splendid service which has been rendered by the leaders of choirs, orchestras, and bands, materially assisting in making the reunions what they should be. John Martin and Brother Householder with their choir surely made a mark for themselves at Kirtland reunion. Brother Romig, with his orchestra and band, are worthy of mention. The beautiful music rendered by this band in the park and on the belfry of the Temple, almost every day, was very inspiring and was appreciated by those who heard it. Brother B. H. Doty and his orchestra and the assistance of Brother John R. Grice at Pinconning were also elevating and enjoyed by the people both in and out of the church. Brother A. E. Starks, leader of the Boyne City reunion, aided by John R. Grice and B. H. Doty, are furnishing the music and singing for this camp. We therefore realize that the admonition given many years ago to our people is being heeded by the young of the church of to-day and bearing fruit in many places.

I have been kindly treated by all the officers and members in all the places that I have visited and I hereby thank them for their kindness.

Time and space will not permit me to give the names of all the ministers who were present and preached at the five reunions that I have attended. Brother James A. Gillen of the Twelve preached some very fine and instructive sermons at Kirtland reunion. Brethren W. I. Fligg, John R. Grice, Glaude R. Kuykendall, B. H. Doty, John Shields, Joseph Yeager, and Cornelius Clifford, and others of the traveling ministry reached the high mark in their preaching.

I leave here Monday for Bay City, Saginaw, Flint, and Port Huron and will attend a district conference at the latter city, September 1 to 3.

Yours in gospel bonds,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

College Day September 24

Deer Park Reunion

To leave their apartments and glaring pavements in the middle of summer and come to beautiful Deer Park, with its great trees, pretty birds, wild flowers, and wooded roads which say, "Walk here," is a reviving experience. Here mothers may come with their children, and the children are free to play and wander to their hearts content without harm or danger. Here the young people may gather to play games, swim, and build camp fires, away from the commercialized amusements of the city. Here the tired business men relax and forget the weary grind of factory, office, or market. The association of Saints makes this relaxation a joy to the soul, while the fresh air and freedom of outdoor life is body building.

The grounds are unusually well equipped. There is an ever-flowing spring of pure, cold water, which is piped conveniently near. The tents, with their wooden floors, and the strong, comfortable cots, are the property of the district. The kitchen, with its gas ranges, hot and cold running water, stationary tubs, and large refrigerator, is equipped to serve hundreds. The well-screened dining room, with its ample floor and table space, invites all. This year the feeding end was supervised by Albert N. Hoxie and William Nichols. The food was unusually varied, well cooked and served. A professional chef reigned in the kitchen, and a number of colored waiters lived but to serve those who dined at the commissary. The philosophy that we eat to live, but do not live to eat, is ideal, but properly balanced, well cooked meals, served in company with congenial people go very far towards keeping a camp happy and satisfied.

The Deer Park reunion was restful. There was no wild scramble to get from one meeting to another. There was ample time to keep the tents clean, well aired, and in order, to care for one's person, and for soul recreation with one's friends, to play tennis or baseball or to swim. There was time for all; the days seemed long enough and no one complained of being tired.

The organization was effected on Saturday evening, the 22d, choosing Ephraim Squire district president, John Zimmermann, jr. (pastor of Philadelphia Branch), Apostle J. A. Gillen, and President F. M. Smith as presidency. Albert N. Hoxie was chosen secretary, Sister Walter W. Smith was given charge of institute work, and Wayne Smith, of Independence, and George Harris, of Brooklyn, were intrusted with the recreation.

The social and recreational phase was allowed to develop. Saints from various branches (one family from Council Bluffs, Iowa, (the Millers) and another from Manhattan, Kansas, (the Carlsons) mingled in groups, chatting, discussing, and getting acquainted. The young folks (of whom there was quite a group on the ground from first to last) went enthusiastically not only to swim but to play tennis and baseball, horseshoe, quoits, and various other games. There were joyous "sings" and moving pictures. There were wonderful camp fires, when they did their stunts which ran from singing limericks to grand opera arias in Spanish. There were corn roasts, wiener roasts, and marshmallow roasts, as well as watermelon feasts and a great clambake.

There was a swimming trip to the Delaware and a hay ride through the country. In all these things the participation was universal, the comradeship delightful, and the result was a love for the camp. No one wished to leave the grounds for other attractions. The women and girls of the camp assembled hastily every morning for their "Daily Dozen" setting-up exercises, directed by Sister Katharine Nichols and her phonograph. Sister Milligan (organizer for Women's Department) provided a hammock and chairs for a daily afternoon gathering, to which came the sisters with their mending and fancywork to discuss the lessons in home economics and other subjects of interest. It became a sort of forum. Here Brother Max Carmichael and Sister Dora Glines answered some of our questions. Here we found the good points of each other and our friendships grew.

The educational work took the form of a daily lecture at 10.45 a. m. followed by discussions. *Our list of lecturers and educators follows:

Zion and stewardships, F. M. Smith, Ph. D.

Religious education, Max Carmichael, A. B.

The importance of the home; Why we miss opportunities, Dora Pankey Glines, Pd. B.

Boy Scout work, Wayne Smith, A. A.

Demonstration of Scout work, Dudley Smith and Roy Sallade.

Health ideals, Gertrude Copeland, R. N.

Cultivation of sentiments; Heredity and mental traits; Relation of spirituality to education and training, Walter W. Smith, M. A.

Health of pre-school age children; The project method in religious education, Eunice Winn Smith, A. B.

The evening services the first week of the reunion frequently took the form of a camp fire, where the songs of Zion were sung by all, and then we listened to Arthur Gillen, or Daniel Macgregor, or Walter Smith tell how they were brought into the work, or how they came to take up the ministry, or such other comforting, faith-building theme. These talks reached young and old and brought a glow of the old fire we have all experienced in our earlier association in the church. Our later sermons were more formal. President Frederick M. Smith joined us for the second week and was very generous with his sermons. Brother Max Carmichael preached once in his forceful manner.

The services on Sundays were greatly augmented by Saints down for the week ends. Sundays were full of enthusiasm and interest.

Three were baptized by Brother Macgregor.

The daily morning prayer meetings were the cream of the reunion—there all participated, worshiping in unity. The faithfulness, steadfastness, and satisfaction expressed by the older Saints strengthened and encouraged the younger, while the consecration, devotion, and aspirations of the younger Saints comforted the older. The voice of the Lord was heard in tongues and prophecy; and the wooing Comforter entered willing hearts, bearing messages of courage and hope, guidance and direction; and inspiring a going forth to religious activity in the service of God and our fellow men.

Altogether this was a wonderful reunion; a time of rest and refreshment of body and mind; a period of social recreation and joyful participation. A season of intellectual stirring and searching. A waiting upon the Lord and its resultant spiritual exhilaration and exaltation which can only reach its true culmination in service.

EUNICE WINN SMITH.

Lowbanks Reunion

I had the privilege of attending part of the reunion at Onset, Massachusetts, and also "our own" at Lowbanks, Ontario. The biggest item of the many big things at Onset this year, in my opinion, was the way the young people were handled. The committee picked the right man in John F. Sheehy as leader. He has a genius for leadership in that direction. Every morning the young people gathered in their own tabernacle for prayer and testimony, and they were there. It was inspiring to hear their prayers and testimonies. But I didn't start out with the intention of writing up Onset; Lowbanks is my objective.

I had the privilege of traveling with Apostle Gillen from Onset to Lowbanks. I wasn't long in discovering that he had plenty of apostolic timber in him. His earnestness won the people at both the reunions.

Lowbanks grounds are located in a beautiful crescent on Lake Erie, about thirty miles from Buffalo and eighty miles from Toronto. The lake at this point is somewhat shallow, providing a lovely beach and making the water somewhat warmer than the deeper lakes. So the bathing is exceptionally fine.

There were seventy tents on the grounds. There is a permanent cement floor for the "big top" used for the services. There is also a cement walk running along the main "street" of tents.

Lowbanks has several advantages over any other reunion I have attended. They have an abundant supply of cheap natural gas available. They use this for illuminating the grounds and for cooking. The kitchen and commissary facilities are the best I have ever seen. A large tank on top of the dish-washing department supplies running water, red hot and cold. The natural gas makes the former possible. So the men can get all the hot water they want for shaving and the women for washing, even when the cooks are looking you right in the eye! Very little food was wasted at Lowbanks.

As the grounds are located in a strictly farming community, you can be all dressed up but there is no place to go; the result is, everybody stays "at home."

The program adopted by most reunions is also carried out here. Wednesday and Saturday evenings are devoted to concerts, the farmers turning out in large numbers.

Sisters Strachan and Macgregor had charge of the children and girls and entertained and instructed the children in many delightful ways. One stunt was turning the boys into Indians and making birch bark canoes from the trees right on the ground!

Sisters McLean and Floralice Miller conducted the Women's Department and furnished entertaining programs. The spirit of service strongly characterized the gathering, with one very much to be deplored exception. The weather man was very disagreeable for four or five days, but at last he caught the spirit, and in the closing week poured sunshine all over the place and in our hearts.

The committee was composed of very capable men and women, and they worked in entire unity. The result was, everything passed off smoothly, giving us a "satisfying" gathering of happy, contented people.

There were present of the general ministry, Apostle J. A. Gillen, Guy Levitt, A. E. Stone, George W. Robley.

Sincerely, C. EDWARD MILLER.

TORONTO, CANADA, 131 Quebec Avenue.

Choir Recognition in Hawaii

Members of the Honolulu Choir sang in the Kawaiahao (Hawaiian) Church last January, when the late Prince Kalanianalae was lying in state prior to the funeral. Only certain organizations were given this privilege. Again our choir has been recognized as one of the musical associations of this city, by furnishing a sextet, which gave a radio broadcast program on August 12.

We have in the Honolulu church three choirs, viz, the morning choir, composed of the older members of the church, in charge of Mrs. E. B. Hull; the evening choir, composed of the young people, in charge of Sister Bernice Kahanmoku, and a junior choir in the church occasionally, being trained by Sister Hull. These choirs meet for practice every week, and they are able to furnish music for all occasions.

A number of the older members sing the old Hawaiian songs accompanied by stringed instruments on special occasions. Age does not make the Hawaiians forget the gladness of their youth, so far as singing is concerned at least.

E. B. HULL.

An Appreciation of the Herald

I want you all to know that as I have read the HERALD I have often thought of the faithful workers who are behind it, giving the necessary momentum, time, and energy—each one with his problem to solve.

HERALD workers, it is absolutely impossible for you to measure the mighty work which you are accomplishing in the lives of others. I cannot peruse one copy but what there comes a most powerful determination to do my part in the gospel journey, and I find myself singing and smiling when the obstacles present themselves, rejoicing in the conflict, and I realize that the HERALD is responsible to a great degree for the part it takes in my life.

So if at times we become discouraged, or localized, look forward to the great fields of readers and thousands of souls who are watching for the HERALD, whom you cannot see or speak to except through the paper. Then with this vision enlarged, "sing, smile," whistle, and take a renewed grasp of the "onerous" duties and they will become golden opportunities and you, each one, will enjoy the conflict for righteousness. [The brother emphasizes his commendation by inclosing $2.25 for a year's renewal.—EDITORS.]

Sincerely,

CAMPELLO, MASSACHUSETTS.

FRANK S. DOBBINS.

Des Moines District Reunion

The consensus of opinion is, that the reunion just concluded was the most successful one yet held in this district. There were more campers than on any previous occasion, and the spirit of unity was greatly evidenced.

The writer was much impressed with the fine body of young people who vied with each other for the success of the gathering. Two young people's prayer meetings were conducted at 6 a. m., and were of a highly spiritual and intellectual character. The Lord is certainly preparing the young for the consummation of a big work. Their activities presage the redemption of Zion.

The last four reunions have been held on the picturesque, convenient, and altogether beautifully situated grounds at Runnells, and their success is the result of the able direction and supervision of the district president, Elder Henry Castings, his able and sympathetic counselors, Elders Clyde McDonald and Ed Beye, and the hearty support of devoted people.

The committee was most fortunate in being able to secure the services of Paul M. Hanson, of the Twelve; Frederick A. Smith, patriarch; and Brother and Sister Walter W. Smith. Brother Hanson remained for the first four days and was kept very busy. His sermons and counsel were full of inspiration and wisdom and were appreciated by all.

Frederick A. Smith officiated successfully in his high and spiritual office and proved a benediction to many.

Brother and Sister Walter W. Smith were with us eight days. The former soon fitted into the needs of the people and his sermons and lectures proved an educational feast and inspirational uplift.

Sister Smith soon found her way to the children's tent, where she acquainted herself with the needs of the children.

It does our souls good to know we have such able and self-sacrificing women, who are willing to give their time and talents to the development of the children of the church. May God raise up many such women so devoted, qualified, and willing to do this most important work of nurturing the young. Sister Smith was aided in her work by a corps of willing workers, including Asa E. Smith, district missionary.

On the evening of the 18th, a six-act play, "Emma Smith," was staged before a large and appreciative audience, by Sister Margret Davis, of Des Moines, author and director. The theme of motherhood was beautifully woven around the "elect lady," and its presentation was ably given by the select characters. Sister Nellie Mussell took the leading part and represented that noble character, Emma Smith, very efficiently and effectively. Doctor Frank Hull played the role of Joseph Smith in an able manner. Other prominent characters: "Mr. Hale," Elmer Clark; "Brigham Young," Ira Skinner; "Heber C. Kimball," Levi Anderson; "The young prophet," Arthur Smith.

It is with sadness we chronicle the death of Violet Ruth Miller, which took place at her home, Runnells, on the 18th, at the age of thirteen years, after an illness of three weeks. The funeral was conducted on the reunion grounds, sermon by Elder Castings.

Twelve were baptized at the reunion, nine children and three adults. As usual, the refreshing showers greeted the campers the first day and bade them farewell the last night.

PRESS CORRESPONDENT.

A Tithing Sunday

Reports came to us that the Sioux City, Iowa, Sunday School had been using a tithing system which had been quite successful, so we made inquiry. Brother George M. Vandel gives us this interesting account:

"I suggested the introduction of the subject of tithing in the Sunday school, teaching it to the children, setting aside the first Sunday of each month as tithing Sunday, the day on which everybody, and especially the children, bring some money for tithing. Small envelopes are passed out at the beginning of Sunday school, then collected at the close. This has resulted in an increase of about four hundred per cent in the number of tithe payers on my list. I issue a receipt to every child each time he pays tithing, no difference how small the amount. This has been in effect for about twenty months without any slacking in interest. I can safely say the church is at least two hundred dollars better off financially, to say nothing of the lasting good I hope we have done in getting the children interested in paying tithing. This money represents pennies, nickels, and dimes which would have never reached the church except for this plan."

The tithing cards, which may be had from our office for the asking, simplify this system somewhat. This is a very practical way to teach the tithing law, and at an age when humanity is most susceptible. The doing of our every day mechanical acts is closely identified with our spiritual development; hence, every time the child obeys the law, by the payment of the tithe, the stronger becomes the resolution to continue faithful to the end. This resolve is essential to spiritual growth.

Dear Reader: Sunday school superintendents are busy men and women. Perhaps they will not see this article. Kindly call it to their attention! Perhaps a tithing Sunday each month would be a good thing for your school.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

College Day September 24

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Independence

The second annual picnic under the auspices of the Religios of Zion, at Gudgeon Park, south of Independence, held on Labor Day, was largely attended and seemingly voted a success if hearty participation and gladsome demeanor count for anything.

Perhaps between one thousand and two thousand were on the extensive grounds.

A silver cup is the prize offered each year to the congregation winning the most points in athletic events. Last year this went to the Stone Church, but this year Walnut Park earned it with high honors, with Liberty Street second.

The Stone Church band rendered fine music, with a number of singers and players from Walnut Park. Elder Walter W. Smith spoke forcefully on appropriate Labor Day subjects.

A baseball team from Holden played an Independence team, resulting in a score of 5 to 1 in favor of the home team. In the morning a Herald Publishing House team played Walnut Park and the former won, 8 to 2.

The British Social League held its annual picnic at Horse-shoe Lake on the same day, having made their arrangements early and therefore could not change their date.

They had as speakers Reginald A. Davidson, British consul at Kansas City, and Bishop J. F. Keir. The afternoon was devoted to sports and games, one of the features being a soccer football contest, a game which the British lads would like to see developed among the Americans. One of the notable players was Richard Y. Martin, who was a soldier in the Zulu campaign in South Africa.

A number of nonmembers of the church from Kansas City were in attendance, including some Red Cross leaders, with workers in that society. About one hundred and fifty were in attendance and spent a pleasant day. Arthur Riddolls is president.

A constitution and by-laws governing the organization was adopted by the body at this time. They plan to hold a similar picnic next year and hope to avoid conflict of dates.

Walnut Park congregation has been holding meetings in a roofed basement of a church, but of late under direction of J. A. Dowker, pastor, they have become enthused with the idea of building a superstructure on the foundation. They held a pledge meeting last Sunday and received in cash and pledges a total of about two thousand dollars. They will meet next Sunday and organize, and plan to proceed at once with building operations. We congratulate them on being able to take this step, they having grown in numbers until it has become a necessity.

The speakers at the Stone Church next Sunday will be Elder J. A. Gillen in the morning, and Elder R. J. Lambert in the evening, the evening services on Sunday being held on the lawn. It is a very pleasant place for meetings and large audiences attend. Last Sunday evening Elder Walter W. Smith spoke, and the half hour preceding was given over to a fine program by children of the Stone Church under direction of Mrs. J. T. Westwood. They sang and played in a very profitable program.

The radio sermon was by Elder S. A. Burgess. Occasional inquiries come to the HERALD as to this weekly program. Let us repeat that every Sunday at 2 p. m. standard time a program of preaching and music is broadcasted from the studio of the Central Radio Company, Kansas City, at 360 meters. The sending capacity of this station is large, they having covered easily all the territory between the Appalachian and Rocky Mountains, and get occasional reports from more distant points. Those with receiving sets should try to tune in, then report results to the HERALD editors or the sending station.

President Elbert A. Smith has been in attendance at the Eastern Colorado reunion. Bishop B. R. McGuire was there for a time, but returned to his office last week. President F. M. Smith has been at Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Apostle U. W. Greene asks the prayers of the Saints in his behalf, he suffering from malarial fever.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending September 2: J. A. Salyer, Mount Washington, Missouri; Master Clifton Kay, Kansas City, Kansas; T. D. Cairns, Grandview, Missouri; G. W. H. Mueller, Lees Summit, Missouri; Mrs. Charles Pace and Mrs. Hazel Honaker, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Hattie Chandler, Lamoni, Iowa; Mr. Arch E. McCord, Stewartville, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. Anna Highland, Miss Ellen Jepson, Miss Josephine Gentry, Carl Hanson, Frances Pelton, Orpha Parrish, Mildred Crick, and Master Joseph P. Smith.

X-ray patients: Leota Hoerman, Kansas City, Missouri; R. D. Weaver, Traverse City, Michigan; and E. A. Gibson, Catherine Ryan, and Mrs. Llwellyn Jones, of Independence.

Bevier Activities

Sunday, August 27, resembled home-coming Sunday at Bevier, Missouri. On that day we were favored with the presence of the following former members of Bevier Branch:

Elder J. A. and Sister Tanner and grandson, of Kansas City; also Brother and Sister P. J. Raw, and daughter Miss Elizabeth, of Kansas City; Elder Charles Edmunds and family, of Independence; Sister Gwendolyn Richards, of Paris, Missouri; Sister Archie Smith, formerly Hattie William, of Oakland, California; and Elder W. B. Richards and wife and son just recently returned from Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, where Brother Richards was in the missionary field for several years.

Brother Edmonds occupied the morning hour and Brother Tanner the evening hour. We were truly glad to have these old friends with us.

The Bevier Branch has sent out many missionaries to preach the word in many parts of the world: Apostle G. T. Griffith, J. A. Tanner, F. T. Mussell, W. B. Richards; and in October Elder Vernie Ruch and wife will leave for Norway and Sweden to be gone five years, the Lord permitting.

Besides preaching the gospel story in many parts of the world, the songs of our composers who have now passed away are sung wherever there is a branch of the church or Sunday school.

This is just an example of what one active branch is able to accomplish, though sometimes we feel that we are not doing much.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

Remember the Needs of the Aged Saints

A recent letter from a sister in one of our branches tells us that some of the good sisters there have a great desire to render assistance to the church by making necessary things for Sanitarium needs and things that could be used in the homes for the children and aged. We sent quite a list of materials that could be put to good use in the Sanitarium, and in answer to inquiry have received the following suggestions from Sister Edith Carr, matron of Holden Home:

Sheets 72 by 95 inches, pillow cases 22 by 32 inches, bed spreads 72 by 90 inches, tablecloths 64 by 64 inches, dresser scarfs, roller towels, bath towels, napkins, rugs, such women's clothing as stockings, underwear, and shoes. Canned or dried fruits will also be gladly accepted.

These may be sent direct to Holden Home for the Aged, Holden, Missouri. These are things that can always be

MISCELLANEOUS

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Northern Wisconsin District: On account of Brother Leroy Colbert being away from the district so much of the time, he has asked to be relieved of the office of Bishop's agent. Brother Horace Scafe, Black River Falls, Wisconsin, has been selected to succeed him in the office, effective October 1, 1922.

Brother Colbert has served faithfully in behalf of this department, and we are sure that he will continue to find happiness in doing what he can to advance the interests of the gospel work. Brother Scafe accepts the office with a full realization of the responsibility attached thereto. May he have the united cooperation and support of the Saints of the district that the temporal means may be on hand to carry on the Lord's work.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices

Central Michigan, at Whittemore, September 15 to 17. Please send all reports in before this time, and all branch presidents please notify me what provisions you have to send in to help sustain the conference, so a means for gathering them may be provided. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Northwestern Ohio, at Bradner, September 15 to 17. Everybody welcome. W. G. Kimball, secretary.

Conference of Musicians

A musicians' conference for members of Detroit District will be held at Orion, Michigan, September 10, with first service at 9 a. m. All the services of the day, except Sunday school, will be turned over to musicians. Make a special effort to be present and bring with you this idea: "For better music for the district." Matthew W. Liston.

Two-day Meetings

Central Michigan, at Midland, September 9 and 10. One-day meeting at Alma, September 24. Matthew Umphrey, president.

At East Jordan, Michigan, September 23 and 24. Good speakers will be in attendance. All welcome. Ernest L. Burt, president.

Requests for Prayers

Donald Day, of Cameron, Missouri, writes requesting prayers for Sister Bertha Day, who is afflicted with paralysis caused from neuritis.

Sister R. M. Bradish, of South Parkersburg, West Virginia, who has lost the use of her left arm and is suffering from high blood pressure, desires the prayers of the Saints.

Entertainment of Conference Delegates and Visitors

The reception committee for the General Conference has been appointed by the First Presidency. They are as follows: R. V. Hopkins, president; Arthur Allen, vice president; George A. Gould, R. T. Cooper, and John A. Gardner.

Rooms. The committee is arranging as far as possible for rooms for the visitors during conference at reasonable rates.

Tourists' Camp. A site about seven blocks from the conference tent has been reserved where those who wish to do so may park their cars and erect their tents free of charge. A tourist's oven for cooking is being built on these grounds and used and will be acknowledged with grateful appreciation by the matron.

We commend this form of practical Christianity to the attention of all those who are able to contribute a few hours now and then to the welfare of humanity.

Very sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
What Is Our Own	831
More on Stewardships	831
Graceland College Day	833
Thing to Which We May Tie	834
College Day September 24	835
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Functions of the Presidency in Relation to the Work of the Bishopric, by J. A. Koehler	836
New Hopes for Jewish National Home, by T. W. Williams ...	841
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Cultivating the Soul	843
Education in—What	843
Education in What	843
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT
Dora Young	844
LETTERS AND NEWS
Edward Rannie—Gomer T. Griffiths—Eunice Winn Smith—C. Edward Miller—E. B. Hull—Frank S. Dobbins—Benjamin R. McGuire—J. L. Williams	846
MISCELLANEOUS
	853

city water furnished. Cars may also be stored in local garages at regular rates.

Cafeteria. Meals will be served in the dining hall at the Stone Church on the cafeteria plan, at reasonable rates.

Young People. The committee has arranged for the entertainment of the young people who attend conference. Sunday school and Religio superintendents and other leaders of the young people of the church should advise the committee how many will attend from their locality.

Do You Expect to Be With Us? The amount of space available in Independence is limited, so if you are expecting to be here, write immediately to Arthur Allen, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, and reserve your room or camping space.

THE RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Our Departed Ones

FULLER.—Eliza Jane North was born December 12, 1852, near Franklin, Pendleton County, West Virginia. Married Andrew J. Fuller, September 21, 1885. Her husband died June 30, 1887. Baptized more than thirty years ago. Made her home at Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, more than twenty-four years. She had truly the characteristics of both Mary and Martha, ever ready to listen to the gospel, and never missing an opportunity to minister to others. Died August 9, 1922. Sermon by J. S. Roth, assisted by S. K. Sorensen. Her only child died in its infancy.

MORRISON.—Sarah Morrison, wife of the late Elder Walter Morrison, died at Holstein, Ontario, July 13, 1922, aged seventy-eight years and ten months. She was among the first to obey the gospel in the Egremont Branch. Her humble home was open to all, and beneath its roof had tarried many of the notable men of the church. She was a mother in Israel who died firm in the gospel. Leaves five daughters and two sons. Her husband, two sons, and one daughter have preceded her.

PADLEY.—George Francis Padley was born July 20, 1886, at Pleasant Gap, Missouri. Married Emily Gough, December 19, 1914. Baptized October 20, 1916. Died August 8, 1922, at his home near Butler, Missouri. His death was very sudden and the cause is not known. Leaves wife, little daughter Eleanor, five brothers, and one sister. Funeral from the home. Sermon by H. E. Moler.

College Day September 24

CONFERENCE DAILY

An indispensable item in conference news is timeliness. The DAILY HERALD will give you the proceedings promptly, and we are making new arrangements for mailing which should insure early delivery to all points. Only 25 cents. Order early.

New Graceland Record Announced

The managers of Graceland Record, the student periodical of Graceland College, announce in recent circulars that this year they will combine into one publication the Record and the Acacia, the college annual. It will be published weekly, contain eight pages, be an illustrated magazine totaling 288 pages and containing 300 pictures, which will include pictures of all the students.

The suggestion is that all the numbers filed and bound into one volume will take the place of the former Acacia in value as a yearbook, and at the same time afford current news.

The scheme sounds practical, and one is constrained to sign at once on the dotted line and write the check for two dollars for a year's subscription.

Nauvoo Once Proposed as United States Capital

The legislature of the State of Illinois at one time voted fifty square miles of Illinois prairie surrounding the city of Nauvoo for a proposed new District of Columbia, according to an article in the Quincy Daily Herald of August 25. It is said the plan never officially reached Washington, but nevertheless sufficient importance was attached to the proposition to create considerable stir in the East, and as a result a great deal of money was expended in buildings in Washington in order to hold the Capital in the East.

It was argued that with the rapidly increasing shift of population center from the East to the Middle West, it was but natural a new site should be chosen. Furthermore, with the wonderful natural advantages of Nauvoo on the Father of Waters was the added military advantage of ease in fortification of the city. Though the Potomac could be invaded by enemy ships and the Capital desolated easily, this would not be possible for the city on the Mississippi.

The plan, if carried out, would make of Washington and its buildings a great national university center. In the meantime the railroadless little village of Nauvoo, once the largest city in Illinois when built up by the Saints in the forties, rejoices in having a vocational school for disabled soldiers, maintained by Federal appropriations.

New Stock of The Interpreter

In a recent shipment of books from the Standard Publishing House, in Australia, was included a supply of The Interpreter, by Apostle G. T. Griffiths, a popular book among the priesthood for whom it was especially written. It is authoritative, well indexed, and invaluable to the inexperienced church official, while it has proved a boon to many good workers who have needed something concise and convenient, such as this book.

The duties of each office in the priesthood are clearly set forth in quotations from the standard books of the church. Court procedure is concisely discussed, with many blank forms shown.

It is a valuable book of 152 pages, bound in cloth, stapled, and the price is very low—55 cents, postpaid.

College Day September 24

THE VALUE OF EDUCATION

The world is ready to pay and is paying for the commodity which has real worth. Its worth is measured by its utility in satisfying human needs. The amount which the world pays represents the value of that particular commodity.

Again and again has the world acclaimed the value of education by its willingness to pay both in money and in esteem for the additional worth which education gives.

The following chart used in a national educational campaign illustrates the value of education.

DISTINGUISHED MEN OF AMERICA---AND THEIR EDUCATION

—Of 5 million individuals with no schooling, only 31 attained distinction.

—Of 33 million with elementary schooling 808 attained distinction.

—Of 2 million with high school education, 1,295 attained distinction.

—Of 1 million with technical training, 5,768 attained distinction.

The individual with no schooling has 1 chance in 160,000 of performing distinguished service.

An elementary school education multiplies his opportunity by 4.

A high school education multiplies his chances by 104.

A technical education multiplies his prospects by 900.

LET US TRAIN THE YOUTH OF THE CHURCH---LET US MULTIPLY THEIR CHANCES

Issued by
THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, September 13, 1922

Number 37

EDITORIAL

Reporting Our Reunions

The reunion should be carefully planned, with due attention to the inspirational, educational, and recreational features, and should then be well reported so as to help and inspire others.

The HERALD is always glad to receive the report of local items of general interest and value. For this reason we have maintained the Letters and News department and invite communications from a number of correspondents, and appreciate the work they are doing.

Just at present we are at the close of the reunion season and naturally would expect a great many able reports of that which was accomplished at these various gatherings. There are but few of them, if any, that do not have items of special interest to report. But from many of them we have received no report whatever.

The experience of one another should help us to obtain better results in the future. We want to know the names of all of those of note who attended your reunion, and are glad to know the subjects which were especially under discussion. If there was a keynote or general theme to the reunion, we are glad to learn of it.

If there are special features of value, the use of eulogistic adjectives is not needed so much as an adequate description, so that others may consider and apply your experience to their problems.

If a missionary finds a reunion where things are better than elsewhere, it is not sufficient to say it is better, but what are the particular arrangements which make it better than others, having in view your observations elsewhere, so that others may take and apply?

It is that which is of general interest that is wanted, not simply local items, though, of course, local items are wanted when they show new methods, improvements, or record the doings of those who are well known.

In the work of the reunions it is quite natural that the prayer meetings should be a central point of activity and interest. As a rule they are one of the best features, and this is as it should be.

As a rule there are very few visitors or nonmembers during the day. The morning hours, therefore, could usually be used to better advantage than by preaching a missionary sermon. What has long seemed to us an ideal arrangement is to have in the morning hours, in addition to the prayer meeting, a period set aside for separate class work with classes for the Oriole Girls, for the young women of Temple Builder age, for the older women, for the Boy Scouts, for the young men, and for the priesthood or older men. Nor is it sufficient that these or other groups should meet. It may be better to have a meeting of Sunday-school teachers, a gathering of young people or Religio workers. It will be well in many instances to have meetings of the young men and young women together, of the older men and older women together. But there should be such groups that everyone on the ground is encouraged to attend a study class.

Also as a rule the priesthood meet and take up very nearly the same subjects as in ages past. Where the priesthood is meeting for ten days or more it would seem that it should be possible to outline a definite program for this, regardless of who may be the speaker or whether there be one or a dozen different speakers, and the hour utilized made really effective and instructive.

If the afternoon be given largely to recreation we can easily stand three periods in the morning, including a general lecture, which may or may not be followed by questions and discussion.

In the evening in many places it is well to have a doctrinal sermon, because nonmembers are drawn to the camp. There may even be another meeting before or after. At one place there will be an experience meeting or a service of song for an hour, and at another place the formal evening service is placed at an early hour and there are camp-fire talks, stories, and entertainments after the evening service.

In many cases we know of from one to three different services held in the afternoon. While the primary purpose of the reunion should be inspiration, and a secondary purpose is education, we should recognize that recreation is also both inspirational and educational, and should not be lost sight of. Where the whole afternoon is given to recreation, an opportunity is given to set the camp and person in order, allowing time for games, for hikes, for swimming, etc. We have found by experience that this does not interfere with the devotional exercises, but when rightly handled is quite the reverse.

It is a mistake ever to make the recreational and the physical the primary or principal aspect of the reunion. The reports from some reunions have caused the question to arise if the social and recreational has not been the principal activity. In fact, some would very nearly remind us of summer resort literature, with very little suggestion of inspiration, though there may be added a Chautauqua feature of lectures.

Our experience has confirmed us in the opinion that the work of the reunions as a rule needs better planning. It has also confirmed us in the belief that the recreational and social activities are rather neglected and are not given as prominent a place as they should have. But we do not want to go to the other extreme and make the recreational the predominant factor.

Again, it cannot but appeal to note that two or three different reunions now provide meals without charge, thus making it possible for all to attend and to receive the benefit. The reunions, of course, ought not be on a basis that makes them rather an exclusive social function. Nor do we think that such is at all the general tendency, though a few have at times raised that question.

Our reunions should be made effective for real spiritual power, and have genuine, careful instruction so that we return home strengthened for the work before us. The reunions have been held; an adequate report should be prepared, giving all of the features of special interest to others. S. A. B.

Labor's Share

The World's Work prints some interesting figures concerning wages and salaries and the amount received as profit, or interest, on behalf of capital investment, extending from 1909 to 1918.

According to this statement, nearly six and a half billion, about 68.7 per cent, was paid as wages and salaries in 1909, and less than $3,000,000,000, about 31.3 per cent, went as return on machine and property investment. The amount paid as wages and salaries shows a steady increase to 1913, $8,651,000,000, and then a drop in 1914 to $7,947,000,000.

From that point it continues again to rise rapidly, each succeeding figure being above that for 1913, until in 1918 the amount paid as wages and salaries is given as nearly seventeen and a half billion dollars, or 77.3 per cent of the total income.

But at the same time, the amount paid the management and property investment rose and fell for the first five and six years in amount. The beginning of 1914 shows a steady increase for the next three years to six and a half billion in 1917, but it then fell to $5,124,000,000 in 1918. These figures indicate a percentage decline very nearly constant going to management and property, from 31.3 per cent in 1909 to 22.7 per cent in 1918, though it is only fair to note that in 1916 management and property received 33.3 per cent.

This is the result of a compilation by the National Bureau of Economic Research. Its survey is in the large, highly organized industries which produce about one third of the national income, and shows the way in which this one third was divided. This data is only from growing concerns. The losses of enterprises that go into bankruptcy or fail to succeed are not included, though such losses fall principally upon management and property. Such losses, though not estimated, will make an appreciable offset to the income received by active business men.

The figures show that capital suffers as much as, if not more, than does labor in times of business depression.

The Conference Daily

The whole force of the publishing office expects to work together to see that all of the news and points of general interest are presented in the DAILY HERALD during General Conference. Even though it be called the DAILY HERALD, it is not published as a part of the weekly SAINTS' HERALD. The HERALD, however, being the original organ of the church and the periodical to the membership of the church, its name is loaned or extended to the conference daily.

But the editors of other periodicals will be associated in its direction and in the preparation of news. This includes the editors of Autumn Leaves and Stepping Stones, but especially it includes Elder John F. Garver, the editor of Zion's Ensign, the missionary paper of the church. He will have charge of reporting the missionary items of interest and is associated as one of the editors.

As stated before, the principal items of business each day will be set forth in the issue of that day and will be more fully written up in the next issue of the daily. This will give the essential information day by day and fuller information as soon as practicable. A decided effort will be made to convey to our readers the essential spirit of the conference. Arrangements have also been made to obviate some of the mailing difficulties of the past. The daily will be sorted and prepared for the trains at the Herald Publishing House before being sent to the post office.

This means extra work for everyone concerned. It means extra work to run off the last form after the usual business hours and then to fold and mail, but it is part of the service rendered by the Herald Publishing House and its force willingly for the benefit of the church, and especially those who are not able to attend the General Conference.

This being extra work and under unusual conditions the daily is not published for profit. The price has been placed at a minimum. It has been kept at the same low figure as in years past when paper, ink, and other costs were much less than today. For this reason but few extra copies will be printed day by day. The only way to secure the full series of conference dailies is to send in your subscription accompanied by cash, to reach the office by or before the first of October.

Plans are being made to present not only the news, but to explain so far as possible the probable effect and meaning of actions proposed and taken. We are already preparing for the daily, articles discussing the proposed changes in Sunday school and Religio constitutions, the establishment of a department of religious education, its purpose and probable scope, the reasons for and against; also a discussion of the proposed young people's organization, with a brief reference to the past history of Zion's Religio-Literary Society. These are only two features out of many which are already being planned for the daily and this discussion will be extended beyond the usual analysis of the general action but will consider also its probable local effect.

The Bishop's Report

Our readers and the church at large will naturally be pleased to see in this week's HERALD the annual report of the Bishop, with statement of receipts and disbursements to July 1, 1922. The closing of the year, June 30, and the holding of the General Conference October 1, make it possible to furnish so recent a report. And the persistent efforts of the Bishop's office have prepared the report, so that it can be in the hands of the church, the officers and delegates of the conference, in time for careful analysis before the conference meets.

We are naturally sorry to see that operating expenses still exceed operating receipts, but our readers will note the persistent effort of the Bishop to reduce wherever possible the expenditures of the church. By comparison with earlier reports it will be noted that this deficit was largely the first part of the fiscal year. To correct fully it will require the support of each of us in our contributions as the Lord has blessed us.

It is not our purpose to analyze or discuss the report at this time, leaving it to speak for itself, and leaving it for the Bishop to make any analysis or notations he considers desirable.

The Mack Association

The descendants of John Mack, of Lyme, Connecticut, who came to America from Scotland in 1669, held their annual reunion at Oswego, New York, on August 15. Fifty-two descendants were registered, including Mrs. Audentia Anderson, recently General Superintendent of the Women's Department, a daughter of our late president, Joseph Smith, granddaughter of Joseph Smith, jr., the Martyr, and great-granddaughter of Lucy Mack, whose descent from John Mack has been set forth in the Journal of History.

After a busy day Mrs. Anderson addressed the assembled guests after the banquet which was held at 6.30. She presented with as much detail as time would permit the history of the church and what it stands for, and carefully made the distinction between the original church and the departure or apostasy to Utah. Only one or two of the association had previously known of this difference. We are informed that her address was received with excellent attention and good will and was given a column in the Oswego Daily Palladium of August 16.

Questions and Answers

Who Shall Preside?

Question. In the original organization under Joseph the Martyr, the law given to govern the church was intrusted throughout the branches to an executive government consisting of an elder, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon. Since the institution of the coordinating system, the executive of the branches now consists of three elders, or "president and two counselors"—all elders anyhow—where is the law for the change? Please quote it. Sometime ago the undersigned attended a prayer meeting. The hour for the opening arrived, but there was no elder present. Thinking the senior priest present should occupy, the writer went to him and suggested that it was his duty to take charge and start the meeting. He made reply that he had nothing to say about the matter. While we were still talking over the question an elder entered who stated that the branch president had called him up over the phone and asked him to go and take charge of the prayer meeting. Afterwards the president emphatically stated that it was his wish that in the absence of himself or either of his counselors the one holding the authority next in the ministry, be he priest, teacher, or deacon, should occupy when the time came to open the meeting. This same president on another occasion told his two counselors that often he would outline in his own mind the order for the services of the week, but when he presented it to them, they overruled his program and wrote up their own. If not the exact word, the above is the sense of his remarks.

Comment is needless. Could not the coordinating system have been introduced without changing the then existing system of branch government? Two weaknesses only are referred to in the new order. There are others; but these instances are sufficient to show that either the coordinating system, if this is it, is misunderstood, or it fails to measure up to the high standard of efficiency which characterized the original law given to govern the church.

Answer. The objections here raised have practically nothing to do with the principle of coordination. The principle of coordination means simply that all departments of the church shall seek first the kingdom of God, to establish its righteousness. It means that all shall work as parts of the church and hence shall be under the general supervision of the church officers, so that we may all work together as one to accomplish the work intrusted unto us by our heavenly Father.

It happens that about the same time a move was made for closer association that a very different resolution was presented to the General Conference and passed. It was to the effect that whereas there is no provision in the law for presiding priest, teacher, or deacon, that until the Rules of Order are revised, no branch should be under the necessity of electing such officers. Since then the general officials of the church have been pointing out the fact that there is no law for such an executive committee. There is for a presiding officer over the branch, but presidency belongs by right to the Melchisedec priesthood, other things being equal. All of the priesthood should labor under his direction.

There is no rule that a branch must elect three elders to preside, though the officers of the church in One (volume 6, page 2,) suggest that they saw no objection why in large branches a presidency of three should not be elected. But one of these should be the president. In smaller branches, such an arrangement would be quite unnecessary. In the stakes it is a matter of church law that there should be a president and two counselors. In a branch there is no such law, though it may prove a good procedure in large branches. In any event it has nothing to do with coordination. In any event it is the duty of the branch president to see that all branch services are provided for. If three elders can be absent from a branch meeting, so could an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. In the absence of the presiding elder, it certainly seems much superior for another elder to take charge of a prayer meeting than it would for the priest, teacher, or deacon, in order; since to the Melchisedec priesthood belongs the discerning of spirits.

The difficulty here presented is not one of general church law or procedure, but simply errors in local church administration. Personally, we would consider the ruling of the presiding elder of the branch in this case correct. It is his place to arrange for the meetings. If the hour arrives and no one takes charge, the one highest in authority should move forward. He may properly ask if anyone present has been authorized to take charge. But when the hour arrives he can rightly move forward.

We might also make the further suggestion, though not authoritatively, that if the one asked to take charge comes in late, or if even the presiding elder himself arrives late, he should through courtesy recognize the one in charge, at least in associating him in charge of the service, and not contribute to disorder in dispensing with his services.

The presiding elder is in charge in the arranging of branch services. It is quite proper that he should confer with his counselors or associate presidents. If they show good reason why the program should be modified, where arises the confusion in accepting their suggestion?

S. A. B.

Thrift Talks

Says Son to Dad: "Dad, I'd like to have a car."

Says Dad to Son: "Son, you'll never have anything until you first learn to save. Saving is only postponed enjoyment. You can spend a dollar a day for a thousand days on present pleasures and all the enjoyment that you can possibly get out of it is a thousand days' pleasure, but if you will deny yourself of this temporary pleasure for one thousand days (less than three years) and then wisely invest that which you have saved, the pleasure will be more enduring; you may enjoy it, not for three years, but for a lifetime, possibly forty or fifty, or possibly sixty years."

Says Son to Dad: "Dad, I think you are right."
Tithe payers are the ones who listen to dad. He knows.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

True Religion and Faith in God Are Essential

By O. L. Weaver

Amid world-wide skepticism we must have a foundation of faith with a structure of true religion.

True religion is not only the most practical thing in the world, but the first essential. Without religion, a sense of dependence upon God and reverence for him, one can play a part in the physical and the intellectual world, but he cannot live up to the possibilities which God has placed within the reach of every human being.

A belief in God is fundamental; upon it rests the influences that control life.

World Not Getting Better

Sometime ago, while in conversation with a reverend gentleman, we heard the remark that "This old world is getting better every day." Now is it? Right here we venture to answer in the negative.

Can any observant individual arrive at any other than the foregoing conclusion, based on the following: That the same corroding influence that justified Prussianism at the cannon's mouth, Bolshevism at the prison door, that lured the Kaiser into a sea of blood, from which he emerged an exile, seeking asylum under a foreign flag; that the same philosophy which prompted Nietzsche, while carrying it to its logical conclusion, to be one of the most extreme of anti-Christians, is insidiously at work within our own shores.

As the great European war progressed, one became more and more impressed with the conviction that German propaganda rested upon a materialistic foundation. In the writings of Nietzsche could be found a defense, made in advance of all the cruelties and atrocities practiced by the militarists of Germany. Nietzsche tried to substitute the worship of the "superman" for the worship of God, not only rejecting the Creator, but all moral standards, praising war and eulogizing hatred; denouncing sympathy and pity as attributes unworthy of man.

Knowing then how this Darwinian hypothesis is antagonistic to Christianity, should we not as a nation introspect? Should we not look within ourselves, within our schools and colleges, in an endeavor to become acquainted with the methods employed by those to whom we intrust our boys and girls for instruction? Why is it that seventy-five per cent of the boys and girls who attend the colleges and universities of our land never return with a zeal for religious work?

Majority of Scientists Agnostic

James H. Leuba, professor of psychology in Bryn Mawr College, in his book entitled, "Belief in God and Immortality, having sent a questionnaire to practically all American scientists of prominence, affirms, from the answers received, that more than one half of the scientists of the United States, teaching biology, psychology, geology, and history have discarded belief in God and immortality. This is what the doctrine of evolution is doing for those who are teaching our young.

The following is a paragraph taken from the speech of the president of one of the largest state universities, given some time ago to a large body of students and afterwards printed by the Students' Christian Association of the institution:

And again, religion must not be thought of as something inconsistent with reasonable, scientific thinking in regard to the nature of the universe. I go so far as to say that, if you cannot reconcile religion with the things taught in biology, in psychology, or in the other fields of study in this university, then you should throw your religion away. Scientific truth is here to stay.

Some months ago we had the opportunity of ascertaining the views of a distinguished theologian who was a graduate of the most prominent university of our country and found him thoroughly imbued with this evolutionary doctrine, which he was pleased to term "higher criticism."

"Higher Critics" Least Frank

Of the three enemies, atheists, agnostics, and higher critics, the latter are the least frank. They spend their time undermining faith in God, faith in the Bible, faith in Christ, while at the same time professing belief in all three. They invariably assume an air of superior intelligence and look down with mingled pity and contempt upon what they regard as poor credulous humanity. They are devoid of spiritual vision and without any deep interest in the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. Enthusiastic in their denunciations of the Mosaic account of the creation, the higher critics discard the idea of the existence of Abraham, Moses, Daniel, and numerous other great characters of the Bible, and practically repudiate the fact that there exist or ever did exist, such gifts as prophecy, tongues, or interpretation of tongues. These critics even go so far as to smile at Christ's credulity for believing that David wrote the 110th Psalm, when as they say, science to-day has proved beyond a doubt that David could not possibly have done so.

Little wonder we as servants of God find difficulty in realizing the acceptance of the plain and precious teachings of our great Exemplar, among those who have been under the influence of men, who worship intellect instead of God. Faith versus reason is the great issue to-day, as it was in Eden. Faith says, "Obey"; reason, asks, "Why?"

Professor Reeves says:

The critics seemed to have the logical things on their side. The results at which they had arrived seemd inevitable. But upon closer thinking, I saw also that it was a partial and one-sided intellectualism, with a strong bias against the fundamental tenets of Biblical Christianity. Such a movement does not produce that intellectual humility which belongs to the Christian mind. On the contrary, it is responsible for the vast amount of intellectual pride, and aristocracy of intellect, with all the snobbery which usually accompanies that term. Do they not exactly correspond to Paul's word, "vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind. And not holding the head," etc? They have a splendid scorn for all opinions which do not agree with theirs. Under the spell of this sublime contempt they think they can ignore anything that does not square with their evolutionary hypothesis. The center of gravity of their thinking is in the theoretical, not in the religious; in reason, not in faith. Supremely satisfied with its self-constituted authority, the mind thinks itself competent to criticize the Bible, the thinking of all the centuries, and even Jesus Christ himself. The followers of this cult have their full share of the frailties of human nature. Rarely, if ever, can a thorough-going critic be an evangelist or even evangelistic; he is educational. How is it possible for a preacher to be a power of God, whose source of authority is his own reason and convictions? The Bible can scarcely contain more than good advice for such a man.

We Are Result of Drawing Power Above

Surely we are not the progeny of the brute. We have not been forced upward by a blind pushing power, nor tumbled up by chance. It is a drawing power that should rule the world, a power that finds its highest expression in Christ, who promised, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

If, as Bryan states, "instead of blasting at the Rock of Ages and endeavoring to ascertain the age of rocks," man would cry out as did the father (whose son had a dumb spirit), "Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief"; if, instead of scientists framing hypotheses, philosophers formulating theories, speculators making guesses, some of them "darkening counsel by words of wisdom," men would learn the way back to God, back to a real belief in a living God, to a belief in God as the Creator and loving heavenly Father, and consider himself a part of God's plan, be anxious to know God's will and do it; seeking direction through prayer; then would the line of communication be firmly established between man and his Creator; then would the Holy Spirit make its abode within us; then would love be the ruling force of the world; and then would we more nearly approach the condition which our great Exemplar came to establish, "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Imperial Brotherhood

[The following extract from an editorial in the Toronto Globe was sent us by Elder J. A. Morrison, of Owen Sound. The words inserted in brackets are his, and with these changes it might be quite well applied as a statement of the aims of our church in that particular at least.—EDITORS.]

"Lord Shaw, a distinguished Scottish jurist, tells the Canadian Bar Association that to him the British Empire is not an Imperial Dominion, but an Imperial Brotherhood. This is a happy phrase embodying a solid truth. Constitutional writers may dispute about the exact legal status of Canada or Australia, but the fact with which we are faced is a steady progress towards substantial equality. And there need be no further dispute about the exact meaning of equality. Between brother and brother there may be differences in stature, strength, capacity, and wealth; but all these are consistent with substantial equality. [Doctrine and Covenants 128:6; 119:8.]

"Brotherhood typifies also one of the strongest bonds by which men can be held together. Brothers are united, not by contract or law, but by affection. That bond may serve to unite them not only for reciprocal protection and promotion of their own interests, but for the welfare of the community. [Order of Enoch.] Lord Shaw says that only those progressive nations, [or Saints] are fit to live who are loyal to law, justice, equality, brotherhood, and service. Imperialism [Zion] must be founded on service and not on selfish ambition."

Starvation in Russia Has Ceased

The Literary Digest for August 26 states that the loss of life through starvation has ceased in Russia, thanks to the effort of the American relief administration. The New York Times refers to this and says no act of mercy so stupendous has before been undertaken and accomplished. Three and a half million children, over five and a quarter million adults were fed until all accessible persons whose lives were in jeopardy are being reached, although almost everyone in Russia is hungry.

It therefore appears that the need has not entirely disappeared for support of this work. Death from starvation has ceased, but many are still hungry even though sixty million dollars has been expended for needed food, for medical aid and supplies.

The Small College

A hundred years ago Harvard University graduated a class of sixty. Now the great universities number their enrollment by the thousands and tens of thousands. The universities are indeed great and attempt to take a very broad sweep of the field of knowledge.

The Central Christian Advocate for August 30 comments on one state university whose income was over $6,000,000, of which less than three fourths of a million came from student fees. Of the total amount $2,600,000 was advanced to the State for salaries and wages. The number of students is measured by the thousands. It is expensive but performs a great work.

On the other hand, there still remains the need for the small college. The small college lays the foundation of culture through personal contact and depth of life. It makes the man, while the great university develops the specialist

www.LatterDayTruth.org

PASTORAL

Priesthood Problems

By O. J. Tary

Upholding the hands of God's chosen servants a duty of the church.

When Amalek fought against the children of Israel in Rephidim, Moses stood on top of a hill with the rod of God in his hand. While he held up his hand, Israel prevailed, but when his hand went down Amalek prevailed.

But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword.—Exodus 17:11-13.

Moses was chosen of the Lord for the responsible position of leader for Israel. The selection of Aaron and Hur to hold up his hands, beautifully typifies the work of the two counselors of the president of the high priesthood.

If latter-day Israel is to be successful in the important work of building up the kingdom of God and establishing Zion, it is very essential that he whom God has chosen as prophet and leader shall have the support, not only of his counselors in the higher offices of the church, but of the entire body of the church. Perhaps no one, unaided by inspirational power, can fully sense the great responsibility placed upon the First Presidency of the church, and also the leading quorums of the priesthood. Shall we be indifferent and unconcerned in this matter? Shall we occupy the role of critic or faultfinder, while not in a position to sit as a judge in the matter? Shall we not rather give hearty and earnest support to the men upon whom God has placed so great responsibility? We may not be able to understand why their work does not always appear to us as the things that in our judgment should be done. Let us remember we shall have to account to the Great Judge only for the things intrusted to us to do, and every other person will be held to account for the talents and responsibilities intrusted to them.

When God made selection of Moses to lead the children of Israel out of bondage, he selected the best material available, and the people under his leadership were either blessed or punished just as they were loyal or false in their support of him. In selecting one to usher in the Restoration, I cannot believe that God would act differently from other times, but that he made selection of the one possessing the greatest degree of those attributes essential for the responsible position.

We have satisfactory evidence of the genuineness of the call of the first president of the Reorganization; and his fifty-four years of faithful service supplementing other evidence, fully attest the divine call of our present leader and prophet.

In Doctrine and Covenants 104:11 we read:

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church form a quorum of the presidency of the church.

From this we learn that the church is duty bound to uphold the men chosen to occupy in this quorum, by their confidence, faith, and prayer. A great work has been done since 1830, but a greater work remains to do. This is no time for theorizing or idle speculation. Action is necessary to obtain results. Intelligent action necessitates a leader. It is essential that loyal, united support of the body be given the leader.

Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet it hath no need of the feet, for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also, the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:21.

We are living in the times when men's souls are tried, in all earthly organizations and kingdoms. Governments totter and fall, because of lack of courage and confidence on the part of those occupying as leaders, and lack of proper support from the people. If the kingdom of God, set up in latter days, is to be spared from a similar fate, it will be because of greater wisdom and divine guidance given the leader, and a truer consecration of the people of God to the cause espoused, including that support that the Lord expects his people to give to the men called of God, and occupying as his representatives to the people.

The coming General Conference, October 1, may mark an important event in the history of the church. What God wills that the church shall do, and what advance steps may be required of us, I shall not undertake to say. But if the time is at hand that God shall point out in his chosen way that greater development of the church is required to meet Zion's ideals, are we going to be prepared to and expert. There is a need for both, but especially for the first.

"The deep reason for sending a student to a church college is obvious. Frankly, it is to give him what we understand by the church atmosphere, the Christ ideal, the things the church stands for, to make them basic in his program of life. It is to bring to him service as a motive in life; to plant within Christian altruism, Christian standards, Christian experience, Christian fellowship, Christian expectation as to time and eternity; to give him something by which to live whilst he is making his living."

respond? We may be sure that God will unfold his plans, as the time arrives, and through the one occupying as God's mouthpiece to the church.

If any should encourage the spirit of criticism, and this in turn spread through the membership of the church, it does not require inspiration to foresee the disastrous effect this will have. But, if we carry out the will of the Lord and uphold by our confidence, faith, and prayers, the men standing at the head of the church, and seek to develop that unity and confidence throughout the branches, then we may expect the church to be ready to move forward as the Lord directs. The church was recently asked to observe a day for special prayers, that greater unity might obtain in the leading quorums of the church and on down to all the branches. I approve of this, but does it not appeal to you that we should not stop with this one effort? I believe we should make special efforts along this line in all our ministrations in the various offices we may occupy.

Let every man learn his duty, and labor in his office and calling, until God shall see fit to place him elsewhere. In doing this we shall secure for ourselves the divine approbation, and we shall be instrumental in advancing the work of redemption.

It requires no argument to convince branch officers of the necessity for the members to have confidence in the officers, and to cooperate with them. Cooperation, and coordination of effort are essential to success in every department of church work. The greatest achievements in the world, both in civil and religious governments, have resulted from strongly centralized organizations, or governments. It may be said by some, "There is danger in conferring too much authority in one man, or in a few men." There should be no danger in following the plan approved of God in all ages. If men are selected of God, and remain true to the trust, the body need not fear to support and follow them. Jesus is our leader, and ultimately to be our king. But, until he comes to rule as king in person, the one chosen as his mouthpiece to the church exercises the prerogative of leader, by virtue of his office as prophet, seer, and revelator. True, he cannot go beyond the bounds of the law and remain in favor with God; and in the event that he should, there is a properly constituted authority to take action.

The history of the past places most forcibly before our view the disaster wrought by dissensions, personal ambitions, and yielding to insidious motives for self-aggrandizement.

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever is intrusted to his care.—Doctrines and Covenants 11:4.

This should be our watchword in all our activities

—"humble and full of love." In this manner we shall uphold and strengthen the hands of God's chosen servants, and will secure for ourselves greater favor of the Lord. Jealousy will not go hand in hand with success in our work. They are absolutely incompatible. Seldom will any two men occupying in the same office or position, meet with exactly the same degree of success, or develop and advance exactly at the same rate. But there is no room for any to be jealous of the one making the more rapid advancement. We should all rejoice at the success of any of our brethren, whether we are able to achieve much or little. He who labors assiduously in the office to which he is chosen, will not fail to receive a full reward commensurate with his efforts. It may be that some who seemingly accomplish but little, will obtain a greater reward than some others who may be given credit for greater things, judged from a human standpoint. Reward will be given on the basis of sincere effort, propelled by the right motive.

Let us each one resolve to act out this resolution: "I will make a steadfast effort to do my work, and will, so far as lies in my power, encourage by word and deed all others who try to do their part. And I will not, by word or deed, place obstruction in the way of any who are striving to do their duty."

Men, occupying positions both high and low, have fallen in the past, and such a thing is possible so long as Satan is not bound. But, if the priesthood of the church are united in earnest efforts to secure through prayer and love, a highly consecrated church, where each exercises charity towards all others, and where all uphold with their faith and prayers God's chosen servants, from the First Presidency to the deacons, the danger of men falling will be reduced to a minimum.

Efficient workers are in demand throughout the world, in all secular pursuits. The work in which we are engaged, also calls for efficient workers, and is entitled to the best possible to obtain. It challenges our highest ideals and ambition. Let no one become an obstructionist, but all become constructive workers in the vineyard of the Lord.

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

CONFERENCE DAILY

An indispensable item in conference news is timeliness. The DAILY HERALD will give you the proceedings promptly, and we are making new arrangements for mailing which should insure early delivery to all points. Only 25 cents. Order early.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The American Indian

In the official magazine of the Daughters of the American Revolution, issue of April, 1922, is an article of unusual interest to Latter Day Saints, for it deals with the American Indian. It was written by Mrs. Mabel W. Randall, of Watertown, Connecticut, and was adjudged the best essay upon the subject submitted in a contest for which the prize of fifty dollars was given by Mrs. W. C. Roe, of Colony, Oklahoma.

The essay is called "The twentieth century Indian, an American," and was written in appreciation of the services of the North American Indian in the World War and his worth as an American. We quote a few paragraphs because of their significant interest to those who believe that the true history of the ancestry of the American Indian is to be found in the Book of Mormon, a history which does not seem to be taken into account by many of the writers of the present day.

"Our introduction to the American Indian dates back to the discovery of America. Tradition tells us that they were the successors of the Mound Builders, and were their inferiors in civilization. Recently it has been claimed that all the aboriginal inhabitants of this continent were of one race; and that the arts, sciences, and architecture of the Mound Builders, as well as of the Indians, came from the superior civilization and development of Central America and Mexico, demonstrating what is termed 'the northern drift of civilization.' Previously, it was believed that the Indians had been driven south by savage tribes from the north.

"The Indian had no organized church; no priest heard his confession or assumed responsibility for his soul. His belief in the Great Mystery had been handed down to him from his forefathers for many generations. Who knows how many? Who knows from what sage or savant came these teachings? They were firmly established as a quality in the life of every tribe.

"The worship of the Great Spirit was 'wordless, silent, solitary, and free from all self-seeking.' He met his Maker heart to heart in the great forests; saw His handiwork in their shadowy depths, in the vaulted skies, and flying clouds. The voices of nature, the thunder, and music of the winds, to him, were echoes of that voice divine.

"His attitude towards peace and war, life and death, were logical. Customs of long standing marked his observance of these elements of existence. A perfect self-control gave the Indian a great advantage over the exigencies of his time. War made him a cruel antagonist, but in that he was only human. Like the old Roman, he loved his native land! He loved, in a literal sense, the 'rocks and rills, the woods and templed hills,' as well as his liberty and freedom. His symbol of 'Peace on earth and good will toward men,' was the smoking of the peace-pipe, and on a parallel with our drinking of wine and breaking of bread, as a ceremony. He believed that the prayer for peace arose in the smoke, as incense, to the Spirit Father.

"There were many religious festivals, among them the rites of baptism and communion. In the long-ago days when the Indian found his life in danger, he reverently offered a prayer to his Father, the Sun, asking that his life might be saved. If this prayer proved effectual, he acknowledged the blessing by performing the Sun Dance. This dance was not altogether free from bodily suffering, and was meant as a thank-offering or confession of faith. When death came to this man of unknown ancestry, he acknowledged the Great Presence again. His wish was to die in the open, that his spirit might pass from his body under the open sky. At this supreme moment his attitude showed a belief in the spiritual relationship between man and his Maker."

And then Mrs. Randall goes on to give a brief survey of the oppressions which the Indian suffered at the hands of the white man, and their gradual subjection. She speaks of greed and whisky as proving disastrous, and that reservation life did not "inspire his once lordly spirit. Gone were his lands! Misunderstood and down-trodden, he was near the end of the trail, and there was nothing left but remembrance!"

Commenting then upon his gradual rise from that condition, the writer, perhaps unconsciously, touches upon another fulfillment of prophecy.

"But, as his own maize comes to its fruitage, so the Indian has come into his heritage. Through education and help from the very source which seems to have most deflected the current of his life, he appears about to rise to even higher heights than before the decline of his power and character.

"The Indian as a race, it would seem, was not made to die. Though fewer in number, he is growing in individual strength. Schools have done, and are doing, much for him at the present time, but perhaps nothing has opened our eyes to the value of the Indian as a citizen, so much as the declaration of war between the United States and Germany. Did the Indian respond when the call came? Yes! To the number of 13,000 and more! From its long lethargy came forth the battle lore of his fathers. The latent dignity and endurance of an almost forgotten generation suddenly leaped from the past to defend a land, long his by right of inheritance, and a flag, his by adoption!"

The rest of Mrs. Randall's article is replete with figures and incidents which prove, abundantly, the loyalty of the Indian in the harrowing times of the recent war. Many are the instances she cites of exceptional courage and endurance, and many seem to have been the medals of honor for bravery bestowed upon the red men of the plains.

One very interesting comment made by the writer is upon the fact that the Indian took his place as a soldier, in the midst of companies and battalions of other Americans, and did not seek special recognition or segregation as being of another race. She says:

"One might go on and on with true records of adventure and sacrifice, scattered here and there through every branch of the service. The absence of Indian regiments like those composed of Filipinos and Negroes, often draws an exclamation of wonder but no word of complaint comes from the Indian because of unofficial recognition. When he enters the United States service, he does so on exactly the same basis as any white citizen of the country, and, except that he is usually the most popular man in his company, becomes indistinguishable from his comrades. Pershing's Scouts, and one company of the 142d Infantry, were composed entirely of Indians, but without official designation as such."

After a survey of the economic and business standing of the Indian of to-day, a few figures near the close of the article, as well as the closing paragraph, are of significance and interest to us, concerned as we are in the spiritual development of these people—descendants of a noble race of the dim and distant past.

"From various reports we find that 56,000 are self-supporting out of a population of over 350,000 and that thousands have broken away from all tribal relations and are living among the white population making their way according to that standard. As sheep men, lumbermen, trappers, hunters, and farmers, the Indian is successful. Many are becoming good mechanics and engineers; the more progressive are taking up the arts and sciences; where the ancestor shaped the spear and ground the arrow, the scion carves furniture or engraves our jewelry.

"There are over 61,000 Indian children in the schools, out of 84,000 eligibles; 120,000 Indians speak English, and 113,000 are religious, church-going people; 79,000 are citizens; 119,000 wear citizens' clothing; and over 28,000 are voters. . . .

"The great war has made us codiscoverers with Columbus; it has helped us to rediscover the Indian—his individuality, his bravery, his worth as a citizen. Let us put forth the right hand of fellowship, and welcome him as he deserves, as a citizen of the twentieth century—a real American!"

A. A.

"More Than They All!"

The story of the widow, who, having put into the treasury the mite from her scanty store, was declared to have given "more than they all," is familiar to us. Not so familiar, perhaps, but equally illustrative of the value which God places upon real sacrifice for his work, is the story of the wonderful manifestation of his approval which followed the completion of the Temple at Kirtland, which was erected at such a cost of personal effort and consecration on the part of a handful of his people. Our recent visit to Kirtland, and the baptism of our spirit in thoughts of the "voices and visions of yesterday," made newly possible by presence in the old haunts of the early "Latter Day" Saints, has impressed upon us again the necessity for greater effort on the part of the present-day membership if we would receive like blessings and approval.

In the Women's Department of the church organization, rare opportunity is given for free-will offering for the advancement of that portion of God's work on earth. More and more are we all coming to recognize that Zion can never be redeemed until the homes of the members are redeemed—are reclaimed from worldliness, from selfishness, from impurities of every nature. "I will have a pure people," said the Lord. How can he have that unless the homes, the parents in the homes, the children in the homes, are imbued with a sense of their duties and privileges there, and the importance of their right living every day and every hour?

To help and encourage our people, to hold out to them concrete objectives, to place in their hands material for their use and study—surely this work is a worthy one, and its acceptance before God has been assured at various times. It has the stamp of his approval, in so far as it is conducted in righteousness and in the spirit of love and humility and service.

Living in the midst of material things as we are, it is necessary for us to use material media in prosecuting our work. Paper and labor costs in getting out our lessons and helps. The Government will not carry our thousands of letters through the mails without postage. Consecrated women with ability and training and true soul-consecration, willing to give time and talent to the work, are not always able to purchase the books and materials needed for the task commissioned to them. Workers, whose coming into localities has proved immeasurably helpful and encouraging to local members, cannot be sent into the waiting field without expense. All these needs, and many others equally legitimate and necessary to the successful carrying on of our part of the church work, require money, and it should be a joy on the part of the women to adequately finance their own department.

Thus our necessity becomes your opportunity. The blessings of God continue to be poured out upon those who truly serve him, and even small offerings, made in humility and with a sincere desire to help his cause, assume, in the eyes of that just God, an importance and place similar to that accorded to the widow who threw in her mite.

Let it be remembered that the offering made for the work of the Women's Department is no longer limited to a simple dime a year—although, be it said, dimes when coming in in unlimited numbers are not to be despised! No, the opportunity is now extended to everyone to give for this good cause, as freely and generously as the heart dictates, and the giver may feel assured that the offering will find a worthy and appreciative channel of service. As we emerge from the cloud of financial depression which has for some months hindered and held back the work of the church, let us, as a token of our gratitude for the bounty of the present year, make a special effort to generously finance our department, and in making the fall, or second semiannual, offering, make it big enough to hold up the hands of our faithful officers, and permit them to carry out their righteous plans for our advancement. Send to Treasurer Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

A. A.

"What Your Hands Find to Do!"

Specific needs of Sanitarium and Church Homes.

"Do with your might, what your hands find to do!" How the words of the old song come back to us, as we scan the little list of things which the superintendents of our Children's Home and Sanitarium and Homes for the Aged would welcome as gifts to their institutions!

The heart of a woman is a tender thing. Quickly it responds to an appeal coming from the needs of little children, or those tossing upon weary beds of suffering, as may be witnessed by the many boxes of donations received by our church institutions. These have been most gratefully received, and in making the gifts, our women have been signally and richly blessed—a spiritual blessing, sometimes hard to define, but very precious in possession!

In order that our donations may be made where most needed, and be of a nature to be most fully appreciated and of service, the following list of necessities is presented, from which our local groups of women may make wise selection, and feel, in addition to the immediate good resulting from the work in their nimble and willing fingers, the comforting assurance that they are "in step," are keeping pace with the organization and system which is gradually being perfected. Give it careful attention, and follow instructions conscientiously, and greater harmony and unity will be the result.

Naming some of the inconsistencies which have been existent in the donations of the past might wound some sensitive giver, whose heart was right in making the gift, even though the choice was inopportune. So we will refrain from citing specific instances, and content ourselves by saying, as earnestly as possible, that the steps which are being taken to systematize the matter of donations and gifts to our church institutions are consistent and constructive, and look towards a prevention of the repetition of past difficulties and inequalities. The officers who have been giving this matter their earnest consideration, the Bishop of the church and his agents, the boards of management of the different homes and Sanitarium, the superintendents of the Women's Department, general and local, and those immediately in charge of the institutions concerned, should have the whole-hearted and intelligent cooperation of everyone in the church, in this effort to distribute and systematize the gifts which come this way.

Things Needed for the Children's Home

Coverall Suits: For boys whose ages range from six to twelve years. We prefer blue denim or khaki, and often a bright band of color, such as red, adds a great deal to the garment. Would suggest four six-year-old suits, six ten-year-old suits, and four twelve-year-old suits.

Bedspreads: Size of finished spread should be one and five sixth yards by two and one half yards. The material may be mercerized muslin or other similar fabric. We need ten such spreads.

Table Linen: Material, unbleached muslin. Size of tablecloth, 52 inches square. Size of napkins, 18 inches square.

Sister Monroe adds: "If there are those who care to help in another way, such as earning money with which we may buy books for our library, or purchase equipment for the playground or playroom, that, too, would be very much appreciated."

Things Needed for the Sanitarium

Sheets: 64 by 108 inches. Three-inch hem at top, one-inch hem at bottom.

Pillow Cases: 18 by 30, or 18 by 32, preferred. Can use all sizes, however, as they have pillows of all sizes.

Spreads: 76 by 90 inches. Prefer them made of bedspread dimity.

Blanketh: Width, two yards. White or light, single or double, woolen or cotton. Light colors preferred.

Quilts: Not more than 60 inches wide. Light in weight, light in color, because they must be laundered often.

Towels: Hand towels. White huck, with red stripe in border.

Dresser Scarfs: 18 by 48 inches; also 16 by 44. These sizes preferred, but could use them longer.

Stand Covers: Square 27 by 27 inches, and 22 by 30. These may be plain or fancy, but plain ones of durable quality are most in demand.

Tray Cloths: 16 by 20, or 11 by 14 inches before shrinking. May be made of sheeting, but appreciate them made of table linen or Indian head, with one-inch hem all the way round.

Napkins: Prefer 20 by 22 size, but can use them larger.

Tablecloths: None smaller than 54 inches square. Prefer some 60 inches square.

Rugs: Blue and white, wash or rag. Appreciate other colors, but prefer colors mentioned.

Operating Room Towels: 18 by 32, or 18 by 34, plain white huck. Some 17 by 24 before shrinking, which may have a little red in border. Also some 18 by 12. All of huck.

Nursery: Baby clothes of any and all sizes, new or old. Squares new or old, birds' eye preferred. Baby blankets, new or old, and materials, cotton or woolen. Prefer blankets to quilts, but would accept quilts if any desire to send them.

Clean Rags: For washing or scrubbing. Also to make squares for mouth wipes.

Tea Towels: Made from flour or sugar sacks, with narrow hems.

Curtains: Long ones for dining room. Seven windows, 7 by 3½ foot. Long ones for nurses' home, same size.

Drapes: Dainty drapes would be appreciated to make the nurses' rooms homelike.

Sash Curtains: For hospital windows, three and a half feet square.

Pictures: Nicely framed pictures of well-chosen subjects are needed in nurses' home and hospital.

Records: Suitable for sick patients. Victrola recently donated. Also records for the nurses' home.

Kitchenet Equipment: So the nurses may have private company to meals occasionally, and serve them themselves.

Would also appreciate lawn swing and tennis court equipment. Anyone wishing to donate either of these should so designate when sending in their donations.

Books and magazines for patients and nurses will be appreciated.

A New Organizer

The general executive announce the appointment of Sister S. B. Smith, of Detroit, Michigan, as organizer for the Detroit District, to succeed Sister Bennett who found it necessary to resign. We bespeak for Sister Smith the most cordial support and cooperation as she moves into her work, the accomplishment of which will mean perhaps more to the church than she or any of us can know. God is directing the affairs of his people, and while many of his ways are inscrutable and incomprehensible to finite minds, we may feel sure that no work which is offered in humility, love, and consecration, can ever fail to have its great influence in the upward progress of the whole.

Sister Smith is the youngest daughter of our former bishop, George A. Blakeslee, and from childhood has imbibed deeply at the springs of spiritual life. She has, of late years, turned her efforts most effectively towards the advancement of the welfare of children, and being of a thorough and systematic nature, she works by no haphazard or undetermined course. With the full support and confidence of the people of her district, and relying upon the directing counsel of the Spirit, "which leadeth to do good," Sister Smith's labors among the Saints in the interests of the objectives of the Women's Department cannot but bring about much righteousness. May this blessing attend her, and all who rally to her support and assistance in this important corner of the latter-day harvest field.

A. A.

Indian Women Make Good Wives

The Indian woman is a model wife, mother, and homemaker, the possessor of a gentle heart and a skilled hand, according to Mr. Julius Rolshoven of Detroit, an American artist, who has spent five years studying and painting the Indian tribes of New Mexico. Our ideas about the Indian woman have been all wrong, is his contention.

In the first place, he declares, the Indian woman is beautiful. She is perfectly proportioned, with beautiful feet (who could have been the perpetrator of that absurd falsehood that the Indians have "flat" feet!) and exquisitely modeled hands.

In the five years of his intimate observation of Indian life he never heard a squaw mother raise her voice to correct her children. Her control of them is quiet, gentle, loving, yet firm.

Mr. Rolshoven has great respect for the part played by the Indian woman in the economic life of the family and the tribe. The brave who once was a warrior and hunter is now the farmer. The squaw is the home-maker and home-keeper. But in these activities she is not just a spender and saver. She is a producer as well. She practices with skilled and versatile hands many arts and crafts that bring beauty and comfort to her household. She is a weaver. She makes gay saddlecloths and saddlebags; the beautiful blankets and rugs which the Indian uses so picturesquely in so many ways. She makes all the clothing worn by her husband, herself, and her children. She is a good cook.

Once a year the Pueblo squaw cleans house. It is a house cleaning of a very high order, too. For it means not only a renovation, but a complete redecoration of the entire interior.

"The Indian woman is in every way the equal of her mate," Mr. Rolshoven avers.

"She lives for her husband, her children, and the tribe. Yet in so doing she sacrifices none of her natural charm and beauty. And through this unselfish ideal of life she has acquired a poise and a peacefulness of spirit that shines out of her deep-set eyes."—Omaha Bee.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XVIII

Territories and Public Lands

I. Government of Territories

1. The territorial powers of Congress.
2. Territorial acquisitions of the United States (Note 1.)
3. Congressional control of colonies.
 - a. The "insular cases."
 - b. Government of the Philippines and Porto Rico.
4. Government of organized Territories.
5. The admission of new States.
 - a. Dangers and problems of admission.

II. Our Policy Regarding Agricultural Lands

1. Public land policy in the past.
 - a. Early policy in regard to the sale of lands.
 - b. Land grants to schools, roads, and railways.
2. The Homestead Act of 1862.
3. The new Homestead Act.
4. Desert Land Act frauds.
5. The Irrigation Law of 1902.
 - a. Problems and results.
6. Give the advantages and disadvantages of our agricultural land policy.

III. Conservation

1. Problem of American forests.
2. National and State reserves.
3. Public and State reserves.
4. Water conservation and water power.
 - a. Flood prevention and control of water.
 - b. Importance of water power.
5. Inland waterways and their interrelation with forestation and water power.
6. Coal and other minerals.
 - a. The national law of 1864 modified in 1873.
 - b. New policy in 1910.
 - c. Present problems.
 - d. The outlook.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. "The economics of waste and conservation," by John Bates Clark, in Atlantic Monthly, September, 1910.
2. "America must grow its own timber," by Raphael Zon, in American Conservation, May, 1911.
3. "Vanishing coal and growing wood," by Edwin E. Slosson, in The Independent, June 11, 1921.
4. "Preserve the Forests," editorial in The Outlook, January 11, 1922.
5. Explain just how the condition of the roads, the

LETTERS AND NEWS

Review of Macgregor-Glendenning Debate Reports

Some very interesting light on a greatly misrepresented subject. Some illuminating statements by a nonmember at Jonesport are included.

Editors' Note

In the HERALDS of June 14 and June 21, this year, we published letters from Elders Daniel Macgregor, O. L. Thompson, and H. A. Koehler, reporting the progress and outcome of a debate between Elder Daniel Macgregor of our church and Elder T. E. Glendenning, of Burr Oak, Iowa, the latter representing the Christian Adventist Church.

Our readers will recall that the propositions were as follows: "Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine, organization, and practice." The Adventist representative affirmed a similar statement, with the name of his church inserted. The Book of Mormon was to have been debated two nights.

The letters disclosed that the debate, which was to have continued till Tuesday evening, closed on Friday evening after Elder Glendenning had three times refused to accede to the request of the chairman to confine his debate to the subject under discussion. Considerable excitement prevailed on the part of the audience, and at the command of the chairman the doors were opened and the crowd dismissed.

An item in a letter from Elder O. L. Thompson, dated June 13, reported twenty-six baptisms for our church and many more prospects.

In a periodical called Our Hope, published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publication Association from Mendota, Illinois, issue of August 2, appears a report of the same debate. This letter is headed, "Glendenning-Macgregor debate ended in an uproar," and is written by one L. B. Rockwell, of the Adventist faith.

This letter, which we reproduce in full following, greatly disagrees with the reports we published. Several of our friends have called our attention to the article, and while we may expect different persons to see the same thing from various viewpoints, the variance here is quite radical.

Through the alert cooperation of Elder O. L. Thompson, one of our missionaries at Jonesport, Maine, we are able to furnish herewith additional items which seem to settle forever the actual facts about this debate. We are sorry to be required thus to challenge anyone's veracity, but it has seemed necessary, and is done with the motive only of having the truth clearly set forth for all. Since we have given full publication to the letter from Mr. Rockwell, we are by letter re-quantity of timber, and the welfare of children of every other

b. Need of a new policy.

a. Public construction of canals.

State in the Union are of vital interest to your own State.

6. Write a history of the homestead laws of the United States.

7. Debate: Resolved, That the Filipinos should be given their independence.

8. Explain America's work in Cuba and Porto Rico.

DORA YOUNG.

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

questing the editors of Our Hope to do as well by their readers by printing in their paper at least the letter signed by Mr. R. B. Stevens.

Rockwell Letter from "Our Hope"

An event of more than local importance and interest was the debate between Elder T. E. Glendenning of Burr Oak, Iowa, and Daniel Macgregor. Brother Glendenning represented the Adventists in the discussion and Macgregor the Mormons, who pose under the name of "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The following propositions were agreed to for six nights' debate. Two nights to each.

Resolved; That the Adventist Christian Church is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine, practice, and organization.

Resolved; That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine, practice, and organization.

The Book of Mormon. Should it be respected and believed in by all Christian people?

The debate was held in the opera house in Jonesport, Maine. Extra seats were brought in and standing room was occupied every night. Interest was keyed high. Careful and generally quiet attention was given although there was some scattered effort to detract from Brother Glendenning, while he was laying a strong Bible premises and showing how fully the Adventists agreed with the plain doctrinal teachings. Mr. Macgregor presented some misrepresentations of history in trying to discredit our organization, and after being corrected with dates and facts continued to repeat the same. He had so little to offer in opposition that it was either repeat or own up as defeated.

The second evening he used his last speech of thirty minutes in presenting the Reorganization Church claims of organization. All could see that he was ashore for negative material and had suffered a defeat on the first proposition.

The first night on the second proposition he enlarged on his last speech but studiously avoided referring to the origin of his church. It was apparent that he intended to keep Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet and seer, out of the discussion. Later developments proved this true.

Brother Glendenning easily (for him) and speedily annihilated his claims and secured his admission that his church did not require nor was it necessary for those who joined their church to "own, read, or believe their Bible or the Book of Mormon." That "The King James' translation contained all that was necessary for salvation." The superlative ability of our Brother Glendenning as a debater was demonstrated in his closing speech. He had prepared the way during the first two evenings and now was closing in on his opponent, closing the evening with probably one of the greatest victories ever scored against a false doctrine. The Mormons were thoroughly dejected, as they expected to have the debate broken up before the last speech of Brother Glendenning.

The fourth and last evening Macgregor wearily filled in his time using such unimportant matter that the intelligent part of the audience almost lost interest. In advancing upon the Mormon claims, Brother Glendenning reached the founder of the false system, Joe Smith, and was showing from sworn evidence that he was a polygamist and man of impure life, and thus one through whom God would not reveal a message to the world nor allow to hold an office in holy orders.

By his approval, a signal was given for confusion and the breaking up of the debate. Macgregor and his moderator, a Mormon elder, led in this effort. The chairman, also a sympathizer, carried out the wishes of the Mormons and ordered the hall cleared and declared the debate closed.

That this was planned was known two days before. After the second night the Mormons went to one of the town officials and asked him to stop the debate. He refused. They then planned the breaking up of the debate. They did not dare to hear it to a close. One of their people said after it was over, "If that debate had gone to a finish it would have ruined our church."

Lasting good was done for truth and righteousness. Many have been saved from a possible future membership in that church. One who had formerly left the Adventist Church and joined them asked for a letter to reunite with the Adventist Church. Their false claims have been exposed. It was a long journey for Brother Glendenning to make for less than four nights' debate, but the cost of time and money was well spent. Our Adventists gave liberally to meet the expense and were helped by many others.

The writer is of the opinion that debates are a wise and profitable way of spreading truth and exposing error. We are satisfied that this debate was a wise move and was rewarded in good results. Let no one think that in planning an effort of this kind Brother Glendenning should be expected to take care of it for his expenses only. He should be liberally rewarded.—Our Hope, August 2, 1922.

Review of Rockwell Letter, by O. L. Thompson

[EDITOR'S NOTE: For the sake of brevity we have omitted some interesting items from the following letter, since they were but further arguments that the facts have been greatly misrepresented.]

In the August 2, 1922, number of the Adventist publication, Our Hope, published at Mendota, Illinois, there appeared an article penned by L. B. Rockwell, who is a representative of the Adventist persuasion, and whose present pastorate is at Beals, Maine, which is a part of Jonesport, Maine. The article entitled, "Glendenning-Macgregor debate ended in an uproar," is an effort by the reverend gentleman to inform the public of the result of the recent debate held at Jonesport, Maine, beginning May 22, 1922, from his viewpoint. The contestants in the discussion were Elder Daniel Macgregor, a representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and Reverend T. E. Glendenning, a representative of the Adventist Christian Church. The discussion was to continue for six nights, but was brought to a termination on the fourth night.

We draw your attention to some of the matter contained in the reverend gentleman's version of the pursuance and result of the debate. He either through ignorance or malice makes this statement: "Brother Glendenning represented the Adventists in the discussion and Macgregor the Mormons, who pose under the name of The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Mr. Rockwell seems ignorant of the fact that the church is officially named and incorporated. And this name is recognized and recorded by the Government. Therefore it is not a matter of pose on the part of the church. Again, he says: "Mr. Macgregor presented some misrepresentations of history in trying to discredit our organization, and after being corrected with dates and facts continued to repeat the same. He had so little to offer in opposition that it was either repeat or own up as defeated." Here we wish to state that while making the preliminary and mutual arrangements for the discussion, it was suggested to Mr. Rockwell that a stenographer be employed to report the debate, each side represented in the discussion paying one half of the expense incurred in this extra arrangement. He refused to aid in this, saying his people were not interested in employing a stenographer for the discussion. The histories used by Elder Macgregor were their own historic publications, written by Adventist authorities and published by their own publishing houses. They were Welcome's History, and Johnson's History of Adventism. Mr. Rockwell says they are misrepresentations and a discredit to his organization. If so, he has no one to blame but his own recognized writers. While Mr. Glendenning endeavored to patch up the affair by disowning Miller, etc., Elder Macgregor, like any good debater, kept their recognized historical statements before the audience.

Again Mr. Rockwell says: "The second evening he [Mr. Macgregor] used his last speech of thirty minutes in presenting the Reorganization claims of organization. All could see that he was ashore for negative material," etc. The fact of the matter is that Elder Macgregor had a large chart portraying the New Testament Church of Christ, on one side of the house, and on the other side of the house he had another chart portraying the Adventist Church. From these he talked on the organization, doctrine, and practice of the church as portrayed in the King James Version of the Bible, and Adventist statements of belief as found in their own publications, in comparison and contrast. This Mr. Rockwell dare not conscientiously before God deny. Mr. Macgregor did not seem to be "ashore for material"; he spoke very fluently and never appeared lost for anything to say. To this all who heard him will in honesty testify. He never once became so entangled in his remarks that he had to inquire of the audience, as did Mr. Glendenning upon one occasion, "What did I say?"

He also says, "Brother Glendenning reached the founder of the false system, Joe Smith, and was showing from sworn evidence that he was a polygamist and a man of impure life," etc. Let the reader keep in mind that the word origin is not in the propositions. In leaving the proposition to talk upon the character of a man instead of the organization, he was doing what one easily might be able to do, when considering any organization, for every church has its polygamists, and wrongdoers; of course we wouldn't think of blaming the whole church for the wrongs of individuals. In aid of his endeavors to slander Smith's character, he resorted to a volume entitled, True Origin of Mormon Polygamy. When questioned as to who its author was, he was reluctant to give it. And after being asked two or three times, he informed the inquirer in the presence of the audience that it was, "Shook's." From this book he was reading designed affidavits of certain women who claimed to be wives of Joseph Smith, while he was living. Why was he so reluctant to tell the name of the author of the book? The following quotation from the book will give you an idea of the reason why:

"It is charged by the respondents, as an echo of the Utah Church that Joseph Smith, 'the Martyr,' secretly taught and practiced polygamy; and the Utah contingent furnishes the evidence, and two of the women, to prove this fact. It perhaps would be uncharitable to say of these women that they have borne false testimony as to their connection with Joseph Smith; but, in view of all the evidence and circumstances surrounding the alleged intercourse, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that at most, they were but sports in 'nest hiding.'"—Excerpt from decision of Judge John F. Phillips in the Temple Lot Suit, tried in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri, March, 1894, (fifty years after Smith's death).

Here we quote two statements from Shook's book—the book Mr. Glendenning was reading from:

"It is true that most of those who have affirmed that Joseph Smith both taught and practiced polygamy have been interested parties—that is, have been connected with the Utah Church."—True Origin of Mormon Polygamy, by Charles A. Shook, editor, 1914, p. 143.

"It is evident from these flagrant violations of their pledges and the law of the land, that the Mormon word of honor [referring to Utah Mormons] is not to be depended upon."—Ibid., p. 205.

Thus the decision of a United States Court, and the admission of Shook himself, show that the testimony of these women cannot be depended upon.

Mr. Rockwell falsely accuses the Saints of breaking up the debate by prearrangement. He says, "After the second night the Mormons [of course he refers to the Reorganized Church] went to one of the town officials and asked him to stop the debate. He refused."

The statement of town officials accompanying shows the facts.

Now he says, "Lasting good was done for truth and righteousness. Many have been saved from possible future membership in that church." The former part of this assertion is true. The reader can judge the truth of the latter statement when we tell you that from the time of Mr. Rockwell's challenge to the debate ten people were converted to and baptized into the Reorganized Church at Jonesport, and following the debate forty more were baptized and became members of the Reorganized Church in Jonesport and vicinity, all of whom with the exception of three or four, attended the debate, and were some of the best people of the town. So truly since Mr. Rockwell did the challenging not a new convert was made to the Adventist congregation during or pursuant to the debate to date (August, 1922), and fifty new members have been added to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, members of the Jonesport Branch. As Mr. Rockwell says, "The debate was a wise move, and was rewarded in good results."

In closing we submit a letter written by a gentleman who is a citizen of Jonesport. This man is not a Christian. Neither he nor his wife belong to the church. The writer of the letter is a successful business man, a large packer of fish. He is a reader, and has represented his community in the Maine State Legislature, his community having sufficient confidence in his efficiency that they intrusted him with the responsibility of helping to make their laws. He has held other positions of responsibility and trust in his town and State. He attended the debate as a silent spectator, until the last night, when he arose and suggested that the affair be brought to a close, for the sake of the peace of the town. No riotous acts were manifested at any time on the part of the members of the Reorganized Church, and only a few other religionists grew excitable, and screamed. And these were quietly taken to the door by the town officials.

O. L. THOMPSON.

Statement of Officials of Jonesport

In which they deny that any of our members proposed to them to stop the debate.

JONESPORT, MAINE, August 1922.

To All Whom It May Concern: We the undersigned, citizens and officials of the town of Jonesport, Maine (Washington County), hereby certify before God and upon our word of honor, that no member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, requested us directly or indirectly, either before or during the public discussion held in the Jonesport Opera House, beginning May 22, 1922, between Daniel Macgregor and T. E. Glendenning, to stop said debate. Signed:

Selectmen:	Overseers of poor:
GEORGE F. MANSFIELD.	J. E. BLAKEMAN.
O. W. LOOK.	F. T. BATSON.
I. B. NORTON.	Members of School Board:
Clerk:	MRS. J. V. SAWYER.
D. D. KELLEY.	MRS. S. O. CARVER.
Assessors:	L. E. LAKEMAN.
A. B. CLARK.	Tax Collector:
JOHN V. SAWYER.	OBED BEAL.
D. O. FRENCH.	Treasurer:
Justices:	EDWIN CUMMINS.
F. T. HIGGINS.	Superintendent of Schools:
E. B. SAWYER.	R. L. BROWN.

(Original copy with signatures in possession of O. L. Thompson, Jonesport, Maine.)

Review of the Debate and Its Outcome, by Mr. R. B. Stevens

Mr. Stevens could be no fairer to both sides in the controversy.

JONESPORT, MAINE, August 16, 1922.

I have just read an account of the Glendenning-Macgregor debate written by the Reverend L. B. Rockwell, of this town, and printed in Our Hope, issue of August 2, 1922, and published in Mendota, Illinois. Let me say at the start that I have no quarrel with the Adventist Church. I am proud to say that some of the dearest friends I have in the world, as well as many who have gone to the Great Beyond, are and have been members of this church, and I would not knowingly or willfully say or write anything that would cause them pain or that could by any possible stretch of the imagination be construed as an attack upon their religious belief.

I recognize the fact that under the Constitution of our country they have quite as good a right to their belief as I have to mine, and that they are quite as likely to be right in it as I am. Nevertheless, I cannot but feel that it is my duty, a duty that I owe to this community in which I was born, in which I have always lived, and in which, please God, I hope to die, to say as I now do, that this account written by my friend Rockwell and printed in the above-mentioned publication, is wholly at variance with the facts in the case. and believing as I do in fair play, I cannot in justice to these good people with whom I have been associated all my life, allow this account to go unchallenged.

I have no doubt but what accounts of this debate have been written by the Latter Day Saints (Reorganized), but the great outside world will be likely to think that they have been as partisan in their write-up as Rockwell has been in his. And now, kind reader, perhaps you have reached the point where you would like to know just who I am and what kind of meat I eat that I should think that I can write of this debate without prejudice to either side. I only say that I am not a Latter Day Saint. True, my friend Rockwell may accuse me of being a sympathizer, and to this charge I plead guilty, but only to the extent that I am guilty of being a sympathizer with all Christian churches, the Adventist Church included.

Among other things Mr. Rockwell says: "By his approval [meaning Macgregor's] a signal was given for confusion and the breaking up of the debate. Macgregor and his moderator, a Mormon elder, led in this effort. The chairman, also a sympathizer, carried out the wishes of the Mormons and ordered the hall cleared and the debate closed. That this was planned was known two days before. After the second night the Mormons went to one of the town officials and asked him to stop the debate. He refused. They then planned the breaking up of the debate. They didn't dare to see it to a close. One of their people said after it was over, 'If that debate had gone to a close it would have ruined our church.'"

Now the above account is certainly very misleading to anyone who didn't hear the debate, and there must be a question in the minds of many of those who did as to whether Mr. Rockwell's zeal for his own church, commendable when properly directed, has not in this instance been at the expense of his veracity.

May I say that the chairman of the meetings was Mr. Emery E. Farnsworth, a man well known in business circles throughout Maine and New England. He is a canner of fish and berries and is also a sheriff of Washington County. His word has always been, and still is, considered as good as his bond. He was selected by the mutual agreement of the Adventists and Latter Day Saints because they both had every reason to believe that he would be fair to both sides. In justice to him it is only fair to say that the great majority of our people, irrespective of their religious affiliations, still believe that he was.

The opera house in which the debate was held, by bringing in extra chairs and using the standing room, will hold about 1,000. On the evening in question (the final and last night of the debate) it was packed to the doors. On the whole the audience up to this time had been very fair and courteous to both sides, and it began to look as though the debate would run the whole six nights without any serious outbreak. Still it was plain to everyone that the crowd was keyed up to a very high pitch. The nerves of the audience now were perilously near the breaking point and almost anything was likely to happen. Mr. Glendenning was speaking. It was plainly evident to any fair-minded person that he had drifted from the resolution under discussion. After he had talked along this line for about ten minutes, Mr. Macgregor arose to a point of order. He called for the reading of the resolution. The chairman read it. The chairman ruled that the point was well taken, and he warned Glendenning that he must confine his remarks to the resolution. Again Glendenning took the floor, and began talking as before, upon the character of Joseph Smith, slanderously of course (the proposition called for an examination of the church on points of organization, doctrine, and practice). Mr. Macgregor again arose to a point of order, stating that, "If my worthy opponent will confine his remarks to the resolution, I will discuss Joseph Smith with him any number of nights he may desire, after the propositions agreed to are discussed."

Again the chairman called Mr. Glendenning to order and asked him if he would not kindly talk on the resolution then under debate. He flatly refused to do so. For the third time the chairman demanded that he confine his remarks to the second proposition and for the third time Mr. Glendenning refused to abide by the ruling of the chairman whom his people had helped to select.

The audience was now fast getting into an uproar. The debate was taken from the platform to the floor. A hundred people were talking, a few very loud, at the same time. Our people ordinarily are considered fairly conservative, and I believe that any audience in any town under the same circumstances would have done the same. The thing once started it was easy for it to develop into a riot and that would mean possible injury to women and children, to say nothing of the possibility of the loss of life. There were many children in the audience, notwithstanding efforts had been made to keep them out, to reserve room for adults.

It was at this time that I made myself heard above the roar and was recognized by the chair. The crowd quieted down, and I said, "Things have already gone too far," and I advised that the chairman call the debate off and advise the people to go peaceably and quietly to their homes. This he did, and I am very glad to be able to say that but little further disorder followed.

Mr. Rockwell says that it was known two nights before that the debate would be stopped that night. Possibly so, but if so, it was known only to Rockwell and Glendenning. I am sure that the people of Jonesport will believe me when I say that when I went to the opera house that night, I had no more idea that I would ask the chairman to call the debate off than I had that I would take a trip to the moon on the following day. Nothing was farther from my mind. I suggested to the chairman to call the whole thing off, only after Mr. Glendenning had demonstrated to every fair-minded man and woman in the audience that he would not abide by the ruling of the chair, but persisted in slinging mud, and "striking below the belt." Under these circumstances what else was there to do but to end the debate? What other outcome could be expected but riot and disorder? An outcome that would not be to the glory and honor of the Adventists, the Latter Day Saints, or to Jonesport. I regret that I have to record it here, but it was plainly evident that this was exactly what Glendenning wished. It is a well-known fact that the sympathy of the general public was wholly with the Latter Day Saints. We all know here that the quarrel was not of their seeking. They never carried the chip on their shoulder.

Now just a word about the two debaters as they appeared to the writer. Elder Macgregor had the sympathy of the crowd (I mean outside of the two churches) on the start, and he had it to the finish. He had a tremendous advantage over his opponent in that he has a more commanding presence and a much more pleasing personality. He combines the accuracy and painstaking care of the Scotch with the sparkling, cutting wit of the Irish. He was always sure of himself. Many times during the series of debates his forensic lance pierced his opponent's armor so cleverly that it brought down the house, both sides, friend and foe alike joining in the applause. An instance: On the third night of the debate, Mr. Glendenning just before closing his first speech had accused Macgregor of "running out of soap" (meaning argument). In an instant Macgregor was on his feet. "Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "my eloquent and learned opponent charges me with running out of soap. You have now heard him talk for several evenings and you have a pretty good idea of what a dirty washing I have on my hands. I ask you good people of Jonesport, is it to be wondered at if I have run out of soap?" Macgregor when on the platform looks the orator and when in action proves that he is even better than he looks. In a rough and tumble contest—in a battle of words—he seems to be able to take care of himself without much trouble. Certainly, Glendenning was very easy picking for him. At least, that was the opinion of all the unbiased spectators.

At no period of the debate, not even for a moment, was Glendenning able to get the audience to warm up to him. It remained cold. Neither his voice nor his personality appealed to the crowd. He showed no evidence, whatever, that he possessed that very necessary qualification of the orator or debater, of being able to say the right thing at the right time. All that he was not (as an efficient orator) Macgregor seemed to be. Perhaps Mr. Glendenning was not in good form while here. He seemed to be very nervous, much too nervous. His style was feverish and jerky. Whenever Macgregor made a hit (and he made many), Glendenning would try hard to smile, but it was a sickly smile—much the same as one makes when one is taking salts and tries to fool himself with the idea that he is eating ice cream. The one thought that seemed to be uppermost in his mind was that he realized that he was up against an opponent that completely overshadowed and outclassed him, both as an orator and a debater. On this point the audience was unanimous that his judgment was correct.

The all but universal verdict here is that he (Glendenning) refused to abide by the decision of the chair, because by so doing he knew it would bring the debate to a close. It furnished a way out. Not an honorable way, it is true, but still a way, and again wasn't retreat better than annihilation? Didn't some one at sometime write or say that, "He who fights, then runs away, lives to fight another day"? And the next time one would be a little more careful in picking his opponent. Dollars to doughnuts, Glendenning will never again pick Macgregor!

The selectmen of the town tell me that they know nothing about any Latter Day Saint coming to them and asking them to declare the debate off. It is true that many of the Latter Day Saints doubted the wisdom of it. So did many good Adventists; so did many Baptists. There is good reason to believe that wounds have been made here on account of it that it will take years to heal.

Honesty demands that the public be informed that this contest was not of the Latter Day Saints' seeking. Here the people understand it very well, and know where to place the blame. Rockwell, the promoter, heralds the outcome as a great victory for Glendenning. Not to the people of Jonesport, of course; he knows better than that. But to a little town in distant Illinois he proclaims it as "one of the greatest victories of truth over error" ever won in the arena of debate. Possibly so, but if so, my friend Rockwell has the boot on the wrong foot. When we read in an Illinois paper that Glendenning triumphed over Macgregor in the debate held here, we read it with the same mingled emotions of amazement and laughter that we imagine the English would have received the proclamation from Napoleon after Waterloo, saying that he had annihilated their armies, held Wellington a prisoner, and was about to establish a new capital for his world empire on isolated, storm-swept Saint Helena! "Shades of Ananias and Baron Munchausen! Go away back and sit down, or verily the laurels that thou hast worn upon thy brows for all these centuries have begun to fade. A new champion is an aspirant for thy crowns!"

And now a word about the town in which this discussion was held and then I will close. Jonesport is situated in the eastern part of the State of Maine, about forty miles from the Canadian border. A seashore town, with nearly one hundred islands, great and small, within her corporate limits. Her population is about 2,200, nearly all of English descent. She is a typical New England town. The business here is almost wholly fishing and packing fish, sardines, clams, and smoked herring, etc. We have here the largest, most modern, up-to-date sardine factory in the world. More lobsters are caught and sold here than in most any other seaport on the Atlantic coast. When you eat a lobster in the West, there is more than a possibility that he was caught in Jonesport, and very likely by a Latter Day Saint, for many of the fishermen belong to that church. Our high school is recognized as one of the best in the State. Our common schools are thoroughly up to date, and are as good as can be found in New England. Fifty or sixty per cent of our people here either belong to, or believe in the Reorganized Latter Day Saints Church. And even Rockwell will admit that they are a God-fearing, law-abiding, patriotic people, and that Jonesport is largely what they have helped to make her, "A New England queen of beauty."

During the late unpleasantness with Germany I had the honor to be appointed by Governor Milliken, of Maine, one of the "committee of one hundred on public safety," for the State of Maine. In my work in helping to keep the "home fires burning," nowhere did I get more loyal support and encouragement than I did among the Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

As I have already stated, Jonesport has about 2,200 inhabitants. One hundred and fifty of her sons—the flower of her young manhood—responded to their country's call, and nobly upheld the honor of our starry flag on land and sea. Two of the noble fellows never returned to their native land and to the mothers who gave them birth. Far away across the ocean in a foreign land they gave their all that democratic institutions should not perish from the earth. The family of one of these boys who gave his life is a Latter Day Saint family, as was the boy himself. And the family of the other firmly believe in that faith, with some of its number belonging to the church. The American Legion Post here bears the names of these boys, "The Rogers-Worcester Post." Jonesport will revere their memories and keep their graves covered with flowers, as long as the beautiful Moose-bec upon whose banks she sits, shall mingle its waters with the sea. Were Mr. Glendenning a hundred times more eloquent than he is, he would still be unable to make us believe that these people are not desirable citizens or that there is anything bad in anything they teach and practice as an organization.

We have several religious denominations here, and up until quite recently we have always gotten along very well together. We believed that we could differ in our religious views and still be good Americans. This spirit of religious intolerance, this spirit of Ku Klux Klanism is of very recent origin here. The year 1922 saw its birth. May 1922 see its death! And may my friend Rockwell be its only mourner.

I do not wish to be unkind. Nothing would cause me greater pain than to know that I had needlessly caused pain to another. And so in the words of the immortal Lincoln, "With malice towards none, and with charity for all," may I suggest to my friend Rockwell, that if he will preach, "Peace on earth good will toward men," instead of stirring up strife and discord and religious intolerance among our people, his power for good will be greatly increased not only in his community, but for all mankind as well. Surely this is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Yours for fair play,

(Signed) R. B. STEVENS.

Graceland Students Advance

At the August Convocation of the University of Iowa, five former students of Graceland College were granted the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Some of these have secured it after one year's work at the university. These include Fernell Briggs, James R. Houghton, Clara Vivian McElroy, Forest A. Roberts, son of Bishop Joseph Roberts, Lee E. Travis. Mr. Houghton sang a solo as part of the program at the convocation.

Miss Briggs and Miss McElroy received the certificates in education and Miss Briggs secured a fellowship in the university because of her excellent scholastic attainments and will teach there the following year, while she works towards her master's degree. Forest Roberts will also attend the State University of Iowa, working for a master's degree, while Lee E. Travis will take up work looking towards a doctor's degree. James Houghton expects to attend Harvard University, specializing in voice training and working for a master's degree. Miss McElroy will teach in Graceland College the coming year.

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

Independence

Various of the general church officers are returning to Independence, and are getting their special church affairs into shape for General Conference. The joint council will be in session the latter part of the month. Apostles Williams, Curtis, and Gillen are in town at this writing, with Brother Hanson in Omaha for a brief trip and Brother Greene still ill at his home from malaria. At present he is reported as slightly improved in condition.

The Second Independence Church has recently decided to purchase two lots on the north of the church property, one of which has on it a four-room house, and the other vacant. Over $665 in cash and pledges has been raised. This will be of much value to the South Side Saints, since the church is very much crowded and entirely inadequate to the needs of the Saints meeting there. It is planned to build a hall in due time on the back of the lot for Sunday school and other purposes, and to fix up the lawn in front for lawn services.

The Sunday morning service at the Stone Church consisted of a sermon by J. A. Gillen, with the usual excellent accompaniment of choir and solo music. Paul N. Craig, soon to leave to take up work as instructor in music at Graceland after two years special work in his line in the East, sang an effective solo. In the evening R. J. Lambert was the speaker, preceded by more fine singing by Blanche Allen Needham, Eugene Christy, and James R. Houghton, with violin solo by Emma Snead. Brother Christy has been in Chicago some two years taking special training in music and will teach in Kansas City and Independence.

Leaders of young people here are making plans to provide several social evenings for visiting young people at General Conference. With other similar plans by other organizations, it looks as though there ought to be ample opportunity for getting acquainted with everybody.

The notice of the local committee on providing places to room and board during the conference appears in the HERALD each week, and the indications are that a large attendance will be had.

Greatly appreciated rain cooled the superheated atmosphere and soaked the ground the last of the week. It prevented the showing of the community pictures on Saturday evening, and this was postponed till Tuesday evening.

A church wedding is announced for the marriage of Pauline Becker to Russel Etzenhouser, both of this city, September 11. Sister Becker is a daughter of Bishop and Mrs. J. A. Becker. On account of going to press early this week in order to get out an extra large number of the HERALD, we are not enabled to wait for details.

A very pleasing Religio program last Friday evening was a fine concert by Brother James R. Houghton, of Davenport, Iowa. This young brother has been in attendance at Graceland College, at the University of Iowa, where he took his B. A. degree this summer, and will this fall attend Harvard University, where he plans to take his Ph. D. degree in the department of music, as well as taking vocal work with outside teachers. His repertoire here was extensive and allowed wide range for his unusually flexible baritone voice. He was assisted by Ammon Fry in a cello solo, Elizabeth Smith in harp solos, and Miss Amy Winning, accompanist.

Enrollment evening for the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences was Tuesday evening, September 5, at the Stone Church. A large number of interested people were present to discuss formally and informally the courses offered for the year. The total number enrolled numbers in the hundreds and is being increased daily. It now looks as though a busy year is ahead of this much-appreciated local school that seeks to raise the educational tone of the community and thus furnish a basis for better service.

Elders J. F. Garver and Lonzo Jones, of Lamoni, were in Independence on the 6th and 7th, in session with Paul M. Hanson, J. F. Curtis, and Walter W. Smith, of a committee to pass on the applications for entry into the class in religious education at Graceland College for this year. A very fine class seems assured, though perhaps of less number than the past two years. Because of conditions which are arising to make necessary some changes in the decisions of the committee, we are not at liberty at this time to publish the list, but in a short time this will be possible.

During the past week the broadcasting studio of the Central Radio Company, of Kansas City, has been moved from Kansas City to Independence, and the instruments will be located in the radio room back of the Stone Church. Some experiments will be necessary because of the room being rather small, but we are confident the results will be satisfactory. The program sent out last Sunday consisted of solos and quartet numbers by Alice Mae and Bertha Burgess, Paul N. Craig, George Anway, and James R. Houghton, with sermon by Elder S. A. Burgess.

Elder J. F. Curtis will be the speaker next Sunday. Tune in at 360 meters at 2 p. m., standard time. Local people heard the program perfectly Sunday.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending September 9: Mrs. C. A. Austin and Baby Austin, Mount Washington, Missouri; Mr. John Fieldhahn, Levasy, Missouri; Mrs. Ira LaRue, Kaw City, Oklahoma; Mrs. L. F. P. Curry, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and the following from Independence: Mrs. G. E. Kerns and Baby Kerns, Master Charles Henry Heiszler, Mrs. Fred Moser and Baby Moser, and Mrs. Bessie Kittle. X-ray patients: John Fieldhahn, Levasy, Missouri; and Mrs. I. A. Smith, Dalton Crump, and Master Charles Henry Heiszler, all of Independence.

Missionaries Arrived in Norway

After pleasant voyage, missionary party of four reach Scandinavia. Brother Hansen went on to Denmark.

Many of my friends have asked me to write to them, and I promised I would do so through the columns of the HERALD. Accordingly I shall now endeavor to pen some of our experiences thus far.

We steamed out into New York harbor about one o'clock, August 1. I cannot describe my emotions as we moved steadily along, but my heart felt strangely irregular, and there was a choking sensation in my throat as I watched the fast-disappearing figure of the Statue of Liberty in the hazy distance. The thought of leaving my native land, the land that nurtured religious and political freedom; the thought of leaving old associations, of breaking home ties for five years, loomed darkly and somewhat discouragingly, yet I believe that in our hearts was the prayer that we might go where God wanted us to go, over mountain or plain or sea.

Shortly after boarding the ship, wife and I were walking through the passageways, when I beheld a man in front of us who walked after the similitude of Peter Muceus. On overtaking him we found him to be our man. We were very glad to find him, and we had a happy gathering when after dinner we found Brother Nels P. Hansen. Our party was now complete, and the weather being fine, we stood upon the deck, watching the receding shores of New Jersey and Long Island until they were no more to be seen.

The first four days of our transatlantic trip were very pleasant. The weather was fine, especially while we were passing through the Gulf Stream. We had to shed our coats and go in our shirt sleeves. There were a few people who were kind to the fish, but most of them were able to do justice to three good meals a day. Brother Muceus said that the ship would never make any money on my passage, alluding to my voracious appetite, but I thought that if the fish received any help from me, I would be generous.

After we passed through the Gulf Stream, the weather changed. The seas became rougher, the wind grew raw and chilling. The increase in the roll of the ship caused many to donate liberally to the fish, but of our party, none contributed, although my wife was so minded on two or three occasions.

Day after day we gazed upon the broad expanse of the Atlantic, with nothing to see but the unchanging sea, varied now and then by a school of flying fish, porpoises, or an occasional whale. The vast immensity of the ocean gave room for plenty of thought, but our thoughts were, for the most part, kept silent. One could look and look, but nothing like land or ships or anything with life greeted the eye. It was lonesome, and many times I longed to see land. I wished I were going to America again, until I felt like the soldier returning to America after overseas service in the World War, who, when he saw the Statue of Liberty once more, was heard to mutter: "Old girl, take a good look at my face, for if you ever expect to see me again, you'll have to turn around."

We greeted each other with joyful acclamations when in the early morn of the ninth day out we scanned on the distant horizon the jutting peaks of islands west of Scotland. The day passed rapidly. All day the decks were lined with passengers, watching the cliffs of the islands, and viewing the mountains and dales of the extreme northern part of Scotland. Land was a sight, heavenly, even if earthly. We are now pressing into the North Sea.

Soon we will be in our fields of labor, fields strange to most of us, yet no doubt calling for laborers. Pray the Lord of the harvest that he may send more laborers into the fields. May God help us all to strive for unity is my earnest desire.

We shall be glad to hear from any who care to write.

Your brother in Christ,

Address: PORSGRUND, NORWAY.

E. Y. HUNKER.

Who Will Help These Children?

Phonograph and records greatly needed by Children's Home.

The boys and girls who have come to live at the Children's Home seldom hear music, and they are hungry for it. Can you imagine what life would be for you without music to charm away your cares? Sister Monroe, the matron of the Home, says the souls of these children "are actually starving for music."

Hasn't somebody a phonograph which he would be willing to contribute to this worthy cause? Open your heart to these children. It will make you feel good and them happy. Will those who catch the spirit of this appeal write to us as to the kind and condition of your instrument? Used records of good character will be needed as well. Perhaps you can send three or four records from your supply. Send them directly to the Children's Home, Lamoni, Iowa, where they will be very gratefully received.

Write to us now, while the impulse prompts you, about the phonograph.

Your colaborer for Christ,

B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

Appreciation by a British Family

The following letter was received from Thanet Street, Clay Cross, Derbyshire, England: "Having had so many kind and sympathetic letters from Saints and friends, we feel it would be too much of a task to reply to each one at the present time. We, therefore, desire to express through these columns our sincere thanks and appreciation of the kindness extended by the Independence Saints and others, who contributed in any way, in life or in death, to our beloved son and brother, Harry Holmes, who was taken sick with typhoid fever and died in the Sanitarium, July 12, 1922.

"We are very sincerely,
"SIMON AND RACHÆL HOLMES AND FAMILY."

Isle of Pines

Elder Wilfred Tordoff writes to the First Presidency from the Isles of Pines that Elder Thomas Carr and wife have arrived, and with the additional assistance of Elder Charles May they are conducting a series of meetings in the capital town with good crowds. Elder May is full of life and keeps things moving with his lively sermons, singing, and playing. Elder Carr also is able to help by playing the violin. They have intensive missionary work laid out with something definite to do each day for four months. Elders Tordoff and May will remain a while on the Isle of Pines, while Elder Carr and wife will go to the Cayman Islands, where he will be joined in about six weeks by Elders Tordoff and May. They have several for baptism, but the number is not yet reported.

Saint Louis, Missouri

The hot weather has not depleted our attendance, especially at Sunday school, where the average has been over two hundred for the past six months: the largest in our history.

On August 20 we were treated to an especially good talk on Graceland College and its many advantages and pleasures, given by Miss Myrtle Trowbridge. This kind of an address is good for our pupils and when followed, as it was, by a sermon on church publications, given by the business manager of the Herald Publishing House, Brother Granville Trowbridge, we are elated because the church has such institutions for spreading the gospel, outside the regular missionary force. Graceland students see many who would never hear a sermon, and the church papers reach thousands not connected with any branch. We feel enthused to help these silent missionaries.

There was one baptism in the morning. Several strangers were in the congregation. The choir leader is back from his vacation. Brother W. Williams is busy again at Sunday school.

The Saints Louis district conference was held at Lansdowne, August 19 and 20—a good attendance and very good meetings, although the crowd was not as great as on some former occasions. E. B.

Sherwood Eddy, whose latest work, Facing the Crisis, (Doran), has just been published, sailed early in August for one of his world tours. He will visit the educational centers of Japan, China, India, Egypt, Turkey, Russia, the Balkans, Germany, etc. He will gather material for a new book on world conditions, which the Doran Company will publish in due time. His Everybody's World is in constant demand. Probably no other writer can give such a clear and inside account of progress in world Christianization.

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

- Reporting Our Reunions 855
- Labor's Share 856
- The Conference Daily 856
- The Bishop's Report 857
- The Mack Association 857
- Questions and Answers 857

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

- True Religion and Faith in God Are Essential, by O. L. Weaver 859

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

- Imperial Brotherhood 860
- Starvation in Russia Has Ceased 860
- The Small College 860

PASTORAL:

- Priesthood Problems, by O. J. Tary 861

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT 863

- Dora Young.

LETTERS AND NEWS 866

- O. L. Thompson—R. B. Stevens—E. Y. Hunker—B. R. McGuire—Simon and Rachael Holmes and Family.

MISCELLANEOUS 874

- Bishop's Report Supplement

Standard Keyboard
no shifting for figures

Remington
Portable
Typewriter

HAS every feature common to the larger machines—all compacted in a case
only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Special terms to Missionaries
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Southern Ohio, with Wellston Branch, Wellston, Ohio, September 24 and 25, 1922. Branch presidents please have reports in not later than Monday, September 18. A. E. Anderson, president, 2784 Burrell Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

Help Missionaries Get to Conference

Notice to Branch and District Presidents: Missionaries attending General Conference have been forced in some instances during past years to use funds sent as an allowance for the family to pay their fare to conference, and call on the Bishop to get back to their fields.

Inasmuch as they come as the delegates of your district and come back to enrich your people by the valuable experiences thus gained, would it not be proper for each district, or branch in case of missionaries laboring under local appointments, to look after this matter?

The fact that the general church treasury is already carrying a heavy deficit would suggest the wisdom of each branch or district doing all it can to help your missionary to and from the conference.

As leaders, will you see that this recommendation receives proper consideration?

Your fellow servant in Christ Jesus,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

General Conference Delegates and Visitors

Be sure to secure a certificate when purchasing railroad tickets to General Conference, so you may be assured of getting return fare privilege for half price. (See HERALD of August 9.)

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
Transportation Manager.

Sunday School Exhibit at Conference

It was hoped there would be a hearty response to the recent call for handwork material from the Sunday schools of the church for the proposed exhibit at General Conference time, but so far this has not been the case. Will the Sunday school superintendents who are deeply interested in helping to further the cause of profitable Sunday school activity kindly take this up at once and see what examples of expressional work may be sent in for the exhibit?

Any exhibit material of value to others, whether it be produced in children's grades or by older persons, should be sent in or brought.

Please communicate at once with Mrs. H. R. Halley, (new address) 1619 West College Street, Independence, Missouri.

A. MAX CARMICHAEL, Superintendent.

Entertainment of Conference Delegates and Visitors

The reception committee for the General Conference has been appointed by the First Presidency. They are as follows: R. V. Hopkins, president; Arthur Allen, vice president; George A. Gould, R. T. Cooper, and John A. Gardner.

Rooms. The committee is arranging as far as possible for rooms for the visitors during conference at reasonable rates.

Tourists' Camp. A site about seven blocks from the conference tent has been reserved where those who wish to do so may park their cars and erect their tents free of charge. A tourist's oven for cooking is being built on these grounds and city water furnished. Cars may also be stored in local garages at regular rates.

Cafeteria. Meals will be served in the dining hall at the Stone Church on the cafeteria plan, at reasonable rates.

Young People. The committee has arranged for some special social activities especially for visiting young people. Sunday school and Religio superintendents, and leaders of young people of the church should advise us how many will attend from their localities.

Do You Expect to Be With Us? The amount of space available in Independence is limited, so if you are expecting to be here, write immediately to Arthur Allen, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, and reserve your room or camping space.

THE RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Our Departed Ones

MOREY.—Charles E. Morey was born at Pleasanton, Iowa, February 24, 1858. Married Mary E. Fenton, January 6, 1884, at Beatrice, Nebraska. Baptized early in life, later ordained an elder, remaining an honored representative of the church to the time of his death. Died at Pleasanton July 14, 1922. Leaves wife and three children and others. Funeral from Saints' church; sermon by C. E. Wight, assisted by J. F. Garver.

STEELE.—Elmira G. Steele was born March 19, 1845, at Cranberry Isle, Maine. She has been a faithful member of the church for more than forty years. Has been a member of Somerville Branch, in Massachusetts, for some time. Died August 16, 1922. Leaves one daughter, Ida Stanley, of Dorchester, Massachusetts, and one son, Fred Steele, of Tampa, Florida; also three grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Husband and three children have preceded her. Funeral from the Congregational church at Cranberry Isle. Sermon by N. M. Wilson.

MADDEN.—Gladys Marie, infant daughter of Brother S. Alfred and Sister Betty Madden, died August 23, 1922, at Blue Rapids, Kansas. Sermon by B. F. Jackson. Interment in Elm Creek Cemetery.

DODGE.—Rachel Dodge was born at Rockwell Mills, Wisconsin, January 26, 1861. Married T. H. Dodge February 24, 1880. Baptized September 13, 1896. Died at the reunion, Portland, Oregon, August 4, 1922. Her husband preceded her. Four of their six children survive, also three sisters. Funeral sermon by M. H. Cook. Interment at Rose City Cemetery, Portland, Oregon.

DODGE.—George Oscar Dodge was born at Black Earth, Wisconsin, January 22, 1881. Moved with his parents to Oregon in January, 1912. Baptized in the fall of 1898. Made his home with his mother until his death, August 4, 1922, at the Portland reunion. Leaves two sisters and two brothers. Funeral sermon by M. H. Cook. Interment at the Rose City Cemetery, Portland, Oregon.

HINES.—Emma May Marks was born October 15, 1879, near Stewartsville, Missouri. Baptized June 20, 1898. Married S. J. Hines March 2, 1898. Died at her home near Stewartsville, Missouri, August 25, 1922. Leaves husband, three daughters, two brothers, and other relatives.

Are You Interested in General Conference?

Of course you are! Everyone in the church is interested in conference. Hundreds will be present from all over the country, and you, too, will be here if you can. If you can't come, the next best thing will be to get all the news as it is published in the Conference Daily. The editors will write up all the happenings of conference each day, including detailed minutes of the business sessions, and each evening the Conference Daily will be mailed out to you. If you yourself are coming, think of your family at home and subscribe for them. This daily will give you a permanent record of the conference.

The Conference Daily will be issued each week-day evening during conference. Subscription price, 25 cents. Order from Herald Publishing House.

Get All the News in the Conference Daily!

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, September 20, 1922

Number 38

EDITORIAL

General Conference Program

Services in the Big Tent

The program in the big tent will include prayer service at 9.30 a. m. daily excepting Sunday. Elders John F. Garver, Roy V. Hopkins, and J. A. Tanner will have oversight of these prayer services. Preaching daily at 10.45 a. m. and 8 p. m. with exceptions noted later. The evening sermon will be preceded by thirty minutes of musical program beginning at 7.30, to include congregational singing, solos, choir work, etc. Business meeting each week day at 2 p. m. The program of sermons and special numbers follows:

Sunday, October 1

- 9.30 a. m. Sunday school; local forces in charge.
- 10.45 a. m. Sacrament Service.
- 3.00 p. m. Sermon by Frederick M. Smith. Subject: "Our social ideals."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by John W. Rushton. Subject: "The apocalyptic paradox."

Monday, October 2

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by John Blackmore (Australia). Subject: "The opportunity of the church."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by R. C. Russell. Text: "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" (Matthew 19: 16.)

Tuesday, October 3

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by William Patterson (Australia). Subject: "Evangelism."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by J. F. Curtis. Subject: "The manifestations of the Spirit."

Wednesday, October 4

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by Cornelius Clifford (Canada). Subject: "Preparedness"—A Missionary View.
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by Gomer T. Griffiths. Text: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the ends thereof are the ways of death."

Thursday, October 5

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by F. Henry Edwards (Great Britain). Subject: "Valuation."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by Walter W. Smith. Subject: "Our opportunity."

Friday, October 6

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by Prescott Foo (Hawaii). Subject: "Ambitions and actualities."

- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by Paul M. Hanson. Subject: "Tuning in."

Saturday, October 7

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by James E. Bishop (returned missionary to British Isles). Subject: "Safety zones and danger zones in religious experience."
- 8.00 p. m. Pageant, illustrating early church scenes and ideals, written by Vida E. Smith and presented by the Independence Religio Dramatic Club.

Sunday, October 8

- 9.30 a. m. Sunday school; local forces in charge.
- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by Elbert A. Smith. Subject: "The two great commandments."
- 3.00 p. m. Sermon by James F. Keir. Subject: "Financial problems."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by T. W. Williams. Subject: "What the church needs most."

Monday, October 9

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by Alva H. Christensen (returned missionary to Society Islands). Subject: "Grafting in the tame olive branches."
- 8.00 p. m. Program by the Band.

Tuesday, October 10

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by H. W. Savage (returned missionary to New Zealand). Subject: "The vision of Zion seen from afar off."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by Frederick A. Smith. Subject: "A peculiar people."

Wednesday, October 11

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by G. R. Kuykendall. Subject: "Zion, the natural, ideal state of society; its attainment certain."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by Daniel T. Williams. Subject: "The authority of righteousness."

Thursday, October 12

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by George H. Wixom (appointed to Scotland). Subject: "The winners; are you one of them?"
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by J. A. Gillen. Subject: "Reveries of Damascus."

Friday, October 13

- 10.45 a. m. Sermon by Charles F. Putnam (appointed to England). Subject: "The price of sin."
- 8.00 p. m. Sermon by Daniel Macgregor. Subject: "Why I believe the Book of Mormon."

Special Services in the Stone Church (Upper Auditorium)

The program in the Stone Church is largely un-

www.LatterDayTruth.org

der the auspices of the departments. Lectures and other special numbers are as follows:

Sunday, October 1

- 9.30 a. m. Sunday school overflow from the tent; local forces in charge.
8.00 p. m. Lecture by F. M. McDowell, "The religious educational program of the church."

Monday, October 2

- 10.00 a. m. Sunday school business meeting.
8.00 p. m. Lecture by A. Max Carmichael: "What should be the church curriculum?"

Tuesday, October 3

- 10.45 a. m. Business session, Department of Women.
8.00 p. m. Lecture by Walter W. Smith: "Religious educational supremacy of the home."

Wednesday, October 4

- 10.45 a. m. Business session, Religion Department.
8.00 p. m. Sanitarium Program.

Thursday, October 5

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by Mrs. Ida Etzenhouser: "Social service."
7.45 p. m. Program by the orchestra.

Friday, October 6

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by Lonzo Jones: "A trained versus an untrained ministry."
7.45 p. m. Program by the choir.

Sunday, October 8

- 9.30 a. m. Sunday school overflow from the tent; local forces in charge.
8.00 p. m. Lecture by F. M. McDowell: "Youth's part in the reconstruction of the world."

Monday, October 9

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by J. W. Rushton: "Dramatic expression in religious life."
8.00 p. m. Departmental round table; heads of departments in charge.

Tuesday, October 10

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by Harold C. Burgess: "Use of music in religious education."
8.00 p. m. Lecture by T. W. Williams: "The church and the people's play."

Wednesday, October 11

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by Audentia Anderson: "Rural problems."
7.45 p. m. Illustrated Lecture by Doctor Russell, of the United States Public Health Service. Subject: "How life begins."

Thursday, October 12

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by M. A. Etzenhouser: "Economics of Zion."
7.45 p. m. Program by the orchestra.

Friday, October 13

- 10.45 a. m. Lecture by Doctor G. Leonard Harrington: "Christ healed the sick first."
7.45 p. m. Program by the choir.

Study Courses

Between 8.30 and 9.30 every morning, except Sunday, during General Conference in the Upper Auditorium of the Stone Church will be study hour. Three classes will be conducted at the same time. The general subjects and teachers are as follows:

1. Social Service: In charge of Mrs. Ida Etzenhouser, B. S. (This course will be especially beneficial to bishops, deacons, and friendly visitors.)
2. Child Welfare: In charge of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, M. D. (This course will be especially beneficial to parents, cradle roll workers, Sunday school and Religion teachers.)
3. The Psychology of the Adolescent: In charge of M. A. Etzenhouser, B. A., M. A. (This course will be especially beneficial to parents, superintendents of departments, Sunday school and Religion teachers, leaders of girls and boys.)

These classes are open to all visiting and local people, men and women. Decide yourself which one you need the most to help you do your work more efficiently, and come. Bring your notebook and pencil.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

For the Conference

In this issue of the HERALD there appears a letter from Oliver Turnbull concerning our next sacramental service throughout the church, October 1, on the opening day of General Conference. As he there points out, there are two things we should do.

First, in making our prayers before the conference we should in our local services remember the coming gathering and at our family altar pray for the blessings of our heavenly Father on the coming conference. On the opening day we should meet in the spirit at least of fasting and prayer. That is, after all, the most needful thing—to bring ourselves, our life and conduct and our thought in accord with the divine will.

Many are disturbed by having to wait for things hoped for, yet we are plainly told in the Scriptures that we should be as those who wait for the coming of the Lord. We are also told he will come as a thief in the night, in an hour and a day that we think not. Jesus the Christ also used again the parable while here on earth of the five wise and the five foolish virgins. He plainly stated, "While they all slumbered and slept the cry went forth." The only difference, apparently, between the wise and the unwise virgins in that parable is that the wise virgins had made preparation.

We cannot rid ourselves of the thought, despite all arguments made to the contrary, that we cannot safely plead the delayed coming of the Lord simply because we have not made ourselves ready. Even communion with the church of the firstborn will profit us only as it helps us better to live the life of our heavenly Father, the life of a man in Christ

Jesus. In other words, the success of the work of the church depends on how we live now before conference, on what we do after the conference has adjourned, as much if not more than on what we do and vote for while the conference is in session. God can call men to service; they cannot do their work without the support of the church both in prayer, in thought, in our conversation, and our deeds.

Brother Turnbull adds another thought, and that is of our oblations. We have noticed many who fail to contribute at all on the first Lord's Day of the month. Others contribute meagerly. A few in accordance with their means. The oblation should be a freewill offering and is not part of our tithing. It is a privilege that we may be associated in the work of the Church of Jesus Christ.

The Crescent and the Cross

[The following by Elder T. W. Williams is of special interest. Our space is greatly crowded at this time and we are glad to yield sufficient from the editorial department so it may appear at this early date.—EDITORS.]

The "unspeakable Turk" is again on a religious rampage. Shortsighted idealists thought, at the close of the war, that the Turk had been driven out of Europe. Some prophets predicted that ne'er again would the Crescent make war on the Cross. But their prophecies were premature. They did not reckon with fanaticism and superstition and racial prejudices. It would not be amiss if prophets would familiarize themselves with history before venturing prophecies. There would be more accuracy in their predictions.

The news from Asia Minor is disquieting. We hold no brief for the Greeks. Evidently they have been moved with national pride and racial purpose and have dreamed of national rehabilitation and the return of the glory of ancient Greece. But their march to Constantinople has been checked. Reverses have come and, at this writing, it looks as though the Turks are determined to utterly rout and exterminate the Hellenic army and thereupon make demand on the Allies that all Turkish territory confiscated during the war be returned, and Turkey placed upon the same basis as before the war. They are even now demanding that Constantinople be returned to them.

Unless other powers intervene there will be a war of extermination and an unprecedented era of Christian massacres. Prominent economists throughout the world are urging intervention. The evacuation of Asia Minor by the Hellenic army is described by those who know as one of the greatest calamities to Christianity and civilization, and a stigma in the history of Europe and America.

An appeal for intervention on the part of the United States has been presented to President Harding by prominent Americans. The appeal urges that "in the face of this calamity threatening the Christian of Asia Minor with total extermination, the duty of our country is to follow her generous and noble tradition and extend a helping hand to our brothers." It is suggested that the government of the United States tender its good offices and assistance, if necessary, in cooperating with Great Britain, France, Italy, and Greece, and arrange a settlement and also take measures for the protection of the non-Turkish peoples in lands under Turkish dominion.

The present conditions would not last a day were it not for the petty selfish politics which dominate most of the nations operating in that region. France, imbued with ambitious dreams of national greatness, has been secretly cooperating with Turkey. Great Britain has more than her hands full with her mandates and holdings in the Near East. She cannot afford to aggravate the Moslem people. However, she may be forced, in sheer self-defense, to oppose the Turks in their determination to retake Constantinople for, with this port in the hands of the Turks, the Allies may as well throw up their hands so far as the Near East is concerned.

The papers are even now suggesting the possibility of another European war, and not without cause. The aloofness of the Allies towards Russia may hasten an alliance between Turkey and Russia and, if Germany is crowded too much, she may cast her lot with Russia and Turkey, and who can predict the result. The shadow of Gog and Magog is upon us.

Henry Morgenthau, who was our American ambassador during the war, has recently written a stirring article for the press. Although Mr. Morgenthau is a Jew, yet he issues this manifesto not to his own people or on behalf of his own people. The appeal is made to the four hundred million Christians throughout the world and on behalf of the Christians who are now at the mercy of the Turks.

History reveals the Turk as those whose hands are always, always dripping with blood. To kill a heretic, or one not of their faith, is considered a great achievement, and an almost sure passport to eternal bliss. It was Mohammed who so aptly said:

"Fight in God's way with those who fight with you, but transgress not. Verily God loves those who do not transgress.

"Kill them wherever ye find them, and drive them out from whence they drive you out; for sedition is worse than slaughter; but fight them not by the Sacred Mosque until they fight you there; then kill them, for such is the recompense of those that misbelieve."—Koran.

But Mr. Morgenthau makes the following stirring appeal. Can we do nothing to oppose this continuous and unnecessary massacre of innocent victims of the fanaticism of the assassins?

"I wonder if four hundred million Christians in full control of the governments in Europe are going to condone the offenses of the Turkish government. Will they, like Germany, take the bloody hand of the Turk, forgive and decorate?

"Will the outrageous terrorizing and driving of women into harems, the debauchery of innocent girls, and the sale of many of them at eighty cents each, the murdering and starving of thousands, the destruction of hundreds of cities and villages, be forgiven?

"Will the willful execution of the devilish scheme to annihilate Armenians, Greeks, Syrians, and Christians in Turkey go unpunished, or will definite steps be taken to rescue permanently the remnants of these from the fangs of the Turks?"

In view of the recent successes of the Turkish Army in the war with Greece, and the almost treacherous sympathy of France with the purpose of the Turks in regaining the territory lost through the war, it is clearly evident that unless the Allied powers act in concert we may witness not only a continuance of the massacre of Christians, but a wholesale murder even to the point of extinction.

Conference Meeting of Bishop's Agents and Solicitors

Of recent years there have been many sessions held of the Order of Bishops. They will doubtless continue to meet at the coming General Conference. These meetings, however, are of the Bishopric—men ordained and set apart to that special work.

But announcement has been sent out that arrangements are also being made for one or more round tables or conferences of the bishops, bishop's agents, and solicitors to canvass the phases of the work in this department. It is hoped to make this one of the educational features of the conference and helpful to all who are associated in the work of the bishopric in the work of the church.

Special attention will be given to the duties of agents and solicitors: receiving, reporting, assisting the poor and needy, and promoting observance of the financial law. Opportunity will be given for general discussion and for questions and answers.

Have You Subscribed for the Conference Daily?

¶Only a little more than a week now and General Conference will convene. The two weeks following will be crowded to the full with business and services of each and every kind. From the morning lectures at 8 a. m., to the big service at night, every hour of every day will be employed.

¶We hope you can be present. We know how you would enjoy the services and how much you would be enthused and benefited by the spirit of the conference. But something may prevent your coming. It's for those who cannot come that the Conference Daily is particularly planned.

¶Some of the editors of the HERALD and Ensign will be present at all the services every day. They will mingle with the crowds and attend the lectures and witness the programs. They will take notes of everything that they think would be of interest to you; they will report the business sessions in detail; give synopses of lectures; relate the interesting happenings of the days; and each evening all this will be rushed into type and the Conference Daily will be printed and mailed to you so that you may receive it at the earliest possible moment.

¶If you are not coming, the Conference Daily will be indispensable to you. Even though you attend conference, you will want the paper for a record and reminder. Besides, the folks at home should not be forgotten. There is no time to delay. Send in your order while it's on your mind.

The Conference Daily, 25 cents. Send your subscription to-day. Don't be selfish with home folks. Subscribe for your children and friends.

Order To-day From: Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

What We Can Do for the Conference

By Oliver Turnbull

An acceptable offering can be made by all of us, in addition to a contrite heart.

In olden times the children of Israel offered many sacrifices to the Lord. They had their burnt offerings, sin offerings, peace offerings, and many others. But in due time Christ came and made the supreme sacrifice for the sin of the world. God no longer requires of his people burnt offerings, or the blood of bulls and goats, but to commemorate the sacrifice that Christ has made for us, he directs that we meet together upon the first Lord's Day of every month, or upon the Lord's Day of every week (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 5), and offer up our sacraments.

Now the most acceptable sacrifice which we can prepare upon those occasions is that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2); but in this same paragraph he also directs that we offer an oblation, and how fitting that we should do so as a slight acknowledgment, on our part, of the sacrifice Christ made for us. This we do, I believe, in most branches; but what kind of offering do we bring?

The children of Israel were commanded to offer the first fruits of their crops; also the first born of their flocks and herds. They were to offer corn beaten out of full ears. (Leviticus 2: 14.) They were also commanded that their offerings be without blemish. (Leviticus 1: 3 and 3: 1.) Those were indeed times of sacrifice for that people, but inasmuch as the sacrifices were offered in righteousness they were abundantly blessed.

But the Lord has said in latter days, "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.) Think you, then, that the same God who would accept of only the best as an offering from his people in those days will be pleased with the offering of a small coin, when, by a reasonable sacrifice, we could present an offering of equal value to those he commanded them to bring? "But cursed be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing."—Malachi 1: 14.

But you say, "We need our money for something else." So does the Lord need a portion of it for the accomplishment of his work; but not so much the money, for out of the very rocks he could make money to redeem Zion; but he does need a people willing to obey his commandments, and sacrifice for his cause, and if we will not do this we cannot assist in this great work.

The Lord, speaking through one of the prophets to some of his people in former days, says: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." (Malachi 3: 8.) Will we rob God by withholding our tithes and presenting to him in our most solemn assemblies, oblations which seem almost solemn mockery? Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (Galatians 6: 7.)

However, let not those who possess little of this world's goods be discouraged or ashamed because their offerings must needs be small. I believe that if the offering represents a real sacrifice, the "widow's mite" will be as acceptable now as in Christ's day when he said, "This poor widow hath cast in more than all they which have cast into the treasury."

So on the Lord's holy days, when we come together to renew our covenants with him, let us see to it, not that we be provided with a small coin so that we will not need to whisper to our seatmate, "Got change for a quarter?" when the time arrives for the offering to be taken; but rather that we have provided an offering, according to our means, that will be acceptable with our Lord.

A Suggestion

We have only one more "First Lord's Day" before the convening of General Conference, October 1. I have been thinking of the blessings God might see fit to bestow upon us if we—as many of us as are privileged to do so—would meet in our several meeting places on that day and also during conference upon the "First Lord's Day" in October, fasting, if not from food, at least fasting (abstaining) so far as possible from thoughts of work and worry, business, and cares of the world, worldly pleasures and vanities—thoughts which crowd the mind like weeds in a garden. "And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer." (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3.) Rejoicing? Yes, that we are thus permitted to assist in the work of God.

Then let us offer a united prayer unto God that he will guide in the deliberations of that conference, and that he will come to our rescue as a people, and purify his church from any influence of whatsoever nature that may be hindering its development; and after we have done our part to the best of our ability, let us go confidently on, leaving the result with God.

Also those who are not permitted to meet can be with us in spirit and purpose, and unite with us in prayer for the speedy accomplishment of the work intrusted to all, not forgetting that they also, according to their means, have the privilege of helping to lighten the financial burdens which the church is carrying.

My only apology for this article is that in pondering over the spiritual and financial conditions of the church, my mind has been so filled with a desire to do more for the work, and if possible to induce others to avail themselves of the opportunity to assist, that I presented some of these thoughts to as many of the members of our little branch as have been accustomed to meeting together, and the result has been so gratifying that I desire to pass these suggestions on to as many of our people as can be reached.

Those in charge of the financial part of our work have pleaded with us to make greater efforts to keep up the work through these rather trying times. They have frankly placed the conditions before us, showing how our financial condition has been steadily growing worse for some time despite their efforts to retrench. So now let us, the membership of the church, awaken to our responsibilities, and not with destructive criticism, but rather by constructive suggestions and whole-hearted support, move forward, giving the best that we have to the work and trusting that God will open up the way to a clearer and brighter understanding of our duties towards God and each other in the great work of the redemption of Zion.

Come! Let us be "laborers together with God."

Thrift Talks

Thrift is "careful management of one's resources."

Canning tomatoes, at five cents a quart, for use this winter when they will cost from 12 to 20 cents a quart—that's thrift.

Making over clothes and hats—that's thrift.

Buying plain, staple goods at "cash and carry" stores—that's thrift.

Look ahead, take advantage of real bargain sales—that's thrift.

Serve more soup and nuts, and less meat—that's thrift.

Clean and press your own clothes—that's thrift.

Raise your own garden vegetables—that's thrift.

Loan a little of your savings each year on good security at sure interest—that's thrift.

Wear patches. "A stitch in time, saves nine"—that's thrift.

Make your dollars have more cents (and more sense) for—that's thrift, and thrift creates tithing.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

PASTORAL

The Preacher and His Sermon

By E. D. Moore

Some assert feelingly that we are not producing the able preachers of twenty-five years ago.

Many books have been written on homiletics, and the publisher is courageous who is willing to put on the market still another as the George H. Doran Company, of New York, have done with this new one by the Reverend J. Paterson Smyth, entitled, The Preacher and His Sermon.

Most of the books on this subject are analytical. A hypothetical sermon is dissected, scrutinized, analyzed, then pieced together again. The reader is amazed that so much can be said of the feeble public efforts he has been in the habit of calling sermons—and may be helped to improve his methods.

Perhaps no group of public speakers so uniformly speak extemporaneously as the preachers in our church. A one-armed person with some of the digits on his remaining hand missing, would have no difficulty in counting on his fingers those among us who ever read their sermons or speak from a written manuscript. The number who write their sermons beforehand, then attempt to guide their sermon thoughts and outlines into those channels, are almost as scarce.

The church has not legislated on the subject. No official edicts have gone forth. Priesthood meetings do not often discuss this phase of the subject, rather seeming to take it for granted that the custom is a good one and worthy of perpetuation. In fact, from the beginning of the Restoration there seems to have been a well-defined feeling that the inspiration of the Holy Spirit found a better medium in the mind that was free to follow its suggestions.

Hearing some of our best preachers, one is constrained to agree with the method; hearing some of the worst, one feels emphatically that anything that will help ought to be applied at once.

But between these two extremes are a large number of local men who toil by day, study by night, think hard and seriously of the pastoral problems that are theirs, and are greatly concerned over raising the spiritual plane of living among those who look to them as pastors and subpastors.

Many of these are glad to avail themselves of any legitimate help in getting results from preaching. Having no divinity schools in the church and no sentiment demanding such, we must consider the best methods of functioning the Spirit of God as a quickener of our intelligence. Not many persist in believing that one may unprepared step into the pulpit, open his mouth, and have it filled by an unseen power with impressive utterances of value to the Saints. Such experiences have been recounted, but they are the exception and evidently not to be relied on to take the place of our own serious exertions.

Then what must we do if we would preach better sermons, continuing with our present methods? We may unanimously observe Paul's injunction to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Latter-day revelation adds in a confirmatory way: "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36.) Further; "Study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people." (87:5.) A later command clinches this with a suggestion that the ministry shall "lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ." (119:2.)

If one will read this new book (to be had from this office, postpaid, for $1.60) with open mind, he will be impressed with the frank, wholesome style of this famous writer and speaker. It consists of lectures on preaching, delivered to students and junior clergy in the Divinity School of the University of Dublin. These lectures are based on the prevalent custom in most of the churches whereby the ministry write their sermons, but whether one sets down on paper the results of his preparation or by sheer effort is able to impress valuable conclusions into his conscious or subconscious mind, some simple surveys such as this one are entirely worth while.

Though young men are addressed and considered throughout, also those who keep young in spirit will be able to profit directly by the suggestions. The chapter titles are: "The preacher," "The preacher: his first five years," "Placere," "The quality of 'grip,'" "Preparing the sermon," "Preaching the sermon."

Doctor Smyth believes in extempore sermons and that one can do much better by this method, provided he is not lazy in his preparation.

Then there is the important matter of aim—clear, definite aim. He says: "One would think no man would be such an idiot as to preach without any definite purpose. But I think some do. It is as if a man were working hard with wood and hammer and nails, and when you ask him what he is working at—what he is making—and he should say, 'I am not quite clear about it: I am only hammering.'"

So long as we continue to preach we ought to in-

HYMNS AND POEMS

The Kindly Stars

By Gertrude Sessions

I go to bed, beneath the stars,
Above the sun-warmed desert sands;
While peace broods over, nothing mars;
God holds the night within his hands.

The North Star stands forever sure,
While 'round him Great Bear marks the hours,
And bright across the sky above
Is "Rainbow Sister," path of flowers.

The Pleiades swing on their way,
Those sisters true, still glowing down,
As faithful and as far away
As when they shone on Pharaoh's crown.

Up towards the north Capella shines,
Where Charioteer pursues his way,
And overhead Twin Brothers climb
To reach the dome, before 'tis day.

I close my eyes while kindly stars
Brood on and lend my spirit peace,
Here is no place for earthly care,
And petty things of day must cease.

I wake refreshed before the dawn,
The stars burn on and all is well,
To me they speak till night is gone,
And Time's eternal stories tell.

Orion, mighty hunter, stands
Before the Bull, whose baleful eye
Would cause a fainter heart and hand
To seek a refuge in far sky.

But he trusts in his mighty club,
His lion skin, his sword untouched,
And surely, too, his faithful dog,
In time of need would help him much.

For Sirius is faithfulest,
As he is brightest of the stars, crease in our general effectiveness. There are some who wonder anxiously whither we are going in this field. They assert with feeling that we are not producing to-day the powerful men of forensic ability such as we had twenty-five years ago—men not only with usual good qualities, but forceful, powerful orators who moved multitudes with their eloquence and fervor.

No matter what our conclusion may be, we may all agree that "The preacher and his sermon" is a vital subject, and that we derive much inspiration and information from occasional reading and reference to good books on homiletics, the one to which we have referred here being of popular style and wide appeal.

He guards the night till gone to rest
Is every star, then shuts the bars.

And Venus now, above earth's film,
Her glory dimmed, this morning queen,
Stands ready to resign her realm,
As soon as Day King sends his beam.

And so I rest beneath the stars,
Above the night-cooled desert sands;
While peace broods over, nothing mars;
God holds the new day in his hands.

A Yearning for the Time of Peace

(Written at time of rumor of renewed war in Europe.)

By Richard J. Lambert

The sun arises to behold
A scene of untold misery;
For in his absence from the scene
Men have been making history.

In anger at each other's throats
They have been lashing furiously;
Forgetting as they're thus engrossed—
O'erlooking opportunity.

While armies are at clash of steel,
Or setting traps industriously,
Their fertile fields, in idleness,
Are retrograding—helplessly.

Let's banish strife and bitter war,
Indulge in frugal industry;
In making most of field and bed,
And loving brothers ceaselessly.

Then shall His Majesty arise
And us behold complacently:
Man working in his heritage
And Nature yielding bounteously.

No starving, crippled sons of men
Are thrust before us frequently;
But with both cribs and larders filled,
Our boys and girls most lustily

May sing the glories of a land
Whose fathers, oh, how ceaselessly,
In days ago and times at hand,
Have guarded most relentlessly.

Oh, for that dawn when love of man
Shall rise and reign triumphantly;
When peace abroad and peace at home
Shall with us rest transcendently.

Elder Amos Chase writes from Emerson, Iowa, on the 4th: "We are located at this point with the gospel tent, and are having some interest. Three have given their names for baptism—in fact, did so before we came, and others are showing an interest. Will be here till General Conference."

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the HERALD intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily endorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Thirteen Questions on Stewardship

By James E. Yates

Something to think about and act upon, if we would enter into the desired situation of equality.

1. If the doctrine of stewardship as taught by this church is to be no different than that being taught by other churches, and man-made institutions, of what benefit is the restoration of the gospel in this particular matter?

2. If a man may hold in his own individual right and name, any amount of wealth that he can secure, so long as he regards himself as a steward, in what particular does that arrangement differ from the procedure that has kept this church from giving the world a practical demonstration of the law of brotherhood and equality, up until this present hour?

3. If we as a church shall continue to operate our social and financial system along lines of such time-worn failure as has made this department of our work an acknowledged failure for a hundred years, what hope have we that the same procedure shall get us anywhere in the next hundred years?

4. If in the face of the Lord's statement that "it is not given that one man shall possess that which is above another" we continue to believe that it is all right for a man to accumulate wealth to himself and then put said accumulation back into his business to enlarge the business so there may be more accumulation, to be again put into the business, etc., where is there a limit to the amount that a man may possess above his fellows; and how is it possible for such an interpretation of the law to ever bring about "equality of temporal things"?

5. If God expects his people to be equal in the amount of temporal things they possess (and that God so wills it to be could not be stated in plainer language than he has spoken it), how is it possible for such equality to be brought about unless there shall be some general maximum and minimum standard of possessions agreed upon?

6. If we say that such a standard is fixed, and that the standard of maximum possessions (below the surplus) is "according to his need," that may be all right as far as it goes, but is not that general statement a little too indefinite to secure any real equality of possessions?

7. If the church is to be the light of the world, in what respect is her light greater than others when her methods of social life and general business are identical with those of the world?

8. Has the church, up to this time, been a light to the world in the matter of social economy and gospel equality and brotherhood in temporal affairs?

9. If she has failed in this particular thing, should we not be specific in attempting to locate the cause of her failure? and can it be possible that success can come if we follow the same old ruts of failure?

10. If the maximum standard of a man's rightful possessions, below the "surplus," held in his own name and right should be agreed upon to be: a comfortable home, modest but ample furnishings, and sufficient working capital or proper business investment by which to produce enough for the annual needs of the family—all other money, property, or material values whatsoever, to be retained only as a real stewardship, the ownership and title to be vested in the bishop or authorized agent in trust for the church, would this not establish a degree of equality in temporal things never before reached by this church, and at the same time hamper no one in his capacity to serve largely, and to accumulate largely for the common good of all?

11. If such a proposition as the foregoing should be presented to the General Conference, stating the fact that "whereas it yet remains for the church to give a practical demonstration of the law of temporalities as contained in the revelations to the church," and then proceeding with something that moves for definite, immediate, and progressive action, how many of us would be for the move, and how many against it?

12. How many of us would cozily snuggle up in our place and express the desire that we had better "let well enough alone"?

13. How many would courageously say: Let us go forward?

Wanted: A Change of Attitude

By O. L. Weaver

A diagnosis of our present-day ills, with suggested remedies prescribed.

That there is something the matter with the churches in this present day, and something very seriously the matter, is a fact so obvious that it is no longer challenged or contradicted. A decline in the vitality of the churches has been noted by sensitive and honest observers at intervals for nearly a hundred years. This has, in the past, seldom caused alarm, for the reason that other social institutions of every kind are liable to fluctuations of power and influence, determined by changes in economic conditions, leadership, and the more or less intangible aspects of intellectual and emotional interests.

A great many who have noted this decline, which seems prolonged and extreme, have found comfort in the expectancy of a sharp recovery. Thus have they lived during the last generation, at least, not only in a consciousness of a waning power, but in an eager and confident expectation of a great spiritual revival.

During the great European War this expectation reached an intensity of conviction, which was not unrelated, perhaps, to the degree of confusion at the failure of Christianity to prevent such incredible recrudescence of savagery. Men were convinced that this vast cataclysm was going to act as a kind of "day of judgment"; that it would restore man to his senses, purge him of his indifference and sin; in fact, save him to his lost fidelity to the highest and best, and they set to work to prepare an army of reapers of unparalleled proportions, known as the Inter-Church World Movement. Everything was ready for the great awakening, but alas; the war is long since over, and the anticipated revival has not appeared. On the contrary, the churches were never so impotent, never before was the tide of spiritual life running at so low an ebb.

What can be the matter? Why this evidence of collapse and impending ruin? Why was it that nearly five thousand pulpits were vacant for lack of clergymen in June, 1921, and that only 1,600 students were graduated in that month to meet the demands? It was confidently believed that following the World War, a vast army of young men, stirred to their depths by the experiences of peril and death, would come forward to offer themselves wholly to the work of the ministry. But nothing of the kind eventuated. On the contrary, there was the greatest slump in the attendance of divinity schools in recent history, with little prospect of improvement in the future.

In seeking to give an explanation of this phenomenon, investigators are prone to place emphasis on its economic aspects. They say men do not enter the ministry because the salaries are shamefully inadequate.

We believe that worth-while men are as eager to undertake worth-while jobs to-day as they ever were. But they must be convinced that the work is really worth while, and it is of just this that they are not convinced, in the case of the professional ministry. Few young men are so quixotic as to do it reverence. They frankly regard the religious field as a sheer waste of effort. Perhaps parents, too, see so little prospect of usefulness in the professional ministry that they are unwilling to have their sons enter that profession.

There Is a Way Out

At any rate, all are agreed that such are the conditions prevailing in the world to-day, and the question presents itself, What is wrong with this generation? Is there a way out? Is there a remedy for all this confusion in which we find ourselves? We believe that there is such a remedy.

If some magical transformation could be wrought in men's way of looking at themselves and their fellow men, no inconsiderable part of the evils that afflict us would vanish automatically. We believe that we are in possession of available knowledge, ingenuity, and material resources to make a far fairer world than that in which we find ourselves. Then what lack we yet? Do we not need a different attitude of mind, to cope with such unprecedented conditions? We should proceed to a thorough reconstruction of thought, to a critical, open-minded attitude, as has hitherto been but little developed among those who aspire to be men's guides, whether religious, political, economic, or academic. We do not examine facts, freshly, critically, and dispassionately, and then allow our philosophy to formulate itself as a result of this examination. Instead, we are taught our philosophy first, and then in its light we try to justify the facts. In the religious world to-day we find men, as in the past, formulating creeds, and then diligently perusing the Holy Scriptures in an endeavor to marshal together passages that will help bolster up their beloved, tottering idols. Only by a thorough examination of fundamentals can the truth ever be attained.

Is the Trouble From Defective Organization?

The statement has been made that we need a change in "the rules of the game." Many reformers are suspicious of what they call "ideas." They seem confident that the trouble lies in a defective organization, which should be remedied by more expedient legislation. Abuses and excesses should be checked by forbidding them, or by some ingenious reordering of procedure.

No one will question that proper organization is necessary, but what we usually need, as we stated above, is a change of attitude.

Let those who are impatient with mere administrative reform and lack faith in it, glance backward to Calvary's cross and there begin to learn the lesson of brotherly love. "Bear ye one another's burdens." "See that ye love one another." "Love thy neighbor as thyself." When these lessons are learned, suspicion and hate will not be so congenial to our natures.

There is nothing else anywhere nearly so interesting to ourselves as ourselves. All thought, if not laboriously controlled, and directed, will inevitably circle about the beloved ego. We do so hate to change our opinions. If we are told we are wrong, we resent the imputation and harden our hearts. The result is, that most of our so-called reasoning consists in finding arguments for going on believing what we already do. Very often our "good" reasons are not real reasons. Our "good" reasons ordinarily have no value in promoting honest enlightenment; they are usually, at the bottom, the result of personal preference or prejudice. Frequently we find ourselves indulging in self-exculpation, when we feel ourselves or our group accused of misapprehension or error. The little word my seems the most important one in human affairs.

Men tell us they have lost faith in moral or religious exhortation. It is all very well, they say, to teach the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; to admonish "little children, love one another," but it is impossible. To this we heartily agree that it is impossible for man, of himself, to love his neighbor as himself. But those who have sought to emulate our Great Exemplar, who have sold all they had to buy the pearl of great price, never, for a moment, doubting the resources at God's command, know how to obtain this Christlike attitude towards their fellow men.

Descartes says, "Good sense is, of all things among men, the most equally distributed; for everyone thinks himself so abundantly provided with it that those even who are most difficult to satisfy in everything else, do not usually desire a greater measure of this quality than they already possess."

Education Needs a New Name

Some one has suggested that a liberal education is the only way out of this dilemma. It is quite true, we need education, but something so different from what now passes as such that it needs a new name. Education has more various aims than we usually recognize. The art of reading, writing, and figuring, all would concede are basic principles. Then comes the technical information and training, to fit one to earn a livelihood. These are all very necessary, but there is another branch of education that is regarded by a few as precious and indispensable, i. e., the training of the mind, with the hope of cultivating our tastes, stimulating our imagination, and improving our reasoning powers.

It is needless to deny that the results of our "liberal education" are disappointing. It has miscarried and does not attain its ostensible aims. They seem all directed towards an enhancement of chances of worldly success. Even in some Sunday schools creative thought or reasoning has been suppressed. The superintendent or teacher eagerly deprecates any suspicion that pupils are being awakened in any way to the truth that that particular institution can possibly be fundamentally defective. And why do they do this? How, indeed, can a teacher be expected to explain to the sons and daughters of business men, politicians, doctors, lawyers, and clergymen—all pledged to the maintenance of their source of livelihood—the actual nature of affairs, as now practiced? Even if they are tempted to tell the essential facts, they dare not do so for fear of losing their places, amid the applause of all the righteously minded.

We Need Elijahs

What in reality is needed, is men of the courage of an Elijah, to denounce these "Ahab's" and defy these "Jezebels"; men who have the inclinations and who dare to explain our social, political, economic, and moral life and its presuppositions with sufficient insight and honesty to produce important results.

Unhesitatingly we say that there is a remedy for this sin-sick world: a change of attitude and a return to the old paths; faith in God; love for our fellow men: these are the reins of power that will direct us aright and establish a never-ending season of contentment and happiness.

What's Wrong With Us?

By Edward Rannie

A pertinent question and some of the author's constructive answers to it.

In a letter from Brother Edward Maloney, of England, published in the HERALD of August 2, he asks the question, "Well, what's wrong?" and this article, or letter, will be an attempt to answer the question.

Twenty Years as a Missionary

The writer came into the church when he was nearly twenty-one years of age, in 1877, near Fremont, Nebraska, and was ordained a priest by Apostle James Caffall. He began preaching within one month and has been at it ever since, either locally or under General Conference appointment, and has passed along the ministerial road from "the boy preacher" to "Old Brother Rannie" of Missouri.

At that early day the membership was not much above ten thousand and the missionaries were few. He did as other young men were doing when they had any spare time: put it into good use by doing a little missionary work. Except for a short period when I could not regularly attend church, I held some office, and since that time have held the office of elder, seventy, and now of high priest, and have traveled for nearly twenty years under General Conference appointment.

During that time I have been district president, branch president, Bishop's agent, and missionary. In the last eight years my work has taken me into eight districts. I have labored in forty branches, been in the homes of about two hundred of our members, and have remained from one day to a month or more.

During that nearly forty-five years it has been my good fortune and happy pleasure to be acquainted with the majority of the prominent workers of both the men and women of the church.

This introduction is offered so that the reader may know that the writer has had an opportunity to learn a few things in the church, and unless he is grossly ignorant, or has poor judgment, or is blinded by prejudice, what may be written is worth a passing thought. If I had not had any experience in the work of the church my conclusions would not be based on knowledge and so would be of little value.

We Need a United Priesthood

We need a united priesthood as a result of a knowledge of what is contained in the standard books of the church and what light God may give us by the Holy Spirit. At present there is no unity on the great questions that make us a distinct and peculiar people from all other religious bodies in the world. The school of the prophets is God's plan to prepare his ministry for local and missionary work in this and foreign lands. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 39-46; 87: 3.) Our heavenly Father's plan takes in all the priesthood, "beginning at the high priests, even down to the deacons." We go along in our blundering way, trying our worldly wisdom, and accomplish nothing worth while and face the world and the church a divided ministry.

We are lacking in local workers to take care of the branches and districts. Business cares, indifference, and ignorance of the laws of God, the customs and usages of the church in governing branches and districts disqualify seventy-five per cent of the local ministry from rendering the proper service necessary to give the needed care to the membership. Most of the branches have major or minor difficulties that keep them in a condition that prevents their spiritual growth and hinders any successful missionary effort being made. Most of the things that bring about contention and strife are such that children would forget in a few minutes and go to playing.

We Need Real Conversions

A great number are brought into the church not converted to the gospel of Jesus Christ. A personal like for the missionary, undue influence by the missionary and others, have been the main factors in bringing them in. A branch president told me of a missionary effort in the branch that resulted in more than fifty baptisms, and he remarked, "It is six years since the meetings were held, and but few of those baptized have been in the church since the missionary left." Many such people are a liability to the church and make no development in the things that make for a purer and better life. They even hinder others from entering.

The standard of righteousness should be held higher, so high that we must make a great struggle to get up on the hilltop. If our standard is no higher and not more difficult to obtain than what is found in the world, we have nothing when we reach our goal. Down in the valley is fog, swamp, mosquitoes, malaria that will poison our life. We must get up where the air is purer, where the sun shines and kills the microbes of doubt, discontent, and pessimism.

We Need Simple Teachings of Christ

The world and the church needs the plain, simple teachings of Jesus Christ interpreted so that they can be applied to the everyday problems of life. They were not given for the generation only in which Jesus lived. They are living principles now that will cure all the ills that man is heir to. "Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest to your souls." Many of the troubles in our branches when the members are properly taught the ideals of Jesus Christ will disappear, because they will learn that his way is the better way to live.

Jesus, the Good Shepherd, knew where the "pastures of tender grass" were, and where the refreshing "waters of quietness" could be found, and he knew the people that would enjoy them, "and the common people heard him gladly" and went into the great feast and enjoyed what Jesus had to give to his children. Are we wiser than Jesus was? Can we find response to his message among the rich, learned, ultrafashionable, luxury-loving, and pleasure-mad crowd? or shall we go to the plain people? Yes, that is where our message will be received; for the people are just as they were in Jesus' time. The barefooted boys in the pineries of Alabama, from the sweet potato fields of Tennessee, among the fishermen on the rocky shores of New England, the coal fields scattered throughout our land, from the prairies of the Central West, from the foothills of the great Rocky Mountains, from California's sunny shores, from the everlasting wheat fields of Canada, from far-away Australia, and across the Atlantic to the British Isles, Germany, and the Scandinavian countries, and other countries not yet visited by our missionaries, will come the great army that will bear the glad tidings of the restored gospel to the remotest corners of the earth, and from the same places will come the future mothers that will make the great army of latter-day Israel, uncontaminated by the vices of the world, pure as the lilies and as beautiful as the rose. They will be fit companions and homemakers for the great army of missionaries that will answer the call of our great Leader and Captain, the lowly Nazarene.

It was from such humble surroundings that the pioneers of the Reorganization came, who stood between the apostates and the world to protect the remnant of what was one time a part of the great army of modern Israel, then reduced to a forlorn hope, and all that stood to prevent the church from total annihilation. They have bequeathed to us a holy heritage. Let us be as true as they were and as fearless in the struggle for the right. It was from such conditions in life that men like Lincoln, Clay, Jackson, Webster, Grant, Garfield, and McKinley came, and from such will come our army, crude as the material may be. In the hands of the great God they will be made vessels fit for the Master's use.

We Need Better Local Ministry

We must use greater care in selecting men for the local ministry. It is in the branches that we are failing. The members are starving because there are none to feed them. There are too many ordained who do not come up to the standard of morality needful to make them worthy and capable leaders. They lack a knowledge of the things in the Scriptures that would make them true shepherds. We need leaders who know the laws of government in the church, and can guide with a steady and firm hand.

We are pleasure mad. Two cents for the Lord's work and ninety-eight cents for worldly pleasure is about the proportion that many of our people spend their money. Jesus said, "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." In the city of Zion which God wants to be a holy city, a man of the world builds a factory that gives employment to a number of people, and some of our people, the children of light, build a pleasure resort near by to get the money of the titheless, pleasure-mad Saints. Perhaps that is what the Lord had in mind when he said the Gentiles would help build up Zion. If there is not enough food in the gospel of Jesus Christ to feed the hungry soul, yearning for the bread that satisfies, and give happiness unalloyed without being tarnished by the follies and vices of the world, all the pleasures that the wit of man can devise, helped by the arch enemy of mankind, will starve and dwarf the soul that leans on it. It will be a broken reed and let its user fall into the pit of pollution. The Master cannot use them in his great work.

We Need Less Class Distinction

Thirty years ago we had two classes in the church; those of the middle class and the poor. Not paupers, but those whose income was not sufficient to buy all the necessities of life. To-day we have three: the two mentioned, and those who are rich in comparison with the middle class; who require from two to four times as much to live on as do the middle class, and so have nothing left to help the Lord's work, and if in the service of the church are an extra burden.

Equality, that is a word found in the books and in day dreams, but not in the hearts of many people. Stewardships is a slogan to catch the ear of the man who wants to get the savings of the industrious and scare the man who has been industrious and saving for fear he will have to give it to the lazy man. That is not God's way, but that is the interpretation put on it by many people. It is an interesting subject to talk about, but not many want to work on the job.

Many of our people who have had the advantage of a college or university education will not work in the Master's great harvest field. They do not like the company of the plain folks. The years of preparation are not for the work of the Lord. "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called." God does not object to them because they are learned, but because they are not humble and they live after the flesh. If they were humble, mee, lowly, and full of love, they could be shining shafts in his vineyard.

We Need Less Poverty

Zion and the gathering is one of the big problems that belongs to the "marvelous work" of the latter days. The Lord has been talking to us about it since 1831, yet we have done but very little towards its accomplishment. Not any more than has been done by emigrants forming colonies that settled up the great western country after the formation of our present Government. In 1909 the Lord told us to form colonies and establish industrial institutions, and we have not yet been obedient. As the black man held up his shackled hands and asked that his chains might be broken off, so do the hands of the poor of the church ask that the chains of poverty that bind them to industrial and agricultural slavery be broken off and they be given an opportunity to enjoy the sunlight of peace and happiness. They ask for bread and we give them a stone.

Not even in the city of Zion do we get a poor imitation that they might have encouragement to look ahead, hoping that their turn will come by and by. The history of the past reveals the fact that neglect of the poor and apostasy go together; and God can never bless the church with great spiritual blessings so long as the poor are neglected. It is not alms they need; they need the help that God says is due them from his people, according to his divine plan, which will enrich the church and bless the recipient.

We Need the Gathering

It is not only help in material things that is needed, but in spiritual things, and that cannot be given as long as we remain so widely scattered.

In one district where I labored, sixty per cent of the membership were not near enough to branches to be able to attend the services. It comprised one hundred and fifty families. We are now sending missionaries to foreign lands, and the converts will read in the revelations to the church about Zion and the gathering and will want to come because God tells them to gather. What will be our answer? Will it be the same old song, "Do not be in a hurry; you must wait until the rich and pleasure-mad get through with their spree before they will be ready to go ahead with the Lord's work."

We Need More Prayer—Less Jazz

Many of our homes are becoming prayerless. The family altar has been broken down and thrown away.

Many of our people do not now read the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the church papers and books published by the church, and other good books. The children know more about "Mutt and Jeff" and the "Katzenjammer Kids" than they do about the heroes named in the Bible and Book of Mormon. It is a frivolous and trifling age; people do not care for the things that are solid and enduring, and many of our people are in the big crowd that leads to a bitter end and holds back the Lord's work.

One of the greatest blessings that can come to the church is the organization of the school of the prophets where we can be taught the law of the Lord and so come to a greater unity in understanding the gospel law. Then we can teach it to others, and with a better understanding of the law by the people many of our difficulties will disappear and the work will move forward with greater rapidity.

We Must First Get Out of Babylon

By A. M. Baker

A protest against some current conditions and attitudes prevailing in the church.

With the restoration of the gospel the command to gather to Zion and build up this condition of righteousness, was just as much a part of the gospel plan as baptism. "By their fruits ye shall know them." (Matthew 7: 20.)

But after ninety years of preaching equality and gathering, we are about as far from that proposition now as we were in the beginning. No doubt we have made some progress in an educational way, in theory, but not very much in practice. However, I shall continue to preach equality and gathering as a wonderful prize to be developed.

We Have Lacked Faith

The reason we have failed to develop this righteous condition is on account of the lack of faith. The membership of this church have had more faith in the sacred rights (?) of private property than in the commands of God to gather and execute the law. Private ownership of property will go into the eternal night of oblivion, with the fall of "Babylon." Babylon must fall and the powers of opposition are knocking at her walls to-day. She is crumbling and decaying. But we will never redeem Zion by the old selfish principles of Babylon. The invitation is, "Come out of her, O my people, and be not partakers of her sins." Yet some seemingly insist that we can improve upon God's plan and carry the old capitalistic system of interest, rents, and speculations, right along with us. This system is not in harmony with the golden rule. It draws the "class line." It is grinding upon the poor.

Remember, Jesus Christ did not exclude the poor. He belonged to that class so far as temporalities were concerned. Jesus said: "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Who May Gather to Zion?

I have sat in our General Conference gatherings, and heard some "few of the ministry" describe the unwise methods of a certain family that came to Independence so as to be in Zion. After having landed in this much-desired spot the family was stranded financially and upon the mercies of the church. The man has been held up and ridiculed before hundreds of people for coming to Zion in this way, when his conception of Zion was not any more dwarfed, if measured by the divine standard, than the idea entertained by some few of our brethren who believe that Zion must be built up by the exploiting system of profits and speculation, instead of producing primarily for our actual needs and wants.

Restricted Districts Wrong

I have noticed recently advertising matter sent out to the membership, throughout the States, advertising certain lots for sale in Zion—in which one part is a restricted district. In this section no houses under a certain valuation can be constructed. Or in other words, people who have not the means to purchase this kind of property—the poorer classes—will please step down into "the lower strata of human society" and "let us high up town folks live here."

If we are going to have equality, let's have it. Jesus said concerning the resurrection, they shall be equal unto the angels, neither shall they die any more. (Luke 20: 35, 36.) No restrictions here. I imagine the angels weep occasionally when they hear and see our selfish, capitalistic interpretation of Zion and equality.

COLLEGE DAY, SEPTEMBER 24

We are told in the Book of Mormon: "But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish." (2 Nephi 11:109.) This is the motive that should inspire us to gather—that we may labor for Zion and feel that we are contributing our portion for the building up of a more perfect condition of society—where justice and equity prevail. What greater satisfaction could come to the Saints than to realize they were gathering and actually applying the Zion principles to their lives and society, not only spiritually, but from a business standpoint as well. This would be the fruit as declared by Paul: "The husbandman must first be a partaker of the fruit."

"How Much May I Do?"

Under the present system of greed, the foremost thought in every enterprise is, "How much may I get out of it?" But in Zion that question will only be secondary. The height of our ambition will be, "How much may I do for this social order?" We will not need to worry so much about the goose that lays the golden egg. If we can only execute God's law, the blessings of heaven will be ours to enjoy. This will be seeking first to build up the kingdom of God and establishing his righteousness, and the temporal blessings will follow. (Matthew 6:33.) God says he is bound when we do what he says. (Doctrine and Covenants.)

When we begin to do all this then we can solve the intricate problems of capital and labor and show to the world that the gospel is the panacea for all the ills of life. Then God's people can be the light of the world. Do you think God would let us as a church fail when we are doing his will? But if we do not do his will, we will be rejected as a church.

Thousands Ready to Respond

Just think, with a membership of one hundred thousand Saints, our little army of missionaries has had to be cut down. Where is the spirit of sacrifice manifested, as in former years? Only the other day I was told that the Mormons of Utah had forty-six hundred missionaries in the field. But to my mind there are thousands of people in this church ready to make great sacrifices whenever they can see the real law of Zion being executed—instead of magnifying the old system of Babylon that we should be trying to get away from.

When people obey this gospel and are baptized, they have taken the initial step to go beyond the boundary of Babylon's walls and live in the pure atmosphere of God's eternal truth. Let us go all the way. Consecrate our surplus properties (talents also) and launch out upon the stewardship plan. Nothing complicated about it. It simply means serving God with all our strength. (Matthew 22:37-40.)

Martin Harris is referred to as an example in giving his money in order to establish the kingdom of God. Section 58 of Doctrine and Covenants shows the need of purchasing the land and laying the foundation of Zion. In this transaction the rich have had the opportunity for nearly a century of taking the initiative. They should be the first to respond. Will they? When the children of Israel returned from their captivity, it was the poorer classes that first responded. The well to do were too busy making money to pay any heed to the call. But how are we going to keep the poor out of the land of Zion after it has been purchased? As the Lord said, workmen of every kind should be sent to the land. What for? To labor for themselves? To labor for the Saints of God—for the social order.

I cannot imagine there will be any idle rich sitting around in shady corners—living off the interest of their money. All will be workers who are able to work, and they will con-

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

About Conference Exhibit

We regret to announce that the exhibit and sale of handwork from our sisters of the South Sea Islands mission will not materialize this year, owing to the difficulties attending its preparation.

Our former organizer there, Sister May Needham Elliott, put into the project a great deal of time, thought, and energy, and the sisters on various islands have made a splendid start towards its accomplishment, but it is thought best to defer the attempt until another conference, in order that when it is undertaken it may be as completely successful as possible.

The sisters who have had charge of our work there feel strongly the necessity for obtaining and furnishing a house which can be used as a study center, one where the sisters can meet and have their lessons, and where, objectively as well as subjectively, much of value may be demonstrated.

We feel sure that when the sisters from those far-off islands shall have finished their preparations for this sale of handwork, with so worthy an object in view, the sisters in the United States will do their full and general share in making the venture a success in every way. No doubt there are some who will feel disappointment in not having this exhibit and sale this year, but such will, we feel sure, cheerfully postpone their plan of obtaining some of this lovely handwork, and will be looking forward with interest to the future realization of this project.

A. A.

From Oklahoma Sisters

Sister Ethel Ammerman, historian for the Women's Department of her local, writes from Teriton, Oklahoma, telling of the renewed interest there. A business meeting held consider it a pleasure and not a disgrace. The poor laboring man will be just as valuable an asset in building up Zion, as the money required to purchase the land.

We Have Enough Now to Work the Plan

This church owns enough land now to place these Zion principles in operation. And if the rich will not respond, in a year's time the poor, laboring, producing class of this church could raise (in normal times) by free will offering the sum of $500,000 to be used in putting such a move on its feet. This would permit men and women with brawn and muscle to labor as stewards in developing the Zion of God as a living institution, breathing the divine element of love and brotherhood, translating "our gospel" into human character clothed with flesh and blood. In this sense the gospel is indeed the power of God unto salvation, unto all who believe. (Romans 1:16.)

The plan of building up Zion is not an exploiting system. Do not presume for one moment that Enoch and his people had any worries about banking institutions in their Zion. And, by the way, they made a success of their undertaking. Why? Because they adopted God's plan. What is the purpose of a bank? To develop profiteers and speculators. To loan money, to get interest, mortgages, etc. How many more centuries will it take to build up Zion under the present program?

"Zion cannot be built up except it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom."

in July places Sister Florence Walts as president; Sister Anna McKibben, vice president; Sister Ethel Ammerman, secretary; Sister Pearl Greenwood, superintendent of home department; Sister Nellie Bell, cradle roll superintendent; and Sister Anna Hicks, superintendent of friendly visiting.

They study the Doctrine and Covenants, with Sister Walts as teacher, and find it very interesting. The Oriole girls gave them a surprise one evening by coming with a freezer of ice cream, which was very delicious in itself, and seemed more delightful because of the spirit of love in which it was offered. The Orioles ran a cold drink stand on Saturday afternoons this summer, the proceeds to be spent on reunion work. They are studying lessons on etiquette, under Sister Greenwood's guidance.

Southeastern Illinois, Brush Creek Branch

Since we were organized, September 12, 1920, we have made comparatively slow progress. We hope to be as the oak tree, continuing to grow until our influence be far reaching. Since looking over the record, I find we have met thirty-two times for studying prenatal care, child care, mother craft, mother's reply, and many other pamphlets along educational lines.

We live in the country and many live quite a distance away, and on account of unfavorable weather and bad roads in the winter we have not been able to make any better progress. Still we are a band of earnest workers who are bending every energy to become efficient workers along our line of work.

We have distributed something like one hundred and fifty cast-off garments, yet good and useful, to the poor and needy ones, which have proved a blessing to many. We have quilted a number of quilts, of which eight were donated to be used for reunion. Others have promised donation of quilts, sheets, and pillows. We hope other branches of our district will see this and lend us a helping hand, that we may be able to accommodate our missionaries and visiting Saints with beds fully equipped.

The Orioles are very anxious to see the reunion grounds made beautiful, and so each one will bring a jardiniere with a beautiful flower to be transplanted for the special occasion. The Orioles are ever alert and ready for any task you may ask them. Eager to learn, they have taken up mothercraft. There are many things which should be taught to girls that their conception of perfection of womanhood should be in harmony with highest standards of dress, manners, morals, and maternity. The sisters are largely responsible that these principles are not instilled in their lives during the Oriole age.

The Temple Builders are studying to equip themselves for future usefulness.

We have the Boy Scouts organized; also little messenger boys. They will be on display and on duty at the reunion.

M. E. PRESNELL.

The Responsibility Upon the Isolated Saints

Before me is the HERALD which contains the request for contributions from the rural Saints. Perhaps I cannot say a great deal that will be beneficial to others, but I will try to pass along my humble experience in the country.

Yes, indeed, the rural or isolated sisters need a special department or club, in my opinion. I would suggest that it be called a department for isolated Saints, and that there be some one in each district to take charge of the work. I really think it is too much for the district organizer to undertake its supervision in addition to what she already has to do. It could be a sort of home class worker for the non-resident members of each district, and she could report her activities to the district organizer.

Addresses of nonresident Saints could be obtained from the district secretary, and the one in charge could keep this list handy and make record of those who wish to correspond with other sisters, and thus addresses could be exchanged.

Through this agency, too, those Saints who have an opening for missionaries could make it known, and thus our gospel message may be scattered.

The taking of church papers should be encouraged among the isolated members, as well as the studies offered by the Women's Department, Sunday school, and Religio. Perhaps there are those who cannot afford to buy books for the different studies they wish to take up, and through this rural department could be brought about a system of exchange, by which sisters may exchange their texts for a period, simply costing the postage necessary for the transfer.

There is much time for study in the country during the winter months, and special bulletins, pamphlets, and reading courses would be good. A corner in the HERALD is not a bad idea, but does not reach far enough, as there are a great many isolated Saints who do not take any of the church papers.

I think rural children, if properly taught by their parents, have better opportunities than those in the city, because there is not as much evil to lead them astray. The rural women need to study, however, properly to teach and train, as do the sisters elsewhere. In order to become active in her community, and contribute to the general uplift of humanity, too, the country woman should study.

I do not know that the isolated Saint has greater advantages than those in the city, but the responsibility is far greater. To raise children in the church without the help of the Sunday school and to live a life that will be a worthy example for nonmember neighbors needs much thought, prayer, study, and faithful effort. Opportunities for service are on every hand for the rural woman, if she will but seek them, and the rich blessings of the Spirit will not be denied if she fills her life with these little acts of kindness. Out of her fullness she can impart to others by the example she sets, by the way her children are brought up, and by her active interest in every proposition for good and uplift to those about her.

I have had considerable branch experience, having lived in three of them, but I never fully realized how much one can do alone until recently. We have been in the country nearly a year, and like it very much. We have two children who need the Sunday school lessons, so I started a primary class in my home and invited the neighbor children to join us. There are five of them, and I am enjoying it as much as the children, and the work is gaining publicity. Of course we miss the sacramental services, but we feel that God has been with us and abundantly blessed us. We feel more encouraged than ever to keep step with this great movement that is Zionward. We feel the great responsibility resting upon us, as upon all isolated Saints. We desire to work for the Master, being diligent in prayer, study, and service.

MRS. W. E. GITTENS.

ALLEGAN, MICHIGAN.

"The sons of Judah have to choose that God may again choose them. . . . Let us be as if we were not among the populations; but choose.—George Eliot.

A Study of Civics

Text: The New Civics, by Roscoe L. Ashley

CHAPTER XIX

Foreign Relations

I. Diplomatic Relations and Problems

1. International relations in general.
 - a. International law.
 - b. Protection of national rights.
2. American influence on world peace.
 - a. American efforts to protect neutrals.
 - b. International arbitration.
 - c. America and the future of world peace.
3. The Monroe Doctrine.
 - a. Its principles.
 - b. Its effect upon the Latin-American countries.
 - c. The Pan-American Doctrine.
4. The making of treaties.
 - a. The process of negotiating treaties.
 - b. The Senate and the ratification of treaties.

II. National Defense

1. The need of preparedness.
 - a. Europe before 1914.
 - b. Lessons of the Great War to America.
 - c. Military powers of Congress and the President.
2. The Army.
 - a. Armies, past and present.
 - b. The militia, past and present.
3. Naval defense.
 - a. Coast defense.
4. Pension legislation.
5. The problem of military preparedness.
 - a. Its need.
 - b. Its true elements.
6. Peace must accomplish more than war.
 - a. Some things which war has accomplished for civilization.
 - b. Some things real preparedness will do for the Nation.

Suggestions for Reading and Discussion

1. Do you think our Government is more responsive to the wishes of its citizens than it was in the days of Washington? Give reasons.
2. Discussion:
 - a. The people of any nation should be held responsible for the actions of their government.
 - b. "That is the best government which governs least."
3. One author holds that "good men and good citizens are not anonymous terms." Do you agree to this? Why?
4. What do you think should be included in a course in citizenship? How would you teach it?
5. The Outlook for October 1, 1919, recommends the following list of books to students of civics:
 - a. Community Civics, R. O. Hughes (Allyn and Bacon).
 - b. The Community and the Citizen, A. W. Dunn (D. C. Heath).
 - c. American Citizenship, C. A. Beard (Macmillan).
 - d. American Government, F. A. Magruder (Allyn and Bacon).
 - e. City, State and Nation, W. L. Nida (Macmillan).
6. In answer to the question, "How can women best contribute to the good government of rural communities?" Mrs. A. S. Richardson says: "By visiting the schools, working

LETTERS AND NEWS

A Farmer's View

A farmer who would do more to help but wonders how he can manage it.

There has been a great deal written about church finances, stewardships, etc., by different ones; but so far as I know, none from a farmer, so I venture a few thoughts.

There have been so many what seem to me conflicting views, or so many different ways of working out the stewardship plan, that I must confess I am so confused that I do not know what is right. I was taught a few years ago that everybody had a surplus, and now I am taught but few have a surplus, and both teachings come from the same authority. Which is right?

Some time ago an article in the HERALD on the auto wrecking the church, contained some good thoughts, and no doubt there would be more money for church funds if there were not so many autos.

A great many writers seem to have an idea that farmers all have large bank accounts to draw from. I don't know whether or not any of the church authorities have that view. I hope not. If the conditions of the farmer were known, it would be known why there was such a falling off of tithes and offerings.

One writer says, "Lay by in store as the Lord hath prospered." My observation proves to me that but few farmers in any locality are making much more than expenses, and some of the reasons are extreme climatic conditions. During the months of March and April we had eighteen inches of water. One month ago we had a fine prospect for corn, but with no rain for twenty-eight days and mercury hovering around one hundred in the shade, the corn crop is cut in half. This condition proves to me that the cause of the failure of Palestine to produce anything was lack of rain in season, and as soon as the moisture came in the right time the land became productive. It was already fertile. Fertile land will not produce without proper moisture and that at the proper time.

But back to the farmer's income. A young brother here paid $65 last fall for seed wheat. After threshing, he sold his crop for $75. Two brothers rented a large farm and will not more than make the rent. I live on a good eighty-acre farm and the last two years have been able only to pay interest, taxes, and live. I know of others doing no better. Such has been my experience.

Our children have to do with an eighth grade education or work their way through high school or college. Under such conditions, how can we make donations when there is a call for help? We cannot and keep out of the poorhouse. When I read of missionaries getting from $600 to $2,000 for good housing conditions for teachers, installing school libraries, opening playgrounds and school lunch rooms, by talking county government and desirable candidates for county offices at grange, church, and neighborhood gatherings, by demanding a county or visiting nurse and a county health officer, by registering and voting, by applying to the Extension Division of the State Universities for clippings and reading lists, and by seeking advice from the University's Department of Municipal Research." For more specific information, see "Simple Facts About Local Politics," sent out by the Good Citizenship Bureau of the Woman's Home Companion, on receipt of ten cents.

DORA YOUNG.

www.LetterDayTruth.org allowance, I wonder who is making the greatest sacrifice, when they could not possibly make that by working every day. A laboring man working at $3 a day for 313 working days would earn only $939; and at $5 a day, it would be but $1,565 per year. If a man with a family can get a job on the farm at $35 per month with house and garden furnished, that is $420 a year, and that is all a farm will pay. We cannot afford to donate and lose our home, because in that case, by and by, we will be old and dependent on charity and obliged to go to some charitable institution.

In addition to the drouth we have the chinch bug multiplying by the thousands, pastures are drying up, feeding has begun, wells are failing, and Saints becoming dissatisfied and moving out, notwithstanding the command to "gather in the region round about." Taxes are continually being raised. New offices are being created, rock roads are being built, and taxes being levied to meet the expense. Men with money are investing in nontaxable securities, thereby taking wealth out of the list of taxable property, and there is no means of redress. About the only thing we can do is to take note and put into active practice the spirit of repression of unnecessary wants, and practice virtue and holiness. This may sound like faultfinding, but I am just portraying conditions as they are in eastern Kansas. Wishing for better things and times, but not expecting them soon,

I am as ever,

MAPLETON, KANSAS.

J. L. GUNSOLLEY.

With the Maoris of New Zealand

"A simple people, full of faith," for whom we need literature.

A word from this mission may be of interest to your readers. Recently Brother Robinson had a good experience among the Maoris near Auckland. We had visited them twice and on our third visit they had a death and were holding a tangi or mourning gathering. This lasts for days, in which they gather from far and near to feast and carry out their tribal customs. They often eat the host out of everything, so I am informed. We were asked to conduct the burial. We did so in English, the Maori interpreting. They buried the deceased's wardrobe with him in his suit case. They invited us to join with them in conducting a memorial.

In our time we talked the gospel to them and they responded very heartily. The Maori greeting "Tammās korna," meaning, "Welcome, you two," was said and reiterated. I told them of a dream which I had before coming to the mission and they believed it of God. They are a simple people and full of faith, and I wish we had church literature in their tongue.

During the same week we visited a seaport named Thames, where Brother Loving is laboring, and for a fortnight we held forth in street and in hall. The Brighamite members got very excited to think another kind of Latter Day Saints had arrived and challenged some Brighamite positions which the rank and file did not know were held. These Brighamite elders keep the objectionable doctrines and historical happenings of the prejudicial character sedulously in the dark.

We baptized one lady, a widow with a large family, and left many interested, Brother Loving continuing.

Brother Loving is continuing his study of the Maori tongue and is very anxious to get to that work. I cannot wonder at this desire, for the natives are a warm-hearted and intelligent people whose ear is much more sensitive to the gospel sound than is that of the Pakesha. Yet there is a great difficulty in the fact that the Mormons have preceded us and their doctrine of polygamy is not repugnant to the Maori or very contrary to his customs.

In Auckland proper we are doing all we are capable of to get the work before the people. The service on street still holds anywhere from two to four hundred, mostly men. They do not come to the hall. We are trying to educate the young through normal study. The Sunday school numbers between thirty and forty, but the branch is under twenty. I think the country districts show more promise of immediate results.

We intend running another mission at Coromandel, near our last mission. This point can be easily supplied from Auckland and we hope to form a branch in those regions and prepare for district organization in the future.

The people of New Zealand are hard to shift, but they may "stick" the better when they are convinced.

My health has not been good since coming to New Zealand.

Fraternally,

J. H. N. JONES.

Northeastern Kansas Reunion

Probably a typical Middle Western reunion, affecting for good both Saints and the community.

A very successful reunion of the Northeastern Kansas District was held at Netawaka, August 11 to 20, 1922.

Every reunion is in some sense in advance of the preceding ones. Since the close of the previous one, held at the same place last year, many have been planning and looking forward to this one. There are many reasons why this one is the greatest of all. One is, we were there to help and be helped.

Second, we were there for mental growth and spiritual development.

Third, to get in closer touch with our brothers and sisters, and with God. From the beginning there were manifestations of God's approval of this gathering. The refreshing shower that fell the first night of the reunion was symbolic of the smile and refreshing spiritual showers and blessings that fell on the Saints.

The work of supervising was in charge of J. A. Thomas, district president. He chose as his assistants T. W. Curtis and J. W. Roberts. The work of the Women's Department was in charge of Sister Sandy, general field worker. The doctrinal sermons were delivered by T. W. Curtis, who is our missionary supervisor for Kansas. Sermons on practical living of the Saints were by J. W. Roberts, of the Far West Stake. The evangelistic work of spiritually renewing the Saints and conferment of blessings was by Ammon White, of Independence, Missouri. F. G. Hedrick had charge of the work pertaining to that of bishop's agent and also represented the Herald Publishing House. The music was in charge of J. G. Juergens and Sister Cecil Schmid.

One big feature was real school work done in the five classes organized. The mixed young people's class used Gregory's Seven Laws of Teaching; Roots of Character and Disposition; and Heredity and Parenthood in the women's adult class; suitable subjects were taught in the adult men's class. One class of junior girls finished a short course in "Mothercraft." Then there was card sewing, clay modeling, coloring, and Bible stories in the other two classes.

The sunrise prayer meetings will long be remembered by the young people for the blessing poured out upon them one morning through the Lord's servant, Ammon White. As the sun rose in its glory over the hill and shed its hallowed influence upon these services, so are our young people arising in their glory, and God is preparing them to carry on his work. "Even some of these young people will carry this work to foreign lands." This will be a memorial in their lives so long as they remember this reunion. May their lives be a memorial for Him. The presence of angels was felt hovering over the tent one morning when the spirit of testimony was poured out in the prayer service. Including all the prayer services there were 108 prayers and 188 testimonies. Brother White gave twenty-nine blessings. Sister Lula M. Sandy gave two lectures: "The work of the Women's Department," and, "How to run a small Sunday school." Sister V. H. Goffe gave one lecture on "Good citizenship"; Sister (Doctor) Juergens on "Social purity" to the ladies; Brother White two, "Stewardship" and "Inheritances."

The influence of these reunions is beginning to be felt in Netawaka and vicinity. These people are a charitable people and have done much towards our comfort and to make us feel at home in their midst. Much credit is due to each one in the personnel of this organization and many others that helped to make this reunion a success.

On the closing day there were sixty-five families and nineteen towns represented. MRS. H. C. PITSENERGER.

Kewanee Reunion

Excellent practice in living together suggests this correspondent.

We have not troubled you nor the readers of the HERALD for many moons, so please let us tell you about the Kewanee district reunion held at Galva, Illinois, August 11 to 21.

Kewanee District has held some very good reunions in the past, but last year did not attempt to meet, and this year met in a new locality and upon new ground. Aside from the grounds being some distance from town, making it necessary for all comers to be brought out by cars or other conveyances, it was a very pleasant place in which to meet. The owner of the park was very kind and attentive to the needs of the Saints. A number of the brethren consecrated their cars to the service of those who were dependent, and all moved well.

Brother R. C. Russell was in attendance at the early part of the reunion and seemed to have won all hearts by his kindly manner, his wise teaching, and his good sermons. I heard upon every hand, "Oh, why didn't you come while Brother Russell was here?" Well, I am glad that Brother Russell proved so satisfactory. I think he will be in demand again. Brother R. V. Hopkins was the visitor when I was there. And Brother Hopkins must have learned the secret from Brother Russell, for they were talking "Hopkins" right strong while I was there. And then, last among the visiting preacher-men was E. A. Curtis. But you could hardly call him or his wife, either one, "visitors." Everyone seemed to be greeting them as "comers-home." Well, it was a very good reunion, made more so by the pleasure of listening to our Brother James Houghton sing with that wonderful voice of his. May the Lord help him to use it in singing into the hearts of the people the truths of eternal life.

There were others, and still others who helped make the meeting a success. Some contributed talent, others just plain hard work. The bishop's agent seemed to have drawn just plain hard work for his share. And the sisters and brethren who were to be found around that "cooking" tent seemed to be doing their share all right, too.

The prayer meetings were wonderfully inspiring, and they told me the study period each day had been very successful, the preaching instructive, and the music just a soul feast. So many, many good voices in Kewanee District. A large number of young men and young women, gifted and talented, will, if humility keeps pace with their development, be heard from later on.

I don't want to forget the handwork of the children. It was on display at the last and was very well done, indeed. Again, we were reminded that there were in our midst those gifted in teaching the young, some "born kindergartners" or else some trained ones, or most likely both.

I think everyone wanted to help, for are we not all "laborers together," working to train ourselves until we can put on a "demonstration of the applied gospel of Jesus Christ" that will save ourselves and leave the world without excuse? And so we are profited by drawing aside from the world and our usual occupations, and drill and learn as a part of the army of the Lord.

A good deal of experience may be obtained by learning to live together for even ten days. And like the raw recruits in army life anywhere, it takes practice to enable a body of soldiers to move as one man, to heed the proper signals, and obey the proper authority. It is not accomplished at the first or second attempt; but it can be done. The climb may be pretty steep yet before us, but we still want to go on and up.

I have not mentioned all that rendered special help. But this letter is growing long. The prayer meetings were unusually good and the gifts manifested were of considerable comfort to a large number. The gift of tongues and interpretation as given through Brother Hopkins was a new experience to some and was very impressive. A vision of the missionary work of the church in which an open vision of the places to be visited as well as the gift of prophecy describing this work was given through another. And still many more, some of which I did not hear.

These meetings, both the last Saturday and Sunday mornings, were extended to well-nigh double the appointed time, occupied continuously. So many earnest, the humble testimonies of blessings received and of desires to be clean and pure before God, and over all the brooding Spirit of the heavenly Father. Nothing to detract or mar. Only the wooded hillsides to meet our gaze, and a people that seemed to be of one heart and of one mind.

Ah, yes, the Kewanee District has entered in the charge side of her account another blessing from God. He blessed his people; they received spiritual food and drink from on high and are grateful.

And so we thank God for the reunions. May he give special grace and favor to reunion committees everywhere.

MARY E. GILLIN.

Kirtland Reunion

Represents a large territory and develops great spiritual fervor.

Kirtland is a sacred place to all Latter Day Saints, which makes it an ideal place to hold the annual reunion of the seven districts close to Kirtland. It is attended by Saints from various parts of the United States and Canada. Some attended this year from California. It is a common thing for families to drive five hundred and a thousand miles. The attendance this year was thought to be the largest of all reunions. It was estimated that one thousand were on the grounds the last day. A large auditorium has been erected under the supervision of Bishop J. A. Becker, by the branch and reunion committee, at a cost of about twelve thousand dollars. It is used as a dining hall during reunion and by the Kirtland Branch for various purposes the remainder of the year. This is a very fine building just opposite the Temple and adds much to the beauty and grandeur of the place. The Saints and neighbors residing in Kirtland opened their homes at a very nominal cost to help accommodate the reunion attendance.

Plans are already laid to make the coming reunion a greater success. A new and enthusiastic committee was elected, composed of Francis J. Ebeling, Robert Winship, Robert Miller, John Booker, George Neville. They expect to handle the coming reunion under a different system.

The spiritual condition of the reunion was excellent; so spoken of by all. The young people's meetings in charge of Elder John Martin were the outstanding feature of the reunion if the writer is any judge, and are the hope of the church. Several times they congregated in front of the Temple at 7.45 in the morning, and then about three hundred of them marched to F. J. Ebeling's grove, where they were surrounded by nature on every side. The Lord manifested through the gifts that he was well pleased with their efforts for good.

About two hundred of the priesthood were in attendance. G. T. Griffiths and J. A. Gillen, of the Twelve; L. G. Holloway, Leon Burdick, J. C. McConaughy, Cecil Neville, George Robley, Glaud R. Kuykendall, C. W. Clark, F. J. Ebeling, James E. Bishop, A. E. Stone, John Martin, and others were the speakers. There was good liberty and they preached good gospel sermons. Brother Gillen was the principal speaker and all his sermons were soul-inspiring. His deep spiritual reverence for the work greatly impressed all who heard him. Prescott Foo, a Chinese, of Graceland College, was also one of the speakers and institute lecturers. His sermons were interesting and liked by all. He made a good impression with the Saints for Graceland College. His home is in Hawaii.

All departments seemed to be well taken care of, as no criticism of any notice came to those in charge of the reunion.

A play was put on one evening in the new auditorium by the Mizpah Class and Club of Cleo, "An old-fashioned mother." Sister Cordelia McCormick acted the part of the old-fashioned mother. This was so well attended and liked so well by all and carried with it such a good moral that the reunion committee has arranged to put it on next year to help defray the auditorium debt.

Brother Richard Oberly, of Cleveland, did the cooking this year, and his excellent taste took so well that he is to be the chef next year.

The last social service on Sunday, held in the forenoon, in charge of the apostles, was said by many to be the most spiritual meeting held at Kirtland in recent years; thought by some to be equal to the priesthood meeting held at the last General Conference. About seventy testimonies were given, besides many gifts. One brother spoke by the spirit of prophecy to the effect that Frederick M. Smith was a chosen vessel in the sight of God to perform a great work, and that it (his work) was acceptable to him, and that he should have the support of the Saints. Brother Griffiths was also given words of encouragement. The following was given by the Spirit in great power through Sister Cordelia McCormick:

"Do you not know that Christ is here,
 Hovering above us everywhere,
 Urging us on to give, to give,
 For the one great cause that others might live;
 To give, to give, all give as one;
 The greatest gift is to give a son,
 A father, a brother, a husband indeed,
 But it's some mother's son who is sowing the seed
 Of Christ midst devils to clear them away
 That he in our image might come here to stay.
 Make room for him now; open up your heart.

Let selfishness within from your being depart.
 He gave his life, she her son,
 What is your sacrifice that this battle be won?
 If you can't give a son, give what you can,
 It's the spirit of giving that leads our band."

The spirit of giving ungrudgingly is the Spirit of Christ. May he come here to stay! The manner in which this was given was very impressive to all.

At the close of the reunion a party went to Niagara Falls, then to Toronto and visited the Latter Day Saints church and also the Church of the Brethren, organized by R. C. Evans. The latter made the few onlookers feel sad to think a people had been converted to worship a man and overlook the gospel of Christ. The Hill Cumorah was also visited, and prayer was offered on its top. The Joseph Smith farm was visited at Palmyra, which included the sacred grove where Young Joseph went to inquire of the Lord, and God and Christ appeared to him and told him to join none of the churches. The stream of water where some of the first baptisms were performed was visited. We also visited the room in which the Book of Mormon was translated and the room where the angel Moroni appeared, and many other places of interest. L. G. Holloway, of Lamoni, Iowa; J. D. Shower, of Independence, Missouri; G. J. Kuykendall, wife and daughter, of Ashland, Kentucky; Boyd Williams, wife and daughter; Brother Zeshang, wife and son, from Columbus, Ohio, made the trip in machines and felt it was time well spent.

Northern Saskatchewan

Though surrounded by drouth-stricken areas, the crops of the Saints seem abundant.

Having just returned from two weeks spent among the Saints of northern Saskatchewan, visiting five branches in all, journeying by rail, by motor, and sometimes jolting over the prairie behind our four-footed standbys, I felt I would like to write you a little of what we are doing, or trying to do, in our district.

We went by train west to the Senlac Branch, and a hundred miles or more the wheat was practically ruined by the drouth. By the way, we could not help but notice that in each of the five branches the crops looked excellent, although in vast areas between they were dried out. This may in part of course be owing to the fact that most of our branches are located in the more wooded areas.

While at Senlac we were entertained by Brother and Sister Irvin Rowe, who both showed us every kindness and enabled us to accomplish a great deal in a short time. On the afternoon of the day after we arrived, a local was organized and arrangements made to begin on the following week the study of "child care." As there was a prayer meeting to be held that evening in the Artland Branch, Brother Rowe took me over in his car. Brother W. J. Cornish, president of the branch, showed us every consideration, and before evening was over we had organized there, "Child care" being the subject chosen there also.

The next afternoon we started for the two-day meeting at Battleford by car. There were five adults in our little Ford, two children, three suit cases, numerous quilts, and eatables galore, with a distance of seventy-five miles at least to travel, but we had a delightful trip. There was a splendid spirit throughout the entire period, and the various speakers were greatly blessed.

Elders Cornish, Tomlinson, and Beckman addressed the Saints, and each with exceptional power. The members of Battleford were prepared to entertain two or three hundred and were at first disappointed that so few outside Saints arrived. However, before the meetings closed they expressed themselves as well satisfied with results, and amply repaid for their sacrifices. We were allotted Saturday afternoon for organization work and a splendid local is the result. The sisters decided to study "Child care," which seems to be the favorite study.

We left Battleford, motoring to Saskatoon, and feeling that we had been richly repaid for our efforts, receiving a great spiritual blessing which we shall carry with us for many days.

Two weeks after, the meetings were* scheduled for the Minnesota Branch. We went by train a few days earlier, as the Saint John Ambulance Association had requested that we demonstrate bandaging to our local nursing class there. We met with the sisters in their regular meeting Thursday, and great interest was shown in the demonstration.

Also on Saturday afternoon, we gave another demonstration assisted by Sister Mildred Whiting, who has obtained both certificates for First Aid and Home Nursing, and wears the uniform of the association.

Brother Pycock, missionary supervisor for Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, was present at the reunion and gave us several most inspiring sermons. Brother Birch Whiting also delivered a splendid address. On Sunday the building was crowded and many were unable to enter. Altogether we enjoyed a genuine treat and felt greatly blessed. While at Vanscoy we were guests of Brother and Sister C. O. Ferrie, whose kindly hospitality we greatly appreciate. Every effort was made by them to assist us in our work. Indeed, during our visits to all five branches, the Saints and officers gave us every possible assistance and cooperated throughout.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Brother Pycock was scheduled to preach near Delisle. The sisters there wished to organize a local, so Sister Ferrie drove us over in her car. After the sermon we organized a local. The members decided to secure the services of the local doctor who is lecturing to the local in the Minnesota Branch, and to take a course in home nursing. The evening following, a business meeting was held after the sermon and a branch organized with Brother Frederick Scott as president.

The day after our return to Saskatoon, Brother Pycock addressed about forty Saints at Brother Whiting's home here in the city. When last we heard of him he was among the Battleford Saints.

Well, this is rather a long-drawn-out epistle, but North Saskatchewan is so seldom mentioned in your pages that perhaps you will pardon its lengthiness this time.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. LOTTIE CLARKE DIGGLE.

Central Oklahoma Reunion

The Central Oklahoma reunion closed August 13, the most successful reunion held in the district, speaking relative to general conditions. There were forty family tents and one camp of Orioles from Terlton, Oklahoma; one Boy Scout tent from Sperry, Oklahoma; one tent for little folks and other meetings; and the tabernacle tent. The reunion grounds are in a beautiful grove. Recreational activity consisted of volley ball, croquet, hikes, and swimming. There was a good representative of young people. The meetings were well attended, especially at night. Several times it was estimated that a thousand attended. The visiting cars at night were numbered as many as 130 and 140. At the reunion business meeting a strong sentiment for a permanent reunion ground prevailed. The church conference convened on August 8. The district officers were sustained. The Sunday school, Women's Department, and Oriole meetings were well represented. The young people's prayer meetings were successful. The highest number of testimonies was forty. The special programs put on by the young people were greatly enjoyed. We hope to have our next reunion even better than this one, as we are becoming more organized in the different departments and are getting more experience.

Your colaborer,
MRS. PEARL GREENWOOD.

Central Michigan Reunion

A successful reunion because everybody worked for months to make it so. "Free meals" were made free by raising much of the food in home gardens.

The young people's reunion held at Pinconning on the Bay in Hazelwood Grove closed August 20 and was attended by Saints from different parts of the State, also some from Ontario and Ohio. It was their first reunion and was pronounced a success, both financially and spiritually.

The committee in charge performed excellent service. They were Otto Bartlett, president; Mildred Mitchel, secretary; Grace Dorn, treasurer; G. W. Burt, Matthew Umphrey, Will Methner, and Charles Wode.

Meals were served cafeteria style and the plan worked splendidly. All meals were free. To the cooks and their helpers is due praise for the excellent service they rendered in their line of work.

Scouts, Temple Builders, and Orioles, with their leaders, cooperated to make the recreational features a success, as well as the young people's prayer services, which were freighted with blessings from heaven.

Preaching was such as to be remembered. The following brethren occupied the pulpit: Patriarch John Shields, Glaude R. Kuykendall, Ernest Burt, William Fligg, Apostle G. T. Griffiths, B. H. Doty, and J. R. Grice; each in his own way telling the people how to better their lives and to further the cause of Zion.

Social services were truly pentecostal showers and God comforted and strengthened his people by speaking to them in several gifts of tongues and prophecies.

Brother Max Carmichael was present the last Sunday and gave a rousing sermon on how to teach the boys and girls.

Inspiring music by the orchestra in charge of Elder B. H. Doty was rendered. A musical on Friday evening was attended by a full tent with many cars outside. Greater activities and achievements are planned for another year at the reunion.

MRS. CLARA E. NICHOLS.

Kansas City Stake

Silence is not always indicative of inactivity. This is true of the Kansas City Stake. Even during the extreme hot weather, few regular meetings were annulled; very few went on vacations. So, though heard from less frequently, the local force has been on the job continually. What would we do without the local force, who do a multitude of things never chronicled by us, yet of utmost importance? Subject to call without notice, as thousands of roses have bloomed unseen, yet they have fulfilled the mission intended by an all-wise Creator. So the local force in their work may not receive mention for all they do, yet they are assured that not one act will be lost sight of by their heavenly Father when the day of accounts comes.

Bishop Blair has commenced work on Grandview Church. The basement walls already are being built, and as it is desired to finish the building before cold weather sets in, all are urged to do their utmost to that end. The fact that the project is under way should be an inspiration to all to maximum effort.

The picnic Labor Day, at Swope Park, was attended by about one thousand of the Saints, and as values go, the chief asset was the "get together" feature. The matter of rubbing elbows around the immense spread of good eats smacked of real Saintly fellowship. There were many reacquaintances and some new ones made. Wit, good humor, and innocent fun just bubbled over; that's all. Contests, games, races, etc., followed the repast. A trophy, a loving cup, was given the congregation winning the most points, Chelsea being the lucky one. All concerned in the affair agree that it was a grand success and should be repeated often.

East Argentine had one baptism and Fourth Kansas City six recently.

President Tanner and family have returned from their short but much-needed vacation.

Independence

As the time for General Conference approaches, the spirit of preparation pervades the air, and the pulse of the community seems to quicken a little at the thought of the impressive services to come. The ground for the big tent is being cleared and will be covered with a layer of sawdust or shavings. The place is just a short distance south of the Temple Lot and will be convenient of access to all.

The choir is having regular and strenuous rehearsals for the conference time. Over a hundred are participating in the Stone Church Choir at present, and when this number is augmented by the incoming members it should be an impressive aggregation indeed.

The Stone Church Sunday School is planning to hold sessions of the school at the usual 9.30 hour during conference, with some special arrangements for large classes led by some of the leading church workers.

President F. M. Smith, recently back from the East, met with the choir Sunday afternoon and complimented them on the excellent response they were making to the demands of the occasion and portrayed his mental vision of the time when within the next few weeks perhaps ten thousand Saints could unite in a grand ensemble presentation of singing the songs of Zion.

At the evening service the Stone Church brass band functioned for the first time indoors and with good effect. It is a well-balanced aggregation and under fine direction, with Roy Turner in charge. The newly-acquired Sousaphone is an excellent addition. This large instrument of the bass section has a pleasing personality of its own, and in obbligato parts comes out with a distinctive throaty range not to be had in any ordinary instrument in this section. It is interesting to note that there is but one saxophone in the band—whether from design or not we do not know.

The fine weather encouraged large crowds to attend church Sunday. The church was filled morning and evening with Apostles T. W. Williams and J. F. Curtis as speakers at the two services, respectively.

The radio sermon was by Elder J. F. Curtis, with vocal selections by Blanche Allen Needham, Lilly Belle Allen, and Eugene Christy. Next Sunday Elder T. W. Williams will be the speaker at 2 p. m. Tune in at 360 meters. The radio company has been getting some very interesting and commendatory reports from these programs. Good bulb receiving sets ought to pick up these programs as far as fifteen hundred miles with ease. There will no doubt be a number of the conference sermons and musical numbers broadcasted. Plans are being made to that end.

The business office of the Herald Publishing House is receiving many subscriptions to the Conference Daily and ask us to say in this column that early subscriptions are appreciated, so the lists may largely be out of the way. Otherwise the office force is swamped in attending to the personal orders brought in by those attending the conference. Many of those who attend the sessions subscribe, so they may keep in touch with the meetings they cannot attend, and to have a record of all important business matters.

The building of the Walnut Park church has been held up pending further consideration of architectural plans.

Elder J. C. Foss, a veteran missionary, has been confined to his bed for some time with indigestion. He is quite weak in body, suffering annoyance constantly from shaking palsy, but is strong in the faith and bears a cheering testimony.

After about a month's absence, Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor of Zion, has returned from attending the reunion of the Kewanee District and a series of rally meetings at various points within the district. During the reunion such a fine spirit of spiritual consecration was developed that the branch presidents insisted he visit them and help make it permanent. As a result, special meetings were held for the Tri-Cities, Rock Island, Davenport, and Moline; even Clinton dispensed with its services and attended. Prayer and sacrament services were attended and sermons preached, with round table discussions. At Joy similar meetings were held for near-by branches. At Dahinda it was repeated, and some time was spent in Kewanee. Altogether he spent fourteen days in the district in this sort of work, preaching eighteen times, presiding over many prayer meetings and four round table discussions. He spent a week at Princeville where his mother lives. Brother Hopkins reports the Kewanee reunion one of the best and most spiritual he ever attended and that the effects are being felt in the branches in a distinctive way. Everything was furnished free to all. Tents, cots, board, lodging, were without charge, and everybody invited to attend. There was no public campaign for funds, yet all expenses were paid by private subscription.

The Society of American Indians will hold its annual convention in Kansas City November 9 to 14. Brother William Madison, of this city, is publicity manager.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending September 16: Master Billie Chappell, Mount Washington, Missouri; Mrs. Ina Lay, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Irene Ferrazas, Cement City, Missouri; Miss Myrtle Sellers, Wakeeney, Kansas; R. Y. Johnson, Lees Summit, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. A. R. Hurst, Doctor John R. Green, Gracie May Golden, Mrs. H. H. Wait, Juanita Lane, J. C. Foss, and Mrs. B. L. McKim and Baby McKim. X-ray patients: John Fieldhahn, Levasy, Missouri; Earlene O'Flaherty, Little Blue, Missouri; Mrs. Irene Ferrazas, Cement City, Missouri; Mrs. M. G. Landis, Kansas City, Missouri; and Goldie Grayer, L. H. Davis, Mrs. H. H. Wait, Mrs. H. G. Williams, J. S. Kelley, all of Independence.

Newman M. Wilson writes the Presidency from Vinalhaven, Maine, that he is closing his services August 16, at Sargentville. He had preached twenty-one sermons; baptized twelve, nine of them being heads of families, with others near the kingdom. He was called away to preach a military funeral sermon in Vinalhaven, the first time such an opportunity was granted one of our ministers in that place.

Seattle, Washington

Sunday was a happy day for the Everett Saints as they realized what they have long waited and labored for, the opening of their neat, new church building, which was formally opened by special services. The opening sermon by the writer was followed by a community dinner at which the Saints pooled their viands at the home of Brother and Sister Wheat. Over sixty partook of the abundant repast. All indicated a spirit of peace and unity which if continued will hasten the day of dedication.

Brother Stearns has done a good work and has been aided by Brother Bert Nichols, and now that Brother G. R. Brundage has located there, it will add to the working force. They voted unanimously favoring and asking for the organization of a branch at that place.

Our reunion surpassed the most sanguine expectations in point of attendance and spiritual uplift. Brethren T. C. Kelley, J. W. Rushton, and F. M. McDowell gave much inspiration and life to the occasion. The next reunion will be at Everett.

Brother Joseph Meyer, of Holdenville, Oklahoma, being here on a visit, kindly consented to occupy the pulpit on Sunday morning. He was a playmate of our son in Nebraska City, Nebraska, when a boy. He is now a prominent lawyer in his home city.

At this writing Brother John Hartnell is very low in sickness at his home in Sumas. His brothers and dear ones are at his home. Brother Hartnell enjoyed universal friendship throughout the district and to the extent of his acquaintance.

Five were baptized during the reunion, Brethren T. C. Kelley, F. M. McDowell, and S. P. Cox being the officiating officers. There was also one ordination.

In all probability this will be our last communication from this northwestern corner, as very soon we expect to end our eight years' service here and twenty years on the coast, by returning to Zion, where we hope to continue to labor for the bettering of mankind. We regret the circumstances which have brought about the necessity of parting from very dear friends, as we find in the dear Saints on the coast, but such is the case. To our readers we say farewell till you hear our echo from Zion.

In loving gospel bonds,

J. M. TERRY.

Three-Day Institute at Wichita, Kansas

An institute of Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department convened at Wichita, August 18, beginning Friday evening with a literary program.

Saturday morning at 7.30, a priesthood meeting was held, with Brother R. J. Wildey, of Hutchinson, Kansas, in charge, topic of discussion, "Call to service." There was a young people's prayer meeting at 8.30 a. m., in charge of Sanders and Metlan.

Institute work began at 10 a. m., with Brother R. J. Wildey in charge. He gave a short lecture on methods of interesting the young people in activities of prayer meeting, after which the following papers were read: "Qualifications of a teacher," Sister Myrtle Field, Wichita; "The necessities in primary work," Sister Esther Nelson, Wichita; "The results derived from unity in church work," Sister Dian, Wichita; and "Coordination as practiced by the church," E. D. Moore, Independence, Missouri. These different papers were discussed and the important points brought out.

The afternoon service was in charge of Sister Kate Brockway, of Wichita, superintendent of Women's Department. The following papers were read: "The ideal Sunday school compared with the ordinary," Sister Bozarth, Wichita; "Child training," Sister Wildey, Hutchinson; "How to hold the boy and girl in Sunday school," Brother Kemp, Wichita; and "The government of young people," Sister Bertha Kanady, Wichita. Many important things were brought out in the different papers. A cradle roll demonstration was given by Sisters Wolfe and Dace.

Sermon in the evening by Brother R. J. Wildey.

On Sunday there was a sunrise prayer meeting in charge of Brethren Wilson and Bidwell, assisted by Brother Wildey; and at 7.30 a. m., priesthood meeting in charge of Brother Wooten. After the priesthood meeting, two children were conducted into the fold and kingdom of God, Brother Wildey performing the sacred ordinance. Sunday school was at 9 o'clock in charge of the local officers. A very interesting time was had, with one hundred and thirteen present. The children rendered a very pretty song service as entertainment for visiting members.

Sacramental services were held at 10.30 in charge of Brethren Wildey and Wooten. The Saints were especially blessed at this meeting, the Lord speaking through his servant, Brother Wildey, in prophecy to the priesthood and Saints in general.

Basket dinner was served at twelve o'clock at the church. In the afternoon the services were in charge of Sister Brockway. There was a solo by Sister Grace Vickrey, of Arkansas City, a lecture on "The duties of the woman citizen," by Mrs. Fred Hinkel, another on "Feeding the family," by Miss Grace Wilkie. In the evening there was an hour of special music, followed by a sermon from Brother Wildey.

ETHEL MADDEN, Clerk.

Off for Australia

Wife and I are planning to leave for Australia on September 8. Our Australian address will be: Cowell Street, Gladesville, Sydney, Australia. This address will be permanent. Mail sent there any time will reach us. Would be pleased to hear from special friends or from Saints who may have relatives or friends over there they would like for us to visit. Indeed, I would like to get as many addresses of nonmembers as possible. Will remain over there quite a while, hence desire as much material to assist in my work as it is possible to get. I was over there before eleven years, and while I think I shall come back to attend some General Conferences, yet, as a missionary, my stay there will be indefinite.

A. C. BARMORE.

[Elder Barmore is appointed as a missionary to New South Wales.—EDITORS.]

Two-Day Meeting at Bisbee

The two-day meeting held in the Bisbee, Arizona, Branch September 3 and 4 was one of the most spiritual meetings ever experienced by the Saints in Arizona. The Spirit was present at all the meetings, and rested on the people in power at different times. The spirit of prophecy was present upon two or three occasions, both by way of encouragement and admonition. The Saints rejoiced together and were sorry to have to part at the close of the services. We hope to see more of such meetings for the Saints of Arizona and New Mexico.

E. R. DAVIS.

Next week we will have some more excellent news letters from the reunions—a good response to our request for such items. It has been a wonderful reunion season.

MISCELLANEOUS

Comparative Statement of BUDGET APPROPRIATIONS FOR 1921-22 AND ACTUAL EXPENDITURES for year ended June 30, 1922

Items of Expense	Tentative Budget for Expenditures Year 1921-22	Actual for Year	Balance of Budget Ap- propriation
Administration Expense
Presidency Office	$ 7,000.00	$ 7,829.59	$ 829.59
Bishopric	25,000.00	21,675.57	3,324.43
Quorum of Twelve	1,660.00	1,786.65	126.65
Publicity Department	8,000.00	3,847.76	4,152.24
Statistician	4,644.00	4,716.63	72.63
Auditor	1,600.00	1,964.67	364.67
Architect	2,000.00	1,918.96	81.04
Historian	3,218.00	2,729.20	488.80
Patriarch	600.00	78.54	521.46
Health Department	500.00	535.60	35.60
Music Department	500.00	50.00	450.00
Women's Department	None	*1,586.05	1,586.05
Church Secretary	170.00	105.00	65.00
Librarian	100.00	None	100.00
General Office	4,500.00	4,633.73	133.73
General Church	3,000.00	4,408.13	1,408.13
Total	$ 62,492.00	$ 57,916.13	$ 4,575.87
Stake Expense
Independence	$ 4,020.00	$ 6,099.67	$ 2,079.67
Kansas City	3,000.00	3,233.06	233.06
Lamoni	3,685.00	3,673.51	11.49
Holden	950.00	1,297.52	347.52
Far West	1,733.00	1,272.68	460.32
Total	$ 13,388.00	$ 15,576.44	$ 2,188.44
Ministerial Expenses and Aid
Family Allowances	$257,288.00	$247,277.29	$ 10,010.71
Elders' Expense	40,000.00	62,491.72	22,491.72
Aid Extended	30,000.00	23,509.34	1,490.66
Total	$327,288.00	$338,278.35	$ 10,990.35
Institutional Exp. and Additions
Graceland College Administr.	$ 20,000.00	$ 23,511.40	$ 3,511.40
Religious Education Class	None	*7,938.54	7,938.54
Holden Home	10,000.00	9,761.12	238.88
Saints' and Liberty Homes	15,000.00	3,469.75	6,530.25
Children's Home	11,000.00	4,700.00	6,300.00
Sanitarium	21,130.00	5,047.65	16,082.35
Total	$ 77,130.00	$ 59,428.46	$ 17,701.54
Grand Total	$480,298.00	$471,199.33	$ 9,098.62

Figures in black represent budget items overdrawn.

*Expenditures not budgeted.

This does not include offerings received by missionaries in the field.

†$3,159.90 of this item is the College Day collection which was forwarded to Graceland by Presiding Bishop and which when deducted would show $351.50 over the budget.

The family allotments for heads of the following departments are charged to their respective departments and included in the above administrative expenses: Publicity, Statistical, Auditor, Architect, Historian, and Women's Department. In the budget statement for part of the fiscal year, appearing for June 28, the amounts paid to families were not included in the budgets of the Historian and Statistical departments.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Do You Want to Help?

Are you interested in The Literary Digest? If you are a subscriber to The Literary Digest, let us send in your renewal. If you are not now taking this valuable magazine, but feel that you need a first-class magazine, giving weekly an interesting and dependable digest of the current news and well-written articles on topics of interest, let us send in your subscription.

The price in the United States is $4 a year, and in Canada, $4.85. We are allowed a liberal commission on all subscriptions sent in, either new or renewal. You can aid the publishing house by sending subscriptions to us and it will not cost you a cent more.

We also handle subscriptions to all standard magazines and can usually meet legitimate club offers.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
Manager Herald Publishing House.

Important Notice to Conference Delegates

Be sure to get a certificate when purchasing railroad tickets to General Conference, so you may be assured of getting return fare privilege for half price. (See HERALD of August 9 for particulars.)

Notice to Delegates From Chicago and East

Arrangements have been completed for a special chair car and a separate tourist sleeper for delegates coming from or through Chicago. This party will leave Chicago by the Chicago, Milwaukee & Saint Paul Railroad at 6 o'clock Saturday evening, September 30, and will arrive in Independence, Sunday morning, October 1, arrangements being made to bring them to Independence by motor. Delegates who wish to join this party should notify Ward L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, or Mr. B. J. Schilling, Room 620, Marquette Building (140 South Dearborn Street), Chicago, Illinois, as to the time and road over which they will arrive in Chicago, where they will be met and conducted to the special equipment. Tickets should be purchased through via Chicago, Milwaukee & Saint Paul Railroad from Chicago to Kansas City. Do not neglect to get certificates when purchasing so that you can secure half fare on the return.

It is suggested that those coming from the East route over Nickel Plate from Buffalo or intermediate points to Chicago.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE, Transportation Manager.

Entertainment of Conference Delegates and Visitors

The reception committee for the General Conference has been appointed by the First Presidency. They are as follows: R. V. Hopkins, president; Arthur Allen, vice president; George A. Gould, R. T. Cooper, and John A. Gardner.

Rooms. The committee is arranging as far as possible for rooms for the visitors during conference at reasonable rates.

Tourists' Camp. A site about seven blocks from the conference tent has been reserved where those who wish to do so may park their cars and erect their tents free of charge. A tourist's oven for cooking is being built on these grounds and city water furnished. Cars may also be stored in local garages at regular rates.

Cafeteria. Meals will be served in the dining hall at the Stone Church on the cafeteria plan, at reasonable rates.

Young People. The committee has arranged for some special social activities especially for visiting young people. Sunday school and Religio superintendents, and leaders of young people of the church should advise us how many will attend from their localities.

Do You Expect to Be With Us? The amount of space available in Independence is limited, so if you are expecting to be here, write immediately to Arthur Allen, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, and reserve your room or camping space.

THE RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Conference Notices

On account of the General Conference convening in October, the regular October conference of the Little Sioux District has been postponed until November 10 and 11. At that time the district conference will be held at Moorhead, Iowa, and a good representation of the several branches is desired. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

The Bishopric

West Virginia.—On account of moving his place of residence from the district, we are in receipt of the resignation of Brother Frank L. Shinn as bishop's agent. Brother Shinn has served the district long and faithfully as a representative of this department and I know that the Saints will miss his devoted services.

We are gratified in being able to appoint as his successor, Brother Harry B. Smith, of Parkersburg, West Virginia, whose business training and consecration to the work of God fits him for this avenue of service.

I trust that the Saints of this district may be blessed in their temporal affairs and that God may put it into your hearts to sustain his work by the observance of the law of tithes and offerings. You may not go as missionaries to Germany, Switzerland, Holland, England, or the islands of the sea, but you can assist in sending others.

Brother Smith's appointment will become effective October 1.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

To the First Quorum of Seventy

Members of the First Quorum of Seventy will please make report to me of all ministerial labor performed since last report to General Conference over two years ago, or from March 1, 1920, to September 1, 1922, that a proper report may be made to our coming conference. These reports are to be made on the regular report blanks, and should contain your latest permanent address, and all matters of interest to the Quorum.

If any are not coming to General Conference they should send their quorum dues to me with their report.

Respectfully, in gospel service,
S. S. SMITH, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Route 6, Box 78B.

Addresses

Elder S. S. Smith, Independence, Missouri, R. F. D. 6, Box 78B.

Requests for Prayers

Brother John Barr, of Whittetown, Michigan, requests prayers of the Saints that he may be enabled to overcome his many besetting sins and live nearer the perfect plan. He would like to correspond with young Saints.

Church Opening at Guelph

At Guelph, Ontario, September 24. The Saints will open their new church. K. Cooper, 11 Home Street, Guelph, Ontario.

Conference Minutes

NORTH DAKOTA.—Conference and Sunday school met under the coordinate plan at West Fargo, June 28, 1922, J. A. Gunsolley in the chair. The heads of the various departments reported. Thomas Leitch was elected district president with power to choose assistants. M. Rasmussen and Warren McElwain chosen. J. W. Darling elected secretary-treasurer. The district Religio field worker, librarian, women's field worker, and district chorister were sustained in their offices. M. Rasmussen was elected district Sunday school superintendent with power to choose assistant and secretary. Thomas Leitch chosen assistant superintendent and Lester Anderson secretary-treasurer. The district and Sunday school officers were authorized to provide for winter conference and institute. J. E. Wildermuth, Sister M. Rasmussen, Sister F. Hammell, and Lester Anderson, chosen delegates to General Conference, and M. Rasmussen, Thomas Leitch, Ferd Hammell, and William Sparling, alternates. The delegates were instructed to cast full vote of district, and in case of division majority and minority vote. It was decided to hold a joint reunion with the Minnesota District, either at Moorhead or Fargo, in 1923. The district officers and supervisor were chosen as reunion committee for 1923. Forty dollars of the Sunday school funds were ordered paid into the Christmas offering fund. J. W. Darling, secretary, Thorne, North Dakota.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—August 15, 1922, on reunion grounds at Centralia, Washington, District President J. M. Terry and T. C. Kelley presiding. Reports were read from all the district officers. The treasurer's showed $69.49 on hand by having received $148.62 and expended $79.63. Bishop's agent's showed a total receipt in tithes, offerings, auditorium fund, oblations, etc., of $1,891.52, with even disbursement. Branch statistics showed Seattle with 385 members; Roslyn, 23; Centralia, 187; Bellingham, 79; New Westminster, 43; Vancouver, British Columbia, 63; Chilliwack, 46; and nonresident, 60; making a total as reported, 891. This having the enrollment of disorganized branches; Tacoma, 46; Castle Rock, 26; and Nanaimo, 6; makes a grand total of 935, a net gain of 26 for the district. Six elders reported. Tent purchasing committee reported the new assembly tent, costing $276, paid for. Petitions were granted for the ordination of Albert T. Davis to the office of teacher; Monte A. Lassater, priest; and Ira Lade, deacon. Elder J. M. Terry was elected district president; George R. Brundage, vice president; F. W. Holman, secretary; Harold Premo, member library board; Melva Ward, chorister; H. A. Sprague, assistant chorister; F. W. Holman, member auditing board, three-year term; Hugh A. Sprague, sustained as treasurer and bishop's agent. Everett was designated as the place for holding next year's reunion and Seattle for the February conference. District officers were elected as reunion committee and empowered to select all needed assistants. Brethren J. W. Rushton, T. C. Kelley, and Floyd M. McDowell, of the traveling ministry, were in attendance at the reunion, and gave us much valuable instruction. Frederick W. Holman, secretary of conference and reunion, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

CLINTON.—At Butler, Missouri, June 9 to 11, 1922, with the district presidency, Edward Rannie and A. C. Silvers in charge. Election of officers resulted in the selection of H. E. Moler as president, with power to choose vice president. Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary; and H. Ross Hig-

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
General Conference Program		875
For the Conference		876
The Crescent and the Cross		877
Conference Meeting of Bishop's Agents and Solicitors		878
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
What We Can Do for the Conference, by Oliver Turnbull		879
PASTORAL:
The Preacher and His Sermon, by E. D. Moore		880
HYMNS AND POEMS		881
Gertrude Sessions—Richard J. Lambert.
THE FORUM:
Thirteen Questions on Stewardship, by James E. Yates		882
Wanted: A Change of Attitude, by O. L. Weaver		883
What's Wrong With Us? by Edward Rannie		884
We Must First Get Out of Babylon, by A. M. Baker		886
WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT		887
M. E. Presnell—Mrs. W. E. Gittens—Dora Young.
LETTERS AND NEWS		889
J. L. Gunsolley—J. H. N. Jones—Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger— Mary E. Gillin—Mrs. Lottie Clarke Diggle—Mrs. Pearl Green- wood—Mrs. Clara E. Nichols—J. M. Terry—Ethel Madden— A. C. Barmore—E. R. Davis.
MISCELLANEOUS		896

don, treasurer. Delegates to General Conference: Mrs. O. E. Gough, Lucy Silvers, Emma Keck, Mina Kearney, J. W. Higgins, Ralph Murock, Mabel Braden. Alternates: A. C. Dempsey, Mrs. J. A. Marsteller, Dollie Masterson, Mrs. J. T. Higdon, C. W. Keck, Albert Rhodes, Mrs. F. A. Hawley. A vote of thanks was extended to Brother Rannie, retiring district president. It was voted to hold the next conference at Veve, November 3 to 5, 1922. Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary.

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—Devotional exercises were not held on Sunday August 20, as has been the regular custom, but on account of extreme hot weather and vacation period it was thought best to annul services for the day. Conference met on Monday evening, August 21, for business. The presidency reported things moving along in good order. Bishop reported: Cash on hand, April 1, $2,001.07; received since, $12,898.87; expenditures, $14,864.34; balance, $35.60. High council recommended the ordination of Leroy Prichard and Thomas B. Dunn to the office of priest, and William Oxendale as teacher, which was ratified by the conference. A recommendation from the stake presidency to make September a sacrifice and self-denial month in connection with the Grandview church building was adopted. Following General Conference delegates and alternates were elected: delegates; J. A. Tanner, Maude Gunsolley, Sister J. F. Frazier, Sister E. H. Lungwitz, Sister Fred B. Blair, Sister Lena Oxendale, Sister Cora Schnur, Blanche Tucker, J. Fred Cleveland, Abe W. Sears, Lula Sandy, Harvey Sandy, Phoebe Tucker, Sister E. W. Lloyd, Bessie Largent, Sister Charles Scrivener, Hugh W. Gould, Seth S. Sandy, Elizabeth Evans, Sister J. O. Worden, Margaret Cleveland, Sister D. J. Kennedy, Mary Grace Marmoy, Sister J. A. Tanner, Alice Baker, Joseph Curtis, Roy E. Browne, J. H. McVey, Sarah Hawkins, and Edith Burgoon. Alternates; Thomas B. Dunn, Zowa Fox, John Gross, Sister J. W. Wickham, Brother E. S. Losey, J. W. Gunsolley, John Tucker, F. P. Hitchcock, Margaret Ferguson, Edith Raw, Albert Hallier, Sister C. D. Jellings, Eugene Blacksmith, Sister J. H. Paxton, Robert Winning, Sister E. N. Palmer, Sister J. W. Walburn, Sister Myrtle Walmsley, Sister A. V. Trego.

Our Departed Ones

HARTNELL.—John Hartnell was born at Cornwall, England, June 11, 1854. Baptized January 3, 1873. Ordained to the office of priest, June 3, 1873, and to the office of elder, February 14, 1915. After a lingering illness, died at his home in Sumas, Washington, August 27, 1922. Leaves wife, two daughters, one son, three brothers, and two sisters. At his request the funeral sermon was by J. M. Terry.

WALLIS.—Louis Charles Wallis was born in Fort Mead, South Dakota, May 3, 1903. In 1918 went from Independence to Wyoming. Died in train accident near Wheatland, Wyoming, August 26, and body brought to Independence for burial. Present at funeral were his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Rumsey, his brother Lawrence, two sisters of Independence, and many friends. Funeral from Carson Undertaking Parlors, with service in charge of E. L. Kelley. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MILES.—Maria Griffiths was born April 4, 1857, at Pendarsen, Merthyr, Tydfil, Wales. Came with her parents to Seranton, Pennsylvania, when twelve years of age. Married Jacob Miles August 24, 1875. Located at Lucas, Iowa, in 1879, and has lived in other communities since. Died at Colfax, Iowa, September 5, 1922. Funeral services from Saints' church at Lucas, Iowa, in charge of E. B. Morgan and W. B. Farley. Interment at Lucas beside her husband, who died fifteen years ago. Eight of her twelve children survive. Her grandparents were among the first to accept the gospel in Wales in this dispensation.

STRACHAN.—Ann Sharp Strachan, born in Scotland, December 31, 1842, died September 3, 1922, of infirmities of old age, at her home in Youngstown, Ohio. Married the late David Strachan July 4, 1862. To this union were born thirteen children, ten of whom survive. Baptized near McKeesport, Pennsylvania, May 8, 1870. She has borne numerous testimonies of the evidences given to her of the divinity of this work. As well as being a devoted member of the church till her death, she was a woman of kindly disposition, possessed with those excellent womanly traits of true Christian virtue and whole-hearted solicitation of those about her. Funeral services at her late residence, Leon Burdick officiating. The body was borne to its resting place in Belmont Park Cemetery by six of her seven surviving sons.

The Saints at Grandview Branch, in Holden Stake, report four baptisms recently and two some time ago, with flourishing local conditions. They have reason to believe the baptisms resulted primarily from local activities and are hoping to maintain proper conditions so all their membership will feel inspired to push on to victory.

Why You Should Adopt a Child

Are you thinking of taking a child from the Children's Home? If so, have you been considering only your own enjoyment and comfort, the advantage it would be to you to have a child growing up in your home? Or have you been taking the deeper, more noble view of the matter, seeking seriously the needs of the child and how far you may be able to minister to him? The wise and faithful training of a child will bring its own reward, though as in all acceptable service, the good to be wrought is to be kept first in mind rather than the reward.

ZILPHA MONROE, Superintendent.

The New Religio Quarterlies

The Religio Quarterly for the senior grade, October, November, December, will be based on a study of a book by R. M. Fosdick, The Meaning of Service. It is a deeply inspirational book and the editors suggest that at least one copy for each class be obtained in order to make the study effective. Elder F. M. McDowell is editor, and associated with him is Leonard J. Lea, to whom credit is given for most of the work in preparing this series.

The lessons for the junior grade are based on the Book of Mormon, and are written by Vida E. Smith. They begin with "What about the Book of Mormon?" and extend chronologically to the death of Nephi. The author selects those incidents which seem most adaptable to children and puts the stories into convenient form so they may be read with profit by the pupils or taken by the teacher and made her own.

The senior grade is 10 cents a quarter, 30 cents a year, and the junior grade is 8 cents a quarter and 25 cents a year.

A Fine Record as Chief of Police

Mr. Harry E. French, chief of police in Columbus, Ohio, whose appointment to the position was mentioned at the time, about a year ago, has evidently more than "made good." A recent issue of The Police Journal, published in New York City, places his picture on the front cover and gives a great deal of space to the accomplishments of the department.

It is a notable fact that he from the first took the people into his confidence. He needed more men and better equipment. He explained those needs to the various clubs and organizations in the city, and as a result of his campaign various members of the chamber of commerce visited other cities and investigated the police departments.

Additions have already been made as a result of the publicity thus received, and a foundation laid for further growth and development that makes the future bright for the city's protective department. The matter of increased taxes for the work he proposes to do is not found objectionable, because the people know exactly what is planned and have become supporters rather than opposers. Twenty-nine large illustrations with the articles give the reader an understanding of the results attained and sought, with striking effect.

Mr. French is an active member of our church, holding the office of high priest.

New Book on Parliamentary Practice

There is in process of publication at this office now a new book on parliamentary usage, which is designed to be of universal application for all our church assemblies. It is hoped that it may be finished in time to be sold before General Conference. The style is considerably different from the old Book of Rules and the scope is more elaborate. Each paragraph is numbered and references are by paragraph numbers entirely. The style of the new book will be approximately as the former book which has been out of print for some time.

It will be recalled that several years ago a committee of seven was appointed to revise the Book of Rules, and included in the assignment was a revision of the church procedure features. The work was divided among the members of the committee, and a subcommittee composed of A. B. Phillips and H. O. Smith have completed their part and submitted it to the publishers. General Conference has indorsed the plan of having the parliamentary book printed separately, and when the church procedure work is done it will be printed separately. It is intended now to bind both together finally, for those who wish them in this form.

Remington
Portable
Typewriter

HAS every feature
common to the larger machines—all compacted in a case
only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Special terms to Missionaries
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, September 27, 1922

Number 39

EDITORIAL

Ask of God and It Shall Be Given

Who seeks in faith will find God, for we will find that for which we look with sufficient earnestness.

"Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." In Matthew 7 in the Inspired Version the purpose of this statement is made much more certain, as beginning with the 9th verse it shows that the command was to "Go ye into the world, saying unto all, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven has come nigh unto you. . . . Say unto them, Ask of God; ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For everyone that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and unto him that knocketh, it shall be opened."

This is certainly a remarkable promise and is the more so when taken in connection with the command which precedes it: "The mysteries of the kingdom ye shall keep within yourselves; for it is not meet to give that which is holy unto the dogs; neither cast ye your pearls unto swine, lest they trample them under their feet. For the world cannot receive that which ye, yourselves, are not able to bear; wherefore ye shall not give your pearls unto them, lest they turn again and rend you."

We are often confronted with the demand on the part of a nonbeliever for proof, yet any attempt to explain the beauties and the truth of the knowledge of God is met with cynicism, if not with ridicule. They are not open, mentally or otherwise, to receive. The command is, therefore, clear: "Say unto them, Ask of God; ask, and ye shall receive."

Perhaps this should be taken in connection with the first chapter of James which, while it is written to the church, yet makes the promise broad enough to include all mankind. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." This confirms the passage in the seventh chapter of Matthew.

But the epistle of James continues in the sixth and eighth verses: "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." The asking is not a mere matter of favorable request. It is not as Oliver Cowdery was told—a mere asking without taking thought. It must at least be with a firm desire to know the truth and a willing mind to accept it when found.

We Find That for Which We Seek

We note that this statement is followed by the similar promise: "Seek and ye shall find," and we know from experience that men do find that which they seek for. If they look for virtues in others, they find them. They not only find the virtue that is there resident, but by their confidence, by their looking for the good, they tend, from the law of action and reaction, to produce a virtuous reaction to their presence and so actually help to make people better. We do not realize sometimes how fully the attitude of others to us may be reflex, and almost as much of a reflex action as is the reflection of our countenance in the mirror.

Those who seek for evil, for mistakes and weakness in their brother, will find his mistakes and weaknesses, and they also tend to produce, by our attitude, an adverse or imperfect reaction. It may only take the form of diverting to the making of excuses energy which should be used affirmatively. It is likely also to tend to a reaction and less worthy attitude and action, if pursued sufficiently long.

The man who seeks gold persistently will find gold, for his mind is set for the sign while his eyes may be blind to the other signs of wealth for him.

So the man who seeks for God will find him, while the man who seeks for evil will find the demonstration of the power of evil in the world.

The young man in love with a young woman not only seeks her presence, but seeks her consent persistently, day after day and night after night. He may even be told, "No," and withdraw for a time, but he returns again and again if he is really in earnest, and thereby achieves that which he seeks and receives that which he asks for.

Often We Seek Indifferently

But men in seeking God think it sufficient to go through a few outward motions. "He knows where to find me." It is true that he does know where to find you, but it is also true that it is not his plan to force an entrance. The powers of evil would from the beginning have taken away from man his free agency, would have compelled men to be good. (Genesis 3:1-6, I. V.) A man who is compelled to be good is but little better than an automaton. Our heavenly Father seeks for those who choose righteousness because it is the best way, the way of love and truth. He seeks, not an image on a string to be moved when the string is pulled, but he seeks for the sons of God, for those who are able to choose the right with intelligence, to choose that right and have courage to pursue and maintain it. Hence is it written: "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." (Revelation 3:20.) If any man will hear that voice!
www.LatterDayTruth.org

What we hear depends often on what our ears are attuned to hear. We neglect the multiple sounds with which we are surrounded and attend to the one on which our interest is centered. He stands and knocks; he does not violate our sanctity, but if any man hears and opens the door he is ready to come and demonstrate himself to man, nay more, to "sup with him and he with me."

This would seem to answer at once the question whether this power belongs to a few men or to all, for the promise was made clear. "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find." It seems there could be no other conclusion, that if we do not find that we have not sought with sufficient earnestness and sincerity of purpose, we have not asked with sufficient desire and faith.

It is indeed a wonderful promise that the messengers of God and his Christ are sent to carry to a suffering world. "Ask of God; ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find." "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering, for he that wavereth is as a wave of the sea, drifting with the wind and tossed." "Behold I stand at the door, and knock; if any man will hear my voice and open the door, I will come in and sup with him and he with me."

S. A. B.

Historic Theories of the Atonement

A recent book which discusses critically the principal theories and explanations offered by Christian teachers of this great fact.

There has been a great deal of discussion from time to time on the question of the atonement of Jesus Christ. Some speakers and writers have set up a particularly gruesome and disagreeable spectacle and then have proceeded to ridicule and reject it, and in rejecting, reject the whole theory of the atonement and even call in question certain passages in the Bible. This is indeed unfortunate. We want truth and to know the truth.

One of the best books on the subject appeared in England last year under the title of Historic Theories of the Atonement. It was written by Robert Mackintosh, Professor of Apologetics in Lancashire College, and is now published in this country by the Doran Company. (Sold at this office at $1.60 post-paid.) The book gives a thorough and careful review of the atonement in Christian apologetics with a brief chapter on the Old Testament bases; another brief chapter discusses what Christ thought of his own death. This is followed by the teachings of the apostles, especially Paul; the views held in the Greek Catholic Church and in the Roman Catholic Church; also chapters discussing the various theories advanced and arguments made after the renaissance by both Protestants and Catholics.

A Careful Review of Atonement Theories

The book is quite a careful review of these various theories and the philosophical principles on which they were based, even though the discussion is much condensed in a historical sense. It explains and shows how many ideas now held are in fact not based on the statements either of Christ or of the apostles, but it infers strongly the necessity of the atonement of Jesus Christ, though not as a vicarious penal fact.

The book is not offered as a commentary on the Holy Scriptures. Its argument is not based alone on the various texts of scripture, and only some of the principal texts are referred to. It does sum up in the last chapter the writer's tentative concept of the significance of the atonement. It does take up the various theories of the necessity of sacrifice, of penance, of punishment, of substituted punishment, of redemption, of ransom, and in part of reconciliation, and analyses and criticizes.

As to the great theme of the necessity in human nature, the fact of the bloody sacrifices throughout the pagan world as well as the bloody sacrifices of the Jewish church, no discussion is offered. There is here a very interesting and important aspect of the question. The Inspired Version, Genesis 6:55,

The Journal of the American Medical Association states that there are still many theories concerning the nature of vitamins and that many irresponsible articles have been printed. There is still uncertainty concerning their exact nature as the result of the best research to-day. But research does demonstrate the value of a varied and balanced ration.

56, plainly declares: "And the Lord said unto Adam, Behold, I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden. Hence came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world."

Idea of Dying God Universally Held

The facts are that throughout the ancient world the idea of the dying God was quite universally held. The idea of spiritual brotherhood and blood brotherhood was also quite widely held. The bloody offerings of animals and even of human beings was widespread. This idea of propitiation for sin, though attacked in the Old Testament, and though contrary to the divine plan, was still quite widely accepted, and had, in part at least, its basis in the Jewish law of sin and trespass and other offerings. Because of this widespread idea, the Jews, when they rejected the gospel, were permitted to offer sacrifices as types, because of the existence of this ideal in the world.

The teaching of the Apostle Paul in the Hebrew letter was essential to put an end to these bloody sacrifices. It is significant to note how general has been the decrease and how nearly there has come to pass an ending of such bloody offerings since the crucifixion of Jesus.

Another factor worthy of consideration in the study of this subject is the condition of men in being separated from God and the necessity of his reconciliation with God. This Doctor Mackintosh discusses in part but declares that God must be reconciled to man as well as man to God. Even if we do not agree with his analysis on that point it is well to consider what he has to say.

This necessity is carried out in the early part of the Hebrew letter—that Christ was tempted and tried like us in all things; has descended beneath all things; he has even suffered the pangs of hell and has risen triumphant, in order that man may know that he became like man, took the part of humanity, suffered like men, and so has pointed out a way that a man can follow in being reconciled to God, since he knows our infirmities.

More Than Historical Statements

These factors, however, are not discussed by Doctor Mackintosh. He presents instead a historical statement of the various ideas held in the Christian era, with a brief introduction of the Old Testament preparation. He does not simply set forth these historic ideas, but discusses and criticizes them.

Therefore, it is a book of value to all those who are interested, especially to those who are making a study of this subject. We are confronted, in fact, to-day, not so much with the statements of the word of God, as with the construction and misconstruction which have been placed thereon.

Doctor Mackintosh does, however, give a remarkable critical review of the various theories and hypotheses which have been offered in explanation of this great fact of atonement. He even emphasizes the difference between facts, theories, and hypotheses, and that the failure of various theories does not change the basic fact of the atonement. He discusses in turn the value of merit, of satisfaction, the legalistic interpretation, and that of arbitrary standards; the necessity and value of atonement for justification and sanctification; atonement as a reconciliation, as redemption, as expiation, and as propitiation; its relation to the sacrament and to the idea of there being an excessive accumulation of merit, the value of forgiveness; and especially its value for the development of character. The theory that Christ died as a sample or example, the substitution of penance for repentance, the need of humanity, atonement as an expression of love and compassion, that the atonement consists not only of his death, but also of the life and death of Jesus are each in turn discussed.

Atonement Redeems Character

Finally he offers a tentative construction by way of suggestion, emphasizing that our failure to explain does not change the great fundamental fact of the life and death of Jesus and of his purpose for humanity. Atonement is presented as the presupposition of the redemption of human character. It is something more than human nature; it is more than the death of a great teacher on the cross. His suffering and righteousness delivers from bondage those who trust him, and helps them to conform to the will of God.

Love of God and love to men are not two different things externally tied together, but only diverse expression of the one fact. Atonement is the necessary and inevitable means for rescuing man's character; therefore the love of God chooses this means in spite of its immense cost, and God is supremely glorified in the redemption of man, not through penal justice, but through the manifestation of his divine love.

Christ gave us the right example, whether repentance belongs to him or not; the right human attitude towards the God of holiness which is required by the moral nature of things; and thus his great purpose is fulfilled.

God is not determined by law, but law is alive in him. Immutable righteousness also belongs to God; it is the self of his self, and heart of his heart, and soul of his soul. Right and wrong are not constituted by the divine fiat, but his will continually affirms both righteousness and love.

Dwelling in that true freedom eternally, we must come to dwell in it as his guests, no, rather as his sons. Hence Jesus, being God, follows the world means to this moral end even when these involve Gethsemane and Calvary.

A Liberal Giver

From the Bishop's office we are in receipt of an extract from a letter written by Elder J. E. Wildermuth, who is bishop's agent and missionary supervisor for North Dakota and Minnesota. He writes as follows:

"We are paying fifty dollars tithing this month, not because we have an excess, but because we want to help in this time of small income to the church.

"Yes, I hope we owe it, but we owe others, too, and this would have stopped some eight per cent interest for us, but we feel the Lord should be paid as promptly as other creditors."

One who knows Elder Wildermuth intimately has added that he has always done more than the law required, and as a result has been the means of greatly blessing many others and has acquired satisfaction to his soul not to be had otherwise.

This is a commendable example, showing a deep desire to honor the Lord by the full compliance with the financial law despite other pressing financial obligations.

Old Settlers' Day in Harrison County, Iowa

During our recent trip we were permitted for the first time to visit not only the Woodbine reunion, but also to note the principal points of interest in Harrison County and to attend the Old Settlers' Day at Magnolia, Iowa.

Magnolia was formerly the county seat, but the capital was later transferred to Logan, as Magnolia is not on a railroad. It was an interesting drive and an interesting experience, though the day was unusually hot.

The point of especial interest to remember is that that part of western Iowa was settled largely and first by members of the church. As a result we note that the morning speaker was Joseph Seddon; in the afternoon A. M. Chase and J. F. Mintun, while Alma M. Fyrando, also a speaker, has been the secretary of the Old Settlers' Day Association for twenty-one years and is generally credited with being the life and perpetrator of the association through its thirty or more years of existence.

Of this occasion we note that Elder Amos M. Chase is the son of Amos Chase, the third white set-tlar of Harrison County, Beside him on the stand sat his sister, Mrs. Charles Vredenburg, who was the second white child born in that county.

Elder Fyrando is so well recognized as a historical authority of Harrison County that he is frequently called upon at funerals to give the memorial address and was so called upon the day following Old Settlers' Day on behalf of one not a member of our church, but who had resided in Harrison County for fifty-seven years.

Good Enrollment at Graceland

Reports from the business manager state that the opening day at Graceland College brought the largest enrollment they have had for the first day, with many new students from east to west and north to south. Patroness Hall and the Farm House have been assigned to the boys; the new building, third floor, and Marietta Hall to the girls. Nearly all rooms have been filled and some have been placed with private families down town. The exact figures have not as yet been received.

Year Book of the Churches

Every ten years the United States Government has put out a book of religious statistics which is very valuable for consultation. The last one covered the year 1916. Another one is due after the year 1926.

On behalf of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, E. A. Watson has prepared a yearbook of the churches covering to the years 1921-1922. This includes a directory of the religious bodies with a summary of the history, doctrine, and polity; also religious statistics showing the number of churches, ministers, members, Sunday schools, Sunday school members, and total amount raised for all purposes by the different denominations. Much other religious information is also supplied, including a directory of the Federal Council and of the Interchurch, National and International organizations, of which there exists a considerable number for social service and other purposes.

For library use it would seem to be well worth the price of $1 for paper cover and $1.50 for the cloth edition.

"To be a poet is to have a soul so quick to discern that no shade of quality escapes it, and so quick to feel, that discernment is but a hand playing with finely-ordered variety on the chords of emotion—a soul in which knowledge passes instantaneously into feeling, and feeling flashes back as a new organ of knowledge. One may have that condition by fits only."—George Eliot.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Primitive Tribe Found

By T. W. Williams

Hitherto unknown tribe found in Amazon basin who seem to retain much of Inca civilization.

The Saint Louis Globe Democrat gives publicity to reports relative to the discovery of an hitherto unknown primitive people in South America who have not come into direct contact with civilization or Christianity. These people are thought to be descendants of the Indians who were once conquered by the Incas. They reside in the Amazon basin.

They were discovered by members of the Mulford Biological Expedition who were led by Doctor H. H. Rusby, Dean of the College of Pharmacy of Columbia University. Doctor Rusby has returned to the United States. Gordon MacCreagh, ethnologist of the expedition, remained to make more extended investigation.

These people live the communal life and are housed in barracks, accommodating anywhere from twenty-five to forty families. These barracks are approximately ninety and one hundred feet. They are rectangular in shape with sloping roof of palm-thatch and sides of young polin slips and opened out. About every ten feet along the sides of the inclosure there is a low wooden rail indicating the family limitations. System and forethought is evident. The work of the tribe is divided equitably between the women and the men. There is no economic competition. The work is divided as to number according to the necessity of the tribe.

Women on Equality With Men

One significant thing is that the women are independent and equal in every respect with the men. There is no semblance of slavery, and the heavy burdens are borne by the men instead of the women. When a woman desires to go on a visit, she embarks in a canoe and asks no one's permission. Each person must do his or her part for the community, after which he may work for himself, and the values thus created are his individual possession, but cannot be used to exploit others.

The people are scrupulously particular in their personal habits. The members of the expedition spent several months with them, during which time they did not hear an angry word spoken nor note any evidence of jealousy or hatred. One of the customs is the breaking of bread in welcoming strangers. Their conception of a future life is analogous to Christianity. Heaven, to them, is a very beautiful place. In fact, it is a condition rather than a place. This condition is everywhere and not located "in the sky" or "down below."

No Mourning for Dead

There is no mourning for the dead. When a friend or relative dies he is buried, after which friends and relatives leave the grave without any grief whatever, for as they say, "Why should we grieve when our loved one is now in a beautiful place?" They use almost identical expressions in regard to the dead as do we.

The only superstitious belief of these people is a dance which has to do with what they call a defy of the devil. It is known as the devil-devil dance. It lasts three days, and is carried on to ward off Satanic influences. They claim that the evil spirit, which they call Jurupary, is responsible for failure of crops, tropical storms, and all unusual phenomena of nature. This dance is in no sense propitiatory, but is an act of defiance towards the evil spirit, giving notice that these people do not fear him. When the dance begins, an enceinte woman, holding a child by the hand, stands before the group. This woman symbolizes the mother of all things. She is the symbol of creation, to give evidence to the evil spirit that, in spite of all his efforts, the tribe will live and go on forever.

These people are slight of stature, not measuring over five feet and two inches in height. Their diet consists almost altogether of fish, game, and the mandeoca root. They have very little sickness.

When it is remembered that there are about eleven million natives of South America who have remained impervious to Spanish invasion, or Catholic dominance, it would seem that the time is near at hand when this church should send missionaries to South America to reach and teach these people.

The annual roll call of the American Red Cross will take place this year from Armistice Day, November 11, until Thanksgiving Day. This is the only appeal that is made by them for funds. Their work is world-wide.

A second institute of politics was held at Williams College, Massachusetts, in August. There were present several men of note from England, France, Japan, Brazil, and Austria, as speakers. These meetings were commenced in the summer of 1921 at Williams College. This year they emphasized that another World War was in the making unless we can learn that nationalism is only incidental and recognize better the common brotherhood of man. Independent states recognize no authority over them, but living in a state of political anarchy among themselves, offer a continual threat of war difficulties.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

When a Dollar Is Not a Dollar in Value

The National Industrial Convention Board has published figures showing the value of a dollar as compared with July, 1914. In July, 1916, there was a decline in value of 8 per cent; in 1917, of 23.8 per cent. In other words, the dollar had a purchasing value of 76.2 per cent as compared with July, 1914. It continued to decline until it reached its minimum value in 1920, having a purchasing value in July of that year of only 48.9 per cent. But it has since increased so that in July, 1921, it was 61.3 per cent, and April, 1922, 64.8 per cent. That would mean in other words that the purchasing value in April, 1922, as compared with July, 1920, is 132.5 per cent, or an increase of almost one third from July, 1920, and a decrease of more than one third from July, 1914.

The American's Creed

The following was awarded first prize by the National Patriotic Organization in 1918. It has been published since then:

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its Flag; and to defend it against all enemies.

Commendation for the Holden Home

The Warrensburg (Missouri) Star Journal for August 31, reports Joseph B. Shannon, of Kansas City, as follows:

A bit of human interest crept into the usual somewhat prosaic proceedings of the Constitutional Convention this week, when Joseph B. Shannon, of Kansas City, introduced an amendment to a measure relating to pensions for the blind. The amendment called for an old-age pension for Missouri citizens, who possessed certain requisite qualifications. In presenting the amendment, Mr. Shannon said in part:

"I was in Holden, in this State, the other day and as I walked down the street I came across a great building on one side of the street, and I asked what it was and was told that it is a home for the aged, and I went in and found, much to my surprise, a friend from Jackson County. His name is D. J. Krahl. He is the president of the institution and it is for the aged, organized under the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. I never knew there was such an institution. I am sure not many in convention knew of it. I found in there fifty or sixty aged people. The president said to me, 'The thing that is offensive is that when we go to the public officials, they refer to these human beings as paupers.'

"They are not paupers. They are just old souls, and as I left that place and walked down the street of the little city of Holden I picked up a little leaflet. It said: 'Come to me all you that labor and are burdened and I will refresh you.' I wonder if it could have been that that was meant physically as well as spiritually?"

PASTORAL

Democracy

A frank discussion of the factors in a successful organization.

Democracy is a word we love to conjure with. In the heart of every true American it echoes and re-echoes. Not because we see it fully carried out in this republic—for we do not—but because of its association and its possibilities. The axiom, "The voice of the people is the voice of God," is not always true; but in the church it should be true, for the people as a whole should never desire what is wrong. The instinct of the human race is to live and be happy. And a body of Christian worshipers will, as a rule, ask only for that which is for the good of the whole. Such, we believe, was the idea held by Joseph Smith, first president of the Reorganized Church. If his writings and speeches are to be a criterion by which we are to judge, he was a true democrat—not necessarily political, but religious. He took this position, we have been informed: Let the quorums handle carefully and prayerfully the serious matters which come before the church; then let the people in conference assembled discuss fully and freely, and vote: the result will be in harmony with the will and mind of God. He did not deny possible exceptions; he spoke of general principles. And why should not this be the case?

The interest of the masses must be conserved. Activity in them must be stimulated by cooperation. They must have opportunity to express approval or disapproval and offer suggestions. God's Spirit (which is intelligent) is in the entire body—not confined to the head. (In fact, up-to-date physiologists know that the body has more than one brain, as it were. Every nerve is the conveyor of intelligence, and the solar plexus is often called the second brain.) True, special inspiration, such as a revelation, which is given to direct the church, comes through the head of the church; but general inspiration is a function of the body. And without the body there can be no complete church—the head is really a part of the body, functioning with it or not working at all. The analogy, carry it as far as we will, shows that we are workers together with God or else we are not workers at all. "And the head cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee." And vice versa.

Leaders Chosen by the People

In a sense democracy is limited in its power to rule—so we speak of an oligarchy within a democracy; but we should not lose sight of the fact that men rule through the sufferance of the people who chose them to rule. Thus the right to rule comes from the people. And this fact was sublimely established in the beginning of the church, when the voice of God speaking in old Father Whitmer's chamber told the brethren that they should not create leaders without the sanction of the people. The principle of "common consent" is no empty sound. However, we must not be led astray by any false interpretation of its meaning; for common consent does not mean that the masses take the initiative in government: history affords us no example of great moves, plans, creations originating in the brain of the mass; it was the committee or the individual that framed, or made orderly abstract thought. We must bear this in mind as we study the great principle of democracy. But, on the other hand, we must remember that the committee or the individual is a part of the whole. Responsibility to the whole is lost sight of at the peril of failure. God has intended it to be so. All nature proves it to be true.

Government by the people and for the people, is true only in the sense that the ruled are ruled by persons whom the people have chosen to rule. But we do not want to emphasize this word rule too much. Probably the word teacher could be better used than the word ruler; for it is a matter of teaching rather than commanding or forcing. So there is much truth—though some danger—in the statement that the people who are ruled the least are ruled the best.

The Lord has told us to organize. Organization is essential for the accomplishment of any purpose worth while (or even otherwise), and organization means that each man has his special function and duty. But each man must learn his respective duty; he must know how to function so that friction and irregularity will be at their minimum. To make this possible there must be men chosen to instruct and, if you please, to govern or supervise. As a rule such men hold what is called, in our church terminology, the "priesthood"—something conferred by the will of God. The people chose these men to be their leaders, and the people should, if they expect profitable service, uphold these men of authority by prayer, confidence, cooperation, and loyalty. But this sustenance should cease if the leaders are not working in harmony with the constitutional law of the church, which is revealed in the three books of the church. However, to determine the fact of failure or nonfailure is a matter of great and serious importance, so much so that the testimony of one individual should not settle the question; in fact, the proper courts of investigation should be appealed to, for, as is the case of initiative, work which requires careful and coherent deliberation cannot be done by a multitude of mixed minds. Hence, we have councils, courts of inquiry, quorums.

God-Ordained Leaders

To attempt to govern the church by the votes of the people left without control would result in chaos; so in an organization of any sort there is a center from which must come teaching, which is really the proper kind of directing. The Lord has provided for this by placing in the church officers who are called to be leaders, or teachers, in their respective spheres of operation. (I try to avoid the use of such terms as directors, officers, commanders, bosses, whenever possible, because of the tendency to misunderstand and misuse the words.)

Power is always abused unless exercised in righteousness. It matters not in whose hands it may be found. Terrible mistakes have been made by the people also in exercising their franchise. Jesus was crucified by the voice of the people. Branches have been crippled if not destroyed by votes swayed by prejudice or spite; but in most of these cases, if not in all, misunderstanding has been at the bottom of the mistakes, and in later years the very persons voting against some principle have admitted their mistake. But unlimited power in the hands of the few often works quicker and deeper havoc. When it rests with a man or a class, and no means exists by which it may be corrected, a scornful selfishness sooner or later affects affairs and tyrants are developed; but such conditions cannot justly exist in Christ's church, for the recall and the referendum are factors which safeguard the interests of the people. When public opinion speaks with a clear voice, it is omnipotent; for the voice of the people in the church prevails. They might make mistakes: God never forces. He leads, or waits, or rejects. The church cannot move faster than its people, and, until they are willing to abide by law and precept, it is necessary to wait and educate and try again.

People Must Be Enlightened

And this brings up the thought that there must be intelligent cooperation: the people must be enlightened. To expect intelligent service from people ignorant of what is required of them is unwise. The old days are filled with examples of restless, dissatisfied people, made so by secretive leaders who looked upon their followers as incapable of really intelligent consideration. Jesus was not such a leader. He said to choose those who believed in him: "If ye abide in my word, you shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Followers who are properly ambitious ask for nothing more and will be satisfied with nothing less than truth. They want to know what their money is used for, whether the church is going forward or falling back; they want to say whether they approve or disapprove of certain measures; they ask these things that they might grow into intelligent communion with the body of which they are members. True, it is urged (and truthfully urged) that the world is governed by an extremely small number of people. The majority of citizens generally care little about how things are governed, so long as they are left free to work and eat and sleep. This is the history of the world. But should it be the ideal of the church? True, it was Plato's idea; but was it Christ's? In a truly spiritual branch do we not see the spiritual members vitally interested in the welfare of the branch, to the extent that they are present at business meetings ready to speak and to vote for the good of the cause? Should not the development of this freedom and interest be encouraged? By which we do not mean that the advice and suggestions of the priesthood should be spurned or voted down without justifiable reasons, but rather that there may be a cooperation in mutual understanding, a feeling of individual responsibility, with courage to exercise complete franchise. We believe in this and always have so believed. Individual liberty (not license) is the motto of the church, or should be.

These truths, then, should be self-evident: Freedom of speech—which carries with it freedom of the press; the right of personal opinion; and the respect of others' right. The people cannot guide the means which administration employs, but they can prescribe the end, which is the welfare of the whole. They have the right to watch their leaders, using due charity and confidence to keep clear their vision, and they have the right to recall those whom they think have failed in office, being willing, of course, to answer to God for their vote.

In the church, which is theocratic as well as democratic, the members are morally bound to give due consideration to the advice and counsel of their leaders, who if faithful are in a position to receive direct light from the divine head of the church.

Doctor A. C. D. Crommelin, in discussing the dark nebulae in Nature, shows by photograph his reasons for believing that there are really dark masses of material that shut off the luminosity of the most distant stars. If this is the case, their size and density would appear to imply masses of tremendous quantities, and would probably mean that the previously estimated mass of the universe will have to be at least doubled. It is interesting to note our progress of knowledge; it is also interesting to note how much there is that we do not know yet, about the sidereal universe.

THE FORUM

The Forum is a department of the HERALD intended primarily for free discussion of various questions, especially of a controversial nature, the contributions representing the views of the writer but not necessarily indorsed by the editors or the church at large.

Equality Again

By James E. Yates

The word equality evidently has a vastly different meaning as understood by different people and classes.

Definitions

Webster defines the word equality to mean "Like in magnitude, value, degree."

The Lord says his people must be equal in temporal things, and gives his own definition of equality as follows: "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another, wherefore the world lieth in sin." See Doctrine and Covenants 70:3; 77:1; 49:3.

But some good folks seem to understand equality to mean almost anything except being equal.

Conditions Resulting

The Lord says that inequality—one man possessing that which is above another (or, more than another having similar needs) causes the abundance of the manifestation of the Spirit to be withheld.

Man says: "A state of equality as to property is impossible to be maintained, for it is against nature; and if it could be reduced to practice, it would place the human race in a state of tasteless enjoyment and stupid inactivity, which would degrade the mind and destroy the happiness of social life." (Kent, as quoted in a recent issue of the HERALD.)

Would it not be pathetic indeed if the present state of happiness resulting from inequality should chance to be marred by a little of God's equality and brotherhood? What a vital point this is to place a guard around our social happiness!

According to this, we must be very careful lest we slip and fall into the condition of loving one another so well that we would be willing to share equally!

God says, equality and blessing; inequality and a curse.

Man says: Equality in possessions will degrade the mind and spoil all our present sweet social happiness.

Which shall we believe, God or the professor?

If we believe God, and do not side-step the simplicity of this issue, a people can be united in the achievement of the biggest thing that has been done on earth since Christ ascended into heaven.

If we believe the professor's theory, we are allied with the world, and as has been said, gospel equality "will not be reached in a day," nor yet in a million years.

Sister Eva Doubenmier, of Monte Vista, Colorado, writes that Elder J. E. Yates has just closed a very interesting ten-day meeting there in which the tent was filled each night. His wife, daughter, and son are working with him. His daughter, Evelina, gave, with the help of her brother, an entertainment one evening entitled, "The echo of life." They are hoping that Brother Yates and family will be sent back to labor in their district.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Is Business To-day Incompatible With a Christian Life?

Can a business man or woman of to-day be successful and still be a Christian and live by Christ-principles? A big question, is it not? Too big, we feel sure, to be adequately discussed in a brief editorial. But there are some thoughts which have come to us, which we feel might help to open up a profitable consideration and discussion of the subject.

One of the first motivating impulses in business seems to be to get all you can and give as little as you can. In other words, in any business transaction there always seems to be an underlying fundamental objective on the part of buyer and seller—what profit can I get on this deal? The buyer wants to get as much and as good quality as possible and pay the minimum price. The seller wants to get as much as possible for his wares. The question is, Are these objectives in line with the Christ injunction, For with what measure ye mete it shall be given unto you? He also said, If ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? . . . But . . . lend, hoping for nothing again.

After all, is it not the inner desire that condemns or justifies? If selfishness and greed shall be in the heart, will any transaction, however outwardly just, be free from censure from Him who "looketh on the heart"? And, obversely, if in all our dealings there shall be ever a fair consideration for the "other fellow," can we fail to win approval from the same just Judge, even though from the standpoint of the world and present-day business standards, we may not be a "success"?

It is not the money which is given at the end of a day's work which is the real reward. The latter comes only from the inner consciousness of having filled the day with good deeds, with fair and just efforts, and a conscience void of offense before Him who cared not a whit for money or fame or the world's standards of success. As another has said, the money paid for a day's work is but the badge or outward show of service given, while the real recompense is out of sight, hidden from the eyes of the thoughtless, but very real to the possessor, and precious in that day when each one must lay bare the secrets of his life-journey. The "treasures laid up in heaven" are not of the same coinage as those we find in the strong boxes of the "successful" to-day, but they will have a greater "buying" value in the day of accounting when all must "cash in" of their earthly gleanings!

It is encouraging to read little bits coming from the heart of the business world to-day that seem to indicate that into even those standards is creeping, outwardly at least, a better conception of real values. That it will take many thousands of such little bits to eradicate selfishness of the masses to-day, we may well believe, but it is good to know that here and there some are lifting their voices and proclaiming a "better way." The ideal of service to others is replacing perhaps gradually, but we hope surely—that of "Every fellow for himself and the Devil take the hindmost!"

As more clearly all come to see that success is to be measured, not by what one gets in life, but by what he has given, we may hope that the nearer will approach the time of Christ's coming and the earth's redemption from sin. Slowly the leaven is working in the hearts of men. God has said he has many forces at work that we know not of, and shall we not look forward in confidence that in his own due time and manner, the regeneration of mankind will be accomplished?

Our chief concern should be that we are doing our bit towards that end, that we are living up to the highest bit of light we have received, and that none, from our actions or standards, shall have cause to stumble in the pathway.

The following little poem has given rise to many thoughts of a hopeful nature, and we pass it on, that its message may be whispered to other hearts which perhaps are discouraged. From the soul of a business world, voiced through a business journal, may we not see encouraging "signs of the times" in this little bit? And may not its perusal help to strengthen us in our own desires for right ideals, for pure and unselfish motives, and for the coming of Christ to his own?

A. A.

Woman's Work

Much has been said of late in praise of women, concerning their new power as citizens, their capabilities, the progress they have made, and their different noteworthy achievements since they were allowed their "rights."

We do know that women have done many good works to benefit humanity and are fully capable of doing much more. Among those good works stands out notably their part in stamping out, to a great extent, the "demon rum," a work that will benefit not only thousands of homes throughout the land to-day, but countless unborn millions. Many good men have given their services to this achievement, also, and perhaps it could not have been accomplished by women alone. However, we do believe had it not been for the persistent efforts of women throughout these many years, it would not have succeeded.

Women are capable of making laws and enforcing them, and of governing in political and business affairs; but I should like to ask, Is that women's work? Was she not designed by her Creator for a different and more particular work—a work which cannot be accomplished by men? What is the first commandment. God gave to man and woman after their creation? Read Genesis 1: 27, 28: "So God created man in his own image, male and female created he them, and God blessed them and God said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it."

Does this not show that there is a special work for woman, designed as she was for a helpmate for man, and to become the mother of all the race? What a wonderful privilege and task! One that should be held most sacred, and above which she should elevate none other! One towards which she should be willing to devote time, energy, talent, and patience, that home and children should be properly cared for! What greater privilege than to bring healthy, happy children into the world, teach them to be honest, good, true, and reverent, to be obedient to good laws and the commandments of God?

If homes were built upon this foundation—the foundation of all good citizenship—the nation would attain a security and solidity not assured when women give their time and attention to everything but their homes and God-given duties. The greatest work for the church and the nation possible for women to perform is just this, to create and maintain normal, wholesome, Christian homes.

Where are such homes to-day? Where are the old-fashioned homes of the years gone by, with children playing about the door, and mothers at home, working blithely and contentedly for those they love? Fathers were glad and eager to return to such homes after their day's work was done, and did not need to seek happiness and comfort in clubs and lounging rooms down town.

Caring for a home does not necessitate a woman's remaining in ignorance of things that are going on in the world, nor of performing her reasonable service to the community. There are plenty of good books, magazines, and papers, by means of which one can have knowledge of social and political affairs, and an intelligent woman has always the ability to so arrange her home duties that she can attend an occasional lecture, or community welfare meeting.

How do the homes of to-day compare with those of forty and fifty years ago, and which are the better serving the truest interests of humanity? Do the present homes suffer in such comparison? Are there not too many that are mere stopping places, with inmates restless and discontented, tiring of the little home duties, and ever seeking amusement and entertainment outside? Are there not too many homes without children—most attractive of adornments? Are not too many women without interest in home life, and eager to get out into the business or political world, or otherwise to get into "the public eye"?

Is it any wonder that the Nation is in such a state of commotion and unrest that we seem on the verge of a great social upheaval? With homes void of solidity, husbands and wives with lowered ideals, and little general conception of the fundamentals for a secure national life, what can be expected of the structure reared upon such a foundation?

As we view the field, and see the disturbed and broken homes, can we see a cause for the conditions revealed? Read Isaiah 3: 12, and see what is there said about women ruling: "And as for my people, children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O, my people, they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths." What is "the way of thy paths"? Is it not the "way" or "path" in which God designed them to walk? Men and women seem to have lost sight of the fact that God's designs are best for them, and they have made many crooked and perverse paths for themselves. Was there ever a time when women ruled as they do now, or ever a time when woman's God-given commission was more slightly viewed or more cunningly misconstrued?

Whether or not the above passage from Isaiah refers to the present day, we believe the result would be the same when women leave their own sphere of service and usefulness and try to rule. They may be quite successful, apparently, for a time, but, neglecting their prior and more important duties in the home for the dazzling ones outside, they will find that there is a gradual undermining of the whole fabric of society over which they seek to rule, and sooner or later, disaster will follow.

Let us be wiser than those about us who have not had the light we have. Let us elevate our homes to a plane of sanctity and reverence, and truly feel that no other work is so worthy of our attention as that which would help us to establish them in righteousness, fit dwellings for the immortal souls of our children, and for the Holy Spirit of Christ.

(The above contribution has been in our desk for some time, unfortunately without a signature, the last page having evidently been separated from the others. We feel that the viewpoint is one which will be profitable for us to consider, and so present it to our readers, even though unsigned.—A. A.)

Sister L. J. Eaton writes from Western Maine: "Conference of Western Maine District met with the Vinalhaven Saints, August 26 and 27. The weather was very bad, but a spiritual time was enjoyed by all present. On September 9 and 10, we met with the Mountainville Saints in a two-day meeting. A good spirit prevailed and we hope much good will be realized."

Beyond the Profit of To-Day

Lord, give me vision that shall see
Beyond the profit of to-day
Into the years which are to be,
That I may take the larger way
Of labor and achievements; so
Help me fashion, stanch and sure
A work my fellow men shall know
As wrought to serve—and to endure.

I seek for fortune, Lord, nor claim
To scorn the recompense I earn;
But help me, as I play the game,
To give the world its just return.
Thou mad'st the earth for all of us;
Teach me, through struggle, strain, and stress,
To win and do my share, for thus
Can profit lead to happiness.

Guard me from thoughts of little men
Which blind the soul to greater things;
Save me from smug content and then
From greed and selfishness it brings;
Aid me to join that splendid clan
Of business men who seek to trace
A calm, considered working plan
To make the world a better place.

Lord, let the faith of those be mine,
A creed creative, simple, true;
Let me but aid in their design,
Let me but share the work they do;
Teach me to hold this task above
All lesser thoughts within my ken,
That thus I may be worthy of
The name of business man. Amen!
—Nation's Business.

"As the Twig Is Bent"—or Broken!

Do parents need reminding that a part of their duty to their children might be couched in negative as well as positive terms? In other words, Do we sometimes do irreparable injury through repression, through hindering the development of the natural impulses and desires of our children?

Too often parents seem to be motivated by a desire to bend or break the wills and natures of their children into grooves of their own; to make them conform to standards set up in the parents' minds, regardless of the individuality or tendencies of the children themselves. Is this right or just?

God delights in variety. Witness the manifold aspects of his creation! In all the countless myriads of flower and bloom, of fruit and harvest, of rock and crystal, of pond and river, of lake and ocean, of star and planet, there are no two alike! Infinite variations and infinite change and rehabilitation, and yet through all, a unity and purpose, before which our finite minds falter, and bow in adoration, sincere though uncomprehending!

Is it conceivable that such a Creator should desire that any human mind should be in subjection to another, should be run along the same groove, compelled to think and decide and act absolutely according to the thoughts, decisions, or actions of another, even though that other be the parent? Not that we would uphold disobedience. On the contrary, it is right, and surely intended, that parents shall guide their young children, and exact and receive obedience and respectful attention, upon many matters of right and wrong, especially before those years when individual wisdom and "accountability" shall awaken. But many parents do not stop with demanding obedience upon questions of right and wrong. They expect to rule and direct and govern upon matters of personal taste or preference, upon the angle at which a boy shall wear his hat, or the girl shall stand her umbrella in the closet; whether the lad should play marbles or baseball, or the girl should keep her doll fully dressed or "sick in bed"; whether "spending money" shall be spent, or hoarded in an iron bank, or put in some safe place of investment, where the child can never see or feel it!

Sometimes the enthusiasms of a child over this or that thing which has attracted his attention and interest, are met with smiles of pity, or exclamations of ridicule. That "sensitive plant," child nature, soon learns to close its tender leaves about the secret treasures of its soul, and shuts the parent out from the great vantage ground of sharing in his child's heart confidences. A child's dreams are often, to adult busy minds, foolish and meaningless, but as, thoughtlessly, we refuse to listen to their recital, are we not deliberately shutting ourselves out from a contact which will be as light to our path when we seek to safely guide in later years—an illumination of the inner life and fears and desires of another soul?

The little ones come to us, and grow and unfold in our midst, and we think we know them, and know all about them, and yet, each soul is a closed book to every other soul. Life and its experiences must ever be scanned and lived and learned by each one for himself. In great, pivotal experiences, it is, after all, only possible for each to decide and move according to the light within his own soul. But, for all this isolation that must be, need parents separate themselves still farther from their little ones, remove themselves unnecessarily distant, by failing to understand them as perfectly as may be? Rather, should not we listen to their thoughts and experiences, sympathize with them, and try at all times to see things with their eyes, with their limitations, from their viewpoints? The broken doll or the lost ball may seem but trivial incidents to the grown-up, hardly worth noticing, and yet, to the child who has woven about these toys all the intricate tendrils of fancy and interest, their loss becomes real tragedy of life, things over which to break one's heart.

It were well for parents to keep ever clearly in mind, the thought that while these little ones were given to them to guide and train in righteousness and into fair images of the divine, their little spirits are free and untrammelled, and it were an act of grace to keep them so, to nurture them tenderly, to give them that sympathetic environment which will help their God-begotten natures to expand in loveliness and perfection, and to recognize their individualities to such an extent that never, by repression or lack of loving understanding, shall those natures and individualities be broken or crushed in the training.

For who knows when a swan shall be found among the ugly ducklings of our brood? Who knows when a flower of God's choicest planting shall rear its head among the sturdier ones of mere utility? Who knows when some gift of genius or skill may have its beginnings in some homely inclination? "A turtle in the bathtub is not a pleasant thing, and the odd collections of bits of rock, scraps of wire, and other sorts of junk may prove a vexation; but curious ideas spring from nimble young brains, and such early leanings may develop in time into special ability of a high order."

It is noted that Camille Flammarion, the celebrated French astronomer, on his eightieth birthday anniversary, traced his interest in the science of the stars, back to an incident which happened when he was only five years old. This was when

LETTERS AND NEWS

A Desire for Distinctive Church Music

"I want to see our books anthemized, choraled, nursery rhymed, and hymned."

I have just finished reading my favorite, the HERALD, and it seems to me that it deals with every subject fully—every one but one. I would be happy if I could find just once in a while something like this: Let the musicians of the church get together and compose the music for several oratorios from the Book of Mormon. Let them report to the chief musician at Independence for parts in the great achievement, and from the hymns that artist has composed already, we know he is capable of directing the affair.

So far as I am concerned I want to sing and play anthems, oratorios, and church festival songs from the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon. Other people make much of their own history, their own books, folk lore, and sentiment; why cannot we? Must I go to another world before seeing my own capable people to the front? We have the musicians, the money if it were in circulation, and what causes the delay? Talk of grand opera—what book could furnish the settings for all that is enjoyed by people of every country, like the wonderful Book of Mormon? I don't care for grand opera though. I want to see our books anthemized, choraled, nursery rhymed, and hymned. If you want our sentiment to reach the hearts of our young people let it be sung and played in.

We are losing ground by always singing and playing what others, not of us, have composed. We are losing time by not putting our young into the harness of harmony and counterpoint under able instructors. We are weakening ourselves in our own estimation by singing sentiments foreign to our own belief. Some say, "Sister Martin, you expect much of our people." Yes, I do, and I want to see them take part in the big things in music. Why wouldn't I think we could do something when I know that six girls from fourteen to twenty years of age wrote an operetta, painted their own scenery, composed the music, and made a success of it until he was given the opportunity of watching in a pail of water in the yard of his father's home, the reflection of a solar eclipse. Even to his tiny understanding, that father tried to explain something of the phenomenon, and the various phases which he observed at that time impressed him so deeply as to mold his whole career.

"As a man thinketh, so is he." Not, "as a parent thinketh so are the children," even though we are apt to hear the saying, "Like father, like son." Heredity is a recognizable thing; its laws must be taken into account, but after all, to each being is given his own free agency, and even little children can be taught to hold themselves responsible for their living true to the guide within. It is for us to help to fill their minds with beautiful and life-giving thoughts, to so create and shape that inner guide, that it will measure up to the Pattern set for all of us.

Let us then respect the individual tendencies and preferences of our children so long as principles of right and wrong are not involved, and in regard to those principles, and instilling them into the natures and consciences of our children, let us study earnestly, let us labor diligently, and let us appeal constantly to God, whose help will be given us freely in this, our divinely-commissioned task.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

now it is one of the big financial successes of the world? Here was their chief sentiment—we must have artists do the parts, and if we cannot hire them we will train them. Along comes Theodore Thomas and corrects their musical scores and helps to train the performers. Miss Hall played first violin; some artists sang the leading parts. Now if we haven't the artists, let's train them, not in classes alone, but individually first.

I said to a great choir master last week, "What is the crucial point in your success?"

He replied, "Absolute control over all performers, not a whisper, not a word is spoken, no shuffling, no noise."

Yes, I could understand that, but for a Latter Day Saint choir, I would add prayer before the beginning, and advocate the taking of separate lessons well learned. Then when the choir is assembled everybody is ready, knows what to do, and the master is relieved of all but the directing. He doesn't have to stand, count, beg, frown, educate them. He simply shows the way and they follow meekly and humbly.

A choir has no more right to speak after the prayer than people have to carry on conversation in a prayer meeting. There are no vacations in music. The birds, hills, coloring, echoes, and all resound to the call of the music student. Let us have new hymns, not discarding the old ones. Let us have new Sunday school songs, not forgetting the ones we have had. Let us go on and on and on.

PERRY, IOWA.

NELLIE MARTIN.

For Small Children in Religio

I receive many letters voicing the sentiment expressed in this one:

"In our Religio we have a good many little folks. I have a class ranging from the age of four years to that of ten. What shall I do to interest them? Can you suggest something by way of help?"

"Perhaps in the larger places you do not have children so young in the Religio, but in our smaller branches and rural meetings we have this problem to meet. I would be thankful for any information or suggestion by way of help. I think the small folks need our help as well as the older ones."

To this for one thing I am replying: Use the little Blue Bird Book put out by Mrs. John Lentell. Address her at 124 West Locust Street, Davenport, Iowa. The book is out on trial. Sister Lentell has a limited number and would be glad to have your criticism and suggestion after you have tried it. In Lamoni the Blue Bird organization has been a success. Write Mrs. A. E. Bullard for reference. She is the head of the work in Lamoni and is enthusiastic in its development. Address her at Graceland College. I am sure this will supply you with material until further action by the Religio at the coming convention.

There is the place to present this need and I do know there is a widespread need, a demand for something for the little ones. In rural branches all the family attend Religio and all the family should be cared for.

Try the little Blue Bird Book while we wait. I think you will like it.

VIDA E. SMITH.

Elder C. L. Munro, of Rockaway Beach, Taney County, Missouri, who has a shop equipped for woodwork and rustic furniture, wants to move to some place where there are Saints. He lives sixty miles from the nearest branch. His trade is house carpentering, but he is getting too old to work at it, preferring to continue with millwork. Any Saints knowing of a good opening should write Brother Munro.

En Route to England

I thought some of your readers would like to have a word from us, as we are on the way to the mission appointed and moving along beautifully over the calm Atlantic, for the weather and sea are ideal, and we are favored to have such a splendid steamer, the Cunard R. M. S. Scythia, to carry us across, for it is an up-to-date boat, with every convenience possible for such a voyage, and we certainly appreciate the provision made for those who go down to the sea.

I wish in this way to thank the Saints of my old field of labor for their unstinted kindness while among them for the past few weeks, especially the Saints of the Attleboro, Haverhill, and Brockton Branches, whose saintly aid made it possible for us to get some articles needed for our comfort; also the princely way Bishop M. C. Fisher cared for us and looked after our interests in every way possible, and through his companion we were entertained during the ten days we enjoyed at the Onset reunion, where every need was anticipated and supplied. In fact all were good to us and the memory of our visit will be a green spot in our life.

The reunion was a success in every way, and the Saints were surely blessed in their assemblies, and the men sent there to help make the reunion a success as far as their ministrations could so do made the occasion one of spiritual and intellectual blessing. Apostle Gillen was at his best and was appreciated, as also C. Ed. Miller and others who contributed to the success of the gathering.

The last Sunday morning meeting was one not easily forgotten. President Frederick M. was one who surely felt the spirit of that occasion, and this following a very forceful and spiritual discourse the night previous by him, brought to him a fruitage of satisfaction which made it very hard for him to give expression to what it yielded in the testimonies given.

I sincerely hope my labors among the Saints of England will be accompanied by the Spirit of Christ, without which the good desired cannot be enjoyed, and I hope I have found the source of strength needed for service for him.

I have written twice to Brother John W. Rushton, but fear my letters have not reached him, so take this opportunity to let him know I have not neglected to write.

Address: 19 Amhurst Park, Stamford Hill, London N. 16.

Sincerely your brother in Christ,

RICHARD BULLARD.

Good Impression Made at Cameron

Elder Roy S. Budd, in his weekly letter to the First Presidency, adds that Brother James R. Houghton arrived on Monday evening and on Tuesday morning was prevailed on to go to the college with him to sing at the chapel service. He made a fine impression upon the students, dean, and faculty, and one of the faculty members remarked that he enjoyed very much the singing but enjoyed most his (Brother Houghton's) clean character, which stood out in such a marked manner. In the afternoon they went to the high school, where Brother Houghton again made a good impression.

After singing impressively Tuesday evening, Brother Budd writes: "The climax came when he appeared at our prayer meeting last night. Some Saints did not know he held the priesthood, so were surprised to see him in charge of the meeting, and more surprised when he had finished his opening remarks and at the close of the meeting offered his testimony. Surely we can be proud of such noble young men."

Council Bluffs and Woodbine Reunions

As Sister Chase and I were laboring in this district, it was only a matter of routine that we should be slated to attend the Council Bluffs reunion, as that is the gathering which this, the Fremont District, is immediately interested in. We were especially glad to be so privileged, as our childhood holds memories of early semiannual conferences of the Reorganization held at this point, attended by the older members of our family, and the blessings of which formed themes for fireside recountal for many years. However, this was our first participation in such gathering, or a reunion to be held here.

On account of a call coming for the use of the tent we were using for district work, we started for Council Bluffs four days earlier than would have been the case otherwise, so were on the ground from the first service until the last.

Among those in charge we note the principal ones: Brothers O. Salisbury and John Hansen. These with the rest of the committees worked untiringly for the success of the occasion. The grounds here are not the best, being rather too steep for comfort, but the will to do their part was present, and this handicap was largely overcome or forgotten in the results attained.

The services from first to last were of a fine order and well attended, both young and old taking their part to a marked degree. The Saints were disappointed in that Apostle T. W. Williams was unable to meet with them, on account of the strike which tied up traffic on the railroads from California. However, with Apostle Hanson and Elder S. A. Burgess present, the cause did not suffer.

Of the general missionary force there were present besides those already named, Elders P. R. Burton, Winegar, and Chase, Sister Chase, Evangelist Carlisle, and Bishop C. J. Hunt, T. J. Elliott, and R. S. Salyards.

Sisters Chase and Burgess were busy with their work with the Women's Department, which, by the way, was represented by appointment from headquarters by Sister Chapman. Brother B. S. Lambkin was present and contributed to the success of the cause, having recovered largely from his physical disability. We also noted Brother H. N. Pierce at some of the sessions. We will not attempt to name more of the laborers present, as we could not include all of the local Saints.

While at this gathering we received an invitation to be present at and assist as one of the speakers at the Old Settlers' Reunion of Harrison County, meeting at Magnolia August 24. As this is our natal county, and as the Woodbine reunion would be in session, only fourteen miles from that point, we decided to kill two birds with one stone and attend both events; especially as we had not met with the Little Sioux reunion for about thirty years, and naturally would enjoy meeting relatives and old friends and neighbors.

We arrived in Woodbine Monday evening, August 21, about 6 p. m. We were given a royal welcome by the committee as well as by relatives and friends there.

The six days spent here were busy ones, and because of the Spirit's presence in these services, were very enjoyable. Our entire force were kept busy, as usual. (By our entire force, we mean Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess, Sister Chase, and myself.)

One thing we noted here which we thought commendable and a factor contributing to the enjoyment of the Spirit, was that this was one reunion where a real effort was made to keep the Word of Wisdom. Not only were the meals at the dining hall served without meat, tea, or coffee, while we were given lemonade or milk for our drink, but even the young people in their evening frolics, instead of holding a weinie roast, contented themselves by roasting marshmallows. We are sure they enjoyed fully as good a time as they would had they used the meat.

One very commendable feature of this reunion was the large gathering of consecrated young people, meeting every morning for prayer at their commodious tent, filling it and the time given for the service, then, just before the closing of the service, marching into the main tent and taking their places in and mingling their voices with the congregation there assembled. Surely it was an inspiring thing and our hearts responded to the occasion.

We cannot mention all the local workers here, nor even the names of the committee in charge, but noticed especially Brothers Joseph Lane, Charles F. Putnam, and David Vredenburg.

Among the general missionaries we noted the following: Apostle Hanson, Elders A. H. Parsons, George Vandel, Bishop C. J. Hunt, F. H. Edwards, Samuel T. Pendleton, and others whose names we can't recall. Of course Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess were very much in demand, being kept busy every day. Their work seemed to be appreciated very highly here, as well as at the Council Bluffs reunion.

Our verdict concerning this reunion is, "It was one of the best!"

We are still holding services with the tent at Emerson, Iowa. We go to Riverton from this point. Expect to hold services there September 24 to 27 inclusive. We will drive from that point to General Conference. We will probably locate in Shenandoah for the winter campaign of this district, as, at our district conference just held in Glenwood, we were appointed district president.

A. M. CHASE.

Northeastern Illinois Reunion

No services were held from August 24 to September 3, as so many of our people attended the reunion at Elmhurst. Certainly if all the reunions carry the same inspiration and educational spirit that characterized ours, then the church must go forward in leaps and bounds. Brother A. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, was present one day and gave us a splendid lecture on different methods of teaching children at home or in Sunday school. Many good thoughts were brought out which made all of us think, and I am sure many improvements in classes and at home will be the result.

Prayer meetings were held each morning with some early morning prayer meetings for young people. All felt a spiritual uplift as the result of this. Study hour, in charge of Brother and Sister Ward L. Christy, was held each morning until the arrival of Apostle T. W. Williams. He then took charge of these in form of lectures and round table talks and discussions on various problems of vital interest to the church. Among these were Zionite conditions and stewardships.

Many questions were asked and answered, and thereby many doubts and fears were set at rest, which cannot but create greater confidence in the ultimate success of the church, greater faith in God and those whom he has set over us, and greater determination to do our part.

The girls' department held one afternoon session and there was a nice display of canned goods and fancy needle work, basket weaving, wax beads, and paper flowers, made by various circles in the district. Also the reports from leaders show the girls have been working along educational and other lines. Of course some groups have accomplished more than others, but we feel that all are determined to show great improvement the coming year.

One afternoon was devoted to Women's Department, and reports showed them all actively engaged in doing the best they can under existing circumstances. It was certainly encouraging to hear reports from Deselm and to know they were so courageous and determined in the face of the persecution they have endured.

Two experience meetings were held and some very interesting and inspiring experiences were given which could not help but enlarge our faith in God and his care over his people.

Preaching services were held each day at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. Those occupying the pulpit were Apostle T. W. Williams, Elders David Dowker, E. A. Curtis, Ward L. Christy, and H. P. W. Keir, assisted by local men of the various branches in the district.

Recreational activities were in charge of Elder E. A. Curtis and we felt this a material help to the reunion. During 11 a. m. services, a children's hour was conducted, with storytelling, handwork, and games, in charge of Ethel Williamson, assisted by others.

Priesthood meetings were held and the women were invited to attend one of these in charge of Apostle T. W. Williams, which they did to their edification.

We feel that our reunion was a huge success, on account of the beautiful spirit that prevailed in all the services as well as out, in recreation, and that much of spirituality, strength, enthusiasm, and determination was gained, which will enable us to overcome obstacles and go forward this year as never before.

HATTIE K. BELL.

Our reunion has been unanimously pronounced the "best ever." The wonderful spirit present was felt and testified to by outsiders. Harmony and love prevailed.

The reunion swung off with a prayer and testimony service which seemed to dwell on the folly and harm of criticism, and truly the criticizing spirit was not manifest during the entire reunion.

The sick were healed following administration to a remarkable degree, so that good health prevailed in camp and the weather was good. One of the first nights out there was a heavy storm. Some damage was done in Chicago and vicinity, but though our tents were not all yet staked down, we suffered no inconvenience, and when the storm was over we helped one another get ready for the next wind which might (but did not) come.

Apostle T. W. Williams was with us a few days and his exposition of Zion was like food for hungry people. Bishop B. R. McGuire, Patriarch W. A. McDowell, and Brethren O. A. McDowell and David Dowker were each with us a few hours. Brethren E. A. Curtis, John T. Cooper, and Ward L. Christy, aided by one local man, fed us the bread of life. Brother Curtis had charge of the young people and both young and old enjoyed the good times he planned.

The exhibition of the accomplishments of the young girls consisting of bread, cake, canned fruit, vegetables, sewing, paper flowers, work in sealing wax, and basket weaving, was under the supervision of Sister W. L. Christy, as was also the Women's Department.

A profitable time was spent and we all came home more determined than ever to begin now preparing for our next reunion—our miniature Zion.

STELLA E. THOMAN.

Far West Stake Reunion, etc.

This reunion has been held almost "from time immemorial" in the Reorganized Church, beyond which "the memory of man [of the later generations] runneth not." This one was the sixth of the stake. It is held in a beautiful, gently sloping piece of sixty acres of woodland near Stewartsville—in Missouri. This reunion completed a five years' lease of twenty acres of these fine grounds; a new lease for a similar period has been secured; thus the people of the stake may prepare to meet again from year to year at a place well prepared by nature for such gatherings. If "the groves were God's first temples," certainly a beautiful one was provided for this stake. And why not? Should not this stake, one of the chief gateways to Zion and adjoining the city of Zion, also "be beautiful for situation" and in its general ensemble evoke "joy and thanksgiving"? Stately monarchs of the forest, with their cooling, subduing shade, and the carpeting of blue grass, invite calmness, serenity, peace, and worship. Away from the din and noise of the city, pilgrims to this forest-shrine are suffused by the spirit of subduing calm and abounding solemnity, which permits and invites communion with the great Father of All, whose glory is manifest in all his works. "All thy works praise thee!" is the psalm that wells up in the heart of every child of God as he enters this lofty, sacred temple, to join his fellow worshipers in celebrating in unison this modern feast of tabernacles.

Three service tents—main, junior, and children's—were provided. A program printed on muslin, twelve by six feet, contained the items for each day in each tent. Children's tent, ages to thirteen, subdivided, under charge of Brother R. E. Stone and Sister Edith Koehler, provided for work, teaching, and worship. The junior tent, for young people, in charge of Brother A. B. Constance. Prayer meetings in both tents at 8 a. m. Women's department, Sunday school, and ministry meetings in junior tent. Main tent: prayer meetings at 9; adult department in charge of J. A. Koehler at 10.45 included presentation and discussion of social and economic subjects, with round tables, and other educational features. At 2 p. m. department work and an occasional sermon in main tent. At 3.30 recreation—ball and other games, swings, croquet, tennis, etc. At 7.30 song service for development of congregational singing. At 8 p. m. sermons and a lantern lecture.

All prayer meetings were well attended and highly spiritual; the young people and adults rose higher than ever in devotion, in thought, in expression. The young people's

Thrift Talks

An increase in the pay envelope should result in an increase in your bank account or in profitable investments. The common error is to take the increase in the pay envelope for a signal to spend more, to set our standard of living higher than our income justifies, to indulge in foolish and unprofitable pleasures.

To avoid the common error, let your judgment rather than your desire or emotions rule.

Thrifty people are wise spenders. The less we spend in unnecessary things, the more we have to give to God as a tithe.

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

services were large in attendance and near one hundred per cent in character and activity. The preaching, all of it, nearer par than at any previous time—all the speakers were blessed: Brethren Bates, Budd, Koehler, Robertson, Salyards, Smith, and Williams; others appointed were prevented from reaching the grounds in time. Brethren W. W. Smith and T. W. Williams were present, the former four days, the latter six. Brother Smith's presentations were clear and forceful; he is a teacher par excellence. Brother Williams spoke with much power and energy. He worked like a Trojan and deeply impressed the people by his earnestness. Brother W. D. Bullard, of Independence, J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, and others assisted in various ways. The Women's Department work in charge of Sister Anna Salyards, the Religio under Brother Williams, the music by Sisters Elma E. Scott and Minnie Scott Dobson, Sunday School Department, F. L. Hinderks, were each discussed by the body of the people, who developed a large interest in the general lines presented, which will find its reaction in the branches. We must not omit mention of the fine social spirit in evidence. Everybody became acquainted—that's what a reunion does for groups of our people. The conference session was profitable; some promising young men were ordained.

Our program for next year: To invite the Independence and Kansas City people to attend, should they not have a reunion. To enlarge dining room facilities and serve on the cafeteria plan; increased engine and dynamo capacity, to pump water to dining hall, to supply light service to tents; all department work, including recreation and camp fires, to be more fully programed and worked out, various branch groups of young people to compete and cooperate; higher, better, more definite work in preaching, round table discussions, and all presentations.

If this reunion is an indication of other meetings, we are assured that the church is advancing strongly, steadily, and that it will go forward no matter what anyone or group may say or do "to the contrary notwithstanding." Equipment, which means spirituality, mental development, moral power, and systematic steady application of powers of mind and body, guarantee the success of the church.

The undersigned with his associates intend to take further advance steps, following General Conference, to secure closer and fuller administration and results. We ought to have two or more live missionaries for unworked territories.

Brother A. B. Constance has been placed in charge of the Religio Department. He did well with the young people and is a coming man. Other heads of departments continue as heretofore. Four were baptized; one a Mr. Smith, from Elmira. The hard work of the big men of Maple Grove Branch, assisted by brethren from Stewartsville, Cameron, and Pleasant Grove, is worthy of special mention. Without their support the meeting could not be held.

Following adjournment Brother E. F. Robertson will conduct a meeting at Elmira; Brother Budd will continue at Cameron; Brother Samuel Twombly will remain in the northern part; Brother Roberts will continue his round-up of the rural branches; Brother Koehler will look after Saint Joseph while Brother and Sister Salyards visit Guilford and Oakdale September 3 and 10. Brother Joseph Bates will return to Graceland. He made a good impression.

The fruit crop and other crops in Far West are enormous. Good Saints brought abundant supplies of big and luscious peaches, plums, grapes, apples, melons, with vegetables in such plenty that one could but think of the surplus fruitage of the land of Zion. When we saw prices in Omaha and Kansas City, we could but think of what the poor and all might have under proper "distribution." We hope to see the General Conference take such steps forward as will conduce to settlement in this and other portions of the promised land, according to the plan given us. We believe we shall have an important General Conference. Let us affirm optimism, make clear-cut preparation, and go ahead. Under God we shall cut gordian knots and solve our problems.

The death of Sister Hines, wife of Brother S. J. Hines, president of Pleasant Grove Branch, occurred during the meeting. The funeral was held on the 27th. The large concourse attending paid silent tribute to their esteem of this good sister. Brother Hines is one of our fine men; he is sustained by the sympathy and prayers of his fellow Saints.

Brother R. D. Weaver seems to have passed safely through a series of severe illnesses, resulting from several operations, at the Sanitarium. His experience has been very trying. He will probably be unfit for service until the end of the year at least.

Brother A. E. McCord has also been under treatment at the Sanitarium. He has improved and hopes soon to be able to return home.

The writer was permitted to attend the Council Bluffs reunion for a few days, combining church work with a visit to his son Joseph R. and family, of Omaha. He was favorably impressed by the administration of Brother Orman Salisbury and coworkers, and pleased with the intelligence and activity of the mass of the people. We seem to be comprehending the need of system and application in meeting our problems, hence are growing.

R. S. SALYARDS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 1, 1922.

Report on Trip Through Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska

The joint council requested me to leave the full responsibility of the bishopric work of the Holden Stake for a time with my counselor, I. M. Ross, directing me to travel in the interest of the financial and spiritual departments of the church in eastern Nebraska and western Iowa. I spent four months in that territory—preached one hundred times and attended eighty-seven other services. The district and branch authorities, also Saints and friends, received me kindly and listened attentively to the message delivered. I would like to mention all those who kindly cared for me in my travels and in their homes, but space forbids.

During my stay in Nebraska I had the privilege of preaching four times to the Omaha and Winnebago Indians, which was a new and novel experience for me. However, I enjoyed it very much. We have some progressive Lamanite Saints there, and Brother and Sister P. R. Burton are doing a splendid work among them.

I spent forty days in the historic Gallands Grove, Iowa, District, where I lived nearly fifty years, spending almost one half of that time traveling as a missionary in that field. I visited several homes where I had been cared for over thirty years ago when a young and inexperienced missionary.

As a rule the Saints are prospering spiritually, although many have suffered great loss financially. It is very noticeable that the blessed Spirit of "gathering to Zion and her stakes" burns brightly in the hearts of a great number of the members.

It was my pleasure to attend the reunions held at Council Bluffs and Woodbine, Iowa. Both meetings were largely attended, profitable and enjoyable.

With confidence in the full fruitage of the mission assigned to the church by the Lord, I am,

Your brother in the faith,

C. J. HUNT, Bishop of Holden Stake,

Idaho Reunion

The Idaho district reunion, held at Rupert, Idaho, closed Sunday evening, August 20. It was considered to have been the most successful reunion held in the Idaho District for several years. It was a splendid spiritual revival for the Saints.

A greater degree of spirituality and a desire to learn and prepare for more efficient service in the various departments was more noticeable than in previous reunions, especially among the young people. The Saints are beginning to appreciate more fully the value of the reunion as an educational institution and a source of spiritual strength.

The morning prayer services were very spiritual and uplifting. These were followed by lectures or sermons in the forenoon. Each alternate afternoon was occupied with departmental work, priesthood meetings, and round table discussions on the problems of Zion. The other afternoons were given to recreation. The evening sermons, of a missionary character by R. L. Fulk, were excellent, and attracted larger crowds than the tent would accommodate. The special music conducted by the district chorister and her assistant was very pleasing and inspiring.

Our number of workers was limited to R. L. Fulk, missionary supervisor of Utah and Idaho, and A. J. Layland, of the general ministry, with the help of a few of the local ministry from three branches, and the district organizer for the Women's Department.

Six precious souls were baptized the last Sunday.

At the reunion business session the time and place of the 1923 reunion was referred to the district presidency.

R. C. CHAMBERS, District President.

Eastern Colorado Reunion

The Eastern Colorado reunion closed last night, on the 3d, with President Elbert A. Smith as the speaker of the evening.

We were favored by the presence of Bishops Benjamin R. McGuire and Ellis Short, Evangelist Frederick A. Smith, President Elbert A. Smith, J. M. Baker, and John Lovell as visiting elders, and with the aid of the local missionary force a splendid program was put on. Sister Ellis Short was with us to cooperate in caring for the departments. Elder John Blackmore, of Australia, and now a missionary in this district, conducted the adult study hour in a very interesting way.

The reunion was fairly well attended from all parts of the district, and the Saints seemed to enjoy every service. The sermons were of a high order and gave strength and encouragement to all present.

The conference passed off pleasantly, with peace and harmony prevailing.

Elder G. H. Wixom was sustained as district president and Elders C. H. Rich and E. J. Williams as first and second vice presidents respectively. Brother E. R. Kuhlmann, of 2217 Irving Street, Denver, was elected district secretary.

We were not troubled with sickness on the ground, and the health of all seemed to be the best.

The camp store and cafeteria were under the direction of Elder C. H. Rich, who rendered splendid service to all, while our congenial Brother J. D. Curtis had charge of the finances and the tents and was among the busy men on the grounds.

The camp paper, which was one of the features of the reunion, was edited by Sisters Dagmar Holmes and C. H. Rich, was read to a very interested audience on the last Saturday night, after the close of the preaching service. As a happy surprise Brother James Houghton, a former student of Graceland, called in to see us the last two days and rendered very valuable service with his gift of song.

The music was conducted under the leadership of our faithful district chorister, Letha Tilton, who did a valuable work which proved to be one of the main features of the services.

The outlook for the work in this district is quite encouraging and the ministry are ready to go to the task assigned them with renewed courage and determination.

In gospel bonds,

G. H. WIXOM.

The eastern Colorado reunion is now history, closing the evening of the 3d with President Elbert A. Smith as speaker.

The reunion grounds are situated in the beautiful Colorado Springs district, which is a very healthful climate. We had a splendid attendance from all parts of the district and excellent programs. The spirit of the reunion was of a compatible nature, all seeming thoroughly to enjoy themselves.

We were pleased to greet on the grounds President Elbert A. Smith, Bishop B. R. McGuire, Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, Bishop Ellis Short, and Elder J. M. Baker. The local missionary force were all in attendance.

The adult study hour was conducted by John Blackmore, where some problems in applied sociology were discussed. Sisters Fishburn and Short conducted some interesting children's meetings.

The district conference also was held in a good spirit.

Elder G. H. Wixom was sustained as district president; Elders C. H. Rich and E. J. Williams as vice presidents; Brother E. R. Kuhlman, of 2217 Irving Street, Denver, was elected district secretary. District chorister, Sister Letha Tilton, did valuable work in the musical activities.

This reunion was a great success and the prognostications are that the next will be an elephantine success, for the grounds are pretty and the situation healthful.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN BLACKMORE.

Northern Michigan Reunion

Thirteen baptized and a generally helpful tone.

The Northern Michigan reunion was held west of Boyne City, at the Park of the Pines, August 18 to 28. It was a greater success than we had hoped for. The weather was ideal, and so many more being present than we had expected, it is impossible to express the joy we felt in seeing our people gather together to renew old acquaintance and form new friendships that will be a pleasure and joy to think of during the coming year. Not alone from this did we find enjoyment and pleasure, but each prayer meeting and each preaching service was one where we felt nearer to our Savior. And we as Saints of God, temples of God, were made to feel we might go out to others that they might be blessed in hours of sorrow and trouble and be ready to respond and obey that we may come to the unity of faith.

After the first prayer meeting, Friday morning, August 18, the organization was formed, which was as follows: District presidency in charge, assisted by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths; secretary, Ada Alldread; chorister, Arthur E. Starks; pianist, Hattie Schreur, with power to choose assistants; ushers, Oriole Girls; press committee, Geniveve Claspell; policeman, Elder Dirk Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan, who fulfilled all the duties of such officer.

There were thirty-seven families camped on the grounds at one time, nearly all members of the church. The services were all well attended, many nonmembers being present at nearly all services.

Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, of Columbus, Ohio; John R.

Grice, of Saint Clair; William S. Fligg, of Independence, Missouri; A. Max Carmichael, of Lamoni, Iowa; and E. N. Burt, of Onaway, were present; also R. D. Davis and family, of Saulte Sainte Marie; and B. H. Doty and family, of Traverse City. From these we received many helpful thoughts and heard sermons that cannot be forgotten. If we could apply those things to our lives and continue our effort, out of the dying hope of our character there would come new hope. A. Max Carmichael, general superintendent of the Sunday school, gave us some wonderful thoughts, especially for mothers in bringing up their children and how to make a child grow, religiously. He stated that a child grows religiously by being religious, and being religious makes one grow religious. This is truly food for thought.

Sunday morning, during the general prayer service, Elder J. R. Grice was led by the Spirit of God to compose and write a beautiful song which he and Elder B. H. Doty sang at the close of the service. It is beautiful in itself, but knowing the circumstances and spirit in which it was written makes it seem to us one of our most beautiful songs.

The Women's Department, in charge of J. R. Grice and Ada Alldread, held a very interesting session Thursday afternoon.

The Young People's orchestra did much to make the reunion the success it was. Thursday evening they gave a musical entertainment which was very good and highly appreciated by all. At this entertainment B. H. Doty sang three songs which he has composed. "Park of the Pines" was written by Elder Doty last year and dedicated to the reunion grounds, Park of the Pines.

There were thirteen baptized and Elvin Hixon, of Shingleton, was ordained during the reunion.

We are all planning on a better reunion next year. Come, help make it better.

Reunion Items

Culled from correspondence of the missionaries.

Elder George W. Thorburn reports the Race Track, Montana, reunion closing with tent full. It was pronounced by all the best reunion held, not from point of numbers, but in spirituality and educational uplift. Speakers were T. C. Kelley, F. M. McDowell, Jott A. Bronson, Roscoe Davey, and George W. Thorburn. The vote was unanimous for a reunion next year.

Elder George W. Robley reports having attended the Kirtland reunion, where wonderful meetings were held, especially on the last Sunday morning.

Elder W. E. Shakespeare says the attendance at the Haileyville, Oklahoma, reunion was small and the weather extremely hot, but they were encouraged with large crowds of nonmembers at night, thus having opportunity to get the gospel before many people who otherwise would not be reached.

Elder P. R. Burton attended at Inman, Nebraska, "one of the best reunions I have attended for some time. The crowds were not large, but there was a good spirit present all the time. I baptized three last week, making eight for the month."

Elder R. L. Fulk writes: "We had a good reunion at Rupert, Idaho; not so many Saints in attendance as we would have liked, but sufficient to call down the blessings of the Lord upon us. The attendance of nonmembers was quite gratifying, as we had as many as 210 out to evening services. I am sure an interest was aroused that may be followed up to good advantage."

Council Bluffs, and Vicinity

There was an antidote for the disappointment in the absence of Elder T. W. Williams, when it was discovered that Elder Paul M. Hanson had arrived to assist at the reunion. The evening sessions at the reunion were largely attended. The health of the camp was excellent. It seems that it is quite largely thought that the reunion spirit needs improving, and some effort is made in that direction. To come up higher is commendable. It is decided to have the reunion of 1923 at the same place if it can be secured, and that an effort will be made to purchase in Council Bluffs, or vicinity, permanent grounds for the reunions of the three districts now united in reunion work. Work has already begun to make the coming reunion more beneficial to young Saints, and I have thought that might improve the good feelings of us older ones, especially if real spiritual improvement were made. We will be glad to assist in this regard. We heard no criticism of the preaching, but some criticism because there was not more of it. This can be easily remedied.

Since the reunion the Mission Church in the west end of the city has been used for services, and it is much appreciated by the Saints who have worked so hard to build up and keep the work going in that part. Last Sunday occurred the marriage in this church of Brother Robert Anderson, a brother who, though near seventy years of age, is but young in the church, and while his companion in life is not a member of the church yet he respected the sacred ordinance so as to comply with the instruction to have the ordinance "solemnized in a public meeting."

There has been quite a falling off in attendance at the Central church services since the hot weather began, but since many of the tourists have returned and others are on the way we hope to see the same interest as in the past. When Sister Hattie Jacobson returned to the city from California, her name was Mrs. George Lincoln, but her interest in church work has not abated. We are surely glad to see the interest of Brother Jacobson since his return from California, where he has been for about two years.

A rally day for the Sunday school is to be held next Sunday, and sacrifice week for the Christmas Fund will begin at that time, or the spirit of it has begun already. We hope to hear of a large contribution for the foreign missionary fund, and that this fund will be made available for use immediately. Indirectly we have heard from Brother Nels P. Hansen who is now in Denmark, and enjoying the sacrifice he has made to visit his homeland in gospel service. We learn that his people received him, and the Lord has blessed him in ministering the word beyond his fondest expectation. His Sunday school class gave him a portfolio just before his departure, and they are expecting him to use some of the stationery and a little of his time in penning them a letter.

Since the reunion the president of the branch has been absent from the city nearly two weeks. Other points are receiving of his influence and ministrations, we are assured.

We have been conscious of the good influence that has been exercised, both publicly and privately, by Apostle P. M. Hanson, as evidence has come from several sources. We have known him since boyhood, and it is with great pleasure that I have noted his development in spiritual power. May his light never be dimmed, nor grow less. When one keeps close to God, and improves every opportunity for self-improvement, God will supplement his efforts.

During and since the reunion we have received much assistance from the labors of Brethren S. A. Burgess and A. M. Chase and their wives, all of whom labored to make the work of God a greater power for good, and they will find a welcome by the Saints here whenever they can return.

Several are trying to arrange to attend the coming General Conference. The general expression of all is that they anticipate an excellent meeting of God's people and that great advancement will be made, both in eliminating from our program that which is not the most effectual in developing the spirituality of the Saints, and in advancing such plans as will make the work of warning the nations and establishing Zion in greatness and especially in quality more effectual. The present unreconciled condition in the industrial world is compelling Saints to think as never before along the needs of a place of safety, where they can live together in peace.

Southern Wisconsin Reunion

The attendance was somewhat better than last year. We tried to work in harmony with the general reunion committee and not get loaded up with preachers, Apostle R. C. Russell being the only outside man, aside from one or two who attended, as is many times the case. These we are glad to have, but they were of no great expense to the reunion.

The meetings were very good and the Spirit of God graced the gathering from start to finish. There was one tongue with interpretation and at least four prophecies, all of these bringing instruction, reproof, and direction.

Some advancement was made that we have long hoped for; Brother Russell advised that we discontinue the use of meat during the reunion according to Doctrine and Covenants 86, where the Lord has told us it would be pleasing that it should be used sparingly whenever used, "and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine." And next year we feel very confident that the Saints will vote the same. It was also voted not to serve tea or coffee, as three generations of the First Presidency have now taught that tea and coffee are included in "hot drinks." "And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly." (Doctrine and Covenants 86:1.)

It seems good to see the Saints of our time willing to stand as high as the Saints did in 1837, or at least making an effort in that direction. "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel and not slay them."

It would seem that if ever we need this fulfilled in our lives it is now. Too long have many treated lightly these sayings and commandments, even many of the priesthood, and as one of them admitted some years ago—the only reason he defended hot drink was because he liked the tea and coffee!

Well, Brother Russell, we will welcome you again to our reunion in 1923, and hope that the general committee may see fit to thus direct. But should you not be able to attend we will try to remember and do our best. I now know of some who on returning to their homes are trying to leave tea and coffee and may they be blessed in so doing.

The district provided for a reunion at Madison in 1923, time left to a committee to decide. If possible they are to arrange that the Northeastern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will not come on the same date as this year. We hope that seeing the crops are from ten days to two weeks earlier in Illinois, that they will be kind enough to begin one week earlier. Knowing the Saints of Northeastern Illinois so well, I feel sure that they will say, "Yes; our reunion will be a week earlier." We want the greatest good to the greatest number.

Your servant in Christ,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

SOLDIERS GROVE, WISCONSIN.

O Lord, teach me to know my need of help from thee, and seek after it; to find my place and keep it; to know my duty and do it. Amen.—Daily Prayer of John Wallace.

• FOR YOU! FOR EVERYBODY!

The Doctor

The Writer

The Traveler

The Home

The Store-Keeper

The Engineer

Remington Portable

STANDARD KEYBOARD®
—No Shifting for Figures!

THIS handy, compact writing machine is the latest addition to the famed Remington family.

Especially designed for intimate, personal use. It fits in a case only four inches high, can be carried anywhere, used everywhere, and is a real necessity to every man, woman or child who has any writing to do.

Like all Remington Typewriters it turns out clean-cut, beautiful work speedily and efficiently.

Price, complete with case, $60

SPECIAL TERMS TO MISSIONARIES
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

From Society Islands

A two-masted schooner now in island missionary service. A good opportunity for successor to "Evangelia."

Elder Clyde F. Ellis writes to the First Presidency:

"Bishop Karlstrom will be leaving in a few days on board Heitiare, a two-masted schooner he has been instrumental in repairing, for the lower section of the Tuamotuan group. He has worked faithfully on the project, and now has it in shape. It is for the native membership to take hold and grasp the situation, and I think they will with wise and diplomatic direction. Some opposition is naturally germinating in the nests of the traders, but we hope to forge ahead according to the law and let them howl.

"I am inclosing a letter, with translation, that Tapu a Moana brought to me about the time Sister Hanson left for America, but through some mistake it was mislaid, not translated, and consequently did not reach you. I am sending you the native letter written by Tapu himself, the president of the elder's quorum. I gave it a very literal translation, as I thought you would be interested to know their manner of expression."

The translation of the letter written by Tapu a Moana follows:

"To the Servant of the Lord, the Prophet of God, and the Handmaiden, and all the members of the household, Greeting unto you in the mercies of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amèn.

"We, the members of the branch in Arutua, meet you through this letter, and we now send this sign of our love to you. There is your mat for your home. We are pleased to send this mat to you and you receive it.

"We still trust in our meeting in this mission, but what year will it be? It is for you to decide that year. Let us, your children, know!

"Martha will give the mat to you.

"That is all, written by, TAPU A MOANA."

Bishop Karlstrom also writes as follows:

"As I have given practically all of my time to the work on the Heitiare, about all I have to report is boat news. The boat was launched on the first day of August. She slipped into the water without a difficulty and seems to be very seaworthy in every respect. One mast was found defective and has been replaced by a new one. We have new sails throughout. There is about three days' work left for a mechanic on the engine and then we will be ready to go, unless I meet with some unseen obstacle. I anticipate no difficulty as the French officials so far have been very kind to me. The harbor master came to the house when I was sick to consult with me concerning some parts of the ship. He then told me he would be glad to help me in any way he could.

"We hope to see the work take on new life both spiritually and temporally as the boat begins to circulate among the membership.

"We would have enjoyed very much the privilege of attending the next General Conference, but we have now relinquished all hope for that."

The Good Done in Adopting Older Children

In the correspondence of the Children's Home concerning the placing of children, we find many offers of homes for little children, but not so many for those who are older. Among the older ones there are often children with splendid capabilities. While few may consider the adoption of a child who has reached the age of thirteen to fifteen years, a great opportunity may thus be opened by taking such an one and giving him the help and encouragement needed to fit him for a noble vocation in life.

ZILPHA MONROE, Superintendent.

Dedication at Ubly, Michigan

A one-day meeting, including dedication of the church, was held at Ubly, Michigan, Sunday, August 20. The weather was ideal and the attendance large. Saints from many parts of the district were present, many who at some time in the past had lived in Ubly Branch. These especially, and all others, rejoiced over the success of the branch in now having a church building of their own in which to worship instead of going from home to home as in former years, and from which the honest in heart may hear the gospel message.

The church is a neat brick structure, handily arranged with basement, etc., and neatly furnished. It cost about four thousand dollars in money, but counting donations of labor, etc., it cost about $5,000. The building was started about five years ago by a small branch of Saints, who labored hard to proceed with the work of building. Soon after a number of families moved away, leaving the task of completing the church to a few scattered Saints, who through diligent efforts and sacrifice succeeded in paying the balance of the debt.

Prayer meeting opened at 9 a. m. with the district president, William Grice, and the branch president, William Davis, in charge, who also had the direction of the meetings of the day. A peaceful spirit prevailed at the meeting; many encouraging testimonies were borne.

At the opening of the next service at 11 a. m. a volunteer chorister and organist were asked for. Sister Weaver, of Brown City, and Sister Webster, of Elkton, responded. Also many volunteers contributed of their talent to the choir.

Brother M. Carr was the speaker for this hour, using for his text 1 Timothy 1: 15, delivering a powerful sermon with much of God's Spirit attending.

After this service lunch was partaken of from well-filled baskets spread on tables in the basement.

At 2 p. m. the dedicatory sermon was preached by William Grice, from the oft-used text for like occasions: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." He spoke with excellent liberty, presenting many beautiful thoughts.

The dedicatory prayer was offered by assistant president of the district, Brother A. Sheffer, who also was the speaker for the evening hour. Because of the good attendance and attention from the outside it was decided that he continue the meetings there for a few evenings.

We are hoping that the honest in heart may be brought into the fold and rejoice in the gospel with the few Saints of that place, helping them to carry on the work there.

Sincerely yours,

EMMA VOLZ.

Cameron, Missouri

During the past spring and summer we have been well remembered by the church officials, as we have been favored with visits as well as excellent sermons from President Frederick M. Smith, President Elbert A. Smith, Apostles Myron A. McConley, John W. Rushton, J. F. Curtis, also Bishop J. A. Koehler of the stake bishopric. We greatly appreciate the visits of any of the brothers and feel that the more we become acquainted with them the more they and their work is appreciated by the membership of the church.

Our pastor, Elder R. S. Budd, is meeting with success in his work here, being ably assisted by the local priesthood.

He usually occupies the Sunday evening hour, as the congregation at that time has more nonmembers than at any other time. The Wednesday evening prayer meetings are showing improvement and are a source of strength to the Saints. The young people's prayer meetings on Sunday morning are a success, showing that the young people are willing to move out and occupy.

Brother Spragg, while being employed at Almira (a little town southeast of Cameron), interested some of the people to the extent that one of the leading men there offered his hall to be used for preaching. Brother R. S. Budd took advantage of the opportunity to get the gospel before the people, holding meetings for two weeks with good interest, and one fine man being baptized a few days afterwards at the Stewartsville reunion. E. F. Robertson, of the stake presidency, is looking after the opening, holding a series of meetings there at present.

On September 12 we had Brother James R. Houghton, of Davenport, Iowa, a former student of Graceland and graduate of the Iowa University, with us, giving a musical program. Brother Houghton was assisted by Sisters Doris Jean and Mabel Maxwell, also Miss Neva Garner. The church was not large enough to accommodate the crowd. An item in the News-Observer, written by the editor, shows the program was much appreciated.

G. S. DANIEL.

Independence

President Frederick M. Smith was the speaker at the Stone Church at the morning hour on Sunday the 24th, which was the day observed in common with the church as College Day. His address was around this theme and was enthusiastically received, the Saints generally appreciating the emphasis made on the spiritual side of education.

The collection for the College Day fund resulted in receipt of $552.81 in cash and $160 in pledges at the Stone Church. We have not been able to get information on what was done in this regard at the other churches. It is estimated that if the rest of the church did as well in response to the appeal for support to this fund, the total for the church would be over $25,000. It is reported that about twenty students from Independence are in attendance at Graceland this year.

In the evening Elder J. W. Rushton preached a powerful sermon on the big need of the church to-day being God—that we must go back to Christ to go forward to God.

The Second Independence Saints observed their annual Harvest Home Festival on Sunday, the church being profusely and beautifully decorated with garden, field, and orchard products. There was an afternoon service especially on the theme, with special program by the Walnut Park orchestra and two short addresses by local men, Elders E. E. Willard and A. K. Dillee. The speaker at the morning service was Elder T. W. Williams, and at the evening service Elder William I. Fligg. At the close of the evening service apples were distributed through the kindness of one of the brethren, one to each of the large congregation.

Apostles R. C. Russell, J. W. Rushton, T. W. Williams, Paul M. Hanson, J. F. Curtis, J. A. Gillen, G. T. Griffiths, and U. W. Greene are now in the city. Apostles M. A. McConley and C. A. Butterworth are in Australia, and there are two vacancies in the quorum.

Brother Greene is still confined to his bed with malaria and is allowed to see but few visitors. His condition on the day this is written is reported as slightly improved.

For five years now the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences has been conducting day and evening classes at the Stone Church and surrounding offices. The school has been

“for those who must work but are willing to study,” and has grown from a handful of students until it now numbers nearly three hundred. Brother and Sister Walter W. Smith, as president and registrar, have been the moving spirits of the school, but have also had the loyal and freely given cooperation of a large number of competent instructors.

The school has now grown to a point where the classrooms and scattered equipment are inadequate to the demand, and so under the direction of the board, which includes the Presidency and Bishopric, articles of incorporation as a school of higher learning were filed last week in the circuit court of Jackson County and the petition was granted Saturday. The school, with the assistance of a committee of representative business and church men, is now seeking a proper home in which to establish the institute permanently. Several desirable properties are under consideration and no doubt the announcement of final selection will be made soon.

The more permanent establishment of the institute will link up with the educational program of the church and will be a great impetus to the work in Zion.

Conference visitors will have an opportunity to see the closing program of the summer season showing of motion pictures on the Stone Church lawn at 8 p. m., September 30. The beautiful picture with Norma Talmadge in “Smilin’ through” will be shown. The season has been a success in most instances, though some poor pictures were had when substitutions were made by the house furnishing the films. Expenses have been paid by two collections a month; throughout September the collections have been weekly, in order to provide for some pictures for the winter season.

The Iowa Club executive considered it inadvisable to hold their annual picnic, but are considering the plan of having a social later on.

Elder T. W. Williams will address the Stone Church Religion on Friday evening on the subject, “What the church proposes to do for its young people.” This has considerable significance, coming at this time and from the general superintendent of the department.

The following new students have enrolled in the school of nursing at the Sanitarium as probationers: Hattie Smith, of Wisconsin; Dorothy Smith, of Iowa; Katie R. Hansen, Alice Dion, Alice May Ek, of Independence; Jessie Silvers, of Nevada, Missouri; Lucretia Brewster, of Ohio; Altha Koehler, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Zaida Derry, of Nebraska; Leta Ralston, Colorado; Hazel Larabee, of Ontario.

Preparations for General Conference continue. The innumerable little details demanding attention in order to care for visitors are receiving attention. Good meals will be provided at the dining hall at the rear of the Stone Church. The local church people own a fine cafeteria equipment and are therefore in a position mechanically to furnish the best of service. With Arthur Daniel in charge of the details the Saints may be assured of the most wholesome and tasty food at the lowest price possible. Brother and Sister Daniel operate a popular cafeteria in Independence, and for a number of years he was head chef at the Myron Green cafeteria in Kansas City. In addition to the usual cafeteria meals there will be a lunch counter just a few steps northeast of the church at which one can get lighter sorts of edibles and refreshments conveniently.

The lot on Walnut and Grand, a block south of the Stone Church, is being leveled for the big tent, and the small brick house on the premises cleaned and decorated for the occasion for the occupancy of the reception and delegate committee. A bureau of information will be operated at the same place.

There will be an exhibit of much interest to Sunday school people in the cottage east of the church.

Occasional new faces are already seen among the Saints and are usually found to be visitors here for General Conference.

The most of the Sunday schools in Zion outside the Stone Church congregation will function about as usual, but all other regular church services (except early morning prayer services) are being dispensed with and the Saints will mingle with the crowds at the big tent and the Stone Church. There were a few days last week when the weather was uncomfortably cool, but the past few days have been pleasantly warm and seem to promise fine weather for the conference, beginning next Sunday morning.

The Stone Church is attempting Sunday school, though the division of classes will be entirely different than usual. This will be followed by a sacramental service at the tent, which will likely tax the capacity of the place.

Our Independence items will not be continued as such during the next few weeks, the conference items of the Conference Daily and the regular weekly issues of the HERALD likely covering all the items we would report here.

On account of moving the sending apparatus into another room, preparatory to the conference, the radio mechanism did not work right Sunday. Brother Harold Edwards had installed a receiving set at Walnut Park and invited an audience in, but the broadcasting mechanism had not been adjusted rightly, and only disappointment resulted. However, there is every reason to believe the next program, to be sent out at 2 p. m. next Sunday, with sermon by J. W. Rushton, and the usual good musical program, will be satisfactory. Tune in at 360 meters.

Brother Arthur E. McKim will be in charge of the broadcasting of special features during conference, of which there will be a number. So far as possible, the Conference Daily will announce these beforehand.

The Saints of Seattle and community now residing in Independence, gave a reception to Brother and Sister J. M. Terry at the home of Sister P. L. Stillman, on last Thursday evening. Brother Terry was pastor in Seattle for eight years and in Oakland, California, as president of the Northern California District for twelve years. Recently they moved to Zion and found a goodly number of their flock who had preceded them in the gathering.

The auto camp on West Walnut Street is being put into excellent shape for the convenience of those who attend conference by means of this popular means of transportation. The grounds are amply spacious to accommodate a large number of cars, are of convenient access, being on paved streets. City water has been piped in, toilets have been installed, and some tourist ovens have been erected, with improvements still in progress.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending September 23: Jesse Standley, Mrs. Mary Lay and Baby Lay, and Mrs. Howard Brooks and Baby Brooks, Kansas City, Missouri; Master Willard Smallwood, Leeds, Missouri; Reverend G. J. Warren, Lees Summit, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. P. L. Kittle and Baby Kittle, H. C. Wheritt, Mrs. Ida Lale, Mrs. Robert Holman, Mrs. Annie Allen, Master George Walker, Ada Marguerite Walker, and Mrs. Rachael Green. X-ray patients: Eva V. Wedlock, Cameron, Missouri; and J. C. Foss, Mrs. Emma Inman, Josephine Long, Mark Siegfried, Mrs. G. W. Eastwood, David Frazier, Mrs. H. G. Williams, C. E. Shepherd, and Mrs. E. H. Proffitt, all of Independence.

"Pride is not a bad thing when it only urges us to hide our own hurts—not to hurt others."—George Eliot.

Kansas City Stake

The Reverend W. F. McConn was the speaker at Central at eleven o'clock, on the subject, "The challenge of citizenship," in the interests of the Anti-Saloon League. Apostle T. W. Williams was the speaker at 7.45 with a subject, "The church." Both were splendid efforts. Thomas Newton, of West Virginia, was the speaker at 7.45 at Argentine. Hubert Case was the speaker at 7.45 at Grandview.

A very spiritual day marked all of the Sunday services at Fourth Kansas City, where Patriarch Ammon White held forth, giving blessings to a number, and in preaching the word at 11 and 7.45. A record attendance at all services was of much encouragement to those in charge.

Saint Louis, Missouri

On Sunday, August 20, we were favored with a visit from Brother G. S. Trowbridge, business manager of the Herald Publishing House. At the morning service his daughter Myrtle entertained the Sunday school with a fine talk on "Experiences at Graceland." She especially emphasized the splendid spirit and atmosphere. Brother Granville preached in the upper auditorium at 11 o'clock a good practical exhortation on our duties as citizens of God's kingdom.

August 26, 27 the district conference convened at Lansdowne. While the attendance was not as large as was expected, the conventions and business sessions on Saturday passed off with a good degree of the Spirit and the Sunday sessions were fine. Especially the prayer and testimony service was blessed with a feeling of humility and love that strengthens the Saints for greater service. Many fine testimonies were given.

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser has been with us for about ten weeks doing social service work under the Saint Louis Provident Association, and on Sunday afternoon, September 3, the Women's Department had a session with a big attendance which was addressed by Sister Etzenhouser, showing the need of good social workers among us to teach the needy to help themselves. The subject was handled in so clear and definite a manner that we all felt well repaid for coming. We are sorry to see her leave for the new field of labor.

A good supper was then served to all who could remain for the evening service. The Saints are so widely scattered in this city that it is not practicable to go home after an afternoon service and return for night service.

Another enjoyable event was the marriage on September 6 of Brother Clarence Archibald, son of our pastor, and Sister Maethel Bell, only daughter of our choir leader. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The prayers and good wishes of the large congregation go with the young couple in their new life.

With the coming of fall weather we hope for a better attendance at all our services. E. B.

Toronto, Ontario

The Religio here has undertaken to give the crippled soldiers of the Christie Street Hospital an annual outing. Members of the church with cars, and some business men outside of the church, loan their cars for the occasion. The soldiers are given a two-hour drive around the city, taken to the church, and there entertained with a program, followed with a corn roast, weinies, and ice cream.

Last Friday evening makes the third time they have been entertained by the Religio. They certainly enjoyed themselves, and some of them said we were the only church in the city that entertained them in that way.

One of the theaters contributed a professional for the evening. The program closed with the singing of old favorite and patriotic songs, thrown on the screen.

Our church has been thoroughly renovated, being redecorated inside and out. A committee has been appointed to look into the purchasing of a pipe organ.

Toronto is a beautiful city, situated on Lake Ontario. The water front is a wonderful asset, and the people appreciate it. "Sunnyside" is being made into possibly the most modern pleasure resort on the continent. It is largely on made land, sand being pumped from the lake.

Toronto is the best lighted city I have ever seen. There are cement lamp posts about every one hundred feet on each side of the street, and on every street in the city. The electricity comes from Niagara. The city owns the light and water plant. The light bills are less than half what is generally charged for cities. The water is on the flat-rate basis. The city also owns the street car system, and it is being developed into one of the finest systems in the world.

The annual exhibition has just closed. This fair is run on a world's fair scale. Over a million and a quarter people paid admission to see it.

There was a great baby show at the fair. There were many contestants; finally the sweepstakes was won by a little lady whose father works for one of our brothers. We had the baby on the program! She posed for us! She is a perfect specimen of babyhood.

We are hoping for a good General Conference. May the Saints all unite everywhere in prayers that the Lord Jesus Christ may have the right of way.

313 Brock Avenue.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

Ottumwa, Iowa

We think that it may be of interest to tell of the series of services which have just been concluded at this place. It had been nearly a year since we had any change from the routine of branch meetings, and we therefore thought that it would be to the advantage of all to hold some services of a special nature.

Once this was decided we wrote F. Henry Edwards and Prescott A. Foo, the missionaries to this district. They conferred with C. J. Smith, the missionary supervisor, and wrote that they would be glad to come. The next thing was to make what preparations we could, such as advertising, and we did this as far as we were able. Insertions were made in the local paper, large posters were printed and placed at special points, small cards of invitation were handed out, and personal letters were written to some who would be specially interested.

The meetings started Sunday, September 3. Topics were, "Our relation to God," "The place of Christ in Christianity," "The principles," etc. The earnestness with which these topics were presented, and the grasp the speakers had of their subjects, made them both clear and interesting. Every morning we wrote a short synopsis of the sermon of the previous evening, and had it inserted in the local paper. Brother Foo is from Hawaii, and Brother Edwards from England, and their illustrated talks on their native countries, which were given every evening for fifteen minutes prior to the sermon, were the means of bringing us quite good crowds. In addition we had community and special singing under the direction of Priest John Baker, and this also added considerably to the interest.

There were no resulting baptisms, but there has been no excuse for the people in this community, and we feel that if we continue such efforts it will not be long before we can see some results. Inside the branch there has been a tendency to reinforce our membership with a sense of their responsibility, and with a desire to be of service to the cause. The cooperation of the Saints was appreciated by the writer, and the missionaries expressed the same feeling before leaving for other points. Prior to their going a farewell social was held, Monday evening, and a very enjoyable time was had by all present. The Saints here are of opinion that in these two young men the church has two earnest, conscientious, serious workers, and that they have great prospects for service. As we move out into the routine of branch work, we do so with renewed vigor and hope.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

F. C. BEVAN, Branch President.

Two-day Meeting at Wells, Michigan

A two-day meeting was held at Wells, Michigan, September 9 and 10, Elder Ernest N. Burt in charge. A spiritual sermon was preached by him on Friday evening preceding the two-day meeting.

We met for prayer meeting Saturday morning fasting and four young men were called to the priesthood.

Saturday afternoon, the branch at Wells was organized in full working order, Elder A. M. Boomer being chosen as presiding elder and four young men ordained to the priesthood as follows: Garland Boomer and Otis Hicks, priests; Delos Coppock, teacher; and Frank Hicks, deacon. There was much rejoicing as these young men humbly offered themselves as workers for the Master. The Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Department were voted in as a part of the district.

A priesthood meeting was held early Sunday morning, followed by a general prayer meeting. Saints from Munson, Whitedale, Manistique, and Gladstone were with us, and we truly enjoyed the Spirit of God.

There was a baptismal service at 1.15 p. m., with Otis Hicks officiating while two were baptized.

Elder Burt preached twice on Saturday and also twice on Sunday, using charts with three of his sermons. Brother Howe and Brother Boomer were also speakers.

This was the first two-day meeting for the Wells Branch, but we feel sure it will not be the last one. Although we felt sad to part from our brothers and sisters, we felt much refreshed and encouraged by their presence with us and hope the time will hasten when we meet to part no more.

Elder Burt remained with us for Monday night services. The room was filled with eager listeners and we are sure much good was accomplished.

Sister A. McKenzie, of Independence, Missouri, writes: "There is a wonderful fund of information to be gained from visiting the church library. The pleasant, 'homey' feeling while there is partly due to the pleasant greetings of Sisters M. T. Short and Bertha Constance, who are always willing to impart information. A pleasant manner does not cost anything, goes a long way towards making life pleasant, and does not detract in any way from supposed personal dignity.

"The glory of God is intelligence,' and the privilege of having such valuable information at hand should be taken advantage of by all. There are some who are blessed with a remarkable degree of intelligence who do not avail themselves of this privilege, who might add to their knowledge from the large selection of books that are there. God has said, 'My people perish from lack of knowledge,' and he also said, 'Study all good books,' but few avail themselves of this opportunity."

MISCELLANEOUS

Pastoral Notices

To the Saints of the Southwestern States; Greeting: As I have been appointed to labor as supervisor of the missionary work in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and North and South Carolina, I request of you the necessary cooperation in my work that will get me acquainted with the needs of the different parts of this large territory. If the Saints and members of the priesthood will kindly correspond with me, that I might get in touch with openings that have already been made that should be followed up, and advise me as to other places where effectual openings might possibly be made, I will appreciate this, as I must have your cooperation in this work. I admonish the members of the priesthood throughout the southeastern States to be faithful in service, and always to be alert to the missionary possibilities of your various localities. Would you kindly report to me your missionary activities, that I may be of assistance to you? The laborers are few and our field is large, therefore let us all be alive to our duty. I feel very much encouraged at the outlook, and am assured that with your cooperation we shall be greatly successful in the prosecution of our work. I am anxious to return to the States as soon as possible, which will likely be some time in December. It was deemed necessary that I labor for a season in the Isle of Pines and the Cayman Islands, assisting Elders Tordoff and Carr. My present field address is Nueva Gerona, Isle of Pines, and my home address is 1214 West Waldo Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Requests for missionary work will reach me at either address.

Your coworker,
J. CHARLES MAY.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Davis, of Kewanee District, requests that the Saints will unite in prayer with her that God may hear and answer her prayers.

Conference Notices

Eastern Iowa, at Muscatine, October 20 and 21. First service on the 20th at 8 p. m. Amos Berve, president.

Massachusetts, with Boston Branch, October 29, 1922. W. A. Sinclair, M. D.

Thirty Daily Subscriptions Lost

Elder William I. Fligg, laboring in Michigan, has been very zealous in gathering subscriptions to the Conference Daily. At the Port Huron conference recently he took the names of a large number who paid him and will expect the Daily, but he has lost his notebook containing about thirty of the names and has no way of remembering them. He asks that anyone likely to be affected notify the publishing house, and they will confer with Brother Fligg and send the paper.

Addresses Wanted

An endeavor was recently made to get an up-to-date directory of the relatives or the closest friends of the inmates of our Homes for the Aged, whom we should notify in case of serious illness or death.

That this directory may be complete we would appreciate information in behalf of Mary E. Boline, formerly of Arkansas,

Jennie Jones, formerly of Tennessee, and John A. Stephenson, formerly of Canada.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—At Whittemore, September 15 to 17, was a decided success in every respect. Everyone showed a marked desire to fall in line the coming year. The prayer meetings were characterized by a high degree of spirituality. During the Sunday morning meeting a gift of tongues was given by Patriarch Shields in which the Saints were commended for their humbleness and unity and were admonished to be more

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Ask God and It Shall Be Given	899
Historic Theories of the Atonement	900
A Liberal Giver	902
Old Settlers' Day in Harrison County, Iowa	902
Good Enrollment at Graceland	902
Year Book of the Churches	902

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Primitive Tribe Found, by T. W. Williams	903
--	-----

GENERAL INTEREST:

When a Dollar Is Not a Dollar in Value	904
The American's Creed	904
Commendation for the Holden Home	904

PASTORAL:

Democracy	904
-----------------	-----

THE FORUM:

Equality Again, by James E. Yates	906
---	-----

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

LETTERS AND NEWS

Nellie Martin—Vida E. Smith—Richard Bullard—A. M. Chase —Hattie K. Bell—Stella E. Thoman—R. S. Salyards—C. J. Hunt—R. C. Chambers—G. H. Wixom—John Blackmore— Jasper O. Dutton—Clyde F. Ellis—Zilpha Monroe—Emma Volz—G. S. Daniel—C. Edward Miller—F. C. Bevan.	909
--	-----

MISCELLANEOUS

diligent in keeping the Word of Wisdom. The speakers for the conference were: Patriarch Shields, of Canada; Patriarch G. W. Burt, M. Umphrey (district president); B. H. Doty, G. E. Burt, and A. E. Burr. Verna Burt, press committee.

ALABAMA.—At Lone Star, September 2, presided over by W. J. Williamson, J. R. Harper, and N. L. Booker. W. H. Drake acted as secretary. Branches reporting: Flat Rock, 48, gain 1; Lone Star, 163, loss 4; Pleasant Hill, 363, loss 6. Ministerial reports showed 63 sermons and 45 baptisms. H. H. Wiggins and J. W. Baldwin were recommended for ordination, accepted, and ordained. A motion that the appointing power be petitioned to appoint W. J. Williamson as missionary in the Alabama District was carried. The following were elected delegates to conference, with power to cast majority and minority vote: W. J. Williamson, J. R. Harper, N. L. Booker, Alma Booker, Vida Booker, and Sister Alma Booker. Adjourned to meet at Pleasant Hill, December 1 to 3. W. H. Drake, secretary pro tem.

OWEN SOUND.—At Owen Sound, June 30 to July 2, with the presidency of the district presiding, associated with R. C. Russell and John Shields. Officers of the district reported work performed. Statistical reports were made by district and Sunday school department secretaries. Branch reports were received from fifteen localities. Financial reports were rendered by the officers and were approved. New officials are: D. B. Perkins, Wiarton, president; J. L. Mortimer, Owen Sound, first vice president; K. Cooper, Guelph, second vice president; J. H. Leeder, North Bruce, secretary; G. Furness, Owen Sound, chorister; F. B. Stade, Harrison, bishop's agent and treasurer; Laura Taylor, Orangeville, librarian and secretary of Sunday school; R. J. Wilcox, Owen Sound, Sunday school superintendent; Chester Smith, Manitowaning, first assistant; Robert Campbell, Arthur, second assistant. Invitations for the 1923 conference were received from Garafraxa, Wiarton, and Guelph. Garafraxa was accepted, time to be decided upon by district presidency. Special meetings, held in various places in the district, were placed in charge of the district president and the supervisor. The system of having each branch assist in contribution to the budget fund was again put into operation. Delegates to General Conference are: James Dobson, R. C. Russell, S. G. St. John, J. L. Mortimer, James Pycock, J. H. Yager, John Shields, W. A. Smith, N. E. Leeder (chairman), John H. Taylor, James A. Morrison, F. B. Stade, G. C. Tomlinson, Mrs. J. L. Mortimer, Mrs. Margaret Macgregor. Alternates: Lillian Perkins, J. H. Leeder. Delegates present are to cast full majority and minority vote. The early morning sessions were for prayer and testimony, the sacrament being the most fully occupied by any attended by the writer. Gifts of tongues and interpretation were enjoyed. Brother Percy Farrow was ordained. Women's Department occupied two sessions with talks by Sister Macgregor. Saturday night being on July 1, the holiday was observed by a program of songs, readings, instrumental selections, reminiscences, and a playlet by the local Women's Department. In a problem meeting presided over by Elder Russell, such subjects as "Recreation," "Tithing," "Consecrations," "Stewardships," and "Inheritances" were discussed. A priesthood meeting occupied a portion of Sunday afternoon. Preaching services were instructive and spiritual, the speakers being some of the missionaries who a decade ago were laboring among us, Elders G. C. Tomlinson, J. T. Thompson, R. C. Russell, and James Pycock. Services were held in the church which is being erected by the Owen Sound Saints, and is not quite completed. Many branches were quite fully represented at the Sunday services, but the church was amply large to accommodate comfortably all who had come. The situation was most excellent and the Owen Sound Saints are to be congratulated in having such an edifice for purposes of worship. J. H. Leeder, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

POTS.—Maud Gilmore Potts died at Providence Hospital, Seattle, Washington, September 1, 1922, at the age of thirty-three years, eight months, and sixteen days. Married Curtis J. Potts, December 22, 1916. Her husband, two children, father, mother, three brothers, and one sister survive. Sermon by J. M. Terry.

Something for Everybody

In looking over any current number of Autumn Leaves one at all appreciative to literary values is bound to admit that one finds in it a wide variety of material, the most of which is of definite value to members of this church. And it is not limited to any age or class of people.

Those who like wholesome fiction will find it here by our own writers. It is usually based on distinctively church conditions and attains a pleasingly high standard of quality.

Those whose lives are constantly devoted to the uplift of humanity will appreciate the experiences of others engaged in similar work and who take the time to tell us about it.

Those who work in the Sunday school or the Religio will benefit greatly by keeping in touch with the messages from those elected to have charge of these departments.

Altogether all but the indolent and the indifferent will find in Autumn Leaves that which will encourage and help them in the work before the church.

The October number, just off the press, contains the following special contributions in addition to others "too numerous to mention," as the sale bills put it:

"This gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all the world," by Apostle T. W. Williams, whose enthusiasm over the possibilities of foreign mission work is contagious. One of the ways to bring about the extension of our missionary program is by loyalty to the Christmas offering fund for this "Social graces" is the popular serial by Marcella Schenck, with Graceland College setting.

Elders T. W. Williams and A. Max Carmichael are editors of Religio and Sunday School Departments, and furnish valuable food for thought each month.

The October number is a typical issue, and one of twelve big numbers for only $1.75 a year.

Our Missionary Paper

The new Ensign is nine months old, healthy and strong, and grows better as the days go by.

The Saints long wanted a missionary paper, free to function in that field and unhampered by other features. That wish has been gratified in Zion's Ensign in its new form, edited by Elder John F. Garver.

Elder Garver has had considerable experience as a missionary, and as president of the Lamoni Stake and Lamoni Branch has sensed the necessity of missionary idealism as a basis for the best pastoral results.

Furthermore, as one of the editorial staff of the SAINTS' HERALD for several years he came to know intimately the possibilities before us in a journalistic way.

Each issue contains one or more pertinent editorials, an informing feature being the "News and observations," discussing religious developments throughout the world; some

LAST CALL FOR CONFERENCE DAILY

Subscriptions are pouring in with each mail. Missionaries are bringing in hundreds personally and still they come. If you have not already sent your quarter, do it to-day. It promises to be a momentous conference.

Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

year, which is to be devoted to the furtherance of foreign missions.

Then there is "Music and some of its effects," a delightfully human article illustrated by a fifteen-year-old lad at the Children's Home. "The way of the world," is bound to be popular because of its brevity. It is from the brain of Howard W. Harder, one of the secretaries in the office of the First Presidency and secretary of the Religio. "From our poets," brings us good verse from various geographical points, one of them by a young sister in high school (Veryl M. Wode) whose talent is already promising much.

"Getting even with 'Tater'" is a fine Halloween story by Hallie M. Gould, one of the Herald Office proof readers who reads everything we publish and became infected with the literary germ.

"Rules for writing," by I. A. Smith, of the Presiding Bishopric, is brief and pointed. "Dame Fashion as a dictator" is an ironic little diatribe about the old dame that causes us so much trouble over trying to keep up with her. The secretary of the Pen and Ink Club, Mollie Davis, is the author.

The editorials are short and themes found in everyday life.

"Signing the contract" is the subject of the monthly sermon, one of a series by Elder J. E. Wildermuth, of North Dakota.

"Seventeen days in prison" is a quarantine experience by Elder T. C. Kelley. "The kick in cigarets" helps us hate this vicious habit.

leading articles and sermons by prominent and capable church workers; short contributions on important subjects.

"From here and there" contains brief quotations from leading articles in contemporaneous periodicals in the religious field. "Letters and contributions" contains letters from the Saints, both those actively in the field and those who bear testimony of the goodness of God to them as manifested in their home lives.

A frequently-appearing department is "Old-time letters," being "letters from SAINTS' HERALD, showing forth the spirit of sacrifice and devotion in service of Saints and brethren of by-gone days." Recently used letters bore dates of forty-five years ago.

Perhaps one of the most universally-read departments is entitled "Missionary news and activities." It is an intimate report direct from the missionaries in the field, a veritable barometer of the status of our missionary work week by week. From it one is kept accurately in touch with the conditions that our missionaries are meeting and the results they are securing.

The Ensign is only a dollar a year for fifty-two sixteen-page numbers. It may be ordered for nonmembers for only seventy-five cents a year. Many are taking advantage of this offer. It keeps their friends informed of what the church believes and is trying to do. Many of our converts are in the church to-day because of the Ensign as the Silent Preacher.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, October 4, 1922

Number 40

Important Changes Proposed

Chief item of business at the first session was a revelation from the President, suggesting F. M. McDowell to fill vacancy in Presidency; release of Gomer T. Griffiths, U. W. Greene, C. A. Butterworth, R. C. Russell, from Twelve, and addition of Clyde F. Ellis, John F. Garver, D. T. Williams, Frank H. Edwards, Edmund J. Gleazer, and Roy S. Budd.

October 2, 1922.

To the Church:

To the matter of filling the leading quorums of the church in which vacancies now exist I have given prayerful and careful consideration and meditation, and the voice of inspiration to me is:

Let Floyd M. McDowell be ordained counselor to the President as a member of the First Presidency to fill the vacancy now existing.

Let Gomer T. Griffiths, Ulysses W. Greene, Cornelius A. Butterworth, and Robert C. Russell be released from further responsibility as apostles, to devote their activities as their strength and opportunity might permit to local work or as evangelical ministers as might be determined by subsequent procedure.

To fill the vacancies in the Quorum of Twelve let the following be ordained apostles: Clyde F. Ellis, John F. Garver, Daniel T. Williams, F. Henry Edwards, Edmund J. Gleazer, Roy S. Budd.

Let James A. Gillen be ordained President of the Quorum of Twelve.

The field is large and the time opportune. Let the missionary work be prosecuted with great vigor, and if the Twelve will devote themselves whole-heartedly to this work the church will be greatly blessed through their ministrations.

And let the Quorum of Twelve be further admonished that upon them rests the onerous burden of the missionary work of the church, and be not concerned with local administrative work except in emergencies or as sent by the Presidency, leaving the care of the local work to those officers previously indicated in the law.

Let contention cease.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

The conference, apparently in good spirits, adjourned to allow the quorums to discuss the revelation placed before it by the President.

Delegations were organizing and getting ready for any special call for delegate vote.

Under the big canopy of brown canvas, with a summer sun broilingly hot, the immense conference gathering of the Sixty-Eighth General Conference assembled in its first business session at 2 p. m., Monday, October 2.

A spiritual service of song was had during the half hour preceding the opening. Chorister Harold C. Burgess was able to secure much expression from the great assembly.

The seating of the assembly had been carefully arranged.

The First Presidency were backed by the Quorum of Twelve directly behind them in one long row, with the Presiding Bishopric at the end, next to them.

The general bishopric and patriarchs occupied the wing on the right of the chairman. The stake presidency and heads of departments were seated in the other wing. The main floor of the tent was divided into sections for the seventies, delegates, ex officios, and visitors, not overlooking special place for the aged and infirm.

The first song of the conference session proper was "Redeemer of Israel," Number 158 in the Hymnal. This favorite old hymn has been used in every opening session of General Conference for a dozen years, and was given similar honors many times prior.

President Frederick M. Smith at 2 p. m. came to the platform and announced the song. Arising in their seats, the audience with fervor and feeling sang this hymn of supplication.

Presiding Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire offered the opening invocation, his fervent desires being expressed in keeping with the immediate and future needs of the church.

The conference was as usual asked who should preside. Church Secretary R. S. Salyards moved that First Presidency preside and make all necessary appointments, which was unanimously adopted.

The chairman, President F. M. Smith, noted that the conference was largely already organized. The stenographers, secretaries, ushers, etc., had been appointed and were acting.

The usual printed reports were presented and their contents called to the attention of the audience.

Credentials committee appointments had been made and their report was adopted subject to any necessary corrections and any additional reports.

The reports of the Department of Statistics, of the Presiding Bishopric, Church Auditor, Sunday School Department, Religio Department, Women's Department, Graceland College, Board of Publication, Secretary, Children's Home, Sanitarium, Historian and Librarian, Publicity Department, Church Architect, Health Department, Programs for Reunions, Church of Christ Committee, and Australian Mission were placed on the minutes by the chairman, calling attention to each and to particular features of each.

It is considered a tiresome process by some, but is necessary in order to get under way as a deliberative assembly.

President F. M. Smith called the attention of the conference to the fact that the longest period that had ever elapsed between conferences in the Reorganization had just elapsed.

He made a few general remarks regarding the conditions in the world and was of the opinion that we had reached a crisis in the history of the church and our solution at this time would be momentous.

He urged that each approach the occasion with a firm determination to believe that the motives of others were good and should not be impugned.

He had not expected to present at this time the document he was preparing to present, but conditions had seemed to make it necessary, and he was going to read now a communication to the church which had come to him by the voice of inspiration.

After the reading he suggested the audience adjourn to consider the document in quorum capacity.

Our Social Ideals

By Frederick M. Smith

An epochal sermon preached at the Conference Tabernacle Sunday afternoon, October 1, 1922. Reported by Howard W. Harder.

Cain, when he killed Abel, attempted to shift his social responsibility by asking, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and ever since that question has been on the lips as excuse by those who would promote their own interests at the expense of their fellow men. A belief that that question should have answer in the negative is what keeps Wall Street alive, but the conviction is spreading that Cain's question is a lame excuse for those who would escape responsibility for social welfare.

The work and message and philosophy of Jesus came at a time when the individualism of Rome had wrought havoc with the social content of the Mosaic economy. His teachings were social in significance, his appeal for individual righteousness being strongly purposive socially. In his theology, he was liberal, always tolerant with the theological views of others, providing there was a disposition to envisage the larger life. He felt that his purpose in coming was to engender a larger life, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly," though too long has it been thought he had reference to the other world aspect. That he intended the larger life to function here cannot well be denied in the light of his answer to the lawyer who would entrap him by asking, "Which is the greatest commandment?" for his answer, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . and thy neighbor as thyself," clearly reveals his central idea that religion (love of God) can only be demonstrated by social interaction (love of neighbor). And when the lawyer, caught in his own trap, would retrieve himself by asking who one's neighbor is, there came in quick response the beautiful answer that our neighbor is found where there is one in need of help. Service to humanity, then, is fundamental to the Christian religion, service rendered here, not in the beyond. Lip service—avowal of love for God—counts as naught, for service to the least of those in need counts for more than the loudest claim. We become aware of God by seeing our neighbor, and consciousness of God creates awareness of our obligations towards our fellow-man.

And it was probably clearly in his mind when he gave these answers that it was impossible to love God without loving our neighbor. Demonstration of real love of God will issue in service to neighbor. No other conception of godly love could exist in the mind of one who gave to the world the Golden Rule, that our social conduct should always synchronize with what we expect from others. It is the essence of what should motivate ideal social conditions. "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly" was certainly social in content.

We would say, therefore, that the religion of Jesus is fundamentally social, and any form of society which entails a struggle of individuals for existence is not Christian, though of course work is God given, for by the sweat of our brow must we earn our bread. A ruthless policy of survival of the fittest may be fit for beastly propagation but is unfit for rational beings. We are our brother's keeper, not his destroyer. If we need any further evidence that Jesus would give the social aspects of his religion the first emphasis, we have but to note his answer to the young man who asked, "What must I do to be saved?" The answer was, Devote all your possession and powers to God's service by serving your fellow man in need. The approach of the young man was through the avenue of selfishness. He would be saved; he would know the minimum of effort to bring him escape from destruction. The answer pointed to social duty, and the sorrow followed either his inability to comprehend the scope of the answer or his lack of social consciousness and sense of social duty. Service constitutes religion, and this makes religion immensely more than meditation and prayer. It is prayer plus the desire to do. It is more than that; it is desire to do vitalized by action—service to others.

Any social order based on selfishness is fundamentally wrong. Who will deny that to-day the appeal for endeavor is to selfishness? In the school, on the street, in the bank, from the rostrum, from the pulpit the appeal is largely, if not entirely, to the selfish instinct. Individuals are urged to endeavor, but for reward. Service is urged, but in the line yielding the largest returns to the individual. Professions are chosen for the prospective return, and excellence therein is striven for because larger tolls can be collected, and the struggle is to amass a competency or more, for the power brought or for the chance for early retirement and freedom from worry over needed income. Selfishness and fear are our social dynamic to-day. Men toil in fear of old age or disability. What a travesty on the Christian religion! A society ostensibly Christian whose industrial impulsion is fear, or selfishness, when Christianity is based on love—love of God and neighbor.

But gradually, with the revolution of religion going steadily on, there has come an awakening to the fact that in our attempted evaluation of Christianity incidentals have been overemphasized and fundamentals shifted to places of secondary or tertiary importance. The original appeal made by Jesus for individual righteousness was for an end. But, one man alone cannot live the Christian religion. "No man liveth to himself alone." To live the Christian religion takes at least two men and Deity; each man neighbor to the other, demonstrating their love of God in service.

With the awakening consciousness that the primary content of Christian religion is social has come a flood of reforms, but how seldom have these reforms escaped the taint of selfishness. The appeal has usually been made in the vernacular of selfishness. How can we expect otherwise? "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Except there comes that renaissance which issues in a social consciousness, the new order of society cannot even be glimpsed. We cannot blink the sad fact that there is a dearth of individuals with a pure social sense. The majority still think and speak in terms of selfishness. May not Paul's ecstatic expansion of soul have arisen from a deep spiritual impress of the social content of Jesus' message? For that content once seized lifts one up and out of one's self till the expanded soul readjusts itself in a new birth, a vision of larger things and an activity directed towards social weal.

For any social reform to be lasting or general it must be built upon a religious foundation, its spirit must be religious, its motivation religious. None other will succeed. This, too, has been foreshadowed by the command, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and these things will be added."

The social significance of the Christian religion is crystallized in the doctrine of stewardships, according to which one

(Continued on page 939.)

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

Be Wise in Rendering Judgment

Sermon by Bishop James F. Keir on the Stone Church lawn, July 30, 1922. Reported by Howard W. Harder.

The call of God is unto repentance. We have been amazed as we have read the history of God's people to find how readily at times they have departed from the way of the Lord. And from time to time it has been necessary for the servants of the Lord to remind the people of their duties towards God. In the time of Israel, when Moses went into the mountain to commune with God, the people swiftly ran after their own notions and established their own god; and at other times, even in Book of Mormon times, we have been surprised to see how the people have been swiftly drawn down from the heights of spiritual excellence to lower levels. In every case it has been because they have forgotten the very simple and plain instructions which from time to time have been given to them by the servants of God.

Isaiah called the people's attention to the condition into which they had fallen, "Ah, sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evildoers, children that are corrupters: they have forsaken the Lord; they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger; they are gone way backward."

Turning over to Jeremiah's and Malachi's time we find them also pointing the children to repentance. "See, and ask for the old paths where is the good way, and walk therein and ye shall find rest unto your souls." "Even from the days of your fathers ye have gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord."

God stands always with outstretched arms beckoning to his people to walk in the straight and narrow way that leads to life eternal. From time to time he has thrown out to us a warning voice, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world and not after Christ." So, as we peruse the history of nations and particularly God's people, we shall do well to listen to these warning voices that come from time to time from God Almighty and to examine ourselves to see whether or not we are permitting ourselves to indulge in things which will rob us of our heritage from God.

I want to call your attention to-night to scripture found in the sixth chapter of Galatians, which is another warning: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap, for he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Associated with this I read the first two verses of the seventh chapter of Matthew: "Judge not that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged and with what measure ye mete it shall be meted out to you again."

Be not deceived; that is, do not be led into error. Guard carefully the things that you permit to enter into your life, either from internal development or from that which may be poured in from the outside, for from these two sources we may be deceived. We may be deceived by others or we may deceive ourselves. Do not permit ourselves to believe that which is false, nor must we disbelieve that which is true. We are usually deceived because that which may be presented to us by others does not present all of the facts by which we may pass proper judgment upon a matter, and judging from what we may have before us we arrive at an improper conclusion.

Danger of Misrepresentation

I have said to the worker in our office: We have nothing in this office to cover up. We are here as servants of the people and of God. It is their privilege to know what occurs in this office, but there is a legitimate channel, a legitimate process by which that intelligence shall reach the people; and there is a danger that if you undertake to pass out such information as might be in your possession, it would be misleading and would not properly represent the situation as it is." And to drive home that point I have used this illustration:

Now supposing I should say to you that my father gave my mother a black eye! Now what are you thinking about? What kind of a father do you think I have? One of the noblest, one of the best, one of the most affectionate that I ever knew; but I have told you only a part of the truth and consequently you are left to draw your own conclusions; and nine chances out of ten those conclusions are wrong. When I tell you that he was bending over picking the cinders out of the fire and that she was bending over looking at him and as he raised his head, not knowing that she was there, he bumped her and gave her a black eye, you will understand more about it. Now you have a far different picture in your mind than you would have had, had I stopped in the middle of my story.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap." Many, many times have I seen the children of God suffering because they have drawn their conclusions from facts which were not fully and wholly stated. We must, therefore, be careful in passing judgment or arriving at conclusions until we have all the facts before us.

Be not deceived. We may deceive a person sometimes by the inflection of our voices or by our action or our attitude. Somebody says to me, "Brother Keir, what do you think of Brother Harder, our stenographic reporter of the evening?"

"Oh, he is all right," I answer, and I shrug my shoulders and give such an inflection to my voice that you gather from what I said that Brother Harder is not all that he should be, and yet he is a prince in our midst.

So we must be careful that even in our actions in passing on to others certain facts that we shall not deceive them. We may deceive ourselves, for Paul in this text which I have read to you from Galatians says, "For if a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing he deceiveth himself." There is no place in this church for people who exalt themselves. There is no room to be puffed up, for the man who assumes that attitude is only deceiving himself, for it becomes very apparent to the rest of us as to what ails that fellow. I knew a young man one time that I recognized had a wonderful opportunity for development in this church—a splendid memory, a splendid equipment or understanding, but he lacked something. He felt that he was a very important figure in that branch and consequently he deceived himself and undermined the great opportunity that was his to be a factor for good in the work of God. We sometimes deceive ourselves in that we do not understand the nature and the consequences of the thing which we are doing. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap. He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Now there is no getting away from that. That is the immutable law of God. When we sow corn we cannot reap wheat. Can men gather grapes of thistles? No; because it is contrary to the law of God.

We Must Sow Seeds of Happiness

This people before me to-night is interested in being the happiest people on earth. You seek happiness, but, my friends, in order to reap happiness we must sow the seeds that produce happiness. A sister once said to me, "Brother Keir, I don't enjoy myself at services; nobody comes and speaks to me. They don't smile and say nice things to me as they do to others."

What was the matter? She was not sowing the things that she wanted to reap. Had she gone and said, "Sister Smith, I am glad to see you this morning. Why, Sister Brown, I am coming over to see you to-morrow afternoon and have a little visit with you. Say, can I meet you at prayer meeting next Wednesday night?" Had she sown the seeds of joyfulness, the good will of fellowship, there would have come back to her multiplied a thousand times the thing she was sowing, but she could not see that the cause of all her distress was from within and not from without. Nine times out of ten if we want to look for our troubles we should look within and not without, for happiness comes from within.

"Be not deceived. God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap." We plant a grain of corn. What do we get back? Two, three, or four hundred grains of corn. And this same thing is true concerning the things which you and I are sowing day by day. They come back multiplied. Every man should find pleasure in work. Every man should find pleasure in making other people happy. Not because the intent is to reap, but because the law of God says that this result will follow your sowing this kind of thing. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Now I know that is true. Did you ever see a drinking man? Oh, dear; such a headache in the morning. He thought he was having a glorious time while he had that spree on, but he awoke the next morning and he says, "Oh, what a fool I am; what a fool!" Back of every sorrow that ever came into your life there is a mistake; or, as Doctor Crane said, "There is an error." You are reaping exactly what you have sown, and until you learn that he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, you will continue to have sorrow and heartache.

As a church we have had sorrows, and if my analysis is correct it is because we have made mistakes. And so long as we have humanity as an element in religion we will continue to make mistakes; but the thing that we must guard is that those mistakes shall be as few as possible, and when they occur on the part of others that we shall treat them with the utmost charity and remember that we ourselves are weak and that we ourselves make mistakes and that we must look up to God and say, Father, forgive us, even as we forgive those who trespass against us. One brother in our audience to-night made a very splendid statement at the prayer meeting some months ago when he said, "I do not expect to find perfection in the church, because I myself am an imperfect being and I am one of the church." So when we are criticizing and finding fault with the actions of others, beware lest we are sowing the seeds of unhappiness, of doubt, of discontent, and all of those things which go to make up the heartache. We have sown suspicion and lack of confidence. Now I am not trying to find out to-night from whom we got the measles. That is not the thought. But I am trying in a sense to give to you as one of God's servants a remedy for this evil that is upon us. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

As I told you a while ago, we get back not what we sow, but we get it back multiplied, and that is exactly what happened in Israel's experience. Hosea says in the eighth chapter, "Set the trumpet to thy mouth. He shall come as an eagle against the house of the Lord, because they have transgressed my covenant and trespassed against my law. Israel shall cry unto me, My God, we know thee. Israel has cast off the things that are good. The enemy shall pursue him."

Get All the Facts First

We never get heartache from keeping the law of God. Never. Why, even under tribulation we can rejoice; in suffering we can lift up our hearts to God in praise; but when we depart from the law, then it is that we become discouraged. We cease praying; we begin to die. The faults of our brothers and sisters are magnified in our eyes. We are looking through the wrong end of the telescope. We have the big end out here and the little end here and we are looking for our brother's faults and they are magnified. Better turn it around. Israel had cast off the thing that is good, departed from God, trespassed against the law. What are the results? For they have sown to the wind and they have reaped a whirlwind. They have sown to the flesh and they have of the flesh reaped corruption. They have gone contrary to the law of God and they have suffered as a result.

You remember my second text, "Judge not that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge it shall be meted out to you again." We must be very, very careful as to how we pass judgment upon a person. We must be careful that we have all the factors that have to bear on the proposition before we pass judgment. As Brother Samuel A. Burgess said this morning in his sermon, he has seen people do things that he would not do, but he said, "I suppose that they had good reasons for acting as they did. There were probably factors known to them that were not known to me, and had I known those factors I would have done the very same thing they did. I have done things which doubtless others looking at me would say, Well, why on earth did he ever do that? But there were in my possession facts not known to them which, had they been known, they would have said, Well, I guess I would have done the very same thing. I could not have done anything else." So we want to be careful that our judgment is just. In Romans, second chapter, beginning with the second verse I read, "But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth." But say, brother and sister, isn't it a lovely thing to think that in the day of final judgment God will judge us justly because he knows all the factors that have to do with our lives and is able therefore to pass judgment which is according to truth? It is almost impossible for human beings to judge, because of our lack of understanding.

But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things; and thinkest thou this, oh man, that judgest them which do such things and doest the same that thou shalt escape the judgment of God? Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and long-suffering not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance, but after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. —Romans 2: 2-6.

So from God and God alone we may expect a righteous judgment, because it is according to truth, and yet I have been trying to emphasize that we should be careful in our criticisms and in our passing judgments because I have realized that that was one of the sources of our heartache, of our distress, of our doubt, of our fears, because there have come to my ears certain things which I knew would disturb those who did not have the facts before them and because they entertained these things of which I have spoken.

Some Experiences Worth Remembering

Now Jesus spake in parables; a very excellent way of teaching people. I am not going to speak to you to-night in parables, but I'm going to speak to you in real experiences, and let me say that it is folly to pass judgment and listen to every idle tale that comes along and to pass on those things that will break down the faith of God's people.

One of our missionaries turned into the church a lot which he valued at five hundred dollars. He gave it to us as a free-will offering and we gave him a receipt for five hundred dollars. A few weeks later a sister in Canada wrote to us and asked us if we had such and such a lot for sale. In the meantime she had expressed to this missionary a desire to secure a lot in Independence. He said, "Yes, I think I can get you a lot which I just turned in to the Bishop for five hundred dollars."

When she wrote us we quoted her a price of four hundred and fifty dollars, because we thought that as more nearly representing the cash value of the lot. When she got that letter of ours she wrote back to us almost heartbroken, "Oh," said she, "You don't know how badly I feel. I am nearly heartbroken. I have known this missionary from the time he was a boy. I have had the utmost confidence in him. I never thought he would do such a trick. Why, he tried to make a profit on me of fifty dollars."

I wrote back to her and told her the history of the whole transaction. I said, "Now, sister, let this be a warning to you as it is a warning to me. Never pass judgment upon the acts of any man until all the facts are before you; for until then you can never render righteous judgment."

Let me quote my text again: "Be not deceived. God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap." "Judge not that ye be not judged, for with whatsoever judgment ye judge ye shall be judged."

A brother came into the office not long ago and he said, "Brother McGuire, is it a fact that Brother Robert Cooper, of the real estate department of your office, got a commission of twenty acres of land on a farm which the church purchased?"

Brother McGuire said, "No; and don't ever repeat it." But here I am sending it broadcast to-night. Brother McGuire said, "Don't ever repeat it. There isn't a word of truth in it."

"But," says that man, "the man who told me said, 'If you don't believe me, go over to the records and see for yourself.'"

Well, I, like Brother McGuire, knew that there wasn't a word of truth in it, but in order to satisfy myself as to the origin of such a despicable lie, I went over to the courthouse to examine the records. Now I don't think that man intended to lie when he told that, although he did tell something that was not true. Now there is a man in the Atherton bottoms who owns twenty acres of land and his name is Robert Cooper, but it is not Robert T. Cooper, who is in the bishop's office, but Robert J. Cooper, who is a mail man in the city of Atherton! The relating of this incident is not intended to reflect any discredit upon Mr. Robert J. Cooper. We have never met him, nor do we know the circumstances by which he became possessed of the twenty acres.

Does that drive the point home? "Be not deceived. God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." And as we sow that kind of seed it arouses suspicion and doubt and destroys the faith of the people. Let us beware, brothers. I am saying this in all kindness.

A brother asked me the other day, "Brother Keir, is it true that the Patroness Society turned three thousand dollars over to the Sanitarium to be used for a particular purpose, that was not used for that purpose?" I shook my head and said, "There is not a word of truth in it. I do not think the Patroness Society ever saw three thousand dollars. They are not a money-making organization. They are a helping organization to assist the Sanitarium, and they are doing a very splendid work. I wish that hundreds of our ladies would become identified with the Patroness Society. But so as to satisfy you I will call up Sister Kelley, who is the president of the Patroness Society." You know the result. Not a word of truth in it; but somebody's faith in man was being destroyed because somebody was sowing in the field the tares of the Adversary. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap. He that sows to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that sows to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

Criticism Has Always Existed

I am thankful for one thing that the men of the present generation are not the only men who have been criticized. Men who do things will always be criticized. It is the fellow who does nothing that avoids that kind of treatment. I was just interested in this a little bit as I was thinking over this question, so I went down through the Scriptures and found that Joseph had a dream, and in this dream he saw a number of sheaves of wheat, and his sheaf stood upright and the other sheaves made obeisance to his sheaf, indicating that he should be a leader. His brothers said, What! are you to be a leader over us? And they were angry, and you know what they did to Joseph. They tried to make way with him—the man whom God had appointed to lead this people out of bondage unto freedom. Moses, you remember, went up into the mountain, and the history tells us that as he returned all Israel murmured at him and Joshua. I find that even Christ himself was not free from criticism. Sometimes he met those criticisms openly and analyzed them with the people; sometimes he came back at them with another accusation; and sometimes he opened not his mouth. There are criticisms that we cannot afford to dignify by trying to answer. They are too mean, too low, too much beneath the dignity of men to try to answer them. And so it was even in the experience of our Lord and Master, that certain of the criticisms which were hurled against him, he opened not his mouth to answer. As he healed the leper you remember he said, Thy sins are forgiven thee. And some came back at him with the statement that he blasphemed, but he said to them, Is it easier to say thy sins are forgiven thee, or to say, Arise, take up thy bed and walk? And so he commanded the man in the name of the Father to arise, and he arose and walked. Again he was criticized for picking corn on the Sabbath day, but he walked along with them and asked, Which of you whose neighbor's ox might be in the ditch would help him out on the Sabbath day? and he therewith discussed it with them.

Do We Proclaim "Corban"?

At another time when with his disciples the Pharisees said to him, Master, why is it that your disciples wash not their hands? Now the Jews were particular about certain ordinances and they thought before they could do certain things they must wash their hands. Why do you break the traditions of the elders by refusing to wash your hands? And Jesus came back at them with these words: Why do you also break the traditions of the elders? The law says, Thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother. And the one who did not do that was guilty of death, but the Jews had what they called the law of the mouth. The law of the mouth was the interpretation which had been put upon the written law of the elders, and by this law of the mouth they had a great many ways by which they could avoid the consequences of the written law; and this was one of them. If a young man had a mother and a father whom he was morally obligated to take care of, and he did not do it or did not want to do it, all that he had to do was to proclaim "corban" and he was free from any obligation to support his father or his mother. This was one of the traditions of the elders that grew out of this law of the mouth, and this young man, while he was free from the obligation of supporting his parents, yet was under no obligation to use that property which he had in his possession for religious or holy purposes.

So we have pointed out to you that some of these men of the past have been criticized, but the lesson which I wish to drive home to-night is that in all our relations, one with the other, we must learn to exercise charity and love and the spirit of fellowship, and the spirit of helpfulness, and support each other in our fasting and in our prayer before God, that eventually we will arise and become a delightful people in his sight.

Broadcasting

Talking in terms of our own age I want to make this observation, that we have a most powerful and wonderful broadcasting machine in Independence. Not that one over there [indicating the wireless tower]. Its possibilities for doing good are immeasurable. We sing most beautifully in the church, "Send out thy light." Oh, what wonderful possibilities you and I have of using Uncle Sam's great postal system to send out the light; to strengthen the faith of God's people; to tell the good things that are happening in our midst; to tell of the spiritual development of the people. How are you using your opportunities? I ask you in all candor, How are you using your opportunities?

Now I expect this message to-night not only to reach you, but I want you to carry it to your neighbors and herald it across the seas, that the name of God may be glorified through our efforts to send out the light. What kind of seed do we want to sow? He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that sows to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.

The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith. See to it, Saints, that the words that issue from your mouths, that the things which are written by you or in your conversation daily and hourly shall be those things that shall develop in your own life the beautiful fruits of the Spirit of God and shall cause the people of God to look upward with faith and confidence in God and in man; and if we can only put on that kind of attitude Zion soon shall be redeemed.

In James, the fourth chapter and eleventh verse, we have this very splendid counsel, "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law and judgeth the law; but if thou judge the law thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge." Again in Ephesians the fourth chapter and twenty-ninth verse we have this, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of thy mouth."

That reminds me of a story I heard of a lady who was ill and who went to her physician. He felt her pulse, he counted her respiration, he put the stethoscope on her lungs, but he could find no trouble there. He said, "Lady, let me see your tongue." She put out her tongue. He looked at it carefully, shook his head, and said these very comforting words, "Overworked."

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and evil-speaking be put away from you with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven you."—Ephesians 4: 29-32.

Thrift Talks

If you were sick nigh unto death, you would not think of calling in a physician of mediocre ability. You want the best talent that is available. You expect this physician to keep abreast with the latest discoveries and developments in medical science, to take post graduate courses from year to year that he may be able to serve you best.

That which you expect, you must be willing to give.

You demand the best; you must produce the best.

Be the best musician in town.

Be the best farmer in the country.

Be the best bricklayer in the community.

Be the best accountant in the State.

Some one must be recognized as the best. Why not you?

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Ethics and Empty Stomachs

[The following was evidently printed in Germany, but in the English language. We are not informed as to the publication from which it has been taken. It is sent to us without comment by Elder A. Kippe—EDITORS.]

Once upon a time, in the dim and twilit periods of human history, thousands of years, mayhap, before the Pharaohs were ever heard of, there lived "drest in a little, brief authority," an old Egyptian potentate—the governor, it would seem, of one of the provinces into which the land was then divided. They dug up his tomb a little while ago. It bore this simple inscription: "In my time no man ever went hungry"—the noblest epitaph, surely, that could ever at any time be written or conceived.

Think what it must have meant in that land of drought and famine: only a narrow strip of river-bank where a grain of corn could grow, and that only when Father Nile was merciful and kind! If not, your nearest supplies five hundred miles away; your only means of transport the slow-moving camel; and your convoy must be heavily guarded to provide against attack, and supplied with water and provisions for a two months' journey . . . yet he never failed his people: fat year and lean year alike, "In my time no man ever went hungry!"

And here to-day with our steamships and our railways and our airplanes, with our industrial and agricultural appliances fashioned with cunning and in wondrous wise, with the granaries of the world filled to overflowing, and the kindly fruits fairly rotting on the trees for want of hands to gather them, one third of the population—to put it at its lowest estimate—is in misery and want. Even in "the piping days of peace"—peace, peace, where there was no peace!—it was an admitted and established fact, by none to be gainsaid, that at least one man, woman, or child perished every single day, amid the lavish luxury of "Christian and civilized" London, of sheer starvation or exposure. If things were so in the green tree, what must they be now that the tree is dry?

The grisly Hunger-Horror that yet moves monstrous and menacing over Russia and over Central Europe, is not the blind, destructive work of natural forces, the witless vengeance of a maniac Moloch-God. It is a Frankenstein's Monster wilfully created by the brains and hands of men for the undoing and enslaving of their brethren.

The millions of slaves who are compelled to toil and moil for a starvation wage in every "civilized" land, and the millions more who are unable to receive even that miserable mockery of a pittance, are not the victims of economic laws—helpless standers-by, caught up and smashed and mangled to death by some devilish cosmic machinery. They are victims of a man-made plot to convert the workhouse of woe into a vast slaughterhouse of the human race.

It is a well-known psychological and physiological fact that misery and underfeeding create a state of more or less homicidal mania. To the wretched it is a sour sort of consolation and compensation to make others as wretched as themselves. And hence it is fatally easy for a small group of unscrupulous money-grubbers to hound their starving dupes and drudges in to butchering their brothers in misery—the dupes and drudges of rival groups of Mammonites. Hence, too, (when these stupid, cringing hounds get wind of the game and begin to ask one another whether it be worth while to retrieve one another for their respective taskmasters and to lay one another out at these condescending leeches' and bloodsuckers' feet, only to be exploited and decorticated the more ruthlessly for doing so) they straightway begin to tear one another to pieces, when once they have shaken themselves free.

Recent happenings in Russia are an admirable case in point. Bolshevist and Menchevist having united to tear the bourgeoisie to pieces, now proceed to exterminate one another! It is truly pitiable. The great, loving heart of Peter Kropotkin—the noblest revolutionary of them all—was broken by the spectacle in its initial stages. The vicious circle of death and destruction continues unbroken.

Here, too, in Germany, the self-same hellish tendencies are at work. Instead of banding together as brothers and as Germans to face the common foe and to build up the ruins of their Fatherland, Monarchists and Republicans, and Communists, and Socialists of varying hues from pink to red, engage in internecine conflict. The people are maddened with misery: that is the head and front of it all. We have urged our German friends to follow the lead of the American people in an emergency far less critical, and to appoint a food dictator. The reason for this is obvious. The lesson must be learned—and learned before it is too late—that it is utterly useless to preach ethics to empty stomachs. Yet again, the world must organize for life!

Mounted State Police Proposed for Missouri

Pennsylvania, New York, Texas, Michigan, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, Tennessee, and Colorado all have a state police. Something of the kind also exists in Canada. There is now a proposition before the voters of Missouri to provide for State police for that commonwealth who will have supervision throughout the State, especially along the public roads and waterways, and could and would cooperate with the peace officers of the city and town and villages by request. They would also cooperate with the State and local authorities in effecting the public health and public safety laws and for the preservation of game and forestry. The development of good roads and the large use of the automobiles makes it essential that there be police officers having state-wide jurisdiction.

Annual Income of United States

The National Bureau of Economic Research has prepared some extensive statistics regarding personal income in the United States, so that World's Work states that we now have dependable figures on the average income.

One third of the income earners receive from $500 to $1,000 a year. This includes the income value of homes owned and the value of farm products consumed on the farm.

Another one third receive from $1,000 to $1,500 and an additional 5 per cent fall in one or the other of these groups, so that nearly 72 per cent do not receive more than $1,500 a year. An additional 14 per cent do not receive in excess of $2,000.

There are two ways in which any group can advance its income: either take from some other group or increase production. If this 86 per cent wish to take from those who get more than $2,000 a year, they would find there is only $661 for each of them, if they could confiscate the entire income of all the others and leave the 14 per cent penniless. This is true though the 14 per cent receive 40 per cent of the total personal income. If it were agreed that an individual is entitled to as much as a United States senator; that is, $10,000 a year provided he earns more, there would then not be as much as $200 for each one who now receives $2,000 or less.

A suggested solution is education; also saving, since thrift and saving to the extent of $4,500 in treasury certificates or some other safe security would add more to the income of those who receive $2,000 or less a year than would the division of excess incomes of those getting $10,000 a year or more. Comment is also made that this covers all of the figures of all receiving income, that a workman starts out low but his earning power develops and brings him up. He then marries, children come, and the growing expenditures send him down again. The children then become wage earners, so he has again a period when he is up in the cycle. When the children leave home and old age sets in, then he is confronted with decreased and impaired earning power. The living wage is determined, not by what the man alone received, but by what his family receives, especially when there are unmarried children of justifiable age to work.

From our present information, based on the statement that $661 to each of 86 per cent of the wage earners amounts to 40 per cent of the total income, we are able to determine that the average for the whole country, for those earning income amounts to $1,421 a year.

Men Want to Believe

Churches may sometimes fail to draw within their doors the crowds to fill every place in their auditoriums. Then we hear the cry that the church is failing. At times folks say that religion is losing its grip. This, however, is error. The individual church, as represented by a pastor with certain characteristics, and a congregation with various individuals who may not be personally likable, may not draw into its fold those who really yearn for religious expression. That is the failure of a man-made thing. Religion itself, in a God above, never fails. Men have always wanted to believe—they have always believed.

Now the thing that appeals to one man as the expression of that longing within his soul, may not appeal to another; and the thing that may appeal to the majority of us, a church, a preacher, a choir, an audience, the singing of hymns, a certain ritual, may have no appeal soever to many people. True, if they have religious instincts, and if they wish to increase the power of the church, here is an organization formed for that purpose, but many there are who find themselves out of sympathy with the church of to-day.

The men are the spiritual puzzle of the day. They want to believe in holy things, and they do believe in them. They want to be a part of the higher life, but they fail to find in present organizations the means of an expression of their faith.

Yet they should seek to adjust themselves to that means. The understanding man, who recognizes the service of the church to the community, should seek to identify himself with that body, which is the representative of spiritual power, and the active agent for kindness and fellowship among all men.

There have been powerful movements for getting the average man more deeply interested in the church and its work. The layman's movement of recent years had the effect of drawing many men into church circles who had previously been indifferent. Billy Sunday has been able to point out to thousands the work religion holds for all. Down

PASTORAL

Keep Thyself Pure

An address at an ordination service, by Elder O. Salisbury.

[Occasionally comment has been made that ordination services should be made more impressive. It is one of the most important ordinances of the church. Recently at the Nauvoo district conference, at Burlington, Iowa, a meeting was held for the purpose of ordaining eight men to the priesthood which was preceded by prayer, and Elder Orman Salisbury, of Council Bluffs, was called upon to deliver an address or charge to these men about to be ordained, giving charges and suggestions of value, making the service much more impressive. We are printing herewith the charge delivered by him at that time, as reported by Ethel A. Lacey.—EDITORS.]

This, of course, is a beginning of a new epoch in the lives of these men, and I was thinking whether or not I might add that it is possibly the beginning of a new epoch in the Nauvoo District.

It was not an uncommon thing in the days of Christ, during his earthly career, for men to be selected by the spirit of light and inspiration. We remember upon one occasion the Holy Spirit said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them," and the Lord has said to this church that men shall be ordained according to the gifts and calling of God unto them. It will be remembered that God in all the past has gone out among the shepherds and among the tradesmen, and down along the lake and called the poor fishermen, the uneducated men, and the plowmen. He said to them, "Come and follow me and I will make thee fishers of men."

The Rule of Democracy

The same God is still in the courts of glory. He is just as much concerned about the children of men upon the earth now as he has been in the past. He is interested in you and me. We are his offspring, we are his creatures, and the Lord has designated by the Spirit of light that these men occupy in the various positions unto which they shall be ordained. But in the gospel economy God never calls a man and arbitrarily forces him upon the people. He says to the church, no one shall be ordained except it be approved by the people. There-beneath the surface in every man's nature is the desire, but it is not always easy for the church or its agents to find the motivating force to quicken that desire into action.

Men want to believe in God, and they do believe, and they want to work. As far back as we can trace history we can trace the pulse of man for service for his Creator. The future may solve the problem of making that impulse an active part of the everyday life of every man.—Platte Valley News.

fore it becomes necessary for the people to pass upon all recommendations. These proposed ordinations have been acted upon in the regular order.

I don't know of anything I could read better than the admonition of the noted Apostle Paul to Timothy, recorded in the fifth chapter of First Timothy. In this short lesson you will be interested. Paul said to Timothy:

I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the holy angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins; keep thyself pure.

And if we should subordinate the less important and emphasize the more important, we would read it thus:

"I therefore charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ and the holy angels, that thou keep thyself pure."

God Calls for Service

We should take into consideration that as God calls men, he calls them not to place them upon the shelf for a flower, not for ornamentation, but for service. We have in the past measured men a great deal by the amount of money they had in the bank, the title they held to broad acres of land, but that is not the correct way to measure men. The correct way to measure a man is by the amount of service he gives to humanity, which is true service to God and true service to men. God calls men to serve. The question has come up in the minds of men a great many times in the past, Who is to be the greatest in the kingdom of God? That question was asked the Savior. He answered and said, "He that will be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all."

I hope I shall impress these brothers this morning that they are entering upon a life of service. These men have been called to the priesthood, and especially those called to administer to the sick and needy should always be ready to serve, so far as their physical powers will support them. They will no doubt be called upon by day and by night to serve others, and sometimes they will find themselves when their physical powers are taxed to the limit, yet, that may be when the Lord will see fit to bless them most.

The Measure of Men

So we measure men by the service they render. If there is one thing above another I might impress upon our brothers this morning, it is the need of humility. No men ever became great in the world or in the church except they were humble men, men who got in touch with God, and if you shall be efficient in your work it will be because you drink deep at the fountain of life. If you shall be able to expound the Scriptures in a way that will bring others to the family and fold of God, it will be because you eat oft and much at the table of knowledge. If you shall be successful in your efforts, you must make the necessary preparation. That may take long, tedious, consecrated, concentrated effort in order for you to attain to that which God requires at your hands.

It may seem peculiar that God calls certain men, but it must be remembered that the learned Apostle Paul said, "God has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty and the wise." Therefore, brothers, remember this morning, and not this morning only, but in the future, that you should go from day to day to your closets and there pour out your souls to God for his protection, his direction, and his blessings, and you can well remember the promise that inasmuch as you come unto him in secret, the Lord has said, "I will reward you openly." Again he said, "Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you, seek and ye shall find," and as God said that to men in the past, it comes to us now this morning that God is no respecter of persons, and that promise is the same to-day.

Avoid Jealousy

One other feature I would like to call to your attention. You should be very careful lest you become jealous. The most becoming thing that comes to a man is to find his place, to fill that place and fill it well; to do the things God requires at his hand. I don't know of any position I ever held in this church that I enjoyed more than when I was deacon. I tried to fill that place faithfully. When I was later ordained a priest I tried to perform my duty and perform it well. I did likewise as an elder. I was not concerned about any other ordination. I sought (and I only speak of it as it may encourage our brothers) simply to do the things that were before me.

Remember, you are not living in the past. Remember that you have no claim on the to-morrow, but this is the greatest day that we have ever lived, and the only greater day that we can hope for will be to-morrow, should we be privileged to live. We should therefore work to-day and be very careful lest jealousy arise. Remember, jealous people don't usually admit it; in fact, they don't know it themselves. A man who is drunk doesn't admit it; a man who is crazy doesn't know it; and that little thing called jealousy will come in and destroy us if we are not on the watch tower.

I therefore charge you this morning in the language of the Apostle Paul, that you keep yourselves pure, that you observe the law, study and prepare yourselves for greater service. If you will do this, it shall be the opening up of a new epoch in your lives. But remember, God does not call a man for the purpose of setting one individual above another; but only that he may bless others. As he said to Abraham, "In thee and thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," they should also remember that ordination makes them no bigger than before. God does not call a man to an office he cannot fill by exerting his best efforts.

Grow Up or Rattle Down

You brothers are going out, and either grow up and be bright and shining lights, or there will be a reaction, and you will simply rattle down. You are to an extent responsible for your own destiny. It is in your hands. You will largely be what you want to be. If you want it strong enough to comply with the requirements, success is yours.

I would urge in my concluding thoughts that you must remember that the road to success—remember I said in the outstart that the true measuring of a man is how much service he can give to the children of men—is not always a pleasant road. It may be necessary for you oftentimes to forego the pleasant associations of others; to hide away so as to be alone to commune with God, and to drink deep at the fountain of life. But if you shall do that, by and by, though it may seem slow, and you may be discouraged, yet you will succeed. You must remember this important fact, that as we construct a great building, we don't do it in a moment, but we lay one brick, then we lay another brick. Likewise, in acquiring knowledge we attain first a truth, a fact, and then another truth, and upon that we lay another fact, until we eventually have a structure, and as men have done in the past, so men can do again.

It doesn't make so much difference where you are now, but where will you be a year from now? It is not so much that you have been a prodigal son who has turned to go back to his father, but the question is, How are you going to run the race? If you stand loyal, if you unwaveringly press on; if you run well, you shall succeed. You shall be like Paul of old, who said, "I have fought the fight, I have finished the course; I have kept the faith," and as the crown was to him, so it will be to you. I trust that it shall be so.

"It is ever the trial of the scrupulous explorer to be saluted with the impatient scorn of chatterers who attempt only the smallest achievements, being indeed equipped for no other."—George Eliot.

"Address"

By Gomer J. Reeves

"How long will we continue to be crude ministers of the gospel? We need refinement. We need address."

"Address is that indefinable something which enables a man to gain his object without exertion or contest, and generally with the favor and approval of those with whom he deals. It includes adroitness and discretion, to know just what to do and say and what to avoid. Courtesy and politeness are indispensable elements of good address."—Fernald.

All must agree that, according to the foregoing definition of address, it would be a fine thing for every man of our ministry to possess. Courtesy paves the way to friendship. It should constantly be our example to others. If others choose to be ill-bred, let us not descend to that level by following their example. Crowds may cheer us on, but it is because of their love for excitement rather than through respect for our cause or the desire to hear our message. As a rule, examination will prove that it is this class of people whose most lofty ambition is to witness a dog fight, a cock fight, a prize fight, and especially a conflict between ministers. It cheapens our cause and religion to become entangled unnecessarily with this class of people.

Words are but windows through which we see the thoughts of another, so politeness is to character what words are to thoughts. Joubert says we should never be without politeness, even when we contend with the rude. Before we can become good Christians we must first become gentlemen. Politeness is one quality which is absolutely essential in the making of a gentleman. It is that quality which distinguishes us from the savage. Politeness is thoughtfulness of others. It is a child of culture and is that genuine and high development of mind and soul. Emerson says: "Rude men are like terriers who conceive it the duty of a dog of honor to growl at any passer-by, and do the honors of the house by barking him out of sight."

Is the minister brave who always goes about with a religious chip on his shoulder? or is he just venturesome? He is at least adventurous in that he goes in quest of danger. The venturesome man is either heedless, reckless, or ignorant. Bravery is a combination of confidence and resolution in times of danger, so we must conclude that in such an instance venturesome is a more appropriate word than brave. One writer has said that explorers are adventurous, but children, fools, and criminals are venturesome. It is a rash act to rush into danger without counting the cost. Pope says, "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." Bacon says, "It deserves to be considered that boldness is ever blind, for it sees not dangers and inconveniences. Whence it is bad in council though good in execution. The right use of bold persons, therefore, is that they never command in chief, but serve as seconds, under the direction of others. For in council it is good to see the dangers, and in execution not to see them unless they are very great."

We have a higher calling than to go about daily hurling challenges into the faces of the people whom we would convert. If you want a cat to purr, don't rub its fur the wrong way. This manner of ministerial labor (?) will never win the respect of cultured people. Courage is real fire, but this boastful and ostentatious method has the appearance of being only smoke. Too many men think they have overwhelmed an opponent if they have bombastically assailed him with challenges.

We need friends, not enemies. One friend is worth more than a thousand foes. Colton says, "Make no enemies; he is insignificant indeed that can do thee no harm." We do not usually make a man our friend by punching him in the nose. Preach the gospel. To disturb the meetings of others is to intrude upon their rights and liberties. We dislike to be imposed upon; so do others. To trespass upon the rights or properties of another is intrusive. Should the ambassadors for Christ live in reckless defiance of the law and of the personal rights and opinions of others? This is neither courage, address, nor aggression. Courage is bravery plus the moral element, and it encounters perils at the call of duty. Aggression is action for our rights or possessions. The definition of address has already been given.

Very often the fighting preacher wins a name for himself from the gang on the street corner, but is usually too slow to get the joke, and as a result he feels that an honor has been conferred upon him and so goes on in his vanity with an overwhelming admiration for himself. Watch the corners of his lips turn up and a smile of satisfaction creep across his face as he hears his newly acquired title echo from the curbstone.

Christ is our great example. He was ever frank and truthful in all his accusations, yet said nothing that might belittle him or lower him to the plane of those beneath him. Our preaching should be affirmative. With few exceptions the faults, failures, and weaknesses of others should be left alone. Too often we fail to do this and then after five or six weeks of such conduct we consider ourselves martyrs when we are rotten-egged and driven out of town.

How long will we continue to be crude ministers of the gospel? In many instances we need refinement. When gold is refined the dross is removed. When people are refined the rudeness and coarseness is taken away and the pure gold left. We have many fine men in our force whom we have never heard of getting into street brawls or such sad plights as we have just mentioned, and yet they get their message before the thinking masses constantly. How do they do it? They have an affirmative message and know how to present it in such a way that it will be well received. They have acquired address. Where lies the difficulty with many others who are everlastingly getting into trouble? If we stand before the mirror and look at ourselves, chances are that we will find that the fault was not all on the part of the other fellow. But Doctor Frank Crane says, "If we look into the mirror and find that we have a dirty face, don't blame the mirror."

We do not mean to infer that unpleasant experiences will never arise if we conduct ourselves properly. We are often attacked, and as a rule it is well to meet and overcome it, but it must be done in a tactful way. If unprincipled or insolent persons try to inflict injury upon us, it is often wise to treat their attack with contempt by failure to dignify it with so much as a reference. We should feel and think keenly, but avoid becoming surly. There are men of this type who always have a supply of latent anger on hand, and who resent every approach as an intrusion, and who take offense at anything. At all hazards let us use discretion in answering our adversaries. If a cause be good, the most violent attack of its enemies will not injure it so much as an injudicious defense by its friends. Remember the old adage, "Heat not the furnace for your foe lest you singe yourself." Lastly, let us not forget the advice of the mighty Paul to "Have your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."

Plural Marriage Is Adultery

At the recent General Conference of the Utah Church, according to the Salt Lake City Tribune, (April 7, 1922,) its president, Heber J. Grant, re-emphasized his opposition to plural marriages. He went so far as to declare that no man on earth has the power to perform plural marriages. A so-called plural marriage ceremony is not a marriage at all. It is an adultery before God and under the law of the land, and any attempting to perform such ceremonies will be excommunicated.

We are glad to see this clear statement, for which we have so long contended. It is true to-day, but it has always been true at every point of time, for at all times during the past century, in this country at least, it has constituted adultery under the law of the land and the law of God. It was true if any such occurred in Illinois in the forties, and men who were guilty were prosecuted then by the church for adultery.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Eastern Michigan Conference

We met at Port Huron, Saturday, September 2, at 10 a. m. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths was with us and, assisted by the district presidency, presided over the conference. Regular routine of business followed. A new reunion committee was appointed as follows: John R. Grice, of Saint Clair (chairman); R. H. Huston, of Port Huron, and William M. Grice. The committee was given full power to act and was asked to confer with the reunion committee of the Detroit District with the aim in view of having a joint reunion next year.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: William M. Grice, president; he chose as his counselors, William Davis, of Ubyly, and Myron Carr. R. H. Huston was sustained bishop's agent. Sister Terry, of Capac, was elected chorister; Sister Fred Cadow, of Port Huron, organist; Arthur Nye, of Port Huron, as orchestra director.

A splendid spirit of businesslike decorum prevailed throughout the conference and all the sessions went off nicely. We were all glad to have "Daddy" Griffiths with us and he preached an excellent sermon to a very large audience on Saturday evening. On Sunday a splendid prayer meeting was had at nine o'clock, with Apostle Griffiths, William M. Grice, and William Davis in the stand. A grand meeting was enjoyed. Eighty testimonies were recorded. At 2.30 John R. Grice preached to a packed tabernacle. Preaching again at 7.30 by William I. Fligg, of Independence, Missouri.

One of the happy features of the conference to many was the privilege of again seeing the faces and grasping in true fellowship the hands of many who used to be in the district. We were glad to see Elder Hinman W. Savage again. Many of us thought he was still in the islands. Elder Savage was on his way home to see his father, who is very ill, and dropped off to see us once more. Come again, Brother Savage; you are welcome any time. Special prayer was had in the prayer service for Elder Richard Weaver and Elder James Davis, who are very ill. We trust the Lord has blessed them both. There were about seven hundred Saints in attendance at the conference. We all had a good time and parted happy, desiring a prosperous year in the work of the Master.

H. L. MACPHERSON,
J. N. MUIR, Press Committee.

Cooperation

In the beginning God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." He was talking to and about Jesus Christ. That was the beginning of cooperation in regard to man. God and Jesus Christ agreed to work together, thereby giving us a good example of what to do to make our work a success.

When the Lord wanted Moses to go down into Egypt to bring out the children of Israel from bondage, Moses said unto him, "Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh?" and the Lord said, "Certainly I will be with thee," and that was cooperation between God and man. Without it Moses would have failed in his great task, and we would not be singing his praises as a great leader.

Hannah said, "For this child have I prayed," having reference to Samuel, and because the Lord had granted her petition she said, "Therefore I have lent him unto the Lord." As the years rolled by there must have come to her great joy and satisfaction in the thought that she had been a partner with God in rearing a child that was one of God's great prophets and that he was a blessing to Israel.

At a certain time when Jesus was in the temple and a great crowd was listening to his teaching, he had much opposition from the Pharisees, and they tried to get him to do and say things contrary to the law, but he was too wise to be caught in the trap they had set for him. After telling them that he was teaching the things that his Father wanted him to teach, he said, "And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." His Father was a partner with him and was willing to help him because he did the things that pleased him. If Jesus found it necessary to be in cooperation with his Father, can we accomplish our task of our own strength and wisdom?

Paul in writing to the Corinthian saints said, "For we are laborers together with God." Here he extends to his people the opportunity of cooperation with him in the great work of salvation. What higher honor could man ask than where the Father comes and makes us partners with him? If a more positive statement be necessary, it is found in latter-day revelation in the following language: "And to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." This is cooperation in the largest field possible, with our heavenly Father in every avenue where human labor is performed. What more exalted and honorable position could man occupy?

The greatest problem before our Nation and church to-day is the home, to preserve it from its foes without and friends within. As the home is, so will be the nation and the church. The spirit of cooperation must come into our homes between the parents and children. Without it the problems cannot be solved. The educational opportunities, the agricultural and industrial changes within the past one hundred years, have made an almost complete change in our social conditions. This has greatly affected the home life of both old and young, but especially the latter, with the strongest tendency to take them away from the home to get what they want in labor, amusement, and pleasure. The question is being asked daily, "What shall we do with our boys and girls?" and the answers are as varied as the leaves on the forest trees.

The maiden lady of undetermined age; the bachelor of cynical ideas; the mother of indulgent mien; the father with habits of harshness; the judge of a juvenile court; and the social reformer, all have a remedy, which from their viewpoint is a cure for all the ills that vigorous, healthy, and boisterous youth is heir to. The habits of the young are largely formed from their parents, so that before they leave home to attend college, or enter a business house to become a merchant, or an industrial institution to become a tradesman, or in any field of industry their habits are largely fixed, and any changes made after that will be in the way of development or enlargement.

With those facts fixed in our mind we must change our viewpoint, and instead of placing too much blame upon the young for their failures in life, and perhaps lapse in morals, and asking the question, What shall we do with our boys and girls? we should ask, What shall we do with our fathers and mothers? They are the natural protectors of the young. The law of nature has made them so, and the divine edict has gone forth that our heavenly Father will hold parents responsible if they fail to bring them up in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. That does not mean verbal teaching alone, but being living examples of what that faith is. The young are not responsible for the time in which they came into the world. Whether the world is better or worse, they did not make it so. It is as they found it, and if they are to escape the evil and appropriate the good, it will largely be because the parents have helped them make the choice. If the parents are blind to the evil around them and indifferent to the good that is within their grasp, the boys and girls must start out in the world handicapped, with the chances of success against them.

In order that our young people shall be successful in escaping the evil and embracing the good, there must be cooperation between the parents and children. Without a bond to bind them together which has for its foundation love and sympathy, they must fail. The binding force must be stronger than a rope of sand. There should be a little secret society, so far as the outer world is concerned, between parents and children. They should share their mutual cares; help bear each other's burdens; make their plans for the mutual good of all; make home the happiest place in the world—a place where the children would rather be than out in the place of commercialized pleasure.

Abraham Lincoln became President of the United States because he had a stepmother who made their log cabin home more attractive than any palace ever built by man.

James A. Garfield became President of the United States because his widowed mother made their log cabin home a more beautiful place than the most magnificent cathedral ever erected. The altar at which they bowed to worship was made of love. The ornamentation of the walls within was not works of art gathered from the great cities of the world, the product of master minds, but that of utensils in use by the pioneers and the simple adornments made by their own hands. Better than all the world could give were hearts that loved and worked for each other.

Theodore Roosevelt was prepared for the presidency of the United States in his home in New York City by parents who revered the name of God and each day gathered their children around them and read the stories of great men and loving mothers whose deeds of love and heroism were recorded in the Bible, and in simple but earnest prayer committed the entire family each day to a Father's loving watch-care and protection. It was from the Bible stories and the example of his parents that he got his idea of righteousness and his determination to fight for what was right. He was as courageous as a gladiator and yet as tender and loving as a little child. It was his home life that laid the foundation for his life of usefulness for his country and a friend to all nations.

The late President Joseph Smith was reared in the midst of sorrow, because of bitter persecution that was carried on against his parents, and it seems as if about all was done that could be done that would make his life unhappy and kill every ambition that could be found in the heart of a young boy. In the darkest hours of his young life he had a father and mother who never forgot him, and after the sad day of Carthage a mother's love would become more intensified because she must keep him for God and the church. Can we who knew him ever forget his tenderness, his love for all regardless of their station in life, his simple, lowly ways, his cheerful words to the discouraged missionary, his heart of tenderness and forgiveness to the erring one? We loved him because we saw in his life so much of the sorrow and tenderness and love of the lowly Nazarene.

In our great love for Joseph we must not forget that the same mother's love was warm for two other boys who with Joseph became the "three pillars" of the Reorganization. They were Alexander and David, and many hearts were made glad by their kindly ministrations to the people in the pulpit and in their homes. In association with their brother they left to the church a rich legacy of faithful service and cheerful sacrifice for the cause of Jesus Christ.

The future of the church is in the keeping of the young, for they must take the place of the old who pass on to a well-earned rest and reward; and the present and the future of the young is in the hands of their parents. Our success will largely depend on the amount of cooperation that will exist between them. Without it they will fail, or have but meager success.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Study of Science Is Valuable to the Minister

A preacher of good sermons uses many scientific illustrations effectively.

In the issue of the HERALD for August 2 there appears a letter from an aged brother complaining of the poor sermons preached by some of the brothers and relates about one in particular going into biotaxy, biology, etc. We agree with our aged brother that the discussion of these subjects to any great extent is something more suitable for the lecture platform than for a sermon, as there are many of the sheep, also the lambs, who are not able to grasp the ideas contained therein. Thus the benefit which should be derived from the service by many is lost to all but a few.

Notwithstanding this, it is of vital importance that the eldership who are sent forth to teach (not to be taught, Doctrine and Covenants 43:4) should have a knowledge of history and of countries and of kingdoms; of laws of God and man; and all this for the salvation of Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 90:12; also 2 Peter 1:5, "Add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge.") In studying biology we are obtaining a knowledge of the law of God in respect to kingdoms.

Doctrine and Covenants 85:9 states: "All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions."

We understand from the opening chapters of Genesis that when God created the earth and the things therein that the decree was that each was to bring forth after its own kind. Each occupied in its own kingdom, and each kingdom had a law given to govern it, and this law so given had certain limitations. The Psalmist says, "The law of the Lord is perfect." (Psalms 19:7.) It stands in a class by itself as compared with all other laws.

Ecclesiastes 7:29 states that God hath made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions, and among them man has tried to defeat God's purposes and to turn things upside down. First, they tried to build a tower to heaven and God held them upon that. Then man tried to upset the law governing the various kingdoms, and again he is balked. God only permits him to go so far. "He hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." (Acts 17:26.)

Man takes a hand in trying to turn upside down the law governing the plant kingdom. He finally produces the seedless orange, a freak, a hybrid; but strange to say, those versed in horticulture tell us it has no powers of reproduction.

Next, man goes to the feathered kingdom and crosses birds of different varieties. Thus he takes the tame or domestic canary hen and crosses it with the wild male of the goldfinch, bullfinch, linnet, and indigo bird, and produces what we call a hybrid or mule bird. These birds have no powers of propagation.

Next, he goes to the animal kingdom, to which man belongs, and crosses a donkey or jackass with a horse and produces a mule. It has no powers of reproduction. And we have been told by a student of biology that the same law applies in the human family, that if we cross the black and the white race the offspring from this union, if mated with the black race and continued therein will produce. It will do likewise if mated with the white race and continues therein. But they must be kept moving in one direction as it were. If mated back and forth, first into the black race then into the white, we are told that at the third cross the offspring is a hybrid. It has no powers of propagation. It cannot bring forth after its kind because it has no kind.

Probably it was such that Christ referred to in Matthew 19: 12, "Eunuchs which were so born from their mothers' womb." But why study these things? Simply this, that we may be able to draw the illustration, portray the picture, showing the difference between the perfect law of liberty, the law of God, and the law which brings into bondage.

We might say the same of psychology. We can also use it to advantage in presenting the gospel. Psychology in its short form might be defined as a condition of the mind, especially relating to spiritual matters. Apparently Jesus Christ was a psychologist and knew the proper way to take people. He knew the thin or vulnerable spot in their nature, as is shown by his conversation with the woman of Samaria (John 4), also the rich young man (Matthew 19).

We are told to study all good books (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36; 87: 5). We can learn much from a close study of Katherine M. H. Blackford's lessons on Reading Human Character, as outlined in the profile of the face. Being able to do this we can readily discern and know the kind of a sermon that will appeal to a person, that will touch the thin spot in his nature, assisted, of course, by the Spirit of God, realizing "no man cometh unto me except the Spirit of my Father draw him." But knowing this we can arrange our talk accordingly.

Each of the subjects named by our brother in his letter have a certain field of usefulness in connection with the telling of the gospel story. But we must know just how far we can go and just what part of them we can use to the best advantage in weaving it into our sermon. We note that President Elbert A. Smith seems to possess the happy faculty of using them to good advantage. But we realize it requires experience and wisdom. May we all act wisely in the gaining of the experience and the dissemination of the knowledge thus gained.

J. A. MORRISON.

Testimony of George A. Njeim, Jerusalem, Palestine

A convert of U. W. Greene who remained steadfast and has now accepted the call to duty at Jerusalem.

When the people of Syria and Arabia were in darkness and they knew nothing about God's work, going far away from the straight way, God knew that they were doing wrong and wanted to be merciful upon them; he also knew that their hearts were pure, but the teachings which they used and were accustomed to hear it from time to time made them stray deep into the wilderness.

When God wanted to renew his church in the world, he sent a branch to Arabia, which was carrying his word, which is the gospel, by whom he wanted to build a church. The word first came to Jerusalem where it remained for a time, then went to Lebanon by God's messenger, Elder U. W. Greene, who remained there for two months, and I have the honor to say that during that time I was baptized into this church.

After I was baptized I felt myself a new man, with a new church. I had received new teachings and entered into a new life. And from that time I found myself nearer to God than before, because I was changed from a sinful man to a saved man and the teachings and doctrine of Christ began to grow larger and larger in my mind.

The war came, which caused me to be alone, without a leader to lead me and strengthen my faith, but I continued in what I had heard taught from our noble brother, Elder U. W. Greene. I prayed to God very much to be saved from this savage war and God heard my prayer and I with my family were saved. I thank God very much for what he has done for me.

After that war had stopped and everything went as before I was very anxious to hear something about the church which was always making me cheerful when it came to my mind. I received a letter from Brother H. Passman with which he was sending me a Zion's Ensign. I was very glad that we still have the church in Arabia. This honorable Elder H. Passman continued sending me letters and papers to read.

At last I found myself in need for hearing more about God and his work. In spite of the many things which hindered me from going to Jerusalem, I came. I am twenty-two years old and have a mother fifty-two years old and a grandmother about seventy-two years old, and a brother fifteen years old. I left them after I had provided everything for them, and came to Jerusalem.

I was very much interested with the work here and hearing God's word often. I am feeling a new Spirit in me and feeling also that I am going forward, making a good success in my work. I am asking God to help the gospel in our land and everywhere and to change the minds of the people to know which is the true church.

I am giving some religious lectures in Arabic, also teaching a Sunday school class in Arabic, and this work helps to strengthen my faith. I desire to spend my full strength in the work of God. I ask an interest in your prayers for our work in Palestine.

Your brother in the gospel,

GEORGE A. NJEIM.

We Must Provide Better Conditions

The People of the Abyss (and the title is a true index of its contents) is a book portrayal of people of the east side of London, and no darker picture could be drawn by any artist than is told by this author. He says, "The color of life is gray and drab; everything is hopeless and dirty. Bathtubs are a thing totally unknown." On his search after knowledge he mingled with the people, becoming one of them, wearing such clothes as they wore; in short, getting down to their level, eating and sleeping with them.

The conditions he describes are simply appalling and are such that they will bring disaster to the world. For why should any man go hungry in the midst of plenty?

The teachings of Jesus Christ have been ignored, and now we are confronted by the misery of mankind. We have been so engrossed in business that family worship has been neglected and God is brushed lightly aside. But "God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." No nation can rise higher than its homes, and the American homes are being disintegrated, and what will be the end? Who can tell what might have been avoided if the blessing of God had been asked on the home? I will quote from the HERALD of August 23, "It is now an exception to find a home where prayers are offered. The day is passing in America when the word of God stands enthroned in the home."

This description may seem pessimistic to some, but it is quite true that in that great city of millions, which is alike the home of the pauper and the millionaire, there exists a division brought about by caste which binds men in chains stronger than steel and causes them to live as separate as though divided by worlds. Here lies the king in his palace and the pauper in his rags. The accident of birth gives one a throne and leaves the other in the gutter.

Selfishness of man brought about this condition, but the justice of God will yet rule in the destinies of men. The love of God is not confined to a favored few, not just "me and my wife and my son John and his wife," but there is a wide sweep to God's plan of redemption which is broad as eternity.

"God so loved the world" takes in all the universe. "There's a wideness of God's mercy, like the wideness of the sea." "Love your neighbor as yourself," or as I heard it expressed, "Thinking in terms of the other fellow."

The world is ruled to-day with the iron hand of selfishness, and "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." The fruits of selfishness are world-wide. The poor are being oppressed, the hungry are denied food. Then let me tell you the man who will jingle his dollars in his pocket when little children starve with hunger has need to repent and will find no place in the kingdom of God, be his voice ever so strenuous in testimony.

God is looking for real men who will serve him in a whole-hearted way, not a service of the lips only but a service of bread and butter and warmth and clothing. Such service is acceptable to God. The environment which has been the lot of these poor people has been a daily and hourly problem of getting food and shelter. It loomed large in their eyes, and to their way of thinking it was of even more importance than their soul's salvation. We cannot ignore the Book of Mormon's plain and emphatic words on this question to those who cling to their money, "Woe be unto that man, for his substance shall perish with him." (Mosiah 2: 28-42.)

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

Social Gatherings in Southern Indiana District

The Saints in southern Indiana have had some very instructive and pleasant meetings during the past summer.

At the beginning of the summer season Brother H. W. Burwell, President of the Louisville Branch, proposed to the Saints of New Albany that they should have a grove meeting somewhere near New Albany, everyone to bring his dinner in a basket. The suggestion was promptly taken up and the Saints decided to have the meeting on the farm of Sister Metcalf, about three miles out of town.

On the day appointed, Saints gathered in from different points in the district and the day began with Sunday school. Three meetings besides the Sunday school were held: Preaching in the morning, prayer meeting in the afternoon, and again preaching.

An invitation was extended by the Saints of Corydon to the gathering and a Sunday named on which the basket dinner and meetings were to be held. The same program was carried out here as at New Albany.

Then Byrnsville sent an invitation, and Saints from Marengo, Corydon, Louisville and vicinity came; some in trucks, automobiles, Fords, etc. Thus another enjoyable time was had by all.

Last and saddest was the Marengo meeting. A larger attendance was in evidence than at any of the other meetings. But over all hung the cloud of death in Brother Henry Zahnd's family. His son, Howard, who had been sick for some time with typhoid fever had died Saturday morning. The funeral was held that day at 2.30 p. m. The church was crowded full of sympathizers, friends and relatives.

On the whole, however, we had an unusual summer. Everyone likes to see different sections of the country and this afforded a means for service and pleasure to all.

DANIEL H. THOMPSON.

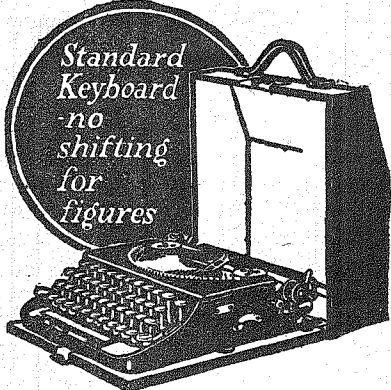

A New Book—Homespun Rhymes

We are sure that if a thousand average mothers were to have one of the beautiful new books we have recently issued, entitled Homespun Rhymes, put into their hands, most of them would be grateful for the opportunity of getting so fine a book at so small a cost.

Homespun Rhymes is a collection from Zion's Hope, Stepping Stones, etc., of some of the most suitable poems for small children. Each is illustrated and the type is large. They are suitable for reading to children or to place in the hands of the child.

The cover is of a pretty red cloth, decorated with a beautiful three-color design. The size is larger than the ordinary book.

The price is one dollar, postpaid, and you are sure to be more than satisfied.

Remington
Portable
Typewriter

HAS every feature
common to the larger machines—all compacted in a case
only four inches high.

Price, with case, $60.

Special terms to Missionaries
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

OUR SOCIAL IDEALS

(Continued from page 924.)

is held socially responsible for the manner in which he utilizes whatever of property and wealth he may acquire, holding only that which he utilizes, and this determined by his capacity. This envisagement of social responsibility requires that talents as well as property shall be directed towards community welfare, the compulsion being not law but public sentiment. The holding of only what can be utilized (according to capacity or talent) requires that surplus shall revert to the common treasury or to the group. Wealth and property are not for personal pleasure according to capacity, but for service and enlarged contribution to the common weal. Riotous or extravagant living is incongruous with the doctrine of stewardships, while luxury is justified only when common.

From every man will be expected according to his capacity; his recompense therefore will in part be that sufficient to supply his needs. The other part will be satisfaction—soul satisfaction for services rendered. The criterion of success becomes not bank account, not piled up personal wealth, but service and wealth contributed to the community. To appreciate such a social ideal, such a social organization, requires a social consciousness for the development of which we must depend on religion. It is foreign to the present social order.

Such an order means equality; not level equality, but equality of opportunity, equality of expression, and contribution according to capacity. It means that each will seek that occupation which will permit the largest expression of innate ability.

The doctrine of stewardships can be applied to social reform only on a religious basis, for it is contingent upon attitude, and the attitude necessary springs only from a consciousness that service to God spells service to neighbor. The attitude required is that each will give his maximum contribution to the group measured by his equipment, turning all surplus into the common treasury. It may require activity in that which is not accompanied by a return in wealth yet is required by social advancement. Unremunerative labor necessary for social progress or weal will be supported from the accumulated community surplus.

The flowing of all individual surplus properties into the common treasury, will make it possible to accomplish as legitimate and regular public activities many things now left to so-called charity and private philanthropy or by what may be termed commercialized social obligations only partially discharged. By the things left to charity and private philanthropy we refer to the care of the sick and aged and debilitated, the victims of unemployment, etc. By the commercialized social obligations only partially discharged is meant insurance companies providing for life, accident, industrial, and sick insurance, etc., for companies insure only a few, and these the best risks, while those needing insurance benefits most are denied it, or penalized, because most likely to become dependent. Modern insurance is unchristian because it denies service to those most needing it, and reaps benefit for those most able to serve.

And once service becomes the criterion, each will seek the activity best suited to his natural and developed endowments, whether common laborer, farmer, or banker, for "social standing" will not be determined by "income" or bank account, but by common weal conserved. So the back to farm movement so much desired will start almost spontaneously, for service being the criterion those with innate inclination to till the soil will seek that outlet for their social expression. It seems that within all men is the inbred instinct for agriculture, and only commercialism with its shorter and less arduous road to a competency has deflected those with such agricultural inclinations away from the land.

For the development of society organized on the stewardship plan, a highly and pervasive social consciousness is essential to develop the idea with all individuals that the prime duty is to serve the group, the benefits of improvements and accumulated goods coming to the individual only through the common uplift, and individual success being measured by the amount he has contributed to the public good.

It is the duty of the church to develop and promote this social consciousness and agitate such social reform. To discharge this responsibility the church must be something more than a Sunday entertainment society, something more than a performer of ceremonies. The pulpit must stand for social reform, denounce selfishness in all forms, and free itself from the charge of being subservient to the interests entrenched behind the bulwarks of individualism. It is not enough for the church in its efforts to promote Christianity to call on individuals to come to Christ, but the call must be to come with the tools of service in hand ready to devote time and energy and talents to the common welfare. "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready and God will give thee flax." It is not enough to preach the entrance of a mystic kingdom of God into the heart, but a kingdom of God come in the form of a regenerated and ideal society where righteousness prevails and justice walks unhampered. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you." The church must foster social reform, and its stalwarts may even have to enter politics to accomplish it. It must stand for social freedom, and this necessitates a break with present conditions, for the church must stand for wealth becoming pervasive and not the heritage of a privileged class.

Such an order is not communism for the rule of all things common will not apply; but all surplus will become common and all activity will be directed towards common maintenance and betterment. It is not socialism, but the great tools of industry will be under social control; a control promoted and protected by public sentiment fostered and preserved by religion. Such an order permits of no idlers. Everyone a contributor is the ideal. The leisure class disappears, for leisure itself becomes communized, what there is being shared by all. Drudgery becomes abolished, for work being the natural expression of God-given or nature-endowed talents, becomes pleasurable and wholesome.

The ideal society outlined above will demand a system of education more nearly universal than the present, and its universality must extend to the higher education; for society demanding the best of service from every member it becomes of prime importance that every member shall be put through such process of development that will not only discover the special talent or talents, but when discovered the highest possible development of the special endowment shall be made, with the guarantee of opportunity for its fullest expression in accomplishment and contribution. Such a system of education must be far more flexible than our present one, capable of fitting itself to the needs of each pupil. Not only must the special endowment of each child or person be discovered and developed, but that must be vitalized, galvanized, electrified, by an aroused interest which will lend itself not alone to expedite development but to its fullest and freest conversion into community welfare.

That this ideal is attainable is beyond question, for evidence of the willingness of individuals to go on the stewardship basis has been seen. That it is time for some such reform to rectify the many maladjustments in our society, cannot be gainsaid.

I commend to you folks a careful and prayerful study of this document I have read, for I feel that it contains a general outline of the goal towards which this church must work, and to me it becomes of prime importance because throughout the whole fiber of my very being I am conscious of the fact that this church stands to-day on the threshold of great progress or at the door which leads backward and to retrogression. And it shall be my earnest endeavor to lay these things before the church in such a way that the Spirit of God may fructify the splendid talents and developments and heritage of this church into a soon accomplishment of the establishment of the doctrine of stewardships in all its beauty, for without the establishment of the doctrine of stewardships in a community and group sense, without the awakening of the social consciousness, Zion cannot put on her beautiful garments that will make her shine throughout the earth. The Saints have been praying for this larger life. Are they ready for it to be ushered in? That larger life as I have tried to express it to you is for you to enjoy now, not beyond the grave. I would not deny to you the joy that comes from contemplation of the glories of the beyond. I would not have you for one moment lose the keenness of your desire to make yourself excel in righteousness; but I would have you vitalize that righteousness and would have you vitalize that belief in the beyond by a determination to do your whole part by attempting to do something towards the establishment of the kingdom of God here, that we may have the full expression of life that we are capable of having and enjoy now the blessings of God in the reformed society which we term Zion. Are we ready? God forbid that the people shall say, No. And yet to me I enter this conference with a consciousness that the answer that is given to this question at this conference will determine whether the work of this church is onward or not.

The need is social perfection and the process of reaching that perfection is education plus work. Social vision is truly essential for this people to possess in order that in traveling the road Christ traveled we might be fortified against the temptation to quit our work because of the trials and opposition and the obstacles that will be placed before us. We must be fortified by the consciousness that we are walking the road that God intends we should walk, and to which he has been calling us for nearly one century, for the development of that social consciousness that will permit us to see Zion.

Zion will come not in a cataclysmic form, but in the evolution of this people from their present state until we reach that condition of society which we designate under the general term of Zion. And for us to make that development it is not your answer to it to sit back and say, "Put it into effect if you can," because you cannot escape your responsibility in doing your part. It is demanded of us by Deity himself that every individual in the church shall effectually develop this social consciousness, and with it there shall come, there must come, a determination to stand on the platform of individual righteousness and from that platform reach out in different activities until every person can become conscious that his activity is directly contributing to the improvement and the betterment and to the uplift of all the rest in the community.

We sometimes are fond of quoting a passage of scripture that sometimes I think our own people do not appreciate the special significance of. We call attention to the fact that those who have been crying, "Lord, Lord," will be told by the Master, "You never knew me." I feel that our people are in great danger of committing that same error. We say, Lord, Lord, bring us Zion, and in our prayers and attitude we give him lip service, but the time will come when the Lord will say to us, "Ye never knew me. There never was existent in your own soul the ability to glimpse beyond the small circle of your own selfish interests and see the kingdom of God that is about you everywhere that finds expression in service to your fellow man." And even our own people, Latter Day Saints, may eventually be told by the Master himself, "Ye never knew me," when in those terms he would simply say, "You have failed to develop the social consciousness that gives you the vision of the goal of this church and which will stimulate you with a desire to see its program worked out." If we as a people fail in any large degree to have developed this social consciousness, the remedy once again is found in education, and this people must be educated until that social consciousness shall have been developed.

Even our missionary work carried on to the uttermost corners of the earth must be carried on with the social ideals to the fore. "Twenty thousand converts by next General Conference and each with his face towards Zion," is the way we attempted to crystallize it once before. We may have come short of the number; perhaps we have come still further short of reaching the goal of having every convert turned with his face fairly and squarely towards that reformed condition of society that spells Zion.

Every man who is in touch with affairs to-day, and especially in a religious circle, knows that there is going on what is termed a religious revolution, and it seems to me that there ought to be developed somewhere in this church a consciousness that this religious evolution, or revolution, affords to us the greatest opportunity that has come to us since 1830 to demonstrate to the world what we have in the way of social reform. Will we let that opportunity go by or will we improve it? is the question that this conference must answer.

The responsibility of stewardships is not a matter of individual consciousness alone, but there must be engendered a sense of responsibility to the group as well as to God. And anything that comes short of developing in a man that consciousness of responsibility towards the group, I care not how intensive might be the religion of the individual himself, I care not how keen may be his consciousness of his responsibility to God, he cannot give expression to that in the fullest sense of the word until he becomes conscious also of his responsibility to his fellow man. The bearing of this you may see later, perhaps before this conference is over. And the compulsion, let me repeat, that will eventually force every person who comes to Zion to place himself in harmony with the rules that God has given will be the compulsion that emanates from the development of public sentiment.

The development of capacity runs parallel with it, and again the process is education. I pause here long enough to say a little word about education. You have heard me mention that a number of times, and before you get through hearing me preach, as long as I continue to represent this church, you will be hearing a good deal about education. I wish to say that perhaps I have been unfortunate in the selection of the word. I remember reading once a work on science which left a very pronounced effect on the scientific world. I discovered that a tremendous amount of opposition was urged against this wonderful contribution to science simply because the author was unfortunate in the use of a word. I have used the word education and that to the minds of many means a schooling. While I do believe in a school training, yet education to me means far more. It means that development that will give an individual his largest expression, and education goes on in the life of every being who is rational from the time he becomes conscious until he closes his eyes in death. And perhaps it might not have gone so hard with me if I had coupled an adjective with the word. If I had said religious education perhaps the church people would have joined hands with me. Let us join hands with Brother Carmichael when he says that the education this people needs is religious education. If you wish to qualify it by attaching the adjective I will be willing to have you do so.

Let me plead once more most emphatically for the doctrine of stewardships. Let me call your attention to the dangerousness of the delay that this people is likely to cause if they do not move out in the establishment of the doctrine of stewardships. I have plead for the establishment of stewardships. I plead for it now. As I said before, I believe that the answer this people will give will determine what our progress will be. And so I earnestly plead with you that you might give to this your whole and your prayerful consideration that you as a delegate or you as an ex officio might be able to answer before God as to what shall be the attitude of this people in moving out to establish the reformed society that we have called Zion. Must we depend on the young entirely? If so, let us give those young the most expeditious education under the most favorable conditions that it is possible for us to give.

May God bless and fortify for the arduous task before us, and enable us as a people to give the answer to the question, Will we establish Zion that God has been waiting to see? is my prayer.

The Sunday School

An organized, unified course of religious education is needed.

The General Sunday School Association, as already pointed out in the Saints' Herald, was organized by the General Conference with the avowed purpose of making it more effective in the work of the church. Previous to that, from the very beginning of the Reorganization, the general church officers and conferences had given consideration to the needs of the church in that department of work, and fostered it.

There followed after 1890, however, greater and yet greater independence of action on the part of the Sunday School Association and other associations which later developed. The fallacy of this was recognized and an effort made to bring them more closely in harmony and under the jurisdiction of the work of the church. We are glad to note that invariably have these associations reported to the General Conference and that at all times the right of supervision of the conference has been recognized.

But to-day we are confronted with a new situation. It is essential that provision be made for better Sunday school lessons. All credit is due our splendid editors of the past, but to-day we know more of our problems than we did ten, twenty, or thirty years ago. The Sunday school is for the religious education of both the child and adult, but primarily that of the child. A course of sermons through the year covering repeatedly only a few limited parts of the word of God is not adequate for either children, young people, or adult religious education.

If this work is to be done effectively it should take into consideration all that is known in child physiology and psychology. It should take advantage of the best that is known in the work of the naturally religious development of the child and how to assist that development. It should also take into consideration our practical experience in Sunday school work. But finally, it must especially take into consideration the essential teachings of the church, the word of God as set forth in the Bible; and to represent adequately the teachings of the church it should have church approval.

Should Not End With Children

This work should not end with the children, but should continue on behalf of the young people. Much is already being done for a few young people at Graceland College, but this work should be extended and made available for all, whether they meet fifteen hours a week at Graceland College or one or two hours a week in the local church, or only one half an hour in the Sunday school on Sunday. It should develop to take into consideration adult class work and may eventually be made a strong help in outlining programs for the priesthood meetings.

Certainly this should not be done by the department of the Sunday school. It may be done by the department of religious education, and by a committee or board representing the leading quorums of the church and appointed by the General Conference. At least it should be done under the direction of such a board. To do this effectively it must be unified; to do this effectively it must have the approval of the church.

There seems no reason why we should circumscribe ourselves by a constitution and a separate Sunday school organization. There is every reason why we should rather reorganize this department as the department of religious education for the church. Such a department with an appropriate general conference lesson board should have the supervision of the teacher training courses, as well as the courses in religious education, regardless of where they may be given.

The Sunday school work and classes should be continued, but made more effective. By being made more effective we mean that as rapidly as possible better facilities be secured and lessons secured best adapted to the children of each particular age.

But in addition to that there should also be a sermon or sermonet for the young people, and another which may be given simultaneously for the younger children, as rapidly as such can be provided for. Even though there be but some twenty to twenty-five children to attend, even though there be but five or ten children, it were better that such an occasional sermonet adapted to their years and comprehension by one who has made special preparation for that work should be given than that they go always to swell the adult congregation and hear that which is beyond their understanding.

Eventually it should be extended further and provision made for week-day classes. This may include classes now held by the young people on behalf of the Religio, classes in religious education held by the Women's Department, home class work, and priesthood meetings. For there is much more yet to be done to provide more adequate religious education.

In fact, we have placed the stress upon secular education in providing five days a week with children in school from five to six hours a day, as compared with the single Sunday school hour. There is need for an extension of the work of religious education, and the work in religious education, whether previously offered at Graceland College, by the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, in the Women's Department, in the Sunday school, or elsewhere, should be unified under the direction of the church in a definite department of church work.

S. A. B.

Some fish are more valuable in the water than in the net.—J. A. Koehler.

Church's Largest Sacrament Service

Over seventy men serve about 3,300 with bread and wine in a total of fifteen minutes. Two capacity audiences, yet not room enough for all. The largest audience the church has ever had at a sacramental service.

With the First Presidency in charge, the first devotional service at the conference was successfully conducted at the tabernacle, with a simultaneous service at the Stone Church in charge of Bishop M. H. Siegfried, assisted by J. B. Wildermuth and J. W. Metcalf.

The Stone Church meeting was provided as an overflow to accommodate those who could not find seats at the tabernacle, yet the large upper auditorium was insufficient, though many were standing, and a goodly number had to be content to return to the tabernacle and stand around outside.

The Old Songs Used

The songs were contained in a new song pamphlet gotten out for the occasion by Harold C. Burgess. The old-time favorites were sung, such as "All hail the power of Jesus' name," "My faith looks up to thee," "My times are in thy hands, "Jesus, I my cross have taken," "Nearer, my God, to thee," "Sovereign and transforming grace," "I need thee every hour," etc. The songs were all led by Elder Frank A. Russell.

The opening prayer was by Elder T. W. Williams, who with eloquent fervor asked God's choicest blessings to come to his church at the opening service, to remain throughout the conference.

President F. M. Smith stated that the emblems could not be served to those standing outside and that all general officers were to be seated on the platform till it was filled. A considerable portion of the space on the large platform was occupied by the seventy men appointed to serve. These men had met the previous evening and knew exactly the apportionment of work, so that when the wine was served it took exactly eight minutes from the time they began to file out till they had all returned. The serving of the bread took considerably less time, probably not over five minutes for the entire 3,300 persons.

An oblation was taken, totaling $480.50 at both services.

A Precedent Set

Perhaps a precedent was established, but as President Elbert A. Smith said, necessity knows no precedent, and because kneeling was impossible, all were requested to stand with bowed heads while the blessings were asked on the emblems.

He suggested that it was not practical to throw the meeting open to a general prayer and testimony participation, but instead he would call on several of the brethren. Elder Walter W. Smith reiterated a statement of Brother Elbert's that the church had seen no such gathering before. He reviewed the past, where the church had met at Kirtland to dedicate the Temple, at Far West and at Nauvoo in wonderful assemblages. They were laying corner stones and dedicating buildings, while we were laying spiritual foundations and dedicating ourselves—perhaps a greater thing so far as significance is concerned. "It is an opportune moment," concluded the historian, "to dedicate ourselves anew to preaching the gospel, living our religion, listening to the voice of inspiration to help us attain our ends."

Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths was called on. He has spent forty-six years in constant service in the ministry, and over thirty-five years in the Quorum of Twelve. He began as a weak boy and was not boasting of his strength to-day. His testimony was that he was glad he was a Latter Day Saint. Ever since 1866 he had assisted the leading officers of the church. He was willing to abide God's will and earnestly desired that the conference be attended by His power.

Bishop B. R. McGuire was called upon as one who carried a heavy burden and was subject to criticism constantly in the carrying out of his responsibilities.

Brother McGuire testified that the gospel was indeed "the power of God unto salvation," and believed we were here primarily that we might better cooperate and demonstrate that the gospel is the power of God unto our salvation as a group. He rededicated his life to the cause and asked that as a praying people we remember him as he would remember us.

Patriarch John Shields, of Canada, was asked to speak, and in responding expressed gratitude for the sound of the gospel. He had held membership previously in two other church organizations, and friends had said that had he been as faithful and devoted in them as in this church, he would have attained the same sort of results. "But the criticism was not founded in fact," he insisted, believing implicitly the statement in Doctrine and Covenants that without the priesthood and the ordinances of the church the power of godliness in its true sense is not manifest to men in the flesh.

Challenge to the Young

Saying that the zeal and enthusiasm of the elder men in the church was matched by that of the younger men, Brother Elbert called on Elder Floyd M. McDowell, who expressed appreciation of the privilege and responsibility of speaking and would offer a challenge to the young people of the church to take up the work of the older men, who must lay down the armor because of advancing years. The earnest wish of our young brother was that we could catch the vision which had actuated leading social workers of the day and carry out our great program triumphantly.

Though the session could not be a prayer meeting in the usual sense, President Elbert suggested that the Saints have a prayer meeting in their hearts each day, to the end that the conference might be all that it should be.

At the Stone Church some interesting short testimonies were had from the audience. Apostle J. F. Curtis gave a specially good testimony. Elder John Cooper, of North-eastern Illinois, led in prayer, and a prayer for the congregation was offered by A. Carmichael, of Lamoni.

Our Religious Education Program

Brother McDowell pleads that we appreciate the needs of the pupil and proceed to supply those needs rather than to insist on something which may drive him away.

Brother Floyd M. McDowell, who has a right to be called "Doctor" from having acquired the degree of doctor of philosophy, but who seemingly cares little about what we call him, is often warned to put the soft pedal on the word education—to call a rose by some other name to see if it is as sweet. But he says he cannot. He believes in education in its true meaning and, at the expense of popularity in some quarters, will persist in urging education as a means to the end we seek.

In his address Sunday evening, October 1, attended by a small audience, he laid as a basis the thought that our social and our religious educational programs harmonize beautifully. If not, they would not secure his allegiance nor cause him to urge others to accept them.

As did President Smith at the 3 o'clock service, our brother said he liked the term religious education—meaning learning to live our religion: education as a process rather than as a thing.

Our Sunday schools too often, he said, are but places where we come to spend hours debating as to the origin of the Melchisedec priesthood; whether Adam died the day he partook of the apple or at some other time; as to the breed of rooster that crowed because of the perfidy of Peter. We do all this and let the eager youngsters with their current problems brought in from the week's experiences go untouched, trying to foist upon them something which may not relate at all to their present lives, then wonder that they leave us, often never to come back.

A religion that has organization, knowledge, emotionalism, and doing good is the kind we ought to have. The danger is in one type predominating and leaving out all the others, was argued.

"The program of religious education we seek to establish will not dispense with the guidance of the Holy Spirit," he emphasized, "but would encourage its operation and seek to instruct and help our army of teachers see their problem and solve it. We must not wait till the child has gone wrong, then start out to reclaim him. Let us keep him doing right, living right, and not lose him to the evils of the world.

"The Boy Scout hike, the Oriole social, the Temple Builder activity which does not help in the religious education of the participants is not worthy a place in the church."

Brother David Dowker led the song service. Blanche Allen Needham sang one of her typically beautiful solos.

The Young People's Organization

The Religio was from the first an organization of, by, and for the young, for study, recreation, and social development. Its religious work was necessary and has been well done. Are we not ready to move forward?

As we have previously pointed out, from the beginning of the Reorganization there have been various efforts of the young people to meet for study. In 1867 there was a philosophical and theological institute in Saint Louis. In the eighties there was a students' society in Lamoni.

We have been asked as to the origin of that beautiful sentence, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God will send thee flax." How many know, or how few? This was the motto of the Lamoni Students' Society and was suggested and composed by that great lover and friend of the young people, Sister Marietta Walker. For that class it has proved true, for without exception each one of them has done a notable work in the church.

Young People's Organization

It should be remembered that these were organized of and by the young people. The same is true of the Young People's Improvement Society organized at Saint Joseph, Saint Louis, and elsewhere. In 1892 an effort was made to form a general organization. In 1893 the constitution was presented and the Zion's Religio-Literary Society came into being.

We were rather surprised when we came to look back to realize how distinctly this was an organization by, of, and for the young people. J. A. Gunsolley was first vice president, but soon became president and continued in that office for some twenty years. But he went in a young man of thirty years of age. The general secretary, J. A. Hitchcock, was not over twenty-six. When he died in 1900 his successor was twenty-eight years of age. The first general treasurer, R. Archibald, was about twenty-six or twenty-seven years of age, and when he was succeeded by the writer of this sketch, the writer was not of age, though that fact was not known by those who appointed him.

We see from this that the organization was controlled by the young people. Every one of the earlier officers were thirty years of age or under for some years at least.

The Society at first was preeminently one for recreation, social and literary. They held debates, read papers, wrote essays, and met nearly every week in a picnic or other social event. But in 1898 these same young people felt the need of some more serious development and definitely provided that the Book of Mormon should be taken up as a principal study.

For a time provision had been made for separate work each Friday evening with the historical department, literary department, a religious department, and a temperance department. But in 1898 the Book of Mormon became the study of the Religio. Later the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was taken up.

But the program of a literary nature still took at least one half hour of each meeting, with music, debates, and essays.

Nor were the social features ignored. The intention was not to ignore or destroy the social features, but also to take up serious work. It may be that in some of the later societies this social feature was neglected, despite the fact that the work of the vice president was that of chairman of the social committee.

Religious Education Necessary

When the Religio was organized its work in religious education was necessary. That work has been done and well done on behalf of the church. Those who have been affiliated with it in official capacity naturally regret to see its passing; but that feeling is largely sentimental. Those who have been for the longest periods of time general officers, who have fought its battles, who have seen it succeed, are glad to recognize how fully it has succeeded on behalf of the church, and to see this work better handled by another department of church work.

The Religio has started many noteworthy movements: the gospel literature committee, social purity work, the library commission. It also imitated the coordinating committee. It took up and strengthened the home class work of the Sunday school and also the library work. It always has been forward looking and ready for progress; hence it is ready to-day to pass out of existence, if thereby the work of the church is prospered. It stood fast for the necessity of more religious education than was offered in the Sunday school. But this is now clearly recognized, and the department of religious education must and will provide courses in the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Church History for at least supplemental work, even though its predominant work is with the word of God in the Holy Bible.

The question which is now before the church is not, Shall the young people have religious education? Every careful student recognizes that adolescence is the time for religious progress and that this extra class work in religious education should be continued by the various locals. The question before us now is, "Is there need for a distinctive young people's organization? There is a need for some special general organizations. The Temple Builders, Orioles, and Boy Scouts have also justified themselves. There is need for better work in teaching sanitation, hygiene, and health. There is a need for better organized work in recreation, and in many instances in church work.

More Effective Local Work

But while we take up these new factors we do not want to ignore or lose that which has been so hardily gained. We do want to avoid all necessary duplication and overlapping, especially in the organization of our general work, and to make the time spent in local work more effective.

With the educational work in religious education provided for the young people by the Department of Religious Education; with the work in secular education and literary work provided by the Educational Commission and Graceland College extension courses; with hygiene and sanitation and health cared for by the Health Department; with special organizations of Boy Scouts, Oriole Girls, and Temple Builders; the question now before us is, Is there needed a special organization for the young people? and if so, just what shall be the form which that organization should take, and what shall be its purpose, having in view the best good of the work of the church as a whole and the establishment of Zion?

S. A. B.

Zion and Consecration

Not from fear nor for reward, but for righteousness and truth.

From all over the country if not all over the world the question comes, What is the church doing to offer a refuge for the oppressed and to secure economic and social justice? This is the great theme before the church to-day. We must not neglect personal righteousness, because no real social progress is possible without personal righteousness. There can be no social substitute for the necessity that each man shall put himself right with God. If a social remedy is offered as a surrogate for righteousness it will fail.

There is also need for deep and earnest and individual prayer, that with all of our learning we may get understanding, and with all of our knowledge we may receive wisdom; that wisdom which comes from above. There is need that every man and every woman, every young man and every young woman shall so live as to receive the inspiration of the Spirit of God.

But the great need of the world to-day is that along with personal righteousness we shall realize that the man who says, "I love God," but loves not his brother, according to the epistle of John, is a liar. It is a harsh word, but there is necessity for the recognition of the social aspect of religion, not leaving undone those other things which are also needed.

So as this conference meets, there is no immediate question dealing with the present more important than that of the establishment of Zion, including within that thought the social justice and righteousness which belongs with stewardships and the consecration of our all to the cause of righteousness.

Salvation has been preached from the standpoint of fear: "Flee from the wrath to come," and the shaking of the sinner over hell fire. The temporal law has been preached from the same basis, from the construction placed upon, "He who is tithed will not be burned."

But the person who does right because of fear of punishment can be controlled by the fear of more immediate punishment, and will sacrifice that which is to come for the sake of present well-being. The boy who obeys his father simply because of fear his father will lick him will not obey him as soon as he thinks he can lick his father. Of course in a religious sense this latter does not apply, but it does apply that those who are controlled by fear are not upon a stable foundation.

So the man whose vote can be bought deserves and receives condemnation of public opinion. The boy who obeys his father because of hope of reward is liable to be subject to the highest bidder in the years to come; yet religion has been taught, from the point of view of future reward, and the financial law taught from the basis that it will bring larger herds, bigger salaries, more for selfish interests.

We are convinced that the way of righteousness does pay the best in the long run and will soon in the shorter run; that it is best in the fullest sense of that term; that he who does right will escape the punishment deserved by the unrighteous; that it is, therefore, the path of safety. But the only sure foundation for spiritual salvation or for the temporal law is the basis of the love of truth and the love of righteousness. The boy who obeys his father because he loves him will obey him though the father be bedridden; and care for him though his father is no longer able to provide for himself, let alone for others.

These are only crude illustrations of the great underlying principle that consecration means an intellectual choosing of that which is best, and of a devotion of ourselves, our talents, as well as what we possess to the cause of God and his Christ.

Study Classes Get Good Start

Those in charge pleased with good response in all classes.

The three classes meeting each morning in the Stone Church at 8.30 to 9.30 held their first meeting on Monday morning and were told by the three teachers the character of the work proposed.

After the division into classes it was found that M. A. Etzenhouser had about 75 who wanted to consider "The psychology of the adolescent," Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser had about 50 who wanted to know about "Social service," and Doctor G. L. Harrington had about the same number who were interested in "Child welfare."

The outlook for this series is good, and more persons ought to be in attendance regularly. Those in charge of the courses are experts in their line, and the opportunity is one not to be had by many in the church, especially since it is all given with the needs of our church in mind, and special consideration of our problems and machinery.

Morning Prayer Service a Success

The first of the weekly prayer meetings, held at 9.30 a. m., in charge of J. F. Garver, R. V. Hopkins, J. A. Tanner, was well attended. The necessity for arriving at an understanding and a proper basis took some of the time and possibly affected the meeting a little, but the general results were a very active and spiritual prayer meeting. From 1,800 to 2,000 persons were present and it was a fine representation of the Saints.

The brethren in charge are well pleased with the service and have much confidence in its further development as the days go by.

The Saints are urged to be in attendance promptly, not later than 9.25, and must bring all requests for prayer to the stand in writing.

Special themes will be announced at the services to be considered by participants.

The weather Sunday was very pleasant. The sky was partly cloudy most of the day, clearing by night. The temperature was inclined to be too warm, and autoists were on the street in their shirt sleeves, President F. M. Smith being one so clothed after the sermon in the afternoon.

Far West

An item in HERALD of September 28, referring to illness of Brother R. D. Weaver seems to have been unintentionally worded in such way as to be misunderstood by some one. It was intended simply to report that Brother Weaver, who came to the Sanitarium suffering from illness, was now making rapid recovery, as a result of successful operations and good nursing.

September 20.

R. S. SALYARDS.

San Francisco, California

Of late we have been favored by the presence of some of our church officials to gladden the hearts of the Saints, and strengthen their faith.

August 27, Bishop McGuire and wife were here. September 3, Apostle J. W. Rushton and daughter were our visitors. We have also had A. C. Barmore and wife and John B. Carmichael. Brother Barmore and wife sailed for Australia, September 8, on the steamer Tahiti, with the best wishes and prayers of the Saints here.

Two girls were baptized here on September 17 and one on September 24, Priest Emery Parks officiating. They were confirmed September 24 by Elder J. A. Saxe and the writer.

September 24, we took up collections for Graceland. Sixty-seven dollars were collected from church, Sunday school, and Religio. We are doing our bit.

Among our recent visitors was a brother from Oklahoma, H. A. Cruner, who is serving in the Navy but does not forget the church services.

Our Sunday school is doing well, with good attendance. They report sixty-nine members. The Religio is holding its own and is still interesting and instructive. There is peace and unity in the branch on the side of the great majority. As a rule we all enjoy the Spirit of the meetings and are still trying to be Saints. We are still looking forward—Zionward.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

New Rules of Order Ready

The new edition of Rules of Order and Debate is on sale at the conference for 75 cents a copy, at the book stand near the tent. There seems to be a big pre-publication demand for such a book, perhaps accentuated by the lack of such a work for several years. It is not known at this writing just what steps will be taken about making it the official book of the church, though no doubt some action will be taken during the conference.

It is a relief to be away from the street car line with the conference. The Stone Church as a gathering place for the large crowds has the disadvantage of the service being periodically interrupted by the passing of street cars, which prevent the speaker from being heard by all the audience. This is not so inconvenient in a preaching service as in a business session.

Brother Prescott A. Foo, our Chinese brother present at the conference, and who has been in the missionary field in the Nauvoo District the past summer, recently entered the matrimonial state by marrying Sister Lois G. Cooper, of Shawnee, Ohio. They have known each other by correspondence for some time, and following a trip to the Kirtland reunion they were married at Lamoni, Iowa, September 23, by Elder Ray Whiting. She remained in Lamoni. They expect to go to Hawaii, the native land of Brother Foo, after conference, where they will be engaged in church work.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Important Changes Proposed	923
Our Social Ideals	924
The Sunday School	941
Church's Largest Sacrament Service	942
Our Religious Educational Program	942
The Young People's Organization	943
Zion and Consecration	944
Study Classes Get Good Start	944
Morning Prayer Service a Success	944
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Be Wise in Rendering Judgment, by James F. Keir	925
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Ethics and Empty Stomachs	930
Mounted State Police Proposed for Missouri	930
Annual Income of United States	930
Men Want to Believe	931
PASTORAL:
Keep Thyself Pure, by Elder O. Salisbury	931
"Address," by Gomer J. Reeves	933
LETTERS AND NEWS
H. L. MacPherson and J. N. Muir—Edward Rannie—J. A. Morrison—George A. Njeim—Mrs. A. McKenzie—Daniel H. Thompson—R. S. Salyards—George S. Lincoln.	935
MISCELLANEOUS	945

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Gallands Grove, at Mallard, Iowa, October 21 and 22. Please send branch reports to district secretary and ministerial reports to C. E. Anderson, Fort Dodge, Iowa. Lena M. Talcott, secretary, Arion Iowa. E. R. Butterworth, president, Dow City, Iowa.

New York, at Fulton, October 21 and 22. Organization at 2 p. m. Saturday. Anna Brothers Lloyd, secretary. A. E. Stone, president.

Toronto, at Toronto, Ontario, October 27 to 29. Friday will be devoted to departmental work. Sessions at 10 a. m., 2.30 p. m., and 8 p. m. Saturday at 10 a. m. organization and business; sessions at 2.30 and 8 p. m. Sunday: prayer service, Sunday school, and preaching at the usual hours. Special musical programs, financial program, and priesthood meetings during the conference. Branch officers are requested to send statistical reports and credentials to secretary at 326 Shaw Street, Toronto, before October 24. David Pycock, president. Floralice Miller, secretary.

Patroness Bazaar for Graceland's Needs

The Patroness Society have pledged to pay for the canning outfit used by Brother Bullard at Graceland and also wish to install an electric vacuum cleaner at that place. Anyone wishing to donate for the bazaar, aprons for ladies and children, towels, pillow slips, laundry bags, money, etc., will find their articles very acceptable. No fancywork material is desired—just really needful articles. Mark each article with price of material only, and the Patroness ladies will mark the selling price. If you are interested, send donations on or before November 4, to Mrs. Charles France, 304 South State Street, Lamoni, Iowa.

Sister C. D. Davis, of Erwin, Tennessee, writes: "We would be glad to have any of the elders come to see us if they happen to be coming this way. We live sixteen miles from Johnson City, which is on the Southern Railway, and Erwin is on the Carolina, Clinchfield and Ohio."

Women's Department Report

To the Presidency: Your communication of July 15, asking for a report of the work of the Department of Women for the past two years, has been received.

In explanation we will say that Mrs. Anderson handed to you a detailed report of the work of this department at the time of her resignation as superintendent. I can give only a very brief report of the work since taking over the superintendency about May 1, 1922.

A reorganization of the executive of the Department of Women took place after the change in the superintendency. The following were chosen:

Mrs. Ida Etzenhouser, first assistant superintendent; Miss Nellie Sampson, second assistant superintendent; Mrs. Grace Morrison, secretary; Bishop B. R. McGuire, treasurer; Mrs. Anna Murphy, organizer in Zion; Mrs. Jennie Robinson Yingling; Miss Pauline James.

After a conference with T. W. Williams, general superintendent of Religio, consultation with President F. M. Smith, and correspondence with President Briggs and F. M. McDowell, Miss Addie Belle Chappell was chosen to succeed Miss Mary Steele as supervisor of the young women of the church, Miss Steele having to resign because of ill health. Miss Chappell will assume responsibility in September. During the time intervening between the acceptance of Miss Steele's resignation and Miss Chappell's taking charge, Mrs. Grace Morrison has very capably handled the correspondence and the filling of orders for supplies. Mrs. Morrison has long been interested in the work of young women, being for a time assistant to Miss Steele. We heartily recommend Mrs. Morrison for such activities should there be need for further service.

Mrs. Audentia Anderson has resigned as editor for the Women's Department column in the Herald. Her resignation has been accepted by the executive. Further appointment, should you wish to continue this column, is now in the hands of the editors of the Herald.

Immediately after assuming responsibility as superintendent of the Department of Women, the work of coordinating our reunion activities with those of the Sunday School and the Religio was taken under consideration. The three department heads met with the General Reunion Committee appointed by the Presidency, and certain field workers were chosen. The assignment of their various fields was left to the General Reunion Committee. The general superintendents of the Sunday School, Religio, and Women's Departments prepared a reunion program which we thought would be of great assistance to the people in charge of reunions. We also sent letters of instruction to all field workers and letters of explanation to all district presidents, so that there would be no misunderstanding between the various workers. In my limited experience with reunion work, may I add the reunion programs were heartily indorsed, and adhered to in the majority of reunions heard from. The suggestion made by the First Presidency in the Herald of June 7, 1922, in regard to "district reunion program committee" should be emphasized during the year so that the logical reunion program committee may have time to plan and arrange for the various activities beforehand and not wait until on the ground or perhaps never done. Ignorance on the part of those in charge is one of the chief causes of disturbances in branches and districts.

In order that we might be prepared to give some definite, concrete things that the women of the church, who had no desire to study but who would work, might do which would be worth while, we corresponded with the superintendents of the church homes and sanitarium, and obtained lists of articles needed. These lists will be sent to every branch, giving the women specific directions as to kind of material, style, measurements, etc. Many of the locals are taking up this work with enthusiasm and interest.

The department, under the direct leadership of Mrs. Jennie Robinson Yingling, a member of the sanitarium committee, is actively engaged in both Independence and Kansas City in preparing vegetables and fruits as well as clothing and needed linens for the Sanitarium. This work will spread out into other districts as soon as possible.

Mrs. Madge Siegfried, historian of the Department of Women, resigned in May, 1922. Her resignation has been accepted by the executive of the department. Since we have a General Church Historian and he is equally interested in the work of all departments, it is the opinion of the executive that the work of obtaining historical data, etc., come under his general supervision instead of the executive of the Department of Women. If it is the wish of the Presidency, it is agreeable to the General Church Historian and the superintendent of the Department of Women to transfer such historical data and the present historical collection to the general Department of History.

After consultation with Doctor G. L. Harrington, superintendent of the Health Department of the church, it has been deemed wise to discontinue the health and birth records as now sent out by our department. This decision was reached after a careful survey of the field had been made. Competent workers could not be found who felt free to give it the needed attention. No one but a nurse or doctor could handle this phase of the work.

Since the Home Department as now conducted distributes Sunday School, Religio, and Women's Departments literature, and has no more specific connection with the Department of Women than any other department, as all departments are interested in the homes, we recommend that unless some better method be devised, a general church Home Department superintendent be appointed, for the reason that we feel it has a mission distinct and important, serving as a missionary arm of the church. The Department of Women has tried heroically to carry on this work since it was unexpectedly and unpreparedly thrust upon us more than two years ago. It requires quite an expenditure of time and money, for which our department is unprepared. Nothing but confusion has resulted since it was placed in the Department of Women.

We recommend that the cradle roll be returned to the Sunday school, where it formerly was, and where it seems quite justly to belong. A number of the Sunday schools are still carrying on the cradle roll work, and this breeds confusion and unpleasant experiences. The Department of Women can still prepare and encourage the study of child welfare. The present outlook of the Sunday school makes for better understanding of child life, and through proper coordination, these two departments can link up the work more satisfactorily than it is being done under the present arrangement.

Will list places visited and number of meetings participated in during our summer tour. Chicago, one; Detroit, two; London, eleven; Buffalo, one; Niagara Falls, United States, two; Niagara Falls, Canada, one; Toronto, two; (visited Montreal, no meetings;) Onset, seven; Deer Park, four; Erie Beach, five. Plans to meet the Saints at Hamilton, Youngstown, and Saint Louis were unsuccessful.

While attending the London reunion the work done by the Saint John Nursing Division was investigated. Mrs. E. K. Swindall, a nurse of splendid ability and experience, supervisor of one of the Saint John nursing divisions, expressed willingness to conduct such work for the church if it was wanted. After this matter was taken up by wire, and we were told to organize a nursing guild or division for the church, we consulted with such district officers and Apostle Griffiths who were present, and selected the following officers of said guild (as the nursing supervisor preferred to call it):

Mrs. E. K. Swindall, supervisor; Mrs. Sarah Fishleigh, assistant supervisor; Mrs. Frank Gray, secretary; Bishop Burger, treasurer.

These names were presented, and indorsed by the London district conference. Mrs. Swindall is now outlining the courses which she expects to use. She has sent some portions in already to Doctor Harrington for his criticism, suggestions, etc. We recommend that this Nursing Guild Number 1 of the Latter Day Saints' Church be under the direction of the Health Department of the church.

DORA GLINES,

Superintendent Women's Department.

September 8, 1922.

The Independence Institute takes a vacation during conference. The close proximity of Kansas City makes it a big pulling power to the young people, who too often leave school very young. The institute with its evening classes for those who desire them, offers an opportunity greatly to be appreciated by those who come to themselves sufficiently to desire further schooling, and make consistent effort to get it. There are over eighty enrolled for this term, but about 250 attending various classes.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1108, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, October 11, 1922

Number 42 41

Conference Business Sessions

Very little business completed during the first week.

Tuesday, October 3

Of the conference sessions, the Sunday program and the special features of the program during the week are discussed in separate articles. This includes study hours, the lectures, the prayer meetings and sermons, and the musical and social functions. Concerning the business sessions, but little business was completed the first week.

The conference met only for a short time Tuesday afternoon and then adjourned to give the quorums further time to consider the document presented Monday afternoon. The Seventies had agreed to ask the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric to send representatives, so that they might know the cause of differences suggested in the letter of the Twelve and Bishopric. But two quorums reported. The Seventies and the elders reported progress and further sessions announced.

A communication was read from the Detroit District urging legislation for a strict enforcement of a rule against the use of tobacco by the ministry and against those called for ordination. That is, it would prohibit the use of tobacco by the ministry and would prohibit ordination of those who use it.

The Kirtland District sent in a resolution favoring stewardships and urging that as an initial step all church employees be placed on that basis; and further, that all who gather to Zion be required to comply with that law.

The Massachusetts District desired to change the name of the district to Southern New England District.

The Kansas City Stake asked for lessons for the priesthood. C. J. Hunt, W. D. Bullard, and H. O. Smith were appointed as the administrative committee.

The Presiding Bishopric announced a meeting with the Aaronic priesthood at the Stone Church immediately after the service.

Announcement was made of a young people's mass prayer meeting in charge of John F. Garver and D. T. Williams, to be held after the preaching service Tuesday night, the theme to be the special problems before the conference. The business session adjourned at 2.25 p. m., Bishop M. C. Fisher having offered the opening prayer and Apostle John W. Rushton the benediction.

The letter presented by the Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric appears elsewhere. This letter was first presented to the various quorums and finally in a slightly different form to the conference on Wednesday, October 4. As presented to the quorums it was signed by each member of the Quorum of Twelve in Independence, except U. W. Greene, who was seriously ill at his home, and by each member of the Presiding Bishopric.

The quorums all met immediately after adjournment of the conference on Monday and met also Tuesday morning, as well as again on Tuesday afternoon after the adjournment of the conference.

Wednesday, October 4

On Wednesday, at 2 p. m., President E. A. Smith took the chair, and after the usual opening exercises presented the reports received from the quorums on the document referred to them on Monday. The Seventies, by a vote of 48 to 16 voted to defer action pending a decision, by the quorums involved, on the matters mentioned in the report of the Twelve. The high priests adopted the document by a vote of 55 to 13; the elders reached no decision. The Aaronic priesthood requested the Presidency to call the Joint Council that had adjourned May 16, 1922, to meet September 20, 1922, and that had not reconvened, that the matters before it might be disposed of. The evangelists had not yet met in official separate session.

On Wednesday the Order of Bishops reported that inasmuch as the Presiding Bishopric was involved in the matter pertaining to the document from the Twelve and Bishopric, the Order had voted, the vote not including that of the Presiding Bishopric, to meet with the high priests. They did not therefore feel justified in acting separately.

The Presiding Bishopric reported that they had given consideration to the document from the President but were not ready to make final report. The elders reported that in mass meeting they had by a vote of 95 to 57 decided to defer action pending further discussion by the conference and quorums.

The Quorum of Twelve presented the document referred to the conference, asking the conference that action be deferred until these matters were disposed of. A motion was then made that the request of the Quorum of Twelve be concurred in by the assembly. This was followed by a substitute that the matter submitted by the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric be referred to the Standing High Council of the church for adjudication and decision. An amendment to the substitute was offered, striking out Standing High Council and inserting Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy as provided for in the law.

President F. M. Smith arose and objected that the procedure was a distinct irregularity in a document coming to an assembly in this way, when it was referred to the quorums for consideration. He then withdrew because of what he considered the personal nature of the matter. Immediately upon his withdrawal, Bishop J. A. Koehler secured the floor and spoke at length in favor of the substitute. He was followed by Elder Daniel Macgregor, arguing for the amendment to the substitute. Then Apostles G. T. Griffiths and T. W. Williams spoke in favor of the original motion. The discussions were wide in scope and not strictly confined to the question, but discussed the basis on which the question arose. Apostle Williams discussed the duties and responsibilities of the Quorum of Twelve and continued to the closing hour, when Elder Lonzo Jones secured the floor.

Thursday, October 5

On Thursday, after fervent prayer by Apostle J. A. Gillen and a few opening remarks by President E. A. Smith, the floor was granted to Elder Lonzo Jones, who had obtained it at the close of the previous session. Elder Jones, the instructor in religious education at Graceland College, also dean of men, favored the tabling of the motions before the house and outright adoption of the document of the President.

Elder A. H. Christensen next spoke. Though timid in the face of the microphone, he spoke at length in favor of a patriarchal or monarchical form of government, but that we did not wish our monarchy limited like that of Great Britain. He favored referring report of the Twelve to the High Council of the church as called for in the substitute.

Contrary to the usual rule, there were not two or three claiming the floor at once, but at the end of nearly every speech through this whole discussion there was a pause before anyone arose. This was particularly noticeable at this point, but finally Bishop B. R. McGuire arose and deliberately reviewed the past six speakers. As a signer of the report of the Twelve when it was presented to the quorums, he naturally favored its recommendation, though he favored a final reference to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy.

Elder C. E. Wight then took the floor against all of the motions before the house and in favor of the document presented by the president on the first day.

C. Ed. Miller, who was the last speaker of the day, spoke very wittily, leading up to a motion to refer to the general assembly. But this was not in order at this stage of procedure, as there was already a motion to refer, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute.

E. A. Curtis secured the floor and was promised it on reconvening.

Friday, October 6

On Friday, October 6, President E. A. Smith gave in response to request on the effect of the adoption of any of these resolutions, his ruling as chairman. The original motion was the request of the Quorum of Twelve be concurred in by the assembly. This, if adopted, would mean that the points therein would be removed from the consideration of the body and other business could go on, except that action on the revelation would be deferred until the Joint Council reported back.

The substitute before the house was that the matters be referred to the Standing High Council for adjudication and decision. On this he ruled that if adopted it would permanently remove the matter from the assembly and that the High Council would have full power to act. They might or might not report back to the conference.

If the amendment to the substitute were adopted it would be the same in effect with only a change in the name of the quorums to whom sent. That is, it would be sent to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, who might or might not report back to the conference. If the motions were all voted down it would allow any one of the items of the four in the report of the Twelve to be taken up by the assembly.

Elder E. A. Curtis then spoke in favor of the amendment to the substitute. Apostle Paul M. Hanson followed with a careful review of the history of the relations leading up to the present status. Some of his statements were objected to from the floor, but he withdrew them, as being misunderstood. He read at considerable length from a document presented on behalf of a committee of retrenchment of the Joint Council to the President. One of the audience suggested that the President should be here. President E. A. Smith replied he was not because he felt he was personally involved in the matter brought before the assembly on Tuesday. Apostle

Hanson was willing to support the amendment to the substitute or the original motion.

President E. A. Smith arose at the conclusion of the remarks of Brother Hanson to say that though President Smith was not present for reasons that seemed to him to be good, he desired to set before the assembly some of his views. Therefore he, President Elbert A. Smith, would claim the floor and read the document. He called Elder J. A. Tanner to take the chair. He presented personally his own views, and sought also to express the views of the President. He urged that all of these matters may still be considered and he was willing to do his part; in fact would assure the conference that he would see that opportunity was granted to have these matters as thoroughly canvassed as the conference might desire; that the matter of stewardships had been discussed that very day by the First Presidency and Order of Bishops in Joint Council. But that these propositions did not present sufficient reasons for the failure to consider the document presented to the church Monday afternoon; that all of them could and should be disposed of, but in his judgment need not be so considered and disposed of before the document presented Monday afternoon.

At the conclusion of his remarks Elder John W. Rushton secured the floor and stated that if matters had been so understood before, this debate need not have taken place. He did not speak at great length, spoke briefly on behalf of the document of the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, and the justification for its presentation. He entered a plea for charity and broad consideration.

W. W. Smith then secured the floor and moved to lay on the table. G. T. Griffiths spoke on a question of privilege, and the vote was taken. The chair ruled that the body could take these matters or any part of them from the table at any time they chose after the transaction of other business. The vote stood 347 to 222. Upon a question as to the accuracy of the count the vote was taken again, with the result of 357 to 235. President E. A. Smith, who had not retaken the chair, then moved that the document presented by the President of the church be referred back to the quorums for their action, and the session adjourned about 5.30 p. m.

Saturday, October 7

On Saturday afternoon there seemed comparatively little disposition to proceed with business. There seemed to be a general relaxation for the day. Most of the priesthood were busy in the forenoon. At the opening of the afternoon session Harold C. Burgess, in charge of the singing, related the origin of the song, "Consecration," written by Albert McCullough, of Lamoni. It was written on the occasion of the series of young people's meetings held at Lamoni in March, 1921, and has become a general favorite among the Saints to whom it has been introduced. The tune used is the Hawaiian melody, "Aloha Oe."

The conference crowd was greatly augmented for the afternoon session and over Sunday by a large number of the faculty and students of Graceland College, as well as Saints from elsewhere.

At the opening of the session President E. A. Smith called attention to the Rules of Order for Deliberative Assemblies which provides that neither applause nor hissing shall be allowed in our assemblies, and hoped this would be observed hereafter. Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion and for many years a professor of ancient languages in Graceland, offered the opening prayer.

With regard to the document submitted on Monday, the Seventies had reached no decision; the Twelve asked more time. Consideration of this document was then by vote made the order of the conference for Monday at 2.15 p. m.

A motion was made by Daniel Macgregor and seconded by W. P. Bootman that we take up the reaffirmation of Conference Resolutions numbers 230 and 231 which read as follows:

"No. 230. Whereas, first, The revelations accepted by the church make it the duty of the church to liberate the hands of the Twelve and the Seventy; and

"Whereas, second, The Twelve and the Seventy, as the especial witnesses of the church to the world, should first go as missionaries into all the world, and

"Whereas, third, We believe that the funds of the general church treasury should be first used to supply the families of the Twelve and Seventy, before the families of the high priests, elders or priests are supplied, or money employed to send high priests, elders or priests to distant fields of labor, therefore be it hereby

"Resolved, 1st, That no member of this, or of any quorum other than that of the Twelve and Seventy, should be sent out as missionaries under General Conference appointment, until all members of these two quorums shall have been sent, or shall have been excused for cause by proper authority, or shall have positively declined to go.

"2d, That the members of the Twelve and the Seventy should be all assigned to missionary labor, in harmony with the law; the funds of the church be used for the prosecution of their missions, and the support of their families.

"3d, That if the number of the Twelve and Seventy are insufficient to supply demands for general ministerial labor, and there be funds to sustain other families than those of these quorums, then members of other quorums may be chosen and sent by General Conference, and their families also supplied from the church treasury, impartially, with the families of the Twelve and the Seventy. (Above article presented by the High Priests' Quorum.)

"No. 231. Whereas, The general church funds have heretofore been used in sending out elders and priests as missionaries, instead of sending those whom the law directs as the proper ones who should have precedence; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we recommend to this conference that the funds for missionary purposes be used to release, first, the quorums of the Twelve and Seventy, who should, properly, be the general and leading missionaries of the church to the world as the law directs. (Above presented by the Quorum of Seventy.)"

[Both of the above resolutions were presented to General Conference and adopted September 16, 1880.—EDITORS.]

Some one called attention to the fact that the vote of submission of this proposition of reaffirmation was unanimous, for once. One of the seventies arose to say that they were not all there.

Adjournment of the session was proposed by motion but on vote was denied.

The standing of the new book on parliamentary usage published by order of conference and already in circulation, entitled, Rules of Order for Deliberative Assemblies, was brought in a ruling by the chair that in these assemblies it would be used as the authority.

Proceeding with the motion before the house, Apostle T. W. Williams spoke heartily in favor of the readoption and reaffirmation of this resolution, asking a carrying out of the ideals in the document. Elder Wipper, a seventy, also was much in favor, but Elder Christensen, another seventy, was opposed on the basis that the shepherd of a flock is as worthy of his hire as those seeking the flock. Elder E. E. Long, one of the Seven Presidents of Seventy, explained the basis for the action and quoted passages from the Doctrine and Covenants. He emphasized that the first resolution originally came from the High Priests' Quorum. Apostle Gomer T.

Griffiths also spoke in favor, and upon the vote being taken the motion to reaffirm prevailed almost unanimously.

A resolution was presented that the certificates of ordination which limit the representative powers of the minister to one year should be discontinued. This seemed to have caused some anxiety on the part of some of the traveling ministry, as it was felt it meant a reinstatement yearly, and that authority was withdrawn if the card or "license" was not issued. It was explained in return that the certificate was purely clerical, that even though a man did not receive a card for some years, still his ordination authorized him to proceed, and that only silence could withdraw that right. It was further urged that on a few occasions when such an authorization was required that it was rather a protection to have something that was recent in date rather than to carry a "license" perhaps twenty or twenty-five years old. Elders E. E. Long and Daniel Macgregor objected to the card system and Elder A. H. Christensen was not adverse. Elder W. W. Smith gave a historical sketch, and among other things stated that in the early church he had found that the elders' licenses were revalidated at the conference and that he had some in the vault bearing such revalidation. At this point President E. A. Smith stated that the card system was inaugurated by President F. M. Smith between conferences and was subject to any action the conference desired. He also stated that the young people had asked for the tabernacle at 4 p. m. to prepare for the pageant, so he suggested adjournment, which was taken shortly before 4 p. m. An announcement was made of a prayer meeting of all the priesthood at the Stone Church at 4.30 Sunday afternoon.

At the opening of the meeting various resolutions were announced as being before the body, including a report from R. B. Trowbridge, sustained as auditor by the last General Conference. It will be presented to the conference later. A letter from the Peace Committee of the Friends hoping that we might give our united support to world peace, etc., was presented. This document was read by the secretary for the information of the conference.

Monday, October 9

The taking up of the document of the President at 2.15 was brought up at that time, but as reports from the Twelve, Seventies, and Aaronic priesthood had suggested progress and asked for time, the chairman, Elbert A. Smith suggested early adjournment be had. The consideration of the document was set for 2.15 to-morrow.

The resolution held over without action from Saturday was said to be before the house. This resolution provided for the discontinuance of the issuance of the present certificates of ordination.

A vote on the previous question hastened the vote on the resolution to discontinue and the vote resulted in 268 for, and 198 against. Thus the conference voted to discontinue use of the present cards of ordination.

The following was presented by the First Quorum of Seventy, which had adopted it:

"Inasmuch as there is a disposition on the part of some representing the church to repudiate the teaching of a personal God,

"Resolved, that we as the First Quorum of Seventy, place ourselves on record as believing and teaching that there is a personal God, and

"Resolved further, That it is the opinion of this body that no person should represent this church who repudiates this doctrine."

The vote was taken, resulting in 288 for and 199 against laying on the table, thus disposing of the resolution for the present. A motion to adjourn prevailed at 2.30.

Monday's weather was cool, but the sun got in its work and by noon the atmosphere was delightful; after the cool, if not chilly weather of Saturday and Sunday.

Some delegates and visitors with only a little time to spare are here a few days, then leave. Some who evidently expected to stay at home have returned the second time.

All the new men named for the quorums, except Elder Clyde Ellis, who is in the South Sea Islands, are in attendance, but noncommittal on the situation.

Elder A. H. Christensen was mixed on his dates and did not arrive to deliver his sermon at the tabernacle Monday. Elder David E. Dowker substituted with satisfaction to all on the subject, "The joy of service," and Brother Christensen was located in time to make a five-minute apology and explanation. Printed programs are depended on very largely to furnish the announcements, and he had lost his several days ago.

The Largest Testimony Meeting

The big tent was filled nearly to its utmost capacity Thursday morning at the prayer meeting hour, "the largest testimony meeting ever convened in the history of the Reorganization," declared Brother R. V. Hopkins at its close. This, he explained, did not include the sacrament service, but as a testimony service only. At the opening of the meeting the presiding officers discerned "a quiet, reverential, and above all, a spirit of light" present in the service. This continued through the service as testimony after testimony followed each other in rapid succession, the majority bearing witness with much fervor to a knowledge of the truth of the gospel of Christ. No special gifts were manifested, but as Brother Hopkins stated, the "best prayer service is not always one in which many gifts are manifested." Brother F. G. Pitt, in charge of the song service, led with his usual vigor and zeal.

Looking down the long aisles in the tent, during the prayer meeting hours, could be seen many babies, busily and quietly playing with the shavings that carpet the aisle. One little tot amused herself filling and refilling a paper sack; another played with them in her handkerchief; many built them into mounds; and the youngest merely amused himself by seeing them slide through his fingers. One tidy little fellow considered them as trash and set himself the task of carrying wee handfuls outside. At the close of the hour he seemed not to have lost his courage or belief that order and system could be so accomplished, by each faithfully doing his little part, regardless of what the other is doing.

Following are some typical statements gathered from the testimonies:

"Much depends on the mechanics of a prayer service. Leaders of the service do not give their instructions idly."—R. V. Hopkins.

"All that I am, I owe to this work. I have been cradled in this work. The gospel has saved me from many things."—J. O. Dutton.

One young man, in speaking of his experiences in the church, confessed that he like others had been ambitious at one time for the priesthood, and desired to carry the gospel. He was thankful, as others have been, that he had learned some time ago that the priesthood is not all of this work. Having been made cognizant of this fact, he turned his attention to the things which he could do for the work, and had been greatly blessed financially since then.

One middle-aged man testified that he drove fifty miles

Sunday morning to get to the prayer service. This was his first conference. "The greatest joy that I have," he said, "is to stand in defense of this work."

"I would rather be born among the heathen than to make a profession of religion and then make a practice of not observing it."

"I thank God for the plan that he has given; that he has continually thrown about me his Holy Spirit, that he has directed my life, that when influences of evil have come, he has directed me to flee from them, that when opportunities to serve have come, he has directed me to go forward."

"I have been a missionary in this church thirty-five years, and wish I could be thirty-five years longer."

Patriarch F. G. Pitt told us at the prayer meeting that when he heard, at one time, the statement that this work low, but he would not accept, as he preferred to work. He also said, "I cannot do very much, but I can be faithful in what I do. We can all do that."

One time a brother asked him this question: "Brother Pitt, what do you expect to do when you get old?"

Brother Pitt replied that he had never thought about that.

"My faith," he told us, "has always been that if I was faithful when I was young, God would take care of me when I was old. And I can bear testimony that it is true. I have never yet seen the faithful neglected. This work has made me happy and I love to tell the story, because I know it is true."

Brother John F. Garver expressed these sentiments in the course of his testimony: "The day I was baptized, under the divine grace I laid upon the altar of service all the things I had, and all that I ever expected to be, and all that I ever expected to have. I am happy to say that I never have recalled that offering. My desire, my aspiration, my ambition, my prayer, my every effort is, that I may with you keep the faith unbroken."

The Order of Bishops

A great deal of interest surrounds the meeting of the Order of Bishops during recent General Conferences. They do not constitute a separate quorum, for all of our bishops are members of the quorum of High Priests, just as the evangelical ministers are also members of that quorum, though they both meet separately to consider their own particular problems.

The first instance we find of the bishops meeting separately was in 1905 when the question of continuing Grace-land College was up. Bishop E. L. Kelley called a meeting which was attended by 8 bishops, 7 counselors, and 12 agents, who adopted the following resolution:

"That an organization of all the bishops, counselors, and bishops' agents be effected to hold its meetings during the time of the General Conference of the church: to which all bishops and agents shall make their report of work accomplished to this organization, which shall be compiled and properly presented to the General Conference."—Conference Minutes, p. 801.

Bishop E. L. Kelley presided over these meetings until 1916; A. H. Parsons was chosen as secretary and continued to act for several years, till 1913.

In the earlier years the meetings were one of those engaged in the financial work of the church and included the bishop's counselors and agents, but the majority of those in attendance were bishop's agents. Thus in 1906 three sessions were held, with 5 bishops, 7 counselors, and 24 agents in attendance. In 1908 it was reported as the Order of the Bishopric, 5 bishops, 6 counselors, and 19 agents.

In a revelation of the following year (Doctrine and Covenants 129:8), the word bishopric was defined as follows:

"Men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, carrying forth, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints included in the terms of tithing, surplus, free will offering, and consecration."

We do not find a report of their meeting every conference. Still these meetings continued at most conferences and were so reported to the conference.

In 1913 they reorganized, with the Presiding Bishopric in charge, recognizing them in harmony with the revelation of 1909 as the presidency of the order, with J. A. Becker, a bishop, as secretary-treasurer. At this conference for the first time their report is headed "The Order of Bishops," though the terms used in the report are "the Bishopric" and "the Order."

In 1914 they reported twelve sessions, five of them in joint council with the First Presidency and Twelve, with 10 bishops and 3 counselors in attendance. In 1913 the following resolution was adopted, defining the term The Bishopric, and from that time on it was a meeting of the bishops and bishops' counselors:

"The term The Bishopric, as used in the revelations to the church, refers to the Presiding Bishopric, and also to the association of men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head; therefore,

"1. Be it resolved, That when reference is made to the Presiding Bishop and his counselors, the term The Presiding Bishopric be employed.

"2. Be it further resolved, That when reference is made to the bishop of a stake and his counselors, the title Stake Bishopric should be used.

"3. Be it further resolved, That when the association of all the bishops and their council is referred to, the term The Bishopric or Order of Bishops be applied."—Page 1763.

In 1915, 11 bishops and 5 counselors attended six meetings of the order, and held one meeting with bishop's agents; six with the First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. In 1916, 15 bishops and 3 counselors met each day. They also held one meeting with the First Presidency and Twelve; one with the First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy; and one with bishop's agents. In 1916 the Order of Bishops became the appropriation committee for the church and so continues. They presented a definite financial policy on behalf of the Order. From 1913 on, they have met annually.

In 1921 there was no General Conference but a number of the bishops met for two weeks in May to discuss their various problems in the financial law.

In 1918 they presented the following resolution to the conference, which was adopted:

"Whereas, some misunderstanding and confusion has arisen over the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 129:8, and the conference resolution No. 710, concerning the personnel of the Bishopric, therefore be it

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of the bishops present at the conference that the term bishopric as used in Doctrine and Covenants 129:8 has reference to the men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head and that these should constitute the Order of Bishops."—Page 2638.

In 1919 they presented five separate reports, nominating various trustees, laying down a new fiscal year to begin July 1, limiting the maximum annual family allowance of general church officers and general church appointees, and reaffirming the financial policy previously adopted.

In 1918, 16 bishops out of a possible 19 were in attendance. It will be noted that from 1918 on, the order became one of ordained bishops, though by courtesy some of the bishops' counselors attended and were allowed voice.

This year they have announced their purpose to hold one or more meetings with the bishop's agents and solicitors, but they will undoubtedly also meet as the Order of Bishops to consider the important work before them as the Bishopric.

S. A. B.

Oratorio Program

A heavy shower doubtless kept many people away from the church Friday evening, where the oratorio program was rendered. Still the upper auditorium, including the gallery, were well filled, and only a few more could have found places.

The program opened with the chorus, "Unfold, ye portals," from The Redemption, by Charles Gounod.

After prayer by Bishop Mark H. Siegfried, L. Eugene Christy, who was the tenor soloist, sang "Lord! vouchsafe Thy loving-kindness," followed by Paul N. Craig, bass, in "Through the darkness Thou wilt lead me." This movement closed with the chorus, "When Thou comest to the judgment," with Mrs. Bertha Burgess giving the soprano solo. These last three were from Stabat Mater, by G. Rossini.

Those who have heard these people sing will not need to be assured as to the excellent quality of their rendition. Both Brother Christy and Brother Craig have spent the past two years in further musical study and show remarkable control, the effect of careful training, with voices which were in the start already excellent.

Mrs. Nina G. Smith as soprano was in the midst of her solo, "Hear ye, Israel," from the Elijah, by F. Mendelssohn, when the lights went out for three quarters of an hour or longer. Harold C. Burgess, as director, at once arose and led the audience in various songs, "Let the lower lights be burning," "The old, old path," and others, which were interspersed with speeches and readings.

Finally the current was turned on and the chorus was well started on "Be not afraid," from Elijah, when the current again went off a few minutes. When the lights again shone forth the chorus repeated this number, which was followed by Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess as alto in "Rest in the Lord," also from Elijah.

The chorus, "Glorious is Thy name, Almighty Lord," from Twelfth Mass, by Mozart, was splendidly rendered, as was also "With verdure clad the fields appear," from The Creation by J. Haydn, a soprano solo by Mrs. Nina G. Smith, and the chorus, "The heavens are telling the glory of God."

The tenor solo from the Messiah, "Comfort ye my people," and "Every valley shall be exalted," was a remarkable presentation, followed by the chorus, "And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed."

Three numbers were omitted because of the then lateness of the hour, and the program was closed with the bass solo, "But who may abide the day of His coming?" and finally the Hallelujah chorus from The Messiah.

All of the soloists are well trained and well repaid the audience for waiting. A few left during the darkness, but comparatively few. Despite the serious handicap of weather and of lights the program as a whole compared very favorably with similar oratorios of the past. The program will be repeated next Friday evening, October 13, with the same soloists: Soprano, Mrs. Nina G. Smith; alto, Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess; tenor, Mr. L. Eugene Christy; bass, Mr. Paul N. Craig; with Mr. Robert Miller at the organ and Mrs. Pauline Eisenhower and Mr. George Miller at the pianos, and Mr. H. C. Burgess as conductor.

The Origin of "The Old, Old Path"

By Vida E. Smith

It was after a tedious Sunday school session one Sabbath, a golden, glorious, summer day (and had it been a rainy, winter day, it would have been the same) I came up from the primary rooms in the Brick Church in Lamoni and seated myself in the usual place on the north side of the church.

A slight breeze moved the branches of the trees near the window; birds flitted about and called or sat on some swaying branch and sang in Sabbath softness; the choir sang and some one prayed, all as usual. The minister read his text, that old favorite of many men, and a few women, about finding the old paths and walking therein.

Opening my quarterly I penciled the short simple verse of "The old, old path" on the blank places found here and there. Afterward I walked towards my home with Mrs. Alice E. Cobb, a beloved and revered friend, herself a poet. We spoke of the sermon and talked of the text and I read to her my lines. She surprised me by her immediate interest. "You must let Audentia put music to those," she said, and made me promise to go with the verse to Mrs. Anderson.

So I ran in and told my cousin and she copied the words hastily; then I hurried home to my home cares.

In the afternoon I seated myself at the instrument and dreamed out a melody. Audentia at the same time, with more skill, had evolved the same melody, although we were blocks apart and had no means of knowing until it was done that the melody had come to both.

Later we submitted it to members of the Hymnal Committee, being urged to do so by Sister Viola Blair. The words are exactly as penciled in the quarterly that Sabbath morning and the melody what came to Sister Anderson that afternoon.

Ambition and Actualities

Elder Prescott Foo gave an interesting and practical discourse Friday morning on the subject, "Ambition and actualities."

In speaking of the ambitions of individuals he said, "To-day, the world is demanding men and women who know how to do a thing, and not only know how to do it, but who do it. The world to-day is demanding specialized individuals—men and women who must not only have a theory, but must know how to put that theory into practice. If we as a people are going to lead the world in our work, we must of necessity be prepared. But we must not only train our talents, we must use them for the good of humanity, and unless we recognize this fact we cannot become sons of God."

Quoting from Doctrine and Covenants that familiar passage, "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith," Elder Foo continued: "Faith alone is not all. Faith alone cannot give us that vision eternal. We may have faith that Zion is going to be redeemed, but unless we put the effort into it, Zion will not be redeemed."

Quoting the words of Christ, "Ye are the light of the world," he asked the questions: "What are the uses of light? What is the use of the lighthouse? To warn the people of the rocks and reefs and shoals. If that is so," he said, "it is your duty as well as mine to warn the people in the world. Are we living up to our rights and privileges? If we are going to be a light to the world, we must of necessity place ourselves in that condition whereby God can use us, whereby we can receive direct revelation from on high, whereby we can get into direct communication with him so he can advise us in all our work. If we are going to be the light, let us be the head light and not the tail light."

"Christ commanded his disciples, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel,' and this command has been reiterated in these latter days."

In relation to this thought Mr. Foo stated that while there are some four hundred dialects and languages in the world, our missionaries are very few indeed, and that it is not because of a lack of men but because of lack of finances that this condition exists. Many of us, he said, are not fully converted.

Speaking upon the ambitions of the church, he said some of us have thought that all we have to do when Zion is redeemed is to go in there and live. "We have thought Zion is an end instead of a means to an end. Is it not for the development of your talents or the possibility that lies within you? And that is what Zion is for, so that you may be able to come up to that standard which Christ wanted us to come up to, as we may be able to develop the talents that God has given us."

"How much," he asked, "can we appreciate Zion unless we have a part in it, unless we have striven to put on perfection?"

The speaker stated towards the conclusion that a broader vision is needed and a greater consecration, and above all our ambition we must have divine inspiration, and this condition can only be obtained by humility and love. If we are to be a chosen people it can only be because of the fact that we have chosen God first. As we receive and put into practice so do we become a chosen people.

The Importance of Our Own Ministry

The Saints evidently failed to appreciate the value of the lecture on "A trained versus an untrained ministry," by Elder Lonzo Jones, for a very small audience, as usual, attended the morning lecture at the Stone Church Friday.

The fact was cited that five of the speakers at the tabernacle in the morning services had been students in the religious education class at Graceland, but there was no debate over whether a preacher ought to spend some time in Graceland or other school in order to become "trained." There were no odious comparisons. The audience was asked to judge ministers and their work by the effectiveness of both speech and actions. "If ye have not the Spirit, ye shall not teach," was quoted as a basic point. This was amplified by saying that our men must know how to think straight.

The speaker sought to correct a current impression that the class in religious education at Graceland is exclusively for training for foreign missionary work.

"We are seeking not only to train men and women so they are better missionaries, but to help make them better local workers in all our religious work. This is as important as the other," he explained.

Cope's book on Religious Education in the Family was highly recommended as a text for the ministry who would increase their efficiency, especially the pastoral side.

Perhaps the order of importance of those whom he designated as the ministry of the church is out of the ordinary.

He would arrange in the order of their importance the following "ministries":

1. Parenthood.
2. Teachers, especially Sunday-school teachers.
3. Pastoral or visiting officers.
4. Evangelistic or pulpit workers.

He felt to reiterate the statement of A. Max Carmichael that "the ministry of motherhood is so important that it does not require the imposition of hands to set it apart."

The teacher must know the child physiologically and psychologically, and his home and community environment was a strong point about the "ministry of teachers."

It seems too bad there are not more people attending these forenoon lectures, for much of value is offered.

Those Who Stagger

The musical program in the tabernacle at 7.30 Wednesday evening was by the auditorium orchestra augmented, however, by a number of visiting members. They gave a splendid program to audience in the crowded tent and well prepared them for the service which was to follow.

After prayer by James E. Yates, Mrs. Nell Atkinson Kelley sang "The Voice in the Wilderness." Following the announcements by C. E. Wight, Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths began his sermon by saying that the subject first selected was, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man but the end thereof is the way of death," but stated that he had reserved the liberty of changing the subject at the last minute if he wanted to do so, and took instead the passage from Job where, after he has lost all of his property, his children are dead and he is covered with boils, his wife asked him, "Dost thou still maintain thy integrity? Curse God and die."

He spoke of the terrible load of tribulation under which Job was placed and wondered how many people there are to-day whom God could trust to the Devil. Many of them, if they had one or two boils, anyone would find it hard to live in the house with them. Others stagger if a member of their family is taken, but Job lost all of his children at one time.

Many stagger if they lose their wealth or suffer a reverse. Job had done his duty yet lost his all. Most of us would have given up when the camels were taken and not have waited until the sheep were gone too, but Job lost his children as well as his possessions and was covered with boils yet still maintained his integrity.

Some men to-day, if their wives talked to them that way would say, "Yes, I guess you want me to die so you can get someone else"; but Job merely said, "Thou speakest like a foolish woman."

He also spoke at considerable length of the faith of Abraham along with the faith of Job; that willingness of Abraham to do whatever God asked of him, his willingness even to offer up his son, certain in the assurance that God does all things well.

The service was dismissed by Elder C. E. Wight, of the Lamoni Stake Presidency, who was in charge.

At this point it may be well to add that so far the Daily has given little space to the reporting of the preaching service. The names of the speakers and their subjects have appeared in the program each day, but many of these sermons, if not most of them, are reported and no doubt will appear in either the Ensign or Herald later. Also as a daily we are primarily concerned in giving the news, much as we all appreciate the value of the old Jerusalem gospel. There are some very significant changes being made in the department work and the discussion thereon is of especial news interest, we believe, to our readers.

Some excellent sermons are being preached, emphasizing and reemphasizing principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. One sermon has not even been referred to in the Daily, yet it was a splendid effort, but the reason is, we expected to have immediate publication, as it was promptly reported.

Graceland is the school of the church and its academic courses are penetrated with the religious atmosphere which this church gives.

The Radio as an Adjunct to Conference

Through the kindness and great personal interest of Brother Arthur B. Church, president of the Central Radio Company, of Kansas City, made up mostly of Independence men and operating on Independence capital, the conference is greatly improved by some distinctively new features this year.

Two years ago the daily news was sent to Lamoni each evening by radiotelegraph and proved of much value to the Saints of that place in getting the news promptly. Since then the radio telephone has come into great vogue and its wonderful advantages are being utilized.

A radio apparatus is in operation on the platform of the tabernacle. Each speaker in the sacramental service talked into a microphone, which is wired to two Magnavox loud speakers located on the wings of the platform railing, and thereby the entire space beneath the roof of the tent is filled with the sound. Some of the speakers with good volume and enunciation do not need it, but others do and the audience appreciates it.

In cooperation with the Publicity Department, daily radio news is being broadcasted at 5.30 p. m. A summary of the events of the day is going out from the radio tower room at that time on 360 meter wave and should be heard easily a thousand miles away. Reports on having received these have come in from as far as New York.

The Lamoni Electric Company is receiving these news programs daily and issuing them immediately following in bulletin form for Lamoni people.

The music programs of the conference will be sent out, also the opening numbers of the business sessions, if present plans materialize. The business sessions begin at 2 p. m., and it should be considered a great treat to Saints not privileged to attend, to hear the great audience sing the typical songs and hear the usual opening exercises typical of our large gatherings.

Sunday School Exhibit

The Sunday school exhibit is not elaborate. Harm, not good, results from that exhibit where one school would vie with another to bring in the most and the best material; in which cases the work often becomes the work of the teacher, dishonestly exhibited under the name of the child.

It has been the aim of the one arranging the exhibit, not to put so much prominence on the name of the Sunday school or the child who did the work, but rather to bring things into such order as to be instructive to those Sunday school workers who are seeking inspiration and helps for the schools they are sent to represent.

If, therefore, you find that which you think would be a good suggestion to take back with you, just jot it down in your notebook, to use yourself or pass the idea along to your superintendent and teachers who did not get to come.

Notice the visualized lessons which, used with the youngest children, are the first steps towards dramatization. These miniature dolls and figures make the lessons live for the child. Afterwards he becomes able to dramatize these stories for himself, which makes the lessons more real, a part of his life.

Notice also the visualized songs. Then go back home and make the new material you present more interesting.

Apropos of nothing in particular, of course; but isn't it more pleasant to be carried on a chip than ridden on a rail?

The Sanitarium Program

Each year at General Conference time the Sanitarium force gives a program. This year twenty individual participants were on the program, besides some special songs by the group.

Near the close, Elder R. C. Russell's turn came, and he said, "After twenty-five women have talked for an hour and a half, what is there left for a mere man to say?"

What the nurses had to say was interesting, though some of them could hardly make themselves heard in the large Stone Church Auditorium.

Mrs. Helen Silsbee Smith, of Kansas City, in charge of the Sanitarium Supply Departments, of Kansas City, reported a visit of their workers to the Sanitarium, where they discovered its intimate needs and from which decision arose plans to supply them. The women of the stake, under the general leadership of Mrs. Lula Sandy, have developed plans that really work, and are systematically gathering donations of fruit, rugs, etc., and arranging to raise money for the institution.

Mrs. Jennie Yingling, of the Sanitarium Publicity Committee, explained more of the needs of the Sanitarium and how they planned to relieve the bishopric of the church of a great deal of worry over supplying not only the Sanitarium but the Children's Home and the homes for the aged.

The program was thought by many to be too long, yet one would hardly know which numbers should have been left out.

Doctors John R. Green and G. L. Harrington concluded the program with talks on "What constitutes a real hospital or sanitarium?" and "A general statement of the value of the Sanitarium as the health center of the church." Nineteen registered nurses had a special part in the event. One of them showed some X-ray pictures of parts of the human anatomy. A number of student nurses sang in the songs, took part in the numbers presented, and one gave a reading

From the Study Classes

Mating is an instinct, says Doctor Harrington. Friendship is of a higher plane and should accompany mating. It is a drawback to live on the instinct mating level without the friendship.

A child's curiosity is in proportion to his understanding. Tell him the truth, enough to satisfy his curiosity.

Some of our social purity writers present many false ideas. There are certain laws governing sex stimulus. Parents should study these to be able to teach children to develop inhibition. Teach the child to develop fearless attitude towards self and life. Nature sees that production is enormous.

Impressions of childhood make adult expression. See that child gets correct impression of life.

Mother is first love object. Her son seeks a wife that in some way has some look or action like mother. Love at first sight comes from some precious pattern or standard set up.

Lovers try to please you; your friends will send you to hell if necessary to help you.

An attentive class of some thirty or thirty-five members was in attendance at Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser's lecture in Social Service work Wednesday morning. The lecture was one of a practical nature, outlining clearly some of the physical reasons which often cause mental deficiency, and stating that a physical basis was at the root of many of our ills. Diagrams were drawn upon the blackboard, divisions showing comparative degrees of intelligence or mentality and capacity, and leading up to the climax of her theme: "Every man should be trained to the utmost of his capacity, that he may contribute to the greatest of his ability."

Emotion as a measure in satisfaction or annoyance was being discussed by Walter W. Smith as we passed his class in "Psychology of the adolescent" Wednesday morning. He teaches M. A. Etzenhouser's class part time. The attendance was about 70.

A Chinese Missionary at Conference

Brother Prescott Foo, a young Chinese brother who has spent two years in Graceland in the class in religious education, is a full-blood Chinese, reared in the Hawaiian Islands. He is on the conference program to preach a sermon on the 6th in the big tent on "Ambitions and actualities."

We have said he was young. Youth of all races is impulsive, restive, forward-looking. Brother Foo is a keen student of sociology. He is not satisfied with superficialities but wants to get at the bottom of things.

Having followed that urge, he has been greatly enthused with our aspirations—our economic program as an outcome of our spiritual vision, but is inclined to be impatient over our lack of attainments.

He likes to preach on Zion, but wishes we might follow theoretical presentation with more demonstration. The stewardship basis of the missionaries and of some few business men is pointed to with pride, but in the words of our brother: "We must have group demonstration of our ideals in order to make them effective. More than one man or two men must be able to pool their interests in the interests of the group, and do it successfully, so we may generally arrive at the place we have sought so long to attain."

Though he converses in Hawaiian, two dialects of Chinese, and somewhat in Japanese, Brother Foo uses good English and with very few inaccuracies. He has now come to the point where he can think in English without the expedient of having to think in Hawaiian and translate it for himself into English. Hawaiian, he says, is to him more expressive of the common things of humanity than English or Chinese.

At times his knowledge of languages has served him well. Frequently he has served in the islands as a court interpreter. On some occasions he has listened to a Chinese witness testify in one dialect, would interpret it for a Chinese using another dialect, then reinterpret it for the court into English.

Brother Foo has been appointed to Hawaii as a missionary. During the past summer he has been working in that capacity in the Nauvoo District with Brother Frank H. Edwards, and later attended the Kirtland reunion.

It is his hope to study the Spanish language during such time as he can spare, so he may possibly at some future time be of service to the church in the Philippines. Since Spanish is so generally used in South America, he could use it to great advantage there.

"It is evident that the previous speaker went out to convert and got converted," said in reference to the one who argued for a kingdom.

The actions of an old couple in the center aisle Sunday brought smiles from those near by. Getting sleepy, the old dear edged closer to "him." Instantly "hubby's" arm encircled her, quite like it had the habit. Her head dropped to his shoulder. Thus they sat without the coyness of youth, but with the assurance of old habits—comfortable, matter-of-fact old lovers, and don't care who knows it.

What the Church Proposes to Do With Her Young People

By T. W. Williams

The following are extensive notes used by the superintendent of the Religio department in an address at the Stone Church Religio on Friday evening, September 29. He did not cover each point listed and said some things that do not appear.

This subject is paradoxical. Why should we conclude that the church expects to do anything with her young people? I might, with more propriety, ask, What are the young people going to do with the church? For it is quite evident that if the church is ever to accomplish its purpose and achieve its objective it will certainly fall to the lot of the coming generations to put the program over.

We should always bear in mind that the church does not exist apart from the young people. They are the church just as much as the adults are the church. We may properly ask, What program has the church for the rightful expression of our young people? What is the church doing to afford opportunity for their unfoldment? What place have the young people within the church? We must answer these questions and indicate the field of service wherein the young may, under divine sanction, find wholesome expression.

We have no intention to divide the membership of the church into isolated, unrelated, or antagonistic groups. It would be a mistake to create a young people's department in the church which would stand out as against the rest of the church, or which would, in any sense, have a divergent aim to that of any, or all, other departments.

We have no desire to accentuate the disparity of age or to create imaginary boundary lines, saying, Thus far thou shalt go and no farther. Men live in desires and experience rather than in years. In a properly constituted society there need be no conflict resulting from the varying ages of its members.

The underlying purpose of the religion of Jesus Christ is to reveal to man the basis of true relationship betwixt God and man, and man and man, and supply not only the vision but the program whereby all may have a common objective, and thereby establish an ideal brotherhood. This program must be broad and inclusive, rather than sectarian and exclusive. We have no place in our program for sectarianism, much less Latter Day Saint sectarianism. There is neither Jew nor Gentile, white nor black, bond nor free, young nor old, in Christ Jesus. We are in very deed the family of God.

Christianity is the great unifying influence which meets all the varying demands of humanity. It transcends the narrow sectarian bias and physical and even mental limitations as well as social conventions, and supplies the dynamic whereby all humanity may unite and work together for the common uplift. It is the work of the church to conserve, not only the individual, but the collective life of society. It is the work of the church to cooperate to its capacity in giving full expression to every creative power, latent or acquired, and foster every purpose for divine unfoldment in the soul of man. The first and uppermost work of the church is to bring the individual into conscious spiritual relationship with God. The church has not fulfilled its full purpose when it affords a house of worship, a series of services, and rituals where men and women, boys and girls, may congregate and engage in devotional exercises.

The work of the church begins when, yes, even before, a baby is born into the world, and ends, so far as the individual is concerned, only with death. The treatment of different members of the church cannot always be the same, nor can the treatment of the individual be the same from birth to old age. We cannot always prescribe the same rule of procedure for any one individual during all the periods of his or her life.

The apostle puts it very clearly, "When I was a child I spake as a child, I thought as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things." You cannot put old heads on young shoulders nor can you place young heads on old shoulders.

There is a play age in the life of every animal, including man. Man is no exception and God has so ordained. It is inherent in all life and absolutely vital to the physical, spiritual, and mental development of the child. In fact, the larger expression of life should be in the nature of play rather than of work. Much of what is now classed as work, even among adults, could be reduced to play if the relationship were changed.

Henry A. Atkinson, in his splendid work, The Church and the People's Play, makes the following observation:

"Play is an end in itself. It is doing a thing for the sake of the doing. Work has reference to the result to be attained; hence work is doing a thing for reward. The same process may be employed in both work and play; for instance, when one plays for the sake of the game it is play, but when the interest centers in the stake or the prize, the same action ceases to be play and becomes work."

The genius who throws his soul into his activities is practically playing, though he devote much time and energy thereto, but he is doing a thing for the sake of the doing. To him the devotion and service is life, the very life of life. On the other hand the pedant, though his labors be not half so vigorous, finds life's activities arduous and irksome.

There will be no objection to my emphasis that children should have the privilege to play, but our difficulty lies in getting parents and teachers to realize that play expression in some form is essential not only in the present life of the child, but absolutely vital in his preparation for the larger adult life.

Henry A. Atkinson again says: "The deadly monotony of the common life of to-day with its incessant toil, its planning for the future, its carrying of heavy burdens, makes a demand upon us to study the question of play and its relationship to life. Even if the work that we do be agreeable there is need for occasional change. It is a psychological as well as a physiological fact that some form of amusement is necessary to enable men and women to maintain a healthy equilibrium of mind and body."

Our modern industrial system represses childhood. Men, women, and children are turned into machines. Life is in itself drab. The music is taken out of the soul. Childhood has little if any expression along lines calculated to produce a well-balanced, rounded-out life.

The question is: Shall the church ignore the play life of childhood and permit it to find its own expression, or will the church rise to the occasion and supply rightful play expression to her children? Upon our answer to this question will depend our influence with our young people. For I am quite frank in saying that we cannot expect to either hold our young people or to be able to avail ourselves of the opportunity to prepare them for the larger experiences of life which comes later on.

The church has, for all too long, contented itself in protesting against popular forms of amusement. Shall we be content to continue to oppose the evil? Shall we ignore the play life of childhood and permit it to find its own expression, or will the church rise to the occasion and supply rightful play expression for her young people? Shall the church be disinterested in the recreational life of its people and leave the members of the church to their own initiative in finding such expression?

The church must care for all that has to do with life. In the manner in which we meet this problem will be determined our future hold on the masses of men. The church must provide expression—physical, mental, moral, spiritual. It is not the privilege, but the imperative duty of the church to supervise and direct the play life of its youth and to provide such activities as will permit the widest possible expression for all its membership compatible with the idealism of Christianity.

Not only must the church concern itself with the play life of childhood, but it must provide expression suited to the varying ages of childhood. The play life suited for childhood will not satisfy old age. Nor will it conform to the narrowing vision of age. The reality of life as it appears to mature men and women fails to make allowance many times, for the imaginative period through which youth is passing.

Nowhere has the church a better opportunity for constructive service than through interesting itself in the people's play. It is not enough simply to cry out against apparent evils. More is demanded. The church must set the standard and then help the people to live according to that standard. This will mean that it must be more tolerant, more sympathetic, more appreciative of the reasons which lead the people to do the things they do in seeking amusement.

To be sympathetic towards the people, to appreciate their needs, to oppose those things which lower tastes and morals, and then to cooperate heartily with all the forces in the community that are helping to provide play facilities for the people—this is the program which grows out of the nature of the gospel itself and which cannot fail to appeal to every lover of mankind.

There are seven phases of the play instincts—creative, rhythmic, nurturing, and curious. These four are equally manifest in girls and boys. There are three others which are particularly masculine. I refer to fighting, hunting, and team action. Working together, these instincts determine the spiritual, physical, mental, and moral development of any people. There are various stages in the evolution of the child. We have the period of "make believe" and "let's pretend" of childhood. Children pretend to be a horse, they bark like a dog, they impersonate everything, even to a sun-beam. This is the age of fairy stories and nursery rhymes. It is the period of individual sensing. It is the time of the assertion of the ego. How well do we recall the days of our childhood when we organized our circus and improvised nearly every feature relating thereto, even to the imprisonment of the cat and grotesquely rigging up the dog, with the proverbial pins as entrance fees.

The next is known as the heroic period. This is the stage when boys become idolators. They must have a hero. Happy indeed is the father who at this period can fill this cherished place, for if he does not supply it, it is quite likely that the bully on the street will displace him in the idolatrous eyes of his son.

The next is the period of group loyalty. At this stage the gang spirit manifests itself. The boy learns group psychology. He stands up for his pals against all odds. He will not peach on his comrades. He will go to dishonor in the estimation of his seniors rather than to be discredited among the fellows of the gang.

Next we have the period of romantic idealism. This is the period of stress and storm. Creative imagination is in the saddle. It is a period of dreams and achievements. Life then is as fitful as a day in April. The young man brooks no restraint; he chafes at the bit. He feels that he possesses the long-lost key of achievement and that the whole world is awaiting his arrival. This is the period when he falls in love with everything, especially himself. He resents the real and lives entirely in the fields of visions and dreams.

The last period is that of adulthood, of which we will not deal further here.

It is our first purpose as a church to provide play expression for our children and to find recreational and social expression for the older ones. We suggest that there be no hard and fast lines of organization. Let us have only sufficient machinery to facilitate our work. This should be flexible and suitable to the community in which we operate. The Religio in a small town may be almost wholly dissimilar in its activities to those in a large city. Let the people in the community determine the activities of the organization.

The Religio is not so much a definite organization as it is a medium supplying the necessary information along the lines of recreation and expressional life. I would suggest a new name for this department. Personally, I do not know of a better designation than the Department of Recreation and Expression.

We should have no cast-iron, limited curriculum, or course of study. It should be our purpose to supply a variety of texts on the large number of subjects which we adopt for study at any time. The study period of the departments, whether conducted on a week night, in the Sunday school, or during the afternoon gatherings of the Department of Women, should use texts provided by the department of education, and these should be under the general supervision of either one individual or a supervising committee.

It is intended that we have uniform texts on given subjects for all departments. Each group or class may select the course of study desired and engage therein. Any attempt to make a study of any one course or the use of any one book imperative would be abortive of our purpose. We propose that any group of mature minds shall have the opportunity to make its own choice of the course it would use in the study period. For small children this will devolve on teachers and officials. To illustrate: If the Bible is to be studied in the Religio, let the Sunday School Quarterly be used. It would not be out of place for a class in the Sunday school to study such a book as The Church and the People's Play, or to cover such subjects as have hitherto been directed solely by the Department of Women.

We must provide for physical expression. Can you tell me what is more beautiful, what makes the greater appeal to heart and mind of man than the vigor and strength displayed in superb manhood, or the beauty and grace of perfect womanhood? We propose to provide a study course in physical culture and this will include all sorts of athletics. We also suggest the holding of periodical tournaments, contests, and games. At these tournaments there should be contests for the most perfect physically formed woman, for the most superb manhood. In order to accomplish this we should form athletic clubs throughout the church. While these clubs may have their separate identity, they will be united under the Department of Recreation and Expression.

This activity will call for athletic fields, gymnasiums, tracks, and courts, where these activities may be carried on. In localities where it will be impossible to secure these advantages we advise that our young people make arrangements to use the buildings, grounds, and apparatus of other institutions and, if necessary, to engage with them in gymnasium and physical expression rather than to be denied this privilege. In Independence we should have several athletic fields, as well as gymnasiums, baths, etc.

We should have annual contests for women and men, boys and girls, who under the most wholesome rivalry might seek to excel in all those things which make for virile manhood and perfect womanhood. We have given our attention to the saving of the soul of man, to educating his mind, and have almost altogether ignored training and developing his body.

A sound mind in a sound body may be amplified by the statement that the spirit cannot operate except through the body. How necessary, therefore, that our bodies be always at their best! Let me enumerate:

We should go in for physical culture.

We should seek to excel in physical graces. We should have contests throughout the church where contests be held, and this for legitimate trophies.

Physical instructors should be engaged in all large centers.

What is more attractive and more inspiring than the beauty of woman? Instead of our young women becoming amateur artists with pencil and brush and cosmetics, I suggest we stimulate physical expression and diversified activities, where nature will be both painter and sculptor and the woman the product.

This is not inherited; it is acquired.

It requires eternal vigilance to preserve it.

It must be done in a scientific manner.

It is the greatest guarantee against sickness, premature age, and infirmity.

Let me here speak of dramatics. The church has rightful claim on the drama. It is the legitimate child of religion. Religion is the mother of all art. Without the religious impulse art would be impossible.

Among primitive peoples it was the practice during drouths to engage in a ceremonial performance by pouring water on the ground and thus passing the word on to the rain god.

The whole ceremonial service of the church is in the nature of a drama doing some thing which stands for another. We advise and will encourage the organization of dramatic clubs in every church center where the dramatic expression may be cultivated and used in our Sunday school and church services. What greater sermon could we have than the interpretation of sacred events in the form of the drama?

I recommend folk exercises as now carried on in practically all of our public schools. It develops grace and ease and rhythm in the individual.

There is nothing wrong with the mere act of dancing. The trouble is the way you dance. I have no objection at all to young women dancing as Miriam and the women of Israel did when they commemorated their deliverance from Egypt. I have no objection in dramatical expression, as the children of Israel performed when they kept the passover or carried out the Song of Moses in expressing to God their joy at their deliverance. I have no objection to children romping on the green or playing the innocent, active games of childhood. I do raise my protest to the disgusting, sensuous, revolting thing known as the modern dance, which cannot help but degrade and contaminate anyone who engages therein.

Let us have pantomime, charades, pageants. These should engage the attention of our young people—and include glee clubs, quartets, choruses.

I would like to make Saturday afternoon a Latter Day Saint holiday throughout the church, where all of our people could get together and engage in games.

It should be considered a sacred trust and privilege for all of our people to engage in healthful sports and clean games and joyous outdoor life every Saturday afternoon. We would have better prayer meetings on Sunday if we did.

But let it be understood that every such expression should tie up with religious expression.

Then we should have our social life. This involves entertainments, suppers, outings, picnics.

We need leaders—trained leaders.

It will be the purpose of the superintendent of this department to move among the different districts as rapidly as possible and organize our people along these lines.

I would suggest that instead of calling our Sunday morning study hour Sunday school, and our Friday evening hour Religio, that we rather supply the term Church School to the whole group of study periods.

It seems anomalous that when we get together on Sunday morning and study the Bible or Book of Mormon we call it the Sunday school, and when we get together on Friday night and study these same books we call it the Religio.

Now the same people in each branch should have supervision of all class and study work at all hours, regardless of when or where the students meet.

I do not think the study period for Friday night should be denominated Religio, but rather should it become a phase of the church school.

It will be our purpose to provide texts and question outlines along physical culture lines, games, etc., which may be studied by the groups that are engaging in these activities.

Let us unite all the educational study of our people of all ages, under the title Church School.

In this way we may eventually provide for one set of officers in the branch, and this would suggest a teacher for certain groups. This teacher will have charge of all of the activities of the child, its religious training, its play activities, and expression.

This Department of Recreation and Expression will provide information along these lines and cooperate in organizing and directing the activities coming under its supervision.

What We Teach and How We Teach It

Teaching of religion, that subtle thing we all want yet which we hardly know how to define, was most effectively discussed by A. Max Carmichael to a faithful few at the Stone Church, while the multitude who evidently think the task of teaching children can be left to "the women and the kids" went elsewhere.

Some of his most salient points were:

1. The first business of the church is to see to it that the child has good health.
2. Every child should know how to live a perfect family life.
3. Every child must be able to contribute something to the world's economic good. He must have a chance to earn a good living.
4. The child must be able to participate rightly in civic affairs.
5. We must teach or so guide the child that he will choose properly his pleasures.
6. He must be able to deliberate together with others.

At the tabernacle Apostle R. C. Russell spoke very feelingly from Matthew 19:16, "Good Master what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" He incidentally spoke of his long service in the church and of his devotion to her interest to a large and attentive audience.

The choir also held a social gathering last evening which will doubtless be reported later.

New Era in Women's Work

The following districts had organizers present at the session of the Women's Department at the Stone Church at 10 a. m., Monday:

Northwestern Ohio, Northeastern Illinois, Des Moines, Pittsburgh, Eastern Oklahoma, Central Oklahoma, Northern California, Fremont, Far West, Little Sioux, Lamoni Stake, Detroit (represented by the secretary), Independence, Northern Wisconsin, Utah.

There were 27 local leaders, 20 friendly visitors, 8 home department, 7 cradle roll superintendents, 16 young women's department leaders.

The present general officers are: Mrs. Dora Glines, superintendent; Mrs. Ida Etzenhouser, first assistant superintendent; Miss Nellie Sampson, second assistant superintendent; Mrs. Grace Morrison, secretary; Bishop B. R. McGuire, treasurer; Mrs. Anna Murphy, member of executive and organizer in Zion; Mrs. Jennie Yingling; Miss Pauline James, members of executive. Miss Addie Belle Chappell is supervisor of young women.

Sister Glines took up points about the department work and sought to make them clear.

"Every woman and girl in the church belongs to the Women's Department, whether they join or not," she declared. "And welcome the men into your meetings and your classes. There are good classes for both. In fact these classes ought to be organized in the Sunday school or the Religio—wherever and whenever you can have classes.

"We ought to change our name to Parents' Department and obliterate the sex line," was emphasized.

The home department is no longer the narrow concept it used to be, but includes all who study in their home any of the courses offered by the church, the speaker declared.

"We have outgrown the traditional idea that six women were required to organize," she continued. "Any number may organize into a group.

"And do not worry over reports, cradle roll or others, till you get a blank, then fill it out."

No hard and fast rules are being laid down for guiding locals, but they are expected to use their judgment.

As to money, the superintendent said many of the women had been making money, and so long as it is wisely done and wisely spent, there was no objection. But she would suggest that each group of women reserve a working capital from which to purchase books, texts, lesson courses, material for work, etc. And further, the free will offerings called for by the general department twice a year ought to be paid from this fund.

It was urged that women do not use the ten-cent basis per capita for this response, but rather make it a dollar each in view of the demands on the general department.

Health and birth records are discontinued for the present, as explained in the report of the department to conference.

All historical record-keeping is now being turned over to church historians.

Affiliation with all good local organizations was urged, including parent-teacher associations, baby clinics, chambers of commerce, etc.

Sister Glines had found that though Canadians had difficulty in getting our Federal bulletins for women, that they could get most excellent ones from their own government.

Those who want general field workers should write to headquarters. These need not always be women.

The Women's Department should both study and work, and therefore should have no difficulty in including aid society activities. Let "aid societies" come in en masse with their sewing.

Sister Glines denied that the women talked more than men, but since they had the reputation, must bear it awhile in patience.

Three closely-printed sheets were distributed to the audience, containing a list of the needs of the Sanitarium and Children's Home. This included all sorts of supplies, such as has been published.

A reception was announced for Thursday, October 5, at the home of Walter W. Smith, at 631 South Fuller Avenue, 7.30 to 10, to give all an opportunity to meet general church officers.

Many questions were asked, but most of them postponed till the round table meetings next Monday evening.

The Local Effect of General Changes

One of the big disadvantages of the rearrangements which have been made of recent years has been the tendency to disorganize local work. In some instances this has been forced, as in the transfer of home class and cradle roll work from the Sunday school and Religio to the Women's Department.

We would therefore emphasize that in attempting to organize a department of religious education or in any other of the changes now considered for the Women's Department or Young People, none of these should mean a let down of any of the work being done locally. All that has been done for good by the local Sunday schools should be continued, their organization maintained, and no change made except as we are able to improve.

There should, it is true, be a greater effort made by Sunday school officers and teachers now to prepare for a general and great improvement of their work. We need more trained teachers; we need better trained teachers; we need more understanding Sunday school officers and better trained Sunday school officers. That is a change that every local superintendent is free to make as soon as he possibly can do so.

Regardless of any change that is made in the general Religio Department, we are inclined to suggest and urge that the local work in religious study by the young people should not be discontinued. Young people need religious training. Youth is the time of religious devotion and awakening. Certainly provision should be made for separate classes of young people, nor should this work be at all limited to the Sunday school hour. Where at all possible this separate meeting once a week for religious study on a week-day evening should be continued.

We need also the opportunity for education; when we are able to go to school or college and devote our time to that purpose, we should on bended knee thank God for the privilege. We will thank him in the years to come, and our parents also for giving us this splendid privilege. Of course it is true that while we are young we do not as clearly appreciate the value of school as we shall in later years. But then is the time to get ready.

But those who have not this privilege of school attendance should still take advantage of what opportunities they do have. Youth is the time for preparation. It is the time for study. Such work may be taken up as the extension courses of Graceland College.

In addition to this work of study we recognize the natural social instinct of the young people, so under their direction provision is made for recreation and social organization. That may well be added, but we do not want to leave undone or destroy the good which has already been done.

The general officers may offer a broad program. We may be disturbed because at Independence and Lamoni many classes are organized taking up different subjects. But we should remember that each individual can belong to only one class meeting in any one period, and any one class can only take up one subject. If twenty classes be scattered in twenty localities they can do as much as can twenty classes meeting under one roof. There remains, then, for the young people to continue their work, take up a definite course of study for each class, whether it meets alone, or in the same building with other classes, and consistently pursue that study, whether it be in religious education, or in secular knowledge.

It is a safe rule to hold fast that which is good, as well as prove all things. The local work should be continued with all of the energy of the past and, as the general plans become more effective, with still greater energy and success than ever before. The purpose is not to destroy, but to progress and do better work.

Logically, the effect will be a closer association of the Sunday school with the local church and of the Sunday school superintendents with the local pastors. But that is only as it should be. Let us, then, with faith and hope push onward with greater energy and enthusiasm than ever before to do those things which are good. Holding fast to that we have which is good, until we have before us that which is better.

S. A. B.

Sunday School Department Is No More

The strangest convention ever held by the Sunday School Department was probably the one held to-day (Monday) with a comparatively small audience of delegates present. The proposal of the Independence delegation looking to a revision or change of the constitution opened the way for a motion to repeal the constitution entirely and ask for a report via the conference as to the next step.

After considerable interesting discussion from delegates from all parts of the church and representing all kinds of situations, the motion prevailed with unanimous vote. Perhaps some who felt uncertain did not express themselves, for it was plainly apparent that the move was considered almost too drastic and would leave confusion and disorder rather than clarity and progress.

Some resolutions from districts and schools regarding revisions in procedure, asking for a missionary quarterly, etc., were all by the action taken referred to the presidency of the church.

The superintendent reported at length to the convention in a report that was printed with the conference reports, and declared himself pleased with the action taken. He could make no promise as to the future, ruling that the action taken abolished the Sunday School Department and the church would have to act in order to establish an administrative organization to carry out the work before the church in the education of the children.

In a speech of about forty minutes following, speaking as an individual rather than as an officer, A. Max Carmichael spoke positively and definitely that the big problem of educating our children in the problems before us as a church must go on with greater vigor.

Those in touch with the situation are confident that the scope of the Sunday school will be enlarged and will likely function hereafter as a church school, with a better basis and more facilities for succeeding.

A Few Points In Church Sunday School History

In the Reorganized Church we have heard that a Sunday school was organized in Nauvoo very early in the sixties, if not in the year 1860, and that as early as 1862 the Quorum of Twelve approved the Sunday school work. We have not seen the historical proof, but were personally informed by President Joseph Smith that the first Sunday school in the Reorganized Church was in Nauvoo shortly after 1860. We know that the Zion's Hope Sunday School at Saint Louis dates back to April, 1864.

Then at the conference of 1869 held in Saint Louis a motion prevailed recommending the issuing of a Sunday school paper, monthly or semimonthly. This paper took its name from the Zion's Hope Sunday School of Saint Louis, and continues as Zion's Hope. The fact that there was demand for such a paper indicates clearly that the Sunday school work was already well established.

In April, 1871, the following resolution was adopted:

"That as the Sunday school cause forms an important feature in the great work of the last days, the officers and teachers thereof are hereby sustained in their calling to care for the lambs of Israel's fold." (Resolution 128.)

In 1896 this resolution was reaffirmed and the following resolution, directing that the work be fostered or established in the various branches, was adopted:

"Resolved, That we request the presidents of branches, throughout the world, to use their utmost endeavors to organize Sunday schools in their respective branches, and to make reports to their several district conferences of the condition and progress of said schools; and that districts make reports to the Annual Conference; and that presidents of districts and the traveling ministry also be requested to use their influence to establish and sustain Sunday schools." (Resolution 191, 2d paragraph.)

On April 14, 1884, the Board of Publication was requested to furnish the Sunday schools suitable lessons, also to publish the Hope weekly. W. C. Caldwell, Alice Cobb, and D. F. Lambert were appointed a committee to furnish the said lessons.

In 1890, the General Sunday School Association was formed, but the steps therefor were taken by the General Conference, and it was established then as a department of the regular church work. The resolution was as follows:

"Whereas, The Sunday school movement in the church, which is becoming an important part of the work of the body of Christ, has now arrived at that period of its existence that it invites and needs assistance and encouragement as well as recognition in a more general and definite way, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this conference appoint a committee whose duty shall be to devise ways and means towards further establishment of the Sunday school work, with a view to making it a department of regular church work and care." (Resolution 339.)

Now, after more than thirty years, the Sunday school has again become distinctly a department of the church work and is asking a closer coordination and even subordination to the carrying out of the purposes of the church.

A novel effect was secured by Chorister Burgess at the Sunday evening song service by asking the audience to divide the response by sections beginning at the platform and going back. All between certain posts were to sing certain parts, and the cumulative effect was very pleasing, those in the rear seeming to gather up the echo and hurl it back with their own music.

Interesting Debate on the Needs of Sunday School Constitution

It has been quite apparent for some time that the rapidly changing ideals of the Sunday school were demanding new statements and new alignments to keep the workers informed. Each convention developed legislation which required more or less change in the constitution, usually more rather than less.

Practically no convention passed without some change. But of late years the growing conviction that the Sunday school was but the church in action, teaching and training its children, has forced the conclusion that we did not need a constitution.

When the proposal for the repeal of the constitution was brought before the convention, a number of the brethren seemed to feel alarmed. Speakers for the small school especially, they believed that some guide ought to be provided for them, so they might know what to do.

It was pointed out that already a comprehensive booklet entitled Instructions to Districts had been published, advertised, and was still for sale. Issuance of similar literature for local schools was contemplated, and would no doubt be of value to all schools.

Several resolutions had been sent in for consideration. Toronto wanted the district organization abolished and a co-ordination plan similar to that of the Women's Department put into effect. They also wanted an honor roll system adopted.

Northern California wanted the cradle roll and home departments restored from the Women's Department, which took it over at the previous conference. It is interesting to note that the report of the Women's Department recommends such a move.

Southern Missouri wanted a missionary quarterly and had appealed to the seventies for help in getting it—something based on the King James Bible that could be used in new places. The Seven Presidents of Seventy passed it on to the Sunday school.

All these were, by the action of the convention in abolishing the constitution, automatically transferred to the church and will no doubt be referred to the department of religious education or the church school, or whatever set of persons shall have to do with that branch of church work.

The report of the superintendent is interesting, not so much in its recitation of achievement but in its outlook for the future and suggestions for the present. Brother Carmichael says his report can be summarized into: "I have been thinking." The report will no doubt be printed in one of the early issues of the Daily.

The superintendency, by the motion adopted, were asked to report to the General Conference at their earliest convenience a working plan for the Sunday school. No doubt this will be done.

Speakers on the subject of repeal of the constitution were Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser who declaimed that she was glad she had lived to see this day when the Sunday school had become a part of the church. A young doctor from Ontario, whose name we missed, challenged the idea that the Religio had done well with no constitution, and said he believed that all the eastern Canadian districts at least were opposed to coordination as it had developed. They wanted something better before they parted with what we had.

O. E. Curry, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was also glad to see the change come and admitted that we had no need for a constitution.

Leroy Colbert, of Chetek, Wisconsin, spoke for the little rural schools he had most to do with and said they needed something definite, such as a constitution.

C. B. Hartshorn, assistant superintendent of the largest Sunday school in the church, at the Stone Church, in Independence, was opposed to the move and believed it would not lead to progress.

D. J. Krahl, long-time secretary of the general Sunday school, was much interested and heartily approved of the proposed move towards closer affiliation with the church.

Walter W. Smith, church historian, believed that it was proper for us to go to the church in General Conference with our problems and there discuss them. He said our biggest problem was not conventions, nor officers, nor constitution, but a teacher and a class of pupils. The Sunday school is the church doing something, he emphasized, while the constitution was but the scaffolding by which we had built what we have, and that it was time we removed it.

Vere Blair, of Detroit, Michigan, said the movement towards the church met with his hearty approval, though he had been converted to it only lately.

C. E. Wight, of Lamoni, explained that the Sunday school has had its work well definitized and therefore has succeeded better than the Religio because the latter has not found its place. He said the priests, for instance, did not need a constitution, nor the Health Department, nor the Publicity Department. H. W. Savage, lately returned from New Zealand, said he thought the Sunday school was already a part of the church and that in New Zealand they had worked on that assumption. He wanted the new plan that was to take the place of the constitution brought out at once.

Orman Salisbury, of Council Bluffs, said the Des Moines and Pottawattamie Districts had worked out coordination very effectively and had long ago lost sight of the constitution.

Frank Gray, of London District, wanted a definite plan, on the basis that confusion ensued when nothing was offered for the conducting of schools. Especially is this the case with the young and inexperienced.

J. F. Gaver, of Lamoni, spoke for the small school and the large one as well, and said the constitution was not worth the paper it was written on if it did not have behind it those capable of good administration.

G. C. Tomlinson, of Saint Marys, Ontario, was in favor of going back to the parent body.

J. C. Strachan, of Youngstown-Sharon District, wanted action and that right away.

General Conference Songs

For many special occasions we have had special collections of church songs. Two years ago it was "Songs of the Legion," a collection selected and brought to the conference by Brother Albert N. Hoxie. They were popular and are still in use in many places, especially for outdoor meetings such as the lawn services. Besides, they are easier to distribute and stand the wear and tear better than a larger, heavier book, like the Hymnal or Praises.

Our reunions and young people's meetings have had their collections of songs, much to the edification of Saints and friends.

This time the conference has thousands of booklets available containing in its 48 pages 75 songs, mostly from the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises, the selections made after careful days and days of thought by Brother Harold C. Burgess. A few others are included, such as "Perfect day," by J. L. Williams, of Bevier, Missouri; "Consecration," by Albert L. McCullough, of Lamoni; "Admonition," by Joseph Luff; "Just as I am," by Marianne Hearn; "I would be true," (words and music—the only music in the collection) by Joseph Yates Peek; "I need thee ev'ry hour," by Annie S. Hawks.

The Health Department

The Health Department includes the work of the Sanitarium, but it is broader than the Sanitarium. The purpose of the Sanitarium is to cure the sick; the purpose of the health work of the church is to prevent sickness. This is just as important, in fact more important, than the healing of the sick, regardless of the method used.

The health work therefore includes sanitation and the teaching of hygiene. It includes the teaching of proper foods, how to prepare them; the use of fresh air, sunshine, proper exercise, and pure food for the preservation of health. It includes the care of the expectant mother and instruction in the care of young babies. It is a pathetic fact that the United States ranks very low in its care of mothers and children. It has been suggested that to be a mother in America is proving as dangerous as it was for a soldier to go to France in the World War; in fact more dangerous, while there is no comparison between the soldier on a firing line and being born. Yet most of this loss of life is preventable and already has been so demonstrated.

The health work of the church includes regular physical examination at reasonable intervals and ultimately for a reasonable fee, in order to discover incipient conditions and to prevent sickness as far as possible; at least to use the basis of our present knowledge to avoid ill health. This examination by a physician does not mean the partaking of medicine. Its purpose is to avoid the necessity for the taking of medicine. But it also has for its purpose the discovering of subnormal conditions and correcting them. This examination is not only for adults, but also for more frequent examination of babies and young children, so as to correct, while still in the formative stage, any difficulties which may be located.

This work of public health when fully carried out requires the services of public health nurses, women who have not only received special training but who also are possessed of tact and sympathy. It has been suggested that the time may come—let us hope it will be soon—when we will have a public health nurse in each group. That means that where there is assigned an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, there will also be assigned a public health nurse. It occurs to the writer that when this day comes the public health nurse will not necessarily give her whole time to that work, that she may even have a family of her own; that her services may then be rendered on behalf of the Health Department and as part of the women's work of the church, no matter what the future form of organization may be, very much as is the case with the other visiting officers, though we naturally hope that she will make her visits more frequent and successful than is the case with many visiting officers.

A community nurse who cares for hundreds of families would no doubt have to devote her full time to that work, but we hope not only to have such a nurse for the community, but also for our own social groups. We know of some instances where the visiting officer for the Women's Department is already a trained nurse and also the mother of a family. This, of course, makes it impossible to devote full time to the work, but when the work is fully organized and the value of right training is seen, may we not go a step farther, so that each mother, if not each parent, is better prepared with a knowledge of diatetics, of hygiene, and of the principles of public health nursing?

But when sickness comes upon us and it is necessary that we go to a hospital we may well be thankful that we have such a hospital as our own Sanitarium. It is naturally a source of regret, that we have not fully established the sanitarium of the vision, because the very first case that came was one requiring an operation, and this has continued until the present day, compelling the Sanitarium to be largely an operating hospital.

It does not therefore follow that the Spirit of God does not labor there. We are personal witness to the fact of the healing of the sick and of the power of administration and the presence of the Spirit of God there as well as to the efficiency of the physicians and nurses.

Naturally we hope for the time to come soon when there shall be established the quiet place of the vision for the exercise of faith and the healing of the sick. Naturally we also look forward to the gradual development of the present institution, and for the years to bring the time when we shall in a separate establishment be able to give adequate care to delinquent children, since the basic trouble is usually physical, and with the physical trouble corrected the delinquency is also brought to an end. We would also have a psycho-pathic ward and have larger facilities for the Health Department proper.

But these will all take time, and there is no disposition to force the matter more rapidly than the church can afford. In the meantime the Sanitarium is rendering a splendid service to the sick of the church and of Independence.

To continue its work there are needed each year new classes of young women to enter for training as nurses. We are naturally grateful to realize that whereas there were very few nurses in the church twenty years ago we now have a strong corps of trained and registered nurses from our own Sanitarium to care for the sick and also to care for the public health work.

But with all the splendid work the Sanitarium renders, we must not lose sight of the greater work of the Health Department, and that is to preserve health and prevent sickness.

S. A. B.

Opening Prayer by B. R. McGuire

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven. This afternoon as this conference of thy church convenes we would that thou wouldst bless us with the power and inspiration of thy Holy Spirit. We realize that the power of the life of our Lord and Master was by reason of his doing always those things that pleased thee; and so we pray this afternoon, our heavenly Father, that thou wouldst help us by the power and influence of thy Spirit to see clearly what is thy will in all things and grant with us the strength and the integrity of purpose thereunto to do. Grant, our heavenly Father, then, that whatsoever may come before this conference we may have the clearness of vision to perceive thy will, and have the strength and fortitude to do it, to the end that man may be blessed, that Zion may be redeemed, that thy kingdom may come and thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Lord, we ask that thou wouldst bless those that preside over the conference, thy servants in quorum capacity, and thy conference assembled in all that shall be presented unto us in our deliberations, that that which would please thee might be that which we shall achieve and accomplish at this time to thy honor, praise, and glory. Amen.

It gives one a graphic-chart feeling to look over the big group of delegates assembled in a business session of the conference and realize that each of them represents a hundred Saints who live somewhere in this country or possibly in some far corner of the world.

Document from Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric

The following matters had been before the Joint Council for some time before adjournment May 16, 1922, pending consideration. When adjournment was had of the Joint Council sessions on the above date the resolution provided for the reconvening on the 20th day of September. So far the council has not been convened and the issues are still in suspense:

First: "Appreciating the urgent need of some concrete expression being given to the economic and social program of the church; and the effort being made by President Frederick M. Smith to arouse the collective consciousness of the church at large to a sense of the responsibility resting on the church, to discharge this duty and, the efforts made by the Order of Bishops to devise and state categorically the ways and means, and interpret the method of administering stewardships and inheritances, be it resolved: That we request the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric to take up this matter for consideration and discussion, with a view to presenting to the coming General Conference for consideration and indorsement, a definite constructive program moving towards the realization of this vital feature of Christian idealism."

Second: "That the resolution on page 2437 of General Conference Minutes for the year 1917 on the silencing of ministers be amended by adding the following: "In case the party silenced is not satisfied, appeal may be made to the Joint Council consisting of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. The decision of this council being final."

Third: "In order to reduce to the utmost minimum the occasion for criticism and lack of confidence, which create doubt, if not suspicion, to the detriment of the cause, and to meet the evident need of closer cooperation in the executive world, and to secure more effective service from the executive officials in attempting to meet the general needs of the church, especially stimulating the faith of the membership at large; and, in organizing the various departments of church work in foreign and domestic fields; and, to increase unity of purpose: It is the opinion of the Apostolic Quorum that in order to secure these ends in programs of official itinerary, involving the church executive or administrative departments, together with the expenditure of money from the general treasury beyond the ordinary work, such programs and itineraries should have the consideration and indorsement of the Joint Council; that the wisdom, judgment, and inspiration which it may be assumed the Joint Council possesses, shall authorize these extraordinary measures, and by mutual consultation the integrity of the executive council, individually and as a whole, may be conserved and all be thus qualified to sustain such programs and expense, because undertaken with the knowledge and consent of the Joint Council."

Fourth: In 1919 one of the ministers of the church was placed under silence by the President. This action was objected to by the brother himself, and after three years his appeal from the action was under consideration of the Joint Council, the whole matter being referred to a committee.

This committee spent several weeks in making investigation. Every source of information was explored and a very elaborate report was presented to the Joint Council with the following conclusion:

That the grounds upon which action was based were not sustained by evidences and recommended that the silence imposed in 1919 be lifted.

The findings and recommendations were considered by the Joint Council and approved of unanimously.

Up to the present this action of the Joint Council has not been honored.

It is the opinion of the quorum that these features are of such importance they should have consideration by the Joint Council, as at present constituted, and then be submitted to this General Conference for final action, because of the peculiar circumstances surrounding these matters.

We therefore respectfully ask that action upon the communication presented by President F. M. Smith, October 2 be postponed until these features have had the consideration and action called for.

The above was adopted by unanimous vote.

Respectfully submitted,

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE,

JOHN W. RUSHTON,

Secretary.

Special Young People's Prayer Meeting

With fervent prayers and earnest testimonies typical of younger workers a meeting of about three hundred of them at the Stone Church Tuesday evening after the preaching services perhaps crystallized latent thoughts and inspired uncertain hearts.

Called by the leaders of young people in Zion, led by J. F. Garver, D. T. Williams, Harold C. Burgess, contributed to by them in a most effective way, supplemented by the contributions of devoted young people and leaders of the young, the results were good.

There were no gifts of the gospel made manifest—none of the outward gifts which might have been expected. No doubt there were definite reasons—let us hope good ones.

It was a manifestation on the part of the young and those who feel young that they are interested in righteousness and glad to consider it from the various angles of its demands.

The session closed at half past ten and no doubt inspired many to commune personally with God in an endeavor to contribute to the solution of the problems before the church and likely to come.

Several social events have been planned for the young people, but for the present they are held in abeyance.

Causes of Dependency

In the class of Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser causes of dependency are being discussed. When a situation is found requiring assistance of some kind, one first should locate the causes.

"No normal person wants help to do something he can do himself," declares Sister Etzenhouser, who has studied this problem seriously and has done a lot of practical work in that field. "But when he needs assistance it is because something is wrong back of it. If he is ill, we ought to find out what causes the illness and see that it does not recur if we can help it. If one is out of work, we must find out why, and not only help him get a job but help him hold it when he does get it."

This course ought to be attended by many more people and will be if some of the quorums that are meeting at nine o'clock each morning are able to finish their business.

"Once in a while a man develops in a big Sunday school. The man develops wherever he is, who has the stuff in him."
—J. F. Garver, at Sunday School Convention.

The Evolution of Religion

There may have been many "schoolmasters" but to bring man back to the truth of early revelation.

There are some men who accept quite readily the idea of evolution of physical things, but say that the principle does not apply in the spiritual realm. Yet, as we have already pointed out, the idea of our spiritual development is very plainly indicated in the word of God. Doubtless many other passages can be found demonstrating this fact.

Furthermore, in broader measure we find the revelations of God adapted to the capacity of the people to receive. This does not bring into question ultimate truth and the ultimate reality, but only human capacity to receive. The Mosaic law was a schoolmaster. We personally believe it possible that there were other schoolmasters, and furthermore that there are schoolmasters to-day to prepare the way for the higher truth which is held in true Christianity.

But we may note according to the Bible that Israel, when they received the Mosaic law had declined from the earlier purity when they possessed the gospel of Jesus Christ. It was a schoolmaster to bring them back to Christ, not to continue to bring them up from the childhood of the race. If the Bible is true—either the Old or the New Testament—if modern revelation is to be accepted, it would seem clear that there was a first primeval revelation. An evolution to the Mosaic law then becomes in a measure a devolution—it represented a decline.

We shall not here, but shall later, attempt to sum up some of the external evidences regarding the development of religion. There are a great many theories attempting to explain religion as an evolution in the thought of man. These theories are not all mutually consistent, though some of them may be reconciled with each other. But the surprising factor is to find out how little attempt is made to establish them historically. They are convenient hypotheses, and each hypothesis is carried on by many writers who attempt to write wisely concerning the folklore of the Old Testament, that Moses and Abraham were merely mythical characters, that it is a very interesting story of the childhood of the race.

Then to this multitude of writers is added another multitude who attack the historicity of Jesus and his followers and claim that there never was such a person as Jesus Christ, or Peter, John, or Paul. This is all very well, but the most unfortunate fact for the theory is that, as men like Doctor Hall have noted, there seems not to be the slightest historical evidence for these theories. They are interesting to read, but expressing it in plain English, they are not so. Outside of that they may be all right.

It is a great convenience to our habits of human thought to take up and discuss religion, beginning with so-called primitive forms, and to proceed from the lowest and simplest forms to discuss more and more complex forms. But religion does not develop in the life of the individual in any such a way. Life is in fact complex and not simple. Tradition and history rather strongly indicate a great knowledge of the fundamental principles of truth on the part of religion in ages prehistoric and that religion did not gradually evolve in the race.

There is a tremendous struggle between unselfishness and selfishness, between light and darkness, between truth and falsehood. It behooves us, therefore, to consider all things carefully; gain the wisdom and knowledge and hold it fast; and exercise our privilege as children of God to receive and retain through his Holy Spirit the truth.

S. A. B.

Quotations From Speeches Made in Sunday School Convention

"The biggest thing the church has on hand right now is teaching the children."—Walter W. Smith.

"We need a greater church consciousness."—C. E. Wight.

"Let us have one piece of machinery."—C. E. Wight.

"We have our constitution in the sacred books of the church."—C. E. Wight.

"Let us increase this church consciousness."—C. E. Wight.

"The constitution of the Sunday school is not worth the paper it is written on."—J. F. Garver.

"The Sunday school organization was built upon the fact that the church refused to instruct its children."—A. Max Carmichael.

"The church spends $45,000 a year to proselyte and $3,000 for the Sunday school children."—A. Max Carmichael.

"As for me, I am here for the children of the church, and I am at odds with anyone whom I can see does not have the proper view, and I am here if I can add my mite to change and make these men agree."—Max Carmichael.

"Help us to appreciate the fact that our goal after all is the religious education of our people, that they may become Zion builders indeed. Help us to realize that our goal is that we may find God in everything and that we may recognize our fellow men as our brothers."—Floyd M. McDowell, in opening prayer of Sunday school convention.

"There is nothing as important as molding character in our boys and girls."—Floyd M. McDowell.

Elder C. J. Smith, missionary from the Nauvoo District, who lives at Sioux City, Iowa, is helping in the book booth of the publishing house.

Presiding Bishop's Report

(The balance sheet and notes for the year ending June 30, 1922, have already been printed in the HERALD for September 13. The Bishop in his report to the General Conference followed the summary on pages one and two of that issue with the following historical statement and suggestion with regard to his work in general.—EDITORS.)

When we consider the effect upon receipts caused by the business depression which began within a few months after the adjournment of the 1920 General Conference, and which has been extended to the present by failure of prompt composure of international relations and adjustment of domestic industrial difficulties, we may justly feel encouraged by the present financial condition of the church.

A careful analysis of the comparative statements of operating income and expenditures, however, in our opinion, reveals a condition which requires at this time the adoption of a policy to keep our expenses at a minimum consistent with the permanent welfare of the work. Conservatism should control in the consideration and adoption of any measures demanding investments, particularly such as will increase the operating expense.

OPERATING TREND

The operations of the church for the year ended June 30, 1921, and June 30, 1922, brought down to August 31, 1922, show a total operating deficit for twenty-six months of $255,706.80. This makes for the past two years an average annual deficit but slightly in excess of the amount anticipated by the Order of Bishops for the fiscal year 1920-21 as per its report to the 1920 conference.

Noting the continued drop of income during the latter half of the calendar year 1920 and the beginning of 1921, in spite of our efforts to stimulate tithes and offerings to overcome the same, the Order of Bishops was called into council in May, 1921, and ways and means were considered to meet the situation. However, the subsequent appeal to the Saints in June, 1921, did not bring sufficient additional returns to close the fiscal year without the reported deficit of $109,354.02.

The First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve were kept informed as to the condition of church finances, and when it was seen that the deficit was continuing into the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1921, the matter was laid before the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric in their September, 1921, meetings, and their cooperation solicited to properly meet the situation. The Saints were advised at the time through the church press of the retrenchment measures put into effect as result of this joint action.

CHURCH KEPT INFORMED

In addition to the publication in the Herald of the annual reports of church finances, every possible effort has been put forth during the trying times since last conference to keep the church at large fully conversant with the exact financial condition of the church through special reports and articles appearing from time to time in the church papers. We believe many of the Saints sensed the situation and have nobly responded to the need of the church. Instances of personal sacrifice that the work of the Lord should not be retarded have come to our attention daily. This but increases our responsibility and demands great care be exercised that a prudent course in expenditures be followed.

RETRENCHMENT NECESSARY

Estimating expenses to continue on the present level, anticipating settlement of present industrial difficulties at an early date and a consequent business revival, and by applying to the general operating fund an estimated Christmas offering for 1922 of $50,000, it would seem that the operating deficit for the current year should not exceed $75,000.

It is true that while we incurred an operating deficit between June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1922, of $221,924.58, yet the net worth of the church has been increased by reason of Auditorium, Christmas Offering, and other special fund contributions, etc. On the one hand our gross assets have been increased by special fund contributions; on the other hand the source of our operating fund has thereby to some extent been dried up.

In solving the problem thus presented we must carefully determine for what purposes, to what amount, in what proportion, and in what order shall our efforts and means be distributed that the best interests of the church as a whole may be conserved and advanced.

It is at once apparent that the work of each department and church representative should be immediately outlined, the probable cost for the balance of this fiscal year estimated, with a view to bringing our expenses within our income. It should be understood that in the event of the income not reaching the estimated amount, there will be further reconsideration and curtailment interim conferences, but in such manner that the work as a whole shall suffer the least possible setback. I most earnestly advocate that this conference take action upon this matter. Otherwise, the efforts of the bishopric to raise necessary revenue will be discounted and progress delayed.

AUDITORIUM

Reports of the results of the campaign to raise funds for a General Conference Auditorium, ordered by the 1920 conference, have heretofore been published. The total net amount received to September 15, 1922, is $397,837.05. Should it be considered necessary to publish the names of the contributors and the amounts paid, we have thought it would be better to do so after all subscriptions were fully paid, in order to avoid duplication and increased expense.

The Auditorium Fund is invested as shown by the asset and liability statement. The using of the moneys of this fund for general operating expense and transferring thereto other general church assets of like amount has been approved by the Joint Council.

We have heretofore stated that the work of construction on the Auditorium was not begun for several reasons, including the following:

- General business depression.
- Existing deficit in budget 1920-21.
- Prospective deficit for the following year.
- Prospective reduction in prices of material and labor.
- Increased overhead expense when built.

The Presiding Bishopric are still of the opinion that the construction of the Auditorium should be further postponed for the same reasons. Whether the conference shares this opinion or not, we believe this matter should be carefully and prayerfully considered.

PUBLISHING PLANTS AMALGAMATED

Since the adjournment of the 1920 conference the Herald Publishing House plant has been removed from Lamoni to Independence, full details of which appear in the report of the Board of Publication. This move was made possible by the purchase of the Battery property at Independence. The acquisition of this property furnished suitable building to house the publishing plant and editorial offices, and also needed office quarters for the presiding patriarch, presiding and local bishopric, church architect, and local pastor.

That part of the Herald Building at Lamoni vacated by the publishing house has been utilized by Graceland College for dormitory purposes, thus avoiding further outlay for this purpose, as has been urged by the college president and Board of Trustees for several years.

The building formerly occupied by the Ensign Publishing House, after some necessary alterations, is rented for store and office purposes.

SANITARIUM

Report of the Independence Sanitarium published herewith shows the present financial condition of that institution. It should be noted that the general church treasury during the past two fiscal years has contributed $5,612.52 towards its operating expenses. This fact, together with the financial condition of the church as a whole, has made it inadvisable to undertake to enlarge the capacity of the Sanitarium to care for the mentally sick and tuberculosis patients, and to erect an annex as a home for delinquent children, as approved by the 1920 conference.

HOMES

The homes for the aged and for the children have been maintained during the conference interim in harmony with the policy of economy, yet the comforts and necessities of the inmates have not been neglected. Equipment and alterations and even repair work which could be delayed have been postponed in the hope of more prosperous times. Yet we have not turned a deaf ear to the worthy poor who have asked admittance, nor disregarded the cry of the needy. For the nineteen months beginning January 1, 1921, and ending September 1 of this year, 103 requests for places in the homes have come to our office. Some applications have been denied because the applicants had children who were able to take care of them and agreed to do so. Some had means to procure the needed care elsewhere, and, as the capacity of our institutions will not permit us to use them for boarding houses, only the more urgent and needy cases were admitted. In the case of each application a very thorough investigation was conducted. The report for the year ended June 30, 1922, shows there were 81 inmates in the three homes for the aged, extending over a period of 34,149 inmates days. The total operating cost (except depreciation) for these homes amounted to $18,230.87, or 53.4 cents per inmate per day.

We wish to here express our gratitude for the self-sacrificing toil, the patient efforts, and the unswerving devotion which have been manifested by the matrons, Sisters Alice P. Dancer, Elizabeth Williams, and Edith Carr, who have had charge of the Saints', Liberty, and Holden Homes, respectively.

ACCOUNTS AND REPORTS

In our last report to General Conference we made mention of departmentizing the office work of the Presiding Bishopric, and, among other things, referred to the necessity for an accounting department under the supervision of an accountant to improve our accounting methods and "devise ways and means to simplify the work of the bookkeepers and to carry into effect the detail of financial measures adopted."

This department has been established, and improved methods of accounting have been installed, which make it possible for us to properly control and keep in balance all the accounts of this office. When you consider that we have approximately 25,000 individual tithing accounts, and about 2,600 general and subsidiary accounts, you can readily understand that the work of daily posting to these accounts, and monthly balancing them, is no small task.

The general ledger accounts have been so classified as to simplify and facilitate the preparation of various statements which reflect the operating and financial conditions of the church and its departments. These statements are prepared at regular intervals, thus enabling us to keep in constant touch with the pulse of church finances. They make it possible for us to keep the Presidency and church at large informed as to the finances, thus serving as a guide in the management and administration of the financial affairs of the church.

LAND, STEWARDSHIPS, AND INHERITANCES

The land purchased with the Christmas offerings funds, comprising a total of 1,383 acres, has been leased in parcels of various sizes to nineteen families of the church, pending an agreed stewardship policy of operation.

The question was discussed during the sessions of the Order of Bishops in 1920 and 1921, but no other plan of operation for the present was decided upon.

It was recommended by the Order of Bishops that the 1921 Christmas offering (which amounted to $49,165.21) be used to provide inheritances for the ministry. This recommendation was submitted to the meeting of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in the early part of the present year, and a committee of one of the Presidency, one of the Twelve, and one of the Bishopric was appointed to suggest a method of application of this fund.

This council also recommended that the 1922 Christmas offering be placed in the general operating fund, that foreign missions might be sustained.

STOREHOUSES

Upon consultation, with the approval of the Joint Council, Bishop J. A. Becker was asked to and assumed the management of the Independence Storehouse under date of October 10, 1921, since which time the business has been expanded by establishing branches in the old Ensign Building and at 616 West South Avenue, both of which are conducted on a cash and carry basis.

It has been suggested that, if the affairs of this business should be organized differently than at present, it would more clearly express the stewardship principle and better fill the purpose of its institution. Although several methods have been discussed, under all the circumstances, to the present it has been thought inadvisable to make any changes.

The business of the Lamoni Storehouse has been amalgamated with the general mercantile business carried on by Brothers D. M. Vredenburg, A. E. Lewis, J. A. Lane, and others at Woodbine, Logan, and other towns in Iowa, and incorporated under the laws of Iowa as the General Supply Company (Incorporated). The brothers actively employing their time and means in this enterprise are doing so according to by-laws to which they have subscribed, involving the principle of stewardship. This arrangement has been perfected through the untiring efforts of Bishop Albert Carmichael, of the Lamoni Stake, in collaboration with the Presiding Bishopric, and has the approval of President Smith.

STEWARDSHIPS

During the sessions of its May, 1921, council, the Order of Bishops gave consideration to and adopted a plan for organization by those desiring to conduct their business affairs upon a stewardship basis. Using this plan as a basis, preliminary work has been done by Bishop Carmichael in Lamoni Stake and Bishop Koehler in Far West Stake, looking to the formation of such organizations.

We believe there is a more general understanding, and consequently a more general observance of the temporal law, and an increasing desire with the Saints to cooperate in their business enterprises, and to this end a desire to effect the relationships therein designed of God.

To be specific—the Saints realize the necessity of the payment of the tithe, the consecration of surplus, and the employment of the remainder of their properties, together with their time, talents, and energies, as stewards of God, so as to secure the greatest good for the greatest number, and that in order to do so there must be the maximum returns from the minimum investments, which means such a cooperation of effort as shall avoid duplication of work and tools, the creation of unjust wants and appetites, or excessive supplies for just wants and needs, and that this must be conceived in love, born of labor, and sustained by sacrifice.

IN APPRECIATION

I have earnestly striven to confer and cooperate with the brothers of the bishopric and of the several quorums where our duties and responsibilities parallel and overlap, and I desire to acknowledge their counsel and assistance in the work of this department.

I feel I cannot speak in too strong terms of commendation of the work of Bishop James F. Keir and Bishop Israel A. Smith, my associates in the Presiding Bishopric.

Brother Keir has rendered very valuable service in supervising the great volume of detail that daily finds its way into the office, and overseeing the issuance of periodical bulletins of information and instruction, designed to promote unity of understanding and procedure among the representatives of the Bishopric in the several stakes and districts. Neither has he spared himself in his efforts to teach the temporal law by correspondence, special articles in church press, and from the pulpit at home and wherever opportunity has afforded in his travels.

The work of Brother Smith has been varied, but mainly has had to do with the many legal questions coming up for solution, which require much time and thought. He has had charge of litigation in which the church has been directly or indirectly interested, besides attending to current matters and details of the office, and looking after numerous legacies, bequests, etc., wherein the church has been remembered. Much money, running into thousands of dollars, has been received from such sources.

We might add in this connection that this method of remembering the church, that is by will, is a splendid manner of proving the love of the Saints, and we recommend it to them for their consideration. The members of the bishopric are prepared to assist and advise in the drafting and proper execution of wills.

We should not fail to express our appreciation of the splendid services rendered by the brothers in the Secretarial, Accounting, and Real Estate Departments of the office of the Presiding Bishopric.

The work of the bishopric in Zion has been under the immediate supervision of Bishop J. A. Becker. Whenever necessary, consultation has been had with the Presiding Bishopric. His faithful service is so much in evidence and so well and generally known that more than a reference thereto would be superfluous.

OFFICE SERVICES AND NEEDS

The Presiding Bishopric and the bishopric of Zion and the several stakes have gladly assisted Saints in finding homes, securing employment, and locating business opportunities.

To render such service more fully and efficiently would require an increase of the number of employees in this department, and to this end we were moving until curtailment of expenses made necessary the reduction of the office forces.

It has been our hope that the members of the Presiding Bishopric have the necessary assistants and so organize their work as to be relieved of the immediate performance of a multitude of detail incident to the work of the department and which has been constantly increasing, so that they might, among other things, more fully undertake the work outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants, particularly section 128, and decide upon some general principles and methods of administration that must first be agreed upon before many of the vexing incidental matters can be properly settled.

Should the conference desire information regarding any phase of the work of this department not herein reported, or more complete detail regarding any matter, in order to determine its action, we shall be happy to furnish the same.

GATHERING

The gathering is on and will continue. The work of the bishopric in connection therewith can be greatly assisted by a closer observation of the law by those desiring to locate in Zion or one of her stakes. Those already located within the borders could contribute to the welfare of the church by referring to the bishopric the inquiries concerning Zion and her stakes, coming to them from the scattered membership, rather than try to advise such members as to the course to pursue.

The heavy responsibilities the gathering imposes we sense and desire to fully discharge. To properly do so we feel keenly the need of a special endowment commensurate with the demand, yet in conclusion we are constrained to reiterate the counsel of the Lord:

"Let your gathering not be in haste. . . . Have all things prepared."

No strange occult force will operate in a twinkling of an eye to transform present human hearts and minds, and social and industrial organizations into a condition where the Saints will be of one heart and one mind and dwell in righteousness with no poor among them. It can only be accomplished by operation of the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Report of the Auditor

The report of the auditing of the Bishop's books on February 28, 1922, has already been reported in the Saints' Herald for August 23. Though it is included in the report to General Conference, we do not here repeat, but refer our readers to the original publication. The supplemental report of the auditor to this conference follows:

President F. M. Smith, and the General Conference; Greetings: Since my appointment to the office of General Church Auditor in May of this year I have tried to discharge the duties of that office to the advantage of the church by preparing accurate accounting data and endeavoring to bring the church financial records to a point where they will at all times represent the true financial condition.

We have found it necessary to make an examination of the records of all church institutions and departments for a period of from two to four years. In some instances we have been compelled to confine our work to balance sheet audits in order to report at this conference. The work should be continued, however, until detailed audits have been made in all departments.

Examinations have been made of the following: Presiding Bishopric, four stake organizations, Sunday School Association, Religio Association, two United Order of Enoch organizations, one cemetery organization, one storehouse, one publishing house, one college, three homes for children and aged, one sanitarium, one laundry company, two reunion committee treasurers' reports.

In addition we have secured information from all industrial concerns in which the church is interested, either of itself or through its organizations, and have prepared statements for your information.

The records of some of the church departments and organizations have been found badly disorganized; others were far from ideal conditions; and most, if not all, were out of agreement so far as dealings with each other were concerned.

With the report we now submit the records have been reconciled as between all departments and organizations, and the combined report represents the true financial condition of the church as we have found it.

Some departments have published reports before auditing, and we offer the following comments upon them as published:

Independence Sanitarium

The report published in the Herald under date of September 13, 1922, is approximately correct. Minor adjustments have been necessary in our examination affecting the operating cost and the values of accounts receivable, etc. These adjustments are being given effect in the business of the present year.

Graceland College

We have been compelled to confine ourselves to a balance sheet audit of the records of the college. Minor adjustments are necessary and will be made during this business year. Further work is contemplated in order to satisfactorily record several financial items.

Presiding Bishopric

Records of the Presiding Bishopric have, at times during the past three or four years, been badly confused; and it has been difficult for the presiding Bishop to prepare statements therefrom that would be accurate in every detail. For this reason the reports that have been published by the bishopric should be considered as what the books indicate rather than absolutely correct statements. In our several examinations at the office of the bishopric we have attempted to adjust all items incorrectly stated and place upon the books all omitted transactions that have come to our attention. In this we have had the hearty support and assistance of the Presiding Bishopric.

There are many adjustments to be placed upon the records at this time—the report of the bishopric we submit gives effect to these adjustments.

Reports not published in the Herald but included in the conference reports as printed, of which we have made examinations, are as follows: Herald Publishing House, General Sunday School Association. As printed they represent the true financial condition as found by us.

Reports of organizations other than those mentioned are presented with this report. We do not feel that other comment is necessary upon our part, but should further information be desired by the conference we shall be pleased to furnish such as we have at hand. Adjustments that have been found necessary, which have not been made upon the records of the several organizations, will be made during the current year.

We suggest to the conference that adequate and competent supervision of all accounting matters be continued for a help to the various departments—for proper control and reconciliation between departments, and preparation of information that may be desired by the conference and church executives.

Respectfully,
A. H. KNOWLTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 29.

Report of Publicity Department

President Frederick M. Smith; Dear Brother Smith: The Publicity Department has now been in operation a little over two years and a half. During that time a continuous effort has been made to build up a church-wide publicity organization to include a regularly authorized local publicity agent in each branch of the church. As yet this organization is by no means complete; however, there are about three hundred branches that have recognized the importance of advertising to the extent of appointing a local publicity agent and the list is constantly growing.

The main office devotes considerable time trying to build up interest in church advertising among the branches and also in helping to improve the class of advertising done. In addition to this all tracts and literature required by the missionaries or inquirers are supplied from this office and charged against the publicity budget. In this way the distribution of our church literature is systematized and properly recorded and followed up.

The office endeavors to correct any misrepresentations that occur in the press, but tries particularly to forestall such misrepresentations by properly informing and making friends of the newspaper men wherever possible. The necessity of such acquaintance is also urged upon all local publicity agents, and their reports indicate some splendid results from the acquaintances they make. There is little disposition on the part of any newspaper or magazine to misrepresent our church, as we have a standing in almost all circles that insures us courtesy and fair treatment. Of course there are a few professional "Mormon baiters" who make their living out of stories—slander which they rehash and sell to the more gullible elements of the public. But they are beyond reach and are of little influence anyway.

As much as possible the publicity work is along constructive and positive lines, and only in case of urgency does the department spend money or effort in the negative.

As is shown by the bishop's report, the Publicity Department tried to help in the curtailing of expenditures during the financial depression this year. Of an allowed budget of $8,000, less than $4,000 was used. With your consent the general publicity agent took a five months leave of absence this spring and summer (without pay of course), and while the work of necessity was slowed up during this time, newspaper acquaintances were made all over the United States and those acquaintances can undoubtedly be turned to good account.

There is no department of the church that does not need publicity. If funds are available this work should be extended and made a more effective ally of our church endeavor. In religion as in business the old saying applies, "It pays to advertise."

September 25, 1922.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR E. MCKIM.

Report of Department of Statistics

During the year 1920 there were 3,827 new baptisms recorded. Besides these there was a gain of 1,361 names obtained in checking up with branches. Nearly all the latter were baptisms not hitherto reported to this office. This shows a total gain of 5,188. Against this gain we had losses as follows: Deaths, 1,630; expelled, 106; carried to unknown, 2,232—a total loss of 4,068, leaving a net gain for the year of 1,120.

During the year 1921, 5,511 new baptisms were recorded; also an additional gain of 1,190 baptisms not hitherto reported—a total gain of 6,701. Losses for the year: Deaths, 2,088; expelled, 202; carried to unknown account, 2,290; corrections (duplicate entries, etc.), 496, making a total of 5,071.

While 1921 thus gave us the greatest number of new baptisms we have recorded in any one year, yet the losses reduced our net gain to 1,630.

The above figures revealed very heavy losses due to the fact in checking with branches the names of many who are dead were found to be still on record. Also during 1920 and 1921 we carried to the unknown account 4,622. Of course this makes a big cut in the net gain. In the past years no provision was made of thus clearing the branch record of the names of people who for years had been lost to the branch. Even yet many branches are carrying names of people whose whereabouts have been unknown to them for years. Under the present plan branches are permitted to transfer such names in the regular manner to the unknown account, this department retaining the items of membership but deducting the number thereof from the total enrollment. In this way a branch clerk is enabled to have, at all times, a clear record relieved of all "lost" members. If something like this had been done previously, the last two years would not have been checked with such heavy losses. If the above unknown were still counted in our net enrollment to December 31, 1921, would read 100,018 instead of 95,496.

For the first six months of 1922 we have recorded 1,490 new baptisms and restored and added old baptisms, 209—a total gain of 1,699. During the same period we have sustained losses of 3,052, a net loss of 1,353, bringing our net enrollment on June 30, 1922, to 94,143. Or if those carried to the unknown were still counted in, our net enrollment would be 100,864.

Owing to the fact that an attempt is being made in all foreign missions to check up the records, this department has not yet been supplied with reports therefrom. In a letter from Brother G. H. Parker, who is serving as recorder of the Australasian Mission, we are advised that their mission shows a net enrollment of 2,093, this being about 600 in excess of the enrollment in that mission as shown by the general records. In determining our present net enrollment, however, we have made no allowance for these 600 additional names, and when the checking up with that mission is completed they will be entered up in the regular way. We expect heavy losses from the European countries when our check is completed. Indications are that 1922 will show about 3,000 new baptisms at the close of the year, as we have already entered 2,421 by August 31.

During 1920-1921, 36 new branch organizations and 28 disorganizations were reported, a net gain of 8. We have a total of 671 branches in the United States and Canada; 74 districts, and 5 stakes. Besides these groups we have many names enrolled in unorganized fields who come under the immediate supervision of the Presiding Patriarch's office.

It is now almost three years since a change was made in the method of gathering and entering data constituting general and local membership records, and so far as we have been advised the present plan is giving universal satisfaction. Difficulties that have been encountered in the transition have been largely overcome and to-day, thanks to the earnest, patient workers serving as branch and district secretaries, we are in check with practically all branches in the United States and Canada, also including Hawaii.

Just as our report is placed in the hands of the printer a report reaches us from Brother J. W. Foster, recorder for the British Mission. He sends us a list of 2,000 known members in that mission and advises us that a list of the names of those whose whereabouts are unknown will follow in a short time. Receipt of the latter will enable us to make a complete check with that mission. Communications from recorders in all the missions indicate that they are hard at work in their determination to make a complete and accurate inventory of the church membership there.

There are a few things which should be clearly understood which have grown out of the changes in the plan of recording. The cost of all forms now used for maintaining both general and local records is charged to this department. In turn we send annual statements of maintenance and supplies to the various branches, districts, and stakes. To these statements most groups have cheerfully responded with remittances. We hold the expense of maintaining general church records should be met from the general church funds. The expense of meeting local records should be met by the local groups. All baptismal, blessing, and ordination certificates formerly issued by various persons are now prepared and sent from this office. For each new name enrolled with any branch, the branch clerk receives a sheet, ready to file in his binder; and to complete the work we prepare the gain and loss sheets, which sheets reveal at a glance net enrollment of the branches.

From the above it will be seen that this department not only prepares the general record but the local records as well, and while we have undertaken clerical work for both general and local (preparing certificates as above mentioned and mailing out all supplies from this department) while yet checking the records with the branch clerks, we have been gradually reducing the amount of help until at present there are only three persons employed in this office.

Finally, may we venture an opinion that notwithstanding so much has been undertaken and accomplished, we feel we are not functioning as a real Department of Statistics yet. We believe this department can and will be of much greater service to the church by relieving some other departments of work that properly belongs here, and to this end we are endeavoring to arrange the work.

September 12, 1922.

FRANK A. RUSSELL.

In an announcement, President Elbert A. Smith read: "All autoists are requested to park their cars one way so as to make room for all."

"So if any of you have your car parked headed both ways, don't do it," suggested President Smith.

Report of Women's Department

REPORT OF AUDENTIA ANDERSON

To the Presidency: The year 1921 seems to have been marked with a period of fairly satisfactory progress for the Women's Department throughout the church.

THE MAY INSTITUTE

Perhaps the most outstanding feature of the year's work was the holding in May of an Institute for Women's Department workers, at Independence. That this most successful undertaking was not available to every organizer, field worker, and local leader in our department is a matter of regret, for we feel that the impetus given to, the broadened understanding of, and larger and better equipment provided for those who did attend can hardly be estimated in words.

STUDY COURSES

A steady effort has been made by the executive to provide suitable study material for the Women's Department circles. Having to consider the fact that the average woman in her home is not a student, has gotten out of the habit of concentrated and directed reading, and that much that is offered in textbooks is too technical to attract her attention, an attempt has been made to select some simple texts and cover them with question outlines which will help the inexperienced teacher to arouse and hold the interest of her women.

We feel encouraged over the result of this attempt, for we have ready or in the hands of the printers, several such courses, covering the following texts:

Psychology. The Mind and Its Education, by Betts.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems. Child Study and Child Training, by Forbush.

Mothercraft. The Mothercraft Manual, by Read.

Sociology. Sociology and Modern Social Problems, by Ellwood.

A Study of Civics. The New Civics, by Ashley.

In preparation we have the following:

Mothercraft for Girls, on the same Mothercraft text by Read.

Elementary Biology. Plant and Animal Children, by Torelle.

Child Nature. A Study of Child Nature, by Harrison.

Child Development. The Individual in the Making, by Kirkpatrick.

Our Food and the Body leaflet course has been revised, and is ready for distribution. The other, Training in Relief and Service, is still in leaflet form.

OTHER EDUCATIONAL MATERIAL

Playlets, presenting some phases of our work in drama form, have been prepared.

HOME AND CHILD WELFARE BUREAU

Sister Lydia Wight, who has supervised this bureau for several years, felt under the necessity of relinquishing the responsibility.

SOCIAL SERVICE BUREAU

This bureau has been without a supervisor since November, 1920. What studies have been carried on under this head, have been supervised by the executive. Outlines in sociology, with occasional editorials and other articles in the column.

YOUNG WOMEN'S BUREAU

Sister Mary Steele, who consented in September, 1920, to supervise this bureau, came actively in charge about the first of last year. This position carries with it the editorship of the Parthenon, the young women's department in Autumn Leaves. This work Sister Steele has carried forward most acceptably, coming out in November with an all-girls' number, for which many extra copies were sold through the activities of the girls themselves.

In midsummer, Sister Steele relinquished her secular position for the purpose of devoting all her time to the Women's Department work. For this the executive were to reimburse her with a living wage. This relation began in August, but early in October, owing to the widening of the field of Sister Steele's opportunity and her desire for greater preparation for her work, she went to Graceland College, where she is striving to qualify and at the same time keeping up her work as supervisor of the bureau, editor of the Parthenon, and general superintendent of girls for the Religio.

MISCELLANEOUS STUDY BUREAU

Sister Lucie Sears has supervised this bureau. She has also given excellent service as organizer for the Massachusetts District.

SOCIAL PURITY

Training must, of necessity, for the present take the form of reading courses. Sister Krahl, our supervisor, has spent much time since her appointment, in examining the varied literature extant and available. In addition, she has been taking a correspondence course in the subject, from the International Purity Association.

A joint council with Sister Krahl, and Doctor Harrington of the Health Department, in September, resulted in a partial crystallization of our plans. Doctor Harrington stated at that time that the part of the social purity program for the year 1920-21 which was, according to our agreement in the summer and fall of 1920, to have been put across by him, had not been accomplished. This was the selection of Government pamphlets suitable to be placed in the hands of every young man in the church, and the work of so placing them.

The present program of the social purity division is as follows:

1. The appointment, after careful and discriminating choice, of one man and one woman instructor in every district or stake.

2. These instructors to prepare for service by taking a normal training course in social purity, outlined and approved by the Women's Department and the Health Department. This course is being most carefully prepared by our supervisor, and will be made adaptable for the use of not only the instructors mentioned, but monitors of Orioles, leaders of Temple Builders, Scoutmasters, Sunday school and Religio teachers, parents, and others who may wish to obtain a scientific background for safely guiding young people in the vital matters of sex and personal purity.

3. Assist the instructors to secure educational slides, films, charts, exhibits, lectures, etc., for use in districts and stakes.

4. Urge the establishment of libraries containing the best texts, to be made available for use in district or branch.

5. Urge all possible cooperation with the recreational department of the church, in pushing the work of wholesome physical activities for young people.

6. Prepare some material for use at district conferences, reunions, etc. For the immediate future along this line, Doctor Harrington is to prepare an article or paper intended for men and boys, and Sister Krahl is to prepare a similar one for women and girls, and together they are to select a set of slides or a chart exhibit suitable for mixed audiences at such gatherings. These were promised for the reunions of 1921.

7. Select a reading course for the boys and girls of the church. Formulate a "pledge" of purity for their adoption after such a course shall have been completed and a satisfactory examination passed.

8. Select a course of study or reading to be recommended to the women's classes.

9. Special work presented at next General Conference.

HEALTH

This division was intended to form a passageway or agency through which some phases of the work of the Health Department of the church could be put over to the women. Sister Laura Mann was appointed supervisor, and combining with this position her duties as nursing director to the church, was carefully planning and organizing her responsibilities. A room in the Women's Building was fitted up for her classes, and here she had her desk and supplies with which to care for the correspondence which resulted. Health records of children, taken by the cradle roll workers throughout the church, came under her examination, and wherever she perceived any indication of abnormality she would write the parents, giving the advice needed, inclosing instructive pamphlets, and placing herself and, through her, the Health Department at the service of the family, so far as could be accomplished through correspondence.

This splendid work was interrupted in June by the news that the appropriations made for the Health Department of the church would not longer provide for her temporal care, and she was under the necessity of seeking remunerative employment elsewhere. Her first plan was to work professionally for two weeks each month, thereby earning enough

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

Conference Business Sessions	947
The Largest Testimony Meeting	950
The Order of Bishops	950
Oratorio Program	951
The Origin of "The Old, Old Path"	952
Ambition and Actualities	952
The Importance of Our Own Ministry	952
Those Who Stagger	953
The Radio as an Adjunct to Conference	953
The Sanitarium Program	954
From the Study Classes	954
A Chinese Missionary at Conference	954
What the Church Proposes to Do With Her Young People, by T. W. Williams'	955
What We Teach and How We Teach It	957
New Era in Women's Work	958
The Local Effect of General Changes	958
Sunday School Department Is No More	959
A Few Points in Church Sunday School History	959
Interesting Debate on the Needs of Sunday School Constitution ..	960
General Conference Songs	960
The Health Department	961
Opening Prayer, by B. R. McGuire	961
Document From Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric	962
Special Young People's Prayer Meeting	962
Causes of Dependency	962
The Evolution of Religion	963
Quotations From Speeches Made in Sunday School Convention	963
Presiding Bishop's Report	964
Report of the Auditor	966
Report of Publicity Department	966
Report of Department of Statistics	967
Report of Women's Department	968
East Jordan, Michigan	970
MISCELLANEOUS	970

to keep her for the next two, which she planned to set aside for this health work. Then came the request that she assume the position of superintendent of nurses at the Sanitarium, which in her consecration she could not refuse, but which has absorbed every moment of time and ounce of strength since July 1. It was with a heavy heart she closed the door of her little office, and boxed her supplies.

In October, Sister Sarah Rodgers Chapman was appointed as assistant to Sister Mann, since which time, in spite of illness both of self and family, she has managed to keep the correspondence incident to our health work up to date. She plans getting in contact with the special work for children over in Kansas City, and we feel sure once the handicaps are overcome, this phase of our work will gradually rise above its period of inception and slow development, and come to be a real factor for good in the interests of our people.

CITIZENSHIP

Early in the year, Sister Dora Young was appointed supervisor of a citizenship division.

CRADLE ROLL

Sister Anne Roberts, general superintendent of the Cradle Roll, came into the work in January of 1921. About that time, too, she concerned herself in the work of stimulating an interest in milk and hot lunches for undernourished children at school. Through her efforts and those of Sister Glines, principal of Columbian School, and the women of various Zionie groups, there was brought about a gratifying gain in weight for many children. This fall, similar work was to have been undertaken there by the Parent-Teacher Association.

Sister Roberts, too, circulated a petition sent to Senator Reed in the interests of the Sheppard-Towner Bill, getting over eight hundred signers. She assisted at the May institute, in exhibits, errands, etc. Gave one public address at that time. Has taken several subjects in the Mothercraft Normal Training Course in the Institute of Arts and Sciences; written a few short articles for publication and was chairman of a "mothers' library" committee, through whose efforts fifty books for mothers were placed in the library.

BIRTH REGISTRATION

Sister Rogene B. Smith, birth registrar, reports a summary of work done by her since her appointment to office as follows:

"As birth registrar for the Women's Department, I submit the following report of work done during my term of office, from April, 1920, to October, 1921:

"About 650 registrations of births.

"About 650 registration certificates filled out and mailed to cradle roll workers.

"About 100 communications written and posted."

Owing to Sister Smith's removal to Denver, she resigned in the fall, and was succeeded by Sister Stella Chapman, who is also acting as assistant to the general cradle roll superintendent. She reports:

"I have registered 347 babies since I was appointed, up to which time 769 had been registered, making a total of 1,116."

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sister Nellie Sampson has acted as general superintendent of this division, since early in the year. She has labored under trying conditions of health and other personal affairs.

LIBRARIAN

Sister Viola Short, general librarian and chairman of Zionie Women's Department Library Commission, reports 103 volumes in the library, twenty-four of which belong to the general executive. An effort will be made from time to time to add new books, and to induce a more general use of those available to the local people.

STAKE WORK

Holden.—Sister Ross reports a gain of three local organizations in her district since last report, making 11 at present. Total membership 217, of which 18 are Orioles and 36 Temple Builders. Three hundred and eighty-three meetings were held, the entire membership engaging in study. Fifteen lectures during the year covered such subjects as health, foods, child welfare, and social purity. She has organized a local in every branch in her stake, though all did not report. They have collected and distributed over five hundred garments, some new and some made over. Also quite a quantity of fruit, jellies, and vegetables were given where needed. Some sewing was done for the Old Folks' Home—4 dozen napkins, 2 dozen dresser scarfs, and $20 towards trays and equipment for the sick ward having been donated.

Kansas City.—Sister Sandy reports a most active organization in her stake. Eleven locals, with a total membership of 440, of which 85 are Orioles and 115 Temple Builders. Two hundred and fourteen members are engaged in study, the subjects covering a wide range, prominent in popularity being Bible research and Book of Mormon. Twelve lectures during the year treated the following topics: Mental hygiene, vocational training, citizenship, child welfare, character building, education, work of women, Women's Department, and social service.

In March, also, a resolution and preambles were presented to the Presidency and Bishopric, asking consideration of the need in Zion for a trained social worker.

That month, too, an arrangement was made with the Herald Publishing House, by which all publications of the department will be sold by that company, the present stock, such as Oriole, Temple Builders, and Centennial Year Books, to be handled on a percentage basis. This has most materially lightened the work of our general office.

In April it was decided to recognize with a special recommendation, those women and girls in Graceland who take Oriole and Temple Builder work in their recreational leadership course.

In September two new phases were introduced into the cradle roll work, viz, an attempt to bring mothers to a realization of the value of milk in the diet of growing children, and the necessity for careful supervision of health of pre-school children.

Resolution and preambles concerning the Children's Home were presented to the First Presidency that month also. These look to an organization designated to place the home more securely upon the basis of a home-finding institution, and of proper supervision after placement.

Other things (done at September-October session) were:

1. Social purity work outlined.
2. Historical collection, and biographies of women, under way.
3. Mary Steele sent to Graceland for further preparation for service.

4. Committee appointed to prepare Zionie Year Book, which materialized in December.

5. Reunion work for 1922 outlined:

6. Zionie Library Commission established: Mrs. M. T. Short, chairman; Mrs. E. Short, Mrs. William Cowan, Mrs. Cox, and Mrs. Pointer, members. In November Mrs. Cox resigned, and Bertha Hulmes was chosen in her place.

7. Annual dues of ten cents per capita for Women's Department members were abolished, and semiannual free-will offerings substituted.

8. Zionie program outlined.

9. Standard of excellence adopted.

In November circular letters addressed to newly baptized women and girls presenting what the department had to offer them, were prepared by Sisters Madison and Steele. Oriole Book was ordered reprinted, as well as other pamphlets of instruction to locals, etc.

In December, a special meeting to consider finance was held with committee from the Presidency, Bishopric, and Twelve. As a result, the office was transferred from the Women's Building to that of the general church office, thus releasing the former building for rental.

Outlines for study on Mothercraft, Psychology, sociology, and Parents' and Teachers' Problems were all prepared before the close of the year.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, for the Executive.

East Jordan, Michigan

The two-day meeting held at East Jordan, September 23 and 24, opened under very favorable conditions with a spiritual social service at 9 o'clock in charge of E. N. Burt and Leonard Dudley.

The speakers throughout the meetings were N. A. Harper, Elder Dudley, David Holley, R. D. Davis, James Davis, E. N. Burt, Allen Schreur, and Arthur E. Stark.

The Saints very kindly provided meals at Elder Hector McKinnon's restaurant.

There was a young people's prayer service at seven o'clock in which the older Saints were invited to attend and the invitation was appreciated by those who could meet with the young.

There was a general prayer service at nine o'clock in which about one hundred twenty-five were present. A collection of $16 was taken at the close to help bear the expenses of Elder E. N. Burt to General Conference.

The music for the meetings was furnished by members of the Northern Michigan District orchestra: Sister Nina Harper, violin; Opal Harper, flute; Alta Harper, cornet; Bessie Harper, orchestra bells; Gladys McKinnon and Irene Washburn, piano; leader, Arthur Starks.

All were, as usual, loath to separate again, but were all the more desirous of making the coming year the best ever. So with many warm and hearty handshakes and wishes for success in both temporal and spiritual matters, we departed till we could meet again in similar gatherings in the spring.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

"I wouldn't have been here at all, but my wife drove me eight hundred miles to this conference," explained one brother. Our sympathies are with the wife, especially if she did it with a Ford.

The sequence of ideas expressed in the songs of the Sunday school convention were significant of the spirit of the meeting. Opening with "Earnest workers for the Master," that earnestness was seen upon the faces of those assembled, as well as strongly marked upon the leaders. "He leadeth me" was the next song prayer before beginning action. After the business session, which was considered a big step of progress by those vastly interested in religious education moving harmoniously with the present policy of the church, the song, "Onward, Christian soldiers," was well chosen.

MISCELLANEOUS

Patroness's Bazaar

The Patroness Society, organized in the interests of Graceland College, announce a bazaar for Armistice Day, November 11. Aprons, towels, pillow cases, etc., are solicited, donations to be sent to Mrs. Charles E. France, Lamoni, Iowa, by November 1.

Here is an excellent opportunity for service from parties interested, and especially from such as desire to help this worthy institution, and who cannot do so otherwise. The college is doing a mighty work in the lives of our young people. Let us one and all show our appreciation by our good works towards its further success. THE COMMITTEE.

Conference Notices

Eastern Maine, at Jonesport, November 4 and 5. At 2.30 p. m., election of officers. Send all reports to Charles F. Cummings, West Jonesport, Maine. We trust all branches and isolated members will endeavor to be present. W. E. Rogers, president.

Kewanee, at Kewanee, Illinois, Saturday, October 21, 1922. District officers and heads of departments, as well as each president, are requested to submit a written report of labors done since the last conference held in June. Branch presidents report to the district president. Other reports should be sent to the district secretary at an early date. All reports should close September 30 and April 30, thus making them uniform in time covered. Those expecting to attend will notify Edward Jones, 926 West Vine Street, Kewanee, Illinois, so that preparation may be made. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois. George Sackfield, president, Matherville, Illinois.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Rachel Knox, of Columbus, Ohio, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed. This sister is suffering from rheumatism.

Home-coming Day at Bevier, Missouri

Sunday, October 22, will be observed as Home-coming Day at Bevier. Arrangements are being made to take care of the physical needs of all visitors. Elder A. M. Baker, the new missionary in charge of the Northeastern Missouri District, will be present, and will begin a series of meetings to last several weeks. Saints throughout the district are invited. J. L. Williams, branch clerk.

Our Departed Ones

MIFFLIN.—Minnis Miffin was born September 15, 1868, at Tilbury, East Kent County, Ontario, Canada. Married Annie Bryden, in March, 1891. Baptized on June 12, 1894. Ordained elder, October 14, 1901. Died at Windsor, September 22. His wife preceded him about a year ago. Leaves five children. He has been one of the branch presidency for years and was held in high esteem.

GOODE.—Charles Frederick, youngest son of John and Elisheba Goode, was born July 3, 1862, at Chagrin Falls, Ohio. Moved to Tabor, Iowa, in 1867, where he made his home until 1908 when he moved to Lamoni. Married Nancy Troth, December 25, 1890. Baptized about thirty years ago. Died at his home in Lamoni, September 30, 1922. Leaves wife, two sons, two daughters, two brothers, and other relatives.

BOE.—Mable Irene, daughter of Gilbert and Olive Boe, was born March 14, 1915, at Senlac, Saskatchewan. Died at Deacon Hospital, Glasgow, Montana, June 9, 1922. Leaves father, mother, two brothers, and four sisters. Funeral from the Saints' church, in charge of Elder D. Chase. Sermon by James C. Page.

KENT.—Erma Christena Kent, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kent, living at Hinsdale, Montana, was born November 16, 1910. Died September 13, 1922. Funeral from Methodist church at Hinsdale, Montana, conducted by James C. Page. The school was dismissed for the funeral of this child.

HERRON.—Margaret Isabelle McKee was born in Platte County, Missouri, near Leavenworth, August 8, 1850. Married John McDonald Herron and moved to Jefferson County, Kansas, about thirty years ago. The latter part of her life was spent in greater Kansas City. Baptized July 2, 1902. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. T. C. Halliday, September 27. Her husband preceded her sixteen years ago. Of their fourteen children, nine grandchildren, and one great-grandson, the following survive: three sons, five daughters, Mrs. F. C. DuRoy, Mrs. L. W. Hayes, J. C. Herron, T. A. Herron, Mrs. T. C. Halliday, Mrs. G. T. Mansfield, Mrs. J. P. Haskin, and D. F. Herron, six grandchildren, and one great-grandson. Funeral from the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, in charge of J. F. Curtis and H. O. Smith. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 a year in advance. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, October 18, 1922

Number 42

Report of the President to Conference

History of official acts the past two years, with some recommendations.

The Presidency

So far as the individual members of the Presidency are concerned, their work has been largely office routine and traveling in the interests of the work in its various aspects, reports of which have usually appeared in the church papers. There has been necessity for considerable traveling, the demand for which is much more acute than some people realize. The President of the church desires to express his appreciation of the able and loyal support of his counselor, Brother Elbert A. Smith.

The Presiding Bishopric

The relations existing between the Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric have been about the same as in the past and we have been in frequent conference when the two leading men of the two quorums were in Independence together, though frequency of travel on the part of both has lessened the number of conferences which were desirable. The activities of the Bishopric are set out in detail in the report submitted by the Presiding Bishop, a careful reading of which the Presidency urges. Under the heading, "Auditorium," the Bishop makes report of the condition of the fund which has been raised and at the close states that "the Presiding Bishopric are still of the opinion that the construction of the auditorium should be further postponed." In this matter, the opinions of the President of the church and the Presiding Bishop do not run parallel, for the President is still convinced that a mistake will be made if further delay is encouraged or advised.

Touching the question of the Sanitarium, it will be noted from the Bishop's report that the extension of the institution as authorized by previous conference has also been delayed by "the present financial condition." The Presidency is disposed to regret this delay, for the demands upon this institution which indicate the necessity for expansion are becoming more pressing.

Transportation Manager

The work of handling the details of railway traffic grew to such proportions that the Presidency desired to relieve themselves therefrom, and on his expressed willingness to accept the appointment, we appointed Brother Granville S. Trowbridge as traffic manager for the church. The Presidency is very much pleased to have an experienced railroad man to handle these transportation matters, and we urge that particularly the members of the ministry having occasion to handle transportation matters do so in connection with this department, for it will be of advantage to us to have all transportation matters handled through the one bureau. His report to us shows in figures that his work in handling applications of our representatives for special concessions has resulted in a marked saving as well as advantage to the church.

We append hereto his report submitted to us under date of September 16:

"By way of report for the Transportation Department from its establishment on February 8, 1922, to date, we advise that we have employed such of our time as was available from other duties in handling requests for information from our membership with regard to transportation matters. Inquiries with regard to freight transportation have not been numerous and I feel sure that this is a field in which we might be of assistance to our members who are buying freight transportation, particularly those who do not feel able to maintain a traffic manager. We could, perhaps, offer valuable advice in the disposition of transportation difficulties in the way of freight rate adjustments, if we were advised with regard to these difficulties. In the matter of passenger transportation we have promptly handled all applications which have reached us for clergy permits and also made ourselves useful whenever opportunity was offered in purchasing tickets and securing the best routes and rates for those making extended trips. The railroads east of the Illinois-Indiana State line and north of the Ohio River, and most of the roads east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio have been unwilling to grant us any courtesy. We may have better success with them another year, as they had already fixed up their ministerial lists prior to the establishment of the Transportation Department. The western roads have most of them been fairly liberal. We have also secured agency for steamship tickets on the Scandinavian-American line and have taken orders for six tickets for our missionaries to foreign lands at a marked saving to the church."

Departments

The activities of the various departments of the church are set out in the reports of the heads of these departments as they will be found in the published conference reports. We feel sure that a better day is dawning for the departments, inasmuch as there is becoming a stronger concerted activity among them which is being worked out by meetings of the department heads with the Presidency as opportunity permits, and these meetings, we hope, will be much more frequent in the future than in the past.

For the superintendent of the Sunday School Department, the Presidency appointed A. Max Carmichael; for superintendent of Department of Women, Mrs. Dora Glines; for superintendent of Religio, T. W. Williams.

Transfer of Church Headquarters

Conference having authorized the transfer of the headquarters, the Presidency and Bishopric took steps to make the transfer, and the details of this have been reported to a large extent in the report of the Board of Publication and also in the Bishop's report, to which we refer attention.

Quorum of Twelve

The members of the Quorum of Twelve have reported more or less regularly and with considerable frequency to the Presidency as their work progressed. The brothers of the Twelve have responded cheerfully to the assignments made by the Presidency in an endeavor to carry out their work in the spirit of the agreement which was reached some three years ago. Several times since last General Conference the Presidency has called the Twelve to Independence for council meetings with the Presidency and Bishopric. Much of the results of the work of these councils has appeared in print, in the form of letters, notices, etc. The longest of these strenuous councils was held in the spring of 1922. The individual members have reported to the Presidency their activities, and from these reports we glean the following:

Gomer T. Griffiths, president of the quorum, has labored diligently in his office, visiting many districts and branches in an earnest endeavor to encourage the Saints. He finds an unfortunate lethargy towards spiritual things in many places and expresses his opinion as to the great need for high priests and evangelical ministers to build up and revivify the local work. For a while his work was supervisory of the activities of the workers among the Indians, and as such he traveled among the Indians of Oklahoma, New York, and Nebraska. He expresses himself as having enjoyed his labors with his fellow workers and is anxious still to do all he can.

Paul M. Hanson, in company with Brother John W. Rushton, in the year 1920 spent most of his time laboring in the interests of the work in Australia and New Zealand. In the early part of 1921, Brother Hanson was at work with a committee on preparing a new edition of the Inspired Version of the Bible, and in addition to having charge of the office work of the Twelve in recent months he has visited a number of district conferences, reunions, etc., his labors taking him to Canada as well as to many of the States of the Union.

John W. Rushton, in company with Brother Hanson, spent the most of the year, 1920, in Australia and New Zealand in the interests of the work there, and since his return has labored under the direction of the Presidency, having preached and lectured in attempting to do his best for the good of the cause, but having kept no account of the statistics. His labors have called upon him to travel extensively throughout the States and Canada, as well as Australia and New Zealand.

James A. Gillen reports that following the conference of 1920 his work carried him into various parts of the country, such as Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Montana, California, Washington, Michigan, and Canada. In January, 1921, in company with Brother Charles Fry, he left for New York City, where he joined Brothers Bishop and Sorden and Mrs. Sorden to sail for England. From then until the summer of 1922 he labored industriously and assiduously in the difficult mission of the British Isles. He has reported regularly and in detail on the conditions as he found them with such recommendations as he chose to make to the Presidency. Since his return to America he has been responding to calls for help here.

U. W. Greene, following the conference of 1920, with Brother Myron A. McConley, had charge of the work of the office of the Twelve, and since giving up that he has been giving his attention to the work among the Indians, where he has labored assiduously. In this capacity he has been called upon to visit Michigan, Ontario, Oklahoma, Nebraska, etc. Beside this Indian work he has, as have a number of others of the Twelve, given attention to the adjustment of difficulties in various places in the interests of harmony. He has reported in detail to the Presidency with regard to the work among the Indians, and he is alert to the necessity for a more intelligent and persistent application of effort to the peculiar work among this people. This report he made before his recent severe illness which has, of course, totally incapacitated him for work for the present.

Myron A. McConley was for a time associated with Brother Greene in the office work of the Twelve, but on request of the Presidency he, in company with Brother J. W. Davis and wife, went to Australia and took charge of the work there. He has been very industrious and has reported at length and in detail on the condition of practically every branch in Australia, which he has visited personally. He is still there and active in the interests of the cause.

J. F. Curtis has labored in many parts of the country, cheerfully responding to every call made upon him by the Presidency to go anywhere needed and undertake the tasks of adjustment, etc. Besides this he has given a great deal of attention to meeting in debate opponents of the work.

R. C. Russell has reported in detail upon his work, which has been largely confined to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario in Canada, though he has visited some of the reunions and district conferences as the Presidency has called upon him to do. He reports having been able to organize some new branches in this new ground, but expresses his appreciation of the difficulty of the work there and gives suggestions in regard to the training of those who might be called upon to labor under similar conditions. For the opening up of the work in the Province of Quebec he suggests that two or more young men able to speak the French language be given a tenting outfit and a vehicle to carry it from place to place. He expresses his appreciation of the congenial relations which have existed between him and the brothers of the missionary force.

Thomas W. Williams during the year 1920, and the first half of 1921, accompanied the President of the church on a tour of inspection among the churches of Great Britain, Europe, and Palestine, and from June, 1921, to March, 1922, he was engaged in assisting Brother Gillen in the supervision of the work in the British Isles Mission. Since March, 1922, he has labored in various parts of the United States as demands for his work indicated. He states that the reunions attended were of a high order and very successful and that the people generally seem ready for a general step forward, and he expects they will respond to a call to move to higher ground. In addition to his activities as apostle, he has given attention to the work of the Religio Department, of which he is superintendent.

William M. Aylor presented his resignation to the Presidency in the fall of 1921, which was accepted, and notice thereof published in the Saints' Herald as follows:

"This is to notify the church at large that William M. Aylor has filed with the Presidency his resignation as an apostle and member of the Quorum of Twelve. After due consultation with members of the Quorum of Twelve, the resignation has been accepted."—Saints' Herald, October 18, 1921.

C. A. Butterworth, because of ill health, has been released by the Presidency from active work, but he has continued to manifest a deep interest in the welfare of the church.

The Auditor

It became apparent to the Presidency that Brother R. B. Trowbridge should be released as church auditor, but we decided not to take the step before laying the matter before the joint council. This was done last spring, and after Brother Trowbridge was given opportunity to be heard as extensively as he might desire, not only before the joint council, but the High Council as well, his release was effected, and the Presidency has appointed Brother A. H. Knowlton to serve in that capacity. Brother Knowlton has done splendid work in giving us an audit of the various church business offices, and his report and comment on the affairs of the Bishop's office will be found in another place.

Local Work

The Presidency has through regularly received reports endeavored to keep in touch with the developments of the local work in various parts of the world, and by the reports from the district presidents we have kept in touch with these conditions. Everywhere it is apparent that more workers are needed, and there should be some effort made to arouse a greater interest on the part of the priesthood throughout the church in pastoral and local work, as well as in missionary efforts carried on by the local men.

Graphic Arts Bureau

The Presidency desires to call attention to the work of the Graphic Arts Bureau, which has grown quietly to astonishing proportions, and its utility to the general cause is apparent to all those in touch with it. We feel that it has demonstrated its usefulness in the work of the church representatives to justify giving it substantial support. So far, the bureau has been carried by its friends. Concerning the work of the bureau and as an indication of its growing field, we append hereto a document submitted to us on September 30 by Albert Knowlton, the secretary:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 30, 1922.

"MR. F. M. SMITH;

"Dear Brother: In line with our verbal conversation a short time ago I wish to give you a brief resume of our work with the Graphic Arts Bureau and the needs of the same as I see them.

"Since the last General Conference we have secured a number of slides and negatives, mostly by gift, from those interested in the line of work we had undertaken.

"These slides were grouped in sets upon one subject as much as it was possible. Of course it has been impossible for us to use all the slides we have received because of the wide range of subjects.

"We have completed about twenty sets of slides, however, and have used them since completed.

"We did not anticipate the demand for slides by the church missionaries and societies that we have had, and it is needless for me to say we have been unable to satisfy the demand with our small number; however, we have kept them on the go and made good use of what we have had.

"I cannot say just how many times they have been used, but you may know that they have been used to the limit by the fact that we have had certain sets of slides billed for two months in advance.

"The work of the Graphic Arts Bureau has been confined almost entirely to the slide work during the last two years.

"In addition to furnishing the few sets of slides we have, I have loaned and sold to those who have requested them, odd slides for the completion of the slide sets of which they are owners.

"The desire for slides is not confined to this country. We have sent a number of sets to Canada and we have inquiries at the present time from England, Australia, and Canada.

"From my experience with the effort along this line during the two years I would feel like recommending to the conference that action of some sort be taken to supply the constant demand for slides and photos, particularly along church lines.

"I feel that there are good opportunities for the use of slides and I know that many of the missionaries know it to be a fact. I might mention the fact that during the efforts being made in Jackson County of late by Brother J. W. A. Bailey and others, they have constantly used slides, and Brother Bailey tells me he has a good crowd when they are used.

"The fact that the story that is being told can also be visualized in the mind of the hearer is always much more interesting than being left to draw conclusions of their own.

"I think the conference should be urged to take measures for the extension of this work and its upkeep.

"I thank you for the assistance and valuable contributions to the bureau during the past two years.

"Sincerely,

"ALBERT KNOWLTON."

The Stakes

The work in all of the stakes seems to be progressing well, though the indications are that there will be necessity for reorganization of the work in one or perhaps more of these local organizations. It is pleasing to note the activities of some of the stake bishops, particularly in their earnest endeavor to promote our social reforms. And why not? Should not the stakes be leaders in moving out into the fields of the social reforms we as a church stand for?

Sunday School Superintendent

In the month of July, 1921, Brother Gomer R. Wells presented his resignation as superintendent of the Sunday School Department, and after having given the matter prayerful and careful consideration, the Presidency appointed Brother A. Max Carmichael to fill the vacancy. The work that Brother Carmichael has done in reorganizing the Sunday school will be found indicated in Brother Carmichael's report, to which attention is invited. We are in full accord with his efforts to promote the department of religious education.

Standing High Council

It will be remembered that the General Conference of 1920 approved the recommendation of the Presidency touching the reorganization of the Independence Stake and the Standing High Council of the church. Owing to the press of many things, no immediate action was taken in this connection, and during the balance of the year of 1920 and 1921 the old council continued to function as best it could, by substituting for members not available for service. However, acting under the authority of the General Conference, on February 15, 1922, the resignation of members who for various reasons found it impracticable to respond to the demands of the High Council work was accepted, and the Presidency called the council together with a view to reorganizing. Of the old council there were found five in position to continue their service to the church in this capacity, namely: Joseph A. Tanner, Samuel Twombly, Richard J. Lambert, Walter W. Smith, and George H. Hulmes. These were retained as members of the new council, and the Presidency, after careful and prayerful consideration of the matter presented the names of J. A. Becker, J. M. Cockerton, J. F. Garver, R. V. Hopkins, M. H. Siegfried, I. A. Smith, and N. Carmichael to fill the vacancies existing in the council. These brothers indicated their willingness to accept, and on February 19, 1922, before an assembly of the priesthood of Zion the reorganization of the council as above set forth was approved and the new members set apart by ordination to this office. The Presidency, therefore, presents this statement to the General Conference in the nature of a report for the approval or disapproval of the conference as the case may be.

Graceland College

The work of the college has been fully reported in the report made to the trustees by the college authorities and by them submitted to the Presidency and which will be found in the printed reports. We ask a careful reading of this report, for the Presidency feels that we cannot too heartily commend this institution as one of the powerful agents for the work of advancement of the church. In reading the report we suggest that you note particularly the statement concerning the urgent demand for a gymnasium and their request for a $15,000 appropriation to build this gymnasium now. The President very heartily approves and recommends the approval of this expenditure. In this connection it will be well to report on the matter of a college building, which by the General Conference was approved and referred to the Presidency and Bishopric with power to act. The reading public of the church has been well informed on the accomplishment of this object, as the building has been erected and is being utilized and is proving of great benefit to the work of that institution.

The financial status of the college is also submitted in the report of the trustees. In this connection it is well for the Presidency to mention once more the question of the Religious Education Department. We cannot but feel that this department is bound to be of great service to the church, and yet it has not been developed to the extent that we should like to see it. The activities of this department have been quite extensively reported at different times in the church papers, but one aspect of it we wish to call attention to.

It will be recalled that in the early part of the year, 1922, the Presidency made a call for applicants for this course on the part of those who were willing to devote themselves to preparation for activity in the church, in missionary or local work. In addition to the published report, we addressed a letter to various men throughout the church asking for the submission of names of candidates who in their opinion would be good timber for this course. At the request of the President, President George N. Briggs has summarized the result of this published notice and the individual letters in a letter addressed to the Presidency, dated July 22, 1922. This report of the president of the college reflects a situation in the church that the Presidency does not like to see. In our opinion, the response should have been far greater than that which was had, and we are wondering what are the causes underlying. President Briggs's summarized report follows:

"PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,

"Dear Brother: In conformity with your request I herewith make report of the matter of the replies from your letter dated April 18, 1922, and sent to the men of the church in a position to assist in the very important matter of bringing to the attention of the qualified young people of the church the matter of preparation for church work.

"Under date of April 18, 1922, you wrote as follows:

"Dear Brother: No doubt you have already noted the call for applications for the Religious Education Class of next year, published in the Herald under date of January 18, 1922. We are anxious to make the training in that department the most profitable possible. To do this we must have not only an efficient institution, but the best student material we can secure.

"We are aware that many of our most promising men and women are reluctant to place their applications for this training, due to a sense of modesty on their part. If in your field (district or branch) there are those who in your opinion should have this training, but who are reluctant in handing in their application, will you kindly furnish the First Presidency a list of their names?

"Very sincerely yours,

"THE FIRST PRESIDENCY."

"The following brothers responded to that request, submitting from one to seven names each for consideration by the Presidency for preparation for this most important piece of work: J. H. Beaudin, Providence Bay, Ontario; Alma Campbell, McGregor, Michigan; W. S. Shea, DuBois, Pennsylvania; D. L. Allen, Deer Lodge, Montana; E. C. Kibby, Perry, Iowa; E. K. Evans, Grand Rapids, Michigan; D. J. Williams, Burlington, Iowa; D. W. Metz, Saint Marys, Ohio; Ralph Murdock, Rich Hill, Missouri; W. S. Macrae, Warrensburg, Missouri; E. J. Giles, Chariton, Iowa; J. F. Garver, Lamoni, Iowa; R. S. Salyards, Saint Joseph, Missouri; T. C. Kelley, Independence, Missouri; Joseph H. Reed; A. B. Phillips, Independence, Missouri; Warren McElwain, Lansford, North Dakota; John T. Scannell, Durango, Colorado; Archibald Begg, Vinal Haven, Maine; Wesley W. Richards, Davenport, Iowa.

"Trusting the information contained in this report will meet your requirements,

"Very truly yours,

"G. N. BRIGGS."

[At this point President F. M. Smith stated this is a partial report to the conference, but presented nothing further at the time.—EDITORS.]

Early Zion

Early in the spring of the year the Independence Religious Dramatic Club was formed and plans laid to present a pageant at the reunion. When the reunion was postponed the presentation was arranged for General Conference. A rather elaborate plot was outlined concerning the early settlement of Independence, the coming of the first branch, the warfare between selfishness and service, and the inspiration of truth.

In the early summer Sister Vida E. Smith came to Independence and those interested quite gladly turned over to her the drafting of the actual pageant which was presented at the General Conference tabernacle on Saturday evening, October 7.

The story concerns a branch coming from the East to Independence, a prayer meeting en route, the settlement in Zion. The stage setting was very good and the costuming was rather remarkable. Reginald Smith, the youngest son of our late president, Joseph Smith, and the grandson of Joseph the Martyr, took that part. The music was arranged by Joseph H. Anthony, of Lamoni, with strains from old church hymns running through the score expressing the spirit of those early days. It was rendered by the enlarged Auditorium Orchestra and was quite a remarkable presentation in every way and illustrates how dramatic talent may well be turned to represent history worth remembering and spiritual idealism instead of the usual poor melodrama so often selected by dramatic clubs.

Not a Monarchical Government

In the weekly HERALD for October 11 in the statement of the conference minutes there appears a somewhat serious error. A statement is made that Elder A. H. Christensen argued for a monarchical form of government. We already have one or two inquiries in the matter and it is only fair to Elder Christensen and the church to add that what he argued was that he had been among a people who believed in a patriarchal form of government with a chief. Administration in the church, he argued, belonged to the chief executive, the prophet, seer, and revelator to the church. Our form of government is patriarchal or kingly in that it is the kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven. Our form of government places the lawmaking powers in heaven, the law of God being manifested to the church through his prophet.

He also expressed a fear in transferring these prerogatives of the prophet to a democratic administration, for a purely democratic government would not be the kingdom of our God and his Christ. In this he also quoted Doctrine and Covenants 100: 4.

Because of some possible misunderstanding Bishop McGuire, who followed him, at once took up this point on behalf of the church. He urged that if one thing is well settled in this church it is that we stand for common consent. Men of God were inspired to write the Constitution of the United States which establishes a democratic or republican form of government; at least one in which the rights of the people are fully protected and recognized. He added that no revelation becomes a rule of action until passed by the quorums and the body; that it is ill-advised to consider a communication, because it is submitted that it is therefore a communication from God. Nothing is done in vain, and the provision that the revelation be reviewed by the quorums and by the conference is because there is a reason for it.

It will be seen from this that a very different construction is placed upon Brother Christensen's remarks; also that any possible misunderstanding with regard to the position of the church was at once made clear by the statement of Bishop McGuire.

The above is taken entirely from our notes made at the time and should have been included in the earlier statement.

Conference Business Sessions

Tuesday, October 10

When the conference met at 2.15 the document submitted by the President on the previous Monday as a revelation to the church was made the principal order of the day. President E. A. Smith first reported for the Presidency and expressed his willingness to work with and accept the men named, and that he had evidence of the call of two of these men and on behalf of the Presidency accepted the document. The Twelve reported as follows:

"Whereas, after prayerful and earnest consideration of the document presented to the General Conference October 2, by President Frederick M. Smith, there appears to be a disparity between the status and functions of the Quorum of Twelve as stated in the aforesaid document and the status and functions of the Quorum of Twelve as found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as per the following citations:

"Sections 104: 12, 13; 105: 12; 120: 3, 4; 122: 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14; and as interpreted by the First Presidency, accepted by the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric and afterwards approved by the General Conference and included in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 123: 23, therefore,

"Be it resolved, That under these circumstances we regretfully decline to accept the communication of President Frederick M. Smith presented to the General Conference October 2, as a revelation from God.

"This action was unanimous."

The Seventy also reported that in joint session the following resolution was adopted by a vote of 41 to 25:

"Resolved, That after due consideration of the paper placed before the conference and quorums of the church by President Smith, whereby certain changes of the personnel of leading quorums are to be authorized if said document shall be indorsed by the quorums and by the church,

"And after careful consideration of the unusual circumstances involved in the presentation of said paper, and in the absence of sufficient apparent reasons supporting the wisdom of such changes at this time, and under prevailing conditions;

"And in consideration of the utter lack of convincing spiritual witness and testimony that said paper represents the will and voice of the Lord in this matter, we hereby report that we cannot accept it as such."

Several of the Seventy submitted a report setting forth the views of the minority and signed by twelve of them to the following effect:

"Whereas, when the document from President Smith was presented to the Quorum of Seventy there was presented a document from the Quorum of Twelve asking us to defer action on the document from the President of the church until action could be had on their document:

"Again on October 9 the Quorum of Seventy were discussing the document from the President; the Quorum of Twelve again asked the Quorum of Seventy to defer action until an invitation could be extended to the President to meet with the Quorum of Twelve and Seventy in Joint Council to discuss our problems. The President of the church courteously declined to meet with us, but the Twelve and Seventy met in Joint Council. The Twelve proceeded to explain the matter from their viewpoint. We respectfully present as a minority report of the action of the Seventy the following:

"We verily believe the document presented by the President is a revelation from God to the church and should be approved and adopted as such."

The Order of Bishops voted to adopt.

The Order of Evangelists voted to accept the document for what it purports to be.

The High Priests had reported under date of October 4 that their vote to adopt was 55 to 13.

The Elders reported adoption by a vote of 115 for and 48 against, with 14 not voting.

The Aaronic priesthood reported adoption by a vote of 46 to 41 with 9 not voting.

There was considerable discussion over the report of the minority views of a portion of the Seventy, and various motions were made. But a substitute was offered by President E. A. Smith to adopt the document.

President E. A. Smith stated that on account of the strain of the conference he did not feel able to preside, so called to the chair Elder J. A. Tanner. In answer to inquiry statement was made that the bishops had inquired of the chair whether the resubmission or return of the document to the quorums on October 6 was a resubmission for reconsideration by the quorums, which would permit them to vote separately and was advised that it was. It will be noted that the patriarchs likewise took separate action, but the High Priests' Quorum did not again discuss, but left it rest upon their earlier action.

The balance of the session was taken by discussion by Elder Daniel Macgregor, of the Seventy, at considerable length reviewing recent historical events and considering the details of the document. Shortly prior to adjournment Elder Walter W. Smith secured the floor, which he surrendered at 5 p. m. to permit adjournment. Elder Smith spoke very strongly in favor of the adoption of the document as a revelation. He placed great stress on the presumption of its authenticity, that it came through the proper channel, and argued the justification of the manner of its presentation and its details. The conference adjourned until 10 a. m. the following morning. This automatically cancelled the two items already on the program for that morning—the sermon by G. R. Kuykendall in the tabernacle and Audentia Anderson in the Stone Church at 10.45. Arrangements, however, were made for Elder Kuykendall to deliver his sermon on Thursday evening.

Wednesday, October 11

A short prayer meeting was called at 9 a. m. for thirty minutes of prayer.

Apostle James A. Gillen was suddenly overcome with a nervous collapse and was taken by two of his associates to a neighboring house and thence home. He was able to return for a short time to the afternoon session. Report also came that Elder U. W. Greene had materially improved from his long illness with malaria.

At the opening of the session on Tuesday the credentials committee reported additional items to their original report to the conference. These items were referred back to them, so delegates could make correction. To-day it was returned to the conference and it was found included some names as delegates who had been put on the list through some unusual legislation in one of the districts. Though some confusion resulted, the report of the committee subject to correction was adopted by a vote of 236 to 57. This was then followed by a motion to remove the names placed on the list, who were not chosen as alternates to the delegates present. After a short discussion this motion obtained.

Elder W. W. Smith was then granted the floor to continue his discussion in favor of the adoption of the document submitted. His arguments were extensive, though he had stated when he arose on Tuesday that he would speak briefly. It was now that he spoke at length, reviewing the document in its presentation in detail and referring back to church history, giving many quotations and citations. At 11.45 he yielded the floor, which was secured by Elder John W. Rushton, who still held the floor when adjournment was taken for noon.

The afternoon session, as had the morning session, continued with J. A. Tanner in the chair. Prayer was offered by Bishop J. A. Becker, after which John W. Rushton continued his speech and concluded with a motion to refer the whole matter to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. The motion was entertained and the floor secured by Elder J. F. Curtis, who stated he was in favor of the motion to refer. The chair was asked to rule whether or not the adoption of a motion of reference would be final and that no report to the body would be necessary. The chairman said that was not his understanding, but that they would report back. In this Elder Curtis, who had momentarily yielded the floor to allow this ruling to be made, concurred.

Elder L. G. Holloway, of the Seventy, stated that quorum action was desirable, but urged that it should be to individual quorums rather than to a joint session.

President E. A. Smith then arose as a matter of personal privilege to state the reasons that President F. M. Smith had declined to accept a previous invitation of the Twelve and Seventy to meet with them. The invitations were read by him. He then stated orally that in a conversation with the President on the preceding day President F. M. Smith had stated there were two reasons for not accepting: first, he did not care to plead for the document, but was content to let it stand or fall on its merits; second, that the character of the statements from the two quorums to him indicated that they believed him responsible for the state of disorder prevailing.

Elder C. E. Wight, of the Lamoni Stake Presidency, argued against referring and was followed by Elder F. F. Wipper, of the Seventy, who argued for reference to the quorums. Elder Lonzo Jones, of Graceland College, was opposed to referring. The vote was then taken and resulted in 336 for and 198 against, thus adopting the motion of reference. The conference adjourned at 4 p. m. to meet on Thursday at 2 p. m.

Thursday, October 12

The opening of this session found President F. M. Smith in the chair for the first time since Wednesday, October 4. After the reading of the minutes and a few items of business a report was presented as follows:

"October 12, 1922.

"To the General Conference: In response to action of the General Conference on yesterday, referring matter before the conference to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, we desire to report that the Presidency met with the Twelve and Seventy at 10 a. m., to-day, continuing in session for about an hour. President F. M. Smith presided over the meeting. Questions were asked of the President and answers given; some legislation was attempted, but no progress was made, and the meeting adjourned without any action being taken.

"ELBERT A. SMITH,

"For the Presidency."

President F. M. Smith ruled that this brought the matter before the body as it existed before it was sent on yesterday to the quorums.

Then he proceeded to make a few brief statements on the subject. He said some questions had arisen as to the use of the word inspiration as used in the document. Acting as the president and sustained as the prophet of the church, he sought to be open to the direction of God, and acting upon what he believed to be inspiration from this source, had presented to the church the document before them.

He believed that after ten days of deliberation the conference ought to be ready to vote and decide the issue. In fact, he hoped that a time for taking the vote would now be set.

A motion was without debate carried to take the vote at 4 p. m. to-day.

Speeches were by vote limited to ten minutes.

Elder George Harrington, of the high priests, spoke against adoption of the document as a revelation.

Elder J. F. Curtis, of the Twelve, spoke against adoption.

Elder Cyril E. Wight, high priest, was the next speaker, in favor of adoption.

Elder T. W. Williams, of the Twelve, seeking to eliminate all reference to personality and to express his desire in a vote according to his conscience, felt that he could not accept the document.

Elder George F. Barraclough, of the high priests, was in favor of adoption.

Elder E. E. Long, of the Seven Presidents of Seventy, spoke against adoption.

Elder Lonzo Jones, of Graceland, followed, being in favor of adoption.

Elder F. F. Wipper, of the Seventy, was opposed to adoption.

Elder Charles F. Putnam, of the elders, a missionary, wanted more light but evidently would not vote against adoption.

Bishop J. A. Koehler, of the high priests, was ready to vote for adoption.

Bishop B. R. McGuire, presiding bishop of the church, was the next speaker. He said he was not as yet in a position to vote for acceptance.

Elder M. A. Etzenhouser, of the high priests, secured the floor at 3.58 p. m. and was favorable to adoption.

The motion was made that when the vote was taken it be by ballot.

Another motion was that a yea and nay vote be taken. This, it was ruled, means a delegate vote.

A rising vote was taken resulting in 265 for and 228 against, thus requiring the yea and nay vote.

The conference adjourned 45 minutes, that the vote might be taken by the delegations.

Reassembling at 5 p. m. the vote was taken by delegations, and then the ex officio vote followed, giving a total vote of 656 for, and 452 against.

At the close of the session yesterday, Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths asked for a few minutes to say a parting word ere he left for his home, where his wife lingers in illness between life and death. He told the audience he had always stood for common consent and still stood for it. He was not going home dejected, but with full faith and confidence in the triumph of the cause. His apostleship, he insisted, had not been taken from him, but the right to officiate in it was abrogated by the action of the conference. He wished the Saints all success and felt relieved that he might now go to his suffering wife in peace. It was his desire to be enrolled on the records of the High Priests' Quorum and hoped ever to be true to his trust.

President Elbert A. Smith said about the best way the audience could express the universal appreciation felt concerning the honorable life and work of the brother was to sing, "God be with you till we meet again." This was done and a benediction offered by Elder Walter W. Smith.

Friday, October 13

At the opening of the morning business session at 10 a. m. with President F. M. Smith in charge, President E. A. Smith arose to make a few remarks concerning the situation. He was followed by John W. Rushton and then briefly by President F. M. Smith. This followed immediately after the opening exercises and the speeches are here set forth as reported:

Statement of President Elbert A. Smith

It might seem presumptuous for me as a counselor to advise the people when the President of the church is here and in his place. It might seem presumptuous for me to presume to advise him publicly before the people. If so, I will take my rebuke in the time of its administration.

What I have to say I say from a feeling of compulsion. I feel I would say it if it were the last thing I did on earth. And if it would accomplish the results that I desire I would be willing that it should be the last thing I did on earth.

I believe it to be one of the duties of the Presidency to unify the high priesthood. We are presidents of the high priesthood first and, in a way, because of that, of the church. I say I believe it to be one of our duties to unify the high priesthood. We have not yet succeeded in doing that. Perhaps we are not good at unifying. Perhaps you are hard to unify. Perhaps both are true. But it seems to me that if presently there does not come more unity the time will come when we of necessity must step aside and permit you to select some one else who can perform that work.

I believe that our division has been due to several factors, two of which I will mention. One is the thousand never-resting, poison-dripping tongues of rumor. I have found rumor to be a liar. I do not believe any rumor any more until I go directly to the one affected and find out his version of the story before I believe it or tell it. But rumor has been busy on both sides.

I think perhaps another factor is misunderstanding and a misapprehension. I know that the President who sits here in his chair has a side to his character that some of you have never seen. I cannot say where the fault is. Perhaps some have been too busy thinking and speaking about his failings, which he admits he has, and have never or seldom paused at any time to think or speak about his virtues. It may be that he has kept that side concealed from you and has drawn himself into himself and isolated himself from you and shown you only the austere side of his nature. But when he came into the stand Sunday morning as I was to preach to this audience and offered a childlike and humble prayer for me, he did something for me that he could not have done by compulsion in a thousand years. I wish that he could in some way make every one of you feel that he is back of you and praying for you as he did me, and that he could take you all into a heart of love as big as you all admit his intelligence to be.

It may be true also that you have some traits that President Smith has not clearly perceived. It may be that some have worked from ulterior motives, but I believe the majority of the priesthood to be clean and honorable men. I know that some of the men who voted against that revelation went through hell before they reached their decision. You can see it in their faces. They acted from conscience. Such men are too valuable to lose.

My plea is that the President and the priesthood will unite to forget and forgive all past wounds. If there is any one sentence in this document that we can all say is from God it is that closing sentence, "Let contention cease." And there is nothing in scripture, neither decalogue nor beatitude more true, more beautiful, than that statement that no man can assist in this work except he be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity.

I long to see the day when our President will stand up as our prophet, embracing in his love and leadership all the priesthood, when all will be rallied around him in one solid phalanx. If I do not see that day before I die, I will die a disappointed man. Perhaps I am overanxious. I am willing to fight the world, but I cannot fight my church. There is no place in this church for party government. The Presidency must be the Presidency of all the priesthood. I hope we can find the basis of common action and go forward, and find it speedily. If I have been overanxious, forgive me.

Statement of John W. Rushton

The events of the recent days, as intimated by our much-esteemed brother who preceded me, certainly have left marks upon some of us which probably never will be erased. It has been my intention to take advantage of the first opportunity which should present itself to ask the privilege of making some remarks upon this matter, for much against my inclination and my usual disposition I have been crowded into a public position which has been very distasteful to myself; for those who know me best will admit easily, I believe, that this sort of experience is one that I do not like.

I went into the ministry of this church when I was seventeen years of age, being ordained to the office of priest under the direction of the late Brother James W. Gillen. I labored as a local man until I was twenty-six years of age, devoting all my spare time and spare money to the distribution of tracts, preaching on the streets, and filling appointments under the rota plan of the Manchester District, doing all I could for the building up of what I believed then and still believe to be the kingdom of God.

When twenty-six years of age I left my newly married wife and a young child of nine months and went up into Scotland, where no one looked upon me with favor.

When I was twenty-eight years of age I was called into the apostolic quorum. I was young and inexperienced, perhaps as young as any of the men mentioned in this document. I have done my best. I never shirked my duty. I never said No, when asked by the Presidency to go anywhere. My wife never sent for me to come home under any circumstances and some were very pressing.

To stand, therefore, in this congregation as we have had to do recently and take the position which has been taken is not a matter of choice. It is not a matter of selfish desire for publicity. It is a matter of conscience, of the deepest kind. But the battle is over. This people has spoken. Vox populi, vox Dei is the essential principle of our parliamentary rule of the government of common consent.

So far as I am concerned, and I speak for the brethren of the Quorum of Twelve, I am sure, I have no disposition to resign, even though that has been intimated and circulated as suggested in our brother's speech. We shall play the game according to the rules of Christian ethics, and continue to do our best for the advancement of this work as long as God and the people may wish us so to serve. Whatever ability, whatever talent, whatever gift or experience we may have gotten and have in our keeping, shall be consecrated to the kingdom of God, because this is bigger than life.

I want to say so far as the men who are coming into the quorum are concerned, not one word has been raised in criticism against any one of them by the men of the quorum. They shall be welcomed and received by us without any hesitation, with a heart of love and with the fullest confidence. The best we have will be at their disposal if they may wish to draw upon it for their good or the good of the work. We shall unite with them with a spirit of love and union and confidence and freedom, and hope that the high traditions of the apostolic quorum may be maintained in the days and years which are yet to come.

It is only natural that we feel deeply grieved and touched with emotion that sometimes unsteadies the train of thought and probably makes logic and grammar almost worthless, but these men who leave us, one of them at least, has been a father to me. I met him first when I was a boy, and he has advised and counseled me and has been one of the best friends I have had in this church. The other men have grown up to be friends to us. Men cannot live together and work together and play together without becoming very deeply attached to each other, and as the places of these men are left vacant and the consciousness of their work only lingers with the memory of their names, I hope you will believe us when I tell you that we feel lonely, and their going out is a loss to us that will take a long time to overcome. I want you to believe if you will that in spite of all the ebbing and flowing of the tides of battle, now that the conference has spoken and approved, and I am glad it has, of the document presented to us by the President of the church, so far as we of the quorum who yet remain are concerned, we pledge the loyalty and support of the quorum to the program that is being put forth by the church to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

Statement of President Frederick M. Smith

I do not wish to bear a testimony. All I have got to say is that I have fought a battle with myself and as a result of that battle I find my harness settling back into place. I am on the job. I hope you know what that means. It has been a battle for me. The introduction of these speeches at this time has been quite unexpected to me. I am glad they were made. I appreciate the expressions of loyalty that come from both sides. Without some such assurance or expression of loyalty, it would have been a difficult task to take up the arduous proposition of carrying on the work with a divided priesthood. I shall do my part. I trust that the Lord will help. I hope we are through the surf, but I do not imagine that we are on entirely smooth waters yet. But if we are united I have no doubt about the ultimate outcome. The ship of Zion will go into smooth waters.

Returning to the business of the conference, a report of Richard B. Trowbridge, who was sustained as church auditor at the last General Conference but who was released by action of the Joint Council early in the present year, was referred to as being on the table. The question was raised, whether or not it should be read to the assembly. A motion was made to refer to the Joint Council. To this there was some debate and Elder Daniel Macgregor offered as a substitute that it be referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair. This carried and President Smith referred it to Daniel Macgregor with power to choose the other two members of the committee. Elder Macgregor chose Nelson Wilson and Charles Putnam.

The President then proceeded to read his message to the conference, which includes a history of his work and his relation to the quorums and their activities. He stated at the close that this was a partial report. We print in this issue all that was presented to the conference.

A report from the Twelve concurring in the ordination of the following as evangelical ministers was read: A. R. Manchester, Akron, Ohio; John F. Martin, Kirtland, Ohio; A. E. Stone, Buffalo, New York; John Suttill, Providence, Rhode Island. These were approved separately by the conference.

The Presidency recommended the ordination of Gomer T. Griffiths as evangelical minister and the assembly concurred unanimously.

A resolution prevailed that the document accepted as a revelation be printed in the Doctrine and Covenants, and that the ordination of the brothers named be provided for. This prevailed.

Statements from the brothers affected by the changes in the quorums were heard.

Brother Clyde F. Ellis was not present, being in the Society several, but Brother H. W. Savage testified of having felt several years ago that this was the proper place for Brother Ellis.

Elders J. F. Garver, D. T. Williams, Frank H. Edwards, Edmund J. Gleazer, Roy S. Budd, called to be apostles, all spoke fervently and to accept the call.

Elder Floyd M. McDowell, called to the Presidency, also expressed willingness to accept.

At the beginning of the second business session of to-day the President stated that it seemed wise to attend to the ordinations provided for, while the spirit of good fellowship engendered by the morning service continued so strongly.

The brothers named, present at the conference, were invited to the platform and ordained as follows:

Elder Floyd M. McDowell, to the First Presidency and office of counselor to the President of the church, by Frederick M. Smith and T. W. Williams.

Elder Frank Henry Edwards to office of apostle, by Elbert A. Smith and J. F. Curtis.

Elder John F. Garver to office of apostle by T. W. Williams and F. M. Smith.

Edmund J. Gleazer to office of apostle by J. F. Curtis and Elbert A. Smith.

Daniel T. Williams to office of apostle by F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams.

Roy S. Budd to office of apostle by Elbert A. Smith and J. F. Curtis.

The service was rendered effective by the singing of "My times are in thy hands," and "Be with me, Lord, where'er I go."

Brothers A. R. Manchester, John F. Martin, and A. E. Stone, indorsed for ordination as evangelical ministers, each expressed willingness to serve. Brother Suttill was not present.

A. E. Stone was ordained by John W. Rushton and Paul M. Hanson.

John F. Martin, by Paul M. Hanson and John W. Rushton.

(Continued on page 987.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org

What the Church Needs Most

The speaker prefaced his remarks by reading a portion of Paul's admonition to the saints, as given in the second chapter of Philippians:

"If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfill ye my joy, that ye may be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves," etc.

"It is stated," the speaker began, "that Mozart brought angels down from heaven, and that Beethoven lifted men up. Jesus Christ came to do both. He came to bring God down to the consciousness of men and to lift men up by communion with God. That is the purpose of religion, to do this, and that is the sole duty of the church, and it comprehends our entire mission to bring God into conscious fellowship with man, and to lift man to communion with God."

Enlarging upon his theme, the speaker expressed the thought that any need which the church might have was also a need of humanity, "and the need of humanity," he said, "is the need of the church. The need of the church is so inseparable from the need of humanity, that they must be considered together, and any church which isolates itself from the great need of humanity is not functioning as Christ would have it function. Our concern must be for the whole of humanity, not for a part."

He declared that as a church we have been and are to-day too provincial, and that one of the great needs of the church is a bigger heart for man and a greater love for humanity. "God's offering to us," he said, "was not because of our worthiness, but because of our need. God's love was not merited by man. It was not what man had done that made God love him; it was because God wanted him to have what he needed." As God's attitude towards us, so should be our attitude towards others. The need of any man shall be a command to the church to give to that man that which is necessary to his larger life.

He said that Zion should be big and comprehensive. "I want nothing to do with your Zion," he said, "if it does not have within its purpose that every man under the blue sky shall be welcome to come within and that our lives may be given to make it possible for them to come."

Further, the speaker stated that "this church, if it is to function as God wants it to function, must be an international church. It must be a church so big that it can take within itself all the elements of the world that seek to bring God down to the consciousness of man and man into communion with God."

"The church which cannot visualize in their relationship as men and women the divine element of love which God intends they should have, cannot preach Jesus Christ to the world."

Among his concluding remarks were these: "We need more of God and less of man. Jesus Christ must be enthroned in the hearts of men. We need more love. We need more of fellowship." Expressing the thought that each of us should be in touch and communion with God ourselves, we should be in that relationship with him that he could reveal his will to us, he concluded with this statement: "If we do not have a revelation of God in our souls, we can never understand the revelations of God through his prophet."

"What is sauce for the apostolic goose ought also be sauce for the presidential gander," observed Elbert A. Smith, replying to some propositions presented by the Twelve.

Application of Words of Jesus to Practical Human Needs

Long before the opening hour the tabernacle was crowded. Many remained in their seats from Sunday school. The service was in charge of C. Edward Miller and President Frederick M. Smith, the latter of whom offered a very feeling opening prayer.

President Elbert A. Smith declared he would like to change his theme from that announced, "The two great commandments," to a discussion of the application of the words of Jesus Christ to our practical human needs. He introduced the figure of the man from the carpenter shop with the smell of shavings on him, who gave such wonderful teachings that he stands out alone in human history. Travelers to the West see the mountains a long way ahead and look back upon them from a long distance. So Calvary stands out on the plane of human history and divides it.

He therefore attempts to rediscover himself in Jesus Christ instead of trying to conform himself to Jesus. We try to distort his teaching and his thought to our own mode. That is very different from growing up into Christ Jesus and his likeness. Stanley found in Africa a black people who thought the Devil was white and that Stanley was the Devil; while we think of Satan as a pronounced brunette. We always make the Devil the opposite to ourselves. The Germans represent Christ with German features, the Scandinavians with fair hair and blue eyes, the Italians paint him in Italian type, and one Negro painter painted him as a Negro.

The first great thought of Jesus at twelve years of age was, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He spent the years in preparation, chose and realized so early his life vocation, and that life was not to be for him a picnic. He started in on his preparation—a lesson for the young people, and all older people that are not yet ready for the work the Lord wants them to do. He increased daily in stature, wisdom, and favor with God and man. We may be a peculiar people, but want to be so in our righteousness.

Hanging on the cross his words were, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." When we think of that great forgiveness there is nothing in our life that we cannot forgive.

Between these two great sayings there were many other sayings of great importance, "but only one more will I quote this morning." In answer to the lawyer's question he gave the two great commandments: "Love God and love man." If we could apply that we would have a revolution of peace. Too many societies take the latter and omit the first; too many religions take the first and omit the latter. The first is essential for religion and man is essentially religious. It is because of this devotion and love that our missionaries leave their families and wives and go to the ends of the earth, but if our missionary work hinges on this first command, our local and Zion work hinges on "Thou shalt love thy neighbor." This is not merely sitting down to nurse a warm feeling in the heart but to practice right living with our fellow men.

This sermon was reported in full, hence we have made only a brief summary for the present. It was delivered with great feeling and as a basis of the work of the church, the practical application of the teachings of Jesus to our everyday life.

Nearly all, if not all, the departmental lectures at the Stone Church are being reported by stenographers, for publication and distribution later.

Financial Problems of the Church

Following a half hour of music by the choir under the direction of H. C. Burgess, Bishop James F. Keir discussed very fluently the financial problems of the church. He had before him a chart covering receipts and disbursements month by month for the past three years, ending June 30, 1922. The chart indicated the accumulated receipts since the first of July in each year, likewise the accumulated expenditures. The line of receipts was month by month above the line of expenditures for the fiscal year 1919-1920, but for the succeeding two years expenditures exceeded receipts. The chart was continued to cover the first three months of the current year, July, August, and September, and showed a continuation of the excess of expenditures over receipts.

This is one of the many charts of the Bishop's office. Another shows the receipts and disbursements month by month in the actual amount. The above chart shows the total since the beginning of the fiscal year.

Another chart used by him was a barrel showing the leakage through wasteful expenditure by church members in various ways, so that the money which should come in as tithing was greatly reduced. That is, when money is spent for personal pleasure and deducted before the tithing is paid, it correspondingly reduces the amount of tithing.

A third chart showed how each dollar was expended for the last fiscal year, 1921-1922. It indicated that over 64 per cent was spent for missionary work, elders' families, elders' expenses, and foreign missions. For aid a little over five per cent was advanced for direct aid to the family and a slightly larger amount as aid to those in the various homes of the church. The total amounted to about 10.8 per cent. The amount expended for education included that sent to Graceland College and that expended for the support of members of the class in religious education. Over five per cent was spent directly in education; a little over one per cent for the class in religious education. Administration expense was also set out: clerk hire, general expense of office buildings, general church expense and stake expense. This was the fourth division, and the fifth division was miscellany, including interest and other incidental charges.

He urged very strongly a compliance with the law, and with the love of God in our hearts these problems will be resolved and the church adequately supported.

Bishop Keir gave us to understand that the trouble is not that we are not able to meet the financial demands just now, but that our attitude is not right. If we get the right attitude towards God, we will be able to do all that is demanded. Large number of men present.

Fair Play

Since we stated in the SAINTS' HERALD of September 13 that we were sending the copy to the publishers of Our Hope with a request that they publish at least the letter of Mr. Stevens, it is only fair to them and our readers to now state that in the issue of October 4, 1922, they advise us that they have published that portion of Mr. Stevens' letter which appears on page 869 of the HERALD, omitting, however, the third paragraph. Of the balance of the letter they published only the first two or three lines to complete the paragraph at the head of page 870. They follow it, however, with a brief editorial note in which they express a desire to avoid any further controversy, but deem it only fair to give Mr. Stevens' account. They also state that they have a signed statement by all of the town officers of Jonesport that they had not been approached by anyone to close the debate.

Sanitarium Items

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending October 7: A. D. Harbison, Belton, Missouri; Mrs. W. H. Fox, Kansas City, Kansas; Mrs. Ellis Phillips, Grain Valley, Missouri; Mrs. J. M. Hughes, Rosalie, Nebraska; Mrs. Presto H. Oldham, Hickman Mills, Missouri; Mrs. George W. Fleming, Hardtner, Kansas; Mrs. Joseph H. Anthony, Lamoni, Iowa; and the following from Independence: Master Donald Eugene Bullard, Winnie Wakefield, Miss Florence Montague, Mrs. Mary Lucy Woodford, Anna Virginia Garrett, Isabelle Garrett, Master Edwin H. Garrett, and Mrs. Albert Marks. X-ray patients: Mrs. D. T. Williams, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. T. Ellison, Syracuse, Kansas; Jesse Robert, Tracy, Iowa; D. K. Frappier, Flint, Michigan; and Florence Montague, Mrs. V. P. Weir, and Master Henry Heiszler, of Independence.

Passing of the Religio

Because all the ranks of the priesthood were in session at the opening of the Religio convention, few people, mostly women, attended "the obsequies of the Religio" as some facetiously refer to the event.

As a matter of fact, Superintendent T. W. Williams stated at the outset that the heads of the Sunday school, Women's Department, and Religio had in conference with the president of the church agreed that if the Sunday school and Women's Department consented to recognize their absorption into the church, the Religio would do likewise.

The two first mentioned had so agreed, so Brother Williams ruled that the session was no longer a separate organization, but that its business would hereafter be done on the floor of the conference.

The treasurer's report, which had been delayed, would go to the conference.

The reports of the officers, as printed with those submitted to the conference, were called to the attention of the audience.

Superintendent Williams recommended that the Religio fund for loaning money to students to Graceland be discontinued and the fund turned over to the Bishop for disposal or administration.

He reported that many had been seriously discourteous; almost, if not quite, to the extent of dishonesty in their attitude after being benefited by the fund.

The balance of the time of the session was used by the chairman in explaining the present new situation.

It seemed to afford comfort to the audience to realize that there was implicit agreement among the leaders in our departments as to plans and methods.

His outline agreed definitely with that of A. Max Carmichael and Sister Glines, as presented at previous gatherings.

"One big report for everything, and it going to church headquarters" was encouraging. We hope it will not be too big, if one comes our way!

The new plan seems to be to bring about a situation in the districts and locals whereby no department will even try to function without the others.

After considerable time was used by the chairman he allowed general remarks from the floor. The few who spoke ranged from those who opposed to those who had faith in the new situation, even with reservations.

A motion was offered and entertained by the chairman, to concur in the departmental changes suggested, and request the church to relieve the one appointed to have charge of other responsibilities so he can devote full time to the work of the Religio. It prevailed by a large vote.

Superintendent Williams said a new plan of financing would likely be announced so all communities could be assured of a basis upon which to support the movement.

Howard W. Harder, secretary of the Religio, acted as secretary of the organization.

R. A. Lloyd, treasurer, was present, and on the stand with the other officers.

Youth's Part in Reconstruction

"There will be no safe to-morrow without properly taught children," declared F. M. McDowell in his Sunday evening lecture, "and our homes must be made safe for children."

Brother McDowell has been accused of being a hobbyist over youth's problems, but he retorts that he would rather be a hobbyist on that subject than on "The lost tribes of Israel." That unless we awoke to our duty to our youth there would be some more lost tribes of Israel.

"Let no man despise thy youth," was a text read to lay a foundation so far as scriptural basis was concerned, but in life itself he found many texts in prevailing conditions.

Going back into ancient history he found all sorts of cruel customs prevailing regarding children, yet considering our superior advantages in these latter days believed we were often as shortsighted regarding our children.

As a Nation we spend almost as much for schools as for cigars; as a people we are prone to groan over our school taxes, when it is the real basis for better conditions in the next generation. If we insisted on lower and even no school taxes, we ought to be like the squirrels, maturing in a few weeks and requiring only a few leaves for a home.

Yet so long as we are human and have human needs for education and progress, we must face the problem of what we shall do for our young people. The meanings of youth are twofold, he insisted: An absolute necessity of education and a capacity for such education.

He closed with a plea for social purity, clear ideas of what is right and wrong, based on the results later as well as now.

Conference of Lambda Delta Sigma

According to previous announcement, the first conference of Lambda Delta Sigma was held at the library building at 4.30 Saturday afternoon. George N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, was chosen as chairman of the meeting, and J. A. Gunsolley, business manager and instructor of commercial subjects at the college, was chosen as temporary secretary.

President Briggs stated that this was not a fraternity, but a society. It would not take the form of the fraternities. Its purpose is to encourage education among our young people. Its members consist of faculty members of our college, college graduates, and those who have had at least one year's work in college and have completed the same acceptably. Only a limited percentage of those with one year's college work are admitted. Provision is made for alumni chapters; college graduates of other institutions than Graceland are admitted; also provision is made for the selection of honorary members who are not college graduates, but have done notable work in study or research.

President Briggs stated that in 1920 a committee was appointed by President F. M. Smith to take this matter into consideration. This committee was composed of F. M. McDowell, W. W. Smith, A. M. Carmichael, J. A. Gunsolley, C. E. Irwin, and G. N. Briggs. They held their first meeting in December of that year, formulated the constitution the following spring, but did not finally get it into shape until November, 1921. This constitution, however, was presented subject to the action of the conference.

After careful consideration the constitution was adopted. Attention was called to the provision that those joining the chapters should pledge themselves to uphold the purposes of the society and the church for whose benefit it was organized. The construction of these words was left without motion to the executive council, consisting of the officers and one representative of each chapter. Many planned a liberal constitution. The officers selected for the next two years were: President, G. N. Briggs; secretary, C. E. Irwin; treasurer, J. A. Gunsolley.

A formal ballot was then taken on honorary members with the understanding that five would be elected on the succeeding formal ballot. Quite a number were nominated, but on the formal ballot the following were chosen: Elbert A. Smith, John W. Rushton, T. W. Williams, Marietta M. Walker, and Audentia Anderson.

Some Aspects of Social Service

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser had a good audience for her lecture on "Social service," at 10.45 Thursday. She has specialized on the subject for some time and is so enthusiastic over what we may do and ought to do in this field that her enthusiasm is contagious.

Known far and wide as a competent field worker in the interests of the departments she has always many old friends in her audiences, who share with her the vision of getting the very best expression from every person.

Always in her late studies in Salt Lake City and Saint Louis, she has kept a mental eye on the needs of the people of Independence and this church. She is making it her duty to show those who would know about social work, that there is a wrong way and a right aspect of social helping.

The wrong way gives out alms without attempting to correct the need, thus keeping the pauper always a pauper. Giving out money without investigating the cause of its need becomes a curse to the one to be helped. Dependency is a symptom, like a headache, that needs a cure, therefore we must know the cause. We will have as many beggars as we are willing to pay for. At the present rate, the time will come when it will take one half the people of the world to keep the other dependent half.

The right way is well expressed upon a certain corner stone in Saint Louis; "Social service is love working with discernment; and self help is the only help." There is no useless thing in the world. Weeds are but plants, out of place. People out of place become unhappy and dependent. The man of artistic temperament pounding on heels in the shoe store eventually becomes a mental wreck. Fifty per cent of the people in hospitals for the insane need never have gone there. And not only the dependent, but also the rich and cultured have difficulties that need social correction. Help people by teaching them to understand and to help themselves.

It is to be hoped that she and others vitally interested in this important new work may secure enough support to allow a demonstration in our midst.

Her classes each morning during the conference, held at the Stone Church from 8.30 to 9.30, consider details of the problem.

How can we spread that Graceland spirit, and attract our young people there? Watch for the "Graceland Record."

New Ideals of the Departments

"Begin where you are and put into effect new ideas and better methods only so far and so fast as the leaders and community are ready for them," was the basis of the message of A. Max Carmichael, representing the departments at a round table session Monday night.

There was comfort for all in the ideas proposed by Brother Carmichael, who by agreement among the heads of the departments is to have charge of the coordination features of the new situation.

The communities which want to go on in the "old way," considering it the better way, are bidden Godspeed and given all the latitude they wish. The communities which feel they have gone further and are ready for better methods to attain better results are encouraged to do so and will be advised how to make the most of the divine urge which actuates them.

The situation among the locals was almost the exclusive topic of the evening, and many questions in addition to the remarks of the speaker brought out the points involved.

While it is true that so far as the general leadership of the departments is concerned there has been effected a complete merging of the departments with the church, this step was not urged upon locals and districts. As an ideal it was presented as desirable, but the final step was not to be taken without the concurrence of both district and general officers.

Brother Carmichael presented five forms of organization under which branches and communities of Saints might operate. The first, where the departments consider themselves as separate departments, each a law unto itself, with no coordination in effect, is the old basis. Much good has come from the work of the Saints on this basis and until a better vision is had, let the good work go on about as it has gone. And don't take the next step forward without concurrence of the district officers of department and church, was the advice of the superintendent. But if any local wants to forge ahead it may do so without regard to the others in the district, provided the district's officers concur.

He outlined altogether five forms of management, each a step forward as he believed, till finally the schools might hope to come to the fifth plan, which is being tried out in Lamoni, where departmental lines are obliterated altogether and the work done on a new classification of age rather than as we do now.

These steps are each characterized by a greater degree of cooperation and understanding of the ends to be attained. The details are not bewildering, nor are the lines between the various plans drawn hard, or distinctly.

"If to make the changes desired causes disturbance, wait till you can do it without the disturbance," was insisted upon again and again.

Brother Carmichael promised to write out the suggestions in full for the HERALD, and to keep district officers informed as to the details of the various new plans.

There was a persistent demand for some sort of by-laws for governing local conditions and the superintendent admitted that he might be compelled to write out something of the sort, but hoped it might not be required. He preferred greatly to allow each local to proceed on the best general plans of conducting a Sunday school rather than to seek definite rules that are sure to impede progress. The use of some good book on management of a Sunday school, such as Ferguson's How to Run a Little Sunday School, was recommended.

While little was said about Religio work, the speaker urged that there be no conflict between the Sunday school and Religio. Study the Bible in Religio if desired and the Book of Mormon in Sunday school, or take up special problems such as the women's work offers in either.

The outlook for better results than ever in departmental work is excellent. The small group is free to proceed to better ways as well as the larger one, and is limited only by its ideals.

Details, such as reports, are yet to be announced, but whatever forms are made up will likely be different than those now in use, and the sort of information sought in the reports will be of a changed character.

All problems in coordination of the departments on the new basis are to be referred to Brother Carmichael, who should be addressed at Lamoni, Iowa.

Music in Religious Education

"Infidelity has no hymnology," read H. C. Burgess in his lecture Tuesday morning on music in religious education.

All nature has musical moods and expression and even of man's artificialities their pitches were explained. For instance Brother Burgess tried out the noise of a street car one morning and found its dominant tone was the key of F.

Music is the cause and foundation of all creation; nothing can exist or be, without harmony, was another quotation. Even the sand on a plate will, if vibrated by a violin bow, arrange itself in symmetrical forms, we were assured, and thus we may have a key to the creative process.

As to music in religious education, beginning with the home, we have a responsibility as teachers in this field.

That children are healed by music is attested by those who write about this subject.

"Does jazz music cure?" asked Brother Pitt from the audience. "No; it is but rhythmic noise," read Brother Burgess, "affecting the body but leaving the spirit unmoved."

The effect of good music was illustrated by reference to Saul who was soothed by David's harmonies.

"I believe the day is coming when we shall have to preach the gospel by music and its agencies," declared the speaker.

"One trouble with us is that we do not have real music in our homes. Of course we have some of the popular type, and even 'jazz,' but we have gone too far from the old custom of family singing of the good old music that uplifts and gives us religious culture," appealed Brother Burgess in a plea for the best to supplant much we now have and call music.

"Music develops the highest form of team work. If we had more of it we should not have the discord that prevails now. We haven't the habit of singing together. If we could, we would work together more and thus gain ground.

"Food, shelter, clothing, and music," are indispensables in our life. Just to come to service and have a song or two is not sufficient. We must be filled with music. 'The righteous shall come to Zion, singing,' and 'He shall teach them a new song,' we read from the Scriptures. When Christ comes we are going to sing.

"Moses, Christ, and Paul all used music in their work," said the speaker, reading various passages to prove his point, and succeeding in convincing his audience.

"Music was formerly considered a mere pastime, but now schools and universities are giving credit for work in music. Our class in religious education at Graceland College now has it as a part of the course.

"What are you going to do about it when you go home? Are you going to help make it a real factor in our homes and our services? Give music the place it deserves in our service and do not make it an excuse for conversing. Until we get to the time when we can give proper reverence to this part of our service we will never progress towards Zion, no matter what the quorums do.

"We need more workers in the musical line—more missionaries who have the vision and equipment to prepare the soil for the preached word."

As a Man Thinketh

In the absence of H. W. Savage, who was detained probably by quorum work, Elder Orman Salisbury, of Council Bluffs, was the speaker at 10.45 a. m., Tuesday, in the tabernacle.

He selected for his text the 7th verse of the 23d chapter of Proverbs, "As he thinketh in his heart so is he," following with the statement that a man is largely what he wants to be, and largely what he wills to be.

The sermon was of a practical nature, involving five special points; viz, our purpose in life, preparation for life, our vision of life, the possibilities of life, and character.

"If we shall accomplish anything worth while," he said, "we must have a definite purpose. A great many people to-day in our country are not moving with a definite purpose. They are on the way, but they never arrive. More than ninety per cent of the young men and women come to school, not with the idea of how well they may become prepared while they are there; but two things they always ask, How long will it take? and, How much will it cost? Now a thing worth while, takes time. If we see a man or woman in the future who is worth while, we will see now a boy or girl with a definite aim or purpose in life.

Just being good was not sufficient, but we should be good for something. It is not so much how many hours we put in that is worth while, but how much we can put in that is of service to humanity. Religion, in the highest sense of the word, is not a question of how much we can get at church, but how much can we put in that will be of value to others. As a general rule we ask the question, How much are we going to get out of it? He mentioned the fact that men of the past, who had accomplished anything in life, had had a definite purpose.

Of the second step, preparation, he spoke of the preparation of Abraham Lincoln, of the preparation of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and of the years in which Christ studied and prepared himself before he entered upon his work in the ministry, and how because of this preparation and study of nature he could speak to the fishermen in language they understood, likening the kingdom of heaven to a net cast into the sea. To the herdsman he spoke of his sheep, and to the farmer he likened the kingdom to a man who went out into the field to sow seed.

Of the third step he said we ought to have a broader vision, mentioning the names of those who had accomplished a great work under difficulty and handicap, such as Booker T. Washington, Helen Keller, etc., and asked if there were many who could say they had been handicapped as were they.

He spoke of the great possibilities of life which are within everyone's reach; and lastly, of character. If our purpose of life and our vision of life be not backed by a genuine character, we can never hope to attain true success; and men and women are not to be measured in the old way, by the amount of dollars and cents they accumulate, but what they have done for humanity; what they have done to bring honor and glory to God and service to man.

Keep your eyes open to your mercies. The man who forgets to be thankful has fallen asleep in life.—R. L. Stevenson.

Priesthood Prayer Service Sunday

An hour of prayer and testimony, led by President Frederick M. Smith in a movingly devoted invocation, was spent by the priesthood at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon from 4.30 to 5.30.

About half the time was spent in prayer and the balance given over to testimony. A gentle, helpful influence was present, and the session had a beneficent influence on the

The Morning Prayer Service

Elder F. G. Pitt is one of the important factors in these services, leading the songs and participating in the service in general.

Elder R. V. Hopkins at the opening suggested that in times of distress we have known prayer as the solace. In extremity we reach out our hands to God, and he does not fail us. Brothers and sisters have not understood, but God does.

If we think such an hour is here now, we are where we ought to be; in the house of the Lord. This is the hour of peace; an hour we all love.

"To your tents, O Israel," is worthy of repetition here and now.

"I love this church above everything else in the world," said he, "and that you are here to-day evidences your belief in similar sentiments.

"As compared with all else in the world, this church stands out above all. The work will not go down to oblivion. This is the hour of refuge; the hour of prayer. This is the tent of Israel, where we pray. Let us forget all personal interests and unite as never before in behalf of the sufferings of the body, that suspicion and distrust may depart and peace and unity prevail. So long as we do not have the latter, we cannot be as a city set on a hill and Zion cannot arise and shine."

Prayers for the Saints were desired. A considerable geographical area was covered in the addresses of the names sent in.

Elder J. A. Tanner desired that at least fifteen minutes be spent in prayer. Because of the inconvenience of kneeling, with seats close and shavings on the floor, the Saints were as usual allowed to stand when offering prayer.

Eight persons, two sisters and six men, arose at the beginning, and one of the sisters led. Elder F. A. McWethy, of Holden, followed. Others, including Elder Leonard S. Rhodes, of Boise, Idaho, continued in fervent invocation.

The subjects of the pleadings with God were principally the immediate problems before the conference.

The testimonies were led by Sister Abbie Horton, a faithful veteran of Independence, whose voice is strong enough to be heard by all, and whose ideas are always wholesome and clearly expressed. She concluded with a testimony.

Elder I. M. Smith, of Warrensburg, urged that the love of God was the basis for all our needs, immediate and remote. "Let us make a special effort to overcome; let us get down on our knees in humility, in behalf of the church.

A brother eighty-five years of age, with fifty-six years of experience in the church, related several collateral evidences he had received, such as angel visits, and even had conversed with the enemy of mankind and thus came to know of his purposes.

Brother J. F. Weston, with over fifty years' experience, expressed faith in finding the silver lining in the cloud. In a manifestation of the Spirit through him he imparted hope to the Saints in that God is at the head of the church.

The meeting was a spiritual, helpful one, contributing to both the emotional and intellectual sides of the natures of those present. An hour is too short a time for so many people.

Bishop McGuire at Conference Sacramental Service

I am sure that I can say with God's people this morning that I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation.

My experience as a member and an officer of this church whensoever the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ has found recourse in all that I have sought to do and can testify to, has been unto salvation. And I am sure that the Saints of God this morning bear me witness that in their lives the gospel has been the power of God unto salvation.

We are met here in this conference not as individuals, but as a church, that we may the better cooperate, that we may the better individually and collectively demonstrate to the world that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. We all, in our life's experience, have trials and tribulations. There is no one of us that is free from trial. There is no one of us that does not at some time in his experience have, as we are wont to say with reference to the church, the dark and cloudy day. But I am sure, and you will agree with me, that so far as we are able to square our thought, so far as we are able to square our life, that so far as we are able to give expression to the various activities of life to the plan as outlined and demonstrated by our Lord and Master, we are assured that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. I believe, this morning, that this audience demonstrates that there is with the church the power of God. And in all the times of my experience as an individual, as an official in this church, to square my life according to the law of the gospel of Jesus Christ, I feel that it is necessary.

We are come together here to-day as a praying people. We are come together here with the sincere desire that we may be attuned to God; that the love with which he loved us may be in our hearts; that the love will prompt us to do those things that will bring peace on earth and good will to man. I wish this morning to rededicate my life to the service of God, and wish to say that so far as I am able to do, by the help of your prayers, I may be a blessing to mankind, and to the glory of God.

Our Task in Zion Building

We must have the land to have Zion was a basic idea in M. A. Etzenhouser's lecture Thursday morning. "And we must have workers and those who can direct. Many of our own projects here and elsewhere have failed from lack of managerial ability.

"This is a problem for the men. What are you doing now to become good managers and directors?"

The speaker pointed out that the vast business built up by Henry Ford has been on his own capital. So not all business is dependent on outside money.

The subject of capital was divided under two heads: Producers and consumers.

The producer's type of capital is exemplified by that which we as stewards turn into the hands of the Bishop. Stewardships are both individual and collective. The latter would be found in management of the Sanitarium, the former in the management of a farm.

Distribution includes use of consumer's capital, we were told. For instance, in Doctrine and Covenants 42:9 we are told that those who have need may be supplied. Distribution also includes inheritance, dispensing with insurance, rent, interest, etc.

The present basis is that the "boss" gets twice as much as the laborer, because the presumption is that he is worth twice as much. One idea is that sacrifice is the basis of remuneration. But the Lord's plan is that needs and just wants shall be supplied.

Our needs are those things which will enable us to develop to our utmost capacity, whether they be pianos, dollars, clothing, or anything of the sort, which minister to our capacity. One's capacity may or may not be limited, but no matter where he stands, his needs should be considered. The discovery of capacity is an important item. If they do not get all that assists them to function to the fullest their needs are not supplied.

"Dollars drop out and equality or basis of needs is what we seek."

Poverty was discussed at length. That there is no place for poverty in our lives was the argument. "No one can do his best, can worship God to the fullest, when he is in want. 'There shall be no poor in Zion.' Standards differ, it is true. Our poorest likely dress better than Adam. Those without stoves are poor, yet kings in years ago had no stoves. So it is a relative term. My definition is that the poor are those who live below the standard of their community. No one can say just what that standard shall be. But in Zion no one is to be below that standard," declared the speaker.

Why some live below the standards now was explained: Lack of judgment (according to a statement of Solomon's); lack of intelligence; lack of education (which is more than book learning) in the affairs of life; etc. But most of all, lack of judgment.

Those who come to Zion should see to it that the coming generation are well trained and prepared to meet the demands of the home and community life. The brunt of household economy falls on the shoulders of the housewife, whose duty it is to know relative values. For instance, does one know whether it pays to buy a five-cent bar of soap or a ten-cent bar? Is the latter twice as much in size? Should one buy bread or bacon, milk or beefsteak. As to who should manage these affairs depends on who of family has best managerial ability, but it should not be evaded by the wife.

If we can get our boys and girls to see these things and be able to practice them, in one generation we shall have solved most of our problems. No need to wait till one gets to Zion to begin on this. Make contributions daily towards this solution, "so we shall not fail in our task of bringing about Zion."

The Music Department

In Zion all musical work is organized under one general director, and all work harmoniously to secure the best musical results.

We have given separate consideration to different features of music at the conference and mentioned occasionally the special numbers at the various services; but the music department as a whole deserves our consideration as a church.

The old plan has been that each department has made its own musical arrangements. The church chorister has had nothing to do with the Sunday school chorister or organist nor with the Religio musical direction or programs. The same is true for the other departments.

Also under the old arrangement, while we had a number of individual choirs scattered through the country in local churches, we had no general organization. The splendid results secured under the able leadership of Albert N. Hoxie in the general choir movement can be seen by all. It has resulted in better music at General Conference, and the presentation of an oratorio at several General Conferences in order. It has set forth better musical ideals and has encouraged musical preparation, especially among the young people.

Its attention has then been turned to congregational singing or community singing, and splendid work has been done not only by some like Brother Hoxie, in the war camps, but also in community singing as organized in Saint Louis, by E. C. Bell, and the singing at the young people's meetings in which excellent work has been done by Harold C. Burgess in the Middle West.

The present officers of the department are Albert N. Hoxie, general director; Paul N. Craig, assistant general director; A. H. Mills, general secretary; Harold C. Burgess, general manager. Brother Burgess was appointed to this latter position at the close of the conference of 1920, and arranged to give up his other work and devote his whole time to the musical interests of the church. But after the change had been made, it was found that owing to the financial stringency, the church was hardly in a position to undertake this additional financial responsibility, even though very small. Brother Burgess therefore secured regular employment in Kansas City, but continued to give what time he could to the musical interests of the church.

Very shortly after locating at Independence Brother Burgess was appointed musical director in Zion. This brings in a second and very important phase. The first stage of the movement had been to organize the choirs and choruses throughout the country and to do something on behalf of community singing. Thus at last General Conference the community sings were a big feature of the musical program.

It is only fair to add that Arthur H. Mills has taken considerable interest in the development of church orchestras throughout the church; that he has traveled on behalf of the musical interests; has urged better music and tried to secure better balance in our church orchestras. Owing to the financial stringency he also has found it necessary to secure other employment, but is still devoting his time to the teaching of music and the musical interests in Independence.

In the meantime, Robert T. Cooper has persistently labored since coming to Independence to build up an adequate orchestra, and since 1920 with the definite objective in view of providing an auditorium orchestra. This orchestra has developed to the point that they are able to give programs of a very high order and to handle classical music acceptably. As we have previously set forth, they played several times at the International Sunday School Convention, and are rapidly developing to be one of the best orchestras in this part of the country.

At the same time Roy Turner has labored earnestly the past year for the creation of a brass band, and his efforts have been decidedly successful. There are a few members of the orchestra who also are in the band, but on the whole it is a new and separate organization and has developed far beyond the usual small band, even though in its infancy.

The organization of the musical forces of Zion has now entered into the still stronger phase that all of the music of all the churches in Zion is under the general direction of the musical director in Zion. This includes all the Sunday schools and Religios, as well as the branch music and choirs. It includes the orchestra and band music; in fact, all church musical interests. This is quite in accordance with the plan of coordination as suggested by the former department heads and as presented by A. Max Carmichael at the Stone Church on Monday evening, the 9th.

This does not at all mean that one man does the whole work; that would be quite out of the question. There are separate choristers in each branch; there are separate choristers in the departments; but it does mean that the whole work is organized, so as to secure the best results and all act under one general head and also work harmoniously.

The conference music is based on this preparatory work by the Independence department of music. The orchestra and band were readily expanded to give visiting players an opportunity to take part in the larger musical unit. But the nucleus has been and is the faithful work done by the Independence choir, orchestra, and band.

This music is arranged not only for special programs, but also to take their proper share in the conference program, especially in the half hour of introductory music. The congregational singing, the choir work, the band and orchestra work, have all been planned beforehand as parts of the general whole by the director of musical interests in Zion, and all work together for the best interests of the whole church in musical work.

Motion Pictures Teach Health Lessons

One of the features of the conference program was an illustrated lecture by Doctor R. L. Russell, of the United States Public Health Service, given at the Stone Church Wednesday evening.

The first part of the evening was the showing of four reels of motion pictures on "How life begins," the audience being general. The latter part of the meeting was to men and boys, and consisted of two reels with lecture on venereal diseases.

During the war the Government discovered that many who should have been fit physically were unfit to serve their country because of the great prevalence of venereal diseases.

"The first duty of a nation is to protect the health of its citizens," was the basis of the doctor's lecture, which is available to all communities and should be of much value in the effort towards moral cleanliness.

"And we are not relying upon mere knowledge to maintain a high grade of morality, but hope that in addition to a correct knowledge and an adequate vocabulary, our people will have a strong moral conviction that will hold them to the right."

According to the lecturer's statements some of the social diseases so freely discussed nowadays and which have been in existence for many centuries, have not been understood until within the past quarter of a century, when the germs were isolated and the course of the diseases better understood.

The reels on how life begins were mostly photographs showing the development of the lower forms of life, the growth of the germ in eggs, etc. The pictures were, many of them, secured by much patient effort through the microscopic process. The growth of a plan requiring months was shown in a few seconds, while animated drawings showed very graphically the processes taking place under the camera's eye.

These films were taken in 1916 and are getting worn, which detracts from their effectiveness, yet they are still very educational and should be an aid in establishing a right understanding of the terrible social diseases which are too often considered lightly and as of little consequence.

Holden Home

The Journal of the Constitutional Convention of Missouri for August 29, 1922, pages 33 and 34, contains the statement in the speech of Joseph B. Shannon concerning the Holden Home, as was referred to in the Herald for September 27, page 904. The extract there printed is nearly verbatim.

In Testimony and Song

One of the songs for the opening of the prayer service Thursday morning, chosen by the director of music, Brother Harold Burgess, was, "My God, how wonderful thou art." The line in the last verse, "No earthly father loves like thee," united the song and the opening remarks of Brother R. V. Hopkins, who took for his theme, "Our sonship with God—our relationship as God's children."

The prayers following were earnest and asked God's help in the solving of the problems before us.

Testimonies were had from Saints of Kirtland, Northwestern Kansas, Oklahoma, and California.

Brother Koshiway, our Lamanite brother from Oklahoma, testified that the voice of the latter-day work sounded familiar to the ears of the Indians. He said they realized the love of the Saints for them, and that the brothers and sisters from whom he came in Oklahoma had told him if he had a chance to speak to ask the Saints at conference to pray for them. The truth of this work was prophesied to him at the Redrock reunion, at which time he was not a member of this church. He mentioned the visits of President F. M. Smith to his people and how Brother Smith had promised to help them. The word, "Help," he said, goes a long way with his people.

Several mentioned how they had been cradled in the faith. Among their testimonies were heard such sentences as these:

"The older folks endeared themselves into my life during the prayer services of my childhood."

"The gospel kept my feet safe while in the slippery paths of youth."

"If the young of our church ever do more than our fathers have, we will have to put forth a greater effort than we have yet."

"I hope the young and middle aged will be able to carry on the work our fathers started."

These two quotations were gleaned from other testimonies:

"In all things which present themselves in life, we know we have a God whom we can trust."

"I want to radiate this gospel in my life."

The Winners

Elder George W. Wixom spoke in the tent at the eleven o'clock hour on Thursday morning, reading a portion of the third chapter of First Peter; from the eighth to the sixteenth verse, beginning as follows:

"Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil and his lips that they speak no guile," etc.

He also read the thirteenth verse of the third chapter of Proverbs, "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding," and 1 Corinthians 9:24, "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible." In connection with these he read the first verse of the twelfth chapter of Hebrews: "Wherefore, seeing ye also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us; and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

The speaker touched upon the thought of the gospel of Christ as a means of development, as an opportunity for us to become full grown, to grow, to develop, and to unfold, and as the only school whereby we can make the full development. And in the Christian race we are admonished to lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us.

He spoke of his own experience in training for foot races, where the contestants had during the training carried weights upon their feet; but that when it came to the final test they laid aside all their weights, that they might do their very best. He told of one who, while ahead and running in a race, looked back with a triumphant smile at the one behind, only to find that one eight or nine inches behind him and quickly speeding up and ahead of him. "And so," he said, "while we are looking around we may lose out. It is absolutely necessary for our success, if we are to be winners in this race, that we lay aside every weight, and that we keep our eyes glued on the goal."

We want to be among the winners, he said, yet we may sometimes mistake the losers for the winners, referring to several instances in the scripture, one of them being of the rich man and Lazarus, and of the reversal of their conditions at the end of this life.

Near the close of his discourse the speaker read the following poem by Jennie L. Holland and entitled:

"The Winners

"Keep striving! The winners are those who have striven
And fought for the prize that no idler has won.
To the hand of the steadfast, alone it is given,
And before it is gained there is work to be done.

"Keep climbing! The earnest and steadfast have scaled
The heights where the path was rough to the feet,
But the faint-hearted faltered and faltering failed
And sank by the wayside in helpless defeat.

"Keep hoping! The clouds hide the sun for a time,
But sooner or later they scatter and flee,
And the path glows like gold to the toiler who climbs
To the heights overlooking landscape and sea.

"Keep onward! Right on till the prize is attained—
Front the future with courage, and obstacles fall.
By those and those only the victory is gained
Who keep faith in themselves and God above all."

Christmas Offering

Three fourths of the year 1922 has passed and we are facing the last quarter in which special attention is given by many to the Christmas offering. Up to two years ago the Christmas offering was used to reduce the church debt. Two years ago it was transferred for the purchase of land. In May, 1921, the Order of Bishops voted that the Christmas offering for that year should be used to help establish homes for the poor missionaries.

But the attention of our readers is respectfully called to the action of the Joint Council last spring at which it resolved that the Christmas offering for the present year, 1922, should go to the benefit of foreign mission work. The larger this fund is made the greater will be the opportunity to open up the foreign missionary work of the church. It is time we were giving serious consideration to this privilege of assisting to send the gospel abroad through all the world.

CONFERENCE BUSINESS SESSIONS

(Continued from page 978.)

A. R. Manchester, by John W. Rushton and Paul M. Hanson.

Brothers Stone and Manchester are elderly men, while Brother Martin looks young and is thirty-two years of age.

At 3.05 the President stated that he considered it wise to adjourn at that time. He wished to call a meeting of the Presidency to formulate further program for the conference, as the published program had expired.

It was suggested that the Twelve ought to meet at once and reorganize fully and prepare for further work.

And there were items before the other quorums that should be finished there and presented to the conference.

The session adjourned till 2 p. m. on the morrow.

The weather had moderated considerably and there was much demand for more ventilation in the tabernacle.

The Quorum of Twelve met on Friday afternoon, the 13th, shortly after the adjournment of the business session of the conference, to reorganize. They did so by choosing James A. Gillen as president, as indicated in the message submitted to the body by President F. M. Smith, and elected F. Henry Edwards as secretary.

The present membership of this quorum consists of John W. Rushton, who at the age of twenty-eight was called to the apostleship by the revelation of 1902 together with four others, one of whom, F. A. Smith, is now the Presiding Patriarch of the church, being so called in 1913. One, F. M. Sheehy, was released in 1920; two, U. W. Greene and C. A. Butterworth, are released at this conference. By this same revelation President F. M. Smith was first called to the First Presidency, so that the term of office of these men in the leading quorums of the church has been identical in time. Elder Rushton has been for many years the secretary of the quorum and is at present the senior member of that body.

J. F. Curtis was ordained an apostle in April, 1909, together with R. C. Russell, who is at this time released from quorum responsibility. Brothers Rushton and Curtis are the only members of the present quorum who have been members for more than ten years.

By the revelation of 1913 James A. Gillen, Paul M. Hanson, William Aylor, and James E. Kelley were called. James E. Kelley has passed on to his reward. William Aylor has resigned. The first two continue as members of the quorum. The first, James A. Gillen, who is the senior in years, is chosen as president of the quorum.

Two members, T. W. Williams, who has spent the greater portion of his apostolate in Europe, and M. A. McConley, who is now in Australia, were called in 1920.

The remaining six members were presented at this conference and five of them were ordained. Brother Clyde F. Ellis was not ordained, since he is in the South Sea Islands. The five who are present are: John F. Garver, D. T. Williams, F. Henry Edwards, E. J. Gleazer, and Roy S. Budd.

Saturday, October 14

With the newly ordained members of the Presidency and Twelve in their places on the platform, the business session opened to-day with President F. M. Smith in the chair.

The time limit for new business was set by motion and vote at 4 p. m. to-day.

A suggestion for adoption of resolutions of sympathy, active and otherwise, regarding the Near East Relief, was referred to a committee composed of B. R. McGuire, I. A. Smith, and J. A. Tanner.

The High Priests' Quorum reported that Elder Charles Fry had resigned as counselor to the president, and Elder Roy V. Hopkins had been chosen to take his place and the choice ratified by the quorum. The report suggested they were ready to have the ordination provided for. This was concurred in by the conference.

The Quorum of Twelve reported that the selection of James A. Gillen as president of the quorum had been concurred in by them and that on the resignation of John W. Rushton as secretary, Frank H. Edwards was elected secretary of the quorum.

The Aaronic priesthood in mass session at the conference sent in a petition asking that the Aaronic priesthood be given voice and vote in the sessions of the conference. The President questioned whether this could be done without proper notice, since it required a revision of the rules of representation. He further was not favorable because this order of priesthood could be given full rights as delegates.

The petition was referred to the committee having under preparation a new book on church procedure.

The Order of Evangelists reported three sessions with the high priests and four separately. Nine members are present at the conference.

The trustees of Graceland College reported that to succeed J. W. Wight, deceased, C. E. Wight had been chosen. The concurrence of the conference was asked and granted.

The terms of T. A. Hougas and C. B. Woodstock expired at this time and Floyd M. McDowell and A. Max Carmichael were elected to succeed them. Other nominees were: George W. Blair and Charles E. Irwin.

A verbal report of the committee to consider a report from the ex-auditor was to the effect that it should not be read. A motion to refer to the Presidency for disposition prevailed.

The time of the next conference was raised. The following dates were proposed in various motions, amendments, and substitutes:

October 1, 1923.

October 1, 1924.

April 6, 1923.

By a vote of 127 to 258, the date of October 1, 1924, was defeated. The April 6, 1923, date got one vote.

The date of October 1, 1923, was almost unanimously decided on, and the rule for biennial conferences rescinded.

Elder C. B. Hartshorn was elected to succeed Mark H. Seigfried, resigned, as member of the Children's Home Board. The Women's Department nominated Doctor G. L. Harrington as member to succeed Callie B. Stebbins, and he was elected. A. J. Yarrington, Minnie B. Nicholson, and Ida Monroe were elected on the board.

The recommendation in the report of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home for a vocational school for children was referred to the Presiding Bishopric with power to act.

Boundary lines committee sessions are held occasionally to allow those interested to meet with them.

Early adjournment was had to allow the quorums to consider matters before them.

Saturday evening there was held a Graceland program in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church and a stereopticon lecture on New Zealand by H. W. Savage in the lower auditorium.

Sunday, October 15

Sunday school was held as usual in the tabernacle, with the Beginner Department in the lower auditorium and the Pre-Beginner Department in the kindergarten building. At 11 a. m. President F. M. McDowell spoke. At 2.30 p. m. Apostle John F. Garver preached, and at 8 p. m. Apostle Roy S. Budd. At 4.30 a one-hour prayer meeting of the priesthood was held.

Monday, October 16

The business session, as well as all other sessions, was held in the Stone Church, as the tabernacle is being taken down. A number have returned to their homes, so there was ample room on the main floor for all delegates and ex officios. The gallery was crowded with visitors and space was made for many of them on the lower floor.

The session opened with President F. M. Smith in the chair. The committee on resolutions for the Near East Relief reported favorably on the document. The resolution recites the status of the nations in the Near East and presents sympathetic report. The report was unanimously adopted by the body.

A resolution was presented requesting the church historian to revise the book of Conference Resolutions and bring it to date, including the resolutions of this General Conference, and present it for publication as soon as possible. The church secretary reported that he had twice completed a revision, including one at the close of the last General Conference, and had turned it over for publication, but it has somehow become lost.

Discussion followed on what the word revision meant. It was suggested that it included the omission of all motions which had been rescinded or repealed and also of obsolete motions.

It was urged, however, in reply by the church historian, that he did not so interpret and he suggested the word compilation as better than revision. A motion was made to add the church secretary; another that a committee of five be appointed to consider the book, bring it to date, and bring to the conference the result of their labors. This latter proposition prevailed.

A resolution followed to indicate the personnel of the committee. It was moved that this consist of the church historian, church secretary, and one each from the First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, these three quorums each to choose one from its membership.

Another motion offered as a substitute, was that the President appoint the committee of five.

Doubt still prevailed as to the character and importance of the task. Some contended that it was only a clerical task, others that it was an important assignment.

The motion prevailed that the five as indicated be the historian and secretary, and one each from the three quorums named. The time for report of the committee was interpreted through discussion and vote to be at the next conference.

Members of the credentials committee moved a resolution that the selection of alternates by districts and stakes be discontinued.

A substitute was offered by the church historian that districts and stakes may choose as many alternates as delegates, and that the alternates may be placed on the delegate list in place of absentees in the order of their appearance in the alternate list.

The church historian argued for his motion, the substitute, also the church secretary for his, the original motion.

These resolutions grew out of considerable misunderstanding and difficulty in the "see-sawing" between delegations and alternates. There is no rule, says the church secretary, providing for alternates, but it is merely a custom that has grown up. Some of the districts have sought to have committees of officers select delegates on the ground, but this has been disapproved by the conference.

The chairman ruled that the substitute was out of order, seeking to revise the rules of representation.

The vote resulted in the passage of the resolution discontinuing the appointment of alternates.

A motion was offered that a committee of three be appointed to report rules of representation on the basis of the document submitted by President Joseph Smith (1881). (See Doctrine and Covenants 125: 7.)

Church Secretary Salyards recited the history of the present rules of representation and again stated that our ex officio list was getting too large. As now observed, Independence and near-by stakes will always have a large ex officio delegation, while distant places will have but few.

The motion prevailed, and the President was asked to appoint committee, but he declined.

A motion was offered that the committee be composed of one from the Presidency, one of Bishopric, and one of the Twelve, each to make their own selection, which was adopted.

The balance of the session will be discussed in next week's issue.

Graceland College

To the First Presidency: The attached reports of the president and business manager of Graceland College were at a formal meeting of the Board of Trustees of the college, held at Lamoni, Iowa, March 6, 1922, adopted, and made the report of the board to the First Presidency.

Respectfully submitted,
J. F. GARVER.

Secretary of the Board.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 6, 1922.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

To the Board of Trustees: We have just passed the middle milestone of the college year 1921-1922.

From every possible viewpoint it has been a most remarkable year. Plans for expansion long contemplated have been put into execution with most gratifying results. The spirit of the teaching force is better than it has ever been since the connection of the undersigned with the institution. The students have been earnest, devoted, and almost without exception worthy of the fine opportunity the church has given them. The friends of the institution, alumni, ex-students, and others interested in all the forward looking efforts of the church are numerous and have assisted in many ways in furthering all her worthy purposes. The year has been marked, not with any momentous happening or definitive act, but rather by the consciousness that the organization of the college on its present basis has been substantially completed; that it is now fully conscious of its mission, and is ready to enter more fully upon a new period of scholarship and service in the full light of the greater needs of the church.

Our organization as a junior college is now, for the first time, completed.

With the offering this year of complete junior college courses we fully meet all proper requirements on the part of undergraduate students for preparation for advanced courses in the university, as well as in the way of preparation for admission to professional schools. This is indicated by the following courses offered:

Liberal arts	Pre-law
Teachers course	Pre-dental
Public speaking	Engineering
Commerce	Public school music
Home economics	Secretarial course
Pre-medical

We are now fully standardized and officially accredited by the following:

The Intercollegiate Standing Committee of Iowa.

The North Central Association of Colleges.

The American Association of Junior Colleges.

Recognition by the first of these gives us official standing in our own State. The second gives us official standing in the association governing accrediting in the eighteen States of the North Central Territory. The third gives us national standing. We are thus fully organized and our mission as a junior college is fully laid out for us.

Any further development will depend upon the future, but you may be assured that not only the administration and the faculty are fully alive to those possibilities, but the student body and the alumni are continuously more insistent in the direction of extended opportunity for further study and preparation in our own church college. Their demands must be met and at no distant date.

Enrollment

The enrollment in the Collegiate Department is slightly in excess of that of a year ago, while the enrollment in the academy is slightly less than last year. This is also true in the Religious Education and the Studio Departments. The total enrollment is twenty-two students less this year than last at this time of the year.

Taking into consideration the financial and industrial condition existing throughout the country, this enrollment shows the increasing interest with which higher education is being received by the young people of the church. There is no question but that with a return to normal financial conditions the enrollment will be beyond that of any previous year in the history of the institution. For this increased enrollment and increased demand adequate preparation must be made.

Gymnasium

I feel that I would be remiss in my duty if I did not invite attention to our great need for adequate quarters in which to carry on our program of physical education. I know of no better way to present the situation than to quote from my report to you a year ago:

"If the recent war demonstrated one thing more than any other, it is the necessity for some form of definite, systematic physical training for the youth of our land. With one third of our young men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty physically defective, and a large percentage of that defectiveness preventable and curable, it behooves those responsible for the education of our youth to include as one of the requirements of a well rounded out curriculum a thorough course in physical education, which will prevent a large percentage of our physical incapacity. To meet this need Graceland must have at the earliest date possible a large, well constructed, and adequate gymnasium. The longer this crying need is postponed the further away will be the day when we are prepared adequately to meet the minimum requirements of our young men and women."

I may add that there was introduced into the Iowa State Legislature this year a bill providing for compulsory physical training in all public and private schools in the State. The bill did not pass this session. Similar legislation has already been enacted in twenty-three States and there is no question on the part of educators generally that it will soon become a law in Iowa.

Physical training is recognized by all as being such an important part of the equipment of a well educated young man or woman that it can only be a question of a short time until we must make more adequate provision for this phase of our educational program. In view of the provision for temporary dormitory quarters for our young men and women it will not be necessary to ask that provision be made for new dormitory quarters for next year. It is, therefore, recommended that a request for $15,000 be made for the construction of one wing of our much needed gymnasium. Plans have been perfected by the church architect for this improvement, and by the expenditure of this small sum at this time it will put us in shape not only to meet our immediate needs along this line, but will anticipate the requirements of the State Legislature, so that when the physical training law is enacted we will be in a position to meet it. The plans for the gymnasium are so drawn that this first unit will be a part of the general gymnasium building and can be added to without changing or modifying in any way the first structure. It will in no wise be a temporary structure, but a part of the permanent building plan. It is urgently recommended that provision be made for the appropriation at the earliest possible date.

Such a building, in addition to meeting our needs in the way of physical education, will provide us with an assembly hall where we can more fully enter upon a program of assistance to the community in an educational way. We frequently have entertainments and educational programs in the chapel attended by a thousand people, which means that the program must be repeated two or three times in order to meet the demand.

State Teachers Certificates

Graduates from our Teachers Course, which is on a full collegiate basis, continue to enjoy official recognition by the State of Iowa in the granting of State Teachers Certificates by the State Department of Public Instruction. As pointed out before, this recognition is of very great value to us in view of the reciprocal relations existing between many of the States by virtue of which Iowa certificates are recognized throughout the Union.

Department of Religious Education

The third year since the organization of this department has convinced the general church officials, as well as the administration of the college, that the object of the course cannot be met by a one year course as at present conducted. In the call of the President of the church for enrollment for next year's class it is pointed out that it is expected to make the course two years in length beginning in the fall of the present year. As purposed the course will be about as follows:

First year
English	4 hours
Logic	3 hours 1st semester
Ethics	3 hours 2nd semester
Psychology	3 hours
Economics	3 hours
Religious History	3 hours
	16 hours
Second year
Bible	3 hours
Argumentation and Debate	2 hours
Philosophy (including special lectures and church procedure)	3 hours
Education	5 hours
Sociology	3 hours
	16 hours

BUDGET 1921-22

Items	Budget Allowed	Used July to December	Balance Needed	Total	Over Budget	Under Budget
Allowance-Faculty	$30,000.00	$13,791.67	$14,608.33	$28,400.00		$1,600.00
Extension Department	1,000.00	322.00	646.67	968.67		31.33
Heating plant, fuel, labor	5,000.00	2,860.77	3,000.00	5,860.77	$860.77
Insurance	1,200.00	1,070.72		1,070.72		129.28
Library upkeep	900.00	585.85	540.00	1,125.85	225.85
Library accessions	150.00	133.76	16.24	150.00
Advertising, catalog, etc.	450.00	334.82	50.00	384.82		65.18
Office help	1,200.00	481.49	400.00	881.49		318.51
Light and water (does not include Herald Hall)	1,200.00	515.08	620.00	1,135.08		64.92
General expense	500.00	461.71	38.29	500.00
Repair and upkeep, improvements	3,400.00	2,768.94	675.00	3,438.94	43.94
Notes payable, purchase of farm land	5,300.00	5,300.00		5,300.00
Land contract, purchase Carpenter lots	700.00	41.94		41.94		658.06
Purchase of lots, college plat	500.00					500.00
Students in training	2,000.00	1,510.00	400.00	1,910.00		90.00
Water system	1,500.00	15.00		15.00		1,485.00
Laboratory equipment, physics, chemistry, biology	1,000.00					1,000.00
Total	$56,000.00	$29,693.70	$20,994.53	$50,688.23	$630.56	$5,942.83
Estimated Receipts
Received July to December		$20,459.72	$ 5,400.00	$25,459.72		$9,540.28
Estimated Receipts for Balance of year		$1,440.70		$1,440.70	$440.70
Total		$21,500.42	$ 5,400.00	$26,900.42	$440.70	$9,540.28

Note 1. In the second year women will be permitted to elect the following special courses:

- Home Economics, in place of Philosophy.
- Story-telling, in place of Argumentation and Debate.

Note 2. Special lectures in connection with the course in Philosophy will include:

- Doctrinal lectures; departmental lectures; music lectures; health lectures; church procedure.

The Future

As a distinguished university President once said, "Self-satisfaction is never becoming, least of all in an institution which is so conscious of its own inadequacies and imperfections, whose ideals are so high and whose opportunities are so many and so boundless," and yet with the continued support of the student body, the faculty, the Board of Trustees, and the church generally, the possibilities for the future are beyond measure. The evidence of past years justifies the hope that Graceland will continue to enjoy that support, and with it we look forward to more nearly meeting the demands upon us in the future than we have been able to do in the past.

Respectfully submitted,
G. N. BRIGGS, President.

REPORT OF J. A. GUNSOLLEY, TREASURER

July 1 to December 31, 1921

1. The following graph will set out quite clearly relations of expenditures to the budget allowed. The amount required to complete fiscal year is estimated, and in some items may be quite different from actual requirements, since contingencies cannot be accurately forecasted, such as weather and epidemics, and some other things. A constant effort has been made, however, to be as accurate and conservative as possible.

ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

Assets
Accounts receivable, general ledger	$ 8,606.45
Cash	758.27
Coliseum stock	1,100.00
Farm cash	144.97
Herbarium	320.00
L. D. S. Pin Fund	30.47
Museum	1,267.24
Scholarships	10,918.21
Sociology laboratory fund75
Student ledger	10,620.43
War Savings Stamps	59.50
Notes receivable	3,048.09
Current inventories	35,598.15
Real Estate	160,103.90
Total assets	$232,577.43
LIABILITIES
Accounts payable	$ 6,799.82
Miscellaneous creditors	798.78
Auditorium fund	62.50
Business finance fund20
Commercial law fund	3.75
Ella Baird trust fund	550.00
Industrial deposits	20.00
Memorial fund	88.81
1922 memorial fund	3.30
Nellie Martin's music class	47.87
Psychology laboratory fund	208.04
Sunday school fund	118.20
Notes payable	5,901.25
Mrs. Pearl Greenwood	$1,000.00
Melissa Campbell	1,351.25
Hopkins Lumber Co.	250.00
Lamoni Order of Enoch ..	1,800.00
G. N. Briggs	1,500.00
Total liabilities	$14,602.52
Net Worth June 30, 1921	$209,114.00
Net Gain 1921-22	8,860.91
Present Net Worth	217,974.91
	$232,577.43

31. The $1,600 balance under the appropriation is due to the fact that one less faculty member was provided than was expected when the budget was made up.

3. Extension Department: A small balance here under the budget allowance is shown. Part time by a regular faculty member takes care of this department.

4. Heating Plant: This is the first winter we have heated the new building, and though the winter has been mild, a conservative estimate shows the item overdrawing the budget in the amount shown.

5. Insurance: All our insurance has been readjusted, and as much of it as possible put under the co-insurance basis, with most of the policies maturing about the same time or as nearly so as practicable. This not only means that the amount expended is below the allowance, but that we shall have practically no additional insurance premiums to pay for the next four or five years.

6. Library Upkeep: We have tried to keep within the appropriation, but two things have made it seem impracticable to do so. First the removal of the library from the Herald Building, and readjustment of the library as a consequence, with the removal and readjustment of the material of the museum to the new building in order to place them in position to be more useful and more presentable, occasioned a considerable outlay. Second; so much time has been required of the library custodian that extra help had to be supplied. We are, therefore, overdrawing this account.

7. Library Accessions: This account does not actually represent the accessions, for the reasons that many books are charged to psychology laboratory fund and other funds, provided for by fees charged of students, and the books are not charged to the library.

8. Advertising: The advertising space used in the church periodicals has not cost us anything. The amount, therefore, largely represents cost of issuing the annual catalog number of the Graceland Record. There are a number of smaller incidental items, leaving a margin.

9. Office Help: The balance under the budget here represents economy. Some work hitherto done in the office proper has been otherwise provided for, which lessened the amount of extra help that would have been required, making possible the balance shown.

10. Light and Water: These figures do not include Herald Hall, since that arrangement did not enter into consideration in making up the budget. It should be self-paying at any rate.

11. General Expense: Postage, stationery, and office supplies are included under this head, and break about even.

12. Repairs, Upkeep, and Improvements: The same explanation for overdrawing may be made here as in the case of heating plant. Providing necessary toilet and lavatory facilities for the new building called for more supplies; and the additional help for taking proper care of the new building, plants, and grounds, exceeded our guess. The account does not include charges made at Herald Hall, nor the upkeep of that place.

13. Notes Payable: The one note with interest given for the purchase of the Bierlein Tract has been paid.

14. Land Contract: Only the interest on the contract for the Oscar Carpenter lots has been paid.

15. Students in Training: This is slightly under the allowance.

16. Water System: Some prospecting has been done to discover the fact of water supply, amounting to about $15.00.

17. Laboratory Equipment: None of this particular appropriation has been expended, as college physics is not offered this year.

18. Income and Outlay: The total expenditures falls under the budget allowance $5,311.77, while the total income falls short of the estimated income $9,099.58, increasing the deficit to be supplied $3,787.81.

19. BUDGET FOR 1922-23

Allowances for faculty	$27,000.00
Extension department	1,000.00
Heating plant, fuel, labor, etc.	5,500.00
Insurance	200.00
Library upkeep and care	1,150.00
Library accessions	150.00
Advertising, catalog, etc.	450.00
Office help	1,000.00
Light and water	1,200.00
General expense	500.00
Repairs, upkeep, and improvements	3,400.00

2. Allowances: A balance of $1,600 under the amount appropriated is shown. All of October, 25% of November, and 50% of December allowances were paid up to December

Notes payable	4,650.00
Land contract (Carpenter lots)	700.00
Students in training	2,000.00
Water system	1,500.00
Labratory equipment	1,000.00
Total	$51,400.00
Estimated Income
Tuition	$30,000.00
Offerings	1,400.00
Total	$31,400.00
Deficit to be supplied by the church	$20,000.00

20. Allowances: In view of the financial depression we had hoped to make a larger reduction in our budget from that of last year than we found could well be done when we came to consider it item by item. There was a material change in the basis of the personal budgets last year from that of former years, it being felt that they should be put upon a basis that would admit of some saving each year towards providing a home. By setting that feature partially to one side for the coming year, since very few of those serving the church are enabled to save much, if anything, a reduction of ten per cent has been made.

21. Heating Plant: It has developed that the item for heating plant was too low, showing an excess over the amount asked for, of $360.77. We are asking for an increase of $500, which will provide for some necessary repairs, such as renewal of grates.

22. Insurance: We shall have two or three policies of insurance expiring during the year, the premiums for which will cost approximately $200.

23. Library Care and Upkeep: The library has served to a much better advantage this year than any previous year; and this has been made possible by providing a little extra help in the way of assistance to the librarian, making it possible to keep the library open and accessible to students more hours each week. We are asking for $250 additional on this item.

24. Office Help: On the item of office help we have reduced the amount to $1,000.

25. Repairs, Upkeep, and Improvements: This is the same as last year. The care incident to the new building and enlarged lawn adds more than was estimated for the present year, hence the amount runs over $43.94, but the work in that line we think can be kept within the amount asked for next year.

26. Notes Payable: Notes have been issued during this fiscal year to the amount of $4,651.25 to time of compiling this report. This amount may be increased by further borrowing before June 30.

27. Land Contract: A year ago a contract was entered into with Brother O. W. Carpenter, of Madison, Wisconsin, for the purchase of six lots joining college land for $700, payable July 1, 1921. Only the interest on this has been paid. We are including in the budget the purchase price.

28. Students in Training: For students in training the amount is thought to be sufficient to provide for those with whom arrangements have been made, being the same amount as last year.

29. Water System: The college has been considerably embarrassed of late, as it was in the winter of 1919, by a shortage in the public water supply. In our budget of 1921-22 we asked for $1,500 for the installation of a private water system. Owing to a lack of available funds nothing has been done further than to prospect a little for a source of water supply. We shall be forced soon to provide for this necessity, as the supply from the town is not or is uncertain, but is unfit for drinking, and much of the time unfit for cooking. We are continuing the same item, hoping conditions the coming year will justify this much needed improvement.

30. Laboratory Equipment: The thousand dollars appropriated for laboratory equipment has not been spent, as we did not offer college physics this year; but it will be needed next year; so the item is continued the same.

31. Total Budget: The total budget is $4,600 less than last year, and the estimated income is also less than last year the same amount, leaving the deficit, or the amount to be appropriated, $20,000.

32. Commissary: The commissary department showed a substantial gain for the year 1920-21. The venture of an additional boarding place at Herald Hall has not proved so successful as hoped, for the reason that the enrollment is less than last year, instead of more. The slight running behind of the new venture will be more than met by the gain in the old, so that on the commissary as a whole a safe margin will be realized.

33. Farm: The farm situation is substantially as last year. The account for the year 1920-21 shows quite a heavy loss, as was common to practically all farms; but the year ending June 30, 1922, will in all probability make a better showing.

34. Old College Building: The old college building was repaired only sufficiently to make it water tight. Just as soon as funds can be had, more improvement should be made to preserve the property, though the condition of the building is not real bad.

35. New Building: Trouble has been encountered in three regards. The radiator valves first installed proved unsatisfactory, and the third set have now been put in, with assurance from the manufacturers that these will be all right, or, at least, they will make them right.

The electric wiring proved to be quite faulty. The contractor has attempted to remedy the condition, but it is not wholly satisfactory yet.

Two leaks in main steam pipes developed, one of which has been repaired; but the other, which is beneath the basement concrete floor, and the extent of it not now known, will have to be repaired during the coming vacation.

36. Herald Hall: This building has been housing about twenty boys, and has afforded adequate relief from the difficulty in not being able to furnish living accommodations for the number of men desiring it, under college supervision.

37. Cottages: Arborvilla has been used this year as a detention home for students afflicted with contagious diseases. In this capacity it has served us well, in view of the serious epidemic of scarlet fever and diphtheria in the fall months, and a number of cases developing through the winter.

Sunnymeade continues to be the home of the superintendent of buildings and grounds, and accommodates from four to six students in addition.

38. Dormitories: With Herald Hall added to our dormitory facilities, Patroness Hall and the Farm House have not been occupied to their capacity. With a return towards normalcy, probably every room will be in demand the coming year. The rooms in the new building have proved to be very acceptable, with a slight readjustment of some radiators. While the fact of having dormitory rooms and classrooms in the same building is by no means ideal, yet the situation is much improved by their use.

39. Conclusion: In spite of the industrial and financial depression and the attendant hardships and inconveniences accompanying, we have only words of praise for the splendid spirit of cooperation and devotion exhibited by all associated in the work of the institution, and are confirmed in our most sanguine hopes of an ultimate and glorious triumph of the cause we are laboring to promote.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

The Sanitarium

Since the change in the personnel of the Board of Trustees of the Sanitarium, which change made it an ex officio one, the activities of the institution have gone on much as before, with such changes as were made necessary by the conditions. There have been frequent meetings of the board, though not regular ones. Doctor Harrington has continued as physician in charge.

The expansions of the institution approved by the General Conference have not been had, because of financial conditions, but the necessity for a psychiatric ward has indicated that at least a portion of the present building should be devoted to this work, and the slight necessary changes are being made in this direction.

The vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Mann as superintendent of nurses was temporarily filled by the appointment of Miss Paxton. Miss Gertrude Copeland, of Philadelphia, now superintendent of a hospital at Reading, Pennsylvania, has consented to undertake the management of the Sanitarium, to begin her work January 1, 1923. She anticipated taking up her work with pleasure, having expressed herself, after a thorough examination and inspection of the Sanitarium as greatly pleased with the equipment and the possibility of a great work to be done by the institution.

Report of the Nurses' Training School, the statistical report of the Sanitarium's activities, and the financial report, follow:

To the Board of Trustees; Brethren: I take pleasure in submitting to you the report of the training school for nurses of the Independence Sanitarium beginning July, 1920, ending July 1, 1922.

Number of nurses July 1, 1920	22
Number of nurses entered	5
Number of nurses dismissed	0
Number of nurses resigned	5
Number graduated May 31, 1920	7
Number of subjects taught	27
Number of class periods	116

The class work for the junior class was taken at the Junior College at Kansas City, Missouri. We feel grateful to those who so ably helped us carry on this part of the work. We also wish to express our appreciation for the building of the sleeping porch at the Nurses' Home, which has added so much to the comfort there.

Number of students in school July 1, 1921, (including two who were in as attendants)	18
Number finished since graduation	6
Number entered since	15
Number dismissed	2
Number resigned	5
Number pupils in school July 1, 1922	20
Number in 1922 class	4
Number in next year's graduating class	6
Number in next year's intermediate class	11
Number next year's junior pupils, in July 1, 1922	2
Number of subjects taught	46
Number of class periods	459

As all of our class work was taken care of at the hospital, we indeed feel grateful to those who so ably carried on this part of the work; also our management who have so faithfully cooperated with us. We feel that our school is on a progressive basis, and all are endeavoring to do their part.

Our hospital affiliates with Children's Mercy Hospital, of Kansas City, Missouri, for four months, as well as with the Junior College for twenty weeks, during the first or probationary period.

The different departments of practical experience are as follows:

- Probationer's work.
- General medical nursing.
- General surgical nursing.
- General obstetrical nursing.
- Infants' care and nursing.
- General nursing in emergency and fracture cases.
- Drug room and laboratory experience.
- Operating room and delivery room experience.
- Diet kitchen.
- Head nurse on floor and executive nursing.
- Night duty nursing.
- Pediatrics or nursing of sick children (received during the four months affiliation at Mercy Hospital).

Some contagious experience, as typhoid, pneumonia, venereal, erysipelas, etc.

I feel the board is interested in the training school with us, and I am anxious that you should know the inside of the work here, therefore I should be pleased to give you any necessary information regarding the school.

Sincerely,
 ELIZABETH J. PAXTON, R. N.,
 Principal of Training School.

STATISTICAL STATEMENT

July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922

Number of patients in hospital July 1, 1921	30
Number of patients admitted during year	1,132
Total number of patients during year	1,162
Number discharged during year	1,136
Remaining in Sanitarium June 30, 1922	26
Number of days treatment of patients	9,699
Daily average number of patients in Sanitarium	26
Number of L. D. S.	645
Number of nonmembers	517
Number of minor operations	255
Number of major operations	187
Number of operations successful	423
Number of deaths during year	37
Number of L. D. S. doctors	8
Number of nonmember doctors	12
Cost of maintenance per patient per day	$4.98
Death rate for year, 3 per cent of all patients admitted.

GENERAL TRIAL BALANCE

June 30, 1922

Accounts payable		$ 5,256.51
Accounts receivable	$ 9,312.80
A. O. Y. P. Z. deposits		25.00
Jackson County Bank	2,569.75
Buildings	45,609.02
Cash	38.81
Drugs and dressings	1,042.07
Dry goods	3,029.40
Furniture and Fixtures:
Hospital	5,037.00
Laboratory	1,139.04
Operating room	814.56
O. B. Room	114.40
Nurses' Home	1,721.28
Dining room and kitchen	1,143.02
Laundry	777.42
X-ray	1,842.83
Insurance	271.46
Prepaid Interest	135.44
Indep. Drug Co. Interest 49%	4,992.12
Library Fund		66.27
Live stock:
Cows	373.00
Chickens	65.00
Miss McKee	24.00
Notes payable		9,600.00
Notes receivable	174.76
Notes receivable	968.90
Present worth		73,773.80
Real estate	7,924.44
W. C. Smith	100.00
Stewards' Department, Groceries	228.03
Tag-Day Fund		771.93
X-ray Account, stock	44.96
	$89,493.51	$89,493.51

CONDENSED FINANCIAL STATEMENT

June 30, 1922

Assets
Cash	$ 2,608.56
Accounts receivable	9,436.80
Notes receivable	1,143.66
Merchandise	4,344.46	$17,533.48
Live stock	438.00
Investments
49% interest Independence
Drug Co.	4,992.12
Buildings—less depreciation	45,609.02
Furniture and fixtures—less depreciation	12,589.55
Real estate	7,924.44
Deferred charges	406.90	$71,960.03	$89,493.51
Liabilities
Accounts payable	$ 5,281.51
Notes payable	9,600.00	$14,881.51
Tag day fund unexpended.....	771.93
Library fund unexpended.....	66.27	838.20
Present worth	73,773.80	73,773.80	$89,493.51

PROFIT AND LOSS STATEMENT

July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922

Administration expense	$ 4,725.32
Boiler room	1,323.65
Fuel	1,821.73
Freight and dray	38.89
Gas	803.72
Housekeeping labor	3,307.65
Ice	475.50
Insurance	199.32
Interest	360.00
Laundry	3,694.74
Light	800.92
Medical office	324.47
Professional care of patients	1,032.11
Repair and maintenance	1,125.65
Reserve for bad debts	2,322.83
Rates to poor	323.59
Rates to alumni	65.76

Rates to doctors	71.80
Rates to nurses	1,265.43
Rates to other help	575.92
Stewards' department, labor	3,326.35
Stewards' department, groceries	7,822.21
Training school salaries	5,655.67
Training school maintenance	1,666.03
Water	356.06
Depreciation	4,635.96
Adjustments	110.05
Donations	$ 1,615.50
Electric fans	26.65
Garden	238.70
Laboratory	2,481.53
O. B. Room	417.89
Operating room	4,223.89
Rooms: Private	16,456.10
Wards	9,916.13
Nursery	637.93
Steward's department sales	2,123.93
X-ray department	1,860.26
Adjustments	74.03
Live stock: Hogs	7.15
Chickens, inventory	46.56
Cows, inventory	237.49
Drugs and dressings	710.86
Dry goods	2,468.61
Donation—General church treasury (cash and rents)	7,204.12
Gain for year	$2,516.10
	$50,747.43	$50,747.43

For the Board of Trustees,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

En Route to Australia

We are at sea aboard the R. M. S. Tahiti. Wife and I as anticipated left San Francisco on the above ship Friday, September 8. A number of the San Francisco and Oakland Saints were at the wharf to see us away. We were really sorry that we were leaving America, but glad we were starting back to see loved ones in Australia.

San Francisco had had lovely weather for several days prior to our departure, hence I had been expecting a pleasant trip. It is usually rough both in approaching and leaving Frisco, as it is any other port. Anyone who has traveled the sea knows that the roughest water is in the vicinity of land. This time, however, it was otherwise. The ocean had the placidity of a mill pond and has remained the same until yesterday when the breeze freshened and our ship began to pitch. Nevertheless, there was no lessening of the social spirit, for a dance that had been planned for the evening came off despite the ship's motion and some seasickness among the lady passengers.

Nothing of a social nature was attempted until after Sunday, the 10th, when a committee was selected and activities began. A small paper, called The Bulletin, is printed on board the ship, which publishes news of all that happens. The writer was on a social committee.

Monday night the 11th there was an initial concert, more or less informal, in which I gave a reading. Tuesday night impromptu speeches were given. The speaker did not know his subject until he drew it from a hat which was passed to him just before his effort. The time was restricted to three minutes. My subject was, "Divorce." I was really pleased with my theme. In addition to being suitable to my profession it gave me an opportunity to present the views of the church, although my talk was entirely nonsectarian. My remarks briefly were that divorce is due to the social spirit which prevents the formation of true friendships, which spirit has in the numerous divorce laws received legal sanction, and will continue to afflict the world in proportion to the increase in fickleness among the people, hence will render society more and more unstable; and that the stability of

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, Editors; Samuel A. Burgess, Associate Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor; Granville S. Trowbridge, Business Manager. Published by Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

CONTENTS

Report of the President to Conference	971
Early Zion	974
Not a Monarchical Government	974
Conference Business Sessions	975
What the Church Needs Most	979
Application of Words of Jesus to Practical Human Needs	979
Financial Problems of the Church	980
Fair Play	980
Sanitarium Items	980
Passing of the Religio	980
Youth's Part in Reconstruction	981
Conference of Lambda Delta Sigma	981
Some Aspects of Social Service	981
New Ideals of the Departments	982
Music in Religious Education	982
As a Man Thinketh	983
Priesthood Prayer Service Sunday	983
The Morning Prayer Service	983
Bishop McGuire at Conference Sacramental Service	984
Our Task in Zion Building	984
The Music Department	984
Motion Pictures Teach Health Lessons	985
Holden Home	985
In Testimony and Song	986
The Winners	986
Christmas Offering	986
Graceland College	988
The Sanitarium	991
En Route to Australia	993
Songs by President F. M. Smith	994
MISCELLANEOUS	994

the home, the church, the nation, and civilization, depends upon the union for life of one man with one woman in holy wedlock.

A great many good things were said in the various speeches. Some of course admitted of humorous treatment and were so handled, while others were suitable to sober discussion and were so regarded. A prize was awarded the best speech. The preference of the crowd was determined by the applause. All received some approval but the attitude of the audience was finally determined in relation to three: these were mine, a speech on "America" by a Scotchman, a Mr. Cameron, and one entitled "Our ship," by a Mrs. Madden. I stood a good chance of winning, but the decision finally went to Mr. Cameron. This I did not regret for I like the subject, and besides, it was well handled both humorously and seriously. Some thought Mr. Cameron was an amateur speaker, but I did not think so. We learned later that he had stood for election in the House of Commons. The next night, Wednesday, he acted as an auctioneer in selling articles to raise money for our social activities. The occasion was a great treat. Scotch humor! Don't talk about a Scotchman not having humor!

To-night we are having a rest, but during the day, and every day, such things as quoits, deck billiards, etc., are going on continually. To-morrow night we will have a mock trial. May conduct a service Sunday. Last Sunday I did not, although I attended one conducted by the captain. Because we were not entered as passengers until the day before sailing, our names were not on the printed list, hence it was not known that I am a minister. This week the captain has sent me word to conduct the service for next Sunday.

We are traveling two days ahead of time, hence will arrive at all ports that much early. Expect to arrive at Papeete Monday, the 18th.

In gospel bonds,

September 15, 1922.

ALMA C. BARMORE.

P. S.—Since writing the foregoing a mock trial, involving a breach of promise case, was held on Saturday night, the 16th, and on Sunday, the 17th, I conducted a service at 11 a. m., in the first-class music room and at 8 p. m. on the second-class deck.

A. C. B.

Songs by President F. M. Smith

At the morning preaching hour at the tabernacle on Sunday morning (15th) the following songs were sung by a mixed quartet.

The words were written by President Frederick M. Smith. Their history is simple. As he listened to the music from the phonograph in his home one day he pondered over the problems before the church. He considered how in common with the rest of humanity some of his most cherished plans seemed to be blocked, yet that only cowards give up because they are down. His resolution inspired a spirit of reverence to God, from whom real power comes. His musings grew into words, which were adapted by Helen Silsbee Smith to the tunes being played from the record at the time. The selections were from a double Brunswick record, one side having on it the song, "Dreamy moments," the other "Beautiful dreams."

An Invocation

(Words by Frederick M. Smith, adapted to "Dreamy moments," by Helen Silsbee Smith.)

Send, O Lord, thy holy Spirit,
Courage, hope, and comfort bring;
Give us strength to do thy bidding,
Tune our hearts thy praise to sing.

Chorus:

Come, oh come, sweet Comforter,
Tune our hearts to sing;
Come, oh come, sweet Comforter,
Tune our hearts to sing;
Come, oh come, sweet Comforter,
We would our saintly tribute bring.

In thy service pain is pleasure,
Give us grace all ills to bear;
Help us each to know his brother,
And his heavy, heavy burdens share.

Chorus:

We, thy children, worship humbly,
To our souls sweet solace send;
On the upward road of service,
Give us strength unto, unto the end.

Chorus:

Onward to Zion

(Words by Frederick M. Smith. Adapted to "Beautiful dreams," by Helen Silsbee Smith.)

Onward to Zion, faithful and strong,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on;
Onward and upward battle along,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.
Onward to Zion, to Christ we belong;
With service the watchword, we fight against wrong;
Onward to Zion, march on with the song,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on;
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.

We have the promise that Jesus will come;
Zion the beautiful beckons us on;
Let us be faithful, His will be done,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.
Jesus the Savior meeting the throng!
Oh, may his coming be not delayed long!
To God be the glory, to him lift the song,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on;
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Western Maine, at Little Deer Isle, November 11 and 12. Come and help to make it a good time. A. Begg, president.

Eastern Montana, at Fairview, November 4 and 5, conference and Sunday school convention. Those who have reports to render and have not already given it their attention, please do so as soon as possible. We have reason to look forward to two days of successful services. We hope that all Saints will endeavor to be in attendance and add each their mite of service. Earl Wilcox, secretary, Glasgow, Montana.

Convention Notices

Kirtland, with the Barberton Branch in Ohio, October 28 and 29, Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Departments. First meeting on Saturday at 10 a. m. Joseph Biggs, superintendent.

Conference Minutes

FREMONT.—At Glenwood, September 9, convened at 10 o'clock with N. L. Mortimore in charge. A. M. Chase was chosen to assist in presiding. Branches reporting: Glenwood, 83; Shenandoah, 116; Hamburg, 24. Ministry reporting were A. M. Chase, N. L. Mortimore, H. M. Liles, M. W. Gaylord, J. W. Dunegan, William Kuykendall, F. B. Knight, G. Fred Skank, and B. S. Lambkin. N. L. Mortimore resigned as district president. Resignation accepted. A. M. Chase was elected. N. L. Mortimore and H. N. Pierce were chosen as associates. District budget report was read: receipts for tent fund, $33.69; paid A. M. Chase, $25; receipts for Sunday school fund, $15.22; paid Sister Jessie Vance, $5; receipts for Religio fund: $4. Those elected for delegates to General Conference were M. W. Gaylord, A. M. Chase, Mrs. A. M. Chase, Mrs. N. L. Mortimore, Mrs. N. E. Vance, and B. S. Lambkin. The alternates were N. L. Mortimore, H. N. Pierce, J. T. Ettleman, and E. E. Barber. Both lists were empowered to cast a majority and minority vote in case of division. Motion to take up a collection for tent work carried. Preaching at 8 o'clock by A. M. Chase, prayer meeting Sunday morning at 8.30, Sunday school at 9.45, preaching at 11 by H. N. Pierce, and priesthood meeting at 2 o'clock. Maggie Watkins, secretary pro tem.

Our Departed Ones

MCPEAK.—Anna Ellen Simon was born April 16, 1874, at Fulton, Iowa. Married Guy McPeak, November 15, 1893. Baptized November 23, 1913. Died at Maquoketa, Iowa, September 16, 1922. Sermon by John Heide. Interment in Esgate Cemetery. Leaves husband and two daughters, Ella and Carrie. One infant child preceded her.

HAWKINS.—Henry Hawkins was born September 18, 1837, in Lancashire, England. Married Sarah Hawkins December 25, 1859. After her death he married Mary Dobie, August 8, 1907. Died at his home in DeKalb County, Missouri, near Pleasant Grove church, August 23, 1922. Leaves wife, eight of his twelve children, twenty-three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral from the home. Sermon by D. E. Powell. Interment in Mount Carmel Cemetery, Gower, Missouri.

McGRAW.—Sterling Price McGraw was born at Fredwell, Arkansas, November 20, 1862. Moved to Oklahoma in 1896, to Kansas City in 1911, and to Independence in 1914. Married Minnie O. Bucks, March 20, 1896. Baptized in 1905. Ordained a priest in July of 1906. Survived by one sister, Susan Ford, of Kansas City. Died in an automobile accident September 8, 1922. Funeral services from the home, sermon by J. W. Peterson. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Leaves wife and four daughters.

WILSON.—Rachael Wilson was born in Jackson County, Missouri, April 7, 1840. Married David Wilson in 1858. Moved to Nebraska in 1865. Her husband died in November of 1907. Baptized in 1881. Died at the home of her son-in-law, Richard Preston, in Fairbury, Nebraska, September 6, 1922. Leaves three daughters and one son. Another son died at the age of sixteen. Sermon by Samuel Broliar.

WOODSTOCK.—Harriett Marion Edwards was born at Utica, New York, March 16, 1844. Came to Wisconsin with her parents in 1845 and settled in Albion. Married Willard Woodstock, April 21, 1864. Baptized many years ago. Died at the home of her daughter, Effie Field, in Janesville, Wisconsin, August 20, 1922. Funeral services were conducted from the home of her daughter. Sermon by Charles H. Burr, assisted by Irving Lenox. Interment in Janesville Cemetery. Leaves five sons and one daughter. Two daughters died in infancy.

HOLMES.—William Landlant Holmes, oldest son of Simon and Emma Holmes, was born May 4, 1853, at Ashby-de-la-Gouch, Leicestershire, England. Baptized June 16, 1878. Married Emma Titterton, February 1, 1881. Ordained teacher, May 23, 1883. Died August 23, 1922. Funeral from Saints' chapel at Clay Cross. Sermon by Charles Cousins, assisted by E. Wragg and Joseph Holmes. Edward Priestnall officiated at the grave on behalf of the Order of Good Templars. Leaves wife, four daughters, one son, four brothers, and one sister.

HAMANN.—William Hamann was born at Ludwigschloss, Germany, February 19, 1841. Baptized November 22, 1880. In 1872 he married Margetha Sipke who died some years later. Married again July 13, 1906. Died August 15, 1922. Four of his six children, an aged wife, seventeen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild survive. Funeral in charge of T. T. Hinderks. Sermon by Elder S. Twombly.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST
OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

among you have cubines he shall ob 2: 36.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879, authorized July 21, 1921, and accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921.

Volume 69

Independence, Missouri, October 25, 1922

Number 43

Addresses at Conference

The following short addresses were made by leading men of the church at the opening and closing sessions.

President F. M. Smith, preceding the reading of his document, October 2, 1922

It is well to note that we assemble once more in General Conference after the longest interim between conferences which has been experienced by the Reorganized Church, and we meet under conditions which perhaps are, to use a trite expression, peculiar, and which have not been paralleled in the history of the Reorganization, at least not so far as my knowledge of its activities is concerned.

The general conditions existing in the world, while to some extent perhaps more promising than they were when we met two and one half years ago, are far from reassuring. There are clouds upon the horizon that indicate very clearly that peace has not yet been established upon the face of the earth. When that peace will come, of course remains for God in his mercy and justice to determine.

So far as we as a people are concerned, in speaking to you yesterday afternoon I expressed the sentiment of my heart when I said that I feel this conference marks at least some sort of a crisis in the history of the church. I have no doubt that the church will go onward—I could have no doubt from my experiences in the church, both as a member and as an officer. But that our sailing will be entirely smooth I do have doubts. That we will have storms to pass through, that we may have storms in this conference, is not at all unlikely. There undoubtedly will be some wounds received; but if we approach the work of this conference with the firm determination that all our individual efforts will be to conserve the interests of the church, and if in our discussions and in our debates we can each presume that the other fellow is acting from the basis of the same honest convictions and interest in the church's welfare as we would like to have attach to our own expressions and activities, I feel sure we will have made a long step towards an adjustment of the difficulties which might exist.

I feel impelled to place before you this afternoon a document which will effect changes in the leading quorums of the church. It has been one of the most difficult tasks that I have had to perform in the church to present that document to you this afternoon. But from a sense of duty I have been impelled, and because it has been my duty I act.

[Here followed a reading of the document.]

In presenting this document to you, as I said a while ago, it has required the courage of a consciousness of duty. I believe there has been given to me opportunity to envisage the work of this church, which lies immediately before it, which demands a consecration and devotion to service which has not been equalled in the past. If as a united body, and particularly as a united priesthood, we can enter upon the large and broad missionary effort which this church should produce, it will become apparent, in my opinion, before the passing of even many weeks, that we have started upon a campaign that will carry this church to the front at a pace which will gladden the hearts of those who have longed to see the hastening time fully ushered in.

The missionary effort which was agreed upon by the Joint Council last spring in my opinion is one of the largest things ever undertaken by the church, and to the accomplishment of this we must devote our energies. Once we launch ourselves upon the prosecution of a missionary campaign, then our own little internal difficulties will melt as the snow before a summer's sun and we will have peace, we will have prosperity, we will have the encouragement that comes from a conscientious discharge of duty.

I leave the matter in your hands. It is for you to decide what shall be done. As I stated a while ago, I suggest that the conference disassemble and that this be further considered in committee capacity, as our quorums really constitute.

*Floyd McDowell at the Close of Conference,
October 18, 1922*

There are a few phases of our work that are of particular interest to me, and I think under the circumstances during the years that are just ahead of us they will be of increasing interest.

I think that we may all go home feeling that we have seen some motions passed that we are agreed to; and I am sure that all of us can go home saying we have seen some pass that we are not agreed to. I am sure also, from the expressions that have come so many times from the floor, that whether we have agreed or disagreed there is but one thing for us to do, and that is to submit to the will of the majority and go ahead. I am sure that we are, all of us, each in his own place, going to do the very best work we can. I want to pledge my strength and my energy to do everything I can in the best way I know how this year in the interests of this church and the interest of this cause. If I can do anything that will be of assistance to the membership of this church in lines that I have the opportunity of being informed in, I am at your service, no matter how much time or how much energy it takes.

I want to remind this audience that one of the chief functions of this church is the establishment of a social order in which men can live in peace and harmony with their fellows. We do have the function of proclaiming the gospel of Christ in this world. We likewise, too, have the function of building a new social order. Without taking time to prove it, I am going to ask you to accept the rather dogmatic statement that the pages of history point towards the need of a solution of this problem, and that the call of this church in this latter day is that we shall solve this problem which the world has not been able to solve. I suggested Sunday morning one of the things that is going to be absolutely essential in the solving of this problem, and that is the presence in the soul of every Latter Day Saint of the Spirit of God. I want to reiterate that statement. I care not how many degrees a person may have, how much schooling he may have had, or how much wealth, fame, or power he may have, we shall never accomplish this work until as a church we learn what it is to have the abiding influence of God's Holy Spirit in our souls, guiding and directing us and pointing us to the ways of truth.

I do want to add this one suggestion. We may find ourselves always behind, as has been already stated on the floor, if we do not watch out. For nearly one century now our church has claimed before the world to have the key to the social problem, and yet we find ourselves behind. To-day, if we want to find the best clear-cut statement of our belief in regard to Christianity as applied to our social problems of today, we are under the necessity of going to the books of the world to find that statement. I wonder if I am presuming too much to kindly ask and urge that our church members and our missionary force read at least one good book dealing with our social problems and their solution. I am prepared at a moment's notice to give you a list of twenty books along this line that no Latter Day Saint can afford to miss reading. Candidly you cannot afford to be uninformed with what the men are saying in the sociological and economic realm. Within the last ten years we have seen a new note in our sociology books. We are coming now to recognize the importance of religion as a means of solving the world problem. I do not think you dare go out into the world and represent a church that for a whole century has claimed to have the keys to the solution, without being familiar with those books.

One of the things I regret most about this conference is not the division or the discussion, because I think we are healing the breach and are going out with a fine spirit; but, candidly and sincerely, my Saints, my heart bleeds to know that we have been here for eighteen days and few of us have had time or opportunity for constructive study and constructive discussion. I say with all my heart that I hope the time will come when our conferences, a good share of the time at least, will be devoted to studying constructively the social needs of the world. I want to offer my services to anyone who will write me for suggestion of some book along this line. We need some constructive study. We need the vision which those men are giving us. We need their scientific sociology along with our Christianity and the Spirit of God, if we ever solve this problem. Without vision the people perish. And frankly, I believe that a great many Latter Day Saints are absolutely lacking when it comes to this social vision. I have stood before our people at reunions year after year and have done my best to try to explain these social problems and to show our relation to them as a church, only to have a suggestion come that it was a fine effort, but there wasn't much religion in it.

I want to offer to you what services I may be able to render in this way and to repeat my suggestion in which I am sure that the other members of the Presidency are agreed, that you do during this next year read at least one book along these lines in addition to your other studies.

May God give us strength to do our tasks during the coming year. May he give us strength to teach an affirmative gospel. May he give us a vision of the importance of the other fellow's work. May it be possible for us to say that, whether in the office or in school or in the missionary field or on the farm, we can work with God in this place, and that talent must find its legitimate expression in service to humanity.

May God help us to this end is my prayer.

(List of books and prices will follow next week.—EDITORS).

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, at the close of Conference, October 18, 1922

(Transcript not read or corrected by the speaker, as he is out of the city.)

I have been asked to say a few words. Our conference is coming to a close. I do not suppose there is anyone who has realized all that he had hoped to realize out of this time, and possibly all of us will have to recognize that there has not been accomplished as much as we would like to have accomplished. But I want to call your attention to one thought: The Master has made the statement in one of the revelations that we could discuss these questions here on the conference floor and in our quorums, and when we have decided what we are going to do, we should go out into the field and leave our differences here as much as we possibly can.

I think if we really have the work at heart we will recognize the importance of the statement made by the Apostle Paul, that we must walk by faith. We cannot always see the end from the beginning, nor can we see or understand always the motives and the purposes that may actuate individuals. And I hope it will not be said at the next conference that discrimination has been made anywhere because of opposition to positions taken by individuals in their conference work. God has stated that we should work together as much as we can without friction.

Now, while we may not see alike, we may not grasp all the problems just the same, we may not see the importance of our brother's work as much as we do our own sometimes, let us be kind enough and considerate enough to perform our work with the proper spirit and recognize our brother in the position in which he may be called to work, so that the work of God may not suffer unjustly because of failure upon our part.

I admonish you, therefore, to go out with the purpose and the object of doing everything you can for the upbuilding of the church and that you study hard to bring about the conditions that God has said should come. Let us do our work here so far as opposition is concerned, and if there are those things that are not satisfactory, wait until the proper time comes, and at the proper place let us seek to adjust them at the next conference.

This last year has been one of rumors. I never heard so many in my life as I have heard this last year. If there were grounds for some, any amount of them were not true. How they started or where they started I do not know, but it is a fact that they did start. Now let us move out, and, as the Master has said, let us seek to work together. We have done what we undertook to do so far as we could as a conference.

Whatever differences there may be, let us hold them in kindness and cheerfulness so far as we can and move out and do the best we can under the conditions. There will be difficulties. There will be trials, and we must expect some of these things or else our prophecies are a failure; but let us seek to qualify ourselves by faith in God, faith in His work that shall justify us as servants of God and manifest to the world that whatever we have done we can at least be men, and Christians at that.

I pray that God may bless you, and as you go out into your fields that he may send the Spirit before you, that the angels of God may open the way and go before you, and that as you offer your souls and energies in the work that has been assigned, the Spirit of God may speak peace and comfort to you and encourage you and comfort you and strengthen you in the work that now lies before us. May his blessing and peace attend us.

*Elbert A. Smith, at the Close of Conference,
October 18, 1922*

I once heard a story about a colored soldier, who had gone through the war safely and who shortly after the close of the war found himself with our boys in Germany. He went to his captain and said, "Captain, I want to go home. I only enlisted for the war and the war is over. I want to go home." The captain replied, "Rastus, you didn't enlist for the war, but the duration of the war. The war is over, but the duration has only just begun."

Our war is over, but what we are going to do in the next year remains to be seen. I believe that one test of manhood is not to be all right when everything is going all right, but in times of stress and conflict to maintain an even temper, to retain faith in God and his religion, and charity for those who may differ from us in opinion.

During the past summer, as I have told the priesthood here in the prayer meeting, I passed through a sort of Gethsemane. Recognizing conditions in the church and sensing that which was approaching, many an hour I wrestled in prayer in my closet, and many an hour on the mountain top when I was west at the reunion I agonized in spirit beyond anything ever before in my life. I found peace finally in the thought that I would seek to know God's will. I would leave my mind open and proceed in harmony with my best judgment and leave the matter with him, whether I should stand or fall, praying that I might avoid making disastrous mistakes that might rebound to the injury of the church. And I feel to thank him for his sustaining grace.

My faith in the outcome of this work and in the fundamental principles has not been diminished in the least. I have not lost my love for the brethren nor my confidence in them. I unite with the Presiding Patriarch in pleading with you that during the coming year our work shall be affirmative and constructive. Let us not have one negative man in the field. Let every man be a man who goes out to affirm and sustain and conform to the will of the majority, which is as near as we can get to common consent. I do not think that you can find any place in the field where, during the past year, I have undermined any of the Twelve or of the Seventy or of the Bishopric. I want to feel that no one has undermined me, but that we can feel that we are all for each and each for all, and that when we find Saints that are disturbed we shall strengthen them.

I agree with what Bishop Keir said this morning, that we ought to go out teaching the law of tithing; that we ought by no means to tell any family that they ought not to pay tithing, any more than we should tell some one that he ought not to be baptized. When I get where I cannot teach tithing I cannot teach baptism. Let us go out affirmatively and make the best of the situation, and have trust and confidence that we can be much more successful than we thought we could be a few days ago.

I invoke God's blessing to be upon every missionary, every bishop, every pastor. There is no use of any one department disparaging the labors of any other. Let no seventy underestimate and belittle the work of the pastor in caring for the flock, and let no pastor speak lightly of the work of a seventy in going out to preach the gospel. Honoring each other as men of God, let us go forward and sustain each other. This will be my advice and my prayer.

President Frederick M. Smith, at the Close of Conference, October 18, 1922

Surely you cannot accuse me of having taken up very much of your time in speaking during the conference, this conference, and if I use a handful of words this afternoon to express a few of my sentiments, perhaps I may be forgiven.

I am reminded that it is said that the suffering and the sacrifices of the past are as naught, for he who endureth to the end shall be saved. I am not going to recount what I have suffered. I am not going to tell how nearly flat I was. I hope I am on my feet. I hope those feet are on the upward road. I can assure you that I felt the harness settling back with a great deal of reluctance. I had really hoped that I might be freed. For when I measure my natural endowments and the little equipment and enhancement of those natural endowments my strenuous preparation has resulted in, and put them alongside the tasks that you have asked me to bear, the load seems impossible, and I am conscious that the work that is put upon me to accomplish cannot be done, unless I at once have your support and that of the Lord.

My face is towards the future. My hopes in the accomplishment of the goal of the church are not so bright as they were, but perhaps with the passing of the clouds the sun may shine on that goal once more. I frankly confess that my zeal has been greatly dampened, but even that may be warmed up. But if it be warmed up it will be necessary for me to feel that I have the united support of the ministry of this church. I plead for it. I think I am entitled to it. I have confessed my inability, my natural ability. I have expressed my dependence upon God and your support, and that, it seems to me, presages that I plead for your prayers and your spiritual support.

Perhaps further words are unnecessary. The work of this church is the greatest thing in my life. It has had my best services in the past; it will have them in the future as long as those services are acceptable to the people and can be utilized, and may God add his blessing.

Talk by Bishop B. R. McGuire, at the Close of Conference, October 18, 1922

During the noon recess a brother told me there was a little group of brethren standing in front of the church after adjournment of the morning session; that he stepped up to them and inquired if they had paid their fire insurance. One of them asked him what he meant. He retorted by quoting Doctrine and Covenants 64:5, "Verily it is the day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned [at his coming]."

I do not think that it is necessary for us to emphasize the penalties that our heavenly Father will impose in the event that we fail to respond to the temporal law. I feel assured that as we go out from this conference we will do so with a deeper appreciation of the gospel of Jesus Christ and a finer sense of the responsibility that rests upon us as members of this church, and that we shall strive in every way to contribute our part to the establishment of the kingdom of God. If it shall be that our part is the payment of tithing or the contributing of an offering, it will be given with the same desire to advance the cause as is the work performed by the ministry.

Within the last three months it has come to the ears of your speaker that it had been said because of his condition of health and the onerous burdens of his office he expected to hand in his resignation at this conference. Never at any time has it even entered my thoughts to lay upon the table my resignation, and I wish at this time forever to put a quietus upon such a rumor. When I accepted this office at the behest of the Spirit of God, supported by the confidence of the Saints, I came here to do the bidding of God and his church, and I have not and I do not wish at this time to relinquish the trust imposed upon me. I wish to assure you that so far as we are physically capable of doing, so far as it may be pleasing to our heavenly Father to the extent that we are sustained by your confidence and prayers and by his Spirit to supplement our efforts, supported with the necessary funds, you may count upon us to do the very best we know how for the advancement and the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

So far as we can, and it is our most sincere desire so to do, we expect to support the church, we expect to support the officers, and we expect to try to inspire the spirit of faith, to radiate the sunshine referred to by one of my confreres this morning. If we have the faith, if we have the confidence we should in this work, the clouds under which we have been deliberating will be dissipated and the means will be in the coffers of the church to prosecute the work. I have said before from this stand, and I wish to reiterate that no matter what volume of funds there may be in the coffers of the church, this work cannot advance any faster and to any greater extent than our possibilities are expanded by the Spirit of Jesus Christ. I feel that the success of our work must be predicated upon faith, hope and charity, as stated by the prophet of latter days, Doctrine and Covenants, 11: 4.

I pledge you that in whatsoever I shall be called upon to do, I shall try to temper my counsel, I shall try to direct my work by this Spirit. I believe that this work will advance, the church membership will be blessed, and that God will be honored and glorified.

Benediction at the Close of Conference by President Elbert A. Smith

Looking to thee, Almighty God of love, we desire once more before we separate to approach thy throne of grace. We thank thee that out of the darkness and turmoil and tribulation we have come into a degree of light, and we pray that the light may grow brighter and brighter and be with us during the coming year.

Bless those who go out as missionaries, whether they shall go abroad or into the fields of this land. Keep them and sustain them, we pray. Be with them in every time of need. Supply them with means and grace and with the power to present the word. Be with their families, whom also we commend to thy care. Be with and bless the pastors who shall feed the flock. Sustain them and make them wise in their office and calling. Be with the Bishopric as they gather and disburse the finances. Bless them in that work. Be with the President of the church. Sustain him, we pray, and give him favor with the people, that the priesthood may come to his support and that he may take them into his confidence, that altogether we may learn to labor, as becometh children of God.

Be with us, we pray, during the year and open up for us our fields of labor. Sustain us by thy grace and bring us together again under more auspicious and pleasant circumstances, that thy people may move upward to the great culmination of this work. Abide with us, we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

"One great refuge that we have in the dark hours of life is the hour of prayer."

Speeches of Acceptance

Statement by Elder Floyd M. McDowell Accepting Call to the First Presidency

Is it too much to ask your prayers and faith that I might be able to say that which my heart desires to say? I may have to tell a different story than the brethren that have just spoken, but in that story I shall put my whole heart and before God I shall tell the truth. A few days ago I was approached by a brother who asked me rather abruptly, I thought, "Have you had any special evidence as to your call?" I said, "No, I have nothing special." There was no chance for conversation and I fear that he may have misunderstood my answer. My answer shall have to be told in a longer story than in the words yes or no.

My earliest recollections are of a praying, sacrificing, and God-fearing mother and a missionary father. I shall never forget the keen satisfaction I had as a boy in unbuckling the straps from my father's satchel and playing horse with that satchel, or playing it was an engine, with a row of chairs to constitute the train and I the engineer. I can see and feel now just how it felt and just how it looked to see my father coming up over the hill from the town not far distant, carrying his heavy satchels through the snow.

At the early age of fourteen I had to leave home if I went to school at all, and had it not been for a mother who was willing to give all her life that I might have that chance; had it not been for a mother who did not hesitate to go into the field or barn or garden and toil, early and late; had it not been for a mother who did not hesitate to give all she had, even food and clothing, I could not have secured this schooling. Many a time as we sat down to a meal she said, Children, I am not hungry. You eat. If there is anything left I may eat." We know now that she went without many a time. That mother, when I was fourteen years old took me to town and walked the streets of that city until she found a place where I could have a chance to work for my room and board. She tackled the thing that could not be done, and did it. Week after week I stayed there. When I went home I would say to mother, "Read me something. I don't want to go to sleep because the time is so short that I have before I have to go back again to the disagreeable work." Week after week I went back with her blessing, and her last dollar in my pocket, and her prayer to back me up. For seven years I earned all my board and room in school. I tackled every job imaginable, under some of the most disagreeable circumstances, and would never have finished high school had it not been for the prayers of my mother.

On four successive occasions in my life opportunities have opened to me that I did not understand. My prayer has always been that I might be directed; or, to use my actual words, my prayer has been that the pathway might be opened up before me that I might move in the right direction. On four successive occasions in life thus far that exact thing has happened. Each of these came as a distinct surprise. Yet in each instance I moved in with the prayer of faith and with the prayer of my mother ringing in my ears, and in each instance has the assurance of God come to me with all the power it can bring that I did the right thing.

My life is known to many of the young people of this church. I have no apologies to offer, because my conscience is clear. I have done that which I believed best. Long ago I answered the problem of consecration of my all to the service of this church, and when there came the time when a mother's influence was not so far-reaching, I was so fortunate as to find a companion who was willing to sacrifice with me. And in the spirit of the missionary we lived in rooms hardly fit to live it, while I completed that education.

I am as sure as I am that I stand here that every day I spent in school is in accordance with the will of God. If anything can bring assurance, I know that. I am also sure that the power which comes from training can be used for evil, and the criminal who is trained can be a worse criminal for his training. However, I am also sure that God placed a talent in our souls; that he expects us to cultivate that talent and train it to the utmost; and finally, that he expects us to say, Here am I, Lord; use me. Every bit of talent I have must go into the same crucible as every bit of wealth anyone else has for the good of the cause on earth.

That is all the special evidence I have had. I know that every hour I have spent in study is the will of God. I know that he wants me to use that talent in his service. If it is the will of this church to use it in the position to which I am now called I shall use it to the best of my ability. I have gone through a crucible in the last two weeks, and if you place yourself in my position I am sure you will feel it is true. With my brethren, I have spent sleepless hours on the bed, tossing about and thinking. Just why a voice could not have spoken to me I do not know. My experience leads me to feel justified in saying that the only thing I can say is that I will move forward, and if my experience means anything there will come to me the assurance that my move is right.

I have had the assurance that the time would come when I would leave the college and spend my time in the interests of the young people and in teaching them. God has given me, I believe, without any conceit on my part, the ability to teach. There is nothing that I desire to do more than to teach, and there are people in this audience in whose eyes I have seen tears as I have taught in the classroom exactly as I have in the prayer meeting. I want to teach this people. I want to be a teacher, and the first law of teaching is to be humble and to get on to the level of those you would teach. If I can follow the example of the blessed Master, and help this people to understand and vision the great mission of this church; if I can have my office accessible and my ear open to the voices of every young person in this church, be they ever so small and untrained, I want that office and ear open. I want every one of them to write me personal letters about their trials and their problems.

May I have your prayers as I move in? not knowing, but believing that if I do as I have done before, God will bless me.

In 1914, when I went to Worcester, my mother was much concerned about that move. She did not want me to go at first, but she afterwards wrote me this, "I have had a personage visit me in my room. It is his will that you should go on. The time will come when you will occupy in the highest councils of the church." That mother wrote me just this week and said that she was not at all surprised and that the vision to her had been literally fulfilled. That is her testimony. May I have your prayers of faith and confidence as I shall move in and give my best? I thank you.

Statement of Elder F. Henry Edwards, Accepting Call to the Quorum of Twelve

When I was about three days old there were certain spiritual manifestations given to my parents which made them realize that the time would come when I would occupy in this position to which I am now called. As a young boy I grew up with the idea that sometime I would serve this church and God as a missionary. As soon as I was old enough and the call came I accepted the responsibility as a priest, and either just before that time or just after that time, when I was about eighteen years of age I, too, received definite knowledge for myself that the time would come when

I should be called upon to accept this responsibility. That evidence came repeatedly.

When I left home my father, who is something of a visionary man, told me that he expected I would come back home holding some other office. I thought it would be some years before I was called to this position. I thought, therefore, that I would go back home as a seventy. I knew from the experiences that came to me last year in college that something would happen in this conference that would affect my life, and so I thought probably I would be ordained into the Seventy. I thought that until six weeks ago, or about the sixteenth of August, and then in the Mansion House at Nauvoo I received the evidence that satisfied me that this was the time when I should be called on to accept this responsibility.

So far as I am concerned I would have preferred that it should come later. The first feeling I had was one of repulsion. I did not want to accept the responsibility because it seemed to me that many of the precious things of youth would have to be given up. I thought I could serve just as well possibly as a seventy as I could in this connection, but as I thought of it there came the increased conviction that it was the will of God that I accept now.

I am willing to accept this responsibility. I recognize that the call to the priesthood is the biggest call that can come to me. I said years ago that all I had and all I hoped to be was at the service of God and of this church. I could make no further consecration than that. I have given all that I have to give. If you wish and if God wishes that this I have given and that which I want to give shall be used here, I am glad it shall be so done.

Statement of Elder Daniel T. Williams, Accepting Call to the Quorum of Twelve

For the last eight years I have given my life to the missionary work of this church. I have found no place to turn back. All of us have found strenuous times. All of us have had our trials and our troubles and our temptations, and yet we have all had the gracious manifestations of the Spirit of the Almighty to us, and we have been blessed by him in our labors. To most of us, at least, I presume to all of us, God has given the testimony that this in which we have engaged is the work of himself and his Son.

God, too, has given to me some testimonies, and one of those testimonies I want to call to your attention this morning. I still have a desire to give my full, unlimited, and unreserved service to this people. In the past God has told me that some day I would stand in the place in which I am standing now. This came to me nine years ago. I was laboring then in the office of priest in the Ottumwa, Iowa, Branch. I remember that I went to the place of meeting one Sunday evening. It was my part to speak to the people of God. I had chosen a subject that was hard for me to speak upon, because I knew it would come in conflict with the ideas of some of my elders, and especially so with my father, who was a priest in the church, and previous to the time of my being selected to the office of the presidency of the branch he had labored in that place. I am sorry to say it, but it is true, that at that time my father was a user of tobacco. I am glad to add that since that time he has ceased that habit. When I went to preach this Sunday night the subject which I had chosen, and I believe under the inspiration of almighty God, was the question of temperance, the latter half of my subject dealing with the question of tobacco. My father was present. Many of my elders were present, and as a young man just starting in my ministry I felt it was a hard position for me to be placed in. Yet I determined that I would do my best, and when the latter half of my subject was reached the Spirit of God came down upon me like a mantle from on high. I was enfolded in that sweet and holy influence, which many of you have often felt. After that sermon was preached my father came up and shook hands with me and said, "My boy, that was certainly fine."

I went home after the service. I went to my rest, and the voice of God as audibly, speaking to my spiritual ear, as I am speaking to you to-day, told me of my future work in just these words, "You are called to be an apostle." I saw nothing; I had no dream; I had no vision; I heard no other words; but I did have that testimony, and that testimony I give to you to-day for what it may be worth to you.

I am glad to serve this people and serve my God, and if I can serve in this place better than any other, though the trial be great and though the burden be heavy, I will thank God that I have the disposition to so serve.

Statement of Elder E. J. Gleazer, Accepting Call to the Quorum of Twelve

(The transcript of this statement was not seen by Brother Gleazer, as he left for home Sunday.)

In a marvelous way I have been made to understand that from my cradle practically to the present time the Almighty has been directing my life. Through the leadings of his Spirit I came in contact with this marvelous work and a wonder, the only representative of my family at that particular time. At the age of twenty-one I was called upon to devote my entire time to the missionary work. I had a clear evidence from God at that particular time that it was his call and not a call from man. I had been just recently married and weighed the matter pro and con. I decided that there was but one course to pursue, and that was to heed the voice of Jehovah. The Lord promised me at that time that he would be with me and bless me. I realized my inability to do the work that I was requested to do, and I stand before you to-day to say that God Almighty blessed me and assisted me in that work. When called to the office of seventy I also counted the cost, but that same Spirit which had been with me in sunshine and under the clouds was still with me and I decided to go forward.

When this call came I cannot say that it was a great surprise to me. I was surprised that it came so soon. I sense keenly my youth and my lack of preparation to carry on the momentous tasks that are before me. I feel to-day that as I have been touched by His Spirit I am willing to go forward at the request of this people. All I ask is that I might have your prayers that I may be able to do this work; that I may be able to consecrate myself entirely to the task that is before me.

Statement of Elder Roy S. Budd, Accepting Call to the Quorum of Twelve

When I was only a lad of three years of age Brother R. T. Walters, now occupying as a seventy, was doing missionary work in our locality, staying with my parents. I remember him stating to my parents that he expected some day I would take up missionary work and become a minister for Christ. Small as I was, that made an impression upon my mind, and all through my boyhood days I had a desire to be a minister for Christ. Many times I have in my play gathered my younger brothers and sisters about me, and some of the older ones, and have stood before them and asked them to listen as I preached to them.

When I was eight years of age, the day that I became eight years of age, I was baptized into the church by Brother F. C. Keck, now deceased. In the afternoon prayer service after my confirmation I prayed earnestly to God that he might give me a testimony of this great work, and he did. He gave me the testimony that the work was true and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. That testimony has never left me to this day. The morning after my baptism on Sunday my father sent me, early in the morning, just at the break of day, that I might bring the horses from the pasture. We were living on the farm. And as I passed along an old stone wall near a very large stone where I had played many times before with my brothers and sisters, the Spirit of God rested upon me and I knelt in my boyish way and poured out my soul to God, and there I promised my God that if he would bless me and protect me, that when I grew to be a man I would go forth into the world and represent his cause. God has always been true to me. It is true that I have had my trials and sometimes I have failed in my promises to him, but he has always remained with me.

While only a young man I was ordained to the office of priest and occupied as priest of the branch in my home town. In the month of July in the year 1913 Brother Amos T. Higdon, who was laboring in the Clinton District as a missionary, invited me to go with him and hold a meeting in Butler, Missouri. I did. Brother Higdon, a very humble man at that time and I know him to be the same yet, gave me some very timely counsel, and every morning we would take a walk to a cornfield and there we would offer prayer.

In July, I believe it was the twenty-first day of July, without request from me, Brother John W. Rushton, then missionary in charge in that part of the world, sent me a letter giving to me a district appointment. Immediately after reading the letter I went with Brother Higdon to our accustomed place in the cornfield to pray, and as he prayed I took the letter from my pocket and laid it down on the ground and placed my knee upon it, and as Brother Higdon prayed the angels of God seemed to hover about us and God said to me, "You shall occupy in the Quorum of Twelve with John W. Rushton." That has been in my mind since that time. In the year 1914 I was sent on a mission to British Columbia, Canada. Before I went to Canada I was keeping company with the young lady who is my wife now. We were engaged. I told her my life work would be in the missionary field, for sooner or later I would occupy in the Quorum of Twelve. So this message, my brothers and sisters, is no surprise to me. It is in harmony with the voice of the Spirit of God to me all during my eight years of missionary work.

Three weeks ago on Wednesday evening, the Lord gave to me a manifestation of his Spirit, and when I arose the next morning I told my companion that I would be called into the Quorum of Twelve. I believe I fully comprehend and I believe I keenly sense the burden and responsibility thus thrust upon me, and regardless of the fact that my weakness and inability rises before me as a mighty mountain, after prayerful and careful consideration I am prepared to say to you this morning, I am willing to abide your decision and endeavor to acquit myself as a minister for Christ, with a keen desire to stand for the right as God gives me to see the right.

Statement of Elder J. F. Garver, Accepting Call to the Quorum of Twelve

When on the 26th day of September, 1897, I was baptized a member of the church. In answer to my fervent prayer to know whether or not Jesus Christ was the Son of God and my Savior, the Father on that day by the testimony of his Spirit made me to know this same Jesus was indeed the

(Continued on page 1014.)

The Apocalyptic Paradox

Sermon by Apostle John W. Rushton

(Sunday, October 1, 1922, 8 p. m., at Conference Tent.)

"And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me; Weep not, behold: the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb, as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and the four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."

So read the first ten verses of the fifth chapter of the book of Revelation.

I feel sure that most of us would experience the same kind of a shock which came upon the man of vision were we commanded to look for a lion and on looking for the lion should discover a lamb, as though slain from the foundation of the world. All nations and all peoples have taken to themselves some sort of a symbol, and this symbol is supposed to be characteristic of the virtues which either were possessed by the people or to which they aspired. Our own Nation, as you may know, has taken the eagle with outstretched wings and tense talons screeching in strident voice challenge and triumph to the whole world. Russia has taken for its symbol the bear and growls most furiously. India has for its symbol the ponderous elephant. Germany, the double-headed raven, and the British people have the rampant lion, whose tail is extremely sensitive, so that the faintest whisper of encroachment arouses the antagonistic spirit, and roars of resentment echo around the world.

Sometimes these virtues and national emotions and characteristics are typified in the form of the flag. The one under which I have the privilege to stand this night is one of these rich in such symbolism. One of the most significant features of the flags of the universe seems to be the fact that all of those nations interested in the development of humanity's welfare have taken for their colors the red, white, and blue. It is true that these colors may be distributed in different designs and a variety of devices, but the energizing spirit of the whole is characterized by those features of which these colors have, from time immemorial, been representative.

The red stands for that courage which plows its way through oceans of blood, the earnest quest for victory and achievement in the purpose to which the heart is set; and the white stands as the badge of honor and of that untainted purity for which and with which only a resistless courage is a fit companion; and the blue always has been the symbol of immortal truth. In our respective countries, whether it shall be the vast Republic of the United States or the chivalrous France or the infinitesimal speck of nationalism which we know as Great Britain, the heart of every man pulses with pride, that the nation stands most gloriously and invincibly for the courage that is allied with honor and the courage and honor that may be desirable for everything which is immortally true.

Shall we, therefore, expect that the kingdom of God will not have its symbol? Shall we believe that the kingdom of God shall be denied an emblem befitting the qualities which should characterize the qualities of that kingdom? No! the kingdom of God possesses the symbol and the kingdom of God has its emblem. The symbol is not the rampant lion, neither of Judah, nor of Scotland, nor of the British Empire; it is not the screeching eagle, with the soaring wing and challenging talon; it is not the onward march of the ponderous, gigantic elephant, trampling everything down in its resistless course; it is not the manifestation of any of the majestic, brutish forces representative of the animalistic world. True, it is one of the animals of the animal kingdom, but it is the animal forevermore identified with innocence and sacrifice, and with a power to express itself only in the shedding of blood for the remission of the sins of the people. This it is which is in the very center of the throne of God instead of the rampant lion which was expected by the man who stood in apocalyptic vision. His vision was denied and as he looked in response to the call: I looked and in the midst of the throne and the four and twenty elders, I saw the lamb, the slain lamb, the lamb slain from the foundation of the world. In the midst of the throne and the four and twenty elders in the midst of the center of divine rule. The rule of which the choir sang to-night in that matchless "Gloria." In the midst of the ecclesiastical authority, in the midst of the impaneled and embellished priesthood of God. I looked and in the midst of the throne was the symbol of the regnant power of God. This was the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world. That is the paradox. The apocalyptic paradox means God's contradiction of human expectations. Just as nature is all the time engaged in the marvelous and miraculous changes and contradiction of human desires for the thing which we expect shall be impressive and majestic beyond the power of human language to describe, and it fades into nothingness. And that which is insignificant and infinitesimally small, despised, rejected, neglected, and insulted, forevermore is the germ of that which is immortal and triumphant.

The voice of inspiration bids one look for the lion of Judah; we look and behold the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Here is the symbol of the kingdom of God. Our emblem; a field of crimson and athwart the field of crimson, the ugly, black symbol of shame, of crime, and of human degradation, the cross. Foolishness to the man who rejects the message of the cross, but to those who know the saving grace of God, it is forevermore the power of God unto salvation.

Once more, we look for the lion and we find the lamb. We expect to hear the fanfare of victorious trumpeting and we hear the bleatings of the victims. Once more we look for the panoplied soldier who is of invincible crusaders, and we see the little children in whose innocent helplessness the destiny of our race is embraced. For "the little child" and all that childhood means to the race—leads us.

We are representing the kingdom of God. Our symbol is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Our emblem is the Flag whose field is red as blood, relieved only by the shadow of the cross, the emblem of voluntarily accepted shame by him who suffered for the sins and redemption of the people.

Do you observe the introduction to this strange and dramatic paradox? "I beheld the book written on every page within and on the back without and sealed with seven seals.' Says John, I asked, Is there no one can read the book? No one can break the seal? Is there no one who can decipher the mystery, interpret the hand of destiny? From the great mass of assembled humanity nothing was heard but the sign of defeat. No triumphant note of affirmative acceptance of the challenge. Defeat and silence pervaded until some one suggested the Son of Man can read the book or break the seal or interpret.

It is a very adventurous thing for a novice of a preacher to do, but with all due respect to the ability of my brothers and to the ability of the connoisseurs of preaching, which this congregation unquestionably has, I ask of you to accept my suggested interpretation of "the book." I say that the book is the Book of Life and possibly the seven seals are the seven ages of man, and only out of all the great and heroic names recorded in the pages of history, the Son of Man, the Man of Sorrows acquainted with grief, the man whose very name was a shame and a disgrace to his nation, the man who without any endeavor of soldiery or militarism or any self-assertion, made the whole world his debtor, and for two thousand years his gracious presence has been the vital essence of civilization's progress. He is the One to break the seals and interpret the mission and the message of life. In the book of God which he has given into nature's keeping, in the book of life which he has given into humanity's keeping, the same message of God has been interpreted and revealed and applied by the Son of Man in terms of sacrificial service, in all the gracious and dramatic display of his self-effacement as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

May I pause long enough to commune with you as I would commune with myself? May I put my question to you with reverence and with hesitation and yet with an earnest desire that it shall be considered at this juncture? Can the church of God, can the kingdom of God, of our Lord Christ, ever hope to succeed if it shall repudiate the qualities by which the Master and Leader, the Redeemer and the glorified one of humanity secured his success? Shall we hope to win our victory if we spurn the bleating lamb and insist upon the roaring lion of Judah? Can there be any substitute? Consider for a moment, if you will, all of the ways in which God has been approaching human consciousness. I care not whether you go back to the beginning of God's attempt to reach the souls and the intelligence of our race, if you shall consider the first of the great Hebrew prophets. One who as teacher and liberator and politician and statesman, gave the foundation of the will of God as the basis and salvation of the state. I refer to Moses. What was his attitude? What was the spirit and what was the force of his great life? True it is that when we first meet him he is the little babe hidden by the mother and cared for by his sister, discovered by a princess of the house of Pharaoh and trained in all the mysteries and education of the people with whom he lived.

God never at any time repudiated an intellectual force, as a reinforcement of his own purposes. While it is true that God has accomplished wonders through inspired ignorance, who will say that inspired intelligence will not take us still further in the achievement of the purposes of God.

But I want to state that God takes this man Moses and with the hereditary influence of national life, with advantages and disqualifications he picks this man who when you meet him under conditions of indignation aroused, and in fury of temper which belches forth, as a tidal wave of sympathy which breaks every bound of ethical and cultural law in defense of a victim of brutality. He smites down the cruel persecutor of one of his race. Was that enough? No! it is not enough that there shall be the rescue of one of the victims of an industrial system which fattens itself upon the life and soul of the multitude. It is not enough that there shall be one dramatic episode in which one man shall be rescued, but what is wanted is the triumphant knowledge of God's will and truth that shall smash to pieces a system that authorized such a thing. I say that what God wants is the gigantic and irresistible and all-pervading manhood in the leadership of the hosts of men who will speak the word and raise the forces which will break into pieces a power and system which can condone, excuse, or authorize such a thing as the sacrifice of one individual for the enrichment of the group in a material sense. That is the wolfish spirit. That is the spirit of tooth and claw, red in the blood of victims. That is the spirit of the law of the survival of the fittest. That is the dynamic of brutality, but it is not the spirit and essence of the altruistic law of Jesus Christ.

Take, if you will, the golden-tongued Isaiah, whose molten eloquence has run over every century and generation until we lave our souls in the bounteous steam of pristine power, and what was the burden of that message. It was the passionate cry of a tortured soul who resisted the encroachments of a conscienceless priesthood, of a bitter and tyrannous rule which selfishly sought to build itself up upon the sorrows, the pains, and the perpetual funeral procession of the mass. Take, if you will, all of those great men who in the evangelism of the Christian church have made names for themselves which come down to us as sweet smelling odors. I remember one distinctly now. This man was the author of a creed, one of the greatest credos the Christian church ever had, and sometimes in our lack of patience we have spoken disrespectfully of that creed, and yet in the creed of Saint Athanasius in the language which expresses the soul's hunger. Who was Saint Athanasius? Well, he was a little fellow, of small stature, and ungainly in his appearance, not pleasing to look upon, red hair, stubbly and unruly. His face was pock-marked. His voice was raucous, but he had the love of God in his heart and he went forth establishing the evangelism for which he is characteristic, a foundation which has withstood the test of time for these many centuries to this very hour. Not many years ago it was my privilege in Saint Louis to be invited to a very large assembly to hear one of the greatest humorists and one of the most noted philosophers in America. I went with great expectations as to the influence and personality of this man. Imagine, therefore, my surprise, when as the guest of a friend I went into the Jefferson Hotel, and as I walked through the lobby to sit at a dining table I passed by a very tall and handsome lady, to whom I was attracted, and hanging on to her arm was a little bit of misshapen humanity which moved along most painfully and slowly, with the aid of a heavy stick and holding on to this lady's arm with his other hand; but I noticed that the waiter moved very deferentially to this pair and showed them to their table and helped the little gentleman into his seat. And when I attended the lecture, imagine my surprise when I was introduced to this misshapen man as Marshall P. Wilder, one of the great humorists and most philosophical writers of his day. I looked for a lion and I found a lamb.

In walking along the streets of New York up Broadway amid the surging torrents and tides of restless humanity one night I actually bumped into a little wisp of a man, anything but handsome, a head three times too big for his body in size. People might push him and jostle him, sneer at him or ignore him everywhere, and yet Charles Proteus Steinmetz is the giant in the electrical world to-day, whose word is as authoritative in that science as is the word of a prophet in religion. Once again we look for a lion and we find a lamb. I mention these illustrations to show you how natural it is for us in the paradoxical movements of God and nature to have great expectations aroused and find after all that the saving grace is in the insignificant and unobserved. Isn't that true theologically? Consider fully the central truth of our religion, the doctrine of atonement. And what is that? Not the doctrine of substitution, which is an outrage against the human sense of ethics and the human understanding of justice, but I refer to the atonement in terms of identification. He who was rich became poor. He who knew no sin was made sin. That we who are poor might be made the riches of God and the righteousness of God. That is the spirit of atonement. The lamblike sacrifice that hesitates not to give its all that it may breathe the breath of life into the faltering, hesitant, deformed, broken, and ignored humanity for healing and life. That is the spirit and dynamic principle of the kingdom of God.

Can you, therefore, interpret the meaning of the Lord Christ's words to us when he said, "He that would be greatest among you, let him become the least"? Can you wonder that Bishop Moule, Bishop of Durham, while a student in Oxford, once became oppressed by the heartless tortures and scarifications to which he was subjected, pleaded with God to give him a message, and opening his New Testament he found these words, "And Simeon of Cyrene, being found, was made to carry his cross." The marks we have upon our bodies today, my dear friends, are not always the marks of bearing the cross, but the marks of our wearing anxiety and the attempt to dodge the responsibility of Christian life. The results of self-centeredness. So in all of the ways in which the grace of God touches the lives of men and women we find that our real joy, our real victory, our real spiritual triumph is in the very thing we spurned as drudgeries and objected to as impositions, and wished to dodge under every circumstance and condition. Isn't that our trouble? "Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart."

I would like to pause there and ask you to note while I tell you about Aristotle. Aristotle is probably the most intellectual Greek who ever gave humanity a message of truth. He was much more settled in his reasoning than Plato. Aristotle places the crown of human character, which his philosophy was intended to form, in two qualities, magnificence and high-mindedness. The first means lavish expenditures, exhibition of material wealth, and the second means self-conscious merit. The lion, the roaring of the king of the forest, the resistless power of animalism, all the glorious championing of those forces which make for human heroism, this is the end of life for the Greek. Aristotle says, Look for the lion, and he expects you to find the lion; but Jesus Christ says, Whosoever will follow me, let him take up his cross and sacrifice mother and brother and sister and wife and children and home; let him be loyal to me. Christ says, Look for the lion of Judah, but when you found it, he is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, in the midst of the throne of God.

Consider, if you will, the approach of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthian people. Those people who were a sort of national and intellectual hybrid between the Romans and the Grecians, all the time hungry for novelties, all the time wondering what to-morrow would bring forth, interested in unraveling the mysteries, and hungry for strange doctrines of the future, and Paul converted a great number of them. What happened? They were looking for the lion. I am of Paul; I, of Apollos; I, of Peter; and I, of Christ. And when they heard the bleating of the sheep they felt they had been imposed upon and fraudulently led into shambles when they believed they were being led into the regions of the great leonine king of the forest.

When I joined this church I quite expected my troubles were over. I thought every one of my friends would congratulate me upon my spiritual inheritance. Instead of that, they sneered at me. They insulted me and said, "Go to; don't come and tell that stuff to me." I don't say it flippantly, I say it truthfully—when the call of God comes, we feel that "Wo is me, if I preach not the gospel"; and, if I refuse to become the servant of the Spirit I would lose everything which life holds worth receiving. Is not that the testimony which the brethren spoke of this morning? We look for the lionlike rule and we find the sacrificial enterprises of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

I don't wonder that Tennyson very beautifully said, "I am always amazed, when I read in the New Testament, at the splendor of Christ's purity and holiness; but above all things at his infinite pity."

My dear friends, I want to say that the kingdom of God must have for its insignia, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; for its emblem, the blood red flag upon which the shadow of the cross shall never be lifted; in that cross we shall find the iridescent crown. If this church is going to succeed, it must succeed first, because it is an evangelical church. It is a church which knows the power and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is the church which understands the vocabulary of the divine. It is a church which understands the joy of service, which glories in surrender to redeeming servitude. It must understand the law of faith in which we are made free only to become the slave of love. It must understand that "the soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul." If our church is going to succeed in its economic and social vision and translate from the ethereal realms, the dreams of the seer and of the prophet the matchless thing presented to us this afternoon, it must be done only in the spirit of the sacrificed lamb of God. Oh, I wish we could see it. Perhaps you think that this sort of thing has no application to the science of economics and sociology, but I would like to say to you here, this interpretation of the apocalyptic vision has its principles in economics, politics, and sociology, just through such means as those whose names we honor in this our own land. I refer to William James and Josiah Royce. I refer to Ruskin, Hobson, and Tawney, of Great Britain; to Eucken, of Germany; and Bergson, of France; Maeterlinck, of Belgium. I refer to every man that writes upon these problems in the spirit of profound reverence, with the understanding of the historical background and such a work as "The acquisitive society," by this Tawney to whom I referred, in which he says that the redemption of our race as a societal structure depends upon the abandonment of personal rights and the glory of sacrificing ourselves in social functions for the good of the whole. That is stewardship. We have a great program. We have a great and glorious future. May I say to you that the prophecy of to-morrow is found in the history of yesterday? Whatever we may read in the history of our past, becomes the raw material of the future achievements. If we have based our hopes and expectations upon the lionlike zeal of assertiveness and associated with human progress in so many ways, we are banking and investing our hope upon a losing cause; but if we shall accept the Christ, and taking up our cross and following him even though it shall put upon us the shadow of shame and the burden of loss, we shall win.

In this spirit of social functioning for the glory of God and welfare of the whole, there is a foundation for success which will stand as Gibraltar against the rising tides and bursting billows of every racial struggle. The symbol of this kingdom is not the lion and all that the lion represents; it is not the screeching eagle, soaring through the cerulean blue; it is not the ponderous elephant, nor is it the tortuous serpent nor any one of the members of our great manageries; but, as the lamb without blemish, the lamb helpless and victimized, always for the good of the people.

Let us weary not; let us not become discouraged; let us not reject our high and holy calling in any petty spirit of personal striving for ascendancy, for the lamblike qualities throughout the history of our race have always been the preserving and saving power which is guiding our affairs.

Now, I want to say as I leave you, that if we shall consider this instead of allowing our minds to run in riotous imaginings on all sorts of things as to the outcome of the days before us, I believe that this church will come out of the crucible stronger and holier and sweeter and nobler than in its history. What we want is devotion to God and to God's service in the spirit of the lamb, for the good of our fellows and the glory of God in alignment with Jesus Christ our Lord.

Conference Business Sessions

Monday, October 16

Several resolutions from the Seventies were read. The following was moved for adoption:

"Resolved, That it is the sense and understanding of the three Quorums of Seventy in council assembled that any communication coming to the church in the nature of a revelation should be presented to the several quorums of the church prior to its presentation to the general body."

The President (as the adoption of the first resolution was proposed) arose as a matter of personal privilege to say that it was evidently personal to him. He questioned the right of this conference to so direct. He then retired from the assembly, yielding the chair to President Elbert A. Smith.

Elder Daniel Macgregor argued for the resolution as one of its movers. He quoted from the Abstract of Evidence wherein Joseph Smith made statements regarding submission of revelations to the quorums.

Church Historian Walter W. Smith argued at length in opposition to adoption of the resolution. He said its proposal was not based on the history of the past and that we should not restrict the prerogatives of the prophet of the church.

Six men wanted the floor at one time, following a speech by A. B. Phillips, who believed there was a misunderstanding of terms and that a revelation might be read to conference before being submitted to the quorums, which would not violate the spirit of the rule.

Elder Salyards read from Doctrine and Covenants 125:1 on the subject.

Elder T. W. Williams believed the matter should be settled now and forever. He spoke vigorously and at length and hoped we might adopt something of the nature, whether it be this or something else.

Elder A. H. Christensen believed that the submission of the resolution now with the delegations depleted, was unfair. He did believe the resolution was relevant, therefore he was not in favor.

As one man, half a dozen called on "Mr. Chairman!" to recognize them, but though it seemed like a tie, Apostle Garver was thought to be a second or so ahead and was given the floor. He was opposed to the resolution.

At 4.20 Elder Garver yielded the floor for adjournment. Next session was announced for 10 a. m. Tuesday.

Tuesday, October 17

After the opening exercises and reading of the minutes President E. A. Smith stated that unless overruled he would order read the report of R. B. Trowbridge, the auditor sustained at last General Conference. He stated this action was taken because two of the committee to whom it was referred had stated their desire that it be so read. The letter or report recited that a detailed report had been prepared in pencil form and would cover perhaps 250 pages. A request was made for provision for it to be typewritten or printed. President Smith then reviewed the history of the appointment of Brother Trowbridge as auditor, that he had been appointed by the Presidency and was released by the same authority, but only after approval by the Joint Council of the Presidency and Twelve; that A. H. Knowlton had then been appointed and was the present church auditor.

Elder J. F. Garver, who yielded the floor for adjournment last evening, was given the floor and continued his discussion in opposition to adoption of the resolution from the Seventies.

Each time there was a lull that seemed to indicate the conclusion of his speech, many persons sought the floor.

At the conclusion of his remarks Bishop Ellis Short secured the floor and moved to lay on the table. The vote resulted in 185 for and 95 against thus tabling the resolution.

The following resolution was moved and adopted without debate, a motion on the previous question eliminating discussion.

"The Order of Bishops submits for your action the following resolution: Excepting emergency expenditures, which may be approved by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, in no case shall the amount allowed to any general church officer's or conference appointee's family exceed $1,800, and the amount for personal and traveling expenses $1,800. The foregoing was adopted by the order by unanimous vote, all voting."

Another resolution was hastened to vote by similar procedure. It was to interpret the resolution to the effect that the provisions would continue in effect till set aside by the General Conference.

The following from Order of Bishops was moved:

"The Order of Bishops submits the following recommendation: Whereas, during the past twenty-seven months there has been a deficit in the operating expenses of the church of $269,327.52, we recommend that the building of the auditorium be postponed until after the next General Conference. This was passed by unanimous vote of the order."

It was also hastened to vote and adopted.

The audience seems anxious to get through with the business before the conference.

Another resolution was presented from Order of Bishops:

"The following is presented for your action after passing the order by unanimous vote: The Order of Bishops recommend that Graceland College be authorized to raise the necessary funds for the erection of gymnasium, estimated to cost $15,000, by subscriptions from the alumni and friends of the college."

The resolution was laid on the table after two speeches. One was by a member of the college board who said there was no disposition to more than lay the matter before the conference as one of the needs of the college. Another was by a missionary who thought any effort to raise this amount now would be very unwise.

Speeches were limited to fifteen minutes for the day. The following resolution was presented from the Seventies:

"Resolved, That we approve the findings and recommendations of the Joint Council in the Warren E. Peak case; that the silence imposed be lifted; and that his right to represent the church should be restored."

Adoption was moved and discussed by Daniel Macgregor and J. A. Koehler, for and against adoption.

Ere finishing his speech Bishop Koehler offered a substitute, as follows:

"That this matter be referred to the High Council for adjudication, and with the request that some other than the President of the church preside over the council."

With Apostle J. F. Curtis on the floor adjournment was had at twelve till two o'clock.

President Floyd M. McDowell was in charge at the opening of the business session at 2 p. m.

Apostle J. F. Curtis used his fifteen minutes to support the resolution proposing to restore the ministerial rights of Warren E. Peak. Being a member of the joint council, he reviewed in detail the history of the council's part in the case.

This case was referred to in one of the propositions submitted by the Twelve to the conference in one of its early sessions.

Elder Walter W. Smith was the next speaker. As a witness in the investigation made by the council committee, he reviewed more details of the case and argued that it should not have been reviewed by that committee. He preferred to have the matter referred to a court for adjudication.

Apostle J. W. Rushton followed in defense of the action and decision of Twelve and supported the resolution to restore on the grounds that the matter was purely one of administration and so presented and held for over three years.

Previous question being ordered by vote, the substitute was defeated and the resolution adopted by a large majority, thus directing return of license to Elder Peak.

President Elbert A. Smith spoke on a matter of personal privilege. He sought to correct allusions to an article from him published in the priesthood paper, One. This article, in the issue of April, 1921, sought to explain conference action on matters of silence.

Apostle T. W. Williams spoke as a matter of personal privilege, on the subject.

The following was moved, and by motion on previous question hastened to vote without debate. It was adopted almost unanimously:

"Owing to the fact that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction among the ministry and the membership at large contingent upon the matter of dropping so many missionaries from active service, believing that the greatest and most vital asset and power contributing to the success of the church, and most essential to its present crisis is increased missionary activity, we therefore

"Resolved, That all proposed projects involving the expenditure of church finances be postponed for another year and that the missionary arm of the church be immediately returned to appointment and activity to the extent of the financial possibilities of the church. Be it further

"Resolved, That we pledge our support to the Twelve in an endeavor to carry out the spirit of sections 114 and 122: 5, of the Doctrine and Covenants, and that the expenditure of money in any sum not authorized by the General Conference or indorsed by the council of Presidency, Presiding Bishops, and the Quorum of Twelve, be strictly prohibited."

The following from the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, dated May, 1922, was read and by motion action postponed till next conference.

Publication in the church papers was desired, so all the ministry could consider.

"We recognize that God always manifests his will in an orderly way, and his Spirit operates in harmony therewith; therefore in the matter of calling men to the ministry the law as found in Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14 should be observed:

"Branches and districts are to be conducted according to the rules given in the law as directed in a former revelation:

They shall take the things which have been given unto them as my law to the church to be my law to govern my church. And these affairs are not to be conducted by manifestations of the Spirit unless those directions and manifestations come through the regularly authorized officers of branch or district. If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers, and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction."

"In harmony with the foregoing, manifestations for which inspiration is alleged calling men to the ministry, should come through the officers named therein. However, should anyone other than the officials named presume to suggest the call of any to the ministry, the district or branch should not carry into effect until indorsement has been expressed by the administrative officers referred to above.

"In organized districts, no one shall be ordained to the office of elder, without the voice of the district or General Conference be had ordering such ordination. Ordinations to the Aaronic priesthood need only the approval of the branch or district conference. In cases of emergency all ordinations in the interim between the conference should be referred to the office of the First Presidency for disposition."

The boundary lines committee reported as follows and the report was adopted:

"We recommend that the boundary between Eastern and Western Colorado be the eastern boundary lines of the following counties: Routt, Eagle, Lake, Chaffee, Saguache, Alamosa, Costilla.

"We further recommend that the boundary lines of the Utah District remain as at present constituted."

The High Priests' Quorum recommended that the following be ordained high priests: A. R. White, Kansas City, Missouri; Henry Castings, Des Moines, Iowa; W. J. Brewer, Independence, Missouri.

The two first named were not present, but their qualifications were vouched for by others present. Brother Brewer was present and stated willingness to accept. All were indorsed by the conference.

The following report was made by the Bible Normal Book committee:

LAMONI, IOWA, February 1, 1921.

"To the First Presidency; Greeting: As your committee, the first of the year reminds us that an annual report should be made, even though it be prior to the meeting of General Conference.

"The situation concerning manuscripts before the committee has not materially changed since our last report. The Sunday school consulting board, under the advice and direction of the Sunday school executive council is making a survey of all of our religious educational work, having in view the purpose to place the Sunday school Quarterly work on a better basis; to provide adult quarterlies, including work in teacher training. Having in view the best good of the work of the church as a whole, it seems to your committee that it would be preferable that the whole matter of religious education be considered by the same committee or board; that the work could be more efficiently handled as a unit than piecemeal.

"We therefore very respectfully tender our resignation with the suggestion that the work be placed with the consulting board of the Sunday school, with the approval of the church, or that a committee or board be appointed by the church to have supervision of all the work in religious education previously undertaken in the Sunday school, Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and in teacher training; probably also at least a consideration of such work in religious education offered in a formal way by the church.

"It would seem for the best good of the work that we therefore respectfully tender our resignation.

"Most respectfully submitted,

"S. A. BURGESS,

"For the Committee."

The report was approved and the resignation of the committee accepted.

The following was moved and postponed by vote till next conference:

"That it be the sense of this body that inasmuch as the Book of Covenants provides that the First Presidency be the teachers of the revelations already received by the church, and that it be the will of this body that as an advisory board over all religious education, that the First Presidency act as this board."

The matter of committee on Book of Mormon archæology and maps was raised, and a motion offered that the committee appointed by the President several years ago be sustained and that the committee report to the next conference.

Discussion indicated that there is an insistent demand for some decision on this subject. Reliability of the old maps and possibility of acceptance of new ones proposed by Brother L. E. Hills was discussed briefly.

The matter was laid on the table by motion and vote.

The committee on Inspired Translation was asked to report the status of their work. Brother A. B. Phillips, secretary of the committee, made a verbal report, explaining that the combined index of over six thousand topics and work of verification is proceeding. As to when it will be completed it was not easy to make any predictions. It is proposed to use with the book about one hundred pages of Bible helps such as are found in teachers' Bibles.

A resolution was offered as follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that the Seventies be represented in the joint council."

Because of its importance, by a vote of 182 to 90 action was deferred one year.

The committee on administration to sick reported that 155 had been administered to.

Announcements included sermon in the church by Elder C. Edward Miller and an illustrated lecture at the Church of Christ building by Elder Charles Putnam.

Wednesday, October 18

With President Frederick M. Smith in the chair at 10 a. m., the business session opened with prayer by Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, who with forward-looking vision plead with God to help the church make the coming year the best possible for the church. Presidents E. A. Smith and F. M. McDowell were associated with F. M. Smith in presiding.

After the reading of the minutes a motion was offered to limit speeches to ten minutes, and this prevailed.

Church Historian Walter W. Smith asked for and was granted as a matter of personal privilege, opportunity to explain in behalf of the office of historian. He discussed his allusions to statements of Orson Hyde in the trial of Sidney Rigdon at Nauvoo in September, 1844. He had been asked if he cared to disparage the work of his predecessors in using these statements. He believed it proper for them to quote this man against the position of the Utah people since he was their witness.

The statement purports to quote Joseph Smith the Martyr as offering a safeguard in the matter of revelations that were submitted to quorums and "struck a snag."

The First Quorum of Seventy reported three sessions as a quorum, sixteen joint sessions with the Second and Third Quorums. Forty-two of the brethren were present at the conference of the sixty-one members enrolled. Two members are on foreign missions, Jacob Halb in Switzerland and Clyde F. Ellis in the Society Islands.

The Third Seventy reported two regular sessions and seventeen joint sessions. Ten of the brethren reported.

The joint council of Seventies reported that they had selected Elder E. E. Long as their member on the committee on compilation of conference resolutions.

The First Presidency nominated Floyd M. McDowell from their quorum on the same committee.

The Quorum of Twelve reported having unanimously voted to recommend Robert C. Russell and Ulysses W. Greene for ordination as evangelical ministers. It was presented without comment by the Presidency, because of having had no special leadings in this direction, but were willing to have the conference so act if they desired. There was ample work for them whether they had thus been called or not. Apostle Paul M. Hanson stated for the Twelve that they had felt the call was of God, and the proceeding was both regular and wise.

Brother Russell made a feeling response to the call, and in excellent spirit accepted the responsibility. He had been over twenty years in the ministry and hoped to continue faithful to the end, doing all he could to further the work he loves above all. The conference voted heartily to approve the ordination.

Elder Greene, not present on account of illness, was personally recommended by Apostle Rushton and President Elbert A. Smith as a strong, clean, wholesome man, who always had the respect and love of the Saints. The ordination was approved. Brother Greene has been in the Quorum of Twelve nearly twenty-one years. He has been home for a number of weeks suffering from malaria contracted in his mission work in the South.

A detailed report of the United Order of Enoch was read and spread on the minutes.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy recommended the following for ordination to office of seventy: Guy P. Leavitt, Orval L. Thompson, William I. Fligg, Abel Hall, Otis L. D'Arcy, Roscoe Davey, H. E. Winegar, Eli Bronson, Charles F. Putnam. Brothers Leavitt, Thompson, Hall, and D'Arcy were not present but were recommended by acquaintances among the ministry. The others were present and in addition to personal acceptance were indorsed by various ones of those present.

The following resolution was moved by E. E. Long and E. A. Curtis:

"Whereas, the Government of the United States provides that 'all men shall be free and equal,' and

"Whereas, there are 300,000 American Indians who are denied their God-given right by the Indian Bureau, therefore

"Be it Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in conference assembled, hereby declare that we favor the abolition of the Indian Bureau to the intent that the Indians may develop their potential usefulness and in common with the rest of us enjoy the liberty guaranteed by our flag."

With the statement that there were many angles to the proposition which could not well be explored here, Apostle Hanson moved to refer the resolution to the Joint Council, for report in one year.

Elder Long defended his resolution, hoping no delay would be tolerated.

Elder Walter W. Smith was in favor of reference.

Sister William Madison, whose husband is an Indian, spoke for reference, so we could give intelligent consideration to the whole matter.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion of reference to Joint Council prevailed.

The following was presented by the Order of Bishops and its adoption moved:

"The Order of Bishops by unanimous vote recommends that the expenditures of the conference year be reduced to correspond with the receipts, and to provide for this, that a committee of three be authorized to work out the details. This committee shall be composed of one member of the First Presidency, one of the Quorum of Twelve, and one of the Presiding Bishopric, to be chosen by each quorum respectively."

Bishop McGuire, in answer to a question as to the intent of the resolution, said that in view of our monthly deficit of ten thousand dollars for the past twenty-seven months, it is high time we agreed to curtail expenditures of all departments sufficient to conform to our income.

Elder Lee Quick argued that we ought to refer this sort of problem to the bishops, whose duty it is to handle such matters.

Elder Daniel Macgregor was in favor of the Presiding Bishopric handling the problem as the properly constituted body to whom such responsibility should be intrusted.

Elder C. E. Guinand was in accord with the suggestion of the Order of Bishops but thought there ought to be fewer local men working, with the church paying them family allowances.

Bishop J. F. Keir explained the reason for the resolution and had much confidence in the ability of the Saints to raise necessary funds for church needs.

The previous question was ordered, to shut off debate, and the resolution was adopted by large vote.

The session adjourned at 12 to meet again at 2 p. m.

"Call me forth to active service," was the musical invocation at the beginning of the 2 p. m. session, led by Frank A. Russell, followed by prayer by Patriarch Frederick G. Pitt.

President Frederick M. Smith was in charge, assisted by Elbert A. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell.

The secretaries of the conference throughout have been Church Secretary R. S. Salyards and Guy P. Fairbanks.

The Order of Bishops sent in the following recommendation:

"That we report with favor upon the request of the Sunday school for the use of its funds towards printing of textbooks."

The recommendation was adopted without opposition.

Another recommendation was that the Christmas offerings from January 1, 1922, to the end of 1923, become part of the church funds. This was adopted without debate.

The Order of Bishops further reported that they had been in frequent session during the conference. On October 6 they had met with the President to consider stewardship procedure, but because of lack of time were not ready to make recommendation.

High Priests' Quorum reported 265 members, 29 of these being bishops and 23 evangelists. The 213 others are engaged in various lines of activity; 152 of these have reported. Each year the quorum issues an annual with considerable data about the quorum and articles of general interest.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported 49 members.

The recommendation that Elder A. E. Stoff be ordained a high priest was approved.

The nominations for heads of departments were made by the Presidency as follows, and conference concurred:

A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of Sunday school; T. W. Williams, Superintendent of Religio; Dora P. Glines, Superintendent of Women's Department.

The personnel of the Standing High Council as approved by the Presidency was approved by motion and vote.

The President ruled that he saw no reason why one could not hold office in both the High Council and the Quorum of Twelve. If any specific disqualification arose, temporary substitution could be made.

The petition of the Massachusetts District to allow a change of name to the Southern New England District was granted by vote.

The recommendation from Kirtland District for early action on stewardships was referred to the Presiding Bishopric.

Two resolutions on tobacco, seeking to legislate as to ordinations and standing of those using it, were laid on the table without discussion on the basis that the propositions were already covered by the three standard books of the church.

The changes previously made in names of districts in England were concurred in.

A motion to take from the table the item on silencing of the ministry in the document from the Quorum of Twelve submitted early in the conference was defeated by a vote of 146 to 98.

The sustaining of various officers and quorums was taken up, and the following named and voted on:

First Presidency.

Quorum of Twelve.

Presidents of Seventy and Quorums of Seventy.

Presiding Bishopric.

Order of Bishops.

Order of Evangelists.

Eldership.

Aaronic priesthood.

Board of Publication.

The various departments, such as Sunday school, Religio, Women's Department, Health Department, Publicity Department, were sustained in one motion.

The various church officers such as historian, auditor, architect, physician, etc., were also sustained in a blanket motion.

There were no changes suggested for the Board of Publication by the Presiding Bishopric. At present it is composed of Benjamin R. McGuire, A. Carmichael, F. B. Blair, R. J. Lambert, and Arthur E. McKim.

President Floyd M. McDowell made a few remarks just prior to adjournment on the social problem before the church. He urged that we acquire more and more the attitude of appreciation and interest in the social problem which the world has not solved. It was urged that the Saints read during the coming year at least one late book on the subject and to consider him at the service of the people in this line.

Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith also offered some fatherly advice as to the attitude the Saints should have during the coming year. The year just past had been one of rumor and disquiet, but he hoped we might now be able to unify our ideals and methods and feelings to the glory of the cause.

Letters from the Quorum of Twelve, intended to become individual letters to the retiring members of the Twelve, were reported as being written by the quorum as now constituted. The one to Gomer T. Griffiths was read by John W. Rushton.

President Elbert A. Smith made a few remarks. He told of the Negro who reported to his captain that he had enlisted for the duration of the war; the war was over and he wanted to go home. The captain retorted. "'Rastus, you 'listed for the duration of the war. The war is over, but the duration has just begun."

Brother Elbert said that the past year had been one of Gethsemane to him. He had prayed earnestly that he might have light and guidance, but was impelled to say that he would be content to have daily guidance.

He agreed with previous statements of Bishop Keir that we ought to go out preaching tithing as well as baptism. No one should disparage the work of the other.

Bishop B. R. McGuire made a few remarks on tithing. The brother pleaded that rumor be not listened to. For instance, he was reported to have been a very sick man during the summer and ready to resign. He wished forever to lay at rest any such rumor. At no time had he considered resigning, but ever since coming to the work he was now doing had intended to stay with it, doing his best to advance the kingdom of God.

So far as possible, within his power he expected to support the church officers, his associates in the kingdom of God. No matter what the volume of funds in the coffers of the church, the work cannot advance any faster than our possibilities are advanced by the Spirit of Jesus Christ. We proceed on the basis of faith, hope, and charity.

President Frederick M. Smith made some personal remarks ere closing, saying that he needed not recount his trials in the recent situation, nor how reluctantly he felt the harness settling on him again. The work before the church, he felt, could not be done except by a united ministry. He desired the prayers and spiritual support of all the ministry. The work of the church, he said, is the greatest thing in his life and he hoped it would continue to be.

Church Statistician Frank A. Russell urged special attention to the matters of reports on matters of ordinations, marriages, baptisms, etc., to be reported to his office.

Ministerial appointments, the President said, will stand as they now exist till such time as the appointing quorums can consider them, when the persons involved will be notified and publication made.

The conference adjourned at 3.40 p. m. to meet in Independence, Missouri, October 1, 1923.

Board of Publication

To the President and General Conference; Greeting: Report of the Board of Publication is submitted herewith:

Since the last General Conference the publishing interests of the church have passed through a period fraught with difficulties. The paper market has been somewhat easier than it was during the actual war period, but prices and qualities have neither one as yet returned to the pre-war basis, although the war time difficulties of securing sufficient stock for our needs have been eliminated. The paper market at present is showing an upward tendency, but we are inclined to the opinion that this will not last for an extended period, but only until the labor and railroad situations become normal, which may, however, be several months.

In accordance with the action of the General Conference, arrangements were made and carried out under the immediate supervision of G. S. Trowbridge, manager of the Herald Publishing House, for the removal of the plant of the Herald Publishing House from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri. This removal was accomplished without any delay in the publication of the regular periodicals. A portion of the machinery, which could be spared without closing down the plant, was first dismantled, beginning May 2, 1921, and removed to Independence, where it was placed in its new position in the plant which had been made ready. When it was re-erected and ready for use, on the 16th of May, 1921, the basis of operations was changed to Independence, using the Ensign plant and the portion of the Herald plant which had been moved, to get out the papers until the remainder of the plant at Lamoni could be taken down and moved, which was accomplished in one week, though it took an additional week to get it all in running order in Independence, and it was several weeks before all was completely straightened out. As soon as the last lot of machinery from Lamoni was ready for operation, the machinery from the Ensign plant, which it was planned to use in the amalgamated plant, was removed to the new location. There were a total of eleven carloads of freight to be moved from Lamoni, and the total cost of the amalgamation was $30,185.26, consisting of the following items:

COST OF MOVING HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE FROM LAMONI AND REMODELING BUILDING AT INDEPENDENCE

Nature of charges and account to which charged.	Amount
Real Estate—Remodeling building at Independence	$24,560.93
Wages—Extra labor	1,079.63
Loss and Gain—Boxing and lumber for moving	235.64
Changes in machinery and equipment incident to removal	1,649.35
Freight and Drayage—Transportation charges from Lamoni, etc.	2,416.45
Sundries—Miscellaneous items	204.26
Deposits—New meters	39.00
	<hr/>
	$30,185.26

Following is a financial statement of the Herald Publishing House as of June 30, 1922:

BALANCE SHEET Assets

Current:

Cash on hand and in banks	$ 393.30
Liberty Bonds	600.00
Notes receivable	$25,785.83
Less reserve for uncollectible	716.90	25,068.93

Accounts receivable

Merchandise, outside accounts	$ 5,799.12
Merchandise, sundry church societies, etc.	410.75
Merchandise, agents' accounts	2,262.71
Church inter-departmental	16,743.37
	<hr/>
	$25,215.95
Less reserve for bad debts	1,233.43	$23,982.52

Merchandise:

Finished	$19,074.01
Incomplete	15,138.27
In process	3,432.07
	<hr/>
	$37,644.35
Supplies (raw materials)	3,828.00	$41,427.35
Revision Committee expense		2,066.66
Deposits—public service		89.00
		<hr/>
		$93,672.76

Fixed:

Real estate at cost	$43,623.16
Appraisal appreciation	6,376.84	$50,000.00
Furniture, fixtures, and equipment	} Old Book Value } $39,472.70
Machinery
Tools, effects, and power wiring
Type metal, cuts, etc.
Appraisal Appreciation	20,362.10	$59,834.80
		<hr/>
		$109,834.80

Accruals:

Deferred Charges:
Expense inventories	$437.25
Unexpired insurance	915.16
Interest receivable		$1,352.41
		<hr/>
		$1,352.41

Total Assets

$206,217.52

Liabilities

Current:

Notes payable
Banks	$ 3,500.00
Others	3,099.00
	<hr/>
	$ 6,597.00
Accounts payable:
Unexpired subscriptions	$17,593.53
Guarantee deposits	251.60
Refund account	201.15
Royalties	42.50

Merchandise accounts	73.93
Free subscription fund	7.70
Church inter-departmental ac- counts	10,519.59	$28,690.00
		$35,287.00
Accruals: For interest payable		10.79
Reserves
For taxes		1,011.40
Present Worth:
Balance as adjusted June 30, 1921....		$165,262.10
Add real estate, appreciation
June 30, 1922	$ 6,376.84
Add machinery, furniture, fix- tures, type, tools, appreciation
June 30, 1922	20,362.10	26,738.94
		$192,001.04
Deduct:
Operating loss June 30, 1922 (See Profit and Loss State- ment below)	$ 4,499.18
Adjustment of unearned subscrip- tion (See Profit and Loss Statement below)	17,593.53	$22,092.71
Net worth June 30, 1922.....		$169,908.33
Total liabilities		$206,217.52
Net worth June 30, 1922		$169,908.33
Net Worth June 30, 1919 (last report)
Herald Publishing House	$114,694.66
Ensign Publishing House	14,196.86	$128,891.52
Net gain July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1922		$ 41,016.81

It will be noticed that the above statement shows a net gain since last report of $41,016.81. Attention is called, however, to the fact that the statement shows an appreciation of real estate of $6,376.84 and of machinery, etc., of $20,362.10, making a total appreciation of assets of $26,738.94, and leaving a net increase in present worth, in addition to appreciation, of $14,277.87. The appreciation of the value of the real estate and machinery, etc., results from appraisal made by the Topping Valuation Company, of Kansas City, who appraised the plant and machinery on June 30, 1922, for insurance purposes.

While the above statement shows an increase in present worth for the three-year period since last report, the profit and loss account for the year ending June 30, 1922, which is shown below, indicates a net loss in operation for the year of $4,499.18. This is occasioned through a falling off in the sales of books, merchandise, and periodicals. The sales of books and merchandise for the twelve months ending June 30, 1922, amounted to $25,947.78, while for the previous twelve months the sales of the same commodities amounted to $55,845.29, a falling off of $29,897.51. The sales of our regular periodicals for the last fiscal year amounted to $30,742.81, as against a sale for the preceding year of $35,562.47—a falling off of $4,819.66, which would have been largely profit, as additional copies after the first five thousand are much cheaper. This item alone, if the subscriptions had held up, would have nearly overcome the loss for the year. During the last fiscal year the amalgamated printing plant did $30,577.00 worth of commercial job printing, while the combined commercial work of the Herald and Ensign during the previous year amounted to $26,871.51, showing an increase for the last fiscal year, in commercial work, of $3,705.49.

From this it is apparent that the loss in revenue for the last year is due to the failure of the Saints to keep up their subscriptions to the periodicals and to buy our church books and literature. Unless we can in some way increase our subscription lists and sales of books, or make up this loss in volume by additional commercial work, we are bound to continue to operate at a loss.

We shall make another earnest effort immediately to encourage an increase in the subscription lists and in the reading of our good literature, and solicit the hearty cooperation of the Saints in this respect, as well as by affording the publishing house an opportunity to supply all of the printing needs of our members and friends.

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT FOR THE YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1922

Sales: Subscriptions received (actual cash paid in advance, etc.)
Herald	$10,573.55
Ensign	5,522.73
Stepping Stones	6,668.27
Autumn Leaves	4,630.74
Hope	2,412.81
Priesthood Journal	434.40
Journal of History	403.40
Sanhedden's Banner	47.01
Actual Sales—Commercial Printing	30,577.00
Actual Sales—Merchandise	25,947.78
		$87,267.59

Add:
Other income	$1,901.27
Interest earned	97.03
Notes payable charged off	104.00
Advertising	80.26
Cash averages	60.38
Paper sales	30.00
Rents received (Lamoni office rents)	5.25	$2,278.19
Gross income		$89,545.78

Deduct:
Cost of sales (including selling expense):
Salaries and wages (editorial, mechanical, etc.)	$48,086.82
Supplies (raw materials)	18,744.95
Sundries (oils, laundry, water, packing, etc.)	3,372.18
Postage	3,476.07
Light, heat, and power	2,151.02
Freight and express	1,016.30
Discounts given agents and others	963.69
Advertising	237.74
Royalties	59.14	$78,107.91

Deduct:
General expense:
Salaries (general office and management)	$ 9,647.88
Bad accounts	2,334.08
Taxes	1,229.11
Ground rent on leased property	810.00
Postage	700.00
Repairs	569.63
Telephone	238.00
Accounting installation	140.16
Interest paid	107.76
Insurance	146.88
Lost packages (in shipment) ..	8.00
Miscellaneous items	5.55	$15,937.05
Gross operating expenses	$94,044.96
Net operating loss	4,499.18

STANDARD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Report of Standard Publishing House, of Australia, at the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1922, is as follows:

Dear Brother: I have pleasure in reporting to you that I have completed the audit of the books and vouchers of the Standard Publishing House for the year ended June 30, 1922, and have found everything in order. The books have been well kept and the internal check provided by the system of accounting in operation shows that accuracy has been secured.

The inventory of plant is shown at present value, though the cost of the equipment was less than the amount shown. Some two years ago the plant was written up to present value in order to provide for fire risks. The difference between the total value of plant shown and the reserve for depreciation plus the general or capital reserve.

I have also written up the private ledger and prepared the final accounts for the year, which are appended to this report. These accounts have been prepared on similar lines to those which have been submitted to the mission conference in past years, and comprise the following:

(1) Trading Account, showing the amount of the sales and the gross profit resulting from both manufacturing and trading.

(2) Profit and Loss Account, showing the expense of conducting the business, and the net profit which resulted.

(3) Profit and Loss Appropriation Account, showing the apportionment of the profits to Sinking Fund for Extensions and Capital Account.

(4) Balance Sheet, showing the assets and liabilities as at June 30, 1922, and the capital invested at that date.

Trading Results: The results of the trading for the year was a net profit of $778.75, being 6.1 per cent on sales and 9 per cent on the capital invested in the business. This shows a falling off in net profit of 4.5 per cent. An analysis of the figures on a percentage basis shows that this has been due to increase of manufacturing costs. Though the house traded against a falling market all the year round it is a matter for congratulation that the cost of goods sold and materials used showed an advantage of 1.1 per cent over the figures for the previous year. Wages increased by 2.1 per cent, outside work increased by 2 per cent, and linotype composition, which is done outside the business, increased by 1.7 per cent, showing a net increase on manufacturing of 5 per cent.

Probable cause of increased costs: The probable cause of the increased manufacturing costs are:

(1) A shortening of the working week by four hours.

(2) My withdrawal from the management has caused Brother Swain to spend a portion of his time in management which has kept him from productive work.

(3) The amount of work done outside the office increased to the extent already outlined, but had this work been done inside the office it could not have been done at the price paid, as we should have had to compete with handwork against machinery.

(4) The linotyping composition, which is also done outside the business, has also increased as previously stated. Much work set by hand when Brother Swain was not the manager has had to be sent to the trade linotypers this year and we find that on small work their charges exceed the cost of hand setting.

(5) The loss on the publication of the Gospel Standard was greater this year than hitherto. I have said "publication," but I mean production. By the way, if it would be possible for us to have a good linotype machine installed, suitable for doing jobbing as well as book and newspaper work, it would be a great advantage to the office and would reduce the cost of linotype composition. This cannot be done, however, without assistance from America.
Loss on Standard Production:

As the object of running the printing department is to provide for the publication of our tracts and the Gospel Standard, it is not a cause for alarm that we lose money on the Standard. It is doing good work for the church, both among members and nonmembers, and the resultant loss may be charged to propaganda.

Apportionment of Profits:

The sum of $222.50 has been allocated to the sinking fund for extensions, and $556.25 to the capital account. Our present premises and plant are rapidly becoming inadequate to the needs of our publishing interests and for this reason a sum is set apart from the profits each year and invested outside of the business, in readily resalable securities.

In conclusion I wish to say that the office is being conducted in an efficient manner. We have no person who attends to nothing but management, for the volume of business is far too small to justify the employment of such person. Brother Swain is the working manager. Sister Blanche Flood is the secretary and attends to all office concerns. The two work well together. All matters regarding finance are referred to me, and where necessary, to the Board of Publication (Australian). It is probable that I may be required to work so far away from the office at times that it may not be possible for me to continue as auditor, but in such a case a public accountant can be employed to do the work at a small cost. This is the common practice with small firms such as ours in this city. If possible, in the event of my having to relinquish the position, we shall arrange for the audit to be done by a member of the church who is employed in an accountant's office.

BALANCE SHEET, JUNE 30, 1922.

Assets
Cash:	$ 2,287.75
At Bank of New South Wales	$ 730.25
At Government Savings Bank	1,557.50
Sinking Fund Investments:	1,112.50
Accounts Receivable:	2,916.66
In sales ledger	$2,631.90
In Standard ledger	246.99
In private ledger	31.15
Prepayments	174.61
	$3,084.65
Less doubtful debts reserve	167.99
Stock:	$2,954.10
Work in progress:	1,110.90
Lino Metal Stores	32.75
Herald Periodicals Suspense Account	48.76
Typewriters:	$178.00
Less depreciation, 10 per cent	17.80
Furnishings	31.44
Furniture:	$316.51
Less depreciation, 10 per cent	31.65
Buildings:	$1,345.68
Less depreciation, 2½ per cent	33.73
Plant and Machinery:	$6,557.46
Less depreciation reserve	792.27
	18,017.06
Liabilities
Accounts Payable: *	$ 4,921.56
In bought ledger	$4,616.91
In sales ledger	254.05
In private ledger	12.60
In Standard ledger	38.00
Notes Payable	601.95
Sinking Fund for Extension	1,112.50
Miscellaneous Trust Receipts	24.85
Capital Reserve	2,194.85
Capital: Balance June 30, 1921	$8,605.60
Add proportion of net profit allocated for the period ended June 30, 1921, as per profit and loss account	556.25
	9,161.85
	$18,017.06

* Amount due Herald Publishing House is $4,693.59.

Profit and Loss Account for Year Ended June 30, 1922.

Gross profit from sales	$3,015.82
Rebates on paper purchases	14.98
Linotype metal bought and sold	109.06
Discounts received	121.69
	$3,261.55
Deduct:
Advertising	$ 82.36
Bad debts	122.15
Commissions	5.34
Discounts allowed	7.50
Depreciation	93.50
Freight and cartage outwards	224.02
Fire insurance	100.51
General expenses	292.49
Interest	50.38
Printing and stationery	59.31
Postage and Telegrams	157.15
Rates and taxes	37.51
Salaries	1,077.68
Telephone charges	66.93
Traveling expenses	90.93
Wrapping materials	15.04
	$2,482.80
Net profit to appropriation account	$ 778.75

Profit and Loss Appropriation Account

Transferred from profit and loss account	$778.75
To sinking fund for extensions	$222.50
To capital account	556.25	$778.75
		$778.75

W. J. HAWORTH, Auditor.

The above report has been compiled from the report of the manager of the Herald Publishing House to the Board of Publication, which has been audited and found correct by the General Church Auditor, Mr. A. H. Knowlton, and from the report of the manager and auditor of the Standard Publishing House, of Australia.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Chairman of the Board of Publication.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 19, 1922.

Children's Home

For two years ending June 30, 1922

To the General Conference; Greeting: In addition to the regular quarterly meetings the board has held twelve called meetings since the date of our last report.

The board as now constituted is: Bishop A. Carmichael, president; Jay W. Barr, Minnie B. Nicholson, Martha A. Young, A. J. Yarrington, treasurer; and Callie B. Stebbins, secretary.

The members whose terms expired in 1921 were Mark H. Siegfried and Callie B. Stebbins. These the board by vote retained, to hold over until their successors could be elected by the conference. But in April, 1922, Brother Mark H. Siegfried resigned. At the conference of October, 1922, there will be these two vacancies to fill, in addition to those occurring by the expiration of terms of office in 1922; the members held over from April of this year being A. J. Yarrington, Minnie B. Nicholson, and Jay W. Barr.

During the period covered by this report thirty children were received at the home, six of these having been returned after placement. Twenty-two were placed in homes and twenty-one were returned to friends. One was committed to the Iowa State Industrial Home for girls.

Thirteen children are now in the care of the home, one, a baby, being boarded outside of the home.

Most of the applications of those who desire to take children from the home are for children under two years of age. The youngest child for adoption at present in the home is six years old. The others range from eight to fifteen years. Homes are needed for these.

A segregation cottage has been provided which is a great safeguard for the health of the children.

They have been in school quite regularly and their standing has compared favorably with that of other children.

Marked improvement has taken place in the home grounds. A large playground has been laid out and attractively surrounded with shrubs and plants. The equipment is simple and additions to it would be most acceptable.

With the advice of a landscape gardener many growing things have been disposed about the place in a way to add greatly to its beauty, and the interest of the children has been enlisted to aid in keeping in order.

A fine spirit of cooperation between the management and helpers has borne fruit in homelike and helpful conditions for the children, with the natural response thereto.

Much credit is due the superintendent, Miss Zilpha Monroe, for improved conditions in general.

Respectfully submitted,
CALLIE B. STEBBINS, Secretary.

Approved by the Board.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT

To the First Presidency; Dear Brethren: The following supplementary report with recommendation is submitted in the hope that it may be added to our annual report to go before the conference.

We desire to present to you the problem of teen age children, concerning whom the home finds itself in much perplexity.

The age limit for holding children at the home is sixteen years, as defined by the law of Iowa. Application is frequently made to the home for admission of children thirteen or fourteen years of age. We have found it difficult to secure homes for such as these because the majority of people prefer younger children. We hesitate to receive them at the home, since the time we could hold them there would be too short either for the correction of undesirable habits or the formation of desirable ones. Then, too, as they enter this unsettled age they yield less readily to the regulations of the home and their influence is detrimental to the younger children.

What can be done for needy children of this age and for those a little older who are practically alone in the world?

Of the thirteen children now in the home, four will reach the age of sixteen within the next twelve months. Going from the care of the home, they will be responsible to no one. At this critical time they will be thrown upon their own resources without restraint or guidance.

We suggest that a vocational school might meet the need of these and others of this age who may never have sought admission to the home. The State is equipped to care for delinquent children. The need seems greater for these normal ones, that they may by interesting work and companionship be held over to a more reliable age; in the meantime earning their way by the work provided for them.

Separate homes for the boys and the girls would be needed.

We recommend that some such provision, even though on a very small scale, be made in the near future.

CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
Secretary Board of Trustees.

Secretary

To the First Presidency and the General Conference:

The work of this department includes keeping and publishing of minutes and records, general correspondence, preparation of literary matter, proof reading, etc. Correspondence increases with the growth of the church, which necessitates imparting information concerning its history, doctrine, and general policy. We furnish general information to missionaries, local ministers, and members of the laity. The general public, through publishers, organizations, and other channels also continues increasing manifestation of interest in the church and its faith, if we are to judge by the number of inquiries asking for definite information. The practice of applying to us direct for reliable official statements of fact is gratifying; it evidences the growth of a more liberal and considerate spirit. It is apparent that the establishment and growth of our local congregations, in urban and suburban communities, with the record of Christian citizenship being made by our people, is giving to the church the best advertising possible. It is clearly the very best we can furnish. It has a deeper meaning than mere statistical information, valuable as that is conceded to be. Requests for matter for publication have come also from foreign publishers.

Minutes and Records.—The published minutes and records report our work in general. The following in addition is presented:

Appointments of 1920: The General Conference of 1920 made the following general missionary, and local appointments: Of the First Presidency 2, Quorum of Twelve 11, patriarchs 13, Presiding Bishopric 3, bishops 3, secretary and assistant 2, physician 1, architect 1, recorder 1, publicity agent 1, stake officers 17, missionaries 120, local ministers 44, superannuated 4; a total of 226.

The Post-conference Council added to this list: Missionaries 54, local ministers 16, bishops 1, unordained women 75; which, plus conference appointees, made a total of 301.

Missionaries 2, evangelists 1, superannuated 1—a total of General authorities made other appointments during the period dating from May, 1920, to January 31, 1921, as follows: Missionaries 45, local ministers 14, bishops 3, unordained women missionaries 10; total 72: a grand total of all appointments, 373. Of this number 10 were released, 67 were transferred.

Changes in Appointments, 1922.—On February 15, 1922, because of financial conditions, the following changes in appointments were reported: Voluntary resignations 4, released 21; total 25.

New List of Appointments, May, 1922.—Under continuing financial stringency, the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric met in the spring of 1922 and revised the late list of appointments, with the following result, as published in the Saints' Herald, May 31, 1922. (This list does not include general and stake officers named in the first list; it includes a few minor changes to September 6, 1922. Missionaries 74, supervisors of mission work 48, local ministers 36, bishops 2, evangelists 2, unordained women missionaries 15, superannuated 8; total 192, which plus 43 standing general appointees gives a total of 235. From May 31 to September 6, 1922, one appointed was referred, 4 were released, 1 transferred, and 1 granted leave of absence.

Business Deferred or Referred.—Minutes of 1915, page 2057; Atonement question from Eastern Colorado District: Referred to Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. Minutes of 1916, page 2246; Committee on Rules of Order and Debate.

1. Routine Business, etc.—Reports of general officers, quorums, boards, committees, departments, organizations, etc., including: The First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, Presidents and Quorums of Seventy, Presiding Bishopric, Order of Bishops, Order of Evangelists, General High Council, Quorum of High Priests, Mass Quorum of Elders, (Quorum of Elders and quorums of Aaronic priesthood report to their several stake or district conferences); Architect, Auditor, Chorister, Historian, Physician, Recorder or Department of Statistics, Secretary, Board of Publication, Librarian, Order of Enoch, Children's Home, Graceland College Trustees, Sanitarium Trustees, Bureau of Graphic Arts, Latter Day Saints Sales Association, Sunday School, Religio, and Women's Department.

Standing Committees.—On Bible Normal Book; Joint Committee on Church of Christ; on General Conference credentials, appointed by the Presidency; on memorial to Joseph and Hyrum Smith; on revision of Rules of Order and Debate; on Saints' Homes, Lamoni, Iowa, and Holden, Missouri.

2. Election of Trustees: Of Children's Home, Graceland College, Sanitarium.

3. Time Limit on New Business.

4. Time of Adjournment.

5. Sustaining of officials, boards, committees, orders, organizations, etc.

6. Appointments of Ministers.

Personnel of Boards, Officers, Standing Committees, etc.

Memorial to Martyrs: B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, M. H. Siegfried, G. P. Lambert. Bible Normal Book: S. A. Burgess, J. A. Gunsolley, F. M. McDowell. Board of Trustees for Children's Home: A. Carmichael, Jay W. Barr, M. H. Siegfried, A. J. Yarrington, M. B. Nicholson, Martha A. Young, C. B. Stebbins—last three nominated by Women's Department. Board of Publication: A. Carmichael, F. B. Blair, A. E. McKim, R. J. Lambert, B. R. McGuire. Delegate Credentials: Appointed by First Presidency. Church of Christ: B. R. McGuire, I. A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, W. W. Smith, M. H. Siegfried, F. M. Sheehy. Graceland College Trustees: George N. Briggs, J. F. Garver, W. E. Hayer, A. Carmichael, J. W. Wight (deceased), T. A. Hougas, C. B. Woodstock. Revision of Book of Rules: F. M. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, H. O. Smith, J. A. Tanner, E. L. Kelley, A. B. Phillips, T. A. Hougas. Subcommittee: F. M. Smith, S. A. Burgess, C. O. Leeka (deceased).

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

September 15, 1922.

A Summary of Other Reports

The General Conference which closed the afternoon of October 18 was the longest that has ever been held in the church, so far as we have been able to ascertain. The next longest was held in 1900, when the conference continued until April 21, or sixteen days. But there was no conference in 1899. The conference this year continued for eighteen days but was held after two and a half years.

We are trying to give the most important news in the weekly SAINTS' HERALD, probably about half of that which appeared in the Daily. This will give some duplication to subscribers of the Daily, but the weekly has always given the news of the conference. We have published practically all of the reports in the Daily, but as to those not published in the weekly edition we submit herewith a brief summary.

The Sunday School Department

A. Max Carmichael as superintendent reported the resignation of Gomer R. Wells, and his own appointment in the summer of 1921, to take effect that fall. Sister Blanche Edwards, of Birmingham, England, was then appointed as first assistant. A. W. Smith resigned in the spring of 1922. F. M. McDowell succeeded him, as second assistant. E. D. Moore as general secretary has had charge of the publishing of the quarterlies and oversight of the work of promoting visual education in the Sunday school by getting pictures, slides, and the like for use. He has also had supervision of the securing of dramatic material for use in the local churches. Miss Marcella Schenck has assisted in this work.

Miss Nellie Anderson as historian reports the history of the department completed to date.

Mrs. Anna De Jong Smith reports 21 new organized classes since last report. The organized class movement should be pushed in its larger aspects, including the cooperative participation of a church group in the maintenance of the church and in the reconstruction of the community and the world in the accomplishment of our Zionie projects.

Bishop M. H. Siegfried continued as treasurer and shows receipts for the year ending June 30, 1920, of $5,721.10; expenditures $5,217.02; net income, $504.08. For the year ending June 30, 1921, receipts were $11,594.53; expenditures of printing, $7,091.88; department expense, $3,052.49; net income, $1,450.16. For the year ending June 30, 1922, receipts from quarterlies, $15,463.05; expense of printing, $10,321.34; profit on publication, $5,141.71; department expense, $1,783.61; net income, $3,368.10. This last includes a return of a loan of $10.00. Present worth, $12,305.82.

The balance of the report considers the Sunday school problem in religious education, the necessity for a revision of the curriculum. Mrs. R. S. Salyards has handled the quarterly work, making only necessary corrections in the Beginner, Primary, Junior, and Intermediate Quarterlies. She has completely rewritten the Senior Quarterly, beginning with January, 1922, to March, 1923. S. A. Burgess has acted by appointment of the consulting board as revising committee. The work of this department has already been discussed in previous articles, and something of the outlook for religious education.

The Religio Department

The superintendent was away from America for the greater part of the past two years and a half. Howard W. Harder assumed much of the work of the office in addition to his regular duties as stenographer to the Presidency. F. M. McDowell has supervised the work of the Boy Scouts and prepared lessons for the Senior Religio Quarterly. R. A. Lloyd has cared for the work of the treasurer with credit. Sister Vida E. Smith acted as editor of the Religio Department of Autumn Leaves until June, 1922. She also edited the Junior Religio Quarterly. Miss Mary Steele, who was appointed as superintendent of the girls in 1921, found it necessary to resign her position last summer and Miss Addie Belle Chappell has been appointed. The department stands ready to blend its efforts with the other departments.

Historian and Library

The historian's office and library have been removed from Lamoni to Independence, Missouri. The office work has been conducted with as little expense as possible. Heman Hale Smith left the office in the fall of 1921 to devote himself to educational work and further study and research. He has given considerable time to the preparation of the manuscript for the fifth volume of the church's history. This has been done with only a nominal cost to the office. This volume is designed to cover from the close of the fourth volume in 1890 to the death of President Joseph Smith in 1914. The historian's office, in collaboration with A. E. McKim of the Publicity Department, is preparing a shorter history of the latter-day work, which they hope soon to present to the public. The work on the Journal of History has continued and some corrections have been made in books, encyclopedias, periodicals, and materials supplied for the Government reports on religious bodies.

There are three cases of curios and a considerable number of manuscripts, letters, diaries, and journals which are stored for safety in the vault. This includes the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, the manuscript of the Holy Scriptures, the Inspired Version, a few pages of the manuscripts of the earlier revelations, and a collection of autographed original copies of the revelations given to the Reorganized Church.

Pursuing the policy of consolidation, the historian's library has been accessioned with the general church library and the library in Zion. There have been added 2,979 volumes which, with the original Independence stake library, now makes a total of 6,871 books, besides pamphlets and leaflets.

Separate department libraries are maintained—Sunday school, women's, and musical section, archæology and ethnology. Sister Viola V. Short has acted as assistant church librarian and supervised this work.

The greater part of the general church library which was located at Lamoni was consolidated with the Graceland College library at the time of removal. Miss Lyda Elefson has acted as assistant church librarian and has supervised the work of the library at Graceland College.

President F. M. Smith has made a very large donation of books which has greatly assisted the library. Paul M. Hanson has also made material donations, and Charles Smurthwaite has donated 368 volumes, mostly scientific works.

Publicity Department

This department has been in existence a little over two and a half years and has made a continuous effort to build up a church-wide organization to include a regularly authorized agent in each branch. This work is by no means complete, but about three hundred branches have recognized the importance of advertising to the extent of appointing a local publicity agent, and the list is growing. The main office devotes considerable time to building up interest in church advertising in the branches to improve the class of advertising, to supply tracts and literature for the missionaries and inquirers. This latter work is charged against the Publicity Department's budget and the distribution of our church literature is systematized, recorded, and followed up.

The office tries to correct misrepresentations in the press, but particularly tries to forestall by properly informing and making friends of the newspaper men. The necessity of such use is urged upon local publicity agents, and some splendid results of such use have been made. There is little disposition on the part of any newspaper or magazine to misrepresent and we have a standing that assures us courtesy and as a rule fair treatment. There are a few professional "Mormon baiters" who make their living out of stories which they rehash and sell to the more gullible element of the public. But they are of little influence.

The Publicity Department has rigidly curtailed its expenditures, hence has used less than half of its budget of $8,000 last year, and the general publicity agent took a five-month leave of absence without pay. The office work was necessarily slowed up but desirable newspaper acquaintances were made all over the United States. All departments of the church need advertising.

Church Architect

Since January 1 the church architect has given his time almost entirely to private work, in order to relieve the church of the expense of his office. He has continually studied, however, types of church edifices, and approves a simple design. As to the auditorium building, his plans are made, so far as they can be completed prior to the securing and setting aside of a proper tract of land. Saturday afternoons and evenings he has worked in the office, keeping up inquiries as they came in.

As a member of the city council of Independence he is interested in zoning and also in the street department. He has also visited the state highway commission.

Health Department

After last General Conference earnest work was undertaken in a constructive health program with two nurses in Independence, one at Graceland College, and one in Lamoni working in connection with the old folks' homes and the children's home; one at Holden, Missouri, including the Holden Home. The program called for mental and physical examination of children and adults at the various institutions mentioned, and health service in the home. It was expected that the examinations in the clinics would be followed by work in the homes. This work continued some months, but owing to the church finances the nurses were released. One nurse and one physician attended several reunions in 1921, held clinics, and made a health survey. A number of public lectures have been given, especially at the Stone Church, but also at other points. Miss Ethel Hanson went as a public health nurse to the South Sea Islands and has now returned. Preschool age clinics have been held in Independence under the direction of Sister Walter Smith.

Doctor Harrington recommends that an ideal health program should be established in some central place, and that we there work out a real constructive health program, and from this nucleus, as finances and workers permit, extend the work to the church as a whole. We should work heartily in touch with the health movements of the respective cities and in local districts with the district nurse where such a one is subject to call.

Programs for Reunions

These programs were published in full in the HERALD for April 19 and May 3, 1922.

The Church of Christ

The committee reported continued friendly relations with all interested and anxious for the redemption of Zion.

Australian Mission

A mission conference was held December 24-28, 1921, which reported a falling off in receipts of tithes and offerings. The progress in the work of normal study and history is good. Splendid spiritual services were held, especially the sacrament service, with two baptisms and with splendid addresses by Elder M. A. McConley of the Quorum of Twelve, who is the mission president. The work undertaken was largely that of an institute, with sermons and lectures covering the various fields of department and general church interest. The conference also went on record in opposition to the liquor regulations existing in Australia and also against the lotteries and other gambling as being in violation of the gospel.

An Ordination Meeting

At 4.15 p. m. following the adjournment of the conference, an ordination meeting was held at the Stone Church in Independence.

The meeting was in charge of Apostle J. A. Gillen, and those whose ordination had been provided for were set apart at this time.

The officiators were John W. Rushton, J. F. Curtis, J. A. Gillen, Roy S. Budd, D. T. Williams, J. F. Garver, T. W. Williams, and F. Henry Edwards.

Prayer was offered by Elder J. F. Garver.

Elder Robert C. Russell, of Windsor, Ontario, was ordained an evangelist or patriarch by J. W. Rushton and J. F. Curtis.

Elder Arthur E. Stoff, of Pittsburg, Kansas, was ordained a high priest by J. A. Gillen and Roy S. Budd.

Elder Eli Bronson, of Spokane, Washington, was ordained a seventy by D. T. Williams and J. F. Curtis.

Elder W. J. Brewer, of Independence, was ordained a high priest by Roy S. Budd and J. A. Gillen.

Elder William I. Fligg, of Independence, was ordained a seventy by J. F. Curtis and D. T. Williams.

Elder Roscoe Davey, of Boise, Idaho, was ordained a seventy by T. W. Williams and F. Henry Edwards.

Elder Charles F. Putnam, of Woodbine, Iowa, was ordained a seventy by J. F. Garver and John W. Rushton.

Elder H. E. Winegar, of Lamoni, Iowa, was ordained a seventy by F. Henry Edwards and T. W. Williams.

SPEECHES OF ACCEPTANCE

(Continued from page 1000.)

Christ and the Savior of all men. This testimony has been unwavering from that day to this.

When in the General Conference of 1913 the document was being read recommending certain men for the Quorum of Twelve and the reader spoke the words to the effect that there were others in the body who by the witness of the Spirit that Jesus is the Christ were qualified to function in this office, the Lord by the selfsame Spirit said to me, "Thou art one of these men." In response to this admonition, I went to work that very day, and have not ceased in my endeavor otherwise to qualify for this office.

This witness was repeated to me from time to time; and again for the last time, when three weeks ago Sunday morning, in a meeting at Lamoni, the Spirit of God came to ask me the question, "Will you move now to this office?"

Conditions I will not here name were and are such I felt and still feel the call could not have come at a time more difficult for me and mine. I prayed God the matter might rest for a time. The question was repeated, and when I hesitated, again persisted, upon which I finally answered, "Yes, Lord, I will move now." I did not at the time know the conditions under which I would be required to move. I, however, unreservedly gave this my pledge to God, and as I have kept other pledges made him in the past, I want to keep this one.

The church being so disposed, I am then ready to move in and occupy; and so far as I may endeavor, the work shall have the best I can give, little though it may be. And I shall trust God and the people that my part shall be a success.

Brother Theodore Smith, Saint Cloud, Florida, writes expressing his appreciation for the HERALD and Conference Dailies and wishes that he could have attended conference. He bears testimony that he received healing through administration, after eight years of suffering, when Bishop Keir was in Florida last winter.

New British Isles Districts

As stated in the Daily Herald for October 18, the districts in the British Isles Mission were changed by President F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams as announced in the HERALD for September 15, 1920. This, however, was not the action adopted by General Conference but instead the following action adopted by the Joint Council March 14, 1922, and approved without reading by General Conference October 18, 1922. The report of the committee to the Joint Council which was so adopted as now governing the boundary lines of these districts is as follows:

"We your committee appointed to consider the boundary lines of the districts of England and Wales, herewith report as follows:

"We recommend to the Joint Council that the existing names of the districts in England and Wales shall be canceled and hereafter be known as follows: Northern District, Midland District, Southern District, and the District of Wales.

"The Northern District shall include the following counties: Northumberland, Durham, Yorkshire, Cheshire, Lancashire, Westmorland, and Cumberland. The southern boundary line, running from west to east as follows: The southern boundary line to the county of Cheshire and the county of York from the River Dee to the Humber.

"The Midland District shall include the following counties: Lincoln, Rutland, Leicester, Warrick, Worcester, Hereford, Nottingham, Derby, Stafford, and Shropshire. The northern boundary line being the southern boundary line of the above Northern District. The southern boundary line extending from The Wash in the east coast, following the southern boundary line to the counties of Lincoln, Rutland, Leicester, Warrick, Worcester, and Hereford. The western boundary line extending along the western boundary lines of counties of Hereford and Shropshire.

"The Southern District shall include all the counties south of the southern boundary of the above Midland District.

"The District of Wales shall include all the counties of the principality of Wales. The eastern boundary running from north to south, being the western boundaries of the following counties: Chester, Shropshire, Hereford, and Gloucester."

The Spirit of the Missionary

During the General Conference we met a young man from the religious education class of Graceland College and asked him if he were again in Graceland this year, to which he made reply, "No, I am going on a mission," and named a foreign country. He continued, "I am the only one of my family in the church. They consider me in a way the black sheep, but they do not oppose my going."

Conditions are very bad in the country to which he expects to go. The young man is noted for his fastidiousness, his love of things that are refined, the care he uses in his personal appearance, his love of the esthetic, but he added that though he was advised that conditions were awful, "I have never starved to death yet and will get along if the food is only clean. I guess that God is big enough to feed me and take care of me and I probably will get over some of my particularities. I expect to adapt myself to conditions as I find them and to work with the people. That is the only way that we can go ahead."

Here is a young man going alone on a foreign mission, without the moral support of his family. He goes believing that he will not be able to secure the food he wants, that he will have difficulty in clothing himself, let alone to preserve his fastidious neatness. He goes with an intellectual doubt as to when he will eat and how much, but with faith in God that he is able to take care of him; and he is glad to go in the service of humanity and the Church of Jesus Christ and is willing to sacrifice the things he likes for that which he loves, the work of God.

S. A. B.

The Indian Meeting

The Society of American Indians met in Kansas City, October 17 to 20, not as previously announced, in November. This permitted of one of their sessions being held in the Stone Church at the close of General Conference.

A motion was made on the last day of conference favoring the desire of the Indians to have the Indian Bureau abolished. The meeting Wednesday evening, the 18th, in good part referred to this.

Doctor Montezuma has spent over forty years trying to secure the freedom of the Indians. Mr. Thomas Sloan, the president of the Society of American Indians and a lawyer of Washington, District of Columbia, has always a long story of abuses to relate, such as an irrigating system for 35,000 acres of Indian land, paid for and working satisfactorily, was destroyed, and a new system put in at such a cost that when the Indians get their land they will own nothing, for the indebtedness will equal the value of the land.

However, the objection is not alone to such serious abuses, but to the system which tends to pauperize the Indians. Practically all careful students admit that many of the Indians are not now able to care for themselves, but it is objected that the present system will never develop such ability. Those who are not able to care for their own property could readily have a curator appointed by the county probate court or could be permitted to nominate with the approval of the court.

The American Indians served earnestly in the World War, sent over many thousands, did their share with the Liberty Loan Bonds, and ask only that they be recognized as citizens of the United States.

Home Decorations

[Sister Charlotte Dryden has been preparing these articles for the various women's meetings throughout the church. She writes that she has been forced to neglect them all summer but will now send six more, including this one, for the year's work. The bulletins are listed for study and reference.—EDITORS.]

Pictures for the Home

The attention of the public nowadays is directed towards increasing the attractiveness of our homes. A much greater emphasis is given to proper combinations of colors, artistic arrangement, and correct styles.

In the investigation of many homes, we find too many pictures, and too few that are worthy. Cheap art, magazine covers, and gaudy frames characterize the average home.

Prices of good copies of pictures are now very reasonable, and accessible to practically everyone. We should study pictures, question those who have knowledge of the best art, and educate ourselves to better things. We can no more expect to become experts in this line without development, or education, than we can in any other line.

Our pleasure in good pictures may be mental—as in the painting of Jules Breton's "Song of the lark." The thought suggested pleases our minds. In others, as in Jean Carot's "Dance of the nymphs," we have an appeal to the esthetic sense through the rhythmic lines of figures in the painting. Others appeal to us through beautiful and harmonious combinations of color, as in Maxfield Parrish's "Garden of Allah."

In choosing such pictures one should keep the color scheme of the room in harmony with the picture.

A house should not be furnished with pictures, even of the best art, without considering the individuality of the home and its occupants. One should, however, avoid the sad, gloomy, or tragic, as well as the weak and foolish. Those with too much action grow tiresome, if one must view them day by day, or in a sick room, where the invalid needs relaxation and quiet.

Pictures used in the common living room should have a common interest to all members of the family. In chambers, or private rooms, one may choose those signifying the individual taste. Children should have those expressing activity, child interest, and beauty.

The picture, as well as its frame, should be an artistic part of the wall; it should also be of a shape and size that harmonizes with the wall space where it hangs. One should also consider the furniture beneath the picture. It is hard to fit a round or oval picture into any space. A large picture in a small space, or in a space of different proportions than the picture, gives a disproportionate and heavy effect.

"The function of the frame is to hold the picture in place, demark it slightly from the wall on which it is hung, relate it to the wall, and make easy the transition from it to the picture," says Frank Parsons in his book on Interior Decoration. And he goes on to state that any frame which calls too much attention to itself, or seems out of harmony in color or width, shows bad taste on the part of the one choosing it. Gilt frames are, as a rule, bad. Wood tinted to harmonize with the colors in the picture and also with the walls is good. In general the color should be as dark as the middle tone of the picture. The width of frame is governed not only by the size of the picture, but by the kind of scene. For instance, a storm at sea would demand a heavier frame than a picture of a quiet landscape.

If a picture be incorrectly hung, it detracts much from its effect. "Blind" hanging, or the two-wire method may be used. In "blind" hanging a wire is stretched loosely across the back of the picture, from the wire screws, and after locating the height of the picture, which should be about eye-level—or five feet and three inches—drive a small nail or picture brad into the wall where the wire comes. In using this method no wires show, and if one wishes to change the location of the picture the removal of the brad leaves practically no mar on the wall.

If hanging pictures with the two-wire method, use two picture hooks on the picture molding, and run the wire from one hook down through one of the screw eyes on the picture, across through the other screw eye, and on up to the other picture hook. This allows the picture to be easily adjusted, and is more pleasing than the triangle formed by the wires as pictures are usually hung.

The Japanese people display only one picture at a time in a room, regardless of what they may possess. It is the center of attraction until a change is desired, then another is used. A good picture has a message for us, but when many are used it is like a host of people all speaking at once.

If several small pictures are to be hung, those of similar thought, shape, and size should be agreeably grouped, for if placed alone they give a lost appearance. Family portraits should never be used for decorations.

Bulletins and Books on Decoration

Pictures for the Home, Bulletin Department of Extension Service, Ames, Iowa. Free. Send to any State department. Interior Decoration, Frank Parsons (in libraries).

"God never fails us, if we reach out our hand in faith in the hour of extremity."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Kansas City Stake News

Those of conference appointment occupying in the stake recently were Evan A. Davis and E. A. and J. D. Curtis at the Northeastern Mission.

A series of meetings commencing September 17 and closing the 27th by E. A. and T. W. Curtis at Northeastern Mission, resulted in prejudice being removed, a better understanding of our work by the people, and one baptism. At the same place an ice cream social was held which netted them $22.00 for the building fund.

A very beautiful wedding occurred at five o'clock, when Sister Tyra Lloyd, one of our best workers, was united in marriage with Mr. Fred Lucking at Central, Elder T. J. Elliott officiating. They will be at home November 10, at 3629 Brooklyn Avenue, after a trip in the South, including Galveston.

Next Sunday at the Second Church at 2 p. m. will occur the annual home-coming to which all the former members and friends are invited. At 7:45, Apostle Paul M. Hanson is to give a stereopticon lecture. F. M. Sheehy was the speaker Sunday, October 15, at 11 o'clock; and on October 22, Jesse W. Paxton occupied at 11:00 and E. A. Davis at 7:45.

Sunday was rally day at Central. The eleven o'clock service was in charge of the junior department of the Sunday school. Owing to rainy weather the attendance was not up to expectations, though the program rendered was splendid.

At 7:45 a program was given by members of the student body in the interests of Graceland College.

Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker, morning and evening, at Grandview. They have the basement walls finished on their new building and are to continue now with the superstructure.

The lull which lasted during the General Conference period is giving way to activity all along the line, including the classes conducted by the Women's Department.

Independence

A great calm seems to have settled over Zion. Following the longest General Conference on record, the Saints seem service-weary and worn. Yet on Sunday, following a down-pour till nine o'clock, the preaching services were well attended. The Sunday schools fell off about half on account of the rain.

The preaching appointments were mostly filled by visiting brethren. Elders P. R. Burton and D. T. Williams occupied at the Stone Church, morning and evening. Elders F. M. Cooper and Hubert Case at Second Independence; Elders F. Henry Edwards and P. R. Burton at Enoch Hill; Elders H. E. Winegar and W. I. Fligg at Englewood; Elders Francis Smith and C. Edward Miller at Liberty Street.

The Quorum of Twelve have been in session each day following the conference with nine of the quorum present. Elder Gleazer, who is taking some work at Harvard, returned early to Boston.

President Frederick M. Smith left for California on the 21st, where his family resides. His eldest daughter, Alice Myrmda, is taking a course in journalism at Leland Stanford University.

Elder Walter W. Smith was in Lees Summit over Sunday and at 11:00 a. m. preached the sermon at the church opening at that place. The Saints have outgrown their old building and have now a fine large chapel bought at very favorable terms from the Methodists. Though the rain interfered, a good attendance was had all day. In the afternoon a prayer meeting was held, with Elders C. J. Hunt, Glaud R. Kuykendall, and I. M. Ross in charge.

Promotions in the Sunday schools in Zion which were to have occurred on October 1 are being planned for the near future.

The newly-created Social Service Bureau, with headquarters at Room 26, Battery Block, Independence, and managed by Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, is beginning a campaign for the collection of used clothing. This week homes are being called by telephone to secure permission to place bags for the collection of such clothing, shoes, etc., as are outgrown and replaced. The bureau will arrange for necessary repairing and place on sale at low prices for the needy and destitute.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending October 21: Mrs. Helen Clifford, Lamoni, Iowa; Miss Elsie Lewis, Oak Grove, Missouri; J. L. Butterworth, Dow City, Iowa; Mrs. Samuel Clark, Toronto, Ontario, Canada; Mrs. Margaret Appleman, Portland, Oregon; F. J. Wilson, Buckner, Missouri; Mrs. Charles F. Biggerstaff, Coffeyville, Kansas; R. D. Frappier, Flint, Michigan; Mrs. William Armbruster, Holden, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. Minnie Kaylor, J. E. Webb, Mrs. W. H. Mannering, Ed Beets, B. O. Chapman, Mrs. M. F. Gowell, and Mrs. Ruth Fusselman and Baby Fusselman. X-ray patients: Mrs. George Fleming, Hardtner, Kansas; Leon Burdick, Willoughby, Ohio; Mrs. Samuel Clark, Toronto, Ontario, Canada; Mrs. B. F. Standefer, Dallas, Texas; Mrs. Margaret Appleman, Portland, Oregon; Mrs. J. D. Stead, Lamoni, Iowa; and Mrs. W. H. Mannering and C. E. Kirby, of Independence.

"If we do not see the fruits of the Spirit manifested in our lives, then we know that we are not of God."

Thrift Talks

"Give us a living wage; we'd be glad to save if we could," is a common chorus to-day as it has been for hundreds of years.

Yet a study of the problem, a fair investigation of what actually happens, shows that men who will not save (postpone present enjoyment for future gain) the nickels and pennies would not count it "worth while" to save dollars, had they the chance. Go to the richest self-made man in your town and ask him, "How did you get your start?" Nine chances out of ten he will recite a story of privation and maybe suffering in early married life to get the first thousand dollars.

Saving is largely a question of attitude. People who think they would save what they do not get, while counting as too trivial the small amounts that could be laid away now, are fooling themselves. Jesus said: "For whomsoever hath, to him shall be given; and whomsoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have." (Luke 8:18.) Thrift creates tithing.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice

Elder A. E. Stone having been ordained evangelical minister by order of the late General Conference, has tendered to the First Presidency his resignation as president of the New York District, and the Presidency has appointed Elder P. L. Weegar president pro tem, subject to ratification by the next conference of the New York District.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Pastoral Notices

To the Branch Presidents and Saints of Seattle and British Columbia District: Having been elected as vice president of the district at the August reunion, and as Brother J. M. Terry, district president, has removed to Zion, we are informed by him that according to word received by him from the First Presidency, the duties of the district presidency devolve upon us automatically.

Therefore we take this means to notify all the branch presidents of the district that we are ready to serve them in every way possible, and that we hope to receive a report from each of them for the six months ending December 31, 1922, in time for us to complete our report to the February conference.

We have changed our address to 2901 Twenty-first Street, Everett, Washington. G. R. BRUNDAGE.

Conference Notices

Lamoni Stake Saints are called to meet in conference at Lamoni, Iowa, Friday, November 3, at 7.30 p. m., to continue over Sunday the 5th. Departmental institute work Friday evening. Business session Saturday morning at 10.30, at which time one will be nominated to succeed J. F. Garver as president of the stake, incident to his appointment and ordination at the late General Conference as one of the Quorum of Twelve. Helen R. Bootman, stake secretary.

Kentucky and Tennessee, at High Hill Branch, November 3 to 5. Sunday school convention on November 3. J. R. McClain, president.

Spring River, at Pittsburg, Kansas, November 10 and 11. John C. Virgin, secretary.

Clinton, at the Veve Chapel, November 3 to 5. Those who anticipate attending should notify William H. Lowe, Eldorado Springs. Dederick is the nearest railway station. The first meeting will be at 9.30 a. m. on Friday. H. E. Moler, president.

Northern Wisconsin, at Frankfort Branch, Porcupine, Wisconsin, October 27 to 29. Please send all reports to Mrs. Mary Mair, in care of S. E. Livingston, Arkansas, Wisconsin. E. J. Lenox, president.

Holden Stake, at Warrensburg, Missouri, November 10 at 7.45, continuing over Sunday the 12th. D. J. Krahl, stake president.

Little Sioux District quarterly conference. On account of the General Conference, the regular October conference was postponed until November 11 and 12. Moorhead, Iowa. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

Detroit, at Flint, Michigan, November 11 and 12. J. Stanley Parrish, secretary, 5145 Brooklyn Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

